
If the Human felt any surprise or shock by Jimin’s presence inside his room, he didn’t show it. He was however, doing a spectacular job of pretending to be asleep.

His room is bare. Not personalized like Taeh’yung’s or Sk’jin’s, or adjusted like Namjoon’s and Hoseok’s. Nothing has changed much in the room, save for the black helmet that sits in the middle of the table. It makes Jimin shiver, seeing it separate from Yoongi like this. He’s seen Yoongi wearing it, and never thought much of it then. But here now, just sitting by itself, Jimin can’t explain the intense dislike he feels inside of him. He approaches the device carefully, tentatively feeling the surface.

Back inside the wreckage of the ship, it had felt different. But now it’s cold to touch, and impossibly smooth. There’s a density to it that suggests that its make was much more substantial- so much heavier than it appeared. And not just in terms of physical weight. Jimin feels the strange desire to slip it on but he doesn’t, remembering how Yoongi had stopped him at once. Instead he turns his attention to the screen next to the helmet. It wasn’t the same Yoongi carried with him- it was another NaviLet (Jimin makes sure to remember the names of devices or objects used within the ship) and he knows it’s the very same one embedded with the chip containing Yoongi’s past history.

Yoongi hasn’t read through it, as far as Jimin knows. He knew for a fact that Namjoon had wanted Yoongi to remember, in order to gain information regarding the Human’s activities back when he had been in Menigišiti.

Next to the screen is the hair-clip. An odd addition to this room, a spot of colour, or something far heavier than anything in this Cabin.

Jimin glances back at the bed. Yoongi hasn’t moved a muscle.

Like the other Cabins, there are narrow slivers that function as windows in a straight line above the desk. The expanse of space outside shifts steadily. Ancient light and motion creating the sight before him. Jimin watches the stars for a while, allowing the distant and calm sight to soothe him a little before he turns his back on it and faces Yoongi’s form once more.

Taking a few steps forward, Jimin takes a seat on the bed, and like before, Yoongi makes no show to indicate he was aware of Jimin’s presence inside the room. Making up his mind, Jimin shuffles more into the bed and then leans back until his head touches the pillow. He’s a little nervous but determined. He’s not sure how much Yoongi will understand- but he hopes his intention comes through.

‘Yoongi?’ Jimin doesn’t know why he’s whispering.

There’s no answer.

Jimin stares up at the ceiling above the bed area.

‘I know you’re worried,’ Jimin begins quietly. ‘I know you don’t want me to go. I don’t want to leave you too, you know? But I also know that you’ll come and get me.’

Turning his head Jimin smiles, brushing Yoongi’s hair with his fingers. ‘I trust you. I know you.’

They stay like that quietly for a few minutes and Jimin wonders if Yoongi has actually fallen asleep. He can’t tell from his breaths and Yoongi always did possess a very quiet disposition.

‘Your home was taken away- and I know you don’t…you don’t remember it the way I know you did. And maybe that was a result of something I could have prevented. Maybe it wasn’t. I don’t know. But you’re back here, and I get to see you again.’ Jimin doesn’t know why he’s saying any of this.

‘Lead, and I will follow.’

Taeh’yung had quietly translated the words, adding far more meaning and memory to the words than Jimin had thought possible. Vivid memory of Yoongi’s tired smile, the strength of his soul, the stability of his hand in his.

‘You don’t have a home anymore, and neither does Sk’jin, or Namjoon, or Hoseok- Taeh’yung too,’ Jimin says softly. ‘And even though I do not know what happened to mine, I want to give that to all of you. You told me to lead, and that you would follow. So please trust me, and follow me.’

Yoongi still doesn’t move.

Shifting to his side, Jimin carefully reaches around Yoongi and presses in as close as he dared.
Jimin listens closely, not just for the sound of Yoongi’s breaths, but for the hums and vibrations, for the pulse of his soul.

It's there; faint and tired.

‘Yoongi?’

The Human doesn’t move or say a word. Quietly tightening his arm around the Human, Jimin presses his forehead on the expanse of his back.

‘I’ll take you home again.’
Sk’jin watches as Namjoon and Jimin work together, Taeh’yung hovering around them, translating between them.

Based on what Sk’jin was able to listen in on and what Namjoon later documented in the Captain’s logs, Jimin’s System combined and utilized orbital resonance to mask their existence. There was a lot more detail involved but Sk’jin only listened in until he thought necessary for him to understand the basics. The other details he would leave to Namjoon.

Watching the two of them work together was almost like watching an excitable child learning something from an aged relative- the child here in question being Namjoon who looked far too delighted to be learning about this technology. Sk’jin doesn’t care much for it, concentrating only on getting them to this obvious death-trap.

Of course they had no other option than to agree to the exchange. There was nothing they could do and the Omhlophe knew that. Though of course what they didn’t know was that they had Jimin’s trust and willingness to utilize his System’s tech in order to hopefully mask their presence. Sk’jin doesn’t know how this is going to work in their favor, or how it’s going to take place, but the fact that they could potentially own a defensive mechanism that could effectively hide them from anyone who would look for them gives him a sense of security.

Security was an expensive and abstract notion that had no real generator. But with this hiding mechanism, it was possible that they wouldn’t even need to pay much of a price.

That is if it worked.

Jimin had wanted to try out the shield, but they couldn’t stop lest they cause suspicion and question from the Omhlophe who were obviously tracking their movements.

They were close to finishing the installment and based on the simulation-render Namjoon had run, the shield should technically work. There was a 78% success rate and like Taeh’yung had so eloquently said, that was better than 77%.

They were already within the borders of Ynqaba and they still had no call or message from the Omhlophe. It was setting Sk’jin on edge.

Everyone was fidgeting on their own. Namjoon at the Mast, staring blankly as he keeps an eye on the readings of the installed cell in the Engines Room. Yoongi was sitting in his usual seat below, staring blankly into the white expanse of warped space. Both Taeh’yung and Jimin were sitting on either side of the Human; Jimin asleep and oddly enough Taeh’yung was quietly reading.

The thick silence doesn’t last too long as Lisai announces, ‘Approaching first log-check in in 5 minutes.’

‘All right everyone,’ Sk’jin announces. ‘We’re not headed inwards so we’re just gonna stay put outside the border.’

Taeh’yung stretches loudly, tossing his screen to the side and shaking his entire body like an animal shaking off water from its fur coat. Jimin starts awake before sitting up properly. Yoongi just nods in response while Namjoon performs the obligatory Captain calls.

‘Pull out of warp,’ he orders, adjusting in his seat for the millionth time.

They had no idea what to expect from this exchange, how to defend themselves if needed. This was in every sense of the word an incredibly stupid thing to do.

‘We’re pulling out of warp in 5…4…3…2…1-‘

The light from the stars don’t ease up and instead bright flashes of light spark up all over outside the window.

‘Sk’jin-?’

‘What the fuck-’ Sk’jin stares down at his monitors and his panels. He had pulled them out of warp- what was happening?

The ship suddenly shudders violently, triggering their additional emergency seat-security, and the white around them fades away like mist only to reveal a chaotic ongoing space-battle scene.

‘Fuck-!!’

Missiles fly overhead in bright flashes of light, narrowly missing them.

Sk’jin dives them downwards only to pull up sharply to avoid the massive broken off wing of a ship hurtling across and crashing into an unsuspecting Transporter that appeared out of nowhere.

‘What is Spaces-?!’

‘Shields up at maximum now!’ Sk’jin screams as he attempts to pull them up and away from the battle.

This was not what any of them were expecting when they had heard of the war in Ynqaba. All the reports had put the fighting inside the planet or within the borders of their moons-

‘-is that their moon?! Cool!’ Taeh’yung exclaims loudly as the briefly spot crumbled and cracked remains of a small bumpy moon to the side. There’s horrified gasps from Jimin, bordering pain and sorrow. The very space around them seems to scream with destruction and force, staining the stars beyond a murky red and grey. Bitterness coils inside Sk’jin's stomach, inching its way upwards.

The war in Ynqaba was a violent one within the neighbouring planets- but rather than being fought only in-planet, Sk'jin guesses they migrated outwards. Great.

‘Yoongi-‘ Sk’jin warns as he careens them, spinning the ship thrice to avoid an incoming series of proton-missiles. But there’s no need to call the Human because he’s already readied the weapons-panel, the entire system ready and the HUD lit.

‘Firing,’ he announces in monotone and with astounding accuracy takes down and blocks out the missiles aiming at them.

‘This wasn’t part of the records-‘ Namjoon pants, trying to establish a clear path through this mess of missiles, broken ships, explosions, and debris from fresh ship-wreckages being flung about like asteroids.

‘Sk’jin take us downwards there’s an abandoned and destroyed fleet-ship- use that as calibration point- Namjoon orders and Sk’jin is already redirecting them.

Taeh’yung cheers from where he’s sitting as they flip over and rapidly fall through a thick cloud of dust and shrapnel, breaking through a few gathered ship parts. Sk’jin is intensely grateful for how strong the Užkulaisai was.

‘Shields at maximum- just go straight!’ Namjoon yells and Sk’jin locks them down and they plummet past streaks of hot white light, snapping through the debris like a stone through cobwebs.

They break through a thick and wide broken wing in thunderous crashing sounds and they exit the main battle point.

‘There-!’

Sk’jin nearly bangs his head over on the front of his panels with the sudden force with which they stop. He feels intense pressure heat up his face, his arms suddenly flung forwards. A whole bunch of items fall and crash down below. There’s a sharp cry of pain from both Jimin and Taeh’yung.

‘Lock-rift has been placed over the ship.’

With great struggle, Sk’jin manages to pull back as the cabin-pressure inside the ship rights itself and gravity settles normally. A lock-rift?! From where? Sk’jin tries everything. He puts their entire engine, activates every single beamer, every fuel cell- but there’s no budging.

‘Incoming missiles-!’ Namjoon warns and Yoongi is quick to respond in kind.

Light erupts around them, the pressure of the explosion moving the ship with its force. Instinctively Sk’jin looks away and tries to get a reading on their engines, wondering how he could boost them out of the lock.

‘Shit-’

Sk’jin looks up, the bright light fading only to highlight an annoyingly familiar ship tear through the wreckage of the fleet-ship before them.

‘What in Spaces-‘

‘Incoming call from Van Seulgaan. Requesting permission.’

‘Are you fucking kidding me-’ Sk’jin would give anything to personally wrap his hands around the Tayian. A massive slaver-ship that was another copy of the same slaver-ship they had escaped from in Grezma appears before them in all of its massive looming construct.

‘Should’ve fucking known he’d be involved in this sort of shit-’

‘How did he get out of Pompa-’ Namjoon splutters.

‘Accept call to main HUD,’ Sk’jin snaps, ignoring Namjoon’s protests.

The Tayian’s face appears on the window, his expression maddened and his appearance unkempt and rather crazed.

‘Scum!’ he spits at once. ‘Finally got you-‘

‘Shit, are they in alliance with the Omhlophe-‘
-oh you thought you were clever didn’t you? But you can’t escape me- I found you and you will PAY-‘ ‘Engines under pressure. Please release strain,’ Lisai announces.

‘Fuck,’ Yoongi says quietly from the front.

‘They’re trying to string us in-‘ Sk’jin could scream.

‘Yoongi, deploy hull-hooks and anchor us back,’ Namjoon orders sharply. ‘Sk’jin put the breaks on.’

‘That’s not going to help us in the long run what the fuck are we going to do now- they’ve caught us before-‘ Sk’jin argues but still follows the orders. Their movement stops and Sk’jin notices how they were now more or less tethered to a large broken ship behind them, beyond which the great battle still went on.

‘Surrender now you have no escape!’ Seulgaan screams at them. ‘And maybe- just maybe I’ll show you mercy!’

‘Spaces I hate him so much-‘ Sk’jin curses.

‘Incoming call from unknown source. Requesting permission.’ Lisai tells them pleasantly.

Namjoon’s eyes widen but before he can speak, Sk’jin is out of his seat, launching forwards at Namjoon and effectively covers the Kutsoglerin’s mouth with one of his hands, the other with his fingers outstretched, jabbing under his jaw and making the latter gasp out gagging unattractively and rendering him incapable of speech.

‘Accept call!’ Sk’jin blocks the harsh blow aimed at his sternum and knocks Namjoon down to the floor before entirely removing himself from the Mast. How and when Yoongi got there he doesn’t know because the Human now stood between Namjoon and himself, hands raised a little as though ready to stop the both of them.

‘You have been caught. Why is that so.’ The voice asks plainly.

‘If we had an answer we’d give it to you,’ Sk’jin hisses back, catching his breath and warily watching Namjoon who stands back up. ‘Tell your lackey to fucking let us go now!’

‘We do not know of this situation. Please remove yourselves immediately-‘

‘If we could we would!’ Namjoon yells as he regains his voice, wincing and coughing violently.

Sk’jin abruptly cuts the call, an idea formulating fast in his mind.

‘What the fuck do you think you’re doing-‘ Namjoon doesn’t even wince when a missile flies past them.

‘Lisai- patch a call to Van Seulgaan now,’ Sk’jin orders.

‘Sk’jin you can’t be serious-‘

‘What do you want now-‘

‘Hey pasty-face listen- we surrender.’
Yoongi’s head snaps towards him in alarm, eyes wide as he stares at Sk’jin from where he stood. He’s so shocked he doesn’t even flinch when a missile explodes overhead, splinters and bits of wreckage falling down on them like rain, creating sparks as it meets their shield.

‘...what-’

‘Didn’t you say you were going to make us pay? Take us in- we surrender-‘ Sk’jin deactivates their breaks, before hurrying down to the weapon’s mast and deactivating the hull-hooks, dislodging them from the massive broken ship and steadying himself as they jolt out of the anchor. Jimin looks wildly confused and a little terrified whereas Taeh’yung looks like he’s having the time of his life.

‘Are you mad-‘ Namjoon demands, making his way out of the Mast almost entirely ready to probably punch Sk’jin.

‘I am far from mad- I am saving us,’ Sk’jin hisses quietly. ‘Seulgaan and the Omhlophe are not in league with each other- they don’t know each other. But they both want the same thing from us- and that’s Jimin-‘

‘So why are you surrendering-‘

‘Just-‘ Sk’jin pushes past to make his way to the Mast.

‘What do you think you’re-‘

‘Lisai place a call to Hoseok’s Comm-Device-‘

‘Linking.’

Sk’jin rounds up to face Namjoon and look him straight in the eye.

‘Listen to me,’ he states firmly and carefully. ‘Seulgaan and the Omhlophe are two separate forces we cannot possibly handle individually let alone together like this. And right now we’re stuck in a cliché romance-drama with these two-‘ Namjoon is understandably extremely confused at this point ‘-where we’re the hapless damsel in distress and these two are the romantic interests who want us. So what happens next?’

‘They fight for us!’ Taeh’yung gleefully answers from the front.

‘They fight for us,’ Sk’jin repeats. ‘Neither of them will back out of this- not when we’re this close. They’ll fight each other and during that time we slip past.’

‘That’s great and all,’ Namjoon replies still mad, ‘But what do we do about the rift-lock? What about Hoseok?’

‘Line connected.’

‘Hey- so as you can see we’re stuck in a situation right now- a rift-lock and we can’t leave. You gonna do something about this?’ Sk’jin calls, not looking away from Namjoon.

‘We are coming to retrieve you. Please stay put.’ The Omhlophe announces before the line cuts.

Sk’jin sees the way Namjoon seems to rapidly think before he reaches over and taps on the Table.

‘Van Seulgaan this is Namjoon, Captain of the Užkulisai, we officially surrender and comply to your arrest.’
‘Finally got some brains now haven’t you,’ Seulgaan sneers. ‘I’m going to make sure you pay-‘

Sk’jin reaches over and mutes the call.

‘Hoseok?’ Yoongi asks.

Namjoon raises his eyebrows, as though to echo Yoongi’s question.

Sk’jin glances out of the window above them and notices a startling white sizeable ship approach them.

‘Tae wanna do something incredibly stupid and risky with your daddy?’ Sk’jin asks, still looking up.

Taeh’yung leaps from where he stands, arms stretched above him in victory.

‘Yes! Finally!’

‘I think I know what you’re planning- and I think it’s my duty as Captain to tell you that this is a bad idea,’ Namjoon tells him. Looking away with a grin Sk’jin pats Namjoon on his cheek and pinches at where his dimples should be.

‘I’ll take care of Seulgaan, go and get Hobi back.’ Glancing over at Yoongi he adds, ‘Yoongi babe, could you take over for me? And Jimin?’

Jimin, bless his soul, confused and exasperated, also stands, looking for an explanation from anyone.

‘What do you think about role-playing?’
HOPE WORLD IS SO
FUCKING PERFECT
BYE
HE LOOKS SO GOOD IN THE MUSIC VIDEOS I’M LITERALLY CRYING OMG
BLESS MY BABY MY SUNSHINE I LOVE HIM SO MUCH
AGHLRUHIELDFGKLASJFALSKFJHDK
And fuck so many comebacks this month?!?!
The downside of being multifandom is having too much content and not enough time for any of it sighs heavily
Yoongi takes a short break.

His chest feels tight—not in the way it did as a result of his occasional smoking habits, and it’s not in the way where he’s developing a cough or cold. There’s a strange pressure-building deep within Yoongi.

Almost like a pressure channel collapsing into itself inside his chest.

He tries to cough, hoping to relieve the tightness in his chest. But he can’t.

It doesn’t work.

He absentmindedly fiddles with the foil of the cigarette packet in his pocket. He hasn’t smoked one in ages. Since Earth, in fact.

There was something about being back on Earth that just triggered Yoongi’s smoking impulse. Outside of Earth, he didn’t even touch it. But he carried the packet in his pocket at all times. Especially for situations like these. It made him feel better.

Like he was carrying a bit of home in his pocket.

A small secret he kept safe.

He also knows this isn’t strictly because of the cigarettes.

Rather it’s also because of the small glittering purple-clip he had discovered being snuck into his belongings.

She had done something like this before.

Sneaking in objects into his bag as though making sure that by some brotherly duty, Yoongi would always return home to give it back to her. She started doing that ever since he moved out of their home to study at a university in the neighbouring Settlement Arc. And Yoongi always came back home to return it to her.

‘Yoongi?’

Jimin too was far from home. He had illustrated via hologram what his planet looked like. What brought him all the way here?

Jimin looks down at him expectantly, worry in his eyes.
The past few days were tough. What with the tension between each Being, the fear, the confusion.

‘Hey sunshine,’ Yoongi’s smile isn’t forced and this unknown Being’s presence is soothing to the pain in his chest. ‘What’s up?’

Jimin points towards the back, gnawing at his lower lip in worry.

And this was something else added to all of the strain in the team.

A strange illness seemed to be slowly taking over a few of them. Fatigue, temporary loss of senses, fever, chills, racking coughs, and labored breathing. But it went past these symptoms.

There was something else about this illness.

And Amic was one of the victims.

Jimin gestures, placing his palms together and under his head to mime sleep.

‘Sleep,’ Yoongi nods. ‘I’ll stay up- it’s my turn to watch.’

Jimin looks back to where the team were huddled around, eyes sharp but weary. He seems to make up his mind and sits next to Yoongi instead. A few moments later, Jimin’s head makes its way to Yoongi’s shoulder.

‘Sleep,’ Yoongi whispers quietly, peering out into the forest. ‘Jimin sleep.’

Jimin nods into his shoulder wordlessly, a hand creeping around his forearm slowly, as though hoping Yoongi wouldn’t notice.

To reassure Jimin, and also to experience what it felt like, Yoongi gently brushes through Jimin’s silver-gold hair. Jimin leans in even closer at the contact, his hand now fully holding onto his arm.

‘I’ll be here when you wake up.’

*

Sk’jin steps out of his cabin dressed in one of his silky robes that survived what he mentally referred to as the Pompen Suga Carnage. Shortened to “PSC” as well, somehow sounded much more credible. It was just a simple matter of hiding this little gem away. It’s a soft lilac in colour with dainty gems sewn around the sleeves and throat, creating a ribbed design structure around the torso before seemingly falling off in drops down the floaty fabric of the main coat.

It highlighted his hair to perfection and balanced the cool tone of his hair perfectly.

He steps out of his room, hands clasped behind his back. Humming to himself, Sk’jin makes his way downwards.

‘Namjoonie, Tae-Tae, are you guys already out?’

‘Yes we are!’ Taeh’yung chimes in. ‘We’ll be there in a couple of minutes!’

‘Perfect. Make sure your timing is right- and don’t lose Namjoon.’

‘For fuck’s sake-‘

‘I won’t lose pa! He’s safe with me!’

‘We’re being pulled in.’ Yoongi reports. ‘Landing inside the Hangar in 15 seconds.’

Sk’jin pauses at the mirror at the bottom of the stairs, carefully setting his bangs about and making sure he had nothing between his teeth. He absentmindedly thinks he should wear some earrings next time. A few gems maybe. Satisfied, Sk’jin makes his way down fully.

‘All right. Are you ready?’ Sk’jin asks, striding across the Lobby and into their Hangar Bay, the gate opens slowly, the shimmering blue of the Atmoshield glimmering in preparation. Yoongi is waiting for him, in his uniform full-black outfit complete with helmet.

‘Ready.’ He replies.

‘All right,’ Sk’jin steadies himself easily as they land. As the Hangar gates open fully and the ramp is lowered, they find themselves inside the large docking bay of Van Seulgaan’s slaver ship. This time the Dock is closed off and there is no direct view of the wide gaping slave-cages in the background for which Sk’jin is grateful. They couldn’t afford any form of distraction at this moment.

The Tayian himself is standing there, seething where he waited for them but with an almost manic grin on his face. Behind him stood more of the cyborg guards they had encountered in Pompa, as well as a rag-tag assembly of living guards.

Sk’jin barely manages to stop the eye-roll, a skill because he rolled his eyes as frequently as he swore. Instead he gracefully descends down the ramp, the thinner fabric of his robes flutter slowly behind him and settle around him a little late. Sk’jin really loves these robes. He inclines his head to the side in greeting before sending Seulgaan a smile that he definitely did not deserve.

‘Let’s please not get anyone killed or worse,’ Namjoon warns, a grumbling tone to his voice.

‘Oh, you overestimate me,’ Sk’jin smiles, gracing the rest of the gathered Beings a smile as well.

‘You have much to explain Khol’isa!’ Seulgaan spits out as soon as they’re close enough. His eyes are darting from Sk’jin to the white ship behind them.

‘Jimin- is everything ready?’ Sk’jin asks pleasantly just feet from Seulgaan. They had practiced some phrases in Standard so that Jimin understood what they meant in relation to this rather chaotic plan.
‘Yes.’ Jimin replies in his best Standard. Sk’jin stops himself from turning around to beam up at the front window of the Užkulisai.

‘Perfect- let’s start.’ Namjoon murmurs.

‘Van Seulgaan,’ Sk’jin greets the Tayian. ‘A procession! How nice!’

‘Cuff him,’ Seulgaan orders at once. But before any of the guards can approach them, Yoongi’s previously hidden and blackened form appears from behind Sk’jin and easily deflects the approaching guards attempts in even being able to touch Sk’jin.

Predictably Seulgaan starts at the sight of Yoongi’s form behind Sk’jin.

‘Who are they?’ Seulgaan demands as soon as he’s recovered, pointing behind them through the thick sea of debris at the gleaming white ship. ‘What the fuck is that?!’

‘Something we did not foresee! We made an unfortunate enemy in Pompa,’ Sk’jin tells him pleasantly. ‘And you see, they want their dues returned to them I suppose.’

‘Not before I’m done with you,’ Seulgaan retorts, much to Sk’jin’s delight. The Tayian jerks his head at the cyborgs and barks out, ‘Search the ship! Bring the others out- they can’t hide for long, what the fuck were you thinking?’

‘A whole lot more than you were,’ Sk’jin replies too quickly for Seulgaan to hear before he continues, ‘I’m afraid our beloved captain has just run away- possible in our smaller Transporter. The Ngfy’widan went with him, and I’m afraid it’s just sweet sweet Suga and me, cleaning up the mess for now.’

‘What about the other one?’ Seulgaan frowns. ‘The one who was always smiling.’

‘To be honest I don’t know,’ Sk’jin shrugs, ‘And in all fairness, if you knew him, then that would really perfectly explain him.’

Seulgaan watches him with intensely disbelieving eyes. Sk’jin was being careful. Though clearly unhinged and a little crazed, Van Seulgaan was still a cunning and powerful Being in his own right. Who he was, who he knew, and most importantly, who he was connected to, were still unknown to them. While they did have an advantage at this moment, given Seulgaan’s disturbed character, they still needed to tread carefully.

‘And the egg?’

‘Yoongi- are we clear?’ Namjoon asks quietly.

‘You’re clear.’

‘What makes you think I’d bring him out here?’ Sk’jin asks, eyes widening and a look of intense discomfort settling over his features in a convincing manner despite the intense relief he feels inside at the conversation he’s hearing. ‘We only just managed to subdue him.’

Seulgaan’s eyes narrow even more, but now there’s a hint of fear in his eyes.

‘So you’ve seen one of them with your own two eyes,’ Seulgaan mumbles, eyes switching over to Yoongi’s quiet form. And with unnerving monotone he simply states: ‘Abomination.’

Sk’jin senses Yoongi twitching next to him and he hastens to speak.
‘Abomination?’ Sk’jin repeats.

Seulgaan doesn’t explain any further and the cyborgs reappear from behind them.

‘No other presence detected within the ship,’ it reports in a pleasant automated voice. ‘One sealed OrTank retrieved.’

‘Take it down,’ Seulgaan orders the Beings behind him before rounding up to carefully stare at Sk’jin. ‘They do not sleep after being woken- how did you manage?’

Sk’jin keeps a mask of calm, his features perfectly poised despite his inner mind screaming questions. What did Seulgaan mean? Had he woken up others like Jimin? Like Yoongi? Were they unstable?

‘You know things, we know things,’ Sk’jin replies simply before adding, ‘I don’t want to change topics here but you do realize that that is out there? It wants us too.’

Seulgaan looks out briefly before turning to address his guards again.

‘Set up a line of communication right now,’ he barks. ‘Fix a channel to the white-ship there and connect them to me.’

‘You will want to be careful,’ Sk’jin warns with a smile. ‘They’re not the type who easily give up.’

Seulgaan doesn’t spare him a look or response as he takes the screen his guard hands him.

‘Who is this?’ Seulgaan demands imperiously.

The line clicks softly before an entirely new voice speaks up. Yet again, Sk’jin cannot place the gender or accent of the voice.

‘We request you hand over the Yemenifesi Ch’inik’eti, and the remaining members of the Užkulisai to us, and we will leave you in peace. Thank you for your cooperation.’

‘I have not given you my cooperation!’ Seulgaan snaps. ‘I do not care what issues you have with this rag-tag shit-heads but I’m claiming them so I would advise you to turn back. They are no longer your problem and I will make sure they cause no more problems in the future.’

‘If it is units you require then we shall transfer the needed amount and more in return for the Yemenifesi Ch’inik’eti and the crew members. Name any amount and it shall be yours!’

Seulgaan actually rolls his eyes.

‘Listen here,’ he states in a calm voice, unimpressed. ‘I don’t care what you have to offer or what you want to offer. I’m giving you a warning- leave, or I’m releasing the 10 proton-missiles that I’ve had locked on your location.’

It’s silent for a moment and Sk’jin momentarily panics. They had to keep the Omhlophe here until they could extract Hoseok out of their ship. If the Omhlophe decided that it wasn’t worth it, then they would lose Hoseok forever. And that wasn’t something Sk’jin needed in his conscience.

‘We are issuing you a warning to release the Yemenifesi Ch’inik’eti and the crew-members to us immediately or we will not be this courteous.’

Seulgaan frowns heavily at that. Though a threat that would have Sk’jin really sweating, it makes him exhale out in relief.
‘Release a missile- miss, but be close.’ Seulgaan orders.

Sk’jin turns around, willing his actions to be relaxed, to watch past the wings of the Užkulisai as a bright streak of electric blue streaks out through the debris and explodes close to the white ship.

‘We’re fine.’

Sk’jin wishes he could reply back but he doesn’t.

‘We’re almost there. 30 seconds.’ Namjoon says quietly.

‘I need one more minute.’ Yoongi reports quietly.

The light clears and the debris around the white ship scatters even more, causing issues with the already compromised visibility outside. The line is quiet and so is everyone in the Dock.

‘Next time I won’t miss,’ Seulgaan says simply. ‘Now leave, or I won’t be as courteous.’

Sk’jin waits with bated breath.

‘10 seconds.’

‘We regret to inform you that we will no longer conduct our approach with care. You were warned. Please be prepared to be boarded Van Seulgaan, we hope you have a nice day.’

A chill runs down Sk’jin’s back and he whips around to face Seulgaan who though rather unstable, looked remarkably calm.

‘Raise the shields at maximum, close all docks and bays. Reinforce the engines and set ready to warp-’ he makes to turn around but pauses to glance briefly at the distant white ship, ‘-destroy that filth.’

Sk’jin had said this was something incredibly stupid and risky and he wasn’t kidding.

Namjoon cannot believe he’s doing this. Even for someone of his mechanical built and practically inorganic being, being exposed to space wasn’t the smartest idea. There was a lot that they didn’t know about space even after millenniums of research and discovery and breakdowns. So much remained unknown and mysterious yet here he was; just feet from a full blown space-battle, with a slaver-ship waiting to obliterate his ship, and an unknown ship possible capable of obliterating his entire ship if they wanted.

Not for the first time has Namjoon questioned his decisions and actions this deeply in the past few months.

Because you didn’t even have to be “smart” to know that transporting yourself through an open and unlocked Transporter in space, clinging to a handle to the side of the wall inches off of the floor, being guided and shielded only by the unknown abilities of a questionable Being was a pretty stupid thing to do.

Namjoon is not hydrophobic and neither is he agoraphobic- and the idea of drowning in space seemed bizarre and extremely unlikely. But recently, bizarre and unlikely things seemed to be happening rather frequently to him so he’s not about to take his chances either way.

The Spardyti is quiet and deactivated. The engines quiet and still, the doors flung open and the Atmoshield switched off. Everything has been turned upside down in here. Quite literally in fact. There was no gravity in here and Namjoon warily watches the massive bubbles of water sloshing around the place, some pressed up and enforced in certain areas. Instead of a shimmering blue shielding them from the vacuum of space, a neon green thing blocks the doorways and windows.

‘How is this even a thing?!” Namjoon bursts out, unable to contain himself anymore. ‘We are in space- there is no mass or volume that you could use to possible project us like this- vaulting through space-how are you projecting or generating independent energy-’

‘There is mass and volume all around us,’ Taeh’yung remarks looking at Namjoon as though shocked Namjoon didn’t know this. ‘Look at all of this energy-‘

‘Energy isn’t a palpable or corporeal mass-‘ Namjoon splutters, offended. ‘It’s the property of a system rather than a physical property-‘

‘Pa you think too much,’ Taeh’yung reaches over and takes his hand, never minding the blobs of water floating about that could drown them. The ship shudders as they hit another chunk of debris.

Namjoon is also extremely against this entire thing for another reason: the literal sea of debris they were floating around in.

The space-battle they had warped into had moved closer to the broken moon and left behind massive areas of debris and junk. Namjoon gives the debris a month or so before it’s pulled down to the small planet above them, inevitably drawing its own death sentence as a result of its own gravity. But for now it served as a sort of double-edged camouflage blanket for them, leading them slowly towards the stationary white ship below.

Namjoon hurriedly shoves a blob of water out of his general vicinity while Taeh’yung opens his mouth wide in hopes of having it land into his mouth.

Jimin had claimed, with no context or further explanation, that they would need water in order to really use the cell. He said they didn’t have the time, and Taeh’yung added he didn’t know enough of the more complex words in order to properly translate Jimin’s words anyways. And it was true-Taeh’yung tried his best, but some of the more complex words, ideas, forms, and general state of this technology was just too alien and complex to translate into Standard. Sometimes Taeh’yung would just stare out into the air before he was finally able to somehow manage to translate.

Water was key to all of this. And Namjoon knew this. He’s just not sure how it all relates.

Nonetheless, the whole thing was fascinating. Namjoon aided Jimin in constructing the rather odd oblong cylinder strapped to the floor of the Spardyti, originally designed to sit inside the Užkulisai.

What Namjoon understood was that they used the natural orbital resonance between their tightly knit system, harvesting that energy into a stable and usable source of energy to create powerful electromagnetic shields in order to shield them from most transmittable radio-waves that could be used to scan or even actually visibly see them. It was in a sense, System-sized Faraday cages; constructed and set up in a way to deflect and or block out certain wavelengths and resonances that could pass through to reveal them. But the very idea behind it seemed too simple. There had to be more to it. Because it seemed rather odd to Namjoon, seeing as the GLA had tried this experiment before and hadn’t been able to harness the volatile force to create this sort of shield around themselves at such a scale. How did water come into play? It made no practical sense.

Just what exactly were Jimin and his people capable of?

Taeh’yung casually tosses the cell between his hands, slowly spinning in the air himself.

How was this small cell storing such a volatile force for so long, and how much havoc had this small device singlehandedly wrought?

‘You have much to explain Khol’isa!’ Seulgaan’s angry voice fills the air.

‘Jimin- is everything ready?’ Sk’jin sounds too pleased.

‘Yes.’

‘Perfect- let’s start.’ Namjoon nods at Taeh’yung who nods back delightedly and swims in the air, cell in his hand. Namjoon floats over to the open doorway where a few simple air-pressure tanks were attached. They wouldn’t need a lot- but it was always best to be safe rather than sorry.

‘Ready?’ Namjoon asks Taeh’yung who gives him a thumbs up and proceeds to jam the cell into the small slot of the cylinder.

There’s a moment of strained silence where Namjoon and Taeh’yung just stare at each other.

According to their calculations, they had been able to summarize that the success rate was at 78%. And like Taeh’yung had said- that was better than 77%.

Then slowly, a shiver runs through the Spardyti, the water floating about them freezes and then like molten glass flies past and encases them like a thin shield just outside of the green-tinted shield Taeh’yung projected.

‘Yoongi- are we clear?’

‘You’re clear.’

Taeh’yung lets out a cheer.

Sk’jin’s plan was extraordinarily dangerous, stupid, and risky.

But also brilliant.

Sk’jin, Jimin, and Yoongi would remain in the Užkulisai, awaiting capture and would allow themselves to be captured. Meanwhile, Namjoon and Taeh’yung would board the Spardyti, seal the Hangar, and open it up and float out into space without switching on a single engine or system. Taeh’yung would then seal them in, using his abilities (which Namjoon will not inquire as they did not have the time to do so and honestly Taeh’yung would only give him an even more confusing explanation that answered no questions) to sustain them as they float through the debris.
This sea of debris would then cover their motion and plan until Yoongi is ready and then they would activate the cell, and theoretically, it would mask their presence the same way Jimin’s home-system was masked. Seeing as how the theory proved itself and was now working, they would use the small air-pressure tanks to gently punt themselves through the sea of debris unseen by the Omhlophe and Seulgaan’s ship towards the former’s ship.

Taeh’yung says something to Jimin, a slight teasing tone to his voice. Jimin’s splutters and indignant responses are amusing and it almost makes Namjoon smile. But he has other things to occupy his mind as he activates the Spardyti’s life-support system and gravity. The engines hum to life as well but are not activated just yet.

The white ship is large- at least 5 times the size of the Užkulisai. It was a unique design- if it weren’t for the uniform white colouring, the ship appeared as though it was hastily and blindly thrown together. None of the wings matched, the hull design was greatly different from the main body, the windows were different in size and shape and seemed to pop out at random.

‘We only just managed to subdue him.’ Sk’jin is saying.

‘So you’ve seen one of them with your own two eyes,’ Seulgaan sounds remarkably calm and contained as he adds: ‘Abomination.’

Namjoon frowns at the choice of words. Taeh’yung pauses in his motion to give Namjoon a quizzical look.

‘Abomination?’ Sk’jin sounds similarly confused.

Namjoon cannot afford to be distracted by Sk’jin’s conversation- he was going to have to depend on the Khol’isa to make sure things went how they were supposed to there. They continue to hide themselves behind the debris and with the slightest release of air-pressure in the right direction, they start floating towards the now stationary white ship.

‘We’re approaching our target,’ Namjoon reports, feeling breathless despite not having any issues breathing. ‘Yoongi- are you almost done?’

‘I need 3 minutes.’

Amazingly everything was still going to plan.

‘Release a missile- miss, but be close.’ He hears Seulgaan order.

This was a great risk in their plan- getting caught in between missile exchange.

‘Incoming-‘

There’s a burst of light and shockwaves send them careening forwards.

‘We’re fine.’ Namjoon says at once. He looks around, and finds that they’re now incredibly close to the ship. Oddly enough that missile was practically god-sent. ‘We’re almost there. 30 seconds.’

‘I need one more minute.’ Yoongi reports quietly.

Namjoon checks on the tiny missiles locked and loaded onto the canon-like TeorSer that needed to be hefted up onto a shoulder in order to launch the missiles.

Magnetic-pulse detonators.
Powerful and small- it would give them the time they needed in order to make their escape and meet back with the Užkulaisai. It was designed to effect only their gravity-systems and engine-chips. But they themselves would need to be at a good distance before triggering it. Not that it would affect the Spardyti, considering no systems were activated or switched on so the magnetic pulses wouldn’t fry any of their engines or mechanics. However, Namjoon deemed it prudent to keep themselves on the safe side. After all, a lot of unexpected things kept happening and the last thing they needed was to get caught in the explosion and end up stranded.

‘Magnetic strips ready!’ Taeh’yung reports brightly.

And right down to the very second that Sk’jin had so haphazardly calculated, they find themselves under the belly of the Omhlophe ship, attached to the bottom with moderately strong magnetic strips. It’s not strong enough to trigger an alarm, but enough to keep them anchored.

‘Please hurry.’ Yoongi states quietly. ‘Van Seulgaan is preparing to attack.’

Namjoon nods despite knowing Yoongi couldn’t see him. He grabs the extra air-pressure tank already outfitted with a strap and he slings it over and around his back.

‘Keep her steady and attached,’ Namjoon tells Taeh’yung who nods fervently in reply, pulling out a slim and dark screen from inside his jacket pocket. ‘When you get there, release at once and come back. Fucking Spaces I hope this works.’

Namjoon sighs out before taking a deep breath and jumps out of the Spardyti.

This was the part that Sk’jin had called “heroic but idiotic- perfect for you!” with a smile directed at Namjoon. It makes Namjoon’s eyebrows twinge at the very memory of it. With steady releases of the air-pressure, Namjoon shoots forward quickly and up to the surface of the ship. He suppresses a shiver as he touches the ice-cold metal of the ship.

They hadn’t flown out at random- they aimed to reach a certain part of the ship for a reason. And that reason was the water-cell latches.

‘Seulgaan will launch in 30 seconds.’ Yoongi reports quietly. ‘I am here. Ready when you are.’

‘Pa is there! I’m getting Hobi now!’ Taeh’yung replies for him.

Namjoon has a bone to pick with Yoongi. Clearly the Human did not even try to break his habit of frequently poisoning them with extremely rare trace amounts of highly radioactive isotopes- but it was the only thing that was allowing them to keep track of Hoseok’s whereabouts though it’s only through Yoongi’s personalized screen. Namjoon wants to argue this worrisome habit but seeing as how it was working out in their favor, he can’t say much. Besides, it wasn’t as though it was preplanned- Yoongi, like Namjoon, had wanted to keep an eye on the Ngfy’widan after he left the Užkulaisai, and so made him a cup of tea in parting.

Namjoon had actually seen that moment unfold before his very eyes.

Yoongi had offered the former Venture Unit agent the cup, face stoic as ever.

‘Is it poisoned this time?’ Hoseok had asked, a laugh in his voice.

‘Yes.’ Yoongi had replied.

Hoseok had laughed harder and finished the tea.
In Yoongi’s defense, he hadn’t lied.

Space is a cruel and harsh environment. Instantly Namjoon feels crushed but his body withstands it. He finds the latches and with a strong punch to the side, pries it open.

Water-cell latches were traditionally not secured – mainly because though it granted access into the ship via ducts and pipes, it had no life-support supplied in here and was therefore a terrible way of entering a ship illegally unless you wanted to face a painful death. But Namjoon is spared this.

The water-cell racks are narrow and Namjoon has to push himself through, his clothes snagging on the protruding shelves. But it’s enough.

He finds the duct, smaller but similar to the one Namjoon and Sk’jin had used to infiltrate Seulgaan’s ship. But he doesn’t have to go in. instead he reaches in and grabs the thick coil of wires to the side. Carefully, he snaps a wire just enough to expose the underwire. Once he sees the gleam of metal, he carefully attaches a small temporary self-destructive chip that lights up the moment Namjoon lets go of the chip. Pulling back and in the same motion as one would while swimming, coils in the air and with his feet pushes himself out of the cramped space, keeping as straight as possible.

‘I GOT HOBI!’ comes a delighted exclamation followed instantly by a violent shuddering that sends Namjoon careening off to the side. Ripples of raw force flushes him out of the water-cell latch and for a wild panicked moment, Namjoon is hurled out into space without anchor or security.

Unfiltered and raw heat waves crash about him like heavy waves of water and just as Namjoon thinks he’s probably the victim of the 22% chance of this plan failing, a hand grabs him non too gently and in a moment of pure confusion and intense vertigo, Namjoon finds himself retching and heaving on the floor of the Spardyti, his body shaking uncontrollably. But he’s aware enough to just make out Hoseok’s face looking down at him in worry.

It’s his hand gripping his own and beyond the look of worry and immediate urgency, Namjoon recognizes the look of reconciliation and acceptance in the Ngfy’widan’s yellow eyes.

‘You look like shit,’ is all Hoseok says.

‘-ready as soon as you’re far enough,’ Yoongi is saying. ‘Seulgaan is still firing.’

Hoseok doesn’t look too bad- his hair is matted and his clothes severely crumpled. His face has sunken just the tiniest bit and there are dark circles under his eyes. But there is energy in his movement and though Namjoon isn’t sure if it was because of the adrenaline triggered from his unexpected rescue, it gives him a small sense of relief.

Namjoon can’t help but laugh.

There’s another ripple of shock that rocks the Spardyti.

‘NaviLe- NaviLet-‘ Namjoon coughs out, still dizzy but he has plans to see through.

The NaviLet is thrust into his hands as Namjoon continues to cough out, ‘Hoseok- please fly us towards the battle towards the moon- quickly- put us in autopilot, then I need you to fire this at the Omhlophe-.’

Burst of light and shockwaves push them at random and though there’s no sound, the force of the explosions are overwhelming. If Hoseok has any question about how they were here, what the water was doing, where Namjoon had been, he doesn’t ask. Instead he just nods instantly- now was not the time for questions.

With shaking hands Namjoon pulls up the tab waiting for him.

The Spardyti hums to life and the glimmering green is gone, replaced by a light blue sheen that disappears almost at once. The thin shield of water remains though. The Spardyti shudders and careens precariously, making Namjoon slip and slide along the floor but he’s caught by Taeh’yung who hooks his legs around Namjoon’s waist from the back, clinging onto a chair himself.

‘Okay pa?’ he asks all too cheerily as Hoseok rights them.

‘Autopilot engaged,’ Hoseok announces, quickly exiting the cockpit and sliding over quickly to Namjoon and the loaded TeorSer to the side.

‘What’s this?’ Hoseok asks. Namjoon’s not sure what he means- was he asking about the TeorSer, the NaviLet, the water-shield?

‘I’m scanning all of their channels,’ Namjoon croaks out- he was definitely going to have to eat his meds after this.

‘Are you trying to override their systems?’ Hoseok sounds confused.

‘No,’ Namjoon shakes his head. ‘We need to get rid of the Comm they took from you- I attached a bug to scan their system and erase that channel so that they can’t use it to potentially track us or use it for their benefit-’

‘-wait, you’re going to have to recreate new channels-’ Hoseok interrupts again but Taeh’yung makes a sound of realization and he reaches inside his vest pocket and produces a brand new Comm-Device.

‘Pa made them! New ones!’ he declares, reaching around Namjoon to hand it to the Ngfy’widan.

Hoseok blinks at the tiny object for a moment before he shrugs and clips it on at once. Namjoon had at least 5 other channels as back up, so it wasn’t difficult setting up an entirely new one within minutes. He glances out of their still open doorway, the debris around them is churning with the force of the explosions and detonations, brief flashes of light streaking in and out violently. He’s not sure where exactly the Omhlophe ship might be but they weren’t aiming for an accurate shot.

‘But a bug is loud,’ Hoseok argues, ‘You’ll get caught at once-’

‘Not with that,’ Namjoon nods at the water shield around them. He finds the channel he had designed so carefully and neutralizes it at once. ‘Got it- it’s done.’

‘What-’

‘Yoongi- ready?’ Namjoon struggles to sit up with Taeh’yung’s legs still wrapped around his waist.

‘Ready.’

‘Hoseok- can you fire that?’

Hoseok only pauses for a second before he nods, shouldering the TeorSer and lifting it up.

‘Fire on 3…2…1!’
The air smells like ozone and carbon, a wave of heat washes of them as the small compact missile whistles past and through the debris, disappearing into the lights now at a decent distance from them.

There is no indication, at least no physical evidence, that the missile has met its mark. But there is another signal that Namjoon is waiting for with baited breath and it arrives in the form of Yoongi’s order.

‘Sunshine, now.’

The lights and explosions stop almost immediately and it fades away to give Namjoon a clear view of the Omhlophe ship.

There is no motion, no light, no movement- the massive engine hubs were dim and no light was indicated in the turbines.

‘Sk’jin?’

Hoseok has no idea what was happening but he too remains quiet, waiting with Namjoon and Taeh’yung for a response from the Khol’isa.

The seconds seem to drag on forever until Sk’jin replies, all too pleased with himself with a clear, ‘We’re clear. See you in a few minutes.’

Namjoon exhales out in relief and finally sits up properly. Taeh’yung’s legs fall off of him only to scramble upwards and jump up and down in celebration. Hoseok holds out a hand that Namjoon takes it.

Hoseok is shorter than Namjoon and doesn’t possess the same physical presence as the Kutsoglerin or the graceful elegance of Sk’jin’s form. He’s not lithe and slender like Jimin nor is he lanky and wispy like Taeh’yung. He wasn’t like Yoongi either where his presence was so slight you could all together look past it. But there was something solid, and reassuring about Hoseok- a sort of permanence to his being. A trait that Namjoon reasons as the main factor in why he found himself trusting the Ngfy’widan.

‘So,’ Hoseok begins, glancing out behind him at the Omhlophe ship and then forward towards the slaver-ship, and then to the on-going space battle to the side. ‘Care to explain?’
Sk’jin’s plan was brilliant.

Dangerous but brilliant.

‘But how do we know this Sool-gaan won’t instantly give up? These Beings are clearly dangerous and with abilities we cannot foresee or predict,’ Jimin asks.

‘He is intelligent,’ Taeh’yung translates Sk’jin’s words. ‘But he’s greedy and vain and angry. Never underestimate anger- it is the easiest emotion to manipulate.’

Jinmi nods in reply, unsure how to feel about it.

They would separate. Taeh’yung and Namjoon in the smaller ship, and attached to it the cell in order to hide their presence as they floated out to the Omhlophé’s ship. There they would wade through the debris to mask their physical presence, an added protection even though they were virtually invisible to every form of sensor. Namjoon would then take with him the chip he designed in order to erase the Užkulisa’s channels that had been stolen from Hoseok’s Comm-Device. While Namjoon took care of that, Taeh’yung would continue on and find Hoseok and extract him from where he was being held. Apparently they all had some form of “tracking” installed inside of them- and they had all stared blankly at Yoongi about it. Jimin didn’t understand but seeing as it wasn’t explained to him, he decided it probably wasn’t all too important.

Then to make sure that the Omhlophe didn’t do anything more, Namjoon would put some distance between the Spardyti and the Omhlophe and detonate a magnetic device to deactivate their major systems.

And then meanwhile, Sk’jin and Yoongi would go into the Sool-gaan’s ship and distract him, engage him in conversation and essentially use his ship as their own shield. But when Sk’jin had hurriedly explained that part of the plan, he paused and with a very pleased smile added something else that made Yoongi instantly reject it.

‘No,’ the Human says, shaking his head at once. He was disagreeing with Sk’jin, Jimin could tell.

They continue to argue, fast and snappish and it’s over in a few seconds. Taeh’yung seems reluctant to translate, glancing at Yoongi before clearing his throat and giving him a sheepish smile.

‘Sk’jin says that he wants you to disguise yourself as Yoongi and to go with him to meet Seulgaan,’ Taeh’yung grins. ‘And in the meanwhile, Yoongi can hide inside your old OrTank case where he will carry another magnetic-pulse device and set it off to shut down Seulgaan’s ship.’

Like Jimin had thought, this was a dangerous plan.

‘But – but if we are inside the ship-’ Jimin begins, wondering about the clear flaws in this plan.

‘Seulgaan will want to secure the most important cargo here- meaning you,’ Taeh’yung continues to explain. ‘He will want to secure you and keep you inside the ship as soon as possible- meaning they will take the OrTank, meaning Yoongi, deeper inside the ship- there, Yoongi can slip out and make his way to the engines and set off the device in there, without effecting the Užkulisa.’

‘And during this time, Sk’jin wants me to subdue Sool-gaan and his guards?’ Jimin asks carefully.

Taeh’yung nods brightly and adds, ‘And Yoongi will come back up, and the three of you will return to our ship, while Namjoon, Hobi, and I come back. With the cell activated within the Spardyti, which will return back to our ship, we will continue to remain hidden. Then we leave as quickly as possible.’

Jimin can see a lot going wrong with this plan. But then again, they had no other choice- not when it was so sudden. The existing situation was already this dangerous, and Jimin does not want to face these mysterious Beings who knew exactly who he was. Taeh’yung had explained the events to him. And though vague, Jimin could not shake off the strange apprehension he felt every time he thought of these Beings. So he was with the rest of them in their desire to put as much distance from them as possible.

Not to mention retrieve Hoseok as quickly as they could.

So he nods his agreement.

Sk’jin looks pleased and he claps his hands, hurrying them along.

‘You’ll need to dress in Yoongi’s gear,’ Taeh’yung quickly explains.

Jimin is immediately worried- would he be able to convince this Sool-gaan that he was Yoongi? They were the same height, with similar built. But the difference between them is startling clear.

‘Jimin.’

Yoongi gestures quietly and walks out of the Bridge. Feeling nervous, Jimin follows after the Human and down to his Cabin. Yoongi is taking out the full black gear he wore every time they left the ship. He even wore it under the clothes he wore inside the ship. Not that it mattered, because Yoongi was always dressed in black, hardly any difference in the style or structure of what he wore.

He doesn’t say anything, instead calmly handing him the gear. Jimin takes it, the fabric feels oddly weighty and fluid- like it would slip out of his grip if he didn’t grip it tight. Jimin wants to know more about this material- about this uniform. He wants to know more about Yoongi- what he did before, what he was doing that he had this garment. But he doesn’t have time, so without much ceremony, he starts to undress.

Jimin isn’t particularly bashful or ashamed of changing out of his clothes in front of others- he grew up sharing his living space with his guards from a young age and onwards. But he’s conscious of Yoongi’s presence and he almost regrets his actions but he’s already in the process of changing. He tries to be quick but Yoongi’s gear is unusual and Jimin isn’t sure how to really wear it.

But he’s not confused for long.

Yoongi steps in and helps him.

Jimin tries to stop his sharp inhale as Yoongi helps him undress fully. Jimin can’t help how he’s jumpy, face flushing with colour as Yoongi slips the socks off of his feet, his hands quick and steady. Jimin is used to dressing and undressing in front of others but here, like this, he can’t help but feel affected. However there is no awkwardness or discomfort from the Human at his now utter nakedness. It doesn’t seem to bother the Human or affect him in the slightest. Perhaps it was because prior to this, Jimin was always entirely naked inside the OrTank, so it’s not that much of a big deal to Yoongi. Or perhaps it was simply a Human thing.

Jimin takes some comfort in this- this was a matter of importance and required speediness on their behalf. So he tries not to shiver too much as he slips into the oddly weighty gear that Yoongi holds up for him to wear.
It fits like second skin, yet despite the fluidity of the fabric, there is a certain heaviness, a weight that adds to his form and Jimin feels invincible but at the same time incredibly exposed. Even more then when he was naked. The fabric molds and seals itself over Jimin’s skin in a seamless manner. It sealed over in the back and before it closes, Jimin feels the softest and briefest stroke down the center of his back.

Did his back look different to Yoongi?

The weight that came from the suit wasn’t just from the physical mass it bore- but rather a feeling it seemed to emit. Jimin cannot place it- but he has the intense urge to take it off immediately. He stares at his arms, down at his body, feeling at himself- there was something wrong about this. About the gear, everything about it was just not right.

He feels tainted.

He doesn’t feel like himself in this.

‘Yoongi,’ Jimin can’t help the tone of his voice. Can’t help the discomfort and strangeness he felt. How did Yoongi deal with this? Or did he realize it himself?

‘This- this feels weird,’ he says knowing full well Yoongi wouldn’t understand. He pulls at the high-necked ribbing around his throat, face screwing up in discomfort.

When he looks up he catches a glimpse of his reflection on the mirror inside the bathroom. And Jimin is repulsed by what he sees- who he sees. This wasn’t him- this wasn’t Yoongi.

They were both changed, yes- especially Yoongi. But there was something about this gear, something about all of this, that made Jimin greatly unsettled.

‘Jimin?’

Jemin looks away from his strange reflection and at Yoongi instead. There’s a look of understanding in the Human’s eyes. Like he knew exactly what Jimin was feeling, what he was thinking.

‘This is so strange,’ Jimin whispers, all of the fight leaving his body. He looks down at his feet. The gear was like one full body suit, the boots rippling over and folding over the shape of his feet perfectly. This was wrong.

But there was nothing he could do. This was part of the plan and to make sure they were secure, to make sure Hoseok would return to them safely, he was going to have to do this. He could do this.

He will do this.

Yoongi’s hand appears in his field of vision and settles on his chin. Jimin feels his head being lifted, to face Yoongi properly. The Human studies him for a moment, his eyes dark and though he bore no expression, there was a depth to his eyes that felt familiar and safe.

‘Beautiful,’ Yoongi tells him.

Jemin flushes instantly.

He knew what that word meant. He ducks his head again, his hair falling around his face. This was not what he wanted to hear exactly. Especially in this situation. But it makes him feel better, oddly enough.
And then to his surprise, Yoongi taps at his chin once more and lifts his head up slowly. Then rather gently and with great intimacy that stutters Jimin’s breath in his throat, Yoongi brushes back his hair. Jimin wants to lean in, taking in all he could from this Human before him. Yoongi seems to really like his hair- even back in Menigišiti, when they would sit together, exhausted and frightened, Yoongi would take a moment to just simply marvel at his hair. As though drinking in the sight of it; like an elixir that granted him strength.

Jimin’s hair colour was a result of who he was- his sister was the same. Their people- their species, were known to have dark hair. Their parents had hair that was almost black. During a rather rebellious phase, Jimin had dyed his hair black, if only for a few hours of attempting to feel less isolated, and to blend in with his species. But it didn’t last long. Because he carried Fate in his eyes, and every time he saw himself, that was all he could ever see.

Yoongi pushes back his hair one last time before he lifts the helmet up. There’s a worried look on his face, as he holds the helmet up for Jimin to push his head into. Jimin remembers how Yoongi didn’t want him to put it on. Jimin figured it was an extension of a weapon- or at least a device that aided in the usage or application of some weaponry. Maybe he didn’t want Jimin to be in a situation where he was using it?

Jimin himself did not enjoy fighting. He did not see the appeal of brute force. But he also understood how it was applicable and at times, needed in certain situations.

‘We do not strike when struck,’ his sister had said, nursing a black eye with an amused expression. She received it as a result of a heated debate regarding some diplomatic issue and Jimin hadn’t been there, having been away on the other side of the planet. He had been young at the time and seeing his sister in pain and with an actual wound had greatly upset him.

‘You must have seen it coming,’ Jimin had pressed, angry and upset now. His sister had given him an amused look.

‘I did. And sometimes you just have to accept it- because there is more power in empathy than strength.’

That hadn’t placated Jimin one bit but he trusted his sister to know what she was doing. And just as well, ridden with guilt, the Being responsible for giving his sister a black eye had thrown himself on the ground before her feet, begging to be forgiven. And it was through this situation that his sister had gained her most trusted advisor.

He bows his head and allows Yoongi to push it over.

If the gear felt wrong, then this helmet was simply put, an abomination.

It’s suffocating and Jimin doesn’t know how Yoongi does it. It instantly blocks all of Jimin’s senses and he almost forgets to breathe only to realize he could do so freely. He blinks a few times before sight is restored to him and oddly enough everything seemed sharper, but also a little distorted. Sound rushes to him as well and almost quite simply, the helmet fits over his head quite easily. It almost feels like he isn’t wearing it, the only indication is the slight distortion in his vision.

‘Okay?’ Yoongi asks quietly, his voice unchanged and filtered through perfectly as though no barrier was raised between them.

Jimin nods, ‘Okay,’ he replies.
Yoongi looks unsure, his expression worried.

Jimin wants to lighten the atmosphere so he chuckles a bit before asking Yoongi, ‘Beautiful?’ knowing full well his face was covered from view. Yoongi doesn’t reply yet, now fiddling with some gloves before he takes Jimin’s hand, thumb carefully stroking the back of his hand.

‘Beautiful,’ he nods before slipping the glove into Jimin’s hand. Then he takes the other hand and repeats his actions, quietly repeating the adjective again.

Jimin is grateful for the helmet because his face is flushed, his ears burning.

There’s a simple honesty- a raw unfiltered genuineness in Yoongi’s tone and words. There was no reasoning or purpose- not the way Jimin was used to- not in the way where he was beheld high up by his people his title and who he was. This was different.

Yoongi now and Yoongi then were the same in that aspect. Who they were, conceptually and subjectively, was different. There was no denying it. But that remained- an identical imprint that lingered, stamped into Yoongi’s DNA, into the very force that governed his being and entirety.

It draws a reaction from Jimin that makes him want to look away, to hide his face out of embarrassment.

Maybe it wasn’t what Jimin wanted to hear- but he now understands what Yoongi was trying to say.

Who he was still existed- what he wore now, where they were now, what they had to do now, did not stop him or change him from who he really was. And though Jimin blushed to think about it, for Yoongi, no matter the gear Jimin dawned on, he would see him for who he was; and that was beautiful.

Pushing up the visor of the helmet, Jimin reaches for Yoongi, gloved hands cupping the Human’s face.

‘Beautiful.’

Yoongi looks genuinely stunned.

Slowly, he shakes his head to Jimin’s statement. Jimin can’t help smiling, repeating the word again. It was almost as though Yoongi was shy.

They walk together towards the Hangar where Namjoon and Taeh’yung were getting ready to leave. The cell quickly and hastily attached to the main engine component on the Spardyti. Namjoon looks impressed when Jimin approaches, clearly making a comparison as his eyes flit between Jimin and Yoongi. He says something and Taeh’yung nods enthusiastically to that.

‘Does this really look all right?’ Jimin asks Taeh’yung the moment he’s close enough.

‘It does,’ the Zhak’gri tells him reassuringly.

‘It feels wrong,’ Jimin tells him helplessly. ‘It’s- it’s heavy.’

Taeh’yung has an understanding look in his eyes. He understood the implications of Jimin’s words.

‘Only for a while,’ he smiles.

Jimin nods. He knows.
They empty out the OrTank casing that had carried Jimin’s original OrTank. It would be large enough for Yoongi to sit inside with the magnetic pulse detonator with some extra space. The Human steps inside without further ado and takes the small compact device from Namjoon and tucks in a screen with him.

There’s a strange sensation the electrifies Jimin with dread as they slide the OrTank case cover close.

‘He’ll be all right,’ Taeh’yung pats the OrTank case. ‘They’re actually quite comfortable!’

‘…how do you know?’

‘I hid in one for a week once!’

Jimin doesn’t want to know how or why Taeh’yung found himself in such a situation.

He sees off the duo, setting off in the Transporter. He eyes the OrTank case quietly, making his way to sit next to it if only for a few seconds. He places his hand over the surface, wondering if Yoongi knew he was there or not. They were pretty sound-proof, from what Jimin can observe in terms of the design and materials used.

By the time Sk’jin comes down, dressed in truly magnificent clothing, Jimin almost doesn’t feel like himself at all. And maybe that was why he didn’t feel nervous, or why he could descend the ramp to face this Sool-gaan. He doesn’t even feel much when the Being in question regards him with a strange contemptuous look. Something like fear, disgust, and most of all, pure and intense hatred directed at him. He can feel and smell fear, pain, death, and loss in this ship. It reeks of it.

Every inch of this ship was smeared in it. He could not see it, but he knew, that beyond the great gateway behind Sool-gaan, existed hell and damnation.

‘Yoongi? Okay?’ he asks quietly, wanting to reassure himself by hearing the Human’s voice.

‘Okay,’ the Human replies quietly as the cyborgs carry him past Jimin and out of sight.

Sk’jin is clearly enjoying himself heckling Sool-gaan, and this easily takes up time. There are alarming explosions of light but Jimin is reassured by Taeh’yung that they were all right every so often.

They keep communicating on the Comm-Device, Taeh’yung sometimes translating.

‘How does it feel wearing Yoongi’s clothes?’ the insinuation is clear in Taeh’yung’s tone and Jimin tries in vain to sound nonchalant as he splutters a nonsensical response.

His heart is at ease when he hears Taeh’yung excitedly announce that he retrieved Hoseok. And then Jimin mentally prepares himself. It would be soon now.

Not counting Sool-gaan, there were 17 other Beings, 24 cyborgs, and 2 androids. There would be more but that wasn’t immediately important right now and all access to this Hangar would be taken care of by Yoongi. Jimin can sense Sk’jin’s nervousness. Despite his very convincing attitude of confidence, the Khol’isa was obviously nervous. And with good reason.

Sool-gaan issues his orders, hand waving dismissively before he walks out of the Dock. Jimin doesn’t move as the guards approach them, flanked by the cyborgs who all aim their firearms at them. They would have to time this perfectly.
Sk’jin is quite obviously nervous, and maybe the Sool-gaan’s guards can see it too because they start speaking to him in mocking tones.

‘Yoongi?’ he asks quietly, allowing the guards to push him backwards. Jimin has a feeling they would take his helmet off and he couldn’t have that now. But at the same time he couldn’t prevent it because the cyborgs were still active. And every single explosion of light that ripples across the debris-strewn space outside increases his panic and nervousness. Jimin wants to reach out and take Sk’jin’s hand- but he couldn’t. Not when he was imitating Yoongi.

But they don’t have to wait long.

‘Sunshine, now.’ Yoongi tells him quietly.

Though it had been only a mere 30 minutes, Jimin had felt as though time had lapsed for eons. Exhaling as though he had been holding his breath, Jimin finally relaxes and his movement draws attention. The lights in the Docks blink out and give way to the glaring emergency lights and in one collective heap, all the cyborgs fall to the ground. But the remaining guards have no time to react.

Light erupts- soft and gently and soothing. A calm and reasonable suggestion- one that spoke of common sense, of logic- and one that could be classified almost as seductive.

‘Be at peace,’ he whispers softly, his voice a lulling hymn, a gentle song, and a powerful command.

‘Don’t take off your helmet!’ Taeh’yung translates urgently.

But it doesn’t matter.

Because Jimin finally feels like he’s overcome the gear- like he’s shedding the weight of it.

Actual physical growth is not a sensation most natural living beings experienced. At least not in a physical sense.

And it’s not a physical presence either- it’s not a tangible or palpable property that grows out of Jimin at his beck and call.

It was an extension of himself- it was his core.

It was his will and it was his intention.

And he knows he doesn’t have to extend this anymore than this room. But he does. The stench of death, pain, fear, and loss is replaced with sudden sleep and even though Jimin starts to feel a little light-headed he continues on. He had felt constrained and restricted- travelling for continuous periods of time through space was not comfortable for Jimin. He preferred being in-planet, where he could feel the surges of power deep within the planet’s core.

‘Jimin?’

Jimin doesn’t know how much time had gone by as lowers his hands and finds Sk’jin in front of him, eyes shielded and narrowed. ‘Stop.’

Jimin stumbles backwards a little, extremely dizzy and light-headed. His breaths sound harsh to his own ears and he quickly kneels on one knee on the floor, trying to regain his strength.
Sk’jin is talking to him and Jimin knows he’s asking if he was all right.

‘Okay-‘ Jimin manages to pant out, ‘I am okay.’

Looking over the grounds, Jimin finds the guards in heaps on the floor, fast asleep. The cyborgs are still in heaps on the floor and no living being was approaching them. Shakily, Jimin manages to stand again. He wasn’t going to be able to do much after this for some time- he would need rest. Sk’jin helps him up, still looking about the place with confusion, eyeing Jimin as well as though hoping for an explanation. The Khol’isa says something more, his tone sounds almost chastising, as though telling Jimin off for overdoing it. It makes Jimin smile.

‘It’s done,’ Jimin reports back weakly in his best Standard.

Sk’jin too says something before he’s nodding. He carefully lets go of Jimin as though to make sure he was all right. Jimin raises a shaky thumb’s up and Sk’jin takes this as a positive sign. And then he’s rushing back towards the Užkulisai, not sparing a single glance back at the Dock or the guards. But Jimin stays still. He wants to remove the helmet but he doesn’t want to be seen or recognized.

‘Yoongi?’ he asks nervously, pacing a little as he glances around for any rogue guard or some attempt to upset this delicate plan.

‘Coming sunshine.’

It feels almost like hours before Yoongi reappears, bursting through the doors towards the end of the Dock. Jimin tries to move quickly towards the Human, searching his being for any injury. But Yoongi is fine, his hands reaching out in response to Jimin’s own outstretched ones. When their hands meet, Jimin is finally at complete ease, his light-headedness ebbing away slowly.

They both head towards the Užkulisai, her engines humming and the turbines bright and active. And out past her glimmering slightly amidst the dense sea of debris, the Spardyti was returning as well. They would have to wait until it was safely docked in before they could leave.

‘Jimin,’ Yoongi points inside their Hangar at the magnetic strips waiting for the Spardyti to arrive. Jimin nods in understanding, making his way towards them to ready them to receive the Transporter. He’s fatigued and his body feels like it’s moving in slow motion but he doesn’t stop. They were so close to leaving this behind. But he doesn’t even get to step inside the Hangar when the whole ship suddenly jolts violently.

Falling to his knees at the sudden brute force, Jimin doesn’t need Taeh’yung or Namjoon’s warning cries to feel it.

Light blankets the wide gaping opening of the Dock as a torrent of missiles fall upon them.

‘-im in get inside now- it’s- it’s the space-battle, they’ve moved over-‘

‘Taeh’yung-!?’ Jimin recovers enough to stand up, wildly looking out but there’s too many flashes of light and the ship is tilting violently. Their own method of escaping by using the magnetic pulse was now crippling them. Sool-gaan’s ship was now simply a sitting target, with no protection or means of escape.

They had been too distracted- too worried for their safety that they forget the immediate danger that lay outside this ship. The very danger that they had nearly crashed into when they eased out of warp.
Jimin remembers Namjoon saying that this planet, Ynqaba, was in the midst of a great civil war. They had not expected this battle to spread from in-planet to their spatial-borders. And now they were caught in the middle of a war.

Jimin twists as he slides down the Hangar floor, trying to catch himself on the floor. He catches sight of Yoongi who is attempting to hold himself steady on the railings to the side of the ramp floor. The Human looks unperturbed, only a slight look of worry as he watches Jimin perch himself against the side of the floor.

‘Sk’jin!’ Jimin yells out, inching forward towards Yoongi to help him inside.

The lines of communication are scrambled and there’s too much white noise- everything was too loud. Jimin concentrates on moving forward, eyes never leaving Yoongi’s.

Yoongi is waiting for him, his expression steady, as though silently encouraging Jimin to move forward. Jimin feels restricted- he wishes he could remove the helmet but he knows it’ll keep him safe.

The blinding lights clear and Jimin is momentarily distracted at the sight that unfolds outside.

Jimin can no longer see the Spardyti. In fact the sea of debris and rubble has scattered far across and before him the whole mass of battle-worn ships gather and hover.

Jimin gulps, horror and shock flooding him in tremors. There were thousands of innocent lives in this ship. If they are attacked, then they could do nothing to stop it. Especially not with the Omhlophe waiting for them just beyond. But Jimin can’t help but wonder at these Ynqaba ships gathered outside. They were fighter-ships yes, but they weren’t numerous or powerful enough to take down a ship as large as this one. Perhaps the Omhlophe’s ship could have made an easier target, but a ship this size was sure to withstand their continued attacks for weeks even.

Sk’jin had said that there was a 78% chance of success.

This was probably the remaining 22% coming back to overthrow them.

‘Jimin!’

Tearing his gaze away from the barrier of ships before him, Jimin concentrates back on Yoongi.

The Human has already carefully clambered in and he’s stepping up onto the ramp when a bright clear light erupts outside of the Dock.

Momentarily blinded, Jimin braces himself for the force of impact but nothing happens.

At least not what Jimin expects.

There is no shock wave, no pressure from the force of the explosion of a missile. Instead there is silence. A strange, hollow silence and Jimin understands at once.

These ships weren’t here to blow them up or even attempt to fire at them. That explosion of light had not been a missile. It had been a very powerful magnetic-pulse.

Because these Beings, the ones in the battle-ships in front of him, knew they didn’t have the masses or power to take them down. But they could always rely on their planet’s natural gravitational pull to draw them in. And now, without the power or energy to source the brakes or anchors on Sool-gaan’s ship, they were harnessed into Ynqaba’s gravity range.
They were now, in every sense of the word powerless.

And as though the ship too had realized what Jimin had come to realize, darkness falls and sirens and warnings go off but it’s not before gravity vanishes partly and suddenly, everything is untethered and unstable. Jimin loses balance and falls over, his impact oddly slow but still disconcerting.

And then to his horror, before he can even remotely stabilize himself, the ship starts to tilt around dangerously, pulling Jimin down again. And to add to this, the Ynqaba ships start to fire. Massive forceful detonations, all aimed to push them further and deeper into Ynqaba’s gravity range.

Jimin tries to concentrate- could he reach out and stop this destruction? Could he reach out and stop this attack—

The ships suddenly lets out a deep and almost guttural groan.

‘Jimin.’

Yoongi is still there, trying his best to cling onto the ramp the same way Jimin was trying to cling to the Hangar wall.

A symphony of lights erupt around them- heat waves pushing over before ripples of force press Jimin down. The Dock quakes and then within a second, the ship starts to chip apart bit by bit. The light illuminates the Dock and Jimin sees the way the floor panels seem to peel off, chunks of wires and pipes floating out, weaker thinner metals curling and falling off. The heat is powerful and Jimin is desperate as he attempts to fight the overwhelming waves of force from the continuous rain of missiles and move forward to Yoongi.

Yoongi has managed to cling to the side of the ramp, his face contorted with concentration and pain. Jimin can see blisters forming on Yoongi’s hands and this spurs him forward even faster.

The Užkulisai tilts dangerously again and Jimin has the momentum to move forward- but this means that Yoongi is in even more danger.

‘Yoongi-!’

Jimin runs forward and he feels gravity returning, the slightest hint of a pull brushing against his exposed skin. Diving vertically, Jimin soars through the spinning air and grabs Yoongi’s outstretched hand. They fall in a heap as gravity pulls them down and Yoongi swings on Jimin’s arm over the edge of the twisting ramp.

‘Yoongi- please climb up-‘ Jimin tugs at Yoongi’s hand and the Human grips back even tighter before tensing almost violently for a second and he pulls himself up on Jimin’s arm and upwards. His free hand grips onto the lip of the ramp and he easily swings a leg over. Jimin scrambles to pull him up over, sitting up from where he’d been on the floor on his front, his body buzzing and strung from adrenaline and panic.

It all happens too quickly.

There’s a bright flare of light and before Jimin can even comprehend what he instinctively understood, Jimin yanks Yoongi into the Hangar Bay with all his strength just as a missile detonates right above them.

The force of the blast tilts the Užkulisai sharply and Jimin has no control as he falls out.
His vision is a kaleidoscope of lights, heat, stars, the Dock, and the Užkulisai.

He collides hard onto a wall and slides down.

And by all laws of physics, the Užkulisai should also be crashing beside Jimin- but gravity is wreaking havoc and the forces of the missiles jolts the very air around them and the Užkulisai is rotating upwards and outwards. How was this possible? That magnetic-pulse would have taken out all of their systems- how was the Užkulisai still able to function?

They don’t know what purpose the magnetic-pulses were meant to serve. If the gravity functions were falling apart- then life-support could also follow soon. Panic spreads inside Jimin and his body is electrified into action with fear. He pushes himself up and propelling himself forward, Jimin attempts to swim towards the Užkulisai.

As Jimin stretches, the Užkulisai flips around and Yoongi is there.

His eyes are wide with fear- and it’s not fear for himself, or fear of death or pain.

It’s the same fear within Jimin reflecting back at him and Jimin cries out, willing himself to move forward.

The emergency lights dim and the alarms shut off.

He doesn’t hear it, but he see Yoongi’s lip forming the syllables of his name- he was calling out to him- he was calling for him. And Jimin has to answer- he has to reach back. Yoongi’s hand is stretched out for him and Jimin tries-

There is an eruption of heat that rips through the remaining air and Jimin collides heavily with a careening OrTank and he falls back deeper into the Dock.

But the Užkulisai is suddenly upright and steady- her engines and turbines alight and powered.

‘What-‘

The air is spinning around Jimin and the Uzkulisai is the only steady thing in his vision. Yoongi is still there, eyes and mouth wide, as though he was screaming- his hand is reaching out but the ramp is closing him in and in a matter of a couple of seconds, the gates of the Hangar Bay are closed and Yoongi is gone.

There is another detonation and fire, white and hot rains down on Jimin from above the Užkulisai. Jimin’s scream is deafening even to himself as the Užkulisai shoots out through the cloud of fire and out of the riotous Dock into open space beyond before it is hidden from his sight by a blanket of explosions.

‘YOONGI!’

As though he was being yanked back by a rope, Jimin falls backwards through the air and he’s crashes. His vision dims, his entire being threatening to slip into unconsciousness. But he can’t. So he concentrates- there was only one thing Jimin could concentrate on. Jimin can only hear himself breathing- his pulse roaring like thunder in his ears. He counts his breaths- pacing his thoughts, his movements, forcing his recovering to align. When he pulls himself together, he feels how a great pressure is pushing him with bone-crushing force against the walls of the Hangar. If it weren’t for the gear he wore, Jimin would not have survived.

‘Yoongi-!’ he chokes out. ‘Y-Yoongi-! Taeh’yung-!’
He’s pushed down heavily and though his vision is blurred and compromised, he sees the horrified dead faces of Sool-gaan’s guards close by. Jimin cannot look.

‘Lisai!’ Jimin calls out desperately, his mind reeling with all the words and terms he memorized with so much dedication. ‘H-help!’

The automated voice sounds clear and stable but Jimin doesn’t understand. But he can understand the tone- the AI was asking him a question. All AI’s were designed and programmed to prioritize living Beings and prevent any harm from occurring. Whatever it was asking Jimin, had to be of good. To help him.

Jimin flips- pressure dragging him downwards instead and to his horror he watches as loosened gravity-lifts and other large gadgets are ripped off of their hinges and crash down around him. The Užkulisai was nowhere in sight and Jimin has no way of knowing if it was safe or not. He can’t afford to think about it- the Užkulisai had purposefully left the Dock. It had left Jimin behind.

Lisai’s voice repeats the same words and Jimin, in his heavy disorientation understands just a few words and one of them is ‘return’- and that’s what Jimin needs. He needs to return- he has to return. He cannot leave Yoongi again- he cannot allow this to happen again-

‘Yes!’ he manages to cry out.

His vision which had previously been clear and sharp, with just a singular warped line to the side to indicate his visor, is now suddenly overwhelmed with light-lines and letters forming in nauseating rapidity.

Jimin crashes against a wall and with agility and speed he didn’t know he possessed, spins and rolls away as a massive bolder falls where he had just been.

‘Lisai-?!’

The words are going past so quickly they look like blurred neon streaks- trying to look past them, Jimin crawls forwards towards a vent. It was a contained space- he would be safer in there-

He slides along the floor as the ship tilts again but Jimin holds onto the floor’s textured surface, using Yoongi’s gear to his advantage. It’s a difficult climb and he keeps repeating ‘Yes!’ to Lisai’s questions. A stray pipe catches itself on Jimin’s leg and he holds back a cry of pain and moves on. Below him the planet Ynqaba was looming shockingly close. So his hunch had been right. They were pushing the ship towards their planet.

Everything was screaming- the ship, the living beings in it, the very atoms that existed within that space- everything was screaming and Jimin’s throat is parched and strained.

Just as he grabs on to the vent-lip the blurred lines freeze and vanish, leaving behind a long paragraph of words and sentences he does not understand.
‘Yes!’ Jimin cries out one more time before pulling himself inside the narrow vent. He doesn’t even know what he’s agreeing to but he just screams it.

‘Lisai?!’ he shouts. The screaming is louder in here and Jimin can’t help but close his eyes.

‘Please- Yoongi!’ he screams. ‘Taeh’yung! Sk’jin! Namjoon! Hoseok! Can you hear me?! Please!’

The screaming rises to a numbing pitch and light flashes through his closed eyes and Jimin is forced to open them.
It's white and as though the universe had inversed. Great lines of stars streaked past, leaving behind black spots that blinked and are gone in an instant- voices and laughter and crying ring around until they burst into colour.

Jimin feels his stomach convulse, his entire being shivers and his head is suddenly fevered. Feeling as though two great hands were squeezing his brain, Jimin struggles to look away, his hands trying to push away the sight before him. But he can’t let go- he had to hold on to the ladder or he could fall out of the vent and back into the hangar-

[TEMPORAL LOBE FUNCTION AT MAXIMUM]
[SYSTEMATIC FUNCTIONS AT MAXIMUM OVERDRIVE]
[OVERDRIVE]
[OVERDRIVE]
[OVERDRIVE]
[OVERDRIVE]
[SYSTEMS CRASHING_PROCEED Y/N]
[SYSTEMS CRASHING_PROCEED Y/N]
[SYSTEMS CRASHING_PROCEED Y/N]
[SYSTEMS CRASHING_PROCEED Y/N]
[SYSTEMS_ - _]
He’s back in the vent.

His breathing is harsh and his mouth tastes like bile. His entire body shakes violently, his mind is filled with a sort of buzzing that reminds Jimin of night-insects but just amplified at least 10 times in volume.

Jimin thinks he might have fallen unconscious again because when he opens his eyes again, everything feels strangely normal.

‘Good evening Jimin.’

It’s eerily silent. It is also dark, and it’s impossibly cold. The very air around him is still and Jimin only just realizes he’s on his back. But he doesn’t care about any of that.

‘Your health-tab suggests that you have sustained a concussion, please do not move too much. You have also sustained 3 cracked ribs, a cracked fibula, and bruised your 4th and 5th lumbar vertebrae. Your suit has aligned to support you, so please do not strain yourself.’

As though the words triggered it, pain floods Jimin’s body and he can’t help the cry of pain that comes out of his mouth.

This was a dream. It had to be a dream. But the pain was too real- this vent was too real. The soreness of his throat, and the heaviness of his tongue was too real.

‘Li- Lisai?’ Jimin croaks out, willing himself to wake up. This was a dream. It had to be. It wasn’t possible- this wasn’t possible. This had to be a dream- if he could hear Lisai, he had to be in the ship. Or at least near-by.
‘How can I help you?’

This was not a dream. This was real.

This was all too real.

He can hear the words. Hear the foreign tones and by all means, by all logic Jimin shouldn’t be able to understand.

But he does.

‘Y-Yoongi-‘

Pain blossoms along his chest and Jimin coughs violently.

‘Weapons-specialist Yoongi is out of reach. Channels from Yngaba do not allow off-planet communications.’

Off-planet?!

Jimin racks his pain-fevered mind, bright spots appearing before his eyes as pain floods his body, leaving him shaking to his core.

‘Lisai- where-…where I am.’

‘You are currently located inside the XBI-001-43, a trading ship under the command of Van Seulgaan of Raksane Tayi. You have entered the country of Luargeri in the planet of Yngaba illegally. Please obtain your pass at the nearest Immigration Office, located 3.1 light years in the System of Ymir.’
“The past, like the future, is indefinite and exists only as a spectrum of possibilities.”

Stephen Hawking.

I’m SO SORRY for the late update!! Istg uni is killing me this semester T_T

But I hope you enjoy this update!! It was really fun to write and WOO THIS IS GONNA BE GREAT JIMIN UNDERSTANDS STANDARD NEXT CHAPTER IS GONNA BE SO FUN coughs i mean, it'll be chill coughs “Reach” [verb]: stretch out an arm in a specified direction in order to touch or grasp something.

Chapter Notes

See the end of the chapter for notes

---

Ancient Earth had a lot of cultural and urban myths and lore they were fond of. From the timeless legend of vampires, to the mystical belief in sprites and fairies, Humans never ran out of fanciful ideas and stories to entertain themselves. Out of all of these, the most improbable, according to Yoongi, has always been zombies.

He found the entire notion difficult to believe, even theoretically. Because no theory ever procured could ever rationalize or reason the possibility of zombies. The only explanation Yoongi could accept in regards to zombies changed the whole lore to something else— which was more of a psychological explanation, citing mental deterioration and reducing the unfortunate Human feral and senseless. The actual “turning into a brain-dead flesh eating horror” was laughable and Yoongi used to spend a lot of time debating the entire thing with his classmates when he was still in high-school.

But now as he watches his team members slowly fall apart, their minds fading, their eyes glazing over, and their bodies succumbing to a strange illness that both drained and pained them, Yoongi feels as though he was witnessing the fabled and cinematic zombie apocalypse. Except there was no immediate turn. There was no dramatic overture. No gradual descent into a crazed instinctual blood/brain-lust.

Everyone was too aware of what was happening. Too aware of their own change.

They could feel it in the air, on their skin, in between their hair strands.

They could feel it in their skin, permeating through the tissue and deep into their bones.

And Yoongi knows this because he feels it too.

A strain— a fragile and very precariously held balance was now starting to take over him.

And Yoongi cannot describe it. But he can see it mirrored in their eyes. He can’t explain whether it was an illness of his body. Or if it was just something entirely imagined. Or if it was instead a sickness of his heart, and instead of blood, he pumped pain and sand through his veins.

Each step he took felt disoriented and heavy, slow and haphazard. But it wasn’t so bad.

Especially compared to the others. Especially compared to Amic.

‘You look like shit,’ he grinned, his cheeks hollowed out dramatically, his hair falling off slowly. Yoongi is reminded of terminal cancer patients he saw portrayed in movies from Ancient Earth.
‘Yeah- you’re looking really sharp out here,’ Yoongi comments back as he takes a seat next to his long-time friend.

There’s nothing to say. They can’t say anything. All they could do was stretch out the time between the inevitable collapse, between the expected vanishing. So far 2 of their team mates had vanished and there was nothing they could do.

What could they do?

‘You know-‘ Amic coughs out, ‘-I always thought- thought that all those movies we used to watch- were a bunch of bullshit.’

‘They were,’ Yoongi laughs but it sounds more like a sob.

‘I liked the Dis-nee ones though,’ Amic confesses.

‘Yeah? Me too,’ Yoongi wonders if by pretending they were normal, if by pretending none of this was happening, if they could stall or delay this inevitable truth that was about to become reality.

But Amic makes it hard to pretend.

‘I’m dying,’ he says simply. ‘The movies always made it seem so calm. So…so welcoming almost.’

Yoongi’s heart, or whatever was left of it, wrings out another pulse and pain floods him.

‘But I don’t want to go- I’m just- I’m just falling-‘ Amic’s voice breaks and the fear in his voice is palpable.

I want to catch you- but Yoongi can’t say it. Because he can’t catch Amic. He can’t reach for him. He was falling too and there was no denying the darkness they were plummeting into.

‘If- if it’s any comfort I’ll be joining you soon,’ Yoongi tries.

Amic frowns at him.

‘No,’ he shakes his head. There’s a strange glaze to his eyes- and it’s almost as though he could see past Yoongi, like he could see through him and beyond him. Beyond them.

Beyond this.

‘-you won’t.’

There’s a smile on his face as Amic apologetically calls for them to take a break. And Yoongi knows this wasn’t going to be a short break. He immediately makes his way towards his best-friend, towards the Being who he bonded with- all of his memories of Tayi, of training, of the initial introduction to life outside of Earth, was integrated with Amic.

Yoongi could not recollect any memory that did not have him in it. He couldn’t see himself without this tall lanky Being by his side.

‘I can hear him singing,’ Amic whispered.
‘-what?’ Yoongi’s ears are filled with static, his vision swimming before him.

‘-it’s nice,’ Amic smiles.

Jimin appears behind him, his eyes reflecting Yoongi’s sorrow, Amic’s pain, and everyone else’s fear. Amic tries to mime this praise at Jimin who tries his best to understand. They end up laughing, Jimin holding Amic’s hand in his. Yoongi can see them shaking and he wishes he was strong enough to hold them still.

But he knows he can’t.

When Amic dies, he dies with a smile.

Anger floods Yoongi.

Amic did not want to go. He fought it- he fought so hard. But there was an inevitable force- one they could not fight, one they could not oppose. And they were bent to its will.

Jimin is still kneeling next to Amic, his hand pressed over a still and cold chest. He clenches his hand into a fist over Amic’s chest and raises it to his own, over his own heart. He whispers soft words, gaze directed towards the sunrise and then back down again.

It’s profound, and private. But Yoongi can’t feel it.

He feels far away.

Far away from Amic. From his team. From Jimin.

He was falling and he didn’t have the strength, or the means to struggle.

Quite suddenly, Jimin embraces him close, arms wrapping around his shoulders and head in a way where everything stops and Yoongi is reeling back. The sound of Jimin’s breaths suddenly take over and Yoongi finds that he can finally breathe. Yoongi feels encompassed.

And with the next inhale and exhale, everything comes rushing back.

His sobs tear out of him the way a scab peels from a wound.

He feels raw and exposed- everything burns and Yoongi almost wishes he was falling again. If it meant not having to feel this, Yoongi would gladly fall again. And as though sensing his thoughts, Jimin holds him tighter, hands brushing through his hair, whispering soft words that Yoongi doesn’t understand.

Yoongi is so exhausted.

He just wants to sleep and sleep and sleep- he just wants all of this to end.

‘Yoongi.’

Jimin’s voice is quiet, afraid to break his grieving or something. And in this expanse of death and pain, the only thing that grants Yoongi any reprieve- no matter how temporary, is knowing that Jimin is there.

Jimin holds him so tight it’s almost painful- but Yoongi craves that closeness. Craves feeling anything but death and this ebbing. Pressing his ear to Jimin’s chest, he can hear Jimin’s heart beating and Yoongi clings to the thrumming pulses, hoping that by placing himself this close to its resonance, that he might be able to feel alive.

Namjoon can’t believe he had forgotten about them.

It was Hoseok’s alarmed warning that alerted him to sudden onslaught of Ynqaba ships that were now headed towards them.

They were, to an extent, still entirely hidden and protected. However, Seulgaan’s ship, the Omhlophe ship, and most importantly, the Užkulisai were all in imminent danger.

‘Sk’jin?!’ Hoseok calls out again- but they’re met only with static and silence.

They don’t know if Taeh’yung’s warning had even reached them because after the familiar coloured explosion, all lines of communication had gone off and Seulgaan’s ship had dimmed.

‘That was a magnetic pulse,’ Namjoon puts the engines of the Spardyti in full blast and discarding their initial attempt at discretion and secrecy, he pulls them out of the debris. After all, it wasn’t like Seulgaan or the Omhlophe would notice. Not when they were being attacked. Hordes and hordes of ships were firing missile after missile- bright lights and flares blind them at every second and Namjoon relies solely on the screen before him to calculate their course.

‘Fucking Spaces-‘ Hoseok curses as they shoot upwards, keeping the sudden attack below them.

‘They’re trying to drag it down to their planet- they want the resources,’ Namjoon spits out, realizing what the Ynqaba were trying to do. ‘Seulgaan’s ship is basically one massive mine of resources and materials they need but can’t afford.’

The Ynqaba were fighting a brutal and draining war against each other- the Underverse was providing both sides of the war with equipment but at a very high price. So upon seeing a ship like the slaver-ship, and also the Omhlophe ship, the Ynqaba were quick to prioritize. Someone lost a battle, clearly, and now they were headed over to claim their reward.

They had practically traipsed in and handed themselves over on a shining platter.

‘We need to get them out,’ Taeh’yung pleads, eyes wide and looking hassled.

‘We can’t go in like this- we don’t even have tactical shields on this thing,’ Hoseok curses.

Sk’jin, Yoongi, and Jimin were in there. And they had no way of knowing if they were all right.

Their plan had gone along smoothly- down the timing, down to what to expect from Seulgaan. Sk’jin had done an extremely good job at predicting what would happen. And Namjoon cannot rue him about the Ynqaba. Because he should have seen it coming. They should have all been more aware.

He knows that Yoongi had made it back up. That Sk’jin was already inside the ship judging by the gloating comment he had directed at Namjoon just seconds before their lines of communication went down. He also knows that the Uzkulisai was an incredibly designed ship, made to survive extreme conditions. But with the magnetic pulse that went off, and with the confusion and chaos-

‘Shit- they’re firing at the engines- they won’t be able to fly,’ Hoseok looks away from the window to look at Namjoon. His expression is helpless.

‘What do we do?’

There’s nothing they can do. They can’t dive in- not with their current transporter.

They could only wait. Only hope that the Užkulisai would somehow pull through and burst out of the slaver-ship.

‘They’re pushing them towards the planet,’ Taeh’yung reports quietly. His expression is blank, eyes eerily wide and glazed. Hoseok scrambles around, turning and running down towards the opposite end of the Spardyti.

‘The other ship is being overwhelmed,’ he reports, peering through the small window at the rear of the Spardyti. ‘They’re not moving either.’

‘It’ll be some time before they can- or unless the Ynqaba fired another magnetic pulse at them,’ Namjoon says tersely. His hands are gripping the controls so hard they bend slightly under his fingers.

‘-amjoon-‘

Sk’jin’s voice breaks through the static and it’s nothing short of a miracle. Hoseok sprints back, quick to try and stabilize the channels again.

‘-rying to fly out-…’ the frequency pitches up to a shrill whistle and Hoseok visibly winces, trying to focus the channels.

‘-n’t control the ship-‘

‘Is Jimin all right?!’ Taeh’yung asks immediately, gnawing at his lower lip in what Namjoon can only describe as the most normal display of emotion he’s seen from the Zhak’gri.

They get no response from Sk’jin- only more static.
The anticipation and stress reaches breaking point when a burst of light erupts under the slave-ship, lighting up that expanse of space and suddenly the slaver-ship is glowing.

‘They’re being pulled down by the planet’s gravity,’ Namjoon hisses under his breath.

The edges of the ship burst into bright light and with a rapidity that was almost fake, the entirety of the ship is tugged down with a force none of them were ready to witness.

‘-shit- can you fucking hear me-’

‘Sk’jin! We can hear you-‘

Out of the ignited slaver-ship burst out a thin small blazing white line and Namjoon knows it’s the Užkulisai.

‘-it’s collapsing- fuck the engines are burning up I can’t pull out-‘

Namjoon doesn’t even think twice when he puts the engines on full-power and sends them hurtling towards the small speck of light.

‘It’s too close to Ynqaba’s gravity border-‘ Hoseok begins to counter but he that’s all he say.

‘Sk’jin- we’re coming to get you-‘ Namjoon is saying but something erupts in a strong powerful light below the slaver-ship and engulfs that entire region in a bright neon white cloud.

The line turns static and cuts off again.

‘Shit- connect to main OS in the Užkulisai now!’ Namjoon orders.

‘Užkulisai offline. No channels are in operation.’ Lisai’s cool voice replies.

‘Namjoon- incoming.’ Hoseok reports sharply, his head turned towards the back and gaze locked on something behind them.

But before Namjoon can say anything Taeh’yung stands up.

There’s a burst of green light and Namjoon flinches violently at the sight of a wrathful Taeh’yung, exuding a powerful pulsing green light around him.

In Namjoon’s personal opinion, Taeh’yung reminded him of the gods of ancient lore.

Not a deity for good, existing not to guide or destroy, but existing simply as a manifestation of some primal and wild force. There was no rational reason behind any of Taeh’yung’s decisions, the way he carried out his life, or the way he chose to be. And while he proved no threat to them, for now, Taeh’yung was in himself, more dangerous and destructive than a fleet of war-ships.

Taeh’yung raises a hand up.

Where Jimin exuded no palpable or visible force of strength, Taeh’yung was the opposite.

Everything about him is chaotic and unstable. For a moment Namjoon feels almost as though the very atoms in the air would break apart at their bonds, reducing all elemental cores to nothing more than vacuum.

Rings of light erupt out of him and the light is so loud, Namjoon is momentarily deafened. Hoseok looks pained as he covers his ears, eyes closed and mouth open in a silent roar.
Then all at once, the light quiets and blinking to clear his vision, Namjoon finds that the space behind them is nothing more than a large expanse of thick dust. Shivers run down his spine unbidden. And when Taeh’yung turns around, Namjoon does not recognize him.

The air around him is pulsing, vibrant, and warped. Taeh’yung’s eyes are solid neon green and his gaze falls on the burning slaver-ship descended into the planet.

The Zhak’gri utters a strange sound- a word. And it vibrates through the air, pushing back Namjoon’s hair with a force similar to a violent gush of wind. But this was no wind- no gust of air, no might storm- it was nothing but pure raw power and Namjoon’s breath is crushed from the sheer strength of it.

Then the space outside warps and a green light, as powerful as a solar flare, erupts from behind Namjoon and heads straight down.

‘Taeh’yung no!’ Hoseok gasps out. How the Ngfy’widan had the wherewithal to move or even remotely think is beyond Namjoon. Hoseok is flinging himself in front of the Zhak’gri, arms flung wide. ‘Hey Tae- stop- we don’t know what’s happened to the others- we cannot guarantee their safety- or of the innocent Beings inside the slaver-ship!’

Namjoon hadn’t realized how much Taeh’yung had morphed until he shrinks back to his lanky and stringy form, eyes sparkling, and hair a mess.

Namjoon realizes that he was scared.

His body had stopped- his mind overwhelmed and an all too familiar pained weight pulling at his throat, wrists, and ankles burns him into absolute submission.

‘You’re right!’ he exclaims as though his voice hadn’t just echoed around them in terrifying tolls that Namjoon is pretty sure could have sounded in the depths of the Universe. ‘I wasn’t thinking! Sorry Hobi! Sorry pa!’

Gathering what will and self-control he had left, Namjoon pushes himself out of the paralyzed frightened stillness that had come over him. He hopes it goes unnoticed. He rubs at his wrists where no metal burnt him- not anymore at least.

‘Pa?’

It hadn’t gone unnoticed and Namjoon quickly shakes his head, turning back towards the window where the slaver-ship was now entirely aflame- a white mass falling into Ynqaba. The Užkulisai is nowhere to be seen and judging by how the rest of the Ynqaba ships were headed back downwards, they had succeeded in drawing both ships down to their surface.

‘It’s- it’s fine- sit down, we need to get to the Užkulisai,’ Namjoon hurriedly waves Taeh’yung and Hoseok back to the seats. ‘We need to fly down there- they’ve been drawn in. How’s the situation in the back?’

‘Shit-‘ Hoseok curses, neck strained as he looks back out of the rear-window. ‘I don’t know what you did, but good call?’

Taeh’yung beams at him, raising both hands in thumbs up.

‘Pull up the trackers- let’s find them as quickly as possible,’ Namjoon orders.

‘Do- do we report to the GLA- or to a patrol somewhere? Seulgaan is still a GLA officer- we could send a distress signal- one to distract,’ Hoseok offers as he switches the tracker from finding his own before taking over the pilot functions.

‘No- not with the Omhlophe around- besides this area is not under GLA law or jurisdiction. They won’t come no matter what- it would just create more political strife,’ Namjoon shakes his head. ‘And even if they do come- it would be the Yishengs.’

‘Then that’s-‘ Hoseok pauses, distracted. ‘-hey, isn’t Jimin supposed to be on this too?’

‘What do you mean?’ Namjoon grabs the screen, eyeing over the screen.

Hoseok jumps when a huge broken wing suddenly orbits its way in front of them and he has to turn them sharply. Namjoon takes the screen from him in the meantime and Hoseok concentrates on making his way past the debris with great care. Just because their presence was masked, didn’t mean they couldn’t be visibly spotted or have things crash into them. The Spardyti was not built for this sort of mission and despite being quite successful in still surviving in a Transporter that wasn’t supposed to be used off-planet, Hoseok is not taking his chances, regardless of whatever alien technology they were implementing.

‘Jimin- Jimin is not in the Užkulisai,’ Namjoon realizes. The screen clearly indicated that the slaver-ship had crashed near the shores of one of the continents, whereas the Užkulisai had crashed deeper and center of that continent. And Namjoon spots the two tracker lights- one for Yoongi, and the other for Sk’jin, clearly situated where the Užkulisai had crashed. But the other light.

‘He’s still inside Seulgaan’s ship.’

Sk’jin hates falling unconscious with a vengeance.

When he comes to, he’s filled with anger at everything.

He’s angry at Van Seulgaan for being a general all-round asshole.

He’s angry at Namjoon by default.

He’s angry at the Omhlophe for choosing this area to negotiate.

He’s angry at the Ynqaba war.
He’s angry at Lisai’s voice, alerting him through the Comm-Device that the Užkulisai was in dire straits.

He’s angry that he’s even actually here.

He’s angry at the burning pain around his shoulders, his right thigh, his head, and for no visible reason, his left pinky-toe.

He’s angry that his robes are torn and covered in what appeared to be centuries of dust and debris.

He’s angry at Yoongi for nearly killing him.

Sk’jin’s memory is still very fresh with the way Yoongi had literally screamed at him to take them back into the slave-ship. Sk’jin could have never imagined Yoongi looking so unhinged and crazed but the Human had come bursting into the Bridge, a mad and disheveled look to him as he ordered Sk’jin to go back.

And Yoongi looked like he was about to launch himself at Sk’jin and kick him out of the cockpit (and maybe even the ship who knows) when there’s a massive thunderous boom and light like a tsunami comes crushing down inside the Bridge.

So yes, Sk’jin purposefully flew them out of the Dock, knowing full well that neither Yoongi nor Jimin were securely placed inside the Hangar. But it was a risk he had to take.

Their immediate purpose was to get out of the place, to leave as quickly as possible, and most importantly make sure they had a way to get out. Meaning they couldn’t lose the ship. And despite reassurances that the Užkulaisai was an incredibly strong and customized ship, Sk’jin wanted to take no risks. And Sk’jin had seen an opening in the middle of all that missile barrage and he fucking took it. Who knew when the next window of opportunity would open for them. The ship was strong yes, but being on the receiving end of 100+ missiles in a span of 10 seconds was not something he wanted to test whilst being inside the ship.

He’s still angry at Yoongi.

And a little amused.

But he’s angriest at the glaring light that’s threatening to blind him.

He was definitely inside the ship- something he could sense despite not being in complete control of his senses and being heavily disoriented. And also-

‘Artificial atmosphere generator is at critical levels. Reboot?’

Lisai’s voice is very clear, meaning that wherever he was- either crash landed in Ynqaba or floating senselessly in space, or Spaces forbid, stuck in some nightmarish reality- the ship was still intact. So maybe he did owe Yoongi an apology for leaving Jimin behind.

His senses come back to him slowly and so does a lot of pain.

Sk’jin realizes that the burning pain on his head was a result of hanging upside down.

Sk’jin disengages himself from the cockpit seat and lands heavily on his side on the roof of the Užkulaisai. It takes another minute to sit up and understand his surroundings. The thick glass ceiling that covered the Bridge was miraculously intact and only somewhat shattered in some areas but there was no breaking. Sk’jin has to hand it to the design of the ship. It was sturdy as fuck. Maybe all those rumors about how the Užkulisi could drill through the core of a planet was true.

The annoying glaring light was coming from outside- where had they crashed into? It appeared to be a powerful spot-light of sorts.

‘Artificial atmosphere generator is at critical levels. Reboot?’

‘Bitch I know,’ Sk’jin groans out as he stands up. ‘Reboot all systems at critical level.’

‘Understood.’

‘Where am I?’

‘You have entered the country of T’tenga in the planet of Ynqaba illegally. Please obtain your pass at the nearest Immigration Office, located 3.1 light years in the System of Ymir.’

‘Well fuck,’ Sk’jin whispers under his breath. ‘Where are Namjoon and Taeh’yung? And Hoseok and Jimin?’

‘Captain Namjoon, former head-pilot Hoseok, Taeh’yung, and Jimin are offline.’

Using the hanging chair for support, Sk’jin looks about for Yoongi. To an extent he wasn’t too worried about Jimin.

Sk’jin has a feeling that he was more than capable of taking care of himself and surviving a crash into the planet and a few explosions. No big deal. He was also wearing whatever super-suit that Yoongi normally wore. And this was why Sk’jin is worried he’ll find a splattered Human body somewhere in the Bridge.

But he comes across no such body. There’s no blood or remains of gore.

‘Please try to reconnect with the missing crew,’ Sk’jin coughs out, his side burning and his shoulders incredibly sore.

‘Find weapon-specialist Yoongi,’ Sk’jin orders, looking about for a screen or NaviLet. Anything at this point.

‘Weapons-specialist Yoongi is in the Second Level Lobby.’

Stumbling on his feet, Sk’jin makes his way as quickly as possible out of the Bridge. They were upside down, and he has no idea how they’re going to right themselves. He also has no idea how he’s going to make his way to the Second Level.

With no mean level of strength, a lot of calculation, and balance, Sk’jin climbs up to the Second Level, breathless and with quaking limbs.

Only to find Yoongi standing in the middle of the Lobby, half of his face covered in blood, staring down at Sk’jin blankly.

Other than the blood Yoongi seems entirely all right. How that’s possible, Sk’jin has no idea. But he’s relieved.

‘Fucking Spaces-‘ Sk’jin scrambles to push himself up and flails towards Yoongi. ‘-fuck, you’re
The next thing Sk’jin sees is the ceiling (floor? Technically floor), his jaw probably dislocated, and his mouth full of blood. Was that a tooth? Teeth. Yoongi punched him so hard two of his teeth fell out.

‘What the fuck-’

‘You left him.’ Yoongi states plainly before appearing in Sk’jin’s very blurred vision.

Yoongi punched hard.

Sk’jin was flat on his back, at least 3 meters from where he was originally standing, and his body painfully numb.

‘Before you punch me again- can I at least explain why I did it.’ Sk’jin croaks out.

‘I don’t care,’ Yoongi replies simply, he’s not even looking at Sk’jin anymore. ‘You did what you thought you had to do. And I will now do what I have to do.’

Sk’jin sits up with sudden alarm, heart in his throat.

‘Don’t-!’

Sk’jin honestly thought Yoongi was going to possibly kill him. Honestly it wouldn’t surprise Sk’jin. Not after that maddeningly crazed scream Yoongi had let out prior to their crash. Also because Sk’jin reasons that to an extent, it was deserved. But Yoongi is already moving out.

‘What the fuck-’

‘Intruder alert. Security systems have failed and are no longer working.’

Cursing under his breath, Sk’jin tries to stand up but his disorientation (and pain, thank you Yoongi) pushes him around until he collides with the wall. Or was that the ceiling.

Sk’jin can’t tell.

‘Intruder alert. Security systems have failed and are no longer working.’

‘Fuck fuck! Yoongi!’ Sk’jin gasps out, flailing a little as he tries to stand. But the Human doesn’t reply.

And that’s when it hits Sk’jin.

Yoongi left him behind.

‘Wow-‘

Sk’jin is laughing hysterically when half a dozen armed dangerous looking Beings appear inside the Lobby. The bright spot-light made sense now. It was probably their transporter or something.

These Beings were not the same ones he saw in Seulgaan’s ship. They weren’t wearing what Seulgaan’s guards were wearing either.

These were, no doubt, natives of Ynqaba. The ones who shot them down, pushing them towards their planet’s gravity. They’re rather anthropomorphic, but their features are incredibly sharp and cruel. Their skin is an ashy colour, as though they were malnourished. And maybe they were. Sk’jin can’t tell with his blurred vision and anger simmering inside him.

They didn’t appear too old, though a few had facial hair. They seemed to regard him with contempt and curiosity. Not the best combination but better than greed or smugness.

Sk’jin stops laughing after a while, and they approach him slowly. They’re armed with incredibly heavy looking gear and at the same time, incredibly made-up looking ones. Rustic almost. In fact, one of them is holding a pitch-fork.

Were these scavengers? Pillaging and looting areas after the war left? Or were they military personnel? Police? Sk’jin can’t figure it out. He’s still angry at Yoongi. Fuck him and his ability to simply vanish.

‘He looks out of it.’ One of them remarks. ‘Never seen his kind. Looks weak to me.’

‘Wouldn’t say that for sure. He survived the crash didn’t he?’

Good, at least they spoke standard.

‘Check for more survivors. I thought we scanned two Beings.’

‘Maybe there was a fault- I only see him.’ The other replies. ‘No one else.’

Wow, thanks Yoongi, Sk’jin thinks, laughing again and harder this time. He can’t see, but he’s pretty sure the Ynqaba natives are eyeing him with a lot of judgment.

‘Think he’s lost his mind?’

I wish.

‘Looks like it. We can get back ransom for him- or we can give up to the Collectors. Might get a good pay.’

‘The Collectors are a better idea. There’s no guarantee for a ransom pick up.’

Sk’jin briefly wonders if it was at all probable that the others would come back for him. He was going to be taken out of the ship, and that was what they would need. If they got Hoseok back, they had a more than capable pilot as well. And the only other Being who had been with him left him behind.

There was no use for him.

‘Search him and then bind him.’ A voice barks out. Sk’jin hears the familiar sound of a scanner and he laughs even harder. ‘And maybe shut him up too. Clear the place out and let’s get going before the others arrive.’

‘Got it.’
Hoseok is glad to be back.

And by “back” he means back to the endless shit-luck and consequences of wildly planned actions and involvement of forces that honestly made no sense. Back to piloting a transporter that shouldn’t be used off-planet but here they were, using the transporter off-planet, and attempting to enter a foreign planet’s atmosphere with little to no functional protection.

Nothing had changed.

Great.

Hoseok braces himself as they enter the planet of Ynqaba.

But whatever was being used to shield them inside the transporter was strong enough to prevent them from burning to a crisp.

The planet was sizeable and was made up of 8 entirely separate continents. The land seemed dark and dry- probably a result of continuous war. The loss of their ecosystem was obvious, because even as they approach the surface, any sign of visible vegetation is rare, if not entirely missing. They had high mountain, but only a few had snow on them.

This was a planet ravaged and broken by war.

‘We’re not far,’ Namjoon says tersely, staring straight ahead, his mouth a thin line.

They had no contact with the Užkulisai, not a single signal or frequency from any of the channels.

However Yoongi’s obsession with poisoning all of them seemed to work for the better, and they were able to pinpoint everyone’s locations.

‘They’re moving apart,’ Taeh’yung comments from behind him.

‘Who?’

‘Yoongi and Jin,’ Taeh’yung replies, a frown obvious in his tone of voice. ‘Chim is also moving, but he’s still inside that ship I think.’

‘At least they’re all still mobile,’ Namjoon mumbles under his breath. And Hoseok privately agrees.

‘It’s only Yoongi who is moving,’ Taeh’yung adds. ‘Jin isn’t moving.’

Hoseok frowns at that. Why would they separate? In situations like these, numbers mattered. They would be better teamed up. Or was Sk’jin injured? A crash like that could easily render them incapacitated despite the security and stability of the Užkulisai.
Flying into Ynqaba was no easy task. Not with an ongoing spatial battle as well as continuous air/land battles. There was a lot of debris outside the planet, as well as within the atmosphere in forms of stations and arcs. They used the masses of debris to hide themselves though it greatly held them back in terms of speed and time management. Hoseok was sweating by the time they were at landing distance from the surface below.

The entire System was at war and going through unnoticed was a feat, even with their camouflage/defense tech, or whatever it was. Hoseok knows that Namjoon and Taeh’yung don’t have the time to explain what any of tech actually did; but that didn’t stop him from being intrigued. He wants to know what happened in that planet- what did they find, what did they see. But that was going to have to wait.

The plan was to get to the Užkulisai first thing and deposit Namjoon there so that he could fix what needed fixing. Then Taeh’yung and Hoseok would quickly make their way to where Jimin was and pick him up. It was a basic and simple plan but Hoseok has lost all trust in those now.

‘Yoongi has stopped moving,’ Taeh’yung reports, sounding even more confused. ‘He’s just…he’s not that far from Jin but-’

He makes a confused sound.

‘What is it?’

‘Jin is moving- and very quickly too.’

Unsure what to make of the whole thing, Hoseok puts the Spardyti on neutral and they cruise quietly over the graveyard of a city below them.

Hoseok feels Namjoon’s questioning but quiet look directed at him. What was going on?

The area the Užkulisai had crashed was in what Namjoon discovered was an abandoned mountain-side city. And when they fly over a particularly high and blackened sharp mountain, the entirety of the mountain-side city is revealed to them.

And it was indeed quite literally a mountain-side city.

What must have been great and beautiful structures that seemed to grow from the high mountain sides were carved out and exposed, their natural sandstone walls grey and ashen in colour. What was once a vibrant and obviously flourishing city was reduced to faded and crumbling remains.

High broken structures stretched out from mountain sides, suggesting a complex motorway of sorts must have crisscrossed here before. And a very recent path of destruction cuts an almost bloody gorge which like a huge indicator, points them straight to an upturned Užkulisai.

And pulling out from the crash-site is another transporter.

Tensing, Hoseok quickly veers them off to the side, hoping they weren’t sighted.

‘Someone got there before we could,’ Namjoon states tersely. ‘They’re taking Sk’jin.’

‘Where’s Yoongi?’

‘He’s moving now-‘

And because Hoseok is looking for him, he spots a small dark figure dart out from large piles of rubble, steadily making his way to the Užkulisai.

‘What the fuck?’

‘What do we do?’ Hoseok asks, eyeing the transporter that moves further and further way, taking Sk’jin with them. Namjoon doesn’t reply for a moment, his eyebrows deeply furrowed, clearly doing a lot of thinking.

‘Land us,’ Namjoon orders. ‘We get answers from Yoongi.’

The air is harsh and smells heavily of pollutants. It’s also strangely stale and Hoseok wants to cover his mouth and nose. Taeh’yung obviously does not like the smell and he’s making loud retching sounds as they exit the Spardyti. Namjoon is the only one who doesn’t seem to have an issue with it. Hoseok lands them close to the ship, realizing with a panicked jolt that the crash had created a rather deep crater inside of which the Užkulisai lay. This was not a good tactical position. They could be ambushed and would have no way of properly defending themselves. It was also going to make taking off difficult.

They rush out, craning their necks to look up at the forcibly opened Hangar Bay gates. They were going to have to climb up.

‘Fuck- Yoongi!’ Namjoon yells.

‘I got it pa!’ Taeh’yung says cheerily and honestly Hoseok has no idea what to expect from the Zhak’gri but there’s no need to panic because Yoongi suddenly appears overhead and nimbly leaps down, landing quietly in front of them. His face covered in dried blood, parts of his hair matted down, and his eyes aflame, Yoongi doesn’t even spare them a glance and he’s already briskly walking.

‘Yoongi what happened-‘ Namjoon asks at once while Taeh’yung exclaims out in horror, reaching for the Human at once.

‘Sk’jin left Jimin behind,’ the Human states bluntly as he pauses momentarily. ‘Scavengers found us. They took a majority of our supplies and resources, as well as Sk’jin. We need to bring Jimin back.’

It’s silent for a few seconds and Hoseok speaks up, seeing as Namjoon seems to have lost the ability to speak.

‘Yoongi- Jimin is all right, his tracker is still lit up-‘

‘We need to get him back. We left him behind. I have to go back to him,’ Yoongi states and that’s when Hoseok realizes that Yoongi is carrying a sling-bag of sorts. A very familiar sling-bag of sorts. In fact, Yoongi is draped in familiar looking devices that Hoseok didn’t even know they had on board.

‘I cannot leave him again.’

‘Wait-!’ Namjoon yells out. ‘You’re not thinking straight- Yoongi calm down for just a second-‘

‘Sk’jin left Jimin behind,’ Yoongi repeats. ‘I need to bring him back.’

Something clicks inside Hoseok’s mind and before he can even properly form the thought in his mind he says, ‘There were at most, 10 scavengers, judging by the size of their transporter. Armed like that, you could have easily taken them all out.’
Namjoon seems to understand exactly what Hoseok was saying. His eyes darken and he glares down at the Human.

‘Yoongi, did you let those scavengers take Sk’jin?’ Namjoon asks in a low serious voice.

‘Yes.’

Hoseok isn’t sure why he’s not surprised.

‘What the fuck-’

‘In a mission, we get rid of things we do not need. We use only what would profit or strengthen our mission’s success rate. My mission is to protect Jimin. I didn’t need Sk’jin for that. So I left him.’ Yoongi states simply.

‘Yoongi no-‘

‘If you wish to discontinue, then I will not stop you. But I going to Jimin.’ The Human declares bluntly.

‘Yoongi wait-‘

But the Human pushes past easily, making his way towards the Spardyti.

But he doesn’t manage to take another step past as a neon green ring erupts around him.

Yoongi looks back, only his head turned, eyeing Taeh’yung who looked sheepish but at the same time frustrated.

‘Yoongi!’ he actually stomps his feet. ‘This is not how you do things! You can’t just leave Jin like this!’

Yoongi blinks once, twice.

‘He left Jimin.’

Taeh’yung seems at a loss for words and actually makes a loud whiney sound before looking over at Namjoon as though begging the Kutsoglerin to fix this situation.

‘If it is true that Sk’jin left Jimin behind- then he was, in many ways, wrong to do so,’ Namjoon says carefully, one hand raised a little as though to placate both parties. ‘However, we cannot decide if it was all done out of malice- it’s possible he had no choice. However, what you did was wrong. You simply allowed Sk’jin to be taken by a bunch of Beings we have no idea about. And you will apologize when you see him later.’

‘He needs to apologize to Jimin first.’ Yoongi declares.

‘Yes- we will all apologize to each other when we get out of here- and in order to do that, we need to upright the ship, make sure it’s all right- and then collect Jimin and Sk’jin.’ Namjoon states very clearly, looking very much like he was talking to a very stubborn child who was purposefully throwing a tantrum.

Yoongi seems to be struggling, expression still blank but he’s clearly thinking hard. Then he looks away, and if Hoseok isn’t mistaken, he’s actually pouting.

‘Understood.’
Namjoon nods at Taeh'yung who releases the Human, still looking apprehensive, as though expecting to be told off. A high contrast to how he had behaved outside of Ynqaba.

‘Right,’ Namjoon eyes Yoongi carefully. ‘We’re going to install the cell in the Užkulisai, make sure it’s at full function, then we’re going to track both Jimin and Sk’jin, and pick them up. Is that understood?’

‘Understood.’

Namjoon sighs heavily, glancing over at Hoseok, his expression exasperated and tired. Then he looks over at the ship with a frown.

‘We’re going to have work fast,’ he comments. ‘It’s going to get dark- we don’t know what could be around.’

Hoseok looks up and back around the city above them. Sure it looked empty and abandoned, but they couldn’t be too sure.

‘First order of things we need to make sure all the systems are still intact,’ Namjoon declares, studying the thankfully intact wings with sharp eyes. ‘Then we flip her over.’

Scaling the back of the Užkulisai is no easy feat but they do manage getting in, no words exchanged. The success of their new journey depended on speed, efficiency, and tact. They all quickly make their way towards the Bridge, avoiding fallen objects as well as the mess that had leaked all the way down from the Kitchens.

‘Lisai how are the internal housing-systems?’ Namjoon asks as they trip into the upside-down Bridge.

‘All systems are functional. Right wing turbine compromised. Engine 05 needs manual realignment.’ Lisai surmises.

‘All right- I’m going to reverse the gravity so we can all walk properly,’ Namjoon calls, arms stretching up to reach for the Navigation Table above him. ‘Grab on to something.’

Taeh’yung takes this as an invitation to cling to Namjoon, face mushed up against the Kutsoglerin’s throat with a pleased smile. Namjoon doesn’t even bat an eye, bracing himself onto the arm of his chair on the Mast. Hoseok also grips his chair, his hands placed in a way where when he adjusts in reverse, he would land upright. Yoongi has outdone all of them without trying, already seated on his chair in the tower-mast (it was finally living up to its name up there).

‘Reversing,’ is all Namjoon says.

There’s the familiar pull in the lining of Hoseok’s stomach indicating the switch in gravity. Slowly but heavily, everything falls upright- or at least is placed the way they should be if the ship were still upright. Landing on the balls of his feet, Hoseok takes a few seconds to adjust himself before sliding into this seat. Looking out into the now darkening space outside the window, Hoseok starts up the ship.

‘All systems stable. Prepare for planetary take-off?’ Lisai asks.

‘No- reverse turbines and switch engine to neutral hover,’ Hoseok calls out even though he’s manually doing all of it. ‘Set us 30 meters above ground.’

‘Of course.’
It’s odd seeing the way they move, seemingly downwards, and instead behold an upturned darkening horizon.

‘Those look like storm clouds,’ Namjoon comments darkly. ‘Lisai- weather forecast for our coordinates.’

‘Thunderstorm approaching. Expected duration 6 hours. Precipitation at 3pH. Proceed with caution.’

‘What the fuck-’

‘...the planet is polluted,’ Namjoon explains in a low voice. ‘Look at the land- it’s obvious the entire planet is dying.’

‘It’s not,’ Yoongi says quietly from the front as they rise higher. Hoseok would ask what he meant but he’s concentrating on stabilizing them enough to successfully flip them around. If they were in motion, then it would be easy- but their engines were not at full power, so he was going to have to maintain a perfect equilibrium of jet-expulsion from the turbines to flip them over, time their rotation and make sure they don’t veer off elsewhere.

Hoseok has honestly not stopped sweating from the sheer stress of piloting since he was rescued rather extraordinarily by Taeh’yung no more than an hour ago and he just wants to catch a break. He successfully flips them around and Namjoon corrects their gravity once more. But there is no time for congratulations or break.

‘All right- I’ll go install the cell out of the Spardyti- Hoseok could you go to the Engines Room- Yoongi, could you check the turbine?’ Namjoon orders, already exiting the Bridge before adding, ‘Keep tracking Sk’jin and Jimin!’

Yoongi doesn’t reply but simply makes his way out as well. Hoseok is quick to steer them away from the lengthening shadow of the mountain-side city and out in the open and dry expanse outside. Landing them properly but only at stand-by, Hoseok makes to get up and head for the Engines Room when Taeh’yung suddenly appears before him.

‘Spaces-!’

‘They didn’t do anything to you?’ the Zhak’gri asks, his expression rather blank.

His stay with the Omhlophe had been an odd one, Hoseok admits.

After he’d been trapped in that room with the OrTanks, no one came to check up on him for almost an entire day. He had felt the ship he was in hum to life. Then he felt movement and had braced himself in the narrow gap between two OrTanks, adamantly trying not to look at their faces. Then a Being, not one of the Omhlophe, had appeared, cuffed him, and taken him out of the area, out of the ship, revealing that the ship Hoseok had snuck into had in fact been landed inside another ship. He didn’t see any of the Omhlophe- it had been dark and Hoseok could only sense and somewhat deduce he was inside a Hangar of sorts. Then he was led into a storage like facility through a lift and deposited into one of the cells.

Nothing more. Nothing less.

Hoseok had been extremely paranoid, jumpy at every little sound. He was under observation of course, but that was it.

‘Nothing,’ Hoseok replies. ‘It was odd- I only saw one of them. Once. And then after that,
nothing.’

‘What about the other babies?’

‘They were like Jimin- asleep, floating.’ Hoseok replies before he remembers a key detail. ‘They all had that indent on their spine- like Yoongi does.’

Taeh’yung blinks slowly a few times, eyes never leaving his. It’s disconcerting, especially at this proximity. Because looking at Taeh’yung like this forced Hoseok to come to terms that he knew nothing of this Being before him. And the worst part of it, was that Taeh’yung himself didn’t seem to know much about himself either.

‘I’m glad you’re back,’ he smiles softly, eyes turning into crescents before pushing himself quite comfortably into Hoseok’s space and sitting on his lap. His long arms wind around him and he nuzzles into the side of his face affectionately.

‘Please don’t ever leave again.’

Squirming but trying not to offend the lanky Zhak’gri, Hoseok stammers out, ‘Uh- yeah, I’m staying Tae- don’t worry.’

Taeh’yung gives him a happy smile and kisses his cheek sloppily before pulling away and saying, ‘Good! I missed you so much!’

And with that he runs off, all limbs and bouncy hair.

It takes Hoseok a moment to recover and remember that he was headed for the Engines Room. He gets up without interruption, but this time he’s got a wide smile on his face.

It takes longer than it should but Jimin is weak and his limbs don’t want to listen to him. But he manages to crawl/push himself along the vent. It’s dark and Jimin cannot see- his surroundings are oppressive and narrow and if he was capable of being a little more aware of his immediate environment, Jimin would be frightened out of his mind. But at this moment his mind is slow and his reaction limited. But his instincts were taking over and Jimin blindly crawls forward to the best of his abilities.

There is no indication that he was even headed for a potential way out. He just had to move. Had to get out.

With a pained cry, Jimin slides downwards abruptly. It’s momentarily wet and Jimin panics at the idea of falling into a body of water in this darkness and not being able to find his way out. But it’s extremely shallow—barely an inch or so. However it does reduce friction and causes Jimin to slip even more until he’s landing heavily on his side.

His breath is knocked out of him and he nearly blacks out once again.

For a moment Jimin thinks he’s seeing stars but the more he blinks, his vision clears and he realizes he’s looking at actual points of light. Gathering himself as best as he could, Jimin pushes himself up back to a crawl and slides across the slippery surface towards the light.

Jimin hadn’t expected the lights to appear that close to his face—his perspective was clearly skewed. Taking a moment to steady his breathing again and summon whatever will he had to hopefully realign his perspective, Jimin pauses before what he figures is a vent-cover.

As his vision clears, and he’s able to focus again, Jimin realizes he’s staring down into a heavily dilapidated atrium of sorts, flooded with emergency lights that aren’t as bright as Jimin had initially thought. Taking a deep breath, Jimin pushes at the vent until he realizes that he needed to pull at the vent. Sticking his fingers through the holes, Jimin manages to yank the cover away and with an irrepressible urge that practically ejected him out of the narrow and dark vent, Jimin collapses heavily onto the cold floor a foot below.

His breathing escalates and his vision darkens again.

‘You are experiencing a panic attack. Please remain calm.’ Lisai tells him.

But his ears are ringing in a high pitch and trying to do anything beyond just hyperventilating was too tasking.

And maybe because he wasn’t all there just yet, Jimin fails to sense their presence or the loud explosion. He does, however, register the flash of light and he only has a second to brace himself.

There’s a strong wave of heat and light and Jimin feels himself being shoved around the floor before he hits something with his back. And then before he knows it, he’s being bodily picked up from the ground. There’s a voice, and before Jimin can focus on what it is, he feels hands on the helmet over his head.

It’s instantaneous.

As though a burst of electricity hit him, Jimin is suddenly mobile and his senses return to him with a vengeance. He struggles against the grip that’s holding him up and falls on all fours. With a burst of adrenaline, Jimin shoots forward in a low run. His vision is blurred but he can just about make out an opening he prays is the door.

But before he can reach it, something hits the back of his legs and Jimin is sent skidding off of the floor again. But that doesn’t stop him from reacting.

With his vision returning to him slowly, Jimin notes that his would-be assailants are cyborgs-Seulgaan’s cyborgs. There are 3 of them. Shifting his weight and ignoring the flare of pain that radiates from his side, Jimin readies himself to attack. He had no weapons on him, and he was too weak to do anything of great consequence. All that was left was to physically fight.

He knew he had no chance in running- he didn’t know the layout of the ship, and he was not physically capable of outrunning cyborgs. If he could just deactivate them at the neck- where he hopes the main circuit wires were located like they were back in his System- then he should be able to at least, buy himself enough time. Jimin was not the strongest fighter, but he was fast.

But before he can take a step forward in offence, a pair of cyborg arms cage him in, holding his arms down at a painful angle. Jimin chokes out a pained croak, his vision darkening at an alarming pace. He tries to kick but he’s held down and the hands are back on his helmet.

‘No-!’ Jimin shouts, trying to push backwards but it’s too late.

The air smells stale and like air-coolants and like death.

The lights are glaring without the protective filter-shield and Jimin flinches at the onslaught of sensory assault.

How was he going to contact the others now? How could they know where he was? Would they be able to find him?

‘-lease do not resist. We will take you to medical aid now.’ The cyborgs echo at him in unison as soon as his hearing clears a little. Jimin realizes he’s breathing harshly, the ringing in his ears settling to low white-noise instead. His throat is parched and his temples were throbbing. Pain racks through his body again and he can’t help but cry out. That is until one of the cyborgs approaches him with what looked like a syringe of sorts. The implant is quick and painless but the relief it brings Jimin is monumental. It also brings a strange state of complete relax over his body.

‘What- what is this-’ Jimin stammers out.

‘Prisoner is communicating in unknown codec. Refer to Director.’

The grip on his arms is loosened just a little and his legs are dropped, but it didn’t matter because Jimin can barely put on foot in front of the other. His mind however, was clearing up greatly. They used some form of tranquilizer on him. That was for certain. His mind was not affected, but his body was very rapidly losing all sense of mobility. Jimin could barely keep his head up straight.

He’s effectively dragged down hallways and other atriums. At one point they’re going over a narrow bridge below which a great fire was raging. Jimin’s mind was clearing but he’s still disoriented.

They walk out of one small atrium that’s dark save for neon orange head-lights when the door bursts open and Jimin is smothered by the stench of death and pain.

Gagging and trying to pull himself away from the overwhelming ocean of pure carnage, Jimin struggles his best. But it’s futile. Gasping for breath and trying not to retch as his mouth waters in protest over the assault on his senses, Jimin is instead hauled up as though to stand and he understands why.

They were outside towards the center of the massive ship, if Jimin is seeing right. They had entered a large hollow cylindrical shaped atrium that stretched up and down in great measurement. Broken bridges and pillars stretched around and to Jimin’s horror, piles of bodies were strewn about, and the stench of blood lingered in the air. Crudely built cages were broken everywhere and great piles of rubble and debris, some the size of the Užkulisai, were embedded all around. Yet despite all the chaos, it’s surprisingly calm. No screaming, no wailing- just a strict and almost stricken sense of calm. And at the center of it all stood Van Seulgaan, half of his face soaked in blood, his clothes covered in who knew what, and most frightening of all, a look of terror in his eyes.

He spins around as Jimin and the cyborgs approach him. The Tayian looks at him incredulously before his eyes gleam in recognition. The cyborgs holding him stop and one continues over, presenting the helmet to Seulgaan and speaking to him. Jimin is too far to hear, but Seulgaan doesn’t look away from him.

The look of terror is replaced with a calculative one. And Jimin already does not like where this was headed. Seulgaan holds onto the helmet before approaching him.

‘You’re not that GI agent,’ Seulgaan narrows his eyes.

Jimin knows he’s too weak to subdue them. He was at a great disadvantage and Seulgaan was clearly looking to reap whatever benefits he could possibly gain in this truly low moment for him.

‘You’re one of the abominations. I saw you- in Pompa.’

Abomination? What did he mean?

‘So that Khol’isa was lying…’ Seulgaan eyes him warily, he's clearly talking to himself now. ‘How are you like this?’

Jimin wishes he understood what Seulgaan was saying. What did he mean?

‘What- what talking- about,’ Jimin manages to ask.

Seulgaan looks taken aback at his words.

‘You understand me?’

Jimin nods slowly.

‘Who were those Beings? In the white ship,’ the Tayian asks sharply. ‘Were they after you?’

‘I- I don’t know,’ Jimin replies honestly. They didn’t know, in all honesty, what the Omhlophe were after in the long run.

Suddenly, the entire ship shudders and there’s a loud explosion. It’s coming from outside.

‘Is there no possible way of escaping?’ Seulgaan asks sharply, clearly at one of his crew. He clearly doesn’t get the answer he wants.

‘There’s no helping it then,’ he says quietly before nodding sharply at someone behind Jimin before turning around. Jimin is instantly moving, following the Tayian. There’s a loud sound and just as they enter a corridor that closes behind them, a flash of light goes off and some of the heavier chunks of debris crash through.

‘Pack only the most essential cargo,’ Seulgaan orders, talking to his crew again. ‘Leave the others behind- this ship and the others will be our payment.’

Jimin realizes, with sudden and horrified clarity, that Seulgaan was about to give over his ship, his “cargo”, and everything else over in order to escape the planet.

‘Call whatever channel they have and make the deal- it’s one they can’t refuse.’ He concludes sharply before he’s turning the corner to access a large lift. ‘We’ll meet you in Hull E-45.’

Jimin feels them ascending. The lift shakes frequently but the cyborgs and Seulgaan make no notice of it. In fact, Seulgaan is simply staring at Jimin, eyes narrowed and calculating.

‘You’re different,’ is all he says.

Jimin refuses to look afraid. So he looks straight back at Seulgaan, his expression as blank as possible.

‘We’re getting out of here,’ Seulgaan tells him simply. ‘This is a dangerous planet and we’re extremely disadvantaged. No GLA platoon will rescue us and I’m not going to expose myself either. You can follow and not cause any issues and we’ll leave this place quietly and safely. Do I have your cooperation?’

Jimin does not like Seulgaan.

But he was the only available option for Jimin to get out of this situation.

Van Seulgaan, in Jimin’s opinion, was perhaps not a Being he would trust or categorize as a “good” being. However, his dedication to his business meant prioritizing his assets and making sure his source of income was taken care of. After all, no one wanted to buy or own a product that was already damaged. So there is at least the fact that Seulgaan would do everything in his ability to secure his cargo- or at least the most valuable ones, and that included Jimin now.

He nods in reply.

‘Do anything to hinder our escape, I will not hesitate to leave you behind.’

Jimin doesn’t bother responding to that so he looks away instead. The lift comes to grinding halt and the doors open with some difficulty.

It’s noisier here, and the overwhelming wave of death and destruction is somewhat lessened. Jimin still has no control over his limbs, held up only the cyborg behind him, he feels like an object whose value and price had just been stamped over him.

And maybe it didn’t reek of death in this area of the massive ship, but it didn’t stop it from being any less worse.

Because it reeked of sorrow.

Seulgaan had amassed a lot of Beings to work for him- all part of what Jimin understood to be something called the “Alliance”- all working in trafficking and selling living Beings for the morally and ethically depraved. And here they all were.

And it breaks Jimin’s heart.

Because it wasn’t as though these Beings wanted to be here out of choice. Not all of them. Jimin is hoisted past grieving Beings, clutching at sisters and brothers, fathers and mothers, sons and daughters. The Universe was not separated by those who did good, and those who were bad.

The Universe was separated into Beings who were allowed the chance to do good, and those who weren’t.

Jimin is distracted by the arrival of a small rag-tag group of Beings, all in various stages of injury and medical aid.

‘We’re surrounded,’ the one at the front reports. ‘They’ve shut up all of our communication channels- we can’t even call for aid-’

‘We won’t be getting any,’ Seulgaan shakes his head. ‘How’s the evacuation holding up?’

‘We need at least 15 more minutes,’ he replies, looking tense.

‘Take it,’ Seulgaan pats the Being on the shoulder, ‘And get as much of us out of here as quickly as you can- prepare the shields and jump to warp immediately- understood?’

‘Got it- what about you?’

He looks a lot like Seulgaan, Jimin notes. Undoubtedly, they were the same species.

‘Not until you all leave,’ Seulgaan replies grimly before nodding tersely at the others. ‘Now hurry- and bring me that headset.’

They nod in understanding and sprint off.

Seulgaan was undoubtedly a villain to thousands- possibly millions. He was vile, responsible for the pain, separation, death, and complete degradation of humanity and ethical value. However he was also the leader, the guide, of many who looked to him to secure their lives. To keep them safe- to fend for their families.

Villains did not exist, plotting against the weak and defenseless out of pure evil or sadistic tendencies. Villains did not exist to simply create discord and pain for the sake of being a villain. Every action taken had the potential for pain, had the potential for evil.

Van Seulgaan was a villain for Jimin. But how many Beings did the Tayian actually save? How many Beings saw Van Seulgaan as their savior?

How many Beings saw Jimin as their savior?

And how many saw him as the villain?

‘Take him to the pods,’ Seulgaan orders, looking back at the cyborgs, not even sparing Jimin a glance. ‘Secure him in there and set him to our planned trajectory.’

‘Understood,’ the cyborgs reply in unison.

Jemin hears it before he sees it.

A strained impossibly high-pitched ringing that makes the hair on the back his neck stand on end.

The ripple of energy that rends the air before him warps his vision and everything is sent careening down to the floor.

The cyborgs holding him up crumple to the floor and the distinct hum of the ship, indicating that at least a few of the systems were still running, immediately dies.

And for one odd moment, from where Jimin is on the floor, his vision seems to really warp as the very walls of the Docking Bay they were in peels off. And to his horror he realizes it’s not a trick of his eye or even a result of some mirage. But massive constructs with colossal pincer like extensions were indeed pulling the walls of the slaver-ship apart.
The floor shakes and there are hordes of Beings running past Jimin. He’s paralyzed and he cannot move, an open and easy target for the stampede of petrified Beings. But by some miracle he’s spared being kicked and stepped on. The cyborgs around him are instead casualties of this stampede. There’s a lot of yelling and screaming, as well as the unmistakable rhythmic pulsing blasts from firearms.

Thundering thuds echo around and Jimin tries to right himself, unable to see more than just the floors. With a cry, Jimin manages to turn himself over to the side and he regrets it instantly.

Bright lights rapidly fan out, almost slow, almost beautiful, from high up- as though stars were falling down.

And each falling star hits someone, flares erupt and screams rend the air, before they instantly crumple to the floor.

Massive chunks of the ship is torn apart, and Jimin thinks he’s hallucinating but the sight before him is all too real.

The sky is a washed grey, no star in sight as massive broiling storm clouds amass over them, promising lightning, darkness, and destruction. Thick and chaotic forks of lightning vein the clouds, and silhouetted against this depressing backdrop are dozens of battle-ships, all of which Jimin had seen in combat out in space. They were clearly surrounded and were in the process of being ransacked.

Floodlights pour in and illuminate the whole Docking Bay with blinding light. The firing stops and the screaming stops as well.

‘Surrender now and you will be spared.’ A voice echoes out from above them.

‘We surrender!’ a voice responds back.

Van Seulgaan has managed to stand, despite the great injury he suffered on his arm and the blood splattered across his face. His expression is tense and angry and fearful.

‘I am Van Seulgaan, captain of this ship, and board member of the Isbahaysiga Alliance,’ he announces boldly, doing an exemplary job at sounding confident and sure. ‘I surrender this ship, and its cargo to you, the Reformist Union of the Beings of Ynqaba! We will leave you to all you wish, in exchange that my crew and I are allowed safe passage out.’

It’s silent for a long while.

‘Tell me, Van Seulgaan. Would you allow a thief to safely leave your home?’

Jimin does not like Seulgaan.

But he was the only available option for Jimin to get out of this situation.

And he can’t do anything as a clean almost slow bold of light, fires through the air, and rather casually passes through Seulgaan’s chest and out towards the back.

‘No. You wouldn’t.’

The Tayian doesn’t seem to register it at first, he’s blinking a little slowly, a curious expression on his face.
And just like that, Van Seulgaan keels over.

Jimin’s immediate reality changes in an instant.

The lights blind him, and Jimin doesn’t know what’s happening around him. He desperately hopes that he’ll be overlooked, buried here amongst the heaps of cyborgs. Yoongi always went back and forth unseen, and it was more effective when he wore this suit. And for nearly an hour of waiting, paralyzed against his will, watching with watering eyes fleeting movement just beyond the white glare of the edge of light, Jimin thinks he might just be overlooked.

But Jimin has no such luck.

The air is filled with muffled whimpers, the thud of metal of flesh, the echo of a blast, the sharp ring of coarse and crude laughter, and a constant strange drilling sound that doesn’t go away. Seulgaan’s body is some ways from him, his oddly greyish blood turning an odd black as it began to dry up. The air is no longer thick with grief, pain, and death— but an added odour of greed, bloodlust, and hysteria blends in thickly.

‘Well well- what a beauty.’

Heavy boots appear in peripheral vision. There’s a soft scratching sound and the stench of some form of smoking weed assaults Jimin’s nose.

‘Abi, take a load of this one. Don’t he look familiar?’

Another pair of boots appear in front of him.

‘Huh- ain’t he one of them?’

Jimin is doubly alert.

One of them?

According to what he learnt about Yoongi’s most recent years through Taeh’yung, was that he was part (or at least created into) a secret organization that assassinated and infiltrated a variety of places, organizations, countries, governments, and even planets to fulfill a mission or duty given to them. They all wore this very suit, as well as the helmet.

‘Well well- looks like we really struck gold. You might wanna ring up the Collectors- tell them what we found.’

A rough hand pushes him on to his back and 3 separate heads loom down at him, silhouetted against the glaring spotlight above. Jimin cannot make out their faces, but he can sense malice, greed, and wanton cruelty rolling off of them like smoke.

‘Yeah- they’re gonna be real happy.’
(Author’s Notes)

UGH UNIVERSITY COULD KILL ME NOW AND HONESTLY I WOULDN’T EVEN REALIZE I WAS DEAD BECAUSE I’D STILL BE WORKING ON MY PROJECTS IN SPIRIT FORM I can’t believe I have 1 more year of uni please save me someone thanks
All black-hair bangtan however, did give me some energy- so I was screaming about it while rendering my animation in 3 different computers, staring at one very low resolution picture for hours
Then EUPHORIA HIT AND I JUST
There’s some trick-ass time bending shit going on here isn’t it? Like, the HYYH au is canon- then euphoria is like that, alternative reality au with only fluff tagged on it. I can see the tags ao3 style for hyyh and euphoria it’s epic please take a moment to imagine it too
Burn the stage has been giving me so many feels- like I never thought I could become fonder of bts but look at me now, feeling like I literally gave birth to 7 wonderful men and wanting to protect them for the rest of their lives my children you’re all such wonderful human beings
Im gonna go cry over how perfectly sly yoonminv were in bts run b y e
‘Yoongi?’

It’s the first time in days-weeks, that Yoongi feels rested.

His eyes are heavy, and despite the gentle voice calling his name, Yoongi cannot open his eyes.

Sleep has never felt this good. Sleep has never felt this safe.

Sleep has never felt this close to death.

Yoongi had laughed when he heard someone tell him that sleep was like death, but without the commitment of actually dying. He had found it funny then, and it makes him smile again now. Not because he thought it was amusing, but because he agrees.

‘Yoongi?’

The voice switches tone, sounding softer and lighter, as though whoever was calling him had a smile on their lips.

Yoongi wants to ignore the voice despite how sweet it was.

There’s a hand on his hair, fingers carefully carding through his hair and it lulls Yoongi back to sleep.

When he wakes up again, he’s heavily disoriented.

He also realizes he was still smiling.

Whatever food he was able to keep down is lodged in his throat and Yoongi could throw up anytime. But he was too exhausted to even vomit. His vision is blurred and it’s impossible to focus. So Yoongi simply waits for his vision to return to clarity, blinking slowly. Next to him Jimin is also asleep. His arm is looped around Yoongi’s, his body turned and tucked facing him. Yoongi cannot see his face, but he doesn’t need to see the details to know what they looked like. Yoongi could trace the slope of his nose out of sheer memory, could outline the shape of his eyes, outline the soft curves of his lips, pick the exact flushed shade of pink from his cheeks.

Yoongi would laugh if he had the strength.
Laugh at himself for being like this. Not the part about him being sick, but the fact that he was here, in this situation, practically at death’s door, yet completely lost in devotion for this Being he doesn’t even know.

Would there have been a time, another reality, a different time, where he would have met Jimin under different circumstances? Where he could have been introduced, and they would gradually become closer? Or would they have grown together, knowing each other from infancy- where their lives were so integrated that they would have never dreamt of a possibility of never knowing each other. Or would they have been colleagues, smiling politely at each other as they met at some basic canteen.

Maybe if alternative universes existed, if parallel dimensions did exist with theirs, and at this very moment, at this very minute, another Yoongi existed. And in that minute, so did Jimin. And they were together- maybe asleep like this. And maybe instead of being surrounded by death and pain and sorrow, they’re surrounded by simplicity, normality, and the reassurance that when they opened their eyes, the first thing they would see, was each other.

Pain unlike any other he’s felt rips through the hollow of his heart. Where once an organ of wet thrumming tissue pulsed beneath his ribs, existed a husk, drained of life. And even in this state, Yoongi’s heart is broken, and each fragment still burns with pain and sorrow.

With some difficulty, Yoongi turns his head to the other side, unable to endure the heartbreak as he looked upon Jimin.

The captain was on his other side, also asleep. The other 4 remaining were also asleep, the lot of them creating a ring around a moss covered tree.

They weren’t capable of creating a watch anymore. They were too sick.

Too weak.

Too exhausted.

But they stuck close, moving slowly.

Yoongi can hear her shallow breathing, begin to see the sheen of fevered sweat on her skin from this distance. Blinking a few more times, Yoongi’s vision clears. Not a lot, but much better than before.

It stands in front of him.

The red of its clothes bled into the air around it, forcefully altering its surroundings to warp and fold inwards, screaming as they bent out of shape. Everything about it was wrong. Everything about its existence was wrong.

Yoongi is frozen where he sits.

His limbs have no strength, his eyes are barely focusing. But he can’t look away. He cannot shift his gaze from this grotesque force of unnatural evil.

And it holds Yoongi’s gaze. And though Yoongi could see no visible feature, he could sense its eyes and Yoongi cannot look away.

It points at Yoongi, and for a fleeting second, Yoongi believes it’s trying to say something.
‘Yoongi.’

As though electrocuted, Yoongi jolts into action, his breath punching out of him. He throws himself on to all fours and dry heaves, his eyes stinging and burning.

A pair of arms wrap around him and he’s being pulled back with panicked strength.

‘Yoongi!’

Jimin appears before him, distraught and worried. There are obvious sounds of TeorSers firing and Yoongi hears the captain shouting. Jimin holds him tight, his entire body tense, his features hardened, his eyes darting everywhere. Yoongi senses flurried movement around him and he guesses it’s the others. Did someone go missing? It had been a week since the last Being vanished. And 3 days since they left Amic behind, buried in a shallow grave under a blanket of leaves.

The captain appears, her expression beyond tired.

‘We should move,’ she exhales out, her voice drawn and brittle. She doesn’t say anything else.

‘Sunshine, help me stand,’ Yoongi smiles at Jimin, making attempts to stand. Jimin understands at once, and with now shaking limbs, helps Yoongi stand. Jimin pushes back his hair, his hands smoothing out his matted hair, as though attempting to make him feel better.

Yoongi feels his heartbreaking again and he’s not sure, but he thinks Jimin can sense it too. Because he stops, eyes piercing through as though he could see all of Yoongi. His hand falls to his chest, over his heart. His gaze softens, and Yoongi can see nothing except sorrow.

Eclipses were considered beautiful in nearly every planet, every System Yoongi has been to or has heard of.

But was beauty always synonymous to sorrow?

‘I wish I had known you—...in a different life,’ Yoongi tells him, knowing that he still wouldn’t understand. But it was all right.

‘Yoongi?’

Because he always knew, right from the start.

‘Let’s go sunshine.’

That the time of the eclipse would move away, and that veiled Elsewhere where Time seized to exist would come to an end.

And Yoongi would be left behind, dreaming for the warmth of sunlight.
Jimin walks in a straight steady line, following the reedy Being before him who keeps glancing back at him. There’s leer to his smile and Jimin wants nothing more than to free his bonds and throw this Being to the floor. After his initial panic and fear abated, Jimin is filled with anger and frustration and a whole world of pain. All around him the survivors of Seulgaan’s ship are being rounded up and placed into freight-like Transporters. No one is using any firearms to order their newly acquired prisoners around at this point. Gigantic constructs like magnified boxy cyborgs patrol the area outside, manned by their controllers and pilots.

‘Hey! Where you taking that one?’ a voice calls out.

‘s a special one!’ the Being before him calls back. ‘One of them hatched eggs!’

A shiver runs down Jimin’s spine. They knew about the OrTanks?

How? Jimin was under the informed impression that no one outside of a certain ring of Beings within a place called Raksane Tayi knew about this. So how were these Beings of a war-torn planet- a war-torn System aware of the OrTanks?

‘Taking him to the Collectors?’

‘That’s right.’

‘Take the Transporter to the far-end then- it’s leaving soon.’

Jimin is shoved towards the side and steered around harshly. He nearly trips over his feet but rights himself, not wanting to be manhandled or bound again. A rusty but strong Transporter, smaller than the others around the area stands at the very end of the row. Without preamble he’s shoved inside in the back and forced to sit on the floor. Two different hands clamp down on his shoulders at once and keep him down. Jimin finally looks up at his captors.

There were 5 in total inside the Transporter with him, and 2 others in the cockpit.

‘He’s different. Doesn’t look like any of them from Pravasi M’hanun,’ one of them comments as they shine a bright light on his face. Jimin doesn’t flinch, staring away from the point of light and glaring.

‘He’s wearing the uniform though.’ A hand picks at his sleeve and Jimin twists away sharply before he’s forced to sit still again. ‘His eyes are weird.’
'Maybe some GLA scheme again?'

'I literally don’t care what he is- we’re gonna get rewarded for bringing him in,’ the one gripping his shoulder spits out. ‘I’m this close to finally affording a way out of this accursed planet- we need to really push for the units.’

‘You really think Zelek will be any better?’

‘They get jobs from out-of-System, they get to travel out and have the freedom to move. Here, we’re just stuck working for them- just fighting- I don’t know about you, but out of the two evils, Zelek is better.’

‘There’s food here-’

‘This shit ain’t food-’

‘I’m 2 full sets away- who knows this midget might get us out.’

Jimin stays put, already trying to draw out and preserve any bit of energy he could use. The Transporter starts to move and a booming thunderous sound erupts. For a moment Jimin thinks something has exploded but when he catches a brief sight of a massive lightning bolt through the badly tinted windows, he realizes they’re outside of Seulgaan’s ship and were now traversing through the storm.

Even out here in nature, he was blocked from being able to somehow absorb back some energy. Were the sun shining, he’d heal faster. Quite suddenly, everything starts to swim before his eyes. His ears give out, a strange warped filter over his sense. An unnatural warmth itches its way from under the suit he’s wearing and all over his skin.

This was not good.

Unintentionally he exhales out in a loud shudder. His sides are cramping and burning, and in this cramped space the air feels thin and everything starts to catch up to him.

‘He looks like he’s about to throw up,’ one of them grunts- the voice reaches him in a strange slow pull, as though the voice was quite far away. ‘Make sure he doesn’t die-’

‘Scan him, make sure he’s not gonna snuff it any time soon.’

Vision swimming, Jimin’s body tilts without his approval but he’s being harshly pulled back. Jimin doesn’t realize that he’s passed out, conscious in a weird state of slow thought, pain, and a strange heat that pulses around his head. He’s woken with a sharp stabbing pain right below his ear and a strong coursing cold surges from that spot and violently clears up his head.

The first thing Jimin realizes is that he’s not inside the Transporter- rather he was in a sizeable room that reeked of death and decay. Not just of decomposition or organic breakdown, but of a stale and old, polluted corruption and Jimin realizes the smell is actually the air around him.

‘-less it’s wrong; I thought we got all the hatched ones?’

‘We did- but this one isn’t from here- we got him outta the crashed ship- we think he’s one of them.’

‘Oh?’
Jimin finds himself in a room that resembled the Bridge of a ship though he can immediately tell he’s definitely on ground; there is a chill that permeates through the floor and into his hands and knees that could only come from dark and damp earth.

‘What’s a hatched doing with the Alliance? And no less from the GI.’

They look a lot like Khonen- or at least, from the same species.

‘You shouldn’t have fucking killed their boss- could’ve gotten answers from him- you can’t get shit from their lot,’ another voice speaks out from the corner. ‘Best rid of him fast while he’s incapacitated.’

‘He’s a hatched- that means we get our tallies-’

‘Get the fuck out and shut your mouth- he’s ours now-’

‘Come now- let’s at least pay them their trouble,’ the other voice reasons. ‘This is someone they would be interested in- he’s pure after all.’

Jimin looks up at that, wondering what any of this meant. Pure? Isn’t that what the Omhlophe considered themselves? Pure?

They’re not really paying him any attention- he’s hardly a threat right now, incapacitated as he is. Jimin wonders if he really looks all that unwell.

‘We’ll just make sure he’s actually a hatched, then you will receive your dues.’

‘Right sure go ahead,’ his original captors sneer. Looming shadows approach him from the back and before Jimin can defend himself or ready himself, a hand pulls at the collar of his body-suit, pulling right at the hidden lapels with a practiced hand that is both alarming and confusing. How did they know?

His heated skin is suddenly exposed to the cold hair as the lapel falls apart on his back and Jimin shivers violently. There’s an alarming silence that follows.

‘There’s nothing on his back.’

Jimin grits his teeth, willing himself not to squirm too much.

‘Where the fuck did he-‘

‘So you expect us to take your word for it, by stealing a uniform – no less from our private stores! And making some unfortunate slave wear it, you thought we would believe that this was one of the GI? That this was a hatched?’

‘Hey look no-‘

There’s scuffling and a very quick succession of TeorSer fire being shot and Jimin hunches even lower onto the ground, his dizziness hitting him harder. He’s not sure if he’s passed out again but when he opens his eyes again, he finds a few faces looming down at him, turning his head this way and that.

‘Put him through the delivery- and then put him downstairs- if he survives, we send him out - he has a good face.’ One of the blurred faces moves away, dismissive and uncaring.

‘Take the uniform back as well- return it to the stores and make sure its secured.’ The other face goes away as well. One last one lingers and it’s his hand that lingers on Jimin’s head. His fingers get caught in Jimin’s hair strands, pulling rather harshly and roughly.

‘This is pretty,’ he mumbles. ‘Have it sent back to me.’

The Užkulisai is ready and set, and with the cell installed, they were completely hidden and camouflaged. Safe, save from the storm they were now forced to sit and wait out. It’s a storm unlike any Namjoon has witnessed. Lightning as thick and wide as the Spardyti streaks overhead, and acidic rain like angry ocean waves washes over the windows in an alarming fashion. The Užkulisai was without a doubt an exceptionally strong and powerful ship but in conditions as chaotic as this, Namjoon doesn’t want to risk anything; especially when they were handling foreign technology. They only activate the bare minimum and sit in a startlingly quiet and almost out-of-place peacefulness illuminated only by the lightning and the pale green glow of Taeh’yung’s hands.

It was odd, sitting here, and not doing anything- but Namjoon is grateful because they were now all forced to simply be.

‘According to the scans, the storm should be over in 10 minutes,’ Hoseok calls out quietly.

‘What are their positions?’ Namjoon asks even though he could easily check himself.

‘Jimin’s movement have slowed down. He’s definitely moved away from the crash-site, closer towards the mountain ranges,’ Taeh’yung supplies from where he’s sitting next to Yoongi. ‘Jin is still moving- not sure where he’s headed but it’s down north of the scan.’

‘Anything from outside?’ Hoseok asks, head turning a little.

‘Nothing,’ Namjoon shakes his head, ‘Storm is too strong, and there are not enough frequency channels for me to access to check their movements- they have no working satellite.’

‘How do they manage communications then? How do they even fly out?’ Hoseok asks out loud.

‘Probably independent emitters,’ Namjoon ruminates. ‘When they’re out in space, they probably have a series of ships that carry their channels and it links back down here to whatever controls division they might have.’

‘I don’t think there’s any mention of any agent staying here,’ Hoseok frowns. ‘Or simply not this planet- her sister planets might have some archives- but nothing comes to mind from Ynqaba.’

Namjoon himself hadn’t been able to find much about Ynqaba or the Ukuye System. Zelek had recently come to mainstream news due to the terrible famine, causing a lot of her people to flee by all means necessary. Khonen had mentioned working with the Venture Unit as well

‘Some agents work freelance,’ Hoseok adds, as though guessing what Namjoon was thinking. ‘They might be backed up sometimes- but in cases involving non-GLA Systems or planets, they might link some of their leaders or in Zelek’s case, link the merchants or traders with pirates so that they have some form of exchange system.’

‘I thought the Venture Unit provided Systems like Ukuye with aid alongside the Yisheng Directory?’ Namjoon asks with a frown. ‘Even in they’re not under the GLA, if they’re in critical state, the Yisheng Directory always steps in to provide aid and supplies.’

‘My work never brought me here,’ Hoseok explains, ‘If there was anything about Ukuye, it wasn’t important enough to be discussed in the meetings or I was just never ever around to hear it.’

‘How did the war even start though?’ Taeh’yung asks from the front, kneeling on the chair and peering over the back at them.

‘What do you mean?’

‘Why did it start?’

Hoseok glances at Namjoon in question as well before shrugging at Taeh’yung.

‘I’m not sure about it to be honest,’ the Ngfy’widan replies.

‘From what I could find, the System, much like the Ghandhar System, wished to remain separated from the GLA,’ Namjoon surmises. ‘But it fell into internal corruption, in-planet and out-planet wars. Resources aren’t the highest or readily available in Ukuye, unlike Ghandhar which is why it’s able to flourish despite being independent of the GLA.’

‘It’s funny,’ Taeh’yung says quietly, resting his head on his arms, eyes glowing green as he tracks a bright streak of lightning overhead.

‘What is?’ Namjoon asks, wondering what Taeh’yung could possibly mean.

‘All of the trouble we’ve seen, all of the misery we’re seeing, all comes from Systems and Planets that do not fall under the GLA,’ he remarks, his head craning around to follow the lightning bolt. ‘It’s almost as though they’re being punished.’

Namjoon’s heard enough stories and gossip regarding the “conspiracy theories” of the GLA. About how non GLA-systems were not only more likely to suffer, but were most likely targeted by pirates and other forms of misfortune not just because they lacked the GLA security, but because everything was designed and constructed by the GLA themselves to do so. How the GLA purposefully neglected certain Systems or planets because adding them would bring no actual benefit. And maybe there was truth to that. And maybe there wasn’t any.

And maybe now Namjoon was more inclined to believe it because the force of good behind the GLA, the heart of kindness that directed the path of the GLA, were found and exposed, uncovering their hypocrisy and unsettling similarity to totalitarianism.

‘No force exists that allows dominance of power like that Tae,’ Hoseok says in an unexpectedly gentle way. ‘Most Systems and Planets that aren’t part of the GLA that fall under such circumstances aren’t a result of punishment or some twisted form of submission. It’s mainly because they are vulnerable without the GLA, and because they have Beings who are in power who do not think beyond their own selfishness.’

Taeh’yung just continues to stare out into the sky with doleful eyes.

‘It’s not just GLA propaganda,’ Hoseok continues. ‘They really do try.’

‘What would happen if the GLA didn’t exist?’ Taeh’yung asks, lifting a hand as he points along the path of a large bolt of lightning.

‘I don’t know,’ Hoseok shrugs. ‘More war, more fights- starvation, lack of development and advancement.’

‘So the GLA intervenes, pauses the natural progression of a planet, of a System, for profit?’ Taeh’yung looks down, hand still pointing up. ‘Isn’t that the opposite of what the Yisheng believe in?’

‘I don’t know Tae,’ Hoseok replies with a shrug. ‘And there’s no point in speculating what the Universe would have been like, or what it would be like- if there are things that need to be changed, then we cannot look to the past with regret, we can only look to now and fix what we can.’

Taeh’yung blinks a few times, his eyes unfocused before he nods slowly and with a strange smile says, ‘You’re right.’

Namjoon doesn’t know how much of what Hoseok said was something the Ngfy’widan himself believed. It sounded very optimistic and though Namjoon did not believe that optimism was foolishness, it seemed a hard virtue to own when you had a history as intense as Hoseok’s.

‘5 minutes before the storm clears.’ Yoongi announces.

‘We need to first find a tower or transformer so that I can access their systems,’ Namjoon repeats one more time. He’s sure Hoseok doesn’t need reminding, but Yoongi was exactly all there, and he could never be sure of Taeh’yung. ‘Then after that we find have a clear layout of this place they’re keeping Jimin in, I’ll cut the power, Taeh’yung and I will distract them away from his position, Yoongi will retrieve Jimin, and Hoseok will remain at the ship to fly us out. All clear?’

Taeh’yung nods enthusiastically whereas Hoseok just raises a thumb’s up in acknowledgement. There’s no movement from Yoongi.

‘Yoongi?’

‘Understood,’ the Human replies.

Namjoon grimaces but doesn’t linger on the topic. The sky outside was already lightening and the storm looked a little bit more like a storm.

When the storm reduces to a steady shower of rain, they begin activating the ship. To Namjoon’s intense relief, everything was working well and one glance at the monitors and screens show that the cell was working as it should.

‘Keep us close to the terrain- we need to make sure we’re not visibly spotted,’ Namjoon orders as he pulls up the screen indicating Jimin’s indication. His dot had come to a complete standstill next to the base of a long mountain range. Sk’jin’s was still moving, away from their general area. Despite their obvious disagreements and grievances they had with each other, Namjoon understands Sk’jin’s use and importance to this mission. Not to mention just how much he knew. They couldn’t lose him at this point, for more than one reason.

Namjoon still doesn’t trust the Khol’isa. There were many things unexplained, many questions unanswered, and a lot of explanations that didn’t make sense. So while Sk’jin was useful for the mission, Namjoon wants the Khol’isa to be within his sight to make sure he wouldn’t do something detrimental towards them as a whole.

‘There’s an acid fog above the mountains, we could use it as camouflage,’ Hoseok reports, alerting Namjoon. The Kutsoglerin looks away from Sk’jin’s blinking dot and focuses on the view before him. Ynqaba was pretty flat, but they were coming around to some rather spiky and strangely formed mountains. They’re black and sharp in appearance, almost unnatural in their formation. Namjoon hadn’t read any information regarding any form of destruction over the continents of Ynqaba so he’s not sure if this was a result of warfare or just their natural terrain. Either way, it was providing them with surprisingly convenient coverage.

‘Acidity level?’ Namjoon asks.

‘At 5.6,’ Lisai replies smoothly.

‘Everyone wear a protective suit- you too Hoseok,’ Namjoon orders.

‘I’ll go get them!’ Taeh’yung cheerily volunteers, leaping off of his seat.

‘Lisai run a scan to check for the closest port of electricity,’ Namjoon orders, readying his NaviLet.

‘Searching.’

Namjoon waits all but 10 seconds patiently before Hoseok turns around to give him a confused glance.

‘It shouldn’t take that long-‘

‘Refining search.’

‘Frequencies should be available on the ground at least,’ Hoseok frowns. ‘Even if they don’t have satellites.’

‘None found.’

Even Yoongi turns around in his seat to look at Namjoon, expression expectant.

‘Well- this certainly changes things,’ Hoseok frowns. ‘How are we supposed to enter this place if we can’t access any digital port?’

‘Hoseok land us somewhere close- so that we can check the parameters,’ Namjoon orders with a frown as they continue to glide silently through the fog.

‘If there’s no electrical outlet, we can’t use BluePrint.’
Namjoon shakes his head, thinking hard. Taeh’yung comes back, gear and suit at the ready in his arms.

‘What’s wrong?’ he asks, eyes wide.

This was why the Ynqaba fleet had been so quick to use magnetic pulses to cripple them. To an extent, their technology which was so compromised, was actually an advantage for them against other Beings who relied heavily on digital-frequency based technology.

‘If we’re going to do this as planned, we’re going to have to do this blind.’ Namjoon announces before he adds, ‘Lisai, reverse our own magnetic fields outside the ship- so if they detonate another pulse, we won’t get affected.’

‘Understood.’

‘We’re all going to have get out there- not enough eyes,’ Hoseok indicates outwards as he takes a suit from Taeh’yung with a small smile at the Zhak’gri.

‘Actually no,’ Namjoon shakes his head.

‘What do you mean?’ Hoseok glances over at him briefly. ‘For the plan to work, I’ll need to go on ground.’

‘No- we land close enough, drop Yoongi off- if it’s only him, he won’t be noticed,’ Namjoon explains. ‘We take the Užkulisai and create the distraction past down the mountain range.’

‘But-‘

‘Understood,’ Yoongi stands, taking the suit from Taeh’yung.

‘We’re at a disadvantage,’ Namjoon tells Hoseok bluntly. ‘We’re used to moving around in a setting where everything is accessible and attainable through our screens, through our Comms- but this is another world. And for us to get Jimin out, we need to access him the way he was brought here- manually. And Yoongi is our best chance.’

Hoseok pauses for a moment, as though mulling his statement in his mind before nodding.

‘Yoongi, want my Heliord?’ he asks the Human who was freely changing into the suit.

‘I already have it.’ Yoongi pulls the handle out from behind (?!?!?) him and swings it once before pocketing it into the WeatherBeat coat Taeh’yung holds up as though to hide his modesty. Hoseok does a double take, gasping loudly.

‘Wait what-?!’

'Approaching suitable landing site.' Lisai announces.

'Land us,' Namjoon orders as Yoongi finishes suiting up. 'Scan the area just in case-'

'Woah!' Taeh’yung exclaims loudly, pressing up against the window eagerly. 'Such a weird mountain!'

'Taeh’yung maybe sit down-' Hoseok calls tiredly but he suddenly stops.

Squinting a little, Namjoon waits for the acidic wash of fog to thin as they land. To his surprise, their landing sounds strangely hollow, the weird echo as the beamers brush away debris from what Namjoon had thought was the mountain side.

'This isn't a mountain,' Hoseok is getting off of his seat, grabbing a screen as he jogs up to the window. 'This is a ship.'

Namjoon immediately starts a deeper scan.

'Listai- identify make and design of unidentified ship.' he orders, quickly waiting for the scan to finish. But before Lisai can announce it Yoongi speaks up rather quietly and casually.

'This is a customized exploratory ship designed and customized for the usage of the Yisheng.'

'Vessel J'ù ēn-00-87, registered under the Yisheng Directory.'

'What is this doing here?'

'I don't know, but I think I know why the Omhlophe were looking for more "eggs" here,' Namjoon says tersely. 'Come on- let's get going.'

* *

Times were simpler when one look at Sk’jin made nearly every Being quake in awe, fear, and respect. When his name commanded attention and wariness. When his glare literally stopped fights. Or started them. When the sound of his laughter brought chills down backs.

Spaces, he missed those times.

Now he’s sat in the back of a Transporter that has definitely seen better days. Probably also smelt better some 30 sols ago. Right now it smelt a bit like cured meat, wood smoke, damp laundry, and old air-coolant. Not a pleasant combination but Sk’jin reminds himself that his olfactory senses would adapt to the smell in approximately 3 minutes. Hopefully.

He’d been in a strange state of being half-conscious, half-knocked out. He vaguely remembers being taken out of the Užkulisai, no Yoongi in sight, and out into a very windy very dry arid landscape. He could’ve sworn he saw crumbling buildings at one point but that was it. Then he blacked out for a while, coming around only to find himself strapped into a seat, inside a Transporter of sorts.

There’s a total of 4 Beings inside the Transporter, not counting the two who sat up front beyond several partitions.

No one says anything, just sitting in a sort of resigned smelly silence that Sk’jin picks up on immediately despite his headache. Most of them had removed their heavy rustic gear save for the smallest of them. They were a lot more anthropomorphic than Sk’jin had guessed, their skin not so harshly grey as he had first registered. Or perhaps it was the lighting. Their eyes are dark, pupils a little smaller than usual. A majority of them were masked, or had protective goggles on, one of them in particular is nearly entirely covered up in dark and heavy gear. What hair Sk’jin can see is thin and rather fragile looking. Their entire species, as a planet, and as a System, were suffering greatly. Khonen had mentioned his planet’s suffering and as a sister planet, Sk’jin has no doubt that Ynqaba was going through the same, or worse, conditions. He can't quite make out their faces, but he can tell that they're not exactly a specialized military unit or even a rebel force. They appeared to be a rather odd combination of Beings, ages varying though they all appeared to be of the same species.

They’re watching him carefully.

'Family?' Sk'jin manages to croak out. 'Risky isn't it though?'

Nearly everyone's eyes quickly flit over to the figure sitting opposite Sk'jin. Ah, the leader, Sk'jin ruminates, quickly eyeing the Being. Even though he was masked, Sk'jin can tell that he's older, much older, than the others gathered here. He's not too sure about the physical aging process of the Beings living here but he guesses due to recent environmental and mental upheaval across their planet, their life spans were shortened and aging spurred on. Different from Khol'isa of course, where they were stuck in one continuous eternity of bleeding darkness.

'You all scavengers or something?' Sk'jin asks out loud.

They’re looking at him curiously, as though not quite sure what to make of him. Which was understandable of course. Sk’jin did greet them with hysterical laughter, missing teeth, bloodied clothes, apparently all alone in a ship that crashed onto their planet out of nowhere. Spaces, he was going to punch Yoongi if he ever saw the Human again.

Sk’jin’s headache is gnawing away at his temples and right above his eyebrows. He wants to rub at them, or maybe bash his head against the closest wall. Even a pillar would do.

'My name is Sk’jin by the way- thought you'd like to know. I'm from Khol'isa,' Sk’jin introduces himself blithely. He's met with more confused expression.

'No introductions? Oh well,' Sk'jin shrugs. 'So, how long until we get where we're supposed to go? Because I think I might be bleeding out somewhere and honestly if you don't have a Yisheng on site or something I might die without medical aid. Got knocked around quite violently you know?'

There's still no response.
'I really don't think you're gonna get any units from whoever you're trying to sell me to if I'm dead-just saying.' Sk'jin shrugs again.

If Sk’jin had been in their position, he would have left himself behind immediately. Because he recognized a lost-cause when he saw one.

And Sk’jin has been lost ever since he drew his first shaking breath, covered in muck and his own cellular waste, violently trembling in Taeh’yung’s arms 4 sols ago.

'Get him a press,' one of them says roughly. Sk'jin doesn't know what a press is, but can only hope it's something compressed designed to relieve his pain, and not squash him. The smallest of them all, who was the one covered head to foot in protective gear, approaches him and Sk'jin notes that this one is female, and much younger, judging by her actions and timid movements. She pushes up her goggles and Sk’jin can immediately tell she’s not the same species as those gathered here. Her eyes are wide, pupils a warm brown and large. What skin is exposed is fair and much smoother than the others. Her eyes however are sharp and wary- she might be young and possibly inexperienced, but it clearly wasn't going to stop her from killing him if it came down to it. Sk’jin gives her his best fatherly smile. The look of blank confusion is a little bit too amusing so Sk’jin ends up chuckling. She gives pause, her posture rigid, ready to spring aside.

'Sorry! It's just, I tried to look reassuring but I'm just really bad at it!' Sk'jin manages to say amidst laughter. ‘And also, if you really want to get profit off of me, I think it’s best to demand over 800,000 units- wait, do you use Standard units here?’

He’s met with blanched faces, wide eyes. So maybe the notion of 800,000 units was a little improbable.

‘You’re telling me you won’t get paid that much? Even the Alliance sells their cheapest slaves over 50,000 units. That’s the minimum price.’

‘The Alliance is dead,’ a voice tells him sharply.

‘And so I’ve heard,’ Sk’jin shrugs, remembering the rumbling information they had received from the Khonen in Ubhuku. Khonen was from this planet, Sk’jin remembers with a grimace. ‘But it’s the Alliance’s fault I crashed here so I guess we’re both telling the truth but only one of us is right.’

There’s a rather pregnant pause following his statement before the Being Sk’jin labeled as their leader speaks.

‘The Alliance was destroyed over 20 sols ago- in our very System,’ he states. ‘We went to war with them and destroyed all remaining major ships- we know what Alliance ships look like- that was not one.’

Sk’jin thinks back to what he read and he’s pretty sure he didn’t come across any information like that. Also, if this was true, it would mean that Namjoon would have read about it and they would have been given an hour long lecture about it no doubt. The young female peels off a small object carefully with surprisingly clean fingers and trimmed nails before applying the light object to the side of Sk’jin’s neck. Sk’jin notices how her exposed skin is glaringly different from Khonen and the others gathered around. But he dismisses that observation for a moment and concentrates back on their leader.

Or maybe he was right. Maybe they really did fight the Alliance in this System and it was covered up because this System wasn’t registered under the GLA and the GLA wouldn’t want the glory of defeating the Alliance given to a seemingly small and weak unknown System. Sk’jin wants to roll his eyes; politics, ruining everything.

‘Well- that ship that crashed on your surface around the same time I did was a slaver ship that belonged to a very much active member of the Alliance- I would know because you know, I was escaping him.’ Sk’jin shrugs.

Reckless, a voice that sounds annoyingly like Namjoon’s sounds in his ear and Sk’jin ignores it. Whatever she had applied on his neck was working slowly but surely- it was probably some form of pain killer. Anyways; so what if he was reckless? He was pretty much abandoned on this planet, with the likeliness of his rescue practically 0. What did he have to lose? Maybe he could actually turn this situation around and work it to his advantage. It wouldn’t be the first time he’s randomly been stranded on a planet that’s in political chaos and left it carrying an honourary title of sorts. It would in fact be the 7th time if he chose to do so. It would have been the 8th if he had agreed to some arranged marriage but Sk’jin was not about that lifestyle so he simply faked his own death and left the planet while Nambike complained the entire way.

He’s met with scoffs.

‘Am I wrong? Pray, do correct me and tell me about it,’ Sk’jin pretends to make himself comfortable, leaning back on the uncomfortable wall. He’s given a lot of skeptical looks, but Sk’jin waits expectantly. The young female starts to check on his injuries, starting with his head.

‘What’s there to tell?’ another female voice speaks out from the side. ‘There was a huge war with the Alliance, we won, divided the resources gained from it, and somewhere along the line we fucked up and here we are.’

‘By the Alliance do you really mean the Isbahaysiga Alliance?’ the young female asks rather abruptly.

‘Camat!’ a voice hisses sharply.

‘The very one,’ Sk’jin nods, angling his head so that she could access his injuries better. ‘This ship was controlled by the Tayian Van Seulgaan, wonder if he survived the crash- either way I’m sure there are more of him around.’

‘It doesn’t matter if there were survivors or not,’ the young Being tells him, Camat, with a scowl. ‘They just want the ship and its raw resources.’

‘They?’

‘Collectors.’

Ah, the Collectors.

‘Then why didn’t you take my ship? If that’s the main thing you want.’

‘We’re not there yet,’ she tells him resignedly before dabbing a piece of gauze in a rather suspicious salve jar.

‘Ah,’ Sk’jin hums in understanding before hissing as his wounds start to smart. ‘You guys are really low.’

He’s met again with irritated glares but there’s no argument.

The Transporter suddenly halts and there’s a string of curses. The salve Camat is using splatters and Sk’jin winces, tasting the bitter medicine.

‘Oh! Sorry-’ she’s saying but she’s pulled back and a tense atmosphere fills the air.

‘What’s going on-’ Sk’jin grimaces as he swallows involuntarily with a shudder.

‘Shh!’

The partition between the cockpit and the back seals shut and Sk’jin is dragged to sit beneath it. Camat crouches down next to him as well and pulls over the boxes of random devices they had stolen off of the Užkulisai and quickly covers it with fabric that stiffens and forms a convincing metallic camouflage that resembles the interior of the Transporter. It’s dark, only a bit of faint illumination seeps through whatever camouflage was covering them. Sk’jin makes himself small and shimmies down even more and out of sight. Camat gives him a quizzical look, as though wondering why Sk’jin was so easy and quick to comply. Her eyes are strangely orb like in the dark- not exactly glowing, not exactly reflective. They almost remind Sk’jin of the eyes of nocturnal animals. He’s sure she can see very well in the dark. It’s apparent she doesn’t trust him because instead of holding up the gauze with the medicinal salve she had been dabbing on his forehead, a sharp dagger now rested under his jaw.

‘This really isn’t necessary,’ he whispers. Camat levels him with a glare worthy of Namjoon. There are 3 distinct knocking bangs on the door and Camat presses the blade close in warning. Sk’jin rolls his eyes in response.

The doors swing open and there’s the tell-tale sounds of TeorSer activation. And not only that but the wind is literally howling and the sound of thunder mid-crack booms in the air.

‘Anything to declare?’ a voice calls in. Sk’jin surmises that they’ve been stopped by a patrol of sorts.

‘Nothing- headed home after a run near the Cliffs,’ the leader replies.

‘Oh? Didn’t see that crash?’

‘Saw it- others got there before we did- and a storm is coming up.’

‘Hey, come on Bhān, you’ve got Dilag driving- no storm is going to stop you.’ Another voice chimes in. ‘Come on- out, we’ll do the search and if you’re telling the truth you can go, easy. If you’re telling the truth of course.’

‘Neither of us are equipped to handle a storm that size, it’ll be best if we start moving-‘

‘Come on out Bhān- you and your little group- oh, your daughter ain’t around? A pity,’ the same voice comments.

Sk’jin chances a look at Camat and her expression, or at least what Sk’jin can make out, is cold but afraid.

Ah, I see.

‘Listen Nakā- we don’t ask question-‘

‘A’āpyu- let’s go,’ Bhān says quietly, ‘Everyone step out.’

The blade from under Sk’jin’s jaw quickly moves away and Sk’jin chances another look at Camat who isn’t bothering to look at him anymore, her stance defensive. There are footsteps, objects moving around and rough banter. Sk’jin and Camat do not look away from each other, waiting in apprehensive anticipation.

Camat was clearly the “daughter” in question here. And Bhān, the leader of this unit was her “father”. They were clearly not the same species and the patrol knew about her and were “curious”. Clearly, Bhān had no intention of letting them near Camat, risking her hiding here in the back with Sk’jin, a complete stranger who was possibly insane.

Footsteps approach their spot and Camat tenses even more, her grip on her dagger tightening. She makes to rise, clearly ready to strike out.

Now, Sk’jin is pretty sure that there is no chance of their fighting and escaping this unscathed and honestly this group seems much better than whatever patrol unit was outside. Quietly and quickly Sk’jin reaches over and pulls Camat down, shaking his head before he stands swiftly.

There are all together 4, not a large number, but what was daunting was the automated megastructure outside, large weaponized claws aimed straight at the entrance. Great, this planet used and implemented rustic cybotronic machines as part of their weaponry. Cybotronics were crude, rustic, and rather wasteful in terms of fuel, but great for planets like Ynqaba, where apparently the citizens were surviving based on a scavenger-lifestyle.

‘Hello,’ Sk’jin smiles in greeting at the 4 TeorSer nozzles aimed at him at once, his arms are up, palms facing them. ‘My name is Sk’jin, it’s a pleasure to meet all of you.’

It’s a stifling moment of intense tension but Sk’jin doesn’t stop smiling. Then the TeorSers lower and Sk’jin has a clear and unobstructed view of their faces, and most importantly, has all of their attention. It’s all he can work with right now- he has no access to hallucinogens, no hypnotic element.

But that was never an issue for Sk’jin in reality.

‘If you could lower your TeorSers, I’m sure there’s nothing here of value or interest to any of you,’ he smiles, concentrating as he steps closer, eyes never leaving the Being in front of him.

Many Beings (like Namjoon) believed that the Khol’isa could only use their abilities with the aid of hallucinogens and other little helpful items. This was a misconception the earliest Khol’isa evolutions established in order for them to gain the trust of the Universe they found themselves integrating into. And while Sk’jin doesn’t know if the same applies to others of his own species, he has never needed any additional help. In his experience there were some who could withstand and hold up their own, but that was incredibly rare.

So when face to face with these 4 simple-minded, starved, single-minded Beings, it was all too easy for Sk’jin to wrap them all around his finger.

‘Hey-‘

Sk’jin doesn’t look away, staring deep and straight into the patrol guards eyes.

‘We’re just returning from our run- we saw nothing. Storm spooked us,’ Sk’jin purposefully makes his voice a little lower, smoother. Stepping even closer, Sk’jin whispers, ‘Why don’t we keep this a secret? Between us?’

It taints their eyes briefly- and Sk’jin doesn’t know if this is something he imagines, or something he hates, but their eyes twinkle with the faintest red, and the Bloodmoon looms above him once ‘Understood- nothing to see here,’ the patrol states simply with a rather lazy smile. ‘The storm is headed around south-east,- so you guys be careful yeah?’

And rather simply, they hop aboard the cybortronic and amble off into the darkening scape.

Stretching a little, Sk’jin smiles as his would be captors enter the Transporter again, masks gone and expressions bewildered. There were 2 females, and 3 males- and they all looked aged though Sk’jin is sure they weren’t as old as their faces suggested. TeorSers are at the ready, their posture tense. One of them steps forward closer, entirely removing his head piece to reveal a balding greyish head, spotted all over in darker spots. Bhān, Sk’jin realizes, is definitely older than the others gathered. He was also most definitely the leader as the others wait behind him for his command.

‘What did you do?’ Bhān demands, though he doesn’t appear hostile. Just curious and a little wary.

‘My species- we’re rare,’ Sk’jin replies with a shrug, wincing as he exerts his muscles. Fatigue hits him quite hard. Great, he really doesn’t want to pass out again, he can literally hear his cells screaming at him. ‘So I’m not surprised that you haven’t heard of us. Most of the GLA haven’t.’

‘What was that? Hypnosis?’ Camat asks, stepping out from behind Sk’jin.

‘That’s a pretty basic summary yeah,’ Sk’jin takes a deep breath before his body decides it wants to sit.

‘Hey woah-‘ Camat is there, suddenly pulling her mask down. She’s remarkably unlike the others- skin smooth and fair, a strange blood-stain that edges out from under her eyes in a way that’s definitely purposefully species-related. Her teeth are strangely larger than what they should be, and are blunt and heavy looking. ‘We really should get him treated. This isn’t good.’

Bhān looks down at him, his expression calculating and careful.

‘Why didn’t you use that against us? Turn us away from your ship,’ he asks instead.

‘Well-‘ Sk’jin pauses, chuckling a little under his breath when he realizes just how much Yoongi had preplanned everything. He incapacitated Sk’jin to the point of being unable to use his abilities yet awake enough to somehow still save his skin. ‘-to be fair, I wasn’t exactly the most lucid or stable.’

Camat snorts, hastily disguising it as a cough.

‘And I didn’t really sense any threat for you. Danger sure, but no threat,’ Sk’jin replies, leaning back and promptly sitting up again when his body protested the movement.

‘Why don’t you use it on us now?’

‘Do you want me to?’ Sk’jin asks back before adding, ‘Look, I’m stuck here, away from my ship, in an unknown planet, with what appears to be a ridiculous storm approaching. I have no intention of escaping this place, getting lost, and eventually dying in a planet I wasn’t even supposed to come to. You’re my only chance of survival right now, obviously, so that’s why I’m here.’

He shrugs again, calmly waiting as they process his statement. And it was the truth. There was nothing Sk’jin could do stranded in this planet- his only way of survival was with them.
‘Listen,’ Sk’jin knows that this is prime time to somehow get himself out of this situation without being sold off or killed somewhere. Sure they didn’t look particularly threatening, he got lucky, but he could always get sold off to Beings who could do worse. If there was a way of going back, then this was it. Though a small voice in the back of his head asks why he was even bothering in the first place. If the others come to get them, their priority would be Jimin. Meaning they’d meet Yoongi, who would tell them what happened. It was unlikely Namjoon would be willing the risk of remaining here just to find and collect him.

‘I get that you need to sell me to like, I dunno, get units to get some anti-rust spray for this tin-bucket but,’ Sk’jin gestures to the Transporter. ‘But I have a ship, missing crew, and an important deadline to meet. Whatever you’re getting paid is not going to be worth it- I would know, because I know I’m expensive. And you are not getting your money’s worth.’

No one says a word.

‘I need to get back to my ship- make sure it can fly, and find my crew,’ Sk’jin continues. ‘If you need units, then I can give you more than you could possibly hope to receive from your Collectors or whatever they’re called.’

‘It’s not units we’re getting,’ Camat tells him quietly. ‘We’re paying our dues by handing you over.’

_Huh, _Sk’jin thinks, this was unusual. ‘You’re _paying_ to live?’

‘Camat,’ Bhān says quietly. She lowers her head a little as though in apology.

‘It’s getting late,’ one of the females states. ‘What do we do? We can’t get to the Collectors before the storm.’

‘Yeah- and I’m not risking driving us through that without refueling,’ another adds.

Bhān looks around at the Beings behind him before glancing over at Camat.

‘Pe,’ she says quietly, an almost whiney tone to her voice. _Father_, Sk’jin thinks to himself, wondering how and why he found himself intruding upon another war-trope of a story.

Bhān nods once and the team moves in practiced unison. Two head back towards the front at the cockpit, and the others climb up on board. Camat is smiling, helping him shift back into a much more comfortable position. Sk’jin isn’t quite sure what to make of the smile and what it could mean but he hopes it’s nothing stupid.

‘Storms coming in- we’re settling down until it blows over.’ Bhān orders as they all step inside again.

‘I’ll be able to fix you up once we’re back in the den,’ she tells him. ‘Just hang in there for about an hour.’

‘An hour?’ Sk’jin wheezes. ‘I don’t make promises I can’t keep.’

‘Pe, can we use another press?’ she turns, addressing Bhān. He nods and Camat moves back towards the gear lined up the side of the Transporter.

‘An hour,’ Bhān states. ‘You might want to tell me why and how you’re here, and why you seem to think the Alliance is still alive.’
Sk’jin sighs, making himself comfortable before talking. He tells them an abridged, altered version of what happened combined with their go-to cover-story. They were a trade ship that had an unfortunate run in with the alliance because their cargo was switched at a Dock. They came here to exchange their cargo but due to the battle taking place above, they were both caught in between the line of fire and plummeted down.

There’s a sharp and short burst of laughter from the front. The main driver, a hardened and rather sharp looking native looks back briefly with an amused expression.

‘You have the worst luck.’

‘Tell me about it,’ Sk’jin mutters.

‘So your crew- all dead?’ one of the females, A’āpyu, asks him.

‘I don’t know,’ Sk’jin replies and he’s actually being honest. Other than Yoongi, he has no clear indication that any of the others were alive, or even in the System anymore. ‘I need to find them.’

‘We registered two Beings inside your ship before we approached,’ she informs him, looking serious and worried, as though concerned for Sk’jin’s unfortunate ship-mate. Sk’jin could snort.

‘There were 3 of us inside the ship as we plunged- I tried my best to control the ship, but gravity, missiles, my injuries,’ Sk’jin sighs again. ‘I was at least somewhat able to not flatten myself.’

Camat gives him a rueful smile at that, carefully applying the press to his neck this time before handing him a small metallic canteen of water. Sk’jin drinks greedily and quickly, nodding his thanks. While the others seem to believe him, Bhān watches him with careful eyes. And it wasn’t just a thing that the leader would do- it was almost as though he knew that Sk’jin was purposefully leaving out key information. Sk’jin winks at him, and he gets an eye-roll in response.

‘Storms behind us- wind is picking up. Strap down,’ the driver calls as the Transporter hums and a distinct clicking sound resounds before the familiar pressure of a vacuum seal settles.

‘Storms that bad here?’ Sk’jin asks as Camat helps him secure his safety belt.

‘We’re lucky it’s not that acidic. Again.’

Sk’jin snorts.

‘Has it always been this bad?’ he asks, nodding outwards.

Bhān shakes his head with a short laugh. ‘It wasn’t like this even 20 sols ago.’

‘20 sols?’ Sk’jin raises his eyebrows.

‘I know,’ he snorts with a shake of his head. ‘No one would believe us.’

But Sk’jin does. Because he’s seen this happen many times. Too many times. And sometimes within a sol, within months. Sometimes it didn’t even take a full day.

‘Was it a neighbouring planet?’ he ventures.

A few of them laugh, heads thrown back.

‘No- no, we did this to ourselves,’ Bhān tells him as the Transporter tilts and the driver grumbles an apology- looking out of the main window, Sk’jin is grateful for the vacuum seal because it was more “ravaging ocean and lightning” rather than “storm”.

‘After the war with the Alliance, all the planets suffered greatly- ours more than others. We were already low on resources and well- our ecosystem isn’t the kindest. We were struggling and in the end…we did this to ourselves. We elected and voted for death, rejoiced when he came into power, and still raised cheers as he broke all of our alliances.’

‘Ah,’ Sk’jin nods in understanding, looking away from the window. ‘Government collapse?’

‘We saw it coming, but we chose to ignore it,’ Bhān sighs. ‘Within a few sols everything changed. We thought it was a process of transformation- for good. We felt heard, like we were finally being given the opportunity to speak out against those who benefited from the war- from those who never fought the war but only watched on, saving themselves.’

‘But we were just used as usual,’ A’āpyu cuts in, her eyes a little unfocused, clearly reliving something in her memories. ‘We were used and discarded- we gave ourselves over to the very Beings who abandoned us. And they made us feel as though it was all through our own free will.’

Sk’jin has this happen too many times. He wouldn’t say he was surprised. Disappointed maybe, that the Universe still hadn’t changed in all the centuries he was gone. In fact, now that he’s here, he could say that it’s gotten much worse.

‘So what happened? Why are you paying “rent”?’

Bhān sighs heavily, ‘Being alive is expensive. And it’s the only thing we know how to do.’

Sk’jin grimaces comically and this makes everyone laugh.

‘It’s not just that,’ A’āpyu snorts, ‘It’s like you said- it’s rent. Ynqaba has turned into a planet where you turn in everything you find that’s salvageable for trade or the military, and you’re given rations in exchange. You work for food.’

‘My ship has a lot of food,’ Sk’jin chimes in with his most winning smile despite now being half slathered over in bitter salve. ‘I can offer you my weight in food.’

‘It’s not just that,’ A’āpyu laughs, shaking her head while Camat looks amused too. ‘We need to register ourselves every week- we add our credits like that, and when we gather enough, we can migrate to better regions, even planets.’

Sk’jin raises a single crusty eyebrow at that (it’s harder than you think). He thinks back to what Khonen had told them, about how his planet was at the brink of starvation and how he was working for the Omhlophe hoping they would provide them with a solution.

‘So—these Collectors of yours- they’re the ones who control things?’ Sk’jin inquires.

‘Not quite,’ Bhān shakes his head. ‘They’re the ones who stamp our trades, they rack up our tallies. But in the end they’re basically just the delivery system.’

Sk’jin would be taken aback by how easily they were telling him all of this; considering he was a stranger who just displayed abilities that shouldn’t be taken lightly. But at the same time he’s not. Because they had nothing to lose by telling him all of this.

The most likely outcome from all of this would change nothing for them. Sk’jin was a foreign factor they could get rid of if they wanted. What they did to him could potentially benefit them, they could get a pretty good deal regardless of whether or not they were being paid their actual dues considering Sk’jin’s value. Or if they chose to let him go, still have absolutely no effect. If they do come to an agreement or arrangement, then Sk’jin was entirely dependent on them and Bhān knew this.

‘Who are the Collectors?’ Sk’jin asks curiously. ‘Are they from around here? Another planet? Remnants from the Alliance? They don’t happen to wear white robes do they?’

‘What? No,’ Camat scoffs as she ties a lengthy gauze around his head securely, the salve squishing into his hair. ‘They’re just a bunch hoo-ha’s that have nothing better to do than pretend they’re better than all of us.’

Bhān’s expression blanches, his posture a little tense as he studies Sk’jin carefully. Sk’jin is about to question him, honing in on the eldest of this crew when he quickly but surely shakes his head and subtly nods his head away. Later, he signs, we will talk later.

‘There- that’s all I can do for now,’ Camat tells him with a small smile.

‘I am healed already,’ Sk’jin remarks with a graceful bow of his head and adds with sincerity: ‘Thank you.’

She smiles wider now, looking sheepish and goes to sit next to her father. Sk’jin winks at Bhān again before he looks around at the others.

‘So! How come you all speak such good Standard?’

‘No-!’ Jimin tries jerking away but he’s met with a sharp and heavy blow across his jaw and he’s pinned down on the chair.

His head is jerked back and before he can register anything else, a burning searing pain runs down his scalp and there’s a burst of laughter at his cry of pain.
He’d been bodily carried out of the room and lugged around like a sack of meat. If Jimin had any food in his guts, he’d been throwing up already. But his body felt hollow and oddly separated, especially after they removed the GI-suit off of him and threw a worn and dirty tunic over his body. The suit had been heavy, but it had protected him- now Jimin feels incredibly vulnerable, and his pain doubles. There was a prickling shot of sorts directed on his neck and Jimin guesses it was a sort of medicine, to at least keep him somewhat alive for whatever purpose they had for him. It helps clear his mind from the fog of fever and pain a little.

His head is jerked back again and the same buzzing sound rings at his ear and the burning shave skims across his scalp.

Not wanting to give them the satisfaction of knowing he was in pain, Jimin grinds his teeth down and bears the burning pulling heat on his scalp. Chunks of his hair falls around him and in all honesty, he doesn’t care for his hair like that; it was in the fact that this was being done to him against his will.

Jimin feels tainted and used.

Yoongi’s face comes unbidden to his mind and Jimin’s anger, fear, and pain vanishes in an instant.

Phantom touches of the Human’s hand running through his hair cools down his burning scalp, and the panic rising up his throat like bile ebbs away. And instead Jimin feels exhausted. He wants to crawl towards that uncertain but gentle touch. To just give in and slump down, knowing that he would protect him.

But he remains rigid and as impassive as he can until all of his hair falls off and his body shivers beyond his own control. There’s gruff talk again and he’s being shoved out of the seat. Doing his most to keep his balance, Jimin rights himself.

Jimin focuses only on Yoongi.

Thoughts of the Human.

The soothing timbre of his voice, the quiet certainty of his presence, the calming quality of his touch.

The burning light in his eyes every time he held Jimin’s gaze.

Jimin’s heart is breaking, pained with the intensity with how much he missed Yoongi.

This was worse than reliving the past- worse in the knowledge of not knowing.

Was he alive? Did he escape? Was he injured? Jimin doesn’t know- and he had no way of knowing.

He was alone.

Again.

He could feel nothing, he could do nothing.

He’s pushed out of the chair and he falls over to the floor in a heap. His mouth bursts with the tangy iron warmth of his own blood, having bit the inside of his cheek too hard. There’s raucous laughter and he feels himself being lifted off of the floor and dragged. When he’s able to concentrate, Jimin finds himself out of the dark wet room and in the hallway again. He tries to fight the grip on his collar but it proves impossible. A searing lash strikes at his feet and he loses balance, his weight pulling at his collar and effectively shutting him up.

It doesn’t last long, he’s dragged down the hallway and into a narrower darker hallway where the smell is worse. Jimin realizes with a start, that he doesn’t notice anything digital or technology based. The doors he’s dragged past are heavy stone doors, layered with wood and or some sediment. The lights are dim and sparse, just a small bulb blinking feebly. He thinks back to the old and rustic Transporters he’d been dragged into, of the crude mechanical structures and weapons. He’s shaken out of his thoughts by a series of noisy clanging and to Jimin’s intense horror, a growling sound.

There’s some shouts, more clanging and a weird buzzing sound followed by a sharp yelp.

For a moment Jimin thinks he’s going to be sent back out into Seulgaan’s ship, but instead he’s pushed into a dark and dank room that reeks of rot. Losing balance, Jimin falls to the ground in a heap, his elbow grazing against coarse and gritty floors.

His head shorn, his body numbed from pain, his skin aflame, Jimin is gasping out his breaths. His vision, though completely dark and his surroundings practically indiscernible in this lighting, blurs and his focus is off. The suit had protected him from the worse and had also functioned in a way where it was slowly righting his bones, twisted muscles, and other smaller injuries. Attempting to at least right himself and put pressure off of his bruised ribs, Jimin rolls over to his front.

A low snarl fills the air.

Freezing, Jimin concentrates with all his might on his hearing. Had he imagined that? What was that? Was it inside this room-

Another growl that’s clearly threatening rumbles out at him and Jimin slowly raises his head.

It takes a while for his eyes to get used to the incredibly dim lighting in the room but he manages to make out a hulking shape in the corner. And with that, a pair of dull white orbs, blinking at him.

Jimin feels like he’s staring straight into the eyes of a wild and dangerous beast. He completely stills himself and raises himself just a little.

They had put him here for an obvious reason. The stench of blood and rot was not accidental either.

Jimin tries to channel calm- even if he wasn’t restored, he could still use basic and common tactics in dealing with wild creatures.

The growl continues and Jimin breathes out slowly. It reeked in here, but he couldn’t allow that to overwhelm him. He couldn’t panic, he couldn’t cry out.

Every single action could trigger an attack, and Jimin is in no way or form prepared to defend himself.

He moves slowly, still crouched but his posture straightening. He didn’t want to appear threatening or dominating- he simply needed to show that he meant no harm, that he was strong, and that he was not a threat.

Is this what they did? Getting rid of their hostages by throwing them into pits with wild creatures? Was this some form of sport? Some sickening form of entertainment?
Jimin doesn’t look away from the glowing eyes as he straightens a little more, kneeling carefully. He ignores the pains of his body, ignores the burning of his skin, ignores the pains of his heart.

There’s a strange sharp buzzing sound and the dark form violently shudders before it scuttles forward.

Jimin backs away, faster than he thought he was capable but he is now standing and quickly he asserts a careful but defensive stance.

‘Stop!’ he commands.

It wasn’t enough to completely subdue the creature but it does stop. And then it weirdly contorts-as though its limbs were expanding and-

Jimin’s breath hitches in his throat.

This was no creature or wild animal.

Tall and emaciated, a living Being stands before him and takes a step closer. In the dim light, a young face appears. Pale and wide eyed, hair in shaggy matted strands fall around his face. He’s foaming in the mouth and the growling sound is coming from him. Jimin can sense anger, blood lust, and something wildly primal reeking from this young Being- but above all of that Jimin can sense fear.

His cheeks are sunken, and Jimin can see how his ribs appear to stick out, visible even through the ratty tunic not unlike what Jimin was wearing. His feet are also bare, nails either broken or entirely gone, or talon-like and filthy. There’s an animalistic wildness to this Being and Jimin cannot tell if he had any actual self-awareness or not.

Jimin concentrates and continues to look straight into his strange orb-like eyes. Jimin knows that you’re not supposed to maintain eye contact with wild creatures and beasts, but this was no wild thing. This was a living Being. And eye-contact was necessary.

To Jimin’s surprise and glimmer of hope, the Being looks away, eyes lowering though he was still growling.

‘Hey there,’ Jimin says softly, crouching down a little to show that he posed no threat, extending his hand out in a loosely held fist. ‘Shhh, it’s okay, I won’t hurt you.’

The young Being stares at his hand, the growl in his throat still present.

‘I won’t hurt you,’ Jimin repeats softly before switching to Standard, hoping his words weren’t too slurred. ‘Safe- not hurt.’

A glimmer of understanding lights up in his eyes and Jimin has hope.

‘Understand?’ he tries carefully.

The Being doesn’t move, staring at Jimin for an unnervingly long time. Then slowly, he nods once. Relief floods him and Jimin smiles. Then slowly, he lowers himself until he’s sitting down, legs crossed, posture relaxed.

The wild Being scuttles off at the movement, despite being slow and careful. He crouches, head ducking down between his knees as though fearful that Jimin would hurt him.
‘Safe,’ Jimin repeats again, ‘Safe-‘

The young Being turns his back to Jimin and despite the darkness, despite the dirt, Jimin can clearly make out a deep indent running down the spine of the young Being. Blinking a few times, Jimin concentrates harder. He wasn’t seeing things- it wasn’t a trick of light, it wasn’t a scar. It was the exact same dent down Yoongi’s back.

He’s suddenly both alarmed and excited. What did this mean?

Was he also like Yoongi? Did he also wear a uniform once? Or was he more like those eggs- they had talked about the eggs, and had been familiar with it. Was this Being the only one? Or were there more? He needed to get closer.

He ignores how pained the soles of his feet are for the moment, Jimin shuffles forward just a little. He raises a hand and places it over his own chest.

‘Jimin,’ he says, ‘I’m Jimin.’

The young Being is wary again, his posture tense as he looks around at him. But Jimin doesn’t let up; he can’t do much. His previous command, at best, would have only been able to subdue his immediate aggression and fear. But beyond than that it was all up to how he interacted, how he approached this volatile Being.

‘Do you have name?’

The young Being crouches even lower, his stance defensive, but curious. Then he slowly moves forward, slowly making a single round around Jimin. Jimin knows it’s dangerous to expose his back to a potential threat but he remains calm. He stops himself from fidgeting. He appears again and this time he’s much closer.

His eyes aren’t a light colour, Jimin notes, instead they were very reflective and oddly orb like. Almost like nightly creatures. His skin is pale but splotchy, and heavily scarred. Jimin can see lesions and serrations on his skin, many of which were still in the healing process. He winces at the obvious lack of care, of the cruel treatment this young Being has been through. When did he wake up? Was he another of Seulgaan’s eggs? Or was he entirely different? Where did he come from?

He shifts forward until he stops in front of Jimin, his stance now more curious rather than aggressive. Slowly, making his actions obvious, he lifts his hand, palm up.

It’s an intense minute, with Jimin maintaining his calm and cool, waiting patiently to see if this wild Being would attempt to attack him again. His side is numb, and he knows he’s fevered, and there was nothing more he wanted than to take a shower and sleep in his bed. But he was potentially facing his end and he had to do all he could to survive.

To his surprise, the Being lowers his head, and though his eyes are still watching Jimin, his expression changes from complete wariness to curiosity.

Jumin carefully caresses his thick and matted clumpy strands of hair. At this distance Jimin can really smell the stench of dried blood, rotted tissue, and other odors that make his eyes water. But he doesn’t stop or recoil.

His stance eases, his shoulders relaxing just a little. Jimin smiles reassuringly and continues to brush through wiry hair until his shoulders entirely ease up.

‘Name?’ Jimin tries again, gently rubbing behind his ears in a way he hopes is soothing.
Jimin wants to touch his back- to see if it really was like Yoongi’s, or perhaps some terrible form of torture inflicted upon him. But he was going to have to be very careful.

Jimin allows him to step closer and he makes gentle cooing sounds, as you would with wild or terrified animals. He looks even younger up close and Jimin’s heart breaks. So young, so afraid, so ruined.

When his hand reaches up to wrap around Jimin’s wrist, he notes that his fingers appeared stained with red- almost as though permanently tinted with the colour of blood. His touch is much more gentle than Jimin had mentally prepared himself for. He turns his hand over, sniffing at his hand and wrist before placing it over his head again.

Chuckling, Jimin continues to stroke his head.

‘Good?’

Jimin is not expecting a reply.

‘Good.’

His voice is small and gravelly, as though he hasn’t spoken actual words in a long time. This makes Jimin a bit more hopeful.

His hand shoots out again and this time he places Jimin’s hand over the top of his head again, somehow much more purposeful. Jimin wonders if he’s trying to get him to be less gentle when his finger bumps against something that doesn’t feel like clotted blood or dirt. Carefully and gently, Jimin pushes past the matted clumps of hair until he feels and then sees a strange sort of crudely designed plaque. Jimin doesn’t understand what it is, but he’s filled with a rush of anger and sorrow. This was obviously causing him great discomfort and pain, judging by the crusted layers of blood and other secretion layered over. There were bits of hair missing too, ripped out from the roots as though in irritation and Jimin wants nothing more than to give this Being a bath.

‘Does this hurt?’ he asks before adding in Standard, ‘Hurt?’

He receives a nod.

‘I’m sorry,’ Jimin whispers, removing his fingers away and hoping to at least soothe the pain by gently scratching around the swollen area. He’s met with wide eyes that no longer reflect anger or fear. But just complete and utter wonder.

‘Name? Do you have name?’ he tries again before placing his hand over his chest again, ‘Jimin.’

He blinks a few times, eyes closing for a few long seconds as his posture entirely relaxes. His mouth opens a few times, tongue moving as though to form a word he hasn’t uttered in a long while. He does this a few times, swallowing thickly again.

‘Safe,’ Jimin repeats again. ‘I…I am safe.’

Jimin gently scratches behind his ears, hoping to receive an answer.

‘J-J-‘

He’s struggling, swallowing a few times. Jimin waits patiently.

There’s a loud explosion, the vibrations of which pulses through the ground and causes ripples to form on the cracked dirty concrete. They’re thrown to their sides and Jimin lands with a pained cry, his head colliding sharply with the floor, his wounds opening again. He can feel blood, warm and wet oozing out on his fevered skin.

There’s a startling animalistic growl that rips through the air and it’s alarmingly close. Alarm bells ring in Jimin’s mind and he’s sitting up at once despite his heavy disorientation.

Just feet from him, the young Being has regressed again- his stance tense, ready to pounce it would seem, his eyes gleaming dully and his mouth frothing.

It hits Jimin.

The smell of his blood was driving him ravenous.

It made sense now. Why they put him here.

This young Being was obviously starved and tortured. Whatever was screwed onto the back of his head was probably used as a way of controlling him. His hunger and untrained unchecked instincts used against him. His nature was used against him, manipulated, and reshaped into a living recycling machine.

Rather than being scared Jimin is angry.

‘You can stop it,’ Jimin tells him, shifting backwards slowly. ‘I’m not going to hurt you, so you can’t hurt me.’

He’s shaking, clearly trying to control himself. A pained animalistic growl rips out of his throat and he lunges forward. Jimin falls back, scrambling to find any purchase on the dirty floor, to support himself and maintain eye-contact.

There’s a strange buzzing sound and Jimin is able to pinpoint its source. It was coming from the back of his head, where the flat device was embedded. Someone was controlling him, aggravating him with pain to goad him. Jimin extends his hand and he knows it’s a risk but he knows that this Being’s reaction was not created out of his own volition, but used against him.

‘Shhh,’ he smiles. He reaches deep within him, drawing what he could of his own energy, or his calm. ‘Safe. I am safe.’

The shaking worsens- he was clearly controlling himself but at a great strain to his own forced instincts. His body starts to sway, tilting around. Hands curled into fists his growls increase. He thrashes on the floor for a few seconds before he starts hitting his head against the floor.

‘No, no, don’t do that-‘ Jimin pushes himself up painfully, reaching forward to stop his actions. ‘Don’t do that-‘

‘-stop-‘

Jimin freezes, hand stilling mid-air.

‘Stop-…please.’

Pausing, Jimin hums under his breath. It used to work on everyone- he would hum a little, sing a gentle melody, create quiet tunes. It worked on everyone. It worked on Yoongi.

When his finger brushes down matted hair, he’s met with snapping teeth and a snarl. But Jimin doesn’t back down. He continues to hum, waiting for the dull glow of his eyes to abate. Dizzy and extremely weak, Jimin continues to hum, shuffling even closer. He hums an old tune, one his sister used to hum to him when they were children, trying to figure out who they were, and what they were.

‘Sometimes we don’t get to choose what we become,’ she tells him, already so mature for someone barely past 14 summers. ‘But we always get to choose who we become.’

‘This is not who you are,’ Jimin hums quietly. ‘Whoever is doing this to you is forcing you into something you are not. This is not who you are.’

He collapses, his weight though alarmingly light, sends Jimin landing back on his bottom rather painfully again but he controls his cry of pain. His breath comes out in harsh pants, trembling against Jimin’s shoulder. Wrapping an arm around his still shaking malnourished body, Jimin embraces the wild young thing. He weakens even more, body shuddering rather violently. Jimin is worried that he’s becoming sick when he realizes they were sobs. Gently and slowly, Jimin tilts his head back to get a look of the young Being’s face.

His tears leave clean tracks down his face, creating streaks in the layered grime and dirt. But his eyes are back to normal- no longer glowing in that haunting way, but now clearer than before. His eyes are a warm brown, Jimin notes, and they’re large, sparkling almost with the added tears.

‘Safe,’ Jimin whispers quietly in Standard, stroking his head gently as he smiles. ‘Safe-‘

The buzzing sound increases sharply and Jimin can actually feel the charge of electricity that shocks the poor Being in his hand. And within a fraction of a second, any sense of self-awareness, of consciousness and understanding, is replaced with primal rage and hunger. Jimin is forcefully pushed back, his head smacking on the ground.

The last thing he registers is a crushing pain on the side of his neck.
I WONDER WHO THAT IS HA

University is over BTS is having a comeback what a time to be alive my favorite song is outro-tear it instantly shot up to my top 5 bts songs i am shook i love this album to death also i never knew i'd be saying this but wow inkigayo has really good camera work now that i think about hahaha -_- shitty camerawork aside wow american media really doesn't seem to grasp or understand the concept that all music is music regardless of language, country, etc. a "boy band" doesn't need to have rabid fans as the main reason for their fame, like, have you ever considered that they're famous and beloved because you know, they make good music? because they have relatable songs and lyrics, because they're just a bunch of boys who love what they do and we just happen to love what they do? come on, people, please, this deep rooted xenophobia needs to stop, you don't have to be american to be "reasonably" famous. stop concentrating and making everything about how crazy the fans are and instead focus on why we actually love them and the answer to that is simply their music, thanks. and while i love that bts are getting a wide platform to perform and promote their music, i somehow kinda hope they don't go back anymore (unless it's for a grammy nomination nice one yoongi) because the behavior and attitude of the american media was nothing short of disgusting and had me giving them a permanent side-eye the entire time that being said they all looked amazing, what i could see of their performance was amazing, they actually looked more comfortable and relaxed this time around and the interviews were better than last year cringes violently i can't wait for them to get to korea and i can finally see the performance we all deserve also low key really liked that picture of taylor swift and bts idk why but i feel like sope+TS would make the sassiest, pettiest combination in the world lol
AND NOW THAT I AM ON BREAK
PLEASE EXPECT MORE FREQUENT UPDATES WOOOO
It’s with a strange sense of resignation that the captain tells Yoongi that their numbers were now reduced to just four of them. And it was with a strange sense of resignation that Yoongi accepts this fact.

‘I’ll be next,’ she tells him, no emotion on her face.

She wasn’t trying to be brave. She wasn’t trying to appear strong or even trying to do anything. She was simply stating facts. Facts that didn’t make sense, but facts that became their reality the moment they entered this planet’s atmosphere.

All facts were set the moment Yoongi saw the sharp glimmer of ice, bright and harsh like diamonds, striking of the edge of the planet, bordering the harsh deathly environments this strange planet harbored.

He could have turned around. He could have returned to the main ship. But he didn’t.

He could have done a lot of things.

Maybe not have drunk himself into a terrible hangover the morning before leaving Tayi.

Maybe he should have washed the dishes before leaving. Now his dishes would be moldy and that would be a pain to take care of.

Maybe he should have listened to Amic, and drunk more tea rather than coffee. Maybe he would take up on that later, make Amic proud and show him that he was indeed attempting at a somewhat healthier lifestyle.

Or maybe he should have spoken more. Especially to his family.

Like tell his sister what he was doing.

Or go back to Earth, be the brother he was supposed to be. Be the son he was supposed to be.

‘-oongi?’

She’s watching him closely, as though concerned for him. Yoongi wants to laugh. There was no place for concern here. It didn’t matter.

‘Sorry- I just, just sort of internally passed out I think,’ he replies, trying for a smile. He looks around and finds Jimin listening and nodding to the last mechanical engineer from their team. Without words, he’s explaining to Jimin the function of each device that when put together could create a powerful signal, strong enough to break through the immense clouds of magnetic static that broiled the atmosphere.

‘There’s...there’s something you should know,’ she tells him quietly.

All of his attention is focused on her and Yoongi finds the strength to sit up straight.

‘What is it?’ he asks quietly.

She looks away for a moment, watching the permanent sunrise, her normally sharp and clear eyes glazed over with a strange grey-tint. Yoongi wonders if he has it too.

‘This isn’t the first time the GLA have been here,’ she sighs out.

‘I mean yeah? We know that?’ Yoongi struggles to understand.

She shakes her head, turning around to look at Jimin instead.

‘He is important,’ she tells him quietly. ‘Not because he knew about us- he knows of us- that means someone went to him before.’

Yoongi has so many questions.

‘I heard from her that they had sent envoys here for centuries already,’ she pushes back strands of her hair, a majority of which gets caught in between her fingers and pulls away from her scalp in chunks. She doesn’t seem to notice. ‘But nothing came of it.’

‘Did something happen?’ Yoongi manages to ask.

‘I think...I think so,’ she frowns. ‘But I can’t be sure.’

‘What else did she say?’

‘She said they finally came to an agreement. And that they were headed for a negotiation of sorts.’

‘Do you think Jimin will know?’

At the mention of his name, Jimin looks over, expression expectant. Yoongi just smiles, shaking his head. Jimin smiles in return before turning his attention back to the devices.

‘Maybe- maybe not- I mean,’ she sighs. ‘I don’t know.’

That was the underlying theme to all of this.

“I don’t know”.

It permeated everything.

The ground Yoongi walked on, the air he was breathing, the sight he was seeing. He didn’t know anything.

They all somehow gain a strange sense of energy as they approach the high mountain, its shadow falling at a permanent angle to the side, where the forest was a strange dark and damp place. The soil was sponge-like and the strong odour of rotting vegetation filled the air. Yoongi tried to make Jimin wear the extra soles he had with him, worried for his feet. But Jimin had shaken his head, caressing his face gently before making Yoongi pack it away again.
Yoongi wonders what it would feel like to fall asleep every night with his cheek under Jimin’s hand.

When they tread dryer grounds and finally break free from the draining shadowed land and look up the tall mountain side, she makes a strange sound and before anyone can catch her, she keels over.

They rush to her side and when they roll her onto her back, Yoongi knows she’s already gone.

When they bury her, Jimin kneels next to the mound of leaves they were able to access to at least mimic some form of proper burial. This was probably a ritual of sorts from Jimin’s planet. Yoongi has seen him doing with every Being—well, every Being that wasn’t taken or missing.

Jemin leans over, pressing his forehead over hers, murmuring soft words. Yoongi notices that Jimin’s shoulders are shaking—was it fatigue or tears, Yoongi doesn’t know. All he wants to do is reach over and hold him close. Instead he opts to touch his shoulder, offer support and whatever strength remained in him.

There’s an odd terrible smell that permeates the air and before Yoongi can register it, Jimin freezes under his hand.

There’s a movement of colour—of the very threads of sight, bending and shifting and it bleeds red, as though Yoongi’s reality was literally bleeding. The movement is gone and so is their last team member.

‘Yoongi—!’

Winded, Yoongi doesn’t know what’s going on except that he’s on the floor, a shaking Jimin over him, trying to cover him as though to hide him. He’s hysterical, his entire body violently shaking.

It’s enough to somehow wake and energize Yoongi enough to hold him back, asking what was wrong despite knowing Jimin wouldn’t understand. So instead he tries his best to placate him. Jimin is stammering under his breath; words, sentences—he’s singing.

Yoongi listens to the broken words, the hollow tune—Yoongi listens to sound of Jimin’s heart breaking.

When Jimin finally pulls away, the eclipses in his eyes bright and shining, he whispers something.

‘What is it?’ Yoongi asks, gently brushing through his hair, hoping to calm him down.

He repeats the words again, sounded even more broken with every syllable. It sounded like an apology.

Maybe Yoongi couldn’t be the brother he was supposed to be. Maybe he couldn’t be the son he was supposed to be. But he would do anything, he would do everything, to be there for Jimin.

Yoongi shakes his head, shifting so that he was kneeling now, taking Jimin’s hands into his.

‘This is not your fault,’ Yoongi tells him quietly. ‘You’re not hurting me.’

Jemin’s attempts at stabilizing his breaths breaks, a sob ripping out of him.

‘Jemin,’ Yoongi gently tugs at their hands. ‘This is not your fault.’

Jemin slumps against him, his face glimmering with tears before he ducks his head, tears immediately dampening the fabric of Yoongi’s shirt.

‘You don’t hurt me.’

Yoongi tries not to think of a crowning ceremony he once witnessed. The Head Council Chief threw the magnificent mantle over the young King’s shoulders, and the High Priestess placed the crown on his head. There is no magnificent mantle- just an ordinary, hard-wearing blanket. There is no crown either- only the reflection of early morning sunlight highlighting a clear ring-like halo around Jimin’s head.

Yoongi can imagine him crowned and garbed in royal gear – a magnificent crown of Grisial crystals that looks like stars compressed and encased inside gems. He can see robes billowing, shifting in a non-existent wind, the silver and gold threads gleaming under the starlit heavens.

But at this moment Jimin is just Jimin. Not royalty, not the future King of his planet. No. Jimin was right now a lost Being, looking for a way to get back home. He was dressed in worn ragged clothing, no jewels on his neck, head, or hands; no robes billowing around him. He was just Jimin.

And yet Yoongi is overwhelmed by his beauty.

Yoongi would do anything and everything. But he knew, they both knew, it wouldn’t be enough.

‘Lead me, and I will follow,’ Yoongi smiles.

Jimin nods, as though understanding his words. He helps him stand, taking his gear into his arms and positioning himself in a way where Yoongi could lean his weight against him. Their hands meet and entwine.

‘Take me where you will, and I will go gladly.’

The wind picks up, the light ripples and falls in rays of gold and amber all around them.

Jimin doesn’t need a crown, doesn’t need rich robes, not when the sun cloaked him in light; not when all of Life seemed to worship him.

Yoongi wonders if Death would tremble at his beauty.
It hurts.

It’s not something that could be categorized under a physical pain.

This was more like madness. A strain in his entirety that took over not just his mind, but his body was edging close to a desperation that made him want to set fire to everything around him. A frenzy clawed under his skin and Taeh’yung seemed to recognize it, judging by how intently looks into his eyes, a knowing look on his face.

‘You will come back,’ he tells him quietly with a smile, ‘And you will see again.’

And Yoongi doesn’t know what he means by it, but he takes the space-gear helmet from the Zhak’gri and pushes it on before making his way into the pressurized chamber.

‘All clear,’ Hoseok tells him before the door slides open to reveal a misty environment before him. Yoongi jumps off, landing lightly on his feet, making no sound upon impact.

The space-gear he’s wearing is surprisingly light, a complete polar opposite to the suit he’s used to. It was light, despite offering him protection, somehow made him feel like a part of the environment around him.

There was something about the suit, something about being a part of the GI, that made you not only feel but become excluded from reality. Like he never belonged anywhere. Like he wasn’t allowed to be anywhere.

But here, in this suit, he feels like he’s part of the eroded “mountain-side”, yet completely hidden.

Was this how most agents felt?

Maybe he should ask Hoseok.

He looks up and the Užkulisai is already disappearing into the acid mist.

‘Find a way in,’ Namjoon tells him quietly. ‘Once you find Jimin, we’ll set off the distraction.’

‘Understood,’ Yoongi replies quietly as he walks over the curved edge of what appeared to be a gigantic beamer turbine. Yoongi should be able to find the exhaust funnel and enter through there.

The plan was to create a timed explosion some distance from the area, to draw out most of the Ynqaban or at least distract enough to create a cover for Yoongi and Jimin to get back.

‘This is interesting,’ Hoseok comments, ‘According to the Yisheng Directory archives this ship is still functional and is supposed to be travelling through the Pomoc Nebula, observing a stray pulsar and helping with the evacuation of the nearby inhabited planets.’

Obviously it wasn’t.

‘It’s also registered as a new ship- there’s even a live feed covering the evacuation- and-…wow, there’s the ship.’

‘It’s a replacement- a clone if you will,’ Namjoon comments. ‘The real one is here- if we take a sample, we might be able to judge how old it actually is- figure out how long it’s been here.’
According to the history of Ynqaba available, there is no record of the Yisheng’s involvement.

Hoseok sounds like he’s reading from a page. ‘I feel though, that if there was Yisheng involvement, and something this important quite literally fell into a planet, and was instantly replaced by a replica, it has to be related to the Gaia Case.’

‘I was thinking that too,’ Namjoon states rather absentmindedly before adding grimly, ‘I suspected it- this ship- or at least the one in Pomoč is under Yisheng Amme’s authority.’

‘I’m willing to bet this one might be under her name too,’ Hoseok adds. ‘From the trials and court hearings, we know for a fact that 3 of the Yishengs from the Directory were directly involved- three that we know of and were convicted of their crimes-‘

‘-out of which 2 died,’ Namjoon adds. ‘If we want the answers, we’ll need to access the ship logs- I’m not sure if it’s still there or not.’

‘I can get it.’

‘Our priority is Jimin,’ Namjoon replies at once, sounding a little surprised. ‘We get Jimin, and then Jin, and we leave-…’

There’s a sigh from the Kutsoglerin, weary and long.

‘-straying out of our path and trying to understand beyond what we’re capable of handling has lead us here- and it was my doing. It’s a miracle we’re all somehow still together- or will all be together soon. And that’s what we need right now- unity. So even though it would be helpful to retrieve the logs, in the end we will end up with more questions, more confusion.’

Yoongi is a little surprised by Namjoon’s statement. So is Hoseok, judging by the silence that follows. Yoongi briefly wonders if Sk’jin would have some sort of comment in reply to Namjoon’s statement- probably something snarky and unhelpful.

Yoongi has no regrets in leaving Sk’jin behind. Though he can see how that was not the most intelligent thing to do; nor was it the most productive.

He doesn’t really know how to describe how he felt- what he was thinking. All he felt was a rage within him. Not just at how things turned out- not just at how Sk’jin hadn’t even tried to stay back and retrieve Jimin.

It was madness, it was rage, it was frenzy. It was fear.

And most of all it was terror.

Jimin falling out of his reach, away and out of sight- it kept replaying in his mind.

His body ached to follow- to reach out, to defy all of the laws of motion and gravity and physics and time. To jump and reach for him and to just never let go-

It didn’t fade. It wouldn’t fade. He was burning and he couldn’t stop.

His body moved on its own accord- a sort of blindness took over him- and was still taking over him. His entire being was gasping for breath, for light.

‘So no- we’re sticking to our plan, to our mission. We get everybody together, and we follow our original plans.’ Namjoon concludes before adding, ‘Have you found an entrance?’
Yoongi reaches the edge of the wing which could very well have been a cliff from a distance. Acidic decay and erosion had created strange stalactites of oxidized residue like rust. It covered a vast area of the ship, covering the original metal alloy with a strange dark and oddly porous coat of the substance. Squatting down, Yoongi touches the surface and finds that like most acidic salts, was fragile and flaky. There would be no durability or dependence on the rusty growth that covered the ship.

The jump down the beamer-turbine was too deep to jump into, and too steep for him to scale down without wires or a gadget to help him. As all ships were designed to do so, the outer shell lacked any magnetic properties, making it impossible to stick on to with magnetic gloves or the like.

‘Yes. I’m calculating my entry point,’ Yoongi replies, knowing his answer came a little too late.

‘Is it a turbine?’ Namjoon asks. ‘If it follows the general design of all beamer-turbines, there should be shafts around the upper surface of the wings to access the combustion chambers—a pressure valve.’

Yoongi scans the ledge of the wing he’s on, looking over the porous texture with careful eyes. A few seconds later his eyes catch the slightest raised layer to his far right, indicating a sort of hatch of sorts. Quickly crawling over, Yoongi extracts a flat dagger, digging under the fragile but sharp layer of oxidized acid-salts until the blade scratches the original metal, leaving a shiny etching behind. He digs out the salt in flat chips until a hatch handle flap appears. Prying it upon, it reveals a handle of sorts and Yoongi yanks it open.

Everything inside is surprisingly clean. And also unsurprisingly emptied out.

Looking inside, Yoongi can tell that it’s been stripped clean of every salvageable material/device. Even down to the rungs of the side ladder. However the latches were still attached, though there were clear indications that they too had undergone a serious attempt at being removed.

‘Found a way in,’ Yoongi reports as he lowers himself, feet easily finding the small latch. It wasn’t much, but it was all Yoongi needed.

‘Be careful,’ both Hoseok and Namjoon say at the same time, in uncanny harmony that makes Taehyung giggle quietly.

Yoongi climbs all the way down carefully, his hands feel hot but a strange cold compression expands inside his chest. It still hurts, but he can’t pinpoint the pain.

‘If it’s a pressure valve, you’ll be able to pry open the valve easily enough,’ Namjoon states helpfully as Yoongi descends lower into the darkness. ‘It should take you straight into the combustion-chamber and you’ll find another latch that will take you to the maintenance chamber—it might be very small.’

His feet land on a rather flimsy surface that bends with his weight. This was probably the valve Namjoon mentioned. It’s trickier than Namjoon had theorized but it still easy enough sliding the discs off. The turbine wings are gone too, leaving behind a strangely empty space, filled with broken wires and debris all over the floor. It’s all too easy finding the latch because the door is missing and Yoongi can see straight into the chambers further in.

‘Yoongi- according to your readings, the air is breathable now.’ Namjoon informs him quietly. ‘We’ve also found a suitable location to plant the timer— we’re ready whenever you are.’

‘Understood,’ Yoongi replies, pushing open his visor.
Yisheng ships didn’t have an excessive amount of security systems. Because Yishengs themselves were their own walking security system. As a result, the entire ship has a very open and exposed layout. There were obvious changes made here and there. Rather crude and roughly placed barriers, levels divided into smaller sections meant for storage or sleeping. There’s a deep and old stench in the air- one that seemed to steep the very molecules of the air with its taint- like a disease spreading around.

Yoongi wonders back to Namjoon and Hoseok’s theory. Was this perhaps a ship previously commanded by Amme? It made more sense that Ndica was the one behind it, after all he was involved in the Gaia Case. What more could the Yishengs have infiltrated? The extent to which they had taken advantage of the blind faith the Universe had in them had certainly fueled their mission to exploit and control the Free-Universe. What else had they done? How many millions of lives had they destroyed in their attempt to “save” the Universe?

When Amme had told him that they would be under complete surveillance inside the Užkulisai, it hadn’t surprised him. Of course not- it was expected almost.

But when Amme had told him he would find the answers to his questions with this mission, he hadn’t expected the answer to come in the form of Jimin.

It was apparent to Yoongi now, that Jimin was what Amme had been referring to. The possibility of the Yisheng not knowing about Jimin was practically 0. It also meant she knew more than she ever told Yoongi. That she knew more about Yoongi, about his kind- about the “eggs”. About his past.

It also meant that Zhoumi knew more.

Had it all been an act? Or had it all been some coincidence? Logically speaking, Yoongi knew that it couldn’t be coincidence- there was no such thing. Not in this Universe. It had all been formulated, all been planned.

Zhoumi knew of Yoongi- of the real Yoongi, who was born and raised on Earth, and then who mysteriously vanished in a planet later abandoned. When he gave him his name, he behaved as though it has been new to him- as though it hadn’t been preplanned.

Would his past help him understand? Would his past make him realize? Make him remember? The data Namjoon had gathered for him was still stored inside his cabin, waiting for him to go through the files.

Amme had said he would find his answers in this mission.

But Yoongi is left with more questions.

And maybe Jimin was the key to his answers.

But it brought another question to Yoongi’s mind; why did Amme want Yoongi to find the answers?

Especially now, with the way things were transpiring- where every single day uncovered some terrible dark secret the GLA, the Venture Unit, and the GIU had instigated or organized.

Why was Yoongi sent on this mission?

Yoongi senses their presence before he even sees or hears them. He ducks back into the narrow opening, keeping incredibly still. A small group of Beings walk past, talking low amongst themselves. Yoongi notices that their younglings were with them too.

He waits until they’re out of earshot before stepping out.

The smell is stronger here but Yoongi collapses his helmet before sliding it into his pocket. He walks past strung up tents, indications of being lived-in evident the further Yoongi steps into this ship. There’s a continuous gyrating sound that fills the air in a low roar- Yoongi isn’t sure but it sounds a lot like rushing water.

There aren’t a lot of Beings around in this area, but Yoongi takes the precaution of picking up a wide and hooded garment slung on a line to the side. Covering his conspicuous space-gear, Yoongi ducks inside a tent before taking out his screen. It was most likely that any area of imprisonment was somewhere downstairs. This was a large ship, judging by what Yoongi could deduce when they had approached the mountainous ship, going down would take a long and tedious time. This would have been easy of course, if he had access the layout of the ship, and had surveillance aid. In a ship where not a single digital port was functioning and everything was conducted through rather archaic technology, they were technically disadvantaged.

But Namjoon was also right in his decision. Because none of that posed a problem for Yoongi.

The tracker indicating Jimin’s position places him directly below where Yoongi was sitting. He was going to have to go through each level to find him.

Making sure the area was clear, Yoongi leaves the tent and heads for the wide door ahead. The walls were covered in some form of mural, covering the original pale metal. There were strange orbs that hung about, emitting a weak fluorescent light around the area. They didn’t have the technology to run this ship, but they made do.

The closer he gets to the opening, the louder the gyrating sound gets and the warmer it feels. The stench is somewhat reduced as well. Not knowing what to expect, Yoongi is distracted by the cavernous opening he walks out into.

The ship had indeed been hollowed out and scavenged- to the point where the central foundation of the ship had been entirely removed, and the internal structure had fallen apart. However, a network of wire, smelt metal columns, and reinforced rock slabs held the gigantic structure up. Some areas were entirely caved in, but after decades, had life grow over it in the form of slate floors screwed into the broken floors and ceilings, ungainly walk-boards and pathways strung up together with wire-meshes crisscrossed the area. And amidst all of this barely patched together mess, was a literal city of Beings.

The loud gyrating sound as well as horrendous fumes comes from what appeared to be a waterfall of sludge, blackened and Yoongi is quite sure, toxic that seems to the main source of a somewhat crudely yet efficiently designed hydraulic system that fuelled a series of small lifts, pulleys, and a whole network of moving buckets.

Yoongi quickly studies the massive space, looking for a way down. He finds a rickety stair case over the edge and heads for it. He just simply walks out into the clearing, bustling with locals, laughter ringing about in some place, younglings running around. This was obviously the living quarters or at least the zone for it. All the Beings gathered here appeared to be families- the old, or the very young. No one pays Yoongi any heed and he passes through easily.

‘How’s it going?’ Hoseok asks, all still waiting for Yoongi’s report.

‘This will take time,’ he replies.
There’s a strange familiarity with the ship. The layout, the structure; decades of filth and lack of maintenance had reduced it to nothing more than just the skeleton. But Yoongi catches sight of what appeared to be the metal frame-work for a Medical Bed, even what looked like a hollowed out Navigation Table being used as a sort of furnace cage, where bright fires were lit as a primary source of light.

‘Is it heavily occupied?’

‘Yes- families.’

It’s silent over the Comm and Yoongi reaches the stairs.

‘I think it’s fair to say that the families and sick would be living at the top most areas,’ Namjoon says quietly. ‘Any other form of “business” would be conducted all the way down, where it would easy to access and well…suppress.’

‘I’m gonna go plant the timer,’ Hoseok announces, ‘Do you think I should cover it with an extra WeatherBeat or something- I don’t want the acidity to eat at the device and blow it up too soon or something.’

‘This is a big ship,’ Yoongi comments. ‘Should I get captured and allow them to take me to prison?’

‘What the fuck- no!’ Namjoon stammers out quickly. ‘You shouldn’t be seen! That’s why you’re there!’

‘How many levels are there? Or how many can you actually even see?’ Hoseok asks.

‘A lot,’ Yoongi replies because he honesty can’t tell how many levels there are from where he was standing. There was a mist that hung in the air, the crisscrossing beams and wires making it difficult to actually guess how large the place was.

Raucous laughter rings through the air and Yoongi catches sight of a bunch of young Beings-geared and heavily garmented, they were headed towards the other direction. They were clad in a way similar to the Beings that had entered the Užkulisai after they had crashed. They carried crude spears and spikes, clearly ready for some sort of outing.

‘I found potential source of information.’ Yoongi reports.

Based on his calculation, he could take down 3 of the 5 within a second, the other one a second later, and the final one he would leave for questioning.

‘Potential-’

‘Yoongi no,’ Hoseok says firmly. ‘Do not engage.’

‘…I found a possible guide,’ Yoongi acquiesces, keeping his head down as he weaves through the tents and randomly placed living space objects strewn haphazardly. ‘They might lead me down.’

He thinks he hears Namjoon sighing in relief before he adds, ‘Stay low and- oh.’

‘Fuck-‘

The line cuts off and Yoongi momentarily worries. But the line comes back on and Taeh’yung excited voice fills the line.
Woah! Claws!

…what?

It’s the first time Hoseok has heard Yoongi sounding genuinely confused.

‘Uh…we have an…interesting situation here,’ Hoseok doesn’t know exactly how to feel at the sight they were now beholding.

They had landed some ways away from the “mountain”, finding a cleared area in an actual mountain a little higher than the crashed ship. Hoseok wonders if the slaver-ship too would one day meet a similar fate as the Yisheng ship.

They were now just waiting for Yoongi to find Jimin- a task that would take a questionable amount of time, seeing as the ship was apparently larger on the inside and with no clear path to take them to Jimin’s exact location, there was no telling how long it would take Yoongi to get to him. Hoseok was already suited up and geared, ready to take the small but powerful explosive and plant it in the mountain side. It could very well cause some form of avalanche, and despite being keen on creating a chaotic diversion, Hoseok had no intention of destroying any form of livelihood or living area. Which was why they chose this rather remote mountain side.

So Hoseok was honestly just taking his time, trying to catch a small break when until quite accidentally, a rather sizeable (though small in comparison to the Užkulisai) honest to goodness, fully functional and very surprised cybortronic and its pilot stumbles across them over the blackened rock surface.

It’s honestly the shock of everything that stops either party from reacting.

The Ynqaba pilot inside is slack-jawed, eyes nearly bulging out of his socket as he stares at them. Hoseok in turn can only gawk back because really? Cybortronics?

Cybortronics were considered a relic of the past- they appeared impressive and threatening but were generally speaking useless in actual defense and offense, unless you were fighting against another cybortronic. And while some had great potential, like every other machine designed and invented, it really depends on the Being piloting the cybertronic. And while Hoseok doesn’t really want to judge a planet by its history, or lack thereof, he honestly doesn’t believe that there would be any decent pilots on these things.

And then simultaneously they both react at the same time.

The pilot fires at them immediately, a loud and fire-based missile that is so weak it makes Hoseok feel sorry for the pilot.

‘We can’t fire or we’ll draw attention to ourselves!’ Namjoon hisses just as Taeh’yung cheers, watching the cybertronic with utmost fascination.

When the smoke clears, the cybertronic and its pilot have painstakingly turned around and were trying to escape.

Hoseok and Namjoon share a look and tossing the explosive at Taeh’yung, Hoseok shoots off immediately.

‘Please bring me back the claw!’ Taeh’yung calls out after him.

Cybertronics were slow. And Hoseok doesn’t like to boast but he’s fast. His helmet collapses and forms over his head just as he shoots out, already crossing the length of the Užkulisai in a matter of seconds.

The soil beneath his feet is very dry and despite looking compact, rather sandy. It does nothing to help with support or traction but Hoseok isn’t a trained agent for nothing. He quickly sprints across, turning sharply without slowing down. The mountainside sloped downwards and it’s more than enough momentum for him to catch up with the teetering cybertronic before him.

There’s a terrified scream of sorts and out of the cockpit of the cybertronic leaps out a young Ynqaban, mask worn hastily over his face. He makes a mad dash for it but Hoseok has momentum as well as gravity working for him and he quite literally dives down the slope, tackling the Ynqaban down.

‘Did you get him?’ Namjoon asks tersely.

‘Yea.’ Hoseok pants out, regaining his balance quickly by pushing his knee down onto the pilot’s back.

‘Get who?’ Yoongi asks, obviously still completely out of loop.

‘Don’t forget my claws!’ Taeh’yung adds.

‘Claws?’ Yoongi sounds incredibly lost.

‘We’ll tell you in a moment-‘ Namjoon hastily adds, ‘Hoseok?’

‘Yeah-‘ grunting a little, Hoseok is about to loosen his hold but the Ynqaban was clearly a little stronger and less winded than Hoseok had initially thought and he pushes off rather mightily, throwing Hoseok off balance for just a second.

But Hoseok regains his balance and lunges for the Ynqaban at once.

Fights were not pretty by any means. It wasn’t well choreographed, it didn’t make sense. It was just a desperate rush of sense, adrenaline, fear, and sometimes hysteria. And while Hoseok is very well versed in hand-to-hand combat, his opponent clearly isn’t.

He’s screaming quite loudly and honestly if Hoseok wasn’t trying to take him down, he’d be concerned.

‘What’s-‘

‘Not now!’ Hoseok lunges and blocks a wild punch aimed at his…where was he even aiming? It’s a wild 10 seconds of the Ynqaba screaming his head off, limbs flailing, before he trips and falls backwards, literally knocking himself out.

‘…is everything okay now?’

Hoseok doesn’t even know why he’s breathless. He didn’t even really do anything.

‘Yeah- yeah it’s all good,’ Hoseok pants out, about to reach down and drag this Ynqaban back when a whole half-dozen Ynqaban pilots and cybortronics round up the corner.

In an unwelcome moment of déjà vu, they all just gawk at each other.

They stare in utter disbelief at Hoseok, then down at their unconscious fellowman, and then back at Hoseok.

‘I…might need back up,’ Hoseok manages to get out before he turns heel and sprints up the slope.

‘What-?!’

Loud crunching sounds, heavy robotic limbs, loud hollow shots, and screams rise up behind him. If Hoseok was running fast before, he’s practically flying now. Maintaining a zigzag motion, Hoseok dodges what appeared to be metallic-shots being fired at him.

Ynqaba was definitely lacking in technology. But whatever they lacked in technology, they made up for in gusto.

Nearly slipping on the sandy soil as he turns the corner, Hoseok rights himself and is only very briefly worried about the fact that Taeh’yung was skipping towards him, no helmet on his head, hands glowing green, smiling a bit too widely.

Hoseok is quick, but not quick enough to dodge whatever was fired at him.

It catches him just mid-thigh and honestly it’s just a graze and Hoseok doesn’t think it’s even broken skin, let alone the space-gear he’s wearing. But that doesn’t seem to register in Taeh’yung. Because the Zhak’gri who was just beaming and excitedly saying, ‘More claws!’ his expression turns incredibly blank.

‘Taeh’yung-!’

Hoseok turns just in time to see a quick but bright ripple of green erupt out of Taeh’yung, the sandy soil around them rising up to float in an eerily still manner and even more alarmingly, the 3 cybortronics, and 6 Ynqabans were also afloat. There was a strange dissonance that rippled in a sphere that gleamed bright green. Hastily, Hoseok jogs back to the Zhak’gri, facing him in alarm to find a strangely twisted smile in place of his usual wide cheery grin.

And to Hoseok’s immense horror and Namjoon’s choking gasp over the Comm, the Ynqabans seem to distort within the sphere, followed by a strange lack of sound despite the obvious pain they ‘Hey, Taeh’yung? Tae?’ Hoseok steps in front of the tall Zhak’gri, carefully reaching out to grip at his raised wrists. ‘Hey- I’m fine, it’s all good right-’

Taeh’yung blinks once, twice. And again, for a brief frightening moment, Hoseok doesn’t recognize the Being before him. But it’s gone in a second and the bright neon in Taeh’yung’s eyes vanish and at the same time loud crashing sounds fill the air, followed by groans of pain, and to Hoseok’s immense distaste, violent retching.

‘Hobi! You’re okay?!’ Taeh’yung cries out, reaching forward to grasp Hoseok by his face, looking over him with child-like worry in his eyes.

‘Yes Tae,’ Hoseok attempts to put some distance but it’s futile so he just allows the Zhak’gri to inspect his face and head though he’d been shot at his legs. ‘I’m fine- really I am-’

Taeh’yung’s face actually wobbles, tears forming in his eyes as he hugs him tight.

‘I- okay-…’ Hoseok looks around wildly for…well, for anything really. Namjoon is at the windows, near the Mast, face nearly pressed up on display, expression completely dumbfounded.

Hoseok really doesn’t know what to make of this- but if his training in correct emergency responses ever taught him something, it was to always make sure that vulnerable or unstable Beings were very quickly made calm.

‘Hey buggy,’ he lowers his voice, making sure to sound gentle, ‘I’m okay- see? No scratch, no bleeding, nothing.’

‘Okay,’ Taeh’yung says thickly, his arms still incredibly tight around Hoseok, before he ask ,’What’s buggy?’

‘You didn’t know? In the Ngfy’widan culture, we call our children bugs. So you’re a buggy to me,’ Hoseok gently pats the Zhak’gri’s head.

‘T-that’s really cool,’ Taeh’yung sniffs, sounding better as he pulls away, eyes wide and a little teary. ‘I didn’t know you laid eggs!’

Hoseok supposes he should have foreseen that misinterpretation. They did call their children “bug”- a sort of affectionate but at the same time reprimanding term. It seemed to fit Taeh’yung and it just left Hoseok’s mouth without warning. Either way, the Zhak’gri seems to like it and Taeh’yung pulls away, smiling his characteristic grin as he says, ‘I’m your bug!’.

Hoseok can see Namjoon facepalming by the window. His shoulders are shaking, and Hoseok isn’t sure if it’s from laughing or sobbing.

‘So...’ Yoongi sounds unsure. ‘…did you get the claws?’
Yoongi is not sure that the explanation they gave him about what just happened was entirely true seeing as it all sounded a little too ludicrous even by their standards.

‘Well, we have one- we’ll get him to talk,’ Namjoon had grunted, sounding as though he was lifting something heavy. ‘Just a sec.’

It was well over a “sec” and Yoongi still doesn’t know if Taeh’yung got the claws he’d been fawning over. He’s also still very much unnoticed, trailing after the loud and tall group of Ynqabans nearly half an hour after Namjoon’s last call.

And as far as he’s noticed, the young Beings he was trailing were the only physically able, full-bodied Ynqabans around. He’s gone down at least 20 different levels, and each level housed only the elderly, children, or the sick.

‘Yoongi, are you there?’

‘Yes.’

‘All right- all prisoners, or well, parcels,’ Namjoon says distastefully, ‘Are kept at the basement. The easiest way to access the basement is to head towards the central-store Bridge, where there is a still functioning lift of sorts that’s the only way in or out the basement. It's not too deep- just 3 levels. And uh…’

Yoongi waits, trying not to scratch at the building ache inside his chest. Instead he tugs the hood over his face so that it covered a majority of his features instead. He’d found more suitable garments to disguise himself in case anyone was to take a closer look. He was even carrying a random shaft, crafted to form a spear of sorts.

‘-right so-’ there’s some more grunting and a terrified squeal ,’-the central-store Bridge is also the most heavily occupied and heavily guarded area. So keep an eye out there.’

‘Understood,’ Yoongi replies. After spending nearly 45 minutes with the Ynqabans, he’s figured out the structure they had created in terms of crossing over to different levels. Every 10 levels or so, there would be a lift of sorts, which they had to wait for as the main hydraulic pump cogs worked to lift the weights balancing the speed and movement of the rickety metal boxes. Yoongi fit right in, shuffling in behind them casually and easily. Each lift was located at a random place, often times rather hidden behind the towering masses of tents, make-shift houses, and forgotten cargo boxes stacked in heaps.

‘How did these even get here,’ Namjoon mumbles, suspicious metallic sounds can be heard over the Comm.

‘It’s not unheard of in certain areas- especially mining zones,’ Hoseok replies.

‘But they’ve been replaced with cyborgs for over 3 centuries now,’ Namjoon explains. ‘And these aren’t mining cybortronics- they’re designed for mechanical repair and maintenance.’

‘No one’s winning anything in this,’ Hoseok exhales out noisily. ‘I can’t really refer to any existing cybortronics that I know- so I don’t know if these are GLA make or not.’

‘The thing about cybortronics, is that they were employed by the GIU for a lot of their construction work, especially when it came to their ships,’ Namjoon says quietly. ‘The last mass usage and production of cybortronics was for the workforce unit to build the GIU motherships.’

‘If we can find the original hardware still intact in them- we can find out where and when they were produced,’ Hoseok adds. ‘Maybe figure out a timeline of their creation.’

That made sense- the way the Yisheng ship had been taken apart was not done through small hand-held hardware but rather via larger operation-machines.

Namjoon hums a response, clearly lost in thought. ‘We have clear indications of the involvement of the Yishengs, the GLA, ties with the Gaia Case, and now with the GIU-’

‘And now I’m guessing the Alliance is also involved- I mean, where else would they possibly deliver the “parcels” to? Pirates can only do so much – you need GLA involvement or the Venture Unit to really kick-start any form of trade-off.’

‘Not to mention the Omhlophe,’ Namjoon sighs out. ‘According to Khonen they were expecting more “eggs” from here. Or at least, some of the sister-planets.’

The lift grinds to a stop, only for it to slide down a bit more, causing a few to yelp. One of them even grabs onto Yoongi for support but doesn’t pay him any mind, even throwing back some form of thanks that Yoongi, after 4 seconds of intent calculation, purposefully waves off in the most casual manner he can. It’s unnoticed.

When he steps out after them, keeping in step with the sudden harsh shadow that’s thrown over them from a bright light source overhead, Yoongi knows that they’ve reach the bottom. Or at least the main base, away from the living quarters, and much closer to the ground. He easily steps away from the group, heading for one of the large piles of what looked a lot like the smaller cargo-freights from Seulgaan’s slaver-ship. Towards the front of the large chamber which Yoongi recognizes was once a large docking bay, bright numbers indicating landing pads still visible through the dirt and erosion on the ceiling and walls, were massive gateways. And though far, Yoongi can make out the terrain outside- a dull, windswept terrain over which glimpses of thundering clouds were fast approaching past the acidic mist.

He takes a moment to survey the new area. It’s smaller than the levels above, but much taller and with a vast number of cybortronics. Another thing Yoongi notices is how the stench is worse down here. The rank waterfall was nowhere to be seen, and Yoongi wonders if the smell had anything to do with the waterfall in the first place. Maybe it was the very air that smelt of it.

‘I think I’m close,’ Yoongi reports.

‘I’ve finished planting the explosive- we’re ready to come get you and Jimin,’ Hoseok replies back before adding, ‘Also- I don’t know how this will effect anything, but it looks like it’s gonna storm really hard.’

‘What do we do about them?’

It’s silent for a moment before Taeh’yung chimes in, ‘Why don’t we put them inside the machine and lock them in? I think they’re strong enough?’

‘Yeah- let’s do that.’

‘You mean I should do that,’ Hoseok huffs while Namjoon mumbles an apology.

Yoongi quickly climbs the freights and is able to see a clearer view of the large bay. They were obviously very busy right now, what with a massive slaver-ship rich with resources and materials for the taking. No wonder the Ynqabans Yoongi had been following were practically abuzz, distracted to the point of not noticing Yoongi’s very solid presence behind them.
Cybortronics of all size were marching around, carrying heavy and large torn off bits and shrapnel from the slaver-ship. It’s odd seeing small remains of such a mighty and evil vessel as Seulgaan’s slaver-ship being carried around, being received with cheer and roars of approval. It should resonate some form of karmic justice, but Yoongi feels nothing as he watches on.

It was just another cycle- one form of evil and misery diminished when Seulgaan’s ship crashed. Then it was picked apart and put together to create another form of evil and misery- but now, just in another shape, from another side of the spectrum. And it would continue on and on.

‘If you’re close to one of the entrances, you should be able to find the central-Bridge quickly- they all connect to it. It’s where “The Collectors” stay.’ Namjoon informs him. ‘They’re kind of the bosses- I have a feeling they’re the ones who sell off the parcels to the pirates. Or at least handle that part of the transaction.’

‘Should I get rid of them.’

‘No Yoongi,’ Namjoon sighs. ‘Please stay low and do not engage unless strictly necessary.’

The pain is worse than before and Yoongi itches to break free of it. The pain was acting like a strange energy- spurring him on faster. It was making him sloppy. And Yoongi knew this. But he couldn’t really control it.

Increasing his speed, Yoongi ducks even lower and sprints over the emptied and hollowed OrTanks strewn around, as though abandoned. He only slows down when he reaches the massive corridors, pacing himself alongside an approaching cybortronic before shadowing its massive movements. He jumps from shadow to shadow easily, all in open sight, until he easily mingles with a crowd of Ynqabans entering the central corridor he had spied earlier. Easily grabbing hold of a freighter-case from someone else and ducking around them, Yoongi passes the gateway security who were taking account of the items being brought in.

Yoongi passes through the long dark corridor and into a wide chamber inside with even more branches leading away randomly. Small cybortronics were walking about, stacking the cargo-freights to one side as another massive group of Ynqabans pried them open, pulling out the items inside and separating them. This was like the factory zone, where the items were separated into different groups. And quickly enough, Yoongi spots the zone where other living Beings other than the Ynqabans were being pushed into. Beings that Yoongi recognizes as the slaves he’d seen in Seulgaan’s previous ship back in Grezma, as well as a few of his guards. Yoongi briefly wonders if Seulgaan survived or not.

Yoongi swiftly dumps his case into a passing Ynqaban’s arms and makes his way over to huddles of Beings, all terrified and whimpering as a bunch of Ynqabans kept an all too close watch over them.

With more speed than was safe or advised, Yoongi strides through, urged on by whatever strained energy was buzzing under his skin. Yoongi realizes he’s sweating and that his breath was coming out faster as well. He didn’t feel unwell. This was nothing like how it had been when he’d collapsed when they had landed in the Nightmare planet. Or how it was when he was injured.

Yoongi briefly wonders if he should ask Namjoon to check his health tab. But he also knew that Namjoon was always keeping an eye out on all of their health- making sure they were all healthy and functional. If anything was amiss, then he would inform them of it. Besides, Yoongi doesn’t know how to ask. None of the books he has read could formulate his question because he didn’t understand what needed answering. The closest book that comes to mind for his situation was for the manual guide he’d read for GLA employees on how to apply for a sick-leave.
Yoongi doesn’t think that would apply in this situation.

He’s not sure, because he’s walking too fast, but he thinks he sees the way the prisoners catch sight of him. Their eyes widen, shocked at his presence no doubt. But he quickly walks past and quickly finds a narrow alcove behind some broken pipes and takes a few purposeful breaths.

He raises his hands up to chest level and to his utter bewilderment, finds that they’re shaking.

‘My hands are shaking.’

He finds that his voice is stable as usual, no emotion betraying him.

‘What? Are you okay?’

‘I don’t know.’ Yoongi replies. ‘I feel strange.’

‘...we never got to check you after the crash- what if you have an injury-‘

‘No it’s not that,’ Yoongi whispers, flexing his fingers. ‘I’ll be fine.’

‘-but Yoongi-‘

Yoongi steps out of the alcove and makes his way forward, balling his hands into tight fists.

The air was getting heavier down here, it started smelling a bit more like fire, a bit more like something burning- or maybe instead something that was being seared. It’s a coy oily smell and gets heavier as Yoongi steps deeper into the hallway before it opens into a chamber that looks like a standard Bridge of sorts, raised daises for Navigation Tables and meeting tables set about in a half-moon pattern, encircling a lowered pit that ended with 3 doorways. Whatever systems that were housed in this Bridge were completely removed, judging by the hollowed walls, gaping wire-holes, drained beamer cells that were now being used to store what appeared to be a sort of pickle in the corner. Only the shape and outline of the mechanical engineering that outlined and powered this Bridge remained.

‘I’m here. I’m at the central-Bridge,’ Yoongi reports. ‘I don’t think we’ll be able to find any access to ship’s archives. Everything has been scavenged.’

‘All right,’ Namjoon sounds uncertain. ‘You’re close. Just hang on- we’ll get you out the moment you get Jimin.’

He sounded nervous- concerned, as though worried that Yoongi might collapse. But it wasn’t like that. Yoongi studies the Ynqabans gathered in the chamber. It wasn’t as crowded as it was outside, but there was a fair number of them gathered in here, all bustling around, seemingly all making reports and calculating things over large sheets of hammered metal and graphite.

At the center of the chamber, where a hollowed out Navigation Table stood, were gathered a group of Ynqabans who clearly felt very important and powerful. They were dressed better, looked better off, and weren’t ashen in colour. In fact their skin appeared quite healthy, and by the planet’s standard, rather plump as well.

They were clearly the Collectors Namjoon had mentioned. They’re talking amongst themselves- more like 3 were engaged in a loud conversation, some dramatic retelling of some story that most seemed to have heard already, judging by their lack of facial expression.

There’s some commotion as someone brings in a few of the prisoners from outside, pushing them in roughly. One of the Collectors just waves a hand without much regard, as though the slaves that had survived Seulgaan’s ship were hardly worth looking over. They’re pushed past where Yoongi was standing and he follows them silently, matching their steps easily.

There’s a momentary pause, when one of the slaves trips over their feet, sending them and another sprawling to the ground. Yoongi pauses, stepping aside a little, instinctually angling himself away from sight and shifting to the side. The other prisoners are being shoved into the middle doorway and Yoongi redirects himself.

‘All set here Yoongi- just give us the word,’ Hoseok tells him quietly as Yoongi casually dodges an incoming irritated Ynqaban guard of sorts, yelling loudly in a mix of Standard and their own language.

‘I’m almost there-’

This was a filthy place. And not just because of the place. Not just because of what transpired here.

No, there was a deep seeded darkness, a rot that took over everything.

And in that rot, no light could penetrate- no promise of relief could be hoped for. Not for the prisoners with their bleak and unknown fate, nor for the inhabitants of this planet, destined to die in the toxicity of their own making.

And yet in that rotting darkness, a brilliance of light, the full spectrum of colour, gleams faintly at Yoongi like starlight- clean, distant, and small.

One of the Collectors, who isn’t engaged in the loud conversation, but just instead nodding along to what was being discussed distractedly while keeping an eye on the scuffle with the slaves, was holding onto something soft, something small- something fine.

‘Yoongi?’

Yoongi would recognize it anywhere. The colour, the brilliance- the uniqueness behind every single strand.

‘-ey are you all right-‘

Pain erupts out of him like a corporeal force and the burning rage that has burnt inside his chest ever since he woke up inside the crashed Užkulisai flares out of him like a roaring furnace. It made sense now- the pain, the fiery burn- it all made sense.

The sound of his thundering heart drowns every other sound- in fact it’s so loud that it was probably why the Collectors and the other Ynqaban all seem to jump, their heads whipping around to stare at Yoongi in escalating alarm and panic.

Or maybe it was the fact that Yoongi had activated the Heliords he had carried with him, the bright blue blades humming and shining neon bright, casting a sharp shadow to fall over him.

‘-oongi what’s going on-?!’

The Collector drops it. Fine locks of golden silver, of sun and starlight, falls slowly out of the Collector’s gnarled fingers in his surprise.

Jimin’s hair.
Overwhelmed with rage and pain, Yoongi charges through in a storm of neon blue.

Sk’jin comes to find that his would-be captors consisted of a group of broken families.

Bhān and his daughter Camat, A’āpyu and her brother Dilag who was an especially skilled pilot and driver, and another pair of brothers, Rejši and Lajši. They all appeared older than Sk’jin, though actually meeting anyone who could potentially be older than Sk’jin was probably very unlikely.

Upon entering their “residence”, a natural network of caves that branched not too deep into a tall mountainside, where a string of small orb-like objects illuminated the place, Sk’jin can finally study the odd group.

Masks off and their bulky protective clothing shed, they appeared malnourished and weak. Stick-like arms and disproportionately widened bellies that was very telling of some form of intestinal infection (Sk’jin internally shudders), and upon closer and clearer inspection, a strange stain over their skin that wasn’t natural yet seemed to seep into their very pores. But they moved and worked with strength and energy. They clearly made do with what they had, and lived as best as they could under their circumstances.

The cave is outfitted with shrapnel and devices that were all obviously scavenged and assimilated through years of collecting. Sleeping areas were lifted higher, further into the cave. The storage area, a caged area that obviously stored the most important items was right next to the sleeping area. Everywhere else was basically like a gigantic outdated and cluttered mechanics bay.

Sk’jin is a little fascinated with their lighting system. He could see no wires, no batteries, no cells.

Sk’jin is surprised with the medical supplies, they were a little out of date, but were powerful and effective. He hasn’t seen that particular model of TissuePlast but then again, he can’t exactly identify the timeline from which it might have come from seeing as he was out of action for quite some time.

Camat, still heavily cloaked and dressed is sitting opposite him, carefully rolling out the TissuePlast into equal lengths. Sk’jin is…for lack of a better word, disrobed.
He sighs at the sight of his ruined robes, folded in a heap of blood splatter, dust, and who knows what else. They’re looking for clothes for him to wear, mumbling as they check their sizes. The air was very strange. It had an acidic quality that Sk’jin finds vaguely alarming, justified by how his robes were faring, practically turning to bits and fragments with his movements. To stop him from ending up stark naked, they sat him down and told him to stay put. Sk’jin is a little surprised by the somewhat conservative consideration for his nudity.

The weather is odd- it’s damp, but not humid. It’s not exactly cold either and for some reason there’s a lack of air. It was windy, but it felt stuffy at the same time. It makes Sk’jin’s skin work up a sort of half-sweat, overall making him feel damp and it was a disgusting feeling. The first thing Sk’jin is going to do when he returns to the Užkulisai is to shower. Actually no. He’s first going to punch Yoongi, and then shower.

‘It’s very pretty,’ Camat tells him quietly as she places the TissuePlast over his very bruised and battered sides.

Sk’jin absentmindedly tongues at his weirdly empty gum sockets before asking, ‘What is?’

She points with her chin towards his robes. Thunder momentarily deafens Sk’jin, his ears filled with a high-pitched ping that fades away after a full minute. The others don’t seem effected but Sk’jin guesses that’s what happens with conditioning.

‘I’m sorry they’re ruined.’ She adds, looking at the fabric again.

Sk’jin sighs and shrugs, wincing a little at the pain.

‘It’s fine- I have more. Or I can buy more. Or better, ask my Captain to buy me more. He owes me.’

‘Is that a common practice for payment? Buying robes?’ she asks curiously, waiting for the TissuePlast to align to his wounds, the bioengineered fabric adjusting to Sk’jin’s injuries and changing its chemical balance to support and neutralize his inflamed skin.

‘Uh- I mean, it’s not a custom,’ Sk’jin grins, ‘It’s emotional blackmail.’

She looks confused and doesn’t ask anymore questions.

‘You’re not from Ynqaba are you?’ he asks instead.

She glances up at him, a sharp look in her eyes.

‘No,’ she replies. ‘But I’ve never been anywhere else.’

Sk’jin cannot rightly place her species, but feels as though he’s seen her kind before.

‘All right- everything is set. I can’t do anything about your teeth though,’ she tells him as she gets up.

‘Camat, do you have any bottoms he can wear?’ Bhān asks, holding up a somewhat not too badly stained and sort of clean tunic for Sk’jin along with a long dark hooded cloak.

‘Yeah okay,’ she nods, getting up and jogging over to another side of the cave.

‘This is the best we have- but it will last longer than that,’ he nods at Sk’jin’s robes.

‘Excuse me for trying to look aesthetically pleasing,’ Sk’jin grumbles, accepting the tunic that though didn’t look at all like leather, felt a lot like it. Sk’jin decides he’s neither in the place or situation to wonder about the hygiene of the clothing and slips it over his head.

‘Hey, you almost look like one of us!’ Lajiši calls from his corner of the cave where he was sorting out the food they had raided from the Kitchens in the Užkulisai. Obviously the food is foreign to them, because Lajiši and his brother were attempting to understand how to consume one of the many packets of tea, their expressions bewildered.

‘You- you boil that with water- it’s a drink.’ Sk’jin tells them. ‘And probably poisoned.’

They gawk at him.

‘Why is your food poisoned.’

‘One of the crew members, you’ll love him, it’s kinda his hobby,’ Sk’jin explains, standing gingerly without help because obviously Bhān doesn’t care for him.

Expressions of doubt and confusion takes over and Sk’jin doesn’t blame them. Bhān is clearly not amused, judging by the gruff way he clears his throat.

Stretching a little, Sk’jin tests his injuries.

The Khol’isa were built of strong stuff, mildly put, and in all honesty, Sk’jin’s been through worse. What does irritate him is the empty feeling in his mouth. Now he was going to have to get fake teeth, all thanks to a scrawny puny Human. His headache is building again, and Sk’jin knows that none of the outdated pain-relief medication they had in here would help. He just needed sunlight, modern and very potent medication, and to annoy Namjoon for satisfaction.

Thunder erupts around them like a fucking bomb, shaking the cave a little and Sk’jin winces a little, his ears suffering. Flexing his weirdly damp bare legs, Sk’jin looks around for Camat who should be coming back with those trousers for him. He really doesn’t want to walk about without any trousers. He has a bit of a complex regarding his legs, not that he’d ever own up to it. Instead Camat has her back turned to them, also changing out into something else. And generally speaking Sk’jin is really not interested in any naked Being, regardless of gender, sex, or species. So seeing naked Beings really means nothing to him, though sometimes he’s offended because there were some things he really didn’t need to see. It’s in these moments where he wishes deleting selective memory was an actual thing that was possible. But regardless of how he felt, he understood and respected that most Beings did not appreciate being stared at while naked, regardless of how he felt about it. So he’s about to look away when something draws his attention rather abruptly.

For a second Sk’jin thinks it’s a trick of light but it’s not.

Down her back, is a deep indent beginning at the bottom of her nape and all the way down in a straight line over her spine.

Bhān appears, blocking Sk’jin’s observation and Sk’jin wonders how he’s going to explain that no, he was not ogling his daughter or anything of that sort, when the look in Bhān’s eyes were not accusatory or aggressive, but rather curious and at the same time knowing.

‘How long is the storm going to last,’ Sk’jin asks, looking away from Bhān and over at Camat who was now fully clothed again.

‘No more than 3 hours if our radars are right.’ Bhān replies.

‘In that case, how about we have that chat eh? From one oldie to another?’ Sk’jin looks away to coolly eye the Ynqaban in front of him. He had after all, confirmed Sk’jin’s non-verbal inquiry from inside the Transporter.

‘Here- these should fit,’ Camat reappears, holding up a pair of draw-string trousers.

‘You are a breath of fresh air in this rankness,’ Sk’jin bows elegantly before taking the trousers. Camat’s eyes widen, a flush overtaking her features as she stammers a reply. Bhān is clearly not amused as he shoves Sk’jin away with a mumbling, ‘wear the fucking trousers’.

Appropriately dressed and pretty much shoved about until they arrived near the mouth of one of the entrances to the caves. The Transporter they had arrived in was parked and basically drip-drying, while a draining system with some form of rudimentary filtration system was funneling the collected liquid into hollow OrTanks.

‘So,’ Sk’jin smiles, getting to the main point as well. ‘Normally at this point in my culture, I would offer you a beverage. But seeing as I am a humble guest clothed in the garments of your house, I will ignore any offering of refreshments.’

Bhān shoots him an nonplussed look before he digs out a small compact bottle and throws it to Sk’jin. It doesn’t smell bad, but Sk’jin can tell it was probably not the cleanest or freshest.

‘You know who Camat is- or what she is.’ Bhān comments as he takes a seat next to him. ‘I saw the look of recognition in your eyes. The mark on her back- you’ve seen it before.’

‘Where did you find her?’ Sk’jin asks after he swallows, not denying Bhān’s statement but reigning in his own questions. If directed well, Bhān would easily spill his story to him. Sk’jin just needed to guide the conversation away from the hopeless-monologue—you ain’t seen what I’ve seen kid—talk and get the information he needed.

‘You look young,’ Bhān says without preamble.

‘I can only hope so,’ Sk’jin snorts, wondering where the Ynqaban was going with this.

‘But I can see.’

Sk’jin looks at him with a questioning expression. But the elderly Ynqaban just shakes his head.

‘When the Alliance first came to our System, they promised us protection- they promised us wealth, trade, a chance to improve, a chance to heal,’ Bhān tells him. ‘They came in their massive ships, filled with strange looking Beings who were there to help us develop and improve our lands, our oceans. We’re not…our System is not a healthy one. The planets are weak, not a lot of resources that we can use to survive or trade in. But our people, we were tough, hardy- we survived, we evolved- but it was tiring and strenuous. And no parent wants that for their child- but here we had the hope that our children would have a better world, a better System, to live and grow in. That’s what my parents wanted. But it wasn’t what they thought it would be.’

‘Was it slavery?’ Sk’jin asks.

Bhān looks surprised, ‘What? No- there was no slavery involved.’

It’s Sk’jin’s turn to be surprised.

‘What- wait, what do you mean there was no slavery involved. The Alliance is all about trafficking and slavery.’
Bhān pauses to give Sk’jin a searching look.

‘I don’t know what you’re talking about but the Alliance didn’t enslave us.’ Bhān tells him clearly. ‘We’ve heard about their other dealings of course - the pirates later brought information, and many of our own travelled outside as well. But we were never enslaved.’

That was very surprising.

‘So…what did they do?’

‘They said they would help us- but that we should also help them in return. This was expected of course, a trade can only work when other parties are involved.’

Sk’jin nods in agreement.

‘The Alliance consisted of many Beings, all of them looked different to each other - but I still remember their leader the clearest. He was extraordinary looking, and powerful - many worshipped him quite immediately as a god.’

‘I mean I guess being handsome has its quirks-‘

‘He could heal with a single touch of his hand,’ Bhān tells him with a roll of his eyes at Sk’jin’s previous comment.

‘He could what?’

‘He could heal - him, and many of his people, could heal at will.’

A shiver runs down Sk’jin’s spine.

‘He wanted the smartest, ablest, young minds of the population to be trained by them, to essentially work for them - transcribe our history, write down our languages, learn and experience other cultures - they wanted to educate us, and by doing so, educate themselves about us,’ Bhān explains.

Sk’jin wants to make a smart-ass comment but doesn’t. Of course they took the children to plant their propaganda and “education”- children’s minds were like sponges, absorbing and keeping all sorts of information. If you wanted to change a planet, start by changing the Beings who will live in it later. Instead he nods for Bhān to continue.

‘I was amongst them - and to answer your previous question, that’s how we came to speak “Standard” so well - it’s what many of us can only speak now. Our mother’s language is known to only some, and it’s not the original either.’ Bhān adds.

‘So what happened to you? You were educated weren’t you? Why are you saying it wasn’t what you expected to happen?’ Sk’jin asks, urging the narrative on faster.

‘We were taken to their ships, and while we were away, learning and educating ourselves, they were conducting research on not just the species, but on the planets.’

‘Planetary experimentation?’ Sk’jin is thoroughly confused. The Alliance never did things like that. At most they would go, raid some poor defenseless planet like what happened in Kutsoglera, and just leave it. They were only interested in the profit that came from slavery, not from planetary experimentation.

‘They placed massive devices in the atmosphere, they altered the weather, changed the atmosphere. They drilled the surfaces of our lands, drilled deep into our oceans. They removed things, they put things- I still don’t know the full extent of what they actually did but…but slowly…” Bhān sighs out slowly. ‘Slowly things just started to die.’

‘You saw the moon as you came here?’ Bhān asks.

Sk’jin nods, his mind whirling with all of this information.

‘We didn’t do that- that came as a result of something they did. It just stopped moving- And after that, Ynqaba really started to fall apart- the storms hit, the atmosphere soured- we just…we just started to decay.’ Bhān pauses a while, staring at the dripping water. ‘We say we fought the Alliance and threw them down- but it was just…it was just timing I guess. Something went wrong with the ships- there was a temporary failure and over at Lowet, one of the ships actually detonated completely. So the leader went there, leaving behind the ship docked here. And for a while, we already knew something was wrong- we could already sense that they were bringing us harm. So many threw themselves forward, and they overwhelmed the ship. There weren’t a lot of them-those who came with the leader. So it was easy to overthrow their defenses once they got into the ships. One of them crashed not too far from here, and ended the experiments. But the effects still lasted. One by one, the Alliance was overthrown, and they were defeated.’

‘What happened to your god?’ Sk’jin asks.

‘I don’t know- no one can know for sure,’ he shrugs.

‘You said they experimented on the people? What happened?’ Sk’jin presses.

Bhān gives him another keen look.

‘It was not what you could call a biological or physical experimentation,’ he says carefully. ‘What they did to the planet, was related quite directly to how it effected the people…when we- the ones who were taken into the ships, would return, we noticed how strange everyone had become-…a sort of…alteration, in who they were. Almost like hypnosis.’

‘I’m surprised you didn’t kill me instantly considering Ynqaban history,’ Sk’jin grins, leaning back gingerly. ‘I basically did something like hypnosis.’

‘I know the difference,’ Bhān tells him rather absentmindedly, as though reliving something deep in his memories before he snorts and looks up, ‘Oh- I know you’re a dangerous Being Sk’jin,’ Bhān smiles wryly at him. ‘But I felt no threat from you. Malice, anger, pain yes but…you have no threat in you.’

Sk’jin would be offended. He was plenty threatening, thank you very much.

‘There was a strange uniformity- a sort of echo in how they functioned,’ Bhān shrugs as though unsure himself. ‘It was weird- they would suddenly all do something alike, behave the same, or all suddenly go blank- and then nothing.’

‘Were they aware of what was happening,’ Sk’jin asks tensely, already not liking where this was going and what it was implying.

‘They were- it’s why they revolted,’ Bhān answers easily.

‘How are the other planets faring?’ Sk’jin asks, remembering what Khonen had said about their planet and how it was dying from intense famine and hunger.
‘The same, worse, better,’ Bhān scratches at his face with a sigh. ‘We’re all just…just trying to recover- of course, some places are better. Ynqaba never had much of a chance in the beginning- we were one of the poorest planets in the System- and then all that happened. It’s a miracle we’ve come here.’

‘Yeah- a whole fucking miracle,’ Sk’jin mumbles under his breath before asking, ‘And then what? I think I heard the mention of governments or something.’

Bhān actually lets out a loud ha! before chortling to himself.

‘There were those, who were driven by their anger and rage, to try and reform what happened- and it worked for a while. We weren’t a very strong planet, neither were we very advanced, but we had good strong cities, and later those changed into factories- news must have got out, and the pirates came. We sold what resources and materials we could scavenge from the Alliance ships and exchanged them for what we could obtain to fix our lives. We tried to bring back our planets to what they were- we reinstated our government- improved it even. And then well- you can’t sustain an economy off of nothing, and you can’t trade if you have nothing to sell.’

‘So the government revolts started? Civil wars? Fighting for resources?’ Sk’jin quips.

Bhān nods and the gestures around them, ‘And here we are.’

‘What was all that fighting over above your atmosphere?’ Sk’jin inquires. ‘They really fucked me and my ship over you know?’

‘It was a fight between Ynqaba and Lowet- the neighbouring planet- they decided to raid us,’ Bhān rolls his eyes. ‘They’re worse off than us.’

‘So how did you come across Camat?’ Sk’jin asks without preamble.

‘You’ve seen her kind before?’

‘Yes,’ Sk’jin replies. It’s not a lie because though Sk’jin doesn’t exactly recognize her specific species, he does recognize her make- and that was the same as Yoongi.

‘I was scavenging alone,’ Bhān explains. ‘Before I met with A’a’pyu and her little group. The ships have become…a sort of port- for everyone to gather around, to recreate a sense of community- to live together. It’s better off in there, shelter, safety from the weather, a better flow of food. Those who are in there have better deals as well in terms of trade.’

‘Then why not live in there?’ Sk’jin asks, knowing the answer.

‘I found Camat by mistake- I don’t think anyone other than the Collectors were supposed to know of her. Or her kind.’

‘There were more of her?’

‘A whole room,’ Bhān replies. ‘Or Tanks stacked over each other in long rows-…they were just…there. It was so odd- it felt…it felt wrong.’

Sk’jin can understand that all too well as he nods again.

‘I was just there to steal provisions- I had nothing that week, nothing to trade. And I knew where they kept store, where they kept their goods. And I was once young, able- I was fast, quiet- I just needed some provisions, but I found her instead.’ Bhān explains. ‘And I also found them.’
The hair on the back of Sk’jin’s neck stands on end.

‘I really wasn’t supposed to be there- and to this day, I still don’t know who or what they are…’ Bhān shudders, ‘I couldn’t see their faces- but they spoke in “Standard”- they were making deals with the Collectors at that time. They took the OrTanks with them, and I haven’t seen them since.’

Bhān sighs out slowly, ‘I followed the Collectors after that. I noticed that there would be times when they would leave to go on “meetings” with other Collectors. It took me a long time, but then I found them all, heading far too deep into the Corrupted Zones.’

‘Corrupted Zones?’ Sk’jin repeats.

‘The main areas where the Alliance conducted their experiments- it’s too toxic, too dangerous there; is what they told us. And maybe it was before- but not anymore… then they went in with their cybertronics. The Alliance’s devices still existed there, all too strong for them to breach or take apart with what they had…I stayed behind after they left and I investigated the area myself.’ Bhān turns to face Sk’jin properly who leans back a little, a little surprised by the change in posture. ‘The area was rotting, the ground soft and in many places sinkholes caved the down so I was extremely careful. There were pods, or at least what appeared to be small Transporters of some sort…some were all opened, some were still secured. I don’t know for how long I walked there, but I counted a total of 11 pods, and 4 had been emptied. The final one I came across before I got too spooked was sinking slowly. I didn’t have to look inside to know what was there- the idea of …the idea of all of them just sinking- just disappearing into that blackness…’ Bhān trails off.

‘I don’t know how they got there, or what they were. But that’s where I found Camat- the pods were surprisingly easy to open and… she was just a child, so small, encased and helpless- I just…I couldn’t do anything. I knew I couldn’t save all of them- I couldn’t…I didn’t even know why I was doing what I did- I just took her, and I just left.’

Bhān turns in his seat, looking behind him and into the cave where Sk’jin could hear them talking around, in good spirits apparently as they had raided a lot of food. Sk’jin absentmindedly keeps a mental note to empty out their second pantry and give them all of their food when they return him to the Užkulisai and maybe give Camat one of his robes.

‘How long did it take for her to wake up?’ Sk’jin asks.

‘Wake up?’ Bhān repeats, ‘No- I broke the OrTank.’

‘…you what?!’ Sk’jin splutters belatedly.

‘I broke the OrTank- I was worried- I didn’t know what she was encased in, how long it would last, was it in fact poisoning her? I didn’t know- so I broke it. And she woke up an hour or so later.’ Bhān replies with a frown. ‘And since then I’ve raised her as my own. We can’t go live in the ports, because the Collectors will want to take her. Some of the patrol units know about her- but they think she’s just deformed- maybe mutated. That’s not exactly uncommon here.’

‘Do you know what happened to the rest?’

‘I went back- I went back many times.’ Bhān sighs out. ‘They were completely empty. Only the pods remained. The entire area has sunken now- there’s nothing left.’

‘Do you still have the OrTank in which Camat was kept?’

‘No- I destroyed all of the evidence,’ Bhān replies with a shake of his head before he levels Sk’jin with a determined heavy gaze. ‘How do you know about this.’
Sk’jin pauses for a moment. He couldn’t tell this Ynqaban everything of course- but refusal to do so could lead to a lot of trouble and Sk’jin isn’t strong enough to take down 6 Beings.

‘I’m on a mission from the GLA,’ Sk’jin tells him easily. ‘I am investigating the Alliance and other related organizations. We believe that they’re involved in a very serious crime against the Known Universe and we’re tracking their possible relations with third-parties.’

‘But the Alliance is done-‘

‘What you saw wasn’t the full extent of the Alliance,’ Sk’jin tells him with a shake of his head. He decides not to tell him that they were most definitely not the Alliance either. ‘Just a small portion- they still exist today. And we’re trying to put an end to them.’

‘You mentioned slavery.’

‘Yes- it’s their main “business” you could say.’ Sk’jin replies.

There’s movement behind them and one of the brothers, Rejši appears.

‘Storms dying out- we can leave.’

‘That was faster than I expected,’ Bhān remarks.

Sk’jin frowns, eyeing the small bit of opening he could see from where he sat. It was still storming very hard, so he’s not sure what either of them mean by “dying out”. Regardless, he still follows them after they’ve packed up again and pell-mell fall into the back of the Transporter.

And to Sk’jin’s complete amazement, the weather has cleared. So much so it was almost as though it hadn’t even rained. The ground didn’t even appear wet. Camat wiggles her eyebrows at him, clearly amused by how shocked he was with the way the weather changed. He pulls a funny face at her and she bursts out laughing.

The ride back is nothing like how it was before. There’s conversation, laughter, and even an attempt at singing from Dilag who is promptly shut up by his sister’s fingers, pulling at his ears harshly. They swerve dangerously and Bhān barks at them for order, which they both listen to grudgingly. Sk’jin shares his stories- funny anecdotes from his past, not giving away much. Camat listens to him with rapt attention while the brothers join in with loud laughter at his punch-lines and puns. Bhān even chuckles a few times, though he looks like he regrets it every time.

Despite their appearance, Sk’jin reckons they were all probably less than 50 sols old.

It’s a sad, Sk’jin bitterly reflects. It’s also almost nostalgic.

The rough and easy banter, the individual compatibility- the lack of tension, their combined trust within each other; it’s painfully nostalgic.

The drive back is much shorter than Sk’jin had imagined it would be, but he guesses it might be because of the weather, which though definitely not sunny and clear skies, was much lighter and less damp than before.

Lajši is cracking a joke when they arrive, and Sk’jin is wheezing a little too much to actually really notice at first.

‘Uh- Sk’jin?’ Dilag calls from the front.
Sk’jin turns around mid-laugh at the sound of his name and stops abruptly.

The crater is still there from where they crashed in, and Sk’jin can very easily see the tell-tale signs of the Užkulisai’s take-off around the area.

Quite abruptly, Sk’jin starts laughing hysterically, clapping his hands loudly. He notices how the others are giving him worried and wary looks again. Wiping the tears from his eyes, Sk’jin manages to gasp out, ‘I’m definitely going to kill Yoongi!’

They give him a wide birth, amused and worried in the way they regard him as they decide it was better to keep moving rather than stay at the crater. They had given Sk’jin some time outside to scream and kick at the dirt.

It’s relieving, but also a little embarrassing in hindsight. But Sk’jin does feel a little better and when he comes back to the Transporter roughly apologizes for the drama.

‘We’ll take the mountain pass this time- the rain might have uncovered some extra shrapnel,’ Rejši calls from beside Dilag as they start up the Transporter. ‘We might be able to see if your ship’s been taken into one of the ports.’

‘I want to see the new ship that’s crashed,’ Camat puts in eagerly.

There’s a chorus of “no”s and she grumbles, sitting down with a comic frown. Sk’jin snorts and pats her head.

‘Is it safe?’ Sk’jin asks, clearing his throat.

‘Don’t worry,’ Lajši chimes in, ‘Dilag is an excellent pilot- he’ll get us through the mountain.’

‘I wasn’t worried about the mountain exactly,’ Sk’jin retorts dryly but trusts the locals to the terrain anyways. He’s quite sure they wouldn’t sell him out so he’s a bit more relaxed. Giving him time to be irritated again.

Yoongi took the ship and left.

He actually left.

Would they come back? Would any of them come back?

‘Do you think it’s safe for anyone of you to go check if my ship or crew are somehow inside one of the ports?’ Sk’jin asks.

Bhān shrugs, ‘Can’t say for sure- I’m pretty sure A’āpyu is still welcomed inside the port.’

‘It depends on the “mood”,’ she explains. ‘We’ll check and see if it’s okay to go take a look. If not I can’t make promises.’

‘I understand,’ Sk’jin sighs out.

‘Hey- this is good,’ A’āpyu she says kindly. ‘It means that he’s all right. He’s safe if he can still pilot the ship. You said that only the crew could fly it right?’

Sk’jin nods in confirmation, irritation bubbling inside of him.

‘You’ll get back to your crew- a crew is like a family,’ Lajši nods wisely. ‘We don’t leave family behind.’
That stings. It really does.

Sk’jin can only nod in agreement.

Guess we really aren’t family, he thinks, wondering how Jimin was faring.

‘You can stay until you can get back,’ Bhān says unexpectedly. ‘You’re doing something beyond any of us here- beyond what any of us will ever hope to understand- it’s important you survive and keep going on. Don’t give up just yet.’

Sk’jin wonders what expression was on his face for him to receive such a comment. He nods numbly again.

They pass the city on the side of mountain again, apparently it was run by some truly odd nightly Ynqabans who created a sort of toxin they inhaled, giving them “powers”. Bhān just rolled his eyes, mumbling something about stupidity and addiction.

The mountain pass was well- there was no pass. It was just a mountain side and it just so happened Dilag was exceptionally talented in driving and piloting the 8-wheeled Transporter over the terrain. At one point, they’re almost entirely sideways. A’āpyu curses, clearly not enjoying it while her brother cackles at her from the front. Camat laughs with the pilot, thoroughly amused.

‘What are you looking for?’ Sk’jin asks as they finally start driving over flatter terrain.

‘All that space-battle, and what happened before- you can randomly find materials and shrapnel-good for exchange,’ Lajši explains as he hands him a mask. ‘The mountains are always a little misty, so you’ll need a mask. Makes talking difficult though- you really have to shout.’

‘What makes you think I want to step outside,’ Sk’jin grumbles though he takes the mask.

They continue to drive, merry conversation and jokes flying about.

There’s a weird feeling inside Sk’jin’s chest as he looks around the Transporter. For a moment, he almost feels like he wants to forget the mission. Forget the GLA, forget everything. He glances at Bhān who is listening with disgusted incredulity over something gross Lajši is describing to him. The elderly Ynqaban catches his eye and Sk’jin somehow knows that if he chose to stay, then Bhān wouldn’t say no.

Should he stay back?

For all they knew, for all the GLA knew, he was dead at this point. The ship was gone. Yoongi was gone. Jimin was possibly not even alive anymore. Namjoon and Hoseok could potentially have been captured. And then Taeh’yung-…he would be all right.

