A Detailed Explorer’s Guide into the Unknown

by unclassified_senpai

Summary

The Venture Unit is known for being a generally shady organization. What with their dealings with pirate-gangs, corrupted planetary systems, trafficking, information dealing, and every other colour in this wide spectrum of highly illegal and dangerous flip-side of the GLA Universe. The Venture Unit, however, is not known for putting together a team of highly irregular Beings (even by galactic standards) and sending them off into a vague mission that has no particular objective other than to deliver a single OrTank to a remote planet in a System that has been proclaimed abandoned for the past millennium. So it’s safe to say that no single Being in this mission is particularly pleased- maybe except for the Zhak’gri but then again, he did say he was looking forward to, at least, blowing up a planetoid if he couldn’t blow up a moon.

Notes

See the end of the work for notes
Generations, Races, Species, Cultures- reborn anew from sacrifices that would never be memorialized. Caused by a betrayal so heinous that the entire Universe would unravel to its very core if it were revealed. But would it really?

The term “Universe” is thrown around easily enough without the entirety of its scope and true definition being really understood. It encompassed everything and nothing, held within it Matter, Space, Time, and Mass; but also held vacuum, darkness, infinity, and a nothingness that is almost corporeal in its vastness.

The Universe holds within it everything known and everything unknown- the latter of which is more abundant because what did it mean to really know something? The Universe is a Continuum- a loop that has no beginning or end and that just is. But what did that signify?

Where did they stand in that Continuum? Where did he stand in that loop? Where did they, as a unit- as this haphazardly thrown together unit of Beings, belong in this vast nothingness?
"Mission" [noun]: an operation, expedition, or assignment carried out for political, religious, or commercial purposes

Chief Lmiura, head of the Department of Planetary Relationships, stood at an impressive height of 6 feet 8. She had an impressive track record- being the first of her Species to obtain such a high ranking seat within the GLA. But most notably as the youngest to ever be elected directly by the Tribunal Court as a member of the special 6 member-jury that was responsible for rendering the verdict throughout the Gaia Case hearings. While the Known Universe was under the impression that the Gaia Case hearing was being held to complete and finalize procedures regarding the tragic destruction of coordinates 134.87.032.65 Earth 5 GLA sols ago, the true intention of the court was to hide and fabricate the truth behind what really happened.

And though not a member of the jury, Namjoon was an unfortunately important part of the grueling 14 month long hearing. He worked alongside the jury during the hearing, but never really spoke to any of them. In fact, Namjoon lived in an intensely isolated witness-protection program of sorts-travelling back and forth from the court rooms back to his temporary lodgings for the 14 months he was in court. So the moment he was able to, he sent in his letter of resignation and “retired” a lot earlier than he ever imagined he would.

Namjoon left behind the life of an Information Analyst in the Venture Unit and chose to seek employment as a local Navigator for the 3rd Dock orbiting Dao-3 in the planetary system of Dziko. He didn’t need the job,- he had saved plenty of money during his near 80 sols as an Information Analyst. But having a job built a stronger cover-up and though he wasn’t exactly hiding, Namjoon wanted to keep a very low-profile.

Dziko was a small System with only 5 planets, out of which only 3 were occupied. Dziko had no special resources or particularly notable tourist attraction, making it an infrequently visited System-which was ideal for someone like Namjoon. The Beings of the planets were comically short, standing no more than 4 feet average. They lived a rather fast paced life- possibly because of their size in general- but most probably because they had 3 spindly legs carrying their oddly bulky torsos. Namjoon often felt like a particularly slow giant amongst them. There were a few non-Dao Beings that worked in the Docks but Namjoon was easily the tallest amongst them. The Beings of Dao-3 took to Namjoon and instead of being afraid or intimidated by his height, used him to their advantage. So while he did most of his work in his station watching over the Navigation Table and trajectories, he was often called to aid the Daonin in random menial tasks that required the advantage of his height. And because space-travel was rather uneventful in Dziko, Namjoon didn’t mind leaving his station to indulge the small Daonin folk every so often.

Life as an Information Analyst was fast-paced and covert. Secrecy was key. Information Analysts were targeted the most by pirates, terrorists, and other disruptors of the peace. They made for easy targets with an endless supply and complete access to every single digital data ever transmitted throughout the Known Universe. So Namjoon was more than skilled in hiding out in the open.
And while Namjoon was never a part of the Infiltration Unit so while he never worked with a field-agent, Namjoon was responsible for altering digital data across the private channels issued from war-torn planetary systems or known pirate hot-spots. Or in Layman’s term, Namjoon was a highly trained glorified hacker.

So Namjoon enjoyed his easy slow-paced life as a giant who was asked at least once a day to retrieve some random object from a high-shelf away from the GLA, the Venture Unit, the Tribunal Court, and everything that had to do with it.

Which is why when he returns from his station back to his rooms, wanting nothing more than to take a nice long shower, and he finds Chief Lmiura sitting at his desk, Namjoon is quick to pull out and aim the TeorSer he had on him at all times. His mind is racing; why had none of his security measures alerted him of a break in? No one should be able to override his own security system.

The small beam of tracker light from his TeorSer looks purple on Chief Lmiura’s forehead.

‘Were you expecting me?’ Chief Lmiura looks amused. She’s dressed in her full uniform, a cluster of spikey gold stars dotted her dusty-blue long blazer, indicating the colour of her Department.

‘No.’ Namjoon replies shortly. He feels inexplicably underdressed and comical in his oddly sized dark-blue patchwork of a Navigation coat. He didn’t even have the cluster of spikey silver stars that denoted his rank.

‘Your room has been rigged to implode upon your command. It has also been customized to instantly turn vacuum upon your command in case you are in the room during an unexpected raid,’ Chief Lmiura comments, leaning back a little on the chair. Even seated, the Sang’tzi was intimidatingly tall. Their skin was tinted a pale blue, freckled over in small white dots across the high points of their faces. The irises of their eyes were white that slowly faded into a dark blue. While their overall features were almost anthropomorphic, with no additional limbs or appendages, their hands ended in 3 long fingers, each ending with a sharp midnight blue talon. The Sang’tzi were known for their hand-to-hand combat skills amongst other things. Namjoon notes that Lmiura has no hair, indicating that she was widowed, as dictated by her culture upon the death of her spouse. Namjoon remembers her having waist-length hair during the hearings.

‘Are you able to receive your treatment here? So far away from-

‘Why are you here?’ Namjoon asks tersely, the TeorSer in his hand is steady. It wouldn’t be the first time he’s shot a TeorSer. He’s a pretty decent shot if he’s being honest. And as mentioned before, Information Analysts made good ransoms and bargaining chips- so Namjoon has been trained to defend himself when needed. And he has come across several situations where there were attempts made to kidnap him. Even have him killed at least 5 times before- Namjoon is sure he’s wanted in at least 8 separate Systems and dozens other planets.

But never in his 314 years alive has Namjoon entertained the idea that a Chief of GLA Department would be sitting inside his room.

‘Namjoon. Born in the planet Kutsoglera. Former Venture Unit member of the Information Analysis Division, formerly governed by the now deceased Thukru. You played a key role in the Gaia Case,- providing the Venture Unit and the GLA with concrete information regarding the betrayal and conspiracy lead by the Yisheng Directory and other organizations.’ She reads from the screen in her hands. The light from the screen throws her face into harsh contrast.

‘That’s me,’ Namjoon replies tersely. ‘How did you find me?’
'Because I wanted to,' is all she says. ‘Please lower your TeorSer. I am not here to hurt you.’

‘Then why are you here?’ Namjoon asks, hand still not lowered.

‘I have submitted your name to a special operation, commissioned by the combined request of the Venture Unit and the GIU on a mission to 302. 2899. 1760. 320.’ Is the extraordinary response he gets.

‘I no longer work for the Venture Unit. I quit 3 sols ago.’

‘I am aware- I am bringing you back in.’ Lmiura crosses her hands over her lap, her expression somber.

‘Without my consent?’ Namjoon frowns.

‘Before you ask me any more questions or begin accusations, do you know where coordinates 302. 2899. 1760. 320 take you to?’ Lmiura asks instead.

Namjoon frowns, racking his mind as he scans the coordinates and pinpoints the location. And Namjoon already does not like this.

‘That’s dead space- I don’t understand.’ He replies instead, hoping that by some miracle, Lmiura would take his ignorance as a sign that he was no longer competent for work. Namjoon has seen his fair share of Beings whose competency and capabilities completely deteriorated in a span of days- it wouldn’t be too unbelievable for someone of his position in the Gaia Case to succumb to a similar form of incompetence.

‘It is a simple delivery trade. You should be able to handle it.’ Lmiura states as though she hadn’t just broken into his rooms, pulled him out of his retirement by force, and explained nothing to him.

Namjoon quells down his anger, exhaling sharply and switching the setting of his TeorSer from stun to bolt. Lmiura was clearly not going to believe him if he played dumb. And as a former Information Analyst of his reputation, the very idea of it was laughable.

‘Coordinates 302. 2899. 1760. 320 is the Bhumi System- a dead and abandoned System- what could I possibly be delivering there?’ he demands.

‘This is a classified mission- only the GIU Trifecta, the Venture Unit Board of Directors, Yisheng Directory, and myself, know of this mission. To summarize the mission; the specialized operation unit will be sent to the Bhumi System carrying the technology required to revive and restore the 11 planets that make up the-‘ Lmiura is starting to pull up actual files from her screen, sending them to the larger screen behind her on top of Namjoon’s desk. That screen was secure- Namjoon himself rewired and customized that entire set up. And yet, here was Lmiura easily accessing his gadgets and systems. He was right- all of the defensive and protecting measures he had installed in his rooms were probably hacked by some other Information Analyst.

‘I don’t know how else to say this but I retired. I do not want to be part of any investigative panel anymore- not after everything I saw. While I am honoured that you would think of me and select me for this mission, I will have to politely request you to pull me name out.’ Namjoon says stiffly, finally lowering his TeorSer and taking a step away. He gestures to the door, ‘I will escort you out.’

Lmiura doesn’t move, only uncrossing her legs to cross them the other way round and she leans back again. If truth be told, Namjoon liked Lmiura the best out of the special jury. She was empathetic, logical, and had a set of ideals she did not waver from while understanding and reasoning with other ideals that didn’t match up with hers. She was always reasonable—because while there were some who would lash out with too much emotion and some were too inhumane, Lmiura balanced the verdict with dignity and carefully calculated suggestion.

Lmiura’s expression changes subtly. Her posture slumps just a little, her shoulders lowering as though bearing a great weight. She looks unsure almost—a first for Namjoon who only ever saw her as assertive, attentive, and always confident.

‘I only trust you Namjoon.’ She says slowly, a frown settling on her face as she continues, ‘This is a mission we cannot allow the Venture Unit or the GIU to control— you will be the Captain and team leader of the entire operation.’

‘That neither tempts or appeals to me in any way or form.’ Namjoon replies truthfully. He always worked alone. It was his preference and it was what he knew.

‘I would not have purposefully pulled you out of your retirement if I didn’t believe this was an extremely serious matter!’ Lmiura sighs, a hint of exasperation seeping into her voice. ‘You’re past, as well as the role you played in the Gaia Case could potentially be the only thing that allows the GLA full control over this mission!’

‘If you were looking for Beings who were involved in the case, why not pull the ones who were right in the middle of it?’ Namjoon shoots back at once. ‘Correct me if I’m mistaken, but it was their ship and crew members that were targeted.’

Namjoon knows he’s not mistaken. He knows this case more than he’d care to admit.

‘They are under the protection of the Yisheng Directory— their whereabouts and governance is out of our control— we cannot touch them.’ Lmiura replies.

‘The Yisheng Directory no longer has the power they once held over the GLA— you can easily override this.’ Namjoon rebuts.

‘Their relationship with the Yisheng Directory, and not to mention the GIU is one we cannot risk—you are the only I can trust!’ Lmiura says in earnest, now standing up as though frustrated. Her head brushes the ceiling of Namjoon’s already altered rooms but she pays it little attention.

‘I already told you— I have retired. I want nothing more to do with any of this.’ Namjoon repeats stubbornly.

‘Before you ask me to leave— will you not listen to me? Will you not listen to how important this is—not just for the reputation of the GLA or for the sake of whatever petty strife there is between the Venture Unit and the GIU. There’s an underlying plot to this— one we cannot have the Venture Unit or the GIU orchestrate.’ Lmiura pauses mid-stride of her pacing.

Namjoon pockets his TeorSer and crosses his arms together.

‘But why Bhumi? The Bhumi System was wiped out and has been abandoned for over a millennia. What could the Venture Unit or the GIU hope to gain from attempting to revive it? There is no possible way of doing something of that magnitude.’ Namjoon argues at once, finding no logical reasoning in this mission.

‘Because you know what happened in Bhumi— you were at the court rulings and trials— and you know despite what they might say, the Venture Unit will always look for a way to one up the GLA—and the GIU will do everything in their power to prevent it. And now with the authority and respect that the Yisheng Directory once held diminishing within the inner circles, they can do nothing to neutralize these two from clashing- not after K’mara lost the GI to Lal Haenoon.’ Lmiura explains in disdain.

Namjoon had been there when it happened. He remembers the anger in K’mara’s eyes when the Court assigned the GI to the Venture Unit. He shudders to think about what would happen if the Venture Unit and the GIU finally pushed each other to their limits- not with leaders like K’mara and Lal Haenoon leading the two organizations with something as dangerous and lethal like the Akramanese technology hanging in the balance of the outcome of their clashing. But Namjoon doesn’t think further than that- he won’t allow himself to get involved. He already knew too much, and it was all he could do living with the knowledge of the truth behind the Gaia Case.

‘Why me? I was told I wouldn’t be involved or implemented in any additional cases or trials.’ Namjoon says roughly.

‘Namjoon- you know why,’ Lmiura says gently. ‘Your experience- from both the Gaia Case and those of your past- what you have seen- what you have felt. Those should all account for why I believe you should be a part of this mission.’

Namjoon doesn’t say anything, still staring hard at Lmiura for an answer as he says, ‘No it doesn’t. If anything, it clearly indicates why I shouldn’t be involved. So tell me why what do I have to do with this?’

‘I’m aware- but you should have known you wouldn’t have been able to hide forever.’ Lmiura replies.

‘It’s barely been over 5 sols- the case was closed almost 4 sols ago. All the cover-ups are still standing, no one knows about the betrayal, the GI are still completely hidden, and the embryos are in safekeeping. Everything is as it should be. So why now? What’s changed now?’ Namjoon asks in a rush.

Lmiura has a half-smile on her face, ‘So you’ve been keeping up with the news?’

Namjoon levels her with a neutral look before saying coolly, ‘You’re all the same. All of you.’

Lmiura doesn’t say anything for a while. Instead she takes a seat again. Namjoon stands.

‘What do you know about the Bhumi System?’ Lmiura asks.

Namjoon sighs heavily in resignation, leaning back on the wall and crossing his arms over his chest as he replies, ‘It was never a part of the GLA- they had their own planetary regency that ruled the planets. They had surprisingly advance technology developed by the natives of the System- most notably a sort of “space-camouflage” that hid their existence from the rest of the Known Universe. They refused to merge with the GLA- even in Trade and Tourism. They signed a treaty with the GLA, declaring their own independence. Their only request was to be left alone and the GLA respected that as per the laws of the GLA. However, 8 centuries later, a distress signal from Bhumi was detected and the GLA sent a small platoon to check on the System. They picked up some refugees who refused to seek shelter from the GLA and instead accompanied them back to their home-System. The platoon, including the native ships were annihilated upon arrival without any survivors. The System of Bhumi was lost for a few sols before the GLA was able to enter and find it again, thus giving the GLA the first evidence on the existence of the Akramanese.’

‘Well summarized,’ Lmiura nods. ‘Now, let me ask you a question: for a System that had no contact beyond its own borders, and a System that remained purposefully hidden for so long, how is it that you think the Akramanese found them?’

Namjoon studies Lmiura’s expression, searching for something, anything.

‘You can’t be serious?’

‘I am- it was perfect. At the time, the Yishengs needed a vast scape for their experimentation- a place that the GLA wouldn’t enter or observe. When Bhumi signed that treaty, they signed their own death sentence.’ Lmiura looks momentarily haggard.

Namjoon narrows his eyes in thought, regarding the Sang’tzi carefully as he puts all of the pieces of information Lmiura has given him fall into place.

‘So all the remaining concrete remains of their experiments, of their technology- still exists within the System?’

‘Yes. Which is why both the GIU and the Venture Unit are scrambling to claim the System.’ Lmiura sighs as though relieved that Namjoon now knew what she was trying to tell him without explicitly telling him so.

‘But it’s dead space now- it’s entirely abandoned- what’s stopping them from just going in and scavenging everything?’ Namjoon asks. Dead space was basically free for all- massive stretches of space with nothing in it and with no law governing it.

‘Because of the treaty signed by the GLA- the agreement still stands. Law is law. Neither the Venture Unit or the GIU will willingly dirty their hands or compromise their organizations by breeching GLA treaties.’ Lmiura explains.

‘But the treaty is only relevant and active if both members of the party are “alive”- the Bhumi System is dead.’ Namjoon counters harshly at once. A treaty on planetary/system/galactic border laws could only be recalled if one of the two party members died, or if both of them agree to overrule the signed treaty. Bhumi should be free for grabs. ‘She was raided- the GLA were too late to rescue her- and now she is dead.’

‘She is not. Remnants of her former life still exists and thus the treaty still exists. Signs of life have been detected on a few of the planets- no doubt survivors of the apocalypse that ruined them.’ Lmiura sighs again, gaze thoughtful and for a fleeting moment filled with pity that leaves a bitter taste in Namjoon’s mouth.

‘Then why not declare an overrule- the Court would surely allow it considering what the Bhumi System holds within it,’ Namjoon frowns before he catches the look in Lmiura’s eye.

‘Does the Court know about this “mission”?’ Namjoon could laugh.

‘Of course not,’ Lmiura replies at once. ‘Secrecy regarding the Gaia Case is so high they won’t even touch the Bhumi System in fear of shedding light to its existence to the rest of the Known Universe.’

It made sense- the first Court hearing that had taken place in the Yisheng Headquarters within the hour of Earth’s destruction had declared an immediate shut-down on all news involving or pertaining to the Gaia Case. All missions and trade details commissioned by the GLA or any other affiliated Organization was public information- one of the first Orders written in the GLA Constitution. So by commissioning a mission headed for a seemingly dead System under the Gaia Case would no doubt raise questions which could potentially lead to the exposure of the truth behind the Gaia Case. And as one of the 32 Beings in all of the Known Universe who is aware of... the truth, Namjoon would do anything in his power to keep it a secret too.

‘Who is commissioning this?’ Namjoon asks immediately.

‘The combined organizations of the Venture Unit and the GIU-‘

‘You said that already- I’m asking who.’ Namjoon interrupts.

‘K’mara of the GIU Trifecta, Lal Haenoon from the Venture Unit Board of Divisions, Yisheng Amme of the Yisheng Directory, Chief Xmi Head of the Galactic Security and Safety Department, Chief Shn’ow Head of the Trade Department, and myself, representing the Department of Planetary Relations,’ Lmiura recites.

‘So- the special-jury then.’

‘Yes.’

Sighing deeply, Namjoon asks, ‘You said this was a special operation involving the Venture Unit and the GIU- why am I being forcefully involved in it?’ Namjoon sits down heavily on his bed, putting emphasis on ‘I’.

‘Because we need someone from our side in there to control the two- the Yisheng Directory won’t be allowed to participate as balance-keepers; quite understandably though I believe Lal Haenoon has manipulated the others into that decree. I submitted your name as my candidate.’ Lmiura states, tapping across her screen quickly.

‘Why me? There are ranked and active officers better suited for this role- not to mention of higher moral values than me. Of a more whole form than me.’ Namjoon says with a faint scoff.

Lmiura looks up at Namjoon from her screen, her eyes narrowing a little.

‘Namjoon, I know we have never spoken before this. Not directly anyways- so there’s no solid reason as to why you should trust me. Your distrust and suspicion is completely founded,’ Lmiura states simply. ‘But I will tell you this right now- in a panel that has both Lal Haenoon and K’mara in it, fighting for the authority and ownership of a technology that can once again take over the Known Universe and undermine the sacrifice it took to stop it, is one that I cannot allow. It’s a risk that those of us who know cannot allow. Namjoon- think of what has happened before. Think of what has happened to you.’

Namjoon knows that what Lmiura is saying is the truth. What almost happened, what almost took place.- something like that couldn’t happen again. They had been lucky the first time- by some strange twist of fate- destiny, whatever you wanted to call it- it had been stopped.

Namjoon has lived a life plagued with nightmares. And the events that he witnessed and experienced simply added more to his terror-filled nights. And he still feels it. Still feels the discord in the universe around him when Earth was reduced to nothing but a stretch of debris.

‘Namjoon. Please.’

Lmiura is kneeling in front of him, fingers crossed and held over her bowed head that almost touches the floor. The Sang’tzi were a noble Species and did not easily bow- literally and metaphorically- to anyone or anything.

‘I trust only you.’
‘Please stand Chief Lmiura,’ Namjoon squirms a little.

‘You must understand. Why I am here. You understand how this can go if we do not stop this.’ Lmiura pleads, still kneeling though she sits up now.

‘I understand,’ Namjoon sighs wearily. ‘Can you please tell me what this mission entails? And not what’s on paper- what’s really going on.’

Lmiura slumps in relief, pausing for a moment to clasp her hands together, head tilted up as though in prayer.

Namjoon finds it funny that she would still believe in her prayers despite knowing the truth.

‘Mission 013-937619 is disguised as a trade mission to Matlaab. The true purpose of this plan is to enter the Bhumi System and deliver the terraforming technology that will help restore and revive its planets. By reviving the planets you will ensure that the System will be secured and strong enough to defend itself and renew the Treaty. You will also carry with you dispensary technology in order to rid the System of any remains of the Akramanese technology left behind. And while we firmly believe that none of them are left alive- we do not know what they might have left behind. They conducted vast experimentations there- so you need to be careful.’ Lmiura summarizes, sending the details of the mission to Namjoon’s screen behind her. ‘You never know what might be living there.’

Namjoon grimaces as he walks over to his screen, tapping along the glowing surface as he scans the outline and objectives.

‘What about registration? You said I would be team-leader, I can fill out the role of Navigator- but I do not have a Trading License.’

‘All legal documents have been cleared for you and your team by Chief Shn’ow. You have been settled as a small trading ship in business for the past 11 sols. You will be registered under the Raksane Tayi Trading Registration System under family business.’ Lmiura explains.

‘Who are my team members?’ Namjoon asks as he pulls up their profiles.

Three faces pop up on the screen, their information details noted on the side.

‘You will meet them tomorrow in Šerdesas- we cannot trust them. None of them. Any of them could be working to undermine the entire operation- you need to keep your eyes open and be in complete alert with them. This is them. You and three other Beings- a 4-member Team.’

‘Why so less?’ Namjoon asks as he leans in, studying their faces intently.

‘You cannot man and fly a ship single handedly- if you were to attempt to take anyone out, then you would instantly sentence yourself to death.’ Lmiura explains almost nonchalantly before stepping next to Namjoon, tapping on the first profile.

‘This is Hoseok- he was a member of the Venture Unit Infiltration Division- you may or may not recognize him from the Court trials. He was present during most times, providing his own testimony and evidence regarding the Venture Unit’s involvement with the Gaia Case. He will be filling in the role of Head Pilot.’

Reading his basic information, Namjoon finds that Hoseok is from the diminishing Species of Ngfy’widan. They were a nomadic group of people, now settled in Dŵr-5, a Settlement Arc anchored to the remains of their long dead planet Ngfy’wid. Namjoon’s interest immediately peaks.
Ngfy’wid was a planet that eroded in on itself some 4-5 millennium ago- her people survived as a result of the GLA’s intervention. It had been an interesting study to read- Ngfy’wid had been a large and flourishing planet- independent and largely agrarian. But due to the explosion of a dwarf-star somewhere within the galaxy that housed them, Ngfy’wid had taken the strangest and most adverse effect studied and documented in recent history. The waves of radiation and energy from the explosion wasn’t strong enough to wipe out their System- in fact Ngfy’wid was too far to properly feel its effect. Yet, however, it triggered a series of events that would completely alter the chemical composition and stability of its ionosphere. And during the span on 1 sol, Ngfy’wid’s protective shield around the planet eroded and they were exposed to the full force of radiation from their own sun.

They were helpless and could do nothing but watch as their planet died around them and with her, slowly, her people started succumbing to the deathly rays of raw sunlight. They sought protection underground but could not work fast enough. And just as they gave up hope, the Venture Unit’s Exploration Division came down to rescue them from their scorching and decaying planet.

Wanting to never forget what they had been through, they refused to leave their System and instead constructed 10 Settlement Arcs for the surviving population. They lived with the understanding that Life was unpredictable, and that every single moment in life came with equally weighty outcomes and you had no control over it. But what you had control over, were your actions. So the Ngfy’widan chose to remain in their System to develop technology that would then later be pivotal to the fortification of the Atmoshield. If Namjoon isn’t mistaken, then they were in the early stages of reconstructing their home planet again, and so far the progress was entirely positive.

But what was the most interesting about the Ngfy’widan was their ability to morph their appearances.

Although complete and full physical transformation was definitely not possible and has never been noted as any Species/Race characteristic, the Ngfy’widan could alter their appearances to a certain extent. And most definitely enough to be an excellent field-agent for the Infiltration Division for the Venture Unit.

Hoseok had entirely anthropomorphic features- his skin was a healthy tan, his hair (Namjoon isn’t sure what a Ngfy’widan’s natural hair colour is) is a dark brown, and his eyes are the characteristic double ringed-iris in blue to yellow. He’s smiling in the picture and Namjoon is insure what to think- no one actually smiled for their GLA Archive Profile- especially not someone who was an agent for the Infiltration Division.

Namjoon studies his face again, wondering if that was indeed his actual face before saying, ‘I do remember him- the Director in charge of his Division was directly involved wasn’t he? He provided the evidence required to fully imprison him without trial- if he had been alive for trial of course.’ Namjoon rolls his eyes. ‘Lal Haenoon sure works fast.’

Lmiura chuckles humorlessly before swiping across the screen.

‘This is Sk’jin. He works in the GIU- in fact, he’s a part of K’mara’s own inner-circle.’ The distrust in her voice is more apparent.

‘That’s rather blasé of K’mara- putting one of her own pawns in without even trying to cover-up or disguise their identity. What is he anyways?’ Namjoon asks, glancing at the information to the side.

K’mara really didn’t try to disguise who her agent was. He was a Khol’isa, just like her. Namjoon grimaces- this team was starting to really pick up on Beings who no longer had their home-planets Khol’isa was a remote planet, frigid and dark, the only living planet in her System whose sun was a red giant. But Khol’isa was too far away to receive more than just a shadow of resemblance to sunlight and warmth while her sister-planets dried and disintegrated while their sun expanded continuously, shedding its outer layers of helium.

It was said that the people of Khol’isa looked to their Sun with hatred – too far to effectively kill them, and just close enough to sustain a form of life on their frigid planet. They had no snow or ice – their atmosphere worked differently and tainted their skies a dull neon pink. It was said that due to this immense hatred they held for the red giant that their eyes took a different route in evolution, mimicking the star that dragged their existence. That was until the GLA discovered them and unlike the Ngfy’widan, agreed to be taken away from their sun, so close to collapsing into a supernova.

Starved of warmth and any decent semblance of living, the Khol’isa went through generations of psychological trauma and an inability to cope with normalcy. The sun they had cursed with all of their breaths was suddenly more of a comforting thought – something known and something they could understand.

The people of Khol’isa were nearly all driven into madness. The change from their known environment to this new one was too extreme.

But the GLA, with the aid and help of the Yisheng Headquarters, were able to slowly heal and recuperate the species that had dwindled to nearly $1/3$rd of their original numbers. The shock of leaving their dying planet to pursue a life in a reality that moved faster than anything they witnessed, that blossomed with a life that they could not understand – there was too much, too many, all at the same time.

But it wasn’t just the Khol’isa that were in a state of perpetual shock. Never had the GLA or the Yisheng Headquarters ever come to witness a species as alien as the Khol’isa.

The Yisheng Headquarters had called it “internal metamorphosis”, a somewhat tamer term to describe the autophagocytosis that comprised the lifecycle of a Khol’isa.

A Khol’isa, in essence, lived on forever. During a certain point of their lifecycle they cocooned themselves into a crystalline form, transmuting themselves within their own bodies. Basically meaning that at a point in their life, a new series of cells would form that would absorb the old and replace them with more cells. This process took an approximate 3 years during which the Khol’isa would be reduced to nothing more than a lumpy form of cells at the core of the crystalline cocoon and then would grow into the same Khol’isa. It was unclear how much of their original memories remained- but judging by how long it took them as a species to adapt to their new surroundings, the Yisheng Headquarters could surmise that a good amount remained.

‘He is a region-expert and a Communications Manager.’

Region-expert? Namjoon laughs under his breath.

‘K’mar really isn’t trying is she? What does she hope to achieve?’ Sk’jin’s eyes are red and even in picture form they seem almost neon in the way they glow. Khol’isa are known for their double-helix horns, much longer on the females of their species. But Sk’jin’s isn’t even there. Namjoon can’t make out the crystal like protrusions that should be visible. However, every other characteristic screams Khol’isa. Fair pearlescent skin that is delicately rosy at the extremities, pastel hair that could look rosy, pale gold, or even silver in certain lights. And an unexplainable ethereal beauty they exuded that was simultaneously inviting yet threatening at the same time. How did such a beautiful species of Beings come from such a horrendous planet?

‘Are you sure he’s from Khol’isa?’

‘What I’m telling you is all I know. Just like you, Sk’jin and Hoseok have all of their background information and files entirely erased. All that I know is all that is allowed to be known.’ Lmiura purses her lips in contempt. ‘I don’t think I have to tell you not to look directly into his eyes for long periods of time.’

Another thing about the Khol’isa was their unnerving ability to perform some mild level of hypnosis on other Beings. It is believed by some that it was a defensive mechanism that was birthed as a result of their own desperation to rid themselves of the harshness of their planet and provide each other with some form of relief.

And though Namjoon isn’t one to typecast- he really cannot help the distrust that builds in him as he looks at Sk’jin.

Lmiura reaches over and swipes the screen.

‘And that is Yoongi. He will be in charge of security. He was the candidate submitted by the Yisheng Directory.’

He looked ordinary enough, with no outstanding characteristic or feature. His skin was pale and his hair was dark. His stature was a little on the short side, but Namjoon knows to never measure a Beings capabilities based on their height or lack thereof. He was from Raksane Tayi, but he didn’t have the characteristic silver pupils that a Tayian should have. His eyes were almost entirely a solid black.

Namjoon waits for her to elaborate but Lmiura leans away, clearly done with everything that needed to be said.

‘What? That’s it? What is he?’ Namjoon instantly leans forward towards the screen, scanning the minimal information available.

‘I suspect he is one of the GI.’ Lmiura comments casually.

Namjoon does a double take, his mind reeling.

‘That’s not possible. And the GI were handed over to the Venture Unit- not the Yisheng Directory.’ Namjoon frowns. ‘How did Yisheng Amme even get the authority to submit a name for the mission?’

‘I suspect it was Lal Haenoon. He wants to overthrow K’mara- be two-steps ahead of her. By influencing the choice of the Yisheng Directory by making them choose one of his own, he would have double the influence. Because despite everything that has happened- the Yishengs will always command respect and trust- if he has the Yishengs on his side, then the girth of his influence will expand. Either that or he’s trying to build a sort of partnership with Yisheng Amme, in hopes of future collaborations, no doubt.’

‘And? Do you trust her?’ Namjoon thinks back to the Yisheng in question. She was an elder of the Directory- one of the 3 survivors from the original Yisheng Panel of 12. She had been in the System of Ecsaf during the strong of events that lead into the Gaia Case, leading a team of Yishengs in healing a planet from a deadly plague that threatened to annihilate the entire population.
‘I cannot speak for certain,’ Lmiura frowned. ‘All I know is that it is under her authority that he’s being assigned to the mission.’

Namjoon turns to give Lmiura a swift hard look.

The GI- or the Galactic Inquisition- had been the stuff of urban legend that originated from Raksane Tayi. A seemingly immortal cult-like organization that existed in the shadows of the great planetary system, terminating what seemed like unlikely Beings, all for the sake of the Yishengs. The GI wouldn’t be the first extremist radical group that sparked into existence because of their reverence and worshipful approach towards the Yishengs and they certainly wouldn’t be the last. But the GI were more than just that.

Birthed from illegally customized and unethical means, the GI were bioengineered Beings, created and born using AI technology and brought up in subjugated hyper-realism that conducted and recreated muscle memory, skills, ability, communication abilities, and an irrepressible discipline that made them the perfect living weapon. They were not bound to any law or moral obligation-only completely disciplined obedience. Their lives, if you could call it living, extended mission to mission, order to order.

Even Cyborgs and Androids had better moral ethics than the GI agents- though Namjoon believes it’s not an entirely fair comparison considering Cyborgs and Androids were programed to never hurt or compromise the safety of a Living Being. The GI agents existed only for one purpose, and that was to seek out the completion of whatever task assigned to them, in the quickest and swiftest way.

‘If I am to be team-leader I cannot allow someone of his mentality to be part of the team,’ Namjoon states firmly. ‘While Hoseok and Sk’jin may prove to be difficult- it would be easier to appeal to their needs and personality. This one-’ he nods his chin at the image. ‘-this one won’t be swayed. If his orders are to cause and disrupt all of this mission- there’s no stopping him.’

Lmiura listens to Namjoon intently, nodding as he spoke.

‘There is nothing I can do to prevent his joining the team,’ Lmiura says at long last. ‘If I could, I would assimilate a team of my choosing to carry out this mission. However, both the Venture Unit and the GIU will work to stop me. And they could very well effectively do so. The only chance we have at this is to combine our forces and when you are in dead-space, you will be able to take over.’

Namjoon stares at the three faces again as they form smaller tabs along the wide-screen.

Lmiura stands next to him, sighing heavily again.

‘I am sorry to ask this of you. And I am neither attempting to flatter or sweet-talk you into joining this mission Namjoon- because I know you understand how important this is. But the matter of fact is that I can trust only you to carry the purpose of this mission without being waylaid by personal agenda or influence.’ Lmiura speaks earnestly. ‘This way, we can finally put an end to this entire mess, once and for all, and make safe the Known Universe.’

Namjoon closes the display on the screen and leans back on his desk.

‘When does the mission start?’

Lmiura gives him a true and genuine smile.

‘You will meet your team tomorrow in Šerdesas, Raksane Tayi,’ Lmiura says walking towards the door and having to duck under the doorway. ‘You and your team will be briefed again and you will depart for Bhumi tomorrow evening.’

‘I take it I have a ship waiting for me in the Hangar Bay?’ Namjoon chuckles lowly, already regretting everything.

‘I believe you were the one who gave us the green-light Officer Mron,’ Lmiura shrugs, pulling the syllables of Namjoon’s alias with a purposefully slow drawl. ‘You have an hour to pack and get ready. We have already taken care of your papers and your “employment” here. Don’t be late.’

With that Lmiura ducks out of the room.

Namjoon’s screen alerts him at once of an intruder in his room, a discreet beep sounding in the Comm-Device attached to his earlobe. Snorting, Namjoon rolls his eyes and pulls out his pre-packed travel bag from under his bed as he calls out: ‘Disengage.’

Namjoon always knew he would somehow end up going back to his previous life. But he’d always thought it would be voluntary- after he was ready to face the internal chaos that lay lurking beneath the normalcy and peace of the Known Universe under the GLA.

But it would seem that Life had other plans for him. Because while he did enjoy his slow-paced life here in Dao-3, Namjoon can feel the faint echo of that rushing feeling in his veins- tingling under his skin and pulsing with the fact that his life was going to change drastically again.

Namjoon finishes packing and walks out of his rooms without looking back.

* *

The first time Hoseok found himself in Šerdesas was 4 years. And he had hoped it would have been the last time he would find himself in the planet.

Šerdesas – the heart and capital planet of the massive planetary system Raksane Tayi was home to nearly every major GLA organization. This included the Galactic Court, the GIU (Galactic Investigative Unit) Official Headquarters, Galactic Trade Sector, the Yisheng Headquarters, and now most recently, the official headquarters for the Venture Unit Board of Divisions.

In light of recent events, it was declared that all independent and or partnered GLA organization must reestablish or relocate their headquarters in Šerdesas. Though this was mainly targeted at the Venture Unit.

Hoseok thinks this is ridiculous. Considering the fact that it wasn’t the Venture Unit who had betrayed and nearly overturned the entire Known Universe. But at the same time, entirely justifiable.

The Venture Unit, in Hoseok’s humble opinion, was a vastly misunderstood, highly romanticized GLA organization. The entirety of the Known Universe seemed to view them in a certain light. One that made them look like debonair master spies that infiltrated pirate-gangs, disrupted and settled corrupt space-border systems, rescued scores of Beings from the tyrannical grasp of some evil space-lord.

While it was true that they did indeed dabble in such heroic endeavors but the reality behind it was a lot less glamorous and extremely foul. Everything was primarily based on back-stabbing, selling Beings out, way too much blood (or whatever fluid you functioned by), deep-level hacking, and an insane amount of blackmail.

So despite not having anything to do with the Akramanese issue, the Venture Unit was still, yet again, justifiably kept under a stricter watch, with added policies and reformation that basically reduced their overall network strength and anonymity.

At least this is what most Beings were told.

The Venture Unit though uninvolved with the entire Akramanese issue, had still been caught at the very center of it all, being played by the very organization that started it all. In all honesty, Hoseok guesses that it was the perfect cover-up, the perfect disguise.

The GLA, otherwise known as the Galactic Law Authority, was the system that governed, controlled, and regulated almost more than 75% of all known trade routes, governments, political systems, and hierarchy within the galaxies and systems of the Known Universe. The GLA headquarters was situated in the center of the largest planetary system known to all Beings – Raksane Tayi.

And supporting and verifying the GLA was the Yisheng Directory- an organization independent of the GLA but collaborating with them. While the GLA did not hold any authority over the Yisheng Directory, they worked side by side to bring unity and peace across the universe. To bring together planets, systems, and galaxies to unite into one large working intergalactic system.

The Yishengs were a random assortment of Beings that hailed from nearly every corner of the universe. They were Beings indiscriminately born with higher Life-force that they could use to effectively heal anyone/anything that had Life-force. And it wasn’t an ability that they could use inexhaustibly- because when a Yisheng healed you, they imparted their own Life-force to renew, regrow, and refuel into yours. This could leave Yishengs drained and weak- and young inexperienced Yishengs would often spend up their Life-force, going past the limit due to overzealousness.

And while Yishengs predominantly used their abilities to heal, they could also reverse their abilities to injure, maim, destroy, and kill. A single powerful Yisheng could destroy planets in a matter of hours- create viruses with no cure, and combined they could probably destroy suns. But whatever supernatural force governed the Universe- whatever turn of fate or destiny orchestrated all Life, all Yishengs born were always genuinely good Beings who wholeheartedly devoted themselves for the benefit of others and the Universe.

Many across the Universe regarded Yishengs as gods- deities to be worshipped. If not, they were regarded with the highest and utter most respect and awe. And with the partnership with the Yisheng Directory, the GLA were able to properly unite the Universe in peace.

Which was why it came as a complete and utter shock that the Yisheng Directory, or at least a few of the Yisheng Elders, were the instigators of the attempt to destroy free-will and assert their domination over the Universe.

Hoseok scowls to himself. Thinking again of this didn’t send him spiraling into an overwhelmed state of mind anymore; unlike the first time he had discovered the truth for himself. In fact Hoseok doesn’t quite remember his reaction- only that he had woken up on the floor, and he was still reeling from the discovery.

‘You have arrived at the Yisheng Headquarters. Please mind the gap between train and platform!’

Hoseok reprimands himself for having lost his bearings momentarily as he steps out into the wide platform, alongside other Beings.

And although the Yisheng Directory had been plotting to completely takeover the Universe, Hoseok still finds himself relaxing at the close proximity he was in with the Headquarters. This entire region of Šerdesas was enriched and flourishing with the intensity of Life-force the Headquarters exuded. Most Beings who were unwell simply came to the Headquarters to recover. Hoseok can feel the tightness around his shoulders ebb away, the fatigue in his muscles completely vanish, and a much more light-hearted attitude than when he boarded the train from the closest Dock.

It was terrifying, in retrospect, knowing that they had all been living with their necks under a very sharp ax held by a Demon disguised as an Angel. And that very Demon was the force behind all of the “unity” and “peace” they were now happily living under.

The Yisheng Headquarters hasn’t changed much from the last time Hoseok saw it some 4 years ago. It was still a low sprawling network of domed buildings, the colour of faded sunstone. It felt nostalgic and almost home-like to those who beheld it. It exuded comfort, care, and most of all, a promise that everything would be okay.

Hoseok shudders a little as he walks closer.

‘There is continuum that exists beyond the identity of Being, beyond the properties that are essential to the existence of being. The endless exchange, the endless surety that what starts, what is, what forms, has an end. There is no end of the spectrum- where one end begets life, and the other ends it. It is a cycle that exists beyond the realm of existence – beyond the realm of Matter and Time and Space. A cycle that Is. A cycle that is continuum. A cycle that unapologetically moves forward. Because where there is a beginning, there is always an end. Where there is an end, there is always a beginning.’

Hoseok pauses, squinting to look beyond the grove of trees from where the voices were coming from. He steps closer and finds an elderly Yisheng, his hair an emerald green streaking with silver- the only physical alteration Yishengs had that represented their status. Around him are young children- no more than 6-8 sols. They were reciting the Yisheng Code.

‘Life-force is a mysterious thing. It exists in everything and is the main component that comprises and formulates all Living Beings. It is the energy that exists between the bonds of atoms, the link that connects respiration to the intangible reactions that supply oxygen to fuel every cell, the elevation of the mind that brings forth the power of the mind and imagination. It is Life. It is Soul. It is everything that makes you Alive.’

He feels shiver run down his spine.

‘Former agent Hoseok.’

Hoseok turns sharply, taking a minor step back and putting his weight on the heel of his foot.

‘Director Lal Haenoon. Good afternoon,’ Hoseok says unable to control the curtness in his words.

‘A happy sight I make no doubt,’ Lal Haenoon grins.
Hoseok instantly feels the need to leave.

Lal Haenoon was a Raksane Tayian, born and raised. Hoseok did not like him. In fact, Hoseok could safely say he did not like anyone from the Board of Directors. But it was also safe to say Hoseok liked him least. And was grateful that his Division had not been taken under his metaphoric wing. But rather under the very literal wing of S’ava Hhlai, a Being from the planet of Rlams’a, their entire species characterized by the wing-like protrusion from their backs, featherless and all stretched skin. They were terrifying to behold during the night under dim lights. While most Beings were afraid of the Rlams’a, and therefore terrified of S’ava Hhlai, Hoseok for reasons he doesn’t understand, wants to touch the thin stretch of pale lavender skin to see if it was as elastic as it looked. For obvious reasons, Hoseok has not done this. He looks around briefly for his ex-Division head but does not find the willowy Being.

‘I’m sure you thought S’ava would be here but alas!’ Lal Haenoon grins in what Hoseok assumes is the latter trying to look apologetic. ‘I would like to say he’s just busy and will be joining us but I cannot lie!’

Lal Haenoon was a short, slight Being, and formidably intelligent. The original inhabitants of the planets of Raksane Tayi were gifted with incredible intelligence and empathy, the charisma of leadership, and the ability to bring together Beings. They had a very anthropomorphic built, but with distinct silver pupils that gave foundation to their collective species nickname “dusty eyes”. But this Tayian was everything that contradicted his species fair characteristics. Even his pupils, a characteristic that gave the Tayians a rather distinctly enlightened appearance, was darker than his fellow species.

‘This has to stay between the two of us. You know how it is- the Gaia Case is a very delicate one.’ He sighs dolefully though Hoseok doesn’t buy it for a second. He looks past Hoseok and smiles at the sight of the young Yishengs.

‘A new generation of Yishengs- look at them- so bright and eager to learn. We did this- all of us. We’re all here and alive!’ he claps his hands together before clapping Hoseok on the shoulder. ‘I don’t think I’ve ever thanked you for what you did- an excellent choice! We would have never progressed with our purge had it not been for you!’

‘It’s not something I take pride in- many were killed. Needlessly and wastefully,’ Hoseok replies shortly.

‘Sacrifices had to be made. It was not a lot if you think of all we have saved,’ Lal Haenoon gestures towards the Headquarters, ‘Come, I wish to speak to you before you meet your fellow team-members.’

Hoseok briefly entertains the idea of flooring Lal Haenoon (undoubtedly easy to do- Hoseok could do it blind-folded) and skipping this entire shady-ass mission. But he doesn’t.

‘I am happy that you agreed to partake in this mission. I do not doubt for a single second that you will fail me,’ Lal Haenoon walks at pace that feels too slow for Hoseok, reducing the natural pace of his feet. He knows he’s doing it on purpose. Lal Haenoon enjoyed irking people in the smallest ways- but never in a way where he could be implemented.

‘This is a mission that I am taking for the safety of the Universe, Director.’ Hoseok states, replying with an ease he didn’t feel. ‘I did not take it to serve under the orders of the Board.’

Lal Haenoon gives him a swift look before continuing, ‘As I mentioned before- due to the Gaia Case and its outcome, and the Treaty signed between Bhumi and the GLA, we cannot simply take over and overhaul the Bhumi System. And we definitely cannot have K’mara or Lmiura take control either. K’mara is conniving as she is spiteful towards the Venture Unit- she would take this opportunity to ruin us and everything we have ever done for the Universe. Lmiura believes she knows and understands the scope of what all of this could imply- what all of this could provide- but she does not. We cannot allow them to deter us- no matter what. And I need you to be there to make sure that the Venture Unit comes out on top in this mission.’

Hoseok keeps a straight face as he nods.

Lal Haenoon gives him a reassuring smile that does anything but reassure Hoseok and he follows him inside the Headquarters.

There was a simple beauty to the Headquarters- so in tune with all that was alive, and so accommodating and comfortable. Despite everything Hoseok knows, he finds himself feeling safer again. The large Atrium is well lit with natural light diffused with glowing soft spots on the walls. Green creepers extend out, branching over at random, almost wildly like no one cared which direction they were growing. Comfortable cushioned benches were arranged at a seemingly random arrangement but didn’t look cluttered or messy to Hoseok. The ceiling was domed and you could see the Šerdesas’s famed pale violet sky above.

They stop in front of the large reception desk, a young Yisheng-in-training stands behind it. He was dressed in the traditional Yisheng uniform of pale green, customized for each Species.

‘We are here to meet with Yisheng Amme,’ Lal Haenoon leans into the desk with one arm.

‘Yisheng Amme is at the 3rd Conference Hall in the West Wing- you may take Elevator-09 down the left hallway,’ the young Yisheng points one long thing arm towards the left.

‘Thank you,’ Lal Haenoon salutes the Yisheng cheerily.

But before they can take more than a few steps, Hoseok feels the hair on the back of his neck stand and feels a chill run down his spine. If he’s not mistaken, Lal Haenoon also seems to feel the same thing and they both turn to find Admiral K’mara standing at the wide doorways that lead into the Atrium.

Admiral K’mara, one of the GIU Trifecta was a powerful figure whose leadership within the GIU saw the organization rise to a high military power within the GLA. She was petite in build, she would probably barely graze Hoseok’s chin with the top of her head- but her presence was cowering. And it was such a contrast considering how delicate and ethereal she looked. She wore a magnificent robe in muted shimmering gold. There were tiny bells that hung from delicate crystal like double-helix horns that extended up from the crown of her head. She was breathtaking as she was deadly.

‘Lal Haenoon.’ Her voice is demure and gentle yet commanding attention and awe at the same time. She inclines her head towards the Raksane Tayian. And though Hoseok knows he shouldn’t be feeling this way, he can’t help but feel a little pleased at how Lal Haenoon seems uncomfortable with her presence.

‘Admiral,’ he responds a little gruffly.

‘And Hoseok,’ her neon-red eyes turn to Hoseok and he instantly looks away. Instead he bows his head out of customary respect as was tradition in Ngfy’widan. She laughs at his action, clearly knowing why he refused to look at her.
‘We are in neutral grounds- are we not all friends?’

Hoseok wants to roll his eyes. Instead he stands up straight and smiles back in return.

‘Of course Admiral.’

There’s a snort of a laugh and walking in behind K’mara is a slender Being, dressed similarly to K’mara in flowing robes of muted gold that’s a bit more grey than yellow. And Hoseok recognizes him as Sk’jin, the “Region Expert” and “Communications Manager” of their quad-unit.

They made an extremely visually appealing duo and Hoseok’s senses are telling him to run asap when 2 pairs of neon-red eyes fix on him. Their combined beauty is unnerving and forces you into a state of high-strung alertness. But the moment Hoseok is used to whatever glamour was cast around them, he notes something distinctly different about Sk’jin in comparison to K’mara. And though Hoseok has only ever seen one Khol’isa before- and that was K’mara, Hoseok can’t explain what it was that made Sk’jin seem somewhat not entirely like their shared species.

Hoseok doesn’t care for politeness or discretion as he scans Sk’jin’s appearance over carefully while K’mara divulges into a round of pleasantries with Lal Haenoon, who seemed to be getting more and more uncomfortable with each passing second. Lal Haenoon could you uncomfortable but K’mara made you literally squirm.

Sk’jin seems to know what Hoseok is doing and even stands in a way where Hoseok can study him better, giving him a quirk of a smile and a quick wink.

Hoseok still can’t point it out. Never in his near century long of working as a field infiltration agent has he ever come up with so many blanks and questions as he reads someone. It was a required and intensively trained part of his skill set, to assess and evaluate complete strangers and come up with an immediate and accurate reading. Assessment was key to survival in his field of work- and Hoseok finds himself wishing he had refused S’ava’s offer. All Agents within the Venture Unit had the opportunity to refuse missions- and especially with Hoseok no longer working for the organization, he could have easily said no.

He glances over at Sk’jin’s head, noting again that he didn’t have even a single trace of the crystal-like double-helix horn like K’mara did. The crown of his head was clear and no scar remained to indicate any damage or injury that could possibly lead to him losing his horns.

‘It’s rude to stare, Head Pilot Hoseok,’ Sk’jin smiles, inclining his head to the side a little. ‘All though it’s perfectly understandable.’

Before Hoseok can reply, Lal Haenoon and K’mara finish their strained exchange of pleasantries and make for the left hallway.

‘We are to be team mates, Hoseok,’ Sk’jin casually converses. His words are very well enunciated, an almost poetic manner of pulling on the syllables. If Hoseok wasn’t already so paranoid, he would think that his mannerism befitted his image,- an eloquent speech to match the elegance of the speaker.

‘As the Communications Manager, it is my duty to make sure that the Head Pilot is well equipped as he commandeer the ship. I will do my utmost to make sure that all channels are free and open for you to access at any given time,’ Sk’jin inclines his head gracefully. ‘I hope you will rely on me as we make sure that the Universe is once again secured.’

‘Of course,’ Hoseok replies, distrust mounting in him by the kilotons, making his entire being heavy with anticipation and wariness. ‘I look forward to working with you and discussing on matters regarding your expertise to ensure a safer passage during our journey.’

‘I have many expertise,’ Sk’jin gives him a smiling sideway glance. ‘I am open to sharing them all.’

Hoseok mentally adds Sk’jin into the list of Beings he doesn’t trust at once- right beneath Lal Haenoon and K’mara. It’s a tight squeeze but he’s there at once. Hoseok nods back stiffly and Sk’jin bows his head elegantly again, looking away with the slightest smirk.

The elevator ride is ridiculously awkward- and purposefully so because K’mara and Sk’jin don’t say a single word, smiling only to themselves rather serenely and exchanging small looks as though they were sharing some inside joke. It did nothing to calm down Lal Haenoon who was visibly sweating. Hoseok finds himself both admiring and loathing the two Khol’isa in equal measurement.

The elevator doors open directly into a large domed theater studio. Like every other section of the Headquarters, this large space was lit by the glass dome overhead. Half circles of raised shelves ringed the theater studio and at the center was a slightly raised dais around which 5 Beings were gathered. It’s reminiscent of the first room where they had their impromptu Court hearing except brighter and less somber.

‘Admiral K’mara, Chief Lal Haenoon- welcome,’ a voice calls out, too deep to be considered feminine. ‘And Hoseok of Ngy’wid, and Sk’jin of Khol’isa.’

Hoseok bows again before stepping forward alongside the other three.

He recognizes most of the Beings near the dais.

Yisheng Amme who had greeted them stands at the center of the semi-circle they have formed around the dais. She was from the heavily tropical planet of Khhem, a planet that no one other than her own species could enter due to the extreme weather conditions that wrapped around the small planet. And though if you were “lucky” enough to safely make it past the storming and broiling ionosphere, and somehow landed on the damp valleys of their terrain- you would be killed by the highly acidic air that was natural for the planet. Khhem’s atmosphere compromised mainly of sulfuric acid and ammonium bisulfate due to the continuous heterogeneous oxidation of sulfuric/nitrate dioxide. The toxicity in their soil was a result of the natural excess of fossil fuel that boiled in large sections across their southern hemisphere- the fumes from these pools would then oxidize in their naturally catalyzing atmosphere. But if you were prepared with some sturdy air-tanks and strong spacesuits that somehow escaped the corrosive touch of the equally acidic soil, then you would most likely be mauled to death by the carnivorous nightmare inducing wild monsters that freely roamed the acidic planet.

Her people, the Khhemsa, were almost as equally terrifying as the monsters that roamed her land and waters. With little to no anthropomorphic features, the Khhemsa stood at nearly 2 meters in height on average, with 2 pairs of spindly and knotted appendages that functioned for arms and a pair powerful legs that compromised most of their height. They were powerful runners, outrunning the monsters that roamed their lands, surviving the harsh conditions of their planets during the first stages of developing their communities in their own version of civilization development. And to help keep their balance as they ran on all 6 appendages, was a long sinewy tail that ended in a sharp protruding bone. Legend had it that it was once poisonous but after eras of evolution, lost its poisonous attribute and was now instead a useful defensive mechanism. Their skin, an interesting biological phenomena that was impermeable to the acidic nature of their planet, was a deep blood red and scaly in appearance. They had 3 pairs of beady eyes lined up around their angular faces.
angled upwards, and a wide set mouth that didn’t fully close, revealing needle-like teeth. Being naturally hairless, Yisheng Amme did not carry the trademark silver hair of her rank- but rather her eyes carried on the trait, somehow adding an even scarier contribution to an already frightening species.

If Hoseok was being honest, he would simply describe the Khemsa as nightmarish because as they step closer he senses all 6 eyes following after him and he fights the urge to simply get the fuck out again.

Standing next to Yisheng Amme and an entire head shorter is Chief Xmi Head of the Galactic Security and Safety Department. He looks drained and exhausted, not a surprising look for someone of his responsibility. Chief Shn’ow Head of the Trade Department stood to Xmi’s left. He was good friends with Lal Haenoon and gave the latter a friendly nod. Lal Haenoon immediately turns to walk towards where Shn’ow stood.

Standing at Yisheng Amme’s right are Chief Lmiura and a Being Hoseok immediately recognizes as the single key Information Analyst whose findings lead the entire Venture Unit to retrieve into their own emancipation to weed out those involved with the Yishengs in their mission to overthrow the Universe.

Namjoon looks different from the last time Hoseok saw him in Court. He looked healthier and was no longer sickeningly thin- no doubt because he wasn’t stressing for his life and the outcome of the Universe anymore. His hair wasn’t the scraggly blond it used to be- now instead a dark shiny brown and neatly styled away. He no longer looked haggard and bedraggled either- instead he looked smart in his nondescript dark blazer and trousers. He was dressed yet again in a high-collared shirt, covering the entirety of his neck. The only skin exposed are his hands. And Hoseok knows why.

The people of Kutsoglera fell victim to one of the biggest pirate-raids known in recent GLA history. Originally a peaceful and rather primitive planet, set during the beginnings of a global settlement, the people of Kutsoglera were a simple and happy folk. That was until the raid took place. They were not a part of the GLA- so they had no help, no hope, as the pirates swarmed them with proton-missiles and TeorSer fire. The entire planet was raided, their people killed, and those who survived were sold into slavery or worse. Kutsoglera was transformed into a crude pirate-controlled planet and her people were cruelly violated and tortured. Attempts at biological experimentation rose and the Kutsoglerin were the living subjects.

This reign of terror lasted half a century before the Venture Unit was able to rescue the planet. But by then only a mere 80,000 of her people were alive. They were already at a low population, but now chances of extinction were high because most of them succumbed to their conditions and their numbers dwindled. The Yishengs were able to heal and cure those who survived but there were those whose experimentations went too far- and they would live the remainder of their lives carrying the physical weight of their horrendous past with them.

Hoseok himself has never read the files regarding the extensive and cruel experiments conducted on the people of Kutsoglera but he has a sinking feeling that Namjoon would sooner kill him then reveal what was done to him. He must have been a child during the raid.

Namjoon was widely known throughout the secretive realm of the Venture Unit as one of the most brilliant and highly intelligent strategist and Analyst. He had been involved in the case since the beginning, before they knew what the implications of anything meant.

It was Namjoon who had discovered the link between the System of Bhumi and the Akramanese. It was Namjoon who discovered the link between the Akramanese and the Yisheng. And with his findings, the Venture Unit immediately pulled out of the GLA-intent on cleaning out their own organization. Namjoon had single-handedly worked to uncover each informant, each spy, each traitor.

When K’mara goes to stand next to Namjoon, he smiles politely at her, bowing at the waist elegantly and taking her proffered hand and placing a barely there kiss over her knuckles. He’s still bowed over a little as he listens to K’mara, an engaging smile on his face.

And this was what Hoseok didn’t trust about Namjoon. In fact this is what he didn’t trust about anyone involved in the Gaia Case. They all worked under a mask of pretend-unity, united with the intention to bring safety and peace for the Universe while plotting to undermine the other with their own set of plans and ideals.

Namjoon bows again to Sk’jin who is all smiles and graceful manner, long flowing sleeves drifting almost in slow-motion as he shakes Namjoon’s hand. K’mara is seemingly introducing them and Sk’jin has a wide-eyed look of innocent awe as he gazes up at Namjoon. Hoseok could retch from the pretentiousness.

Lmiura is nodding politely at K’mara behind Namjoon and then at Sk’jin who bows elegantly again.

Hoseok is already tired from the direction this trip was clearly headed for. Namjoon was appointed the team-leader as well as Navigator. They were going to have to work with each other consistently- the Head-Pilot and Navigator were the pillars of balance inside any ship. If Namjoon was how he presented himself at Court- then flying to Bhumi and completing their mission would be easy. To an extent. Hoseok doesn’t know where Namjoon’s stands in this entire mission. He was a member of the Venture Unit before- working tirelessly to help the remainder of the Board of Divisions to set their organization right and remove the traitors. But he was a candidate from Lmiura.

Hoseok glances over at Sk’jin. He definitely did not trust the Khol’isa. Not only was he a direct member of K’mara’s innermost circle, Hoseok could not find any concrete information on his background or records in any of the Archives but public and illegal. It was as though Sk’jin never existed.

‘Now that we have all gathered here,’ Yisheng Amme calls out after Sk’jin steps back behind K’mara, sending a wink at Hoseok.

‘We may begin our meeting.’

Hoseok does a quick count. The 6 members of the special Jury were present. Namjoon, Sk’jin, and himself were present from the quad-team. There was one missing.

He catches Sk’jin doing a quick count as well, eyeing the Yisheng curiously in return.

‘I beg your pardon Yisheng Amme for interrupting you,’ Hoseok calls out, plastering on a smile on his face. ‘But I believe we’re missing one?’

‘All are present.’

Hoseok’s skin crawls, his hair standing on end. How had he not seen him?

Standing behind Yisheng Amme is a figure clad entirely in pitch black. The sight of the uniform shakes Hoseok to his core- having seen glimpses of dark figures swiftly killing and vanishing from sight in a manner of seconds.
The agents of the Galactic Inquisition were numbered at a mere 2,500. And a single one of them could singlehandedly assassinate an entire building of Beings in under an hour and raise no alarms. S’ava had only guessed that Yoongi, the teams weapon-specialist, was a former member of the GI. But Hoseok had deemed it impossible.

Agents from the GI were still being healed and being reintroduced to the Universe outside of their warped reality. Most of them had disintegrated into the mental state of an infant. Deadly killers from urban-legends were now unable to feed themselves without help, unable to speak or comprehend their surroundings. So what was he doing here?

He didn’t look any different from the image on the report Hoseok had received a few days ago. Pale skin, dark hair, dark eyes, no outstanding features. And for someone of such a deadly background, Hoseok wasn’t able to detect his presence at all. Unlike how he’d felt K’mara and Sk’jin’s presence- he felt nothing from Yoongi.

There was nothing. Hoseok could read nothing.

And this, more than anything, frightens him.

Hoseok glances over at the others to see their reaction. Sk’jin’s calm demeanor is broken, a visible frown on his face. K’mara looks stunned. Namjoon has taken a physical step back, Lmiura’s eyes are widened. Lal Haenoon had let out an audible gasp and grabbed on to Sh’now’s arm in his alarm. Xmi and Yisheng Amme were the only ones unaffected and Hoseok guesses it’s because they knew he was there from the beginning.

‘Like I said,’ Yisheng Amme continues, her sharp teeth showing fully. ‘We will begin our meeting.’

She takes a single step forward and with one of her hands, places a small orb like object on the ground. The Dais lights up holographic projections, rendering briefly before a trajectory lights up stretched across a wide space.

‘As you have all read the reports and have been briefed by your supervisors, I do not think it is necessary to brief you again.’ Yisheng Amme states. ‘This is your trajectory- or at least the public version of it. Namjoon, as Navigator, you will be responsible in plotting out a trajectory that will guide you away from most check points and away from the eyes of the public GLA Docks. Hoseok, as Head-Pilot, you will be responsible for the safety of the ship, therefore your team, and the “cargo” you will be taking. Sk’jin will be responsible for Communications- he will negotiate your journey safely in case you come across situations that cannot allow a more aggressive approach. However, if an aggressive approach is needed, Yoongi, in charge of security, will be handling the situation. You all have your positions that you will dedicate yourselves to. One weak link will lead to the failure of the mission. Is this understood.’

Hoseok nods; Sk’jin and Namjoon nod as well but Yoongi remains motionless. But Amme doesn’t seem to mind.

‘The cargo you carry will contains the technology required to revive the planetary system of Bhumi. We have not been able to gain any additional information regarding the planets within it. We’ve been able to find gaps in their shield that prevents us from really scanning the System to confirm the snippets of footage we’ve been able to collect. You can overview the footage after our meeting is adjourned.’ Amme adds with a short nod towards Namjoon who looked like he had a question. But regardless of the clear indication to not interrupt Namjoon cuts in.

‘I have a comment,’ Namjoon says calmly with a polite smile that doesn’t quite reach his eyes as he gazes at the glowing trajectory. ‘If this is indeed important to the GLA then they could declare this as another mission under their own colonization policies.’

‘This is not possible because of the Treaty signed between Bhumi and the GLA,’ Chief Xmi quickly answers. ‘The Treaty bars us and any GLA authorized mission or visit from entering their space-borders. It also obliges us to take measures from our side to make sure that we honor their side of the Treaty by preventing others from entering their borders. Which is why at this current moment, none of you are authorized by any organization.’

‘Now that that has been cleared up,’ Amme continues with a thankful nod of her head towards Xmi. ‘That is the disguise you will be using when you fly to Bhumi- a trade ship delivering items to Matlaab.’

The holograph projection changes and a model-size of a compact and medium-sized ship appears instead. 4 separate engine-wings with powerful independent propeller finds that give way to beamer-charged anti-matter propeller that will burn with no visible colour in space. Reversible landing gages weighed under the engine wings for landing and the main body was of a sturdy rectangular construct. It could easily house 20 Beings in it, judging simply by the size of it. But Hoseok guesses a majority of the space inside would be used for cargo storage.