‘What’s happened here?’ Dilag mumbles out loud and then lets out a laugh. ‘Well fuck me sideways but will you check that out.’

‘No one is fucking anyone sideways- woah…’ A’āpyu whistles before laughing. ‘Serves them right.’

Sk’jin looks up from his hands to peer out from over A’āpyu’s shoulders.

It’s quite the sight if he’s being honest too.

What appeared to be 3 huge cybortronics were stacked over each other in a way that was technically impossible, and trapped inside them were several unconscious Ynqabans.

‘What in the fuck-’ Bhān whispers.

‘I’m not saying we do this,’ Dilag says slowly. ‘But this is a great opportunity and those are some pretty decent cybortronics.’

‘I’m saying we do this,’ A’āpyu orders at once. ‘Even if it’s just one- that’s still good enough to take apart. We can take it to the next port over.’

They’re gearing up in seconds and opening the doorway.

‘Come on Sk’jin!’ Camat calls after him. ‘Let’s go-

Her voice is instantly muffled as she wears the mask.

Sk’jin steps out gingerly, looking around the mountain side with some distaste. He feels a tap on his shoulder and finds Bhān there. He nods towards the side and Sk’jin follows.

They walk some ways from the strange sight and over to a much more open mountain side that’s surprisingly wide and offered a clear but still misty view of the blackened mountains. But that’s when Sk’jin realizes it’s not a mountain. Frowning he squints a little, adjusting the mask over his face properly and cursing at the scratched visor of his facemask.

A Yisheng ship.

That was 100% most definitely a Yisheng ship.

Swallowing thickly, Sk’jin walks further out into the clearing. Something felt strangely off. Reaching the edge, Sk’jin studies the Yisheng ship far below. It had crashed right into the mountain-side, and then promptly melted into it. You could barely tell it apart except for the large print at the side that was still legible despite all of the years of erosion.

Things were really starting to add up based on what Bhān had told him. The elderly Ynqaban stands next to him, also observing the place.

‘Alliance,’ Bhān sighs out before walking back to help them take apart the cybortronics.

Sk’jin just stares, his mind oddly blank.

The Yisheng had come to this System, under the pretense of being the Alliance, and had essentially destroyed billions of lives. For what?

And then the eggs were there. Bhān didn’t know what it was, but Sk’jin knew at once from his description that he was talking about escape pods. That’s what those pods had been. And inside them were the OrTanks. Released for safety measure when the Yisheng ship started to malfunction.

‘Hey! Sk’jin! Come look here!’

Sk’jin tears his eyes away from the mountain/ship and back to where the others were gathered, pulling out and dropping their fellow Ynqaban without much care or thought. Whoever placed them in there had cared enough that they wouldn’t be in harms way…

Sk’jin pauses, a strange feeling creeping over him. He looks down at the ground and then all around.
Clear marks and indications of some large vessel was imprinted all over the black and sandy floor. Deep indents of landing pads, heat blasts from beamer-engines. Turning around again, Sk’jin eyes the mountain, heart hammering in his chest. Then he stares back at the sight of the cybortronics.

Yoongi couldn’t do that alone. He was a terrifyingly skilled and strong Being yes- but he didn’t have the ability to tie up and stack the cybortronics over each other like they were toys.

_Taeh’yung._

That meant Namjoon. And Hoseok.

They were all here. They met Yoongi, clearly, and they were on the ship. They were here. Not too long ago. Wildly, Sk’jin takes to spinning around, looking all over the mountain side, towards the Yisheng ship, and into the skies. He can sense the puzzlement coming from the others but he ignores it.

Sk’jin’s heart leaps to his throat when he catches a glimpse of the Užkulisai flying high above over the Yisheng ship.

It was them. They were here.

And they had all _left without him_.

‘Hey! What’s this?’ Camat shouts loudly, holding up a familiar OrTank casing. Sk’jin would know the design of course- even from where he stood he recognizes the make and stylization of all the devices that belonged to the Užkulisai because he’s had to archive and go through each and every single one to make sure none of them were were altered with tags or trackers.

Suddenly the tracks on the ground, the cybortronics containing neatly bound and gagged Ynqabans makes sense. Everything adds up.

It all happens too quickly and yet too slowly.

Camat opens the OrTank case, her expression curious under her mask as she tugs on something inside.

‘Camat NO-!’

Camat vanishes in a bright flash and the mountain comes down right after.
(Author’s Notes)
I swear to god, every time I listen to the Tear album and I reach the end and Outro plays I just f u c k i n g pray to god and thank her for rapline. So yeah this chapter.
I beg for your forgiveness, please expect great things next week!!! My updates will be like, every 10 days or so? Something like that ^_^ someone asked me on tumblr about my schedule so it's around every 10 days!
And thank you so much to all the people who have commented, sent me messages, and recommended me!! It really motivates me to write and I’m so happy that what I do for fun is by extension providing other people with momentary joy and distraction from their lives.
Thank you so much!!!
“Disarm” [verb]: take a weapon or weapons away from.

Chapter Notes

also, if you want ambience music, look no further

See the end of the chapter for more notes

Yoongi is half-conscious, his mind and body reeling, pulling away from the sheer will-power that held him together. The mountain isn’t all too high- it appeared dauntingly high, ominous and dark when Yoongi had been lucid enough to properly behold it. But after what felt like a few minutes of closing his eyes to rest, he was in the middle of climbing up the dark rocks and edges. But no matter where he found himself, Jimin was there.

Every time he opened his eyes, Jimin was there.

They’re on the side of a mountain, resting as much as they could before they had to inevitably move again.

There was no point, Yoongi knows. Deep down he knew from the moment he laid eyes on them- there would be no escape, there would be no release. But he needs to do this, not for anything else, but to give himself something concrete to do- something to achieve.

And maybe, if he held on long enough, he could somehow save Jimin.

He knows it doesn’t make sense. That it was unlikely. And maybe him continuing like this was in fact endangering Jimin even more. Jimin was still relatively healthy- and he had been in hiding before. Maybe he could escape.

He wants to tell Jimin to leave him, to save himself.

But Yoongi has always been a little selfish.

When Yoongi opens his eyes after what felt like just a few minutes of resting, he finds himself inside a little alcove, carved into the mountainside after years of corrosion and expansion. Jimin is there, eyes looking upwards towards the cloudy and ruddy sky. Yet his eyes are filled with stars.

He’s beautiful.

Painfully so.

But even with his body and mind giving up on him, Yoongi can recognize the longing in Jimin’s eyes. Recognize the pain of being torn away from his home, of being in a place where he had no control, no say.

There was so much more to this, so much more than he could have known. So much more than Amic could have known. So much more than the Captain could have expected.

What could they do, when the manifestation of death was stalking them, was taking over this planet? And maybe Yoongi was only Human- he didn’t have any special ability, any special senses; Humans were listed as some of the weakest species in the Known Universe ‘I’m sorry,’ Yoongi tells him quietly.

Jimin is startled at his words, clearly not expecting him to be awake. He shifts closer, his head tilting questioningly. It makes Yoongi want to smile, knowing that Jimin was leaning closer as though hoping that the proximity would help him understand.

‘Sorry,’ Yoongi tells him again, not sure how he had the strength to smile.

‘Saw...saw-ree?’ Jimin repeats haltingly.

Maybe his fevered thoughts and yearnings for another time, where they were safe together actually existed. Didn’t Humans, at one point, believe that all life lived over and over again, how souls and spirits were always meeting, in every lifetime, in every era- one continuous loop, one continuous series of meetings, of living, of loving, of crying, of running, screaming, bleeding, laughing.

One continuous series of just dying.

Yoongi could laugh. He could curse at his luck with this lifetime. Was it luck? Was it fate.

Or was it something else entirely.

Would he see Jimin again in another life? Would he find him again?

He had to. There was no other option. Not after this.

Not after all of this.

He has to find Jimin again. He has to make everything right.

‘I’ll make everything all right,’ he promises. ‘I’ll make everything all right.’

Yoongi is somehow aware of the rest of the climb. Aware of every pained step, of every strained breath. Aware of all the cuts, wounds, gashes that appear over his skin, seeping through the fabric of his clothes. But Yoongi can’t stop it anymore than he can stop his own injuries. He’s aware as they enter what appeared to be a sort of communications tower, the large signal-chargers long deactivated and corroded to its very core, the wires broken and eaten away, covered in years of decay and rot.

Jimin is somehow able to open the door and Yoongi has no control over his body.

He collapses the moment he crosses over the threshold and everything turns blissfully black for a while before the solar eclipse wakes him up again. He feels rather cold and he feels his body being moving around, his arms and legs moving on their own.

When he stops moving, he realizes his bags and equipment have been removed and he catches sight of them, propped up to the side. Jimin is looking over him, desperation and fear etched all over his
His expression suddenly reminds Yoongi of the day he left Earth, bidding his sister goodbye.

There was a promise he couldn’t keep. A promise he wouldn’t be able to fulfill.

What would the GLA say to his family? What would his mother say? What would his sister do?

He points towards his bag, hoping Jimin would understand. He brings back the bag, pulling out the communications booster-device which was now entirely pointless considering this station was dead. So he just shakes his head, smiling in apology at Jimin. It takes a moment, but Jimin pulls out the empty cigarette packet, hands carefully peeling the main cover as though worried he was going to damage the years old packaging of paper and flimsy packaging.

In this dark and ruddy room, where the only untainted light came from Jimin’s eyes and still soft-looking hair, another source of colour and light fills his sight and Yoongi’s heart shatters even more. His entire being is tearing apart and he wants nothing more than to just sit on the balcony floors, where the woodwork had faded due to sun-exposure, listening to the sound of the kettle bubbling on the stove because his mother always had hot water at the ready. For emergencies, she had said. He just wanted to sit outside, listening with amusement at his sister’s shrill screams as her favorite television series suddenly decided to take a dramatic turn in plot.

Her hairclip falls into Jimin’s palm, glittery and small, still perfectly preserved, not a single sequence out of place. Jimin studies it for a while, the light reflecting off of the small glittery ornament in tiny purple stars across his face. He hands it to Yoongi, hands shaking.

He asks a question, quietly, carefully. He’s obviously asking about the clip, what it was, who did it belong to, why did he have it on him?

But that would take too much time to explain. It would take too much time to tell Jimin all about his mother, his sister, their home, about Earth. It would take too much time and Yoongi wishes with all his heart, all of his being to just show Jimin all of this.

Take him back to Earth, take him through the streets down in-planet, take him through the markets, show him all the “tourist” spots that are only there for show and not for any functional use other than to rob you of your units. He wants to take Jimin to the cafés, to show him that one bakery where they make really good croissants. Would he like croissants? Probably would. Everyone loves croissants.

Yoongi takes the clip and puts it on to his hair with shaking hands. Jimin is quick to help him, gently setting it into his matted strands. Jimin looks terrified and heartbroken. And Yoongi is a little selfish because he wants to see him smile.

So he strikes a pose, a terrible one in fact. Jimin is crying, tears sparkling down his cheeks, nodding as he tries to smile. He says something, as though indulging Yoongi in his little fevered attempts to create a lighter atmosphere. It makes Yoongi laugh, and this in turn makes Jimin smile for real. His eyes crinkling, smile wide enough to push up his cheeks.

‘Sunshine,’ Yoongi holds his hand out towards Jimin, confident that he would take it.

Jimin is quick to take his proffered hand, and instead of just holding it, presses it to his face.

What Yoongi would do to have this for the rest of his life. To feel Jimin like this- close, intimate, and so precious.
But Yoongi would disregard all of that, if it meant Jimin could be safe. If it meant he could return home, away from this place, away from this disease, away from all of this pain.

But Yoongi has always been a little selfish. He’s always been a little greedy, wanting more, needing more. Knowing full well that he shouldn’t. That he couldn’t.

Or that he didn’t deserve it.

But he pushes all thoughts aside. Pushes everything away. Pushes away this dank room, pushes away the thinning air, pushes away the sounds of his failing mind and body. Pushes away the fact that his vision was now dimming at an alarming pace.

With what energy he could, he gently strokes the thin and soft skin under Jimin’s eye.

‘I’ll always find you, so wait for me,’ Yoongi tells him quietly, ‘my sunshine.’

Jimin is understandably confused, not sure what to say in response. He wishes Jimin could understand. But maybe it was better he didn’t.

Instead he tugs on their hands, pulling Jimin closer. He shuffles closer, his face occupying most of his sight.

Yoongi is selfish, and he knows this. But he won’t stop himself.

He leans up just a little- enough so that their lips touch, meeting for a small light kiss.

‘I’ll always find you.’ He repeats, looking deep into his eyes, looking deep into the solar eclipses that now rule his universe.

His sight is fading, and Yoongi has always wondered how it would be to know, to be aware, that you were dying.

He doesn’t have to wonder about it anymore, because death was an all too familiar state of being for him. And now it was coming for him.

Yoongi sense them before he sees them. Before Jimin is even remotely aware- he feels them coming for him, his soul, his mind.

His memories.

He wants to warn Jimin but he was no longer in control of anything. Jimin is crying, his tears falling onto his chest and they feel like rocks, crushing him under every drop, carving out a permanent space to lodge themselves into his very being. Jimin holds him like he doesn’t want to let go- like he can’t let go.

And Yoongi doesn’t want to go. He knows that they’re coming, but he doesn’t want to go. He won’t-

In a nauseating rush, Yoongi feels himself being torn away- was his soul torn out? His body scattered?

All he knows is that they’re here- and they stood tall, like looming crumbling towers over him, impossibly large, impossibly tall- red bleeding out of them, crushing him in wispy clouds of red odour.

‘Y-you can’t touch him,’ Yoongi manages to whisper out.
Had he spoken the words or were they just resounding in his mind? In his soul?

‘You will not touch him.’

They just look down at him. Curious almost.

Then one by one, they move away from his view- terror like he’s never felt before rushes through his body. Terror for Jimin- terror that they will find him, terror that Jimin will do something terribly brave, but terribly stupid.

He thrashes, a sudden energy surging from him as he sheds his body- sheds his mind. His soul breaches through the tangible restraints of his movement and pure terror drives him across the red oppression.

‘JIMIN-!’

The light around him flashes, and the air pulses around him, suppressing him and crushing him, pushing him far away.

‘No-!’

His body stretches- breaking down into impossible formation across an endless expanse of cold darkness. His mind drawn and his memories are suddenly written in starlight that can be heard- a melody, a song- one that trembles each time a note ascends to a colour Yoongi has memorized- neither silver or gold, neither cold or warm.

‘I’ll come back- I’ll come back- wait for me-‘

The music stops abruptly and blackened hands appear through the colours and the song- the stars dim, the eclipse fades, and Yoongi is lost.

He struggles one last time- one last surge- crying and reaching out for the song that surges forward to meet him, stars turning into supernova in their attempt to reach for him- ‘I WILL COME BACK TO YO-‘

I

‘I think I’m close,’ Yoongi reports.

‘I’ve finished planting the explosive- we’re ready to come get you and Jimin,’ Hoseok replies as he settles the empty OrTank into a small crevice along the mountain side. According to Namjoon’s calculations, planting it here would bring one side of the mountain towards the back down, possibly creating a few landslides and triggering a quake that would spook the Ynqabans enough to be in chaos. According to their calculations and observations, there were no living settlements in that area either, so Namjoon had given his approval. It would create enough of a bang to resonate quite loudly over the rather flat terrain, and that was what they needed. Looking away from the small but powerful explosive now neatly tucked next to a black rock, he glances up at the sky above.

‘Also- I don’t know how this will effect anything, but it looks like it’s gonna storm really hard.’

The mist had cleared to one side, the sky lightening somewhat from the area they had initially found the crashed Užkulisai. Considering the usage of masks, the gear, and the general corrosion that was plenty over the area and undoubtedly over the entire planet, Hoseok doesn’t think getting caught up in this storm would be a good idea. He glances down at the unconscious Ynqaban, bound and gagged all too enthusiastically by Taeh’yung. They were certainly not taking them into the ship, but they couldn’t leave them out here, exposed to the storm.

‘What do we do about them?’ he asks, looking up and over at the Užkulisai where Namjoon stood by the windows, tying up the Ynqaban they had chosen to interrogate. Namjoon had definitely changed when it came to situations like these, moving forward with a grim understanding and a sense of acceptance that spoke far more than his actions or lack thereof.

Taeh’yung appears around the corner, hands sooty and blackened from doing Spaces knew what. He’s also holding a “claw”, one of the retractable mechanical claws from one of the cybortronics. He clearly took a fancy to it and Hoseok doesn’t want to know what he was going to do with it.

‘Why don’t we put them inside the machine and lock them in? I think they’re strong enough?’ the Zhak’gri suggests, pointing at the heap of cybortronics to the side, looking a lot like pot-bellied Beings all over each other in a drunken slump.

‘Yeah- let’s do that.’ Namjoon nods from the inside, waving to indicate that he was done tying up the Ynqaban.

‘You mean I should do that,’ Hoseok rolls his eyes as he easily picks up the scraggly and unconscious Ynqaban and hauls them over his shoulder. Namjoon sheepishly mumbles an apology before calling Taeh’yung to collect the Ynqaban from inside the ship.

Hoseok doesn’t want to look all too closely at the unconscious Ynqaban. War and conflict between pirates was one thing, but internal conflict within a planet, within a species, within its people was something else entirely. There was pain that was somehow much more pronounced, much more personal, and infinitely crueler.

‘I’ll help you Hobi!’ Taeh’yung beams as he reappears, unconscious Ynqaban floating along behind him. He then proceeds to quite easily gathering the remaining unconscious Ynqabans into the neon green triangle, not unlike what Hoseok had seen in the slaver ship. Spaces, that felt like it took place sols ago.

Putting them in pairs, Hoseok stuffs the Ynqabans into the cockpit of the cybortronics. It was fascinating and Hoseok wishes he had more time to actually analyze the mechanics and systems behind the cybortronics. It was almost entirely mechanical, with a system of self-reliant, static-based mechanics that was quite energy sufficient to an extent.

He doesn’t want them using these cybortronics to come after them or to possibly set up an attack against them so Hoseok quickly tears off the mainframe wires and dislodges what looked and he hopes are the control-panels. Throwing them out into the ground outside, Hoseok climbs out and pulls down the heavy clear casing over the cockpit and makes sure it’s shut properly. Taeh’yung is waiting for him, arms held up and wide as though expecting Hoseok to jump.
It makes him want to laugh and with an amused grin calls down, ‘I’m not jumping down Tae, but I still appreciate the suggestion.’

Taeh’yung pulls a grumpy expression that’s more adorable than irritated but steps aside nonetheless. Hoseok climbs down, jumping onto the sandy black floor without so much as raising the dust.

‘Next time I’ll catch you!’ Taeh’yung tells him with a serious nod. Hoseok isn’t sure if that’s a promise or a threat.

‘Sure thing buggy,’ Hoseok chortles, patting the tall Zhak’gri’s arm.

‘If you’re close to one of the entrances, you should be able to find the central-Bridge quickly- they all connect to it. It’s where “The Collectors” stay.’ Namjoon tells Yoongi. ‘They’re kind of the bosses- I have a feeling they’re the ones who sell off the parcels to the pirates. Or at least handle that part of the transaction.’

‘Should I get rid of them.’

‘No Yoongi,’ Hoseok can clearly see Namjoon facepalming. He was doing that a lot. ‘Please stay low and do not engage unless strictly necessary.’

‘Come on, let’s get going bug,’ Hoseok calls Taeh’yung who had stayed rooted, eyeing the cybortronics like one would eye some art display.

‘Sk’jin’s tracker is moving again,’ Namjoon says quietly. ‘But there’s something off about it- I think it might be a storm somewhere close-by- it’s causing a lot of issues with the signal frequency.’

Hoseok pulls out his own screen, wiping at the misty surface and internally praying no damage would come to it from the exposure to the acidic mist around them. The tracker screen glitches sporadically, and Sk’jin’s marker blinks in and out, appearing at random all over the map.

‘What do we do?’ Hoseok asks with worry. They had seen him being taken away; perhaps to another similarly crashed Ynqaban fort. If they knew who he was, there was no doubt that the Ynqaban would want to call for some expensive exchange or transaction. But if Sk’jin was able and conscious, he would undoubtedly be able to survive. Hoseok is still shocked that Yoongi would leave Sk’jin behind like that- that the Human would actually just leave all of them behind. He’s also shocked to hear about how Sk’jin had flown the ship out, knowing full well Jimin wasn’t secured, when the entire mission was based solely around him.

‘We have to settle our priorities,’ Namjoon says tersely. ‘We need to retrieve Jimin first- Sk’jin is more than capable of protecting himself. Who knows, he might be insulted that we’re even worried about him.’

Hoseok smiles wryly at that. That was a possibility. He could also possibly greet them with annoyance, maybe lecture them about being late.

‘Lisai, keep Sk’jin’s tracker on top priority and the moment you get a clear line, inform me at once.’

‘Understood Captain.’

‘He’s probably giving his captors a run for their lives,’ Hoseok chortles, pausing midstride to call Taeh’yung along, seeing as the Zhak’gri hadn’t followed him. ‘Taeh’y-!!’
The Zhak’gri is brushing his hands together as though dusting them, a pleased smile on his face, clearly satisfied with himself. He notices Hoseok’s stunned expression and holds up two thumb’s up before skipping over.

‘Cool right?’ he asks delightedly, gesture towards the now neatly stacked cybortronics towards the side of the mountain, below a cliff face.

‘They’ll be away from the explosion! So Namjoon doesn’t have to feel guilty!’ Taeh’yung looks like he’s expecting some form of praise.

‘Um-…yeah, that’s really good buggy,’ Hoseok swallows, eyes narrowing as he looks for the fissure where the explosive was placed. ‘You didn’t move anything else?’

‘Nopes!’

‘All right….uh, good job,’ Hoseok pats Taeh’yung higher head, fluffing up the dark strands. Taeh’yung grins brightly before taking his hand in his own and swinging it between them as he merrily pulled them back to the Užkulisai. ‘My hands are shaking.’ Is Yoongi’s extraordinarily calm statement.

‘What-‘

‘What? Are you okay?’ Namjoon asks immediately.

‘I don’t know. I feel strange.’

Hoseok curses internally; no single Being, no matter how strong or altered, could easily survive a crash landing like that. Yoongi was pushing his health, the limits of his physicals capabilities.

‘…we never got to check you after the crash- what if you have an injury-‘

‘No it’s not that,’ Yoongi replies- he sounds a little odd, his tone unnatural in a way that Hoseok has never heard before. ‘I’ll be fine.’

‘-but Yoongi-‘ Namjoon splutters.

‘What is his medical status?’ Hoseok asks as they quickly make their way inside the antechamber, the door sliding shut behind them quietly.

‘Last I checked, he was miraculously all right,’ Namjoon replies, sounding hassled. ‘We need to get them both back as quickly as possible- we’re good to fly out right?’

‘We are,’ Hoseok nods as he runs up the stairs alongside Taeh’yung who looks thoughtful again. ‘We can set out right now.’ ‘Let’s do that.’

They rush into the Bridge and Hoseok realizes their hands are still clasped together. Taeh’yung squeezes his hand and plants a wet sloppy kiss on his cheek before throwing himself onto Yoongi’s vacated chair. Though hassled Namjoon raises an eyebrow at him in question and Hoseok can only shrug. But it’s sweet- almost makes Hoseok feel like he was missed and needed inside the ship.

‘I’m here. I’m at the central-Bridge,’ Yoongi tells them. ‘I don’t think we’ll be able to find any access to ship’s archives. Everything has been scavenged.’
‘All right,’ Namjoon replies at once, a frown on his face as he ran analysis on Yoongi’s most recent health tab reading. ‘You’re close. Just hang on- we’ll get you out the moment you get Jimin.’ He looks up from his screen and nods once at Hoseok.

‘Lisai- let’s start up and keep the ship low- activate shields but keep at minimum levels,’ Hoseok calls out.

‘Right away.’

‘Everything’s set up right? The Ynqabans put away?’ Namjoon asks.

‘All prepared,’ Hoseok replies, eyeing the cybortronics, satisfied that they wouldn’t get in harms way once the mountainside comes down.

‘Please be careful of the mountainside. Proximity at 3.2 meters.’

Hoseok carefully steers them out into the opening, away from the mountain side. He eyes the screen where Jimin’s tracker was blinking clearly at them, and not too far from that position was Yoongi’s own tracker. Eyeing his control panel, he steers them higher up into the mist, distant forks of lighting light up the horizon in the distance.

‘I’m taking us over the ship,’ Hoseok calls, ‘The main entrance has a series of landing platforms I think- we can retrieve them from there.’

‘Take us a little lower- I want to see it,’ Namjoon calls. Hoseok nods quietly, lowering them out of the mist, a little taken aback by how disorienting the mist was seeing as how much higher they were in the air than he had anticipated. He was going to have to keep that in mind.

‘All right- yeah I think we can do that- it doesn’t seem like it’s connected to any other place that the Ynqaban would use as a platform for escape,’ Namjoon calculates before adding, ‘Take us to the edge over there, we’ll be close enough but hidden behind that ridge.’

Nodding Hoseok calls out to Yoongi, ‘All set here Yoongi- just give us the word.’

‘I’m almost there-‘

The Human’s voice cuts off abruptly but they can still hear the line from his side. The Užkulisai slowly takes off, the mist and blackened dust swirling around them.

‘Yoongi?’ Namjoon asks carefully, they could hear nothing more than the Ynqaban language, some casual yelling. Yoongi’s tracker was stationary but there was no indication of him being uncovered or exposed.

Taeh’yung twists in his seat, eyeing them from the front, looking worried.

‘Safety belt Tae,’ Hoseok reminds him absentmindedly as Namjoon calls Yoongi again.

‘Yoongi, hey are you all right? What’s going on?’ the Kutsoglerin asks worriedly.

To their complete and utter shock, the distinct sound of the Heliord blade activating rings through the line.

‘Shit-!’ Hoseok increases their speed, ‘Lisai, prepare for hover-mode over unstable terrain-‘

‘Yoongi what’s going on??’ Namjoon demands, watching with wide eyes as Yoongi’s tracker moves in startling speed. ‘Shit- get us there now- drop us down over the platform, draw the rest out and pull them away.’

‘Do I set off the explosion?’ Hoseok asks.

‘No- don’t,’ Namjoon gets out of his seat the moment they’re stable in the air. ‘We don’t need that anymore- take us over the top, Taeh’yung and I will go get Yoongi and Jimin.’

Taeh’yung cheers from where he’s sitting before he quickly disengages himself from the seat and runs up the stairs.

‘Let’s go get my Chim!’ he exclaims brightly.

‘There’s a storm approaching hard from the west,’ Hoseok reports, catching sight of huge bolts of lightning in the distance that was moving all too quickly to his liking. ‘Fuck, this could fuck up with our hover-’

‘Just get us as close as possible, we can’t let Jimin and Yoongi be taken or compromised,’ Namjoon orders, quickly pulling on protective gear though he didn’t need it as much as the others did. Taeh’yung is waiting impatiently by the doorway of the Bridge, vibrating almost with delight.

‘Communications Manager Sk’jin’s tracker cleared and operational. Renewing data input.’ Lisai announces suddenly.

And even though Hoseok is occupied, focused on flying the large ship through the mountainous ridges and terrain through disorienting mist and cloud, his eyes instantly search for the tracker screen.

It’s no longer glitching, no longer unstable. Instead very plainly and very clearly shows Sk’jin’s tracker blinking clearly at them. And at an extremely close distance.

‘What the fuck-’

‘Communications Manager Sk’jin’s coordinates are 21.98.00.33.’

An almost delayed shiver of apprehension crawls down Hoseok’s back and he twists in his seat to look back at Namjoon who has also clearly realized what Hoseok has.

‘That’s where we were-‘

A bright light erupts from Hoseok’s right outside the window, the mist and clouds disintegrating and evaporating as ripples of pure energy bubble out of the mountainside, bringing the wrong side of the mountain face down.
The light erupts out of the corner of his eye but Namjoon cannot look away from the tracker that blinks at him.

This wasn’t right- it couldn’t be right. There was no way.

‘Pa.’ Taeh’yung’s voice is small and strangely afraid. ‘We have to go to him now.’

The tracker light flickers and disappears.

For a second that expands what felt like a lifetime of petrifying horror, Namjoon is suddenly overwhelmed with everything.

‘Pa!’

Snapping out of it, Namjoon rushes back to the Navigation Table.

‘Change of plans,’ he orders out, his body moving seemingly on its own accord with confidence and reassurance; which was good because Namjoon is lost. ‘Lisai, switch to autopilot and take us to the platform at 22.95.03.21. Hoseok- you’ll be going and getting Yoongi and Jimin.’ He buckles into his seat, hastily directing Taeh’yung back to safety. Hoseok would be able to blend in with ease- they didn’t know what was happening with Yoongi but he’s already sure that any form of discretion would be pointless now. Yoongi had clearly snapped- he probably saw something or heard something that triggered him and despite the calm and entirely nonchalant look the Human possessed as his permanent expression and attitude, there was an underlying chaos that had been threatening to boil over ever since he had collapsed in the Nightmare Planet.

‘But what about Sk’jin-’

‘I’ll go to him,’ Namjoon replies at once, ‘Taeh’yung and I will go to him after we drop you off.’

Hoseok nods in understanding, taking the abrupt change in plans in stride. When they break through the last misty layer, whatever distraction or diversion they had planned on creating with the explosion had obviously worked because crowds of Ynqabans were spilling out, cybotronics lining up and moving already.

‘Lisai fire low-grade shells towards the right of the mountain- let’s draw them out and lead them to the other side,’ Namjoon orders as they turn around the mountain ridge, descending as quickly as they could. Hoseok is out of his seat as the ship fires 4 missiles behind and below them. ‘And prepare all Medical Bays asap!’

‘Understood.’

Hoseok is quick to run out, his movements quick and light as he calls out, ‘Lisai, open weapon storage unit 03- are all units charged?’

‘Taeh’yung, will you be able to find Sk’jin?’ Namjoon asks brusquely as they hover over the platform. It was empty of any living Being, only old and corroded frames of old ships and shuttles lay about, black dust gathered in mounds around the rough floors.

‘Yes,’ Taeh’yung replies, or at least, Namjoon thinks it’s Taeh’yung because the voice that replies to him sounds distinctly different.

‘I’m at the door- lower the ship more.’

‘Lisai, set the ship to hover at 1.2 meters,’ Namjoon orders, clambering over to the pilot’s seat.
Namjoon couldn’t fly it in space, where the risks and potential for accidents was higher and more likely. But down here, in-planet, it should be similar to piloting a Transporter. Given the Užkulisa is far larger than any Transporter Namjoon has ever piloted or driven. He just hopes the autopilot is good enough to take them back to the mountainside and back here to the platform.

‘I’m here,’ Hoseok reports, ‘No Ynqaban on sight- headed in now. I’m almost close enough to catch real-time coordinates from Yoongi’s tracker.’

‘All right- keep low, if we need to barrel through, we’ll come barreling through,’ Namjoon replies and adds, ‘Lisai, take us to Sk’jin’s last coordinates.’

‘Redirecting coordinates and trajectory.’

‘Careful with the storm- wind’s harsh down here,’ Hoseok adds and Namjoon catches sight of his lithe slim figure running across the wide compound towards the wide doorways. Glancing around Namjoon notices how the clouds seem much closer, heavy bulky storm clouds that appeared unnaturally dark and heavy. Lightning roped around them in thick branches. They would have to work incredibly fast.

‘Find closest landing ground,’ Namjoon orders as he gets up, ‘Keep the ship running.’

‘Understood.’

Namjoon runs out of the Bridge, Taeh’yung close behind him.

‘How did we not see him?’ Namjoon curses as they rush downwards, ‘How did the bomb trigger? Unless it was purposefully tampered with it shouldn’t have gone off shit-!’

Taeh’yung is strangely quiet behind him, not bothering with the masks or protective gear and quietly slips into the antechamber to wait.

Namjoon fumes under his breath, the only action he can take and the only emotion he can express because every other response resulted in heavy guilt.

‘Fuck,’ he curses under his breath as he retrieve the medical pack from the Dock and pulls down a gravity-stretcher alongside it. Sk’jin was hardy and tough- his coordinates had been at a relative distance from where they had placed the actual explosive, and Namjoon can only hope.

‘Approaching suitable landing site, 120 meters below Communications Manager Sk’jin’s last coordinates.’

‘How’s the weather? When will the storm hit?’ Namjoon asks as he runs out of the Dock and into the antechamber where Taeh’yung was standing, waiting for him to return.

‘Storm approaching in 2 minutes.’

‘Shit,’ Namjoon reaches into his pocket to retrieve the mask- not for anything else but simply for the filters and channels available through the visors. ‘Scan for living Beings in the area.’

‘Scanning.’

The door opens and the wind that gushes in actually pushes Taeh’yung back a little by the sheer force of it.

The mountainside they had left not 10 minutes ago is entirely unrecognizable.
Namjoon had made clear and careful calculations, taking in the size of the explosive, calculating the amount of energy it would expel, the density of the mountain rock, the structure of the layers above and below the main crust, and even down to the fault-lines he had to quickly scramble and find through what he had hoped wasn’t outdated GLA archives regarding the planet. They only wanted to create a diversion, not trigger a whole series of natural calamities.

They certainly did not want Sk’jin to get caught up in all of this.

Namjoon jumps out and is instantly disoriented as he sinks a few inches in the fresh loose blackened soil left behind by whatever avalanche had just ravaged the place.

‘Lisai keep an eye out for avalanches or landslides,’ Namjoon orders as he eyes the sky above them. The storm was going to hit anytime. He winces as a thick fork of lightning strikes a nearby peak, debris and rock flying high into the air from the contact. Taeh’yung walks ahead, seemingly undisturbed by the fierce wind and dust crackling along the visor on Namjoon’s helmet.

‘Scan for living Beings!’ Namjoon orders again, hand gripping the medical pack tightly, doing his best to catch sight of any sign of Sk’jin in this collapsed mountainside.

Suddenly Taeh’yung darts forward just as rain drops heavy and large start to fall around them. Namjoon doesn’t try to stop Taeh’yung or question his actions but instead follows immediately.

‘I think we’re on him,’ Namjoon reports back to Hoseok.

‘I’m inside- halfway there.’

Namjoon climbs up the gravely slope, the rain falling in a steady earnest shower now. But one look back shows Namjoon that it wasn’t going to be a pleasant shower for long. There’s a bright flash of green just as lightning strikes another nearby peak and the rain picks up speed. Namjoon ducks as a wave of blackened coarse soil flies overhead, rain starts to wash over his visor but he’s able to find Taeh’yung lanky green high-lighted form ahead.

‘Is it-’

Sk’jin is half buried in the coarse blackened soil, wearing clothes Namjoon does not recognize. His skin is extraordinarily pale, his face strikingly sunken, and to his horror, his eyes are open. Namjoon scrambles forward, placing the medical kit down and extending the stretcher immediately. Taeh’yung isn’t moving but Namjoon has no time to spare to see what the Zhak’gri was doing or how he was faring. Namjoon hovers over Sk’jin, blocking the acidic rain from hitting the Khol’isa face-on. For a moment Namjoon absentmindedly thinks Sk’jin would really not appreciate any damage to his face or hair.

His eyes are glazed, the red of his eyes dim and seemingly desaturated. Even his hair has lost all vibrancy and when Namjoon places his hand over the Khol’isa’s chest, it’s still and harrowingly quiet.

‘Shit fuck-’

A bright flash of green sends Namjoon tumbling down the slope a few steps, he barely manages to catch on to a larger bit of rock and painstakingly rights himself. The medical kit has fallen close to his head and grabbing it again, Namjoon scrambles up. By the time he crawls back the storm has hit them full on and everything is a blur of rain, wind, black sandy soil, and hissing steam from the acidic reactions of the toxic rain falling around them. But Taeh’yung’s form is clear, and so is Sk’jin’s who was now entirely out of the soil, eyes closed and chest heaving.
He wants to ask Taeh’yung what happened, but they don’t exactly have time. Thunder booms overhead and lightning temporarily floods the air with neon white light.

‘We got him!’ Namjoon yells, not sure if Hoseok could hear him over the sound of the storm or if his call was even going through with the storm. The stretcher is by Taeh’yung’s side and he’s gently tugging the Khol’isa on to it, lifting him from around his shoulders. Namjoon grabs Sk’jin’s calves and together they manage to place the Khol’isa over the stretcher. Namjoon quickly activates the straps and they shoot out from the side, wrapping around the Khol’isa and keeping him steady. Hastily pulling off his helmet, Namjoon places it over Sk’jin’s head, activating it quickly so that the visor would cover his face and protect him from the acid downpour.

Without having to say a word, or at least, Namjoon doesn’t think Taeh’yung has said anything because the storm is too loud, they pick up the stretcher and make their way down. The storm howls around them and Namjoon is praying that they don’t slip or fall in the midst of this chaos.

The lights of the Užkulisai is the only indication of where it is, as sheets of acidic rain washes over them. Namjoon guides them down, the rain itching at his synthetic skin and scalp. Focusing his sight, Namjoon picks the fastest and smoothest route towards the back of the ship.

‘Lisai! Open the doors!’ Namjoon pants out, vaguely surprised to find himself short on breath. A clear rectangle of light appears quite close by and they pick up speed.

The sensory overload from the storm almost entirely shuts out the moment Namjoon steps foot inside the antechamber.

‘Hoseok! We’re in- we got Sk’jin!’ Namjoon calls out again.

‘-ough the central-bridge-....ay down now-!’

The line is broken up and nearly all entirely white-noise, but Hoseok didn’t sound panicked and was clearly headed towards the central-bridge or was at least somewhere close.

‘Lisai start scanning Sk’jin now, prepare medical treatment in Bay 1!’ Namjoon nearly trips when the stretcher suddenly lifts up. Quickly checking around him, Taeh’yung had let go of the stretcher, his eyes unfocused, his movements paused halfway.

‘Taeh’yung we need to-‘

‘Pa- I can sense more- it’s faint,’ Taeh’yung stops completely, body turned towards the doorway, peering out into the stormy expanse beyond the doorway. ‘I think some of them are still alive.’

‘They captured Sk’jin and were clearly headed to hand him over,’ Namjoon shakes his head immediately as he directs Sk’jin’s stretcher towards the bend of the antechamber. Lightning strikes close by, filling the air with bright light tinted green where Taeh’yung stood. ‘Even if we do get to them, we can’t take them where we’re going. Our priority is our team, our mission; anything and anyone else is extra baggage.’
Hoseok dives straight into a world of chaos, panic, and hysteria.

Their plan had taken a completely unexpected turn—now triggering a series of events they had no way of predicting.

Yoongi was not responding but his tracker was still moving.

Jimin’s was in the same stationary position, not too far from where Yoongi was.

And Sk’jin.

How had that happened? Had he been captured and were they bringing him back here for ransom/trade? But what would have triggered the explosion? He had made sure it wouldn’t be triggered by movement, so the idea that the rain or some crumbling rock would have detonated the explosive was highly impossible.

The Ynqaban people are streaming out of the place below him. Hoseok doesn’t bother transforming himself too much, seeing as most were too panicked and occupied with running away. They were also shockingly old and fragile looking.

The Ynqaban they had come across were all clearly at their prime. Or at least, what could be considered their prime. They wouldn’t need any brute force charging through here, though Hoseok doesn’t take panicked hysterical crowds lightly. Those types were always the ones to cause the most damage. He’s a few levels above the central-bridge zone, and Hoseok isn’t sure if the area had recently caved in on one side, or if the entire left-wing of the dock had always been covered in a mighty mound of debris and parts. But judging by the way dust whirled in the air, the way everyone seemingly preferred to choose the incoming acid storm over staying indoors, he’s guessing it’s very recent.

‘Hoseok! We’re in- we got Sk’jin!’

The tightness in his chest is a little relieved and Hoseok can breathe better.

‘Almost through the central-bridge!’ Hoseok calls back, ‘I’m making my way down now!’

Hoseok curses, not allowing himself to look over at the avalanche that was the entire left-wing of what was clearly an impressive Dock. He runs past empty make-shift homes, fashioned after tents and shacks. Runs past Ynqabans who were hysterically running past him, clutching at their own chests because they possessed nothing of value except for their own lives.

What had they started?

Hoseok shimmies down a few looped wires, landing lightly on his feet before darting straight towards one of the massive entrances to the side. This clearly lead towards the central-bridge, based on what the Ynqaban had told them and judging by how Yoongi had successfully snuck in.

Hoseok quickly glances at his screen, checking for directions. There were too many Ynqabans and too many entrances all too close together. But amongst this pandemonium, Hoseok notices something distinctly strange.

Streams of Ynqaban are running out of the massive entrances save for one that remains hollow and startlingly dark.

Pushing past the stream and nearly tripping into the suddenly silent long corridor, Hoseok instantly changes his stance to a defensive one. The sound of the rushing crowd just meters from him has suddenly hollowed out, sounding miles away as though Hoseok hadn’t just escaped the stampede of fleeing Ynqaban. He’s not sure why, but instinctively he knows he needs to remain quiet.

The corridor is long and rather empty. It’s also quite wet. A coolant pipe seems to have burst somewhere but the fluids are rotted and stagnant, a strong odour of mildew fills the air. And it’s strong enough to momentarily hide the stench of blood that hits Hoseok like a wave.

The lights suddenly flicker and Hoseok looks into a scene of absolute carnage.

Bleeding and mangled bodies are strewn about without a care. And judging by most of their fallen forms, in the process of running away. Or were at least trying to before something got to them.

Hoseok slips a little as he fully enters the central-bridge, and he’s not exactly surprised to find that the cause of his misbalance were pools of blood. There’s a sudden flurry of movement and it all happens so quickly Hoseok doesn’t quite know what to make of it.

Yoongi is almost levitating due to the speed with which he was moving. His Heliord blades are gone and what skin could be seen was entirely splattered in blood. The Ynqabans who are valiantly trying to fight him have already clearly lost- their terrified shrieks transform into horrendous gurgling as Yoongi gets to them in a flash.

‘Yoongi-!’

The Human is on him in a flash and Hoseok barely manages to defend himself.

There’s a crazed, unhinged look in the Human’s dark eyes- and to Hoseok’s complete shock, tears were flowing down Yoongi’s cheeks.

‘Yoongi stop!’ Hoseok hisses, countering the Human’s brutal clawed swipe.

Hoseok is surprised to find that Yoongi’s strike doesn’t actually hurt- in fact the Human was barely using his full strength. Had he tired out? It had been over 10 minutes since Yoongi’s abrupt silence over the Comm and Hoseok is pretty sure only 10 minutes against starved and weak Ynqabans wouldn’t tire the former GI agent like this.

He’s seen him fight in Gremio Arena and that was a definite testimony to the Human’s endurance, skill, and ability.

Yoongi doesn’t seem to recognize him, mindlessly and recklessly pushing forward. Yoongi is a deadly fighter- but he was also not himself. It was as though the Human was moving solely on muscle memory, his mind entirely elsewhere. Hoseok counters him easily, and with one quick and calculated hard shove, misbalances the Human and sends him flying back to the ground.

Yoongi lands with a loud thwack, his head smacking hard on the wet floor. Hoseok is quick to get to the Human, wondering if he’d been too harsh. Yoongi had very unnervingly commented about not feeling good.

Yoongi…Yoongi wasn’t technically a species of living Beings according to most. While he didn’t fall under the category of an AI, or a cyborg. Diagnosing him was difficult, figuring out how he would respond to most situations, how he would understand his environment, how he would translate what he saw or heard- this lack of information regarding the former GI agent made foreplanning difficult. What triggered him to become like this? What had happened?

A terrible thought runs through Hoseok’s mind but he knows it’s not true- Jimin was still in whatever cell they were keeping him in. He was alive.
Yoongi breathes strangely, an almost rattling sound as his back arches from the floor. Cursing under his breath, Hoseok slides towards the Human, checking him for injuries. He can’t find any wound or detect any broken or dislocated limb. He can’t say for sure about internal injuries but Hoseok doesn’t dismiss it.

‘Shit- Yoongi, hey- focus on me,’ Hoseok speaks quickly.

He wants to take time and carefully search the Human, but they can’t. They don’t have time, and they still needed to retrieve Jimin-

‘-hey, listen!’ Hoseok says sharply, snapping his fingers before Yoongi’s face. Yoongi’s eyes focus and he’s staring at Hoseok with a clarity that Hoseok isn’t familiar with. Hoseok can tell he’s lucid, but there is no recognition in his eyes.

‘You need to tell me right now if you’re injured.’ Hoseok demands quickly. They didn’t have time for care and patience- Hoseok could bind and perform emergency treatment for now.

Yoongi is suddenly sitting up, eyes wide, pupils the size of pin-pricks.

‘What’s- what’s happened-‘ Yoongi gasps out, his body heaving as he struggles to breath. ‘-where am I-‘

‘Fuck- Yoongi-‘

‘I- I couldn’t- I tried-‘ Yoongi stammers, his eyes wild as he tries to wipe his hands clean against his stained suit. ‘I- it’s-‘ ‘Yoongi?’ Hoseok doesn’t know what to make of this sudden change in the Human.

‘I-I’m-‘ Yoongi balks and Hoseok realizes that the Human was going through a panic attack.

Quickly he shoves his head between his knees, grip firm on his nape while he roped his other arm across his chest.

‘Hey- breathe with me for a second,’ Hoseok tells him as calmly and quietly as possible. ‘Breathe with me- on one take a deep breath and hold it till I say so.’

Unsure whether or not the Human heard him, Hoseok takes a purposeful breath loudly and clearly. A second later, Yoongi does the same.

‘Hold it,’ Hoseok orders quietly, ‘And let go slowly- and then inhale slowly again-‘

Yoongi suddenly slumps sideways but it’s only for a fraction of a second because he’s suddenly heaving and coughing, violently turning in Hoseok’s arms on all fours.

‘Yoongi-‘

‘Jimin-‘ Yoongi gasps out, ‘Need- need to find Jimin-‘

‘Fucking Spaces hold still-‘ Hoseok grabs him, and holds tight. ‘What the fuck happened-‘

‘Why are you here,’ Yoongi asks, his voice suddenly stoic and his expression unnervingly neutral though he’s still breathing strangely. ‘I thought you would wait outside-‘

‘We fucking lost contact!’ Hoseok snaps before he adds, ‘I’ve come to get you and Jimin out, let’s fucking move already and leave this place!’
Hoseok makes for the lowered doorway, eyeing Yoongi carefully who looks around the central-bridge, a look akin to surprise on his features. He blinks rapidly, eying the corpses around him. His hands fist, as though expecting something to be there.

‘Yoongi!’ Hoseok calls sharply. Whatever mental GI agent breakdown or existential crisis he was about to have could wait until they were back on the ship.

‘Yoongi- we need to get Jimin!’

Yoongi’s head snaps up, his focus and clarity re-tuning once more and he nods, quickly making his way towards Hoseok. They quickly sprint through narrow doorway, littered with freshly fallen rock-chips, clearly from the explosion. Yoongi asks no further questions and Hoseok also keeps quiet.

‘According to this he should be further ahead,’ Hoseok ventures as he glances at his screen again.

The doorway branched off into smaller narrower hallways seemingly carved of stone. The central-bridge had clearly fallen apart and the Ynqaban had carved this series of tunnels through the ship and into the mountain-face. It’s bitingly cold and everything appeared damp. The odour that seemed to permeate the air outside the bridge had clearly been spewed out from within these tunnels. It’s also eerily silent and Hoseok doesn’t like how far they were plunging into the darkness. He has no way of knowing what they would meet once they leave this place.

If they can.

They reach a forked pathway and Hoseok is about to reference his screen again when Yoongi darts past and into the right tunnel, his body slamming purposefully on a door that looked almost identical to the rock-face that made the tunnel.

Rushing over, Hoseok also throws his body weight onto the door and after the second combined shove, the door creaks and the rusted bolts chip off.

Yoongi tears down the heavy door while Hoseok quickly sets his screen to the brightest mode.

Light floods the cramped and stinking room and for a moment Hoseok thinks it vacant but a pair of orb-like eyes glow at him from the corner, a rumbling growl follows. Hoseok quickly flashes the light into the corner and he’s met with hisses, the eyes turning away and now showing a matted head, covered in lumpy wounds, random chunks of hair, and a freshly bleeding large wound towards the top of his head.

Hoseok feels a trill of caution, one that was probably some remote primal reaction at the sight of the Being. He was obviously malnourished, unkempt, and has probably never really seen the light of day, but there was no mistaking what he was.

The species that hailed from the small and violent planet of Pravasi M’hanun were famed for their blood-lust and cannibalistic tendencies. They were an ancient civilization, with the potential of great growth as a society due to their keen intelligence, physical hardiness, and ability to easily adapt. However despite all of this, their greatest desire, or at least their greatest love, was not in community or development, but rather in blood baths and carnage.

The GLA had tried to intervene, fearing their extinction with the way they quickly and easily killed each other, but the species from Pravasi M’hanun had an incredibly short gestation period, and their children were, mildly put, aggressive since birth.

It always struck Hoseok as odd, seeing any of the 5 main species from the bloody planet outside in the Known Universe. They were prizefighters and if fed well, and provided for (in the form of constant fights and gore), could be quite loyal. Most of the species from Pravasi M’hanun looked similar; pale smooth skin, dark hair, their extremities stained red as though the blood they had spilt permanently staining their appendages, and in some cases sharp elongated teeth.

While Hoseok is 99% sure this wild Being was of Pravasi M’hanun, he’s not sure which of the main 5 species he might be. The most commonly seen of the species were the Vicitra, who were the most civil (if you could call it that) of the 5 and had a good command over Standard.

How did he end up here? In Ynqaba of all places? Hoseok feels a surge of pity at the sight of the abused Being. He seemed incredibly young- had he known no other life? He’s about to pull Yoongi away, when the Human takes a step forward.

‘Yoongi I don’t think-’

A hand appears around the head, fair despite being dirty, carding through the matted lumpy hair on the wild Being’s head.

‘It’s okay,’ an unexpected voice says quietly in accented Standard.

The wild looking Being shifts a little and Jimin’s face pokes out from beyond his arms.

He looks filthy- covered in dirt and Spaces knew what else- but his eyes are still glowing, familiar shapes in the dark of the room. He’s covered in equally filthy garments, wrapped around his body in swathes as well as over his head. He appeared to be shivering.

‘Jimin-!’ Hoseok is so relieved he could collapse.

‘Wait-‘ he holds out his hand, ‘don’t come close.’ And Hoseok is thoroughly confused.

Jimin was suddenly speaking Standard

Yoongi stills too, and in this darkness, Hoseok can’t make out his expression. Instead after a second, Yoongi quietly and slowly kneels onto the floor.

‘Sunshine?’ he whispers.

The young wild Being flinches, growling and hissing at Yoongi as he turns swiftly- his posture curled and ready to spring. Hoseok realizes that whoever this was, was trying to protect Jimin.

‘It’s okay,’ Jimin says again from behind the Being who is focused only on Yoongi. Hoseok has a feeling Jimin is talking to him, and not them.

Yoongi takes a small step forward and the growling increases. Then oddly enough, Jimin holds out a hand to stop Yoongi from approaching and gently pats the other Being, saying something gently in inaudible Standard.

The Being seems to calm down but doesn’t really move away, doesn’t stop growling at Yoongi.

‘Jimin? Are you all right?’ Hoseok asks quietly.

‘I’m okay.’ Jimin replies, hand appearing again to give him a thumbs up.

‘So uh- who is this?’ Hoseok asks, also crouching down.

Yoongi had a point- they didn’t want to approach him as though challenging him. This Being was running purely on whatever feral instinct had protected him so far- and seeing as he was now protecting Jimin, he was using those instincts to protect him too.

‘C-can speak-‘ the Being growls out. ‘-n-not animal.’

‘Not animal,’ Jimin repeats gently now appearing from behind him.

He looks worse for wear now that Hoseok has a closer look. He looks exhausted, and blood has matted and dried over his skin on the side of his head. There’s a huge splotchy mess of blood on the side of his neck, the skin torn that Jimin has clearly tried to cover with some make-shift bandages.

‘Not animal,’ Yoongi also says quietly, his head tilting to the side. ‘What is your name?’

His expression turns a little less aggressive, a little more unsure.

‘J-J—‘ he stutters out heavily.

Jimin quietly crawls out a little more, now shifting to his knees. He winces and it doesn’t go unnoticed by Yoongi who seems to move without his own knowing, hand reaching out as though to catch Jimin.

There’s a loud snapping growl and the young Being is growling aggressively again.

Jimin is quick to placate him, gently speaking in his own language this time, eyes looking over at them urgently as though wanting to say more.

‘It’s okay,’ Jimin tells him quietly, hand brushing down the nape of the wild Being. ‘Friends. Trust. Safe. They are safe.’

His posture still doesn’t let up, but he’s stopped growling. At least there’s some improvement there.

‘Yoongi? Move back,’ Hoseok calls to the Human. But he doesn’t move, hand still extended. Instead he shifts forward, eyes never wavering from the young Being.

Hoseok can feel sweat dripping down his back. Yoongi was in no condition, both mental or physical, to deal with an attack that was no doubt going to be a whole lot of crazy.

Jimin and Yoongi seem to be communicating, solely through their eyes because the former nods slightly. He’s saying something to the Being, his voice soothing and gentle, clearly addressing Yoongi in the conversation with the wild Being.

He moves away a little more and Jimin’s crouched up form slowly shows.

Hoseok’s breath catches in his throat as he sees Jimin’s feet, bloody and crusted. His injuries are obviously purposefully inflicted. Was he badly injured? What happened?

‘Who is he?’ Yoongi looks at the unknown Being who sniffs the air rather aggressively as the Human slowly approaches, hand still extended. It reminds Hoseok of how aggressive creatures or panicked creatures are approached. This was an extension of trust, to show that they meant no harm. Yoongi’s blood smeared hand is palm up, slowly inching forward, never looking away.

Hoseok also approaches slowly, angling himself to better see and better position himself in case things went dire. Closing in on the three of them, Hoseok realizes how young this wild Being really is. He couldn’t be more than 20 sols at most. Also, in this proximity, Hoseok recognizes the look in his eyes. It wasn’t aggression or threat- it was fear. It wasn’t aggression or primal instincts causing him to shake and growl, it was complete fear. But at the same time, despite this fear, he was crouching before Jimin, not moving away despite Jimin’s gentle words.

Slowly, Jimin extends his hand forward to, reaching towards Yoongi’s proffered hand. The young wild Being pauses, tearing his eyes away from Yoongi and instead looking at their hands.

‘It’s okay,’ Jimin tells him again, his words a little tense as though fighting pain. ‘Safe. Jimin safe, Yoongi safe, Hoseok safe.’

He just blinks, unmoving, still coiled as though waiting to spring into action.

‘Safe, Jungkook.’

His posture relents a little and Jimin’s hand safely reaches over to Yoongi’s still raised hand. Jimin smiles, eyes wrinkling as he looks over all of them, as though what just happened couldn’t have ever taken a turn for the worse. He tugs Yoongi closer, his other hand still gently caressing the young Being, Jungkook, over his nape and shoulders.

‘We need to go soon,’ Hoseok says quietly, more to Yoongi because he was the one who would understand. But to his surprise, Jimin nods and after a quick thoughtful look says, ‘Important- Jungkook important.’

‘What do you mean?’ Yoongi breathes out, hand gripping Jimin’s firmly.

‘Jungkook,’ Jimin says quietly, looking away from Yoongi before gently tugging at the rag like tunic Jungkook was wearing. ‘Show.’

Hoseok doesn’t understand what Jimin could possibly mean but there’s a sense of anticipation. Amidst the mess of what happened during the past 24 hours, with what they had seen, and with what they had heard; Hoseok is more than ready for anything.

Jungkook is clearly not here for this, but after a few gentle murmured words from Jimin, he shakily turns, bowing his head even more. Pity overwhelms Hoseok again, wanting nothing more than to bathe this child and feed him something warm and hearty.

Jimin pulls up the dirty rag like tunic, making soft soothing sounds as Jungkook shudders.

Hoseok thinks he’s ready for anything. And maybe he wouldn’t be surprised if a bunch of crazed Yishengs suddenly burst through. Or maybe if rabid creatures came to crash their impromptu meeting. Or maybe Namjoon would call to say Sk’jin had transformed into a cybortronic. He wouldn’t be surprised.

Maybe with one exception.

There on his back, a long indent runs down the back of the young Being’s spine. Identical to the one on Yoongi’s back. And if Hoseok isn’t mistaken (he isn’t) identical to the one on every Being born from one of those “eggs”.

‘Like you,’ Jimin says, his expression serious but at the same time eager. ‘Yoongi- like you. Same.’

‘Hoseok- we got Sk’jin inside, he’s stable-...torming a lot, have you-...nd Jimin?’ Hoseok nearly jumps at the unexpected call. Namjoon sounds breathless and strained.
Hoseok cautiously backs away, not wanting to speak too loudly in case he startled the others.

‘We found him- they’re both all right- Jimin and Yoongi- and Namjoon we uh- we found something-...well, someone.’ Hoseok says quietly, backing away slowly.

‘-hat? Found what-’

‘We have to go,’ Hoseok tells the group. ‘The storm will overwhelm us if we don’t go now- the road might still be clear, we need to leave now.’ He addresses Jimin next, wondering how and when he managed to understand Standard or if that had somehow been a fluke- like some survival instinct kicking in and taking over for a while.

‘Jimin- we need to go now, they’re waiting for us- I don’t know when it will be safe later.’

Jimin nods in complete understanding before he pulls down the tunic and says in a gentle tone, ‘Jungkook. Go, safe place. Safe home.’

The young Being shakes his head, eyes wild, body trembling.

‘Namjoon- we’re heading out in a few minutes- I don’t know how long it will take us- are you clear?’

‘-oming over now- visibility is lo-...iking you up wh-...dropped you-.’

‘Jungkook,’ Jimin repeats again, his tone is gently pleading and persuasive and for a moment Hoseok feels strangely persuaded but despite the fact that he didn’t need any persuasion in the first place. It occurs to him that Jimin is probably doing something out of his own ability, which then makes Hoseok wonder why he hadn’t done anything prior to this. He had effectively stunned an entire arena filled with battle-crazed Pompen, what stopped him from doing the same here?

Hoseok is suddenly very worried over Jimin, wondering how incapacitated he must have been, or what was done to him to make him this incapacitated.

After some shaky breaths the young Being, Jungkook, finally seems to calm down, his eyes taking a slightly glazed appearance.

‘Follow me,’ Jimin tells him, pulling him gently by the threadbare collar of his tunic. But Jimin struggles to stand, wincing in pain and then collapsing. But Yoongi is there before Jimin’s knees can hit the floor.

His movement is fast and it triggers Jungkook who jumps violently, snarling out, teeth snapping before he lunges at Yoongi.

But the Human is quick to defend himself and to Hoseok’s surprise, doesn’t harm Jungkook. Instead with deft movements, twists and deflects Jungkook away, bringing him down to the floor, and hitting a point on his neck that makes him immediately fall to the ground, unconscious.

All with one arm.

His other arm is holding Jimin against himself, allowing the latter to use him like a crutch to upright himself.

‘Jungkook!’ Jimin gasps out in worry.

‘He’ll be all right,’ Hoseok says quickly, rushing over to grab the unconscious Being. He’s extremely thin, but surprisingly tall as his limbs uncurl from their previous coiled and tense posture. Hoseok frowns as he lifts him into his arms; he barely weighed much and now that he wasn’t growling and snapping his teeth at them, Hoseok can see all too well how young he was.

‘Fuck.’

Shouldering the boy over his shoulders, Hoseok stands up and checks on Jimin.

He hadn’t even been able to protest or make any comment before Yoongi lifts him up and positions him onto his back.

‘Just hang on,’ Yoongi tells him quietly. ‘You’re safe now.’

Jimin wraps his arms around Yoongi’s shoulders as securely as he could with limbs that were clearly shaking and straining from the exertion of having to hold on. He winces, back curved in a way that Hoseok knew was a reaction of pain from somewhere on his torso. His head is wrapped in make-shift bandages, matted with blood and other dirt smeared all around it. They needed to really bring them back to the ship and have them treated.

And then gently, as though afraid of hurting Yoongi, Jimin leans his bruised head up against Yoongi’s blood splattered face. His eyes close, exhaling out shakily.

‘Safe,’ he whispers.

Yoongi doesn’t reply, only carefully hitches Jimin up a little higher on his back, arms securing around and under Jimin’s knees to support him.

‘I’ll lead,’ Hoseok tells them, ‘Stay low and behind me.’

Yoongi nods in reply and they set off.

‘Namjoon- what is your position?’

‘-e’re close-...hree minutes-’

‘Follow me- Namjoon is headed here.’

‘Sk’jin?’ Jimin asks quietly from behind them.

‘He’s- he’s all right,’ Hoseok replies, sparing a glance back to look at Yoongi. The Human shows now sign of remorse or regret. ‘Everyone is all right- we’re all safe.’

It was bizarre speaking to Jimin like this- like he could understand. It’s even more bizarre to hear his sigh of relief, followed by a low, ‘I’m happy.’

They enter the central-bridge without incident and it’s just as void of living Beings as it was when Hoseok had previously entered the place. He hears Jimin’s sharp intake of breath, but they move quickly, barely spending more than a few seconds as they dart through the thickening pools of blood on the floor.

‘Yoongi?’

They enter the long corridor and Yoongi still hasn’t responded to Jimin’s question. It was just his name- just a single word, but Hoseok can hear the multitudes of questions behind it.

It’s eerily silent and empty when they run out of the corridor and into what was previously a very large Docking Bay. The avalanche of ship parts and destroyed remnants of thousands of living Beings pile up everywhere. Oddly enough, it’s even more overwhelming empty than it was when it was bursting with panicked hysterical Ynqabans.

‘We need to move 3 more levels- Yoongi, you good?’ Hoseok asks, glancing back behind him and nearly pausing at the sight of the two behind him. It had been dark before, so Hoseok hadn’t been able to see them all too clearly.

There was an strange contrast between the two of them.

Yoongi was pale skinned, dark clothed, and expression blank, blood now browning and drying over his entire Being.

Jimin was warm skinned, dirty but pale clothes, splattered in blood and other things, openly crying tears as he looks around; pain apparent from his features.

But despite the obvious and immediate contrast, Hoseok can’t help but somehow pair the two unlikely Beings- fitting so close, so perfectly- yet terrifying, haunting, and beautiful all at the same time.

Almost like an eclipse.

Climbing up isn’t as difficult or cumbersome as Hoseok had anticipated; the lack of screaming and running Beings shows them closer and easier ways of moving upwards and Hoseok is no more strained than a Being carrying deadweight on his shoulders would be.

‘We’re here! Hurry up, lightning is catching on!’ Namjoon calls, the line much clearer.

‘They’re outside-’

‘-it’s raining,’ Yoongi states. ‘I don’t have a helmet, neither does Jimin.’

‘Give Jimin mine,’ Hoseok pauses shortly, ducking his head down. ‘Jimin, take the helmet-’

‘No- Hobi,’ Jimin shakes his head before gripping harder on Yoongi’s shoulders. ‘Fine- not hurt. Won’t hurt.’

‘It won’t be too bad on me either you’re not well-’

‘Jungkook- give to Jungkook-’ Jimin nods towards the unconscious child. They didn’t have time to argue or debate the matter so Hoseok just nods and starts jogging towards the large platform landing gateways, deftly removing his helmet tabs before applying them over Jungkook’s unconscious head.

‘This will hurt,’ Hoseok calls over his shoulder grimly, diverting a little to grab a large bit of canvas like fabric that had torn out the side of a make-shit tent. He throws it over to Jimin who catches it, wincing at his bruised and raw hands scrape against the harsh fabric.

‘So make sure to at least stop direct contact.’

‘Hoseok-!’ Jimin tries to make him stop but they don’t have time and at this moment they just really needed to get out.

The rain isn’t too bad at first- and if it weren’t this copious or heavy, Hoseok would have been able to tolerate the slight sting. But 10 seconds in his scalp is burning and try as he might, his eyes are burning too. Luckily the lights from the Užkulisai are strong and bright enough for Hoseok to just about make out where he was headed.

Hoseok increases his speed, finding the now damp gritty soil oddly good for running, and focuses on the bright lights ahead. However he’s distracted by a sudden and violent twitch.

‘Shit- shit!’

It’s cold, it hurts, and it’s an extremely effective way of waking anyone up. Hoseok picks up even more speed, not caring that Jungkook was now bouncing on his shoulder, clearly adding to the pain, triggering what was sure to be a confused and aggressive consciousness from the young Being. But the doorway to the antechamber is right there-

‘Hoseok where are you- the doors are opened and-’

Hoseok barely crosses over into the Užkulisai when Jungkook lets out a guttural scream and falls out of his shoulder in a loud wet heap. He skids across the floors, leaving behind a wet and dirty mess of rain water and grime.

‘What the fuck was that?!’ Namjoon demands, the ship tilting dangerously.

‘Jungkook you’re safe-’ Hoseok tries to calm the young Being, speaking in a low tone, trying his best to sound gentle despite the creeping gnawing at his skin from under the suit where the rainwater had seeped in. He swallows with great pain, unable to catch his breath, throat raw and his windpipe stuffed.

Yoongi and Jimin appear behind him, both of them collapsing onto the ground in a pained heap. Jimin curls up on the floor at once, his body trembling against his will but he’s trying to move- trying to get to-

‘Jungkook-!’

Jungkook is bordering hysteria, clawing at his head and face, trying to remove the mask. Hoseok can hear him hyperventilating and screaming under the helmet. He stumbles out of the antechamber and into the Lobby, falling heavily against the wall, trying to crack the helmet open by hitting it against the wall. Hoseok follows at once, only just aware that he too was breathing harshly and very loudly. He wants to approach Jungkook, to calm him down or at least knock him out but he’s too violent, too scared, too-

‘Jungkook it’s all right,’ Hoseok painfully gasps out, ‘You’re-’

‘Hobi? Chim?’

Taeh’yung appears from the other side of the Lobby where the Medical Bays were- he’s also wet, hair clinging to the side of his face. He looks worried, eyes wide. But before Hoseok can warn him, before he can say anything, Jungkook finally frees himself of the helmet, letting out a strangled guttural scream.

‘Oh!’ Taeh’yung gasps loudly, a smile forming on his face as he looks at Jungkook, ‘Another baby-’

With a loud shriek and with speed and force that has Hoseok reeling, Jungkook launches himself at Taeh’yung, burying his teeth into the Zhak’gri’s neck, taking them both down.

‘Taeh’yung!’
(Author’s Note)

So.
Jungkook.
Yeap.
Imagine him from around their debut era, a whole baby, must protect (says the person who is doing this to him sigh)
Important note here and disclaimer- you cannot knock someone out by simply applying pressure to certain nerve points. It’s kinda impossible but then again this is sci-fi but I thought I needed to clarify that because I am not about misinformation Pretends like I knew this all along and didn’t only just find out I was lied to all my life, thank you every martial arts film ever made as well as star trek that being said there are areas in the body that if hit with enough pressure and years of training and skill and with the right timing/environment, you can knock someone out with a quick jab right at their windpipe in the throat- this isn’t a joke, but should be used for very very serious situations where it’s life or death because you could potentially kill the other person.
i swear this was just research idk how i ended up with all of this info please don’t report me and yeaaaaa I sort of made my 10 days schedule xD
ALSO DDAENG HAD ME DEAD
JUST WHEN I THOUGHT
NOTHING COULD BEAT OUTRO: TEAR RAPLINE GOES AND DOES THIS I AM NOT ALL RIGHT
So in case you don’t read my other fics, just some minor news about how I might randomly go mia or not responding to comments is because my sister has been really unwell for the past year, and we’ve finally found a diagnosis and so now we’re treating her. She’s scheduled for surgery next week I think and though the entire thing is not life-threatening or a very complex procedure (it’s Cushing’s Disease and apparently only 1 in every 10 million ever contract it?!?!? Like, thank you life?!?!?) but it’s still stressful T_T
Writing gives me a way out of thinking too much, but so does replying to comments and I’m sorry if I haven’t replied!!
And how do you tattoo a gif of Yoongi telling Jimin he loves him and Jimin’s reaction onto your forehead? Asking for a friend
“‘Taeh’yung!’

A flash of green erupts, flooding the Lobby and blinding everyone. Hoseok feels himself being pushed backwards by the force of the rippling energy that expands all over and retreats back just as quickly right back to where Taeh’yung had fallen over.

‘Taeh’yung!’

Jimin is partially hyperventilating, face grimaced in pain as he struggles under Yoongi’s bodily protection. The Human made himself into a living shield, covering Jimin from whatever Taeh’yung had just released.

‘What the fuck is going on-?!’

Hoseok heaves as he stands, dizzy and pained and more or less barely staggers forward a few steps before he hears Taeh’yung’s giggle.

‘Buggy-?’

Taeh’yung appears from behind the lounge seats, looking remarkably well save for the slight bloody mess on his neck. And in his arms he’s carrying Jungkook, who appeared to be-‘-fucking Spaces did you kill him?!’ Hoseok demands, pain forgotten as he rushes forward.

‘What? No!’ Taeh’yung looks wounded at being questioned so, cradling Jungkook even closer away from Hoseok almost. ‘He’s my baby! And so young!’

‘Tae-‘ a pained gasp from behind him resounds across the room.

Taeh’yung’s wounded expression changes to comic worry the moment he notices Jimin and Yoongi. He unceremoniously dumps Jungkook on the cushions and Hoseok is almost afraid to check on the young Being.

Obviously Taeh’yung wouldn’t have killed him, not especially after that excited look on his face when he saw Jungkook. How could Taeh’yung know what Jungkook was?

‘Lisai, medical scan right now,’ Hoseok orders as he painfully picks up Jungkook again. He was knocked out cold, face still and expressionless and so so young. Hoseok looks away to stop himself from feeling anymore than he was comfortable with.

Taeh’yung is helping Jimin who has a frown on his face, looking up and around almost confused before he asks, ‘Sk’jin?’.
‘He’s recovering,’ Taeh’yung tells him, sounding unexpectedly grave unlike how he had been cooing over Jimin and Yoongi just seconds ago. Jimin is still confused and with more strength and energy than Hoseok thought he possessed, Jimin trips forward and into the center Medical Bay.

Taeh’yung follows him at once but Yoongi remains behind.

‘Yoongi- you need to get checked too-‘

‘I think he has really realized it,’ Yoongi says unexpectedly.

‘Realized what?’ Hoseok asks, unsure what the context behind Yoongi’s words were.

‘That I am not Yoongi,’ is the Human’s extraordinary reply.

‘What do you mean?’

Hoseok really wishes that the Beings around him would stop talking in riddles and metaphors and incomplete monologues spoken out loud.

‘The Yoongi he knew would have never done this.’ Yoongi says as he helps Hoseok stabilize Jungkook in his arms. ‘The Yoongi he knew would have never let Sk’jin go. The Yoongi he knew would have never let him go.’

‘Yoongi this is hardly your fault-‘

‘He needs to put in a Bed,’ Yoongi swiftly takes over, taking Jungkook from Hoseok. ‘I’ll set him up, you’ll be needed in the Bridge-‘

‘Namjoon can handle it for now it’s on autopilot,’ Hoseok replies with a dismissive wave of his hand before adding, ‘

‘Even if the Yoongi in the past had done what I did today, he would be remorseful. He would feel guilt from his actions,’ Yoongi looks up, face splotched with discolouration from acid burns, dried blood, and dirty water. ‘I feel none.’

‘The “Yoongi in the past”? What do you mean?” Hoseok frowns as they enter the closest Bay. ‘Do you remember?’

The whole ship suddenly tilts, the lights flickering a little. Hoseok rights himself, dropping Jungkook’s legs in the process.

‘Namjoon what was that-‘

Yoongi darts to the side, pulling up a digital screen and accessing the surveillance from outside. It’s dark and only actually visible during the lightning strikes- but the stark and bright light formations are enough to inform them both on what was happening.

‘We’re being shot at-!’ Hoseok curses as another missile fires at their wings. Though there is no harm done, it’s disconcerting in this weather and with so many injured.

‘How?! We’re undetectable-‘

‘But we’re visible-’ Hoseok curses. ‘We need to lose them higher up in the clouds I’m coming right now-‘

This time something very powerful erupts around them, the whole ship shuddering violently. The lights flicker and for a moment the Medical Beds almost light-out.

‘Magnetic-pulses,’ Yoongi states rather simply as he picks up Jungkook’s legs and places them over onto the Bed. ‘They’re trying to shut us down.’

‘Lisai activate Bed 3 for complete scan and diagnosis, follow up on any required operation required- induce temporary delta sleep.’

‘Understood.’

Quickly placing Jungkook inside the Bed and activating the emergency safety straps, Hoseok darts out, wincing with every step he ran.

‘Yoongi we need you at the Mast,’ he calls back before rushing up the stairs. ‘Buggy, you’re in charge of the Medical Bays- make sure they’re healing.’

‘Okay!’ is Taeh’yung’s much too bright response for such a situation. Though Hoseok doesn’t want to hear Taeh’yung sounding serious because that would end rather formidably for everyone involved.

Literally tripping into the Bridge, Hoseok balances himself and skids past Namjoon who is valiantly steering the ship. Hoseok would commend him but is rather alarmed to find that Namjoon was literally watching a video-guide on how to pilot the Uzkulisai through the welcome package that’s a part of Lisai’s system.

‘A guide?’ Hoseok comments, unable to help himself.

‘And I’ve managed to not crash us so it’s working fine,’ Namjoon snaps but any other comment is lost on Hoseok.

A sizeable portion of Namjoon’s bionic skin has been eroded, exposing the strange network of bionic mesh, metallic skeleton, and an alarming glimpse into what Hoseok can only reason is his brain.

‘Fuck.’

‘Yeah now not the time can you please take over I might actually break down from stress,’ Namjoon actually does look incredibly, and comically, stressed.

Hoseok slips into his seat, safety straps shoot out instantly, locking him in securely and just in time because a small fleet of flying Transporters appear directly before them and Hoseok takes over manually, pulling up sharp.

‘We can’t warp with all the debris outside or the storm,’ Namjoon exhales out as though genuinely breathless as he takes actual physical steps away from the cockpit as though to distance himself from the experience.

‘We need to get past their moon at least.’

‘Are we on track?’

‘Coordinates have already been set-’

A bright explosion erupts around, tilting the ship dangerously again.

‘Fuck-’
‘They’re trying to get our wings,’ Hoseok frowns, ‘They’re not equipped enough to take us down or cause damage but-’

‘But what?’

‘This storm-’

Lightning bolts the width of the Užkulisai flashes before them, heavy, destructive, and Hoseok can practically feel its power, goose-bumps erupting over his arms. His hair stands on end as the air outside the ship ignites and bursts into molten specks of light, sparking up the glass, threatening to eat its way inside.

‘Lisai track lightning and-’

A bright surge of power ripples through the ship and it’s immediately followed by a flurry of missiles.

‘Are- are they actually timing this?!’ Namjoon curses, strapping himself next to Hoseok. ‘What the fuck-!?’

A fleet of heavy large-framed Transporters appear out of nowhere, and to Hoseok’s horror physically drive themselves into the Užkulisai.

‘We need to take them down-’

‘Yoongi! Bridge now!’ Hoseok yells, a flare of irritation flooding him at the Human’s absence.

‘Is he all right-’

‘He’s fine-ish,’ Hoseok snaps before yelling, ‘Yoongi we need you at the Mast, Jimin will be alright Taeh’yung will see to him-’

Yoongi appears, unfazed and calm looking. He walks down to the Mast, without so much as sparing them a glance and is seated at the Mast.

‘Well that didn’t take much convincing-’

‘Lightning forming in 2.1 seconds.’

‘Shift gravity-alignment to Bridge!’ Namjoon orders just before Hoseok dives downwards, the ship tilting down onto its nose. But before momentum and Ynqaba’s gravity tugs at them, the ship re-configures its internal gravity-generator and adjusts itself to the balance of the Bridge’s floor, mainly the cockpit.

And using this sudden dive as leverage and momentum, Yoongi fires, bright blue tails appearing to curve upwards and away through the storm. To Hoseok’s surprise, Yoongi has fired the ship’s arsenal of what he considers rather weak for a situation like this.

And despite the previous irritation, feels guilty as he glances at the back of the Human’s head. But now was not the time to be thinking of anything other than dodging lightning and Transporter’s turned missiles. Instead he pushes away any feelings of guilt at having snapped at Yoongi and concentrates on his confusion as to why Yoongi seemed to have rather pointlessly fired out those missiles.

That is until another massive bolt of lightning erupts right behind them.
It’s not just the sound of thunder that explodes with so much force and raw energy, and the lightning that branches out immediately after is laced in bright-blue, similar to that of the proton-missiles Yoongi had just fired.

‘The fleet behind us is gone.’ Namjoon reports rather mutely, as though in awe of Yoongi’s actions.

‘There will be more above us.’

‘I’ll clear the path,’ Yoongi announces from the front.

For some reason this sends a strange shiver down Hoseok’s back. Glancing over at Namjoon, the Kutsoglerin doesn’t seem to notice anything odd. Instead he’s concentrating on the NaviLet in his hands.

‘We still don’t know what happened to The Omhlophe’s ship—though the magnetic pulse would have taken them out for a few hours—’

‘—they’ve had plenty of time to recover since then,’ Hoseok completes his sentence. ‘But they can’t detect us like this— we at least have that.’

‘Doesn’t stop us from being visible— fuck, how are they still tracking us through this storm?!’

From what Hoseok could gather about this planet in the short but stressful time he’s been here, it was that the planet and her people were, mildly putting it, hoarders.

The storm they were passing through was something of a gigantic blanket of charged particles and ions, creating its own channels, disrupting everything in its path that was remotely digital or computerized. Judging by how the Ynqabans made use of old mechanical constructs, and also judging the make and design of the Transporters he had seen in-planet and off-planet, it was safe to say they relied more on fuel rather than energy-cells, allowing them to survive and pilot their crafts through the acidic storm raging through their stratosphere.

This also meant that even the most simple and basic radio-based scanner would be able to detect the complete lack of this charged space. They were undetectable yes, but in this situation, that was what made them starkly visible.

‘We just need to get out of the storm,’ Hoseok grunts as he twists them sharply and then pulls them up.

Yoongi fires again and follows it up with another singular one right above them.

The light that erupts around them is blinding and lasts for almost a while 10 seconds until they’re suddenly above the storm, lightning chasing them upwards as though unwilling to let go.

Sparks melt and expand almost like rain on a window pane would before dissipating entirely as they now exit the planet. The storm below them looks almost solid, like a mass of slowly churning thick blackened water. Lightning erupts somewhere below, illuminating the sheer depth of the thunderstorm they had just escaped.

The Užkulisai shivers just a little as they burn through the final layers of the exosphere, leaving behind a dirty grey curvature of Ynqaba in their wake. Ahead of them, is a whole new level of stress.

There must have been some more space-battles or this area they had unfortunately decided to shoot out of was chalk-full of moon-rock, large shrapnel, asteroids, and other debris.
'We need to have at least 8 Steps cleared before we can hope to warp in this mess,' Namjoon calculates. ‘The ship is already prepared to dodge the larger asteroids-’ ‘They’re still here.’ Yoongi announces rather simply from the front, pointing to the side.

Hoseok’s stomach feels it suddenly inverted when he spots a familiar white ship in the distance, hovering near the broken moon.

‘Great-

‘And we’re getting out now!’ Hoseok curses, boosting their engines to maximum. ‘Yoongi-’

The Human doesn’t need to be told.

Pulling up the manual control that locks the Human up into an almost standing pose, Yoongi deploys the proton-cannons.

Unlike in the storm where the explosions of highly charged ions and particles doubled and exaggerated the force and effects of the smaller proton-missiles, out here in Space, the cannons create clear and clean tunnels through the debris.

There is no display of fire or particles reacting and fusing and falling apart violently. Instead oddly stark beams of a rather dull white fans out before them in one sweeping motion, taking with it anything that it touched.

A cloud of fine dust washes over their windows rather slowly, as though somehow surprised at finding itself reduced to such a state.

‘This is very harsh on our energy levels,’ Namjoon alerts them quickly. ‘You cannot use this more than 5 times-’

Another extended wave of dull white sweeps their way and Namjoon grimaces.

‘It’s the fastest way,’ Hoseok mutters before ordering, ‘Lisai prepare for warp now, shift manual warp to me after we’re green.’

‘Understood.’

‘Buggy, report.’

‘Jin stable! Baby stable and really knocked out! Working on Chim! He can talk now!’

Namjoon has an incredulously confused expression on his face at that, like he has at least five questions to ask.

‘Ready for warp at your command.’

‘We’re halfway-’ Namjoon glances over at the white speck in the distance, clearly praying or something that they don’t see them despite the amount of action following them. The Ynqaban fleet fires out of their planet’s spherical border and like projectile missiles shoot straight at them.

‘They’re shockingly fast,’ Hoseok complains just as Yoongi quietly remarks, ‘Adjust tilt-shift to 36 degrees please.’

Hoseok complies, unsure what to expect. Yoongi fires another cannon but it seems to pretty much miss everything in front of them and rather uselessly chips off random asteroids.
‘Yoongi-’ Namjoon sounds like he’s ready to tell Yoongi down to the fractions of how much the cannons were draining their energy levels when he pauses and says, ‘Eh- good idea.’

The half-eradicated asteroids ricochet off of their position from the sudden eruption of energy that blasted their halves into oblivion. In doing so, causing a high-speed chain of reactions where the previously still and thick ocean of space debris starts to shuffle around haphazardly, crashing into the Ynqaban fleet.

‘-17 degrees please.’

Hoseok complies without question.

‘We’re halfway-...’ Namjoon pauses, head still as he stares out of one side of the window.

‘Fuck don’t tell me-’

‘They’re getting closer- they’ve spotted us-’

‘Lisai redirect anti-matter from Medical Bay reserve into cannon tank and fuse cannons 2 and 4, and cannons 1 and 3 together,’ Yoongi orders. ‘Extend and add range.’

‘Redirecting- Captain please confirm orders.’

‘Confirming orders, do it now!’ Namjoon yells as he gets up quickly, rushing down to the Mast next to Yoongi. He locks himself into the seat, lifting up in a similar way to Yoongi, hands gripping the controls as well. To Hoseok’s immense disquiet, the speck of white that he knows is the Omhlophe’s ship has become more than a speck, a blurred cloud around it where asteroids and debris were being blasted away as well.

‘In 3,’ Yoongi says quietly. Namjoon nods. ‘Hobi, 41 degrees.’

Hoseok complies immediately before calling out, ‘Buggy we’re going to warp - secure yourself and Jimin.’

‘1.’

‘Okay!’

‘2.’

‘Launching into warp-!’

‘1.’

Yoongi and Namjoon both pull down on the controls, syncing their timing and firing at the same time.

Brighter than before but strangely smaller than before, the cannons erupt out faster and extends twice as far.

‘Warping in 3-’

The light fades and a clear path, carved clean and dark through the asteroids appears. It also shows the Omhlophe ship closing in at an astounding pace.

‘2.’
A bright flurry of heat signals indicate a barrage of missiles aimed at them from behind them.

‘I.’

Light bends and refracts, pulling and distorting the physics of their surroundings, impossibly bright light spilling through the gaps of stretched elements and particles.

The Uzkulisai launches into warp and within a second, they were back in the familiar non-space of warped space and time.

No one moves, no one says a word. Hoseok can still see the way Namjoon and Yoongi are both still gripping onto their controls, shoulders tensed, fingers ready to pull at launch-triggers and deploy any and all missiles.

It’s painstakingly quiet and Hoseok cannot remotely imagine relaxing at this point. They’re all incredibly high-strung; as though waiting for something to happen. Anything.

They were at warp yes, but lately even infallible notions and truths were proving themselves temporary and Hoseok can’t shake off the feeling of being watched, of being followed.

It’s after a few minutes that Namjoon deactivates the chair from attack-mode. He seems to fold into his seat, exhaling out tiredly.

‘How’s Sk’jin?’ Hoseok asks, glancing at his medical tab anyways.

‘I don’t know,’ Namjoon replies as Yoongi also settles back into his chair, posture still stiff though that was how Yoongi looked anyways. ‘When we got to him...he- he wasn’t breathing. I swear he died.’

‘What happened?’

‘Taeh’yung,’ is all Namjoon says. ‘He did something. I don’t know what, but Sk’jin was breathing again. There…-there was colour on his face- I don’t know.’

They sit in silence again. Hoseok finally disengages the defense-mode over the ship, adjusting the shields back to normal and realigning the cannons back to normal.

‘Lisai run a scan, report any and all irregularities on all functions and systems,’ Namjoon orders, unmoving from where he was slumped.

‘Understood.’

‘Who is that?’ Namjoon asks, not having to clarify himself because there was no one else he could be talking about.

‘His name is Jungkook,’ Hoseok answers, glancing at his medical tab as well.

‘Care to tell me why he’s in the ship?’ Namjoon asks tiredly.

‘He’s like me.’ Yoongi replies unexpectedly.

‘...former GI?’ Namjoon asks carefully.

‘No, I don’t think so,’ Hoseok replies when Yoongi doesn’t. ‘He’s too young; he’s...he’s almost wild. Creature-like. He has the same mark down his back like Yoongi- and he was...he was protecting Jimin? We had to be careful- didn’t trust us until Jimin said it was all right.’
Namjoon doesn’t even stir at the news.

‘It makes sense,’ he mutters instead. ‘In some stupid fucked up way, it all makes sense.’

Hoseok nods in agreement.

They sit in silence for a few more minutes.

‘Where even are we going now?’ Hoseok asks after a few minutes.

‘Sticking to the plan, we’re headed to Grisial,’ Namjoon replies before he stands up slowly, as though his entire body was in pain.

‘You look like shit- you should go clean up,’ Hoseok remarks.

‘So do you,’ Namjoon rolls his eyes, which is a little alarming right now because his left eye is a little exposed, the skin around his socket having burnt off.

Hoseok’s skin has stopped stinging, his body no longer feeling fevered but rather almost numbed and strangely light.

‘I should shower,’ Hoseok frowns before he catches sight of Yoongi’s faded blue hair. ‘You too Yoongi.’

‘I’ll keep watch.’

Namjoon frowns at the Human who doesn’t even look around to acknowledge them. Namjoon raises a single brow in inquiry, eyeing the Human in question. They both remembered the odd messages they had received from the Human prior to losing communication with him. Hoseok still can’t understand the level and depth of how unhinged the Human had been when he found him. It was as though he was someone else.

Hoseok shakes his head in reply and gets up from his chair, and all numbness fades away and gives way to the sticky burning feeling eating at his skin. Wincing Hoseok nods towards the entrance of the Bridge. Namjoon is still looking at Yoongi worriedly.

‘We’re in warp,’ Namjoon tells the Human, ‘Lisai will take over and we can come back asap- we at least need to have you scanned.’

It wasn’t even the fact that he was drenched in acidic rain, and still somewhat smeared in blood and dirt, or how his suit was scratched and peeling in some areas from whatever single-handed massacre he had conducted inside that Central Bridge.

‘I’ll keep watch.’ Yoongi states again.

‘You’re injured-’

‘You can relieve me when you have treated yourself and Hoseok.’ the Human turns his head a little, looking at them both briefly. ‘I am a-ok.’

Namjoon looks like he’s going to argue but Hoseok shakes his head at the Kutsoglerin.

‘The medical kit should be below your seat,’ Hoseok tells the Human who nods his splotchy blue-haired head in reply. ‘Tell us at once if you’re not well.’

Yoongi replies with a thumbs up this time.
Swallowing his pills dry, Namjoon wraps his burnt off bionic skin with lengths of tissue-plast. Not that he could feel the pain of it— it was just uncomfortable and seeing as he had the items needed to regrow his bionic skin, he might as well. Namjoon has long realized that no matter what Species you were, appearing unlike what you are perceived to look like caused more problems and difficulty than he was willing to deal with. And with the state of their ship being as such, Namjoon doesn’t think it would do anyone any good to walk around with their skull exposed. He’d seen the way Sk’jin had studied him before, and most recently the way Hoseok had looked at him.

And like an identification tab that would forever label him for the rest of his life, Namjoon knows he won’t be able to ever get away from the nightmares that birthed who he was today.

Pulling on new clothes Namjoon exits his Cabin to find Hoseok waiting for him near the Kitchen, nursing a nearly empty bottle of ionized water in his hands. His mouth is stuffed with some form of food Namjoon is guessing, though Hoseok himself doesn’t really seem to know what he was eating in the first place. Noticing Namjoon, he makes his way across.

Hoseok had applied a generous amount of repair-serum all over his skin. It’s already halfway healed, but areas around his neck, face, and hands were still serrated and raw. His hair has been pushed back, still very damp from having showered.

‘All good?’ Namjoon inquires. Hoseok nods in reply.

‘What happened with Yoongi?’

Hoseok hands him a filled bottle of ionized-water before he replies, ‘I think he’s—...I think he’s remembering a lot from his past- or at least the past of the Being he was modelled after or something.’

‘Did he say something?’

‘That,’ Hoseok nods, ‘And there was a moment where he didn’t seem to realize where he was- or who I was.’

‘Memory regression?’

‘I don’t know- but I think…’ Hoseok pauses, crossing his arms as he leans on the wall to the side, expression thoughtful. ‘Having Jungkook here, is going to help explain a lot of things. Taeh’yung called him a baby- the same way he did Jimin when he first “sensed” him. The same way he addresses every other “egg”- even Yoongi.’

‘What triggered it? Yoongi I mean- ever since that planet, he’s been off.’ Namjoon trails off.

‘What happened?’ Hoseok asks.

Namjoon fills him in on what happened in the Nightmare Planet, explaining what they found, and how they were now virtually flying invisible. About how Yoongi had collapsed, how Sk’jin had changed, how Jimin who wasn’t lying (or couldn’t), was clearly not telling them everything anyways.

Hoseok remains silent for a while after the explanation.

Namjoon doesn’t realize it until this immediate moment but Spaces did he miss having Hoseok around. The ship felt complete now. The tenseness of his entire Being just eases completely.

‘I’ve always had this question in my mind,’ he says quietly. ‘Why Yoongi?’

‘What do you mean? He’s part of the GI, or was part of it at least-’

‘It’s not that,’ Hoseok shakes his head. ‘There’s something else. I kept thinking that at first Sk’jin was the variable- the single addition that made no sense to this team.’

Namjoon wants to comment that he too thought like that and hasn’t actually really changed his mind about it either.

‘There’s no need to mention or hide the fact that we’re all extremely aware and paranoid of each other and our personal involvement with this case,’ Hoseok begins, ‘And while this case is no doubt, for the original reasons intended, important, there is obviously more to it.’

Namjoon nods in agreement.

‘I expected Sk’jin to be the odd one out- he certainly fit the role, no ship actually requires a Communications Manager to function. But he’s here. I even entertained ideas that he was here to spy- to feed back information and honestly his behavior certainly added to it.’

‘I’m assuming you changed your mind.’

‘I did, I have changed my mind,’ Hoseok nods slowly.

‘How come?’

‘Because Sk’jin is too angry. He’s too…’ Hoseok sighs out slowly, ‘He’s too broken.’

Namjoon wasn’t expecting that reply.

‘And...and so now you think somehow that Yoongi-’

‘I don’t think anyone is being used as a spy- I don’t think that’s even part of the equation anymore,’ Hoseok replies shaking his head. ‘I think...I think we’re looking at this the wrong way.’

‘How so?’

‘We are all potential threats,’ Hoseok states flatly. ‘Whether or not what we want is a simple life away from our wonderful pasts, we all have agendas and ideals. We all have greed, desire, fears- in short, things that can be used to manipulate us.’

‘Okay…’

‘We’re too closely tied to the Gaia Case- we are…’ Hoseok is struggling for words, ‘We’re too unpredictable- too dangerous to completely let go of, too important to kill.’

Namjoon nods slowly in agreement. He knew that, because that was why he knew that knowing what he did, he was safe from the Venture Unit/GLA’s possible decision to mark him out permanently. It had been his security- a double edged sword essentially. And it had been the same for Hoseok, and Namjoon had suspected the same for Sk’jin too.

‘Chaotic particles when alone often berserk out, causing or catalyzing reactions that cannot be predicted or determined.’

‘So basically they put us all here to keep a collective eye on all of us,’ Namjoon summarizes.

‘But there was no need to add Yoongi.’

‘But he knows-’

‘How do you think Yoongi became who he is? He talks about suddenly “knowing” or how he “woke up”. Yoongi was chosen for something. Out of all the Beings, of all the eggs that GI had with them or whatever they are, Yoongi was chosen and he’s aware. Only him- his name hasn’t changed, they knew who they were picking when they put Yoongi in the team.’

‘Because of Jimin,’ Namjoon states.

‘Because of Jimin,’ Hoseok nods in agreement. ‘This mission was always about Jimin- but now that I think about it. It has more to do with Yoongi, or at least, the both of them together, or something they both collectively know.’

‘But Yoongi has no memories—... he’s starting to remember.’

‘I can only assume he is,’ Hoseok shrugs, gnawing at his inner cheek before continuing, ‘There was more to why Yoongi was in that planet. There is more to Jimin’s story, not that I think he’s lying, but there was definitely something happening within his System than he was made aware of. A System like that, with such technology, the GLA would never let go that easy.’

‘So you think Yoongi might actually know more to all of this than he himself is aware of?’

‘I think both Yoongi and Jimin actually know more than they’re aware of.’ Hoseok corrects, ‘And we are just here to enable them.’

Namjoon pauses at that, his mind churning. ‘So what do we do?’

Hoseok shrugs in reply as though to say like hell I know and Namjoon can only grimace in reply because that was true. What could they do? While this was an interesting take on the whole matter, it still didn’t change the truth of their reality; they were still stuck in square one. In fact with what just happened in Ynqaba, Namjoon is pretty sure they’ve gone back a few squares and were now firmly in the negatives somewhere. But hey at least none of them were dead.

Maybe very injured and with an additional Being on board.

Speaking of which.

‘You said that the Being was like Yoongi- what else? Were there more of him around?’

‘I don’t know,’ Hoseok replies honestly. ‘It was just him in there- with Jimin. I thought about it and I think Jimin was thrown in there in hopes he’d be slaughtered.’

Namjoon grimaces at that.

‘What changed?’

‘Well...it’s Jimin isn’t it?’ Hoseok has a small smile, ‘He has that effect. Look at Yoongi.’
Namjoon nods in agreement a split second later.

‘He’s not GI- so I don’t know how he …-well, how he came to be. All the others I saw at the ship-they were mostly all fully grown, and very asleep. I don’t know how they could’ve woken him up-not in a planet like Ynqaba at least.’

‘The Omhlophe were waiting for delivery from that System though,’ Namjoon frowns. ‘That and the fact that there was clear Yisheng involvement of sorts. Maybe that ship was carrying eggs, and judging by the crash, the eggs…well, they just happened to be there?’

‘And the Omhlophe heard of it, and sent out their own people to search for more?’ Namjoon tries, ‘Spaces, how many of the eggs are down in Ynqaba? Or in that System overall?’

‘What- like, living breathing aware eggs?’ Hoseok asks, ‘Hard to imagine them so. Jungkook doesn’t seem all too tame- he can speak a little, but it’s like he’s survived solely on fear and whatever primal instincts he was born with.’

‘It’s not hard to imagine actually,’ Namjoon shakes his head, ‘The GI aren’t exactly prime examples of what these Beings were designed or gathered to be.’

Hoseok listens intently.

‘When the Akramanese, or the Red Evil as Jimin knows them, wanted to overthrow the Universe in their own twisted way, they were basically harvesting the Known Universe, for the most perfect or ideal “samples” of each Species, of each Race, to recreate them perfectly, into their own Universe. They didn’t just inherit the Yisheng’s fucked up ideology but added more to it by wanting to grow their know Universe with what already existed here.’ Namjoon explains, ‘So those they harvested, they were in every way ideal, created to be the best of who they were, to essentially restart Life. They were made better, stronger- they were made equal.’

‘So you’re saying that there is a whole population of…genetically superior versions of every Species out there who are capable of their own thinking, asleep inside OrTanks, and now, we have these Beings who call themselves the Pure Ones are after them?’ Hoseok whistles low. ‘And they know who Jimin is, and are now without a doubt, after him, meaning all of us?’

‘Yeah so question is how they know about the “eggs”, and what they want with them, and who they are,’ Namjoon carefully pushes at his tissue-plast that he could feel slipping off. ‘And most importantly why they want Jimin.’

Hoseok nods in agreement.

‘Is that where that rumor about only GI agents being able to take on each other comes from?’ Hoseok asks wryly before adding, ‘So Jimin could take Yoongi down?’

‘Yoongi would lose to Jimin regardless.’ Namjoon waves a hand dismissively, ‘But this goes beyond that- I’ve been thinking about this for sometime but I think there’s a difference between the GI and the well, eggs.’

‘What do you mean?’

‘I think that…fundamentally speaking, the origins of the GI, and the origins of the eggs are pretty much the same,’ Namjoon explains. Hoseok nods, encouraging him to continue. ‘But the way they are born- more like the way they…they become, is different.’

‘In what way?’
‘From what we know of the GI, and what Yoongi has sort of told us, and what we’ve heard in regards to the whole myth, they’re practically like cyborgs, not entirely capable of self-aware comprehension or expression. They just simply exist- quite literally almost exactly like what the Yisheng wanted in the first place. However, seeing Jimin, and judging by how you described the new Being, both of whom are clearly not GI or affiliated with the GI, their wakening, and their conscious selves are very...well very alive.’

‘Do you think there are more...more of them out in the Universe? I mean, in all honesty, transporting all sorts of living Beings illegally in OrTanks isn’t unusual. If these OrTanks were ever misplaced or lost, and the Beings inside them...woke up, then are they out there, unaware and just...just living?’ Hoseok asks carefully.

Namjoon shrugs in response again, ‘That’s a possibility. And judging by what we’ve seen so far, not a theory we can just ignore and say isn’t plausible. Not to mention the Alliance probably had some hand in all of this, if they were also transporting eggs like Seulgaan did, then this could have spread wider and further.’

‘What do you think happened to Seulgaan?’ Hoseok asks after a few seconds.

‘I don’t know,’ Namjoon frowns. He’d completely forgotten about the Tayian amidst everything that had happened. ‘Probably struck a deal or something and he’s in the other side of the Universe.’

‘We could do it you know,’ Hoseok says shortly.

‘Do what?’

‘Track Seulgaan’s movement, narrow and define his contacts, find the others who are doing the same thing. See who they’re connected to.’

‘We could, but not with what we’re carrying- who we’re carrying,’ Namjoon shakes his head. ‘My curiosity and stubbornness already got us neck-deep into trouble. While I stand by the fact that Sk’jin purposefully kept information away from us, leading us to trouble with Orvan at the beginning of this mission waylaid us, my inability to see beyond what I wanted to see has gotten us here and here is not where I want us. We could have progressed further, progressed in a safer and faster route- one where we didn’t have to lose you and I am sorry for that.’

Hoseok looks surprised.

‘Thank you for coming back.’

‘...you kinda rescued me so it’s not like you really gave me a chance to choose.’

Namjoon nearly chokes on his own spit but then Hoseok burst out laughing.

‘It’s good to be back,’ Hoseok coughs out, patting him on the shoulder, ‘Can’t let you and Sk’jin kill each other in front of the children.’

‘The children are probably older than us,’ Namjoon deadpans.

‘I’ll go relieve Yoongi,’ Hoseok wheezes out, grabbing another bottle of ionized water and some snacks from a cupboard. ‘I’ll check over the reports as well and scan the Underverse for news.’

‘Spaces, please never leave again,’ Namjoon groans as Hoseok snorts again with a wave of his bandaged hand.
He waits until Hoseok is out of earshot and quietly calls out, ‘Lisai, is it possible to legally bind Hoseok permanently in service of the Užkulisai?’

‘That is a violation of Code 002 under the protocols regarding the establishment and practice of free-will. Unless you wish to force team members under a contract of slavery.’

‘Never mind.’

Namjoon doesn’t know why he’s sneaking into the Medical Bays but he is. He looks inside where “Jungkook” was being treated. Stepping in, he notices how the young Being...is actually incredibly young. It’s worrisome almost, the amount of injury and wounds he had. According to his health tab, he was estimated at 27 sols old.

There’s something different about how you become as a Being born into pain. Namjoon doesn’t know what to think of the Being before him.

Sure with him here, maybe they could have a clearer understanding of who and what he was, including Yoongi, Jimin, and a whole population of others like him. But then what would they do after?

‘Lisai do we have a complete biodata on him?’

‘Yes Captain, monitor 2 is updating.’

Namjoon pulls up monitor 2 and skims through the contents and is surprised.

‘Species: Pravasi M’hanun. Race: Vicitra.’

He didn’t look like any of the Vicitra Namjoon has seen before, live and or documented. But perhaps like every other specimen found within the OrTanks, he too had been modified or “made better”; something both the Yishengs and the Akramanese seemed to deem incredibly important.

Stepping closer to the Bed, Namjoon carefully examines the Vicitra.

The Vicitra were known cannibals, eating and consuming their own kind though it was not their only source of food of course. Cannibalism was part of their culture, a way of showing dominance, power, and or victory. They were normally very pale skinned, almost a pale lilac to an extent, and had blood-tinted finger tips, eye sockets, and other extremities. While the Pravasi M’hanun weren’t the most advanced of cultures or Species, the Vicitra were something of a prime example of top-notch evolutionary progress. They were cunning, intelligent, highly adaptive, and could put on a terrifyingly convincing persona of civility. And while their rather crude and bloody culture did influence their entire behavior as a Species, the Vicitra were good at handling political discussions as well as willing to stay, for a certain period of time, as ambassadors of sorts. They were part of the GLA, but were not involved in anything more than simple diplomatic issues of participation in the Galactic Court when needed so long as they didn’t eat other Beings outside of their own planet.

He hears Taeh’yung giggles, followed by a mumbling that distinctly sounded like Jimin. At least they were both all right- not too grievously injured or harmed.

Jungkook twitches a little at the sound but Namjoon remains calm. He had been under delta sleep while the Bed looked over his injuries, a wise move, Namjoon thinks.

What would they feed him? What would they do once he’s healed and alert? What do they do with him? There was no way they could leave him in some planet with living Beings in it. The possibility of his capture and torture, or worse enslavement was high. Not to mention of course, being a young and unaware Being running purely on defensive instincts his whole life, he could potentially attack and kill those trying to maybe give him aid.

Jungkook twitches more and turns to his side, his brow glistening with sweat, wrinkled with pain.

Namjoon can smell the filth on him afresh as he turns, but he’s too distracted by the carved in indent down the Vicitra’s spine.

It was true.

It was identical to the one on Yoongi’s back.

‘Is he healing?’ Namjoon asks out loud.

‘Subjects healing rate is naturally fast. All injuries should be healed in 18 hours. Internal infections are currently being targeted.’

That explained the feverish sweating and grimaces of pain. Walking around, Namjoon notices a gaping but shallow open wound on Jungkook’s head, already cleaned and waiting further application of whatever medical process was being implemented.

‘Continue delta sleep- monitor brain activity and heart rate carefully.’

‘Understood.’

The door slides shut silently and Namjoon quietly peaks into the next room.

Jimin is sitting on the Medical Bed, a funny wincing expression on his face as the operational-arms clean and disinfect the soles of his feet. Namjoon grimaces at the sight of the lashing, wondering if maybe that would motivate Jimin in wearing shoes. Jimin had changed, the remains of his previous clothes are in the form of dirty rain water puddles that lead up the shredder tube to the side. He was now just wearing Medical-robies, looking beyond exhausted. Namjoon briefly wonders where the suit and helmet he borrowed from Yoongi went.

His head was being neatly bandaged by Taeh’yung who was animatedly speaking to Jimin.

‘-and then I thought, you know, why wouldn’t that be a good idea-‘

‘-I don’t think it’s good idea,’ Jimin winces and wait-

Namjoon doesn’t know what to focus on. Jimin’s apparent new talent in Standard, Taeh’yung’s completely nonchalant attitude towards it, or Jimin’s very battered state, or the bloodied mess on Taeh’yung’s shirt.

‘Oh! Pa!’ Taeh’yung spots him and waves brightly at him with a length of tissue-plast.

Jimin looks up at him, a smile that’s familiarly bright and genuine in joy as though Jimin was actually very happy to see him again. It’s a little difficult to comprehend but Namjoon takes it as a sign that Jimin was doing all right.

‘So uh-‘ Namjoon begins rather intelligently.

‘Chim can speak!’ Taeh’yung gives him a thumbs up.

‘Um- hello.’ Jimin waves at him with two of his hands, smiling sheepishly.
Namjoon realizes that it’s not proper conduct to gawk at someone without explanation or warrant like a fish out of water.

‘How are…how are you able to understand? To speak? What happened?’ Namjoon asks carefully as soon as he’s somewhat recovered, still not able to process how any of this could have come about.

‘I-‘ Jimin looks at Taeh’yung, almost out of habit as though to start indicating where the Zhak’gri would need to start translating. ‘When I woke up- I hear voice. Lisai. Something happen with…h-helmet.’ Jimin says slowly, indicating the shape of Yoongi’s helmet to Namjoon who nods in understanding.

‘There was letters. Words. Asking “yes” or “no”.’ Jimin continues, ‘And then…lots of light. I don’t remember. But when I wake up, I understand.’ Then as though a little embarrassed adds, ‘Difficult to talk.’

‘But you’re doing so well Chim!’ Taeh’yung exclaims, looking at Namjoon with an expected expression, as though silently telling him to agree.

‘Yes, you are doing very well,’ Namjoon says at once and he’s not lying either.

And while it was obvious Jimin was trying to explain how it happened, it was clear he didn’t understand it himself. GI technology was always a little fascinating. Developed in complete secret by the Yishengs, Namjoon has no difficulty in believing it would allow for such a thing to somehow install language skills within another living Being, especially one who has come to them under such circumstance.

Jimin smiles in thanks before tentatively asking, ‘Hoseok?’

‘He’s at the Bridge,’ Namjoon tells him, ‘He’s all right.’

‘Yoongi?’

‘I uh- I think he’s showering,’ Namjoon glances down at his NaviLet and finds that Yoongi is indeed in his own Cabin. ‘But he’ll come down soon- I want him to get checked as well.’

‘What happen?’ Jimin touches at his own face.

‘Just the rain,’ Namjoon smiles. ‘Nothing serious.’

‘Okay.’

‘Did they do anything?’ Namjoon asks carefully. ‘What happened when you crashed?’

Though Jimin certainly had no difficulty understanding Namjoon’s question, although he does have a slightly surprised expression throughout, as though surprised at himself for understanding him in the first place, Jimin takes a while to answer. He speaks out the words, sounding unsure, like a Being reading a difficult word out loud.

‘When I woke up,’ Jimin starts carefully, ‘I could understand.’

Namjoon nods for Jimin to continue.

‘Cy…borgs, take me to Seulgaan. He want to take me…away,’ Jimin says with a few pauses. ‘He called his…people. There were many survivors. They were leaving, but they came- the uh-…’ he looks at Namjoon as though for help.

‘The Ynqaban.’

Jimin nods, slowly mouthing the word as though to make sure he would say it right.

‘Ynqaban. Seulgaan tried to talk, but they didn’t listen,’ Jimin frowns. ‘They took his life.’

Namjoon is a little taken aback by how Jimin words it. While the news of Seulgaan’s death doesn’t cause any emotional reaction in him, Namjoon is more interested in the way Jimin is relaying all of this.

Language was a tricky thing. The usage of words, preference of words used in describing or relaying information, especially from a Being who didn’t have any previous knowledge in it, was always a clearer insight into the way their minds worked.

‘I was…’ Jimin pauses again, ‘I was not whole. I could not help myself or the others around me. I thought they would also take me with others- but they saw Yoongi’s hel-met, and clothes.’ Jimin looks down at his hands. ‘They could also see the weight.’

‘The weight?’

‘They know what it was. They thought I am Yoongi.’

They knew the uniform- the GI uniform. But how? The GI were considered an urban lore that mainly circulated within the Raksane Tayi System. And though based off of what Yoongi himself has said before, and how he has indeed gone much further and wider across the Universe than simply being stationed in Tayi, it was shocking to hear about the GI being known and recognized in a planet like Ynqaba.

‘They take me away- to the…Bridge,’ Jimin frowns, fidgeting with his bandages around his head. ‘There were Ynqaban there. But not like others. They were the merchants- they thought I was the same, with my back.’

He reaches behind him, feeling at his back carefully.

‘But you don’t have one,’ Namjoon says quietly.

Jimin shakes his head, ‘The merchants took their lives, they said they were thieves trying to deceive. They took away Yoongi’s helmet and clothes; to put with the others. I am sorry.’

‘Others? They said there was more?’

Jimin nods, ‘In store.’

That really made no sense.

‘They take me inside that cage,’ Jimin continues, ‘They want- wanted, to see, if I could survive.’

‘They put you in that place with Jungkook?’

Jimin nods and then with a look at Taeh’yung says, ‘They control him. Like animal.’

Taeh’yung pulls out a small device, not more than an inch in width and almost entirely flat. It looked like a chip of sorts.
‘I think it’s something that when enabled, causes electric shock or something,’ Taeh’yung says, handing it to Namjoon who reigns in his anger that flares at the sight of the device.

‘It was on his head.’

Namjoon remembers the wound on Jungkook’s head and exhales out slowly.

‘He tried not to hurt me,’ Jimin tells him. ‘He tried very hard. He was in pain.’

Namjoon looks over Jimin carefully, eyes wandering over his wounds and injuries. His gaze lingers on his neck, close to his throat, where teeth marks could still be seen despite being nearly entirely healed over. Namjoon also realizes, with some alarm, that the bloodied mess on Taeh’yung’s clothes came from a similar wound though much fresher.

‘He did that?’ Namjoon asks, pointing to both of their necks.

‘He was afraid,’ both Jimin and Taeh’yung reply before the latter adds.

Namjoon nods in understanding, and with a carefully stable hand, gives Taeh’yung back the device.

‘Don’t alter anything in it, we can analyze it later and see what exactly was done,’ Namjoon tells him. ‘Why did you want to bring him here Jimin?’

Jimin pauses a little at that, a small frown settling between his brows.

‘He is young. Abandoned, and unaware- he has known no life other than pain, use, and hunger,’ his voice is soft but when Jimin looks up, there is a steeliness in his eyes that reminds Namjoon that Jimin, despite his gentle and near-ethereal appearance, was a leader of his System, a political figure of great power and authority, one who has no doubt had to make difficult decisions, learn ugly truths, and live a reality that didn’t allow him to be someone beyond his given title. And while he may have act upon moral and compassionate actions, he does not lose sight of the fact that everything had a much more deeper connection, darker story than visible. And that there was always something to gain, that there will always be something to gain first, before others can gain from you.

‘He is also born of the same place Yoongi was born from. His soul, his mind, his dreams are old-just like Yoongi. I want to know why. Why he is here, why Yoongi is here, why I am here.’ Jimin looks down again before adding in a quiet whisper, ‘I want to know why. And I want to know how.’

Namjoon nods at that.

‘I can accept that, and I can see the reasoning behind it. But when Jungkook wakes up, will he be…lucid enough to talk? Will he be able to communicate-‘

‘Not his words,’ Jimin interrupts him. ‘His words will not tell us. Yoongi’s words won’t tell us – but their souls can, their hearts can.’

Namjoon wonders if he’s missed something important here, pausing to glance at Taeh’yung who doesn’t seem to share Namjoon’s confusion but is instead nodding enthusiastically.

‘Get some rest,’ Namjoon tells them both as kindly as he can, hoping it didn’t sound like an order. ‘And when we can all gather-‘ Taeh’yung suddenly gasps and waves vigorously at someone behind Namjoon. Willing himself not to start too much, Namjoon finds Yoongi standing by the wall, half hidden from view.

He was no longer covered in blood and his hair was still dripping water as though he had hurried in his shower. He was also not wearing full black as was his norm, but instead a grey sweater over dark trousers. For a moment Namjoon almost feels as though he doesn’t recognize Yoongi like this. His expression is carefully masked, somewhat staged.

‘Yoongi! Come to get fixed?’ Taeh’yung jumps forward, trying to pull the Human in.

Yoongi is obviously there for other reasons; mainly Jimin.

Jemin pulls at the gauzing around his head, ducking his head a little and looking away from the Human.

A curious expression falls over Yoongi’s face, one that Namjoon feels as though could have been of regret- maybe even shame, as he too looks away.

This was odd.

It was already odd to find the Human anywhere else other than somehow being close to Jimin. Especially considering how close the Human had been to losing his mind over losing Jimin. He had even left Sk’jin behind as a result. And now that they were back, with Jimin injured, Namjoon had assumed it would take a fight and a half to get the Human to participate in ship duties rather than hover over Jimin. But here he was, putting physical distance between the two of them, watching Jimin with a rather nervous expression.

‘I’m fine,’ the Human replies to Taeh’yung questions, moving away from view as Taeh’yung tries to put a tissue-plast on him randomly, his voice fades as he steps away even more saying, ‘Just checking.’

‘Taeh’yung,’ Namjoon calls when the Zhak’gri looks like he’s trying to go after the Human. ‘Get Jimin sorted out first.’

Taeh’yung pauses, looking conflicted before he makes a grumpy expression and nods, returning to Jimin.

‘Shower,’ is all Jimin says as he gingerly rearranges his legs, making to get off of the Bed. ‘And rest.’

‘Both of you. Tae- you should rest too all right?’ Namjoon calls as he steps out of the Bay. He remembers the way Hoseok had drawn out a sort of compliance from Taeh’yung, addressing him with fondness which the Zhak’gri responded to positively. ‘Remember, you’re our buggy and you need to rest too.’

It seems to work because Taeh’yung looks at him with wide eyes that suddenly sparkle with the glittering force of a thousand stars and Namjoon is terrified that the Zhak’gri might start crying but he holds up valiantly and with an incredibly wide smile, Taeh’yung nods and says, ‘I will Pa! Don’t worry!’

Smiling to himself Namjoon walks out of the Bay and finally makes his way to where he had originally been planning on going.

However, Sk’jin is not alone. Yoongi is standing there, looking over Sk’jin with his usual blankness.
‘When he wakes up, he might try to kill me,’ Yoongi states plainly, barely acknowledging Namjoon’s presence other than to talk.

‘Which is understandable in a lot of ways.’ Namjoon replies wryly, pulling up a stool and dragging it over to the side of the Bay.

‘I am not sick,’ Yoongi continues. ‘Or unwell. I am changing.’

‘…change can be good,’ Namjoon replies slowly.

‘It can,’ Yoongi agrees. ‘I am aware of this change. But I do not know what it is doing, or how it is happening. There is change, but I cannot see it. I can feel it, but I cannot identify it.’

‘Is that what you meant when you were headed to the central-bridge?’

‘Yes. I did not understand it.’

‘Can you tell me…what it was?’ Namjoon inquires. ‘Or at least tell me what you felt?’

Yoongi nods, standing straight as though about to report to him. Namjoon wonders if it’s a conditioned action ingrained in the Human.

‘I felt pain,’ Yoongi explains. ‘Pain but not of my body, not of tissue, flesh, or bone. But there was pain. It hurt here.’

He raises his hand over his chest, over where his heart should be.

‘It kept growing- it expanded, all over me. To my legs, my arms, my fingers. I couldn’t control my actions- I was…-I was unsteady,’ Yoongi states slowly. ‘It was as though I had two minds- one unsteady, the other as I was.’

‘And what is that?’

Yoongi seems genuinely confused by this question.

‘Go on, sorry ignore my question,’ Namjoon urges.

‘The closer I got to Jimin’s location, the stranger I felt. I nearly uncovered my identity- not out of purpose, but because I couldn’t control what I was.’ Is Yoongi’s extraordinary statement. ‘But I could remain as I am. And I could go on- but I saw something and after that I do not remember what happened.’

‘You have a memory gap?’

‘I do not remember what happened, but I saw a dream,’ Yoongi explains. ‘I see a lot of Dreams.’

‘…what was in this dream?’

‘I was taken,’ Yoongi replies. ‘I was afraid. There was singing. Jimin was singing, and I needed to reach him. But I couldn’t. I needed to return.’

‘How did you wake up?’

‘Hoseok woke me up.’

That was when Hoseok found Yoongi. But Namjoon hadn’t been able to pay much attention because he’d been worried over Sk’jin.

‘Everyone was dead.’ Yoongi tells him plainly. ‘Everyone was dead. Even Seulgaan’s slaves who were captured there. I killed them all. And I do not remember.’

‘Yoongi,’ Namjoon begins carefully. ‘I think it’s possible that you might have been building up to a panic attack of sorts, maybe an emotional imbalance.’

‘Why?’

Namjoon gapes for a moment.

The logic and reasoning behind most sentient emotion was lost on Yoongi. Namjoon wonders how many things the Human felt on an everyday basis without realizing what it meant or how it even came to be.

‘Because you were worried. You were stressed. You were afraid.’

‘Why?’

‘I…I cannot say,’ Namjoon shrugs. ‘You were worried about Jimin’s safety, you were worried that the mission would fail. You were worried you wouldn’t be able to find Jimin. And if you did, you were worried about how you would get out. Sometimes when all of these add up, you just…you just lose control.’

‘Has this happened to you?’

‘It has,’ Namjoon replies truthfully.

It hits Namjoon a little too clearly. A little too harshly.

Namjoon has been used to calculating and planning around Beings who have complex and ever-changing priorities, agendas, and thoughts. Yoongi was however, extraordinarily simple and straightforward. He just didn’t know how to express himself, and the Universe as a whole, did not know how to translate this either.

Yoongi was going through basic emotional responses and he didn’t know how to deal. As a result he seemed to somehow invert within his own mind, losing time and consciousness. Meaning his primal instincts, which were basically GI training and skills, kicked in, and went into overdrive as he tried to recover.

And maybe Yoongi actually knew this and didn’t know how to explain it, or even fully comprehend it. And maybe this was why he was trying to keep away from Jimin- because he felt guilt.

Deep down Yoongi knew that Jimin would not approve, that Jimin would not appreciate the blood spilt, that Jimin would not have left Sk’jin behind, regardless of what Sk’jin had done in the first place.

‘Is this why you’re avoiding Jimin?’ he asks as gently as he can.

Yoongi stares at him for a moment before he adds in a voice almost as quiet as though he was whispering, ‘Jimin does not like me,’ and then he starts to walk away, ‘He doesn’t know me.’

‘…Yoongi I’m pretty sure Jimin likes you?’ Namjoon struggles, turning in his seat to call after the Human. Basic emotional responses or not, did Yoongi not feel the way Jimin looked at him?

‘I am not Yoongi,’ is his reply, looking down at his feet, expression just as blank as ever though his eyes are a little wide.

‘If you’re not Yoongi, then who are you?’

Yoongi pauses at the doorframe momentarily as he replies, ‘I am no one.’

‘Yoongi wait-‘ Namjoon tries to stop the Human but he’s already gone.

‘He said that before to me too,’ Hoseok tells him quietly, nearly making Namjoon jump. ‘I think his past memories- or at least the memories of the original Human Yoongi is making him realize… realize himself.’

Namjoon sighs out, leaning back on the wall.

What did they do? How did they do it? How many more are there? And what do the Omhlophe want with Jimin? What do the Special-Jury want with Jimin? With Yoongi?

‘How’s everyone?’

‘They’re alright I guess,’ Namjoon wonders what “alright” even constituted for anymore in this ship. ‘Taeh’yung took Jimin up to clean up, his injuries have been checked and are being healed I think. Jungkook is in delta, being healed. And Sk’jin…’

Paying his full attention back on the Khol’isa, Namjoon leans in closer from his stool.

Taeh’yung had obviously done something to him. There was more to his relationship with Taeh’yung than he let on, more to how Sk’jin came back. And though Namjoon knows he should respect and understand the situation as a complex and very intimate relationship between the two, he can’t help but wonder the basis and implications of what it all meant.

Pulling up Sk’jin’s medical tab, Namjoon frowns at the oddly high pulse reading on the tab.

‘I think he’s doing alright too,’ Namjoon replies a little late as he reads his charts, ‘I think he might actually wake up soon-‘

And as though his words were a catalyst, all of Sk’jin’s readings shoot up at an alarming rate and the Khol’isa twitches just once and-

‘NO!’

Sk’jin sits up violently, chest heaving, still caught up in whatever violent reaction he had experienced just before losing consciousness.

‘No-! Drop it-!’ He screams, the panic and desperation raw and heavy in his word.

Sk’jin nearly falls out of the Medical Bed, his body unrestrained and moving unpredictably. He lands with a hard smack on the floor, wires snapping out of him, spraying the air with some blood that has Namjoon wincing.

‘Sk’jin-!’

Sk’jin flails violently, limbs snapping at Namjoon but mainly hitting the floors and walls. Namjoon tries to restrain the Khol’isa to prevent him from hurting himself but it’s proving difficult. Throwing aside all care about potentially upsetting his still healing injuries and wounds, Namjoon throws himself over Sk’jin bodily, pushing them down to the floor below the Bed.

Sk’jin

‘Hey waah!’ Namjoon holds the Khol’isa down, restraining him from thrashing around too much. Where was Taeh’yung?

‘Sk’jin calm down! It’s okay- you’re safe- you’re safe!’

‘-get away-!’

Namjoon centers his weight down more, pushing Sk’jin down with his own body and blocking all of his wild movements.

‘Sk’jin you’re safe-!’ Namjoon manages to hold the Khol’isa’s head down, preventing him from hitting his head on the floor. Their eyes lock and Sk’jin suddenly stills. He’s still rigid, his body mid-thrash and Namjoon is painfully aware of Sk’jin’s knee ramming uncomfortably into his side.

‘You’re okay- you’re safe,’ Namjoon tells him carefully. ‘You’re back on our ship. You’re safe.’

Sk’jin isn’t even breathing, his eyes dilated to the point of pin-pricks. Where was Taeh’yung!!

He can’t look away, knowing that somehow this was helping Sk’jin, stopping him from thrashing. Desperately thinking back, Namjoon remembers the way Taeh’yung had addressed Sk’jin when he’d been unwell.

‘Hey Jinnie,’ Namjoon tries, ‘You’re all right. You’re safe. No one is going to hurt you yeah?’

Sk’jin’s fingers are locked in a tight angled grip on Namjoon’s shirt, skin white from the strain. Slowly he takes a shuddering breath and his body shivers.

‘That’s it- take a deep breath, you’re safe,’ Namjoon shifts himself carefully, ‘You’re doing good. You’re safe yeah?’

Sk’jin takes a few more breaths, his pupils expanding to normal slowly. Each breath he takes reduces the tremors and after a couple of minutes, the rigidness of his posture eases and Namjoon carefully lifts himself, kneeling over the Khol’isa while still maintaining eye-contact. Slowly easing Sk’jin’s fingers off of his shirt, Namjoon carefully straightens his rigid and cramped fingers in what he hopes is a soothing manner.

Out of the corner of his eye he sees Hoseok stepping away quietly, clearly having run down to help.

He settles Sk’jin’s hands down to the floor, carefully setting his limbs straight. Sk’jin’s blood that had splattered about while he was thrashing had splattered over the side of his own face, a few drops threatening to trickle down to his eyes.

Not wanting to break whatever state of focused shock Sk’jin was in, Namjoon carefully wipes at the blood splatter, sweeping it over to the side towards his temples, still not breaking their eye contact.

Sk’jin closes his eyes, chest heaving in one heavy inhale. When he exhales his body goes limp and Namjoon is frightened almost.
'Sk’jin?'

The Khol’isa opens his eyes, struggling almost, as though he had been merely sleeping and was now waking up. When he fully opens his eyes, Namjoon knows that he’s back.

‘Hey,’ Namjoon quiets his voice as best as he can, sounding as gentle as possible.

Sk’jin looks around, confused no doubt, on finding himself on the floor.

‘You’re safe. You’re out of Ynqaba- we got you out of that mountain. You’re safe now.’

‘-m-mountain-?’ Sk’jin stammers out. ‘What- where-.’

‘It was bad timing- bad luck,’ Namjoon tells him quietly, ‘We planted a timed explosive, to use as a distraction, so that we could pull Jimin out.’

Sk’jin’s eyes are a little glazed, pausing in their movements.

‘We were keeping track of you, but the storm messed all of our signals. We didn’t know you would be coming to that area, we don’t even know why the explosive was triggered- or how but-’

‘It was us,’ Sk’jin whispers. ‘In the end it was all us.’

Namjoon frowns, reshuffling on his knees to kneel better, ‘Sk’jin-?’

‘What happened- how-…how did I-.’ Sk’jin stops, ‘What happened to the-‘

‘They’re gone- it’s all right,’ Namjoon tells him quickly, ‘You’re safe, you won’t get hurt-‘

Sk’jin suddenly scrambles to his feet, a truly terrified expression on his face.

‘Sk’jin-!’ Namjoon stands as well, arms raised in case the Khol’isa fell again or started to go into shock.

‘No-!’ Sk’jin stops him, violently shaking his head, his face crumpling. ‘No!’

Namjoon pauses, unsure what to do. What had they done to Sk’jin that he looked so terrified? What happened that would warrant such a reaction?

Sk’jin stares down at his hand, and then his clothes, and then back at Namjoon.

‘You-‘ he stops. ‘You left me.’

‘What-‘

‘No-‘ Sk’jin shakes his head again, a strangely wide smile on his face before his expression contorts to anguish again. ‘No- I left.’

Namjoon cautiously tries to approach the Khol’isa again. It was wrong to see him this unstable- so completely and utterly helpless.

This was wrong.

Sk’jin was powerful, he was overwhelming and he knew it and he flaunted it. He was cunning, well poised, and incredibly prepared for anything.

Seeing him like this felt wrong. Namjoon almost wants Sk’jin to start insulting him, to start a verbal fight against him.

‘Sk’jin-’

Suddenly, quite casually, Sk’jin stands up straight, his expression uncannily normal. He wipes at his face, seemingly not noticing the bumps and cuts and burns that tear open again from the harsh treatment, before clearing his throat and with an elegant bow of his head says, ‘I need a shower. I feel unreasonably dirty, Spaces, you would think hygiene was a priority in a Medical Bay.’

Then without so much as limping or looking strained, Sk’jin walks past Namjoon and straight out of the Medical Bay.

‘Namjoon?’

‘Yeah?’

‘I think…I really need a drink.’

Looking over at the Medical Bed, and at the walls still sprayed in fine spots with Sk’jin’s blood, and down at the floor where Sk’jin’s still rain-damp clothes had left smudged prints he sighs. CleanBots roll in swiftly, already cleaning up the floors while a few struggle to roll up on the walls. With a nudge from his foot, Namjoon pushes one of the rolling Bots to the wall and its whirrs as though in thanks.

‘Yeah, I’ll get us something.’

*

In retrospect, Yoongi realizes he should have probably informed Jimin that he was there. He’s read a fair amount of books and watched a fair amount of movies that have repeatedly advised against this, with a plethora of examples of why you shouldn’t. Though he’s fairly certain, that from Taeh’yung’s loud greeting that was louder than necessary, should have alerted the entire ship of his presence in that area. Not to mention the ‘here! Take over for me! I’m hungry!’ and very strong shove that pushed Yoongi into the Cabin.

But Jimin still looks surprised as he steps out of the en suite, looking about with wide eyes, nervousness oozing out of him. He’s wrapped in a large towel, his head covered rather haphazardly with another towel as though he’d done it in a hurry. Jimin seemed oddly jumpy, not looking Yoongi in the eye.

‘Sunshine?’

Jimin shakes his head and Yoongi pauses, wondering what Jimin meant by that.
‘I won’t stay long,’ Yoongi states, remembering what he read on “What to Say, How to Say It, and When to Say It- a Conversation Guide on Sensitive Topics for the Socially Inept”. ‘I would like to apologize, for what you saw, for what I did, and how I was unable to keep you safe.’

The book had said that Yoongi should be to the point, without going into excessive detail. In fact, he replaced the words in the given examples to suit this very purpose.

‘I also want to apologize for how I behaved, what I did.’

‘What did you do?’ Jimin asks, unmoving from where he stood by the en suite.

It doesn’t seem odd to talk to Jimin- to communicate with each other. There’s a feeling that almost resembles satisfaction. Or more accurately to Yoongi, like the finalization of a mission. Unlike how Hoseok and Namjoon had been incredibly flabbergasted by Jimin’s newfound ability to speak and understand Standard, it felt absolutely normal to Yoongi.

‘I left Sk’jin,’ Yoongi says bluntly. ‘I abandoned him, to distract his captors, and I would have left without Namjoon, Hoseok, or Taeh’yung.’

Jumin doesn’t say anything, still watching him carefully, processing his words.

‘I also killed those Beings in the Bridge.’ Yoongi continues and adds, ‘I am sorry.’

They stand in silence and Yoongi waits the time they mentioned in the book (25 seconds) before he walks out. (Silence can be interpreted as refusal of your apology or confession! It is best to give them their space and if ideal, try again some days later). He’s almost done with his countdown, already taking a step back when Jimin shakes his head.

Yoongi also shakes his head, mimicking the action as though hoping it would help clarify what he meant by it. They just stare at each other, Jimin looking like he wanted to say something but didn’t know how, and Yoongi waiting. It’s well past the 25 second rule and Yoongi silently steps back.

But Jimin quickly steps forward, looking pained as he hurries on his feet to somehow waddle and stand in front of Yoongi, barring his way. His towel slips on his head and he desperately tries to cover his head, turning sideways and ducking down, crouching by the doorway with a sharp exhale of pain.

‘What happened?’ Yoongi asks at once, also crouching down, wondering why Jimin was so adamant in holding the towel around his head, nearly dropping the towel around his body in his efforts to keep his head covered. Was it hurting? Yoongi knows he was injured, having read the full details of his injuries carefully, watching his health-tab as he healed.

He shakes his head when Yoongi reaches for his head. Dropping his hand at once, Yoongi waits for some sort of explanation.

‘Are you hurt?’ he asks. ‘What can I do? Medical Bay? Taeh’yung?’

Jumin just chews on his lower lip for a moment, eyeing him with an expression that Yoongi categorizes as apprehension.

‘Sunshine? I-—will you let me help you?’

Maybe he didn’t want Yoongi’s help- maybe he didn’t want Yoongi there. And maybe he didn’t know how to say it to him.
‘Do you want me to go?’ Yoongi asks as Jimin secures both towels around himself a little more securely. Jimin shakes his head and quietly says, ‘No. Stay, please.’

‘What can I do?’

Instead of replying, Jimin shakily reaches up and pulls away the towel with a shaky breath.

A bitter feeling wells up in his throat, overwhelming Yoongi to his core.

Jimin doesn’t look up, instead fiddling with the towel in his hands, as though he can’t face Yoongi.

It now made sense, what he had seen in that Central-Bridge. Jimin’s head is shaved, shorn, and reddened, his skin bruised and bumpy. Without the towel, Yoongi can also see more of his half-healed injuries and wounds around his neck and shoulders.

He makes to cover his head, unable to look at Yoongi as though afraid of what Yoongi would think. But Yoongi catches his hands, lowering them again before gently turning Jimin to face him.

‘Does it hurt?’

Jimin shakes his head, unable to hold his gaze for more than a few seconds.

Yoongi pauses before touching his head, giving him time to move away. But Jimin stays, breathing in and out in a purposeful manner.

Whoever did this hadn’t done it to simply cut off his hair- but to shame and humiliate him. To make him feel out of control and to feel powerless. Yoongi’s entire being burns with anger and pain. He doesn’t know what to do. Jimin stays there, trying to make himself small, head ducked, eyes downcast, shoulders drooping.

What memories Yoongi has of Jimin, what recollection of thoughts, emotions, and senses he can still feel simmering underneath his consciousness, all shapes and illumination of Jimin have always mainly been of strength, grace, and a beauty that no words could justifiably describe. Jimin was by no means a physically large Being, he was barely reaching Yoongi’s height and he was built slim. But he carried himself in a way that just overwhelmed you through his sheer presence, like all light instantly shone on to him.

And at this moment, Jimin appeared broken, tired, and drained.

Diminished.

Yoongi’s chest constricts at that- a feeling of pain he can’t quite understand or classify.

He gently brushes his fingers over the shorn scalp. Some places were cut so close to the scalp, it left red burn-like scars.

‘Not beautiful,’ Jimin says quietly and unexpectedly.

Yoongi kisses the top of his head- his lips feeling the shaggy and slightly bumpy texture of his scalp. He’s not sure why he does it, but he’s seen Taeh’yung do it, and he knows it’s a common way of comforting someone, he’s read about it as well in countless books. And so the instinct comes rather easily.

And Yoongi wants to comfort Jimin. He needs to.

‘I’m sorry,’ Jimin tells him quietly. ‘Not beautiful.’
There's a sudden realization in Yoongi, one he can't exactly comprehend.

‘You’re the most beautiful to me.’

Jimin sniffs, fingers clenching and unclenching around the towel.

‘Always beautiful,’ Yoongi says again before kissing his scalp again.

Jimin ducks his head again, though this time more out of shyness than shame, his ears turning red.

Yoongi follows his instincts, pressing soft light kisses around the shorn head, down to the side and over to reddened ears. Yoongi knows that kissing was a form of comfort, but he had always thought it would be comforting for the person to receive it. So he doesn’t know why he’s feeling comforted by this. But feeling Jimin’s warmth like this, feeling his presence, his solidity- knowing he was right there in front of him, safe and secure enough that Yoongi could do this rather small act of comfort in turn settles his own restlessness.

Jimin’s breath is a little shallow, somewhat unstable. But he seems to melt into Yoongi’s hold, eyes closed, a rather overwhelmed expression on his face. He shivers when Yoongi kisses down the side of his neck, following a track of healing wounds, pink and shiny with new skin.

‘So beautiful.’

Jimin ducks into Yoongi’s hold, shivering as a few sobs shake his body.

Yoongi holds him as close and as tightly as possible while avoiding Jimin’s upper torso. They stay like that for a while, with Yoongi pressing soft kisses around his head and neck, before Jimin’s soreness catches up to him from sitting in a cramped manner on the floor. Jimin freezes as Yoongi scoops him out of the floor easily, seating him on the edge of the bed carefully before retrieving the medical-kit from the en suite.

Yoongi helps him reapply the repair-serum while Jimin cuts lengths of tissue-plast, handing them strip by strip as Yoongi bandages his feet. Without thinking much about it, Yoongi kisses the top of his feet after making sure all the tissue-plast were secure. Yoongi is about to lean away and stand up but Jimin beckons him closer, taking the repair-serum and dabbing it onto Yoongi’s face and ears where the acid rain had burnt his skin.

He would heal of course, having treated himself and eating the required medication for his injuries. But this felt nice.

Different from when the others had checked his injuries. Different from every other time he’s had injuries.

‘I want to cut,’ Jimin tells him quietly after they pack away the medical kit.

‘Cut what?’

Jimin reaches up to his scalp, fingers gingerly brushing over the shorn scalp and random tufts of hair.

‘I’ll bring you the shaver,’ Yoongi tells him quietly as he stands up, his skin tingling from where the repair-serum was still wet and active on his skin.

Each of the tiny en suites attached to the Cabins were stocked with every form of self-grooming devices you would ever need or imagine you needed. Yoongi remembers a shaver being one of the items in this compact and well organized kit and finds it under the sink inside a small pouch.

When he returns, Jimin has used the towel that had been on his lap as a cape of sorts, to catch whatever stray hair that might escape.

‘Do you want to do it?’ Yoongi asks.

Jimin looks at the shaver for a moment, then slowly shakes his head and says with a rather amused small smile, ‘Cannot see.’

‘May I?’

Jimin nods.

Being as gentle as he could, Yoongi holds the shaver up to Jimin’s shorn scalp. Jimin jumps at the sound of the shaver but doesn’t flinch when it touches his skin.

It’s a quick and easy job. Not much of Jimin’s hair had survived the ordeal and whatever was left was easily shaved off. Jimin shivers at random, unable to control his body’s reaction.

‘Finish,’ Yoongi tells him, putting away the device on the nightstand.

Jimin carefully feels at his scalp, eyes blank for a moment before he looks up at Yoongi and laughs quietly, as though somewhat tickled by the new sensation.

Yoongi smiles back, or at least he thinks he might be. He hopes he is.

Jimin looks down, as though shy, before he notices that he was covered in fine and small strands of hair. He tries to brush it off of his arms but it doesn’t work.

‘Wait,’ Yoongi stops Jimin’s hand from spreading the strands. He removes the towel Jimin had been using as a cape to catch any stray strands of hair and folds it inwards a few times before using the damp cloth to gently wipe at Jimin’s bare arms.

Jimin squirms a little, face flushing with colour, but he doesn’t stop Yoongi.

He’s extra careful around his ears, and very slow around his still very fresh wound expertly patched up and already in the process of healing. A bit of Jimin’s ear had been sliced off near the top, but it was sealed and re-growing with the aid of a tissue-plast.

‘I can do it,’ Jimin tells him but he doesn’t stop Yoongi.

‘They took your clothes. And helmet,’ Jimin tells him, ‘I’m sorry.’

‘It’s okay. You’re safe.’

Jimin shivers even more when Yoongi gently tugs the other towel off, patting him down of excess water. He brings out his clothes and helps him put them on, pausing every other moment to gently kiss a bruise or healing scar. It makes Jimin laugh quietly, and Yoongi feels accomplished. Making sure his pant-legs didn’t rub against the still healing gashes around Jimin’s feet, Yoongi stands up and picks up the last item of clothing he’d brought with him.

‘Do you want to wear this?’ Yoongi asks, holding up the light-fabric beanie.

Jimin takes it slowly, feeling the ribbing between his fingers. With his free hand he carefully reaches up and feels at his scalp. With a slow shake of his head, Jimin gently pushes the soft fabric away and instead sits back further on the bed, exhaling out as though suddenly exhausted.

‘Sleep, sunshine.’

‘Yoongi also sleep,’ Jimin tells him quietly, reaching out to take his hand.

‘I will,’ Yoongi replies and it’s the truth. He needed to sleep. He also needed to Dream again. He had to.

‘Sleep here,’ Jimin tugs at his hand quietly. ‘Please?’

Technically speaking Yoongi knows there’s nothing different from sleeping here than in his own Cabin. In fact, he appreciated having Jimin next to him when he slept.

It had been once, but Yoongi doesn’t remember ever feeling that warm before. It wasn’t as though Yoongi was ever cold when he slept. His blankets were thick and warm, his mattress comfortable and firm, his pillow at the perfect height.

But sleeping was always such a strange event for Yoongi. A whole process to embark upon through the day, and straight to bed only for the sake of dreaming, for the sake of Knowing.

And Yoongi always woke up cold.

Cold and strangely adrift.

But that time when Jimin had slipped into his bed, arm curving around him securely, breath warm through his shirt, Yoongi only realized how adrift he had been the entire time.

Not just in sleep, but within his very waking hours.

So he just nods and sits down next to Jimin.

‘Sleep,’ Jimin tells him, pushing him down a little. Yoongi goes down at once, laying on his back, arms at his side. Jimin shifts up on the bed and gingerly settles down as well, first on his back, and then carefully turning over to his side.

‘Yoongi?’

Jimin shifts a little closer, his head lowering down on the pillow until his forehead gently bumped onto Yoongi’s shoulder, sighing out slowly.

‘Yes?’

‘Stay,’ Jimin whispers against his arm, his legs curling up over Yoongi’s own.

‘I’m staying.’

‘Okay.’

Carefully lacing their hands together, Yoongi cradles their hands together against his chest. Jimin watches him with focused but sleepy eyes, blinking slowly.

‘Jimin.’

‘Hm?’
‘I’m not Yoongi,’ he whispers quietly.

He’s going against everything he’s read in all the books he’s consulted, in all the videos he’s watched, in all of the coding that came from Android Core manuscripts.

Yoongi feels Jimin still, his body stiffening a little.

‘I am not Yoongi. I’m sorry.’

‘You are,’ Jimin tells him, sounding a lot more awake now.

‘No.’ Yoongi shakes his head, looking up straight ahead at the ceiling above him. ‘Your Yoongi would not have done what I did. Your Yoongi would not have done any of this. Your Yoongi died, I am not Yoongi. I am no one.’

Jimin pushes himself up, making his way into Yoongi’s line of sight.

‘Mine,’ Jimin tells him earnestly as he shakes his head, as though to refute Yoongi’s words. ‘Yoongi is mine.’

‘I’m not Yoongi-‘ he feels a strange sense of frustration. He can remember. He can see what he had seen. Remember what he had thought of. But it wasn’t his- he inherited those memories, inherited those thoughts, inherited the irrational fear with which he had woken up with- screaming against a long gone reddish nightmare that tore him away from the stars. That tore him away from the sunlight.

‘How many Yoongi’s do you see?’ Yoongi asks desperately. ‘I said I would come back to you- that I would always come back to you but Yoongi didn’t- I’m not Yoongi I don’t know-‘

But they weren’t his.

They were not his memories.

‘I know.’ Jimin tells him slowly. ‘I know you.’

The very air is still, held in suspension from the light of Jimin’s eyes.

Never stare straight at the eclipse- it’s dangerous.

His body pressed against his, Yoongi feels a weight settle into him, one that has been missing. One that wasn’t even there in the beginning.

He was no longer adrift. Not anymore.

He was bound, anchored.

Jimin looks him in the eye and Yoongi is hypnotized. He can’t look away. Jimin leans in and kisses him softly, pulling away with a smile.

‘Mine.’

‘Jimin-‘

‘-mine,’ Jimin kisses him again. ‘Yoongi is mine. I know you. You are mine.’

‘-I don’t think-‘
Jimin kisses him again, longer, and so much softer.

If this was what it meant to be comforted, why did Yoongi feel strangely pained?

‘Mine,’ he whispers against his lips before kissing him again. ‘Please.’

Yoongi hadn’t realized how tightly he was holding onto Jimin until the newly grown skin-tissue on his hands pulled rather painfully. He lets go a little, a panicked desperation to just touch Jimin’s face.

Jimin leans into his touch, head turning a little gingerly before kissing his palm and then the pad of his thumb.

‘Mine.’

Yoongi nods slowly.

Maybe this was his answer.

It didn’t matter. None of it.

Who he was. Who he wasn’t.

If there was anything Yoongi had in common with the past, with who he used to be, or who he born out of, made an image of. They had one thing in common.

‘Yours.’

They both belonged to Jimin.

—

Sk’jin has lived through more than his fair share. Seen more than his fair share.

Things rarely ever surprise him. What happened in Ynqaba is not something he’s not seen before. It’s practically textbook at this point.

Wiping at the condensation of his mirror, Sk’jin studies his face carefully.

He’d been rather harsh on his skin, rubbing it almost raw despite the many blisters and cuts he had all over his skin. But at least he sort of felt clean.

He gargles a few times, retching a little again after having hurled the contents of his stomach in the toilet an hour or so ago. His throat feels raw and it burns every time he swallows. But he continues to gargle, until at least his mouth tastes fresh. Opening his mouth wide, Sk’jin takes a look at his teeth. There’s a gaping hole that’s slowly sealing over. Gingerly poking at the empty socket with his tongue, Sk’jin wonders if one of the CleanBots has his teeth.

And of course Sk’jin knows how much he contributes to this- contributed to stories like these. There was no easy or correct way of going about it. Sk’jin contributed to situations like those in Ynqaba and he had profited from it.

‘Lisai how un-dead am I?’ Sk’jin asks as he retrieves the medical kit from under the sink.

‘Communications Manager Sk’jin, you are in 81% good health, a healing rate of 162%, detoxification process almost complete. You will be in full health in 2 hours, 17 minutes.’

‘Thanks.’

Squeezing out liberal amounts of repair-serum, Sk’jin starts methodically dabbing it across his face, careful around his temples that though were not hurting at this moment, felt strangely sensitive; cold, almost.

A Yisheng would be able to heal him in an instance, Sk’jin knows. Maybe not regrow his horns, but at least make him feel like he wasn’t incomplete.

Not that he would ever voluntarily allow a Yisheng to touch him that is.

They had rewritten the narrative of the entire Ynqaban race. Of their planet. Of their entire System.

Would the Universe even remember what Ynqaba would have been like. What it could have been.

Could the Ynqabans ever realize it themselves?

Changes within history, not limited to just something destructive or vile, altered the minds and hearts of those who live through it. Of those who are born of it.

And even more so, those who would see it as history.

Labeling something as history often removed yourself from the change in the narrative that lead you to where you are. And in doing so, history is then nothing but a story, rarely viewed as the catalyst that has raised you on its foundation. Courses of action taken now, in the past, in the future- shape and form the outcome of what is seen, what was seen, and what will be seen.

And the Yishengs know this.

And yet, there they were, uprooting and vilifying an entire System only for the sake of their greed and superiority complex. As though they had a higher calling, giving them the right to dictate and control those who did not live under their beliefs, all while lying, masking their actions with a sweet and gentle guise, fooling the entirety of the Universe.

Sk’jin absentmindedly realizes he’s completely crushed the serum-bottle in his hand, the liquid oozing out of his hand, between his fingers.

How many were there? How many countries, planets, Systems- could they even begin to comprehend any of it? Could they even begin to realize what they did, what they were doing, was effecting their present now.

How many Ynqabas were there. How many Bhān’s. How many Camat’s.
And maybe Camat hadn’t been born or alive in that situation—she was still oppressed and victimized by the state of living she was born into, a result of history that should have been written differently. Where their history should have been spoken into truth from a different narrative.

And it was because of that same change in history. That same alteration in the narrative of their connected lives, that Sk’jin had been there. The same reason why he had found himself at that very spot, at the very moment.

The same reason why Camat would think of picking up an OrTank. Why she would see that smooth OrTank and think of the profitable trade they could gain, think of contributing to their livelihood. To help her family in any small way she could.

Her mind, her priorities, all shaped and formed to think of only one thing: survival.

And it was in the end the one thing that killed her.

That killed everyone on that mountainside.

It was in the end what killed Sk’jin too.

Because while he could so easily blame the Yishengs, blame the GLA, blame everyone else, it didn’t stop him from being guilty either. Because if every action taken by these Beings effected, in some way, the lives of those who weren’t even born to witness that action taking place—what then of the actions Sk’jin took?

Sk’jin was part of the Universe. He was part of Life. He had taken up the pen, and had rewritten countless narratives, rewritten history as it was being made. How many countries did Sk’jin upend? How many cities, countries, even whole planets and Docks. Sk’jin cannot prevent the truth because he’s lived it, with complete awareness.

He’s lived it with complete awareness but it never mattered as much as it does now because Sk’jin knows he can’t make things right— I’ll make everything right again when I come back-

Survival never lead to life. Survival was the beginning of the end.

And Sk’jin has long lived out his end.

And that was the difference now.

He was no longer trying to survive, he was just trying to make his way to the end.

Checking his face carefully over one more time, Sk’jin steps out of the still steaming en suite and into his much cooler Cabin room. On the floor are his dirty clothes, loaned to him by Bhān and Camat. He opens his closet and takes out a clean and simply robe-set. It’s a nice cool blue in colour, neither bright nor dark— a colour Sk’jin thinks looks a lot like the eastern sky towards the evening. It’s one of his more simpler robes, that Sk’jin categorizes under sleeping robes. The fabric is incredibly soft but doesn’t clinging.

Sk’jin pulls on the soft fabric of his robes over his shoulders but stops abruptly.

It doesn’t feel soft anymore. Doesn’t feel silky against his skin. Not because the fabric had been ruined or because the stitching had frayed.

Sk’jin feels encased in ashen, gritty dust. Smothered in it—cocooned in it. His mouth is filled with it.
It almost feels as though he was wearing the earth that has buried him so many times.

Stripping himself of the robes mechanically, Sk’jin hangs it back into his closet and shuts it close.

Chapter End Notes

(Author’s Note)

Random topic here but have any of you experienced legit gay panic or remember your first ever gay panic
I was pretty late in discovering my orientation (i’m panromantic) and a lot of pretty intense christian upbringing does sort of tend to you know, shadow and condemn a lot of things but that being besides the point, let me lay out the scene of my gay panic™ my sister is a lecturer at a university here and she has an assistant, so this assistant helps her out a lot when it comes to translations and my sister asked her to accompany us to the hospital for better communication with the hospital staff i went there to get my sister diagnosed not be attacked with gay panic my sister’s assistant who will remain anonymous fucking took my breath away?!? i couldn’t look her in the eye?!? when i had to talk to her about filling out forms i was addressing her left eyebrow?? and a really nice left eyebrow at that too btw and i swear this is the Art Student™ talking but she has a really nice neck to head ratio/slope
also her hair was like, idk, nature/gravity/everything proof idk how she does it it was silky and it literally looked like those hair commercials idk what i wanted to do like do i ask if i can use her hair as reference for my 3d work? would it even render right?
what settings do i use? final gathering or mentalray?? would it do her hair justice???
idk probably not with maya maybe nuke i spent the entire time i was with her not looking at her directly and just giving really awkward replies which thankfully were not really noticed because i am just generally speaking socially awkward so it wasn’t anything really out of the ordinary for me to reply 2 seconds too late but my mind was ike ‘PANIC PANIC PANIC A PRETTY GIRL WHAT DO YOU DO OH GOD SHE’S TALKING TO YOU OMG SOUND LIKE AN INTELLECT FFS YOUR IQ IS 134 SO ACT LIKE IT’ and im like ‘where can i get fruit shakes’ when we’re standing literally right in front of the fruit-shake stand
sighs
*i need help
i also hope i don’t see her again i am not ready and will never be ready i am also writing a one-shot namjin and i hope to put it up by next week! Because wow namjin
THAT THING THAT HAPPENED
I STILL CAN’T GET OVER IT
so yeah hope you enjoyed this chapter
There’s an awkward quietness in the air. One that Hoseok doesn’t know how to diffuse. He’s not sure if he should diffuse it. Namjoon is also clearly feeling the same.

It’s now been over a full Standard day since they warped out of Ynqaba and Sk’jin had finally emerged from his room. He had refused food, company, or treatment and had stayed inside his room. Taeh’yung had spent nearly half that time sitting in front of his door, not saying anything but sometimes humming, sometimes sending small triangles of light floating in and out of Sk’jin’s closed door. He only left after Jimin left his Cabin, pulling him away to go check on Jungkook, Yoongi trailing behind them like a quiet shadow.

And now, as though nothing had happened, as though Sk’jin hadn’t entirely shut them all away for an entire day after his strange recovery, he enters the Bridge exclaiming that he would very much like to know everything that happened while he had been taken.

Sk’jin smiles just as beatifically at them as usual, his skin almost entirely healed, almost no injury to be seen. His skin was a little dim, a little heaviness under his eyes. If you weren’t made aware of his injuries, you would have been able to dismiss those minor observations.

But the strangest thing in this was not the somewhat superficial injuries on Sk’jin but the change in his wardrobe.

He’s not dressed in his usual soft silky fluttery robes, long sleeves fluttering behind him like wings.
Instead he’s dressed in rather normal clothing. Dark trousers, a full sleeved shirt on top.

It feels inherently wrong to see him dressed like this.

‘Is there a problem?’ he asks them, eyes widening a little in carefully constructed worry.

‘We’re good,’ Namjoon says before clearing his throat. ‘So- uh, how are you feeling.’

‘Exceptionally well considering recent incidents,’ Sk’jin replies smoothly before sitting down. ‘How about all of you? I see we have a new addition in our numbers. Who and what is he? Did Taeh’yung rope him in or did he just climb in accidentally?’

‘We’re fine,’ Namjoon waves a bandaged hand dismissively, partially patched eye rolling in an alarming way. ‘Well- as far as we know, his name is Jungkook and it was Jimin who brought him on-board.’

‘Jimin?’ Sk’jin raises his eyebrows.

‘Yeah- he’s…he’s interesting,’ Namjoon says slowly before briefly summarizing all that had happened.

‘I see,’ Sk’jin nods slowly, ‘So basically GI agents have been in this area before, if they have uniforms identical to Yoongi’s. They must have been everywhere if they had enough to actually store them as part of their loot.’

‘That’s what we thought too- and there’s something else actually,’ Namjoon continues, ‘The reason why Jimin brought Jungkook in. He’s the same like Yoongi.’

‘What? A Human?’ Sk’jin asks, a deep frown forming between his eyebrows.

‘No- based on what we know, a Vicitra from Pravasi M’hanun,’ Namjoon explains. The oddest light flickers over Sk’jin’s eyes but it vanishes almost as quickly.

‘Interesting. So then- he’s…he’s from an egg?’ there’s a stiffness to Sk’jin’s tone. It’s almost imperceptible but it’s there. Namjoon doesn’t seem to notice as he pulls up Jungkook’s health-tab, a life-feed of his monitor system.

‘We have reason to believe the Yisheng’s might have been there for a while, maybe part of some GLA diplomatic mission or something.’ Namjoon tells Sk’jin as he turns the holographic display towards the Khol’isa. ‘It’s most probably related to the Gaia case though, considering the fact that the Omhlophe were headed to that System to collect eggs.’

‘That sounds about right,’ Sk’jin comments, his tone easy and agreeing as he reads through Jungkook’s health tab. His hands are steady, but Hoseok notes how his nails have practically been chewed off.

It feels wrong.

‘Was there anything you might have caught on to when you were captured?’ Namjoon asks the Khol’isa. ‘You had a closer look into the Ynqabans in general.’

Sk’jin blinks once, twice, then with a blinding smile says, ‘No Joonie, other than their lack of hygiene, one could not glean much.’

Namjoon grimaces with a nod.
Sk’jin was obviously lying. But Hoseok doesn’t know what to make of that. Sk’jin wouldn’t keep information away from them on purpose. Not one so closely related to what they were doing. So maybe this was something else?

Sk’jin must have felt his gaze because he glances over. There’s a pause, like Sk’jin realized that Hoseok knew he was lying. But instead of addressing it, or even waving it off with a flirtatious smile or something along that line, Sk’jin just looks away.

Something definitely happened, and it was something bad. That was the only way to describe or explain Sk’jin’s behavior.

The Khol’isa was still as snappy and sharp-tongued, but there was something else to him. Or rather something missing. He was so completely closed off it was almost alarming. Except there was nothing any of them could do.

‘Interesting,’ he comments as he reads over Jungkook’s health-tab.

‘What is?’

‘His healing rate is very high,’ Sk’jin comments. ‘Though based on this it could be better with improved diet.’

‘Well the Vicitra are very carnivorous,’ Hoseok comments, watching Sk’jin’s reaction carefully. ‘Just meat should be fine. Maybe on the bloody side.’

Sk’jin doesn’t say anything, only swiping along the holographic projection and pulling up the type-field.

‘Suggested diet for the Vicitra based on their biochemical data is fresh blood.’ Sk’jin reads out.

‘Hahaha,’ Namjoon actually huffs out the syllables, his expression frozen in a strained smile. ‘What?’

‘The Vicitra feed primarily on meat- flesh; mainly for blood,’ Sk’jin points out unnecessarily as he taps on a section of Jungkook’s physical examination. ‘Bloody flesh. This diagnosis of his stomach contents, plus looking at his digestive system, bodily functions- he’s not just a Vicitra, he’s a thoroughly pure Vicitra. Not tainted by changes and introductions of different biochemical introduced to his system through centuries of evolution- he is, in short, a very bloody carnivorous scavenger. Just look at his bone density- but most notably look at his circulatory system.’

‘…it looks fine?’

‘I’m talking about his blood you bionic lump,’ Sk’jin rolls his eyes. ‘His blood count is low-'

‘-that could just be due to his health, his deprived environment-’

‘-the Vicitra, and others who hail from that wonderful planet all require blood as part of their diet- their digestive system works in completely different ways to us- they are cannibalistic yes, but don’t let that hide the fact that starvation due to lack of necessary minerals missing in the biochemical balance of their bodies is what kills them fastest.’

‘So you’re saying cannibalism started as a means of survival?’

‘Well, I highly doubt during their Genesis period they looked at their fellow species and thought ‘wow tasty, 12/10 would eat’ and then just glomped them.’ Sk’jin raises an eyebrow.
‘So…so he needs blood.’

‘We could just give him the minerals he needs to survive,’ Hoseok chimes in, trying to save Namjoon and give him time to collect himself.

‘Did you know that the Khol’isa can actually survive only breathing hydrogen?’ Sk’jin asks unexpectedly.

‘…no.’

‘Yes- we can, if you replace oxygen with hydrogen, our bodies can adapt to break that down to use in a way similar to oxygen,’ Sk’jin smiles but it’s icy. ‘However, we become half-life, incapable of our full abilities and capabilities- we are also unable to withstand the mental strain on our minds- we end up deteriorating into our cocoon stage but we never come out right.’

‘So he needs this in the form of blood?’

‘Yes. So unless we’re willing to donate our blood on a regular, I suggest we find a place where we can find and buy blood, and lots of raw meat.’ Sk’jin announces primly. ‘Or this will effect him- probably physically. Stunted growth, skin issues, physical weakness.’

‘You sound like you’ve met a starved Vicitra before,’ Namjoon rolls his eyes. ‘Been friendly with them in the past?’

There’s no mistaking the way Sk’jin blanches a little, eyes widening a little, hands clenching just a little.

‘We have blood in the Medical Bay- not a lot, but that could last for a while,’ Hoseok says slowly, changing the subject and focus. ‘So we can plan where and how to get the uh, new food items.’

Namjoon grimaces.

‘Also, might I add that we do need to get some maintenance done on the ship,’ Hoseok adds, ‘We don’t have major damages, but I am not risking anything – not when we’re…when we’re like this.’

‘I’d ask you to clarify but I know exactly what you mean,’ Sk’jin comments blithely before adding, ‘I also need new clothes.’

‘A priority indeed,’ Namjoon mumbles under his breath.

‘What was that?’

‘An epiphany-,’ Namjoon says clearly, ‘-indeed. We all need to get supplies- Medical Bay needs to be restocked as well, not to mention the anti-matter cells.’

Sk’jin eyes him with distrust.

‘All right- let’s make a list, and find potential places to restock. Considering our camouflage at the moment, we could safely pass through certain borders but let’s still take all of our previous precautions,’ Namjoon concludes, already pulling up their trajectory on the Navigation Table.

‘What comes after we reach Grisial?’ Sk’jin asks. ‘I know that Grisial is basically our halfway point before we get to Bhumi- but I don’t think we’re equipped to get there.’

‘No we’re not. We’re supposed to continue in warp for 8 days after Grisial- but we need to get supplies,’ Hoseok replies, ‘From what I know of the area, it’s a strictly mining zone. Grisial is mined for its minerals, and nearby asteroid belts are also mined. We could find a mining-dock, that would be easier to dock in, without being too close to any GLA-infested zone, and without too many potential Underverse spies either.’

‘Mining zones are normally run by Androids right?’ Sk’jin asks as he eyes the holographic map of that galactic plane, ‘Androids and cyborgs normally.’

‘Yeah but the Pits are normally run by the GLA Boring Committee.’ Namjoon comments, highlighting the mining zone in orange against the blue of the holographic map.

‘Is no one going to make fun of that name?’ Sk’jin sniggers.

‘It’s a running joke at the Venture Unit,’ Hoseok offers as he highlights the Pits, essentially Docks or cities where the living Beings of the mining industry placed there lived. They looked a bit like Docks but were much larger to facilitate maintenance areas for very large machinery and Transporters.

Sk’jin snorts.

‘But will we find the uhh, necessary food supplies in the Pits?’ Namjoon raises an eyebrow. ‘I mean I get that they basically serve the same purpose as Docks so we should find a Flotsam and Jetsam kind of place there.’

‘You’d be surprised to know that blood actually does constitute as a main ingredient for a lot of Species,’ Sk’jin remarks as he pulls up information about the Pits in the zone. ‘Well, there’s a total of 21 Pits in this entire plane. That’s a lot.’

‘Good- if we can find one close enough to Grisial, it means we can still the planets natural resonance to block ours-’

‘Except we don’t have to anymore,’ Namjoon reminds him, ‘We’re basically invisible now- we can choose any of these Pits and we’d still be hidden. I think we should go to the ones closer to the border- that would allow a broader range of available items rather than the ones that are too close to the planet itself.’

‘-well in that case, why bother with this trajectory at all? We could sail past unseen, undetected anywhere. We could fly right past Tayi and no one would know,’ Sk’jin offers.

‘No- regardless of how safe and hidden we are, we have a mysterious group of Beings who know of Jimin and his abilities after us – we can’t risk it.’ Namjoon shakes his head immediately.
‘They’re going to be hell-bent on us.’

‘Isn’t there a way of finding out who or what they exactly are?’ Hoseok asks, ‘They’re related to the Gaia Case, there’s no doubt about it. But based on what we read, not related to the Akramanese though there’s an uncanny resemblance,’ he nods at Sk’jin who smiles a grimace at him.

‘They should have left some form of record- sightings, something,’ Namjoon ruminates.
‘Especially if we were to dig into Systems that are more or less suffering due to the GLA and their treaties.’

‘You know the more I think about it, I think Jimin’s System cut off part of their planet-count to block out the GLA from getting back at to them.’ Sk’jin remarks unexpectedly. ‘We’ve seen all of this happening- places that the GLA have been to, and then left behind- discarded really, barely able to survive unless they turned to another source of help- like in Ynqaba’s case, with the ‘Omhlophe.’

‘We don’t know that for sure,’ Namjoon states firmly. ‘We can only speculate.’

‘I guess,’ Sk’jin replies absentmindedly.

‘Jinnie?’

They don’t have time to really turn around before Taeh’yung flings himself across the length of the Bridge and tackles Sk’jin into a tight hug.

‘Ouch fuck-!’ Sk’jin crashes into Hoseok who crashes into Namjoon who thankfully is able to hold them up.

There’s a gasp and Jimin appears by the doorway, wearing a beanie over the bandages wrapped around his head, and he too is quickly approaching the Table and also dives in to hug Sk’jin.

‘Okay- okay, oh Spaces-‘

Hoseok has never seen Sk’jin this uncomfortable. His hands hover awkwardly, his neck bent all the way back while Taeh’yung buries his face into Sk’jin’s chest, squeezing around his waist. Jimin is hugging the two of them from the side, head leaning on Sk’jin’s shoulder, beaming brightly at the highly uncomfortable Khol’isa who was now earnestly pushing Hoseok down in his attempt to move away from the sudden display of affection.

‘Buggy- could you let up-‘ Hoseok asks through gritted teeth, trying to smile as Namjoon tries to push him up to stand straight. But then Yoongi appears, pausing in front of them, face blank.

‘Wait Yoongi don’t-‘ Sk’jin’s eyes widen but then the Human follows Taeh’yung’s and Jimin’s example and approaching from the other side hugs him too.

‘Someone please do something,’ Sk’jin pleads in a small breathless voice.

Reaching over Sk’jin, Hoseok gently cards through Taeh’yung’s soft hair and with the gentlest voice he can produce under such pressed (literally) conditions says, ‘Buggy, it’s okay, Sk’jin is all right-?!’

Taeh’yung lifts his head and to Hoseok’s and Namjoon’s surprise instead of seeing joy or maybe even tears of worry, there’s a bright glaring fury in the Zhak’gri’s eyes.

‘Oh fuck-‘

Suddenly Hoseok is being pulled away by Namjoon and Yoongi has somehow managed to get to Jimin’s side, pulling him back.

‘I warned you,’ Taeh’yung says in a disturbing low tone. ‘I warned you, and you let go. Don’t do it again.’

‘You can’t tell me what to do- this is mine now,’ Sk’jin replies, equally low though he sounds chastised.

Hoseok’s ears pop and he realizes with alarm that something had happened with the pressure in the Bridge. Judging by Jimin’s alarmed face and Yoongi’s defensive stance, he wasn’t the only one to feel it.

Then easily enough and with a bright smile, Taeh’yung hugs Sk’jin again with a giggle.
‘It’s good to have you back Jinnie.’

‘Yeah yeah,’ Sk’jin replies tiredly before catching sight of Jimin and Yoongi properly, both of them watching the whole thing, one with a smile, the other as impassive as ever.

‘Yoongi if you’re going to punch me then you can do it now-‘

‘No punching,’ Jimin states with a disapproving look. ‘No fighting.’

‘You’re right this is weird,’ Sk’jin says to no one in particular before saying, ‘Yes, no fighting Jimin, we won’t fight.’

Jimin nods slowly to that, eyes narrowing just a little bit before he states without preamble, ‘Have to wake Jungkook.’

‘All right…’

‘Is he going to be this authoritative all the time now that he can speak Standard?’ Sk’jin asks no one in particular again. To Hoseok’s mild alarm, he notices how Yoongi’s hand seems to flex almost in a clawing motion though he stands still. No doubt because Jimin had a hand around his arm.

‘He’s still recovering,’ Hoseok says, addressing Jimin, ‘There’s a lot that’s happened to him so we need to-‘

‘Actually- waking him up now might be a good idea,’ Namjoon interrupts, ‘Vicitra are not known to be the sanest or the most civil-‘

‘I think all things considered, any species of Beings have the complete ability and potential to become highly functional members of society,’ Sk’jin interrupts smoothly. ‘Judging the outcome of a species based solely on the exaggerated beliefs of their most famed stereotypes is wrong.’

‘No one was saying he wouldn’t become a highly functional member of society,’ Namjoon quotes tensely. ‘I was just saying we need to be careful with how we proceed. This has nothing to do with stereotypes, but everything to do with precaution. Regardless of species, someone who has been subjected to unknown and obviously cruel treatment should be approached with caution. And I should probably say it’s a given that cannibalism is not a stereotype when it happens to be an integrated part of their culture.’

There’s a tense moment where they glare at each other. Jimin is watching them with apprehension in his eyes, hand gripping Yoongi’s arm, this time as though asking him to intervene. Taeh’yung is also quiet, watching Sk’jin with something like sorrow in his expression.

‘Can we move on,’ Yoongi requests after a few more tense seconds.

‘Why do you want to wake him now?’ Hoseok asks before Namjoon and Sk’jin can butt heads again.

‘Important,’ Jimin repeats what he said in that underground cell, ‘Jungkook is important. Must have answers.’

‘There’s no guarantee he’ll know anything,’ Sk’jin says and it’s almost gentle, and instead of addressing Jimin, he’s addressing Yoongi.

‘I need to understand,’ Yoongi states. ‘He is like me- another born how I was. Maybe he has seen Dreams. Maybe he has Known for a longer while. He knows his name. It means someone spoke to him- he has a name, he is himself.’

There it was again. Yoongi’s belief that he wasn’t Yoongi. Or that he was no one.

Jimin seems to be having the same thought, his hand sliding down Yoongi’s arm to take his hand in his instead.

Who knows, maybe they were right. Maybe Jungkook would be the key to figuring out everything.

‘We can make it safe,’ Taeh’yung proposes unexpectedly. ‘And I agree with Pa- he’ll be weak right now. But he knows Chim- he’s also seen Hobi and Yoongi. We can make it safe, for all of us.’

‘And I am gaining strength again,’ Jimin adds, ‘I won’t be with no protection. Jungkook will not hurt me.’

‘We also have the reassurance that Jungkook would recognize his rescuers- he would know that they don’t mean harm-’ Namjoon is saying but there’s a huff of complete disgust coming from Sk’jin.

‘Namjoon sometimes the things you say shocks me,’ Sk’jin says sharply, ‘Just because you “rescue” someone, and that too the way Jungkook was taken, regardless of where and what his situation was, would in no way make you pliant to this potentially new threat. Yeah sure maybe this new place isn’t covered in shit, but I think you and I both know that cruelty isn’t only born in a shit-hole. Maybe reflect back a little before you open your mouth okay?’

Everyone watches them silently again, still unsure how to react.

‘You’re right,’ Namjoon replies unexpectedly, looking at Sk’jin with a strange sort of understanding. ‘I wasn’t thinking and that was insensitive of me. We proceed with waking Jungkook up then. Jimin’s protection and safety is our priority but so is Jungkook’s- he’ll be confused and he might react violently- we need to make sure he doesn’t hurt himself.’

‘Before waking him up we could administer a light sedative, make him a little sleepy?’ Hoseok offers.

Sk’jin shakes his head, ‘That won’t work- it will confuse him more. If we’re going to wake him, we should do it when he knows he’s fully in control of his body- we don’t want to start the entire thing by making him feel like he’s under captivity or in any way being regarded as a thing.’

‘Lisai, when will Jungkook stabilize?’ Hoseok asks.

‘5 hours 21 minutes.’

‘When is it advisable to wake him from delta-sleep?’ Sk’jin asks pointedly.

‘8 hours.’

‘Is that good for everyone?’ Namjoon asks, glancing at everyone.

There’s collective nodding (or in Sk’jin’s case a single-nod) and Namjoon continues, ‘Okay- so let’s lay out a plan to make sure things go as smoothly as possible.’

‘I will be there,’ Jimin chimes in at once. ‘Jungkook knows me- he will feel safe.’
‘Okay yeah- Jimin will be the one to basically wake Jungkook up,’ Namjoon concludes, ‘And then once Jungkook is reassured enough- we introduce ourselves slowly- Yoongi, Hoseok, Sk’jin, me, and finally Taeh’yung-‘

‘Why am I at the end?’

‘You knocked him unconscious- he’ll be afraid of you,’ Namjoon frowns.

Taeh’yung sulks at Namjoon.

‘He will need to be washed- I don’t know how we can do that- if he’s lived his entire life in captivity, he probably doesn’t know the concept of bathing or washing,’ Sk’jin ruminates from where he’s gone to sit, watching the video feed from the Medical Bay.

‘I had to block the CleanBots from the Medical Bay,’ Hoseok frowns, remembering how he had seen one of them attempt to clean Jungkook. Hoseok had very quickly rolled the Bot out, worriedly checking the slumbering child in case he’d been cleaned with whatever UV-powered stain-remover the CleanBots were outfitted with.

‘We’ll take it one step at a time,’ Namjoon nods, ‘Once he’s better accustomed we get him to clean up-‘

‘I can help,’ Jimin offers at once.

‘Me too!’ Taeh’yung offers eagerly.

‘Maybe just Jimin,’ Namjoon quickly says, ‘I think it’s safe to say he trusts him the most.’

Taeh’yung sulks at Namjoon again.

‘And then once he has adapted- or at least feels comfortable and is used to us, we can start asking him questions,’ Namjoon says with a look at Yoongi who nods.

‘I have a difficult question to ask,’ Sk’jin says, not looking away from the screen in front of him. ‘What do we do after?’

‘What do you mean?’ Taeh’yung asks, skipping up to the Khol’isa.

‘Well,’ Sk’jin begins slowly, a strange anger thinly veiled in his tone, ‘We have taken him out of his environment- of course it was a terrible place to live in- to exist in, no doubt. But what if he doesn’t have the answers- what if he doesn’t know? What if in the end, he’s just a blood-drinking helpless and wild Being who is of no use to our team? What do we do then? Our mission’s success, its direction, relies solely on our cooperation and mutual understanding of each other. We cannot leave him somewhere at random- we cannot expect him to survive. He’s one of the eggs, the GLA would be all too willing, and by tracing his whereabouts, the Special-Jury would realize this is related to us, narrowing our movements and giving clues of our plans. What do we do then?’

The Khol’isa looks up, looking straight at Jimin.

‘I understand that you need answers, but did you think about the consequences of what your actions could bring about?’

Jimin doesn’t look away, doesn’t react outwardly. His expression is calm and neutral; a practiced face, one that Hoseok has seen on the faces of Judges, politicians, priests- people who possess power.
‘He will stay,’ Jimin states simply.

‘Did you not hear anything I just said?’ Sk’jin demands, frustration bleeding into his words. ‘You can’t just make decisions—’

‘My ship,’ Jimin says quietly, his expression still neutral. ‘My authority.’

There’s a stunned silence that follows this statement. Even Yoongi looks a little surprised, glancing a little at Jimin with slightly wide eyes.

‘Wow,’ Sk’jin slow claps, his tone light but his expression heavy. ‘Wow- will you look at this!’

He stands and makes his way towards Jimin, his posture relaxed, almost lazy.

‘A little lord, who was napping for centuries, wakes up and thinks he still has the authority to order the Beings he should remember are there to help him- Beings he would have been completely lost without had he been woken by some other means- what if his place and Jungkook’s place had been switched? This little lord needs to realize he can’t just make decisions that are impulsive with so much at risk—’

‘You’re afraid,’ Jimin cuts across, taking a step forward to meet Sk’jin halfway. ‘You’re afraid of the answers.’

Jimin breaks out into a small but genuine smile, hands reaching up as though to take Sk’jin’s in his.

‘Don’t be afraid.’

‘Don’t fucking try me—’ Sk’jin hisses, body lurching forwards towards Jimin, eyes flashing neon red but he doesn’t make it any closer.

Yoongi is on him, tackling the much taller Khol’isa to the ground, managing to get Sk’jin’s arms behind his back, a knee placed over his sternum.

‘No Yoongi!’ Jimin is quick to pull the Human off of Sk’jin, who recovers from his shock and shoves Jimin’s hands away before struggling to his feet.

‘I am sick of this!’ Sk’jin hisses out. ‘You should have just stuck to your plan and left me in Ynqaba to just live. Fuck all of you, fuck all of this!’

He pushes past Jimin roughly and storms out of the Bridge.

Hoseok lets go of the breath he had been holding without meaning to.

‘Yoongi you okay?’ Namjoon asks, approaching the Human who had a hand placed over his side.

‘Sore,’ is all Yoongi says with a dismissive nod of his head.

‘His Soul is afraid- he is filled with fear,’ Jimin says quietly, glancing towards the Bridge doorway, ‘Fear, guilt, anger.’

‘I’ll go talk to him,’ Taeh’yung says quietly but to everyone’s surprise it’s Namjoon who stops him.

‘No wait- let him cool down for a bit. Then I’ll go talk to him,’ the Kutsoglerin declares. ‘I don’t want you two getting into a fight, the ship can’t handle that. But I do want to talk about what Sk’jin mentioned.’
Jimin ducks his head down at that, sighing before he nods.

‘I thought about it,’ he admits. ‘But I know Jungkook can help. I don’t know how- but I know he will.’

‘We have no evidence of that,’ Namjoon tells him gently, ‘We cannot prove that- that’s why we need a back-up plan. I understand your decision, your choice- I would have done the same too. But we now need to think of what we can do in case things don’t go how we intend them to.’

Jimin nods.

‘If, like you said, Jungkook is able to explain or give you answers, what happens after that?’ Hoseok asks as well. ‘This is a responsibility we need to look over very carefully.’

‘You understand why we can’t keep him, right?’ Namjoon asks gently.

‘We can,’ Taeh’yung says, ‘I was not part of this mission, but I’m here.’

‘Because you are aware, Tae,’ Hoseok reasons, ‘We don’t know how Jungkook will react- how he will cope. He is innocent- what we’re doing- what we’re doing right now is not innocent. We cannot expect him to live and go through all we’ve gone through the way we have so far.’

‘Jungkook is not animal,’ Jimin states simply.

‘No he’s not,’ Namjoon agrees, ‘He’s a child. And what we’re doing, what we’re headed into, is not suitable for children.’

Jimin exhales out, his actions showing that he accepted that, that there was no arguing it.

‘We can take him to a safe place,’ Hoseok offers though he’s not sure how that was guaranteed. Clearly Jimin is doubtful too. ‘There are places of refuge, Safe Stops, opened by the GLA and the Yishengs in several Systems solely for Beings escaping war, or Beings who have lost their homes and planets- there are normally no authorities in places like this, to encourage the normally illegal aliens to feel a little more comfortable- mainly agents working in that field who blend in with them. We could leave Jungkook there with them.’

‘But what if Beings like Seulgaan take him? We cannot trust them- we don’t have guarantee,’ Jimin argues. ‘He’s too important. We need him. To understand.’

‘Once he wakes up, and we are able to study him, then we can make our decision, okay?’ Namjoon says kindly but firmly. ‘We cannot make concrete decisions right now but we need to make room for the possibility of things to go differently.’

Jimin nods to that after a few seconds.

‘Okay then,’ Namjoon sighs out tiredly. ‘Let’s plan the next steps for Grisial. Taeh’yung could you go to the Kitchens and tell me what we need stock on? Yoongi, could you compile a list of the weapons infirmary and list what we need restocking in? Jimin if you could, please check on the device we’ve installed to make sure it’s running as it should and then could you come back up? We need to plan our trajectories based on your System. Hoseok and I will start narrowing down our next docking location.’

Everyone nods in accordance to their duties.

‘We’re going to do everything we can to avoid what happened in Ynqaba, and even before that. We have a new source of worry added to basically the entirety of the GLA, Venture Unit, and Yishengs. We will do everything to find out more where and when we can, but please remember that our safety and security is our highest priority.’

Namjoon doesn’t know what to expect when he stands outside of Sk’jin’s Cabin. But he sure as hell wasn’t expecting the door to open after his first knock.

The Cabin is dark, illuminated only by the filtered warp light streaming outside of Sk’jin’s window. Sk’jin himself is sitting on the desk that has been placed against the window, his silhouette stark against the warp light.

The door closes behind him and Namjoon stands for a bit before sitting down on the ground, leaning back against the door.

‘I’ll apologize to Jimin later. For what happened in the Bridge, and for leaving him behind in Seulgaan’s ship.’ Sk’jin announces without preamble.

‘I’m not here to talk about that.’

‘I know why you’re here. I was just telling you what I plan on doing later.’ Sk’jin replies, his tone lacking his usual snappy quality.

‘We’re going to wake Jungkook in an hours time. We came to a plan of sorts where we will find a suitable planet with a Yisheng-based Safe Camps and deliver him there.’

‘You know that’s not feasible. Jimin knew what he was doing when he brought him into the ship,’ Sk’jin says quietly. ‘He knew we couldn’t allow someone like him to run off free- he knew we wouldn’t, knowing what we know now, and knowing what he is.’

Namjoon shrugs, a little in agreement, and a little in who cares now kinda way.

‘You wanna talk?’

‘There’s not much to say Namjoon. I’ll apologize, Jimin will of course forgive me, Yoongi will look for any opportunity to deck me again, and everything will return to normal.’ Sk’jin intones lightly. ‘That seems to be the pattern.’
'Not about that,' Namjoon repeats quietly. ‘Did something happen in Ynqaba?’

It’s silent.

Sk’jin’s Cabin is different from the times he’s seen it in passing. It’s strangely bare, weirdly spacious even though Namjoon knows all the Cabins are the same size.

‘Did something happen? Sk’jin?’ Namjoon repeats.

‘Nothing,’ Sk’jin replies quietly. ‘I just thought I had been abandoned- and I came to terms with that. And then- and then I thought I died. I was…’ Sk’jin laughs under his breath. ‘I thought to myself {finally-I am free of this stupid mission, free of annoying crew members, free of all this bullshit}- and then I’m back again. And your stupid face is the first thing I see.’

It almost feels good to hear the insult and Namjoon reminds himself not to accept insults as a general norm.

‘I knew someone just like you,’ Sk’jin says conversationally. ‘Fuck, that same denseness, that same stupid will to do the fucking right thing- t’s like you’re doin’ that on purpose- just to fuckin’ get on m’nerves. You even have the same fuckin’ dimples- fuck I hate it so much. Same fucking eyes.’

Namjoon wants to apologize though he knows there’s nothing to apologize for. Besides, Sk’jin would most likely get pissed off by his apology.

‘You’re the fucking same- fuck, I hate all of this so much.’ Sk’jin ends with a whisper.

‘I can’t speak for Yoongi but we had no intention of leaving you behind,’ Namjoon tells him quietly. ‘The honest truth behind our actions was that we needed to divide our time carefully- make sure that-‘

‘-there’s no need to explain to me darlin’,’ Sk’jin snorts out, ‘I wasn’t a priority- Jimin was- and I get it. It’s fine.’

‘It’s not fine because you thought we left you behind. We didn’t- we had no intention of doing so,’ Namjoon repeats firmly. ‘We came looking for you the moment we realized what happened- Taeh’yung found you. We thought we lost you.’

‘Yeah well- you should have just left me.’

‘Why are you afraid?’ Namjoon asks instead.

‘I’m not afraid,’ Sk’jin replies.

‘You are. It all makes sense now- you’re afraid. Why are you afraid-‘

‘I said I’m not afraid!’ Sk’jin hisses, turning around on the desk to glare at Namjoon, eyes glowing malevolently at him.

‘Then why won’t you tell me what happened,’ Namjoon demands.

‘You know I thought I knew exactly how this would go- and in fact, everything has gone exactly how I knew it would go- and that makes so so angry-‘ Sk’jin actually shakes a little bit. ‘I knew what would happen, but I’m still here, a damn fuckin’ fool.’

‘You knew what would happen?’
‘You live as long I have and you’ll start seeing how everything just repeats itself- fuck, the Yisheng’s were right- everything is a fuckin’ loop, fuckin’ continuum.’ Sk’jin laughs humourlessly. ‘Fuck sometimes I forget you’re all so fucking young- even Taeh’yung despite the others- you’re all so fucking young, fucking babies all of you.’ Sk’jin mutters under his breath.

‘I know that-’

‘No Namjoon- you don’t know,’ Sk’jin interrupts tiredly. ‘You really really really really don’t know.’

‘Then tell me.’

He thinks back to the talk he had with Hoseok the previous day. It was true, Sk’jin was broken, but carefully carefully put back together.

‘If I tell you,’ Sk’jin whispers, leaning his head against the window, his body curving and suddenly he looks incredibly old. His hair appearing white, and his skin fragile as light refracts through his fingers. ‘Then you’ll be afraid too.’

‘But you won’t be alone.’ Namjoon offers.

Sk’jin slowly turns, facing him a little. Two neon orbs stare out at him amidst the white warp light, studying him.

‘You’re just like him.’ He says and it’s almost accusatory. ‘What curse is this? This has to be a curse or some other bullshit.’

Sk’jin turns forward again, fuming under his breath.

‘Who was he?’

‘My best-friend,’ Sk’jin answers quietly. ‘My best-friend, my right-hand, my moral-compass, my laughter, my promise. Spaces I fucking hate him.’

This is probably the rawest Sk’jin will ever be, Namjoon realizes.

Hoseok recognized his anger.

Jimin recognized his fear.

‘What happened to him?’ Namjoon asks though he’s quite sure he knows, judging by what he saw in the Nightmare Planet.

‘He died Joonie,’ Sk’jin tells him simply. ‘He died, and I tried. But I couldn’t.’

And as clear as day, Namjoon can see his pain.
They gather one by one in the Lobby outside the Medical Bay, waiting for everyone to gather. Taeh’yung is fidgeting with the length of Hoseok’s sweater sleeve that the Ngfy’widan had removed and tied about his waist instead. Jimin appears next, trailed after by Yoongi. Yoongi’s injuries were almost entirely cured and healed over though he still carried himself with some care especially around his ribs. Jimin was also almost all healed-up, and though he didn’t have the bandages about his head anymore, he still wore the soft-fabric beanie. Namjoon wonders if it was to make him feel better or something.

And then Sk’jin enters.

Immediately the atmosphere tenses and Jimin is worrying his lower lip between his teeth, eyeing Sk’jin carefully but not lowering his stance. Yoongi doesn’t move or even look at Sk’jin, but there’s no doubt in Namjoon’s mind that the Human was very aware of Sk’jin’s movement.

The Khol’isa stands some feet from Jimin, posture a little stiff but relaxed before he clears his throat and begins.

‘Good afternoon in Standard Time,’ the Khol’isa announces before continuing in his usual grand manner. ‘Before we start I would like to apologize to Jimin for 2 offences. The first is for leaving him in Seulgaan’s ship- I should have thought and planned my movements better and remained to give Yoongi the opportunity to bring you back to the ship. I did not, and I apologize. The second is for my earlier behavior- it was wrong for me to insinuate you weren’t planning ahead when in fact you did in fact bring in a potentially vital resource into our mission that could benefit us and our next step. I will not apologize for asking you questions regarding this unknown Being’s presence though. I felt that it was in my authority and place in the ship to ask these questions.’

‘I thank you, but there is nothing to forgive,’ Jimin replies and then bows his head down and says, ‘It was wrong of me to use my authority in that way- to say I am more powerful, that is wrong. I am sorry.’

‘I am sorry I knocked your tooth out,’ Yoongi adds in a blunt tone that sounded anything but apologetic. Jimin lightly steps on his foot and the Human adds, ‘I am sorry for leaving you behind and allowing you to be captured. If I had not done that, you would not have been caught in that explosion.’

Sk’jin’s smile is stiff, his hand closing to a tight fist for a moment before he nods, ‘I accept both of your apology.’

And as though to somehow try and show his acceptance of their apologies he extends a hand up, clearly aiming to ruffle their hair or something along that line. But Jimin flinches back and Yoongi grabs Sk’jin’s hand and twists the Khol’isa away, pushing him into the Lobby seat. Sk’jin looks up, expression incredulous and shocked.
‘Fucking hell Yoongi I was just-’ Sk’jin begins but Jimin is quick to try and explain.

It was almost as though he forgot he could speak Standard, breaking out into his own language before hastily correcting himself, ‘-it’s okay- Sk’jin I’m sorry it wasn’t-’ he breaks off into his own language, occasional Standard thrown in.

He just stops and then reaches up and pulls his beanie down.

There’s an audible gasp from Hoseok and Namjoon is angry.

One of Jimin’s most notable feature was his hair- soft, silky, strangely anti-gravity with the way it seemed to float about almost in slow-motion about his head as he moved. It was a unique colour, both silver and gold at the same time- both starlight and sunlight at the same time.

But none of that was left anymore- and despite the obvious attempts made to heal and treat the injuries around his head, one side of his head was still blue and black, some areas still a little swollen, and clear indications of the scalp having been shorn, with shiny new skin growing over the reddened areas.

‘It- it was-’ Jimin looks down, eyes downcast, ‘Still shock- still shock.’

It was obviously done against his will, and whoever did that to his hair had done with little to no care. It had obviously traumatized him, so when Sk’jin had reached forward, he had reacted instinctively and as a result triggered Yoongi to react.

He quickly covers his head again, still looking down as though ashamed. Namjoon is distracted by sudden movement from Sk’jin who stands abruptly and makes his way towards Jimin. The latter watches with wide eyes though he stands his ground.

‘Uh-‘

Sk’jin stares almost blankly at Jimin before an annoyed expression takes over his face and with a rough shoulder-grab, pulls the latter closer towards him and shakes him.

‘Hair is superficial you hear me? It’ll grow back- and it’ll grow back fucking beautiful you hear me kid?’ Sk’jin says as he shakes Jimin who nods in haste. ‘You know what, hair is dumb anyways, I’ll shave my hair off- no, you know what, we will ALL shave our hair off. Actually, better yet we’ll shave Namjoon’s hair off-‘

‘-what the actual fuck-?!’ Namjoon splutters out.

‘-because you shouldn’t feel any less about who you are- you hear me?’ Sk’jin shakes Jimin again. ‘There’s no need to feel shame!’

‘Y-yes!’ Jimin manages to get out, a small smile on his face.

‘Good. You wear that bald head with pride, you hear me?’ Sk’jin lets go of Jimin before announcing, ‘I’m getting that shaver, Namjoon stay put.’ And walks out.

‘Wait-! Is he serious?!’ Namjoon demands, eyes widening in legitimate panic because he’s not sure if Sk’jin is joking or not. ‘Wait- Sk’jin we have things to do first!’

The Khol’isa doesn’t return.

‘I think he’s just a bit embarrassed,’ Hoseok comments quietly with a smile. ‘He’ll come back-
‘I’m sorry for stealing your underwear Hobi!’ Taeh’yung pipes in, hand raised, ‘And I stole Jinnie’s pudding too it was really tasty- and Yoongi it was me who left all those crumbs on your chair, and Pa-‘

Namjoon almost flinches back while Hoseok splutters to the side.

‘-I’m sorry for using your toothbrush, shampoo, and soap.’

‘…that’s okay Tae,’ Namjoon says slowly.

‘Great-‘

‘-but please stop using them,’ Namjoon concludes before he looks around and asks, ‘Does anyone have anything else they want to apologize for?’

‘I used your lotion too!’ Taeh’yung throws in.

‘-…yes- okay, that’s fine, don’t do it anymore,’ Namjoon sighs out before glancing around to make sure no one else had anything else to add.

‘I also-‘

‘It’s fine Tae,’ Namjoon tries to smile at the Zhak’gri. ‘There’s no need to confess anything anymore let’s just- let’s just move forward yes?’

‘And next time maybe ask permission yes?’ Hoseok adds, eyeing Taeh’yung briefly before asking, ‘How did you even steal my underwear? When?’

‘It’s nice fabric!’ is all Taeh’yung says, ‘It’s really comfortable!’

‘-wait are you wearing them now?!’ Hoseok demands.

‘Shouldn’t we wake Jungkookie now?’ Taeh’yung changes the subject, hopping towards the Medical Bay and dragging Jimin with him.

‘Right- yeah let’s do that,’ Namjoon nods, hoping to turn the events a bit more serious. ‘Jimin are you ready?’

Jimin nods as he pauses for a while by the door.

‘Okay so- this could go very wrong.’ Namjoon announces with a sigh. ‘But I agree that we should do this quickly, and if he can somehow give us the answers, or provide us with information, this will greatly benefit us and how we can plan our next step forward.’

Jimin nods in agreement to that from where he’s standing. Namjoon notices how Sk’jin reappears by the stairs, watching from the shadows as they revised.

‘However we do need to take full precaution.’ Namjoon adds, ‘We need to ease him into the environment, make him feel safe, and that he’s not being threatened. That means-‘ he turns to look at Yoongi, ‘No sudden quiet movements- that’s freaky enough even when you’re a fully functional adult Being.’

Yoongi actually has a small frown on his face, as though affronted by Namjoon’s words.

‘He saw you in the cave with Yoongi so I think he might register you as someone who was involved his rescue but that might also trigger pain and panic- so precaution,’ Namjoon tells Hoseok who nods in understanding.

‘And Taeh’yung…’

The Zhak’gri perks up at his name, blinking rapidly for a moment, rapt with attention.

‘Don’t…don’t freak him out. Or like, spook him- be gentle and careful, he’s not exactly-’

‘He’s a baby!’ Taeh’yung exclaims with a sulk, ‘I know how to behave with babies!’

‘Right okay,’ Namjoon doesn’t look reassured at all- if anything he looks even more worried.

‘So Jimin will be there when he first wakes up- we will let him handle everything first- okay, from the top,’ Namjoon addresses Jimin, ‘What is the first part of this plan.’

‘Jungkook wakes up,’ Jimin recites easily, ‘I stay there, help him and tell him he is safe. If he is dangerous, I will make him sleepy again. If he is only little bit dangerous, I will calm him down. And no one should come until I say so. When he is ready, I will call Yoongi, and then Hobi. After that, we introduce everyone else, but slowly, and from distant.’

‘Perfect,’ Namjoon nods and adds, ‘Right- so, like we all agreed, only Jimin is going in first, and none of us are to show up or intervene. Jimin was in the exact situation before but with worse conditions and factors- they are in a controlled and safe environment and we will maintain that unless things get out of hand. Is that clear?’

It’s directed more towards Yoongi and Taeh’yung but everyone nods nonetheless.

‘Ready Jimin?’ Namjoon asks.

Jimin nods and holds up a thumbs-up before stepping into the Medical Bay. The door closes only partially behind him and everyone lines up outside in order of their introduction.

‘Lisai pull Jungkook out of delta-sleep, and provide life-feed to Lobby 1,’ Namjoon orders.

‘Understood.’

A holographic-screen projector pops up from the table before the couch and the usual colour-spectrum ripples across, forming the holographic projection of the surveillance from the Medical Bay. Jungkook had been unrestrained, any infusion-tab on him removed and sealed. They debated using a light sedative and decided that it was better to leave the young Being in complete control over his consciousness. If things escalated, Jimin would be able to control the situation.

Jimin stands by the Medical Bed, waiting as Jungkook is pulled out of delta-sleep. Hoseok keeps an eye on Jungkook’s health tab, watching as his pulse slowly increase, his brain-wave patterns start increasing, and within a few seconds everything sky-rockets and Jungkook lurches, back arching terribly as he cough violently, throwing up a little of what looked like something terribly like decomposed flesh.

To Namjoon’s amusement, Hoseok turns a little green.

Jimin doesn’t move, doesn’t say anything, until Jungkook is panting heavily, limp and obviously not in full control of his body. It’s after a few seconds that Jungkook seems to realize someone is there.

His movements are shockingly fast and Sk’jin swears under his breath as Jungkook half leaps, half rolls off of the Medical Bed and barrels into Jimin. Yoongi twitches next to him, watching the feed carefully, his hands in loose fists. Taeh’young is gnawing his lower lip, watching the feed and then eyeing the partially open doorway turn by turn.

‘Jungkook- safe.’ Jimin says, partially hidden from view as he’s on the floor, Jungkook crouching over him, letting out a loud growl. ‘Safe- Jungkook safe, no hurt.’

They wait with bated breath before after what feels like ages, Jungkook stops growling and his crouch is less stiff. There’s a strange choking strangling sound.

‘Jimin-’

‘Safe?’

‘Safe.’

‘Where?’

‘My home.’

Namjoon can’t help but glance about at everyone else at Jimin’s words. Hoseok has a soft look in his eyes, watching their interaction carefully, eyebrows almost pinched. Taeh’young’s face is covered in tears and snot, while Sk’jin watches with a blankness that rivals Yoongi’s. Speaking of the Human, Yoongi is by the door, standing quietly, head turned towards the opening. Namjoon would be mad but he knows, or at least hopes, that Yoongi is professional and wouldn’t undermine their plans.

‘Why?’

‘Why?’ Jimin repeats, sounding curious.

‘Why am I here?’

This interests Namjoon. Jungkook was clearly much more aware than they had all initially thought.

‘You help me,’ Jimin tells him quietly. ‘You help me, I help you. Make you safe.’

‘What do you want?’

‘He’s smart,’ Sk’jin says almost inaudibly, ‘I don’t think he was born in whatever pit you found him in. He’s too smart for that.’

‘I want you to be safe,’ Jimin tells him earnestly, ‘And I want you to help me again.’

‘Help? How?’

‘To understand where you come from,’ Jimin replies, his hand appearing to gently stroke through Jungkook’s hair. ‘To understand everything we can.’

‘Will they hurt me?’

‘No one hurt you-‘

‘-not animal. I’m not animal.’
‘You are not animal,’ Jimin repeats soothingly.

‘Why is everyone standing outside? This is a cage?’

‘Well fuck.’ Sk’jin looks mildly impressed.

‘Jimin- ask him if he wants to see us all- if he can sense us, he knows how many of us are there- just tell him,’ Hoseok says quietly.

‘My home,’ Jimin tells him quietly, ‘Family- my family.’

‘Like you?’

‘Yes,’ Jimin carefully sits up on his knees. ‘Safe. Remember? Yoongi, Hoseok- family. Safe.’

‘Scared.’

‘Okay- stay behind me?’ Jimin offers, standing up slowly.

Jungkook, still crouched, nods a little.

‘Namjoon- walk outside,’ Jimin says. ‘Jungkook and me, outside.’

Namjoon glances at the rest of them, gesturing for them to separate a little so as to not appear like some massive threatening bunch.

Taeh’yung quickly shuffles towards the center of the Lobby, while Yoongi takes a few steps away from the door and stands some way from the opening. Hoseok goes to stand some feet from Yoongi, and Sk’jin quietly makes his way towards the opposite end of the room. Namjoon stands from where he’s sitting on the couch.

‘We’re ready when you are,’ he replies back.

‘We go outside slow,’ Jimin tells Jungkook, helping him stand straight. ‘No- not afraid. Safe, okay?’

He raises a thumbs up, tilting his head in question. Jungkook stares at his hand and then carefully and deliberately wraps his hand around Jimin’s thumb.

Taeh’yung clutches dramatically at his chest while Hoseok looks like he’s trying to fight a smile.

‘Yoongi? Door?’ Jimin takes slow steps towards the doorway. Yoongi steps towards the opening, still keeping his distance.

‘Lisai, open the door slowly please,’ Namjoon orders quietly.

The door slides open quietly and slowly, giving Jungkook time to adjust to the movement of the automated doors. Jungkook is looking around, eyes wide and body curled into himself, making himself smaller than Jimin. He doesn’t seem too shocked by his immediate surroundings yet- the technology around him not blowing his mind. He’s seen it before- maybe Sk’jin was right, maybe he wasn’t born wherever Jimin had been placed. Maybe he had been forced in there.

It’s obvious when Jungkook spots Yoongi standing outside.

He flinches, gripping onto Jimin’s shoulder and ducking down even more.
‘Yoongi safe,’ Jimin’s voice says clearly from beyond the open door. ‘Remember? Yoongi safe.’

Yoongi looks like he’s attempting a smile.

‘Who? Who is- who are you?’ Jungkook asks, stopping Jimin from stepping forward, watching the Human over his shoulder.

‘My given name is Yoongi,’ the Human replies. ‘I am the weapons-specialist aboard the Užkulisa.’

Jungkook considers this for a while before Jimin tries stepping forward again slowly. They step out carefully before stopping again when Jungkook spots Hoseok.

‘Carry-‘ the Vicitra says quietly. ‘You carried me?’

‘I did,’ Hoseok smiles and it’s more effective than Yoongi’s attempt. ‘I’m sorry I wasn’t able to protect you more from the rain. That must have hurt.’

Jungkook doesn’t reply but his slightly relaxed reaction, though minute, is a good sign.

But the moment he sees Taeh’yung, Jungkook shudders and shuffles backwards, taking Jimin with him. Taeh’yung is, mildly put, distraught.

‘No- oh no- baby it’s okay- I’m sorry I scared you-‘

They back into the Medical Bay again, Jungkook sinking down to crouch again behind Jimin’s legs. Taeh’yung also crouches down, crawling forward, eyes wide with remorse and an eagerness to placate.

‘I’m safe!’ he says gently, ‘Safe- I won’t hurt you, you’re my baby, please?’

‘Taeh’yung safe,’ Jimin tells the crouching Being behind him.

‘I’m sorry baby,’ Taeh’yung croons as he pauses some feet in front of them. ‘I’m sorry I scared you.’

‘Hurt you-‘ Jungkook says from behind Jimin’s leg. ‘Hurt you- p-please don’t hurt me.’

Jungkook curls into himself even more, a hand letting go of Jimin’s trousers to grip at his head where his wound had healed over just some hours ago. His fingers press into the previously shallow open wound and he shudders.

Taeh’yung expression goes blank, eyes widening as though in understanding. And then to everyone’s alarm, he crawls forward even more and hugs Jungkook as he clung to Jimin’s legs.

‘I’m not hurt- I’m all right. Thank you,’ Taeh’yung says gently, patting his head gently with one hand and carefully removing the Vicitra’s hand from his head. He card through the matted strands and shiny new skin and tissue carefully before gently directing the Vicitra to look out of Jimin’s shins. Jimin watches them apprehensively, hands held up as though ready to intervene. Instead Taeh’yung beams a bright grin and cupping Jungkook’s face in his hands says gently, ‘I’m not hurt- you were scared, we are safe, okay baby?’

Namjoon waits with bated breath until Jungkook nods into Taeh’yung’s hands.

‘Good!’ Taeh’yung leans in and places a loud kiss on Jungkook’s nose, causing the latter to flinch again. But when Taeh’yung pulls away to sit comfortably on the ground, Jungkook is watching him wide eyes and Namjoon doesn’t see any fear in them. Just confusion.

Which is probably the most common reaction to Taeh’yung anyways.

Namjoon guesses now was a good time to introduce himself. Making his way over in obvious and open movements, Namjoon edges into Jungkook’s field of sight. Jungkook crouches a bit more but doesn’t take his eyes off of him.

‘Hi Jungkook,’ Namjoon smiles, also crouching down to sit down. Hoseok and Yoongi slowly do the same. With some difficulty, Jimin also crouches down and sits down as well.

‘I’m Namjoon- I’m the Captain of this ship and the Navigator. We’re very happy to have you here.’

Jungkook looks down, head bowed a bit more.

‘Captain?’

‘Hmm,’ Namjoon nods slowly, before saying, ‘It’s just a title- no one listens to what I say.’

Jimin and Taeh’yung chortle at that and Hoseok grins a bit.

‘We’re going to shave off his hair later, wanna watch?’ Sk’jin asks, appearing from the side and sitting down on the floor as well.

Jungkook’s reaction is completely unexpected.

Namjoon would have expected Jungkook to maybe flinch or recoil like he had done so far. But his eyes widen even more, posture opening up and expression that could only be translated into one thing: recognition.

Clearly, Sk’jin is surprised by this too.

‘Hi Jungkook, my name is Sk’jin and-‘

Jungkook pushes himself away from Jimin and half crawls, half scuttles across the floor towards Sk’jin.

‘Oh Spaces-‘ Sk’jin’s eyes widen for a moment as Jungkook pushes into his space and then baffling everyone in the room Jungkook reaches for his temples, dirty trembling hands shaking before he places them on his temples.

‘Missing- why,’ he asks in a whisper.

Sk’jin’s eyes widen even more, glancing over at Namjoon as though demanding to know why he wasn’t doing anything.

‘Same,’ Jungkook says slowly, ‘Same- my mother.’

Sk’jin’s expression turns from shock to confusion and wonder.

‘Mother?’ he repeats, trying to sit up a little from having tried to back away.

‘Mother,’ Jungkook repeats, ‘Same. Same, my mother.’

Sk’jin’s expression changes rapidly, his face almost contorting.
‘Did you have brothers? Sisters?’ Sk’jin asks quietly, raising his hand and with more gentleness than Namjoon thought Sk’jin could ever possess, rubs soothing circles over Jungkook’s cheeks.

‘2 brothers, 3 sisters- big family,’ Jungkook recounts, eyes closing. ‘And mother- two mothers.’

‘What happened to them?’ Sk’jin asks.

‘I don’t know- dead, taken,’ Jungkook answers. ‘Long time.’

‘Did they look like you? Or different?’ Sk’jin asks.

‘Some,’ Jungkook replies, eyes still closed, inhaling slow and deep. ‘Mother look like you.’

Sk’jin looks up at Namjoon at that.

Another Khol’isa? Other species? More Vicitra?

‘What happened to you?’

‘Taken,’ Jungkook replies, ‘Kabans took me. Like animal. Not animal.’

‘No you’re not,’ Sk’jin says gently, his eyes downcast, ‘You were taken from your family, I’m sorry. I’m sorry that happened to you.’

Sk’jin’s apology sounds broken and heavy.

‘Why don’t you have this?’ Jungkook asks again, fingers brushing across his temples.

‘I lost them,’ Sk’jin replies, ‘I lost them when I lost my family.’

‘No family?’ Jungkook asks quietly.

‘Not anymore.’ Sk’jin shakes his head.

‘Who gave you your name?’ Yoongi asks suddenly.

‘Mother,’ Jungkook replies, only flinching slightly. ‘Our mother gave us all names.’

‘Your mother who looks like me, what was her name?’ Sk’jin asks.

‘Darling,’ Jungkook replies earnestly. ‘Her name- Darling.’

‘That’s a beautiful name.’ Sk’jin smiles.

It’s the most genuine and open smile Namjoon has seen from Sk’jin. Not over done, not practiced or constructed.

Jungkook suddenly recoils, arms roping and pressing down on his abdomen. He growls and coughs in obvious pain.

‘He’s in pain- I think he might be hungry,’ Hoseok says as he stands up, ‘I can get him something to eat?’

‘I can go get and get him-‘ Sk’jin begins but Jungkook lurches into the Khol’isa, not allowing him to move away.

‘Maybe we start him off easy- just water?’ Namjoon offers, glancing over at the others. Yoongi is already standing, situated behind Jimin who was still sitting. His expression is melancholic, hands forming tight fists. Taeh'ung is still crying, clearly stopping himself from crawling forward and hugging the young Vicitra.

‘Just water, his system won’t be able to handle solids until he settles with the light stuff first,’ Namjoon tells Hoseok before the latter quickly jogs up the stairs.

‘Hey- drink something okay? Make you feel better,’ Sk’jin tells him, adjusting the Vicitra so that he could sit back against the couch seats.

Jimin and Taeh’ung crawl forward but give him space. Sk’jin sits next to Jungkook, his entire demeanor somehow just indescribably exhausted and sad. If Namjoon could, without upsetting Jungkook, he would have told Sk’jin to remove himself from this situation. But considering how Jungkook seemed to calm down a whole lot with Sk’jin close to him, he doesn’t say anything.

‘Eat something and then-‘ Sk’jin begins.

‘Had to- had to survive. Eat-‘ Jungkook shudders, his body quaking. ‘Couldn’t stop- it hurt-‘

Sk’jin holds him close, regardless of how filthy Jungkook was, and gently rocks him.

‘Not anymore okay? Not anymore- you’ll be fine now- you’ll be fine.’ Sk’jin says in a soothing tone. ‘You’re safe here. Safe, Jungkook is safe, okay?’

Jungkook still shakes, clinging onto Sk’jin’s arm. Hoseok appears from the stairs, holding a small plastic cup in one hand, and a broth Namjoon knows Sk’jin had made a few days ago before any of this had happened. He also has a few bottles under his arm.

‘Hey Jungkookie,’ Hoseok smiles as he approaches the Vicitra, making his approach known. ‘I brought you some water okay? Make you feel better hm?’

Jungkook looks up, eyeing the bottles of water with some nervousness.

Hoseok pours some into small cup and hands it to Jungkook.

Sitting up as straight as he could, Jungkook takes the cup with both of his shaking hands. He drinks messily, the water pouring down his chin and neck, creating streaks across the layered dirt that covered his skin.

It takes a while, but he manages to keep in the water, almost half of the bottle Hoseok had brought, before he moves onto the broth. It was a light and savory broth, and Hoseok had spooned out only the liquid. Jungkook drinks it up hastily, and in his enthusiasm, bites onto the lip of the bowl, leaving clean deep indents from his sharp looking teeth onto the plastic.

He breathes heavily, clutching at his abdomen again. He struggles valiantly and manages to overcome the cramps, clearly refusing to throw up.

‘Does anything hurt?’ Sk’jin asks gently, still not moving away even though Jungkook’s eating session had left him splattered in broth and ionized water.

‘Not a lot,’ Jungkook replies.

He was still not super comfortable, his posture still a little stiff, eyes still darting about, catching every single movement from everyone. He was still jumpy, but Namjoon suspects that might be for a while.
‘Do you want shower?’ Jimin asks, having moved closer to help him eat. ‘Be clean?’

Jungkook hangs his head before saying in a small voice, ‘Yes.’

It was as though they all came to a silent unanimous decision not to question Jungkook just yet. Though Namjoon feels, judging from what he’s heard so far, that Jungkook might not be able to give the answers they exactly want. It was almost as though Jungkook was entirely normal, not born of an egg, not born fully formed without a sentient awareness that Yoongi and the other GI had been born out of.

The Khol’isa he called his mother had been an egg too, there was no doubt about it. Not to mention his sisters and brothers. How many were there? And how many of them were still in Ynqaba, awake and aware? Living lives without knowing their full history? Or perhaps they did know, perhaps Jungkook does know but he doesn’t remember anymore?

Sk’jin and Jimin helps Jungkook stand. Not crouched or hunched over, Jungkook is actually quite tall- almost Hoseok’s height. His limbs are incredibly thin and his skin pulls tightly over his cheekbones and jawline.

Everyone slowly makes their way up and they wait outside while Sk’jin and Jimin guide Jungkook into one of the Cabins to help shower him.

‘He was born Awake,’ Yoongi comments. ‘He was raised.’

‘But he’s the same,’ Taeh’yung adds unexpectedly from the doorway to the Cabin where they hear the gentle sound of water. ‘Same.’

‘Maybe same, but different,’ Yoongi tells him quietly before he backs away into his own Cabin.

‘Jinnie likes him,’ Taeh’yung comments.

And Namjoon wouldn’t put it that way, strictly speaking. But there was something about Jungkook that seemed to effect Sk’jin in a level none of them could understand.

By the time Jimin, Sk’jin, and Jungkook reappear, it’s with the latter all cleaned up, smelling like shampoo and soap. His skin now cleaned, is still an unhealthy tint that now clean shows all of his scars and injuries all too clearly.

His Vicitran features are more apparent now too, with his almost ruddy fingers that are a bit pale at the moment, and reddish skin around his eyes, ears, and back of his neck. His hair is clean but still in need of a good trimming. He’s in clothes that look like Taeh’yung’s that the latter stole from Jimin who had initially borrowed them from Hoseok.

He’s still nervous, holding the back of Sk’jin’s shirt as he follows them out into the much larger Lobby outside of the Cabins. Taeh’yung is quick to grab his attention, talking enthusiastically but not standing too close despite clearly itching too. Jungkook squirms behind Sk’jin who smiles at the Vicitra, pulling him forward gently.

‘Wanna see something cool Kookie?’ Taeh’yung asks, gesturing for him to come sit at the couch with him.

Almost as though asking permission, Jungkook looks at Sk’jin and Jimin. Sk’jin is a little taken aback but he nods. Jimin is quicker to catch on and he nods too before looking around with a small frown.
He waits until Jungkook and Sk’jin make their way to the center of the Lobby with the wide circular table and soft couches before making his way towards Namjoon.

‘Yoongi?’ he asks.

‘In his Cabin,’ Hoseok tells him. ‘Was he all right in the shower?’

‘Happy- he was happy,’ Jimin smiles and it widens more as he adds, ‘He likes Sk’jin.’

They watch Jungkook sort of sink into the couch, eyes widening as though surprised, frozen a bit where he sat. Taeh’yung has made himself smaller than Jungkook and was now pretty much snuggling to his side. Jungkook looks unsure, but with a look at Sk’jin who smiles at him, Jungkook tries a small smile at Taeh’yung.

‘You’re going to love me, I promise,’ Taeh’yung sniffs, eyes watering, alarming Jungkook who inches closer to Sk’jin.

Jimin beams at them before turning to address Namjoon.

‘I accept all wrong- all mistake,’ Jimin tells him earnestly. ‘All problem, that is coming from this situation- because of this situation.’ He corrects himself. ‘My responsibility, I will listen, and acting-act, for best result.’

Namjoon nods, accepting Jimin’s pledge.

‘We will do all we can to take the safest way for Jungkook, for all of us.’ Namjoon replies. ‘We will work together as a team- as a family.’

Jimin smiles even more widely at that, bowing his head in thanks. He walks away, watching the trio at the couch before quietly making his into Yoongi’s Cabin.

There’s a small gasp and Namjoon and Hoseok turn their attention back towards the center of the Lobby.

Jungkook watches, absolutely entranced, as Taeh’yung makes small glowing lights appear, soft green rings and triangles, making it fall about him.

‘I think they’ll be fine,’ Hoseok says in a quiet tone. ‘We should go back and reset our trajectories again.’

Namjoon nods slowly before saying, ‘I think we need to do something.’

‘About what?’ Hoseok asks, looking away from the trio in the Lobby.

‘We need more information- and we know what information we need now,’ Namjoon tells him quietly as they turn to make their way up the stairs. ‘It’ll be risky- but if it works out well, we will probably be able to make sense of what happened in Ynqaba, to Jungkook. And to Sk’jin.’

‘Sk’jin?’ Hoseok repeats quietly as they reach the top of the stairs.

Namjoon nods, ‘Something happened in Ynqaba- I don’t know what, but something happened. In the Bridge, he said ”You should have just stuck to your plan and left me in Ynqaba to just live”- he didn’t say to die, he said to live. Something happened, and it's changed him.’

Hoseok nods to that and says, ‘I noticed yeah.’ before asking, ‘What do you plan on doing.’
They pause by the doorway to the Bridge that lights up at their entry.

‘I’m going to contact an old friend.’

Jimin steps into Yoongi’s Cabin and finds the Human sitting on the edge of his bed, looking up at him as though he’d been expecting him. He’s holding a screen in his hands over his lap. Taking a seat next to Yoongi, Jimin slips a hand around his arm.

‘He was born different,’ Yoongi says. ‘He has memories.’

‘Yes- but he was born same place,’ Jimin tells him.

Yoongi doesn’t say anything, just looks down at the screen. There’s turbulence within Yoongi, one that Jimin doesn’t even need to concentrate to sense. So Jimin starts to hum quietly under his breath, reaching up run his fingers through Yoongi’s hair.

‘That song,’ Yoongi breathes out quietly, eyes closed.

‘Song?’

‘Where is it from?’

‘Memory.’ Jimin replies, ‘I hear it. In Memories.’

‘What do you remember?’ Yoongi asks, leaning into Jimin’s touch.

‘Remember when?’

‘The mountain. When they came.’

A shudder runs down Jimin’s back, pain that lingers just under his skin spreads out, wakening under his veins, flooding his body in memory of how his heart broke that day.

‘Yoongi tried to stop,’ Yoongi tells him quietly. ‘Yoongi didn’t want to go- he didn’t want to leave you. He tried so hard- he was reaching through darkness, through their hands, through music- he heard you singing. He followed until-…until he couldn’t hear it anymore.’
'I’m sorry,’ Jimin is horrified to hear his voice crack into a whisper, throat constricted, tongue heavy. His eyes burn and his vision is blurry. ‘I’m sorry–’

He wraps his arms around Yoongi, holding him tight.

He doesn’t know why he’s apologizing.

Apologizing because Yoongi remembers? Apologizing because he can’t answer Yoongi’s question with absolute confidence about who he is, what he is, and why he was here? Apologizing because he can’t do anything about it? Apologizing because he’s selfish?

Yoongi shifts, hands taking his arms away and tilting his head up.

‘Why are you crying?’ he asks.

‘Because I cannot do anything.’

Yoongi wipes at his face, rather stiffly and with probably a bit too much strength but that was okay, because it makes Jimin laugh a bit.

‘He said he would come back to you,’ Yoongi says quietly. ‘But I don’t know if this is what he meant.’

Yoongi’s memories were tricky. Jimin himself didn’t know what to feel or think of it.

While his heart, his mind, his spirit, and his Soul was different, this Yoongi was in front of him. And something deep in Jimin tells him that the Yoongi he knew, the Yoongi who died in his arms, who kissed his lips and called him sunshine was long gone.

And Jimin doesn’t know, can’t understand how or why, but Yoongi’s eyes remain the same.

Because regardless of the changes in the Human, regardless of everything different- the one thing that curled and drew into Jimin’s very Soul was the way Yoongi looked at him.

‘Have I ever told you the story about the Sun and the Moon?’

He remembers how the Yoongi in the past had an extraordinarily pure soul- not touched or tainted by the death of Megibīya. How no erosion took a hold of him. He was fatigued yes, but the Death that seeped through everything and everyone had no power over the Human.

This Yoongi…

Jimin dabs at his eyes roughly.

This Yoongi was his. Regardless of everything, he had come back to him.

‘He loved you.’ Yoongi tells him suddenly.

Jimin feels an excruciating pain in his chest- but its not of regret or anger or sorrow. It’s strange, the pain, but it’s almost…it’s almost a Yoongi pain.

‘I know- because I feel it.’ Yoongi reaches up to touch his cheek. ‘I feel it- when he looked at you. Sunshine. Sun. My sun, my light.’

Jimin knew- he knew, he saw it, he saw the way Yoongi looked at him, the way he held his hand, the way he lived just to be by his side until he could no longer do it.
‘And you loved him.’ Yoongi adds. ‘I could see it when you looked at him. You were shining.’

‘I did,’ Jimin whispers.

‘I’m sorry,’ Yoongi says rather simply.

Jimin doesn’t know what he’s apologizing for.

‘This is Yoongi,’ Yoongi says quietly as he looks down, tapping once on the screen.

And Jimin understands Yoongi’s meaning.

Yoongi had come to accept that he was different- not just someone who had forgotten his memories, not just someone who had been reborn from the old. He was new, he was alive, and he wanted to live.

But he also accepted his past- understood it, remembered it. And now, because he knew that he was the only one who would be able to give Jimin this small memory. He was going to be able to understand, and maybe, maybe let go.

It was almost as though he felt that Jimin deserved to know more about the Human who within a short period of time, managed to become not only a part of his most cherished memories, but become a part of his very being.

This way, Jimin would be able to keep Yoongi in his heart, his memory alive, pulsing with the music of his Heart.

‘Read with me?’ Jimin asks quietly, ‘Difficult for me.’

Yoongi nods.

The first part of the whole archive is just basic records and logs or academic history, or travel logs, and Immigration passes. It’s when they reach a section titled Interviews that Jimin pauses. There were video logs recorded. With a shaking hand, he taps at the first square.

Yoongi, the Yoongi he first met, appears.

His chest burns.

‘Hi, uh, I’m Min Yoongi. Nice to uh, meet you,’ there’s an almost awkward smile. ‘I am Human, obviously, and yeah, right, I’ll be 76 sols in a few Standard months, but I think I was nearly a hundred last year because of our proximity to this black-hole. Let’s not do that again.’

‘I keep telling you that was a mistake-’

The video feed cuts off to another shot.

‘So uh yeah- uhh what am I supposed to do here again-’

‘Fuck’s sake-’

The video is cut again and another shot comes back, this time with Yoongi sitting facing the camera, clothes a little neater as though attempts were made in trying to look smarter.

‘Yeah, okay, I like watching movies from AE period, I also like sunset walks on the beach, and have a real fondness for poetry meaning I’m deep a-f-’
The camera feed cuts again and Jimin laughs under his breath despite the burn in his chest.

Yoongi appears again, this time gingerly nursing his arm as though he’d been punched there.

‘I am specialist in Development Technology from the-‘ the audio cuts here ‘-GLA. I have been requested and asked to be part of the exploration team specializing in adapting and understanding alien technology for the betterment of the Known Universe.’

‘Are you excited?’

‘This will be my 10th mission, yeah I’m excited,’ Yoongi grins lazily, and a familiar ache echoes inside Jimin.

It’s like watching someone else, Jimin thinks to himself. Watching someone he once knew, someone he once met- someone he loved.

‘You’re smiling.’

‘Because I’m happy.’

They watch more videos, some serious ones that are records of Yoongi’s findings and reports (Jimin saves them to show Namjoon in case he finds something useful and important in these), or Yoongi’s own self-taken videos of strange looking planets, footage of his team members, all the same Beings Jimin met. Amic is shown frequently, tall and gangly, laughing alongside Yoongi as they hiked and climbed about, or sat hunkered down stressed over some strange tech.

There were a few videos of Yoongi much younger, standing next to a young girl that Jimin recognizes at once as Yoongi’s little sister. Her hair is always accessorized.

There are other videos, clearly taken on Earth, of Yoongi when he was much younger. Maybe Jungkook’s age in some of them. They watch all of the videos quietly, and after a while Yoongi takes his hand in his, placing oddly timed kisses over his knuckles and the side of his head.

The videos come to an end, and Jimin feels oddly lighter and at the same time weighted as though drenched in water. There’s more, records, logs, reports, statements. But it’s enough. At least for Jimin. So he puts the screen away over onto the nightstand.

‘I’m sorry,’ Yoongi tells him quietly again. ‘He couldn’t come back.’

‘You’re here,’ Jimin tries to explain. ‘That’s all I want.’

‘Does it hurt?’ Yoongi asks, taking his free hand to place over Jimin’s chest, ‘Because it hurts.’

Jimin takes Yoongi’s hand from his chest, kissing the back of it before placing it over his, feeling for his pulse.

‘Why does it hurt?’ Jimin asks, looking up from their hands to face Yoongi.

‘I don’t know- because I don’t know. I am not Yoongi- but I know how he feels, how he thought- I remember his memories now- but why do I remember them, if I am not Yoongi?’

Jimin doesn’t have the answers for that, can’t possibly explain any of this.

‘What can I do?’ Jimin asks, squeezing their hands. ‘What can I do to help- to not hurt?’

‘Talk more,’ Yoongi tells him rather bluntly and then rather belatedly adds, ‘Please.’
‘What do you want to hear?’ Jimin asks softly as he sits back on the bed and then guides Yoongi to rest his head on his lap.

‘Anything, everything.’ Yoongi replies, eyes closing. ‘Please.’

‘Have I ever told you the story about the Sun and the Moon?’ Jimin asks quietly, brushing through Yoongi’s hair again.

‘No.’

‘The Sun was powerful and beautiful spirit, all grew in light of the Sun- all life thrived and rejoiced in the Sun,’ Jimin tells him quietly, choosing his words carefully. ‘The Sun was powerful and strong, but the spirit was another part of the balance- where there is life, there is death, where there is light, there is darkness. There is a balance. And to balance the beauty and life of the Sun, there existed the Moon. A cold and white light, and all life hid, for this spirit was a hunter.’

Yoongi turns onto his back to face him, watching him carefully. Unable to look away Jimin continues.

‘The Sun and the Moon never saw each other, only hear whispers and quiet talk. The Sun was afraid, the Moon was more afraid. But one day- one day they met. They met high above- light and dark, life and death- it was short, it was too fast, too…too less time.’ Jimin finds himself whispering. ‘But that time was enough- because the Sun was not afraid, and the Moon was not afraid- fear became love.’

Yoongi doesn’t even blink.

‘And they could no longer stay. They could not dance. They had to balance.’ Jimin says quietly. ‘The Sun had to go, the Moon tried to follow- but there was no way- their paths changed. And it changed again and again and again- but their love remained- longing and seeking- circles and circles. The Sun remained the same- life and light. But the Moon changed, sometimes shrinking, sometimes growing, but it was always the Moon. And when the time was right, when they were aligned again, careful and slowly, but less time, they would dance again, and go again.’

Yoongi reaches up to gently thumb under Jimin’s eye, dragging slowly at the soft skin there. Then slowly he sits up, facing him and settling close. Yoongi continues to gently touch him, fingers caressing his face, down to his throat, his neck, just shy past the collar of his shirt.

‘Why couldn’t the Sun and Moon stay?’

‘Because there is balance,’ Jimin can barely hear himself, caught up, unable to look away.

‘But will you stay?’ Yoongi asks, leaning in until their foreheads touch.

‘Yes. Will you stay?’ Jimin asks, lips brushing against Yoongi’s.

Yoongi stills for a moment, dark eyes searching his, a turmoil of light and dark, emotions, and thought.

‘I will always come back to you.’ Yoongi finally says, kissing his words against Jimin’s lips.

Jimin’s breath hitches in his throat- the kisses Yoongi has given him before, were almost child-like. Innocent presses of lips against skin, kisses of reassurance, kisses of comfort. This feels different.
Desperation.

Bliss.

Sorrow.

Ecstasy.

Their paths had aligned, their meeting not destined by fate, but written and narrated by serendipity. But just like the Sun and the Moon, they could not remain. They could not remain, they could not stay.

And again, just like the Sun and the Moon, they found each other again.

‘Am I yours?’ Yoongi asks, eyes closed shut, forehead leaning down against his shoulder, shivering a little as he holds Jimin like he never wants to let go.

But this time.

_This time._

He would stay.

‘Mine, as I am yours.’

*
Chapter End Notes

(Author’s Note)

Ah- my internship ended but wow, I can safely say that I love my supervisor to death

Not only is he an intellectual whose bias is Namjoon, his favorite song is Run, favorite album is Dark and Wild, and loves Jungkook’s falseto

Not just that

He loves Taeyang and didn’t know if he was jealous of his wife or jealous of Taeyang because he couldn’t handle how perfect they are for each other

He is also a massive Sistar fan and worships Hyolyn like the queen she is

We spend days listening to everything from bts to twice to taeyeon to sunmi to big bang

He nearly cried when i told him about my experience at Wings when the tour came here to bkk as a goodbye present you know what he got me?? So he loves got7 and when he found out that I did too and that we both are in love with the perfection that is Park Jinyoung, he gave me his Jinyoung poster from the Eyes On You album and I think I cried on my way home. Okay I didn’t but I was close.

They were so sweet! I had a lot of fun there and it was surprisingly greatly educational and actually felt like I was doing constructive work. Mainly because I was actually doing constructive work and participated in a lot of major projects. It was great!

But ah, here we are, somewhat a bit more free with time. The next update with be on time, please look forward to that.

I will also be updating that NamJin one-shot this upcoming week so please look forward to that for some nice fluffy awkward pure softness and nerdiness.
Honestly, Sk’jin is too old for this.

He was not made to dangle off of the ledge of a sewage system, with a massive network of pipes, wires, and cables running all around them, sparkling with electricity inside this dark pit inside a gigantic mining-asteroid, but here he was.

‘Is this divine punishment because I took your lip-virginity away-‘

‘This is not helping!’ Namjoon retorts angrily, dangling next to him with one good arm.

It’s odd seeing his other arm shredded apart. It makes that same guilt Sk’jin has been trying to ignore for the past hour threaten to spew out of his stomach.

‘I’m sorry.’

‘For fuck’s sake Sk’jin that wasn’t my first kiss-‘

‘Not that,’ Sk’jin sighs, looking about as though they weren’t clinging on to their lives over what Sk’jin suspects is a vast vat of sewage far below them. At least he couldn’t smell it. ‘Well that too- but my point being-‘

‘No- don’t apologize,’ Namjoon sighs out, mangled hand twitching, slowing dripping some sort of bionic fluid Sk’jin is pretty sure shouldn’t be leaking out. ‘I know we’ve had talks before and I know we all keep our own secrets- but right now I just- I just want us to get back.’

‘We could be identified at any point now with the local security after us- Hoseok and Taeh’yung are too far away; and Jungkook, Yoongi, and Jimin are just-…ugh, they’ll be fine waiting for us, sickeningly gross couple, fuck, I did not sign up to witness that.’

‘Oh- you noticed?’

‘What’s not to notice?!’ Sk’jin spits out, adjusting his feet on the small ledge along the all too smooth glassy walls. ‘Makes me want to throw-up.’
Namjoon unexpectedly laughs, his head turned away. Sk’jin wonders if all that chlorine was getting to the Kutsoglerin’s head.

‘Is it really the time to laugh?’ Sk’jin huffs out. ‘You should use that brain of yours and think of a way to get us out.’

Namjoon wheezes again before he shortles, ‘Out of all the things you choose to complain about now it’s about the nature of Yoongi’s and Jimin’s relationship?’

Namjoon’s entire form is shaking, quivering as he laughs into his the side of his arm.

‘I’m disguising my worry over the effect of such a relationship with contemptuous disdain, keep up Namjoon,’ Sk’jin huffs out, arms strained and thighs burning. ‘You think they’ll want that glass dildo?’

‘WHY DO YOU STILL HAVE THAT WITH YOU?!’

‘I COULDN’T GET RID OF IT- IT FIT REALLY WELL IN MY HANDS YOU KNOW?’

‘FOR FUCK’S SAKE-’

It’s hardly the time to be screaming considering their precarious location. Sk’jin spies the lifts dropping over to the other side of the cavern, the huge pipes around them trembling with the force of their contents. Sk’jin doesn’t want to think about it.

‘You’re worried that it might influence their decisions?’ Namjoon asks after a while, having calmed down a little.

‘You’re talking as though Yoongi was never influenced by Jimin from the moment we opened that fucking OrTank- everything he does is for Jimin, centers around Jimin.’ Sk’jin snorts.

Namjoon sighs quietly at that, as though resigned to the truth of it.

‘What do you make of it?’ Namjoon asks.’

‘Uh- Yoongi is disgustingly in love? I don’t know? I have no expertise over this matter,’ Sk’jin sniffs in disdain.

‘No I mean- based on what Jimin told us, and then on what Yoongi had to say- and what we can add together…is this Yoongi, our Yoongi, anything like the “original” Yoongi?’ Namjoon asks slowly. ‘And how much of the “original” Yoongi still remains in our Yoongi?’

‘To be honest I don’t know,’ Sk’jin sighs, ‘But what I do know is that this is not the time or place to discuss this, despite the fact that I love an oral exchange with you Namjoon.’

‘You have to make everything weird,’ Namjoon grumbles.

‘It’s my specialty.’ Sk’jin grins before adding, ‘So? What do we do? Hanging here forever is something I’d like to avoid so come on, tell me how we’re getting the fuck out of here because I highly doubt anyone comes down this far to check on stragglers and potential wanted-Beings.’

Sk’jin can’t really see all of Namjoon’s face but he’s sure the Kutsoglerin is rolling his eyes.

‘See that chipped panel up there? I’m 90% sure the rings we’ve seen around here are the maintenance lift-rungs. If we can access its wiring we can get it to come here- as both your arms are working- could you reach around me and access it? I’ll guide you through the process.’
Namjoon nods at the flat but large open panel with a multitude of switches on it. They’re lucky they both had no issue seeing in dim lighting.

‘I’ll need to climb around you- you sure?’ Sk’jin asks, eyeing their very precarious location with doubt. ‘I’m not very light.’

‘Well, neither am I,’ Namjoon huffs out, ‘Just hurry- let’s do this fast-’

‘-kinky okay-‘

‘-Sk’jin please,’ Namjoon groans.

‘Hey you were ready to speak in length about Yoongi and Jimin’s vague-ass relationship in context to Yoongi’s identity and what that could mean for our mission- let me have this,’ Sk’jin grits out as he slowly edges closer.

‘Fair point,’ Namjoon grumbles.

‘So- are you stable in that position or would you rather be on top?’

‘Why does that sound suggestive,’ Namjoon deadpans, unimpressed.

‘And you say I make everything sound weird,’ Sk’jin huffs, now just a foot away from the Kutsoglerin.

Namjoon sighs before saying, ‘Go from the back-‘

‘Wow- I never pegged you to-‘

‘Sk’jin!’

Snorting, Sk’jin makes sure to balance himself properly before he reaches over and around Namjoon, who has pushed himself flat against the glossy walls to give Sk’jin space. Unable to help himself Sk’jin kisses Namjoon’s left ear with a loud mwah! sound while Namjoon sighs heavily again.

‘Don’t worry Namjoonie- you’ll find someone who will want to kiss you for no reason,’ Sk’jin pats him as he fully makes his way to the side.

‘Yeah yeah,’ Namjoon grimaces before adding, ‘You think it’s like that with Yoongi and Jimin?’

‘What’s with the obsession with Yoongi and Jimin?’ Sk’jin grunts out, reaching a tricky part of the cliff-face. ‘Living vicariously off of them?’

‘Spaces, Sk’jin-‘

Chuckling Sk’jin looks over his shoulder but is surprised to find Namjoon looking genuinely worried.

‘You’re worried.’

‘I am,’ Namjoon admits. ‘Considering how things are going- and how we cannot predict anything, cannot see the reasoning behind any of this-‘

‘No- you’re worried about them- genuinely, about them as individuals.’
Namjoon looks stricken, as though he hadn’t just realized it.

‘I guess yeah,’ Namjoon sighs. ‘Especially Yoongi because of how-’

The entire cavern suddenly howls.

And it sounds too familiar-

‘Uh-‘

‘Sk’jin hurry now-!’

18 hours ago

This will hurt

It’s all right- pain isn’t unknown to me

I didn’t mean physical pain

I know what you meant

Unsurprisingly, Sk’jin has nightmares.

Not the type you see when you sleep, because sleep is quite literally a dream for the Khol’isa.

But nightmares, the type you see with your waking eyes- or maybe a bit like how most normal Beings would daydream.

It’s unsurprising but still annoying. Just because you weren’t surprised by a nightmare doesn’t mean it still doesn’t completely dislodge and unhinge you.

Blinking hard to get rid of the reddish hue overtaking his vision, Sk’jin looks down, where Jungkook’s head was pillowing his lap as he slept.

Being clean on a regular basis and being medically treated for a week really effected the young Vicitra. His skin looked less grey, the natural reddish tint of his skin no longer appeared like bruises but appeared deeper and richer in colour. His hair, which Sk’jin and Jimin trimmed and thoroughly cleaned was bouncy and shiny.

Jungkook had obviously been taken care of. He had been raised, and he had been taught.

He could read some Standard, he had table-manners (though slightly messy and very very defensive), really loved showers, and had nearly perfect speech. He was also intelligent, and a lot more perceptive than anyone would have guessed.

His behavior towards the Beings on board clearly showed this.

With Namjoon, Jungkook was respectful, watching with wide eyes, listening with care, and always somehow more alert in the presence of the Kutsoglerin.

With Hoseok, Jungkook was much more comfortable, and liked to sit next to him as Hoseok explained impossibly difficult tactics and instructions on piloting, nodding as though he understood. When Jungkook had an issue with the Comm-Device, he went straight to Hoseok, fidgeting a little as he asked the Ngfy’widan to help him.

With Taeh’yung Jungkook was wary but he made no move to defend himself or react back to the Zhak’gri. He was, bluntly put, afraid yes, but there was an undoubted awe with the way he looked at him.

With Jimin he was protective, moving to shadow his movements and placing himself in a way where he could bodily protect the shorter Being. Which was pointless considering how Jimin was perfectly safe inside the ship. But hilarious because Jungkook did this every time Yoongi was in the vicinity.

It was almost as though Jungkook just knew without being told, that Jimin was Yoongi’s highest priority, and Yoongi was Jimin’s highest priority.

Clearly Jungkook had developed a sort of attachment to Jimin- the latter had not only treated him with kindness inside that cell, but had also set him free from the cruel bondage he had found himself in. As a result, Jungkook seems to have taken it upon himself to protect Jimin- and to also be somehow incredibly jealous if he wasn’t the subject of Jimin’s attention.

Just the other day Jungkook had come across Jimin and Yoongi in the Hangar Bay, where the Human had been readjusting their arsenal, and Jimin had been assisting, keeping record. It was a fairly boring but time-consuming task, but the two had been peacefully enjoying that time together, with Jimin humming under his breath. Yoongi must have told him something funny (an idea that is funny in itself), because Jimin had laughed so hard he fell off the bench he had been sitting on.

Jungkook had more or less leapt the distance of the Hangar Bay and crouched over Jimin, snarling at Yoongi.

Yoongi hadn’t moved to defend himself or even attack- he just stared at Jungkook for a while before saying, ‘If you want to defend someone, your priority should be their escape as you distract.’

Then he proceeds to explain to Jungkook the best way to defend and protect someone, pulling up instruction manuals and video examples from a screen. Jungkook looked so lost as Yoongi explained and demonstrated the correct way of executing a defensive stance, he kept looking up at Sk’jin as though for help.

It was also clear from that moment that Jungkook was an incredibly fast learner; he picked up on everything Yoongi was demonstrating to him, his stance already improving. Hoseok even joined in after clearing a space in the Bay to demonstrate offensive stances and how to switch between them. Hoseok explains the importance of core strength, and how to maintain balance. Taeh’yung joins them too, trying to follow the instructions. Somehow Hoseok finds himself training Jungkook, Taeh’yung, and Jimin (though the latter seemed very well trained, and was just indulging the other two) in hand-to-hand combat.

Jungkook, now gaining strength, and realizing that he was indeed safe, was slowly shedding inhibitions as well. He smiled back now, albeit a bit slowly, and ducked his head in embarrassment rather than in fear, when spoken to kindly.

But out of all of this, what disturbed and strangely hurt Sk’jin the most was how Jungkook was around him.

You’ll have to be careful

I will

This is the only chance you’ll have unless you’re very lucky

Trust me, I’m anything but. I’ll be careful

Jungkook just followed Sk’jin everywhere he went. And without question, or permission, decided to take residence in Sk’jin’s room.

It happened from the very first night out of the Medical Bay. Jungkook had dozed off on the couch, and Sk’jin was wondering if Cabin 07 would be a good place to situate the young Vicitra when he woke up in a shocked daze, nearly hyperventilating before catching sight of Sk’jin and curling up around him. Then he fell back asleep.

‘Jungkook,’ Sk’jin had called gently. ‘Let’s get you into a bed okay?’

He managed to get the Vicitra to the Cabin.

It was like putting Ilya to sleep and Sk’jin tries not to think about it.

It wasn’t even an hour later when Jungkook burst out of his Cabin, clearly semi-awake and moving only on instinct. Hoseok had been there, warily watching his movement. But Jungkook seemed to be following something- he seemed to be sniffing and then as though he knew exactly where he was headed, went straight into his Cabin, and crept inside.

Hoseok had given him a wide-eyed look from the Kitchen.

Then they both quietly walked up to the door, looking into Sk’jin’s room.

Jungkook was curled up on Sk’jin’s bed, head on Sk’jin’s piled up blankets. And ever since then, he refused to sleep elsewhere.

And just like Sk’jin- Jungkook is plagued with nightmares when he sleeps. So more often than not in the past few days, Sk’jin finds himself where he is now, with Jungkook’s head on his lap, waking him and gently brushing through his hair every time he woke frightened from his nightmares.

At least his bed was being put to use. Sk’jin rarely spent time on his bed save to sit and peruse his screen. He normally preferred sitting at the desk near the window, or just sitting out at the Kitchen area.

Jungkook also liked to receive permission from Sk’jin.

Whatever childhood he had, and if his mother had truly been a Khol’isa, then Jungkook seemed to naturally assign that role or guardianship over to Sk’jin just by face-value.

All Khol’isa were very distinctly similar- the same elegant features, the same sharp but large eyes, the same pale rosy skin, the same horns; and even though Sk’jin had lost his, Jungkook knew instantly and knew that something was wrong. It raises so many questions in Sk’jin’s mind. He guesses he understands how Namjoon must have felt, upon realizing that there were eggs out there, carrying the Kutsoglerin species in them, growing and birthing them. They were perfected, idealized, and grown to be perfect representation and replacements for those that already existed.

And Sk’jin hates him own species- hates them with every fiber of his being but the idea of an pure Khol’isa, of a Khol’isa untinted by the Bloodmoon, the idea of a Khol’isa whose very breath was not a continuous curse at their existence; it scared him.

It’s been nearly 7 hours now that Jungkook fell asleep, but Sk’jin hasn’t moved an inch, just staring out of the window at the never-ending, unchanging white expanse of warp-space. Jungkook didn’t move much in his sleep, just remaining curled up, occasionally twitching, and when he saw nightmares, tensing up almost painfully. But for the first time in the past near week, Jungkook is sleeping without any nightmares. Sk’jin wonders if it had anything to do with the light kiss Jimin had placed on the sleepy Vicitra’s forehead. If Jimin was able to make Beings speak only the truth, and Spaces knew what else, then making nightmares go away shouldn’t be too difficult, Sk’jin guesses.

‘Jinnie, is Kookie awake?’ Taeh’yung’s voice asks quietly at his ear.

‘Not yet- I’m going to wake him now.’

‘Can I come?’

‘Yeah sure-‘

Taeh’yung appears from the wall in a bright display of green that vanishes just as quickly as it appeared.

‘Tae, please- we talked about this,’ Sk’jin whispers at the Zhak’gri who coos quietly at the sight of Jungkook asleep, as if he hadn’t spent hours just staring at his sleeping form until Namjoon told him to stop because it was freaking the Kutsoglerin out.

Taeh’yung kneels by the bed, reaching out to gently stroke Jungkook’s hair.

‘There was another, wasn’t there?’ Taeh’yung asks suddenly.

‘-what?’

‘Like Kookie- another egg-hatched. They were there with you,’ Taeh’yung says quietly, looking up at Sk’jin.
The air slowly dims, reddening under the Bloodmoon that threatens to break horizon.

‘How do you know this?’

‘I sensed them- just one right? It was faint, and all over, mixed with the rain.’

Sk’jin feels nauseous.

‘They did something to that planet,’ Taeh’yung says quietly, giving Sk’jin an understanding look. It’s odd- but Sk’jin feels as though Taeh’yung knew exactly what happened in Ynqaba.

‘Do- could you feel it?’

Taeh’yung nods.

‘It wasn’t them- if it was, Ynqaba wouldn’t exist,’ Taeh’yung says quietly, brushing through Jungkook’s hair.

‘It was the Yishengs,’ Sk’jin nods.

Taeh’yung hums as though he’s not surprised, just disappointed.

‘They did things they weren’t supposed to,’ Taeh’yung says, sounding unlike himself. When he looks up at Sk’jin, he suddenly looks different. ‘They were made to guide, but now all they do is destroy.’

Taeh’yung looks away, looking like himself.

It unsettles Sk’jin.

Ever since he met the Zhak’gri- ever since their eyes met, Sk’jin cannot shake the unsettling feeling the Zhak’gri gave him.

Sk’jin wasn’t afraid of things or Beings- he was rarely scared.

But Taeh’yung sometimes terrified him.

‘Why didn’t you tell Namjoon?’ Sk’jin asks carefully.

‘Why haven’t you?’ Taeh’yung asks back.

‘Because…’ Sk’jin breathes out slowly, feeling at his temples where pressure was building. ‘Because if I did Namjoon and Hoseok, and then Yoongi and Jimin, would feel responsible.’

‘It was not their design.’

‘No, but their actions, our actions, my actions, made the design possible.’ Sk’jin sighs out quietly. ‘They already have their demons, their nightmares. They carry enough of the dead with them, they don’t need more. They’re young, unlike us.’

‘Life is continuum.’ Taeh’yung says, looking down.

Sk’jin doesn’t comment.

‘Do you see your nightmares again?’ Taeh’yung asks.

Sk’jin nods mutely.
‘Should I remove them?’

‘No–’ Sk’jin replies quickly. ‘No- it’s…it’s all I have.’

Taeh’yung looks up at him again, eyes wide and filled with sorrow and pain.

‘I didn’t want to scare you,’ Taeh’yung whispers, eyes glistening a little. ‘But I meant it. You can’t do that again. I can’t help you anymore.’

_You won’t be complete, you know that right? Is that still okay?_

Sk’jin nods, ignoring the way the Bloodmoon edges into his sight above his direct line of sight.

‘I know.’

_It’s okay- it’s not like I was ever complete to start off with._

* *

Sk’jin climbs up the last step and enters the Bridge quietly. He knows Namjoon is supposed to be in here, which is why he’s surprised to find Yoongi in there as well. And that too clearly in some form of discussion with the Kutsoglerin. At his approach, Yoongi steps away from the Table, away from a stunned looking Namjoon who is holding a small screen in his hands.

‘You’re sure?’ the Kutsoglerin asks in a rather surprisingly gentle tone.

The Human nods in reply.

‘There isn’t a lot I remember- most of what I do, is related to Jimin; but without a doubt, Yoongi was involved in something deeper in Megibiya,’ Yoongi says to the Kutsoglerin. ‘I would like for all of us to investigate, so that we may better understand what happened there.’

‘Thank you,’ Namjoon smiles, ‘I’ll call everyone up now.’

‘Jimin is still sleeping,’ Yoongi states.

‘I guess…wake him up?’ Namjoon replies slowly.

‘I think he’s caught up in his sleep cycle so he should be fine,’ Sk’jin says, carefully patting the Human on the shoulder. He’s still a little on edge with Yoongi, considering the fact that Sk’jin is 98% sure Yoongi will punch him given the chance.

‘I was with him. He was tired, and we slept together,’ Yoongi states bluntly. ‘We’ve been sleeping together in the same Cabin.’

Namjoon’s mouth involuntarily hangs open for a second before he closes his mouth shut with a click. Sk’jin on the other hand wants to cackle- at both Yoongi’s bluntness and Namjoon’s inability to handle this information.
‘Uh-‘

‘Did you take care of Jimin?’ Sk’jin asks, ignoring the way Namjoon’s head snaps towards him, expression horrified.

Yoongi blinks at him for a moment before saying, ‘We tend to each other when needed, yes.’

‘Okay there’s no need for-‘

‘That’s good! You should always keep a healthy balance and dynamics in this!’ Sk’jin nods, ‘Did you have all the supplies you needed?’

‘The care-packages are well stocked.’

‘That they are!’ Sk’jin nods in agreement. ‘Were they to your liking?’

‘They performed their function,’ Yoongi replies. ‘I saw nothing lacking.’

‘And were you both satisfied?’

‘Yes.’

‘Great!’

Namjoon has his face in his hands, almost pained by this conversation. Sk’jin can’t help the smile on his face, his cheeks are actually hurting from all of this.

‘Is there something wrong,’ Yoongi asks, clearly picking up on the strange reactions around him.

‘Not at all! We’re just very happy that you’re happy.’

Yoongi stares at them for a long while, clearly something very complex going through his mind.

‘Are you talking about sexual intercourse.’

‘Oh Spaces-‘

‘Yes Yoongi- I hope you’re both being safe,’ Sk’jin smiles, ‘If you need any advice I’m sure-‘

‘-sure we don’t need to know and Yoongi can find all the information he needs through database,’ Namjoon hurriedly cuts across, ‘It’s none of our business what they do- what anyone does in their free-time, with each other.’

Yoongi stares at them again before saying, ‘I am aware of what it is. I have memories of it.’

‘Oh Spaces-‘

‘Good! So you’re not utterly clueless!’ Sk’jin knows he shouldn’t be so invasive but Namjoon’s reactions are giving him life.

‘We did not engage in sexual intercourse.’ Yoongi states bluntly. ‘Neither of us can reproduce, it seems pointless.’

‘Well there is a lot of pointing of sorts-‘

‘Sk’jin! Please call the others for a meeting in 15 minutes!’ Namjoon orders tersely. ‘Yoongi, I would like you to tell the others what you told me- about Human Yoongi and his memories,’ Namjoon clarifies. ‘I have something important I want to discuss as well- and Hoseok is going to tell us about our trajectory in detail. So if both of you could prepare-‘

‘That’s something you also need to do before sex Yoongi-‘

‘Sk’jin!’ Namjoon wheezes out. If he could lose all colour from his face, he would have.

‘I will present the history of my memories as you wish,’ Yoongi states, stepping away towards his station.

Namjoon is quick to glare at Sk’jin.

‘We’re trying to maintain a professional setting here-‘

‘Namjoon sweetie, the moment we all left Tayi, the whole aspect of professionalism went out of the metaphoric window and was sucked into a black-hole,’ Sk’jin snorts but relents because Namjoon really looks like he’s going to suffer some bionic-stroke. ‘But I am curious to know and I am not being condescending or whatever but considering your body was reconstructed and built do you have like a metallic dic-‘

‘Lisai please call everyone up to the Bridge now!’

Hoseok gives him curious looks, clearly wondering why Sk’jin was still chuckling under his breath. But Namjoon’s facial expression is bright in his memory and it’s hilarious. Recently things have had little reason to be hilarious, so Sk’jin cherishes other Being’s moments of absolute discomfort for his own benefit.

Jungkook is also wondering why he’s grinning, but he’s smiling too, as though it gave him reason to smile. As a result, Taeh’yung ruffles his hair and squishes his cheeks, causing the Vicitra to lean all the way back in his seat, away from grabby hands. Jimin is watching them, hands twitching as though trying to intervene. Yoongi has made his way towards the center and now stands behind Jimin, expression blank as he watches Taeh’yung now try to kiss Jungkook.

‘Okay- so now that we’re all here,’ Namjoon calls them all to attention, blue light from the Navigation Table lighting his face up in a rather unflattering way, pronouncing the missing bionic flesh around his jaw and back of his head. ‘We have a few important things we need to discuss, but we’ll start first with Yoongi. As requested, I was able to find records of Yoongi when he was…- well, when he was wholly Human I guess. It was difficult, because as I suspected the moment we found Yoongi wasn’t a random genetic code hatched and grown, but based off of an actual living Being from the past, his records would have been erased. What I was able to find was vague and didn’t offer much information in regards to what he did, who he worked for, or where he was travelling to.’

‘But I remember things,’ Yoongi speaks up. ‘And based on what I read, saw, and heard from these records, I have been able to piece together information that in itself may not seem important, but considering what we are doing, what we know from Jimin, may help us understand more.’

Everyone leans in closer, Jungkook included, now no longer fighting Taeh’yung’s hold.
According to what Jimin and I discussed, by combining our memories, facts, and information, we have come to conclude that Yoongi, and the team he was with, were under the orders and guidance of now no longer existing branch of the GLA that concentrated on experimental technology and development. Yoongi stated that he was a specialist in development technology.’ Yoongi reels off as though he’s reading a statement. ‘Based on these memories, I have also understood that Yoongi and his team were sent to Bhumi to investigate, under guise of being part of the Raksane Tayi Scientific Panel. It was the lie Yoongi told his mother and sister. His friend, Amic, mentioned “corps”- and how they were part of it. I did research, but was unable to find any form of organization or GLA branch with “corps” in it. Yoongi and his team were also sent their with permission- they were sent there for a reason, which they were late to realize was a lie. His team captain seemed to understand the situation better, and she and Yoongi discussed it as well. She told him that this wasn’t the first time the GLA had been there. That attempts at negotiations were being made, and that it was being concluded.’

Yoongi taps at the Table, and a picture of himself appears, with information on the side about his past Human self. Original self? Past self?

He looks younger in the holographic projection, his hair lighter, his eyes a lighter shade. Their expressions are the same though- still stoic, with the somewhat involuntary unimpressed expression in the way their mouths were set.

‘From what I remember, and from what Jimin has told me about what he saw, Yoongi and his team lost control of their ship and crashed into Bhumi- or Megibīya. They were attempting to find a tower, set in a location around the habitable ring, high up a mountain. It was through this tower that they hoped to transmit a signal to send for help. I believe there might have been another ship that was waiting for Yoongi and his team outside of Megibīya,’ Yoongi explains. ‘However, Yoongi seems to realize that this was not going to help.’

‘The tower wasn’t there?’

‘It was.’ Yoongi replies, and Sk’jin notices how Jimin seems to tense, his eyes unblinking. ‘It was there, but it was long abandoned. No sign of existing technology, no indication of it having ever been occupied.’

‘False information? What happened after that?’ Hoseok asks.

‘False, or old, I don’t know,’ Yoongi replies. ‘Yoongi died there. Taken by the Akramanese, or as Jimin calls them, the Red Evil.’

Jimin’s eyes are shining with unshed tears, clearly reliving the memory.

‘It does sound vague, but I think that’s a good lead,’ Namjoon says as soon as he realizes that Yoongi is done. ‘Yoongi was involved in this much more than we initially thought- and if we are able to find out more information regarding this, then we will be able to understand what happened in Jimin’s System, what to expect from there, and why the Special Jury really want us there.’

Namjoon pauses a moment before he says, ‘I know we all agreed, for our safety and secrecy, to keep everything contained within our resources and within the ship- but in this occasion, I wish to propose an idea.’

Hoseok leans in a little, his expression serious.

‘We’re going to need information- not the type I can access through a Hub by diving deep into the GLA database. We’re going to need information by directly accessing the physical mainframe, do a deep-dive into the core which I won’t be able to access even if I were to access a GLA drive through a Dock,’ Namjoon states.

‘How do you propose we do this then?’ Hoseok asks warily.

‘I call in a favour,’ Namjoon replies simply. ‘She’s an Information Analyst that works directly for the Venture Unit. She’s from Klia’ban.’

Hoseok’s expression changes from wary to impressed.

‘What’s in Klia’ban?’ Sk’jin asks, unsure of this location.

‘It’s a planet not far from Tayi- the Beings there were born as a result of an illegal genetic experiment gone wrong,’ Namjoon explains. ‘They tried to remove a genome from their DNA that weakened their natural exoskeleton, killing them as a result- instead they ended up entirely losing their shells, and became a rather…soft but healthy version of their species. The original Klia’ban refused to keep the mutations in their planet. So the GLA took in all 500 of the failed experiments, finding them to be incredibly intelligent and systematic in their thought process and trained them to be Information Analysts for the Venture Unit.’

‘How did you even gain access to the Klia’ban? They’re elite,’ Hoseok looks impressed, ‘That too, she owes you a favour?’

Namjoon huffs out as though offended, ‘She’s actually the reason why I got into the Gaia Case- I don’t think she wanted to be indicted, so she sent along some things she knew I would look into.’

‘…so it’s her fault you’re in this?’ Hoseok grins, amused. ‘She tricked you.’

‘Anyways- I can call in a favour from her- regarding this issue, as well as the one in Ynqaba.’

‘What do you mean?’ Sk’jin demands, his shoulders tensing and his hands suddenly shaking. He quickly lowers his hands to his sides.

‘The Yisheng ship there, the obvious presence of eggs there- it’s not just Ynqaba- it’s the entire System, we need to find out more information,’ Namjoon explains, eyeing him carefully. Sk’jin curses inwardly, the pressure around his temples building.

‘I see- that’s good,’ he manages to get out, fighting the urge to touch him temples.

‘I also want her to see what she can find out about the Omhlophe,’ Namjoon adds after looking away from Sk’jin slowly, as though debating Sk’jin’s reaction.

‘That’s a lot to ask,’ Hoseok observes.

‘Is she safe?’ Jimin asks quietly.

‘I don’t know,’ Namjoon replies. ‘But that’s where I want to bring in all of you.’

Jimin leans in closer as well.

‘I just want everyone to know about this so that we can all collectively decide on what to do. And we only go forward with this, if everyone agrees- not a majority, but everyone,’ Namjoon states clearly. ‘This is a risk- but if it pays off, we could gain a lot of useful information. And I won’t go ahead unless every single one of you gives their approval.’

‘We’ll need to think about it,’ Sk’jin says, proud that he sounded normal. ‘When do you plan to contact her?’

‘To answer that question, Hoseok and I created a trajectory through Grisial’s mining space,’ Namjoon explains. ‘As I mentioned before, Grisial is a mining zone, with Pits located everywhere. My plan is to make contact when we’re in Pit 3.’

Namjoon pulls up a new projection, with Grisial in the center.

Even the holographic projection is beautiful.

Grisial was a massive inhabitable planet rich in expensive minerals, metals, and resources unique to the planet. But Grisial was most famed for her crystals - smooth but multi-faceted inside, light reflecting and refracting in mesmerizing ways. Many considered it holy, and were celebrated jewels of great value because it was difficult to mine.

The whole area around the planet is surrounded by a thick asteroid belt, and each asteroid was a mining haven. Sk’jin had owned jewelry made of Grisial crystals that he had stored safely. They had been a bribe, he remembers with a sour smile.

Jungkook makes a loud sound of awe and amazement at the display, reaching forward to touch but stopping midway as though electrocuted. Sk’jin ruffles his hair to placate the young Vicitra.

‘-we collect our items we need in Pit 3, and then travel at a “slow” speed all the way to the edge to Pit 18, giving us time to receive any call or message or information. Being close to Grisial puts us at an advantage because of the planet’s natural resonance that can further protect us from manual or close-hand attempts of infiltration. It also puts us at a Navigational advantage because from this point, depending on any form of potential risk we may have of being spotted or followed, we can lose them through the heavy trade traffic routes and access another route midway. Our chances of escape are calculated at a good percentage, especially considering how we cannot be tracked.’

It’s a sound plan.

It’s sound reasoning.

And really, there isn’t much Sk’jin can say against it.

It’s vital they receive all the information they can possibly get their hands on.

His screen hums, vibrating against the side of his chest, indicating a call. Sk’jin ignores it, tapping at the side of his Comm-Device to cancel the incoming call. He crosses his arms over his chest, subtly pushing away the screen deeper into his pocket and to the side. He catches Hoseok glancing at him, having clearly heard him.

The Bloodmoon edges in, just over the windows above, the holographic map slowly turning purple as red light seeps in from the warp above. It presses around his head.

‘What do you say?’ Namjoon asks, looking up at all of them.

‘It’s okay with me!’ Taeh’yung holds up his hands in thumb’s up.

‘Good with me too,’ Hoseok nods.

‘Good,’ Jimin adds while Yoongi echoes the same.

Everyone looks at him, expressions ranging from curious to hopeful.
‘Yeah, let’s do that,’ Sk’jin nods, trying not to think too much about the stuffy feeling in his lungs. ‘Even if your contact outs us, we can still escape. How do you plan on sending her the address for information?’

‘I don’t- I’m giving her a deadline with the information, and I’ll contact her again,’ Namjoon explains. ‘It’s not unusual between Analysts.’

Sk’jin nods to that.

‘So, everyone’s good with this?’ Namjoon asks, looking around the Table.

‘Kookie hasn’t said anything,’ Taeh’yung announces.

Jungkook’s eyes widen, shrinking in on himself, mouth opening and closing.

‘I-yes- all good,’ he says hurriedly, looking at Namjoon for a brief second before looking away again. Everyone looks around, uncomfortable but also amused, unsure how to react.

‘Right, I’m going to explain our trajectory,’ Hoseok cuts in, tapping at the map so that a path of orange lit up in the blue of the holograph.

‘We’ll exit warp above the belt here- right above Pit 3,’ Hoseok taps at the large floating mass in the belt around Grisial. ‘This is one of the more heavily populated zones and also busiest. From here we will follow route 7 to Pits 11, 13, and then route 10 to Pit 15, and then change to route 21 and finally arrive at Pit 18. These are specialized routes, almost like the polarized motorways in Šerdesas. They cut through a few asteroids, and through smaller Pits as well. We can visually blend in with the tourists or gem-merchants- if further pressed we can say we’re looking for asteroids to invest in. We’ll be changing our identity to Class III Trading Permit.’

‘Where are we headed after this?’ Sk’jin asks.

‘We’re headed to the Republic System of the Koitz Pulsar,’ Hoseok replies, ‘If everything goes according to plan, that is.’

‘That’s new,’ Sk’jin remarks as Hoseok minimizes the map.

‘Well, the Republic part is new; it’s an unstable zone- despite being a part of the GLA, a majority of its planets are fighting against joining the GLA- it’s extremely political,’ Hoseok explains. ‘A majority of the planets want to be independent planetary-states, but they need the GLA support. So yeah, lots of issues.’

‘Pirates?’

‘No- well, yes probably, but not like Ymir,’ Hoseok says while rolling his eyes.

‘Okay, so now that we’ve settled on that, I wanted to take this time to also ask Jungkook some questions,’ Namjoon says in a gentle tone.

The Vicitra flinches, leaning closer to Sk’jin on instinct.

Namjoon has not given Jungkook any reason to fear him, but clearly Namjoon’s title and “status” on the ship triggers something in Jungkook’s past, making him almost cower before the Kutsoglerin. Sk’jin can see how uncomfortable Namjoon is because of this but he tries to push past it.
‘Could you tell us about your past? As far as you remember,’ Namjoon asks, making his voice as soothing as he could. ‘We want to understand your past, and help you.’

Jungkook looks incredibly nervous, eyeing them all, shrinking in himself.

Looking up, Sk’jin notices Hoseok eyeing him, as though signaling him to talk to Jungkook.

Sk’jin feels sick. Because he already knows this story.

He already knows, in detail, he can imagine it- he can see it. He can taste the pain in the back of his throat. It’s dark, and it’s dry, it’s angry and it’s bitter and it hurts- his scream is still lodged in his throat and every time Jungkook looks at him, eyes wide and curious, Sk’jin can see her-

‘Can you tell me about your mothers?’ Jimin asks carefully instead. ‘Your brothers, sisters?’

Suddenly, Taeh’yung sits up and lets go of Jungkook, sprinting out of the Bridge. Jungkook misbalances and clings to Sk’jin. Without thinking, Sk’jin reaches forward, holding Jungkook in a wild, almost desperate rush dark mountains, ashy soil, the coming of a terrible storm and she’s holding the device up- a familiar device-

A touch on his shoulder shakes Sk’jin out of his nightmare, finding Yoongi behind him, stained red from the full force of the Bloodmoon above them. The Human had been the one to shake him out of his nightmare, and to his horror, Sk’jin finds that Jungkook is sitting away from him, hiding behind Jimin.

‘I- I blacked out- sorry,’ Sk’jin says at once, closing his eyes and rubbing at them quickly, his head throbbing. ‘I think it’s- I think we need to look for a UV-Bed when we get to Grisial.’

When he looks up from his palms, the red is no longer glaring and staining everything. Namjoon nods slowly, eyeing him carefully.

‘You sure there’s nothing we can do?’ Hoseok asks gently as Jungkook reappears from behind Jimin.

‘Yeah- yeah, I’m fine- I just- that happens sometimes. It’s just a Khol’isa thing.’ Sk’jin tries to smile, ignoring how the reddish light bleeds into his vision bit by bit.

‘Kookie look!’

Sk’jin is grateful for Taeh’yung’s ability to shock. Because Hoseok chokes mid-inhale and Namjoon’s expression turns incredulous. Taeh’yung is holding up one of the mechanical arms Sk’jin saw frequently attached to the Ynqaban cybortronics. When and how he got it, Sk’jin doesn’t know but Namjoon is face-palming while Hoseok mumbles, ‘I forgot about that, fuck’.

Jungkook on the other hand visibly brightens up at the sight of the clawed-arm.

‘This is what anu used to use- she had a large moving machine, with arms like this,’ Jungkook grins as he holds his hands out eagerly before he pulls his hands back, looking at Taeh’yung in a slightly terrified manner.

‘You can have it,’ Taeh’yung quickly tells him, pushing the claw towards the Vicitra. It takes a few seconds but Jungkook finally moves, taking the device from the Zhak’ gri who is delighted at this exchange as he asks in a low voice, ‘Do you love me now Kookie?’ which is unheard by the Vicitra.
‘Your…other mother was from Ynqaba?’ Namjoon asks carefully as he approaches the young Vicitra.

‘She was a Kaban,’ Jungkook says quietly. ‘She found us all- I was the last one.’

‘The baby,’ Taeh’yung grins, nearly vibrating where he stood as though trying to stop himself from reaching over and squishing Jungkook’s cheeks. To Sk’jin’s surprise, Jungkook nods to that.

‘Anu, ama, Talgun, Skezag, Elsang, Okanaat, Ilhaan, and Jungkook,’ Jungkook recalls, his fingers twitching as though counting them automatically. Had he repeated the names in the dark, hoping against all hope to hear their voices, to see their faces?

Did he slowly die in the dark, with only hollow echoes of their last memories together moving around him?

‘Where did you live?’ Namjoon asks, ‘In a big community? Alone?’

‘We lived in…in a cave,’ Jungkook says slowly. ‘A large cave, clean and filled with many toys and trinkets- lots of sleeping places.’

Sk’jin can see it. He can see exactly what this would have looked like.

‘What is your first memory? Can you remember?’ Namjoon asks again.

Jungkook pauses a while, fingers feeling the strong corroded metal of the claw.

‘I- I don’t know- I just…I was always there,’ Jungkook says quietly.

Namjoon nods at that before he glances at Yoongi.

‘I know…I know what you’re asking.’ Jungkook says suddenly. ‘You want to know if I’m one of them- from the Sunken?’

Everyone’s head snaps back towards Jungkook, the air stilling and slowly staining a brighter shade of red. Sk’jin blinks, willing the edging red across his vision to go away.

‘The Sunken?’

‘There are places- zones; black, dark, places; too dangerous to go to,’ Jungkook explains. ‘Anu and ama always tell us to never go there. We never did.’

‘What are these places?’ Namjoon asks eagerly.

‘Where anu found me,’ Jungkook whispers, as though telling them all a secret. ‘Where anu found all of us- it’s where ama came from too I think.’

‘What did she tell you about it? Who else knew?’

Jungkook looks at him, as though for permission. He’d been doing that a lot.

Sk’jin just nods, unable to think of anything to do or say.

‘She said we couldn’t tell- because they were looking for us. They were always looking for us.’

‘Who?’
'I don’t know- other Kabans, bad Beings, germs, wild creatures,’ Jungkook shrugs. ‘We were always careful- we never went to the center, or to the halls; if we did, we covered our faces and heads- especially ama.’

‘Did she teach you how to speak?’

‘Anu and ama,’ Jungkook whispers again, ‘Anu said ama was the smartest.’

Sk’jin can’t wrap his mind around it. A Khol’isa, born outside of the Bloodmoon? Born without nightmares?

‘Did they sleep?’ Sk’jin finds himself asking. ‘How- how did you sleep?’

Everyone looks at him with surprise and confusion.

‘It was cold- when it rained, it was cold,’ Jungkook explains. ‘When I was small, I slept with anu and ama.’

‘And did they sleep?’

Jungkook doesn’t seem to understand, his head tilting a little as though trying to comprehend the question. Sk’jin blinks hard but the red doesn’t go away.

‘We love sleeping.’

No one speaks, all having understood the point Sk’jin was trying to understand, to complete.

‘What happened? Were you taken?’ Hoseok asks gently.

Jungkook shakes his head, ‘I don’t know- it was dark and heavy and-‘

He flinches, hands gripping the metal of the claw with intense strength and force, creating little dents under his fingers.

‘I woke up alone.’

Sk’jin is vaguely aware of them speaking, but he can’t really hear them, not over how the Bloodmoon stains the Bridge around him and it won’t go away.

‘Was your ama like you?’ Sk’jin asks, looking up. He’s vaguely aware of how everyone has stopped speaking, small smiles fading into concerned frowns.

‘She was like you,’ Jungkook replies.

‘No- no as in- what did you-‘ Sk’jin is overwhelmed, the red light overtaking him and nearly rendering him breathless.

Suddenly Yoongi steps forward in the bright red light and in one swift motion, lifts his shirt over his back, displaying his naked back to Jungkook who flinches. Sk’jin takes this moment to close his eyes, breathing in slow and deep.

‘I don’t have it,’ he hears Jimin saying, ‘No one but you, and Yoongi.’

‘Why?’

‘We are the same- created the same.’ Yoongi tells him quietly.
‘I don’t- I don’t understand.-’

The Bloodmoon shines high and cruel above him, the sky stretches bright and dark simultaneously and now it bleeds over the gritty black mountains of Ynqaba- over the broken bodies of Camat, of Bhan, of-

A hand grips Sk’jin around his back, yanking him out of the bloody sky and back into the Bridge that is bright and void of any red stain.

Namjoon studies him carefully, looking down at him with worry in his eyes. Behind him, everyone else seemed to be busy looking over the map, discussing amongst themselves something Sk’jin can’t catch up to. How long had he been gone?

‘Are you okay?’

Mutely, Sk’jin nods.

‘I think we should invest in a UV-Bed,’ Namjoon tells him though it sounds nothing like a suggestion and more like a statement. ‘Or at least a scanner to attach to the Medical Bed.’

‘Sounds good,’ Sk’jin breathes out, finding that the air didn’t smell like death.

Hoseok glances at them with a questioning look before he walks away towards the cockpit.

‘Sk’jin! We can find nice clothing here,’ Jimin tells him with a smile from across the Table.

‘Oh- yeah I guess-’

Hoseok suddenly reappears, his expression tight and disturbed. Namjoon clearly picks up on it too.

‘What’s wrong?’ the Kutsoglerin demands at once.

‘I have bad news,’ Hoseok declares immediately, his actions purposeful but gentle when he angles Taeh’yung away from the central control panel.

‘Uh-‘

‘There have been leaks- of Yoongi’s fight at the arena.’ Hoseok says tersely, tapping a few times to connect his personal screen and project it into the Table’s system.

And there, surely enough, was Yoongi’s final fight. The footage has been messily edited, with the purposeful intention of focusing on Yoongi’s face.

‘There’s no explanation, no bounty, nothing,’ Hoseok explains. ‘I’ve been keeping sensors out in the Underverse for anything related to Pompa- I was just alerted about this.’

‘They’re trying everything to find us if they’re making this available,’ Namjoon states at once, coming over to where Sk’jin now stood behind Hoseok. ‘This has to be the Special-Jury- they want to expose Yoongi’s face-‘

‘But why Yoongi?’ Jimin asks, watching with a pained expression as Yoongi skids across the arena ground, the cheers of the Pompan crowd filling the air despite the volume being reduced. Jungkook crouches down instantly, hands covering his ears.

Hoseok quickly cancels the projection, looking down at the Vicitra worriedly.
‘Hey baby it’s okay- no more bad sounds,’ Taeh’yung coos gently as he crouches next to Jungkook. To everyone’s surprise, Jungkook turns a little to face Taeh’yung. The Zhak’gri is very evidently pleased, throwing a long arm around the Vicitra and making soft cooing sounds against his bowed head.

‘Has footage or news of us been introduced to the Underverse?’ Sk’jin asks as he regains his bearings, feeling better and a little lighter.

‘None that I know- but, I feel like this is a warning,’ Hoseok says evenly. ‘Yoongi’s identity, or lack of it, and his invisibility was a factor we used to our benefit- but with this video out there, any chances of a complete cover will be impossible. Not when there will be Beings out there looking for him.’

‘Can you see where it was released from? Was it from Pompa itself or-?’

‘Not from here we can’t,’ Namjoon shakes his head, replying in Hoseok’s place. ‘I’ll add this into the favour. See the source.’

Sk’jin nods to that.

‘Also,’ Hoseok frowns as he pulls up another tab from his screen, ‘I’ve been checking frequencies that have been crossing over our systems and I think-‘ he looks up from across the Table and meets Sk’jin’s eyes. The screen in his pocket suddenly burns, and Sk’jin is acutely aware of it.

‘Jinnie! I’m hungry!’ Taeh’yung declares loudly from where he’s crouched, successfully winding his arms and even legs around the young Vicitra who seemed to have realized that there was no point struggling against Taeh’yung’s incurable desire to hug all things.

‘Then starve,’ is Sk’jin’s instant reply.

‘But so is Jungkookie!’ Taeh’yung shakes Jungkook a little, ‘Right Kookie?’

Jungkook eyes Taeh’yung, then Sk’jin, and then Jimin and then back to Sk’jin before nodding and adding a small, ‘sorry’ at the end.

‘Okay okay- for fuck’s sake,’ Sk’jin rolls his eyes, avoiding Hoseok who was still watching him, ‘Come along children, let’s go fix breakfast or whatever meal we can make.’

‘I will help!’ Jimin declares as he comes around the Table, holding his hands out to both Taeh’yung and Jungkook to help them stand.

Sk’jin fairly runs out of the Bridge, followed closely by Jimin, Taeh’yung, and Jungkook.

To his relief, neither Hoseok or Namjoon approach him; they don’t even appear downstairs, sticking to the Bridge mainly. Instead, after breakfast has been made and consumed, Yoongi approaches him quietly. In all fairness Sk’jin hadn’t even noticed the Human had joined them for the meal until Jimin had pushed an extra plate towards him, clearly a portion for Yoongi. Sk’jin had felt a bit bad, but Yoongi hadn’t even noticed.

Yoongi takes up the dish-duty without comment, an odd thing considering how Sk’jin had realized early on that Yoongi purposefully avoided all kitchen duties and chores by using his lack of presence to his advantage.

‘Jimin was in love with Yoongi,’ he states without preamble, sliding in the dirty dishes into the UV-washer.
‘Uh-‘

‘And Yoongi was also in love with him.’

Sk’jin pauses in his actions of storing away the extra food.

‘Yoongi had wondered how it would feel to feel asleep every night with Jimin by his side,’ Yoongi tells him quietly, staring straight ahead of him, out into the white warp-light like he could something else beyond it. ‘With Jimin’s hand under his cheek.’

‘You remember that?’

Yoongi nods.

‘I slept with Jimin, his hand under my cheek,’ Yoongi tells him. ‘I sleep in the same bed, and I hold him when we sleep. He holds me when we sleep. I kiss him; he kisses me- and I don’t understand.’

‘Do you do that…because you’re not sure if that memory…that wish is yours, or his?’ Sk’jin asks carefully after some quiet contemplation.

Yoongi nods again.

‘Yoongi…’ Sk’jin pauses. He might tease and goad those around him who were in relationships or were nursing massive crushes on others, but he was absolutely clueless as to how to actually approach the subject. ‘Yoongi- uh. Are you- are you, you right now, in love with Jimin?’

‘I don’t know,’ Yoongi tells him bluntly, looking down when he realizes there are no more dishes left.

‘Is Jimin in love with you?’

‘He tells me that I am his. And he is mine,’ Yoongi looks away and stares straight at Sk’jin.

Sk’jin is at a loss. He doesn’t know what he’s supposed to say in this. Hoseok should be able to say something about now.

‘Sometimes- sometimes I think I am, but sometimes- it’s him.’ Yoongi explains. ‘I don’t know.’

And with that, Yoongi excuses himself and walks over to the Lobby where Taeh’yung, Jungkook, and Jimin were sitting. They took to watching random entertainment videos and clips, laughing together, showing Jungkook different things about the Universe. It had been Jimin’s idea; to educate Jungkook the way he had been.

Sk’jin pauses to think- studying Yoongi as he sat next to Jimin.

How did it feel to struggle with the emotions and memories of a past, one you could not call your own, but one that controlled your every move- one that dictated your entire life? It was a wonder that Yoongi didn’t lose his mind; being hyper-aware of another past, no wonder Yoongi doubted his present so much. No wonder he doubted everything about himself, because he didn’t know if what he felt, what he saw, what he thought, was original or not.

Sk’jin had his nightmares yes,- but they were his own.

His fears were his own.
His memories, no matter how horrible, no matter how heartbreaking, were his.

His happiness was his own too; memories of warm brown eyes, dimpled smiles. Memories of loud laughter, feet kicked up onto the dashboard, memories of being slapped upside his head even though he was a captain. Memories of bleeding skies, pained screams, of haunting eyes pleading towards him.

They were all his own. And Sk’jin was sure of himself in these memories.

‘Sk’jin!’

Jungkook senses him, head snapping towards him, a hand reaching out towards him, eyes wide and hopeful, a little apprehensive, but still eager.

Suddenly the Bloodmoon is back, and the red light stains the floors, the walls, the air, the table, the couch; it’s creeping over and covering Taeh’yung, Yoongi, Jimin; it’s spreading and spreading and Jungkook is morphing, eyes widening in fear and panic, mouth stretching open to a scream-

‘SK’JIN!’

*

The first thing Sk’jin notices is the ceiling- an annoyingly familiar one that Sk’jin recognizes is from the Medical Bay.

‘I thought passing out wasn’t good for you.’

Hoseok is standing there, hands on hips, a look of disapproval on his face that is probably too effective because Sk’jin feels guilty. For no clear reason.

That is until Sk’jin glances down and notices that his screen is in Hoseok’s hands. Okay so maybe he knows now.

‘It’s- it’s not,’ Sk’jin agrees. ‘But there are times when I can’t help it.’

Hoseok’s mouth is turned downwards in a weird grimace, his yellow eyes sharp and disapproving. He reaches over and places the screen next to Sk’jin on the Bed.

‘You’re getting calls.’

‘I’m aware.’

‘You’re not answering them.’

‘No I’m not.’

‘Calls on a channel that’s supposed to be un-breached and a secret.’

‘I am aware of that too.’

‘Will you tell me about it,’ Hoseok smiles and it’s a bit creepy.
‘We all have our secrets Hobi, let me keep mine.’

‘But that’s one too many.’

‘If I tell you one right now, will you let me off?’

Hoseok narrows his eyes at him.

‘Don’t make promises you can’t keep.’

Sk’jin feels his heart stutter. It must have actually stuttered, because his medical tab is suddenly haywire and Hoseok looks positively alarmed.

‘I’m fine-’ Sk’jin says at once. ‘Just- just triggered.’

‘Sk’jin- you have to tell me,’ Hoseok grits out, glancing back between Sk’jin and his medical tab, ‘Will a UV-Bed actually help?’

‘I don’t know,’ Sk’jin tells him honestly. ‘I’m hoping it does. If you think passing out is bad for me and is a pain in the ass, imagine how I feel about it.’

Hoseok grimaces at him, retrieving a screen to the side, clearly performing an analysis on Sk’jin.

‘There’s no point in worrying,’ Sk’jin shrugs. ‘My existence is an anomaly, so everything about it, by right, shouldn’t be normal. This is fine Hobi, it’s sweet of you to worry.’

‘You shouldn’t do that,’ Hoseok frowns.

‘Do what?’

‘Make yourself expendable like that.’

‘We all are,’ Sk’jin says as he sits up slowly, sighing out. ‘That’s why we’re here.’

‘Well maybe so. But Jungkook isn’t. And now that he’s here- we need to be careful with our words, our actions, and our motives.’ Hoseok says grimly.

Sk’jin doesn’t respond to that but just sighs.

‘Jungkook didn’t leave the Medical Bay until just some time ago,’ Hoseok tells him quietly. ‘You must really look like his mother.’

‘Or maybe I just really exude motherly vibes,’ Sk’jin snorts, rolling his eyes.

‘I actually wanted to talk to you about him.’

‘…about me being a mother?’

‘No,’ Hoseok rolls his eyes.

‘What about Jungkook?’ Sk’jin asks, eyeing Hoseok carefully and noticing the discomfort the latter was exuding. ‘Is something wrong?’

‘No it’s just- his medical records- he’s healed up yes,’ Hoseok frowns, ‘But well, it’s not how it’s supposed to be I guess. I checked his record again today and he’s…it says he’s malnourished.’

‘He needs blood to really recover,’ Sk’jin says slowly. ‘He’s cured, but what he’s eating right now isn’t helping is it? What are the possible results of having him “diet” with what we have with us right now?’

Hoseok grimaces at the choice of words.

‘Continued stunted growth? Complete weakness? Prone to illnesses, fragile bones- his metabolism will also be effected. His mental development as well.’ Hoseok lists off, eyeing the screen in his hands.

‘How long until this starts to build up.’

‘It already is- it’s been like this,’ Hoseok sighs out, ‘He was starved and gorged at that cell. He knew it was wrong, but he needed to survive.’

Sk’jin nods, remembering Jungkook’s stuttered words.

Suddenly the screen to his side lights up, a familiar hum filling the air. Sk’jin pointedly ignores Hoseok and cancels the call.

‘So we don’t have any meat on board-‘

His screen lights up again. Sk’jin ignores the incoming call again, knowing full well that Hoseok was watching him. He slides off of the bed, bare feet touching the cool ground.

‘We need to make a shopping list.’

*

‘No we are not getting you Grisial crystals- we’re only pretending to be merchants, and besides there is a waiting line for the crystals as well as a special permit to obtain them,’ Namjoon explains to Taeh’yung tiredly.

‘Right- adding non-expensive trinkets for Taeh’yung if we have time for it to the list,’ Sk’jin nods from where he sits, nursing a huge cup of very sweet tea Jimin had insisted he drink. Jungkook was drinking a similar drink next to him, stuck in a dilemma because he didn’t want to leave Sk’jin’s side but he didn’t want to leave Jimin by himself next to Yoongi either.

It’s weirdly cute, Sk’jin thinks to himself. And extremely entertaining because Jimin seems to understand the implications behind both Yoongi and Jungkook’s combined and separate behavior, but didn’t know how to approach the topic either.