‘But due to an error, you will be waylaid and end up by mistake in Bhumi. Considering that it’s dead-space, there will be no Docks, forcing your hand to take you to what appears to be a moon in order to repair your ship.’ Lal Haenoon chimes in. ‘All communications will be cut after this point- and I’m afraid you really will be left alone after this point.’

‘I beg your pardon?’ Sk’jin asks politely.

‘There is no contact beyond the space-borders of Bhumi,’ K’mara says pleasantly. ‘Due to the Bhumian technology. It scrambles all communication waves sent from inside of Bhumi. But to an extent- we might be able to contact you and track you. You will not be entirely alone.’ She gives Lal Haenoon a reprimanding look to which the latter replies with a sheepish shrug.

‘We understand that this is a lot to carry.’ Lmiura speaks out for the first time. ‘This is not an easy mission, nor is it a safe one. We cannot guarantee your safety outside of what you can provide yourselves once you’re inside the System. But what we are you- what you all are doing- is making sure that the Gaia Case does not happen again.’

‘The events that took place on Earth- it was a result of our blindness, our pride, and our vanity,’ Amme’s voice is quiet. ‘Due to the decisions made by my brothers and sisters, we allowed the creation of the Akramanese; a force of reality that we still cannot comprehend, existing beyond the dimensions that we know and understand. It was our fault that they set out set out to destroy all that we know and love. Our search for a permanent peaceful unity birthed the most guile and senseless form of death and cruelty. And we will do everything in our power, to stop that from ever happening again. And that can be stopped, by making sure that Bhumi is once again secured and made safe.’

‘Well-spoken Yisheng,’ Lal Haenoon claps cheerily, breaking the solemn atmosphere and filling it with mild irritation and looks of disdain. ‘Now that you all know what have to do, why you have to do it- it is time for you to do it!’

‘You will be equipped with everything you will need inside the ship. Every comfort possible, and a Class-2 GLA Pass- so that things don’t look too suspicious for a private trade ship.’ K’mara smiles as though she found it amusing. ‘The cargo has already been sent to the Yisheng Hangar Bay carrying both the terraforming technology as well as dispensary technology to make sure that nothing of Akramanese make remains.’

‘This mission is expected to take 2 sols,’ Lmiura summarizes. ‘You will have unconditional funding for every single step and after the success of the mission, you will be granted full retirement and exemption from any past records. Do any of you have any questions?’

None of them do.

‘Then that’s great! Here’s your GLA Pass,’ Chief Sh’now tosses it careless at Namjoon who catches it deftly without looking at it, instead leveling the Chief of Trade with a hard look, no attempts made in smiling. ‘Take care of yourselves and that ship- I chose her personally- treat her well!’ Sh’now slaps Hoseok on the shoulder before pompously walking out. Hoseok wants to take the metallic card from Namjoon’s hands and throw it back at Sh’now right between his squinty little watery eyes.

Lal Haenoon grips his arm firmly, as though to remind him of what he’d said and gives him what Hoseok suspects is a look Lal Haenoon thinks makes him look mysterious and cool. In all honesty it makes him look like an idiot and Hoseok hopes he trips on his way out.

He doesn’t.

Chief Xmi performs a complicated looking bow towards them, a fleeting expression of regret as he sweeps the room one more time before nodding at Amme and he too exits though it’s towards a door Hoseok hadn’t seen when he walked in.

‘We hope and pray for your success,’ Lmiura says as she and K’mara step away from the dais.

‘We hope you will remember the importance of this mission when you are forced to make difficult decisions,’ K’mara says sagely.

Hoseok doesn’t know why, but he feels a slight chill at her words.

‘I hope you all get along,’ she adds with a sly smile before turning and leaving with Lmiura the way Xmi had left.

Amme is left and she lifts all of her arms up, palms looking upwards. She motions for them to stand in front of her and Hoseok finds himself standing in between Yoongi and Sk’jin and finds it greatly uncomfortable.

The Yisheng Directory may have lost their authority within the GLA and its other organizations, but Hoseok still finds himself regarding them with respect. It might be conditioning, but Hoseok would rather not condemn an entire organization of Beings based on the decisions and actions of a few who represent them. His life in the Venture Unit and before that taught him as much.

And despite her appearance that was worthy of nightmares, Hoseok feels nothing but profound sorrow from the Khhemsa as she looks down at all of them. She spreads out her arms over their heads, as though she was about to bless them. Hoseok doesn’t know what to do here exactly- was this a Yisheng thing? Or was this her own cultural thing?

Unexpectedly, Yoongi to his side kneels down on one knee, head bent.

Sk’jin is quick to follow and also kneels down elegantly, his hair is pale pink in this light. Hoseok’s distrust spikes.

Hoseok and Namjoon share a quick look before they both kneel as well.
‘And in the tongues and dialect of all those who call this Universe their home, I bid you, my brothers, the blessings of one, the blessings of all.’

This suddenly doesn’t feel like a mission to Hoseok anymore. He’s reminded of something else that he can’t exactly remember.

Next to him, Yoongi stands, and Sk’jin follows simultaneously. Hoseok and Namjoon stand together as well.

Amme raises only one hand up and she tilts her head up towards the sky. Her hand reaches up, as though waiting for something.

And Hoseok finds himself really taking the time to listen properly.

He can hear leaves rustling faintly, a faint echo from somewhere of someone’s footsteps. The soft murmur of the wind.

Yoongi raises his hand up too, causing the other three to do the same. A few seconds later, Amme closes her hand and holds her closed fist at the center of her chest- no doubt where her heart lay.

They all move to do the same.

‘And when you find yourself in times of trouble or woe, listen to the music from the stars- and let them guide you with their wisdom, Memory, and Time.’

And Hoseok realizes, as he holds his fist over his heart, that this reminds him of a funeral.
I’M BACK Y’ALL!! HERE IS THE NOT-EXACTLY-SEQUEL-SEQUEL TO AMULGOE!!! I HOPE MY OLD READERS WILL ENJOY THIS AS MUCH AS THEY DID AMULGOE AND I HOPE MY NEW READERS ENJOY THIS JUST AS MUCH!

Like I said this isn’t exactly a sequel to AMULGOE, so you don’t have to read it- this can be read as a stand-alone fic because I will explain everything anyways. But if you want to- the A Misguided and Unnecessarily Long Galactic Odyssey to Earth is a 80 chapter 750,000K monster of a fic that you VERY welcome to read! It's up on my AFF- will link below ^_^

I will be updating every Wednesday night! Until uni starts sighs heavily

I’m so nervous guys!! I’m back with a chaptered fic from the same amulgoe-verse and I’m nervous. I really hope you all enjoy it! please come scream at me on twitter/tumblr/ao3/aff! I will scream back!

See you next Wednesday!

(PS)- the ship looks very similar to the Prometheus from the Prometheus movie https://twitter.com/Unclssfd_Senpai https://www.tumblr.com/blog/unclassifiedsenpai

http://www.asianfanfics.com/profile/view_author_stories/1132373/L
“Name” [noun]: a word or set of words by which a Being, animal, place, or thing is known, addressed, or referred to.

Chapter Notes

See the end of the chapter for notes

‘What is your name?’

Room measurement 20 x 32 meter square. Name: Section 31-92-00-GL.

Object measurement 30 x 24 x 35 inches. Name: Desk.

Object measurement 8 x 5 inches. Name: Screen.

Object measurement-

‘What is your name?’

Object measurement 1.73 meters. GLA ???. Male. Unknown. Classified. Name: -.

‘Restate your request.’

‘…hmm. Are you an Android?’

Object measurement 1.73 meters. GLA ???. Male. Unknown. Classified. Name: -.

‘Restate your request.’

‘I don’t think you are…you don’t have to wear the helmet you know? It’s hard to keep track of anyone here- just another face in the crowd.’

‘Mission statement.’

‘…I wasn’t told much about your lot…care to enlighten me?’

Object measurement 1.73 meters. GLA ???. Male. Unknown. Classified. Name: -.

‘Restate your request.’
Upon leaving the immediate vicinity of the Yisheng Headquarters, the level of animosity and suspicion rises up and is almost palpable. The tension is stifling and makes for an intensely strained and quiet walk up to the Yisheng Hangar Bay. Even the peaceful and healing atmosphere that the Headquarters was universally famous for couldn’t form a scratch on the thick blanket of distrust that lay over them. The fact that they’re walking across a wide wooded garden famed across the Known Universe for its beauty makes the entire situation hilarious. The contradiction of their environment to the mood that surrounds them borders on comical.

Sk’jin wants to laugh.

He is acutely aware of the distrustful looks thrown his way. In fact, most of this gaze is thrown his way without any guise or attempt made to cover up. Hoseok, the Ngfy’widan, is watching him with a casual stance- his form relaxed and apparently at great ease. He was clearly trained, very effectively and efficiently, to disguise and mask his motions. Sk’jin had been somewhat surprised that Lal Haenoon would actually bring someone like Hoseok, a field agent from a Division that wasn’t under his governance, into a mission like this. Sk’jin had initially thought Lal Haenoon would put someone under his own Division into the mission. It would make sense after all. But looking at what he’d done- choosing Hoseok to “represent” the Venture Unit was probably a smart move that benefited the mission.

Besides, field agents from the Infiltration Division were deadly individuals who were capable of any and everything. They were wild-cards, moving with ease along the darker side of the moral spectrum in order to get things done. Most of them came from a criminal background- not of the everyday petty crime sort of background, but of Level 1 Prisoner status sort of criminal.
They were mass murderers, masterminds, Beings who had an undeniable intelligence for all things twisted and manipulative.

Perfect for the Venture Unit to use to infiltrate other intelligent Beings who were involved in all things twisted and manipulative.

Fight fire with fire.

Sk’jin has come across many agents from the Infiltration Unit. While some were only working for the Venture Unit as a means to avoid the maddening darkness of Level 1 Prison (which was totally understandable and honestly a much smarter move in Sk’jin’s humble opinion), there were some who were genuinely trying to give back to the Venture Unit for giving them a second chance (a sort of dumb reasoning, according to Sk’jin).

After a quick observation of the Ngfy’widan, Sk’jin guesses that Hoseok’s participation in the Venture Unit was probably entirely voluntary and not involved with prison (or trying to escape prison). The people of Ngfy’wid were known to join the Venture Unit more often than not. Their natural abilities made them excellent infiltrators and the entire surviving population of the Ngfy’widan people felt indebted to the Venture Unit. If memory serves him right, the Venture Unit were the ones who were helping them regrow and restore their home planet.

Sk’jin has also fought and killed many field agents who thought they were smart enough to waylay him. But that was all a very long time ago. Sk’jin likes to believe that he is a changed Being now-reborn anew from his past. But that certainly did not mean he was entirely willing to participate in this mission for its stated objectives.

Because while his other team members were no doubt swayed by fancy words and illusions of grand schemes to save the Universe- Sk’jin isn’t effected or remotely interested in saving the Known Universe. No- Sk’jin has other things he needs to see to and this mission was going to take him there. Sk’jin does not have the time to burden himself with ideological beliefs and heroic endeavors.

With prolonged observation, Sk’jin can safely assume that Hoseok is probably one of them too. Despite being exposed to a whole different side of the Universe and more, Hoseok was still here, trying to do the “right” thing. It probably ran in his blood, bound to his genes and making up his DNA.

It’s an extremely colourful contrast to Sk’jin’s own people and their reaction towards the GLA in general. Sk’jin can safely say that K’mara, and now himself, were the only Khol’isa who were working members of the GLA. The rest of his people lived in one of the many city-state moons in Raksane Tayi. They refused to participate in any dealings with the GLA but still depended on them for their living and livelihood.

Sk’jin despises a lot of Beings- individuals, groups, entire societies- Sk’jin has lists and lists of these Beings. But his own people ranked highest in this list of personal disdain. Arrogant, haughty, and never moving past former glories that never existed to begin with. The Khol’isa were the prime example of unfounded privileged living and Sk’jin hates it.

Hoseok looks like the type of Being who was probably doing this mission for the sake of the objectives stated in their briefing. Not that anything was wrong with it. It was wonderful-honourable even. But incredibly naïve and if Sk’jin was capable of feeling it, worrisome as well. How did he even become a field agent for the Infiltration Division?

But Sk’jin knows not to base all of his decisions and assumptions of someone based on his first impression (no matter how accurate his observations were)- he’s been mistaken a total of 3 times in his life before; and the last time his assumption turned inaccurate, he had been left for dead.

Sk’jin looks away from Hoseok and instead catches Namjoon’s eye.

In all honesty, a majority of the animosity and distrust comes from the Kutsoglerin. His self-introduction inside the Yisheng Headquarters had been so obviously staged that Sk’jin couldn’t help but laugh. But now, away from the special-jury, Namjoon has abandoned any semblance of friendliness with straightforward suspicion and guardedness.

Sk’jin smiles at him, head tilting a little so that the sun caught on his hair in a way he knew made him look like he was caught in a vision of golden light. But Namjoon isn’t effected. He doesn’t look remotely impressed or distracted. Shame, Sk’jin reflects to himself- he hoped he would have some fun on this mission but he just had to be stuck with the most indifferent and paranoid Beings this side of the Universe.

Sk’jin glances over Namjoon’s form, causing the latter to level him with an expression that was both challenging and resigned. Instead, Sk’jin winks back at the Kutsoglerin, cocking one eyebrow up at him. Namjoon’s expression doesn’t change so Sk’jin exaggerates a sad expression and sighs plaintively as though deeply wounded. Sk’jin notes how Hoseok watches them like a predator would, waiting to catch any point of weakness.

This was going to be a stress filled mission with zero fun.

Hoseok looks like he might actually be nice to talk to- if it weren’t for the fact that they were in a mission (this mission) together. And Sk’jin would really rather not trust anyone Lal Haenoon put up as their candidate. The Raksane Tayian was a slimy insufferable arrogant excuse of a leader and Sk’jin would love to see him and his organization burn to the ground. Or implode in space (Sk’jin isn’t particular about it). Especially after everything he’s seen.

Lmiura however was of a much more open and easily readable character. Sk’jin wasn’t surprised at her choice considering Namjoon’s background as a whole. And to an extent, Namjoon seemed to exude this same characteristic. Possibly because of his former position as an Information Analyst (If anything, Namjoon probably deserves the title of Region-Expert better than Sk’jin), he wasn’t necessarily trained to be as masked in his actions and features like Hoseok was. But then again, Hoseok was a Ngfy’widan meaning he could very well control each and every facial muscle and manipulate his expressions if needed. It was handy no doubt. Sk’jin briefly wonders if it’s because of this attribute or something else that contributes to Hoseok’s 275 confirmed kills over his impressive career as an agent for the Infiltration Division. It was cute almost. The Infiltration Division were like galactic vigilantes: legally backed up bad guys killing off illegally backed up bad guys. Sk’jin guesses that the official record is different from the actual numbers- doctored a little to make it look a bit more “contained” and planned out. Of course this was just the official mission list of Beings that needed to be taken out,- who knew where that number stood if you really looked through his records?

The walk to the Hangar Bay is quiet long. Perhaps too long. Was this preplanned in hopes that they would bond as a team? Sk’jin smirks to himself (getting long side-glances from Hoseok and Namjoon) and wonders if he should start a dead-pool. See who is the quickest to snap and take out someone. He ends up laughing out loud at his own thought, causing the two on either of his side to take a precautionary step away.

Oh no, I’m not crazy. Not anymore Sk’jin wants to say but he doesn’t. And as Sk’jin can’t do anything to relieve the tension in the air, he might as well add more to it.
‘So,’ Sk’jin begins as soon as he’s contained himself well enough to speak. He nearly loses it again when he notices the slightest tensing up in both Namjoon and Hoseok’s shoulders. ‘Is this your first joint mission?’

The only reply he gets is a brief look from both Hoseok and Namjoon before they proceed to ignore him, tension spiking up even more. Sk’jin wants to cackle. Even if this trip was going to be boring, he’s pretty sure he can get a rise from either one of those two easy. Based on his observations, Namjoon seems like the most likely candidate to snap.

‘Yes.’

Sk’jin nearly jumps at the sound of the quiet voice a little behind him.

Yoongi, the weapons-specialist, is walking behind him, his footsteps make no sound and if it weren’t for the fact that Sk’jin was looking at him with his very own eyes, he would have doubted himself. Unlike how with Hoseok and especially Namjoon, Sk’jin could simple gouge their presence from the general force of their being, Sk’jin cannot sense a single thing from this Being.

‘I was under the impression that GI agents worked solo operations,’ Sk’jin manages to collect himself, falling in-step with Yoongi instead, behind Namjoon and Hoseok. Sk’jin is amused when they angle their bodies a little inward, like they can’t help themselves from turning back to listen to the conversation. Or possibly to defend themselves- maybe both.

Because if anything, their weapons-specialist was the most confusing and displacing aspect of the entire mission. Anything he did or said was instantly scrutinized and analyzed in hopes of getting some form of reaction or reading from this nearly automated Being. Sk’jin is pretty sure he’s had better readings from actual automated constructs like Cyborgs and other minor Bots.

‘Mission dictated the amount of participants,’ is Yoongi’s reply.

Sk’jin feels like he’s looking at an Android or Cyborg that’s been installed with only a basic communication system without any of the more complex emotional response integrated into its core. Sk’jin is also extremely disconcerted with how he can’t sense this Being in front of him. All agents working under the GI were developed by the rogue Yisheng Directory to carry out their investigative needs and other requests that were no doubt of a sort that left lots of dead Beings behind. Sk’jin was in the presence of a Being who could effectively kill him, Hoseok, and Namjoon in a blink of an eye without any weapons and Sk’jin cannot sense him.

Sk’jin feels his temples pulse, and he absentmindedly rubs at it.

‘I see,’ Sk’jin replies, looking down at the Being with a charming smile.

There’s no effect. Not that Sk’jin was expecting any. He’s just surprised in general that he’s gotten any words out of him. In fact he’s very surprised any of the GI were still functional and roaming about.

‘How many others are there like you?’ Sk’jin asks, aware that he sounds a little insensitive.

‘There were 2,500 of what is known as the Galactic Inquisition. There are 1381 left, none are at mission-operation anymore.’ Yoongi replies, not the least phased or offended by Sk’jin’s question.

‘What about you?’ Sk’jin asks with some confusion. If none were at mission-operation level anymore, where did that leave Yoongi?

Hoseok actually turns to look around, curiosity etched all over his features.
Yoongi, for the first time throughout the entire day, turns to look Sk’jin straight in the eye.

‘I am.’

‘Oh- it’s you again- or is it? Uniform doesn’t ever change does it? Have a name you can give me?’

Object measurement 1.73 meters. GLA ???. Male. Unknown. Classified. Name: -.

‘Maybe a nickname? Codename! A lot of agents have those- most of the agents from the Infiltration unit have codenames don’t they?’

Object measurement 1.73 meters. GLA ???. Male. Unknown. Classified. Name: -.

‘I was unsure the first time- but I’m positive now- you’re one of the Galactic Inquisition agents aren’t you?’

‘Mission statement.’

‘Take a seat! This is interesting! I’ve never really met one of the GI before- this is amazing! Where in the Headquarters do they actually even manage to hide you?’

‘Do you want something to eat? Drink? I mean- do you eat at all?’

‘Mission statement.’

‘…it’s…a little uncomfortable for most when your face is covered in a helmet you know? It actually makes you stand out more.’

‘Mission statement.’

‘…hmm, well. I guess you’re just not one for conversations- that’s fine too right? Getting the job done is the most important thing after all. Conversation at most times is a task- but sometimes it’s a true pleasure ain’t it?’

[RECEIVING DATA]

COORDINATES 91. 3466. 29. 1011

ORTANK X 7

DELIVERY

‘You got it?’

‘Mission accepted.’

‘All right! Good luck my nameless messenger!’

Unknown term: “good luck!” - retrieve definition. Memory bank: cannot be found.

Hoseok doesn’t understand Yoongi’s answer but apparently it seems to frighten Sk’jin because he turns pale with startling rapidity and Hoseok doesn’t know if it’s the lighting or a trick of his eye but Sk’jin suddenly seems to age. But it’s gone as quickly as it had come and Sk’jin looks just as unnaturally beautiful as before. And his expression of fright gives way into something else entirely which in turn makes Hoseok uneasy.

‘I understand perfectly,’ Sk’jin smiles sweetly. ‘Have you been living here at the Headquarters?’

‘Yes. For 2 sols,’ is Yoongi’s almost mechanical response.

‘A nice place to recover,’ Sk’jin glances around, looking up at the trees as though genuinely enjoying the scenery. ‘Were you living near the Earthian Memorial Asteroid Belt or at the docks in Mars?’

At this, even Namjoon turns to look back.

‘At the docks in Mars,’ Yoongi replies.

‘I am sorry for what happened,’ Sk’jin continues. ‘I believe you will find that we all share something in common Yoongi. We may all have much more in common that we all thought.’
Sk’jin looks at Hoseok and Namjoon with benign smiles, lifting his fair hands upwards, causing his robes to flutter a little from the motion. The sun shines through his fingers, pearlescent white blushing with a rosy hue from within. Hoseok swears he hears the minor chiming of bells. Sk’jin indicates to all of them in an almost royal manner, ‘We’re all lost boys here.’

Yoongi doesn’t reply to this but Sk’jin doesn’t seem nonplussed by it. Instead he’s smiling to himself, arms crossing behind him now, and a light graceful skip to his steps.

Yoongi was Human? Hoseok can’t help himself from taking another look at the GI agent behind him. He certainly fit the description of how Humans looked- but why would the GI have a Human agent with them? Humans did not fall under the list of Beings who were particularly famous for their abilities or skills. They had amongst the shortest life-span in all of the species living in the Known Universe. They were also among some of the weakest.

Hoseok’s entire family were members of the Venture Unit ever since the decay of their planet. His parents were both agents in the Venture Unit. His mother’s parents were also agents in the Venture Unit. And it continued on all the way back. And he’s pretty sure that he has a relative who worked on Earth, saving it from its death.

Humans were a frail and relatively young species. And now after the Gaia Case, were at a great risk of eventually entirely dying out as a species.

Hearing the news about the complete immobility of the GI agents wasn’t surprising. Hoseok knew about this because the Venture Unit was responsible for watching over them. The last time he’d heard any news about them, it had all come out with an extremely high level of failure and the continuation of their operation as an organization was beyond recovery. Whatever technology that sustained and maintained them left them completely defenseless in the face of reality.

So how was it that Yoongi, a Human, could be the sole conscious and functional agent left?

‘We’re here now,’ Namjoon says from the front. If the Kutsoglerin had any thoughts about this, it doesn’t show on his face.

Hoseok looks away from the confusing and contradicting duo behind him and focuses his attention on the “small” ship that suddenly appears as they take a sharp right along the garden path.

The Yisheng Hangar Bay is basically an open clearing in the dense forest, surrounded by trees that stand taller and thicker than the rest of the forest. There are low Hangars off to one side of the clearing but other than that, the area looks simply like a wide field of reeds.

The “small” ship is actually a rather large ship. Especially considering that it’s meant for only 4 Beings and a moderately sized cargo. But as Hoseok quickly scans the dark grey ship, he guesses that most of the mass of the ship was directly contributed by the Engines Rooms and possibly an entire hull dedicated to the fuselage, and Beamers and their coolant system. The engine-wings are massive, with a rotatable function allowing the ship to hover, and land without the need for a runway. The suspension tracks under the ship are almost overkill in Hoseok’s opinion- but judging by the overall size and design of the ship, Hoseok guesses it’s an extremely heavy ship. Hoseok would have preferred at least a week in advance to get used to the ship- maybe even dock it out in space rather than take off from within a planet. But seeing as Šerdesas had a forgiving atmosphere and the burn upon crossing the exosphere wasn’t too harsh on ships, it’s an ideal setting to test out the general feel of the ship.

As they get closer, Hoseok is able to read the model of the ship and isn’t too surprised that they’re getting the trial version of an updated Užkulisai-02. The Užkulisai was commonly used by the Venture Unit by their Exploration Division; especially for alien-planet investigation. It’s built for durability and designed to survive almost every possible space-related anomaly as well as the entire spectrum of violent planetary/atmospheric/terrain-based events. You could fly this model into a volcano and come out relatively undamaged. It had one of the strongest shields known to the universe, able to deflect and even completely disintegrate asteroids. Though the Užkulisai carried within her enough fuel cell to power a small planet for a day, she was packed with solar-panels all along the top of the ship, providing the ship with the option of sustaining the ship with self-generated energy. If Hoseok isn’t mistaken, the Užkulisai also had its own gravity generator and ventilation system independent from the rest of the ship; so that if problems or issues were to rise from internal Systems, the gravity and ventilation systems could still function.

The Užkulisai-01 was so popular and used so widely that the idea of creating a second model seemed unnecessary and pointless. It had been declared the perfect ship all over the Universe. But Hoseok guesses they made it even more “perfect”. And to test whether or not it was actually perfect, they were going to be the test-dummies for this model while completing this mission.

They walk around to the back of the ship, where the ships entrance doors were. There were two doorways in the back, between them a large gateway that could be lowered into a ramp to drive up heavy cargo. Judging by what they were going to have to do, Hoseok guesses that they’ll find a bunch of terraforming vehicles as well as a Transporter or two for in-planet purposes.

‘Ooh! We’re well funded,’ Sk’jin comments from behind him as they look over the ship from the back. ‘Can you fly this ship Hoseokkie?’

Hoseok doesn’t know how to respond to the sudden nickname so he chooses to ignore it and nods, ‘It’s not a problem.’

And it’s not a lie either. Though never formally trained by the Spatial Piloting School in Raksane Tayi, Hoseok has had plenty of informal training his entire life and has flown several Užkulisai-01 models before.

‘Confidence- I like that,’ Sk’jin claps.

Hoseok feels a little patronized but he can’t call Sk’jin out on it.

‘Are there any procedures you would like to take before take-off?’ Namjoon asks, turning to address Hoseok.

‘None from the outside,’ Hoseok replies looking up at the magnificent ship.

‘How long until we leave Cap?’ Sk’jin asks, stretching and yawning with more grace and elegance than anyone yawning should be allowed to have.

Namjoon looks at Sk’jin with an expression of befuddlement.

‘Yes- I’m addressing you- you’re the Captain of our team and the ship,’ Sk’jin swings his arms a little, bell chimes following his movement. He cocks his head at Namjoon, a rather coy smile on his face as he asks, ‘Have you not heard of nicknames?’

‘Nicknames are used instead of formal names to portray and establish closeness and familiarity.’

Everyone’s heads turn so quickly Hoseok is surprised he doesn’t hear whiplash. Yoongi doesn’t seem fazed at all by the stares he’s getting for what he just said.

‘See? Even Yoongi here agrees,’ Sk’jin regards the dark-haired agent for a while before saying, ‘I don’t have anything that comes to mind… but don’t worry I’ll come up with something for you!’

‘Thank you.’ Yoongi replies in monotone.

Sk’jin breaks out into laughter while Hoseok finds himself thrown in a loop. Nothing made sense.

‘If you don’t like Cap- I can just call you Nammie- suits you,’ Sk’jin looks like he’s about to give Namjoon a light nudge but the latter swiftly stepping aside and stands up to his full height.

Namjoon gives Sk’jin a hard look before saying in an even tone.

‘All right let’s all get this straight,’ Namjoon starts. ‘We are not on this mission to be close- this is an operation of utmost secrecy and importance. We are the minimum balance required to see to the missions success and that’s all we are. We are a team, yes. But that does not make us close. None of us want to be here and none of us want this to extend any more than it has to. And like you pointed out, yes, I am the Captain- so my first order for this team is to complete this mission as soon as possible.’

Sk’jin has an amused smirk on his face, regarding Namjoon with a slight tilt of his head. He chuckles a little before saying: ‘Pity your introduction was all an act- I thought you were quite the interesting fellow. I guess it’s only me and Yoongi here, right?’ Sk’jin glances down at Yoongi who remains completely impassive, as though he hadn’t heard Sk’jin at all.

‘Inside. Now.’ Namjoon barks before turning and walking up the ramp.

‘Ah- he’s the “all work, no play” kinda guy isn’t he?’ Sk’jin hums sympathetically before looking down at Hoseok. ‘Maybe we should try and hurry this up hmm Hoseokkie?’

For a brief moment, Sk’jin’s eyes glow red and Hoseok looks away at once.

‘Yeah- let’s start by getting inside the ship first.’

Sk’jin chuckles under his breath, waving along Yoongi who follows them in.

‘Ah! It’s you again! How are you today?’

‘Oh right! You’re not much of a talker. All work, no play eh?’

‘Mission statement.’

‘We’ve done this for years now- you know how it is. Take a seat! Please! Be more comfortable!’

To sit. Sit.

‘Oh- that was faster than last time. It’s like I’m teaching you something new!’

‘Or at least I hope I am.’

‘I guess you get to travel a lot. Do you enjoy it?’

‘I enjoy travelling too. But I haven’t been able to get away in a while- swamped with work. Though I guess travelling is part of your work.’

‘Mission statement.’

‘I bet you have great stories- maybe you can tell me some in the future?’

‘I can tell you some of mine when we have more time- you’re welcome to visit anytime.’

‘Or maybe I’m just not interesting enough-‘

‘Okay- so here’s today’s little delivery- a bit different this time around. It’s a retrieval. You can do that, right?’

[RECEIVING DATA]

COORDINATES 144. 8910. 3742. 4130. HNAM’DI

GENERAL HR’AME

NO WITNESS

‘Mission received.’

‘Great! Maybe next time we can have a drink together then eh?’

'Welcome to the Užkulisai, Captain Namjoon, Navigator. I am Lisai- the Užkulisai AI System under your command. How may I aid you today?'

Namjoon is a little taken aback as he enters the antechamber. The smooth automated voice fills the air in calming manner. Namjoon can’t quiet determine whether the voice is female or male- but it’s nonetheless pleasant and soothing to the ears. There had been a time when ship AI systems were built with responsive/vocal programs that sounded entirely too enthusiastic and cheerful. Luckily you could now choose and customize the vocal qualities of your AI system.

'I would like to be taken to my quarters Lisai,' Namjoon replies as he walks down the antechamber, taking note that it was an airlock room as well. There’s a mounted screen to the side, for manual operations for the door functions and airlock functions no doubt. They would all be connected to the Navigation Table in the Bridge. Namjoon makes a mental note to lock all of the operational systems running within each screen and panel to the Navigation Table.

‘Your quarters are located in the Second Floor, Cabin 02. You may access the Second Floor by using either the Hull Lifts or the Hangar stairs.’

‘Thank you,’ Namjoon replies back absentmindedly as the doors open smoothly and the entire layout of the ship reveals itself to him.

The interior of the ship is clean and minimal. The walls are white, smooth, and minimally designed. The corners are cut smooth and curved, creating a fluid appearance to the walls. The lighting is strong without being harsh and barely casts any shadows- it almost feels dimensionless.

The wall to the side lights up with an interactive map of the ship. A pale blue light lights up from where Namjoon guesses he’s standing and creates a thin line of blue indicating the path he should follow. Namjoon quickly studies the map, memorizing the placement of the rooms. He finds that the hallway he’s in is one of the arms of the large U-shaped hallway that wraps around the Hangar Bay and the ramp-gate. Though massive, the ship comprised of only 3 living/working levels; the rest were dedicated to the Engines or storage. There were a total of 20 “cabins”, a large space that made up a kitchen/dining space. There were 4 Medical Bays and a laboratory located behind the Hangar Bay, and a few Emergency MedPods located across the ship. The Bridge occupied the highest floor, a large unit where a large piloting team could easily fit yet a small one could easily control. Namjoon notes that the Navigation Table is located directly behind and above the Cockpit, overseeing that section.

Making sure he didn’t overlook anything on the map, Namjoon walks down the hall and finds the First Lobby. There are sturdy but narrow stairs leading upwards. And towards the middle of the U-shaped hall, the Hull Lift. There were comfortable couches strewn about and shelves put around at random. Namjoon guesses these would be nice accommodations if they would ever get around to using them. Flying to Bhumi itself won’t take too long. Not if they travel in warp after they leave the Raksane Tayi System. Lmiura had said the entire trip would take approximately a little more than an average sol but Namjoon would prefer to have it down under a sol.

Glancing around the Lobby, Namjoon spots a few cameras planted into the walls. The surveillance feed would be sent to the Navigation Table, unless it was designed differently. Namjoon forgoes the Hull Lift and takes the stairs up instead.

The floor upstairs has the same general layout. But instead of doorways opening into a series of Medical Bays, the space beyond the Second Lobby is open and sinks downwards a little, forming a semi-circle shelf of steps leading down to a large rounded table. There are seats placed around the table and attached in front of each seat is a screen. At the center is what Namjoon recognizes as a 3D projector not unlike the inbuilt projector pillars available in Navigation Tables. This was clearly a meeting-table of sorts. And right above the table is a ceiling window the exact same size of the table. Beyond this sunken circle a large kitchen area. From what Namjoon can tell it’s quite fully stocked and opens into the view of the Yisheng Headquarters in the distance. The whole area is brightly lit with both natural light from the wide window towards the end and from daylight-imitation fixtures overhead. There are no concrete hallways, just short stretches of walls to separate the Lobby area from immediately reaching each doorstep. Namjoon glances to his left and sure enough etched in glowing blue over a metallic plaque are the numbers 02 next to a doorway.

‘Cabin doorways are secured by passwords. You can set your own password by using the Cabin Security system inside.’

‘That’s good to know,’ Namjoon mumbles as his doors open for him. It’s a basic room, fitted with a low bed built into alcove to the side of the room. The alcove could transform into a bunk too-
Namjoon spots the slot from where you could pull out a secondary tier to create a bunk. On one side a simple desk and chair are fixed into the floor and to its side is a built-in rack. Namjoon didn’t bring a lot of things with him- just some clothes to change in and out of. But he spies a few hangers already carrying some clothing. Upon closer inspection, Namjoon finds a fully detailed, customized Navigator’s uniform. Of course, if this was a “family business” then he should be a legally qualified Navigator with a proper uniform. Other than that, he finds other pieces of clothing. Lmiura wasn’t kidding when she said everything was prepared for them in order to enjoy at least basic luxuries.

He steps away from the rack and slides open another doorway to reveal a moderately sized and equipped en-suite. Namjoon inspects each cupboard and drawer, keeping a list of the contents.

Walking back into his room, Namjoon makes a beeline for his Cabin-customized screen and reaches for his own screen. He had already created an extension to add to his room’s security. He had even built an entire security system in case the rooms didn’t come with one. Namjoon wanted the comfort of being able to rest and think in the privacy and safety of his room if things got too intense. And judging by who were in his team, Namjoon feels like he was going to really need it.

‘Lisai, can you send the Navigation Table settings and functions to Cabin-02’s customized screen?’

‘Understood Captain. However, holographic projections will be entirely compromised.’

‘That’s fine- I only want the security feed.’

As he waits for the extension to upload into the security system, Namjoon expands the cabin’s screen setting to project onto the wall over his bed.

‘Lisai please pull up live security feed,’ Namjoon orders as he finishes the last steps of his extension installment.

‘Security feed uploading. Would you like audio as well?’

‘That would be great, thank you.’ Namjoon replies as he reassigns a new password for his room as well as establishing a security password on the Navigation Table. The password was only for show of course- what would matter the most would be a scan of his neural and artery print to unlock any of his security measurements. Namjoon was in control of Navigation, so he was going to make damn sure that only he would be in control of it.

‘Feed uploaded.’

‘Please located team members.’ Namjoon calls out as he starts downloading the rest of the ship’s control system into his screen.

‘Head Pilot Hoseok is in Cabin-05. Communications Manager Sk’jin is in Medical Bay 3. Weapons Specialist Yoongi is in the Bridge.’

Three separate camera feeds light up on his wall.

The feed outside of Hoseok’s room occupies Camera-081. Obviously for privacy reasons there would be no cameras inside the Cabins. Out of all his team members, Namjoon finds Hoseok the least worrisome. Despite being Lal Haenoon’s candidate for this mission, and being a renowned Infiltration field agent, Hoseok didn’t pose too great of an immediate threat in Namjoon’s mind. Or perhaps he was being sidetracked by the other two who were very much a large threat in Namjoon’s thoughts.
‘Lisai, which Cabins are Sk’jin and Yoongi living in?’

‘Communications Manager has been issued Cabin-01, and Weapon’s Specialist has been issued Cabin-03.’

So, he was next-door neighbours with the GI agent. Great.

Namjoon glances over at the second camera feed. Sk’jin is inspecting the Medical-Bed, pale rosy hands expertly navigating the functions as he hums under his breath. He seemed altogether too happy to be in this mission.

‘Lisai does the Medical Bay have a security operation regarding its medical presets?’

‘Yes.’

‘If anyone were to try and tamper with it, would there be a breach in the system and an alarm rung?’

‘Yes. All Medical Bays are fixed with an internal security system that alerts the ship when there is a breach. This is the basis for the biohazard breach.’

‘Okay, thanks.’

Namjoon’s distrust towards Sk’jin was probably never going to change or subdue over time. There was something about the Khol’isa that disturbed and perplexed Namjoon. First of all, despite being a Khol’isa, Namjoon couldn’t find any indication of his species’ characteristic horns. This was in itself, unheard of. And he knows how the Khol’isa take pride in their own people and never marry outside of their own species. So any theory of Sk’jin being half-Khol’isa could be crossed out immediately. Second of all, his position within the ship was both unnecessary and entirely forced by K’mara, clearly. There was no dire need for a “Region-expert”. Namjoon himself would be able to provide all the necessary information required and needed to navigate towards and through Bhumi. And as for Communications Manager, they could have always installed an AI system for that, or Hoseok could easily multi-task that job seeing as it was the Head-Pilot’s duty to interact with Docks and Control Towers in the first place. A Communications Manager was just a middleman that they could do without.

Obviously, K’mara’s involvement with Sk’jin’s addition into the mission added to Namjoon’s distrust in the Khol’isa- but there was something distinctly off about their “Region-expert” and Namjoon wasn’t buying any of his smiles for a second.

Tearing his eyes away from the second feed where Sk’jin was now touching up his hair on a reflective surface behind the Medical-Bed, it takes the Kutsoglerin a solid 15 seconds to spot Yoongi.

Namjoon has never met a Being with as little physical presence as the GI agent. No amount of training taught you how to diminish your presence to that extent. And there was nothing that made him stick to your mind. While you were still reeling from the shock of discovering him, you would entirely forget he was there in the first place. Was this because of how they were created? Was this the result of the hyper-reality in which they were mobilized?

Namjoon shudders at the very idea of it. He’s not surprised to hear that the rest of the surviving GI agents were all immobilized.

Yoongi was perusing a screen mounted on a wall. He looked like a statue. His stillness was unnatural. He just blended in with his surroundings so easily it was disconcerting to say the least.
Even now, Namjoon has to consciously remind himself he was looking at a real living Being and not just some random segment of the wall. Yoongi isn’t even wearing clothing that would make him blend with the white interior of the room. He was clad fully in black.

There were few who knew the details behind the GI and their creation. All Namjoon knows is what the special court was told. Details regarding their creation and history were sealed and classified beyond what even K’mara or Lal Haenoon could touch. And Namjoon very much doubts that Yoongi would tell him anything regarding his background or previous life.

But moving past Yoongi’s dubious past, or at least moving to another section of it- he was from Earth? Or was at least developed using Human DNA. But why Human? It made no sense. And he was living in the Docks off of Mars? Doing what? And what was he doing here at the Yisheng Headquarters for two sols?

‘I am.’

His response to Sk’jin’s questions made no sense. He also didn’t refer to himself as a member of the GI. But he clearly was. And Sk’jin’s reaction hadn’t gone unnoticed by him either. And how did Sk’jin know? Was this because he was a Khol’isa? But Namjoon hasn’t heard of his species having extra-refined “Species Identifying” abilities. What did he know that Namjoon didn’t? The GIU never got their hands on the GI, so any information regarding Yoongi and his background or the rest of the information regarding the GI would be unknown to them. And seeing as how the “big three” (as Namjoon likes to mentally address the GIU, Venture Unit, and the Yisheng Headquarters) were in high tension with each other, it was safe to assume that there had been no sharing of information.

While Namjoon was able to label how he regarded Sk’jin and Hoseok, he cannot come to any form of conclusion towards Yoongi.

Namjoon watches the two camera-feeds side-by-side.

‘Lisai- perform a health scan on team member Yoongi.’

‘Scanning.’

Sk’jin is now in the laboratory, hands crossed behind his back as he regards some of the operation units and isolation tanks used to study and inspect foreign or alien matter. He carefully puts his hands inside the flexible gloved space of the isolation tank and seems extremely amused as he uses his gloved hands to pick up the instruments that lay inside of it.

Namjoon scans the other camera feed but doesn’t find Yoongi in it. Wondering if it’s a trick of his eye, Namjoon looks into the screen closely.

‘Lisai, please find Yoongi.’ Namjoon calls out as he steps back from the wall.

‘Team member Yoongi found.’

The feed shifts to another angle of the Hangar and Namjoon takes a moment to find the Human. Yoongi is staring straight into the camera.

Namjoon nearly falls backward in shock. His pulse races and a shudder runs down his spine.
‘Captain Namjoon. You are experiencing a sudden spike in your pulse-rate. Please calm down.’

Namjoon watches with purposefully deep and controlled breaths as Yoongi looks away and proceeds to walk out of the Hangar.

‘Lisai- are the Comm-Devices installed with tracking applications?’ Namjoon asks, his own voice sounding strained to his ears.

‘Yes Captain.’

‘Good- please notify me whenever Yoongi is 3 meters within me.’

‘Understood Captain.’

‘Good evening! I almost thought you weren’t going to make it today! How are you?’

‘Mission statement.’

‘Okay look- honestly I counted, and it’s been 5 years now that we’ve known each other. You’ve completed 31 missions on my behalf and the only thing you ever say to me is “mission statement”. I don’t even have a name to address you with. You gotta help me out here.’

‘Names are good- makes everyone comfortable if you have a name. Makes you more “alive”.’

‘I even have a bunch of aliases you know? Nothing serious of course- helps sometimes to do things under an alias- names can be too implementing. Legal procedures and all that.’

‘I mean- I don’t even know what you look like…what if we’ve walked past each other and I had no idea?’

‘You can you know, remove your helmet. I won’t tell anyone and I think you’re perfectly safe in here.’

‘I mean it’s up to you of course- or unless it’s against the rules or something.’

‘Or maybe you’re really not allowed to talk with me, haha, and you’re just indulging me? Is that what it is?’

‘If that’s so then I guess I won’t pressure you. But like, give me a nickname so that I can address you appropriately or something.’

‘Or not? Hhm…I guess- oh!’

Removal in process. Do not disengage. Removal in process. Do not disengage. Removal in process-

‘There you go! Bet that feels better doesn’t it? You’ve got a good face- pity you have to hide it all the time.’

‘Term: pity-…’

‘Oh-…oh wow?! You just - oh. Do you…do you understand me? Do you understand what I’m saying?’

‘Term: understand-…’

‘A-Are you all right? Wait was the helmet supposed to be helping you or-‘

‘Mission statement.’

‘-hey, come on. Look at me- I think you do understand me. Do you know how to answer?’

‘Term: Understand.’

‘Who are you?’

‘Object measurement 1.73 meters. GLA. Male. Unknown. Classified. Name: -.’

‘No- I meant…do you mind if I take a scan?’

‘Object measurement 1.73 meters. GLA. Male. Unknown. Classified. Name: -.’

‘…I’m just going to use this. To just scan you. Understand who you are. All right?’

‘Term: Understand.’

‘…I’ll take that as a yes…’

‘Term: Yes.’
‘So- Spaces, wow. Wait a minute this can’t be right? But…you’re Human?’

‘Term: Human.’

‘…did you know this?’

‘Mission statement.’

‘Why Human? Were you born on Earth?’

‘Mission statement.’

‘…all right…uh, here- oh, I guess you do need the helmet then.’

[RECEIVING DATA]

COORDINATES 8201. 560. 9332. 03. OS’NEB

ORTANK X 8

DELIVERY

‘Mission received.’

‘…I’ll see you next time then. Good luck.’

*

The Bridge of the Užkulisai-02 is a massive set with three tiers. The lowest was at the helm of the ship, the artillery controls panel otherwise commonly referred to as the tower-mast for no logical reason. It was a small space designed to fit in 3 seats from where every defensive/offensive weapon or firepower available to the ship could be controlled. This is where Yoongi will be stationed most times. Hoseok can only hope he won’t be required to actually actively use it for this trip.
The second lowest right above this space is the cockpit. It’s wider than the tower-mast with five seats and a complex dashboard sprawling around each seat. A secondary dashboard is located on the flip-side of the first, designed for manual operations and control in case of an emergency situation that required manual piloting. This is Hoseok’s area of expertise and control and as he walks around the seats, checking each console and rigging, he feels like he has a definitive purpose amidst the suddenness of this rather mad mission.

The highest tier expands out towards the rest of the Bridge. Control boards and the interface for every working system in the ship is set around the third tier. There are a few foot-ups set about, unattached to the any of the operational units. Sk’jin is relaxing on one of them in a very leisurely manner- a feat, considering foot-ups are at best, temporary seats to relieve your feet when you’re tired (as the name suggests). It’s made entirely out of a strong fluoropolymer, structured more or less like a tall stool. It was made with the intention of providing floor-occupants because during the evolution of ships and their designs, the Bridges were built to be of a specific size and no more unless the Captain of the ship declared that they needed more floor. And thus foot-ups were invented to make up excuses to that you could create more space than allowed by the first blueprints and since then has been integrated into every possible ship. So it’s not the best or the most comfortable place to sit, yet Sk’jin sits on it like it’s a throne. He’s taken off his outer robe to reveal a simpler linen robe tied and kept together around the waist with a slim band of fabric a shade darker than the green of his robes. Even like this, Sk’jin looks far more elegant and poised than anyone Hoseok has seen. It also didn’t help that the sun was shining down on them, filtering through some of the massive tree branches that extended into the Yisheng Hangar Bay. Bathed in shifting lights, Sk’jin is a living breathing work of art.

Sunlight filters into the Bridge through the massive interactive HUD spaceshield overhead. It spans from the lowest tier to the highest, curving back and ending right above Navigator’s Mast. Namjoon is standing there, his back to the massive spaceshield behind him, facing them over his seat and the Navigation Pillar.

Surrounding Namjoon in a divided ring is the Navigation Table. It’s an upgraded model that is slimmer and smaller than the traditional standard Table. And rather than the traditional rectangular shape, the latest design has the Navigation Table transformed into a ring. It tilts a little, forming an angled screen for better accessibility and interface. And at the center of this is a narrow pillar, used to project 3D holographic maps that can be adjusted in dynamic space. It’s from this elevated dais that the HUD could be activated for both the pilot and the weapon specialist.

Hoseok glances over at Namjoon who is looking down at what seemed to be his own NaviLet instead of the issued standard NaviLet that was still attached to the side of the pillar. He makes a few taps around the screen before looking up to acknowledge them all briefly.

‘Before we start I think it’s best if we establish some rules and establish a routine of sorts. I have a few requirements I want to address first and I would like everyone to comply in order so that we may all have a safe and successful mission.’

Namjoon looks over them one by one again, as though looking for any defiance or resistance. All he gets is a nod from Yoongi and a smirk from Sk’jin.

‘First of all, everyone will wear the Comm-Devices and will never under any circumstance remove it.’ Namjoon holds out his hand and on his palm are little silver cuffs. They gleam faintly in his palm, highlighting a small ring of colour at the edge of each cuff. Yoongi is the first to move, picking up the cuff with a white band across the cuff. Sk’jin moves next, eyes never leaving Namjoon’s as he drags the tips of his finger from Namjoon’s barely exposed wrist down his palm before picking up a cuff with a red ring around it. Namjoon doesn’t even blink in response to…to whatever Sk’jin was trying to do and extends his palm towards Hoseok who picks up the cuff with a blue ring around it. Namjoon already has his, ringed with black and attached to his ear.

‘Second of all, the Bridge should never be left empty. One of us always has to man the Bridge. I believe you have all met Lisai, the AI System. Though I have no doubt that she’s more than capable of warning us if we encounter any issue, it would be best if at least one of us is always stationed here. I’ve asked Lisai to set up a schedule based on our sleep-cycles and allotted extra-curricular time. Please fill out your details and submit them into the ship’s system and we can work out a schedule.’ Namjoon produces 3 other screens from the Table behind him. ‘Along with the Comm-Devices, here are the ship’s customized screens. The form you need to fill out is already on your screens.’

‘Why is your screen different? Aren’t you supposed to use a NaviLet?’ Sk’jin asks as he takes the screen from Namjoon.

‘I am using the NaviLet as well as my own screen to oversee the proceedings across the ship’s system. As we are few in numbers, I want to maximize and expand the safeguard that we can stretch over this ship.’ Namjoon replies without sparing a glance at Sk’jin. ‘And third, I’m aware that we are all here from very different background, working conditions, and personal beliefs. And as the Captain it is my duty to make sure everything works out smoothly. If there are any issues, matters of concern, questions, or information that will help with the mission, please come to me and we can all discuss it as a team.’

‘Team work!’ Sk’jin cheers from where he’s perched. ‘I love it!’

Hoseok can’t tell if he’s being sarcastic or not. Apparently, Namjoon can’t tell either.

‘All right- here is the trajectory we’re going to take to Bhumi,’ Namjoon reaches over to tap the pillar in the center. Automatically the lighting in the Bridge dims a little, the glass in the spaceshield darkens to minimize the sunlight. The top of the pillar glows before it expands outwards like a bubble and forms a massive glittering map of the galaxy Raksane Tayi was located in.

‘We’re here,’ Namjoon points at a region that glows a pale blue. ‘And Bhumi is here.’

The holograph shrinks, revealing 4 other galaxies before a pale orange glow lights up towards the edge of one of the galaxies.

‘I have plotted out 3 different sets of trajectories that will take us to Bhumi in approximately 3-4 months if we travel in warp without any interruptions or delays,’ Namjoon says as he taps on his screen. Three lines of pale blue light up and in completely different directions, lead up to the orange glow. ‘I have also plotted a few rogue trajectories, not to mention our “official” trip to Matlaab which is here.’

A red glow lights up some distance from Bhumi, within the galaxy it bordered.

‘So which trajectory do we take?’ Hoseok asks as he follows each line carefully.

‘That’s up to you,’ Namjoon replies, easily handing him his own screen. Hoseok senses the way Sk’jin’s eyes flit over this interaction. ‘Please select which route you would like to take and we will begin on that. Does anyone have any additional input, anything that might have to do with their expertise?’

Namjoon very lightly puts an emphasis on the word ‘expertise’. It’s clearly directed at Sk’jin who only tilts his head a little as he regards Namjoon with an amused expression.

‘Hoseok? Anything?’ Namjoon asks.

Hoseok looks up from Namjoon’s screen. He’s done an excellent job creating the trajectories. Minimum check-in spots, mostly all Docks, and no in-planet landing up until Matlaab which won’t be happening in the first place. They’re also all routes that are fairly used, but not too trade-heavy either.

‘Does anyone else know how to pilot?’ Hoseok asks instead.

Namjoon immediately shakes his head.

‘Not a part of my skill-set I’m afraid,’ Sk’jin replies as he steps close to the holographic map and zooms in rather randomly into a planet.

‘I have basic piloting skills.’ Yoongi replies.

‘Though it won’t be necessary and hopefully the situation will not arise, I will have to count on you to be my co-pilot,’ Hoseok nods at Yoongi. The Human GI agent just looks blankly at him for a moment before asking, ‘In what situations will I be expected to aid you Head Pilot Hoseokkie.’

Sk’jin chokes noisily while Namjoon turns his head so quickly Hoseok hears a distinct crick.

‘Um-’ Hoseok manages to say while Sk’jin turns away from the Mast hand covering his mouth as his shoulders shake from suppressed laughter. Yoongi is still looking at him with a blank look before asking him: ‘Do you not like the nickname?’

Sk’jin apparently can’t control himself anymore and lets out a loud ‘ha!’ before he’s nearly hunched over the foot-up he had been sitting on.

‘I um- no it’s uh fine,’ Hoseok says, because honestly what else is he supposed to say at this point. ‘Situations for example in an emergency where a manual takeover is required and the balance of the ship needs to be maintained. This ship is designed for easy use by a small amount of crew- but there can be situational problems that may require you to help me maintain the internal balance of the ship so that I can fly it.’

‘Understood, Head Pilot Hoseokkie.’

Sk’jin, who had somewhat recovered, falls back into a fit of uncontrollable laughter and is nearly on the floor from the force of his laughter. Namjoon gives the Khol’isa a look of disdain before addressing the former GI agent.

‘Do you have anything you wish to add?’

‘Please do not breach security protocol under any circumstance.’

‘Of course,’ Namjoon nods. ‘Is that all?’

‘Yes Cap.’

Namjoon gives Yoongi a sort of grimace that Hoseok guesses is his attempt at smiling before he addresses Hoseok again.

‘Have you decided upon which course you would like to take-’
‘You haven’t asked me if I have anything to contribute though?’ Sk’jin butts in, feigning innocent surprise though Sk’jin was probably expecting the Kutsoglerin to ignore him.

‘Yes, Sk’jin, do enlighten us,’ Namjoon says, his voice tight.

‘In the occasion where we get into trouble or are about to get into trouble, I would entreat all of you to take the diplomatic approach of negotiation,’ Sk’jin requests glibly. ‘Negotiations and communications is my field of expertise and I daresay I can confidently talk us out of any situation.’

‘Is that it?’ Namjoon asks pointedly.

Sk’jin nods gracefully.

‘All right then- Hoseok?’ Namjoon turns to look at him.

‘Trajectory 3,’ Hoseok replies, handing Namjoon back his screen.

‘Got it,’ Namjoon nods, looking pleased at Hoseok’s choice. ‘I’ll set up the ship. Everyone to their stations in 10 minutes. We leave in 15.’

‘Yes Captain,’ Sk’jin salutes Namjoon with a flourish and a wink that the latter ignores in favor of tapping along the screen.

‘Come on Yoongi- I feel like you and I are gonna get along really well!’ Hoseok hears Sk’jin say as he walks down the stairs to the cockpit. ‘You can call me Jin!’

Hoseok settles into his seat. The strange buzzing under his skin still hasn’t stopped. It’s the same sensation he gets in the height of on one of his own missions- but it’s intensified and he’s never felt it before the mission even starts. They haven’t even formally started on their mission and Hoseok feels like he’s seconds from diving into a war-zone.

He activates the dashboard in front of him, leaning against the control-shafts as he waits for the central command board to fully switch on. He sighs heavily, gripping the controls and familiarizing himself with the cool feel of the metal under his fingers.

They hadn’t even left Šerdesas and Hoseok can’t wait for this mission to be over.

*
'Spaces! Oh god- is that you? Fuck, I nearly had a heart attack!'

‘Who are you?’

‘What-? Wait, how did you even get in? I didn’t hear the alarm-‘

‘Who are you?’

‘…I…I didn’t ask for you. Did something happen? Did something happen with the previous delivery? But that was over 3 months ago…’

‘Who are you?’

‘…do you maybe want to take a seat? You’re a guest now, I suppose-! Not on the floor…- that’s all right too I guess…’

‘Who are you?’

‘I’m Zhoumi…I um, thought you knew that?’

‘Who are you?’

‘…I just…I just am.’

‘Unknown term.’

‘Wait- wait! Sit down! I have a name for you!’

‘Name.’

‘Yes- I have a name for you, hahaha.’

‘Name.’

‘Right- well you see, I know someone. He has two Humans in his ship and I did some research on names. Most Humans come with 2 names. This is apparently the norm on Earth. It can increase to as many as 6-7 as well though that’s a little rare and bit too excessive if you ask me. So I found a registry of Human names. There’s a lot. But I managed to narrowed it down to a region. You bear quite a lot of resemblance to the Humans I know- feature wise, at least. So I guess I’m not too far off in guessing you’re from the same general region. Are you excited to know what name I’ve picked for you?’

‘Term: Excited.’

‘I’ll take that as a yes. What do you think about “Yoongi”?’

‘Name.’

‘Yoongi. If you want it. I have a few more but I thought it was a nice sounding name. It has a good flow to it. What do you think?’
Yoongi.

‘Yes- it originally means luminous or luster I believe. I thought it would create a sort of nice contradiction with the uniform.’

‘Object measurement 1.73 meters. GLA. Male. Human. Name: Yoongi.’

‘So you like it! That’s good to know, Yoongi.’

‘Who are you?’

‘I am Zhoumi. Who are you?’

‘Object measurement 1.73 meters. GLA. Male. Human. Name: Yoongi.’

‘You’re …not an object Yoongi- you’re alive aren’t you? A living Being?’

‘Term: Alive.’

‘Yes. You’re a part of this universe. You have Life-force in you. You’re alive. You’re a Being. Isn’t that what they teach you in the Yisheng Headquarters?’

‘Object measurement 1.73 meters. GLA. Male. Human. Name: Yoongi.’

‘…I guess you’ll get around to it eventually…right Yoongi?’

‘Yoongi.’

‘I guess you really do like it. Do you want something to drink? Water…um, yes or no?’

‘No.’

‘So…Yoongi. Why are you here?’

‘Question. Mission statement.’

‘But I don’t have a mission for you.’

‘Question. Mission statement.’

‘…you mean, who am I?.’

‘Who are you.’

‘…I don’t know exactly how to answer that…I just. I just am. I was born and raised in Long-Huo. I um. I have a family- parents, and a younger sister. I um, like to read books, preferably from Long-Huo. I like baths. Hot baths to be specific. They’re better for my talons anyways. Do you have anything that you like to do? Do you have a family?’

‘Term: Family. Unknown.’

‘…so you’re an orphan? I’m sorry if that’s insensitive of me.’

‘Term: Unknown.’

‘…Yoongi. Where were you born? I know you’re Human. But were you born on Earth?’

‘Awake?…okay…um, how did you join the GI?’

‘Is there place you go back to? What do you do there? Where do you come from?’

‘Dream.’

‘…dream?…I don’t understand…Yoongi why are you here?’

‘Can I…can I take a look at your helmet? Is that all right-? Oh, thank you.’

‘Mission statement.’

‘I-…Yoongi. I don’t have a mission for you. You came here on your own.’

‘Mission statement.’

‘…I do. I do have a mission for you. Come back tomorrow night. And bring your helmet with you again. Got it?’

‘Mission accepted.’

‘…good. This is good.’

‘Good luck.’

‘Yeah…I guess you’ll need it. I’ll need it too.’

*

Object measurement 1.73 meters. GLA ?? Male. Unknown. Classified. Name: - .

Chapter End Notes

I am offended by the new practice video. You know, it’s totally not my favorite Japanese song from BTS and I totally haven’t watched Min Yoongi focus videos for this song. It’s fine. Everything is a-ok! It’s great. Haha. How was everyone’s week?

is not sweating nervously
AND HAPPY GAY PRIDE MONTH AYO
flies purple grey black flag
“Self “ [noun]: a person's essential being that distinguishes them from others.

Chapter Notes
See the end of the chapter for notes

‘I’m happy that you came.’

‘Mission statement.’

‘Well…this is…an assignment I’m giving you. To do on your own. Do you think you can do that?’

‘Mission accepted.’

‘Good…I want to be able to talk to you…understand what…what you are.’

‘I’ve been doing some research- but I haven’t come across…well, I haven’t come across anything that explains anything to me- and Tlun’hla didn’t answer any of my questions…I hope you can help me.’

‘I don’t know where you go back to- or where you come from. But I think…I think it would be better if you did this somewhere that wasn’t where you go back to. You can check the files here if you choose to. I won’t be home until after tomorrow, so you can stay here if you want.’

‘So here is the “mission”- I noticed that your helmet has a port that’s similar to the ones on Androids- I’m not too sure what’s going on but I think this might help you- and it will help me understand too.’

‘Mission received.’

‘All right then- I’ll be going now. Make yourself at home all right?’

[RECEIVING DATA]

[NEW SOFTWARE DETECTED: PROCEED/ CANCEL]
Proceed.

[ANDROID CORE CODE]

Read.

[COMPATIBLE WITH HYPER-DREAM SUBJUGATION COMPONENT “E”]

Proceed.

[DOWNLOAD?]...Yes.

[SOFTWARE ILLEGAL: OVERRIDE/CANCEL]

Override.

“This is Head-Pilot Hoseok of the Užkulisai-02. Authorization Code 0182-9914-8107, docking at the Yisheng Hangar Bay code YSH-022-183. Are we at green?’

“This is Officer Nir of the Šerdesas Space-Traffic Control. You are at green.’

‘Thank you,’ Hoseok replies, turning to look up from the cock-pit, giving Namjoon a nod.

‘Captain’s log. Everyone report.’ Namjoon barks out from the Mast.

Hoseok activates the engines to full thrust and the collective atmosphere of the entire ship is charged with the change in motion and movement that is triggered the moment they’re in the air. The take-off is entirely smooth, no heavy pull-back, no drag in the wings, and no atmospheric compression in Hoseok’s ear. Cabin pressure was maintaining flawlessly, their own internal gravity mechanism working to detach them from Šerdesas’s gravity pull, and the Beamers were practically purring. Hoseok eyes all the stable system checks with a relieved feeling, though briefly wondering why he felt apprehensive to start off with.
The forest around the Yisheng Headquarters blurs out into a massive blob of green before patching off into smaller segments before giving way to mountains and then massive stretches of the capital city.

Hoseok notes how Yoongi is staring down, watching with what Hoseok guesses is fascination.

‘Šerdesas always looks pretty neat from up here doesn’t it?’ Hoseok wonders if there’s any point trying to strike up a conversation with the former GI agent.

‘This is the first time I’m seeing it,’ Yoongi replies.

‘…really?’ Hoseok asks, feeling stunned. The GI used to be facilitated in the Yisheng Headquarters or in one of the large Venture Unit Motherships that patrolled unchartered space-borders. Hoseok is pretty sure Yoongi has travelled in and out of Šerdesas many times already.

Of course now the whole bunch of them were situated in the new Venture Unit Headquarters here in Šerdesas though Hoseok himself has never been there. He’s not too sure about what goes on in there.

‘Beamers are holding, all systems are at green,’ Sk’jin calls from his corner.

‘Approaching Šerdesas’s exosphere at 15000 knots, please brace for impact.’ Hoseok calls out, quickly eyeing the screen indicator for safety belt activation. All 4 were set to green.

The sky over Šerdesas was famed for its mauve hues, interlaced with an consistently visible canopy of stars and an asteroid belt that stretched nearly all the way around Raksane Tayi glimmered even during daytime.

‘Activating filters and deflection shields,’ Hoseok comments.

‘We will be leaving Šerdesas in 5…4…’ Namjoon starts counting.

‘3…2…and 1.’

There’s barely any drag against the atmosphere of the Šerdesas as they pull out entirely. The massive planet eclipses downwards, creating a magnificent contrast of glowing lights rimmed with a faint golden light blushing with mauve from the core against the backdrop of space.

‘Checking all systems-‘ Hoseok calls out, glancing over at every screen. ‘And we’re clear.’

Sk’jin cheers from where he sits and undoes his safety belt before quickly making his way down to the tower-mast. He sits next to Yoongi and starts engaging him in conversation.

Hoseok watches as Sk’jin goes on a seemingly endless chatter about food of all things, asking Yoongi his favorites, his dislikes, and isn’t in the very least perturbed by the fact that Yoongi doesn’t always respond except for a nod, a shake of head, and a shrug.

It was hard to believe anything Sk’jin did. Even if it weren’t for this mission, Hoseok feels like he would probably question everything about the Khol’isa just because of his personality. So now with him apparently “befriending” Yoongi, Hoseok can’t help but take the entire action down to darker motives.