‘We’ll also need to get hair—dye for Yoongi, and myself,’ Sk’jin gestures at Yoongi’s off-blue hair. ‘That needs to change- besides, he’s famous for that now.’

‘Should we make it red?’ Taeh’yung suggests. ‘Or green?’

‘Why not bright yellow,’ Hoseok offers from where he sat.

‘Pink?’ Jungkook offers so quietly that only Sk’jin hears it. Looking down Sk’jin finds the young Vicitra staring at his own head, clearly reminiscing something over the way he was just looking at Sk’jin’s hair.
'You don’t want me to change it?’ Sk’jin asks. Jungkook shakes his head.

‘Do you want to change your hair colour?’ Sk’jin asks with a grin. Jungkook shakes his head even more.

‘I’ll change it too! Can I pa?’ Taeh’yung swivels on the footstool, addressing Namjoon with pleading eyes.

‘Sure,’ Namjoon relents with a sigh.

‘I wanna make it bright red-’

‘We’ll be at Pit 3 in 20 minutes,’ Hoseok announces.

‘Okay, so I’ll head over to the public communications office, send out my message,’ Namjoon states before anyone (read: Taeh’yung) can change topics.

‘Taeh’yung and I will head to the Flotsam and Jetsam for supplies,’ Hoseok continues. They had all decided that Hoseok was probably the best option to handle Taeh’yung and keep an eye on him while both entertaining and distracting him from causing potential accident/ruckus that would bring him attention.

‘Yoongi, Jungkook, and I will stay inside, away from sight.’ Jimin says carefully and slowly, purposefully making his sentence as correct as he could.

‘I will head over to the terminal-counter to arrange our travel-route with the Grisial Tourism Authority,’ Sk’jin finishes before glancing at Jungkook and adding, ‘Don’t start any fights with Yoongi while I’m gone.’

Jungkook looks a little offended but also weirdly subdued, as though he had been entertaining that idea. It makes Sk’jin worry a little bit.

With everyone tasked and seated, Hoseok counts down their exit from warp.

Everyone is tensed, because the last time they had exited warp had been nothing short of a disaster. Jungkook seems to sense this as well, eyes flitting back and forth between everyone in nervous apprehension. They had deactivated what Sk’jin mentally coined the Invisibility Button and had tagged on a whole new digital identity over the ship in general. It was, however, completely ready to activate again. The reason why Jimin was going to be staying back was mainly for that. They would activate it again once they got out of Pit 3 and cruised along the Grisial motorway, but for now they were, in every sense of the word, very visible and trackable.

The familiar compression in the lining of his stomach indicates their start in exiting warp-speed, the white light outside pulling into streaks, allowing the dark of space beyond starlight to appear, until the lights fade and shrink into tiny spots above and below-

‘Wow.’

Wow is an understatement but there is no other word to describe the beauty of Grisial.

A gigantic planet of pure white, gleaming and catching light of its distant star and reflecting it back out into space 5 times as bright, Grisial was nicknamed the star-planet for good reason. And surrounding the planet, was a wide and vast and rather deep disc of asteroid debris that stretched so far that Sk’jin feels as though he were looking down straight into a miniature galaxy rather than a planet surrounded by asteroids.
It’s breathtaking and awe-inspiring.

Each asteroid was gleaming bright and yet gentle, casting a luminance that was not harsh or glaring. The entire belt felt like an ocean of light, rather than thousands of gleaming asteroids. If you watched closely, hues of every colour slowly spread, like ink drops in clear water, before fading out completely again. All of Grisial was like a band of light, the spectrum splitting at random, and different colours washing over softly and quickly.

‘Sk’jin could you announce us in,’ Namjoon asks quietly.

Startled out of stupor, Sk’jin reaches over the Communications Board.

‘This is trading ship ID 32-0089 class III requesting permission to enter Grisial with request type C: Tourism from the Immigration Bureau at Raksane Tayi,’ Sk’jin lies smoothly.

‘Identification confirmed and request permitted. Pit 3 is open to you. Welcome to Grisial 32-0089, we hope you have a wonderful stay.’ A voice replies a few seconds later.

‘Thank you.’ Sk’jin watches as their permit is granted in the form of a pass-code sent to them. ‘God the pass- Hobi take us down.’

Hoseok gently guides the ship downward, and before Sk’jin can ask how they were supposed to find their way around the place, the asteroids around them gleam a soft violet, indicating paths downwards into the belt.

Sk’jin is surprised to hear a thick sniffing sound and when he looks around, is surprised to find Jungkook with tears in his eyes. The Vicitra is also surprised by his reaction, touching his face as though he didn’t know why his body was reacting so. He looks at Sk’jin as though to help him understand. Pulling at his sleeve and covering his hand, Sk’jin dabs at the young Vicitra’s face.

‘It’s okay,’ he tells him quietly, ‘Sometimes you cry when you see something beautiful. It’s natural.’

Jungkook doesn’t seem to understand, but he nods anyways, ducking his head down and wiping at face harshly with a few more quiet sniffs.

The belt wasn’t just filled with large floating chunks of Grisial crystals, but was mixed with all sorts of rock and debris. Some were dark, gleaming like cheap dark glass, while some appeared to look like every other asteroid, a dull grey or dim black. Some of them had tiny lights all over them, a clear indication of a mining process, and some were barren and empty. Others were bored and hollowed, decorated with lights and creating a natural show of light and shadow which Taeh’yung had been very taken with.

Jimin is standing at the front, hands on the glass as he looks around awed. He waves his hands across the crystals, and Sk’jin isn’t sure if it was Jimin himself causing the lights, or the lights responding to Jimin because the nearby crystals brighten and gleam in the same motion as his hand.

Sk’jin glances over at Namjoon and Hoseok, wondering if they were seeing this too, but Hoseok was busy steering the ship (a good thing), and Namjoon was going over something at the Table, only sparing the occasional glance out of the window here and there.

Instead it’s Jungkook who seems to notice too, watching Jimin’s hands move, and watching how the lights seemed to follow this.
‘Who is he?’ Jungkook asks him quietly.

‘We don’t know,’ Sk’jin replies honestly. ‘But we’re taking him home.’

‘He said this is his home.’

‘It’s…it’s difficult to explain. Or understand,’ Sk’jin replies. ‘Not all of us understand much of anything to be honest.’

Jungkook, to Sk’jin’s surprise, finds this funny and giggles quietly.

Following the guidance of the glowing asteroid rocks, the ship dips a little when it connects to the polarized motorway crafted deep inside the asteroid belt, creating a safe and entwined path through the massive area. There were a few ships here and there, and Sk’jin can see Namjoon eyeing each and every one of them, a stony frown on his face.

‘How are the polarized roads even made?’ Sk’jin asks as he looks around the moderate traffic along the motorway.

‘Natural gravity?’ Namjoon shrugs. ‘In Šerdesas they took advantage of their natural magnetic fault lines; on asteroids like these, where the biggest ones have some form of gravity on them, they just take advantage of that and make it so that they can channel that into forming one large strip-the entire thing is solar-charged I think.’

‘We’re quite far from their sun though aren’t we?’ Sk’jin inquires.

‘We are- but Grisial is like a gigantic mirror- reflects and absorbs enough for this motorway.’
Namjoon explains as he gestures to the vaguely glimmering wide flat space along which other ships, Transporters, and large freights moved along.

‘This is Pit 3. Platform 54-G is open and ready to receive you,’ a voice calls smoothly as they turn, passing a massive jet-black asteroid and Pit 3 appears before them.

Structurally it resembled any other Dock, except it was made out of asteroid crystals of various clear shades, making it look like a massive palace like structure of pure dark glass veined with ice.

‘Wow,’ Jungkook breathes out quietly, eyes wide as he looks upon the Pit.

‘Hard to believe this is a mining zone,’ Namjoon chortles a little, ‘It could very well be transformed into a holiday getaway or something.’

‘But not as profitable,’ Hoseok laughs from the front, stretching after he aligned the ship to pull straight into their designated platform. ‘Grisial makes enough profit to fund a whole System.
Everyday.’

Namjoon whistles low, which Jimin imitates, and then Jungkook tries to imitate as well. And for someone who probably hasn’t whistled before, does a very good job of it.

‘I’m sorry you guys don’t get to go out and explore,’ Namjoon says, addressing Yoongi and Jimin, and then Jungkook who bows his head, as though worried that his evident desire to go out and explore would get him some sort of reprimanding action.

‘It’s okay,’ Jimin smiles, ‘I can watch from here.’

‘I’ve been here before. It’s not new to me,’ Yoongi states simply.
‘When were you here?’ Hoseok asks with interest.

‘23 sols ago,’ Yoongi answers. ‘My mission was to disrupt an exchange.’

‘…was it disrupted.’

‘It was.’

Taeh’yung giggles at that.

The landing platforms were cleanly cut into the surface of the asteroid, hollowed out, casting light in echoes around the whole place. There was a sense of somehow feeling submerged underwater though it was not dark but instead strangely bright. When they land, Sk’jin can’t help but excitedly walk behind a skipping Taeh’yung who gleefully throws open the Hangar gateway and dives out.

It wasn’t like sunlight, but Sk’jin will take it.

He knows that his issues were not caused solely due to the lack of sunlight, but this made him feel a little stronger, a bit safer.

‘Okay,’ Namjoon calls as he enters the Hangar behind Sk’jin with Hoseok and Jungkook. ‘Yoongi close up behind at once and report anything unusual. And everyone, for the sake of my sanity, please do not wander off or lose your Comm-Device okay?’

Taeh’yung salutes him, nearly slapping an approaching Hoseok on the face in the process. Namjoon watches them leave with an exasperated look on his face.

Waving goodbye at Jungkook who is crouched behind the Spardyti, Sk’jin steps off the Užkulisai, shortly behind Namjoon.

‘If there’s any issue-’

‘I know,’ Sk’jin waves dismissively, ‘I’ll inform everyone at once. Comm-Device is on and running.’

Namjoon looks like he wants to say something more but just nods once before taking off another way.

Their platform extends out into the main Bay, criss-crossing bridges and footpaths overtaking at random, held up by strong metal wires. Everything appeared glass-like and it’s strangely beautiful. Sk’jin quickly finds a lift and enters the zone he was supposed to go to.

‘The FJ is rather far- might take a while to get back up considering all the stuff we need,’ Hoseok reports. ‘It’s at the very bottom.’

‘That’s fine- just keep us updated,’ Namjoon replies at once.

‘I’m pretty far in myself,’ Sk’jin reports, looking through the clear walls that made the lift as he descends for a few seconds before the lift shifts and travels horizontally inwards.

‘I think I’ll be done that fastest then,’ Namjoon reports. ‘I’ve found a PCO already.’

Sk’jin leans against the walls, feeling like the contact with the material that seemed to absorb and refract sunlight made him feel better.

‘Zone 76 Grisial Tourism Authority Area E: Tourism and Sight-Seeing Package Guides and Sk’jin and a few others step out. There’s more people here and Sk’jin easily blends in with the crowd. Now that he wasn’t in robes but just in regular ship-crew clothing, Sk’jin hardly caught any attention. Not that it mattered to Sk’jin because when needed he could easily slip away unnoticed regardless of what he was wearing.

The terminal-counter he was looking for was easy to find and the Androids manning the booths pleasant to talk to as well. They were designed to look like the Beings closest to Grisial, which, is Sk’jin wasn’t mistaken, was the Perigel System. They all bore a strong amphibious features; slimy skin, webbed fingers, large almost unblinking eyes, with an added crown of coral-like structure around the edge of their heads. Out of water they looked strangely gormless and rather clumsy. But in water, the Beings from the Perigel System were unmatched in speed, agility, and most notably, hunting.

But the Androids created after their image were far from hunting examples and instead smiled wide open-mouthed smiles as Sk’jin thanked them, permit in hand for their desired travel-route.

‘Hey, I’m done,’ Sk’jin announces, heading for the left again.

‘Sk’jin, could you come help us at the FJ? There’s a lot.’ Hoseok says shortly.

Suppressing a snort Sk’jin agrees as Namjoon also volunteers to give a hand. Changing his direction, Sk’jin heads for the landing with the lifts that would take him to the bottom most levels where the Flotsam and Jetsam was spread out over a few levels. But Sk’jin takes a short pause as he enters the landing.

Whatever the asteroid was made of, and whatever the Pit was carved into was of a clear and very strong material, allowing Sk’jin a very clear and very wide view of the entirety of the Grisial Asteroid Belt sprawled in all it’s luminous glory around him.

‘Sight-seeing, that’s nice.’

Spinning on his heel, Sk’jin raises his hands to cross over his chest in automatic defence.

‘We’re-‘

But a hand clamps over his mouth and he’s being very easily dragged out of the landing in a surprisingly casual manner without drawing any attention.

Sk’jin is in too much shock- no one could sneak up on him like this it was impossible-

‘Why have you not been responding to any of my calls!’

His mouth no longer covered and being shoved into a small ramp behind the lifts, Sk’jin can only gape in absolute confusion.

It’s been 4 sols.

4 sols since Sk’jin gained his Being back- since he was freed from the confines of the Original Nightmare. 4 sols since he lost his horns.

4 sols since he last saw-

‘Zitao.’
The Long-Huon looks well. Still as tall and gangly as ever, his natural expression caught between annoyance and disgust is emphasized even more with the frown that is very genuine on his face. And then everything hits Sk’jin in one heavy swoop.

‘What are you doing here!’ Sk’jin hisses, glaring at the Long-Huon who is glaring back as well.

‘You didn’t respond to any of my calls!’ Zitao hisses. ‘Something happened I could feel it- you know I’m worried-‘

‘How did you even find me- you’re not supposed to know-‘

‘I had help,’ Zitao hisses again before pushing them further down the ramp. ‘You were missing-‘

‘You were tracking me?’ Sk’jin throws his hands up in disbelief. ‘What the fuck-‘

‘I was worried for fuck’s sake!’ Zitao wipes at his face in exasperation. ‘And then I saw- I saw you went back-‘

‘I had to- you know I had to,’ Sk’jin spits out. ‘I couldn’t leave them there- I couldn’t-‘

‘They’re not there anymore! We buried them!’ Zitao hisses out but this time he sound sad, ‘We buried them Jin- I remember. We took all of their bones, all of their belongings, and we buried them- and after what happened they’re free-‘

‘I saw him,’ Sk’jin whispers, looking away. ‘I went back- and I saw him. I saw him everywhere-‘

‘It’s in your head-‘

Sk’jin snorts, ‘How ironic considering I was in your head the entire time unless you forgot that didn’t make me any less fake-‘

‘But you were alive-‘

‘And he is! They are! They’re alive in me!’ Sk’jin wants to scream. ‘The same way all of those kids were alive in your head- the same way what happened-‘

‘I’ve made my peace Jin,’ Zitao cuts across, his yellow irises flashing, black slits that made his pupils narrowing dangerously. ‘And you know this isn’t good for you- you were the one who kept telling me that-‘

Zitao stops, wiping at his face before he steps close.

‘Jin please- this isn’t good for you- just look at you, this isn’t right- I can feel it- it’s like you’re missing even when I see you-‘

‘I made a promise!’ Sk’jin shoves Zitao away. ‘I made a promise kid- you fulfilled yours, and now with that I get to fulfill mine- so you can’t tell me what to do-‘

Zitao snorts derisively, ‘No- you can’t do this-‘

Zitao is suddenly flying, tackled down by a blur of movement that Sk’jin had been too preoccupied to notice.

Namjoon is pushed off of Zitao who is quick to react.

Before Sk’jin can even put in a word they’re leaping at each other, determined to maim, at the very least. Sk’jin is also subjected to quick glances that can only be translated into ‘why the fuck aren’t you helping me?’ from both Namjoon and Zitao.

Namjoon is a surprisingly able and effective fighter. But the only reason why Zitao isn’t cleaning the floor with Namjoon is because the Long-Huon probably already figured out what was happening. Which is why he gives Sk’jin a glare.

‘Stop!’ Sk’jin yells, flapping his arms about as he steps forward to separate the two, pushing their faces away.

‘-why are you like this?!’ Zitao slaps Namjoon’s arms, pushing him away, ‘Gross, get off of me fuck-’

‘-what the actual fuck-?!’ Namjoon ducks away from Zitao’s flapping hands.

‘Who is he?!’ they both demand before glaring at each other.

‘Oh for fuck’s sake calm the fuck down both of you!’ Sk’jin snaps. ‘Zitao this is Namjoon he’s the captain of the mission I’m in. Namjoon this is Zitao he was with me in the Nightmare Planet.’

There are looks of understanding in both of their eyes but they both regard each other with looks of suspicion nonetheless.

‘And you!’ Sk’jin rounds up at Namjoon. ‘Why didn’t you just pause to ask what was happening like a civil Being that I know you’re perfectly capable of being-’

‘I saw you getting dragged off,’ Namjoon explains looking irritated and exasperated. ‘You were fighting against him I thought you were being held against your will you were even yelling-’

‘Fucking Spaces- you- you didn’t even…’ Sk’jin can’t help but gawk at Namjoon.

‘What-’

‘You didn’t even…you didn’t even pause to ask what was happening you just- you just tackled him wow-’

Namjoon and Zitao just give him bewildered expressions.

‘Why are you here?’ Namjoon demands, clearly dismissing Sk’jin as a hopeless case.

‘Sight-seeing,’ Zitao answers with a smile so fake and sweet that Sk’jin is rather proud. Namjoon doesn’t seem to appreciate it as much.

‘Jin- we need to talk. I’m not leaving this System until we talk- and I know you’re staying here for 4 days based on the route you just registered for-’

‘-how do you know that-‘ Namjoon is demanding but Zitao blithely ignores him.

‘I will be on call and ready to meet you at any time- so you fucking get your excuses ready before that time or I will take you back with me.’

Namjoon steps in smoothly at that. They’re the same height, Sk’jin realizes so they can’t stare each other down but they were both damn well trying.

‘While I will not pretend to understand the nature of your relationship with Sk’jin I will ask you to back the fuck off. Speaking as his Captain I will not tolerate this threatening behavior-’
‘Oh pardon me Captain,’ Zitao trills, mimicking Namjoon’s voice badly and rather loudly. ‘But I was not talking to you- this doesn’t concern you and if you were really a Captain caring for his crew then maybe you would notice that Jin is in obvious need of emergency treatment.’

‘Zitao maybe you should leave now,’ Sk’jin cuts, pushing them both away from each other. ‘I’ll call you when I get back to my ship and-’

‘Whatever needs to be said can be said in front of me-’ Namjoon cuts in.

‘Literally no one invited you okay-’

‘Hey! This area is off-limits!’ a voice rings out in clear warning over a megaphone of sorts.

They all jump in alarm, not noticing that they had an audience watching them with varying expressions of wariness, amusement, and entertainment.

‘Uh Jinnie is everything okay-’

‘I am not here for this- please remember to contact me for fuck’s sake-’ Zitao is saying as he backs off, walking backwards quickly and to the intense amazement of everyone watching, sinks down straight to the floor.

‘What the fuck-?!’

‘Hey! The two of you! Stop right there!’

The Tourism Authority Security was strict- not wanting stragglers, smugglers, or pirates in the Belt. And at this moment, Namjoon and Sk’jin seemed to fit in this category, given their screaming and yelling and obvious near-brawl that just broke out. Sk’jin didn’t even realize that Namjoon’s sweater was torn, revealing his not so ordinary arm structure to the entire public before them.

‘Step towards us hands up in the air- are you armed?’ the Officer asks, there’s a total of 3 of them right now. They could easily overwhelm them, but Sk’jin doesn’t know what to think of the crowd and how they would react. Attacking was not a good idea, but-

‘Sk’jin.’

They make a very quick decision.

Being taken by the Tourism Authority would mean registering their photograph and fake identity into the registry. Meaning a direct link into the GLA Database. Meaning an instant alarm on their position because no doubt the Special-Jury were keeping an eye out for them.

Sharing one look, Namjoon and Sk’jin turn on their heel, and run.

‘Guys! Hurry and get back- on the ship-!’ Namjoon orders as they sprint down the ramp before taking a sharp turn into an alley that ran along the back of the lift-system, leaping over random objects, covered propellers, and lengths of cable. Fuck, the Perigel Officers were fast despite not being in water; Sk’jin makes a mental note to increase his fitness and athletic ability. Maybe train with Hoseok, who knows.

‘What?! What’s going on again-’ Hoseok sounds .2 seconds from giving up.

‘Do you need backup?’

‘No- no Yoongi, you stay put- we’re coming to you. Jimin activate-’ Namjoon jumps over a large cart, foot catching on the lid and nearly falling on his face but Sk’jin is quick to help him stay upright.

‘I got it!’ Jimin replies, sounding worried and panicked.

‘Pa! Jinnie! What’s wrong-?!’

‘Don’t worry about us- just- everyone on the ship!’ Sk’jin wheezes out as they burst out into the crowd, startling a few Beings before diving into a crowd near a small market.

‘Sk’jin we can’t keep running-‘ Namjoon pulls him to a stop, ducking around behind a display of psychedelic postcards to one side, and what appeared to be glass dildos to one side, bending his knees to remain hidden. ‘We need to find a way to stay hidden and get back to the ship.’

‘Security is approaching the area, they’re going to surround you,’ Yoongi reports, having clearly already hacked into the security system in the Pit to watch them. ‘You need to exit the place now.’

‘Fuck-‘ Sk’jin quickly removes his outerwear, reversing and flinging it over Namjoon’s shoulders before pulling him down the market street, hurriedly pulling at an unsuspecting tourist’s dangling thin scarf and wrapping his head with it.

‘This won’t work-‘

‘For now it will-!’ Sk’jin hisses back at Namjoon who despite his words was also looking about for items to nick as they weaseled their way about the busy market.

‘Guys taking any form of public transit will get you spotted-‘ Hoseok sounds a little breathless as though he was running. Sk’jin hurries his steps, followed closely by Namjoon who throws another scarf like fabric over Sk’jin’s head, replacing the threadbare one. ‘You’ll need to find a way to get through to at least the closest docking platform zone-‘

Sk’jin would have found their current location funny in this market if he had the time and capacity to enjoy it. They were surrounded by rather questionable items, all of which were designed and marketed for usage in the bedroom for intimate purposes. Sk’jin might have giggled hysterically as they jogged past the stores, making a few people stare at him.

‘You just need to ascend up to Zone 90 and I can bring the Spardyti to you.’ Yoongi reports before stopping, ‘They’re surrounding your location you can’t-‘ ‘Fuck-‘ Sk’jin stops, making Namjoon nearly crash into him.

‘Sk’jin what the fuck-‘

‘We can’t do anything- unless we fight,’ Sk’jin sighs, pulling them to stand at the side next to a stall that sold an array of glass dildos (10% Grisial Crystal! Guaranteed to boost your stamina!!).

‘And at this point, fighting will lead to more problems. If we just allow ourselves to be captured, and we pretend we were having some dumb love-triangle argument then that could work-‘

Stepping closer, Namjoon frowns at Sk’jin.

‘Why are you stopping?’ Yoongi asks, sounding understandably confused. ‘4 Officers approaching-‘

Sk’jin frowns back, arms crossed and ready to obviously get arrested. What else could they do? They were going to be taken by the Tourism Officers, arrested, their identities exposed, and then taken back to Tayi.

But that doesn’t happen because Namjoon wipes at his face, sighing as though exhausted at Sk’jin, and pulls him forward and without preamble kisses him.

Sk’jin’s first reaction is to kill Namjoon of course.

But then it occurs to him that this is an excellent way to deter attention away from them. By drawing attention to themselves.

‘You’re a terrible kisser,’ Sk’jin mumbles against Namjoon’s lips- their embrace awkward and strained.

‘I’m not paying attention to quality here-‘ Namjoon grumbles back, face turning as though to kiss him deeper but it’s to shield them both.

‘Um-‘

‘Let me-‘ Sk’jin rolls his eyes and sweeping Namjoon backwards and down, takes the initiative to actually kiss Namjoon. Namjoon makes a weird, slightly terrified, sound but doesn’t fight it. For added effect, Sk’jin swipes at the dildos in display, holding them over their heads and he makes obnoxious sounds that makes Namjoon wince in great discomfort and obvious embarrassment.

Footsteps thunder past and Namjoon’s grip tightens.

Sk’jin likes kissing. It’s fun, and it also showed you a lot about the Being you were kissing.

And Namjoon’s inexperience makes him want to giggle. Namjoon’s kiss is just like his personality.

‘You can stop kissing they’re out of the area.’

‘WHAT?!-‘

‘WHO’S KISSING WHO-‘

‘Ca-captain and Jin-‘ Jungkook replies sounding very unsure of what he just saw.

‘WHAT WHY FOR FUCK’S SAKE-‘ Hoseok sounds beyond himself with confusion.

‘Wow that actually worked,’ Sk’jin declares as he pulls Namjoon up from dipping him downwards, the latter looks dizzy and slightly nauseous. ‘Don’t look that disgusted-‘

‘Um- I think you should start running-‘ Jimin states uncertainly.

‘Please make your way into the 5th stall and ask for the restroom. You can access the pipes from the vents.’ Yoongi states, sounding almost exasperated despite his deadpan tone.

Namjoon still looks a little overwhelmed so Sk’jin grabs his hand and pulls him into the direction they were pretty much ordered to go to by Yoongi.

‘Anything around?’

‘The market is surrounded. They will arrive at your location in 20 seconds again.’ Yoongi replies.

It’s a restaurant of sorts and Namjoon and Sk’jin quickly flit in and no one bats an eye at them as they make their way to the back and to the bathroom. Sk’jin only just realizes that maybe holding two glass dildo in one hand while pulling in a very flustered Being behind him probably only meant one thing while entering a restroom.

Sk’jin has been caught doing much worse, so this doesn’t really matter much to him. Dignity was after all, just a concept.

‘Okay we’re in the restroom-‘

‘According to the layout, you should find a large shredder tube-‘

‘Yoongi I don’t think any of us are immune to a shredder tube-‘

‘Wait- I got it,’ Namjoon has recovered enough to join the conversation, pushing Sk’jin aside to access the wall behind the loo.

‘Uh what-‘

‘What-‘

‘What-‘

Namjoon removes the panel easily enough, fingers digging into the side of the metal. The whirring sound of the very sharp fast blades responsible for reducing nearly every form of recyclable waste into bits fills the air, activated by the sensor.

‘Namjoon don’t be an idiot-‘

And without even blinking an eye, Namjoon reaches into the tube and rips out a few wires, the whirring sound stopping immediately. Namjoon removes a completely unharmed arm looking at Sk’jin as though he was mad.

‘Did you really think I was going to stick my hand in into the blades?’

‘I didn’t know what you were going to do-‘

‘Hand me the dildo-‘

‘The what-?!’

‘THE WHAT-?!’

Sk’jin hands it over and Namjoon quickly leans into the opening, making a few scuffling sounds before an ominous clanging sound rings out and Namjoon hisses out.

‘What-‘

He suddenly jerks, as though violently punching something and the sound of the blades start up again but there’s a wrenching sound and the sound of the blades literally fall away.

‘…Namjoon-‘

‘Right- we should get going,’ Namjoon declares, pulling himself out of the opening only to show Sk’jin a very mangled forearm-

‘For fuck’s sake-‘
‘The Officers are outside of the stall- they’re asking about unusual activity. Please hurry the owner is leading them inside.’

Namjoon eyes him as though telling him to hurry and quickly climbs in.

‘Don’t forget the panel-cover,’ he tells Sk’jin before sliding down the tunnel.

‘Fucking hell-‘

Grabbing the panel-case, Sk’jin climbs over the loo and quickly looks inside the tunnel, Namjoon having already slid down. It’s dark and Sk’jin has no idea what to expect.

The door to the restroom jiggles and Sk’jin ducks all the way in, his feet finding a ledge where the shredder-blades were installed. He pulls the panel-cover with him and making sure it clicks shut, Sk’jin pulls his feet in and simply slides down.

The tube surprisingly curves rather gently and it’s oddly dry- Sk’jin had been expecting to be bombarded with disgusting fluids and something else unimaginably disturbing but it’s surprisingly dry and smelt strongly of some form of cleaning chlorine.

There’s light ahead and before Sk’jin can even hope to slow down, he spills out into a wide basin like opening that dips downwards and into a massive hollow, deep inside the Pit that was clearly the “basement” area. He’s vaguely aware of large pipes, huge cables, and what appeared to be elevator shafts to one side.

‘Oh fuck-!’

Before he goes flying out of the basin, unable to control himself, a hand shoots out and grabs him by the collar of his shirt, nearly ripping it.

‘Oh Spaces-‘ Sk’jin gasps as Namjoon grabs him and steadies him to a stop. ‘Fucking Spaces-‘

‘We don’t have communications this deep inside,’ Namjoon declares, shakily standing up, nursing his arm. Sk’jin is almost worried, panicked even, before he realizes that the Kutsoglerin didn’t have all too many pain-receptors. He probably felt that it was dislocated and nearly useless and was uncomfortable, but he felt no pain.

The idea of it is almost incomprehensible to Sk’jin.

‘If we’re in underground- we can follow the elevator shafts and make our way to Zone 90,’ Sk’jin plans, carefully edging towards the further side of the basin to look upwards. ‘It’s fucking dark.’

‘There should be maintenance stairs or something around here for the Bots,’ Namjoon declares.
‘There should be a maintenance station around here- over there I can see the rungs for some form of adjustable maintenance-lift-‘

A strange sound howls inside the huge empty cavern.

It sounds, most disturbingly, like a toilet flush.

‘What was that-‘

A horrendous stench overwhelms them, causing Sk’jin to instantly gag and it’s followed by a thunderous roar.

Sk’jin finds himself pushed to the side when suddenly the pipe he had slid out of is gushing with what he can only suspect is sewage and waste.

To his great relief, it only lasts a few seconds before it’s followed by an equally strong flood of something that smelt strongly of chlorine. It flushes the basin out, leaving the dark glossy surface spotless. But Sk’jin doesn’t fail to shudder with disgust.

‘Oh fucking Spaces-‘ Namjoon takes a step back but then the entire basin tilts and upends.

His shriek of surprise caught in his throat, Sk’jin and Namjoon slip and are literally thrown off of the basin. Scrambling and instinctively throwing his hands above his head, Sk’jin manages to catch onto the lip of a narrow ledge some distance under the basin they had been thrown off of.

‘Namjoon-!’

‘Fucking-‘ Namjoon curses, dangling with one good arm, legs struggling before he finds a footing along the rough glassy walls. ‘We’re fucking cursed aren’t we.’

Sighing in agreement, Sk’jin nods exhaustedly.

‘This is great. Exactly what we need.’ Namjoon rambles on.

Honestly, Sk’jin is too old for this.
So my thesis proposal was accepted and approved
Why did I think 3D visual development was going to be a good idea
But I think you guys will be excited to know that I’m doing my thesis sort of based on ADEGU- especially Yoongi and Jimin’s short arc in Megibiya. It’s…a spin-off, you could say, of that storyline. But the visuals are all going to be how I imagined that place to look like. So I think I might upload my progress on it, and post them on tumblr or something and link it here so you know what the Uzkulisai looks like, what the screens look like, etc. that should be fun
I’m gonna die aren’t i
Yeah
Sigh
I also wrote a NamJin oneshot here if anyone’s interested in reading 16K of namjin being nerds and awkward and cute
Also
ALL HAIL GLASS DILDOS WOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOO
I had so much fun writing this chapter
Like im the author but fuck do I love Sk’jin he’s my favorite character I love him so much ‘So pretty!’

Hoseok doesn’t even look up from his screen where he’s perusing the map to find the stalls they needed to visit in order to complete their shopping list as he reaches out and firmly grabs onto Taeh’yung’s collar, keeping him in place.

‘It’s so pretty Hobi, can we look at it when we come back?’

‘If we have time buggy,’ Hoseok replies, eyeing the map before looking up to visualize the space they were in in accordance to the map. The first stall they would be visiting would be for Jungkook. He’s not too sure how they go in and order this. Did he go to the counter and say ‘yeah hi I need some blood and raw flesh, preferably a crate full, how much is the total?’ or was there some covert way of handling this sort of trade.

‘I think Chim would look great in that- I think Yoongi would appreciate it.’ Taeh’yung comments blithely, skipping closer to wind his arm around Hoseok’s. This pulls Hoseok’s attention away from counting the stall-numbers and glances at what Taeh’yung is talking about only to regret his decision.

It’s some form of body-jewelry, designed and made from Grisial crystals and its been draped over a mannequin in such a way that there is literally no other explanation for the purpose and “use” of the jewelry.

‘Taeh’yung,’ Hoseok says in his best reprimanding tone. ‘Don’t be inappropriate, and don’t mentions things like this to either Yoongi or Jimin unless it’s been requested by them okay?’

‘But he’d look pretty in it?’ Taeh’yung tilts his head.

‘I- yeah sure he would but-’

‘Oh! You agree!’ Taeh’yung’s eyes sparkle before he adds as though scandalized, ‘But you can’t!’

‘What-? No, Tae- let’s just get the stuff on our list- if we have time and can manage we buy something pretty yes?’ Hoseok tries to reason.

Taeh’yung just beams in agreement and immediately follows Hoseok without any further comment. He hums a random tune, head twisting and turning to look around, intrigued. Hoseok has thought this before and it’s even more cemented now than before.

Taeh’yung was like an ancient power, unimaginably wise and strong, but incredibly naïve and innocent at the same time. His point of view, in regards to everything, did not align with the standard of a Universal mode of living: morally and rationally. Taeh’yung just seemed to exist in a state of being far beyond what any of them were used to or could hope to understand.

Taeh’yung could coo and gently pet a young child, but would probably have no qualms destroying a planet if he saw fit. And there would probably be no guilt or regret of any sort in the aftermath of his actions.

‘Is this it?’

Hoseok glances at the direction Taeh’yung was pointing at and finds that they were indeed in front of the store he was looking for. And it did not look shady or weird. It just...looked like every other grocer stall in the Jetsam and Flotsam. There are additional things in the store of course, and instead of having displays of food items, the store is lined with massive OrTanks storing in them what appeared to be pulsing lumps of flesh.

Due to his line of work, not much really disgusts or repulses Hoseok. He can see something and understand and react to the gore or quality of repulsion it exuded, but that didn’t mean he actively sought out or enjoyed sights like the grotesque display before him.

It was odd, because everything was clean, hygienic, and even well packaged.

‘How may I help you?’ an Android asks, sitting up from behind the counter.

Somewhat recovering, Hoseok manages to order what he needs. The Android nods and without further question goes about retrieving the needed items.

‘Would you like the tissue living or frozen?’

‘I- what?’ Hoseok chokes out, eyes widening.

‘All tissue, flesh, and blood purchased in our outlets are designed and grown to be living, so as to preserve the quality and freshness of the items sir,’ the Android explains smoothly. ‘Please have no fear! We conduct all our business under strict guidance of the Yisheng Directory and abide all of their ethics!’

This honestly does nothing to placate Hoseok as he eyes the living pieces of flesh.

‘...how does this work?’ he asks carefully as Taeh’yung eagerly walks up to one of the OrTanks watching a lump of meat pulse rather rhythmically. Hoseok is honestly a little afraid. Mainly because he’s afraid Taeh’yung will somehow be strangely inspired by what was around him and might be motivated to do something along the lines of growing and harvesting living tissue in his Cabin or something.

‘We design and genetically modify choice cells to harvest and grow, living without the need of a heart or a brain, cancelling any attachment it may have in the form of a living Being, therefore making our products some of he safest consumer products you could ever purchase.’

It still does nothing to placate Hoseok if he’s being honest.

‘How is it sustained?’ Hoseok asks tentatively.

‘All flesh, all cells need respiration in order to grown, and remain healthy. The process of respiration involves the inhalation of an element that then breaks down to form sugars in the cell, energizing it to maintain cellular function. That is how we are growing our products.’ The Android sounds like he’s memorized books on sales-pitching. ‘Our OrTanks come fully facilitated to support our tech, and can be easily stored into your average kitchen cabinet! Or! You can customize your OrTank here!

‘-oh wow, okay,’ Hoseok, despite the overwhelming information delivered to him so enthusiastically, finds that the entire ordeal was actually handled pretty decently.

While the idea of whole species of Beings having unique and sometimes very bloody and raw diets wasn’t an unusual one, obtaining these products in an ethical and conserving way was something no one wanted to really think about; especially when the “meat” involved came from very sentient species of Beings.

‘I guess that’s a good idea-‘

‘Who is the diet meant for?’ the Android asks politely, holding up a screen out of nowhere as though to check on it.

‘A Vicitra,’ Hoseok replies, seeing no harm in mentioning such a thing considering that the Vicitra, though quite rarely found wandering the galaxy in their own tourism/casual holiday volition, the idea of their existence wasn’t all unknown or regarded with too much disgust or taboo.

‘Perfect! We have a wonderful store of both blood, bone broth, and fatty tissue known to be a favorite amongst our most deadly patrons!’ the Android beams as though nothing brought it more happiness.

‘Can you set apart a month’s ration for each of these please? And how long is the- uh, shelf-life?’ Hoseok reaches over and pulls Taeh’yung to his side, trying to stop him from opening some of the display OrTanks.

‘As long as you have a good portion of the item, you can continue to slowly harvest it, making it’s shelf-life well over 3 months! Of course, you must maintain the hygiene, temperature, and other settings to make sure it thrives.’

Hoseok is really trying not to regard these pulsing lumps of flesh as anything more than what they are: weirdly living lumps of dumb flesh. Bu it’s quite hard to do so.

‘Great- uh, we’ll take those,’ Hoseok manages a small smile and nod.

The Android smiles brightly and says, ‘Wonderful! Might I interest you in some of the specialty liver from-‘

‘No! Nopes! We’re good- just- just the items I requested, thank you,’ Hoseok manages to get out, trying not to sweat.

‘This is cool!’ Taeh’yung exclaims. ‘It’s so smart!’

‘They’re…they’re not- not alive are they?’ Hoseok winces even when he’s asking.

‘Oh, everything is alive Hobi,’ Taeh’yung smiles. ‘But I know what you mean- they’re not.’

‘You’re not lying to me are you?’ Hoseok chuckles weakly.

Taeh’yung just grins at him in reply.

Hoseok is still queasy as they exit the store, pulling along the gravity-lift they had brought with them, with 1 months worth of blood, bone broth, and fatty tissue. Honestly the ingredients in itself wasn’t the matter here. Hoseok has had his fair share of questionable cuisine in his line of work, but to an extent he’s always known what he’s consumed. The “food” they were now pulling along behind them however, came from sources Hoseok would rather not know about.

‘Okay- time to head to the Kitchen Supplies section,’ Hoseok announces, pointing with his chin at Taeh’yung who nods obediently and insists on pulling the handle with Hoseok. Hands overlapping on the handle meant only for one hand, they walk along the wide paths of the Flotsam.

‘Oh-!’ Taeh’yung stops suddenly, causing Hoseok to reel backwards from the abrupt stop of their motion.

‘What is it?’ Hoseok demands, his senses prickling.

Taeh’yung is looking behind them, back into the crowd, eyes a little wide, eyebrows raised up. Then slowly he grins, looking very pleased.

‘Tae? What’s wrong?’ Hoseok looks around, scanning the busy zone.

‘Nothing.’ Taeh’yung replies before nodding in satisfaction. ‘Something familiar.’

‘…is that okay? Is it safe?’ Hoseok asks warily.

‘Do you remember your first ever grounded memory of your home?’ Taeh’yung asks suddenly, walking again.

‘Uh- I guess?’ Hoseok thinks back to high sweltering skies, grassy plains and dry wind. Of the ceramic jars arranged according to size stored high up on the shelves, away from his grabbing hands. He remembers the fabric and pattern and texture of his mother’s skirt, brushing against his face.

‘I guess I’m feeling a bit nostalgic,’ Taeh’yung grins before he exclaims, ‘Aren’t we supposed to get hair-dye?’

‘Oh right-‘

Taeh’yung gestures to the stall to the side, filled with all sorts of supplies for self-care. There are clothes in here too so Hoseok guesses they might as well get everything else on the list here.

‘What do you think about bright red for Yoongi?’ Taeh’yung asks, frowning down at a box set of the aforementioned hair colour.

‘I think we’re trying to go low-key here buggy,’ Hoseok replies as he picks up the tags for industrial-size cleaning agents from the stall. He’s feeling a bit more citrus this time rather than the herbal-aroma they had going inside the ship. ‘Maybe something brown? It’s more natural for Humans anyways.’

‘One of the Human’s I knew had dark red hair,’ Taeh’yung announces. ‘The other had a light golden brown.’

‘Regardless,’ Hoseok chuckles, ‘Let’s end his suffering and get him a brown.’

‘I’m gonna get this for Chim for when his hair grows out,’ Taeh’yung says as though in compensation for Yoongi’s lack of colour as he picks up a pastel-pink box. ‘I think this will look great on him.’
‘Pick something for Jin too. Maybe Namjoon as well?’ Hoseok frowns a little as he speculates.

Working as an agent, Hoseok knew all too well how efficient something as simple as changing hair-colour could be. Especially when you were disguising yourself to hide. It was something he knew well, and something he used to his immense advantage considering his biology.

‘What about Kookie?’

‘I don’t think it’s necessary for him just yet,’ Hoseok smiles. ‘He can keep his hair as it is.’

Taeh’yung nods to that and Hoseok picks out a floral-type based fragrance for the ship’s generic hygiene products.

‘Is he going to stay?’ Taeh’yung asks as he picks up a box of something mixed between purple and silver.

‘Who?’ Hoseok is not sure which he Taeh’yung is referring to.

‘Kookie.’ Taeh’yung clarifies. ‘Will he continue to stay?’

‘I don’t know,’ Hoseok replies honestly. ‘In all honesty, I don’t think he should stay. It’s too dangerous for him with us. But at the same time, it’s dangerous out there. Especially for someone like him.’

Taeh’yung nods slowly, picking up a forest-green colour and tucking it under his arm.

‘Will you?’ Hoseok finds himself asking.

Taeh’yung looks surprised by the question.

‘I know you don’t stay- that you won’t stay,’ Hoseok shrugs. And as he says it, he comes to realize that deep inside he knew this would be the case. Taeh’yung had arrived randomly and integrated himself into the ship without any ado, so it was only logical that he would leave randomly, leaving behind his absence. It makes Hoseok feel strangely empty but also almost relieved at the idea of it.

‘But will you? At least until we finish what we were set out to do.’

Taeh’yung makes a thoughtful face before saying, ‘I need to watch Jinnie.’

‘How is he?’ Hoseok asks carefully. ‘I- Namjoon told me he uh-‘

‘He almost relapsed.’ Taeh’yung states bluntly. ‘If we were late, and if Namjoon hadn’t been there, he wouldn’t be here.’

‘Namjoon? What do you mean?’ Hoseok frowns, remembering how Namjoon had relayed what had happened. Namjoon had very clearly stated how he hadn’t done anything other than carrying Sk’jin back into the ship and had been in the dark about everything that had taken place himself.

‘He helped!’ Taeh’yung smiles before he picks up a tag from the shelf, waving it in the air, ‘Can we get this air-fragrance? I think it’ll be nice if it always smelt like rain!’

‘Eh- I don’t think we have a diffuser-‘

‘-here’s the tag for the diffuser!’ Taeh’yung reaches high up and retrieves the slip.

Hoseok suspects they’ve spent more than they’re supposed to as they exit the Flotsam and Jetsam, dragging behind them a very sizeable “grocery stock” on the gravity-lift plus extra packages that couldn’t fit.

‘I think we need to get help,’ Hoseok mumbles as he eyes the gravity-lift behind them. It was already nearly scraping the floors. They would need to rent one of the public lifts to take all of this back.

‘I can come.’ Yoongi says quietly.

‘No- all three of you stay inside- I’ll call Sk’jin, I think he’s going to be done,’ Hoseok says quickly just as Sk’jin announces he’s done with his assigned task. Good, everything was going smoothly. ‘Sk’jin, could you come help us at the FJ? There’s a lot.’

‘I’m done too- need an extra hand?’ Namjoon chimes in.

‘Yeah- the more the merrier,’ Hoseok shrugs as he directs the lift over to the side so as to not block the wide paths leading out of the Flotsam and Jetsam.

It was a magnificent view, and a much better looking and structured Flotsam and Jetsam compared to many of the FJ’s around the Known Universe. Massive columns of dark crystal-glass unique to the asteroids around Grisial wound up and around the massive chamber. Most of the asteroids around Grisial contained the unique crystal but in varying degrees of purity and quality. The asteroids the Pits were built out of were ones mixed with other heavier elements that allowed the GLA to build within it the way you would a regular Dock. And due to their own natural, albeit weak, gravity- construction wasn’t complicated.

‘Sk’jin’s health-tab just peaked.’ Yoongi announces suddenly.

‘What-?’

‘His position is moving away from the elevators- Namjoon you’re close-’

‘I’m on it- where exactly?’

Hoseok is already leaving the gravity-lift and is ready to make his way up but Taeh’yung pulls him back easily.

‘Tae we need to –’

‘It’s fine.’ The Zhak’gri smiles easily. ‘He’s not in danger. Just a visit.’

‘What-‘

‘Oh. Yes. It’s fine.’

‘What do you mean?’ Hoseok demands, addressing both Taeh’yung and Yoongi.

‘He’ll be fine-‘

‘Yoongi- can you access the surveillance-‘

‘I’m already tracking all of you.’

‘–…oh okay uh-‘

‘Sk’jin is fine.’
‘Jin? Are you all right? What’s happening?’ Hoseok demands, finding that he can’t move away without causing a commotion with the way Taeh’yung is holding onto his hand with more strength than Hoseok was mentally prepared for. Also, Taeh’yung had really large hands.

‘He’s safe-oh-?’ Yoongi sounds decidedly surprised.

‘Um- Namjoon...’ Jimin trails off, also sounding very surprised and then it’s instantly followed by a gasp.

‘What? What is it?!’ Hoseok demands, trying to wriggle his hand out of Taeh’yung’s hold.

‘Maybe um, you should coming-come back to the ship?’ Jimin says carefully and slowly.

‘I’ll support the lift Hobi,’ Taeh’yung tells him with another dazzling smile that Hoseok guesses is supposed to be reassuring. ‘No one will notice!’

It’s touching and comforting that Taeh’yung mentions this effort in being inconspicuous but Hoseok’s senses are tingling and he’s very uncomfortable. Why couldn’t he hear Sk’jin and now Namjoon? But Yoongi is still able to read both of their health-tabs, as well as keep a visual tag on both of them.

‘You’ll see,’ Taeh’yung pleads, ‘Let’s go back!’

It’s the only way Hoseok can quickly gain insight into this so he nods and starts pulling at the lift. Taeh’yung doesn’t let go of their hands but he does somehow manage to place all of their items onto the lift, no indication or glimmer of his abilities gleaming in neon-green at them through the crates and tanks.

‘The bots have delivered the cells. They’re outside the Bay.’ Yoongi reports and then adds, ‘The local authorities are chasing after Sk’jin and Namjoon.’

‘Why?!’ Hoseok demands, feet moving faster as he pulls Taeh’yung and the lift towards the massive elevators.

‘They caused a commotion in public. They are now escaping.’ Yoongi sounds bored and the elevator could probably afford to go faster but there are at least 10 other Beings onboard and they’re all taking their sweet time disembarking on their levels. Hoseok doesn’t care how he’s glaring down the others inside the elevator to the point where a vast majority of innocent stragglers make for an obvious escape on levels and zones they were clearly not headed for.

‘Guys! Hurry and get back- on the ship-!’ Namjoon suddenly announces, the lines cleaning up at once and Hoseok can now hear the two of them clearly on the run.

‘What?! What’s going on again-’ Hoseok groans, wiping at his face with his freehand while Taeh’yung massages his nape as though to soothe him.

‘Do you need backup?’ Yoongi asks, sounding prepared to blow something up.

‘No- no Yoongi, you stay put- we’re coming to you. Jimin activate-‘

Namjoon was ordering them to activate the invisibility-shield, Hoseok’s personal name for the device. That meant they needed to hide now.

‘-I got it!’ Jimin replies, sounding worried and panicked.
‘Pa! Jinnie! What’s wrong-?!’ Taeh’yung gasps out, looking comically worried.

‘Don’t worry about us- just- everyone on the ship!’ Sk’jin pants out, sounding winded.

It doesn’t nothing to make Hoseok worry less.

‘Security is approaching the area, they’re going to surround you. You need to exit the place now.’

‘Where are they?’ Hoseok demands before telling Namjoon, ‘Guys taking any form of public transit will get you spotted. You’ll need to find a way to get through to at least the closest docking platform zone.’

For some reason Sk’jin giggles rather hysterically.

‘-you just need to ascend up to Zone 90 and I can bring the Spardyti to you.’ Yoongi informs them, ‘They’re surrounding your location you can’t-‘

‘Fuck-‘

‘We can’t do anything- unless we fight,’ Sk’jin pants out. ‘And at this point, fighting will lead to more problems. If we just allow ourselves to be captured, and we pretend we were having some dumb love-triangle argument then that could work-‘

Hoseok is not expecting this conversation to turn this way and it actually makes him pause in his glaring competition with the other occupants in the elevator who are now all earnestly backing away from them.

‘Why are you stopping?’ Yoongi demands. ‘4 Officers approaching-‘

‘Where even are they?!’ Hoseok demands as the elevator stops once more to let in a small group of Beings. Hoseok glares them down.

‘They are now hiding at an illicit market.’

‘An illicit market,’ Yoongi states blandly. Hoseok catches sight of the Pit’s authority officers to the side, standing at ease. A thought occurs to him.

‘Can’t the authorities see them too-?’

‘It’s been overlaid,’ Yoongi replies.

‘That was quick-‘ Hoseok all but manages to comment.

‘Not by me,’ Yoongi replies.

‘Then by who-?’ but Hoseok jolts as he realizes they’re only a level away from their destination. Taeh’yung only giggles behind him.

‘You’re a terrible kisser,’ Sk’jin mumbles out of nowhere. It takes Hoseok more than a few seconds to recalibrate his mind to understand and keep up with the rapidity of how things were moving and changing.

‘I’m not paying attention to quality here-‘ is Namjoon’s extraordinary reply.
‘Um-’ Hoseok is so stunned he actually freezes, unable to move as the elevator panel-doors open up.

‘Let me-’

Managing to somewhat recover with the knowledge that getting back to the ship will hopefully clear up all confusion, Hoseok darts out, heading straight for the Užkulisai as Taeh’yung speed-walks behind him, gravity-lift moving faster and higher than normal but there aren’t a lot of Beings around so Hoseok doesn’t heed it much.

‘You can stop kissing they’re out of the area.’

‘WHAT?!’

‘WHO’S KISSING WHO-‘ Taeh’yung demands sounding too happy.

‘Ca-captain and Jin-‘ Jungkook mumbles quietly.

‘WHAT WHY FOR FUCK’S SAKE-‘ Hoseok doesn’t care that he’s literally roaring at this point, causing a few random repair-bots to fall and curl up from where they were mounted to the side of the maintenance-shed.

‘Wow that actually worked,’ he hears Sk’jin state before adding, ‘Don’t look that disgusted-‘

‘Um- I think you should start running-‘ Jimin cuts in unsurely.

‘Please make your way into the 5th stall and ask for the restroom. You can access the pipes from the vents.’ Yoongi orders, sounding annoyed only in a way the Human was capable of.

‘Anything around?’

They arrive at the Užkulisai, the Bay gates opening in advance for him. Jimin is there, eyes wide but not fearful as he stares at one of the screens mounted to the side of the Bay. Jungkook is there too, looking confused but still trying to be helpful.

‘The market is surrounded. They will arrive at your location in 20 seconds again.’ Yoongi replies.

‘Okay we’re in the restroom-‘

‘According to the layout, you should find a large shredder tube-‘

‘Yoongi I don’t think any of us are immune to a shredder tube-‘

‘Wait- I got it.’

‘Uh what-‘

‘What-‘ Hoseok demands at once followed instantly by a nervous, ‘What-‘ from Jimin who greets him with a helpless expression, sleeves rolled up, beanie askew as he activates the invisibility-shield.

‘Kookie help Taeh’yung out!’ Hoseok calls as he runs past the two in the Hangar.

The Vicitra quickly shuffles along, eager to make himself useful inside the ship as Jimin calls after him in surprise.
Hoseok speeds upwards, hearing the alarming sounds of something metallic and hard hitting something else metallic and hard. Yoongi is standing at the Navigator’s Mast, looking at a wide projection of multiple surveillance feeds of some zone inside the Pit, all keyed in on Namjoon and Sk’jin’s position. Or at least where they last were, outside a small restaurant of sorts where half a dozen officers were gathered.

‘Namjoon don’t be an idiot-‘

Hoseok skids to a stop by the Mast.

‘Did you really think I was going to stick my hand in into the blades?’

‘I didn’t know what you were going to do-‘

‘Hand me the dildo-‘

‘The what-?!’ Taeh’yung sounds like he’s about to pass out from glee.

‘THE WHAT-?!’ Hoseok demands.

‘…Namjoon-‘

There’s a strange blip in Namjoon’s health-tab and Hoseok isn’t sure what to make of what he’s seeing.

‘Right- we should get going,‘

‘For fuck’s sake-‘

‘The Officers are outside of the stall- they’re asking about unusual activity. Please hurry the owner is leading them inside.’ Yoongi calls to their attention, eyeing the surveillance feed calmly, as though the fate of the Captain and Communications Manager of their ship didn’t solely depend on how they were going to make it through a shredder tube.

‘Don’t forget the panel-cover.

‘Fucking hell-‘

‘This is madness it’s not going to work-‘ Hoseok wonders why and how Yoongi is so calm in all of this, and why he wasn’t even trying to attempt to help or look for ways to help. ‘We can at least try to shut down the shredder-tube-‘

‘It’s been taken care of.’ Yoongi states quietly. ‘They’re safe.’

Hoseok then realizes that there is more than one line of communication channel open, and it was coming from Sk’jin’s screen the Khol’isa had left behind.

‘Yoongi-‘

‘It’s safe. They’re safe.’ Yoongi looks away from the Table to look Hoseok straight in his eyes.

The lines from both Namjoon and Sk’jin cut almost immediately and Hoseok jumps a little as the officers break down the door leading into the restroom Sk’jin and Namjoon had been hiding in seconds ago. It’s clearly empty judging by everyone’s shocked reactions.

‘Will someone explain what this is?’ Hoseok demands rather than ask.
‘The explanation will arrive after Namjoon and Sk’jin get back.’ Yoongi declares, making no sense before adding: ‘Because I want some answers too.’

It’s another half an hour before Namjoon and Sk’jin’s channels connect and an additional 15 minutes before the two show up in their docking area, shuffling towards the ship at weirdly furious pace.

By the time the Hangar Bay gates open, they’re both close enough for them to just make them out. And in all honesty, Hoseok had been expecting them to be covered in unmentionables. But they’re both clean, and even from this distance, carried a strong smell of chlorine. But whatever they had gone through, hadn’t left them unscathed.

Namjoon and Seokjin look incredibly terrible but it’s Namjoon that takes the spotlight.

Jimin gasps while Jungkook freezes completely, eyes widening worrisomely. Taeh’yung actually wails as he sprints forward and out of the Hangar Bay and quickly ushers the approaching two inside quickly.

Namjoon’s arm looks…bad, mildly put. Added with his previous…injuries? Damages? It makes him look especially woebegone.

‘So-‘

‘Ah right, here-‘ Sk’jin reaches into his jacket pocket and retrieves something and throws it at Yoongi who just steps into the Bay. Hoseok realizes, with some delay and a lot of feelings that can only be translated into “?!?!?!?!?!?!” when he recognizes the item the Khol’isa had thrown at the Human.

Yoongi stares, rather blankly Hoseok might add, at the clear crystal dildo in his hands.

Jimin crouches on the ground, face buried in his hands, the tips of his ears burning red. Taeh’yung is wheezing while Namjoon walks over to Hoseok, the strong smell of chlorine actually making Hoseok’s eyes water. The Kutsoglerin sighs and says, ‘I can’t believe we were saved by fucking crystal dildos.’ before walking away and out of the Bay.

Yoongi then later, with deadly speed and accuracy hurls it at Sk’jin. But the Khol’isa is saved the concussion when Taeh’yung casually swipes it off of the air and cradling the dildo and then rubbing it against his face, much to Jimin’s intense chagrin, exclaims, ‘It’s so pretty can I have it?’.

Hoseok helps Namjoon in the shower, the latter being unable to do a lot now without the presence of a functional arm.

‘Is the ship okay with just Yoongi watching the Bridge?’

‘He’ll be fine- Sk’jin isn’t there,’ Hoseok snorts as he severs the bionic ligament still holding up random fragments of Namjoon’s useless arm. He knows Namjoon wouldn’t necessarily feel the pain, but he still internally winces.

‘Can you fix this?’ Hoseok asks, gesturing to his arm.
'I should be able to. But we’ll need to place special orders,’ Namjoon grunts out. ‘Might place them now, see if we can get them by the end of this trip. Seems unlikely though…kinda rare.’

‘Will that cause some form of alarm with the Jury- if it’s that rare, they might be keeping an eye out on places that distribute the things you need.’ Hoseok theorizes.

‘It’s rare, but not that rare.’ Namjoon replies as he holds up another severed ligament for Hoseok to cut, ‘But that’s a good thing to keep in mind- we’ll look for the items carefully.’

The texture is odd- almost fleshy, but strangely sharp on the blades of the surgery-scissors he was using. Hoseok knows that if he were to look into this bit of bionic flesh, he would find living cells imbued with identical crafted cells made of silicon, carbon, and if Hoseok isn’t mistaken, Tungsten.

‘So…the Long-Huon.’

‘Someone from Sk’jin’s past- they’re…they’re connected by the Nightmare Planet. I think he’s the one who got him out.’

‘I thought it was Taeh’yung who got him out? Or at least I assumed it was?’ Hoseok questions.

‘It’s complicated. And honestly something that I don’t think we need to know.’

‘Like what Sk’jin had said?’

Namjoon sighs before nodding as though it pained him to agree to the fact that Sk’jin had been correct.

‘Yoongi seems to know him too.’ Hoseok supplies. ‘What do you reckon about that?’

‘Well, Sk’jin, Taeh’yung, and Yoongi have all, at one point, met and “bonded” I guess,’ Namjoon quirks his fingers in quotation marks with his good hand. ‘Maybe Yoongi met them at the time?’

‘So…what did he want?’

‘To talk. Sk’jin hasn’t been replying. He seems to have promised something to him.’ Namjoon replies slowly before pointing at a flappy bit of bionic flesh. ‘That can be used to wrap around the tubes up here.’

Namjoon’s entire biological function is fascinating to say the least. Fascinating, and utterly heart-wrenching when you realize the pain and horror the Kutsoglerin went through with every single “correction” made to his being.

‘Are you sure it doesn’t hurt?’ Hoseok asks tentatively as they get ready to seal the arm just above the elbow.

‘I don’t really have pain receptors,’ Namjoon shrugs before adding. ‘I used to.’

Hoseok’s stomach churns.

‘Yeah? What happened?’

‘I asked the Yishengs to destroy them.’ Namjoon replies easily. ‘I can feel and sense yeah, but I guess pain doesn’t register the way it’s supposed to.’

Namjoon probably only sensed a slight discomfort, an awareness that informed him that something had happened, and that it was probably not a good thing. And Hoseok doesn’t blame Namjoon for choosing to have his pain-receptors removed.

The entire remaining Kutsoglerin species, and not just Namjoon, had more than enough of pain.

‘It’s fine,’ Namjoon smiles at him, a small but genuine one. ‘Shit like this happens right?’

Hoseok smiles back, ignoring the sudden burning flare that erupts in his palms, ‘Yeah. It does.’

When they exit the en suite, they’re both taken aback to find Taeh’yung, Jungkook, and Jimin waiting for them at Namjoon’s door room.

3 pairs of wide eyes regard them and before either Namjoon or Hoseok can say anything, Taeh’yung honest to goodness bursts into tears and Jungkook follows shortly.

‘Oh uh-‘ Namjoon is lost.

Hoseok swiftly makes himself scarce, holding up the bowl of bionic remains to chest level as though using it as leverage against the 3 at the doorway. They immediately part to give him room before converging inside. And from the sounds of it, Taeh’yung has leapt onto Namjoon judging by the startled grunt and quite rebuke from Jimin.

‘Are those Namjoon’s bits?’ Sk’jin asks, poking his head out of his room.

‘Yeah- gonna put them in suspension-‘

‘Hey- you were in there for a while.’ Sk’jin wiggles his eyebrows at Hoseok, ‘A sudden thought occurred to me and I think you might know-‘

‘-I don’t know and honestly it really isn’t our business to know,’ Hoseok rolls his eyes before making his way down.

‘You don’t want to know if he has a metallic di-‘

‘Most of the Kutsoglerin species were systematically neutered as a means of permanent genocide during their invasion. It is not a matter to laugh about.’ Yoongi states, appearing behind them almost as though he had materializes on the stairs out of thin air.

‘Fucking Spaces-!’ Sk’jin jumps, nearly crashing into Hoseok. ‘For fuck’s sake Yoongi-!‘

‘Are we ready to leave?’ Hoseok asks.

‘Yes. Waiting for Namjoon’s order.’ The Human replies before turning to address Sk’jin who looks mildly confused at this direct attention.

‘As of now the Kutsoglerin population is at an all time low with fertility levels dropping to an all time low and chances of repopulation nearly impossible,’ Yoongi reels off, unbothered by Sk’jin’s continued muttering. ‘Unless of course, by using AI technology.’

‘Is that why he looked so thrown off when he heard the Omhlophe were in Kutsoglera?’ Sk’jin ruminates out loud as they reach the Lobby downstairs. ‘Makes sense.’

‘I thought you’d be more sympathetic about the topic,’ Hoseok comments, glancing at the Khol’isa. ‘Considering your species?’

Sk’jin rolls his eyes before replying, ‘The Universe could do without the Khol’isa- we’re honestly
Khol’isa can die,’ Yoongi states simply. ‘They are not immortal.’

‘Yeah but can we stay dead?’ Sk’jin asks though it sounds too much like a wish to Hoseok’s ears.

‘We could try.’ Is Yoongi’s reply.

Not sure if Yoongi was joking or actually being honest, but it makes Sk’jin laugh so Hoseok guesses it’s all right.

‘I see you and Taeh’yung went all out while shopping,’ Sk’jin says after he’s done laughing, leaning against Yoongi who is tilted, as though encouraging the Khol’isa to maybe not lean his entire weight on him. Sk’jin of course completely ignores him.

‘Yeah- Taeh’yung got all of you hair-colour,’ Hoseok shrugs as he carefully places the bionic bits into a jar with suspension liquid. ‘I just spared you rainbow hair Yoongi, there’s no need to thank me.’

‘I wasn’t going to.’

Sk’jin nearly falls on the ground as he laughs again.

‘What colour?’ Yoongi asks as though unable to help himself.

‘Back to your original- or as similar as possible,’ Hoseok replies with a grin. Yoongi doesn’t thank him but the small nod in his direction is as close as it gets.

‘So- so you found Jungkook’s food?’ Sk’jin manages to get out, clearing his throat as he pulls himself up straight and away from Yoongi who Hoseok has the strong suspicion must have pinched or poked Sk’jin away from himself.

‘Lisai please prepare incubator and set to preservation mode,’ Hoseok orders before replying, ‘Yeah- it’s actually quite interesting the way-‘

A sudden bell rings.

An honest to goodness bell chime.

‘That wasn’t me I swear on Namjoon’s nonexistent metallic dick,’ Sk’jin says at once, raising his hands up.

‘I think someone is at the door,’ Yoongi states.

‘What-?’ Hoseok reaches over to the side, tapping the screen awake and pulling up their surveillance camera tabs.

And just like Yoongi had said, someone was indeed standing just outside towards the back of the ship, arms crossed and tapping their feet impatiently.

‘I…was not expecting him to literally come to the ship…’ Sk’jin trails off.

‘Is this-‘

‘Sk’jin!’
Namjoon appears at the stairs, trailed closely by the others.

‘Why is he-‘ Namjoon calls out loudly.

‘I don’t know!’ Sk’jin yells back as he exits the Bay. ‘I’m going to find out!’

‘Who is that-?!’ Jimin is asking, making his way towards Yoongi before Taeh’yung bowls past in a flash of green, past Namjoon, past Sk’jin, and through the doorway.

Hoseok hastens to look over at the screen and is just in time to see Taeh’yung knock the unsuspecting Being outside the ship down to the floor with a high-pitched shriek.

After some confusion, a bit more yelling, and some hasty explanation from Sk’jin, Namjoon, and Taeh’yung, they find themselves all sitting awkwardly at the Lobby, smiling strained smiles at the stranger who was nursing a scratched arm from the fall he took with Taeh’yung.

For a fraction of a second there’s an aggressive silent argument between Sk’jin and Namjoon from across the Lobby. It clearly amuses the stranger, a Long-Huon if Hoseok isn’t mistaken.

The skin around his face is smooth but close to his jaw and temples, it’s textured with raised bumps that Hoseok knows are tiny scales. His hands which were not covered are long, ending in trimmed talons. But most characteristic are his eyes- sulfuric yellow with pupils shaped like narrow slits and every time he blinked, a thinner and slightly transparent secondary lid closes first.

Jungkook is both wary and intrigued, watching the Long-Huon from the stairs. To Hoseok’s surprise, Yoongi had moved there, almost as though to keep the young Vicitra company.

No one speaks and the awkwardness is mounting with a severity that makes Hoseok want to open a window and scream out of it.

‘So…’ the Long-Huon smiles carefully, eyeing all of them in turn. His posture is easy and relaxed, but it’s practiced and as an agent himself, Hoseok recognizes someone who has undergone intense training.

‘Captain, we are at green.’ Lisai calls out suddenly, making everyone in the room jump a little.

‘Uh right-‘

‘I’ll go.’ Yoongi announces from the stairs.

Hoseok is about to volunteer instead, because honestly he can’t deal with the awkwardness in the room anymore. He could instead just watch from a screen upstairs. But Zitao jumping violently when he realizes that Yoongi is in the room makes him pause. The Long-Huon looks unsure, as though thinking back to when and how Yoongi could have appeared when he had carefully scanned the room just seconds ago.

‘Fucking Spaces-‘ the Long-Huon lets out a long slew of curses in his own language before regarding the Human with confusion as well as recognition.

‘Nice to meet you again.’ The Human nods as he makes to go up the stairs, pausing at the base.

‘Uh-‘ the Long-Huon is understandable confused.

‘I was sent to assassinate you while you were transiting between Galūnė and Šerdesas 4 sols ago.’ Yoongi states bluntly, making every Being in the Bridge, other than Sk’jin, gawk at the Human. ‘I apologize for that. I did my best to distract the GI away from you so that you could escape.’

‘…that was YOU!!?’ the Long-Huin shrieks, mouth agape.

‘Okay so yeah, past aside,’ Sk’jin interrupts quickly. ‘Yoongi if you could start taking us out- we uh- will talk here.’

Yoongi nods and goes up the stairs, immediately followed by Jungkook who climbs up on all fours, still throwing Zitao suspicious looks.

‘This is Zitao,’ Sk’jin introduces shortly. ‘We were together in the Nightmare Planet until 4 sols ago.’

‘Hi!’ the Long-Huin, Zitao waves shortly and Taeh’yung beams brightly, waving both hands at him.

‘Okay why are you here? I said I would contact you,’ Sk’jin frowns.

‘And miss talking to him?’ Zitao nods at Namjoon who bristles. ‘No way.’

Sk’jin looks seconds away from also opening a window and screaming out of it.

‘Okay first of all I need to talk to Sk’jin alone- and with Taeh’yung,’ Zitao announces as he stands.

‘No,’ Namjoon cuts in smoothly. ‘All discussions will be held here-’

‘I’m not here to discuss any of this with you-’

‘What needs to be discussed can be said here in front of all of us,’ Namjoon says through grit teeth and a clenched jaw.

Zitao levels him with a glare that’s so unimpressed and so like Sk’jin’s, Hoseok wonders who learnt it from whom.

‘Fine then,’ he shrugs before sitting back down and Sk’jin’s eyes widen in obvious panic.

‘Wait-’

‘Sk’jin is dying.’ The Long-Huin states flatly.

Hoseok’s stomach drops, his skin cold.

Namjoon looks like he’s experiencing the same thing, eyes wide as he blinks rather slowly at the Long-Huin. However, both Jimin and Taeh’yung just look down, heads bowed a little where they sat.

‘We know he’s not well- it’s why we’ve ordered the UV-Bed-’

‘No metal-brain,’ Zitao rolls his eyes. ‘He’s supposed to keep in contact with me about the progress of his living state. It’s why I’m here. He hasn’t reported back to me about anything for nearly half a sol now- he literally vanished from any form of trace; last I knew, he was back at that place- so of course I immediately came here to check. But…’ Zitao looks over at Taeh’yung who gives him a small smile which doesn’t sit well with Hoseok.

Because Taeh’yung looks strangely defeated.
‘I guessed as much,’ Zitao sighs before sending a glare at Sk’jin who huffs, throwing his hands up and saying, ‘I’mfine- I am healthy, functional, and most of all I am on a mission- you of all Beings should know how important this is to me. What it means to me.’

Hoseok shares a look with Jimin who, like Hoseok, doesn’t understand what Sk’jin means by this.

‘Listen- I don’t care what it is that you’re doing on this mission but-’

‘Zitao it’s them.’ Sk’jin says quietly and carefully.

The expression on Zitao’s face changes abruptly.

‘W—what?’

‘It’s something…I think it’s something they left behind,’ Sk’jin explains slowly before Namjoon stands up and steps over to Sk’jin as though to physically stop him from speaking more.

‘What are you-’

‘Zitao was there,’ Sk’jin explains, not sparing the Kutsoglerin a glance. ‘He knows about this, possibly even more than we do.’

Zitao, amidst his shock, realizes that they’re all staring at him and squirms a little in discomfort.

‘But they’re gone— with Earth, with— with all of them, they’re gone.’ Zitao states firmly.

‘They are,’ Taeh’yung says from where he’s sitting. ‘This is something else- but very similar to them— and…’ he glances at Namjoon before adding rather lamely, ‘—and maybe more.’

Zitao eyes all of them carefully before he squints up at Namjoon.

‘Does this have something to do with Admiral K’mara?’

There is no reaction from Namjoon who says in an even tone, ‘If you tell us what you know, we can come to an agreement and share our information with each other.’

Zitao doesn’t blink as he stares at Namjoon, appraising the Kutsoglerin with a single raised-eyebrow. The ship hums to life and a slight jolt is all the indication they have that they’re in the air.

‘Namjoon.’

Sk’jin is staring at Namjoon, his expression serious, his tone of voice has a slight hint of pleading in it.

‘Trust me.’

Everyone, including Zitao it seemed, all hold their breaths, anticipating Namjoon’s reply.

Then slowly, Namjoon nods once.

Sk’jin suddenly starts speaking in Long-Huon with a rapidity that sounded and felt more native than Standard.

It’s not too surprising, considering how most pirates, especially from the past millenniums were a collection of Beings discarded from modern Standard societies of the Universe. They spoke a huge variety of languages, and Hoseok guesses Sk’jin rarely spoke it aboard his own ship when he was captain unless it was to GLA officers or even to other pirating clans.

Namjoon is clearly uncomfortable by this but then Yoongi quietly chimes in, ‘He’s relaying the general summary of our mission and what has happened so far. He hasn’t mentioned the details regarding Jimin’s planet and identity.’

Namjoon visibly relaxes, though only a tiny bit.

Jimin turns in his seat to face Taeh’yung, quietly murmuring a small question in his own tongue to which Taeh’yung replies with a small nod of his head. Jimin nods at that before getting up and leaving the Lobby, heading upstairs.

Namjoon doesn’t move, doesn’t say anything as Sk’jin speaks without pause, no comment or question coming from Zitao other than to nod a few times or shake his head a few times. His expression is grave and occasionally surprised. Yoongi makes his way down, quietly slipping into their midst and standing behind where Taeh’yung sat to the side. Glancing at the screen inside the Bay that was still activated, Hoseok catches a glimpse of Jimin sitting at the Table, Jungkook sitting on the floor nearby.

After what feels like a whole hour, Sk’jin finally stops.

‘Okay,’ Zitao says simply. ‘Can I see Yoongi?’

‘Yes.’

Zitao jumps again, hand going up to his chest at once as he curses again.

‘Sk’jin tells me you have a mark on your back. Can I see it?’ the Long-Huon asks.

Yoongi nods and pulls his shirt off as he turns around.

It’s unnerving no matter how many times Hoseok has seen it. That, and the old tissue scars, skin lesions, and permanent discolouration that spread all over the Human’s back.

Zitao eyes it carefully, leaning in a little.

‘This has always been on you?’

‘I believe so. All of the the GI agents had it,’ Yoongi replies.

‘Thank you,’ Zitao steps back and Yoongi pulls his shirt back on.

‘Okay- so no one freak out but I’m going to call a friend who will be able to clear up matters,’ Zitao declares.

‘…where are we picking him up-‘

Hoseok has never worked with anyone from Dakaṣayai before but he’s definitely heard of their abilities, and how the discovery of their planet and subsequently their species, lead to highest-ever success rate of undercover agency within the Underverse after the adoption of Hoseok’s own species into the Venture Unit.

And even though Hoseok is aware of their existence, having one teleport feet from you was startling, regardless of any advanced warning.

Hoseok immediately recognizes him and this recognition is reflected in the Dakaṣayai’s eyes as well as he glances at Hoseok. He hasn’t changed much- only his hair is a little longer, a softer shade of brown. Every inch of his visible skin is covered in the distinctive Dakašayaii tattoo pattern, unique to each individual.

Dakašayai was an intriguing planet, only quite recently listed into the Known Universe. The species from Dakašayai were even more intriguing with the ability to actually teleport - a phenomena that not even the Yisheng could really explain but knew was heavily intertwined with Time itself. They were a very welcome addition to any work-space they decided to engage in, with their intelligence, adaptability, and not to mention, teleportation. If Hoseok isn’t mistaken, his name is Kai.

He nods once in greeting before breaking out into what Hoseok recognizes as the “professional face” and smiles politely, ignoring the stunned expressions of everyone in the room.

‘Hello. My name is Kai,’ he introduces himself. ‘It’s nice to meet you-?!’

Taeh’yung leaps at him, arms wrapped around him in a strong hug.

‘Jonginnieeeeee!’ the Zhak’gri squeals. ‘It’s so good to see you!’

Kai looks stunned before he breaks out into a much more genuine smile.

‘Hi Taeh’yung- it’s good to see you again too.’

‘Oh Spaces is Baek with you?’ Taeh’yung makes himself small, literally vibrating with happiness.

‘No- he’s visiting his home-planet right now,’ Kai tells him. ‘I’m sure if he knew he would have insisted on coming.’

Taeh’yung beams even brighter.

‘Uh-‘

‘This is Kai,’ Zitao introduces with a lazy wave of his hand. ‘A friend.’

Kai gives Zitao an amused look before he nods and says, ‘I have been briefed on what’s happened-‘

‘-you mean you eavesdropped,’ Sk’jin states flatly.

‘Eavesdropped-?!’ Namjoon stutters, ‘How?!’

‘Oh don’t worry! You’re still very much very invisible! Well you were!’ Kai hastily says, ‘I mean- we just followed Zitao’s concentration-‘

‘There’s no need to go into details what you need to know is that we are not actively following you or tracking you- due to my connection with Sk’jin I can normally hone in on where he is, and how he’s doing.’ Zitao cuts in smoothly. ‘He can do the same, but seeing how surprised he was to see me it’s clearly-‘

‘-kid please-‘

‘-can you not call me that here-‘

‘Can we get back to the topic at hand,’ Hoseok calls with a frown. ‘Seeing as you now know the details of our mission, as an agent to another, can we trust that you will not inform on us?’
Kai regards him with a serious look before stating, ‘I have no ties with the Venture Unit, or any other organization. I only answer to my family; and by revealing what you are doing, would hurt mine. So no, I will not reveal you. Can I expect the same from you?’

Hoseok nods.

‘The organization, or the Beings you have described,’ Kai begins with a nod towards Sk’jin, ‘are not the Akramanese- they were not born of what the Yisheng’s created- but are instead what we have gathered are Beings they themselves created, or took and reformed.’

‘The Omhlophe?’

‘I did not know they had a name, but they were there.’ Kai nods.

‘Where?’ Hoseok inquires.

‘When the Akramanese were made known to us, we were captured and taken aboard their ship.’ Kai begins before he pauses as though wondering how to plainly state everything in the simplest way possible.

‘I was taken aboard the ship,’ Kai explains, his tone is still light, his expression carefully controlled and his posture is “relaxed”. ‘I woke up in a large circular chamber, surrounded by…by many many Beings, afloat and asleep within their units like OrTanks. I do not know what we were doing there, why were placed there- but we were soon taken out and into a medical facility.’

Kai speaks carefully, purposefully editing his words to leave out certain things- mainly names and details about what he saw and what he heard. Hoseok doesn’t know if this is because he doesn’t trust them, or because he doesn’t want to speak it out loud.

And Hoseok understands the latter. Because he has seen and heard things that he would never speak out loud- never allow it to be heard by others, to let them, by connection, associate imaginable horror and evil with the words he spoke aloud.

‘Other than the Akramanese, I saw others- I did not know who they were, but they were working under the instruction of the Akramanese. They were in charge of torture without clear intention.’ Kai explains. ‘They appeared aware and were participating in their activities. Who or what they were was unclear to me then, and is still unclear to me now.’

Hoseok internally winces.

‘Did they look like this?’ Namjoon taps along his screen until he pulls up images of the Omhlophe, taken from their various side encounters, including the line they had received of their order to meet at Ynqaba.

Kai looks at the projections carefully and so does Zitao.

‘The masks weren’t there before,’ he says after a while. ‘The one I saw- she…she wore no mask. But she was white- very similar to this.

‘I’m sorry but how do we know this isn’t a convenient fabrication-‘ Namjoon begins, eyeing Kai carefully.

‘He’s not lying.’

Jimin appears by the stairs, Jungkook crouched behind him, peeking past his legs at the scene.
‘There is no lie in his Soul.’ He smiles before adding, ‘There is no lie within a star of two.’

Kai’s expression changes completely, as though blown away before he smiles what Hoseok can see is a very genuine one. He bows elegantly towards Jimin who flushes, hands violently waving as though trying to stop him.

Zitao elbows Kai lightly and the latter continues, ‘We were rescued, and taken back to be healed. That was when we realized that something strange had happened- something wrong had been done to one of us.’

Kai, with some hesitance pulls out a screen from his inner pocket before setting up a small holographic projection of a still image.

The image in it looks very much like Yoongi’s back, an indented line runs down the spine.

‘This wasn’t there before,’ Kai announces. ‘When we came back, his back appeared like this, with no explanation or indication of how it got there.’

Jimin and Yoongi have stepped up closer, the former with a confused expression.

‘And now?’ Jimin inquires.

‘It’s gone. After the Akramanese were destroyed, it vanished.’ Kai replies with a shrug.

Jimin frowns at that before looking at Yoongi almost helplessly. Yoongi doesn’t comment, only stares at the back quietly.

‘Human?’ is all he says.

Kai blinks in surprise.

‘Yes…so are you?’ the Dakaṣayaii asks carefully.

Yoongi nods before he turns to look at Jungkook.

‘We’re the same. To an extent.’

‘Can I see?’ Kai asks.

Yoongi nods, pulling up his shirt to reveal his back again. Jimin says something to Jungkook who nods a little slowly before he too pulls up his shirt.

Kai’s expression is closed-off, his eyes dark. He looks at Yoongi’s back and then at Jungkook’s who lowers his shirt immediately again.

‘Excuse me.’

And startling Jungkook, Kai vanishes just as he had appeared.

‘What was that-’ Namjoon begins, standing in alarm, expression suspicious.

‘Please wait-’ Zitao is saying, standing as well, his hand reaching up to tap at his ear, clearly listening to someone over his Comm-Device that blinks a little.
Namjoon is quick to pull Sk’jin over to the side.

‘I hope you know what you’re doing,’ Namjoon breathes out quietly. ‘I’m aware that you trust them. I recognize Kai myself- Hoseok and I have seen him during the Court trials- and I am aware of his connection to the Gaia Case. But they’re too close- and he’s able to see where you are- they can follow us here.’

‘-it’s fine,’ Sk’jin says quietly and calmly, not looking away from Namjoon’s determined gaze. ‘Trust me on this.’

‘What reason have you given me to trust you?’ Namjoon asks through gritted teeth.

‘This is how I’m earning your trust,’ Sk’jin replies, breaking their stare to glance over at Hoseok before adding, ‘This is me helping.’

Namjoon looks away from Sk’jin to also glance at Hoseok, as though waiting for him to give his say.

But before Hoseok can say or do anything, he’s saved the need to referee Namjoon’s and Sk’jin’s argument by the reappearance of Kai, but this time, he brings someone else with him.

Hoseok recognizes him too- he’s read his files and was one of the few thousands of Humans who survived what happened on Earth the day the Akramanese had attacked their planet. Taeh’yung squeals in delight, waving violently but not jumping him like he did Kai.

‘Hello my name is Do Kyungsoo and I am co-Navigator of the Stravechi Nava,’ the Human introduces himself in a clear and oddly deep voice. Hoseok wildly wonders if this is a Human trait: short, deep voice, a deadpan stare. ‘I was told that another Human was onboard here and had a curious mark down his back.’

Yoongi steps from the side at that, again startling Zitao who curses under his breath, making Sk’jin give him an amused smile.

‘I am genetically Human but have no personal memory of Earth save from Yoongi’s memories.’ The Human states bluntly.

Do Kyungsoo frowns a bit at that, head tilting a little. He looks around at them, no surprise registering on his face as he studies each of them.

If Hoseok isn’t mistaken, one of them probably had an Iris or something equivalent to that.

‘Why is this important to you?’ Namjoon asks.

‘When we were taken by the Akramanese, we were subjected to experimental practices,’ Kyungsoo states flatly.

It was most definitely a Human thing.

‘I don’t know what they did to me, but I left the ship with an indent on my back,’ Kyungsoo explains. ‘It disappeared when the Akramanese were destroyed.’

‘How?’ Jimin asks, thoroughly confused.

‘I don’t know,’ Kyungsoo shrugs. ‘We still don’t know.’

‘So Yoongi,’ Zitao speaks, addressing the former GI agent. ‘You were born out of those OrTanks?’
'I believe so,' Yoongi replies, 'I have no exact memory of it. I was only aware when a GLA officer by the name of Zhoumi applied an Android Core and installed it in me.'

The reactions from this statement on all three of the guests mirror the same level of shock, confusion, and anger.

‘Z-Zhoumi?’ Zitao repeats before turning on Sk’jin who immediately raises his hands up, also equally shocked.

‘I didn’t know,’ the Khol’isa manages to get out, eyes wide.

‘How do you know of him?’ Kyungsoo asks, pulling himself together.

‘He personally hired me to carry out duties on his behalf. I worked for him for a total of 7 sols.’ Yoongi replies. ‘He took interest in me and gave me my name.’

‘You mentioned…’ Kyungsoo looks at him curiously. ‘You mentioned that you have no personal memories of Earth, except for Yoongi’s memories- what do you mean by this?’

Namjoon twitches at this but doesn’t say anything.

‘I believe I was made in the image of the Human Being Min Yoongi of Earth.’ Yoongi replies. ‘While I may be genetically identical to him, I do not carry his soul, or his mind in me. But his memories appear to me in Dreams. And I can feel his Heart too.’

Kyungsoo pales, blinking hard for a moment. Kai standing next to him reacts the same but a few seconds delayed, before he glances down at Kyungsoo. The latter twitches, something that was like a reaction- maybe a nervous tick, before he scratches at his arm, revealing some of the skin. It’s brief but Hoseok catches sight of black lines like tattoos spread over his skin, identical to the ones of Kai’s arms.

‘What all do you see?’ Kai asks.

‘Most of his memories are foggy,’ Yoongi replies, ‘The ones I remember most accurately and most vividly are the months before his death. Before the Akramanese took him away.’

Kyungsoo studies Yoongi carefully, a strange expression on his face, lips slightly parted. Then he looks at Jungkook who looks away almost immediately, nervously fidgeting.

‘And you found Jungkook in Ynqaba, but he’s not one of the GI?’ Kyungsoo asks.

‘No,’ Sk’jin replies a little tensely. ‘In fact, him being here, how and where we found him, in relation to the Omhlophe is why I wanted to really speak to you. To all of you.’

Zitao nods immediately at that, standing straighter as he begins speaking in a clear voice, ‘I want to help you understand who and what those Beings are, and how they exist, considering the Akramanese are no longer existent, what are the Beings you’ve reported?’

‘I also understand that there is more to this than you can tell us,’ Kai states plainly. ‘And we respect that.’

‘Will you join us?’ Jimin asks, the seriously regality in his tone of voice takes everyone by surprise. ‘We would benefit in a- a union of our knowledge, technology, and identical- uh, ambition, to come to the truth. Will you join us?’
Kai is the one who speaks up after Kyungsoo and Zitao exchange glances.

‘We can’t.’ he says simply. ‘What happened 4 sols ago lead to-…lead to many things. It resulted in more than any of us ever wanted to experience.’

‘Does K’mara have something to do with this,’ Hoseok asks.

Kai nods, ‘We made an agreement- no one from any of the organizations would come to us or seek us, and we in turn would leave everything behind.’

Hoseok nods.

‘What are you looking for? Information? Data? Footage?’ Kai asks in turn. ‘It would be impossible to access the deep-state database.’

Namjoon agrees with a nod before stating, ‘I’m meeting with someone I used to know from when I used to work as an Information Analyst. I’ve asked them to look into any information behind the Omhlophe, based on the locations of their known whereabouts and captured imagery. I’ve also sent inquiries regarding the planet of Ynqaba and possible foul-play from the Yishengs and the Venture Unit.’

There’s no surprise at his announcement from the three, instead they nod as he speaks.

‘I sent them a message. I’m waiting for their response.’

‘I can look into that as well, I can contact my former Information Analyst,’ Kai nods. ‘Broaden the search.’

‘Are they safe?’ Hoseok asks at once.

‘Absolutely. They were the ones who hid me.’

Hoseok trusts in that immediately.

‘We cannot help you or join you in this- but what information or data we can access or send to you, we will,’ Kai concludes.

‘You mentioned before that you were headed to Bhumi,’ Zitao comments, glancing all over the room.

Hoseok sees the way Kyungsoo’s expression shifts slightly at that.

‘We are,’ Namjoon replies, ‘As stated by our mission.’

‘There’s nothing there anymore,’ Zitao frowns. ‘It’s nothing more than an abandoned planet- some pirates go there I think but it’s too far out for any purpose.

‘We are aware,’ Namjoon replies, glancing at Jimin quickly before adding, ‘But our mission-‘

‘I get it,’ Zitao nods before regarding the Kutsoglerin carefully and then over to Jimin. ‘Can’t stray from the mission right?’

Sk’jin snorts.

‘So you found Jungkook in Ynqaba? How?’ Kyungsoo asks.
‘We did,’ Hoseok replies. ‘He was a prisoner held by the locals.’

‘Were there others?’

‘None that we saw no,’ Hoseok replies.

‘What…what do you plan on doing?’ Kyungsoo asks quietly.

‘What do you mean?’ Sk’jin asks, a little defensively. Zitao raises his hand, drawing attention to himself as he locks Sk’jin with a frank expression.

‘I don’t know where you’re headed right now, or what your purpose is,’ Zitao tells them simply, ‘But I know that this is no place for someone so young- or for someone so strangely linked to this.’

They all glance at Jungkook who is sitting higher up on the stairs, a bit too far to properly hear them though Hoseok wouldn’t put it past the Vicitra to overhear their every word.

‘We can take him, and keep him in a safe place. Allow him to grow in a place where he would be safe, no one would question his place.’ Kyungsoo states before saying in a serious tone, ‘This is…very closely linked to events that should have never taken place. And lives were lost- innocent lives, Beings who should have continued living in this Time were taken from us. I understand you want to protect him. But you know that he will be safer away from all of this.’

Hoseok agrees.

Jungkook would be safer away from this ship.

Safer, cared for by Beings who were not all damaged or twisted or just so disassociated with all of Life. Jungkook deserved a chance- after all he went through, after the life he’s lead, Jungkook deserved the life none of them ever got to live.

‘We can’t make these decisions for him,’ Sk’jin says tersely. ‘It’s up to Jungkook to decide what he wants to do. Where he wants to go.’

‘Could you give us some time to explain?’ Namjoon asks.

‘Of course,’ Zitao nods. ‘We’ll uh-‘ he looks at the other two who give him identical looks of don’t look at me I don’t know before he says, ‘-uh look at…your Medical Bay.’

He fidgets awkwardly for a moment before he steps inside the Bay, followed by both Kai and Kyungsoo- the former loudly stating how wonderful the Bay was.

Hoseok catches amused looks from Namjoon and Jimin. Sk’jin on the other hand has a blank expression on his face, head bowed a moment before he walks over to where Jungkook was sitting by the stairs. They all follow after the Khol’isa and settle around in a loose semi-circle. Jungkook shuffles downwards, expression expectant and a little confused.

‘Hey Kookie,’ Sk’jin smiles, crouching next to Jungkook. ‘I want to be honest with you.’

Jungkook looks at all of them, confusion even more evident on his face.

‘We…we are not good Beings. We are not…we are not doing good things,’ Sk’jin begins bluntly. ‘We’re dangerous- what we’re doing is dangerous- even more so for you, for Yoongi, and for Jimin. We are running from a danger we don’t understand, towards a destination we do not understand or see. Most of us…most of us don’t trust each other.’
There’s a short laugh from the Khol’isa before he continues. ‘But you- you’re not like us. You were born into a loving family, a caring home. You were pulled out of that, and your life was changed. But…but that doesn’t mean you can’t hope to find something like that again- or to have a safe and healthy life, away from danger, away from pain, from hunger. And if you go with my friend Tao, he can help you find that.’

Hoseok, to his horror finds his throat tight, eyes almost burning as though threatening to spill tears. Jimin is in obvious pain, lips pressed down tight to the point of appearing bloodless. Yoongi stands behind him, watching silently, his expression closed-off. Oddly enough, Taeh’yung is also channeling the same expression, but instead he’s watching Sk’jin rather than Jungkook.

‘And we don’t want to tell you what to do but I think you-‘

‘Stay here,’ Jungkook manages to get out, interrupting Sk’jin, ‘I want to stay here.’

Sk’jin looks upset, almost angry. But Taeh’yung is there, shuffling around in front of him.

‘Kookie,’ he smiles. ‘Are you sure?’

Jungkook looks around at them before nodding once.

‘I’m sure.’

Unsure why, but Hoseok feels relieved.

Sk’jin steps back, still looking angry- but more than anything, he looks distraught.

Zitao pokes his head out, seeing as how they’re all moving back into the Lobby.

‘He said he wants to stay,’ Sk’jin reports tersely.

‘All right.’ Zitao claps his hands together, ‘We’ll get going I guess.’

‘When do you expect a response from your friend?’ Kai asks as he emerges with Kyungsoo, their hands linked.

Hoseok notices how Jimin stares at their hands, eyes trailing over the identical visible patterns over their wrists.

‘In 3 days time.’ Namjoon replies.

‘I’ll contact you then. How long are you staying here?’

‘Until we get the information,’ Namjoon replies before Sk’jin snorts again and says, ‘Why ask when you know?’

‘Sk’jin!’ Zitao smiles in a way that’s more scary than welcoming. ‘Can I talk to you for a bit?’

Sk’jin nods and without another word the two leave the Lobby and head for the Lobby upstairs.

Kai and Kyungsoo stand there, clearly feeling a little awkward before they both smile. It’s much more genuine and warmer than before.

‘Good luck,’ Kyungsoo tells them and then looking at Yoongi adds, ‘Be careful.’

The two disappear in the blink of an eye and Jimin and Jungkook both jump a little, still not used to
‘Is this safe?’ Hoseok asks, unable to get rid of the discomfort building under his skin.

‘Nothing really is,’ Namjoon sighs dramatically.

Hoseok wants to open a window and scream out of it again.

Namjoon studies the doorway leading into the Hangar for a moment before sighing and then saying, ‘Our supplies are all here right? Nothing missing?’

‘All here I think,’ Hoseok raises an inquiring look over at Jimin and Jungkook who both nod at once.

‘Okay- guess we should distribute the stuff.’

‘Pa! I got you a great hair colour! You ’ll love it!’ Taeh’yung declares at once, latching onto Namjoon’s good arm. ‘Come! I’ll show you!’

Namjoon allows himself to be dragged away, followed shortly by Jungkook who gnaws at his lower lip, sharp strong teeth on display as he asks tentatively, ‘Did…is Sk’jin angry at me?’

‘No,’ Hoseok says firmly before reaching over to gently ruffle the Vicitra’s hair. ‘He’s just got a lot on his mind.’

‘Yoongi come look at your hair colour!’ Taeh’yung calls, poking his head from the doorway.

Yoongi and Jungkook head towards the Hangar, the latter instantly competing with the Human in speed and he darts past quickly.

‘What do you think?’ Jimin asks him quietly, not moving from where he stood.

‘About what?’ Hoseok asks tiredly.

Jimin blinks a moment before saying, ‘About Jungkook staying. I said I would be responsible. That I- I would- will, takin-take care of him. But- I know this is dangerous.’

‘There’s not a lot of things we can do with our situation,’ Hoseok shrugs. ‘But we’ve made our choices- and so has Jungkook. And yeah- I guess it isn’t fair because I don’t think he really understands. But the option for him to leave is always open. Just like all of us. We can all leave any time we want.’

Jimin presses his lips together in a thin line, expression unreadable. Then after a moment or two, he nods.

‘Where is Kai from?’ Jimin asks, uncrossing his arms, his posture loosening up.

‘A planet called Dakaṣayai.’ Hoseok replies with a smile. ‘Did you notice something?’

‘Their souls were beautiful,’ Jimin smiles. ‘Bright- soft, almost-….no, it was the same. I am confused.’

‘You were confused. But I think you could sense it right? You said so yourself.’

Jimin nods, ‘A star of two,’ he repeats himself, ‘It’s what I se-saw. I don’t know how to describe.’
Hoseok smiles before he says, ‘Did you see the Human’s arms? He had those lines- they’re not tattoos- they’re a mirror-image of the lines on Kai’s skin.’

‘What does it mean?’ Jimin asks.

‘The Dakaṣayaii believe that all souls are born in stars- and that with every star born, 2 souls are born. Kai and Kyungsoo are souls born from the same star, soul-mates if you will.’ Hoseok explains as he makes his way to the Lobby table, switching off the projector that was still displaying the unsettling image of the Omhlophe. ‘I’m not sure how true it is- but that’s what the Dakaṣayaii believe and stand by.’

‘And will they always meet? The star-souls?’ Jimin asks quietly.

‘I don’t know,’ Hoseok replies honestly. ‘But I know that they also believe that when they die, the star they’re born from goes into supernova.’

It’s quiet for a while and when Hoseok looks up, is stunned to find tears silently rolling down Jimin’s cheeks.

‘Hey- oh, Spaces, sorry I didn’t mean to upset you,’ Hoseok says at once.

Jimin just shakes his head before glancing up at the stairs and quickly dabbing at his cheeks and says, ‘Thank you for telling me,’ and hurries towards the Hangar.

Sk’jin and Zitao reappear, both have very neutral expressions on their faces but Hoseok knows it’s all a front.

‘I’ll be going,’ Zitao announces just as Kai reappears behind him, making Sk’jin jump in surprise again.

The Dakaṣayaii grins sheepishly.

‘Keep in touch,’ Zitao smiles though it sounds more like a warning.

Sk’jin rolls his eyes in response, not even looking back for a reaction. Before Zitao can angrily retort Kai grabs his shoulder and they disappear.

‘It’s weird isn’t it?’ Sk’jin says, ‘I feel so open and weirdly exposed- the idea that Beings like Kai exist- the whole concept is really strange-‘

‘What did Zitao mean by that?’ Hoseok cuts across before Sk’jin can start a whole tirade on the Dakaṣayaii.

‘By what?’ Sk’jin asks tiredly. ‘By saying that thing about me dying? We’re all dying Hobi. We’re all headed there from the moment we’re born.’

‘But you can’t,’ Hoseok frowns. ‘The Khol’isa-‘

‘-bunch of crap,’ Sk’jin sighs before frowning a little and saying, ‘You know very well that I’m not-…I’m not well. I’m Khol’isa yeah, but not like what I used to be. I think it’s a little obvious with all of this gone.’

He gestures to his temples and Hoseok remembers the image of Sk’jin from his pirating days, of the beautiful and fragile looking horns adorning his head.

‘Sk’jin-‘
‘Look if it’s serious or something terrible I would have mentioned it okay?’ Sk’jin snaps before sighing and adding, ‘Okay I wouldn’t have. But it’s not serious. I’m like…I’m like all of you now okay? My body just doesn’t know how to handle it.’

Hoseok knows he can’t push it. Not now.

‘Does this have to do with what happened in the-‘

‘Hoseok,’ Sk’jin voice is hard and terse. ‘Leave it.’

‘Hobi! Come see Pa’s hair colour! I managed to put it on!’ Taeh’yung announces loudly before appearing at the doorway. ‘And you too Jinnie! Let’s change hair colours!’

The smile on Sk’jin’s face is incredibly believable as he responds enthusiastically to Taeh’yung’s hair-changing proposal. They walk into the gateway, their laughter and Sk’jin’s high-pitched squeaky laughter followed by Namjoon’s grumpy sounding response echoes out.

Hoseok sighs long and slow, gearing up to enter the Bay.

It’s a random thing- and Hoseok doesn’t know why he stops. But he does.

Picking up Sk’jin’s screen the Khol’isa had placed over on the Lobby couches, he moves quickly, easily memorizing the coordinates and channel frequency and saving it to his own. Yoongi had also used it, communicating with whoever had been on the other end of the line.

‘Hobi?’ Taeh’yung pokes his head in.

‘I’m coming buggy,’ Hoseok smiles, casually sliding the screen over to the table and propping up some of the misplaced pillows and cushions.

‘Does Namjoon like his new hair colour?’

Taeh’yung grins fiendishly at him.

‘He will.’

Namjoon seems resigned to his new purple hair, not having enough arms to even attempt to fight the hair application as Taeh’yung once again displays his uncanny strength. Sk’jin sits on top of the water-cells, fixing his own hair and staining it a warm shade of brown with careful skill.

Jimin is chuckling in a low voice as he carefully applies the applicator on Yoongi’s faded blue hair. Yoongi’s eyes are just closed and Hoseok wonders if he’s fallen asleep. Jungkook watches with fascination, eyes wide as though disbelieving that some paste could completely transform hair colour in a matter of seconds.

‘Wash!’ Jimin urges Yoongi, pushing him up and towards the collapsible sink to the side. Jungkook follows, eyes narrowed as he watches as though hoping to find some form of trickery in this hair-colouring trick.

But when Yoongi emerges with wet dark hair, expression blank, Jungkook’s jaw drops.

He touches the wet strands, then looks at his fingers. Head tilting back and forth sideways before Sk’jin calls him over, an indulgent smile on the Khol’isa’s face.

‘I’m gonna wash my hair out too, wanna watch?’
Jungkook all but flies to the Khol’isa.

Jimin dries Yoongi’s hair for him with a random stretch of cloth Hoseok is pretty sure was meant to be used in maintenance but it looked clean so he’s not going to judge. Tach’yung oohs at Yoongi, clapping his hands as he regards the Human with his now brown hair with obvious approval.

Namjoon gives him a tired look before he gets to his feet. He glances over at Sk’jin and Jungkook, worry evident in his gaze. But he looks away again before clearing his throat and makes an announcement.

‘Right- let’s clear everything away and start on-‘

Kai appears out of nowhere, making Jungkook leap backwards, Yoongi literally pushing Jimin down and under a table, and Sk’jin nearly jumps out of his skin. Before anyone can even remotely speak, the Dakaṣayaii spots Namjoon and asks: ‘You know Em?’

‘Uh-‘

There’s an awkward silence broken only by Jimin’s mumbling complaints as he gets out from under the table.

‘Yeah- wait how do you know Em-‘

‘Well. I think this just makes everything so much easier,’ Kai smiles and again its alarmingly contradicting with how he had appeared just up until a second ago. ‘I can take you to Em- she’s asked me to bring you when she realized that we both asked her for the same information! Oh- nice hair colour!’

‘Y-your Analyst was Em?’ Namjoon asks incredulously before pausing and adding, ‘Well, that makes sense.’

‘There’s also someone else who wants to meet you,’ Kai adds, ‘To talk about Bhumi.’

Jimin’s head snap towards them at this, eyes narrowing.

‘Who is it?’ he asks.

Kai looks surprised that Jimin would ask the question.

‘Someone who is interested in the mission- he would like to address the Captain of the mission personally. He has some knowledge regarding the planet.’ Kai replies evasively.

Jimin eyes him, eyes gleaming strangely and Hoseok can see how Kai stiffens at this, clearly uncomfortable with the way Jimin is looking at him.

‘I want to come,’ Jimin states plainly.

Yoongi and Jungkook both stare at Jimin in shock.

‘Um-‘ Kai begins.

‘No. If your friend is interested in discussing Bhumi, then he will want to meet with Jimin,’ Namjoon says at once, a serious look on his face as he exchanges looks with Jimin who nods in agreement.
Kai pauses, then he nods, as though he too received some form of approval.

‘Okay- let’s go,’ he raises his hand towards Namjoon.

‘Right now?’ Sk’jin demands. ‘But-‘

‘No this is good,’ Hoseok says quickly. ‘We can leave sooner than later this way.’

‘Agreed,’ Namjoon says before adding, ‘Hoseok you’re in charge now. We’ll be back soon hopefully.’

Sk’jin looks like he’s ready to argue but Jungkook stuns all of them by reaching forward to pull at Namjoon’s empty sleeve.

‘Come back?’ he whispers nervously. ‘Will you come back?’

‘Yeah- yeah I will,’ Namjoon replies, using his good hand to ruffle Jungkook’s hair, the latter only flinches slightly but he’s smiling slowly at that. Then he walks over to Kai and takes his hand.

Kai and Namjoon vanish into thin air.

It’s something Hoseok doesn’t think he could get used to.

Jimin adjusts his beanie over his head, as though preparing for some trek. He looks serious and determined, his expression almost stately as he prepares himself. This was a Jimin who governed and watched over his people.

It was easy forgetting that, when Hoseok is used to seeing Jimin in normal garb, laughing at Taeh’yung’s and Sk’jin’s banter, eating alongside a silent Yoongi and joining in conversations easily in the Kitchens.

Jungkook starts to look confused, glancing around at all of them, clearly reading the atmosphere and feeling strange himself.

Taeh’yung is quick to distract Jungkook, displaying once again, a surprising level of awareness and forethought as he drags the young Vicitra upwards claiming hunger and a promise of good food! Hoseok suppresses an involuntary shudder at what constituted as good food for the Vicitra.

Sk’jin heaves out a heavy sigh before heading out of the Bay, still holding his hair-dye in his hands. Hoseok sits back down to attach the new water-cells before he realizes he’s an unwilling and ignored audience member of one.

‘Jimin.’ Yoongi’s eyes are wide, pupils darting about, clearly very stunned and unable to really react to any of this properly.

‘I’ll come back,’ Jimin says as he places the fabric around Yoongi’s neck to catch stray drops of water.

‘Don’t leave-‘ Yoongi’s hand darts out, gently holding onto Jimin’s hand. ‘I- I can’t protect you-‘

‘I need to find out,’ Jimin tells him gently, hand twisting in Yoongi’s hold just as Kai reappears. ‘We’ll come back.’

Yoongi’s hand tightens briefly before he lets go mechanically. He takes a step back, his movement rigid, as though controlling himself.
Jimin looks up and smiles at Hoseok before quickly leaning in to kiss Yoongi on his cheek, and then he’s gone.

Yoongi’s reaction is violently physical, jumping in shock and for a moment Hoseok wonders if he’s going into some form of panic attack.

But just as violently as that had started, Yoongi stills completely.

Hoseok waits a full minute before he attempts to converse with the Human.

‘Yoongi do you want to join Jungkook and Taeh’yung as they emotionally eat through the new food supplies? It might make you feel better,’ Hoseok offers.

Yoongi doesn’t look at Hoseok but there’s a tiny shrug of his shoulders, his eyebrows raising and he exhales slowly. Almost as though saying well, it’s not like there’s anything I can do is there.

And it’s the most alive action Yoongi has ever taken.

‘Do we have ice-cream.’ He asks.

‘Yeah we do,’ Hoseok grins and stands up. The water-cells could wait. ‘Then if you want, we can open a window and scream out of it.’
UNIVERSITY STARTS FROM TOMORROW I'M NOT READY AND THIS SEMESTER I HAVE MATH AND THESIS TOGETHER

Good news is that my sister’s surgery was successful!

And not so good news is I don’t know when I can update the next chapter. It will most definitely be this month though don’t worry. I just don’t want to say a date and not deliver, but I will update this month!!!
i’m sorry if this chapter is a bit slow and dialogue heavy, but it’s to start setting up for the upcoming chapters!!
It’s been a month since university started for me, and after scoping out my schedule, my classes, caring for my sister, and figuring out the feel of my thesis, I have realized that I won’t have the time or ability to update ADEGU for a few months

T_T

ADEGU is a complex story and the ideas I have for it need careful planning and writing and with this semester, I don’t think I’ll be able to deliver what I want to write, and what you deserve to read too! I have this entire story plotted out, however, there are finer details that are important and greatly necessary to the characters and their development and their relationships.

I was battling this decision, and I tried so hard the past few weeks but I wasn’t able to find any time to clearly and calmly think through the complex writing I have for ADEGU.

So I am very VERY sorry T_T

I feel terrible, this is the first time since I’ve ever started writing that I’ve had to state that I would be going on a hiatus for a few months.

As an apology of sorts, I’ve finally completed the moodboards I’ve been working on since early this year for the boys in ADEGU, now that Jungkook is here, I can add him to it as well!

So please check it out here!!

Also, if anyone is interested to know, that even though I won’t update ADEGU for a while, I have 2-3 one-shots for Namjin, Yoonmin, and another one partially finished which I will put up in the next few weeks! But after that, I will be pretty MIA from the writing world, seeing also as my other on-going fic is in the process of ending

T_T

Again, I’m so sorry to have to go on hiatus, writing was and will always be my escape from UNIVERSITY WORK AND PROJECTS OH GOD, but now I don’t have the time T_T I know that this fic doesn’t have a lot of readers but each and every one of you and your comments made my day and made writing such a joy!! Your comments inspired me to be better and because I want to give all of you the full potential of what ADEGU is supposed to be, I beg for your patience until I finally have the time to do it justice and make all of you proud!! I want you all to read this to completion!!! So I will NEVER abandon this fic!!

Please feel free to message me about anything!! Come scream at me on tumblr or twitter!

When I come back to write with a vengeance I hope to still see comments from all of you ^_^
It’s…strange.

Not because it felt foreign, or because it felt uncomfortable.

It felt strange because for that single moment, for that fraction of a moment- time seemed to still and open, a solid and corporeal existence of reality itself, woven and formed from starlight and music, had appeared.

And for that fraction of a moment, Jimin felt as though he could look into all of Time.

Time has always been strange. There was a measurement yes, but it was always based off of a conduit of light that shone upon a location of existence, creating night and day. Time itself was immeasurable, its existence a strange thought that could not be sensed- yet could be seen in the strangest of ways.

Time wrapped itself around everyone- Time layered over skin, over hair, over molecules, over atoms- Time layered itself over Life and Death and Darkness.

And to his surprise, Time was younger and smaller than Jimin had expected.

Younger, smaller…and inexpressibly alive.

But that moment is gone, and Jimin is no longer inside the Lobby in the Užkulisai, but instead he finds himself inside a wide and strangely squat dark room. It’s excessively large, and what at first appeared to be pillars were thick constructs of wires connecting ceiling to floor, spreading out like roots into the floors. The room is dark but tiny blinking lights guide Jimin’s eyes and sense of perception in this dimness. The only clear bright area is at the very center where large panels of glowing screens hang, forming a strange chandelier like construct, and in the very center stood a Being.

He was dressed entirely in white, his hair dark, and his feet bare above the coils of wires.

He looks away from the screens and through the holographic projection, meets Jimin’s gaze.

‘Navvula! Let me out! Please! Don’t do this!’

It hurts.
‘We will not be apart from our home – if she dies then we will die with her.’

It’s too much- there’s too much noise- a wild pulse, hands slamming against an encasement- and the overwhelming song of anguish.

‘But this is my home too! You’re family!’

‘Thank you.’

His eyes suddenly seem ringed with silver, light of thousands of lifetimes shining bright and Jimin cannot breathe- he can only wait-

‘I hope you find your home.’

‘This is JD,’ Kai says and with a jolt, Jimin only just realizes that Namjoon was standing there too.

‘Are you all right?’ Namjoon asks worriedly.

He can breathe just fine- the sounds are gone- the anguish, the sorrow, the pain- it’s gone.

‘I- yes,’ Jimin replies, surprised to find himself sounding so normal despite what he just felt. He looks away from the tall Kutsoglerin to look ahead again to find the Being still standing there, unmoving.

‘Is he the one who wanted to speak to us?’ Namjoon inquires.

‘He is,’ Kai nods before gesturing and walking ahead before he explains. ‘Em is at the other port, JD wanted privacy.’

Namjoon nods to that, glancing about the place before saying, ‘It’s been a while since I’ve been here.’

‘Oh! How long?’ Kai asks, interested.

‘Over a decade?’ Namjoon ruminates, ‘They all look the same, so I’m gonna guess not this floor.’

Jimin doesn’t pay much attention to their small talk. He’s unable to look away, unable to un-see who- what he was looking upon.

Jimin’s sight has always been a combination of what he can physically see, and what his Soul can see. What exists in the eclipsed light of two separate existences intersecting.

Time is layered over everything. And sometimes, Jimin can see this- a layered intersection between two existences eclipsing.

And over JD, Time erupted in chaotic warped waves- a complex and impossibly layered thickness that seemed to cling to him, wanting to pull him down.

And this isn’t the first time Jimin has seen this.

The Being, JD, waits for them, hands crossed behind his back. Upon closer inspection, Jimin notices that his shirt isn’t pure white, but a soft light grey in colour instead. He has no clear expression on his face but he didn’t appear aggressive or conniving. There is no hostility, no suspicion- there is only waiting.

‘How long?’
JD doesn’t respond immediately before he replies in a language he had feared he would never hear again.

‘Too long.’

It’s strange.

JD is old- a heavy weight of age, time, and a clear and profound pain seemed to blanket him. His Soul however-

‘I see snow,’ Jimin replies back in the heavy tongue of the Megibīyan. ‘Soft snow- your…your Soul is filled with snow.’

JD blinks a few times before his expression softens, the slightest hint of a smile on his face. Jimin passes through the holographic projections and stands before the strange Being.

‘The darkness of Nothing stained me- followed and surrounded me,’ he says simply, ‘But I found Light.’

He doesn’t explain any further, but Jimin can definitely feel it clearer now.

‘It’s beautiful.’

‘He is,’ JD agrees before asking, ‘Who are you?’

‘I am the Yemenifesi Ch’inik’eti, the Fate of Menigišiti,’ Jimin replies, ‘By birth, my name is Jimin. You have information about Megibīya?’

‘I know it as Bhumi,’ he replies and adds in a tone that hints at something gentle, ‘We were waiting.’

It’s strange; because Jimin is suddenly filled with dread, filled with pain, and with anguish. This Being had been there. He had been in Megibīya. Here was another living Being, with intact memory and awareness, with full knowledge and memories of a reality that was shrouded in mystery and obvious conspiracy.

‘Waiting for what?’ Jimin manages to whisper.

‘I was waiting for rescue- they were waiting for their Home. But it would seem that I found their Home- after all this time.’ JD answers.

Jimin doesn’t realize that he’s fallen to his knees.

‘How- how long ago?’ Jimin’s entire body shakes. He’s vaguely aware of Namjoon saying something but he doesn’t step in. And Jimin is grateful for that.

‘I can show you,’ JD says, kneeling down in front of him.

‘How?’

‘Would you like to Sleep?’ JD asks him, extending a hand.

Dread fills him again, apprehension and fear.

It’s strange.
Because JD’s Soul was filled with snow, just enough to cover him anew. But past that, beyond the secure and gentle shield of snow lay a darkness as pitch black as space, and as wounded as the white existence that had entrapped Jimin.

Jimin is afraid- but he needs to know.

Raising his hand and placing it in JD’s, Jimin takes a quiet and careful breath before nodding.

‘Show me.’

Jimin is once again momentarily displaced.

Gone is the dark and strangely squat room. Gone are the coils and coils of wires, the holographic screens. Namjoon and Kai aren’t there either- it’s only Jimin, and JD.

The hallway they’re in is lit with a soft white light that filters down from trees to high above for Jimin to see, the walls on either side disappearing into a misty void far above. There are piles of soft snow around the ashy wooden floors, the same as what Jimin could sense but now can see for sure. He fights the urge to kneel and touch it.

There are doors on both sides of the hall that seems to go on quite endlessly. They’re all identical- a grey grained wood, with silver handles make up the closed doors. Identical, but Jimin knows- can sense they’re not the same.

‘Where are we?’ Jimin asks, looking at JD to address him.

In this clear light, he can study this strange Being clearer.

He looks…quite ordinary.

There is nothing that stands out remarkably, nothing to give way to the fact that he exuded an extraordinary amount of sheer presence – one attained through unimaginable pain- but also, through indescribable love. JD’s lack of immediate expression and character is similar to Yoongi’s- an almost blank mask covers their faces.

But the clear difference comes from the fact that JD was sure.

Jemin can sense pain, anguish, hurt, confusion- but he can also sense love, adoration, loyalty, and a warmth that felt like a hearth. And this created that surety in JD’s eyes.

‘My memories,’ JD replies. ‘Rather than tell you what happened, I can show you, without fear of being overheard.’

‘How many know?’

‘Only those who matter.’

‘Then why are you showing me?’

JD doesn’t answer, instead just pauses for a while before he asks quietly, ‘Who are you?’
He’s asking him for more than just his identity. There’s more to the question.

There was obviously more to JD, more to who he was, where he came from, and what he knew. The same way Jimin was just simply more.

‘I don’t know how I’m here,’ Jimin begins quietly, his voice reverbs down the hallway quietly, almost endlessly. ‘I know I died- or I think I did- and…-and everyone died too. There are so many things I don’t understand- how Megibīya is involved, what the Red Evil were truly doing there. How they were in design with the GLA- everything is unknown to me I-’

The mounting frustration and anxiety he had been facing ever since waking up finally seemed to break loose out of him. He had done well in containing it; the lack of information, the vagueness of everything, the fear, the stress- as someone who used to be the Fate and, in essence, the guide of a whole System of living planets and their unique species and races and individuals, Jimin found his current situation straining and aggravating.

But he’s been trained and taught and tutored- not to mention vastly experienced in all matters involving crucial infrastructures ranging from within governing systems, to that of combat training groups- and Jimin knew that the best tactic, as an observer and as someone who didn’t want to appear as a threat but only as a neutral party, was to never ask questions.

Questions lead to suspicion, it lead to discomfort. Because questions either birthed truths, but it mainly spawned lies upon lies. So Jimin learnt how to sense, to feel, to read the answers presented to him, only without words.

So he had let the crew within the Užkulisai be as they were, simply watching them in their state without pushing question or agenda. And it frustrated him beyond words- especially before he could understand directly what they meant. And now with his broadened range of understanding, Jimin was able to even more clearly realize just how much of a mess everything was.

‘I’m afraid,’ Jimin confesses. ‘Afraid of finding out why. Afraid of how- I read the reports, I listened to the trials and meetings and-…the Red Evil was using my technology- they were using the same technology I have leant to my ship. And…-’

‘And Bhumi didn’t possess this technology?’ JD inquires.

Jemin shakes his head.

‘It means they were able to enter my System, and steal our technology. Or it was given to them.’

JD doesn’t move, doesn’t say anything.

‘Bhumī, or as I knew it, were aware of the Universe beyond their planet- but from the way you speak, it is as though they were supposed to be hidden.’

Jemin pauses at this, wondering how good of an idea it was to speak to someone he didn’t know about something so secretive that he hasn’t even told the Beings responsible for taking him back. That he hasn’t even told Yoongi.

‘My System is a unique one,’ Jimin finds himself saying, ‘We are hidden from view- hidden from physical sight, as well as scans and signals- we are invisible- and we have existed like this for as long as memory and history goes back.’

JD nods once to his statement, a little delayed. It reminds Jimin painfully of Yoongi and his lack of social etiquette and understanding.
‘We were aware of course, that by completely hiding ourselves, we were erasing a large expanse of space- and without an explanation, a vast expanse of space that has no history of black-holes would be suspicious and would garner attempts at observation or study,’ Jimin continues. ‘We were lucky to an extent at first- we…have a complex system- and that made it difficult for the GLA to find us during the earliest phases.’

JD nods to that again.

‘As our technology expanded, so did theirs. Which is why we made it appear as though the our sun was a particularly violent pulsar- spewing radioactive light and waves that contained but terrifying levels,’ Jimin explains briefly. ‘It would be reason enough to explain any difficulty in being able to observe our system or attempt to set up a channel. It would also be enough to put away any Being from attempting to enter the area.’ He pauses for a moment, looking down the hallway though not really seeing anything. ‘We knew that we still needed a way to observe our surroundings- we needed to be careful. We also needed to study what lay beyond. Isolation, regardless of its intention, will never allow for growth.’

At that JD seems to almost smile, nodding once in agreement again.

‘So we allowed Megibīya to extend past our barriers- make it appear to be a primitive planet. There is not a lot of room for growth in Megibīya- the only areas that can be inhibited that aren’t part of the ocean is small,’ Jimin looks down at his feet, snow sparkles at him faintly. ‘It was only meant as a gateway- a way to observe, a watch-tower.’

‘The GLA never took her in,’ JD states.

Jimin nods, ‘She was not important enough…but...we were.’

JD’s expression changes a little, a shadow crossing his face.

‘The Yisheng sensed us beyond the radioactive signals spewing from our system- they saw…they saw past us.’

‘How?’

‘By chance,’ Jimin says carefully. ‘We had another planet, like Megibīya, that existed just a little past the borders of our protection. She was called Akramana.’

The light in JD’s eyes flicker.

‘It was by chance…but also a flaw,’ Jimin confesses. ‘Our system of protection sometimes waned, sometimes created gaps- and Akramana was the planet that was second furthest in our system. We were always careful- we could somehow time when these gaps would appear, we would make sure to have them sealed, to reinforce these areas. This is how the Yisheng found us- but they never made it past Akramana- and they could only see us there- when we allowed. It’s how we signed the treaty.’

JD can obviously tell that there are parts of this story that Jimin isn’t telling him completely. But he doesn’t push.

‘Do you trust it?’ JD asks instead. It’s not condescending or filled with scoff.

‘The treaty or the GLA?’

‘The treaty, the GLA, your people.’
Jimin shudders.

‘Of course,’ he replies instantly. ‘We- we have our way. We are aware of lies, we sense them-’

‘You have thought about it,’ JD cuts in quietly. ‘You realized that there was a possibility.’

Jimin cannot answer.

Of course he thought about it.

It was one of the first things that entered his mind.

The GLA were tricky of course. They had other plans, other tricks, attempts to break the Treaty, or to create a better one where they could profit off of them. But as far as Jimin knew, they had all been united in the belief that this Treaty was the best deal for them. That what they possessed in their system was far too risky to risk.

A small shuffling sound momentarily shakes Jimin out of his stupor.

For the first time, Jimin sees an actual smile on JD’s lips. He’s looking down the hallway and Jimin follows his line of sight.

He immediately falls to his knees, snow drifting off around him, a wretched gasp escaping him.

She’s no more than 11 sols.

‘Anda,’ JD greets the young Megibīyan.

Jimin’s body shakes, his breaths shallow.

She looks at him curiously, her yellow eyes large and innocent. She’s wearing a tunic like smock, a little dirty around the hem, the sleeves rolled up to her elbows. It reminds Jimin of the nightgown he had when he was younger.

My daughter, my child, my family-

‘Can you find the door?’ JD asks.

She nods shyly, smiling at the two of them before turning on her heel and running off.

‘W-who is she?’ Jimin manages to ask, attempting to calm himself.

‘Her name is Andamaina,’ JD replies taking a step forward and stooping down just a little to hold his hand out to Jimin. ‘She is the adopted daughter of the Captain, and of Navvula.’

Jimin knows this name- has heard it-

‘Navvula! Let me out! Please! Don’t do this!’

‘We will not be apart from our home – if she dies then we will die with her.’

‘They died,’ Jimin whispers quietly.

‘But this is my home too! You’re family!’

‘Thank you.’
‘I hope you find your home.’

They all died.

JD doesn’t respond, hand still extended down. Jimin bows his head, lowering himself until his head touches the snow on the ground.

He cannot beg for forgiveness. He cannot expect to be forgiven.

The only thing he could do now was to know.

Small hands pat his head and Jimin’s head shoots up at once. Andamaina stands before him, as real as JD, just as alive-

His hand meets thin air instead of the hands before him.

‘Her name means egg,’ Jimin says quietly instead, drinking in the sight of the young Megibīyan.

Her name means daughter, child, family-

‘It was- it was a common name, one of endearment, of love, care,’ Jimin continues.

Her name means abandoned-

‘Lead the way Anda,’ JD says gently.

The little girl takes a few skipping steps down the hall, turning around, clearly waiting for them to follow her. Jimin takes JD’s extended hand and pulls himself up to his feet. JD doesn’t move yet, but instead levels him with a careful look.

‘Where we are going is dark and remote,’ he states simply. ‘This will hurt.’

Jimin nods in understanding.

‘This is the pain I allowed to happen,’ he declares, ‘- it is only right if I bear it myself.’

Only pausing for a second more, JD leads the way.

Anda smiles brightly and runs ahead, her small feet creating echoes around the hallway.

‘Why is she here?’ Jimin asks after a while.

‘I couldn’t let go,’ is all JD says.

‘For how long?’

‘For too long.’

They walk in silence, following the pitter patter of bare feet before them. Pausing some ways ahead, Andamaina beams at them and opens a door, stepping inwards and disappearing.

‘JD...’ Jimin begins carefully, pausing before the door, feeling and smelling the rain that was falling behind it.

JD stops, waiting for Jimin to continue.

But Jimin remains mute- not sure what to say.
‘You have arrived,’ JD says quietly. ‘You have arrived and that is all they would have wanted.’

The door opens completely and Jimin feels the lightning before he sees it, before he hears it.

A mighty sky roars above him, thunder cracks the heavy clouds, lightning echoes in light, casting illumination just enough to show how impossibly thick the storm was above them.

Lightning strikes the sandy shore Jimin finds himself in, bordering a dark storming ocean to one side, and a tall forest to the other side.

Jimmn doesn’t recognize this shore—doesn’t recognize the skies, the planet.

‘Where are we?’

‘At the beginning,’ JD replies.

‘Of?’

As though answering Jimin’s question, there’s a burst of movement from the clearing in the trees and another version of JD steps out.

He—he looks alive. He looks strong, young, untouched by death, by Time, by lifetimes of pain unimaginable. He bellows with the wind, clearly delighted. Jimin finds himself smiling in response—the joy and excitement he exuded was infectious.

Momentarily, Jimin forgets that JD is there. The real JD. So when he crosses ahead of him, a figure in white so alike yet so painfully different from what was clearly his past self-Jimin jolts back to reality.

‘Is this your home?’

‘It was,’ JD replies looking around. ‘It is the planet of K’arishkhali, wrought from lightning and storms.’

As though in response to that statement, the sky thunders and a bolt of lightning hits the sandy beach. Jimin surmises that maybe the younger JD was here looking for fulgurite. There’s another thunderous clap but this time it’s not natural.

A familiar transporter breaks through the shockingly low clouds that broiled over the stormy ocean and crashes into the sandy shore, wet sand flying up in arcs. Jimin knows the make of this ship. Remembers the decisions made to purposefully design and equip Megibīya with outdated GLA machinery, combined with their own skill and resources. They needed the perfect cover for their gateway—not too conspicuous, yet not too old so as to fail in defending itself.

‘Hey! Is anyone hurt? Don’t worry! The coastal guard will be here!’

JD’s voice rips through the storm and Jimin finds himself looking at the scene closely. The transporter was what they called a scout-pod, travelling ahead of the mothership. They were incredibly strong and durable, and with this sort of storm, Jimin knows that they would have kept the transporter at very high security settings. He almost wants to tell JD it was futile to attempt to open the strong casing that protected the pod. Instead he watches as past-JD frantically searches over the ship for any source of entry.

Inside Jimin spots a few figures, seated firmly and securely—momentarily knocked out from the shock of the crash. This would also have been their first time leaving the protection of Menigişiti.
Jimin wonders if JD’s giving up as he runs away from the pod. But Jimin is mistaken because JD rushes towards a parked hover-transport and he’s extracting something from the storage unit. Rushing back into the stormy beach and crash-site, JD skids across the sand before he’s fumbling around the front window edges, clearly hoping to breach a gap between the reinforced glass and melded metal.

‘Move away from my ship!’ a voice hisses.

Both past-JD and Jimin whip around at the voice.

Jimin has to hold himself back from taking leaping steps to barrel into this strong figure. To hold him close and cradle him safe, to make sure that no more harm would befall his children.

To hold him away from what Jimin knew would be death and hopelessness.

‘Hey whoa ok, I was just checking to see if you guys were ok!’ JD replies stammering, his arms sticking up into the air as he sits up.

Standing in front of him with a bleeding head was a species of Being he couldn’t identify.

The Megibīyan were a tall and strong species, their biology shaped by the unique genesis of their planet. They appeared menacing, but Jimin knew them as some of the most gentlest Beings within the Menigišiti System. The planet had a small population, and the continuation of their species was a complex process. Yet despite all of this, they volunteered to be the gatekeepers, to watch over the gateway.

The Megibīya Wenedi had valiantly led them through their empty planet- hope dying before their very eyes. Jimin still carries them in his soul, in his heart.

‘What were you trying to do?’

‘Woah ok let’s not do something we will both regret!’ JD is shivering in the rain- fear, adrenaline, the cold. ‘I was just trying to extract the window pane so that I could help your crew – they don’t look so good right now.’

Jimin can already tell from the way he studies JD, that he believes him.

‘Hurry up.’

JD is skilled. Jimin is awed by the swiftness, adaptability, and precision with which he worked. By the time he’s done, the rest of the Megibīyan inside have woken up. Jimin watches with a sense of wonder as they regard JD with care, but also with a sense of respect. All 4 inside the pod step out into the rain.

They were beautiful.

Beautiful and lost and alone.

And Jimin can do nothing to rewrite this.

‘How did you do that?’

‘Do what?’ JD looks wary, understandably so.

‘Take my ship apart so quickly, this ship is not your planet’s make.’
It wasn’t supposed to be the make of any sort of known planet.

‘Uh well,’ Jongdae mumbles. ‘It’s um – I’m a Mechanical Engineering student?’

Jimin almost giggles at the amused expressions on the faces of his- of his…-

The startling reality of their future from this point hits Jimin hard.

When this had happened, had he already left for Megibiya? Had he already arrived at the gateway only to find it collapsing, the gatekeepers slaughtered, their death bleeding red into the sky?

‘But yeah, um, the coastal guard will be here to help you guys out mor-‘

‘What?’

‘The coastal guard-‘

‘How long will it take for them to get here?’

’10-10 more minutes?’

‘We should take him back- he should know what to do.’

‘He’s young- he’s too young. We will not take him from his home.’

‘We will not keep him. Only until it is over. Then we can return home- back to our Mother.’

Jimin hadn’t noticed how the rain had seeped down to his very soul, falling through him and drowning him in the ignorance he had been blinded with.

I abandoned you.

‘You will fix my ship.’

‘What?’

‘My ship. You’re going to fix it.’

‘Hurry!’

They tell JD the simplest of truths, the bare minimum of who they were. Jimin watches with similar confusion with the way JD not only integrates himself into the Megibiyan but somehow just seems to belong.

Language becomes a barrier for JD and the Megibiyan, but there are few who can communicate and translate.

The children love him at once- following him with confusion and excitement.

‘He looks like our Heart- like our Mother,’ they giggle amongst each other.

Jimin’s heart breaks beyond repair.

They share laughter, hot food, warm blankets, and the joy of childish games uniting any people together.

Jimin catches their names here and there. He carries their names deep in his mind. And each laugh, each smile, each joke they make at each other, carves the syllables of their names deeper into his heart.

Navvula reminds Jimin of the Megibīya Wenedi Yyna. Both are fiercely loyal, devoted, strong. And like Yyna, Jimin could not hold her last breath within him.

‘Well guys, um, have a safe trip?’

They’re back on the beach. The mothership repaired and running better than ever.

‘If this is his home, why does he look homesick?’ Navvula asks no one in particular.

They leave, and Jimin is almost in shock. He knows they could see it. He knows that they could see how JD had left his heart back in the mothership. But they leave, and JD is alone on the stormy beach.

They stand together for a long moment, staring at the clouds, willing them to come back. But it’s late now, and Jimin knows that JD, for all the good he’s done, for all the heart he poured out for people he did not know, deserved to go back home and be safe.

Jimin hears its song before he sees it.

‘It’s a lore in K’arishkhali,’ JD suddenly says, appearing beside him. Jimin had nearly forgotten that he was here too.

Jimin watches in awe as a magnificent shape forms in the clouds, taking shape and form of music beyond the stars. He has only ever known of it. Has only ever dreamt of it.

‘We call them Ts’iur Vachrobis,’ JD explains.

This was Time- this was Beauty.

Jimin wants to leap up, to touch the stars of its great chest, to fall into the depths of its song and let it take him away through the storm and beyond the light of the stars.

The sky around them darkens and Jimin realizes that this memory was dimming- that it was slowly fading into unconsciousness. In the strange shifting darkness that tries to take over, Jimin hurries over to past-JD, who was now kneeling, overwhelmed.

There are stars in his eyes.

When light reappears, Jimin finds himself in the ship again, with JD on a make-shift bed of sorts. Andamaina is here. Dressed in cleaner clothes, eyes curious as she watches JD with admiration and delight. She rushes out, and it’s as though the energy she exuded propelled JD to sit up.

‘Are you all right Jongdae?’

His name was Unyana- son, child, leader, orphan-

‘Yeah – what happened?’

Andamaina scurries over and sits on JD’s lap, the latter smiling down at her, a joy that Jimin recognizes as genuine and warm.

‘There was a strange sonic anomaly when we left you at the shore. We came back to see if you were all right and then you passed out.’

Recollection crosses JD’s eyes.

‘If you feel better then we can take you back-‘

‘Can I stay?’ Jongdae asks suddenly.

Jimin holds his breath, waiting for both the answer and the question.

‘This is your planet, where you belong – do you not cherish her?’

‘I do – she is my home. I think she wants me to go with you.’

‘You should have stayed,’ Jimin whispers quietly.

‘Why would I leave my home?’ JD replies before opening a door to the side.

Jimin follows quietly, leaving the small room behind him and instead enters an area that looks like it could be the Bridge of a ship.

They had arrived at a familiar place- this was ‘-Grisial,’ Jimin breathes out. ‘They came so far.’

‘Grisial was once a place I could not think about without pain,’ JD reaches a hand out as though to touch the crystals in the distance.

‘And now?’

‘And now I see only beauty.’ For a moment there’s a faraway look in his eyes, a light shining from within not unlike the Grisial crystals themselves.

‘According to what the Captain told me at the time, we are now a year since I joined the crew,’ JD clarifies.

‘A year?’

Had they felt it? Had they felt the decay and death of their planet?

‘He told me that 13 ships escaped-‘

Jimin cannot weep anymore.

Megibiya was not a large planet with a large population- but they had a fair number of population that had been carefully maintained and blessed. 13 ships would have barely amounted to the population living in a town.

How many had he let down? How many had he abandoned?

‘None of the other ships had survived,’ JD continues to tell him.

Jimin is numb, the light of the glittering crystals before him seem to mock him.

‘There is information you might find of importance.’ JD says quietly. ‘A smaller ship similar to the one that crashed on the shores of my country had survived long enough to be picked up by a GLA Patrol Unit outside the System of Axudar. They were allowed to stay there while the GLA investigated the matter.’

‘It has been many years,’ Jimin whispers.

‘It has. But they had carried our message back to the GLA to tell them that we would return to Bhumi.’ JD pauses a moment before adding, ‘We did not see them again. We assumed that they would join us in Bhumi.’

A strange creeping sensation crawls down Jimin’s back.

‘I am not saying that there is hope,’ JD tells him plainly. ‘It is something you could look into.’

Jemin nods quietly, looking away from the Grisial crystals and closing his eyes. His eyes burn, a sensation that spreads through and burns into his brain, painting everything a horrendous and familiar red.

‘They knew,’ JD speaks.

When Jimin opens his eyes he finds himself inside a hallway that is wrecked apart with chaos, panic, screaming sirens, and a glaring red light that comes from a planet Jimin knows is supposed to be a muted soft brown, with vast expanses of light blue, ringed with violet towards the edges that gives way to the midnight blue of space beyond.

This- this was-

‘They knew that they were coming back to die.’

There’s a sudden burst of movement as JD appears behind them, attempting to run into the Bridge ahead. But Unyana stops him, standing close to the entryway.

‘Captain!’ JD looks a little older here, his hair longer.

Jemin weeps with Unyana- weeps for the planet dying, weeps for the homes destroyed, weeps for the families bound to a fate of darkness.

‘I can’t take it-’ Jimin gasps out, breath coming out in choked exhales.

Navvula appears, attempting to rush and gather JD away and down the hall. But JD moves past the two, rushing into the Bridge that is stained red.

Jemin can see the once beautiful planet, debris floating around it- forming rings like a protoplanetary disc and it-

‘How did we not see,’ Jimin chokes out.

‘No! I have to stay here and help!’ JD yells.

Or was it Jimin crying out the words.

Let me stay let me stay let me stay-

The very air trembles and Jimin knows he cannot stay.

‘What did the message say?’

‘The Panel sent this, Tsirin pulls up the message for all of them to see. ‘They sent it directly to me,
Before Jimin can ask what she meant, the message pops up, a video that’s static and blurred, the audio grainy and filled with background noise. It was the Yisheng Ndica, who had been able to understand them, a gift, no doubt, from their abilities as a Yisheng. Yishengs were called S’wezete in Menigišiti. But none had been born for over a millennia.

‘I hope you can receive this message,’ the Yisheng Ndica declares, looking unsure and worried. ‘We received a strange signal from a planet close to your System, from a planet the GLA calls Bhumi. We’re not sure if this is part of your extended System, but reports of great destruction, and a reported “cleansing” has taken place there. We have already sent out our forces to observe the situation. This is the message sent, and I hope you can clarify this for us. If this is simply my over-thinking, please correct me. If not, I am making my way to Akramana now, and we can discuss what to do.’

Tsirin immediately plays the message sent.

It’s incredibly fragmented and filled with excessive noise. However, words can be made out, and the Megibīya Wenedi both pale, their black eyes widening. They were tall and hulking, their skin texture rough and almost stone like even in colour. Their eyes were jet black, with a sort of yellow-ochre star shaped iris at the center.

‘-ing. We are leaving-…hips have left with the women and childr-…tayed behind to divert-…. coming-….rong and many I cannot expla-…T’S HERE. THEY’RE HERE. WE NEED TO LEA-…. ything is red….it is evil-….’

The message breaks off to play another section. This one a different voice.

‘-just a few of us have escaped. We beg of you. Please help us-….hips flying out but are being hunted-….ping to the closest system we can find- ….is evil. They are evil- … hat is it. It came and made the sky red-….everything was bleeding- nnot escape-‘ the message falls silent for almost 10 whole seconds before there’s a burst of static and then suddenly the message is crisp clean and clear: ‘-it appeared out of nowhere. They knew our home. They were able to overcome our defenses. My Heart, they are here to bleed us dry.’

He cannot stay because he was too late.

‘No!’ He screams alongside JD. ‘I MUST help!’

Navvula is stronger than them- the Megibīyan were exemplary fighters, who had a powerful strength they only used when needed. They were always able to overpower Jimin when he trained with them, chuckling at him and lightheartedly teasing him about his height.

‘You do so much already,’ Navvula speaks gently. There is resignation and sorrow in her voice. But there is also acceptance.

‘You have saved the ship so many times – and in turn saved me. Saved my husband. Saved every life in here.’

They’re at the emergency capsule launch unit.

The ship tilts dangerously and the lights go off.

Navvula takes advantage of this and shoves them into an emergency capsule.
‘Navvula!’ They scream, slamming their fists against the capsules cover. ‘Let me out! Please! Don’t do this!’

‘We will not be apart from our home Jongdae – if she dies then we will die with her.’

‘But this is my home too! You’re family!’ they scream, his vision blurring fast with tears.

His own pulse is the only sound he registers.

He sees Navvula smile at him as she places her palm on the small square of glass.

Jimin reaches up to keep his palm there as well.

‘Thank you Jongdae,’ she says quietly. They can barely hear her.

‘I hope you find your home.’

They are thrown out into space.

He watches in cruel motion, not 10 seconds after he was launched off the ship, as the mother ship explodes in a silent scream of bright lights that rips through the galaxy.

Family

Love

Abandonment

Their capsule is caught in the explosion and they’re flung into the orbit of Megibīya where her gravity pulls them to the surface.

Jimin feels a dreadful sense of returning home as everything around him turns to a blissful dark.

By the time Jimin wakes up he finds himself inside a medical unit and he wonders if it was all a dream but when he’s face to face with the Beings he knows as the Omhlophe, inside a building that is clearly of Megibīyan architecture and construct, Jimin screams until he’s sedated.

‘This is where I died.’

Jimin doesn’t know if he said it, or if JD- no, Jongdae, said it.

But he’s no longer in the tiny medical chamber. The Omhlophe are no longer gathered around him, the white of their clothing and masks stark against the red.

‘I was later rescued by the GLA,’ Jongdae continues to narrate, quietly guiding them outwards and into a broken landscape Jimin recognizes immediately. He watches as massive ships fly in, all of which he recognizes as the ones the GLA Panel had arrived in. And around the larger ships are smaller ones- ones that Jimin recognizes as the same type Yoongi and his team had flown in with.

The memory is short, warped, hazy. But Jimin recognizes the forms of those transporters and with what he’s learnt from his unfortunate stay in Ynqaba, and what he’s learnt so far- from what he’s learnt of Yoongi- combined with his own experiences, the haze begins to clear.
‘Do you know how long you were here?’ Jimin asks as the memory fades, darkness slowly creeping in from all sides. Jongdae shines, the white of his clothes clear and contrast as the darkness morphs and shifts into a dark room. Jongdae walks over to a seemingly normal wall and opens a door, light flooding.

Jimin notices how past-Jongdae is sitting in the corner of the dark room that is a strange accumulation of wires, frames, metallic structures with no clear meaning or form. He also notices how Jongdae’s eyes are foggy, a clear indication that he was blind.

‘Too long.’

‘What happened here?’ Jimin asks, still unmoving though he jumps a little as Navvula reappears from the shadows, grinning as she speaks in echoes to Jongdae.

‘Hallucinations?’

‘Wishful thinking.’

Jimin finally manages to move, finding strength when he sees Andamaina smiling at him from behind Jongdae’s legs.

‘This was long ago,’ Jimin comments, feeling a strange sense of calm in him. ‘How are you here?’

‘The same way you are,’ Jongdae replies as they step out. He closes the door behind him and Jimin feels lighter. ‘More or less.’

Jimin stares at the floors, his feet startlingly clean. He had expected to see his feet covered in grime, soot, blood, and maybe even entirely burnt. It was strange.

‘You asked about these Beings you referred to as the Omhlophe - I believe you saw them back in there?’

Jongdae nods at once, ‘Is that all you remember?’

Jongdae nods, looking down to gently pat Andamain’s head.

‘They were also there- on that ship, run by what we call the Akramanese.’ Jongdae says carefully before adding, ‘We were mistaken about their name?’

Jimin nods, hesitating a little as he says, ‘The Red Evil- I don’t…the Akramana are not-…were not-’

‘You do not have to tell me all- just that I am glad this confusion was somewhat solved,’ Jongdae tells him kindly.

‘You won’t be able to find more information on them,’ Jongdae continues as he starts to walk up the hallway again.

‘What do you mean?’

‘She was able to find some information-Em, your Captain’s information analyst. I was also looking into it before you arrived,’ JD states simply before saying bluntly, ‘You need to be careful.’

‘What do you mean?’ Jimin asks carefully- this wasn’t just a warning regarding his safety.

‘The Omhlophe were indeed involved with what you refer to as the Red Evil.’ JD explains. ‘They were what I believed based off of evidence discovered in the remains of the Akramanese mothership, as well as extensive investigation conducted by the GIU, that they were Beings, not too different from the way the GI are born.’

Jimin can’t help the sharp inhale he takes.

‘I may be wrong, and this is all conjecture, but I believe that when the Red Evil inherited the idea of re-genesis from the Yishengs, they attempted to recreate all species as a whole. The Omhlophe are most possibly, survivors or a result of these recreations. The same way the Yishengs created the GI, the Red Evil created the Omhlophe.’

‘They were referred to as the pure ones,’ Jimin quotes, remembering what had happened.

‘There….I am correct to assume that you know, what the Human in my ship is?’

Jongdae nods once. Jimin feels the skin on his face pull a little from where his tears had overflown. It feels unfamiliar that he had wept- because now, now-

‘I am also correct to assume that you know much about the eggs- the Or Tanks of Beings grown by both the Yishengs and the Red Evil?’

Jongdae nods again.

Jimin pauses before he decides to simply tell JD all he knew from Ynqaba. Everything from the eggs, the talk between Namjoon and the others, what Jungkook had told them about his past.

‘There were more- I know it. Not just Jungkook- based off of what I heard the Collectors say. Even the GI made appearances there considering they had their uniform in stock with them.’ Jimin concludes. ‘I do not believe that what you have said is conjecture- but perhaps one of the many truths we can now see.’

‘We have never been to Ynqaba or that region- but we were in a nearby region in the past,’ Jongdae comments, looking thoughtful.

‘Do you have it?’ Jimin asks quietly, carefully.

‘Have what?’

‘The mark. On your back?’

‘I had many marks,’ Jongdae tells him quietly, looking up as a shower of snowflakes fall about him afresh. ‘But I was made new again.’

‘What-…who was here?’ Jimin pauses at a blank stretch of wall.

‘You can feel it?’ JD asks, turning to glance back.

‘I recognize it. Or at least…’ Jimin now recognizes it. He’s not sure why but he doesn’t want to touch the wall despite how much his hand was itching too. He feels a small pull on his pant-legs, finding Andamaina behind him, shaking her head at him. Jimin takes a step back.

‘It called itself the Original Nightmare,’ JD says quietly, ‘Another failed creation.’

He could feel the echoes of it back there. He could feel the echoes of it in Sk’jin.

WHY ARE YOU HERE-
‘You’ve met it?’

‘No- no, just…just missed it,’ Jimin whispers.

Jongdae is looking at him curiously but doesn’t press for answers.

Memories were to be respected after all.

‘How do you do this?’ Jimin asks as he looks behind him at the endless hallway. This was not just some memory vault- everything in here breathed life.

In every sense of the word, this was all of Jongdae.

‘It’s not with everyone,’ Jongdae tells him as they approach the final door. ‘Not everyone can come here.’

There’s a quiet giggle and they both glance back, spotting Andamaina by one of the doorways.

‘How did you know I could come here?’ Jimin asks as they stop before the first door. Or was it the final one?

‘Time is strange,’ Jongdae says quietly, slowly reaching up to touch the surface of the door before them. ‘And we have lived through Time that existed beyond itself- a reality that does not exist here. And as those Beings, we carry that Time in us.’

Jongdae places his palm over the door and it seems to glow. Jimin can feel soft cool touches on his skin, like snow falling over him.

‘They all do,’ Jongdae continues. ‘Those who were born of that ship- those created from that Time; we all carry it in us.’

‘Can we return to that Time?’

Jongdae shakes his head.

‘It can come to you, repeat itself over and over- appear before your eyes; the way they always appeared before me.’ Jongdae removes his hand before reaching for the handle.

Jimin thinks back to the dark room, where Jongdae sat, unseeing but filled with want as Navvula’s laughter echoed around him.

‘You cannot return to it, but perhaps you can look at it.’

Now, Jimin realizes what the strange calm is.

‘Will I be able to return after I have looked?’

Jongdae has a melancholic expression in his eyes, ‘You will, but you don’t know what you might lose there- or what you might bring back.’

‘You brought light,’ Jimin comments, looking around and adding, ‘-and snow.’

Jongdae looks around, the melancholy replaced with something akin to pride and devotion.

‘I like it,’ Jimin smiles. ‘Your present is so…so full of light.’
‘I found my Light,’ Jongdae looks at him, a small smile on his face as he opens the door. ‘And I will follow him for as long as he will let me.’

Waking up was like falling asleep. The door that had previously been closed opened and Jimin is staring at a dark ceiling covered in wires. There’s some movement and a familiar figure appears above him.

‘How long were we sleeping?’ Jimin’s body feels heavy and lethargic. His limbs feel limp and oddly rubber like.

Namjoon smiles at him before reaching down to help him sit up.

‘Almost exactly 18 hours- enough for Taeh’yung to call over 500 times,’ he chuckles and then sighs as though exhausted.

Jongdae doesn’t look surprised by this information and sits up, his movements small and contained as he rolls and flexes his shoulders from having been stationary for so long.

‘I’ll tell them you’re up,’ Namjoon steps back. He looks tired but there’s a gleam in his eyes, a sense of grim satisfaction as well as though he learnt something new.

Jimin looks about the place, almost surprised to find everything startlingly normal and real.

‘Memories are incredibly real, Jimin,’ Jongdae says quietly, almost startling Jimin with the usage of his name. ‘But you cannot linger in them.’

Before Jimin can ask Jongdae to clarify, Kai appears, grinning easily at them. Clearly he’d spent some time with the others as he greets Namjoon with familiarity.

‘Are you done?’ Jimin asks instead, looking up at Namjoon.

Namjoon smiles wryly with a nod towards someone to the side and says, ‘We were done a couple of hours ago.’

‘Ah…so, did you ha-ha-have fun?’ Jimin stammers a bit with Standard, having felt so at ease speaking one of his native tongues.

Namjoon chuckles under his breath while someone snorts, clearly amused. They must have investigated more on the matter Jongdae had told him previously. Jimin sits up properly and takes a look around.

The other Being in the room is…interesting, to say the least.

Her soul felt similar to that of an Android’s life-force. But just a tad bit stronger. She’s wearing many robes- not the type Sk’jin liked to wear, but what appeared to be thick textured fabrics that swathed her oddly formless body. Jimin can’t be sure if she’s facing him or not. Extending from her short hands are long extensions that seem to move all on their own, with no sense of direction or purpose.

‘This is Ems- our Information Analyst,’ Kai introduces with a wave.

Ems waves her long fingers in greeting, not moving from her place that Jimin realizes is the center of this entire space.

‘Hi princeling- good nap?’ she asks.
Jimin flushes, not sure if he would be rude by correcting her name for him. Instead he chooses to nod and says, ‘Thank you for having us-‘

’-eh, ransacked as per usual. Always taken for granted- you leave me and then show up and then cause all of this ruckus I am sick of being used like this-‘

‘No, Ems, come on-‘

‘It’s not like that Ems-‘

Both Namjoon and Kai begin at once, though they both look amused as they placate her with gentle praise and flattery. A hand appears before him and Jimin looks up. Jongdae is already on his feet, looking not quite as illuminating as he did when they Slept. Taking a deep breath and bracing himself, Jimin takes Jongdae’s hand and stands on his feet.

There was still a lot he didn’t know, and what he knew now wasn’t entirely verifiable. But in his heart he knew.

‘Is everything good?’ Namjoon asks.

Jimin nods and says, ‘Everything is good.’

He knew what he had to do now.

Kai skips over to them with a bright smile and hands Jongdae a Comm-Device that the latter reaches for at once.

‘I guess it’s time we get going,’ Namjoon smiles and nods at Kai and Jongdae.

‘Yeah! Get the fuck out of my house!’ Em calls from her position, ‘Stop sucking up my air!’

‘It’s not like you really need it!’ Namjoon barks back with amusement.

It’s nice seeing Namjoon here- somehow lighter, in his element, feeling at ease because of how grown he was into this sort of environment. This sort of setting probably felt most like home to him.

‘Who wants to go first?’ Kai asks.

Namjoon raises his hand after a quick look at Jimin who nods.

‘Let’s go.’

Kai holds his hand up and the moment their hands meet they both vanish.

‘Time is not what we believe it to be,’ Jongdae tells him quietly, ‘You carry another Time within you, and by returning to it, you might find that things have changed.’

‘I know,’ Jimin replies, not surprised that Jongdae already knew what he was going to do.

‘Be careful,’ Jongdae finally looks at him, his eyes clear and electric, ‘Trust no one.’

Jimin almost jolts at his words. He briefly wonders what happened that Jongdae’s eyes had once clouded over in permanent blindness.

‘What-‘
‘Belief, hope, redemption—these are things we all have, it is a common force within all of us. But where it comes from, where it is born, are all different.’ Jongdae tells him quickly, ‘Some are born from pain, some are born from fire—some are born of desperate promises.’

Kai returns, smiling as he holds up his hand respectfully.

Jongdae steps back, his gaze still holding Jimin’s.

‘Jongdae—’ Jimin tries.

Kai looks between them, clearly wondering if he should step away.

‘Trust only what you See,’ Jongdae takes another step back. ‘Trust only what they are born of.’

Returning to the Užkulisai, Jimin almost feels a strange sense of disassociation.

He had been born into this ship, and what he saw, what he heard, what he knew, was born of this ship.

But in this moment, after walking through Time and Memory, he almost doesn’t recognize it. He knows he’s in the Lobby of the Second Level—but at the same time, it feels entirely unlike itself.

‘Are you okay? It does take some time to adjust,’ Kai says kindly just as Jimin hears loud yelling and thundering footsteps.

‘Yes,’ Jimin smiles up at the Dakaṣayaii, ‘Maybe dizzy?’

‘That happens,’ Kai chortles as he steps aside just in time because Taeh’yung dives into the air, a bright wide grin on his face and Jimin has braced himself to fall back onto the floor but it never comes. Because instead he’s not standing, instead he’s been scooped up and away, and the sound of something heavy painfully landing on the ground fills the air.

Of course it’s Yoongi.

‘I wasn’t going to hurt him—’ Taeh’yung wails from the floor just as Jungkook appears, Sk’jin behind him looking very amused. ‘-I missed him-’

‘Are you all right?’

Yoongi’s voice is quiet and meant only for him.

Jimin looks away from Taeh’yung’s wails, Kai’s high-pitched chuckles, and Sk’jin’s teasing comments to address the Human who had quite literally plucked him away from Taeh’yung’s well meaning greeting.

He almost forgets, that Yoongi had recoloured his hair.

Since the moment Jimin had awoken, Yoongi has had blue hair, fading into a odd washed out sky blue. But now it’s dark, a little dry, and painfully familiar.

It’s not just the hair.

It’s not just Yoongi.

The walls behind him, the sound of Taeh’yung’s whines, Sk’jin snorts, of the conversations, the sounds of the ship—everything is familiar and just-
‘I am,’ and Jimin surges forward, wrapping his arms around the Human in a tight hug. ‘I missed you.’

Now that he was back, Jimin feels it. How much he had missed Yoongi- and how now, seeing him and having him in his arms, finally settled the disassociation. He pulls away gently, smiling at a slightly wide-eyed Yoongi.

‘Literally- that was quite the hit and miss,’ Sk’jin snorts as he leans against the wall while Jungkook shuffles forward, keeping a distance between himself and Kai as he approaches Jimin.

‘I’ll get going now then- thanks for the food and stories,’ Kai smiles, nodding at Sk’jin who graciously returns the nod with a flip of his now dark hair.

‘Kai- please wait,’ Jimin stops the Dakaṣayaii before he can teleport.

Kai pauses, a questioning but open expression on his face.

‘One minute,’ Jimin says as he quickly darts into his Cabin ignoring the cramps on his legs from having slept too long. Inside, he rummages inside the closet before finding what he was looking for. Finding an appropriate soft-clothed stretch of cloth, he wraps the smooth Grisial crystal the size of his thumb in the cloth and quickly makes his way back to Kai and the others.

The Dakaṣayaii still looks at him questioningly but doesn’t refuse the small bundle and takes it in his hand.

‘Can you give this to Jon-JD?’

‘Of course,’ Kai smiles. ‘What is it for?’

‘For- uh- for beauty.’

Kai doesn’t seem remotely confused by his reply and instead smiles and nods.

‘Okay then-‘

‘JONGIN DON’T LEAVE!’ Taeh’yung pounces on the Dakaṣayaii, long arms wrapping around Kai like restraints.

‘Tae please-‘ Sk’jin walks over again, looking comically exhausted.

‘Hey, next time we can go visit the others, how about that?’ Kai struggles to speak as he rights himself with the help of Sk’jin who watches with a smile akin to a strained mother. ‘When you’re all done and safe with all of this yeah?’

Taeh’yung brightens up at this.

‘Of course! And when you see Baek again, tell him he’ll be proud!’ Taeh’yung lets go and stands up straight, taller than the Dakaṣayaii even though he had successfully made himself look inches shorter. ‘I did a great thing!’

Kai chortles and agrees easily.

‘And! And! Kiss Cheimi for me?’

A strange look passes Kai’s face before he huffs out a laugh and with a funny smile says, ‘I don’t know about that- but I’ll see.’
Taeh’yung just grins and waves his long arms in farewell.

‘Good luck,’ the Dakaṣayaii says, nodding at them. ‘Be careful.’

Sk’jin smiles and bows his head gracefully.

And just like that, the Dakaṣayaii vanishes.

‘That’ll always look a little creepy,’ Hoseok comments before adding, ‘Welcome back Jimin.’

‘Thank you,’ Jimin smiles, looking up at one of the cameras up on the ceiling.

‘Are you hungry?’ Sk’jin asks, clearly in a much better mood from the last time Jimin saw him. ‘Made a bunch of food. Mainly Human because remember Kyungsoo? He’s a really good cook- apparently he’s head-chef of his ship.’ He cackles a moment before adding, ‘He gave me some recipes.’

‘Eat?’ Jungkook asks, looking hesitant but also pleased. He’s nervous, Jimin notices, and immediately recognizes why. Giving Yoongi’s hand a gentle squeeze, he reaches over for Jungkook who immediately ducks under his arm.

‘Yes! Eat!’

Jungkook smiles brightly at him and it’s almost enough to break Jimin’s heart again.

He had such a beautiful soul- so young, so gentle; bruised but healing, scarred but healing. If there was any reason to do this, then it would be for Jungkook.

For Jungkook and the others out there just like him.

‘You met him didn’t you?’ Taeh’yung asks, voice low in his ears, his tone downright gleeful as he studies Jimin’s face. ‘You have some snowflakes on you.’

‘I did,’ Jimin smiles.

‘He’s great,’ Taeh’yung grins.

‘Who is?’ Namjoon asks, reappearing from his Cabin, dressed in new clothes and looking a little more awake.

‘Me,’ Sk’jin says pointedly and adds, ‘Because I’m an amazing cook.’

Jemin is almost worried that Namjoon might take offense. He’s not overreacting in the slightest because Namjoon and Sk’jin have fought over less. But instead Namjoon rolls his eyes good naturedly and says, ‘I’m sure you are.’ And it doesn’t sound condescending.

Jemin is reminded of Jongdae’s words and realizes the accuracy in them. Was it because of the Time they shared, that he just knew about it, or if it was just a lucky circumstance- but something tells Jimin it wasn’t luck.

The same way Jimin could see the snow, the same way he could feel the dry sand of a parched and forgotten desert, Jongdae had obviously been able to feel them.

Namjoon’s resolve, his drive, his existence was born from pain.

Hoseok’s motivation, his need for redemption, for something to take away what he wrought with his hands, was born of fire.

Sk’jin’s chaotic spirit, his strained resolve, his guilt, was born of broken promises.

They all had something, a reason that though right here, right now, appeared identical- the reasoning, the personal meaning, and expectations they all had were vastly different from each other’s.

Different from Jimin’s.

Jimin trusts them all. Trusts that they will do what they say.

And now he knows.

‘All right, now that we’re all here- I can begin,’ Namjoon announces.

‘You never stopped, how do you begin if you don’t stop?’ Sk’jin mumbles from the Kitchen counter. Namjoon rolls his eyes again, and it’s not heavy with irritation or annoyance. It’s almost friendly and Jimin is confused. He looks at Yoongi for an answer but the Human just gives him the tiniest shrug and directs him towards a chair at the table.

‘Hobi?’ Taeh’yung calls out loudly, making Jungkook flinch a little at his volume.

‘I’m here!’ Hoseok announces as he makes his way down the stairs. ‘Just making some adjustment with the autopilot.

Outside, Jimin notices how they’re still in Grisial. It pains him now to look at it. Knowing what he knew now- this was no longer a place of bright lights, of beauty and wonder.

It was now a place of disappointment, sorrow, and loss.

Jimin moves away from the chair Yoongi had pulled out for him, and instead taking the Human’s hand, guides them to the other side of the table, putting their backs to the view of the window. Yoongi doesn’t say anything, but simply follows.

Jimin eases himself on the kitchen stool, fighting the urge to slump onto the counter and just sleep. He’s exhausted in more than one way but he’s filled with a sense of renewed realization. He feels movement next to him and Yoongi has adjusted their seats so that he sat behind Jimin, angling himself so that Jimin could lean on him.

‘Thank you,’ he breathes out, leaning back.

Yoongi’s hair is dark, and with the way he was looking at him, it makes him remember Jongdae’s words.

‘Memories are incredibly real, Jimin. But you cannot linger in them.’

‘Did something happen?’ Yoongi asks quietly, taking his hands into his own. He studies their hands as though his life depended on it.

‘I saw Dreams- more Dreams,’ Jimin explains quietly as Sk’jin begins to loudly complain about how no one took his cooking seriously and was taken for granted.

‘Sk’jin’s dramatics aside,’ Namjoon clears his throat after taking an indulgent sip of tea. Sk’jin huffs mightily, but it’s more for Jungkook’s amusement who grins delightedly at the way Sk’jin was acting.
It warms Jimin’s heart.

‘Now that we’re all here and we’re almost at the edge of Grisial- I think we need to re-adjust our plans and put together new information.’ Namjoon announces. Jimin would have smiled at the serious and slightly staged manner in which Namjoon spoke, as though trying to mimic other captains or leaders during meetings.

‘First of all, I was able to find out a lot of information about Ynqaba, as well as the Yisheng ship that crashed there, but is apparently still in existence in the Pomoč Nebula.’

Namjoon slides his NaviLet towards the center of the dining table and taps over the surface. Two holographic images take form. One from the footage recorded by the Užkulisai, the other from the official GLA archives of the previously mentioned ship.

Buried and covered in decades of rubble and erosion, the massive ship still bore a vague semblance to the perfectly functional model on the right.

‘These are models that were in existence before the new ones came out. They’re still used in areas that are a bit more harsh- for example the Pomoč Nebula,’ Namjoon taps at the screen and a map of the Pomoč Nebula appears in a swirl of cosmic clouds an stars. ‘There’s a massive pulsar in there, and so the Yishengs are watching over the evacuation of the 8 exoplanets there. It’s been in operation for almost a decade now.’

‘Is there more to it?’ Sk’jin asks with a wry smile. Namjoon snorts around his cup of tea before nodding.

‘So much,’ he states, ‘When we first looked it up, we initially thought it might have been under Yisheng Amme’s control. But it isn’t- it’s actually under Yisheng Ndica’s control.’

‘But he died,’ Hoseok frowns, ‘Right?’

‘Nothing official,’ Namjoon rolls his eyes. ‘But definitely out of commission-’

‘Dead!’ Taeh’yung beams in confirmation, hands holding up “v” signs.

Everyone stares at him for a second before they all just take his word for it, without question.

‘All right then, so if it’s a dead Yisheng’s ship, whose is it now?’ Sk’jin asks.

‘All Yisheng property belongs to the Yisheng Headquarters- or at least, it used to before. But now, all Yishengs and especially all uh, gone Yisheng property belongs to the GIU,’ Namjoon shrugs one shoulder and says with a short laugh, ‘This is under K’mara’s watch.’

Hoseok whistles low.

‘Of course because it’s GIU, we can’t really get into their archives, they’re separated from the GLA,’ Namjoon continues. ‘K’mara couldn’t get the GI, but she could get all of the Yisheng property. We all know how massive the GI motherships are- but with additional Yisheng ships under their command- they’ve taken most of the Yisheng’s power and influence.’

‘But that means it’s basically impossible to access their information,’ Hoseok frowns. ‘We can’t figure out what or how this duplicate came to form when the original happens to be in Ynqaba.’

‘No, but the GIU is still under the GLA to an extent- they need to give up their information anytime the GLA sees fit,’ Namjoon replies, ‘Basically anyone under the GLA employment can ask for information.’

‘So…you faked an ID?’ Sk’jin asks dubiously.

‘No- I didn’t have to. Because our new comrades at the Stravechi Nava decided they wanted to aid the evacuation in Pomoč and sent an inquiry. The GIU had to give them all of the information, and Kai was of course, kind enough to pass it all to us.’

Hoseok grins at that.

‘So needless to say, Kai and his crew members were able to access some data,’ Namjoon emphasizes lightly. ‘And now we know this.’

He taps a few times and the model of the Yisheng ship shows clearly.

‘This model was made 45 sols ago- past the time of its intended manufacture. From the information based off of this model, production was stopped 80 sols ago. There is of course no reason to recreate an older model, especially if you already have a new one that’s better.’ Namjoon nods at the model again as it slowly spins. ‘Also, this was not manufactured in Tayi- it was manufactured in the System of Axudar.’

Jimin almost jolts out of his seat.

This is the place Jongdae had mentioned to him. He had said it might still hold some matter of importance to this mission- might still hold some answers. But it had been so long ago.

But maybe now- maybe now it wasn’t so.

‘This is an extremely interesting System,’ Namjoon continues, ‘It’s actually a System that we had planned out as a stop before getting to Bhu- uh, Megibīya. At least one of the locations in our many routes to get there. But I guess considering all of our routes have the same risk as well as benefits- we could actually go here.’

‘What else is there other than this ship having been made there?’ Hoseok asks as he indicates towards the holographic ship with a sausage-skewed fork. Jungkook watches the sausage with wide eyes, mouth already filled with food. Hoseok deposits the sausage on Jungkook’s plate, making the latter blush a little, ducking his head in thanks.

‘This might be a stretch- and it also might seem a little…’ Namjoon pauses, clearly thinking of the correct way to word it, ‘-vague. But we found something that seems to connect Axudar with Megibīya.’

Everyone’s eyes naturally flicker towards Jimin and he thinks it’s justified if he looks shocked.

‘There’s a myth- a lore of sorts in Axudar,’ Namjoon begins and he adds with his hands held up as though to block any form of accusation or disbelief. ‘It’s called the “Eclipsing Travellers”- and it’s based off of their astrological beliefs.’

Jimin feels distinctly uncomfortable.

‘What is it about?’

He’s always surprised by how normal he sounds despite feeling anything but.

‘Like all planets- their view on the cosmic sky is simply a selective view of the universe from their orbit around their sun- and for many millennia they’ve always documented and observed a few stars- or unidentified cosmic bodies – from their System.’

‘Menigišiti,’ Yoongi comments before Jimin can.

Namjoon nods, ‘I believe that’s what it is- we calculated and projected their images and documentation of the stars and yes- it fits nearly perfectly with where Megibïya is. And if as Jimin had suspected before, if his System did sometimes lose their camouflage ability, they would have been able to see the light of their sun- creating a rather eclipsing effect of visibility to observers.’

‘You think this is where maybe all those years ago, they were able to find Jimin’s System?’ Sk’jin asks.

‘It’s a possibility. Axudar has 3 habitable planets and they’re all a part of the GLA. For a long time. And not just that, but Ndica was born there.’ Namjoon says carefully as he taps on the screen and a planet appears instead of the ship. ‘He is a native of the planet of Kaitûtei. And I don’t want to… imply anything, but they are the original founders of one of the scientific boards that supported the Theory of Digitized Souls.’

Hoseok and Sk’jin’s expression changes.

‘That explains a lot about Ndica,’ Hoseok comments under his breath.

‘So I’m guessing this planet is very open to “scientific experiments and research”?’ Sk’jin asks lightly.

‘Very open is putting it mildly. They linger just below the “illegal” line in terms of research. Of course they’re careful with it- and well, for the past few centuries that Ndica was alive and was Yisheng, the amount of illegal activities surrounding their “scientific endeavours” has been reduced. Of course that might just be because of Ndica’s influence, but it could-’

‘-could also be that he covered it all up,’ Hoseok completes, leaning back on his chair as he thinks. ‘I’ve never been to Axudar.’

‘Well that’s because Kaitûtei is under GLA Environmental Protection,’ Namjoon states clearly.

‘What the fuck is that?’ Sk’jin asks in disbelief.

‘My question exactly,’ Namjoon replied, ‘But we didn’t have to look far- it’s actually a protection given to certain planets that have specific weather slash environments that are stagnant in their natural state- like maybe a magma-based planet, on a completely frozen tundra like Helada.’ He taps on a planet that looks more like a white chiseled marble than a planet. ‘You cannot go mainly for your own safety. Only with special permission or if you have a native returning back.’

‘Please tell me one of us could pass off as a native,’ Sk’jin asks, staring blankly at Hoseok at that.

‘He can’t,’ Namjoon laughs. ‘But it won’t be needed. Actually, I have new identities created for all of us. And this is where Kookie will be able to help. Only if he wants of course,’ Namjoon adds quickly. ‘We can do it without Jungkook’s agreement.’

‘I want to help,’ Jungkook states immediately.

‘Kookie honey you don’t even know what it is,’ Sk’jin says at once, directing a glare at Namjoon.

‘He doesn’t have to do anything of that sort. We’re not going to give him up or anything. Axudar has two other planets- one of them houses, quite convenient to Ndica and his fellow conspirators plan of domination, a center for taking in refugees or Beings who have lost their planets.’

The familiar dread returns in full force in Jimin’s stomach. He realizes he hasn’t been able to eat a single bite since Namjoon started speaking.

‘This is Kaitütei’s neighbouring planet, they’re quite close actually- Māhanga. It’s one of the… craftier planets in the System- and this one is not protected by the GLA.’ Namjoon smiles, evidently pleased.

‘Craftier how?’ Hoseok inquires as he leans in, studying the planet on display.

‘It’s one of the leading planets in bio-engineering and research in Android technology. They’re not always mentioned, because the public generally assumes all of this research is based in Tayi but-’

‘-it’s a larger community.’ Sk’jin frowns. ‘It's a large scientific research community. Because Tayi is clean- well, it’s clean because we assume the Yishengs are clean. No research can actually always be ethical-’

‘-it can,’ Jimin and Taeh’yung say at the same time.

Sk’jin frowns at this before deciding not to argue it and he continues, ‘-so most of the “darker” aspects of research are kept elsewhere. So I’m guessing Māhanga is one of them.’

Namjoon nods, ‘So that’s where we’ll be going. Our claim is that we discovered Jungkook when we were raided by pirates. We managed to escape, and Jungkook here is a stowaway. And like every trading company would when they find a stowaway, they bring them back to a center where they won’t be questioned about their legal or illegal activities.’

Hoseok nods to that before asking, ‘I don’t want to be a party pooper but-‘ Taeh’yung sniggers at that, ‘- I know it’s important we understand more of what happened to better prepare for what we might find but. How is this exactly related to our mission.’

Namjoon nods at that question, as though agreeing to it. ‘That’s why I said that it might be a little vague. But we know for a fact that Yisheng Ndica was part of the Panel that was part of the GLA envoy that negotiated with Jimin and his System. And from what we say in Ynqaba, it’s safe to say that Ndica had also approached that area and now it is how we last saw it. Also, we found Jungkook there,’ he smiles at the young Being who smiles back. ‘-the connection is too clear.’

‘By going there, what do we hope to find out that we cannot access through the archives?’ Hoseok asks again.

‘Again, based on our past experiences- with not just Ynqaba, but with Pompa, with Orvan- there is more than what we are simply given or shown in the archives. And all of this information- things we considered secret regarding things like the Alliance, or how there was a massive war and take over in an entire System – or even Jimin’s System. These are all things that we never could find in database. But things that were glaringly obvious once we got there.’ Namjoon tells him earnestly. Jimin notices how Sk’jin is watching Namjoon, a strange look in his eyes as he studies the Kutsoglerin.

‘What about Yoongi?’ Hoseok asks.

Yoongi looks like he wants to ask ‘what about me?’ but Namjoon seems to know exactly what he meant.
'We dug into it of course. We dug in deeper into Yoongi’s past record. But what I had been able to find was all that was available. Even with 3 of us digging through- we also found no notification, no single indication of the existence of the GLA group he was part of. There are a lot of communities under the GLA as well as Venture Unit, GIU that have smaller sub-organizations that fall under the similar description. But they’re all either under the Venture Unit or certain Divisions of the GLA like Planetary Relations, or even the Division of Technology and Development. But there was none that fit Yoongi’s description despite there being recorded footage of Yoongi’s trips.’

‘What about the GI? How does that narrative fit in?’ Hoseok inquires.

None of Hoseok’s questions were meant to be condescending or questioning Namjoon’s research- but rather as a means of making sure that they were able to do all they could to secure their safety.

‘Of course from what we know from the Gaia Case, Ndica wasn’t directly involved in the creation of GI- but that doesn’t mean his information wasn’t given to his fellow Yishengs when they were still debating or finalizing their plans of a takeover. What we can learn about what they do- can maybe give us an insight to how it could have influenced the design the make- how they could have possibly been conceived,’ Namjoon adds with a look at Yoongi. ‘It may not answer anything. But if we’re able to see the roots-

‘-if we can go back to the inception of this technology, to where it was born, then maybe we have a better chance of understanding it,’ Yoongi concludes.

Namjoon nods to that while Sk’jin also seems to be in agreement.

‘And Tlun’hla was, even by their standard, rather fanatic in his beliefs regarding his own divinity and superiority.’ Namjoon adds, ‘This can also give us insight-’

‘He was really into it,’ Taeh’yung comments randomly, ‘When they questioned me about my abilities they thought I would have been useful but I was too wild to control.’

There’s pin-drop silence in the kitchen.

‘They what-?’ Namjoon near-screeches.

Hoseok’s jaw drops to the ground, and Sk’jin closes his eyes as though pained by what he was looking at.

‘Yeah- it’s why I was put in Teronko’ng Prison until Kai, and Baek, and-’ Taeh’yung pauses suddenly before continuing, ‘Until I was rescued!’

‘They locked you up?’

Taeh’yung shrugs as he eats again, ‘I think they said something about me being too powerful to kill? But they didn’t want me about? So they put me in prison. Also I didn’t really like them. Worshiping some old alien like it knew everything and was right-’ Taeh’yung rolls his eyes, ‘- doesn’t allow for personal growth you know? Absolutely no character development.’

Too powerful to kill?

There was no doubt to Jimin that Taeh’yung possessed in him something far older, far more powerful, and far darker than anything he could hope to even understand. But if the Yishengs dared not try to touch him…
‘They found you after what you did in Ymir?’

Taeh’yung nods, ‘I think they thought I might be able to help. Wasn’t interested- sounded boring.’

It’s with a shared shiver with everyone around the table that Jimin is grateful that Taeh’yung was the way he is.

‘It feels risky,’ Hoseok says slowly. ‘But I see exactly what you’re getting at.’

‘We won’t do it even if a single Being on this table doesn’t agree.’ Namjoon tells them all again, repeating what he said before. ‘We will only continue if everyone agrees.’

‘What do you think?’ Yoongi asks quietly from the side.

‘Oh right- was there anything interesting you had with your meeting?’ Hoseok asks. ‘With the person who had information about Megibiya.’

Sk’jin raises an eyebrow at him in question as well.

‘He just…’ Jimin pauses, looking down at the spoon in his hands. The handle is lightly hammered, creating a textured pattern in multi-facets across the cylindrical surface. On it, he can see multiple reflections of everyone around him.

‘How many Yoongs do you see?’

‘He just showed me his past,’ Jimin says looking up, ‘What happened to him, how he met my people. How he died.’

No one asks questions, still waiting for Jimin to continue.

‘I saw a lot- I…felt a lot.’ Jimin looks down again, hand gripping the spoon. ‘I am still trying to understand what I saw. I need more.’

Jimin glances around at everyone on the table before lingering on Yoongi who is starting down at his hand, gripped around the spoon.

‘More Dreams.’

★

Sighing quietly to himself, Jimin shrugs on his clean shirt, ignoring the way his skin still felt a little damp. He tries not to look at himself in the mirror too much but he can’t. Now with what he had seen.

It’s strange.
Because the way Time blanketed and weighed JD, impossibly layered and heavy, a strain like an elastic bond stretched to its limit.

Jimin sees it every time he looks into a mirror.

He pats his bare head dry, the scars and bruises nearly almost all healed and gone. Carefully, he pulls the soft fabric beanie over his head. When he steps out of the little en-suite, Yoongi is there by the desk, standing straight and nearly lifelessly. His only movement is to blink as he looks at Jimin, as though waiting for him to say something.

Jimin makes his way over to the desk, looking out of the window for a moment before tapping along the surface of he HUD and dimming the thick reinforced glass to drown the light. Instead a soft nightlight illuminates the room.

Yoongi slowly takes his hand, making Jimin look away from the dim window.

Jimin can’t look at Yoongi.

‘What did you see?’

Yoongi waits patiently as Jimin takes a while to construe his words.

In here with Yoongi everything feels incredibly raw again. Was it because Yoongi had been there? Or was it because of the possibility that Yoongi knew more than he was aware?

Or because Yoongi knew more than he wanted to remember?

‘I was blind,’ Jimin manages to get out. ‘That was what I saw. I was blind.’

Yoongi’s other hand reaches up and angles Jimin to face him.

‘It was not your time,’ Yoongi says quietly, his gaze never moving away from Jimin for a second.

That doesn’t explain anything- neither does it really answer anything. But strangely it means something to Jimin.

Yoongi takes his hand away from where he was gripping the edge of the table and places it against the side of his face. He closes his eyes, sighing out quietly.

Jimin’s never really noticed it this clearly but Yoongi has thick lashes. They’re sweeping to the side, creating a sharp outline over his eyes. Leaning in, Jimin quietly kisses Yoongi’s closed eyes.

There’s another sigh and Yoongi reaches blindly for Jimin’s other hand. Placing his hand in Yoongi’s, Jimin laughs quietly as Yoongi raises it to the other side of his face. Then suddenly he pulls back, surprising Jimin as he stands in front of him. He laughs breathlessly when Yoongi leans in close to wrap his arms around him, lifting him up onto the desk and leaning in closer.

‘I missed you,’ the Human says quietly, eyes still closed, soaking in on the feeling of Jimin’s hands on his face.

Jimin gently draws his thumbs up and down Yoongi’s cheeks, leaning forward on the table so that he’s pretty much sitting at the very edge to be closer to the Human.

‘I think I’ve missed you forever,’ Yoongi whispers. ‘Before I Woke up, before I Knew- I’ve always missed you.’
It’s back again but twice as painful- it’s a physical palpable pain and it’s a unique heartbreak unlike anything Jimin has ever experienced before.

‘And I just- I don’t know-’ Yoongi’s eyes are still closed, but his brows furrow a little bit.

‘You don’t know what?’ Jimin asks, voice cracking to a whisper.

‘Why does it hurt?’

‘W-what hurts?’

‘Everything- everything hurts-…when you touch me-’

On instinct Jimin tries to pull his hands away but Yoongi holds onto them, the furrow between his brows deepening. He steps closer as well, close enough for Jimin to acutely feel the warmth of his body against his own.

‘-when I hear you, when you laugh, when you kiss me, when you look at me.’

Yoongi opens his eyes, arresting Jimin’s gaze, making it impossible to look away.

‘But it hurts more when you don’t- and…I don’t-…why-’

Kissing Yoongi is easy. It feels natural. It feels right.

And the way Yoongi holds him, the way he seems to want to never let go. And Jimin holds him just as close, not realizing that he was crying until Yoongi’s fingers reach up to trail up after their movement. They pause, lips still touching, sharing their breath in the dim cool darkness of his Cabin.

‘Something has changed,’ Yoongi states in a low voice as he pulls away. ‘What did you see when you saw him?’

‘You know him?’

‘I saw him before.’ Yoongi replies. ‘I saw them, and it was confusing.’

Yoongi is looking at him as though he’s realized something. Jimin wants to ask, but he doesn’t know how.

‘But not anymore,’ Yoongi whispers before kissing him lightly again and whispering against his lips, ‘What did you see?’

‘I saw a lot,’ Jimin closes his eyes. ‘And I have so much more to see.’

‘Dreams?’

‘Dreams.’

‘Whose dreams?’

Jemin opens his eyes, looking down at Yoongi.

‘Yours and mine.’

‘How?’
‘I- I want to try something,’ Jimin tells the Human.

‘What is it?’ Yoongi asks

Jimin holds his hand up, palm up.

‘I think there is- there is something, that only we know,’ Jimin says quietly. ‘Something that…only we can know- only we can find.’

‘What is it?’

‘I don’t know- but I want to find it. I want to know why-‘

Jimin thinks back to Andamaina, back to Navvula, back to his people- who all returned to Megibiya, holding onto the idea of hope- of their Home.

He thinks of what he has learnt from Namjoon, from Hoseok, from Sk’jin, from Taeh’yung.

He thinks of the GLA, of the Yishengs, of the Treaty, of the Panel that were headed to Akramana- he thinks of his sister.

And he thinks of Yoongi- of the blurred faces from his dreams and memories- of his past so intertwined with Jimin’s very existence.

‘What can I do?’

Yoongi offers no hesitation, no apprehension.

‘Lead me where you will, and I will follow.’

‘Would you like to Sleep?’
(Author’s Notes)

Okay you know what
From the last time I updated
There’s been so much
That’s happened
I can’t even begin to explain???? Or describe my emotions????????
I just?!?!??! Really!!!?!?!?! Love!!!?!??! Bts!!!?!?!!! Bless my children forever
Please everyone!! Tell me how you’ve been! Tell me what you think of this chapter!!
I’ll be updating this month and a bit into next year!! I also have this small personal project I’ve had since early this year and it’s a yoonmin 6-chaptered fic and I’ve written 2 chapters already appx! I also got!!!!!!!
OMG GUYS I GOT COMMISSIONED TO WRITE A FIC??????????????
IM SHOOK????????????????????
LIKE
WHAT????????????
So yeah
A yoonmin fic hehehehe
ALSO MY THESIS WENT GREAT MY PROFESSORS APPLAUDED ME AFTER MY FINAL PRESENTATION FOR THESIS 1
I NEARLY FUCKING CRIED
I WAS SO EMOTIONAL
For anyone interested my thesis is original 3D visual development for a VR game!
coughsitsactuallyyoonminfromadegubutalteredtofitavideogamemyprofessorshavenoideaitssbasically gunshot noises
I’ve been Love shot
gunshot noises
Watching MAMA tonight was the biggest mistake of my life
I CAME HERE FOR A GOOD TIME AND GREAT PERFORMANCES AND
AND
HOBI AND JIN OUT HERE MAKING ME SOB- LIKE CHEST-PAIN SOB, UGLY
SOB
Actually I didn’t cry because I am A HARD HEARTED BITCH but I did tear up and my throat closed up and I couldn’t breathe
How did y’all fare?
He wants to sleep. He needs to sleep.

So when his back finally curves into the softness of his mattress, Yoongi is already shutting his eyes. A delicious sense of relief, rest, and peace engulfs him. He breathes out slow, slipping into the depths of a welcomed darkness-

‘Yoongi?’

Jolting up, heart racing, Yoongi sits up, back against a tall and wide tree. The air feels red, the sky red, the sunrise just barely reaching through the leaves to shine on them.

It’s unsettling to see them like this. It’s strange to see them here, and not look at this from there.

Yoongi watches himself, unsure how to process this. Unsure how to process that there was another Yoongi there- that there was another Jimin there.

‘This is your memory- our memory,’ Jimin tells him quietly from next to him.

His hand is in Jimin’s, following him from the dark of his unconsciousness and into the red light of his memories- no, of their Dreams.

‘How are we here?’ Yoongi asks, turning about inside the forest before looking down at Jimin. The soft beanie he’s wearing is stained a dull reddish hue, the light around them washing them both in a strange filter of colour. ‘How are…how are you doing this?’

Jimin looks away from them, away from where they’re now crouching outside the broken walls and terrifying heights of the tower built into the windy mountain side.

‘Is this the first Dream you had?’ Jimin asks, the eclipse in his eyes brighter than before. Somehow the light of the red sky above doesn’t colour Jimin’s gaze and Yoongi finds himself staring, just drinking in the brightness of a light untainted and pure.

‘No,’ Yoongi replies after a long while. ‘I saw Yoongi’s sister. I saw Earth.’
‘Take me there,’ Jimin asks him, squeezing his hand.

‘I don’t know how.’ Yoongi replies honestly.

‘Then we’ll find it,’ Jimin smiles, guiding him into the door that lead into the tower.

It’s disconcerting, Yoongi supposes, seeing himself (or the original Yoongi at least) on the floor. This is what it had looked like to Jimin. The entire situation feels new to Yoongi, looking at it from a different perspective.

‘I think- I think here,’ Jimin says softly, kneeling besides his other self.

Yoongi isn’t quite sure how to process this, but he too kneels.

The other Jimin is speaking too, but somehow it’s almost as though he can’t hear him. Can’t understand.

The Yoongi on the floor is ghostly white, but he’s attempting to smile.

There’s a confusing moment where Yoongi is looking at this scene, but at the same time he’s living it; Jimin’s face is drawn, his spirit broken, and all he wants to do is hold him-

Jimin takes out a small glittery hair clip and hands it to him.

Yoongi takes the clip and puts it on to his hair with shaking hands. Jimin is quick to help him, gently setting it into his matted strands. Jimin looks terrified and heartbroken. And Yoongi is a little selfish because he wants to see him smile.

So he strikes a pose, a terrible one in fact. Jimin is crying, tears sparkling down his cheeks, nodding as he tries to smile. He says something, as though indulging Yoongi in his little fevered attempts to create a lighter atmosphere. It makes Yoongi laugh, and this in turn makes Jimin smile for real. His eyes crinkling, smile wide enough to push up his cheeks.

‘Sunshine,’ Yoongi holds his hand out towards Jimin, confident that he would take it.

Jimin is quick to take his proffered hand, and instead of just holding it, presses it to his face.

What Yoongi would do to have this for the rest of his life. To feel Jimin like this- close, intimate, and so precious.

But Yoongi would disregard all of that, if it meant Jimin could be safe. If it meant he could return home, away from this place, away from this disease, away from all of this pain.

‘Yoongi.’

Yoongi is startled to find himself looking down at the scene he was living just moments ago. He was…he was not on the floor- this was different. Jimin was not looking down at him, tears overflowing from his eyes.

Jimin is standing next to him, and in his hand is the small clip.

‘Look at me,’ he says quietly, turning and standing before Yoongi, blocking the scene behind them. There’s a rushing sound of the wind and Yoongi wants to turn, wants to watch even though he knows what’s about to happen. But Jimin lifts his free hand, palm curving to fit the side of his face and holds his gaze.
‘Take me to your first dream,’ he tells him as the room floods with the sound of red - the sound of death, of loss. He feels Jimin’s hand taking his own, a small object pressing into his palm and then -

_The sun is shining._

_It’s warm. Maybe a bit too warm. But there’s a gentle breeze that blows about occasionally and the sweat on his skin cools. He fights the urge to yawn, instead opting to stretch his arms over his head. He blocks the sun with his hands for a while, rings of light burst through his fingers, light splitting into spectrums of colour for a fraction of a second._

He can breathe. He was no longer on the floor, no longer collapsing as death converged upon them.

‘Earth,’ Jimin exhales quietly, looking around the memory with an awed expression.

‘Don’t look at the sun! You _know_ that the eclipse is going to take place soon- do you want to fry your eyes?’

‘Yoongi,’ Jimin points upwards, ‘Look.’

And then he smiles at him and when Yoongi blinks, Jimin’s eyes are reflecting in the sky above.

‘Just dream-’

He snorts, rolling his eyes and looking over to the side. He was in the process of dozing off, pretty sure he was about to start dreaming but _noooooooo_-

‘So hand me those glasses and stop complaining.’

‘GUYS! HEY GUYS! COME OVER HERE AND CHECK THIS OUT!’ a loud voice yells.

‘Please control your sister’s volume settings I swear to god the entire neighbourhood can hear her.’ Amic groans next to him.

‘Just because she’s AI doesn’t mean she has “settings” what the fuck-’ Yoongi grimaces at his best friend.

‘Don’t tell me you didn’t ask your parents for a remote control for her settings-’ Amic asks, reminding Yoongi of his naïve assumptions as a child.

‘I was _five_ let it go-’ Yoongi groans.

‘I SAID COME CHECK THIS OUT YOU ASSHOLES-’ she screeches from the other end of the patio, making both Yoongi and Amic nearly fall off of low reclining chairs.

‘WE’RE COMING FOR FUCK’S SAKE CONTROL YOUR VOLUME-’ Yoongi screeches back.

‘Siblings indeed you both swear so much-’ Amic chortles as he makes to stand, his lanky long arms grazing the extended ceiling over the patio.

‘Shut the fuck up-’ Yoongi replies without any malice.

The floorboards are warmed by the sun and they’re dry under his bare feet. It’s a lazy afternoon and the urge to nap is slowly overtaking his senses. God knows he’ll need more sleep after they leave Earth, he just wants to store up on all the sleep he can possibly get now. They walk over to where Chaewon was waiting for them, a small telescope in her hand, and a screen in the other.
‘Finally- come check this out!’ she beckons them over hurriedly, nearly losing the screen in the process.

She just turned 13 last week and to celebrate turning into a teenager, she decided to chop off a majority of her hair, leaving it into a silky rather bushy bob of a cut below her ears. They had to salvage her hair, seeing as she had taken to the scissors herself. Their mother nearly had an aneurism at the sight of badly butchered hair and rushed her willful daughter to the salon to somewhat make it look better. She had a sparkly little star-shaped clip on her hair, pulling it back behind her ears that were recently pierced as well. He remembers buying the clip for her from an accessory store from the Mars Docks. It was made in Earth, but she still freaked out nonetheless.

It made going to the Mars Docks worth it.

She points enthusiastically at the floor. They had a large tree outside of their apartment unit facing one of the many parks that was grown and maintained in the Settlement Arc. Sunlight was pouring through the canopy of leaves and the floor was riddled with crescent shaped lights.

‘Isn’t this amazing?’ she asks, eyes wide and filled with awe.

‘It is,’ he admits before he adds, ‘Don’t let mum hear you swearing – she’ll blame me again.’

‘We both know she swears more than the two of us- besides, you aren’t even here long enough for me to learn your “wicked ways”.’ She rolls her eyes.

‘Yes well, I’ll be gone soon enough so you’re saved from my influence for another 7 years.’

She suddenly looks sad.

‘I’ll be 20 by the time you come back- that’s not fair.’ She frowns. ‘I’ll be old.’

‘If you think 20 is old what do you think I am?’

‘-ancient.’ She giggles.

‘You’ll be taller than your brother no doubt-ouch!’ Amic chimes in with a grin.

He takes a seat next to her on the ground, ruffling her hair.

‘You’re talking as though you won’t message me every other day and like we won’t see each other through calls.’ Yoongi’s chest constricts when he says that, knowing what will have to inevitably happen.

She sighs, leaning into Yoongi with a shrug.

‘Next time we meet I might even come to Tayi and surprise you.’ She grumbles as Amic shuffles about the grass that bordered the patio, clearly giving them a moment. He had been incessant about Yoongi spending as much time with his family as possible. But Yoongi didn’t want to raise suspicion. Not that he never spent time with his family, but going out of his way before leaving for what his mother and sister assumed to be further studies to just spend time with them would undoubtedly raise suspicions.

‘Yeah?’ Yoongi manages to reply, sounding quite normal despite how his throat felt tight.

‘Yeap- and I’ll be better than you- just wait.’
He laughs, throwing his head back. He had no doubt about. At 12- no, 13, Chaewon was already showing signs of exceeding Yoongi in nearly every field he excelled in while growing up. And he can trust in knowing that Chaewon would never do the things he did, and would never do the things he was going to have to do either.

‘It’s a deal.’

‘We should probably get going if we want to watch the eclipse properly.’ Amic calls as he squints up at the sky.

‘Do we have to- I mean, it’s not that great of a thing-‘ Yoongi scowls, wondering what was even so special about the solar eclipse. Honestly he’s seen enough flying in and out of planets.

‘Don’t be a spoil sport and move your ass- am I right?’ Chaewon says with a huff, looking at Amic for support.

‘He’s right.’

Some best friend he was.

Yoongi huffs out a defeated laugh.

‘Fine- gang up on me then.’

The best place to watch the eclipse according to the local Settlement paper was at Level M3 Dock. Which is why Yoongi, Amic, and Chaewon go to Level M4 because there would be less people. Not a lot of people stare at Amic, though his height does garner a lot of attention from children who gawk, thoroughly impressed. And Amic, being the show-off he was, stands straighter, making his strides longer, more arched. He stops when Yoongi and Chaewon give him unimpressed looks.

‘You’re both uncannily similar,’ he mumbles, arms crossing and lifting his nose to the air.

Quite suddenly, Chaewon takes Yoongi’s hand.

‘Can’t you, I dunno, like take leave or something.’ She says, not even looking at him as they walk towards the Dock. They all decided to walk instead of take the tram, wanting to stretch their legs and avoid traffic.

‘I don’t think that’s possible?’ he laughs.

‘You know what I mean,’ she huffs irritably, blowing her hair out of her face.

Yoongi wasn’t always one to talk about his feelings as they put it. But then again, his sister was the same. It was probably a result of how their mother was. And it still hurt Yoongi that Chaewon couldn’t grow up in a house where she didn’t have to double-think her actions or words just in case they triggered a reaction from their mother. Yoongi was already used to it, but he didn’t want Chaewon to have to go through it. He tried his best but with all the meetings and conferences he had to attend in the Mars Docks recently, he was unable to shield his sister.

How could he try and prevent it when he wasn’t even there?

‘I’ll see y’all in a bit- you’re both too slow and I refuse to third-wheel emotional family stuff.’ Amic announces.

‘Then get the fuck out of here,’ Yoongi responds without missing a beat.
‘Language!’ he wags his finger at him before shuffling backwards though not before giving Yoongi a subtle but significant look.

The Min siblings both flick him off, making him cackle at their identical reaction. He draws some attention to himself as he skips up ahead, gangly form bouncing all over the place with surprising weight for someone so slight.

‘Still not used to seeing others here,’ Yoongi comments, watching the way the crowd parted to let him through, gaping after him with some awe.

‘Well- not ones that look like him,’ she replies with a small laugh.

‘Take care of mum while I’m gone.’ He says quietly after a while, his chest tightening even more.

‘You don’t have to tell me that,’ she mumbles, still refusing to look at him.

It was definitely a family trait.

He feels bad about having to do this. But this was a rare opportunity after all- not everyone was offered the chance to join the Raksane Tayi Scientific Research Panel. And their mother had insisted- lecturing him with a bewildered tone at his hesitation to accept. But that had been during one of her better spells- when she was more herself than whatever it was she had turned into now. And even though he knew that he would be light-years away, this would create a better future, establish a better future for his sister.

But the worst part of it all was that none of it was even true.

He understands the need for secrecy, the need for complete cover-up and the lies he had to tell his family for this. This was for their safety. He regrets nothing.

The only thing he regretted from all of this was knowing that Chaewon would have to grow faster than other children her age. That she wouldn’t be allowed many of the experiences that she would normally go through for a girl her age. That she would have to give up so much not out of necessity but out of obligation and love. That was always the worst- knowing that you would hate yourself for not doing it. And he knew that all too well, because that was what he was doing now.

And what he was going to do, was beyond himself, beyond his family- this was about all of Life.

‘Did you go see him?’ she asks quietly as they climb up some of the stairs leading to Level M.

‘No,’ he replies before lying easily. He thinks of the tiny square cement wall with their family name inscribed on it in the Settlement’s cemetery. ‘I will when I come back.’

‘That’s…that’s so far away.’ She says quietly, waiting a moment as a horde of teenagers rush past to catch a tram.

‘You’re starting school and trust me, it won’t feel too long.’ He grins as he bends down to hug her, more for his own comfort than anything else. ‘Remember? I’m ancient, I know how school will be.’

‘Try to come back as quickly as you can.’ Her voice is wobbly, like it was about to break.

Yoongi tries his best to not break down, to not fall on his knees and tell her everything.

‘I will.’
Their walk to the Dock is quiet, hands held. Yoongi, in a brief moment of panic, wonders if Chaewon knew something was off. Wonders if she could just sense that Yoongi wasn’t telling her everything. But he knows it’s his own guilt, his fears, his insecurities.

His training had more than enough taught him how to lie, how to maintain and continue fabrication- how to live a lie.

Amic is already there, holding in his hands 3 hand-made paper and plastic goggles. It was funny how despite how much progress Earth and Humans experienced, they still somehow stuck to old and outdated traditions. Amic senses their quiet mood and respectfully doesn’t say anything as he passes them the goggles. They make their way through the Dock, which is thankfully not crowded.

‘It’s starting,’ Amic says as he slides the goggles on. Yoongi is pretty sure he doesn’t strictly need to wear it, but is only doing so to not stick out.

Yoongi slides the uncomfortable goggles on and looks up.

It takes a few moments before his eyes can focus and it shows up clearly.

‘It’s beautiful.’

It is. It’s beautiful.

It’s a force of nature.

Something meant to happen despite all odds or despite what anyone would have ever imagined.

An occurrence that would defy all logic.

‘You’ve seen it at least 3 times already.’ Yoongi manages to sound wry.

‘Doesn’t stop it from being beautiful- and it’s gonna be another 56 years before the next one shows up on this side.’ His sister replies.

‘Do you know old you’ll be in 56 years?’ Yoongi chuckles.

‘Yeah- do you?’ she challenges, making Amic snort.

‘I’m too aware.’

The lights shift- a strange tint fills the air and everything turns quiet. If he listens close enough, he guesses he’d be able to hear the sound of the wind outside the Arc and the sound of the massive turbines keeping them afloat. Instead he listens to the sound of her breathing.

He’s seen the eclipse one too many times for it to be anything interesting or new. But the look of awe and fascination on her face makes him feel like it was worth coming up all the way here just to be part of her memory. After all, this did make a pretty cool event marker in his timeline.

It was almost destined- a sign that this was supposed to happen. That what he was about to do, was already preplanned, already eclipsing the decisions and choices he could have ever made.

Yoongi feels like this is where he would have been regardless of all the choices, mistakes, decisions.

‘There’s that story- about how the moon and the sun are lovers- you heard that before?’ Amic asks as he removes his goggles, looking straight up at the eclipse.
‘Yes! I read a story about that!’ Chaewon replies excitedly.

‘Back in my planet- it’s actually a part of one of our religions you know?’ Amic doesn’t even blink, looking up at the slowly forming eclipse, a strange look passing his face.

‘Oh! That’s kinda cool!’ Chaewon jumps a little.

‘Cataclysmic more like,’ Amic snorts, looking normal again. ‘Literally everyone wanted to get married during the eclipse- it was like, good luck or something. Like how no matter what, the moon and sun would always find each other- the married couple would always find each other too.’

‘But that’s cute,’ she argues, adjusting the goggles properly.

‘I mean I guess, but it’s like, such a common thing you know? My parents did the same.’ Amic rolls his eyes and gets distracted by the sight of a food stand opening to the side of the Dock. Yoongi is half sure it’s illegal to do so but it made good business for the day.

‘Finally it’s empty- be right back!’ Amic waves and lopes his way towards the hotdog stand, something that never failed to delight him for some reason. Yoongi briefly wonders if he should get Amic a keychain with a hotdog on it or something.

‘Do you think it’s possible for the eclipse to last forever?’ Chaewon asks out of nowhere, still looking up at the sky as a dark wedge starts to form in the sky.

‘I’m pretty sure the reason why people like the eclipse so much and freak out about it is because it’s temporary and doesn’t happen frequently,’ Yoongi replies wryly. ‘It’s why we’re all out here despite having seen it happen so many times.’

‘No I meant-‘ she stops for a while, still not looking away. ‘What if time froze? And all we ever saw was this- like, what would that be like?’

Yoongi doesn’t reply, his throat blocked, his chest curling in on itself. He can’t speak, and it seems as though Chaewon wasn’t really looking for an answer either. So he chooses to look up as well, watching as the dark wedge grows bigger and bigger, fully covering the sun in a matter of seconds. The sky turns a strange dim shade and there are gasps and sounds of exclamation.

A flare erupts through the sky and the brightness of it all ingrains itself into Yoongi’s mind. The ring of white fire glows and every time he blinked it beamed at him.

The world is transformed under this light- under this sky- and the entirety of time seems to pause, to allow them to witness this known cosmic beauty for just a few seconds longer- just a few heartbeats longer. Just long enough for him to feel as though he was breathing at the same pace with everyone gathered around them. To feel as though he were looking at the same sky with everyone- to feel the planet sigh at the sight of the eclipse.

‘It would be just like this.’

‘Yoongi?’

Yoongi looks down, surprised to find himself still standing by the edge of the Dock that was almost empty now.

‘Are you okay?’ Chaewon is looking down at him in worry while Amic hovers, holding a bottle of cold water in his hands.
'What happened?' Yoongi manages to get out.

‘You collapsed,’ Chaewon frowns, biting her lip in worry. ‘Uh- vertigo?’

Amic is carefully studying him as he hands him the bottle of water.

‘I- yeah, I guess.’ Yoongi sits up, not feeling nauseous or anything. What had happened? He glances up at the clear sky, the eclipse is over.

‘Let’s go home.’

Chaewon still looks worried when they get home. Yoongi manages to somewhat placate her by telling her it was probably fatigue and a heat stroke. He wasn’t exaggerating; it was a warm day and he was pretty tired.

She prescribes him with a nice cold shower and announces that she was going to make a refreshing vegetable broth for dinner (precooked and bought from the store but she still considered it cooking).

Yoongi does take that shower and oddly enough feels better. He doesn’t jump when the bathroom door slides open and Amic stands there, leaning on the door.

‘Are you sure you’re okay? It’s not the treatment is it?’ Amic asks, nodding at Yoongi’s back.

Yoongi twists a little to look at his back in the mirror over his sink.

The dent on his back was just a side-effect of the mandatory treatment he was having to undergo for their mission.

‘If you’re not feeling it, then it probably isn’t,’ Yoongi replies as he pulls on a shirt. Amic absentmindedly reaches for his own back, feeling at the dent there. Then he looks behind him, as though making sure Yoongi’s bedroom was empty.

‘You can still back out,’ he tells him. ‘You don’t have to do this.’

‘Pretty sure I can’t anymore,’ Yoongi snorts as he grabs his shaver. ‘Besides, can’t leave you alone.’

Amic doesn’t roll his eyes or make a snide comment about how he’s the one taking care of Yoongi instead.

‘Yoongi- you have a family- you have important Beings in your life who need you.’ He tells him carefully. ‘We’re not even sure about what we’re doing. How can you just…how can you just agree to this?’

Yoongi raises an eyebrow at Amic in the mirror as he says, ‘I could say the same to you.’

Amic just frowns at him.

‘I know what I’m doing- what I’m getting into. We both do.’ Yoongi says before he activates the shaver. ‘We both know the risks.’

Amic doesn’t look appeased by this.

‘Are you having second thoughts?’
‘I have many thoughts,’ Amic replies before asking, ‘Don’t you?’

‘Of course I do. None of this really adds up.’

Amic looks at him with a slight frown.

‘…are you actually thinking of doing this just because you want to find out more about it?’

Yoongi doesn’t reply immediately, intent on finishing his shaving job. When he finishes, setting down the shaver, he turns around and looks at his best friend.

‘After dinner, wanna take a walk?’

Chaewon is not happy that Yoongi is going for a walk. Because it was his own code for saying he was going out for a smoke and Chaewon heavily disapproved of it. But she relents though she makes it very clear that she’s not pleased, giving him side-eyes throughout the meal while Amic is distracted by a classic Disney film she put on for entertainment. Yoongi makes a mental note to buy her ice-cream as an apology.

‘Why won’t you tell them?’ Amic asks as they exit the Min household unit. This was one of the older Settlement Arcs and the housing units were aligned and put together much like apartment units though in this case formed whole houses with their own small gardens. The newer Settlement Arcs were designed better and provided you with more space and privacy while still maintaining the same measurements. But according to Yoongi’s mum, the Min’s having been living here for 8 generations already. Moving was out of the question.

Yoongi is also sure that there are no wonky paths that were once maintenance/construction paths entirely forgotten that lead out into odd heights across the Arc, most of which he discovered as a teen.

Yoongi finds himself shrugging.

‘It doesn’t feel right.’

‘None of it does,’ Amic nods in agreement.

They walk in continued silence, looking about casually, appearing for most of the part, like two Beings enjoying an evening stroll. The sun had already set but the sky was still alight.

Amic follows Yoongi through some questionable paths and up a few maintenance ladders until they physically leave the core Atmoshield surrounding the Arc. The air is thinner but still breathable, and the wind is a lot harsher here. Yoongi has always liked high places like this, secluded and lifted higher than most of the living spaces in the Arc. The narrow gap between two walls widens slightly before giving way to a shelf that overlooked the domes of the Settlement Arc, providing natural light within the structure below.

‘Nice,’ Amic comments as Yoongi takes a seat close to edge, his feet dangling over the open space, resting his arms on the bannisters. Amic takes a seat as well, leaning back a little on his arms and appreciating the view.

‘So what’s up?’

Yoongi pulls out a packet from his jacket, pulling out a cigarette and then lighting it up.

‘Have you told your parents?’ Yoongi asks as he huffs out a long stream of smoke.
Amic shakes his head, ‘Of course not.’

‘Maybe you should,’ Yoongi shrugs, exhalng as he sheds the pretense he’d been keeping up.

He feels old- stretched out almost. His skin is thin, his sight edged with white. But he refused to give in. Not now.

‘What are you saying?’

‘I’m saying we might not come back from this.’

Amic turns to look at him sharply.

‘What are you talking about?’

‘The corps,’ Yoongi shakes his head, knowing he has to be careful. ‘There’s something else.’

‘Of course there’s something else. We joined this knowing there was something more, it’s why you’re lying to your mother and sister.’

‘It’s not just what Yisheng Ndica said,’ Yoongi mumbles over his cigarette. ‘I looked into it.’

‘You don’t trust the Yishengs?’ Amic frowns.

‘It’s not that I don’t trust Yishengs,’ Yoongi replies, exhalng smoke again. ‘I don’t trust anyone with that much power. You see…’ he pauses, looking over the huge clear domes. Deep within the Settlement lights start to appear, and the cities within the Arc start to light up.

‘Humans we’re…we’re not the most durable or intelligent of species in the Universe.’ Yoongi comments dryly. ‘We’re also not exactly the most daring type.’

‘Is that an off-hand way of saying you’re really brave.’

Yoongi knocks Amic’s leg with his foot.

‘But if there’s one thing, we’re excessively paranoid- call it our past and what we’ve learnt from it. But it’s safe to say a lot of us learnt from history. And we still have loads to learn.’ Yoongi pauses, tapping the cigarette to flick off the ash. ‘But if there’s one thing- we don’t trust power, and we don’t trust politics.’

‘The Yishengs are not political,’ Amic frowns.

Yoongi snorts, ‘Sure. But they’re powerful. It’s almost religious, the way they’re revered in the Universe.’

‘What are you saying?’ Amic frowns. ‘If you don’t…I mean that’s an odd thing to say considering you know, you are Human, and your sister is AI.’

‘Again- I’m not saying I hate Yishengs or that I distrust them. It’s just there are…things I don’t trust.’

‘You can’t say things like this so casually,’ Amic says after a few seconds. ‘It’ll get you into trouble.’

‘I already got into trouble.’ Yoongi says carefully.
Amic freezes at that.

‘Are you going to finally tell me why you didn’t come back that night in Mars last week?’

Yoongi crushes his cigarette, tucking the remaining stick back into the packet.

‘The corps isn’t real. Not just in a “Roswell” kinda way either.’

‘Roswell?’

‘Back in history, there was a military air-force base called Roswell- people thought it was a headquarter for alien investigation and where the government of that time stored alien technology,’ Yoongi explains.

‘Was it?’

Yoongi snorts, ‘No- just a normal air-force base. Rumors floated all over the world about that place, making people want to investigate it. In the end nothing came of it, and when we were busy looking at places we thought were suspicious, we never saw the real threat that was growing.’

‘And that’s what you think this whole thing? A threat growing while we’re bothered about the realness or meaning of the “corps”?’ Amic asks.

Yoongi shakes his head before he says, ‘I’m pretty sure that what we’re doing at the corps is somewhat legitimate in regards with the Alliance- I’m just not sure how much of it is what they say it is, and how much of what we do is actually meant for the purpose we’re told, or what we’re going to do is actually for the mission statement.’

‘So we’re not actually working... against the Alliance... but for the Alliance?’ Amic words his question carefully.

‘I don’t know it’s just-’

Amic waits for him to continue, not saying anything.

‘I think we’re part of the threat,’ Yoongi says slowly. ‘Right now, the main narrative of concern is in the form of the Alliance, and also the non-GLA Systems and planets- the potential threat they have against the GLA, the technology they don’t want to share, the resources they don’t want to share. And like the Raksane Tayi Scientific Panel, the GLA is creating commotion in one area to sidetrack from the main threat.’

‘So you’re saying that the GLA is doing this? What could the Scientific Panel actually even do? It’s all just old and baseless rumors,’ Amic counters though he’s not arguing, ‘Things like digital-souls can’t even be real.’

‘Logically of course we know that- so why would there be so much coverage and rumors flying about?’ Yoongi shoots back, looking over at the high clouds but not really seeing them. ‘It’s being used as a distraction while the real threat grows.’

‘Which is?’

Yoongi looks over the skies, not seeing but knowing that all of Earth lay below and before him.

‘Before Earth went through the Age of Revelations, it was already collapsing in on itself,’ Yoongi tells Amic. ‘The warning signs were there of course, but most people were distracted by other things hyped up news networks and old databases. The things they were distracted by appeared important only because it was made to appear important. All of Earth was dying and despite it having reached a complex level of communications most people were not aware of what was happening. All of this was a distraction from the real problem at hand of course. And that distraction worked well, because it drove Earth into the Second Age of Darkness and effectively killed themselves in the process.’ He exhales, feeling his pulse heighten at a frightening pace. He’s never said this out loud to anyone before. ‘The same way the Yishengs will effectively kill all of the Universe.’

Amic’s expression doesn’t change. He only closes his eyes.

Yoongi continues on.

‘Last week, well- for almost a year now, I’ve been doing research- been looking into what we’ve been doing and- and nothing makes sense.’ Yoongi’s hands start to shake but he can’t control it. He doesn’t try to hide them either. ‘All I know is that similar to the way the Venture Unit takes up criminals and trains them as part of their agency, the Yishengs do a similar thing where they take individuals they believe are particularly loyal to them- or more accurately, to their power. Which is quite…quite extreme if you think of how everyone across the Universe treat the Yishengs- they are easily the most respected, and most revered of Beings, without question. Even Systems that refuse to take part in the GLA are still open to visits from the Yishengs.’

He almost feels breathless the more he speaks.

‘There are many powerful Beings who are like this, pawns of the Yishengs- working for them, under them-‘

‘-but for what?’ Amic interrupts. ‘You’re talking about this but I still don’t know what the purpose of any of this is-‘

‘Earth didn’t need to be rescued,’ Yoongi says abruptly. ‘Earth could have survived, could have started on her own if the people in power just stopped.’

‘Stopped what?’

‘Stopped wanting more- they wanted everything. Power is addictive and blinding and they were-‘

‘-are you saying the Yishengs are going power crazy?’ Amic looks incredulous.

‘It’s more then that-‘

‘Where’s your proof?’

Yoongi closes his eyes.

‘I- I don’t have proof but-‘

Amic stands up abruptly.

‘You need to clear you mind,’ Amic tells him, turning and clearly making to walk away. ‘You need to-‘

‘I met Yisheng Amme last week in Mars. That’s why I was late.’ Yoongi states bluntly. ‘She caught me snooping around the facility after the ships had left. She got me to tell her everything.’
'What- she’s not supposed to be here- she’s not part of this,'

'I told her everything I couldn’t stop myself- my suspicions, what the Yishengs were doing, what we were supposed to do-’ Yoongi hasn’t moved. But neither has Amic. ‘I thought she would kill me- I don’t know, or have me sent to Teronko’ing but-’

Amic takes a step closer.

‘She told me that what I felt was right. That what I thought was correct. She said that there was something wrong- something incredibly wrong with what was happening with what we were doing.’ Yoongi vividly remembers the tall Yisheng, cornering him in the dark of the lab where Yoongi, Amic, and approximately 50 others had just finished the final part of their medical treatment to ready them for their “corps” mission.

He had felt compelled to tell her everything, and it was probably due to her abilities.

‘You’re not wrong. But you’re not all right- after all, what can be right, when everything is wrong?’ she had said.

‘Why are you here?’ Yoongi had asked breathlessly.

‘Earth is special,’ she had replied. ‘There are special souls born there- strong, ancient, and more powerful than what any of us can see.’

‘What are you looking for?’

‘I’m looking for answers, Yoongi. And maybe you can find them for me.’

‘So you’re telling me, that Yisheng Amme has now more or less, given you a secret mission within our own secret mission, to report back to her, about this secret mission?’ Amic summarizes.

Yoongi nods.

Amic sits down again.

The night sky creeps up on them, the pale yellow light from the the domes below colouring the misty clouds above. Yoongi can just about make out a few stars overhead.

‘She looked at my back,’ Yoongi says quietly. ‘She didn’t recognize it. She doesn’t know why we have it.’

Amic’s hand twitches, almost as though trying to reach back for it.

‘You still went through with it. The final phase was after that night. You still sat through it.’

‘Because I need to know,’ Yoongi replies firmly. ‘I need to know what they’re doing.’

‘And what if you find out? What will you do then? What does it do for you?’ Amic asks.

‘The problem with Earth,’ Yoongi says slowly, ‘Was not that those in power were out of control- it was that the population who lived at that time wouldn’t do anything.’ He glances at Amic as he says, ‘And I don’t want to be that- I don’t want to do nothing when I can see so clearly as to what is happening. Not when I’m actually a part of that problem.’

The sit in silence darkness now completely taking over.
‘I’m not…asking you to join me. Or anything. But you’re my best friend. And this…what we’re about to do…is not something I want you to see-’

‘…you’re an idiot,’ Amic supplies unhelpfully, ‘An idiot in thinking that I would back out. Now that I know- I know that I should stick with you so you don’t get caught by unsuspecting creepy Yishengs.’

There’s an incredible rush that takes over Yoongi. The tightness in his chest lessens and the air around him feels lighter.

‘Amme isn’t that bad.’

‘Are you into multiple arms or something-ow-!’

Yoongi smacks him across his arm.

‘So…what do we do now?’

‘I reported to Amme about every procedure we underwent while we were at the Scientific Panel, the Yisheng Headquarters, as well as on Mars,’ Yoongi replies at once. ‘I told her about the mission we’re following to Axudar.’

‘What was she even doing at the Mars Docks?’

‘She said she was looking for answers,’ Yoongi says slowly. ‘I’ve seen her in the meeting rooms with Yisheng Ndica and the head of Planetary Relationships, for those weekly meetings they held in the Yisheng Headquarters earlier this year.’

‘Isn’t that the meeting where the GIU are also included? With K’mara?’ Amic asks with a shudder, ‘The Khol’isa are creepy.’

Yoongi nods in agreement.

‘So…what, do we wait for Amme to say something, or do we just…do we just continue?’

‘I don’t want to trust anyone,’ Yoongi replies immediately. ‘And I don’t trust anyone either.’

Amic nods to that.

‘I was looking into Axudar as well and honestly this whole Bhumi mission sounds really vague to me.’

‘You and everyone else,’ Amic mumbles. ‘Shouldn’t this be handled by the Venture Unit? Or even by the Yisheng motherships?’

‘There’s some sort of treaty involved,’ Yoongi thinks back to the mission briefing. Everyone had looked confused at their mission statement. His captain even more so, eyeing Yisheng Ndica with question.

‘Do you think we’re being sent in there as…as a distraction? Or as bait?’ Amic asks carefully.

‘A distraction or bait for what?’ Yoongi emphasizes. ‘There’s nothing in Bhumi. There’s nothing happening in that area. Apparently there’s a pulsar, but that would mean calling for the evac-plans. And that’s by the Yishengs.’

‘I guess we’ll really have to just go and figure it out.’
They still in silence for a while longer before they both turn away from the edge and head back downwards.

It’s quite late and Amic waves goodnight as he creeps into the guestroom. Yoongi wants to refrigerate the ice-cream he got for Chaewon and redirects himself to the kitchen. To his surprise, the lights are on.

‘Hey ma,’ Yoongi smiles at his mother who had just finished making some tea it would seem.

‘Honey, what have I told you about smoking?’ she reprimands at once. Yoongi’s not sure how she knew. He wasn’t close enough for her to smell him. Maybe Chaewon complained while he was out.

‘Nervous I guess,’ Yoongi replies rather truthfully.

She was having a good day. A series of good days in fact.

Although her depressive state hasn’t been as bad as they once were. Yoongi is still careful though.

‘Do you want some tea?’

‘Amic is always telling me to drink more tea,’ Yoongi laughs under his breath as he nods.

‘And rightfully so,’ his mother gives him reprimanding look that’s more fond than anything else. ‘Is everything all right though?’

Yoongi wishes he wasn’t caught off-guard. Wishes he could have stopped the look of guilt spreading so evidently across his face. But he can’t. And his mum is watching him with a careful expression.

‘I’m just worried about the inner-politics stuff,’ Yoongi manages to get out. ‘Everything is always somewhat-’ he waves his hand about. ‘-somewhat all related.’

His mother nods in understanding, though she doesn’t look like she truly believes Yoongi’s reason.

‘Your father used to complain about the same thing,’ she smiles before saying in a more somber tone. ‘But then…he said he would have no right to complain if he didn’t do something about it.’

‘Sounds like dad,’ Yoongi smiles over his cup.

‘And I’m afraid it sounds like you too.’

The lamp overhead is a circular glowing orb reflecting off the steaming surface in his cup. His own reflection eclipses the light in a thin band.

The curvature of the Earth is pale blue only for a fraction of a second before it turns bright gold. He feels himself jolt in his seat, gravity returning to the ship. If he concentrated enough, he would be able to see the Settlement Arc from here. But he doesn’t.

It was difficult saying goodbye. Knowing that it would be a long while before he returned. And despite everything, Yoongi has to return. Even though in his core he knows he may never return. He has to.

Because he needs to see.

How much would it change. How much would still remain the way he remembered?
Would he still be able to get his favorite coffee from the small café across the school compound?

Would he still be able to run up the stairs of their house, knowing, out of sheer habit and reinforced behavior, to skip the 6th step because no matter how many times they fixed it, creaked ominously every time you stepped it.

Would the lily ponds around the Arc Square still look fake, and would he always go and pinch their leaves just to make sure they were real?

Would the air outside his favorite spot to relax and smoke on the wind-turbines still smell a lot like cat-piss, laundry detergent, and engine fuel?

Would Chaewon still scold him for smoking? Would she still remain the same?

Would their mother still remember him? Or would she forget him too, lost in her sorrow and pain.

He looks away from the view to his right, and instead to his left.

Amic is already flat out asleep, mouth slightly open, snoring lightly. He wants to roll his eyes and maybe put a small piece of candy or something inside his mouth so that he would sort of choke. Not in the sense of wanting to kill him or cause him harm- of course not. Just for the sake of revenge because that’s what he did to him once.

Needless to say now would be the perfect time for revenge. But he doesn’t.

Instead he rearranges his neck so that he won’t get cramps.

He looks back out again and his breath gets caught in his throat. To his horror, he finds himself choked up- eyes starting to burn. Unsure why, but he just knows that this would be the last time he would see this view again.

He knows he’s being irrational- that his emotions are getting the best of him. But at the same time he allows himself this small moment and repeats his sister’s words in his mind, taking the warmth of her voice, the joy in her eyes, and the beauty of the sorrow of the moment into his memory. To remember it forever. It’s all he can do to keep Yisheng Amme’s voice out of his mind, quietly asking him for answers.

‘You’ll see it again.’ Amic says from the left quietly, as though he’d been awake the entire time. ‘You’ll come back before you know it.’

He doesn’t reply, just nods once.

Would he still be able to count the flowers in their garden?

‘We have to.’

Their mission is not until a few months. And during this time Yoongi keeps to date with family, always making sure to send some small trinket from the markets at Tayi. She had a growing collection of hair accessories from a large variety of cultures and planets. She’s decided not to study to apply for the Tayi School of Science and Technology like Yoongi did, but rather study something to do with anthropology. It makes Yoongi feel better, knowing that there would be no chance of her ever being taken up into this field he found himself in.

When the time comes for them to depart for their mission, flying first to Axudar for a few hours, and then to Bhumi, Yoongi and his team decide to wash off any nerves they have at an eatery not too far from their living facilities.

Amic is already snoring despite only having a single glass. Yoongi, by some drunken miracle, finds a gravity-lift and hauls his best-friend onto it and pushes them back to their rooms.

The thing about Raksane Tayi was that it never really slept. And so somehow it feels like days never come to an end- but somehow go on continuously. It’s strangely tiring to Yoongi. He just wants to be able to see the coming and going of day. To see obvious and clear indications of day and night. He wants to be able to see the sunrise.

Yoongi is really drunk. But it’s not enough to erase his thoughts.

If anything he’s freaking out even more, the alcohol doing nothing to minimize or lessen the panic building in him.

‘You have walked past your street, Min Yoongi.’

Yoongi’s reaction is a second delayed and so is his scream.

Yisheng Amme stands directly ahead of him, towering over him in a vision of simple robes that were supposed to come off as approachable and humble. But Yoongi only experiences acute fear. He stumbles backwards but he’s caught by Amme (one of her many arms) and set to stand up right.

‘You need to be more careful,’ she scolds lightly.

If Yoongi wasn’t drunk and scared of out his mind (as a result of being drunk) he would have found Amme’s behavior comically normal.

‘Most Humans are allergic to alcohol- it’s why you turn red so quickly, your body is working against it,’ she sighs the same way an older sibling would at their younger sibling for being annoying. ‘Amic here on the other hand…he’s just a light-weight.’

Yoongi breaks out into hysterical chortles.

‘Let me help you back,’ she says, waving one of her many (Yoongi’s pretty sure she doesn’t have 8 arms but he can’t be sure he can really count right now, considering he lost count of how many shots he had an hour ago) arms and helps Yoongi push the gravity-lift with Amic on it.

‘What are you doing here?’ Yoongi manages to ask, proud of himself for wording himself right and for not screaming again.

Amme was honestly just a little creepy and being drunk was not helping him.

‘There’s a lot that’s happening,’ she tells him in her oddly melodic voice. ‘A lot that has come to my attention thanks to your information. I wish I could repay you for what you told me. But Time is not always on our side.’

‘Time is a social construct,’ Yoongi hiccupps. ‘Fuck time.’

‘Indeed,’ Amme sounds a little amused. Or was that sad?

‘I spoke to your Captain. I hoped to alert her. But it seems to me there is already someone who has noticed.’ She tells him conversationally. ‘I am sorry.’

‘What for?’ Yoongi finally looks up when Amme pauses. They were outside the entrance to their living quarters. Amme stands right outside the vicinity of the surveillance camera at the gateway, Yoongi realizes.

‘I am sorry I cannot save all of you.’ Amme tells him. ‘I will do what I can from now to save others.’

Yoongi really doesn’t know what Amme is on about. But he sort of shrugs and replies, ‘You can’t save everyone- you’re not god or something.’

Amme’s eyes (too many in Yoongi’s drunken state) gleam at him from the dark.

‘No we’re not,’ she replies, taking a step back her voice echoes oddly as she says, ‘Hold to your memories, Min Yoongi. Let them save you.’

Yoongi doesn’t remember any of this when he wakes up the following morning. Instead he hastily rushes into the shower, his mind strangely empty and his body moving as though on muscle memory.

Amic looks terrible as per usual after a night out drinking. Thankfully they had the forethought to pack before hand and all they had to do was wear their uniform, grab their bags, and pray they didn’t forget anything.

Amic groans next to him inside the Transporter that is slowly lifting in the air to dock inside the Yisheng mothership, leading them out of Tayi and into warp.

Yoongi sleeps for half of the journey and when he’s awake, manages to make one more call.

‘Something is strange.’

Yoongi startles out of the bed he’s sitting on, waiting for Chaewon to pick up the call, nearly falling over when he-

‘J-Jimin-?’

The name is almost foreign on his tongue and he doesn’t recognize this Being before him- but he’s reaching for him, hand stretching forward, eclipses in his eyes-

_Eclipses are dangerous don’t look into them-

He looks away immediately but that’s a mistake. Everything around him flickers violently- the Transporter warps in and out of space, the patio from Earth resurfaces, the red air of Megibīya swirls around him forming into the robes that hung off of Amme’s tall and thin structure and everything bursts into purple glitter and-

‘Yoongi?’

With a small cough, Yoongi finds himself inside red-lit forest of Megibīya. His fingers feel at the texture of the hair clip he kept safe in the cigarette pack in his inner pocket.

Chaewon had done something like this before.

Sneaking in objects into his bag as though making sure that by some brotherly duty, Yoongi would always return home to give it back to her. She started doing that ever since he moved out of their home to study at a university in the neighbouring Settlement Arc. And Yoongi always came back home to return it to her.

Jimin too was far from home. He had illustrated via hologram what his planet looked like. What brought him all the way here?

Jimin looks down at him expectantly, worry in his eyes. Yoongi’s been coughing more than usual too.

The past few days were tough. What with the tension between each Being, the fear, the confusion.

‘Hey sunshine,’ Yoongi’s smile isn’t forced and this unknown Being’s presence is soothing to the pain in his chest. ‘What’s up?’

Jimin points towards the back, gnawing at his lower lip in worry.

And this was something else added to all of the strain in the team.

A strange illness seemed to be slowly taking over a few of them. Fatigue, temporary loss of senses, fever, chills, racking coughs, and labored breathing. But it went past these symptoms.

There was something else about this illness.

And Amic was one of the victims.

‘There’s something more- I think there’s something more.’ Amic had whispered to him just a few hours ago. ‘All the ships that came before us. We should have seen them. And the ones that were supposed to come after us. They’re not here.’

‘I know,’ Yoongi wiped at his face, his hand felt heavy.

‘Do- do you think they’re getting rid of us?’

‘What?’

‘The corps- all of us. Do you think they’re getting rid of us?’ Amic asks, his eyes glazed with fever and pain. ‘I think- I think they’re...they’re replacing us-‘

‘Hey, it’s okay,’ Yoongi tried to placate his best friend.

His eyes look past Yoongi, a strange glassy clear quality to them.

‘Just remember, Yoongi. Remember-‘

The fever was a strange bout of deliriousness that came and went. Everyone reacted differently but it seemed to have the same strange effect on all of them. But what was extremely disturbing was the source of their pain.

It wasn’t headaches or general body pain.

Amic twitched and writhed like his entire back was on fire.

The same thing happened to Yoongi too. His back would crawl, his skin feeling as though it were peeling. But it never was too extreme for him.

This was effecting all of them. Except for Jimin.

Jimin was definitely not part of any of the other groups. He hadn’t been wearing their uniform, and he couldn’t speak Standard either. Jimin gestures, placing his palms together and under his head to mime sleep.
‘Sleep,’ Yoongi nods. ‘I’ll stay up- it’s my turn to watch.’

Jimin looks back to where the team were huddled around, eyes sharp but weary. He seems to make up his mind and sits next to Yoongi instead. A few moments later, Jimin’s head makes its way to Yoongi’s shoulder.

‘Sleep.’ Yoongi whispers quietly, peering out into the forest and ignoring the way his back burns. ‘Jimin sleep.’

Jimin nods into his shoulder wordlessly, a hand creeping around his forearm slowly, as though hoping Yoongi wouldn’t notice.

To reassure Jimin, and also to experience what it felt like, Yoongi gently brushes through Jimin’s silver-gold hair. Jimin leans in even closer at the contact, his hand now fully holding onto his arm.

‘I’ll be here when you wake up.’

* *

Namjoon recognizes the Being easily.

Hoseok would have recognized him too.

If you were immortalized for stabilizing the technology for harnessing and converting energy from black-holes, anyone with a standard GLA education would know exactly who you were. Of course images of the Being only known previously as Chen was included in the massive memorial wall within the Venture Unit Headquarters. It was indescribably strange to see him alive- not just alive but also involved in all of this.

‘You recognize him?’ Kai asks as they step back, watching the two approach each other.

‘Of course,’ Namjoon replies, watching as Jimin approaches Chen, or JD as Kai had introduced him. ‘Who doesn’t?’
'Thought I saw a ghost the first time I saw him,’ Kai laughs quietly.

They don’t seem to be talking. Just simply looking at each other. But for some reason Namjoon knows that he needs to keep quiet- not disturb them. Kai doesn’t seem bothered or fazed as they maintain a respectful distance. Then quite suddenly, Jimin falls to his knees. Namjoon can’t see his face but can tell that Jimin wasn’t feeling good.

‘Don’t,’ Kai tells him quietly. ‘The reason why JD wanted to talk was because of Bhumi- I’m guessing your friend is related to all of that?’

Namjoon nods slowly in reply, unsure what to think or do when Jimin raises his hand and JD takes it.

Rather abruptly both of them sort of tilt and with the strangest of motions, that appeared both extraordinarily fast but entirely slow, they both lift up off of the ground and settle on the ground on their backs.

‘What the fuck-’ Namjoon frowns, attempting to approach the dimly lit area.

‘Wait-’

‘Pa- it’s okay,’ Taeh’ yung chimes in, ‘Let them sleep.’

Namjoon slows down, still moving towards the two who were apparently “asleep”.

‘Is this normal?’ he asks, gesturing down at JD and Jimin.

‘I mean- I guess?’ Kai shrugs, giving him a winning smile.

‘Of course it’s not,’ a familiar voice snaps at them from a close distance. Moving in the shadows, Ems appears, shifting along the wire strewn floor and not sparing them a glance before settling into a lowered circular dais, surrounded in a wall like fashion with screens all around.

‘Everything that takes place here is not normal,’ she barks before saying, ‘And you don’t even have a gift on you. How nice.’

Kai gives him a shifty smile which Namjoon returns with a shrug of his own.

‘I don’t expect it from Namjoon but Kai,’ she exhares as though disappointed.

Namjoon’s not sure if he should be offended or not.

‘I’ll be right back,’ Kai sighs heavily, vanishing before his sigh could end.

‘What happened to you anyways,’ she asks, still not sparing him a look, the slender fingers of her hands spreading and crawling along the wires, joining her to the entirety of the GLA database. She literally had every single information and data under her finger tips.

‘Got into trouble,’ Namjoon replies as he glances down at his arm.

‘Will that be a problem?’

‘I don’t think so,’ Namjoon answers as he walks over. ‘Where can I start?’

‘The floors yours.’
'How generous,' Namjoon mumbles, lowering himself on the floor.

'I already have things you can look into,' she informs him, 'Here use this.'

A large folding screen slides over towards him and Namjoon picks it up, propping it up on a few of the many coiled wires.

The first thing Namjoon sees are complete tabs on every single individual of his team.

‘You did research on all of them?’

‘What do you think? Of course I did,’ Ems retorts as though offended. ‘Pretty sure you did too but I thought I’d put my spin on it.’

‘Thanks,’ Namjoon makes sure to save it for later.

‘You have interesting Beings in your team,’ Ems comments before Namjoon can even begin to start checking the other connections on the screen.

‘I’m aware,’ Namjoon sighs.

‘I don’t know what you’re doing but I think I have a pretty clear picture. Seems convenient doesn’t it?’

‘Tell me about it. There’s no way this is gonna end nice.’

‘Is that why you’re here? To try and make it end nice?’

‘Define nice,’ Namjoon looks over at where Jimin and JD are. ‘Everything is just really weird.’

‘Well, your Khol’isa isn’t nice.’ Ems remarks, drawing Namjoon’s attention.

‘What do you know about the Khol’isa?’

Ems sighs heavily before asking, ‘You mean what do I know that you don’t know?’

‘I guess.’

‘Nothing more than what you know if I’m being honest,’ she shrugs. ‘The Khol’isa with you is unique to top it all of. He ain’t like the others.’

‘What- more like K’mara?’

Ems snorts, waving a few long fingers as though flicking him off.

‘K’mara is prime example of what the Khol’isa are like. Your incomplete Khol’isa is a mess.’ Ems pauses before she says, ‘Read up on him when you have time.’

‘Thanks, I will.’

‘Also, just my opinion but I’ve never trusted the Ngfy’widan.’

Namjoon frowns, ‘What? Like, their whole species?’

‘Sure. Added with the Venture Unit.’

‘Pretty sure you said that about me and my whole species,’ Kai declares, reappearing to the side with an armful of neatly packed food items. ‘I come with gifts and sustenance.’

‘You and your species are a menace,’ Ems mutters.

‘She says that about everyone,’ Kai rolls his eyes as he sits next to Namjoon, a screen sliding over to him. ‘What can I do?’

It’s not that Namjoon doesn’t trust Kai. He just doesn’t want to widen the group of Beings involved in this situation. Granted, Kai and his ship were probably in the whole situation before Namjoon was made aware of the whole ordeal.

‘You can go through this,’ Ems replies instead, saving Namjoon from having to come up with an answer.

They sit in silence together, the only sound comes from Namjoon and Kai who occasionally shift in their seats to adjust themselves. Ems is completely stationary as usual, combing through data as she literally becomes a part of the archives.

There’s a lot of information- broken data and corroded files that need time to rewrite and reprogram. It feels beyond right to be back here. Namjoon has missed this. Even though he’s short-handed for now, he’s still in his element and for once, the strain building in his mind lessens enough for him to feel as though this was just part of his normal life pre-mission with the Užkulisai.

‘Well,’ Ems suddenly says, breaking the silence. ‘Ynqaba, or the Reformist Union as they now call themselves, has a very colourful past. Not just your standard politics-gone-wrong kinda way but more in a played-middle-man-for-the-Alliance kinda way.’

The Alliance was involved?” Namjoon raises an eyebrow as Kai looks up from his screen with interest. He remembers the way Khonen had told them that the Alliance was dying. This directly links back to the Omhlophe and Namjoon isn’t sure how.

‘Yeah…’ Ems pauses before sighing and saying, ‘Here- you guys look, Kai- you might find it interesting too.’

Kai immediately springs into action, opening the file on his screen and frowning immediately.

‘The Alliance? But why are these Yisheng ships?’ Kai asks before he pauses, expression turning stony. Namjoon checks the files too. They’re heavily encrypted data, somehow obtained from planets around and from Ynqaba, of news outlets reporting the incidents in the System there not even 20 sols ago.

‘This is all pretty recent,’ Kai mutters under his breath.

“ALLIANCE TO HEAL PLANETS: CORE-MEDICATION DELIVERED FROM TODAY” the headlines read. Namjoon pushes the encryption and reads the article as it recovers.

“Isbahaysiga Alliance Committee Members have finally come to an agreement with the Planetary Society in Ynqaba regarding the Core-Implants. The Core-Implants have been designed to heal and sustain our planets from within. “Air filtration devices are on their way to the atmosphere and the citizens of Ynqaba will soon be breathing clean air once more,” Supreme Committee Leader declared from the motherships. He has continued to encourage Ynqaban citizens to join the academic and medical program to educate themselves on the steps being taken to heal our planet. “By learning, we can enable a secure future with our children,” he emphasizes. “You can soon be a self-sustaining and flourishing planet- let the future generation guide you to a better place”.”
As many as 45% of the population of youths have joined the academy aboard the motherships and have shown great improvement according to relatives and friends. They are to participate in the research to heal our planets, and will learn how to guide us back to light, and into purity.”

For a moment, Namjoon doesn’t understand what he’s seeing.

The image that clears up after the article is clearly depicting a Yisheng mothership. In fact, it’s identical to the one that crashed and had been made into a dwelling place by many surviving Ynqabans. But why was this called the Alliance mothership?

‘Pa!’

Namjoon jolts in his seat.

‘Sk’jin’s UV bed has arrived!’ Taeh’yung inform him cheerfully. ‘We can pick it up when we arrive at Pit 18.’

‘Okay thanks Tae,’ Namjoon replies, catching his breath. He almost forgot that he was on line with the ship. ‘Is uh, is everyone okay?’

‘We’re all good!’ Taeh’yung happily reports. ‘How’s Chim?’

Glancing over to the side Namjoon finds Jimin still on the ground, lost in sleep.

‘Good- still…sleeping?’

‘Okay!’

Mind going blank for a moment, Namjoon thinks back to Ynqaba. It’s not the most pleasant of memories, but he carefully combs through his memories.

‘I think it’s safe to say that the Yishengs, possible Ndica or Tlun’hla were involved with Ynqaba and were using the Alliance as cover-up.’ Kai says slowly. ‘None of these articles mention the term Yisheng- but there are a few smaller articles here regarding religions and temples being set up in honour of the Alliance Committee members. Some of them are negative though. There’s an article here about protests regarding something called “Core-Medication”.’

‘The merchants took their lives, they said they were thieves trying to deceive. They took away Yoongi’s helmet and clothes; to put with the others. I am sorry.’

‘Others? They said there was more?’

‘In store.’

Did the Yishengs use Ynqaba and her neighbouring planets to grow and keep the GI? While under the pretense of “healing” the planet. The System was not a part of the GLA and it was far away from credible GLA Systems- the closest being Ymir but considering Nuqtai, a pirate stop, was right there- any chances of discovery by actual GLA organizations was pretty low.

Namjoon cannot find any more information past these bits and pieces of articles and reports. There are a few other things left to check, but their dates all abruptly end some 25 sols ago.

‘Is there anything else from Ynqaba?’ Namjoon asks.

‘Did you go through everything?’ Ems asks.
‘Yeah?’

‘Then no.’

The people of Ynqaba seemed to recognize and were familiar with the GI uniform. So much so that they had them in store with them. Yoongi had mentioned how he would travel undetected and unchecked using Yisheng Transporters and passes- was this infiltration that bad.

Then of course there was Jungkook.

This was a clear indicator of the presence of “eggs”. Was Jungkook supposed to be part of the GI? What caused the Yisheng ships to crash? Namjoon wishes he had been able to get closer, to better study and analyze the crashed ship- better understand how Jungkook had gotten there. Wish he could have had a more direct contact with the Ynqaban-

With a jolt of electricity rushing through his body, Namjoon realizes that there was someone who was definitely exposed to the Ynqabans in a completely different way than they did.

Sk’jin.

Something had clearly happened. He had clearly found something- or heard something. But he can’t…he can’t get Sk’jin to talk. He was clearly not eager to do so and trying to get Sk’jin to do anything just meant never getting anything done with a lot of anger, sarcasm, and snide comments. He was going to have to be careful.

‘Pretty interesting stuff,’ Namjoon comments over the line. ‘We’re getting good information.’

‘What’s up?’ Hoseok asks immediately.

‘Well, for starters, Ynqaba’s history is pretty standard,’ Namjoon comments, going through everything else he had read. ‘They started off like most growing planets- spending more resources than they had, capitalist governments taking over until there was no return. Stuck between two evils they chose war.’

‘What’s the other evil?’ Hoseok asks.

‘Starvation,’ Sk’jin supplies easily. ‘Somehow they think dying and fighting in a war, to suffer something palpable and feel like there’s an enemy is a meaningful choice. Of course it’s not. There was no need for war, but it was better than starvation. They would rather run out to a field and get shot down than watch each other starve- then they can blame everything on the war- blame everything on the enemy.’

It’s silent for a long minute.

‘Also an easy way to get rid of the population,’ Namjoon continues carefully as he clears his throat. ‘Ynqaba’s neighbouring planets actually purged many of their countries to survive.’

‘Sounds great,’ Sk’jin intones in an almost bored voice. ‘Bet the Yishengs wept.’

‘Cry they did,’ Namjoon comments dryly as he glances over at some of the smaller headlines regarding the coverage. He was going to have to be very careful with how he approached this. So he whistles low as he murmurs out a report sent back to the GLA by the Yisheng Directory.

‘Cry they did…and they sent a Yisheng ship. In fact they sent a few.’
Namjoon pauses a while as he reads the report properly, waiting for any form of reaction. Mainly from Sk’jin. But he gets a little distracted as he actually pays attention to the decrypting file.

‘According…’ he pauses, glancing at the source and title of the file. ‘-according to the official mission report by the Yisheng Directory and mission leader Ndica, they went with six ships. And those ships…’

He hears Hoseok make a bemused expression as though scoffing.

Quickly entering the ship codes into the GLA database, Namjoon waits all but 5 seconds to locate them all.

‘-2 are still in use, the other 4 are no longer in service.’ Namjoon reads through their locations- the 4 that were no longer in use were docked in Tayi, waiting to be upcycled into new models.

‘We know where one of those is, where’s the other one?’ Hoseok asks.

‘The System of Axudar,’ Namjoon closes in on the location before sending it to Ems to check. He hears her curse him out.

Kai huffs in amusement.

‘What?’

‘That’s where Ndica is from.’

‘Well well,’ Sk’jin comments wryly. ‘How interesting.’

‘So the Yishengs did send ships to Ynqaba and the other planets. But how did they even crash? Were they attacked? Seems unlikely,’ Hoseok asks.

Namjoon waits an appropriate amount of time before saying, ‘I think it’s fair to say the reason why Ynqaba is the way it is- is because of the Yishengs.’

There’s a very heavy silence over the line.

‘If it was headed by Ndica, then it’s clear that he was there not as part of the Yisheng mission. But to further his own plan for domination.’ Yoongi says quietly. ‘Ynqaba was probably used as a cover. To distract from what they were really doing there.’

‘And what would that be?’ Hoseok asks.

‘Considering we found Jungkook there- and how Jimin said that they had GI uniforms with them, something that could also be related to the GI possibly.’ Namjoon tries in an off-handed manner.

‘What’s in Axudar?’ Sk’jin asks instead.

‘Checking,’ Namjoon looks over at Ems who really does flip him off this time.

‘You’re not being subtle.’ Sk’jin suddenly says, ‘And despite being an agent, Hoseok really lacks subtlety too.’

Namjoon grimaces- he doesn’t want to push Sk’jin.

‘Hey, Sk’jin.’
‘What?’ Sk’jin snaps.

‘Would you have told us?’

It’s quiet over the line. Namjoon doesn’t clarify what he means, but it could mean anything at this point. Whatever Sk’jin decided to answer with, Namjoon would take.

‘I should punch that idiot Long Huon for having such a big mouth- kid could never shut up,’ Sk’jin mutters. ‘And I’m fine- I at least have all my limbs.’

‘I want to know what he meant,’ Namjoon tries not to scowl at the memory of Zitao, the tall Long Huon who gave him the most disregarding look Namjoon has ever received in his entire life.

‘There’s not much to say. I’m not supposed to be alive you know? I guess in that sense all of us fit that category- but me more than you all.’ Sk’jin pauses before snorting, ‘Not saying I’m special.’

‘Oh you definitely are,’ Namjoon chuckles.

‘If you’ll stop flirting got some information on Axudar here,’ Ems cuts in, her voice unimpressed and monotone.

Kai hastily disguises his giggle into a cough.

‘How much time do you have?’ Namjoon asks, almost conversationally as he opens the files on Axudar.

Sk’jin couldn’t stand being serious- it was as though he abhorred any form of formal discussion, feeling the urge to disrupt protocol. It made him testy, and difficult to converse with. If Namjoon needed answers, or better yet, any form of truth from Sk’jin, he would have to meet him where he was most comfortable.

Not face-to-face, and incredibly off-hand.

Sk’jin doesn’t immediately answer. He was probably caught off-guard or contemplating what sort of answer to give.

‘Enough time to see this shit of a mission through.’

‘Is there-‘

‘No, Namjoon. There isn’t. I don’t need you looking into anything either. I don’t want you to.’ Sk’jin interrupts firmly.

‘All right.’ Namjoon acquiesces.

‘I’m going off line. I need food.’ He declares, excusing himself out of the communication line. Sighing, Namjoon guesses he might as well check up on what’s going on in Axudar other than the fact that Ndica came from there.

He’s not expecting, however, to be familiar with the coordinates.

‘Yoongi- could counter-check these coordinates with the ones we set up for our trajectory?’

‘Which trajectory?’ Yoongi asks immediately.

‘All of them. You good?’
Yoongi’s answer comes a little late, ‘Yes.’

‘Yoongi was nodding,’ Taeh’yung explains randomly.

‘We have these coordinates in 4 of our trajectories mapped out to enter Megibīya,’ Yoongi reports. ‘The System of Axudar.’

‘Thanks Yoongi,’ Namjoon frowns as he looks at the information on the System.

It was very close to where Megibīya was. And it was also where Ndica was from.

‘You guys know anything about Axudar off the top of your heads?’ he asks out loud.

‘Isn’t it affiliated with the Raksane Tayi Scientific Panel?’ Kai remarks, not looking away from the screen. ‘Pretty sure there’s like, some sort of branch there.’

‘Scientific Panel- more like private funders for the Alliance,’ Ems snorts from where she was. ‘Axudar is a pile of shitty scientists shitting together.’

Both Kai and Namjoon turn to eye her.

‘What? Like you didn’t know?’ Ems snorts again. ‘All of these organizations are ultimately funded by the GLA or the Venture Unit in one way or another. Idiots from Axudar are the ones who created us. Think about it- it’s so much easier for the Scientific Panel to get away with things if they just did what they wanted to do through the Alliance.’

All of this hits a little too close with what Namjoon has seen from the very start of this mission. And the further Namjoon digs in, the closer everything ties in.

From the Yishengs in Ynqaba, to the Alliance, all the way to the GI in Tayi- and now the Scientific Panel in Axudar- everything that seemed unconnected somehow was all tying in on each other.

And in the center of it all- was not just Jimin. Not just Yoongi.

It was all of them.

Digging into Axudar was complicated and time consuming. But when he actually gets to the core of it, Namjoon feels as though he’s hit the jackpot- Axudar was steeped in the whole debacle about Digital Souls as well as on leading research regarding cloning before it was completely outlawed and banned. No wonder Ems felt so passionately about the System. But Namjoon has now gathered enough information to see through their next step in their mission.

Kai wakes up with a jolt, looking extremely dazed. Namjoon hadn’t even realized the Dakaṣayaii was still there.

He’s not sure how long he’s been sitting here now- considering there’s no way to check up on time. He just knows that Taeh’yung has randomly butt in through the Comm to just talk nonsense and ask about Jimin who was still asleep. Stretching a little, though he didn’t really need to, Namjoon saves some of the more important files onto his own NaviLet from Ems’s screens.

He pauses a little as he saves the tabs on all of his crew members. Ems had even found information on Taeh’yung. Even on Yoongi though he’s pretty sure it’s information from Earth that he already found. Still, it was good to keep in case Yoongi wanted to know more.
Yoongi had said that he wasn’t Yoongi- that he didn’t know who he was.

Yoongi- or actual Human Yoongi, had a sister, that much they all knew at this point. But what happened there? What had she been told?

Namjoon does a quick scan within the tab, searching for reports or articles or recordings that had anything to do with Humans dying on a mission for the GLA. Humans as a whole didn’t participate in a lot of GLA activities such as excursions or “dangerous” missions. If they worked for the GLA it was normally as part of the diplomatic and or research department between Earth and Tayi. Before Earth was destroyed, they had been working on a very important and for some strange loophole in the system, illegal development that would benefit Earth’s environment. It had been called “Pollen”, if Namjoon remembers it correctly, and they were in the process of having it legalized in the Yisheng Directory.

Finding nothing, Yoongi goes back to Yoongi’s family. Finding them was easy; there weren’t a lot of Humans, and there weren’t a lot of Humans with the family name Min living in that settlement.

Her name is Chaewon and according to the legacy archive, was an AI. She was a member of the “Historical Archive Committee for the Milky Way”. According to the report she had 3 children: and one of them was named Yoongi. The family tree indicates that the eldest son, Min Yoongi, had been LIS. Or Lost in Space, as they termed all GLA officers who lost their lives in their duty for the GLA. It’s all that’s been mentioned in the legacy archive.

To Namjoon’s surprise, the family tree was still alive. They had survived Earth’s destruction.

He saves this information to give to Yoongi when he gets back.

He purposefully saves Sk’jin’s for last.

He wasn’t sure when Jimin would be waking up (a weird thought that would worry him but Taeh’yung, despite his constant questions, had assured him that Jimin was all right) and he knew he wouldn’t be coming back here for a long while. Making himself comfortable, Namjoon opens the tab on Sk’jin.

He thinks about what Sk’jin had said in his Cabin, looking incredibly old in the warped starlight.

‘You’re just like him.’

He says and it’s almost accusatory. ‘What curse is this? This has to be a curse or some other bullshit.’

Sk’jin turns forward again, fuming under his breath.

‘Who was he?’

‘My best-friend,’ Sk’jin answers quietly. ‘My best-friend, my right-hand, my moral-compass, my laughter, my promise. Spaces I fucking hate him.’

‘Ems.’

‘Hm?’

‘When you dug up info on my team, were you able to dig up known associates?’

‘You didn’t find them yourself?’ Ems asks, not looking away from the many screens before her.
'Of course I have,' Namjoon rolls his eyes.

‘But?’

‘But you’re better?’ Namjoon grins.

‘Suck up.’ she scoffs before saying, ‘Everything you could possibly need is in there.’

Namjoon is about to turn back to his screen, ignoring the way Kai yawns widely, stretching out as though to nap when Ems calls him again.

‘I found something interesting about your Khol’isa.’ She says.

‘Not my Khol’isa,’ Namjoon grumbles.

‘Semantics. I’m highlighting that interesting bit.’

Namjoon grumbles in reply again as Kai starts to snore.

‘He had one of the largest networks in the Underverse,’ Ems says. ‘Pretty impressive I gotta say. Your Khol’isa was doing well for himself.’

Namjoon doesn’t bother correcting her anymore.

‘He was famous, but…respected. There aren’t a lot of images of him outside of the GLA criminal records archive. He was extremely careful with how he managed his network.’ Ems sounds like she’s praising Sk’jin. ‘Found a few captured images still not entirely corrupted. Here.’

Namjoon checks the newly highlighted files on his screen.

‘Seems like the GLA and the Venture Unit attempted to contact him several times. To use their information and data to tackle the Alliance.’ Ems hums a bit before saying, ‘Here- this might be of interest.’

‘You think he might be involved?’ Kai asks in a sleepy tone.

‘We’re all involved,’ Namjoon frowns as he runs the files through his own reader. The files are images, short moving clips, and what appeared to be recorded logs suspected to come from Sk’jin’s pass-cards. The first file to read is an image and Namjoon leans in closer. It takes some time, cleaning up, but it’s quite obvious.

It’s clearly Sk’jin. And Namjoon wouldn’t say he looked young per se. But somehow…just…-

Sk’jin was undeniably a beautiful Being. There was a delicate beauty to him that in many Systems would be considered almost unnatural. But that same beauty held such power and something ancient. And in this single short recording seemed to encompass all of it better than what Namjoon remembers seeing Sk’jin now.

He’s turning back, eyebrow raised as though in amusement, hair sweeping past his forehead and delicate crystal horns.

It was true, Sk’jin now seemed entirely incomplete and it was even more obvious after seeing this footage.

He’s laughing at something someone says, reaching over to hook his arm around his. The unknown Being doesn’t turn, instead hunching a little as though laughing as well as he leans into Sk’jin. The other Being in front of them seems to be giving a snide remark of sorts.

Namjoon goes through the list of known associates, narrowing it down to the most updated list, just a sol apart from Sk’jin’s disappearance from any record across the Known Universe. He cross-references the list of known associates and their criminal record images with the records Ems had managed to retrieve from the Venture Unit Core when she’d been looking up information on Hoseok. There’s a lot in there and Namjoon isn’t exactly expecting anything to pop up. Which is why he’s surprised to find a match with facial recognition.

A Venture Unit agent, not unlike Hoseok or Kai in fact.

His name is Ahadi, and he was a native of the planet Mwenzi. The information on him is limited, as all Venture Unit agents tend to be so in the archives. There is an added information that he was a defected agent, and was on a wanted list for collaborating with pirates.

‘Hey- looks like you,’ Kai suddenly comments through a yawn.

Namjoon frowns at the comment, looking over Ahadi carefully. He doesn’t see the resemblance.

‘It’s not just like- facial. You two…just feel the same,’ Kai shrugs before standing up and stretching loudly.

‘You’re just like him.’

Namjoon saves all of the files.

By the time they’re back on the Užkulisai, Namjoon feels a lot more confident. While what he believes to be true aren’t 100% backed up, he firmly believes that they were headed in the right direction.

‘We won’t do it even if a single Being on this table doesn’t agree.’ Namjoon repeats himself. ‘We will only continue if everyone agrees.’

‘What do you think?’ Yoongi asks Jimin who had kept quiet throughout the discussion.

‘Oh right- was there anything interesting you had with your meeting?’ Hoseok asks. ‘With the person who had information about Megibiya.’

‘He just…’ Jimin pauses, his gaze fixed on his hand.

‘He just showed me his past,’ Jimin replies slowly, his words coming out carefully, ‘What happened to him, how he met my people. How he died.’

There was a lot to explain surely, but Jimin looked like he didn’t know how to explain what he saw. And that was understandable. The very idea that someone, outside of this immediate group, outside of Jimin’s System, had been a first-hand witness to what happened to the people of Megibiya.

‘I saw a lot- I…felt a lot.’ Jimin says in a quiet manner. ‘I am still trying to understand what I saw. I need more.’

Jimin looks around at all of them. His expression is a strange combination of determination, sorrow, and resolve.
More Dreams.

It’s evident that no one knows what Jimin means by this exactly.

‘So we’re headed for Axudar then, I guess?’ Hoseok asks, breaking the silence over the table. Namjoon looks around at everyone in the table as they all nod in agreement.

‘Okay great,’ Sk’jin declares. ‘Who’s gonna do the dishes because it sure ain’t gonna be me.’ Namjoon and Hoseok volunteer in the end. Yoongi, Namjoon realizes, has never washed the dishes and always manages to vanish when it’s time to clean up.

‘Did you find a place that can deliver for your parts?’ Hoseok asks as he stacks the plates into the UV cleaner while Namjoon waits to rinse them.

‘I did, should arrive around the same time as Sk’jin’s UV bed,’ Namjoon nods and adds, ‘Made sure it would be discreet but not in a way to attract attention. Due to the fact that this is a mining zone, replacement parts for androids and even certain types of cyborgs are kinda frequent. So it won’t stand out too much if I order in bulk under one of the Pits shipments.’ Hoseok nods his approval.

‘What do you think Jimin meant? By dreams?’ Hoseok asks.

‘Honesty I don’t know,’ Namjoon replies honestly. ‘It’s like there’s a different meaning for him. For them- Jimin, Yoongi, Sk’jin, Taeh’yung. It’s like there’s several meanings to it and I’m never sure which one they’re referring to.’

‘Oh to have some clarity,’ Hoseok exhales dramatically before snorting and adding, ‘Never seen Yoongi so agitated. He even cracked a few jokes you know? It was weird as fuck.’

‘Worried?’

‘Panicked more like,’ Hoseok sighs. ‘I don’t think he quite knows how to grasp… emotions.’

‘Do any of us really know how to though,’ Namjoon asks back.

‘Good point- I guess he just doesn’t know how to express it.’ Hoseok corrects himself.

‘He’ll learn. He’s already learning. He’s better than when we started.’

‘He’s…I don’t know if the word is improved but yeah I guess. More so when Jimin woke up.’ Hoseok points out as he unloads the slightly warm dishes into the soapy sink.

‘Don’t chip the plates!’ Sk’jin yells from the Lobby where he’s reclining majestically, feet up on one of the cushions. Taeh’yung and Jungkook are engaged in some sort of weird game of chase.

‘You look better,’ Hoseok comments randomly.

Namjoon’s not sure what Hoseok means by that. After showering he had glanced at himself and didn’t notice anything changed.

‘Thanks?’

Hoseok just laughs in response.
'How’s Sk’jin been?’

A small furrow forms between Hoseok’s eyebrows. He takes his time to answer, washing his hands thoroughly first.

‘He’s being careful,’ Hoseok explains. He sounds uncertain. ‘Not just…not just action-wise. The way he’s speaking, the things he’s saying.’

‘Careful with us?’

‘Hm- careful with himself. Jungkook being here has changed a lot of things. I think like all of us, he’s processing the meaning of what we’re really getting ourselves into.’ Hoseok states thoughtfully. He gives Namjoon a searching look before asking as he wipes his hands, ‘You dove in on us didn’t you?’

Namjoon doesn’t bother denying it.

‘Honestly there’s not much to find. Found stuff that Yoongi might be interested in,’ he adds.

Hoseok smiles wryly at that.

‘Guess you know all there’s to know about us then.’

In truth there wasn’t much Namjoon could find about Hoseok. Or at least the issues that mattered. For instance the history with his father. Because Namjoon was so closely involved with the case he knew that Hoseok’s father had been one of the many Beings across the Universe who were in league with the “rogue” Yishengs and their attempt to, more or less, take over the Universe. Hoseok obviously had no clue as to how his father had been roped in- had no idea of how it happened, when it happened.

While the Gaia Trials revealed thousands upon thousands of Beings like Hoseok’s father, not much could be done as they were not directly involved in anything particularly illegal. Trying them had been difficult. But from what Namjoon knew from the trials, they were all recruited by someone just like them, believing in the supposed “higher calling” or Yisheng morality and undisputed belief in their supposed divine supremacy.

These Beings were as diverse as it could possibly be. From GLA officers from every department to pirates to tradesmen to normal citizens- this massive collection of Beings all keeping an almost public secret together had nearly managed to entirely upheave the entire Universe.

Namjoon’s not sure how he ends up with Sk’jin in the Bridge as the others decide to sleep. Jungkook is there too, head on Sk’jin’s lap but he’s asleep so it feels like it’s just the two of them. They don’t speak. But it’s not uncomfortable or anything. There was just no need for conversation, and Namjoon was just going through all the files and reports he had saved for his later perusal.

‘So tell me,’ Sk’jin suddenly calls from where he was sitting for the past few hours in complete silence. ‘Do you have any questions for me?’

‘You knew that the Venture Unit sent an agent to infiltrate your network right?’ Namjoon asks, not even pretending. It was better to be direct with Sk’jin anyways.

‘They sent a lot.’

‘But one stayed.’
‘One stayed,’ Sk’jin nods in confirmation.

‘The Venture Unit wanted information, access, your network- so that they could get to the Alliance?’

Sk’jin rolls his eyes, neon red flashing.

‘That’s what they say. They just say that to use agents for their will- most of them didn’t know they were being used for other purposes.’ Sk’jin says with a distasteful expression, screwing up his face.

‘Do you think they would have ever tried to recruit you for what the Yishengs were planning?’

Sk’jin doesn’t look at him, but stares out straight into the light display before them.

‘I suppose so. Never worked out of course.’

Clearly it didn’t.

‘Well I suppose there are aspects to that-‘ Sk’jin starts but he pauses, turning his head around to look at the entrance of the Bridge. But Namjoon hears it too. Hurried footsteps up the stairs.

Jungkook starts awake too, probably catching on to the change in the air rather than the sound, eyes wide as he hunches in on himself instinctively.

Jimin appears at the doorway, breathless, face blotched with colour. He looks incredibly disturbed, his eyes wide, and his normally calm demeanor shaken.

‘What’s wrong?’ Sk’jin asks at once as Jungkook sits up, eyeing the Bridge as though looking for things that might jump out at him.

‘I- I saw-‘ Jimin breathes harshly. ‘I saw into his Dreams- I saw into his mind and-‘Saw into whose dreams?’ Sk’jin asks as they quickly rush to Jimin’s side.

‘Yoongi-‘ Jimin looks confused and he says slowly, ‘I think- I think everything was done on purpose.’

Namjoon finds himself a little bit stunned, his reaction a bit slow.

‘His- his back was-‘ Jimin reaches for his own back.

Sk’jin makes a frustrated sound but before anyone can ask any question, Lisai’s smooth voice interrupts them.

‘Accelerated heart rate and brain wave function detected in Weapons Specialist Yoongi,’ the AI tells them. ‘He is experiencing a panic attack.’

Jimin immediately turns about, rushing out of the Bridge, closely followed by Jungkook.

‘What the fuck-?’ Sk’jin asks no one in particular.

‘Lisai prepare the Medical Bay-‘ Namjoon calls out.

‘Immediately, Captain.’
‘Namjoon what’s going on?’ Hoseok says on line but he’s already appearing out of his Cabin door, looking confused as he glances at them, rushing down the stairs and turning towards Jimin’s Cabin. But the door is already sliding open and for some reason they all halt to a stop.

Yoongi shuffles out, nearly tripping on his feet. He looks completely dazed, covered in sweat, gasping and clearly hyperventilating.

‘Yoongi-’ Jimin takes a step towards him, entering his line of vision.

Yoongi’s reaction is violent.

He literally falls, his legs giving out, but his entire body seems to lurch forward towards Jimin, gasping but no sound escaping him other than his harsh breathing.

‘Hey are you-’ Hoseok asks worriedly, stepping forward as well.

This seems to trigger Yoongi who seems to finally realize that they’re all there.

Then he really seems to lose it because he suddenly seems to gain a wild strength and he skids across the floor towards Jimin, grappling almost violently and holding the latter down, shielding him down on the floor, his eyes still completely wild.

‘What the fuck-’ Sk’jin breathes out worriedly, looking back at Namjoon in shock.

Taeh’yung appears, eyes wide and somehow pant-less.

‘What’s going on?’ he asks, palms already glowing as though instinctively ready to attack (!?!?).

‘Yoongi-?’ Jimin is trying to calm the Human down but it’s almost as though he didn’t seem to know where he was-

‘Oh fucking Spaces,’ Sk’jin breathes out, eyes wide as he takes a step back.

Sk’jin takes a step back but Jungkook takes a step forward, snarling viciously as he crouches down.

And Yoongi’s reaction is to press back even more, shielding Jimin. His face is turning a strange colour and Namjoon can tell he’s about to pass out- he was hyperventilating too much and-

‘-stop-‘ Yoongi manages to wheeze out- ‘-go away-! NO!’

He screams, his veins painfully clear at his throat and around his temples. Jungkook snarls, ready to pounce and Sk’jin is trying to reach for him before he can leap.

But Yoongi falls backwards, a pair of arms wrapping around him that immediately goes up to his head, palms flat on either side of his temple.

Jimin says something, the air around them rippling almost.

Yoongi immediately calms down, his breathing normalizing and his face turning less purple and more normal.

‘No- no-!’ Yoongi is still gasping out, scrambling for a moment before he sits up bit straighter.

‘Stay- stay away-!’

No one moves. Hoseok gives him a worried look, clearing asking what the fuck he had just woken up to. But Namjoon has no explanation. Taeh’yung for no known reason, has a brilliant smile on his face. Sk’jin looks incredibly worried, a frown on his face as he clutches onto Jungkook’s shirt to keep him close.

‘Yoongi?’ Jimin’s voice is sweeter than usual; softer.

Namjoon guesses he’s using some part of his ability.

But Yoongi does stop mumbling weird string of words and nonsense that compromised of “no”, “stay away”, and “stop”. It’s extremely worrying and Namjoon doesn’t know what to make of it.

But then Yoongi is scrambling again, turning around and crouching before Jimin as though shocked to his very core.

‘How-’ he chokes out.

Jimin has a very very controlled expression, but Namjoon can tell easily that this control could break any time.

‘How are-‘ Yoongi raises his hand and then lowers and then raises it again. He shuffle stiffly towards Jimin on his knees before he’s touching his face. Jimin takes his hand in his own, eyes never leaving Yoongi’s.

‘Are you real?’ Yoongi whispers.

He was clearly in shock.

Sk’jin makes to move forward but Hoseok raises his hand and so does Taeh’yung who is watching the whole scene unfold like it was some form of movie.

‘Real-‘ Jimin whispers back. ‘I’m real-‘

‘Sunshine?’

Yoongi’s shaking and careful touch changes to something desperate as he falls into Jimin, his entire body shaking.

‘He’s going into shock he might- he might collapse,’ Sk’jin says worriedly, still holding Jungkook back who is equal parts confused, angry, and shocked.

‘I’ve seen this-‘ Hoseok says suddenly. ‘Yoongi has done this before- in Ynqaba- he wasn’t- he wasn’t himself-‘

‘I think he’s finally woken up,’ Taeh’yung comments from where he’s sitting luxuriously on the couch.

‘What do you mean?’ Namjoon manages to finally speak, looking back at where a shaking Yoongi is still clutching onto Jimin, tucking him into his own form as though afraid of losing him.

‘Yoongi,’ Taeh’yung grins with a nod towards the Human. ‘He’s Awake.’
(Author’s Note)

I forgot to mention this last author’s note but Can we all scream and cry
About
Mono
Tell me your favorite song
Mine is Moonchild
There is a way this song moves me- if I listen to it unprepared I can cry any time
I’ve always felt better, at night
When I was younger and living in my home country I used to go to the rooftop and just sit outside because I felt, idk, a lot more hopeful because the night to me was that moment of rest, that moment you know regardless of whatever happened that day or will happen tomorrow, its where you can just breathe. And moonchild really touched me at an emotional level. Also I don’t think there’s any need to mention how much I love the night sky and how much I love space, and all things cosmic, so this song feels indescribably hopeful to me. Namjoon to me feels like someone who is beyond artistry, its like he’s able to create something beyond what would be described as art. You know? It’s like he creates something almost spiritual
Also Namjoon is my moonchild end of story he is moonson
Im gonna cry
Brb
Also when he collabed with Nell I wanted to cry because I’ve listened to Nell for like, a long time, the first song I heard from them was “recede” and it’s still my favorite Nell song
Check it out if you haven’t!
And yes. Yoongi’s sister in this is Gowon from Loona. I heard that they’re cousins (or at least from the same family tree) so I thought, you know what, yes. I love Loona, and I love Gowon, so yes. I’ll do it.
‘Yoongi,’ Taeh’yung grins. ‘He’s Awake.’

They don’t move from where they’re standing. Only Taeh’yung makes a move by sitting down, reaching out to pull Jungkook closer to him. His attitude is carefree and not surprised by whatever was happening now.

But Hoseok finds himself experiencing déjà vu with what he was witnessing.

When he had entered the broken Yisheng ship back in Ynqaba to follow after Yoongi, he had come across the Human in the midst of a crazed massacre. The Human had behaved oddly, moving as though he had no conscious control over his body. He hadn’t recognized Hoseok and had attacked.

The same panic, the same confusion, the same wild look but intensified was now fully manifesting before all of them.

‘H-how-’ Yoongi’s voice breaks, coming out in gasps as his body tries to go into panic, but Jimin is clearly doing something, gently calming him down. ‘How are you- how are you here- how did- how did this-‘

Yoongi suddenly darts about, still shielding Jimin with his body.

‘Stay away-!’ he heaves out. ‘Don’t- don’t-!’

‘Jiminnie,’ Taeh’yung suddenly says quite conversationally, ‘I think it’s too much for Yoongi right now.’

Jimin looks heavily conflicted, his arms keep moving from holding Yoongi back, to cradling his head.

‘I think he should sleep-‘

‘NO!’ Yoongi screams, ‘STOP IT STOP LEAVE THIS PLACE STAY AWAY-‘

Jimin seems to make up his mind, eyes shining with unshed tears as he places his palms over Yoongi’s head with a determined look. The Human’s eyes roll backwards, his body going limp, instantly falling unconscious. Jimin holds him up quickly, arranging him to a more comfortable position.
‘What in fucking Spaces was that all about?’ Sk’jin demands at once, stepping forward to look down at Jimin.

With a strength that shouldn’t be surprising anymore (but Hoseok doubts it because Jimin didn’t particularly come off as physically powerful) Jimin picks up Yoongi in his arms.

‘Please follow me,’ is all he says, walking back to the Cabin Yoongi had burst out of.

Sk’jin gives him a confused look and Hoseok can only return it in kind. He had been asleep when Lisai’s voice rung through the air. And while the others didn’t need to know, he had already armed himself, watching the surveillance screens to locate any possible location of disturbance.

But his TeorSers and Heliords were already packed away when he realized it wasn’t an alarm of danger.

They all follow Jimin back into his Cabin, identical to every other Cabin in the Living Quarters. Hoseok notices how the window has been darkened so that no light entered. Jimin puts Yoongi down on the bed while Taeh’yang immediately makes himself comfortable on it, stretching himself out next to the unconscious Human.

The Cabin is a little small for 6 fully grown adults and one larger than average fledgling. But they make do, waiting expectantly for Jimin who takes a seat on the floor beside Yoongi’s pillowed head.

‘When I met JD, the Being who had information about Megibīya- he showed me his Dreams,’ Jimin begins slowly, carefully choosing his words.

‘What do you mean by dreams?’ Namjoon asks from where he’s leaning against the door.

‘Memories,’ Jimin explains, ‘But…they’re not memories of now,’ he waves his hand around in a wide circular motion. ‘It’s- it’s memories of living…of living in a time past.’

‘We just call ours nightmares,’ Sk’jin mutters quietly next to him.

‘So…so JD showed you his dreams? Of Megibīya? How?’ Hoseok asks.

‘You were sleeping- but how can you share consciousness?’ Namjoon asks as well.

Jimin looks at Sk’jin for some reason before glancing at Yoongi’s sleeping form and saying, ‘I think it’s because – because we existed in a different…different time. A different existence- and we can,’ Jimin thinks hard, words forming slowly as he tries his best to use words that would best explain what he wanted to say. ‘A different realm, we slept in that realm, where time is different, and so…so we can go back and show each other our dreams.’

He gives Sk’jin a pleading look, one that Namjoon follows back up to the Khol’isa who sighs and says, ‘I know what he means. Maybe it’s not the same but- but sometimes, I guess you could say you’re caught in limbo. Or at least existing in a way somewhere that’s…that’s not where this is, you know?’ Sk’jin waves vaguely.

Hoseok can get what they’re trying to explain. Theories about extra-dimensions, of alternative realities and parallel worlds have existed and floated around for as long as the notion of reality has existed. And while Hoseok is sure that, fine, maybe in some way, there are other dimensions that do exist. But they’re normally in the realm of theoretical science that studies energy and waveforms and black holes. The Universe- or the Known Universe was large, but Dark Space as they called it, was larger and unexplored. The possibilities were endless. But Hoseok has always been of the mind that what existed in his immediate reality was much more important than the hypothesis of something that was unknown.

But maybe that should change now, considering everything he’s been through and what he’s seen.

‘Based on the Ga-Ga-ya Case reports,’ Jimin says carefully pronouncing the word by their syllables, ‘The Red Evil was born as a result of the Yisheng’s unwanted- um, rejected experiment. They dispose of them,-disposed of them in black holes. But they returned.’

Hoseok finds himself nodding alongside Namjoon, confirming Jimin’s statement.

It was an easy way to get rid of evidence. Easy but dangerous. The Yishengs made good use of their powerful ships and approached black holes to rid of their rejected experiments. As a result, the Akramanese, or the Red Evil, were born.

‘Time is different, changed, altered near black holes,’ Jimin continues. ‘And it’s…they are a part, of existing there.’

‘So…these dreams are…existences within black holes?’ Namjoon asks carefully.

Jimin shakes his head.

‘It’s similar- but what remains in our minds- no,’ he pauses, looking over at Yoongi again, ‘What stays in our souls, our Dreams, through that existence, is what connects us.’ He looks up, smiling briefly at Sk’jin before saying, ‘I could look into your Dreams, and you could look into mine. Same with Jungkook.’

Jungkook looks around with wide eyes.

‘And me!’ Taeh’yung waves his hands upwards. ‘But for your own safety, best not to.’

Hoseok doesn’t even want to question that, even though Jimin and Sk’jin seem to nod in agreement at Taeh’yung’s statement.

‘So you looked into Yoongi’s dreams?’ Namjoon asks slowly, ‘No- you looked into his past? Who he was before.’

Jimin nods.

‘I asked him if I could. I tried to do what JD did. And I could link our existence, the Time around us and…I could see everything,’ Jimin looks troubled. ‘I think- I think there was a big plan, a very big…attempt, to break into Menigišiti by the Yishengs…and the GLA.’

It takes a while before Jimin is able to fully tell them what he saw, his voice sometimes cracked as he maintained a neutral tone, telling them Yoongi’s past; or at least Human Yoongi’s past.

‘Ammee was there,’ Namjoon is sitting now, elbow on his knees as he frowns in thought, ‘Obviously she didn’t know what was going on. But she had her suspicions. But you said she was part of the Panel that approached you?’

Jimin nods.

‘Yoongi and his friend already had the marks down their backs,’ Hoseok begins, ‘It means that it wasn’t a result of the Red Evil- or even of the GI.’

‘It could have been before the GI was properly formed,’ Sk’jin points out. ‘The GI have been a sort of urban myth for about 5 to 6 centuries right? Maybe they were pre-GI candidates? I think it’s safe to assume the rest of his team all had the same mark.’

‘There’s no point guessing or assuming all that,’ Namjoon says making Sk’jin give him an incredulous look. ‘I think it’s safe to say that Yoongi, as in Yoongi from the past, has somehow…woken up, or has…come back?’ he tilts his head as though in doubt of his own words. ‘And if he’s still…awake, so to speak, we can ask him details.’

‘True, but I don’t know how well he’d react to being here. He was in shock,’ Sk’jin points out adding with a sniff, ‘Besides, based on his experience, I doubt he’d trust to tell any of us.’

‘He’ll tell me,’ Jimin says with certainty. ‘He’ll trust me.’

‘It might be difficult for him to remember,’ Hoseok supplies. ‘We don’t know how much he will remember. Or how much of it is accurate- there were gaps in the memories according to what Jimin told us. Wouldn’t it be better if Jimin tried to uh, tie their minds again?’

‘They’re different,’ Taeh’yung quips up, mindlessly braiding Yoongi’s hair. ‘I don’t think this Yoongi will know how to Dream.’

‘Does it matter?’ Sk’jin asks with a curious expression, ‘It’s still him.’

‘Different, but same,’ Taeh’yung shrugs. ‘There was a pause, but it’s catching up now.’

‘But you said this isn’t the same Yoongi right?’ Namjoon asks carefully, ‘So how does he remember? How does…how does he know?’

‘Different but same pa,’ Taeh’yung explains, frowning a little before raising his palm, light forming at his finger tips. Neon green lined triangles form and twist just a little above his fingertips. He holds up his thumb, the triangle rotating slowly, the shape aligned and balanced. His pointer finger is also illuminating another triangle, but the lengths are different. And it goes on. All the triangles are different lengths and sizes. ‘Different but same.’

‘Well okay if that’s the case,’ Sk’jin says, breaking them from their trance. ‘What about Amme. She was there in Jimin’s system, and she was there snooping around in Mars, talking to Yoongi. And we all know she was the one who pretty much raised this Yoongi after the Gaia Case. What was her purpose in sending Yoongi to all of this? Was it because she knew him before, that she thought sending him here would trigger his memories? Or is it because of how Jimin was apparently in their possession before they decided to sneak him into the ship on our way to his home-system? What’s the connection?’

Sk’jin had a very good point.

And now with this “awakening”, it made sense that Yoongi was added into the mission. Amme had met and spoken to him in his past, and then she clearly recognized him when she saw him again. She was able to put two and two together, that whatever strange mission Yoongi was a part of, headed for Megibiya, was connected to how he was here today.

All of this was connected to the Gaia Case, but also at the same time, went much further than that. This went to the genesis – where it all started. What did Jimin’s system have to do with the Red Evil? Why were they there, and why were the Yishengs there, sending supposed GLA teams by the dozens to secretly investigate planets. And just who were the Omhlophe and why were they still here, what was their objective? Why were they after Jimin?

As individuals, they weren’t able to really make sense of what they knew, who they were, and what they were really supposed to do. However, by combining all of them together, by connecting them all like this: Namjoon, Sk’jin, Yoongi, Jimin, and himself- maybe they would be able to understand what had happened, how it happened- and most importantly, why it happened.

‘I think we need to first wake Yoongi up,’ Namjoon says steadily, ‘I mean, is it safe? He didn’t look so good.’

‘Should be fine!’ Taeh’yung says as he grins at Jungkook, having hovered the triangles over to the young Pravasi M’hanun who was obviously delighted by the floating lights.

Namjoon raises an inquiring eyebrow at Jimin who also nods though it’s a bit hesitant.

That was understandable- Jimin hadn’t expected this reaction from Yoongi, that much was evident. But he’s also worried about what could be revealed- seeing as his System was clearly very deeply affected by all of this.

‘I think, I think just me,’ Jimin says quietly as he sits up and onto the bed. ‘I think, it might be too much. For all of you to be here.’

Namjoon nods in understanding though Sk’jin frowns a little.

‘I can keep line open,’ Jimin says, understanding Sk’jin’s expression immediately.

‘It’s fine,’ Namjoon replies at once, ‘We don’t want to invade your privacy.’

Sk’jin gives Namjoon a brief irritated look.

‘Will you be safe?’ Hoseok asks.

Yoongi had tried to attack him in Ynqaba, and though he clearly recognized Jimin, you couldn’t be too sure.

‘I’ll be safe,’ Jimin replies with a nod. ‘Yoongi is safe.’

‘Be careful,’ Sk’jin tells him quietly as he leaves, tugging Jungkook along gently.

Jimin nods and smiles at that.

Namjoon also leaves and Hoseok follows. Taeh’yung is the last to leave. He says something to Jimin who nods slowly, lips pressed in a thin line as he listens to Taeh’yung.

The Zhak’gri is last to leave and the door to the Cabin closes shut.

‘What did you say to Jimin?’ Hoseok asks, pausing for the Zhak’gri to approach him.

‘That we shouldn’t linger in our memories too much,’ Taeh’yung beams at him before hugging him suddenly and eyeing him directly, ‘He’s carrying the weight of the dead, it will crush him.’

It’s such a final statement- such a strong declaration that it almost takes Hoseok’s breath away.

‘You shouldn’t do it too,’ Taeh’yung adds before he takes his hand, turning it so that his palm faced up. Taeh’yung kisses it, a small peck that somehow immediately cools his hand. ‘How else will you carry yourself?’
Jimin kneels beside the bed.

When he woke up almost an hour ago, he hadn’t expected this to be the result. In fact, when he woke up- he expected Yoongi to wake up too. But the Human hadn’t stirred, only slept on, breaths deep and slow. Jimin hadn’t detected anything unusual so he had hurried off to find the others. The past 2 days were filled with too much information, too much of everything.

He fiddles with the Comm Device on his earlobe and decides to deactivate it. He had offered to share the line but now it felt too…he’s not sure if he wants the others to overhear. Not when there was so much.

Not now, when Yoongi’s soul was suddenly and rapidly aging-

Jimin breathes out slowly, clearing his mind.

The pain in his chest is slowly building. He’s afraid of what will happen, afraid of what he will have to live with. He’s afraid that everything will go wrong- he’s already lost so much, seen so much.

He already didn’t know so much of what was happening, of what happened in the past.

But this.

With Yoongi.

This was too close.

Exhaling out, he quickly places his palms over Yoongi’s temples. It’s not even a second later that Yoongi jolts awake.

Jimin shuffles back a little, changing his posture to hold Yoongi down if he started thrashing or yelling. Yoongi is panting, sitting up and looking around wildly before he spots Jimin on the floor. Or maybe what happened before was a fluke and-

‘Sunshine-‘

Yoongi is off the bed and nearly slams them both onto the ground as he barrels straight into Jimin.

His entire body shaking, Yoongi is holding him but there is no strength in his grasp- it’s almost as though he’s afraid.

‘Is it-‘ he pants out into the crook of his neck. ‘Is this real. Is this real- I- please tell me please-‘

His voice is strained, pleading and begging.

‘Real,’ Jimin says as steadily as he can, ‘Yoongi, it’s real. I’m real.’
His whole body shakes, convulsions starting from the core of his chest and outwards. Jimin’s neck is damp.

‘You’re safe—’

Yoongi’s entire body flinches, his grasp tightening around him.

‘We’re safe,’ Jimin whispers, arms reaching around Yoongi to hold him close, hands rubbing soothing circles over his back. ‘We’re safe, Yoongi, we’re safe.’

The convulsions shift into shivers, and Yoongi genuinely breaks down, sobbing in earnest into his neck.

‘I’m here,’ Yoongi gasps out, ‘I’m- you’re here and—’

Yoongi’s pain, his fear, his relief—his bliss— Jimin feels all of it, pouring out of the Human at an overwhelming rate. His soul is strained—like a blight overwhelming all living things, fear and pain spreads through and Jimin would burn himself to rid of it if he could.

‘I’m here,’ Jimin whispers, voice cracking and his eyes blurring. ‘Yoongi, I’m here, I won’t go, I won’t go.’

They stay like that for what feels like hours. Yoongi’s hold doesn’t loosen, just shifts as though incapable of realizing that Jimin was real— and that he was there.

‘There’s—’ Yoongi chokes out, his words stuttering like he had so much to say but didn’t know how to say, what to say first. ‘There’s so much- I don’t- I’m— I’m me? But I- sunshine how did- who- who was I- I can see you- you came for me- I -…it hurt, I saw you, you came for me and—’

Yoongi heaves a breath.

‘These are- there are not—’ Yoongi makes a frustrated noise, ‘Sunshine I don’t understand- I- why is this- is this really me? How- how many- how many Yoongi’s do you see—’

Jimin shivers— could Yoongi remember what happened so far? What happened before?

‘It’s too much—’ Yoongi gasps, words breaking, his breaths coming out in sharp pants. ‘It’s—sunshine I can’t—’

Moving quickly, Jimin moves them, turning a little so he can properly hold Yoongi, never breaking from their original position where Yoongi is pressed into his neck. His movement seems to startle the Human, making Yoongi press in all the more, and Jimin could almost believe that their hearts were beating into each other. He gently runs his hand through Yoongi’s hair, carding through the strands gently, humming quietly under his breath. He whispers words of calm, of serenity into the tune he hums, gently rocking them in a lulling manner.

Slowly, each second slipping past faster than Jimin can comprehend, but stretching out infinitely all at once, the tenseness in Yoongi’s form relents.

‘I could hear you sing,’ Yoongi whispers after a while, voice almost sleepy. ‘I could hear your voice, all around me— they took the light. They took the stars, the sun— they took you—’

He stops, unable to speak, throat restricted. Jimin continues to card through his hair; his position on the floor is weirdly angled but he can’t find it in himself to move. Yoongi’s weight on him, his warmth, his presence; Jimin feels as though he’s drinking it all in, like a flower does with sunlight.
'They took you and I couldn’t follow-‘ Yoongi chokes out. ‘I tried- Jimin I tried so hard to come back-’

‘You’re here-‘ Jimin’s voice wobbles and he can’t be bothered to try and stabilize it. ‘You’re here and- and I’m here. You came back.’

Yoongi finally pulls away, just a little, arms still holding Jimin but he searches for his eyes.

‘I’m real,’ he breathes out, almost inaudibly.

Jimin nods, his forehead bumping against Yoongi’s.

‘How?’

‘I-…’ Jimin’s breath catches on his throat as Yoongi uncoils one arm to bring his hand up and lightly touch his cheek. He seems to marvel at how he’s able to touch him. He turns his face into Yoongi’s palm, making his fingers brush over his lips as though to physically show Yoongi the words he was speaking.

‘I don’t know,’ Jimin whispers as he also reaches up to gently touch Yoongi’s face.

Yoongi closes his eyes immediately, a choked sigh escaping him. His eyelashes are clumped from tears, the skin on his cheeks a little taut from where the tears have dried.

‘Don’t stop- don’t-‘ Yoongi whispers shakily, ‘I- I’m so scared-‘

Jimin pushes them up slowly, sitting up slowly as he strokes Yoongi’s face, leaning in to kiss his closed eyes.

Yoongi gasps at every touch, shaking a little again but this time it’s not because he’s going into shock. His hands form fists, scrunching up the fabric of Jimin’s shirt.

‘I- I’ll fade- don’t please-‘ Yoongi pleads. His words are slurred and thick, breathless as he tries to regain his sense of self, to ground himself. And Jimin pulls him in, his touch an anchor, a guard, holding Yoongi above the fear of disappearing. He pulls Yoongi even closer, his own fear and worry threatening to overwhelm him. Yoongi’s mind, his soul, his heart- they were screaming—

Shutting out the pain, Jimin softly presses kisses over Yoongi’s face, his fingers carefully brushing along his hair and down to his nape, lightly outlining the shape of his ears.

‘I-‘ he hiccups out as Jimin presses a kiss close to his mouth. ‘I said- I promised you-‘

Jimin hums in response, lips still pressed to Yoongi’s cheek.

‘I said I would always find you,’ Yoongi stutters out and there’s disbelief and awe in his eyes, a sense of confused panic but at the same time, an intense relief. ‘I found you.’

Jimin smiles as Yoongi opens his eyes. He doesn’t look terrified anymore, his eyes no longer glazed with madness and fear.

‘You found me,’ Jimin nods, their noses brushing.

‘I found you again sunshine,’ Yoongi gets out, ‘You-…god you’re beautiful- I found you.’

‘Welcome back,’ Jimin whispers before leaning in to press their lips together.
Yoongi and Jimin exit the Cabin almost an hour later. Yoongi still looks like he’s not sure how he’s there. He’s clutching Jimin’s hand like a lifeline. Parts of his hair is wet, as though he had just washed his face—messily at that too.

‘Uh-‘ Jimin starts, as though to call their attention even though everyone’s been waiting on silent edge for them to come out. Sk’jin had wanted to ask ‘you think they’re doing the do in there’ but Jungkook was there. Also neither of them look at all rumpled enough to have done anything. He would also be disappointed if they did because that seemed a rather short period of time in that context.

And though Sk’jin has stooped low to make untimely jokes, he’s not going to stoop as low as to crack a terrible innuendo before an innocent Being. He did however wiggle his eyebrows at Namjoon while nodding at Jimin’s Cabin direction. Namjoon had just frowned at him first, then a few seconds later he sighed heavily, looking up at the ceiling as though in prayer.

Ha! Jokes on him, prayers didn’t work out here in Space. Too many black holes around. Sk’jin keeps this joke to himself, grinning in a suppressed way that Jungkook notices almost immediately. He smiles at him, beaming as though he too enjoyed Sk’jin’s joke despite never having heard it.

‘Yoongi!’ Taeh’yung stands up—more like bounces up, arms waving as he shuffles forward with a bright grin and tackles the Human into a hug.

‘Oh god-!’ Yoongi’s eyes bulge out, his expression is pure comedic gold.

It’s also frightening to an extent because Sk’jin has never seen Yoongi express like this. Hoseok seems to be blinking hard, as though checking to see if his sight was all right. Out of habit, Sk’jin grabs at Jungkook’s shirt to hold him back. Something that was necessary around Yoongi because the Pravasi M’hanun was always inclined to somehow attack the Human. Something that makes Sk’jin cackle internally and hopes that one day, Jungkook can deck Yoongi off of his feet.

For purely entertainment purposes of course. Not that Sk’jin was nursing a grudge against the Human. Not at all.

‘Hi!’ I’m Taeh’yung,’ Taeh’yung holds his fingers up in a ‘v’.

‘Oh- uh, peace,’ Yoongi also holds up his hand in a ‘v’ sign before saying, ‘I know who you are.’

Taeh’yung pauses, eyebrows up before he says in a confused voice, ‘But I don’t think I’m old enough to know you?’

‘No as in-‘ Yoongi interrupts, ‘I remember. I remember…everything?’

Jimin smiles and nods, looking at everyone in turn as though to say ‘see? Cool isn’t it?’.

‘You remember-‘ Hoseok begins before Yoongi interrupts again.
‘Hoseok- you’re an ex-agent for the Venture Unit. You helped me through a panic attack in Ynqaba before I blacked out,’ Yoongi reels off, his voice though monotone, is coloured with a range of emotions that Sk’jin has never heard coming from the Human. There’s also that accent with his Standard- similar to the accents in the other Humans Sk’jin has encountered. ‘Namjoon, you’re an information analyst. You gave me your specialized medication in the fight- my fight in the Arenas back in Pompa.’

Yoongi turns to meet Sk’jin’s eyes and he’s surprised at what he sees.

Looking at Yoongi before was as informative as gazing into an endless black well. Sure it was deep and there was probably something somewhere in the depths. But now, Sk’jin can read Yoongi just as clearly as he can everyone else. He can see his emotions, his reactions- and most of all, he can see with clarity exactly what he thought of him.

And Sk’jin, as clear as daylight, can read distrust, suspicion, and to Sk’jin’s confusion, fondness-?

‘Sk’jin. I nicknamed you asshole.’ Yoongi says bluntly. ‘I also…-’ he pauses, expression turning similar to how it normally was, and now that Sk’jin sees this he realizes that it’s anger. ‘-you left Jimin.’

Okay so maybe it wasn’t fondness.

Jimin seemed inclined to explain, but Sk’jin is not here for that sort of thing. But apparently neither is Yoongi because he continues on.

‘And we met before, when you were…’ Yoongi actually blanches, eyes widening a little, ‘-when you were uh, different.’

Sk’jin is slightly affronted at Yoongi’s reaction. Sure he didn’t look all that pleasant when he was a weird entity stuck to Zitao’s mind but that didn’t mean he should react like that.

‘We met officially at the Mars Dock,’ Yoongi says to Taeh’yung who beams at him nodding in agreement, ‘But before that I saw you at the Yisheng Directory.’

Taeh’yung claps his hands over his face in exaggerated shock.

Yoongi looks down at Jungkook who eyes him warily.

‘You…want to fight me?’

Jungkook also looks confused before he nods, hesitantly.

‘You’re carrying all the memories of Yoongi- of the other Yoongi- you know this makes me uncomfortable. Also, what happened to him?’ Sk’jin asks. He’s curious, and also he’s somewhat attached to the Yoongi he gradually got to know and who left him for dead in Ynqaba.

Sk’jin thinks that he needs to rethink what he wants in a basic relationship.

‘It-’ Yoongi pauses to think. He stares down at his hand, entwined with Jimin’s, as though it was helping him ground himself into this reality. ‘I remember everything- but…but it feels as though it was a dream. Like-…like everything I know- what I saw, what I-‘ he blanches, ‘-what I did…it’s like waking from one of those really extensive dreams, you know?’

It’s really weird hearing Yoongi emote in his speech.
‘You remember everything? Like, everything?’ Taeh’yung beams, taking Yoongi’s other hand and swinging it.

‘If that’s the case then maybe take a seat and explain to us your weird trip to Bhumi, the mark down your back, who you were working for, and what you were hoping to achieve,’ Sk’jin reels off.

Jimin looks ready to argue while Namjoon looks like he’s about to call for a time-out, but Hoseok cuts speaks out faster than they can react, speaking clearly and in what Sk’jin calls his no-nonsense-we’re-on-a-mission voice.

‘I agree with Sk’jin. We need to figure things out, and with you here, we’ll be able to clear up what is missing from our collected information. Seeing as you remember what happened with uh, GI-Yoongi, Human Yoongi can give us the backstory we’re missing.’

Jimin still looks a little unsure, looking over Yoongi in worry. Which was understandable but they had missions to complete while figuring out everything at the same time in order to understand what the purpose of their initial mission was.

Spaces this was tiring.

‘Um-’

‘We know about what happened, a little vaguely, about what happened before you left for Bhumi,’ Hoseok begins, ‘So I guess we’ll ask some questions, you fill us in on stuff- if there’s anything more, then please feel free to add to it.’

Sk’jin snorts at that.

Yoongi nods at that, shifting on his feet a little before saying, ‘Uh- maybe we should sit. My uh, feet hurt.’

An odd thing really, Sk’jin isn’t sure why Yoongi’s feet would hurt now. But after going through a particularly terrible moment in life before “dying” and waking up centuries in the future would probably mess you up a lot. Sk’jin has a strong feeling that Jimin was doing something about that, keeping Yoongi calm and not making him feel overwhelmed.

They sit down and Sk’jin notices how Yoongi winces. Jimin seems to notice too, eyeing him worriedly but not wanting to shift attention during an important discussion.

‘Okay so, first- why were you headed to Bhumi?’ Hoseok asks immediately.

Sk’jin sees how Namjoon sits a little further, watching the discussion a little away, his NaviLet across his lap as he leans back, eyes only on Yoongi.

‘When I was first recruited, it was through an aptitude test of sorts,’ Yoongi begins after a moment where he readjusted his hold of Jimin’s hand. ‘It was like every other organization recruitment test. I was chosen from my batch of fellow graduates from the Tayi School of Law and Security alongside Amic-’ he pauses briefly before continuing, ‘-alongside my best friend. We were told it was part of the aptitude test all graduating students go through- it was conducted by Yishengs.’

‘Oh, you mean like the apprenticeship tests?’ Namjoon inquires, ‘Not all schools have it, but there are a few that are overlooked by the Yishengs- Android Studies with the Daskalos apprenticeship, Medical Practices, that sort of thing- it’s not really a test on your knowledge, rather just…well, just being scanned by the Yishengs to see if you’re a good Being or something.’
Sk’jin would slow clap if the moment was not so serious. The Yishens really manipulated their status and the trust the Universe had in them. Sk’jin knows not to judge many by just the few- but this really took the cake.

Yoongi nods as he says, ‘All Beings that graduate from Law and Security have to go through the test. Apparently I had excellent results, and was asked to join a special training program created by the Yishens. It wasn’t too different from other special programs- I also didn’t have to make any payments for it either so in all honesty I was keen on doing it.’ Yoongi shrugs and adds with a (terrifyingly normal and relatable) small smile, ‘Gotta save up all you can, right?’

Jungkook looks just about as weirdly disturbed as Sk’jin felt.

‘The program was almost a sol long- Yisheng Ndica began the program under the Directory as a means of training and providing skilled Beings with additional set of skills to be used for when we finished the program. We were meant to be part of an organized unit established and directed under the Yishens to scout and observe potential threats.’

‘That’s the same as what the Venture Unit is doing though,’ Hoseok says, ‘Weren’t you suspicious from the start?’

‘Truthfully no,’ Yoongi shook his head, ‘The Venture Unit are shady as fuck- even more so in the past. There was a period of time where agents frequently turned or went rogue. News of it was all over the Universe.’

Sk’jin feels, rather than see, Namjoon’s gaze on him at Yoongi’s words.

‘We would be forming a specialized Yisheng corps- working for them, guarding and guiding them through non-GLA territory.’ Yoongi continues. ‘It made sense to us- the GLA basically had the Venture Unit for this sort of reason- and the GIU in themselves were an organization made entirely out of specialized units and groups.’

‘They sold it in a way that it trumped an ethical misbalance,’ Namjoon sighs, ‘The Yishens knew exactly what they were doing, and how to do it.’

Yoongi nods in agreement.

‘What sort of training did you participate in?’ Hoseok asks.

‘As part of our training, we did extensive physical and mental training. We were also given physical treatment- our disclosure agreement stated that it was part of the training, to undergo physical therapy required for our physical training. We travelled a lot to different planets and Docks – we never stayed in one place for too long.’ Yoongi answers, ‘It was the same as most training programs that I knew of.’

‘Is the therapy how you got the mark on your back?’ Hoseok inquires.

Yoongi nods, shifting unconsciously.

‘The Yishens-in-training would oversee the process. We would sleep over a bed, the center of it had a gap and we would lay over it,’ Yoongi reaches for a screen and with one hand activates the holographic composer. He constructs a quick layout of something that roughly resembles a Medical Bed.

‘We would be put to sleep for the process,’ Yoongi frowns a little before he continues, ‘And I know that you would think this was…stupid of me. Of us. To do something like this with blind faith and trust. But…but it was the Yishengs – and it was just-one of the training facilities was set up in the Mars Docks, and that was close to home-‘

‘Not your fault,’ Jimin says quietly. ‘Not your fault.’

Yoongi pauses, watching Jimin and listening to every single word intently. Clearly Human Yoongi was not over Jimin’s existence the same way GI Yoongi seemed to live in permanent awe.

‘There’s no need to feel guilty over something you couldn’t have possibly even begun to conceive as probable,’ Sk’jin states bluntly, ‘No need to dwell over it.’

Yoongi nods slowly.

‘Did they every tell you what it was? The medical procedure?’ Namjoon asks.

‘We were being scanned- records of our physical and mental wellbeing were all logged in. At first it was weekly- then it became monthly. The mark used to fade at first, but then it stayed on for much longer.’ Yoongi answers, ‘We underwent the procedure for almost a sol. It didn’t hurt- but it was…heavy. I felt like I was always somehow connected to that bed.’

‘Was the training conducted in groups or individually?’ Hoseok asks.

‘Both- sometimes we would have group training- both physical, practical, and technical. I specialized in technology and development. And as we were trained to work as a unit, we each played roles within our given unit. So most times I was assigned and given hardware to program, break apart, or repair. I was the “tech” guy in the unit- others specialized in bio-engineering, some in terraforming, others in weapons.’ Yoongi explains, his hand that wasn’t in Jimin’s hold clutching at the edge of the couch, fingers turning pale with the strength he exerted.

‘What about the mission you were given?’ Hoseok asks, ‘Was it classified or were you told?’

‘We were told a version of it,’ Yoongi frowns, shifting a little where he sat, ‘As part of our official first mission, we were assigned to observe and record Bhumí, a planet according to our mission statement, was being evacuated because of its sun- a pulsar going out on control. We studied the planet in detail based off of the GLA’s previous observations. We were told that the other Beings who were in training had also gone on before, building a communications tower that would allow us to send and inform our findings back to base. We were instructed to board our ships into the Yisheng’s ship and undock at a safe distance. As it was not a GLA registered planet, we couldn’t record official reports- we would also be cut off from any official channels.’

‘Sounds like most recon missions from the Venture Unit,’ Hoseok supplies with a thoughtful look.

‘What made you suspicious?’ Namjoon asks, ‘This was before the mission started. If you were suspicious, why go at all?’

Yoongi chews on his inner cheek, a deep frown forming between his brows.

‘Like everything, we were sold an idea- fed a propaganda,’ Yoongi replies slowly, ‘Corruption was blatant at the time- especially in Systems outside the GLA, or as we were lead to believe. The Alliance at that time was at its most powerful- rampant and almost boastful. Rumors of bioengineered Beings born from experiments who were deadly and powerful, created by the Alliance in collaboration with the non-GLA Systems. There was a lot of fear- not to mention suspicion of corruption within the GLA- that they were instigating and investing in this. It made us, the Beings who felt as though we knew something feel responsible to do something. And this was an effort created by the Yishengs- or at least just by Yisheng Ndica. Yisheng Tlun’hla who was the representative of that time had even come to oversee our training and give us his blessing- we believed it was for the betterment and restoration of safety and peace in the Universe.’

They all wait in silence, waiting for Yoongi to continue.

‘That’s what I believed in,’ Yoongi goes on, looking across the room to gaze out at the view outside as he huffs out a small chuckle, ‘I believed in it with my whole chest.’

Jimin smiles, his eyes tracing over Yoongi’s face.

‘We were in Šerdesas a few weeks before heading over to Mars for our program. Mars was the final destination for our program- and if we qualified the final check-up, we would be mission-ready. We were in the Yisheng Directory for the medical treatment and therapy at the lower levels. As I mentioned before, we normally fall asleep somehow during the treatment; but this time I – I was woken up.’

‘By?’

‘I don’t know- I thought they were a Yisheng first,’ Yoongi says slowly, his brow furrowed in thought. ‘And I – the memory is…I don’t know why it feels glitched- like there are words that he spoke to me- but all I really remember were lights.’

Namjoon and Hoseok both tilt their heads at the same time, their expressions serious.

‘And it-‘ Yoongi coughs, hand coming up to cover his mouth. He looks at his palm, as though he was expecting blood. But the cough comes and goes just as quickly. He clears his throat, blinking fast for a second before he continues. ‘I think the voice asked me questions.’

‘Do you remember?’ Taeh’yung asks, eyes wide with eager anticipation.

‘Uh- the Yisheng or…that Being asked me if I was Human- I think I replied that I was,’ Yoongi frowns. ‘I asked…him? I asked him who he was, he just…said “I am”. And then he said “brother, wake up”.’

‘What did this Yisheng look like?’ Sk’jin asks, leaning in a little.

‘I-….like I said, I’m not sure how accurate this memory is- it was excessively bright- and static-like almost. But … I don’t know if I’m projecting but…I felt like it was Human.’

Taeh’yung makes a sound of awe, shoulders bouncing a little as he beams.

‘There has only ever been one recorded Yisheng in all of Earth’s history,’ Namjoon declares at once, looking down at his screen. ‘Apparently worshipped as a God in Ancient Earth. But then was later killed.’

‘He came back,’ Yoongi says almost absentmindedly with a small shrug.

‘Religion aside, did this uh, Human Yisheng say anything else?’ Hoseok asks, steering the conversation back on track.

‘No- I just, very abruptly woke up and-‘ Yoongi reaches at his back, feeling under the collar of his shirt. He shudders, eyes closing as though recalling something. ‘There was a long black pipe-like device that was…sewn into my back. I was also not in the room where I was originally put into. I had a distinct impression that I was- I was underground-?’
Yoongi stops, his expression is confused and a strange cough comes out of him again. That’s when Sk’jin notices how tense the Human is, his legs, arms, posture.

‘Hey you okay-?’

It’s as though his question triggers Yoongi and he shivers, face twisting into that of pain as he hunches over, collapsing onto the floor.

‘Yoongi-!’

‘Hurts-’ Yoongi manages to gasp out through grit teeth. His entire body convulses, his hands immediately going to his head, fingers curling into locks of hair.

‘But the tabs don’t show anything-‘ Namjoon looks beyond confused.

‘He’s in pain-‘ Jimin cries out, slipping into his own tongue.

‘Get him to the Bay now,’ Hoseok orders, hunching down and gesturing to Jimin.

They both pick him up, lifting him between themselves with ease. Yoongi is clearly trying not to thrash, whimpering as he’s moved.

Sk’jin is about to follow the others down as well but he’s pulled back. Looking back, Jungkook is still there, eyes wide and expression hesitant and worried.

‘What is it?’ Sk’jin asks, turning to properly face the young Being.

‘I- I’ve seen that-‘

‘Seen what?’

‘Yoongi’s pain.’

‘What do you mean?’

‘Mother-, to darling, she had it too.’ Jungkook tells him quietly. ‘Ma said that she had too much in her head. Too many thoughts at once.’

Sk’jin keeps quiet at this sudden revelation.

‘Mother that looked like me?’

Jungkook nods.

‘How many times did it happen?’

‘Not many. Sometimes she would sleep. Sometimes she didn’t know us. Know me.’ Jungkook looks worried, ‘Is Yoongi like mother?’

‘I think so,’ Sk’jin replies.

‘Will it happen to me?’

‘I- I don’t know,’ Sk’jin suddenly feels an intense need to cry.

Jungkook doesn’t seem put off by the answer and nods.
When they arrive downstairs, Yoongi is strapped down to one of the Medical Beds, his hand gripping Jimin’s in a deadly grip.

‘I don’t understand,’ Namjoon says quietly to Sk’jin the moment he’s close enough. ‘His tab doesn’t show anything unusual- just his heart-rate has gone up. His brain waves are a mess but it’s nothing-…nothing that’s a result of something happening to him physically.’

Yoongi is gritting his teeth, face pale, looking away with a scrunched up face as Hoseok administers the pain medication.

‘It’s always hurt,’ Yoongi breathes out, answering a question previously asked. ‘I- I don’t think I’m used to it.’

Jimin’s expression is pinched, clearly thinking about how much GI-Yoongi endured. How much he was made used to.

‘I thought it would go away- I guess,’ Yoongi sighs out, pain clearly receding as the medication streams through his blood. ‘I guess I don’t have the same endurance.’

‘You cannot do what you did in your dreams,’ Hoseok smiles, clearly enjoying the company of a much more vocal and emotive Yoongi. ‘Feels like you can, but doesn’t always carry through.’

‘Some things do,’ Yoongi says under his breath, glancing briefly at Jimin, his grip no longer violent.

Human-Yoongi also lacked subtlety.

‘It’s mostly…well, it’s mostly in your head,’ Namjoon taps at the NaviLet with a frown. ‘You’re not experiencing pain in the tabs- but your reaction is as though you are. It could be delayed- or you’re experiencing an echo of…of something that happened before.’

‘Like phantom pains?’ Yoongi asks, his breathing evened out by now.

Namjoon nods hesitantly. ‘I’m not sure if I’m being honest. But I guess we could say that.’

‘A Yisheng-…‘ Yoongi pauses before rolling his eyes, ‘Wow, this sucks.’

‘I think I know what’s happening,’ Sk’jin says, drawing attention to himself. ‘Jungkook just told me that his mother, a Khol’isa who was obviously born from an “egg” like himself, used to go through the same thing. His other mother told him and his siblings that she had too many “thoughts”- I’m guessing this is the same thing Jungkook witnessed.’

Jungkook nods at that, but quickly looks down in embarrassment as everyone turns to look at him.

‘What did you remember?’ Jimin asks quietly, reaching with his other hand to gently brush Yoongi’s sweaty hair off of his forehead.

‘When I woke up, I was in a different room. And I know this room because that’s where-‘ Yoongi looks down at himself, confused.

‘Does it coincide with your memories as a GI?’ Hoseok asks.

Yoongi nods.

‘I was inside a small room- I couldn’t move much because of the, uh, the stuff on my back. But I got up and I could look through a small opening on the door. And it’s the same as the one I saw-
GI me saw when…’ Yoongi shudders, pain evident in his features. He takes a few deep breaths before he pushes himself to continue, ‘It’s the same area- only a little changed with fewer…fewer tanks. But it was the same. Some of the tanks were empty- some had- some had small organs I think- or maybe…-maybe they were some form of growing zygote, I- I can’t be sure. All the tanks were lined it made me feel- feel really sick. I sensed movement and- and I didn’t want to get caught so I went back to the bed.’

‘Did you fall asleep again?’ Hoseok asks.

‘No- I was awake the entire time I- I thought they’d notice but they didn’t. I didn’t open my eyes so I don’t know who took me away and how we even got there.’ Yoongi replies. ‘After that I knew without a doubt that- that something was wrong.’

‘How did you come to conclude your suspicions? About the Yishengs,’ Namjoon inquires.

Yoongi stares blankly at nothing in particular for a while before he answers, ‘I think I had a dream.’

‘What dream?’ Taeh’yung asks quietly.

Yoongi is quiet, suddenly going extraordinarily still in a way that was familiar. And without warning, blood suddenly pours out of both of his nostrils.

‘Yoongi-!’

His eyes roll backwards before he slumps forward.

‘I think there’s too much for him to process,’ Namjoon says quietly as Jimin, Hoseok, and Taeh’yung carefully guide the Human back, cleaning at the blood around his face quickly. Jimin is clearly doing his best not to panic, lips pressed down tight, eyes wide, hands slightly trembling as he wiped at the blood.

‘Too many thoughts,’ Jungkook says before he swallows thickly and says, ‘Can I move?’

It’s funny for a moment when Namjoon blanches (as well as he could considering his biology) in the realization that the smell of Yoongi’s blood was making Jungkook’s mouth water. Sk’jin and Jungkook move backwards, stepping out of the Medical Bay. Jungkook presses his nose into the back of his shirt, inhaling through the fabric. Absentmindedly Sk’jin reaches up to stroke at his hair.

‘I think it’s safe to say that we were asking too much,’ Hoseok says as he scans Yoongi again, just to make sure. ‘He should rest.’

Wearily, Yoongi opens his eyes.

‘Yoongi?’ Jimin leans in to look down at the Human.

‘Hey sunshine,’ the Human replies groggily. ‘I keep…-I keep blacking out. Reminds me of… reminds me of last time.’

Jimin’s face is troubled, his expression controlled as he fights within himself.

‘Safe- safe here,’ Jimin smiles, ‘We’re safe here.’

‘I swear I don’t always faint,’ Yoongi grins before looking over at all of them, ‘I’m sorry- I don’t- I don’t know how much I can handle and really remember without…” he gestures weakly.

‘We pushed you,’ Hoseok says, waving aside his apology. ‘We’ll take this one at a time, recover your strength- like training all over again.’

Yoongi heaves a heavy sigh, ‘I’m too old for this.’

He looks at Jimin, evidently trying to lighten up the mood. But Jimin looks stricken.

‘Jinnie.’

Sk’jin nearly jumps, not having noticed how Taeh’yung had walked over to stand by him.

‘Fuck- what’s up?’ Sk’jin asks.

‘I think we need to call Zitao again,’ Taeh’yung says with a small frown. ‘Yoongi’s memories-what happened to him. I think it’s connected with them- with him.’

‘The timing is wrong,’ Sk’jin frowns.

‘Time is infinite and Time is continuity. Time Is and Time Was and Time will Always Be.’ Taeh’yung replies before giving Sk’jin a serious look, ‘We need to.’

‘I’ll talk to Namjoon about it- it needs to be a collective decision,’ Sk’jin replies before adding with a look at Yoongi and Jimin who are now talking quietly, smiles on their faces. ‘Also, he needs to rest before we ask any more questions. We still have some time.’

Taeh’yung looks over at the two before nodding, reaching back to gently pet Jungkook’s hair as well. He smiles, but it’s not his usual kind of smile or grin.

Jungkook curls into his back, fists forming on the fabric of his shirt. breath hitched and moving away from Taeh’yung; and Sk’jin’s hair stands on end, his pulse suddenly accelerating as he looks at Taeh’yung out of the corner of his eye.

‘Who are we in Time?’

Yoongi drifts off to sleep; a strange limbo of being somewhat awake but completely knocked out. Namjoon still cannot explain what was happening to the Human. His vitals and stats according to the health-tab were, overall, extremely normal and stable. His system gave no indication towards pain- if Namjoon had to really define it, he would say Yoongi was experiencing phantom-pain.

Namjoon himself was no stranger to phantom-pains; he lived with it until his pain became the norm for him. Until pain no longer registered as something uncomfortable- but rather just…- just a way of life.

Was this Yoongi experiencing the pain GI-Yoongi had experienced? Or was this, in some strange way, the pain he endured when he had been his whole-self?

Yoongi stirs again, eyes twitching and moving rapidly under his eyelids. His pulse spikes, the frown on his brow deepening. His hands reach about- moving desperately as though looking-
‘Yoongi!’

Jimin reenters the Medical Bay, having left to use the toilet and to freshen up. He rushes back to the Medical Bed, instantly joining his and Yoongi’s hands together. Yoongi doesn’t wake up, but he does calm down just as quickly as he had panicked. Jimin is saying soft quiet things, a soft tune to his words.

Namjoon is about to step out of the Medical Bay when Jimin looks up to give him a desperate look.

‘I’m so confused,’ he says quietly.

Namjoon nods in agreement with a small sigh.

Jimin glances back at Yoongi, mouth opening a few times as though to say something but stopping.

‘We can figure things out,’ Namjoon tries, ‘We’re all going to try and figure this all out.’

‘I think- I think there is something changed with Yoongi,’ Jimin whispers quietly, voice strained as though unwilling to voice his words out, fearful that by uttering them his statement would come true.

‘What do you mean?’ Namjoon inquires.

Jimin looks down at their hands, his breath coming out a little shaky.

‘Y-Yoongi…his soul was different,’ Jimin whispers, ‘His soul was different. Young, but old- un-lived. When I woke up. It was him but…it wasn’t him.’

Namjoon leans against the wall inside the Bay, nodding for Jimin to continue.

‘When I first met Yoongi, in Megibīya, his- he was young,’ Jimin smiles briefly, ‘Young and strong- and-…and he was so strong-’ his voice wobbles and for a moment Namjoon is worried Jimin might break down. But Jimin clears his throat, hastily wiping at his face with an awkward shoulder shrug.

‘Is this still him?’ Namjoon asks gently.

‘It is but- but he’s old-’ Jimin pauses, clearly wondering how to explain himself. ‘This is Yoongi. Yoongi I met- Yoongi who was young, strong- Yoongi I felt die- I couldn’t…-I couldn’t keep him here-’ he holds up their clenched hands to his chest. ‘I lost him and- he found me again. But- but it’s wrong.’

‘Wrong how?’

‘Because his soul is not supposed to be here,’ Jimin tells him quietly. ‘His soul is not supposed to be here and now it’s- it’s catching up.’

Namjoon guesses his expression isn’t one of understanding so Jimin hastens to explain, his eyes jumping around the Medical Bay as though looking for visual cues to help him.

‘If I- um,’ Jimin tries out carefully. ‘As a-an example, I were to freeze uh, a bottle of water for long amount of time, never touching it, never opening it. And then after a lot of time, I brought it out of the freezer, into uh, hot room and it starts melting.’

The visuals in Namjoon’s head does not consist of a water bottle and ice melting. But instead he’s filled with a sense of dread. Maybe he’s not really sensing the depth of what Jimin’s words meant in terms of Yoongi’s condition and what that meant for him, but the fear and pain in Jimin’s eyes are profound enough to put things in perspective.

‘But how is he still here? If Yoongi died-’ Jimin’s hands tighten over the Human’s hand, ‘-then how is he here?’

‘I don’t know,’ Jimin whispers before adding, ‘I don’t know if I want to know.’

Namjoon won’t claim that he knows Jimin very well. Call it his paranoia or instinct, but it almost felt like Jimin knew something but didn’t want to say it. Out of fear that it would be true.

Namjoon doesn’t remember much of his culture- all he remembered was pain, death, and the metallic stench of his own blood. But sometimes he feels as though he does remember certain things- and Namjoon isn’t sure how much of it is wishful thinking or just fanciful dreams. Little random information- like never planting grain on twice burnt fields, never approaching a body of water when the wind was low but the leaves were flying, always to bury eggs into a new land as an understanding that sometimes the growth of life meant the destruction of something else, to always pay respect to an eclipse, and to never speak out loud your nightmares or they would come true. It’s something that’s strangely stuck to him; a weird reason why often times Namjoon believes he never wanted to tell the Yishengs what had been done to him after Kutsoglera was rescued. To him, as a child, what he had witnessed, what he had felt, had all been one horrendous nightmare. And now that he was awake, he doesn’t want the pain he felt and the death he suffered to be real.

‘Is there something…- something Yoongi said that…that means something to you?’ Namjoon asks carefully.

‘I’ve-…I’ve seen into his memories,’ Jimin replies quietly, suddenly looking exhausted. ‘I’ve seen into his dreams, nightmares- seen and felt them as my own. And I think- I think Yoongi was…was very close. Too close, to something.’

‘Is this about what he saw in the Yisheng Headquarters?’

Jimin nods, lips pressed tight into a thin line.

‘The GI were stored under the Yisheng Headquarters,’ Namjoon informs Jimin, ‘The entire facility was stored there- it’s how they got away with it.’

‘But how?’

‘What do you mean?’ Namjoon asks.

‘When…we I was in Dream. Dreaming, with JD, I saw Megibīya, I saw what happened to her. She was destroyed,’ Jimin whispers, voice trembling, ‘And…JD was there, until…until he was rescued. JD was there, after what happened to Yoongi.’

Jimin carefully tells him what he saw when he had been asleep, dreaming with JD. It’s evident that he’s telling him a very abridged version, his voice forcefully stony as he recounts the journey of the Beings he couldn’t save.

Jimin struggles for a few seconds before saying carefully, ‘Yoongi…he was taken by the Red Evil. They took him away, stole him. And he was with them – I too, was with the Red Evil.’

Namjoon nods, wondering where Jimin was headed with this.
'The GI...they were made, by the Yishengs,' Jimin says slowly, eyes pleading for Namjoon to understand what he was saying. 'Yoongi is not GI.'

If Namjoon had hair the way most Beings did, they would be standing on end over his skin.

'Bu-'

'I saw them take Yoongi so how-,' Jimin says desperately.

Jimin was right.

And now suddenly Hoseok’s words made sense. What Sk’jin had said before was correct too.

Out of this entire mission, Yoongi’s presence was the one that was unexplainable. His entire existence was unexplainable. But maybe now they were finally headed for an explanation.

'-so how did Yoongi end up with the GI?' Namjoon finishes Jimin’s question.

From what they knew, the Red Evil, or the Akramanese according to the Gaia Case, were entirely removed and separated from what the Yisheng were trying to achieve. While the Red Evil followed through on the Yisheng’s twisted ideology for the Universe, they were creating their own somehow much more advanced version. So there was no way that what the Red Evil had created could have made its way to the Yishengs.

'Yoongi said that none of the other GI’s could handle the Android core- that almost all of them are currently in a vegetated state,' Namjoon says slowly before something clicks and he looks up at Jimin sharply, 'You were able to understand Standard after you wore Yoongi’s helmet.'

Jimin nods to that before he says quietly, 'When I woke up, when I heard, when I understood, when I saw into Yoongi’s memories, I kept asking myself- why wasn’t I killed? Why don’t I have the same mark? What did they want from me? What do the Omhlophe want from me?'

His questions come pouring out, as though finally unrestrained. As though he was overwhelmed and now he had to let it all go.

'How did all of this happen?'

It’s not just a question or a request. Jimin sounded like he was begging.

'He’s not supposed to be here,' Jimin says in a broken voice. 'He’s not supposed to be here and this is my fault.'

Namjoon shifts uncomfortably, not knowing what to say.

'...will he be all right?' Namjoon asks carefully.

Jimin shrugs.

'Will you be all right?'

Jimin looks surprised by the question, staring down at his hands for a while.

Yoongi was connected to Jimin beyond what they could possibly imagine. And Jimin was connected to all of this in a way they couldn’t clearly understand. But regardless of all of that, Yoongi and Jimin were bound together. And Jimin knew this. Yoongi knew this too.
‘I have to be.’

Yoongi stirs, his brows furrowing before his entire body shivers.

Both Namjoon and Jimin stop, looking down at him with anticipation. Slowly, Yoongi opens his eyes. It takes a couple of seconds before he’s completely awake.

‘Hey,’ he manages to say groggily. ‘How long have I been out?’

‘A couple of hours,’ Namjoon responds. ‘How are you feeling.’

‘Dizzy. A bit floaty,’ Yoongi replies though he’s looking at Jimin. ‘m’kay.’

Namjoon steps away, leaving the two together, knowing that they needed each other to heal, to understand, and most of all, to know.

On his way to the Bridge he comes across Jungkook at the stairs.

‘Hey, you okay?’ Namjoon asks the youngest.

Jungkook looks at him with wide eyes, blinking a few times before saying, ‘Worried.’

‘About?’

‘Jin,’ he whispers.

‘Jin? Why?’ Namjoon asks, crouching before Jungkook on the stairs. Jungkook leans back just a little. Namjoon wonders if Jungkook can sense it too, the same way Taeh’yung and Jimin could.

‘He’s…he scared?’ Jungkook tilts his head as though unsure of his words.

If Namjoon was being honest, they’re all a bit scared.

‘He’ll be all right,’ Namjoon tells him. ‘Don’t worry okay?’

Jungkook nods before asking carefully, ‘Are we lost?’

‘What do you mean?’

‘It feels confused,’ Jungkook replies, waving his hands a bit.

Sk’jin was right.

Jungkook was very intelligent. He was perceptive and easily understood what was going on. There wouldn’t be much they could do to protect him the way they would want to. But somehow there was something reassuring in all of that.

‘I…we’re a bit lost,’ Namjoon confesses. ‘We’re trying to find our way, but I think we all know where we’re supposed to go.’

‘Where are we going?’ Jungkook asks.

Well they were headed to Axudar, but Namjoon knows there’s more to this question.

‘We’re going to find answers,’ Namjoon replies.

Jungkook nods to that and gives him a small smile, ‘Okay.’
Namjoon’s about to continue to head up but pauses again before addressing the youngling.

‘If at any point you don’t want to go with us,’ he begins, making Jungkook turn around to look at him. ‘Just tell us, okay?’

Jungkook doesn’t reply immediately, processing Namjoon’s words with a small frown before he nods.

‘Okay.’

The Bridge is empty, dancing white lights making the entire place look like it was moonlit underwater.

Namjoon takes a moment to really think things through.

They were close to figuring things out. They were close to understanding what happened- but there was something they didn’t know. Something hidden from them, a moment in time that would explain so much.

There was so much more to the Omhlophe, the Yishengs, the Red Evil. So much more to Yoongi, to Jimin.

Taking out his NaviLet, Namjoon makes a rough timeline of events that lead up to all of this into the notes for the Captain’s Log.

He knows that it starts with Jimin, and with Megibïya. They had a treaty with the GLA, which included K’ma, alongside a Yisheng they knew for a fact masterminded the whole fiasco of the Yisheng takeover. During this time, Yoongi had been undergoing treatment that lead him to have the mark on his back. Amme was made known of what happened, and then Yoongi made his way to Megibïya, where he then met Jimin.

And this is where Namjoon pauses to carefully think. It was indeed Yoongi who was there. Human Yoongi was physically there, overwhelmed by the Red Evil, and as Jimin had said, his soul taken.

But then later, the GLA had come to Megibïya. A second time, as though to check on it.

Almost as though they came back to simply check on some results.

Was this where they found Yoongi? Was this where they took him back, with the other survivors left behind by the Red Evil? But why would they take them back? Who was responsible for taking Yoongi back, and keeping him with the GI?

This was where it got the most confusing.

When the Yisheng’s were creating the GI, they had clearly started by experimenting on non-suspecting Beings. The myth behind the GI started less than a millennia ago and the timeline checks in there. But how they’re connected was hazy at best.

A thing that strikes Namjoon as being creepy was the comparison of how the Omhlophe were like the GI.

There’s a strange discomfort with that statement and Namjoon can’t shake it off. The few times he came across them back in Pompa were unnerving and distinctly unnatural. How were they created?

But his main question leads back to the mission.
What did the Secret Jury really want with all of this? What did they really want to achieve? It was evident that each member knew something more, they wanted something different. Lmiura had said so herself.

Namjoon doesn’t want to stake claims by stating that there were Beings on that Jury that could be trusted. But he almost feels the desire to confront one of them about this. Surely there must be an explanation, some agenda that they should reveal now. Because at this moment Namjoon just feels like they’re hurtling across into something immeasurably dangerous and consuming.

Of course this idea would immediately be shot down.

First, very loudly and vehemently by Sk’jin. Then logically and rationally by Hoseok. Yoongi would also be against the idea.

Out of habit, Namjoon continues to fill in the Captain’s Log he normally filled in to send back to the Jury. Maybe later he would go through all of his Logs and maybe he’ll be able to make something out of it. But for today, he would just let it be.

* *

Jimin carefully helps Yoongi settle on the Medical Bed, making the Human lean his weight on him. Yoongi just sort of smiles at him, as though just a little amused, a little awed.

A little lost.

‘I can move on my own,’ he says though he does nothing to move away.

‘Just help-ing,’ Jimin smiles before asking, ‘Any pain?’

Yoongi blinks a little before his expression is just a bit confused.

‘I don’t know,’ he replies, honesty and confusion evident in his tone. ‘I think it hurts, but I don’t know where.’

Jimin wills his panic and fear down.

‘Jimin wants to see the liveliness and sheer strength of Life shining in the Human’s eyes again. He wants to see that familiar smile, hear that lilting voice as he laughs or cracks an obvious joke or smart response.’

It’s all back. Jimin’s wish had come true. But this isn’t what he meant when he had made that wish.

Speaking to Namjoon just now somehow felt like he was really putting a stamp of sorts over this entire situation. A stamp that really confirmed his fears.

‘Hey- it’s okay,’ Yoongi says, taking his hand. ‘I think I just- I just need time to recover.’
But that was the problem. Yoongi was in Time.

Yoongi seems to translate his silence into something else and stiffly pulls his hand away from Jimin’s. But Jimin is quick to take his hand back, suddenly feeling flustered, and he too instantly drops Yoongi’s hand.

It’s almost awkward. A strange shyness creeping over Jimin even though he knows there’s really nothing much to be awkward or shy about. They were just holding hands.

He’s done more than hold hands before. He’s done more than hold hands with Yoongi. But why was he reacting like this?

But he’s not alone.

Because Yoongi is also a little awkward. A smile on his lips, eyes darting trying not to blatantly stare, trying not to reach forward to just touch-

Tightening his metaphorical belt, Jimin reaches out, both hands extended before him. And automatically, Yoongi’s hands reach out as well, fingers entwining, an awed look laced with relief flooding the Human’s face.

‘You’re real,’ is all he says.

It makes Jimin want to curl in on himself. Or curl into Yoongi he’s not sure.

Back in Megibīya, with the language barrier, with their impending doom lingering over every second of their movement and existence, Jimin was never directly made aware of this.

And maybe he’s held Yoongi’s hands, has kissed him, held him in his sleep; but it wasn’t exactly this Yoongi. It’s weird referring to Yoongi like he was two Beings. Jimin isn’t sure how to approach the topic.

‘It’s like I know you,’ Yoongi says, staring down at their hands, his thumbs rubbing circles over Jimin’s knuckles. ‘I see you in my mind, I remember your actions, your words-‘ he pauses, his ears turning a little red. ‘-your touch. And I-‘

Yoongi is clearly having the same thoughts.

Yoongi of course remembers everything that has happened. Remembers how Jimin had rushed out of the ship to reach him as he fell on the Pompen arena ground. Remembers how Jimin had taken his hands and put them on his face, as though to familiarize the Human. Remembers how he finally called him sunshine. Remembers kissing him, remembers the soft touches, the quiet whispers of reassurances.

‘You’re mine. And I’m yours.’

Jimin remembers how it had been before, when Yoongi was regaining his memories, how he had collapsed. It was a sense of déjà vu but it wasn’t at all reassuring.

‘I don’t know…-it’s like I have to reintroduce myself,’ Yoongi smiles.

Jimin can do that. He could do that.

‘Hi,’ Yoongi smiles, lips turning up in a shy grin as he glances down nervously before looking up again, lips pressed tight as though hoping to look not so nervous.
Jimin can’t help but giggle, body shaking as he quietly mumbles out, ‘Hi,’ as well.

‘Yoongi,’ the Human grins, pointing at himself.

Jimin can’t help the almost painful grin on his own face as he points at himself and says, ‘Jimin.’

‘Your majesty,’ Yoongi says with a teasing grin, tugging a little at Jimin’s hands. Jimin can feel his face burning as he protests.

But the look in Yoongi’s eyes haven’t changed.

Jimin slips his hands out of Yoongi’s and reaches up for the Human’s face.

Yoongi’s eyes close immediately, breathing out slowly. Jimin carefully maps his face, fingers tracing over his features gently.

Yoongi’s hands reach up blindly, mimicking Jimin’s hands as he too maps his face carefully. Jimin leans into Yoongi’s palms the same time the Human does, his lips pushing against his palm.

Yoongi’s fingers playfully pull at his earlobes before reaching under his beanie.

‘I remember this- this was my memory,’ Yoongi whispers quietly. ‘He-…we were so angry. He lost it, I think- I think it broke him. It broke me. I- we thought we lost you again.’

Jimin’s eyes burn.

‘I felt torn, wretched; I saw your hair and it- it broke me,’ Yoongi’s voice breaks into a whisper. ‘I lost myself- I was so so angry.’

His fingers are gently reaching under the beanie, feeling at the fuzz that now overtook Jimin’s scalp.

‘I’m sorry,’ Yoongi whispers. ‘He- we’re sorry.’

‘We?’

‘I don’t know how to say it- but it’s- it’s…he’s…’ Yoongi pauses, opening his eyes to look at Jimin. ‘I know what he feels. He knows what I feel. And – it’s strange.’

Jimin can agree to that.

‘I sometimes heard you- like you were speaking right to me,’ Yoongi continues. ‘You told me I didn’t have to try so hard.’

‘It’s all right if you don’t remember- you don’t have to try so hard,’ Jimin whispers- hoping that though Yoongi couldn’t hear or understand his words- his Soul might. ‘You’re here; that’s all I want.’

‘You don’t have to try hard,’ Jimin repeats.

‘But I do,’ Yoongi shrugs, lowering his hands and placing them over Jimin’s wrists. ‘I have to. I want to remember, to know. To understand. To help you go home.’

Jimin lets out a shuddering breath.

He had made a promise. To Yoongi, to himself, to everyone else on the ship.
He had whispered the promise to Yoongi, just days before they had made agreements to the Omhlophe to exchange Jimin for Hoseok. He had promised to give Yoongi a home.

But now that Jimin thinks about it, how can he keep this promise when he can’t guarantee anything? With everything they’ve been seeing, with everything they’ve uncovered.

Yoongi shivers suddenly, his body twitching. Jimin steps closer in an instant, his arms looping around the Human. Yoongi’s eyes are pinched shut, his lips pressed into a thin line, sweat suddenly breaking out on his forehead.

Jimin helps him lay back down on the Medical Bed. Yoongi’s breaths are short delayed pants, his hands trembling a little. Jimin wants to hide him, protect him, cover him, never let him go.

‘Sunshine.’

Jimin’s breath hitches.

‘There’s something wrong with me,’ Yoongi states simply, voice strained with unknown pain. ‘I know you know it.’

‘Yoongi-‘

‘You’re looking at me like that again.’ The Human says quietly, opening his eyes and finding Jimin’s. He smiles a little.

‘What?’

‘Back in Bhumi- I mean, Megibīya,’ Yoongi says quietly. ‘When they came for us one by one, and we were falling sick. You’re looking at me like that again.’

Jimin’s voice is stuck. His mind empty yet filled with a heaviness he cannot shake off.

‘Tell me,’ Yoongi asks gently, ‘Please tell me.’

‘I don’t know,’ Jimin manages to get out, ‘I really- I really don’t know.’

He’s not even aware that he’s crying until Yoongi reaches over to gently wipe them from his face.

‘Don’t cry sunshine, please don’t cry,’ he whispers.

Jimin takes his hand, pressing it against his face as hard as he could.

‘I’m-‘ Jimin manages to get out, ‘This is my fault.’

Yoongi is confused, his eyebrows furrowed. He tries to sit up but he’s clearly too dizzy.

‘This is my fault,’ Jimin whispers.

Now that he’s said it, it’s almost as though he can’t stop. Can’t stop what he thought he could carefully keep away, can’t stop the guilt, the pain, the sorrow- all the lives he ruined.

With everything that’s happened, with the memories he saw, the lives he lived through JD’s memories, through Yoongi’s memories. Watching his children, his people; all yearning for home, yearning for a return- knowing that they would be returning to their deaths. Watching how evil was allowed to endure, allowed to spread- all because of their ignorance, their trust-
‘It’s my fault,’ Jimin chokes out into Yoongi’s hand.

He feels arms around him, a weight pressing into him; unsteady and dizzy but trying so hard. It makes Jimin cry harder.

‘I-I thought I could- I could do this and not-‘ Jimin heaves, his voice muffled against Yoongi’s chest. ‘I’m just- I’m just hurting everyone- hurt- hurting you-‘

‘You don’t hurt me,’ Yoongi tells him simply, ‘You don’t hurt me.’

Jimin holds him tighter, unable to stop his breathless sobs.

‘You’re not alone. You’re not alone- I’m here. I’m back, I won’t leave you,’ Yoongi whispers continuously. ‘We will understand this together, we will fix this together. You’re not alone, I won’t leave you.’

Jimin hears a quiet sound at the door and notices a worried looking Jungkook peaking in. Jungkook quickly ducks away, having been caught.

‘We’ll make this right. We’ll understand, we will figure it out,’ Yoongi whispers to him quietly.

Jimin closes his arms around Yoongi, holding the Human against himself. He catches sight of Jungkook’s hair poking past the frame of the door.

It was foolish to think he could go on without feeling the brunt of the past crashing down on him with every step he took into a present he helped destroy with his ignorance. Maybe he couldn’t fix what has happened, what was happening.

Maybe he wouldn’t be able to give Yoongi that home he promised.

Jungkook looks inside again, eyes wide, innocent, alone. Looking for an existence untainted and safe.

‘I promise,’ Yoongi says softly. ‘Just stay with me’

‘I promise,’ Jimin whispers back with a small smile.

Jungkook blinks at him before smiling just a little and ducking away again.

Jimin pulls away just a little, coming face to face with the Human. Yoongi wipes at his face, a smile on his face.

‘I’m happy,’ he says unexpectedly.

It’s incredibly different to the wide range of emotions Jimin was experiencing at that moment. Happiness was not one of them.

‘Happy?’

Yoongi smiles, ‘Yeah.’

‘How?’ Jimin wants to know.

‘I missed you so much,’ Yoongi tells him. ‘It was so…so empty.’

How did that lead to happiness?
‘But now-‘ Yoongi breathes out, gazing straight at Jimin, his eyes shining.

He smiles as he breathes in.

‘I’ve come back. I’ve come back, and I won’t leave.’

---

After a solid 8 hours of sleep, Yoongi does look better. And it’s a collective decision not to question him or push him just yet. Taeh’yung’s words resound in his head, but Sk’jin wants to wait until they’re closer to the edge of the Grisial Pits. They were close now, the gleaming asteroids no longer heavily clustered but a little more sparse. There were more ships about as well, providing Jungkook with plenty to be distracted by.

Taeh’yung and Jimin were in the Medical Bay where Yoongi had slept. They weren’t talking- but something was clearly being discussed between the two of them and Sk’jin isn’t sure what it’s about. When he walks past they both look at him. Sk’jin strikes a handsome pose, jauntily throwing his hair back at them. Taeh’yung cackles while Jimin lets out an involuntary snort.

‘We got all of our deliveries waiting for us,’ Hoseok says. ‘We go, stop, pick it up. And head out.’

‘Sounds good to me,’ Sk’jin says as he climbs up the stairs to the Bridge and nearly walking into the Ngfy’widan himself and upsetting the tray of tea in his hands. Hoseok is quick to help him balance, hand coming up to steady the tray.

Not a single drop of tea escapes the cups.

‘Watch the Bridge?’ he asks as he shoots past.

‘Sure thing,’ Sk’jin calls back walking into the Bridge.

Yoongi was there, looking out of the windows before he turns quickly, expression hopeful. It quickly changes to something else- annoyance, most likely, before it settles into a neutral look.

‘Some tea?’ Sk’jin offers the tray up.

Yoongi looks at the cups for a moment before asking, ‘Will you poison me?’

‘I am not you,’ Sk’jin grins.

Yoongi makes a funny expression at that before nodding his thanks and taking the cup. He doesn’t question why there are 4 cups on the tray.

‘Besides, if I wanted to kill you- I wouldn’t use poison. Not my cup of tea,’ Sk’jin raises an eyebrow, tweaking it up and down.
Yoongi sighs before he mumbles, ‘You’re not even a dad.’

‘I beg your pardon?’

Yoongi just shakes his head.

‘So— how you holding up? You okay?’ Sk’jin asks before sitting himself down at his designated station.

Yoongi takes a sip before he speaks.

‘There’s a lot to process,’ Yoongi replies, staring at the cup of tea in his hands. ‘I— like I said, it feels like a dream and— I know it’s real, but it’s—’

Sk’jin nods in understanding. He’s experienced this sort of disorientation more than he would care to admit. Being a Khol’isa was a pain in the ass.

‘I’ve… I know I’ve done some terrible things and— Yoongi frowns, ‘—I know that… it’s not me— but it is?’

Sk’jin gets that too.

It’s silent for a while. Human Yoongi wasn’t much of a talker either it seemed. Though of course it was exponentially more than GI Yoongi.

‘But— but sometimes I am sure it is me; it does feel like me.’ Yoongi says quietly. ‘It felt like me when I saw Jimin’s hair in Ynqaba. In that place. It felt like me. And I just… I just know it was me.’

Sk’jin carefully studies Yoongi. Like this, there was… there was something changed in him, distinct from how Yoongi was before. His posture was, frankly speaking, rather bad. He had a funny walk— almost waddle like. His whole mannerism was different.

But somehow, it almost felt like a starker version of GI Yoongi.

‘He read a lot,’ Yoongi chuckles quietly, ‘He read self-help books. Books on mannerism, body language, social skills, conversation skills… I can still feel that confusion. I don’t know how to explain it— I don’t know how— how he could live with it. I’m barely able to hang out to now as it is. I don’t… know what to think of… his thoughts?’

‘GI-Yoongi?’ Sk’jin specifies.

‘Yeah,’ Yoongi makes a face, ‘It’s odd— I know how he feels. I feel it. I know he felt me too. Actually like this I feel a bit like Jekyll and Hyde.’

‘What’s that?’

‘An old story from Earth,’ Yoongi sighs before stopping, ‘God, it’s gone. It’s all gone.’

Again, Sk’jin can really relate.

‘For a moment I wanted to cry,’ Yoongi laughs humourlessly, ‘But I just got over it so fast— it’s—’

‘Don’t dwell on it,’ Sk’jin says as he stretches, ‘Trust me. It’s best that you don’t.’

Yoongi gives him a searching look before nodding, ‘Yeah, I’ll try.’
‘What’s the story about?’ Sk’jin asks, re-crossing his legs.

‘I don’t know the details of the story but—it’s a thriller fiction—horror at the time,’ Yoongi explains. His voice drawls a lot, Sk’jin notes. ‘The main character is Dr. Jekyll and he runs these experiments on himself—he drank a serum or something, and he would turn monstrous—change form and kill people. They called him Mr. Hyde. It’s basically a precautionary tale about misleading personalities, being two-faced, that sort of thing.’

‘Riveting, maybe I should read it.’ Sk’jin says in earnest. ‘So, does that make you Jekyll?’

‘I feel more like Hyde,’ Yoongi says quietly, ‘I’ve always felt that…that we have always been Hyde.’

There’s a small noise from the stairs outside the Bridge, making them both pause in their conversation.

‘Well, if I know anything about stories, that sort of self-esteem will never win you the love interest,’ Sk’jin comments, pausing the cup of tea near his lips. ‘It’ll get you killed.’

‘What is this, personal experience?’ Yoongi snorts.

‘Didn’t live long enough for it to happen,’ Sk’jin replies wryly.

Yoongi gives him a questionable look, which was justifiable considering everything.

‘What are your thoughts on all of this?’ Sk’jin asks, blowing lightly on his cup of tea.

‘This?’

‘You know—this whole “mission”’, Sk’jin says with a shrug. ‘I think you can tell from your memories you weren’t very talkative. Violent sure, talkative? Not really.’

Yoongi gives him a blank look before saying without a hitch, ‘I still have the urge to punch you.’

Sk’jin rolls his eyes.

‘There’s a lot that’s…missing,’ Yoongi says carefully as he shifts the cup in his hands, turning the warm object over in his hands. ‘Information, memories, truth.’

‘Truth? Someone is lying?’ Sk’jin inquires.

Yoongi gives him a look to which Sk’jin responds with his own look.

‘I have never lied a single day of my life,’ Sk’jin scoffs, ‘And unlike your prince, I don’t claim to not be able to lie. If I lie, I’m honest about it.’

Yoongi’s brow does a funny twitch.

‘You know I’m right. Jimin knows something, or at least has the idea of something about all of this. But he won’t say it.’

‘Speculations and theories can be vague and sharing them can cause panic,’ Yoongi replies sharply, ‘Maybe Jimin—’

‘Spare me,’ Sk’jin sighs out, ‘Your prince is hiding something we know. He’s hiding a lot of things, and honestly I’m not above getting to the bottom of it.’
‘He’d kick your ass you know this,’ Yoongi replies with a heavy frown.

‘Yeah but he won’t kick yours,’ Sk’jin points out.

Yoongi looks offended, ‘I’m not going to coerce him into telling me something you have no evidence of-’

‘I know you won’t, but you should,’ Sk’jin carefully intones.

‘Why should I,’ Yoongi demands, looking irritated.

‘Because you want to know too,’ Sk’jin replies simply, ‘You want to know.’

Yoongi rolls his eyes.

Sk’jin studies the Human for a while before saying, ‘Is it some form of genetic thing amongst short-lived species to be overwhelmingly obsessed with having purpose and meaning in their lives?’

Yoongi looks at him questioningly.

‘Yoongi, you joined an extremely suspicious organization and event that knocked you out for night on end, from which you woke up with an indent on your back so excuse me if I think you’re probably ignorantly idealistic and incredibly thick-headed. Based on these two facts, and seeing as how it seems to be a fashionable trend the past few millennia, I think we both know you’re going to definitely ask Jimin about all of this one way or another.’

Yoongi looks like he wants to argue, but the sound of Namjoon and Jimin entering the doorway and crossing over into the Bridge interrupts them.

‘Also another thing,’ Sk’jin begins seriously and in a quiet tone. Yoongi leans in as though to hear everything as clearly as he could. ‘Be safe and keep the fucking to a minimum–’

It’s absolutely delightful to see Yoongi’s face turn bright crimson, eyes widening, mouth gaping before he splutters out a ‘Jesus fucking Christ-!’

‘Anyways, you should find a balance,’ Sk’jin says as he leans back, grinning at Namjoon and Jimin as they reach the Navigator’s Mast. ‘Balance your Hyde and Jekyll – the best of two worlds, right?’

Still red in the face, Yoongi nods slowly to that.

‘Best of two worlds.’

Namjoon’s not sure why Sk’jin was cackling to himself and why Yoongi was red in the face as he and Jimin approach the two. Knowing Sk’jin though, he’d rather not know.

Jimin lets out a quiet ‘hehehe’ as they get closer, looking amused and thoroughly fond. He walks ahead a little faster, skipping down the one step, hands raised up towards Yoongi. Whatever his concerns were, Jimin was doing a good job of not showing it around the Human.
‘Sure, ignore me,’ Sk’jin says dryly.

‘Sk’jin!’ Jimin laughs, turning to laugh at the Khol’isa. ‘Didn’t ignore!’

Sk’jin feigns a dramatic heartbreak and walks over to the Mast.

‘You’re getting along nicely,’ Namjoon comments, ‘Weren’t you three stuck in a weird who-kills-who-first contest?’

‘Nonsense, we’re practically best-friends,’ Sk’jin says with a fabulous flip of his now dark hair.

‘Good changes then?’

‘I suppose, but if one thing hasn’t changed- look at that,’ Sk’jin snorts, nodding towards the side of the Bridge he just left.

Yoongi and Jimin are talking quietly, hands held as they gaze out of the large windows, looking out as Grisial clears out enough that the rest of space can be seen, coiling around the large asteroids like a black river.

And Namjoon begrudgingly admits that yeah, one clear thing hasn’t changed.

‘Spaces he’s really in deep isn’t he?’ Sk’jin sighs, his tone nearly disgusted but mostly just amused.

‘Hey, in a sense it’s super romantic.’

Sk’jin coughs weirdly, thumping at his chest.

‘I can’t believe you just said that without a hint of irony,’ Sk’jin gasps out.

Namjoon rolls his eyes, settling the NaviLet back into the main slot of the Table a little clumsily with one hand.

‘So the stuff you need is there too?’ Sk’jin asks, not making a single move to help Namjoon.

‘Yeah- everything we need has arrived,’ Namjoon replies. ‘We just need to pick it up and we’re 3 stops from Axudar.’

‘I wanted to discuss something with you- actually Taeh’yung mentioned it to me,’ Sk’jin says without preamble in a serious tone, ‘He wants to contact Zitao and the others- regarding Yoongi’s memories- I mean his past.’

‘What about his past? Which part?’ Namjoon asks at once.

‘I think it’s about what he saw in the Yisheng Directory,’ Sk’jin replies, glancing over at Yoongi. ‘How he mentioned his dream.’

It’s true what Hoseok had said about dreams in regards to the other members on board the ship.

‘Sometimes I don’t think any of you are actually real,’ Namjoon finds himself saying. ‘You, Taeh’yung, Jimin, Yoongi- you all feel…different.’

Sk’jin snorts, rolling his eyes and pointedly looks at his mangled arm, ‘You’re not any better sweet-cheeks.’
Namjoon rolls his eyes too- it wasn’t an easy thing to explain.

‘I guess...’ Sk’jin suddenly goes on, ‘-I guess it’s because we are.’

‘Different?’

‘No,’ Sk’jin looks over at Yoongi and Jimin, ‘Not real.’

Not sure why but Namjoon reaches over to pinch Sk’jin right at his neck.

Sk’jin literally screeches.

Both Yoongi and Jimin jump at the sound, eyes wide as they turn to stare.

‘What in the fuck-’ Sk’jin hisses, grabbing at his neck, ‘You have one working arm and that’s what you decided to do?!’

‘You’re all real enough to me,’ Namjoon says as seriously as he can. ‘You’re here aren’t you?’

Sk’jin tenses- his posture stiff, expression frozen on his face. And for a brief second, his frame seems to shake before he relaxes again. Now that Namjoon has realized how incomplete Sk’jin is, he can’t un-see it.

‘Sure,’ he replies with a shrug.

‘Has Jungkook…’ Namjoon begins slowly, thinking back to his conversation with Jimin, and then with his conversation with Jungkook himself. ‘Has Jungkook mentioned anything else about his mother? Or even about himself?’

Sk’jin frowns a little as he shakes his head.

‘Just that his mother went through the same thing as Yoongi.’

‘Has he experienced it? Did he tell you?’

‘He hasn’t. He asked me if he would,’ Sk’jin says quietly, ‘I said I didn’t know.’

Namjoon had no doubt in his mind, that Jungkook was created by the Yishengs. But he had been found by his mothers in Ynqaba, and raised probably since he was a baby or very young infant. But his mother, the one that looked like Sk’jin- was she GI? Or was she created by the Red Evil, the same way Yoongi was?

‘You’re not going to experiment anything on Jungkook,’ Sk’jin suddenly hisses in warning.

Namjoon splutters in his haste to hiss back, ‘No one is going to do anything like that!’.

Sk’jin doesn’t look the least bit apologetic as he says, ‘Yeah well, just warning you. Or I’ll behead you in your sleep.’

‘Why would you even think that?’ Namjoon demands.

Sk’jin clearly doesn’t feel the need to reply and instead says, ‘I know you’re looking for answers-to figure things out. It doesn’t always end well for the innocent.’

‘I think I can say this on behalf of everyone on the ship that we would never allow anything bad to happen to Jungkook.’ Namjoon frowns.
Sk’jin gives him a briefly annoyed look, like Namjoon was being intentionally dense.

‘Well, things are gonna become really difficult if this is how things are going to be. And I wasn’t just talking about Jungkook.’

Before Namjoon can ask Sk’jin what he means, Taeh’yung appears, waving brightly at them before skipping over to Yoongi and Jimin.

‘Yoongi! Explain this to me!! I think it’s from Earth and I wanna know how to play it!’ Taeh’yung requests, bending his knees a little as though to look shorter, holding up a screen to the Human’s face.

‘Oh- yeah sure-’

Yoongi reaches up for the screen and next second it’s broken in half, crushed silicon bits cutting into his palm.

‘Oh-ouch-’ Yoongi hisses, eyes widening at the sight of his hand.

It’s silent for a solid second before Taeh’yung screams dramatically, hands flailing as he crouches down on the floor. Yoongi is sort of dazed while Jimin quickly takes his hand, holding it high while carefully removing the bits and pieces.

Namjoon hears Sk’jin sigh before he quickly moves too, reaching around his station to grab a medical kit.

Yoongi is easily stitched up and Taeh’yung refuses to let go of the Human’s (not injured) hand as means of an apology. Jimin is hovering, worry evident in his expression while Yoongi squirms in his seat, clearly dazed.

‘I think Yoongi is gonna have to train his strength or something,’ Sk’jin sighs heavily as he returns to the Navigation Mast, sitting heavily in Namjoon’s seat.

‘Yeah, I think Hoseok will be good at that.’ Namjoon replies tiredly and before Sk’jin can change the topic again, he asks, ‘What do you mean by things will be difficult?’

Sk’jin glances over at the doorway to the Bridge just as Hoseok walks in, followed by Jungkook. Then he looks around the entire place, a heavy sigh falling from his lips before he says, ‘Because we’re all liars.’

‘How much time do you have?’ Namjoon wants to ask again, eyeing the Khol’isa out of the corner of his eye. But he knows all he’ll get in return of his inquiries will be lies.

It was a bit ironic really.

‘I got some interesting news,’ Hoseok announces as he approaches.

Namjoon diverts his attention towards the other only Being onboard who didn’t speak in riddles the entire time.

‘What is it?’ Sk’jin asks, making himself comfortable in Namjoon’s chair. Namjoon doesn’t bother attempting to drag the Khol’isa out.

‘Some pointers about Axudar,’ Hoseok begins before he slides his screen into the slot beneath the Navigation Table.
Taeh’yung skips over to drape himself heavily over Sk’jin who huffs out at the sudden weight.

‘The 3 live-in planets are going through a sort of political reform,’ Hoseok explains as he deftly taps across the Navigation Table, activating a holo-projection. ‘The major countries are attempting to pass a System Constitution regarding a clause that regulates inter-planetary immigration.’

‘What does that entail for us?’ Namjoon inquires.

‘Not a lot- this doesn’t have to do with non-System travellers, but with the planets inside Axudar,’ Hoseok explains. ‘The previous political uh, supremacy governing the laws within Axudar as a whole recently underwent a sort of reform.’

‘That sounds like it could be a major issue, is the GLA supervising?’ Sk’jin inquires as Hoseok pulls up countless articles and reports of the issue in Axudar.

‘Yeah, that’s the thing, they aren’t.’ Hoseok replies as he nods at the reports, ‘These are records I’ve pulled from local news reports as well as discord forums on their local channels from the sources Namjoon brought back.’

Namjoon makes a mental note to thank Ems again.

‘So what are they trying to do?’ Jimin asks, a small furrow appearing between his eyebrows as he eyes the reports and headlines across the holo-projection.

‘The 3 planets all have separate and regulated channels of distribution, immigration, and import/export,’ Hoseok explains, ‘Though systematically born from the same protoplanetary disc, the 3 planets all have widely varying elemental foundations, making certain ecosystems within the separate planets quite delicate.’

‘That’s quite common for most planets with more than 2 habitable planets isn’t it?’ Sk’jin inquires.

‘Yeah but it’s never to the point of it being toxic,’ Namjoon supplies, ‘Is that what it is?’

‘It is,’ Hoseok nods, ‘But the reason why this has all started is because they believe they’ve invented a nullifier, that balances the elemental balance between all 3 planets to equalize or something along that line.’

‘That sounds like a whole lot of bullshit,’ Sk’jin snorts.

‘It’s not,’ Jimin says randomly, ‘4 centuries…um- some time ago, in my System, we reduced the acid-acid-ty of a region.’

‘I mean, terraforming in that level isn’t too surprising,’ Sk’jin shrugs, ‘But this is core-deep. Planets can’t just switch permanently. It’s probably some money-scheme.’

Hoseok nods to that, pointing at some of the articles, ‘That’s why there’s a lot of protests.’

‘Is it serious?’ Sk’jin asks looking flabbergasted that an issue like this would actually be taken with serious regard.

‘I’m afraid it is- so the planets are going through a lot of hostility, and many institutions that revolve around the Scientific Panel has been compromised,’ Hoseok exhales. ‘This includes our idea about the refugee center in Māhanga.’

‘So what do we do then?’ Sk’jin inquires, evidently relieved that the plan including Jungkook would now be unemployable with these new discoveries. ‘Should we stick to our previous trajectory into the Koitz Pulsar?’

‘We could- but-‘ Hoseok grimaces, gesturing at the holographic projection.

‘But this is actually relevant,’ Sk’jin sighs with a grimace. ‘I see it. This is genuinely important to our understanding. It’s too close to everything. We actually do need to go to Axudar and dig about.’

‘But maybe we don’t have to go in directly,’ Hoseok emphasizes. ‘We could go close by- not even directly into Māhanga or the other planets. Just to get information.’ He taps on the holograph and pulls out the whole System map. Tapping on one of the orbiting planets in the outer rings, Hoseok expands a pale green gas-planet.

‘This is a trove,’ Hoseok explains, as he makes a ring around the planet, highlighting 4 satellites, ‘Convenient and easy to access for the inhabitant and immigrants in Axudar.’

‘I wasn’t aware that the moons were habitable,’ Namjoon frowns as he studies the projection. ‘They’re not, it’s all Atmoshield,’ Hoseok explains before he expands one of the satellites, ‘This is the most frequented. With the highest amount of immigrant channels, as well as highest ratings of disappearances and pirate movement in the area.’

‘Now they’re just being cocky,’ Sk’jin grimaces as he leans back into the chair again, ‘How the GLA just turned a blind eye wow-‘

‘This might be risky to go here,’ Hoseok tells them frankly, ‘But-‘

‘-but our disguise will be more effective,’ Yoongi finishes his sentence. ‘Places like these hold all sorts of information if you know where to look. Hoseok you could-‘

‘-yeah probably find a safe-house and see what information other agents have saved there,’ Hoseok nods at once.

‘We might actually be able to pick up on more information there than in Māhanga itself,’ Namjoon says thoughtfully.

‘I was thinking that too. Besides, if there is a need to go to any of the 3 planets it might appear more organic by flying out from here instead of heading straight to Axudar,’ Hoseok concludes.

‘I was thinking that too, we should put it up for vote.’ Namjoon looks around the Table at everyone, ‘Is everyone okay with this plan?’

Taeh’yung nods vigorously while Sk’jin gives a single nod. Jimin nods, albeit hesitantly, while Yoongi echoes him. Jungkook hastily nods when he’s looked at, still surprised that his vote was being counted.

‘Captain?’

‘I’m in approval with the plan,’ Namjoon replies.

‘So it’s a green from everyone,’ Hoseok announces. ‘Of course we will have back up plans in accordance to any possible issues that arise. We’re gonna reach Pit 18 in 15 minutes, let’s prepare for that.’
'I’ll handle the transactions,’ Sk’jin volunteers at once, ‘Seeing as the PSC has been been exposed, we need to be more careful about who can be potentially spotted at ports and docks.’

‘PSC?’ Hoseok raises an eyebrow.

‘Yeah, the Pompen Suga Carnage,’ Sk’jin winks at Yoongi who blanches visibly at the mention of it.

‘Right yeah- Sk’jin and I will handle that part,’ Hoseok says hastily. ‘Everyone else just stay inside. There could be couriers and we don’t need anyone recognizing us.’

‘Sk’jin is pretty recognizable,’ Yoongi states.

It’s funny seeing Yoongi respond like this.

‘Am I?’ Sk’jin asks, eyes flashing red, making Yoongi narrow his eyes at him.

‘And pa will finally get his hand back!’ Taeh’yung announces as he lifts Namjoon’s non-functioning one.

Jungkook does a little cheer and then stops promptly, turning red.

As they disperse Sk’jin makes to sit up, groaning under his breath, clearly complaining.

‘What’s wrong?’ Namjoon asks, wondering if the Khol’isa had some issues with their plan.

‘My back hurts,’ is the answer he gets.

‘Well…we’ll get the UV Bed in like, 10 minutes,’ Namjoon says in what he hopes sounds like an encouraging tone.

‘Ah I wish everything was solved with a bit of UV,’ Sk’jin snorts getting up and waddling very much like an elderly Being.

‘Maybe try religion,’ Namjoon snorts at the very notion of it.

‘Prayers won’t save you here,’ Sk’jin grumbles.

‘Too many black holes,’ Namjoon replies absentmindedly as he claims his seat.

Sk’jin honest to goodness chokes.

*'

Sk’jin looks like he could really use that UV Bed any minute now. He did look healthy, but there was a clear restlessness in him that Namjoon hopes can be settled with the UV Bed.

The Hangar gate opens and the filtered light from Grisial is somewhat healing but not enough. At least that’s what Sk’jin had mentioned in passing. Pit 18 isn’t very populated, but that was just a matter of opinion. There were a lot of ships about, with maintenance crew and couriers flying about in auto-lifts and docks, whizzing overhead in a uniform manner. One of them settles down close to their landing strip and the workers start to undock.
'Here comes our goodies,' Sk’jin actually rubs his hands together in glee.

Hoseok is in complete disguise, stepping past Sk’jin to exit the ship to the platform. It had caused a bit of a ruckus when Hoseok had transformed, because Lisai alerted them of an intruder being on board. It was a security measure Namjoon and the others deemed necessary, especially when they were landing.

‘That’s actually a lot more than I expected,’ Hoseok comments, ‘Maybe an extra hand-‘

‘Don’t be insensitive towards Namjoon,’ Sk’jin gasps.

‘I’ll go,’ Jimin offers at once but Namjoon shakes his head.

‘You three stay here,’ Namjoon says with a slightly warning tone. Taeh’yung gives him an all too innocent smile in response and Namjoon knows not to trust in it.

He comes across Jungkook who is crouched just outside the doorway of the Hangar, listening to the movements outside. Namjoon gives him small smile and pats his head as he walks past.

Hoseok and another courier are hauling in some of the bigger crates and Namjoon goes to help them at once.

‘Sir, could you check and sign the roster?’ one of the other couriers asks, handing Sk’jin a clipboard. Namjoon keeps behind the crates, helping but still staying out of sight. You couldn’t be too careful after all. Hoseok walks out again to get the other crates and Namjoon wonders why the couriers don’t just bring the lift towards the ship. Namjoon begins dragging one of the large crates, that clearly contained some large part for Sk’jin’s UV Bed towards the wide doorway to the Lobby inside.

‘Oh that’s wonderful,’ Sk’jin grins, arms moving elegantly as he takes on the clipboard, checking the contents.

‘If you could-‘

There’s a sharp and sudden snarl and a blurred movement streaking past Namjoon followed by a horrific crunching sound that resonates through the Hangar.

The next thing Namjoon sees is Sk’jin sprayed with blood, and Jungkook crouched on the floor, head lowered onto the courier’s neck.

‘Jungkook-‘ Sk’jin gasps, nearly falling backwards, the clipboard slipping from his hands.

And before it hits the ground, one of the other couriers appears at the opened hangar gateway. The clipboard strikes the ground and the carrier leaps across, charging straight at Sk’jin who is too slow to react-

A hot flash of light streaks past Namjoon’s ears and hits the carrier straight in the chest, throwing him out of the Hangar. Yoongi sprints past, TeorSer in hand as he dodges Sk’jin and Jungkook on the floor and fires almost randomly at something outside. Namjoon drops the crate and rushes after the Human to find Hoseok pushing off one of the couriers, and to his horror finds that the Ngfy’widan was bleeding.

‘Get back inside now!’ Hoseok roars as he starts running back towards them but he’s tackled harshly, causing him to skid across the landing strip. However, Yoongi is quick to move and he’s on the assailant, firing neat and clear shots. But the assailant dodges every single shot and in a strange move lifts Hoseok up before him like a shield-

Yoongi instantly stops firing and Hoseok manages to grapple his assailant, disarming him. Yoongi sprints out towards Hoseok at once but is waylaid by two couriers.

‘Sk’jin get the ship at green now!’ Namjoon orders as he runs to the emergency panel to the side, ‘Jungkook get inside now-‘

‘Oh? This is interesting,’ Taeh’yung says before there’s a wave of green that physically pushes past Namjoon, making him falter.

But the effect on the couriers who were on Yoongi and Hoseok is much stronger, flinging them off physically into the air.

Hoseok wastes no time in sprinting back. Yoongi waits for him to reach him, TeorSer raised because their assailants are already getting up.

‘Sk’jin get us flying now!’ Namjoon orders, quickly glancing at the Khol’isa who is still in a state of shock. Namjoon aims and fires, taking one of the assailants who was standing out. He hears Sk’jin and Jungkook rushing out of the Hangar. They’ve caught attention now, the entire area in a state of shock, ships clearly trying to move away, alarms triggering and lights blaring.

‘Lisai pull up the ramps, shut down all points of entry except for the main Hangar gate,’ Namjoon orders, glancing down at the body of the courier on the floor, his neck a mangled mess of flesh.

‘The security measures are shutting down the gates,’ Jimin reports in panic as Namjoon waits on edge for Hoseok and Yoongi to run back in. ‘They’re sending patrol units.’

Namjoon fires again, catching one of the 2 remaining assailants in the leg but it’s not stopping them from rushing towards them.

Hoseok and Yoongi jump in just as the ramp starts pulling in and the ship starts to lift off the ground.

‘Lisai full power on shields and start engines for warp,’ Sk’jin orders, his voice shaky.

Hoseok is bleeding from an attempted stab wound to the chest. But he clearly dodged, a gash cutting him across the side instead. Yoongi isn’t injured but the moment he’s close enough he blurts out, ‘It’s them-‘

A figure in the courier uniform suddenly vaults in, taking Yoongi down with him just as the ramp closes in and the gateway seals in.

This was not good; they couldn’t fire their TeorSers inside the ship. But the assailant could.

He’s kicked off by Yoongi but the assailant recovers with startling speed and in a quick motion slides and darts under the Spardyti and slithers off and away into the doorway out of the Hangar.

‘We have a hostile inside the ship-!’ Hoseok yells, the three of them rushing out of the Hangar.

The Lobby is empty and they all pause. Namjoon realizes that Lisai has not alerted them for a foreign invader on board the ship.

‘What?’

The ship tilts a little bit.
‘Lisai close the Bridge now-‘ Namjoon orders as he follows Yoongi in sprinting up the stairs. Hoseok stays in the Lobby, his posture crouched as he scans the area.

‘Scan for invading body-‘ Namjoon begins to order but the sound of a body being physically thrown to the floor urges them to move faster.

There’s a horrified gasp and the sound of someone falling backwards.

Yoongi all but flies up the stairs.

The assailant is on the floor, face turned away from them, body motionless. Jimin is standing over him, eyes wide and hands shaking.

‘Jimin-?’

Jimin jumps violently, his entire body shaking, his eyes wide with horror and shock.

‘I- I don’t-‘

Hoseok runs up, panting as he asks, ‘Did you get him-‘

‘Yoo-Yoongi I-‘ Jimin sobs, shaking rather violently.

‘Jimin what-‘ the Human quickly makes his way to Jimin, quickly but gently pulling him aside but Jimin is shakily pointing to the body on the floor, making strange choking sounds.

Namjoon quickly darts forward, kneeling down and pulling the still-breathing assailant in the courier outfit onto his back. Namjoon instantly stumbles back.

It’s Yoongi.

There’s a sharp intake of breath from Hoseok behind him.

‘What-?’

Jimin is shaking, hands curling into his beanie, his breaths are heaves, distraught, agony, and confusion on his face. But Yoongi is there, right next to him, holding Jimin protectively, eyes glazed over in shock.

‘What the fuck-‘

The ship rocks, making Namjoon lose balance. Hoseok steadies him, his eyes never straying from the unconscious body on the Lobby floor.

‘What-‘

Namjoon cannot believe his eyes.

There was no mistaking it.

This was Yoongi.

‘How-‘, Yoongi begins faintly, ‘How many Yoongi’s do you see?’
UNIVERSITY
FUCK
THIS
IT’S THE LAST SEMESTER AND IM GRADUATING HOPEFULLY
BUT FUCK IT
this update took 9876545678 years and i am sorry
This comeback
I don’t know how to express it guys
Ive never felt such pure joy from a single song
This whole album is amazing but-
This song
This song has such a powerful happy feeling to it and I felt like my entire soul was drinking up the pure joy and energy it had
I felt young
I know im not old but you know, living on this earth just ages you mentally and emotionally. But this song really came and just slapped some youth into me
I just love the lyrics so much? A boy WITH love?? That’s amazing.
Tell me the small things you do?? Teach me?? A star that makes the ordinary extraordinary??
What a wholesome and wonderful song it really just makes me so incredibly filled with joy
I love them so much
And Halsey
I just love her so much
She fits in so perfectly
It’s not a strange addition or even just a ‘oh I guess we should feature someone and stick them to a certain part of the song’ kinda thing but she was there, singing, harmonizing, and dancing in the mv it was adorable. This is the cutest sweetest most wholesome thing
What a blessing this whole comeback
Jimin watches fondly as Yoongi teaches Taeh’yung a game called “Monopoly” from Earth. After treating the cuts in his hand, Yoongi had taken one look at it and huffed out a laugh. They then cleared an area on the floor and settled down with a new screen to project a “board” onto the floor.

‘I hope we don’t fall apart over this,’ the Human had said.

Yoongi told Taeh’yung that the best way to learn would be to play it for himself. It’s funny watching them argue over fake holographic money because Taeh’yung insisted that Yoongi was cheating while Yoongi made wild straight-faced explanations over why and how he was not cheating.

Yoongi was definitely cheating.

Jimin opted out from playing, wanting to simply watch Yoongi.

This was nice.

Watching him as he once was, a normal simple Human just enjoying his life, no immediate threat over them, over him. Just a sense of normalcy and—Yoongi looks up at Jimin, a sort of suppressed smirk on his lips as Taeh’yung struggled with decisions regarding the game. His gaze softens, and Jimin can nearly hear his exhale, as though it was out of Yoongi’s control. As though just looking at him made Yoongi lose his breath.

It makes Jimin blush, he can feel it growing and spreading on his face. He looks down at their holographic board instead and concentrates at a little rectangle named “Pall Mall” instead.

He chances a look up at Yoongi again after a while, and he’s already pointing at something Taeh’yung is asking him. But his face is a little flushed too.

Jimin glances over at the surveillance projections above the Navigation Table.

Sk’jin felt unwell and Jimin isn’t really sure about this device about UV rays, but he trusted that the others seemed to think that it might help. So he tries not to think too much about it. Besides, it was impossible to discuss anything with Sk’jin most times. He only seemed to open up to Jungkook. Or at least seemed to let his guard down with the young Being.
Speaking of Jungkook, he was sitting outside the Hangar, knees up to his chest and randomly drawing patterns on the floor with a finger. Hoseok with a completely new disguise is exiting the ship, his gait changed, shifting his weight forward almost in a sluggish manner. Hoseok didn’t just have the ability to change his appearance, but also to completely take on a whole set of mannerism and attitude.

Namjoon and Sk’jin were exchanging words, some form of “friendly” conversation though most friendly conversations didn’t come with hidden jabs and passive aggressiveness. It sort of makes Jimin want to laugh and pull at his hair all at once.

‘Yes! I got a hotel! Banker! Give me a hotel for Leicester Square!’ Taeh’yung throws his arms up in the air.

‘That will be 7750 pounds dear customer,’ Yoongi replies as he reads the holographic card.

‘But I don’t have 7750 pounds!’ Taeh’yung gasps, holding up his money as though to show Yoongi.

‘Well I guess you can’t buy a hotel,’ Yoongi sighs sympathetically.

‘You’re cheating me!’

‘It literally says 7750 pounds here,’ Yoongi grins with amusement as he turns the card over at Taeh’yung who wails dramatically.

‘Come on, you can throw the die again, you hit doubles.’ Yoongi tells him kindly, nudging him with an extended foot.

‘Oh right! I like this rule!’ Taeh’yung grins as he rolls the holographic die again.

Yoongi glances up at him again. He doesn’t have a full blown out smile on his face, but there’s a sort of lazy up-turn of lips- more on one side than the other. It’s achingly familiar but entirely foreign as well.

Jimin smiles back and walks over to go sit on the floor as well. His knee lightly nudges against Yoongi’s, the Human’s hand twitching as though to reach out for him.

Jimin nearly responds in kind, but remembers that, oddly enough, this Yoongi was still not familiar with him the way GI Yoongi was familiar with him.

Jimin wants to reach over and take his hand, but he’s not sure how to. Or if he could.

‘Okay! I think I would definitely like to buy May Park,’ Taeh’yung announces, holding up the exact amount of money needed to buy this May Park. ‘Here is the money banker.’

‘Understood,’ Yoongi nods, taking the holographic money slid over towards him. Taeh’yung watches with an exaggerated pout as he watches his money count go down, the sum turning orange as though to depict the level of financial danger he was in. Yoongi, Jimin notes, has a tidy light blue-tinted sum of money.

‘Congratulations, you are now the proud owner of May Park,’ Yoongi tells Taeh’yung as he hands Taeh’yung the appropriate card. Taeh’yung claps as he carefully coordinates his cards according to colour.

‘It used to be a major tourist area back on Ancient Earth,’ Yoongi says conversationally. ‘Most of Earth was transformed into one major conservation site. When we moved up to the Settlement Arcs we decided to never move down. It was also unsafe for a long time, we just had to let...let things run its natural course. Let things return to its natural order.'

Jimin and Taeh’yung listen carefully.

‘And we adapted, living in the Arcs was a new start. Made us feel better- felt separated from the mess we made.’ Yoongi snorts before saying, ‘Humans aren’t the best at accepting their mistakes. We tend to ruin ourselves in the process of ignoring what we did wrong.’

Jimin doesn’t realize how hard he’s clenching his fists.

‘But yeah- May Park was a really fancy place. Supposedly very good property. “Old property” type y’know?’ Yoongi snorts, ‘The past- like, the past Past, normally visualized that area with really snobby people.’

‘Am I snobby now?’ Taeh’yung’s jaw drops.

Yoongi laughs, ‘Nah- I think you’re fine kid.’

‘Kid?’ Taeh’yung seems to preen at that.

Jimin finds it funny. Because he knows Taeh’yung is older than all of them, with the exception of Sk’jin. But even so, age was a strange concept for someone like Taeh’yung- he existed in layers of Time within himself.

‘All right- seems like I got myself into jail,’ Yoongi sighs dramatically as he pushes his token, a small pointy eared creature with a long tail, over the board on a square that said ‘JAIL’ in thick letters.

‘I arrest you banker!’ Taeh’yung gleefully shouts. He’s about to reach for the die again when Taeh’yung’s eyes suddenly glaze over and Jimin feels it almost immediately.

A hollow ring resonates in the air, an echo, a mirage- a calling-

‘Jungkook-!’

‘Fuck-!’ Yoongi jumps up, eyes wide as he looks at the surveillance footage where suddenly there’s blood on the Hangar floor and Sk’jin is down, Jungkook covering him bodily.

‘Stay here both of you!’ Yoongi calls out as he sprints out. ‘Get the ship ready to fly out now!’

He exits the Bridge before Jimin can call him back, before he can regain his voice. He turns to face Taeh’yung who has a curious expression on his face, already eyeing him with some interest.

‘GET BACK INSIDE!’ Hoseok roars, their Comm Devices crackling at the sudden noise.

‘I don’t like this-‘ Jimin manages to finally say as he watches Yoongi swiftly run past Namjoon, Sk’jin, and Jungkook, ‘I don’t-‘ ‘You’ll only find out if you look. I already told you,’ Taeh’yung tells him, his expression blank as he gazes at some point beyond the Bridge. Jimin rushes to start up the ship, issuing the request to un-dock as he’s seen Namjoon do many times.

‘Request- requesting green for take-off!’ Jimin calls out before he rushes off the Navigator’s Mast and calling out, ‘Lisai! Autopilot now!’
‘Understood.’

‘Sk’jin get the ship at green now!’ Namjoon is yelling, ‘Jungkook get inside now-‘

‘Oh,’ Taeh’ying’s eyes gleam bright green, an unsettling smile growing on his face, ‘This is interesting.’

He waves a hand, a wave of green expanding out of his palm, the lines of copper over his skin glowing briefly.

‘What-‘

‘Due to security breach detected in your area, we are shutting down all docks and ports.’ A voice tells him over the Navigation Table. ‘

‘You’ll be able to see now,’ Taeh’yung says just as Jimin starts to run out. He doesn’t give it much thought, his mind abuzz and his pulse in his ear.

‘The security measures are shutting down the gates,’ Jimin hurriedly reports as he runs down the stairs. ‘They’re sending patrol units.’

He nearly collides straight into Jungkook and Sk’jin.

Jungkook’s face is splattered in blood, his mouth bloody his teeth still bared, but his eyes wide in fear. Jimin quickly reaches to the young Pravasi M’hanun and pats his head, willing calm into him. He looks over Sk’jin as well- and despite being splattered in blood, he looked uninjured and fine.

‘I’ll get the ship moving-‘

‘I’ve order the autopilot-‘

‘-good-‘

They all hear it the same time.

An almost imperceptible shift in the air- a chill travels down Jimin’s spine as they all look down the stairs to the Lobby below.

‘Go,’ Jimin pushes them up. ‘I’ll see-‘

Jungkook looks like he’s ready to go down instead.

‘Jungkook- protect Sk’jin- ship needs to go,’ Jimin tells him urgently and Jungkook nods, following Sk’jin up.

‘Lisai full power on shields and start engines for warp,’ Sk’jin says shakily as he enters the Bridge.

‘We have a hostile inside the ship-!’ Hoseok calls out and Jimin readies himself, taking sure steps down- feeling hearing the empty hollow ringing almost as though it was calling out to him-

The figure nearly rushes into him but Jimin is expecting them and he’s ready, his palm raised, feet lifting just a little from the floor –

A face – too familiar – too close, too precious, too close-

Jimin stumbles back onto the floor, his heart stopping as the call abruptly ends, the hollow erased and Yoongi is on the floor, eyes rolling back as he crumples, overwhelmed by the order to stay down.

No no no no no no no –

‘Jimin-?’

Jimin jumps at the voice- Yoongi is wide-eyed, worried, watching and approaching him-

‘I - I don’t-,’ Jimin’s throat constricts. Namjoon is there too, he’s watching the Being- Yoongi on the floor with apprehension.

‘Did you get him-’ Hoseok bursts in.

‘Yoo-Yoongi I –‘ Jimin chokes out, unable to look away from the floor.

‘Jimin what-‘ Yoongi guides him away gently, but Yoongi has to know they all have to know-

Namjoon quickly darts forward, kneeling down and the Yoongi on the floor onto his back.

Namjoon instantly stumbles back and Hoseok pales, his breath sharp.

‘What-?’ Namjoon asks, barely able to understand.

Jimin can’t stop shaking, an intense sense of confusion, of fear, of guilt-

‘Yoongi knows something is wrong with him, doesn’t he?’ Taeh’yung had asks rather conversationally when they were cleaning up the Medical Bay.

Jimin had tried not to appear as though his words had effected him.

‘I think if you’re passing out all over the place randomly then yeah, I’d assume something was wrong with me too.’ Jimin didn’t mean to sound snappy.

‘You know what I mean. He can feel it can’t he? He can feel his soul-‘

‘-don’t-‘ Jimin pleads, his voice lowered to a whisper. ‘Please don’t.’

Taeh’yung doesn’t say anything for a while before he asks, ‘What will you tell him if he asks?’

‘He already did. And I – I told him I don’t know-‘ Jimin frowns at Taeh’yung facial expression.

‘That’s the truth- I don’t know what’s going on! I can’t understand-‘

‘It’s because you don’t want to see.’

‘Don’t say that-!’

‘We do not bring death. We bring life-‘

One of it steps forward suddenly, bending down at a strange and impossible angle. It raises its hand until it wraps around Jimin’s head.

Jimin is locked, unable to move. He’s slowly lifted into the air and the light around him is being pressed down- it’s painful, as though a great weight was bearing down on him, compressing him, threatening to crush him to his very core.
‘Would you like to see life?’

Jimin raises his hands, stretching and reaching until the tips of his fingers touch the Red Evil on its face.

It’s cold, strangely wet, and ancient.

Jimin is flooded with pain— not his own, but not of the Red Evil. There is pain— from a Universe of Memories that has been forgotten and abandoned. A Universe of life that once was—

And a Universe of obsession.

‘Can you see it?’

Jimin is staring into its eyes, unable to blink away or speak—

‘You will see it. Like the rest of them.’

Jimin drops to the ground, reality rushing back around him in harsh lines and sounds—

‘You will see it.’

Yoongi block his view momentarily, and Jimin clutches on to him, grounding himself, taking deep breaths that sound more like gasps.

‘What the fuck—’

The ship rocks, and Jimin is sure that they’re all talking— that they’re all saying something—

‘How—,’ Yoongi’s voice reaches to him as though through a deep ocean, ‘How many Yoongi’s do you see?’

The ship shudders once more—

‘They’re trying to lock us in—!’ Sk’jin yells. ‘They’re not allowing us to move—’

There’s a horribly loud sound and bright light explodes outside of the kitchen window.

‘We’re being fired at—!’

‘Hoseok—!’ Namjoon calls out and the Ngfy’widan is already sprinting upwards, clearly headed for the Bridge to take over.

‘We need to first get the fuck out of here— we’ll take him away and lock him in. One of the Cabins will do—’ Namjoon begins to order, reaching down to grab the other Yoongi by the ankles when he starts awake, his foot meeting Namjoon’s jaw and kicking him away.

Namjoon spins as he falls to the ground heavily.

Yoongi is already on him, grappling him and forcing him down to the floor, making a sickening sound as something cracks. But neither of them appear to express any pain.

For a horrifying moment, Jimin cannot differentiate them.

Their movements are incredibly fast, and with the speed with which they fought, Jimin can see no open window to move in to take down the other Yoongi without touching his Yoongi. He could take them both down- but he’s afraid to do anything to unbalance his Yoongi- to further trigger-

‘Do you see it now?’ Taeh’yung asks him.

A flare of anger bursts through Jimin; anger, frustration, sorrow, pain, guilt-

Moving fast and swift, Jimin circles the two engaged in hand-to-hand combat and following the coloured blur that was his Yoongi, mimics and shadows his movements just enough to slip his hand in, slamming up against the other Yoongi’s chest.

They all crumple to the ground just as the ship is hit with another bolt of something. Namjoon is half-crawling, half-getting up towards them, his expression disoriented. Yoongi holds down the other Yoongi down to his own body, using himself as a restraint as the other Yoongi twists in his hold with uncanny dexterity freeing one arm but Jimin is there, throwing himself over and placing both his palms over the other Yoongi’s temples.

There’s a terrible white pain bursting on his side but he ignores it as he forces this Yoongi to look at him.

’SleEP-
0110100100100000011101110110001011011000101001011000011000000111011101101101 coils around him, harsh, powerful, limitless. An even darker blackness broils and coils somewhere, reaching out and pulling him out with no care and onto a tiled floor0110100100100000011101110110001011011000101001011001011001000100000011101116 he’s standing up in a rather dull empty space, some form of bedding raised off of the floor and a black01101001001000000111011001011000110100101100101100011000110100101100100010000001110111t charged to a single port against the wall01101001001000000111011001011000110101100011010110010110001000011101110 bedding glows faintly and on it is a black uniform he goes to touch it and the bed is somewhat warm but not enough011010010010000001110111011010010110001101110001011011001011001000100000011101111 he wears it a heavy shadow weighing him to the floor and submerging him completely as he dawns on the helmet before he 01101001001000000111011101101100011010110001101110010110001000011101101101 out into the long narrow hallway with identical doors and a figure stands before him silhouetted against the rectangle of light at the end011010010010000001110111011011000110101100011011100101101100010000100000011101111 he opens his mouth, the words formed and ready as he says01101001001000000111011101101100011011010001101100011010110010110010001000000111011101101110 !!

Gasping for air, Jimin resurfaces back into a violence of light amidst a high pitch-scream he cannot place. Away from the confusion of sight built on numbers and codes, suddenly everything is blurred and too stark. Everything rushes around him in a whirlwind of sound, lights, voices, and pain.

‘JIMIN!’

The 01100100011100101011000001101101010000110110110101101011011010110110101101101011011010110111111011111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111111
There’s a flash of light, of heat, and then dreadful cold, and Jimin is overwhelmed with nausea as he suddenly feels like he’s floating.

_Something was not right_

‘Hey! Jimin!’

It’s Namjoon.

‘Hey I’m moving you away from here’

The sound of aggressive scuffling followed by another explosion-

‘Help-’ Jimin struggles to say, nausea threatening to overwhelm him as his pain intensifies. ‘Help- Yoongi- stop him-’

‘Shh hey look focus on my voice stay calm it’s-’ another explosion and there’s blinding light.

There’s another massive explosive sound and this time, Jimin knows something is wrong, metal is shrieking and something thick and heavy shatters.

For a brief moment, Jimin wonders if he’s falling.

Wind whips around him violently, his body lifted and tugging towards something and his ears are ringing louder than the noise around him. A hand grabs him again and he knows it’s Namjoon. He stops falling but he’s still spinning, images created in numbers and codes rush and blend around him forms and shapes he recognizes but doesn’t understand collapsing as they exponentially maximize into strings of light.

‘Activating emergency door K12,’ Lisai’s voice announces pleasantly over the din.

‘YOONGI LET HIM GO-!’ Namjoon suddenly roars over the sound of the rushing sound and Jimin’s whole being freezes. Grounding himself, concentrating on the hand that’s anchoring him Jimin apologizes to Namjoon for the invasion and-

The Lobby is in chaos, things are flying around haphazardly in the air before being abruptly sucked in through a massive tear broken through the kitchen window towards the end of the ship. The damage is unusual- difficult to explain because it’s almost as though there was an explosion from within the ship.

Grisial is glistening around them in soft white rhythmically pulsing in neon red for the emergency they were causing. And outlined against this is Yoongi and the Other Yoongi.

A weight tugs on his hand and Jimin glances down only to see himself, his side drenched in blood, legs dangling as they pull up higher away from Grisial’s gravitational pull and into space. Jimin, or Namjoon, is using his body as an anchor, flat against the wall that borders the gap between the Lobby chairs and the massive dining area.

‘The emergency walls over the window is compromised- it’s probably jammed I can’t shut it down-’

Yoongi, the side of his face splattered in blood, is holding onto the one of the support beams outside the Cabin hallways. He has a deathly grip on the Other Yoongi, his face impassive and staring intently at Jimin.

‘YOONGI LET HIM GO!’ Jimin/Namjoon roars. ‘DROP HIM NOW-‘

‘HE WON’T- HE WON’T LET GO-‘ Yoongi roars back.

Jimin can see how Other Yoongi is not letting go.

‘He’s after me-‘ Jimin says but Namjoon splutters out ‘-what the fuck-?!’

The Other Yoongi uses Yoongi’s arm as a sort of momentum builder and swings himself to the side before grappling to a lower beam.

Yoongi nearly loses grip at the sudden detachment but quickly rights himself.

‘Pull us up-‘ Jimin gasps as Namjoon gasps out ‘-oh Spaces-!’ but doesn’t question it and begins reeling Jimin in.

‘WE’RE NEARLY OUT OF THE ATMOSHIELD YOU GUYS NEED TO MOVE FAST-!’ Sk’jin yells.

Namjoon grunts, able to use only one arm as he hoists Jimin up, his body twisting and leaving bloody skid marks over the normally shiny and smooth floors.

The Other Yoongi is scaling up the sides of the Cabin walls, using the indents of the doors to pull himself up. Yoongi catches up instantly, latching onto the Other Yoongi’s back and twisting him off the wall.

Jimin/Namjoon scream as the two Yoongi’s hurtle off the wall, colliding with a horrifying crunch against one of the support beams and separating mid-fall and falling straight towards the kitchen, towards the gaping broken window. But Yoongi manages to grab hold of one of the kitchen chairs, bolted to the ground near the table. The Other Yoongi has also managed to grab onto the kitchen island, his foot grabbing hold of one of the cabinet handles.

‘Sk’jin activate the emergency gateway NOW-!’ Namjoon yells as he pulls Jimin’s body all the way over to the side of the wall.

‘Yoongi-‘ Jimin/Namjoon calls and there’s another flash of light.

‘Fuck! Hold on tight-!’

Then rather oddly, the Other Yoongi stands up straight on the side of the kitchen island, watching them all rather blankly.

‘Hey-!’ Yoongi yells, arm reaching out.

From both the ceiling and the floor, thin but reinforced walls close in over the kitchen area in sections. One right above the island, separating the Other Yoongi from the open kitchen window and from Yoongi.

‘Stop!’ Jimin/Namjoon screams but the Other Yoongi steps off, falling straight through the broken kitchen window and into the rushing white of Grisial below them.

The emergency gateways close snap and the pulling force stops immediately.

Jimin and Namjoon let go of their hands
Jimin heaves breath into his lungs, the world around him still ringing but not as bad as it was.

‘Get to a secure place we need to warp out now-!’

Hoseok’s command is cut harshly when the whole ship violently jerks to the side. Jimin feels himself swerve on the floor. He can’t get rid of the numbers and codes flying past him, making up the sight he was seeing he tries blinking it out but it’s overwhelming him.

‘HOSEOK JUST Warp US OUT NOW!’ he hears Namjoon roar just as hands find him.

‘Jimin!’ Yoongi’s voice cuts through the numbers and suddenly Jimin can see clearly- can see Yoongi clearly. Pale, shaken, blood splattered his skin broken over his forehead and cheek, smudged blood still wet on his lips his nose- Found.

There’s a terrible groaning sound and rumbling as the whole ship’s direction physically changes and Jimin feels himself falling again. This time Yoongi holds him close, wrapping his arms around his torso and using his legs to steady them against the corner of a wall. Namjoon slides right up against them-

Terror and a strange sense of realization dawns on him as he gasps for breath, he just needs to-

‘Yoongi-!’

Yoongi holds him closer, eyes wide as he tries to check on what injuries Jimin might have.

‘Yoongi they found-!’

They lurch violently, steadied only by Namjoon who grabs them and anchors them to the wall.

‘Something’s wrong we’re falling-‘ he gasps as he situates himself next to them. ‘We need to get ourselves into the Lobby seats- are you both okay-?’

‘TAEHYUNG DON’T-!’ Sk’jin suddenly screams.

The hair on Jimin’s neck stands on end and the air screams as everything turns neon green.

Sk’jin is quick to move out of the cockpit when Hoseok comes hurtling in. He seats himself next to the Ngfy’widan though, ready to co-pilot with him if needed. He docks the NaviLet to his side, readying himself for every and anything.

He’s still shaking but he immediately checks on Jungkook who was secured on one of the footstools close to Sk’jin’s station at the Communications Board. Taeh’yung was rather excitedly reacting from where he sat in the front, where Yoongi normally stationed himself. Sk’jin had maneuvered and literally shot their way out of the attempted forced lockdown the Grisial Forces were trying to overwhelm them in. Sk’jin wasn’t the best at piloting fighting-grade ships but he hasn’t lived this long without having any experience. He’s shot down countless security drones before and this was no different, not with a ship this strong and stocked. It was only a little alarming that the default weapon Yoongi had assigned to the Užkulisai was the level 2 proton missiles. But then again, it wasn’t too surprising considering this was Yoongi after all.

‘Ship model Užkulisai-02 we are ordering you to stand down immediately or you will be forcefully-‘ Sk’jin cuts their Comm just as a random ship suddenly appears before them, having just pulled out of warp.

‘Fuck-!’ Hoseok curses as he redirects the ship harshly, jerking them against the safety restraints of their seats. Taeh’yung lets out a cheer in front of them. Sk’jin quickly ducks around the chair to check on Jungkook. His eyes are wide, face smeared in blood. He doesn’t look too bothered by the incident taking place immediately but rather stares down at his hands a little blankly. Sk’jin wants to reach out but now was neither the time or place.

The lower wing of the just warped in ship grazes over them but luckily due to their shields doesn’t cause any physical damage on them. The map of their location lightly beeps, a soft red spreading over the NaviLet screen.

‘Drones approaching we need to get out now-‘ Sk’jin reports immediately as he pulls up their defense set up again. ‘-before confusion and panic hits-‘

‘-this isn’t confusing and panicky enough?!’ Hoseok demands as he turns sharply and nearly collides into a ship that was clearly confused about wanting to fly off or land.

‘Beings panic and don’t think straight in situations like this- they’ll freak out and get themselves killed!’ Sk’jin snaps. ‘This is just the start of it we need to get the fuck out now!’

‘What do you think I’m trying to do!’ Hoseok yells back as he manages to get them higher. ‘Namjoon is the intruder down?’

There’s no reply from the Kutsoglerin.

‘A fucking intruder what the fuck are they?’ Sk’jin demands as he sets targets on the restraint-drone sent by the Grisial Forces. He can’t believe that an intruder got in, not to mention Lisai didn’t even alert them about it.

‘I-‘ Hoseok is concentrating on flying them but his expression is strangely blank, worry settling on his brow that exceeded the immediate stress he had about their very current and fatal course of action. ‘Yoongi.’

‘What about him? He didn’t get hurt did he?’ Sk’jin demands as he sets off the small projectiles after the drones.

‘No he’s- it’s I think other GI.’

‘Other GI-?!’ Sk’jin is momentarily distracted but doesn’t have time to question him when a ship tries to warp out and instead just crashes through a few other hovering ships and straight into a massive Grisial crystal asteroid.

‘What did I say- panic,’ Sk’jin says through grit teeth, looking away from the bright and brief explosion as whatever ship and her crew obliterate themselves. They narrowly dodge another ship as a wave of new drones fly in. But that’s only a cover, because as Sk’jin aims and fires, out of the explosion a wave of large projectiles, definitely not under the Grisial Forces grade flies at them.
The shield around the Užkulisai ripples as the force of it shakes and causes a few lights to flicker.

‘It’s not enough to take out the shield,’ Hoseok grits out.

‘Jimin!’

Sk’jin twists around again, catching sight of Jungkook who was staring at the projections of the ships surveillance. For a brief moment, Sk’jin wonders if his eyes were failing. It would make sense to an extent, seeing as his entire body seemed to be failing him at the moment. But it’s not the case (just yet, Sk’jin thinks scathingly) because his eyes aren’t tricking him.

Yoongi is on the floor, holding down against himself another Yoongi who was being pushed down by Jimin who was basically sitting on this other Yoongi’s chest, hands on his head.

‘Namjoon where the fuck are you?!’ Sk’jin screeches before adding, ‘Jungkook, stay- you need to stay here!’

The young Pravasi M’hanun was halfway getting up, the security straps straining against his chest and shoulders.

‘This isn’t the Grisial Forces,’ Hoseok gets out as they suddenly dip low, Sk’jin grabbing the edges of his seat out of instinct. ‘This is too strong-‘

The attacks are concentrated in one area specifically.

‘But it’s not going to cause any damage on us-‘

‘-not from the outside but from the inside-‘ Hoseok gasps before he’s practically yelling, ‘Yoongi he probably has a device on him-!’

This time the explosion that shakes their ship isn’t contained and doesn’t just cause some lights to flicker.

‘Large detonation detected from Level 2 Kitchens Area K09 to K21.’ Lisai reports. ‘Breach detected. Air levels fluctuating, gravity compromised.’

There’s an angry shriek of terror from behind them- it’s Jungkook. Sk’jin already knows that the youngest of this pathetic excuse of a crew was already undoing his security so he yells out, ‘Lisai emergency gateways for the Bridge entryway now! Close the gateways for area K09 and it’s surroundings as well!’

There are angry thudding sounds as Jungkook tries to break down the emergency gateways with his fists.

‘Kookie!’ Taeh’yung skips towards the Pravasi M’hanun and for a panicked moment Sk’jin thinks he’s going to let him go. But instead the Zhak’gri gathers up Jungkook in his arms, uncaring for the flailing and animalistic growls of anger coming from him.

‘You can’t get hurt,’ is all Taeh’yung says, ‘My small baby.’

He deposits him back on the same chair and straps him back. To Sk’jin’s intense alarm, Jungkook is unconscious.

‘What the fuck did you do-!?’ Sk’jin yells as Taeh’yung arranges Jungkook comfortably.

‘Keeping him safe,’ Taeh’yung says as he stands up straight, flexing his arms a little before turning to beam as Sk’jin though his expression falls as he looks at Sk’jin with a small frown, ‘Hey- you okay-?’

‘What is that?’ Hoseok suddenly asks.

Sk’jin looks towards the direction Hoseok is gawking at as they manage to somehow pull above the main destruction zone. The drones can’t follow them this far out of Grisial’s natural gravitational pull, that too with so much destruction going on. Sk’jin tries not to think about it.

Just beyond the Atmoshield surround all of Grisial are relatively small but powerful looking ships— not trade ships or cargo ships or passenger ships.

No.

These were clearly designed to be used in battle or for offensive attacks.

‘We need to get out of here now- and for fuck’s sake, Lisai seal those breaches,’ Hoseok orders again.

‘Emergency gateway K12 is jammed.’ Lisai replies pleasantly.

‘Fuck-’ Sk’jin curses, ‘The emergency walls over the window is compromised- it’s probably jammed I can’t shut it down-‘

‘We’ll need to section areas off-’ Hoseok grunts out, fervently eying the incoming barge of assault ships.

With a sense of intense dread Sk’jin pulls up the surveillance projection on the kitchen area over his docked NaviLet.

The damage is insane. Whatever device the other Yoongi had must have caused some major damages, allowing the missiles from the outside to finally caused sufficient damage and causing the window area to loosen. And the rest was taken care of by Grisial’s natural gravitational pull and the speed in which they were flying.

‘Lisai what emergency gateways are functioning right now?’ Sk’jin demands. ‘Standby to activate on my command!’

‘Analyzing and ready at your command.’

Jimin appeared to be unconscious, saved from being pulled through the opening by Namjoon who had managed to lodge himself on the Lobby wall. Yoongi and the other Yoongi are in a strange stance where it’s like they’re hanging onto each other.

‘Yoongi please keep a distance from the other one I’ll close off the emergency gateways and seal up the breach-‘

‘HE WON’T- HE WON’T LET GO-‘ Yoongi yells over the Comm.

‘I need to take us back in they’re going to see us too easily and we can’t warp without the breach being sealed-‘ Hoseok is saying, taking the ship back to the chaos-

‘Are you fucking crazy?’ Sk’jin demands, reaching forward to stop Hoseok mid-action. ‘Those are civilians- innocent traders and workers who are caught mid-attack because of us!’

‘But we can’t make it! We need to get out and we need to warp but we can’t-!’ Hoseok spits out, eyes widening in either disbelief or apprehension or stress or all three Sk’jin can’t rightly tell.

‘Keep going straight we’re not going back to just use innocent Beings for our fucking shield again-!’ Sk’jin hisses, physically taking over the controls as he gets out of his seat and practically shoves Hoseok off. ‘Move your ass to the weapons and take those fuckers out what the fuck do we have this fucking ship for if we can’t fucking use it??’

He’s either said the right thing or Hoseok is just in shock, what with the double take he gives him before he does what he’s told.

An onslaught of very powerful detonations fall over them in a powerful rain of bright lights, with nerve wracking alarms going off as their shield starts to take on too damage.

‘We can’t afford to fall back to the primary shield Sk’jin I fucking hope you know what you’re doing-’ Hoseok yells from the front.

‘Just fucking shoot shit down!’ Sk’jin snaps back as he dodges a ship that carelessly tries to warp past them. ‘Idiots you fucking idiots- WE’RE NEARLY OUT OF THE ATMOSHIELD YOU GUYS NEED TO MOVE FAST.-’

Instead of going straight up or back down to the chaos, Sk’jin pilots the ship to turn, away from the oncoming barrage of assault ships and above the chaos they caused.

‘Sk’jin activate emergency gateway NOW-!’ Namjoon orders out of nowhere.

‘Now you choose to appear you fucking-’ Sk’jin grumbles as he takes the NaviLet in one hand. ‘Lisai activate the emergency gateways over uh- area 15 to 19!’

‘Sk’jin incoming!’ Hoseok yells. ‘Fuck! Hold on tight-!’

They had been so distracted by what they were leaving behind, and what was on their side, they completely missed the massive and all too familiar white ship approaching them from above.

‘How are they here?!’ Sk’jin hisses as the Omhlophe ship fills up their view above. ‘Fuck fuck-’

‘Get to a secure place we need to warp out now-!’ Hoseok roars as the ship jerks with another massive attack on their side and to Sk’jin’s incredulity jumps out of the weapons mast and clammers over to the cockpit again.

‘Sk’jin give me the NaviLet now!’ Hoseok orders harshly.

‘Spaces what the fuck-’ Sk’jin splutters before handing Hoseok the NaviLet and taking over the controls again. ‘Hoseok for fuck’s sake this isn’t the time for research-’

‘HOSEOK JUST WARP US OUT NOW!’ Namjoon yells over the Comm.

‘Lisai get us to warp now-!’ Sk’jin orders but suddenly everything turns quiet.

And Sk’jin immediately knows why.

‘We are at green. Warp in 10 seconds-’

‘Well, this isn’t nice,’ Taeh’yung says as he walks past the cockpit, the air around him humming, tiny flecks of neon green lights sparking up. He’s walking casually, not flinching as more missiles are launched at them. Taeh’yung stretches his hands upwards, his head tilting just a little as though in thought.
Something massive slams into them, causing both Sk'jin and Hoseok to jerk forward heavily, barely able to gather themselves.

The Omhlophe were not firing at them- they were pushing them down with their ship, back into Grisial at startling speed.

‘This is not nice,’ Taeh’yung says, eyes gleaming, grinning widely.

‘TAEH’YUNG DON’T-!’

The Zhak’gri brings his hands together in a clap.

* *

‘Kookie!’

Jungkook looks up from the lump of wet grit and sand combination he’d been lumping together into a block at his anu.

‘Yeah?’

‘It’s about to rain! Come inside okay?’

‘Okay!’ Jungkook yells back. His siblings had already gone in, but Jungkook was waiting.

Thunder erupts in booming roars overhead, he can feel its force in the wet lump before him. His sister Okanaat couldn’t play clay-bits with him, her skin too sensitive. She was older than him, but was much smaller, and Jungkook loved chasing after her with the clay-bits, shrieking on top of their lungs. He would never hurt her of course, but it was fun running around when the weather was nice.

‘Jungkook! Kookie! Anu’ll get mad! You better come in now!’ Okanaat calls from the inner entrance, swathed in extra protective clothing. Jungkook is happy he doesn’t need to wear the extra protective clothing.

‘I know Oka- I’m just waiting for ama!’ Jungkook explains.

‘It’s gonna storm!’ she argues over the sound of thunder, ‘You know ama won’t risk travelling with a storm like this. She’ll get back after it’s over.’

‘There’s still some time,’ Jungkook argues back. ‘Don’t worry, I know when I have to come in.’

She grimaces comically at him and Jungkook pretends to throw the lump of clay-bit at her. She giggles and shrieks, running back inside. Lightning forks through the sky, followed immediately by thunder that shakes the black gritty dirt around him. The larger pebbles on the ground seem to jump up at the sheer force of it.

‘Kookie!’

The thunderstorm is getting louder, and Jungkook guesses that ma would probably wait the storm out. It was smarter of course. Living here, Jungkook knew the rules and safety precautions very well. Stay away from the storms, stay hidden, and always watch for anu and ama.
'Jungkook!'

Jungkook blinks, surprised to find the rain falling on him- it was supposed to hurt; it was supposed to burn his skin but it doesn’t. He sees her coming towards him, the soft hues of her hair damp, but glistening in a spectrum of light like his mum used to say. The elegant glass-like horns twinkling at him, gentle red eyes gleam at him through the curtain of rain.

‘JUNGKOOK!’

He gasps awake.

The safety straps that had held him to the footstools drops him and Jungkook wheezes, his chest felt strangely tight, his head pounding. His instinct is to hit his head against the floor, to startle himself awake. But both Jimin and Sk’jin have told him many times not to do it again. Instead to stay down, breathe deep and slowly, and allow his mind to clear. Still crouched on the ground, Jungkook allows himself to take some time, despite growing panic, and breathe deeply.

Safe, you’re safe Jimin’s voice whispers to him from the depths of his mind, reassuring him. You’re safe here, you are home, okay?

The buzzing in his mind recedes, the ringing in his ears quiets, and the tightness in his chest loosens a little. Finding strength in himself, Jungkook finally looks up from the smooth floors of the Bridge.

It’s lit dimly- almost the same way it did right before dawn near the cave entrances. Jungkook pushes himself off of the floor and carefully stands up, his ears straining to hear something; anything.

He doesn’t even get to take a step forward when the whole ship shudders. It wasn’t something within the ship. This felt like how it did when an earthquake used to hit. Something bigger, something more powerful and bigger was shifting. That’s what ama used to tell him. Something beyond the control of their abilities and or actions. Sometimes even beyond their understanding.

Something was shaking the ship. Something was shaking his home. Again.

When his eyes adjust to the light, Jungkook just about makes out the shapes of Sk’jin and Hoseok still secured in the cockpit. He’s about to rush over, but he hears something.

A deliberate something trying to be quiet, something inside his home.

Jungkook drops down immediately, rounding about and around the Navigation Table, crawling on all fours close to the ground as he makes his way to the sealed Bridge doorway. It’s still sealed shut, and Jungkook can hear- can sense movement behind it. And it wasn’t anyone he knew. This was not someone from his home.

He swiftly glides back to the Navigation Table, tapping on the surface Namjoon had explained to him only a few days ago.

‘Lisai,’ Jungkook whispers, ‘Bridge, doorway, surveillance.’

‘Bridge doorway surveillance on screen 7.’ Lisai’s voice chimes in pleasantly.

Jungkook flinches when a bright projection of the surveillance camera outside the Bridge doorway lights up next to him. He looks around quickly, making sure again that it was just him (awake) in the Bridge before looking back at the bright projection.
Standing outside the sealed doorway is an eerie standing form, dressed fully in black, a hand on the doorway.

It’s upsetting, and Jungkook doesn’t know why.

There was something wrong about the figure. Something familiarily wrong. Jungkook can almost smell the putrid air of his cell from Ynqaba.

‘Lisai- find Jimin.’ Jungkook orders quietly, glancing again at Sk’jin and Hoseok.

‘Jimin is located in the Second Level Lobby.’ Lisai replies, another projection lighting up.

Jungkook feels himself flushed with hot anger, watching as another black-figure attempts to extract Jimin out of what appeared to be Yoongi’s tight, but unconscious, grip. There’s another figure that’s in the process of lifting Namjoon off of the floor.

Jungkook is helpless. He doesn’t know what to do. He’s sure there are security measures of some sort in the ship. But he doesn’t know what they’re called, or how to use them, or what to say to use them. Namjoon and Hoseok had both taught him how to call for and ask Lisai questions but he didn’t have time to try. He couldn’t risk Sk’jin or Hoseok inside the Bridge, which was clearly strongly protected. There must have been a break-in somewhere, that these black-figures were able to come inside.

Taeh’yung.

Jungkook remembers the Zhak’gri’s arms holding him back, his lips against his temple before he fell into darkness.

‘Lisai- where is Taeh’yung?’

‘Taeh’yung cannot be located.’

Jungkook can’t make out what it was he was looking at outside of the massive windows- just a strange hazy light that pressed in on from every direction.

The whole ship shudders again.

Jungkook watches the surveillance again, as Jimin is fully extracted from Yoongi’s grip and made to lay back on the ground.

‘Lisai, how many…how many intruders?’ Jungkook asks carefully, remembering the words Sk’jin and Hoseok had used before.

‘Three non-crew Beings detected inside the ship.’ Lisai replies coolly. ‘3 more detected outside.’

He couldn’t let them leave. Not with Jimin, or Namjoon- even Yoongi. He couldn’t let them leave.

The black-figure outside the Bridge is still there. And this time they’re holding up a device of sorts. Jungkook doesn’t know what it does, but he can guess that it might be used to do some damage to the gateway protecting the Bridge.

‘Three- and three,’ Jungkook whispers under his breath. ‘Six.’

‘Surprise is your best weapon,’ Yoongi had taught him. ‘No amount of training can teach you to expect a surprise.’
‘How do you do it?’ Jungkook had asked, panting on the ground from being easily flung about by the Human. Jimin had watched nervously at first, but Yoongi wasn’t hurting him— he was showing him how to best use himself as defense. How to become a weapon.

‘If you don’t exist,’ Yoongi had said quietly, ‘Then no one can see you.’

The ship shudders again, the tremors stronger than before. There were things he couldn’t control— things bigger than himself that he had no chance against. Things he definitely didn’t understand.

‘You can’t defend yourself against something that doesn’t exist.’

But this.

This he could definitely try.

‡

‘This is where we started to understand.’

‘Understand what?’

‘That something was wrong.’

‘We?’

‘You did, before I did. Before you realized it. And I did, after I became you.’

‘This is the same place.’

He’s standing in a long dimly lit hallway. Doors lined the walls nearly endlessly on both ends. But the door he’s facing is open, the walls inside lined with shelved drawers reaching the ceiling from the floors. He knows where he is.

‘It is,’ he says as he steps inside. ‘It’s almost the same isn’t it?’

Yoongi nods.

‘You said there was a dream,’ Yoongi continues, ‘Should we try and remember?’

‘Yeah,’ he replies in agreement. ‘I don’t know how much I can remember. It’s too much already.’

‘I’ll help.’

‘Do you know what’s going on? With…well, with us?’

‘I think we both know what it is,’ Yoongi replies quietly. ‘But not just yet.’

Yoongi nods in agreement, ‘Not yet. Jimin has to go home.’

Yoongi smiles at that, ‘When Jimin goes home, what do we do?’

The door opens quietly, the handle turning without his hand.
‘We protect it, of course.’ Yoongi replies, waiting for the door to fully open, a faded line of white expanding over Yoongi, pushing the black ash that was once his uniform off of his skin, leaving him bare.

Yoongi takes a step out of the door, the wires on his back trailing behind him endlessly until they vanish into a massive circular pit. He looks around; he’s inside a massive globe, white and dully lit. The walls start moving, circling in their form until they pause at random before the walls start to faintly glow. Yoongi looks down at his feet and only then realizes he’s trailing something black and soot-like.

‘Is it our home too?’

Yoongi looks up, facing what felt like a multitude of his own reflection. But he knows it’s not a reflection.

_How many Yoongis do you see?_

‘We’ve been lost,’ Yoongi tells him. ‘Is this what it feels like?’

Yoongi looks around, finding an almost endless multitude of himself watching him, waiting for him.

They were waiting for him.

‘This?’

‘Is this what being _found_ feels like?’

The white walls flicker, distant images through the blurred clouds illuminate the kitchen in his house, his mother’s back to him as she laughs about something. Chaewon is shelling peas next to him as he dices up a massive bowl of potatoes. Their laughter colours into the sunrise as Amic stretches, groaning in protest of ever thinking that hiking through the hill parks of Šerdesas was a good idea. The lights dim and the sunrise rapidly shifts to an endless ruddy glow, and the eclipse watches him with worry.

‘Yoongi?’ Jimin holds up a hand towards him.

‘I-…’ Yoongi holds his hand up, realizing that an endless multitude of hands rise up in unison behind him.

‘Is this what being _found_ feels like?’

He’s on the ground, not inside the Užkulisai, but somewhere strangely contained. There is an echo in the air, exponentially increasing the soft pads of feet moving closer towards him. But it’s drowned out by the strange booming, making the ground he was on groan in an alarming way.

Yoongi opens his eyes only to come face-to-face with the blank gaze of what could only be a GI agent, TeorSer aimed straight at his head.

The blast of the TeorSer singes his hair and burns at his scalp as he rolls over, kicking his feet in a swinging motion to catch the agent on their shin. His heel makes contact and there’s a scuffling sound. Launching himself onto his knees, Yoongi flips forward, hooking the TeorSer between his arm and torso, the next shot passing through under his arm behind him. With his free arm he angles his elbow to jam straight into the opening of the helmet.
There’s a horrific wet cracking sound that comes when his elbow makes contact with the agent’s nose, their body jolting in pain and shock, momentarily losing momentum and strength. Yoongi ducks low and heaves the agent over his shoulder, falling backwards with their combined body weight crushing the agent’s neck.

But Yoongi is far from safe, when another agent appears, TeorSer aimed and-

There’s no where Yoongi can hide- no where he can duck- it was obvious that the agent had been watching for a while, waiting for this moment where Yoongi’s balance, his speed, and his momentum would be concluded from the initial fight.

But the shot never lands.

A blurred shape leaps from the ground, fans of glistening dust spreading out behind it like impossible gossamer wings. Amidst the white sheen of the blurred Being, a crimson mouth is open in an animalistic roar, bloodied claw-like hands extending forward like a predator who has planned and hunted their prey, waiting for the precise moment to attack.

Jungkook takes down the agent, a blurred frenzy of limbs, blood, fine dust, and ripping sounds shred the air, echoing the horror over and over. Yoongi is finally able to give a quick study to his immediate environment. The Užkulisai appeared very dead, surrounded by a large rubble of Grisial crystals, a very fine dust of said crystal still lingering in the air, making it difficult to see. Grisial was a mining facility for most part of the massive asteroid discs that surrounded the main planet. Had they crashed into one of the mining facilities? The massive tunnel they had apparently crashed into seemed pre-tunneled, with small light-sources embedded into some of the smoothened rock and crystal walls. Grisial crystals were such excellent conductors of light, that this small amount was all that was needed to cast decent illumination inside this massive tunnel.

By the time Yoongi manages to get to Jungkook, the agent is very dead, and Jungkook, at closer inspection, is very bloody.

Before Yoongi can even get a word out, Jungkook spits out a wad of something from his mouth and quickly says, ‘Jimin and Namjoon! There!’

He points down, away from the ship and upwards towards a tunnel of sorts, twisting away and upwards.

‘What about the others?’ Yoongi hastens to ask.

‘Sk’jin and Hoseok inside, not awake,’ Jungkook explains in quick short sentences. ‘Taeh’yung I don’t know.’

‘What-’ Yoongi’s first instinct is to head after Jimin and Namjoon, but the question remained what even was going on and what happened. Time was not on their side, and at this moment only Yoongi and Jungkook were awake and functional. Yoongi would have to think rationally and calmly.

‘Communication down,’ Jungkook tells him worriedly, the lower half of his face down to his chest soaked in blood. ‘Or not answering.’

If no one was awake to answer of course there would be no communication. How did they even get here in the first place?

‘I think- I think they’re here,’ Jungkook tells him, spitting something out again.
‘They-?’ Yoongi pauses, watching Jungkook. Dread weighs heavily in the pit of his stomach.

‘The…-I don’t know- something bad. Something, something bigger.’ Jungkook struggles to explain, ‘Something bad.’

Yoongi makes up his mind.

He’s not sure who would issue the GI agents to move against them. But he knew for a fact that the Omhlophe were a bigger threat at this moment. And if they were behind this, if they were responsible for where they were, they needed to get not only the ship with Jimin’s tech out of there, but also take Jungkook away.

The GI had also been clearly ordered to kill only him. Namjoon had been taken along with Jimin, and Yoongi guesses the others would have been in the list too if it hadn’t been for whatever Jungkook did to the GI agents who were headed to collect Hoseok and Sk’jin.

Even though it goes against what he wants to do, he grits his teeth and turns to head back inside the Užkulisa.

‘Yoongi-!’ Jungkook hastens to hurry after him. ‘Jimin-!’

‘We need to get out before they come,’ Yoongi grits out, rushing into the Hangar where another body, bloody and mangled lay under the Spardyti. ‘Lisai, close the Hangar gates! Run scans on damages, are we green for take-off?’

‘Yoongi!’

Jungkook grabs and shoves Yoongi against the wall, teeth bared, white stained red. His eyes are wide and nostrils flaring. Yoongi’s feet dangle feet above the ground, Jungkook’s stained hands too close to his neck. Hands that have clearly ripped through at least 2 throats in the past hour. Lisai is replying back, but Yoongi can’t exactly concentrate.

‘Jimin!’ Jungkook repeats, clearly frustrated and panicked, unable to really say anything.

Yoongi quickly releases himself from Jungkook’s brute strength of a hold against the wall and restrains the young Pravasi M’hanun.

‘We need to plan this carefully! The last time something like this happened I moved with no care or attention but with only Jimin in mind-‘ Yoongi says through his teeth, struggling against Jungkook, ‘-and as a result Sk’jin nearly died!’

Jungkook stills.

‘Jimin is strong-‘ Yoongi doesn’t know if he’s reassuring Jungkook or himself, ‘And Namjoon is there. They took him because they needed him. He won’t be harmed. But they- that bad thing you were talking about. They can hurt him. Can hurt us, can hurt you. And we need to get out now.’

Jungkook stops fighting, just panting hard.

‘Trust Jimin.’ Yoongi says quietly, ‘Trust Namjoon- they’re more than capable of taking care of themselves. We cannot leave Sk’jin and Hoseok here with the ship.’

After a long second or two, Jungkook nods. Yoongi lets go of him, still a little wary, but Jungkook doesn’t react.
‘We’re gonna get the ship out, and track Jimin and Namjoon,’ Yoongi tells him as he starts to make his way further into the ship, hating himself with every step he took away from where his entire soul was screaming at him to go.

‘How?’ Jungkook asks, following up behind him.

Namjoon was definitely not going to be amused.

‘Poison.’

* *

Namjoon finds himself gaining consciousness at the most inopportune time.

He’s inside a ship that isn’t the Užkulisai. In fact, this felt more like a Transporter. Jimin is next to him, although he’s been made to lie down. There’s something strangely gentle about his placement.

There’s a pillow under his head, a blanket of sorts covering his lower half, and his soft beanie folded next to his right hand. While what could only be a GI agent is finishing up and sealing the TissuePlast layered over the stab wound Jimin had on his side. Namjoon absentmindedly thinks it was a good thing that the injury had miraculously avoided all of Jimin’s internal organs.

There’s a dull sort of acceptance with what was happening. But that didn’t mean he didn’t have questions or was completely pliant to the events unfolding before him.

Namjoon finds that he’s not exactly restrained. He has the safety straps over his torso, but those were more precautionary as well as required for taking a flight in a Transporter anyways. There aren’t many windows, only the ones over at the cockpit, as well as a small square one on the door to the side. It’s white out, and Namjoon can’t pinpoint if they’re in space, or in some strange underwater facility. The lights coming through the windows are oddly rippled and keep changing in strength. They couldn’t be in warp; Transporters like these could go around space at normal ranges and speed, but they were not built for warp.

The side of his head felt heavy, and his jaw definitely sore from where the second Yoongi had kicked him (once) almost into unconsciousness. There was definitely no underestimating the strength of the GI. Which is why Namjoon does nothing, makes no movement, and tries his best not to even seem awake.

There are 4 GI agents. None of them speaking, but all moving as one. The one that was checking on Jimin stands and makes their way towards the back, going through a medical kit of sorts. The other three are at the cockpit, backs turned to Namjoon and silhouetted against the white light.

His Comm Device is still attached to his ear; an oversight or intentional, Namjoon can’t tell. He obviously can’t just call the Užkulisai without alerting the GI agents around him. Or they simply switched it off. Speaking of GI agents.

Yoongi isn’t here.

But Namjoon is 100% sure he was there with them up until the moment after Taeh’yung did something, and the whole ship was violently thrown. Namjoon doesn’t remember what happens after that, but the heaviness of his head suggested there should be some form of pain resulted from hitting his head hard.

He glances up again only to find the GI agent already looking at him. It’s the same one who was treating Jimin. They approach him with the kit and at this point there’s no point pretending to be unconscious. He sits back, hands balling into fists instinctively. He’s not sure what to expect, but it definitely isn’t a stretch of tissue plast and a packet of his medication.

The helmet and black uniform entirely covers the Being up, but exposes only a part of their face. Namjoon can just about make out strangely grey rough skin, stretched over wide features. Their eyes are blackish, with dirty yellow specks in the center for a pupil. They’re tall too. Helmeted head brushing the top of the Transporter. They reach past Namjoon’s head, still maintaining eye-contact, and extract a small tube of water. They then hand it over to Namjoon, along with the pills.

Namjoon wants to study the pills, but he’s reluctant to look away, apprehensive of what would happen if he looked away. But the Being is the first to break eye contact, simply placing the bottle and pills on the adjacent seat before opening the TissuePlast to use.

‘Who- who are you?’ Namjoon croaks out before clearing his throat.

Predictably there is no answer.

Instead the Being just goes about, placing TissuePlast over the visible cuts and scratches on his face. Then they hand him the pills and the tube of water again, and watch.

Without any words, Namjoon understands that this Being is not going to go away unless Namjoon takes the pills. The packet is still sealed, the pills don’t look tampered with: of course all of this means nothing because they could very well have been tampered with and simply repackaged in the exact same style. And while the agents all seemed to be rather passive, Namjoon knows what they’re capable of and doesn’t want to be physically handled to take the pills.

Either way, they were now here at this point, and Namjoon can see no foreseeable means of escape. So with his good arm, Namjoon takes the pills and tube of water.

He doesn’t feel anything out of the ordinary, which if the pills were really his actual medication, wouldn’t be alarming.

All of this suspicion and anxiety was not good for him.

The Being moves away, taking the tube and empty packet and disposing of it. It seemed odd to find GI agents doing such oddly normal tasks. It was like watching Yoongi during the first few weeks. Except more extreme. Because once the agent’s tasks were “completed”, they just sat on one of the seats. Absolutely still, almost robotic, as though awaiting orders.

‘Were- were you ordered to do this? Who issued your mission?’ Namjoon asks again, knowing that the whole prospect of getting information from them was useless. If they were worse than Yoongi, then they were not going to give them any information whatsoever.

Namjoon glances down at Jimin, still very unconscious, and hopes he would wake up. He thinks back to the others and entertains the possibility of them not being alive. But if that were the case, why was he alive? If they only wanted Jimin, why not kill him off too? Or was he needed for questioning? Or to be used against Jimin for questioning? Wouldn’t Yoongi be a better candidate for that? Not just because of the nature of his and Jimin’s relationship, but the fact that Yoongi is GI. Or maybe he would be too stubborn, too GI to give conclusive answers and explanations.
What had Yoongi said about the GI? They operated based solely on the missions handed to them, and for the completion of said mission. So was getting him and Jimin out purposeful?

And what happened with Taeh’yung? That bright light could have only been the Zhak’gri. What had he done? And where was he? Surely he couldn’t have been knocked out or injured. Namjoon’s seen what he can do.

The Transporter takes a sharp turn, causing Namjoon to sit back, steadying himself. The white light fades in intensity, and Namjoon can just about understand where they are.

Grisial had massive mining networks within mountain-like asteroids, mining deeper into the core of the crystals to extract the purest forms of the coveted crystal. Something must have happened and the Užkulisai must have crashed through one of the mines. This was going to be terrible for communications. Maybe that’s why they didn’t bother removing their Comm Devices.

Namjoon thinks back to what Jimin had said to him. About how Yoongi himself as a GI didn’t make sense. How it didn’t add up with the timeline of events, with the facts they had, and with the information they obtained from various sources. Were these GI agents here “like” Yoongi, or were they different too?

He also thinks about what Sk’jin had said about contacting the Long-Huon Zitao and his ship again.

They were clearly missing something here. And it was definitely something from the time after Yoongi and his team were sent to Megibīya, and before the GI urban myths started to really take off. But there was no way they could get this information because that was a timeframe of almost 8 centuries – if they were even right about the timing at all.

Namjoon is jolted from his thoughts when the whole Transporter is sent careening off, the view outside blurring into streaks as they spin violently. He hits his head again, and Namjoon is acutely aware that he’s definitely sustained some form of head trauma. The Transporter rights itself, the GI agents methodically reposition themselves, and the Being who had given Namjoon the water and medication positions themselves at the door before unlocking a hatch to each side of the door.

This was no ordinary Transporter, Namjoon surmises as the agent pulls out two mechanical joints that attach in the center to create some form of launcher. The agent, despite being of quite a hulking built, moved with a very strange lightness the exact way Yoongi did. They release the door and without so much as aiming or preparing themselves, they start to fire.

It’s uncannily reminiscent to Yoongi’s seemingly blind actions- but somehow even stricter in its chaos.

The energy source being used to fire what appeared to be electronic charges burns bright orange, glaring through the misty white air outside the Transporter. Namjoon’s not sure what they were firing at, but it’s clearly taken care of. All of the noise is also clearly enough to disturb Jimin, slowly waking him from his unconscious state.

Namjoon’s not sure what Jimin had done before, somehow occupying his body, a strange awareness and control over his entire body that didn’t seem or feel invasive.

It’s terrifying, when Namjoon thinks of it in hindsight, what Jimin had done. Namjoon couldn’t even struggle against Jimin’s sudden takeover because he couldn’t even feel him, or sense him.

A voice that sounds annoyingly like Sk’jin’s smugly whispers something along the lines of ‘I told you so, little prince is hiding who he is and what he can do’ in the back of his mind.

But Namjoon has bigger things to worry about, as per usual, like the danger he was in, as per usual.

The GI agent closes the door and pushes back the latches, locking them back into the wall just as Jimin’s eyes open. He looks more than disoriented, his eyes unable to focus, head lolling about, a strained groan sounding deep from his throat. And in this moment, Namjoon notices how Jimin’s Comm Device was still activated.

Jimin had a higher ranking than everyone aboard the ship, his authority code stronger, and of the highest priority. Maybe- just maybe, he could do something.

The agent pauses and then kneels before Jimin, a strange display of worry. Either that or Namjoon was just projecting the other GI agent he personally knows into this one.

‘Y-Yoongi-‘ Jimin groans out, ‘-I’m-‘ he chokes out a string of disconnected words as the agent simply watches from where they’re kneeling.

‘He’s in shock,’ Namjoon spits out, thinking fast.

The agent turns to look at him.

‘He’s in shock- can I- can I go to him? I can help,’ Namjoon asks.

There’s no reply from the agent. Namjoon hesitates, the sounds of Jimin hyperventilating getting louder. It wasn’t a terrible case or too worrying, but Namjoon could use this to his advantage.

‘You need to get him somewhere right? He’s going to suffocate like this,’ Namjoon tries again. He’s not restrained, but he doesn’t want to push whatever leniency they had given him by approaching Jimin. ‘You will fail your mission if I don’t help him.’

This seems to do the trick and the agent stands up, making space for Namjoon.

He quickly releases himself from the chair with his one working hand and kneels next to Jimin. He bows close, using his good arm to balance himself by placing his hand right next to Jimin’s head. He angles himself, blocking the agent’s view as Namjoon deftly taps at the hoop-like device.

‘Hey- Jimin,’ Namjoon isn’t of course just here for the Comm Device. The hyperventilation, though not entirely life-threatening, had to stop.

‘Jimin, it’s Namjoon- I’m here, you’re okay,’ Namjoon realizes he’s probably not the best at this. ‘Listen to me- my voice, listen to my voice, just try to breath with me okay?’

He’s not sure if Jimin can hear him but he’s gonna try.

‘Inhale,’ he says as gently as he can, ‘Exhale.’

Jimin is struggling, his eyes opening and closing at random, as though unable to hold onto consciousness. He repeats this a few times, now even more worried as Jimin doesn’t seem to be planning on calming down any time soon.

‘Jimin- hey listen-‘ Namjoon tries, rearranging himself and with a slightly hesitant hand brushing through Jimin’s short hair. ‘Hey listen to me- you’ll be all right, you just gotta wake up okay? Just open your eyes- look at me.’

Jimin’s eyes struggle to open to look at Namjoon.
‘Good,’ Namjoon holds the eye contact, ‘See? It’s me- it’s just me, we’re fine.’ Namjoon switches how he kneels, balancing himself only on his knees as he places his hand over Jimin’s chest. ‘Breathe with me okay? Just breathe with me.’

It gets better, though Jimin can’t seem to both open his eyes and breathe properly at the same time. His eyes are closed, hands formed into tight fists. Sweat beads on his forehead, faint vein appearing around his temple, the tendons on his neck are strained. It was almost as though he was in some form of terrible pain.

‘What hurts?’ Namjoon asks as he removes his hand from Jimin’s chest. ‘Are you hurt somewhere?’

Namjoon sees the faint gleam of the Comm Device. Someone was listening. Their communication signals were being received back by the Užkulisaí.

‘You’re safe, okay?’ Namjoon says, angling himself again to block the Comm Device from view. ‘You’re just in a Transporter, with some agents around, we’re safe. We have medical supply. See? They’ve bandaged you up already. You’re important aren’t you? Little prince right?’

That was as much as Namjoon dared to say without explicitly announcing where they were, who they were with, and if they were very injured. He just hopes it’s enough for others back on the ship to understand and create a plan to come get them.

‘Yoongi?’ Jimin asks faintly.

For a bewildered second, Namjoon wonders if Jimin was replying back to the Comm Device. He’s temporarily exasperated that the others would try to expose their channel by communicating back. But his worries are for nothing when he notices the light from the Comm Device completely give out, indicating a complete failure in the channels. Jimin’s eyes open slowly, still a little disoriented, looking around for the Human.

‘Yoongi’s fine,’ Namjoon lies. ‘He’s just not here right now. He’ll come and get us out. He’ll come back for you.’

This clearly seems to make the most sense to Jimin because he scrunches up his face a bit before opening his eyes properly. He’s still not 100% there, but he appeared more lucid than before. His breaths still came out harshly, but the pace was less brutal and more even.

‘He did,’ Jimin whispers, voice scratched and croaky.

Namjoon’s first instinct is to get him water, but seeing as they were not-

A small tube of water and a hand holding it moves past his head. For a moment, Namjoon had forgotten that the GI agent was behind him.

‘Oh uh, thanks-‘ Namjoon is saying as he takes the tube from the GI agent who moves away to stand over behind him, dirty yellow eyes watching him with absolute no regard whatsoever. He opens the tube and holds it up to Jimin to let the latter drink but Jimin isn’t looking at him.

Jimin’s eyes are wide, whatever colour he had on his face is completely gone, his mouth open mid-choked gasp.

‘Hey wait- uhh I think they’re okay-‘ Namjoon tries at once, hoping Jimin won’t go back to hyperventilating. But Jimin doesn’t even seem to notice him, and instead with a strange strength and desperation, Jimin actually sits up, eyes still not looking away from the agent who does nothing to acknowledge or react to Jimin.

‘Wh-what-’ Jimin croaks out, shaking hands undoing the safety bands over his lower body before shakily standing up. Namjoon immediately stands as well, arm stretched out to catch Jimin if he fell. But Jimin staggers the few steps between himself and the GI agent and crashes into the (very tall) Being. Before Namjoon can even react or think of a way to get Jimin out of this clearly dangerous situation that could be regarded as some form of attack, Jimin reaches up with shaking hands and shoves off the helmet from the agent.

Namjoon does not recognize the species the Being belongs to. The greyish dull textured skin, almost stone-like, he had seen previously wasn’t just limited to their face, but all over a bald head too.

‘Yyna?’ Jimin whispers, hands shaking as he gently touches the Being’s face.

The agent does nothing to stop Jimin, simply watching him.

‘Jimin?’ Namjoon tries, arm still reaching out to catch him just in case he fell.

‘Is- is that you?’ Jimin’s voice is starting to break, the last of his words barely above a whisper. ‘Yyna, Megibiya Wenedi, min hre thei em? Min la hria em?’ Jimin asks, his tongue shifting to his melodious native language. ‘Ii ni taktak em? Ka Yyna i ni taktak a mi?’

‘Jimin?’

There’s a sudden high-pitched whistling sound and Namjoon moves instinctively, grabbing Jimin and forcing them both to crash down onto the floor.

Everything roars- oppressive heat, immediately replaced by biting speeding winds, and the sound of metal screaming rends through the air. There’s a brief second when, to Namjoon’s horror, he feels himself being lifted into the air, as though the whole Transporter was falling, but something shoves both him and Jimin down again.

There’s another roar, heat licks at his face and Namjoon hears Jimin’s scream momentarily before they slide violently over the floor and crash into netting placed over the open-cargo space at the end of the Transporter.

They’ve clearly stopped moving. They must have been hit, and the pilot managed to get them somewhere. The weight trapping them on to the floor lifts and Namjoon pushes himself up, his damaged arm uselessly swinging and nearly making him slip. But Jimin helps him up.

The crash had clearly woken him up completely- no look of disorientation or confusion in his eyes. Now instead his eyes are wide, disbelief and sorrow- and a strange euphoria echo in his eyes.

The agent that had been pushing them down to the floor is standing and moving about already, unlocking the latches again before opening the doors to the Transporter again and firing.

The Transporter rocks as its hit with a barrage of fire. But it only last a scant few seconds before the agent clearly takes down whatever was firing at them. There’s movement from the front as the three agents at the cockpit move as though one, the units of the cockpit shifting and lifting, making way for a section of the nose of the Transporter to eject out into defense post.

Something had hit them before, and it had torn open a side of the Transporter hull near the cargo space to the back. Namjoon isn’t sure what to think of these GI agents, or of the Beings attacking them from outside. But clearly they were coming from one direction, away from the ripped metal behind them.

‘Jimin!’ Namjoon whispers tersely, nodding towards the opening.

Jimin looks at it, understanding immediate in his gaze. But he doesn’t move. He looks back instead at the GI agents.

‘Jimin!’ Namjoon says more urgently, ‘We can get out now-‘

‘They came back to me,’ Jimin says instead.

‘What-?’

‘They-…’ Namjoon can almost physically feel the absolute horror that washes across Jimin’s face as though it were his own.

‘They’ve come back. Because of me- it’s because of me.’ Jimin whispers. ‘I can see it now- I can see it-‘ Namjoon tries to pull Jimin back but the latter won’t budge. He turns to look at Namjoon, eyes glossed over with unshed tears.

‘It’s me.’

Something very powerful and very large detonates, physically moving the Transporter some meters. The agent at the doorway flies backwards, landing heavily on their back.

‘Yyna!’ Jimin gasps and to Namjoon’s absolute horror, darts forward to the fallen agent. One of the other agents at the front leaves their post at the front and begins to walk towards the doorway and abandoned firing post.

Jimin doesn’t even get to make it to the fallen agent, stopping short as he catches a glimpse of the gangly and tall GI agent. This one wasn’t even in the standard GI uniform of full black with helmet. Rather he was wearing the same faux uniform the Second Yoongi had been wearing- the same Grisial uniform.

‘Amic?’ Jimin stumbles forward, walking past the open doorway towards the tall Being.

‘Jimin-!’ Namjoon rushes forward to grab Jimin away, but the other GI agent, Amic, as Jimin had called him, is faster, pulling him away from the open doorway just in time.

But Jimin doesn’t even register his close-call, hands grabbing onto this Amic, clearly somewhat losing his mind as he keeps repeating that name. There’s a ring of familiarity to the name that Namjoon, at this current moment, cannot rightly place.

And now there was an open doorway for certain death (or injury) between Namjoon and Jimin. But clearly none of the danger they were in meant anything to Jimin who seems to be possessed with a strange energy. He suddenly lets go of Amic and rushes to the cockpit, skidding to a halt as he looks at the GI agents in a strange state of hysteria.

Amic, or whatever his name is, is undoing some other latches next to the already open ones at the doorway. And Namjoon isn’t sure if these Beings were here to help them, or if they were here to take them away back to the Special Jury because that seemed to be the only viable and reasonable explanation. If anyone had control over the GI now, it would be the Special Jury. And they couldn’t go back. Not with what they knew now, and the evident harmful intention they seemed to harbor upon the outcome of this mission. The risk was too high. But so was whatever was attacking them from outside. Either way Namjoon makes his decision to just plan along the way. He reaches for the latches to the wall, fingers digging into the small jutting tabs to extract and pull out other weaponized devices. Amic doesn’t stop him, doesn’t even look at him.

Whatever this Transporter was, it was custom built and designed to maximize on strength, artillery, function, and durability.

A ship that's the equivalent of a GI agent Sk’jin’s voice unhelpfully offers him in the back of his head.

It’s difficult doing things one-handed, especially when most of the weaponry required both arms.

Bold of them to assume every Being has two arms- Namjoon wonders if the amount of times he’s hit his head has lead him to hearing Sk’jin’s voice unwarranted.

In order to completely pull out the weaponized mechanical arm that connects to the already mounted launcher at the doorway, Namjoon needs to pull at the safety tag to release it. But being one arm short, finds himself in a predicament. But a slightly smoking black-uniform covered arm reaches past him and tugs at the tag. The arm releases, and Namjoon twists the arm and locks it down to its charged position before locking it into the main central frame.

The GI agent that Jimin had called Yyna steps past, still smoking a little from the effects of the explosion that threw them off, and heads straight for the doorway. Namjoon is not here for whatever suicidal attempt this is pulls the agent back.

There’s a tiny look of surprise on the Being’s face, but Namjoon doesn’t have time to explain.

‘Hey you! Amic or whatever, use that canon and aim for the ceiling! Create a veil!’ Namjoon orders.

Amic pauses for the slightest second before following Namjoon’s instructions.

‘And you- just stay put until we get sufficient cover and then you can go crazy on the launcher okay?’ Namjoon asks, putting up his functioning arm and hand to form a thumb’s up.

Yyna, the GI agent, looks down at his thumb’s up before mimicking it.

‘Oh Spaces you’re just like Yoongi,’ Namjoon breathes out as Amic fires a bright short burst of laser.

The air seems to erupt with light, but Namjoon can see without problem, momentarily worried with the way Amic looks away, eyes shut as Yyna’s helmet visor lowers. Jimin has ducked down, palms over his face to protect his eyes from the sudden explosion of light.

Yyna takes the position before the launcher and fires a fiery orange bolt of energy that makes the whole Transporter shudder. The sound that resonates the air is hollow and sonorous, followed by ominous creaking.

The light is still bright when Namjoon darts past Yyna towards Jimin, pulling him up to his feet.

‘Jimin we need to go come on-’ Namjoon says urgently close to Jimin’s ear.

Suddenly, the lights in the air shuts down- sucked away with a rapidity that makes Namjoon question whether or not the lights had even been there in the first place.

The initial faint light from outside the windows aren’t even there, and the Transporter is only lit with the faint blue emergency lights on the floor.

There’s one last detonation from something Amic has fired and the silence that follows is almost louder.

‘It’s them-‘ Jimin whispers softly, ‘Namjoon it’s them-‘

The Omhlophe? But how did they find them so quickly? How did they catch up-?

‘It’s me,’ Jimin whispers again. ‘They came back to me.’

‘What do you mean?’ Namjoon asks, turning around to properly address Jimin.

‘Remember- remember I said,’ Jimin swallows. ‘-I said that Yoongi was not supposed to be here.’

Namjoon nods, ears straining for any sounds from outside the Transporter.

‘It’s- it’s because I was not supposed to be here,’ Jimin tells him tenuously, ‘I am the Fate of Menigišiti, that’s how they did it, that’s why the Red Evil came to Megibîya- they wanted me. They’re all tied to me.’

Things were falling into place, but Namjoon is a little overwhelmed to piece them together. All he knew right now was that they needed to get out of here.

‘Hey- Amic, Yyna?’ Namjoon looks back behind him, ‘I don’t know what’s going on- but those guys outside cannot, under any circumstance, get to Jimin. So we need to get the fuck out right now, otherwise your mission will fail, got that?’

Yyna and Amic simply look at him.

‘Namjoon-!’ Jimin tries to intervene.

‘Jimin, I don’t know what you’re trying to say- and honestly we don’t have the time to go over it either,’ Namjoon huffs out, reaching for the latches on the wall to check for more weapons they could use. ‘But we need to get out, we need to get you out.’

‘I’m-‘

‘Jimin- think of what we’re supposed to do,’ Namjoon says firmly, bending down a little to be eye-to-eye with Jimin. ‘We have to go to back to your System. We need to fix this. We need to solve this. Right? For that guy, for JD’s sake, for your people’s sake- for Yoongi.’ Namjoon takes a step back, ‘For Jungkook.’

Jimin looks down, the faint blue lights from the floor creating silver lights across the short scruff of his hair.

‘Remember what you said? That you would be responsible for Jungkook?’

Jimin nods faintly.

‘We will figure out what all of this means, once we get the hell out of here.’ Namjoon restates, ‘I don’t know if you can say something, or do something, to get these guys to at least help or something- but please, we need to get out. We need to rejoin the others.’
Jimin nods, still looking down.

Namjoon sighs out before gently patting Jimin’s head.

‘I know this is a lot. But we need to first get out.’

Jimin nods once more, a bit more determined than before.

‘Okay- can I get a report on the numbers outside?’

‘9 unidentified Beings outside,’ one of the agents tells him monotonously from the cockpit.

‘Uh- right, what’s the condition of the Transporter?’ Namjoon asks again, sort of surprised to get a response.

‘Inoperable for flight. Engines for land-gear are still functional.’ Another agent from the cockpit reports, her voice as equally monotonous.

‘What exits are available?’

‘Three. Two past the unidentified Beings, and one going back.’

‘Then we go back,’ Namjoon orders. ‘Does this Transporter have faceted-shields?’

‘Yes.’

‘Concentrate shields to the front, and to the back. We reverse backwards,’ Namjoon orders as he guides himself and Jimin towards the cockpit. ‘We make it back to the Užkulisai which will at least be more fortified than this Transporter.’

No one moves.

Letting out a frustrated groan, Namjoon looks to Jimin who appeared to be somewhat dazed, his actions just a little slow.

‘Jimin?’ Namjoon nods towards the two Beings at the front of the cockpit.

Outside the windows, the mist is clearing in the dim light, and Namjoon can clearly see the white outlines of the Omhlophe waiting for them.

It’s unnerving, they don’t seem to be making a move. Just waiting for them to do something. It’s unsettling, and Namjoon can’t dwell on thoughts about making mistakes. They had to do something, and this was the best thing they could do under these circumstances.

He just hopes the Užkulisai is functional with functioning crew members.

Jimin looks up from his hands, and as though processing what Namjoon had just said nods and with a hesitant look speaks.

‘Nineti, could you take us back?’ Jimin looks at the agent at the central steering station.

The agent doesn’t move for a moment, before they start transferring the shield-facets to the front and then the back. Namjoon breathes out in relief.

‘I didn’t want to see,’ Jimin says quietly without preamble over the sound of the Transporter starting.
'See what?' Namjoon asks as he fiddles with his Comm Device

'That this is my fault,' Jimin replies, and he doesn't wait for Namjoon before he continues on, 'Nineti is one of my Guards. I lost him in Megibiya- he never returned from the rain. And that is Amad'la, Yoongi’s captain. The tall one is Amic, Yoongi’s best friend. And the other is the Megibiya Wenedi Yyna.'

Namjoon doesn’t know what to say.

Jimin gives him a hollow ghost of a smile as they start to move.

'They’ve all come back to me.'

---

Chapter End Notes

(Author’s Notes)

GUESS WHO IS BAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAACK
Me
Congratulate me
I have ended my BFA in CGI. It is done. I am Educated™ and highly (lol) employable
These future studios won’t know what hit them
I am very sorry for the hiatus and not being able to write in so long T_T not writing was honestly depressing I can’t even begin to explain
But I didn’t forget ADEGU at all, in fact I was slowly adding to it on my commutes back from university and planning and carefully righting the wrongs to make it right (ehe) and I think we can go back to, not exactly weekly, but like, 10-12 days updates again. I’ve had a million writing ideas as well and the taekook au I had written since 2017 HAHAHAAHAHAHA KILL ME will hopefully be released this coming August.
It’s funny that now I’ve started writing, bts has gone into break.
WHICH IS GOOD.
GOD
I LOVE BREAKS
I LOVE HOLIDAYS
LET THEM REST
Let me rest too because idk have you guys felt that thing where you’re so used to the anxiety and stress of university that once you’re done you don’t know how to do anything.
This might be tmi but if I didn’t go to university I would be constipated im not kidding
I had insomnia, anxiety nightmares, night-terrors, strange cravings and then feeling like throwing up at the sight of food. But it’s been a bit like a month where I’ve started sort of getting used to it and I feel, mentally and emotionally, like a new person
Makes me realize how shit university is as an experience for anyone mentally
BUT AYO I’M BACK I MISSED WRITING THIS AND IM SORRY TO ANYONE WHO WAS WAITING I AM BACK
Also ive changed the tags a bit because I’ve been seeing a lot of people post about being more clear with tags and I don’t wanna cause anything negative to people reading my fic
BUT ANYWAYS PLEASE ENJOY
also here's the link to the binary code translator if you want http://www.webestools.com/text-to-binary-converter-txt2bin-bin2txt-online-encoder-ascii-secret-code-binary-encoder-text.html
Waking up to Jungkook’s blood smeared face is not something Sk’jin wants to experience again. He has a nagging feeling that it might become a frequent reoccurrence though. His hearing is delayed, strange echoes forming as Jungkook says something. But his words are warped, underwater almost. But then Yoongi appears behind him, disheveled and stressed and shoves a small device under his nose.

A powerfully acrid and sharp odour hits Sk’jin and he jolts awake.

‘-what the fuck-’ Sk’jin hisses just as Hoseok too jolts awake, arms up over his face in a defensive stance at once.

‘How long have I been out?’ Hoseok demands at once, unbuckling himself and tapping across the dashboard of the cockpit. Sk’jin envies his immediate awareness and ability to pretty much get his shit together.

‘Jin?’ Jungkook is still hovering over him, eyes fearfully wide.

‘I’m okay- I’m okay whose blood is that?’ Sk’jin asks, not really wanting an answer. Why did Jungkook look like he singlehandedly depleted blood-bank?

‘Strange Beings,’ Jungkook whispers, helping Sk’jin to sit up as Yoongi and Hoseok move about, almost as though sharing the same mind without having to say anything. Must be an agent thing. ‘They took Jimin. And Namjoon.’

‘What-?’ Sk’jin balks, the Omhlophe ship flashing in his mind. ‘What the fuck-‘

Wait- Yoongi had been with Jimin and Namjoon. What was he doing here?

‘Hey-‘

‘No time to explain- we need to get out,’ Yoongi says tersely as he briefly stands at the cockpit, the projectors activating with displays of their engine stats.

‘Lisai map an exit out asap,’ Hoseok calls, pushing past Yoongi to take up his seat. ‘We need to get going before the Omhlophe get to us.’

‘So it was them?’ Yoongi asks, pushing Sk’jin up and away from the cockpit (not unkindly) and taking Sk’jin’s seat instead. Jungkook helps Sk’jin, hands hovering around him as though ready to catch him.
‘Kookie, what happened?’ Sk’jin asks as he takes the youngling to the side, sitting at his usual station by the Communications Board. He notices blood splatters arching over the side of the Bridge doorway.

‘Woke up,’ Jungkook explains, crouching down, head close to Sk’jin’s knee. His eyes dart around on the floor nervously- he was feeling guilty. ‘You and Ho-Hoseok were not awake. Black uniforms came for Jimin. They came for Namjoon. They tried to come in here. But um, big door blocked them.’

Sk’jin encourages the youngling to speak, brushing his fingers through clumpy and blood-clogged hair strands. His fingers smear, rusty and sticky.

There’s a hollow and distant boom- almost like thunder. Sk’jin looks out of the windows, but only the continuous white dust and white expanse of the Grisial asteroid they were in stretches on.

‘But they used something bright- like fire, to come inside- I- I stopped them. Not all. Couldn’t stop all. Too many, too fast; but they were trying to leave.’ Jungkook explains, leaning against Sk’jin’s knee. ‘They took Jimin, and Namjoon outside. Into vehicle- one took Yoongi, tried to kill him.’

They took Jimin and Namjoon, but not Yoongi? They tried to kill Yoongi?

‘Yoongi woke up- he stopped one. And- and I want to go after Jimin. And Namjoon,’ he whispers quietly, glancing towards the cockpit. ‘But- but Yoongi said no.’

Sk’jin’s eyebrows go up.

‘He said. We need to get out first. Jimin is strong.’

Was Jungkook complaining about Yoongi to Sk’jin? Was this what it felt like to be a parent with two kids who constantly bickered?

‘You did very well,’ Sk’jin tells him gently, ‘You protected me and Hobi. Thank you.’

Jungkook ducks his head, shoulders curling.

‘Sk’jin!’ Hoseok calls, ‘Can you head to the core? The charges have misaligned.’

‘Got it!’ Sk’jin replies, gently patting Jungkook to move to the side. He grabs a screen that had a minor crack and skidding on some drying blood, exits the Bridge.

It’s a blood bath.

Blood is smeared across the walls and steps leading downward. There were bodies here, and someone had clearly dragged them out. Probably Jungkook, considering the amount of blood on him. There was even blood on the ceiling. The stench is the worst in the Lobby, where literal pools with actual chunks of what Sk’jin can only hope is fabric are spewed across the floor. Sk’jin ignores this and heads lower down. The bloody graffiti is less here, but in all honesty, any amount was troubling either way.

He’s distracted from the carnage when he hears- he feels a distinct tremor vibrate through the air again. Well, that couldn’t be good.

The engines room is massive with minimal space to walk around in- a change from the usual style of manual-based engine-rooms where there was more space to walk around in. Sk’jin darts about, grateful for the fact that it didn’t feel warmer in here. That was always a terrible sign.
Some paneling had fallen out, hinges wide open, locks knocked out of their magnetic systems. An entire ventilation system had popped out; but Sk’jin doesn’t have the time to look over that one in specific.

‘Which section?’ Sk’jin asks.

‘-T-UZ-05006’ Hoseok replies almost immediately, his voice crackling a little. Damn Grisial and the way it fucked up communication channels.

The labels are clear and easy to read. Almost instantly, Sk’jin finds the correct charges. The main anodes had popped out of their sockets, wires dangling out, small sparks forming. Sk’jin frowns as the sparks pop on his skin but he’s quick to reattach the anodes back.

It would take a while, Sk’jin knows, for the realignment to recalibrate. So he props up the screen on one of the lips of the panels.

‘Lisai, pull up surveillance rolls,’ Sk’jin orders.

The screen instantly floods with rectangles of footage from all over ship. Sk’jin quickly rewinds the footage from the Bridge.

It’s definitely the GI. The black uniform was really telling. So there were more Yoongi GI agents. This was disturbing in more than one way. He watches as Jungkook activates and opens the emergency doors over the Bridge, catching the agent outside the door by surprise as he leaps onto him. Of course the blood was intense; Jungkook catches the agent by the neck, clawed hands pushing the helmeted head of the agent backwards, exposing the neck. They fight- more like grapple. Jungkook takes a few punches and jabs- but his strength is no joke, as he catches a fist and twists it in a way that clearly pops the whole hand out of the socket.

Just how much had Yoongi taught him? This wasn’t just raw instinctual fighting- there were calculated moves involved as Jungkook centers his weight on the chest of the next agent he launches himself at.

He’s also incredibly quiet. Sk’jin can barely hear any sounds other than that of bodies falling. The GI agents were quiet as they fought- no sounds of pain or exertion.

And Jungkook.

Jungkook was inherently a predator.

A predator cornered in his home.

Sk’jin has to fast-forward through the blood bath. Pausing only to watch as the GI agents take Jimin, Yoongi, and Namjoon outside of the ship. However one of them branches off the main unit headed for a parked Transporter, similar to the ones that had been firing at them earlier. That agent takes Yoongi to the side, placing his unconscious body down.

The others leave, clearly escaping Jungkook’s incoming carnage. One final one is installing a device inside the Hangar panels- Sk’jin pauses the footage, zooming in to check on it. Sk’jin tries a variety of angles, but he can’t make out what it is. Then the agent closes the panel and exits.

‘We’re gonna start the ship soon- Sk’jin maybe move out of the engines-room?’ Hoseok suggests.

‘Yeah okay-‘ Sk’jin frowns as he takes the screen and begins moving out. Not that the engine-room was a dangerous place to start off with.
He watches as Yoongi defeats the agent attempting to essentially assassinate him, but is caught exposed when the remaining agent raises their TeorSer at the Human.

Sk’jin hadn’t even noticed Jungkook who had crawled out from one of the other exits to the side, shifting under the thick Grisial crystal dust.

‘Something’s wrong-’ Hoseok is saying. ‘The engines won’t start-’

‘Is something else misaligned?’ Sk’jin asks, exiting the footage where (to Sk’jin’s immense satisfaction, Jungkook has Yoongi in a painful lock against the wall) back to the one in the Hangar.

‘I can’t tell what it is- there’s something blocking the charges-’

Sk’jin hurries back out into the Lobby and straight to the Hangar.

‘I’m gonna try and override the block- Lisai could you-’

The air crackles and sparks, Sk’jin’s hair stands on end and a bright light cracks through the Hangar doors- forks of powerful burst of electricity singes through the air.

Sk’jin immediately drops down, the screen cracks and sparks in his hand. There’s a burning sensation on his earlobe and he hastily swipes at it. The Comm Device cracks in the middle, tiny sparks erupting all around it.

Those fuckers. They planted some form of electrical-charge in the ship that would react to the engine-activation. The Užkulisai was now definitely out of order.

The lightning show abruptly ends, only a few sparks here and there. Even the emergency lights aren’t working.

‘For fuck’s sake-’

‘Jin-?’ Jungkook’s soft whisper cuts through.

‘Yeah- I’m here Kookie- are you okay?’ Sk’jin asks, sitting up and leaning back on his haunches.

He feels a hand carefully touch at his shoulders. If Sk’jin wasn’t mistaken, the Pravasi M’hanun could see very well in the dark.

Looking up, it’s only just a little disturbing to see a pair of glowing orbs.

‘Hey, let’s go to the Medical Bay?’ Sk’jin says as he stands up, grateful for Jungkook’s hand on his shoulder. It was helpful in this stifling darkness. ‘We can activate the lights in there- the Medical Bay should still be functional.’

‘Okay,’ Jungkook replies quietly.

In this quiet and dark, the thunderous and (was it Sk’jin or was that sound getting closer?) booming sounds are clearer.

‘What is that?’ Jungkook asks as they make their way across the Lobby. Sk’jin is distinctly aware of stepping on something soft and wet and he internally grimaces.

‘I don’t know Kookie- has it been going on?’ he asks. His eyes were adjusting and he’s able to make out vague outlines. This used to be a piece of cake for him before. Not that he flat-out had night-vision, but he could still sense and make his way around. Even if it meant that the red light of the Bloodmoon was illuminating everything.

Sk’jin does not like this sudden disorienting darkness.

‘Yeah…’ Jungkook trails off, ‘Like the shaking of the ground.’

‘Planetary tremors? Yeah- but we’re in an asteroid,’ Sk’jin says quietly under his breath.

The Omhlophe ship had pushed them off, using their mass to basically crush and grind them through clusters of massive asteroid.

He had tried his best to steer them out- Hoseok had tried his best.

And Taeh’yung-

\textit{Taeh’yung’s hands come together in a clap, bright light erupting and the force of the Omhlophe ship lifts off. In horror, Sk’jin can only stare as Taeh’yung floats up in the air- the air pulsing in vibrant green.}

\textit{A loud sonorous echo forms out of the Zhak’gri’s mouth as he speaks.}

\textit{The Omhlophe’s ship charges at them again, pushing and pushing and with movements that were too slow, too graceful, Taeh’yung gently floats towards the windows. Sk’jin can’t see his face; can’t hear what was happening over the blaring alarms of the ship losing its shit as it crashes through massive chunks of asteroids and crystals.}

\textit{And in a sudden forceful tug, as though all the air in the Bridge was being sucked out: Taeh’yung steps through the window. Ripples of green light emerge from him, forms unlike Taeh’yung’s outline shape and solidify.}

\textit{There’s laughter in the air- ancient, cruel, and just.}

\textit{The Omhlophe ship suddenly pulls away and Taeh’yung rockets after it, an explosion of green light echoes from him- and all the crystals and asteroid gleam in horrific neon green before Sk’jin succumbs to the pressure and force of their fall.}

Sk’jin finds the Medical Bay’s independent power source, lighting up the room just in time to shed light on Yoongi who was standing by the doorway. Sk’jin has stopped jumping at the sight of Yoongi appearing out of nowhere, but Jungkook’s reaction is to hiss.

Yoongi doesn’t even spare Jungkook a glance and instead passes Sk’jin and starts opening the Bay’s mainframe.

‘We can channel the anti-matter back-up into the engines enough to get us out,’ Yoongi explains. ‘It will buy us time before we can start the ship back up but we have to move-’

The thunderous boom is definitely closer this time. And Sk’jin’s gut tells him it’s headed for them.

They all stare at each other.

‘Well then hurry up,’ Sk’jin orders. Yoongi goes back to the mainframe and after a few tense seconds, the emergency lights come back on and so does Sk’jin’s screen.

There’s another thunderous sound. But they all ignore it as Yoongi continues to fiddle with the mainframe.
There’s the sound of footsteps and they all turn as Hoseok rushes towards them from the darkness outside the Lobby.

‘We need to go now~’ he declares, NaviLet in hand (of course Namjoon did something to his personal NaviLet that piece of shit) that was still somewhat functional. ‘Grab Jimin’s stuff – we’re taking the Spardyti and heading out. We can’t stay here~’

‘We can’t leave the ship,’ Sk’jin counters immediately; watching in confusion as Yoongi pauses a moment before nodding and heading out, ‘What the fuck do we do on the Spardyti? We’re defenseless and incapable of going anywhere without the Užkulisai!’

‘It’s going to take too long to fix her- and there’s no guarantee we can do anything about fixing it- not without Namjoon,’ Hoseok takes Jungkook by his arm, pulling him out into the Lobby.

‘Hoseok- how do we even get out of Grisial?’ Sk’jin demands, following him out towards the Hangars.

‘We just need to get out of here first,’ Hoseok replies, taking them towards the parked Spardyti. ‘It won’t take long starting her up.’ he pauses to give Sk’jin the NaviLet. ‘Delete all of the systems. Namjoon’s built in a purge.’

‘Wait-‘ Sk’jin splutters, taking the nearly useless NaviLet before it dropped to the floor. Yoongi reappears with a bag and he steps towards the panels where Sk’jin knows they’ve stored most of their hand-held weaponry.

Hoseok is already inside the Spardyti, while Jungkook crouches at the doorway, unsure as to what to do.

The thunderous sound is now just above them and the sound of what Sk’jin can only assume are crystal chips rain down on them.

‘Sk’jin, Jungkook, get in please,’ Hoseok says tersely, ‘And Sk’jin- if you could-‘

Sk’jin hesitantly looks down at the NaviLet.

This felt wrong. But Hoseok is right- he’s always made strikingly good points and his ideas have nearly always worked out for the best.

As Lisai wasn’t operational, and also intentionally not included in the purge-control Namjoon had designed, Sk’jin manually types in his commands into the NaviLet.

It’s then when he notices that there was a message waiting at the channel-line. Before setting the purge, Sk’jin downloads the call and activates the purge.

There’s another crackling sound, but it’s brief, and all the lights dim slowly just as the Spardyti headlights flood the Hangar.

‘We’re set- everyone in now!’ Hoseok orders as the engines hum, the vibrations of the Spardyti rumbling under Sk’jin’s feet. Yoongi moves away from the panel, bag stocked up with every possible device he could carry on him. Sk’jin steps inside, feeling a strange sensation as though he had forgotten something important.

Yoongi throws the bag in behind Sk’jin and goes to manually open the Hangar gates.

‘Safety straps on?’ Hoseok asks as they back out slowly, the sound of the Hangar opening behind them. Sk’jin checks over Jungkook behind him and secures himself.

‘Okay we’re going to have to follow out-‘

Thunder and chaos falls down all around them in an explosion of dust, sound, and light.

The whole ship is jerked violently, tipping over.

‘YOONGI!’ Hoseok yells over the din. Sk’jin can’t see past the dust and light.

The ship stops rolling, and before Sk’jin can tell if he was upside down or upright up, Hoseok is already driving them out in a burst of dust.

‘Yoongi-!’ Sk’jin gasps out, ‘What about Yoongi-‘

The walls of the asteroid they were deeply embedded in fold and crack as a large strange ship pierces through the thick crystal walls. Below the triangular face of the front of the ship are gigantic discs.

‘If that thing hits us-‘ Sk’jin pants out.

The large ship, the same white as the Omhlophe ship is oddly flexible- strange joints along its main body curving in a way no ship that size should be curving. It’s bigger than the Užkulisai. It easily dwarfs their ship. The dust masks the rest of the gigantic slithering ship, most of it still inside the walls of the crystal asteroid.

Something from the underbelly of the ship unhinges and Transporters the size of the Spardyti spill out. Understandably, Hoseok picks up speed, turning them away from the overwhelming curving Omhlophe ship.

Sk’jin doesn’t know what Hoseok was planning. If they were not careful, they could very well drive out of the asteroid straight into the unforgiving vacuum of space. And yes, while some of the biggest asteroid around Grisial could be considered moons in most Systems, Sk’jin is pretty sure they shouldn’t be careless in their navigation even though they want to escape.

‘Yoongi-!’ Jungkook yells, pointing out of the still open doorway.

Sk’jin looks around just in time to see the outline of the Human sprinting in another direction through the dust.

‘Did he not see us-?’ Sk’jin gapes but his question is answered as one of the Omhlophe Transporters drives straight in Yoongi’s direction.

Sk’jin’s skin is crawling.

They were all separated now.

Hoseok is cursing, ‘Sk’jin- Lisai had mapped out the asteroid- it’s in the NaviLet- get us to the nearest Deck.’

‘Why would we go to any of the Decks?’ Sk’jin demands over the sound of the Spardyti speeding through dusty caverns of crystal. ‘It’s manned by living Beings-‘!

‘Just get us to a Deck!’ Hoseok yells, pulling up more speed as he makes a sharp turn upwards into a smaller tunnel.
Sk’jin grits his teeth, tapping along the NaviLet before pulling up Lisai’s inventory of information. The downloaded message is still there but Sk’jin doesn’t have the time to look through it.

The map is complicated and extensive and multilayered.

Sk’jin hurriedly keys their tracker into the map and its immediately followed by a small blinking orange dot deep in the 3D map.

‘How far?’

‘We’re really deep inside,’ Sk’jin grits out as he scans for the closest Deck. ‘I think we crashed through the side- we’ll need to make our way downwards.’ He pauses a moment as he studies the map, making an outline with this finger through the maze. ‘Take the second left tunnel after this turn.’

‘They’re not attacking,’ Jungkook says quietly from behind him.

Sk’jin looks around and yeah- the Omhlophe are following them but they’re not making any moves to fire at them.

Obviously the Omhlophe ship is outside, just waiting for them to flush out and then pick them up. It also dawns on Sk’jin that they’re not trying to kill them. Not quite. Jimin wasn’t with them- Sk’jin’s not sure if the Omhlophe can tell or not. But they’re not taking any initiative to fire at them.

‘Here?’ Hoseok asks.

Sk’jin double checks the map.

‘Here!’

Hoseok turns sharply, taking up down in an extraordinarily steep tunnel that expands out into a massive cavern.

It’s honestly terrifying.

‘Hoseok I fucking swear I hope you know what you’re doing,’ Sk’jin hisses as they reach flat ground when he has a sudden idea.

The cavern is clearly used for storage. There are mechanical parts all over, from massive engine turbines to drilling heads the size of the Užkulisai. Great things to create as obstacles.

‘They’re gonna try and move around us-‘ Hoseok is saying but Sk’jin is already grabbing the bag Yoongi had thrown in, chalk full of weapons.

‘Take the central tunnel!’ he yells as he shifts through the many items.

And Sk’jin finds more than an armful of detonators and explosives. It’s disconcerting to see the amount of small but powerful weapons they really had in store. And also very reassuring. Sk’jin unlocks himself, first pausing to signal Jungkook not to move as he makes his way to the back.

Pocketing the explosives and picking up a simple launcher, Sk’jin pulls down at the rungs from the roof. Climbing up he pushes at the small hatch, unlocking and opening it up.

The wing whips past his head, dust trailing behind them. His eyes are not happy with the speed, the dust, and the wind. But Sk’jin simply attaches the launcher over to the lip of the hatch, ducking just in case the Omhlophe fire at him.

He attaches an explosive, twists the face of the launcher to the side and fires.

The dust inside the cavern ripples. Gravity wasn’t very strong in here, causing the very light dust particles to swim rather than simply fall to the ground.

The massive propeller Sk’jin had been aiming at flies through the air, one of the wings crashing right into one of the Transporters.

‘WOOO!’

Sk’jin jumps, not having felt Jungkook creep up behind him.

‘Jungkook get down-!’ Sk’jin hisses but Jungkook is working behind him, arms noodling through to add an explosive he picks out from Sk’jin’s pocket.

‘Oh Spaces-‘ Sk’jin grimaces as Jungkook fires, giggling next to his ear as the dust ripples again, massive arches of fire and smoke and shrapnel rain through the air behind them. Another Transporter is taken down.

‘You know what- fine, you take care of this. Don’t be too excessive-‘ Sk’jin orders as he climbs down, making space for Jungkook to take up the spot.

‘Middle tunnel?’ Hoseok asks, briefly turning his head around as Jungkook lets out another whoop of delight followed by a loud explosion.

‘Yes,’ Sk’jin deadpans, strapping himself in and grabbing the NaviLet.

‘We need to regroup,’ Hoseok is saying as the Spardyti speeds through a narrow gap and then shouting, ‘Jungkook! Left!’

‘JUNGKOOK LEFT!’ Sk’jin screeches.

‘LEFT!’ Jungkook yells back followed immediately by the sound of the launcher and 2 seconds later something exploding.

‘Thanks!’ Hoseok yells.

‘THANKS!’ Sk’jin screams.

‘WOOO!’ Jungkook hollers back.

‘Grisial won’t allow tracking- not through electronics at the very least-‘ Hoseok is saying as he climbs up towards the gigantic openings over at the top of a mound. A beautiful vein of pure crystal almost like water branches through overhead, shedding light down at them.

‘We don’t have a Jimin-antenna in the form of Yoongi so we can’t find Namjoon or Jimin,’ Sk’jin loudly grumbles back as they make it out of the mound. There’s a final explosive sound that followed by massive cracking sounds.

Sk’jin looks around through the tiny opening towards the back. Jungkook had fired at the top of the tunnel they had just burst into, causing the opening to collapse.

Jungkook himself reappears, closing the hatch as an afterthought, his hair standing on end and covered in white-dust. He looks overly pleased, a bright twinkle in his eyes.
‘Good job kiddo,’ Hoseok nods from the front. ‘We’ll have some time to buy now.’

‘There’s no way of getting to the others,’ Sk’jin frowns, ‘Not unless we are all outside of Grisial’s perimeter and with some powerful scanners. That’s only if Jimin and Namjoon still have their Comm Devices even on.’

‘And Yoongi.’

‘And yes, Yoongi,’ Sk’jin repeats, rolling his eyes.

‘Yoongi said we can track,’ Jungkook says suddenly, still looking very thrilled and pleased.

‘What? Not all of us have his Jimin-radar-’ Sk’jin begins but Hoseok groans from the front.

‘Oh for fuck’s sake did he poison us again!!?’

*

It’s incomprehensibly unsettling to have the Omhlophe following them like this. No one says a word. Jimin seems to be lost in his own thoughts.

‘They’ve all come back to me.’ He had said.

Namjoon frowns at his words. He wants to press Jimin for an explanation. But he’s not sure how much of what Jimin had to say should be overheard by the GI agents.

‘Do you think you can ask them who sent them?’ Namjoon asks instead. They seemed to respond the best to Jimin, listening to his words, moving to protect him. The GI were entrusted to Lal Haenoon of all Beings- was he responsible for this? Was he somehow able to wake the GI from their vegetative states?

Jimin looks up from where he sat, blinking once, twice, before reacting.

‘There is no one who sent them.’ Jimin says quietly. ‘They came because they found me. They heard me.’

They found Jimin? Namjoon mulls over the words, carefully thinking out his question as he keeps an eye on the Omhlophe behind them.

‘Why do they want to find you?’

Jimin looks at the GI agents one by one before exhaling slowly.

‘Menigišiti is not an ordinary System,’ Jimin tells him, ‘We are…old, very old. We are considered one of the First Children.’

‘First Children?’ Namjoon frowns. He’s never heard that phrase or term before.
‘The First Children, born in the new darkness of space. Born and delivered from the gap between - …of Continuum- Life and Death,’ Jimin says slowly. ‘Taeh’yung is one of the First Children.’

Namjoon is definitely uncomfortable hearing that. Taeh’yung’s civilization predated history itself. The Zhak’gri predated the concepts of Yishengs- this was a remote and deep dark space, past the realms and understanding of the Known Universe. Is this what Jimin was referring to?

‘The First Children scattered, some were lost- Time expanded with their life, and continued in their death. It continued on; each star burst into life in their power and light. Rebirth – in a cycle of continuation until…until they spread out, diminished.’ Jimin looks down at his hands. ‘But in Menigišiti, there was no spread. Just…just a single division. We are the Heart, and the Fate, of Menigišiti. We are reborn, anew, but the same- to continue to protect, to watch, to nurture.’

This is a lot to take. Namjoon glances at the GI agents but none of them seem remotely interested. But Namjoon knows he wouldn’t be able to tell either way.

‘In Menigišiti the Heart and Fate continued to stay. The Heart mothered life, and Fate bound them together- a cycle of creation, continuity, and peace.’ Jimin looks up again, his eyes no longer vacant or lost in thought. ‘How can you be lost, if you are bound to the fate of being found?’

Namjoon eyes the GI agents for a while, trying to add up his thoughts, the data he’s collected, Jimin’s words, what he’s seen.

He looks past the GI agents and at the Omhlophe.

‘And what about them?’

Jamin looks around, eyeing the Transporters following them.

‘I…I don’t know,’ he frowns. ‘But they are too close.’

Suddenly their Transporter swerves violently. Namjoon belatedly holds onto the straps attached to the walls of the interior.

Another Transporter has burst out after them.

‘What the-‘

Jimin is still turned in his seat, a frown on his brow as he watches the Omhlophe.

‘What is it-?’ Namjoon asks at once.

Jimin opens and closes his mouth a few times, blinking hard.

‘Namjoon I think-‘

A Transporter rams at them from another side, bursting out of nowhere.

Namjoon and Jimin strain painfully against their seats as another Transporter rams at them from another side.

‘Fuck-!’ Namjoon curses, holding onto the side of his chair as they spin momentarily before crashing against a rather thin crystal rock wall.

They don’t even have time to recover, they’re swarmed by the Omhlophe on every side. It’s absolutely nightmarish as the white-robed figures in identical masks move in unison, gathering and appearing out of the dusty air around them.

Namjoon hears one of the agents, Nineti, Jimin had called him, attempting to start up the Transporter. But it’s not working. The one called Yyna is headed for the doorway but Jimin is getting up, his hands reaching out to stop the tall agent.

‘No- let me,’ Jimin says as he releases himself from the seat to stand. His eyes seem to radiate light, the air around him lightening.

Jimin’s power was not showy or elaborate. There was a quiet strength- a gentle and warm touch.

Deceptive, Sk’jin’s voice provides unhelpfully in his head. Like I said, can’t be trusted.

Namjoon wants to ignore Sk’jin’s voice in his head but he had raised a very good question. One that they had all somehow chosen to ignore. Or were they enticed to ignore it?

Namjoon remembers how Jimin had gently urged the truth out of one of the Omhlophe’s third-party deliverers Khonen back in Ymir. How easily, without any show, without any display of power.

‘They are white, and they are young. They come from everywhere,’ Khonen replies simply, yawning again. ‘They are the Universe, and the Universe is them. When they told me this, I wanted to laugh. But they weren’t joking.’

‘What does that mean?’

‘It means they are from the Universe,’ Khonen replies with a small laugh. ‘And now they just want to live and create.’

‘Jimin wait-’ Namjoon holds Jimin back. ‘I don’t think this is a good idea.’

Jimin only pauses a while before releasing his arm from Namjoon’s hand.

‘Just trust me,’ Jimin says softly. ‘Please.’

‘What do you mean-?’ Namjoon makes to stand but he’s surprised when Nineti holds him back down. Jimin gives him a small smile of thanks.

‘Jimin-?’ Namjoon is beyond confused.

‘I will make this right,’ Jimin says as he quietly walks towards the doorway. ‘I will fix this.’

Yyna opens the door, little curls of dust falling through, sparkling in a spectrum of colour as the light that radiates from Jimin grows stronger.

It reminds him of the first time they encountered Jimin in Pompa. The golden radiance of a soothing light, encouraging rapture, wonder, and tranquility. He sees the way the GI agents suddenly seem to lapse into a strange trance, their heads hanging.

‘Jimin what are you doing-‘ Namjoon gasps.

Jimin steps out, light moving with him and before he can even say a word, he disappears in a flurry of white robes.

Then as though all of them are snapped out of it, the GI agents look up, awakened from their strange trance.
Spaces, was Sk’jin right about Jimin? Namjoon thinks rather despondently to himself. He purposefully knocked out the GI agents.

But he didn’t do a thing to Namjoon.

The lights in the air seems to flicker. There’s a sudden explosion of sound as Yyna opens fire alongside Amic. But the Omhlophe don’t pay them the slightest bit of attention. The figures are moving in swarms within themselves, their motion centered around one focal point.

It was obviously Jimin somewhere in there. Namjoon struggles out of Nineti’s grip, cursing as he makes his way to the door, grabbing one of the TeorSers stacked inside the interior panel. He tries to find Jimin through the scope. But tracking the movements of one small individual amongst a sea of swarming Omhlophe is impossible. Namjoon can sense their movement, the direction they were headed.

There are minor eruptions of something- a few of the Omhlophe flung out of the tight crowd as it goes further away.

Jimin was leading the Omhlophe away on purpose.

Namjoon freezes mid-thought- staring out into the ocean of white robes.

‘They’ve all come back to me.’

Could it be?

They had all discussed it, theorized it; the GI were created by the Yishengs and the Omhlophe could be some for of creation by the Akramanese/Red Evil. But how did these two separate creations link to Jimin? And where did Yoongi fall into this category? How did he fit in?

And what did the Omhlophe want from Jimin?

Judging by how the GI were behaving, they had no intention of hurting Jimin. Or even himself. Yoongi was…well, Yoongi. So what about the Omhlophe?

Their apparent random appearance in Pompa may not have been random at all.

‘They’ve all come back to me.’

Maybe they were specifically looking for Jimin. And they found him. Looking for him with the same determination and strange devotion that bordered discomfort when Namjoon thinks too long about it. Where did the Omhlophe even stay? If the word of the Beings in contact with Sk’jin’s “friend” Zitao were to be trusted, they worked for the Akramanese/Red Evil. But the Akramanese were gone, destroyed alongside Earth. What were they doing now that their creators were gone? They had been the ones to take Jimin, as well as Yoongi’s whole team back in Menigišiti. Had they escaped the fate of their creators?

What did they want with Jimin? What did they want with him?

Something clicks in Namjoon’s mind as he eyes the white robes lessen in number, gliding past the Transporter.

Or maybe they were trying to take him back.

‘Oh for fuck’s sake,’ Namjoon shakes himself awake, cursing as he fires at the closest white-robed figures. ‘Nineti! Get this started we need to go after Jimin now!’

Namjoon, for the second time in a span of a few minutes, is pulled back before he can jump out.

‘We need to go after him!’ Namjoon is bewildered as he rounds up to stare up at Yyna.

Yyna says nothing while Amic closes the door. Nineti is rustling with something and the Transporter starts.

‘Okay good, we’re up and running again. Let’s go get Jimin come on,’ Namjoon yanks his functioning arm out of Yyna’s grip and sits down again. The swarms of Omhlophe are disappearing into the misty dust.

Nineti does indeed start up the Transporter, but instead turns them around.

‘Uh-’ Namjoon is trying to work out what he’s missing here. ‘Jimin is that way?’

They just drive downwards continuously before turning right sharply.

‘Hey- what are you doing?’ Namjoon calls out to the front.

‘We were waiting in the light,’ Amic tells him from the back. ‘And in the light, we heard him.’

‘We will be found,’ Nineti says as they drive up rapidly. ‘We will be found again.’

‘Then let me out?’ Namjoon tries. ‘I don’t need help uh, being found.’

He’s suddenly apprehensive now that Jimin wasn’t here. Why were they taking him away? Weren’t they clearly here for Jimin?

Namjoon spies what can only be an exit, clear light that wasn’t a refraction is evident outside of this medium sized opening.

Fuck is this what Hoseok felt like when he was kidnapped.

It’s silent for a while before Yyna speaks.

‘Namjoon, child and survivor of Kutsoglerin, help us, children of nowhere, and teach us to survive.’

Yoongi is at a great disadvantage.

He’s on foot, in unknown territory, visibility was absolute shit, injured, and he was being pursued.

These were not GI agents. These were not GLA officers or even GIU officials. Yoongi has no experience against something like the Omhlophe.
But he has a head start, and he’s not entirely defenseless.

It doesn’t feel right. Even more so now than ever. The GI helmet he collided into after falling out of the Užkulisai was still splattered in blood and slightly too large for him.

I don’t like it.

That makes two of us, Yoongi thinks as he slips it on. The white noise is filtered out immediately, his vision clears up with startling clarity as the visor cuts through the dust. He wipes at the blood splattered over the front, his feet never stopping. At least the thick layer of dust is great at absorbing sound. The strange shrieking sounds of metal on rock and crystal ring behind him.

Something is missing.

Yoongi darts through the dust, ducking low and scooping handfuls of the dust and throwing it over his clothes. He’d been dusted before, but he could definitely use some more camouflage-

Something is missing.

‘What’s missing?’ Yoongi hisses out.

His hand grips the device deep inside his jacket pocket. It’s weighs monumentally against his chest. If he could get to a location, or even back to the Spardyti, he could definitely set the device to activate it. Would it work on a screen? Would it work on any transporter with a basic shield system? This was a massive mining asteroid from what Yoongi can tell. Even though these tunnels were already excavated, that didn’t mean there wouldn’t be machinery or transporters of some sort around.

If this had been his own helmet, he would have been able to get a scan of his immediate vicinity at least. He sticks close to the walls of the large tunnel, ducking past and around large chunks of crystal rock strewn all around.

I can’t hear it anymore.

The sound of a Transporter behind him gets louder and louder, closer and closer until Yoongi is flat out running, zipping through the many fallen crystal rocks.

‘Hear what?!’

It’s a dead-end ahead; and Yoongi spies a tunnel curving away to the other side, past the Transporter.

Abruptly stopping and doing a complete 180, Yoongi sprints back, cutting past large crystal rocks, the dust in the air parting in ripples around his movement. He hears the Transporter closing in again and when he briefly glances back, notices that there were two individual silhouettes cutting through the dust behind him.

Taking a leaping run up, Yoongi vaults up onto the fallen crystal rocks. His chasers leap up as well. Yoongi knows this is a risk- he was exposing himself over the rocks here, but he needed clear shots as well.

3 shots.

Yoongi picks up his speed, running over a particularly steep crystal and leaping off just as he turns to face behind him. Unsheathing the previously hidden slim short-range TeorSers in his pockets,
Yoongi aims and fires thrice each.

One of his chasers, a grey silhouette in this white dusty mist falls back, arching in the air and falling back to the ground. The other dodges down and under the rocks.

Yoongi lands on all fours on the sandy floor before he takes off again, sprinting forward and maintaining a low height.

He’s expecting that jump from around the corner as he cuts across an open space, edging closer towards the tunnel opening. The lights from the Transporter chasing him illuminates air and illuminates his chaser.

The same dirty white robes- the same odd mask- and an unshakeable odour permeates its movement as it strikes at Yoongi. But Yoongi dodges, whatever weapon the Omhlophe was using is sharp, white, and creates sparks as it makes contact with the crystal rock. Yoongi pockets one of the TeorSers and in a ring of light ignites the Heliord he had quickly snatched up from the weapon’s depository.

Their blades clash, light erupting in waves through the heavy dust.

Fall back-

Yoongi barely just manages to duck as a secondary blade, thin and small like a scalpel hisses through the dust and air. Yoongi lowers himself, swinging his Heliord under himself as he switches it off before reigniting it mid-thrust upwards.

He’s only able to catch the mask of the Omhlophe, the material cracking at the contact and chipping.

Yoongi’s side flares up at the strain but he shoulders on. He rolls over on the dust, the Omhlophe following him close. The thin sharp scalpel like knife slices at his visor and to Yoongi’s horror is actually able to land a deep cut over it.

Lunge

Yoongi lunges, catching the Omhlophe as it lunged towards him. But Yoongi doesn’t carry him backwards- only shoves it back immediately followed by swinging the Heliord forward.

The blade cuts through the air, dust rippling back as the blade sears through the white robes and cracks the mask and hood.

Hair unfurls, a pale textured skin appears and- the face behind the mask is startlingly normal. Dark un-lidded eyes expressionless, as though it had no matter to them that Yoongi had now pushed through. Yoongi can’t place the species but this was no extraordinary Being.

This was raising questions in the back of Yoongi’s mind.

Not now. Run.

Yoongi bolts past the Omhlophe even before she can hit the ground.

The Transporter bursts over his head, skidding to block his path towards the tunnel that would be too small for it to enter through. But Yoongi takes a running leap and vaults over the Transporter, skidding over the rooftop and down into the tunnel.
The tunnel is steep and goes downwards. Angling his feet and praying the soles on his shoes can withstand the friction he was about to subject it to, Yoongi takes a running start because angling his feet and he slides down the tunnel at tremendous speed.

There are massive gaping cracks along the side- and Yoongi spots the Spardyti inside a massive cavern, zooming through massive machinery and tech.

The Spardyti is firing at the masses of Transporters chasing after them. But Yoongi can’t watch just yet- his tunnel was about to run out and looking back, he notices 3 figures following him down. Letting his speed carry him, Yoongi bounds through the tunnel he slides into. His legs were definitely starting to feel sore, but Yoongi cannot stop. If that cavern was some form of store- there had to be another place here- some form of control room or log-room.

He was definitely running blind. He has no idea what to do if he comes across a dead-end.

A shiver of terror runs down his spine when one of the Omhlophe turns the corner, speeding behind him with terrifyingly long and spindly limbs that cut through the dust and its robes. A bit of hysteria and panic edges Yoongi further on.

A shiver of terror runs down his spine when one of the Omhlophe turns the corner, speeding behind him with terrifyingly long and spindly limbs that cut through the dust and its robes. A bit of hysteria and panic edges Yoongi further on.

Can’t hear.

He couldn’t run forever. He needed to find a place where he could take his chasers out. He first needed to get rid of the long-legged Being chasing him.

He exits the tunnel into a decent sized caravan that stretched on either side of him in a slight slope downwards. Above him are stalagmites of low-quality crystals, glassing and sharp. Yoongi turns mid run, crouching down and letting his momentum drag him downwards. He fires even before the Omhlophe appears at the tunnel opening.

But his calculations are correct because just as it appeared as though the shot would uselessly fire against the crystal rocks, it lands squarely in the center of the Omhlophe’s chest.

It flies backwards, nailed further by Yoongi’s second and third shot.

But it’s not enough to bring it down as it pushes itself up, a silent and deadly speedy spider-like Being leaping down the slope at him. It almost makes Yoongi giggle hysterically as the long limbs flail before positioning itself like a projectile straight for Yoongi.

Yoongi lifts his TeorSer but it’s not to aim at the Omhlophe diving at him, but at the stalagmites above him.

Large shards chip off and plunge downwards, impaling the Omhlophe right before it gets to Yoongi.

Yoongi doesn’t pause to rest, quickly ducking out as his shot brings down more than just a few stalagmites. Large shards of glassy crystal chip and fall about, cutting through the air like serrated blades. Just as Yoongi ducks out of the cavern he sees the other two entering.

I think I can hear it-

But before he has the opportunity to sprint into the tunnel- the Omhlophe Transporter bursts through; the light is nearly blinding and would have definitely been fatal to Yoongi had his eyes not been shielded. He narrowly escapes being run over.

The stalagmites are still falling, now with the sudden emergence of this powerful Transporter setting off tremors in its wake. More dust flies through the air and chunks of glassy crystals rain down. One nearly hits him and Yoongi has to quickly fall back, making him lose his balance, falling straight onto the ground. He’s about to get up, shoot past the freshly fallen massive stalagmite when he’s nearly waylaid by an Omhlophe shorter than himself. Yoongi’s not sure if it’s just luck but it sprints past him where he stood along the side of a dark rocky crystal.

And it just stands there. Almost as though it was listening to something. Like something was calling it.

Still.

Yoongi breathes out, ears pricked and eyes darting.

The Omhlophe is just standing there.

Don’t move.

The order is so powerful. So strong. That even when the Transporter bursts through, headlamps passing over Yoongi where he was crouched against the crook of the massive chunk of crystal rock, he stays still.

Listen.

His body tenses, ready to take on whatever came after him as the doors open.

But instead the short Omhlophe just gets in, shortly followed by the other who walks past where Yoongi was crouched and into the Transporter.

LISTEN.

Yoongi knows they saw him. Yoongi knows they saw him. But they just ignore him and the Transporter drives off back the same way it had burst in.

Yoongi remains still for a solid 2 minutes before he shifts just a little, righting his muscles.

Quietly, and carefully, Yoongi sits back up properly, leaning back on the crystal rock that had nearly ended him.

Why had they suddenly stopped?

The dust settles surprisingly quickly, further camouflaging him.

Listen.

‘To what?’ Yoongi asks out loud, coughing a bit as the pain on his side catches up. His legs were ready to cramp. He doesn’t think about how just at the edge of something- his consciousness maybe, a world of pain was ready to ignite his bones.

I will follow.

‘Lead, and I will follow,’ Yoongi whispers, eyes closing as he says it, gingerly feeling his side.

I can hear it again.

‘Hear what?’
‘What-‘ Yoongi takes a moment to breathe properly, leaning back to gather himself.

He can’t really hear anything other than the pounding in his ears and head and his harsh breaths. But there’s an odd settling feeling deep inside him. Was this just him feeling it, or was it-

‘You said something was missing,’ Yoongi breathes out. ‘What was it?’

‘And now it’s back?’

Yes.

Yoongi quietly and carefully stands up.

‘We need to get back. Need to reteam.’

Follow. Listen.

‘I’m trying- I really am.’ Yoongi takes a long exhale, rolling his shoulders a little. He was definitely going to bruise heavily. But it’s not as though he can really sense it. There was that continued numbness in him- a result of the fact that Yoongi himself, didn’t really have control over his own body.

I am used to it.

It’s unsettling, Yoongi knows, but necessary.

His body, his mind: they were functioning off of a strange and fragile symbiotic agreement.

It won’t last.

‘I know,’ Yoongi huffs out as he sprints out in the same direction the Transporter had left in. ‘We’re gonna have to pull it together. Just a little longer. We can do that right?’

For him.

Yoongi doesn’t run, but instead proceeds forward in a steady jog.

It’s easy enough following the tracks of the Transporter.

‘Is this the correct way?’

Yes

Yoongi still hunches low as he continues following the tracks. They lead upwards, in a rather steep slope of gently falling dust and rolling bits of crystal pebbles and shards. Yoongi takes leaping strides upwards, feeling himself slip down a little despite his lunging steps against the dusty smooth slope. He’s just at the top when he slips a little. To balance himself he grabs hold of the edge of the slope, his side colliding against the curved walls. The device in his pockets dig into his ribs, the handles of TeorSer thudding dulling against it.

It lets out a small beeping sound, startling Yoongi a little. He’s never heard the device make a sound before. Climbing out of the steep slope, Yoongi rights himself, leaning on the crystal rock wall for a moment, adjusting the items he was carrying.

His fingers brush against the device. Jimin’s System’s technology.

‘You know I’m right. Jimin knows something, or at least has the idea of something about all of this. But he won’t say it.’

‘Speculations and theories can be vague and sharing them can cause panic. Maybe Jimin—‘

‘Spare me. Your prince is hiding something we know. He’s hiding a lot of things, and honestly I’m not above getting to the bottom of it.’

This was supposed to hide them. This was supposed to completely remove them from being tracked.

So how did the Omhlophe find them so quickly? Or as a matter of fact, even the GI?

How were they able to track them all the way here to Grisial?

And why were the GI here?

Yoongi knows. He knows what happened. Has seen their vegetative states, walked past their unconscious forms. He knows of the other agents who had survived, who were out of the Raksane Tayi at the time. How they had reported themselves for study and containment. They had been less than 20.

He remembers trying to Awaken them, the way he had been.

His body shivers.

We cannot forget.

Yoongi can see their faces in his mind. Vacant and dormant eyes; Beings of every species, from every corner of the Known Universe.

Quite suddenly, Yoongi turns and slides all the way back down the slope.

Why?

‘I’m trying to figure something out.’ Yoongi mutters, backtracking back to the cavern with stalagmites.

The crystal dust particles were quick to cover the previous scene of battle because it’s almost as though nothing had happened. But Yoongi isn’t deterred; he quickly sifts through the thick layer of dust around the area of one of the many fallen stalagmites and finds what he’s looking for.

The Being crushed under the stalagmite with the uncanny long limbs almost seemed preserved by the crystal dust.

Not this one.

Yoongi nods to that, eyeing the body one last time before heading through the tunnel he had skidded all the way through. It’s a steep climb, and with the lack of traction, takes more time than Yoongi can actually spare. But he needed to find out. Needed to make sure.

Breathless, and the numbing gnawing ache under his bones attempt to surface into his
'I know,' Yoongi mutters as he carefully treads back into the atrium filled with massive crystal boulders. ‘Should be around here I hope.’

Clearly he’s not the only one looking for the bodies of the Omhlophe. Because of them stands there, clearly ready to take the body of the Omhlophe Yoongi had defeated some time ago.

What takes Yoongi by surprise is what they were doing.

Hand raised into the air, head bowed, the Omhlophe stands before the body of their fallen kind in a stunningly familiar goodbye.

This was the Yisheng farewell.

They lower their arm to their chest, hand forming a fist over where the heart should be anatomically.

‘And when you find yourself in times of trouble or woe, listen to the music from the stars and let them guide you with their wisdom, Memory, and Time.’

Those were Amme’s last words to them before they departed for this mission.

The Omhlophe leaps into action- apparently aware of Yoongi’s quiet presence but not bothered enough to attack out right. Instead bent on performing the farewell ritual.

Yoongi ignites his Heliord and charges straight.

He’s panting by the end, kneeling on one knee over the bleeding corpse of the Omhlophe. It’s strange- it didn’t feel like a fight.

He hesitates a moment before he rolls the Omhlophe over onto their front.

‘Fuck, I’m sorry,’ Yoongi whispers as he unsheathes a short knife from the side of his boots and cuts open the thick white robes.

Whoever Yoongi had just defeated was a species he wasn’t entirely familiar with. Ridged scaled that were larger and flatter grew over the shoulders, decreasing in size down the back. A back that was dented down the center just like Yoongi’s.

Just like Jungkook’s.

Just like the other GI agents.

‘Fuck,’ Yoongi breathes out. He eyes the other corpse for a second before making up his mind. He carefully rolls the other Omhlophe over to their chest as well and does the same to their robes. Scarred from previous battles, but just like the other Omhlophe, their back is dented down.

Yoongi gets on his feet and before he knows it, he’s pushing up the visor of the helmet. Standing at the center point between the two corpses, Yoongi takes his hand and raises it up, then closes it over his chest.

He’s not sure why. But this felt right.
He lowers his hand from his chest. A sudden shiver runs down his neck.

Listen.

Yoongi stops, head turned slightly to look behind him.

Past the cavern, Yoongi knows is the Užkulisai. He knows the strange Omhlophe drilling-ship is there too. But something else was also there. Something-

‘Jimin.’

Keeping the walls to his right, Yoongi weaves his way through the crystal rocks and boulders. The dust has settled and any sign of previous disturbances is entirely covered. It takes longer than Yoongi estimates to get back to the main cavern. The distance was much further than he had expected.

‘God I hate running,’ Yoongi absentmindedly mumbles to himself.

There’s a vague sensation somewhere in him that Yoongi identifies as judgment.

‘Oh shut up,’ he hisses again just as he arrives at the vicinity of the main cavern.

It’s quiet.

The Užkulisai is there, now almost white with the thick layer of dust on it. The Omhlophe drilling-ship is there too. The powerful headlamps are switched off and an equally thick layer of dust covered the ship too.

Would he be able to get back into the Užkulisai? They had planned on purging the entire system inside, and Yoongi can assume that Hoseok would have seen to that asap. But he’d still be able to fly the ship regardless. He would just need to continue to power the engines and basic systems through the anti-matter fuel supply in the Medical Bay. Not to mention if he used the device in his jacket, he would be able to render the ship invisible.

Well, invisible to most.

Listen.

Yoongi quietly stalks through the heavy dusty air. The air was concentrated here- probably due to the way the Užkulisai had crashed through the asteroid they were in. He stays low, ears pricked, eyes darting around the entirety of the cavern for any sign of movement.

The Užkulisai is right there- LISTEN-

Yoongi is tackled- a shape emerging as though camouflaged against the crystal rocks. White robes fluttering behind them like wings, Yoongi crashes down on the dusty floors. It’s not just one; Yoongi is picked up and thrown harshly back onto the floor by a second. It’s disorienting but Yoongi is able to count 4 of the Omhlophe.

The helmet protecting and encasing his head is ripped off and Yoongi accidently inhales the dusty air through his mouth.

There’s a strange realization as Yoongi feels himself being tossed again. These 4 Omhlophe had the chance to kill him just now. Or at least fatally injure him. They clearly outnumbered him. But they weren’t moving against him to kill him. There was something else-
Almost like some rag doll, Yoongi feels himself being hurled through the air, back colliding painfully against smaller embedded rocks on the floor.

But before he attempt to pick himself up, one of the Omhlophe is already doing that. And to Yoongi’s discomfort, he’s being held up so high his feet dangle. Definitely more than 2 feet above the dusty floors. He’s restrained- Yoongi dully realizes as he blinks dust out of his eyes. And sure enough the Omhlophe holding him has 4 arms. Twisting his body, Yoongi gets himself some space and brings his knee up and against the Omhlophe’s head. The grip on him is loosened a little, enough to yank out one arm and grab at the Heliord. He can’t ignite it without burning himself, so spinning the handle in his palm, Yoongi jams the handle straight through the strange mask over the face of the Omhlophe. Yoongi is dropped and his feet barely touch the ground when he’s tackled again. His head hits a few protruding rocks again, his vision sparking out in pain. He’s moving blindly but the Heliord makes contact as he ignites it before himself, slicing up at an angle. He shakes his head, clearing his vision in time to watch the 4-armed Omhlophe momentarily distracted as another Heliord, bright and powerful emerging through its chest.

There’s an unholy sound that fills the air as the Omhlophe scream- the pitch disturbing the dust in the air. And it’s not just the 4, now 3 Omhlophe in the cavern. At least 10 more emerge from the dust, all screaming as their 4-armed fellow Omhlophe collapses onto the ground.

Standing there in the center, the crystal dust swirling around him as though in time to some music Yoongi cannot hear but can feel, is Jimin.

A light radiates from him- subdued but powerful enough to make his clothes ripples as though moved by the wind. He’s holding two Heliords, the side of his clothes are smeared with blood. He looks up, not at Yoongi but at the gathered Omhlophe, all screaming at him. His eyes, that Yoongi knows are gentle, and filled with adoration, love, and laughter, burn ablaze.

_Never look directly at an eclipse._

Jimin’s movements are fast, the dust around his feet arches into fan-like waves as he spins. The Heliords slice through the air in wide arches, digging through the dust almost pointlessly but in an eruption through the ground the Omhlophe scramble out. To Yoongi’s horror, almost like ants escaping the pits of their earthen tunnels, the Omhlophe emerge from the dusty floors and walls.

Jimin is overwhelmingly outnumbered but he doesn’t seem to notice or care. Instead goading the Omhlophe out until no more were left to emerge.

Yoongi gets up to his feet only to be restrained back, 3 of the Omhlophe holding him back. They were using him as a hostage. They had planned this.

They could have killed Yoongi at any point. Right now too. But they were trying to draw Jimin back here.

This was- this wasn’t about anything else other than Jimin. The Omhlophe were after Jimin.

And they got him, by getting Yoongi here.

The Omhlophe surge forward in an attack at the same time, straight for Jimin.

Yoongi pushes against his restraints but their grip on him is relentless. He’s forced to watch. Forced to _witness._
'We won’t be found,’ one of the Omhlophe tells him, voice uncannily conversational as it had been when they had contacted them to discuss Hoseok when they had abducted him. ‘We will not be found.’

‘Is this what being found feels like?’

Jimin is an exemplary fighter. His movements are almost unconventional. There’s a fluidity and strength in him, twisting and passing through throngs of the Omhlophe – his movements and steps are calculated, aware, lightning-fast. And with each second the light around him seems to pulse brighter.

The Omhlophe scream in unison in long bursts of extended howls. The cavern echoes it back, dust falling all the more like strange rainfall.

Sparks erupt as Jimin’s Heliords make contact with some of the Omhlophe.

They scream even louder, the sound piercing Yoongi’s ears till everything is muffled and all he can hear is his own pulse, his own scream as they leap through the air, falling over Jimin and collapsing over him.

In a soft glimmering eruption of liquid light, the mound of Omhlophe’s fly through the air. The crystal dust dissipates, almost as though evaporating as Jimin levitates through the air, a radiance of light erupting around him.

It reminds Yoongi starkly of what he had witnessed in Megibīya. Jimin had flown through the air just like this, his voice like distant thunder and song pushing back the terror that had been taking them one by one.

When Jimin lands back on the floor, the dust further dissipates, leaving the pure crystal rock floors exposed. The Omhlophe seem to struggle against Jimin although Yoongi feels nothing. Even the ones restraining him seem to struggle. He takes advantage of this and twisting his arm free, reaches for his TeorSer.

Knocking out one of the 3 with the blunt end of the TeorSer. Yoongi spins on his knees, firing at extreme short range right through one of their masks. The remaining one knocks the TeorSer out of his hands but they lose balance as another eruption of light ignites through the air. Yoongi is able to take advantage of this, removing his other TeorSer and firing twice in rapid succession.

Positioning himself, Yoongi aims at the masses of the Omhlophe who don’t seem to care much about him- all throwing themselves in screaming synchrony at Jimin as he takes them on in overwhelming rushes. Yoongi arms himself with both the TeorSers, firing in rapid succession at the Omhlophe.

They’re flung through the air- thrown back by the immense power Jimin exuded. Yoongi desperately wonders why they were not subdued- it had worked on the blood-thirsty crowd in Pompa. Why were they not subdued?

Jimin picks up his Heliords again- the blades spinning around him as he charges through the Omhlophe in a whirlwind of light, beauty, and terror.

There is a final surge of light- the ground shakes, and the Omhlophe cave in on themselves, their screams choked and the white of their robes staining with their blood as an overwhelming pressure crushes them.

The last of the Omhlophe is taken down by both Yoongi’s shot, and Jimin’s Heliord.
Jimin momentarily struggles to stand but gone is the light around him—his eyes no longer ablaze but wide and fearful as he stares at Yoongi. He drops the Heliords, arms stretching up for Yoongi—

Yoongi nearly trips a few times over the crushed bodies of the Omhlophe as he surges forward, the pain in his body moving past the numbing ache he had been pushing down.

They crash into each other, both of their legs giving out and they crumple in a heap on their knees.

Jimin is shaking in Yoongi’s arms, his hands shakily touching him as though afraid of what he would feel. Yoongi’s not even sure if he was using the proper amount of strength—he’s not sure if he’s crushing Jimin but as though his body was going through some form of shock, he can’t help but shake against Jimin too.

‘Yoongi—’ Jimin chokes out, face pressed into the crook of his neck. ‘Yoongi I’m—’

‘I found you- I found you,’ Yoongi whispers, his shaking hand running through the short strands of Jimin’s hair. ‘I’m here—’

Jimin pulls, eyes shining briefly before they close and his lips are on Yoongi’s.

Yoongi kisses him back with the same desperation.

Their breaths are harsh against each other’s mouths. Chests pressed close, shaking hands and arms shifting and curling over each other.

‘I’m here,’ Yoongi repeats against Jimin’s mouth. His eyes are still closed, tears leaking past. ‘I’m here.’

Jimin’s hands shake as he raises them to gently hold his face.

‘Yoongi,’ he whispers.

Something was wrong.

‘What is it? What’s wrong?’ Yoongi asks, his voice still a whisper.

‘I see it now,’ Jimin tells him shakily. ‘Taeh’yung was right. I didn’t want to see it. But now I can’t pretend.’

‘Pretend what?’

Jimin’s thumbs gently rub his cheeks. He smiles shakily but it’s sad.

‘Will you be able to forgive me?’ he whispers.

‘What are you saying?’

‘I have- I haven’t explained everything truthfully to you. To anyone.’ Jimin says quietly, his hands slipping from around Yoongi’s face. ‘But I can’t hide it anymore. And I cannot pretend.’

‘What is it?’ Yoongi presses, taking Jimin’s hands in his.

Crystal dust falls around them again, in a haze of light and mist that seems to stretch time as Jimin whispers, ‘You are…you are bound to me.’
Yoongi doesn’t understand.

‘I am yours.’

‘I am yours,’ he whispers but Jimin shakes his head, looking up at him with purpose.

‘You are bound to me, the way the others like you are bound to me.’ Jimin whispers almost inaudibly. ‘You were created to be bound to the Fate of Menigišiti.’

‘What does that mean?’ Yoongi asks.

‘I’m sorry,’ Jimin says quietly before kissing him gently, hands raising up to place over his temples.

It’s a sudden and very strong reaction. Yoongi pushes Jimin away, hand slapping against his chest as he deflects his hands away from his head.

Jimin falls backwards, eyes wide.

‘Did- did you just try to knock me out?’ Yoongi asks breathlessly, standing up feeling shaken to his core. ‘Were- were you trying to leave?’

Jimin blinks rapidly a few times before he says in a broken tone, ‘They’re here because of me. They’re here because they’re bound to me. They will come for me, again and again- and it doesn’t matter who is there with me. I don’t need the protection or the ship-’

‘-did you leave Namjoon?’ Yoongi demands, his voice softening as he takes a few steps forward.

‘They were- Yoongi, they were there,’ Jimin looks tiny, sitting on the clear floors. ‘Nineti, Yyna.’

‘What?’

It’s shocking to hear their names again- but somehow, deep down, Yoongi’s isn’t too surprised.

‘They were there. They didn’t know me. But they were there- because they heard me. And I couldn’t- I couldn’t save them before; and Namjoon was there and I couldn’t- I couldn’t let that happen to him,’ Jimin looks down, ‘The way I couldn’t save you.’

Yoongi kneels in front of Jimin again, taking his hands in his. Jimin’s head remains bowed.

‘Sunshine, look at me,’ Yoongi whispers against Jimin’s knuckles. ‘Please?’

It takes a moment, but Jimin looks up.

‘I said I would take you home. Promised, that I would take you home.’ Yoongi says, ‘I made that promise when we first met. And now, this time around, I’m going to keep it.’

Jimin is starting to shake his head.

‘You’re so strong,’ Yoongi says gently, ‘You’re so strong, and kind, and gentle, and beautiful.’

Jimin’s eyes close, tears clinging to his lashes.

‘Don’t tell me to leave.’
Jimin’s breath escapes him in shudders.

‘Yoongi I-’ Jimin whisper leaves him like a sob as he pulls his hands out of Yoongi’s, ‘-I can’t lose everyone again. I can’t lose you.’

There’s a sudden groaning sound, startling them both to their cores. Yoongi is quick to push Jimin down, covering him with his own body.

‘What-‘

‘It’s the driller,’ Yoongi whispers quietly. ‘It’s moving.’

‘There’s more-‘

The head of the drill-head ship splits open revealing a massive opening. Mechanical arms and rigs extend out, with cables and magnetized straps unfurling to wrap around the Užkulisai.

‘They’re taking the ship,’ Yoongi whispers.

Like a dinosaur from Ancient Earth footage, Yoongi watches as the massive drill-head reassembles as though it hadn’t split open to swallow whole a massive expedition-class ship.

They wait a while and no sound is heard, no movement seen or felt. Yoongi pushes himself off just little, looking down at Jimin.

‘I can’t promise you that you won’t lose me,’ Yoongi says quietly. ‘You cannot promise me I won’t lose you either.’

Jimin doesn’t look at him. His eyes are fixed where the Užkulisai had previously crash landed.

‘We both know it doesn’t work that way,’ Yoongi gently turns Jimin’s head to face him.

‘And I know, that there are things you cannot say. Things that you will have to do. Things I will have to do. And neither of us can control any of those things,’ Yoongi smiles, leaning down to bump noses softly. ‘If I could, we wouldn’t be in here, in some shitty situation where one of us is always injured or in pain- I mean, I could do with less of that.’

Jimin’s lips twitch as though fighting a smile.

‘We would be somewhere else, far away, just the two of us. A nice house, near some woods? Do you like lakes? Shore line?’

‘I like the ocean,’ Jimin answers after a few seconds.

‘Okay, near the ocean, a nice wooded area behind the house,’ Yoongi smiles, ‘It’s just the two of us there. A pretty place where you can watch the sunrise, and I can watch my sunshine.’

Jimin giggles, looking both embarrassed and amused before his face sort of twitches and the tears that were threatening to pour out finally do.

Yoongi carefully draws his fingers along the short strands of Jimin’s hair.

‘I know you want to protect me. Protect us, protect your planet, your people.’ Yoongi says clearly, ‘And you believe it is your duty. Just yours. But it’s not. If I am tied to you, or fated to you, or something like that, then let it be so- I don’t care.’
Jimin blinks rapidly, squeezing out his tears as though hoping to see better.

‘It doesn’t matter to me- if you are the Fate of Menigišiti for your people then,’ Yoongi shrugs with a grin, ‘I don’t think I qualify under that? I’m not a citizen from there.’

Jimin chuckles.

‘But I know that the way I am tied to you, the way I am yours is different,’ Yoongi whispers, wiping away the wet patches along Jimin’s face.

‘I am yours. I am not the Red Evil’s. I don’t belong to them. I am not the Omhlophe’s, I am not the GI’s- or the GLA, or the GIU. I don’t belong to the Fate of the Menigišiti. I belong to you.’

Jimin raises his hands, fingers gently tracing his features.

‘Yoongi.’

‘Yes.’

‘I’m sorry.’

‘I’m sorry too,’ Yoongi replies quietly.

Yoongi quietly gets up, pushing himself off of Jimin.

‘We need to get to the surface,’ Yoongi says as he helps Jimin up. ‘If the Omhlophe are gone- we have a better chance at regrouping.’

Jimin nods quietly.

‘I saw a cavern with mining Transporters on my way here- I think we can use one of those to get out of here,’ Yoongi continues. ‘We can use it to get out.’

Jimin nods again but this time he tugs a little at their entwined hands, stopping him.

‘Yoongi – I’m sorry I tried to-‘ Jimin breathes out in a choked way, ‘I should have- should have-‘

‘Shh,’ Yoongi presses his lips to Jimin’s forehead, ‘It’s too much.’

Jimin looks up at him, curious.

‘This is too much for you, and it’s okay to admit that,’ Yoongi says quietly. ‘You’ve just…woken up, here, out of your home, away from what you’ve known your whole life. This is… this is too much, and it’s okay.’

Jimin sort of blinks in a dazed way, surprised to hear it said to him almost.

‘It’s okay to be overwhelmed- you’ve…you’ve learnt so much,’ Yoongi sort of chuckles, ‘Kinda like how I did too; it’s too much, and that’s okay.’

Jimin looks small, lost, and in a way that is almost physically palpable to Yoongi, incredibly homesick.

‘Let’s get out of here first okay?’ Yoongi kisses his forehead, ‘Let’s find the others.’

‘And then?’ Jimin looks up, desperation in his tone.
'And then we go home.’

Jimin nods after a few seconds, his hand tightening around Yoongi’s.

‘We’ll need to move quickly. You’re still okay to move?’ Yoongi asks, taking small step back to look over Jimin.

‘I can,’ Jimin nods, clearing his throat and gives Yoongi a small smile.

‘Okay, let’s go.’

Sk’jin is still fuming under his breath.

Hoseok worriedly checks the windows and surveillance for any sign of the Omhlophe. But none appear again. This was unsettling. Why would they just abandon chase?

‘Grisial isn’t allowing me to broadcast a search,’ Sk’jin angrily spits out. ‘Not to mention, this NaviLet is still pretty bust and Grisial’s public channel is not pleased with having me snoop.’

‘We’ll get to a deck and it’ll be better-‘

‘Oh yes?’ Sk’jin snaps, ‘Get to deck and what? Get arrested? Or worse be swarmed by the fucking massive ship that literally fucked us into this asteroid?’

Sk’jin waves the NaviLet around hazardously.

Hoseok grimaces.

‘This is the dumbest thing we’ve done. And that includes everything we’ve done- which I might remind you, is not the best track record in the Universe!’ Sk’jin hisses. ‘Not only have we lost Jimin. Yoongi could be dead for all we know, and Namjoon is on his way to be recycled somewhere. The icing over all of this is that we’ve lost Taeh’yung- who has many times proclaimed his desire to explode moons. What the fuck are we going to do? Oh yeah! Go to the fucking deck-‘

‘Sk’jin please-‘ Hoseok grits out tersely. ‘What do you suggest we do? Go back inside and try to start up the Užkuliasi while that drilling ship lurches overhead? Go look for everyone else completely blind and defenseless?’

Hoseok can feel Sk’jin’s glare.

‘We need to get Kookie to safety,’ Hoseok bites out, only half-truthful in his reasoning. ‘The Omhlophe were in Ynqaba for a reason. From what we know of what Jungkook has said, and what we can surmise, they’re looking for the eggs and Jungkook could be one of those.’

There’s no response from Sk’jin. And maybe it’s a cheap shot- but it was effective. Sk’jin was clearly very protective over Jungkook. And well, Hoseok has been trained to use whatever he can in order to survive and succeed.
Because yes. Sk’jin was right. This was incredibly dumb. He was making an extremely risky move with a very small percentage for success. But if it worked out. Well, that was another worry to stress over later.

‘Left tunnel after this turn,’ Sk’jin announces.

He was still irritated, but mainly anxious. Hoseok mulls over the events carefully.

The GI agents found them. The Omhlophe agents found them.

Despite the fact that they were practically invisible, these two separate bodies of Beings found them. Hoseok did not doubt Jimin’s technology- he checked it many times over himself. Did the GI and Omhlophe have technology that could counter Jimin’s? Or were they able to track them using another method?

‘There’s a recorded message. Or at least an attempt at a call through the Comm that didn’t fully make it through but I downloaded it before I purged Lisai,’ Sk’jin comments, breaking the temporary silence.

Without preamble, Sk’jin plays it out.

The quality is shit, but Hoseok instantly recognizes Namjoon’s voice.

‘Jimin- hey listen…-hey listen to me- you’ll be all right, you just …- wake up okay? Just open y-…- look at me.’

Namjoon was clearly awake and uninjured. Maybe the same could not be said for Jimin.

‘See? It’s me- it’s just me…-we’re fine-…- breathe with me okay? Just breathe with me.’ Namjoon’s voice is distant for a while, the lines dying only to be replaced by white noise. ‘…mewhere?…- you’re safe, okay?’

Jimin was disoriented. Injured? Hoseok’s mind whirls.

‘You’re just in a Transporter, …- with some agents around, we’re safe-…- have medical supply. See? They’ve bandaged you up alr-…- re important aren’t you? Little prince right?’

The line cuts abruptly at that.

‘Little prince,’ Sk’jin repeats quietly.

Namjoon was trying to say something. This message was clearly sent, knowing that they would pick it up.

‘They’re both okay at least,’ Sk’jin frowns. ‘The GI didn’t hurt them. Treated them in fact.’

Yoongi sometimes liked to call Jimin your majesty. Referring him to a sort of royalty since the beginning.

‘Something’s up about the GI,’ Sk’jin says quietly. ‘Maybe… maybe not all of them are… are what they seem.’

‘What do you mean?’ Hoseok asks.

‘When… when I was there. In that place,’ Sk’jin’s tone is distant. ‘It was just Memory. There is something- something strange about what they discovered in that Akramanese ship- or Red Evil ship—whatever the fuck you want to call it. There’s something different about them—and something different with the GI—and something very very different with Yoongi.’

‘Okay,’ Hoseok says slowly. ‘What are you theories—?’

‘—right turn and straight up,’ Sk’jin cuts across before saying, ‘Taeh’yung was telling me—that we need to contact Zitao again. But now that I really think about it, I’m not sure how much they can help.’

‘Why do you think that?’

‘I—. I lived with him. With them. For a while.’ Sk’jin says slowly, like he was carefully putting his words together. ‘And I think that they are as lost as we are. But…”

‘But?’

‘But I think they found each other. And they—they don’t want to lose that again.’ Sk’jin says, his tone delicate.

‘You’re saying we shouldn’t approach them?’ Hoseok frowns. The amount of information they were able to receive by one interaction had helped them in light-years of progress.

‘I’m saying that I don’t think we should pull them back into this, after what happened.’ Sk’jin says with a sort of finality in his tone.

‘Okay.’

‘Okay?’ Sk’jin sounds stunned. And rightfully so. ‘You know you’re being a little suspicious.’

‘Isn’t that the basis of our relationship.’

‘What relationship.’

‘Ouch.’ Hoseok snorts.

‘We’re almost there. I hope you know what you’re doing because you clearly don’t want to tell me.’ Sk’jin says, his tone edging on nervous.

Hoseok doesn’t reply, his skin prickling with anxiety.

‘Did you hear that—?’ Jungkook suddenly asks.

The tunnel behind them explodes in a burst of crystal shards, white dust, and force.

Sk’jin yelps out a strangled shriek, clearly very involuntary by how rapidly he shuts himself up.

‘Fuck—fuck—’ he curses.

It’s similar to the massive drill-headed ship that had burst over the Užkulisai in the caverns below. Hoseok curses alongside Sk’jin, desperately speeding up as the massive drilling head skewers the entire massive tunnel haphazardly like some injured beast.

‘Jungkook! Sit down!’ Sk’jin orders, ‘Those won’t scratch that thing!’

Hoseok can see ahead, their opening.
'Fuck-' they narrowly dodge a massive crystal rock that lands just feet behind them as they rapidly shoot up the dusty slope.

‘Fuck Hoseok get us out faster-!’ Sk’jin yells.

‘I’M DOING THAT-‘ Hoseok yells back, having to zigzag through the falling rocks as the drill-head collides heavily against the walls, disappearing for a short moment before bursting overhead too close for comfort.

‘Fuck fuck- I fucking hate this so much-’ Sk’jin is chanting under his breath. Hoseok’s not sure but he thinks he hears Jungkook exclaim out excitedly. Hoseok is vaguely worried for Jungkook’s idea of fun.

The drill-head dives down, right behind them, making them lurch forward in a surprising twist of events.

They burst over the edge of the tunnel opening and out of the dusty whirlwind they were trapped in, bursting out into massive clearing strewn with random mining gear and machinery. Hastily abandoned Transporters and Ships were strewn about. And looming over them against a chaotic mess of emergency lights, fragmented ships like shrapnel flung across the previously untainted beauty of Grisial, is a massive Yisheng ship.

‘Hoseok what the fuck did you do-‘ Sk’jin roars from the back. But Hoseok is a little too busy to answer as he sharply turns the Spardyti away from the dangerous spinning drill-head of the Omhlophe ship.

Two other drill-headed ship erupt out, all headed for them.

‘-s this Hoseok of the Užkulisai-02?’

Hoseok can feel Sk’jin’s accusatory glare against the back of his head.

‘No- this is Sk’jin, Hoseok is a little busy right now making up lies,’ Sk’jin hisses, ‘Pray, may I ask who this is?’

Hoseok grits his teeth, backing them and turning the Spardyti away from the drill-heads upwards past the tunnel they just exploded out of.

‘This is Amme, Sk’jin. It’s nice to hear from you again.’

‘You’re such a little bitch-!’ Sk’jin hisses before saying, ‘Yes, the same to you Yisheng Amme. I hope you are doing well. Fuck I hate you so much you fucking shifter! Enough of the pleasantries Yisheng- if you might, you know, help us out? I hope this was your fucking plan you fucking fuck-‘

‘If you would kindly lead them to me.’

‘What-?’

Hoseok cannot believe his eyes.

Standing towards the top of the massive crystal rock slope, the bright light of Grisial’s asteroids clustered all around her stood Amme.

Even from this distance her presence is overwhelming.

‘Fucking Spaces-‘ Sk’jin curses.
Hoseok steers them straight for the Yisheng.

All 3 drill-headed ships burst out, diving forward.

It’s the eeriest image Sk’jin has witnessed for a while.

Leaving behind her wake a surprised and slow fan of crystal dust, Amme darts forward, her many arms folded behind her.

‘She’s fucking firing herself at us-!’ Sk’jin screeches.

The lengths of the abilities and skills Yishengs had with their ability to channel or use surrounding life-force varied amongst themselves. The older you were as a Yisheng, the more powerful you became. And from what Hoseok knows, Amme has been around for a long time.

Just at the last second, Hoseok sharply steers them to the left just as Amme shoots past. The force of her speed shaking the Spardyti, and to Hoseok’s absolute terror, thin but deadly sharp sheets of crystals peel off of the surface of this massive asteroid in her wake.

The Spardyti swivels, coming to lurching stop just in time for them to witness the crystal sheets expand in size and speed, bearing down on the drill-head ships. Amme comes to an unnaturally abrupt halt and not a second later, the massive drill-head ships collapse in heaps all around her.

There’s a clawing hand around Hoseok’s shoulder, Sk’jin’s fingers digging into Hoseok’s collarbones.

‘So, wanna tell me why you fucking called Amme, the Yisheng to our location?’ Sk’jin snarls in his ear and it’s actually terrifying. ‘I always suspected that one of us might be in with the Special Jury- you played us really good Ngfy’widan.’

Hoseok really wouldn’t put Sk’jin past literally murdering him right now.

‘According to the timeline we were able to collect, we are missing information that only one Being could possibly have,’ Hoseok says calmly as Amme starts to walk towards them. The Yisheng ship slowly pulls up above her. ‘Amme was there with Yoongi. She clearly investigated Yoongi’s statement, his report. She was also involved with the Panel sent to treaty with Jimin’s System even if she wasn’t part of it. She was part of the delegation. I know this is risky Sk’jin- but trust me-‘

‘Why the fuck should I trust you?’ Sk’jin sounds so appalled at the very idea.

Hoseok turns his head slightly to look the Khol’isa straight in the eyes.

‘You can kill me later if this doesn’t work.’ Hoseok tells him steadily. ‘But for now, please… please believe me.’

Sk’jin doesn’t waver, doesn’t look away- doesn’t even blink.

A pair of hands gently pull Sk’jin back. Jungkook’s eyes are wide as he watches them.

Sk’jin doesn’t say anything when he follows Hoseok out of the Spardyti.

‘Also, I’m not in league with any members of the Special Jury,’ Hoseok adds.

Sk’jin doesn’t even look at him. Instead he stands in front of Jungkook, as though hoping to hide him from view.
Amme is terrifying tall in all honesty. Hoseok can’t quite shake off the strange primal fear in him whenever he looks at her.

The Khemsa were such a unique species- more predatory than anyone was comfortable acknowledging. Hoseok hasn’t had any experience outside of meeting with Amme when it came to her species. And he’s more than happy at that.

Jungkook steps out from behind Sk’jin to stare up at Amme, eyes wide as she approaches.

Three pairs of silvery eyes blink down at Hoseok.

He can’t help but shudder.

‘I received your message. I have come alone. Or-‘ one her arms gestures above her. ‘-with my personnel. You were difficult to find out here. A wondrous thing, being untraceable.’

What? Amme couldn’t track them?

‘I don’t trust you,’ Sk’jin spits out, eyes narrowed.

‘I am aware,’ Amme bows her bald head as though in apology. ‘We have not done much to gain the trust of the Khol’isa, let alone you Sk’jin of the Bloodmoon.’

Sk’jin’s eyes flare.

There’s a sudden cracking sound- sharp like thunder and somehow ancient sounding. But it’s not coming from below their feet like Hoseok was used to. Rather it seemed to echo out from all around them.

There’s a sudden violent flare of neon green- all of Grisial’s light turns bright green as a hollow voice rings out, shapes forming the voice.

‘WHAT ARE YOU DOING HERE-’

Hoseok feels himself being dragged aside roughly just as Taeh’yung suddenly appears before them like a bolt of lightning, standing right in front of Amme.

‘What are you doing here little one?’ Taeh’yung asks, head tilted curiously.

‘I could ask you the same, the Fifth of the First,’ Amme replies, nonplussed by how the air is green.

As though in delayed reaction, the ground cracks seconds later, chips flying up around the two. The reflections on the shards show more than just Taeh’yung and Amme as the green light intensifies.

‘You’ve made Jinnie upset,’ Taeh’yung sing-songs.

Hoseok is alarmed at how the ground begins to vibrate and tremble. Sk’jin is pushing Hoseok and Jungkook behind himself.

‘Tae-‘ Sk’jin tries desperately, real fear pushing into his voice as he addresses the Zhak’gri.

‘Taeh’yung I’m fine-‘

‘Tsk tsk,’ Taeh’yung’s voice echoes, ‘I thoughthhhtt wwwweeeetttt aaaaaaauuuuuuuuuuuuuugggggghhhhttttt tttttttttttttt tttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttttt
Taeh’yung’s voice echoes slow the same way his hands move slowly, veined copper and shining bright with shapes in vibrant green crossing all over. To Hoseok’s absolute alarm, Taeh’yung has actually stretched up to Amme’s height, his features lengthening.

A Heliord blade handle flies through and smacks Taeh’yung right against the side of his face.

The Zhak’gri’s head turns- his expression is wild- a grin unnaturally wide stretches over his face.

But almost just as suddenly, Taeh’yung returns to normal just as strangely as he had appeared before them.

Hoseok’s ears are ringing from the pressure, stumbling backwards from the strange seized restraint over his body.

‘JIMINIIIIIIEEE!!’ Taeh’yung squeals, running away and over towards the back.

Amme coughs, blood splattering through her slightly exposed glass-like teeth. Sk’jin is panting for air and Jungkook pushes past them, hurrying past them.

‘Where did you find him?’ Amme asks, eyes blinking out blood.

‘…here and there,’ Sk’jin pants out.

Finally gaining control over his body, Hoseok turns to find Jimin and Yoongi. Behind them a mining Transporter of sorts. They both look terrible, visibly coloured in blood and crystal dust. Taeh’yung has just dropped Jimin to hug Yoongi who doesn’t even try to fight it, eyes focused on Amme.

Jungkook reaches Jimin, hugging him tight, his face pushed to his neck. Jimin looks completely disheveled, even from this distance Hoseok can immediately tell his profound confusion at what he was witnessing.

‘You have recovered many odd ones.’

Recovered?

‘One of them was hand-picked by your lot so you can’t say much,’ Sk’jin snaps before adding, ‘Where the fuck is Namjoon?’

Amidst everything else, Hoseok had entirely forgotten about Namjoon.

As Jimin and Yoongi approach, with a lot of apprehension and confusion, it’s the first question Jimin asks.

‘Where is Namjoon?’

‘Oh Spaces how could we have lost that tall idiot?’ Sk’jin sighs as he slaps the NaviLet aggressively against his palm before angrily chucking it down on the ground.

‘I do not sense Namjoon here,’ Amme voices out quietly, adding to Jimin's increasing look of worry.

‘What? Pa?’ Taeh’yung looks so distraught and childish, and so entirely normal that Hoseok wonders if he had just hallucinated what he saw. But the cracks on the ground and the continued bleeding from Amme’s nostrils as well as bloodied tears were there to remind Hoseok of what just happened 2 minutes ago.
‘We can track him-‘
‘-did you fucking poison us again you squat bastard-‘
‘-we-…we should go-‘ Jimin says hesitantly. ‘It’s not…it’s not safe. Not here I-‘
‘Hey, listen you tiny punk-‘

‘Jimin believes with good reason that the Omhlophe are able to sense and track him,’ Yoongi says tersely, not looking at Amme. ‘We believe it’s how they got to us here.’

‘Oh for fuck’s sake why am I here-‘

‘It would be for the best if we leave aboard my ship,’ Amme cuts across, dabbing at her many bleeding points with the ends of her Yisheng robes. ‘I can take you where you need for the next step of your journey.’

‘What about Namjoon?’ Sk’jin demands. ‘Where the fuck is he? Weren't you with him? How are you here?’ he pointedly asks Jimin. Yoongi’s about to answer but Sk’jin cuts him off with a hand, ‘No- I’m asking Little Prince here. Where’s Namjoon?’

‘The- the Omhlophe over-number us. Me, Namjoon- and…and-the GI,’ Jimin stops, opening his mouth and then closing, before continuing on, ‘In short- short explanation, the Omhlophe only want me. Not Namjoon, not GI- not anyone. Just me.’

‘Oh Spaces, why is everyone so noble,’ Sk’jin hisses, slapping his own face, 'You fucking took off, hoping to draw those white-shits away from Namjoon right?’

Jimin's head is bowed but he nods.

Sk'jin grimaces.

'So Namjoon is with the GI? And they didn't hurt him?’ Hoseok questions, 'But they tried to kill Yoongi?’

Sk’jin lowly mutters, 'I'd try to kill Yoongi too.' but it's ignored.

'I believe it's better to have this discussion inside- I do not believe your presence can be explained nor can mine,’ Amme interrupts in. ‘We are also inviting speculation and observation by standing out here in the open. Namjoon may be quite safe, if what Jimin has said and sensed is right. We may be able to reconnect with him soon, he is after all, the best the GLA had to offer.’

Everyone just stands still, eyeing Amme with apprehension.

This is when you needed Namjoon.

Hoseok grimaces and nods, taking a step forward.

Amme bows her head towards them again before turning around. Her tail drags behind her, leaving faint marks alongside clawed prints. Again, this was very unsettling.

Hoseok walks after Amme, stopping only because the others hadn’t moved yet.

Grisial somehow looks less beautiful- tarnished almost, as though the effects of those who came here tainted it somehow. It makes Hoseok’s palm burn.
He’s about to open his mouth to say something, when Sk’jin begins to walk towards him.

He’s quickly followed by Jungkook, then Taeh’yung, Jimin, and then Yoongi.

‘Can’t we ask Amme to get the Užkulisai? I’m sure we could run repairs while we’re waiting inside that,’ Sk’jin says as he nods towards the massive ship above them. A smaller Transporter was waiting for them.

‘The Užkulisai was taken by the Omhlophe,’ Yoongi reports quietly from behind them.

‘The drillers they sent after us must have been a distraction,’ Sk’jin says quietly as they all huddle together and walk. ‘They took the ship and then left while the Yisheng was preoccupied.’

‘What about others?’ Jungkook asks quietly and nervously. ‘What about Namjoon?’

‘How are two Beings from the same group getting themselves kidnapped?’ Sk’jin complains under his breath.

‘He’ll be okay,’ Taeh’yung says with so much confidence Hoseok almost believes him. ‘I got too distracted. I wanted to play, and I didn’t notice those filths and their smaller ships.’

‘Filths?’ Jimin repeats, eyebrows raised up.

‘Hm!’ Taeh’yung swings his arms. ‘Disgusting stench. Blew them apart far away.’

Jimin blanches, his feet stopping.

Yoongi pauses too, hand reaching out as though to catch Jimin.

‘You what?’ Jimin breathes out, blinking rapidly, pulling his hand out of Yoongi’s, taking a step ahead.

‘Blew them apart,’ Taeh’yung grins, a hint of madness in his eyes.

‘That ship- that ship was carrying them.’ Jimin whispers, eyes wide as he stares at Taeh’yung in shock, anger, and horror. ‘Taeh’yung that ship was-‘

‘Do you finally see it now, little one,’ Taeh’yung asks, voice low. ‘Do you see what comes from losing yourself?’

‘I gave myself to the duty I was born into!’ Jimin snaps, eyes ablaze as he takes another step closer, ‘Do not speak to me of the responsibilities that I have shouldered from the reddened darkness that stole my children through the endlessness of their Memories!’

Taeh’yung is unmoving, his gaze unwavering and gleaming.

‘I did not lose because I chose to give it away, Zhak’gri, nor did I run away,’ Jimin hisses the words straight at Taeh’yung, ‘It was taken from me.’

The silence is thick with tension, a strange sparkling anger simmered in the air and Hoseok is not sure how much he was going to be able to withstand if both Jimin and Taeh’yung lost it.

‘It was taken from me, and then it found me,’ Jimin takes a step back, the air lifting, ‘And I will take it back.’

All of the anger then strips away from Jimin.
‘I do see it now,’ Jimin adds. ‘Will you help me?’

All eyes are on Taeh’yung.

‘I made a promise to help,’ Taeh’yung grins as though Jimin hadn’t just pretty much lectured him. ‘He would want me to stick with you.’

Jimin accepts this odd answer and nods, giving the Zhak’gri a small smile before they both walk towards Amme’s Transporter.

‘What in Spaces-‘ Sk’jin begins as Jungkook nervously shifts next to them.

‘Jimin said something to me,’ Yoongi says quietly out of nowhere, watching Jimin’s retreating figure.

‘He said I was bound to the Fate of the Menigišiti.’

‘Isn’t he that?’ Sk’jin asks as they walk towards the Transporter as well.

Yoongi nods.

‘What does it mean?’

‘I don’t know.’

Sk’jin exhales exasperatedly before walking forward as well. Jungkook follows him, not before shooting Hoseok a wide-eyed look.

‘It’s good to see you,’ Yoongi says out of nowhere.

‘Oh- you too,’ Hoseok replies out of reflex, a little too taken aback to say anything more.

‘I was going to call Amme myself. You did it before I could.’

‘What?’ Hoseok suddenly feels relieved. He had sent an emergency message to Amme through the NaviLet right before the Omhlophe ship had descended down on him. It was all he could think of.

‘I was thinking about it ever since—ever since I uh, woke up,’ Yoongi says quietly. ‘I think she’ll be able to tell us what’s happened during the time I was, well not awake.’

‘I really hope we’re right.’
Chapter End Notes

Author’s Notes

SO
It feels weird to have time to write
Like
What is this
Idk
And thank you to all the people who commented for the previous chapter ^_^
The upcoming chapter is gonna be, mildly put, eye opening and lots of ‘OH I SEE’
Things from AMULGOE will also be answered and explained!
But I am sorry to all my readers who are/might be confused. As a writer I always try to make my writing clear with the plot and story, and while I do want to maintain a sense of mystery and confusion relevant to the story and how the characters are feeling I don’t want to completely leave any of you in the blind either. I will do my best in writing even more now, and hope that it can be more understandable and still thrilling and entertaining.
Also welcome back Amme, my favorite character design ever.
I hope you all enjoy!!
“Equilibrium” [noun]: a state of balance in which opposing forces of influences are balanced.

Chapter Notes

ambience here!

See the end of the chapter for more notes

Sk’jin has never been aboard a Yisheng ship before. He’s not pleased to be here either, and every fiber in his being is opposed to this. But not getting on board meant having to face whatever mess they had encountered, created, and accelerated in Grisial. And Sk’jin does not have the back-up, health, or support for that sort of thing. He is also extremely curious as to why Hoseok felt he could contact Amme of all Beings to come to their rescue.

‘I’m sure Pa is fine,’ Taeh’yung tells him.

‘I didn’t even ask,’ Sk’jin replies dully, staring out of the small window one last time at Grisial before they enter the massive Hangar awaiting them.

Another mess Sk’jin has no idea how they’re going to escape or even solve. He glances at Jimin who looks at the destruction scattered around the region of Grisial they have previously been in. He doesn’t look…-well, he didn’t look fine. Physically he didn’t seem injured. He seemed weighed down though. The determination that he had after his meeting with JD is gone, replaced only with what Sk’jin can very easily identify as guilt.

‘He’ll be fine,’ Taeh’yung repeats again.

Sk’jin can only glare.

Namjoon was the least of his immediate worry right now. And sure it was terrible that he was inconveniently kidnapped by a bunch of rogue GI agents who undoubtedly had some strange plans for him and-

Sk’jin frowns at himself.

Fine he was worried about Namjoon. He was injured and greatly under-handed (no pun intended) and was taken away by some very questionable Beings for unknown purposes. Of course Sk’jin is worried.
Not just about Namjoon but also about Jimin.

Sk’jin believed (still does) that Jimin was hiding something important from them. To what degree or extent Sk’jin’s not sure. But there was something definitely going on. But it’s always felt like Jimin had a firm grasp of what happened, what was happening, and what he was going to do. And now it seemed almost as though Jimin was entirely disarmed from what he thought was happening. And Sk’jin doesn’t know if he should find this discomfiting or simply a terrible possibility that they managed to overlook.

Sk’jin is also worried about Yoongi. There was something definitely wrong with the Human. Sk’jin’s not sure how to even address or think about Yoongi anymore. It was strange to think about him as two separate Beings. This wasn’t even like what he and Zitao had had anything to do with. Sk’jin is worried about Jungkook. Here was an entirely innocent Being, marked and labeled a threat as well as an anomaly—a Being of interest for nearly every single piece of shit involved in this situation. Yet here they were, merrily strolling their way inside Amme’s ship.

This is incredibly stupid a voice that sounds too much like Namjoon’s says.

Sk’jin is also worried about Yoongi. There was something definitely wrong with the Human. Sk’jin’s not sure how to even address or think about Yoongi anymore. It was strange to think about him as two separate Beings. This wasn’t even like what he and Zitao had shared— if anything it reminds Sk’jin of something that he is definitely not comfortable thinking about. Especially here inside a Yisheng’s ship.

Then of course there’s Hoseok. Sk’jin cannot for the life of him, fathom why Hoseok would choose to reach out to Amme. Not that they had many options within the Special Jury. Sk’jin shudders to think about what would happen if he reached out to K’mara. Probably would end up being poisoned for real unlike what Yoongi liked to regularly do to them. Definitely a shared trait amongst the strangest of aliens across the Known Universe.

Sk’jin remembers reading a passage from “The Six-Hands of Our Love” that read ‘poison is the most romantic of weapons’. Sk’jin doesn’t think Yoongi intended to woo any of them while lacing their drinks with rare radioactive atoms. And K’mara for certain had no inclination of romancing anyone who had the misfortune of having tea with her.

But back to the main topic at hand.

Of course Sk’jin doesn’t believe Hoseok is actually some informant. It’s actually an idea that Sk’jin has long abandoned. Not because he thinks any of them are truly worthy of trust, but simply because none of them were cruel enough to be informants in a mission of this magnitude. Cruel enough, or simply put, naïve enough.

Then of course there’s Taeh’yung. Sk’jin isn’t worried for Taeh’yung per se. Rather he’s worried what the Zhak’gri might do. There was that expected level of unpredictability the Zhak’gri possessed sure. But there was something incredibly unsettling about his actions recently. His announcement of having destroyed the Omhlophe ship despite the fact that they learnt from Hoseok about it carrying other “eggs”. And how Taeh’yung had lovingly called them his babies. He coddled and babied Jungkook, and even Yoongi.

The Transporter they’re in lands quietly, with a small jolt as it locks into the landing frame. They all stare at Hoseok as though waiting for his move. Hoseok does not look pleased to find himself as the replacement for Namjoon.

Amme exits first, her tall frame unfurling in a strangely stiff but fluid movement. To Sk’jin’s somewhat alarm, and Jungkook’s absolute awe, a strange slithery creature is waiting for the Yisheng and climbs up her frame, draping itself over her shoulders. It’s completely black, with deep red scales that in certain angles gleam ominously. Its milky-white eyes suggest its blind, but Sk’jin would definitely not cross this creature. Clearly this was a creature native to the Khhemsa and was probably a (somewhat) tamed companion.

Somehow it felt weird that Yisheng’s would have pets. Especially ones that look like Amme. Sk’jin makes a mental note to rethink his personal biases.

Sk’jin automatically grasps both Jungkook’s and Taeh’yung’s collars before they can even take a step forward towards the now softly hissing creature. Both Taeh’yung and Jungkook give him some form of a sullen pout. Sk’jin feels the intense desire to box their ears.

‘If you will follow me,’ Amme gestures with one of her arms.

There aren’t a lot of Beings so far as Sk’jin can tell. Most of them were Yisheng-in-training, wearing the simpler versions of the robes Yishengs normally wore. Sk’jin notes that there are more androids than living Beings. Also a lot of CleanBots. Sk’jin is more than certain that Namjoon would’ve tripped over one.

This is madness a voice that sounds like Namjoon’s says very tiredly in the back of his mind. Sk’jin could do with less of this thanks.

For some reason, without even saying a thing, they walk in a way where Jungkook and Jimin are in the center. Hoseok takes the lead, while Jungkook walks right next to Jimin who is behind Hoseok. Yoongi walks a little behind Jimin, shadowing his movement and Taeh’yung is doing chaotic wide strides on the other side, randomly speeding up to say something to Hoseok or hold Jungkook’s hand. Sk’jin follows at the back giving Jungkook small reassuring (he hopes) smiles as they follow Amme deeper inside.

‘We will be headed for warp soon,’ Amme says from the front. ‘We will need to brace ourselves inside the lift.’

Hoseok turns, as though checking to see if they all got the news. Everyone nods back as though in affirmation. Hoseok gives him a pointed look and Sk’jin, instinctively, blows him a kiss. Hoseok actually smirks and winks back at him. If this had been Namjoon, the Kutsoglerin would have rolled his eyes or given him a really? look and Sk’jin would have probably continued to blow him kisses.

Oh Spaces do I actually miss that idiot Sk’jin grimaces at himself. Great, he has no outlet for his anxiety. Hoseok was way too fast thinking to tease, Jimin too sweet, Yoongi too…Yoongi, and Jungkook too innocent. And with Taeh’yung he might actually try to make-out with Sk’jin and that’s not the result he was headed for.

Sk’jin sighs, making Jimin look around in worry.

‘I’m sorry,’ he says quietly, taking a small step back to walk alongside Sk’jin. ‘I should have stayed with Namjoon.’

His head is lowered, his shoulders curled in. Just like Yoongi, he’s covered head to toe in Grisial crystal dust. He looks like the epitome of misery and hopelessness.

Sk’jin sighs again before bringing his arm around Jimin’s shoulders and giving him a small squeeze.

‘I’m sure he’ll be fine. What could they benefit from killing him?’

It’s probably not the best thing he could have said and Jimin is obviously not at all placated by this.
Even Jungkook seems to think this was not the right thing to say as he gives Sk’jin a wide-eyed look. Great, he was being reprimanded by the baby of the crew. Sk’jin sighs again.

Jimin’s shoulders seem to weigh down even more.

Amme doesn’t seem to be bothered by the heavy atmosphere that follows her into the wide seated lift. Everyone secures themselves in and Amme makes sure everyone is secured in before she also takes a seat back.

The elevator starts to move, and Sk’jin guesses they hit warp as the band of lights above the doorway quietly change from green to blue. It’s admittedly a heavy and awkward silence. No one says a thing, even when the strange creature from around Amme’s shoulders slithers down to the floor, coiling around their feet before stopping in front of Taeh’yung.

It coils upwards, gleaming body poised and great blunt head in level with Taeh’yung’s face. There’s a moment of panic when Sk’jin is terrified that either Taeh’yung or the creature will strike forwards. But there’s nothing. The creature lowers itself to the floor and makes it way towards Jimin before settling around his feet.

Jimin doesn’t really notice, though his eyes are on the floor, the top of his shorn head visible. He must have lost his beanie somewhere inside that fucking asteroid.

It’s a very painful 3 minutes before they finally come to a stop.

They all follow Amme out and into a large atrium. The massive windows are glowing faintly with filtered warp light. This somewhat makes Sk’jin feel better. Amme guides them to a great curved table with comfortable seats around it. She sits down and they follow her actions. Cups of ionized-water were already laid out at the table. Sk’jin notes that there’s an extra cup opposite his own. It’s not lost on Jimin either who eyes the empty spot next to him with diminished eyes.

‘I’m aware that you are all tired,’ Amme begins without preamble. ‘However, I believe it is better if we discuss matters at hand first before we set about to your recovery.’

‘Yisheng Amme,’ Yoongi says suddenly to everyone’s surprise, ‘You know me.’

‘I do,’ Amme nods her great head in an elegant manner. ‘There is a lot that I have to tell you. You, and everyone else here.’

‘You told me that this mission would answer my questions,’ Yoongi states.

There is no accusation in his voice, instead a sort of monotony Sk’jin is used to from GI Yoongi.

‘I did,’ Amme replies.

‘You said, “You are a Being with no direct goal or inhibition. By attending this mission you will make sure that the mission is a success- and that no one single member gains the upper-hand. These Beings have been brought in as pawns. To move about as their masters would.”’ Yoongi quotes, seemingly word for word.

It’s funny to think that Amme would have said that about Yoongi to Yoongi himself; especially with Jimin in the picture. Every single cell in Yoongi was inhibited by his dedication to Jimin. He was practically living for Jimin and nothing else.

Somehow this draws a shiver down Sk’jin’s back in a strange way.
‘You lied to me,’ Yoongi continues, ‘You knew Jimin would be here.’

Of course Yoongi had been Amme’s selection so she had known Yoongi quite extensively before this. This connection, amongst other things, was what made Sk’jin suspicious of Yoongi in the beginning. Of course that was long forgotten seeing how disgustingly whipped the Human was. It’s still odd having to hear it like this. Especially after somewhat knowing of Yoongi’s past, Amme’s apparent involvement with the Treaty between the GLA and Jimin’s System.

Amme turns her gaze towards Jimin. ‘Can you help me tell this story? It is not all mine to say.’

Jimin looks up at Amme briefly before looking at all of them around the table. He opens his mouth briefly then closes it.

He nods once, lowering his gaze and head once again.

There’s a loud slurping sound and all eyes turn to look at Jungkook and Taeh’yung, both with empty cups in their hands, wet mouths, and wide apologetic eyes at having been loud.

Hoseok reaches over and places Jungkook’s cup over the circle it had been placed in. The cup refills and Jungkook’s eyes nearly pop out of his head as he watches.

‘Let us begin.’ Amme announces.

Next to him, Hoseok sits up a little straighter, eyes focused and alert.

‘The birth of the Universe and of Life as we know of it now, started at the very center,’ Amme starts rather unexpectedly. Jimin seems to close his eyes. ‘Yisheng tore their way through–’

‘they ran away,’ Taeh’yung cuts in unexpectedly as he fiddles around with his cup. Without turning his head but simply glancing towards Amme he repeats, ‘Yisheng ran away.’

‘Yisheng ran away and came to a Being here,’ Amme corrects herself. ‘Here, Yisheng became here, and Here, he brought with him Continuum. Because with Continuum, there is no end.’

It is a cycle that exists beyond the realm of existence – beyond the realm of Matter and Time and Space. A cycle that Is. A cycle that is continuum.

‘And the First Children were born,’ Amme explains. ‘The First Children wove Matter through Time, pushed the Darkness into music and formed Space. The First Children began this cycle, letting themselves live the End so that they could form the Beginning anew.’

A cycle that unapologetically moves forward. Because where there is a beginning, there is always an end. Where there is an end, there is always a beginning.

‘All was well,’ Amme says quietly, ‘But not quite. The First Children Slept, their being seeped through the Matter that they wove, Time took them and pushed them into Darkness and into music, and then into Space. Life continued, and in Continuum they were reborn. Every single one of us are born of this Continuum. Evolving with Time, living with Darkness, dying with Music, together in this Space. And this Continuum continued, and we knew what it meant to be Alive. And Yisheng watched – the First Children slept, but Yisheng watched. Watched as the very fear they ran away from formed in this Continuum they had so carefully nurtured transformed into a continuation of disease, hatred, death, violence, and chaos.’

‘And Yisheng punished Continuum,’ Amme’s eyes turn to address Sk’jin. ‘Punished cruelly what was meant to live to a lifetime of nightmares.’
Sk’jin grimaces in reply.

She glances at Taeh’yung who was playing some sort of finger-flicking game with Jungkook over the table and says, ‘Punished cruelly the natural evolution of what would be to extinction and non-form.’

‘Punished cruelly the gentle harmony of a promise into hiding,’ she says almost tenderly to Jimin who still doesn’t look up.

‘The Universe wept and continued to push through. Because that was what was meant to happen. This is a Continuum and we live in this Cycle- what was will be again and what pain was born will be reborn again. Yisheng withdrew from this Continuum, leaving those who would take the name of Yisheng for their own to care for what could not be controlled anymore.’ Amme pauses, ‘The First Children, with the exception of a few, continued to Sleep as part of this Continuum- some simply remained, and some stole away to hide from the punishment of Yisheng. And so we lived, and so we continued, and so it went on and on. Continuum spread, grew larger, wider, stronger, and Alive. But the anger and pain of the Yisheng lived on in a few. And they gathered those who were likeminded, those who could be influenced, so that they could renew Continuum- to overwhelm the Known Universe in order to recreate it in the image of Yisheng’s original Dream.’

‘That’s how at one point, the GI were born, right?’ Hoseok asks with a small frown, ‘The Yishengs attempted to somehow not just recreate and clone all the Beings across the world, but also transfer their Life-force- their souls into a perfect recreation under their control.’

Amme nods.

‘They were not successful. You may think that this is a new attempt. A new venture. It is not.’ Amme states simply, ‘These attempts were made continuously by the many of the first Yishengs. Attempts that went terribly- some that made no results- or some that made results that could have ended in complete annihilation. In fact, the Zhak’gri were one of the first of many Beings who attempted this for themselves.’

Taeh’yung doesn’t seem to be paying attention, having somewhat dozed off for a while as Jungkook messes with his hair.

‘The stories are well known,’ Sk’jin supplies. ‘T’sayiti’k is historically known as cradle of Life of the Known Universe.’

‘It is the closest location to where we suspect Yisheng first came unto,’ Amme nods, ‘It is also the first System to completely die without Continuum.’

‘What does that mean?’ Sk’jin and Hoseok both ask at the same time.

‘One of the First Children purely created T’sayiti’k on their own. With no convention to Space, Time, Darkness, or Music, or even to the Yisheng as the others did,’ Amme explains, ‘T’sayiti’k was independent. Free. And of course, ruthlessly punished for this. But that was what held the key to Yisheng’s attempt to control Continuum. However, there was no way of finding or rebuilding what was already destroyed- no existence lived, that separated itself from the Continuum we exist in.’

‘Except for Menigišiti,’ Yoongi says quietly.

Amme nods.

‘Wait- so you’re saying, that Jimin and his System, is one of the…one of the First Children? This doesn’t even make sense? I’ve never heard of the First Children before?’ Hoseok exclaims.

‘That’s because you only know of the First Children as maybe gods,’ Amme intones carefully before adding, ‘And they’ve always existed, in some way. In a different name. Or are reborn throughout Continuum as Yishengs.’

Hoseok doesn’t look appeased by this.

‘Or as some believe, the core of planets, the heart of stars – they have always continued to exist. They exist in things we cannot yet explain.’ Amme glances out of the wide windows for a moment as though pondering the depth of her own words.

Sk’jin can’t help but look at Jimin.

Was it surprising to find out that Taeh’yung was possibly one of the (some form of) First Children? Not really. In fact it made a lot of sense. But Jimin?

‘Yisheng’s dream of controlling and living in a Continuum that defied cruelty, death, and violence may sound like an idealistic notion- one that could be done,’ Amme continues, ‘This notion was sold and propagated to few, taking their utmost loyalty and devotion in believing their cause was the correct way. Many fell for this- Yishengs, officers, desperately struggling individuals and or leaders trying to save their planets, their species.’ Amme calmly folds her hands over each other. ‘Parents, fathers, mothers, sisters, brothers, children- all worked towards what they felt was the truth to save their loved ones.’

Sk’jin doesn’t dare look at Hoseok at these words.

‘One of the many faults of this inherited dream was the continuous efforts in creating something new- in an effort of fulfilling this dream. You’re all aware of the hopelessly flawed Theory of Digitized Souls and the programs created and started in order to make it work. Most of you are all too intimately familiar with the repercussions of what it entailed. Programs like the Alter-Reality Expansion program which ultimately birthed what we label as the Akramanese.’

Sk’jin absentmindedly finds himself back in that ancient ship, distant echoes of a roaring shriek echoes around him, demanding WHY ARE YOU HERE?

‘This was also the program that ultimately was successful in creating what the Yishengs thought was the key to fulfilling this dream.’ Amme continues.

‘What?’ Hoseok interjects sharply. ‘You’re saying the Yisheng’s managed to create a Digitized Soul?’

‘Yisheng did. But the Digitized Soul that was created managed to lose themselves- falling away from what he knew would ultimately lead to the complete destruction of Continuum.’

‘He was beautiful,’ Taeh’yung supplies, eyes still closed, ‘Beautiful, tired- he just wanted to rest.’

Hoseok looks like he wants to ask questions but Sk’jin quietly grabs his arm with a small shake of his head.

‘We will probably never understand, or realize how it happened, what happened; and perhaps that is for the better,’ Amme concludes. ‘

‘How do you know any of this?’ Hoseok demands, ‘I appreciate the history lesson but this isn’t exactly explaining much of anything other than what happened within the Gaia Case.’
‘The Gaia Case was never properly concluded,’ Amme replies, ‘There was much that was left that needed answering, too much that was left unsolved- sorrow and horror that was too much to understand. But we who were all rooted in the case knew we needed to understand one thing. How exactly did the Akramanese come so close to this victory?’

‘Because they found us,’ Jimin says quietly.

‘When the Akramanese found “Bhumi”- that’s when they were able to make their way to victory? And that victory is creating digitized souls?’ Hoseok presses. ‘So the Akramanese were aware of what Jimin’s System really was? If this whole thing about the First Children shit is considered real.’

‘As an agent who was so closely involved with the Gaia Case and the main catalyst to expose the Venture Unit, I’m sure you were aware that the Akramanese were a discarded experiment conducted by the Yishengs who managed to resuscitate themselves?’ Amme questions though it’s more of a statement, ‘Would it make sense that the Akramanese are in fact, Yishengs who took it upon themselves to change and push themselves?’

This is definitely new information.

Even Yoongi doesn’t hide his surprise, the furrow between his brows deep.

‘The Akramanese were once Yishengs, turned and torn apart, alive only with one persistent goal in mind – to fulfill the dream. Corrupted in their Life-force, changed in every sense, but still living for one dream. And it was almost as though it was this change that allowed them to so closely nearly succeed.’ Amme pauses, rearranging her arms. ‘The myth and legend of the First Children was once popularly retold many many light years ago. And it was almost a holy scripture for those who followed the Yisheng’s dream. The Akramanese in their one-minded goal, searched for what they knew remained of the true First Children. And that is Menigišiti.

‘Wait- but we know that the GLA tried to approach them. And amongst them was Ndica who I might point out was the very Yisheng who lead this whole fucking GI operation,’ Sk’jin frowns.

Amme raises all 4 hands, the air shimmering briefly before a slit over the table opens and projects a thin light.

‘This is the dream of the Yisheng,’ she illustrates, a glowing green ring of light that pulses lightly. ‘And here is the twisted birth of the Akramanese.’ She extract a red ring of light from the green and places it opposite the green one. With one hand she illustrates out a pale silver orb in the center of these two rings. ‘Here is what they both want- a Digitized Soul, or a control mechanism that will allow them to alter and change Continuum in accordance to the dream. ‘In their individual journeys, each of these two created and destroyed and recreated what they hoped would fulfill this dream. And the most significant of these creations are the GI.’ Amme pulls down a simply black ring out of the green one. ‘Bodies, minds, and senses of carefully harvested Beings, multiplied, duplicated, and grown in hopes of fulfilling specifications and ideals of the perfect gathered Species.’

‘Noah’s Ark,’ Yoongi says quietly.

‘And this,’ Amme pulls out a white ring out of the red ring and places it opposite the GI ring. ‘This is the creation we now know as the Omhlophe. Realize that the Akramanese are the twisted and crueler versions of the Yishengs.’

‘They both seem about the same to me,’ Sk’jin says quietly.
‘You are right,’ Amme almost sounds sheepish. ‘But they each lacked what they were truly created for. The GI were no more than living bodies no more sentient than a simple cyborg. And the Omhlophe were too ruined by the chaos the Akramanese bred wherever they went. They could not find a way to instill the perfection of the dream they both sought after so desperately.’

‘This is from where the Yishengs before Ndica, following the myth and stories of the First Children, had the mind to nestle their harvest deep into the core of planets and Systems and even black-holes.’

A sudden rush of anger overtakes Sk’jin, his mind flashing with vivid images of Ynqaba, of Bhan, of Camat- of Jungkook.

‘How long have you known?’ Sk’jin demands. ‘You seem pretty well versed in all of this. How the fuck do you know all of this?’

‘Because I once believed in this dream.’

There’s an explosion of movement as everyone pushes out of their seats. Yoongi has Jimin behind him, bodily shielding him and quiet suddenly wielding double Heliods. Sk’jin finds himself being pulled away by Hoseok. Jungkook is crouched down, startled and terrified at the sudden change in atmosphere. Only Taeh’yung hasn’t moved, lazily eyeing Amme.

‘That is no longer my dream,’ Amme tells them patiently. ‘I would not see it happen.’

Somehow they all find themselves looking at Taeh’yung. He eyes them all as though confused and shrugs.

Jimin is the first to take back his seat.

Hoseok chooses the stand.

‘When I was first discovered, it was Ndica who brought me out of Khhemsa to train at the Yisheng Directory. It was here he taught me, he guided me. It was here he told me of the First Children, and of the dream. I believed in it- I believed in him. It was easy, to give into this utopia of a peaceful continuum, to exist without pain, without death, without suffering. Ndica continued to guide me, showing me his grander plans. But I was only told of how we could better the Universe if we could find a way to eradicate the root of pain. I was naïve and did not realize the extent of Ndica’s plans of controlling the Universe as we know it.’

Sk’jin can’t help but roll his eyes.

‘I understood the extent of his plans, once he took me to Axudar and told me the story of the Eclipsing Travellers.’

‘Like all planets- their view on the cosmic sky is simply a selective view of the universe from their orbit around their sun- and for many millennia they’ve always documented and observed a few stars- or unidentified cosmic bodies – from their System.’

‘Menigišiti,’ Yoongi had said quietly.

Namjoon nods, ‘I believe that’s what it is- we calculated and projected their images and documentation of the stars and yes- it fits nearly perfectly with where Megibiya is. And if as Jimin had suspected before, if his System did sometimes lose their camouflage ability, they would have been able to see the light of their sun- creating a rather eclipsing effect of visibility to observers.’
‘You think this is where maybe all those years ago, they were able to find Jimin’s System?’

‘It’s a possibility. Axudar has 3 habitable planets and they’re all a part of the GLA. For a long time. And not just that, but Ndica was born there.’ Namjoon says carefully as he taps on the screen and a planet appears instead of the ship. ‘He is a native of the planet of Kaitūtei. And I don’t want to… imply anything, but they are the original founders of one of the scientific boards that supported the Theory of Digitized Souls.’

‘Ndica believed that Menigišiti was the last of the First Children to exist in this Continuum?’ Sk’jin ventures to ask.

Amme nods.

‘It was difficult to find evidence, it was difficult to even track that region or study it. It took Ndica nearly over 8 centuries to finally find a way in. And it was almost an accident.’ Amme replies, ‘I was there when Menigišiti first opened to us- a life beyond the radioactive shield that none of us at the time could understand. And there we were able to find you.’

Jimin looks up briefly before looking down again.

‘Ndica tried his best to keep it a secret. But I knew he should not be allowed to undertake this.’

‘How awfully good of you,’ Sk’jin breathes out.

‘I contacted K’mara of the GIU,’ Amme tells them quite simply, as though this was not a big deal. So Amme and K’mara were definitely working together. Great, how absolutely comfortable and wonderful. If Namjoon were here he’d be throwing a fit.

‘K’mara immediately responded and appeared, and Ndica had no choice but to approach Menigišiti as the GLA would naturally when approaching a newly discovered System,’ Amme explains. ‘It might be worth adding, as a way of praising the Khol’isa, that K’mara was already investigating the hidden programs and agendas of the Yishengs.’

‘I take absolutely no credit in this,’ Sk’jin shrugs.

‘But were you not the one who exposed the connection of the Alliance with the Venture Unit?’ Amme glibly replies.

Sk’jin grimaces, ignoring Hoseok’s inquiring gaze.

‘The Menigišiti were not pleased to be discovered. They were not willing to sign with the GLA, and declared that they would never leave their System or attempt to reach out so long as the GLA let them be.’ Amme continues before addressing Jimin, ‘Is this correct?’

Jimin nods mutely.

‘Some centuries after this treaty was signed and the GLA left Menigišiti as it were, that is when I met Min Yoongi.’ Amme nods towards Yoongi. ‘He spoke to me, told me of what happened to him. I could not understand, nor believe what the Yisheng Tlun’hla was truly doing. The dream they shared not only divided their understanding and desires for the Universe but completely misguided each and every single one of them involved. The GI were never originally created to be weapons- Ndica, and the Yisheng Sstion had never intended for their usage to continue the birth of violence. I brought this matter forth to K’mara. And thus we started to work together to uncover the secrets of the GI, of the Yishengs, and ultimately of the Treaty.’
K’mara focused on the GI and the Yishengs- but I knew there was something more. I knew Ndica would not so easily lose what the Menigišiti System had to offer. But we were apparently too late to truly find out what happened. After meeting and talking with Yoongi, I discovered more of the GI program, and discovered the long history of their genesis. I was too late in stopping what I immediately knew was an attempt by both Ndica and Tlun’hlα to access Menigišiti when Yoongi and his selected team were sent to Bhumi. I do not think Ndica or Tlun’hlα ever suspected the Akramanese to appear there either.’

Jimin’s expression changes a little bit at that, as though confused. And Sk’jin has to work hard to control his own features.

Amme didn’t know.

Of course she didn’t.

Ndica had contacted Jimin and his System. Had told them that there was a problem, it was the reason why Jimin had even left his planet, rushing to Megibīya to protect his own. Jimin had said they suspected a trap hatched by the GLA to somehow trap them. It’s why Jimin had taken his sister’s place to approach Megibīya instead while she left to meet with Ndica on what happened. Suddenly a very cold weight drops heavily in his stomach

‘Ndica was the one who lead the late rescue to Bhumi- I managed to get myself there even though I was repeatedly denied access – I pushed through.’ Amme says gently, ‘It was there that we discovered the remains of a strange destruction- one we did not recognize before, but after that point would become frequent and synonymous to that of the Akramanese. And there I met you again Yoongi. Except you were…you were remade- remade and multiplied. And there were many others like you, in great massive recreations. I sensed such a strange creation within you- within the others- and this was when I realized that…that you were not born out of this Continuum.’

Jimin’s eyes close, as though hoping that what Amme said would simply be a dream if he closed his eyes.

‘What does that mean?’

‘All of my babies still have Memory,’ Taeh’yung interrupts, ‘Don’t make it sound like they’re aliens Amme.’

‘It means they’re not supposed to be here, not like this,’ Jimin says quietly before he continues, ‘What- what Amme has said is…is true. I believe it is.’

Everyone turns to look at Jimin, waiting quietly as he seems to gather himself to speak.

‘Menigišiti is an…is an ancient place,’ Jimin begins quietly, ‘We were born of the First Children. Hiding for safety, to protect her children. But Menigišiti sang to us, she sang and hid us within the Darkness- she spoke words of connection, of harmony, weaving us together inside. And we were born of her, created within her, connected and even if we were divided with our planets, lived as one, tied to her fate. Menigišiti wanted us to be free, to live as we wished. But she wanted to save us from what hid beyond the Darkness. And so the mother,’ Jimin says the word carefully, almost dissatisfied with it, ‘was born- our Heart that lived for harmony.’

‘And there was fate?’ Yoongi asks quietly.

Jimin nods.

‘Fate let us stay, drew us together,’ Jimin breathes out slowly, ‘Fate found us whole and safe.’
‘But you were taken from Menigišiti,’ Hoseok is trying to understand. And Sk’jin can understand why it’s difficult for Hoseok to really see what any of this meant.

This went beyond fantasy- this wasn’t some fictional entertainment wildly put together in a children’s story. This went to the heart of creation, where chaos and darkness were actual forms of power, emotion, and awareness. This was a magic that broke the laws of Continuum.

This was a place as ancient as Time itself.

‘When I was taken by the Red- by the Akramanese,’ Jimin says carefully as though it pained him. ‘I was not taken to be…to be duplicated. I was put into Darkness, so that those who were born and made out of-…out of Continuum would find me. And through me, would continue to live.’

‘They didn’t need a Digitized Soul if they had Jimin,’ Yoongi explains. ‘For those of us who were created, all we wanted was to be found. And…’

And Yoongi did, more or less, find Jimin.

‘So how was Jimin in your custody?’ Hoseok asks.

‘When the Akramanese came to Earth, and the Yishengs fought to counter them, their ship was rescued.’

Sk’jin remembers it. A rusty coloured ship the size of a small planet and shaped almost like one. He remembers how it shattered, with Earth dissipated into space dust around it.

‘And within it, unlike the others who slept there, we found Jimin at the very core.’ Amme explains. ‘I was charged by the Court to discover more. I didn’t have to look far. Because I remembered Jimin when I first went to Menigišiti with Ndica. This discovery of the beings created and harvested by the Akramanese was…it was beyond what any of us were expecting. When the Yisheng-in-training Anningan Yixing first brought to us the OrTank of zygotes, I prepared myself to expect something. But I could not fathom the extent of their creation- especially after discovering how much they made in such a short time.’

‘But they’ve been around much longer?’ Hoseok asks carefully.

‘But they only succeeded once they were able to take Jimin. What we found in their ship was what they had managed to create after they were able to form their own Continuum with Jimin in the center.’

Something clicks.

‘So that’s why those GI could find you?’ Sk’jin frowns. ‘But that doesn’t make sense- the GI were formed without any influence from Jimin-’

‘That’s because Yoongi, and some of the GI are entirely different from what you understand are the Galactic Inquisition.’ Amme explains. ‘When I arrived in Bhumi, and I found Yoongi, and others like him, Ndica was adamant in having them destroyed.’

Jimin visibly blanches at this.

‘We found 563 OrTanks. We believe the Akramanese must have left in a hurry, or they would not have abandoned their creations like this. ’ Amme says gently. ‘Ndica took them back to Tlun’hla and studied them compared to what we now call the GI. I was distrusted by Tlun’hla, and Ndica attempted to have me leave. I was banished by the Directory, charged with disobedience and negligence of our oath. But before I was made to leave, I found my way below the Headquarters. When I discovered what lay right below my feet, I knew the difference. Because amidst that emptiness, amidst that void, a lingering memory existed in precious few forms.’

And there I found you. I could not save every single OrTank found in Bhumi. I took you, Yoongi, and 57 others before Ndica and Tlun’hla destroyed the rest.’

Yoongi doesn’t seem too disturbed by this information.

‘I was banished from Šerdesas, disgraced within the Directory. Tlun’hla attempted to have me killed. But I was able to make my escape. I found myself travelling far, following what records I could find of the mannerism and trajectory of the Akramanese, to find what they had done. I travelled to T’sayiti’k to attempt to find what I could. I tried to find and speak to the survivors from the Gaia Case.’

‘-don’t fucking touch them-’ Taeh’yung suddenly hisses, an animalistic look taking over his face.

‘I could not find them,’ Amme says, unperturbed. ‘All I had heard was amidst those found in Bhumi, other Beings who were not created by the Akramanese were there too. Beings who I believed were initially brought in and stolen in order to build and develop what we know as the Omhlophe. Ndica declared them hostiles - he sent away those who remained to Teronko’ng Prison,’ Amme concludes.

Somehow, this makes Taeh’yung giggle from where he sits.

‘Where are they?’ Jimin asks quietly.

Amme pauses a moment before she says, ‘Those created in your Continuum rest peacefully and undisturbed under the care of the Yishengs until they are ready to be found.’

Jimin nods at that.

‘What about these uh, non GI-GI?’ Hoseok asks, ‘What did you do?’

‘Amongst those who continued to be awake, only a handful remained somewhat alert. Many woke before Yoongi, their sense of purpose questioned. I allowed them to explore as they saw fit- many did not survive. Those who managed to understand, those who became, managed to gather the true GI to themselves.’

Yoongi looks at Amme with wide eyes at this.