The GIU, meaning Admiral K’mara, had been extremely disappointed when they lost custody over the remaining GI operations. So any study, information, or analysis conducted and based on the GI was strictly Venture Unit property, the GIU were kept out of loop. And knowing the nature of Lal Haenoon and K’mara’s relationship, it was a given that the Venture Unit were being purposefully obtuse when it came to sharing that data.

The GIU were a highly trained, military unit under the GLA. If they had agents or soldiers from the GI then their efficiency and overall potential as a task force would increase exponentially. So while it made sense that the GIU should have been granted custody over the GI, they were handed over to the Venture Unit so that they could be studied and basically locked up, never to be “used” again.

And seeing as how Sk’jin was a direct member of K’mara’s inner circle- what if all he was doing right now in regards to Yoongi was to somehow rope the Human in and have him voluntarily hand himself over to the GIU? Yoongi was a live Being, no matter how dubious his past or creation was, and that meant he instantly had his own rights as an individual. And seeing as how he had his own authorization code and was a legal citizen of Raksane Tayi, it meant Yoongi was a Being free to choose and do whatever he wanted.

And being the only “operative” GI agent awake, what if Yoongi does decide to “choose” the GIU over the Venture Unit or Yisheng Directory, and his word is taken as statement to represent all of the other GI agents and they’re handed over the GIU? Hoseok shudders to think what sort of power K’mara would have if they were handed the GI.

So was that why K’mara had Sk’jin placed in the mission? To somehow lure Yoongi to his side?

‘-about you Hoseokkie?’ Sk’jin asks, turning to look up at Hoseok with a beautiful smile.

‘Sorry what was that?’ Hoseok asks after a few seconds of realizing he’d been too caught up thinking.

‘Yoongi and I were discussing our favorite foods!’ Sk’jin explains. Hoseok hears Namjoon snort faintly behind him. ‘Do you have a favorite?’

‘Not particularly no,’ Hoseok replies.

‘Just like Yoongi then!’ Sk’jin nods thoughtfully before addressing the Human again. ‘Don’t worry! I’ll help you figure out what food you like or not.’ Then he glances higher up, a smirk on his face as he addresses Namjoon.

‘What about you Nammie? What do you like to eat?’

‘I don’t eat,’ is Namjoon’s simple reply.

The look of surprise is probably the most genuine expression Hoseok has seen on Sk’jin’s face while addressing Namjoon. It seems like Sk’jin has no further question and he turns away, discussing variety in drinks now to Yoongi.

Hoseok has never heard of the Kutsoglerin not eating. It seemed odd that they wouldn’t- they certainly weren’t amongst some of the solar-synthesis dependent species who didn’t have to absorb their nutrients from food but rather only from sunlight. From all that Hoseok remembered about their dietary habits was that they had one and that was it.

Hoseok wonders if it might be prying if he were to ask. He might have to wait for Sk’jin to pry but for now he keeps mum.

‘We will be approaching warp-zone in 18 hours. Has everyone filled in their schedule details?’ Namjoon asks as he starts up the captain’s archive.
‘Filled and sent in!’ Sk’jin waves his hand from the front, and Hoseok swears again that he hears bells.

‘Sending mine in now,’ Hoseok replies, tapping on his screen to the side.

Yoongi nods his confirmation before he suddenly reaches out, hand slipping inside Sk’jin’s sleeves and pulls out a tiny silver bell strung up on a silk ribbon.

Sk’jin doesn’t realize what Yoongi has done until he finds himself staring at the little bell held up by Yoongi’s fingers.

Hoseok nearly laughs out loud when Sk’jin jerks backwards, falling back on his ass. But Hoseok’s laughter dies in his throat as he notices Sk’jin’s expression. He’s alarmed yes, but there’s an immediate hostile defensiveness in his posture, his eyes flashing neon red. Everything about his stance suggests that he’s about to set into action. But there’s hesitation as well. And most of all, there’s that same expression again- one of fear, that flashes briefly in Sk’jin’s eyes. The atmosphere inside the Bridge becomes heavy and the hair on Hoseok’s neck stands on end as Sk’jin crouches, looking every bit like he was about to lunge at Yoongi.

‘Sk’jin-‘ Namjoon’s voice is a warning as well as a reprimand.

But it’s gone as quickly as it comes and Sk’jin whines from where he’s fallen over, failing in pulling himself up.

‘Yoongi!’ Sk’jin scowls comically. ‘You just don’t reach into someone’s sleeve and yank out a part of their wardrobe- why did you do that?’

‘It was noisy,’ is Yoongi’s reply as he places the bell carefully to the side as though he didn’t want anything to do with it.

‘If it annoyed you then you could have said so,’ Sk’jin scolds as he takes up the seat next to Yoongi. ‘We’re a team! We’re going to live together for a long while! If I’m doing something that annoys you then you should tell me and we come up with a compromise! I’ll do the same for you.’

Hoseok can’t help but glance over at Namjoon. The Captain is watching the entire situation with sharp eyes, unmoving and rigid. Namjoon probably had the same thoughts and conclusions regarding Sk’jin’s “friendly” behavior. And as Captain it was an even bigger problem for him. Namjoon looks down briefly at Hoseok before looking over at the pair in the tower-mast.

‘Our schedules are completed. I hope you all familiarize yourselves with it so that we can proceed smoothly,’ Namjoon lifts his screen in ways of showing their new schedule.

Hoseok isn’t surprised when he finds that Namjoon would be the first to go on watch-duty at the Bridge. He would then be exchanged with Yoongi 11 hours from now. Then after Yoongi, Sk’jin. Though Hoseok doubts Namjoon would allow the Khol’isa to man the Bridge by himself. That too right after they hit warp. Then after Sk’jin Hoseok’s round ensues. He had quite a bit of free time and guesses he should take that opportunity to familiarize himself with the rest of the ship.

‘Perfect! I’m going to go check the additional facilities available,’ Sk’jin says, standing gracefully. The sound of bells are absent and it’s with mild alarm that Hoseok realizes that bells, or at least the sound they produced, were often used in hypnosis.

Yoongi too gets up and follows Sk’jin out.

Hoseok glances over at the dashboard at the tower-mast.
The little bell is no longer there.

[TEMPORAL LOBE FUNCTION AT MAXIMUM]

[SYSTEMATIC FUNCTIONS AT MAXIMUM OVERDRIVE]

[OVERDRIVE]

[OVERDRIVE]

[OVERDRIVE]

[OVERDRIVE]

[SYSTEMS CRASHING_PROCEED Y/N]

[SYSTEMS CRASHING_PROCEED Y/N]

[SYSTEMS CRASHING_PROCEED Y/N]

[SYSTEMS CRASHING_PROCEED Y/N]

[SYSTEMS_ - _]

_ _

_ _

_ _

SETTING UP INTERNAL AUGMENTATION_

_EXPANDING_

_EXPANDING_

_
The floors are cold. Temperature status at 14 degree Celsius. Dark grey, lined lightly with a lighter grey. This is some form of marble. Used commonly for flooring.

The air is moist. The room atmosphere setting is customized to increased humidity. There is condensation forming along the window panes. The air smells like bath salts.

The lights are dim. It is evening. The weather forecast predicted clear windy skies. There is a wind-chime made from aluminum carved with Long-Huo symbols.

There is pain; -

[HARDWARE MALFUNCTION- PROCEED Y/N_
HARDWARE OVERDRIVE
HARDWARE OVERDRIVE
DO NOT DISENGAGE
DO NOT DISENGAGE
DO NOT DISENGAGE

It’s a frustrating sound. One that bores into his brain. His head is pulsing, sensitivity to the point of immense pain. There’s a disgusting bitter taste that burns upwards and into his mouth. He spits it out, half-expecting something vile and hot to spew out of him. But it’s just air. Is database disengaged it’s not it can’t database is function it’s not functioning there are no algorithms there is no database-

The harsh ringing of the wind-chime grates into his ears and his entire body shudders, trying to cope with the information overload that it can’t process fast enough.

Database is overloaded.

Database is crashing.
He’s sensing too much, seeing too much, hearing too much, feeling too much-

His entire body lurches as his chest burns- he’s on fire and he’s burning burning burning burning-

It’s just forceful contractions of his chest as he breathes in too much too cold too sharp too much-

Yoongi picks up his TeorSer and without looking fires at the wind-chime hanging outside the window. The glass cracks slowly for a few seconds before turning entirely white and shuddering into fine bits of glass. The sound is momentary but it doesn’t stop Yoongi from keeling over, throwing up bile onto the cold floors.

It’s utterly blank- just like when he goes to Sleep. But when he sleeps he sees Dreams. And when he Dreams he just Knows.

Right now he doesn’t Know. This was not a Dream, and he was not in Sleep.

There’s another sound- it’s a strange sound. Short, but repetitive, and…and Alive. And database calls it-

Stay low, allow your body to cope.

Body. Hardware. Database.

Allow yourself to feel.

There’s a rushing sound. Database identifies it as the sound of traffic and environmental feedback loop, triggered by the continuous motion and movement of both Beings and automated objects that interweave themselves into this Space.

Space. Where was he? Space. Mass. Time. What was he in this?

With shaking hands he removes his gloves. They’re ghostly and pale. Heavily scarred and some sores are still bleeding. Did he not Sleep? Why was he wounded?

He’s still coughing. Coughing so hard, so much, he’s dizzy he’s falling he needs to take off the mask take off-

Where was he?

Sit down.

‘I’m sitting.’

It hurts, but the pain ebbs away at once. There’s a burning sensation but it goes away. He needs water. His database supplies him with this. His mind supplies him with this.

He needs- he needs- what does he need? He needs something. Mission statement. He needs mission statement so that he can accept and complete and then Sleep and then Dream and then Know.
‘Nammie, would you like to join us? It’s almost Yoongi’s turn to head up. Come have a drink!’

Namjoon had spent a majority of his time carefully reading any information available on each of the Docks they were going to touch base on. With a mission like this, you couldn’t be too careful.

At the sound of Sk’jin’s voice he glances over at the screen of his private NaviLet.

Previously, Hoseok had been walking around the Hangars, checking up on equipment, familiarizing himself with the Transporters, reading up the manuals. Yoongi had spent a majority of his time sitting extremely still, staring at the large entertainment screen, watching what appeared to be Earthian movies. Namjoon hadn’t been aware that there were stocked entertainment sources from Earth available for watching in the GLA database. Yoongi had barely moved, watching the screen in a manner so still that Namjoon had to make sure he hadn’t just died or something.

Then there was Sk’jin. He had spent a good time going through the laundry room, checking each washer and UV presser with apparent interest. Then he’d gone through every nook and cranny of the Lobbies, checking each storage cupboard, flipping randomly through manuals that were placed around. He even goes through every MedPod, as though keeping track of what was in each of them. Then he pattered towards the Kitchens and to Namjoon’s bewilderment, started cooking.

When he had checked the NaviLet earlier, he found Sk’jin employing Yoongi, who was deftly chopping something on a board on the long Kitchen island counter. Not sure why, but the entire activity had irritated Namjoon.

And now, Hoseok is there too, listening to something Sk’jin had to say and nodding as he stirs a pot.

‘Surely you must drink something?’ Sk’jin asks, his voice irritatingly saccharine in a way that was definitely fake and definitely done on purpose to get under Namjoon’s skin. And to Namjoon’s exasperation, it works. A little too well. And Namjoon knows that Sk’jin knows that it works.

Namjoon doesn’t grace Sk’jin with an answer but instead checks on the auto-pilot one more time.

‘Lisai, keep an eye out for me will you?’
‘Of course Captain.’

Namjoon takes the Lifts this time and when the doors open, his nose is assaulted by an assortment of aromatic smells.

‘Captain, how nice of you to join us,’ Sk’jin smiles from the dining table, waving his one arm gracefully as he beckons Namjoon over.

There’s a massive spread over the table, bowls of fruit, honest to goodness meals made from scratch, jugs of an assortment of drinks, and even an entire cake.

‘So, do you think flying is more, anti-gravity? But then what about speed?’ Sk’jin asks, clearly carrying on with whatever conversation he was having with Yoongi and Hoseok as he peels a fruit with a delicate looking knife.

‘Anti-gravity means that you will simply drift away from the surface of a planet- carried around by like, the wind, maybe bumping into other stuff. Defying gravity doesn’t necessarily mean you can fly.’ Hoseok replies thoughtfully as he chews on his food.

‘Anti-gravity and motorized-motion engines for direction and speed. Air-pressure tanks for lightness,’ Yoongi suggests.

‘That does make sense,’ Sk’jin replies thoughtfully before popping the fruit into his mouth. Namjoon feels that surge of irritation hit him again. He eyes Namjoon as he approaches them and a wicked glint takes over his eyes. Namjoon wills himself not to feel defensive or apprehensive as he was wont to do around the Khol’isa.

Namjoon scans the tables and feels another tickle of irritation take over him.

‘Would you like to try anything?’ Sk’jin asks, peeling another fruit with the carving knife that looks strangely threatening in Sk’jin’s elegant hands.

Namjoon walks past the table and opens the large pantry-fridge and takes out a bottle of ionized water instead.

‘Yoongi, you’re up in 15 minutes,’ Namjoon addresses the Human AI who was staring very hard at a cup of tea.

‘Accepted,’ Yoongi replies as he picks up the teacup carefully.

His actions catalyze a great amount of attention from his dining mates. Hoseok is watching the Human carefully and so is Sk’jin who notices Namjoon watching them watching Yoongi in turn.

‘Ah you see- Yoongi has never really had any food from Earth, so I looked up some recipes and got help from Hoseok, who by the way is an amazing cook!’ Sk’jin beams at the Ngfy’widan.

‘I once had to infiltrate an illegal weapons trade by posing in as a cook,’ Hoseok shrugs as though it explained everything. Sk’jin raises one perfect eyebrow in question but doesn’t voice his thoughts. Yoongi is still staring intently at his cup of tea.

‘So I thought it would be nice if Yoongi were to have an idea of how food tastes like from Earth! It’s not authentic but the ingredients we had made excellent replacements for some of the Earth-based ingredients.’ Sk’jin points at a pot. ‘Like this one. It was supposed to have…what was that vegetable Hoseokkie?’
‘Onion,’ Hoseok replies over a mouthful of food.

‘Right- that. We don’t have any onions, so I had to make do with huahm. It’s almost the same in terms of genetic make-up,’ Sk’jin explains like it’s something important that Namjoon should definitely know. ‘Except it’s red, so the soup came out rather ruddy instead of a “light golden broth”. But it tastes all right.’

Yoongi takes a tentative sip of the tea and once again Hoseok and Sk’jin watch him keenly, actually leaning in to check his reaction.

‘…is that any good?’ Hoseok asks while Sk’jin leans in even closer, nearly dipping the extending collar of his robes into the aforementioned soup.

‘It’s refreshing,’ Yoongi replies after swallowing.

‘Excellent!’ Sk’jin exclaims before turning to address Namjoon again.

‘What about you Captain? Is there anything from Kutsoglera that Hoseok and I can cook up for you?’ Sk’jin asks, tone innocent and friendly but there’s a dangerous flash of red in his eyes.

‘Yoongi I believe you should start making your way to the Bridge. Communications Manager, can I have a moment with you?’ Namjoon asks, a polite smile on his face.

‘I’m taking my tea with me,’ Yoongi announces as he picks up the teapot and teacup and walks away.

‘Of course Captain, I am yours to command,’ Sk’jin replies with a graceful nod of his head before turning to address Hoseok. ‘I think you add sugar to the tea- maybe Yoongi will appreciate it?’

Hoseok, who obviously knows when he’s being dismissed and is unwanted, quickly departs, holding a bowl a sugar cubes. Though it’s not before shooting the both of them with a quick searching look of wariness.

Sk’jin continues to sit, leaning back leisurely and now watching the framed view of space beyond the large kitchen window with ease and little regard to Namjoon. Namjoon waits a total of 11 seconds and it’s like Sk’jin knows because his eyes snap from the window to bore right into Namjoon’s. And this time Namjoon doesn’t back down.

‘What do you think you’re doing?’ Namjoon asks at once.

‘I don’t understand your question Captain,’ Sk’jin replies glibly.

‘Then let me make myself clear,’ Namjoon continues. ‘Why are you treating Yoongi in this manner? Are you trying to gain his support? Are you trying to get him to your side?’

‘Captain. Namjoon. Sweetheart. Please,’ Sk’jin puts up a look of pity and says in his most patronizing tone: ‘Have you ever heard of “being polite” and having “normal conversations”? We’re going to be stuck in this ship- the four of us- for a good sol or so. Unlike you, I do believe most of us would do well with some conversation instead of brooding and thinking about how to prevent a mutiny when there isn’t any. Yet.’

Namjoon takes a slow calming breath.

‘Besides- I quite like Yoongi- he seems to be the most level-minded Being on board the ship other than myself. And I do feel for him- his home planet was destroyed in front of his very own eyes. I understand what he’s going through- in fact I do believe we all know what that’s like, isn’t that right?’

Namjoon grits his teeth as Sk’jin looks up at him with a slight tilt of his head. It causes the rosy strands of his hair to part elegantly around his forehead in an effortless display of beauty and grace. It’s meant to be a distraction, Namjoon knows, but all Namjoon can see is the challenging goading look in Sk’jin’s eyes.

‘He prioritizes the mission and doesn’t do anything to obstruct the rather nonexistent camaraderie on board,’ Sk’jin continues, pushing back his hair with a fair hand and adding with a short laugh, ‘Of course I think it’s fair to point out that he isn’t adding to it either-‘

‘Stop it. I don’t know if you genuinely think that what you’re saying right now makes sense but let me tell you right now that it doesn’t. I did not want to have to address this so bluntly but I’m finding that I have to.’ Namjoon cuts across, a heavy frown settling on his face.

‘Fine, do tell me what it is that I am apparently doing that isn’t working because you are “aware” of everything that is going on,’ Sk’jin leans back, arms crossed, looking up at Namjoon with a defiant expectant expression.

Namjoon has never felt so entirely demeaned in his entire existence. He’s never had to deal with someone like Sk’jin before.

Sk’jin lifts one eyebrow, challenging him. He has a smile playing at his lips; he knew exactly what he was doing and he knew exactly what Namjoon was going through as a result.

If that was so. Then Namjoon wasn’t going to back down or give Sk’jin what he wanted.

Two can play this game and Namjoon is a fast learner.

* *

The air is fresh, faint traces of pollutants lingering- just the smallest hint of carbon, a little bit of heated hydrogen, but all together clean. But it’s never been like that. At least database has never said so. Or maybe it’s never been a point of relevance. He also knows he should probably step away from the ledge. But he doesn’t know why.

It hurts.

Database never said so either before. Database says it’s not relevant to what he does. In Sleep he wasn’t aware of pain. The Dreams never highlighted this either. But it does. It hurts. Everything hurts. And though database is telling him to drink water, to obtain medical aid, and he’s well aware of how to do this, how to proceed and medicate himself, reduce the pain. He doesn’t know why he has to do this.

There’s blood.

A result of being wounded. A result of standing bare feet on top of shattered glass. Database tells him he should avoid this but he doesn’t. He doesn’t know why he has to avoid this.

It’s cold.

He shivers. Database tells him that it’s because he’s shed his protective gear, insulated to grant him warmth and layer his body with protection. But it was heavy. It was uncomfortable. 25 GLA kilograms, database informs him. But there is no noteworthy archive every describing this to him before. Archive search leads him with no results found. Why had he felt the need to shed his gear when he felt uncomfortable? What made him do it?

There is a light growing.

It’s the sun rising. Database informs him on the matter of astronomy in full detail. It is no longer information worth processing because what he was seeing now just is. This was dawn, watery violet sky giving way to rose clouds tinted with gold, database likens this with every sunrise noted in archives. The only difference is that this time there is colour and everything is bigger. He has to watch. He must watch. He doesn’t know why, but he has to.

They are countless, stretching endlessly, housing life and existence and-

Database tells him this is called sonder. And that just as he looks up into the stars, from those stars, countless others were looking down at him. And he was there. He was here. And so were they. And he would continue to be. He would be-

Memory.

There is nothing but Memory.

The sun rises and for the first time in his life, Yoongi is aware of its warmth on his skin.
Hoseok takes a deep breath and it smells like bullshit.

He glances over at Sk’jin who is apparently very invested in the state of his cuticles, and at Namjoon who is reading a book and then at Yoongi who is borderline obsessed with a tea-strainer.

It was almost towards the end of Yoongi’s watch in the Bridge. And just as he suspected, Namjoon wasn’t going to allow Sk’jin to remain alone in the Bridge.

For a vast majority of Yoongi’s stay in the Bridge he was left almost entirely alone. During this time, Sk’jin had apparently showered and changed, exchanging his pale green robes for lilac ones with the slightest detail along the hems of his sleeve in muted gold. Hoseok noted that he was barefoot. Namjoon too had a change of clothing to something more comfortable, though again everything he wore covered nearly every inch of his body, showing only his hands, some neck, and his ears. Only Yoongi remained unchanged and unmoving, fiddling with the tea-strainer.

Hoseok had caught up on some sleep, customized his room to better fit his comfort and taste, and found a variety of clothing in his closet. Then he proceeded to set up surveillance within his own room. After “innocently” testing out the other surveillance system and finding a very tight knit external security system with a hair-trigger firewall that had Namjoon’s name written all over it, Hoseok wisely decided not to attempt hacking over it. As an Infiltrator, Hoseok had also learned how to hack, recode, reconstruct, and replace digital barriers. But this would be futile. Especially when it’s been made by someone of Namjoon’s skill.

Hoseok hadn’t seen Namjoon or Sk’jin after that luncheon. They had both retired to their own cabins and as far as Hoseok knew, didn’t leave until after Hoseok himself turned in for the day. But now they were here and there was this odd “peace” inside the Bridge.

Hoseok doesn’t know what the Kutsoglerin and the Khol’isa might have discussed but it was clearly not resolved. Hoseok is reminded of how his parents would sometimes get into a disagreement but neither would admit to their faults and would uphold an injured air or would both passive-aggressively play victim against each other, dragging anyone around them into their war of snide comments.

‘Hoseokkie,’ Sk’jin smiles at Hoseok, looking up from his perfectly shaped nails. ‘Are you well rested?’

‘Yes…the bedding is really nice,’ Hoseok replies as he makes his way past the Khol’isa who nods in agreement.

‘You’re just on time Hoseok,’ Namjoon adds, looking up from his book to smile at Hoseok. ‘You may stand down now Sk’jin.’

‘Oh not at all Namjoon,’ Sk’jin smiles though Hoseok sees the slightest hint of suspicion in his eyes as he addresses the Captain. ‘I should remain at my station. Lisai’s schedule has me manning the Bridge as of now, after all.’

‘That won’t be necessary Sk’jin- this is the first time we’re entering warp with the ship- I’m sure Head-Pilot Hoseok wants to be there for the first few hours,’ Namjoon glances at Hoseok. ‘Isn’t that right Hoseok?’
Namjoon is actually correct. This was the first time Hoseok would be taking this ship into warp and he wanted to be there for at least the first set, to observe the frequency and keep note of any changes within the archives sent from the engines so that he would be able to remember a comparative sample the next time they launched into warp.

Hoseok really feels like he’s stuck between his parents who are bickering and trying to get his support just to egg on the other the wrong way. And while Hoseok has no intention of playing mediator or middleman, he really hopes this doesn’t last long and they can settle their differences long enough for them to complete this mission without Hoseok fearing for a sudden show of TeorSer fire.

‘There is no real immediate need for you to be at your post while we’re at warp Manager Sk’jin,’ Namjoon explains, smiling up from his book though his eyes don’t quite reach his eyes. ‘Considering the fact that we will be at warp for 3 days before we arrive at Orvan’s space-borders, I relieve you of your duties until then. Didn’t you say the seats were hurting you? I wouldn’t want someone of your importance to suffer so needlessly when you could be resting.’

Sk’jin’s expression is blank and honestly Hoseok feels a little terrified. Namjoon is still looking at Sk’jin with that smile.

The Kutsoglerin had clearly snapped and this was now a result of it. Who knew that the grim, serious Information Analyst could be equally, if not more, petty than Sk’jin.

Sk’jin stares hard at Namjoon before he takes a step back and replies with an equally fake smile, ‘That’s very kind of you Captain. We are so lucky to have you leading us in this mission.’

‘Oh no Sk’jin,’ Namjoon replies, not looking at Sk’jin as he glances down at his book, making himself comfortable. ‘We’re so lucky to have you here.’

Sk’jin, who had been walking towards the exit, pauses mid-stride. He glances back at Namjoon who is apparently very interested in the book he’s reading and Hoseok himself is able to do some of his own reading as he sees Namjoon’s death lettered in Sk’jin’s glare.

‘Sleep well,’ Namjoon calls before very realistically looking apologetic and saying, ‘Oh- that was insensitive of me.’

Hoseok winces internally. It was a sensitive topic for the Khol’isa- the nature of their autophagocytosis robbed them of the need for sleep. Which if viewed in one angle wasn’t too bad a loss, but for the Khol’isa it was of a wholly different nature. Many Beings considered them cursed-never to be at rest, but never attaining the full “luxury” of immortality. They were stuck, in a hopeless loop of existing within their own minds without relief or any semblance of sleep. Their autophagocytosis reconstructed them, but didn’t grant them sleep, not even in the form of hibernation. This made them succumb to madness and a massive suicide epidemic had struck the Khol’isa at one point after leaving their planet.

Hoseok can’t believe Namjoon would bring that up.

Sk’jin turns and storms off.

Hoseok takes a seat, eyeing Namjoon from the corner of his eyes. There’s a genuine smile on Namjoon’s face, shoulders bunching just a little as though delighted at himself. He turns the page of his book and continues to read.

‘Hoseokkie, are you ready to initiate warp?’
Still not used to the nickname coming from someone like Yoongi, Hoseok starts a little as he regards the expressionless Human in front of him.

‘Yoongi did you know about the bell?’ Hoseok asks instead as he makes himself comfortable. Yoongi simply looks at him, as though waiting for him to clarify what he meant.

‘…I mean- Khol’isa use hypnosis as means of manipulation. Bells can be used to act as a trigger medium for hypnosis,’ Hoseok explains.

‘I did not know that.’ Yoongi replies, turning back around to face the HUD window.

‘Don’t worry about the bells Hoseok,’ Namjoon calls from his seat. ‘The Khol’isa can only use their hypnosis on Beings who have been intoxicated or have been medicated with certain hallucinogens. Methods like bells, metronomes, and other sound-induced trigger mediums are useless.’

Hoseok feels a little relieved at that as he activates the warp-engines.

‘We’re entering warp in 20 seconds,’ Hoseok calls. ‘Everyone strap yourselves in.’

Glancing down, Hoseok notes that all 4 indicators blink at safety-on.

‘So if you didn’t know about the hypnosis thing…did you really grab that bell because it was annoying you?’ Hoseok asks as the engines calibrate to 75%.

‘No. I just felt like it.’

The stars pull into thin bright streaks as they erupt through space at the speed of light, Namjoon’s appreciative chuckle filling the Bridge.

*

When he wakes up, he is disoriented.

Because he sees too much. Every hue, shade, tone. It’s a riot that bears down on him and crushes him. But within this chaos is something that he cannot formulate- something he cannot comprehend.
There’s movement in this riot of stillness but Yoongi doesn’t know what to call it. It’s so chaotic but it makes sense. A sense that Yoongi cannot name except something in his mind is telling him that this was all normal.

The sun is still quite mellow— it was still morning. There’s a distinct sound of something—something that Yoongi has never registered before but he identifies as a bird chirping.

Slowly, Yoongi looks away from the sky and a little lower.

It’s small, its plumage is mainly a soft brown but with hints of soft pastel blue around the chest and tips of its tail feathers. It looks down at Yoongi, twisting its little head as though hoping to see all of Yoongi better.

‘Who are you?’

Yoongi’s throat protests. He’s not sure if what he said was even correct. But the words just came out of his mouth, rolling off of his tongue like it had done so since he was. Like he’s been able to speak cohesively his entire life. Like it was natural.

Being: 1.73 meters.

‘I am 1.73 meters in height.’

The buildings that stretch upwards to the sky seem to go on forever, blending into the golden light of the early morning sun.

GLA ??, Male.

‘I am male.’

There is a voice speaking indistinctively – someone is talking on their Comm-Device, some level above Yoongi. He’s laughing, the light scuffing of bare feet against floor tiles.

Human.

‘I am Human. I am from Earth.’

Earth, the Blue Planet, home to all Humans. Gaia, Mother, Precious.

Name: Yoongi.

‘My name is Yoongi.’

Shine, luster, gleam, glow. Light. Light imbibes the entire spectrum of colours. All colours reflect into life.

Yoongi looks up at the little bird.

‘Who are you?’
‘And we are pulling out of warp in 5…4…3…2…1!’

The stars edge and part, creating depth and space between the lights that they pull out of.

‘Entering docking channels and ready to report our broadcast,’ Hoseok announces, turning to give Sk’jin a nod who smiles in return and starts tapping along the screen on the Communication Board.

The stars are no longer stretched and they were now flying at standard non-warp again. The Užkulisai-02 was an absolute delight to pilot and Hoseok feels like he’s gotten a complete hang of it now. The planet that they were approaching was Orvan, a small planet off of the the Trunga System. It had 3 moons orbiting it and one of them had been transformed into a Dock which was where they headed. Orvan was a pleasant orange to look at from this distance. It’s atmosphere was rich in ferric oxidants, giving the planet a wash of orange from the distance. There was nothing particularly note-worthy about Orvan or the System that housed her, so it made perfect sense that Namjoon chose this planet to claim their pass.

‘There’s an incoming message Head-Pilot, shall I patch it along?’ Sk’jin calls out from where he’s sitting.

‘Please patch it along, Sk’jin,’ Namjoon replies, his voice dripping with feigned politeness.

Sk’jin does no such thing, completely ignoring Namjoon.

Namjoon glares at the Khol’isa and then turns to look at Hoseok, one eyebrow raised.

Hoseok thinks he might lose his mind from all the passive-aggressiveness inside the Bridge. This had continued on since they hit warp and it got worse and worse. At one point Namjoon seemed to be outdoing Sk’jin in passive-aggression, but Sk’jin would rise to the occasion and Namjoon would be left silently fuming. And Hoseok was popularly used as a sort of unwilling and forcefully involved third-party member. Yoongi used his lack of presence to his full advantage and was missing the entire time. Like he had some additional sense that kept an eye/ear out for the beginnings of any passive-aggression and just like that, he was gone.

‘Please patch the message Sk’jin,’ Hoseok answers wearily.
‘Patching through,’ Sk’jin sing-songs.

‘This is the Orvan Space Border Patrol. You are hereby under arrest and will be subjected to questioning. Please proceed peacefully or we will use force. Thank you.’

Namjoon looks down at the Navigation Table with a blank expression as though questioning what he heard was real or imagined. Then he whips around looking at every member.

‘What?!’

‘Ah- that’s probably because I have a criminal record there,’ Sk’jin pipes in calmly.

‘I beg your pardon?’ Namjoon sounds murderous.

‘Oh, I do believe I heard a murmur- must be something wrong with my Comm-Device. I wonder what that voice said?’ Sk’jin looks around, an expression of confusion as he taps lightly at his Comm-Device.

Namjoon bristles briefly, expression darkening significantly before he speaks again, ‘What do you mean you have a criminal record?’

Sk’jin’s expression goes from bewildered to confused again, looking around as though he heard an insect. He even lifts his hands in the air as though ready to swat out whatever it was.

‘Oh wow- that sounded so clear! Did you hear that Yoongi? I swear that was a voice but I can’t be too sure-’

‘Sk’jin, explain what criminal offence you have committed before we’re forcefully boarded!’ Namjoon orders sharply.

‘Again- that voice-‘

Hoseok can practically see Namjoon’s patience breaking as the Kutsoglerin stands up, his eyes narrowed as he stares at Sk’jin who is now looking around for an insect in earnest. Hoseok doesn’t know if this classifies as petty, brave, or downright idiotic.

‘Communications Manager Sk’jin is wanted in Orvan for Class 2 Arson, Class 3 attempted murder, and Class 2 defamation of the Prime Minister of the Orvan State of Tui.’

‘Thank you Lisai,’ Yoongi says quietly from the side.

‘Look, in my defense that prime minister was an asshole,’ Sk’jin puts up his hands as though in defeat.

‘Arson? Attempted murder? Care to explain?’ Namjoon frowns, glancing out of the HUD window and Hoseok does the same. There were no approaching lights. Yet.

‘Not really, no,’ Sk’jin shakes his head delicately before getting up to walk over to the Communications Board. ‘Let me handle this.’

‘What-‘ Namjoon is already standing up and looks like he’s about to physically stop Sk’jin when Yoongi, who Hoseok swore was sitting in the tower-mast behind him, is there, stopping Namjoon from moving with a barely there touch on the Kutsoglerin’s arm.

‘I repeat. This is the Orvan Space Border Patrol. Your ship registers a Being with past criminal offence in our borders. You are hereby under arrest and will be subjected to questioning. Please proceed peacefully or we will use force. Thank you.'

‘What do we do?’ Hoseok asks, ready to fly the ship away at once, readying warp engines.

‘If we fly away they’ll come after us and the space-border patrol from every system will have a red-light on us,’ Namjoon replies at once. ‘I will not risk our mission.’

‘This is Communications Manager Sk’jin of the Užkulisai-02, and you are Officer…?’ Sk’jin speaks up, voice smooth and charming. Namjoon stares incredulously at Sk’jin.

‘Sk’jin what in Spaces are you doing-?!’ he begins hotly, walking over to Sk’jin who holds one hand up to stop Namjoon, not looking at him but tapping along the screen deftly.

‘This is Officer Lieutenant Rimma of the Orvan Space Border Patrol Unit.’ The voice speaks up again. Hoseok looks out and he spots distant lights gleaming at them, growing stronger and larger with every second. The Patrol would be here in less than a minute. What was Sk’jin playing at?

‘Officer Lieutenant oh my,’ Sk’jin exclaims, letting out an airy breathy chuckle. ‘That’s quite the title there Rimma, how befitting of someone of your devotion to duty!’

‘…thank you…’

‘Indeed! But I’m afraid even the best of us make mistakes- and I believe that this may be it Rimma, I believe you have wrong information,’ Sk’jin says with a soft hint of regret.

‘We are not mistaken Manager Sk’jin.’

‘I’m quite sure you are,’ Sk’jin replies blithely, tapping along his screen, ignoring Namjoon who is nearly breathing fire down his neck. ‘We are merely a humble trade-ship, just making dock for 1 hour in order to obtain our pass. I really hope this hold-up won’t cost any of us too much of our time.’

At this Yoongi turns away from the approaching view and blinks in a way Hoseok guesses is amusement.

‘I have performed another scan. You are correct Manager Sk’jin. On behalf of the Orvan Space-Border Patrol, I apologize for causing you any inconvenience. Welcome to Orvan. Have a good day.’

‘Thank you Officer Lieutenant Rimma,’ Sk’jin taps on the screen and places it back on the table.

Hoseok glances out of the window and finds that the approaching light has completely stopped and actually becomes smaller.

Sk’jin takes a deep breath, smiling happily as he still ignores Namjoon.

‘What did you think Yoongi?’ Sk’jin addresses the Human who was now making his way down to the tower-mast again. ‘My skills in negotiation shouldn’t be underestimated. Right?’

‘You just bribed the officer- that wasn’t negotiation- anyone can do it!’ Namjoon snaps before Yoongi can reply though Hoseok thinks it’s highly unlikely.

‘Actually you would be surprised that bribes don’t always work when anyone does it- right Hoseokkie?’ Sk’jin asks him with a bright smile. ‘You need to know who can be bribed, how to bribe, and what sort of medium to use while bribing- it’s a fine delicate art. Not everyone has this ability.’

Sk’jin has a genial suggestive smile on his face and Hoseok wonders if the Khol’isa has a death wish of sort. But moving past that, Sk’jin is correct. Blackmail, bribery, threats- they all had to be planned out carefully and with a lot of time and dedication. What Sk’jin just did was extremely risky but had luckily paid off. Hoseok glances over at Sk’jin’s screen and isn’t surprised to find that he was on the Orvan space-border patrol index. If Sk’jin has been here before and with such charges against him, then he clearly knew his way around their systems. And seeing as most planetary systems rarely changed, it was fairly easy for Sk’jin to simply obtain the officer’s ID and easily send him some units.

‘Negotiations are generally futile. Any bribe can be bought over by putting a higher stake. If you really wish to clear the path, I suggest we enter the Dock, clear the officers, and remove all history concerning Sk’jin’s criminal history in Orvan.’ Yoongi chimes in, to the general stunned silence of the Bridge. To everyone’s intense alarm, Yoongi activates the weapons dashboard.

‘Yoongi! That’s so sweet of you! Thank you!’ Sk’jin exclaims, expression turning almost fond as he smiles at the Human.

Hoseok doesn’t think there was anything particularly “sweet” in Yoongi’s statement. Maybe the Khol’isa had a different way of viewing compliments.

‘No one is attacking any official GLA Dock!’ Namjoon sighs, pinching the bridge of his nose, brows furrowed as though fighting off a headache. ‘Yoongi disengage now!’

‘It would be simple-’ Yoongi is starting to say but Namjoon quickly jumps in. Hoseok can’t help but find it amusing when Yoongi looks down at the dashboard, his posture forlorn. Or at least Hoseok guesses it is. Either that or he was just projecting.

‘Again- we are not going to engage in attacking or attempting to attack or scheming on how to attack any GLA Dock or Port from here on within,’ Namjoon puts a hand down firmly on the Navigation Table, looking at Yoongi grimly. ‘While your intentions are…surely very touching, we cannot afford to jeopardize our mission just because someone had too much fun in the past.’

‘It was fun,’ Sk’jin sighs out as though reminiscing. ‘The look on his face was priceless- wish I could somehow obtain a video of it and have it play on loop every time I feel down.’

Against his better judgment, Hoseok has to ask, ‘What happened in Orvan anyways?’

‘Orvan has quite the black-market for slavery,’ Sk’jin replies looking genuinely surprised at Hoseok’s question. ‘You didn’t know?’

Sk’jin doesn’t sound condescending- he sounds sincerely surprised.

Hoseok thinks hard as he glances at the approaching planet. Again, Orvan wasn’t known for anything in particular. They had a strict government system, mainly autocratic but nothing that toed past the limitations set up by the GLA Treaty on Internal Planetary Governance. The GLA had set up laws and orders that could be implemented into every planets governing system- so you still maintained your original government ruling but with the interjection of the GLA order. This was the deal every planet/system had to agree to when they agreed to be part of the GLA Known Universe. Generally speaking, this wasn’t a bad Treaty or compromise for most planets. However there were some who disregarded the GLA’s attempt of unification under a peaceful treatise that would benefit all living Beings. There were some planets and systems who refused to partake with the GLA and there were some who refused but due to majority vote, had to concede to the GLA’s Treaty. And Orvan had been one of them. But that was all Hoseok knew. He hadn’t known anything about a black-market dealing with slavery.

‘Are they enslaving and selling their own people or other Beings?’ Namjoon asks as he types rapidly across his screen. He also looks surprised. Just like Hoseok, he had no idea about it. Namjoon is also frowning, though Hoseok thinks it’s because Sk’jin answered his question and not Namjoon’s despite being the same question.

‘Their own people,’ Sk’jin replies easily before adding, ‘Huh, guess the Venture Unit is involved in this one if none of you know about it.’

Hoseok immediately feels defensive but knows that Sk’jin is probably right- if the Khol’isa was telling the truth about Orvan.

‘Probably one of the Heads if you don’t know about it,’ Sk’jin nods his head at Namjoon who grimaces in response.

‘What were you doing in Orvan that you knew about their illegal trade and clashed with their prime minister?’ Namjoon asks instead.

‘Honestly I don’t remember much of the details,’ Sk’jin yawns. Both Namjoon and Hoseok roll their eyes at the obvious lie.

‘Besides, that was like, 800 sols ago, that asshole is probably long dead. Well he should be, because I poisoned him,’ Sk’jin shrugs before settling down again on the foot-up, picking up his screen.

‘…is that the Class 3 attempted murder,’ Namjoon asks, looking confused.

‘Oh no-‘ Sk’jin laughs, looking up from his screen. ‘That’s a different story- an exaggerated one mind you. All I did was suggest that the prime minister should be killed. I didn’t actually do it.’

Hoseok studies Sk’jin’s indignant expression warily. The Khol’isa were infamous around the Known Universe (with the exception of Yoongi) for their ability to hypnotize anyone who looked into their eyes for long periods of time. So maybe Sk’jin’s suggestion wasn’t met with too much exaggeration on behalf of the Orvan government.

‘But you haven’t been charged of that in your records,’ Namjoon points out.

‘Of course I haven’t- because I framed his wife - she was an asshole too. Hope she rotted to death,’ is Sk’jin’s eloquent reply.

Namjoon just blinks in reply, clearly trying to process all of this information. The only thing Hoseok can think of is ‘how did he get into the GIU with such an extensive criminal record?’.

‘Are there any other planets within our trajectory that you may have a criminal record in?’ Namjoon asks through his teeth, sitting down with a lot of determination, gripping the arms of his chair as though to prevent himself from getting up and maybe punching Sk’jin on the face.

‘Oh yes, thank you for reminding me.’ Sk’jin gets up from his seat and walks over to the Mast.

‘And why didn’t you care to inform us about this?’ Namjoon demands.

‘Well, you didn’t ask me,’ Sk’jin replies with a maddening air of someone innocent being interrogated for a crime. ‘You asked Hoseokkie. You didn’t ask me or Yoongi. Right?’ Sk’jin turns to address Yoongi who nods in reply, still staring out of the HUD window.

Was he actually being a little sullen? But Hoseok has other things to address besides Yoongi’s personality.

‘Sk’jin one moment,’ Hoseok calls before the Khol’isa can access the trajectory. ‘Why are your criminal records still valid and activating? Your identity and past records should have been completely wiped out and renewed. This is a GLA issued mission, no matter how covert, I would think Admiral K’mara would have settled it for you.’

That’s what happened to Hoseok and he can safely assume to Namjoon too. He’s not too sure about Yoongi but considering he didn’t really exist up until 4 sols ago, the Human probably had a pretty clean slate. Officially.

‘I mean yes that would have worked but-‘ Sk’jin pauses, looking up at all 3 of them incredulously before saying, ‘Wait a minute, do you mean you don’t know anything about the Khol’isa Treaty?’

‘I know about it-‘ Namjoon begins but Sk’jin cuts him off at once.

‘Well you clearly don’t if you thought my criminal records were entirely clean,’ Sk’jin says smoothly. ‘Due to our nature and the methodology of our species biology, we are technically reborn every 700 to 800 years. And though we are born with our former memories and personality again, the GLA stated in our Treaty that we obtain a new status of identification however still maintaining any or all previous records made during our “previous lives”.’

‘That doesn’t make sense,’ Namjoon frowns.

‘Oh no. It does,’ Sk’jin replies with a smile as he pulls up their trajectory, walking into Namjoon’s personal space. ‘You see, the GLA didn’t, and still don’t, trust the nature of the Khol’isa- as a result, they want to continue reminding us of our past- by stripping us of our former and legal identity but inflicting us with any continuous history we may have made without the chance at complete reformation. It’s a cruel method, considering everything- but that would be insensitive to mention wouldn’t it, Captain?’ Sk’jin is leaning over Namjoon, bent at a strange angle that reminds Hoseok of something reptilian.

Namjoon squirms in his seat for a second before getting up and leaving the Mast so that Sk’jin occupied his vacated seat with relish.

‘So…what you’re saying is, we need to reroute our entire trajectory- to make sure you don’t get arrested?’ Namjoon asks gruffly, leaning back on the other side of the Navigation Table.

‘No, what I’m saying is we need to reroute our entire trajectory so that our cargo doesn’t get compromised and our mission jeopardized by space-border patrols,’ Sk’jin replies smoothly.

Hoseok can see a vein popping in Namjoon’s temple and wonders if maybe he should get him some medication from the Medical Bay. Maybe that would help relax the Kutsoglerin a little.

‘And you failed to mention this from the beginning because?’ Namjoon asks through gritted teeth.

‘Why, I thought you all knew,’ Sk’jin exclaims and Hoseok isn’t sure how genuine Sk’jin’s expression of indigence is. ‘You were both part of the Venture Unit, very intimately involved with the Gaia Case- I assumed you all knew. Did you know Yoongi?’

Yoongi nods in response.
‘See? Yoongi knew,’ Sk’jin smiles benignly at Yoongi.

‘Then why didn’t you point out that we were headed towards a planet that you were wanted in?’ Namjoon asks. ‘That too, the first planet?’

‘I thought you had a plan,’ Sk’jin replies and this time Hoseok knows that Sk’jin is faking the surprised clueless tone in his voice. ‘You were so confident and ready to lead, I automatically thought you knew and I thought to myself ‘wow this guy really is a Captain!’ and put my trust wholeheartedly in your leadership!’

‘You talk differently.’ Yoongi interjects out of nowhere, fiddling with the tea-strainer.

Sk’jin looks surprised, blinking rather blankly before asking, ‘What do you mean Yoongi?’

‘Last time I heard you speak, you spoke differently.’ Is Yoongi’s reply.

Hoseok and Namjoon both swivel their heads around to look at Sk’jin. Whatever Yoongi meant, Hoseok cannot determine by looking at Sk’jin’s reaction. Because the Khol’isa instead looks thoughtful as he rubs at his temples with his fair hands, nodding as he says, ‘It was a different time.’

And to that, Yoongi simply nods, as though it made perfect sense.

Hoseok catches Namjoon’s eye and feels better in knowing that it’s not only him who has a hard time understanding any of this.

‘I was surprised too when the space-border patrols contacted us,’ Sk’jin continues like Yoongi hadn’t interrupted their conversation. ‘I mean, I guess I would have mentioned it before but, seeing as I was bid by my Captain to rest, that’s what I did. I assumed he had taken care of everything.’

Hoseok wants to groan and slump over the dashboard. Of course Sk’jin would take this opportunity to hound over Namjoon.

‘This is Orvan Dock TYL-02-5110. Launch-ring 41G is open for you. Welcome to Orvan.’

Hoseok sighs out in relief at the interruption.

‘Thank you. Right- we’re docking soon. Everyone please return to your seats so that I can dock us,’ Hoseok announces.

Sk’jin doesn’t move from the Navigator’s chair and has an expression that clearly says ‘make me’ as he smiles at Namjoon. With a grim expression Namjoon moves away from the Mast and throws himself into a seat next to Hoseok.

‘Who’s getting the pass?’ Hoseok asks as he follows the guide-lines that glow along the HUD window.

‘I’m going,’ Namjoon replies. ‘It won’t take long- depends on the line but I doubt there’s much of a line.’

‘I’ll be stepping out too! I need to pick up some items from the Flotsam and Jetsam,’ Sk’jin announces from where he’s sitting.

Namjoon looks like he wants to disagree but he relents. Probably didn’t want to argue.

‘Want to come with me Yoongi?’ Sk’jin asks.
‘No.’

‘All right- do you want anything from the Dock?’ Sk’jin asks, unperturbed by Yoongi’s monosyllable replies.

‘No.’

‘Hoseokkie? Anything?’ Sk’jin inquires.

‘No I’m good, thanks Sk’jin,’ Hoseok replies.

‘Not at all,’ Sk’jin replies.

The Orvan Dock is like any other standard dock. Immensely tall in height, shaped like a titanic needle surrounded by innumerable hoop like rings that lock incoming or docking ships in a protective magnetic field before guiding them inwards into a Hangar Bay. The Užkulisisai-02 settles in smoothly, passing through the pale blue Atmoshield and safely into the public Hangar.

‘Come on Captain, let’s go,’ Sk’jin sings blithely as he stands, brushing down the front of his robes as though in preparation. Namjoon doesn’t acknowledge this but simply walks out of the Bridge, followed by a smirking Sk’jin.

Hoseok watches from the surveillance screen he pulls up on his dashboard as the two exit the Užkulisisai-02.

Namjoon has wide purposeful strides that radiate strength and impose an eye-catching aura around him. Sk’jin more or less glides smoothly alongside the Kutsoglerin, hands behind his back, robes fluttering gracefully at his wake.

‘Ugh, Spaces,’ Hoseok groans, slumping down on his chair and rubbing at his face.

‘Tea?’

Hoseok sits up as though electrocuted because Yoongi is there, holding a cup of tea feet from Hoseok’s face, expression neutral.

‘Spaces Yoongi,’ Hoseok gasps out. He didn’t hear any movement, no sound of motion, no change in the air around him. Yoongi just materializes out of nowhere. With a cup of tea.

‘It’s relaxing,’ Yoongi adds.

‘I-’ Hoseok looks down at the glass cup filled with a deep reddish liquid that’s steaming lightly. Where in Spaces did Yoongi pull this out from?

‘Um- thank you,’ Hoseok says as he takes the glass cup.

‘You’re welcome.’
Black hair, dark brown eyes, pale skin, small mouth, complete set of teeth, 206 bones, 198 broken and knitted, infusion with carbon alloys.

Yoongi stands in front of the mirror, analyzing himself in the full length mirror. There are bloodied footprints that follow him. He registers the pain but isn’t quite sure if he should ignore it or treat it just yet. For now it’s making him realize. And he wants to realize more.

Carefully he lifts a hand and brushes through his hair. He has scars around his face.

He doesn’t know where he got them from. Doesn’t remember from where. None of his Dreams had any explanation or source for these scars. They were just there. He follows the beginning of one scar and he pulls away the layer of clothing he had been wearing.

He knows that this isn’t normal. The layered scars, old and completely healed but layered and layered and layered. Burns, lacerations, permanent discolouration spread across his entire body.

He stands entirely naked, unsure of any and everything he was looking at. There are sutures and scars- places where operations were conducted. His back has a long hollow line that looks like it’s been scooped into his flesh. But it’s not raw- it’s not bleeding- it’s just there. And out of all the wounds and scars that colour his body, this feels the strangest to Yoongi.

Namjoon is grateful that there are only 2 other people in line in front of him.

The GLA Immigration Office is the same here as it is everywhere else. Large, white, chrome, a sterile feeling that comes from Medical Bays but not in a way that suggested hygiene.
Namjoon isn’t quite sure why but he feels a sense of nervousness as he hands over his pass-card towards the Orvan officer. Orvan’s were rather anthropomorphic in appearance, with large eyes set wide apart, a small nose and an equally small mouth. They were built petite and slender.

‘Welcome to Orvan, please enter your authorization code and ship license code,’ the female officer smiles at Namjoon.

Namjoon types in the required information as the officer types along her own screen, scanning the pass-card. Namjoon half expects an error but everything turns out fine. No alarms, no sudden ambush from the Immigration Task Force.

‘All clear, have a good day,’ the officer offers back the pass-card and that’s when Namjoon notices her wrist.

There are deep welts around the slimmest part of her wrist. And Namjoon knows those welts, can feel them on his own wrist. He can’t help but glance over the officer one more time. He realizes it’s not the best thing to do because the officer seems to realize his gaze and looks extremely uncomfortable and afraid.

‘Is something the matter sir?’ she asks, voice shaking and taking her hand away at once.

But before Namjoon can say anything, there’s a hand on his shoulder and a voice saying, ‘There you are, I almost got worried!’

Sk’jin smiles at Namjoon briefly before pulling him away with more strength than Namjoon thought the Khol’isa was capable of and steers him away.

‘It’s impolite to stare Namjoon,’ Sk’jin says conversationally as they walk across the atrium. ‘And it puts other people into danger.’

‘What do you mean? Was she-?’ Namjoon begins to ask, shaking his shoulder out of Sk’jin’s hold.

‘It’s a dangerous place out here in the universe Namjoon. But often times the most dangerous place is right here wherever you are. And you cannot afford to let it consume you.’ Sk’jin replies as he tosses him a large bag. ‘Carry that for me will you? I just did my cuticles.’

The bag is disproportionately heavy to its size and appearance and makes Namjoon stumble backwards a little, colliding with an Orvan civilian.

‘Oh- sorry-‘ Namjoon begins as the Orvan stabilizes him with an amused smile on his matured face. But then Namjoon notices his wrists as well.

‘It’s all right,’ he smiles and walks away.

Namjoon stops and looks around. He doesn’t care if he’s being obvious but he stares hard at every wrist, bare neck.

‘Nammie! Get that tall ass moving!’

Scowling, Namjoon makes his way towards Sk’jin who is skipping backwards.

What was Sk’jin doing in Orvan in the first place?
‘Okay and we’re good to go,’ Hoseok announces from the cock-pit as they enter warp again.

‘We’re good until we get to Avasana – but after that we’re changing direction entirely,’ Namjoon says from where he’s seated.

‘I feel like that was aimed at me but I can’t argue you if that was your intention,’ Sk’jin pipes up.

‘It was,’ Namjoon replies, pulling up the 3D holographic map.

Hoseok glances over at Sk’jin and Namjoon with some skepticism. They had both seemed entirely too polite, without seeming all too fake, after they returned from the Dock. Did something happen?

‘Right well, I guess we should all band together to make this,’ Namjoon gestures to all of them.

And now Hoseok is truly surprised and apparently so is Sk’jin who gives Namjoon a rather confused look.

‘Yoongi-‘ Sk’jin begins to call but the Human is standing behind him, carrying a tray with a glass pot filled with tea and glass cups with saucers. And for some reason Hoseok cannot understand, an onion is on the tray too.

‘Oh- I see you found the onions,’ Sk’jin says the moment he recovers well enough to speak. ‘It was difficult but they luckily had some in the Flotsam and Jetsam. Pretty expensive though.’

‘There was no need to spend your units on it-‘ Namjoon begins as he accepts a cup of tea from Yoongi.

‘Yes I know that’s why I spent yours.’

Namjoon’s expression is murderous again and Hoseok guesses the geniality in the air was only going to survive for a maximum of one hour.

‘How do you like the cabins Yoongi?’ Hoseok asks, hoping to change the subject as they gather around the Mast, all sipping tea. It probably painted an amusing picture Hoseok ruminates.

‘They’re comfortable.’ Yoongi replies before taking a sip of tea.

‘Are the pillows all right? I used to have problems with pillows before,’ Sk’jin says thoughtfully as he blows on his tea. ‘It needs to be the perfect height otherwise I get neck cramps.’

‘Of course you would,’ Namjoon mumbles as he too takes a sip of tea.

It’s Sk’jin’s turn to glare at Namjoon who starts setting up a blank blue-print for their new trajectory.

‘I’ll need all of you to fill out the planets that you think you might have some issue with, or that have issues with you,’ Namjoon says as he activates 3D screen in to float out in front of Hoseok, Sk’jin, and Yoongi. ‘Then we can filter them out and plot out a trajectory without any hiccups.’

‘Oh boy,’ Sk’jin chuckles under his breath as he places his cup down, ready to type.

‘I don’t think Yoongi would have any but just in case you have doubts about a planet or a dock or a system as a whole, please put that down,’ Namjoon nods at Yoongi.

‘Yes boy,’
Sk’jin manages to cover his laughter into a coughing fit, turning his back to them to recover. Namjoon has his eyes closed, clearly reigning in all of his patience.

‘Oh Yoongi, no it’s not like,’ Sk’jin says as he recovers. ‘Saying “oh boy” is an expression used when you want to relay your excitement or surprise- it’s not a nickname. It can be used sarcastically too, which is what I did.’

‘I see,’ Yoongi replies.

‘You should come up with your own nicknames for us then,’ Sk’jin smiles supportively at Yoongi. ‘You don’t have to use mine.’

Hoseok can list at least 10 different reasons why this wasn’t a good idea in any shape or form.

Yoongi pauses at that. Then turning his dark eyes towards Namjoon he says, ‘Joonie.’

Sk’jin has this badly suppressed smile on his face while Namjoon tries to smile but it doesn’t work and instead nods his “thanks” at Yoongi, who then turns to look at Hoseok.

It’s a little disconcerting, looking into Yoongi’s eyes because it was like looking out into space. Fathomless, unknown, and unpredictable and entirely blank at the same time.

‘Hobi.’

Hoseok swears that if he hadn’t seen Yoongi’s mouth move, then he wouldn’t have believed the Human of saying that.

‘That’s adorable,’ Sk’jin grins at Hoseok with an expression that Hoseok likened to his mother silently telling him to thank his aunt for the weird birthday present he’d received.

‘That’s nice Yoongi,’ Hoseok smiles at Yoongi who nods in return.

Hoseok doesn’t know if this was some strange conditioning set out by Sk’jin’s treatment of Yoongi but there’s an almost nurturing response that comes out of Hoseok in regards to Yoongi. Like the Human was a child of sorts and he needed to be indulged and protected. Which Hoseok knows is not true because Yoongi had more or less set out a working plan on how to completely obliterate an entire Dock of officers and ships in under 10 seconds.

‘What about me?’ Sk’jin leans in, expectant smile on his face.

Without even pausing to consider, Yoongi simply says; ‘Asshole.’

Namjoon chokes violently on his tea, unable to contain his laughter as he turns around away from the Table, coughing and laughing. Hoseok can’t control himself either, sniggering as Yoongi is ever blank and Sk’jin looks stunned.

Then Sk’jin ends up laughing too, covering his mouth as he tosses his head back, laughing in earnest.

For a moment- it almost feels normal.
The insulated bedding was always set to a degree that was never too warm, or never too cool. It was designed to host the Sleeper in a temperature resulting from the calculations of the environmental temperature and the Sleepers body temperature. But Yoongi has always found it cold, unable to rest. He stares at the blank ceiling wondering why he has only really thought about this now. He never knew it had been cold. He had never known that it was uncomfortable. It didn't bother him before.

Database had never registered it before.

But this bed was warm and comfortable. And he knew he could lay back and rest. And sleep. And maybe even dream.

But dreams were made of Memory. And Yoongi has no memory.

Memory memory Memory memory Memory

What was memory and how did you remember?

His recognizes his hands- but only because he is actively aware of it. Awake in the idea of seeing what he knows. It corresponded to what he saw, what he felt. Was this memory or was this Memory?

The food on the table wasn’t the best but it was hot and it was something entirely new. Or was it new? But it was different from what he was used to. Or what was he used to? Everything has always been intravenous. Controlled, maintained. Cold.

All that he can perceive tells him that he should know. That he should be able to recall. The taste of food, the sense of flavor, the richness of flavor. Database salt database sweet database sour database bitter database spicy database milky database -.

He didn’t know. But he knew what he should do with the bowls inside the fridge. He knew how to take them out, placing them over the heating pads. He knew what utensils to choose. And he knew that there was too much oil. Too much salt. But what did that mean to him? Did he like it? Did he not like it? What he should like, what he would like. But there is no recollection- only vacancy shaped in the memory of the Memory he knows he should have. There is no recollection.

So what has been doing until now? What has been doing, and why has been doing it?

Mission statement.

What did that mean?
The electric hum changes. There is a click. A door is opening. A shift in the air as pressure changes.

There are footsteps. Tentative and careful. Light.

The door slides open and Yoongi can smell air-coolant preserves, heated hydrogen, and the faintest hint of mint. Zhoumi looks unsure, glancing at Yoongi who has settled on top of his bed, arms neatly folded over his middle, eyes wide open, with feet that are still bleeding because of the embedded shards of glass under his feet.

‘Yoongi?’

This is his first memory.

And he is himself.
Not to be nsfw but I literally couldn’t write last night because Yoongi’s So Far Away with Jin and Jungkook kinda killed me and I literally had to take a break.
So I’m sorry I didn’t update this during the time I normally would. If you want to blame someone, please BLAME YOONGI WOW OKAY I’M DONE.
JIN RAPPING NEEDS TO BE A THING “I DON’T GIVE A SHIT I DON’T GIVE A FUCK” OH MY GOD I AM HEALED I AM RICH I AM DEBT-FREE KIM SEOKJIN PLEASE OMG (also someone give Yoongi an Oscar for that top-class acting in the background)
4 o’clock made me cry. My moonchild Taehyung, moonchild Namjoon I need a moment brb
OKAY BUT UM HOSEOK DIDN’T DO ANYTHING AND IM SCARED BECAUSE HIS MIXTAPE
If it drops this week let it be known that I am going to die because Hobi is my special child and I will protect him till I die.
‘It will take you some time,’ Zhoumi says as he hands Yoongi some clothes to wear. Yoongi looks down at the folded shirt and trousers that were going to be 2 times too large on him. But he accepts them anyways. Most Beings were uncomfortable around nudity.

‘Time for what?’

‘If…if what I think is true, then time for you to adjust to being.’ Zhoumi replies.

Yoongi doesn’t understand. Database is telling him a lot of things, but it doesn’t all add up.

‘When I inspected your helmet and found that it had jacks similar to the ones you can find on Androids I was…’ Zhoumi pauses as Yoongi slips on the trousers. ‘I was confused. Why would your helmet have a jack designed for installing Android systems? I knew you weren’t an Android…so it didn’t make sense.’

‘How did it not make sense,’ Yoongi asks as he ties up the strings of the trousers to fit him better.

‘Well…you’re completely organic. At least a vast majority of you is, not counting the bionic plates on your bones from injury.’ Zhoumi begins. ‘When I scanned you, there was no detection of Android or Cyborg cells in you. But your…behavior, was what confused me most.’

‘My behavior.’ Yoongi repeats, allowing the words to settle and steep, to draw the meaning of the word and its implications.

‘Yes…you look like an adult, you sound like one- and I’m sure what you do surpasses any limitations of matured moral disinclination,’ Zhoumi grimmaces good naturedly. ‘But…aspects of your personality- your behavior- reminded me of a child. Of someone who doesn’t know anything. It was odd- I felt like I was looking at a living Being without any sense of self.’

‘Sense of self?’ Yoongi repeats, successfully pulling on his the borrowed shirt.

‘Yes…the perception of who you are- of your existence, of who you Are,’ Zhoumi emphasizes.

‘Database tells me that this is called self-awareness.’ Yoongi replies after some thought.
‘Database?’ Zhoumi repeats.

‘Yes- like when I Sleep, and when I Dream. I Know, and I follow.’ Yoongi replies, standing still and straight again. ‘There is a lot inside Database. But I cannot Dream, so I do not Know how to follow.’

Zhoumi watches him carefully, a deep furrow forming between his eyebrows.

‘Where is your database Yoongi?’ he asks instead.

Yoongi blinks a few times.

‘I do not know how to answer that.’

Zhoumi presses his lips together into a thin line, frowning even more. Then he walks over to the other side of his room, gesturing for Yoongi to follow. There are low couches facing each other in front of a tall window, Zhoumi takes one side and indicates to the other for Yoongi to take. He places Yoongi’s helmet over the table, having brought it from the living room. It’s difficult walking with the bandages around his feet. He’s relieved when he sits, no longer pressing down all of his weight on the soles of his feet.

‘Why did you just do that?’ Zhoumi asks.

‘Do what?’

‘Follow me.’

‘You told me to.’

‘I didn’t.’

‘You did.’

‘I only gestured. How did you know how to follow me?’

‘Database translated it.’

Zhoumi rubs at his chin, clearly thinking hard.

‘Yoongi- what you are calling database is your mind…and your response, comes as a result of thinking.’ Zhoumi explains carefully, watching Yoongi’s face intently.

‘My mind?’

‘You understand, don’t you?’

‘Yes. And no.’

Zhoumi puts his hands together under his chin, frowning thoughtfully. They sit in silence for a long time, Zhoumi thinking hard while Yoongi looked on, no expression on his face.

‘Why did you do it?’ Yoongi asks instead.

Zhoumi looks up in surprise.

‘…do what exactly?’ Zhoumi asks carefully.
‘Give me the Android Core. What is your purpose?’

‘Yoongi…what do you know about the Yishengs?’ Zhoumi asks instead.

‘The Yisheng are Beings with the ability to use their own Life-force and channel it for healing purposes,’ Yoongi summarizes at once. ‘They are key participants in withholding the peace within the GLA Known Universe.’

‘Yes…that is true…but do you…’ Zhoumi pauses, looking greatly troubled.

He leans back against his chair, looking extremely disturbed. He glances over at his screen a few times, clearly calculating a number of theories in his mind. Yoongi counts up to 213 heart beats before Zhoumi speaks again.