‘Yoongi is different,’ Amme says with what Sk’jin can only assume is some form of smile. ‘How he awoke.’

‘-it was Zhoumi,’ Yoongi says almost breathlessly. ‘He gave me the Android-Core.’

‘Zhoumi was one of the unfortunate Beings caught up in the dream,’ Amme says, her tone regretful. ‘His curiosity was what ended up nearly killing him.’

‘Good riddance,’ Sk’jin scathingly says under his breath, his memory of the older Long Huon still fresh in his mind. Zitao’s distrust and fear bitter in his own throat.

‘It’s not only that,’ Amme continues to address Yoongi. ‘You came back.’

So the other GI- that other Yoongi who had invaded the ship in Grisial, they had no former memory? But they had awareness?

‘Yoongi, after you awoke, after you came into realization and you came to speak to me, I took this time to study you.’ Amme says. ‘I wanted to observe your growth, your development. And I did this in proximity, as with the others like you, with where we kept Jimin.’

Sk’jin feels like this is definitely a very questionable experiment that definitely breaks a few protocols somewhere or another.

‘Your development rapidly increased with your prolonged exposure to Jimin- more so than the others,’ Amme explains.

Neither Yoongi nor Jimin say anything to do.

‘Wait- you’re saying only Yoongi has been the one to well, come back as himself?’ Hoseok demands.

‘You are correct,’ Amme replies.

‘What about me?’

It’s Jungkook who asks this. He looks apprehensive, fearful, but most of all adamant.

‘And about- about mother?’

‘Jungkookie is my baby,’ Taeh’yung says fondly, ‘Not like Yoongi – but like the others.’

‘They placed massive devices in the atmosphere, they altered the weather, changed the atmosphere. They drilled the surfaces of our lands, drilled deep into our oceans. They removed things, they put things- I still don’t know the full extent of what they actually did but…but slowly…’ Bhān sighs out slowly. ‘Slowly things just started to die.’

Jungkook was definitely created by the Yishengs. Essentially GI material. But he had been aboard the Yisheng ships that had come to Ynqaba under the pretense of bring aid. They had in fact been using Ynqaba and possible her core to somehow nurture their creations if what Amme said was to be believed. And as for Jungkook’s Khol’isa mother.

There was definitely something different with her. Especially based on what Jungkook said about her headaches and the pain she went through the same way Yoongi did.

‘We say we fought the Alliance and threw them down- but it was just…it was just timing I guess. Something went wrong with the ships- there was a temporary failure and over at Lowet, one of the ships actually detonated completely. So the leader went there, leaving behind the ship docked here. And for a while, we already knew something was wrong- we could already sense that they were bringing us harm. So many threw themselves forward, and they overwhelmed the ship. There weren’t a lot of them- those who came with the leader. So it was easy to overthrow their defenses once they got into the ships. One of them crashed not too far from here, and ended the experiments. But the effects still lasted. One by one, the Alliance was overthrown, and they were defeated.’

Bhān had misunderstood the Yisheng’s identity, seeing as Ndica used the Alliance as a cover-up for his actions. And whatever happened at Lowet could have somehow been related to the Akramanese. As Ndica never came back to Ynqaba after checking on Lowet, Sk’jin assumes the Yisheng must have fled and abandoned what was left for the Akramanese to take over. And the Akramanese sent the Omhlophe to gather what the Yishengs had abandoned scattered over those unfortunate planets.
‘Is there a relationship between the region of Ynqaba and the First Children?’ Sk’jin asks.

Amme pauses a moment, almost studying Sk’jin’s question.

‘The dead-space that borders the regions of Ynqaba and Ymir is different from what studies have gathered of other similar expanses of space,’ Amme answers, ‘We have no quantifiable evidence.’

Sk’jin grimaces at the memory of the Nightmare Planet. Jimin catches his eye for a brief second, clearly thinking along those lines himself.

‘It’s very old!’ Taeh’yung offers. Sk’jin is reminded of Taeh’yung’s “attempts” at creating life there in Ymir and suddenly the Zhak’gri’s actions don’t seem so random anymore.

‘So why are the Omhlophe after Jimin?’ Hoseok seemed to have a set of question that needed answering and he was going to do everything required to get those answers.

‘I think, if we can believe what we have observed with the behavior of the Akramanese reflecting that of the Yishengs, down to how they performed their operations and methods of creation, but in a twisted fashion; we can assume the Omhlophe have inherited the behavior of the Akramanese and are now attempting to get Jimin back,’ Amme replies.

‘But you knew this beforehand didn’t you?’ Hoseok presses. ‘You purposefully sent Jimin out with us, straight for Megibīya. So what really is the purpose of this mission?’

Sk’jin feels himself sitting up straighter at the question.

This was it. This was the main reason why they were here, in some twisted attempt at fulfilling a mission that was doomed from the start.

‘The Special Jury were originally tasked with the purpose of exterminating the Akramanese creation.’ Amme states.

‘What-?’ Hoseok exhales out.

Jimin’s eyes widen in horror as Yoongi sits, unmoving in his shock. Sk’jin is personally not too surprised to hear this.

‘The Court believed that the creation and existence of the Akramanese creations, as well as those of the GI are not only an unidentifiable and unpredictable threat to the nature of the Universe as a whole, but are also an unnatural existence that defies that norms of the Known Universe.’

‘A bit rich coming from the same organization that created the Androids and AI,’ Sk’jin sighs out tiredly. The hypocrisy just wouldn’t stop.

‘However, though there are those in the Jury who are in favor of this-‘ Sk’jin hears Hoseok snort derisively, ‘K’mara and myself believe that this should not take place. We were able to come to an agreement. That a special unit of Beings would find a way back into Bhumi, into Menigišiti where we would be able to return those born on that Continuum would be able to live in there.’

‘That’s quite risky considering Jimin wasn’t even awake,’ Sk’jin remarks.

‘We hoped it would be enough time and…’ Amme trails off a little. ‘Jimin, though in his state at the time, made no reaction or response to any of our attempts to reach him, reacted the most in the presence of those born in his Continuum. The same way Yoongi changed, Jimin reacted as well.’
Wow, the power of love, am I right? Sk’jin could snort. Fuck, he wished Namjoon was there so that he could have whispered it to him for a comedic reaction.

‘The Court really doesn’t know about this mission do they?’ Sk’jin questions.

‘No,’ Amme confirms. ‘They are adamant in destroying these creations.’

‘Is that why you couldn’t just warp out the entirety of their lot to Bhumi?’ Hoseok asks before he frowns, ‘Who really is watching over those OrTanks now?’

‘While the GLA are overseeing them in the Directory, the authority over them lies with the Court.’ Amme explains.

‘It’s been 5 sols now,’ Hoseok doesn’t look convinced in any way, ‘Why haven’t they gotten rid of them until now? Why have you just started this “mission” now?’

‘This is because the Court believed we could use these creations to benefit biotechnology progress in fields of medicine, military, and longevity.’ Amme explains patiently, ‘Ever since the Yisheng Directory lost face, the Court wished to reduce the GLA’s dependence on us. They believed that these new Beings would be able to-

‘-experiments, test subjects,’ Hoseok frowns.

Amme nods and says, ‘Lal Haenoon was able to prevent this from happening.’

Now that was certainly shocking.

‘Lal Haenoon and Xmi are working hard at the Courts to push the deadlines of their sentence to destroy the gathered OrTanks from both the Akramanese ship, as well as those who remain in the GI.’

‘What angle are they going for?’

‘They have said that they need to make sure that their destruction would not cause a reaction within our Continuum,’ Amme explains. ‘Which is why the Yishengs were tasked with finding this out. Therefore, it came under my care.’

‘That’s a pretty decent plan,’ Sk’jin says under his breath, somewhat mildly impressed. Maybe Haenoon wasn’t as shitty and slimy as he suspected.

‘So how do you plan, if we succeed and are able to get Jimin to Bhumi or something, to ship off a very large host of sleeping Beings?’ Hoseok presses. Sk’jin vaguely wonders if Hoseok’s always been like this, or if it was an agent thing, and if his officers were somewhat terrified of his drilling. Sk’jin’s only known Hoseok to occasionally give a comment or ask a question before.

This was very new and somewhat a breath of fresh air because Sk’jin is currently not at his best to make any inquiries.

‘The Jury has decided that K’mara and Lmiura will set up one of the GIU Motherships to bring them out of Tayi, under the guise of bringing them away from possibilities of causing a reaction to the living Beings in the System,’ Amme replies, unperturbed and not at all annoyed by Hoseok’s continuous questioning. ‘Chief Shn’ow will then stage a diversion that would then appear to overtake K’mara and Lmiura, when in fact they would then have the time to warp to Bhumi where I believe you will have the time to receive and bring them in.’
Hoseok frowns; and so does Sk’jin. That was an incredibly dangerous plan.

‘You do know that Shn’ow and S’ava are involved with the Alliance?’

Amme doesn’t react to that but simply nods.

‘Did Shn’ow’s diversion involved the Alliance in the form of Lal Haenoon?’

‘It did.’

Hoseok curses out loud while Sk’jin curses inwardly.

Well. That was what that was about then.

‘It would seem that your run-in with Lal Haenoon was an unfortunate situation we could not have predicted.’ Amme says rather lightly, as though they hadn’t pretty much messed up the diversion plan that would allow the eggs to be transported out of Tayi.

So that had been the plan. Shn’ow would pull his contact with Lal Haenoon and use the Alliance as a way to legitimately traffic the eggs, while looking as though the entire operation had been upstaged by some internal betrayal. Of course this sort of mass-shipment of illegal aliens would be up the Alliance’s alley – if anyone could do it with secrecy and with that quantity, it would be the Alliance.

‘So that’s why S’ava wasn’t there at the Jury?’ Hoseok questions, ‘He was setting up the situation with Haenoon- he was ready to take the blame for double-crossing the GLA in order to get the eggs out.’

Amme nods and says with a tone of regret, ‘Unfortunately, with what happened with Lal Haenoon, who according to his report sent back to S’ava and then to Shn’ow, believed that you had been an attempt to sabotage this mission – S’ava has had to flee.’ She pauses a moment to look at all of them. ‘We are aware that it is not the best of strategies, but we cannot operate at a deeper level as we would be discovered.’

‘Simplicity is the most desirable,’ Sk’jin finds himself quoting “The Six Hands of Our Love” yet again.

‘That is indeed true,’ Amme nods.

Sk’jin nearly laughs.

‘We were also a diversion weren’t we? You were all aware of the Omhlophe.’ Hoseok declares. ‘You wanted to send us off to drag them away from Tayi.’

‘That is true. We knew they were there, just beyond Raksane Tayi, still clinging to the ways of their creators, to take back what they believed was their responsibility.’ Amme explains. ‘We could not catch them. We could not attempt to communicate with them either. I was correct in my assumption that they would pursue you – their need for the OrTanks is only superficial. What they want is Jimin.’

‘It would have been nice if you told us from the beginning,’ Sk’jin frowns. ‘It would have really saved a lot of trouble for us.’

‘I did not trust the others,’ Amme tells them quite frankly.
'What? You and K’mara are like bffs,’ Sk’jin snorts.

‘We may have worked together,’ Amme acknowledges, ‘But that does not mean I would trust what she wanted to do. K’mara had an entire planet, Heiho, destroyed to eradicate the possible influence of the Akramanese that lingered there. K’mara is loyal only to an existence where she can continue to exist as she is.’

‘What are you loyal to?’ Yoongi asks.

‘I am loyal to Life,’ Amme replies.

There’s a sort of sticky silence that follows this and a very evident understanding between the entire crew that they were not particularly pleased with this answer.

‘Are you saying that there is a possibility that members of the Special Jury would find something to gain for themselves with the outcome of this mission?’ Hoseok is not saying it out loud, but considering their run-in with the Alliance, what they discovered about Van Seulgaan and his connections with the GLA, Sk’jin knows exactly what he’s referring to.

The Akramanese creations and remaining GI were literally perfect for the business the Alliance dealt with. Not only did the Court more or less declare these creations as non-species of this Universe, they did not qualify under the definition of a living Being, protected by the GLA. These creations were possible massive economic exploits.

Clearly this is exactly what Amme was afraid of.

Because despite everything- Amme was a Yisheng. Yisheng valued life, they valued existence. And while Sk’jin would only trust Amme as far as he could throw her (which would not be a lot), he could trust the fact that she would not see these evidently living Beings as possible business assets.

But Lal Haenoon? Or Chief Xmi, Chief Shn’ow, or even Chief Lmiura.

Sure Lal Haenoon and Xmi had thought up of a way for the Court not to immediately execute the eggs, but what if it was for an entirely selfish motive? What if they were simply looking for a way where they could ultimately benefit from the continued existence of the eggs?

Or even Lmiura. She had lost her partner/husband (?) in a situation from the Gaia Case involving the GI from what Sk’jin remembers digging up on her past. Could her sorrow manifested into something that could lead to the desire for destruction of these illegally and immorally created Beings.

Keeping them in the dark as they carried out this mission, from the true light of its nature so that none of the Special Jury members could gain an upper-hand at their own motives, had clearly been one that they all agreed to, to start them all of with a massive disability.

‘There is that possibility of course. Is it not why you called me instead of Lal Haenoon?’ Amme replies back to Hoseok’s question. ‘You’ve kept my contact saved- that too, the non-authorized channel that can only be accessed through a deep-dive.’

And Sk’jin grudgingly admits again that of course, Hoseok had been right in calling Amme out of everyone in the Jury to help them out.

‘So now I would like to ask Jimin, the Fate of Menigišiti, if he would be willing to take these creations in.’ Amme turns to address Jimin.
‘…what report has been made in regards to Menigišiti so far?’ Jimin asks carefully. ‘What happened after Megibīya was taken? After Ndica came to claim the rewards of his betrayal?’

‘There are no reports,’ Amme says, tone regretful. ‘The Treaty had already been in place, and no one was meant to approach or attempt to communicate with Menigišiti.’

Jemin shows no reaction to this, but only nods.

‘I see,’ he says before adding, ‘I will accept. They have found me, and I will lead them, if they are willing.’

‘We will need protection,’ Hoseok says immediately. ‘We will need a new ship. We cannot go to Menigišiti in a Yisheng ship, you know this.’

‘Of course. I have a ship outfitted for you that you may take and adapt as you wish.’ Amme graciously raises a hand. The glowing rings shimmer before twinkling away. The slit on the table closes shut seamlessly.

‘You will need to call out the Omhlophe at a GLA security level,’ Hoseok persists. ‘There is no point in trying to keep this under wraps. I’m sure they can be easily disguised as Alliance-members or fanatic-pirates. The Court would be more than happy to have them taken care of.’

‘I cannot make that call,’ Amme says carefully. ‘If I am to report it, I would be registered and implicated. My involvement in this meeting we are having right now would be exposed and I would be pulled out of the Jury.’

Hoseok frowns at that.

‘We can handle that once we get out of here,’ Yoongi says quietly.

Hoseok studies Yoongi carefully before nodding once.

‘I will take you to the Tyochi Binary System.’ Amme tells them. ‘We will arrive in 37 hours.’

‘Namjoon?’ Jungkook asks quietly.

‘We can begin tracking him,’ Yoongi tells him quietly before looking at Amme expectantly.

‘You will find all you need in your respective cabins,’ Amme replies, waving one arm to the side towards the other end of the massive space they were in. ‘You may take this time to rest.’

 Somehow everyone manages to roll their eyes, even Jungkook, at this statement.

There’s a short rather pregnant pause before Amme stands up.

‘If you need anything, please do not hesitate to ask.’

She walks away from the table, shortly followed the slithering creature that Sk’jin had forgotten had coiled itself around his feet. Now his feet were cold. Great.

Hoseok breaks the silence by collapsing on his chair and slumping forward on the table, forehead smacking on the surface rather loudly. Taeh’yung yawns loudly, stretching his body as his joints pop loudly. Jungkook watches them all apprehensively, unsure what to do. Sk’jin slumps back on the seat, closing his eyes.

‘Really wish Namjoon were here,’ Sk’jin finds himself saying.
There’s a hum of agreement from Hoseok.

There’s a small sound and opening one eye, Sk’jin watches as Jimin gets up from his chair and quietly walks away.

Yoongi is also getting up, clearly making to follow and before Sk’jin can stop him, Taeh’yung reaches over with his long arm and stops Yoongi.

‘This is a lot for him,’ Hoseok says without looking up. ‘It’s a lot for all of us- but most of all Jimin.’

‘Let him think by himself for a while,’ Taeh’yung smiles at Yoongi, ‘He’ll come to you when he’s ready.’

Hoseok sighs, groaning as he pushes himself up.

‘You know- that was a lot. But I think there’s something else. One final thing we’re missing.’

Sk’jin agrees.

‘And I think Jimin is thinking that too.’

‘What is it?’ Yoongi asks, still not sitting down.

‘I think Ndica was more involved with Jimin’s System than we can assume- more than what Amme herself has been able to find. She knows that too.’ Hoseok explains as he slumps back on the chair. ‘Let’s not forget our invisibility device- that’s straight out of Jimin’s tech. And it’s definitely not going to be some lose debris they just happened to find either. There was a very deliberate action taken when that device was used.’

‘You’re saying that someone from inside betrayed Jimin and his sister?’ Yoongi frowns. ‘But why?’

‘Because all Life is Continuum,’ Taeh’yung drags Yoongi back to sit down before yawning greatly. ‘And even if you hide, you will fall back into Time eventually.’

‘But their Continuum is different from what we know here,’ Sk’jin tiredly questions. ‘Isn’t it?’

Taeh’yung just gives him a lopsided grin, ‘Oh maybe it was for a while. But it will catch up. That’s what they didn’t understand- what an idiot,’ Taeh’yung chuckles before closing his eyes, ‘- they thought they could change Continuum. How could it when they were the one to bring everything they hated here?’

Taeh’yung snorts a little bit more and Sk’jin doesn’t bother trying to understand Taeh’yung’s commentary.

‘Hey buggy,’ Hoseok yawns, leaning his head against his hand tiredly, ‘Next time please don’t just dive out like that okay? I don’t care if you’re like, god or something- that was risky.’

‘Sorry,’ Taeh’yung makes a sad whiney face, ‘I got excited, and I was angry.’

‘I can’t-…I can’t believe you went after the ship like that,’ Hoseok says quietly. ‘Knowing what was in it.’

Taeh’yung just shrugs in reply, ‘It’ll be fine.’
None of them have the energy to argue or question that.

‘What do we do about Namjoon?’ Yoongi asks, changing the topic.

‘You can track him right?’ Hoseok asks, looking a bit more alert.

‘They won’t hurt him,’ Taeh’yung says again with that confidence. ‘Not with his connection to Jimin.’

‘But why would they try to kill Yoongi then?’ Hoseok inquires confusedly.

‘Because of his connection to Jimin!’ Taeh’yung replies with a thumb’s up.

‘Right-’ Hoseok frowns a bit as he pushes himself up from the chair. ‘Yoongi let’s go and track Namjoon. Amme said we’d find what we need in the cabins. Let’s go see what we have.’

Yoongi nods, sitting up and walking away with Hoseok.

Jungkook immediately moves to Hoseok’s seat looking over Sk’jin carefully.

‘Hey Kookie, you okay? No injuries right?’ Sk’jin asks, reaching over to comb through Jungkook’s hair.

Jungkook leans into his touch, exhaling quietly.

‘What will we do?’ he asks quietly.

Taeh’yung watches, blinking slowly as though sleepy though his eyes are alert.

‘We’re gonna go and get Namjoon,’ Sk’jin replies.

‘And after?’

‘Well- let’s see what Namjoon has to say after all we have to tell him.’ Sk’jin replies as honestly as he can.

With the true intention of the mission now waving across their face, it really makes Sk’jin have to rethink a lot of things.

Of course they would want to destroy the “eggs”. And of course these eggs were already somehow taken as a point of interest by the Alliance.

Abomination

Seulgaan had said that in reference to Jimin.

Sk’jin knows all too well the Tayian’s opinion of issues such as immortality and the continuation of life. It was not approved at all, and looked at as a force against the natural flow of Continuum. Against the natural flow of the Life-cycle.

But this was not a sentiment shared by a lot of the Known Universe. To an extent, from what they could see with especially Yoongi, he had essentially come back whole and complete. Though it would seem that Taeh’yung would argue that was not so. But this was the closest to immortality- to complete cloning they had gotten to. And this could only lead to a lot of issues the GLA clearly do not want to undertake.
The Omhlophe had called themselves the Pure Ones. These eggs were harvested, created with the purpose of being perfect. Of being the purest of their own species. Jungkook as an egg of the Pravasi M’hanun was not only a perfect specimen of his tainted and diminished population and planet, but a much stronger, clearly more intelligent, and all over the most likely to overwhelm and overtake his lesser species fellowmen.

Yoongi as a Human- one of the weakest species across the Known Universe, was an extremely powerful Being- not just in strength, but also in mind. His recovery and growth into a completely aware Being with what appeared to be two separate awareness within him? Forget Humans, no species could be this strong to withstand such pressure and absolute disorientation. Even Khol’isa, though their memories mapped far into the past well into regions of the darkest of history, lost parts of themselves with each rebirth. Sk’jin today was light-years different from the one even a millennia ago.

And what about a pure-blooded, perfect Khol’isa?

Sk’jin finds himself shuddering at the possibility.

The Court’s decision was also one of self-preservation. Did the Jury really decide (not all of them) to just merrily transport the hundreds of thousands of eggs to Menigišiti and just let them be? To keep them in Jimin’s care? In any way you looked at it, the whole concept definitely had a flaw-something hidden that Sk’jin can’t exactly pinpoint without drawing the worst conclusions in regards to everything.

Jungkook yawns, sharp strong teeth showing clearly.

‘Come on- we should go get cleaned up,’ Sk’jin says standing up. ‘Clean up, and then let’s go get some food?’

‘Food!’ Taeh’yung throws his hands up before he suddenly looks sad, ‘Oh no- the pudding. It’s all gone now.’

‘We can get you pudding here I’m sure,’ Sk’jin placates tiredly as he takes Jungkook’s hand and pulls on it. ‘We’ll all have pudding.’

Taeh’yung walks over to Sk’jin’s other side and takes his hand, swinging it a little. He hums a little under his breath as they walk when a sudden thought comes to mind.

‘Hey, Taeh’yung.’

‘Hm?’

‘When we were in Grezma, and you met Namjoon, did you…- was that just a random choice to come with us, or was it because you sensed Jimin when our ship pulled in?’

Taeh’yung hums thoughtfully.

‘It’s all combined,’ Taeh’yung replies with a nod, ‘I was actually given a tip-off.’

‘What?’ Sk’jin can feel his eyebrows shooting up.

‘I told you I have some insider information,’ Taeh’yung actually whines, as though hurt that no one took him seriously. ‘It was told about Seulgaan’s ship! And it was suspicious!’

Well- who would’ve known Seulgaan was actually working with the Jury. No one told them.
Sk’jin sighs at their intense bad luck.

‘Did you know? About how Jimin-’

‘Not exactly,’ Taeh’yung shrugs honestly, ‘It’s true- the babies are born of a different Time- not Kookie though! And especially because of how they’re connected with Jimin, it would be for the best to take them to Menigišiti.’

‘Or? What will happen?’ Sk’jin asks curiously.

‘They’re not supposed to be here really,’ Taeh’yung tells him simply, the same way Jimin had said it. ‘Time will crush them.’

‘Yoongi?’ Jungkook asks quietly.

Taeh’yung gives them both a surprisingly genuinely worried look.

‘It hurts,’ he says gently, ‘To exist when you’re not supposed to, when fate pulls you apart but your heart wants to stay.’

*

They manage to track Namjoon’s location, not surprised that he was in warp. Their direction does not quite show where they’re headed, but Hoseok had said that they would probably follow them once they exit warp themselves. They’re not sure if the rest of the eggs/GI/Omhlophe could sense/track Jimin during warp. But considering the time it took for the GI and the Omhlophe to find them in Grisial, they could somewhat assume that they couldn’t keep track.

Hoseok had taken the tracking with himself, telling Yoongi to catch up on rest. They would attempt to recreate their communication channel from scratch in hopes of reaching Namjoon. He still had his Comm-Device so that was a relief.

But that had been about an hour ago.

Yoongi is bone-tired.

The water that runs down his body and pools around his feet before swirling away is strangely chalky. He’s used to the site of bloody water or water filled with gritty dirt- this was definitely a new experience.

_Do you think Amme could do something?_

‘I don’t know,’ Yoongi mutters, eyes closed as water hot to the point of scalding pours over him. It’s soothing against his tired and strained limbs.

‘I’ll go ask.’
There’s a feeling of apprehension- but not in a completely serious way. It makes Yoongi laugh.

‘This is how it feels when you skip out on house-duty and you need to face your mum for an inevitable lecture on responsibilities,’ he chuckles, reaching for the shampoo.

But the apprehension is almost equally shared. Yoongi wants to talk to Amme. But at the same time is hesitant because he’s not sure if he’s done the right thing.

Amme had mentioned how Ndica and the other Yishengs who followed that “dream” carefully selected and used select Beings for their cause. Was that what Yoongi was? An attempt to recruit him for something? Did all of the “recruits” have this mark on their back?

It’s sort of jarring, but at the same time, not too surprising, to think that there are other Yoongi’s out in the Universe. It’s not surprising, but Yoongi doesn’t know what to do with this information.

There had been the one who jumped into the Užkulisai- Yoongi cannot hope for much of his survival. That was not a jump easily survived unless he had some form of breaker to help him glide.

‘You’re bound to the fate of the Menigišiti.’

When Yoongi looks at himself in the mirror he’s a little surprised at how starkly he appeared before himself.

I am me.

The bruise at his side is spectacularly purple. There must be something within the Yisheng ship that somehow healed him simultaneously by just being inside there. Yoongi wouldn’t be too surprised by that.

Each cabin was a well accommodated room not unlike the Cabins in the Užkulisai, though somewhat more spacious and generally clean looking. There were no windows though, and considering the fact that these ships often brought refugees, trafficked Beings, and other stolen Beings out of their imprisonment, it seemed like a good reprieve to have them feel protected within a clean comfortable space.

Robes like the ones patients wore were already hanging up for him and Yoongi slips them on. They’re light, but warm, and incredibly comfortable against his skin.

He pushes his dirty clothes through the shredder with no remorse. The device he had snagged out of their make-shift circuit board attaching it to the rest of the Užkulisai sits innocently at the edge of his sink. He remembers the way Jimin had been so adamant in not explaining how the device worked. Had his stoic determination tinted with a sense of confusion, denial, and fear.

Listen.

Ignoring it for now, Yoongi steps out of the bathroom.

This is almost an exact reverse from last time, Yoongi vaguely registers in the back of his mind. Jimin stands at the doorway, looking a bit nervous and mainly concerned. He must have also showered and cleaned up- he’s also wearing the same spare Yisheng-set Yoongi was wearing.

‘I’m sorry,’ he says at once, looking down.

‘Why are you sorry?’ Yoongi asks.
‘I’m…-it’s my fault?’ Jimin sorts of shrugs, trying his best to look unaffected but it doesn’t work. Instead he looks helpless and as tired as Yoongi felt. ‘If it- if it weren’t for me- I just-’ Jimin sighs, hands restless as he pulls at his sleeves before dropping them before going back to picking at the hem of his shirt. He sinks down on the floor.

‘I’m so tired,’ he says in a small voice. ‘I’m so tired- and I’m…-I feel so lost.’

Yoongi goes and sits next to him, a little gap between them.

‘I don’t-…I don’t know what I should do,’ Jimin whispers from behind his crossed arms. ‘I don’t know what to do.’

Yoongi carefully places his hand on Jimin’s nape, gently squeezing before he guides Jimin to lean against him. Jimin goes easily, leaning against his side but still not looking up from his arms.

‘I wish I knew what to do,’ Jimin says, ‘I wish- I wish I knew what happened. Why all of this happened. I wish I could fix it. That I had done something different. That I hadn’t hid-‘

‘You couldn’t have known,’ Yoongi says quietly. ‘Sunshine, you couldn’t have known.’

‘-don’t-‘ Jimin shakes, ‘Don’t call me that- I can’t- and-‘ his words are barely comprehensible. ‘-I don’t- don’t’ deserve-‘

Yoongi pulls him closer, prying Jimin’s arms away from around his head and redirecting him. But Jimin doesn’t budge.

‘It’s too much-‘ Jimin covers his face, ‘It’s too much and I don’t know how I can-how I can fix any of this-‘

It breaks Yoongi’s heart as he watches Jimin break.

Jimin breaks the way an already shattered and glued together tile does. Resisting, straining all of its hold, desperately attempting to pull everything back together.

‘It’s too much-‘ Jimin chokes out.

Yoongi gently but quickly pulls Jimin between his legs. He brings their bodies close, cloaking himself around Jimin as securely as he could, wrapping him up as though trying his best to hold his pieces together as Jimin finally allows himself to break apart.

Jimin leans back against his chest as though he were falling. He feels small, confused, and overwhelmed in Yoongi’s arms.

‘I got you,’ Yoongi whispers quietly, pressing their heads together.

‘I got you.’

Jimin quietly sobs his heart out. Finally allowing himself to fully feel the overwhelming disparity of his situation, allowing himself to finally accept the fact that he had no way in really knowing what he could do. Accepting the fact that deep down, he knew someone had betrayed him. Betrayed his trust. And now, though he was guiding them to his home, Jimin could not tell if it even existed anymore.

‘Do you know-‘ Jimin whispers faintly. ‘-know what I saw? When I looked into the other- into his memories?’
‘What did you see?’ Yoongi asks, holding Jimin as strongly as he dared, holding him together.

‘I saw nothing but…-I saw only sight,’ Jimin faintly replies, ‘His sight- no acceptance, no understanding- just sight. Just a mission. But I could- I could hear it.’

‘Hear what?’

‘I heard music.’

‘It was- it was the only thing that was-…it was the only thing in his mind,’ Jimin says thickly, words breaking into barely audible whispers. ‘And I know it was me.’

Yoongi doesn’t know what to say.

There’s nothing to say.

Yoongi was probably incredibly exhausted. Fatigued beyond understanding.

From Jimin’s experience, Yoongi was an incredibly light sleeper. Awake before Jimin, always alert, already watching. It used to make Jimin a little shy, a little squirmy.

But asleep, Yoongi is still Yoongi.

His arms are wrapped around him, one hand pressed over his chest above his heart, as though attempting to hold it together for him. Bruises have coloured in during their sleep. Troubled sleep that has Jimin waking up feeling heavier, weighed down.

He can’t move- not because Yoongi is holding him or because he was still exhausted. Jimin almost feels like he can’t breathe.

For a moment, Jimin wonders if he’s even actually awake.

The sounds around him are not what he’s used to. He’s grown familiar to the sounds, the movement of air, and just the way everything seemed to exist around him inside the Užkulisai.

Jimin wonders if that was the reason why he didn’t feel quite comfortable enough to really sleep.

He doesn’t exactly remember getting on the low bed- he just remembers the way Yoongi held him.

Jimin is not foreign to the concept of incredibly difficult situations, or shouldering incredibly heavy responsibilities.

He has learnt, both theoretically and practically, the significance and weight of the actions he needed to make, or actions he didn’t make. He has seen firsthand, and experienced firsthand, the pain of these decisions. Not just on himself, but on others. He has seen the consequences of mistakes he has made, of suffering and of death that has resulted as a direct reaction of his decisions.

And ever since he woke, a increasingly steady feeling of suffocation threatens to overwhelm him every single day.

It wasn’t so long ago, when he had walked down a separate Memory, directed and guided by JD who showed him so much. Somehow Jimin had managed to make himself believe he could do more- that he could return with purpose, with the ability to make things right.

He believed it- made himself have faith in the fact that he knew what he should do, how to do it, and where to go.

But now.

‘Do you see it now?’

Someone had betrayed Menigişiti.

Jimin already knew.

Already knew the moment he saw the refractive-shield cell, crafted and installed with intentional design.

And the very moment he knew it, he ignored it.

There was no way. There could be no way anyone would betray Menigişiti like this. This was clearly an attack- an invasion, a betrayal of their trust from the GLA who saw their weakened situation and struck.

And he believed in that.

Yoongi twitches just a little, a small furrow between his eyebrows that eases out a second later.

Yisheng, as Amme had put it, had punished them cruelly. And Menigişiti had hid.

Jimin knew of their Origins well- understood and listened to the ancient songs that sung of Nen’isht. How Nen’isht hunted their children, and Menigişiti hid herself, wound tight amidst a harmony of music, light, and quiet.

Menigişiti hid from her punishment, and within the space she made for herself, sung an existence she nurtured with all that she was.

But here he was now, bearing upon his back the punishment that awaited him once he was thrown out from hiding.

Punishment inflicted on Menigişiti for hiding- her children now lost, torn apart.

And this one was his own personal punishment.

Yoongi wasn’t even supposed to be here- not like this. Yoongi shouldn’t have even been there in Megibiya.

All of this was designed just for Jimin.
Just to punish him.

And Jimin didn’t even have the strength to acknowledge and accept the truth of his reality when it faced him so clearly.

Jimin cannot bear the disappointment in himself for failing like this.

For losing everything like this.

He cannot bear the pain that he knows he will have to face for what he will have to lose.

Carefully and slowly, trying his best not to wake the Human who so desperately needed rest, Jimin lightly presses his fingertips over Yoongi’s temples.

He doesn’t know what he’s dreaming of. But Jimin wants him to be at peace- even for this short bit.

It’s much more difficult for him now, to softly speak words of content and peace, allowing them to blanket over Yoongi’s mind when his own mind was a chaos of pain, regret, and guilt.

It hits him all over again.

‘It’s too much, and it’s okay.’

It was never just “okay” for Jimin. In hindsight, Jimin realizes that his entire life, he’s never once had the time, or the opportunity, or really— the encouragement to simply grieve for what he had to do.

Tsirin had always wanted to make their lives as normal as possible. When they had been born, siblings that were born to be the Heart, and the Fate, they had been taken away to be taught and watched over. But they had been different – Jimin remembers so fondly how Tsirin would sneak them away from their classes, from their tutoring. They skipped more than they attended.

They would sneak to the main cities where they travelled, immersing themselves in the true atmosphere of their host country or state. They would hold hands, getting into trouble everywhere. Jimin remembers being reprimanded nearly daily but it was like they never learnt.

But somehow that worked- because Tsirin never allowed themselves to be seen differently- to be addressed as anything different.

‘The Heart is always in harmony – the Heart always wants harmony,’ Tsirin would tell Jimin, giving him a knowing nod with as much dignity as possible whilst covered in mud and spectacularly sun-burnt.

Of course it changed slowly as time went on – they held positions that were looked up to. They had responsibilities to shoulder. And in these moments, in giving themselves so much for Menigišiti – it was almost as though they ceased to exist for who they were. A pair of siblings from Dis’bēti who enjoyed sweets a bit too much, who liked screaming wrong lyrics to ancient songs much to the scandalized horror of their instructors. And sometimes they forgot how heavy all of this was, just because they were born.

And even now, just thinking about it makes Jimin feel like he’s failed.

This was not how he was supposed to feel. This is not what he’s supposed to be thinking. He needed to be strong- he needed to know what to do. He needed to-Jimin exhales shakily.

What did he need?

What did he want?

Yoongi seems to relax a bit more, his grip loosening just a little

What did Yoongi want?

Jimin thinks backs to the memories he had walked in, following Yoongi as he lived. Lived as he was supposed to- where he was supposed to. He thinks of seeing Yoongi for the first time, of how the sun shone as their eyes met and how Jimin just knew.

Jimin carefully studies Yoongi. He traces the features of his face. Beneath the bruises and cuts, Jimin finds small dots of freckles and natural discolouration. His cheeks were sunken, even as he slept. His lips are thin, though sometimes they pushed out unconsciously in a way that makes Jimin strongly believe that in his youth, Yoongi was probably a bit of a rascal. Very carefully, he puts his finger over Yoongi’s lower lip.

It almost felt like it was ages ago when he had so desperately kissed Yoongi- unable to even stand but just wanting to know it was Yoongi. Needing him there.

Regardless of how tired or deep asleep Yoongi was, no doubt even lightly touching his face was going to wake him up.

The weight of his fatigue hits Jimin anew as Yoongi regains consciousness.

Yoongi seems to quickly and quietly assess their surroundings before concluding that nothing was amiss. Jimin doesn’t take his hand away, instead taking the time to continue lightly tracing the natural slopes over Yoongi’s face.

Yoongi doesn’t say anything- apparently not disturbed by the fact that Jimin was randomly touching his face without any given reason.

Yoongi rearranges his arms while Jimin continues to map the features on his face. They’re closer, legs entwined, ankles hooked around each others. Jimin shivers lightly when Yoongi’s hand closes around his waist to settle on his back, his palm warm against his skin.

‘I always feel like I’m kissing you when things are…-things are not good,’ Jimin whispers. ‘Something is always…always wrong.’

‘I think any time I kiss you, everything is good.’

There is no hint of embarrassment or teasing in Yoongi’s tone. It’s meant only for Jimin to hear.

‘I had a dream,’ Yoongi readjusts his hand to reach up behind Jimin, palm splayed over the back of his head.

‘What did you see?’

Yoongi smiles.

‘You were laughing,’ Yoongi leans in, almost as though telling Jimin a secret. Jimin finally pulls himself together to look at Yoongi. ‘You were laughing, you seemed…seemed so young.’
Regardless of where they were, every time Yoongi looked at him like this, Jimin can’t help but feel a little shy, a little squirmy.

He wants to both push himself away and hide somewhere, and at the same time curl himself around Yoongi and not let go.

‘Young? How?’

‘Almost like…like a youngling- I was trying to catch up, you were going too fast.’

‘I won’t go,’ Jimin promises at once, earnestly.

Yoongi smiles again before he says, almost as though shy all of a sudden, ‘You’re so pretty.’

Jimin feels himself flush red.

Jimin has heard many compliments come his way. He’s not foreign to cheeky pillow talk, blatant flirtations, or the thrill of pursuing a young romance.

But it’s also never hurt him like this before.

Yoongi’s fingers quietly wipe under his eyes. And that’s when Jimin realizes he’s crying.

‘Don’t cry sunshine,’ Yoongi coos.

‘I’m not-‘ Jimin is about to deny it but it won’t stop.

Yoongi pulls him down, tucking him in close.

It’s not the same break down he had earlier- spiraling out of control. Because somehow instead of feeling himself suffocating, he feels almost a little lighter- a bit more normal.

Yoongi just continues to lightly stroke through his short hair, lips pressed to his skin.

‘Yoongi?’

‘Hm?’

‘I don’t know what to do,’ Jimin whispers.

It’s frightening, admitting to yourself the truth that you’ve ignored for so long.

‘I’m afraid.’ Jimin confesses quietly, ‘I’m so scared.’

‘Trust yourself,’ Yoongi dabs at his cheeks.

‘How-‘ Jimin sniffs before he looks up, ‘How can I- I just…-I’ve been -it’s cost me- so much-‘

‘Listen,’ Yoongi says simply, ‘Just listen.’

‘To what?’

Yoongi studies him for a moment.

‘In order to lie to yourself, you need to be aware of the truth,’ Yoongi says instead, to Jimin’s surprise. ‘And sometimes...’
Yoongi blinks a few times, expression unreadable before he gives Jimin a wry smile and says, ‘Sometimes it’s easier to lie – sometimes, in order to continue forward, you need to lie to yourself.’

It’s unsettling to hear this – with Yoongi’s fatigue hanging over him, pressing out against Jimin’s chest like an actual physical force.

‘So you need to just listen,’ Yoongi fiddles with his ear, careful around the side that was snipped along with his hair. ‘On Earth we have a saying, ‘Listen to your heart, but take your brain with you’. It made for really funny comic cards.’

Jimin’s not sure what about it was entirely funny, because it sounded like genuinely good advice worded in simple and applicable terms. But there’s a colour of mirth that erupts out of the cloud of fatigue that blossoms in soft hues around them.

It’s beautiful.

‘Listen to your heart,’ Yoongi places his hand over Jimin’s chest, palm warm and large. ‘And take your brain with you.’

Jimin takes Yoongi’s hand into his own trembling ones.

‘I can’t- I can’t feel my Heart right now-‘ Jimin confesses. ‘I can’t hear her.’

Yoongi doesn’t question Jimin’s exact meaning, but there’s an understanding in his eyes.

‘Then maybe for now, you can take mine.’

Jimin doesn’t realize how tightly he’s gripping Yoongi’s hand in his, or the fact that he’s somewhat forgotten to breathe. So instead he pulls their hands up and against his lips.

He can’t do that- he can’t take from Yoongi again.

‘Thank you for waiting for me,’ Jimin says against his hand.

Yoongi closes his eyes, gripping Jimin even closer to himself.

‘I’ll always come back to you.’

Jimin finds Sk’jin and Jungkook with Amme at a massive food-court. It was empty for now, but Jimin can imagine it filled with lost and broken Beings, being healed and fed, comforted from their pain and sorrow. Amme has her two hands on Jungkook’s head, gently holding up his head.

He can’t quite hear what they’re saying, but Jungkook doesn’t seem to be uncomfortable.

Sk’jin looks incredibly healthier. Jimin suspects that he’s just been healed, and it relieves Jimin to his core. Jimin’s not sure what sort of healing he must have had, because his hair is back to its natural silvery-rose hue, and his eyes are exceptionally gleaming bright.

Jimin wishes he could have seen Sk’jin in his full Life.

How terrifyingly beautiful he would have been.

There’s a massive spread of food around him, and another similarly sized one opposite his that’s definitely a lot more raw, a lot more bloody. Jimin guesses it’s Jungkook’s.

Sk’jin gives him a small wave when he notices him approaching. He’s about to make some comment, expression turning teasing which turns to shock when Jimin hugs him tight.

The Khol’isa coughs awkwardly, arms stiff, shoulders raised, head angled back as though doing his best to keep as much physical distance as possible.

‘Thank you,’ Jimin says in a small voice.

‘Um- okay-‘ Sk’jin replies in a strained voice. ‘Sure, no problem.’

Jimin pulls away, much to Sk’jin’s obvious relief.

‘Come on – lets eat,’ Sk’jin says in his best gruff and indifferent manner. Jimin grins at this, giving him another hug that has the Khol’isa yelping explicit words.

Jungkook twitches a few times, his head turned at a clearly bad angle to watch what was happening. Clearly Amme takes pity on him and lets the youngling go. Jungkook cleanly vaults over the table and dives into Jimin’s arms.

Had he grown taller?

He’d definitely filled out because there’s more of Jungkook to hug than before. Jungkook sniffs rather aggressively around his neck and has a mild look of annoyance on his face.

‘What is it?’ Jimin laughs, ruffling his hair which had a wonderful softness to it now before pulling him into a headlock. Jungkook pretends to flail, a wide grin on his face.

‘Doing good?’ Jimin asks, cupping Jungkook’s face fondly. ‘Rested?’

Jungkook nods into his hands, eyes closed, ‘Good. Full.’

Jimin is pleased, lowering his hands instead to tickle the tall Pravasi M’hanun. Jungkook yelps, using his much longer arms to tickle Jimin back.

‘Please- no playing in the dining area,’ Sk’jin reprimands them over a mouth full of food. ‘Yisheng Amme, will you join us?’

Amme, to their collective surprise, seemed to enjoy a meal compromised entirely out of fresh, uncooked greens.

They don’t speak, just eat, occasionally pass each other items, or politely refuse items (especially from Jungkook). Jimin also realizes they’re not alone.

The Yishengs-in-training somewhat timidly approach them. There’s not a lot of them- only 5 so far as Jimin can sense in this immediate vicinity.

They’re very curious, but also very hesitant.
And Jimin can understand why. Here were 3 incredibly random, and very rare, species even by normal Universe standards.

Sk’jin eyes them with some amusement and after swallowing an impressively hot mouthful of a freshly roasted piece of meat, waves them over.

They all look at Amme who is extremely interested in telling Jungkook the wonderful benefits of a bulb-like vegetable and her eyes (all six) are glued to this little lesson. Jungkook, not too impressed by these vegetable, but also slightly intimidated, dunks the bulb into a rather milky looking stew, as though hoping it would help with the flavour.

The Yishengs-in-training sort of hesitantly sit around them, all beaming respectfully but very awkwardly. The silence is incredibly loud save for Amme’s continued vegetable lesson and Jungkook’s increasing disgust for anything not meat.

Sk’jin cuts the silence and asks without any embarrassment, ‘Does anyone have the latest installment in the “Six Hands of Our Love” series?’

This is apparently an excellent ice-breaker because this makes everyone laugh.

Jimin feels incredibly full, but he’s still exhausted. Sk’jin is laughing, an arm around one of the Yisheng’s-in-training as he narrates his experiences. Jungkook is also listening, sharing a big rather bloody joint of meat with another trainee who seemed to share a similar bloody diet.

‘Will you walk with me?’

Jimin finds that the question is directed at him. No one seems to notice or realize as Jimin nods and they both get up and leave the table.

They walk in silence together, the sound of laughter and voices behind them.

It's nice, Jimin thinks as he takes a moment to simply savour that feeling.

They pass the hallway that Jimin had come in through, and into the next one instead. Amme leads Jimin through it, taking a narrow pathway and Jimin, to his utmost surprise, smells something-

‘I enjoy a good garden,’ Amme tells him, breaking the quiet. ‘I also believe, it is a good place to find healing. Healing for your heart, your mind.’

Jimin nods mutely in agreement, breathing in the fragrance of wet soil, the slight sweet undertone of vegetation decomposing, and a general warm scent of foliage and flowers.

His eyes drink in the sight of lush growth and vegetation.

It almost felt as though he had been raw for a long while, now finally quenched and soothed as he takes deep breaths of air. He follows Amme to a seated area, large leafy tendrils fall from the beams overhead that support a clear dome, white with warp-light. It’s a massive enclosure, and everywhere Jimin looked, it was green and alive.

The strange creature that had waited for Amme at the Hangar earlier is there, coiled in perfect loops around itself.

‘I think this is a good place to speak,’ Amme says, folding herself elegantly and sitting down on the flat raised limestone slabs.
'We have not met formally prior to this,’ Jimin states, sitting down as well.

‘We did not. I only met your Council, and your sister,’ Amme replies in agreement. ‘I was aware of you, however.’

‘And I you.’

They sit in continued silence.

‘You said that there has been no report since Megibīya, otherwise known to the GLA as Bhumi was overtaken?’ Jimin inquires.

‘None that I am aware of,’ Amme answers, her arms folding neatly over each other. ‘The Treaty was clear in their agreement. It is my belief that when the GLA, lead by Ndica, arrived at Bhumi, it was under completely different reasoning.’

Amme didn’t know.

‘The GLA had received emergency calls from the borders around Bhumi, and as a result, attracted Ndica and Tlun’hla’s attention. The arrival of the Akramanese into Bhumi was one of complete surprise.’

Jimin is sure that’s not entirely the case.

‘When all of this came to my attention, and I was able to gather my resources and understand, to an extent, the details of what happened, I was unable to access or reach Bhumi or the area around it.’ Amme continues, ‘I believe this has to do with your camouflage system.’

Jimin nods.

‘I believed that perhaps it was a good sign. That the protection around your System still existed till now. That perhaps you were able to heal after all this time,’ Amme’s fingers lightly drum over her knees. ‘But perhaps I am naïve in thinking so.’

‘What have you learnt?’ Jimin asks, leaning in a little.

‘Axudar, as you have no doubt learnt from what I’ve been able to discuss with Hoseok, is close to your home System.’

‘Axudar is the closest System to Menigišiti yes,’ Jimin nods.

‘Hoseok has also reported that there are troubles within Axudar, troubles that have shut out the GLA from investigating,’ Amme pauses a moment before she continues, ‘Axudar is known to be the most forward in their approach towards researching the extent of how far the present physical mass of a Being can go.’

‘That is a polite way to describe an act of cruelty, Yisheng.’

‘There laws regarding the GLA investigation and regulation had previously been heavily edited and shadowed by Ndica, clearly to cover his own involvement in this specific “research”,’ Amme continues, unperturbed by Jimin’s comment. ‘While I understand the idea behind approaching Axudar to enter your home System, for these very reasons of not having the GLA so close by, I would advise you to be careful with what you might find there.’

Jimin studies the flaky sedimentation that formed the limestone he was sitting on.
‘I believe you know, deep down in your heart, that you have been betrayed from within,’ Amme says simply, not pulling back for remorse or sensitivity.

‘I cannot give you hope for this venture,’ she continues, ‘Not when you cannot find it in yourself to bring hope for yourself.’

Jimin slowly breathes out, lowering his head, eyelids heavy and burning, his chest aching.

‘You carry tremendous knowledge,’ Amme says, her hands reaching forward to raise his head up. Her touch is cooler than Jimin expected. ‘Tremendous knowledge, and the weight of those you have to let go.’

Jimin has never been in a position where he has needed to be healed before.

‘There are matters that you cannot bear – and that you should not bear,’ Amme continues, one of her long fingers presses over his temples and Jimin closes his eyes at once. A cool caress draws over his closed eyes, the burning stops immediately. ‘This has gone beyond what you can control, beyond your design, beyond your fate.’

‘Then what should I do? What can I do?’

‘You need to understand the limitations of your control,’ Amme tells him gently, ‘And understand that sometimes your control may limit you far more than what you thought.’

‘Follow your heart, but take your brain with you,’ Jimin whispers, ‘Right?’

Amme’s hands still for a while before she places them over his temples properly again.

‘The Known Universe has always seen Humans as a weak species,’ Amme quite randomly states, ‘Humans were deemed too weak, too fragile, too simple. But if anything, I do not think any of us should ever underestimate the strength of our hearts.’

Jimin opens his eyes, finds himself reflected in Amme’s silvery pairs.

‘Thank you,’ he whispers.

When Amme takes her hands away, Jimin’s body feels rested, the sore dull ache over his body ceases, the prickling pain behind his eyes abate.

He was still weighed, the emptiness in his chest still there – but Jimin feels almost as well as he did the day he first opened his eyes all the way back in Pompa.

Jimin smiles up at Amme.

‘You were born, with the blessings of the First Children,’ Amme sits back properly. ‘And you need not carry the heartbreak of punishment alone.’

Jimin nods, quite unable to speak.

‘You may stay here as long as you like,’ Amme says as she stands in her strangely fluid yet stiff way.

‘Thank you, S’wezete Amme,’ Jimin also stands, bowing in full courtesy as was the style of his home-planet.

‘That is a title I am unfamiliar with,’ Amme appeared to be smiling but Jimin can only see a lot of teeth. It’s not discomfiting anymore.

‘Breath of life,’ Jimin manages to translate as accurately as he can.

Amme bows back, mimicking his courtesy and turns.

She’s almost about to exit the garden when something occurs to Jimin.

‘S’wezete Amme!’ he calls, jogging forward a little.

The Yisheng stops, turning to look down at Jimin.

‘May I ask you for a favour?’

*

Jimin has his hand buried under the soil over the roots of a very unique fruiting plant when Yoongi walks in.

This is not exactly how Jimin wished Yoongi would have caught him. His sleeves are literally soiled, the area over his knees are streaked with clay, moss, and dirt from kneeling on the damp ground. Jimin wanted to study some plants and as Amme had basically given him permission to just stay here he did exactly that. He’s not sure how much time has gone by. He and Yoongi had separated some time ago, where the Human had said he was going to meet up with Hoseok to check over their new ship, and Jimin had gone to find food.

Jimin hastily removes his hand, disrupting the pretty roots and wincing a little before patting it back down and standing up straight, quickly wiping his hands on the side of his trousers.

‘Uh- um, hi,’ Jimin tries, failing spectacularly to be casual and as Sk’jin would say it “cool”. It’s also a little more than embarrassing because last time Jimin had pretty much wept about his hair. And because he wasn’t blind he knew how much Yoongi seemed to really like his hair.

It felt strangely odd, to ask Amme to “heal” his hair.

But it had been forcefully taken from him- an attempt to break him. And it seemed silly- it probably was, but being able to have his hair back.

It wasn’t just about vanity, or going back to a sense of familiarity.

This was about coming into acceptance- into being.

And Yoongi still hasn’t said a word, still hasn’t blinked. Still hasn’t moved either.

Jimin feels all sorts of jittery as he walks towards Yoongi. As he gets closer, it’s only then Yoongi blinks. Rapidly at that too. It’s only then that he also closes his mouth, as though realizing he’d been staring with his mouth open.
And this time, instead of just shying away, or trying to ignore how he felt, Jimin walks all the way up towards Yoongi (the Human’s eyes widening almost comically) and kisses him on the mouth.

The jitters completely ease away, but they all rush back at once when Jimin leans back again. He feels his whole face flush, stuttering out a sort of dismissive laughter but Yoongi is already leaning in again, a wide grin on his face.

Yoongi kisses him so adoringly, his hands cradling Jimin’s face as he kisses his whole face. Jimin can’t help but wheeze and giggle, a sense of delightful lightness taking over him.

‘Maybe Yishengs can start up a new industry with hair-related treatment,’ Yoongi chuckles, stopping to just admire Jimin’s locks.

He pushes Jimin a little afar, head angling around as though to really take in Jimin’s hair properly. It’s so ridiculous that Jimin can’t help but laugh, bending over with the force of his laughter. He steps back a little, angling himself as though hoping to catch different angle of light. Yoongi is laughing as well, eyes crinkled, a rosy almost healthy warmth in his cheeks. He looks healthier and Jimin guesses Amme had healed him too.

Jimin even turns around, twirling and shaking his head, laughing as he does so before he shuffles back towards Yoongi.

‘Nice?’ Jimin asks.

Yoongi doesn’t reply immediately, instead his expression changes from one of delight to something a bit more subdued- a bit thoughtful.

‘When I first saw you,’ Yoongi begins lowly, ‘I swear- god it sounds so dumb- I genuinely thought you were an illusion. A mirage- you just-’ he pauses to look away from his hair and back to him. ‘- you…I know I keep saying this but you’re really beautiful.’

‘Okay.’

Yoongi chuckles, he looks embarrassed. He steps closer, hands reaching out for Jimin’s.

‘I’m- it’s obviously- I mean it’s not just your hair, that’s uh, dumb, you know, or like, I’m not saying this superficially or anything uhh- I’m just, you know sometimes I guess I’m overwhelmed? I dunno I’m just kinda running my mouth off-‘

It’s so heart-warming seeing Yoongi like this. He’s so awkward, bashful, but so determined. It’s enough for Jimin to ignore the way he’s awkward and embarrassed.

Yoongi is still combing through his hair, caught in a strange trance that Jimin knows he can break. All he would have to do would be to gently push Yoongi a little, or maybe look away. But he doesn’t want to.

It’s overwhelming but in a good way.

He’s never kissed Yoongi like this- not when he feels like this. Not when he’s safe – not with this intent.

It’s almost as though they were in a different time, a different place.

‘I think any time I kiss you, everything is good.’
So Jimin is the one to lean in this time, one hand angling Yoongi’s head just a little and the other on his waist. There’s a sharp intake of breath from the Human. He leans in completely, chest up against Jimin’s as his hands settle on his hips.

They’ve never talked about it.

They’ve never addressed it.

It was just so-

Inevitable.

Jimin gasps, his body shivers. Yoongi swallows his gasp, soothing the shivers of his body with his own.

‘You’re everything I’ve wanted to feel,’ Yoongi mouths against his lips. ‘Everything-‘

Yoongi holds him so close – like he needed Jimin. Like everything he’s ever wanted was here, with Jimin.

And Jimin holds him back the same way.

There’s less kissing and just simply holding each other instead. And somehow here in this garden – everything was good.

Yoongi pants harshly against his neck, clearly trying to reign himself in.

‘Hey,’ Jimin whispers breathlessly, his heart still racing, his entire being lifted.

Yoongi is swaying them gently, the sound of their hearts a private symphony just for them.

‘Yoongi,’ Jimin says again, making sure Yoongi heard him. Yoongi kisses his neck in reply.

‘In that house next to the shore and the forest, I want a garden like this one.’

A few seconds later Jimin can feel Yoongi’s smile on his skin.

‘A garden?’ Yoongi says quietly, lips kissing the words into his skin.

Jimin leans back to look at Yoongi, humming in acknowledgment.

‘Hmm, not too big. I’m actually- um, not good. With gardens.’

Yoongi laughs, gums showing.

His laughter colours the air, soothing tones of the sky, and the clouds and-

‘You’re not?’

‘I was always teased about it,’ Jimin complains.

Yoongi chuckles quietly, the sound of soft waves lapping up against the shore.

‘What about bushes? Shrubs? Trees?’

‘I- I got scared. Discouraged,’ Jimin tells him like it’s a secret. ‘Didn’t want to make mistake.’
‘You could always try succulents?’ Yoongi offers, his breath settles, the intensity in his eyes slowly ebbing.

‘Suh- succulents-‘ Jimin repeats but his mind instantly gives him images that correspond to that.

‘They don’t need a lot of water. Or much care. They’re happier when you don’t bother them,’ Yoongi grins in a teasing way before he tucks away Jimin’s hair behind his ears. ‘We can keep a whole garden of them.’

‘Are they flowers?’ Jimin asks leaning his face against Yoongi’s palm. He places his own palm over Yoongi’s chest.

He ignores the strain, moves past the fatigue, the corrosion, the pain. Instead he feels the warmth, the gentleness, the strength, and the dedication that pulses there, deep in Yoongi’s chest.

Jimin already feels like he’s taken so much away from Yoongi.

Has stolen him away, from him.

‘Not all of them have flowers,’ Yoongi holds his free hand over Jimin’s hand. ‘But they would all bloom for you.’

They’re such…odd things to say. Almost childish – almost akin to something Sk’jin would read out loud from the books he enjoys reading. But there’s such a genuine tone – something almost poetic when Yoongi says it.

Yoongi tilts his head a little, a small smile on his face before he leans in to press a lingering kiss on Jimin’s forehead.

Jimin can hear the gentle sound of the ocean meeting the shoreline. The rustling of trees behind him. He can hear the sound of the water, he can feel the wind on his skin.

They’re both standing under a mild sky, feet wet as the ocean washes over their feet.

It’s warm.

Yoongi is warm.

‘Then maybe for now, you can take mine.’

‘We all need the sun to bloom.’
(Author’s Notes)

I feel like, this chapter might have too much in it- but I felt that it was time, not only relevant to the plot, but also for the overall reading experience, to explain things.

AND HERE WE ARE Y’ALL

God, I had this massive info-dump written up over the past 2 years in scratched out notes and msgs sent to myself through facebook, email, line msgs, and dm-ing myself things I shouldn’t forget omg

But it’s far from over really

Someone asked me how many more chapters for ADEGU, and I think, now? I think maybe 20 chapters more- or well, 19 chapters I guess. Putting us at all together 60 chapters.

Woo!

Anyways, writing about Jimin and his internal struggle was a sort reflection of our generation I feel. The immense responsibility we have, in light of global issues that both feel distant but at the same time too close to our immediate reality – of feeling useless and overwhelmed, like as I was writing it I asked myself ‘you okay, do you also need a Yoongi to hug you’ like bitch I wish, but yeah- what I’m saying is that, it’s okay to say that you’re not okay. And it’s okay to realize and accept the fact that you know, shit happens, shit will happen, and sometimes there’s nothing we can do about it. Jimin feeling like a broken but put together but broken again tile is a very accurate representation of how I used to feel during what I refer to as my ‘Mid-20’s-of-existential-and-emotionally-financially-strained-oppression’ fuck those were some terrible times. But a lot of the times, overcoming that comes with accepting the situation and not allowing that to be your identity. So yeah, GO JIMIN YOU POWERFUL LITTLE ALIEN BOY
See y’all next chapter
I’ll also be doing little illustrations of my OC’s!!!! so you guys can see what they’ll look like? I’ll update on my twitter and link here in the next update!
Also I am sorry for this massive chapter
This was Yoongi’s idea.

And Jimin is… Jimin is not happy with this idea.

He’s also a little miffed. Clearly Yoongi could be sneaky and had his own way of doing things. Jimin knew he couldn’t trust him after the Human cheated Taeh’yung in a childish game involving “hotels” and “taxes”. It almost makes Jimin smile but he’s trying to look as impassive as possible.

Which is difficult to do because Yoongi has the tendency of speaking with the slightest push of his lips, a soft drawl that drags his words in both a raspy and whiny way that’s hard to not be endeared by.

Or maybe because this is Yoongi. And because Yoongi’s idea is in fact, well thought out, and well planned, with good reasoning.

‘I don’t see why not,’ Sk’jin remarks from where he stands. ‘This is probably the safest place to try this. And to make sure both of you are safe.’

‘I don’t think we should tell Amme,’ Hoseok frowns, perched on the desk. He hadn’t spoken before, listening intently while he absentmindedly watched the screen tracking Namjoon’s movements.

‘We don’t- but she’ll be here in case something happens,’ Yoongi explains, ‘Also, Taeh’yung could help.’

‘I can!’

‘You don’t have to,’ Sk’jin cuts across firmly before adding with a serious tone, ‘Taeh’yung, I don’t think you should be exercising what you can do so freely or without warning like you did in Grisial.’

Jimin eyes the Zhak’gri, sitting on the floor against Hoseok’s legs. Jimin thinks for a brief moment Taeh’yung might argue, or flat out refuse.

But he just pouts and nods, as though reprimanded.

‘I won’t,’ he nods solemnly.
‘Won’t it hurt?’ Jungkook asks, and to everyone’s surprise, he’s asking Yoongi. With concern.

‘Life is pain-’ Yoongi begins in a deadpan tone but Sk’jin is quick to whack the top of his head with a stiff hand.

‘Stop being a dramatic bitch,’ Sk’jin snaps before he adds, ‘Jungkook’s right- last time you guys did this, no offence but this Human asshole came out.’

Yoongi is probably throwing up an offensive gesture which Sk’jin reflects back.

‘What Sk’jin is saying,’ Hoseok cuts in firmly, standing up straight after gently nudging Taeh’yung to the side, ‘-is that we don’t know what will happen if you try this thing again.’

‘Which is why we’re doing this in a Yisheng ship,’ Yoongi counters immediately. ‘We need to know more. And while I don’t think Amme has lied to us about what she wants to tell us,’ he makes a funny face at that, ‘I still think we need to find out more – and I know, I can feel that I still have… memories that are important, that I can’t remember-‘

‘-I agree with Sk’jin,’ Jimin says tersely, ignoring how Sk’jin says ‘see? Even the boyfriend thinks he’s a bitch.’

Before Yoongi can try to counter Jimin, his expression imploring, Jimin looks away and continues to explain.

‘The last time you tried to remember what was happening- what happened,’ Jimin corrects himself as he addresses the floor, ‘it hurt you- not just…not just physical pain- you-‘

‘-I know,’ Yoongi says quietly, ‘I know, but you also know this is important. We need to know.’

Every second Yoongi stayed here- every moment of Time he existed here, the erosion that stretched to the point of snapping. Jimin can see it so clearly- see the weight of it crushing Yoongi and he can’t cure it. Can’t stop it. But he couldn’t just allow something that would fast-forward the erosion before his very eyes.

‘We will time you,’ Hoseok states, ‘Let’s say we try to wake you in an hour-‘

‘-half,’ Jimin shakes his head, sighing out slowly, ‘Half an hour-‘

Yoongi gives him a small smile.

‘So, what,’ Sk’jin asks, looking displeased, ‘We just shake you awake in half an hour? What if that doesn’t work?’

‘Then Taeh’yung will try to do something,’ Yoongi looks across at the Zhak’gri expectantly as he adds, ‘You’re allowed to do that.’

Taeh’yung gives them an eager double thumb’s up.

‘If not, a bucket of water is always helpful,’ Sk’jin tries at an attempt to lighten up the atmosphere.

‘And if worse comes to worse, we call Amme,’ Yoongi concludes.

They had finished checking the new ship they were to use to replace the Užkulisai, making lists and notes on what additional items they would need to outfit it to their liking. That was when Yoongi called for their attention to announce this plan. To map out his memories like they had before- to see into places and thoughts Yoongi had once experienced and felt, to better piece together useful information. And Jimin understands the importance of this, the rationale and logic behind it.

When Jimin looks up from the floor, he realizes that everyone is looking at him.

They were waiting for him.

Jimin does not want to do this. The first and only time they had done this, Jimin was under the impression that it would be safe. But all things considered, he had only worsened things for Yoongi.

So instead of saying anything, Jimin just nods stiffly.

He knows that he should do this— that searching through Yoongi’s memories would benefit them as a whole. But a part of him wants to take Yoongi, and hide him away forever, to keep him safe.

‘Okay great- so we just wait for you to fall asleep?’ Sk’jin fake yawns.

‘No- I can uh, I can start,’ Jimin still can’t quite look at Yoongi. He sits closer to the middle of the bed, all of them having gathered in Hoseok’s temporary room aboard the Yisheng ship. Yoongi also adjusts his position, coming to sit in front of Jimin, their crossed legs touching at the knees. Yoongi holds his hands forward, palms up.

‘Hey, we’ll be here,’ Hoseok says as he kneels before them, ‘We’ll wake you up in 30 minutes.’

Again, Jimin just nods.

He takes Yoongi’s hands in his, closing his eyes immediately but Yoongi nudges him with his foot.

‘Sunshine,’ he calls quietly.

Jimin just shakes his head. He knows it’s childish. But he can’t help it. His throat tightens, his eyes burning beneath the lids.

He hears Yoongi shuffle a little before there’s a press of lips against his forehead.

‘Sunshine, open your eyes.’

Reluctantly Jimin opens his eyes.

He’s in a narrow corridor. The walls unfinished and grey, their unending flatness only disrupted by equally spaced narrow doors all around. The lights are dim, but it’s enough to allow Jimin to see properly. The door directly in front of him opens, revealing stairs that lead downwards through a room lined with symmetrical clear cased cabinets and drawers, all containing rows and rows of compressed medication and chemicals. Jimin can’t make out the labels on the fronts of the drawers.

But his feet take him towards the door at the end of this strange anteroom, and through the doors he finds himself in a wide room, filled with OrTanks not too different from the one he had been in. They’re much taller, bigger— allowing whatever/whoever was growing in there the space they needed. And there are many of them— many Beings, in varying stages of growth, of age, of stages of development. Jimin walks past, a sense of disassociation settled in him, as though what he saw wasn’t surprising.

And maybe it’s because when he sees his own reflection, it’s because Yoongi is looking back at ‘This is a place we both know. A place that is…that has meaning. Of something.’

‘I- Hoseok asked him I think- it hurt you both,’ Jimin finds himself saying.

‘We want to know. We both do. All of us.’

‘I wish we didn’t-…we didn’t have to do it like this.’

‘You don’t hurt me.’ Is all Yoongi says.

The Beings inside the OrTanks all turn in their suspension, watching them with sleeping eyes even in this waking dream.

‘This way,’ Yoongi tells him, before looking away and guiding them towards the distant side of the room.

Jimin simply watches, there is no movement, no action from his side. He was simply observing. He was here to witness, and to understand.

‘Yoongi?’

‘Yes?’

Jimin doesn’t have a question really, just wants to hear his voice. And he says as much.

‘Just wanted to hear your voice.’

‘I’m always here.’

They reach a wall – which is odd because Jimin felt almost as though this current space somehow expanded infinitely. There are some doors here too. Widely spaced and different to the ones outside in the narrow hallway. These doors are well secured and had little windows, as though to look into.

Jimin looks in.

This one is empty, only what appeared to be some sort of Medical Bed. But it was different. With massive coils of wires draping downwards from the ceiling to the floor and up to the divided center between the two halves of the Bed. The space perfectly fits the size of the dent on Yoongi’s back.

Jimin makes his way through the side of the room, some of the rooms empty, some containing Beings, until he comes across a door that opens to him. He’s not surprised to find Yoongi asleep in there.

Like the others Jimin saw in the rooms, he’s shirtless, with a strap across his hips and shoulders fitting him into the bed.

‘He’s dreaming.’

‘What is he dreaming about?’

‘I can’t remember.’

‘Okay- we-….we can look.’
Jimin takes a deep breath, taking Yoongi’s lax hand in his.

‘That’s okay- it’ll be okay.’

Yoongi sounds unsure.

‘I don’t know,’ Jimin whispers back, surprised at the question- he had never thought about himself in this situation. ‘But we have to…’

‘I wish we didn’t – it will hurt.’

‘You don’t hurt me.’ Jimin manages to say.

‘I’ll be waiting for you.’

Arms wrap around him, breath against his neck, hair tickling his ears.

Jimin holds the arms around him, taking a deep breath.

‘This will hurt you I think,’ he whispers as he reaches out again to take Yoongi’s still hand.

‘You don’t hurt me.’

Nothing happens.

Jimin waits a few seconds, wondering what was wrong.

‘Yoongi-‘

Jimin looks around. He’s alone.

‘…’

Jimin jumps at the strange cut whisper.

This wasn’t Yoongi’s voice. This wasn’t…wasn’t a voice he knew.

The room is flooded with light – a powerful flash that fades just as quickly as it appeared.

‘Human?’

Jimin stumbles around, his wall hitting the back as the source of the unknown voice suddenly appears before him.

He’s slender, tall- maybe a little unhealthy looking what with the pale pallor of his skin and purple bruises under his eyes. He looks…he looks Human. But not quite. His eyes are large, hair a dirty blond that curls just a little. He looks…he looks like a sad memory.

He doesn’t seem all too solid. All too clear. A strange and faded projection almost.

Then suddenly, he looks up, straight at Jimin.

‘How are you here?’ Jimin asks, his throat strangely choked. He’s witnessing something absolutely strange.

‘I am.’ His voice clear but soft as a whisper. ‘And he is.’

‘What are you doing? You- you’re the dream-’

‘-he is Human. As I once was.’

‘Was?’

‘She’s gone, isn't she?’

‘She?’

‘Earth...home. She’s gone.’ He looks thoughtful. ‘So that would be my end.’

‘What are you talking about-‘

‘You have to stay,’ he continues, looking straight at Jimin, ‘You have to stay, and you need to protect them all.’

‘I-…I will-’ Jimin finds himself promising. ‘I will-‘

‘It will hurt.’

‘I know-’ Jimin manages to say, his voice breaking midway. ‘I know it will-‘

He smiles, his eyes are beautiful- sparkling suddenly with light and life, ‘There is another lifetime. And you will meet and-’ The absolute hope, the strength of the promise: the pure love in his words.

‘-and I’ll be waiting;’ Jimin whispers faintly, the words coming out of them, spoken in harmony with this stranger. This other Human.

‘Who are we in Time?’ he asks before he leans down over Yoongi and putting his hand over his head, calls out, ‘Wake up brother, and be as you were, and as you are. You are Alive.’

‘I’ll always come back to you.’

Yoongi states it so clearly, deep asleep and unaware, before he starts awake. The restraints against his shoulders holding him back.

And for a moment, Jimin swears Yoongi looks straight at him.

Yoongi struggles for a moment before he pushes the restraints off of himself. With a strange tugging sound, Yoongi sits up, a long black wire attached down the length of his back. The skin doesn’t look inflamed, nor does it look irritated. It almost appeared natural.

Yoongi looks around confused, blinking hard as he tries to regain his sense of surrounding. Jimin watches the way he studies the Bed, his restraints, how he gently touches at his back. Yoongi isn’t the most lucid, but he’s trying his best. He gets out of the bed shakily, his legs weak and unsupportive. He makes his way to the door and Jimin also looks out.

It’s changed from what Jimin had walked through. They both reach out, their hand on the handle and they quietly push the door open.

It’s dim, the lights only coming from the OrTanks. The Beings inside are as varying as it was when Jimin saw them in the future just moment ago.

Jimin doesn’t stray far from where Yoongi walks, just a few steps behind him. They circle the OrTanks, trying to understand what it was he was looking at. Jimin stops when Yoongi pauses to catch his breath, leaning against an OrTank when Jimin pauses to look at the Being inside.

Textured grey skin, hairless head, and if their eyes were open, they would be sulfuric yellow with dotted black irises.

What was a Megibīyan doing here, in the Yisheng Directory?

Jimin does not recognize the Being in there- but he knows very clearly the species from his own System. This was before Yoongi was taken to “Bhumi” – before the attacks were reported from Megibīya.

Yoongi jumps at a small sound, making Jimin duck down too. They quickly make their way back to the room Yoongi was kept in. Jimin watches with half of his attention as Yoongi puts himself back onto the Medical Bed, feigning unconsciousness as the door opens once more to reveal blank-faced Beings. Jimin can’t make their figures out- only senses their forms and shapes rather than see them. They pull Yoongi’s bed along, and Jimin follows after them at once.

This memory is blurred- the colours and lights shifting and glitching, as though the memory was just an adaption of sound and previous sight. As though Jimin were walking through a projected memory based on the sounds Yoongi was hearing as he feigned unconsciousness.

But suddenly, Jimin’s feet aren’t taking him anywhere. He was losing the memory Yoongi had kept- and Jimin can’t move. He can’t escape as the memory ends- and that’s when it hits Jimin hard.

This was Yoongi’s pain.

Some voices are thrown around here and there, the shapes around him contorting and shifting even more- the colours violent and the sounds sharp, piercing slowly through the OrTanks around them. The voices spike in volume and intensity and Jimin realizes it’s screaming- was it his own, or was this Yoongi’s?

Jimin stumbles against unstable bubbling floors, his feet unable to move.

‘Yoongi-!’ Jimin gasps out, the blurred forms pushing against him. Crushing him, bearing down in gnawing points down his back, against the top of his skull-

He’s falling- as recklessly and violently as light piercing the expanse of space, Jimin hurtles through stretched expanses of a singular moment of sounds, movement, and colour.

‘-ow many Yoongi’s do-’

A multitude of hands erupt, all reaching for him, desperation in their movements.

FOUND-

A massive globe-like space expands around him, cushioning his fall. Wires pour out of him- out his back, spreading like some vine all over and into hidden crevices under white large squared tiles. Suddenly the tiles clear and beneath the tiles are oceans of still movement- of Beings afloat in a dream waiting to awake into pain and waiting only to be found-
They open their eyes, hands moving to point at him, mouths opening to scream in pain-

‘Jimin!’

Jimin stumbles back into a dim hallway, but he doesn’t fall.

‘You’re all right- don’t-‘

His feet feel like they’re about to sink through the floor, to fall back into vortex of pain that pushed deep into his skin, through to his bones. The floor slips and Jimin slips from the hold he’s in but-

‘I got you- I got you!’ Yoongi is holding him- his voice, his presence- it pushes around, shielding him from the pain right behind those walls-

Yoongi’s face appears before him, eyes searching his own face as though for injury.

‘Listen to me- stay here,’ Yoongi orders him gently, ‘You’re safe here, there’s no pain here.’

Jimin’s ears clear from the high-pitched ringing he hadn’t even realized was there until it went away. His breaths are harsh. Gently, Yoongi lifts him from the ground- when did he even fall down? And helps him stand on his two feet. Looking down, the floors are a dark unpolished wood, quite black against his bare feet.

But he’s clean.

No blood, no gore- it’s jarring compared to the pain Jimin just went through. He expected blood to be everywhere.

And in the best possible way, Jimin is overwhelmed with the sheer intensity of how safe he feels here. In fact, all Jimin wants to do is sleep now. It was so comforting being in here- comforting, safe, loved.

‘Where are we?’ he asks, his voice almost sluggish.

Yoongi smiles, taking his hand and tugging him down the hallway.

‘This is where I come to get away from everything else,’ Yoongi explains. ‘It’s safe.’

‘Everything else?’ Jimin repeats, looking around. Behind him is a door, clearly the entrance door. Stairs lead upwards to one side, and there are 2 doors open to the side, revealing a small kitchen, and the other an office space of sorts with a couch pushed up against a window. There’s a soft yellow blanket draped over it, and a mess of items on the short table before it. The designs are simple, clean, and very distinctly Earthian.

‘Is this your home?’ Jimin asks quietly as his feet touch upon a soft rug laid down on the floor. To the other side, beyond the stairs are ceiling to floor windows, wide open, revealing an inky lavender sky.

It was just around dawn, before the sun was even pushing through the horizon. Jimin can spot rolling hills, mist lingering over fields scattered with trees. This felt like winter- or at least, winter right before spring.

He’s gently guided into a bedroom.

There’s a simple but heavy looking desk to one side, bordered by two slender windows. There’s a bed in the center, flanked by little tables. A comfortable chair to one side, and a door probably leading to an en suite. But what catches Jimin’s eye is a yellow telescope to one side.

‘Is this your home?’ Jimin asks again, looking around at Yoongi who was sitting on the edge of the bed now.

‘For now?’ Yoongi looks a little sheepish as he continues, ‘Um, actually I, imagined this place up. I don’t know how to explain it but- but after that time you looked into my memories I just- this is a place I sort of come to. In my own head. Or something, it doesn’t make a lot of sense to me.’

But it makes sense to Jimin.

Because he’s been in one of these places before. Yoongi’s is smaller, younger – it’s just a single existence. And somehow this relieves Jimin.

The previous one was a long hallway, doors flanked on each side. Jimin can still remember the gentle air of fresh snow around him, falling from a ceiling high above, the thin branches of trees appearing through the mist.

‘It’s beautiful,’ Jimin smiles, coming to sit next to Yoongi.

‘I like to think of us here,’ Yoongi tells him, a smile on his lips, reaching for his hand.

Yoongi’s hands envelope his own.

Jimin looks around, a wide smile growing on his face.

‘I really like it here.’

‘No palaces where you come from, your majesty?’ Yoongi teases, gently shoving their shoulders together. Jimin shoves back, ears feeling hot.

‘It’s just…I really like it,’ Jimin says gently.

‘I uh, I think there’s a space for you here,’ Yoongi tells him, looking unsure. ‘It’s…I don’t know how to explain it. But I think, this place somehow exists in me, because of you.’

‘What do you mean?’

‘It’s…-’ Yoongi stands, ‘Come, I’ll show you.’

He leads them back out again, and up the stairs.

‘Somehow everything just- just came to be, exactly how it should be,’ Yoongi tells him as they reach the top of the stairs. ‘But this place—…I think it’s waiting for you. Or, I guess I should say, I was waiting for you.’

It’s a clear space, no wall on one end, opening up to a sky and what appeared to be a gentle sea stretching out far away. Soft clouds form in the distance, just a little edge with rosy gold as the sun approached rising.

Yoongi smiles as he looks around and then back at Jimin, ‘Yeah- I think we were just waiting for you.’

‘We?’

‘Hmm,’ Yoongi nods, looking around, ‘This was an empty house- it was just me, and then I came to be, and it became more. And now, you’re here. A place that’s safe, and away from…well, away from everything else.’

This place. This house- this home. This was all Yoongi.

Yoongi as he was, an echo of what was, until he remembered- and the music of who he was, who he is, and who he will be reappeared. It took shape, formed into this place. This place that was all him. All Yoongi.

All for Jimin.

There’s a look in Yoongi’s eyes. Like he’s trying to tell him something but can’t bring himself to do it. And Jimin knows what he wants to say. But he can’t bring himself to say it either.

‘What do you think I should do here?’ Jimin asks instead.

‘You could always bring the sun up- though I think it’s already coming up.’ Yoongi looks around.

He looks fresh, young, and incredibly well. His hair is a little messy, like he just got out of bed. He’s wearing a soft sweater of sorts, a trousers with the cuffs rolled up a little though lopsided. His feet are bare and Jimin cannot see his scars.

There’s a gentle warmth that seeps through his clothes, and into his skin as Yoongi speaks. Turning, Jimin realizes that the sun has indeed come up. Walking back down the stairs, Jimin watches as the sun rises slowly.

It washes over him: warmth, strength, love.

It nearly chokes him up when he realizes what this meant.

‘Sunshine,’ Yoongi holds him close.

This is what it felt like to Yoongi. This was what he felt, looking at Jimin.

Yoongi exhales, as though finally relieved.

‘You’re everything I’ve wanted to feel.’

‘Do you think we should go back now?’ Jimin asks, after what felt like a gentle eternity, holding Yoongi in his arms, the warmth and comfort of their love all around them.

‘Not yet,’ Yoongi says quietly, his lips brushing against his ears. ‘I don’t-…I don’t want to let go just yet.’

Rain falls softly outside the windows, spectrums of colour colouring the sun-filled light streaming into the hallway. If Jimin listens closely, he can hear the sea upstairs.

‘I want to be selfish and keep you here,’ Yoongi confesses. ‘Want to stay here with you. But we- but we need to look again.’

The rain stops, but there are grey clouds hovering high above, waiting to break open again. The wind picks up outside, stray leaves fluttering across the wide window.

‘It hurts,’ Jimin manages to say. ‘You’re hurt.’

‘But you don’t hurt me,’ Yoongi says it like he’s teasing him. ‘You never have.’
‘But-’

‘How could this place exist, if you hurt me?’ Yoongi asks, leaning their foreheads together. ‘You can feel it, can’t you? This doesn’t hurt.’

Jimin closes his eyes, nodding, ‘Yeah- yeah I-’

Yoongi kisses him softly.

‘Just this one time-’

‘-this is the last time,’ Jimin declares, ‘No more. Not after this. No more. I won’t.’

‘The last time,’ Yoongi agrees before he kisses him one more time, ‘You’re strong. You’re so so strong, my beautiful sunshine.’

‘There’s no need for flattery,’ Jimin says wetly.

Yoongi just grins, leading him all the way down the stairs and then back to the bedroom. He guides him to the bed, crawling over him as Jimin’s back hits the soft blankets and pillow.

‘You’ll need to look past what I can’t remember. The blur, the lights, the sounds- you’ll need to push through.’ Yoongi explains, ‘You won’t see me, but I’ll be there with you.’

Jimin nods, unable to speak.

The lights from the windows cast clear shapes of light against the walls and ceiling.

‘Just the last time,’ Yoongi promises.

Jimin nods, holding his hands up to cup Yoongi’s face. Balancing himself on arm, Yoongi places his other hand over Jimin’s chest- above his heart. He opens his mouth to say something, but he stops. Instead he just smiles.

‘But I can come back here right?’ Jimin asks, almost fearfully.

‘It’s yours,’ Yoongi replies simply.

This time it doesn’t hurt.

Jimin finds himself inside a Transporter. It’s loud and from the way what he can see blurs, from how there appeared to be doubles of everything, Jimin recognizes that the night before Yoongi and Amic had headed out to Megibīya, they had truly drunk themselves into a steady stupor. It was a miracle he had somewhat managed to remember his meeting with Amme just the night before even though he felt it was somewhat of a dream.

Yoongi is slumbering in a state of half-sleep, half-lucidness. Amic next to him is completely knocked out.

His team are all there. Many of whom were also drunk.

Jimin wonders if they all felt that something was wrong.

‘-it’s not that-’ a voice breaks through the haze of sound and double-sight.

Jimin follows the voice, pushing through the drunken haze that shaped Yoongi’s memory.
'I'm sorry,' Jimin whispers quietly before he pauses a moment, hands lifted. A surge of light ripples around him and everything around him clears up.

It’s not a natural feeling. There lines too harsh, the finer details still lost- but the sounds clear up, the colours tone down a little, and most importantly, he hears the voices clearly.

‘-ut there’s nothing we can do about that.’

‘So you’re telling me we’re going to ignore the victims of what is evidently some form of planetary genocide, and we just stroll in?’

It’s Amad’la.

‘What I’m saying is that we have orders to follow,’ another voice says snappishly. ‘I’m flying us out to the border, then you’ll be heading down there.’

‘Just what am I leading my team into? They’re skilled yes, but they’re not experienced enough for a situation like this. What the hell kind of System abandons their own planet like this?’

‘Look- from what Yisheng Ndica and Sstion have said, there’s been some form of revolution within the System- some sort of coup d’état. They’re removing the main people in power and overturning everything.’

‘And with all due respect, but the Yishengs think we should go in now? Without any Yisheng to quell the situation?’ Amad’la sounds pissed. ‘I am grateful for their faith in me and my team, but this is not the time for it.’

Jimin can’t push through the forcefully sharpened and cleared up hallway into what is clearly the main Bridge. It’s fine- he can hear what was happening.

‘Look, Amad’la, I’m just as lost as you are in this okay- I’m just doing what I’ve been told, and telling you what I’ve been told. Actually, I’m telling you more than you should know.’ The other voice sighs.

‘So this trip is bullshit then. We’re being sent in to scout the leftovers of a genocide? Is that it?’

‘Yes and no. The Yishengs want to establish a way of getting in. Apparently the other way is too difficult, or at least they’re trying. The ones responsible for the coup are trying to help from inside the System but it’s been difficult.’

‘And why do the Yishengs want to interfere in something like this? Wasn’t there a Treaty signed over this place?’

The ship starts to distort again. Looking behind him, Jimin sees the way Yoongi falls deeper into sleep.

‘Yes but-‘

‘-this is incredibly shifty to me. As a higher commanding officer, I officially order you to turn this ship around and take us back to Tayi. I will personally speak to the Yisheng Ndica and Sstion if that’s what’s necessary-‘

Jimin concentrates hard, apologizing under his breath as he forces attention in this haze of a memory.
‘-that won’t be needed. Even if you outrank me, I have been ordered by Yisheng Ndica to take you all there- he outranks you. I am just doing my job. You should do yours.’

Amad’la suddenly appears in the doorway leading to the Bridge. Her eyes are angry, and also disturbed. She looks down into the chamber where the others were slumbering.

Her hands are held in a tight fist.

The ship is engulfed in darkness now, shapes crawling under each other.

‘Those are the orders.’ The voice repeats again.

‘What am I doing with this then?’ Amad’la asks, pointing at the device Jimin recognizes. The one that Yoongi had carried up the mountain side, struggling with his breath as he tried to hopelessly fulfill a mission doomed to fail. Everything is starting to leak colour and light.

Something starts to gnaw at Jimin’s skin.

‘You’re supposed to install it inside the tower located in the map. Apparently it will trigger a way to breach through the protective shields around the System.’

The ship lurches- and Jimin tilts forward violently.

He lands painfully on the floor, he feels himself coughing out blood.

‘-this feels wrong.’

‘It’s the orders. Are you questioning the Yishengs?’

‘No of course not I’m just-’

Jimin is thrown out of the ship.

He feels himself flung out, crashing through large sharp objects.

‘-IMIN!’

‘Yoongi-!’ Jimin gasps out, breath squeezing out of him- pain burning through his skin into his bone into his eyes in through his hair into his teeth and tongue-

‘Jimin!’

It’s not Yoongi.

It’s him again.

‘What-‘

‘Remember,’ he tells him with a beautiful smile, his hair light and golden. ‘You have to stay.’

Hands reach out for him and through the dark ocean he bursts through-

Jimin gasps for air as water drips down his hair, his face- he’s soaked in it.

Yoongi is also gasping, body shuddering from the sudden explosion of cold water. There is blood coming out from Yoongi’s nostril- from both of their own. The remnants of Yoongi’s pain burns under his skin and it makes Jimin cry out. And as though he knew- and Jimin suspects that Yoongi knew exactly what it was- the Human lurches forward to hold him down on the mattress.

‘-I mean you could have warned us before you wanted to bone-’

‘-he’s in shock-!’ Yoongi gasps, spitting out water as he attempts to straighten and hold Jimin’s body down.

It’s only then that Jimin realizes he’s shaking violently, a strange choking gasp escaping him.

The pain he felt wasn’t his own- but it settled deep into his bones- straight into his very Soul.

‘Call Amme-’ Jimin hears Hoseok sternly ordering someone but there’s something heavy settling on his head.

Taeh’yung looks down at him, ancient lights deep in his eyes watching him.

Instantly his body stops shaking.

‘You saw him,’ Taeh’yung grins brightly, ‘You saw him.’

‘I did,’ Jimin whispers haltingly. ‘He-…he told me to stay.’

Taeh’yung gives him a smile though his eyes are sad. Jimin feels Yoongi carefully lift himself off, hands still gentle but firm.

‘I saw- I saw them- I saw all of them-‘ Jimin manages to say, finding that he could in fact breathe. He turns his head to find Jungkook watching him, fear in his young eyes. His muscles ache with the memory of pain. With the memory of waiting.

‘Do you want us to call Amme?’ Sk’jin asks, his voice surprisingly gentle.

Jimin shakes his head. Instead he looks up straight at Yoongi.

‘Thank you,’ he smiles.

‘For what?’

‘For taking me there.’

‘Okay this is very nice and all that,’ Sk’jin says irritably, ‘But can Yoongi stop straddling Jimin, there’s a literal child in our midst.’

Yoongi turns bright red and pushes himself off. Jimin feels Taeh’yung help him sit up before he’s pulled into a strong hug despite his soaked clothes.

‘We didn’t wake up?’ Yoongi asks, looking down at his clothes.

‘Actually I just wanted to splash you guys with water. For you know, general revenge.’ Sk’jin shrugs.

‘-you- general revenge!?’ Yoongi squints at Sk’jin, pushing his wet hair back.

‘So- what did you see?’ Sk’jin asks, ignoring Yoongi.

‘There- there was something I wanted to see,’ Jimin says, his body strangely disconnected from his own, a layer of pain still somewhat present but not fully. Is this what Yoongi felt the whole time?
‘Uh- Yoongi mentioned it- when he had first woken- and he was in that room, with the wires on his back-’ Hoseok nods in understanding, gesturing for Jimin to continue, ‘-and so I- I felt that it might be important and I think- I think Yoongi also thought that.’

Yoongi nods at that.

‘In that memory I -…’ Jimin pauses a moment, ‘I saw one of the GI OrTanks- this was, I am sure, the place where the Yishengs stay-’

‘-the Yisheng Directory yeah, that’s where the GI headquarters is,’ Hoseok agrees.

‘-and one of the OrTanks- maybe more, I don’t know- had Megibiyan inside,’ Jimin tells them.

And the meaning of this, the implications, clearly don’t fly over any of their heads.

‘I think we can say for sure that there’s something really shady going on- within whoever was involved in the Treaty,’ Sk’jin declares, ‘And maybe Jimin wasn’t made known about it-’

‘-I think it’s a little too hasty to say that Jimin’s System might have voluntarily done something-‘ Hoseok begins.

‘No,’ Sk’jin shakes his head, ‘Trying to think that Jimin’s System had nothing to do with this is not being optimistic but it’s being foolish. From what has been discussed, there is clearly some double-crossing going on, I will literally bet Namjoon’s working arm on this.’

‘Sk’jin is right,’ Jimin says before Hoseok can add anything more. ‘I believe that to be true. I saw- …I heard something.’

Jemin tells them about the voices in Yoongi’s drunken recollection. Almost word for word.

Hoseok looks uneasy but Jimin can see the way the former agent seems to also be adding things together. They all look uneasy, but at the same time none of them look remotely surprised by this information. It’s almost as though they always suspected it.

‘Someone inside- someone from inside your System, teamed with Ndica and Stsion- they were… they planning on something.’ Hoseok concludes.

‘We don’t know if they succeeded,’ Sk’jin says in a surprisingly comforting tone. ‘Let’s not forget that they didn’t account for the Akramanese to show up.’

Jemin nods.

A coincidence?

We do not bring death.

‘There’s definitely a compromise with what’s happened in your System. Do you think there was anyone who wanted a … a reformation, or to overthrow you and your sister-‘

‘-we’re not-…we’re in power,’ Jimin explains, his mind alight with lingering pain.

‘But you hold the System together don’t you?’ Yoongi says gently, ‘What is a home without those who live in it?’

It’s a resigned and calm acceptance. But it’s not one Jimin wants to claim.
‘It’s difficult to accept it,’ Jimin confesses, ‘It’s…it’s not something I want to be true. And I am hoping- I am…I am simply begging- that it isn’t true but- all signs point to there. And I-‘ Jimin glances at Yoongi, ‘I will listen to my heart. But I will take my head with me too.’

‘I don’t want to ask a painful question- or to cause panic,’ Hoseok begins gently, ‘But what if this is what we think it means. What would wait for us when we take you back home? If what has happened, has been caused as a result of your…of your System siding with the Yisheng Ndica-what would happen?’

‘Each inhabitable planet in Menigišiti is governed by their own method of rule, government, and belief,’ Jimin explains, finding it odd to explain something so well known within his System. ‘There are representatives who listen to the voices of their regions, or their countries, and who then bring forth this topic to the…the uh ambassadors of each planet. And all of these ambassadors bring these topic together as a council- and Tsirin and I listen to these um, topics.’

‘You’re like, a judge?’ Sk’jin asks with a quirk of his head.

‘No- or…yes.’ Jimin tries, ‘We do not control. We understand, we acknowledge, and we bless. We are the heart, the fate- we listen to all, we are united in our thoughts- all for the heart to…to beat through each planet- through all the people.’

‘That’s nice,’ Sk’jin remarks, without a hint of irony.

‘But you were…well, you were taken.’ Hoseok states bluntly, ‘What would happen with you gone? Would there be a replacement?’

‘The fate is born only after the existing one dies,’ Jimin explains simply.

‘But you…you need both right?’ Hoseok looks a bit confused before he asks, ‘I’m sorry to ask this but I don’t mean it disrespectfully, but if you don’t exactly make decisions- then what is your purpose or meaning?’

But Jimin understands this- knows what Hoseok is trying to ask.

‘Our…um, administrative?’ Jimin tries out, ‘Our administrative position isn’t…isn’t how most see it- with the same uh, political weight or even religious symbology as a lot of planets and Systems in the GLA. Menigišiti is built on harmony – and the Heart, and the Fate, balance Menigišiti to exist.’

‘What happens if the Fate isn’t born?’ Sk’jin inquires, ‘Like, say they’re born a few years late.’

‘That has never happened,’ Jimin replies. ‘We are always born the day they die. In a way, we are continuously reborn. The eclipse is constant, as is the continuity of light- we balance and maintain Menigišiti.’

‘So what would happen, if one or both no longer…no longer were inside Menigišiti?’

‘I don’t know,’ Jimin replies honestly. ‘I really don’t know. It’s never happened before.’

‘Well I guess we’re gonna have to find out once we get there,’ Sk’jin sighs dramatically.

‘Do you think this is something we should discuss with Amme?’ Yoongi asks as he moves to sit on the edge of the bed where it’s dry.

‘I’ll see what I can do,’ Hoseok volunteers. ‘I’m gonna try and check new angles of searching for information around Axudar as well- Amme has helped us out immensely- but that-‘
‘-that doesn’t stop her from being suspicious!’ Sk’jin chimes in with an all to bright smile, swinging his arms.

‘Are you both okay?’ Hoseok inquires carefully, looking over them both with a searching eye.

‘I’d like to get dry,’ Yoongi states rather monotonously.

‘Okay- if you’re both okay, let’s get working on the ship. I want us ready and out as soon as this ship exits warp.’ Hoseok claps his hands together twice.

‘God what a slave-driver,’ Sk’jin remarks though he’s getting up as well to follow Hoseok out. Of course he doesn’t stop there and adds, ‘No funny business you two- it’s not decent; not on a Yisheng ship unless that’s like your kink.’

Yoongi throws his wet shirt at Sk’jin with comic accuracy, the wet blob hitting the Khol’isa with a resounding wet smacking sound.

Out of nowhere, Jungkook tackles Yoongi. A playful growl in his throat as he pushes the Human down. Yoongi dramatically yells, flopping on the bed as Jungkook twists him around.

‘Spaces, I am so adopting him,’ Sk’jin grins from the doorway, throwing Yoongi’s wet shirt away across, landing close the closed bathroom door.

‘Everything good?’

Jimin looks around to find Taeh’yung still there, his expression somewhat thoughtful. Not in a way that made him look like those who came before him, their lives still existing through him and shining through him. This was truly Taeh’yung- thinking and watching and listening under his façade of playfulness and recklessness.

‘I think so,’ Jimin replies truthfully before adding softly. ‘It’s going to hurt, isn’t it?’

Taeh’yung isn’t looking at him when smiles, almost rueful, and definitely sad.

‘It will.’

So.

Obviously there is no avoiding a Yisheng.

Especially when you’re aboard their ship.

Doesn’t mean Yoongi isn’t going to try.
He’s not sure why he doesn’t want to meet with Amme, face-to-face, alone. There’s no actual reason – but that sense of intense trepidation is there and Yoongi tries his best to avoid the Khhemsə Yisheng as best he can. It was fine when she had healed him, because almost everyone else was there. He’s not sure why he’s doing this, trying to slip away.

It works for a total of 3 hours.

The ship that Amme had given to them was smaller than the Užkulisai, and less powerful. It was a pretty standard looking trade-ship. Definitely a lot more common and very easy to ignore amidst, say, a heavy traffic-route in Docks. There are only 2 levels, with the Bridge and cabin area on top, the Hangar and Engine room below. There was a small but equipped Medical Bay, the single Medical Bed making both Yoongi and Hoseok grimace a little. As a whole, the entire crew used the Medical Bed too often and seeing only one was a little worrying. But as Hoseok had eloquently put it ‘pick-pockets can’t pocket everything’.

But what the Laikin-X33 lacked in housing assets, it made up for in powerful anti-matter engines, and a high-grade protective shield equivalent to the one the Užkulisai had.

One of the first things Hoseok and Yoongi had done was to install the “invisibility cloak” as Yoongi liked to refer to it. The term seemed fitting and somehow had an air of reminiscence that he can’t quite point out. He knows that Sk’jin and Hoseok had their own terms for it but somehow they all understood each other when referring to the invisibility cloak.

They then re-installed and uploaded their system into this ship. It would take a little while to calibrate and they would be able to have Lisai working up in the Laikin as well.

Yoongi was now in the kitchen. Much smaller than the one in the Užkulisai and more so a storage area for food. Hoseok had said he was going to check up on the Bridge one last time, making a joke about allowing Yoongi the time to poison their stock again. Yoongi had snorted in reply but didn’t deny that he was about to do exactly that.

It’s saved them many times now and Yoongi doesn’t see why he should stop. After all, it was because of him they were able to still keep track of Namjoon. The Kutsoglerin was in warp-somewhere in between the space-borders of Lapho and Aquí. Neither of these interstellar regions rings a bell in Yoongi’s mind or recollection regarding his past or most recent excursions. Hoseok had surmised that maybe rather than heading for a specific destination, the GI and Namjoon were simply stalling until they were able to get Jimin’s location.

He scans the last of their supplies, satisfied that they had a large quantity of food specifically for Jungkook, when the hair on the back of his neck stands on end.

It’s not one of danger or alarm- but rather something almost primitive. As though a predator was lurking behind him. Carefully glancing back, he notices the snake-like creature that coiled around Amme, poised and center at the doorway leading inside the kitchen.

‘She won’t hurt you,’ Amme’s voice says as she makes her way up the rather narrow stairwell that circled upwards into the circular dining area.

‘I know,’ Yoongi replies, lowering the jar of salt and placing it back securely into its shelf.

‘This is not as spacious or comfortable as the Užkulisai,’ Amme says, slightly stooped over in the dining room. ‘I apologize.’

Yoongi indicates his own height and shrugs. Well, here she was. No point in trying to avoid her or feel uncomfortable. After all Amme has seen him naked.

Most Beings are uncomfortable with nudity.

Yeah, no shit.

‘How does it feel?’ she asks.

‘That seems a bit vague,’ Yoongi replies.

‘How does it feel to be here again?’ Amme clarifies.

Yoongi pauses.

‘I don’t know really,’ he answers. ‘I’m-…I’m back and…I guess it’s…odd.’

‘Odd how?’

Yoongi gives Amme a wry look.

‘I died,’ he says simply. ‘Bluntly put. I died, and somehow, I’m here again, and it’s not…it’s not comfortable.’

‘What do you mean?’

Yoongi idly fiddles with the lid of the sugar jar. They had 6 different kinds of sugars- all extracts from different sources. The one for Jungkook came from the extracts of a large insect-like creature’s glands and it resembles honey. Except it probably had more questionable additives to it if it was catered for Jungkook’s species.

‘It’s like-…’ Yoongi is careful with his words. ‘I know I’m not supposed to be here. I’m not…I’m not supposed to be alive, here, right now. And it hurts.’

‘How does it hurt?’

Yoongi places the lid back on the sugar jar, making sure it was sealed and rightly poisoned.

‘Have you heard of this ancient text, it’s from Earth,’ Yoongi starts, ‘It’s this character, from an imaginary species called Hobbits. He possessed a uh, ring. Of power. And this ring, extended his life. And he described it…feeling stretched out. Like too much butter on a piece of bread. It sort of feels like that I guess- just…’ he ignores the pain lingering just beneath his immediate consciousness. ‘Uncomfortable.’

Amme doesn’t say anything. Instead she takes a seat, legs folding to one side under the table to accommodate their length. The snake-like creature slithers about, as though exploring the ship.

‘I feel like-’ Yoongi isn’t sure why he doesn’t want to say it out loud. Almost as though saying it out loud would permanently cement and ground his imaginations into reality.

‘I feel like I will break,’ Yoongi confesses as quietly as he could. ‘Did you know? That this would happen.’

‘I would not have reasoned this outcome,’ Amme replies. ‘When I first saw you again, in the forests behind the Headquarters, I felt as though your memory existed. But I imagined that it was because I knew of you before.’
‘I had memories- distant and un-remembered.’ Yoongi thinks back. ‘Was I always meant to be here?’

‘Fate has a strange way of guiding you,’ Amme places her hands over the smooth dark grey table top. ‘And though sometimes you may strive against it, fate appears within all aspects of who you were, who you are, and who you will be.’

Yoongi snorts a bit, ‘That really sounds a lot like some new-age bull.’

Clearly this statement is lost on Amme so she ignores it.

‘What you saw were not dreams, but memories,’ Amme explains.

‘When I asked you about memories, and about living, you told me you believed in Continuum.’ Yoongi states. ‘What did you mean by that?’

‘It means that what was, will always be, as a repetition, a rebirth, a continuation.’ Amme explains. ‘Yisheng had meant for hatred and death and violence to remain where they escaped from. What Yisheng didn’t know was that they brought it with them. And as Continuum grew with what they built, so did hatred, so did death, so did violence. We are life built on this Continuum, we are part of this Continuum that will go on, a cycle, a circle – who we once were, in some ways, will always be who we will be.’

‘But not like this?’

‘Maybe not for you,’ Amme is gentle as she speaks, ‘Maybe you are here, because you continued to follow fate.’

‘Lead, and I will follow.’

‘What about the others?’ Yoongi questions, ‘Those other GI? Or, well- the others from when you found us in Bhumi. Will they also remember? Will they also dream?’

Amme looks thoughtful, ‘I cannot make that statement. They showed signs of recognition, of connection to Jimin. But their reactions have never gone beyond that. Has Jungkook displayed these signs?’

‘No,’ Yoongi shakes his head. ‘He’s- he’s not like me. Or the ones from that ship.’

‘He was meant to be GI, was he not?’ It sounds more like a statement than a question, ‘He is young.’

Yoongi gives Amme a small smile at that before he says, ‘I saw the Omhlophe- clearly. They had the same marks down their backs.’

Yoongi is careful as he continues, ‘And…they seemed to honour their dead. I am not sure how much of it was ceremonial- or just…just projection from what they have seen. But it was the same as the Yisheng burial.’

Amme doesn’t say anything, waiting for Yoongi to complete what he had to say.

‘Are they why they Court is afraid, of the GI and the others from the Akramanese ship? That they will become like the Omhlophe? Inherit the dream that the Akramanese followed?’

Amme nods after a moment.
’Not all of them. But considering the strength of the GI, and the unknown potential the unborn from the Akramanese ship could possibly hold, I would say their fear is quite founded.’

’Jungkook is not like that though,’ Yoongi says quietly. ‘He was created differently, I know that, but considering... considering what he’s been through. He is... he is quite pure of heart.’

Amme nods to that, ‘We are all the same.’

’What do you mean?’

’What or who you are does not lead you to become either or.’ Amme emphasizes lightly. ‘Perhaps Jungkook is the way he is, because it is his choice. The same way Taeh’yung is the way he is, because he chooses to be like this. We cannot vouch for every single unborn, for every single GI.’

’The... they said something to me. Inside that asteroid,’ Yoongi recollects that moment with vivid clarity. ‘They said “we will not be found”.’

Amme tilts her head, looking curious.

’And-’ Yoongi pauses a moment, checking.

’I was found. I know, because this... this is what it feels like to be found.’

They remain quiet for a while.

’And I think- when we were in Grisial- when the GI came. There was... another me. And he seemed so... so void,’ Yoongi says heavily, ‘He looked like me. Probably sounded just like me. And he... all he wanted was to just reach for Jimin. To be found.’

’You don’t know why the Omhlophe, if they were created similarly to you, would not want to be found?’

’That and-... while questionable, the GI who came to Grisial, they did not harm Jimin. Nor did they harm Namjoon. In a sense- they protected him. But the Omhlophe- it seemed like they wanted to either overtake Jimin or... or kill him.’

’And what about you?’

’What about me?’

’The GI, those who came in Grisial- how did they react to you?’

Yoongi thinks of the end of the TeorSer aimed straight at him.

’They tried to kill me.’

’Why do you think they tried to do that?’

Yoongi shrugs helplessly.

’I don’t know how I can help with this,’ Amme says gently, ‘Have you told your crew?’

Yoongi shakes his head.

’You should. It would be better.’
Yoongi nods in agreement.

There’s a lot that could be said of it, a lot theorized; but it would all be conjecture. And at the moment, with everything that they knew, with everything that was falling into place, Yoongi was going to wait a while before he would have to disrupt this momentary calm.

‘Is there anything else you would like to discuss?’ Amme inquires, her tone soft.

It triggers a flash of pain. It was as though Amme was giving Yoongi time to tell her what they just did. Why his body was ringing with echoes of pain, pain shared with Jimin though briefly. Amme could probably sense it.

‘You understand,’ Amme intones quietly, ‘Don’t you?’

Yoongi knew that was what Amme had truly come to say. That was what she wanted to clarify with him.

Yoongi nods slowly, ‘I do.’

‘You know what will happen. I cannot heal you of it.’

Amme sounds sorrowful.

‘I know,’ Yoongi tries to give Amme a smile. ‘It’s-…I think it was obvious from the start.’

‘You cannot do what you and Jimin did,’ Amme tells him firmly, ‘It will kill you.’

‘It was a risk I was willing to take- a risk I had to take.’

Amme doesn’t ask for more- doesn’t press for what he saw. What Jimin saw.

‘Perhaps things will change, once you truly return,’ Amme begins tentatively.

‘More butter or less bread?’

‘Perhaps something entirely different.’

Yoongi lets out a small huff of a laugh, ‘Maybe.’

‘I am sorry,’ her remorse is evident. ‘I could not save you. Or your friend. Your crew.’

‘None of us really knew what was happening,’ is all Yoongi can say. And it’s true. ‘There’s no point in beating yourself up about it.’

‘What we have sent you to do,’ Amme continues as though she didn’t hear what Yoongi had to say. ‘What you are about to do – we cannot predict the outcome. We cannot begin to understand what waits for you. What you will uncover. What you will have to do. After what has happened, after Gaia, we cannot allow a repeat.’

‘But all life is Continuum, isn’t it?’

Amme looks down at the table at that.

‘What will happen, will happen,’ Yoongi sighs out, suddenly tired. Something gnaws at the base of his head, threatening to hurt him.
'Maybe. Maybe not.'

It almost sounds like a gentle rebuke. Yoongi doesn’t know how to answer in all honesty.

‘I don’t blame you,’ Yoongi tells Amme. ‘About what happened. About…about any of this. It’s not your fault.’

Amme genuinely looks surprised to hear this.

The silence continues for a while before Amme stands, her head brushing the ceiling a little.

‘We may not meet again- at least, not in this Continuum,’ Amme declares. ‘But maybe you can change that.’

‘If I do, why would I want to see you again?’ Yoongi snorts.

Amme’s smile is a little disturbing, what with all the glassy teeth on display.

The sound of footsteps approach them, climbing upwards. It doesn’t surprise Yoongi that it’s Jimin. He’s carrying with him an OrTank, probably with some additional supplies.

Jimin eyes both Amme and Yoongi with a little suspicion. It’s mainly directed at Amme though. But Amme seems to find it funny as she bows towards Jimin.

’S’wezete Amme.’ Jimin bows his head as well.

‘I was making my farewells,’ she informs Jimin who steps into the dining area as Amme makes her way out. ‘I will be at the Bridge if you seek me.’

She descends, her snake-like pet slithers out from the hallway that stretched the distance between the dining space and their own Bridge.

Jimin watches her leave until she disappears. Yoongi walks forward to take the OrTank from him.

‘What’s in this?’ Yoongi asks, squinting at the stamped words over the top. Some form of grain product. Honestly Yoongi’s not sure what Sk’jin thought would be useful for them.

‘Um- I believe Hoseok said more things for you to poison.’ Jimin gives him an amused look.

Yoongi chuckles.

‘Do you think it’s too small for Namjoon? Or even Sk’jin?’ Jimin inquires as he looks around while Yoongi opens the OrTank.

‘Who told them to be so tall?’ Yoongi acts offended, ‘Jungkook’s headed there too I think.’

Somehow, being aboard the Yisheng ship seemed to have boosted Jungkook’s health. Whatever effect being in here had greatly replenished and powered Jungkook’s health. He definitely towered over Hoseok now, having started off just a little taller than Yoongi. Jungkook tried his best to be as helpful, rarely really tiring as he hefted the heavier OrTanks over his shoulders with ease. Yoongi could see Jimin and Hoseok watching carefully. It didn’t help that Taeh’yung encouraged the youngling to carry him everywhere. But Jungkook seemed to view this as a form of exercise. Taeh’yung was often latched onto Jungkook’s back, happily swinging his feet while his ride lifted two heavy OrTanks with ease to and fro the Laikin and the store.

‘Are the Pravasi M’hanun tall?’ Jimin inquires.
Quite tall- some of their races grow up to 7-8 feet tall,’ Yoongi grimaces, remembering some he came across personally.

Jimin seems to be calculating that measurement, his head tilting upwards towards the ceiling. Yoongi reaches over to boop his nose. Jimin flinches comically, blinking rapidly as though shocked that Yoongi would do something like that.

‘I think Kook is still a while away from 8 feet tall,’ Yoongi chortles, opening a drawer to place some of the parcels from the OrTank inside. ‘But this place would definitely be too small for him then.’

‘It’s comfortable?’ Jimin smiles looking around and pointing at the upper cabinets with an amused look. ‘We can reach the cupboards easily now.’

Yoongi chuckles. Some of the storage in the Užkulisai was too high up for both of their smaller stature. Something Sk’jin made sure to tease them about, and something Namjoon always patiently helped them with if he was nearby.

‘We should be okay- it won’t be too long,’ Yoongi replies as he pushes the drawer shut, a tiny magnetic locking sound ensuring it was safely secured.

‘What did Amme say?’ Jimin inquires softly as he closes shut the cabinet he had opened for no other reason than to simply demonstrate his ability to do so now.

Yoongi mulls over his words a little before replying, ‘She wanted to ask how I was uh, coping I guess. Like, how I was adapting? Being back and stuff.’

Jimin nods, listening carefully.

‘I think she feels guilty- about what happened,’ Yoongi shrugs, pulling out a bunch of sealed liquid containers. He’s pretty sure some of them had blood-broths for Jungkook. ‘She wanted to apologize? Make peace I guess.’

Jimin clearly understands that something more had been said- something that Yoongi doesn’t want to repeat. Because his expression turns serious. Melancholic.

‘I’m sorry,’ Yoongi tells him quietly. ‘I know that- that you didn’t want to do that. To look in but-‘

‘-it was necessary,’ Jimin shakes his head. ‘It’s needed and it- it helped me too.’

‘How?’

Jimin’s eyes glaze over a little, looking at him with an expression that Yoongi can feel. And he knows- they both know.

‘You don’t hurt me, sunshine,’ Yoongi whispers.

‘I felt it,’ Jimin says, his voice fragile. ‘I still feel it.’

‘It’s not your fault.’

Jimin just shakes his head.

He looks small and tired again. But in a different way- in a way that Yoongi knows has something to do with him. Yoongi wants to change that- needs to change that.
He decides that using tactics from Chapter 4 of the “Small Talks, Medium Gestures, Big Effects” on diversions and how to change topics. He glances out of the tiny circular window over the main counter. In actuality, Yoongi is sort of struck with a strange nostalgic sense at some of the design choices inside the ship. They all felt sort of reminiscent of Ancient Earth submarines. With the circular windows, slightly tighter quarters and bunks inside the bare-minimum cabins.

Taeh’yung and Jungkook are outside. And for once Taeh’yung is not pressed up against Jungkook’s back, hitching a ride. But instead he’s aggressively flailing as though mimicking some dance. Jungkook is watching, wide-eyed, confused, but also sort of shuffling along to whatever Taeh’yung was so aggressively throwing himself into.

‘Ah- really feels like we have 2 kids aboard,’ Yoongi comments, nodding towards the window. Momentarily distracted from the change in topic, Jimin takes a few step to peer out though not before looking at Yoongi with some confusion.

He instantly starts laughing, curling his shoulders as though embarrassed.

‘Is- is that dance?’

‘It shouldn’t be.’

This makes Jimin laugh even more, leaning up against the counter to watch as Jungkook hesitantly shuffle-hops on his feet.

‘I think Taeh’yung is a bad influence,’ Yoongi starts seriously, ‘Imagine Jungkook at 8 feet tall, dancing in earnest like that-’

Jimin looked like he wanted to initially counter Yoongi’s remark about Taeh’yung, but he bursts out laughing instead.

‘I’m sure in some places it’s very beautiful.’

‘What are the dances like in your home planet?’ Yoongi asks, genuinely curious.

‘Uh- not like that,’ Jimin breaks out into giggles, pointing at Taeh’yung who was getting wilder and wilder. Jungkook is genuinely backing up now, though still doing a strange shuffling hop.

‘Earth has nice dances,’ Yoongi begins bravely, disregarding memories of struggling to stay on time to any beat. Having rhythm wasn’t always synonymous to staying on beat weirdly enough. Chaewon would scream when Yoongi and their mum did funny dance moves just to tease her.

‘Not like that?’

‘If you danced like that on Earth, you’d be arrested for public indecency,’ Yoongi snorts holding out both his hands. Jimin takes them without question, though he has no idea what Yoongi was about to do. Which, funny enough, Yoongi himself didn’t know what he was going to do. He rarely ever danced in a serious way.

‘Uh-’ Jimin cuts into his thoughts, making him realize that he was just staring blankly at their hands and not moving. Jimin’s cheeks are a bit flushed, as though somewhat embarrassed.

‘Right- you uh, mirror my steps.’

Yoongi steps on Jimin’s toes (bare) twice before they get the concept down.
‘I’d dip you, but I’m not at all confident,’ Yoongi says as he manages to take some basic steps forward, back, side to side.

‘Dip?’ Jimin tilts his head, amused by what they were doing.

‘Uh yea- it’s complicated,’ Yoongi huffs.

Jimin laughs, ‘Are you just making this up?’

Yoongi pulls an exaggerated offended expression, making Jimin apologize though it’s more laughter than anything else. So Yoongi spins Jimin out instead, cutting his laughter short.

‘I’m an excellent dancer by Human standards,’ Yoongi grins, making Jimin circle back before pulling him. It’s funny, because neither of them are remotely following a rhythm. Jimin is laughing, bright and clear, hair falling over his eyes in graceful waves.

‘People would flock to see me bust a move,’ Yoongi continues to make extravagant claims, pulling and twirling Jimin around in the small space. Jimin bumps into one of the counters in his enthusiasm to try and twirl Yoongi as well. ‘They’d say —wow look at Min Yoongi go—’

Jimin collapses against him, head thrown back as he laughs.

‘What? You think I’m joking?’ Yoongi teases, releasing their hands to hold Jimin by the waist as the latter bodily laughs against him. ‘On Ancient Earth, there was this guy called Mick Jagger- I had moves like Mick Jagger y’know?’

Jimin muffles his laughter against Yoongi’s shoulders as the Human does a funny dance move, weirdly shuffling his feet to some random tempo.

‘Stop stop-!’ Jimin wheezes, pulling him to a stop by wrapping his arms around Yoongi. ‘I believe you!’

‘Good- you should,’ Yoongi holds his nose up high smugly.

Jimin is giggling against him, his body warm and just shaking slightly. Yoongi slowly draws his hands up Jimin’s arms before moving downwards and holding him by his hips. They shuffle side to side, not really moving at all, but just swaying against each other.

‘This is like a waltz,’ Yoongi murmurs.

‘Waltz?’

‘Hmm- Human dance style,’ Yoongi replies. ‘A very lazy version.’

‘What does it look like?’

Yoongi thinks back to the clips from Ancient Earth.

‘Uh- it could be slow. It was considered elegant, classic- very romantic.’

Jimin giggles again, ‘Are you trying to be romantic?’

‘I don’t know- is this romantic?’

Jimin laughs again.
It’s hardly the place to attempt a show of being romantic.

‘Doesn’t dance need music?’ Jimin questions curiously, ‘Or Earth didn’t use music?’

‘I can hear music,’ Yoongi tells him softly, ‘It sounds...sounds like something from a distant memory.’

They take slow steps.

After a few moments, Jimin starts humming.

Yoongi brings Jimin just a little closer, feeling the melody rather than just simply listening to it. He hums along as well, a little slower, a little softer.

‘I think we should definitely learn how to do a dance and become the next galactic dancing stars—’

Jimin breaks from his humming, leaning away to crouch down on the floor but he loses his balance and falls onto the floor, breaking out into hearty peals of laughter. Yoongi makes waves with his arms, and Jimin is literally flat on the floor, wheezing as his eyes glimmer with tears of laughter.

Yoongi kneels down, still waving his arms, but now also laughing along with Jimin.

It takes a minute but Jimin manages to sit up. Their hands entwine almost immediately, naturally, instinctively.

‘What do you think?’ Yoongi asks, feeling a little breathless.

Jimin’s cheeks are rosy, his eyes shining, his smile and breathy almost squeaky chuckles infectious. Yoongi pushes back his hair, just simply drinking in all of Jimin as he was in this very moment.

‘I think that’s a great idea,’ Jimin beams at him, taking Yoongi’s hand back in his and kissing it. ‘We would be very successful.’

‘Successful because we’re so good, or successful because we’re so bad?’ Yoongi questions, taking Jimin’s hand and kissing it back.

‘Depends,’ Jimin’s expression is so fond, so adoring.

‘You’re beautiful,’ Yoongi says against Jimin’s knuckles. ‘Beautiful sunshine.’

Jimin is very quick to turn red, batting his hands away and shoving Yoongi back. He scrambles up to stand, rapidly talking in his own language, his name thrown in there occasionally.

‘Jiminie—’ Yoongi rasps out, laughter constricting his throat as he watches Jimin flail in embarrassment. There’s the sound of tentative footsteps and Yoongi isn’t surprised to find Jungkook peeking in, eyes confused and a tad bit accusatory when he regards Yoongi on the floor.

Somehow this makes Yoongi laugh even more and makes Jimin hide his face in his hands. Jungkook, the precious youngling that he is, looks even more confused.

‘Uh- Sk’jin says we should get ready?’ he says, eyeing the two with even more confusion and suspicion.

‘Okay- we’re coming,’ Yoongi grins. ‘Enjoyed dancing?’
‘Dancing?’

Yoongi just shakes his head in reply.

Jungkook continues to eye him suspiciously, unmoving here he stood.

Yoongi rolls his eyes to himself before he makes to stand. Jimin has lowered his hands, now giving Yoongi comic accusatory looks.

Yoongi holds his hand out, ‘C’mon sunshine, let’s go.’

Cheeks flushed, Jimin takes Yoongi’s hand.

They follow Jungkook out, pass the circular dining space. Jungkook takes the stairs in giant steps. It makes Yoongi want to snort at the display. Especially after Jungkook gives him an almost challenging look before disappearing.

Jimin gives him a questioning look. He’s still smiling, eyes still sparkling with laughter and mirth.

There’s also a look of expectation. The same look he had when they dreamt together.

For a moment, Yoongi is back there. In that soft comfortable bed, Jimin smiling at him, his hands on his face. Yoongi leans in to softly kiss his nose and then his lips.

‘You know I love you right?’

Jimin’s eyes widen a little, the eclipse bright and clear.

It’s soothing.

Yoongi remembers that day on Earth. With Chaewon and Amic. How the world is transformed under this light- under this sky- and the entirety of time seems to pause, to allow them to witness this known cosmic beauty for just a few seconds longer- just a few heartbeats longer. Just long enough for him to feel as though he was breathing at the same pace with everyone gathered around them. To feel as though he were looking at the same sky with everyone- to feel the planet sigh at the sight of the eclipse. He remembers with clarity the moment where he realized he would never return.

“It would be just like this.”

Jimin pulls him close and kisses him back just as softly.

‘I know.’

* *

Feeling better, both in body and somehow in mind than he ever has during the duration of this mission, Hoseok just hopes that this will last.
Their new ship is sturdy, and sure it’s small and they’ll have to find ways for all of them to properly fit in. He’s sure Jungkook wouldn’t mind sharing with Sk’jin and vice versa because they practically roomed in the same Cabin at the Užkulisai. Not that Sk’jin actually needed to sleep or anything- but it was still nice to accommodate each Being. Taeh’yung had gleefully stated that he would room with Jimin, which was somehow immediately and clearly shot down by Yoongi in a way that Taeh’yung found himself agreeing to rooming with Hoseok without realizing it.

Sk’jin had rolled his eyes so hard it was a miracle they didn’t roll all the way back in his head.

‘Welcome back Head Pilot Hoseok,’ Lisai’s voice calls clearly through the Bridge as Hoseok passes through the hallway and into the small Bridge.

‘Thank you- how are the systems? All good?’

‘All systems are at green, waiting for your orders.’

‘Great- we’ll be leaving in an hour. Start up communications channel after we dock out.’

‘Understood. Would you like to link up to previously cut-off channels?’

‘Only for Namjoon’s Comm Device- ignore the rest,’ Hoseok replies as he sweeps over the Bridge one more time. Sk’jin would take over the Navigation until they were able to get Namjoon back. Hoseok’s not sure how it was going to work out- but he’s hoping that the GI (???) that took him would be rational and would see no reason as to why they shouldn’t bring him back. Especially when coming back meant coming back to Jimin. At least that’s what Yoongi and Jimin himself had firmly believed would happen.

Hoseok wanted to be able to track the Omhlophe- to make sure of their location. But if they connect back to their channels in the Užkulisai it would mean that the Omhlophe would be able to track them down too. He’s hoping that with Namjoon back, they might be able to reverse engineer these signals so that only they would be able to receive and use it.

He walks out of the Bridge and into the hallway framed with 3 doors on each side. 4 cabins and 2 washrooms. It’s not what they got used to at the Užkulisai but Hoseok has definitely survived situations where this current living facility could be considered 5-Standard.

The hallway connects to the dining/kitchen and circling stairs that lead downwards to the Hangar area. Putting the Spardyti inside would be a tight squeeze, but according to Yoongi’s measurement they would be set.

It’s not surprising that Amme would not have any weaponry, defensive or offensive, in her ship. So while they’re fully recovered, they were severely lacking in any form of weaponry save for the ones Hoseok and Yoongi had managed to salvage and grab from the Užkulisai. They were definitely going to have to stock up and that was not going to be easy.

Scanning the dining/kitchen, Hoseok notes that everything has been prepped and cleared for taking off. On his way down, he comes across Jungkook. The youngling is snacking on a packet of what Hoseok guesses is some form of dried meat. Jungkook’s increased appetite was both heartening and worrying. Their storage capacity was smaller now, and with Jungkook’s very large appetite, they would have to be careful about stocking up and maintaining supplies. But for now he seemed very happy, eating nearly hour.

‘The Spardyti is here!’ Jungkook tells him at once, clearly being sent to summon Hoseok back down.
'Thanks Kook,' Hoseok smiles, ruffling at Jungkook’s fluffy growing hair. Hoseok remembers going through his own growth spurt, though it didn’t span a few days like it did with Jungkook.

Hoseok makes his way into the Hangar, Jungkook behind him. The gates are open and the ramps drawn down. Yoongi is inside the Spardyti, carefully steering it and positioning it to align correctly. Jimin and Taeh’yung are standing some ways outside, Amme next to them.

Sk’jin is nowhere to be seen but he had mentioned something about taking a nice bath before “shit inevitably goes down again”.

Hoseok and Jungkook exit the Hangar to allow Yoongi space to drive the Transporter in. Yoongi had taken over repairing it with the maintenance Androids in the Yisheng Hangar next to the one they were in. Yoongi didn’t touch up the exterior to change it- stating that its rather woebegone state was more than fitting and perfect for a trade-ship like their new one. It would better match their new identity as a small trading crew.

Hoseok makes his way towards where the others were now standing. Amme seems to be patiently listening to something Taeh’yung was saying, while Jimin watched/listened with a slightly confused expression.

‘Hoseok.’

Hoseok wonders if he’s imagining the relief in Amme’s voice as she turns her attention to him.

‘Kookie!’ Taeh’yung throws himself at the Pravasi M’hanun. Jungkook is clearly used to this, so he barely stumbles, doesn’t stop eating, and looks nowhere near strained by this additional weight. However Taeh’yung manages to kick the packet Jungkook was holding, so now dried meat bites were all over the floor. Jimin sighs like an exhausted parent and goes to clean up the fallen snacks off of the floor.

‘Is everything to your liking?’ Amme asks.

‘It is. Thank you again.’

‘I am grateful that you chose to come to me,’ Amme tells him, ‘I am glad you allowed me to be part of what you have discovered.’

‘I’ll be frank,’ Hoseok states bluntly, ‘We didn’t have a choice.’

‘I understand, but that does not minimize my gratitude. My eyes have been opened, my understanding and belief renewed.’

‘Well…I guess that’s good,’ Hoseok says somewhat lamely. He really wishes Namjoon were here, Spaced.

‘Be careful,’ Amme tells him quite suddenly. ‘I cannot testify for what information is available- especially in the region you are headed for.’

‘What do you know about Axudar?’ Hoseok tilts his head, eyeing the Yisheng carefully. As promised, he looked deep into Axudar when he had the time, changing his angle of searching for information. But he found nothing conclusive.

‘What we know about Axudar is what they want us to know,’ Amme replies, ‘The Universe is immense, Hoseok.’
‘Sure,’ Hoseok waves aside the excuse. ‘What were you doing there before you decided that Ndica’s way was not yours?’

Hoseok is not easy to fool. And Hoseok also knows that Amme knows that he would conduct searches on her past, her involvement. It wasn’t easy to find of course, but that didn’t mean Hoseok wasn’t going to try. He didn’t have Namjoon to help with the deep dive through the hidden archives available in database, but Hoseok made do.

‘Ndica was sure that he had come across a way to stabilize his work. I never knew what his methods were, or what he was truly creating with the GI. Not until it was too late and after everything that happened not too long ago.’ Amme replies, ‘But he was certain that the answers lay in the beliefs of his people.’

‘What’s that?’

‘Axudar has a complex history,’ Amme explains, ‘While most Systems are incomprehensibly diverse and unique within their own planets Axudar is startlingly uniform.’

‘That’s not too rare,’ Hoseok frowns. He’s sure that the Khhemsa were in fact, pretty uniform in their species diversity when it came to race and gender. Hoseok himself came from a species that had no defined racial identity or gender identity until the Standard was introduced and identification/classification was required.

‘It’s not,’ Amme agrees, ‘But Axudar was once a very diverse place.’

‘What happened? Ethnic cleansing? Genocide?’

‘Not exactly like that,’ Amme replies, ‘The reports on the topic are scarce, and unclear. This all happened in quite a short period of time.’

She sounded unsure, unclear.

‘Did Ndica truly manage to bind so many?’

‘Blinded, maybe, but we all chose to see what we wanted to see,’ Amme replies, ‘There is no excuse on my part.’

Hoseok can definitely understand that all too well.

‘Be careful,’ Amme repeats, ‘I do not mean this in the sense of imminent danger, or fatality. I worry what you might find or uncover once you venture deeper. Especially now that you understand so much.’

Hoseok nods to that.

‘I cannot do much in Axudar. Their new laws, established no doubt by Ndica in the past, and their arrangements- you will need to exercise care and caution.’

It’s Amme’s way of saying that she won’t be able to help. At least, not without alerting the entire Known Universe about what was happening. And while that could be covered up someway or another, the entire premise of their mission was definitely supposed to remain hidden regardless. Especially from the Court, and from a potential growing threat that Hoseok cannot rightly name. And it had nothing to do with the Omhlophe, or with the GI, or with anything they assumed would hinder their mission.
Something else was waiting for them.

‘Do you advise us against going to Axudar?’ Hoseok inquires. Because if that was the case, then Hoseok is more than happy to find another way for them to get to Bhumi/Megibīya.

‘No- I do not advise what you should or shouldn’t do,’ Amme replies. ‘I understand the choice to enter Axudar.’

Hoseok snorts under his breath, ‘I almost forgot you’re in the Jury. You want to know.’

Amme doesn’t deny this.

‘Well- I guess we’ll have to dive in head first,’ Hoseok sighs out just as Jungkook makes his way back, a series of CleanBots rolling after him and Taeh’yung as though pin-pointing the two as the messiest culprits. Jimin finds it funny, clearly, watching the Bots roll after the two with accusatory sounding beeping sounds.

‘Yoongi has finished parking and securing the Spardyti,’ Jungkook reports shiftily glancing at Amme as he addresses Hoseok.

‘Okay- we’re good to go. Well- Sk’jin needs to come back.’ Hoseok wonders how long a bath even took. ‘We’ll be taking off then Yisheng Amme. Thank you again for coming.’

Amme bows gracefully in reply.

Jungkook clumsily bows, Taeh’yung’s weight on his back making him misbalance a little. Before they can turn to leave, Amme calls the Zhak’gri by name.

‘Taeh’yung,’ Amme addresses the Zhak’gri.

‘Sup?’ Taeh’yung raises an eyebrow.

Hoseok thinks Namjoon would balk at Taeh’yung’s casualness.

‘Thank you for keeping the OrTanks safe,’ she says with a bow of her head. ‘My team are currently taking care of them, away from Grisial’s borders.’

Hoseok sees the way Jimin’s eyes widen at that, blinking rapidly as he stares at Amme and then at Taeh’yung and back again.

Taeh’yung just grins, two fingers sticking out to form a ‘V’ under one eye in reply.

‘You got it babe.’

Namjoon would definitely cringe.

Jungkook turns and walks towards their new ship while Jimin can’t seem to decide to stay or walk after the two.

‘What-’ Jimin breathes out, confused.

‘The Omhlophe ship wreckage was pushed away from Grisial’s borders,’ Amme explains, ‘Taeh’yung drove them far enough to fall into dead-space borders. They were carrying over 2000 OrTanks according to my first report. Investigations and extractions are underway as of 12 hours ago.’
‘He- he said he destroyed them all?’ Jimin whispers faintly.

‘There were no traces of the Omhlophe. The ship was dead,’ Amme explains, ‘But within their hold, we found the OrTanks safe and secure.’

‘Oh,’ Jimin smiles faintly, eyes filled with unshed tears.

‘He is the Fifth of the First,’ Amme says slowly, ‘Born of the First Awakening. He will see it done.’

‘See what done?’ Hoseok frowns at the words.

‘Continuum,’ Amme replies simply.

But Jimin just thanks Amme again, bowing elegantly in his own custom. There’s a commotion as Sk’jin reappears. Hoseok can practically smell him from where he stood. He did look very pleased with himself that was for sure.

‘Kids let’s get go in-!?’ Sk’jin ends up shrieking as he’s chased by Jungkook, goaded on by Taeh’yung who screams ‘CHARGE!!!!!!’.

‘Well- we should really get going,’ Hoseok reaches over to pull Jimin forward.

But Jimin pauses, turning to look at Amme.

Amme gazes down at Jimin, waiting for him to say something.

‘I will ensure their safety,’ Jimin declares. ‘For all life is equal, in all of Time, in all of Space.’

‘I am sorry,’ Amme sounds truly sorrowful, ‘That you have to bear the inheritance of such a great evil.’

‘I do not think it would have come to this, S’wezete Amme,’ Jimin trails off. ‘I am simply carrying out my retribution.’

There’s something soothing about the new ship. In a way Jungkook can’t quite explain.

He’s not sure what to make of Amme. He’s heard the term Yisheng enough to somehow relate it with something bad. Something cruel.

There’s a lot he doesn’t exactly understand.

But he’s clear on one thing.

‘Jungkookie! I think you should wear these!’ Taeh’yung bounds up to him.

Jungkook instantly tenses, readying himself to carry the Zhak’gri. And he’s not disappointed as Taeh’yung leaps through the air and grapples onto him. Taeh’yung isn’t heavy- he’s quite light for someone his height.
The door to the left of the hallway slides open, revealing Sk’jin. Jungkook sees the way Sk’jin frowns, eyes narrowing as he twitches as though to catch Jungkook if he were to lose balance.

‘Tae- please, we’re in a small space, it’s gonna hurt both of you if you fall and hurt yourselves.’ Sk’jin sounds exasperated, gesturing to the much narrower and shorter hallway.

‘Kookie won’t let me fall,’ Taeh’yung declares boldly, waving around some dark pajama pants with drawstrings. ‘Right Kook?’

‘Um, mm!’ Jungkook nods, holding his hand up to show Sk’jin a thumb’s up.

Sk’jin is not appeased.

‘All right guys, they’re gonna get out of warp in 10 minutes, and we’re good to go,’ Hoseok calls from his own room. ‘Everyone remembers what we’re doing?’

‘Getting out at the borders around the Tyochi Binary System,’ Sk’jin recites, ‘We stay long enough so that the GI-not-GI can get their sensory connection to Jimin-’ Jimin gives Sk’jin a comically affronted look, ‘-and to set up our channels. Then we detour around back to Māho-5 to grab some weaponry.’

‘And?’

‘And only you and Yoongi will be stepping out,’ Sk’jin makes a funny face, badly mimicking Hoseok’s voice.

‘Perfectly recited my dear,’ Hoseok replies back, sounding almost exactly like Sk’jin. It makes Jimin who was in the Bridge laugh.

Sk’jin sags a little, sighing, ‘Wish Namjoon was here.’

‘We’ll get him back soon,’ Yoongi says, appearing randomly out of nowhere.

They barely flinch now.

‘Great- everyone ready?’ Hoseok exits his room, pushing back his hair from his eyes as he scans all of them. ‘Comm Devices?’

Taeh’yung obliges and turns Jungkook’s head for him, showing off the new hoop attached to his ear, blinking a violet hue.

‘Okay- everyone settle down,’ Hoseok waves them all forward, ushering them towards the Bridge.

‘Sure I wish Namjoon was here so that I can tease him but why don’t we pull a democratic vote and appoint you our new leader?’ Sk’jin grins, jabbing Hoseok as he walks past.

‘Then I democratically vote myself out,’ Hoseok snorts. ‘Even though it’s temporary, this has been stressful enough for me to never want to do this again.’

‘Lone wolf,’ Yoongi mutters under his breath.

‘I don’t know what that means but I don’t think you’re one to speak Suga,’ Sk’jin smacks the Human on his back.

The Bridge just about fits them all. If they had even 2 more Beings (not counting Namjoon) they would have no seats. Jungkook drops Taeh’yung off to sit next to Jimin before making his way next to where Sk’jin sat. The Communications Board was right next to the Navigation Table-nearly sharing the entire dashboard. The Bridge didn’t have distinct levels anymore, but just a single difference in the platforms. The lower and smaller platform seated the cockpit with 2 seats. Yoongi and Hoseok sat there. And directly behind, was the Navigation Table and the Communications Board. On either side were the footstools, narrower but still well structured.

‘Agent Hoseok, the Hangar will now decompress,’ a cool Android voice announces through the Communications Board.

‘Thank you love,’ Sk’jin replies back, ‘We’re all sealed Lisai?’

‘Ready for vacuum, green for warp.’

‘Temporary cap?’ Sk’jin twitches an eyebrow up at Hoseok.

‘Let’s undock,’ he nods towards Yoongi.

‘Everyone safely secured?’ Sk’jin calls out, glancing towards Jimin and Taeh’yung.

They both nod.

‘And in the tongues and dialect of all those who call this Universe their home, I bid you, my brothers, the blessings of one, the blessings of all.’ A voice- Amme’s – suddenly quietly chimes into their Communications Board. ‘And when you find yourself in times of trouble or woe, listen to the music from the stars- and let them guide you with their wisdom, Memory, and Time.’

‘Love you too!’ Taeh’yung trills as the Hangar gates open.

‘Deactivating magnetic strips,’ Hoseok announces.

The ship doesn’t jolt or shift, just simply gently hovers a little at an angle.

‘Pressure valves opening; beamers at 190 degrees,’ Yoongi quietly announces just before they quietly move through the Hangar and out of the gates. Jungkook can sense relief, as well as apprehension. A different kind of apprehension; a distinct unease and trepidation mounts as they fully exit the Yisheng ship.

‘I’m not in the place to say this,’ Hoseok suddenly says, ‘But if anyone wants to turn back and leave, you can. Yisheng Amme would take you in.’

No one says a thing.

‘Starting up Engines 1 and 3,’ Yoongi announces instead. ‘Setting 2.’

Sk’jin starts up one of the projections over the wide and tilted screen over the dashboard. Jungkook remembers Sk’jin sighing at it saying ‘this is some prehistoric set-up though’. It’s surveillance from the back of the ship.

The Yisheng ship is massive, even from distance they were starting to put between them. The edges start to faintly glow, its shape lingering in the form of dazed lights as it warps away.

‘We’re clear,’ Sk’jin reports.

‘Okay- Lisai reconnect with Namjoon’s channels,’ Hoseok orders at once, ‘Let’s start up our negotiations if we need to.’
‘I can speak?’ Jimin offers immediately.

‘Yeah- that’s a good idea,’ Hoseok nods. ‘Okay- all clear?’

‘Searching for connection.’ Lisai reports.

Sk’jin frowns a little, eyeing the projection over Hoseok’s dashboard. ‘It should have connected immediately?’

They wait, tension building palpably.

‘Failure to connect.’

‘What?’ Sk’jin glares at the projection, ‘How is that-‘

‘-it’s only possible if Namjoon himself has disconnected the lines,’ Yoongi surmises, ‘Or he was told to disconnect it.’

‘No- Namjoon has completely disconnected us,’ Hoseok shakes his head, ‘The channels can still remain open from either side so that if any of us were in a compromised situation, we could still use it for some form of communication. Namjoon and I designed it like that. He’s completely switched it off.’

‘But we’re still tracking him aren’t we?’ Jimin asks, his expression pinched with worry. ‘From the tea?’

‘Yeah we are,’ Hoseok frowns, starting up the tracking tab they had on constantly. ‘He’s still going through Lapho and Aquí.’

‘Okay- how about we use an open channel and try to connect to his location?’ Sk’jin suggests. ‘We could just, I don’t know, issue an announcement that Namjoon would understand. Or something the GI would definitely pick up on.’ He looks to Yoongi who pauses a moment before saying, ‘GI think only in terms of mission statement protocols. I don’t know what mission they’re following- if they have one. But it’s worth trying.’

‘Okay- we have 15 minutes here and then we need to get going,’ Hoseok says tensely, eyeing the view outside the Bridge. ‘Let’s not stay out here for too long.’

They end up staying a full long hour. Because no matter how hard they try, they cannot connect to Namjoon’s disconnected channels.

‘This metallic piece of shit-‘

‘-I don’t think it’s the screen’s fault-‘

‘-I was referring to Namjoon!’ Sk’jin snaps tiredly as Hoseok rolls his eyes.

‘What if we can’t direct this channel because our tracker is not actually there?’ Jimin suggests quietly.

‘What?’

‘What if this- is just a decoy?’ Jimin points at Namjoon’s tracker.

‘But that would mean they would have known about the shit Yoongi poisoned us with-‘ Sk’jin stops before squinting at Yoongi. ‘Is that shit you poison us with a sort of strictly GI thing.’
Yoongi genuinely looks upset as he nods, as though irritated that he hadn’t thought of it before.

‘Great- so, they’re misleading us?’ Hoseok huffs out noisily, ‘Doesn’t that mean they can track us back too?’

Yoongi immediately shakes his head, ‘Each isotope signal is unique when consumed. Namjoon’s is unique to his make.’

‘…how do you have his unique isotope signal?’ Sk’jin asks hesitantly. ‘Or any of ours.’

‘Biological samples-‘

‘-you’re a disgusting small-‘

‘But why would they go to this length to divert us?’ Hoseok questions, ‘Unless it’s-…I mean, I don’t want to say it out loud but-‘

‘-unless it’s something Namjoon himself did,’ Jimin says slowly. ‘The channel being cut off…he uh, he could research what Yoongi used in the tea. Learnt how to um, alter? Change it?’

Sk’jin frowns heavily at that.

‘Why would he not want to be found?’

Jungkook catches the way Yoongi glances at Jimin, the latter somehow very affected by this statement.

‘…or maybe this-‘ Hoseok looks hesitant.

‘Maybe he did it on purpose because he doesn’t want to come back?’ Sk’jin completes Hoseok’s sentence for him. He almost sounds gentle.

‘I don’t think pa would do that,’ Taeh’yung offers confidently from where he sat, cross-legged.

‘I don’t see why he would-‘ Hoseok begins to say but Jimin reaches out to place a hand on his arm.

‘We should trust him,’ Sk’jin says at once, ‘He’s smart, sometimes, and right now we should trust that he’s doing what he thinks is the best option for his situation.’

‘What do we do now?’ Jungkook asks quietly.

‘Let’s keep the channel open with Namjoon’s Comm Device in case he needs to contact us,’ Hoseok frowns, clearly thinking hard. ‘It’s a risk, considering the GI- and yeah I know you don’t think they’d try to harm us, but they did try to kill Yoongi.’ Hoseok adds more towards Jimin than anyone else. ‘However, we need to move on quickly. We’ve wasted more time here than I’m comfortable with.’

‘We continue onwards then?’ Sk’jin rearranges himself, securing himself on his seat again.

‘Yeah,’ Hoseok nods. ‘3 hours until we get to Māho-5. After this Jimin and I will continue to comb through the public surveillance footage in Grisial to locate or identify the GI and what transporters they used.’

The strain of tension and apprehension lessens a little as the windows turn white with warp-light. But everyone is clearly somewhat lost in their own minds. Jungkook doesn’t know how to feel. Doesn’t know what to do. He’s fidgety but he’s not sure what to do.
‘Kookie!’

Jungkook is startled from his stupor at the quiet whisper.

It’s Taeh’yung, beaming at him from the other end of the Bridge. He waves at Jungkook to follow him out.

Jungkook takes a look around the Bridge. Jimin and Hoseok are at the Navigation Table, both going through layers and layers of projections. Sk’jin is concentrating on something Hoseok is sharing with him over a screen.

Jungkook quietly gets up and makes his way to Taeh’yung.

‘Ah- they get so tense and stuffy so quickly,’ Taeh’yung grins, taking his hand and pulling him towards the kitchen area. ‘Let’s snack!’

Jungkook is never one to deny food so he nods.

Taeh’yung grabs an armful of food before pressing it all into Jungkook’s hold. He then grabs two packets of compressed blood and skips to the dining area. He impatiently taps the table, and Jungkook hastens to carefully drop all of the food there.

‘Here Kookie,’ Taeh’yung hands him one of the packets. Jungkook sits down, ready to just eat his way through his hoard when Taeh’yung asks him: ‘Kookie, tell me about your family.’

Jungkook swallows his mouthful of blood incorrectly and nearly sprays Taeh’yung with it. He manages to stop himself though, just some droplets escaping through his lips and shooting out of his nose. Taeh’yung clambers over the table to sit in front of Jungkook and uses his own sleeves to help him clean up.

‘Um-‘

‘Sometimes when I think of all the babies out there,’ Taeh’yung begins gently, ‘I’m sad that they’re alone.’

Jungkook had never experienced being alone before he was torn from his family. He grew up loved, maybe in an environment that was not the best for a child, but nonetheless he was protected, cared for, loved.

‘There are so many,’ Taeh’yung gently wipes under his nose. ‘And I want to tell them they’re not alone.’

It was hard understanding Taeh’yung. Not when he spoke with so many voices, so many faces, so many lives. But the Taeh’yung before him right now was just…himself. No echo of another, or the other, or them. This was just Taeh’yung as Jungkook saw him plainly.

‘And when we found you, when I saw you, I was so happy,’ Taeh’yung squishes his face a little before kissing his nose. ‘It meant that in some places, my babies grew up loved and cherished.’

Jungkook has now lived without his family for over 5 sols. In the darkness of the cave he was thrown into, he grieved, he broke, he felt himself die.

‘And seeing you, gives me hope.’

‘Me?’ Jungkook whispers.
Taeh’yung smiles before opening a packet of dried meat and handing a piece to him.

‘Yeah,’ Taeh’yung pops the meat into his mouth as well.

‘You…you saved the other babies?’ Jungkook asks. He’s meant to ask this of Taeh’yung from before. But he wasn’t sure how to address it.

‘I did,’ Taeh’yung looks pleased with himself, leaning back on the table on his arms, half the meat still inside his mouth as he chewed on it. ‘I just needed to take them far away enough for Amme to get them.’

‘Did you know? She was coming?’

Taeh’yung gives him a sly grin.

‘She was always close to us,’ Taeh’yung tells him as though it were a secret. It probably was. ‘She’s the smartest out of all of them.’

‘That’s…that’s good?’

‘Sure,’ Taeh’yung shrugs, ‘I guess it is. But enough of that- tell me about your family. I wanna know about your ama.’

‘Who looks like Sk’jin?’ Jungkook clarifies.

‘You don’t mind?’ Taeh’yung looks genuinely thoughtful.

Jungkook shakes his head immediately, ‘No. Wanna talk. About her.’

‘Tell me Kookie!’ Taeh’yung lies on his front on the table, and Jungkook knows Sk’jin would probably literally throw Taeh’yung off. He pushes himself up on his forearms, feet kicking in the air a little. Jungkook squishes the packet of blood in his hands, rolling the soft packaging between his palms.

‘She—she was pretty,’ Jungkook begins, not sure where to begin. He’s never—never talked about them. Never had to explain who they were, why they were there. Because they were his world- his life, everything.

‘She was tall too. Taller than anu,’ Jungkook recalls, ‘She would take turns with anu and they sca-scavenge.’

Taeh’yung nods in encouragement.

‘Sometimes she got sick,’ Jungkook whispers, ‘It’s- it’s similar to Yoongi. Her head would hurt. Sometimes she would—she wouldn’t recognize anu. Wouldn’t recognize me.’

‘How long did that last?’

‘Sometimes 2-3 days,’ Jungkook tries his best to recall as accurately as he could. But this felt long ago. Almost like another—something he didn’t live through. Like a story.

‘She always came back?’

Jungkook nods.

‘What about your siblings?’
Jungkook finds himself smiling.

‘Talgun was the oldest. He was very tall, and he had no hair,’ Jungkook giggles a bit. ‘He always helped ama when she left to scavenge. He was very strong but-’

It’s a distant memory. A nightmare he’s relived many times. Sometimes what happened is strikingly clear to him, and sometimes it’s blurred into a colour of motion and sound.

‘-but he was,’ Jungkook can’t speak. His throat tightens up at once.

Taeh’yung gently cards through his hair, not saying a word. Jungkook clears his throat a few times.

‘-when they came. It was storming,’ he begins to explain. ‘We didn’t hear them. Coming. And Talgun he was fast. He moved fast. But.’

‘It was an ambush,’ Taeh’yung whispers.

Jungkook nods, picking at the dried meat in his hands.

‘He- he fell. I was- I was so angry I-’ Jungkook’s hands shake.

‘You don’t have to tell me those parts Kookie,’ Taeh’yung offers gently, ‘Tell me happy stories? Stories you love. Don’t want to see my baby cry.’

Jungkook roughly wipes at his face, looking down as though to hide himself even though he knew Taeh’yung could see everything.

‘Uh- Talgun was the oldest. He made funny jokes all the time.’ Jungkook pushes through, ‘And Skezag was short even though…she?’

‘She?’

‘I’m not sure,’ Jungkook admits.

‘It doesn’t matter,’ Taeh’yung nods encouragingly. ‘Which ever is the best.’

‘Skezag was short, very big eyes,’ Jungkook widens his eyes as much as he can, remembering the way his sibling would sometimes playfully widen her blue-green eyes at them. Ama called her ‘-pond baby. Because they looked like rain ponds near the mountain basins to the south.’

Taeh’yung grins at the description, grabbing another packet of snacks and munching on it, drinking in every word Jungkook had to say.

‘And uh- Elsang was very dark, he had white hair, like snow,’ Jungkook excitedly remembers, like some forgotten detail in a dream, ‘-he would sometimes create sparkly cold bit when he sneezed. Or if he coughed. It was gross.’

Taeh’yung gives a tiny gasp, ‘Eastern Heladian.’

‘Is that…like me? I’m- P-Pravasi M’hanun?’ Jungkook recites the foreign name carefully.

Taeh’yung nods his head and says, ‘But we are all children, the same.’

‘Anu said that all the time,’ Jungkook recalls, ‘She said we are all the same.’

‘She sounds amazing,’ Taeh’yung’s tone is earnest.
'She really is- was,’ Jungkook doesn’t remember everything. Doesn’t know how much of what he saw was real, how much imagined, how much exaggerated. All he knows is that he was taken during a storm, and he never saw his family since.

‘Is that all?’ Taeh’yung asks gently.

‘Um- no-‘ Jungkook falters.

Sometimes when Jungkook was delirious with hunger, pain, and sickness, he would see Okanaat from the corner of his eyes. She would giggle, telling him to wake up before he missed morning grub.

‘She-‘ Jungkook smiles, ‘She was my favorite.’

Taeh’yung gasps dramatically, ‘You’re not supposed to have favorites!’

Jungkook giggles, making Taeh’yung lean in to nuzzle their heads together.

‘Thank you for telling me Kookie,’ Taeh’yung tells him sincerely. ‘What a beautiful family.’

Jungkook just nods, not knowing what to say. Instead he asks, ‘Um- could you tell me, about the story, that the- uh, Amme was talking about? About the, uh, Children.’

Taeh’yung makes a comic face of concentration, rubbing his hands over his temples.

‘Hmm, Kookie, my version is a little different from Amme’s- it’s not wrong, but it’s not right either.’ Taeh’yung says thoughtfully, ‘You know?’

No Jungkook doesn’t know but he nods.

‘What Amme said was sort of nearly the same but I guess I just lived it differently,’ Taeh’yung nods thoughtfully, ‘What did you want to know about it?’

‘I- I don’t understand what…what the Children are. Or Yisheng? I thought Amme was Yisheng.’ Jungkook asks carefully.

‘Ah! Okay, I will explain that part,’ Taeh’yung rhythmically taps the table surface excitedly. ‘Once upon a time, Kookie, this cowardly guy wanted to escape the chaos he created. He was mean, and he was dumb too, because he thought he could control what he helped created.’

‘He didn’t make the Children?’

‘He pushed them into form, directed them,’ Taeh’yung explains, ‘Many believe he created them on his own. But he didn’t. We always existed Kookie. But we came to form.’

Again, Jungkook doesn’t know what to think of that.

‘He was an asshole- all of us had to run away, hide, or we tried to fight back,’ Taeh’yung gives a nonchalant shrug. ‘In the end he won. But he never remained.’

‘Why is he called Yisheng?’

‘He’s the first. The first, and the Whole. The other Yishengs are just weaker versions.’ Taeh’yung explains. ‘They take Yisheng’s name as their own.’

‘Are…are there others?’
'Yisheng? Too many I think sometimes, but also, not enough.'

'And uh- the Children?'

Taeh’yung gives him a grin that’s a little dangerous.

'Not in the way we used to be,’ he replies easily. ‘Some changed, some sleep so deep they… they’re not in form anymore. But some are still here.’

‘How many?’

Taeh’yung lets out a long whining groan, squinting as he thinks hard.

‘I don’t know! A lot!’ he declares, ‘I’ve only met some so far.’

‘Is Jimin one?’

‘Ah-! Tricky question,’ Taeh’yung waggles a finger. ‘He’s born out of the wish of one of the Children. It’s very unique! And I don’t know enough to explain fully either.’

‘Ah…are you?’

‘I’m the Fifth,’ Taeh’yung replies cheekily. ‘Not quite one of the Children anymore.’

‘Okay.’

Taeh’yung laughs, squishing his face again before sitting up.

‘Don’t worry too much Kookie, I’ll protect you. We all will.’

‘But I want to protect you too? And everyone else?’

‘You can, and you will,’ Taeh’yung says with an emphatic nod. ‘But first, help me finish these snacks!’

Jungkook hadn’t mentioned it before.

He thought it was a natural thing, that everyone else could see it too. But now that he thinks about it, he’s sure that maybe only Jimin knew about it. Maybe.

Taeh’yung makes himself comfortable on the table, talking about how he’s tried blood before but didn’t think much of it, and how he did enjoy a form of it that was supposed to be alcoholic. He leans over the table to pick up a packet of something that fell to the floor. A

And all 5 of his shadows follow his movement, the slightest delay in movement, speed, visibility, and sound.

‘I think this is supposed to be really hot- let’s try this one Kookie,’ Taeh’yung sits up again, his shadows fall around him to form a single one again.

‘Okay!’
Sk’jin is bored.

Māho-5, unlike its name suggested, was the only dock of its kind to ever exist. It’s massive. What was once an already large dilapidated abandoned black-hole harvesting ship, was added upon and built upon for over 2 millennia. Why it was called Māho-5 was still unknown. When Sk’jin had been around, actively flying and living as a pirate, he was under the impression it was because the initial crew of pirates who took over the place were probably from a planet called Māho and decided to simply name the new not-exactly-illegal Dock Māho-5.

It’s a pretty boring place in general.

The GLA had of course, taken their claim over this site. But not too much as to put off pirates and other undesirables: they still needed their connections and Māho-5 seemed like an ideal place to put corrupted officials to benefit the powerful Beings who came here.

But according to Hoseok it had settled a little over the past centuries. But that had been because of the supposed way the Alliance had diminished. But knowing what they knew now, it was a little difficult to figure out what to really expect.

But as they close in, Sk’jin realizes how much it had expanded. How massive it was.

‘Okay this looks nothing like when I last saw it,’ Sk’jin points an accusatory finger at the looming massive rather spiky dock. ‘Like- what is that extension?’

There’s a massive bridge extending out…into nowhere? What for? Aesthetics? Was this what the Universe had come to now?

Hoseok doesn’t pay him mind, instead scanning through more footage they stole off of the private servers and channels across Grisial to find Namjoon. But they have no luck. And that’s not surprising. The GI existed for a very long time without being detected. And Yoongi had said so himself. Being GI just made you practically invisible.

‘Call us in,’ is what Hoseok says instead.

Sighing in a way that Sk’jin knew would probably get a reaction from Namjoon, he places the call. No one bats an eye at him and his theatrics.

‘You guys are so boring,’ Sk’jin complains loudly before their channel picks up.

‘Māho-5 operations- state your name, ID, and business.’ A voice calls out without any of the standard GLA politeness but with none of the default brashness of a pirate-dock.

‘Kosmon Trading representative Arin ID 9221-TA-033 requesting for 3 hours to restock fuel, get some maintenance, and restock on supplies,’ Sk’jin replies back smoothly, without his very elegant eloquence he normally put on for the GLA, and without his exaggerated enunciation and verbal flare as he would with pirates.

‘Permission granted- the Orange Bay is open for you,’ the voice calls back and adds, ‘Will you be taking the tax-bill?’

Hoseok nods from the front. A tax-cut was one of many codes for illicit shopping activities.

‘We will.’

‘Understood.’
‘Is that it?’

‘Yeap.’

‘Huh- things have really changed,’ Sk’jin comments to himself.

And no one hears him of course.

Glancing around, Sk’jin finds himself staring at Yoongi and Jimin.

Something had changed between them. Not in a negative way. Nothing of that sort. But something had definitely changed. It was almost as though they had…- well, in the best way Sk’jin can explain it. It was almost as though they were going through an argument, but had reached some form of reconciliation with each other and were now at peace with each other. That is of course, a hypothetical example, but there’s a sense of stability between the two. The desperation and fear they had despite being together all the time had abated.

And.

That’s nice?

Sk’jin frowns to himself in thought until Jungkook nudges him with a concerned face.

Spaces he was growing tall. Fast.

‘Kookie, do me a favour,’ Sk’jin asks, earnestness dripping from his voice.

‘Hm?’ Jungkook comes closer, crouching down next to his chair, head resting on the arm-rest. Sk’jin cards his fingers through the long strands.

‘Make sure you grow taller than Namjoon okay?’

Jungkook quirks his head to the side, clearly confused but still nods, albeit hesitantly.

‘Good boy,’ Sk’jin ruffles his hair one last time, making it fall over his eyes. Jungkook blows air out of his mouth, spitting hair out in comic protest.

‘Kookie should grow his hair out!’ Taeh’yung exclaims from where he’s sitting wrong on the chair, legs up on the headrest, his back on the seat of the chair. ‘And we can braid it up with flowers!’

Sk’jin thinks that fine, that’d look nice yeah, but he thinks Jungkook might protest. But he’s proven wrong when Jungkook nods eagerly at Taeh’yung and then at Sk’jin as though for permission.

‘Yes- why not, I absolutely approve,’ Sk’jin nods.

‘Kookie come here! Let’s look at flowers!’ Taeh’yung gestures for Jungkook to join him. Jungkook imitates Taeh’yung’s posture immediately on the next chair. Yoongi says something, too quiet for Sk’jin to hear, to Jimin who chuckles, shoulders bunching and eyes turning into crescents.

It’s a private moment almost, and Sk’jin feels just a little guilty for having witnessed it.

They land and dock with no problem.

Hoseok is up at once as soon as they’re clear.
He was definitely agitated. Which was understandable with everything that has happened. And now that they didn’t even know where Namjoon was, they had nothing to go for them about their lost Kutsoglerin captain.

Yoongi follows after Hoseok, quiet as a shadow.

‘Well I guess we just wait then,’ Sk’jin says out loud. Only to realize he’s alone in the Bridge.

Well, fuck, when did that happen?

Sighing out, Sk’jin slumps a little in his chair. This was boring. His other option would be to start stressing – and that wasn’t what he wanted. His own forced calm over their situation was pushing him into bored territories. And a bored Sk’jin isn’t always the best Sk’jin.

‘You want to really torture a Khol’isa? Bore them,’ is what they used to say. Maybe that’s why K’mara was involved in the GIU. Surely no boredom there.

‘Sk’jin?’

Sk’jin won’t admit it but he nearly jumped out his skin.

It’s Jimin.

‘Hello,’ he says rather lamely.

Jimin just smiles at him, his expression amused.

‘What do you want?’ Sk’jin manages, sounding a bit more in control of himself.

‘Just wanted to stay with you,’ is all Jimin says, taking a seat next to him.

‘Okay…’ Sk’jin squints at him before saying, ‘This is awkward.’

‘It’s not!’ Jimin says defiantly. ‘We’re just sitting!’

‘For a member of the royal family you’re really bad at lying,’ Sk’jin remarks dryly.

‘I’m not royal!’ Jimin practically whines, ‘And I can’t lie!’

‘Now that’s a lie,’ Sk’jin snorts.

Jimin huffs at him, sitting deeper into the chair, arms crossed over his chest.

‘A big baby is what you are. All of you are big babies,’ Sk’jin rolls his eyes.

‘Insect!’ Is Jimin’s retort.

It takes a few seconds before Sk’jin nearly chokes on his own breath, laughing out loud at the attempted insult.

‘In-insect!’ Sk’jin gasps out, leaning dangerously to the side as he catches his breath. ‘That’s a good one. Classic.’

Jimin’s face is twitching, like he’s trying to not laugh. It doesn’t work and he bursts out laughing. This makes Sk’jin laugh even harder.

They both stop for a moment when Jungkook comes to check on them, concern written all over his young features. This triggers them both and they both burst out laughing again.

Jungkook warily steps back into the hallway, curious and confused orb-like eyes glowing dimly in the shadowy hallway.

They’re laughing so hard, Sk’jin nearly misses it the first time.

‘-k’jin! Fuck-!’

They both freeze.

Jungkook comes scrambling back in.

‘WHAT’S WRONG?’ Taeh’yung screeches, bursting out of his shared cabin in nothing but a towel, hair soaked and way too much bubbles and suds across his body for it to be natural.

‘Fuck-!’ Hoseok is cursing, he sounds a little breathless. ‘Fuck they’ve arrested Yoongi!’

‘WHAT?’ Taeh’yung screams again, towel falling off completely as he skids into the Bridge.

‘What-?’ Jimin’s is much more quiet, eyes growing round, panic visibly all over his features.

‘What the fuck do you mean-?’ Sk’jin demands at once before calling out, ‘Stop freaking out- get the tracking out onto the Table-’

‘-they’re arresting him for the fucking Pompen Arena-’ Hoseok hisses, suddenly whispering. Was he running and hiding? That meant the ship-

‘-you guys need to take off right now I’ll get back, turn on the Blinds- or the Invisibility Cloak- or whatever and just get out now-’

Jimin is already rushing downwards, followed by Jungkook.

‘How did they-?’ Sk’jin’s mind is rushing as he starts up the ship. Lisai is saying something but Sk’jin’s mind is too messed up. Taeh’yung, stark naked, runs over to the Communication Board, trying to make himself useful.

‘-his fights- the footage, they were released remember? They must have recognized him or something fuck-’ Hoseok curses, he sounds a bit more stable.

‘Uh- I think they’re headed for us-’ Taeh’yung says somewhat nervously, pointing out of the window. ‘Should I take care-’

‘NOPES!’ Sk’jin shouts, snapping himself to attention. ‘Okay- we’re taking off towards the border and-’

‘-it’s on!’ Jimin calls out.

‘-and you stay hidden! Jimin get back up and let’s give us a new license this is our shortest track-history with a license-’ Sk’jin exclaims exasperatedly as Jimin and Jungkook both come back in sprinting.

‘Everyone secure yourselves in!’

The officers rushing towards them seem confused, clearly using a tracker in their Comm Devices to locate them. But they can’t now. They could see them. But they couldn’t track them. And out there in space, they were practically invisible.

Speaking of invisible-

‘-how did they see Yoongi?!’ Sk’jin demands as he flies them up and away from the dock, ignoring the emergency gates that were closing rapidly. He swiftly overtakes it without even stressing about it.

‘Yoongi is not literally invisible!’ Hoseok says in a normal tone. He was probably all clear, in new disguise, and now mingling with the crowd. ‘I’m gonna follow him and see how we can get him back.’

‘Great- feel free to get arrested too. Seems like a new trend,’ Sk’jin sighs.

‘Namjoon was kidnapped- there’s a clear difference,’ Hoseok retorts.

‘Same difference,’ Sk’jin finds himself grinning, much to Jimin’s alarm to his right.

Sk’jin just gives him a small wink as he sweeps them out into the dark outer borders away from Māho-5.

Now, it wasn’t boring at all.
Okay- so the past few weeks have been tough lol so that’s why the update is late I’ve been feeling a very strange sense of uhhhhhhhh depression??? Despair?? I think it’s a combination of what’s been happening in the world and also in my immediate life with my fucking thesis group work exhibition and miscommunications and people not working how they’re supposed to and expecting me to pick up all the slack. So I just, sat myself down for a while to empty my mind and I am- here to write
Also!!! Namjoon will be coming soon I did not forget him!!! How can I when it’s his BIRTHDAY!!!!
You know something funny
Most of my biases are born in either September or March. It’s a trend. Every September and March I find myself retweeting birthday wishes on twitter or rebloggin on tumblr
I hope this overly long chapter makes up for me not updating in like 3 weeks T_T
I most humbly apologize again bows down to floor and 10 points to whoever can figure out who the blond dude is “Constant” [noun]: a situation or state of affairs that does not change.

Chapter Notes

See the end of the chapter for notes

The general atmosphere, or the vibe (as the youths on Earth back in Yoongi’s time would put it), in Māho-5 was severely lacking.

This was, however, a much needed and welcomed change from the consistently terrible and terrifying ordeals they’ve had to consistently deal with and adapt to for quite a while now. Yoongi feels relaxed here, with a normal amount of shadiness, corrupt officials at lower rankings, standard looking non-threatening ships and Transporters with equally non-threatening and standard looking crew and members.

‘This is surprisingly relaxing,’ Hoseok comments, voice guttural and low in his disguise. Yoongi had to really go through his somehow very skewed and detailed memory to pinpoint Hoseok’s current disguise. It was also a very standard, and non-threatening species from Ghandhar, lanky and lean, slightly balding. Like this, Yoongi is almost reminded of Amic.

His chest constricts slightly, the knowledge that Amic was somewhere out there right now. That Amad’la was out there. That his entire rag-tag of a team could possibly be out there, right now. It’s not surprising.

It’s not surprising but at the same time Yoongi still finds himself reeling from the shock of it all. The same way he’s still somehow reeling from the shock of finding himself here, of finding himself aware and awake.

‘You okay?’ Hoseok asks, looking down at him, concern in his currently green beady eyes.

‘Just thinking,’ Yoongi shrugs in reply as they enter the market zone.

It’s a lot more crowded here and messier with stalls thrown up all over what used to be a massive hangar. Now instead the support beams crisscrossing the exposed floors and walls are used as support for granges and displays. Huge outlets connected with massive wiring and connectors braid through the floor and up towards the high ceiling at random. At least the lighting isn’t too bad in here.

‘Yeah, it’s all we can do now I guess,’ Hoseok remarks with a sigh. ‘Spaces, can’t this just be over already.’

Yoongi chuckles, dodging an overeager salesperson who was trying to sell some form of questionable oil-extract. He’s about to reply to Hoseok when something clicks in his mind.

‘-it’s not like Namjoon losing himself is helping-’ Hoseok grumbles, stuffing his 4 fingered-hands into his pockets, ‘-us with pacing our trajectory-‘
‘-Hoseok-‘ Yoongi says tersely, hair on the back of his neck standing when he realizes a few Beings around them were giving him inquisitive looks, as though trying to place his identity, his face.

‘-what?’ Hoseok looks back down again.

‘I- I uh, don’t mean to cause alarm but I think-‘ Yoongi is nowhere near comfortable with this. ‘-I think there’s-‘

A quiet but resounding humming alarm goes off, ringing down at them from the high ceilings of the hangar-turned-market. And then everyone is starting at Yoongi.

‘Hey-!’ someone yells, pointing at Yoongi. ‘Hey you-!’

There’s raised mumbling, more Beings staring at Yoongi and Hoseok.

‘It’s him!’ someone yells. Yoongi tries his best to ignore the voices and pointing and open-pointing but it’s impossible when everyone starts to back away, pushing themselves up against the stalls and granges, gawking at him.

Yoongi swiftly takes off his Comm-Device and shoves it at Hoseok.

‘I think it’s about Pompen,’ Yoongi quickly says, planting his feet firmly on the eroded metal floors, pushing Hoseok even more. ‘Get back to the ship.’

‘Fuck-!’ Hoseok curses before he nods and he’s backing away from Yoongi immediately.

‘Change as soon as possible-!’

A beam of light flickers all around him. It’s not the stunning-beam, it’s a scanner. Yoongi thinks of how he can bolt out of this situation. But his mind comes up blank- not without causing an even bigger problem or causing a disruption that could expose their location to Beings they can’t possibly protect themselves against or account for.

Don’t move. Don’t do anything.

So Yoongi doesn’t move. Doesn’t try to make a run for it. Not when everyone was staring at him. Not when everyone seemed to recognize him.

His body was tense, seconds dragging out to minutes and whole hours, it felt, until the security force of the Māho-5 Patrol Unit appeared.

‘Under the laws of justice protecting Māho-5, we do not tolerate or allow members of the Isbahaysiga Alliance to establish their presence within our borders,’ one of the officers states. A bunch of other officers are sprinting past, clearly trying to find Hoseok. Had they been watching them from before? How long has his face been sent out to the public that it was eliciting such an immediate response? What about the others? If they had his face, what about Namjoon, Sk’jin, Taeh’yung, and even Jimin?

It’s a small comfort, knowing that Jungkook wouldn’t be in the roster of supposed members of the Isbahaysiga Alliance. Was this retaliation? If so, from who? Had Seulgaan been alive, Yoongi would have initially suspected him. But considering what they knew now, and about how Seulgaan had in fact been a part of a much bigger plan alongside this mission, it couldn’t be anyone from the Special Jury. Or could it?
Long lance-cuffs are used to hold him down.

Yoongi knows it’s procedure- and to an extent, a rather smart idea considering his own horrific battle arena in Pompa. This was definitely a precaution Māho-5 was exercising smartly. Though again, if Yoongi wanted to break free, he most definitely could.

Too tired.

‘Yeah,’ Yoongi sighs as the lance-cuffs twist him around and make him kneel, arms twisted over his head. The cuffs then expand and twist from his wrists to latch around his throat. Another cuff is placed onto his ankles.

Great. They were going to use a lift to transport him around. Yoongi realizes he’s being captured via multiple screens despite the Māho-5 officers gathering around him to create a perimeter. Even though he’s very much indeed restrained, the Māho-5 officers still make use of the charged lances to move him and keep him down on the lift.

Yoongi doesn’t hear or see any other commotion.

Hoseok had clearly gotten away, and the others were probably immediately warned and were now out of the Dock.

Yoongi knows he could rely on them to get him out. There was no question about that.

But what could this entail for them? What could this twist into – Pompa had felt so long ago; trivial, at this point. But here they were, falling into a mess they thought they had long left behind.

The Māho-5 officers don’t seem to have any questions for him, simply taking him away. Voices and murmurs and pointed starting follow Yoongi all the way into what he guesses is the main station for law enforcers. This wasn’t a strictly GLA-standard division of spatial border law prison, so Yoongi’s not sure what they’re going to do now.

He’s taken all the way inside, down a narrow hallway and into a holding cell. It’s not a bad set-up, for a place like Māho-5. The walls are digitized, Yoongi can tell, and were designed so that lance-cuffs could slide through slots, making it easier for the officers to control their captive without having to step into the cell.

Even though he’s released, Yoongi’s arms, wrists, knees, and ankles are bound. He can’t do anything other than sort of weirdly slump on the ground. The lift he was transported in quickly slips out through the gaps in the wall.

No doors, no windows; the only light allowed in comes from the designated slots and gaps bordering the cell. There was no need for surveillance or added security for a cell like this one.

The thin digitized walls hum quietly around him.

There was no escaping this sort of prison cell. Maybe this was the only one they had, saved for dangerous, Teronko’ng Prison level criminals or berserking Beings.

It’s, funnily enough, the first time Yoongi has ever been in prison.

And instead of feeling despair, panic, or worry outside of well- outside of the mess that was, without exaggeration, his life, he feels a sense of curiosity.

Ah, so this is prison.
Yoongi could roll his eyes at himself.

Should he say something? There was an officer seated some ways outside his cell. But what could he ask? Maybe he could try and clarify why he was in prison. And how long he would be kept in here. And who he was probably going to be transported to. Would they try and send him back to Raksane Tayi? They would have scanned him by now and wouldn’t find any record of him. Unless somehow some sort of identification was created for him by the same Being/s who had him uploaded into the GLA’s version of a most-wanted list.

The taping and distribution of his arena must have very extensively gone through the major channels, if trading ship officers and crew members nearly immediately recognized him.

But maybe it wasn’t the recognizing part that threw Yoongi off. It was the fact that they actually took note of him to look at him. Like he was so physically present- a notion that he is unfamiliar with. A notion that would make his life difficult because Yoongi has relied so much in the fact that he’s been able to blend so easily into his immediate surroundings.

More awake.

Yoongi sighs.

His muscles are cramping from the awkward position. He’s weirdly hunched, and on his knees, making him have to balance himself constantly.

Tired.

Shuffling towards a wall and leaning gingerly on it, Yoongi exhales out a surprisingly tired breath as he supports himself. With some difficulty, he’s able to somewhat sit down in an only slightly uncomfortable angle.

He didn’t have to say it out loud. Didn’t have to confirm with anyone about it, or be told about it either. Yoongi knows that he’s treading a very thin line.

There’s more he wants to find out. More he knows they can search deeper into. More that he knows will help them see better, by first looking into the past, so they know what they’re about to approach.

The memories Jimin helped him revive amidst his past’s hung-over state was smudged but still understandable and incredibly telling of what they had blindly walked into. And Yoongi doesn’t want a repeat of that. Because with everything that was happening right now, this was a repeat of the past Yoongi does not want to relive.

But he knows Jimin will never agree to look deeper. Not after he’s experienced first-hand what it did to Yoongi. And though he knew that it was a terrible risk, and he was now suffering for it, Yoongi doesn’t regret it.

They needed to know, needed to understand.

A sudden spike of pain floods his body, coming and going quickly, but leaving Yoongi with a throbbing pain in his bones. It was getting easier to mask his pain, but every time Jimin so much as touched him, he knew Jimin could feel it too.

Sighing out slowly and ignoring the rather unsteady rhythm with which his heart beat, Yoongi closes his eyes.
If he concentrates enough he can almost hear it. Almost feel it.

The house used to be a prototype for homes from Ancient Earth, according to his middle-school teacher back on Earth. They would have field trips, taking them to various locations around the surface of the Earth to better understand their complex history. And there were many locations, rebuilt to look like what it once did in various points of history.

And though it wasn’t awe-inspiring or even remotely unique, the prototype of a simple “townhouse” somehow stuck with Yoongi ever since. And in a strange way, rematerialized into perfection in the recesses of his mind.

It was always raining, when it first formed, but now the sun shone through the windows, a gentle and steady sunrise just beyond the horizon.

‘How long did you build it?’

I first thought of it in Šerdesas. It was raining then too.

When Yoongi first woke up, all those sols ago, standing in Zhoumi’s apartment, the sound of the rain faint but all around.

It was cold.

Yoongi shivers a little, but he smiles a little, watching the way the room lit up in rosy colours.

It’s warm now.

‘You’re set?’

‘Yes,’ is Sk’jin’s irritated answer. ‘This is the dumbest shit ever.’

‘You know that the GLA never sends in single officers-’

‘We could do this without involving Jungkook.’

‘Yes but you also know that as both you and Taeh’yung are very much indeed part of the GLA’s wanted list for Level 1 criminal offence, I think it’s best we do not have either of you come out here?’ Hoseok sighs out, leaning against the wall of the Hangar along other maintenance Androids. ‘And no, we are not going to have Jimin out here either. That’s riskier than the two of you combined.’

Sk’jin makes an annoyed sound.

‘He’s never done a space-run, there’s so many things that could go wrong.’

‘It’s not a long distance and there’s no gravitational force to pull him down,’ Hoseok sighs again, knowing that Sk’jin was only arguing like this because he was worried. ‘And he’s a natural—’

‘Just because he once defeated like 10 GI agents on his own doesn’t mean he can suddenly space-run all the way there for some fucked-up attempt at a rescue.’

‘But do we have any other option?’

‘I know we don’t. I’m just arguing because I don’t like this, happy?’ Sk’jin fumes, sounding like he was struggling before adding, ‘Taeh’yung please—’

‘Where did you get all of these uniforms from? And when?’ Jimin asks, not sounding as worried as Hoseok thought he would.

‘From Amme.’ Is all Hoseok says.

‘It means he stole them from Amme’s ship,’ Sk’jin explains unnecessarily. ‘Thank fuck Jungkook isn’t too tall yet—’

‘Does it fit him?’ Hoseok asks as he mingles with the Androids who immediately take off once a ship docks and lands. Hoseok watches as a patrol unit moves past them, not sparing him or the other Android a glance.

‘Yes. But just barely. He’ll be there in 30 minutes.’

‘Okay great.’

‘That being done, how are you convincing the Māho officials you’re actual GLA officers? There is no recorded ship docking in from the GLA to back you up—’

‘I know,’ Hoseok replies readily, ‘Yoongi is declared a member of the Alliance right? Meaning that the GLA wouldn’t necessarily want the general public or members of the general public to handle a case like this one—’

‘-because apparently the Alliance is dead.’

‘-exactly- so we’re going in as agents.’

‘You’re going in as yourself.’

‘Somewhat.’

‘A triple-disguise. Very effective. This plan is still stupid.’

Hoseok chortles.

‘Right. Jungkook looks too excited, gotta knock him down I ’spose,’ Sk’jin sighs.

‘Unconscious?’

‘What? No! As in, ground him, I dunno, less-enthuse him.’ Sk’jin exclaims.

‘Less-enthuse him. Gonna use that next time when I—’ Taeh’yung begins enthusiastically.

‘Please don’t finish that sentence. I’m too old.’

Jimin is wheezing over the line.
To everyone’s relief, Jungkook manages the space-run with an ease that even Hoseok is envious of. And to an extent, it’s not very surprising considering his species, his up-bringing, and where he grew up – his instincts were keen and sharp.

His enthusiasm was potentially eye-catching as the first thing he does when he literally crashes into Hoseok after making it past the Atmoshield is to whoop very loudly.

Hoseok quickly muffles him by slamming shut his visor again and shoving him into the Android maintenance room.

‘That was so fun!’ Jungkook says brightly, taking off his helmet and spacesuit with too much energy. One of the sleeves slaps Hoseok across the face.

‘Are you dizzy? Do you feel heavy?’ Hoseok asks, looking over the youngling with worry.

‘No! I’m fine!’ Jungkook bounces a little, clearly very elated.

‘That’s him knocked down,’ Sk’jin explains tiredly.

Space-runs were tiring, even with a good spacesuit. And for Beings who weren’t trained beforehand it was an absolute nightmare maneuvering the controls, knowing how much pressure to release in the compressed air-valves, how to time your transit through dead-space straight in through an Atmoshield.

But here was Jungkook, absolutely living and energized by the whole experience.

Hoseok remembers having to lie down on the floor for a whole hour, trying to recalibrate himself from the shock of going through dead-space and down into an area with complete gravity.

‘Here!’ Jungkook unties the large flat bag previously attached to his back and hands it to Hoseok. ‘It’s everything you requested for.’

‘Thanks Kookie,’ Hoseok immediately starts unpacking it.

‘Hoseok, you might want to check up on an issue headed your way- I mean, well, Yoongi’s way. It seems like they’re expecting a large Transporter for their dock.’ Sk’jin tells him tersely. ‘They might be transferring him somewhere else.’

‘Why the fuck are their lazy asses actually working on time?’ Hoseok hisses as he pulls out the uniform he requested them for.

‘Alliance shit makes Beings jumpy? I dunno,’ Sk’jin replies. ‘You’ll need to help Jungkook with the mask.’

Hoseok quickly strips himself off of the maintenance overalls, his skin rippling, hair darkening and lengthening just the slightest and forming a neat cut right under his chin. Jungkook is staring with wide eyes, watching with fascination as Hoseok does his utmost to bring the most change to his body as he can. It was a little more difficult to change into a distinctly feminine silhouette but Hoseok has long mastered the tricky bits. Most times, with most species, it was the physical attitude that mattered the most.

‘Pretty,’ Jungkook remarks with a wide grin. Hoseok rolls his now silver eyes in response.

Hoseok slips on the long skirt, forgoing the standard stockings for long socks (mainly because he hadn’t found stockings), and quickly pulls on the long blazer on top.
Most Yisheng ships were stocked with default uniforms for a number of official statuses for the purpose of (but not limited to) funerals. Does Hoseok feel bad? Not really.

His stock of useful uniforms, badges, and status-based equipment were all in the Užkulisai. He was simply restocking. In a very unconventional manner.

‘Do you have the IDs for me?’

‘Sending to the screens. With Kookie,’ Jimin informs him.

‘Let’s do your eyes,’ Hoseok pushes back his longer hair into a neat brush-like low pony-tail.

Jungkook immediately bends his knees a little so that Hoseok can help him drop the EDie into his eyes. It seemed like Sk’jin had carefully masked Jungkook’s very telling skin-colouring into something slightly warmer. And now with the silver EDie, Jungkook looks very much like a Tayian. A tall Tayian.

‘You’re clearly mixed,’ Hoseok remarks, looking over Jungkook one time over to make sure everything was set.

‘It’s okay?’ Jungkook looks a little nervous.

‘It’s fine,’ Hoseok pats his shoulders, ‘You won’t have to talk much. I’m acting as your superior, and in Tayi, a lot of them are pretty prissy about ranks.’

‘More like all of them,’ Sk’jin comments dryly. ‘Get moving.’

‘Ready?’ Hoseok asks Jungkook, the latter is nervously combing through his hair with his fingers, chewing at his lower lip, a small furrow forming between his brows.

He nods timidly.

‘Just remember, you need to act like you own the room you walk into. Like you’re meant to be there. None of this is new to you.’ Hoseok tells him. ‘Look disinterested.’

‘Disinterested,’ Jungkook says the word carefully, exhaling out and then nodding. ‘Okay.’

Stepping out of the maintenance room, Hoseok walks with purpose and aim, the small but sharp heels on his feet making clear clacking sounds.

They don’t speak as they walk out of the Dock and head straight towards the Māho-5 Keep. It’s not extensively large or very fortified, but after some research, Hoseok is sure that Yoongi is being detained in their singular digitized cell. Most small and localized prisons or keeps had at least one digitized cell since almost 5 sols ago. The GLA had made it a standard practice and legal requirement that all facilities made to retain and hold criminals should be outfitted with one.

Hoseok wonders now if that was a decision made in regards to the Gaia Case.

According to a very easy search into the Keep’s system, Yoongi was being withheld as inmate 3589901. His arrest and warrant was charged under Deputy Ferf Fanger, also the head of the Keep.

‘No sign of Namjoon,’ Sk’jin tells him quietly. ‘Or of the Omhlophe.’

‘We had a really big head start,’ Hoseok says quietly. ‘And if this works out, we can get out within an hour. Just get ready to cut the signal when they send out the report.’
The Māho-5 Keep is little more than just a glorified detention center for mainly going through messed up trade-documents, passes, and only localized crime or the occasional pirate messing things up. So it’s not surprising when Hoseok and Jungkook have to walk through a small crowd of Beings, all eager to catch a glimpse of the Alliance criminal.

Hoseok had been, admittedly, far too busy to really keep track on what happened after Pompa. And while Hoseok knew that Yoongi’s arena had indeed been distributed and widely viewed for that short period of time, hadn’t imagined that it would have been used to frame him, and them, as members of the Alliance.

Ammé had not mentioned this. Either she would have thought it was something they would have already been aware of, or she didn’t know about it herself. She wouldn’t be in the correct official position to be aware of information like this. But if it was connected to this mission, Hoseok is pretty sure that the Special Jury would have found out—especially considering the fact that Xmi, as Chief of the Galactic Security and Safety Department was in the Jury.

Hoseok had tried to pinpoint where and when their warrant for arrest would have been issued. It must have been fairly recent, considering they were not recognized in Grisial.

It was strange seeing his own picture, archived and retrieved from the Venture Unit, brought out and labeled alongside a warrant for instant arrest. He was ranking pretty high, with a heavy fine and sentence declared based on his supposed involvement with the Alliance. In order to obtain his original picture, you would need to have an incredible hold or authority over the Venture Unit archiving system.

Sk’jin’s picture is from a surveillance footage, Yoongi’s is from when his hair was still blue, and Taeh’yung’s was clearly taken from Teronko’ng Prison. Namjoon is also there, his picture taken from surveillance footage as well. There’s a blank image but with a general warning that this crew of old Alliance members were numbered at 6.

It’s all loosely based on the incident that took place in Seulgaan’s ship. The Tayian himself is not mentioned, and instead they’re labeled as a group of former Alliance members still actively working on trafficking.

This was a very strategic and quiet attack against them.

There used to exist a unique species of insects in Ngfy’wid. They gathered grain husks during the harvest, to use in their underground nest-mound during the winter to grow and collect fungi which their larvae would feed on to grow fully in the coming spring. However this was an incredibly risky move for the insects, as they were the primary prey for most of the local birds. But the insects had a defense mechanism, excreting poison onto their wings to fend off their natural predators. However in order to get close to their own nest-mounds, they would need to shed their wings.

It was a harsh sacrifice, but the insects would time themselves, shedding their wings close to their nest-mounds, letting go of the husks before they’re swooped out by their predators.

The autumn air would flutter with falling leaves, poisoned wings, and drying grain husks.

Hoseok can’t help but feel like their wings are being forcefully shed now.

Both Hoseok and Jungkook flash their fake (quickly and expertly made by Hoseok, further embellished by Sk’jin through legal systems), IDs over at the entrance once they make their way inside the Keep, the doorway guards allowing them entrance once they spot Hoseok’s rank.
They even respectfully curtsey.

‘Ah, a good start then,’ Sk’jin comments.

‘What the fuck?’ Hoseok hisses quietly, side-eyeing Jungkook.

‘So I stuck an Iris on him, need to keep an eye on things,’ Sk’jin replies blithely.

‘You saw me changing,’ Hoseok deadpans as they pause shortly in the anteroom before the main Lobby. This is clearly a pretty big ordeal, with the whole Keep flitting by around quickly, projections and screens blinking all over.

‘If it’s anything worth mentioning you look great in a skirt’

Hoseok doesn’t bother replying but does glare at some point around Jungkook’s chest. A harried looking pale Keep-staff approaches them.

‘Oh yes- oh, have you forgotten something?’ he inquires.

‘ Forgotten?’ Hoseok tilts his head, posture leaning forward and downwards. ‘I beg your pardon?’

The staff member visibly flinches, ‘Oh uh- please, uh, wait one moment, we’re quite in an uproar—’

Hoseok would feel bad for this unfortunate staff but he needs to get Yoongi out, then leave this place before the Omhlophe get to them, and find another place where they can restock weapons and supplies.

‘Who is the overhead of this Keep?’ Hoseok snaps as though he didn’t know.

Unable to really respond much other than plead at Hoseok with rapidly blinking eyes, the staff-member points towards the doorways past the service-cubicles.

‘Uh the Deputy Fanger is busy right now—’ he begins but Hoseok pushes past and makes his way straight towards the doors.

The staff, though admirable in their attempt to stop Hoseok, tries to stand in front of Hoseok to stop them from continuing forward. Before Hoseok can say anything, Jungkook steps forward and physically lifts the staff away. He hears a squeaking protest behind him but Hoseok ignores it.

‘Cold.’ Sk’jin comments dryly. ‘Just follow Hoseok Kookie, you’ve really made quite the impression on that staff.’

Hoseok ignores the calls and warnings from around the Keep and pushes through the doorway labeled “Deputy”.

The door, much to Hoseok’s satisfaction, bangs open.

The Deputy Fanger jumps in shock, glaring at Hoseok with all five thin long eyes momentarily before schooling her expression once she notes Hoseok’s uniform and status.

‘I am Officer Jeong and this is Officer Heenuen,’ Hoseok flashes his ID, and Jungkook does the same behind him with an added Tayian bow. Who the fuck taught him that? ‘From the Venture Unit Networking Division. We’re here to take the purported Isbahaysiga Alliance suspect.’

‘Not purported,’ the Deputy Fanger recovers, ‘Declared.’
‘Very well. The declared purported Isbahaysiga Alliance suspect,’ Hoseok clips back, ‘Inmate 358…’-‘

‘-9901,’ Jungkook completes from behind him.

‘-is to be taken in by Venture Unit agents-‘ Hoseok is ready to lay down their complete details, backstory of how they’re here, and even more evidence of their validity as law-abiding agents but the Deputy Fanger just snorts.

‘I’m sorry Officer Jeong,’ the Deputy practically sneers, ‘But inmate 358…’-‘

‘-9901,’ Jungkook completes.

‘-that.’ She scowls, ‘Has already been taken by your fellow visiting agents from the neighbouring port during the round up. Guess your competition is done.’

He hears SK’jin exhale with frustration. Hoseok manages to disguise his own frustration and panic with a glare at the Deputy Fanger.

‘Daily? You really stock up on them don’t you.’

She gives him an extremely irritated look.

‘Which prison are they taking inmate 358…’-‘

‘-9901.’ Jungkook offers again.

‘-9901,’ Hoseok nods, ‘where are they taking him?’

‘He didn’t have any identification or record. He’s being taken to the Cuab-D2 Detention Facility. Was this not declared to you by your supervisors Officer Jeong? If so, please do not insinuate any fallacies about my Keep.’

‘Wait- isn’t that-‘

‘Axudar?’

‘Yes,’ she smiles in a sour manner, ‘You may take this up with your Division supervisor I don’t care. Maybe you need to spruce up on your time management yes? Kindly see your way out.’

‘Very well- expect to see a memo tomorrow,’ Hoseok grits out through his teeth, acting out a defeated agent to the best of his abilities.

The Deputy rolls all 5 of her eyes.

Hoseok turns, his heels clacking on the floor while Jungkook quickly sides up next to him after bowing the formal Tayian farewell to the Deputy Fanger.

‘Was that okay?’ he asks very quietly, ‘Taeh’yung taught me?’

‘You were fine Kook,’ Hoseok says as reassuringly as possible as they march out into the anteroom. ‘You did well.’

Jungkook seems to sag in relief, rubbing at his face carefully. Hoseok catches sight of the unfortunate staff and hails him over with an imperious wave. The poor staff scurries over, sweat visible on his face but with a blush on his cheeks as he glances at Jungkook.
'Oh no Spaces this is so embarrassing.' Sk’jin groans. Hoseok thinks he can hear Taeh’yung laughing in the background.

'I need the schedule and navigation charts following the transfer of inmate 358-' Hoseok turns to look at Jungkook who is quick to add, '-9901’, his expression expertly schooled and also genuinely completely unaware of whatever effect he was having on this poor staff.

‘-immediately,’ Hoseok finishes.

‘O-of course-!’ the staff fumbles with his screen, nearly dropping it a few times before handing it over to Hoseok.

‘We won’t need to use Jungkook as bait anymore but clearly we’re gonna have few new options now,’ Sk’jin is saying as Hoseok quickly scans the schedule before him, memorizing the trajectory and time slots. He quickly taps along the details, not surprised to find Yoongi not registered as was the case with dealing with high-level criminals. Those would be registered and handled directly by the agents responsible for their arrest.

‘Who was responsible for the arrest of inmate 358-’

‘-9901.’

‘-and which Division or Department did they come from?’ Hoseok asks without even looking up.

‘Oh- uh, they were from the Venture Unit ma’am, I uh- I am uh, not versed on t-their uniforms.’ He stutters before weakly adding, ‘I’m new.’

Hoseok genuinely feels bad for this unfortunate staff.

‘Thank you,’ he says curtly, handing the screen over to the staff without an added glance and walking away.

‘What’s your plan?’ Jimin asks.

‘The Transporter taking Yoongi to Cuab will leave in 3 hours. There’s an hour delay and I’m guessing that’s because no one was expecting Yoongi’s level of warrant. They’re probably pulling up extra security. Sk’jin, could you look into Cuab first and foremost?’ Hoseok says as they walk through the main lobby and towards the doorway. ‘What sort of security system will they be employing? If we have 3 hours, we might be able to extract him from the Transporter without even leaving Māho.’

‘On it.’ Sk’jin replies as the doors slide open to allow them out.

Hoseok spies a pair of Venture Unit agents, uniforms a mess as they hurriedly push past the crowds, clearly clamoring to make their arrests. Hoseok remembers when he was just a greenhorn, taking up as much arrests and cases as he could. Staying near Docks and ports like this was always good if you were still training.

‘Is this the new style of internship?’ Sk’jin asks absentmindedly as Hoseok pulls Jungkook aside as the agents push aside the crowd and sprint past just as Hoseok and Jungkook duck behind the main crowd.

‘Guess that explains why there was activity in the Keep’s docks,’ Hoseok sighs. ‘Fuck, that was faster than I expected them to move. Is that too much of a coincidence or is that actually normal?’
Bad luck,’ Sk’jin replies immediately, ‘Māho-5 has daily round-ups, but it’s normally just local crimes and thieving. But I guess because of the level of Yoongi’s warrant, they called the agents themselves.’

‘Kook and I will head over to the Docks-first we need to know who are the arresting agents,’ Hoseok declares, ‘We have a decent time-frame, but we can’t allow Yoongi to leave Māho.’

‘What if we can’t?’ Jimin asks, his tone light.

‘I can get him out!’ Taeh’yung volunteers at once.

‘No,’ both Hoseok and Sk’jin say at once. ‘Buggy, we can’t – you can’t. We can’t afford to leave an obvious trail- not now, so close and soon to Grisial. We also can’t draw more attention to this than it’s already garnered. Yoongi is recognizably known as a criminal now, we can’t mess up.’

‘Fine,’ Taeh’yung audibly pouts.

‘If Yoongi is arrested, and we can’t get him. What will happen to him?’ Jimin asks tentatively.

‘Most likely scenario for a declared member of the Alliance he will be immediately sentenced to life-imprisonment in Teronko’ng Prison,’ Hoseok replies evenly as they move out of the crowd outside the Keep. ‘This is a high-level warrant issued by someone very high up.’

‘Will they be notified?’

‘They will,’ Hoseok replies, ‘They probably already know. It’s fair to say that the Jury probably know too. An envoy could be waiting for him at Cuab which is why we need to get him out of here now.’

‘Would it- in the long run, would it be safer, for Yoongi to be arrested?’ Taeh’yung asks out of nowhere.

Both Jimin and Jungkook make an affronted sound.

‘I don’t think Yoongi would appreciate being left behind,’ Sk’jin remarks dryly. ‘Unlike Namjoon, we’re going back for him.’

Hoseok grimaces, expecting some sort of retaliation or comment from Jimin but nothing comes.

‘How far is Cuab-D2?’ Jungkook asks as their tram pauses at a stop.

‘2 days in warp.’

‘How close is it to the main planets in Axudar?’ Hoseok inquires.

‘Less than 4 hours.’ Sk’jin replies before adding, ‘Okay- Yoongi’s arrest has been taken over from Fanger to two agents from the Venture Unit under Interstellar Patrols Sub-Division. Would it be safe to say that Haenoon or S’ava are behind this warrant?’

‘We can’t be sure,’ Hoseok replies, feeling a little more hopeful. This would make things easier for them, as Hoseok was more than familiar with Venture Unit protocol regarding arrests and transfers. ‘But we can’t rule it out either. Are you using the NaviLet? Can you find their IDs and-‘

‘-Hoseok please, I am way ahead of you. I’ve already found the two agents,’ Sk’jin retorts with a scoff, ‘I’m sending their IDs and complete data to you-‘
Sk’jin suddenly pauses.

‘What’s wrong?’ Hoseok asks with some trepidation.

‘We have around 3 hours correct?’ Sk’jin asks instead.

‘Yes?’

It’s silent over the Comm for a few minutes, during which Jungkook keeps giving Hoseok nervous looks. They’re close to the transit-stations now, the sound of the trams clear over the sound of the street and shops and crowds.

‘Hoseok- as an agent, were you ever accidently arrested during missions or infiltration tasks?’

‘Yeah?’ Hoseok replies with a frown and quickly adds, ‘We’re not going to have me arrested- I think it’s fair to say that the remaining Venture Unit agents who know of me won’t take too kindly to meeting me anymore.’

Sk’jin makes quick shushing sounds before he starts exclaiming, ‘Fuck- Spaces fuck- I am a fucking genius.’

Jungkook, clearly nervous and completely confused, grabs onto the edge of Hoseok’s jacket as though it will help him understand.

‘I think, Hoseok,’ Sk’jin begins rather ominously, ‘I think I know what we should do.’

Yoongi’s pretty sure 3 hours had not yet gone by.

He was shortly read his “rights” as well as his sentence, issued and collected from the Interstellar Patrols Sub-Division from the Venture Unit. Great, he was going to be taken straight back to Šerdesas at this point. He was told that he would receive his complete court-issued sentence in Cuab-D2, and then be taken to Teronko’ng. This was pretty standard and not at all surprising considering what he was being arrested for.

After his “rights” were read to him, Yoongi was left alone. He kept track, rather subconsciously, of the routine and schedule followed by the officers around him. In a Keep like this, it was probably connected to a private and very large, very near-by Dock that allowed them to secure and oversee all transfers of criminals and other legal activity. If Yoongi was going to have to go through his own escape, the best timing would be during this trip to the Dock. But there’s no way of knowing just how many officers, how many defense mechanism, and how many obstacles he’ll have to fight through with such a massive handicap on his physical strength and abilities.

Which is why Yoongi is surprised when an officer stands outside the digitized-wall, waiting for a doorway to appear to allow them in.

‘Inmate 3589901 stand back.’ The officer calls.
Yoongi rolls his eyes.

He couldn’t even stand.

The doors open to reveal one of the officers that had arrested him. He steps forward and to Yoongi’s complete confusion is released from the cuffs around his neck and knees.

The pain that follows the relief of being somewhat released is almost not worth it but Yoongi manages to bite back the groan of pain.

The officer takes a step back, still eying Yoongi warily. Yoongi instantly concludes that this officer has most definitely seen his arena footage before.

2 other officers appear at the doorway.

‘Follow me,’ the officer says, turning on his heel and walking out.

Yoongi is beyond confused but doesn’t show it.

He follows the officer out of the digitized-cell and is flanked by the two additional officers. And instead of taking him to maybe the regular prison cells, they simply walk past them and into the hallway through which Yoongi was brought in.

Yoongi walks past open windows.

I could literally escape right now what on Earth is happening? But Yoongi doesn’t act on this very easy option and instead follows the officer past the open-windowed hallway and downwards to the main offices. Just 20 meters to Yoongi’s left is the doorway leading outside. While his feet were cuffed, Yoongi knows at least 10 different ways of breaking free of those. He also has the strength to at least run out. But he doesn’t. Instead they enter the main offices, the two officers behind him stopping at the entryway. The officer in front of Yoongi continues to guide him straight towards a large doorway that looks a lot more imposing than the others.

This was probably where the Deputy stayed, Yoongi surmises. What was going on?

A hassled looking staff appears, giving Yoongi a nervous smile before shuffling forward first. The door opens and the staff goes through, standing by the doorway and waiting for Yoongi to enter while the officer stands just outside of it.

‘U-uh, in-inmate 3589901 p-please enter,’ he stammers awkwardly, nervously glancing inside the office.

Very confused, Yoongi enters the office.

The Deputy is sitting behind her desk, 2 of her 5 eyes glancing at Yoongi quickly. Yoongi also notices 2 other Beings in the office. He recognizes the uniforms as some Division from the Venture Unit and surmises that they were the agents who were now taking over his arrest. They study him carefully, as though surprised that he was a member of the Alliance. Maybe they never saw his arena footage.

‘Inmate 3589901,’ the Deputy says, all eyes focused down on the screen before her. ‘It seems like there have been some problems.’

She says it as though the word “problem” personally insulted her.
‘Please address him by his official given title Deputy,’ one of the agents says with a stressed smile while nodding at Yoongi.

‘Inmate 3589901 Agent Aydinliş Şig,’ the Deputy says dully, ‘It appears that we have been most unfortunate in disrupting your mission issued by the Venture Unit.’

Yoongi blinks a few times.

‘I do not have the authority to discuss my mission,’ Yoongi manages to say.

‘Yes well, how convenient,’ the Deputy drawls while the two agents stand, sweat visible on their foreheads.

‘We have tried out best, Agent Şig,’ one of them says with a nervous smile. Huh, a rookie. ‘But we’re afraid that due to the uh, warrant that was released, we cannot set aside the arrest unless it’s on Cuab-D2. We are very sorry-’

‘-please take this apology nonsense somewhere else,’ the Deputy cuts in sharply, ‘We will be doing our part that was expected of us when the arrest was first warranted and will be delivering Inmate 3589901 Agent Aydinliş Şig to Cuab-D2 and all authority that was granted unto me will be forfeit thereof.’

The agents are sweating even more so Yoongi steps in, starting to understand what was happening. He eyes the agents carefully, studying their appearances carefully.

Too tall.

‘As expected of the Deputy,’ Yoongi states, ‘I am relieved to find that the mission is not entirely compromised but my going to Cuab-D2 will delay my work. I don’t think I need to mention how that paperwork will go.’

‘You don’t need to,’ the Deputy yawns before nodding at the nervous staff behind Yoongi, ‘Evdos will take care of it.’

The staff smiles but it’s more of a terrified grimace. Yoongi feels very bad for this unfortunate staff.

‘And who the fuck had my ID warranted?’ Yoongi demands, rounding up at the two agents still anxiously standing.

‘We-! We’re sorry Agent Şig,’ the other stammers, ‘But we- we received an updated list after the Pompen Area was exposed- we- uh-’ she glances at the Deputy who is watching them with bored eyes and lowers her voice to a whisper, ‘-we were not made aware of uh- the level of your mission.’

Spaces, if these were the new agents in training the Venture Unit was doomed.

‘How long until we’re leaving?’ Yoongi grumbles.

‘The transfer-ship will leave in-?’ the Deputy looks at Evdos, the nervous staff with 3 eyes.

‘-at! In uh, 94 minutes ma’am!’ he stammers.

‘In 94 minutes,’ the Deputy echoes dully. ‘Then you all can do whatever you want. Evdos take the Inmate 3589901 Agent Aydinliş Şig to the waiting facilities-’
‘he’s not a prisoner you must-‘

‘-no agents, you must make sure that I receive the standard payment for hosting this clumsy fool who thought he could just waltz into my Dock and not know about the fuck-up of his own agency,’ the Deputy snaps, ‘-so sit back down. We’re here to discuss payment.’

The agents throw Yoongi helpless looks but Yoongi just ignores them, feigning annoyance at their incompetence.

They immediately start giving him some form of elaborate courtesy. Yoongi grimaces and turns away.

Evdos, the nervous staff, hurriedly moves aside so that Yoongi can walk through.

‘Uh- uh, his uh, cuffs-‘ Evdos coughs with an apologetic smile at the officer waiting for them.

The officer still looks at Yoongi with suspicion as he goes to unlock Yoongi’s cuffs.

Correct height.

For a brief second they hold eye-contact.

It would take less than 2 seconds.

The officer flinches away, back straightening and hand twitching for his weapon.

Yoongi wants to laugh and at the same time sighs at himself.

Maybe 1 second. It’s not Hoseok.

‘We-we are very sorry- uh, the Deputy is a busy person and uh, needs to consider a lot-‘ Evdos is saying, walking a little behind Yoongi as they follow the officer back.

‘-we are so sorry- we were not aware- I mean how could we be- of your mission with-‘ Evdos choked out in a whispered tone with wide eyes, ‘-the Alliance-! We are so sorry to have disturbed you and caused this issue by arresting you mid-mission – you must be so-‘

Yoongi tunes it out. Well, this was very well thought out. Was this Hoseok’s plan? Pretending that Yoongi was a Venture Unit agent pretending to be an Alliance member but being caught by accident in the middle of a mission was ingenious.

‘-and we’re so sorry we couldn’t let you go at once!’ Evdos is going on, ‘We tried our best! But our only option is to simply send you to Cuab-D2 but you will immediately released! Your agency will be sending in agents to guide you through the process.’

Yoongi’s ears perk up at this.

‘When will they be here?’ Yoongi asks.

‘U-uh, they should be at the transfer-ship when you get there!’ Evdos says, dropping his screen and quickly picking it up again. ‘Again we are very sorry!’

They reach the doorway for the cells and the officer steps in first, saying something to the officers inside. Yoongi makes to follow, feeling relieved now that he knew where things were headed.

‘Uh- agent Şig!’ Evdos calls out again, Yoongi looks around, one eyebrow raised.
'I hope you can catch some sleep at least,’ he says, his tone losing the frail nervous stammer, emphasizing gently. Yoongi pauses a moment to really look at the nervous staff. With a small wink, his large purple eyes briefly shift into very familiar yellow hues instead.

Yoongi could laugh.

Wasn’t expecting that.

Yoongi looks down, hiding his smile as he follows the officer towards the holding cells. There’s clearly a shift in the way the officers now regard him. Many look incredibly apologetic, others are rightly suspicious looking. But he’s taken past the holding cells which are surprisingly filled with a lot of inmates. Quite a lot of them recognize him almost instantly and those that didn’t are very quickly filled in on who he is.

This was beyond odd. They were going to have to be very careful in this last leg of their journey before they hit Menigišiti.

‘Agent,’ the officer nods, indicating him towards a waiting area to the side with long benches. ‘Would you like any refreshments?’

Might as well.

‘Water- and I need the washroom,’ Yoongi tells him.

The officer nods and indicates to the side where a mini-station was established. Two other officers sat in there, the entirety of the station covered in surveillance projections. The officer knocks on the partition and says a few words.

The officers inside look at him dubiously and with some fear. But they are nodding as well.

There’s a mirror in the tiny washroom. And Yoongi takes a few minutes to really look at himself.

He hasn’t changed much. There’s been no visible difference in his appearance since the first day he awoke, looking at himself in Zhoumi’s apartment.

He rubs at the marks still around his neck from the cuffs. They would probably bruise, and with no access to any medical-care, he won’t be able to prevent it either. Sighing Yoongi finishes up using the washroom, hair around his forehead damp from washing his face.

He’s left alone for most of the part of staying in the lobby with the exception of the two officers inside the station who are doing a terrible job at spying on him.

So, clearly, Hoseok and possibly Jungkook would be his “agents” from his “agency”. That would mean that they were able to forge or get somewhat almost entirely legal documentation to pull him out under an entirely fake identity. Hoseok being an actual agent with many decades of experience not only put them at an advantage for a plan like this, but also allowed them to use their situation as a way to get close to Axudar. If Yoongi is not mistaken, Cuab-D2 was very close to Axudar; Namjoon had actually mentioned it in passing to them when they were first building their trajectories.

Actually going to Cuab-D2 and pulling him out from there must mean that Hoseok and Sk’jin were confident in the documents and permits they were using. Clearly they tried getting him out from here, but the Deputy seemed to be the type to enjoy purposefully making things complicated.

Yoongi still finds it funny that he didn’t realize the nervous staff was Hoseok completely shifted.
It’s also slightly terrifying.

‘I hope you can catch some sleep at least.’

Yoongi shifts his position, making both the officers inside the station jump, eyeing him skeptically before he pillows one arm and closes his eyes.

It’s probably not something to boast about but at his current state, Yoongi could very easily fall asleep if he chose to do so. So it’s not a surprise to find himself opening his eyes inside a warmly lit room, the night sky filled with stars outside the open windows.

A cool breeze enters, the thin curtains fluttering a little. He sits up from the bed, feeling rested and safe.

There’s a short series of knocks and Yoongi quickly gets up, jogging towards the main door.

He’s only able to breathe out his name as he opens the door when Jimin pushes through quickly, arms wrapping around him in a secure and all-encompassing embrace.

Yoongi stumbles back a little, taken aback by the sudden hug.

‘Yoongi,’ Jimin exhales quietly, his body relaxing against his, as though finally at ease here in Yoongi’s hold.

‘Hey sunshine,’ Yoongi holds him all the closer, only realizing that Jimin was pushing them backwards when his back hits the wall under the stairs.

‘Sunshine-‘

Jimin kisses with a sweet sense of desperation.

‘You looked so tired,’ Jimin tells him softly, his lips brushing against his own. ‘And your neck-‘

Hoseok probably had an Iris on him, allowing them to see what was happening.

‘I’m okay,’ Yoongi kisses the words on the corner of Jimin’s lips, ‘I’m okay. It was just the restraining cuffs- it’s not serious.’

Jimin kisses his neck where his bruises were forming.

‘I’m sorry for worrying you,’ Yoongi says quietly as Jimin presses his lips against his throat. Yoongi closes his eyes, taking in this moment with a deep inhale. ‘Is everyone okay?’

‘Just- just one moment,’ Jimin’s words are barely audible, his grip around Yoongi tightening even more.

Yoongi cards his fingers through Jimin’s hair, his other hand slowly rubbing up and down his back.

After a few minutes, Jimin slowly moves back, blinking furiously and trying very hard to maintain a composed expression. Yoongi takes his hands in his, noting how cold they were, and kissing them.

‘You’re not hurt?’ Jimin asks, looking over him as though expecting to see his bruises.

Yoongi shakes his head.
‘Are you all safe? Were you able to get away?’ Yoongi asks.

Jimin nods, tugging at their hands and pulling them away from under the stairs.

Instead of taking them to the bedroom, Jimin takes Yoongi to the second doorway into a small but cozy room. It was supposed to a sort of reading room or study, with a low coffee table in front of a comfortable pale blue couch under a narrow but deep window. The table is littered with knick-knacks and decorations and from the ceiling a lamp, unlit, dangles down alongside a rather childish model of the Earth’s solar system.

They sit on the couch, Jimin’s legs folded up, his feet wiggling to push under Yoongi’s thigh.

He takes Yoongi’s hand and begins, ‘As soon as Hoseok alerted us, we pushed back past the borders. We made sure we would be undetectable.’

Yoongi nods, listening closely.

‘Hoseok stayed to watch and observe. We searched and the uh, list, it has you from the Arena, and Sk’jin, Taeh’yung, Namjoon, and me- but not my face,’ he says quietly. ‘Hoseok too but- but I guess, it’s okay for him.’

Yoongi smiles at that.

‘Jungkook is still safe?’

Jimin nods at once.

‘Hoseok and Jungkook tried to come and claim your arrest,’ Jimin tells him, ‘But there were others who came before you.’

Yoongi thinks back to the two agents being grilled by the Deputy.

‘So Sk’jin suggested that we should claim that you are an agent for Venture Unit, like Hoseok, but working to- against, Alliance, by pretending,’ Jimin gives him a small smile, as though pleased with the idea. ‘It took a while to make the correct uh, permit? And we could overpower your warrant.’

‘I’m guessing it was Hoseok who did it?’

Jimin chuckles a little, leaning in a little closer and just simply staring at him, as though there was nothing more he wanted, ‘It was Sk’jin. He’s very good.’

‘And old-‘

Jimin laughs, his body falling against Yoongi’s.

‘And uh, Hoseok used an official channel to issue this permit. It was…it was frightening,’ Jimin concludes, ‘We had to wait for the approval. Make it as of-official, as possible. Nothing strange, nothing messy.’

Yoongi nods in understanding and asks, ‘Who was Hoseok disguised as?’

Jimin laughs again, the stars outside sparkling with the sound of his delighted laughter. He’s laughing too much, unable to give an answer, his whole body leaning against Yoongi’s.

‘Sunshine-‘ Yoongi chuckles, ‘what is it? Who was the Being Hoseok disguised as?’
Jimin actually has tears in his eyes, trying to compose himself.

‘Okay okay,’ Yoongi adjusts his arms to wrap around Jimin, pulling him down with him as he lays back on the couch. Jimin’s laughter is quiet and Yoongi can feel it against his chest.

‘So I’m guessing Hoseok and Jungkook? Will be those agents Hoseok mentioned?’ Yoongi asks after Jimin has stopped laughing, his fingers finding a way to comb through Jimin’s hair.

‘Hm,’ Jimin hums in affirmation. ‘We uh- we had to stop their flight.’

‘What do you mean?’

‘A Transporter came with the guards,’ Jimin explains, his breath seeping through the thin fabric of Yoongi’s sweater. ‘Sent to follow you through to Cuab-D2.’

‘How?’

‘Uh- Taeh’yung,’ Jimin tells him before hastily adding, ‘Nothing bad.’

Well, okay then.

‘We could attach Laikin to their Transporter,’ Jimin tells him, ‘And the Transporter will go inside the transfer-ship.’

Yoongi frowns at that, ‘Does that mean you will be aboard during that time? Along with Sk’jin, and Taeh’yung?’

Jimin nods against his chest and says, ‘Can’t be seen.’

That sounded incredibly risky but at the same time Yoongi would’ve done the same too.

‘We will take you to the transfer-ship,’ Jimin explains, ‘after we reach Cuab-D2. You won’t go inside prison. Just in- in the uh, bay?’

‘Yeah, it’s called the bay,’ Yoongi nods, ‘It’s the area after the dock, it’s where the transfers would take place.’

‘Hoseok will be close by always. Cuab-D2 won’t take you,’ Jimin says firmly, ‘We will transfer you out immediately. We take the guards Transporter and abandon it, take the Laikin, and continue with out trajectory.’

‘Won’t whoever called for my arrest be notified?’ Yoongi asks, ‘Along with the warrant overturn?’

Jimin shakes his head.

‘They will know about the arrest- but Hoseok said, Venture Unit agents are different.’

‘Guess that’s also why the GLA didn’t trust them,’ Yoongi hums in approval.

This part was definitely true- while Venture Unit agents definitely had a romanticized and highly praised commercial aspect to their work, the GLA more or less hated them because the Venture Unit time and time again, messed up their arrests and warrants. And many times the Venture Unit simply exercised their power for fun, to rile up the GLA.

‘Then it seems like things worked out well?’
Jimin nods again.

‘Any news about Namjoon?’

‘Nothing yet,’ Jimin says in a small voice.

‘The Omhlophe?’

Jimin shakes his head.

They stay like that for a while.

‘You’re okay?’ Yoongi asks after a while.

‘Worried,’ Jimin replies softly.

‘Sorry I got arrested,’ Yoongi chuckles, fingers playing with Jimin’s ear.

‘They could see you,’ Jimin comments quietly, ‘You were so visible. So clear to them…even more than before.’

‘Yeah- it was weird,’ Yoongi confesses.

Jimin pushes himself up a little, balancing himself so that he could lean up against Yoongi. Yoongi shifts to accommodate Jimin better, their legs entangled.

‘I won’t let anything happen to you,’ Jimin tells him. It’s almost like a command. ‘I’ll protect you.’

Yoongi smiles up at Jimin, pushing back his hair and tucking the silky strands behind his ear.

‘I know,’ he replies. ‘Don’t push yourself too much.’

Jimin nods, leaning in to kiss forehead. ‘You too.’

‘I won’t,’ Yoongi promises, his hands curving around Jimin’s bare waist, pulling him down to lay against him again.

Jimin leans in with an open-mouthed kiss, hands sliding under Yoongi’s back.

‘I need to go back,’ he says quietly, lips still on Yoongi’s. ‘We’re going to dock inside the transfer-ship soon.’

Yoongi holds him tighter, pressing hard kisses against the side of Jimin’s head and then to his cheeks.

‘I’ll see you soon,’ Jimin promises, eyes closed as Yoongi gently kisses his nose. ‘We’ll come and get you out.’

Jimin pushes himself up and Yoongi makes to sit up but Jimin pushes him down.

‘Just sleep for a while longer,’ he says, brushing Yoongi’s hair back gently. ‘Rest a little more.’

Yoongi just nods, settling back into the couch.

Jimin unfolds the soft yellow blanket over the back of the couch on top of Yoongi. He kisses his forehead again before stepping back.
I’ll see you soon.’

Jimin steps out and Yoongi closes his eyes, listening to the sound of Jimin’s bare feet quietly padding down the hall and towards the front door. The door opens and clicks shut with a soft dry sound.

The solar-system dial hanging above him moves quietly, the sun model at the center glows faintly. The model of the Earth has its own small moon attached to it. Suddenly, Yoongi misses it.

Grabbing the blanket from around himself, Yoongi sits up and makes his way out. Quietly, as though he didn’t want to disturb the quiet of the night, he makes his way up the stairs.

It’s incomplete but a bit more fixed up. The floors are slightly worn, a light ash wood paneling covers the previously exposed floors. The walls are a clean and soft white though in this night light almost appeared a greyish blue. The walls are not closed up yet- but maybe that was intentional. Long white curtains of a soft thin material flutter, the smell of ocean clean and faint in the breeze.

Open before him is the ocean.

And above it high up, is the moon.

Yoongi sits down, his feet dangling from the edge of the open room.

This was an unfortunately complicated plan. A lot of it banked on Beings who were at officer levels to simply not give a shit about most procedures and policies. And while that was generally the case, being framed a member of a supposed long-gone and very vile organization that even pirates despised, would generally cause for more speculation.

Yoongi hugs the blanket around him tighter. The breeze picks up a little, the thin white curtains shifting a little more. If he listens closely, he can hear the stars singing to him.

‘Agent Şig.’

Yoongi sits up, squinting just a little as he regains his bearings.

He feels better rested even though that could’ve only been an hour, at most, of sleep.

The officer that had brought him here stands over him. Over at the end of the hallway now flanked with a lot of armed officers was a long train of inmates.

‘We will be heading for the Docks,’ the officer tells him.

Yoongi nods and stands up, discreetly stretching a little.

The officer guides him to stand next to the long line of inmates. Some of them eye him curiously, recognition in their eyes as they study him closely. Yoongi chooses to ignore them after a quick scan. They were mostly pirates it would seem. Probably caught over nothing more than simply being pirates.

He looks around at the officers, eyeing their height and stature, wondering which one would be Hoseok. Jimin had said Hoseok would always be close by.

He remembers infiltrating a transfer like this before. How he snuck in easily, simply switched uniforms, and quickly assassinated one of the inmates waiting the transfer-ship. Yoongi doesn’t know why he had to do it- but then again, most of his missions meant nothing to him other than something that needed completing.

He makes his way to the end, at the front of the line of inmates in front of a large circular doorway. There was probably a lift or tram to take them to the Dock. Yoongi eyes the inmates and their restraints. The officers don’t seem too bothered by the very simple and rather flimsy cuffs on the inmates.

‘Agent Şig,’ the officer gestures to him to stand to the side just as the circular doors sink back a little before split rolling away to reveal a series of connected trams.

The officer guides the way forward and Yoongi follows. It’s after a moment or two the inmates follow in neatly. This was an oddly subordinate bunch of pirate inmates, none of them yelling or making a ruckus as they were wont to do. The Keep didn’t seem like such a terrible place that inflicted psychological suppression into their inmates as a lot of places unfortunately did.

As soon as each tram fills up, the doors lock up and pull upwards.

Yoongi stands by himself with the officer, clean rings of light falling as they rise up. The officer doesn’t say anything and Yoongi can’t sense anything out of the ordinary even though something was definitely starting to feel strange.

He can’t make it out though- unable to clarify if he was simply just reacting as a result of the fact that he was going to break out soon, and that this entire operation was based on his false identity as a Venture Unit agent unfortunately caught in a carelessly issued warrant.

Or maybe he was just overreacting.

The tram stops, and almost immediately a similar circular doorway opens up just as the rest of the connecting trams arrive and reconnect to form a long chain.

The Keep’s Dock is massive and so is the transfer-ship awaiting them.

It could easily house 3000 inmates in just the hull-area, Yoongi estimates as he looks up at the towering ship.

Cyborgs line up the path to the transfer-ship in a slightly curved path to a wide ramp leading up into the transfer-ship. Yoongi looks around and finds it rather sparse; there were few wide spread officers, each at their own station or overseeing something else.

Again, Yoongi tries to quell the gnawing feeling steadily growing.

It’s weirdly quiet for one- the pirates behind him don’t talk and their footsteps aren’t loud. Yoongi glances back. None of them have nervous expressions or were displaying any sign of anxiety, anticipation, or worry. They all looked extraordinarily calm- like this was completely normal.

Almost like going on a casual walk somewhere.

Yoongi scans the place again, wondering where Hoseok could be. Jimin had said they would be bringing in the ship his initial guards had flown to Māho. Were they already inside, were they waiting to be transferred in after all the inmates were sent in?

At the edge of the ramp a pair of cyborgs set up a fence with scanning poles, the lights on top of the scanners gleaming red.

The officer walks through first, the light gleaming blue. When Yoongi walks past, the lights turn green.

He glances back, curious as the pirates behind them all file in neatly, walking past the poles.

The lights turn blue.

No one says a thing. It’s not exactly quiet- sounds of machines, engines, air-purifiers, humming electric fields; all of these fill the air with a white noise Yoongi is accustomed to.

The problem is that no one is really talking.

The main entry hull is high but not too large. There’s a gateway through which Yoongi walks through, following the officer. Inside it’s equally void of talking, with only cyborgs walking about.

Maybe this was a tactic employed by the Keep- to unnerve their inmates into sub-ordinance.

The gateway is quite long, each section kept open as the emergency doors lay deactivated until required. The main door at the end of the gateway opens to a massive hull transformed into a holding cell facility.

It’s loud in here, voices echoing about. It almost makes Yoongi feel better.

The cells are decently spaced and sized, separated by charged fields not too different from an Atmoshield. Rather than extending up too high, the cells are stacked at only 2 floors, with each cell having their own steep stairwell for access. This was space-consuming but a precaution that Yoongi understands. Clearly there are several floors; massive watch towers climb through what Yoongi counts at around 8 distinct floors within this hull only.

He follows the officer straight towards one of the towers.

He’s almost feeling all right, pushing his queasiness down, when there’s a steadily growing silence.

Looking back around, Yoongi frowns as he notices the silence spread as soon as the pirates behind him walked in.

He’s halfway towards the tower when he can’t help himself and asks, ‘What’s with them?’

The officer doesn’t reply.

After a few minutes, when the silence spreads even more, Yoongi hears it.

Whispering.

And then there’s clapping from somewhere. And it picks up, faster and quicker than the silence.

The whole area bursts into thundering applause as the last of the inmates file in.

‘As part of the procedure,’ the officer says as they get closer to the tower, as though the inmates inside the hull weren’t cheering loudly. ‘You will have to stay in the hull-compound. But you can stay in the Towers instead of a cell.’

‘I understand,’ Yoongi replies, not understanding. ‘Where are my escorts?’

‘Your escorts will come to collect you before the ship lands inside Cuab,’ the officer informs him.

The applause dies down a little.
The officer doesn’t pay any attention to their surroundings.

‘What’s going on?’ Yoongi asks in a quiet voice.

The officer doesn’t reply. But when they reach the elevator doors that will lead him up to the towers the officer says in a calm and neutral voice, ‘Agent Şig, I hope you follow all of the proceedings without any delay.’

The doors open and Yoongi steps inside after a moment of hesitation. The officer turns around and walks away, back towards the main gateway.

The doors close and Yoongi feels the elevator move up. He takes a cautionary step back, back closer to the wall.

I don’t understand.

Yoongi nods to that.

The doors open quietly into a typical watch-station.

Yoongi is not very surprised to find the watch-station only manned by cyborgs. Yoongi scans the room quickly. It’s shaped like a ring around the entrance; a way for the security to keep constant watch below. Yoongi steps around quietly, ignored by the cyborgs stationed at the dashboard at intervals. Yoongi steps closer to the continuous ring of windows that offered a good but narrow view of the hull below. He sees the inmates being led into their cells over at another row.

From the view on top, Yoongi sees how each cell is labeled with their row number. Taking note of the cells the inmates were being guided into, Yoongi finds the corresponding surveillance feed. One of the cyborgs opens a seat for him and then moves to another station. Yoongi sits down, not realizing that his legs felt a little rubbery and weak, and pulls up the surveillance projection.

One of the screens to the side displays the total fuel they were taking in, supplies that were being stocked up for this stop, and finally, number of inmates expected.

To Yoongi’s immense disquiet, the number of inmates remains 0.

He scans through the rest of the ship’s most recent changes in inventory, access, and arrivals. He quickly finds his own at the top of the list that finishes updating after the allocated timeframe for the gates to be open has passed. Only his admittance into the ship is documented with what he suspects is the fake identification Hoseok and Sk’jin created for him. Yoongi scans lower down on the arrivals list and finds nothing that indicates the arrival of the ship Jimin had mentioned to him. He scans the rest of the lists available to him but finds nothing.

Was this something Hoseok and Sk’jin were responsible for?

That didn’t feel right.

Jimin had talked about how they worked so hard on making the whole process as legal and as legit as possible. The reason why they didn’t bust him out of the Keep using Taeh’yung’s abilities (which would have definitely got them out asap) was solely so that they could maintain as much of a low profile as possible and not leave behind gigantic messes.

This didn’t feel like they were maintaining a low profile.

‘I would like to speak to the Bridge,’ Yoongi states clearly to the cyborg closest to him. ‘Which
For a moment it’s like the cyborg wouldn’t response. But then it reaches over to the projection Yoongi had been watching, collapses it and starts a new one. This opens a wide panel of tabs for him.

‘Thank you,’ he nods at the cyborg who ignores him too.

The ship lets out a small siren sound, a warning that they were exiting the Dock and about to hit warp.

Yoongi quickly finds the line for the Bridge.

Right before he places the call, he watches as the registered arrival of his admittance into the ship is neatly erased from the archive.

Yoongi pauses, finger frozen over the faintly glowing square labeled BRIDGE.

They’re watching.

Yoongi stops, retreating back a little. He doesn’t move from his seat, sits back and secures himself as the ship lets out another warning calling for warp preparations.

The familiar gentle tug at the bottom of his stomach signals that they’ve pushed into warp and several things happen at once.

All of the barriers in front of the cells blinks out, the dashboards in the watch-station all shut down, flooding him in a shadowy darkness, and the cyborgs all shut down at once.

The elevator door behind him opens, staying that way the same way a forced emergency categorized under evacuations would.

Yoongi pricks his ears for any sound approaching him. But there’s nothing. Watching out of the window, he notices how the inmates aren’t clamoring around to celebrate being freed or anything. They’re behaving as though this were a completely normal thing. But Yoongi knows it’s not. No transfer-ship of inmates were ever released from their cells like this.

The elevator quietly hums and turning, Yoongi watches as the lights inside the shaft blink innocently at him until an elevator comes down, stopping before him.

Inside are 3 Beings, clearly not officers or crew of this ship.

They seem to appraise Yoongi, looking over him carefully.

They’re not carrying any weapon- none that Yoongi can see anyways, and didn’t seem to be at all violent or aggressive. But then again, that has never stopped violence or aggression in Yoongi’s experience. Yoongi recognizes their species only vaguely.

While one was clearly a native from Axudar, the other to the left is definitely from Orvan, her arms have the tell-tale welts, the same as the ones Namjoon had on his own wrists. This was a Being who definitely escaped the cruel system of Orvan. The one who stood in the middle is much taller. His skin is a deep blue, thinly lined with faded and healed over scars, the hair on his face and head a slightly faded orange-red that indicated his age. His horns are well polished and maintained though one is very cleanly snapped off; the tip shifting in opacity and quality appearing garnet like. He wears a skirt like garment that extends just a little below his knobby knees and exposing the hoof-like ends of his legs. Yoongi doesn’t note his tail that he knows their species possessed. He towered over Yoongi, having to duck a little to enter the room. Yoongi has only seen their species in passing, and it’s mainly because the Ožkan, like Humans now, had a very small and dying population.

‘Are you Agent Sig?’ he asks, his voice rumbly but oddly very nice. He speaks with a sense of authority- or at least seemed to stand with a sense of leadership.

_The leader. Behind this._

Yoongi doesn’t know why he would approach Yoongi, an unknown supposed member of the Alliance only recently declared agent of the Venture Unit, so openly like this.

‘I am,’ Yoongi replies.

‘You’re quite dedicated to bringing down the Alliance if you were willing to so change yourself in order to participate in the Arenas,’ the Ožkan comments- it almost sounds like genuine praise. ‘It is indeed unfortunate that you were caught after exposing the Pompen Arenas. That was a job well done.’

Yoongi only nods to that.

‘As you can see, there have been some changed made in the transfer-ship,’ the Ožkan tells him rather conversationally. ‘I do not think it will do anyone good to have you completely hidden in the dark for the next few hours considering we’re both headed to Cuab-D2.’

‘Is this an attempt to break open Cuab-D2?’ Yoongi asks.

‘It is,’ the Ožkan replies easily. ‘As you are aware, due to recent events that the GLA are doing their best to completely quiet down, pirates and others involved in the Underverse are being rounded up heavily. My crew were swept up in this affair as well, and I’ve been gathering them all back after I was able to break-free just 2 sols ago. The last of my remaining crew who are still living and imprisoned are currently in Cuab-D2, and after that I would have made them all safe.’

‘I see,’ Yoongi replies.

‘So understandably, you, an agent of the Venture Unit, being on board here, would complicate our plans,’ he states.

‘What about my escorts?’ Yoongi inquires, ‘Are they onboard?’

‘No escorting agents were picked up from Māho-5,’ he answers.

Yoongi’s stomach drops a little, a cold rush flooding him.

Where were the others?

‘Now while this could have definitely been ignored, and we could have kept you in the dark, albeit it being confusing as you noticed early on that some of the proceedings were not the standard protocol regarding inmate transfer under the GLA.’ The Ožkan crosses his arms, leaning his weight on one leg. ‘We could not choose to do so because we know that you are not agent Sig.’

‘I’m afraid you don’t understand,’ Yoongi replies smoothly, ‘I was unfortunately caught in the midst of my mission attempting to infiltrate the Isbahaysiga Alliance. My warrant was revoked and I am waiting for my escorts to come take me back to the Venture Unit for a reevaluation or a complete reassignment. I believe my documents from the Deputy of the Māho-5 Keep was clear.’

‘While your documents were definitely very well made and definitely legal and followed the standard protocol of what to do if an active member of the Venture Unit is falsely captured during a mission, you and your Ngfy’widan friends made the unfortunate mistake of mimicking one of my shadows in Māho-5,’ The Ožkan explains kindly, almost patiently. ‘The staffer you knew as Evdos had been working for nearly 5 months at Māho-5 to work alongside Deputy Fanger in order to secure our plan executed today. Which is why understandably, when my shadow did not board the transfer-ship as was initially planned, and his last report back to me had been minutes before we were sent a memo from Fanger that we would be having an agent transfer to us. A memo that should never have been cleared because my shadow was supposed to make sure it wouldn’t pass.’

It’s very quiet.

There’s nothing threatening in the way the Ožkan addresses him, or as a matter of fact, even the two behind him. But Yoongi knows that he has to be very very careful.

‘So my confusion is that, if you are truly, an agent mistakenly arrested, why would you need to create fake documents to release you from Māho-5. You are not operating at a pirate level, because the access you have as well as expertise in handling this transfer suggests you are not a pirate.’ The Ožkan concludes. ‘And while this then begs the question, if you are in fact truly, a member of the Alliance and are currently escaping because whoever is controlling the Alliance in the GLA wants you back- you would not need this cover up of being an agent for the Venture Unit as for a mission this delicate and high-up, the GLA Chiefs still controlling the Alliance would simply have you permanently removed for exposing yourself in a very public arrest.’

The Ožkan is incredibly well-versed, leading Yoongi to believe he has been around as a possibly very powerful pirate in the Underverse for a very long time.

‘And again, while all of this is enough for me to ignore you as it does not directly effect us, and allow you to leave naturally as your release grant allows you to do so at Cuab-D2, I am unfortunately missing a shadow. And the two disguised as escorting agents who came aboard the ship have disappeared. Meaning I am sure I have 2, or more, undocumented and well-hidden Beings, no doubt your friends, somewhere aboard my ship. I cannot allow anyone to further mess up my plans. Which is why I would request you to contact your friends, and ask them to step out, to make sure that they have not alerted any authority of this venture.’

Yoongi is in no position to bargain. He knows this. And so does the Ožkan.

So far these pirates or whoever they were, knew of Hoseok and of Jungkook. But beyond that, everything was up for guessing. So that meant that at least, Sk’jin, Taeh’yung, and most importantly, not because he’s biased, Jimin was still hidden and safe.

‘While I can guarantee that I have no intention whatsoever in bringing harm or issues in your plans, what guarantee do I have that you will do the same for us?’ Yoongi gets out finally.

The Orvan just slightly rolls her eyes.

‘There is no guarantee. This depends entirely on your behavior during our trip to Cuab-D2. If you do anything to disrupt my mission, or attempt to inform any authority if they have not already done so.’ The Ožkan replies with a slight shrug.

And that’s more than fair.
Yoongi sighs internally.

‘Could I request that we be allowed to stay inside my designated Transporter during the duration of this journey. We will remain in lockdown until we arrive at Cuab-D2. We will make our scheduled leave, without any fuss, without any trouble. You will never hear from us again.’

The Ožkan seems ready for this and replies, ‘We have your ship under complete lockdown and you can only access it after we have made our complete landing within Cuab-D2. When you call your friends, you will be staying in the private holding cell upstairs.’

Yoongi inhales and exhales slowly.

Of course they could very easily dispose of Yoongi, Hoseok, and Jungkook. It would in fact, be quite wise to do so in an operation as risky and painstakingly executed. They were at their last leg, and right now Yoongi was posing a major risk for them.

But the hidden nature and secrecy that shrouds Yoongi and his being here alongside Hoseok and Jungkook were giving the pirates pause in taking immediate action. Just like them, they needed to be careful, not raise any alarms whatsoever.

If they did, in fact, kill off 3 highly secret agents working for either the GLA or Venture Unit, their entire operation would be exposed and revealed. And the kindest thing that could happen to them and all of the officers/high-ranking officials they clearly bought and bribed, would be imprisonment for life.

There’s not a lot of guarantee but Yoongi has to make it work.

‘I understand.’ he says, ‘How am I communicating?’

The Ožkan doesn’t say anything but just removes his own Comm-Device and hands it to Yoongi.

Of course, because Hoseok would have made sure to snitch one in order to hear what was going on.

‘This is Suga,’ he says quietly, ‘I have spoken to the authorities of this operation and have come to a deal regarding our safety and travel.’

‘No offence, how do we know this is actually Suga,’ a voice replies. Yoongi doesn’t recognize the voice and that’s not entirely surprising.

‘I like tea,’ Yoongi says.

‘Understood. Where and when do we meet?’ Hoseok shows no sign of discomfort or worry. But then again, Hoseok was a seasoned veteran in his field of work.

Yoongi gives the Ožkan a questioning look and the Axudari quietly says, ‘Lobby 3 of the 5th Hull.’

‘Understood.’

‘Please don’t carry any weapons on you,’ the Axudari adds.

Hoseok doesn’t reply.

The Orvan holds her hand out and Yoongi drops the Comm-Device back into her palm.

‘Well then,’ the Ožkan gives him a small smile. ‘I can’t say I’ve met a lot of Humans before.'
Especially ones that were born nearly over 15 centuries ago.’

The Ožkan steps aside and gestures for Yoongi to follow him. But he’s stuck, heart in his mouth.

‘We’ve been hearing a lot,’ the Ožkan tells him. ‘There’s been a lot of strange stories, a lot of strange sightings, a lot of strange packages, even stranger deals, even stranger Beings.’

Yoongi stiffly follows after the Ožkan.

‘I’ve always maintained that we stay clear from certain businesses,’ the Ožkan continues. ‘The Alliance being one of them. But in staying away, didn’t mean we ignored them. We studied them, learnt how to avoid them, how to stay clear from their dealings and plays. Their channels eventually lessened, what with the Yishengs involvement with creating the GI.’

Yoongi eyes the Ožkan as he leans against the walls of the elevator moving upwards.

‘The GI were considered a myth of course,’ the Ožkan says conversationally. ‘But it’s not much of a myth when one is sent to assassinate you.’

Yoongi can’t help it, glancing up at the Ožkan who gives him a shrug and half-smile.

‘That’s what happens I guess when you control half of the troves across the Underverse and refuse to cooperate with the Yishengs.’

That explained the authority this Being had.

‘The GI agent sent to assassinate me almost succeeded. As you can see, I didn’t escape unscathed,’ he points at his horn. ‘Had to do a lot of work to save this side of my head and face as well.’

That would also explain the faint lines connecting around his face, concentrating lower and disappearing into his beard.

‘This GI agent nearly had me, but I was luckily surrounded by my own friends. Two of them died. But in doing so, one of them managed to knock off his helmet.’

And suddenly, Yoongi knows where this was headed. Why the Ožkan hadn’t simply had him thrown out or killed.

‘This was 5 sols ago,’ he adds. ‘He was so close to killing me. Until he quite suddenly stopped— and after barely a second, he dropped dead. We could only watch when he seemed to dissolve.’

The elevator stops and the doors open after a second.

‘Of course I could never forget his face.’ The Ožkan says as he steps out. Yoongi follows after a strained second. They’re in an antechamber with several doorways.

‘Passive, no expression of aggression, anger, pain,’ the Ožkan pauses a moment before the doorway to their right. ‘And I went into hiding for a while.’

The doors open and it leads into a nice and simple looking lobby.

‘I never thought I would see his face again but,’ the Ožkan smiles at him as they walk into the lobby. ‘I guess I was mistaken.’
I am SO SORRY FOR NOT UPDATING IN SO LONG
I had a really bad writers block after my exhibition
I guess my exhaustion, strange relief with stress coupled together, anxiety waiting for my grades to finalize and be released, all sort of dog-piled over each other in a weird mess that blocked my creativity and writing abilities.
But I am back!! And I think I can go back to the every 10 days updates again T_T
And yes, the room that yoonmin were in is indeed, the room from serendipity
As well as the open space above the stair case.
If you wanna see what the rest of the rooms and house looks like, I made them as part of my thesis project in 3D you can check them out here:
It’s my artstation its also me promoting my work in general

haahahahahahahahahahahahahahahaa anyways
Im also happy to announce that I’m working on a commission for yoonmin!!!! I’ve already started on it and it’s gonna be chaptered!!
Even after all these centuries, the channels he had once shown Sk’jin were still the same and unchanged. It further fortifies Sk’jin’s plan in his mind.

“You want to do what?’

‘This will work,’ Sk’jin repeats, ‘Trust me, this is the only way we can get Yoongi out of the Keep.’

‘That happens?’ Jungkook asks sounding confused.

‘A lot.’ Hoseok answers, ‘But it’s a complicated process. I’ve also gone to collect agents out before, so I know the protocol, but it’s always been surprisingly legal. And I don’t know how long it will take to create a permit credible enough to use for this situation.’

Jimin seems to be thinking the plan over carefully, a furrow between his brows. Taeh’yung is sitting upside-down on the seat next to Sk’jin, looking bored knowing he wasn’t allowed to participate in anything.

It’s quiet over the line but Sk’jin knows Hoseok is going over his plan in his head. It has to work.

It should work.

Because this once happened to Ahadi.

Before Ahadi had his unwanted title of “intern” somewhat lifted from him after proving his loyalty, he had been unwittingly arrested by the Venture Unit for being a known member of Sk’jin’s pirating network.

It had been a joke for months after he was released a short 7 hours later. Sk’jin remembers hysterically giggling, ears burning red from the force of his laughter. Even Ti looked red around the face, as though trying not to laugh. Ahadi would just sigh and stare out of the window or at some point on the floor, as though hoping he could be in prison instead of where he was right then. They even once baked him a celebratory platter with “CONGRATULATIONS ON NOT BEING THROWN INTO PRISON FOR 3 MONTHS” in bright violet. The jokes eventually died out, though Ahadi formally had “Prison Expert” written on his footnotes for his ship ID right under “INTERN”.

And while Ahadi was definitely an agent sent in from the Venture Unit to infiltrate his network, and therefore all of his documents and permits had been definitely legal, Yoongi was not. And that was where they would have to be very tricky and careful with how they arranged their transaction of the whole situation.

And while Hoseok was definitely a member of the Venture Unit, an infiltrating agent with a resounding reputation, he was a startlingly straight-forward and honest Being. And so his way of planning, was sometimes too straight-forward and honest when it came to a situation like this that involved not just himself as an Agent, but as a Being carrying with him the guilt of his past so interlaced with the present and its outcome.

Sk’jin lived most of his life living an extremely topsy-turvy lifestyle maintained by taking topsy-turvy actions and methods. And if this wasn’t an extremely topsy-turvy situation, then Sk’jin is no pirate Captain. Well, ex-pirate Captain.

‘Okay- we’ll need to create the warrant and evidence of his agency with the Venture Unit-‘

‘I’m on it,’ Sk’jin replies at once.

‘I was going to do it-‘ Hoseok says at once.

‘Trust me. I got this. All I need to do is issue a memo from a very high-ranking office to overpower the warrant that already exists.’

‘How do you know any of this? It doesn’t make sense.’ Hoseok sounds disgruntled. And cute. It makes Taeh’yung grin, watching the Iris footage with a gleeful grin.

‘I have my sources.’

‘I’m literally your source though? Right?’

‘Venture Unit agents are never truly removed from their status in the Unit Archives regardless of what’s happened, you know this,’ Sk’jin says lightly.

Jimin looks at him at his words, his eyes showing an understanding for something Sk’jin can’t seem to really pinpoint.

‘Okay.’ Hoseok says after a moment. ‘Make sure you don’t forget the order overturn for the agents that are already here.’

‘Of course,’ Sk’jin smiles.

‘Kookie and I are going to station ourselves above the Keep’s main Dock.’ Hoseok adds. ‘We’re gonna scout the Docks and access some of the Keep’s systems just in case.’

‘Thanks ma’am,’ Sk’jin grins, eyeing the live-footage through the Iris they stuck on Jungkook before he left. Hoseok grimaces in the general direction of the camera, rolling his eyes.

‘What can I do?’ Jimin asks at once.

‘Nothing much just yet,’ Sk’jin replies honestly as he waits to connect to the Venture Unit via the channels Ems built especially for them and ones Namjoon reinforced and saved for potentially using later. ‘Sorry Cap but gotta take over your stuff for‘while.’

‘You’re stealing pa’s stuff?’

‘Borrowing,’ Sk’jin corrects before adding, ‘Please sit up straight, you don’t need all that blood rushing to your head.’
Taeh’yung pouts, mumbling under his breath.

Up into this point, and even during their stay inside Amme’s ship, it always made Sk’jin uncomfortable every time they dug through database or any archiving channel through the ones Hoseok or Namjoon either built or borrowed. Each Being had a signature or style that if picked up once, could easily be traced and or spotted if you knew what you were looking for.

And ever since speaking with Amme and understanding what the Jury were doing all along (and Sk’jin is more than sure that what Amme had told them was definitely not the whole picture and possibly even lies) Sk’jin’s paranoia has spiked through the metaphorical ceiling.

And while some (mainly Namjoon) would think it was too extreme (which was a funny thing for an Information Analyst like Namjoon to think) to assume that the Jury, and also the fucking Court, would do their best to track them via their interpersonal characteristics and or work-tactics, Sk’jin thinks it’s best to be precautious anyways.

And it was useful being presumed dead for so many centuries and having lived one of the most infamous yet completely hidden lives in the Underverse for many many centuries.

‘Stop worrying so loud, it’s disrupting me,’ Sk’jin says conversationally to Jimin who hasn’t budged an inch from where he was sitting, eyes a little wide as he stares at the floor.

‘I’m sorry,’ Jimin replies quietly.

‘Here, why don’t you do this for me,’ Sk’jin hands Jimin another screen, ‘Can you find out who in the Keep is responsible for handling and approving orders sent to and from the Deputy? If things go to shit, we’re gon’need ‘nother way to send in our permits and shit.’

Jimin takes the screen and follows Sk’jin’s request.

‘Me?’ Taeh’yung asks, shoving his head and twisting his body in a weird angle so that he could pillow Sk’jin’s lap.

‘Here, follow Jungkook and Hoseok through the Iris, be an extra eye in case we miss anything or they get spotted.’

‘That sounds boring,’ Taeh’yung complains but does it anyways, tilting the projection so that he could still watch it from where he was awkwardly situated.

‘Is the Laikin all right?’ Hoseok asks, ‘I know you can’t be scanned or spotted, but is everything holding up?’

‘Yeah we’re good,’ Sk’jin replies absentmindedly. ‘Hobi which Division is higher than Interstellar Patrols Sub-Division? Or which would be a better choice?’

‘Go straight for the Infiltration Division. Most Docks and Keeps authorities recognize that as being pretty serious.’ Hoseok replies after a short minute. ‘The Chief should be someone from Tayi.’

‘It somehow always is,’ Sk’jin sighs.

‘We’re at the Docks.’ Hoseok reports, the muted sounds of some gateway opening audible through their Comm-Devices.

‘Okay,’ Sk’jin replies absentmindedly, quickly opening a tab for the surveillance footage from the Dock but minimizing it to the side tabs.

‘Wow-‘ Jungkook says quietly, ‘It’s so big.’

Sk’jin spares a glance at the Iris feed and notes that yes, that was indeed a very large transfer-ship.

‘It just docked 30 minutes ago,’ Jimin informs them. ‘It has 4300 inmates. Waiting for the Keep inmates numbered at 64, not including Yoongi.’

‘Thanks.’ Hoseok replies, ‘We’re gonna station ourselves behind the control towers, near the station panel-rooms.’

It’s 30 minutes later, and Sk’jin is almost done with this permit that would allow them to take Yoongi out of the Keep and simply vanish him (they’ll think of what to do after that point) from the clutches of this disastrous attempt at restocking their defenses when Hoseok groans in annoyance.

‘What- what is it?’ Sk’jin asks at once.

Taeh’yung, who was doing a bad job of pretending not to be asleep, sits up and says, ‘Oh no!’ as though on reflex.

‘Fuck- just intercepted a call- the two idiot agents from the Sub-Division called in extra guards to guard Yoongi’s trip to Cuab.’ Hoseok hisses, ‘It’s a standard escort-ship with 12 guards. They’re 10 minutes away.’

‘Fuck- fuck-‘ Sk’jin curses, nearly throwing his screen away. ‘What the fuck do we do? Even if we send in the permit, this lot will still arrive-unless we can issue an order to them to make them turn back around-’

‘I’m running now-‘ Hoseok hisses as he adds, ‘Kookie stay here for now-‘

‘What are you doing?’ Jimin demands.

‘Find me those two agents- are they at the Keep or are they staying near the Immigration Centers?’

There’s a panic flurry of 3 pairs of hands rapidly going through scanners, surveillance feeds they stole and snuck into, and running the IDs of the agents through every possible source possible.

‘They’re 5 levels above the Keep!’ Taeh’yung yells. ‘I’m following them!’

‘Hoseok don’t tell me you’re gonna take down these 2 agents in broad daylight-‘ Sk’jin warns.

‘Gonna try and get to the agents and take them down and hopefully I can reissue the order, Sk’jin send out the permit to the Keep right now-‘ Hoseok confirms as he darts away from the view of the Iris as Jungkook helplessly stands awkwardly in the narrow panel-rooms just next to the controls tower in the Keep Docks.

Muttering under his breath but seeing the validity of Hoseok’s actions, Sk’jin immediately sends in the permit, waiting with increasing anxiety for the approval from the Infiltration Division. It’s momentarily funny to Sk’jin that they would be infiltrating the system developed by the Infiltration Division. It just went to show how much nothing was truly safe or secure.

It had been scarily easy enough, what with the channels Ems had provided them, further extracted and expanded by Namjoon and Hoseok, and with the access Sk’jin created, to find a list of agents from the Division who were undercover. Sk’jin selected an agent who was currently in the red-status as MIA as Yoongi’s cover-up.

Jimin is holding his breath, staring at the screen in front of Sk’jin as though willing their permit to obtain approval.

‘Jimin- who is responsible for the transfer of orders to and from the Deputy?’ Hoseok demands, sounding out of breath.

Jimin jumps a little before quickly replying, ‘It says Junior Constable Evdos.’

‘Find their location-‘

‘Junior Constable?’ Taeh’yung looks thoughtful before adding and reminding everyone that he could see through Hoseok’s shifted form, ‘Oh I see Hobi- oh…’

‘-the two agents are already inside -‘ Hoseok pants out, cursing under his breath. ‘-find that Being- I’ll take them down.’

‘He’s not going to kill anyone,’ Sk’jin adds, mainly for Jungkook’s and Jimin’s benefit before glancing down at the screen in Jimin’s hand and snorting, ‘Or maybe Jungkook can just convince him to do it for him.’

Jimin looks scandalized while Taeh’yung laughs boisterously as he scans the Keep’s surveillance for the nervous but surprisingly ranked Evdos.

‘I can help!’ Jungkook says earnestly.

‘No- it’s fine. This is fine. Actually if I can-‘

‘Oh! I see him!’ Jungkook exclaims. ‘He’s headed for the- he’s headed here.’

‘Oh-?’ Sk’jin manages, what was the Junior Constable doing in the Docks?

‘Kookie go seduce him!’ Taeh’yung squeals at once, tossing aside his scanner and making the projection from Jungkook’s Iris larger, ‘Show off your strength the kid clearly has muscle kink-‘

‘Wait-‘ Hoseok tries but Jungkook is moving already, the Iris shaking before its sensors work and provides an almost clear feed of Jungkook’s view. And making his way out of a gateway and through the narrow hangar to enter the main Dock past the control-towers is the Constable Evdos. He’s on his screen, mouth moving as he speaks to someone.

‘Excuse me!’ Jungkook calls out.

The Constable Evdos looks up, and Sk’jin doesn’t know why but something feels off.

‘Oh- o-oh,’ he blinks rapidly, suddenly shrinking in his height. ‘Y-yes? How can I help you?’

‘I’m lost,’ Jungkook lies and it’s not the best nor is it the worst thing he could say, ‘I forgot to sync my Comm-Device and I’ve lost contact with my supervisor. Can you please show me the way back to the Keep?’

Sk’jin realizes that Jimin and Taeh’yung have both leaned in so close their hair brushes against Sk’jin’s ears as they watch anxiously.
Constable Evdos looks around, just a strangest hint of both annoyance and fluster evident in his features before he nods. Then he nods again, shrinking into himself again and holding the screen tight to his chest says, ‘Of course uh- Officer-?’

‘Officer Heenuen,’ Jungkook replies, doing a bow again. And it’s a tad bit overkill but the Constable seems to flush a little more at that.

‘What lift is Kookie headed for?’ Hoseok asks.

‘One sec-‘ Sk’jin answers, ‘We’re still not clear-‘

‘This is the hallway that will lead you up Officer Heenuen,’ Evdos says, gesturing to the end of the hall Jungkook and Hoseok had previously come in from.

‘We need to keep him there-‘ Sk’jin warns but Taeh’yung excitedly says, ‘Kookie, do exactly what I say!’ and smashes his hand over Sk’jin’s.

Sk’jin is very quick to bite back and Taeh’yung simply snaps his fingers, a small green triangle holding down on his tongue.

Sk’jin very violently reacts while Jimin tries to placate him. Taeh’yung struggles against them both, using his annoyingly long surprisingly flexible limbs to push them both down.

It’s surprisingly effective judging my Jimin’s expression of comic betrayal and shock.

‘Lean in and lower your voice like you’ve just woken up and say ‘I like to take the lead most times, but I think I wanna see where you take me’!’

‘Jungkook-‘ Jimin’s eyes are wide with alarm at Taeh’yung’s over-the-top advise but Taeh’yung is quick to shut Jimin up as well.

‘I like to take the lead most times,’ Jungkook says in a lower voice, leaning in maybe more than what Taeh’yung was going for. And by Spaces does it work because Constable Evdos’s eyes widen like plates, his face bright red. ‘But I think I wanna see where you take me.’

‘I- I uh-‘ that was definitely a very genuine stammer.

‘Walk him into the elevator, keep a half smile on and say ‘I haven’t seen much around the Dock, I think you could change that right?’,’ Taeh’yung makes his voice all low and sleezy and Sk’jin gags not because of the thing on his tongue but because he’s physically recoiling at Taeh’yung’s words.
Jimin has just closed his eyes, as though hoping to exit from this situation.

‘I haven’t seen much around the Dock,’ Jungkook repeats obediently, rounding up around the Constable more like a predator would its prey rather than someone trying to be seductive but apparently Taeh’yung calling out this Constable’s muscle-kink and possible something else was pretty on spot.

‘What the fuck is going on?’ Hoseok whispers.

‘Get him into the elevator!’ Taeh’yung cheers, ‘And just sort of reach out and touch on his sleeves, very lightly-!’

There’s a small spark of light and Jimin lunges to grab Taeh’yung’s Comm-Device out of his ear.
Sk’jin feels the block on his tongue lit and they’re both on Taeh’yung at once.
‘Ow! Ow! Ow!’ Taeh’yung cries out as they pile on top of him.

‘Hoseok they’re in- they’re in EV3- RT311 headed for the same level as the Keep!’ Jimin gasps out as he lunges for Sk’jin’s screen.

‘Got it! Thank you!’

‘Jimin- the elevator surveillance!’ Sk’jin bites out.

Sk’jin has a point to prove so he’s a bit more aggressive as he wrestles Taeh’yung to the floor, twisting him so that the Zhak’gri is on his front, arms twisted back.

‘Kookie- just keep him there until the elevator opens and Hoseok will come- turn his back away from the elevator door!’ Jimin orders while Taeh’yung whines in pain though he seemed to be enjoying himself as Sk’jin jabs him on his back with his elbow.

‘Got the surveillance-!’ Jimin cries out in relief.

Obviously Sk’jin is not doing this to really cause Taeh’yung any harm but he has a lot of feelings and energy to expel at the moment.

‘So, tell me, how long have you been here?’ Jungkook asks conversationally and Sk’jin is sort of impressed how Jungkook is taking this situation so easily. And it also makes him wonder about how much of nature and nurture really effects who you are as a species. Because fuck, the Pravasi M’hanun were aggressive and dangerous yes, but fuck could they be seductive too.

‘I uh-‘ the Constable stammers, glancing all around the elevator before clearing his throat and seemingly having an internal battle in his mind before he drops the screen.

This makes Taeh’yung look up and around from his place on the floor.

‘If we’re going to do this-‘ he does something to the controls behind him and the elevator stops.

‘I’ve always wanted to do something outside-‘

‘Oh Spaces an exhibitionist-‘ Taeh’yung remarks as though he hadn’t thought of that while Jimin screeches, ‘HOSEOK THE ELEVATOR HAS STOPPED-!’

‘Kookie listen to me,’ Sk’jin says very clearly as the Constable starts to strip. ‘Get really close and then knock him out-‘

For a moment Sk’jin worries Jungkook has most definitely gone into shock and is frozen over.

But something clicks and Jungkook takes a big step forward and lifts the Constable up, making him squeal in delight again before Jungkook, without much finesse or execution, hit Evdos’s head against the elevator wall.

‘I-…’ Taeh’yung raises both eyebrows as though in respect. ‘That was very entertaining.’

‘You don’t get to say that you little rascal-!’ Sk’jin hisses, pushing Taeh’yung down again but Taeh’yung just cackles and rolls them out of the cockpit and to the walkway to the side.

‘Uh- Jungkookie, are you okay?’ Jimin asks gently.

‘Uh- I think so. Why was he like that?’ Jungkook asks, genuinely confused.

‘It’s called kINKS OUCH!’
‘Stop blaspheming the baby like this-‘ Sk’jin hisses slapping Taeh’yung’s back aggressively.
‘Jungkook restart the elevator please-‘

Taeh’yung stands up quite suddenly, lifting Sk’jin along with him.

‘HEY PUT ME DOWN YOU PIECE OF SHIT-!’ Sk’jin does not like to be carried around so easily, let it be noted.

‘Hoseok is there now,’ Jimin sounds both exasperated and amused.

‘You want me to put you down?’ Taeh’yung grins brightly.

‘GENTLY GENTLY YOU UNCULTURED BEAST I’M-‘

‘Shut up!’ Jimin literally yells at them, his voice very loud, ‘It’s a fucking ship!’

Sk’jin and Taeh’yung look away, staring through the window, both prompted by Jimin’s sudden cursing and also-

‘-oh yeah- that-‘

‘Guys what’s going on-‘ Hoseok sounds very done.

‘Ah- uh it’s the escort-ship with the extra guards-‘ Sk’jin says at once as he’s very gently dropped down by Taeh’yung. The light of the sizeable Transporter blinks at them from a close distance just after Māho’s warp borders.

‘We can’t have them come in just yet I’m going through this Constable’s screen and I still haven’t gotten the permit yet!’ Hoseok hisses, voice altering as he adds, ‘Kookie, take his clothes off and give them to me-‘

‘What-?!’

‘Okay I know you won’t agree but I think we could take them out-‘ Taeh’yung begins.

Jimin is already disagreeing but Sk’jin slams his hand down on the dashboard before him, ignoring the sharp pain. He was trying to be dramatic and pain that is self-inflicted but not for comedic purposes often ruined dramatic moments.

‘No- I agree.’

‘Yeah so- wait what?’ Taeh’yung looks at him with wide eyes.

‘You want to go intercept them right? Let’s do that. There scanners will be down, and as we saw last time, Maho doesn’t keep organic scanners. Let’s get you suited up and you can go-‘

‘-no!’ Jimin interrupts. Sk’jin is about to very exasperatedly explain this again but Jimin pushes forward, ‘Taeh’yung and I will go. We can’t knock them in-‘

‘-out-‘

‘-we need a cover. So I will go with Taeh’yung.’ Jimin concludes.

‘Oh- oh okay well then,’ Sk’jin mutters. ‘We’ll get you both suited-‘

‘No need!’ Taeh’yung grins before jumping up and over Sk’jin grabbing Jimin’s hands and pulling him to stand up.

‘We’ll be back soon!’

Jimin quickly grabs his screen before Taeh’yung pretty much scoops him up, the air around him glowing ominously green and the floor below him shining in a neon green triangle before he cleanly sinks down through a shockingly clean cut triangular whole that seals up at once too.

‘Can you tell me what to expect.’ Hoseok asks in Evdos’s voice.

‘Uh- Taeh’yung and Jimin went to take care of it,’ Sk’jin says as he stands up to walk up to the window. He watches as a green streak of light getting smaller and dimmer vanishes in the general direction of the escort-ship.

‘I think Kookie should stay downstairs at the Dock to receive them, it would make sense like he’s reporting the latest developments, and Hoseok you go change Yoongi’s warrant and release terms.’

‘Got it,’ Hoseok replies as Jungkook adds, ‘Okay.’

‘We’re almost there~’

The escort-ship lights turn green for a fraction of a second, seemingly pausing mid-flight before continuing forward.

There’s no screaming, no shouting.

Nothing.

‘Okay it’s all clear.’ Jimin tells them with a small exhale.

Sk’jin doesn’t want to know or need to know the details.

‘Okay- for most of the part you can autopilot it to land~’

‘It’s okay. They will dock.’

‘Chim is controlling them!’ is Taeh’yung useful input.

‘I’m not controlling them~’

Sk’jin tunes them out in favor of Hoseok saying, ‘Okay- the permit has been transferred I’m going to the Deputy right now.’

‘Okay great,’ Sk’jin sighs, feeling like he’s aged a million years in just the past hour. ‘Fuck, can’t wait to not tell Namjoon any of this.’

*

Hoseok curls his shoulders in, hunching his back a little, and clutches his screen to his chest. The two agents Hoseok wants to very much indeed kick out of Māho-5 are apparently waiting

He knocks twice before the door slides open.
'Evdos, are you here to tell me about the permit regarding our Alliance prisoner?’ the Deputy asks, two of her eyes glancing at Hoseok.

‘Y-yes, I was-‘

‘No need for that, no one’s listening or here to hear it.’ Fanger says bluntly.

Hoseok has to take a moment to do some incredibly fast thinking.

‘Evdos was pretty evidently into some kinky shit and had no problem stopping an elevator out of nowhere to very boldly do something incredibly risky- his personality of being nervous was clearly a ruse-‘

‘It seems that the Alliance prisoner isn’t a member of the Alliance,’ Hoseok says, dropping the stutter, standing up straighter and making a motion of sweeping back his now honey-coloured hair. ‘There was apparently a mix-up at the Venture Unit- this is Agent Aydinliþ Şig. His mission was to infiltrate the Alliance.’

Deputy Fanger sighs, rolling all five eyes as Hoseok transfers the documents and warrants to her.

‘These fuckers mess up everything and don’t even realize the shit going on in Axudar,’ the Deputy drawls as she scrolls through without reading anything, ‘And the GLA has the gall to send us complaint reports about expending too many resources while I clean up the shit from Axudar for them. Assholes.’

Well, this was very interesting.

‘Assholes or not, they’re expecting us to release him,’ Hoseok throws in some irritation and impatience in his tone. ‘They’ve already changed the guard-ship to an escort-ship.’

‘Well that’s on them then- policy dictates we cannot release him unless it’s through Cuab-D2 but you know this.’

Hoseok just nods, pretending to scroll about on his (Evdos’s) screen. He spots a message waiting for him in one of the notification tabs but ignores it for now.

‘They want the Agent to be met with immediate compliance and release, as well as a redaction on his arrest from the Keep’s database,’ Hoseok rolls his eyes as well as he adds, ‘Idiot should have never just walked around without a care.’

‘Fine- we can take him out of the digitized-cell.’ Deputy Fanger exhales as though bored, ‘But no release. He’s already been registered for Cuab-D2, no chance in his release from us.’

‘Fuck- she’s right, fuck.’ Sk’jin curses. ‘I’ll find a way to rewrite that.’

‘You’ll take care of it of course?’

‘Of course,’ Hoseok sighs out.

‘If it’s going to impose a problem with the transfer-ship, of course we can always make some changes with some cost,’ the Deputy adds.

‘Well…this is interesting.’

‘That won’t be necessary,’ Hoseok states as dismissively as possible.
‘You might find something interesting with him, if he truly is an Agent for the Venture Unit,’ the Deputy continues, ‘Is that what this is?’

‘This is very interesting?’

‘You know I can’t say anything about it,’ Hoseok tries out, uselessly scrolling through his screen.

‘Fine,’ the Deputy rolls her eyes again, ‘I can practically sense those buffoons from the Venture Unit coming back to explain their mistakes. Go see to the Agent and explain the situation. If this is true then we can’t afford any cuts in our resources as a retaliation from the GLA or the Venture Unit.’

‘Got it,’ Hoseok nods, ‘I’ll bring him here? Might be better to hear it directly from the Deputy herself.’

‘I’m already on it, don’t have to tell me.’

Fanger gives him a snort, ‘A face to be angry at you mean- go on then Evdos, I know you have things to oversee.’

His screen rings up with an urgent message from the front desk, alerting him of the return of the agents from the Venture Unit.

Hoseok just shrugs with a lazy smile, ‘Should I send in the agents? They’re here.’

‘Oh yes, please do,’ Evdos grins widely, ‘Gotta get that Venture Unit units.’

Hoseok gives an appreciatively grin that he hopes is in character.

‘And bring the Agent while I grill those two idiots- he needs to witness the incompetence of his agency.’

Hoseok knows more than most about the incompetence of the Venture Unit. He was going to have to somehow warn Yoongi before hand on what was happening. After nodding at the Deputy’s request, Hoseok steps out.

‘Something’s up- I don’t know what, but something feels odd.’ Sk’jin says quietly. ‘I’m going through Deputy Fanger’s basic records right now- and for Evdos as well. So far everything is normal.’

‘Isn’t our fake identities normal too?’ Jimin asks.

‘Stop asking me uncomfortable questions Jimin.’

‘How’s Taeh’yung and Jimin?’ Hoseok asks instead as he walks up to the two agents, sweating and panting, panic clear in their features, clearly waiting for reprimand for their hasty actions for declaring an arrest of this scale.

It clearly was going to back-fire of them.

‘They’ve taken over the escort-ship,’ Sk’jin replies, ‘Don’t ask me for details.’

‘Hoseok, are you going to meet Yoongi now?’ Jimin asks.

‘Agents?’ Hoseok calls out nervously, ‘Uh- the Deputy would like to see you.’
They both gulp audibly, looking at each other nervously.

Not to judge, but Hoseok doesn’t think he’s ever been this nervous about anything before even as a rookie. Hoseok makes his way down to the station outside the holding cells of the Keep.

‘He’s going in a bit. I’ll tell you.’ Sk’jin says quietly before saying, ‘Fuck- it’s the Keep’s transfer laws- because Yoongi was already transferred over to Cuab-D2, unless we get them to make a statement we won’t be able to release Yoongi here.’

‘What do we do?’ Jungkook asks.

‘Does that mean we’re going to have to all go to jail? It’s kinda cool!’

The station is armed and manned completely. And technically, if Hoseok brings Yoongi out to this point, no restraints, Yoongi could 101% break out with no problem.

‘How long will it take to issue the release from Cuab-D2?’ Hoseok asks.

‘Finding out - one second- actually give me a billion seconds I’m exhausted-‘

Hoseok approaches the opening in the station and picks out an officer to address.

‘Um- I’m here for inmate 3589901- the uh, D-Deputy wants to see him.’ Hoseok stammers out, ignoring the second message pending for him on Evdos’s screen. It was clearly a personal line, and Hoseok wonders why you would mix personal and professional lines in this way.

‘We will bring him to the main interrogation room-‘ the officer begins, giving Evdos an unimpressed look.

‘Uh- it’s uh, his arrest has been revoked,’ Hoseok explains, showing him the screen with the doctored statement supposedly sent over by the Venture Unit.

The officer looks at the statement and then nods once.

‘He’s uh- he’s an Agent,’ Hoseok whispers, ‘He’s uh- VIB, please be careful.’

The officer sighs quietly before saying, ‘I will bring him to the Deputy.’

Great, Hoseok wouldn’t be able to speak to Yoongi until they bring him into Fanger’s office.

‘Hobi I have both good news and bad news.’ Sk’jin sighs. ‘The permit of release from Cuab-D2 will take 1 standard week. But if we submit our permits and release forms via the escort-ship crew, we don’t have to step into Cuab’s borders.’

‘What does that mean?’ Jungkook asks.

‘It means we take Yoongi out with the transfer-ship, go into the transfer-ship with the escort-ship, and before we enter Cuab’s borders, we can leave without even setting foot inside Cuab.’

‘…I uh, don’t understand can you explain again Jinnie?’ Taeh’yung asks sheepishly.

‘Spaces- okay so we have to get this escort-ship into the transfer-ship inside the Keep so that we have a way of getting Yoongi out.’ Sk’jin explains, ‘You and Jimin just leave them as they are, if that’s possible, and come back. We can follow them-‘

‘-we can stay inside the escort-ship,’ Taeh’yung says excitedly, ‘It’s big enough!’
‘I—okay I see the advantages in that.’

‘Also Jiminie can’t do anything if the escort-ship with our buddies go into warp!’

‘Well fuck okay then—’

Hoseok goes back to Evdos’s designated cubicle. It’s a neat space, without a lot of embellishments or items. It’s surprisingly bare.

‘Just a heads up- Yoongi is out of the holding cells. He’s coming down to the main area,’ Sk’jin informs him, sounding distracted.

‘Okay, thanks,’ Hoseok sighs out quietly.

‘Couldn’t Yoongi just bust out now- I mean, let’s face it- it’ll be easier.’

‘Sure,’ Hoseok agrees, ‘But it’s too loud. It’s too…- there’s a lot that can go wrong by doing something like that. It’ll be too public.’

‘More public than all of our faces being up on a criminal list?’

‘I think this goes more than that to be honest,’ Hoseok says quietly before he spots Yoongi.

‘Let’s hope Yoongi knows what to do.’

‘He will,’ Hoseok says firmly.

Upon entering the main office, Hoseok notices how the whole collective of staff seem to be visibly uncomfortable and scared.

‘He looks tired,’ is Jimin’s quiet comment.

Hoseok makes his way towards the officer guiding Yoongi in.

Tacking on a nervous smile and shuffling forward, Hoseok awkwardly gestures to Yoongi to follow him in.

Yoongi scans him head to foot, his eyes incredibly impassive. Hoseok’s not sure why but he’s never noticed the way Yoongi’s cheeks seemed to be sunken in, the grey under his eyes prominent. Or maybe the stark bruises all over his throat and wrists were just highlighting how worn out Yoongi looked.

‘U-uh, in-inmate 3589901 p-please enter,’ Hoseok stammers as awkwardly and nervously as he can while glancing inside the office.

Yoongi just looks at him, no expression or feeling in his actions or movement.

The Deputy glances at Yoongi quickly, assessing him. The two agents are incredibly anxious and Hoseok can only guess how the Deputy grilled them.

‘Inmate 3589901,’ the Deputy greets bluntly despite knowing Yoongi’s supposed real name, all eyes focused down on the screen before her. ‘It seems like there have been some problems.’

Yoongi’s entire demeanor shifts just a little. He raises a single eyebrow as though in question.

‘Please address him by his official given title Deputy,’ one of the agents requests, a sort of pleading expression on his face as he nods at Yoongi.

‘Inmate 3589901 Agent Aydinliş Şig,’ the Deputy could definitely be annoying when she wanted, ‘It appears that we have been most unfortunate in disrupting your mission issued by the Venture Unit.’

Yoongi blinks a few times.

‘I do not have the authority to discuss my mission,’ Yoongi states gruffly.

‘Yes well, how convenient,’ the Deputy drawls.

The two agents are practically vibrating with anxiety.

‘We have tried out best, Agent Şig,’ one of them blurts out, definitely breaking protocol here and there with the blatant way they were addressing Yoongi as a definite undercover agent. They were both definitely going to fail and probably imprisoned for this breach. If it was real. They would be imprisoned however, because in the end they did set free a wanted Being but that would probably be for later and Hoseok feels tired.

‘But we’re afraid that due to the uh, warrant that was released, we cannot set aside the arrest unless it’s on Cuab-D2. We are very sorry-’

‘-please take this apology nonsense somewhere else,’ the Deputy interrupts, ‘We will be doing our part that was expected of us when the arrest was first warranted and will be delivering Inmate 3589901 Agent Aydinliş Şig to Cuab-D2 and all authority that was granted unto me will be forfeit thereof.’

Yoongi eyes the agents who have stood up, analyzing their appearances carefully. Good. Yoongi was definitely catching on that they were up to this.

‘As expected of the Deputy,’ Yoongi sounds different, ‘I am relieved to find that the mission is not entirely compromised but my going to Cuab-D2 will delay my work. I don’t think I need to mention how that paperwork will go.’

‘You don’t need to,’ the Deputy yawns before nodding at Hoseok, ‘Evdos will take care of it.’

The look Yoongi gives him is of pure pity and Hoseok is somewhat incredibly proud of himself for being able to so wholeheartedly throw someone like Yoongi off.

‘And who the fuck had my ID warranted?’ Yoongi rounds up against the two agents, irritation evident in his features.

‘We-! We’re sorry Agent Şig,’ one of the agents stammers, ‘But we- we received an updated list after the Pompen Area was exposed- we- uh-we were not made aware of uh- the level of your mission.’

The Venture Unit was doomed.

‘How long until we’re leaving?’ Yoongi grumbles.

‘The transfer-ship will leave in-?’ the Deputy redirects the question at Hoseok.

‘-fuck, 94 minutes-‘

‘-at! In uh, 94 minutes ma’am!’
'In 94 minutes,' the Deputy parrots. ‘Then you all can do whatever you want. Evdos take the Inmate 3589901 Agent Aydinlişt Şig to the waiting facilities—'

‘-he’s not a prisoner you must—'

‘-no agents, you must make sure that I receive the standard payment for hosting this clumsy fool who thought he could just waltz into my Dock and not know about the fuck-up of his own agency,’ the Deputy looks delighted, ‘-so sit back down. We’re here to discuss payment.’

The agents give Yoongi a pleading look, clearly aware of their most unfortunate fate awaiting them. Hoseok would feel bad but honestly at this point he’s somewhat numbed.

Yoongi does an excellent job at feigning (?) irritation and scoffs under his breath, turning away from the two agents that have honestly caused them all so many problems.

Hoseok guides Yoongi out, keeping himself hunched and stammering out, ‘Uh- uh, his uh, cuffs—‘

The officer clearly suspects Yoongi, not moving for a while but undoing his cuffs anyways.

Hoseok could roll his eyes at the stare-down they suddenly have.

Yoongi’s almost black-brown eyes are dull and seemed to hold a darkness that definitely sends a chill down Hoseok’s spine. And understandably, the officer flinches, looking away and his hand twitching as though to grab the stun-set TeorSer at his hip.

Right, time to change topics and get things moving.

‘We-we are very sorry- uh, the Deputy is a busy person and uh, needs to consider a lot-‘ Hoseok tells Yoongi as they start walking. ‘-we are so sorry- we were not aware- I mean how could we be- of your mission with—‘ Hoseok really pours the acting into his actions and words, ‘-the Alliance-!

We are so sorry to have disturbed you and caused this issue by arresting you mid-mission – you must be so—‘

Yoongi’s eyes are slightly glazed over, like he was bored, or was thinking of something else. And Hoseok can’t have that.

‘-and we’re so sorry we couldn’t let you go at once!’ He pushes, a little louder, ‘We tried our best! But our only option is to simply send you to Cuab-D2 but you will immediately released! Your agency will be sending in agents to guide you through the process.’

Yoongi glances back at him a little.

‘When will they be here?’ the Human asks.

‘Please tell Yoongi to get some sleep,’ Jimin says quietly, ‘He will understand.’

‘What?’

‘I can explain to him- just tell him please—‘

‘U-uh, they should be at the transfer-ship when you get there!’ Hoseok purposefully fumble-drops his screen in his hands, keeping Yoongi’s attention focused. ‘Again we are very sorry!’

They reach the station outside the holding cells and the officer steps in first, saying something to the officers inside. Yoongi is about to go in as well, and Hoseok calls him quickly.
‘Uh-agent Şig!’

Yoongi looks back, eyebrow raised.

‘I hope you can catch some sleep at least,’ Hoseok intones carefully, allowing the smallest shift.

The look of realization in Yoongi’s eyes is a delight to see, and as quick as it came, disappears behind a mask of uncanny indifference.

Hoseok scrambles back towards his office, ignoring the now call on Evdos’s screen.

‘Is that a call?’
‘Yeah?’
‘Okay.’
‘…okay?’
‘Yeap. Can you patch me through to that screen’s server?’

‘Didn’t I already?’ Hoseok asks in reply as he sets the screen down, while pulling out the smaller NaviLet Jungkook had brought over with him. ‘Connecting again.’

‘Thanks Evdos.’

‘This is exhausting,’ Hoseok sighs, straightening his back.

‘Yes, and technically you don’t have to be there anymore so be on brand and go philander with Jungkook.’ Sk’jin orders.

The line crackles with Taeh’yung’s high-pitched snort.

* *

Jungkook is just Being-watching from inside one of the empty storage-units above the main Dock when Hoseok reappears.

It’s more than a little odd seeing Hoseok in this disguise. The whole thing is fascinating and also terrifying. And while Hoseok could definitely not change his height, it was as though he knew how to carry himself and change his posture to basically fit into different heights and sizes.

Jungkook wonders if Hoseok would be able to change his appearance to completely match Sk’jin’s if he tried.

‘Hey Kook- everything okay? No one stopped by?’ Hoseok asks, voice shifting between his own and Evdos’s.

‘It was okay,’ Jungkook affirms. Sk’jin had scanned the place but Jungkook found this tucked away storage space, following his nose. The room in here smelled more like cleaning agents, chemicals, the cold of space seeping in through the Atmoshield and into the foundations of this Dock.
‘Okay great,’ Hoseok sighs, peering out of the narrow window for a second before unbuttoning his closely fitted uniform and exhaling as though relieved.

Jungkook has watched Hoseok change today more than he has in the duration of knowing him but this time it’s slightly unsettling because of what happened last time.

Jungkook does not ever want a repeat of what happened before and now that he’s had time to think about it, will probably have to talk to Taeh’yung about it.

Or at least ask Sk’jin to talk to Taeh’yung about it.

‘Okay- Jimin and Taeh’yung are stalling the ship so that Sk’jin can take the Laikin into the escort-ship,’ Hoseok repeats out loud. Maybe it helped him focus on the many things he needed to sort out and see through.

Sk’jin was mostly quiet after asking Hoseok to reconnect.

‘We’ll wait for them to come in, and we go as agents again,’ Hoseok concludes.

‘Yoongi was okay?’ Jungkook asks.

‘He didn’t seem too bad,’ Hoseok says after a moments pause, rolling up his sleeves. ‘Tired I think.’

Jungkook nods.

Yoongi has always appeared tired to Jungkook.

‘Okay we will need to get the transfer-ship to take in the escort-ship,’ Hoseok mutters, maybe more to himself than anything else. ‘This shouldn’t be too difficult- I’ll just allow the request as Evdos- the Deputy doesn’t seem to really bother too much.’

‘A lot of power,’ Jungkook remarks.

‘Yeah I guess,’ Hoseok says absentmindedly before propping up Evdos’s screen on the low table. His face was an unsettling combination of Evdos’s and his own and Jungkook doesn’t really know where to look. ‘Okay I’ve cleared the escort-ship, Jimin could you check and confirm the approval?’

‘I’m on it!’ Taeh’yung replies instead, ‘Jiminie is asleep.’

‘Ah- well, okay,’ Hoseok kinda shrugs, accepting the answer.

‘He’ll be up soon I think.’ Taeh’yung adds, ‘Okay- I’ve accepted the permit Hobi!’

‘Thanks buggy,’ Hoseok quickly scrolls down the screen, tapping along the surface before a tiny projection of a typer spreads out across the surface of the table.

Hoseok starts to quickly tap, fingers fast, pausing momentarily here and there to squint at the screen. This goes on for a while until Hoseok quietly exclaims under his breath.

‘Okay- I’ve secured the permission for the transfer-ship to accept the escorts,’ Hoseok reports, ‘Sk’jin, are you almost in?’

‘Uh huh,’ is Sk’jin’s somewhat distracted reply.
‘What do we do now?’ Jungkook asks quietly.

‘We’re going to have to wait for Jimin and Taeh’yung to bring the escort-ship in, then we go in to talk,’ Hoseok explains before he sinks down on the ground with a slight groan. His face is almost entirely his own now.

‘Is it tiring?’ Jungkook asks curiously.

‘What is?’ Hoseok blinks as though a little confused.

‘Changing, shifting,’ Jungkook clarifies.

‘It is in a strange sense,’ Hoseok answers easily, ‘When you’re you, right now, do you think about how you appear?’

‘Uh- no?’ Jungkook replies hesitantly.

‘Generally speaking- most Beings are not aware of themselves, the space they occupy, the lights and shadows that create them, that shape them and form them,’ Hoseok tells him slowly, ‘They have an idea of who they are- and there’s the idea of who they appear to be, depending on where they are.’

Jungkook nods hesitantly, seeing a slight similarity in what Hoseok was saying with what Yoongi had once told him.

‘But with us, with other Ngfy’widans, we don’t have that- we have no permanent shape or form-light and shadow is different for us- not for illumination purposes I guess,’ Hoseok makes himself more comfortable, leaning back against the wall. Jungkook crouches down as well, arms crossing over his mid-riff. ‘A lot of Beings say we shift, but I’d say we imitate. The louder you are, the brighter you are, the starker you are, the better we can impersonate you.’ Hoseok chuckles a little, ‘It’s why imitating Evdos was easy.’

‘Who would be difficult to imitate?’ Jungkook asks eagerly.

‘Yoongi,’ Hoseok says at once, ‘There’s nothing of him I can take.’

‘Who would be easiest?’

Hoseok laughs before he thoughtfully says, ‘I can’t choose- you’re all difficult to imitate I would say. Maybe Sk’jin though.’

‘I resent that you fiend.’

Jungkook suppresses his giggle while Hoseok rolls his eyes.

‘Jiminnie is awake!’ Taeh’yung announces.

‘Hey,’ Hoseok greets before adding tentatively, ‘Is everything okay?’

‘I’ve told Yoongi everything,’ Jimin informs them, ‘He knows everything now.’

‘All right that’s great,’ Sk’jin doesn’t exactly sound convincing. ‘Can you guys open the hangar gates for me quickly. Please make sure you’ve remembered to cut the live feed of any cameras inside the ship.’

‘Jinnie!’ Taeh’yung gasps as though affronted, ‘It’s like you don’t know me!’
‘Can you see?’ Hoseok asks out of nowhere.

‘See what?’

‘Taeh’yung,’ Hoseok clarifies, ‘Can you see all of him?’

‘Not always,’ Jungkook replies truthfully. ‘Sometimes I can see more, sometimes I can’t see any.’

Hoseok nods to that in understanding, looking thoughtful before he grins.

‘Actually,’ Hoseok chuckles a bit, ‘Namjoon would be easy.’

Jungkook grins at that.

‘Quite easy,’ Hoseok adds with a laugh.

‘Do you sometimes forget?’ Jungkook asks, ‘Uh- right now you’re just a mix – is that because you’re not concentrating?’

Hoseok nods, ‘It’s not physically tiring but it is draining in a strange way- you get used to it.’ He rearranges his legs, stretching his arms in front of him. He looks comically disproportioned with some of his features settling back to his own form. Hoseok wasn’t a very large person- he didn’t quite occupy space the way Namjoon or Sk’jin did. He wasn’t slender and lithe like Jimin.

‘Sometimes you forget, if you stay changed too long,’ Hoseok tells him, ‘It’s difficult to know who you really are, and when you need to change all of who you are all the time- sometimes you lose your face, you can’t remember.’

Jungkook remembers when he and his siblings would line up in front of any smooth reflective surface, looking at their faces and giggling at certain features. Sometimes his own reflection would blur, just outlines and forms smudged and erased- Jungkook doesn’t really remember what he looked like as a child.

‘Has that happened to you?’

Hoseok nods.

‘Did you remember?’

‘Sometimes it’s better to forget,’ Hoseok tells him with a shrug, slowly rubbing his hands together, ‘Sometimes it’s easier.’

‘Okay,’ Jungkook says quietly, understanding that there was something more Hoseok was saying in this moment.

‘Can you try to really do me?’ Jungkook asks, leaning in eagerly.

Hoseok grins before he gestures to Jungkook to sit closer.

‘It’s always harder, when you know the Being,’ Hoseok tells him, studying him closer. ‘It’s like what almost every culture, every planet, every Being says- first impression matters.’

‘What do you mean?’

‘When you saw Jimin for the first time,’ Hoseok says as he reaches up to feel at Jungkook’s cheeks and jaw, ‘What did you think?’
Jungkook thinks hard, trying to put to words everything that was going on in that dark wet cave he was imprisoned in for so many years.

‘Like sunlight,’ Jungkook replies honestly, ‘After the rain.’

Hoseok smiles at that, a strange blurring movement rippling over his skin.

It’s incredibly unsettling, watching Hoseok’s face deform- watching him grow into an incredibly unnerving and passable imitation of himself.

Jungkook exhales out, wondrous.

Seeing himself like this- it’s strange.

‘Hey,’ Hoseok says, sounding like what Jungkook guesses is his voice. But the smile he has is without a doubt, Hoseok’s own.

‘It’s strange,’ Jungkook whispers, ‘Strange.’

Hoseok, with Jungkook’s face grins and shrugs.

‘Wow,’ Jungkook breathes out again, reaching forward to touch at the red skin under Hoseok’s eyes.

‘It’s like you’re finding yourself handsome,’ Hoseok laughs, sounding like himself, his skin rippling again.

‘Is that what I look like?’ Jungkook asks.

Hoseok massages his face, as though quickening the process.

‘Yes?’ Hoseok replies, ‘Why?’

Jungkook just shakes his head.

‘Okay we’re in and settled,’ Sk’jin reports. ‘Hoseok?’

‘Yeah- we’re moving,’ Hoseok replies, standing up and peeking out of the narrow window. ‘You should be all clear to come in.’

‘Have you spoken to the Beings inside the transfer-ship?’

‘Not directly- the transactions based on what I’ve seen have all been through permits, reports, and other transactions between the Keep and the transfer-ship.’ Hoseok replies before adding, ‘I think this time it would be good if I go with Jungkook as Evdos again-’

‘-uh, no, go as the your first disguise.’ Sk’jin cuts through.

‘Wouldn’t it be better to go as Evdos?’ Hoseok frowns, pausing as he unrolls his sleeves, face shifting. ‘He was clearly headed for the transfer-ship before he well-’

‘-wanted to jump Jungkook?’

Hoseok gives him an apologetic look.

‘Yeah, well, I’m giving you my executive advise and saying go as your first disguise. It also makes sense that you two would come down to check on the escort-ship.’ Sk’jin explains lightly.

Hoseok looks like he’s doing some fast thinking before he says, ‘All right. Jungkook- can you give me the other clothes?’

‘Thank Spaces you’re not Namjoon,’ Sk’jin sighs out. ‘Okay, Jimin and Taeh’yung are coming back in. We’ll be staying put in here if you need us.’

‘Got it- and just to be safe, can you send those two rookie agents like some sort of assignment- they might try to overcompensate and try to come check up on the transfer-ship or some shit.’

‘Got it. Oh and Yoongi is being moved now.’

‘Okay great,’ Hoseok is careful not to tear or rumple Evdos’s clothes as he changes. ‘We’ll need to go back and set him back up again. Gonna be hard to explain.’

‘Uh- will he be all right?’ Jungkook asks, not sure how much strength he had really used to knock out the poor Being.

‘He’ll have a headache,’ Hoseok tells him, ‘Might be pissed. But we’ll be long gone and you won’t look exactly like that anymore.’

Jungkook touches his face, remembering the light disguise he wore.

‘Is this much really enough?’

‘You’ll be surprised how effective the smallest change can be,’ Hoseok says as he starts pulling on the skirt again, nearly losing balance in the process, ‘Fuck I hate skirts.’

‘You look great in them.’

‘Fuck off Khol’isa.’

Evdos is still very much indeed unconscious and would remain unconscious for a lot, according to Hoseok who had take the opportunity to very quickly swipe at some questionable medical supplies he mixed around and shot into Evdos’s arm. They quickly dress him and try to keep make him as comfortable in this random storage unit. Jungkook apologetically pats what is undoubtedly going to be a very sore head before leaving the space.

‘Okay- same tactic,’ Hoseok tells Jungkook as they walk out into the Hangar where the massive transfer-ship loomed seemingly all around them. ‘Follow my lead, we’ll be okay.’

‘We’re coming in as well,’ Sk’jin reports as they head downwards to the main docking bay.

Right at the entrance, the blue of the Atmoshield gleaming at them, a sizeable ship enters.

‘We see you,’ Hoseok replies as they take an easy pace downwards, ‘All smooth?’

‘As smooth as my face.’

They step down onto the main docking zone towards the massive ship. Hoseok’s shoes echo through the massive Hangar.

‘It’s kinda empty isn’t it?’ Taeh’yung comments.

It was empty, Jungkook notes to himself as he glances around. Hoseok doesn’t comment though, just walking straight to the transfer-ship. When they’re close enough, one of the smaller gateway entrances open next to the halfway lowered ramp leading into a very big space from what Jungkook can tell.

Standing at the gateway is what appeared to be some sort of officer within the transfer-ship. He’s quite tall, with dark green hair that’s incredibly long and intricately braided past his waist. His uniform is well pressed and neat, fitting him in a way that makes Jungkook highly aware of his own not quite excellent fitting uniform.

‘Good day,’ Hoseok calls curtly, standing to his full height and managing to look down at the much taller officer waiting for them. ‘I am Officer Jeong and this is Officer Heenum from the Venture Unit Networking Division. We are here to oversee the transfer procedure regarding Agent Aydınliş Şig and his false arrest.’

‘I am Officer Camil. We were expecting you,’ the officer nods as he holds up his screen with his almost fragile looking 4 fingered hands. At this proximity Jungkook notes how his wide eyes are a complex and ever-moving combination of green, yellow, and brown, ‘We assumed you would be taking him yourselves without the need to go to Cuab-D2.’

‘If we could we would,’ Hoseok explains as he holds up their identification tabs to be scanned into the system. ‘Apparently Māho-5 wants to make this more complicated than it needs to be.’

The officer laughs, displaying a neat double row of sharp teeth, quickly studying the IDs that were scanned. Clearly it passes through whatever check and the officer steps aside. ‘The escort-ship has been docked in the inner Transport Dock. I will be taking you there.’

‘Much appreciated,’ Hoseok replies, following in the officer.

The gateway opens to a simple antechamber with seats lining up the walls. Camil, their guide, leads them past it and into another longer chamber also lined up with seats. This seemed completely normal as Hoseok doesn’t seem to be too bothered.

‘Will you wish to lodge in our living quarters for the trip?’ Camil asks as they walk down the antechamber. Jungkook notices how it’s quite well organized and neat. There were other doorways leading in and out, making Jungkook suspect this was a frequented hallway that connected them to different areas of access across the massive transfer-ship.

It’s very empty.

‘I believe we have some issues to go over with the escort team,’ Hoseok replies as though irritated in advance. ‘Not to mention documenting this mess.’

‘I’m sure Māho-5 would be more than happy to arrange whatever you need from their side.’

‘I’m sure,’ Hoseok replies disdainfully.

They arrive to a large lobby, several floors high and several down, all connected via trams and a few escalators crossing over open space.

‘This is one of our main hubs,’ Camil tells them. ‘As the ship is quite large, we will need to take a tram to the inner Transport Dock.’

Hoseok only nods to that, glancing around uninterestedly.

Jungkook doesn’t know why but he finds it unsettling that such a massive space would have so little Beings around.

So far, Jungkook has not come across a single Being.

While living conditions in Ynqaba were not ideal, and after he was captured he was forced into isolation, Jungkook was still very much indeed exposed to a few Beings here and there. Prisons or places of capture always had some form of patrol, watch-guards, that sort of thing.

So far Jungkook hasn’t even heard or sensed other Beings here.

And with a ship this large, surely, there should be a whole plethora of Beings. Even Grisial was jam packed at the docks or terminals they used to fly by.

Jungkook wishes he could ask questions but that would give them away. Was this normal? It didn’t feel normal.

‘Okay we’re getting the 72-0 tram,’ Camil tells them as they stop near a wide platform before saying, ‘Oh yes, I can transfer you the details of the tram network so that you can access all of our routes. For communication purposes, the public channel is open for you to use as you please.’

‘Thank you. Isn’t the tram network a part of the public channel?’ Hoseok asks.

‘It is, but the passes are not I’m afraid,’ Camil smiles ruefully.

Something about this makes Jungkook incredibly wary.

Hoseok simply nods, holding out his screen.

Camil nods graciously, his hair falling gracefully. Jungkook is strangely reminded of Sk’jin when he put on his charming hospitable persona.

Jungkook glances around as Hoseok and Camil discuss the public channel. He looks up at the massive space overhead, trying to gouge out why he felt uncomfortable.

The quiet humming of a tram approaching alerts Jungkook and he goes to stand back next to Hoseok.

‘Even though you’re only staying for a short period of time,’ Camil continues to say, this time nodding in a friendly manner at Jungkook, ‘I hope your stay here will be comfortable.’

‘That’s very kind of you,’ Hoseok states in monotone.

The tram doors open and it’s already occupied with 7 other Beings, similarly dressed as Camil.

Hoseok and Jungkook politely wait for them to exit but they don’t. Instead Camil gestures them inside.

‘Hoseok,’ Sk’jin sounds terse. ‘Something is wrong.’

Hoseok doesn’t seem fazed but simply walks inside.

‘Jungkook- be careful.’ Both Sk’jin and Jimin warn him before Sk’jin adds on. ‘They’re attempting to conduct a search inside the ship. But Jimin is handling that.’

Jungkook walks in last. The tram is quite spacy, with seating arrangements lining up the walls and slim narrow windows extending a little over the sloped roof down to the floor. There are hand-rails and aisle-poles down the tram walkway. Hoseok is shown to one of the seats, between two other seated officers.

Everyone seemed normal enough, giving them both simple nods in greeting. Someone waves casually at Camil who gives them a small smile and nod.

Everything seemed incredibly normal.

‘This tram system reminds me of the trams inside the GUI mothership,’ Hoseok states randomly, making Camil do a brief double-take as though in surprise. ‘I quite prefer trams over lifts.’

‘Oh yes,’ Camil nods as the tram makes a clear beeping sound to alert the sounds of the doors closing.

‘I get to sit,’ Hoseok lets out a small laugh, ‘These are not the most comfortable.’ He taps his feet, forehead pinched slightly as though pained before leaning forward just as the tram moves forward.

Hoseok jolts in his seat, misbalanced and unceremoniously falling onto the officer to his right with a sound of surprise.

‘Ah, are you okay-‘

Camil’s eyes narrow, and in that moment Jungkook knows that they know.

‘Jungkook get ready-‘

Hoseok moves faster than Jungkook could have anticipated.

The Ngfy’widan lets his elbow fly, hitting the officer he had fallen against straight under their chin before rolling forward over their knees and landing on the floor.

Jungkook feels an attempt of restraints being pushed around him and for a brief moment, a wave of intense anger rushes him, flashes of collars being forced around his throat.

The spot on his head flares in heat and his vision spikes, turning sharp and hazy all at the same time.

With a loud snarl, Jungkook twists out of the restraints, snapping the magnetic bands before they lock into him. Someone attempts to jump on him but Jungkook throws them off, meeting the full swing of a baton to his thigh with full force.

It hurts but Jungkook doesn’t fall, instead grabbing the hand that held it and yanking the bearer forward, head-butting them with a resounding thud and throwing in a repeated and fast flurry of punches for good. Practically carrying their immediately unconscious form, Jungkook tosses them at Camil who is kicked back by a head-locked Hoseok. Camil falls back immediately and before Jungkook can get to Hoseok he’s waylaid by 2 others.

He blocks an incoming baton with his arm, using the momentum to redirect it before pushing his attacker down to the floor and rolling away to a crouch.

He leaps, following what felt right as he shifts weight, his feet kicking out to make contact with his oncoming attackers chest.

They crash down and Jungkook twists away, turning his fall to cushion his fall before he leaps up again, grabbing the aisle-poles and swinging himself around to vault through the long tram, aiming straight for Camil who was just standing.

Hoseok flings his restraining attacker over his back, grappling her back down heavily and knocking her out instantly as Jungkook crashes into Camil, rolling with him until he’s sitting on his chest. Jungkook hears Hoseok taking on the last remaining officer with ease.

Camil is very dazed and closing in on unconsciousness. Jungkook decides to help him achieve that unconsciousness.

‘Jungkook get his Comm-Device-!’ Sk’jin orders at once, ‘Both of you hide at once get out of the tram.’

‘Fuck-‘ Hoseok hisses, his face shifting as he makes quick work of the unconscious Beings around them and grabbing their screens as well as smashing Comm-Devices under his heel.

‘How did they know?’ Jungkook asks, as he takes out the Comm-Device from Camil’s ear and hands it to Hoseok who quickly twists off the outgoing signal.

‘I think there’s something else going on,’ Sk’jin tells them quickly, ‘Something’s up- I can’t rightly figure it out every single document and procedure is correct and legal and there’s nothing wrong that I can tell-‘

‘Can you scan this place? Blueprint?’ Hoseok asks, glancing out of the flashing windows.

‘It’s too secure- I can’t do it without accessing a main port manually. If you can bring their Comm-Device here I think we can-‘

‘All right- we’ll come over,’ Hoseok says as he looks around the tram, ‘I think it’s fair enough to say that we will have a waiting party for us-‘

‘Yoongi’s being brought in,’ Sk’jin says hastily, ‘Fuck- fuck something’s really up. There should always be more officers and security when transporting prisoners like this.’

‘Kookie, grab their uniforms,’ Hoseok orders as he eyes the unconscious officers, ‘Find someone your size.’

Jungkook quickly strips Camil of his uniform, internally apologizing.

‘These are not-‘ Sk’jin genuinely sounds panicked. ‘Hoseok I don’t understand what’s happening. These are clearly not just prisoners. I can’t see what’s going on inside the ship, but I- these are not…I don’t think we’re inside a transfer-ship. I think we just- I think we’ve made a mistake.’

Hoseok doesn’t say anything, quickly removing his clothes.

‘Kook, we’re going to have to jump out of the tram before we get to the other platform,’ Hoseok says, eyeing Camil’s screen with the tram-network. They were closing in on a platform. ‘Will you be okay to jump?’

Jungkook nods, kicking off his trousers quickly.

‘Sk’jin, you guys stay put. The escorts should just behave normally- have they tried to inspect the ship again?’

‘We said they don’t have the permission to do so,’ Sk’jin replies quickly, ‘They might try to take us on by force but we could continue to hide.’
‘Can you do something about this Jimin?’ Hoseok asks.

‘It’s too many,’ Jimin replies helplessly, ‘Too many and- it won’t last long. Long enough. I’m sorry.’ He adds in quietly wretched tone.

‘It’s okay, it’s okay,’ Hoseok says quickly, ‘You’re right it’s too many Beings.’

‘What about Yoongi?’ Jungkook asks as he buttons his shirt up.

It’s very well fitting.

‘Fuck,’ Hoseok breathes under his breath, closing his eyes shut for a second before he says, ‘Right now we need to get out of this tram.’

Jungkook follows Hoseok to the end of the tram and he crouches down, slamming down the baton over a seemingly flat latch on the ground and making it pop up. Pulling it up, Hoseok reveals a small step and beyond it a blurred stretch of wires and tracks.

‘Okay this is good,’ Hoseok tells him, fully opening the latch. Someone groans. ‘There’s handles down on the side, make yourself as straight as possible and then let go, cushion your head.’

Jungkook nods, trying not to think too much about it.

‘It will probably hurt,’ Hoseok tells him, ‘But I’ll be there, a bit further okay?’

Jungkook nods.

‘Please be careful,’ Jimin tells them.

The air gets knocked out of Jungkook’s lungs the moment he lands heavily over lengths of wires and tracks. His senses are a little delayed and it takes him a moment to observe around him. The air is thinner here and it’s much colder as well.

His body hurts but it’s nothing too bad. Keeping an ear out for any approaching trams, Jungkook sits up quickly and begins sprinting across the track.

He finds Hoseok a minute later, still disoriented and wheezing. Jungkook picks him up and brings them to the side of the dark tunnels. A tram rushes past in a flurry of lights, wind, and sound.

‘Fuck- that hurt,’ Hoseok wheezes, eying him widely as he adds, ‘the M’hanun really are something else aren’t they.’

‘The ship is getting ready to leave. I don’t know what will happen in the tunnels you two but you need to find a place that will secure you when we hit warp.’ Sk’jin warns sharply.

‘There has to be a maintenance shed or unit somewhere,’ Hoseok says, shaking his head, blinking furiously, ‘Let’s go.’

They move quickly.

Hoseok’s sight is weaker than Jungkook so he takes the lead through the pitch darkness. The tunnels ring ominously time to time and they pause a few times, pressing close to the walls as another tram blasts past them.

In the dim Jungkook makes out a narrow doorway.
'Ready?' Hoseok asks breathlessly.

Jungkook nods.

It’s a manual door and Jungkook and Hoseok shoulder their way through in one go. Hoseok nearly loses balance as they step in to an unlit maintenance station.

‘You’ll have to move quickly- you can’t stay inside, they’ll trace the available entrances from that tram route.’ Sk’jin warns them as they quickly rush to the seats lined up on the side. It takes a few tries before they’re able to pull down the unused and old seats.

They manage to secure themselves in just in time.

The next 20 seconds or so are incredibly loud with how quiet it is, only Jungkook’s pulse interjecting the swelling silence with a steady pulse.

‘We’re out of warp.’

Hoseok lets out a deep breath as though finally allowing himself a short reprieve.

‘What do we do?’ Jungkook asks Hoseok, feeling a dreaded sense of hopelessness at the sudden strangeness of their situation.

‘We make our way to Sk’jin and the others,’ Hoseok tells him quietly as they unstrap themselves from the chairs. ‘We stay low. Keep your hair down.’

Jungkook nods, shaking his hair to fall more around his face. Hoseok goes through Camil’s screen, pulling up a map.

‘Can’t they track screens and other devices though?’ Jimin asks tentatively.

‘I’ve disconnected from the servers,’ Hoseok replies as he traces a path with his finger, ‘If you’re off-grid, it’s a whole lot more difficult to find a screen like this quickly. But don’t worry, we’re leaving this behind. I’m trying to find a route we can take without passing through too many open spaces.’

‘Is there a way the tunnels would connect you faster?’ Taeh’yung inquires. ‘You could hide better too? I remember sneaking into the GIU mothership and just living in their transit-tunnels for a few weeks.’

There’s a very loud pause.

‘You what now?’

‘I stayed in one of the GIU mothership transit-tunnels for a few weeks?’

‘Why?!’

‘I got a bit lost! And there were some interesting Beings meeting up in there all the time. Got to listen in on a lot of stuff.’

‘When was this?’

‘Uhhhhhhhhhhhhhhhhhhhhhhhhhhhhhhhhhhhhhh-’ Taeh’yung drawls out for an obnoxiously long stretch of time, ‘I think like 15 centuries ago? Or—-wait, that wasn’t me.’
‘...okay?’

‘We could actually do that,’ Hoseok says under his breath, using two fingers to spin the layout into a 3D plan. The access tunnels are very small- and I don’t think they’re necessarily aired either. It would be difficult fitting Jungkook through them.’

‘What if we take this route and come out to this lobby?’ Jungkook asks, reaching over to poke the map as well.

‘This would work but we would have to cross over here,’ Hoseok points at a part of the map, ‘And I think this is where a check-point should normally be- see this?’ Jungkook leans in. ‘A crossway like this normally means an armed check-point with barriers especially in prisons, very easily triggered if you don’t have the correct passes.’

‘Then what about through this?’ Jungkook asks, eyes following a corridor.

‘Can you two please just move,’ Sk’jin groans, ‘You’re both sitting varaks at this point!’

‘What’s a varak-’

‘It’s a metaphor-’

‘This is Suga,’ Yoongi suddenly says through the Camil’s Comm-Device making Jungkook and Hoseok nearly jump out of their skins, ‘I have spoken to the authorities of this operation and have come to a deal regarding our safety and travel.’

‘Yoongi has just contacted us,’ Hoseok reports at once, pulling out the Comm-Device from his pocket and twisting it on to send out signals before holding it up close to his own.

‘What-?!’

‘No offence, how do we know this is actually Suga,’ Hoseok asks, his voice disguised.

‘I like tea,’ is the reply they get.

‘For fuck’s sake-’ Sk’jin complains but there’s a palpable relief in his voice.

‘Understood. Where and when do we meet?’ Hoseok asks smoothly.

‘Lobby 3 of the 5th Hull.’ An unknown voice replies.

‘Understood.’ Hoseok quickly changes the map, skimming through the tabs to find the mentioned level.

‘Please don’t carry any weapons on you,’ another voice adds.

Hoseok rolls his eyes.

‘We’re here,’ Hoseok indicates to the map, ‘This is Lobby 3 in the 5th Hull.’

‘That’s far from us,’ Sk’jin remarks before adding, ‘Fuck- they know everything about us then. But this doesn’t make sense- it would be easier to just kill Yoongi or not even allow him to talk to us.’

‘Well it seems we have no choice,’ Hoseok sighs out as he stands up properly, his form shifting to a Being Jungkook doesn’t recognize. ‘I would still rather not go as me if I can help it.’
‘We don’t know who we’re up against,’ Sk’jin says tersely, ‘Honesty can sometimes get you quite far.’

‘Sometimes it can get you extremely compromised, or do you need a reminder,’ Hoseok sighs out, wiping at his face. ‘Fuck.’

‘Should we come too?’ Jimin asks quietly.

‘No,’ Hoseok says at once. ‘Especially you Jimin, we can’t risk it.’

‘What happens if shit really goes down?’ Sk’jin asks almost conversationally.

‘You mean if we’re called in and immediately killed?’ Hoseok asks.

‘I was trying to be discreet but sure yeah. What do we do?’ Sk’jin asks.

‘Then get out. The Laikin is not as strong as the Užkulisaï but you can use the escort-ship- it probably has some form of defense mechanism. Just warp out.’ Hoseok says bluntly before looking around at Jungkook, ‘I’ll make sure you’re okay.’

Jungkook shakes his head adamantly, a wild protest trying to burst out of his chest.

‘No,’ Jimin says firmly. ‘It won’t happen. I won’t let it happen.’

‘You literally said-‘

‘I’ll make it work,’ Jimin sounds angry, ‘I’ll make it work. I’ll cover you- I’ll do it.’

‘Jimin.’ Sk’jin sounds tired.

‘If things look like they’re going to go bad, leave,’ Hoseok says firmly. ‘Taeh’yung? Make sure that getting out is done as safely as possible.’

The Zhak’gri doesn’t respond.

‘Okay- I don’t think we should leave whoever this is waiting,’ Hoseok sighs making his way to the door. ‘I don’t think there’s any point trying to hide or be sneaky.’

Jungkook nods, his skin crawling at the prospect though.

‘Please be careful,’ Jimin says quietly, ‘I’ll watch over you both.’

Jungkook follows Hoseok out into a dimly lit back corridor. It’s cold and quiet here, like it was rarely used. It takes a while but they exit the narrow walkways, stepping out into what reminded Jungkook of the Hangar from the Užkulisaï. It’s also empty but it doesn’t feel as deserted and unused as the corridors they just came out of.

Hoseok looks back at him, clearly thinking hard.

‘I’m coming with you,’ Jungkook says at once.

Hoseok sighs and nods.

It’s almost as though they knew exactly where they were.

A small group of Beings, not dressed in any uniform, well-armed and expecting, greet them at the larger antechamber they exit into.

‘We are expected at the 5th Hull, Lobby 3,’ Hoseok says clearly, arms raised over his head.

Jungkook does the same.

‘Do you have any weapons on you?’ one of them asks though they’re clearly being scanned.

Jungkook shakes his head while Hoseok says, ‘We were asked not to bring any.’

‘Is there anymore of you?’

‘No,’ Hoseok replies as a few approach them, taking their screens and Comm-Devices. Jungkook tries not to react physically.

‘Please change to your true forms.’

Hoseok doesn’t say anything for a moment. There’s no air of hostility. None that Jungkook can sense anyways.

‘He’s not Ngfy’widan,’ Hoseok says at last, gesturing to Jungkook. ‘But he has paint and dye.’

Hoseok shifts, his hair settling back to its original colour, his face reappearing.

There’s no reaction to Hoseok’s shift.

‘Follow us.’

They’re not bound or restrained.

They miss the Iris still attached onto Jungkook’s inner shirt.

It’s silent all the way to the 5th Hull. Jungkook tries his best to remember the route they take, keeps count of doorways and rooms they walk past. They reach another tram-station.

To Jungkook’s surprise, a bruised and amused looking Camil is waiting for them.

‘You won’t try to throw someone at me again will you?’ he asks.

It’s not taunting or angry.

Jungkook doesn’t know what to say, unable to help himself as he tries to hide behind Hoseok.

The tram ride is also silent.

‘The uniform looks good on you,’ Camil comments from across the tram. Hoseok’s face is impassive but Jungkook can’t help but be confused.

‘…are you trying to jump me?’ Jungkook asks.

There’s a brief moment where everyone’s eyes widen before the whole tram is filled with laughter.

Jungkook can’t help but flinch back. Hoseok reaches out to keep his hand over Jungkook’s knee.

‘Just a compliment,’ Camil1780 laughs, shiny sharp teeth gleaming.

Someone is still cackling when the tram stops.
Hoseok and Jungkook follow Camil out and at this point Jungkook can’t keep track of where they are. Every place looked exactly the same and was strikingly empty.

Camil takes them over to a lift and it’s a short ride upwards, Jungkook thinks, before the doors open and they immediately spot Yoongi.

Jungkook once had a rather complicated view of Yoongi. And until now, it drew reactions from him whenever he saw Yoongi too close to Jimin. Or when Jungkook could smell Yoongi on Jimin.

Some strange urge inside him wanted to keep Jimin away from Yoongi. When he explained it once to Sk’jin the Khol’isa had just grinned, looking amused.

‘Ah, to be young,’ he had said.

Jungkook still doesn’t get it.

But right now, he wants nothing more than to check and see if Yoongi was all right.

He looked like he could barely stand where he did. A strange fragility to him that makes Jungkook’s stomach clench.

Or maybe he was just hungry.

Yoongi doesn’t react outwardly upon seeing them so Jungkook does his best to remain impassive.

There’s already a small group of Beings waiting for them with Yoongi.

The Lobby is a decently wide space, with comfortable but clean looking seating arrangements. Yoongi looks like he was waiting for them to arrive so that he could sit down at the circular table where the others were sitting.

Hoseok walks over, Jungkook following shortly.

There’s all together now 21 Beings in the Lobby that Jungkook can see and count. Like Namjoon once told him, it was always best to assume you were being constantly watched and surveyed.

‘Ah! You must be Suga’s friends.’

The owner of the voice stands and turns to look at them. He’s tall, skin a dark blue with a great beard and horns like Jungkook has never seen.

‘You’re not GI I think?’

Jungkook does his best to stay impassive.

He gestures to them to sit down.

‘I simply wish to talk,’ the Being tells them. ‘I won’t hurt any of you. I just want answers.’

‘Uh- you guys want water?’ Camil asks, thumbing behind him at a small refreshment station.

Neither Hoseok nor Jungkook respond.

In all honesty Jungkook is thirsty but he’s not going to say anything. Camil shrugs and goes to the refreshment station anyways.
‘So-‘ the blue-skinned Being doesn’t even begin to speak when there’s a loud blaring alarm.

Everyone jumps at the sound.

‘What the-‘

Jungkook feels himself being pulled back by Hoseok. And there’s a bright green light that Jungkook is incredibly familiar with and bursting through the table as though covered in green flames is Sk’jin.

‘What the fuck-‘ Hoseok gapes but Sk’jin isn’t looking at them, looking instead straight at the blue-skinned Being.

Jungkook feels himself being pushed back as the Beings inside the room raise their TeorSers, ready to fire.

‘Ilya?’

It’s a whisper, almost inaudible.

Jungkook feels something against his temple. Looking to the side, Camil has a TeorSer set to the side of his head while 2 others stand behind Hoseok, TeorSers aimed at him too. Looking around Yoongi has been pushed down on the floor, several TeorSers aimed at him too.

‘Ilya is that you?’

The green light around Sk’jin fades.

He’s not holding any weapon.

‘Ilya- it’s-…it’s me-‘ Sk’jin’s eyes are desperate, wild, and he’s on top of the table, just staring at the-

‘Jin?’

The blue-haired Being looks stunned- scared almost, as though he was seeing a ghost.

‘No- no?’ he breathes out, eyes wide.

‘You remember me,’ Sk’jin’s voice shakes, ‘You remember me-‘

He collapses on the table, one arm reaching out and to Jungkook’s shock the blue-haired Being actually reaches out with both hands.

‘What the fuck?’ Camil asks out loud, mouth wide open as everyone seems to be thinking more or less the same.

‘H-how are you alive?’ he sounds breathless, looking up at Sk’jin with wide eyes.

‘I-‘ Sk’jin looks like he’s about to cry, ‘You’re grown. You’re grown-‘

“What happened?”

Strong and coarse hands carefully touch Sk’jin’s head, fearful almost.

‘I-‘ Sk’jin manages a strangled smile, ‘I lost them-‘
‘Um-cap?’ Camil calls out hesitantly.

‘Fuck- I uh-‘ Sk’jin stammers, looking at them. ‘Ilya this is-‘

‘Do you know them?’ he asks, looking away for the first time to look over at them.

‘I uh-‘ Sk’jin clumsily gets off of the table and Ilya helps him at once, looking at him in complete awe. ‘They’re with me- it’s-‘ Ilya gestures briefly and the pressure against Jungkook’s temple vanishes.

Hoseok rubs at his shoulder, sitting up on his knees before taking Jungkook’s hand and standing up. Yoongi sits up, but doesn’t move to stand. He watches with a confused expression.

‘It’s a complicated story,’ Sk’jin says quietly, also unable to really look away, just staring at this Ilya. The red in his eyes sparkle almost, little flecks of light gleaming off of his eyelashes.

He was glowing.

‘Will you tell me?’ Ilya asks desperately, ‘I don’t understand what- how you’re here I just-‘ Sk’jin looks conflicted, his emotions so clear and apparent across his face.

This felt incredibly raw and unreasoned- somehow so different to how Sk’jin portrayed himself at all times.

‘Sk’jin,’ Yoongi calls quietly from where he’s sitting.

Sk’jin looks away from Ilya, looking at Yoongi almost as though he forgot the Human was there at all.

‘You can tell him,’ the Human says quietly, sitting back with a small grimace, ‘He knows a lot.’

Hoseok’s head snaps back around, eyes narrowed a little, clearly thinking hard.

‘Jin? What is it?’ Ilya looks serious.

‘I-…’ Sk’jin says almost breathlessly before he smiles- he truly smiles, hands reaching up to cup Ilya’s face. Then he lowers his voice in a rather mischievous and carrying whisper as though he was talking a child, ‘Should we have a secret meeting?’
(Author’s Notes)

If anyone follows me on twitter you will be very aware of my very loud and vocal appreciation and love for Hideo Kojima and his stories/games and just his story as a human being in general (disclaimer I have not played any of his games I am an admirer of who he is as a person and his creativity) and his new game Death Stranding Please go watch the launch trailer And listen to the soundtrack because that is eXACTLY WHAT I’VE NEEDED AND WANTED
And if you want to cry while listening to a song Listen to BB’s Theme from Death Stranding and please join me and weep That being said I recently received an unusual msg on AFF from I guess now an ex-reader telling me they were basically disappointed in me for what I liked/reweeted on twitter and liking bts too much and im????????????? Clearly stated in my bio I am multifandom???????????? I like and retweet a lot of diverse group content???? Like if you don’t want to see it, unfollow me or just mute me???????????????? Why message me about it???????? It seems so weird????
BUT MOST IMPORTANTLY EVERYONE PLEASE CONGRATULATE ME I AM AN EMPLOYED™ HUMAN BEING I am now officially Junior 3D Modeler I can breathe in peace Also because I’m not original Camil looks somewhat like Mingyu from Seventeen
There’s a strange pleasantness, Jimin finds, in the way he can just about sense the movements, actions, and movement within the ship.

‘Did you know?’ he had asked Taeh’yung.

‘I mean- not like this. But sure,’ the Zhak’gri had just shrugged. ‘It feels cozy.’

Jimin makes sure that the escort guards fall into a very deep sleep before locking down their assigned cabins.

He had waited with baited breath, hand digging into Taeh’yung’s arm as Sk’jin appeared before these unknown Beings.

Sk’jin had made a strange sound- a choked sob that was almost inaudible.

His hands were shaking, lifting up to the screen where this Being was talking to Hoseok.

‘Jinnie?’

Sk’jin stood abruptly, turning to Taeh’yung and saying in an incredibly monotonous voice, ‘Take me up there.’

Taeh’yung had squinted at Sk’jin, a small comic pout forming on his lips before he just happily agreed, ignoring Jimin’s questions. And in a flurry of green flaming lights, an added effect just for being dramatic, Taeh’yung sent Sk’jin off upwards, triggering all sorts of alarms.

‘He knows him,’ Jimin had breathed out, watching with pain that wasn’t his own.

Taeh’yung had just smiled, looking pleased.

‘It’s a family reunion!’ the Zhak’gri exclaimed, ‘I love those!’

He then also left, green neon lights blinking in his wake as he ran out through the walls with a delighted throaty giggle.

That had been almost an hour ago and Jimin was waiting for Jungkook to come down and take him back up. Sk’jin was talking with Ilya, the Being whom he had recognized from a life he thought died with him.

There was a sense of confusion for a while. This crew whose plans they had inadvertently walked straight into with their own chaotically put together attempt at escape.

Understandably, they’re not immediately allowed to wander as they will, and with Ilya and Sk’jin discussing matters somewhere else, Ilya’s crew had requested that everyone be brought up to Lobby 3.

Yoongi had immediately volunteered but again, understandably, had not been allowed to do so. Instead Jungkook is allowed to accompany a few who would come to collect Jimin and take him up to Lobby 3.

They did, however, allow their communication channels to go up and reconnect once more. Hoseok hands Yoongi his Comm-Device and Jimin is surprised to find himself tearing up.

‘Yoongi?’

‘I’m here.’

Jimin exhales out in relief. Even though it hasn’t been a day since Yoongi was arrested, and they’ve been able to keep a pretty constant surveillance over him, and despite coming together in their home, Jimin almost feels like it’s been weeks since he’s been able to be with the Human.

‘I’ll be coming up soon,’ Jimin tells him as he goes out of the ship to stand by the entryway by the escort-ship hangar ramp. ‘Do you need anything from the Užkulisai- uh, Laikin?’

Hoseok had requested for some of his clothes to change into. Jimin had packed a small bag with some of Hoseok’s clothes (found mostly in Taeh’yung’s storage space) as well as for Jungkook.

‘No. They’re taking me to the Medical Bay,’ Yoongi tells him.

Panic strikes through Jimin, ‘What? What for?’

‘Just for the bruises, sunshine,’ Yoongi sounds like he’s smiling. ‘I really hate cuffs.’

‘Okay,’ Jimin replies softly before adding, ‘What do you think?’

‘Of?’

‘Of this? Of everything? Of Ilya?’

‘I don’t know,’ Yoongi breathes out quietly, honestly, ‘But I think- I think he knows a lot. More than we expect. Maybe more than we know.’

Jimin had thought that too.

‘He’s seen me before.’

Jimin’s breath is stuck in his throat.

‘What?’

‘He’s seen me. Or- or another me. Another of me, a GI- he was sent to kill him. But Ilya was able to survive- on time. It was around the same time as when the Gaia case was exposed, and the Yishengs were found guilty for their involvement. That GIs that were active were all killed. And that me- well, he was killed too.’ Yoongi sounds—-he sounds tired. ‘He knows about the GI- and the Yishengs, their involvement. Maybe we can find out some more things- things that Amme didn’t tell us. Didn’t want to tell us.’

‘Yeah, maybe,’ Jimin replies back softly.

It’s quiet for a while.

‘Any news about Namjoon?’

‘No,’ Jimin tells him, his hand gripping on the NaviLet from the Laikin. ‘I- I don’t know where he is. He’s- it’s like he’s lost.’

‘We’ll find him,’ Yoongi tells him gently, ‘We’ll find him. Or- or maybe he’ll find us.’

There’s a sound down the docking hangar and Jimin straightens up a little, his feet shuffling a little on the cold metal.

‘I think Kookie is here,’ Jimin tells Yoongi, ‘I’ll see you soon.’

‘Okay,’ Yoongi says and adds with a small laugh, ‘I could do with some sunshine right about now.’

Jimin can’t help but laugh, looking down. His cheeks push up with the strength of his breathless laughter, warming over a little.

‘Yoongi.’ Jimin says in an admonishing tone.

‘Hm?’ Yoongi sounds amused, a little smug.

‘You’re funny.’ Jimin relents, catching sight of a massive doorway opening quietly. A familiar figure appears, already bouncing up and down at the sight of Jimin.

‘I try?’ Yoongi chuckles, sounding almost sleepy. ‘I like hearing you laugh.’

‘You don’t have to try so hard,’ Jimin tells him, fingers fiddling a little.

It’s so familiar but so new, the way Yoongi makes him feel.

‘You make me happy,’ Jimin says quietly.

Jungkook is sprinting forward, grin wide and arms waving. Behind him is the Being named Camil. To Jimin’s surprise, it’s only the two of them. Jimin had half-expected at least 4 more Beings to accompany them up. Especially considering how Jungkook had fought them all in the trams.

Camil looks very intrigued as he squints at the escort-ship, probably wondering how exactly Sk’jin, Taeh’yung, and Jimin hid within in despite being scanned so thoroughly. He catches sight of Jimin as well. He looks shocked- a strange look crossing his face that Jimin can’t rightly identify from this distance. It’s replaced with a thoughtful look as he says something quietly, the Comm-Device in his ear blinking, not looking away from him.

‘Jimin!’

Jimin steps down the ramp, holding his arms out for the young Vicitra. And Jungkook rushes to him, a wide grin on his face as he hugs Jimin as though it had been more than just a few hours of being apart.
‘You did so well,’ Jimin says as he looks up, his hands cupping Jungkook’s face. ‘Were you nervous?’

‘A little,’ Jungkook admits as he takes Jimin’s hand, following close but also practically shielding him from Camil who is now suppressing a smile, his expression perfectly normal.

‘Hello, I’m Camil, I guess you could say I’m the Communications Manager?’ he adds.

‘Jimin,’ he answers in kind.

‘I came along so that you both won’t get lost-‘

‘-won’t get lost-‘ Jungkook says at once, frown on his face, puffing up his chest.

‘-a temporary guide just in case,’ Camil corrects himself as Jimin picks up the bag with Hoseok’s clothes in it.

Jimin just smiles, ‘Please take us up.’

Camil points at the ship, ‘Anything to declare?’

‘They’re asleep.’ Jimin replies.

‘…I mean I guess?’ Camil frowns a little before adding, ‘Cool with you guys if we send in some people to check?’

‘We can’t say no at this point,’ Hoseok chimes in, voice a little distant as though speaking right into the Comm-Device Yoongi was now wearing.

‘Of course,’ Jimin nods.

‘Great,’ Camil points behind him, ‘Let’s go! Transfer-ships are a little tricky, but you’ll get used to it.’

‘Not staying,’ Jungkook scowls as he takes the bag from Jimin.

Camil just laughs.

It doesn’t take too long. The silence is only interjected with Camil making small talk and Jungkook being very offended by everything which only amuses Camil even more.

The Lobby now has more Beings than before, which confirms Jimin’s theory that they had been aware of something being wrong, leading them to hide away while they uncovered what was happening.

And up here, Jimin can very keenly sense their numbers in this large ship.

And that strange pleasantness makes sense here. Up here, Jimin can feel it better. It feels safe.

Warm, almost, as though those who gathered here found themselves home.

Camil just gives them a shrug and walks away towards a bunch of Beings sitting at a table with a wave and nod. Jungkook quietly tugs him forward past the Beings and towards the end of the Lobby. It’s clearly where the officers or officials would have stayed- Jimin briefly wonders where they are now. It’s obvious that this crew, Ilya’s crew, has been here for some time considering how familiar they were with the layout, using the controls within the ship, and overall confidence with how they moved.

Towards the end of the Lobby Jimin finds Hoseok standing outside of what is clearly a row of Medical Bays. He smiles at them, waving them over. He’s still dressed in the Venture Unit agent uniform and gratefully accepts the bag Jungkook hands over to him. Looking past Hoseok directly into the Bay behind him, Jimin catches sight of a pair of legs, kicking just a little.

‘Says he doesn’t need any meds,’ Hoseok rolls his eyes at Jimin with a tired sort of smile. ‘Only managed to keep him in there because I threatened him.’

‘I’ll see to it,’ Jimin smiles before adding, ‘Where’s Taeh’yung?’

Hoseok rolls his eyes with so much force it’s a surprise they haven’t rolled back permanently.

‘He heard something about a “storage” cargo within the prison,’ the Ngfy’widan snorts, ‘Said he needed to go shopping. I think like, 15 of them are watching over him.’

Jimin just laughs, shaking his head.

‘Well, we’re gonna go get changed,’ Hoseok nods his head at Jungkook to follow him.

Jungkook squeezes Jimin’s hand and nuzzles against his temple before following Hoseok into another Medical Bay.

Stepping into the Medical Bay, Jimin doesn’t quite know what to expect.

But Yoongi was clearly waiting for him, sitting patiently, leaning forward a little with anticipation. And the moment Yoongi sees him, he exhales as though in relief, making to stand at once.

He looks fragile.

It hadn’t even been full day and yet-

Jimin stops him from standing, just quietly rushing over to place his hands on his shoulders and make him sit back down on the raised Medical Bed. There’s an already open medical kit next to him, but it’s a very basic one with some pain numbers, inhibitors, and patches.

Yoongi takes his hands from his shoulders, holding them to pull him in close until their foreheads touch.

‘Do I really?’ he asks quietly, thumbs rubbing along his wrists.

‘Hm?’

‘Do I make you happy?’ Yoongi asks, looking up.

Jimin smiles, twisting their hands a little so that he could lace their fingers together.

‘You do,’ Jimin confirms in a hushed voice before adding, ‘I’ll be happier if you take some medicine?’

Yoongi gives him a look of disbelief before laughing, leaning back on the wall.

‘Okay,’ the Human closes his eyes, ‘Hit me with your worst you fiend.’

‘Not a fiend,’ Jimin laughs, kissing Yoongi’s hands before taking a step back to look for a kit.
‘Fiend,’ Yoongi watches him with barely open eyes, ‘Using my weakness against me.’

‘I’m being smart,’ Jimin shoots back as he opens a drawer and finds it neatly lined with medical kits. He takes one out and walks back to Yoongi who draws his legs up, folding them comfortably, leaning forward just a little. He takes the kit from Jimin, opening it up on his lap.

‘Does anything hurt?’ Jimin asks.

Yoongi just shakes his, just watching him.

‘Help me,’ Jimin chides, ‘I can’t help you if you don’t tell me.’

Yoongi grins- that sort of lazy, gum-showing grin, shoulders bunching a little as though delighted at every single thing Jimin did.

‘I make you happy.’

Jimin’s heart clenches, eyes burning, threatening to tear up. He reaches up to push back Yoongi’s hair and kisses his forehead.

‘Do I make you happy?’ Jimin whispers, trying his best to keep his voice steady. ‘There- all of this. You can’t say that I haven’t caused- that I’m not the root cause of so much…so much sadness, and so much pain.’

Jimin takes out a bunch of serums and solvents, not really seeing them.

Yoongi doesn’t move, just watches Jimin’s movements for a while until he runs out of things to do.

‘Before I first saw you,’ Yoongi says, tone light, ‘I was confused, things didn’t make sense to me. We knew something was wrong, something beyond our understanding was taking place- something terrible was happening.’

Jimin looks away from the kit and up at Yoongi. Yoongi is glancing to the side, eyes a little glazed over.

‘I knew something was wrong. We all did. But when I saw you I thought-‘ Yoongi smiles, his eyes focusing on him, ‘-I thought it all made sense.’

‘How?’

Yoongi unfolds his legs, dangling them again a little, wiggling his toes.

‘I knew that everything- all of this, leads to you.’ Yoongi nudges him with his knee, ‘Not because I think it’s your fault. But because I believe in you. We all did; we all do.’

‘We?’

‘Amic, Amad’la,’ Yoongi smiles, ‘Hoseok, Sk’jin, Taeh’yung, Jungkook, Namjoon.’

‘I- I don’t think Sk’jin really-‘ Jimin begins, a strained laughter pulling at his voice.

‘This is not your fault sunshine,’ Yoongi sits up a little, nudging Jimin with his feet to stand closer, ‘Believe in yourself. Follow your heart.’

Jimin nods.
‘And you do,’ Yoongi pulls at his shirt, fiddling with the stitching a little, ‘You make me so happy. Everything makes sense now. With you.’

‘I wish I could say the same- about- about the uh, making sense part,’ Jimin clarifies.

‘It’s because I listen to my heart,’ Yoongi tells him simply, taking Jimin’s hand up to his chest. ‘Maybe you should listen to it too.’

‘Then maybe for now, you can take mine.’

Jungkook comes jogging in, a pleased look on his now clean face, clearly more comfortable in his own clothes (a combination of Namjoon’s and Hoseok’s clothes), holding a large bowl of food in his arms, followed by Taeh’yung, who also has a large bowl of food in his arms.

Jungkook has a complex series of facial expressions switch across his face. His eyes narrow at the bare distance between Yoongi and Jimin, a small frown with the way Yoongi is holding Jimin’s hand to his chest, and his nostrils flare with the way Yoongi is holding his shirt. But then he catches sight of the medical kit opened next to Yoongi and it switches to one of concern.

‘Oh! Medicine?’ Jungkook shuffles forward curiously. ‘Yoongi sick?’

‘No I’m not kiddo,’ Yoongi looks amused, also having witnessed Jungkook’s expressions. ‘Heard from Hoseok that you did good down at the trams.’

Jungkook looks pleased but tries not to show it too much as he just huffs, nodding shortly as he stuffs his mouth with food.

‘Want some?’ Taeh’yung offers his bowl of food that looks much more cooked than Jungkook’s, and smells nice.

‘No it’s-‘ Yoongi starts but he’s met with 3 different glares and silently accepts the food Taeh’yung had brought with him.

‘So- this place is cool,’ Taeh’yung says, jumping up next to Yoongi to steal bites of food as Jimin takes out repair serums for the dark bruises around Yoongi’s neck. ‘There’s like, a flotsam upstairs- mainly stuff that belonged to the inmates and stuff like that. Hoseok says that if things go well? We might be able to actually stock up on weapons from here.’

‘Sk’jin knew him from a long time ago,’ Yoongi says, leaning in a little and stretching his neck to allow Jimin to dab the cool gel over his throat. ‘It seems like it’s not just any casual acquaintance either.’

‘Like family?’ Jungkook asks, voice muffled.

Yoongi smiles, leaning back and saying, ‘Maybe. Sk’jin’s been around for a long time.’

Jimin dabs the serum over Yoongi’s throat liberally as Yoongi glosses over some small snippet of information regarding Sk’jin’s past to a transfixed Jungkook, only pausing to accept food that Taeh’yung has decided to spoon-feed him.

Jimin gently pushes down at Yoongi’s collar, exposing more bruises but these look old. Old and permanent- like they’re beyond healing. Not wanting to linger too long, Jimin pulls Yoongi away from the wall a little, shifting to the side to dab the serum on the back of his neck, where the bruising has broken and swollen. It’s healed over a little by itself, but one look tells Jimin it needed disinfecting as well.
Beneath the fresh bruised and broken skin, Jimin follows a heavily layered and old series of bruises, scars, and tissue damage that has permanently discoloured Yoongi’s skin.

The scars on his face were faint; only very visible at certain lights or angles.

Jimin cleans the open wound and dabs what most would consider an excessive amount of serum over it. Taeh’yung hands him some tissue-plast and Jimin carefully places it over some of the exposed wounds.

Jungkook takes to mimicking Jimin and starts working on Yoongi’s left wrist, applying the serum over the bruises. His large eyes concentrated, studying Jimin’s methods carefully.

Jimin gleefully smiles at Taeh’yung when Yoongi ruffles Jungkook’s hair in thanks, and the latter tries to look offended even though he leans into the touch.

Yoongi looks embarrassed to have so much attention on him, with Taeh’yung feeding him despite his protests of being full, and Jimin and Jungkook tending to his wounds. His face is flushed, and his ears red.

He’s still flushed when Camat enters the Bay, one eyebrow raised high as though amused and also intrigued, before he says, ‘Well- Ilya’s calling for a meeting in the Conference Room. Let’s go?’

‘Cool! Will there be food?’ Taeh’yung asks enthusiastically.

‘I mean I don’t see why you can’t take some in? But I think it might be upsetting with the smells and all for some Beings,’ Camat says thoughtfully.

Taeh’yung seems to agree, making loud agreeing sounds before he slaps his hands together.

‘Fruits?’

‘Okay-?’

Taeh’yung grabs Jungkook and they are a blur as they zoom out, Camat’s hair whipping about as he turns his head to catch their movement.

‘Need help? More meds?’ Camat asks, looking between Jimin and Yoongi. ‘Or is it like, Humans kinda look like this?’

He gestures at all of Yoongi who huffs out a small laugh.

‘Uh, we’re okay,’ Jimin replies. ‘Thank you.’

Camat nods and steps out.

‘Do I really look that bad?’ Yoongi asks, brushing back his hair as though to fix his appearance.

Jimin cups Yoongi’s face between his hands, squishing his cheeks a little and making Yoongi’s lips pucker.

‘Handsome,’ Jimin declares.

Yoongi rolls his eyes. They look bloodshot, the skin around his eyes almost transparent.

Yoongi shakes Jimin’s hands off of his face by shaking his head, hair flying about, ‘Don’t worry too much about it sunshine, nothing some sleep won’t cure.’
‘When we leave, you should sleep,’ Jimin agrees, ‘For- uh, 14 hours, 20 minutes.’

‘14 hours and 20 minutes?’ Yoongi chuckles, ‘Oddly specific.’

‘You must.’ Jimin says firmly, helping Yoongi get out of the Bed.

‘Okay, I pinky swear,’ Yoongi extends out his smallest finger to Jimin.

Jimin sort of blankly looks at it in confusion. Yoongi chuckles like it’s the funniest thing and takes Jimin’s hands, motioning for him to hold out his smallest finger and then hooks them together.

‘Human thing,’ Yoongi explains, ‘It’s a pinky promise.’

‘Okay?’ Jimin laughs, swinging their hands.

Yoongi raises their hands and his other one, stretching a little, face wrinkling as he shudders a little. He exhales, rolling his shoulders back a little.

Even when he stands he looks heavy, tiredness weighing down on him, his skin a little dull looking- different from the healthy glow he had from Amme’s ship.

‘Just a bit tired,’ Yoongi tells him, as though reading his thoughts. ‘Just wanna sleep now.’

Jimin doesn’t say anything, nodding and then applying the remainder of the serum on his lips and then leaning in to kiss Yoongi lightly.

Yoongi just laughs under his breath before saying, ‘Fiend.’

*

When Sk’jin finishes talking, Ilya is silent, the dried tear tracks down his face pulling a little at his skin around his cheeks, parts of his beard a little matted. Sk’jin stays quiet for a while, allowing Ilya to take in the vast amount of information Sk’jin basically threw at him.

He told him of what happened in the Nightmares, of the faceless tormentor, of Zitao, of Taeh’yung. He tells him about the Yishengs- of what happened to Earth- of the Digitized Soul. His mouth is dry, jaw hurting but he can’t stop.

He tells Ilya of how he came to be; incomplete and cold and his vision dripping in red- the light of the Bloodmoon tainting his eyes. He tells him of K’mara, of the meeting, what was assigned to them. He tells him of Jimin, of Yoongi, of the GI.

He tells him about going back- of seeing all of them. Cold empty eyes watching him through the leaves of the dense forest trees.

Sk’jin tells Ilya of the Omhlophe. He tells Ilya about Ynqaba- doesn’t leave out a single detail- doesn’t gloss over the nightmare he awoke to.

He tells him about Jungkook, how he touched his temples, eyes large and trusting.

Sk’jin talks about Namjoon- how he was now missing, taken away by the GI. He tells him about what Amme said to them as they left Grisial.
Sk’jin tells Ilya of the still dreaming, still sleeping Beings- their whole lives filled only with shared dreams and voices, whispers of life, death, light and dark all around them. How the Court would have them completely eradicated because they were scared.

And in return, Sk’jin feels light. Lighter than he’s ever been.

Ilya had been a fledgling- a child last Sk’jin saw him. He remembers his voice, small and high insisting on saying goodbye at the door as Sk’jin slept, unknowing and knowing.

He remembers soft voices reporting to him almost every night at the doorway. He can almost see those familiar warm eyes, dimpled smiles.

Sk’jin blinks a few times and instead takes this moment to simply observe Ilya.

He feels a clear sense of pride as he looks over the Ožkan, warmth spreading through his chest.

He had just been a fledgling, all gangly thin limbs, clopping after his mother, spreading laughter alongside the other children. He had once led an ambush on Sk’jin in his bath.

They nearly flooded his living quarters and Sk’jin had knelt on the damp floors alongside 8 other fledglings, enduring a lecture on acceptable behavior from 18 parents, and Nambike.

He had been fresh-faced, bright-eyed, his horns small; he hadn’t even gone through his first shedding.

And here he sat.

Fully grown, aged, lived and breathing. Sk’jin can see the faint scars of aged bruises, wounds, burns. His hair is well maintained, his beard trimmed and neatly oiled, a symbol of pride of both age and position in the Ožkan culture. His horns are fully grown, with minimal damage save for the very clear and evident break dealt by another Yoongi GI.

K’mara had told him- but Sk’jin would have never assumed- or even hope that Ilya would be here- clearly in a position not too different from the one Sk’jin himself had occupied.

Ilya had briefly told him of what happened, how he had recognized and kept Yoongi as a result. Yoongi himself had told Sk’jin that Ilya knew. And Sk’jin couldn’t help pour his heart out to the Ožkan who used to once balance on his shoulders, grabbing onto Sk’jin’s own horns for balance.

‘It’s not-’ Ilya begins, pausing for a moment before he leans back. ‘-this doesn’t exactly come as a surprise to me. We knew about the Yisheng’s involvement in- in, well, what exactly we were not entirely sure- contextually that is. Theoretically we had a lot of ideas. The Alliance was always transparent to us. But this…what you’re saying about this place called Menigišiti- about Bhumi. And about going to Axudar?’

Ilya looks worried.

‘Is there something you want to warn me about?’ Sk’jin inquires.

‘Someone from the Yisheng Directory- most probably Ndica based on what you’ve said, wanted me dead. That’s when they sent another of the Human, Yoongi, for me.’ Ilya says instead. ‘It’s because I got too close to Axudar.’

‘I know that something is different about Axudar.’ Sk’jin acknowledges. ‘But I-’
‘It’s not just about something being different or bad- it’s obvious that they’re not doing the most ethical things there it’s just-’ Ilya looks uncomfortable. ‘In this family, many come from Axudar, or were in Axudar. And our current proximity- which if you really think about, isn’t that much- gives them great discomfort.’

‘Why?’

‘Something is wrong there,’ Ilya tells him slowly. ‘There is something that moves there- something that sets even the gravity there against time- against space itself.’

Sk’jin feels dread chilling down his spine, the empty smooth skin above his temples burning.

‘I followed Nambike’s direction- her guidance, her wisdom,’ Ilya says after a long moment, breathing out slowly, ‘After she died, and I took over, I took us deeper- hid us more. Because we came too close to something too big.’

‘The Yishengs?’

Ilya nods.

‘The eggs- it’s been some 20 sols now- they’ve become quite known throughout the Under Verse. It’s not always large OrTanks with fully formed Beings- sometimes they’re cases of embryos. Specialized containers or compressors of tissue samples- and the same way you described what you learnt in Ynqaba, OrTanks with Beings inside.’ Ilya leans forward, elbows on his knees. ‘But it was- it was difficult to find them- or even hear about it. Only some very few pirating networks knew of it. And they would vanish- whole pirate clans- disappearing. The same way planets and moons and sometimes even whole Systems would vanish.’

Sk’jin knows about this- he’s read Zitao’s reports in the GIU.

‘And what you’re saying about the Omhlophe- this is not a secret in the Under Verse to many. A strange organization who will pay a lot for the New Borns is known under many names, pseudonyms and under different disguises. But they have only just started gaining some form of recognition in the past few decades- even more so now, which makes sense I guess,’ Ilya scratches at his jaw, thinking hard. ‘At first we didn’t really pay much attention to it- of course attempts at recreating the Alliance or something similar to that- it would make any pirate who knew about New Borns want to use that and profit themselves. But…when pirate networks started vanishing, and moons and planets followed- even my troves didn’t know what was going on,’ Ilya confesses. ‘It didn’t settle well with me. And that’s when I met him.’

‘Who?’

Ilya thinks hard, a harsh frown line deep and dark on his brow.

‘There’s someone you should meet,’ Ilya says quietly, ‘He’s like Jungkook- and…I met him 15 sols ago.’

‘Who is he?’ Sk’jin asks.

‘He’s family now,’ Ilya smiles, ‘A bit like how Nambike was.’

Sk’jin nods in understanding.

Nambike frequently stepped out, an agent in her own right, scouting the territory, networking and placing fences at every turn. Sk’jin often said that it was Nambike who held everything together.
‘We’re meeting with him in Cuab-D2.’ Ilya replies, ‘And I think it would be better if you just meet him. Especially for Jimin. See him.’

‘Why?’

‘Because you need to understand why going there, going to this place Jimin is from, is a bad idea.’ Ilya says carefully. ‘This is something Jimin himself needs to hear the most.’

‘We- we can’t stay for long,’ Sk’jin begins, faltering. ‘Like I said, Namjoon is-’

‘-Yoongi is not the first of the GI to wake up,’ Ilya tells him gently, ‘There have been others before him.’

‘What?’ Sk’jin gapes.

‘The ones who took Namjoon- they’re the ones who are slowly waking- and it’s-…it’s not right.’

‘What do you mean?’

‘You can see it, can’t you? With the Human,’ Ilya asks gently. ‘I know that- we call them New Bornts- like Jungkook. They are made and born whole- individual. Perfect almost.’

Sk’jin nods to that.

Of course they knew of the key differences between how the GI were made and born in contrast to how Jungkook and the other eggs from the Akramanese ship (or the Omhlophe ship) were born.

‘They’re not meant to be alive really,’ Ilya says carefully, gouging Sk’jin’s reaction.

It makes Sk’jin think.

‘Other- other than the one sent to kill you- you’ve met another, haven’t you?’ Sk’jin asks in wonder.

‘You need to talk with him- hear it from him,’ Ilya repeats as he shakes his head. ‘What Amme told you- it’s not a lie. But there are things that are missing in what she’s told you- or maybe she doesn’t know better either.’

‘We can’t stay in one place for too long,’ Sk’jin says firmly, ‘What I’ve told you about the Omhlophe- they’re bent on hunting us down- bent on taking Jimin. The moment we reach Cuab we have to leave-’

‘And follow your plan to Axudar?’ Ilya shakes his head. ‘Jin, please listen to me- I understand why you want to do this- why Jimin wants to do this. Why all of you want to do this.’

‘But?’

Ilya shakes his head, ‘It’s too unpredictable- it’s too close together. What happened to Jimin- his System, with the Yishengs- and with those creatures- and with what’s happened- what is still happening now in Axudar. It’s too close Jin.’

Ilya stops suddenly.

‘I remember the time- that time, when we lost you,’ Ilya says softly.

Sk’jin’s throat is suddenly too tight- he can barely swallow.
'I remember the panic- the anxiety. I remember Nambike nearly going mad- how everyone worked endlessly for sols and sols- how any sign, any news- any false sighting or exaggeration was explored, investigated. I remember the uncertainty- the fear, the panic,’ Ilya exhales slowly. ‘And Jin I’m-‘

‘I know what you want to say. But I won’t allow it. I can’t. The others will want to move- and I don’t want to repeat myself all the time but Ilya- the Omhlophe,’ Sk’jin says at once before Ilya can say another word, ‘I won’t- I can’t allow them to follow us to you- or for the Jury to find you-‘

‘We can protect you,’ Ilya says firmly. ‘Let me protect you-‘

‘-Ilya, you know that it won’t-‘

‘Let us take you to Bhumi at least.’ Ilya pleads. ‘Forgo Axudar- ignore it, go straight to Bhumi I don’t see why you can’t.’

‘Ilya I don’t think-‘

‘-or stay.’

Sk’jin closes his eyes, red pulsing around him in aching forms.

He feels Ilya taking his hands.

‘It’s like you’ve come home, after so long,’ Ilya squeezes his hands. ‘Stay here, stay home.’

It even smells the same here.

‘You were lost for so long- with the others. It’s like you’ve all come home again.’

Fuck.

‘You once said- you once said you wanted to buy a moon,’ Sk’jin is hiding in the narrow hallway again, Ilya’s tiny hooves making small sounds against the floors. He can hear his quiet chuckles, endeared and fond tone as he replies to Ilya.

‘Can I come live in that house too?’

‘Don’t you have a house?’

‘This is my house- but I think I want another one too.’

‘Because you wanted a house for your mum,’ Sk’jin opens his eyes, staring down at their hands.

‘I didn’t buy her a moon,’ Ilya chuckles quietly, ‘I did buy her a nice place to stay, in Ghandhar, away from the GLA, she was safe and happy for the rest of her life.’

Sk’jin breathes out slowly before he makes up his mind, ‘I’ll go meet him. We will listen to what he has to say. I don’t make the decisions anymore- at least not in this crew- but maybe you can explain, Jimin, or at least Yoongi, will definitely listen.’

Ilya nods, reaching for his screen and taping on it a few times as he says, ‘I’ll ask them to come to one of the Conference rooms, I’ll talk to them.’

‘It might take a while to convince them- or not,’ Sk’jin laughs dryly.
‘I remember being told you could persuade anyone—anywhere,’ Ilya tilts his head, almost a little teasing, but the worry in his eyes is clear.

‘I’m not—I’m not the same anymore,’ Sk’jin whispers, touching his temples with a shaky hand, ‘Who you remembered—who you saw, I’m just—’ he shrugs, ‘I’m nothing now.’

‘I wouldn’t say that,’ Ilya says gently, ‘Nambike wouldn’t say that. Ti wouldn’t. We both know Ahadi would never say that.’

Sk’jin’s vision blurs.

‘I’m just trying now,’ Sk’jin can barely speak.

‘To do what?’

‘Keep my promise,’ Sk’jin whispers.

‘To who?’

Sk’jin blinks away his tears, his vision returning.

‘To myself, I think,’ he explains. ‘Hopefully, once I keep it, I won’t have to make another one.’

‘Is that why you’re doing this?’

Sk’jin nods.

‘Will you make me a promise?’ Ilya asks.

‘I don’t—’ Sk’jin presses his lips down hard, ‘Yeah.’

‘When you have finished keeping your promise, come back home.’

Sk’jin nods mutely.

‘I’ll try.’

‘Okay,’ Ilya smiles. ‘Maybe you can be my lieutenant.’

Sk’jin laughs, reaching forward to smack Ilya.

‘What a kid,’ Sk’jin teases.

‘Not all of us get to maintain our youth,’ Ilya snorts, ‘The other day I got breathless after climbing up the rafters. Camat still brings it up and asks me if I need the SkelPort.’

‘He seems like a handful.’

Ilya snorts, ‘Camat’s been here since he was a near baby. His father was close to Nambike.’

Sk’jin smiles.

He wishes he could have seen her one last time.

‘Is there anything you want?’ Ilya asks as they stand up. Sk’jin can’t find it in himself to let go of Ilya’s hand just yet.
Sk’jin pauses to think.

‘And while this is not just a ploy to have you stay for just a bit longer in Cuab-D2, I can effectively help you stock up on everything you will need from their supplies instead.’ Ilya chuckles.

Briefly, his eyes sparkle the way they used to. The way Sk’jin remembers.

There’s laughter outside, filtering in faintly.

For a moment Sk’jin is alive again.

He’s alive and happy- taking steps around the ship, antagonizing Ti, chasing after Ilya and the other fledglings, walking alongside Ahadi.

For a moment, Sk’jin is home.

He glances out of the windows. He spots Hoseok, talking to someone as they look down at a screen. Yoongi and Jimin are walking out of a Medical Bay, hands locked together. Taeh’yung rushes past, looking pleased with himself. He’s shorty chased by Jungkook. He’s laughing brightly at something Taeh’yung says, hands filled with some sort of fruit.

‘I have a favour to ask of you,’ Sk’jin says quietly. ‘If that’s all right.’

‘Anything.’

Hoseok steps into the Conference Room where Sk’jin and Ilya were already waiting for them.

The table in the center is circular and at the center of it, a massive and powerful multi-network projector.

So far it’s only them, and Camat and two others who were clearly ranked high in this massive pirate-network. They observe each other, expressions carefully schooled and neutral.

It was the only explanation as to what they were.

They controlled a vast majority of troves across the Known Universe and the Under Verse. This was no small network of small criminals.

No this was a highly elaborate, extremely skilled network of Beings creating a system they controlled without alerting the GLA on their activities.

As an agent, Hoseok was well aware of many pirating networks- as a member of the Venture Unit it was required to use these networks for your own benefit.

And networks like this- the ones held and maintained like this, were the ones that frightened the Venture Unit the most. It’s the reason why Sk’jin had the reputation he did.

Most times, pirates were not feared for their petty crimes (or often times heavy crimes) but rather of their anonymous networking. It’s why the Venture Unit always made it a point to incorporate themselves into every single one they could find, powerful or not, big or small.
And this network, is not one Hoseok was even aware of.

Troves were, in most cases, controlled regionally by specific clans or networks or bands. But to control nearly half of the troves across the Universe?

Either Ilya controlled half of the known existing pirating networks out there or was terrifyingly respected by other pirates.

And Hoseok doesn’t know which one to believe in.

Hoseok takes a seat next to Sk’jin, followed by Jungkook. Yoongi and Jimin follow next but Taeh’yung walks over to where Sk’jin is sitting and in an angle that looks painfully, slumps over the back on Sk’jin’s chair, hands filled with some sort of fruit dangling in front of the Khol’isa’s chest, bending weirdly in an attempt to feed him.

Ilya looks amused and gives Taeh’yung a smile. To which the Zhak’gri responds with a blinding smile that’s slightly stained purple and a constrained salute that sends bits of fruit flying about.

“So- this is Ilya,’ Sk’jin begins, gesturing to the Ožkan. ‘Ilya was like a son to me. I trust him wholeheartedly.’

Hoseok finds himself narrowing his eyes.

‘I know I haven’t given all of you the best reasons to always trust me-‘ Sk’jin begins.

‘-is Evdos all right?’ Taeh’yung asks, slapping his fruit-juice covered hands over Sk’jin’s mouth.

Camat, who was sitting next to Ilya looks around with wide eyes before he nods.

‘Cool- okay so I’m just gonna say this,’ Taeh’yung blurts out, expression surprisingly serious, ‘Everyone here is tired. I honestly don’t want to have another depressing sit-in discussion like we had at Amme’s ship again. And we all just wanna find pa. So unless there’s something new to be discussed or heard, I would like to kindly suggest everyone to scurry up.’

Hoseok spots Camat mouthing ‘scurry up’ with a questioning look on his face.

‘Are there any changes to our plans?’ Hoseok asks instead before anyone can say anything.

‘There won’t be if that’s what you decide,’ Ilya speaks up.

Sk’jin just sort of leans back, looking both tired but somewhat elated. He watches Ilya with an awed expression, as though truly disbelieving of what he was looking at.

‘Sk’jin has told me everything-‘

‘-everything?’ Taeh’yung squints at Ilya. ‘Even about Jiminnie and the other babies?’

Hoseok sees Camat mouthing ‘babies’ with a questioning look again. The Being next to him elbows Camat hard.

‘Yes, I’ve told him everything,’ Sk’jin replies patiently. ‘Like I said. I trust him. And he knows what we’re talking about.’

‘And I have a proposal.’

Hoseok leans back. He catches sight of Jimin from the corner of his eye.
His expression is perfectly neutral, with no reaction on his face.

‘I have been told about what you want to do in Axudar - about what you would like to investigate there, and ultimately find your way back to Se Jimin’s System,’ Ilya nods at Jimin. ‘I’m aware that you want to be able to use his System as a safe haven for the New Borns across the Universe.’

Camat and the two others look surprised at this. Surprised in a good way, or at least that’s what Hoseok thinks.

‘However, from what we know of Bhumi, and the other planets around it or the space in the region - we would not recommend approaching the zone,’ Ilya explains. ‘And we would not advice you to step close to Axudar - especially not with a New Born with you.’

Ilya nods at Jungkook who shrinks back just a little.

‘Has Ndica corrupted his home System with his leech-craft?’ Taeh’yung scoffs, ‘What trash.’

This completely different tone of statement makes Ilya and the others do a double take at the Zhak’gri.

‘My proposal to you, is that you ignore Axudar - do not step any closer than you already have at Cuab-D2. And instead, allow us to help you go all the way to Bhumi instead.’ Ilya proposes. ‘This is where you have to ultimately go - our current ship is more than capable of taking you there in a short period of time, as well as offering you genuine protection against these Beings called the Omhlophe. We can take you in a way that hides you from the GLA.’

This was probably the most secure, and the most ideal proposal any of them have ever heard. And it would be so easy to accept.

Because side-stepping Axudar completely would have no change or effect on their trajectory. They could simply use another port or Dock to refuel if needed - travelling to Axudar itself was not critical to their trajectory - but it was necessary to their mission. One of the reasons why they had chosen Axudar was because of its distance from the GLA.

‘I am also aware that you need to restock on supplies,’ Ilya presses on. ‘Rations, food, weapons - every and anything. We can supply you with what you need.’

‘But?’ Yoongi inquires.

‘There is no but,’ Ilya replies. ‘However, as someone who understands what you’re going to do - and who understands the situation very well, I would like to request you something.’

Ilya turns to address Jimin.

‘What is it?’

‘There is something of great importance that you need to be aware of,’ Ilya begins carefully. ‘Something that - considering what has happened to you, you have been made blind to - or possibly, been purposefully hidden from you.’

Jimin frowns at this, leaning in closer, a look of uncertainty in his eyes.

‘I am aware of your position - where you stand. I am sure that as someone trying to return to their System, to return to their home which is in a state of so much unknown resolve and uncertainty, you would do everything in your ability to understand more before stepping forward, to prevent any unnecessary danger befalling those who support you.’

Jimin nods to that, fidgeting just a little.

‘Waiting for me at Cuab is my left-hand. This is the last leg of our expansion as well as bringing the last of our captured family back home,’ Ilya informs them. ‘He is a New Born- raised and escaped from Axudar.’

‘Oh!’ Taeh’yung exclaims, ‘Like Jungkookie?’

Ilya nods, smiling at Jungkook before looking back at Jimin.

‘I understand you want to be on the move. And that you are missing your captain. Allow us to help you. To give you protection, and help find your Captain. Do not go to Axudar- just stay a while longer. It would not take more than 2 hours of your time once he’s back inside the ship.’ Ilya states, ‘And if you do not wish to meet with him, and would like to leave immediately, I cannot keep you- we will help you restock with what we have here, and you may go as you please. But please- please do not go to Axudar.’

This would be a massive leg-up, if Hoseok was being honest. And from what he’s been hearing about Axudar, he understands why they would be warned against it.

‘We can step out for a while, if you wish to discuss this amongst yourselves,’ Ilya says as he stands up. The other 3 stand with him. ‘But I would highly encourage and press this before you.’

He addresses Jimin directly again, a sort of sad smile on his face.

‘I know what it’s like- to lose so much, to be displaced.’ Ilya says gently, ‘I know what it feels like, to want to protect family- home. Please stay, and let us help you.’

With that they step out of the wide room. It’s quiet for a while as Taeh’yung settles in Ilya’s chair, hoisting his feet up to keep on the shiny table.

‘New Born?’ Yoongi repeats quietly, hands crossed over the table. ‘They’re more scattered than we thought.’

‘I wouldn’t be surprised if they were everywhere,’ Sk’jin says quietly before exhaling out slowly. ‘What do you guys think?’

‘What about the Omhlophe?’ Yoongi asks, ‘I’m not underestimating their warnings or advice- in fact I’m-’ the Human pauses, ‘-we do not bring anything good with us.’

‘It’s what I said to him,’ Sk’jin replies tiredly, ‘He has heard of the Omhlophe- but under different names. They’ve been around for a while, only some networks know about them, but I’m guessing that these networks were eradicated once their use was met. Wouldn’t be too surprised, a lot of them were destroyed in the past decade especially.’

Hoseok can testify to that without even having to do any research. When the Akramanese, or the Red Evil, had really started gaining traction and swept through the edges of the GLA, they left in their wake death, destruction – all as a cover-up for what they were truly doing. It wasn’t surprising that the Omhlophe were the pawns sent out, setting up discussions and orders within pirating networks so that they could carry out their dirty work. And once it was done and completed, all they had to do would be to scourge the network and they were free.

‘He’s-…he really wants us to meet his left-hand.’ Sk’jin says slowly, ‘And he’s- he’s like Jungkook looks up, eyes wide as he listens intently.

‘Born and raised and escaped from Axudar,’ Hoseok mumbles quietly, ‘Amme had also been… strange- regarding Axudar.’

‘JD told me,’ Jimin says quietly staring at the shiny table surface, ‘About Axudar. Namjoon also, had said that.’

‘What do you think we should do?’ Hoseok asks Jimin.

Jimin looks up for a moment before looking down again.

‘Ilya said- said I had to know something,’ he says carefully, ‘I- I know that there is something. Something very very-’ he stops, ‘I know that something happened, that connects Axudar, to my home. That connects all of this, all of what happened- to me, to Yoongi, to the GI, the Yishengs- even to Sk’jin. All the way to Jungkook and I-’

No one speaks.

‘I don’t want to- I will not bring harm- to others because of me,’ he declares. ‘Grisial was- many bad things happened. Ynqaba too. And this is your family.’

He looks up at Sk’jin.

‘I do not want anything bad to happen to them.’

‘I think-’ Sk’jin stops before he smiles a little, ‘I think they’re fully aware of the dangers. Of what can go wrong. They were not giving this offer just as a- just freely.’

‘What about Namjoon?’ Jungkook asks quietly. ‘They said they can help?’

Admittedly, that was incredibly tempting. To have half of the troves on your side to help you out was a massive boost to their whole mission. It’s one Hoseok would eagerly jump any other day.

But right now.

Everyone seems hesitant.

‘I think we should see what Ilya’s talking about- his left-hand,’ Taeh’yung chirps in.

Everyone except Taeh’yung.

They all look across at him.

‘I mean- I feel like that seems logical?’ he shrugs, ‘It’ll be interesting to hear what he has to say about Axudar! And Hobi! You didn’t find anything about Axudar in your search right?’

Hoseok nods.

He had done an extensive search on anything related to Axudar. He even found information on Amme’s trip there but nothing really concrete about the System itself.

‘Isn’t it best if we find out what’s happening first? Right? Right?’ Taeh’yung eagerly presses.
'Namjoon would probably agree at once,’ Jimin says quietly.

‘Can we not talk about him like he died and we’re discussing his wishes and or actions in some reminiscent way,’ Sk’jin drawls out.

Understandably, none of them want to say anything more.

Hoseok quietly breathes out. Just like how he had to take over at Amme’s ship, he was going to have to step up again.

‘We should do it,’ Yoongi announces quietly instead, his tone firm firm.

‘Yeah! Like I said!’ Taeh’ying agrees immediately, sounding a little petulant.

‘But-’

‘Cuab-D2 is a massive prison- they’re well protected not to mentioned completely stocked. While the Omhlophe are a formidable and powerful force- they’re not going to be willing to expose themselves likes this so soon after Grisial.’ Yoongi reasons, ‘And they’re in control of a lot of troves- saying you have half of the troves across the universe is not a small number. If anyone can spot Namjoon anywhere- because I know GI agents make stops for re-fuelling or stocking up or something. If we can pinpoint their location to a region or something.’

‘Okay,’ Jimin nods in agreement. ‘Okay- let’s…let’s stay and hear what his left-hand has to say.
We will- we will think of what to do after that?’

Jimin looks hesitantly at Sk’jin who nods wearily.

‘Hobi?’

Yoongi is looking at him, clearly waiting for any additional comment.

But honestly Hoseok is a little blank.

This was a strange place to find themselves in- this whole thing was like some wild ride through close-cluster asteroids. Sometimes they were rushing- running all over some Dock, infiltrating stations and offices. Sometimes they were escaping with their lives.

Hoseok almost feels like he’s at his limit with how much he can bear.

That, and he was also incredibly exhausted, and with what Ilya was offering them? He just wants to agree, side-step Axudar, and just let Ilya take them all the way to Bhumi.

‘We listen to his left-hand, and based on what he has to say, we take our next step regarding Axudar.’ Yoongi offers.

He’s met with agreeing nods from everyone.

‘Yeah, okay. That sounds good, let’s talk to this guy,’ Hoseok nods in agreement as he stands up,
‘I’ll go get them.’

‘Wait-,’ Jimin calls, also standing up and addressing Sk’jin.

Sk’jin raises an eyebrow at him.

‘Do you want to stay?’
Sk’jin’s expression is impassive.

‘Ilya is family to you,’ Jimin begins, ‘Right? So- so, will you stay?’

‘I’m seeing this mission through-‘

‘Do you want to stay?’

Sk’jin grimaces a little.

‘I have things to see through,’ Sk’jin states clearly. ‘Meeting Ilya does not change that.’

Jimin presses his lips down in a thin line as he nods.

They tell Ilya of their agreement and the Ožkan looks a little appeased.

‘We’re about 45 minutes from Cuab,’ Camat informs them. ‘Guess we’re gonna have to brief you all on what’s about to happen and how it’s about to happen.’

Hoseok nods to that, sitting back down.

‘We’ve been working on this for about, give or take, 7 sols,’ Camat explains.

Hoseok wants to gawk.

Seven whole sols. How have they been operating with this level of secrecy for so long? Hoseok catches Sk’jin’s proud smile as he listens.

‘Leading up to the past few sols, pirates were rounded up heavily- obviously there were normal reasons to this,’ Camat vaguely gestures with his hands, rolling his eyes, ‘But also because the Yishengs were attempting to blame pirates for the shit they were pulling, as their initial decoy in the shape of the Alliance, was giving out. A lot of our numbers were taken in- and with how close we got to what was going on- with the Yishengs and their involvement with the New Borns as well as the GI, we had to, so to speak, pack up and leave for a while.’

‘After the failed attempt to assassinate Ilya, we dove even deeper and stayed quiet- we only operated as infiltrators more than anything. We suffered heavy losses in terms of assets and regions of course- but we’ve been able to retake and control our main territories,’ the Orvan adds. ‘The last thing we wanted was to be in their radar.’

‘Of course, this was difficult to do,’ Ilya admits, ‘Especially when you have both the GIU and the Venture Unit attempting to find an angle on you- the interns flooded us.’

Sk’jin chuckles at that.

‘But we’ve been employing their tactics on them for a very long time now,’ Camat grins as he sets down his screen to the reader-slot on the table, ‘We sent our own interns. Which is why our troves-’ the holographic projection lights up and expands over the large empty space within the circular table. ‘-include mainly GLA Docks, Ports, prisons and jails, and even officers within main Šerdesas.’

The map is incredibly extensive and encompassing. Hoseok is not surprised to find countless well known Venture Unit troves listed and mapped in this display.

In fact this was absolute perfection.
They were employing tactics perfected and developed by the Venture Unit, where most of the agents were ex-pirates, criminals, and high-ranking offenders, and using it against them by sending in the most unsuspecting Beings.

Hoseok wonders how many of them he’s worked with or has come across.

‘We lost contact with many of these places- but we’ve been adding and getting them back now,’ Ilya explains, ‘And our next stop at Cuab-D2 is one of our final major troves.’

‘And this is where your left-hand is waiting for you?’ Yoongi asks.

Ilya nods. ‘He got himself arrested and has converted Cuab-D2 as his own trove, you could say. That’s where we found Evdos actually.’

Sk’jin suddenly laughs at that, before hastily disguising it as a cough.

‘How long has he been there?’ Jimin asks.

‘3 sols now- a little after Ilya here nearly lost his old head,’ Camat grins, nodding at the Ožkan.

‘But we’ve been in regular contact- especially the past 2 or so sols,’ Ilya ignores Camat the same way Hoseok has seen Namjoon ignore Sk’jin.

‘Is there anything we need to be aware of?’ Yoongi inquires. ‘How much of Cuab is really under your-’

‘-Cuab-D2 is ours,’ the Orvan emphasizes lightly, ‘All arrangements made from Cuab are made by us. Our only hiccup throughout this year has been because of your arrest.’

Yoongi grimaces.

‘Oh yeah, by the way, cool fight! Big fan!’ Camat grins, holding both hands up as though cheering. ‘You’ll find a lot of fans here!’

The Axudarian also gestures brightly, as though very pleased to meet Yoongi.

Yoongi looks comically disturbed while Jimin laughs quietly.

‘If it’s all right with you,’ Hoseok pipes in, addressing Ilya, ‘Can I ask you to look into something?’

‘About?’

‘You have interns nearly everywhere, including Šerdesas.’

Ilya nods slowly to that, eyes narrowing a little.

‘We would like to know who issued and verified our arrest orders,’ Hoseok states clearly. ‘I’m sure that from what Sk’jin has told you, the secrecy of our mission, regardless of the intention and or perspective of the Special Jury and those involved, is of utmost importance. Having our faces broadcasted in such a public and wide setting, clearly sets us back in our attempts at secrecy jeopardizing this whole mission. We are so close to finalizing this- what happened back in Māho-5 was not just some minor mistake or carelessness on our part- but an obvious and unknown attempt to sabotage us in an extremely public way.’

Ilya nods a little before he glances over at Camat who says, ‘Sweet! Can do!’ throwing in a cheery gesture.
'We’re also working on tracking your captain,’ Ilya adds. ‘But the GI have always been tricky to track,’ he smiles wryly at Yoongi who gives a sort of dismissive shrug of his shoulders, ‘-and if they don’t want to be found, and are going to lengths to misdirect you by taking your isotopic trackers on the wrong trajectory with what could be the help of your captain himself, then honestly I’ll be frank and say it could be close to impossible especially if it needs to be done quickly.’

Sk’jin nods to that.

‘We’ll be at Cuab in 30 minutes I’m guessing,’ Camat slides his screen out of the slot and holds it up to look at it closely, ‘Is there anything else you guys need? Or want?’

‘The escort guards,’ Jimin says at once, ‘Um- they’re asleep. Right now. But I don’t know, what we should do.’

‘Ah- right,’ Camat makes a funny face before looking over at Ilya.

‘It would be fish-fishy to just kinda remove their memories,’ Jimin adds slowly, ‘I don’t- it’s not ideal-‘

Camat mouths quietly ‘fishy?’ while squinting at the Axudarian next to him who just rolls his eyes in response.

‘Leave them to us,’ Ilya states, ‘We’ll make sure that they are sent back without any harm.’

Jimin nods gratefully to that.

‘So does that mean you’ll allow us to help you reach Bhumi?’ Ilya asks.

‘We want to hear your left-hand speak first.’ Jimin says after looking around at them, as though for support. ‘While our plan is definitely to head into Axudar, we want to be completely informed about it first, and then decide our next step.’

Ilya doesn’t look too pleased, his mouth twitching a little. But he doesn’t press the subject any further.

Amme had neither been for or against the idea of going to Axudar. But the Yisheng had a different angle to why she would want them to go there in the first place.

This was the first time someone who knew most certainly the same or even more than them, was advising them not to go to Axudar.

And Hoseok does not know how to feel about it.

‘Okay, so if that’s that- then I guess we just wait until we get on board to Cuab,’ Camat announces. ‘If it’s okay with you all, can I get Hoseok and uh, Yoon-ki?’

‘Yoongi.’

‘Yoon-ki.’

‘…yeah that’s fine.’

‘-yes, Hoseok and Yoon-ki to come with me?’ Camat says, looking pleased as he stands.

‘What for?’ Hoseok asks as he stands.
‘Well, if we’re gonna restock and shit, I need the pilot and weapons specialist?’ Camat shrugs as he waves his screen, ‘I mean, that’s what your ship registry says.’

Yoongi chuckles under his breath as he stands up, ‘Well that didn’t take you very-’

The Human pauses suddenly, smile still frozen on his face before every single bit of colour drains from his face, his eyes roll back, and his knees give out.

Jimin catches him before he can hurt himself, eyes bewildered and scared though he refrains from expressing himself. Hoseok stands up but Sk’jin grabs his wrist and keeps him back.

‘Woah- is he okay-?’ Camat exclaims, jogging around the table.

‘This is the second time,’ Sk’jin says quietly from next to him, still seated, ‘When you were taken- this happened to him.’

‘Will he be all right?’ Hoseok asks tersely as Jimin and Jungkook put him down on the floor carefully, the Vicitra is clearly shaken and afraid. Taeh’yung is not helping Camat understand as he wails, throwing his arms up dramatically. Sk’jin lets go of his hand.

‘He’ll wake up,’ Sk’jin says, to both Hoseok and Ilya, ‘He’s tired.’

‘How long has he been awake?’ Ilya asks, sounding gentle.

‘5 sols?’ Sk’jin replies, ‘Give or take.’

‘That’s quite long,’ Ilya says softly, a sadness in his eyes. ‘Too long.’

Sk’jin doesn’t respond to that and he ignores Hoseok’s little nudge as well. Hoseok wants to know what Ilya meant by that.

‘Set up one of the internal Medical Bays,’ Ilya tells the Orvan who nods at once, eyeing the situation with concern. ‘Jaen, make sure we’re all set up with the Bridge.’

The Axudarian, Jaen, gives a short nod before walking out.

‘Will he be okay? Is it because he’s Human?’ Camat asks Hoseok as Jimin carries Yoongi out carefully, following after the Orvan who leads them out through the other door. Jungkook and Taeh’yung follow them like children (albeit being taller than both of the Beings they were following), with the latter clinging to Jungkook’s sleeve.

‘I don’t know,’ Hoseok replies honestly before exhaling out slowly, thinking about Sk’jin and Ilya’s comments, ‘But Taeh’yung is there, so if anything was wrong, he’d know.’

This wasn’t something everyone knew apparently- something Ilya, and potentially this other Being, Ilya’s left-hand, knew about.

Camat looks dubious as he asks, ‘Is Taeh’yung the healer?’

‘Uh- sure,’ Hoseok answers. That was an easier explanation to give than anything else.

‘I uh, guess it’s just you? But I mean, a Venture Unit agent should know about weaponry, am I right?’

‘You did a lot of research?’
‘Enough,’ Camat grins, his many teeth very clean and bright. ‘Also a big fan by the way!’

‘I- wait.’ Hoseok squints up at Camat. ‘-based on what?’

‘Checked up on you! Really cool record! Also, I mean what happened in the tram was really cool. Chest is still burning by the way- though I guess I have the Vicitra to thank for that.’ Camat replies with an amused huff of a laugh as he touches his chest rather gingerly, ‘He’s gonna make a really good fighter soon.’

‘Sure.’

Hoseok would honestly really like it if Jungkook could stay away from all and any of this. But there was of course no denying his natural abilities.

Camat’s grin widens and he just gestures for Hoseok to follow him.

At the doorway Hoseok looks back, catching sight of Sk’jin talking to Ilya, his expression shockingly light. He’s saying something, and Ilya seems to be commenting, throwing in a gesture with his hand that Sk’jin takes into his own, not even seeming to realize what he was doing. His eyes are vibrant, bright- but somehow it makes Hoseok strangely melancholic, a pain seeping into his chest that he can’t rightly identify.

‘So anyways, we have with us a very very nice range of automated blasters powered by these really nice and small solar packs that don’t cause a single dent in your shields,’ Camat explains, maybe a bit too excited about weapons. ‘Also maybe you want some new shit for your Medical Bay? Like, can’t have your small folks fainting around?’

‘Yeah, I guess,’ Hoseok agrees, glancing towards where the “small folks” had gone off into.

‘Don’t worry,’ Camat says reassuringly, ‘Our facilities offers some of the best medical services- if your friend Jin needs a UV room, we have it perfectly set up. Though it was originally designed for just one Being to use per session, don’t see why two won’t fit!’

‘I don’t think anyone else would need it,’ Hoseok replies with a confused frown. Maybe Taeh’yung would want to join in- you could never tell with Taeh’yung.

Camat instead raises his eyebrows, opening his mouth before he stops himself and says, ‘You’re right!’

Hoseok does not know what to think of any of this.

‘Camat!’ someone calls him from across the lobby.

‘Aye?’

‘The in-mates are getting antsy- Ilya told me to redirect it to you?’ they say, voice quieter as they approach them.

Camat groans.

Right- that was a question that had passed Hoseok’s mind earlier but in light of things (as was tradition now), he had bigger varaks to fry.

‘You’re still housing in-mates?’

‘I mean yeah?’ Camat looks like it’s the most obvious answer possible. ‘We couldn’t just get rid of them? They’re taking up the cells in the innermost cells. The original guards are also there. Not together! Separate cells and sections of course!

He laughs as though it’s the funniest thing he’s ever heard.

‘What will you do with them?’

‘Transferring at Cuab. We’re giving the original guards and remaining staff a chance to stay or go.’

‘...go?’

‘Yeap.’

Hoseok is not sure he really wants to know the details but he presses on anyways.

‘As in you kill them?’

Camat looks horrified.

‘What?! No! Spaces, fuck?’ Camat exclaims, arms crossing over his arms as though to protect himself from Hoseok. ‘Any single Being with a working brain understands what it means to have a complete take over like this- the implications are pretty clear!’

Of course- one of the reasons why Sk’jin was so successful in what he did was not because of his use of violence, but his absolute refusal to acknowledge his power despite blatantly using it in every front.

And that was terrifying. Because if anything, Sk’jin was known for being absolutely unpredictable.

And clearly, Ilya was following in his footsteps, and perhaps adding even more to Sk’jin’s legacy, Ilya was doing the same, using the immense power and authority he governed, to completely take over massive pre-existing GLA-based networks.

As an agent, had Hoseok come across Ilya’s work and had been given the choice to stay or have a questionable leave, he would have chosen to stay as well.

It makes Hoseok think about the many failed attempts of sending Venture Unit agents to infiltrate Sk’jin’s network. He feels a sense of comradery towards those unfortunate Beings.

‘Right,’ Hoseok amends, ‘You just hear and see a lot when you’re in the field.’

Camat makes a sound of agreement, nodding along slowly, ‘Yeah I guess that’s understandable- it’s always good to approach a situation expecting the least and hoping for the worst.’

‘...sure I guess?’ Hoseok grimaces.

‘Okay so I guess we can do the restocking and stuff after I settle shit downstairs- wait not, upstairs, ugh my memory,’ Camat whines, ‘Lemme just go take care of this. I’ll see you after we settle in Cuab.’

Hoseok would argue, but they were very much in the hands of an extremely powerful organization in the midst of one of the largest network expansion operation Hoseok has been made aware of. They would have gotten rid of them very easily had it not been for Sk’jin.

It was something you learnt very early on if you were a part of the Venture Unit.
Kindness towards one Being could potentially mean inexcusable cruelty towards another.

Hoseok is very aware of what would have happened had they not had Sk’jin with them so he treads carefully. So he just nods, knowing full well that Camat knows that Hoseok can’t respond otherwise.

Camat gives him a friendly wave and jogs off- only to stop, smack his head, and jog off in the other direction.

Hoseok back-tracks, making his way back to where he saw Jimin and the others disappear off to. The Medical Bays in this area was clearly meant for the officers- basically for the non-inmates aboard the ship. It’s spacious, and contained every possible medical supply and equipment you would need in the absence of a Yisheng. There’s a few other Beings around- one lounging on a Bed down the Bay, reading a screen with great interest, several pipes connecting to her from a long tube like machine that was glowing faintly. There’s a small group of uniform-wearing healers, all talking amongst themselves as they ran some form of analysis. There’s also another Being, clearly very hung-over by the windows. There’s a large bucket next to his Bed, just ready for use.

Hoseok spies the portable UV-Bed. It was close to the surgery booths, and was clearly designed for frequent use. And it certainly did appear to be used frequently.

He finds the others huddled around a Bed, Yoongi is awake and he looks terrible.

But he’s saying something, making the three around him laugh.

Jimin is the first to notice him.

‘That was fast?’ he questions, walking forward to meet him.

‘Some problems with the inmates,’ Hoseok explains before looking Yoongi up and down, ‘You okay?’

Yoongi just shrugs, leaning back as he subconsciously mimics Jimin’s movement. Hoseok doesn’t think either of them are purposefully doing it, but their hands automatically link, fingers entwining, leaning into each other’s space.

‘Just tired. Took some medication, feeling better though.’ Yoongi gives him a small smile as though to reassure him.

Hoseok ignores Ilya and Sk’jin’s exchange echoing in his mind.

‘The healer is cool!’ Taeh’ying adds, ‘She was very quick with her diagnosis! She also gave me these!’

Taeh’ying is holding a handful of colourful candy- the kind given to children to calm down, laced with the slightest bit of sedatives. It was surprisingly legal.

‘That’s really nice buggy,’ Hoseok pats Taeh’ying on the back, wondering how many he’d need to consume to knock him out and commends the healer for thinking fast. Clearly, Taeh’ying’s dramatics were not appreciated. ‘Don’t eat them all at once.’

Taeh’ying nods rapidly, settling down on the Bed to sit near Yoongi’s feet.

‘Where’s Sk’jin?’ Yoongi asks.
‘Still talking with Ilya,’ Hoseok steps closer next to Jimin, lowering his voice, ‘I think they’re catching up.’

‘Will they let us go?’ Jungkook asks nervously, eyes wide.

There’s a sort of strained pause shared between Yoongi, Jimin, and Hoseok before Yoongi says, ‘Yeah- we’re just gonna stay a bit to listen to some guy and then leave.’

Jungkook looks a little placated, nodding.

A small alarm rings before a cool voice announces, ‘Exiting warp in one minute. Please secure yourself immediately for your own safety.’

Taeh’yung flings himself over Yoongi, who lands back with a choked ‘oof’ as he declares, ‘I’ll keep us secure.’

Yoongi grumbles but doesn’t bother trying to remove the Zhak’gri off of himself and instead pats his head a few times. Jimin just laughs as he takes a seat, pulling Jungkook with him and making sure they were both secure on the footstools by the surrounding walls.

Hoseok glances around one more time, watching as some of the healers secure the hung-over Being on their Bed before securing herself to a footstool attached to the walls.

‘Exiting warp in 20 seconds.’

They’re all nervous- with the exception of Taeh’yung who was spread over Yoongi’s grumbling form. Nothing had gone according to plan- though it was worth mentioning that they didn’t really have that much of a plan to start off with. But all of this was starting to really get out of hand.

And with Namjoon gone, and with the high chance that the Omhlophe could track their location, they were thrown into an extreme situation where they really couldn’t make any straightforward decision.

And honestly, Hoseok is expecting a mess as soon as they exit warp. It wouldn’t be the first time and it certainly would feel like it made sense to do so. But instead everything turns out well, their safety straps retract back to the footstools and walls, and an announcement that everything was clear and green is heard.

‘I wish I could see what was happening,’ Yoongi says from under Taeh’yung. ‘Somehow- it’s like I understand what’s happening. I see how Ilya, how Sk’jin used to work, how this all exists- but at the same time it’s like I can’t really visualize it.’

Hoseok nods in understanding, glad that someone else was feeling the same in a sense.

Honestly, Hoseok would like to take the Laikin, and just jet off. Taeh’yung would be able to get them out, surely, and just leave all of this behind. But seeing Sk’jin the way he was reacting- somehow so alive, and with what they were offering to them regarding- well, regarding everything to do with their mission, Hoseok was staying put.

‘Hey,’ a voice behind them calls out. It’s one of the healers Hoseok had seen from earlier. ‘Your stats say you’ve stabilized and your overall physical functions seem to be normal. You can leave the Bay if you want, but I would suggest resting for a little while longer.’

‘Thank you-’ Yoongi begins, pushing Taeh’yung away but Jimin steps in, hand firmly clamping down on Yoongi’s shoulder and pushing the Human back down says with an extremely polite smile, ‘Yes, we will be resting for a while longer. Thank you very much.’

The healer gives Yoongi an amused look before nodding and walking back to her team.

Yoongi seems to decide that arguing or questioning Jimin’s actions would be detrimental to himself so he just stays down and says, ‘Fiend,’ instead.

Jimin gives Yoongi an unimpressed look and gestures for Hoseok, as though for support.

‘You should rest. Leave the Laikin to me-’

‘-and me!’ Jungkook says stoutly, standing up to full height, looking as intimidating as he could. Hoseok briefly wonders if Jungkook is posturing, as though attempting to compete with Yoongi.

‘-uh, and you just,’ Hoseok pauses, wondering how to phrase his words, ‘-rest. Take a break for a while.’

Yoongi nods, looking a little dejected at being ganged up like this. But honestly if he was going to just collapse like that out of nowhere, then it was best the Human just stay here, where he could fall back into the Bed and receive immediate medical service.

‘What about Sk’jin?’ Jimin asks. He was still thinking along the same vein as when he had posed those questions to the Khol’isa. And Hoseok gets it.

With what happened in Ynqaba, and before that too at that nightmarish planet, Hoseok understands why Jimin felt the need to show Sk’jin this way out. And even though Jimin wasn’t necessarily the authority of this rag-tag team, this mission was built on delivering him to his home-system. And Jimin knew this.

Which was why, this was his way of telling Sk’jin, that he didn’t need to go any further than he wished.

‘I was-,’ Jimin pauses, frowning a little as he considers his words carefully, ‘-I feel like he chooses to leave because he believes he doesn’t deserve to stay.’

‘It’s his decision,’ Hoseok tells him gently. ‘We don’t know what he’s really thinking- how he’s thinking of things. This is a great surprise to him. Maybe he will change his mind later- let’s just let him be for now.’

Jimin nods to that, still looking upset about the whole thing.

The light outside the wide windows suddenly dim, making the lights inside the Bay automatically adjust, before turning extremely bright. The windows shift in their tint, filtering the bright lights and allowing them to see clearly.

Cuab-D2 was a massive structure. Similar to every other GLA-based prison, this was long and flat though with considerable space to allow docking of every sort of transporter-ship. And despite knowing that they were here safely, that everything was being worked out perfectly well from within Cuab with Ilya’s network, it’s still unsettling to come across a prison of this scale.

In many ways, it was easy taking over prisons. The GLA didn’t want to afford sending off real living officials and officers, and Androids could be compromised if not careful. Cyborgs were an expensive upkeep, depending on what region you established the prison in. So taking over a prison, especially if you had enough of the same network members gathered in one with a plan and agenda, you could take over easily enough.
'Cool!' Taeh’yung exclaims, jumping off of the bed (with a grateful groan from Yoongi), and rushes to the window. Jungkook shuffles, eyes darting about, eager to go check the view but also adamant in standing his ground.

‘Come on,’ Jimin smiles up at the Vicitra, ‘Let’s go look?’

Jungkook beams, nodding quickly and making his hair shake about as he takes Jimin’s proffered hand.

‘Yes, leave the sick one behind,’ Yoongi says in monotone, though he looks amused as Jungkook looks back, a sort of pleased look on his face.

‘So now you’re admitting that you’re unwell?’ Hoseok asks, stepping closer to inspect Yoongi’s stats on the attached screen to his Bed.

‘Never said I was not unwell,’ Yoongi quips back, sitting up slowly as though he was dizzy. ‘What do you think about Axudar and how no one seems to be really giving us any real answers about it.’

Hoseok sighs out, pushing back the screen before sitting on the Bed and twisting himself a little to face the Human.

‘I’ll be honest I really don’t know,’ Hoseok says simply, ‘I genuinely don’t know.’

‘Do you think they’re trustworthy?’

‘Is anyone trustworthy? I mean, if you had a choice between saving me or Jimin, I know who you’d choose, and that’s the basis in which I trust you.’ Hoseok gives him a shrug. ‘Trust isn’t a thing here. It’s just what you can or can’t gain from your interactions.’

‘What do they have to gain from us?’

‘Potentially a lot. Think about it- they didn’t kill you immediately,’ Hoseok replies, ‘They know about the GI, they know about the Gaia Case. Even about the Omhlophe.’

‘So they’re just watching?’

‘Probably listening too.’

Yoongi looks down at his hands and then at the screen next to his Bed.

‘Damn, I just gave them my whole medical record.’ He says dryly.

‘It’s understandable I would be doing the same,’ Hoseok sighs out, ‘It’s not personal.’

‘It is for Sk’jin.’ Yoongi corrects him, ‘Probably for Ilya too. It became personal after he decided that he wanted to keep me prisoner.’

Yoongi definitely had a point there.

‘What about this guy he wants us to meet? Someone from Axudar itself. Any ideas?’ Yoongi asks him, looking away to follow Jimin’s movements across the Bay.

Taeh’yung seems to be telling them some sort of story, pointing and motioning around the massive prison they were slowly flying past. You could probably see Axudar’s star from here.

‘If he’s one of the eggs- New Borns, as they call them. Then it would be an interesting insight,’ Hoseok admits. ‘Jungkook was raised, in a way, protected from his own birth, protected from the greater horrors of how he came to be. Which is why he didn’t know so much about anything.’

‘His mothers clearly did,’ Yoongi says thoughtfully, ‘And one of them could have potentially been like me- or somewhat similar to my situation.’

‘And maybe this guy is like that-,’ Hoseok says before he pauses. Yoongi looks at him, eyebrow raised.

‘What is it?’ he asks.

Hoseok doesn’t know how to relay the information, or well, words exchanged between Ilya and Sk’jin regarding the Human. Should he?

‘Did you hear something? About others like me?’ Yoongi asks, his expression neutral, his tone simple. ‘Or was it about me?’

‘I think Ilya has definitely done a lot of research- regarding the GI, the eggs- and everything else in between,’ Hoseok says carefully, turning a bit more and leaning in a little, ‘He said that you’ve been awake for a very long time. Too long, he said.’

Yoongi doesn’t look surprised or upset about the implications of Ilya’s words. Instead he just nods, as though in agreement.

‘Yoongi,’ Hoseok begins softly, ‘Do you know what he meant by that?’

Yoongi just shrugs a little and with a small huff of a laugh says, ‘It could mean a lot. Or nothing. But-...’ he looks up, holding his full attention.

‘Hobi, you know don’t you?’

Yoongi’s expression is open and honest.

‘Sk’jin knew of course. He’s- in a way, similar to me. Taeh’yung always knew. It’s why he’s decided to stay- gotta save his babies one way or another or something. Namjoon’s probably guessed it too. And Jimin-‘ Yoongi looks down finally. ‘Jimin knows too. But he doesn’t want to accept it I guess.’

Something ignites inside of Hoseok.

A sort of anger- not at Yoongi- far from it. But anger at their situation, at their circumstances. Anger at what they’ve each individually had to face, had to carry, had to bear.

‘Maybe I’m with Jimin in this,’ Hoseok gets out. ‘Because I don’t-.’

‘I’m dying.’

Hoseok closes his eyes, breathing out slowly.

‘We all know this.’ The Human says it so nonchalantly. Like this was an irrefutable fact. ‘You can’t deny it. Look at me.’

Hoseok wishes it wasn’t true.

But it was so clear to him- stark in his memory from just the other day.
How sick and unwell Yoongi appeared.

And maybe that was what he always looked like- maybe that was how others saw him. And it took Hoseok a few hours of not seeing Hoseok face-to-face to realize just how…faded, the Human appeared. It didn’t help that he had been healed by Amme previously, so the contrast in Hoseok’s memory is undeniable.

‘Denial is a river you won’t be able to find on a map.’ Yoongi grins, cackling quietly under his breath, as though he wasn’t just making light of his own mortality.

Hoseok thinks he’s missing some sort of cultural reference here and allows Yoongi to have his moment.

‘Yoongi!’ Taeh’yung yells as he runs towards them, ‘I’m trying to tell them about the emergency shafts inside prisons and how they’re designed to shoot you out into space because in a state of emergency, space is safer than inside the prison for most officers but they won’t believe me!’

Jimin and Jungkook both stand some distance away, looking incredibly skeptical at this shockingly true bit of information about the architectural designs of prisons.

‘Ah- it’s true,’ Yoongi nods while Taeh’yung gives the two behind him a ‘see?’ expression. ‘You can see the chutes- they’re normally located at every other interval.’

Yoongi carefully gets out of the Bed, quietly waving off Hoseok’s attempt to help him.

Jimin watches him with an expertly poised expression. He’s still laughing about Taeh’yung’s actions and antics, still engaging with Jungkook about teasing the Zhak’gri, but it’s pretty clear to see, if you knew what to look for.

Hoseok leans back on the Bed Yoongi just vacated and dully wonders if he should just shoot himself up with every other supplement available there. Though he’s quite sure Human-based medication probably wouldn’t work very well on him.

He sits up when the main doors to the Bay open and it’s followed by the sound of a bunch of Beings exclaiming tiredly before Camat shuffles in, looking exhausted. He’s splattered in blood, and as he steps closer to Hoseok, smells strongly of smoke.

Camat sighs tiredly, as soon as he’s close enough and throws himself on the Bed, the screen in his hand nearly falling to the ground. Hoseok quickly pulls up his feet and legs.

‘Um-’

‘Hey so, how do you handle Vicitra’s,’ Camat asks forgoing any greeting, voice muffled against the mattress.

‘What? Why?’ Hoseok glances back around at Jungkook who was standing behind Jimin and Yoongi by the window, gazing at the view around them as Taeh’yung attempts to be coercing one of the medical staff into giving him some sort of marker-stylus.

‘One of the inmates- a Vicitra, she’s really tough to handle and like, we don’t want to knock her out all the time, you know?’ Camat sighs tiredly, wincing a little as he stretches across the bed, turning on his side. He leaves a few smears of blood over the pristine sheets. ‘She’s gotten herself injured because she fought like, 20 other inmates. I’ll be happy to drop her off in Cuab to be honest.’

‘Oh-’ Hoseok grimaces. ‘Jungkook isn’t- well, he was not raised by Vicitra’s- or by any other Pravasi H’manun.’

‘Oh?’ Camat looks surprised. ‘That’s cool? But like- any tips? We have her sedated at the Bay there treating her injuries.’

A shiver runs down Hoseok’s spine.

‘Don’t worry- like I said, sedated and she’s cuffed,’ Camat makes a funny face, ‘Wish we didn’t have to but damn, they’re unpredictable.’

‘I guess- well, it seems like that’s the best approach?’ Hoseok shrugs before adding as he gestures to the windows, ‘So- all clear?’

‘Oh! Yeah- we’ll be docking soon. Inmates caused a slight delay, but we’ve got them under control now.’ Camat says confidently before looking around and asking, ‘You seen Ilya?’

‘Uh- no.’ Hoseok replies, ‘Maybe still with Sk’jin in that conference room?’

Camat winces as he sits up before he exclaims, ‘Ah! The other reason I came here!’

He hands Hoseok the screen he nearly dropped when he flopped onto the bed.

‘This your captain?’

Hoseok quickly scans the footage given to him, feels his skin prickle as he watches a very short but clear clip of Namjoon walking by himself down a crowded and cramped alley. He appeared fine- no injuries that Hoseok could tell, but it ends when the Kutsoglerin turns the corner into a doorway that sticks out into the street. But before he does so, and Hoseok doesn’t know if it’s just the quality of the footage or the lighting, but it was almost as though Namjoon looked directly at the camera.

‘That’s him.’ Hoseok feels breathless. Finally, they had confirmation that Namjoon was well.

‘Interesting- that’s from Lowet,’ Camat informs him.

‘Lowet?’ Hoseok repeats, his mind reeling, ‘Wait- are you sure?’

‘Seems like it- or maybe he’s gone already? This was from like,-’ Camat taps around the screen a bit, ‘-yeah, almost 2 days ago.’

Lowet was Ynqaba’s neighbouring planet. And Namjoon was back in that region? But why? Why would the GI take him there? Again? And he was walking all by himself too- no one else around him, just casually walking.

‘Anyways- we’re still looking. We don’t really have much of a connection in that area, but Ymir was fine- so we were able to get access through Nuqtai as well.’ Camat tells him.

‘Nuqtai not yours?’

‘Ilya doesn’t like that region; specifically Ymir and the surrounding borders,’ Camat tells him, ‘Says it’s not good memories.’

That was where Sk’jin had disappeared. Of course for Ilya, and for the others left behind, that area would hold nothing but sorrow, confusion, and regret.

‘Well- gotta go get the boss. He hates being called that.-’
‘-if you’re gonna meet Ilya you better fucking clean up!’ the healer from earlier yells as she jogs past, holding a few items under her arms, ‘You know the rules!’

‘Ugh- hygiene first I know!’ Camat yells back before turning to face Hoseok, ‘Be honest with me, how bad do I look.’

‘You could do with a shower.’ Hoseok replies bluntly, ‘Maybe two.’

Camat sighs, ‘Fucking Vicitra’s- well, maybe not yours, but ours.’

He pushes himself up and stands with a groan, waving at Jungkook who was watching suspiciously from where he stood next to Jimin.

‘Hehe, he’s cute,’ Camat grins and adds, ‘It’s gonna take an hour or so I think for things to get moving. Do you guys plan on just chilling here because that’s fine too.’

Hoseok nods. He’s not sure what to do.

‘Just make a list of things you need or want for your ship, and I think either give it to me, or to Ilya- whoever you see first,’ Camat says, nodding at the screen he had brought in. ‘Sorry I can’t help- duty calls. Well, hygiene.’

Hoseok nods with a slight grimace, still unsure how to feel about any of the Beings aboard this ship. Out of curiosity, Hoseok follows after Camat and peers out of the Bay doors. There’s a bunch of Beings outside, nursing some small injury, looking a little woebegone. The doorway into one of the Bay is opened and on the Bed inside, strapped onto the Bed with full restraints and cuffs is a still blood-covered Vicitra, knocked out, a few pipes and wires sticking out of her.

It’s such a shocking difference between this Vicitra and Jungkook.

Jungkook was all large curious eyes, soft wavy hair, goofy but shy grins; most definitely a child in many regards, just forced to adjust to a life that was incredibly cruel and harsh to him.

And this Vicitra- even unconscious, just exuded a wild and dangerous energy to her.

‘Hey- what did he want?’

Jimin is standing behind him, looking curious and concerned. He looks past him, through the doorway. It’s not long before he catches sight of the Vicitra.

‘Same species?’ Jimin asks, glancing back surreptitiously at Jungkook.

Hoseok nods, ‘Unconscious. So nothing to worry about.’

Jimin nods hesitantly.

‘We have news of Namjoon,’ Hoseok informs Jimin, quickly walking back to the bed and grabbing the screen Camat left behind.

‘What?’ Jimin’s expression is of intense relief. ‘He’s alive!’

Hoseok nods, giving Jimin a tight smile as they walk towards where the others stood. Yoongi was already watching them, clearly catching on that something important was being discussed.

Everyone’s reaction is of relief as they watch the short footage. But it’s immediately followed by confusion at his location.
‘We should get Sk’jin,’ Taeh’yung says randomly, ‘Should tell him.’

‘I mean of course,’ Hoseok begins, feeling a bit confused. And almost as though saying his name out loud summoned him, Sk’jin appears through the Bay doorways, looking genuinely happy and lighter than ever, Ilya next to him.

‘Ah- feeling better already?’ Ilya greets Yoongi. His eyes have that strange but profound sadness to them again as he looks at the Human.

The Human nods and says, ‘I am- thank you for offering the Medical Bay.’ And adds without any further preamble, ‘They found Namjoon.’

Sk’jin’s expression morphs rapidly, eyes widening as he takes the screen from Hoseok.

‘Where-?’

‘Lowet,’ Hoseok answers, watching as Sk’jin visibly balks at the information, fingers stiff around the screen edges. ‘2 days ago.’

‘Lowet- Lowet, why?’ Sk’jin mutters, blinking rapidly, attempting to school his expressions. Ilya seems concerned but doesn’t comment.

‘It’s difficult getting any form of access for surveillance in those area, if you even get them at all,’ the Ožkan says instead, ‘There aren’t a lot of places that transmit signals or transmissions that can actually be picked up on unless they’re incredibly local.’

‘So you’re saying this was purposeful?’ both Sk’jin and Hoseok ask at the same time.

‘It’s possible. What are the chances that your captain would appear in one of the very few transmittable frequencies from that System?’ Ilya gives them a small smile as he pauses at the frame where it looked like Namjoon was looking straight at the camera, ‘Maybe he was hoping to send you a message. To tell you that he was all right.’

‘What a dick,’ Sk’jin grumbles under his breath, thrusting the screen back at Hoseok as though the footage had offended him.

‘Don’t be mean about daddy!’ Taeh’yung exclaims, his tone nowhere near innocent.

Sk’jin splutters, raising his hands to cover Ilya’s ears as he hisses, ‘Shut your fucking mouth I know you’re doing it on purpose you little shit!’

Taeh’yung ducks behind Jungkook, cackling under his breath as Sk’jin released Ilya’s head, the latter grumbling about not being a child anymore.

‘Is there any report or progress regarding what I requested?’ Hoseok tries.

Ilya predictably shakes his head, smoothing out his hair as he says, ‘This will take a while I’m afraid.’

Hoseok figures it would. Especially if whoever issued the order took the precaution to cover up their steps with the knowledge that they would try to find out who did it.

‘We came here so that we could go up towards the Bridge, my left-hand will be coming in soon, and I thought it was best to go up to the Bridge for privacy.’ Ilya announces, ‘But if you’re more comfortable being in here, then that’s fine too.’
Yoongi shakes his head at once, ‘Don’t like being confined to the Medical Bay.’

Ilya nods and gestures for them to follow them out.

‘Should I carry you Yoongi?’ Hoseok hears Taeh’yung offer the Human. It’s followed by an amused snort and guesses the offer is declined.

As they walk out of the Bay, Hoseok doesn’t know why but he’s worried Jungkook might see the Vicitra inside one of the other smaller Bays. But to his relief, all the doors are closed and several inconspicuously placed, but well armed, Beings stand near the doorway, chatting amongst themselves.

‘You don’t need to oversee?’ Jimin asks, addressing Ilya. He looks genuinely curious, looking around the slightly emptier than before Lobby area.

‘Jaen is keeping track of everything,’ Camat replies reassuringly, ‘He’ll bite my head off if I try to intervene. Says I’m too disorganized.’

‘This situation is painfully familiar to me,’ Sk’jin chuckles.

Ilya laughs as well, eyes twinkling.

The difficult thing was it was difficult to think badly or suspiciously of Ilya as a Being, especially with how he was now with Sk’jin.

Hoseok puts it out of his mind for now- there was no way of figuring this out right now, and making understanding Ilya’s networking system and the depths and lengths of their plans would make it difficult for them to leave safely considering they were at their mercy.

Taeh’yung skips ahead, jovially linking arms with both Sk’jin and Ilya, chatting nonstop. Hoseok slows his steps a little, allowing Yoongi and Jimin to walk ahead, followed closely by Jungkook, and he brings up the rear.

Hoseok tries his best to shake off his uneasiness. It wasn’t helping- especially Jungkook who is clearly confused by the heavy contrast in attitudes towards this new situation. Obviously Jimin is just somewhat relieved to have Yoongi out of immediate danger, able to get medical help at any given time. Sk’jin seems to be completely immersed, almost in a trance with how he looks at Ilya.

Hoseok redirects his thoughts to Namjoon.

That was, though he had no direct evidence to claim it as true, a clear indicator directed straight at them, to show he was doing all right. Hoseok pauses the footage at the clearest shot.

He’s dressed in a different thick jacket, the hood up his head but his face is clear. There’s a sort of patch over the side of his face, covering the exposed side of his face. His movements were not hurried or scared- he seemed completely fine. Were the GI taking care of him? Were they forcing him to do something for them?

Why Lowet?

Why would the GI take him there of all places?

‘Worried,’ Jungkook says quietly as he pauses to walk next to Hoseok. ‘About Namjoon.’

‘He seems fine,’ Hoseok says as reassuringly as he can, moving away from the footage and pulling up a list to note down all of the supplies the Laikin would need come their next step. ‘Not injured, see?’

Jungkook nods grimly, looking serious. Maybe he was feeling the same too.

‘Hey,’ Hoseok reaches over to ruffle the rapidly growing Vicitra’s hair, ‘It’ll be okay. We’ll get Namjoon back, and we’ll be okay.’

Jungkook takes his hand instead, squeezing it.

They have to go through 3 separate lifts, a tram, and another lift to get up to the main Bridge. The view from here offers them a high angle over the massive prison below. The length of it extends so far, the most distant headlamps on the communication towers blink faintly at them like the stars around them. The massive solar-sails that stretch beneath the whole structure gleams in amber hues, giving the prison a strangely gold-lit appearance from below.

There’s a lot of traffic over one side of the prison, a section of their Docking terraces glowing blue as the Atmoshield works to support the artificial atmosphere. As part of the security, most prisons operated this way, with a very strict regulation following the Atmoshield as inmates had the tendency of escaping out of prison, believing that the Atmoshield outside would protect them as they waited for whatever escape ship was coming to get them. This worked for a while, until the GLA simply designed every prison to never actively operate Atmoshields until issued or ordered by the officers inside the prison.

That lead to many painful and fatal escape attempts, several (many) messy court hearings and trials, and now this was the official standard. At least everything had somewhat stabilized, and no more news about prison sections losing their internal Atmoshield settings collapsing came out.

Though it did wonders to really minimize criminal activity for a while.

The Bridge is huge, at least 50 Beings at their stations. Hoseok spies Jaen near the Navigation Table. She turns around and holds up her hand, 4 fingers held up. Ilya nods and points them to a staircase that lead downwards to a wide and open meeting room.

‘He’ll be here in 4 minutes,’ Ilya says as he sits down, tapping on the table surface twice and similar to the way the table at Amme’s ship had produced tall glasses with water, a few mismatched metallic mugs pop up, filled with a clear pinkish-looking liquid that smells like flowers.

‘Nice,’ Yoongi comments, taking the cup and inhaling the fragrance.

This obsession with tea was definitely a little worrying.

There’s a lot of noise filling in slowly from upstairs, in the Bridge. Ilya is already smiling, looking towards the stairs as he stands again.

Hoseok notices how Jimin is nervously fidgeting. Out of nowhere, Taeh’yung suddenly stands and exclaims, ‘No fucking way!’ Yoongi spills his tea at this exclamation, eyes wide as he looks around worriedly. Jungkook shrinks a little, wincing at the growing noise that’s clearly cheering and sounds of joyous greeting.

‘We get excited,’ Ilya laughs, ‘It’s been quite a while.’

Sk’jin smiles up at the Ožkan, looking entirely at ease and just generally incredibly content.
Hoseok exhales out slowly as footsteps approach.

‘Ilya?’ a voice calls out.

The Ožkan walks around to the staircase, smiling brightly. The footsteps are louder and Hoseok stands to greet this Being Ilya had insisted was so important for them to meet and talk to.

And clearly, judging by everyone’s reactions, no one was expecting this.

He’s fairly tall, smooth fair skin and hair that has clearly been freshly coloured a dark shade. His eyes are a bright neon red, hypnotic and powerful even from here.

And the horns atop his temples, double-helix, clear and well-maintained, tinted rosy-shades, refracting light around him like a halo.

This was a Khol’isa.

A New Born Khol’isa.

‘Jn’young,’ Ilya hugs the Khol’isa with a strength that would hurt most. ‘It’s good to have you back.’

‘Spaces, it’s good to be back,’ Jn’young, the Khol’isa smiles beatifically, actual tears in his eyes.

Hoseok is instantly reminded of K’mara. Not because she’s practically the only other Khol’isa he knew other than Sk’jin, but because of the sheer pure strength of Khol’isa characteristics he exuded.

It’s a horrifying and tragic contrast to Sk’jin, who was undoubtedly such an incredibly beautiful Being but it’s so clear now.

And Yoongi’s words from earlier make it horrifying clear why this contrast was so evident now.

‘I know it’s kinda out of the blue but-’ Ilya pulls away and steps aside as Sk’jin gets up, ‘-honestly I’m still in shock myself but-’

‘-oh!’ Jn’young exclaims softly, looking at Sk’jin, eyes wide. ‘Sk’jin?’

Sk’jin seems a little flustered but it’s not enough to snap him out of his own shock of seeing Jn’young. Of knowing what this Khol’isa now represented for every other Khol’isa across the Known Universe.

This young Khol’isa steps forward, a genuine bright smile on his face as he regards all of Sk’jin with awe and respect.

‘Ah, wow a famous Khol’isa who isn’t K’mara, this is amazing, I’ve heard so much about you-‘ Jn’young smiles, his eyes turning into crescents as he walks over to greet Sk’jin who is still gawking at this elegant Being.

He definitely did not lack any of the characteristic Khol’isa suaveness or charm. He’s dressed like the others, but somehow, as was with Sk’jin, there’s an added air of elegance and regality even to the simple space-suit, partially opened to reveal normal crew-wear.

‘You- you’re not born of the Bloodmoon,’ Sk’jin manages to get out. ‘Are you?’

Jn’young just smiles and shakes his head. He opens his mouth to say something, eyes flitting around the room to glance at everyone but then he stops.

Ilya moves quickly, grabbing Jn’young by his shoulder with a firm grip, keeping him in place as colour drains from the Khol’isa’s face, eyes widening in what could only be horror before it settles a little. As if he knew this was going to be reaction.

‘You-’ Jn’young stares at Jimin, a strange sort of intense hatred passing over his face.

Both Yoongi and Jungkook stand, their bodies tensing as though prepared to jump at any sign. Jimin flinches a little, but doesn’t look away, standing his ground.

‘What-,’ Jn’young glares around at Ilya, ‘What are they doing here?!’ he demands with a hiss.

‘He’s not from Axudar,’ Ilya says calmly. ‘He’s not one of them.’

‘He’s one of them-!’ Jn’young hisses, pushing Ilya’s hand off of his shoulder, taking a step back, ‘How dare you bring him aboard knowing full well-‘

‘Jn’young-’

The Khol’isa throws another horribly withering glare at Jimin before turning on his heel and storming out.

‘What is he talking about,’ Jimin asks, his voice clear and steady, hands in tight fists. ‘Please tell me what he meant by that.’

Ilya sighs quietly.

‘Jn’young, as you could tell, is a Khol’isa. But he was not born the way Sk’jin, or even K’mara was born. Not under the Bloodmoon,’ Ilya begins, sitting back down. Sk’jin still looks stunned, eyes wide and not really blinking a lot. ‘He’s a New Born- much like Jungkook. He was created, in a sense, by what Sk’jin referred to as the Akramanese. He is unlike the GI, created by the Yishengs- he is awake, but like Jungkook here, he’s always been awake- he never had Dreams.’

‘Why did he-‘

‘The Akramanese had many ships- many places that they went to. The Yishengs came across one such ship- there was, from what we have been able to piece together and understand, a great clash between the two at one point close to Axudar. Ndica kept what the Akramanese could not take with them as they fled. And amongst them was Jn’young,’ Ilya continues over Jimin’s questions. ‘Ndica had this great loot- but he didn’t know what to do with them. But with this discovery, this unsuspecting battle, they were able to find a hidden system.’

Jimin sits down again, eyes unmoving from Ilya.

‘You can guess now what they found,’ Ilya smiles bitterly. ‘Who they found. What the records say about the Treaty was not quite what it was- Ndica was able to convince them, the Verktaë, as Jn’young calls them, to help them in their crazy schemes.’

‘You’re saying- you’re saying that Menigišiti, Jimin’s home System, collaborated with Ndica, to create the GI?’ Hoseok asks, his own tone sounding hollow to his ears.

Ilya nods.

‘Jn’young was, for too long, a subject for experimentation,’ Ilya continues. ‘When they could not obtain what they wanted from Jn’young and the others like him, they changed their experiment to sport. But what they managed to extract from their “studies”, the Beings in power in Axudar were able to use to transform and change, to “better” themselves, with what they found, in collaboration with these new friends.”

Of course- Axudar was where the entire hypothesis regarding immortality, regarding the foundation of the experiment that later entrapped Sk’jin and his crew- and considering what Amme had told him about the Beings within Axudar.

‘Jn’young was in many ways, one of the luckier ones- it took him a long time to figure it out, but the Khol’isa in him was strong.’

This must have all started after Jimin was taken by the Akramanese.

‘He got out,’ Sk’jin whispers, ‘He was able to get out.’

Ilya nods.

‘He doesn’t talk about it, but he lost a lot.’ Ilya explains. ‘When he got out- he tried to help the others that were there- but he couldn’t.’

‘When- when was this?’ Jimin asks tremulously.

‘Jn’young says that according to the older ones that were there, the estimation is that it was going on for almost 8 centuries.’ Ilya replies. ‘Jn’young himself is only around half of that. And I found him just 15 sols ago- and I-’ Ilya stops, ‘I admit I did it because of you,’ he looks at Sk’jin. ‘It felt right to do so and I – it was so much more than I could have anticipated. What we were able to understand, what we found out.’

‘This is why you won’t go to Axudar, why you won’t let us go,’ Sk’jin says softly.

Ilya nods and he looks at Jimin, addressing him directly.

‘When I first saw you- even after Camat reported to me of where you came from, and from hearing what Jin had to say- I almost couldn’t stop myself from ordering you to be immediately killed.’

Jemin lowers his head.

‘I’ve seen what happened, seen and heard and felt Jn’young’s pain,’ Ilya says softly.

‘It’s not his fault,’ Yoongi suddenly hisses, leaning in front of Jimin as though to protect him, ‘He knows nothing of this! Stop blaming him for something he didn’t know and didn’t have any control over! He’s innocent in all of this-!’

‘I know,’ Ilya interrupts calmly, ‘You were blinded, Jimin, but I think you have been able to put the piece together haven’t you? You’ve been able to guess what truly happened.’

Jemin nods mutely.

‘Why didn’t you say anything?’ Hoseok demands. ‘Why didn’t you just tell us?’

‘Because you need to hear everything from Jn’young himself.’

‘He clearly doesn’t want to talk to us,’ Yoongi states flatly, ‘We heard enough from you. We’ll be taking our leave-’ ‘Yoongi-‘ Sk’jin says with a warning tone but Jimin stands up, gently pushing Yoongi to the side.

‘If Jn’yong is willing to speak to me, I would like to hear everything he is comfortable telling me,’ Jimin sounds resigned but there’s a determination in his tone. ‘I made a promise, that I would make right what was wronged. To the best of my abilities- I will make things right.’ The rings of light that make the iris of his eyes glow bright. ‘I am the Yemenifesi Ch’inik’eti of my people- the Fate of the Menigišiti, and what my people have wronged, I will make right.’

---

Chapter End Notes

*

(Author’s Notes)

MERRY CHRISTMAS YA HEATHENS
So.
Hi
I am first of all
Extremely sorry for this late update
I’ve been trying my best to keep a schedule to write but, it’s been tough.
Also yes this is indeed Park Jinyoung from Got7
Anyone who knows me
Will know
Of my uh, feelings, regarding this, Park Jinyoung of Got7
And I was like, he would make an absolutely perfect, Khol’isa, like omg have you seen the man because hahahahahaahahahahahahahahahahahahahahaaaa its not like he haunts my dreams or anything of the sort hahahahahahahahahahahsaveme
So yeah! But the next update I am MAKING SURE TO UPDATE ASAP I have a good number of holidays coming up so I will!!!! Make sure to update more frequently
I hope this isn’t too depressing right before Christmas nervous laughter
ALSO THE NEXT CHAPTER IS GONNA BE GREAT IM JUST THROWING IT OUT THERE
And also once more
I AM SORRY FOR THE LACK OF NAMJOON I SWEAR ITS WORTH IT
This chapter is a bit slow so I apologize T_T
Yoongi is pleased that at least, not everyone could directly see him.

But he had to be purposeful. Had to really caution and move himself in a specific way.

The room is nice- not too different from what Ilya had set up for them, clearly expecting them to stay aboard. And Yoongi wouldn’t mind but they, he,- all of them really, had things to do and complete. There’s just one major difference- there was no bedding set up.

He’s lucky Jn’young doesn’t shoot him immediately the moment he spots him sitting on his couch, inside his locked room, walking out half-naked and still damp from a shower.

‘For fuck’s-‘ he curses, before stopping still and inhaling deeply, closing his eyes.

‘Sorry to intrude,’ Yoongi greets the Khol’isa, not at all apologetic.

‘Get out of my room,’ Jn’young snaps, ‘I have nothing to say to you or to that Verktaē- how he’s managed to veil Ilya’s eyes I-‘

‘I’m not here to represent Jimin or talk on his behalf,’ Yoongi cuts across, unmoving. ‘I’m here because I would like to know more about Axudar, your experience, and why Ilya is adamant we do not step foot in Axudar.’

‘By all means, return the Verktaē to where he comes from, not my problem,’ Jn’young spits out, still unmoving from where he stood. ‘Besides, what’s in all of this for you? Why are you even here?’

Yoongi stands up, noting how Jn’young’s posture changes slightly. Following his body angle, Jn’young was probably aiming for the hidden TeorSer behind the clothing cabinet to the side as it was the closest. Well, good luck to him because Yoongi already removed every single hidden weapon in the room.

He turns, and lifting his shirt, literally exposes his back to Jn’young.

‘This explains nothing and gives me absolutely no explanation even more now as to why you would be with the Verktaē,’ Jn’young spits out though his expression is a little troubled. Yoongi shrugs, pulling down his clothes to cover himself again. But Jn’young’s staring at him, eyes studying his exposed skin for a while.
'You’re one of the GI,’ Jn’young remarks.

‘I am,’ Yoongi nods.

‘You’re incredibly aware.’

‘I am still me, I am GI, and I am still Yoongi, of Earth, despite dying in Bhumi over a millennia ago,’ Yoongi replies, sitting back down again.

‘…you’re one of the Regurgitated?’ Jn’young questions.

Vividly, a memory from Earth flashes through his mind. Taking a quiet moment near the rafters, and a few stray cats walking about.

‘I don’t know what you mean by that,’ Yoongi replies honestly before adding, ‘Ilya told us a shortened summary of what happened to you. I would like to know more details from you.’

‘I have nothing to tell you,’ Jn’young states bluntly. ‘Go ask that Verktaë- he’ll know everything.’

‘Jimin is innocent in this.’

‘I don’t care what you think- he’s veiled your eyes, the same way they veil everyone’s eyes,’ Jn’young walks about his dresser, picking up a few random bottles. ‘He’s veiled Ilya’s eyes- how I don’t know-‘

‘Jimin has done nothing,’ Yoongi repeats again, ‘We are trying to understand what happened, why it happened-‘

‘Listen,’ Jn’young snaps, not looking up from the slender bottle he held in his hands, ‘I don’t care for lies and deceit-‘

‘I’m not lying- and neither is Jimin,’ Yoongi states again, ‘If you would like to check and see, I am sure that the Khol’isa have ways of making sure that they are not being lied to.’

Jn’young looks up at this, expressions shrewd, eyes gleaming neon red for a second. Yoongi does his best not to look away on instinct.

‘I just want answers,’ Yoongi tells the Khol’isa. ‘I want to understand.’

Jn’young doesn’t say anything, still staring straight at Yoongi in that uncomfortably sharp way. Yoongi doesn’t add anything else, doesn’t even move. After a very long minute, Jn’young looks away. He pats stuff over his skin, fingers carefully brushing through his hair, around his horns, shaking the back for excess water.

He stands a few minutes later, removing his outer-robe and coming to sit in front of Yoongi.

Honestly the staring game is getting a little boring but Yoongi will do what needs to be done. Jn’young gives him an amused smile- one that, objectively thinking, Yoongi knows is attractive. He’s been living with a Khol’isa for a while now and he understands the way they move, the way they react.

‘…you’re not uncomfortable?’ Jn’young asks.

‘…should I be?’ Yoongi replies back.

‘…nakedness normally makes Beings uncomfortable.’
‘…I don’t know why your nakedness should make me uncomfortable?’

‘…I suppose so.’

‘…”

A few minutes later, Jn’young is dressed up in flowy trousers and a neat robe to wrap around his torso, flowing out just a little below his hipline to create an elongated silhouette.

‘Please follow me,’ Jn’young gestures elegantly to Yoongi before leading them out of the small room into a doorway Yoongi honestly had no idea existed. Jn’young looks back just a little, a coy smile on his face.

‘For some privacy.’

Definitely hereditary.

It’s clearly his sleeping chamber- it wasn’t very personalized so Yoongi guesses it was set up for him by someone else. He spots a few crates stacked up to the side, clearly filled with the Khol’isa’s belongings. Next to the comfortable bed is a lounging chair that Jn’young immediately occupies, leaning back to make himself comfortable. There’s a footstool of sorts near the low tea-table before it. The door closes behind him and the lights dim.

Jn’young’s eyes are hypnotically glowing in the dim light setting.

‘Well,’ Jn’young gestures in a manner that’s so reminiscent of Sk’jin and K’mara, Yoongi nearly rolls his eyes. ‘I am always down for some quality story time, tell me why you’re here. Or better, tell me what the Verktaë told you to make you stay.’

Yoongi grimaces at the Khol’isa, unable to help himself as he takes a seat. It’s not comfortable.

‘I could show you instead,’ is Yoongi’s reply.

Jn’young squints at him.

Yoongi immediately looks away. Instinct flares in him.

‘If you want me to trust you- you’re going to have to trust me.’ Jn’young says curtly.

‘You may have not met any other Khol’isa before but I’ve met more than is necessary, I’ll be honest,’ Yoongi says as he meets Jn’young’s burning eyes again, with more determination.

‘K’mara yes? I’ve heard a lot about her,’ Jn’young looks amused, leaning in a little closer, studying Yoongi in detail.

Yoongi shrugs, allowing himself to relax.

‘How do you intend on showing me?’ Jn’young tilts his head a little. Again, objectively, Yoongi can see how this could be seductive. It’s a little amusing to witness. Again.

Yoongi reaches into his pocket, his movements slow, so as to not alarm the Khol’isa.

Yoongi knows Jimin would not want this. It’s the reason why he removed his Comm Device, why he asked Taeh’yung to cover for him. The Zhak’gri hadn’t exactly given him a response, but it felt right to alert him first.
Yoongi takes out a small bell, still attached to a strip of fine fabric, the edges just a little frayed from when he yanked it out of Sk’jin’s sleeve.

Placing it down on the low table, he says, ‘If this is what it takes for you to believe me.’

Jn’young stares at the bell, eyes shrewd and calculating.

Yoongi’s knees hurt a little from sitting at this awkward height for too long. Damn, Khol’isa’s and their ability to make you uncomfortable even in the most petty of things was definitely a trait that was imbedded in their genetics.

Jn’young gets up. Walking to the end of his room where a sort of dresser was set up. Jn’young studies his face for a moment in the mirror.

‘Do you like tea, Yoongi?’ Jn’young asks his reflection.

Yoongi nearly rolls his eyes again.

One of the influences, major influences, he’s had regarding his interest (some would say morbid obsession) with tea was because of how he saw K’mara use it.

It’s not surprising that Jn’young, a Khol’isa, would employ the exact same tactics despite having never met his own species before.

‘I love tea,’ Yoongi replies, knowing full well how monotonous he sounded.

Jn’young snorts. It’s elegant when he does it, the same way Sk’jin was elegant despite how crass he could get. Jn’young’s back is turned to him as tiny tinkling sounds echo about the room.

He’s not sure how long he can stay here without alarming the others- mainly Jimin. He’s banking on Jimin’s distraction to buy himself time to do this.

Jn’young returns with an elegant platter, a teapot with 2 teacups in it. Yoongi would like to pause and admire the cups but he can’t afford to lose time.

If this goes according to his plan- he would only have 5 minutes at most before Jimin could sense something was wrong.

Jn’young smiles charmingly at him, placing a cup in front of him.

‘I hope it’s to your taste.’

Yoongi looks at the teacup, reminded once again of K’mara and her office at the Mothership. He also realizes how the lights have dimmed even more, the haze of the room thickening without his realization.

Jn’young’s eyes gleam at him in this purplish haze. Looking down at the cup, Yoongi sees the reflection of a reddened moon.

‘Aren’t you going to show me?’

Jn’young’s cup is to his lips, only his eyes revealed.

Yoongi takes the cup and gulps down the entire tea in one go.
Sk’jin knows that the others don’t trust him.

And he’s fine with it.

He wasn’t expecting Ilya’s crew to accept him.

It’s funny how Sk’jin finds himself with this situation- was this what it felt like to be an intern?

It’s, funnily enough, a refreshing change in pace.

Not when this information regarding Jimin and his apparent connection to Axudar and what was happening/happened there. Ilya keeps giving him sheepishly apologetic looks and Sk’jin wants to say that he doesn’t need to feel responsible.

At least unlike his own intern’s experiences, Sk’jin had one Being who believed and trusted him.

‘Tell me about Māho,’ Sk’jin says instead, as he and Ilya find themselves back at the Bridge.

There’s a reversal in how things were now, Sk’jin notes with some fondness. Instead it was now Sk’jin who was trailing after Ilya, asking questions at the speed of light. And it was instead Ilya telling Sk’jin his stories from the past, recalling comedic but just dangerous enough to be exciting situations with a glint in his eye.

‘Other than the fact that Evdos has been very embarrassed and is incredibly angry?’ Ilya wheezes while Camil struggles to maintain a straight face.

‘Māho is the closest Dock to Axudar that’s also completely free of its hold,’ Ilya tells him, crossing his legs up on the chair. Sk’jin does the same too. ‘Every other Dock within Axudar’s general parameter is a part of their network.’

‘I heard that Axudar has a sort of center for taking in political refugees- I think in Māhanga?’ Sk’jin inquires, remembering Namjoon’s words.

Ilya grimaces, giving Sk’jin a knowing look.

‘It’s a cover,’ Ilya states simply, ‘Māhanga is actually where Jn’young escaped from. And Māho is where he managed to escape to.’

‘So your hold over Māho is because of Jn’young?’

‘More or less- he was living in the depths of Māho for a couple of sols, reevaluating, studying, observing- he explained how useful it would be to have Māho on our side.’

‘How did you do it?’
‘The Deputy Fanger,’ Ilya grins, ‘She’s been leading Māho for nearly over a century. She refuses to listen to Axudar- and she’s under no obligation to do so either actually. She can’t be bought, bribed, blackmailed.’

‘Then what did you do?’ Sk’jin asks, intrigued.

‘Nothing,’ Ilya says honestly, ‘I don’t think there’s much negotiation or persuasion needed when you can see, all too clearly, what Axudar is doing.’

‘She’s been there before?’

‘She’s picked up enough Beings like Jn’yong to put two and two together.’

‘There’s more like him- more like Jungkook,’ Sk’jin breathes out. It’s not surprising really- Sk’jin’s already reached that conclusion a long while ago- but the fact that this seemed strangely common now is enough to make him worried. The fact that Ilya was so aware of it all, that the whole crew inside the ship would be so familiar with it –

‘What does that word mean- the one Jn’yong used to call Jimin,’ Sk’jin asks before repeating it carefully, ‘Verktaë.’

Ilya sighs quietly, ‘It’s a term from Axudar- it means hidden sight or sullied eyes.’

Never look directly at an eclipse.

‘I’m guessing Jimin’s not the only one with eyes like that then?’ Sk’jin says carefully.

Ilya seems to be pondering for a while, a furrow between his thick eyebrows.

‘I wish you would just believe me- just trust me,’ Ilya says quietly. ‘We can take you to Bhumi. I don’t think you have to enter Axudar to understand.’

‘It’d be great if Jn’yong could tell us everything so that we can make that decision,’ Sk’jin replies with a shrug before reaching over to take Ilya’s gnarled hands in his own, ‘Like I said, it’s not my decision to make.’

‘If it were?’

‘If it were,’ Sk’jin winks with a smirk, ‘I think it’s safe to say Nambike would be so done with me.’

Ilya laughs, suddenly looking child-like, and Sk’jin is so so fond.

Ilya is still smiling, looking down at their hands, before he says, ‘Jimin is different- his eyes… they’re not like the ones Jn’yong calls Verktaë.’

‘What do you mean?’

‘Jimin called himself the Fate of his people,’ Ilya says, ‘Of his System.’

‘I honestly don’t know how that works, but yeah, he says he’s the Fate, and that his sister was the Heart. Something about this being the way it always is in his System,’ Sk’jin tells him.

‘A lot of times- most times- most Beings fight fate,’ Ilya says thoughtfully, ‘They fight fate, they make their own destiny- things like that.’

Sk’jin frowns a little, getting an inkling of what Ilya was saying.
‘Is what we consider order, or peace, or unity, the same if the decisions taken are made by fate?’ Ilya asks carefully. ‘Even if this order, this peace is something that has been known for a long time- that has been followed for the length of life itself- all minds evolve, all hearts evolve- what if they wish to control their own fate?’

‘Can’t you tell me?’ Sk’jin asks breathlessly, ‘Tell me what happened.’

Ilya exhales carefully, opening his mouth to speak when his Comm Device sparks up with lights. The same is echoed for Camil, and everyone else aboard the Bridge.

Sk’jin senses, more than anything else, a strange ripple in the air.

‘What is it-?’ he’s asking when Jimin bursts inside the Bridge, eyes bright and filled with fear. Alarmed, Sk’jin stands up and makes his way towards Jimin but he was clearly not here for him.

‘Where is he?’ Jimin demands.

‘What-?’

Jimin is addressing Ilya who also looks equally confused. Sk’jin notices how Camil is casually standing, ready to intervene. He senses again, rather than sees, the way every single TeorSer in the room was now aimed not only at Jimin, but also at himself.

Sk’jin is not offended in the least.

‘I can’t- I can’t find him-’ Jimin exhales out, ‘I can’t find him where is he?!’

‘Jimin who-‘ Sk’jin tries.

‘Yoongi!’ Jimin says forcefully. ‘I can’t find him! He’s here! But I cannot see him!’

Hoseok and Jungkook appear at the doorway, expressions wary, posture strained.

‘We can search for him-‘ Ilya begins, his voice calm, gesturing subtly to the others to stand down. But Jimin is not appeased in the slightest.

He takes a step forward and immediately Sk’jin knows something is wrong.

The light around him is soft. His hair moves as though a gentle breeze were combing through his strands- a breeze of starlight, and sunlight. His movements almost seem slow- but they’re weighty.

‘Where is he?’ he asks, his voice soft but at the same time echoes throughout the shockingly dark Bridge. To Sk’jin’s horror, everyone in the Bridge seemed to be in a state of awe- as though struck by some godly sight.

Taeh’yung appears out of nowhere, enveloping Jimin in what appeared to be a gentle embrace but the ripple of power that rockets out of them is clear enough to show how this was no gentle embrace.

‘Shh,’ Taeh’yung murmurs softly. ‘He’s doing what he thinks is best.’

Jimin’s light dims and he’s suddenly pushing Taeh’yung off.

Next to him, Ilya falls to his knees, breathing harshly.
‘Ilya-!’

‘I’m fine-!’ he gasps, already struggling to stand up.

‘Where is he?!’ Jimin rounds up at Taeh’yung.

‘He’s gone to talk to Jn’young,’ Taeh’yung is holding him in place, ‘Give him time-‘

‘He doesn’t have time!’ Jimin pushes Taeh’yung but the Zhak’gri doesn’t budge.

Jimin glares up at Taeh’yung.

Sweat trickles down Sk’jin’s back. He sees how Hoseok pushes Jungkook behind him.

A hand pulls him and Sk’jin realizes how Ilya is pulling him back.

‘Move,’ Jimin says in a quiet voice.

‘Give him time,’ Taeh’yung repeats, ‘He knows what he’s doing.’

Jimin exhales shakily, ‘Move.’

Taeh’yung shakes his head.

Sk’jin doesn’t know what to expect. But he’s not expecting Jimin to punch Taeh’yung across the face.

Taeh’yung falls heavily, a comically offended expression on his face as he hits the ground. There are confused exclamations everywhere, the sounds of TeorSers charging up, and questions rising up. But Jimin is already exiting the Bridge.

‘Fuck- fuck-!’

Sk’jin darts out after Jimin, already being tailed by Jungkook.

‘What’s wrong-?’ Hoseok asks at once.

‘Jimin can’t find Yoongi and I think that idiot Human has gone and done something that’s going to get himself killed-‘Sk’jin hisses.

‘He’s stretching himself too thin-‘Ilya is panting behind them.

‘You- you know what-?’ Hoseok stutters out.

‘I know what you’re talking about,’ Ilya confirms, ‘I’ve seen it before, heard of it-‘

‘But- oh fuck!’ Hoseok curses, stopping, ‘Where is Jn’young’s room?’

‘Follow me,’ Ilya says tiredly.

‘What was he thinking-‘Hoseok hisses, clearly upset as they jog after Jimin and Jungkook.

‘He wants answers,’ Sk’jin sighs, already able to interpret Yoongi’s actions and choices, ‘He knew that he was the only way Jn’young would listen-‘

‘I would have talked to him,’ Ilya argues, ‘-I would have been able to get him to talk.’
’I think Yoongi didn’t want to wait,’ Sk’jin says quietly, eyeing Jimin’s slight form ahead of them. ‘Besides- you know Jn’young- do you really think he would want to speak to Jimin at all?’

Ilya doesn’t say anything, a grimace on his face.

’But this is risky-‘ Hoseok argues, genuine concern in his yellow eyes.

’It’s an extremely sure way of getting Jn’young to listen and talk,’ Sk’jin states bluntly. ‘It’s what I would’ve done.’

Ilya gives him a worried and pained look.

’Jiminie!’

Taeh’yung blurs past them, an echo of green in his wake.

’He can’t do this again!’ Jimin yells, ‘You know this and yet-!’

’He knows this too!’ Taeh’yung stops Jimin, his expression reprimanding as he towers over Jimin. Sk’jin hears Ilya gasp, grabbing Sk’jin’s arm in a painful way, stopping him from jogging forward.

’What-?’

’Where are you finding these Beings?’ Ilya asks, his eyes wide, pupils narrow as genuine fear seems to strike him. In a way Sk’jin has been desensitized to Taeh’yung and his chaotic and terrifying ways.

’He’s fine,’ Sk’jin says as reassuringly as he can. ‘He won’t do anything.’

It’s not exactly a promise Sk’jin can definitely make or keep, but it would have to do for now.

’Jimin,’ Ilya calls. ‘I’ll take you to Jn’young’s quarters.’

Jimin looks away from where he’s staring down Taeh’yung. The Zhak’gri has a downtrodden expression, small pout forming on his lips, arms swinging despondently. Jimin ignores him and walks back towards Ilya.

’Follow me,’ Ilya says, gesturing towards the right, ‘I’ll take you up.’

Hoseok and Jungkook follow after the two. But Sk’jin waits, holding his hand out for Taeh’yung to follow.

’Did Yoongi ask you to cover him?’ Sk’jin asks.

The Zhak’gri nods, put out as he takes Sk’jin’s hand.

’Why did you agree?’

At that Taeh’yung expression shifts just a little, eyes gleaming with a strange light.

’I want to see it too.’

The wait in the lift is painful. Jimin’s eyes are glazed, staring at a point in the air before him. Jungkook is extremely stressed, holding Hoseok’s hand in a painful grip while the Ngfy’widan keeps giving Sk’jin questioning looks. Ilya, and Camil who had in the last second, shoved himself inside, are both staying quiet. Camil is openly carrying a TeorSer but no one really seems to be paying any mind.

When the doors open, Sk’jin doesn’t need to know which doorway they were headed to.

There’s a sickeningly familiar red gleam that seeps through the spaces of the slightly open doorway down the hallway.

Jimin is already sprinting. Sk’jin makes to follow but, again, for the nth time today, he’s held back. To his surprise it’s Taeh’yung.

‘What?’

Taeh’yung isn’t looking at him, instead looking down the doorway.

‘Jinnie I don’t think you should go inside.’

‘What?’ Sk’jin feels slightly offended, he pulls his arm out of Taeh’yung’s hold. ‘Let’s go!’

Taeh’yung doesn’t say anything, doesn’t move or make to stop Sk’jin as he rushes into the now open doorway of what was clearly Jn’yong’s personal and designated living quarters.

The reddish light is concentrated towards an adjoining room, the doorway of which is occupied by Hoseok, Camil, and Jungkook.

Inside the air is misty, and Jimin is holding an unconscious and startlingly pale and lifeless looking Yoongi in his arms but it’s difficult with Jn’yong and Yoongi’s hands trapped together-

Ilya is trying to pull them apart.

‘Let go!’ Jimin yells, tugging Yoongi away with a strange rendering sound as their hands come apart. Almost immediately, the mist seems to fade away as the light slowly ebbs back to its natural cool tones.

Stepping inside, Sk’jin immediately feels strangely weighted- as though he were stepping into water.

‘Yoongi!’ Jimin is dragging Yoongi away towards the doorway, away from Jn’yong who was panting as though he just ran a marathon. Sk’jin notes the empty teacups on the low tea table.

‘What did you do to him-!’ Jimin hisses, eyes burning bright as he directs his confusion and panic at the other Khol’isa. Sk’jin steps further inside despite feeling heavy, trying to help Jimin lift Yoongi by grabbing his feet.

To Sk’jin’s horror, Yoongi’s eyes are open- still focused on Jn’yong, hand still reaching out for the Khol’isa.

‘Oh fuck-!’ Sk’jin curses, ‘Get him out of here!’

‘Jn’yong-!’ Ilya is trying to shake the younger Khol’isa off.

‘I- I don’t know-‘ Jn’yong is stammering, clutching his head in pain, unable to look away from Yoongi, his other hand still raised up too as though he was unable to put it down.

‘Hey- hey, look away-‘ Sk’jin moves to block Jn’yong’s line of sight from Yoongi he knew what was happening and Jn’yong wasn’t old enough- wasn’t trained, wasn’t born with the knowledge of what this meant- Sk’jin takes Jn’yong’s hand and tries to push it down when-
Jn’young tears his gaze away and looks up at Sk’jin, eyes aflame—light from a lifetime past burning bright and—

With a delayed gasp, Sk’jin plunges straight into the Bloodmoon.

*“I promise you,—that I’ll make everything right again when I come back. I’ll even be the fuckin’ hero if that’s what’s needed.’

Remember me. Remember me.

I’m afraid.

Remember us. come back

It’s dark and empty.

Please remember us. come back

come back

Is there more than this?

Don’t leave us.

Do I … do I have a place there?

come back

Don’t leave me.

come back

You came back.

‘No- no I’m not-‘

-it wasn’t as though they could stop, they just chose not to…

…and I started laughing because how could anyone be so incredibly idiotic I mean what possibl-

-as already starting to yawn, I feel guilty bringing her here, should I change the ven-

-is that- wait who are you? I’ve been seeing you in my dreams-

....is that…is that you? Are you…are you god? A … spirit? What are you-

‘You don’t know me.’

‘I do. And I will make you see it.’

‘See what?’

‘You.’

-ve to help me please I don’t know where I am what is going on I cannot live here this isn’t right please I just want to go home-
-will they even recognize me? do you recognize me? I have no home to go back to- no planet- she was destroyed she was bled and left to die I have to go back to her…

…come back so that I can tell you I don’t forgive you for being so brave.’

…do you hear that sound? Is that what music is supposed to be? I don’t remember anything? Am I alive?

‘No please I can’t-‘ Sk’jin can’t breath can’t see can’t speak-

He was back in here back again and he can’t- he has to leave he can’t be here again. He knows that if he looks closely, he will see forms and shapes- he will see their dreams, memories, and an emptiness that was simply waiting.

A soft song starts to play- the voice echoes from past the darkness that lay between stars, undiscovered and cold.

And now Sk’jin knows this song. He knows this melody now.

There’s shuffling footsteps- sounds of someone desperately trying to speak, desperately trying to connect- it’s more than just one- there’s more than just one, Sk’jin can sense it now-

‘You’re alive- you’re all alive,’ it’s his voice- Sk’jin remembers hearing it so clearly- remembers the words so clearly- ‘You’re all living, and you were born into this Continuum.’

The white starts to fade, and red seeps in instead.

‘No- no-‘ Sk’jin closes his eyes but there’s no way he can un-see the stain. He could do this- he could break out of this all he had to do was-

‘That’s so insulting- was real handsome ‘fore, y’know? I was a motherfucking prince aight?’

The red darkens but before him Sk’jin sees it. Sees himself.

Somehow strangely short, but in a way that suggested he was entirely folded inwards, the Being is floating, encased in crystal like ribbons that should have been beautiful but instead seemed stained and inlaid with an impossible amount of blood, biological fluids, and half-formed organs. The neon red eyes glare at him through the strange misshapen form-

‘Khol’isa.’

‘In the flesh- well, some of it.’

Sk’jin moves as best he can- he’d spent so long in here, he knew he had to get out- knew he couldn’t let the Bloodmoon stain this place through him and he reaches forward as further as he can, straight into his eyes-

‘Wait-’ he tries to stop Sk’jin.
‘Spaces, what now?’ Sk’jin snaps.

‘What about them?’

‘What ‘bout them?’ Sk’jin retorts.

‘What- what about them?! They’re Beings! They’re alive! I can feel them- their thoughts and memories and-‘ Sk’jin wants to sigh but he’s also curious.

‘You could feel ‘em? What’chu mean?’ he had been alone in here for so long. Unable to speak, unable to flow into their memories as they did with one another. Because Sk’jin wasn’t supposed to be here. He was supposed to die. But he didn’t, and so he lingered.

It had all been an accident.

‘Like- I can sense them- I see their,- I dunno, memory or something-‘

‘Ain’t my problem and frankly not yours either,’ but Sk’jin doesn’t have time to entertain this Human, he’s here to get him and that Long-Huon out.

‘There are tens and thousands of them in here! Maybe even millions! We can’t abandon them here-‘ The Human is horrified, terrified.

‘Ain’t our problem.’

So Sk’jin grabs him hard, making sure the Long-Huon is latched on as well and ignoring the Bloodmoon below him, reaches upwards.

‘Hey! I got them out! They’re here!’

Pushing through what felt like a cloudy haze of compressed red, Sk’jin breaks out of the condensed air and into an endless white space that is bitterly familiar.

‘And I’ll miss you too.’

‘Fuck-!‘

Sk’jin hates it here. Hates it to his core. At least he was in an area where he could think on his own, and not possibly drown and lose himself. There’s a heavy weight on his head.

‘Spaces fuck not again,’ Sk’jin curses, reaching up to rub at his temples when he’s met with something more than just hair. Something so achingly familiar, forcefully made foreign to him, and now just- just back.

His stuttered breaths echo around him, the white air around him moving in accordance.

‘What-?’

‘Hey! Help me!’

Spinning around quickly, Sk’jin finds himself staring across at Jn’young. The young Khol’isa is waist deep in the white mist, weighed down by something as he tries to lift himself up. Sk’jin, confused, rushes forward.

‘You should know how to get out-‘ Sk’jin begins but the younger Khol’isa has his own questions.
‘How are you here?’ Jn’yong asks, eyes wide, confused and lost, staring at his horns.

‘Long story what’s wrong- ‘ Sk’jin asks but once he’s close enough he sees it.

Jn’yong is holding onto Yoongi. The Human’s face is horrifyingly blurred, only his hand clasped in Jn’yong’s is clear.

‘Fuck fuck-‘

Sk’jin tugs, reaching down to grab onto Yoongi’s hand clasped in Jn’yong’s unrelenting grasp. But it was nearly impossible. Yoongi’s head lolls back, his eyes disappearing into the mist, mouth slightly open.

‘He’s such an idiot oh Spaces why is he such an idiot- ‘ Sk’jin complains, exhaustion seeping into him as he does his best to pull.

‘I didn’t- I didn’t know- ‘ Jn’yong pants, sounding wretched and as exhausted as Sk’jin felt. ‘I didn’t know he was-‘

‘It’s okay- or I mean, I’m saying it’s okay just- ‘ Sk’jin gets out, kneeling and positioning himself properly, doing all he could to help Jn’yong up. ‘Here, hook your arm around me and I’ll reach down-‘

Jn’yong wraps an arm around his shoulder and reaching down, Sk’jin grabs Yoongi’s wrist. It’s cold.

‘Okay I’m going to try and-‘

‘How did are you here?’

‘Uh- followed my memory from when I was last here?’ Sk’jin pants out, tugging as hard as he could. Yoongi’s hands are like ice.

‘You’re-?’

‘No- fuck, I was never really here- nor there, it’s- it’s complicated, I’m not an egg, New Born- whatever- ‘

There’s a ripple of light through the white space.

‘What was that-?’ Jn’yong looks around nervously, ‘What was-‘

There’s a sense of anticipation- of excitement, of arrival.

Of being Found.

‘It’s probably someone coming to help us now that he’s straightened his head out- ‘ Sk’jin says tersely, tensing as he exerts his whole strength. The light ripples again and there’s a sigh that rings throughout the mist.

Jimin sinks down towards them in a halo of light, illuminating the white space with warmth and dimension, as though the spaces around them finally found direction, as though they could finally stop waiting.

As though they could finally just rest.
He reaches past Jn’yong and Sk’jin, levitating above them as though afloat in this white mist, and without much effort, pulls Yoongi out.

‘I’m sorry-’ Jimin gasps out, holding Yoongi’s still unconscious and still blurred form close to himself. ‘I’m so sorry.’

Jn’yong, still panting, very confused, glances around at Sk’jin. And Sk’jin, with complete grace and dexterity, reaches forward and smacks the young Khol’isa right between the horns.

‘Ouch-!’ Jn’yong hisses, ducking away, maintaining distance.

‘What were you thinking,’ Sk’jin scolds at once, ‘This is not some simple mind manipulation or persuasion you should have known it wouldn’t be safe to do this-!’

‘I didn’t know,’ Jn’yong retorts his expression genuinely disturbed, making his way to stand up before hesitantly approaching Jimin who was carrying Yoongi in his arms, crouched down as though to completely hide and cover the Human. ‘How is he here?’

‘Because I walked here once upon a Dream,’ Jimin replies in ways of explanation, carefully looking over Yoongi as though to check for injuries.

Sk’jin remembers Amme’s words, of how they had found Jimin in the center of that ship, all the eggs or as Ilya refers to them, New Borns, connected endlessly to him.

Jn’yong looks at Sk’jin as though for an explanation and Sk’jin just shrugs. Honestly, he’s too old for this.

‘Why isn’t he awake?’ Jn’yong asks, looking worried as he stares at Yoongi.

‘For someone who was determined to be unhelpful, you sure did take the initiative to do something incredibly dangerous,’ Sk’jin comments.

‘He came to me-’ Jn’yong begins, defensive and also panicked.

‘-he’s not supposed to do this anymore!’ Jimin says quietly from where he’s crouched. ‘You- he was nearly-‘ Sk’jin looks back to where Jimin had come through, and where Yoongi had nearly sunk into.

Remember me.

‘Hey come on,’ Sk’jin says as calmly as he can, approaching Jimin, his tone soothing, ‘You got to him. You got to him on time-‘

‘He doesn’t have time,’ Jimin says quietly, eyes never leaving Yoongi’s face. ‘He doesn’t have time anymore and I can’t- I can’t ask him.’

‘Ask him what?’ Sk’jin carefully places his hand over Jimin’s shoulder, squeezing gently.

‘I can’t ask him to stay,’ Jimin whispers.

He’s not crying, no tears in his eyes. But his sorrow is profound. The mist around him stirs with agitation, with helplessness, the melody of this eternity shifting to one of sorrow.
Jimin’s sorrow.

Jn’young doesn’t say anything, just watching the two with a sort of curious wonder in his eyes.

It’s silent.

Maybe for Jn’young and Jimin.

But for Sk’jin, he can’t un-hear what this place sounded like. His eyes burn as the Memories of this endlessness weep.

‘What did Yoongi show you?’ Jimin asks, adjusting Yoongi in his arms and with a free hand gently pushing his hair away from his face.

‘He- he…’ Jn’young sighs out slowly, ‘He showed me what the GLA did to him, what the Yishengs Ndica and Tlun’hlá operated under the guise of developing a secret corps unit, how he first spoke to Amme about his suspicions. He showed me what he overheard, what you helped him clarify from his memories, and how he landed in Bhumi, how he met you and how- how he was taken. He showed me the red evil-and how they took everyone. Taking them apart. He showed me the- the way he awoke, showed me how he found you again, and how he truly Awoke. He…he showed me a lot of you.’

Jimin finally looks away, looking up at Jn’young.

‘I’m sorry,’ the young Khol’isa says hesitantly, coming down to kneel by Jimin. ‘I misread you, and who you are.’

Jimin shakes his head. ‘Do not apologize, I am probably worse than what you thought. What you think.’

Jn’young looks confused, looking to Sk’jin for answers. But Sk’jin just shrugs.

Welcome to the fucking club where nothing makes sense.

‘And what about you?’

‘What do you think pupa? It’s like I said,’ Sk’jin replies back, ‘I existed here, there, nowhere, every where else- a continuous nightmare you could say.’

Jn’young mulls over his words, studying Sk’jin carefully.

‘Then how are you-…’

‘Out and about?’ Sk’jin asks for clarity, making Jn’young nod. ‘I’m here because I made a promise.’

Sk’jin doesn’t want to elaborate, and Jn’young doesn’t ask for further details.

‘What did you show him?’ Jimin asks, looking back down at Yoongi. He looked a little better, a little more clear, and less blurry.

To Sk’jin, Yoongi reminded him of a blurred memory. The colours somewhat still there, the form and shape outlining a general idea, a resemblance.

But fading slowly, surely.
Desperately clinging onto remembrance.

‘I- I haven’t-‘ Jn’young begins hesitantly, biting at his inner cheek, eyebrows furrowed, hand twitching as though remembering a past pain. ‘-it was too- too painful to continue and so I thought I would- I would bring us through here and-‘

‘It doesn’t work like that for Yoongi,’ Jimin says quietly, still gently stroking Yoongi’s hair, ‘He’s different- he’s-…he’s bound to me.’

‘Yoongi isn’t…’ Jn’young pauses a moment, clearly trying to sound as sensitive and polite as he could. ‘I’ve never…I don’t think I’ve ever really looked into anyone like him before- it’s just-‘

‘Could you show me?’ Jimin asks quietly. ‘Show me what you would have shown Yoongi.’

Jn’young is still hesitant. He glances over Jimin with what could only be deep rooted and conditioned hatred, suspicion, and distrust. And if what Ilya has been hinting at was only just the surface level of what had happened, what was still happening, then it wouldn’t be easy for Jn’young to simply address Jimin without any malice whether intentional or not.

But the Khol’isa glances down at Yoongi instead, staring hard.

‘It’s probably hard for you to believe in Jimin, even Yoongi- but do you really think I would be here if this was not something we truly believe is necessary?’ Sk’jin suggests quietly.

Jn’young falters, gaze lowered to the misty floors. Sk’jin doesn’t look too close, he can sense them all around, watching, listening, sleeping, dreaming, gathering around Jimin’s position.

Then he seems to make up his mind. He gives a short nod, stepping forward.

‘I don’t know- what will happen to Yoongi um- if he comes with us,’ Jn’young says regretfully, extending his hand out towards both Jimin and himself.

‘I’ll take him up,’ Jimin says with a nod of understanding, ‘He- he could do with some sleep.’

Neither Jn’young nor Sk’jin know how to react when Jimin stands, Yoongi in his arms, and quite suddenly, as though it was always there, a doorway appears some ways behind him.

It’s a little ajar, and opens a little more, as though welcoming Jimin in.

Neither Sk’jin nor Jn’young make to follow after Jimin, but they do look in through the gap.

It’s a small house. A home.

Sk’jin recognizes the aesthetic as distinctly Human. This was Yoongi’s make- his design, his space.

It’s dimly lit inside, just a few lamps switched on in the room down the entry hall they were looking into.

It looks comfortable, lived in, and cherished.

Sk’jin can hear the rain.

The bedroom door is slightly ajar. They watch as Jimin places Yoongi down on the bed. He lifts the blanket over him, tucking him into bed.
‘Yoongi is not like the GI, who have no memories- essentially just biological replicas of the original with no link to their previous life,’ Jn’young declares, ‘And he’s not a New Born, nor is he anything else made by those Creveni- but I can tell that- and though I’m quite sure, that he’s one of the Regurgitated, it doesn’t seem to…seem to really explain much of who he is as a whole…’

‘The ones who took Namjoon- they’re the ones who are slowly waking- and it’s-…it’s not right.’

‘What do you mean?’

‘You can see it, can’t you? With the Human. I know that- we call them New Borns- like Jungkook. They are made and born whole- individual. Perfect almost.’

Sk’jin nods to that.

‘They’re not meant to be alive really.’

‘You’ve met others like him- Ilya mentioned this.’

‘I don’t know how similar they are with each other- but, from what I saw, and what Yoongi showed me he’s- he’s been alive, for too long.’

Sk’jin looks away from Jn’young and back at where Jimin is brushing away Yoongi’s hair from his face, saying something quietly even though Yoongi wasn’t responsive.

‘I think there’s something we’re all missing- and maybe we can all come to understand why all of this happened, why all of this is happening,’ Sk’jin replies, stepping away as he notices Jimin slowly exiting the bedroom.

‘I don’t like vagueness and miscommunication,’ Jn’young declares.

‘Wow, would have never guessed with your behavior,’ Sk’jin replies dryly.

Jn’young sends Sk’jin an unimpressed look.

‘The Creveni that you mentioned- who are they?’

‘I think you know them in a different name,’ Jn’young says after a short pause, ‘But they were the ones responsible for what happened to the Human’s planet. What Yoongi showed me from his past in- in Bhumi, what Jimin refers to as the Red Evil.’

A plague in its own right, the effects of which they were still seeing even though it was eradicated.

‘And what is “regurgitated”?’

Jn’young gives him a curious look, ‘Yoongi didn’t know the term either- you’ve never heard of it?’

‘Would I ask if I knew?’

‘It’s what I was talking about,’ Jn’young sighs out, ‘You’re aware then- of the GI, that the Yisheng created them. More like clones and replicas than anything else.’

Sk’jin nods.

‘Then there’s the ones that the Creveni created- to an extent- at least for me, they’re all New Borns.'
We’re all New Borns.’

‘All right…’ Sk’jin frowns.

‘The only real distinction we can see, is like with all living creatures and creations,’ Jn’young explains, ‘We are not always born to singular fate.’

Jimin looks at them from across the hallway, listening to their words.

‘The GI are the way they are because the Yishengs who created them, who molded them crafted them the way we know and expect of them – that is all they have known, that is all they are made to know.’ Jn’young says simply, ‘But the New Borns- most of us, some of us, a few of us- we are born different- we are Lived different.’

‘How long did it take for her to wake up?’

‘Wake up? No- I broke the OrTank.’

‘…you what?!’

‘I broke the OrTank- I was worried- I didn’t know what she was encased in, how long it would last, was it in fact poisoning her? I didn’t know- so I broke it. And she woke up an hour or so later. And since then I’ve raised her as my own. We can’t go live in the ports, because the Collectors will want to take her. Some of the patrol units know about her- but they think she’s just deformed- maybe mutated. That’s not exactly uncommon here.’

‘Jungkook- he’s- I guess according to Ilya- he’s a New Born too.’

‘The young Vicitra?’ Jn’young inquires.

Sk’jin nods, ‘We found him in Ynqaba. We believe the Yishengs were there-’

‘He was intended to become like the GI then?’ Jn’young interrupts. ‘I’m different- I was created by the Creveni, and then taken by Ndica into Axudar.’

‘But-‘

‘In essence, your youngling Jungkook and I are the same. We can both be called New Borns. In fact, so can the GI, and all the creations of the Creveni.’ Jn’young explains.

‘But Yoongi-‘

‘-is one of the Regurgitated.’ Jn’young answers, ‘I know that sounds- unpleasant, but it is what it is.’

‘What makes Yoongi different?’

‘He was created but…for lack of a better word, he was not incubated after his creation. He was not sent long enough into void, this space here, to completely…well, to lose himself- it might differ,’ Jn’young adds thoughtfully, ‘Hence the term regurgitated, - he was swallowed, but never digested properly I guess.’

Sk’jin makes a disgusted expression, but it made sense, if you thought about it. All of the eggs, those New Borns- all of the GI that were contained in those OrTanks, all of the Beings growing and sleeping within the Akramanese ship- they were held in those states for who knew how long.
But Yoongi.

According to Amme, she was able to rescue just a handful of them before Ndica had the rest destroyed, after discovering them in Megibīya, not too long after the Akramanese took in Jimin.

‘With the true GI, and with what the Creveni made. But from what Yoongi showed me- he was created by the Creveni, and then he was abandoned, taken in by the Yishengs instead.’ Jn’yong looks thoughtful before he adds, ‘It’s probably after that Ndica took hold of me from the Creveni.’

Sk’jin’s mind is abuzz, ‘Is that why- is that why he remembers so much of his past? Why it’s almost as though he has two separate…identities, within him?’

Jn’yong nods, adding with regret, ‘When I was in Axudar, I saw quite a lot of them- the Regurgitated. And it- they never lasted long.’

Sk’jin can’t help but glance inwards.

Jimin isn’t looking at them, instead he’s looking down at Yoongi’s sleeping form, now completely whole and no longer blurred.

‘What happened to them? What did- what did they do in Axudar?’ Sk’jin asks quietly.

Jn’yong just shakes his head, glancing away from the doorway and actually stepping back. ‘I never saw for myself, but I don’t think- I don’t think it would have ended well.’

‘But- but you? And Jungkook-‘

‘I’m not Regurgitated, it’s why I have no- no connection or memory of the Bloodmoon, as the Khol’isa call it.’ Jn’yong explains, ‘And for Jungkook-… you’ve known him longer. What do you think?’

‘He was born Awake,’ Yoongi had said about Jungkook. ‘He was raised.’

‘But he’s the same,’ Taeh’yung had replied, ‘Same.’

‘Maybe same, but different.’

Jimin steps out, closing the door behind him that somehow was never there in the first place.

The sound of the rain disappears along with it, like a faded memory.

There’s a lot to think of- to digest, with what Jn’yong just explained to them. Sk’jin understands why Ilya had insisted that they hear it from Jn’yong.

Jn’yong doesn’t say anything, but just extends his hand out to Jimin. Jimin takes it without hesitation. Jn’yong then reaches for Sk’jin’s hand.

‘Uh-‘ Jimin begins hesitantly.

‘No princeling, I’m coming too,’ Sk’jin waves aside Jimin’s obvious worry that Jn’yong immediately catches on, retracting his hand just a little. But Sk’jin grabs it quickly. ‘Let’s get going pupa, time is of the essence is it not?’

Jn’yong grimaces, still very handsome regardless, and nods.

The white of the mist collapses almost immediately, the air forms shapes and boundaries so quickly, expanding in mass and time around them.

They’re in a crowded street, Transporters zipping around carelessly, Beings crossing the road here and there with no regards to the incoming traffic around and above them.

Ah, typical city behavior.

‘Welcome to Axudar, more accurately, welcome to Prime-T One City, in Kaitütei,’ Jn’young announces, ‘Notable Beings from Kaitütei is of course, the Yisheng Ndica, our favourite Yisheng in the whole Known Universe, ah, may he rest in peace.’

It’s a typical street, nothing noteworthy or amazing. It was just a normal street.

At least for Sk’jin.

There’s a gasp from Jimin. Sk’jin follows his line of sight upwards, towards a massive billboard jutting out of the edge of a tall building.

It’s a typical advertisement. Flashy edits, and then a few highly stylized models who are apparently enjoying whatever ointment they put on their skin as they rub their very naked bodies with glee and relish. Sk’jin doesn’t understand why something like this would illicit a reaction like a gasp- he highly doubts Jimin is a prude. But then the models are replaced by someone who is clearly a spokesperson or representative.

And that’s when Sk’jin feels his own gasp erupt out of him.

The Being who has replaced the models is tall and slim, elegance in the way they move their six arms. Their skin is a fresh light sapling hue. They had no hair, the crown of their head expanding fan-like behind them. If Sk’jin had to guess, he would assume that the shape would change according to each Being in the species. But he doesn’t have time to think about it because-

‘As you can see – we can give you your youth back- not just the physicality, but the strength, the feeling, the sensation- and most of all, selective memory that allows you to relive your life to the best of what it was!’

Twin solar-eclipses were looking down at him.

Immediately, Sk’jin stares across at Jimin who is beyond confused.

If Sk’jin remembers right, only Jimin had these eyes- he was born with them, displaying his rank, his title- his calling.

The billboard continues to play the ad, and Jimin can’t tear his eyes away. He stares and he stares.

‘It’s not the same,’ Jn’young says conversationally, ‘I don’t think it is. Look closely.’

Paying attention back at the advertisement, Sk’jin concentrates. The language is warped- Sk’jin can hear how he doesn’t understand it, but at the same time, as this is Jn’young’s memory, he understands Jn’young’s understanding of it. His memory of it.

The Being with Jimin’s eyes continues to speak and Sk’jin squints, studying this Being’s features.

‘It’s here.’

He feels a finger lightly stroke across his temple.
And Sk’jin sees it.

Faint marks- surgery incisions.

‘Verktaē.’ Jn’young says, ‘Hidden eyes, sullied eyes.’

The advertisement changes back to the beginning, back to the models who are dramatically aged, and in a flash, their forms changed to the younger ones. This time when they turn, Sk’jin notices the long dent down their backs.

‘This is wrong,’ Jimin whispers. ‘This is wrong.’

‘Come with me,’ Jn’young says.

Sk’jin tears his eyes away from the ad.

Jemin is still staring, watching as the Verktaē appears again.

‘That’s—. . . .that’s a Be’iji- a native of Be’i, the fifth sister-planet of Menigištiti,’ Jimin says, dazed, tone almost monotonous. ‘The Be’iji they— they cannot…they can hear lies. They can hear falsehoods and—’

‘Jemin.’

Sk’jin forcefully turns Jimin’s head away, forcing him to look away.

‘I think you need to stop thinking about what you once knew,’ Sk’jin says firmly. ‘What you once believed in. What you thought was the truth, what you thought made sense, what was once infallible. You need to leave that behind— you’re not in that lifetime anymore. You’re here. And here everything is different. And we need to understand how, and why.’

Jemin inhales shakily before exhaling slowly. He nods, taking Sk’jin’s hands that were on his face and squeezing them.

‘Come with me,’ Jn’young says again.

Jemin doesn’t let go of Sk’jin’s hand and he can’t rue him that.

When he really thinks about it. Thinks about the state of Jimin’s mind— how he woke up after so long, and having all of this shoved at him, having the knowledge that his very existence was the cause and reason behind so much destruction and death. Knowing that your System, your planet, your own people, those you thought you knew— how all of that meant nothing, how none of that represented what you thought you knew so well. Knowing that the Being you love is hopelessly tied to you, and the fate you hold — and knowing that that was the very thing that was slowly killing them.

He squeezes Jimin’s hand back.

‘I’m glad you’re here,’ Jimin tells him quietly as they follow Jn’young down the crowded street.

‘What does it mean?’ Sk’jin asks quietly. ‘What…what do your eyes really mean?’

Jemin looks ahead, lips pressed into a thin line before he takes a deep breath. ‘As the... as the Fate of my people- the Yemenifesi Ch’inik’eti, I represent the Fate of Menigištiti, and all those who live there.’
'You represent the decisions, the path- what should, what shouldn’t happen?'

Jimin pauses before he shakes his head, ‘I- it’s not like that. I never make decisions, I just- I advise, I listen, I just-’

‘A lot of times- most times- most Beings fight fate. They fight fate, they make their own destiny-things like that. Is what we consider order, or peace, or unity, the same if the decisions taken are made by fate? Even if this order, this peace is something that has been known for a long time- that has been followed for the length of life itself- all minds evolve, all hearts evolve- what if they wish to control their own fate?’

‘What does it mean- if someone else has it?’

‘That wasn’t- that wasn’t the real one it was- it was wrong,’ Jimin emphasizes, looking up at Sk’jin, ‘Was it because I left Menigišiti? Was another born to replace me immediately this- it’s never happened like this before and-’

‘-look here.’ Jn’young calls, pausing to a stop a little ahead of them.

Jimin turns pale.

There’s another advertisement, this time it’s closer down on a display near an intersection. Going around and past a few other Beings on the street, Sk’jin practically drags Jimin closer, a cold sensation hitting his stomach.

It’s not too surprising- he’s been able to put two and two together.

Every time Jn’young, or even Ilya, spoke about it, though brief, Sk’jin always had the feeling that they were referring to more than just one Being- more than just one Being with the same eyes as Jimin’s.

And in this advertisement, shot and edited to look like some sort of interview, is a native Axudarian, asking questions to a group of 4 separate Beings. There’s no volume, and Sk’jin guesses it’s some form of tabloid media, just showing a brief rundown of what was happening for an episode to be broadcasted later. They seem to be having a light-hearted chat. All four of the interviewed Beings have the exact same eyes as Jimin.

Stunned into silence, Jimin just stares.

‘They called them Eclipsing Travelers,’ Jn’young explains, leaning against a high streetlamp, ‘Brought here by Ndica, to help Axudar be united and whole, to put aside their differences, and embrace oneness.’

‘Hoseok had mentioned this,’ Sk’jin frowns, ‘And even Namjoon- during their research, and from information from Amme- about how Axudar had…maybe undergone some sort of very intense reformation regarding…well, I guess regarding the way they look?’

Jn’young smirks at that, ‘That’s a very polite way of putting it. And also not quite exactly that.’

Sk’jin glances around the street, looking closely at the Beings around them. None of them looked all too strange, for their own species at least. Or, in Sk’jin’s perspective of them at least.

‘I think in order to explain this more, and before I show you more about myself, I should explain Axudar and…and what they believe in.’ Jn’young says thoughtfully. ‘It’s to to…not to really excuse them, or an attempt at empathy because,’ Jn’young snorts, ‘I lived the means of supporting their beliefs and if I could destroy every single one of them I would.’

There is no exaggeration in Jn’young’s tone- no attempt at a statement made just for shock-value; Jn’young held absolutely no qualms about doing what he says he wants to do.

‘Axudar has three livable planets in it,’ Jn’young starts out, reclining elegantly against the lamppost. ‘Each planet clashed against each other over resources, who held the “correct” beliefs- all of that usual stereotypical topics that cause conflict across the Known Universe. But here in Kaitûtei, they took things a little- let’s say they took things a little too far.

‘As you know- Axudar as a whole has always long held…theoretical studies quite high, regarding the topic of immortality.’

‘It’s where the whole nonsense behind Digitized Souls first came up.’

Jn’young nods.

‘While the planets within Axudar all had their differences- they all craved one thing.’

‘Immortality?’ Sk’jin scoffs.

‘The ability to choose,’ Jn’young explains. ‘You’re aware that Kaitûtei is under the GLA protection for Environmental Protection right?’

Sk’jin and Jimin both nod.

‘Actually, all of Axudar is placed under this protection- and not just as a cover up- but genuinely because the System of Axudar is actually very fragile, and the Beings within it, the original natives,’ he nods at the television at the interviewer, ‘they have incredibly short life-span, and are incredibly sickly. They naturally live just a short 50 Standard sols.’

Sk’jin is taken aback by this. There were a lot of planets and Systems that did indeed have Beings with short life-spans, but this was incredibly low.

‘It’s actually- maybe it’s not a coincidence, but you’re familiar with Gaia- Earth, where Yoongi is from correct?’ Jn’young asks.

Both Sk’jin and Jimin nod hesitantly at this.

‘In the past, Earth too had an incredibly short life-span, by Standard measures anyways. But that was in the past, before the GLA “rescued” them and integrated them into the Known Universe. As a result, Earth was rescued, her Humans restored, and now they’re able to live longer, become stronger- and all of that good stuff. Similarly, Axudar had reached that breaking point Earth did so many millennia ago.

Over population, pollution, depleting resources – Axudar nearly ate itself in order to survive.’

‘But Axudar has long been a part of the GLA,’ Sk’jin frowns. ‘No System under the GLA would go through such a turn without the GLA knowing and, despite their faults and greed, the GLA would attempt to move in wouldn’t they?’

‘Unlike with Earth, Axudar staged their own apocalypse,’ Jn’young explains. ‘It purposefully corroded itself, broke its own people, essentially tore down and stripped the Beings of Axudar into nothing more than hollow and empty shells, simply waiting for anything that could save them.’
‘Is that when Ndica made his move?’

‘I think… I think it has a lot to do with what Ndica himself wanted to do- his own beliefs, his belief that this Universe was meant to be a certain way.’

‘Ndica did this to his own System?’ Jimin asks harshly.

Jn’young nods and adds, ‘Much worse has been done, for far less.’

Sk’jin knows all too well what the Yishengs had wanted to do with the Known Universe.

‘And so he came in- much like a long awaited hero coming to rescue the helpless,’ Jn’young explains. ‘He turned the Beings of Axudar against the GLA, by orchestrating a good near millennium of absolute horror over Axudar, making it appear that the GLA had abandoned them. And he claimed to bring life, to bring healing- it was all just, just simple GLA tech- terraforming equipment, nurseries and incubators- the means to regrow Axudar, replant resources, develop and fund tech and equipment for fuel and energy – because despite being such a forefront in developing technology, Ndica bled his own System dry in order for him to control it.

Axudar became his petri dish to experiment in.’

‘Of course,’ Jimin says softly, ‘Starve someone long enough, and they will eat anything given to them.’

Jn’young nods, ‘And then with the help, no doubt, from Tlun’hla, who had a very big hand in the development of the GI, brought their twisted beliefs into Axudar and forever changed the way all of Axudar would simply choose to be.

‘Already in the past, the Beings of Axudar would indulge in all sorts of attempts to elongate their lifespan, to extend their existence, to live more than they could – they cursed their fate, only allowed to live such a short period when they believed they had so much to give, so much to do, so much to know- this hunger they had surpassed any hunger they would have, and it was what Ndica and Tlun’hla fed into.’ Jn’young pauses, looking down for a moment before adding slowly, ‘He was able to convince the Beings of Axudar to allow Ndica to do as he wished – to introduce this new technology he had developed and strengthen the people. Of course this was all simply a very vague reenactment of what happened on Earth- the Axudarians were able to live longer- and this was already a sealed approval from the mass public for Ndica to do as he wished.’

Not only was Ndica a native, but he was a Yisheng, blessed with long life, and the very ideal the now starved and depraved Beings of Axudar craved to become. Of course they would follow and listen obediently.

‘It was during this time when they first made contact with the Verktaë,’ Jn’young narrates. ‘But nothing would come of it for a long while, until one day it did.’

‘Was there a reason? A cause?’ Sk’jin asks, glancing down at Jimin who is quick to ask, ‘When did all of this happen?’

Jn’young looks uncomfortable as he says slowly, ‘I do not know, how much of what I say you will believe when I say this but- but time does not function the same way we understand it, in Axudar.’

‘What do you mean?’

‘As I mentioned before, Axudar has some of the lowest life-spans, right?’
Sk’jin nods slowly whereas Jimin’s eyes widen as though in realization.

‘This doesn’t necessarily have to do with their physical capacity as living Beings, but rather the state in which their System exists.’

‘That’s the stupidest thing I’ve heard,’ Sk’jin announces, ‘Time is the same- it’s linear and will continue to be so.’

But Jn’young shakes his head and so does Jimin.

‘What do you mean by shaking your heads,’ Sk’jin scowls at both of them. ‘You’re saying Axudar exists in a different time frame?’

‘I think- Sk’jin I think,’ Jimin says carefully, ‘I think Axudar might have been, a place where the First Children once were.’

‘Great not this First Children bullshit again-‘ Sk’jin huffs out.

‘So- I can’t give you a straight timeline- because...because it doesn’t add up,’ Jn’young explains carefully. ‘But Ilya tried to add it all up together- and though I could be wrong, I believe this all happened nearly 1300 sols ago by Standard measurement. But for me- for me it was no more than 2 centuries ago.

And once the Verktaë and Ndica collaborated, and with the discovery of the Creveni and what they were doing by creating New Borns, Ndica was able to use his own System to develop and grow his own New Borns. Obviously a lot did not work out- but once he stabilized, once he was able to obtain more of the Creveni’s creations from Bhumi, he and Tlun’hla were able to start working on the GI.’

‘He was so sure of himself- with the Verktaë he was able to bring in not just a beloved legend long believed in Axudar, to life, but he was able to stabilize his System.’

‘What do you mean?’ Jimin asks breathlessly.

‘It’s not like the whole of Axudar thought that Ndica was their hero, or in some Beings case, their God- many did not like Ndica and where he was going with Axudar- but after the Verktaë came, it was almost as though they were simply subdued and lulled into a singular state of oneness- of being united.’

A very bitter cold feeling settles in Sk’jin’s stomach. He looks at Jimin, remembers what he had done, just within the hour, at the Bridge, how all the Beings aboard and nearby simply stood in awe of him, in complete subjugation.

‘And Ndica was able to recreate, in a sense, the control he believed in so much- the power he craved, the ability to manipulate; in the belief that any of this had to do with peace or unity. He was able to do it in Kaitütei-‘

‘-how- how can you make an entire planet just believe-‘ Jimin starts but he stops, clearly understand how it was done. How it could be done.

Because if Jimin were to look at it- if anyone were to look at any sort of belief system- the answer lay there. It was simple. Too simple.

Jn’young gives him a lazy smile, ‘And it didn’t stop there- all of Axudar quickly fell into this state of delusion. And now the Beings in it live a strangely charmed life you could say.’
‘Are they- are they being controlled?’ Sk’jin asks, ignoring how Jimin looks sharply at him.

‘Not exactly controlled no,’ Jn’young shakes his head, ‘They’re…in an elevated state. What they choose to see- their eyes veiled. They could banter with each other, have minor arguments over the taste of food, preferences of summer and winter- but they do not exist beyond anything more than that.’

‘And so what do the Verktaë have to do with this?’ Sk’jin inquires, ‘Are they the ones responsible for living like this-’

‘I wouldn’t say they’re all responsible for this,’ Jn’young shakes his head. ‘While the Verktaë are responsible for a lot of wrong- they’re here in Axudar simply because they too, like those in Axudar, wished to go against their fate.’

Sk’jin can’t find it in himself to look at Jimin.

‘What do you mean by that?’ Sk’jin asks.

‘What I know, what I came to understand- all of this was learnt from when I pried into the minds of the Verktaë, and into the minds of some other Beings who either aided Ndica and Tlun’hla, or even a few Axudarians,’ Jn’young explains without hesitation. ‘So what I did with Yoongi was not the first time I had done it.’

Sk’jin can’t help but glare at the other Khol’isa. Now was not the time to prove oneself.

‘Every time I looked into the minds of the Verktaë, of why they choose to be there, of why they wanted to come to Axudar, what was their purpose- their memories only ever lead to once source-,’ Jn’young looks at Jimin almost apologetically at this, ‘- a large courtyard, filled with all sorts of Beings, all of whom I recognized as being Verktaë but- but that was when I knew their eyes were not always like this,’ Jn’young taps across his temples, ‘-and at the top of this courtyard stood 7 pairs of Beings, behind them a large OrTank of sorts, and within it encased a naked Being.’

‘What- what did she look like?’ Jimin asks, words strained, hands forming fists.

‘How –how did you know-?’ Jn’young looks bewildered.

But Sk’jin is putting it together now and it feels all too familiar.

‘Her eyes were always closed,’ Jn’young says gently, ‘Sometimes she wasn’t clear in the memories- but always, the ring of light on her forehead was clear and bright.’

‘Tsirin,’ Jimin whispers, hands trembling nearly violently, painfully gripping Sk’jin’s hand.

‘I think you saw his sister,’ Sk’jin explains in answer to Jn’young’s questioning look.

Jn’young truly looks regretful.

‘And?’ Jimin asks forcefully, ‘What else was in this memory?’

‘A few of the 11 pairs would speak, but the clearest thing any of these memories could conjure was one of them saying ‘we will break from our fate of hiding- we will control our fates from this day’.’

Jimin exhales shakily before he sinks down to his knees.

Jn’young looks incredibly uncomfortable.
Sk’jin is tugged down too, his hand still clasped in Jimin’s shaking one.

There’s nothing Sk’jin can say.

It was clear.

Ndica managed to take control over Jimin’s Council, or at least a majority of them as Jn’young had mentioned 7 pairs; from what Sk’jin remembers Jimin telling them, the Great Council consisted of 11 pairs of representatives of every existing planet is Menigišiti. Ndica had planned on taking Jimin, to use him much the same way the Akramanese used him to create and “incubate” their eggs. And while that plan was thwarted by the appearance of the Akramanese, Ndica clearly got hold of his sister.

If his sister, the Heart of their System, was anything like Jimin, then being able to use her to gain complete and utter control over all of Axudar would be child’s play.

What could Ndica have said to the Council to make them break their System like this?

‘They changed their eyes, they said, to symbolize their control over their own fates,’ Jn’young adds hesitantly. ‘And the scars are a reminder of how they were once simply following blind faith.’

Jnim is shaking, the air around them shifting visibly. Jn’young instantly stands straight, looking around with wide eyes.

‘Uh-‘

‘It’s him wait-‘ Sk’jin nods at Jimin before crouching as low as he could to address Jimin carefully. ‘Jimin- hey kiddo, breathe with me here okay? There’s nothing you can do about this-‘

‘-where did I go wrong?’ Jimin asks, his voice monotonous. ‘Where did I go wrong, what did I do wrong.’

Sk’jin looks around helplessly.

He knows what Jimin is feeling- maybe not in the same scope, but he knows.

When he lead his network, so many centuries ago, in a time that felt like a lifetime ago, he did his best to organize and bring stability to the many Beings who followed him and worked for him. And sometimes things didn’t work out- sometimes it was his fault, sometimes it wasn’t- and Sk’jin always pondered over what he did wrong- what went wrong.

‘What did I do, what did I not see?’

Jn’young is increasingly agitated by the chaos around them as the Prime-T One City starts to violently warp, no longer under Jn’young’s control or even within his memory.

Suddenly, Jimin looks up, straight at Jn’young.

‘Show me-‘ Jimin says, ‘I need to see her- I need to see what you saw in their memories I need to see-‘

Sk’jin feels himself being pushed aside as Jimin seems to teleport before Jn’young taking the Khol’isa’s face in his hands.

‘Please show me-‘
Jn’young hesitates before his eyes focus, serious and intent.

The floor falls below Sk’jin and he’s surprisingly not in a heap on the stone floor.

It’s a beautiful place. The sky clear and wide above, the sun just about right and warm. There are tall hills, the peaks of white snowy mountains to the west, and a wide ocean to the east.

But the details are blurred. Because this wasn’t Jn’young’s true memory- but rather a memory of a memory, faded and washed. But it doesn’t stop Jimin, pushing through the crowd.

He fit into this memory- like he belonged. Jn’young appears next to him, his expression disturbed.

‘It seems that there was some sort of coup planned,’ Jn’young says quietly as Jimin stops before the raised courtyard, unable to move on ahead as the memory blurs terribly. ‘To take him and his sister out.’

Sk’jin nods, sighing quietly under his breath. Even from here, Sk’jin recognizes the OrTank- it was greatly similar to the one Jimin was in, but slightly larger. The form inside is blurred, but the ring of light is not.

Sk’jin can make out rippling hair, blurred arms and legs.

‘Why would they do this?’ Jn’young ponders quietly.

‘Because,’ Sk’jin says quietly, ‘A lot of times- most times- most Beings fight fate.’

Jemin turns around to look at them, eyes wide and glimmering with unshed tears.

‘Is what we consider order, or peace, or unity, the same if the decisions taken are made by fate?’ Sk’jin quotes. ‘Even if this order, this peace is something that has been known for a long time- that has been followed for the length of life itself- all minds evolve, all hearts evolve- what if they wish to control their own fate?’

* *

It was raining when Yoongi was finally able to get himself together.

He remembered being carried in, being placed on the bed, having a hand as warm as unexpected sunlight caress his face, push back his hair.

He remembers voices, discussions, answers, questions.

He gets up, reaching over to switch on the lamps because it was dark out. The floors are cool under his bare feet. He walks to one of the tall windows and pushing aside the curtain looks out.

The sky is stormy and dark, the rain steady but not overwhelming.

The lamp switches off again and Yoongi goes to switch it on again. Somehow it’s not upsetting that the lights keep switching off. But the warm yellow of the light reminds Yoongi of Jimin.
He switches on all of the lamps in the bedroom before stepping out into the dark hallway. Here he switches on all of the lamps again, noticing how one by one, the ones in the bedroom switch off.

Quietly, the sound of a door opening draws his attention.

Looking around, he notices how the front door is now open.

A soft white light spills out of the doorway, illuminating the hallway faintly.

The lamps start going out in the hallway as well.

Yoongi takes a step forward towards the door, drawn to the soft light.

He had been in there before- out there, somewhere there. Just moments ago.

But- but Jimin had brought him back in here.

The lamp next to him gives out and somehow, Yoongi automatically switches it back on. When he looks up again, the door is closed again, and all the lamps are switched back on.

He looks back at the door, pausing momentarily before turning his back to it and returning to the bedroom.

Ilya had called in the medics to be at standby.

So they’re the first Beings Yoongi sees when he wakes up.

He’s quickly checked over, while Camil loudly asks him ‘Yoon-ki how many fingers am I holding up?’ in the background. He’s still in Jn’yong’s inner chamber, and to his surprise, Sk’jin was slumped over the low table, along with Jimin and Jn’yong.

No one wanted to move them- so Jimin, Sk’jin, and Jn’yong were allowed to just slump awkwardly over furniture, their hands all grasped together.

Yoongi himself had woken up some hours ago, much to Hoseok’s obvious relief, Ilya’s confusion, and Jungkook’s tears he wouldn’t owe up to. Taeh’yung is there to tell him what happened, and why Sk’jin was also added to the mix of unconscious Beings.

And now that team of medics waited outside, while Yoongi, Hoseok, Taeh’yung, Jungkook, Ilya, Camil, and Jaen are gathered in the inner room.

It had now been over 5 hours of just waiting, but no one made a move to step away. Yoongi had explained what he showed to Jn’yong briefly. Hoseok was obviously mad at him, more worried over mad, but the “mad” part was showing a bit more.

Yoongi had awkwardly apologized which made the Ngfy’widan somehow more upset, making him swear to him to never ever do something like this again.

Yoongi hastily accepted.

There’s the slightest twitch of fingers- whose, Yoongi is not sure, but their grasped hands fall apart, with an alarming loud snapping sound and everyone is panting for breath, falling over away from each other as though repelled.

‘I feel like I’ve drunk something from Zu’ruitok,’ is the first thing Sk’jin groans, even before opening his eyes. The medics are very quick to bring him a bucket, an anti-nausea shot, and several facial wipes, all in that order.

Jn’young is much better- just disoriented, but already being held up by Ilya, closely watched over by Camil who beckons over a medic.

Yoongi reaches Jimin first. Careful with how he holds him.

Jimin is shaking, heaving as he clutches Yoongi’s hand, falling over as though losing all sense of direction, perspective and balance. But Yoongi is there.

‘Hey I’m here-‘ Yoongi pulls him closer, grounding Jimin to his own body, ‘I’m here sunshine, I got you.’

Jungkook stands, torn between Sk’jin and Jimin. He makes up his mind, crouching down to Sk’jin and almost inconveniently nuzzling into the Khol’isa. It makes Sk’jin smile, wrapping an arm around the younglings head, saying something in a low voice.

One of the medics approaches Jimin, scanning him quickly. If the medic team is confused, they don’t show it. After Jimin is cleared, Hoseok immediately steps in.

‘What happened?’ Hoseok asks, crouching down.

Jimin takes a few steadying breaths.

Yoongi wishes he could just give Jimin a short reprieve- a time to just breathe. Rather than answer questions, forced to understand what he had no part in, forced to come to terms about the nature of what happened, and what was happening. He almost wants to tell Hoseok to just give Jimin a moment to recover- a moment to just simply be.

‘My System-‘ Jimin gasps out, ‘My people- they-‘

His face crumples and he blindly pushes his face into Yoongi’s shoulders, whole body shaking as he sobs, tears soaking Yoongi’s shirt wet.

‘Hoseok-‘ Ilya calls quietly, looking down at Yoongi and Jimin briefly with worry.

The Ngfy’widan walks over quickly.

‘Oh, Chim,’ Taeh’yung says quietly, also kneeling down to gently pat Jimin’s head, face still buried in Yoongi’s chest.

Yoongi doesn’t say anything, just holds Jimin close to himself.

He glances across at Sk’jin who was being supported by Jungkook.

He looks worse for wear, fatigue evident in his eyes. He’s gingerly touching his temples when he catches Yoongi’s gaze. He looks at Jimin, and then back at him, his expression grave.

He feels an arm around him, noticing that it’s Taeh’yung who’s hugging them both with his long arms.

‘My babies,’ he says softly, smiling at Yoongi in a gentle manner.

The medics leave the room after they’ve cleared everyone. They hesitate a moment before making their leave with a nod from Camil.
Hoseok is standing with Ilya, listening to Jn’young who was speaking earnestly, cradling a bottle of ionized water in his hands. The Ngfy’widan is nodding, expression serious as he listens to Jn’young explain what he must have shown Sk’jin and Jimin.

Not for the first time, Yoongi wishes he could simply leave. Simply leave, take Jimin with him, and go somewhere far away, where no one could find them, where no one could touch them.

Somewhere so far away, that grief could not touch them, guilt could not stain them, and loss could not burden them.

Yoongi wishes he could just pick Jimin up right now, take a Transporter, and simply leave.

But he knows he can’t.

Because in the end, Yoongi knows Jimin would not go.

And Yoongi promised, that day, so long ago, that he would find Jimin.

And wherever Jimin went, Yoongi would follow.

Face still splotched, hands still shaking, Jimin sits next to him, hand in hand, as he, Sk’jin, and Jn’young finish speaking.

‘Is there a way of knowing,’ Hoseok begins hesitantly, ‘If your sister is still…still there?’

Jimin shakes his head.

‘We can assume that with the way Jimin was contained in that OrTank, his sister should be similarly positioned,’ Sk’jin theorizes. ‘It’s safe to say, considering how Axudar is still functioning the way it is, that she should still be there. That is to say if Tsirin is at all in Axudar.’

‘Based on what Jn’young has to say, and with what Jaen can confirm about Axudar, I would say she is still there,’ Ilya says worriedly and adding, ‘But does that mean that your System, Menigišiti, is now completely exposed?’

‘If it were, we would know,’ Camil comments, to which Hoseok nods.

‘Even if the gateways are not functioning, Menigišiti will still be hidden,’ Jimin replies.

He had cried his heart out, crumpling against Yoongi. But after a few moments, he was able to pull himself together again, straighten out his expression, and ready to discuss. Yoongi wishes he could give him all the time he needed to just allow himself to feel, to truly just take a breath.

Jimin was strong- but he didn’t always have to be strong. And Yoongi wishes he could give Jimin that, give him time to no longer feel the need to be strong.

‘Our gateways simply stabilize what was already existing in Menigišiti- the gaps appearing in our shield will be unpredictable, however, and we wouldn’t be able to control it or cover it.’ Jimin further explains.
‘How many of the Verktaë live in Axudar?’ Hoseok asks.

‘Nearly more than half- and that’s just in Kaitütei, I don’t know about the other two,’ Jn’yound replies easily. ‘It’s- it’s as though they live there for their amusement, watching the Axudarians live their elevated state- like they feel a sense on control.’

‘They think they are controlling their fates by indirectly controlling the “fates” of the Axudarians,’ Jaen says bluntly, ‘My father was one of the Axudarians who refused to listen to Ndica- he escaped with our family before things got worse. Before everyone lost themselves.’

‘Does that mean- does that mean Menigišiti is empty?’ Sk’jin asks sharply.

‘I highly doubt everyone would simply follow-‘ Ilya begins but Jimin shakes his head.

‘If they used Tsirin the same way they used me to connect the fates of the Red Evil’s creations to me, then our people would have followed Tsirin- or at least followed what they were lead to believe,’ Jimin says steadily. ‘Our people- we are all tied together in our beliefs-‘

‘-beliefs that they clearly wanted to overthrow,’ Camil remarks from where he was sitting.

Jimin scowls a little at that.

‘There’s a ship, Ndica’s ship that is the center of Prime T-One – you could say all of Prime T-One was built around and for this ship.’ Jn’yound explains, cutting in, ‘And from what I was able to understand- this is the ship that came in and after that, as Jaen calls it, everyone simply lost themselves.’

‘We can assume that this ship carries Tsirin then,’ Hoseok remarks, arms crossing, ‘And as Kaitütei is the “protected” planet- it makes sense that this is where the center of control would be, so to speak.’

Jaen nods at that, ‘Māhanga and Blidra have an ever lower population count than Kaitütei did in the past- besides, from what I remember my father telling me, Māhanga was where all of the crazy shit started with experiments and all that.’

‘If you don’t mind my asking,’ Yoongi interrupts, ‘What were the eggs, the New Borns, used for in Axudar?’

Jn’yound gives him a wry smile.

‘Ah yes,’ he says lightly, ‘We got into trouble before I could show you clearly.’

Yoongi grimaces at that.

‘In Axudar, us New Borns made excellent subjects for experimentation. Especially once we were awaken- Ndica made it his absolute mission to understand how the Creveni made us- he did a lot, I can spare everyone the details. But it was just not Ndica and his crew of equally delightful Yishengs, but also the Verktaë who would come in and look at us.’ Jn’yound narrates, ‘They found us all extremely fascinated- and somehow, they seemed to hate us a lot. And I never quite understood why- but then when you showed me into your memories,’ Jn’yound looks across at Jimin and says, ‘I think it’s because they associated us, the New Borns, with you.’

‘Because the eggs- I mean New Borns, created by the Akramanese, were influenced by Jimin?’ Hoseok says carefully, ‘Because they’re tied to him, to his “fate”.’
Jn’young nods, ‘I guess you could say the GI were born because of us New Borns caught up in Ndica’s mess.’

‘We- we won’t be able to enter Menigišiti without alerting Axudar,’ Sk’jin says slowly, ‘Any hopes of trying to get the New Borns from Tayi to Menigišiti is just- just impossible.’

‘It’s why they set you on this mission,’ Ilya surmises, ‘Because they can’t act on it themselves.’

‘Is there a way of securing Menigišiti?’ Jaen asks Jimin.

‘It’s- it was already as secure as it could be,’ Jimin corrects himself, ‘So I don’t know how- especially if my people…if they left because they no longer wanted to be there, to no longer live as they did-‘ Yoongi squeezes his hand, ‘-and we still don’t know if- if anyone remains. If they all just left- or if some remained but that-‘

‘-seems unlikely,’ Jaen says bluntly with a shake of her head, ‘There is no coup, no takeover, where those in opposition are ever just allowed to live as they choose. Not in cases this extreme. Had my father not escaped with us when he did- we would have been killed, like so many others who did not run, who could not run.’

Jimin nods to that, his jaw set hard.

‘So what is it that you plan on doing?’ Ilya asks after a few seconds of silence.

Hoseok glances over at him and then at Sk’jin.

‘I think we should get Jn’young here to the Medical Bay for a thorough check up,’ Camil announces, getting up, ‘And Jaen needs to return to uh- the Bridge?’

Jaen is unimpressed before she too nods.

‘You’re more than welcome to stay with us,’ Ilya says, ‘We want to help you- this connects all of us more than you think we care to admit. But it is, and we will help in every way we can. Please remember this.’

Sk’jin looks pained as he nods, smiling a little late at Ilya.

‘If you need me, I’m at the Bridge- come on Jn’young, there’s a few issues that have been reported to me that I need you to look over from Cuab.’

‘I thought Camil was offering to give me a thorough check up at the Medical Bay?’ Jn’young raises his eyebrows, a smirk on his lips before addressing them, ‘Feel free to chill here- have some tea!’

‘You guys are so gross,’ Jaen says with a toss of her head, exiting the room.

Sk’jin watches after them leaving, a look of longing in his eyes.

They wait a while before Hoseok sighs heavily and says, with his face pushed into his hands, ‘Spaces, can all of you please not do dumb shit like this ever again? Please? Like, for my sake, I’m prematurely aging from stress here.’

Sk’jin laughs, leaning back to completely lay down on the thickly carpeted floor, ‘Mine wasn’t intentional Hoseokkie.’

‘I’m sorry,’ Jimin apologizes in a small but sincere tone before elbowing Yoongi.
‘Especially you!’ Hoseok says fiercely, looking up from his hands. ‘For fuck’s sake you couldn’t have waited and-‘

He stops talking, looking up and inhaling deeply. He was clearly not done with being mad at them.

‘Uh- I’m sorry too?’ Taeh’yung adds tentatively while Jungkook, extremely confused, also apologizes.

Hoseok looks 2 seconds from crying.

‘Okay so let’s plan,’ Sk’jin hurriedly announces from the floor, one foot kicking Yoongi.

‘What do you think has happened?’ Yoongi asks quietly, ‘To Menigišiti?’

Jimin fiddles with his hands, shoulders down, expression much more free. It makes Yoongi feel good- knowing that Jimin was allowing himself to express more to not just himself here, but to everyone else gathered in the room. Like he felt safe, comforted with the five of them here.

‘With Tsirin gone, and with me here- we did not…we did not die,’ Jimin says carefully, ‘And I have no idea- what will happen- what has happened, because it has never happened before. If we died- then another would be born, on the same day. But we- we’re still here.’

‘You believe your sister is alive?’

Jimin shrugs, eyes watering at once and saying with a wobbling and breathless voice, ‘I don’t know- ah, I didn’t want to cry again-‘

Five of them immediately offer Jimin some form of tissue or face towel.

This makes Jimin laugh, nose running, face wet. He takes the one Jungkook pushes at him and wipes his face.

‘We do not know what state Axudar is in, and knowing what we know now- it’s too risky to try and go there,’ Hoseok says, frowning hard as he thinks. ‘It would be incredibly risky showing up with not only Jimin, but with Jungkook and Yoongi.’

‘And we have no idea what’s up with Bhumi- I mean, Megibiya,’ Sk’jin corrects himself, ‘Or all of Menigišiti as a matter of fact.’

‘But- but your sister…’ Hoseok says slowly.

Jimin exhaled out slowly.

‘I don’t- I don’t know what to do.’ Jimin admits.

‘The people of Axudar- the Axudarians, they made their choice to live in this state,’ Sk’jin states bluntly, ‘I know that sounds harsh- but we’re not responsible for what has happened there- for the choices they have made.’

Jimin nods to that, closing his eyes.

‘But if you want,’ Sk’jin says slowly, ‘And you want to check on your sister- because again, at this point we can’t claim to understand how things work in your System- what it means to have both of you, outside of Menigišiti- and if you want to find a way, back to your sister-‘
Jimin shakes his head, eyes still closed.

‘I- I want to go to Megibīya,’ Jimin says, his voice stable, opening his eyes to look at all of them. ‘But we do need to find a way in,’ Jimin says his words carefully, ‘With what we- with what we’ve been seeing, and now that we know from Jn’yong’s past, and with what Amme told us- the eggs, or New Borns, they deserve a safe place to be kept, to grow in time, or to sleep, and- be allowed to live how they wish to.’

Jimin looks at all of them, ‘I know this is- this is a difficult task, none of you, owe any of these Beings, the New Borns, you don’t owe them anything. And if you wish to leave-‘

‘-so going to Axudar is completely out of any hypothetical plan then,’ Sk’jin drawls across, ‘I think heading to Bhumi will actually be a reasonable step forward.’

Jimin frowns down at Sk’jin but the Khol’isa pays him little mind.

‘Agreed,’ Hoseok jumps in, giving Jimin a small apologetic smile, ‘We can choose a separate trajectory- it might take a little more time, but given our condition, we have no choice. We can choose this spot in order to observe further into Menigi’siti, as well as see what has been happening in the general space-area.’

‘Yeah!’ Taeh’yung jumps in to agree with violent nods, ‘It will be interesting to see! And if we return Chim to Megibīya, who knows what we might be able to see?’

‘We can get you home soon then,’ Hoseok smiles at Jimin who finally gives up his attempts at trying to make them leave the mission again. He looks sad, but at the same time, strengthened. Yoongi squeezes his hand gently again.

‘What about Namjoon?’ Yoongi asks.

‘Well, according to Camil’s last find, he’s still in Lowet.’ Hoseok replies immediately.

Sk’jin grimaces at that.

‘Kookie, what do you know about Lowet?’ Taeh’yung asks the Vicitra.

‘Um- not a lot,’ Jungkook replies hesitantly, ‘Always fighting with Lowet.’

Hoseok grimaces at that.

‘Tae- do you think Axudar could be one of the First Children?’ Sk’jin asks swiftly.

Taeh’yung pouts thoughtfully from where he’s sitting, ‘I don’t know Jinnie, I’ve never been there. None of us have really. Why?’

‘It’s what Jn’yong said,’ Sk’jin explains, rolling over to lay on his front, pushing himself up on his forearms to address the Zhak’gri. ‘He said that time is not exactly, in sync, with the rest of the Known Universe.’

‘Ah!’ Taeh’yung exclaims with a nod and says, ‘Some places are like that!’

‘What- no they’re not,’ Sk’jin argues at once.

‘Jinnie! They are!’ Taeh’yung crosses his arms, glaring down at Sk’jin.

‘Axudar is not close to any blackhole,’ Hoseok says slowly, looking between the two, ‘I mean in
‘Not a theory,’ Taeh’yung shakes his head, ‘This does happen! You don’t have to be near a blackhole for this to happen!’

‘I’ve never heard of this-’ Sk’jin begins but Hoseok cuts across, ‘Okay but that aside- does Axudar being one of the First Children in anyway effect or influence what happened?’

‘It would make sense as to why Axudar as a whole was so obsessed with Menigišiti?’ Yoongi offers, ‘They had a whole myth- a creation story, and folklore generated from just a singular and rare celestial occurrence- to the point where the Axudarians didn’t question Ndíca when he brought the “Verktaë” in.’

Hoseok nods to that in agreement.

‘Do we- do we accept their offer?’ Jimin asks tentatively.

Sk’jin immediately stiffens.

‘Ilya has a lot of power backing him up- a lot of connections, access,’ Hoseok lists off on his fingers, yellow eyes looking down at his hand but not really seeing, ‘-we could really boost our efforts, our time, our resources, by accepting his help.’

‘But?’

‘But,’ Hoseok smiles, ‘I don’t think I would feel good coming in between another family with this mess, no matter how closely connected they feel.’

Taeh’yung coos, reaching over to pat Hoseok on the head, which he dodges without much effort. Sk’jin seems relieved by this answer.

‘But would they agree to our refusal?’ Jimin looks at Sk’jin, ‘Ilya is family to you, he wants- he wants to be with you.’

Sk’jin gives him a small shrug, ‘Ilya is a grown Ožkan, and more than that, Nambike and his mother raised him, he will understand.’

Jimin nods slowly to that.

‘Okay then I will start setting up a route to Megibiya, maybe something different, from the others we had set up,’ Hoseok announces. ‘And as usual, we will keep the line open for Namjoon.’

Everyone nods to that.

‘Spaces, I’m hungry,’ Sk’jin groans as he sits up, immediately aided by Jungkook. ‘I think I also want like, a 5 hour bath-‘

‘When do we go?’ Hoseok inquires.

Everyone stops a moment.

‘I know it’s important we leave soon,’ Hoseok clarifies, ‘But at the same time, I want it to be done with all of us in good health – the two of you especially.’ He points at Sk’jin and then at Yoongi. ‘I think it’s safe to say we could get all of our provisions we need from here, but I need all of us to be in good form.’
‘Ilya is leaving Cuab in 2 days,’ Sk’jin offers from the floor. ‘We can- we can leave the same time.’

‘Are you sure?’ Jungkook asks a little nervously, ‘Um- it’s the, those white robes- they- they can follow us and-’

It’s a sticky silence, one that has everyone looking at each other for an answer.

‘I told Ilya about them,’ Sk’jin informs them. ‘I think- I think he’s more than prepared to do what is needed if they appear again.’

‘Maybe they won’t show up at all!’ Taeh’yung adds in cheerfully, ‘They suffered pretty large losses!’

‘Thanks to you,’ Sk’jin says in a low voice.

Hoseok thinks this out carefully before nodding, ‘Yeah- yeah. Two day; that’ll hopefully give us time to complete everything.’

‘And see if it’s possible to get the info on who the fuck issued our arrest warrants at a Universal scale,’ Sk’jin scowls, standing up. ‘But first- I think Jimin and I will go talk to Ilya. Tell him our plans.’

Jimin nods to that at once and adding, ‘Warn him about the Omhlophe – if he won’t take the risk-’

‘-which we don’t blame him for-’

‘-then we leave at once.’

Everyone nods to this.

‘I’ll go get us food!’ Taeh’yung volunteers.

‘Great- Yoongi, Kookie and I will go over the Laikin, prepare for this new plan.’ Hoseok adds, stretching a little as he stands up.

‘Should we uh- maybe clean up the place a little,’ Jungkook asks from where he was sitting, looking around the indeed, quite messy room.

Yoongi almost does not want to, just out of pure pettiness. But he nods anyways.

It doesn’t take too long to straighten out the room. They didn’t know where what went, so settled to neatly lining up misplaced objects near the wall or over the cleaned low table.

‘How much did you hear?’ Jimin asks him as they step out into the hallway, bringing up the rear. Yoongi is tired, they were all tired, and he’s grateful that Hoseok brought up the plan to have them rest first.

‘About the Regurgitated?’ Yoongi inquires, watching with some amusement as Jungkook offers to carry Sk’jin who was dragging his feet.

Jimin nods.

‘There’s a reason why Chaewon used to say that we were a family of cats, not dogs, despite having Holly.’
Jimin looks a little confused but he’s smiling, as though feeling the fondness in Yoongi’s voice. But he stops Yoongi for a second, tugging at his sleeve, allowing the others to walk further ahead.

‘Please- I really mean it,’ Jimin whispers shakily, ‘Please don’t do that again.’

‘I’m sorry sunshine,’ Yoongi takes his hands in his.

‘When I reached for you- your hands were cold and I- I thought I was going to lose you I-‘ Jimin stops, ‘Please, please- please.’

‘I won’t,’ Yoongi promises, taking his hands up to kiss them, ‘I won’t, I promise I won’t. Not again, I promise you.’

*

Ilya was not in the Bridge, and Jaen had explained that he was dealing with some issues within Cuab itself with Jn’yong. But that he would be back in a few hours. She had readily accepted some of the requests Hoseok had, and Camil had appeared to take the Ngfy’widan to the main storage cells to retrieve what they would need for the long journey.

Camil still gave him impressed smiles and cheering motions every time he saw him, and has said ‘big fan!’ at least 15 times by now. Yoongi is still uncomfortable that’s he so recognized. A few of Ilya’s crew do a double-take when they see him, expressions of both wariness and awe mingling in their gazes.

Yoongi and Jungkook met up with the two during their descent to the hangar, pushing a few gravity-lifts stock-pilled with fuel cells and chargers.

Yoongi immediately persuaded and got Jimin to sit on the lifts. Jimin had protested at first but eventually gave in, relief in his expression as he sits down.

Sk’jin point blank refused. But that didn’t stop him from complaining every few hours much to Yoongi’s mild annoyance and Jimin’s amusement.

‘I fucking hate this,’ Sk’jin complains for the 7th time in 15 minutes as they walk down the extended hallways bridging a few hangars together.

‘I’ll carry you?’ Jungkook offers.

‘I am not that old,’ Sk’jin grumbles but he fondly ruffles the Vicitra’s hair. Jungkook is clearly still very worried. ‘Okay how about you go set up for me? Honestly my arms are useless right now.’

Jungkook nods very seriously grabbing the lifts he was tugging along, quickly sprints ahead to reach the Laikin.

‘I’ll be down in about 10 minutes. Taeh’yung could you please stop hogging all of the food, everyone thinks we’re starving you or something-‘ Hoseok complains mildly.

There’s just a throaty giggle from Taeh’yung’s side.

‘What do you think they’ll do with the guards?’ Jimin asks from ahead of him as he squints at the escort ship now separately parked to another section of the hangar.

‘Return them?’ Yoongi offers, eyeing Sk’jin who shrugs unhelpfully.

‘I was just thinking,’ the Khol’isa says, stepping back to walk alongside Yoongi.

‘That you’re tired?’ Yoongi drawls.

‘Shut it Human,’ Sk’jin rolls his eyes, ‘I’m always tired.’

‘Sure.’

‘I preferred you when you talked a lot less than this,’ Sk’jin grumbles.

Jimin laughs, throwing his head back.

‘I was just thinking, and I bet my left lung that the ship in Kaitūtei is the same ship we found in Ynqaba,’ Sk’jin says.

‘It most probably is,’ Hoseok agrees, ‘I was thinking that too…do you think that’s why Namjoon’s in Lowet?’

Yoongi glances at Sk’jin who was carefully schooling his expression.

‘Maybe,’ Taeh’yung offers unexpectedly, ‘Ynqaba, Lowet, the planets there- a lot happened to them, and maybe Namjoon was taken there so that he can figure things out.’

‘You don’t think he’s being held at ransom?’ Jimin asks suddenly, looking truly aghast.

‘Don’t worry, we’ll pay for his metal ass any price,’ Sk’jin says before changing the topic, ‘Taeh’yung please stop eating and please bring me my food already.’

‘But it’s so tasty!’

‘And I would like to experience that too!’ Sk’jin argues, ‘Do you know how tired I am?’

‘Just take a seat,’ Jimin laughs.

‘I’m not that old,’ Sk’jin scowls, making a show of walking around ahead. Jimin just giggles at the Khol’isa. Clearly their relationship had improved. It makes Yoongi smile.

By the time they’ve arrived at their hangar, Jungkook bounds out of the Laikin, pleased with himself.

‘I set up for you!’ he declares, shiny eyes directed at Sk’jin who fondly pinches cheeks.

‘I feel better already,’ Sk’jin replies, ‘But I think it’s only fair if I help you guys out anyways.’

Jimin vocalizes his agreement, jumping off lightly.

‘Not heavy stuff!’ Jungkook points aggressively at the small crates piled up to the side.

Sk’jin raises his hands in mock-surrender and walks over to the pile. Yoongi guesses it contains the hollow vacuum cells the Laikin required for stabilizing manual-flight in-planet.

Straining his neck a little to look over the piled crates and looking outside, Yoongi can just about make out the edge of the end of Cuab-D2. The hangar doorways are all open glimmering a faint blue to indicate the Atmoshield that covered the entire ship. Yoongi guesses they were transferring goods to and fro at the hangar levels down here.

‘Sleep after this,’ Jimin states.

Yoongi chuckles, leaning forward on a crate with one arm and resting his head on it. ‘You or me?’

‘Both,’ Jimin says firmly, ‘This time I think 32 hours, 11 minutes.’

Yoongi laughs, standing up straight to lean forward and kiss him lightly. ‘32 hours, and 43 minutes.’

Jimin narrows his eyes comically as though contemplating, walking backwards, while Sk’jin yells, ‘Stop flirting and get a lift here thanks!’

‘Sounds good,’ Jimin declares primly, ‘I will hold you to that.’

‘Can’t wait.’

‘I SAID STOP FLIRTING!’

Jimin laughs, walking over towards the stacked lifts over on the other side of the hangar.

Looking around, still grinning, Yoongi finds Jungkook crouched at the side doorway to the Laikin, eyes like faintly glowing orbs, watching him.

It would be a rather terrifying sight to be sure, but Yoongi can’t help but chuckle.

‘Come on Kook,’ Yoongi gestures him over. ‘Let’s bring in the heavy stuff.’

Jungkook slinks all the way back in, eyes narrowing even more.

Yoongi cackles to himself.

Sk’jin complains every time he brings in a load of crates to the side, Jimin laughing next to him.

There’s a slight tremor under Yoongi’s feet, and the ship seems to tilt a little. They all pause, looking around suspiciously.

Nothing happens, though Sk’jin’s lift manages to float down some ways into the hangar.

‘Wow thank you artificial gravity for inclining along with the ship in my time of fatigue-‘

‘Sk’jin, if you’re tired, I can do it myself,’ Jimin wheezes, leaning against one of the halfway stocked lifts as Sk’jin catches up to one of the 2 that had floated away.

Yoongi feels the slightest tremor again- the hair on his nape standing on end.

‘You reach my age one day and you’ll know exactly what I mean-‘ Sk’jin yells from over his shoulder as he walks over to one of the lifts merrily floating away from them. ‘Even gravity is against you-‘

Jimin laughs, reaching down to pull at the small brake-lever at the edge of the lift when-

The lights flare red, immediately followed by a carrying wailing klaxon sound. The ship shudders violently- reminiscent of a planetary tremor.
Then almost violently, a familiar faint orange ripple of an emergency Atmoshield erupts before Yoongi, between him and Jimin and Sk’jin.

Jimin’s eyes widen just the slightest meeting Yoongi’s, his smile turning confused for a moment and-

The darkness of space has always frightened Yoongi. Some primal fear deep within him, stirring at the sight of such an endless darkness, spewing in every direction.

And now it starkly contrasts Jimin- light flaring strangely around him, through his hair,- and Yoongi recognizes it as the Atmoshield flickering out from behind Jimin, the shield guarding the large open entry to the hangar now a gaping entrance.

Briefly- just for a fraction of a second before, in an instance, the light with all of its warmth, its joy, its laugh- pulls away into the endlessness where Yoongi cannot follow.

*
Author’s fucking notes

I just realized in the last chapter I wrote Camil’s name as Camat instead I AM SO SORRY
I HAVE CORRECTED IT THOUGH
I have
So many emotions about
MotS: 7
Im saying it now
Moon is my song
The fact that Kim Seokjin™ wrote the lyrics
The very same Kim Seokjin™ who performed one of the most pure, the most heartbreaking songs known to man kind “tonight”
Also as a massive Caravaggio fan, I cannot but say version 3 is my favourite and I am going to buy that
And I am sorry about being so weird with my writing schedule I just- yeah, time is Time is a bitch
also to anyone confused with how the chapter ended-basically something happens, to be revealed, and that causes the outer Atmoshields surrounding he ship to glitch and go off, sucking out sk'jin and jimin into space
BUT APPARENTLY SHADOW IS A WHOLE MINUTE LONGER THAN THE VIDEO????????????? AM I??????????/ GOING TO SURVIVE THAT????????????????
SHADOW KEPT ME ALIVE DURING THE WORST TIME OF MY JOB IT REALLY KEPT ME GOING I SWEAR
'I preferred you when you talked a lot less than this.'

Jimin laughs, automatically making Hoseok smile.

'I was just thinking, and I bet my left lung that the ship in Kaititei is the same ship we found in Ynqaba.'

'It most probably is,' Hoseok answers as he brings over a new lift, 'I was thinking that too...do you think that’s why Namjoon’s in Lowet?’

‘Maybe,’ Taeh’yung offers unexpectedly, ‘Ynqaba, Lowet, the planets there- a lot happened to them, and maybe Namjoon was taken there so that he can figure things out.’

‘You don’t think he’s being held at ransom?’ Jimin sounds extremely worried.

‘Don’t worry, we’ll pay for his metal ass any price,’ Sk’jin scoffs before he yet again changes the topic, ‘Taeh’yung please stop eating and please bring me my food already.’

‘But it’s so tasty!’

‘And I would like to experience that too! Do you know how tired I am?’

‘Just take a seat,’ Jimin laughs.

‘Hey, so what do you think?’

Jaen waves her hands over a few open crates before her as Hoseok gets closer. The Axudarian had said she would help Hoseok out with what he needed. Hoseok knows that anyone else could do it, and that technically he didn’t need to be “helped” but that they were doing this to keep an eye on all of them. And honestly Hoseok is not offended or at all surprised.

Safety precaution.

Hoseok squints at the models presented before him.
‘I mean, version 0.3 isn’t that different from 0.2 to be fair,’ Jaen tells him with a serious expression. ‘I think there’s just an added benefit that it’s lighter than the 0.2 but that’s it.’

‘So you’re suggesting there’s no real difference and I might as well choose any because it’s just-’ Hoseok shrugs.

Jaen nods in agreement before closing the crates where the ion-beam based blasters were stored. ‘I guess it’s just personal preference at this point.’

‘How much lighter are the 0.3s?’

‘About 500 strams,’ Jaen explains, ‘It’s not that big, but I guess, familiarity?’

‘I guess so- dunno if Sk’jin or Yoongi will have something to say about the new ones so might as well take the 0.2s.’ Hoseok sighs. Sk’jin was not at all hesitant in complaining about anything if he chose to and Yoongi could sometimes get rather anal about stuff. So Hoseok would much rather avoid any of that and takes the version 0.2 with him.

‘Wise decision,’ Jaen nods seriously before slapping the top of the crates, ‘No offence but why are all Khol’isa rather bitchy about everything?’

‘Oh? Jn’young’s the same?’ Hoseok chuckles and somehow everyone in the nearby vicinity snorts.

The storeroom Jaen had brought him to was very much not just a storeroom but rather a massive atrium that must have been some sort of inner-hangar at one point but customized to become this spacious and very stocked warehouse filled to the brim with every type of device, tech, weapon, and parts Hoseok would ever need for the Laikin. Camil had brought him down so he could take his pick, but asked Jaen to take over after a brief talk with Ilya.

It’s spacious, and with wide windows that extended the some 25 meter high walls, lined over with walkways and bridges that zipped overhead.

‘Oh definitely a Khol’isa trait,’ Jaen mutters but it’s not out of malice.

‘Jaen! Did you guys want the projectile-launchers?’ someone asks from the back, waving around a disc like object.

Jaen turns around to raise an eyebrow at Hoseok.

‘Sure- why not,’ Hoseok shrugs, ‘Maybe it’s something Yoongi would enjoy.’

Jaen yells back an affirmative before asking, ‘How’s it, working with a GI? If you don’t mind talking about it.’

Hoseok gives it a few seconds before replying, ‘Different.’

‘How so?’

‘I guess- they adapt to your methods very well,’ Hoseok explains, thinking back to every circumstance that brought Yoongi and himself together in a situation where they needed to cooperate, be it a fight or tactical decisions. ‘They made incredibly excellent support systems but they’re also somehow unpredictable- like you don’t know do what they think or, calculate you should do, and they take over completely, alter what’s about to happen in their way, with no regard.’
'To others around them?'

‘No- with no regard to themselves,’ Hoseok gives Jaen a small grimace, ‘The GI believe they’re dispensable- at least, a lot don’t believe themselves as being really alive- they don’t realize, or at least were never taught, or lead to believe that they are alive. It’s why you could say Yoongi’s choices in what he does are so reckless – the GI mindset, or maybe lack of it, makes them put the mission ahead of themselves over anything else.’

Jaen nods thoughtfully to that.

‘I don’t know about other GI though,’ Hoseok adds as he pushes the last of the crates over onto his lift, ‘This is just- just what I know from working and living with Yoongi. And he’s a bit different, so honestly- maybe other GI are different.’

‘There’s not a lot around,’ Jaen comments.

Hoseok thinks back to Grisial and shrugs, ‘Maybe.’

‘But hey at least you’re-‘ Jaen begins but stops.

Hoseok looks up, a little alarmed at how everyone in the warehouse had stopped their actions, pausing as they were clearly listening to something.

‘What’s wrong,’ Hoseok asks carefully, hair on the back of his neck standing on end.

In a blink, there are TeorSers aimed at him from all directions. Jaen is still listening intently, hand raised up, ready to give a signal. Hoseok notes how her feet change positions, her body tensing to drop down or move away at an instance.

The next few seconds are incredibly tense; Hoseok has a crate full of weapons before him, but he’s surrounded from almost every single direction. He might be fast but the likeliness of him dodging 21 separate shots from 21 different angles was incredibly unlikely.

‘Hobi?’ Taeh’yung asks, a curious lilt to his voice.

‘Tae don’t do anything-‘ Hoseok says at once in his best steady voice when there’s a slight tremor immediately followed by a sharp yet muffled ping sound that makes everyone flinch, hands cupping their ears. Hoseok quickly rips off his Comm Device, taking a few steps back, arms still raised when Jaen points her own TeorSer at him, eyes suspicious.

And without warning, all the doors into the warehouse open wide. A few of the others around the vicinity quietly shift away.

‘I don’t know what’s going on-‘ Hoseok says immediately but before anyone else can say anything else, the lights flicker and there’s a clear loud klaxon and the whole ship shakes, making Hoseok take a few steadying steps.

‘Jaen!’ someone calls from the back.

‘What is it?’

‘The outer Atmoshield is out! Internal communications is down-‘

There’s a shuddering and violent explosion- arcs of light spreading outside the windows, causing items inside the warehouse to fall over.
Hoseok’s mind is reeling- what did this mean? Had the Omhlophe gotten hold of them but that didn’t make sense- internal communications would mean someone had direct access to the systems within the ship, this couldn’t be done from the outside. And judging from the sound from earlier, Jaen is still glaring down Hoseok who still has his hands raised.

‘This is not us,’ Hoseok shakes his head, speaking directly to Jaen, ‘I swear to you-‘

‘-Jaen!’

Voices run towards them, and rushing towards them is Camil.

‘Stand down!’ Camil yells as he approaches them.

Almost all at once, everyone lowers their TeorSers, questions thrown about.

‘What is it-’ Jaen demands at once.

‘There’s been a breach- I don’t know what’s happening but Ilya and Jn’yong are compromised-‘

‘-what?!’

‘-someone or a team, something from Cuab have taken over they’re inside here too-‘ Camil explains hastily, ‘-they’ve targeted the Atmoshield and internal communications we need to bring those back up-‘

‘-which unit?’ Jaen asks immediately, waving her hands to the back.

‘-how could they get in?’ someone asks but Camil is quickly handing Jaen a screen.

‘Internal communications maybe down, but we can still access the network,’ Camil tells Jaen.

Hoseok quickly readjusts his Comm Device.

‘Tae? Yoongi? Guys- can you hear me?’ he calls out, stomach falling at the silence.

‘We need to set up the internal communications asap,’ Jaen declares while Camil nods, worry etched all over their features. ‘If the internal security is compromised, that means the cells are all open too.’

Camil nods worriedly, teeth clenched.

‘There should be security defenses that should protect the-‘

There’s a loud thundering sound, followed by more arcs of light outside the windows.

‘What the fuck is going on?’ Jaen hisses, eyes wide as she looks around.

‘Cuab,’ Camil shakes his head- ‘-I don’t know how many- or who- but there’s something wrong with the arrangement Jn’yong made-‘

‘-how? That’s never happened before Jn’yong has never made a mistake before-‘ Jaen looks confused.

‘I don’t know!’ Camil looks agitated, wiping at his face.

‘Where’s the internal communications motherboard?’ Hoseok pushes in, ‘If we can’t fix it via the network- someone needs to manually restart it.’

Camil nods to that, ‘It’s not too far from here, Jaen–’

‘Yeah I’m on it – where’s E’nid?’

‘She’s with the second Bridge,’ Camil explains, ‘I left the first Bridge to Varin he’ll keep it stable.’

‘Varin?’ Jaen frowns but doesn’t get to say anything more when another explosion shakes the whole ship.

‘Why are there explosions?!’ someone demands.

‘They’re trying to unhook us apart,’ Camil explains.

‘But the lower regions–’ Jaen begins, looking confused.

‘Jaen- please, communications need to go up- I’m going down and try and get to Cuab- the Transporters are still up and running?’

‘Yeah- yeah, but we need to set up evac now,’ Jaen orders, ‘Let the kids out.’

Hoseok’s stomach drops again.

‘Got it- I’ll raise the alarm- I’m sure they’re all headed for the trams right now.’

Jaen nods before saying, ‘Hoseok- could you come with me?’

‘I need to-’

‘-we set up communications and you can talk to your friends- we need this done asap,’ Jaen reaches over and grabs Hoseok, ‘Dro’thna, do you still have those short-wave Comms.’

‘Yeah!’

‘All right- grab those, distribute them, and Camil tell me when you get to the Transporters if we haven’t managed the communications yet.’ Jaen issues orders.

‘Got it,’ Camil nods, grabbing one of the Comms that’s tossed to him. ‘And stay low- the cells are unlocked- all of the passages are unlocked we don’t know who else is out and about.’

Jaen frowns at Camil before nodding, ‘Yeah- got it- good luck.’

Camil nods and lops off, a few others following as he beckons them.

The ship shakes again, the lights blinking.

‘Fuck,’ Jaen’s grip on Hoseok’s wrist tightens.

Up until now, Hoseok has been silent- unsure what to say or do- his thoughts swirling, worry overwhelming him. Where were the others? Were they safe? And what about Taeh’yung? He would have somehow made it a point to maybe burst through, wailing in exaggerated worry at one point.

‘Come on- we need to set up the internal communications back on again,’ Jaen lets go of his wrist and nods towards the other end of the warehouse.
'I thought all of the prisoners or, I dunno, all of the cellmates in here were like, with you?’ Hoseok inquires in confusion as he follows after Jaen.

‘Dro’thna! You and Marda and Gyl stay here, set up a barricade up until we can get security running again!’ Jaen orders, ‘Sylna, you and Mir check up on E’nid on the second Bridge- take the vent-system.’

‘The vent system?’ Hoseok looks down at the two small species Sylna and Mir.

‘Don’t let anyone see you two- just check on her, keep watch.’

‘Jaen-.’

‘And the others! Make sure evac goes smoothly! Stick close-,’ Jaen starts walking, and Hoseok follows immediately, ‘-and keep low!’

Jaen doesn’t look back to see if the others listen but she doesn’t have to because everyone moves at once. She catches a Comm thrown at her and she hooks it to her belt at once.

‘Uh Jaen-’ Hoseok wants to, if he’s allowed, fuck, to go down to check on the others. But he doesn’t have time to say anything because as they round up the corner to a hallway, Jaen turns swiftly, her knee striking Hoseok on his thigh, a fast and hard fist knocking the air out of his lungs and an arm hooking swiftly around his throat, a TeorSer aimed straight into his lower-back.

‘Who are you working for?’ she hisses.

‘No one!’ Hoseok grits out, winded and not at all ready to his chagrin for this attack.

‘Someone has been setting this up for a long while and you just enter like this with absolutely no-‘ Hoseok manages to twist away but not to strike back but to face Jaen.

‘I am not a part of whatever is happening,’ Hoseok grits out, surprising Jaen because Hoseok was now putting himself at a much more vulnerable position like this, the TeorSer digging under the sternum. ‘You heard why were came here- if you trust Ilya, and Jn’young, then you’ll know that this has nothing to do with us.’

Jaen’s glare pierces through him.

‘Someone is working in the inside, against us,’ she says tersely.

‘I gathered- and I would much rather not be a part of this, take my team, and leave as quickly as I can,’ Hoseok manages to get out.

Jaen doesn’t move, her knee still painfully pressed into his thigh.

‘I know you’re worried,’ Hoseok tries, ‘I know that this- this betrayal, is confusing – but please think about it- how could I – or any of my team members, be a part of this?’

Jaen’s expression doesn’t shift but she takes a step back and Hoseok gasps for breath, thigh burning.

‘You’re right,’ she says evenly, ‘Let’s get going to fix the motherboard. Do you need a moment?’

‘No,’ Hoseok wheezes, stretching his leg, ‘Just my leg is numb.’
Jaen rolls her eyes, ‘Venture agents.’

Hoseok only sort of limps for a few minutes, straightening his muscles as best as he could. He didn’t need this injured pride to cause him problems later.

‘If someone fried the internal communications, wouldn’t they need access to the Bridge or a NaviLet?’ Hoseok asks as they pause a moment in a hallway while Jaen checks the hallways.

‘They would,’ Jaen replies tersely before waving Hoseok forward.

‘Why are you sending me to cover you when I have no weapon of my own,’ Hoseok hisses, unmoving.

‘I’m not sending you to cover me are you insane?’ Jaen splutters, ‘I’m just saying the coast is clear lets move our asses!’

Grumbling, Jaen moves out first.

‘Oh Spaces are you apologizing by letting me go first?’ Hoseok realizes, glaring at Jaen’s head, ‘Why do I always get stuck with emotionally constipated Beings-’

‘-shh!’ Jaen hisses, stopping suddenly before a dim hallway that lead out to one of the larger atriums Hoseok and Jungkook had been brought to by Camil when they first entered the ship.

They step back into the hallway, crouching down, and peaking over.

There’s hurried footsteps and in a second, a horde of prisoners sprint across the opening.

‘Fuck,’ Jaen whispers. ‘Fuck- what is this- how are they up here so fast?’

‘Aren’t all of the security measures gone?’ Hoseok whispers, watching as what could be a horde of maybe 100+ prisoners sprint through, already armed. ‘Doesn’t that mean that the elevators and lifts would be compromised? Especially if you don’t have a pass?’

‘Yeah,’ Jaen sounds worried, ‘Someone is controlling this from the Bridge.’

Hoseok thinks of E’nid, the Orvan who sat at their meetings and who was in charge of the second Bridge.

‘Doesn’t this mean they can watch everything through the surveillance?’ Hoseok asks worriedly, eyeing the cameras around the place.

‘I’ve been worried about that too,’ Jaen replies evenly, ‘But it’s more than possible that all of surveillance has been shut down, because who ever is doing this, knows that if we have surveillance, we’ll be able to counter whatever attack this is.’

There’s another shudder.

‘Fuck,’ Hoseok glances around as the lights flicker.

‘They’re gone,’ Jaen whispers, ‘Stay low, keep quiet.’

‘I know,’ Hoseok grumbles, following after the Axudarian.

‘The trams are still working,’ Jaen comments as they get closer to the hallway opening, the sounds of the tram filling up the air. ‘This was extensively preplanned.’
‘If this is someone working from the inside, they knew they needed the numbers to overtake all of you,’ Hoseok ruminates, ‘The inmates is a good idea- a good distraction.’

Jaen doesn’t say anything, still disturbed. Hoseok looks out into the atrium, ducking back as a small group still remained.

‘I don’t want to bring anyone down,’ Jaen says, ‘We still don’t know what’s happening, so I don’t want to make any mistakes until I can get communications up, and I can talk to Ilya or Jn’young.’

‘Okay- we move without casualties,’ Hoseok nods.

‘Here,’ Jaen unclips a small stunner from inside her jacket pocket. ‘It’s not loud.’

‘Thanks,’ Hoseok studies the small stunner before pocketing it.

Jaen looks around for a second before standing up straight, ‘They’re all gone. We need to get across the atrium.’

‘Are there any spots above us?’

‘Plenty- we’re going to have to be casual- not raise suspicion if anyone’s keeping an eye,’ Jaen says, trying to catch a look overhead from below the entryway. ‘There’s none opposite.’

There’s the sound of hurried footsteps down behind them. It’s not close, but it’s not very far either.

‘Okay- we step out- walk easy,’ Hoseok states.

‘Guests first,’ Jaen gestures with a nod. Hoseok rolls his eyes and steps forward, walking easily with a normal gait that wasn’t alarming but not too relaxed either. He hears Jaen walking behind him.

Hoseok thinks they might be in the clear as they reach the middle of the atrium, but the floors rumble faintly below their feet and before they can plan, the trams in the station to the side start filing in.

‘Fuck!’

Jaen instantly takes off, her body lowering.

Hoseok follows almost immediately and not a second later, there’s the sound of TeorSers firing behind them.

The floor chips, the walls beyond them crack and chip as TeorSer fire hails after them. Diving and slipping down the floor, Hoseok and Jaen manage to dodge into the hallway, protected briefly.

‘Shit shit- what the fuck-’ Jaen curses, fumbling to stand as Hoseok gets to his feet as well.

‘How far are we?’ Hoseok pants out, keeping in time with Jaen as she sprints down the hallway, as quietly as they could.

‘Take left, but we use the vents,’ Jaen pants out, ‘Will you fit?’

‘I don’t – how would I know?’ Hoseok exclaims just as something fires past their legs.

They run faster, sliding as they turn the corner to the adjacent hallway.
‘Why is it so empty around here?’ Hoseok demands, not that he’s complaining, ‘And what did you mean kids?’

‘Families-’ Jaen pants out, ‘Not all of us- but a large number of us and our families are here- but we’re all staying in the living quarters above- closer to the 5th Bridge.’

‘What about evacuation?’

‘Pods and transporters,’ Jaen replies at once.

‘This is dangerous-‘

‘-we know,’ Jaen hisses back before stopping abruptly, ‘In here.’

There’s a barely visible hatch that Jaen pushes her fingers through, grabbing the lip and pulling down to reveal a narrow chute.

‘Great okay- you might actually fit,’ the Axudarian mumbles, hurriedly lifting herself into the opening. ‘There are rungs- but they’re small.’

Hoseok more or less shoves her in faster before climbing in himself.

He follows Jaen downwards, nearly stepping her hands a few times, making her curse him out in her own tongue.

They keep going down and Hoseok wonders how long it’ll be because his thigh was really hurting but he wasn’t going to say anything about it.

‘Wait-‘ Jaen suddenly whispers. Hoseok stops immediately.

And Hoseok hears it. Sounds of movement within the ducts.

‘I’m going to slide down once we reach that opening there,’ she whispers quietly, ‘Cover me.’

Hoseok would glare at Jaen if they were in eye-level but he can’t so he grunts in response instead, looking down to an opening waiting for them. They go down just a little bit more, before Jaen taps on his shin and she moves across the duct, balancing herself with great agility and strength with bare hands and carefully placed foot holds across the ribbed metal that made up the duct. Hoseok lowers himself even more before hooking his knees carefully around a few rungs.

Jaen hands him her TeorSer and with a nod, drops down.

There’s sounds of sudden movement and a frightened muffled shout. Hoseok drops down as well, hanging upside down, TeorSer aimed straight into the side opening of the duct, aiming straight at-‘-wait Hoseok!’ Jaen calls out from below.

Hoseok’s finger is off the trigger.

‘Jaen?’

It’s a young looking boy, Axudarian just like Jaen. He stares at Hoseok, eyes wide, hands up where he’s crouched. Behind him Hoseok spies more Beings- children, possibly.

‘Brena?’ Jaen cries out, climbing up quickly.
‘Is that Jaen?’ a voice asks.

Hoseok immediately lowers the TeorSer and pulls himself back up properly just Jaen climbs up to the proper height.

‘Why aren’t you evacuating?’ Jaen demands, briefly hugging the young Axudarian.

‘They’ve locked in the living quarters,’ someone way in the back explains.

Looking in, Hoseok spies around 15 Beings.

‘Shit-,’ Jaen curses, eyebrows pinched. ‘Which way are you taking them?’

‘Down, and then to the front, towards the evac pods,’ Brena says with a confident nod.

‘Are there others who went ahead? Or behind you guys?’ Jaen asks.

‘A few ahead, some more behind us- but,’ a head pokes out, ‘Jaen- I don’t understand.’

‘Yeah well, neither do I,’ Jaen sighs out, ‘But make your way to the evac pods- but be careful- it might be under surveillance. You all have Comm Devices right?’

Brena nods and a few others behind them.

‘Can any of you use it?’

‘No,’ Brena shakes his head, ‘They all went down inside the Quarters, but the inmates could talk to each other.’

Another network? Hoseok frowns. Jn’young would have made certain to shut down any network within Cuab, that meant whatever was happening, was definitely being operated from within this ship, while Ilya and Jn’young were not in.

‘Okay hold on to those, we’re going to go set up the network for communication again, here take this,’ Jaen hands the young Axudarian her short radio Comm. ‘You can contact Dro’thna with that if you’re close enough, but make sure that it’s only him and the others okay?’

‘Jaen- what are you saying?’ someone in the back asks.

‘I don’t know- but please be careful, stick close,’ Jaen calls before giving Hoseok a look, ‘We’re gonna get going, but you guys go forward first.’

Brena nods and climbs out as Jaen climbs up a little, sharing the rung with Hoseok.

‘Will going to the motherboard help at this point?’ Hoseok asks.

‘I don’t know but we should do it anyways,’ Jaen looks troubled, ‘This was extensively preplanned.’

‘Could you set up another communications network within the ship with the preexisting system?’ Hoseok questions.

‘Yes but that would have to go through Ilya or Jn’young to have it pass. Not to mention me, Camil, and E’nid. Otherwise we’d be able to detect it at once. We keep it tight, secure.’

By the time everyone is moving down, Jaen nods towards the tunnel.
'If we go through that, and then down, we’ll drop down into the floor above, and we can access the gravity-lift to go down,’ Jaen explains.

‘Don’t you want to take them to the evac? I can handle setting up the communications line, and I need to get back to my team,’ Hoseok asks, nodding down at the group below them.

Jaen gives him a face, ‘No offence but I am on edge right now and I need to make sure things are going how I want them to and need them to, you are more than free to fuck off after we get out of this duct.’

Hoseok sighs, ‘Lead the way.’

It takes 10 minutes of crawling, during which the whole system of pipes shudders in the most worrisome way twice, before Jaen pries open a hatch quietly and slowly.

Hoseok’s legs are cramped and he’s sure he’s covered in dust but there’s no time to discuss as they adjust their eyes to the dark hallway.

‘Did the power give out too?’

‘ Seems like it,’ Jaen whispers, ‘You’re good?’

‘I’m fine,’ Hoseok replies.

‘Okay- we’re not far from the gravity-lift,’ Jaen nods forward, ‘Stay quiet and—’

‘-keep low I know,’ Hoseok snorts. Even in the dim light, Hoseok can see Jaen’s glare.

Practically tiptoeing across, Hoseok follows Jaen down an uncomfortably wide hallway. He feels too exposed in this dark stretch of space.

‘There,’ Jaen whispers. ‘No one’s around.’

It’s an uncomfortable minute as they turn the corner, hurtling down the dark hallway, feeling as though something followed them at their very heels.

Jaen leans all the way back in the lift, breathing out slowly as they descend. Hoseok hands her back the TeorSer which she takes with a nod. The door opens and they wait a few seconds before stepping out straight into a sudden onslaught of light and the clear sound of TeorSers powering up.

Blinded, Hoseok winces, turning his head quickly, and raising his hands above his head.

‘Jaen?’

‘E’nid?’

The lights are lowered and Hoseok’s eyes adjust again. There’s sounds of footsteps and the Orvan Hoseok knew as E’nid steps forward, watching both of them suspiciously until the two short Beings Jaen had ordered to spy on E’nid appear.

‘It’s okay!’ they tell them instead. Looking around Hoseok notices that Jaen has the TeorSer aimed straight at E’nid. ‘We got her out- she was being attacked in the second Bridge by Varin,’ Mir exclaims quickly, running up to them.

‘Why is he here?’ E’nid nods at Hoseok who still keeps his hands up.
For a brief second, he wonders if this was what it felt like to witness his own team’s mess from an outsider’s point of view. To an extent it was nice knowing everyone had rather messed up teams and issues with trust.

‘Jaen,’ Sylna, the other one next to Mir speaks up, ‘Jaen we’re okay- it’s okay.’

Slowly, Jaen lowers her TeorSer and then completely lets go, exhaling shakily.

‘Hey- hey, it’s okay,’ E’nid says soothingly, approaching the Axudarian and embracing her. ‘We’ll figure out what’s happening.’

Hoseok looks around, finding a small crew of 8 Beings all together. They all look at him with some wariness which, again, was justifiable but also Hoseok is getting tired of this.

‘We’ve been trying to fix the motherboard,’ E’nid tells them, eyeing Hoseok briefly before deciding not to question him, for which Hoseok was infinitely grateful.

‘Yeah- that’s why he’s here- said he can fix it.’

‘Oh?’ E’nid looks over at him and gives him a once over. ‘Oddly convenient.’

Hoseok really tries not to roll his eyes but he can’t help it.

‘It’s fine- he’s fine,’ Jaen says dismissively and it’s oddly touching despite the flippant tone.

‘Can we go?’ Hoseok tries his best not to sound agitated, ‘I need to find my team members- two of them are not exactly very healthy and I can’t have another one go missing or worse.’

E’nid regards him for a second before nodding.

‘Go ahead, Vla is already trying his best but none of us are actually trained for this,’ E’nid gestures down the dimly lit hallway. Jaen also makes to go with Hoseok but she’s stopped by E’nid.

‘We need to talk,’ E’nid says quietly before glancing at Hoseok, ‘It’s a kinda of only members of this ship discussion.’

Honestly Hoseok just wants the communication channels to be up so he nods. But Jaen stops him, handing him her TeorSer.

Hoseok gives her a nod of thanks before hurrying down the hall. He follows the faint orange light from a doorway. Looking in he finds a hassled looking trio of Beings that are vaguely familiar. They had been at the Bridge, Hoseok remembers, some hours ago.

‘Hey- uh, E’nid said I could come and check this over.’ Hoseok introduces himself.

One of them looks at him carefully before nodding and walking past, clearly to clarify for himself. So Hoseok just stands there, fiddling with his Comm Device. With a start, Hoseok realizes he hadn’t even noticed a fourth who was armed with a heavy TeorSer up on the coolers to the side.

He clearly needed to get his shit together. But honestly, Hoseok was having difficulty thinking straight. There was too much to think about, too much to consider- not only did he not have any background information on the hierarchy present in the ship, or the relationships of the Beings aboard it, or their connections- Hoseok can’t evaluate and judge this situation because he had no information to run off of. That, and not to mention the others were in danger- a sort of danger Hoseok could not predict.
Clearly this situation was happening because someone was planning to overthrow Ilya’s network. Whether it was planned from within, or in league with another force from outside, but clearly someone was trying to take over Ilya’s powerful and secret force. And they had been planning it for a long time too. And regardless of how they were planning this, it was obvious that the appearance of Sk’jin, Yoongi, Jimin, Taeh’yung, Jungkook, and himself- was completely unplanned, not even possibly imagined. So now in this situation, with a strange and unplanned crew of 6 unknown Beings, one who seemed very deeply and closely connected to Ilya, whoever was conducting this, would have to be very careful with how they operated.

Anyone could be connected to this- anyone could be in on it.

Hoseok now had to be careful, not just regarding their own situation and their plan, but also with balancing his way out of this situation and securing the others along with himself. But the first thing he needed to do would be to set up the damn communication line. Footsteps approach again and the Being who had stepped out reappears, he gives the other three inside a nod and Hoseok steps inside.

‘What’s going on?’ he asks, crouching down to look at the exposed motherboard.

‘We can’t breach the firewall,’ one of them replies, shuffling to the side to allow Hoseok to look in. ‘Whoever shut this down had access to the NaviLet. But seeing as the Bridges have been compromised, it’s all up in the spheres.’

‘Right,’ Hoseok sits on the floor, setting down his TeorSer, ‘Is this the screen you connected to connect in?’

‘Yeah- but- our Navigator was killed,’ the other one says tersely from his perch above head. ‘We’re in charge of the coolers- not the communication channels.’

‘Got it,’ Hoseok nods, ‘Okay if I take over?’

‘Have at it,’ they shrug.

Hoseok takes a deep breath and begins. This was when Namjoon would be priceless.

‘We ran diagnostics,’ one of them says, ‘But there’s nothing that stands out.’

And yeah Hoseok notices that too with a grimace. If the network had simply been easily switched off through the main Network, then it would be a simple matter of just switching it back on. Even this small team could manage that.

‘Maybe the network has been branched off to several frequencies,’ Hoseok surmises, reading through the diagnostic the others had ran.

‘That’s not possible- there’s no separate frequency. We all share the same single unit- Ilya said it’s best for transparency and also for sharing data across the network faster.’

‘Well-’

There’s a sudden shower of TeorSer blasts.

‘Shit- no, stay here,’ the one next to him orders, ‘Fix this- we’ll go check. This isn’t the first time.’

Hoseok wants to run back and check but he knows he needs to get the communications fixed.
‘I’ll stand here,’ one of them says as he puts himself near the doorway as the others rush past.

There’s another burst of TeorSer, and some shouts- muffled voices and talking.

‘What’s going on?’ Hoseok asks over his shoulder, eyes scanning over the screen carefully.

‘Not sure yet- I hear talking.’ He replies slowly.

Hoseok manages to get past the firewall just as the Being by the doorway lets out a sigh of relief. ‘Hey it’s okay!’ he calls out, ‘It’s just the others, I’ll be back in a second.’

Hoseok nods but it’s unseen.

It becomes quiet after a while and the sound of footsteps approach, breathless pants following soon after that sound familiar.

Camil appears, squinting in the dark.

‘Hoseok?’ he calls.

‘Here- I’m here,’ Hoseok calls back.

‘Oh thank fuck,’ Camil pants out, ‘Wouldn’t know what to say if something happened to you guys. How’s the motherboard?’

‘Setting up,’ Hoseok replies before facing the open motherboards again, ‘Is everything okay? What happened?’

‘Yeah- came down with a few others to back you guys up – and we came across some inmates coming down here – there was some confusion, but we’ve cleared it,’ Camil explains, looking at the motherboard as well, ‘How can I help?’

‘Where’s Jaen?’ Hoseok looks back briefly.

‘There’s been a massive breach with the cells- I think more inmates are closing in so Jaen and E’nid are holding up the barrier for now,’ Camil explains, closer, Hoseok notices a fresh welt on his forehead.

‘What happened?’ Hoseok asks, eyeing the injury.

‘Wasn’t paying attention,’ Camil replies, ‘Singed by a TeorSer blast.’

Hoseok nods as he hands him the light, ‘Here, point this over.’

Camil takes the light and points it at the motherboard.

‘Any word from Ilya? Or Jn’yong?’

‘No- none, the way downwards is blocked- our hangars are compromised, the emergency Atmoshield just barely managed to protect the others working down there – we’ll need to go into Cuab to find them-‘

‘-fuck,’ Hoseok mutters, ‘-fuck, that’s where the others are.’

‘-what about the other one? Taeh’yung?’
‘I think he’ll be fine,’ Hoseok says, ‘Honestly least of my worries to be honest. I’m worried about Jungkook and Yoongi.’

‘Ah, the Vicitra and the Human? How come?’

‘Well, you saw Yoongi- he’s not good with stress right now,’ Hoseok tries not to remember their conversation too much, his chest twinging. ‘And Kookie is- well, he can be volatile if he’s confused.’

‘Sounds like he could be dangerous. To himself and others.’

‘Yeah- but-!’ Hoseok finally gets through and into the main terminal network. ‘Oh, got it.’

‘Great, when can we get up and running.’

‘Once I remove the barriers-’ Hoseok pauses, looking at the screen. The network was working, the signal sending out clearly. There was nothing wrong with the network. ‘What-?’

A sense of dread runs down Hoseok’s back.

‘I’m genuinely sorry you got caught up in this.’ Camil says quietly.

Hoseok knows no matter how fast he moved, no matter how quickly he took action- it wasn’t going to work.

The bright heat of the TeorSer overwhelms him.

###

Jungkook watches Yoongi and Jimin from inside the Laikin.

Jimin’s eyes glow softly, smiling at something Yoongi was saying.

He smelt happy.

He also smelt scared most times.

Scared, hesitant, anxious-

When Jungkook was captured, taken away from his mothers, his brothers and sisters, he waited and waited. He wasn’t sure what he was waiting for.

But he knew he was waiting – and it wasn’t as though he thought he would never stop waiting. In fact, Jungkook knew that whatever he was waiting for would come to an end- be it because he himself would die, or whatever it was he was waiting for would finally come for him, whether is was good or bad, and that would be it.
Jungkook cannot describe it- cannot define it into a single word.

It combined everything all at once- hope, fear, sorrow, joy, anger, helplessness, bliss; it was all there, and it surrounded Jimin like a thick cloak. And it grew in weight, every time he spoke to Yoongi. His cloak weighed down on him – never crushing, but never allowing him to push it off.

And Yoongi.

‘I SAID STOP FLIRTING!’

Jimin laughs, turning around to help Sk’jin. Yoongi watches after him, resting his head on his arms, smile on his lips.

As though feeling his stare, Yoongi looks around, not at all surprised to find him there.

‘Come on Kook,’ Yoongi waves him over with an amused smile. ‘Let’s bring in the heavy stuff.’

Yoongi smelt of death.

Jungkook pushes himself on all fours before crawling backwards with a quiet sigh. There was really no way of finalizing his thoughts over the matter- not when Jimin didn’t want to address it. Not when Sk’jin couldn’t answer his questions, changing the subject. Not when Taeh’yung answered in multiple voices, bringing the cold of a time long lost into the air around him. He tried asking Hoseok but – but clearly they were all in the same footing about this.

Jungkook really wishes Namjoon would return soon.

Why was he in Lowet? Jungkook has never been to Lowet, but he’s heard of stories- second-hand stories and accounts of the planet, and how it was equally, if not more terribly, ruined.

Just as Jungkook gets his hand over the lift he had brought in, he hears it before he feels it.

A clear, distinct sound of something rupturing- below his feet, far from him, and then the ship shivers.

‘Um-‘ Jungkook automatically finds himself crouching into himself.

‘Wow thank you artificial gravity for inclining along with the ship in my time of fatigue-‘ Sk’jin complains outside, and Jungkook feels himself let go a little. Was that a normal occurrence?

‘Sk’jin, if you’re tired, I can do it myself.’

Jungkook turns, lift forgotten as he rushes towards the door when the whole ship shudders again but it’s much more faint- softer, further away, but just as potent. And then-

‘You reach my age one day and you’ll know exactly what I mean-‘ Sk’jin is exclaiming loudly ‘Even gravity is against you-‘

The lights flicker, turning red followed immediately by the sound of klaxons making Jungkook leap to his feet, shooting off towards the doorway. There’s a flare of orange light that erupts and highlights the interior of the Laikin before it softens, causing Jungkook to squint at the abrupt changes. There’s a strange screeching in his ear- it’s coming from his Comm Device, he realizes, but he charges forward, crouching down to gain more speed and momentum, skidding out of the Laikin over the ramp just in time to catch sight of Yoongi, sprinting forward.

Sk’jin and Jimin are nowhere to be seen and Jungkook doesn’t understand it wasn’t even a minute since he had gone in- hasn’t been more than just a minute-

Yoongi is screaming- screaming loud and desperate- his hands reaching out forward desperately- desperately before him straining hard and-

There’s nothing but space, nothing but the dark of space stretching out endlessly and Jungkook can’t think straight- but he can’t let Yoongi run forward he was running straight towards the opening and-

Jungkook barrels straight into Yoongi just as all the lights go out.

They fall heavily and with a lot of force, sliding across the floors a good distance before coming to a stop. Jungkook’s not sure what Yoongi was trying to do- a bout of madness? So Jungkook holds the Human down, the stench of death overwhelmed by anguish.

‘No-!’ Yoongi screams, breathless his voice broken and coarse. ‘NO-!’

‘Yoongi!’ Jungkook shakes the Human, helpless, unsure what to do. ‘Uh- Hobi! Please I don’t know what to do!’

There’s no answer.

‘Yoongi where is Jimin? Where is Sk’jin?’ Jungkook shakes the Human again.

‘Shit- shit fuck-’ Yoongi’s hands are shaking as he lifts them to grab onto Jungkook’s wrists.

‘Fuck- Jungkook- fuck, this-‘

There’s footsteps running towards them, a large number. Jungkook stands up immediately- maybe that annoying tall Being, Camil, was back to check on them.

‘Please don’t run,’ Jungkook pleads to Yoongi who was clearly in some sort of strange manic state. He turns to face the approaching footsteps and finds around a dozen Beings approaching them, all armed.

Had something happened? Jungkook is instantly nervous, taking a step back at the weapons.

‘Um-‘ Jungkook tries, ‘Um- what’s happening-?’

He’s shoved to the ground just as the approaching Beings set fire.

Jungkook recovers quickly, grabbing onto Yoongi’s hand that’s dragging him forward until he’s able to keep up with the Human as they dive back inside the Laikin.

‘Lisai activate shields!’ Yoongi orders at once, ‘Track Jimin and Sk’jin’s locations immediately-‘

‘Hangar compromised,’ Lisai replies just as TeorSer fire echoes all around them, causing the Laikin to shiver very very slightly. ‘All docked ships are on lockdown as per order issued by the Bridge.’

‘What?’ Yoongi hisses, moving fast and recklessly, pushing past Jungkook to get into the Laikin’s hangar where the Spardyti was.

‘Yoongi what’s going on-?’ Jungkook asks desperately, unsure what to feel, what to do.

Yoongi stops at the doorway, eyes wide and his face bloodless, mouth slightly open as though unable to speak.
‘Yoongi,’ Jungkook tries again, quickly walking over to stand in front of the Human.

‘Stay inside the ship.’ Yoongi manages to get out. ‘I need to- I need to go and get Jimin and Sk’jin I need to-‘

‘-where did they go?’ Jungkook asks though he has a terrible suspicion- a terrible feeling about the answer-

Yoongi pales even more, shaking his head furiously says, ‘I don’t have time- just stay in here, don’t let anyone in try to contact Hoseok and Taeh’yung-‘

Yoongi rushes into the Laikin hangar and jumps into the Spardyti.

‘Cover me when I get out- there’s some launchers over there that we just got in you can use them right?’ Yoongi asks, shutting the doors shut behind him, his voice echoing out. Jungkook hears more TeorSer fire being shot at them, feels more footsteps approaching.

‘Yes- yes I can-‘ Jungkook is stuck, body agitated in wanting to do something, he’s not sure what Yoongi was doing was right or wrong or-

‘Jungkook please-‘ Yoongi begs from the inside, shaking hands covering his face before he grips down onto the dashboard before him, dark eyes wet as he looks down at him from the inside of the Spardyti. ‘Please- don’t leave the Laikin, wait for the others.’

Jungkook just nods.

‘Get back inside after I get out of the Hangar- close the gates, go to the Bridge, activate the defense protocol and don’t go out, do you hear me? Don’t leave the Laikin.’

Jungkook nods furiously as he picks up the heavy launcher, activating it.

‘All right- I’ll be- I’ll be back-‘ Yoongi chants under his breath, the Spardyti starting up.

Jungkook crouches down by the hangar doorway as it opens- Yoongi doesn’t seem to wait, pushing forward almost immediately when there’s enough space. And Jungkook straightens up a little, lifting the launcher up to balance on his shoulder just like Hoseok taught him-

But he’s sent flying back in a flurry of heat, white light, and pain.

Jungkook doesn’t know how long he’s knocked out- but it’s not too long judging by how there are small shrapnel around the ground inside the Laikin hangar still on fire, the Spardyti upturned and tilted against the entry of the Laikin. Jungkook hears shouting, feels the Laikin tremor even more.

His senses screaming at him, Jungkook crouches on all fours, taking a moment to check for any injuries other than the familiar burn on his skull.

There’s a loud sound- like something ramming against a solid metallic surface. It repeats again and the door to the Spardyti bursts through, letting out a huge pillar of smoke, and Yoongi leaps out, armed only with a single Heliord that illuminates the smoky air a chilling blue before he vanishes with the light.

The smoke unravels fast and thick, already obscuring the visibility of the massive Hangar, only illuminated by the new orange Atmoshield. Ears pricked, Jungkook steps out of the Laikin hangar, crouching down to place his palms over the ground, concentrating more on the vibrations of the floor over any other sense.
A figure runs across Jungkook and with no calculation or thought, Jungkook leaps up, bringing the unknown Being down. Jungkook disarms the Being, driving his elbow down harshly into their chest and forcefully rolling on the ground with them. Armed with a TeorSer that felt hot in his hands, Jungkook crouches low to look closely at the Being he had just taken down. He doesn’t recognize them- and he can’t tell for sure if they were there to help him or not- but right now Jungkook feels the same way he did back in his cramped and damp prison cell.

He needed to survive.

The smoke is thick and visibility greatly reduced.

There’s some shouting, but it’s cut off abruptly in a flash of blue like lightning striking through thick dark thunder storms. Jungkook sticks close to the side of the Laikin, ears and nose alert. The sound of the Heliord rings towards the back, and footsteps, quiet and many, approach him. Jungkook throws the TeorSer straight across before leaping up, grappling quietly over the grooves of the Laikin and lifting himself over to one of the turbines, laying low.

Two Beings, crouched low, armed with TeorSers slowly walk by.

‘I saw someone here,’ one of them says.

‘We need to get rid of the strays,’ the other says lowly, ‘Can’t risk it.’

‘Aren’t there supposed to be 4 of them down here? I only saw two.’

‘Can’t be sure- maybe they were unlucky, got pulled out-‘

Their voices fade out and Jungkook takes a slow quiet breath, he’s about to crawl out of the turbine when they return again. Jungkook crouches further in.

‘-mil said we need to make sure that the GI is eliminated – he’s taken care of the weird tall one.’

‘He didn’t seem dangerous though-‘

‘-heard he’s one of the Zhak’gri,’ the voice is closer, ‘they’re unpredictable and incredibly powerful, they’ve put him down.’

Anger and fear burns hot through Jungkook and he’s moving before he realizes it.

He drops down on all fours, making no sound right behind the two walking past. And just as there’s a shout ahead, a flash of blue that illuminates the strange orange darkness, Jungkook springs into action.

‘Kookie, you gotta learn how to focus that strength,’ Taeh’yung offers from the side as Jungkook falls on the ground, Hoseok looking guilty having just thrown him down deftly. ‘Concentrate and think of where you wanna punch! And punch there hard and fast!’

Jungkook draws back his body as he slides forward on his knees before twisting around his waist, elbow striking across the back of knees. Twisting around the gasping and falling Being, Jungkook uses them as a shield before propelling himself up, knee flying up and coming across with an echoing thwap as he jams it straight into the other Being’s chest.

Jungkook makes quick work of the two, his breath escape him in hot hisses. But he’s not left alone for too long as another set of Beings converge around him. Jungkook doesn’t pause to think, doesn’t pause to calculate-‘You’re not a fighter like Yoongi, or like Hoseok, if anything, you’re more similar to Taeh’yung- he doesn’t stop to think- he just acts out of instinct, and that unpredictability is what makes him so volatile,’ Sk’jin tells him, brushing his hair after his sad shower where he had lost spectacularly to Yoongi during a lesson, the lights of Grisial casting strange liquid shadow around them. ‘It’s good to know how and where to strike, but it’s also good to know that most Beings who are going to come at you are either trained to do so in a certain way- if you move in a way they’re not used to, you will have the upper-hand.’

Jungkook lets his body move how it wants- he takes Yoongi’s actions, Hoseok’s focus, Taeh’yung’s words, and Sk’jin’s guidance and Jungkook moves.

His would be assailant’s eyes widen in horror as Jungkook shoots forward towards him, mouth open in a snarl that tears right through his throat in a hot shower of blood, staining Jungkook’s sight a bloody hue. He hurls the still screaming assailant, blood gurgling out of their throat in wide arcs, straight into the next approaching Being. Jungkook chases after their falling forms, pale bloodied hands shooting out to wrap around a screaming head that abruptly stops after Jungkook slams it down hard. A TeorSer shot is fired at him, the heat of it passing over his back. But Jungkook twists away, scuttling onto all fours again and running towards the still firing source in a dizzying zigzag through the dark orange air until the last bright light of the TeorSer just manages to illuminate his snarling bloodied face to his assailant.

Her scream is short-lived.

Jungkook swiftly runs back towards the Laikin, hands feeling down on the ground, the faint tremors of approaching feet, pausing slightly in worry and fear.

There’s another loud and worrying blast of the klaxon, and for a moment, the black of space outside is brightly illuminated. Jungkook squints, turning his head away- but it’s in this moment that a burning hot pain cuts through his shin.

Immediately falling to his knee, Jungkook raises his arms up before his head instinctually- and just on time as a heavy and strong kick sends him down to the floor. There’s another TeorSer shot fired at him- he has two assailants; one further and probably on a higher ground with a TeorSer. And the other skilled and trained.

A cold and painfully familiar glint of metallic light slices the air before him just as Jungkook manages to back away. His assailant was carrying some sort of blade.

Jungkook immediately sprints, leg searing, towards the crates Sk’jin had been stacking up just some time ago. His shoulder burns as a TeorSer shot just barely misses him.

He couldn’t stay back here for too long- he was cornered, possibly planned so that he could try and hide in a place like this.

The floor, the air, the whole ship shudders and the space outside is illuminated again. But it’s enough to illuminate the crates and enough to remind Jungkook of what was inside.

He quickly pries the crate open, leaving bloody smears. He pauses, feeling the ground, feels footsteps approaching, quiet, faint. Making quick work, Jungkook picks up the vacuum cells stored inside. They were light but fit excellently in his hands. Pushing his fists through them, Jungkook grabs a few more until they stack up on his arms. Then grabbing the lid of the crate, nimbly climbs up the stacks of crates before throwing a vacuum cell hard and fast over to the edge, towards the orange Atmoshield. Almost immediately, a TeorSer shot fires through the air and Jungkook pinpoints its location, hurling with his whole strength, one of the cells with deadly force.
Jungkook’s not sure if his aim was true but there’s no more shots fired at him as he leaps over the crates and straight at the stealthily approaching assailant.

There’s sparks as the blade of his assailant meets with his cell-covered forearms.

And just as Jungkook suspected, this assailant was geared fully- unlike the others that came after him. This Being was dressed in a sort of armor- covering their body head to toe, clearly geared to specifically fight Jungkook and maybe even Yoongi.

His assailant has two thin and cruel looking blade, the air around it slightly shimmering. Jungkook doesn’t recognize what type of weapon it was, doesn’t know what will happen if he’s touched by it – so he keeps his distance.

The whole ship tremors again and his assailant darts forward.

His assailant would be formidable to most- but Jungkook has fought almost all of his grown life. He was trained by some of the most skilled and unorthodox Beings – has watched them fight.

Jungkook lashes forward as well, the blades of his assailant coming down strong and hard against his covered arms as he pushes through, head butting his assailant. They stagger backwards but it’s momentary before it swipes, almost futilely, the air between them. Jungkook doesn’t have time to wonder over what this meant as he follows after his assailant.

But suddenly his eyes, nose, and throat burn up severely. He can’t help it, his eyes water- throat constricting and nose instantly blocked.

Gagging, Jungkook keels over and he’s immediately kicked down. He falls to the ground, skidding to a stop dangerously close to the orange Atmoshield.

He’s barely able to dodge the blade that comes down to his chest, twisting away on the floor, barely able to track the movements of his assailant over the sound of his breathless gags. His foot makes contact with something- probably his assailant. But his foot is pushed and grabbed the opposite direction, making him spin hopelessly onto his back as a weight pressed down on his chest.

Jungkook tries to push them off but it’s hopeless, knees pressing down on his arms. Letting out a gargled scream, Jungkook bares his teeth at his assailant, desperate as the Being brings down the sharp blade but it never touches him.

Like lightning, blue flashes through the smoke, a blade striking through like thunder and a shower of blood immediately raining over Jungkook.

A very blurry looking Yoongi appears before him, manic worry etched all over his blood splattered face.

‘Come here, come here- come on kiddo, we need to wash that out of your system-‘ Jungkook feels himself being pulled up and dragged almost. But relief washes over him as he allows himself to lean a little more into the Human. Jungkook can’t see but he suspects they’re back inside the Laikin and he’s left to stand up against the wall as Yoongi moves about.

It’s after a few seconds of silence, punctuated by Yoongi’s movements and some more tremors around the ship, that something is sprayed over his face. Jungkook flinches but he accepts it, taking the bottle pushed into his hand and raised to his mouth.

His sight clears up, though his eyes don’t stop streaming.
Yoongi looks completely ruined, blood soaking his clothes in multiple places, eyes wild, agitated where he stood.

‘You’re okay?’

Jungkook manages to nod.

‘Others will come we need to get moving- we need to get another ship, find Jimin and Sk’jin,’ Yoongi says hurriedly, taking a step back and looking at the still smoking Spardyti. ‘You stay here, hide, tend to your wounds and—’

‘No,’ Jungkook shakes his head at once, his voice raspy and throat raw.

‘Jungkook please don’t argue with me right now—’ Yoongi isn’t even looking at him as he rushes about inside the hangar, ‘—I need to go out there and look for him I can’t leave him I can’t—’

Yoongi collapses to his knees, unaware of his surroundings, arms and hands still moving as though he was looking for something.

Jungkook crawls over, his leg burning.

‘—I can’t leave him I can’t—’ Yoongi repeats.

‘I’ll go with you- I’m going with you,’ Jungkook is hesitant at first but he wraps his arms around the Human. ‘Let’s find them together, we’ll find them.’

Yoongi lets out a strange shuddering sob before he’s nodding, gripping Jungkook’s hand around his shoulder.

‘We need to get a ship- a Transporter,’ Yoongi is saying.

‘The next door Hangar,’ Jungkook says at once, standing up, ‘That escort ship is there—’

‘Fuck- those guards would be in there—’ Yoongi curses, ‘—but I think Camil had them moved—’

Outside, the blue of the Atmoshield flickers on, and the lights flicker back on again. Both Yoongi and Jungkook pauses, looking out through the smoky air.

‘We move fast, quiet,’ Yoongi says tersely, still looking out. ‘We cover each other.’

Jungkook nods.

Yoongi approaches one of the walls of the hangar and bangs his fist on it, a handle popping out. Yanking it down, there’s a shelving unit inside with just a single Heliord and one small TeorSer. Yoongi throws him the TeorSer and pockets the Heliord next to the other he already had.

‘Do you hear anything outside?’

Jungkook shakes his head after a few seconds of carefully straining his ears.

‘Okay- I have a feeling they’ll be back soon,’ Yoongi says, heading for the hangar opening.

‘What is happening?’ Jungkook asks, standing close and behind Yoongi.

‘I don’t know—’
'is it them? The Omhlophe?’

‘No,’ Yoongi shakes his head, pausing to look around outside carefully. ‘If it were them this would be turning out differently- I think there’s some sort of assailing unit from Cuab- probably in league with someone within Ilya’s crew.’

Jungkook doesn’t know what to make of it but he remembers something.

‘I heard some talking- they- they uh, they said they had to take us down- that um, Taeh’yung- he’s been um-’ Jungkook’s voice shakes, cracking all over the place.

Yoongi turns around, his eyes dark and strangely distant as he says, ‘He’ll be okay- it’s Taeh’yung right? He’ll be fine, you’ve seen him.’

Jungkook doesn’t know if Yoongi is trying to reassure him or himself but he just nods.

‘We-,’ Yoongi takes a shaky breath, ‘We’ll be okay.’

They step out, their movement silent through the slowly dissipating smoke. Yoongi gestures forward towards one of the connecting tunnels to the other neighbouring Hangar. Moving fast and low, Yoongi and Jungkook slip into the tunnel. But something uneasy stirs in Jungkook, so he reaches out to stop Yoongi just as the power gives out again before flickering on again.

‘What is it?’ Yoongi asks, barely a whisper.

‘I- I don’t think we should go through here,’ Jungkook replies, looking down the connecting tunnel.

Yoongi pauses to look down as well before looking out behind them.

‘We’re in the corner here,’ Yoongi says quietly, ‘We need another ship- we can’t go back around, we run straight forward- no stopping.’

Darkness falls over them again.

Gripping the TeorSer in his hands, Jungkook nods just once, ‘Okay.’

The lights flicker out again but return again. The ship tremors, the ground vibrating as they hurriedly move along.

As they continue on, Jungkook can’t help but look back. And in that blink of light Jungkook catches sight of a tall sinewy figure down the tunnel they had just gone through.