‘Yoongi, I need your help.’

‘Help?’

‘Yes. And I want to help you too.’

‘Help me?’

‘Yes.’

‘How?’

‘I am giving you a mission,- no, this is a mission for both of us- one that if we succeed in, will change everything.’

---

Namjoon leans in closer to his screen, squinting a little as he reads the reports. It had taken him almost 16 hours but he found them.

The murder of Prime Minister Gritha.

The GLA news broadcast had been relatively short and didn’t carry a lot of details. However, using that timeline, Namjoon was able to track every bit of news made with that title directly from Orvan. It had been an extremely time consuming search, wading through all of the media-filtered sensationalist news of a Prime Minister murdered by his wife after a 71 sol long marriage. There had been way too many “In Memorandum” articles singing the achievements of Prime Minister Gritha and already Namjoon doesn’t like him. High sung praises and glory never swayed him in the past, and looking at the pasty-skinned wide-mouthed Orvanan just cemented his dislike. Using his own channels, Namjoon was able to dig out every bit of information on Gritha and Namjoon is Gritha, Prime Minister of Tui, one of the largest and most powerful countries inside Orvan, personally ran a slave-trade where he would sell his own people to pirates and other slave-trading markets across the galaxies. This was how he had taken up Tui up to its rich and powerful status.

Tui had been a poor and struggling country - the rest of her sister-countries doing much better as they raised trade with the GLA. With Orvan being rich in natural resources that many other planets didn’t have, such as Palladium and Zinc, planetary trade was easily struck between GLA trade routes. But Tui had been the country that refused to band in with the GLA and thus were impoverished as they could no longer maintain trade deals with neighbouring countries. The country of Tui slowly spiraled into economic crisis after crisis, breaking out several times into civil war between the reformist party, the revolutionist party, and the conservative party. Until after nearly an entire century, one Being rose and suddenly recreated all of Tui.

The Tuisan called it a miracle, Namjoon called it an extremely well planned out coup d’état.

Gritha had been clever in how he overtook the country. Offering what appeared to be peaceful and logical solutions to their problems, providing his own party with luxurious means and sudden increase in wealth.

“You need to know who can be bribed, how to bribe, and what sort of medium to use while bribing - it’s a fine delicate art. Not everyone has this ability.’

Gritha was an outsider - not originally from Tui so Namjoon guesses this involved several of Orvan’s political leaders as well. Because as Namjoon reads the reports on the other countries, despite their trade with the rest of the GLA Known Universe, they were failing to really meet and maintain economic stability, with barely suppressed civil wars flowering all over the planet.

And so in a sudden surge of economic growth, Tui was transformed into a flourishing country with an economy so stable and flourishing that other countries banded with Tui to form a united trade front. The people of Orvan rejoiced and planned out their future in blissful serenity of a strong government and a united dedication to battle poverty.

And it worked. Ranks of Tuisan and other Orvanans rose along with their economy.

But no one questioned the sudden disappearances of the less fortunate Orvanans who had to bear the brunt force of their country’s economic crash. But their disappearances were never highlighted, no news, no information about it was ever broadcasted.

These disappearances surfaced from around the time Gritha rose to power and Namjoon doesn’t have to read anymore to understand what happened.

With economic recession and poverty, the population grew unchecked and wild, creating scores of Beings who couldn’t be fed, worked, or taken care of. That made them the perfect trade unit for Gritha to exchange for profit to use to buy out his entire country. And who better to deal with other than pirates?

So Namjoon digs in deeper. He might not be able to access Sk’jin’s complete history, but he would be able to access Orvan’s criminal archive. But that had been basic. Sk’jin was tried for Class 2 Arson, Class 3 attempted murder, and Class 2 defamation of the Prime Minister of the Orvan State of Tui. No further detail was available and Namjoon thinks that might be because Gritha or other Beings involved in that situation didn’t want other Beings (mainly the GLA) from digging into their dealings and discovering this massive trade.
So Namjoon moves away from Orvan’s criminal archive and starts up the facial recognition software. There weren’t a lot of Khol’isa who even had a criminal background- not since their migration from their home planet. So finding someone like Sk’jin should be relatively easy.

And it is.

And Namjoon nearly balks at the sheer extent of Sk’jin’s criminal record. Not counting criminal offences made in non-GLA Systems, Sk’jin had a jaw-dropping 244 Class 1 murder charges, 587 Class 3 attempted murder charges, 521 Class 1 trespassing charges, 173 Class 1 illegal weapon usage Types A (space shuttle), B (Transporter: Aerial), C (Transporter: Terrain) charges, 318 Class 1 illegal trade charges, and the list continued. But as Namjoon skims through each offence until the very end, he never comes across trafficking.

Sk’jin’s ID in the criminal archive is similar to what Namjoon had been presented with initially- except for one minor detail.

And written there in bold: Pirate.

Sk’jin is a pirate. Or at least, used to be one.

Namjoon silences the dark hatred swirling inside of him, deeply rooted and firmly planted within him. His hand twitches involuntarily and he takes a deep breath to control himself.

Sk’jin was the actual Captain of a huge pirating network. He commanded throngs of Beings to do his bidding, to break all law and order, to wreak havoc in innocent Systems and possibly even galaxies. Written on the side, Namjoon discovers that Sk’jin had at one point, commanded approximately 56 ships, 82 shuttles, and even had an entire Dock under his command.

So what had he been doing in Orvan and what exactly made him try and kill Gritha (though in Namjoon’s opinion, was completely founded)? Sk’jin’s criminal record held no history of trafficking or any involvement in it either despite having touched on virtually every other criminal offence.

Because after a certain point, precisely 735 sols ago, all activity surrounding Sk’jin and his pirating network completely stops. There’s nothing. Namjoon even does a deep-dive through the archives but there’s nothing.

And then suddenly, 4 sols ago, his identity is archived and settled and he was now back on the grid. There was no prison time, no sentence carried out.

Namjoon quickly searches for Sk’jin’s ship. Judging by his records- and yes, he was correct. Sk’jin used a number of ships though never consistently. But after nearly an hour of careful scanning and research, Namjoon was able to find the ship Sk’jin had last been on before completely falling off the grid.

The last place Sk’jin’s ship had docked had been at a Docking Arc in between the Systems of Cabcd and Sluchaen. Then nothing else was mentioned of it.

There was a wide stretch of dead-space between Cabcd and Sluchaen, nothing noteworthy. But nonetheless Namjoon searches up the coordinates of that stretch of dead-space and to his surprise finds an overwhelming amount of reports of missing ships from that area. As he reads on he finds that for some strange reason, all of the activity surrounding this stretch of space abruptly ended 4 sols ago. To the side of the report were the lists of ships that went missing in that area, but before he can access any further information, a GIU active-firewall completely blocks him off. Activefirewalls meant something extremely serious. It meant that the GIU hired Information Analysts to constantly bar and block anyone trying to access information about this stretch of space.

Namjoon knows about active-firewalls because he used to participate in handling several himself. And he knows that it would be impossible to try and hack his way into this. But this didn’t mean he came out without any information.

It validated his first initial suspicion that Sk’jin’s involvement with this case wasn’t random. There was more to Sk’jin, a whole lot more, than he let on. Namjoon is also uneasy with the fact that Yoongi and Sk’jin seem to know each other. But then it could also be the same way Hoseok and Namjoon knew each other through the Gaia Case court trials.

Namjoon doesn’t know how to point it out- but Sk’jin’s behavior, the way he presented himself, felt like an act. And of course, no one in this ship was being their true self (with the exception of Yoongi but Namjoon honestly cannot even begin to try and understand the Human)-, but there was something about Sk’jin that made Namjoon exceptionally edgy and paranoid.

Tapping his fingers along the surface of his table, Namjoon thinks for a while before pulling up Sk’jin’s criminal records again.

Sk’jin looks different in the pictures. Hair colour, sometimes even complexion, hair style, clothing. But there’s one thing that Namjoon notes above all.

Clear crystal-like helix horns emerging from above Sk’jin’s temples, poking out of his hair. They weren’t as tall or impressive as K’mara’s but that was expected; female Khol’isa had taller and more elaborate looking horns than their male counterparts. But they were very much present on Sk’jin’s head.

Why didn’t he have it now?

He also notices a pattern in Sk’jin’s activities across his records. There will be a period of about 2 sols every 7-8 decades where there will be no track record of his direct involvement in anything. Namjoon puts this down as Sk’jin’s period of autophagocytosis.

‘Captain, there is an outgoing signal leaving the Užkulisai-02 under unofficial channels.’

Namjoon stands up at once.

‘Locate source,’ Namjoon orders at once, grabbing his NaviLet.

‘Hangar Bay.’

‘Who is it?’ Namjoon asks as he switches on the surveillance. And he’s not surprised when he sees Sk’jin strolling along the Hangar, quite at ease.

‘Communications Manager Sk’jin.’

‘Please pull up audio,’ Namjoon says through gritted teeth.

‘Retrieving audio.’

Sk’jin is not speaking in the GLA Standard- it’s a language Namjoon cannot immediately identify. Was he speaking to K’mara?

‘Translate to Standard, Lisai,’ Namjoon orders as he makes sure everything was being recorded.
‘Translating.’

‘Change everything?’

‘Yes. What we know, what we believe, what we see.’

‘Change is inevitable. Where there is growth, where there is progress, where there is life, change follows regardless.’

‘That is true, but that is a natural event- one that comes from natural evolution.’ Zhoumi replies. ‘No this change. This will change everything.’

‘I do not understand.’

Zhoumi’s talons run lightly over the fabric of the couch, Yoongi can see micro strands of fine dust fly up from the contact.

‘What do you know about the Yisheng Directory?’ Zhoumi asks instead.

‘The Yisheng Directory is an independent organization that brings together all Yisheng-born to train and study their own skills in order to grow stronger in their abilities. They are healers, nurturers, caretakers, and growers. They are the peace that that GLA promises and delivers.’

‘That is the standard explanation yes,’ Zhoumi leans back, ‘Have you been there?’

‘Headquarters,’ Yoongi replies.

‘Of course,’ Zhoumi mumbles, looking a little unsure. ‘Have you met any of the Yisheng?’

‘I do not know.’

Zhoumi leans forward again, resting his arms on his legs as he stares at the smooth matte surface of the table for a while before producing his screen and tapping along it. Yoongi waits, watching with intent as he scans over Zhoumi’s appearance.

Long-Huon were known to be a tall species. They had a strong bone structure, resilient skin that had a scaly appearance in certain lights and over areas such as their elbows, knees, and ankles. Zhoumi’s talons are short and trimmed, making it easier for him to use the screen in his hands.

To an extent they were known as a proud, vain, and haughty species. Database tells him that this is typecasting; and that the rumors about them breathing fire was both illogical and biologically impossible. But it was kept afloat for a variety of reasons, mainly by young-adult fiction novels.
exported from Long-Huo as a long living joke against the rest of the Universe.

‘Do you know who this is?’ Zhoumi asks, holding up his screen for Yoongi to look at.

‘No. And yes.’

‘What do you mean by that?’

‘I have seen his face before. Database is providing me with GLA-sourced information about him. But I do not know him.’

‘This is Yisheng Tlun’hla - an Elder in the Directory…and he is a close friend of mine.’ Zhoumi explains slowly.

‘You sound unsure.’

Zhoumi looks up at Yoongi in surprise, evidently not expecting Yoongi’s comment.

‘I don’t know if you understand the context of religion Yoongi- so let me try to explain it so that you understand what I mean,’ Zhoumi begins, looking even more serious.

‘Religion is belief in a superbeing often omnipresent who wields abilities and powers that are often heightened to impossible degree without any explanation or proof, depending solely on faith.’ Yoongi says. ‘I understand religion.’

‘But do you know why so many chose to follow and believe in a religion?’

‘No.’

‘I can only declare this for myself in this, but I believe I speak for many across the Universe,’ Zhoumi says carefully, rubbing his hands together slowly as he contemplated how to best coin his words together. ‘I believe in a higher authority- a higher power, because I believe that where there is evil and destruction, there must be a force of equal good. A balance, so to speak.’

‘But death and destruction are part of the cycle of life, as stated by the Yisheng Code,’ Yoongi counters. ‘They are not evil, but a simple progression of life.’

Zhoumi looks taken aback again at Yoongi’s comment.

‘Yes- that is true Yoongi,’ Zhoumi replies. ‘But what of needless death? Needless destruction? You are originally Human, though you were not born on Earth or strictly of Human parents- but you are aware of your origins aren’t you? About Earth?’

‘I am aware of her history.’

Database provides Yoongi the entire history of his home-planet- or at least Yoongi guesses that it’s supposed to be his home-planet. He doesn’t quite understand the concept behind it.

Yoongi sees flashes of footage, nuclear clouds covering the surface of Earth, pollution and smog casting an eternal night over a majority of her continents, her oceans stagnant and overrun with chemicals and toxic waste. And her people barely surviving the acrid conditions of her land, as they fought country, state, neighbour, family for a chance at living.

Database provides him with full accounts of the Second Age of the Darkness, and how with the aid of the Venture Unit Exploration Division, Earth was rescued and brought back to her former state. But not without a lot of loss and a lot of pain. Earth was once again the blue planet of her solar
‘All of that was needless—caused by selfish desires, hatred, and an inbuilt desire for self-destruction— we all have this. It is inherent to all of us as a species. We build, and we destroy, we create and we destroy—but why—why do we do this? Why do we watch as we destroy ourselves over and over again? Why do we choose to burn?’ Zhoumi grips the arms of his chair, looking uncharacteristically impassioned.

‘We don’t just watch, throwing ourselves into the flames of destruction; we laugh and smile, cheering ourselves on in our hypocrisy as we dress in riches that we have stolen, and we fight to be the first to dive straight into the pits. This happens over and over and over again!’

Zhoumi leans back, breathing hard.

‘We keep making excuses— we keep saying that it’s “natural”— that it’s a part of our cycle— that this was what living really meant. But it’s not. How can it be? How can we say that it is? How can we say that genocide is simply a part of fate, or something that unfortunately had to happen because it was meant to be? And how can we accept it, watching as all of Life screams in agony, inflicted by those who should know better?’ Zhoumi’s voice is simmering with anger.

‘Death is a part of Life, I know this,’ Zhoumi states, breathing out as though to calm himself. ‘But what we see, what we hear—all this violence, this senseless craving for destruction. This is not a part of Life— this is not living. And that is what needs to change. And those who can bring this change, are the Yishengs.’

‘This does not seem plausible,’ Yoongi replies blandly.

‘It doesn’t, does it? But this is what he believes in too— and that is why we are working together to bring this change around.’ Zhoumi nods at the screen. ‘Tlun’hla wants to recreate the universe—regrow what we already have and make it better. Or at least that’s what he says he wants— but now … now I don’t know what to think…’

‘What changed your mind?’ Yoongi asks.

‘You.’ Zhoumi replies bluntly. ‘When I first met you all those years ago, I thought you were similar to me— another believer of the cause, working to use their ability and skills for the Yishengs and betterment of the Universe. And that is what Tlun’hla told me as well.’

‘I have no recollection of this sentiment in my Dreams.’

‘That is what I sensed from you,’ Zhoumi says quietly. ‘Or more like…I just didn’t sense anything from you. It was like you weren’t alive.’

‘I am alive. I have a heartbeat.’

‘Living is so much more than a heartbeat Yoongi,’ Zhoumi says quietly. ‘To Live is to Be.’

‘I do not understand.’

‘I hope you will one day— because we are a part of this Universe. Me. You. All of us. And we have every right to live and continue on.’ Zhoumi says quietly. ‘We were born into this universe alongside countless other Beings. It is our birthright to uphold it.’

‘Uphold living?’
‘Uphold you Are.’

‘I do not understand.’

‘It’s all right.’ Zhoumi replies, a sort of sad smile on his face. ‘One day you will. And the questions will never stop.’

‘If it is something that you believe in, then why do you question it?’ Yoongi asks. ‘Belief is something that inspires no questions- only blind faith and trust.’

‘Things exist so that we can question it Yoongi,’ Zhoumi says. ‘Not everything is at it seems. Tell me, from where you sit, how many flowers are in that vase?’

Zhoumi points at the mantle over his bed. A large black vase sits at the center of the mantle, laden with heavy looking flowers.

‘9.’

‘But from where I sit, I see only 8. Do you see what I mean? From where I sit, from what I can see, I am correct. But from where you sit, and from what you can see, you see 9.’

‘How many flowers are there?’

‘10. Actually.’

‘To question is to validate, to understand. Once you start asking questions, you will understand too,’ Zhoumi replies.

‘That doesn’t make sense.’

Zhoumi sighs out heavily, ‘No Yoongi, to be honest, most of anything worth knowing doesn’t make sense.’

Yoongi has no response to this and Zhoumi sinks into a thoughtful silence for a while.

‘I stopped asking questions- after hearing what I wanted to hear, what I wanted to know.’ Zhoumi continues. ‘I trusted Tlun’hla and his words- after all, why would he lie to me- what did he have to gain from all of this? We are all aiming to achieve the same thing- to bring peace and an end to all the destruction and madness.’

‘If destruction is inherent to all living Beings as you stated, it would be impossible to stop or prevent it,’ Yoongi says. ‘A living Being is aware and is capable of independent thought. You cannot control the progression of the mind of every single Being in the Universe.’

‘But we could- we could, if we can find it.’ Zhoumi says with emphasis. ‘We would be able to eradicate all of this destruction- and all the Beings of the Universe would live as they should, and they as they should. No needless suffering, no needless strife, no selfishness, no want of power- just Living.’

Then Zhoumi looks up at Yoongi, a frown marring his handsome features.

‘But…as I…when I look at you- a Being who has no sense of self, who doesn’t understand- are you not, after all, what we wanted and what we were looking for?’ Zhoumi wipes at his face. ‘But it can’t be- because it’s not right.’

‘Tlun’hla said…if we take what he said as a lie…I-‘ Zhoumi pauses, as though incapable of thinking anymore. ‘Then he lied to us all- this is not peace- this is tyrannical oppression. Something we want to get rid of.’

‘If what you say is true, then why not report this matter to the Yisheng Directory.’ Yoongi rationalizes.

Zhouni’s eyes narrow at that.

‘I have to first make sure that my case is strong- if not, then all of this would go to waste.’ He says after a long period of silence.

Zhouni is an extremely suspicious and shrewd Being. That much Yoongi can tell with ease. But he was also first and foremost, selfish. Zhouni wanted recognition, power, and most of all, acclamation. If he was discovering something that would grant him that power, something that would grant him that platform of rank- then Zhouni would place himself forward rather than share the glory with anyone else.

Zhouni spoke of hypocrisy, and Yoongi wonders if he sees it in himself or if he, like the rest of the Universe, believed that they were in the right.

‘Do you understand?’

Yoongi doesn’t know if he understands. Yoongi looks over at the vase of flowers. He now saw only 7. He leans backwards and finds that he can see 8 again.

Zhouni is looking at him curiously, waiting for an answer.

Yoongi wonders what it means to really understand. Did anyone really ever understand anything? Zhouni was speaking from a point of view that only saw 8 flowers. There would be others who saw 9, 10, 11, or maybe even no flowers at all. What matter and ideas did they have then? Was it all the same? Or was it different? And if so, did they understand it from where they could see 8 flowers, or 9?

Yoongi nods in reply.

‘I want you to report to me everything you…you dream of, everything that you know, where you go, where you sleep, who you see.’ Zhouni breathes out deeply. ‘There’s something that Tlun’hla is doing that goes against everything we stand for. And with your help, I think I will be able to uncover it.’
Hoseok taps along the edge of his screen, waiting for the data-encryption to finally finish.

He had the Bridge to himself for the next 6 hours. Then after him it would be Yoongi’s turn to man the Bridge. Sk’jin and Namjoon were once again engaged in some passive-aggressive cold-shoulder treatment and were both actively avoiding the Bridge.

So the Bridge was entirely under his command at this moment. And Hoseok likes to take advantage of any alone time he can get. Mainly to do some intensive snooping.

He probably wasn’t at Namjoon’s level, but Hoseok was a pretty decent Analyst when he needed to be one. After all he did infiltrate a planetary federation by pretending to be an Information Analyst some sols ago (which was stressful in more than one way because one of the presidents of the rebel federation had developed a “fondness” for Hoseok which Hoseok wouldn’t have minded but he’s not into shell-like exoskeletons that oozed slime. As a result he also learnt how to actively dodge unwanted advances for nearly 8 months- Hoseok was never more relieved to be done with a mission). So Hoseok is confident in his abilities. Not to mention he did own a bunch of devices to help him in these particular cases. Particular case here meaning Namjoon’s history.

Of course digging out information of a Being who not only worked for the Venture Unit under the Information Analysis Division but was probably one of the most paranoid and cautious Beings Hoseok has ever met was close to impossible. Which is why Hoseok doesn’t even try to begin digging up his private files from the Venture Unit archives and instead goes into the Yisheng Archives to find the raw and unabridged history behind Kutsoglera.

The files were of course protected, but it wasn’t something Hoseok couldn’t get by. He knew a couple of Information Analysts and a few incredibly talented less-than-savory individuals who created and customized digital-bots that could infiltrate certain spaces within the vast digitalverse of online data and information.

There’s a small light that blinks at Hoseok, indicating the finalization of the data-encryption. Tapping along the screen to access the decrypted data, Hoseok checks around one more time, making sure the Bridge really was empty (because Yoongi was so fucking quiet) and he begins reading.

It wasn’t all too surprising reading the raw unabridged version of what happened in Kutsoglera. When “working” for the Venture Unit and that too as an Infiltration agent, it was practically second nature to immediately think the worst of every and any “corrected” information. The history of Kutsoglera that was widely available to the rest of the GLA Known Universe though was horrific, didn’t cover the deeper and darker secrets behind it either.

While it was definitely true that a massive pirating organization had raided and overtaken Kutsoglera, it had not been a random attack.

There were a lot of secret organizations and unions between both GLA Planetary Systems and non-GLA Planetary Systems regarding biological experimentation. Any form of study or experimentation imposed upon Beings that went beyond what the GLA Code on scientific studies set up was instantly banned and made punishable by both planetary and GLA laws.

There were a lot of reasons for many planetary governments or entire systems to want to divulge into illegal biological engineering and study. But the main reason came down to one factor: power.

The GLA are extremely powerful and strong, there was no doubt about it- however everyone knew that it was the Yisheng Directory that granted them this intense extensive reach in their governance. Using the abilities and doctrine of the Yishengs was one sure way to always guarantee a peaceful transaction into the GLA Known Universe.

And everyone knew this.

But there were some who opposed this, and wanted to exert their own form of superiority or display of power. Therefore, the most popular subject for any illegal biological experimentation was to build a super form of Beings that could be controlled and used to attack or counter the Yishengs.

In retrospect, Hoseok finds this a little funny because it was the Yishengs that who succeeded in building such an army of Beings in the form of the GI.

The main issue with creating such an army was that Yishengs could command every and anything that contained Life-force. And Life-force was found in everything.

But often times, the hearts and minds of cruel and power-crazed Beings in positions of power are resilient towards factual truths.

There have been many situations in which Hoseok has had to watch as innocents are taken advantage of, used for the benefit or profit of those who were stronger, richer, and by all rights of the universe, should have been smarter than what they did. And he hadn’t been able to do anything.

And this is exactly what happened in Kutsoglera.

They were a very young planet, their civilizations just barely forming over their continents that boasted lush and gentle terrains, mild and temperate weather, and hard-working simple Beings who enjoyed life on a daily basis, their biggest worries mainly related to the agrarian lifestyle they led.

According to archaeological findings and what could be surmised by those who survived long enough to describe Kutsoglera before that happened, the Kutsoglerin had only achieved what Hoseok dubs as the “ax-age”. Where the Beings of the planet had collective progressed enough to create and hone crafting skills for everyday purpose and use.

Hoseok grimaces as he reads through the accounts of the events that followed, skimming through the contents briefly, not wanting to add more to the index of dark history into his memory than was required.

A total of 83,211 Kutsoglerin survived the 54 sols of torture they went through as a species. Hoseok runs a comparison to the total Kutsoglerin population from the most recent census carried out and isn’t surprised to find their current population at a mere 32,862.

Hoseok glances at the census briefly, wondering if Namjoon’s name was his actual name or not. But he tries it anyway and to his surprise finds Namjoon within 2 seconds.

Going back to the encrypted data, Hoseok starts a cross-search to find Namjoon’s original files and almost regrets doing so. If Namjoon knew what he was doing, there was no doubt in Hoseok’s mind that the Kutsoglerin would be angry. And though he hasn’t seen anything other than petty passive-aggressiveness from the Captain, Hoseok has no doubt that he was probably extremely formidable and terrible to have as an enemy.

Hoseok glances behind him again just to make sure the Bridge is empty, and performs a brief systems-check before going back to his screen.

Namjoon had only been a child- according to the data provided, estimated at 7 to 10 sols of age, when the pirates had attacked. But his young age didn’t stop him from facing equal, if not worse, infliction of cruelty.

Taking a deep breath, Hoseok quickly skims over Namjoon’s medical report made when he was found, age approximated at 65 sols, barely alive, and entire changed.

According to this report, Namjoon was more or less 80% bionic. And while this wouldn’t necessarily be shocking or strange for many Beings, the method and application of his non-organic form was to the point of resembling a Cyborg. Basically, only his head was original, and that too most of his exterior was grafted and sculpted after his rescue. So that meant that what Hoseok saw of Namjoon now was just a guess made based on what remained of his original skull.

His finger hovers over the tab for the original images taken. Deciding against it, Hoseok scrolls downwards instead.

The report also claimed that due to the nature of Namjoon’s biological growth, his adaptation, and the timing of the stages in which he was “introduced” to a new “addition” to his body, his life and survival was interwoven with his crudely constructed internal bionic system. The Yishengs healed him as best they could, but so much of his original self was so entirely destroyed that they could do nothing but fortify what already existed and replace what could be replaced without adding further harm or damage.

As Hoseok reads into Namjoon’s medical history, he can’t help but feel a surge of anger, sadness, and pain.

This happened, for over 50 years, and to Hoseok’s absolute disappointment, the Venture Unit had found out about it a decade after it had all started. But they hadn’t done anything. And when they decided to do something, found that they couldn’t due to legality issues concerning non-GLA planets and the laws on space conflict.

S’ava Hhlai, Hoseok’s Division head, had been the one to propose the plan of letting in their field agents to infiltrate the situation to find a criminal offence taking place within the pirating organization and apprehend them based on those offences.

Hoseok hadn’t been involved in that, having been too young at the time. He’s also pretty sure his parents hadn’t been involved. He’s read through both of his parents personal case files and knows for a fact that they’ve never been near Kutsoglera.

So a few agents were sent in, and after being able to find a handful of criminal offences (honestly not too difficult considering this was a pirating organization), they were able to finally put an end to most of the pirate’s tyranny. Because while they were able to arrest the shuttles and ships off-planet, due to galactic laws, weren’t able to do anything in Kutsoglera.

But the Yisheng Directory had come to the rescue at this point, claiming the planet under the Extinction clause of the GLA Treaty on non-GLA planets that basically put all of Kutsoglera and her people under the protective care of the Yisheng Directory.
Hoseok scrolls down to find a recent picture of Namjoon, listing him as resident of Raksane Tayi under the Extinction clause along with the remaining surviving Kutsoglerin. But under this Namjoon’s whereabouts are put under “unknown” and hasn’t been updated in over a century.

Hoseok finds the list of bionic replacement surgeries Namjoon has been through and his gut clenches at the sheer number of it all. Namjoon didn’t exactly have organic blood running through his bionic arteries and veins. Instead his specially constructed heart pumped a sort of fluid similar to Android-blood, something that helped de-magnetize and reduce conductivity of the Android from the inside. But Namjoon’s was different because his brain still required nutrients and oxygen to survive. No additional information is given about it so Hoseok has more questions now than he did before.

There were notes on how Namjoon’s body somehow registered all of the proceedings to the way someone would with prolonged conditioning and natural evolution. So to an extent, Namjoon’s young age had helped him survive and adapt to the cruel mutilations reformed into his body.

Hoseok notes with a sinking heart that Namjoon didn’t have a digestive system. It made sense that Namjoon didn’t eat now because he didn’t need to. But how did the rest of him survive?

‘Medication.’

Hoseok nearly falls off of his chair when he finds Yoongi standing calmly behind him, like he’d been there for some time now already.

‘Yoongi-!’

‘I can smell it on him,’ Yoongi replies, indifferent to Hoseok’s startled defensive stance.

‘So you know? About him?’ Hoseok asks, ignoring the fact that Yoongi could smell out medication on random Beings.

‘You- you asked him?!’ Hoseok repeats.

‘Yes.’ Yoongi replies.

‘Was he…was he um, mad? That you asked?’ Hoseok asks carefully.

Yoongi looks away from the HUD window to look down at Hoseok. Suddenly, Hoseok feels excruciatingly scrutinized under Yoongi’s blank stare.

‘No. He seemed surprised.’ Yoongi replies.

‘Ah…how did you know it wouldn’t upset him?’ Hoseok asks curiously.

‘He mentioned it. Meaning there was an invitation open for further inquiry,’ Yoongi explains.

‘…if you put it that way…’ Hoseok blinks before glancing down at this screen. ‘You still have some time before it’s your turn. Why don’t you rest up?’

Yoongi doesn’t reply and Hoseok wonders if he’s upset instead.

‘Do you want to be left alone?’ Yoongi asks instead.

‘Um- I mean, not necessarily? I was just…looking out for you?’ Hoseok replies hoping he doesn’t sound as unsure as he did to his own ears.

‘Thank you. I am staying here.’ Yoongi replies.

‘Ah- okay,’ Hoseok replies somewhat lamely and then adds, in an attempt to diffuse any awkwardness though he’s sure any awkwardness he was feeling was pretty much one-sided because Yoongi looks completely unaffected.

‘Have you eaten?’

‘I was trying to,’ Yoongi replies, his answer surprises Hoseok who was expecting either a yes or a no from the Human.

‘But Namjoon and Sk’jin were in the Kitchen. I ran away.’

It takes Hoseok a few seconds but the moment he’s recovered, he’s laughing until his stomach cramps.

‘I- I have some-’ Hoseok manages to wheeze out as he recovers. ‘I have some snacks- you wanna share?’

Yoongi looks at Hoseok thoughtfully before he nods and sits on the chair next to Hoseok’s.

‘I was thinking,’ Hoseok grins as he pulls out a compressor bag full of dried fruits from the compartment under the arms of his chair. ‘Out of the two, I think Namjoon is going to be the first to snap and possibly punch Sk’jin.’

Yoongi takes a dried fruit, looking at it as though studying it for a while before putting it into his mouth and chewing slowly.

‘Good?’ Hoseok asks.

‘Yes,’ Yoongi replies, mouth full as he reaches for another fruit. ‘And I think Sk’jin will be the first to snap.’

Hoseok doesn’t know why he’s so pleased and excited that Yoongi is speaking this much.

‘Wanna bet?’

‘What are we betting on?’

Hoseok is positively gleeful.

‘Shift hours.’ Hoseok replies at once. ‘If I win, you take my shift hours; if you win, I take yours.’

Yoongi pauses chewing, as though contemplating and then he nods.

‘Deal.’
Database - his mind - provides him with everything he needs to know.

Yoongi “understands” why Zhoumi used the Android Core. What Yoongi translated as Sleeping, Dreaming, and Knowing, was the basic skills he would need for the mission he was assigned to, supplied to him through his helmet, or back in Headquarters in his insulated bedding. But now Yoongi doesn’t need any of that. Or maybe not, because he still finds himself not Knowing what to do with all of what was now in his mind.

It’s overwhelming as he watches, as he sees, as he smells, as he feels, as he hears.

Everything he sees is the first time he’s ever seen it - yet database gives him full information at once. He was in Šerdesas, past midnight. Those were stars, the asteroid belt, building lights, ionized motorways.

Everything he smells, is the first time he’s smelled it. And again, database identifies what it is, where it came from, what it was. His mind tells him that this is petrichor, the smell of earth after rainfall.

Everything he feels: wind, fabric, water, warmth, cold, pain, medication. The shock of the first sensation gives away immediately to a known response that translates his sensory overload into basic reactions.