‘Yoongi-!’ Jungkook stops the Human from moving.

‘What is it?’

‘I- I saw something,’ Jungkook replies quietly.

They’re greatly disadvantaged- stuck in the middle of a hallway where they could be easily cornered from both sides.

There was no returning back to the Laikin at this point.

‘Then we move ahead-’ Yoongi is pulling forward but he stops too, as the lights flicker and the figure down the hallway is apparent.
And closer.

In the darkness, Jungkook can make out the outline of the Being.

Tall, strong, sinewy- Jungkook notes pale skin, bloody looking fingertips, bloodied eye sockets-orb like glowing eyes in the dark- a sharp grin on her face as she regards Jungkook like prey.

‘It’s- it’s the Vicitra- the one from the cells below,’ Yoongi says, pulling Jungkook backwards and away.

And in that moment, Jungkook makes up his mind.

‘I’ll take care of her,’ Jungkook says tersely, ‘Please- please find Jimin and Sk’jin- please find them.’

Yoongi pulls him back.

‘She was purposefully sent here,’ Yoongi says, speaking more to himself. ‘She was sent here on purpose.’

‘Yoongi go!’ Jungkook removes his arm from the Human’s grip and hands him the TeorSer. ‘You need to get Jimin and Sk’jin- there’s no time!’

The Human blinks rapidly, mouth opening and closing a few times before he stops. His hands shake, fists against his side before he nods, turning to look him straight in the eye.

‘Don’t expose your back.’

And with that Yoongi sprints out down the tunnel.

Jungkook looks back at the other Vicitra. Now much closer again.

She was taller than him. Full grown, experienced, deadly, and sent here with one single purpose.

Jungkook has done his research on his own species as best as he could. Sk’jin hadn’t wanted him to read in too far, a worried frown over his forehead as he read with Jungkook.

‘Cannibals?’

‘Not all of them- it’s just an exaggeration of something that happened long ago.’

‘They sometimes killed their younglings in fights?’

‘War, pride, arrogance, fear- all of these kill without discrimination.’

‘Why?’

Sk’jin had struggled to answer, pausing as he ate. The Yisheng in training were listening closely to their conversation as well, their expressions filled with some sort of apprehensive anticipation.

Looking back, Jungkook notices how Yoongi slows by the entrance, looking back one more time. Jungkook isn’t sure if the Human can see, but he smiles, trying to appear as reassuring as possible. Yoongi quietly slips out and Jungkook looks back around.

The Vicitra, his own species and kin, stands not more than 10 meters from where he stood his ground. Her hair is pushed back, shorter than Jungkook’s own. There’s a bruise in the crook of her elbow- as though she had been administered too many invasive shots. She’s roughly dressed, as though she took whatever she could find. Jungkook isn’t sure if she’s definitely here for him, but he’ll try anyways.

She smells like hunger.

‘I-‘ he starts. She looks surprised, head tilting just a little, listening. ‘I don’t know who you are.’

She raises an eyebrow at that, ‘You don’t have to.’

Her voice is soft and deep.

‘But you’re the first of my- of my species that I’ve met,’ Jungkook continues.

‘I know,’ she replies, ‘You’re one of those that they call New Born here right? One of the eggs- it’s what the Alliance calls you.’

Jungkook nods.

‘You’re supposed to be better than me,’ she says, eyes squinting a little, ‘Supposed to be stronger, better, faster – but I was watching you.’

Jungkook feels shivers down his spine.

‘And you’re not,’ she states calmly, orb like eyes watching him in the dark. ‘You’re just a youngling.’

‘Are you here to kill me?’ Jungkook asks calmly.

‘I am.’ She confirms.

‘Why?’

‘Why not?’

‘War, pride, arrogance, fear- all of these kill without discrimination.’

‘Why?’

‘Why not?’

Jungkook barely has time to defend himself as the Vicitra strikes forward – hard and fast.

It’s overwhelming- she’s incredibly fast and vicious. But Jungkook knows this isn’t it- this wasn’t the hardest she could hit him, the fastest she could knock the air out of his lungs – she was taunting him, playing with him, pretending to give him a feel for her strength and speed.

Jungkook manages to put distance between himself and the other Vicitra. She’s grinning at him, not even breathless, whereas Jungkook is panting, pain pulsing all over his body from her quick jabs and punches. She gives him time to catch his breath, watching with amusement.

When Jungkook stands straight he’s somewhat a bit more better prepared for the second time she dives at him. He counters her arms- manages to, painfully, block her knee that flies for his head, but is unable to avoid the blinding smack of her head against his own.

His vision turning white, and momentarily losing track of where he was, Jungkook stumbles backwards, falling back against the wall and sliding down as his legs give out under him.

He’s shaken by the sound of TeorSer shots firing off the direction Yoongi had gone.

He launches to his feet faster than the Vicitra was expecting – Jungkook knows his speed could potentially outdo Yoongi’s- so he uses the element of surprise; rather than running straight towards the Vicitra, Jungkook runs past, ducking under her sweeping arm at the last second and twisting sharply, runs for the wall using it as a lever, twists midair, swinging his feet backward and connecting heavily with the Vicitra.

The Vicitra only falls to one knee, a sound of surprise coming from her.

Jungkook falls but he purposefully stays low, crouched low as he slides closer on his knees, his elbow connected to her bent knee and with a resonating sharp crack, dislocates it completely.

But Jungkook is too close- she doesn’t seem to notice her knee being dislocated as she grabs Jungkook around the throat and slamming him down to the ground.

But Jungkook is oddly prepared for this- he’s gone through his exact maneuver with Yoongi in the past. So he swings his legs and hips upwards, locking the Vicitra’s heads between his legs and twisting his whole body to the side.

She automatically lets go and Jungkook grabs her hands, rolling them on the floor.

Jungkook knew that if he had asked, he would have never been allowed to watch it. But he had secretly watched Yoongi’s fight – the one from the Pompen Arena.

It had been horrifying- but educational.

Because while Yoongi and Hoseok both taught him practicality and technique- watching Yoongi’s fight had taught him how to be brutal effectively.

He twists the Vicitra’s arm out of the socket- this time causing her to definitely scream in pain with this dislocation. He throws his weight on the arm and reaches down, hands grappling her head-

But she physically throws him off, and Jungkook lands awkwardly to the side. He doesn’t have breathing time even, when she catches his foot and swings him clean off the floor and against the wall.

Winded, Jungkook stands as quickly as he can, hand slipping on the walls of the curved tunnel as he balanced himself. The Vicitra pops her arm back in and is reaching to pop her knee back but Jungkook is not an egotistic Vicitra, trying to prove her strength and dominance.

Jungkook is just trying to survive- and when you tried to survive, it meant no showy gestures and or displays of haughtiness.

He jumps up- it’s not with a lot of strength, but it’s enough to cause the Vicitra to reel backwards, disoriented as Jungkook lands a blow straight to her chest, and then another to her probably incredibly sore shoulder. He lunges forward, pushing her against the wall again and yanks at her arm, twisting it over his shoulder and throwing her over his back down to the floor.

Her fingers catch around his face, nails dragging down. Roaring, Jungkook crushes down on her arm, falling haphazardly before hearing another terrible wet crack, lower down the Vicitra’s arm.

Jungkook doesn’t manage to roll away, claw like hands grabbing at his hair.
Out of instinct, Jungkook grapples with the hand on his head as it jerks him closer to the Vicitra who roars in his face.

In a strange tangled mess on the floor, with Jungkook struggling on his back, the Vicitra swings her leg over and down, catching Jungkook on his side. His vision blinks out as pain erupts faster than the cracking sound that fills his ears. Then the fingers in his hair tighten and his hair rips out, a searing burn spreading over his scalp; the pain serves to clear his sight and he manages to push himself off the ground and away.

Jungkook nearly twists his own wrist, getting caught in a gap on the floor he hadn’t seen or noticed before. A quick look shows that wires ran under the gap- some sort of outlet ran up around the hallway.

He stands, adjusting himself, looking down quickly and noticing more gaps around the floor. He hears an increased rate of TeorSer shots coming from where Yoongi had gone into.

A sudden kick aimed right at his chest sends him flying back.

He’s closer to the end of the hallway now- the lights from there providing better illumination. Jungkook stands quickly but his side is burning- his breath short and unstable. The Vicitra is holding her mangled arm, already turning purple along the elbow.

She looks mad- and Jungkook wonders if he does too.

Jungkook shuffles back and the Vicitra, laughing, lunges- and then her foot is caught in the same gap, making her momentarily lose her balance, knee bending and turning in.

Unsure what prompts him to do so, Jungkook leaps forward, arms wrapping around her torso and shoves her straight into the wall before using his momentum swing his elbow forward.

It meets her jaw with a resounding cracking sound. She blocks his other fist but she can’t use her other arm to block his knee swinging upwards, catching her right under her ribs. Bowled over, Jungkook raises both hands in the air above his head, clasped tight and brings it down over her head.

But she in turn barrels into him, throwing him to the wall but it’s weak. And Jungkook bounces right back, raising his knee and sending her flying to the side as he swings it across her head.

There’s an explosion from the Hangar ahead-

‘-Yoongi-!’

The Vicitra roars, pushing herself off the floor and lunging at Jungkook. They both fall down, Jungkook taking her weight. But he curls his legs inward and kicking them out before him, launches the Vicitra off of him. Rolling around as quickly as he could, breath caught in his throat no matter how hard he tried to breathe. Jungkook stands up, instantly dizzy and his vision swimming before his eyes.

There’s roaring behind him and-

Don’t expose your back.

Spinning quickly, Jungkook catches the Vicitra’s extended hand- fingers like claws reaching forward as though intending to rip through Jungkook’s back.
Jungkook twists away and around, making the Vicitra fall through the air and landing onto the floor heavily. Her fall misbalances him, but Jungkook only falls to one knee. She swings her leg back, nearly clipping him on his head, but Jungkook manages to dodge it and grab her leg, pushing it down against the natural bend. This causes the Vicitra to shriek in pain, body twisting upwards to counter the unnatural way Jungkook held her leg. And then Jungkook lets go to twist his arm around the Vicitra’s throat. Then twisting his whole body with hers, Jungkook falls backwards.

The ringing in his ears is only just louder than his struggling pants.

It’s only when he pushes off the Vicitra’s body from on top of his that he notices that was bleeding steadily from his side.

The whole ship seemed to tremble violently, more flashes of light ahead.

Jungkook is closer than he thought. He can see the escort ship— but there’s no one around— either that or—

His breath rattling in his throat, Jungkook manages to stand— but only for a second, before slumping on the wall.

He hears TeorSer shots again, but now Jungkook is not sure if it’s actual TeorSer shots or just his mind.

‘Y-Yoongi—’ he pushes one foot forward before he ultimately slips into silence and darkness.

*'

‘I’m genuinely sorry you got caught up in this.’ Camil says quietly.

Hoseok knows no matter how fast he moved, no matter how quickly he took action— it wasn’t going to work.

The bright heat of the TeorSer overwhelms him.

But it never hits him.

Camil gasps in pain, breathless chokes.

Hoseok turns around quickly, pushing backwards to see Jaen and E’nid both holding the ends of some sort of rope, the other end around Camil’s throat. But Camil is pushing against it, fingers digging under the rope.

‘Hoseok!’ Jaen hisses.

Hoseok punches Camil across the knee, bringing him down before easily knocking him out with a swift uppercut.

Jaen and E’nid let go of the rope, panting. In closer inspection they’re both injured.
‘What happened-?’ Hoseok manages to get out.

‘We don’t know,’ Jaen says immediately, ‘But this asshole is behind it- and I’m bringing his ass down to Ilya and Jn’young before I take his head off myself.’

‘Can you fix it?’ E’nid points at the motherboard before calling out behind her, ‘No- we’re good-caught the bastard.’

‘There’s nothing wrong with it- it’s something Camil himself probably did,’ Hoseok frowns at the unconscious Camil at his feet. ‘The network is running fine- it’s the Comm Devices I think.’

‘Best believe it’s what I do best,’ Hoseok grumbles, attaching the Comm Device to his ear before saying in perfect imitation of Camil’s voice, ‘The motherboard situation has been taken care of.’

‘Took you long enough – we’ve sent down the Vicitra to get the ones remaining at the Hangar. The weird one is still knocked out, we’re transporting him to one of the pods so we can get him out but Camil, there’s nothing coming from Axudar- are you sure that they said they would come here or we’re supposed to go to them?’

‘I got the message myself okay, I know what I heard and what they said- they’re coming here. Fucking Verktaë and their weird sensing abilities- they said they would definitely come because this was a “welcome home” party.’

‘Camil? What next now?’

‘Evdos should be meeting us soon shouldn’t he? Fucking bitch got distracted and now we’re here-‘

‘Hey Camil- we managed to get Ilya and Jn’young inside Cuab- Jn’young’s out so there’s no danger there-‘

‘-wait guys- Camil what’s wrong-‘

Hoseok’s mind is reeling as he quickly shuts off the speaker.

E’nid looks horrified as Jaen looks like she’s about to collapse.

‘He’s- he’s dealing with Axudar,’ she says with a trembling voice, ‘They were going to take us- all of this, all of us- to Axudar-‘

‘Evdos was in on this- he was-‘

The others gathered around outside and a few inside have looks of shock and disgust and fear.

‘We need to get to Jn’young and Ilya,’ one of them says, ‘We have to get them out-‘

‘-this can’t be just Camil masterminding doing all of this,’ E’nid says at once, ‘If we can track down everyone else-‘

‘Clearly Evdos is in this too- those voices-‘ Jaen begins hotly, her anger palpable as she shakes.

‘-if you can get me one of the NaviLets or get me to the Engine Rooms with the core-structure, then I can reverse this,’ Hoseok says at once, holding up the Comm Device, ‘-but I really really need to get to my team- they’ve-‘

Camil had talked to him about the Vicitra, had talked to him about the others- and Hoseok had just-‘-they’re in danger, Camil arranged for them to be taken care of I need- where are the pods?’ Hoseok asks instead at once.

‘Your friend- Taeh’yung right?’ E’nid questions.

Hoseok nods, ‘If I can get to him- get him out and just- just check on him, get him to wake up, we’ll be able to fix a lot of things.’

Jaen looks at him incredulously but E’nid nods to that.

‘Okay- okay I’ll take you to the pods- and then we go to-’

‘no I got it- I’ll take Hoseok to the pods and get his friend out- then we meet up at one of the Bridges-’

‘-the fourth Bridge is closest,’ someone suggests.

‘One second,’ E’nid calls out, ‘Go through the stuff outside- pick out weapons, and other Comm Devices we can use. And then we move out carefully- we’ll put Camil in here and tie him up until we’re set.’

The others nod to that and quickly step away.

‘Jaen?’ E’nid calls out gently.

‘Wait- no I think-’ Jaen seemed to be trying to get her shit together which Hoseok relates to a lot. ‘Wait- we all head for the Bridge- there we can track all pods that are being activated- that way Hoseok knows which one his friend is in. And we can also do that- that reversing thing you said,’ Jaen gestures at Hoseok and the Comm Device he was holding.

‘Okay yeah-,’ Hoseok nods to that. ‘Okay- uh-’

‘I’ll go with Hoseok,’Jaen continues, seemingly getting a grip of herself, ‘If there’s too many of us going at the same time, it’ll be riskier- E’nid-’

‘-I’ll come too-’

‘-now is not the time-‘

‘-please-’ Jaen takes E’nid’s hand midway, squeezing it. ‘Just make sure the kids and families are okay-’

For a brief moment, Hoseok feels like he’s intruding on something private and he looks away, trying to give the two before him their privacy as best as he could.

‘Fine.’ E’nid sounds exhausted. ‘Fine I will-’

‘We’ll come get you guys- Brena and the others were headed for the 8th Pod Unit- I think they deemed it safest.’ Jaen isn’t looking at E’nid.

‘Okay- right I’ll take them up,’ E’nid says, also not looking up.

She leaves and Jaen sighs out, squatting down to push Camil over to his front. It’s a comically awkward silence.

‘Emotional constipation-‘
'Now is not the time!' Jaen snaps, ‘Give me that rope I’m tying this asshole up.’

Camil is well tied up, Hoseok makes no comments about Jaen aggressively tying the much taller Being up with more force than strictly necessary because, again, he relates. There was a lot to unpack here- what with Camil’s betrayal, as well as a lot of other Beings- including the wonderful Junior Constable Evdos (and Hoseok feels any guilt he had considering that Being completely evaporate), and Jaen’s own relationship with Axudar.

‘It’s quiet,’ Jaen comments as they pause in a hallway.

Hoseok agrees.

They come across bodies around the ground- but with no signs of struggle or clear battle. It was unsettling, what with the random tremors, and sometimes a few disembodied shrieks echoing down the hallways through the vents.

It’s an unsettling 10 minutes of quiet, more bodies, and more tremors when they reach a lift.

‘Okay we-‘ Jaen begins but they’re interrupted by screams and shrieks.

Down the hallway they had just come through and over to the other side, a massive hoard of Beings- still dressed in their prison uniform, run across- run away.

The lights flicker and there’s shrieking and then-

‘We should hurry,’ Jaen taps at the screen hurriedly, eyeing the long narrow dark tunnel uncomfortably. The elevator doors open, thankfully to an empty lift, and they step inside, placing themselves to the side.

As the doors close, Hoseok catches sight of a dark figure walking across the distant hallway.

‘Fuck- fuck that was close-‘

‘What’s going on?’ Hoseok demands, ‘Did Camil bring in like, I don’t know, some sort of special unit to bring down this network-‘

‘I don’t know!’ Jaen exclaims, hands up in the air, ‘I don’t know why- I don’t know how- I just don’t know!’

‘Hey shit fuck- there’s something wrong-‘

‘What do you mean? What are you talking about?’

‘They’re talking,’ Hoseok points at the Comm Device on his ear. ‘Something’s gone wrong.’

‘No one from the western wing is replying- I don’t know what’s wrong- is something fucking up our network?’

‘Camil said it was fine-‘

‘-for fuck’s sake- keep an eye out- you think you lot are the best fighters in this ship? You’re lucky we have these inmates to take the brunt-‘

‘-just make sure we hold steady until Axudar comes through-‘

The line distinctly shuts.
'I think they caught on that Camil has been compromised. My line is down. Also, apparently the western wing is down?' Hoseok relays, ‘No one is responding from there.’

‘The western wing is where all our Hangars are,’ Jaen frowns, ‘That seems odd-‘

‘They’re waiting for Axudar to pull through for them right now I think,’ Hoseok nervously fidgets.

‘Hey- I know you have a lot banking on this- and with your decisions regarding Axudar and shit- but I hope you know that at this point, we’re both on the same side, and I have no intention of going there, or being captured- so don’t worry- we’ll pull through. We get the NaviLet- you communicate back with your team, and you get the hell out.’

‘What about you?’

‘I’m gonna get Ilya and Sk’jin after this,’ Jaen tells him seriously, ‘Then I’m hauling ass- get to the pods, or grab a Transporter and warp out as quickly as you can. When we’re in a safe distance, I’ll alert the GLA.’

Hoseok nods slowly.

‘I don’t think Sk’jin would want to leave.’

Jaen pauses at that, looking up at Hoseok thoughtfully. But nothing more is said as the elevator doors open.

Carefully looking out, the hallway and atrium they open up to is clear.

Here too, a few bodies lay around.

‘Fuck- this is so weird,’ Jaen says quietly.

The lights are low here- just the emergency lights that shine a dim light. The Bridge doorway is open and the light in there is brighter.

‘I think we’re clear,’ Jaen says hesitantly.

‘I’ll go in first, cover me,’ Hoseok pulls her back. Jaen nods.

The Bridge is empty. The view from here looks down at the longer side of Cuab-D2, and Hoseok spies debris flying all over the space around it.

‘What the fuck-’ Jaen whispers low, walking up to the window, crouching low. Hoseok makes his way to the Navigation Table, the source of the light.

‘Wait Hoseok!’ Jaen calls out suddenly. Hoseok stops immediately, crouching down, staring around himself with wide eyes.

‘-what?’

‘The Communication network- it’s back on,’ Jaen looks confused. ‘I don’t understand- I thought you said-‘

‘-I did-‘ Hoseok frowns, looking down at the Navigation Table he hadn’t even managed to touch.

‘But-‘
‘Step away!’ Camil appears at the doorway, TeorSer held aloft.

Behind him are a number of Beings Hoseok cannot take down on his own, with just a single TeorSer, even with Jaen.

‘Camil-’ Jaen’s voice is a warning, low and angry.

‘Away,’ Camil is only looking at Hoseok, a strange curious expression on his face, ignoring Jaen. ‘Who did you call?’

‘What?’ Hoseok is confused.

‘Or is it the Verktaë with you? Is he doing something?’ Camil demands.

The inmates that came with Camil fill in. Their uniform is the same as the one from Māho-5. How long had this operation been running within Ilya’s network without detection?

‘Answer me, or I’ll have the pod with your friend in it sent out without any vacuum seal,’ Camil throws in, ‘Don’t think death by implosion is all too great.’

‘Camil-’

Camil doesn’t even look at Jaen when he fires the TeorSer at her.

‘Answer me-’

The lights go off, the Navigation Table switching off and bathing the whole Bridge in darkness. Hoseok ducks down- and there’s an uproar.

All Hoseok could do now was wait out the time between now and his death-

TeorSers fire off- the inmates are yelling and screaming- suddenly a body flops over the dashboard Hoseok had ducked behind, more crashing sounds over the Navigation Table.

Confused, Hoseok looks around- trying to find a way out- a way to communicate. He finds that Jaen is unconscious, bleeding out from her side. Hoseok crawls towards her as quickly as he can, TeorSer fire going off above him.

Another body flies overhead and Hoseok can’t pay it too much attention, he readjusts Jaen’s position onto her side that’s not injured. He had to staunch the bleeding quickly. He takes off his shirt, ripping it from the collar down when-Suddenly quiet, Hoseok stops with the makeshift bandage. Pausing to listen carefully.

Out of nowhere, he’s dragged up, held up by Camil who pushes his TeorSer against his temple.

‘Tell your people to stand down,’ Camil hisses in his ear, ‘Or I will blow your brains out-’

There’s a very distinct clear sound of a TeorSer activation hum and before Hoseok can brace himself, Camil falls to a heap behind him in a flash of light and heat.

The lights flicker back on to full power, the Navigation Table switched on, and Hoseok twists around, hands still held up and-

An extremely familiar figure stood by the window, TeorSer still smoking slightly-
But no- something was different.

Taller, a little more built- a black uniform, matte and simple- a black helmet over their head.

The visor clicks upwards, revealing an expressionless face that regards Hoseok with a familiar yet different gaze before she says in an equally monotonous voice, 'Mission successful Captain Namjoon. Now securing Ngfy’widan Hoseok.'

*

Sk’jin feels the tremor, move through the sole of his shoes, through his feet, to the back of his head. Before he can speak a word, everything is violently pulled away-

Sk’jin feels all of space and time slip under and over him- moving as fast and weightlessly as light. There’s nothing he can do- nothing he can hold on to- even his breath won’t escape his lungs- there’s nothing he can do-

He’s upside down- the stars below him, above him- all around him. He sees the ship- massive and lit in this endless space- the edges and surface riddled now with objects, Beings, dreams, memories- all pulled away from their place, slipping violently through space and time.

Sk’jin feels himself being pulled into a bright star, the lights wrapping around him- stabilizing him in this strange liquid formlessness.

And just as he feels his breath now trying to escape him, trying to rejoin that time and space it had once belonged to- something coils around him.

Something falls over his head- blocking his view and a pressure so great, so overwhelming, crushes out of him through his chest and-

‘-breathe! Breathe! Sk’jin you can breathe please breathe listen-‘

Sk’jin tries to breath but it’s too heavy it’s too heavy he can’t he can’t the can’t-

Ahadi smiles at him, warm brown eyes, dimpled smile.

‘Hey- you’re okay now- I got you okay?’

He’s shining, light bright around him, drawing him down but it’s heavy and Sk’jin feels too light and-

Sk’jin falls and falls until he’s not.

There’s voices around him. But he can’t hear what they’re saying- the voices are strange, pulling away, pushing in-
He can breathe— he can finally breath; and maybe he was loud because Ahadi appears. He smiles at him encouragingly— nodding, pushing the strange substance around him away and—

‘I’m cold- r-really c-cold-c-can’t m-m-move-‘

‘Shh- hey I got you, we got you, you’re safe I promise-‘ he’s holding Sk’jin close and it’s starting to become warm—

Sk’jin laughs breathlessly, amazed and awestruck. Ahadi was here— he was here! And was that a blanket around him? Was he in bed?

‘-dream?’

‘Jin? Hey- you’re awake, you’re okay-‘

‘How- h-how-‘

‘I tracked you the same way Yoongi does-‘

Something—...something wasn’t adding up— Ahadi didn’t know Yoongi.

‘-what-‘

Ahadi chuckles breathlessly, ‘Yeah he’s- his obsession with poison I guess-‘

The lights around him flicker—

‘They’re fine- they’re all fine,’ Ahadi assures him, ‘We got Jimin too- he’s fine. So is Yoongi- and Jungkook, we just got Hoseok and Taeh’yung-‘

Sk’jin thinks maybe he’s falling again. When he lands again he’s still there- in a bed. A Medical Bed. And Ahadi is still there— but, there’s something different about him.

‘You’re okay,’ he smiles, leaning in to kiss his forehead, ‘We’re okay, I promise you.’

‘I- I promise-‘

Ahadi grin, dimples broadening before he steps back from Sk’jin’s blurred vision and someone else comes closer.

Namjoon smiles with relief at him from where he’s kneeling, his skin is patched up over his eye, both arms present though one has no cover and was a matte metallic form.

‘What-‘

‘Got you just in time,’ Namjoon sighs out.

The light around him isn’t red, no Bloodmoon shone down on him here.

Instead it’s nice and mild.

Normal.

Gentle and soothing.

‘We thought you-‘ Namjoon struggles, ‘-but we got you in time and we’re heading in to pick up the others. Don’t worry okay?’
‘What?’ Sk’jin is suddenly exhausted.

Ahadi reappears as Namjoon steps back, his voice taking over.

‘We’re all set here. Just-’

‘I swear- get the fuck out, it’s normal,’ Sk’jin waves him off with a roll of his eyes despite being instantly nauseous in the process.

Ahadi just smiles, dimples forming deep on his cheeks before he leans in a little before he seems to reconsider and backs away.

‘I would like a goodnight kiss though,’ Sk’jin quips, attempting a wink.

Ahadi shakes his head, laughing low under his breath before he leans all the way in.

The lights overhead blocks Sk’jin from seeing Ahadi’s expression before their lips touch. Sk’jin only sees the familiar outline of the Mwenzini but he doesn’t have to see him to know that he’s smiling. He can feel it against his lips and it makes Sk’jin smile.

When Ahadi pulls back he is smiling down at Sk’jin with that same fondness, laced a little with exasperation and an expression Sk’jin isn’t entirely sure how to label. Instead he reaches up to feel at his dimples with a fond chuckle and pushes him off with a flick on his forehead.

‘I’ll see you when I’m beautiful again,’ Sk’jin laughs as Ahadi gets up.

‘Is that your way of getting me to tell you that you’re always beautiful?’ Ahadi asks, laughing as he looks back.

‘Is it working?’ Sk’jin has never heard Ahadi compliment him on his looks.

_Ever._

Ahadi stands by the doorway, dimpled smile on place, shaking his head.

‘You’re gonna have to work harder than that Captain, I have a very specific aesthetic.’

Sk’jin manages to lift a finger at him before the door slides shut.

Sk’jin continues to laugh under his breath as the room is slowly bathed in darkness. It starts to get heavy again, around him.

The Bloodmoon is faded, replaced instead by a serene night sky.

‘I-I promise-,’ Sk’jin mumbles out loud. ‘I promise you,- that I’ll make everything right again when I come back. I’ll even be the fuckin’ hero if that’s what’s needed.’
SO
WHO STILL WANTS TO SCREAM ABOUT MOTS:7
Let me tell you how this shit went down because the day the album dropped and the kinetic mv dropped I was FLYING OUT BACK TO MY HOME COUNTRY BECAUSE VISA ISSUES
My flight was at 4:30 but delayed to 5 so I thought I have time to watch the mv, download the album, and cry for 3 hours on the airplane this is great WELL IT WASN'T
Normally my data is really fast and good BUT SOMEHOW IT WANTED TO FUCK WITH ME AFTER THE MV DROPPED 4 o’clock here in Thailand is 6 in KST so I was seething, right at 4 my data goes shit, it takes me 45 mintues to download the album, and after maybe 1 hour I can finally watch the mv at 144p
I wanted to cry But I did download the album and Guys
Never fly over a sunset cloud filled sky over hills and distant citylines while listening to we are bullet proof the eternal That shit is not for the faint of heart because I WAS TEARING UP IN THE AIRPLANE IM NOT KIDDING And like I said last time MOON IS MY SONG Also the longer version of shadow i Didn’t think I could love shadow more But here I am No but really, we are bullet proof the eternal I just- I genuinely cried, there’s something about the song that makes me feel both incredibly uplifted and supported and comforted but also incredibly sad??????????????? Is this just me Please tell me Also surprise!! Namjoon’s here
SPEAKING OF NAMJOON
HIS VLIVE FROM TODAY AND WHEN HE TALKED ABOUT WE ARE BULLET

You know what
Im gonna go sit and think for a while “Fleeting” [adjective]: lasting for a very short time.

Chapter Notes

See the end of the chapter for notes

Fuck is this what Hoseok felt like when he was kidnapped.

It’s silent for a while before Yyna speaks.

‘Namjoon, child and survivor of Kutsoglera, help us, children of nowhere, and teach us to survive.’

‘What-? No-!’ Namjoon protests but the Transporter suddenly picks up speed, forcing him to fall back into his seat, the safety straps folding over him immediately.

They burst out into the surface- they were so close- so close to escaping. There’s an immediate ripple of blue around the Transporter- they were going to leave.

‘They’ve all come back to me,’ Jimin sounded so helpless and lost.

‘Hey- we can go back and help-!’ Namjoon argues. Why were they leaving? Jimin was there- if nothing else, Jimin was literally back there- yet here they were, leaving.

Quite casually, Amic from the back, reaches forward and attaches another Comm Device to Namjoon’s ear.

‘Captain Namjoon of Kutsoglera.’

His voice is low, deep, and slightly guttural. Namjoon can’t place the accent immediately though there’s a familiarity with how he pronounces his name.

‘Uh-‘

‘Yisheng Amme has arrived to Grisial, at the request of Hoseok of Ngfy’wid. They will be secured.’

Namjoon twists in his seat, looking back, and sure enough, a massive and familiar ship approaches them, the light of Grisial behind it like some holy halo.

‘The Zhak’gri Taeh’yung, has pushed back the Omhlophe mothership, they will be retreating right now.’

Out of everything he’s heard today, that was the most believable thing.

Namjoon doesn’t know how to feel, watching the Yisheng ship get closer. Hoseok had called Amme? When? Why Amme?

But then again, in a sense, Namjoon understands why. But he’s still anxious, his mind whirling with everything happening around him.

‘Jimin has found Yoongi.’

Oddly enough this makes him feel better.

‘We cannot do more.’

Suddenly, rage builds up in Namjoon and he’s not above being irresponsibly mad at his situation and everything that lead up to it, in a small Transporter, unarmed, surrounded by GI who were all very armed.

‘Who the fuck is this?’ Namjoon demands, ‘What the fuck were you doing- coming to my ship, attacking my crew, putting them in danger? What were you trying to achieve?!’

The line is silent for so long Namjoon almost feels awkward, what with the silence of the others around him and their absolute stoic mannerism.

‘I’m sorry,’ the voice says, ‘I will explain it to you, once you are here.’

‘No,’ Namjoon says firmly, ‘My crew, my team, is behind me, I need to go back, make sure they’re secure- I don’t know if you know this but not everyone there is particularly healthy or stable-‘

‘-we are aware that the Khol’isa is fading. We did not account for the New Born Vicitra to attack as he did- we did not suppose him to have the strength to fight.’

‘Is that supposed to make me feel better-’ Namjoon tries to sound harsh but- fading?

‘-and we know that our brother Yoongi is dying.’

Namjoon’s voice gets caught in his throat.

‘We are all dying.’

‘And is that why you tried to kill him?’ Namjoon demands, glaring at the other GI around him to no effect.

It’s silent for a really long time again. They’re getting close to Grisial again, headed for a lone and slightly distant asteroid, a faint blue around it to indicate the Atmoshield that protected it.

‘I will explain this all to you once you are here,’ the voice explains. ‘And maybe, you can guide us and make us found.’

Amic reaches forward and takes both Comm Devices on his ears.

What Hoseok went through was probably much worse than this, Namjoon ruminates as he sits back, unrestrained (save for the safety straps), free to move. Looking back, the Yisheng ship was now hidden by the Grisial asteroid they had crashed into, though Namjoon can still see the light it exuded from its beamers.

He finds himself wanting to ask questions, but he knows he’s not about to receive any answers. This was like having several Yoongi’s (from the beginning of their mission) and trying to get a response from him. Except at least Yoongi was cooperative to an extent because he had one mission in mind, which happened to be the same one they all shared.

Speaking of which, Namjoon hesitantly tries a new approach.

‘What is your mission statement?’

It’s quiet for a long while, during which Namjoon is sure his question has been ignored. Grisial was getting closer now, Namjoon spies a lone port over the top of the asteroid they were headed for.

‘To be found.’

It’s Yyna who answers.

And that doesn’t explain anything so Namjoon guesses that he probably needs to figure out how to ask his questions. Fuck, this really was like getting to know Yoongi all over again except possibly with more than just one love-sick Human Being.

For one panicked moment, Namjoon wonders if somehow every single GI was also “in love” with Jimin. Logically that would be quite extreme but Sk’jin’s annoying voice tells him that he’s being idiot and that it was very possible that hundreds, thousands, millions, whole species and races could definitely fall in love with one single Being, or at least hold them up to high reverence and awe- that was basically what all religion was like.

Or stardom, Sk’jin’s voice provides, an annoyingly vivid mental image of Sk’jin perusing his screen, catching up the news behind actors who were going to act in a movie based on the Six Hands of Our Love book series that Sk’jin loved so much.

He remembers Jimin reading through a few chapters, only to laugh hysterically, face red, slapping Sk’jin repeatedly on his shoulder as the Khol’isa aggressively defended the book.

He’s caught Hoseok reading the third book in the installment and might bring it up later to blackmail the Ngfy’widan. Maybe use it against him when questioning him about why he would call Yisheng Amme.

Namjoon’s leg bounces nervously at the thought; what was his reasoning? Of all members of the Jury, Yisheng Amme was probably not the first choice. But that wasn’t because the other Beings involved were such trustworthy applicants either.

They land gently, the dock empty save for another Transporter identical to the one Namjoon was in, and a much larger, powerful looking ship behind it. The safety straps around him disengage and retract back, allowing Namjoon to stand up.

Clearly they’re expecting him to follow them, so Namjoon makes his way to walk behind Amic and Yyna. And then he’s just left to stand there.

Namjoon is empty handed and just—just standing. He squints a little, trying to find the asteroid he had just left- but they’re in orbit with the rest of the asteroid belt around Grisial, and Namjoon is no longer looking at the same expansion of space, the stars moved already as they slowly orbit Grisial.

Would Amme be able to overwhelm the Omhlophe?

The voice over the Comm Device had said that Taeh’yung had “pushed back” the Omhlophe mothership. Great. Was that why Sk’jin had yelled and not minutes later, bright green erupted all around them?

What had Taeh’yung done? Was he all right?

Namjoon doesn’t feel strain on his muscles or anything like that, but he squats down, palm over his face as he takes a deep breath.

They needed that UV Bed for Sk’jin because he was clearly not well- now with this- was the Khol’isa all right? And Jungkook.

Was he safe? Namjoon curses under his breath, they should have really let him stay back, go with that Long Huon Zitao – he would have been safe, would have been able to leave this mess behind; a mess he wasn’t really involved in to start off with.

And what about Hoseok? The three of them had been at the Bridge when they crashed- and sure the Užkulisa was a powerful ship, but it’s not like the three inside were indestructible.

And then there was Yoongi of course.

What it must have felt like- to fight someone- to literally fight yourself – Spaces.

Namjoon sits on the ground, staring blankly outwards ahead. Wherever he was headed right now, he had no way of knowing what would happen to him, what the GI would do to him, or want from him. They had wanted Jimin but they let him go so quickly- it didn’t make sense.

An identical Transporter lands close to the one that brought Namjoon in. More GI step out, and this time in between them they’re carrying what are clearly body-bags.

‘Captain Namjoon.’

Startled, Namjoon looks around.

Amad’la is looking down at him, in her hands a bottle of ionized water.

‘We will be leaving now.’ Then after a fraction of a moment adds, ‘I hope you are not feeling unwell.’

Spaces, Namjoon wishes he had never agreed to Lmiura’s request and didn’t have to be subjected to the GI’s inability to convey minimal conversations.

Namjoon takes the bottle and manages a smile.

For sure he could try escaping. He’s pretty sure there’s some GI holding a very well aimed TeorSer at him from some point around the Dock at multiple-points. He might as well just go along with this mess and see what interesting thing he might have to learn. The Being he spoke to, well, that spoke to him, seemed very self-aware; similar to how Yoongi had been some time ago.

Spaces, had it nearly been a full Standard sol since they left Šerdesas?

Namjoon feels like it’s been at least, a whole decade. Certainly feels like he’s aged a whole decade, what with his skin falling apart and lack of a functioning arm.

Amad’la waits for him before leading him to the large ship. But she stops abruptly, nearly making Namjoon walk straight into her, fumbling with his bottle of ionized water.
He’s unsure what to do- he looks around surreptitiously and notes that everyone- every GI has stopped- almost as though pausing to listen to something. Then they all turn their heads in the same direction. And automatically, so does Namjoon.

Suddenly everything flashes a neon green- the lights of Grisial shift violently- protesting almost, every single photon of light changed and-

The sound crashes around him like real physical weight- the entire asteroid trembling.

‘WHAT ARE YOU DOING HERE-‘

Namjoon gasps as the pressure releases, the neon-green fades.

‘Spaces fuck-‘ Namjoon realizes he’s on the floor. So are a few of the GI. He slowly makes to stand, squinting in the general direction of where it had come from.

That was definitely Taeh’yung. It had to be.

What was going on?

‘Captain Namjoon.’

‘Wait- wait I need to know what happened- I need to make sure they’re all right-‘ Namjoon protests immediately, shaking his head and taking a step back. ‘That was Taeh’yung- you maybe don’t know but he’s overwhelmingly powerful and that was him- I need to make sure-‘

Amad’la manhandles him so swiftly and so quickly, Namjoon has no idea how he’s ended up restrained completely, and tossed over her shoulder like he was some sort of luggage. The only part of his whole body he can move is his head.

Namjoon feels slightly offended and extremely intimidated. He didn’t need a reminder of the GI skillset like this, thanks.

‘-what?!’ Namjoon can’t even struggle- he’s bound so effectively.

As they walk past, Namjoon spots something.

There are 4 body bags, 4 helmets placed next to their heads. The fake uniforms that they were wearing are folded neatly next to them. He instantly recognizes the one the other Yoongi had been wearing. Namjoon can’t look away.

‘What- what about the others?’ Namjoon can’t help but ask, twisting his head around (the only body part he could move) to find that Amic and another GI don’t follow them into the ship, but are still by the previous Transporter, standing before the doorway.

He’s not expecting an answer, which is why when Amad’la answers, Namjoon is stunned into silence.

‘They will bring back our brothers and sisters,’ she replies.

Amad’la takes further inside the ship, passing the large internal Hangar, and into a lift. She places him down on his feet, and after a few awkward and strained seconds of silence says, ‘I’m sorry.’

Namjoon just sighs.

The elevator pulls them up to the Bridge directly, where other GI were already there, getting ready for take off. They’re all wearing their helmets, so Namjoon can’t place a single one of them. It’s extremely unnerving and Namjoon has previously worked with androids that all look identical, not a single hair out of place.

No one says a thing to him and Namjoon guesses he might as well just.

Take a seat.

So he does.

Security straps instantly engage and he’s set in.

He’s fidgeting. He doesn’t stop fidgeting.

They leave Grisial and Namjoon can physically feel his stress level rocketing. If he had sweat glands, he’d be damp by now he’s sure.

He’s absolutely helpless in here- as they enter warp, Namjoon tries again.

‘Amad’la, please- I need to be here for them- I need to make sure we’re all safe.’

But he’s predictably ignored.

The Bridge washes out in white light as they hit warp and Namjoon knows now, with a depressing finality, that there’s nothing he can do about his situation anymore.

‘Uh-‘ Namjoon tries again after about 10 minutes, ‘Where are we going?’

He’s ignored.

Namjoon wants to throw a tantrum. Childish sure, but Namjoon thinks he’s allowed.

The security straps around him disengage but no one moves. For almost 30 minutes, Namjoon just sits still; he’s not sure if he can move or walk around. No one else aboard the ship has moved a muscle unless it was to make adjustments to the dashboards before them. There’s no talking, no AI voice in the air- Namjoon can’t even see anyone’s faces other than Amad’la’s.

Throwing precaution to the wind, Namjoon stands up.

No one spares him a second look.

Of course it wasn’t as though Namjoon would do anything dangerous- he’s comically outnumbered, missing a functional arm, most of his face falling apart, covered in a fine layer of dust that really clings to him, and weaponless.

Namjoon was not going to do anything and that was clearly apparent.

And even if it felt weird to do so, Namjoon turns, his back exposed to the Bridge, and exits the place. He’s somehow half-expecting himself to be manhandled again, bound and gagged and put in one place. But no one follows him, no one tries to stop him.

He finds himself in the level below the Bridge, a massive screen to one side to show the layout of the ship. Namjoon stands before it, still expecting some reprimand in the form of a harsh and well executed jab, or maybe even a stun-level TeorSer blast; something at least. But there’s nothing.

He studies the plans of each level. There are a total of 5 levels- the top most being the Bridge, the level he was at divided into smaller segments, probably some form of meeting units, community points, the level below was the living quarters, Namjoon determines, judging by the neatly and equally divided rooms. The level beneath that is the Hangar and Medical Bays, and below that, the Engines Rooms.

‘Captain Namjoon.’

Namjoon jumps a foot into the air.

‘Fucking Spaces-!’ he gasps out, nearly colliding into the massive screen.

It’s one of the GI- one that Namjoon has not met before- she’s short, a stocky stature that is incredibly imposing despite her absolute lack of aggressive expression. She was definitely from somewhere in Ghandhar, which planet, he’s not too sure, and honestly at this point it didn’t matter anyways.

She blinks at him a total 3 times before she says, ‘I am sorry.’

‘Oh- I guess- I mean-‘ Namjoon stammers out, lowering his arm(s) that were crossed over his chest.

‘Please follow me, I will show you your room.’

Were they travelling a specifically long distance that he needed to be assigned a room? Was he expecting to sleep at some point, were they just going to fly about randomly? They would need to refuel though that could be anything between a month to 3 months depending on when they refilled the store but that could’ve easily been back in Grisial.

Namjoon follows the Ghandarian native down the next level.

He’s lead down the hallway, lined with narrow doorways at an even interval. They pass an intersection but keep going straight. At the very end, there’s a long and narrow window, the light from warped space illuminating the area.

The Ghandarian stops suddenly and with a small tap on the side of the door, it opens to reveal a neat and decently sized room.

‘We have prepared clothes for you. We hope it will suit you.’

Namjoon notes that there’s a confusing smell of cleaning agents, some sort of detergent, an a very awkwardly arrangement of semi-wilted flowers on the desk beneath the window.

‘Oh- uh, thanks,’ Namjoon manages to say.

The Ghandarian just stands there, to Namjoon’s absolute discomfort. Was he supposed to say something else?

‘Uh- this is, uh, very nice,’ Namjoon looks around the room, ‘If I uh- need something, how will I uh, contact...you? Someone?’

The Ghandarian blinks a few times before handing Namjoon a small and new Comm Device from some pocket on her black suit.

‘Great- this is great I will uh- go get cleaned up,’ Namjoon states slowly, rolling the Comm Device between her fingers. ‘This is uh, very nice, I uh, like the flowers a lot.’
Apparently that was what she needed to hear. The Ghandarian turns and leaves.

Namjoon quickly closes the door, and exhales out slowly.

Placing the Comm Device on the very recently made bed with possibly too many pillows, Namjoon takes a moment to crouch down on the floor and scream quietly into his hands.

After taking a few minutes to simply throw a small and quiet tantrum, Namjoon investigates his newly assigned room. The closet has a few clothing items. And yeah, Namjoon should probably change from what he’s wearing. The clothes are, unsurprisingly, his size. So he lays it out over the bedding. Checking the en suite, Namjoon notes the very brand new bottles of shampoo, washes, and soaps, and salts.

In the mirror, Namjoon makes sure that he checks all of his potential injuries— as well as preexisting ones that would definitely need some tending. His jaw where he was kicked would be swollen and bruised and discoloured if his body had been more organic. For now it was just uncomfortable, and a little lumpy. Would they allow him to access the Medical Bay? Maybe even if it wasn’t everything he would need, it would still be enough to at least wrap up his arm properly again because the bionic skin around his ribs, and damaged arm, was starting to flake. They had after all, given him the medication before— he’s still not sure what they were for, but he’s not noticed anything adverse or negative. But just because something didn’t react now didn’t mean it wouldn’t later.

The shower water runs white on the glossy floors for the first few minutes and Namjoon wonders just how much Grisial crystal dust actually got on him.

Clean and changed out, Namjoon stands awkwardly in his room. He’s not sure how to proceed. And at this moment in time, he’s not sure if he wants to put on the Comm Device either. He paces around the room a few times before slumping down on the bed.

He tries to organize his thoughts.

The GI had definitely come and attacked them.

Or did they?

With the Omhlophe so close, had the GI actually come to try and protect Jimin? And it all turned wrong? But it didn’t make sense because they definitely tried to kill Yoongi. But the other Yoongi hadn’t tried to explicitly target the others— simply attempting to take Jimin.

Namjoon looks around the room, evidently prepared with some semblance of care.

Had this all been prepared for Jimin?

He squints at the sorry flowers on the desk, mulling over his thoughts.

The voice on the Comm Device hadn’t really said much but Namjoon can’t help but theorize. Overthink, Sk’jin’s voice offers him primly.

The GI who had been there.

That wasn’t a coincidence that they were all Beings that both Jimin and Yoongi would recognize. There was a purposeful intention with who was sent out.
'Nineti is one of my Guards. I lost him in Megibiya- he never returned from the rain. And that is Amad’la, Yoongi’s captain. The tall one is Amic, Yoongi’s best friend. And the other is the Megibiya Wenedi Yyna.'

When those couriers had come in, they had no intention of attacking. Even when Sk’jin had been completely unguarded, completely defenseless, exposed – even Hoseok, who was outside. The only reason what happened when it happened was Jungkook’s reaction. It was only after that that the GI had attacked.

Was it in self defense? But that didn’t make sense?

But then again, the GI did not plan, did not think, the same way sentient Beings did.

Their attempt at taking Jimin back didn’t stop them from stabbing him, even though the blade had avoided every single vital organ.

It didn’t make sense- Namjoon remembers vividly the strange white noise filling his mind- strange visual sights embedded in numbers and processing that was definitely some form of computing through the strange connection he had shared with Jimin when both Yoongi’s were fighting each other. Was that what Jimin saw in the other Yoongi?

Was that the GI’s mindset?

Reading minds, was an obviously incredibly dumb saying because thoughts did not manifest into words that appeared in the mind just like that, as though it were some book or screen. Thoughts manifested differently- images, emotions, smells, senses – but what Namjoon had seen briefly- that had all been a simple form of binary that looked a lot like the processing core within Androids and their cores.

Yoongi had told them, a while back, that he had been administered with the Android Core, allowing him to somehow be aware.

How many of the GI were aware? Or trying to be aware? From what he read in the reports, the GI had succumbed to a strange state of comatose or had completely died out once their existence had been exposed. The Yishengs trying to get rid of evidence. But he knew that some had survived- that they were scattered- lost.

‘Remember- remember I said. I said that Yoongi was not supposed to be here.’

Jimin had been on the verge of understanding something.

‘It’s- it’s because I was not supposed to be here, I am the Fate of Menigišiti, that’s how they did it, that’s why the Red Evil came to Megibiya- they wanted me. They’re all tied to me.’

Was this some strange battle, between the Omhlophe and the GI, to somehow get Jimin?

Namjoon sits up slowly.

He wishes he could make sure, that the others were all right. Wishes he could see for himself- instead of being told so by some random voice.

He pockets the Comm Device and stands up. He takes his clothes, bundled up, and goes to look for some sort of cleaning room.

He comes across a sort of alcove, outfitted with several washers. He also comes across a spectacularly bloody and naked GI who was clearly there to do his laundry. Namjoon pauses, not sure if he should continue forward. But the GI just looks at him, before opening one of the washers for him.

‘Uh- um, thanks,’ Namjoon manages to get out.

He looks at the GI as surreptitiously as he can.

He has bite marks on him, the side of his leg has a whole chunk of flesh missing, probably down to the bone- but it’s been covered with some sort of compressed sealed tissue-plast.

He’s also missing a few fingers and an ear, and unnervingly, an eye as well. Not to mention what are clearly nails, raking and tearing off chunks of skin and tissue, even through the GI uniform that no amount of washing was going to clean, Namjoon is sure.

Namjoon is terrified at the idea of the GI fighting someone who was clearly very very wild. Did this GI go against some sort of wild creature? He seemed to have barely escaped with his life.

The GI puts his dirty laundry away and simply walks away- more like limps, before disappearing into a room, leaving behind bloody footprints.

As Namjoon finishes up, making sure his adjustments were suited for his clothes, a few CleanBots arrive, cleaning and removing the bloody footprints.

Namjoon makes his way to the lower level.

Maybe he could…explore? Namjoon grimaces at himself. He needed to get to the Medical Bay at least, check to see if there was anything he could use. However, downstairs, he comes across an unnerving and rather comic sight.

The GI were scattered around the Lobby that connected the Medical Bays, as well as a small community kitchen of sorts, and a lounging area.

They’re all placed at random- almost like statues in a garden, or a clothing store. They’re all engaged in some form of activity. Namjoon counts around 9 of them, a few reading in one corner, some staring blankly at a screen with some sort of media entertainment playing on it, and the others are at the kitchen area.

No one pays him any attention and so Namjoon slips into one of the Medical Bays, hoping none of them will pop up to scare the shit out of him again.

His back to a wall, Namjoon looks around the Medical Bay and finds a few items here and there he could use. None of the items in the Medical Bay were specifically tailored or customized- they were at best, basic, but Namjoon can combine a few of what he’s found to put together something that could help him.

When he steps out, the GI are where he left them.

He eyes the fridge in the small kitchen and gingerly makes his way there. He feels very large, very loud, and very clumsy in this specific setting.

In the kitchen, there are 4 of the GI sitting around a table, plates in front of them, with cups and cutlery. Their helmets are off, and two of them are identical, Namjoon notes. He’s going to walk past them, straight for the fridge to get some ionized water which he’s sure should be stocked because no known living Being couldn’t survive without water.
‘This is delicious.’ One of them states.

There’s a long silence that follows and Namjoon sort of freezes. Were the GI actually…holding a conversation with each other? Out of their own free will?

‘It is.’

Namjoon wants to palm his face.

‘Captain Namjoon, would you like to join us.’

Or maybe they were setting up to invite him to eat. He does notice that there are 5 chairs, 4 of which are occupied.

‘I uh- don’t eat,’ Namjoon gets out weakly, grabbing a nice cold bottle.

He’s starting to get a little used to the blank stares but it’s wholly unnerving.

‘I am sorry.’

After 3 seconds someone else says, ‘We have no manners.’

Namjoon wants to knock himself out.

‘Our food is not good,’ one declares. ‘The precooked food ran out.’

Namjoon wishes he could give an appropriate response to this situation. Instead he just closes the fridge.

‘Because you are a fatso.’

Namjoon gawks, looking around the GI gathered at the table.

‘That is an insensitive statement, masked as a joke, which is humorous only to the jokester, because most Beings like to feel superior, be it mentally or physically, over their perceived peers.’

There’s a long pause.

‘That is a trash book,’ is the monotonous response.

‘Am I your perceived peer.’

‘Yes.’

‘Then maybe, I am indeed a fatso.’

‘Would you care for a drink?’ one of the two identical GI asks him.

Namjoon would like to leave. He’s also awkwardly holding several items in one good arm and one bad arm. He doesn’t know what to do.

‘It was precooked- it is delicious.’

‘Sure,’ Namjoon sits down, putting down all of his items on the table carefully. The silence is only punctuated by the sound of whatever media was playing on the screen in the lounge, and Namjoon placing his stuff down.

Their food is a strange looking lump on their plates. Barely touched. No one says anything, just looking at Namjoon. He feels like they’re expecting him to say something.

‘So uh- you all tried cooking?’ Namjoon tries.

‘Database does not export cooking skills,’ they all reply in unison, startling Namjoon.

‘Right- right, uh, yeah,’ Namjoon coughs out, fiddling with some of the antibiotic bottles had with him.

‘This is a good drink,’ the one closest to him states, taking a jug from the center of the table, and taking the single empty cup (again, how convenient), and pouring out the contents.

It smells nice- fragrant and fresh.

‘It’s not poisoned is it?’ Namjoon jokes.

He’s met with blank stares.

‘That is a good joke.’ Is the delayed reply he gets.

‘Very funny.’

Namjoon is writhing on the inside.

He takes a sip of the drink and he has a feeling he’s being closely watched.

‘It’s really good!’ he says a bit too enthusiastically. And yeah it was a good drink, but it didn’t warrant that much enthusiasm.

For a moment, Namjoon really looks around the table.

Had they…set this all up…with the lumpy food, to create a sense of…normalcy? For him?

Because as far as Namjoon can tell, the GI over at the lounge have not turned a single page in their books. The media that’s playing is on its 4th repeat since Namjoon has sat down. And the food on the plates, other than that one single jug and cup, look like things taken out and pushed together into a bowl, and then divided. Namjoon notes that there is some raw meat poking out in some places.

Sk’jin would be crying right now if he were here.

‘So uh- what do you normally eat?’ Namjoon tries, because okay that might be an interesting topic because what did Yoongi eat before? He didn’t seem picky, eating any and everything Sk’jin, and sometimes, Hoseok made.

‘For some sols, precooked,’ they reply.

Sure there was plenty of precooked food available to find in Flotsams but the drink poured out for him doesn’t seem like the type you could buy at Flotsams. Not that Namjoon would be an expert but he’s heard Sk’jin complaining about precooked Flotsam food far too much.

‘But we finished our stock. Not enough.’
‘Yes. Miscalculation.’

Namjoon nods slowly.

‘Do not worry.’ One of them says, and with a delayed motion, raises one hand in a thumb’s up.

Namjoon politely excuses himself, armed with his items, before pretty much running back to his assigned room.

He clearly needed a nap.

And so he does. But Namjoon naps fitfully- he’s not prone to dreams or nightmares. He was definitely having some, but when he wakes up, panting from whatever nightmare he was having, he can’t remember what it is.

It had now been a whole 12 hours since Grisial and Namjoon is- well, he’s still very much agitated.

Downing another bottle of ionized water, Namjoon steps out, his mind set on the Bridge and finding one of the GI he recognizes, and try to get them to talk.

But he’s distracted by the slumped GI near the washers.

Concerned and unnerved, Namjoon approaches the GI.

It’s the same one from before. His injuries are sealed, though he appeared weak and verging on passing out. His missing eye is patched up, and the sealed compressed tissue-plast on his leg is leaking thin looking pinkish blood.

Namjoon acts on instinct when the GI slips on the pinkish blood around his feet, and quickly goes to support him.

‘Woah- woah okay uh-’ Namjoon helps him stand up right- his missing arm creating problems.

‘Okay- I’ll uh, let’s get you to your room? I uh- I’ll go get help?’

He can’t carry this GI up, what with one functioning arm. Also he’s not sure if physically carrying this Being around would be very good. He looks around the hallway, trying to see if there’s a camera around. He calls down the hallway, ‘Hey! One of- uh, he’s uh, injured! He needs medical help!’

The GI’s room door is closed but Namjoon follows the still fresh patches of pinkish blood smudged on the floors. Namjoon taps on the door, and it opens to reveal a dimly lit room, completely different from the one assigned to him.

There’s a lone single narrow bed- no blankets, no mattress. There’s some smudged blood down the side of the bed. The floors are very clean- a CleanBot rolling under the long bench to the side, as though just waiting for this GI to bleed out more. Would it completely absorb and clean up the GI if he died? Would the others even bother to check in on him? They certainly didn’t seem to care that this GI was practically eaten alive.

Namjoon carefully puts the GI down- this was weird. So weird.

‘Uh-‘ Namjoon helps him lay back down on the bed.

‘Laundry.’
'What?'

'Laundry.'

Namjoon sort of gapes for a moment before saying, ‘Okay I uh, I’ll see to your laundry- don’t worry about it.’

The GI nods once, making his eyes roll back with the effort before saying in a slurred monotonous manner, ‘Thank you.’

The lighting in the room dims and the GI lays still.

For one panicked second, Namjoon wonders if he’s found himself in a room with no surveillance and a dead GI but he notices that he’s still breathing, and that it was at a steady pace. The bed below him starts to glow instead and- was this a sort of Medical Bed?

Namjoon touches it lightly- it’s a little warm, there’s a slight vibration in the air around it. Namjoon’s never seen anything like this before.

He steps out into a clean hallway and towards the washers. He picks out the GI’s clothes, dried and very tattered, and takes it back. He tries to be as quiet as he can with one arm, folding the GI suit in a somewhat acceptable lump and places it on the bench. He also finally notices the helmet, a now somewhat iconic shape in his mind’s eye, resting on the bench.

Yoongi had lost his in Ynqaba, after Jimin fell with the slaver-ship. But according to what Jimin had reported, it was as though the entire uniform, helmet, and general existence of the GI wasn’t exactly unknown there.

It’s still covered in blood, and Namjoon is tempted to pick it up, and examine it. But something tells him that wouldn’t exactly be a welcome attempt.

He steps back out again and gets his own laundry. He should have expected the sudden appearance of Amad’la before him, arm(s) filled with his dried clothes.

‘Fuck- yes, hi, yes,’ Namjoon curses, looking down at the GI. ‘By the way uh you have an injured uh- Being, inside there- I’m not sure if he’ll be all right-’

‘Captain Namjoon, we are headed for Lowet and will be arriving there in 3 days-‘

‘We’re going where?!’ Namjoon demands, ‘And in 3 days-?!’

It had taken them about a week to get away from Ynqaba to Grisial- there was no way they were making 3 Standard days to Lowet, Ynqaba’s next-door planet.

‘Please take this time to rest, we will gather what you need. Please let us know if you are lacking in anything.’

Her speech is almost similar to how androids in the service industry would sound- except it lacked any form of welcome or brightness.

‘Oh yeah- yeah, sure, that’s uh, I’ll keep that in mind,’ Namjoon nods, still clutching his clothes to his chest.

Amad’la turns to walk away, her footsteps making absolutely no sound.

‘Wait!’ Namjoon hurriedly calls.
Amad’la turns swiftly.

‘I uh- I want to know, to see, if my crew are all right- I need to make sure.’

Amad’la just looks at him blankly for 7 whole seconds before she nods. Then she turns and walks again, leaving Namjoon slightly winded.

Then she abruptly stops and turning again says, ‘Please follow me Captain Namjoon.’

Namjoon quickly follows, just a step or two behind her.

‘He’ll be all right? The uh, injured GI?’

‘Yes.’

Namjoon is not at all reassured.

They go upwards to the Bridge again, and everyone is still there as Namjoon left them, helmets on, bodies unmoving. Amad’la guides him to the Navigation Table manned by two other GI who immediately step back one Amad’la and Namjoon approach.

Amad’la says nothing for a long while and Namjoon’s not expecting anything, just waiting for some information when she says, ‘This is a nice evening.’

Namjoon takes a moment to realize she’s addressing him.

‘Uh- yeah? I uh-‘ he looks around wildly, ‘I guess it is, in Standard Time.’

‘In Šerdesas, you will be able to see the Nvan constellation center of the sky.’

‘Uh- yeah.’

‘It is beautiful. But the story is a gruesome one.’

Yes, Namjoon is aware but he has no idea where this is heading.

‘Once upon a time,’ Amad’la begins flatly, ‘A vast interstellar asteroid fell through the sky, crashing down into a lone planet, bringing with it many strange and alien life-forms. And they mutated terribly- horrid worms and plagues – the Beings of the planet fell to it and were consumed as though by a flame from within. Until a great mind came forth and banished the alien life-form with water. What an excellent story is it not. Wonderful; it showcases the importance of staying hydrated.’ She then picks up (from where????) a bottle of ionized water and hands it to Namjoon. ‘Beware, the horrid worms.’

Namjoon loses it.

There are literal tears in his eyes as he laughs, leaning on the Navigation Table for support. Amad’la has no expression on her face but Namjoon wonders if this was meant to be some sort of ice-breaker, or some sort of attempt in making him feel better.

It takes him about 5 minutes to really get himself together and finally focus again.

Amad’la is clearly waiting for him to get a hold of himself and once he stands straight, she taps along the Navigation Table and with no explanation, pulls up a projection of a footage.

It’s been taken from afar, the quality just a little compromised but Namjoon can make out the Beings in it. He notes Amme’s tall form, red stark against the white of the Grisial asteroid. And walking behind her are the others. None of them look visibly injured. They look disturbed, though— that much is clear. They’re hesitating, talking amongst each other. There’s no audio of course, but they seem to be holding some sort of debate. Whatever it was, it’s resolved and they follow Amme to her ship, lead first by Jimin and Taeh’yung, followed by the other 4 a little later.

Namjoon watches, with both relief (for their overall good health), and trepidation, as they enter Amme’s ship. The ship takes off and immediately sets out to warp.

‘What about the Omhlophe? Those white-robed Beings?’ Namjoon asks.

‘Their mothership was destroyed by the Zhak’gri Taeh’yung,’ Amad’la reports at once, ‘We do not know what happened to those within.’

That’s—…worrisome…? Namjoon nods hesitantly to that information.

‘The smaller ships were able to escape- they have taken your ship, the Užkulisai-02.’

‘Fuck-‘ Namjoon curses, ‘Fuck- they—’

Jimin’s system’s technology was inside the Užkulisai, would they have had enough time to remove it? Or would the Omhlophe have taken it?

‘Are they being followed by the Omhlophe?’

‘We cannot tell.’

‘Any idea where the Yisheng ship is headed?’

‘We are tracking them right now- and there appears to be no set direction.’ Amad’la replies.

Namjoon frowns at that.

‘Wait- how did you find us in the first place?’

Amad’la doesn’t reply.

Namjoon wonders if he’s going to get a delayed response but 5 minutes was a stretch, even for a GI.

‘So uh—can I get like a screen or something.’

Amad’la looks at him for an uncomfortably long minute and Namjoon guesses that’s a no but then she says, ‘That’s a good joke.’

Namjoon sighs and walks out of the Bridge. He finds himself walking down, to go check on the injured GI- the hallway is spotless so he can’t tell if the GI’s been out and about. Depositing his laundry in his room (Namjoon realizes he’s carried it all the way up and then then down), he tiptoes to the injured GI’s room, poking his head around the doorway after opening it.

The GI is still there, his chest rising slightly to indicate that he was still very much alive. Sighing quietly, he steps inside, eyeing the GI carefully to check if he was recovering or still somewhat the same.

His injuries, in the short span of time Namjoon had last seen him, has greatly improved. They’re also much clearer. Namjoon spies the bite-wounds. They’re not very large to suggest a large creature mauled this GI. They’re also not elongated or multi-set- the bite size and ratio appeared very…anthropomorphic and that was honestly- unsettling.

Because unless this was one of the Omhlophe, then the only other option left was-‘Fucking Spaces!’ Namjoon curses as the GI opens his eyes, intently looking at him.

‘Oh hey uh-‘

Namjoon’s never been good at this sort of thing. Also his most recent conversations with unwell or recovering Beings has not been the best examples.

‘-you uh, you feeling better?’ Namjoon winces at himself. At this point, who was he to judge the GI for their supposed inability to socialize. He might take as well take a leaf out of their books and just not talk at all.

‘Your laundry is there,’ Namjoon gestures behind him rather pointlessly. ‘It’s uh- clean. I mean, I guess you can’t wear it anymore.’

The GI just looks at him.

‘Well- I’ll leave you be to recover,’ Namjoon awkwardly pats the very naked GI on his least injured and bruised looking arm.

Backing towards the doorway, Namjoon gives a small wave before walking out completely into the empty hallway. Back inside his room, he notices several bottles of ionized water neatly arranged on the desk as well the en suite sink shelf, and inside the closet.

‘Great.’

3 excruciating days later, during which Namjoon witnessed the most terribly staged, attempts at a social gathering in the form of a birthday party (????), a barbecue that nearly set the whole kitchen on fire, an increased desire from all GI Beings to launder their clothes and walk around buck-naked, and very strange story-telling sessions that had abrupt and incomplete endings at best, and never ending conclusions at worst. Amidst all of this, Namjoon is very well hydrated and nearly crazy. It’s with absolute sheer relief that they arrive in Lowet.

Much like Ynqaba, Lowet looks desolate even from the stratosphere. But it’s desolate in a different way. Rather than blackened sand and painful looking mountains, Lowet has many shores, small clusters of land and a few hills, mossy in colour. Some areas were certainly greener- Namjoon had looked up Lowet after they had left Ynqaba, trying to understand more about the whole situation. He knows that about the same had happened in Lowet, war had raged the land, but due to the preexisting conditions of Lowet, had come out better than Ynqaba as the planet had been minimally occupied compared to Ynqaba.

Far below, muddy looking rivers pass through around hills, lined with woods or even a stretch of reed and grass.

Compared to Ynqaba, Lowet was doing quite well.
They land near a village of sorts—low and strong looking stone houses, decorated with dyed cloths and curtains, some of the rock-slate roofs lined with sturdy looking thick squat plants. It actually appeared quite nice, and the air was clean too, unlike Ynqaba with its acidic rain.

Clearly this was some form of fishing community, with the shore right there, boats lining up the dark grey shores.

The breeze from the ocean is almost overwhelming.

Namjoon pauses midway down the Hangar ramp—just strangely overwhelmed by everything around him. The GI step out, looking incredibly out of place yet they moved with familiarity and ease over the lumpy sands Namjoon has nearly tripped on a few times.

Clearly he’s expected to follow the GI as they leave.

He follows after them, leaving the overwhelming shores and towards the village. It’s a longer walk than Namjoon was anticipating and it’s weird walking over soft sandy paths because—...well, it’s been a while, if Namjoon is being honest. There’s short but sturdy looking shrubs, with feathery looking growth on the top, below dark grey-green hanging leaves that were quite glossy that grow around the village. Namjoon notes that there are work-baskets and tools to the side; were these shrubs harvested?

The land around the place isn’t too flat—there are some gentle sloping hills, with similar looking vegetation scattered about. But everything leans in into the flat and wide valley, in the center, the village. Namjoon spots a few of the villagers approaching. They don’t seem threatened, or threatening. In fact they appeared quite friendly and were waving with familiarity at some of the GI.

They wave back though it’s a little delayed.

They appeared somewhat anthropomorphic— not as harsh looking as their neighbouring planet’s species. Their skin is tan, and greatly freckled and spotted. Their hair ranges from washed greys, dusty ash, to very black (on the younger ones) to very light (on the much older ones). They’re all wearing clothes that are dyed a similar purplish colour—Namjoon wonders if they extract the dye from some local plant or sea-creature. They look at Namjoon with some curiosity but that’s it. Some of the smaller younglings wave at him.

Namjoon waves back though it’s a little delayed.

The village is neatly organized, with proper stone houses, and what was clearly a village square, with wells and water spouts. There are more Beings there—locals of the village gathered to collect water or beat their laundry against pumice like slabs set up on the floors.

The villagers are used to the GI, Namjoon realizes.

‘Hey! You guys back? Today’s dinner is at the Dskas’s house! We caught a good load of juru, it’s gonna be a good stew!’

‘Thank you, we will enjoy the juru.’ He hears one of the GI respond, a second late. A few give some slow thumb’s up, and the villager returns it with a wide laughing smile.

Was this where they got their precooked meals from, the ones they had refered to earlier on the ship? Namjoon twists and turns his head about, looking around this village. It’s a nice community—not much of any technology could be seen though there are clear wires that network sparsely around the place, mainly concentrating towards the center of the village where the open square
Namjoon hasn’t seen it, but he guesses there was some sort of hydro-based electricity mill somewhere towards the base of the hills, or possibly even redirected ocean water.

He follows the GI towards a stone hut no different from the others.

They all enter the stone hut, steps lowering to a slightly lower level. For a brief moment Namjoon is concerned about the architecture, if they were this close to the shoreline, would having houses under the shore-level prove dangerous if they had high tides? But judging by how old the stone houses looked, Namjoon guesses he’s not one to teach the natives of a land how to build their houses.

The wind picks up- gentle and soothing. It was warm- Namjoon wonders if they were in the summer-cycle for Lowet, or maybe even autumn judging by the plants.

Someone from the closest stone hut yells loudly- calling for someone from a window. They get a response in the form of a question- they’re not speaking Standard, so Namjoon doesn’t know what they’re saying. Someone walks past with a woven water-tight basket, hoisted over their shoulders on a long pole. One of the elderly is taking a slow walk, a walking stick in hand.

Talking voices approach him and Namjoon looks around- eyes widening as a few older younglings, carrying empty woven baskets, dressed in that similar purple hued clothing, are chatting amongst themselves, clearly making some jokes. There are 3 of the natives, and a Being who is clearly from Man’ibv, their skin bearing striking similarities to the Vitka’v, the flowers that bloomed only on their moon, and the flower that was their namesake in the Pompen Arena. And the other- the other is a Khol’isa.

Her hair is long, silvery pink strands tied away twisting in an experimental style around her horns. It’s clearly not secure, judging by how her hair falls around randomly in weird chunks. She appeared young- not the way K’mara or Sk’jin looked “young”- but genuinely like a youngling not much younger than Jungkook.

They don’t take much notice of Namjoon, merrily walking and talking, baskets swinging.

Of course.

This made sense. It made sense.

Jungkook had a whole family, siblings and a mother who were like him. There was a whole abandoned Yisheng ship in Ynqaba- and with what they knew from their research, clearly many of the eggs were left here in Lowet too.

But how and why were the GI here? Clearly living so casually in this village, where the villagers regarded them with complete normalcy. How did this come about? Were none of the GI in Šerdesas?

Hesitant for a moment, Namjoon begins to walk.

He’s not sure where he’s going, but he just…-he just needed to see. To just really take in everything for himself.

The cobbled paths around the village are clean and kept well. The houses neat, and well maintained. The local villagers sometimes walk past, and they don’t really seem too surprised to see Namjoon and his absolutely wretched appearance of one arm, exposed eye socket. Though a few younglings stare at his eye with some form of awe that makes Namjoon uncomfortable and he hastens his steps.

He comes towards the edge of the village, close to the edge beyond which reed-like plants grew. Namjoon doesn’t recognize the species of plant but it appeared as though some form of grain grew on them. The grain still appeared green, not ready for harvest just yet. And further past the fields is a large cleared area, and standing in it are a small group of the GI, and a few of the locals in the back.

Namjoon steps through the field, the long narrow leaves prick through his clothes. Not sure why, he approaches the group. Once he reaches the edge, he stops there, looking around. The clearing was not empty as Namjoon had thought, but riddled at random with small mounds here and there. This was a burial site.

The sun was close to setting, casting long shadows of the GI, the villagers, and the fresh mounds just recently dug up.

Namjoon watches as the GI lower the last of the body bags he had seen before in the Hangar.

They raise their hands to the air, and then lower their closed fists to their chest, releasing it close and safe.

A Yisheng burial.

The locals seemed to have gathered to attend the funeral as well. They do the same, before bowing respectfully in their own cultural manner. They help the GI fill the grave, creating a domed mound on top.

A few of the villagers in the back carry with them some sort of plant in bunches. They’re greyish blue in colour, with faint white dots that were probably some bud, and place them over the mounds after the mounds are complete.

Namjoon looks around at the clearing.

He counts over 50 before it becomes nearly impossible. A few had those plants laid over the mounds, just a little dry, as though it hadn’t been too long since they were placed there.

Namjoon walks back, taking the same path to go back to the stone hut the GI had vanished into. The sun had set now, the pale sky above a gentle watery-blue, darkening slowly. The stone houses are faintly lit, and as Namjoon expected, a soft halo of light coming from the center of the village. Some of the houses have a gentle smoke rising from the side of their roofs and openings.

The stone huts are well designed in the inside- smooth clay lined the tunnel like halls and rooms and alcoves, textured with smooth dark pebbles on the walls and larger slabs on the floors. During the day, the place would be well lit, with many small openings everywhere, allowing light to stream through from above. But now instead there are lamps placed inside strategic cubby holes all along the walls, illuminating his path.

It’s bigger than he expected. The initial entranceway simply led deeper underground, expanding into quite a network of hallways and doorways. Namjoon doesn’t spot any of the GI. Instead he follows his nose, sniffing the air and following the smell of something being cooked, the faint smell of smoke from a fire.

Inside, Namjoon guesses is one of the GI though he’s not in uniform. He’s very tall, large built that’s almost too much for this kitchen space. If Namjoon’s not mistaken, he’s the same species as Yyna, the GI Jimin had recognized, making him a native from Megibīya.

There are used dishes in a low stone sink to the side, the table has been set out for 2. More of that drink Namjoon had been served from the ship is there as well. The kitchen is well lit with lamps, embedded into the stone work.

‘Thought you got lost.’

The small scream Namjoon lets out is not one he’s proud of and he’s extremely grateful that no one (namely Sk’jin) was there to hear it. If he had a normal functioning heart, it would be pounding.

Because the Megibīyan turns a little to address him directly, his tone incredibly…normal? Not at all GI-like or awkward.

‘Almost sent out a search part for you.’

‘Uh-‘ Namjoon wheezes.

Great. 3 days with the GI and he too was now reduced to a socially awkward mess.

‘Come, let’s dine,’ the Megibīyan says, gesturing to the table and chair, clearly set out for the two of them.

‘Oh-‘ Namjoon recognizes his voice now that he’s gotten over the shock. ‘I spoke to you.’

‘You did,’ he replies, back still turned. He was doing something over at the low counter, but Namjoon can’t quite see what it is. ‘And I said I would explain everything once you got here.’

And just like that- every single emotion he was feeling, previously overwhelmed by the sheer oddness of living with the GI for 3 straight days, bursts out.

‘What the fuck were you thinking, sending the GI out like that, nearly killing us all!’ Namjoon seethes, stepping closer, ‘Yoongi- Yoongi nearly died- I’m not even sure if any of them are all right- I don’t know if they’ve been taken by Amme, and whether or not I will see them again! Sk’jin was unwell- we were just getting him some form of help- and you- those GI; *what were you even trying to do-?’

‘-Captain Namjoon, I will answer all your questions if you will allow me to explain everything to you, from the beginning,’ the Megibīyan says, finally turning around, and in his hands mugs of some sort of drink. He hands him one of the mugs. ‘Please sit.’

Namjoon neither takes the mug nor does he sit.

‘I would have come myself, had it not been for my health – maybe all of this would have been avoided and I would be able to explain everything to Jimin himself.’

Namjoon has no issue standing still for ages so he’s not budging. The Megibīyan simply shrugs and with heavy movements, goes to sit down. Though he places Namjoon’s mug down on the table first, before settling on the opposite side.

‘My name is Prat’tna, I am the Megibiyan Wenedi, member of the Great Council under the Yemenifes Ch’niik’eti and the Yelibi Inati of Menigišiti.’ He states, ‘I was with Jimin when everything fell apart.’
‘You- you were there, after receiving that message from Ndica?’ Namjoon frowns.

‘I was there for everything- from the beginning, even if there were things Jimin did not know- that were hidden from him.’

‘What do you mean?’ Namjoon frowns, turning properly to face Prat’tna better. ‘Things that were hidden from him? I thought he was like- I dunno, the leader of Menigišiti or something, alongside his sister?’

‘Jimin and Tsirin were not leaders- neither were those before them,’ Prat’tna states, ‘They are born, as the Fate, and as the Heart- this is what Jimin told you, yes?’

Namjoon nods and adds, ‘The Great Council is supposed to be basically, representatives of the 11 planets in Menigišiti right? Kinda like ambassadors or something.’

‘That is not quite correct,’ the Megibīyan says carefully, ‘Each planet had their own representative ambassadors of course- and each of them would report to the Great Council of course, but Menigišiti did not operate as one unified System, banded together under a belief of the Great Council- the ranks of the Fate and Heart had no operation or function for politics, religion, or economy.’

‘Yeah- Jimin said so- but what do they do if not that? I don’t understand,’ Namjoon frowns.

‘This was how it was,’ Prat’tna says patiently, ‘I have been the Wenedi for many many sols- too old. Seen too much, heard too much- understood too much. When Ndica first approached Menigišiti, I was there. The Wenedi who served before Yyna was also there. This was much before Tsirin or Jimin were born. We turned them away of course- Menigišiti spoke as one, and refused to join with the GLA.’

That much Namjoon knew of course.

‘But change comes, whether or not you like it, whether or not you want it- I’m sure, that the son of Kutsoglera, would surely understand this.’

Namjoon sits down.

‘At first it was nothing. Sometimes I would hear word from the Wenedi, their questioning of the position of the Great Council- this was not unusual- most of Menigišiti knew not who were in the Council-’

‘What? Wait- what do you mean?’ Namjoon interrupts, ‘How can they not know their own ambassadors?’

‘As I said- we held no position of politics, religion, or economics.’ Prat’tna says patiently, ‘We brought forth news, information, dealings, from our home planets before the Great Council, with no bias or prejudice.’

‘-wait-’ Namjoon holds up his hand, ‘-I was thinking about this before, and with Jimin claiming he did not, per se, lead the System with his sister- but,’ Namjoon squints at the Megibīyan, ‘-were you basically like informants, from your own planets, bringing them information?’

‘That would be more accurate, yes,’ Prat’tna says in a low rumbling voice.

‘Then- then what did Tsirin and Jimin do with this information? Surely they had power over-‘
‘-they had power yes,’ Prat’tna nods slowly, ‘And they spoke the truth.’

It clicks.

‘They were like- they were like lie detectors- or like, some sort of method of making sure each planet- each state, country, union, within the System, operated truthfully.’

Prat’tna nods.

‘That’s why Jimin always said he could not lie- that…that he could tell, when he was being lied to.’

Prat’tna nods again, ‘The same goes for Tsirin.’

‘They’re essentially the same then- what’s the difference between the Heart and the Fate then?’

‘Tsirin and Jimin listened in on every decision, every announcement, every development- anything that could effect the System possibly – and they would know when falsehoods were presented- when leaders and those who held power, would attempt something, would plan a method- and they would tell if it came from a truthful and purposeful place, meant to only aid, improve, or develop.’

Prat’tna explains, ‘Tsirin listened, as the Mother, the Heart- she understood every dealing, with the care, gentleness, and love, as a heart would. Jimin listened, as the future- as someone who saw what would happen, as someone who could understand the possibilities, the risks, the fate of what would come to be.’

‘But…but they made no decisions?’

‘No- they simply spoke the truth, and it was decided upon by the people, to choose their truths, their fates,’ Prat’tna explains.

‘That’s a lot of power.’

‘It was. It elicited a fair number of fanatic indulgences-‘

Namjoon snorts, rolling his eyes. This probably elicited something worse than what the Yishengs inspired.

‘-but it was always immediately quelled down by the Heart and the Fate- because they reminded them of what would happen if they were to tread down that path.’

‘What would happen?’

Prat’tna smiles, ‘You see it everywhere Captain Namjoon- do people not change, based on what they choose to worship, what they believe will bring them the most?’

Namjoon nods slowly in response.

‘Well- that’s how it’s always been, in Menigišiti at least,’ Prat’tna sighs out, ‘I’ve not exactly been around for too long to really understand the Known Universe, as you describe it.’

‘How long have you been around?’ Namjoon bites.

‘Just over 3 sols.’

‘How?’
‘In my case, I was woken up by another me,’ Prat’tna explains, ‘Who had been awake for about a sol before me. Probably the same time Yoongi started waking up.’

‘Uh- what about the other you?’ Namjoon asks hesitantly.

‘He died. He’s buried in that field you found earlier.’

‘Uh-‘ Namjoon doesn’t know where to start.

Prat’tna seems to notice and he gives him an amused grin- slightly terrifying in this low light because Megibiyans did not appear to be the most gentle of species; at least visually speaking.

‘Will the others wake up? The same way you did? The same way Yoongi did?’

‘Not always no- not all GI will regain who they once used to be.’

‘Why?’

‘There is no radical difference between what the GI are, and what the Red Evil created- like myself, like Yoongi, like so many of us here. The only thing that separates us really, is how long we were exposed to be tied to Jimin’s fate.’

‘I don’t understand that,’ Namjoon says bluntly, ‘Jimin had said something like that-‘

‘-he said we were all tied to him right? That we were all coming back to him? He’s not wrong- when the Red Evil took Jimin, he essentially died-‘

‘-but he doesn’t have that mark down his back-‘

‘-he was not remade- or cloned, duplicated, the way we were no- that would never work. Jimin was forced out of Menigišiti, his birthplace, where who he is, and everything he is, is fated to belong there- all lives living in Menigišiti, attached to his fate.’

‘So does that mean- does that mean after Jimin woke up, more of the GI also woke up?’

‘No- not the GI, the ones you call eggs- the ones the Omhlophe are after- they started waking up with rapid speed and frequency,’ Prat’tna explains. ‘Why do you think your mission was so randomly thrown together after 4 sols had passed since the Gaia Case?’

Namjoon shrugs.

‘Because Jimin was starting to wake up- starting to be responsive. And as a result, all of the eggs they had taken out of the Red Evil’s ship, started reacting to him too; so they didn’t want-‘

‘-they didn’t want all of those unknown clones, copies- those “unnaturally” created living Beings whose creation and life-force no one could predict; they didn’t want those waking up in Šerdesas. So they sent Jimin away.’ Namjoon completes, ‘Fuck- so it’s true, that the Omhlophe can sense Jimin? That all of you can sense him?’

‘Maybe not so acutely- how would they say it here hm? Gut instinct?’ Prat’tna rubs his jaw, his hands trembling just slightly. ‘I’ll explain this to you chronologically, and maybe you will see the whole picture that way.’

Namjoon leans forward and nods, paying full attention.

‘Before Tsirin and Jimin were born, there had been a sudden rise- sudden, but gradual at the same time, of citizens who questioned and doubted the purpose of the Heart and the Fate,’ Prat’tna explains. ‘This was of course not unusual- you will always have this sort of reaction, it cannot, and should not, be quelled down.’

‘Should not?’

Prat’tna shakes his head, ‘Accountability comes in all forms, Captain Namjoon, and sometimes outlandish accusations and doubts can allow for self-reflection.’

Namjoon raises his eyebrows at that.

‘But this was different- because while most of these accusations normally came from politicians, religious leaders, economists and other forms of leaders, there was a sudden rise in change amongst the citizens. In a way, Megibīya was not effected by such commentary- we were also somehow too far,’ Prat’tna says slowly, ‘However, many of the planets, saw a spike in what we later referred to as the ‘Anti-Fate Movement’- where citizens did not wish to consult with the Great Council, and often sometimes voted against what they would say. This died down- they always did, and we never thought much of it afterwards- during this time, my previous partner, the Wenedi who served with me, had died. To replace him, Yyna was appointed. And some years later, Tsirin, and then Jimin, were born.

They were loved- adored, really- but a lot of this had to do with how the Great Council, the Wenedi, represented them to the rest of Menigišiti.’

‘You had to do some PR stuff then,’ Namjoon ruminates, ‘Change the way the citizens would see the Great Council.’

‘We did – this also was not a new tactic. Jimin was raised to follow this example- as was his sister; they were both trained to behave how we wanted the public to perceive them.’

‘And you’re saying you- and the other Wenedi- you brought them all of the information, the data, the news from all around the System,’ Namjoon scoffs, ‘You were just using them for your own gain.’

‘You’re right,’ Prat’tna sighs, ‘This was not how we saw it-‘

Namjoon lets out a dry laugh, ‘Sure it wasn’t. Seems like no where in the Universe is safe from greed and lust for power I guess.’

‘-and I was one of the problems- contributing to a lifestyle we thought- we believed was the right one because that was what we were lead to believe- by those who came before us, and before them, and much before any of that,’ Prat’tna stops for a moment to cough. His coughs are deep and dry, hollow sounding.

‘Are you all right?’ Namjoon asks hesitantly after Prat’tna’s coughing fit goes on for over a minute.

‘Of course not- I’m dying. Just like Yoongi, just like the Prat’tna who woke up before me. Just like every other who were Awoken.’ Prat’tna rolls his dirty yellow eyes as though Namjoon was being thick on purpose. ‘Tsirin and Jimin were part of the Great Council when things were starting to even out- some of the planets had gone through some internal changes regarding how they ran their policies, agendas; again, this was all normal. And then 7 sols after Jimin’s birth, we were attacked.’

‘But- you’re supposed to be invisible.’
Prat’tna nods, ‘Tsirin was only 8 at the time, and Jimin 7- they were both so young, the Great Council went ahead to check on the attack.’

‘Was this in Megibīya?’

‘No- in Akramana,’ Prat’tna shakes his head, ‘Something hideous- something deadly. Something that saw us. We immediately suspected foul-play. That Ndica, and his Panel, had to do with it. And it’s likely in a sense, that he was definitely involved in some way. Though not how he would have wanted. And it was the same evil that destroyed Megibīya, nearly 120 sols later.’

‘So- so they found you first. You had no dealings with them.’

‘None- and because of this, of course, with pressure from the rest of the System, approval to reach out to the Panel was sent out, only half-understood by Tsirin and Jimin at their age. We met the Panel in Akramana. They had heard of the force we had described to them. But had never witnessed it- they promised to keep watch – and to track them.

Ndica is good with words…he managed to bring the Panel and the Great Council into agreement to meet every decade. I voted against this- but I was ruled out. They returned as promised, bearing snippets of news, sightings- Tsirin and Jimin did not meet with the Panel until some 50 sols later–’

‘-what? Why?’ Namjoon demands.

‘We did not want to reveal our Heart or Fate to anyone beyond our System,’ Prat’tna says carefully- ‘We were also kept so safe- so secured, united within our System. I was just barely able to keep this suggestion- only just able to tilt the votes to my side; to simply have these discussions, and then later repeat what was discussed to Tsirin and Jimin.’

‘I’m guessing neither Jimin, and his sister, were pleased with this.’

‘Of course not.’ Prat’tna laughs though it’s more of a cough. ‘They studied the Panel for sols and sols until the next gathering. Jimin had agreed to stay back, under the request of his sister who understood my fears. So Jimin remained hidden for much longer- listening in on everything while Tsirin took over. At first I assumed all was well- maybe I was genuinely just paranoid. But then- the talks started, it started back up again- questions of the Great Council- of Jimin, of Tsirin – the citizens of Menigišiti were fearful; especially after that attack, but were also questioning why we would not leave. Why we could not.’

‘Why did you remain in hiding?’

‘We just always did- for as long as the Great Council existed- for as long as Menigišiti was alive, breathing, her children would remain hidden. That was always how it was- and that was why the Fate and the Heart existed – to keep it that way- a reminder that this was, and will always be, the only way we would survive.’ Prat’tna explains, leaning back and taking a rattling shallow breath.

‘We, the Wenedi, did what we could to find the source of this talk, of this strange unsettling rising wave of sudden bursts of aggression, violence- Tsirin was almost killed once, an assassin sent for her.’

‘What happened?’

‘She forgave him, spoke to him, and became her loyal advisor,’ Prat’tna smiles, breathing out, ‘We did a lot to…to inhibit them, in ways that went against everything they stood for. But so far it is safe to say, that they came out all right.’
Namjoon only allows the silence to stretch for a few seconds before he clears his throat.

‘The day we were alerted, I was returning back from the eastern regions, investigating some silent protest— it was a dead end, I discovered nothing and could report nothing—’

‘-did Jimin and his sister know?’

‘They did— of course they did. But from what they studied in their childhood, in the annals of our history, the writings and records and archives of their predecessors, they understood what was happening as simply a part of a cycle.’ Prat’tna replies immediately, sounding aggravated, ‘Of course they were upset— they wanted happiness, unity— things we taught them to value above all.’

The Megibīyan stops himself, breathing out through his nose slowly before continuing, ‘That day— Jimin volunteered over his sister to go to Megibīya— his sister had more experience dealing with the Panel in Akramana, and Jimin had long been fond of our home planet— he felt it his personal duty to come; and as a whole, they knew that if needed, Jimin was better for an offensive approach over Tsirin’s.

He chose to take his personal guards, the Megibīyan Wenedi, the Be’iji Wenedi, as well as a small team to fly, operate, and manage the ship we would be taking with us. Our plan was to approach Megibīya from the secondary gates— surrounding Menigišiti are gateways, openings controlled and maintained by cells designed to stabilize the natural resonance surrounding Menigišiti. We realized, that the outer cells past Megibīya were tampered with. None of us said it out loud— but the cells designed to keep the resonance stable was only known to a few— taught only to a few. This tampering meant someone was working from within. Yyna suggested that we repair what we could, and if the worst comes, they would be destroyed; destroying them means shutting off any entryway, any possible entrance into Menigišiti. Jimin and his Guards devised a plan that we would divide our units— the ones who stay by the cells at standby, ready to destroy the cells and close off any possible entryway while we went into Megibīya to scout. However, we saw that there was clearly no point the closer we got. Jimin ordered the cells to be destroyed, and shut off every possible gateway into Menigišiti— at least from the outside.

Megibīya was ruined— and it appeared to have been so, for much longer than what we could have possibly imagined. I couldn’t understand why or how we had not known— when we crashed…Yyna told me that we had to speak with Jimin— to tell him of what was possibly happening.’

‘What did she think was happening?’

‘That someone from Menigišiti, was attempting to expose us all, by using Ndica and his desire to exploit us.’

‘So you knew— you knew what he wanted to do.’

‘Not to the extent of what we know now,’ Prat’na shakes his head. ‘But I—…I never trusted him. Never trusted any of them in the Panel— the GIU Trifecta K’mara, or the younger Yishengs who were with him— was it some taught-instinct in me to regard outsiders as a threat clouding my judgment, or had I just known— because what they were doing, I realized, was what we— the Wenedi, were doing as well.’

‘Like looking in a mirror, no doubt,’ Namjoon comments wryly though his mind is whirling.

‘We crashed— into the Maw, and it took us nearly 3 weeks to reach the Crescent; everything had changed. The air, the sky, the soil— everything was changed and it did not feel like my home. Almost everyday we lost someone— and then we saw them— the Red Evil.'
And they stalked us- like a predator would its prey they hunted us, one by one. They took me the same time as 3 others- but they converged mostly on Jimin- and I have never seen him react like that- I have never seen him that angry, or that afraid. He Spoke to them- he used to voice of command, and of power, but it had no effect on them- and I was taken.

My first memory, if you can call it that, was to a small dark room, and a mission in mind. These memories, I realized later, were just recollections of actions I witnessed because I was the creator of those actions- however, what I did, where I went, what was asked of me; all of this only started to establish themselves upon me as actions taken by my hand, after I met myself.'

‘The you that woke before that?’

‘I was given an Android chip, it was attached to my Helmet, and since then, I started awakening. Slowly- but helped and aided by myself- by our shared memories, visions, and what the previous me, and before that, and so much many more before that, discovered and realized.’

‘Yoongi awoke because of that too,’ Namjoon frowns, ‘Who did that? Introducing the Android core?’

‘It was from Tlun’hl'a- is what I came to understand. Whoever administered the core to Yoongi knew what they were doing- though Yoongi…-his awakening wasn’t planned. After Tlun’hl’a discovered that some of us were able to relive our lives, they stopped more attempts.’

‘Why?’

‘Because it meant that they failed,’ Prat’tna grimaces at Namjoon as though he was being purposefully obtuse. ‘Their goal was to recreate the whole of Life, bound and tied to one motion of living-‘

‘-yes I know what the Yishengs wanted to do,’ Namjoon quickly cuts in.

‘This then became a method of ruling us out- in Axudar they call us the Regurgitated.’

Namjoon can’t help but make a face.

‘It’s fitting,’ Prat’tna gives him a lopsided smile, ‘It’s because for us, for the Prat’tna before me, for Yoongi, for every single one of us who was captured there in Megibîya, for the many others who were created by Ndica and Tlun’hl’a; we are the defects.’

‘How are you defected? What makes you defected?’

‘Ultimately what the Red Evil wanted to create, and what the Yishengs wanted to create was the same thing- a whole Universe of Beings living and controlled to a standard of what they thought meant living a real, full life, no sorrow, no loss, no war, no death- just existence.’ Prat'tna leans back slowly, grunting a little, ‘Both the Red Evil and the Yishengs recreated us, stripped us from who we used to be, remodeled us, almost the same way- it’s why we have that mark down our backs. And the longer we were created, the longer we stayed in their ships, the more we were stripped and reborn.’

‘But the ones in Megibîya- you were not there for long correct?’ Namjoon thinks hard.

‘We were not,’ Prat’tna shakes his head. ‘But after some time, you are lost- just simply gone; into an endless white realm, and then it sinks- it sinks to nothingness.’

Namjoon is aware of multiple religions and beliefs and cultures and their respective beliefs on what came after death. Yet somehow, fear of the unknown, an entry into nothingness, signifying that nothing remained after everything in Life, was regarded with fear, and denied because non-existence seemed to bring the most fear in all Beings.

Yet Prat’tna seems to speak of this nothingness with reverence.

‘And what about those that stayed long in those ships? How would they know?’

‘The Red Evil seemed to be able to time them in their own fashion- their own technology. The tanks they were held in would open at the right time. But with the Yishengs,’ Prat’tna scratches at the side of his jaw, ‘Let’s say there was a lot of trial and error until Ndica and his Yishengs found us in Megibīya.’

‘Woah-’ Namjoon holds up his hand, ‘Ndica found you? In Megibīya? How?’

‘Obviously the emergency meeting set up in Akramana was simply a trick- what they wanted, who they wanted, was in Megibīya.’

‘They wanted Jimin- so that they could…tie his Fate, to the uh, eggs they created?’

Prat’tna nods, his lips pulling to a grimace, ‘But the Red Evil were there before they could get there- were long in Megibīya before they got there. It was not planned of course- the Red Evil left, what they needed was with them. However, many of what they created, they left behind; almost as a distraction. And then Amme saved us-‘

Namjoon is reeling, unable to speak at this information given to him.

‘-she saved many of us from a terrible fate Ndica and Tlun’hla had for us. She hid us under the Yisheng Headquarters with the rest of the GI- and yes,’ Prat’tna nods at him, ‘Amme worked for Ndica and Tlun’hla for quite a while. She was once Ndica’s apprentice. However, she…she had a change of heart- or mind, something,’ Prat’tna snorts again, ‘And Ndica banished her. I was sent to kill her. Well, one of me was sent to kill her.’

‘That’s-…that’s how you know. She awoke you- using the techniques she heard of from Ndica and Tlun’hla- using the Android chip,’ Namjoon says breathlessly.

Prat’tna nods, ‘I stayed in exile with her for many sols, I would return, sneak us out one by one- slowly- of course, not all of us could survive the harsh implant of the core. I died more than once- as did Yyna- even Yoongi. The one with you- he’s the only one in his copy that’s come this far, and that’s after Amme had said she would try to expose him to Jimin; of course this is after the Gaia Case. Since then, we never saw her again. I’ve never personally met her,’ Prat’tna gestures to himself, ‘What I know is simply memory.’

‘She always knew- she knew everything.’ Namjoon hisses out, ‘-wait, does this mean Hoseok knew about this-‘

‘The Ngfy’widan knows nothing- but he used his intuition and called for Amme- a good and wise choice. They will be safe for the meanwhile.’

‘Then why hasn’t Amme-‘

‘-because, the Special Jury is not just Amme, who is utterly compromised in her title and role as a result of her fellow Yisheng- her word has no weight. It would only serve to ruin the chances for everyone’s survival.’
‘Everyone- as in…’

‘As in yours, your team, all of the remaining GI, the eggs, the Artoo’ii, the New Borns, the Regurgitated- so many names for us.’ Prat’tna lists off the names, ‘Amme wants to save us, to take us somewhere, where the GLA Court cannot touch us, where we can live, without fear, without worry-’

‘The Special Jury wanted us to find a way, using Jimin, to open Menigišiti, so that we could take all of…all of you, and…basically contain all of you.’ Namjoon frowns, his mind reeling, ‘Is this because the GLA Court believe that you pose a threat?’

‘The GI are not helping us with our image control.’

‘No shit.’

Prat’tna throws his head back laughing.

‘I saw a Khol’isa out there- and another, I mean- not to mention Jungkook, who lived and was raised in, well, an environment as normal as possible considering Ynqaba- there’s so many of you just out there. Surely there’s no way the GLA Court could hope to round them all up, or in the worst case scenario, have them all killed-’

‘Then what do you think the Omhlophe are here for?’

‘What did you say?’

‘The Omhlophe- lost children of the Red Evil, used by the GLA Court to track down all of the lost eggs, and destroy them,’ Prat’tna looks at him like he’s being dumb again, ‘Why do you think they’re wandering about so freely?’

‘But- that doesn’t make sense the Omhlophe worked for the Red Evil, were created by them-’

‘The Omhlophe aren’t much different from the GI- created by the Red Evil to do their bidding- but they have more…more of themselves- in a strange sense, they’re almost childish, wild- with no sense of morality. Just doing what they were told-’ Prat’tna stops, sighing quietly. ‘So when the Red Evil were destroyed, they were suddenly found.’

‘What do you mean?’

‘And the GLA, made a collective decision, with the help of the Yisheng who were more than willing to comply, now that they had such a reputation to rebuild within the GLA, to calm the Omhlophe enough, to…come to a bargain.’

‘What bargain.’

‘That the Omhlophe would find the lost or hidden eggs- even the ones that the Yishengs lost and hid in countless planets and systems, and then destroy them,’ Prat’tna explains, ‘And in return, they would be allowed to be lost again.’

‘How do you know this?’

‘I kidnapped an Omhlophe?’ Prat’tna shrugs, ‘The response I got was not a verbal one- so I-’ Prat’tna gestures with his hand.

‘What’s-…what’s that I don’t get it-’
Prat’tna grunts with annoyance, ‘You know- that thing,’ he puts a hand over his head and then on Namjoon’s. To Namjoon’s absolute disquiet, Prat’tna’s hand could completely wrap over his head.

And okay, like this, Namjoon can guess enough.

‘Wait- I thought this was- this was just a thing Jimin and Yoongi could do-‘

But images from the ship, where Jimin’s mind shared with his own, flashes back in his memory.

‘-so that’s how I was able to understand much of what the Omhlophe were trying to do.’ Prat’tna continues to explain. ‘The Omhlophe also used other Beings- to retrieve their eggs from certain places-‘

‘Like in Ynqaba- we met, we met a pirate of sorts-‘

‘-they’re not pirates- the ones they hired in Ynqaba, and here in Lowet- they’re not pirates. Just unfortunate Beings, too poor, too desperate- the Omhlophe would promise medicine, cures, help. In exchange for the eggs.’

‘Here in Lowet too?’

‘Not for a while though.’

‘You’re protecting Lowet.’

‘We’re doing what we can- all around the Known Universe but we’re…there’s not a lot of us, as you can tell. And the past sol or so- we’ve started feeling…skittish I guess.’

‘Because of Jimin.’

Prat’tna nods.

‘Because…’

‘They’ve all come back to me.’

‘Because we are now found,’ Prat’tna smiles, relief in his tired and sickly features.

‘Where else- where else have you found the eggs?’ Namjoon asks carefully, hoping his face is a mask of neutrality. But he evidently fails.

‘When you escaped Ynqaba, the Omhlophe ship that had come after you was taken down by us. We were able to convince the Ynaqabans to fight them as well- the battle you had come across between us was because Ynqaba believed we were robbing them. We were able to convince them that it was the Omhlophe.’ Prat’tna informs him, ‘When we entered the ships we were able to retrieve the Eggs, and,’ Prat’tna gives him a small smile (or big, Namjoon can’t really tell with Megibīyan features) and says, ‘We found several Eggs from Kutsoglera.’

Namjoon’s can’t find it in himself to speak just yet.

‘They’re safe. Asleep. For a few more sols.’ Prat’tna tells him reassuringly. ‘You can go see them if you want. They’re safely hidden in the shoreline.’

Clearing his throat, more out of an act of normal social decorum than anything else, Namjoon continues, ‘You, as in the GI, you’ve been to Ynqaba?’
‘We have – to trade and deal for the Eggs from the Collectors there.’

‘That’s how they recognized the uniform,’ Namjoon says quietly to himself before asking, ‘How many of the GI are here? Or well, under your control?’

‘None of them are under my control- I simply guide,’ Prat’tna explains, ‘I think you’ll know this from experience but the GI are very chaotic despite looking so dormant.’

Namjoon rolls his eyes hard.

‘And in the past sol, they’ve become much more…reckless, much more…well, desperate I guess.’

‘To be found?’

Prat’tna nods, ‘What happened in Grisial- I cannot explain it- I cannot begin to explain to you, how the GI, who are not Regurgitated, but who are not like the Artoo’ii either- how they even begin to think. I can assure you that it was not intended for any of them to hurt you, or to bring harm to anyone-‘

‘-Jimin was literally stabbed-‘

‘I’m aware,’ Prat’tna says through gritted teeth, ‘But your Artoo’ii took care of many of us so-’

‘Um what-‘

Prat’tna stares at him, same expression that Namjoon was now getting used to.

‘The Pravasi H’manun youngling took down 6 of the GI sent to retrieve all of you to safety.’

‘Excuse me he was clearly defending himself and the-‘

‘-he strategically took down 6 of the GI, and Dehin, the Being you were clearly so worried about you kept visiting him in the past 3 days, barely survived the attack,’ Prat’tna snaps back. ‘He was also the first one to attack-‘

‘As his Captain I am very pleased that he was able to do so,’ Namjoon practically snarls back, ‘Clearly whatever approach you were attempting was an incredibly stupid one- of course our reaction was expected and you know what? It was justified!’

Prat’tna is panting a little, shaking his head at someone behind Namjoon. Living 3 straight days with no one but the GI has somewhat desensitized Namjoon so he’s not shocked to find 2 dark uniform, helmet-wearing GI right behind him.

‘Did you suffer losses? Yes you did- and I am sorry that it happened, but that doesn’t mean what we did was wrong,’ Namjoon huffs out, ‘You could have talked to us- what even was your plan? To send in GI dressed as maintenance workers and Grisial Crew, and then-‘

‘-the plan,’ Prat’tna glares, ‘Was to send in a few of the GI, and then be close enough to talk- we had already noticed the Omhlophe fast approaching, and I was preoccupied getting ready to deal with them, but they tricked us, coming to approach you head-on instead of where we were lead to believe-‘

‘-sure, and then what about Yoongi? That other Yoongi tried to literally kill him-‘

‘-he was GI,’ Prat’tna snaps, ‘The GI have their mission in mind- which was to bring back Jimin safely, and that mission’s success was thwarted by many threats and for the GI, for their logic, they believed that Yoongi was the biggest threat!'

‘And stabbing Jimin-‘

‘-was a mistake! Not for Yoongi of course not- he was probably attempting to defuse-‘

Namjoon laughs but there’s no humor in his tone.

‘-you’re not saying you’ve never seen Yoongi- the one with you, do some extraordinarily ridiculous thing, or execute some action in a way that doesn’t make sense to you?’

Namjoon can’t cross his arms so he just makes a fist with one hand over his thigh. Yes- the GI were not known to do things in the most traditional or orthodox manner. Like how Yoongi had stripped down, nearly shot Sk’jin in the head, dismembered Hoseok, and deactivated the Užkulisai, just to tell them they were being spied on.

Namjoon has to be begrudgingly accept it.

‘Fine. But that doesn’t mean you’re allowed to blame me, or my crew, for your losses,’ Namjoon states bluntly.

After Yoongi had “woke up”, it was almost as though he spoke as two different Beings- which makes sense now in a way. Because the previous “Android core” activated GI had some form of awareness, and then the fully “woken up” past-life version slowly regained their consciousness, so to speak. So it added up that this Prat’tna, would argue this with Namjoon.

Clearly, Prat’tna is thinking this too.

‘So yes…’ Prat’tna breathes out before leaning back again, slumping a little, ‘As you can see- the way they think- the way we think- it’s not…acceptable, in many ways.’

Namjoon rolls his eyes again.

‘-which is why, this behavior would make others fear them- want to hunt them.’

Namjoon is still irritated but he nods, gesturing for Prat’tna to continue.

‘So having all of us, return, back to Menigišiti, where we can just remain, safe and found; this is what we want. And this is what, ultimately, the Special Jury want as well.’

‘So that’s it then,’ Namjoon can’t find it in himself to be surprised. It made sense. Of course Amme, and probably K’mara, knew that the Beings created by the Red Evil, and also by the Yishengs themselves, were just living Beings, the same as everyone else. Probably a few in the Jury thought this too- but many probably saw them as some unknown, unhinged, unpredictable threat. Which based off of the behavior clearly reported and observed during the Gaia Case, did not serve their cause.

‘So why haven’t you gone? Surely, you could go back- take back all that you can save right now- you knew that Amme knew about this. Clearly she’s somewhat trustworthy and as a Yisheng she would-‘

‘Captain, please- we’re in this mess because we believed the Yishengs were worthy of trust.’

Prat’tna interrupts. ‘I trust no one- outside of myself, of the GI- I trust Jimin- and his trust in you.’

‘All right- okay so you’re waiting-‘
'I did go,' Prat’tna admits. ‘I went to Menigišiti. I visited Megibīya. But I could find no way in. I scoured the whole region- there was no way in.’

‘How do you expect us to get in then? Because of Jimin?’

‘Somewhat, yes,’ Prat’tna nods.

‘What is it like?’ Namjoon asks somewhat hesitantly, this was after all, this Megibīyan’s home planet. ‘Is it empty?’

‘No- some pirates stop there- but not for too long. Megibīya is haunted you see.’

‘Haunted?’

‘You should know.’

Namjoon grits his teeth together. He hated this. You should know.

No one should know. No one should have to know.

‘What do you think happened after you fell?’

‘All of the locations I knew, and with some calculations by myself, Yyna, and many others who Woke up, we tried to find where we would be able to find our cells. We found none- could see none.’ Prat’tna explains. ‘I had thought, initially, that it was possible Tsirin and the Great Council ordered for all of the cells to be destroyed, shutting them all out.’

‘You thought?’

Prat’tna nods slowly, placing his hands over the table surface, a heavy frown etched over his stony-skinned brow.

‘But my theory- our theory...always felt incomplete. Like we were missing something.’

Namjoon waits as patiently as he can for a continuation. But clearly Prat’tna had stopped on purpose, because not a moment later, there is a burst of footsteps, several; small, young, headed towards them.

Several younglings burst through into the kitchen area. One was clearly a native of the village, soft brown hair, large grey eyes, very freckled skin, and a rosy mouth. The youngling is panting, their hands filled with some sort of fruit in bunches. The other youngling, maybe a little older, is definitely not a native. Namjoon can’t place where he’s from exactly- probably some place in the Milky Way. His hair is dark – nearly almost black. His eyes are also dark, the iris area smaller than that of the natives in the area. His skin is only lightly freckled- exposure to the sun as well as the breeze from the ocean nearby. But they’re babbling in the native tongue, pausing to only stare at Namjoon for a second before grinning up at Prat’tna. The Megibiyan chuckles, adjusting himself in his chair to speak with them. His accent is clear, but he nods along. Not too long afterwards, an older villager steps in, pulling in with them some sort of cart. They smile before looking a little surprised at Namjoon’s presence.

They say something- to one of the GI there. A few seconds later, the GI responds in kind. The villager just smiles and says in a little broken Standard, ‘Sorry.’

‘Ah- it’s fine, okay-‘ Namjoon raises his hand in a thumb’s up before addressing the GI, ‘I don’t eat- can you tell them that?’
The GI does translate and the villager nods, not surprised by this information, and hands Prat’tna a tray, saying something with a short laugh.

After a few more minutes, in which Namjoon is given some fruit as well, the villagers and the younglings leave.

‘Precooked food?’ Namjoon looks at the tray filled with a large portion of fish stew and some sort of grain.

Prat’tna just grins before digging in.

‘Guessing that youngling- an egg?’

Prat’tna hums, smiling a little to himself. The GI also take a seat, removing their helmets to eat.

Namjoon waits for them to finish eating. Which was a good thing, Namjoon guesses, he needed the time to process everything.

So in summary, basically, Menigišiti, like every other System in the Known Universe, had their own fair share of issues and problems. Jimin and his sister were some sort of filtering system, established for as long as the whole System existed- and the Great Council served to bring unbiased information from across their System. Clearly, after the Red Evil had attacked, and Ndica had been so closely involved with coming to Menigišiti, more unrest and distrust towards the Great Council rose up.

Was it too much of a stretch to believe Ndica had some hand in this? Even if he did not enter Menigišiti, he would still, as a Yisheng, be able to influence those around him.

He then staged the attack- but no one had expected the Red Evil to arrive, launching an attack on Megibīya. The Red Evil then took over, taking in Jimin and his team who flew out, and overwhelmed them. Not so long after, Ndica, alongside Amme, had discovered them, and Amme took some back to the Yisheng Headquarters and there, hid them. Yoongi was not the first to wake up- there were many before him. But he was most certainly the first Human to do so. Namjoon is pretty sure it’s because of Jimin. Amme discovered the way of waking them up- something she must have picked up from Ndica and Tlun’hla and their experiments by the sound of it. Of course it wasn’t the best method- and clearly not the healthiest either, judging by Prat’tna. And also judging by Yoongi.

And now they just- they just wanted to be able to live, away from the continuing barrage of questions regarding if they could be considered worth being allowed to live.

And with what Van Seulgaan had said- his connection to the Alliance; of course he knew full well. He had called them abominations. He wanted nothing to do with the Eggs; though he certainly saw the profit in them.

It makes Namjoon shiver slightly, at the possibility of what disgusting plans could have existed for the eggs- for those OrTanks extracted from that massive ship.

And the Omhlophe?

They wanted to kill the Eggs? Not hoard and save them as Khonen had expressed to them. Khonen had no cause to lie- of course not. He couldn’t. These were two conflicting accounts- maybe the GLA Court ordered the Omhlophe to have the Eggs destroyed, and maybe the Omhlophe were pretending to obey. If what Prat’tna said was to be trusted- the Omhlophe had no cohesive, no logical manner of thinking. Similar to the GI.
It was also what made them so so dangerous.

So did that mean, that strangely enough, the Special Jury, were in fact, looking out for this entire mission the whole time? But that didn’t really settle well with Namjoon in the slightest. Sk’jin would scoff at him, telling him that he should never trust anything anyone says.

There was also something else bothering Namjoon. Ever since he last left Ynqaba, ever since Sk’jin’s return from his capture in Ynqaba, and since Jungkook arrived.

‘Why were the Yishengs here? I mean at Ynqaba? What was the reason?’ Namjoon asks.

Prat’tna doesn’t stop eating, spitting out a long bone before he asks, ‘Have you ever heard of the First Children?’

---

Chapter End Notes

(Author’s Notes)

Clearly I miscalculated how many words would be in this chapter so I split it into two, the second chapter will be coming soon in a few days!!!!!!!!!!!!
Social distancing and self isolation I think is incredibly easy for me for a variety of reasons:
1. Introversion
2. Hating to go outside in general
3. Its hot here in bkk and so naturally you just wanna stay where its nice and cool
4. Going out = having to spend money and that’s a big no for me because I am unemployed
5. Growing up in a country where curfews and strikes happened every other day
6. Being??? Lazy???
I just love staying indoors where my clean bathroom is available any time, I have wifi, my laptop, endless movies, no need to wear make up, just in comfy home clothes and I can walk barefoot? Perfection
Hows everyone doing with self-isolation and social distancing???
Also striking how people don’t wash their hands
Being a Germaphobe™
I always have dry hands from overwashing and disinfecting my hands, phones, laptops- it’s like my time to shine has come
My time to shine where no one can see me because we’re practicing social distancing Things are not too bad here in bkk, YET though cases are definitely going up, and people are not buying out toilet paper or panic buying shit YET
What about everyone else??
‘Uh, actually Jimin might have said something about it in passing but we did not have time to elaborate.’

‘The First Children are basically the first thing Yisheng created- entities of Time, Space, Existence – they created the Universe you could say, though it’s more a matter…well, the way hosts of bacteria would grow in discarded waste of another living Being.’

Namjoon grimaces at the description though the other GI seem to have no care.

‘But some places are, well, richer, better for bacteria to thrive in, so to speak,’ Prat’tna wipes at his bowl with a bit of bread, ‘And in these places, if you place the Artoo’ii, or the Eggs, as you refer to them, you get, supposedly, purer, stronger, better.’

‘So Ynqaba, Lowet- these places are, uh, blessed? By the First Children?’

Prat’tna nods, tearing another chunk of bread.

‘There are countless other places like this- that the Red Evil, the Yisheng, they were able to track down and host their creations, to let them grow. They clashed here, between Ynqaba and Lowet. The Yishengs had first taken Ynqaba, and the Red Evil took Lowet.’

Namjoon can’t help but think of the stark difference in result left behind by each separate party in each respective planet. Yishengs were considered good, bringer of life, healing- yet all Ynqaba had to show was black scorched dust for earth, acid rain for water, and pain for life. Yet here in Lowet, life appeared to be flourishing in its own way.

‘When the Yishengs found out about Lowet, they tried to attack- but of course the Red Evil would not back down- Yisheng Ndica ran away but the Red Evil were greatly destroyed too. You’ve noticed the difference, haven’t you, between the two planets.’

Namjoon nods.
'Lowet was lucky you could say,' Prat‘tna pauses, ‘Do you know what happens when a Yisheng dies?'

Namjoon does not.

‘Their Life-force is released,’ Prat‘tna explains. ‘And as we all know, Yishengs have this in plenty. So you see- as you know, the Red Evil once used to be Yishengs—’

‘what?!’

‘-and it’s the same, when the Red Evil die. Lowet was a poor planet, their lands ravaged with drought, famine, disease. And yet somehow, this is the best thing that could have happened to it,’ Prat‘tna continues. ‘And many of the Artoo’ii hidden here, by the Red Evil, awoke as a result. The Beings of Lowet, took them on as their own; generations here have lived, with the blood of Beings from species that would have never stepped foot in this System otherwise. Your Artoo’ii is one of them- well, unluckier ones in Ynqaba- we tried to bring them all back here as much as we could, but the Collectors are all assholes with their own pockets in mind.’

The one who brought us our food, the youngling with them, they adopted that Human youngling when he was born,’ Prat‘tna nods in the direction of the hallway. ‘The Beings of Lowet know that their population is low- and they accepted us too. I came here- we all came here, because many many decades ago, after Ndica left a mess here, Amme sought us, the ones who Woke up, and told us to stay here.

‘But you literally just said you don’t trust Amme why are you still here?’

‘Because we had nowhere else to go,’ Prat‘tna says simply. ‘But now, we might.’

‘But- the Eggs, they’re just living here- they’re a part of this community now aren’t they, I don’t think they would easily give up Beings they’ve adopted—’

‘-and not everyone is as lucky- look at your Artoo’ii,’ Prat‘tna interrupts. ‘There are so many like him in Ynqaba- some are lucky in their own way, making their living as part of the Beings there- some are sold, some are killed- some are traded, and most recently, sold to the Omhlophe. Not everyone is as lucky.’

‘How are you staying hidden?’

‘The water.’

‘The water? The ocean?’

Prat‘tna nods, ‘What is the primary rule for life to flourish?’

‘You need water,’ Namjoon frowns.

Prat‘tna just nods, as though that was the explanation Namjoon was looking for.

‘The most likely case, with the Artoo’ii, is they will be reported to the GLA Court, or the Venture Unit. And with how the GLA Court regards them, it’s best we can assume they will want them destroyed.’

‘So you want Jimin to find a way back into Menigišiti, and take all of the Eggs, maybe even the GI, everyone born out of this mess, and hide them in there?’
Prat’tna nods.

‘But you can’t find a way in.’

Prat’tna nods again, finishing his last bite of bread.

‘And this is the part where you say you want me to help,’ Namjoon asks bluntly.

Prat’tna nods.

‘Basically you now want me to tell Jimin all of this- I should tell you that ultimately our plan is to go into Menigišiti. You know that right?’ Namjoon inquires, ‘It’s what Jimin wants the most- to go back home.’

Prat’tna smiles at that.

‘I mean, if that’s it, then great. We can leave tomorrow- if you’re saying that, in a sense, Amme can be trusted, let’s get going, meet up with them, and get going.’ Namjoon is ready to leave now.

‘It’s not that simple.’

Namjoon huffs out, ‘Why not.’

‘Because Menigišiti will not allow Jimin to go home.’

‘What do you mean?’

‘When I said I looked for an entryway into Menigišiti, I said I felt like I was missing something.’

Namjoon nods, remembering.

‘We stayed there for over a sol, just searching. Because the cells are there just to stabilize the resonance that protects us- if you know what you’re looking for, then you can find an opening. But it was almost as though all of this was purposefully hidden, purposefully masked. And so we stayed until we found something.’

‘What did you find?’

‘A ship. Akaraman design, right at the outskirts of the borders, and behind it several cargo ships, of Axudarian design. They detected us, and gave me chase, a few Transporters on me. We lead them back to Megibiya. We were able to take them down. We went to investigate each Transporter-Axudarian, all of them. But one of the pilots was from Menigišiti.’

‘What?’

Prat’tna doesn’t add on, instead he reaches into his jacket to retrieve a small screen. He sets it down past his empty dishes, onto the stone table. Tapping a few times, a complete projection pops up.

The GI don’t pause as they eat, barely paying attention.

It’s a clear scan of a Being from a species Namjoon obviously does not recognize. But Prat’tna doesn’t bother to explain and instead expands on the head, turning the projection over so that Namjoon could see.

‘I’m guessing those markings are not native to this species?’
Prat’tna doesn’t even both to answer and instead opens the lids of the projection.

Namjoon nearly falls back from his seat, looking down at the dark eyes, a ring of light like an eclipse forming the iris.

‘What the fuck?!

‘I expanded my search. We went to Axudar.’ Prat’tna continues. ‘It wasn’t even difficult- entering any System undetected and safely was not an issue for us. But what we discovered it was just-.’

He extracts more projections.

‘Axudar is protected from the outside- a special GLA protection over it’s System, established by Ndica to hide what he was doing to his own people, and then later, with the help of Menigišiti, turning it into a prime example of what Yisheng wanted- what he had always wanted. A whole System simply living, controlled without knowledge, without understanding- just existing a perfect life.’

‘Ndica did this to his own System? Are they all Eggs-‘

‘-no. The Beings of Axudar are the way they are because they chose to be like that.’ Prat’tna explains heavily, sweating slightly as he leans back. One of the GI hands him some tablets out of nowhere. Namjoon eyes these with confusion.

‘Just some precaution,’ Prat’tna smiles, ‘It’s mainly to make everyone feel better.’

He dry swallows the pills. ‘Sometimes, eating is tiring- takes a lot to digest I guess?’ he coughs out a laugh.

‘When I further investigated Axudar, I found that out of the 3 planets, Kaitūtei was the root. Here, I found it nearly entirely occupied by those from Menigišiti- all of them, with their eyes changed.’

He swipes across the projections- images taken of a diverse group of Beings in extraordinarily normal settings- all of them, their eyes eclipses.

‘I don’t understand I thought this was- this just Jimin-‘

‘It is. This is recreated surgically, to symbolize that Menigišiti is taking control of their own fate.’ Prat’tna pauses before he adds, ‘The rebels call them Verktaë- tainted eyes.’

‘Rebels? In Axudar?’

Prat’tna nods, ‘Axudarians, some of the Artoo’ii who survived long enough to escape.’

‘So not all of Axudar is entrapped?’

‘It will be soon- Ndica’s death has thrown things out of loop for them. Ndica was meant to present Axudar as the ideal utopia, a System that could indeed work where the Beings were all happy, free, and no violence, no death, no “evil” existed.’ Prat’tna snorts, ‘But then he went and died.’

‘So then who has taken over Axudar? Clearly he was running all of the shots-‘

‘A new set of guides who call themselves The Great Council.’

‘You’re telling me that Menigišiti is basically running all of Axudar?’
Prat’tna nods, ‘And they’re pushing it further, beyond what Ndica had planned, pushing and creating their own fate.’

‘Was this Ndica’s manipulation? He did this, didn’t he? He took what was already happening in Menigišiti and added to it- this was a revolt- it was all staged,’ Namjoon says slowly, ‘This was all planned- to take down the Great Council.’

‘The Great Council was involved,’ Prat’tna shakes his head, ‘This couldn’t have happened without the Great Council being involved.’

‘But surely-.’

‘This was planned for a long long time. Ndica is not the sole Being to blame here,’ Prat’tna exhales out slowly, his sweating abating somewhat. Namjoon guesses his medication kicked in somewhat. ‘Out of the 11 Wenedi pairs, 7 were already involved-’

‘-you’re telling you didn’t know about this?’ Namjoon asks incredulously.

‘You can be as surprised as you want but I can tell you this- I knew nothing of any of this; looking for it within the Great Council?’ Prat’tna scoffs, ‘I wouldn’t have dreamt of it.’

‘You were too loyal to Jimin and his sister,’ Namjoon ruminates, ‘They knew you would inform them at once.’

‘Probably,’ Prat’tna sighs. ‘I spent 5 terrified months in Axudar- many of us were lost as we tried to escape. But in doing so, we were able to free many of the Artoo’ii Ndica had grown and used there- used mainly to further Ndica’s ambitions and twisted ideals. A few of them are here in Lowet- other villages, living a normal life. Some have banded together, to try and free the others still left in Axudar.’

The GI have finished eating, stacking up their bowls and dishes and sitting quietly.

‘I spent some more months, tracking and following the ships entering Menigišiti- we were able to infiltrate one of the ships- Yyna, well, another Yyna, had managed to enter; but I have not heard from her since.’

‘She never got out?’

‘The ship she was in never came out,’ Prat’tna explains, his expression tired. ‘We tried to find out what those ships were carrying- were they taking in things, or taking out things- but…’ Prat'tna gives Namjoon a sharp look, ‘You could say they’re a bit difficult to track.’

Namjoon ignores this and instead says, ‘So those ships have a way of getting into Menigišiti- meaning that clearly there’s a way of getting in- but only either with those ships, or with some tech developed within Axudar.’

Prat’tna nods in confirmation.

‘That’s why Jimin can’t go back in- why he won’t be able to take all of the Eggs in with him,’ Namjoon wipes at his face, leaning back on the chair and slumping a little. ‘And basically, you want to go to Axudar? And then stop whatever is locking Menigišiti down, in order to return home.’

‘That is ultimately, our mission. Yours too now.’
Namjoon closes his eyes- great.

‘How can we be sure, that by going into Axudar, into Kaitūtei, where the entire population of Beings from Menigišiti who clearly never want to go back, we will find a way to get inside Menigišiti?’

‘There is a Yisheng ship at the core of Kaitūtei- the same ship as the one that crashed into Ynqaba; you could say that this is the heart of everything- where Ndica developed his actions and plans, where this new Great Council now stay. I could never get close- but from what the Artoo’ii there told me, this was where everything started. Where everything starts and ends.’

‘Surely you can’t expect us to just casually waltz in-‘

‘What’s that?’

‘…what’s what.’

‘You just said it-‘

‘-waltz in?’

‘Yes.’

‘It’s- it’s a saying, I meant, just casually stroll in-’ Prat’tna makes an expression of understanding, ‘-into Kaitūtei, into this place that’s clearly going to be very guarded I’m sure. I’m pretty sure we could raid a ship- we have Taeh’yung, I’m sure a couple of ship should be fine seeing what he did in Grisial, and then use that ship, slip into Menigišiti-’

‘-we can do that yes,’ Prat’tna says tersely, ‘But…-‘

‘-but you want to know what’s in Axudar.’ Namjoon sighs out.

Prat’tna nods.

‘I want to understand why.’

The GI stand up, taking their dirty dishes and going over to the sink to wash it.

‘And you want Jimin to lead.’

‘Because I know he would want to know why.’

‘You’re just using him again.’ Namjoon feels a flare of protectiveness in him. ‘It’s why you chose not to go personally. Why you decided to have me kidnapped- be a middleman of sorts between the two of you.’

Prat’tna looks down, unable to speak.

Namjoon pushes his chair back and stands up.

‘Tsirin is there.’

Namjoon pauses.

‘His sister.’
Prat’na nods.

Namjoon curses under his breath.

‘Is she-…is she being used, the way Jimin was?’

Prat’nas nods.

Of course like this, Jimin would definitely want to go to Axudar. There was no doubt about it.

‘It’s late,’ Prat’na says, ‘You should sleep.’

Namjoons pretty sure it’s because Prat’na was verging on fainting judging by how fatigued he appeared. Regardless he nods. He needed a moment too.

He’s shown into his room, again set up with an odd arrangement of flowers. Namjoon feels bad for not being Jimin, who was clearly expected somehow. Namjoon steps out.

He needed fresh air.

Outside it’s quite late. The sky above dark, but the stars are clear. There’s a particularly bright streak to the north, and Namjoon guesses it’s the remains of the Ynqaban moon. Lowet had a very small and distant moon, shining down faintly in the form of a waning crescent. It’s peacefully filled with sound outside. The rush of waves along the shoreline, the reeds and plants in the gentle breeze, nightly insects, and talking voices filtering in and out at random from small stone windows.

Namjoon finds himself walking towards the beach.

The ship is still there. There are no lights shining aboard, but Namjoon’s sure the dark windows were watching his move. No doubt he was being tailed too.

He finds a spot, with some flat sediment rock jutting out to serve as a temporary seat.

Of course now, they would definitely have to go to Axudar. They could raid and take over and ship easily of course- but to what end? And how were things even run in Menigišiti anymore?

Would Jimin’s return be met with gladness, or would they protest, or worse attempt to kill him? Did the new Great Council effectively rule both all of Axudar and Menigišiti? Jimin’s return would definitely not be a welcome event.

So then what could they do?

The threat that the unborn Eggs carried with them was not unjustified if Namjoon thinks of it. The GLA Court had good reason to be doubtful and mistrustful. The Yishengs would not be able to prove or vouch for anything as it was them who ultimately orchestrated this entire mess in the first place. For the GLA Court and everyone involved, having the Eggs destroyed was an effective way of dealing with the issue.

But Namjoon cannot and will not allow it to happen. And of course it made sense, that the Jury, the GI, and anyone involved with this side of the situation, would want to have the Eggs safely taken care of in a place that, for all of living history, mostly remained completely hidden.

But now that could not be done, because well- who knew what was really happening in both Axudar and Menigišiti at this point.

The best line of action they could take would be to first split into two teams. The first would get a hold of one of those ships entering Menigišiti, enter the System, and understand what was happening from within. Clearly, if ships were entering Menigišiti, some form of communication channel was available. This could be duplicated and applied to their own communications network. Then after establishing this, the second team would enter Axudar- preferably with more GI doing this, in order to infiltrate the System and into Kaitüei to investigate this Yisheng ship. Communication would be absolutely key in all of this of course- there was no underestimating how much this could go wrong.

Namjoon leans forward on his working arm; the Jury knew full well what they were sending them into. How did they expect them to be able to remotely succeed? Why not tell them the whole truth? Unless the Beings within the Jury didn’t trust each other.

Namjoon rolls his eyes at himself. Of course they didn’t. K’mara and Amme were both part of the original Panel that Ndica lead to have talks with Menigišiti in the first place. No one with a living and functioning brain would trust Lal Haenoon, and as for the others…Namjoon wouldn’t put their motives as being strictly moral or ethical. Even though Lmiura had scouted him for this purpose with what he believes were genuine intentions, she was not above suspicion or doubt.

There was genuinely too much to think about and trying to fit them all into one scope would be overwhelming, and at this moment- the Special Jury was not strictly important to them.

Namjoon barely flinches when he notices the GI standing a little behind him. He’s not wearing the helmet so Namjoon is able to recognize him.

‘Oh- hey, feeling better?’ Namjoon asks him. Dehin just looks at him, no expression, no response.

‘How are your injuries?’ Namjoon rephrases his question.

‘Improved.’

Namjoon is not expecting the next statement.

‘I like the ocean.’

Namjoon does a double take, eyeing the GI carefully.

‘It is nice.’ Namjoon agrees, ‘Did your uh, planet, have an ocean similar to this?’

‘It did.’ Dehin confirms.

‘So…are you awake?’ Namjoon asks carefully.

‘I’m not asleep.’

‘No as in-‘

‘I understood. It was a joke.’ Dehin’s face twitches funnily, as if he was about to laugh.

So he was awake. Slowly waking up. Or something along that line.

‘Um- I’m sorry about what happened- I guess? Sorry about your injuries.’ Namjoon offers. He’s not exactly apologetic, but he guesses it’s the polite thing to do.

‘It was a result of self-defense.’

‘Thank fuck someone else gets it,’ Namjoon mumbles before adding out loud, ‘Wanna sit and just stare at the ocean? I heard it’s supposed to be soothing.’

Dehin looks at him for an uncomfortably long period of time before he sits down.

‘It is soothing.’

His tone had some emotion to it- Namjoon’s not sure if he heard right, or whether he was projecting, but he most certainly did.

Now it makes Namjoon think even more.

Yoongi was definitely unwell. There was no denying that. And his health issues starting spiking soon after what was no doubt his “Awakening” or “Waking” or something like that. Prat’tna had said he had died- or at least, another him had died many times before the one right now, and it didn’t exactly sound like every version of him that had Woken up had died because he had been killed by some outside action or force. It was almost as though Prat’tna right now was edging very close to actually just simply dying,

‘-our brother Yoongi is dying.’

Namjoon fidgets.

Just how long did he have? Was there a way of preventing this? Obviously maybe stop introducing the Android core to GI, regardless of whether or not they were regurgitated or puked up, it didn’t matter. Or maybe it did. Would Yoongi, knowing this, would he wish to go through with the Android core treatment to regain his previous memories, regain a sense of self-awareness?

Clearly Prat’tna seemed to think it was important for himself to do so.

Was there a way of saving them, with their intact and reborn memories? Because so far, no other GI or Egg, or whatever other name they have, has had a reaction like this unless they were somehow introduced to implementing the Android core. Yet they all seemed completely fine, normal- it was completely possible that for the GI, after some prolonged exposure to a “normal” society and environment, where they weren’t overwhelmed, they would potentially learn to adapt, slowly learn how to behave and be aware that they were living Beings with their own lives outside of a mission. The other Eggs, like Jungkook, and clearly so many others just within this tiny village, were living completely normal lives.

And yet, regardless, all of them were in danger from the fucking GLA Court it would seem. As well as the Omhlophe because these were two completely different stories he was getting. But either way, one thing for sure was that the Omhlophe were entirely not to be trusted and avoided at all cost.

‘You are stressed.’

Namjoon looks around at Dehin.

‘Uh yeah- just worried about-…worried about my friends.’ Namjoon admits.

‘Me too,’ Dehin replies, ‘I see them in my dreams.’

‘What do you see in your dreams?’ Namjoon asks curiously.

‘Many things,’ Dehin answers, ‘But mainly I see a red sky, rain, trying to be quiet- I see…I also see the beach.’
Definitely memories. Yoongi often spoke of seeing dreams, but not being able to understand it.

‘Do you see dreams?’ Dehin asks him instead.

‘Sure, but I don’t always remember them.’

‘Do you want to?’

‘Not really I guess. You?’

‘I don’t have a choice.’

It’s startling to hear it.

‘I’m sorry,’ Namjoon doesn’t know why he feels choked up but he does.

Somehow they end up staying out by the shoreline till sunrise. The fish-merchants wave at them, carrying wet-lanterns with them and docking on their small boats just as the sky lightens a little. They watch the boats take off, some sort of rudimentary engine propelling them forward over the gentle motion of the early morning water.

‘Guess we should be heading back-‘ Namjoon shouldn’t be surprised when he finds that Dehin is gone. Muttering under his breath, Namjoon gets up, brushing off sand from his clothes.

The early morning crowd are already up. A few smile at Namjoon when they notice him. The villager who had brought the food in the night is also there, outside of their home. They have their youngling strapped to their back, still sleeping. The Human youngling is also sleepy, but determined to be helping so was carrying a dust-pan of sorts.

When Namjoon makes his way back to the GI’s house (???) he finds it still as empty and lifeless as before. Looking around, he finds that there’s a living space past the kitchen area. But they’re all empty.

‘Prat’tna?’ Namjoon calls out.

No one answers him.

He’s thinking of maybe going back to the ship when he notices another villager with the same cart, but with different food. Clearly breakfast. He watches them ignore some doors, and knock on a few specific ones. He stays back until they’re done, waiting until they leave, before Namjoon makes for the doors.

Inside, in varying stages of eating and odd-dress, are a few of the GI. It isn’t until after the 5th door and 5th apology does Namjoon find Prat’tna.

He was clearly not well.

‘Good morning.’

‘Not that good for you,’ Namjoon says slowly, looking down at the large Being who looked strangely diminished. His skin which was already a grey ashy colour, is somehow pale and waxy looking. He has a breathing mask over his face. To the side of the bed is a medical set up just one step away from establishing a full Medical Bed.

‘I slept very well,’ Prat’tna defends himself, struggling to get up. Namjoon wants to help but doesn’t know if it would be accepted. In the end, Prat’tna does manage to sit up.

‘I see that you didn’t.’

‘Couldn’t.’

‘Understandable- it’s odd isn’t it?’

‘…which exactly are you referring to.’

‘I guess…the normalcy of this place,’ Prat’tna heaves out, ‘I couldn’t sleep here for so long. Couldn’t…couldn’t be at peace it felt so wrong to be here. I felt wrong.’

‘And now?’

‘Now, it’s a dream- and I know I’ll have to wake up at some point.’

‘Right. About that,’ Namjoon crosses his arm over his chest, ‘Maybe you stop doing that.’

‘What?’

‘The whole waking up the GI thing. It’s clearly killing you- and the others. Why do it if it’s just to go through a shit memory lane,’ Namjoon asks bluntly, ‘Which then ultimately kills you anyways- also, how is that even working out for you?’

‘I did what I wanted to do- I knew I had to wake myself long enough to get to Jimin if he one day found me.’

‘…technically you found him.’

Prat’tna snorts at that and ends up coughing heavily and deeply.

‘How can you be lost, if you are bound to the fate of being found?’ Namjoon quotes quietly.

Prat’tna looks up at that, dark circles heavy even on his grey skin. He grins, teeth showing.

‘Hmm,’ he hums, leaning sideways on the bed post, voice muffled by the mask. ‘I guess that’s a good point.’

‘I can’t promise you that we will do what you want,’ Namjoon tells him bluntly. ‘You will have to tell Jimin yourself. Explain everything- what happened before he was born- how he was raised, about his sister- about Ndica. He’s been beating himself up for months now- he’s just-…’

Namjoon stops, ‘He’s so lost. Maybe you can help him find what all of this means.’

Prat’tna smiles in a somber manner, eyes closing as he takes deep breaths. The room starts to light up softly, the sun now fully up in the sky.

‘He probably blames himself.’

‘Are you happy about that?!’ Namjoon demands incredulously.

‘No,’ Prat’tna levels him with an angry glare before it softens, ‘That just sounds like him.’

Prat’tna pulls the table towards him, where a neat place of food waited for him. Next to the food is a screen which he first picks up and says, ‘Here- they are still inside Yisheng Amme’s ship,’ Prat’tna hands him the screen. ‘You want some tea?’
‘Oh uh, sure.’ Namjoon says absentmindedly, taking the screen eagerly and sitting down on the chair next to the bed. Were the GI all obsessed with tea what was with this tea obsession. He takes a sip and okay fine it’s nice but Namjoon doesn’t see all the hype about boiled water with some random vegetation steeped into it. Nonetheless he still accepts it because okay, it tasted nice.

‘How have you been tracking them this whole time?’ Namjoon frowns, looking down at the screen. Those were clearly not digital trackers.

‘Uh-‘ Prat’tna coughs into his cup of tea.

And it clicks and Namjoon wishes that sometimes, his brain would pick up on all of the signs.

‘Oh for fucks sake did he poison us again?!’

Prat’tna laughs heartily.

But it gives Namjoon some hope. This meant that they in turn could track him, and know he was doing okay too. Unless-

He looks at the tea cup he had just sipped from, before side-eyeing Prat’tna who puts his own cup down, reaching for his still steaming bowl.

‘Prat’tna.’

‘Each signal is unique to your Being, the isotope reading changes depending on the Being who consumed it.’

‘What-‘

‘We collected samples when we boarded your ship- at least we did, for all members of your crew save Taeh’yung. Not even a hair sample from him.’

Namjoon stops his mind from going to places.

‘What you’re drinking right now contains something to counter balance what Yoongi gave you-‘

Namjoon grimaces, putting his teacup down, ‘Can you GI please stop poisoning everyone around you this is not building trust.’

‘They would try to come find you.’

‘And I would very much like to be found,’ Namjoon says pointedly.

Prat’tna smiles at him, chuckling quietly.

‘Once they leave the Yisheng ship, we will approach them.’ Prat’tna informs him. ‘Your Comm Device is still activated and your channel to your ship’s operating system still on. You’ve done a good job with this.’

Namjoon begrudgingly accepts the compliment, his cup of tea very much indeed left alone now; although Namjoon suspects he’s been drinking the counter balance for the past couple of days already. It’s the thought that counts.

‘We would like to request that you switch it off.’ Prat’tna holds up the tiny device in his palm.

‘Why. If they track my location right now and find me here, it would probably be easier for me to go there seeing as you probably wish to head in that direction. Also it’s not like your location is hidden from Amme seeing as she directed you here,’ Namjoon frowns, reaching for the Device though Prat’tna closes his palm.

‘Because the Omhlophe have your ship.’ Prat’tna states firmly. ‘And I’m not sure with how much confidence you can state that your ship wasn’t entirely compromised, but I would much rather no one is able to track you down here.’

That was a definite plausible risk. Even if the Užkulisai was completely shut down and Lisai terminated within the ship’s network, being able to use the hardware present on the ship to recover usable data to potentially track some form of remaining network was entirely possible. It would take a very long time to do so, but Namjoon would rather not have the Omhlophe coming down to this tiny village.

He nods at Prat’tna who unfurls his palm again, his hand only shaking slightly, and Namjoon takes the device.

‘You can access it through the screen,’ Prat’tna informs him.

Namjoon nods, sighing a little and feeling bad for having to shut off what could definitely be his last way of managing communications back to the others.

‘I’ve made arrangements, for you to see someone who can help you with your arm.’ Prat’tna tells him.

‘Now that’s a risk,’ Namjoon says lightly, ‘Not a lot can fix this without triggering some sort of alarm- not if the Jury and possibly the Court is out for me.’

‘You’ll be fine,’ Prat’tna reassures him before adding, ‘We weren’t going to bring you here actually.’

‘I’m honoured,’ Namjoon says blankly.

‘But your arm- and face, I know what it’s like to operate handicapped,’ Prat’tna explains, ‘And for whatever is going to happen in the near future, you’ll probably need both your arms. You need to be armed.’

Namjoon all but facepalms.

Prat’tna guffaws at his reaction.

‘You can set out this afternoon and get there in a few hours or so by boat- but only halfway,’ Prat’tna tells him, turning around to level him with a serious look, ‘I don’t want to compromise anyone from this village, but I don’t want to bring any attention to ourselves either. So you’ll take the boat midway, and then before you reach the opposite banks, you’ll swim the rest of the distance, and then get around.’

‘Oh yeah, sopping wet really won’t get me recognized,’ Namjoon rolls his eyes.

‘It’s not that I think the other villages and towns will so easily give up information, but talk is talk,’ Prat’tna tells him simply.

‘Yeah okay,’ Namjoon sighs, ‘Who’ll take me?’

‘I’m sure you’re old enough to go by yourself?’
Namjoon knows he shouldn’t rise up to the bait and he really does try. Prat’tna guffaws again.

Namjoon is given an air-tight, water-proof sack to keep his clothes and a screen, a local-network Comm Device, and a map and directions and he’s sent off on his merry way to the trading town across the channel. Namjoon is having some whiplash with this sudden freedom – was this some form of conditioning or manipulation, Namjoon really can’t tell. Technically he really wasn’t a hostage, no one was trying to harm him, and they were all ultimately working towards the same outcome if you looked at the whole picture.

But it still felt strange and Namjoon wonders if he’s just been living a high-stressed life for too long now.

The fish merchants don’t seem at all surprised by this voyage, they just smile at Namjoon and talk amongst themselves. They mime ask him some questions, with a few random Standard words thrown in enough for Namjoon to understand. It takes a little under an hour to get halfway through the channel.

Stripping off his clothes, Namjoon places them inside his water-proof sack. The fish merchants look at him with unabashed surprise. They seem worried, that he would fill up with water and sink.

It makes Namjoon chuckle. He shows them the hand-held water-propeller the GI had presented him with. It would allow him to zip through the water with no problem, even with one arm.

They would wait for him till nightfall, Namjoon just had to make it back on time.

The trading town is much bigger, built in a similar fashion but much more densely populated and with a slightly wider variety of Beings. It was always somewhat strange to be in a place that had almost no GLA influence. Also quite rare, but even places like Nuqtai was very heavily influenced by GLA-produced technology and mediums. But here: it felt incredibly alien. And even if no one was looking twice at him, Namjoon feels like he’s sticking out, like some glaring neon symbol.

He ignores this feeling and looks down at his screen, wiping away the water that drips from his still wet hair to the surface. He needed to head to the other side of the town. Typical. Of course he did. The fish merchants had asked/mimed him if he had any units on him, and no, Namjoon did not. They had pressed coins into his hands, insisting that it would be necessary. And Namjoon’s somewhat glad because he takes the local transport, a delightfully rustic but absolutely ingenious water-based transport-system running through the town in narrow water-channels. Namjoon climbs in, the sun warm through the woven fabric stretched above his head.

For one painful moment, Namjoon almost lets go of the very well contained, very securely held together contained overwhelmed emotion deep inside him. He grips the wooden hand rail before him tightly, clearing his throat quietly and breathing out slow.

But it hurts.

It hurts because everything reminds him of what he just barely remembers, the smallest snippets of joy before a lifetime of pain and anger and loss.

The conductor of the water-channel transporter walks along the wooden edges, a bag in their hands. Namjoon hands them a few coins, receiving a small token in return, with a number printed neatly on top. His stop was the 8th one, and he was currently in the 21st. Namjoon sits back, looking straight ahead, not trusting himself to really look around himself.

So instead he fiddles with the screen.
There was no limit to what he could do with the screen. Prat’tna had just handed him his own from the room. Because of course, it’s sort of brilliant planning in a way. Namjoon can’t and won’t compromise the safety of innocent Beings. Even if Prat’tna truly respected and cared for those villagers, Prat’tna was ultimately in the end, a sort of politician. Of course bring Namjoon here was carefully planned- for good reason.

Namjoon can’t believe he’s so easily being used by so many different Beings.

He really should have just stayed in retirement in Dziko, just been an ordinary Navigator, and helped the Daonin retrieve items that were out of their short-reach.

It’s impossible to not look up. It’s impossible to just stare at the screen on his lap.

The transporter rocks a little at each stop, and Namjoon looks up, watching the locals either clamber off or get in. It’s not possible to not compare- to not wishfully fantasize that this is what Kutsoglera would have been like.

When Namjoon gets off on his stop, it’s with some relief.

His stop was clearly somewhere in a more mechanical zone. The stone huts here are covered in a layer of dark soot, tall chimneys giving out wisps of smoke and the smell of heated metal wafts along occasionally with the breeze. There are displays with parts here and there, modern Transporter parts on display. It feels nice- familiar as Namjoon paces down the stone-paths. A few workshop employees try to hail him but it’s not the annoying calls from Flotsams and Jetsam he’s familiar with. There are even androids here, though they’re clearly from Ts’ets’kli which was weirdly placating. And without a doubt, Namjoon knows he’s looking at a few fully grown Eggs-integrated into the society here, part of the community. Some are easy to tell apart from the locals, with their own striking features. Some blend in much more. But Namjoon knows what to look for.

Maybe retiring here would be nice, Namjoon ruminates to himself, allowing himself to somewhat relax.

It’s short-lived because he immediately spots Beings who are clearly pirates of some sort. They stand out starkly. They’re not doing anything wrong or being invasive, they were just in the area, maybe waiting for some repairs they couldn’t afford in Nuqtaí.

Namjoon is instantly on edge.

This was probably normal. The locals didn’t seem to regard them with anymore attention than they did with Namjoon so he just takes another way around to his location.

He finds the stone hut he was headed for. Nothing stood out about it from the rest. It was clearly a cyborg repair store judging by the happy cyborg animatronic outside, waving merrily at random.
Crude, for sure, but it could work, Namjoon begrudgingly admits, sighing quietly under his breath.

‘You found the place.’

‘Sure did.’ Namjoon replies back, not surprised he’s being tracked. He wouldn’t be surprised if a few of the GI were on his tail right now, watching his every move.

There’s no further response or comment, so Namjoon grits his teeth and enters the store.

It’s well lit, cubicles here and there with some locals concentrating on their task. One of them looks up, blinking furiously because their eyes were adjusting. They speak a few words and then stop, grimacing apologetically before yelling out a name.
‘Ka-Yee!’

‘Moe?’

‘Nameria stal’ na Kutsoglerin!’ the local yells and before Namjoon can register the surprise at being so easily recognized, a figure from the back steps past the oil-stained curtain hurriedly, eyes wide and pleased.

Namjoon hasn’t met another Kutsoglerin in a very very long time. For so many, it was painful to look at each other- for some it was needed comfort and reassurance.

For Namjoon…

‘Wow,’ he breathes out.

He’s shorter than Namjoon, stockier, and not too much of him was drastically changed.

Suddenly Namjoon finds himself being hugged.

After some random tears from the fellow Kutsoglerin, some happy yelling and the employees in the shop clapping and bustling about, Namjoon finds himself in the backroom.

‘Wow- it’s been a while since…well, since I’ve met another Kutsoglerin.’

‘I- yeah, same,’ Namjoon still can’t get over his shock. He has plans on punching Prat’tna, who cares if he was dying.

The other Kutsoglerin just grin, clearly delighted, looking all over Namjoon.

‘You look like shit!’

‘I- yeah, look I-’

‘-no! I meant, uh- wait, I haven’t even introduced myself!’ he slaps his forehead before extending it out, and then switching for his other arm instead, noticing Namjoon’s soon-to-be possible hand-shake predicament. ‘I’m Ka-Yee.’

‘Namjoon,’ he shakes Ka-Yee’s hand which turns into an extended handholding.

‘Am I being weird?’ Ka-Yee asks.

‘Uh-‘ Namjoon wants to say yes but he sort of understands.

‘So I’m guessing you’re here for repairs?’ Ka-Yee asks as soon as he lets go of Namjoon’s hand.

‘Yeah- uh,’ Namjoon squints at Ka-Yee, ‘Wait- how are you even here in the first place?’

Ka-Yee gives him a small shrug, ‘Wanted to get out of the GLA, if I’m being honest. I did what I could to repay…well, to repay for everything. But it was like living a constant reminder, you know?’

Namjoon nods slowly.

‘And well- I was in Ghandhar for a while, then moved to Svat as well- studied some in Cheimaros! That was great. I also moved around to Nuqtai as well but,’ Ka-Yee makes a face, ‘Too rowdy.’
‘And now you’re in Lowet.’

Ka-Yee nods, giving him a genuine smile, like he was genuinely happy to meet Namjoon.

‘And well, with my background, I just thought, why not have a cyborg repair shop? I worked with some very notable Beings in this field I’ll have you know,’ Ka-Yee beams proudly.

‘Oh I don’t have doubts I’m just-‘

‘-yeah I know,’ Ka-Yee’s mirthful expression shifts to a much more serious one, ‘I know.’

Namjoon guesses that he’s also being weird too. Just staring at Ka-Yee.

‘So, arm? And eye?’

‘Oh- yeah, yeah. Uh, long story?’

Ka-Yee throws his head and laughs.

‘No need to tell me- you must’ve been desperate to do something that dangerous.’ Ka-Yee nods at his mangled arm.

‘How long will it take?’ Namjoon asks with hesitation.

‘Well, lucky for you, till tomorrow evening?’ Ka-Yee tilts his head, squinting as he thinks hard, eyeing his arm and damages.

‘That’s- really fast.’

Ka-Yee wiggles his eyebrows, ‘I’m kinda guessing you’re in a hurry aye?’

‘Yeah- I uh, my team is waiting for me,’ Namjoon tells him, a rush of emotions hitting him hard.

‘Come on then, can’t keep the team waiting,’ Ka-Yee stands up, ‘Let’s get you measured. Give me your preferences. And are you stocked up on your pills? Because, again, you look like shit.’

‘I would really appreciate some,’ Namjoon exhales, trying to stabilize his voice.

‘I can give you a 2 weeks stock? A month too but you’ll have to wait a week for that.’ Ka-Yee stands up, patting his pockets and muttering about his keys.

‘I really appreciate it- just the 2 weeks is just great,’ Namjoon manages to say as Ka-Yee calls back a confirmation before slipping back out to the front.

Namjoon leans back, inhaling deep and long before crouching forward, head touching his knees, exhaling.

‘Hey…uh, you in pain?’

Namjoon turns his head a little. Ka-Yee is peeking in, concern in his eyes.

‘Just the usual, existential crisis I guess.’

Ka-Yee quirks an eyebrow before he laughs, ‘Yeah I guess that can happen.’

Namjoon is measured, giving his input when asked, but mainly just listening to Ka-Yee speak. Because his fellow Kutsoglerin talked a lot. He’s not sure if it’s because he’s met another fellow specimen, but Namjoon just listens to this normalcy. Allows himself to feel like he was a simple normal citizen, coming in for repairs after some normal accident. Allows himself to feel like this was a normal life he could have had.

Maybe in another lifetime, maybe in another Time.

He leaves, carrying with him medication, and a much lighter heart. Ka-Yee walks with him till his transporter stop. He’s known around the place, occasionally waving in greeting to random stall owners or store-keepers.

Namjoon is in a daze as he returns.

But it’s a peaceful daze.

He takes his time, returning through the ocean water. The sun was close to setting, the water calm and the other fishing boats pulling in. Namjoon just floats for a moment on his back, watching the sky above him transform colour.

When he gets to the boat and the fish-merchants, they pull him in with their usual greetings that Namjoon was now starting to get a hang of and offer him drying towels, pouring him a hot drink.

At the shoreline, Dehin is standing there. Namjoon’s not sure if he’s waiting for him or not, but somehow it’s welcoming. Strangely endearing as well.

‘Hey, how are you today? Your health?’ Namjoon asks once he’s close enough.

‘Improving,’ is Dehin’s reply.

They help the fish-merchants carry back their equipment and help secure the ships. Namjoon helps as best as he can with one arm, picking up their methods quickly.

‘They have left the Yisheng ship,’ is the first thing Prat’tna tells him when he gets back to the GI stone house. He was sitting outside the stone house, a small pit dug up next to him where bits of dry wood and dried stalks were piled. He nods at the low stool by the wall for Namjoon to sit on. Dehin disappears into the stone hut with an awkwardly timed wave.

‘Where are they?’ Namjoon asks as he lowers himself down.

‘I believe they are headed for Māho-5,’ Prat’tna isn’t wearing the breathing-mask anymore. He looks a little better out here in the natural light. He holds his hand out and Namjoon takes a second before he realizes he’s asking back for the screen.

‘Māho-5?’ Namjoon frowns.

Prat’tna nods, tapping a few times before handing it back to Namjoon. ‘I’ll get the fire starting. They’re looking for you. They’re still opening the network connection, in hopes that you can connect back.’

‘I-…yeah,’ Namjoon mutters quietly, looking down at the tracker.

‘What did Ka-Yee say?’

Namjoon sends Prat’tna a glare before he replies, ‘By tomorrow.’

‘He’s very good at what he does.’
‘How long have you known him?’
‘A few sols- he has good friends here, many are Artoo’ii.’
Namjoon’s not surprised.
‘Does he know?’
‘Maybe. I don’t ask.’
‘What about the Kutsoglerin in the…in the OrTanks.’
‘I told him when we found them,’ Pratʼtna informs him. ‘I guess he thinks you’re here because of them.’
‘He’s not entirely wrong in a sense.’
Dehin steps back outside, carrying with him a lit flint. After some prodding, he gets a small fire going in the pit.
‘We can set out after your arm and other injuries are healed,’ Pratʼtna tells him. ‘The ship has been prepared.’
Namjoon nods, handing Pratʼtna back the screen.
It’s quiet after that, with no one saying a word. It’s quiet but- it’s so incredibly filled with sounds and noise.
And Namjoon just…just listens.

* *

Namjoon won’t admit it out right but he’s looking forward to going back into the town, meeting with Ka-Yee again. Maybe the lighter attitude he had was so drastically different that the fish-merchants found it a bit amusing. They wave at him as Namjoon dives into the ocean, and he waves back as well.
This time it’s not overwhelming.
Namjoon allows himself to just be a part of the town. Allows himself to be a part of this life he hasn’t experienced. Has never really been a part of.
Ka-Yee actually comes to pick him up at the stop. Greeting him cheerfully again and pulling him into a hug that Namjoon returns with less stiffness than yesterday.
Small victories.
‘Well- here it is,’ he waves his hand around in a flourish, ‘You’ll definitely need help with this part- the face stuff I think you’re good?’

Namjoon looks down at the arm.

There’s definite elements of cyborg-based design, over the much more bionic and fluid forms Namjoon was familiar with. But it was wonderful.

‘This is amazing,’ Namjoon grins.

‘Come on you big goop, let’s get you armed,’ Ka-Yee wiggles his eyebrows at an alarming rate.

Ka-Yee tells him random stories- a flare of exaggeration, lots of voice-acting, and plenty of eccentric dialogue that Namjoon can’t rightly say were complete exaggerations.

‘Flex fingers?’

Namjoon does as he’s told.

‘Okay I’m gonna throw stuff at you and you’re gonna catch it,’ Ka-Yee stands up, looking for stuff to throw.

They run a few more tests and Namjoon feels lighter. Like a weight was lifted off of him though technically more weight has been added to him.

‘Thank you,’ Namjoon says again, looking down at his arm. ‘Thank you again.’

‘Pshaw!’ Ka-Yee waves a hand, ‘I’m just happy the skin-tone wasn’t too off.’

‘I’m quite sure I’ll have some comments but it’s fine,’ Namjoon rolls his eyes.

‘There’s always someone in the crew who will point something out,’ Ka-Yee sighs dramatically. ‘All right- let’s do that handsome face, sit sit.’

Namjoon would flush with colour if he could.

It does get late by the time they’re done and Namjoon no longer has a gaping eyeball rolling about. The faint line that showed where the skin was sealed was only visible in certain angles.

‘Is that an accident or like, cosmetically purposeful?’ Ka-Yee pokes at his dimple.

Namjoon swats at his hand, pulling away from the mirror, ‘Cosmetically purposeful, sure.’

Ka-Yee gasps comically.

‘I want to ask you something that is potentially risky, but is the safest way to somehow tell my crew members that I’m safe,’ Namjoon says after Ka-Yee brings them tall metallic tumblers of something frothy and cold.

‘Sounds like something dumb I could stand behind,’ Ka-Yee nods, a line of froth above his lip.

‘Is there a surveillance unit, preferably from the Underverse somewhere here?’

Ka-Yee grins, teeth showing almost devilishly.
‘You’ll come by to visit right?’ Ka-Yee asks as they walk down the market to the water-channel stops.

‘I want to retire here,’ Namjoon says honestly as he hands him back the hooded cloak he had borrowed. There was an eatery- the only eatery, down in the busiest part of the market, closest to the air-docking planes. Ka-Yee had pointed out the camera to him from a good safe distance. So Namjoon just takes one clear look directly into the camera, and then steps in, and leaves through the back entrance.

It was risky, but Namjoon had to do something. Something tells him he won’t be able to communicate with the others, for reasons he can’t be clear about.

‘Hey- you can be my apprentice,’ Ka-Yee snickers.

He hugs him again, a bit longer than his other hugs.

‘Keep yourself safe- don’t shred that arm, I won’t repair it, you hear me?’ Ka-Yee threatens.

Namjoon steps into the transporter with a small laugh, squeezing himself into the seats.

‘I’ll do my best.’

Namjoon waves until they turn down the channel.

Namjoon realizes he’s still smiling as they make their way back to the shoreline stop.

And maybe he was being too familiar, too carefree – but Namjoon had honestly forgotten the pirates he had seen the previous day. And here they were, standing so close to him.

And the problem is that, they’re looking straight at him, a hint of recognition sparking in their eyes.

Namjoon takes steps back, eyes averting at once, hoping beyond hope he’s not recognized. But how would he be recognized? From where? And how? He doesn’t make it more than 4 steps when his legs collide with small shapes, excited childish babbling filling his immediate surroundings.

Looking down with a sinking feeling, he finds the two younglings from the village, beaming up at him, babbling in their childish voices at him, clearly recognizing him.

Fuck.

‘Mėnulis! Saulės!’ the villager from the previous night is there, looking surprised to find Namjoon there and waving over their children.

The two younglings giggle- pushing themselves off of Namjoon’s legs just a little. They’re both amazed at the new arm, clearly wondering where this new attachment came from.

Namjoon’s senses prickle- he feels eyes on him and he knows he’s recognized. The local villager is saying something, laughter in their tone as they pick up the younger of the two off the ground, merrily making conversation with Namjoon. They’re clearly talking about his newly fixed face. The Human youngling immediately steps away as well, laughingly explaining something to the villager and pointing up at Namjoon.

Namjoon dares a glance at the pirates and his suspicions are confirmed.
They’re talking amongst themselves, not even hiding their reaction, pointing at him. Walking towards him. And then pointing at the villager.

The villager picks up on it almost immediately. Their stance changes, eyes narrowed at the pirates.

Fuck- fuck.

‘Prat’tña,’ Namjoon says in a low voice, hastily switching on his Comm Device receiver. ‘I think a few pirates have recognized me-’

Suddenly the villager yells something out loud, and with their free arm, points at the pirates. The youngling in their arms covers their ears and the Human youngling locks his arms around the villagers legs.

There’s an immediate reaction.

The shoreline stop quiets down drastically and everyone, including the Androids, stare at the pirates.

‘Captain Namjoon,’ the villager says quietly, nudging him with a free elbow before picking up the Human youngling with a bit of a struggle. Automatically Namjoon takes the Human youngling in his arms, and quickly follows the villager.

‘Come,’ they say, snuggling their youngling closer and pushing their head down, covering their sight. Namjoon does the same, looking back briefly and noting how the locals were making a ring around the pirates. Gone is the normal and quaint shoreline stop, replaced rather with a very serious tone.

The locals around them start to make a wall with their bodies, shielding them as they walk through.

‘What’s going on?’ Namjoon asks breathlessly, following the villager.

‘It’s normal.’

‘What?’

‘Sometimes, pirates, Collectors, try to come to Lowet, to take the Artoo’ii away. To try and buy them, or sometimes worse. They are simply protecting their own.’

‘I’m- I’m sorry, I should have-‘

‘This is not your fault. I was just about to tell you some new development.’

‘What’s wrong?’ Namjoon asks, anxiety creeping in. He holds the Human youngling closer as he hears faint shouting noises, the sound of fighting.

‘Yoongi has been arrested in Maho-5. There has been an arrest warrant issued for you, Sk’jin, Yoongi, Hoseok, Taeh’yung, as well as Jimin, though there is no picture for him.’

‘What are the charges?’ Namjoon demands but hastily apologizes to the villager who looks back in worry.

‘Involvement in the Isbahaysiga Alliance.’

Namjoon contains his curses, holding the youngling in a more secure manner as he walks briskly. That’s how those pirates recognized him.
Namjoon apologizes to the villager again once they get off the boat. He’s still carrying the Human youngling. But the villager just shakes their head.

He delivers them back to their stone-house. Dehin is there, waiting for him when he turns back around. They head back to the ship, already completely set up and ready to leave. Prat’tna is there, sitting on a gravity-lift, clearly intended to shuttle him about quickly. He looks displeased, as though he was shoved into it without his consent.

‘Who sent out the warrant.’

‘The GLA Court.’ Prat’tna replies at once. ‘The Special Jury has been compromised now. Amme was called back to Šerdesas. It’s possible that the members of the Special Jury will undergo investigation.’

‘Shit-’ Namjoon curses, ‘-what about the others? Where are they?’

‘Just around the outskirts of Māho-5. If I’m not mistaken, Hoseok has changed, and is currently still within the premise. Yoongi’s arrest has been registered, and the Venture Unit agents in the area are all headed there to pick him up.’

‘I need to contact them-‘

‘-the Deputy who controls Māho-5 is working for Axudar.’ Prat’tna tells him bluntly.

Namjoon gapes down at the Megibīyan.

‘All the more reason to call them and tell them-‘

‘-it is not just that.’

‘Then what is it.’ Namjoon demands. He had both his arms now, he was feeling very ready to punch a sick Megibīyan to get a screen and a communication line back to the others.

‘When I was in Axudar, I was able to discover a lot about how Axudar brought in so many living Beings to experiment on before Ndica finalized his creations. He brought in inmates from prisons all around the Universe. Cuab-D2 is a massive prison just 4 hours from Axudar by warp, and some 2 days from Māho. Cuab is one of the resource pools Ndica had control over. That was until after his death. But then, the Deputy Fanger of Māho took over. But she still sent over more of the inmates gathered there into Cuab.’

‘Are you suggesting we allow them, allow Yoongi to be arrested so that we can find a way in?’ Namjoon asks incredulously.

‘That is a way-‘

‘No!’ Namjoon practically shouts.

‘Fanger will not allow the GLA, or the Venture Unit, or the GIU to take Yoongi prisoner. She will have Yoongi delivered to Cuab, and I am more than certain the others will follow.’ Prat’tna continues, not allowing Namjoon any time to protest. ‘According to surveillance, and by how the systems are run between Māho and Cuab, there will be no way to get Yoongi out of Māho without having to go through Cuab. We will wait for them there.’

‘And we can tell them that.’ Namjoon says with emphasis. He feels like he’s talking to a wall, yelling into space. ‘We can send out a message- maybe we don’t know their exact coordinates or network, but we can hone in on the general location of their signal to-‘

‘No.’

Namjoon gapes down at Prat’tna.

‘What is wrong with you we need to tell them-‘ Namjoon is so frustrated he wants to pull at his hair.

‘Because right now, the forces in Axudar are attempting to take over the largest and most extensive pirating network in the Underverse.’

‘I literally don’t care-‘

‘-which has taken over Cuab-D2 for the past sol or so.’

Namjoon frowns at that.

‘What?’

‘This pirating network is the reason why I was able to escape Axudar in the first place. The Artoo’ii who escaped Axudar, the ones who remained to help those trapped, joined with this network in hopes of being able to provide a channel or means of escaping.’

‘Then that’s great- if you know them, we can access their methods to enter Axudar, like you want,’ Namjoon frowns.

‘They have been infiltrated.’

Namjoon throws his arms up.

‘I believe that those who have infiltrated this network will undoubtedly be alerted of Yoongi’s identity-‘

‘Prat’tna I am literally begging you please, let me speak to the others and-‘ ‘Namjoon why are not listening to what I am saying.’

Namjoon was going to do it. He was going to punch a dying Being.

‘Someone in your crew is betraying you.’

Namjoon laughs.

‘No. We literally went over this ourselves before. None of us are betraying each other you can’t say that,’ Namjoon says bluntly.

‘I will not allow you to call in to tell them anything because of their connection to Axudar,’ Prat’tna explains in a pained manner.
‘I don’t believe you,’ Namjoon states simply. ‘You know what, fine, you say you’re not going to allow me to call them- fine. You can stop with the bullshit.’

He turns away and walks in.

Fuming under his breath, Namjoon takes a seat inside the Bridge. Some time later, Prat’tna comes in as well.

With no announcement, the ship readies for take off, slowly lifting into the air. Namjoon spies the villagers in the distance, watching them take off.

‘I-…honestly sometimes I wish we had known nothing about what was out there,’ Prat’tna confesses quietly from behind him. Namjoon ignores him. ‘Sometimes I wish we all just- stayed where we were- remained ignorant, hidden and alone in our own planets, our systems.’

The ship pulls up beyond the clouds, entering space and pulling out of the sky until pale blue is darkened completely to black.

‘But it’s- it won’t be like that,’ Prat’tna says faintly, ‘because nothing will stop what’s out there, from finding us. From finding you.’

Ynqaba is a small circular light covered in a twinkling smudge of asteroids.

A sudden memory strikes him out of nowhere. A desperate and anguished voice, but delivered almost flat. Namjoon turns his back to the window abruptly.

‘What is it?’ Prat’tna asks.

Namjoon turns his back to the curvature of Lowet gleaming in the dark of space behind and all around them.

‘Just remembering something.’

Everything turns white as they pull into warp.

‘You should have left me here to live!’

*:

Just because Namjoon was explicitly not allowed to contact his crew, didn’t mean he wasn’t going to try. Namjoon is resourceful and honestly if he wasn’t surrounded by GI he would have succeeded in at least one of his attempts. However, his many attempts have no ultimately lead him to being tied down to one of the Lobby couches. The GI almost seem apologetic, even putting a blanket over his knees and a pillow under his head.

One of them even brings a cup of tea with a straw in it for him.

Namjoon is so frustrated he can’t even begin to express himself.

Again, he doesn’t understand how they’re travelling this fast. How were they making this many lightsols in warp?

The GI sometimes let him out of his bounds, but then again, Namjoon finds every possible way of attempting to get his hands on a way of communicating with the others, including locking himself in a bathroom, accessing a wiring system that he knew was linked closely to a communications-network. The door is blown out and Namjoon is basically tied up again.

He’s followed to the toilet since then, and Namjoon accepts it because he did bring this on to himself.

He pointedly ignores Prat’tna, and the elder Megibīyan doesn’t try to reach out either. He’s updated on the progress of the others via screen, held by a GI agent, while he’s tied up.

They were now a little less than a day away from Cuab-D2 and at least Namjoon is allowed to research this “network” Prat’tna had mentioned.

And it is nearly impossible to find anything until Prat’tna sends him the appropriate files, probably a peace offering. Which Namjoon accepts but extends no peace, only sending the Megibīyan glares. It’s the most he can do right now, tied up like this.

Namjoon is not above punching a dying Being. Sk’jin would be proud.

Run by an Ožkan called Ilya, the pirating network in question was incredibly old, and incredibly widespread. It reminds Namjoon a little of Sk’jin’s old pirating network

It wouldn’t be surprising if they mimicked Sk’jin’s style. The Khol’isa was after all, incredibly infamous during his time, and much later on. There have since been many pirating networks that have attempted to mimic Sk’jin’s style.

This network, one that didn’t even have a name to them, was probably the most extensive and hidden one after Sk’jin’s own. Of course that was assuming everything he was looking at was complete. Namjoon’s sure that there must be more to this pirating network than just simply deep-core infiltration. According to the side-notes, through which Prat’tna was communicating to him with, Ilya was supposed to be assassinated by the GI because he was too close to the whole shit-storm mess. He survived it, and apparently since then, has been closely keeping a watch in this general area.

Namjoon leans back as comfortably as he could, bound as he was, on the Lobby couch. The GI who was holding up his screen lowers their arms, just sitting.

‘You probably don’t want to watch me think, staring blankly into the air,’ Namjoon tells them, ‘And as I am very bound, I don’t think you need to really sit here all the time.’

‘In case you try something fishy.’

‘Oh, that’s good usage of the word.’

‘…thank you.’

‘I do kinda wanna walk around though,’ Namjoon smiles his best, ‘Helps me process my thoughts.’

They bring him a sort of walker- a stretch of mechanics that rotates as he walks. Namjoon just sighs but gets on, fully bound save for his legs.
‘The GLA Court has sent a special unit to escort Yoongi back.’

‘Escort or kill,’ Namjoon asks grimly.

‘Probably the latter.’

‘Can’t we do something about that or would that ruin your chances of entering Axudar hm?’

He gets no response.

It was so infuriatingly frustrating. Namjoon does not understand this logic and honestly there was none. Either that or Prat’tna was not telling him something. Namjoon doesn’t even want to entertain the idea of someone snitching.

It was laughable at best, considering everything they’d been through together. It was absolutely impossible.

Namjoon gets off the walker with a huff.

‘Did you finish processing your thoughts?’

Namjoon just grimaces.

‘That was very quick.’

It feels like an insult somehow.

The next few days are the same. Namjoon is regularly tied up, straw-fed tea and other drinks, carefully given his medication, and during certain assigned hours, someone holds up a screen for him, and Prat’tna updates him on every notable activity.

Apparently Jungkook and Hoseok were doing an exemplary job pretending to be Venture Unit agents and had taken over the escort operation, and infiltrated Deputy Fanger’s entire department. The real escort ship sent by the GLA Court to “escort” Yoongi is by some miraculous work (from Sk’jin and Hoseok), legally obliged and authorized to only “escort” Yoongi back from Cuab-D2 rather than take him directly from Māho. And according to Prat’tna, the escort ship was also safely taken care of by both Jimin and Taeh’yung, and they were now, with their new smaller ship, hidden within the escort ship.

They’re halfway there, when Prat’tna tells him that the prison-ship docked in Māho-5 was now entering warp to head to Cuab-D2.

Apparently they’re not able to get any form of surveillance or footage from within the prison ship so Namjoon simply watches their individual trackers, their movements projected into a blueprint of the ship, painstakingly procured by Namjoon himself after he tutors 3 GI agents on how to get it.

‘We’ll be there in a few hours.’

Namjoon doesn’t even flinch at Prat’tna’s voice from somewhere to his right.

Right now, Namjoon was laying flat across a wide bench, the projection of the blueprint and 6 shining bright dots occasionally moving about it shining from a screen on top of his chest.

‘That’s great.’

‘I’m sorry.’
‘Uh huh.’

He hears Prat’tna sit down heavily.

‘We can’t get any activity from within the prison-ship, but we are able to get some look into Cuab-D2.’

‘That’s great.’

‘It seems that Cuab-D2 has been overtaken by the network lead by Ilya. His right-hand, Jn’yound, seems to have infiltrated the whole system.’

Namjoon read the name in Prat’na’s notes. Knows he was an Egg that escaped Axudar.

‘We have also picked up on transmissions being sent and received by the prison-ship to and from Axudar.’

This draws Namjoon’s attention.

He hasn’t seen Prat’tna since they left Lowet. And he looks worse for wear. His skin was almost loose on his frame; like he was sagging somewhat. His yellow eyes turning a strange murky and unclear colour.

‘Have you been able to intercept those transmissions?’

‘No. There’s also messages being sent from Māho-5 to the prison-ship. Those we have been able to intercept.’

The blueprint over Namjoon’s chest shifts, instead audio piping through.

‘Don’t take them lightly.’

‘I’m not. If anything you did- how the fuck could you allow something like this to happen-‘

‘how was I supposed to know?!’

‘Both of you keep calm- now is not the time. I’ve set up the timing perfectly- this will still work.’

‘What about the Zhak’gri?’

‘I’ve already set it into motion- we can’t draw any suspicion from him.’

‘And the GI?’

‘He’s almost dead- really giving out that one.’

‘The others?’

‘The Khol’isa is weak too. I’m worried about the Vicitra.’

‘Why not set ours onto him? He looks young- she’d be more than happy to take him on.’

‘And what about the Venture Unit agent? I’m telling you- he’s not one to overlook.’

‘I’ll take care of him. But first we need to separate all of them. Or get them down to the Hangars and we pull out the outer Atmoshield. We can get a few of them that way.’
‘But doesn’t Axudar want them?’

‘Axudar will get what they want regardless. We need to concentrate on getting the Zhak’gri out of the way, putting Ilya in Cuab, taking Jn’young out, and maybe take care of Jaen.’

‘What about E’nid, she won’t take this.’

‘Then we take care of her too.’

‘How are the communication lines?’

‘Ready to deactivate the hardware settings any time; but just a second, Camil.’

‘What?’

‘I’m genuinely concerned about the Zhak’gri. Will the medication be enough to knock him out?’

‘Yes- but make sure that whoever gives him the food has absolutely no idea. I can’t look at him without feeling like he knows what I’m thinking- he freaks me out.’

‘Can’t you just take him out-‘

‘Evdos don’t be an idiot.’

Namjoon feels himself shaking with anger.

‘After docking in Cuab-D2, this group of infiltrators from Axudar will then start up their coup, so to speak.’ Prat’tna tells him calmly as the audio cuts off and is replaced with the blueprint. Prat’tna taps along his own screen and the projection changes.

‘This lower area contains all of the inmates. Some of them are Ilya’s network- but most of them have already been compromised,’ Prat’tna explains. ‘This area is where all of the Hangars are. If we follow on their discussion, they plan on removing the outer Atmoshields around the whole prison-ship. This will also create a dense field of debris around them. Our plan is to exit warp the moment this happens- so we can shield our approach within the debris.’

‘And then what?’ Namjoon grits out.

‘I was going to ask you.’

Namjoon’s anger skyrockets. Sitting up, screen on his chest falling with a clatter on the ground, Namjoon rounds up to glare at the Megibiyan.

‘You want me to what?!’

‘What do you want to do?’

‘Contact the others now and warn them!’

‘The infiltrators from Axudar have already shut down all communication channels and have made it impossible to send in any-‘ ‘Unbound me,’ Namjoon demands.

A GI who was probably always there appears and undoes Namjoon’s bounds.
Namjoon stands up and storms upwards to the Bridge and straight for the Navigation Table. He’s ready to throw punches if he’s stopped but there’s no need. The Table is empty and no one was standing guard over it. He grabs one of the NaviLets from the slot under the wide lip of the Table before he starts.

‘Make and model of the prison-ship we’re tracking?’

[CUAB_D2_RQ-0072-1]

It immediately pops up, along with the blueprint that had been projecting above his chest just a minute ago.

‘Network channel integration?’

[INTERNAL ROUTER NETWORK | MANUAL OS ]

Undeterred, Namjoon proceeds on.

‘What’s the name and make of the ship we’ve started using?’ Namjoon asks, barely acknowledging Prat’tna when he appears. It’s his breathing that alerts Namjoon more than anything.

‘Laikin-‘

Namjoon is already off.

‘Redirecting my Comm Device UZ_N_001 network to access Lisai OS, aboard the Laikin.’

The line connects immediately.

‘Fuck-‘ Namjoon almost drops the NaviLet. He also almost flinches, expecting to be bound up but it doesn’t happen.

‘Fuck- Hoseok? Sk’jin?’

The line is clear, but there’s no response. No one was connected to the Laikin. No one was aboard the Laikin at the moment so they couldn’t hear him.

But Spaces, does it make Namjoon feel better. If he could, he would take a moment to just take in this moment of assurance.

They were all right. Somehow this proved it.

He quickly strengthens the signal, redirecting and accessing the Communications Board. In less than a minute, Namjoon can access the surveillance footage from the Laikin.

It was empty, but he can access every single angle from outside the ship as well.

Namjoon takes a deep breath.

‘Okay- this is what we’ll do.’
‘They’ve just shut off their communications network for the hardware.’ Prat’tna reports, sounding utterly weak and faint, his voice nothing more than a raspy breath at this point.

‘Get ready to pull out of warp the moment they blast their Atmoshields!’ Namjoon orders, pulling himself through his space-suit, leaving it to sit around his waist for the moment before pushing his arms through.

‘Understood, Captain Namjoon.’

Namjoon stares down at the NaviLet, at the surveillance of the Laikin. He’s internally chanting that they don’t make it to the Hangars. Hoseok was in the mid-section of the ship, Taeh’yung higher-up. But Jimin, Yoongi, Sk’jin, and Jungkook were headed for the Hangars, clearly redirected there.

‘There’s something happening in Cuab-D2. It’s going to start.’

‘Wait-‘

Namjoon sees them.

It’s Jungkook first, running ahead, looking determined and pleased.

Had he grown? He had- his hair was longer too, his cheeks fuller. He looked-…he looked healthy, and happy.

A minute or so later, Sk’jin appears. Unlike Jungkook, Sk’jin appeared a little diminished- weighed down. He walked without any of his previous flourish- no extra flounce to his steps. And then Jimin appears, and behind him Yoongi.

Namjoon can barely look at the Human.

He looked drawn out, skin already paler than usual, his clothes hanging off of him strangely.

He can hear them speaking and for a moment he’s almost forgotten that he could speak to them now. Warn them to move.

‘H-hey!’ Namjoon yells. Jungkook was inside the Laikin’s hangar. ‘Jungkook! Kookie!’

The Vicitra can’t hear him from the Hangar. It was impossible. Namjoon works quickly; he would need to redirect the mic towards the Hangar. It shouldn’t take too long.

‘Namjoon.’

Sk’jin has stepped out of the safety-line for the emergency Atmoshield. And so does Jimin. Jungkook is still inside the Laikin- Namjoon could do this- he could do this-

‘Wait- I can do this- I can access it-‘ Namjoon grits through his teeth, ‘Come on- come on Jungkookie come on-‘

‘They’re sending in some sort of team from the back-‘

The NaviLet screen flares orange and in a blink, everything on the display changes- the view shatters and-Namjoon watches with horror as the two tracking dots, Jimin and Sk’jin, are suddenly rocketing out of the blueprint, out into space.

‘Shit-!’

‘Pulling out of warp in one minute.’

Namjoon drops the NaviLet and heads for the end of the Hangar they were all gathered in. He quickly finishes up pulling up the space-suit on, the same as the other GI numbered at a neat 41, who were all gathered in the Hangar, waiting for him in separate units and teams.

‘Brief revision- calling each team!’ Namjoon yells out into the quiet Hangar, ‘Verbal responses are greatly appreciated understood?’

He gets a quiet chorus of ‘Yes, Captain Namjoon.’

‘Team 1!’

‘Make safe living quarters in the top-tier of the prison-ship. Contain inmate activity. No killing unless strictly necessary.’

‘Team 2!’

‘Contain cell-levels, gather and detain all inmates. No killing unless strictly necessary.’

‘Team 3!’

‘Subdue mid-levels- track all functioning Comm Devices. No killing unless strictly necessary.’

‘Team 4!’

‘Contain and detach Cuab-D2.’

‘Team 5!’

‘Find and secure all Laikin team members aboard the prison-ship.’

‘Good!’ Namjoon braces himself against the walls of the Hangar. ‘Nineti- you’re coming with me.’

‘Pulling out of warp in 5…4…3…2…1.’

Bracing himself, he grabs one of the extension-cords, tying it around his waist the same time Nineti nods and gives a delayed response to his order, doing a routine check of his body-jets. He hands him a space-gear helmet and Namjoon hooks it under his arm rather than wear it over his own head.

‘Suit 18-D ready for space-walk.’

‘Ready the Hangar for space-walk!’ Namjoon orders. ‘Teams 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5 get ready!’

‘We’re almost clearing the debris- we’ll be on top of the prison-ship in 20 seconds.’

Namjoon counts the seconds down, hands forming fists. The ship vibrates several times but it’s nothing bad, the central gravity of the ship allowing them to stand and stay centered despite the obvious twists and turns they were taking, avoiding hurtling pieces of debris from the prison-ship.
‘Nineti will find Jimin,’ Prat’tna coughs out, ‘Find your friend.’

‘Hangar decompressed- ready for space-walk.’

Namjoon doesn’t respond as he and Nineti start their run down the de-compressed Hangar, leaping out of the protective Atmoshield.

It’s bone-shattering cold but it doesn’t hurt Namjoon- doesn’t do anything to him really- at least for this time being.

Below him the prison-ship is a dark blob, the stars illuminating its shape from below. An arc of light grows from the space between Cuab-D2 and the prison-ship, sharply highlighting the sudden expansion of debris rocketing from compromised Hangars, lining up the entirety of the prison ship.

The GI are already in formation, moving downwards towards the ship in several directions.

Nineti next to him activates the compressed body-jets at his ankles and hips, repositioning himself before shooting downwards straight to the sudden field of ring of debris. Namjoon follows suit, tucking the helmet under his arm securely.

‘1 minute Captain Namjoon, and counting. Please avoid the shrapnel.’

Namjoon would roll his eyes but he can’t- a massive Transporter, spinning desperately with the force that wrenched it out of its Hangar shoots straight at him. Twisting mid-space, Namjoon propels himself through the emptiness, using another large object, to essentially ricochet in the direction he needed to go.

‘35 seconds, you should be able to see him now.’

There’s another bright arc of light to his side- the massive field of debris around him bathed in a wave of white and-

For a moment, Sk’jin seemed like a cluster of stars- a constellation of ancient and distant stars forming his outline in the dark of space.

‘20 seconds.’

Dodging a few more still hurting debris and flotsam spiraling out of the ship behind him, Namjoon disengages the lock from the extension cable, thumb around the stopper to activate immediately once he secured the Khol’isa.

‘10 seconds.’

He’s drifting slowly, the force with which he had been thrown into space no longer wrapped around him, dragging him further into the dark of space. Namjoon suppresses the shudder of horror, images of the Khol’isa lost in the dark of space.

‘5 seconds and counting 4-‘

Namjoon stretches his arms out-

‘3.’

Sk’jin is frozen- icicles forming around his eyes, nostrils, mouth- a thin layer of ice builds around him, hair encased in it.
‘2.’

There’s another arc of light behind him—reflected in Sk’jin’s half-open eyes—and when Namjoon touches him, for a brief second, as the light fades away, it remains bright in the Khol’isa’s neon-red eyes.

‘1.’

Securing the extension-cord around him, moving as carefully and as quickly as he could, Namjoon secures Sk’jin to himself before pushing the helmet over the Khol’isa’s head.

The ice around his head and face dissipates instantly.

Namjoon waits a painful 3 seconds. And then Sk’jin blinks, eyes unfocused, but staring straight at him.

Namjoon wants to smile, wants to tell him that he’s okay—that he got him—

‘Namjoon-!’

A massive crate is hurtling towards them—Namjoon quickly shoves Sk’jin from himself, disengaging himself from the cord. Twisting in the boundless space around him, Namjoon rises upwards helplessly. There’s a massive slowly floating Transporter above him and setting himself up right, Namjoon pushes up against it, redirecting himself as he activates his compressed-jets.

Sk’jin’s eyes are still open—his fingers encased in a thin film of glittering ice twitch—shards of ice like diamonds breaking from his skin.

Making sure the Khol’isa was still secure, Namjoon twists the stopper on the cord, attaching Sk’jin firmly to himself, and reignites the body-jets, sending them shooting back through the debris.

He spies Nineti doing the same, just a little ahead—his form outlined by a faint glowing that Namjoon recognizes as Jimin.

‘All teams have entered,’ Prat’tna says faintly.

Namjoon is careful as he steps through the Hangar Atmoshield; Sk’jin’s previously stiff body falling apart in his arms. His weight nearly making Namjoon trip but he’s quick to upright himself. He spots the others waiting for them, Medical Beds brought down for immediate treatment.

Namjoon almost doesn’t blame them for not paying him much attention or mind as they gather around Nineti and Jimin, who was still faintly glowing. Namjoon rushes to place Sk’jin over the Medical Bed; there’s a strange rasping rattling sound coming deep from Sk’jin’s chest and Namjoon has to stabilize the Khol’isa immediately.

Carefully he pulls the helmet off; he’s surprised when Yyna comes to help him, placing the security straps over Sk’jin not a moment too soon because the Khol’isa starts twitching violently, his body going through shock—

‘He’s not breathing,’ Yyna tells him, voice monotonous and calm.

‘Sk’jin- fuck!’ Namjoon curses, ‘Sk’jin hey, breathe! Breathe! Sk’jin you can breathe please breathe listen to me—listen to my voice!’

Yyna is placing extracting a tube with a mask at the end from the side of the Medical Bed and places it over Sk’jin’s nose and mouth. Sk’jin’s eyes are unseeing, covered in a strange film, the white of his eyes blotched and reddened, his skin bruised all over, but now reddened.

A few excruciatingly long seconds later, Sk’jin’s whole body arches upwards, pushing painfully against the restraints around him- eyes wide and rolled back before he crashes down, trembling and shaking worse than before.

‘Hey- you’re okay now- I got you okay?’ Namjoon knows it not much help- and that there’s nothing to do about it but he holds Sk’jin down; Sk’jin who was still ice-cold.

‘We need to bring his temperature back up,’ Namjoon says to Yyna who nods, tapping along the extended screen above the Medical Bed. Namjoon takes off the restraints as he grabs one of the blankets at the foot of the bed- he feels the mattress warming up gently.

‘I’m cold- r-really c-cold-c-can’t m-m-move-‘ Sk’jin stutters out faintly- barely audible. The strange film over his eyes slowly giving way as bloody tears began to leak out.

He throws Yyna the blanket before scooping the Khol’isa up in his arms- Sk’jin gasps out, hands grasping over Namjoon’s space-gear- earnestly crying now and Namjoon-…Namjoon feels his heart break.

‘Shh- hey I got you, we got you, you’re safe I promise-‘ Namjoon says gently, placing him over the warm blanket that Yyna quickly folds over the shivering Khol’isa.

‘He’s stabilizing,’ Yyna reports, ‘The scans are clear, he has not sustained any serious injury.’

Namjoon breathes out slowly, relief flooding him.

‘Jimin is stable,’ Prat’tna says with a faint smile, spooking Namjoon as he hadn’t heard him step closer. ‘He probably collided with something- it seems like he dislocated his shoulder, but he has no broken bones. He’s still unconscious.’

Namjoon nods, finally looking over to the other Medical Bed, where Jimin was similarly wrapped in a blanket, unconscious but also safe. The others gather around him, simply watching – were they relieved? Glad? Namjoon honestly can’t tell.

‘The Fifth Team have already been deployed- they are now securing Yoongi and Jungkook.’ Prat’tna tells him.

‘Good- what about Taeh’yung?’ Namjoon asks worriedly, looking around for his screen.

‘The Sixth Team is getting to him,’ Prat’tna tells him as he hands him his screen. ‘They should secure him in a few minutes.’

Namjoon nods, accessing the prison-ship’s surveillance again.

‘Hoseok?’

‘Team One is approaching. They will secure him, don’t worry,’ Prat’tna tells him reassuringly as he slowly and carefully kneels down before sitting on the floor.

‘Hey-‘ Namjoon frowns, kneeling down as well.

‘Tired,’ Prat’tna smiles, ‘Just needed to sit for a moment, was starting to get dizzy.’ He looks over to the side before calling out, ‘Take them both up to the Medical Bay- watch over them, link their
The GI don’t respond, only moving to obey the orders as they push the Medical Beds out of the Hangar with a gentleness that certainly did not match up with their emotionless brutality. The moment they’re out, Prat’tna falls back gracelessly, panting a little.

’Woah hey-‘ Namjoon crawls over quickly, looking over the GI with worry.

’We found him,’ Prat’tna smiles, ‘He’s safe- our Fate is safe- we are saved.’

’I’ll go get the oxygen tank-‘ Namjoon makes to stand but Prat’tna reaches out, missing as he attempted to grab a hold of Namjoon’s hand. He immediately pauses, turning his full attention to the GI.

’Ilya and Jn’young are both secured as well- Cuab-D2 has been shut down completely- the levels cleared.’ Prat’tna breathes out, yellow eyes fixed on a spot on the ceiling. Namjoon doesn’t need to check but he’s sure the Medical Bays were there.

’The prison-ship has been contained. The last of the inmates are being rounded up.’ Prat’tna grins, ‘Everything has gone according to plan.’

Namjoon tries to respond in kind, but he can’t, realizing what Prat’tna was doing.

’Let me go get the tank for you,’ Namjoon pleads, ‘Don’t you want to talk to Jimin? Tell him everything you told me yourself?’

He senses movement, rather than hearing it or seeing it, and Namjoon knows the others were gathering around them.

’I walked alongside my Fate for years and years,’ Prat’tna breathes out, ‘In waking, and in dreaming- and I know I will still walk with him, beyond what ties me down, beyond what lets me go-‘

’Come on-‘

’If I push on-‘ Prat’tna finds his hand, ‘If I push on, and if I am like this, before him, it won’t-…he doesn’t deserve this- I can’t- I can’t see him-‘

’But-‘

’He will know- of course he will,’ Prat’tna wheezes out, his words come out rasped, breathless, ‘But I don’t want him to see me like this. I don’t- I don’t think I could-‘

’Prison cells are all secured.’

Prat’tna smiles at him, ‘It is done then.’

’How- uh, how many did we lose?’ Namjoon asks carefully.

’8,’ Prat’tna breathes out, ‘You did the best you could- you did very well. The mission has succeeded.’

Namjoon doesn’t want to hear that right now.

’You have guided us well, Son of Kutsoglera,’ Prat’tna smiles, ‘Maybe we were wrong, to shut ourselves out from the beauty that lay beyond what-…beyond what we deemed worthy.’
Namjoon doesn’t know what to say. He can’t look away from Megibīyan. Sure he was held in a very weird hostage situation, and it wasn’t an ideal situation to be in- but Namjoon can’t help but be moved.

‘I’m…I’m sorry,’ Namjoon says helplessly. He doesn’t know exactly what he’s apologizing for.

Prat’tna snorts faintly, blood bubbles out of his mouth, ‘There’s no need- no need- I’m sorry. Please- please tell him-‘

Prat’tna’s breaths are fainter and fainter, incredibly shallow despite how his whole chest heaves.

‘It’s- it’s good. I can…I can rest too now…finally. I’m sorry…-‘

It’s there again- that look of reverence.

‘Will you make sure that- that the village-‘

Namjoon nods quickly, ‘Of course, of course I will.’

Prat’tna smiles, relief in his features.

‘Maybe now- maybe now, we are-‘

‘-you’re found,’ Namjoon manages to say.

Prat’tna’s smiles his last exhale, eyes looking up straight ahead.

The GI all around the Hangar raise their hands to the air, palm open before creating a fist and then holding it over their chests. Namjoon does the same.

‘Mission successful Captain Namjoon. Now securing Ngfy’widan Hoseok.’

Namjoon exhalas out slowly, lowering his arm before bending over, straightening out the Megibiyan carefully.

‘Link me to Hoseok and the others,’ Namjoon wipes at his face, sitting down on the floor, ‘Let’s get you all home.’
And! Here is a summary of every bit of information we can now combine together that we have so far learnt because I know this can get confusing and I am so sorry if I am not clear but I do want everyone to be in the same page- it couldn't fit in the authors notes:

1. The first children are the first creations of the original and first Yisheng who came to THIS universe in THIS dimension of time and space
2. The first children are not so much, living Beings but rather entities of life, death, light, darkness, etc. all combined- they are not like, “gods” of anything, but rather everything that Exists, with a living consciousness and stream of thought that has since the Beginning™ existed. They then, individually, created and streamed their thoughts into form and mass, creating planets systems stars suns etc, and in this stream of living thought, living Beings were born
3. The first of these living Beings, this area the Cradle of Life so to speak, is where Taeh’yung’s people are from- the way they live/exist/die is utterly different from how the rest of the living Beings after them live/exist/die
4. Not a lot is known about Taeh’yung and his history
5. The first children created other living Beings similar to Taeh’yung
6. Yisheng escaped his dimension of death, destruction, corruption and in this dimension wished to create a new universe where none of that would exist, where no death destruction all that shit wouldn’t exist
7. However Yisheng is an idiot and of course that can’t, because it would be same concept as saying “im a human and I don’t want to give birth to a human so im still gonna get pregnant but go to the moon and have a moonling instead” clearly you’re still gonna give birth to a human
8. So all of the first children were, in OG yisheng’s eyes, tainted, and their creations also tainted. So he went on a killing rampage. Many of the first children and their creations died, many were able to escape, many were able to completely hide. Yisheng soon stopped, and hid within himself and disappeared from Time and Space though he still continued to hope to find the answers of finding a way to create the “utopia” he desired
9. This “utopia” was a dream that was inherited by the other Yishengs, born as a result of the OG Yisheng wanting to continue his desires through this new breed of living Beings. Obviously not all Yishengs think like this but those who do/did tried their best to find a way to convert/change/rebirth all of Life so that death/destruction/etc would never exist anymore
10. This is how terrible experiments were born, including the one that resulted in Sk’jin’s ship crashing in the Nightmare Planet and of course most importantly the Red Evil who were experimented on Yishengs. They came back twisted and still looking for the same results- kinda like two sides of the same coin in a sense.

11. The Red Evil then created the Omhlphe, who like the GI, were kinda emotionless but faulty experiments used to carry out “crowd control” – the GI killed people who were starting to get too close to the truth (like how Ilya was supposed to be assassinated for getting too close to the Axudarian bullshit), and how the Omhlophe wiped out and destroyed escaping refugees from planets the Red Evil would destroy.

12. Back to the First Children, mengisiti is one of the First Children, who hid her creation within layers of resonance and water (because life exists only where water is) and in hopes that her children would live in safety, trust, and honesty, she split herself into two- the Heart and the Fate and since then they’ve been in hiding.

13. Axudar was of course effected by the First Children being so close- they almost understood that mengisiti was different unique and special – their obsession with immortality as a result of their own short life, influenced further by mengisiti’s closeness, and later Ndica’s assholeness, resulted in them being the way they are now. also potentionally a first children?? who knows, certianly not me.

14. The red evil were the first to discover a way of somehow permeating Mengisiti’s borders by finding a weak spot during mengisiti’s resonance phasing, Ndica hopped onto this and then pushed forward an incessant attempt to influence mengisiti because as he suspected, mengisiti was definitely one of the First Children.

15. Ndica, despite being the mass killer that he was, was in fact, very smart- he discovered that by exposing his creations to areas that could potentially be linked to the First Children somehow further developed them, giving them an actual existence and awareness. So he found “hot spots” in hopes of furthering his experiments to recreate all of life under this one singularity. He also later found that by exposing Beings close to the core of their planets worked similarly as all planets ultimately are filled with life. This was also why the Red Evil harvested planets and moons and systems, as a means of powering the Eggs they were growing inside their ship.

I hope
That uhh
Cleared things up

Chapter End Notes

(Author’s Notes)
Ayeeeee why do I do this to myself I ask, writing such wonderful characters and killing them off hmmmmmmmmmmmmmmmmmmmmmmmmmmmmmmmmmmmmmmmmmmmmmmmm
Also if you guys don’t know…uh, Ka-Yee is Jackson Wang’s real name and yes that’s Jackson
Am I bringing in got7 into this mix, not exactly! but I also wanted to say STREAM 100 WAYS im proud of my boy also am I a lowkey jinson shipper who knows maybe I am I can’t say much ahahahahahahaha not but really I planned for this to take place ages ago but just recently decided that it should be Jackson because why the fuck not also it was his birthday
Jimin can’t get the door to fully close.

It keeps opening behind him, leaving a gap of white.
Frustrated, Jimin goes back to the door and holds it close.
Finally, after a few moments, it stays closed.
Exhaling out slowly, Jimin sags with relief.
He’s not sure why, but he doesn’t want the door open in any way.
Finally, he turns around to face the house. The floors are still shaking, the stairs and bannisters vibrating. The glass windows are shattered, glass on the floors, rain storming inside as thunder and lightning explode every few seconds outside. The door to the study is unhinged, leaning dangerously against the doorpost in a precarious position. Inside, the white curtains have been flung open, the window forcefully opened as though a great wind blast through. The little decorative items everywhere are on the floor. Jimin steps in, the broken bits of glass cool under his feet. He picks up the model of the solar system Earth belonged to and hangs it back up. The little sun model in the center flickers faintly and after a few seconds glows again. Jimin shakes off the broken bits of glass on the soft yellow blanket. He removes the large chunks of glass one by one, each piece returning to its original place. Jimin takes time to make sure he gets every broken piece, returning it to its original place, until the window is repaired. He rearranges the small room to its original state- or at least as best as he could.

He moves on to the small kitchen, returning the broken plates to its original state, the pots on the floor back to the counter, pushing back the chairs that had been flung hard, the long window streaming in a mute light from the storm still raging outside. When he’s done with the kitchen, Jimin finds that the great windows by the stairs have repaired themselves, the storm ebbing just a little, no longer howling, screams of pain and anguish mingled with the wind.
The bedroom is halfway fixed- the windows repaired, but the furniture and other items in the room flung about.
Jimin fixes up the frames first—several hung up on the walls, all framing some random scenery. A forest bathed in early sunlight, a small city amidst clouds, the night sky alight with stars, a pale young moon just faintly visible over an unknown horizon, a grey shoreline with boats, a dim hallway lined with multiple doors.

Jimin straightens them out carefully before turning to the rest of the room. He returns all of the items on the desk back to their original position. He switches on the lamps, straightens the curtains, rearranges the cushion and blanket over the armchair to the side. He makes the bed last, fluffing up the pillows, dusting the covers and rearranging the blanket.

It’s cold, and Jimin shivers a little. He opens the closet door and inside he finds one single jacket. It’s the one Yoongi had worn back in Menigišiti. Jimin knows it well—knows the stitch of the fabric, the curve of the pattern making the sleeve. But it’s clean and comforting, and Jimin slips it on over himself.

It’s still raining, but it’s no longer filled with anguish and pain.

He looks around the room, checking to see if there’s anything he hasn’t fixed.

There’s a quiet yet clear clicking sound that echoes around the house.

It fills Jimin with fear.

Taking a few shaking steps, Jimin brings himself to stand by the bedroom doorway. A cool white light glows mildly, innocently, at the end of the hallway outside.

The door is open.

Frightened, Jimin is stuck. He stares and stares and stares.

Suddenly, he regains control over his body and he bolts. He slams into the doorway, shutting it aggressively.

He’s panting, hands shaking around the old-fashioned door handle that seemed to push against his hold, the doors pushing with a gentle and persistent force.

After several painfully stretched minutes, the door remains shut, no longer strained against Jimin’s hold.

He lets go slowly, but he remains close, distrusting of the door before him.

It remains closed.

‘Hey sunshine.’

Spinning, Jimin looks around wildly.

Yoongi sounded like he was right behind him.

‘Yoongi?’

There’s nothing more.

But the rain has now ebbed to a much more gentle shower, the clouds lifting.

Jimin walks over to the wide windows by the stairs, looking out into the open sky outside.

Warmth spreads from the tip of his nose, all the way down to his body. Jimin hadn’t even realized he was cold all over. A sense of relief washes over him, his shoulders lowering from their rigid and squared tautness.

He was okay. They were okay. Jimin realizes that maybe he’s unconscious.

He makes his way to the bedroom—maybe he would lay down, and wake up properly after a while.

He still didn’t know what had happened, why it had happened; he would need to be prepared, and he would need to be well for that. Nodding to himself, Jimin tucks the jacket closer around himself and opens the bedroom door wider to let himself in. He pauses, looking back at the main door.

‘Please don’t,’ he finds himself whispering.

It remains shut.
Yoongi had been cornered— a mass force of some form of specialized unit overwhelming his attempts at regaining control over the escort-ship. There’s a singular moment— one where he’s crouched behind the landing stabilizers of the escort-ship, TeorSer fire erupting all around him in a shower of sparks as it hits the ship above and around him – and he’s able to look out into the dark of space. Light erupts like delayed lightning outside, illuminating the massive eruption of debris and chaos spilled outside. Too much time had passed. He was too late— he was too…-

Something explodes behind him but Yoongi cannot bring himself to care for it. He looks down at his hands. His arm is bleeding— grazed by a shot from a TeorSer. His left leg has a long cut, someone had thrown something sharp at him, taking out one of his two Heliords. He has one fused out TeorSer, and one flickering Heliord. He was outnumbered, out-timed; Yoongi is lost.

He can barely see the opening to the tunnel that he had run out of, where Jungkook was fighting his fellowbeing to the death. It had been more than 10 minutes for sure, and no sign of Jungkook. Yoongi knew he didn’t have time— even then he knew he had no way of getting to Jimin. And now Jungkook— Another explosion erupts, screams ringing through the large Hangar. The orange Atmoshield is only faintly illuminated in the air, the lights of whatever explosion more than enough to really shine a light in the Hangar. The escort-ship shudders violently, shifting in its place, exposing half of Yoongi. But he can’t find it in himself to hide— to take cover. The dark of space yawns before him. There’s another explosion and amidst that, Yoongi can feel footsteps approaching him— heavy and uneven, running without much balance. The dark of space waits for him.

A rush of anger and anguish overwhelms him and Yoongi jumps to a stand, spinning on his blood-soaked knee to face his would-be attacker, Heliord ablaze before him. But the figure never makes it to him, doesn’t even get close. With the light of one final explosion that takes out the heavy-armored platoon transporter that had brought in the heavily-armed special unit team, Yoongi looks up at the GI who stood ahead of him, the body of his now dead attacker on the floor at its feet. The silhouette of the GI is painfully familiar.

‘Amic?’ The GI just studies Yoongi for a moment and then turns around and walks away. His breath returns to him in a deep and heavy gasp and Yoongi finds that his ears are ringing. There are more GI, walking about in a calm efficient manner, easily overtaking the specialized unit that had overtaken the Hangar. A sudden burst of energy overtakes Yoongi and the Human stands, sprinting back towards the tunnel. ‘J-Jungkook—’ Yoongi gasps out loudly, calling for the young Vicitra as he enters the tunnel. He finds the youngling close to the opening, slumped on the curve of the wall, pale and splattered heavily in blood. ‘Jungkook!’ sliding down to his knees before the youngling, Yoongi rushes to check his vitals. Shaking fingers at the Vicitra’s blood splattered throat reveals a steady pulse. His side is drenched in blood, the smell overwhelming. Looking around wildly Yoongi spots the older Vicitra slumped in an unnatural heap on the floor some ways off. There’s a loud commotion in the Hangar where the Laikin was parked but Yoongi doesn’t pay it any mind. He needed to get Jungkook help- the Laikin had a Medical Bay that was still hopefully functional. Yoongi doesn’t understand what the GI being there meant- but the last time they had shown up, they had lost Namjoon, their ship, and any semblance of stability they had tried so hard to maintain.

Yoongi repositions himself, his breaths harsh in his own ears, to lift the Vicitra up. Jungkook was taller than Yoongi and was very heavy. Unconscious his weight seems denser, and with Yoongi’s physical state, he’s barely able to lift him. He hears calm footsteps approaching him but a sudden panic flares within him. Jungkook was like him, but was also unlike him and the other GI. What would the GI want with him, what would they do to him? Yoongi’s grasp on the youngling is desperate and with hysterical strength ignites his Heliord at whatever was approaching them. The footsteps stop almost immediately.

Somehow, Yoongi is able to move, clutching Jungkook close to himself, Heliord flickering on and off before him. He doesn’t realize he’s fallen until Jungkook tilts at an odd angle, making them crash into the wall to the side.

‘I got you-‘ Yoongi hysterically mumbles, ‘-Jungkook I got you-‘

He covers the youngling with his own body, abandoning his flickering Heliord.

‘-oongi?’

His mind in turmoil, Yoongi has one singular coherent thought: protect Jungkook. Jimin had protected the youngling against himself, against pain, brought him with him- they were both here because of Jimin. Both here as a result of Jimin’s strength, his heart; Yoongi would do anything to make sure Jungkook was safe. He had to- he needed to – because now Jimin was-

‘Yoongi!’

Yoongi snaps out of it.

Namjoon’s kneeling beside him. For a wild moment, Yoongi wonders if he’s hallucinating.

‘Yoongi- look at me,’ Namjoon’s tone is gentle. ‘Let Jungkook go, I need to take him to the Medical Bay.’

‘W-what-?!’ Yoongi can barely speak, throat constricted, vision blurred with both tears and black spots. Namjoon sounds like he’s underwater.

‘Let go,’ Namjoon says gently, ‘I’ve got him, I’ve got you too.’

‘N-Namjoon?’

Namjoon places a hand on Yoongi’s shoulder and then to the side of his head. He was real- he was real and he was here.

‘You’re safe,’ Namjoon tells him, ‘It’s safe now.’

With shaking hands and weak arms, Yoongi finally lets go of his hold on Jungkook.

His whole body still protests as Jungkook is carefully lifted onto a Medical stretcher that had been waiting for them at the side. Namjoon is fiddling with something in his pockets before he pulls out a few compressor shots. He’s gentle when he tears at the already damaged sleeve on Yoongi’s jacket, finding skin to press the shot. Yoongi barely feels it. Namjoon uses all 4 he had taken out and slowly, Yoongi’s head clears up of the dark fog, his sight clearing up, and the sounds around him clearing up. The spot where Namjoon had administered the shots was slowly burning.

‘J-Jimin-,’ Yoongi manages to choke out.

‘He’s fine- he’s in the Medical Bay too,’ Namjoon is resting a tentative hand on his shoulder. A new hand- attached to a new arm to his shoulder. Namjoon was fixed up. ‘So is Sk’jin- they’re both recovering, they’re not in danger.’

Relief washes over Yoongi in painful waves. Unable to stop, he curls in on himself, choking breaths escaping him unwarranted. He numbly feels an arm wrap around his shoulders.

‘Let’s get you fixed up too,’ Namjoon says quietly. ‘You need rest, come on.’

Yoongi’s not sure if he’s moving on his own accord but he’s standing up, his legs weak but not
‘The others are okay,’ Namjoon tells him, supporting him up to the point where Yoongi is barely walking on his own. ‘Hoseok is fine- Taeh’yung was drugged I think, but he’s fine too.’ They were fine. They were all fine.
‘What- what happened?’ Yoongi knows he’s not being specific.
What did happen? To Namjoon, to this prison-ship, why and how were the GI here?
‘The GI took me,’ Namjoon explains, maintaining an easy pace to not rattle Yoongi too much.
‘Back in Lowet- there’s a lot to discuss but not right now- first you all need to heal up-’
‘-you’re- you’re healed up too-‘ Yoongi slurs out.
‘Yeah- yeah I uh, I met another Kutsoglerin, he fixed me up.’
Yoongi’s mind is abuzz with questions but they disappear as quickly as they form. He can’t think straight, his mind settling from the utter chaos it had been thrown into.
They exit the long tunnel and Yoongi spots the Laikin, still smoking a little but no fire ignited anywhere. The Laikin’s Hangar gates are blown up and they’re definitely going to have to fix that immediately.
Next to the Laikin is a new ship- it’s massive, and it’s familiar.
‘Isn’t- isn’t that a Yisheng ship?’ Yoongi’s neck hurts, he can’t look up.
‘It is,’ Namjoon confirms, ‘Like you said, no one checks or registers Yisheng ships. No wonder the GI are invisible.’
Yoongi is lead inside, passing one of the GI who stood guard at the bottom of the ramp. But Yoongi doesn’t have time to pay attention. There’s a sense of dread, of curiosity, building up in him.
He’s half lifted, his feet barely touching the ground of this inner Hangar. He’s pretty sure he blacks out for a moment before he’s opening his eyes again just as Namjoon deposits him on a Medical Bed.
Looking around, Yoongi spots Jungkook in the Bed next to his. There’s a GI there, hands moving deftly as they track the Vicitra’s vitals, administering medication and stabilizers.
Namjoon pushes him back and Yoongi faces the ceiling.
‘Where- where’s Jimin?’ Yoongi manages to get out, head turning about.
‘The other Bay with Sk’jin,’ Namjoon informs him immediately, dragging down the scanner over the Bed just as another GI enters. ‘Were you hit anywhere?’
Yoongi shakes his head slowly.
‘I have to go- need to meet Ilya, and Jn’young,’ Namjoon tells him. He looks hesitant, unsure whether he should leave Yoongi be. But the Human just nods, waving a hand in gesture. The GI approaches them, clearly ready to take over.
‘I wasn’t- wasn’t badly injured, I’m fine,’ Yoongi tells the Kutsoglerin. Somehow it’s still strange to acknowledge that Namjoon was standing there before him but at the same time Yoongi can’t quite get around to really digest that information.
Namjoon nods, reaching into his pocket and retrieving a Comm-Device. ‘Until we can start rewiring every single hardware aboard this ship or issue new ones, we can use this.’
Yoongi fits it to his ear at once, rolling the other one off.
‘I’m going to go meet up with Hoseok, and then go meet Ilya and Jn’young,’ Namjoon tells him,
‘There’- there’s a lot to be said, shared-‘
For a moment, Namjoon looks at him with a scared expression. Not fearful of him, or afraid of whatever it was that he heard, but rather Namjoon looks scared for him.
He knew.
His time spent with the GI was probably a challenging but informative one.
Yoongi manages a small smile.
‘It’s okay,’ he says quietly.
Namjoon opens his mouth and then closes it. He does this a few times, looking uncertain, eyeing the GI in the Bay with them.
‘Namjoon. It’s okay,’ Yoongi tells him firmly, ‘We all know.’
He looks hopeless, sighing quietly for a moment before he nods again. ‘I’ll keep in contact, you can contact Hoseok now too, he has one of the Comms.’

Yoongi nods his thanks, fiddling with the Comm in his ear, twisting it till it gives a small click.

Namjoon pauses briefly, reaching over to squeeze Yoongi’s hand.

‘It’s good to see you again,’ Namjoon says quietly.

‘Yeah-‘ Yoongi swallows painfully, ‘Yeah, you too Captain.’

Namjoon just grins before he turns and exits the Bay.

The GI begins almost at once, no time wasted or lost.

It’s jarring, watching the GI work like this. Jarring, but also familiar. It was like watching a recording of yourself from a memory you weren’t quite sure you remembered having, or if the familiarity of your observed actions in the recordings ignited some muscle memory deep within you.

‘Hoseok?’

‘Yoongi?’ the Ngfy’widan’s voice is clear and relief instantaneous. ‘Fuck- fuck.’

‘You- you’re okay?’ Yoongi manages to get out, blindly watching the GI cut open a wide gap in his pant-leg to access his cut there. It’s not deep, but the angle was odd, pulling at his skin with each flex of his leg, making the cut tear apart wider.

‘Yeah- I’m- I’m fine but- what about Jungkook? He’s doing okay? He’s with you? Namjoon told me he has Sk’jin and Jimin in.’

‘Yeah- yeah he’s with me,’ Yoongi breathes carefully, closing his eyes as they start to sting. ‘He’s with me.’

‘Good…-good, Spaces, Yoongi I’m just-‘

‘Yeah- me too.’

‘Just rest up for now- and uh- I’m meeting Namjoon, and then…’

‘Yeah,’ Yoongi mumbles quietly.

Sitting up, Yoongi carefully peels off his bloody jacket, whatever Namjoon had shot with him, probably some painkiller and inhibitors, was working very well. Only his body was sore in the usual way it was sore. The GI takes it away, pausing before the shredder-tube, glancing back at Yoongi as though in second thought. If Yoongi could see past the helmet he knows he won’t be seeing much of a reaction. So it’s mainly based on intuition that Yoongi just nods. There was no point in saving the jacket.

There’s a ripping sound to the side and Yoongi notes that the GI tending Jungkook is surgically removing the Vicitra’s very heavily bloodstained clothes. He’s sustained some serious injuries; injuries that would definitely scar heavily. His attention is drawn away when the GI tending him comes back with some neatly folded clothes that were definitely freshly laundered. Yoongi briefly wonders why they had spare clothing like this about, and where they were keeping it. The GI keeps it at the foot of the Bed before stating in an unnervingly familiar voice, ‘I need to seal your leg and arm injuries.’

Yoongi peels off the rest of his clothes, sitting nearly naked as his skin is disinfected and cleaned before his wide open cut is sealed, a generous and even coating of growth serum patted all over. ‘We’re the same.’

Yoongi is startled by the voice.

The GI doesn’t continue.

What did he mean? That they were both GI?

But his answer is given when the GI pulls up at the sleeve of his own uniform, revealing skin that’s so bruised and scarred, it was nearly impossible to tell what his original skin colour could’ve been. But Yoongi knows him. Knows that his skin colour is a warm tan, and if his helmet was taken off, a pattern of darker skin would be decorating his facial features in his native race’s cultural practice. Malkr had once explained to him that they had this pattern imprinted into their skin from birth, with their cultural patterns from each “tribe”. It meant something, a representation of something significant. But Yoongi wonders if he would still have them as he was right now. He was one of the first to be taken by the Red Evil in Megibīya.
‘Yeah- we are,’ Yoongi nods, ‘Thank you Malkr.’
He gets no other words from Malkr as he works on Yoongi’s injuries. The GI working on Jungkook’s injuries is still there, still working with no pause.
‘Is he all right?’ Yoongi asks.
He’s not sure if he’s going to get a reply but the other GI replies, ‘The Pravasi H’manun recover and repair much faster than most living Beings.’
That didn’t answer Yoongi’s question directly, but it sort of did anyways. Yoongi is aware that the response was probably not qualified by most conversation standards as an adequate one; nonetheless it makes sense to him.
Yoongi studies Jungkook’s vitals from his Bed, and notes with relief that he was indeed stable, and that he was definitely going to be making a speedy and complete recovery.
Malkr completes cleaning up Yoongi’s wounds and binding his injuries and sealing them by handing him over a few tablets and pills. Yoongi remembers these; some far locked away memory from when he was barely gaining a conscious awareness.
He wonders if these might help.
He dry swallows them before pushing himself to the side of the Bed and carefully standing. He walks over to Jungkook, his side no longer drenched in blood but neatly sealed and contained, his skin shiny with serum. His brow is smooth, no indication of pain. But Yoongi notes with a quiet sigh, the dark circles around the youngling’s eyes.
The GI attending him is still working on his leg, but there seemed no need for any alarm.
Turning around, Yoongi is not surprised to find Malkr gone. He steps out of the Bay, finding himself in a sort of large lobby. It’s empty, with no real indication of it being lived in. The décor and placed items seem very staged, at least to Yoongi, but there’s also a sense of satisfaction as he looks around.
Balancing himself by placing a hand on the wall, Yoongi trudges along the length of the lobby towards the other Bay. The doors are open, probably intentional, and Yoongi quietly peaks inside, finding two occupied Beds.
Sk’jin is horrifying pale, bruises deeply embedded all over his body and up to the sides of his face, the corners of his mouth, and around his eyes. The colours are so vivid; angry almost, strained as though attempting to burst through in purples and reds through his skin. But his vitals look normal too- stabilizing all though he’s placed within an encased Pod-Shield rather than just laying over the Bed. They were probably trying to stabilize his temperature; the Khol’isa generally had a high tolerance for weather-based fluctuations and or extreme conditions, but Sk’jin was different.
Jimin looks marginally better. The bruises developing around him aren’t as vivid- but they’re deep and blossoming, creeping up his neck from the bit of his revealed chest.
While Sk’jin was definitely cared for and tended to, Jimin was placed almost meticulously. The pillow under his head is different- handmade almost. There’s also a jar of some sort of weed placed on the sliding shelves beside the Bed.
There’s a clumsy sort of attempt- one that Yoongi is able to recognize.
He walks over to Jimin, feet cold on the smooth shiny floors.
He looks uneasy; restless even in this unconscious state. Carefully, Yoongi brushes back Jimin’s hair- a little matted and clumped up, away from his forehead. Tentatively, he drags his thumb over his cheeks.
With an abrupt, slightly choked up sigh, Yoongi leans up against the Bed, careful as he places an arm over Jimin’s chest and touches his forehead against his.
‘Hey sunshine,’ Yoongi whispers quietly.
The restless movement under Jimin’s closed eyelids stop- his chest rises, inhaling slow and long, before exhaling quietly. The tautness, almost imperceptible, dissipates.
He presses a light kiss on the tip of his nose, his hand properly cradling the side of Jimin’s face. Taking a few more long and shuddering breaths, Yoongi pushes out the terrified images of Jimin being hurled out into space. He pushes out the overwhelming fear that had consumed him. Taking Jimin’s hands in his, Yoongi presses kisses over the bruised skin before placing them down Quite suddenly, the whole air hums, the ship just ever so slightly vibrating, and Yoongi knows that the engines are running up again.

Looking away from Jimin, Yoongi glances out of the Bay. It was empty. Frowning a little, Yoongi makes his way out and down the way he had come in. Down at the inner hangar, Yoongi notes the absence of any living Being, just some storage-crates and repair kits pushed up to the side of the walls. The hangar gates are open, so Yoongi has a clear view of the main Hangar they were in.

Outside, the stretch of space framed by the massive gateway is busy with movement and light. Yoongi watches the debris outside for a while longer before he notices the pain in his feet. And like some Earthian domino effect, the rest of his body follows and Yoongi takes a deep breath. ‘It’s all right,’ he tells himself, ‘Just a little longer.’

With one last look outside, Yoongi turns and freezes where he stands.

The Hangar which had been empty was now crowded with the GI. They stand, simply observing him- or no, Yoongi doesn’t think he’s being observed.

It was almost as though they were waiting.

There’s around 20 of them inside the Hangar; they must have been ordered to stay back to keep the ship in check just in case of emergency.

A strange memory like a dream resurfaces and-

‘How many Yoongi’s do you see?’

The visor clicks upwards, revealing an expressionless face that regards Hoseok with a familiar yet different gaze before she says in an equally monotonous voice, ‘Mission successful Captain Namjoon. Now securing Ngfy’widan Hoseok.’

There’s a pained groan from Jaen and Hoseok is scrambling towards the Axudarian. Her body was shaking violently, eyes open but unseeing as they roll back at random. Quickly, Hoseok rips out the holster strap from around Jaen’s hip and pries her mouth open before setting it between her teeth. She immediately chomps down, her neck strained, muscles taut and rigid. ‘She’s in shock- hey! You got a med-kit on you or something?’ Hoseok yells at the GI.

Of course this Being was a GI. No other Being in this Universe could so uncannily take out a whole room of armed Beings with that level of efficiency and deadliness without a single injury on themselves.

She doesn’t move, and Hoseok’s not sure if she’s heard him. Cursing under his breath, and very confused at the sight of the GI here and now, it takes a moment to realize that the GI had said Captain Namjoon.

‘Are you speaking to Namjoon?’ Hoseok swivels to look up at the GI, ‘I need to talk to him.’

The GI blinks once before producing a small Comm Device from a hidden side pouch on her thigh and hands it over to him.

Hoseok immediately puts it on before turning his attention back to Jaen, sweat beading profusely on her brow.
‘Hoseok?’
He’s not ready, Hoseok realizes, to hear Namjoon’s voice.
‘Hey- hey I-‘
‘Fuck.’
Hoseok exhales, kneeling down on all fours, fatigue seeping into his very core.
‘You’re all right?’
‘Yeah- yeah I am-‘ Hoseok has to shake himself, he had an injured Axudarian here, he needed to be on top of the situation and he needed to- ‘and you?’
‘Yeah I’m-‘ Namjoon lets out a small short laugh, ‘Yeah I’m fine. It’s uh-‘
‘I-‘
Hoseok can’t get it in him to say anything just yet.
He hasn’t felt overwhelmed like this in a long time. He wishes he were knocked out- incapable of doing anything except to maybe get better. He’s exhausted.
‘I have an injured Being here- I need to get her treated immediately,’ Hoseok finds himself saying. He can’t not do anything right now.
He’s been running like this for so long- he couldn’t just stop. He had to keep running.
He doesn’t even finish speaking when the GI crouches down, pulling out a small tube from her inner pocket, somewhere in the uniform, and presses one end against Jaen’s hip. The Axudarian arches up from the floor, eyes bulging out before settling down, breath escaping her noisily and smoothly.
‘Are you injured?’ Namjoon asks, seemingly having gotten a hold of himself during this stretch as well.
‘No injuries- just confused,’ Hoseok tells him as the GI makes adjustments on his bandages he had strapped over Jaen hurriedly. ‘Namjoon I don’t know where the others are I lost contact-‘
’S-k’jin and Jimin are with me, I’m landing inside soon- right next to the Laikin, I think that’s where Yoongi and Jungkook are.’
‘-and what about Taeh’yuung I haven’t seen him at all-‘ Hoseok rushes to say, leaning back onto the Navigation Table as the GI calmly stands and makes her way to where Camil is slumped on the floor. He wasn’t dead- Hoseok can see his chest moving with every breath he took.
‘he was drugged I think, I don’t know how, but I know his location too, the GI are bringing him down from the pods-‘
‘-fucking Spaces-‘ Hoseok looks up at the ceiling, propping his arms up on his knees. ‘Were they trying to rocket him out of the ship?’
‘Seems like it.’ Namjoon answers, ‘Hoseok, you’ve met and talked to Ilya, the Ožkan commander of the network?’
‘I have- he’s-…yeah I have,’ Hoseok replies, unsure how to explain Ilya’s background history with Sk’jin and whether that was immediately relevant or not. ‘Why?’
‘And the Khol’isa, Jn’young?’
‘Yeah,’ Hoseok frowns, ‘Why?’
‘What are they like?’
‘Oh- I don’t…I don’t know if I’m being honest- they were open to us but that’s-…that’s another story, but what’s the context of your question?’
‘I need to talk to them- Jn’young is injured I hear, so is Ilya but he’s better- waiting for either one to stabilize enough so I can talk to them.’ Namjoon explains before adding, ‘We can’t stay here for long.’
‘What do you mean?’
‘It’s highly likely that Axudar is headed this way- we need to leave Cuab at once.’
‘But-‘ Hoseok looks down at Jaen’s injured form, at the floating debris littered outside like some massive asteroid field.
‘I’ve already made arrangements to go back to Māho,’ Namjoon sounds urgent, ‘I sent some of the GI to handle the situation there and keep it in lockdown for us-‘
‘-but the ship-’
‘-I’ll be talking to Ilya, ways to clear up the debris enough for us to leave,’ Namjoon tells him, he sounded like he was moving, ‘And I’m not sure how much of what he knows- though considering his connection, maybe not in a personal level-‘
Hoseok is not too surprised to hear that Namjoon knew so much already.
‘He knows- he knows almost everything –um, he’s well, a friend of Sk’jin’s.’
There’s a sort of stunned silence for a while before Namjoon speaks again, ‘Was he a member of Sk’jin’s network in the past?’
‘He was a child- one of the rescued Beings who lived aboard Sk’jin’s ship for a long while,’ Hoseok explains, ‘Namjoon it was-…it’s almost as though Sk’jin thought of him as a son.’
It’s quiet for a while.
‘I’m guessing in a sense convincing him might be easier than I expected then.’
‘If we’re in danger from Axudar then definitely yes.’ Hoseok replies.
‘Right- okay, I’ve been told that Yoongi has been found, as well as Jungkook. I’m going to go check on them first,’ Namjoon tells him. ‘Another team will be approaching you soon. It seems that Ilya’s recovered enough- I need him to authorize the GI aboard the ship- tell his crew that we’re- well, they’re safe.’
Hoseok has so many questions.
The last time the GI had made their appearance, Namjoon was kidnapped and Yoongi was nearly killed.
‘All right I will-’ Hoseok jumps a little, noticing 3 other GI now standing to the side. ‘Fuck okay yeah the team is here.’
‘All right- they’ve been ordered to follow you. They’re taking Taeh’yung down to the Medical Bay I’m guessing that’s where you’ll be headed?’
‘I can come to you- if you’re going to meet with Ilya-‘
‘I think- fuck, I don’t know what-‘ Namjoon pauses, clearly thinking hard, ‘No I think stay with Taeh’yung, we still don’t know what’s happened to him- his vitals were all over the place according to the report sent to me. He’s stable, but I don’t know what they did to him.’
‘All right,’ Hoseok nods once before he stands up, wincing as his body protests the movement.
‘I’ll go get buggy. What do I do with Camil here?’
‘He’ll need to be interrogated no doubt-‘ Namjoon stops abruptly. ‘I found Yoongi and Jungkook.’
‘Are they okay?’ Hoseok demands immediately.
‘Shit.’ Namjoon curses softly.
It’s quiet for a while, and Hoseok waits on edge.
‘Yoongi? Hey, Yoongi,’ Namjoon sounds gentle, like he was trying to wake someone from their sleep.
Jaen groans slightly and Hoseok immediately makes his way over to the Axudarian.
‘Yoongi?’
‘Hey, Jaen, can you hear me?’ Hoseok leans over, looking over the Axudarian’s face for any signs of great distress.
‘Yoongi- look at me,’ Namjoon’s tone is gentle. ‘Let Jungkook go, I need to take him to the Medical Bay.’
Hoseok can’t help but imagine the worst.
‘Let go. I’ve got him, I’ve got you too.’ Namjoon sounds impossibly gentle. ‘You’re safe. It’s safe now.’
‘Is she stable?’ Hoseok asks the GI who was treating her.
There’s a single nod.
‘He’s fine- he’s in the Medical Bay too. So is Sk’jin- they’re both recovering, they’re not in danger.’
‘Which Medical Bay are you taking Taeh’yung, the Zhak’gri?’
‘Medical Bay 17-4N,’ one of the newer GI informs him.
‘Let’s take her there too- are the injured being taken care of?’
‘They are,’ the GI answers, albeit awkwardly late.
‘Let’s get you fixed up too,’ Namjoon says quietly. ‘You need rest, come on.’
‘When can internal communications go up?’
‘Unknown for now.’
Great, Hoseok nods tersely to that before gesturing at Camil.
‘Tie him up, he’ll need to be treated for his injuries, but keep watch over him constantly. If he wakes up, report to me or Namjoon.’ Hoseok states.
‘Understood.’
‘The others are okay,’ Namjoon sounds like he’s addressing a child, ‘Hoseok is fine- Taeh’yung was drugged I think, but he’s fine too.’
‘We head straight for 17-4N,’ Hoseok announces, ‘If possible, bring all who need to be treated here, or at least close by.’
There’s no response but Hoseok really isn’t expecting one from the GI. ‘Lead the way.’
Two of the 3 GI produce collapsible stretchers, and in a matter of minutes, have both Jaen and Camil on them. Hoseok walks directly behind the first duo who were carrying Jaen between the two of them.
Hoseok takes a look around- he’s able to at least differentiate the inmates from the local crew- but amongst them, who were involved in Camil’s backstabbing schemes? And how much of it was done because of a true belief in what Axudar wanted, and how much was out of necessity and threat?
Working and living as an agent meant not asking yourself questions like these, but Hoseok can’t help but wonder why. They all knew, clearly, from having Jn’yong aboard their network, and from Ilya’s experiences; yet why would Beings outside of Axudar, so firmly side by an act, by a belief that so evidently lacked morality and went against ever existing principle?
What lead Camil to side with Axudar, when he was in the same crew as Jn’yong, as Jaen who was from Axudar. Even E’nid would prove an exemplary example of how wrong Axudar was in doing what they did, were still doing; E’nid escaped the mandatory class-slavery in Orvan and was living proof.
But Hoseok can’t ask that- not when he’s lived it; not when he’s existed within this very situation, hoping he was on the right side, believing he was on the right side, but coming out of it still aflame for the actions he took.
The GI pause, nearly making Hoseok walk straight into one of them.
‘What’s wrong-’
There are hurried footsteps- several, approaching them. The GI were clearly waiting for a signal from them.
‘Secure Jaen and Camil if things fuck up,’ Hoseok orders, ‘I’ll cover you.’
There’s no acknowledgment of his orders but Hoseok walks past, not before grabbing on of the TeorSers from the GI. He stops at the corner, listening closely. The footsteps pause- cautious before turning a corner. But suddenly the footsteps sprint- rushing around the corner in a huge surge.
E’nid is there, a large TeorSer in her hands, ready to fire as a few others stand behind her. There’s a stretched second of confusion- E’nid recognizes Hoseok, but she’s looking at the GI with fear and confusion.
‘Stand down!’ Hoseok orders at once, throwing down his own TeorSer. ‘E’nid- stand down!’
E’nid hesitantly obeys, and signaling to the others to stand down. Hoseok notes how a few other Beings poke their heads around the corner.
‘What’s going on?’ she asks breathlessly.
‘These are the GI,’ Hoseok explains hurriedly, ‘They’re here to help, they came with my captain-‘
‘-the missing one?’
‘-yes, and Jaen is here- but she’s injured-‘
E’nid’s eyes widen, looking down at the stretcher with fear.
‘She’s all right but we need the Bay-’
E’nid is hurrying over, nearly tripping on her own feet as she stumbles to kneel by the stretcher. ‘She’s all right- she’s all right- but E’nid- look at me,’ Hoseok says hurriedly, kneeling on the other side of the stretcher. E’nid looks up with tears in her eyes.

‘I’m sorry, but I need you to tell the others that the GI are here to help- and to make their way to the 17-4N Medical Bays, or at least the North wing section right now,’ Hoseok tells her in a clear and calm voice. ‘We are not safe here, and we’ll need to move soon. But we need everyone to stay together, make sure no one is lost- at least until communications are up.’

After a few seconds, E’nid nods, blinking away tears. ‘Yeah- yeah I got it- we have short-radio communications and-‘ ‘Okay- get that up and running, repeat what I said,’ Hoseok tells her firmly but gently. She takes a deep breath before looking over to the side, calling the others who were with her. Hoseok stands up, looking over to the surviving crew. They look confused, but put together. Of course, this was Ilya’s crew, and they would know what to do, would manage to stand their ground.

‘Is he dead?’ E’nid’s tone is cold. She’s gesturing to Camil’s knocked out form.

‘No,’ Hoseok shakes his head, ‘We need him for interrogation.’ She nods to that, giving him one last hateful look before turning her attention back around. ‘All right, everyone split up- let’s spread the news quickly and reconnect in 4N.’

They swiftly disperse in small units; efficient, quick, and alert.

‘Yeah- yeah I got it- we have short-radio communications and-‘

‘Okay- get that up and running, repeat what I said,’ Hoseok tells her firmly but gently. She takes a deep breath before looking over to the side, calling the others who were with her. Hoseok stands up, looking over to the surviving crew. They look confused, but put together. Of course, this was Ilya’s crew, and they would know what to do, would manage to stand their ground.

‘Is he dead?’ E’nid’s tone is cold.

She’s gesturing to Camil’s knocked out form.

‘No,’ Hoseok shakes his head, ‘We need him for interrogation.’

She nods to that, giving him one last hateful look before turning her attention back around. ‘All right, everyone split up- let’s spread the news quickly and reconnect in 4N.’

They swiftly disperse in small units; efficient, quick, and alert.

‘E’nid stays on the other side of the stretcher, keeping pace as soon as the GI start walking.

‘What happened?’ she asks after a while.

‘Camil shot her,’ Hoseok explains.

She moves so quickly, Hoseok can barely see where she’s moved to. But she’s on top of Camil’s stretcher, hands gripping around Camil’s head in a horrifying grip-

E’nid is barely there for more than a second before the GI calmly remove her, without dropping Camil’s stretcher.

‘E’nid!’ Hoseok quickly takes over restraining the Orvan, pulling her still struggling form away from the GI.

She’s strong, but Hoseok has the upper hand. He’s also trying not to hurt her.

‘We need to interrogate him-‘ Hoseok grits out, twisting her just enough to stop her from struggling, but not enough to actually hurt her. ‘-please, I know how you feel- E’nid listen-‘

‘We came across more- more-!‘ she can’t say it properly because she can’t fathom it either, ‘We came across them- the others and I just-‘

She starts to cry, crumpling down.

‘They didn’t hesitate- they didn’t even stop I knew them- I knew all of them and they didn’t-‘ Hoseok carefully lowers her to the ground, kneeling beside her.

‘They even- we stopped a whole unit headed- headed for the living quarters upstairs and-‘ she coughs, barely able to get her words out. Hoseok carefully reaches for her shoulder, patting her there before squeezing gently. He looks over at the GI and nods down the hallway. They move in unison, making their way down the hall.

‘Why- why would they do this?’ E’nid asks.

She’s not expecting an answer.

‘I understand,’ Hoseok says quietly.

He feels E’nid looking at him.

Hoseok curls his hands into fists, fire smarting his palms. Hoseok understood- all too well. He understands their confusion, their paranoia, the way every single action simply tugged at the floor beneath their feet.

It’s how he’s been living his life for the past 5 sols.

‘Hoseok?’

‘Yeah- I’m here,’ Hoseok replies at once, ‘I’m still moving up towards the Medical Bay.’

‘Okay- I uh, I’m coming there to pick up Camil.’
‘Why? I’m taking him up to the Bay,’ Hoseok answers.
‘There’s been some reported attacks,’ Namjoon tells him carefully, ‘Ilya’s crew- I think their confusion and panic is driving their judgment right now. The GI broke the fight apart but 2 of Camil’s crones died as a result and we need to interrogate them.’
‘I get it,’ Hoseok looks at E’nid who was wiping at her face, gaze determinedly pointed downwards towards the floor.
‘Okay- I’m coming over to meet you and your team. All still good?’
‘Yeah, I guess,’ Hoseok stands, extending his hand down to the Orvan who takes it, standing up as well.
‘I just left Jungkook and Yoongi at the Bay aboard the GI ship,’ Namjoon tells him, ‘Jungkook has a very fast recovery rate, of course, but he’s been really badly injured.’
‘How bad is it?’ Hoseok asks as E’nid takes a moment to communicate over her short-radio as well.
‘We found him on time,’ Namjoon explains tersely, ‘Yoongi was….’
He trails off for a while.
‘You were aboard Yisheng Amme’s ship.’
‘Yes, how do you know?’
‘The GI told me,’ Namjoon answers, ‘And from what the GI told me…Amme was involved for quite a while.’
‘She was,’ Hoseok confirms, turning the corner in the hallway. The GI are some ways ahead, already slowing down for them to join them. Down towards the end of the hall Hoseok sees a lift. ‘The GI also told me about…and from what Yoongi said to me, it seems like he knew too.’
‘Knew what?’ But Hoseok has a good feeling he knows what Namjoon is referring to.
‘About Yoongi- and others potentially like him- not just as GI or- or as an Egg.’
‘Yeah- I uh- Yoongi told me.’
‘Oh.’
‘Is he….is he awake?’
‘He is. I gave him a Comm- you can talk to him- he should connect to the network now.’
‘I will.’
‘I’ll see you soon.’
They catch up to the GI while E’nid is still talking, listening intently over the slightly static sounds.
‘Hoseok?’
‘Yoongi?’ Hoseok closes his eyes- relief flooding him, uncaring he was walking blindly. ‘Fuck-fuck.’
‘You- you’re okay?’ is the first thing Yoongi asks him.
‘Yeah- I’m- I’m fine but- what about Jungkook? He’s doing okay? He’s with you? Namjoon told me he has Sk’jin and Jimin in.’ Hoseok can barely contain himself. They stop before the lift, the GI accessing the screens. ‘Yeah- yeah he’s with me,’ Yoongi sounds carefully monotonous. ‘He’s with me.’
‘Good….good, Spaces. Yoongi I’m just-‘ Hoseok finds a wall and leans against it.
‘Yeah- me too.’
‘Just rest up for now- and uh- I’m meeting Namjoon, and then…’ Hoseok breathes out quietly, turning when he feels a hand on his shoulder. E’nid gives him a supportive look before nodding towards the opening lift doors. ‘Yeah,’ Yoongi mumbles quietly.
The lift is silent.
‘Are they always this motionless?’ E’nid asks, looking at the GI, ‘I know they’re here, but somehow it’s just-‘ Hoseok lets out a small snort, ‘Yeah, I live with one, so I know what you mean.’
‘Do you get used to it?’
‘You get used to not getting used to them I guess,’ Hoseok answers honestly.
E’nid, who looking down at Jaen chuckles a bit.
‘Your captain is coming in?’
‘Yeah- they’re rounding up Camil and his… I dunno, his crew? Put them somewhere uh-‘ ‘Safe,’ E’nid says dryly.
‘Yeah.’
E’nid nods to that.
The lift stops, the doors opening to a surprisingly clean and undamaged hallway.
‘We’re in the North wing now,’ E’nid tells him, ‘We shouldn’t be too far from the Medical Bay-‘
There’s a weird shudder that erupts around the ship.
E’nid gasps, immediately moving low, towards Jaen’s stretcher and redirecting the GI towards the wall, gesturing at them to crouch to which they comply.
There’s a strange chorus of voices, yelling so loud it reverberates through the air in a familiar tone.
‘Oh fuck-‘ Hoseok manages to say before the air sparks bright green in furious dizzying succession and a sloppy, very uneven triangular emptiness opens up on the wall and ceiling, dropping in Taeh’yung right before them.
The walls and floors ripple with a strange force, erupting into strange triangles and pyramids jutting out before collapsing immediately. Explosions of mold like moss spread and disintegrate into ash, the strong stench of ozone burning through the air, making Hoseok’s eyes water. There are bursts of strange growth erupting from the edges and corners of the hallway, briefly overwhelming Hoseok before dropping away from him like ash.
Taeh’yung stands in a haze, as though the air around him couldn’t quite contain him.
He’s screaming but there’s no audible sound; he’s standing utterly still, but everything seemed to be hurtling around him in a daze of lights and shadows. The ground ripples from where he stands, neon-green eyes locking down on the stretchers.
His mouth opens, a bright light shining so bright it’s almost painful.
Hoseok has never felt fear like this.
‘Taeh’yung!’
Hoseok pushes against the force and weight of the air- and somehow this seems to jar all of reality around them, the walls and ceilings righting itself.
Then Taeh’yung groans, pain evident in his voice as the strange light dims and Taeh’yung falls to one knee, clutching his head in his hands.
E’nid is peddling backwards, grabbing the stretcher with Jaen in it, as though to pull her aside, pushing ash away from her face.
Taeh’yung looks wild, his eyes ablaze and his movements unclear and loopy- he’s clearly still not all there, his movements swaying violently. But he keys in on the movement, eyes narrowing into a glare that petrifies E’nid where she was crouched over.
But then he dismisses her, before his gaze lands on the stretcher to the other side.
‘You-!’ Taeh’yung points over in Camil’s direction, his movements simultaneously too fast and too slow- each swaying motion reveals another form another shape-
Taeh’yung lets out a shriek- high pitched and many layered- several voices screaming. He dashes himself against the wall, as though to set himself right. The wall dents, forming deep craters.
‘Buggy-‘ Hoseok immediately steps forward, arms raised up towards the Zhak’gri but Taeh’yung retches violently, making Hoseok peddle back in alarm.
Taeh’yung coughs, whacking against his chest as he heaves. The shadows pulling around him are shrieking, curling and writhing around him.
‘What-?’ E’nid is breathless, watching with fear.
Taeh’yung hits his head again, the copper lines around his skin flickering in light, neon green flickering around him in a way that made Hoseok’s eyes water.
‘What did you do to me??’ Taeh’yung roars at an unconscious Camil before retching again.
Footsteps approach from behind them and Hoseok doesn’t want anyone to intrude in on this moment.
‘E’nid- I’ll take care of this- you take Jaen- I’ll calm him down-‘
E’nid is alarmed, torn between needing to stay to keep an eye on things but also take Jaen up to the Hoseok barely registers the appearance of the additional GI, only noticing them because of the Being who comes with them.
Namjoon appears, eyes wide as he takes in the sight before him.
‘Namjoon-
Everything abruptly stops, and Taeh’yung turns to face the Kutsoglerin, suddenly looking very much like a child.
‘Pa!’ Taeh’yung’s voice is wobbly, his lower lip trembling before his whole face scrunches up and he bawls, flailing a little before barreling into the Kutsoglerin.
Namjoon looks a little overwhelmed before he hugs the Zhak’gri back, a smile on his face.
‘Hey buggy,’ he says gently. ‘You’re not doing so good?’
Taeh’yung groans thickly, a choked sob stuck in his throat as he leans against the Kutsoglerin with his entire weight.
‘E’nid,’ Hoseok calls the Orvan away from the strange reunion, ‘Take Jaen up, the GI will help you.’
E’nid nods hesitantly before standing up on shaky legs, still eyeing Taeh’yung with both fear and confusion. Straightening up himself, Hoseok walks over to the two.
Namjoon adjusts the Zhak’gri, easily picking him up and walking towards Hoseok to meet him halfway. The Kutsoglerin smiles at him.
He looks good- his eye healed, his arm fixed and new. There’s determination and steadiness in his eyes and Hoseok…- well, Hoseok also wants to slump against him in tired relief.
‘Do you need me to carry you?’ Namjoon asks gently as the GI stand in formation around them, one of them approaching Camil’s form to cuff him. ‘We’ll go to the Medical Bay all right? Get you fixed up?’
Taeh’yung ropes his arms around Namjoon’s shoulder, nodding into his neck. Some of the GI take Camil with them and walk off back towards where they had come from.
‘This is almost like how when we first met, right?’ Namjoon grins down at the Zhak’gri.
‘It is,’ Taeh’yung wails in multiple voices.
Namjoon grins at Hoseok.
He can’t help but smile back.

Namjoon deposits Taeh’yung on the Medical Bed, the Zhak’gri’s arms still wound tight around him. Hoseok thinks that if anyone else were to be on the receiving end of this embrace, they would be wincing in pain. But Namjoon is being very gentle and even pats his head a few times.
There are random bursts of weird lights, walls and floors and anything around Taeh’yung erupting into echoing triangles before immediately collapsing into its normal state. Even Namjoon’s arms ripple in specific patterns, but the Kutsoglerin doesn’t notice or mind it much.
There were a lot of confused Beings gathering and waiting for some sort of explanation. E’nid had gathered a majority over to the other side of the massive Lobby, clearly communicating what had happened.
Hoseok nearly throws an instinctual punch when he feels a hand on him.
It was one of the GI, holding up a compressor-shot.

‘Oh I’m not injured,’ Hoseok grimaces, taking a step back but he’s nonetheless administered with it.

‘I think this is illegal,’ Hoseok frowns, wrenching his arm out.

‘You’re tired,’ Namjoon tells him, ‘They’re probably giving you a booster.’

Hoseok rubs at his arm, finding himself on the other side of the Bed where Taeh’yung was throwing some kind of kiddish fit.

‘What’s going on Namjoon?’

Namjoo sighs, ‘I’ll explain on the way to meet Ilya- I should get going.’

He wants to go with Namjoo. He’s not sure if he should though. Because as Hoseok looks down at Taeh’yung who, poor thing, did look very uncomfortable and unwell; he feels a sense of responsibility to watch over the Zhak’gri. They’ve never been in a situation where he’s been remotely unwell.

‘I’m fine!’ he pouts, as though reading Hoseok’s mind, ‘If you want to leave me and I die, it’s okay Hobi.’

Hoseok just barely stops himself from rolling his eyes. Taeh’yung seemed fine.

There’s a quiet cough from behind them and Hoseok turns to find the Medic that had been there when they had brought in Yoongi to the other Medical Bay. She smiles tentatively, looking somewhat disheveled, before saying, ‘Hi, do you require any assistance?’

The doors warp, the opening of the doorway shrinking into a triangular shape before readjusting itself. The Medic jumps back, eyes darting all around.

‘Oh- yeah,’ Hoseok nods, standing aside to gesture to Taeh’yung, ‘We don’t know what happened and uh-’

She nods, walking in carefully before looking over Taeh’yung critically.

Taeh’yung grimaces comically, coiling inwards and turning away from the Medic. The floor around him ripples like water, making it impossible to step up any closer.

‘Taeh’yung,’ both Hoseok and Namjoo say sternly.

The Zhak’gri groans and straightens up again, the floors levelling. Now the ceiling ripples instead, occasionally sending down a shower of ash at random.

‘Can you tell me how you feel?’ the Medic asks, pulling down the full body scanning apparatus from the domed headboard of the Bed.

‘Like shit,’ Taeh’yung sniffs, not looking at the Medic.

‘Tae,’ Hoseok lets out with exasperation.

‘Fine,’ he relents with a mighty frown, ‘I feel like I’m falling apart. My tummy really hurts, my head is all over the place and-’ he burps mightily, ‘I don’t like it.’

‘We think he ingested something that’s making him like this,’ Namjoo tells the Medic. She nods in understanding before addressing Taeh’yung.

‘We will probably need to pump your stomach,’ the Medic tells Taeh’yung gently, ‘To make sure we know what it is you ingested. We’ll need to follow up with something to flush your system too.’

‘That’s gross,’ Taeh’yung whines.

The Medic talks to Taeh’yung like he’s a youngling. ‘You’ll get better that way, and you can eat nice tasty food again.’

‘Okay,’ Taeh’yung pouts.

Namjoo is squinting at his readings as the scanner finishes its job.

‘All okay?’ Hoseok asks, reaching over to pat the Zhak’gri’s head.

‘Yeah- I mean I guess,’ Namjoo shrugs, ‘We’ve never had any data to compare with when it came to Zhak’gri’s, so-’

‘I’m feeling better,’ Taeh’yung declares, in an eruption of triangles that warps his Bed and the Medic into a brief liquid state.

The Medic falts back, hand over her chest, eyes wide and incredibly pale.

‘Sorry,’ Taeh’yung winces.

‘We’ll come see you again okay buggy?’ Hoseok smooth’s out Taeh’yung’s hair, ‘Just concentrate on getting better.’
‘Is everyone else okay?’ Taeh’yung asks, looking up with big eyes.
‘Yeah, they’re okay,’ Namjoon answers, reaching for his own Comm Device and putting it on Taeh’yung’s ear. ‘Everyone is getting fixed up and resting, so you do the same while Hobi and I get us to safety okay?’
Taeh’yung nods before he points at his cheek expectantly.
Namjoon gives him a blank look, clearly confused.
Snorting, Hoseok leans in and presses a kiss on the Zhak’gri’s forehead. Taeh’yung beams, a ripple erupting from him happily. Namjoon just grins before leaning in to kiss his cheek as well.
‘See you later Hobi! Daddy!’
‘Oh for fuck’s sake,’ Namjoon grumbles as they exit, accepting a Comm Device from a GI who appeared to have been in the Medical Bay with them the whole time.
‘I think that whole situation was set-up for that purpose,’ Hoseok chortles, turning back to wave at Taeh’yung who was still laughing. ‘I need to stop by a Bay for a moment.’
Namjoon nods in understanding.
They walk all around the large Lobby, ignoring the looks thrown their way. Looking inside a few random Bays, Hoseok comes across E’nid and Jaen. The Axudarian was still knocked out, but she seemed to be out of immediate danger judging by the relief in E’nid’s face. She spots him and gives him a small smile.
‘Could I borrow a radio?’ he asks her quietly.
E’nid nods and throws him her own.
‘We’re going to go meet up with Jn’young and Ilya,’ he tells her.
‘When can communications go up again?’
Hoseok turns to Namjoon who says grimly, ‘They used a simple but effective method to shut down the network- it’s just a matter of how quickly you’re able to redistribute new Comm Devices and launch a new channel.’
‘We’ll work on that,’ E’nid promises, rolling her shoulders a little as though readying herself.
They leave and make for the exit-way again. The Beings close to Taeh’yung’s Medical Bay move away as more lights erupt at random, matter and space rippling into triangles and other formations.
‘What do you think they gave Taeh’yung?’
‘I was thinking about that,’ Yoongi chimes in quietly.
‘Hi. Bug.’
Hoseok catches Namjoon’s lips twitching, as though repressing a smile.
‘The GI used to administer bioware, anticore, against some of our missions,’ Yoongi continues to explain, ‘It was a way to either strip them of their species-specific abilities, or in some cases, cause what seemed to be a completely natural systematic breakdown within them, with no trace, no cure.’
‘I heard of that,’ Namjoon frowns as they exit the Lobby, ignoring the stares sent their way again.
‘The Red Evil used a similar method, but-’
‘—but it eventually wears off!’ Taeh’yung chimes in with an added groan.
‘The GI headquarters had a lab full of them.’
‘If that’s the case, it wouldn’t be surprising that someone working for Axudar would have access to it,’ Namjoon frowns, ‘But how did this group have it on hand?’
‘Unless they were expecting Taeh’yung?’
‘unlikely,’ Hoseok shakes his head, ‘I overhead them talking a few times, they were not ready for Taeh’yung- and whatever they used on him wasn’t exactly full-proof.’
‘It’s possible they had some things to use- potentially against Jn’young,’ Namjoon theorizes, ‘He would pose the highest threat in this situation- other Beings aboard the ship too, possibly.’
‘And of course, Axudar would have the anticore for a Khol’isa,’ Hoseok frowns before he asks, ‘Yoongi- how many types of anticore even existed?’
‘Every possible kind.’
Namjoon grimaces at that.
The stop in front of the lift Hoseok and E’nid had come up in.
‘Are we in danger right now,’ Yoongi asks, ‘From Axudar. This was planned with them, so I’m thinking they’re expecting some form of communication with them.’
‘Yeah, that’s why I want to get us out of here as quickly as possible,’ Namjoon explains, ‘I’d rather not be taken to Axudar like this.’
‘What do you mean?’ Hoseok asks but then the lift door opens and a bunch of injured Beings are being escorted out. A few of them look at Namjoon and Hoseok with a hint of fear and confusion, but don’t stop.
They wait until they all exit, before entering the lift themselves. Hoseok counts 4 GI with them. He does a double count just to make sure he’s not overlooking anyone.
‘When I was in Lowet, I met a Being named Prat’tna,’ Namjoon explains, ‘He was like Yoongi- in the sense, he remembered who he was.’
‘Another baby who woke up?’
‘Yeah, and he wasn’t the first of himself, to wake up,’ Namjoon continues, leaning back on the lift walls, ‘Another him woke up before, and before that too.’
‘How many of him were there?’
‘Apparently he’s the last,’ Namjoon frowns, arms crossing over his chest, ‘He was one of the uh, ambassadors, from Bhumi, Megibīya, he was with Jimin when they landed. He was taken by the Red Evil, but left behind and saved by Amme.’
‘So what Amme said was true,’ Hoseok frowns a little, taking the opposite wall and leaning against it, ‘What does this have to do with going to Axudar?’
‘Because according to Prat’tna, you cannot enter Menigištiti- Megibīya yes, but not Menigištiti.’
‘He tried?’
‘Yeah,’ Namjoon nods as the lift stops. They descended much lower down the prison-ship. The hallway looks more like a large maintenance shaft than anything else. ‘He was with other GI, going around the region in hopes of finding an opening for almost a whole sol, when he came across Axudarian ships, and ships whose make came from a planet within Menigištiti.
‘They detected Prat’tna and his team, and chased after them. Prat’tna was able to bring them down into Megibīya, and overtake them there,’ Namjoon continues as they walk down the long shaft.
‘Most of the Beings within the Transporters and ships were Axudarian- but one of them was from Menigištiti.’
‘Were his eyes changed?’
Namjoon gives him a double take before nodding.
‘Prat’tna took the Yisheng ship and entered Axudar with no problem,’ Namjoon continues as they reach the end of the shaft to find a small tram network. They stop by the tracks. ‘The only way to enter Menigištiti would be to take a ship made from there. But it’s not just that too- stealing a ship shouldn’t be too hard and-’
‘-and we wouldn’t have to even go to Axudar. But you want to,’ Yoongi states.
‘I do- and I think, maybe after I tell Jimin my meeting with Prat’tna, maybe he will also want to go to Axudar.’ Namjoon ruminates.
‘Jn’young gave us a pretty clear and accurate description of what happens in Axudar,’ Hoseok tells Namjoon, ‘We concluded that we wouldn’t go to Axudar. It’s too dangerous for both Yoongi and Jungkook, not to mention Jimin himself.’
Namjoon nods to that, a deep furrow forming between his brows. An open tram appears around the corner, on it a GI was already sitting, steering the tram.
They clamber inside, a slightly tight fit, Hoseok’s knees pushed up against Namjoon’s.
‘But the root problem isn’t necessarily in Menigištiti,’ Namjoon explains, ‘If we are able to take the eggs, the New Borns, whatever you want to call them, and put them in Menigištiti, if Axudar is still able to access the whole System, they’re still in danger.’
Hoseok grimaces at that.
‘You can’t expect us to solve whatever issues are going on within Axudar, or to hope that things will work out enough by somehow bringing Jimin back to them,’ Hoseok argues, ‘They basically revolted against Jimin and his sister, throwing them over to gain control over their fate or something.’

‘There’s nowhere to hide,’ Namjoon states bluntly, ‘I don’t know if you know this but the Omhlophe are in a sense, working for the Court-‘

‘What?!’

‘-and they’re being used to track the eggs, have them destroyed,’ Namjoon scowls, ‘They’re also the ones who put out the arrest warrants for us.’

‘That makes sense,’ Yoongi drawls. ‘We’re technically failing the mission the Special Jury had to beg for- failed already, I’m guessing, though it could be said that there was no hope for success to start off with.’

Namjoon’s scowl grows heavier as he says, ‘But we can do this.’

‘How?’ Hoseok demands, ‘We obliterate all of Axudar? Because that seems to be the only singular way of doing so-‘

‘No,’ Namjoon says firmly, ‘Prat’tna said that the heart of the issue was in the depths of a Yisheng ship buried in the core of Kaitūtei. He said that a mimicry of the Great Council that once served Jimin and his sister, and others like them in the past, is controlling and pushing Ndica’s work.’

Namjoon pauses, ‘His sister is there.’

‘We know,’ Hoseok sighs out, leaning back a little as the tram picks up speed, going up an incline.

‘And what does Jimin say about that?’

‘Well, we didn’t know about the whole not being able to go inside Menigišiti part of this Axudarian narrative,’ Hoseok scowls, ‘But Jimin felt that the threat posed over both Yoongi and Jungkook would be too high- also, it’s highly likely that Jimin would not be welcome at all.’

Namjoon nods to that.

‘We will need to discuss this as a team.’ Yoongi says quietly, ‘With Jimin. With Sk’jin, Jungkook.’

‘And me!’ is a warbled addition. ‘I’ll be better soon.’

‘Of course buggy.’

The tram stops at a landing, a door partially open at the end.

The doorway opens into a short tunnel before turning and opening up into a massive and extended hangar. This was not a landing hangar, but rather a storage one, with massive stacks of cargo freights lining up high and long. There’s a lot of commotion, some sort of construction going on. The moment they clear out of the cargo stacks, Hoseok finds a wide and open view of Cuab-Ds. Cuab-D2 was massive. The connecting bridge that held the prison-ship to Cuab was shattered- most of the debris from this massive construct was what littered this overall region. There are a few bright emergency Atmoshield bubbles extending over certain sections, with repair-bots and maintenance-bots crawling all over the area. A few Beings were running about, operating machinery as they hurried to secure the area as best they could. Hoseok concentrates and spots the GI here and there.

They don’t stop until they make it about halfway, a makeshift sort of resting spot/medical center set up inside an empty cargo freight. The GI stood there as well, a few moving along quietly and administering medical aid.

Towards the edge of this makeshift encampment, Hoseok finds the Beings they were looking for. Jn’young, the Khol’isa has his arm covered in tissue-plast, the side of his face shiny with serum. He looks tired as well, his knuckles bruised, the cut on his lip semi-healed. He mainly looks angry that he was in that state- something that Sk’jin would definitely display. He’s eyeing the GI warily, but he doesn’t comment.

Hoseok nudges Namjoon and nods subtly towards the Khol’isa. Namjoon gives him a small nod in return. Hoseok doesn’t see Ilya anywhere just yet.

Jn’young catches sight of them almost immediately. He stands carefully, studying them openly.

‘Jn’yong,’ Hoseok greets the Khol’isa. ‘This is-‘

‘We spoke,’ he announces without preamble, eyes narrowing a little as he studies Namjoon.

‘Namjoon?’
Namjoon stops to a stand before the Khol’isa, ‘We did.’
‘You rescued us,’ Jn’young says bluntly. ‘Potentially as a side-effect of rescuing your team. We are grateful.’

Namjoon only hesitates for a moment before he replies, ‘I am sorry we did not get here sooner.’
Jn’young just shakes his head a little in response.
‘Where’s Ilya?’ Hoseok inquires.
‘Not too far,’ Jn’young looks around, jumping a little as the GI move in unison through the crowd to find the Ožkan. ‘You said there were things that needed to be discussed?’
‘Yes.’ Namjoon nods, ‘We need to leave as soon as possible.’
Jn’young frowns at that.
‘What is your reasoning?’
‘The group of Beings who have infiltrated and attempted to overthrow your network work for Axudar.’
Jn’young’s expression is stone-cold.
‘What is your evidence?’ he asks evenly.
‘Camil attempted to kill both Jaen and E’nid,’ Hoseok tells him at once, ‘Jaen was shot, she’s being taken care of right now. E’nid is with her. You can communicate with her if you wish.’
He hands Jn’young the short-radio device.
The Khol’isa snaps it up at once before walking away, speaking into the device in a low voice.
Hoseok finds an overturned OrTank and sits on it.
‘Sk’jin just woke up,’ Yoongi says quietly. ‘But he’s gone back to sleep again- or at least, uh, knocked out.’
‘Jimin?’
‘Still asleep.’
‘Jungkook?’
‘Asleep.’
‘Yoongi you should rest. Please get some sleep- we’ll figure things out,’ Namjoon tells him.
‘Okay.’

Hoseok rolls his eyes and Namjoon grins.
Hoseok spies Jn’young approaching them, Ilya limping next to him. The Khol’isa is still saying something, Ilya nodding as he listens, a stony frown on his face.
‘They’re here.’
‘How is he almost like Sk’jin’s son?’ Namjoon asks, watching the two approach them before standing up properly.
‘He was a child before Sk’jin was trapped in that planet,’ Hoseok explains, ‘He was continued to be raised in Sk’jin’s network even after a majority of them- he later took over, after Sk’jin’s… successor? Died.’

Namjoon nods thoughtfully to that. ‘How was Sk’jin’s reaction?’
Hoseok sighs out, ‘What do you think?’
Jn’young and Ilya approach them close enough for them to stop talking. Hoseok gives them both a short smile while Namjoon turns to face them. Ilya looks at him with wide eyes- a spark of recognition, of confusion in his gaze.
‘I’m Namjoon,’ he introduces himself, ‘We spoke, albeit briefly.’
Ilya nods to that, ‘You said there was something important that needed discussing.’
‘There are several matters at hand that do need to be discussed and looked into thoroughly,’ Namjoon explains, ‘But first and foremost, we need to leave this region as quickly as possible.’
‘What are your reasons?’
‘The perpetrators of this mess are involved with Axudar, with what they call the Great Council in Kaitūtei- whatever they were attempting to do, it was done in collaboration with Axudar,’ Namjoon explains. ‘I don’t know if, or when, Axudar would be coming here, if at all, but it is very likely that they would have reported Jimin’s presence here.’
‘I overhead them speaking,’ Hoseok adds, ‘While I was with Jaen and E’nid, and we uncovered
Camil’s involvement, I was able to use his Comm Device to listen in on their conversations. Apparently they had heard nothing from Axudar since the last time they communicated, but only said that they would definitely be arriving here.’

‘If you want to secure your network, your crew, we need to leave now,’ Namjoon urges, ‘I do not know what forces they would bring- what they might try to do, but we need to leave this region.’

‘Where do we go from here then?’ Ilya inquires, still making no move or suggestion that indicated he would be taking Namjoon’s advise.

‘Back to Māho-5 for now,’ Namjoon explains, ‘While there are other perpetrators there, the one you call Evdos, and the Deputy Fanger- I had some of the GI sent out to take care of them,’ Namjoon informs them.

There’s a twitch in Jn’young’s brow.

‘Maho-5 should at least provide us with some temporary safety, and time to repair, plan further ahead,’ Namjoon explains quickly, ‘But for now, I need you to send out the orders to clear up the debris outside, enough for us to warp safely- your people are already setting up a way to install a new communications network and distribute new Comm Devices.’

Ilya doesn’t say anything, clearly thinking through what Namjoon has said. Then he gives a short nod before turning to Jn’young.

‘The ship is armed with short-range canon, lets clear up the area to leave.’

‘It would take about an hour,’ Jn’young says more to Namjoon than Ilya.

‘The GI will help- please give them the coordinates and passcodes to access the weaponry aboard this ship,’ Namjoon indicates to one of the GI who was standing not too far from Ilya. Both of them jump a little, not having seen the GI there.

‘We will get ready to leave in an hour,’ Ilya declares as he holds up the short-radio, ‘All crew members who are capable report back to your Bridges, everyone else make sure we are secured. Shut down areas that are unstable and or not ready for warp- all injured report to E’nid.’

The crew is effective. They move immediately, taking action as the more capable ones help the more injured ones. The most capable ones remain to seal entryways and secure the compromised storage hangar.

‘What about Cuab?’ Hoseok nods towards the massive prison.

‘There’s nothing we can do for now,’ Jn’young says in a neutral tone. ‘They were already in league with Axudar. I saw to it that they would not speak again.’

The gleaming red hue of his eyes are icy and cold, a dismissive attitude that would make most shiver.

‘I also think you will like to know that among others, Camil has been restrained and contained,’ Hoseok tells them, ‘We will need to interrogate him.’

A sour look overtakes Ilya’s features briefly before he nods.

‘Once we are settled and ready to leave,’ he states.

Namjoon nods before adding, ‘To get the truth from him, I would like to suggest we ask Jimin to interrogate him.’

Hoseok eyes Namjoon carefully.

‘That sounds like a good idea,’ Jn’young says in agreement. ‘Where is he?’

‘He was in the Transporter Hangars when the Atmoshields were deactivated,’ Namjoon says before adding, ‘As well as Sk’jin.’

Ilya’s expression falters, eyes wide and pupils shaking, ‘Is-‘

‘He’s all right,’ Hoseok quickly explains. ‘He was found in time- he’s resting.’

Ilya breathes in, closing his eyes briefly before nodding in thanks.

‘E’nid tells me that she’s going to be able to set up a new network within the hour before we take off,’ Jn’young adds.

‘How are they all here?’ Ilya asks, nodding at the GI.

Oh right, Hoseok has temporarily forgotten that Ilya had nearly been assassinated by one of the GI.

‘They were looking for Jimin,’ Namjoon explains, ‘They want to go back home.’
Ilya looks puzzled at this, as does Jn’young.
‘Don’t the GI live, or well, report back to Šerdesas?’ Jn’young asks hesitantly.
‘The GLA Court wants to have them, and every other egg, New Born, whatever you want to call them, destroyed,’ Namjoon states bluntly, ‘Taking them into Menigišiti and protecting them there, away from the GLA, is our plan.’
Ilya and Jn’young glance at each other briefly before Ilya says, ‘We will first begin the process to leave, and then, when Jimin has regained consciousness and his strength, we shall carry out interrogation. And I believe it would be prudent, to then come up with a plan to help the GI, as well as the New Borns.’
Namjoon pauses a moment before he nods.
Ilya and Jn’young walk away, and Namjoon turns to face Hoseok.
‘That went smoother than I anticipated,’ Namjoon breathes out slowly.
‘I believe Ilya is just trying his best to do what he thinks is right.’
‘Doing what he thinks is right, versus what is right, and whether anything is right are completely different things,’ Namjoon rubs at his neck as though massaging out some ache though Hoseok knows it’s a practiced moved carried out by most Kutsoglerin to integrate themselves into most society and not be mistaken for Androids or cyborgs.
‘What do we do now?’ Hoseok asks.
‘We help out.’ Namjoon explains. ‘We need to get out of here as quickly as we can.’
They don’t take an hour- in fact everything is cleared up and set-up by 30 minutes. É’nid had set up a new network, and was halfway through distributing new Comm Devices for everyone. A majority of the debris was cleared just enough for them to pass through. The Atmoshield around the prison-ship is brought back and reinforced by Namjoon, Jn’young, and a few others in the Second Bridge.
Hoseok, Ilya, the GI in Māho, and Yoongi manage to create and pass a whole new GLA approved trajectory for the prison-ship, so that their return would not be questioned or raise flags. The GI also report back to Namjoon that after following the network Camil had used to communicate with Evdos, they were able to track all of his crones in Māho and rounded them up, including Deputy Fanger.
Hoseok and Namjoon make their way downwards back to the Transporter Hangars after they hit warp.
‘I won’t feel safe unless we’re somehow on the move,’ Hoseok confesses to Namjoon. The Kutsoglerin nods in agreement.
They also left so that Ilya could address his network. There was a lot to be discussed, a lot to explain; and Namjoon and Hoseok had excused themselves mostly out of respect, but also because they didn’t exactly have all the time in the Universe either. It would take 3 hours to get back to Māho, and they would need to reform a lot of their ideas, plans, and ultimately, establish their main objective for this mission. Ilya asks them to tell him when Sk’jin wakes up.
Apparently Taeh’yung had somehow, in a weird woozy drugged state, had managed to make his way down to the Hangars.
Hoseok had thought about taking down the others food, but Namjoon had said it wouldn’t be necessary, as they had food in stock aboard the GI ship.
It’s an absolutely stunning ship- sleek and chrome, but with a minimal understated design. The Laikin is in a sorry state next to it, its hangar gates gaping wide and covered in black marks indicating something had ignited and exploded there.
Hoseok doesn’t see the GI in here. Either they were all about the prison-ship, helping where they were designated, or hidden somewhere Hoseok can’t see. Namjoon leads them inwards, and Hoseok spies a gently lit Medical Bay towards the side of the living lounge area.
‘Do you plan on using this ship from now on?’ Hoseok asks, studying the place. This was much much larger than the Laikin, and probably twice as large as the Užkulias as well.
‘Yeah,’ Namjoon nods, ‘It’s able to enter Axudar without detection, and-’ Namjoon stops, looking around with an irritated scowl, ‘Did you know that Yisheng ships have a faster warp core?’
‘Oh- oh?’ Hoseok does a double take at the Kutsoglerin. ‘But-‘ ‘Yeah! It’s approximately 30% faster than the Standard,’ Namjoon continues walking ahead, ‘It’s how the GI move around so quickly.’
‘Does Yoongi know?’
‘Maybe,’ Namjoon says darkly, ‘Or maybe it just slipped his mind.’
Hoseok snorts at that. That sounded plausible.
They quietly approach the Medical Bay, looking inside to find an amusing but heartwarming scene.

Jungkook is curled up near Sk’jin’s feet, a small pipe still stuck into the crook of his elbow connecting to a clear compressor still halfway filled over his head. He’s resting his head on Sk’jin’s thighs, who was completely knocked out. The bruises on his skin are painful to look at. Taeh’yung is stretched out over both Medical Beds, his feet propped up near Jimin’s torso, his upper body resting at what could only be an awkward angle on Sk’jin’s Bed, one hand resting on Jungkook’s hair.
Yoongi is there too, sitting on a low comfortable looking chair by Jimin’s Bed. It looks like he pulled it out from the lounge area. There’s also the remains of a meal next to him.
To Hoseok’s surprise, Yoongi seemed to have actually taken their word and taken care of himself. He also appeared showered and washed, wearing clothes Hoseok has never seen before, in purplish hues.
‘The moment he woke up, he just stumbled there,’ Yoongi tells them without preamble, pointing at Jungkook. ‘He’s all right, he’s on a very high dosage of medication- just sleeping it off I guess.’
‘And buggy?’ Hoseok walks over to adjust the lanky Zhak’gri. This angle was surely terrible for his back. Or maybe he was actually comfortable?
Yoongi actually snorts.
‘He stormed in- all flashing lights and shit,’ Yoongi sighs as he points at the ceiling above them where the metal has rippled in triangular patterns, ‘I thought he would break me in half.’
Hoseok laughs at that.
‘What about you?’
Yoongi just shrugs in response before turning to address Namjoon.
‘So- wanna start with what happened when you got kidnapped?’
Namjoon snorts, walking over to the wall and pulling down a bench. Hoseok walks over to Yoongi and sits on the floor next to him, leaning back on his chair. He’s surprised when Yoongi squeezes his shoulders, albeit briefly.

Taeh’yung lets out a funny snoring snort, making them all pause, glancing over at the Kutsoglerin. Taeh’yung sits up at an odd angle, his eyes still hazy but he was no longer acting out aggressively. Instead he smacks his lips a few times, before turning over and snuggling into Jimin’s Bed, sandwiching himself into the space there.
Namjoon just grins, sitting back and says, ‘You guys go first and tell me what happened in Amme’s ship.’

* *

When Jimin wakes up, he’s in a world of muted pain.
What he remembers most keenly is the cold, the overwhelming crushing force pushing through him, the glare of the orange Atmoshield, and Yoongi’s smile.
His throat feels incredibly dry and scratched.
He tries to speak, to alert someone that he’s awake.
Someone appears before him- he’s not sure who it is, but he can’t tell who it is.
Something is pressed against his lips and Jimin realizes a little late that he’s being given water. In his eagerness to drink, he coughs and splutters, his body lurching forward in a whirlwind of dizziness and pain. His throat feels better, but the pain has settled into his lungs now.
Feeling like he couldn’t quite breathe in enough air, Jimin heaves.
He can’t see- everything glares at him with too much brightness. His vision jumps in sharp glaring colours.
Then everything goes black again, just the faint electric hum of the lamp next to the bed. The room is hazy, but he can tell that it’s still dark out; it wasn’t raining anymore though. The lights of the room are enough to illuminate the familiar shapes. Exhaling, Jimin turns on the bed, reaching out to the space next to him, his hand finding-Jimin opens his eyes to find Sk’jin watching him from his own Bed.
Sk’jin looks battered, but he seemed awake. At least much more than Jimin himself.
‘Wh-what-’
‘What happened?’ Sk’jin completes his question, voice barely audible, ‘A shit load.’
Blinking hard, Jimin breathes in and out in a deliberate manner. The ringing in his ears that he hadn’t noticed before was quieting slowly. He opens his eyes once they’re faded away. The lights are incredibly soft, the opening past the doorway nearly entirely dim, but Jimin can just about point out floor lights.
He doesn’t hear anything- just a familiar hum of being inside a ship. The Medical Bay did not look familiar- neither like the one in the Laikin, or the Užkul, or the prison-ship.
‘Where are we?’ Jimin sounds weak even to himself. What had happened to him? This was such a strange feeling.
‘We’re back in Māho,’ Sk’jin tells him in a strained coarse voice, ‘Finally getting that fucking UV bed, can you believe it?’
‘What happened-’
But a shudder of pain overtakes Jimin- it’s a combination of strange cramps, hunger, and nausea.
‘Oh Spaces, is that what I sounded like?’ Sk’jin is saying.
Jimin grips at the sheets around him, exhaling noisily.
‘Hey, at least try to sound a bit sexy-’
Jimin can’t help but laugh.
Jimin gingerly rolls his shoulders, finding that his pain was ebbing away the more he gained clarity.
‘We also have a new ship,’ Sk’jin continues, as though Jimin was not in the midst of pain, ‘The GI ship- or a Yisheng ship, one of them.’
‘What-’ Jimin turns his head over to look at the Khol’isa.
‘It’s best to just let Namjoon explain it I guess,’ Sk’jin sighs before he sits up carefully. ‘We have shitty luck.’
Jimin laughs- more like wheezes.
‘No I mean it- especially the two of us- fuck, I don’t think anyone else has been flung out into space like this.’
‘That’s what happened?’ Jimin asks breathlessly.
‘Yeah- the GI saved our asses,’ Sk’jin turns a little on the Bed, facing Jimin now.
Jimin makes to sit up but he can’t, his mind is all over the place- did Sk’jin just mention the GI?
‘Oh don’t be so dramatic,’ Sk’jin croaks, ‘The more you move, the better you’ll feel.’
Jimin can’t help but laugh again. Sk’jin is posing on the bed with the attitude of the healthiest
Being in the Universe.
‘You look like shit!’
‘Excuse you!’ Sk’jin gasps out, ‘Is that how a prince behaves?’
Jimin laughs even more, his body shaking at Sk’jin’s indignation. But it does work, moving does make him feel better. After a few long pain riddled minutes, Jimin manages to sit up.

‘I feel sticky,’ he declares with a croak. His hands feel weirdly numb and thick.

Sk’jin laughs, ‘Yeah I do too. I tried to get up to wash up at least, nearly collapsed. Kookie nearly cried.’

‘He’s okay?’ Jimin asks at once.

‘They’re all okay,’ Sk’jin tells him soothingly. ‘Taeh’yung and Jungkook went to wash up I think- can’t say if it’s separately or together.’

‘What about Yoongi?’

‘Who do you think gave you your new pair of lungs!’

Jimin doesn’t know what to think of what Sk’jin’s just said, but his expression must have been enough because Sk’jin hastily says, ‘Fuck, he’s fine, that idiot of a Human is fine. He only recently left the Bay like 30 minutes ago with Hoseok- something about a new model of blasters and weight issues.’

‘Why wouldn’t you say that?’ Jimin asks weakly.

‘Comedy,’ Sk’jin says darkly.

‘When—when did you wake up?’ Jimin hopes he’ll get a straightforward reply.

‘About 2 hours ago?’ Sk’jin shrugs, ‘Threw up for like, 15 minutes.’

Jimin wheezes, pain shooting down his body and ebbing away as quickly as it came. Something finally registers in his mind.

‘Namjoon?’

‘Yeah, in all his metal glory,’ Sk’jin rolls his eyes, ‘God, what a tale- I’ll leave that for him to narrate.’

There’s a sad expression in Sk’jin’s eyes as he says so, not quite looking him in the eye.

He’s finally able to sit up, goaded? Encouraged? By Sk’jin from his own Bed.

Clearing his throat, Jimin asks: ‘So. What—what’s next?’

‘We’ll be leaving soon, according to what Hoseok said.’ Sk’jin replies, watching Jimin struggle with amusement.

‘With Ilya?’ Jimin tries to straw together everything.

‘I don’t know what they’re planning,’ Sk’jin tells him honestly. ‘Ilya is…he’s facing something everyone in a pirating network fears the most. It’s something I’ve never experienced. So I…I don’t know.’

‘What happened?’

‘Camil, our excellent green haired companion, turns out is a low-life scum who works for Axudar,’ Sk’jin scowls, ‘He was betraying Ilya for sols it would seem, by how thorough he had managed to turn over the network- Camil, our friends Evdos and Fanger too by the way- not to mention around a thousand other crew? I don’t even know how many outside the ship’s current population are sided with Camil.’

Jimin’s mind is spinning.

‘With Axudar?’

Sk’jin nods, ‘They’re contained for interrogation right now.’ He hesitates for a moment, ‘They want you to talk to them, get answers.’

Jimin blinks a few times, hands gripping into careful fists as he flexes his digits.

‘How many would they like me to interrogate?’

‘You’re not surprised?’

‘No,’ Jimin replies honestly, ‘I would like to interrogate them.’

‘Namjoon says it’s very likely that Axudar has been notified about us- about you,’ Sk’jin continues, ‘It’s why we left Cuab so quickly.’

Jimin nods to that in understanding.

But I know that Namjoon has a lot to say to you…” he trails off for a moment, ‘I would summarize for you. Save you Namjoon’s flare for dramatic narratives.’

Jimin would roll his eyes if he could.
‘But…’
‘But what?’
Sk’jin looks up and lets out a small shriek.
Yoongi was at the doorway, his hair a little awry as though he had run here. They hadn’t heard him approach.
‘You shitty Human-’ Sk’jin curses.
Yoongi just quirks an eyebrow at Sk’jin before making his way to Jimin, an expression of pure relief on his face.
‘Ugh, my eyes.’ Sk’jin mumbles.
Jimin wants to hold his arms up, welcome Yoongi to him and hold him close. But his arms fail him, only his body lurching forward awkwardly. But it’s all right, because Yoongi’s arms are around him in an instance.
But Jimin is only momentarily relieved before pain shoots across his body.
Yoongi is apologizing as Jimin lets out a strangled gasp of pain, stammering words as Jimin tries to shake it off, teeth gritting down hard at the way his skin felt electric. Yoongi’s touch was always electric- but in a good way; this time it felt painful and uncomfortable.
‘Fuck, forgot to tell you that any added contact tends to feel like shit,’ Sk’jin remarks. ‘Nearly punched Taeh’yung when he hugged me too.’
Jimin hates it, hates the way Yoongi’s hands are hovering- he just wanted to hold him properly. But now a whole series of pain hits him, new senses overwhelming his body.
‘Sunshine I’m so sorry-’ Yoongi probably hasn’t even heard Sk’jin, crouched over in a weird angle over Jimin. It’s a combination of pain, laughter, and joy that makes Jimin reach out for the Human. He almost jerks away, afraid of causing Jimin pain.
‘You don’t hurt me,’ Jimin whispers to him. With some difficulty, he’s able to tug Yoongi closer just a little.
Taking the hint, Yoongi carefully climbs onto the side of the bed, allowing Jimin to lean on him, twitching with the way his body responded in spasms of pain. Yoongi stays still as Jimin adjusts himself against the Human, not daring to move an inch himself in fear of hurting Jimin.
‘Disgusting,’ is Sk’jin’s comment.
Jimin laughs, leaning back against Yoongi who carefully wraps his arm around Jimin’s back to support him up against his chest. From this angle, Jimin is able to study the soft but coarse fibered fabric of whatever it was that Yoongi was wearing. It felt soothing- the colour was wonderfully soothing.
‘This is a nice colour on you,’ Jimin tells Yoongi, exhaling and willing himself to let the pain just ebb away.
‘You didn’t even get a chance to look at me,’ Yoongi laughs.
‘I saw enough,’ Jimin lifts his head just a little to look around at Yoongi.
He looks exhausted; sallow. But there’s definitely a bit more energy to him, the hollow of his cheeks not too pronounced. And the look in his eyes still the same.
‘Spaces, please no making out,’ Sk’jin pleads.
Yoongi kisses his forehead above his eyebrow loudly. Sk’jin makes retching sounds while Jimin laughs, wincing a little at the pain from the contact. Yoongi’s arms fully wrap around him and relief blossoms through him.
‘You’ll be in pain for a while,’ Yoongi says almost apologetically, ‘Sensory overload- especially with things like touch- light too.’
‘Okay,’ Jimin feels better as his body adjusts to the new sensations outside of his clothes on his skin, and the Bed under him. He flexes his toes, pulling up his legs a little bit more before lowering them again.
‘So,’ Sk’jin says loudly. ‘What news from beyond the scene?’
Yoongi chuckles quietly, the sound soothing.
‘The prison-ship will require some intense repairs,’ Yoongi tells them, ‘Not just external damage- but in order to track and locate whatever Camil and the others have been incorporating into Ilya’s network to benefit Axudar."

‘Is it bad,’ Sk’jin asks quietly.

‘It’s…we still don’t know what sort of damage he’s caused,’ Yoongi says hesitantly before continuing with some frustration, ‘Obviously time is of the essence here and—’

There’s hurried steps, the space outside lighting up a bit more and two figures approach them, coming into focus as Jimin blinks hard a few times.

‘Jimin!’ Namjoon and Hoseok are rushing towards them.

Yoongi scowls, grip around Jimin tightening just a little bit more.

‘Oh it’s like that,’ Sk’jin makes an amused face.

But before Namjoon or Hoseok can say anything, and before Yoongi tries to intervene, Jimin begins.

‘I’ll go in and interrogate the prisoners,’ Jimin states clearly, ‘Have they been approached before this?’

Yoongi exhales with annoyance.

‘No one has gone in to talk to them,’ Hoseok tells him. ‘Also I think it’s so that they don’t accidentally murder them.’

‘Accidentally,’ Sk’jin parrots with a snort.

‘He just woke up after being flung out into space,’ Yoongi says evenly, ‘At the very least—’

‘No I can do this,’ Jimin squeezes Yoongi’s arm, ‘I promise you- if I couldn’t do it, I would say so.’

Yoongi nods, looking down at Jimin’s hand.

‘Well, that was faster than I expected,’ Sk’jin groans, moving to dangle his legs over the bed.

Hoseok is quick to assist him.

‘Let me grab you both strollers,’ Namjoon quickly makes his way to the side of the Bay.

‘Are you sure?’ Yoongi asks quietly.

‘I am,’ Jimin squeezes his hand again, ‘I need to know and- and I think it is best, that we leave as quickly as we can.’

If Axudar knew that Jimin was with Ilya, it was without a doubt, that they would definitely try to come after him- or at the very least, try and harm him and the others around him. Jimin cannot risk that from happening. But he also needs to know more.

Sk’jin groans as he sits on the stroller, face pale with the effort.

Yoongi half carries Jimin to his stroller, uselessly piling on the folded blanket over his legs as Jimin takes a moment (alongside Sk’jin) to get used to his body moving.

‘Wish I had someone that carried me like that too,’ Sk’jin mumbles while Hoseok laughs and says, ‘You literally told me you didn’t want my help!’

Sk’jin chooses to ignore that and with a tap on the arm-rest of the stroller, floats away towards the doorway. Obviously Sk’jin had a bit more time to recover.

Jimin looks down at his arm-rest as well, trying to figure out the controls.

‘Where are Taeh’yung and Kookie?’ Namjoon asks.

‘Shower I think- and maybe they fell asleep again?’ Sk’jin muses, looking around outside with interest, ‘This is a pretty fancy set-up, fuck those Yishengs, I swear.’

‘I got you,’ Yoongi says quietly behind him, his stroller moving forward gently.

Jimin leans back, body coiling in momentary discomfort and a displaced heaviness settling over him.

It takes almost 15 minutes just to get to where Camil and the almost thousand others were being kept. It was quite convenient that they had prison cells to start off with.

This block of the cells which previously housed actual inmates, as well as the fake inmates that had welcomed Ilya’s returning crew from Māho’s containment facilities was emptied out and filled with a new sort of prisoner. The GI are here too, standing guard over the massive space. The ever changing surveillance feed shows the new inmates in varying degrees of fear, frustration, resignation, guilty pleas, and injury. A few were still in Beds, while some were nursing minor injuries. Namjoon and Hoseok tell him all of this as they further descend and Jimin is pushed out
The cyborgs that are stationed here have been decommissioned, seeing as their main function had been corrupted, allowing Camil to use them as he chose. Their seats are vacated, and instead Ilya and Jn’young are there, clearly waiting for them.

‘It’s good to see you awake,’ Ilya greets him when he’s pushed in, ‘I’m sorry to ask this of you so soon.’

‘I understand,’ Jimin replies at once, ‘I don’t want to waste time, and I want the answers myself. There is always time to rest later.’

Ilya just sighs out, nodding slowly. He smiles at Sk’jin when he’s pushed in as well.

‘Feeling better?’

‘Oh please, I used to do space-walks for fun before,’ Sk’jin replies blithely before addressing Jn’young, ‘Hey pupa, feeling better?’

Jn’young gives Sk’jin a flat look before turning in his seat to look back at the surveillance feed.

‘Camil is at cell 177-B,’ Ilya tells him.

‘Is there any question you want me to ask him directly?’ Jimin rolls his shoulders a little, sitting up straight and slightly stretching his back. His pain is minimal, and Jimin takes it as a good sign. Ilya hands him a Comm Device in reply. Jimin takes it and attaches it to his ear.

‘I’ll go with you,’ Yoongi says it more like a question.

Jimin shakes his head, ‘It’ll be better if I speak to him alone.’

Namjoon nods in agreement to this while Jn’young also gives his approval before adding, ‘Besides, Camil’s all tied up.’

Yoongi still goes with him all the way down the remaining tower, but he remains inside the lift. He presses a soft kiss on the top of his head, before tilting him back and kissing his forehead. Warmth spreads throughout his body from the spot.

‘I’ll be out here if you need me.’

Jimin floats ahead on the stroller. He doesn’t see any of the GI himself, but he’s sure that they’re there. He wants the full account of what happened, but he’s sure he’ll get that later. Sk’jin did say that there were things Namjoon wanted to tell him specifically and he can guess what it could potentially be.

The cells are entirely open to one side, showing the new prisoners inside but shielded by a powerful barrier. They all gawk at him, and Jimin senses fear, hostility, and paranoia radiating off of them. But none of them say a word. How they were able to hide their true intentions aboard such a highly secure and regulated network, with Beings who were constantly in the look out was a formidable and worrisome notion.

He stops at the cell numbered at 177-B. The protective barrier has been lifted already, so Jimin easily glides in. At the very center of the very square space, Camil is tied up on his Medical Bed. He’s still in the process of recovery. The Medical Bed lowers, and Camil stirs, eyes opening in woozy confusion. He spots Jimin a few seconds later just as Jimin parks himself at the side of the bed, meeting him at an eye level. Camil flinches when he recognizes him.

‘I have no excuse,’ Camil says at once before he can get a word in himself, ‘I had no choice.’

Jimin sits up a little straighter, adjusting the blanket Yoongi had put around his legs. He exhales slowly, the command of truth ready to be bestowed on the tip of his tongue.

‘You most certainly don’t.’
There’s nothing that distinguishes when Jimin uses his, frankly, strange abilities. Taeh’yung exuded physical power; power that distorted mass and space and possibly even time. It was visible, it could be felt, and there was a real wildness to it that immediately struck fear into anyone who saw it.

Sk’jin’s eyes flared red- the air turns hazy, and you’re impossibly relaxed. Or you’re constricted, unable to look away as everything pulsed red around you.

Hoseok was probably the most physically apparent, considering he changed every physical aspect of himself, sometimes no longer distinguishable from the Being he had shifted into.

But with Jimin there’s nothing to be seen.

The only reaction came from the Being he was addressing.

Camil relaxes instantly. His somewhat frantic gaze, his pulse, his breathing; they all even out. According to the statistics from the Bed running continuous readings on him, it was almost as though he was asleep.

‘That’s it?’ Jn’young asks, looking somewhat put-off.

Both Namjoon and Sk’jin snort.

‘Explain your connection to Axudar, and what you do on their behalf.’

Jn’young looks very unimpressed, giving them all a look as though asking again ‘is that it?’.

Hoseok leans in a little more, listening intently.

‘I was first approached 28 sols ago,’ Camil replies, eyes half closed, his words coming out just a little bit slurred but still understandable, ‘I was attending a deal on Ilya’s behalf in Šerdesas when I was arrested. I assumed it was because of my fake identity of a low-level pirate, and that I had caught some bad-luck as a random patrol had taken me. However, I was taken up to the Yisheng Headquarters instead, and I was in a meeting with Yisheng Ndica, and Yisheng Tlun’hla.’

‘28 sols,’ Ilya says quietly.

Sk’jin quietly reaches over, placing his hand over Ilya’s.

‘Camil had been arrested briefly- but we were able to bail him out of prison within a few weeks.’ He adds.

‘They told me that I was chosen to participate and help the Yishengs in their quest to finally make peace across the whole Known Universe. That Ilya’s network would be an important key, a channel, through which they would be able to facilitate this change. I told them I did not care for their actions. That if this were indeed something that could change the Universe for the better, why would they not implement it with the GLA or even the GIU.’

‘He’s smart,’ Hoseok sighs out, looking fatigued and sad. ‘Most pirates feel no obligation or debt towards Yishengs, they address and look at Yisheng with suspicion, unlike most other Beings.

‘What do you mean?’ Jn’yong asks.

‘This is what brought down the Venture Unit,’ Hoseok says evenly, his hands forming tight angry fists though his expression is anything but. ‘The Yishengs had a whole system working for them, of non-Yishengs, of Beings from all over the Known Universe who were in positions of power, authority, or influence.’

‘Like agents, officers, Directors, Chiefs-‘ Namjoon lists off, glancing over at Hoseok, ‘The Yishengs amassed and took advantage of the positively cultish-obsession and reverence most of the Known Universe had towards them and used that as a way to further their plans. Clearly, the Yishengs discovered your network, and believed that Camil would have been the best to approach.’

‘They simply wanted our help.’ Camil explains, ‘They could not enter or save Axudar they said, and wished for me to investigate on their behalf. I told them they had to make better lies, because the Yishengs are allowed anywhere, anytime; even non-GLA federations welcome them. And Axudar was the home System for Ndica. They dropped the act. Then they told me if I refused to do as they said, they would expose the network, expose my family, and have them all arrested by the Venture Unit.’

Ilya says.

‘They said I would only need to run them a small errand. And after I was done, I would be freed. I did not trust their words- I would not. But I had no choice- I could not refuse.’
Namjoon recognizes this because Hoseok had lived through refusing this very choice given to him.
Hoseok did what Camil could not.
‘I was warped and sent to Axudar. Ndica went with me, took me to Kaitūtei and we were greeted and welcomed with so much splendor and joy. I could see all living Beings, alive and well, of all ages – living happily in a unified system within this new world! Ndica had opened my eyes to a new possibility of living! To a new hopeful way all of life could coexist, with no anger, no pain, no fighting, no more hiding! But Ndica took me away, told me I refused this life, therefore I had no claim to witness it. Instead he took me down. Away from the joy and unity. And I stood before the Great Council.’
Namjoon stands up straighter, frowning deeply. He notices how Jimin’s expression changes but he schools it quickly.
‘What did the Great Council say to you?’
‘They welcomed me, and asked me if would I complete my errand. I asked them what my errand was. I didn’t know of any errands. Ndica did not tell me. They told me that my errand would be to break the fates of the bound, the fates of those born in a ruthless cycle, misguided and lost, to bring back the lost children, back under one heart. I said I didn’t–…I didn’t know?’
Camil sounds confused, his voice regaining some clarity. But Jimin sits up straighter, no other action from him, and Camil slumps back.
‘What happened after that?’
‘They said that Ilya’s network would be able to bring to them all of these lost children. That they would be able to set them free from their fates.’
‘Who were the Beings you spoke to?’
‘The Great Council.’
‘How many were there?’
‘I…it was bright. I could not see. But only 4 voices spoke to me- I felt that there were more.’
‘Will you show me?’
‘I don’t…’ Camil sounds confused but Jimin is already standing.
‘Jimin, I don’t think you should do this.’ Yoongi says immediately.
Namjoon catches sight of Yoongi hastening from his waiting spot towards Camil’s cell.
‘Jimin I don’t think you should-‘ Jn’young also adds hesitantly, sitting up straight.
But Jimin reaches forward, lightly touching Camil’s forehead.
It lasts less than a second and Jimin is recoiling, as though electrocuted.
Yoongi is there in a flash, pulling him back.
‘Are you hurt?’
‘No- it’s nothing I just-‘ Jimin looks confused, ‘I can’t see.’
‘What?’ Sk’jin gapes at the surveillance.
‘Just ask him questions for now,’ Namjoon says tensely, ‘Jimin.’
Jin mops, sitting back down again while Yoongi stands by.
‘What else did they say?’ Jimin sounds unsure, his expression uncertain.
‘They said they would give me time to think my answer through. And they let me go.’
‘That can’t be right,’ Jn’young frowns, ‘Beings who enter Axudar don’t just casually walk out – even GLA officials visiting tend to undergo some level of…influence, so to speak. Especially if you’re passing by Kaitūtei.’
‘Did they contact you?’
‘No- but when I wanted to find them again, they contacted me.’ Camil explains drowsily, ‘And I knew I was ready.’
‘Why?’ Jimin sounds timid.
‘I was so tired,’ Camil hums, ‘I was so tired of…of how all of Life was doomed to a Continuum that was so cruel, endless in repetition. I wanted to rest. I would see dreams, of Axudar- I would see the unity, joy, tranquility and peacefulness of Axudar and my heart broke.’
‘Is that why you chose to- chose to obey the Great Council?’
‘I did not obey them- they did not force me to follow their law or authority- I chose this. Because I wanted it.’

Sk’jin sighs, leaning back. Jn’young’s expression is grave.
‘I think it’s safe to say Camil was…for lack of a better word, brain-washed in the process of his recruitment.’ Hoseok says calmly, ‘There are…few Beings in the Known Universe who are capable of such persuasion. The Khol’isa are-‘ ‘-not that powerful,’ both Sk’jin and Jn’young say in unison before Sk’jin explains, ‘We need prolonged eye-contact, a trusting and weak mind, and mainly inhibitors. This is-…this is-‘
‘This is almost exactly like what Jimin can do,’ Hoseok says quietly next to Namjoon, ‘If the Red Evil, or the Creveni or the Akramanese- whatever you want to call them, were able to stabilize their creations by tying their fates to Jimin, what would Ndica be able to do with his sister?’
Hoseok exhales slowly, watching as Jimin asks a few more questions, ‘Prat’tna says that Tsirin is there, and with what we all know, it’s highly possible that she’s being used by this Great Council to be able to control Axudar to this level.’

Namjoon nods to that.

Hoseok opens his mouth to say something but he stops, looking down at his hands before he asks, ‘How many do you think they recruited like this? Beings who believed they made the choices they did out of their own volition, out of…-out of what they believed was the truth?’

Sk’jin turns a little, eyeing them both with a sad expression in his eyes.
‘I don’t know,’ Namjoon replies honestly.
So many had worked to recruit officers and officials and Beings of every walk of life into Ndica’s twisted vision for the Universe- so many had believed in it. But how many were truly in belief of what they were told? And how many were like Camil.

It was terrifying to think about it. What the Yishengs did, or tried to do, all of that combined with the destruction that came and followed the Akramanese/Red Evil – all of this was, in a way, stopped 5 sols ago. However, what would happen with those who supported the Yishengs. Many major officials and officers and Directors alike, or Beings in positions of power were exposed to be a part of this network as a result of the Venture Unit’s purge- but how many still remained? And how many were still trying to follow in on what Ndica, Tlun’hl’a, and other Yishengs before (and Spaces forbid, after) them? Clearly Axudar was still attempting this by implementing Underverse networks; they obviously struck gold by managing to get a hold of Ilya’s network.
This was another major issue that the Jury probably feared, and not knowing what to do, sent them as scapegoats instead.

‘Did you inform Axudar that I was here?’
‘I did.’
‘What did they say?’
‘They said they would be ready to welcome you home.’
‘Were they prepared to come to Cuab-D2?’
‘Yes.’
‘Were you delivering your crew to Axudar?’
‘I was bringing them home. So that we could all live in peace and unison. And with Ilya’s network, we would be able to branch out and connect us all.’
Jimin spends an additional hour interrogating Camil. He gets a full list of the Beings following Camil’s lead within Ilya’s network, as well as locations that were compromised within the safe-houses among the network’s hoard.

It’s with relief when Jimin is pushed out of the cell, leaving Camil to slumber again.

‘I think they’re using Tsirin to control Axudar,’ Jimin says at once, looking up around at Yoongi, ‘And I think Ndica meant to use her to fulfil his plans to cover the Known Universe in his will. As what the original Yisheng had wanted.’

Yoongi agrees to that, also knowing that that was exactly what the others were thinking too. When they heard of the possibility that Tsirin would still be alive, the likeliness of her being kept prisoner the same way Jimin had been kept, was definitely on everyone’s minds. This confirmed it.

‘I think I’ll be able to walk about now,’ Jimin says as they enter the lift. ‘It doesn’t hurt anymore.’

‘Yeah?’ Yoongi shuffles over to the side a little to look down at Jimin, ‘Maybe we can exchange places.’

Jimin laughs, taking his hands and kissing them. He looks up, his smile slipping just a little as his fingers entwine with his own.

‘Yoongi I-’ Jimin sighs out, stopping as the lift slows to a stop.

‘Later?’ Yoongi bends down swiftly, kissing Jimin’s hands in return. ‘We still need to sleep for uh, 28 hours.’

‘28?’ Jimin laughs, squeezing his hands before dropping them back to his lap as the doors open.

‘I think we deserve it,’ Yoongi smiles, walking back into the watch-tower room.

‘Hey,’ Namjoon smiles at them as they enter. ‘Feeling okay?’

‘Yeah, I’m okay,’ Ilya says as he walks towards him. ‘We uh- we have a lot to think about.’

‘Where do you plan on going?’ Ilya asks carefully, ‘You are more than welcome to join us, to recover and make sure you have all the information you need before you take the next step forward.’

Namjoon glances at Jimin before he replies, ‘We don’t want to endanger you-’

‘-what happened is hardly your fault-’ Ilya says firmly.

But Jimin shakes his head, ‘We can’t.’

‘We will be leaving Māho in a week,’ Ilya continues, ‘I have already begun contacting our posts and other branches. Some locations are completely overrun.’

‘What do you plan on doing?’ Ilya asks carefully, ‘You are more than welcome to join us, to recover and make sure you have all the information you need before you take the next step forward.’

Namjoon glances at Jimin before he replies, ‘We don’t want to endanger you-’

‘We can’t allow this to go on,’ Jn’young answers instead, ‘This is past trafficking- past what the Alliance were doing. We’ll put an end to what we can control.’

It sounds terrible- with no positive outcome. Challenging a belief so deeply indoctrinated within a Beings fundamental value or system at this scale- this was decades, centuries of conversion. It could not, would not be easy to undo.

Ilya nods to Jn’young’s words.

‘The damage is extensive,’ the Ožkan continues. ‘But we will do what we can. I will check our other infiltrators as well- see how we can possibly warn other networks.’

‘If it’s any comfort,’ Hoseok offers, ‘The Venture Unit would be quite willing to help, though for a Ilya snorts, ‘Of course- we’re already housing a bit of interns, no doubt they’re raring to report back.’

Hoseok chuckles at that.

Sk’jin is quiet as they return back to the GI ship. He floats ahead of them, not quite paying attention to what was being said, but answering when called. Namjoon walks ahead to keep in pace with the Khol’isa, his voice occasionally carrying over as he talks to Sk’jin.

‘It’s funny seeing them not fight at every turn,’ Yoongi remarks to Jimin who blinks a few times before comprehending what Yoongi had said to him. He studies the two ahead of them while Hoseok snorts adding, ‘Give it a couple of days, I’m sure they’ll start fighting over some small non-issue again.’

‘Stop shit-talking me, I was thrown out into space,’ Sk’jin barks, not even turning to look at them. Namjoon on the other hand looks around, confused, clearly not possessing whatever ability Sk’jin had to sense the back-talk.

Jimin jabs Hoseok, stifling his laughter as Namjoon looks back a few times in confusion. Hoseok is covering his mouth with a hand, the other balancing himself on Jimin.

A while later, Hoseok jogs ahead to keep up with Sk’jin while Namjoon makes his way towards them.

‘We’ll be ready to leave soon,’ Namjoon sounds a little apologetic. He was probably discussing this with Sk’jin earlier, telling the Khol’isa what they had discussed when both Sk’jin and Jimin had been unconscious. ‘I’m ordering a number of the GI to stay here with Ilya, and the others to return to Lowet. Ilya says he can give them Transporters to return back to Lowet and other places.’

Jimin nods in understanding.

Namjoon gives him a brief look before turning to address Jimin again, ‘I uh, I met Prat’tna.’

Jimin does a double take, eyes widening before he schools his expression again.

‘Was it—was it really him?’

‘Um yeah, Yoongi and Hoseok say they’re called…regurgitated?’ Namjoon says carefully. ‘He um—’

‘-is he here?’ Jimin asks, voice filled with anticipation and badly repressed hope.

Namjoon can’t seem to help but look at Yoongi again but realization dawns on Jimin and he says, quietly, ‘Oh.’

‘He wanted me to tell you some things, and I guess, before we make any decisions of what to do next, we should all be in the same page about things.’ Namjoon says carefully.

Jimin nods, his hands in tight fists.

‘Uh,’ he begins, looking straight ahead, his jaw clenched. ‘Are there…are there more?’

Namjoon pauses a moment before he shakes his head, ‘It was just Prat’tna.’

Jimin studies him for a moment, and Namjoon looks away almost immediately.

‘I’m not too sure,’ Namjoon says hesitantly, ‘Prat’tna did say it was only him so far and uh— I met, one of the GI, he said his name was Dehin. He’s still in Lowet, he was uh, in a fight with Jungkook back in Grisial. So he’s uh, healing.’

‘Dehin?’ Jimin whispers, a smile on his face before it falls.

‘Yeah, Prat’tna called him that and…-well, I’m not sure how much he remembers, if he was exposed to the android-core or not…he did say that he had uh, dreams, I’m not sure how much of it is well—’ Namjoon looks at him helplessly.

But Yoongi knows what it means. Dehin had very recently been exposed to the android-core- his memories were resurfacing in a very abstract way.

‘He fought Jungkook?’ Jimin lets out a breathless wet chuckle, ‘Jungkookie is strong.’

Namjoon smiles at that, ‘Yeah he really is.’

Jungkook is awake by the time they get back. But he’s drowsy, a result of very strong medication and treatment he needed for his blood loss. He’s crouched by the doorway by the hangar, and he staggers upwards towards them. He first collides into Sk’jin, nearly tipping the Khol’isa backwards with a tight hug. Sk’jin is laughing, squishing the youngling’s face in his hands. Jungkook protests but doesn’t move away immediately. Hoseok ruffles his hair as he walks past to get into the ship. Then Jungkook staggers towards them. Jimin stops and gets up, arms held up for the Vicitra who has unshed tears in his large eyes.

Yoongi and Namjoon both move fast enough to stop the two of them from crashing onto the ground. Jungkook has Jimin up in the air, his feet a good feet off the ground in his embrace. Yoongi worries, not sure if Jungkook was being too strong or forceful. But Jimin doesn’t seem to be in pain, just hugging the youngling back as fiercely.

Jungkook seems to sway a little, dropping Jimin who falls back against Yoongi’s chest, immediately secured.

‘You shouldn’t move around like that just yet,’ Namjoon grins at Jungkook who leans against him for balance. ‘Come on, I’ll carry you in?’

Jungkook beams brightly at that, face flushing slightly as he nods.

‘Namjoon’s new vow after getting back functional arms is to sweep Beings off of their feet,’ Sk’jin draws.

Namjoon barely staggers as Jungkook clambers onto his back, looking all too delighted at being higher up than everyone else. The youngling had grown a lot, but Namjoon was still taller by a bit. ‘I don’t think he’s carried Hoseok?’ Jimin laughs, taking Jungkook’s outstretched hand and swinging it at a strange height.

‘I wouldn’t mind,’ Hoseok chimes in.

Namjoon just rolls his eyes.

‘Good luck carrying us all,’ Sk’jin scoffs, ‘Some of us have dignity.’

‘I would never do such a thing,’ Namjoon laughs at Sk’jin who turns his nose up in the air in exaggeration. Jungkook’s feet kick a little, clearly delighted in having everyone up and awake, and also slightly woozy from medication.

Yoongi collapses Jimin’s stroller and follows them inwards. He returns it back to the Medical Bay and as he walks out finds Jungkook being lead away by Sk’jin while Namjoon and Jimin sit down in the kitchen area. There’s food on the table and Jimin is drinking steadily from a cup.

He says something to Namjoon who nods, sitting up a bit straighter as he retrieves his NaviLet. Jimin looks up, as though he knew Yoongi was there all along.

Yoongi gives him an encouraging smile.

Making his way upwards, Yoongi comes across Hoseok coming down.

‘Oh hey, is Namjoon downstairs?’

‘Yeah- uh, he’s talking with Jimin, I think to catch him up on things.’ Yoongi explains.

Hoseok stops.

‘Ah…well, I guess we uh-‘ Hoseok frowns, looking back up and down before saying, ‘I guess we just…find spare rooms?’

Snorting, Yoongi nods in agreement.

The long hallways are startlingly different from what they were used to. Hoseok tells him about the large motherships used occasionally by the Venture Unit, and also about their ever-moving old headquarters. Yoongi doesn’t have the heart to tell him that he knows each and every single ship Hoseok is telling him about, just nodding and listening. The ship was of course huge, but absolutely minute compared to the GIU motherships. They find Sk’jin standing in front of a large alcove with washers stacked up, nearly entirely naked except for a towel wrapped elegantly around him like some toga.

‘The Laikin is here right?’ the Khol’isa asks at once, ‘I need a new change of clothes.’

‘Yeah but uh, I don’t think you should be going around like that-‘ Hoseok begins.

‘Please,’ Sk’jin rolls his eyes, stuffing in his dirty laundry into the washers, ‘I’m a vision.’

Yoongi would agree normally but Sk’jin’s skin is splotched and bruised, and you couldn’t help but wince when you looked at him.

‘Your items are being brought up for you,’ a GI tells Sk’jin from behind him.

Sk’jin is so startled, his towel-toga nearly unravels at the sight of the GI. Even Hoseok jumps just a little. Yoongi on the other hand, had already seen him approaching.

‘Ugh!’ the Khol’isa grunts, ‘It was annoying enough with that Human! Now there’s a million of you!’

‘They will be delivered to your rooms soon.’

It was still weird seeing them like this, after nearly being killed. Namjoon had explained that part of the story to him, but it still felt strange to Yoongi.

‘Ngfy’widan Hoseok, your quarters are right here,’ another voice behind them says. Hoseok doesn’t jump too much at this new voice. ‘Human Yoongi, this is yours.’

The new GI indicates to 2 doors they had walked past on their way to speak to Sk’jin.

‘Oh, thank you,’ Hoseok manages to get out.

Yoongi is not surprised to find that his room is basically a standard set-up for the GI. A bare space with a narrow table with softly glowing panels, a bench, and a uniform laid out on one side.

‘Wait,’ Hoseok frown, looking in over Yoongi’s shoulder. ‘Is there some sort of confusion?’

‘No,’ Yoongi smiles with a shrug, ‘I’m GI, this is what GI’s are used to. It’s our standard quarters.’

Hoseok frowns, looking at the table Yoongi has long used as a bed for as long as his memories of this life can go back.

‘That’s…’ Hoseok grimaces before looking at Yoongi, ‘You do know that that’s an autopsy bed right?’

It’s not too surprising when Hoseok points it out.

‘Come on, this isn’t right,’ Hoseok pulls Yoongi out of the room, ‘We can share.’

It makes Yoongi smile; touched that Hoseok would be offended on his behalf, be worried, on his behalf.

‘Or he can just use Jimin’s,’ Sk’jin pokes his head out of his doorway, giving Yoongi several exaggerated winks, ‘Why bother with separate rooms aye?’

Hand on one hip, Hoseok levels Sk’jin with an unimpressed look. But it does nothing to deter the Khol’isa, rather Sk’jin winks suggestively at Hoseok adding, ‘Or you could share mine Hoseokkie.’

Hoseok pretends to think about it before saying, ‘I don’t think you’re quite up to it just yet, maybe after you regain your strength.’

Sk’jin cackles, saluting Hoseok’s witty remark before disappearing through his doorway.

They discuss random inconsequential matters as Hoseok unpacks some of his belongings, rearranging his furniture and going around the space, inspecting air-vents and outlets.

‘It’s just a 500 strams difference?’

‘Yeah.’

‘What’s the point in making a new model?’

‘That’s what I was thinking.’

Sk’jin joins them later, showered and smelling strongly of freshly laundered clothes.

‘The GI are questionable but they have great taste in detergent!’

‘It’s the most effective in getting rid of blood and guts.’

Sk’jin does not appreciate the reasoning.

‘I’m starving, let’s go eat!’ he announces.

‘Is Taeh’yung still sleeping?’ Hoseok asks to no one in specific.

‘Yeah just checked in on them,’ Sk’jin replies, ‘Jungkook is with him too. They’re both knocked out.’

‘Getting better?’

‘Just a matter of the medication working,’ Sk’jin pauses before adding, ‘Will Taeh’yung recover fully?’

Both Hoseok and Sk’jin look at him.

‘I don’t know,’ Yoongi replies honestly, ‘I’ve only seen an anti-core being used once before on a Heladian. He made a full recovery after being administered with the corrective antidote.’

‘Taeh’yung isn’t exactly like most Living Beings,’ Sk’jin says slowly, ‘It’s possible if something were very wrong with him, he’d let us know, or he’d uh- well, show it?’
Hoseok snorts, ‘Neither of you were there when he first got around to consciousness, I thought I was going to end up being plastered all over the walls.’

‘We could ask the GI?’ Sk’jin asks hesitantly, ‘Maybe they have a uh, antidote thingy?’

‘We could,’ Hoseok nods, ‘If I can find one-! Fuck!’

A GI is standing by the doorway, a tray in their arms with bowls of some sort of soup.

‘How may I assist you?’ she asks.

‘Oh uh- well-’ Hoseok clutches at his chest weakly.

‘We believe that Taeh’yung the Zhak’gri was administered with some form of anti-core,’ Yoongi tells the GI, ‘It is possible that the anticore was not made for his species, so we do not know how to treat it. Could you run an analysis to check him for anti-core?’

Sk’jin and Hoseok squirm a little where they stand as the GI doesn’t say anything for a full 10 seconds before she replies, ‘Understood. Mission accepted.’

‘Spaces this is going to be really annoying to get used to,’ Sk’jin sighs before adding, ‘Again.’ Yoongi just pats him on the back.

‘That was the most insincere back-patting I have ever had the misfortune of experiencing.’

Downstairs is empty. Neither Namjoon or Jimin are at the dining table though their cups and other items are there. The Medical Bay furthest down the area is lit, however, and Yoongi makes his way there quietly as Hoseok takes a seat at the dining table and Sk’jin makes his way to the pantry at once.

The Medical Bay in here has been turned into a sort of temporary morgue. Yoongi knew that the bodies of the other GI who had died when they came in to control the chaos Camil had started were already removed and ready to be transported back to Lowet. But Namjoon had kept Prat’tna in this Medical Bay, mainly so that Jimin would be able to say his goodbye.

Carefully, not quite trusting himself to be sneaky anymore, Yoongi looks inside the Medical Bay. Namjoon is speaking, hand occasionally gesturing. Jimin is nodding, his expression sorrowful but there’s expectation- as though he knew all along. He’s looking down at the Megibīyan, tears still clinging to his skin. Jimin is gentle as he touches Prat’tna’s face.

Namjoon’s voice is low, and Yoongi can’t quite hear them but he doesn’t really want to. It felt like a private discussion- one that should be respected. Yoongi simply turns, putting his back to the wall and he waits. He can hear Sk’jin and Hoseok talking some ways across, the hum of the ship, the sound of his own pulse.

‘Yoongi?’

He looks inside carefully.

Jimin and Namjoon haven’t moved, but they’re both looking at him as though they knew he was there. He stands by the doorway, feeling a little sheepish.

‘The GI are done with what they need to do,’ Namjoon says, ‘We can leave now.’

Yoongi nods to that.

‘I’ll contact Ilya and tell him we’ll be leaving within the hour now,’ the Kutsoglerin adds, ‘I uh, think he’ll want to say his goodbyes with Sk’jin.’

Yoongi nods again, walking in slowly as Namjoon walks out.

Jimin doesn’t say anything until Yoongi reaches him.

‘He said he didn’t want to-…didn’t want me to see him like this,’ Jimin pats Prat’tna’s face gently.

‘I cherished his words so much- his, and Yyna’s- they were like family to me.’

‘Namjoon told you?’

Jimin nods.

‘I’m…I’m not surprised,’ Jimin says carefully, ‘Of course the Great Council would not always be neutral in how they…acted or relayed information. Of course they would try, to set a path, to set fate and the hearts of all towards a path they believed was correct. We knew that- Tsirin and I knew that…’

‘But?’

‘But I don’t know how we didn’t see it,’ Jimin confesses, ‘How we couldn’t have noticed that Ndica’s influence was not one where he was trying to gain our resources, or to try and join us to the
‘He masked his true intentions by playing up to your fears,’ Yoongi concedes.
Jimin nods, ‘We were very thoroughly played.’
‘What do you want to do next?’ Yoongi asks gently.
Jimin has his palm over Prat’tna’s forehead, the other hand over his chest. He didn’t appear to be thinking of what to say- Yoongi can sense determination and a finalization in the way Jimin carried himself.
His eyes were no longer glazed over with confusion, or denial, or betrayal. There was pain of course, worry- but there’s a resolve within him that both encourages Yoongi, but also slightly unsettles him.
Jimin leans down and kisses Prat’tna’s brow.
‘I just want to maybe sleep,’ Jimin confesses as he stands up straight.
‘For 28 hours?’
Jimin smiles looking around at Yoongi, shoulders hitching up a little as though to laugh but he stops, eyes caught on something behind Yoongi.
Yoongi also turns, breath hitching at the sight before him.
All of the GI are gathered just outside the Medical Bay, just watching them, in their complete uniform.
‘Oh-‘ Jimin breathes out, making to move but stopping himself. He clutches at Yoongi’s arm, hand sliding down to take his hand and Yoongi quickly intertwines their fingers. ‘I-’
Suddenly, the GI bow low to him.
‘Oh- uh, please don’t-‘ Jimin stammers out, taking a hesitant step.
They all immediately stand up, making no move to go away.
Jimin breathes out shakily, looking pained.
‘I…’ he begins quietly, ‘We have…we have finally found each other.’
It’s quiet, only faint sounds from the kitchen area is just barely audible.
‘And I will take you all home,’ Jimin’s voice is determined, ‘And we can all be…be safe, and well, and whole.’
‘Thank you for finding me,’ Jimin says quietly as he turns to look at Yoongi instead. ‘Thank you for waiting.’
The GI step away but Yoongi doesn’t pay too much attention, instead leaning in to gently touch his forehead to Jimin’s.
‘I will always find you,’ he whispers.
Jimin places his free hand over Yoongi’s chest, right above his heart.
‘You said I could…I could borrow yours?’
Yoongi nods, placing his hand over Jimin’s, barely touching it, still afraid of somehow hurting him.
‘Just for a while,’ Jimin whispers, ‘Can I?’
Yoongi nods, smiling faintly in a teasing manner as he says, ‘It’s yours. It will always be yours.’
Jimin looks like he’s trying not to blush, but also still maintain a serious expression.
‘You’re-‘ Jimin laughs a bit.
Kissing his forehead Yoongi ducks down to kiss his nose, and then lips as he pulls him in close very carefully, afraid of causing any discomfort.
‘I mean it.’ He says in a more calm tone, ‘My sunshine.’
Jimin’s eyes are shining right before he closes them, leaning in to kiss Yoongi.
‘Fucking Spaces-!’ Hoseok yells, making them both jump, eyes widening in surprise, looking around the empty Medical Bay.
There’s a mighty crash of what was definitely kitchen utensils and loud choking gasps. Yoongi and Jimin can’t quite make out what was happening until-
‘For fuck’s sake this is ridiculous!’ Sk’jin screams from the kitchen. ‘Fucking GI!’
There’s a heaviness in the air.
There always was, with farewells.
But it mostly centers around Sk’jin and Ilya.
They’re still talking, separate to the side while the Axudarian and Orvan Jaen and E’nid talk to Hoseok and Namjoon. Yoongi is speaking to several gathered units of the GI, voice inaudible.
‘You seem to have made up your mind.’
Jn’yong, like Sk’jin, and like other Khol’isa Jimin is assuming, looks impeccable despite being rather battered and bruised himself. He had sustained some serious injury, but he didn’t display any signs of pain or discomfort.
‘I have,’ Jimin nods.
‘Well, if that’s the case…’ Jn’yong trails off, ‘It won’t be easy.’
‘It won’t,’ Jimin agrees. ‘But I have to.’
‘It needs to work.’
Jemin smiles at the Khol’isa.
‘When it does, can I count on you and Ilya?’
Jn’yong gives him a charming smirk, ‘Oh, of course your highness.’
‘Ah, you heard about that,’ Jimin mutters under his breath.
Jn’yong just smiles in a pleased manner, eyes wrinkling in a mischievous way.
They all return back, one by one. Jimin waves at the GI, who all wave back belatedly. Some even salute Namjoon who splutters, waving back hastily before ducking in, clearly embarrassed. Hoseok laughs after him, waving goodbye at Jaen and E’nid.
Sk’jin is the last to enter, his expression carefully schooled and calm. He doesn’t say anything, just buckling himself into his new seating station at the communications board as they enter the Bridge.
It’s quiet as they prepare the ship for warp. There were a total of 7 additional GI aboard alongside them. Jimin wonders if this was to match up for the amount of Beings aboard this mission.
Sitting back on a footstool, Jimin leans back as the security straps unfold around him. Jimin only opens his eyes when he feels a hand over his own. Turning his head a little, he finds Yoongi looking at him worriedly.
Jemin smiles at him.
The light of warp fills the large Bridge.
There’s a small sigh of relief from Namjoon and Hoseok as they’re given a silent notification that they’re at green.
‘If anyone needs me, I’m working on my tan,’ Sk’jin says the moment the ship is also cleared at green.
The GI don’t answer of course, but Hoseok nods in understanding. Namjoon just looks over, watching as Sk’jin vanishes through the doorway for a while before he looks around over at where Jimin and Yoongi were sitting.
‘Jimin, you need to rest up too,’ Namjoon says after a while.
Jemin nods, smiling at Yoongi as he helps him stand though there’s no need. Jimin’s tired, his body aching at random places, but he wasn’t completely invalid. But he won’t argue that he didn’t like it.

‘I really should go wash up,’ Jimin chuckles, looking down at his stained clothes. He still felt oddly grimy but there were things that needed to be done before.

‘I’ll bring you a new set of clothes?’ Yoongi offers, gesturing to the ones he was wearing. Jimin nods with a smile, reaching out to touch the fabric again. It felt comforting against his skin.

Yoongi hovers around him as he gets up, making Jimin snort at the display. Yoongi was probably still reliving Jimin’s pained reaction from earlier, which was why he was so careful around him. Jimin stops by a doorway before entering his own quarters as Yoongi makes his way in search for new clothes. The door opens quietly and the room inside lights up softly.

On the bed Jimin can just about make out two forms. Jungkook is snoring very quietly, while Taeh’yung blinks sleepily at Jimin, eyes gleaming a faint green at random.

‘Hey,’ Jimin smiles at the Zhak’gri.

‘Chim, I feel like shit,’ Taeh’yung complains, ‘My insides are funny.’

Jimin walks over to the sleeping pair, smiling to himself at how funnily they’re wrapped around each other.

‘Is this comfortable?’ Jimin asks, leaning in to properly place the blanket over Jungkook’s legs.

‘Super,’ Taeh’yung yawns.

‘Why are you here?’ Jimin asks, carefully sitting on the edge of the bed.

‘Kookie is young,’ Taeh’yung smacks his lips a few times, eyes closed, ‘He’s strong and-‘ he yawns quietly, ‘-it’s soothing.’

Jimin smiles at that.

‘We all like it,’ they say from the shadows, ‘Soothing.’

Jimin ruffles Taeh’yung’s hair.

Jungkook was still medicated, so he wasn’t too bothered by Taeh’yung’s invasion of his personal space. Maybe he liked it too- found the additional presence comforting.

‘We’re already moving?’

Jimin nods.

‘We’ll be in warp for a while- everyone’s safe, and we’re resting.’

Taeh’yung smiles at that, huddling in closer to press his face against Jungkook’s back.

Jimin backs away quietly, the lights dimming softly. Stepping out, he finds Yoongi waiting for him, a small folded lump in his hands.

‘They’re still sleeping,’ Jimin tells him. ‘I think they’re both going to need to sleep off their medication for a while, recover their strength.’

Yoongi nods to that before he says, ‘You should too.’

‘I think I was the one who told you that you need to sleep.’

Yoongi breaks out into a smile.

‘Just overheard Namjoon ordering Hoseok to go rest.’ The Human confides, ‘Threatened to carry him.’

Jimin smiles at that, ‘Delta sleep sounds good.’

‘It’s not,’ Yoongi says with so much comic seriousness Jimin’s not sure if he should laugh or not.

‘Here,’ Yoongi holds up the clothes he had with him. ‘Dug around, found these.’

Jimin takes them carefully, a strange sense of not wanting to contaminate the new clothes. It’s not like he was filthy or anything, but seeing the soft purple fabric makes Jimin want to regard it with some form of reverence. Like it was a piece of home he wanted to cherish.

‘It’s uh, it’s a nice fabric, comfortable,’ Yoongi says, making Jimin realize he’d just been staring at the clothes blankly.

‘Oh- oh yeah,’ Jimin is surprised to find himself somewhat teary eyed.

‘What’s wrong?’ Yoongi asks gently.

Jimin shakes his head, ‘It just-…they feel really nice?’

Yoongi just smiles.

‘I’ll take your other clothes to keep for wash,’ he tells him, guiding him away from Jungkook’s doorway. ‘Sk’jin really likes the detergent here.’

It makes Jimin laugh.

The room designated for Jimin is similar to the one Jungkook, and now Taeh’yung, were using. It’s much more spacious than the one in the Laikin and the Užkulisai. And maybe because this was a Yisheng ship, it felt much more softer with the edges of the design, as though hoping to convey comfort and safety with the design for those who would use it.

‘Where’s your room?’ Jimin asks.

‘Oh uh-’ Yoongi pauses at the doorway. He doesn’t quite look at Jimin as he says, ‘Uh, I’m sharing with Hobi at the moment.’

A lot of questions go through Jimin’s mind.

‘The GI, when they uh, assigned and prepared the rooms they…well, I am GI, so mines just like the ones they use,’ Yoongi shuffles a little. ‘So Hoseok told me, I could share with him.’

‘Stay with me,’ Jimin says though it’s more of a question.

In the Laikin they had been sharing, though they honestly hadn’t had the chance of actually going about to sharing the space too much.

Yoongi nods a bit hesitantly, unsure where to look and Jimin feels bad.

‘I mean, um, if you want to,’ Jimin says at once, ‘I’m not- I’m not forcing you if you’re not comfortable.-’ No! Yoongi says quickly, ‘No that’s not it I uh-’

Jimin waits for an explanation but Yoongi is getting rapidly flustered before he holds his hands out and says, while addressing Jimin’s knees, ‘I’ll uh, take your stuff to wash.’

Jimin wheezes, his whole body shaking with laughter as soon as he recovers.

Was Yoongi shy?

Yoongi still isn’t quite looking at him, still holding his hands out. Jimin walks over to take his hands and asks, ‘Will you stay with me?’

Yoongi nods, ears bright red, fingers twitching a little in Jimin’s hold.

‘Yeah, uh, I will.’

Jimin laughs again, and Yoongi, still embarrassed hurriedly asks, ‘I uh, do you need help? Or like, uh, anything.’

Jimin turns his wrists upwards, showing Yoongi the seams of his cuffs. He’s about to make a joke, maybe something along the lines of some exaggerated account of how royalty never undress themselves but Yoongi beats him to it, fingers moving deftly to undo the fastenings there.

Yoongi looks up with wide eyes, realizing what he’d done, ready to take a step back, but Jimin holds on to his hands.

‘Can you help me?’

Yoongi flushes with colour and pales rapidly. Jimin is about to take it back before he nods, releasing a slow exhale, meeting Jimin’s gaze with a quiet determination that in turn makes Jimin flustered.

Slowly, Yoongi reaches for the collar of the light jacket around Jimin, unhooking the higher flap and flattening it away. This is completely different from when Yoongi helped him take off his clothes last time. There’s an unspoken but shared acute awareness of their actions.

Yoongi doesn’t stop; he slowly and carefully undoes the fastenings of his jacket, his breath fanning across Jimin’s slowly exposed collar and neck. But Yoongi doesn’t quite touch him, as though still afraid of hurting him. He tugs at the jacket and Jimin allows it to fall to the floor, the sleeves slightly catching on his inner-shirt.

Yoongi ducks a little, untucking his shirt from his trousers; he’s almost too slow, difficult to work around an activity without touching the person you were trying to help undress. So Jimin turns his head just a little, lips nearly brushing over Yoongi’s bent head.

‘I’m not hurt,’ he whispers quietly, ‘You can touch me.’

Yoongi looks up briefly, eyes darting a little all over the place, fingers fumbling with the fastening over his chest.

‘You don’t hurt me.’

Yoongi undoes the final fastening before standing in front of Jimin again. He looks at him. They’re close. Slowly, Yoongi further opens the panels of his shirt, before pushing the garment off of his shoulders completely. He leans in, arms around him as he lowers the garment completely.

Jimin almost jumps at the slight and soft touch against his shoulder. Yoongi’s lips press lightly against his exposed skin, following along his collar as his fingers trail down his now bare arms as he pulls down his sleeves.

Yoongi’s lips are warm and soft against his throat.

The moment it comes off Jimin raises his hands to gently catch onto Yoongi’s shirt before pulling it upwards.

Yoongi starts slightly- looking taken aback, and endearingly shy, shoulders turning in just a little. ‘I- I’ve showered already,’ Yoongi says breathlessly.

‘Didn’t Ilya say hygiene was a priority on his ship? I thought that was a good rule.’ Jimin teases but he drops the hem of his shirt nonetheless. Yoongi quickly takes his hands in his, kissing his knuckles before murmuring against his fingers, ‘I’m scarred.’

Jimin’s chest twinges with pain.

‘And I’m not?’

The scars from where he was recently stabbed is still there, skin puckered but healed, discolouration slowly fading away but still apparent. His sides are bruised, a majority of his skin splotched and bruised.

Yoongi swallows, mouth opening and closing before he says softly, vulnerability heavy in his words, ‘You can touch me too.’

Jimin lifts Yoongi’s shirt off of the Human, and before he has time to say anything else, Jimin leans in to kiss the starting point of a long jagged scar that extended from Yoongi’s collarbone to his hip.

Yoongi’s skin is an expanse of every possible scar, bruise, and discolouration possible on a living Being. There are part of his skin that have sunk in a little from deep tissue damage, heavy scarring that discolours his skin from deep within.

Yoongi’s hands shakily rest on his waist, smoothing down to his hips, fingers slipping under the bands of his trouser. With slightly shaking hands he undoes the fastenings, allowing the trousers to drop to the floor. Jimin does the same, making Yoongi lean in, his forehead pressed down to his shoulder, breath escaping him shakily.

Carefully he reaches up to cup Jimin’s face in both hands and kissing the top of his head. Jimin reaches for his wrists, smiling at the Human.

Jimin has already been stark-naked before Yoongi- in the OrTank and previously after that as well. But there’s something different this time, as Yoongi offers him his arm for balance as Jimin kicks off his underwear. He shivers just a little, feeling Yoongi’s eyes on him.

It doesn’t make him want to hide- just makes him want to be closer.

Without a word Yoongi guides him into the en-suite and opens the shower cubicle, gently pushing Jimin in first directly under the shower square. He struggles a little with the settings before tapping on the in-built screen to the side.

They both jump when the water hits them. It makes Jimin laugh, shoulders curling in a little instinctively as he ducks under the water some more, pushing his hair out of his face. He feels arms curl around him tentatively, a body pressing up against him under the main stream of water. He leans back, taking Yoongi’s arms and pulling them around him in a tighter and firmer embrace.

And then slowly, Yoongi pulls him closer, exhaling quietly as though finally relieved to be holding him this close again. Jimin nuzzles back against the Human, smiling against his temple. They just stand like that, the water flowing around them in a soothing steady shower. For a moment, Jimin thinks Yoongi won’t be able to let go of him. But slowly, Yoongi lets go of one hand to run his fingers through Jimin’s hair.

Jimin closes his eyes at the gentle feeling.

‘You’re not in pain?’ Yoongi asks.

Jimin shakes his head with a smile.

‘It looks worse than it actually is, I mean it.’
Yoongi is incredibly gentle, washing his back and side carefully. Jimin smiles fondly at how Yoongi doesn’t allow him to even rinse off the shampoo from his own hair. Yoongi is quite systematic, dealing with one limb at a time. It’s funny how there’s not much embarrassment anymore, or hazed lust in his movements as he kneels down to scrub at Jimin’s feet. Yoongi was on a mission, and he was going to complete it.

He’s careful around the still fresh cut that somehow got onto his ankle with Jimin even realizing it. Yoongi even carefully washes his ears, making sure the water didn’t go in as he studiously concentrates on the back of his ears. Jimin shivers slightly, holding back a sharp gasp when Yoongi’s hand reaches between his legs. He leans his head onto the Human’s shoulder, eyes closed. It’s helpful that Yoongi is quite methodic, an almost impartial regard to this process, only concentrating on getting Jimin showered and cleaned.

It doesn’t stop Jimin from shivering, his right leg nearly giving way as Yoongi’s fingers drag through.

When he’s done, Yoongi is about to turn the shower back again but Jimin takes the soft padded scrub from him and switches their roles.

He’s embarrassed when Jimin does the same for him, hesitant, shoulders curling in a little, as though trying to hide himself from Jimin’s sight. Jimin doesn’t push it, but instead he leans in, taking Yoongi’s chin gently with his hand and kissing his nose and forehead.

‘I’ll get your back?’ Jimin asks gently.

Yoongi somewhat hesitantly turns around, showing his back to Jimin.

There’s a massive burn scar spread across Yoongi’s back, skin bumpy and pulled and gathered at random. Not even a day ago, he had seen the tops of his scars and old injuries. The layers of damaged skin is a heartbreaking sight.

Jimin mirrors Yoongi’s motions and actions, rubbing the shower-pad over his shoulders and down his back. The indent down his back is strangely not too scarred, and Jimin presses a light kiss next to it.

‘I was- I was so scared,’ Yoongi is almost inaudible over the shower. ‘I thought I lost you and I-’ Jimin stops, leaning in closer to listen.

‘I was-….I didn’t know what to do.’

Jimin leans in and hugs him tight.

‘Thank you for coming back.’

They finish showering, and Yoongi is methodic again as he helps Jimin apply some of the regrow-serum on his more intense bruises. Jimin kisses Yoongi around his face every time he can, making the Human wrinkle up his face, eyes fond.

Jimin combs through his hair with his fingers, and Yoongi closes his eyes, enjoying the sensation.

‘That’s nice,’ he mumbles, sounding sleepy.

Jimin grins, leaning in closer, their bodies almost touching, before kissing him softly.

He jumps a little, feeling Yoongi’s hand on his waist, returning his kiss slowly. Jimin wraps his arms around Yoongi, pulling him closer so they touch, skin wonderfully warm and soft.

‘Jimin?’ Yoongi presses a kiss to his neck, exhaling out slowly.

‘Hm?’ Jimin shivers. Yoongi doesn’t say anything immediately, instead taking his time to kiss his neck and throat.

‘Jimin,’ Yoongi whispers against his skin- he almost sounds like he’s pleading. With some difficulty, Jimin tilts Yoongi away from his neck to face him instead.

‘Yoongi?’

‘Teach me how to touch you.’

His voice is low, carefully level though Jimin can hear the restraint in his tone.

Yoongi touches him tentatively, fingertips gliding over the expanse of skin around his waist. Jimin knows exactly what he means. It’s almost funny, because Yoongi had touched him- every single inch of him in the shower and yet here he was, asking permission to touch him. But Jimin knows what he means.

‘Show me how to touch you,’ Yoongi pauses, sounding strained now, ‘Teach me how to touch you.
Jimin kisses Yoongi hard, pulling him closer, needing him closer. Yoongi reciprocates at once, his gasp lost between their lips.

Hands tentative at first, move down along his body. But they gain confidence.
Yoongi’s touch is reverent; desperate, as though afraid he would never be able to touch him again.
‘I got you,’ Jimin manages to get out once they part for breath, ‘I got you-‘

Jimin feels himself being lifted, hands gripping around his thighs, and suddenly his back is hitting the cool covers of the bed. He arches up to meet Yoongi, drawing him down quickly, his skin aflame, his heart wild.

He pushes himself up a little to kiss Yoongi but the Human stops, hand clenched in a fist beside his head on the pillow, a pained expression on his face.

‘Wait-‘ Yoongi’s eyes are screwed shut, swaying in an alarming way above Jimin.
‘What’s wrong-‘ Jimin asks worriedly, his pulse loud in his ears, looking all over the Human in fear.

‘I- I’m-‘ Yoongi huffs out a laugh that’s embarrassed more than anything else, ‘I got dizzy.’
There’s a long pause where they’re both breathing heavily, not moving- not daring to move.
Then Jimin lets out a short laugh. He can’t help it. Then they’re both laughing, breathless and dizzy with more than just temporary dip in blood pressure. They’re unable to move apart, their bodies flushed with heat, flushed with want and need.
‘Think I might have, uh, rushed ahead too quickly,’ Yoongi mumbles, face red.
‘You’re okay?’ Jimin asks, unable to stop smiling, nuzzling against Yoongi’s red face.

Yoongi chuckles, eyes closed, trying to overcome his dizziness. ‘I just can’t- just can’t stop touching you.’
‘I’m here,’ Jimin hugs him, pulling him down to rest against his body. ‘I got you.’

Yoongi exhales heavily, a low groan as he settles on top of Jimin, shivering against him. Yoongi presses his ear over where his heart would be, listening and pacing himself. Jimin cradles his head closer, kissing the top of his head. After a while, he turns them over, letting Yoongi lay back.
‘This is not what-‘ Yoongi breathes out slowly, less red in the face his eyes no longer hazy, ‘This is not what I had imagined.’

Jimin laughs, straddling the Human and leaning down until their noses bumped. He takes Yoongi’s hands, kissing them before pushing them up above his head, kissing his face gently as he brushed his hair out of his face. He then gently rubs at Yoongi’s temples, making the Human close his eyes.
‘Sunshine.’

Yoongi reaches up for him, hand cupping his face and drawing him down for a kiss.
They kiss slow, deep, allowing themselves to take a moment. Jimin traces down Yoongi’s jaw to his neck and then chest. He blindly reaches and searches for his hands, taking them by the wrist before placing his palms over his hips.
Yoongi sits up, never breaking their kiss, hands mapping downwards, gripping at his thighs, tucking him even closer, sharing a gasp in the process before flipping them over. The bed is small, so they nearly fall over. Jimin laughs, arms clinging around Yoongi’s shoulders as the Human chuckles, sounding as wrecked as Jimin felt.

It’s difficult to move and coordinate when neither of them really wants to separate even if it’s for a short period of time.

Yoongi touches him with such absolute purpose- as though storing every single sensation in his memory, mapping and memorizing. Jimin is filled with adoration- his chest nearly bursting and he speaks before he can really manage to bring together the words in his mind.
‘I love you,’ he sighs out.
Yoongi stops chuckling, his hands stilling. Jimin slowly realigns his legs, wrapping them around his hips. Yoongi exhales noisily.
‘I love you so much Yoongi,’ Jimin smiles breathlessly.
Yoongi doesn’t say anything, instead moving slowly but surely, to wrap his arms around Jimin’s torso, lifting him a little from the bed, kissing him slow as they sink into each other.
‘I love you, I love you-‘
Jimin swallows his words, tongue tracing each word, tasting Yoongi’s strained mumbles, until they’re both unable to do anything more than just breathe against each other’s lips.
‘You’re- you’re everything I’ve wanted to feel-’ Yoongi gasps out. ‘Everything.’
Jimin shivers almost violently, holding him, wanting him, needing him closer.
‘I love you so much.’
Jimin bares himself in every possible way.
And Yoongi is there to cover him, their bodies eclipsing.
‘I love you.’

Chapter End Notes

(Author’s Notes)

;)
;
;
Yeah so I can never really write full smut so shrugs though I guess this is probably the most explicit thing I've written.

WHO ELSE WENT THROUGH THE ENTIRE WEEKEND WATCHING BANGBANGCON?? BEST WEEKEND EVER

I've been having issues with my router.

It's been a while,

And as a result,

My laptop never connects to the wifi, my sisters laptop can do it, our phones can connect.

I thought it was my old laptops problem.

But I bought a new laptop in February and still no connection.

Turns out my routers fucked.

I was supposed to update this last week.

Clearly from my notes.

Sorry for this monstrosity but it piled on T_T.

Also I want to formally announce that when I say ILY it means I love Yoongi.

He has been just giving and giving and giving this month I have never been more blessed I love him so much.

Good news related to the fic I will update the next chapter faster!! As its been!!

Somewhat already written sigh

How's everyone holding up with quarantine?
Yoongi stretches, slowly waking from a deep and wonderful sleep. Warmth envelopes him; there’s sunlight on his skin. The air has a wonderful freshness to it- like the windows were opened right after rain- the air clean and faintly fragrant, somehow strangely familiar. The blankets are the right weight, his pillow soft and at the perfect height, and-

‘Yoongi?’

It’s followed by a small quiet laugh, and a hand gently cupping his face, while another curves around his waist. A warm weight settles down on him, and Yoongi adjusts his legs to accommodate this very welcome intrusion. Then, there’s a light kiss pressed to his chin.

‘Open your eyes.’

Yoongi just wraps Jimin closer to himself, pulling him down with his legs. Jimin laughs, balancing himself properly before he’s hovering a little above him.

‘Yoongi,’ Jimin says quietly, smile evident in his tone, ‘Open your eyes?’

‘Sunshine,’ Yoongi smiles back, reaching up blindly to touch Jimin’s face.

He feels Jimin move a little, repositioning himself until he’s cradling Yoongi’s head in his arms and kissing his face softly. Yoongi lifts his hands to smooth down Jimin’s torso, feeling the warm expanse of skin under his palms. He digs just a little under the ribs, making Jimin chuckle breathlessly before coming to wrap around his lower back.

‘Open your eyes.’

Yoongi takes a moment before he slowly opens his eyes.

The light of the sun is warm and rosy, the colour on Jimin’s cheeks are soft and delicate. The sunlight seems to catch every single strand of hair and with each tiny movement, Jimin is surrounded by a delicate wispy halo of fractured light.

‘Hi pretty,’ Jimin smiles.

‘Me?’ Yoongi mumbles out, feeling slightly dazed.

Jimin nods, his halo of light sparkling.
You should see yourself.’ Yoongi trails his fingers up and down slowly. Jimin flushes with colour, eyes darting about in an embarrassed way.

‘I think I can see it,’ Jimin tells him, almost bashful.

Yoongi grins, his hands a bit more purposeful, feeling the need to touch Jimin even more. He stops low on his back, fingers softly feeling the prominent dips there.

Jemin squirms just a little, face still flushed, playing idly with Yoongi’s left ear.

‘You have the dimples of Venus,’ Yoongi tells him, unable to look away. Jimin is still funnily bashful, but this gets his attention as he stops squirming and asks, ‘What’s that?’

‘These,’ Yoongi presses down a little bit on the spots. ‘Dimples on your lower back. On Earth, we called them the Dimples of Venus.’

‘I…I don’t think we have a name for them like that,’ Jimin lowers himself, disentangling his arms to lay on Yoongi’s chest, hands cushioning his chin. ‘I think in anatomy, yes.’

‘Venus was the Roman goddess of love,’ Yoongi explains, ‘The Romans were a very ancient civilization- they worshipped a ton of gods. And Venus, supposedly had these. It’s like, a sign.’

‘Of what?’ Jimin laughs, legs kicking up a little, feet in the air.

‘Uh, sexiness?’ Yoongi frowns in thought.

Jemin laughs, his whole body shaking Yoongi’s.

‘That’s funny,’ Jimin grins, ‘That’s so funny!’

‘Yeah?’ Yoongi brings his arms higher to wrap around Jimin properly, turning them over to their sides.

Jemin nods, still beaming at him as if he’s just so incredibly funny- like he was making him happy.

‘Good,’ Yoongi manages to get out, feeling oddly accomplished.

He brings Yoongi’s hand under his cheek, nuzzling a little as he smiles at him. It makes Yoongi’s chest strain with the outburst of emotions filling him up.

‘You’re…you’re really pretty,’ Yoongi gets out.

Jemin laughs again, twisting his face into Yoongi’s palm.

‘I’m being honest!’ Yoongi feels a sense of mortification but also he really doesn’t have much of a filter on him. ‘You’re very pretty- beautiful. Radiant.’

Jemin looks at him like he’s silly, but Yoongi can feel the heat of the colour that blossoms across his face again.

And Yoongi is feeling too much.

Everything is perfect around them.

The sun is shining into the room, the windows open and there’s a gentle breeze. The wood of the furniture gleam warmly, the potted plants and cactus are vibrant- cared for and tended. The books in the shelves are worn from frequent reading, the frames capture precious memories- important memories. The long shawl flung over the couch to the side has covered snuggling bodies, with the lamps on the nightstands illuminating quiet and peaceful nights. The carpet by the edges of the bed are frayed a little from frequent trodding, and the wooden floors under the chair of the desk are scratched.

Everything is perfect.

‘This is…this is everything,’ Yoongi tells Jimin quietly.

‘What do you mean?’

‘This,’ Yoongi replies, ‘This is everything I could ever want.’

Jimin smiles at him- but it’s not the same beaming one. Rather it’s tinged with sadness.

‘I don’t want to go,’ Yoongi confesses.

The curtains sway slowly, a morning breeze stirring outside. Yoongi feels it on his skin seconds later, feels Jimin shiver a little. Yoongi pulls him closer, cocooning him in his arms before turning him completely over to his back.

‘I want to stay here,’ Yoongi says into his kiss, ‘Don’t leave, let’s just stay here.’

Jimin laughs, eyes crinkling as he says, ‘Yoongi we will have to wake up soon-.’

‘I could convince you to stay,’ Yoongi whispers against his mouth. Jimin’s hands which where bracing himself against Yoongi’s chest slowly track downwards, tracing invisible lines down his chest to his hips.

‘I think- I think you could very easily convince me,’ Jimin replies breathlessly as Yoongi mirrors Jimin’s hands, trailing his fingertips down Jimin’s chest, abdomen, and to his thighs.

‘Then stay here with me,’ Yoongi whispers, leaving a kiss on lips before lowering his head down to his throat.

Jimin lets out a soft gasp

‘Stay with me.’ Yoongi whispers against his sternum, littering kisses down his chest to the soft expanse of his abdomen and lower down.

‘Just stay.’

And Jimin- well, Jimin can’t say no.

Because he doesn’t want to leave either.

He wants to stay here- in this perfect little space- made just for them, built by them, made by them. He wants to live each moment of his life in this beautiful space where everything reminds him of Yoongi.

He wants this so much.

Also Yoongi is very convincing.
‘What’s that?’ Jimin asks much later, when the sun is no longer shining through their bedroom window but rather out in the hallway. The windows were now framing a tranquil blue sky, just darkening a little over the horizon, large tall clouds veined with liquid gold breaking up the blue.

Jimin can hear trees moving alongside a gentle breeze.

Yoongi’s hair is still damp from their bath, even though Jimin’s is thoroughly dried and combed through. Something Yoongi seemed to have a lot of fun doing, using a rather clunky looking device to direct hot air at Jimin’s hair. Jimin had sat at the edge of their bed, bare feet occasionally pressing over Yoongi’s as he stepped here and there, drying his hair.

Yoongi had taken to showing him some of Earth’s old technology. Jimin had been amused by the hair drying machine, and wanted to see others.

They’re at the kitchen, and Yoongi is showing something called a rice cooker.

‘It uses electricity to heat the water, that then boils the rice to cook?’ Jimin recites, looking into the unimpressive device.

Yoongi nods, grinning at him as though amused by his nonplussed expression. Jimin pokes his bare unmarked and unscarred ribs in retaliation, making Yoongi squeak. Yoongi hadn’t bothered wearing a shirt, and when Jimin had asked why, wondering if it was to tease him, he had instead said ‘everything in perfect in here, I want you to see me being somewhat close to that- in at least this way.’

Yoongi takes him back to the bedroom and sits him at the desk, pulling out little drawers and small boxes stored up in the many cabinets of the desk.

‘We actually didn’t use these anymore,’ Yoongi tells him, lining up some thin and slender tubes before him. They looked like some form of writing apparatus- not too different from what Jimin used as a child. ‘For a very long time- but they came back as novelty items I guess- a throw back?’

Yoongi finds a bottle of ink and some lose paper before unscrewing one of the writing apparatus and dipping in the shiny tip.

‘This is how you would write your name in one of the languages on Earth,’ Yoongi tells him, sitting down to share the seat with him.

‘What does yours look like?’

Yoongi indulges him and write out his own name.

‘This is my name in my tongue,’ Jimin takes the device- oddly lighter than he expected, and carefully pulls the characters of his name. ‘And this is yours.’

‘I like it,’ Yoongi smiles at the still shining letters, wet from the ink. ‘That’s pretty.’

‘That pronounces the Yoo in your name,’ Jimin explains. ‘What is this called?’

‘It’s a fountain pen,’ Yoongi replies.

‘Seems like an odd thing to recreate as a novelty item,’ Jimin ruminates.

‘There’s actually a lot of funny stories behind fountain pens,’ Yoongi grins at him, twirling the device around his unscarred fingers. ‘For a while, Humans were obsessed with hiding “weapons” inside fountain pens. Like, I dunno, laser-pens, strong enough to cut through metal.’

Jimin laughs, looking down at the device.

‘Humans used to once use feathers as pens- this is a massive upgrade, a piece of history and culture,’ Yoongi holds the pen loftily. Jimin just laughs at Yoongi’s pedantic tone. He used this tone when he made up stories either to trick and confuse Sk’jin, or to tease Taeh’yung and Jungkook. He removes the pen from Yoongi’s hand and laces their fingers together instead, kissing Yoongi’s hand softly in the process.

They sit on that chair quietly after that; it’s not the most comfortable, but they’re both soaking in the normalcy- or at least, their attempt at normalcy. For a life they wish they could be living.

‘The sun’s going down,’ Jimin notes, the room dimming slightly and the skies outside the windows turning an inky blue. ‘You wanna go up and watch the stars?’

‘Yeah,’ Yoongi turns his head around to press his lips to Jimin’s temple. ‘Let’s go.’

Jimin stands up, stretching a little because that was a slightly awkward angle to sit in. But Yoongi doesn’t follow him just yet, tugging a little at their hands and making Jimin turn around.

Jimin just watches Yoongi as he switches on the small desk-lamp, wondering what the Human was up to.

‘Here,’ Yoongi takes his hand again, smiling to himself as though a little amused. He picks up the fountain pen again and angling Jimin’s hand, taps on his second last finger. Jimin holds it up a little higher than the others and watches with some confusion as he runs the tip of the pen around the circumference of his finger.

‘Are you giving me a…’ Jimin racks his mind for the correct word, ‘A tattoo?’

Yoongi finishes the slightly wobbly line and shakes his head, ‘It’ll wash off.’

‘What is it for?’ Jimin holds up his hand, wriggling his fingers to look at the black line, making an odd ring around his finger. He used to enjoy drawing markings across his skin when he was younger- something he did with his guards. A lot of cultures permanently stained their skin in this manner, but Jimin’s not sure what Yoongi’s purpose was in doing this.

‘Just a Human thing,’ Yoongi explains, looking far too pleased.

‘Should I do it too?’ Jimin smiles at him. Yoongi looked so pleased with himself; if this was a funny joke, he wanted to be part of it too. But somehow it makes Yoongi flush, scratching the back of his neck as he says, ‘Yeah, I guess if you want?’

Jimin dips the fountain pen back in the ink bottle and holds his hand out for Yoongi’s.

‘The same one?’

Yoongi nods, eyes twinkling.

Then, with a much steadier hand, Jimin draws the circle around Yoongi’s second finger as well. Yoongi takes his hand, with the marking, and kisses it lightly.

The smile on Yoongi’s face warms Jimin from the depths of his soul.

‘Is this some secret you want to tease me with?’ Jimin asks, nudging his shoulder against Yoongi’s as they walk out of the bedroom.

‘Maybe,’ Yoongi grins, quickly ducking into one of the smaller rooms for that soft yellow blanket.

‘I should tease you with one too,’ Jimin makes a mock face of concentration. ‘I’ll do it once I think of it.’

Yoongi takes his hand again and they trek up the stairs.

The front door remains firmly shut, much to Jimin’s quiet and hidden relief.

They sit on the wooden floors, the missing wall opening up to a vast and starry night. And unlike in the bath, Yoongi pulls Jimin down to sit in front of him, reversing their roles. Jimin leans back, reassured by the strength that supported him. Yoongi wraps the blanket over them, enveloping them in this moment.

‘I love this,’ Yoongi whispers.

‘Yeah?’

‘Hm,’ Yoongi pulls Jimin closer, resting his chin onto his shoulder. ‘This really is everything.’

Jimin turns his head a little to kiss Yoongi’s cheek, wrapping his arms over the Humans.

They sit their in silence, watching the stars overtake the sky, the last of the sunlight ebbing away completely. If Jimin listens closely, he can hear the stars singing, the dark expanses between their light hollow and echoing voices of a past that memory clung to.

Jimin also picks up another sound- a hum; of a ship, movement of Beings in their vicinity.

‘Yoongi-’ Jimin says quietly, breaking the soothing tranquility around them and Jimin hates it.

‘I know,’ Yoongi says quietly, his arms tightening a little around him, ‘Can we stay until the moon comes up?’

Jimin smiles, watching the distant horizon past the gentle vast sea lightening up a little, the edges of the water turning silver.

‘Of course.’

They watch the slow climb of the moon, silver light glowing faintly.

‘It’s waning,’ Yoongi remarks as the moon is up in the sky, a reflection rippling the surface of the sea.

A sudden chill erupts down Jimin’s back.

‘It’s-…’ Jimin’s voice is stuck in his throat.

‘I like the shape of crescents the most,’ Yoongi continues, as though unaware of the weight of his words.

‘I wish it would always be just like this,’ Jimin whispers.

Jimin wakes up slowly. It’s much darker, the air more still and contained though just as cool. The distinct faint hum of the ship fills the air as well, instead of plants rustling in the early morning.
breeze. The space around him isn’t as dark as a starlit sky- no waning moon shining around him. There’s a weight on him- comforting; a weight Jimin now knows intimately, thoroughly.

Yoongi’s arms are wrapped just a little above his hips, his face pressed against the softest pudge of his abdomen. Jimin smiles down at the Human, moving his arms to properly cradle his head gently, fingers combing through his soft hair.

The scars were back. And Jimin wants to press his lips to them again to tell Yoongi he didn’t care- that he didn’t mind; that Yoongi was already so so perfect. The scars were back, and so was the tiredness, the strange stretch in the force that held Yoongi together-

Jemin pauses. Jimin pushes himself up higher, smile slipping from his face as Yoongi doesn’t stir. He couldn’t sense anything.

No strain- no echo trapped, there was nothing.

‘Yoongi?’

Yoongi shifts but it’s with a strange stiffness that Jimin recognizes, one that he has seen so many time-

‘Yoongi!?’

His hands are trembling as he shakes the supposedly slumbering Human- and that’s when Jimin realizes Yoongi’s skin isn’t warm. It’s warm where he’s sharing contact with him, but his back, his arms, his curled legs – they’re all cold.

‘Yoongi!’

Then, as though this was all quite normal, Yoongi stirs. The strange stiffness over his body melting away like vapor, he exhales normally, eyelids fluttering just a little before they open.

It only takes a long second for Yoongi to spring into action.

‘What’s wrong?’ Yoongi demands, crawling up towards Jimin as though to shield him with his body.

But Jimin can’t answer- his hands won’t stop trembling and his voice is stuck in his throat.

Yoongi seems to realize nothing is immediately wrong as he relaxes just a little bit, letting up his protective stance over Jimin just a bit.

‘Sunshine?’

‘It’s waning.’

‘You-‘ Jimin manages to get out, allowing Yoongi to pull away just a little, studying him with concern, touching his side where his bruises were still dark, as though wondering if he were in pain.

‘You didn’t wake up.’

Yoongi stops his quiet and quick check up of Jimin, hands pausing over hips. Yoongi doesn’t seem to know what to say.
‘Is it-…’ Jimin doesn’t move, doesn’t look away. ‘Is it difficult…to wake up?’

Yoongi looks away, hands slowly drawing away before he settles himself down next to Jimin again.

Then slowly, he nods.

‘Oh,’ Jimin exhales out shakily.

‘I won’t leave you,’ Yoongi says almost inaudibly. ‘I will follow, I will always follow.’

Yoongi finally looks at him.

‘Sunshine,’ Yoongi raises his hand and places it gently over Jimin’s chest, right above where his heart pulsed painfully. ‘I will always find you.’

Jimin knows what was beating in his chest.

Borrowed.

Given.

Jimin was going to be very careful- tender, and gentle.

* *

Jungkook wakes up with Taeh’yung draped over him.

‘Hm?’

He’s a little confused as to how Taeh’yung was here with him. But from the looks of it, and with some sniffing, Taeh’yung’s been in here with him for a while.

Jungkook feels better. He’s still tired, his body feels weak; but the fogginess of his mind is gone, and his stomach is growling. So that was why he woke up.

He flinches a little at the thought of food. But he remembers that he’s able to get his food anytime he wanted.

Carefully, not wanting to wake Taeh’yung or the restless shadows around them, Jungkook sits up. Taeh’yung lets out a small whimper, as though pained, before curling in on himself on the bed. Jungkook is gripped with worry. Taeh’yung didn’t smell sick- just…just weakened. Like putting too much water into his favourite bone broth. Jungkook pulls the blanket over Taeh’yung carefully, tucking it under his feet the way Sk’jin liked to when he tuckkook in. After a second, he decides to flip the pillow Taeh’yung was using, allowing the cooler side to cushion the Zhak’gri’s head. Jungkook loves pillows, and he’s sure Taeh’yung would appreciate them as well. So he gathers some of the extra ones from around the bed, and puts it around Taeh’yung’s unconscious form.

‘Jungkook?’

Or at least Jungkook thought he was unconscious.

But Taeh’yung’s voice isn’t exactly coming from the Zhak’gri. And on second thought, it didn’t sound exactly like Taeh’yung either.

Jungkook had been too occupied in making Taeh’yung as comfortable as he could to notice immediately. The shadows have moved from their restless spots, gathering around him like solid statues of strangely ominous shadows just a little past his peripheral vision.

Jungkook is not spooked by moving shadows and shapes- he’s seen and felt worse than the possibility of blurred shadows and movements. But he knows these shadows aren’t just ordinary shadows- that there’s more to them. So he just ignores them for now, instead busying himself with adjusting the sleeves of Taeh’yung’s borrowed shirt that had rolled up uncomfortably high. Taeh’yung didn’t have any bandages or medicine on him, so Jungkook’s not sure where his injuries are.

‘Kookie?’

The shadows snap away, the air lighter, and this time it really is Taeh’yung.

Jungkook doesn’t realize he was so strained where he was kneeling. He exhales slowly, looking over at Taeh’yung. He’s just barely awake, eyes glinting in the low light.

‘Are you sick?’ Jungkook asks.

Taeh’yung nods, looking upset.

‘Can I help? Are you hungry?’ Jungkook asks, crouching low on the bed.

Taeh’yung just smiles at him, ‘No Kookie, it’s okay. I’ll be better soon.’

‘Are you sure?’ Jungkook asks as Taeh’yung unearths one hand and reaches for Jungkook’s hand. He takes it in his immediately, ‘Should I call Hobi? Are you sure you don’t want food?’

Taeh’yung smiles again with a small nod, ‘I’ll be okay Kookie. Thank you for taking care of me.’

Jungkook’s not sure if he’s done anything to really help Taeh’yung but he nods, albeit hesitantly.

‘I can hear your stomach,’ Taeh’yung grins, ‘Go eat. I’ll come join you later, okay?’

Jungkook nods before asking, ‘Are you uh, comfortable? Do you need anything else?’

‘No Kookie, thank you,’ Taeh’yung mumbles, eyes sparkling with tears, immediately making Jungkook panic.

‘Are you hurting?’ Jungkook asks at once, ready to yell for help.

‘No,’ Taeh’yung says thickly, squirming a little, ‘I’m so happy that you finally do love me now.’
Jungkook narrows his eyes at Taeh’yung before he laughs.

‘I told you you would love me,’ Taeh’yung pouts, ‘You were so afraid of me.’

‘I was afraid of everyone,’ Jungkook confesses.

‘Except Jiminie,’ Taeh’yung says, sounding very much like a child. ‘But now you love me too, so it’s okay.’

Jungkook grins down at the Zhak’gri, slowly getting off the bed so as to not jostle him too much. Taeh’yung was fine.

‘I think I love Sk’jin, Jimin, Hobi, and Namjoon a bit more.’

Taeh’yung gasps in mock horror.

‘Wait- but more than Yoongi?’ Taeh’yung’s eyes gleam, teasing him.

Jungkook pretends to think before he nods, his face flushing with heat at being so obvious.

Taeh’yung cheers.

‘But-‘ Jungkook hastens to say, fiddling his his fingers, ‘I uh, love all of you. Equally. Want to protect, all of you. Like family.’

He has no idea when it happened, but Taeh’yung is sitting up, kneeling on the mattress before him. He nuzzles into the side of his face, smile wide and fond.

‘Precious Kookie,’ Taeh’yung beams at him, ‘I would destroy the universe for you.’

Jungkook doesn’t know if Taeh’yung is joking or not but he manages to put him back to bed, tucking him in again. Taeh’yung is knocked out again by the time Jungkook steps out of the room.

He vaguely remembers the hallway, remembers walking about in a medically induced stupor of sorts. It was similar to how it was when his hunger used to get the better of him, back in the caves in Ynqaba. But here, he felt safe- knew that he was protected and watched over.

Shuffling on the spot a little, Jungkook sniffs the air a little before deciding to go down left in the hallway. He doesn’t hear anything.

Hesitantly, Jungkook makes his way across the hallway. He pauses a few times, fiddling with one ear where he normally had a Comm Device. He quells the urge to call out for anyone- not quite trusting his voice to be steady. There’s a stillness in the air that makes him a little uncomfortable despite knowing he’s safe. He picks up on faint hints of Sk’jin, Hoseok, Namjoon, Yoongi, and Jimin from different doors. But he can tell that no one is inside any of the doorways. He stops at the platform between stairs that either go up or down, a lift before him. He hears faint movement coming from downstairs and so he follows it.

He recognizes this Lobby. He had been inside the Medical Bays opposite where he was standing. One of the couches has recently been vacated, Jungkook notes. The Kitchen area was recently also vacated, plates and other utensils stacked up near the sink. Jungkook’s rumbling stomach redirectes him to towards the Kitchen and he looks around the pantry for something he can snack on for now until he can find the others. He finds a neatly stored tray of something that smells lovely. He’s not sure what meat it is, but Jungkook’s mouth is watering. He steps out of the pantry and comes face to face with an unfamiliar face, but a familiar scent.
This was one of the GI that had snuck into the Užkulisaši back in Grisial.

Jungkook’s vision shifts, everything blurring but the GI standing in stark detail.

He looks completely well, no hostility in his form. But Jungkook hadn’t sensed hostility in the GI when he fought them before. And Jungkook doesn’t know what to think of it- what to think of them. He doesn’t know what to do- he was aware that they would be here, in this ship; it was the GI’s ship after all. But Jungkook’s skin prickles, his pulse rocketing.

He has half the mind to attack, to take down this strange and unknown threat before him. But at the same time-

‘Kookie?’

Jungkook starts- his vision clearing. He stops growling from his throat- he hadn’t even realized he was doing it.

A wonderfully familiar form appears from behind the GI, wearing soft purple clothes, pink hair sticking up on one side, skin dewy as though just washed. Sk’jin looks a little concerned but he’s smiling fondly.

‘Sk’jin?’

‘Hey,’ the Khol’isa smiles at him, stepping around the GI. ‘Were you trying to eat the flank I was marinating?’

Jungkook looks at the tray in his hands, the handles bent under his fingers.

Sk’jin just laughs, taking the tray from him and pulling him to his side. Jungkook relaxes, only just noticing the GI’s retreating figure. He quickly pulls the Khol’isa into a tight embrace.

‘Come on Kook, I’ll make us something to eat okay?’

Jungkook sits obediently to the side as Sk’jin goes about grabbing a few large trays and pans.

‘Do you need to change your bandages?’ Sk’jin asks looking at him, ‘Any discomfort?’

Jungkook shakes his head. He had peeked into his bandages and patches of tissue-plast on his sides and legs. They were healing nicely, scabbing over in a healthy way.

‘Let me look,’ Sk’jin puts down the trays and walks over to Jungkook. He gently pries the bandages, prods along the sensitive slightly inflamed skin gently.

‘You’re healing up,’ Sk’jin smiles at him, patting his knee to tell him he could lower it now.

‘You smell like you were in the sun,’ Jungkook remarks, sniffing a little.

‘I was taking up some UV,’ Sk’jin explains, now hefting a massive leg of meat from the storage cells in the pantry. He retrieves a massive saw-like knife before neatly hacking through the thick meat and bone. ‘I’ll have this thawed and slightly seared, let’s render the fat a little.’

Jungkook nods enthusiastically, mouth watering even more.

‘Kookie?’

Jungkook jumps a little when Jimin appears, followed shortly by Yoongi. Jimin runs towards him, bright smile on his face. Jungkook hops off his stool and quickly scuttles over to accept Jimin’s extending arms.

‘Feeling better?’ Jimin asks him, holding his face as though to check him for injury. Jungkook does the same.

Yoongi is smiling at him, reaching over to gently pat his shoulder before walking over to where Sk’jin was struggling with the massive leg of meat.

Jungkook vaguely remembers Yoongi’s worried face through a feverish haze. Remembers frantic and helpless eyes.

‘Is Taeh’yung with you?’

‘He was sleeping,’ Jungkook explains, ‘I think he’s okay?’

Jimin nods to that, ruffling his hair and saying, ‘I’ll go check on him then.’

Jungkook realizes that he has to bend a little at his back to allow Jimin to touch the top of his head now. When he shuffles back to his stool, Sk’jin has roped the Human into helping him.

‘We have more mouths to feed and I still only have 2 hands,’ Sk’jin is telling Yoongi who is grumbling under his breath. ‘Do you have something to say about this?’

‘Not at all,’ Yoongi mumbles, giving Jungkook a brief look of exasperation.

‘Here Kookie, you can snack on this for the meanwhile,’ Sk’jin hefts a similar tray from earlier to the table and Jungkook moves closer. ‘You haven’t eaten in a while, so go slowly, there’s still more okay?’

Jungkook nods, sitting down the same time 2 other GI sit down as well, making him flinch. Sk’jin jumps a foot in the air, cursing under his breath while Yoongi guffaws.

‘Is anyone allergic to anything?’ Sk’jin calls out, ‘Once I made my most amazing spectacular stew, and it had several leaves of zawntra in it, and a few of my friends caught the most terrible stomach flu.’

‘Your friends were most unfortunate,’ Yoongi quips.

‘You have no say in the matter Mr. Poisons-Everything-In-Front-Of-Him-Yoongi.’ Sk’jin singsongs.

‘Which has saved us many times,’ Yoongi retorts without pause.

Sk’jin looks like he’s about to throw his ladle at Yoongi.

‘No helmets at the table!’ Sk’jin points his ladle at the GI instead.

The GI remove their helmets after a delayed 3 seconds. Jungkook catches Yoongi glancing over at the GI, his expression saddening. Did Yoongi recognize them? Or was he just sad because there were other GI here, similar to himself, similar to Jungkook.

Sk’jin and Yoongi argue the entire time they’re cooking, throwing half-formed insults and snide remarks here and there. But neither of them seem to mind, looking amused and smiling when the other isn’t looking. It’s kinda funny, Jungkook notes.
Jimin and Taeh’yung return—Taeh’yung looking refreshed but still weakened, and Jimin with half of his clothes wet.

‘Taeh’yung slipped in the shower, so I had to help him,’ Jimin answers both of Yoongi’s and Sk’jin’s questioning looks.

‘Oh! Babies!’ Taeh’yung gasps, looking at the GI, wincing as he hurries to them and hugs them. ‘Precious babies!’

Sk’jin looks a little scandalized but doesn’t question it, instead heaving over a massive pot towards the table with Yoongi’s help. The GI are…well, unaffected, by this display of affection being heaved upon them by Taeh’yung.

‘Hey! Y’all at the Bridge who didn’t lift a finger to help! Come eat!’ Sk’jin yells, causing Yoongi to flinch, screwing up his face at the Khol’isa.

Jungkook watches with wide eyes as the GI pile in, without Sk’jin noticing. He’s not sure if he should warn him, but before he can, Yoongi throws him a small wink, handing Sk’jin a few bowls. On instinct, or at least with the flow of the whole thing, Sk’jin takes the bowls and starts ladling in the stew. It’s only when he takes the 9th bowl from Yoongi that he looks up in confusion.

Yoongi saves his the bowl of stew in Sk’jin’s hand as the Khol’isa jumps so much he splashes Jungkook, Jimin and Taeh’yung with some stew.

‘You did call of them,’ Yoongi points out.

Sk’jin actually does smack Yoongi with the ladle as Taeh’yung and Jimin laugh, wiping stew off of their clothes. This is when Hoseok chooses to drop in.

‘Do…I want to know what happened…’

Sk’jin levels him a look and says with a smile that doesn’t reach his eyes, ‘Everything is perfectly fine.’

‘Hobi!’ Taeh’yung makes himself small, arms held out to the Ngfy’widan. Hoseok grins down at him, walking over to cuddle him where he sat.

‘Feeling better buggy?’ Taeh’yung makes his eyes somehow larger, sparkling brightly, nodding in reply.

Hoseok reaches over to ruffle Jungkook’s hair, sitting down as well.

‘Namjoon?’ Yoongi inquires, handing out a bowl towards Hoseok and taking Jungkook’s in turn.

‘He’s coming down in a moment- I think as we’re all awake and I think, ready for a meeting, we can get some stuff sorted out; make sure we’re all on the same page.’ Hoseok replies.

‘Here Kook,’ Yoongi hands him back his much bigger bowl and Jungkook digs in enthusiastically. He didn’t necessarily like food that was too cooked, but Sk’jin had added some of the meat from before into the stew just for him, so Jungkook is very satisfied.

‘Ah, Kookie,’ Hoseok grins, ‘Makes me happy to see you eat so well.’

Jungkook looks down at his massive bowl, feeling a little flustered.
'Here,' Hoseok adds, holds out a Comm Device towards him, ‘Buggy, where’s yours? I gave you one earlier.’

Taeh’yung looks over his own bowl, smaller and with only the liquid of the stew in it, smiling apologetically at Hoseok.

‘We can track it later,’ Hoseok rolls his eyes.

‘It’s here,’ Namjoon calls as he steps out of the lift, 4 of the GI behind him. ‘Nineti found it upstairs.’

The GI in question walks over to Taeh’yung and hands him the Comm Device and accepts the bowl from Yoongi with only a 2 second delay.

Jungkook notices how Jimin watches after the GI, an openly melancholic expression on his face. He must have known the GI- at least, some version of him from the past. But as Namjoon sits down next to Jimin he gives him a small one-armed hug, making Jimin smile at him, his expression settling.

Namjoon sips on some blue-green drink that Sk’jin immediately denies making though no one asked as they eat their meal.

Hoseok is praising Sk’jin and Yoongi on the stew, while Namjoon is explaining something to both Jimin and Taeh’yung about an ingredient in the stew to their genuine interest. Yoongi keeps piling food into everyone’s plates, moving silently and quickly to the point where Hoseok stares at his bowl in confusion, unsure where the added food came in from.

Jungkook allows himself to fully encompass this moment- allows himself to breathe in everything, everyone. They were all together again- complete and whole.

Everyone seemed so much sure- either of themselves, or of something. Like they came to accept things- learned more, understood more- and with them, Jungkook feels stronger despite all of the bruises and wounds.

‘Kookie, you want some more?’ Sk’jin is already holding his hand out for Jungkook’s bowl.

‘Yes!’

Sk’jin is very much slipping into a food comma but well, meetings.

Jungkook is also not faring too well, slumping against Hoseok looking sleepily satisfied. Hoseok was right. Watching Jungkook eat so happily really was nice to see. Though the GI really did a number on the cooked food. But they were at least, unlike the other 6, willing to do the dishes.

‘This is most delicious,’ one of them had said to Sk’jin after he nearly screamed at her sudden appearance. ‘You are my favourite.’
Favourite what Sk’jin isn’t sure. But he’ll take it. Maybe he could use it to his advantage. Didn’t someone once say the way to a Being’s heart is through their stomach?

‘Sk’jin!’

Sk’jin blinks away his food-induced stupor, looking around to find that Namjoon is watching him with badly veiled impatience.

Clearing his throat and adjusting the waist of his trousers discreetly, Sk’jin asks, ‘Yes, sorry, what was that?’

‘We were discussing the anticore,’ Namjoon gestures to Hoseok. ‘Which I think, you’ll find very interesting.’

If he had any more energy, Sk’jin would have maybe rolled his eyes and maybe said something but he simply suppresses a burp, shifting his gaze towards Hoseok instead.

‘Our suspicions were confirmed,’ Hoseok states, ‘I was studying the anticore with the GI, and the one they used on Taeh’yung is most likely a Khol’isa anticore.’

This makes Sk’jin shiver where he sits.

‘Why is it effecting him so badly?’ Jimin asks worriedly, clearly holding Taeh’yung’s hand under the table.

‘The Khol’isa are old,’ Sk’jin states bluntly, ‘We’re one of the first species really- not as old as the Zhak’gri but-…but it makes sense that what would really destroy us, would wound Taeh’yung.’

‘Most anticore could take out a Human,’ Yoongi provides unhelpfully.

Everyone glares at him.

‘I-‘ Yoongi gulps nervously, ‘I meant- Humans are a young species, relatively speaking in terms of Standard and uh, well-‘

‘Yes, we get that,’ Namjoon grimaces at him, ‘Moving on- there is no Khol’isa anti-…anti-anticore here. And I don’t want anyone to experiment a dosage on Taeh’yung.’

‘Why are you looking at me?!’ Yoongi demands, looking affronted.

‘Listen, not all of us have a penchant for poisoning our team members,’ Sk’jin drawls out.

‘Hey-‘ Yoongi frowns but Hoseok cuts across saying, ‘No one is going to run hypothetical experiments – not even Taeh’yung himself.’

Taeh’yung looks sheepish.

‘See? Tell him!’ Yoongi jerks his thumb towards the Zhak’gri who doesn’t even pretend to look sheepish at this point.

‘We’re going off topic,’ Namjoon frowns, ‘Since Taeh’yung is now, unwell, so to speak, we need to make sure he recovers. And this has to be before we even think of going to Axudar.’

‘So, ultimately we are going then?’ Sk’jin asks.

‘We will eventually need to go to Axudar,’ Hoseok sighs out, ‘It’s only a matter of time- even after meeting with Jn’young, and hearing everything.’

‘I think that was what the Special Jury ultimately wanted also,’ Namjoon frowns, ‘It might be the reason why the Court even agreed to it.’

Yoongi grimaces at that. He most likely doesn’t want them going to Axudar.’

‘But I think we should go to Megibīya first,’ Hoseok begins, ‘Here, we can test to see if Jimin can get us through- maybe Prat’tna wasn’t able to because well- he’s from Megibīya isn’t he? He’s not some…uh, royalty.’

Jimin looks comically unimpressed. ‘If Prat’tna has said that the entry points into Menigišiti are closed or at least, completely damaged, then there is no way for us to enter at random. We were protected by a naturally occurring energy radiated by our sun Yino, and the natural resonance that guided our planets in orbit. We developed technology that allowed us to have several entry points. Megibīya was a natural entry-point, as well as Akramana, but Megibīya was further away. The only reason why it was a natural entry-point is because it was too far from the strength of our orbital resonance to fully conceal. Akramana was fully protected, but Megibīya was constantly exposed,’ Jimin explains, ‘There’s no way of entering Menigišiti through Megibīya.’

‘I think we stand to gain a lot by going to Megibīya,’ Hoseok says gently, ‘I know it will be difficult- for the two of your especially, but a lot happened there, that we could discover and understand with our new found understanding.’

‘I’m not saying we shouldn’t consider going to Megibīya,’ Jimin says earnestly, ‘I’m just saying that if the entry-points are closed, and the only way to access it is using the ships from Axudar, because someone clearly had the Akaraman engineers rewire and change the cells we used to stabilize the entry-points.’

‘But what about Megibīya itself?’ Yoongi asks, ‘Would it be safe to go? Won’t they expect us? Camil had said they reported Jimin’s presence. They said they would be ready to welcome him home. What if going to Megibīya is a trap. And they’re waiting for us there.’

‘So uh- I have an idea actually,’ Hoseok begins, looking a little shifty as he says so. Both Yoongi and Namjoon squint at him suspiciously. ‘I am not saying we should do this. There are a lot of variables in this that are unaccounted for, that cannot be accounted for, and all of that. What if we-‘ ‘-allow ourselves to be captured?’ Sk’jin supplies.

‘What?’ Namjoon looks at both of them like they’ve gone mad.

‘Listen- I’m not saying this is the plan,’ Hoseok grimaces, waving his hand in a placating manner that doesn’t help.

‘The Beings of Menigišiti revolted against Jimin and his sister,’ Yoongi states crisply, ‘They surgically altered themselves so that they could “take control of their own fates” – and now they are doing precisely that, knowing full well it was a result of cruelly sacrificing them to an unknown power in order to fulfill their desires!’

‘I understand what you’re saying,’ Hoseok says as levelly as he can, not even batting an eyelash at Yoongi’s stone-cold glare. ‘But I hope you understand that we have advantages that they don’t have. Advantages that Axudar does not have.’

‘What do you mean?’ Namjoon demands though he looks like he’s interested.
‘Like you said Yoongi, the citizens of Menigišiti certainly revolted against Jimin and his sister,’ Hoseok nods at Jimin, ‘They even went out of their way to alter their appearances- but they are not like Jimin or his sister.’

‘Hoseok-‘ Yoongi begins brusquely but Jimin stops him with a hand over his arm.

‘Jimin was able to completely bring a stadium of Beings- numbered at over 200,000, as well as the surrounding Beings into a dazed stupor.’ Hoseok says quickly, ‘We have Taeh’yung, although unwell, who could very much indeed destroy a moon if he wanted to.’

Taeh’yung brightens up at that, looking pleased with himself.

‘And we have the GI with us. Invisible and powerful- perfect for infiltration-‘

‘-I know what our skills are,’ Yoongi scowls.

‘And we have us- we know so much.’ Hoseok waves a hand around the table. ‘Am I saying this will be easy? No- am I saying we will be able to slide right into Axudar and get down to bottom of all of this just like that? No. What I am saying is that we can increase the chances of our success if we use what we have to our best advantage.’

There’s a long pause of silence.

‘What is your idea?’ Namjoon asks.

‘We move from Megibīya,’ Hoseok starts at once. ‘Like Yoongi said, it’s very likely they will be expecting us in Megibīya. In fact I’m sure that Axudar has some sort of outpost there, keeping watch over the planet. And from what we know, pirates like to occasionally stop here right?’

Namjoon nods.

‘It’s also very likely the point of exchange Camil had talked about during his interrogation,’ Hoseok continues, ‘Places where they would bring more “followers”, arrange meetings, even deliver and bring in more eggs.’

Namjoon nods to that, frowning a little in thought.

‘We run a stake out,’ Hoseok explains, ‘I don’t know how long it will take- but we wait for Axudar to appear. They might already be situated there- but we sneak in-‘

‘-also we do have the invisibility-shield,’ Namjoon ruminates.

‘Exactly,’ Hoseok nods, ‘If all of their systems have been changed, their security; their scanning system would too. And Jimin, you said it was old right?’

Jimin nods.

‘It’s unlikely that we’ll be detected,’ Hoseok explains, ‘We get in, stay low, and after scanning the place, we get Jimin to well, uh, hypnotize them. The same way he did with the escort agents that came for Yoongi. We stay there, kinda like parasites I guess, we run a reconnaissance right in the location while being there. We get into Axudar, right into the location we need to get into and-‘

‘Wait- there’s no guarantee that we will be going directly into Kaitūtei,’ Namjoon holds up his hand, ‘I suggest we use bait- and no,’ he looks at Yoongi, ‘I’m not talking about Jimin, or yourself. Camil clearly reported all of us back to Axudar. And they’ve probably done their extensive research, no doubt through connections they most definitely have in the GLA.’

‘Then who do you suggest?’ Jimin asks.

‘Sk’jin.’

Sk’jin genuinely chokes mid-inhale, nearly hacking out his lung.

‘What?!’ Jungkook speaks out for the first time.

‘There’s something I haven’t told you guys before,’ Namjoon says evenly, ‘Something Prat’tna brought up.’

Jimin looks at him with uncharacteristic sharpness in his eyes.

‘Prat’tna was sure that someone in the team was reporting back to Axudar- or at the least, back to someone who is under the influence of the Yisheng’s doctrine,’ Namjoon explains.

‘You cannot be serious-’ Yoongi frowns, looking indignant.

‘And I believe it is someone from the Special Jury.’

Sk’jin stops coughing though his throat is still burning. Now that was a new take.

‘You’re saying that one of the Special Jury members-’

‘-yeap.’

‘-so any anonymity we could have is-’

‘-yeah.’

Hoseok frowns, pausing before he says, ‘Well, if that’s the case, then yeah, Sk’jin.’

‘I beg your pardon-’ Sk’jin splutters out.

‘Sk’jin was there- in that planet, taken,’ Jimin suddenly says, ‘He’s…he’s encountered so much, broken so many laws-‘

‘-it’s not that many-‘

‘-laws of nature and science,’ Jimin adds, ‘He has been there, and back again, intact-‘

‘-I wouldn’t say that-‘

‘-intact in many ways,’ Jimin corrects, ‘He also has good defense- he’s cunning, intelligent- but he’s also-‘

‘Unique,’ Namjoon finishes. ‘If any of us were to try and put ourselves into this situation, likeliness of being killed instantly is very high.’

‘But with Sk’jin- even if they know it’s bait, they will still want to check him,’ Hoseok finalizes.

‘This is all very flattering,’ Sk’jin frowns, ‘But I protest.’

‘In this idea,’ Namjoon says with emphasis, ‘If we use Sk’jin as bait, and we proceed to make ourselves unknown to the situation and sneak in- we have direct access straight into Kaitütei. I’m sure the new Great Council would be very interested in knowing what he had to say- or well, you know, probing into his mind.’

‘So glad you’re all so considerate of me.’

‘Also let’s consider the fact that Jn’young was able to escape Kaitūtei,’ Hoseok adds, ’He’s a Khol’isa- he was able to overpower so many of them, learn what they knew and look into their minds, so to speak- I think they’d be very interested in having a Khol’isa with them, especially considering they had an anti-core designed specially for them.’

‘In this idea,’ Sk’jin emphasizes lightly, ‘What is the next step of action?’

‘We would infiltrate the area, using Jimin’s abilities,’ Hoseok says at once, ‘However if push does come to shove, Taeh’yung can step in.’

‘What if they try to kill Sk’jin,’ Jungkook asks angrily.

‘They won’t because the Beings who would be in charge of Sk’jin’s arrest would be under Jimin’s influence.’

‘You’re assuming Jimin can indefinitely and infinitely use his abilities,’ Yoongi frowns, ‘He has a limit- and we don’t know how long the journey to Axudar will take. He could be exhausted by the time we’re there.’

‘Like I said,’ Hoseok says loudly, ‘It was just an idea.’

‘I have an idea too,’ Taeh’yung declares, slumped over the table, chin balancing his head in what couldn’t necessarily be a comfortable position.

‘Uh- go ahead buggy,’ Hoseok nods at the Zhak’gri a little hesitantly.

‘Why not bring the fight to us?’

‘What?’

‘Fight?’

‘Yeah,’ Taeh’yung nods, ‘Everyone’s clearly in Axudar- that’s their stronghold. They know this place. But what if we do everything in Hoseok’s idea until the part where Sk’jin gets kidnapped, and we grab a ship, because their ships are the only ones that can enter Menigišiti. We go in, check the damage or what’s happened in here because I think that’s also important. Besides I doubt all of Menigišiti really revolted against Jimin and his sister- I mean look at Axudar, look at Jaen right? Then over there, Jimin will return, like a king-’

‘-not royal!’

‘-like a king returning,’ Taeh’yung beams, ‘Declaring his right to rule. He will then demand the usurpers to reveal themselves to him, to beg for his mercy, and have justice served onto them!’

There’s a deafening silence. And Sk’jin has definitely heard this before.

‘Have you been reading the Six Hands of Our Love Volume IV?’ Sk’jin grins at the Zhak’gri.

‘Yeah! It’s so good! The king did indeed finally return!’ Taeh’yung sits up right, looking excited. ‘I didn’t think they would be able to make it and-’
‘Trash novels aside-‘

‘You take that back right now-‘

‘You’ve never even read it have you! Don’t judge a book by it’s cover!’

‘-that’s actually a good idea too,’ Hoseok admits, ‘But the main issue is that-‘

‘-is that Kaitütei is a major issue,’ Jimin completes, ‘We need to understand what’s happening there- at this point, it’s not just about going back to Menigišiti, it’s become bigger than that. We need to know what’s happening within Axudar.’

‘We don’t have any reinforcements or help,’ Yoongi says at once, ‘Going in to simply hope for a possible chance isn’t a strategic plan it’s a death wish.’

‘Which is why they’re all still ideas,’ Namjoon says clearly. ‘We are just giving out ideas right now- what could be a good approach-‘

Sk’jin feels a hand reaching for his.

‘And no one is going to be bait if we can help it,’ Hoseok adds, looking at Jungkook. ‘These are just ideas we’re throwing around Kook, sometimes we need to-‘ ‘-let the universe absorb our ideas, really manifest it so that it returns to us, fully formed,’ Taeh’yung waves his hands around.

‘We need to make plans and not all of them will be fully-formed at once,’ Namjoon concludes.

‘So…so we still don’t know what we’re going to do?’ Yoongi trails off.

‘Well right now we’re headed for Odgõti-32,’ Namjoon shifts in his seat a little to lean forward and tap on the NaviLet he had brought with him. ‘It’s about a day from here- well, I mean 16 hours I guess as our speed is different now.’

‘What’s here?’ Yoongi asks, squinting a little at the planet.

‘Nothing,’ Namjoon shrugs, ‘It’s harvest-planet, tourist spot though currently it’s out of season.’

Everyone looks at him like he’s crazy.

‘I don’t get it,’ Jimin says slowly.

‘Yeah, why aren’t we uh- I dunno, planning to get closer to Axudar? Or something?’ Hoseok keeps glancing at him as though wondering if what he heard was right and was expecting Sk’jin to confirm with him.

‘We’re all high-strung,’ Namjoon exhales. ‘And we need a break.’

He’s met with dead silence. Even Taeh’yung looks surprised.

‘A break?’ Jimin asks slowly.

‘Yeah,’ Namjoon looks 100% serious.

‘Uh, Namjoonie,’ Sk’jin clears his throat, ‘We appreciate this, uh, holiday, but y’know, we do have the Omhlophe after us.’
Namjoon nods like he knows.

‘Prat’tna told me that the Omhlophe suffered a major loss,’ Namjoon states, ‘It’s possible that this means that they’re unable to follow us much- or at least in large numbers.’

‘Isn’t that still a very high risk to take?’ Yoongi presses.

‘There was something Prat’tna said, but wouldn’t elaborate,’ Namjoon sighs. ‘Something more than what Jimin has explained to us before.’

Jimin looks taken aback.

‘You think Jimin’s keeping something from you? From us?’ Yoongi demands.

‘No it’s-‘ Namjoon sighs with exasperation. ‘I think there’s a lot that Jimin doesn’t know.’ He looks over at him, apologetic but adamant. ‘Things that were kept from him. Prat’tna explained to me how a lot was kept from him- and with the changes in their tech, how Prat’tna could not find any entry-point despite being from Menigišiti and being a member of the Great Council. Jimin’s explanation of water being a conduit for their technology makes sense- Prat’tna hid in Lowet by the water- near the shoreline and said they were not found. Think of that time when we were in Ts’ets’khli we were underwater, so close to the Omhlophe, but we hadn’t noticed, and they most certainly didn’t notice when Jimin was at the market.’

‘So you think coming to rest briefly on a 90% water planet would explain that? Tell me what is your reasoning for using all of us for whatever theory you’re trying to prove.’ Hoseok’s eyes dart up from where he’s studying the NaviLet projection.

Namjoon nods reluctantly.

‘That makes sense,’ Jimin says suddenly. ‘Water is a conduit yes, but one of the reasons why Menigišiti is the way it is, is because-‘ he pauses, thinking hard as though going through words, ‘- our sun, is a quasar- very ancient, very old-‘ ‘Wait how are you even surviving if your sun is a quasar-‘ Hoseok looks bewildered.

‘But we are unique- different,’ Jimin explains, ‘The pressure our quasar sun exudes also generates massive quantities of water-‘

‘-uh.’

Even Yoongi looks surprised. But Taeh’yung suddenly perks up at this.

‘Wait- quasars are- they don’t generate water like that,’ Namjoon frowns, ‘Also, I think regardless of how hidden you are, I think we’d be able to pick up on the existence of a quasar in the area- and we would most definitely be able to see it. Even if it didn’t have the tails or heat rings.’

‘And you can’t, because of our orbital resonance with our quasar,’ Jimin says firmly.

‘Okay I am not doubting you,’ Namjoon says at once, ‘But you have to admit this is very strange- you can’t just live in a System that has a quasar for its sun! All laws of physics, everything we know for millenniums now, is against it.’

‘So are the existence of the GI but here we are,’ Yoongi mumbles.

‘Hey, listen, cloning has been a-‘
‘-let me rephrase, I, Min Yoongi, a Human who very much indeed did die many centuries ago, am here in front of you,’ Yoongi says clearly, ‘I think we are well past the stage of denying what seems to be impossible. Look at all of us gathered here.’

Namjoon sighs, nodding in acknowledgment.

‘That would mean Menigišiti has a very vast and high level of energy,’ Hoseok ruminates.

‘We do,’ Jimin nods, ‘We harvested the energy of our Sun to power our planets; from everything to our engines, machines, networks, medical facilities. We also powered our cells that held up our barrier around Menigišiti. The water it generated helped in acting as a conduit to spread across our System.’

‘So how does that have anything to do with the Omhlophe?’ Sk’jin asks.

‘Prat’tna said that in order for life to flourish, you need water.’

‘Well, I guess thanks for the basic lesson in science but,’ Hoseok frowns, ‘That doesn’t explain anything.’

‘I think it might,’ Yoongi offers unexpectedly. ‘The Omhlophe, if they are some strange version of the GI, well, technically we aren’t what most Beings would consider as living Beings. The Omhlophe could most definitely fall under that category.’

‘So you’re saying, that the Omhlophe are technically a weird living-dead species, unable to process the volume of water,’ Hoseok states slowly.

‘It’s a possibility if that’s what Prat’tna believed in,’ Yoongi shrugs. ‘They were never discovered in Lowet, despite being so close to Ynqaba. Lowet had plenty of eggs, New Borns, but the Omhlophe never did find them.’

‘Tae, you once told me that the Omhlophe were like us- but different,’ Namjoon address the Zhak’gri, ‘What did you mean by that, could you elaborate?’

‘Hm,’ Taeh’yung hum, leaning against Jimin. ‘I think it’s…- a twisted version of the Regurgitated I guess. That would kinda explain it.’

‘How?’

‘Yoongi remembers his past right? As in, well, his life until it ended in the hands of the Red Evil,’ Taeh’yung concentrates comically, his face screwing up, ‘But the Omhlophe in a way, had their lives begin in the hands of the Red Evil.’

‘That sounds like what Amme mentioned,’ Hoseok nods before asking, ‘Buggy, you seemed excited when we mentioned water, and the quasar, why’s that?’

‘Oh!’ Taeh’yung’s mouth opens into a perfect circle, ‘Hobi! That’s because quasars and blackholes and nebulas and supernovas are all the remains of the First Children!’

‘Oh- oh, I guess that’s…I mean if we accept this genesis as being true, it makes sense,’ Namjoon frowns.

‘How?’ Hoseok asks, bewildered.

‘The Known Universe is of course, very very old,’ Namjoon waves his hand dismissively, ‘In this chaos of nuclear reactions and rapid destruction, quasars were frequently formed and peaked, combusting to form more stars, possibly whole galaxies too. Most quasars were able to witness now are in the process of imploding- it’s why the GLA vacates the surrounding areas to secure it.’

‘It’s also where that other Yisheng ship is currently located yes? Watching over an evacuation due to a blackhole?’ Sk’jin points out.

That was definitely something to think about.

‘I guess we should try then,’ Hoseok says slowly.

‘And any sign of danger, anything strange, anyone feels the slightly bit off, we leave at once,’ Namjoon adds hurriedly, ‘We just stay in warp for weeks if needed. We have enough fuel for that.’

‘Well, who am I to deny a good deserved holiday,’ Sk’jin sighs out. ‘Kookie has also never seen a beach?’

Jungkook shakes his head.

‘You’ll love it!’ Taeh’yung coos at the Vicitra.

‘If this proves to be true, and our stay is undetected, this could potentially be very helpful in being able to protect and save countless lives,’ Namjoon tells them earnestly. ‘With what Jimin confirmed, and with what Prat’tna said, and with what we know, Menigišiti could be a safe haven for every single egg, or New Born, or even the Regurgitated, to simply live in peace, without fear of the Omhlophe or the GLA.’

Taeh’yung gives a small cheer, throwing his fists in tiny motions around his head.

‘Great, a nice sunny retreat,’ Sk’jin breaks the silence, ‘Yoongi, we can work on a tan for you.’

Yoongi just barely stops himself from rolling his eyes, grunting instead in response.

‘So,’ Sk’jin stands up, looking around the table. ‘Does anyone want dessert?’

Even Jungkook groans in protest.

*

Sk’jin distributes some thick slices of syrup drenched sponge logs to the GI and pulls up a plate for himself before making his way up.

‘Amad’la! Could you open up Cabin 31?’

‘Of course.’ Amad’la replies, voice sounding muffled, no doubt due to this wonderful sponge log.

‘Bless you,’ Sk’jin smiles up at one of the cameras.

The doors slide open silently and Sk’jin steps right in. He ignores the table, chairs, and even the bed and instead with his foot slides open the door to the bathroom and barges in on Namjoon, uncaring for his very soapy wet naked state.
‘Hey, the new arm is really cool-‘

‘Sk’jin!’ Namjoon screeches- he actually screeches. ‘What the fuck-?’

‘I had some inquiries.’

‘Couldn’t it have waited until after I was done?!’ Namjoon demands, hiding further into his shower as though hoping to hide himself. ‘How the fuck did you get in?!’

‘You’re not hiding anything I haven’t seen- or well, imagined-‘

‘Excuse me?!’

‘-I mean I did take your lip virginity-‘

‘-what?! Get out!’

‘Fine,’ Sk’jin snickers.

After 5 minutes, during which Sk’jin is scraping the syrupy juices of his sponge log with his fork, Namjoon steps out, fully clothed, irritated expression on his face.

‘How can I help you,’ Namjoon grits out.

‘Wanna talk about the Special Jury,’ Sk’jin leans back to lounge on Namjoon’s bed. ‘Please, let us discuss theories with your sexy mind.’

‘Can you not,’ Namjoon wipes at his face, suppressing a groan.

‘Are you saying I can’t compliment you on your sexy mind?’ Sk’jin puts on an affronted look. ‘It’s the only time I’ve complimented you!’

Namjoon collapses on his chair, swiveling to face Sk’jin with a tired look in his eyes. There is a random twinkle to his eyes though, and what looked like a smile trying to pull on his lips. But not one of embarrassment or even amusement.

Sk’jin looks away and says, ‘So, care to share?’

‘It’s just speculations.’

‘I would like to speculate as well.’

Namjoon heaves a sigh and surprisingly comes to sit next to Sk’jin. Well, it was after all Namjoon’s bed, but Sk’jin is nonetheless still taken aback.

‘There’s a high possibility, considering our bad luck, the way this supposed plan set up by some of the most powerful, strategically cunning Beings, has been the shittiest thing thrown together; and it was obviously meant to be like that because they were already trying to comb each other out.’ Namjoon grumbles, ‘Not to mention their own desire to prove themselves to the Court- after all, this is a power-struggle. Beings like Haenoon who desperately want more power and trust from the Court, or even Amme who needs to now rewrite the entire Yisheng history- she knows this mission will be one way of doing that. To prove herself different and trustworthy from Ndica and Tlun’hla.’

‘Are you suspicious of K’mara?’ Sk’jin asks bluntly.

‘I won’t say I’m not,’ Namjoon replies honestly, ‘She was, after all, there for those meetings with Ndica and the Great Council in Akramana. I won’t be surprised—considering she knew so much, was immediately ready for the Red Evil, so to speak, and invested in obtaining the GI under the guise of protecting them under the GIU.’

‘What about the others? S’ava, Lmiura, Xmi, Sh’nour – considering some of their connections with the Alliance— I’m pretty sure they also have a lot to gain from fulfilling this mission but also seeing it fail.’

‘I know it’s not any of us,’ Namjoon’s tone is frank, ‘We’ve been through this before and it’s obviously not any of us.’

‘Well, glad it took you being kidnapped to come to that conclusion.’ Sk’jin raises his fork in a toast, bits of syrup threading out.

‘I already did a long time ago,’ Namjoon scowls, reaching over to wrestle the fork and plate from Sk’jin and placing it on the floor. ‘But there is validity in what Prat’tna said. And after witnessing what happened with Ilya and his network. I think the problem here is that nothing ended with Ndica’s and Tlun’hla’s exposure. Sure, the Red Evil was destroyed— but they too were in the end, a product of something worse. Something that we now have the misfortune of having to somehow fix while being forced to cater to the whims of Beings all vying for a position of power they will most likely abuse in the future.’

Sk’jin can’t help but laugh, throwing his head back.

‘What?’ Namjoon huffs out but he’s not irritated or anything.

‘Nothing,’ Sk’jin lowers his legs from the bed, still laughing a little.

‘If you’re gonna make fun of me—‘

‘Ah Namjoonie, have some faith in me,’ Sk’jin stretches a little as he stands, ‘I was gonna say that despite what I say most of the time—‘

‘-all of the time.’

‘-someone once told me that optimism and believing in everyone’s capacity for goodness isn’t a sign of ignorance or stupidity,’ Sk’jin waves a hand flippancy, not looking at Namjoon, ‘We process and see the Universe differently, and that doesn’t make you wrong.’

‘Just say you’re happy to see me again,’ Namjoon laughs quietly as Sk’jin exits the room.

Sk’jin scoffs as he exits the room.

‘Hey! Aren’t you gonna take this back?!’

‘You have both arms now! Use them!’
Watching Jungkook’s eyes grow wide in awe, mouth slightly open as he runs around the Bridge to every single possible window to look at Odgōti-32 as they enter its atmosphere is worth the risk.

He keeps glancing back at them excitedly, as though asking if this was real.

And Sk’jin can understand Jungkook’s awe too. Because Odgōti-32 was indeed very beautiful. The water was mainly deep indigo, shifting to a softer blue around the pale sand shores. Massive water filtration units hovered over the waters, and a quick scan shows that they’re empty of living Beings. Namjoon had mentioned it was run primarily by cyborgs. And though tourists did indeed come to vacation here, there weren’t a lot who did. After all, there weren’t any universally appealing locations or spots to spend time looking at or experiencing. Most times they were educational trips, to understand water harvesting. But as it was approaching Odgōti-32’s winter season, and the harvesting machines were not functioning in their full power so as to not dry up the planet, no educational expeditions were around either. They nearly entirely had the planet to themselves, though Hoseok did find a few rare tourist groups who had come in for water-hunting, but they were on completely different islands, far flung from each other.

They purposefully choose an island that had limited fauna and flora, making it unlikely anyone would want to visit. The shores are clean, and the sand is a dullish-grey, gradually becoming coarser and larger, forming pebbles higher up towards the small rocky island.

Sk’jin finds himself nodding at Jungkook’s wide starry-eyed appeal, not sure how or why he’s become the one Jungkook (including Taeh’yung somehow) looks for to ask permission.

He hears Hoseok laughing behind him, taking his shirt off as he walks past, ‘I think I’ll teach him how to swim.’

‘You just want to show off your body!’ Sk’jin yells after him, adjusting the long-sleeved robe he had pulled on. It wasn’t cold, but dipping into bodies of water when it wasn’t the height of summer always lead to some form of clogged nose and Sk’jin would rather not.

Yoongi seems to be thinking along the same line, nearly entirely covered up except for his face. He had a towel over his head, like a hood, to protect himself.

‘Yoongi, like I said, we need to work on your tan,’ Sk’jin reaches over to poke the Human. Yoongi simply whacks his hand away (Sk’jin stops himself from hissing at the pain), arms crossing over his chest as though in challenge.

Jimin runs out with Taeh’yung on his back, giggling loudly like children, chasing after Hoseok and Jungkook, dressed in just some form of short-legged trousers.

‘Hey! Will you sink if we throw you in?’ Sk’jin calls out behind him where Namjoon was dragging a large rolled up…roll. ‘What’s that?’

‘Something everyone will thank me for,’ Namjoon says wisely.

The sun is wonderful on his skin.

The hue of the light is a bit amber, creating an illusion of warmth- but it was like sinking into a hot bath. Sk’jin feels like his skin can finally breathe- his bones easing, muscles finally relaxing. He looks up, tipping his head back.

The breeze is a little on the warm side but Sk’jin welcomes it. It smells like salt, and a bit like ozone, but Sk’jin is happy- he feels incredibly renewed.
'Good?'

Yoongi’s looking at him, a small smile on his lips.

‘Absolutely perfect.’

Namjoon had brought out a training mat, no doubt used by the GI. Speaking of the GI, they were standing at random, looking about as though confused though their faces showed no signs of emotion. Sk’jin could very well be projecting but when Amad’la approaches them and says, ‘What is the point of that?’ while pointing at Jimin and Taeh’yung, splashing water at each other while Hoseok demonstrates (on the sand) how to properly swim, Sk’jin thinks he’s rightfully projecting.

Sk’jin stretches himself out on the mat, snagging Yoongi’s towel from his head to throw it over his eyes and spreads his limbs out.

‘Can you at least-’

‘-no.’

Namjoon sighs but nonetheless manages to sit down somewhere.

‘Nineti! You have to carry me and we can defeat Jimin!’ Taeh’yung yells.

‘Is Taeh’yung trying to get the GI to get into the water?’

‘Yeap.’

Sk’jin snorts.

‘I wasn’t good with water,’ Sk’jin finds himself saying.

‘Yeah?’ Namjoon sounds just as surprised as Sk’jin feels.

‘Fuck, I hated oceans and seas and like, bodies of water that went down to a planet’s core, y’know? Like, what the fuck are you so deep for? I’ll fucking destroy you!’

Sk’jin can’t hear it, but he’s 100% sure Namjoon’s doing that thing he does when he’s trying not to laugh.

‘So what made you, uh, get over it?’

‘Eh- nothing special really,’’ Sk’jin flaps an arm. ‘Just stopped thinking about it I guess. Besides, once you hit space, the whole thing about something being vastly large and strangely empty but weirdly occupied kinda just stops being scary.’

‘That’s it?’

‘Yeap.’

Namjoon actually does laugh now.

‘Not everything is some cool reveal Namjoonie,’ Sk’jin stretches some more again, really enjoying the sun over him. ‘Realization and acceptance aren’t always paired with a dramatic flare.’

‘Heh,’ Namjoon wheezes, ‘Yeah, I guess you’re right.’
Sk’jin lifts the towel from his face a little to look over at Namjoon. He was holding the NaviLet in his hands.

The sun wasn’t just doing Sk’jin good apparently.

‘How was Lowet?’

Namjoon shrugs, ‘I told you already.’

‘No like…how was it,’ Sk’jin asks rather lamely.

Namjoon glances in his direction, looking surprised to find Sk’jin looking at him.

‘I’m not saying that you lacked empathy before,’ Sk’jin begins, ‘Spaces knows you don’t lack it; but it’s like, I guess you really were able to just, I dunno, live differently there, in Lowet.’

Namjoon looks out into the view, a serious somber expression on his face.

‘Yeah I guess. I mean, I met another Kutsoglerin and he was- I don’t know,’ Namjoon says hesitantly, ‘There was such a wonderful…energy around him. Like he was truly, genuinely, living his life- uncar ing of where he came from, how he came to be- or even why. He was just living- obviously he might have problems in his life, but-…there was just…a sense of, well I wouldn’t say purpose but-‘

‘-a sense of peace?’

Namjoon looks back at him.

‘Yeah,’ he nods, ‘I guess so, yeah.’

Sk’jin smiles.

‘Did you ever do that?’

‘What, find peace? I’m offended that you don’t think I’m peaceful.’

Namjoon let’s out a loud bark of a laugh.

‘No need to be harsh about it,’ Sk’jin pushes the towel over his eyes again.

‘So have you?’

‘I did,’ Sk’jin replies honestly. ‘But maybe not the same way you did- or well, the way you would want it.’

Namjoon’s clearly waiting for an explanation.

‘And I’m doing all I can to go back to it.’

The silence between them stretches for a while, and Sk’jin thinks that’s the end of their conversation but then Namjoon quietly says, ‘I’m sorry we had to leave Ilya so quickly.’

‘Ah,’ Sk’jin readjusts his position, crossing his legs at his ankles, ‘I’m guessing Hobi told you?’

‘Uh, Jimin did, actually.’

Sk’jin rolls his eyes. Of course Jimin did.
Once this is all done, I think Ilya will be more than happy to have you join him.’

Sk’jin doesn’t respond. He’s not sure how to, really.

‘In fact, I think I can promise you–’

‘No!’

Sk’jin sits up, whole body jolting with a shock of cold.

Namjoon looks surprised, eyes widening a little and leaning back a little.

‘I just- I meant, don’t make promises you’re not sure you can keep,’ Sk’jin gets out as evenly as he can. ‘It saves you the pain.’

Namjoon just nods, looking somehow quite young in this amber sunlight, air ruffling through his hair. Sk’jin gets up and walks away before Namjoon can apologize or do something similar to that. Instead he finds himself pausing in front of a few of the GI, carrying a strange variety of objects in their hands.

‘Uh- what are these for?’ Sk’jin nods at them.

‘In case someone drowns.’

‘I read in ‘Investigating Unknown Waters’ that one should always be prepared for the unexpected. And one of the unexpected things listed is dehydration.’ The GI holds up 4 bottles of ionized water.

‘I read in ‘Enjoying a Day at the Beach’ that it is important to protect your skin,’ the other says, holding up a very generous sized container of some sort of skin serum.

‘Taeh’yung told me to bring this,’ the last one says, holding up a massive inflatable colourful ball. Where did Taeh’yung even find that.

‘Well, that’s uh, very nice,’ Sk’jin manages to get out, too distracted to notice how Jimin and Jungkook were approaching him until it’s too late.

Sk’jin will deny screaming like that later as he’s tossed into the water.

Jungkook is hiding behind Jimin who was hiding behind a bewildered Namjoon.

Smiling his best smile, Sk’jin says in his best sweetest voice, ‘My dear fellow Beings, let me teach you a short lesson.’

Jungkook runs of shrieking, his speed unhampered by the wet sand. Jimin isn’t as fast, and he also had a guilty smile on his lips. Sk’jin simply picks him and shakes him a little before tossing him into the ocean as well, taking an unsuspecting Taeh’yung down with him.

‘Jungkookie! You can’t run forever!’ Sk’jin sing-songs.

Jungkook lets out shrieks of laughter as Sk’jin gives chase. There’s no catching Jungkook, but Taeh’yung and Jimin team up against the Vicitra and they’re able to tackle him to the ground. He’s able to push them off, which was slightly disturbing considering he had 3 fully grown Beings on top of him, but he squeaks and gives up, raising his hands up in the air. Hoseok walks over to rescue their youngest, wheezing tearfully because: ‘Oh Sk’jin, I wish I had captured your facial expression the entire time!’.
Exhausted, Sk’jin and Taeh’yung slump over to where Namjoon was still sitting, and still very dry. Though Taeh’yung takes care of that by throwing himself over the Kutsoglerin’s lap while dripping wet.

‘Are you sure you’re comfortable like this?’ Namjoon asks gingerly, holding his NaviLet up away from the soaked Zhak’gri. Taeh’yung is stretched over on his back over Namjoon’s crossed legs, arching very strangely, with his arms and legs extending out.

‘Super,’ Taeh’yung beams, struggling to look at Namjoon from his weird angle.

‘Can you not leave the NaviLet for one second,’ Sk’jin chides.

‘Who says I’m doing anything important?’ Namjoon shoots back at once.

Suddenly Taeh’yung gasps, feet kicking and connecting to Sk’jin’s shins.

‘You’re reading it!’ he proclaims, pointing at Namjoon.

‘What-‘ Sk’jin winces in pain, jumping back a little before it clicks. ‘Oh Spaces Namjoon are you reading the Six Hands of Our Love?!’

If Namjoon were capable of turning red, he would, because instead he stands up, rolling Taeh’yung off of his lap in the process and makes to escape. But Taeh’yung manages to trip him up and flops himself over the tall Kutsoglerin like some worm.

‘He is!’ Taeh’yung squeaks, poking at Namjoon as he wheezes.

‘Namjoon I cannot believe it took you this long to finally accept one of the best literary works of the Known Universe.’

Namjoon gives up and allows Taeh’yung to roll over him, accepting his fate, gripping onto his NaviLet like it could save him. They take a short lunch break, set up by the GI who recreate an image they used as reference from a book called ‘Outdoors Celebration: What To Do, and What To Avoid’. They almost feel guilty as they sit down to enjoy their lunch.

After their lunch, Jungkook pulls Jimin and Hoseok over to the wet shoreline to create lumpy shapes and forms out of the wet sand. Hoseok is simply indulging the two, while Jimin helps Jungkook by holding his palms out to create shapes or simply hold some large stones for Jungkook to pick from. Yoongi walks over and simply watches, picking up pebbles he thought were pretty and presenting it to the small group. Taeh’yung uses one of the GI as a pillow and completely knocks out, the shadows around him very faint and diminished under this warm light.

‘Is Jungkook creating a sand fortress for himself?’

‘Yeap.’

Jungkook was basically creating a dome of sand all around him, using a combination of wet sand and pebbles. Hoseok is giving him advise as he makes funny plates and bowls from the sand. Jimin was eyeing Jimin’s laidback form, a mischievous spark in his eyes as he lowers himself to say something in Hoseok’s ear. Hoseok throws his head back laughing, nodding in agreement to whatever Jimin had just said.

But they don’t immediately start whatever it is that they’re planning. Jimin walks over to Yoongi, sitting down by him. Hoseok seems to be relaying this information to Jungkook who grins gleefully, nodding very quickly.
‘Dessert?’

Namjoon is holding a bowl of fruits the GI had apparently brought out. Sk’jin only just barely jumps at the sight of them again, not having heard them.

‘Do you get used to the GI just going about like this?’ Sk’jin asks, taking the whole bowl.

‘It’s like getting used to Yoongi.’

‘Yeah but Yoongi is one besotted Human,’ Sk’jin rolls his eyes, popping a berry-like fruit into his mouth.

It’s incredibly sour, but immediately incredibly sweet as well.

‘My tongue has never been more confused.’

‘I bet I can make your tongue really confused,’ Taeh’yung mumbles sleepily. Sk’jin smooshes the fruit into Taeh’yung’s mouth and waits 2 seconds before the Zhak’gri is squealing. But Taeh’yung’s squeals are drowned out by Jungkook and Hoseok’s laughter.

‘I-…’ Namjoon has a funny grimace on his face- as though confused as to how to feel. Sk’jin looks back around and finds the GI stiffly imitate Hoseok, splashing him and Jungkook with sea-water. They’re still in their GI uniform, though without their helmets, expressions completely blank, and splashing water onto Jungkook’s and Hoseok’s sprinting forms.

‘This is slightly depressing,’ Namjoon groans.

‘It’s pure comedy,’ Sk’jin snorts. ‘I thought your sense of humor would improve after being kidnapped, but I am proven wrong.’

Namjoon gives him a bewildered look.

‘What? Won’t be the first time someone has improved and gained interesting characteristics after being kidnapped.’

‘Sk’jin,’ Namjoon presses his hands into his face.

‘Yes my dear?’

But Namjoon doesn’t comment, instead he’s shaking- shoulder’s visibly quaking.

Did…did he break Namjoon? Was he crying??

Namjoon is not crying- he was laughing.

Even Taeh’yung sits up a little to look at the Kutsoglerin.

‘Pa?’

Namjoon just shakes his head, groaning a little at himself maybe, ‘I always thought we were too different.’

And okay, Sk’jin wasn’t expecting that.

‘And it’s true,’ Namjoon smiles, reaching over for a fruit.
'You’re not even gonna enjoy that, give it back,’ Sk’jin slaps the fruit out of Namjoon’s hand.

‘But I think it’s nice.’ Namjoon just gives him a small wink, dimple forming deep in the process as he pulls away, attention shifting to his NaviLet.

Sk’jin looks away.

‘Oh, I want to be buried in the sand too,’ Taeh’yung mumbles, breaking the stretched silence that was suddenly echoing inside his head.

Sk’jin follows Taeh’yung’s line of sight and watches as Jimin, with the help of Hoseok, Jungkook, and the GI, now cover Yoongi’s laidback form in wet sand, making his outline look like a fish.

Yoongi is obviously complaining, but he’s doing nothing to break free even if he could. His head is pillowed on Jimin’s thighs and his previously protesting hands were being held by a laughing Jimin. Jungkook brings an armful of wet sand, plopping it over Yoongi’s weakly struggling legs.

‘My clothes!’ Yoongi can be heard wailing though there’s no real complaint in his tone. Hoseok is wheezing, slapping handfuls of sand over the Human.

‘This is nice,’ Taeh’yung mumbles again, turning over to his side to watch, as the GI strategically bury Yoongi under wet sand. ‘This was a good idea pa.’

Namjoon just grins.

‘Even if this was just a live experiment that if it fails would endanger us all.’

Namjoon glares at him.

Sk’jin laughs, leaning back on his arms.

But this was nice.

The sun, untainted and pure, shone all about them, as though some light of illusion allowed them a brief glimpse into a life much gentler and kinder than the one actively pursuing them.

And maybe Sk’jin finds beauty in it because of its fleetingness. He’s seen enough, witnessed many beautiful and unique sights, watched countless of sunsets and sunrises- seen endless stars and nebulas, watched the death of a star, the aftermath of a birth of a star- he’s witnessed whole lifetimes of so called “once in a lifetime” phenomenon.

And yet somehow, today- this simple and seemingly mundane day of simply stopping by a plain beach, is the most beautiful thing Sk’jin has ever lived.
So!!
Quasars are so cool!!!!!!!!!!!!!!
But the thing about the water stuff is technically theoretical both mathematically and in terms of theoretical physics
Is it a potential thing?
Sure
But so is nearly everything in the scientific community
The thing about water surrounding a massive space is something that has stuck to me since I once misread the Bible as a kid (yes! I was born and raised Christian but I do not identify as such anymore!) and I read about how a massive body of water surrounded the universe and i
Freaked out
I am massively hydrophobic
Like seriously
I cant look at videos of the oceans or seas or big bodies of water I Just Can’t™
And I used to be scared of space as a kid
So those combined
Traumatized me
But I thought, in story form as an adult, it’s pretty cool!!!
Also IU and Suga T_T
I am still not quite over it
Also as an animation student the music video was stunning, I loved it so much, it was done so beautifully those colours were amazing guys T_T two absolutely lovely and thoughtful people coming together to create something so beautiful, once in a lifetime event
I think I’m able ot set up a better schedule now for updating too! Around every 2 weeks, give or take a day or two! I wish I was able to update weekly like I used to before but T_T
ALSO SPEAKING OF BEING AN ANIMATION STUDENT
I made something!!!!! I recreated 10 BTS MVs in 3D using their iconic pieces/set design/lighting/aesthetics into cubes!! Please check it out:
Artstation
Tumblr
Twitter
Megibīya is a strange and beautiful planet.

The lands are brutal on this side, geographical masses formed and shaped by harsh unprotected heated UV rays, an already thin ozone layer barely filtering out the harmful rays from the surface of this orbit-locked planet. Massive curls and waves of ravaged earth arch high above them, broken and parched land, ravines plummeting deep into the core. Jimin told them that strange and unseen creatures lived deep down within the ravines, something Taeh’yung had been excited about. Namjoon had immediately banned him (and Jungkook) from attempting to make contact with the creatures.

Thick layers of clouds, a geomagnetic storm that was still raging on one side of the planet drape across in thick coils, blossoming on the side of the planet like some terrible portal. According to Jimin, that was never there before.

It’s incredibly difficult to maintain their speed adjustments so quickly after jumping out of warp.
after entering any planetary atmosphere—especially one this tough. But it’s almost a stroke of luck none of them were expecting. To an extent.

‘This is not going to be easy on you guys,’ Hoseok says tersely, steering them through vibrant splays of light that erupt with the force and weight of lightning. It’s strangely cushioning on their engines and warp-core. Entering the storm through the atmosphere from space would be relatively easy; simply allow gravity to take over. However, exiting would be difficult.

‘Just get us through Hobi, I got this,’ Sk’jin replies calmly.

Something powerful breaks over the front of the Bridge, temporarily flooding the whole room with white light. Hoseok had been expecting this and they had already implemented filters over every window and gateway, but the light is still painfully bright.

‘Shields are still above 80%,’ Hoseok announces, ‘Our communications will be shitty.’

‘Set up isotope-tracing map,’ Yoongi orders.

One of the GI next to Hoseok quickly taps one of the many tabs of the Communications Dashboard they customized to stand by Hoseok’s immediate reach.

‘Get the projections on please Yyna,’ Hoseok tells the GI who immediately obeys.

Immediately, 7 distinct coloured dots appear, surrounded by another series of dots in smaller forms. ‘Start mapping onto region-specified map—guys, 5 minutes.’

‘Got it. We’re boarding now.’ Sk’jin replies.

‘The sun is still behind us,’ Hoseok reports, glancing over at the display spread over the windows where a tracker was scaling after the violent light spewing from the sun. ‘Reaching the canyons soon, I can see them.’

Flat and high canyons appear in the strange mirage filled stormy horizon ahead of them.

‘Magnetic surge detected,’ Yyna tells him, ‘Employing diverting tactics.’

‘Guys hang on.’ Hoseok calls just as they spin sharply, momentarily flung harshly as they descend the skies of Megibiya.

‘Initiate automatic equalizers on all systems,’ Hoseok orders, eyes still ahead, looking at the glimmering gold canyons. The front of the canyons facing the sun was always molten, according to Jimin. The heat in this area would be intense, but their transporters would be able to withstand it. ‘3 minutes!’

No one replies back but it’s fine.

He breathes out slowly, momentarily closing his eyes.

‘The geomagnetic storm extends past the canyons for 200 kilostreams,’ Yyna reports, ‘An additional minute in our current speed, stable enough for take-off.’

‘Thank you,’ Hoseok nods at the Megibiyan.

It was strange. She would be returning to planet she held no memory of, no connection; she would have to see what once was, in a life she once lived, out of memory and time.
'Geomagnetic storm ebbing out,' another GI reports from the back, manning the Navigation Table. '5 openings found, leading into the outer-most valley outside the Crescent Ridge.

'Okay, good,' Hoseok locks on to one of the gaps in the canyon, 'We’re going to use the central opening, everyone suited up?'

'We’re good.'

'We’re ready.'

'1 minute,' Hoseok glances at the dashboard to the side. 'Preparing defensive shields, decompressing the Hangars now.'

The canyons are massive. The closer they get, the more overwhelmingly large they are. Jimin had explained that this canyons were formed during the genesis of the planet by flowing magma, heated continuously by the spewing gamma rays expelled by their sun. And over the ages, the surface stilled, forming lofty structures of a primitive rage and fear forever preserved along this ring that ran across the planet.

It was easy to say they were still molten by looking at them- rock surface slowly eroding away into heated dust particles, sparking the air and the ship like a physical wall of friction. The walls glow fiery red and gold, heat mirages twisting perspective and depth. He hears Taeh’yung gasp out in awe.

'We’re in!' Hoseok calls, and even though the ship is not effected by this sweltering oppressive heat, Hoseok feels himself sweating.

'Atmospheric pressure stabilized,' Yyna reports.

'Great, perfect.' Hoseok slows their speed steadily, barreling past massive columns of rock and dust, cracking open to expose fissures of heated gasses, forcefully enough to split rock.

'Anything on our scanners?' Namjoon asks quietly.

'Nothing,' Hoseok replies at once. 'We’re clear. Give me 30 more seconds.'

Hoseok gradually steadies their speed, spinning briefly to avoid a massive expulsion of steam. He quickly rights them, staying just below the tops of the canyon and above the line of sunlight now far behind them.

'Ready?' Hoseok looks around to address Namjoon, Sk’jin, and Jimin on the surveillance feed to the side of his dashboard.

'Ready,' Namjoon replies while Sk’jin starts up the transporter.

'Yoongi? Jungkook?' Hoseok pulls up the second feed.

'Ready,' Yoongi replies back, also from inside a transporter, indistinguishable from the GI behind him with his complete GI uniform. Jungkook gives him a small wave from next to Yoongi, his helmet on his lap.

'All right. Opening Hangar gates in 10 seconds,' Hoseok taps over his dashboard, starting the countdown locally through their communications network. 'Buggy? You’re good?'

Taeh’yung gives him a thumb’s up from the weapons dock.
'This will work,' he hears Namjoon say quietly, not to anyone specifically. ‘Remember, we are already checking the marks up until now.’

Hoseok checks on their isotope-tracking map one more time just to be sure.

‘Hangar Gates 2 and 9 opening. Transporter 12-03 and TE-02 have safely undocked.’

Hoseok takes a short moment to savor on one of their smaller successes.

‘Transporter TE-02 stabilized and on route to our destination,’ Yoongi reports.

‘Transporter 12-03 stabilized,’ Sk’jin reports back. ‘We are also clear for our trajectory. Shields full and cabin pressure at green.’

‘I have your transporters online. Autopilot functions are ready at any moment for both.’

‘We’re halfway there now,’ Yoongi states. ‘Getting ready to dismount and switch to the HoverPorts.’

‘I’ve got us through the edges of the storm- are we on the scanners?’ Sk’jin asks.

‘No- you’re good,’ Hoseok replies, ‘Our heat signature will stick out from the environment soon. We’re about a minute from being detectable. Buggy, how are our defenses holding up?’

‘We’re good!’ Taeh’yung promptly reports back, kneeling up on his seat to grin excitedly at him.

‘We’re on the HoverPorts. Nothing on our scanners either.’ Yoongi announces quietly. ‘Getting into formation.’

‘All right.’ Hoseok focuses ahead, weaving through the large canyons and rocky pillars jutting out in dark burnt hues. ‘If anyone’s out here, they’ll be able to see us any minute now.’

‘Leaving the thermosphere,’ Sk’jin sounds tense. ‘I am seeing nothing so far.’

‘Found a landing point within the heat-waves; exiting the TE-02,’ Jungkook sounds slightly breathless but there’s an unmistakable excitement to his tone, ‘Following Yoongi’s lead now!’

‘Exterior temperature has dropped below the ship’s readings,’ Yyna states. ‘All scanners will be able to pick up on us now.’

‘It will be okay,’ Jimin tells them, his voice unwavering, calm, and sure. ‘It will be okay.’
By the 3rd day Hoseok is battling with a pretty bad case of jitters. Not because he’s nervous, or anxious- rather it’s the opposite.

Hoseok has never quite grasped the concept of a holiday.

He’s pretended he’s been on a holiday for several missions- acting the tourist, even participating in a guided tour, creating fake local crafts with believable enthusiasm of an ignorant tourist.

So he’s not sure what to do really.

He’s itching to grab his screen, discuss and plan- but even Namjoon was taking a break. His NaviLet opened to some trash novel series Sk’jin loved. Not that he was on it the entire time; Namjoon and Jimin were together more frequently than they were not in the past 2 days, seriously discussing things, making adjustments to projections Hoseok cannot define or make out. But they don’t ask for help or an opinion, so Hoseok doesn’t bother to ask. Jimin also took to speaking for prolonged periods of time with the GI. Hoseok had gone back inside to get his clothes dried after being dunked into the sea by Jungkook and Taeh’yung and had found Jimin sitting across from Nineti, neither of them moving or speaking. Hoseok hadn’t wanted to disturb, so he hadn’t approached them.

He’s not sure if others have seen it, or if this was supposed to be expected, seeing as Jimin did indeed know many of the GI present here. It would make sense if he tried to communicate with them.

So Hoseok approaches the holiday almost as though it were a mission. He would relax, soak up the sun, enjoy the water, enjoy food outdoors.

And so far he was doing a good job of it.

Mainly because he felt this was a good time to train Jungkook in some of the more random, but also missed opportunities the Vicitra would have otherwise never gotten the chance to experience.

Hoseok smiles to himself, remembering Jungkook’s reaction to the sea water. Teaching him how to swim was just an immediate natural chain of reaction. And Spaces does Jungkook takes to swimming with unnerving skill.

He also holds his breath for a worrisome length of time, making Hoseok, Sk’jin, and Namjoon nearly panic when the Vicitra doesn’t emerge 10 minutes later. Jimin, alarmed, takes to the water immediately, followed by Yoongi, diving under the calm waters. Hoseok spots Namjoon calling for the GI, all of them dropping their immediate task of fortifying a massive sand-fort and heading for the water when Jimin and Yoongi break the water.

‘Did you find him-?!’ Sk’jin calls hysterically, splashing forward hurriedly.

But instead, Yoongi is nearly doubled-over with laughter, leaning on Jimin’s shoulder, whole body shaking. Jimin looks like he’s unsure how to feel- a hesitant smile on his face.

‘Uh-‘

There’s a great splash some distance from the flatter shorelines and Jungkook appears for a moment before he sinks down again.
‘What’s happened?!’ Sk’jin demands, receiving a still laughing Yoongi with confusion. Then out of nowhere, Jungkook emerges, a massive bleeding and still struggling aggressive looking aquatic creature draped over his shoulders.

Yoongi is laughing even more, now supported by Jimin who just rolls his eyes, muttering under his breath in his own language, dragging the Human away with him.

Sk’jin lets out a loud squeak when Jungkook waddles over to them, big grin on his face, hair sopping wet. He looks incredibly pleased with himself.

‘Jin!’ Jungkook eagerly calls, ‘Look what I fought!’

Hoseok tries very hard not to laugh out loud as Sk’jin screams, wading backwards as quickly as he could, away from Jungkook holding the creature towards him. He collides into Namjoon who is laughing hysterically, but doesn’t move away as Sk’jin climbs up on him, trying to get away from Jungkook’s teasing.

‘Keep that away from me!’ Sk’jin shrieks, ‘Namjoon-! Namjoon hey do something! NAMJOON!’

Hoseok looks around, finding Yoongi and Taeh’yung in stitches on the sand as Jimin covers his face with his hands, shoulders shaking.

Ultimately, Jungkook stops his teasing and with a bright grin, proceeds to methodically kill the large aquatic slithering creature with a single crushing grip of his fists. Sk’jin is making loud retching sounds, pushing Namjoon to move away from Jungkook.

Jungkook takes his kill towards where Jimin, Yoongi, and Taeh’yung are, looking pleased. Taeh’yung is exclaiming at the colourful scales while Jimin does his best to praise the youngling. Yoongi is still laughing as he leaves the small group, heading back to the ship.

Hoseok stops Namjoon, nodding at the group, ‘Uh- I have a feeling they might try and cook that.’

Namjoon looks scandalized for a moment before he sighs in a resigned manner.

‘I’ll check to see if it’s actually edible and not like, poisonous or something.’ He sighs, walking over to where his NaviLet was.

‘Anything on our scanners?’ Hoseok asks, glancing up towards the sky.

‘Nothing,’ Namjoon replies, also glancing upwards.

‘I guess your theory is working?’

Namjoon shrugs. ‘I hope it is,’ he pauses a moment before asking, ‘Have you ever been to RY-522?’

It takes a moment for Hoseok to remember what or where that is.

‘Isn’t that in Fytikos?’ Hoseok quirks an eyebrow, ‘An asteroid?’

Namjoon nods.

‘Not personally- never really had any missions near Fytikos- it wasn’t necessary anyways. Cheimaros is no longer being threatened.’ Hoseok replies thoughtfully, ‘Besides, most of the regions in Fytikos are a no-travel zone.’
'So basically no one would be able to enter? Was it under the GLA protection?'

Hoseok wonders why Namjoon’s asking him all of this. He was an Information Analyst, he should know more than Hoseok. He nods in reply but also adds, ‘I mean, technically you can’t go in; but GLA protection statutes and sanctions aren’t always the most full-proof. There’s always a loophole you can get around. Most of the time it’s the Yisheng’s themselves that are the loopholes.’

Namjoon squints a little, still searching for the aquatic sea-creature but his mind is clearly somewhere else.

‘If you wanted to get into Fytikos, into RY-522, how would you do it?’

‘They’re under a biophysical protection system right? Class A?’

Namjoon nods.

‘Well, I’d find a way to have those protection systems lifted,’ Hoseok replies thoughtfully, ‘By persisting an evidence that declares that whatever is in need of protection within RY-522 is under threat and needs instant analysis. This automatically shifts responsible authorities who are funding and overseeing the protection to check up on the “threat” - they will then need to send in external analysts to reduce bias as protocol dictates. Depending on the level of threat, either the GIU or Yishengs will be sent to investigate. If it’s RY-522, it’ll most likely be the Yishengs. During that time, I slip myself into the gathered team. Always more tricky when it comes to the Yishengs if I’m being honest. But if it turns out well, I hitch a completely legal ride into RY-522.’

‘So there’s normally always some form of loophole we can take advantage of then?’

‘More or less,’ Hoseok replies honestly, wondering what Namjoon was getting at.

Namjoon nods slowly to that before he exclaims, ‘Ha! Got it!’

‘What?’

‘The creature,’ Namjoon grins, showing him his screen.

Turns out that the aquatic creature, the tafata, was indeed edible. Hoseok wonders if Jungkook somehow knew and as a result picked a fight with it? Like some instinct told him that this creature was edible and he could hunt it if he wanted. Or maybe it was because it presented a threat, as Namjoon scrolls down the information to find out that the tafata was in fact a deadly and speedy predator that often fed on much larger creatures for sport. Yoongi is uncannily efficient in deboning and filleting the aquatic creature, pointing out how he’s doing it to Jungkook who watches with wide eyes, absorbing the information. Sk’jin pales at the sight while Taeh’yung takes the colourful fins and scales, fashioning some off device for his head with it. Jimin watches, both amused and slightly disturbed.

Namjoon is clearly finding all of this extremely entertaining.

‘It’s like you missed us,’ Hoseok teases.

‘Huh?’

Hoseok laughs, watching as Namjoon realizes what he meant by his words, looking back at the scene before them.

But Namjoon doesn’t splutter or deny it. Instead he shrugs a little and gives a short nod.
'Yeah- I guess you could say that.'

‘Fuck, this place is…it’s different from what I remember.’ Yoongi says out loud.

‘You didn’t see these trees when you were here?’ Jungkook asks.

‘No- we were closer towards the cities- not this far out.’

Hoseok hasn’t seen trees this big before. Jimin had said that the vegetation towards the edges of the Crescent were massive. And he wasn’t exaggerating.

Some of these tree trunks were as wide and tall as the Department infrastructures in Šerdesas. The bark is stone like, oddly light, with thick veins of dark sap breaking through the layers at random. The leaves are browning and fall in a slow entrancing rain around them. Heaps of them fall, some branches swaying and snapping, heavy bouts of dust, greyish pollen, and ash-like particles gust about as well when they fall into contact with their shields.

‘Anything?’ Yoongi asks quietly.

Hoseok glances at the tracker to the side, watching Yoongi and Jungkook’s dots leading a stream of other dots behind them some 50 kilostreams away.

‘Nothing,’ Hoseok replies, glancing at Yyna who belatedly shakes her head. ‘We have nothing here.’

‘We’re getting nothing too,’ Namjoon adds, ‘I think we’re clear on starting up the geoscanners- clearly what the GLA has provided for “Bhumi” is incorrect.’

‘Nothing here too.’ Jungkook sounds excited.

He had picked up almost immediately on how to operate the HoverPorts. If they were that small, tracking their readings at the speed they were maintaining would be virtually impossible. They maintain a parameter around their trajectory. Hoseok is doing nothing to mask their presence- it would be difficult after all, with a ship of this magnitude.

‘It’s cool right?’ Hoseok asks Taeh’yung who hasn’t said a word since they broke past the canyons and into this strange dense colossal forest of gigantic trees. He had only stood, leaning over to the windows, palms placed on the windows, leaning is as though trying to feel the trees they flew by.

Taeh’yung doesn’t reply immediately, he’s unmoving where he stands.

‘Crescent Ridge city approaching,’ Yyna informs him. ‘Marked Keldana; a farming city.’

‘We can see it,’ Yoongi says at once, ‘Team B, scout the parameter.’

Hoseok brings the ship above the browning foliage slowly, pollen and dust wrapping around them briefly like vapor.

The city, Keldana as Jimin had called it, is not large. The stout and heavy looking infrastructure are much shorter than the trees that slope down in height towards the valley. And past the thicket of colossal trees that shrink in height the further they expand out, the last of the canyons flatten out into massive step-like plateaus. The structures appeared carved in mimicry of the canyons they had flown past- brown and grey walls broken by sporadic outcrops of windows, doorways, balconies, and bridges. Even from this distance, it appeared completely desolate and empty. The living spaces seemed to form a semi-circle, with a massive space in between.

‘I can see you,’ Yoongi reports.

‘I see you on the tracker,’ Hoseok replies back before calling, ‘Sk’jin? You guys good?’

‘We’re out of the planet’s gravity-reach,’ the Khol’isa responds, ‘Namjoon and Jimin are realigning our navigation charts- you should also start receiving the geoscans soon. I see nothing so far.’

‘Nothing from here too,’ Hoseok looks at their scanners, ‘We’re gonna land as soon as Yoongi gives us the green light.’

He slows their speed even more, glancing around every scanner they had on.

‘Buggy?’ Hoseok calls the Zhak’gri, ‘Everything okay?’

Taeh’yung looks away from the windows, giving him a sad look.

‘No,’ he replies simply, ‘This is a sad place.’

Hoseok doesn’t know how to respond.

‘There’s nothing here,’ Yoongi tells them, ‘I’m putting Team B on a 25 kilostream radius patrol around us, I’ll meet you where you land.’

‘Got it,’ Hoseok replies before adding, ‘Buggy, take a seat?’

Taeh’yung goes back to where Yoongi normally sat and doesn’t say another word.

‘Are they watching?’ Hoseok asks, pulling them a little higher again, the small city of Keldana getting closer, the trees shrinking in size.

‘Yes,’ Taeh’yung sounds dismissive, but not towards Hoseok himself, ‘They’re afraid.’

‘It’s okay to be afraid,’ Hoseok sighs out, the HUD automatically adjusting to track Yoongi’s and Jungkook’s tracker on to the screen once they’re close enough. Yyna locks on to their locations, allowing their surveillance to zoom into their location and setting up a landing spot. ‘Being afraid is a natural response.’

‘But everything here is so unnatural,’ Taeh’yung mumbles.

‘The air is breathable and clean,’ Jungkook tells him, sounding like he’s reading, ‘Um- just dusty?’

Yoongi and Jungkook and a few other GI with them are astride their HoverPorts. They’re sleek, gravity-based engines running off on air-particle converter engines. They were incredibly quiet, undetectable as they lacked any fuel trace, and incredibly fast. They were a completely new model-not available even to the Venture Unit agents. So when they found a stock of 50 HoverPorts in the Hangar stores, they put them to immediate use. Yoongi taught Jungkook how to use one in under an hour. Surprisingly, Namjoon took the longest and was deemed unqualified to handle it.

But Jungkook took to it easily, immediately joining Yoongi in their scouting mission.

The city they’re in is small, but eerily well-preserved. Evident remains of a normal life still remained, though incredibly faded. Empty and dead pots of plants line up balconies. Wooden sticks propping open windows for decades and decades still remain. Faded and tattered flags barely hang on to their poles, crumbling water towers and irrigation networks spreading around the city lay broken from time and lack of care. A sunken ravine has carved through some fallen buildings, where a water source had clearly leaked out a long time ago, breaking through the structures above it.

‘Sending you structural integrity readings,’ Yoongi says as they close in on the clearing at the center of the city. Remains of dead trees line up the clearing; what appeared to be crumbling statues line up certain areas, and at the very center, the ravine cracks through the grounds, creating a still and deep pool.

‘Did you catch that?’ Hoseok asks Yyna as he brings them right to the center. He doesn’t want the shelf they were landing on to crumble with their added weight, especially if an underground ravine was already expanding for Spaces knows how long.

Yyna nods, unaffected as they land in a city that would have had some sort of familiarity to her. But maybe it was good it didn’t. It was painful enough to hear Jimin talk about his home-system in the past-tense, a suppressed and desperate strain of hope in his tone.

‘We are receiving geoscans,’ she tells him.

‘Okay- let’s put that through into the Table, alert me when it’s completed.’

‘Understood. We are also clear to land.’

‘Great, okay we’re landing now Yoongi.’

Hoseok spots them below, moving to give the ship a good wide berth to land. He’s barely gotten them down when Taeh’yung immediately rushes out of his chair and sprints past. He doesn’t move with his usual eagerness, but rather with a somber determination. Hoseok makes sure that the ship is stabilized, locking it onto autopilot and follows after the Zhak’gri.

The air is cool, but a strange staleness lingered heavily. The infrastructure seems both heavy and fragile now that he’s outside. Looking around briefly, he catches sight of Taeh’yung’s lanky figure near the mouth of the ravine.

‘A search around the parameter indicates no sign of life,’ Yoongi tells them, ‘I’m going to have Team B expand their patrol.’

‘Got it,’ Yoongi looks behind him, catching sight of the HoverPorts drifting around the massive opening, keeping close to the ship but maintaining a good distance in the same time. ‘Are you guys all right up there?’

‘We’re fine- still headed for our coordinates.’ Sk’jin replies at once. ‘We’re halfway to the mark.’

‘All right, do you want me to patch the ship’s surveillance to you?’
‘No. It’s okay,’ Jimin replies back.

Taeh’yung squats down, looking down at the ground beneath him, and then around him.

‘Anything?’ Hoseok asks, not sure what he means by the question, or if Taeh’yung could possibly give him an answer that made sense.

‘It’s empty.’ Taeh’yung sighs out, placing his palm over the ground, weak echoes of green spread from his hands. ‘No life lives here anymore- this planet has been dying.’

‘So…-so that means Jimin was right?’

Taeh’yung gives him a sad look, standing up slowly.

‘I think this is something he knew in his heart the moment he woke up,’ Taeh’yung says thoughtfully. ‘But I think he was trying to deny it.’

‘So then…Menigišiti…’

‘Just ghosts,’ Taeh’yung looks around. The shadows around Taeh’yung flicker, the air momentarily stilling. ‘Angry, trapped ghosts.’

Hoseok feels a shiver run down his back.

‘Can you sense anything else?’ Sk’jin asks tersely.

Taeh’yung looks a little uncomfortable- mostly sad as he glances about the clearing. The water in the ravine is not very forceful but it at least fills the air with some sort of sound of motion. Something other than the still and deep crumbling of the infrastructure around them or the falling faded leaves.

‘It’s almost as though…’ Taeh’yung frowns, looking around and then back at Hoseok, ‘I saw this happen to Earth.’

Hoseok can practically hear his heart beating. He’s seen the footage in Court; watched, alongside so many others, the ruin and destruction of a planet home to millions. A planet rendered to nothing for no reason other than to display power.

‘But this is incomplete,’ Taeh’yung mumbles, ‘It’s why this is happening. This slow decay.’

‘Do you think it’s possible the other planets have faced the same fate?”

Taeh’yung shrugs, looking about and scuffing the floors with his bare feet. The shadows disproportionate around him flicker and bend.

‘What do they observe from this?’

‘Wrath,’ Taeh’yung replies at once, ‘Punishment.’

‘And what do you observe from this?’

Taeh’yung looks up, surprise in his eyes, flickering copper and green. He smiles a little before looking up, gaze pointed upwards.

‘I see that all life is Continuum.’
‘I’m getting a report that there is a small encampment in what appears to be a depository 150 kilometers from Keldana,’ Yoongi says suddenly, ‘It appears to be quite recently constructed according to observation. I’m headed there to investigate. Jungkook will remain here and receive the scans from our Irises.’

‘Got it,’ Hoseok steps away from the cracked edges of the ravine and towards where Jungkook was getting off his HoverPort, removing his helmet in the process.

‘Wow, Kookie’s gonna break a lot of hearts when he grows up,’ Taeh’yung remarks almost nonchalantly.

‘You stay the fuck away from him you ancient pole,’ Sk’jin snips in immediately.

Taeh’yung splutters a response, stomping bare feet on the ground. Jungkook gives them a brief confused look before handing his screen to Hoseok.

‘I don’t like how it smells,’ is the first thing he says.

‘Yeah, it smells stale,’ Hoseok nods in agreement. Taeh’yung stops explaining himself to Sk’jin and sniffs the air aggressively a few times.

‘Huh,’ he looks at them in mild surprise, ‘My nose is bust?’

‘Side-effect we did not foresee,’ Namjoon quips in at once, ‘Another thing we should make note of.’

‘They’re all laughing at me,’ Taeh’yung frowns behind him, his eyes glaring.

‘Ignore them,’ Hoseok pulls Taeh’yung closer so that they can all look at the screen together. ‘Are you getting this as well Namjoon?’

‘We are.’

‘We never used fuel in the form of wood,’ Jimin tells them, ‘We had abundant resources if we wanted, but harnessing our sun’s energy was so much more efficient. This depository was built to maintain and keep a balance on wood-rot among the trees. We always had Megibīya fully supplied for their energy needs. Megibīya had no actual use for wood as a material, other than for certain religious practices, hobby, or recreational crafts.’

Sk’jin snorts at that, ‘Recreational crafts- is that what the kids call it these days?’

‘But,’ Jimin continues, not acknowledging Sk’jin’s jib. ‘It appears to be fully stocked, and the trees in the zone have been felled, not naturally.’

‘It’s possible that it’s pirates,’ Yoongi says quietly, ‘We’re running a scan and examining the grounds before heading in.’

‘What do you guys think?’ Hoseok asks the two on either side of him.

‘Um, this planet was empty for a long time right?’ Jungkook asks, ‘No one to really guard. Trees were rare in Ynqaba, and the Kabans would hunt more for it- pay more for it. Trees like this,’ he looks around, eyes wide, head tilted all the way back as though trying to see every single tree around them, ‘trees like this would be invaluable in Ynqaba.’

‘Megibīya really is kinda a sitting varak,’ Hoseok mumbles, ‘You just need a good pilot and you can get in, take what you need.'

‘Isn’t that what you thought about Menigišiti as a whole?’ Sk’jin asks no one in particular. ‘That now, it would just be one massive source of material and resources?’

‘It’s a possibility,’ Jimin replies evenly.

‘We’re clear,’ Yoongi chimes in.

‘All right, I’m pulling up all of your Irises now,’ Hoseok announces, tapping the side tabs to pull up all of their feed from Yoongi’s Iris as well as the GI with him.

The forest there is much more sparse- whoever was felling the trees were being sneaky about it. They took down the trees at every odd interval, spreading the loss of trees in a way that almost appeared natural if it weren’t for the fact that from ground level, the evidence was pretty clear. Whoever was doing this, wanted to avoid detection from surveillance above.

Towards the center lay a high mound of logs of varying size. Evidently old ones were at the bottom- cracked, dried, many crushed to flattened pieces of bark and fiber. Some are evidently much newer, the barks still intact and stuck onto the main wood core. There’s a sort of chopping device, rotted and faded heaps of wood shavings lumped to one side, some sort of fungi growing over them. There are small stone huts, many dilapidated, but at least 3 were still standing with their domed roofs still intact. Outside one of them, Hoseok spots the remains of a fire pit. It’s not new- maybe some weeks, possible a month or two old. It’s dry, the burnt wood hardened ash and charcoal. Around the huts the floors are paved with smooth flat stone slabs, dried weeds and roots piercing through. But the area before one of the huts has been cleared of the bigger roots.

‘I don’t think the Beings doing this are doing it um, legally,’ Namjoon ruminates, ‘It’s secretive, but they’re also trying to prolong this activity; like they’re trying to maintain it. It’s not done with confidence that there will be no repercussion.’

‘There are old tracks- transporter brakes,’ Yoongi crouches down, tapping gently on the cracked stone floors, showing distinctly familiar scorch marks from a transporter brake turbine. ‘Someone used to come here, land here. Live here, and take things.’

‘Could be pirates,’ Sk’jin ruminates.

‘Could you check inside the huts? Be careful though.’

They watch as Yoongi approaches the hut where the entryway has been cleared.

The door is barely hanging to a hinge, and inside there’s evident signs of struggle. But all the furnishing, the peeling plaster on the stone walls, the dried climbers that must have once took over the whole place are covered in dust and in a ruined state. It’s not old, but it’s not quite recent at the same time.

‘Something definitely happened here,’ Hoseok contemplates, ‘Not very recent.’

‘There’s no remains,’ Yoongi says quietly, scanning the hut and entering the back room and dark en suite as well. ‘I don’t see any evidence of a living Being being here.’

Suddenly, Jungkook’s gloved finger reaches out to the screen and taps on one of the other feeds. At the same time, Sk’jin curses under his breath.

‘Is that-?’
There’s a burnt mound, blackened and even after this time, somehow strangely damp as though still bleeding from what was placed there. The charred bits of wood are placed in a circular pattern, pointing inwards in varying lengths that quickly form a distinct pattern, like the rays of the sun.

‘Most of the Megibīyan cremated their dead,’ Jimin says quietly, ‘For both life and death came from fire.’

‘So this is a pyre.’ Namjoon states, ‘The customs of the Megibīyan- are they applied to the other dead who are not from Megibīya?’

‘No,’ Jimin replies, ‘It was only reserved for the Megibīyan- and-...this perfectly mirrors exactly how it was done. The placement of the pyre wood and-’

‘There’s another one,’ Yoongi cuts across shortly.

Hoseok quickly finds Yoongi’s feed, enlarging it a little. And true to his word, Yoongi comes across another circular pyre, the logs of varying lengths placed systematically here too.

‘There’s another not too far from it.’

‘Team B, spread out and find other pyres,’ Hoseok orders, ‘Report back on how many you find.’

It’s painfully quiet waiting for the GI to accumulate how many pyres they find because it doesn’t seem to end. The further they spread out into the trees of the forest, in nearly every direction, pyres spread across the ground. Many covered with years of vegetation.

‘What does this mean?’ Jungkook asks.

‘This is a graveyard,’ Yoongi announces, voice unnaturally level, sounding very much like how he did in the past. ‘These are all pyres. The wood was cut, to fuel the pyres.’

‘...maybe Prat’tna buried them,’ Namjoon says tentatively, ‘There were others before him- before Yyna, maybe this-’

‘It’s too many,’ Yoongi cuts across quietly, ‘There’s too many here.’

‘Can we run any samples on the remains of the ashes?’ Sk’jin asks sharply, ‘Rather than speculate, let’s make sure what we’re looking at is what we think it is.’

‘We can try to extract DNA prints from the ashes,’ Namjoon confirms, ‘Each living Being has a unique chemical make based off of their home-planet. If there is any sample that is foreign to Megibīya, it will show up.’

‘Team B, collect samples,’ Yoongi orders quietly.

‘It seems like it was done respectfully?’ Jungkook asks quietly, sounding unsure.

‘A sacrifice is always executed respectfully,’ Taeh’yung remarks as he steps back.

Hoseok’s hand tingles, heat licking over his palms slowly.

‘Hoseokkie, do you think you could check around the city?’ Sk’jin asks, his tone purposefully light.

‘What? Why?’ Hoseok looks back around at the crumbling city.

‘Great, not just the ones outside, maybe further deep inside- closer to the ravine maybe,’ Sk’jin continues, ignoring his question.

He understands what Sk’jin is implying and Hoseok wishes he didn’t.

‘Team A, split up,’ Hoseok orders, ‘Drive by slowly- find any indication of recent activity around the infrastructures- check for areas with less weeds, or area specific erosion, water connection-things like that. Nineti, with me.’

Immediately, 6 of the HoverPorts depart ahead of them while Nineti approaches Hoseok. Hoseok quickly climbs up behind him. Taeh’yung is quick to scramble ahead with Jungkook.

‘Yyna- make sure you’re keeping an eye on all the scans,’ Hoseok glances up at the ship towards the Bridge.

‘Understood.’

‘Let’s split up and cover more ground,’ Hoseok orders, shoving his screen into his inner pocket. ‘Let’s go Nineti.’

The city is not large, but a lot of it was clearly suffering from erosion and lack of care. Massive cracks and veins ran up the chipped plastered stone walls, giving Hoseok the strong impression that any force applied would send the walls around them crashing.

‘Here,’ Nineti says suddenly a few minutes later.

‘Here?’ Hoseok looks about as they reach a crossroad. Evidence of stalls remained around the streets - possibly a smaller market area. None of the goods have survived but evidence of earthenware, what appeared to look like some form of OrTanks, and other display facilities lay abandoned around the area.

Nineti stops and Hoseok gets off.

‘Clear view of the clearing,’ Nineti informs him in monotone, ‘Shelter above.’

Hoseok glances up, spying a wide rocky shelf jutting out from the side of the canyons. He can hear the water streaming just some ways to their right.

He glances at the stocky stone-faced structures around him. Most of the doors are haphazardly flung open- some shut closed by more than just bolts and locks, but with age and decay as well. Hoseok squats down, looking down at the floors around the streets. It’s faint, but Hoseok knew what he was looking for.

‘Here,’ Nineti says again, crouched down, hand touching the ground before him in an almost gentle and respectful manner. ‘This drag mark is recent.’

The stone floors were naturally quite scarred and eroded, but Hoseok can spot serrations, paler than the outer stone face, scratching up in an unmistakable manner.

‘Something was dragged here.’ Hoseok remarks, ‘Team A, rejoin us at Nineti’s coordinates.’

‘You found something?’ Taeh’yung asks eagerly, ‘Because I was about to say we did too!’

‘If that’s the case, continue to check- we have a lot of ground to cover in this street itself.’ Hoseok nods at Nineti, pointing towards one of the doors at random, ‘Start with that one there- check to see if there are cellars, basements – even attics.’
‘Understood.’

Hoseok waits a minute before he spies two of the GI approaching on their HoverPorts before he ducks into one of the doorways himself.

The structure of the place is sound- mostly appearing to be carved straight out of stone and rock but with a smoothness that was definitely not natural. There’s a cleverness with the structure of the domed roofs that Hoseok would admire more if he had time. But just one look inside tells him there’s no possibility of someone living in here even in secret- not with the way most places are caved in.

He walks out and into the next doorway.

‘Yoongi, anything?’

‘We’re still finding more,’ the Human says. ‘There’s…there’s a lot.’

Hoseok knows he’s found something when he enters his 4th doorway and he finds tell-tale signs of TeorSer blasts scorch the walls.

‘There’s signs of struggle here,’ Hoseok reports immediately.

‘Here as well,’ one of the GI announces quietly.

‘Here as well,’ another echoes.

Hoseok stops, looking about the seemingly “normal” abandoned area.

‘Cellars,’ Jimin tells him quietly.

Hoseok looks to the ground at once. Visually he can’t tell anything apart with the inlaid patterns, clearly designed to keep hatches hidden. So he lightly taps his feet around, listening to the echoes. Right next to an archway, the echoes from his steps sound marginally hollow. Crouching down, he removes one of his gloves and traces his fingers along the stone patterned across the floor.

‘Press down around the edges,’ Jimin instructs him, ‘Near the walls, it should allow you to slide the panel off.’

Hoseok’s fingers immediately dig around the sides of the archway wall. There’s the faintest feeling of one of the stones being loose so he presses down on it.

The panel slides off so lightly, Hoseok has a hard time believing how seamlessly the hatch had been hidden in plain sight. According to Jimin, so much of Megibīya was a front. The whole planet pretending to be a slow-developing planet just somewhat out of it’s secondary genesis stage. Their infrastructure, architectural landscaping, exposed technology, and projected lifestyle was all to display an uninteresting façade to any who might be interested enough to visit. But their work with stone and rock was more than just phenomenal. According to Jimin, the Megibīyan could hide their lodgings and dwellings into solid rock faces with no one ever noticing. So it made sense that their cellars were so cleverly hidden. In fact, Hoseok doesn’t believe that they’re actually considered all that great by Megibīyan standard.

Inside, deep stairs open up to him.

Old stains mark up the surfaces and Hoseok’s stomach drops.
‘Head Pilot Hoseok, I have found more evidence that a raid once took place in here. How to proceed.’

‘Take samples,’ Hoseok orders, as he makes his way all the way down. It’s dark but his eyes adjust quickly. He makes out beds, bunkers, storage facilities- and they’re somewhat recent. Not more than some decades old.

‘Um, Hobi,’ Taeh’yung says gently, ‘I think we’ve…found something we need help with. None of you babies come here though!’

‘What?’ Hoseok takes a clear look around the place.

‘Please come,’ Jungkook requests, sounding somewhat pained. ‘Sending you the coordinates.’

Hoseok follows their coordinates- not too far from where he was, just a little deeper into the city. He catches sight of the GI quietly moving through each accessible stone structure. Hoseok picks up a brisk jog, stopping before what appeared to be an incredibly damaged and run down building. Jungkook’s HoverPort is outside, still humming quietly, ready to be jumped onto if needed. He can’t tell when the building must have fallen, but Hoseok forgoes that for now and enters through a crumbling doorway.

He’s not sure what about this place might have attracted Jungkook and Taeh’yung to search this place. The hallways, which were surprisingly intact the further Hoseok goes in, are dusty- no indication of struggles here.

‘Hobi?’ Jungkook calls out.

Following his voice, Hoseok steps into one of the doorways in the hallway and then once more through another doorway he thought would maybe lead to a washroom. But he’s mistaken. Instead the doorway turns sharply, stairs leading downwards. Jungkook is there at the bottom, his expression worried.

Quickly, Hoseok makes his way down.

‘What is it?’ Hoseok asks at once, ‘Why did you tell the GI to stay put?’

Jungkook just gestures behind him.

Once he reaches the bottom of the stairs, Hoseok first spots Taeh’yung, kneeling on one knee on the floor, hand reaching down before him. Around him lay corpses, decayed, aged, and preserved. Hoseok has seen Yyna, as well as Prat’tna’s images to easily identify the Megibīyan corpses. But there’s a clear difference separating the corpses; two of them are dressed in garments visually different from the others.

Taeh’yung answers his unasked question when he pulls his hand away, lightly grasping at the fragile fabric that wrapped around the corpse.

Even in death, after what appeared to be some months, the indent on the back of the dead Megibīyan is clear.

‘I found this,’ Jungkook says from behind him. ‘It’s just like the ones the GI use.’

Hoseok is handed a long handle- a Heliord, not unlike the ones Yoongi recently equipped himself with. In fact, it’s identical to the ones Yoongi was using- identical to the ones the GI were using.
‘What is it?’ Sk’jin asks sharply. ‘What’s wrong?’

Hoseok changes their communication channel, speaking only to the other 6.

‘We’ve found bodies of several Megibīyan, as well as the Megibīyan GI,’ Hoseok tells them quietly.

The silence is deafening.

Hoseok kneels beside Taeh’yung, observing the body of the GI before him. Then he hears Sk’jin sigh quietly.

‘We are at 500 pyres,’ Yoongi breaks the silence- sounding strained, ‘I’m stopping us before we get too far from the ship.’

‘Return to the ship,’ Namjoon tells him tersely, ‘Have the samples analyzed. And we proceed ahead to the next city.’

‘Buggy, Kook, do you think you could take the samples? For the GI as well as the Megibīyan,’ Hoseok asks as he stands up.

Jungkook nods before he hesitates and asks, ‘What happened here?’

Hoseok looks around the secret room, notices the cellar panel that has shifted slightly to reveal the way inside. He walks over, pushing aside the panel to reveal the stairs. There’s another body there across the stairs.

‘Something we wouldn’t have been able to stop.’ He replies simply before adding, ‘We’re headed back to the ship. Yoongi, could you tell the Teams to head back as well- I think we should move on to part 2 of this plan.’

‘Coming back now.’

* *

‘Where’s Yoongi and Jimin?’ he asks the two.

‘They went for a walk around the shoreline,’ Jungkook reports immediately, ‘I think they said they would collect dry flora for the fire.’

Hoseok smiles in thanks. He climbs up some of the stacked flat rocks about the shore, squinting around to spot Yoongi and Jimin. He catches sight of their small figures in the faint light of the dusk, and because he was looking for them, 2 of the GI some ways from them.

Yoongi had been looking better the past few days. It wasn’t just Sk’jin who seemed to improve by being out here. The Human appeared well rested, the dark rings around his eyes lessened though his skin didn’t seem to gain back any colour. Not that he had much of it before, but there’s a sort of permanent starkness to his skin that was clearly indicative that something was wrong. His entire Being however, seemed to have blossomed under the sun; he was much more expressive. Laughing, smiling- even making dumb jokes, sharing stories and anecdotes, giving Taeh’yung and Jungkook genuine and constructive advise on many topics, offering support to the two. Hoseok believes that when Yoongi had been truly alive all those centuries ago, he must have been an incredibly fun and grounding Being to be with.

It made sense that he would have reached out to Jimin the way he did when he first met him.

Breathing out slowly, Hoseok looks all about the island they’re on.

Overhead to the distance, one of the many water-harvesting machines that dotted the skies of Odgõti-32 was drifting by. Great ventilation systems beneath the machines absorbed and filtered the sea water, purifying it for export. It trails behind it great clouds of vapor. One of them had passed overhead earlier that morning, their hair immediately turning damp and their skin dewy.

‘Hobi?’

Suddenly, Taeh’yung is leaning against his legs from where he’s plonked himself on the rock surface.

‘Hey buggy.’ Hoseok leans down a little to ruffle Taeh’yung’s hair.

Taeh’yung takes a deep breath and exhales slowly.

‘Smells nice here,’ he remarks, twisting his arms around one of Hoseok’s legs.

‘Yeah, the air is nice isn’t it?’

Taeh’yung nods against his knee.

They stay like that for while.

‘Buggy, you’re okay with leaving right?’ Hoseok asks, looking down, ‘Feeling better or do you think we should still stay?’

Taeh’yung looks up, eyes large.

His hair had grown out a little, the humidity and wind and sun browning the Zhak’gri’s hair and curling it a little. His skin was tanned more than usual, the copper lines across his skin glittering at random.

‘I am,’ he smiles, breaking the silence that was stretching after Hoseok’s question. ‘Don’t worry
Hobi, I know I’ll get better.’

Hoseok nods to that, though the stories he had heard from Taeh’yung himself as well as Sk’jin were far from reassuring. But Taeh’yung didn’t seem too unwell or weak.

‘You’ll tell us right?’ Hoseok asks again, ‘If anything feels wrong.’

Taeh’yung beams up at him.

‘Of course!’

Yoongi and Jimin return, carrying with them armfuls of washed up and dried out flora. According to Namjoon, while appearing quite barren above the water-level, the sea floors were teeming with vegetation that supported a wide and diverse ecosystem. The flora that washed up were akin to fibrous bark and made for great burning fuel.
Sk’jin tells them a few stories from his past life, stories that seemed too fantastical to seem real but at the same time, with conviction and detail that would be hard to make up. Hoseok even spies Namjoon attempting to fact-check Sk’jin’s stories. Jimin, Jungkook, and Taeh’yung seem to enjoy this the most- but not as much as the GI who crowd around them, listening to Sk’jin’s wild stories.

Sk’jin, who needed no sleep, walks around with the GI, beguiling them with narration that Hoseok is pretty sure were made up on the spot. The few GI who stay with them are, surprisingly, displaying their desire to hear the stories. And Namjoon, with a short laugh, dismisses them.

There’s no delay or awkward pacing as they all but run towards where Sk’jin gathers them all by a rocky alcove, now explaining in full detail how he crawled out of the digestive track of a ruul some 2000 years ago.

Long after everyone yawns out their goodnight’s, Hoseok stares blankly at the night sky above.

His mind is empty, but he can’t find any rest. Physically he knew he had to rest- not that the was exhausted, but sleeping was important. He wasn’t uncomfortable- he’s slept in worse conditions and he still managed to sleep well in those times too. He didn’t feel like he was in immediate danger- no anxiety niggling into his mind, keeping him up and alert.

He stays like this for almost 2 whole hours, attempting to at least physically rest his body by laying like this. But it proves difficult. Exhaling slowly, Hoseok makes his mind up and decides he should maybe find Sk’jin and keep him company. Or maybe he could go inside, check on things. Barely making a sound, Hoseok sits up.

‘Your hand is on fire.’

The fire pit they’re sleeping around is a low and small light- only embers remaining of the crackling fire they had going on some hours ago.

And in this dim light, instead of slumbering forms spread in a semi-circle around the pit, 4 figures are kneeling before the pit.

Hoseok has no weapon immediately on him. The GI were close by though. They even had 2 of them just past Namjoon’s lightly snoring form.

Hoseok has never seen these Beings before. But there’s a strange uncanny familiarity to them despite the fact that Hoseok does not recognize their thick layered clothing or the fact that he can’t even see their faces.

Hoseok tries to move, but realizes he’s somehow paralyzed- unable to do more than move his eyes about and blink. His fingers are stuck over the thin blanket that covered his legs, halfway pushing them off.

‘Your hand is on fire.’ They say again.

Hoseok is nowhere near the no longer aflame fire pit. But at their words, his palms start to heat up- an invisible flame licking over the skin there.

It almost feels wet in its heat.

Realizing he can still speak, though it’s hard, Hoseok asks quietly, ‘Who are you?’

He gets no answer and he also gets no reaction. Not from them, nor from the others around him or the GI. He’s pretty sure the GI would have sensed these intruders- pretty sure Yoongi would have sensed them, even Jungkook. But they’re both asleep, on either side of Jimin to Hoseok’s left.

Taeh’yung is nowhere to be seen.

That’s when it dawns upon Hoseok. He glances back at the 4 kneeling before the fire. He still can’t see their faces- but he sees hands over knees. In this dim lighting, he can make out the shimmer of copper lines. Some hands are incredibly old and gnarled, others more delicate, slender, long.

‘Where’s Taeh’yung?’ Hoseok manages to get out.

‘We can no longer hear him.’ They say. ‘He can no longer hear us. Chooses not to hear us. It’s what he’s always wanted.’

Hoseok tries his best with his limited movement to catch sight of Taeh’yung but the Zhak’ gri is nowhere to be seen.

‘But he’s not scared, is he? No he’s not- he quite likes this I think. Really? Do you think so think so think so think so? It’s because he’s foolish- he knows we cannot continue this way; it’s not right. We cannot go.’

‘Go where?’

‘We cannot go there- they’ll see us, find us, destroy us. We cannot go.’

‘What will?’ Hoseok frowns at the figures, thinking hard, ‘The First Children? Is that what you’re afraid of? Of going to Menigišiti?’

‘It has been many many long lifetimes since the First. The Third should know when to hold their tongue, perhaps they would not have had to perish so young perish so young perish so young perish so young, allowing the Fourth more time to grow. But perhaps your grievances of the Fifth is because of what the Fourth refused to acknowledge by not listening to me. And-’

Hoseok frowns.

Was this...some astral-projection of a family argument?

‘Excuse me,’ Hoseok mumbles out, ‘But uh- I’d kinda like to leave.’

The figures turn their covered heads towards Hoseok and-

Hoseok is not a believer of the supernatural. He’s not afraid of “ghosts” or “echoes”- there were more frightening real things around the Universe. But he’s filled with a sense of terror at the sight of the heavily robbed figures. There’s a glaring blurriness to their forms, but the edges of their silhouettes seem to move constantly- almost like the surface of a body of water when it’s disturbed. If he wasn’t already frozen in place, he’d be paralyzed with a strange primal fear.

Because he can’t explain what he’s seeing before him and there is not explanation for it.

‘Your hand is on fire.’

Hoseok could roll his eyes. And he does.

‘You will be touched and stained by more than just fire. This is no easy feat- no easy step or idea you wish to fulfil- the others will be touched by more than fire. You will enter this place, and something more than fire will be waiting for you. Do you wish to be that sacrifice? Do you wish for the others to be that sacrifice? Isn’t that what she said to you that day your memory goes back to goes back to goes back to goes back to?'

Heart in his throat, the smell of smoke, burning fat, sweat, incense clogs his nose and throat and his sight warps-

‘Get out of his head- I’m here.’

Another figure appears, materializing through what Hoseok can now tell is a wall of water. But that didn’t make sense. Hoseok was very much in bed-

‘You would not speak. The Fifth has a responsibility to this responsibility to this responsibility to this-‘

Water pours around them, shadows warp alarmingly and Hoseok realizes he’s very much indeed chest-deep in water. But that didn’t make sense? He doesn’t remember falling asleep- but he doesn’t quite pinpoint the moment he was truly awake either.

‘And that is why I’m going, haven’t I already said I would not do what any of you did? Leave us alone, stop interfering.’

A force is wrapped around him- like an elastic pushing through and Hoseok struggles- he wasn’t paralyzed mid-sleep; he was weighed down by the sea around him.

‘Do not stray from our path- you know we are only left because we were allowed to. We only watch, we only see- nothing more.’

A hand reaches for him and Hoseok gasps, breaking the surface of the water, air flooding into his lungs, burning his chest.

‘Then why don’t you do that and leave us alone?’

Taeh’yung is there, looking solemn and apologetic.

Spitting water out of his mouth and coughing a little, Hoseok realizes they’re quite far out of the shore.

‘I would make us steps, but I can’t right now,’ Taeh’yung tells him.

‘What did they mean you’re only here to watch?’ Hoseok asks instead, realizing that he had been mislead. He had been asleep- he had fallen asleep. But somehow he’d been redirected in his sleep.

Taeh’yung’s eyes are gleaming in the dark, rings of green that reflect briefly in the moving water around them. There’s a seriousness, a gravity to him that was somehow incredibly jarring to behold.

‘Tae?’

Taeh’yung blinks, looking like he’s been shaken from his thoughts.

‘I’m sorry they dragged you into this,’ Taeh’yung sighs, swimming over, hands paddling before him. ‘After Camil poisoned me, it was like I was disconnected from them.’

‘Them? Are they…are they like your ancestors?’ Hoseok reaches over to take Taeh’yung’s arm in his own, kicking his legs to allow them to float a little.

‘Hm,’ Taeh’yung nods thoughtfully, twisting around to float on his back. ‘I’m the Fifth.’
‘So I’ve heard,’ Hoseok also floats alongside the Zhak’gri.

‘According to them, we’re supposed to…supposed to just observe. I think fear of what Yisheng did in the beginning, the persecution and execution- it’s molded their fear, forcing themselves to live a life only of observation,’ Taeh’yung says leisurely, allowing Hoseok to pull him slowly towards the shore, feet kicking a little to keep balance in the sea. ‘The Khol’isa- they no longer remember what it was that drove the Bloodmoon. Most Yishengs do not remember the nightmare they used to live through in their sleep. Many of us no longer exist or are lost- and it’s out of fear.’

‘What are you afraid of?’

Taeh’yung turns his head, dipping a little into the water.

‘Oh, I’m not afraid,’ he grins, ‘I don’t want to be afraid like them anymore.’

‘That’s good?’

Taeh’yung laughs as he says, ‘It’s because we’re all here right now, out of fear. The Universe exists in fear- we always have. How could we not when we were born out of fear?’

Hoseok can see what Taeh’yung is saying, but he also strongly suspects that there’s more to his words.

‘And I don’t want that anymore. Especially not for all those babies out there- they don’t deserve to live with that fear,’ Taeh’yung looks back up at the sky. ‘I want to do something they have never done before.’

‘So…no more blowing up moons?’

Taeh’yung laughs, wiggling around in the water as though it were quite solid and squirms up to Hoseok, wet hair as dark as the sea water. For a fraction of a second, Taeh’yung encompasses the seas and starry sky above him, moving with them- or at least, they move with him.

‘Only if it’s necessary.’

Hoseok can accept that.

‘Why did they come after me?’ Hoseok asks instead.

‘Probably because you care the most,’ Taeh’yung chirps, now using Hoseok as buoy and making himself comfortable. It’s not physically taxing as the water naturally leads them towards the shoreline, Hoseok is barely kicking his feet.

‘Oh?’ Hoseok frowns in thought.

‘Also because you’re probably the most sane out of all of us.’

Hoseok splashes the Zhak’gri.

‘Namjoon and Jimin would resent that.’

‘So don’t tell them,’ Taeh’yung grins, eyes gleaming almost hypnotically.

‘You’re okay right?’ Hoseok asks again, feeling worry for the Zhak’gri. ‘You’re sure?’

Taeh’yung just grins before leaning forward to kiss him sloppily.
'This is why they came for you- you care the most.'

'Buggy…' Hoseok begins. He’s not sure how to even ask the question- if there even was a question he could formulate.

'It’s okay Hobi,' Taeh’yung flaps his hands over the surface of the water unhelpfully. ‘I’ve got it under control.’

Hoseok pats his wet head a few times before saying, ‘You don’t have to prove yourself to anyone or anything.’

Taeh’yung blinks in surprise up at him from where he’s propped his head up on Hoseok’s chest.

‘Who you are right now, how you’re here, where you are- that’s enough.’ Hoseok tells him quietly, ‘If you want to do more, be more- that’s up to you too. But…but trying to do something, just to prove something in the face of an antiquated belief that shaped a past memory-‘ shadows stir beneath them, shadows connecting past and around them from the depths of the water up to the skies and stars above, ‘-it won’t recognize the changes you have lived. It won’t see the truth of what you know now.’

Taeh’yung doesn’t say anything, the shadows swaying slowly around them. Instead he takes Hoseok’s hand, misbalancing their movement over the water and they both dip below the water surface. But Hoseok isn’t scared or shocked when they’re submerged.

The shadows around them glow a faint green, pulsing in time with what Hoseok guesses is Taeh’yung’s heartbeat.

Taeh’yung takes both of his hands, his hands cooler than the water around them.

It’s peacefully quiet down here.

‘I won’t,’ Taeh’yung says, though Hoseok doesn’t understand how he’s able to hear the Zhak’gri. ‘I won’t just stand by and watch anymore. I won’t let it burn us, won’t let it burn you.’

Hoseok’s grip involuntarily tightens in Taeh’yung’s.

‘I won’t just stand by anymore,’ Taeh’yung grins, ‘Not when I have all of you with me.’

When they break the surface of the water, the sky has lightened, and Hoseok feels a sense of being reborn.

*

The next city is completely destroyed. It’s evidently not recent. The explosion that erupted here must have been devastating, seeing as a massive crater now lay at the very center.

Hoseok didn’t fly them too high up, maintaining a decent distance. He can spot Yoongi, Jungkook, and the other GI below, small dots moving to and fro wild and deadened growth. Landing them in the city below is a little tricky- landing right at the center of the crater felt too exposing, not to mention strategically not ideal. He’s able to find a somewhat decent stretch of space not too crowded with jutting and broken rocks and structures, much bigger and elaborate than Keldana. They were now in what remained of one of the bigger cities in Megibīya named Saṃkrāna. There’s a massive growth and decay of wild-life here, covering the desolate city in another layer of melancholy and loss.

‘Yyna, take over the cockpit,’ Hoseok orders once they’re stabilized, ‘Watch the scanners.’

‘Understood,’ the Megibīyan replies.

Hoseok quickly makes his way down to the Medical Bay where they were running their samples. So far, every single sample Yoongi and Team B brought in were from Megibīyan sources.

‘Anything on the scanners?’ Sk’jin asks.

‘Nothing,’ Hoseok responds back at once as he steps closer to the slim window of the Medical Bay. ‘But we’re close to finishing the geoscans. And I’m watching over all of the samples we collected- from the city, as well as the pyres. What about you guys?’

‘Nothing yet. But it’s what we expected. We might be here for quite a while.’

‘Well- we’re still on track, right?’ Yoongi asks.

‘For fuck’s sake, yes,’ Sk’jin sighs, ‘Can you stop repeating Namjoon.’

There’s a snort from Yoongi’s side.

‘There’s…there’s something interesting here,’ Taeh’yung comments, a small frown appearing between his brows as he pokes his head into the Bay. ‘Can I go down and check?’

‘Go ahead,’ Hoseok nods, ‘Just be careful.’

‘I can come pick you up?’ Jungkook offers.

‘It’s okay Kookie!’ Taeh’yung coos, ‘I need to set up an environment where I’m not distracted by your handsome face!’

‘Taeh’yung.’

‘I’m complimenting him!’ Taeh’yung whines, briskly walking out of the Medical Bay.

On one of the Medical Beds was one of the GI corpses Jungkook and Taeh’yung brought in with them. Every single test they ran over it proved the GI to be Megibīyan. So now the pyres, the bodies, the obvious signs of survivors, the signs of struggle; they were all starting to fit in together.

The last of the samples are completed and everything comes out as they had anticipated, albeit regretfully.

‘All the samples are Megibīyan,’ Hoseok sends over the results to Namjoon’s screen. ‘Including the GI. The Heliord has no issue date or manufacturing stamp- but none of the Heliords on board this ship have them either.’

‘How about running an ion-sample on the metal?’

‘I did,’ Hoseok replies, ‘And it’s the same as the ones on board the ship.’
‘So it’s the same batch?’

‘Yeah,’ Hoseok pulls down the mounted screen attached to the Bay’s wall. He logs all of the records on a separate archive Namjoon had built for them, the main storage based with Lisai on the Laikin still stored in one of the Hangars. Then he deletes the readings, has the samples disposed of in the biohazard chamber.

‘Head Pilot Hoseok, the geoscans are ready,’ Yyna reports to him.

‘Thanks Yyna, send them to everyone’s screens please,’ Hoseok accesses the main drive on the Medical Bay screen and waits for the upload to complete.

‘Well, it’s certainly very different from what we have on “Bhumi” from the GLA,’ Sk’jin remarks, ‘Damn, is that a crater?’

The planet projection is incredibly rough and incredibly different from the somewhat smooth and evenly distributed map they had. Each sides of the planet not in the habitable Crescent appear terribly ravaged, and to one side, an unnervingly large and deep crater, like some deep ocean trench. The canyon range they had gone through earlier rings around the Crescent like a protective shield from the sun-lands, and to the other side, mountains and peaks spread like frost. There are areas of water, but small, and concentrating mainly in or around the borders of the crescent. Jimin had told them he had “landed” in the night-lands when he had come here; they had followed the irrigation system, pulling water from deep within frozen lakes, to supply into the Crescent. Yoongi had followed up saying that they had all been under the impression that what was happening was being watched and orchestrated by the GLA; they had landed somewhat safely, though their ship was taken down as a result of engine failure when entering the oddly polluted atmosphere.

‘I think that’s where the Red Evil shot down on the planet,’ Yoongi chimes in, ‘Based on simulations of what happened to Earth, and many other planets and moons, it looks the same.’

‘Then how is Megibīya still here?’

‘Because I arrived,’ Jimin replies, ‘They couldn’t afford to destroy the planet just yet. Then they continued to use Megibīya as a base long after until…until those who managed to escape returned. This would later alert the GLA, and that’s when Ndica, alongside Amme, arrived here to investigate what remained of the planet.’

‘I’m going to realign the markings you guys made on what we had and overlay it with the geoscans,’ Hoseok tells them, pulling up their previous maps. He quickly studies it, frowning as he notes how much geographic changes had occurred- not all of them natural either, seeing as craters even larger than the ones in Sarthkrama were spread out around the Crescent.

‘This is where I landed,’ Yoongi says, a spot illuminating some 300 kilostreams from their location, ‘This is where we believed we would be able to access the broadcasting signal to reach the GLA.’

‘So I’m guessing this area here, is Udāvana?’ Hoseok pronounces carefully.

‘Yes,’ Jimin replies, ‘If we’re able to find the remains of any GLA archives, it would be there. That is, if they have not been harmed.’

‘Yoongi, Jungkook, if you guys are done with searching the area, let’s move forward,’ Hoseok suggests, ‘I think we should head for Udāvana- we might get something more- it’s also not very damaged compared to the map we have from the GLA Jimin corrected.’
‘Hobi-um, can you give me some more time please?’ Taeh’yung asks suddenly.

‘What is it?’ Hoseok asks at once, swiping between tabs to pull up Taeh’yung’s location. He was either an incredibly fast runner or he was on a HoverPort/equivalent. Because he’s quite far from the ship, in a different direction from where Yoongi, Jungkook, and the GI teams were combing through the debris.

‘Um- I’m not quite sure yet- it’s been a bit difficult, but I think I can…hear something.’

‘Hear?’ Hoseok frowns, quickly sending the geoscans to Lisai for storage before grabbing his screen and exiting the Medical Bay. ‘What are you hearing?’

‘Dreams.’

Hoseok quickly pulls up the feed from Taeh’yung’s Iris. He’s walking through a dense wooded region that had spilt out of the surrounding forests with smaller and shorter trees. But the trees are all dead, fragile branches barely holding up to trunks. There’s an area that looks suspiciously crashed through, and even from here, Hoseok can pinpoint the form of a transporter wing.

‘Yoongi, double back to Taeh’yung’s position,’ Hoseok orders at once, ‘He’s found a transporter.’

‘On my way.’

‘Buggy, just stay put for a while yeah?’

‘Okay!’

‘Kookie, could you come get me?’

‘On my way!’

‘That’s not a Yisheng grade transporter,’ Sk’jin comments, ‘Looks like every other nondescript transporter a pirate would use.’

Hoseok hurries out of the Lobby and downwards to the Hangars.

‘It’s what I thought too,’ Hoseok replies, sliding down the rails of the stairs and landing firmly on his feet before jogging ahead to the Hangar doorways. ‘Yoongi, you almost there?’

‘Almost.’

Jungkook slows down before the Hangar doorway just as Hoseok exits. His visor is up, not liking how it was when his helmet was fully enclosed. Hoseok quickly hops on, balancing himself before tapping Jungkook once on the shoulder.

It’s quite the distance, and though there’s nothing to indicate any recent changes in the ruins, Hoseok isn’t surprised that Taeh’yung would have found something amidst the monotony of destruction that remained of what was clearly a once beautiful planet.

The woods are more like fallen forest brambles, layered over each other after centuries of growth and decay. The same stale odour permeates the air here too.

Jungkook stops where Yoongi’s parked his HoverPort. Past the brambles and fallen trees, Hoseok can make out both Taeh’yung and Yoongi.

‘Kookie- circle around the area, if the wing is here, the other parts of the transporter should be around too.’

Jungkook nods, his visor still up. There’s an unnerving edge to Jungkook like this, dressed in complete GI gear, the bleeding red of the skin around his eyes stark against his pale skin and dark helmet.

‘Hobi!’ Taeh’yung waves both arms as if Hoseok couldn’t see them. ‘Here!’

Hoseok makes his way over what was a thin layer of dirt, covering the face of a vast building. Great rooks twist and break through windows, their flaking barks shedding a thick layer of dust everywhere.

The wing is large and crashed through a few trees, partially buried into the side of the building.

‘I think we should head that way,’ Yoongi says, pushing his visor up, ‘Judging by the damages to the trees around here- it’s crashed from this general direction.’

Taeh’yung nimbly jumps over roots and fallen tree trunks, leading the way ahead. He exclaims every now and then, pointing at eroded shrapnel and plating.

‘Here!’ Jungkook calls from ahead, sounding like he was somehow underground. They quicken their pace, passing through a part of the forest shaved off almost, with some great force. Trees were in disarray, their destruction like some arrow, pointing downwards until they come across a gaping hole, spread over two fallen buildings forming a trench where the rest of their mystery transporter lay, half buried in deadened vegetation and stone.

Standing on a collapsed staircase is Jungkook opposite them, holding one arm up and the other pointing downwards.

‘It’s the ship!’ he grins, looking pleased with himself as he pushes the helmet off of his head.

Taeh’yung gasps, immediately jumping down before either Yoongi or Hoseok can stop him. There’s a spluttering flicker of green, and Taeh’yung more or less drops the entire height of the Yisheng ship, exclaiming loudly in comical pain.

‘Idiot,’ Yoongi huffs worriedly, ‘You can’t do shit like that anymore.’

‘Sorry?’ Taeh’yung wails while Jungkook scales down the trench with envious ease, reaching Taeh’yung to check on him worriedly, grumbling in a scolding manner. ‘I got excited! It’s louder here now!’

The shadows around him flicker visibly, as though agitated.

‘I got the cable,’ Yoongi sighs, ‘It’s like babysitting teenagers.’ He adds, grumbling.

They secure a cable around a stone pillar, sliding down easily just as Jungkook calls out, ‘I found an opening!’ followed by a crashing sound.

‘Found or made?’ Yoongi sighs, sounding genuinely tired. Hoseok quickly studies the Human, noticing that his dark circles were back, eyes glazed a little as though he were running a fever. His lips are pale and chapped.

‘Are you hydrated enough?’ Hoseok asks, stopping Yoongi from following after Jungkook’s impromptu opening in the ship that Taeh’yung quickly dove into.
‘Yeah it’s just-’ Yoongi grimaces, ‘It feels strange.’

‘Being back here?’

Yoongi nods.

‘It’s kinda…it’s like remembering details of a dream you can’t quite remember clearly.’

‘If you need to go back, you should,’ Hoseok says firmly, ‘We’ve got this covered.’

‘I know,’ Yoongi nods, ‘I won’t do anything to push myself.’

Hoseok trusts that Yoongi would know when to stop himself- or say something.

He studies the ship buried in rubble and debris, some small roots twisting over the exposed areas.

‘It’s been here maybe a sol or two,’ Yoongi observes, ‘Hopefully, we can still access the Navigation Table.’

There’s a sudden sharp and piercing pitchy sound erupting in their Comm Devices, making both Hoseok and Yoongi wince, hands going up to the sides of their heads respectively.

‘What the fuck-?’

‘We’re here,’ Sk’jin suddenly says, his audio is filled with crackling white noise. ‘Spaces, fuck.’

‘Is it-?’ Hoseok and Yoongi share wide eyed looks.

‘Yes,’ Namjoon sounds awed even in static, ‘Shit, okay- okay, so far we’re on track-‘

‘Don’t fucking finish that sentence. Hobi, we’re-…fuck, I fucking-…Hoseok! We’re gonna be busy for a while!’ the line crackles sharply before fading in a way that would be worrisome if they hadn’t been anticipating it.

‘Got it- good luck,’ Hoseok shares a worried look with Yoongi who presses his lips together in a thin line.

Just as they predicted, their communication instantly drops, the lines cutting off abruptly.

Yoongi looks like he wants to say something, but he stops himself. Instead he exhales briefly before nodding towards the ship.

Inside the damage is quite extensive but contained. The transporter was strong- not just some easily obtained customized and easily disposable pirate-made one. It’s also quite big, which makes Hoseok guess that it might be a cargo-freighter instead of a transporter. It explained the wider spaces inside as well.

‘Doesn’t seem to have been disturbed much,’ Yoongi points out, ‘I don’t think anyone outside of us have been in here.’

It’s crashed at an angle, so Hoseok has to climb upwards to the cockpit.

‘If that’s the case-’ Hoseok begins, struggling a little to push open the doorway to the cockpit. ‘-then…yeah. Fuck.’

Still seated on their seats, two corpses are perfectly preserved. Yoongi is quick to activate the lamps on his helmet, illuminating the place. The entire front of the cockpit has sustained immense damage- the two main front-seats for the captain and co-pilot or Navigator have been entirely crushed. But the two behind them are not too badly damaged. Hoseok steps forward to see if there’s anyway they can directly access the cockpit’s main controls but it’s far too damaged to try.

‘You think we can access the Navigation Table from here?’ Hoseok nods at the two seats where the corpses were still attached. Yoongi was carefully pushing them forward, checking gingerly on their backs.

‘Pirates,’ Yoongi observes, ‘Both of them.’

‘According to the GLA, pirates did sometimes come by here,’ Hoseok ruminates, ‘But I mean, who knows. I’ll try and access the Table, or their systems from here.’

‘Okay- I’ll check on the rest of the ship; see what Taeh’yung’s found,’ Yoongi nods, reaching up to pop out his headlamp and handing it to Hoseok.

‘You’ll be fine?’

Yoongi doesn’t answer, simply slides down his visor shut.

‘I mean, you don’t have to be dramatic about it-‘

‘HOBI!’ Taeh’yung roars, a flash of green spreads around them, strange indents forming along the metal in asymmetrical triangles. ‘YOONGI OH SPACES!’

They slide most of the way down, angling their bodies to maintain balance. The transporter is longer than they had guessed too, further cementing that this was some form of freighter.

Jungkook pokes his head out when they break their slide on a heavily littered and very recently broken through wall. Hoseok absentmindedly thinks that Jungkook’s strength had nowhere to go except up and he’s happy they were the ones who found him. The Vicitra’s expression is a combination of shocked, awed, and confused.

‘Tae’s found something,’ he tells them quickly, ‘And um-‘

They quickly follow him, bumping and sliding stiffly while Jungkook maintained perfect balance on the tilted floors and walls before literally diving downwards into what must have been a vent-shaft opening.

‘Why are they all jumping-‘ Hoseok grumbles but Yoongi keeps quiet, instead sliding down to the floor and slipping in rather than jumping in. Hoseok mimics him, pausing a few seconds before following him through the vent shaft.

It slides down before abruptly opening up into what must be the interior of a Megibīyan building.
The floors and walls are tilted too- but in a way where they’re able to walk though it’s mainly on crushed windows and furniture piled up in chaos. Hoseok can see how the transporter broke through the fallen buildings and debris, the lower half of the ship crushed and yawning wide open, jutting through the stone wall.

They’re in some wide space, broken stone pillars holding up each individual floor aging and cracked. The carvings on the stones are beautiful, repeating patterns forming shapes that felt organic despite how geometrically accurate each cut line was. Yoongi is a little ahead of him, head slowly moving around, looking over every detail carefully. How did Taeh’yung know to come down here?
‘Here!’ Jungkook waves at them from close to the end of this wide space.

There’s a definite hollow sound to the place, Hoseok imagines there are several floors buried beneath them- a whole city crushed. What once were houses and homes now underground tunnels and caves.

Quickly, Yoongi and Hoseok make their way ahead, eyes wide and alert in this still darkness.

There’s a faint green light- characteristic of Taeh’yung in the dark, though much fainter than normal, and they’re able to make their way over quickly.

‘What is it?’ Hoseok demands once they’re not in yelling distance. But the moment they’re in not yelling distance, Hoseok’s eyes are able to adjust to the darkness around Taeh’yung, and sees very familiar outlines.

‘-those are…’ Hoseok falters, eyes widening. Almost instantly, Yoongi’s headlamp brightens, and Jungkook also follows, as though remembering he had that on him.

‘Yeah,’ Yoongi exhales out, eyes wide, ‘Eggs.’

Around 8 or so of the OrTanks they had found Jimin in are scattered onto the debris across the walls at this end. They clearly fell out of the ship when they crashed.

‘Shit- shit are they alive?’ Yoongi asks quickly, making his way to the closest OrTank, hands hovering in an unsure manner.

‘Um, yeah- but not all,’ Taeh’yung says in a small voice. There’s a flicker of shadows around him, one that everyone notices but no one says a thing. ‘3 of them are dead.’

Not all of the OrTanks contain a fully grown Being. And that’s what makes it more unsettling. Here, buried deep in the dark, growing and asleep away from thought or time. But not away from death.

‘We’ll need to take them back,’ Yoongi is saying, but Hoseok is piecing things together.

‘This is like Khonen,’ he tells them, ‘Khonen bringing in the eggs. Even possibly like Camil, considering where we are.’

Yoongi turns to look at him, ‘You think the Omhlophe have been here then?’

‘It’s likely, but I don’t think directly. Just pirates doing runs for money- but I think…I think it’s more likely that they were supposed to be here for a delivery.’ Hoseok looks around the place, ‘And they crashed.’

Hoseok looks at the eggs, feeling a sense of sorrow building in him. When he had been taken by the Omhlophe, he had, in his anxiety and worry, regarded the eggs he had been placed with as strange and alien. But now, the desire to bring them to a home builds stronger.

‘Is this where I was born?’ Jungkook asks. He doesn’t sound sad or disgusted. Instead he’s just curious. ‘Me, and my siblings, and anu?’

‘My babies,’ Taeh’yung smiles up at the Vicitra.

‘Not the exact same like me though, right?’ Jungkook asks, looking at the 2 fully grown Beings inside the OrTanks. ‘Do I have to fight them?’
‘No,’ Yoongi says quickly, ‘None of them are Vicitra, or any Being from Pravasi H’manun. It’s okay Kook.’

‘Okay- is this all of them?’ Hoseok directs the question to Taeh’yung who shakes his head.

‘Only them here, dreaming and singing.’ He replies, gently brushing his hand over the surface of the OrTank, he grins suddenly adding, ‘I think they’re happy we’re here.’

‘Yeah?’ Yoongi smiles at the Zhak’gri.

‘They’re not alone anymore.’

Hoseok squats down, wondering how they’re going to take the eggs out when Yoongi says quietly, more to himself than anything else.

‘We’re found.’

Chapter End Notes

(Author’s Notes)
This was not supposed to be this late an update
I’ve rewritten these up coming chapter 5 times and worked very hard on it because this is the chapter that bookmarks the final leg of this au! I think we have about 20 chapters, give or take a few, until ADEGU is completed.
I also want to thank the people who are still reading this! It means a lot to me!!
And if anyone’s confused, the chapter is kinda divided into two timelines, you’ll see
why!
Btw does anyone else get headaches before its gonna rain or when the humidity is up?
I think it has to do with atmospheric uhh air pressure, and I always get headaches before it rains and my lowerback starts aching though I still Don’t know
If that’s because of my old injury
Or my terrible posture
Or both
Lowerback pain people in the house can I get a high-five
Hoseok doesn’t mean to, but he accidentally spies in on Jimin.

He’d meant to collect the “special jars of tea” Sk’jin had made, a glint in his neon-red eyes that suggested there were many reasons why this tea was “special”. So Hoseok had made his way towards the Kitchens, and close by, standing by one of the Lobby recliners was Jimin.

Of course it wasn’t odd to be inside the ship; Jimin could be here for a number of reasons. But he’s not sure what to think of Jimin quietly conversing, a NaviLet in his hands, with a projection above it. Hoseok cannot hear him over on the main communications line. He could be conversing privately to any one of them, but somehow, Hoseok knows he’s not.

‘-nderstand. I know this is not ideal. But I know what I’m talking about. I cannot ask you to trust me, but please trust that I want this to end.’

He must have sensed Hoseok because he turns around, eyes immediately finding him. Hoseok feels slightly awkward and misplaced.

Jimin doesn’t seem upset- nor does he seem guilty. Instead he looks strangely tired.

Out of everyone here, even Sk’jin and Yoongi who were improving so much by being here, Jimin seemed to be the only one somehow diminishing.

He says something quietly, NaviLet dimming and projection collapsing immediately. He gives Hoseok a small smile that’s honestly just weary more than anything else.

‘What’s wrong?’ Hoseok asks.

‘I was looking for something,’ Jimin tells him- Hoseok can’t tell if he’s lying or not. ‘But I can’t find it.’
‘Can I help?’
‘It’s…I’m not sure how the security footage system works here,’ Jimin tells him honestly, ‘Do surveillance footage get replaced or discarded?’

‘No,’ Hoseok frowns, glancing up around them to look at the cameras placed about the Lobby. ‘They’re compressed and archived with the rest of the logs. If you’re having problems with it, maybe Namjoon can look into them for you?’

‘He’s already tried, but he’s unable to find any footage from the day before he returned to us at Cuab-D2.’

Now that was perplexing.

‘Uh- maybe because the GI didn’t want to leave any tracks of their activity? This is a Yisheng ship- if they were compromised, surveillance footage would be incredibly incriminating.’

‘It would be,’ Jimin nods.

‘Is something the matter?’ Hoseok asks again.

Jimin doesn’t immediately respond. Instead he pauses, hesitant and a little uncomfortable, which is a little odd seeing as Jimin always carried himself with assurance and confidence. He spoke with clarity and authority, no stammer or hesitance. But like this, he seems almost apprehensive.

‘What is it?’

‘When you found out about your father’s betrayal,’ Jimin begins tentatively, ‘How…how did you well, come to accept it.’

Hoseok understands Jimin’s hesitance.

But he has an inkling as to why he would be asking him this too.

‘I think you’ve accepted it already,’ he answers.

Jimin’s expression doesn’t change.

‘I think, more than anything, despite being shown the truth, and being told the truth, I desperately clung to the truth I believed in,’ Hoseok tells him honestly. ‘He was my father- the Being who raised me along with my mother. I loved him. He was the one who guided me through my training, telling me to always remember that regardless of what actions were taken, what words were being said and spoken, that every single Being in this Universe, held a belief unique to themselves; shaped by those around them, shaped by what they’ve seen, shaped by what they want to believe in, and by what they need to believe in.’

Jimin lowers his head at that.

‘And because of this, we cannot truly know who anyone is. We cannot always understand what they do, why they do it, and how they do it,’ Hoseok shrugs, ‘And I always thought, how ironic, how hypocritical it was of him to have told me that; to raise me like that.’

‘But?’
‘But it proved what he was saying,’ Hoseok leans against the wall, crossing his arms over his chest, hands forming fists.

‘So what do you then? After accepting that?’

‘You accept that your truths, your beliefs, are not going to be the same as everyone else’s,’ Hoseok says bluntly.

Jimin doesn’t even blink, staring down at the floor, clearly deep in thought.

‘And there’s no way in knowing if your truth is the correct one,’ Hoseok shrugs, his palms warm, ‘But there are things bigger than your truths, bigger than your beliefs- bigger than what is easier.’

Jimin nods to that, giving him a small smile and saying, ‘Thank you.’

‘Should I be worried about who you’ve called?’

Jimin just smiles at him, shaking his head.

‘I will explain soon- before we leave.’ He tells him, ‘I...- Hoseok, you know that you’re incredibly brave right?’

Hoseok can’t control the laugh he lets out. But Jimin doesn’t seem offended, he’s smiling too.

‘I don’t think most Beings considered what I did as being brave.’

‘No,’ Jimin shakes his head, ‘I’m not talking about your actions, or what you had to do.’

‘Okay?’

Jimin just grins, shaking his head again.

‘Hoseok! It shouldn’t be taking this long to get the tea!’ Sk’jin snaps over on his Comm Device.

‘I’ll get it!’ Jimin chirps, quickly sprinting past Hoseok towards the Kitchens.

‘I knew I could only trust you Jimin,’ Sk’jin responds.

‘Could’ve sworn you said you would only trust Jimin as far as you could throw him-’ Namjoon begins but never finishes his sentence. Jimin is laughing, grabbing the jugs with an amused smile on his face.

Hoseok glances down at the NaviLet Jimin had left behind. It’s still activated, he can make out the log of the call he had, the map he had projected on. It’s familiar as well, and Hoseok could easily reach down and check for himself.

Instead he turns around, going to the Kitchens and collects extra cups.

It’s not the only time he does accidentally walk in on Jimin randomly doing things by himself. Not that he wasn’t allowed of course. But it was still somehow odd. And Jimin never looked guilty but there was always an air of secrecy. One that Jimin did not invite inquiry to be directed at him.

Hoseok catches Jimin speaking to Dehin; but Dehin isn’t quite speaking like his GI self, rather he’s clutching his head, body stiff.

Hoseok catches sight of Jimin with the GI like this several times. But it’s not always the same as with Dehin, or even Yyna, Nineti, Amad’la, Amic, and a few others. Some of the GI don’t seem remotely affected by what Jimin was doing. Later, he finds Jimin talking to Yoongi, the Human listening and nodding, a serious look on his face. They both spot him at the same time, and not wanting to look like he purposefully spied on them, Hoseok just smiles and walks away.

*

When they bring in the last of the OrTanks inside the ship, Hoseok senses a change in the air.

‘Storm is pulling in,’ Yoongi remarks from above him on the Hangar ramp, gaze directed upwards. Almost immediately, they hear the rumble of thunder, a flash of light breaking through the sky. Hoseok notes how Yoongi’s hair seems to rise up into the air filled with static.

‘Humidity has been pretty low though,’ he continues, ‘We might not actually get any rain- just electric storm.’

‘I think we continue on the ship then, being out in an electric storm with HoverPorts could be dangerous,’ Hoseok ruminates.

‘The trees could act as finials,’ Yoongi gestures to the forest before adding, ‘Anything from Sk’jin?’

Hoseok shakes his head.

‘We’ll continue on HoverPorts,’ Yoongi sighs out, ‘I’ll meet you there- so far everything is going along as planned.’

‘Does that make you uncomfortable?’

‘No,’ Yoongi pushes his visor down, his tone harsh but not directed at Hoseok. ‘Just afraid.’

‘Why?’

‘Because I don’t think any of us predicted that there could have been survivors here.’

Yoongi, Jungkook, and the GI teams on the grounds lead ahead. Hoseok brings in the ship, following slowly. This time, they’re flying over clear indications of settlement and towns, all of which are decimated and ruined- most places just stretches of rubble and dust.

About halfway, the storm arrives over them. There’s no rain, but the wind is harsh. Yoongi guides the others through the edges of the forest, where the trees shield them somewhat. Lightning branches out, lasting long and creating sparks all over their windows, occasionally causing glitches in their HUDs.

‘I’ve set the babies up safely!’ Taeh’yung tells him happily. ‘I’m gonna play them some music! Do you have any suggestions?’

‘Uh- I heard that the wind-tunnel music from southern Kl’ang tribes are supposed to be really helpful?’ Hoseok replies. ‘Someone suggested it to me, for nightmares and things.’
‘Did it work?’

‘Never got around to trying,’ Hoseok laughs, ‘Pull it up, maybe it’ll work for the babies.’

‘Okay!’

Hoseok glances at the isotope trackers. The positions of the gold, blue, and pink dots change all of the screen, but it’s in a consistent pattern. It’s exactly like what Jimin said would happen, so Hoseok tells himself not to worry; or give into the urge to send a rescue party.

‘Storm is changing from projected path,’ Yyna reports to him as another GI adds, ‘Head Pilot
Hoseok, detecting spike in atmospheric electric charges.’

‘All right, let’s reroute,’ Hoseok nods at Yyna, ‘Keep us on track for Udāvana, but let’s avoid any unnecessary situations that might cause difficulty.’

‘Understood,’ the GI respond from their stations.

‘We’ve found what appears to be a road,’ Yoongi reports, ‘I think these were used to travel through the towns, connect the cities through the forests- several go underground.’

‘According to the scans, there are no signs of collapse.’ Jungkook adds. ‘I’ll use the Blueprint to map our way?’

‘Yeah, that’s a good idea Kookie, send it straight to Lisai.’

‘We’re gonna take it to duck from the storm.’ Yoongi tells him.

Almost on queue, lightning breaks bright, thunder erupting loudly.

‘Be careful,’ Hoseok warns.

Far below, he watches as Yoongi heads the teams and they disappear from the edge of the forest, slipping under juts of rocks just as the clouds intensify, reducing visibility. Hoseok doesn’t want to take them too low, directly under the storm, neither does he want to take them above because that’d be too high. He maintains them somewhat just slightly above the main storm.

It would take them almost an hour at this speed to reach Udāvana according to the new adjustments made on the map. His screen makes a small beeping sound, signaling Jungkook’s transmission.

It’s quite an elaborate network of underground tunnels, roads, and bridges. Like a network of veins, the Blueprint maps out a clear path ahead.

‘Signs of struggle here too,’ Yoongi reports.

Hoseok quickly switches his active viewing tab to Yoongi’s Iris. They’re moving incredibly fast, but Hoseok is quick to scrub through the feed, grabbing stills to pull up and project them overhead.
There are no bodies here, but the telltale signs of struggle, battles, and destruction are evident.

They were moving through a stretch of time that was undocumented, hidden, and forgotten.
Everything almost felt fake- like this was some form of simulation for a particularly terrible training session.

Hoseok checks again on the other’s location- it was still glitching all over the place, but the isotopes were still alight. He really hopes it works.
‘Hobi! I’m done! The music did help!’

‘Yeah?’

‘I think it’s calming them down, they say thank you!’

‘You can…hear them?’ Hoseok frowns, but then remembers how Taeh’yung had been able to speak to Jimin inside his OrTank. But then again, Jimin wasn’t quite like the eggs or the New Borns.

‘A little bit, it’s unclear, but feeling don’t need words!’

‘I guess so,’ Hoseok agrees, ‘Why don’t you come back up and we’ll-’

‘-fuck!’

There’s a worrying exploding sound, curses from Yoongi and yelling from Jungkook.

Hoseok turns his attention back to Yoongi’s Iris, momentarily relieved to find that he’s still on his HoverPort, no damages sustained to his being in his readings.

‘What’s wrong-’

‘There was a mine,’ Yoongi hisses.

‘Anyone hurt?’

‘No- but one of our HoverPorts is inoperable,’ Yoongi reports, getting off of his HoverPort. ‘I think this place was rigged. It might be a security measure.’

‘Or an alarm system,’ Jungkook adds.

‘I’m not detecting additional signs of life other than the teams,’ Hoseok reports back immediately.

Yoongi exhales noisily, clearly not liking how despite how things were going according to plan, this new revelation regarding clear evidence of survivors was heavily implying the reality of their biggest fears.

Of Jimin’s biggest fears.

‘It smells like…like sulfur,’ Jungkook says slowly.

‘That’s old,’ Hoseok remarks, ‘If they’re using sulfur-based explosives, it’s at best just small detonations. Loud, effective as an alarm and deterrent.’

‘I’ll reverse our isotope-tracker to pick up on sulfur. Depending on how old they are, they probably can no longer retain a spark. We’ll be able to detect each mine going ahead.’ Yoongi mumbles, inhaling deeply as though to ground himself.

‘Okay- but single file, slow,’ Hoseok warns.

‘What’s happening?’ Taeh’yung demands, hair wild, limbs flailing extra hard.

‘There were mines,’ Hoseok explains, ‘Down in the tunnels.’

Taeh’yung gasps, ‘That’s so cool!’
‘Just wear your Comm Device,’ Hoseok pleads, ‘It’s important!’

‘Right, right, sorry!’ Taeh’yung hastily reaches into every pocket into his clothing before digging out the small Device and placing it back on his ear. ‘I just wanted to be able to hear the babies without interference!’

‘Did you get anything from them?’

‘Hm,’ Taeh’yung reaches across Hoseok to hug Yyna, bumping his cheek against her stony one in greeting. ‘Not much? Hey Yyna, you okay? You look a little peaky.’

‘You sound unsure.’ Hoseok looks over the Megibīyan GI, wondering how she looked peaky.

Taeh’yung throws himself on the seat next to Hoseok, placing his feet up on the dashboard which Hoseok redirects away instantly.

‘It’s a bit more difficult to hear them now,’ he says in a matter of fact way.

‘I’m sorry buggy,’ Hoseok is sincere- he cannot imagine how it’d be to live life stripped of what made him Ngfy’widan; his very nature robbed of him, rendering him completely different.

‘I just have to relearn!’ Taeh’yung nods, ‘It’s important to sometimes forget, and then relearn what you thought you once knew.’

‘I guess you’re right,’ Hoseok smiles.

The change is slight- Taeh’yung was still most definitely his slightly chaotic self, but in an odd way, he seemed much more whole. And while the shadows around him were somehow much easier to identify, liquid like dark forms shape around the Zhak’gri, ignoring the principle of light sources, it doesn’t coat his Being. Hoseok no longer hears layers of voices in some of Taeh’yung’s words, doesn’t see someone else in his eyes.

He appeared, quite entirely himself. And it was almost as though he was relieved.

‘We’re finding more mines down here,’ Yoongi says quietly, ‘Some of them are inactive. We’re putting markers up on the geoscans just in case.’

‘Okay- we’ll probably arrive before you,’ Hoseok replies.

‘Yoongi keep an eye out for more babies just in case!’ Taeh’yung implores.

‘Um, we will,’ Jungkook replies in Yoongi’s stead. ‘Don’t worry, we’re being very safe.’

‘Thanks Kookie,’ Hoseok says gently.

‘Have we um, received any news from the others?’

‘No, but you’ll know the moment we do, okay?’ Hoseok replies, glancing back at the trackers.

‘Yeah! They’re okay- Jimin will make sure,’ Taeh’yung adds in his best reassuring tone. Hoseok’s not sure who he’s addressing at the moment, so he just activates the safety straps over Taeh’yung before speeding ahead just a little bit more.

Udāvana is smaller than Saṅkrāna, but larger than Keldana. It’s also surprisingly not too damaged. There’s evident signs of aging and natural erosion, but other than that, there’s no indication of destruction that isn’t a result of nature. Udāvana was a somewhat important site for them.
Not just because this was where Yoongi and his team found Jimin, but rather, the reason why and how Yoongi and his team landed so specifically on this spot. Although the GLA-port was indeed located there, it had long been known it was barely functional- just there for namesake. And yet Yoongi and his team landed so close to the GLA-port, the location they were looking for, and instead were lead elsewhere, deep into the valley that spilt downwards from Udāvana, surrounded by craggy mountains that are definitely different from the canyons they had first seen.

Jimin also said this was the narrowest section of the crescent- it was why it wasn’t developed too much. The new geoscans show them that the valley was more like wide shelves, layering downwards before squeezing in through the mountain ridges from both sides of the planet, the water sources from around the upper Crescent region pouring down to a massive and tall waterfall into lake below.

This was also the area where Yoongi and his team died. And where Jimin was taken, triggering a series of events that would forever tie all of their fates together.

Hoseok spots a location for landing; another semi-circle formed by the buildings and forests. This seemed to be a repeating architectural pattern in Megibīya. But the semi-circle clearing is not empty.

Their ship suddenly shudders, tilting too much to one side.

Alarmed, Hoseok quickly takes over the controls, maintaining the balance of the ship.

‘Whoa, what the fuck-’

‘Dehin?’ Taeh’yung sounds worried, ‘You’re…are you okay?’

The GI, who was unnaturally stiff seems to regain his movement, and instead simply nods at Taeh’yung.

‘Hey-’

There’s a sudden groan from Yyna, making Hoseok turn swiftly to look at the Megibīya GI in worry. But her expression doesn’t show much. For one wild moment, Hoseok wonders if he had imagined it. He quickly checks up on everyone’s stats, looking down their health tab. But there’s nothing showing.

Taeh’yung looks worried as he removes himself from his seat.

‘Preparing to land, Head Pilot Hoseok,’ Yyna reports, sounding absolutely normal. Hoseok wishes he could contact the others about this.

There are large boulders and stone pillars that have fallen due to age and or erosion, wildlife that bloomed and withered repeatedly, roots of trees piercing stone and earth. But to the side, creating a telltale imprint on the stone of a not so stable landing, is a GLA standard transporter-ship.

This model was not made anymore- but Hoseok has seen the type in many countless field mission reports of past centuries. This one was popular some 1500 sols ago.

It seemed too unrealistic to think that this ship could possibly be the very one Yoongi was in, coming into Megibīya. But at the same time, also possible. Hoseok wouldn’t be too surprised if it were. Taeh’yung walks over to the windows of the Bridge, his thoughts clearly somewhere else.

They land carefully, noting nothing out of the ordinary- at least in this Megibīyan standard.
‘Anything buggy?’

Taeh’yung looks uneasy, his gaze fixated towards the eastern mountain region. Far into the misty distance Hoseok spies the narrow and high mountain ranges meeting. Jimin had told them that these mountain peaks were once covered in snow— but they’re bare now. The forests and trees here are shorter and smaller, less brown and fading than the gigantic trees they had flown past.

‘I—…I’m not sure Hobi,’ Taeh’yung frowns, ‘But the others are not happy. Something is wrong here.’

Hoseok doesn’t know what Taeh’yung means by that, but he doubles on their scans, checking every single input from their sensors as well. There’s no suspicious difference in the readings; no alterations or changes that was strange. The only thing different here was the lack of damage. He keeps an eye on all the GI’s health tabs. Nothing was showing out of the ordinary. But to be safe, Hoseok tells the GI to stay inside instead. A lot happened in this planet, and though they had not foreseen such an unusual development of un-sureness regarding the reaction of the GI being here, Hoseok doesn’t want to take any risks.

‘The mines,’ Taeh’yung says quietly, ‘Maybe…maybe it was a way of keeping something out?’

Hoseok looks around the place they’ve landed in.

‘It smells worse here,’ Hoseok observes when they both step out. ‘Especially through the forest.’

Taeh’yung looks at the forest, a frown between his brows.

‘Is something wrong?’

‘I don’t know,’ Taeh’yung tilts his head, not looking away. ‘I think…I think there’s something in there— around this area too, but more in there.’

‘Should we move on? Check the Talvana area instead?’ Hoseok offers.

But Taeh’yung shakes his head.

‘I think…I think this is…’ Taeh’yung stops himself, frowning as he looks around at him at figures Hoseok cannot see. ‘Shut up!’

‘What is it?’ Hoseok walks up to the Zhak’gri, goosebumps erupting over his skin as the air shifts around Taeh’yung, movement of things Hoseok has seen once in a waking dream, unhappy and disturbed.

‘They say we shouldn’t be here,’ Taeh’yung replies.

‘We’re out of the tunnels,’ Jungkook tells them, ‘We found traces of fights, collapsed tunnels; I think the inhabitants of Udāvana might have run to the tunnels to stay safe— the network is very big and would offer many places to hide.’

‘We’ve found another transporter,’ Hoseok begins, making his way to the old vehicle.

‘Pirates?’ Jungkook asks, ‘The same style as the other one?’

‘No— I think this is much much older,’ Hoseok replies before saying hesitantly, ‘I think this might have been what Yoongi came down in.’

There’s no response from Yoongi.
‘We might still be able to extract information from the ship’s logs,’ Hoseok continues, ‘I’m going to investigate it.’

It’s appeared untouched since the day it landed, which was odd. Especially if pirates were flying in, bringing eggs quite frequently. And even more so if it meant that Axudar was also frequenting this place in order to retrieve the eggs. How they would overlook a transporter like this, not even hidden or camouflaged in anyway was strange.

‘Fuck!’ Jungkook suddenly cries out. ‘Yoongi!’

There’s a strange scratching sound followed by a crashing sound over the Comms. Hoseok hears Yoongi’s breath catching and exhaling sharply in shock and pain.

‘Hoseok- Yoongi just lost balance- he crashed to the side I don’t think he’s injured but-’

Hoseok quickly runs back to their ship, ‘Taeh’yung stay here- don’t go too far, Yyna, prepare the Medical Bay, Dehin, make sure we’re ready to leave the planet!’

He gets no answer- not even a ‘Understood’ from either of the GI.

‘I’m fine!’ Yoongi manages to get out- he did not sound fine, ‘I just- my head-’

‘Um- Hobi, it’s not just Yoongi- some of the other GI-’

Hoseok stops, retrieving his screen from inside his pocket.

‘I don’t think they’re okay,’ Jungkook stammers, ‘But the others-’

‘Let the unaffected GI bring in those who are compromised,’ Hoseok orders, rushing back to the ship before calling, ‘Dehin! Yyna-!’ he stops short, coming across two GI, keeled over on the floor, in a strange state of pain.

Hoseok suddenly remembers what happened to Yoongi when he had first recovered his memories. How his health tab hadn’t shown anything out of the ordinary.

‘Jungkook was Yoongi showing any signs of pain before this?’ Hoseok demands.

‘No!’ Jungkook replies quickly, ‘I didn’t notice anything any different it just- they all just reacted so strangely once we got out of the tunnel Hoseok I-’

‘Okay- wait, wait-’ Hoseok orders, running upwards and coming across a few of the GI on the ground, as though randomly knocked out while others were unaffected. ‘Take them back- back through the tunnel, away from Udāvana. I think this place is affecting them in a bad way.’

‘I want to see my ship,’ Yoongi manages to grit out.

‘You’ll see it through the Iris,’ Hoseok orders firmly as he gestures to the unaffected GI to help those on the ground. ‘Administer pain-diffusers, put them in their rooms to recover.’

‘I’ll take him in,’ Jungkook says sternly, as though speaking to Yoongi though he was addressing Hoseok, ‘There was an opening to a broken clearing before we hit the mines- we’ll set up there.’

‘All right- I’ll fly us out there,’ Hoseok gets to the Bridge, finding a few GI hovering awkwardly over some of the others, including Dehin and Yyna, who were slumped to the floor or dashboards in a strange grip of pain. ‘I’ll meet you there- can you send me coordinates? Hey, set them up in their rooms and administer pain-diffusers. Do this to anyone who isn’t well.’
‘Understood, head pilot Hoseok,’ they reply in unison.

‘Yeah okay,’ Jungkook sounds like he’s struggling.

‘You okay?’

‘Just- just Yoongi.’

‘Yoongi stop being difficult,’ Hoseok snaps as he gets into the cockpit before realizing something.

Taeh’yung wasn’t there.

‘Tae?’ Hoseok looks around behind him- no lanky Zhak’gri behind him. Where was Taeh’yung? Hoseok checks the scanner at once, finding his green dot in the geoscans map, putting him some ways ahead. Quickly getting out of the cockpit, Hoseok gets to the windows, wiping out one of the HUD tabs to see through.

‘Isolate Taeh’yung’s location and pull me a view to HUD unit uh, 15,’ Hoseok orders. The ships AI system pulls up a zoomed in view of the borders of the forest. Hoseok spots Taeh’yung’s figure some ways ahead, standing right at the edge of the forest.

‘Taeh’yung!’ Hoseok calls quickly, ‘Get back here!’

To Hoseok’s surprise, Taeh’yung does turn around- his expression grave, walking back towards him and the ship.

‘Okay- uh,’ Hoseok looks around at the empty Bridge, ‘Right, okay let’s fly out. Tae, tell me when you’re in.’

‘Almost there!’

Hoseok is only mildly alarmed that Taeh’yung was apparently a very quick runner.

‘Kookie? Everything okay?’

‘We’re moving,’ Jungkook reports back, ‘But um- what about the HoverPorts? Is it okay if we leave them there?’

‘We can get them back later,’ Hoseok replies, readying the ship to take off. ‘It’s not important right now.’

‘Okay! I made sure to lock them!’

Somehow it makes Hoseok smile at that.

‘I don’t like the forest,’ Taeh’yung says, making Hoseok jump. ‘There’s something wrong in there. Something bad.’

‘Is it- is it alive?’ Hoseok quickly pulls the Zhak’gri towards him, making him sit, ‘Everyone secure yourselves, we’re taking off.’

‘This is not alive or dead,’ Taeh’yung says seriously, leg bouncing as his feet tap nervously on the floor. ‘This is them.’

‘What?’ Hoseok does a double take at the Zhak’gri.

‘They left behind something in here,’ Taeh’yung tells him, ‘I can’t smell it right now, but I know it’s them- it’s the same with the Omhlophe- but the way this feels, it’s stronger. It’s them.

Red Evil, Akramanese, Creveni.

Hoseok shudders, looking towards the still and misty forest. Despite it looking less forlorn and destroyed, Hoseok now understands why he had found this whole region unsettling. This was why Yoongi’s ship was still here.

‘Past the forest too,’ Taeh’yung tells him, gaze still towards the high ridges and peaks, ‘Past the mountains.’

‘I think we’ll need to change our plans now,’ Hoseok grits out as the engines start up, the whole air vibrating slightly, barely noticeable. ‘Once the others can communicate back to us- we will need to make a change of plans- we can’t stay here.’

Taeh’yung nods absentmindedly before mumbling, ‘We do not bring death.’

‘What?’

‘Just something I heard once before.’

Jungkook sends them their coordinates and Hoseok manages to find a landing spot that’s a bit of tight squeeze amongst the trees. He winces when a few fall from the force of their landing gear. He spots Jungkook by the tree line, his helmet and gloves off.

‘I’ll go help!’ Taeh’yung volunteers, spryly jumping up and speeding out of the Bridge in a flurry of limbs and fluffy hair.

‘Okay-’ Hoseok begins, getting up and cursing when he comes face-to-face with Yyna, and then Dehin who was making his way into the Bridge, ‘For fuck’s sake!’

Yyna, nonplussed, doesn’t say anything.

‘Hey, answer me honestly, how are you feeling?’

Yyna looks blankly at him before replying, ‘Not understood, restate your mission.’

Hoseok nearly throws his hands up in the air when Dehin speaks up, ‘Strange, head pilot Hoseok, I feel strange.’

‘Strange how?’

Dehin places himself at the Navigation Table before replying, ‘As though database was expanding too rapidly. My mind, my body- I was overwhelmed. Much like a glass filled too much, too forcefully.’

He looked drawn out- skin pale and slightly clammy.

‘Thank you for telling me Dehin. We’re staying here until we get back into contact with the others, make sure you’re tracking everything on our scanners.’

‘Understood,’ he replies.

Hoseok rushes down, catching sight of the GI from Team A and B milling in. But no Jungkook or Yoongi. In fact, no Taeh’yung. Hoseok makes his way past the GI walking in, following them in the opposite direction until he’s outside.
Yoongi is sitting. Taeh’yung squatted down next to him. Jungkook is standing before them, arms crossed and a frustrated look on his face.

‘I’m fine,’ is what Yoongi is saying the moment Hoseok is at hearing distance. ‘See the other GI? They’re fine too.’

‘You don’t smell fine,’ Jungkook argues, ‘Tae! You can see it right?’

Taeh’yung doesn’t respond, just looking at Yoongi worriedly.

‘I know what’s there,’ Yoongi says, looking up briefly at Hoseok and adding, ‘I’m not pushing myself- I’m not feeling any worse than before, we all know I’m not particularly at my optimum and being here isn’t the main reason behind it.’

Hoseok understands why Jungkook is frowning down at Yoongi because he wants to do the same.

‘What’s in there?’ Hoseok asks instead.

‘It’s where the Red Evil created us,’ Yoongi coughs out, his skin clammy looking. He removes his helmet to reveal matted and sweaty hair. Jungkook screws up his face, his nose scrunching. ‘Just some of us here are affected- notice how some of the GI aren’t affected? It’s because they’re fully “incubated”- it’s us, the regurgitated, who are having issues. Jungkook isn’t affected either.’

Jungkook scowls at that.

‘It’s like, like a part of their ship exists there- maybe more. If what Amme said was true, the Red Evil abandoned a lot of us here when they left. They overtook this planet for an extended period of time- so it wouldn’t be strange if they built something here.’

‘This is not alive or dead.’

‘Wouldn’t the Yishengs have taken what was remaining here?’ Hoseok asks, remembering what Amme had said though none of them really want to take any recollection of any story as 100% factual.

‘Just because they did, doesn’t mean it’s truly gone,’ Taeh’yung answers instead, ‘The forest feels wrong. You cannot do what they did, and let Time take over- not when so much Memory is linked to this planet.’

Yoongi nods, as though in agreement with Taeh’yung despite not having gone close at all.

‘Okay- I think I’m gonna go ahead with Kookie, and some of the other GI who are unaffected going into Udāvana,’ Hoseok tells them, ‘Tae, stay here with the others.’

Taeh’yung nods up at him.

Yoongi looks like he wants to argue but he doesn’t, looking frustrated, and for the first time, afraid.

‘It’s possible that the…whatever is left behind in the forest, has stopped anyone who would be interested in the ship to check into it,’ Hoseok tells the Human. ‘You can keep watch with the Iris- I’ll try and access the system, see if I can retrieve any logs. If you see anything of importance, let me know at once. But I can’t have you, or any of the others, compromised by being near this area without knowing what it is, and what it does.’
Yoongi nods to that, looking defeated.

‘Also- depending on what we do find in the forest, or past it into the valleys below, we might have to reconsider our plan.’

‘Even though it seems to be working out completely as planned?’ Yoongi inquires, shaking sweat off of his hair with shaking hands.

‘This was not part of any hypothesis or possibility,’ Hoseok nods towards where Udāvana lay. ‘We will need to discuss this with the others first. Warn them, and the others…and-’ Hoseok stops himself, looking down at Yoongi who glances upwards, ‘Maybe, it’s better for you, and the other GI to not be here- not just keeping safe at a distance, but to stay away.’

The tenseness of his body lessens a little, and Yoongi sighs out, giving him a stiff nod.

‘Yeah,’ he says quietly, ‘I think so too.’

‘Come on, let’s get you back inside- Tae, make sure he’s resting,’ Hoseok tells the Zhak’gri who nods eagerly.

‘Kook, I think we can walk down the distance, and pick up the remaining bikes.’ Hoseok tells Jungkook, ‘You’re good to go? Do you need to take a small break?’

‘No,’ Jungkook shakes his head at once, bouncing on his feet a little as though eager to get going.

‘All right, let’s make sure we have the updated map for the-‘

Then quite suddenly, there’s a small flash of light.

In fact, it was almost as though everything had stopped.

It was not very bright- and it wouldn’t have been so noticeable if it weren’t for the fact that every thing around them – the mountains, the ridges, the trees, the forest, the sky- was all affected. Then the strangest thing happens.

A subdued yet starkly visible ripple of light erupts high overhead- visible more in part because of how the clouds of the storm ripple with the force, practically banishing it in an overwhelming surge of power beyond comprehension.

‘Oh!’ Taeh’yung suddenly says, standing as though he couldn’t help it, eyes wide as he looks up. Around him, appearing in a form so alarming corporeal, are the 4 figures he had seen by the dying light of the fire from the beach. Everyone can see it- it’s not just Hoseok. He can see how the figures appear to be shock, their forms and figures crouched as though unable to help looking upwards, but still cowed with some form of fear or awe.

‘Tae-?’ Hoseok wants an explanation. ‘Yyna, prepare the ship to leave-‘

Out of nowhere, Yoongi suddenly grasps his arm, he’s shaking his head at Hoseok, telling him to stop.

‘Jimin,’ he breathes out, eyes wide and clear, shining with a light from deep within.

‘What do you mean-?’

There’s a blaring shrill sound emitting from their Comm Devices; so loud, Hoseok could swear it nearly shattered their Comm Devices. Yoongi curses, ripping the Device off that won’t stop emitting the shrieking sound.

‘What is it-?’ Jungkook asks, hand over his ear, face scrunched up. But Hoseok is staring at Taeh’yung whose gaze is fixed upwards, eyes wide and a grin forming on his lips. He turns to look at them, and at the same time all the figures vanish.

‘They did it!’

And then suddenly- the sky seems to implode, all space flickering around and over them- the sun now clear and larger than Hoseok anticipated- bright plumes of light emitting from it in a way Hoseok identifies with quasars. But that’s not the only thing that changes in this reality implosion- a massive accretion disk, with hues of blue, rose, and gold wash over this new expanse of space.

‘Oh,’ Taeh’yung holds his hands up, his eyes glowing bright green, ‘Oh!’

These colours seem to extend all the way towards them but it’s faint-

The sky returns to normal, the clouds above them reappearing and filling with colour that now seemed extremely dull. It’s also very quiet and Hoseok realizes that he had been hearing- hearing singing.

‘Aw,’ Taeh’yung whines, looking at his hands, back to normal with a put-out frown.

‘Our communications are down,’ Hoseok realizes, touching his Comm Device. He turns back to look at the ship. All of the power in it was subdued as well. ‘Taeh’yung what was that?’ he demands, turning around to ask the Zhak’gri.

Taeh’yung just beams, hands clapping, ‘She’s beautiful!’ he exclaims, ‘So beautiful!’

‘What- who?’ Jungkook looks a little scared, and mostly confused.

Their Comm Devices suddenly crackle, making them all flinch. It increases in volume then out of nowhere, their lines clean up, their ship powers back, and all of reality around them seems to settle back down again.

‘We got it!’ Sk’jin suddenly exclaims, loud and clear in their ears. ‘It’s working! We’re on our way back!’

‘Oh-!’ Jungkook’s eyes are wide, an even wider grin on his face. ‘It worked!’

‘It’s done!’ Jimin exclaims- he sounded relieved, ‘Hoseok! Are we ready for the transmission?’

‘Yes!’ Hoseok starts, catching up quickly, ‘Yes it’s ready-‘ he fumbles with the screen, pulling up their long-distance transmission boosters. ‘-we’re connected and ready!’

‘Do it now,’ Namjoon orders, ‘Let’s fuck shit up.’

Hoseok taps lightly on the transfer initiation.

‘Jimin! Are you okay?’ Jungkook asks quickly.

‘I am, we all are,’ Jimin replies quickly, ‘Are you all safe? Has anything been triggered?’

‘No but um-‘ Jungkook glances at Yoongi a little hesitantly, ‘Um- some of the GI have become unwell.’
‘Is it Amad’la, I swear to Spaces I’ll drop-kick anyone who hurt her,’ Sk’jin threatens at once.

‘What do you mean?’ Jimin asks carefully, ‘Where’s Yoongi.’

‘I’m here sunshine,’ Yoongi replies, ‘It’s um- I think there’s something here, left by the Red Evil, and it’s been…not good for me, and some of the others.’

‘The regurgitated? Well, fuck, that’s not good,’ Sk’jin comments.

‘We’ve moved away from Udāvana for now,’ Hoseok quickly explains, ‘Jungkook and I are going to investigate a ship that I think was the one that brought Yoongi here. It might still have intact logs and-‘

‘What?’ Namjoon sounds amazed before adding, ‘Okay, screens back online.’

‘And, we found eggs here,’ Hoseok tells them, ‘Eggs- actual pirates, I’m guessing the same set up as Khonen had with the Omhlophe.’

‘Are- are the eggs okay?’ Sk’jin asks hesitantly.

‘Three of them were, well- didn’t make it,’ Hoseok hesitates, ‘We’ve brought them all back in, all 8 of them. Taeh’yung says that they’reokay.’

‘Taeh’yung,’ Jimin calls, ‘What’s wrong?’

For a moment, Hoseok forgets that the others were also able to see them through the Irises on their own screens.

Taeh’yung seems oddly frozen, frowning as he squints, not looking at anything. The air around him vibrates almost angrily, agitated somehow.

‘I…I don’t think they were here to bring death,’ Taeh’yung sounds far away.

‘What? What’s he saying?’ Sk’jin demands.

‘Hoseok- take Yoongi back further now-!’ Jimin asks frantically, ‘Please-‘

Yoongi sways very oddly- Jungkook reacts immediately, arms going up as though to steady him.

But Yoongi rights himself almost at once.

‘Yoongi-!’

But then, almost as though the strings pulling him upright were abruptly cut, Yoongi crumples to the ground.
‘I was thinking,’ Namjoon says to him conversationally after the sun has set, and the sky was slowly revealing a vast expanse of stars above them. The others were gathering up the vastly scattered ship itinerary while one of the GI had sighed and mumbled in a monotone ‘I hate mess’ to everyone’s amusement.

‘About?’

‘Axudar,’ Namjoon says slowly, ‘And also about how so many of Ndica’s disciples- those who believed in this twisted dreams he firmly believed in. We cannot say what happened during the Gaia Case was enough to quell those beliefs- seeing as how Camil seemed to be one of the countless Beings who was still following Ndica’s desires.’

Hoseok thinks back to the random questions Namjoon had asked him earlier that day.

‘What are you getting to?’

‘We’re greatly disadvantaged.’

‘That’s not new news.’

Namjoon rolls his eyes, ‘Yes. But what I’m saying is, we cannot possibly weed out who knows what, who believes in what, back with the Special Jury, or the Court even. Even within the GIU, the Venture Unit.’

Hoseok nods to that in agreement.

‘I’m…I’m just thinking things through,’ Namjoon tells him, ‘And I think…I think there’s something I want to do- which I think will increase the probability of our success- or at least, success of the mission.’

‘What is it?’

‘Ilya,’ Namjoon states plainly, ‘I’m considering sending him a rough idea of our plans.’

That made sense – Ilya was greatly involved, both voluntarily and involuntarily, with what they were trying to do.

‘If things don’t work out; we need someone to take care of the remaining eggs- ensure their safety. Ilya’s network, once they’re able to clear it out and secure themselves, would definitely be able to find more of the eggs, the New Borns, and provide them with security- or at least hide them away from the GLA Court.’ Namjoon explains.

‘Why didn’t you say something before?’

Namjoon hesitates, glancing over at Sk’jin who was listening to something Amad’la was explaining to him regarding the ship’s shielding system by the Hangar gateway.

‘I’m not sure how much Sk’jin would approve- or well…I’m not saying Sk’jin is incapable of looking past his personal feelings or relationship with Ilya in this matter- ‘ Namjoon hesitates. ‘I think it’s also because I uh-…Sk’jin is…’

Hoseok waits, studying their Captain carefully.

‘You don’t want to hurt him?’ Hoseok asks slowly. ‘You think that maybe, somehow, this will upset
Sk’jin?’

‘Not quite,’ Namjoon scratches at the side of his face, looking over to the sea instead. ‘I don’t know how to say it- I’m worried for him.’

‘In what way?’

Namjoon huffs out a small laugh before saying, ‘I almost considered plotting with Jn’yong and Jimin to somehow knock him out and keep him with Ilya.’

Hoseok squints at Namjoon.

‘Sounds like you’re the one who needs to get their personal feelings out of the way.’

Namjoon snorts, ‘It’s not like that. I just…don’t think that Sk’jin is doing any of this with—well—’

‘With the right intentions?’ Hoseok raises an eyebrow. ‘I don’t think any of us are doing any of this, or started any of this with the “right” intentions.’

Namjoon huffs out in frustration, glaring at Hoseok, ‘I know that- stop trying to put words in my mouth.’

Hoseok raises both hands up, shrugging.

‘The process with which Sk’jin is here, right now with us, and all that’s happened to him- it’s something we cannot explain or hope to understand- at least not the true extent of it.’ Namjoon tells him with a sigh, ‘I am worried that what he wants to do- or what he’s hoping to do and achieve, won’t be what he need.’

‘So what does he need?’

‘Sk’jin thinks he needs to fulfil a promise- to uphold something he wasn’t able to do in the past. Something, most likely the circumstances that lead to his strange death, stopped him from doing so.’ Namjoon pauses, ‘Sk’jin wants justification for being alive right now.’

‘You’re worried this won’t help him?’

‘I know it won’t,’ Namjoon grimaces.

‘Isn’t that his decision to make?’

‘I know it is,’ Namjoon frowns at Hoseok, ‘That doesn’t stop me from worrying about him.’

‘So you’re saying you want to keep Ilya informed- also as a way of possible back-up?’

Namjoon nods.

‘Have you discussed this with Jimin?’

‘He was the one who mentioned it to me,’ Namjoon huffs out a small chuckle, ‘I think he’s planning something.’

‘I mean...yeah,’ Hoseok nods slowly, thinking back to when he’d been talking to Jimin, ‘Is that why you were asking me those other questions?’

Namjoon nods again before stating bluntly, ‘Axudar is too big. There’s too much we don’t understand- too much that’s suspicious and questionable. We cannot expect back-up from the GLA or the Special Jury- they would never want to invest in something so terribly risky- and for those who actually believed in Ndica and would want to continue to push his agenda, they will do everything they can to stop us.’

‘Ilya’s is the next possible force that could possibly counter what Axudar is trying to do?’

‘At least enough to help with the eggs and New Borns.’ Namjoon nods.

‘Well,’ Hoseok begins thoughtfully. ‘If this had been just a month ago, I think Ilya would have refused- alongside Jn’young, E’nid, and Jaen – but with how they have been effected, and with their own personal history, I think it’s safe to say they are probably making their own plans on how to tackle this force.’

Namjoon nods, listening intently.

‘I think we should definitely inform Ilya- as well as Jn’young,’ Hoseok says in agreement before nodding towards Sk’jin’s direction. ‘I also think, as this is an action that will directly effect our team and what we’re doing- Sk’jin should be informed.’

Namjoon sighs. It’s almost comical.

‘You want me to say it?’ Hoseok offers with a short laugh.

‘Can’t do that,’ Namjoon shakes his head, squaring his shoulders as he glances over at Sk’jin, who looks up at them, eyes narrowing with suspicion, clearly some heightened sense alerting him that he was being discussed. ‘As Captain I need to do this sort of stuff.’

Hoseok pats Namjoon’s shoulder.

‘Good luck.’

‘He’s not displaying any signs of actual physical problems,’ Hoseok sighs.

‘Is it the same as last time?’ Namjoon asks.

Hoseok pulls on his jacket, closing the front properly. He accepts the helmet from Jungkook as they step out of the ship.

‘Yeah, I think so,’ Hoseok replies, ‘Maybe this place, whatever is left behind by the Red Evil triggers the GI who are like Yoongi?’

‘The regurgitated?’

‘Yeah. Dehin had told me he felt like database was expanding too quickly,’ Hoseok repeats what he heard from the GI, ‘I think we might have to adjust our next steps.’
'Sk’jin was saying that too, but I think Jimin should come down and check on whatever this is first before we contact Ilya again.’ Namjoon ruminates. ‘Are you heading back for Yoongi’s ship?’

‘We don’t know for sure if it is Yoongi’s ship,’ Hoseok reminds him. ‘We weren’t able to show him the ship- he kinda got out of it before we could.’

‘Does he think it’s his ship.’

‘Yeah.’

‘To be honest I’m not surprised,’ Namjoon says, ‘But even if it’s not his ship, it would still be good to check into what that ship is, and if the logs are still available.’

‘Ready to take off, Head Pilot Hoseok,’ one of the GI reports to him.

‘Great, return to Keldana and stay there,’ Hoseok looks back to the ship, raising one hand up to signal them. ‘We’ll be back within 2 hours.’

‘Understood.’

‘Buggy?’

‘I’ll keep everyone safe! You both have fun! Protect each other okay Kookie?’

‘Okay!’ Jungkook replies as he pushes his own helmet over his head.

Hoseok had let all of the regurgitated GI remain in the ship, ordering them not to participate in any of the ship’s activity, having them under observation in the Medical Bays. Yoongi had taken it the worst, and though he had regained consciousness, was worryingly weak. Hoseok requests for two of the GI to go along with himself and Jungkook to investigate Yoongi’s ship. They would walk through the tunnel and up to the remaining 4 HoverPorts, and then straight towards where Yoongi’s ship (still debatable) was.

The Yisheng ship takes off, making Hoseok lower the GI helmet visor down to avoid the dust storm that picks up as the ship lifts off.

‘Okay, let’s get going,’ Hoseok waves one last time before turning around.

‘We should be getting there in around 2 hours ourselves,’ Sk’jin tells them, ‘We were initially planning on maybe scouring the Crescent but I think that can wait until after we check out Udāvana.’

Hoseok hops down the smaller and steeper cracks that have spread on the ground, revealing the tunnels below. Jungkook follows after him and takes the lead.

‘So,’ Hoseok begins, ‘How was it?’

‘Unusual,’ Sk’jin replies honestly, ‘I’ve never seen anything like it- I can’t believe how… extraordinary it all is. I’m not saying that it was good, but it was understandable that Ndica was so relentless in his pursuit for Menigišiti and what they had.’

‘Did Jimin say anything else?’

‘No. But I think there’s no way we can take it back now,’ Sk’jin laughs, ‘They will definitely notice.’
‘Like we planned?’

Sk’jin sighs, ‘Like we planned.’

‘Don’t worry,’ Namjoon laughs, sounding quite delighted, ‘They won’t know what else is going to hit them soon- the Underverse is already exploding- there’s no way this won’t get out of hand.’

‘Well, we will need to figure things out when we get there about that forest,’ Sk’jin interjects, ‘Which will make me happier because as per usual no one listens to me-‘

‘I listen to you!’ Taeh’yung complains.

‘I have never heard a more terrible or bold lie,’ Sk’jin scoffs.

‘Jn’yong is saying that he’s just received a report from inside Šerdesas that the Court is in a massive flurry. This might be a lot faster than we expected.’ Namjoon remarks.

‘Then it’s just their next move now,’ Hoseok replies, ‘Anything from the GIU?’

‘Nothing yet- but I don’t doubt K’mara already knows now.’ Namjoon replies.

‘Just as planned!’

‘Please,’ Sk’jin pleads, ‘I’ll hear this in my dreams.’

‘You don’t sleep,’ Jungkook chimes in unexpectedly, grinning goofily at Hoseok through his open visor.

‘This disrespect!’ Sk’jin exhales noisily, ‘Just you wait you muscular hulk, I’ll kick your ass when I get down there!’

Jungkook is evidently laughing, his shoulders shaking with laughter as he walks ahead.

‘They’re becoming much more stable now!’ Taeh’yung randomly reports, ‘Amad’la is also awake now!’

‘Does she remember…things from the past?’ Namjoon asks tentatively.

‘No, she’s just a little confused.’ Taeh’yung replies, ‘Dehin is the only one who hasn’t woken up. But he seems stable. Yoongi keeps falling asleep though- but he manages to wake up.’

‘Thanks buggy, you’re doing a good job.’

Jungkook grins at the way Taeh’yung pleased giggling fills their ears.

‘Is Taeh’yung very old?’ he asks, touching his Comm Device, isolating their channel for a moment.

‘Uh, yeah I think so,’ Hoseok confirms, ‘Not quite how we understand age or time I think.’

Jungkook seems to ponder this seriously before asking, ‘Not like how Yoongi is old right?’

‘Yeah, it’s different,’ Hoseok nods, ‘But even in that, you’re like Yoongi, but you’re not like him again too.’

‘Time is strange,’ Jungkook observes.
Taeh’yung updates them on the GI’s health status every 10 minutes or so. He also informs them when they arrive back to Keldana. Hoseok has one of the GI retrieve the transporter Yoongi and Teams A and B had used to first depart from the Yisheng ship when they had arrived in Megibiya.

Hoseok observes the tunnels- they’re wide, obviously used to quickly ferry items underground. There are tracks to the side as well on the domed ceilings. There are several alcoves, half-circles and quite deep. Clearly this place was once frequently used. Jungkook shows him where the first mine had been triggered. Hoseok can still pick up lingering traces of sulfur. It’s not a very powerful explosion, only chipping some of the already loose and cracked stones. It could very well have been a warning system attached later into this tunnel.

The tunnels are not exactly intact- deep crevices have formed through some of them, with some areas nearly entirely collapsed or caved in. Hoseok hears water coming through on one of the branching off tunnels. There’s a crevice so wide and deep they need to take running leaps to cross it. Hoseok realizes he’s probably least adept at it, seeing as how the GI cleanly make the jump, barely even running for momentum. And well Jungkook- he not only makes it over the crevice running on all fours, he lands quite a distance away, rolling onto the ground as he touches the ground. Hoseok just about makes it, grumbling under his breath at how Jungkook seems very pleased with his mark.

They avoid the other mines easily, though Hoseok wishes they could extract just one to examine the make of it. Hoseok could easily put together explosives if needed, but there were trained and known tactics and methods. By examining the mine, they would be able to at least reduce the number of possible explosive enthusiasts.

The HoverPorts are untouched where they were left behind when they exit the tunnels.

‘It’s not getting dark,’ Jungkook sounds confused, ‘Shouldn’t the sky have changed? The sun?’

‘Not here,’ Hoseok explains, ‘Megibiya is orbit locked- the sun won’t rise above that.’

They can barely see the sun now- hidden behind strangely twisting greyish clouds, covering most of the sky. The storm had eased somewhat, no more lightning suddenly flashing through the sky or behind the horizon.

‘We got the HoverPorts,’ Hoseok announces, ‘We’ll be at the transporter location in a few minutes.’

‘We’re not too far ourselves,’ Sk’jin replies back, ‘Damn, Yishengs really have been using their funds well haven’t they?’

Udāvana doesn’t feel different to Hoseok, but nonetheless it is twice as foreboding now that he’s here, and Yoongi and the other regurgitated GI are back in the ship. It makes Jungkook quite jumpy as well, his stance defensive the moment they get closer into the central clearing of the city, towards the aged transporter waiting for them there. They stop close by, and Hoseok stations the 2 GI to station themselves outside, and to keep a circling parameter around the ship, with their scanners to pick up on any activity.

Jungkook wheezes, shutting off his visor at once before he opened it properly. ‘It really stinks!’ he exclaims, exhaling forcefully.

Hoseok walks around the whole transporter first, observing the ship.

‘That’s it,’ Yoongi says quietly, ‘That’s the transporter we were in.’
Hoseok makes sure his Iris is stabilized, and that none of the straps over his jacket were blocking the view.

‘I don’t see any visible traps or triggers outside- I’m running a scan just in case,’ Hoseok says out loud, already retrieving his screen. Jungkook tails after him, imitating his steps and moves.

A few scans later, Hoseok doesn’t note anything untoward outside the ship. The entryway on either side as well as towards the back at the hangar gateway is shut. After this long, Hoseok isn’t sure if they can rely on the ship to still have a functioning gateway system. But it’s all right because Jungkook is able to pry open the hangar gateway enough for both of them to duck inside.

Whatever power once fueled this ship was completely gone- the air is stale in here, not the way it was outside, but in a way that suggested whatever air filtration was used here wasn’t functional anymore for a long time. Hoseok taps on the side of his helmet, Jungkook following suit, and the hangar lights up immediately.

Nothing seems touched or changed. The hangar, with many OrTanks and crates were still stacked up, attached to their frames and lifts, secured with straps and magnetic locks. There’s suspension tarps still draped over some areas, thick layers of dust over them. The floor, though metal, doesn’t make a sound when Hoseok steps on it as a result of intense dust.

‘Nothing’s…nothing’s changed-’ Yoongi sounds dazed. ‘That’s the secondary hangar- further in, through that partition-’ Hoseok steps forward and finds wide sliding panels, ‘-yes that one- that’s the primary hangar. That’s where we stored our weapons, communication devices, and screens.
Past that is the seating bay that leads into the cockpit.’

Hoseok and Jungkook slide the doorway, waves of dust falling over them, and to their feet, a strange sticky sludge spills over.

‘Gross,’ Jungkook wails, taking a step back.

The seating bay area is flooded in about a 2-3 inch deep layer of residual life-support chemicals, air-filter mesh, and the main culprit, a burst pipe that probably siphoned out anti-inflammatory agents during an emergency. Hoseok guesses that at one point, long after the transporter’s system no longer could function or support itself, with strange changes of temperature, pressure, and prolonged exposure to the strange nature of this planet, the transporter’s internal hardware-based system simply eroded in on itself.

‘That was my seat,’ Yoongi croaks, ‘5th to the left from where you’re standing.’

Hoseok enters the seating bay, counting the seats. He tries to ignore how there are clear indications of personal belongings still stored in the compartments below the seats.

‘Right next to mine, was Amic,’ Yoongi continues, sounding faint. ‘Fuck- we-…we couldn’t see what entering the planet was like. We could only catch flashes of red from the cockpit- we didn’t even know what we were getting ourselves into-‘ Hoseok stops at Yoongi’s designated seat. He can read a dusty 09-LW2 printed faintly on the headboard.

‘Yoongi?’ Taeh’yung sounds like he’s trying to wake the Human.

‘-Hoseok I think you can pull out the storage compartments below the seats,’ Yoongi sounds hopeful. Hoseok steps into the space before the seats, squatting down to look at the compartments.
09-LW2 is printed over it, much more clear and less dusty. But it’s congealed around the edges, and though Hoseok could have done it himself, he can practically feel Jungkook vibrating with eagerness.

‘Kook?’ Hoseok points at the compartment before stepping aside. Jungkook leans in, yanking with careful force, pushing aside the nearly solidified agents and liquid that’s coated the floors.

‘Thank you,’ he smiles at the Vicitra even though he can’t see it. He imagines Jungkook’s smiling back.

There’s a bag inside—still very well preserved, not a hint of dust on it.

‘Do you want us to bring Amic’s back?’ Hoseok asks gently, pulling out a thin but strong drawstring square from inside his pocket and unfolding it, holding it up for Jungkook to carefully place the bag inside.

‘I think, considering everything, you should bring back everything,’ Namjoon suggests gently.

‘Yoongi’s asleep again,’ Taeh’yung tells them quietly, speaking in hushed tones.

‘Kookie, could you get them and store them up?’ Hoseok asks, hanging the youngling the drawstring, ‘I’ll go to the cockpit and try and access the transporter’s systems.’

Jungkook nods, already squatting down to pull out the next compartment.

‘Amad’la might have something worth looking into,’ Sk’jin pipes in, ‘She was the captain of their squad after all.’

‘Like pa?’

‘Hardly—besides, we’re hardly a squad. More like a shit-show if anything else.’

‘Jinnie! Jungkook’s listening!’

‘A good shit-show—shit is good fertilizer, Spaces.’

Jungkook is cackling behind him.

‘The system should be accessible if there’s power left in the cockpit,’ Yoongi tells him, sounding incredibly weak, ‘But I think you might just have to extract the motherboard and core.’

Hoseok had been suspecting that. Besides, it was possible that the method of accessing this outdated system might be beyond what the screen he brought could do. The windows are covered in dust, not much light filtering in. Kneeling in the squelching thick liquid on the floor and trying not to think about how gross it felt, Hoseok places himself before the cockpit dashboard and removes a glove. He feels for a slight catch in the otherwise smooth panels of the dashboard before he’s able to activate a small jutting metal lip and tugs down on it. With some struggle, and kicking aside the thick congealed liquid that’s incredibly stubborn (and probably impossible to remove from his clothes), Hoseok pulls at the panels that folds away from the dashboard and onto the floor.

Thankfully, none of the congealed oozing liquid had made its way down into the motherboard below. He gets no additional information or instruction from Yoongi so Hoseok proceeds to carefully extract the motherboards out. Deeper below, the core still lay intact as well.
‘I’m done,’ Jungkook tells him.

‘And we can see Megibiya now,’ Sk’jin announces.

‘The sun is shining?’ Jungkook remarks, sounding a bit confused.

‘Hm?’ Hoseok looks up, finding that the Vicitra has finished removing all the items from the seat compartments and was slowly making his way towards the cockpit, pushing up his visor, squinting at the dusty window.

‘What do you mean?’ Hoseok asks, looking back. He can’t see past the thick layer of dust in the window, and there’s very less light coming through if at all.

‘Are you guys done?’ Namjoon asks.

‘I’ve found the motherboards and the transporter’s core’ Hoseok reports back, glancing around the cockpit for anything he might have missed, ‘I think this is enough for now.’

‘Outside!’ Jungkook reaches forward to tug slightly on his sleeve, sounding excited. ‘Something’s happening!’

‘What do you mean?’ Hoseok frowns, lowering his visor at once and retrieving the TeorSer on his back.

Jungkook just excitedly sprints ahead, his shoes making rapid squelching sounds.

‘Jiminie is here,’ Taeh’yung sounds excited, ‘This is so cool!

Hoseok steps out of the transporter, looking up just as Jungkook runs out ahead of him, exclaiming excitedly as he looks up to the sky.

They had been on the ship earlier when they entered the planet, stepping out of warp, straight into a geomagnetic storm. But now it’s different.

‘All right, coming in now.’

The skies seem to ripple, colours of the quasar they had seen before echo in soft waves and every single living thing, every single construct and mass and space on this planet seems to tremble and sigh, welcoming and relieved. The air shifts, the wind somehow pleasantly changed from the chilly and decayed taint that wrapped Megibiya in a gloom of grey and stagnancy. There’s a change in the scent of the air as well- like sun warmed leaves, presenting them with a hint of growth; of life.

‘We’ve entered back into the atmosphere,’ Sk’jin tells them, ‘We’re coming down to the ship.’

‘Happy to have you all back!’ Taeh’yung chirps.

‘Wow,’ Jungkook breathes out, looking around him quite excitedly. Even the GI look around, as though they didn’t understand what was happening, expressing confusion in their own way.

‘Let’s get going everyone,’ Hoseok calls, putting back his TeorSer and pocketing the motherboards and core inside his inner-pockets. ‘Kookie, you okay with the bags?’

Jungkook simply swings them all to his back and gives him a thumb’s up before reaching up to lower his visor when he stops- eyes widening, posture rigid.
Quite suddenly, there’s a rumbling sound that comes straight from the forest behind them.

Hoseok spins around, checking all over the forest front for any sign of movement, activity- but he notices nothing. There’s another rumble- like the air was vibrating.

‘Angry,’ Jungkook grits out, ‘But- but just…just afraid.’

Hoseok squints at the forest and then back at Jungkook.

‘Come on Kook, let’s get going.’

* *

There’s a strange light coming from the forest. Yoongi doesn’t remember how he got here, but he’s at the edge of that forest.

It reminds Yoongi of when he was last here.

Suddenly, everything is so much more brilliant. Like the missing colours of his memory now were able to reconnect.

But Namjoon’s voice isn’t part of the original memory so he knows something is wrong. But he can’t quite pinpoint where it’s coming from.

The whole air around him pulses, flaring red stains everything slowly, colouring his dreams from a past life he couldn’t quite grasp. His feet hurt; he wants to sit down so he does. The forest floor is not the most comfortable, and Yoongi ignores that he doesn’t remember how he was inside the forest.

He ignores all of that, because all he can think about is how much he doesn’t want to be here.

He was not home. He was not where he needed to be. This was not where he should be. Yet he can’t help but move forward, as though forced to complete this journey. As though he had to.

As though something were incomplete.

But he doesn’t want to- he couldn’t. This wasn’t the direction he was supposed to go- not through this same wooded red-stained stretch of space that would dissipate into a strange void of white nothingness.

No. He can’t do that again.

He had to go back home.

He thinks he can hear Jungkook’s voice. That was definitely Hoseok’s voice too.

Oh, he was so tired. So so tired. Maybe he can close his eyes for just a moment- maybe that way he can get back home, but-Something shimmers at him from the side.

Turning his head to the side, Yoongi blinks a little at the sudden lightening of the air around him.

Jungkook’s voice, Sk’jin’s voice- they all fade away slowly. Instead, a familiar singing fills his mind. And Yoongi knows this song. He knows this voice.

And at that moment, sunlight breaks through and the entire clearing is covered in warm light and colour.

Their eyes meet, and Yoongi’s fear abates.

‘Sunshine.’

---

Jimin wakes him up with a soft kiss.

For a moment, Yoongi wonders if he’s fallen asleep again, and he’s back there, in their home. Maybe Jimin did decide that they should just stay here – that Jimin is waking him up to watch the sunrise.

His hand brushes through his hair, and Yoongi leans towards it. He’s there, in their bed. When he extends his hand out, he feels another body, warm skin under his palm.

‘Yoongi,’ Jimin whispers, lips pulling away from his skin. Yoongi opens his eyes, leaning up to follow Jimin’s voice.

The sound of the sea gently lapping up against the shoreline is the first thing he hears. The sun isn’t out yet, but the morning light is just bright enough to illuminate Jimin’s hair, the slopes of his face.

He’s kneeling next to him, a small smile on his lips.

‘You want to go for a walk?’ he asks, head tilting a little.

They would be leaving today.

Everything they had discussed the other day comes rushing back. Jimin’s silences, his questions, and how he took the time out to speak to every single GI, their foreheads touching; maybe he would now tell him, explain to him.

Without answering, Yoongi sits up and takes Jimin’s hand.

Yoongi realizes that only Namjoon, Jungkook, and a few of the GI were still around the cold remains of the fire pit. He’s not surprised that Sk’jin wasn’t there, but he can’t spot either Taeh’yung nor Hoseok.

Helping him up, hand in hand, Yoongi and Jimin walk over to the sandy edges of the shore, climbing up some of the flatter slabs of rock.
They had been spending every dawn together, watching the sunrise. Yoongi doesn’t quite understand why Jimin does this. But he remembers this distinctly when he had been in Megibīya.

‘Why do you watch the sunrise?’ Yoongi asks after a while. Jimin tugs quietly at his hand and they sit down on the cool rock slabs.

‘Because after the winter, spring will always come,’ Jimin says softly, ‘After night, day is not so far behind. Nothing lasts forever- no darkness, no fear, no pain exists forever.’

Yoongi smiles at that, squeezing Jimin’s hand in his. Jimin’s finger still has the thin band of ink around it.

‘Even if the moon wanes, it will still appear in the sky,’ he whispers softly, taking up their linked hands and kissing Yoongi’s knuckles. Yoongi leans in to kiss his forehead.

The skyline that rests above the horizon is lightening slowly, hints of gold leaking onto tiny wisps of vapor and clouds. The direction of the wind changes, sending a slight shiver down Jimin.

‘I’m worried,’ Jimin says quietly. ‘And afraid.’

Yoongi waits for Jimin to continue.

‘I’m not afraid of doing this. I know what needs to be done.’ Jimin explains. ‘But there’s…this isn’t just an ordinary situation where it’s okay to simply not know to um, to wing it.’

Yoongi smiles involuntarily at the way Jimin seems unconsciously pleased at having grasped the metaphor.

‘I think there were things Prat’tna didn’t tell Namjoon. I scrubbed through the surveillance footage and- it had all been removed. Or at least, never recorded. I checked all of the files, and even though I’m not very good, I did learn a lot from Lisai. I could find nothing.’ Jimin tells him, his free hand fiddling with the edges of his shirt. ‘If Prat’tna wanted to show me, or tell me all of this, he could have.’

Jimin looks out, eyes reflecting the growing light spreading over the horizon.

‘What’s on your mind?’

‘A lot of confusion but-…based on what Namjoon has told me, from what he heard from Prat’tna, and how far the deception and control of the Great Council truly ran through Menigišiti.’

‘Do you suspect Prat’tna was involved in what happened?’ Yoongi asks, thinking hard about everything Namjoon summarized for them regarding his involuntary stay with the GI in Lowet.

Jimin nods slowly.

‘There’s no evidence for it of course- all though it might explain why he did not wish to speak in person,’ Jimin replies, ‘Which is why I- I asked the others, if I could look into their memories. I believed that it would work- as it does with you, because of how and where we are connected.’

‘What did you see?’

‘When-…when I touched the other…the other you- I saw into his thoughts and it was-….strangely empty. Only action- only recall. But I could still see what he had seen to that point.’

‘What was it?’
Jimin looks back around behind him before saying, ‘I think that…up until now, with everything we have heard, that we are being pushed to serve either one purpose, but both of which leading to destruction of a magnitude too big to comprehend.’

‘-you don’t think what Prat’tna or Amme said should be trusted?’

Jimin doesn’t nod, just tilts his head a little.

‘Trust and truths are tricky,’ Jimin says slowly, ‘If you believe one thing to be true, the life you live is your truth, but the life others lead is not your reality, therefore for you, it is not true. What are truths for you, Yoongi, may not be truths for me. What truth Amme witnessed, may not be the same for Ndica- or even K’mara. The truth Hoseok has lived is not the truth Namjoon has lived. What Sk’jin believes in, what he can trust in, is not the same as what Jungkook believes in- what he’s lived in his life.’

‘Is that why you always look uncomfortable when you say you can’t lie?’

Jimin nods slowly.

‘Because I might believe in what I think is true- like when I believed that Menigišiti…when I believed in Menigišiti. I might see into someone’s mind, and see their truth. But clearly, so far everything has been showing me that the truth I once believed in are now all lies, layered over each other, delivered to me as a truth.’

‘And that’s not your fault.’

Jimin shakes his head.

‘It’s not about fault or guilt anymore- it’s…regardless of what has happened, and how it happened- I have innocent Beings who need to be protected, and my home that needs to be…’

Jimin closes his eyes. ‘What if Menigišiti now believes that it has been freed? Who am I, to push my truth onto them now.’

Yoongi can’t answer.

‘I’m thankful for your approach,’ Jimin opens his eyes, looking around at Yoongi with a smile. ‘I do not wish to become someone who believes they are a savior, with memories of a time that has long past forgotten me- and enforce my past truths into a present that no longer needs or wants me.’

‘What if their truth is…what if their truth no longer becomes a home for you?’

‘Then we will find another way- for the New Borns- at the very least, we can try and stop the atrocity taking place in Axudar- with Ilya and Jn’yong.’ Jimin says firmly before he breaks out into a smile, fond and private. ‘I like our home.’

‘Yeah?’

Jimin nods, looking up and out over to the sea. He inhales slowly and exhales quietly.

‘I’m…if I asked you to…to remain here,’ Jimin asks quietly. ‘Would you stay?’

‘Only if you stay here with me.’

Jimin lets out a small choked laughter, though there’s no humor to it.
‘Yoongi I—’

‘I know.’ Yoongi whispers.

The sun is nearly entirely out of the sea, turning the endless stretch of water golden.

Yoongi hears them before he sees them and doesn’t turn to look as Jungkook and Sk’jin climb up the flat rocks. Jungkook scoots up close to Jimin, ducking down to rest his head on his shoulder. Sk’jin comes to stand behind them. A minute later, Hoseok appears, shortly followed by Taeh’yung, and then Namjoon.

Jimin stands up, inhaling slowly and deeply.

Then, turning his back to the sun, Jimin looks at all of them carefully.

‘As the Yemenifesi Ch’inin’eti, I was always sought after, to listen, to hear, to see and understand what was not said, what was not seen.’ Jimin doesn’t look away.

Yoongi stands as well, stepping back to look at Jimin properly.

‘There is a lot that was not said to me, that was not shown to me,’ Jimin continues, ‘And even now, this has become the constant in my life, constricting me, constricting us.’

No one says a word. The sun is now above the horizon, illuminating them all in what felt like an instance of trust, security, and unity.

‘I know how to fix this,’ Jimin tells them quietly. ‘Because I see it now. I have been able to see it all now. And I know how worried we are. How we all know that there is no way out of this. But I understand now. And I know I can fix this.’

‘How do we fix it?’ Yoongi asks.

Jimin takes a deep breath, looking at each of them with overwhelmed emotions.

‘You trust me?’ he asks breathlessly, the Fate of his people, lost and forgotten, broken in defeat inconceivable and unimaginable.

Yoongi’s heart swells; no one should have had this burden- decorative or performative; no one should have had to do any of this but here he was- lost. Lost, but trying to return to his people, trying to save those who would live lives in a future they cannot hope to have now.

Namjoon hands Jimin the NaviLet.

‘Thank you,’ Jimin is almost inaudible but everyone hears him clearly. ‘Thank you.’

‘Tell us what we can do.’

He taps a few times on the NaviLet, the sun rising above him, light emitting from his whole being. Then he holds up the NaviLet, allowing a familiar planet, reshaped and re-mapped appears.

‘The ending started here, in Megibīya. And this is where we will change that.’
I’ve been seeing a lot of people do virtual hangouts and I don’t think even virtually I’d be able to even look at any of the idols in the eye like Moonbyul has done it and every single video I see I’m like LWJGFHGLSDFHGLSDJFGDS and it’s not even me. There’s also gonna be one of jinyoung and hhahahahahaha that man hurts me so much I would never be physically emotionally mentally or spiritually ready to even be at a digital space with him let alone IRL I think I would genuinely just be Gone™. Once again T_T I am sorry for a delayed update everyone, I try my best to deliver fics at a somewhat consistent rate but Yeah. Trying to change your life and enter the next phase of your adult life in the most financially balanced way, balancing debt, trying to make things work with your super weak passport in this capitalist society, with a pandemic raging on is just a lot. I try my best to keep positive and to make things at a daily basis be fun and productive but damn, these weeks have just been terrible. Festa bangbangcon was super fun though and it really made my day!!! God I will never ever get over that Respect performance. How do I tattoo that into my eyelids. If you guys watched it, which performance did you enjoy the most?

End Notes

This is the follow up to AMULGEO (A Misguided and Unnecessarily Long Galactic Odyssey to Earth). This story will follow the events of what happened in AMULGEO, taking a look into aspects of the GLA that weren't mentioned or illuminated, like the Venture Unit, the GI, and so on. Characters from AMULGEO will occasionally appear but you don't have to have read AMULGEO in advance to understand or enjoy this story. While it is a sequel, it doesn't follow the characters from AMULGEO so the storyline, though connected and part of the AMULGEO universe, has an entirely new storyline and, obviously, new characters. I've written ADEGU in a way where it can be read as a stand-alone fic.

And if you have read AMULGEO, you will know my style of writing- it's entirely plot-driven, with a lot of slow-burn with the ships, other relationships, and character introduction as well. So even if it is a YoonMin fic, the actual ship won't start up until later-an advance warning for anyone who might feel betrayed or impatient with the development of this ship.

And if you follow me on twitter or tumblr or have read my previous works, you will also know that I am multi-fandom and I love a variety of groups.

And additional disclaimer: I do not own BTS or any other group that might be mentioned in this fic. I do, however, own all original concepts in regards to storyline, plot, original characters, character design, and overall universe. Please do not copy or plagiarize. And if you find that my work has any resemblance to any other work, please tell me! I am against plagiarism so everything I write will always be completely 100% original unless stated otherwise in which case I will credit and put reference immediately.

And I am not a native English Speaker. So please forgive any grammatical errors you may come across! I also frequently switch between British and American spelling!

You can find me here and come talk to me!

http://unclassifiedsenpai.tumblr.com/
https://twitter.com/Unclssfd_Senpai
http://www.asianfanfics.com/profile/view_author_stories/1132373/L

Please drop by the archive and comment to let the author know if you enjoyed their work!