He didn’t even switch on the information HUD on his visor - he Knew, without Dreaming.

It’s raining. And though his uniform provides him with protection, Yoongi can sense each drop against the fabric that covers him head to foot. The alley he’s standing in is empty, the Transporter he had parked remained hidden under the CamoTarp where he left it nearly 5 days ago. He removes his glove and allows the drops to linger over his palm, falling into the grooves of his fingers, forming smooth temporary pockets of water over serrated and harsh skin.

It spills away immediately.

Carefully removing his helmet, Yoongi allows the rain to fall over his head. And if he listened closely, he could feel his heartbeat thrumming inside his chest.

Each drop is like electricity that sparks and instantly dies as database translates each sensory trigger into a known response. By the time his hair is soaked through, Yoongi is able to understand it.

He decides that he likes the rain.

‘Living is so much more than a heartbeat Yoongi.’
Was this what Zhoumi meant by being alive?

“‘We’ll be arriving in Avasana in 12 hours,’ Sk’jin calls from where he’s sitting.

Despite the entire ship being free for their benefit and use, somehow all of them ended up assembling inside the Bridge more often than not. Sk’jin puts it down to Namjoon’s stiff regard he held towards his crew (of course Sk’jin is realistic and knows that this is mainly because of him) as a whole, therefore everyone felt obligated to sit at the Bridge when they weren’t in the middle of their sleep-cycle. So despite having a schedule, they more or less intermingled in the Bridge.

‘Yoongi I’ve been meaning to ask,’ Namjoon says quietly from where he’s sitting, yet again preoccupied with his screen. Namjoon was more or less literally attached to his customized NaviLet- he was never without it and kept consulting it. Sk’jin wondered if Namjoon was continuously reading or gathering data, a kind of forced habit from his extensive years as an Information Analyst or if he was maybe secretly into trash-fiction readily available online. Sk’jin really wants it to be the latter but knows that it’s probably the former instead. No one could look that serious reading some star-crossed romance novel about ridiculous inter-species couples and their overly dramatic families. It was always the families that raised issues. Who cared if your daughter wanted to marry the 6-tentacle-d and heavily toothed Pamn’dadt – this was true love and true love transcended biology. Let them marry and have weird kids dammit!

Besides, not all Pamn’dadt were ravenous carnivores that ate their own kind when caught in a brawl like some books portrayed (though it should be noted that an entire saga aptly named “The Six Hands of Our Love” written by a famed and celebrated shadow-author who went by the pen-name “Azure Nebula” probably romanticized the species too much) - they could be very sophisticated Beings with refined educated knowledge on the best fabrics from around the Universe. Sk’jin knew one such Pamn’dadt and had once been robed in fabric that felt like how fluffy clouds would feel like for many a sols.
‘Have you made a recent surveillance on the weaponry on board?’

‘I have.’ Yoongi replies from where he’s sitting, staring straight out into the white expanse of warp space. Sk’jin wonders what fascinated the Human so much that he kept staring out of the window. Or maybe it wasn’t fascination, and maybe Yoongi just zoned out entirely, going off somewhere in his own mind. But as Sk’jin studies Yoongi, he can’t hope to even begin to guess what he might be thinking about. There was nothing about him that indicated what subject content he would be thinking about.

It wasn’t difficult guessing what Hoseok or Namjoon would be thinking about- Sk’jin knows that they’re more or less all in the same page with what was most pressing in their minds: this mission. And among other things extreme distrust, overthinking everything, and in Hoseok’s case, regret in ever being asked and agreeing to be part of this mission.

But with Yoongi it was all blanks and even more questions that made no sense. Sk’jin suddenly wonders if Yoongi would enjoy “The Six Hands of Our Love” and has to suppress a laugh at the very idea of Yoongi reading such a novel.

‘Is the official report correct then?’ Namjoon asks, not looking up from his screen.

‘No. Official report does not record the stock of the proton-missiles,’ Yoongi replies causing Namjoon to look up in alarm and Hoseok to facepalm.

‘We have proton-missiles?’ Namjoon repeats.

‘Yes. 50 of them.’ Yoongi replies.

Namjoon and Hoseok share a look before the Kutsoglerin stands up with a heavy sigh.

‘Yoongi, could you show me the missiles?’ Namjoon asks.

Yoongi stands up immediately, and Namjoon follows him out of the Bridge.

‘I don’t think it’s surprising that we’re carrying proton-missiles,’ Sk’jin comments conversationally.

‘You don’t think so?’ Hoseok raises an eyebrow.

‘No- I mean, it adds up to what we’re doing and what we could potentially face- or not face,’ Sk’jin shrugs. ‘I’m surprised you’re surprised.’

‘Rather than surprise I think I’m just generally high-strung,’ Hoseok grimaces, automatically scanning the system profiles in front of him. Spaces, it must be so bothersome having to be Head-Pilot with such a small crew. ‘This will add to other security and safety measures we will have to take- regarding the ship and legal limits while on Docks.’

‘It’s not like it’s difficult sneaking in proton-missiles,’ Sk’jin ruminates, remembering all of the weapons he snuck around with ease.

‘No- but we’re going to have to filter more of the docks and planets based on their security checks,’ Hoseok replies. ‘Some scan specifically for Grade B and above weapons and we’re going to have to avoid that.’

Hoseok stands from where he’s seated, making his way to the Navigation Table. A small furrow appears between his brows as he scans the list of Docks in their newly assimilated trajectory.
‘We’re going to have to cancel Avasana,’ Hoseok frowns. ‘Though most ships are easily passed through, trade ships larger than an S-IV are required to get scanned as they pass through the launch-rings.’

‘But if we can’t get to Avasana, then we’ll have to double back at least,’ Sk’jin calculates briefly, ‘8 light years back and fly towards E’gri I think.’

Hoseok grimaces as he finds the planet in question.

‘Yeah- and it’s in-planet docking, they don’t have a Docking Arc outside,’ Hoseok sighs. ‘Namjoon, we have to reroute.’

‘Yeah- I figured. This is a lot of missiles, we can’t talk our way out of this, not with this kind of firepower.’ Namjoon replies through the Comm. ‘I think we’ll have to reroute back to E’gri.’

‘What’s in E’gri?’ Hoseok asks Sk’jin.

Leaning back more comfortably, Sk’jin sends details on the planet to Hoseok.

‘Does anyone have a criminal record there?’ Namjoon asks, a hint of amusement in his voice.

Sk’jin snorts faintly, catching Hoseok’s amused grin.

‘If you’re referring to Communications Manager Sk’jin then no, he does not have a criminal record in E’gri.’

‘And thank you Yoongi,’ Sk’jin chuckles.

‘Has anyone been to E’gri?’ Namjoon asks before he appears at the doorway to the Bridge.

‘If I don’t have a criminal record there, then no,’ Sk’jin replies with a proud grin. Namjoon briefly rolls his eyes.

‘Never been,’ Hoseok replies.

‘I have,’ Yoongi chimes in. ‘For a brief period of time.’

‘Ah…’ Hoseok sounds uneasy but curious. ‘For what?’

‘I was assigned an assassination task.’

Namjoon, Sk’jin, and Hoseok all share a quick glance with each other before Sk’jin rearranges his features and asks, ‘Were you successful?’

‘Yes.’

‘So I guess…we can rely on you for information about E’gri?’ Hoseok asks hopefully.

‘It’s hot.’

‘…well it is rather close to its sun…’ Namjoon comments as he reads the information on E’gri. ‘Anything else?’

Yoongi looks at the 3D holographic projection of E’gri and says in his normal monotone, ‘It’s extremely dry.’
‘We’ll have to moisturize ourselves then,’ Sk’jin chimes in, winking at Namjoon, ‘I can help you.’

Namjoon’s eyebrow twitches by itself before he says, ‘Hoseok pull us out of warp and let’s reposition ourselves. Everyone buckle in.’

‘Offer still stands!’ Sk’jin sings as he turns on his chair, facing the HUD windows, the safety straps automatically wrapping over his frame.

Hoseok hears Namjoon sigh quietly before he too sits back down on his chair.

‘All seated?’ Hoseok calls out though his dashboard signals him that they were all secured.

‘All right then, pulling out of warp in 10…9…8…7…6…5…4…3…2…1.’

The stars diminish and the lights fade away, opening into wide open space.

‘All right- safety can be removed in a minute,’ Hoseok calls out from the cockpit. ‘We have 5 minutes before we can jump back into warp. Namjoon is the trajectory locked-‘

A massive shuttle hurtles overhead out of nowhere, clearly pulling out of warp as well judging by the bright blue energy frequency that rippled at its wake.

‘-what the fuck-‘ Hoseok doesn’t get to complete his sentence because the Bridge is filled with a warning sound- the alarm for a lock-rift being placed on them. The shuttle in front of them has markings and serial numbers all from Orvan and it halts in front of them, looming in front of them, nearly 3 times as large as the Užkulisai-02.

Hoseok watches helplessly as the dashboard in front of him freezes and locks down. This was not good.

‘Shields up, missiles ready to launch.’ Lisai’s smooth voice reports in.

‘WAIT YOONGI DON’T FIRE!’ Namjoon yells as he recovers from the suddenness of everything.

‘We’re receiving a call-‘ Sk’jin announces from where he’s sitting.

‘This is the Orvan Far Space Operative- all crew members of the Užkulisai-02 will surrender immediately for Level 2 Bribery and obstruction of GLA Docking Procedures. Be prepared to dock’

Everyone’s heads spin to look at Sk’jin who looks mildly impressed before he turns to look at all of them in turn. Then with a sort of resigned shrug and smile, he says, ‘Oops?’

‘Spaces!’ Namjoon exclaims as he undoes his safety belt and addresses Hoseok, ‘Hoseok, ready the ship to dock. Yoongi, for the sake of our mission, please lay off the trigger- it makes me nervous.’

Hoseok glances over at Yoongi who has indeed launched the entire interactive-weapons control frame and had his hands over trigger controls and the HUD in front of him was already locked in place, ready to fire. Yoongi extracts his hands out of the controls looking dejected.

‘And you,’ Namjoon rounds up at Sk’jin who is also standing up, ‘You best hope we can get out of this shit you’ve put us in or we’re going back to Šerdesas and you will have to explain why we failed not even a month into our mission to the special jury.’
Sk’jin actually has the gall to chuckle as he says, ‘Don’t worry Nammie, I got this.’

‘You better,’ Namjoon replies distractedly as he gathers his NaviLet and rushes out towards the exit way with Sk’jin at his heels. ‘And Yoongi- please don’t fire at anyone or anything.’

Hoseok watches with great alarm as Yoongi lowers the TeorSer that somehow just appeared in his hands, looking even more put off. Then to Hoseok’s complete disquiet, Yoongi actually sighs and says, ‘I’m going to have some tea. Would you like some?’

Hoseok glances out of the HUD window and then back at Yoongi. He’s vaguely aware of Namjoon and Sk’jin very loudly bickering about something. Then he looks back out of the window and thinks, why not?

‘Yeah sure Yoongi. Let’s have some tea.’

Yoongi walks inside the wide spacious apartment. It doesn’t look lived in for at least 5 months now.

Yoongi isn’t too surprised by this. There were times when Zhoumi left for months on end. One time he had been away in Long-Huo for over a year due to family matters. Yoongi hasn’t seen Zhoumi in the past 17 months, but he had completed a mission commissioned by Zhoumi to deliver an OrTank to the Ubhuku planet in the System of Ymir. But there had been other missions he had to see to. From other Beings like Zhoumi. And Yoongi had accumulated a long list of information based on these Beings and Yoongi knew that Zhoumi would want to see it.

Yoongi doesn’t think much of Zhoumi’s absence, but there was a staged setting to the interior of the apartment Yoongi was very familiar to.

Nothing had changed. The table was where it was supposed to be, with a folded bit of paper under one of the legs to balance the slight rickety default it had. The kettle was on the heater, there were a set of dishes on the rack next to the cooker, the spice shakers aligned a bit too much to the left, in danger of being knocked off constantly. And as usual, Yoongi quietly pushes them back into the counter an inch or two towards the center.

Someone had been in here. And it wasn’t Zhoumi or Yoongi.
Yoongi can’t smell the Long-Huon or his presence inside the rooms. Instead there’s an almost faint lingering smell of sodium. Everything had been wiped down. But the main thing that is entirely out of place was the fact that all of his plants were still flourishing.

Database tells him that this looks like something he would do. And that meant that someone else from the GI was here. Someone other than Yoongi.

And the only reason why he hadn’t been attacked yet, was because the other agent hadn’t heard him come in.

Quietly making his way into the hallway, Yoongi waits in complete stillness and silence.

The door to Zhoumi’s bedroom opens without a single sound and a figure steps out.

Their movements are fast.

Yoongi does not have his helmet, but he had the element of surprise. He dodges the silent TeorSer fire shot at him with ease, feeling the burning heat of the shots graze past his exposed cheek as he scales the wall of the hallway, landing with grace and purpose as he easily knocks down the other agent.

Yoongi has never engaged in a fight against another GI agent- there was no protocol regarding this issue and that was probably why the other had seemingly confused responses. But Yoongi knows better now. Or at least thinks he does.

When he compares this fight to the countless others he has engaged in, Yoongi finds that it’s extremely quiet, fast, and lasts 26.31 seconds longer.

Yoongi suffers a punch that definitely cracks a rib or two, but he’s faster than his opponent. Faster, and much stronger. Making sure not to leave any trace or evidence of even a scuffle, Yoongi is quick to disarm the agent and with swift practiced ease, deflects their attempt in breaking his wrist by easily dislocating their arm out of their socket, making sure the joint throws out completely.

But one armed, a GI agent is still dangerous. Yoongi would know, because database is telling him of a situation where both of his arms were compromised and he had completed his mission by using only his legs. The agent attempts to tackled Yoongi down to the ground, clearly to overweigh him seeing as they stood a clear head taller. But Yoongi is expecting this and deflecting the attempt to misbalance him, Yoongi hooks his arm around their neck.

The GI agent falls limp to the ground, its helmeted head twisted all the way back. Yoongi would have to dispose of the body but that wasn’t his immediate concern. He scans the bedroom beyond the open door and finds everything relatively the same. Stepping over the body, Yoongi detects a digital warmth emanating from the massive screen Zhoumi used for his own personal use. It had recently been switched on and off. As Yoongi approaches the table, he detects a faint fragrance. Glancing over at the mantle over the bed, Yoongi notices a large vase of flowers, filled with luscious white flowers- the kind Zhoumi favored.

Yoongi notes that there are 10 stalks of flowers.

A low hiss permeates the air and Yoongi crouches down immediately, his hand reaching for his retractable dagger.

There’s a strange movement from the body of the GI agent, a strange compression taking place over the black-uniform before the body starts steaming. Moving quickly, Yoongi removes the helmet from over the GI agent’s head, causing it flop back to face Yoongi.
It’s only for a second, but the face of the GI agent is emblazoned in Yoongi’s mind. She looked not unlike himself- her features were unremarkable and plain, part of her face burnt no doubt from a previous mission.

It must be some form of emergency failsafe in case an agent died during a mission. Yoongi watches with an odd sense of melancholy as the agent dissolves into a pool of liquid before evaporating entirely, not even leaving a scent behind.

It was probably in their uniform, disintegrating nearly everything organic it contained. He works quickly with the helmet as well, finding and extracting the slots that held the transmission chip along with Database. Not even 3 seconds later, the helmet crumbles in Yoongi’s hands and into soft fine powder that diffuses into the air like dust.

Walking back into the bedroom, Yoongi access Zhoumi’s files with practiced ease. He’s seen and heard Zhoumi using the screen countless times, and it’s with sensory memory that he types in the password to access Zhoumi’s personal files.

Reflected on the surface of the screen, Yoongi counts the bouquet of flowers at 11 separate stalks.

Recalling the most recent search and operations within the screen, Yoongi waits a while as the screen recalibrates to its former performance stage.

The screen is momentarily a blank white before code runs through it and the screen is set back to what it was 15 minutes ago.

Database tells Yoongi that the screen has been optimized to run as a sort of Navigation Table as well. The most recent page it exited was the tracking application. Yoongi glances over to the other open tabs. They were all ordinary trade commissions, and even Yoongi’s most recent completed mission has been registered as complete and finalized. Scrolling down, Yoongi comes across terms that database does not possess, and articles that were collages of accumulated research conducted on individual Beings, all linking to the tracking tab that had been closed most recently.

Tapping on the tracker tab, the screen blinks up an interactive display.

[UPDATED INFORMATION AVAILABLE_DOWNLOAD_Y/N]

[Y]

Yoongi waits as the tab updates, a small model of a ship is on display and an index of the ship crew-members pop up to the side.

[STRAVECHI NAVA_AUTHORIZATION CODE: 0924-4291-537]

[OWNERSHIP UNDER FAMILY REGISTRY WU, LONG-HUO_LINK]

[CURRENT CAPTAIN: HEAD-PILOT WU YIFAN_LINK]

[NAVIGATOR: KIM JUNMYEON_LINK]

[CREW MEMBER: 5]

[CO-PILOT CHANYEOL DAN YONG’IN_LINK]

[CO-NAVIGATOR DO KYUNGSOO_LINK]

[TECHNICIAN MIN-SEOK_LINK]
Database tells Yoongi that this investigative data was nothing out of the ordinary. This was a simple trading ship that belonged to a long line of pilots from Long-Huo. The crew was minimal but efficient, and seemingly normal. A quick background search on the crew members shows Yoongi that the ship consisted of Beings who fell well below the standard of normalcy. Everything from piracy, mercenary backgrounds, illegal racing and participation in the COGS, to criminal offences in the Ghandar Planetary Federation, the Stravechi Nava carried within her the strangest mix of aliens. But this wasn’t enough to call in the attention of the GLA, or of Zhoumi who seemed to be tracking this ship through its cargo.

However, the investigative thesis is what catches Yoongi’s eye.

Database tells him that digitized souls, or the Theory of Digitized Souls as it was registered in the GLA archives, was a scientific theory turned myth that stated that immortality could be achieved by being able to transform a Soul from a dimension-less form to that of a digital mass which could then be downloaded into any willing body or platform.

And while immortality was the main objective and goal behind the thesis, there were deeper and darker quests that branched off of this theory.

So if Zhoumi thought he found a Being who was a digitized soul aboard this ship, and he was tracking it in real time, adding that with his disappearance and the presence of the other GI agent, database tells Yoongi that all of this was interconnected with each other.

Database also tells him that their current location was an interesting choice as well.

Yaaig’Ra Ari was a massive gas-planet engulfed in a storm but most of all was also the planet where the GIU Mothership was docked, charging the hulking ship with its chaotic energy. And it was in this Mothership that Admiral K’mara, one of the Trifecta that lead the GIU, was stationed.
There’s an odd feeling growing in the pit of his stomach. Database identifies this as apprehension.

He glances down at the chip in his hand and back at the door where the body of the GI agent had dissolved. Did she know where Zhoumi was? What was her mission statement? Placing the chip from the GI Agent’s helmet over the slot on Zhoumi’s desk, Yoongi finds a mission awaiting him.

[DATA DETECTED- APPLY_Y/N]

[Y]

[INCOMING JOINT MISSION FROM HEADQUARTERS]

[ACCEPT]

[RECEIVING DATA]

[COORDINATES _NUQTAI]

[TARGET: VENTURE UNIT FIELD AGENT KAI {JONGIN} DAKAŞYAI]

[ASSASSINATE]

[TIME: IMMEDIATE]

[SHUTTLE IN WARP IN 27 MINUTES FROM HEADQUARTERS]

[ACCEPT_Y/N]

Yoongi taps across the screen with a single gloved finger, reading carefully. This wasn’t mere coincidence that Zhoumi would have a file pertaining to a Being that was now the target of assassination from the GI.

[ACCEPT_Y/N]

Yoongi’s finger hovers over the screen, unsure why he was hesitant.

[Y]

Yoongi activates self-destruct within Zhoumi’s screen and watches as millions of terabytes of information and data scramble and erase itself. And just to be sure, Yoongi introduces a malware into the system to thoroughly destroy all traces of digital data.

Satisfied, Yoongi picks up the chip and pockets it. He would now have to pose in as the GI agent it originally belonged to. But database tells him this won’t be difficult because GI agents rarely scanned each other.

Yoongi pauses at the bedroom doorway and glances at the bouquet of flowers.

From where he now stood, he could see 12.
(Author’s Note)
So my sister graduated this week. Summa Cum Laude. And she got a fucking legit gold coin for her 4.0 GPA HOW IS SHE REAL HOW ARE WE RELATED I’M STRUGGLING IN UNIVERSITY AND HERE SHE IS LEADING HER ENTIRE YEAR OF STUDENTS I’M JUST-
I’m just struggling with art and cgi and writing fanfic.
It’s fine.

Also if anyone is a fan of Lord of the Rings and you’ve always wanted a Lord of the Rings au with bts in it, ask no more, because lo and and behold: The Sons of Middle Earth.
YEAP- MY LOTRAUXBTS IS HERE LIKE I PROMISED. PLEASE SUBSCRIBE AND LOOK FORWARD TO TOLKIEN GOODNESS.
I also like to post the occasional moodboard regarding my fics so please check out my tumblr/twitter for random updates ^_^
‘I thought you told Yoongi not to use his TeorSer.’

‘I did.’

‘Then why in Spaces are you arming yourself with one?’

‘Because you know as well as I do that this is not some simple arrest for bribery or obstruction—this is the Far Space Operative, not space-border patrol.’

‘Ah. You figured that out.’

Namjoon turns to look at Sk’jin grimly. They were at the Hangar Bay where their defensive weapons were stored. Sk’jin notices that Namjoon doesn’t hand him any.

‘What happened in Orvan may have taken place almost 800 years ago but I don’t think they would so easily forget who you are,’ Namjoon states bluntly. ‘Now would be the time to tell me exactly what happened so that we can get ourselves out of this situation.’

‘Aw, are you looking out for me?’ Sk’jin simpers.

Namjoon levels Sk’jin with a serious expression but before he can open his mouth to say anything, Sk’jin beats him to it and says, ‘Don’t worry- I got this, you won’t need the TeorSer.’

And he makes to walk away, headed for the air-lock anteroom but Namjoon grabs him by the arm and jerks him back.

‘No- you listen to me,’ Namjoon all but growls, stepping in to really face Sk’jin. ‘If you hadn’t disobeyed my orders from the beginning then we wouldn’t be here right now-‘

‘Oh really?’ Sk’jin loses all semblance of coy playfulness and he leans in closer too, eyes narrowing as he rounds up against Namjoon. ‘Then tell me Captain, what would you have done at that time had it not been for my bribery? Hand me over to the Orvan forces? I guess you would have done so- that way you would have one less Being to stress over and as the mission went on you would find more excuses to get rid of the rest of us until only you remained- the hero of this mission.’

Sk’jin’s eyes burn a neon red but Namjoon doesn’t look away, instead he pushes Sk’jin back with an extraordinarily blank face.

‘Do not,’ Namjoon says, voice incredibly low, ‘accuse me of your own selfishness.’

‘Guys- they’re extending a passage-tube. What’s the plan?’ Hoseok’s voice chimes in on their Comm-Devices, breaking the intense stare down between the Kutsoglera and the Khol’isa.

‘The plan is that someone stops being an ass and remembers that I have more experience with the Orvanan and let me handle this,’ Sk’jin down right hisses.

‘No- the plan is that someone stops assuming he can do shit and let me handle this before he ruins the entire mission!’ Namjoon snaps.

‘If one of you could decide what to do then we would be extremely grateful,’ Hoseok’s resigned voice grumbles.

‘You’re “experience” with Orvan is what lead us here in the first place!’ Namjoon rounds back at Sk’jin who crosses his arms over his chest, looking Namjoon down from his nose though he’s shorter than the Kutsogleran. ‘This is clearly an attempt to make you pay for whatever you were involved in, or whatever you did.’

‘And you think taking that is going to help solve this issue?’ Sk’jin retaliates, gesturing briefly to the TeorSer. ‘Clearly you have never been in a position where mediation is the key to-’

‘Your mediations did shit for us and now we’re here-‘

‘This is out my control-‘

‘If you had told us from the beginning that you had a criminal record here-‘

‘As Captain shouldn’t you have asked us all ‘stead of goin’ along and giving us a trajectory without any of our input and just sayin’ “hey look, I’m fucking intelligent and just follow my lead yeah?” y’think I didn’t notice?’ Sk’jin laughs humourlessly, before he shoves Namjoon backwards. ‘Y’think you’re so much better than me yeah? Y’think you can lord over me because you don’t have a criminal record like min yeah? Let me tell you somethin’ sweet cheeks- cuz despite all the information you know and all the oh so horrifying things you’ve discovered- you have seen nothing!’

Namjoon finds himself back against the wall as Sk’jin crouches in a strange stoop, eye flaring red and his ethereal features look sharp and frankly terrifying.

‘You know nothing,’ Sk’jin hisses before he stands up straight, brushes down his robes and puts on a simpering smile again. ‘So you stay here like the good boy that you are, and let me handle this. No violence required.’

Then he spins on his heel and says, ‘Hoseok, could you accompany me? I need someone level-headed for this.’

Namjoon glances over and to his surprise finds both Hoseok and Yoongi standing near the entrance to the Hangar. Hoseok has a deeply troubled expression on his face. Yoongi seemed to be holding him back from entering and only lowers his arm after Sk’jin stepped away.

‘Yoongi- could you take the Bridge?’ Hoseok asks the Human who nods in reply and walks back out.
Hoseok follows after Sk’jin into the air-lock anteroom, giving Namjoon one last look of something Namjoon can’t rightly define.

Namjoon slumps on the ground, taking in a deep breath.

Sk’jin was terrifying in a way that bordered madness. And somehow that felt like the realest form of Sk’jin’s true being. Inexplicably, something Yoongi had said comes to Namjoon’s mind.

‘You talk differently.’

‘What do you mean Yoongi?’

‘Last time I heard you speak, you spoke differently.’

‘It was a different time.’

But Namjoon can’t dwell on that right now.

‘Lisai, can you get me a visual link for Iris-02 and Iris-03?’ Namjoon sighs out from behind his hands. ‘Send the feed to Anteroom 1.’

‘Understood Captain.’

Namjoon picks himself up as the ship jolts a little, clearly being pulled into an external Hangar Bay. Inside the Anteroom, Sk’jin and Hoseok are waiting for the go-to signal before they open the doors.

“We’ll keep watch from here- if there’s any trouble then I’ll send Yoongi in.” Namjoon says quietly as he approaches them, holding out his palm. The Iris was a small device that used static energy to stick itself to any non-metallic object- perfect to attach on clothing. It also had a camouflage exterior and was virtually undetectable by most basic scanners. It was also highly illegal.

Sk’jin does a spectacular job of not noticing Namjoon and being completely deaf to his words. Hoseok instead turns and nods in acknowledgment, taking the small devices from Namjoon’s palm.

The door-panel to the side lights up green and Namjoon takes a step back next to the mounted screen on the opposite wall. The door slides open with a silent woosh into a long stretch of ominously see-through passage-tube. The door from the opposite side of the ship opens as well to reveal a host of Beings- Orvanans dressed smartly in their olive-toned uniform.

“They’re armed.” Yoongi’s comments.

“It’s fine,” Sk’jin says confidently as he steps forward, closely followed by Hoseok.

‘Lisai?’

‘Feed is live.’

‘Yoongi?’

‘Ready to fly out on your command.’

Namjoon heaves a sigh and watches as the screen lights up.

‘He’ll handle it.’
Namjoon is taken aback from Yoongi’s comment. He doesn’t know what to say, so instead he nods.

Yoongi has travelled for many years.

His mind is able to conjure up every single memory he has of every single galaxy, system, planet, moon, Docking Arc, Settlement Arc he has ever visited.

But this is the first time he has ever been aware of his surroundings.

The helmet he had worn when he went to Sleep told him everything he needed to know about Nuqtai, everything he needed to remember, all the probabilities and variables calculated into the mission while on Nuqtai were made Known to him, all of the other agents were also listed.

They were to mislead their target, observe and study him, and have him exterminated. This was a mission routine Yoongi has performed countless times. And it has never raised questions before. But now it does.

Who was he that he was under their target?

The plan was to lure the Venture Unit agent into one of the plateaus that was heavily industrialized with several hydroplants built around the edges. After killing the agent, they would then dump the body in one of the ravines or tubes that would later flow to the filtration system, eradicating any evidence.

Why they were after this field agent, Yoongi doesn’t know. It wasn’t explained to him. But they wanted him dead.

Nuqtai is extremely populated and messy. Its original inhabitants fled nearly a millennium ago and now the planet was a sort of free-for-all pirate base that was sort of acknowledged by the GLA and were left alone for most of the time.

The Venture Unit had something to do with it of course. Their involvement was the only thing that stopped them from having the GIU launch a cleansing attack over Nuqtai. But information is vital, and Nuqta sold you any and everything if you were willing to pay the price.
Yoongi walks the streets of the Gna Plateau, the largest and most populated Plateau in all of Nuqtai. He’s walked this area before but Yoongi takes the time out to notice things he never saw before, things he didn’t notice before, and Beings he’s never paid attention to before. Yet, his mind is able to process each race, each species, and sometimes even provides him with a name and background if they were famous enough to fall into the GLA Public Criminal Records.

Yoongi stares down at the open food stalls around him. Changing the settings of his visor, Yoongi reads the ingredients involved in all of the foods sold and watches as a couple of Beings eat rehashed organic gunk dyed and processed to look like meat. He also notes exponentially high levels of bacteria and viruses in each of the stalls. Readjusting his screen back to normal, Yoongi passes through the crooked streets unseen and unnoticed before walking straight into an eatery.

An eatery was an establishment made to look like a regular saloon or bar, except more than just drinks were served in here. Walking behind a couple of scantily clothe freeloaders, Yoongi passes through the security check with ease and finds himself a corner to stand in. The visor on his helmet focuses on each Being inside the eatery and narrows down the criteria of Yoongi’s search. The main reason why he was walking the streets of Nuqtai.

Then his helmet alerts him and shadowing one of the Android waiters, Yoongi makes his way across the crowded floor and over to the booth that has been highlighted by his visor. It’s easy enough to duck under the booth table without anyone noticing and Yoongi just sits on the floor, listening.

‘-lling you, this isn’t just about Cha’kneng Prison- I know Beings all right? I know some who escaped in time- but they’re being hunted down too- they’re looking for some shit or something!’

Yoongi listens quietly, noting that though dirty, the tiles of the floor of the eatery was quite aesthetically pleasing.

‘-at’s not just it- there’s something else happening. Something big-’

‘You need to stop stressing out over things-’

‘No you listen! None of M’fynes’s lot are here! None of his ships, his crew,- there’s an entire slave stock rotting in his dungeon right now because none of his men have returned!’

Someone spills their entire drink 4 booths down. It’s a strange unpleasant smell.

‘He was last seen in Trinaest, using the COGS as a cover up-’

‘So he obviously got caught, the COGS is swimming with GLA officers-’

‘He didn’t get caught- if he did we would have known! This isn’t the Venture Unit- or that Khol’isa bitch- there’s something else going on here!’ the voice speaks empathetically.

‘Oh yeah- so who you think it is then huh?’

‘Something bigger than we could have ever thought- ‘

A freeloader leans in across the counter, her skin is pure gold and her eyes are jet black. A forked tongue slides out from between her lips and laps at the drink below her.

‘It’s the Venture Unit- they’ve probably gotten someone new who doesn’t know how things work-’
‘It’s not the Venture Unit! Think about it! The Ui’dum Clan have also gone completely missing- not a single trace of them-’

‘I agree with Frid,’ another voice speaks gruffly. ‘It’s not just the Ui’dum Clan either- so many have gone missing. ‘The N’dini Phuthume system was attacked just the other week.’

‘Attacked? What do you mean?’

‘Three planets. Blown up. Poof! Just like that.’

An ugly rodent-like animal crawls up Yoongi’s boot, its fur is grey and white. It sniffs at Yoongi for a while before skirmishing away, only to get trampled under a boot 2 tables down.

‘That’s nonsense- a solar flare or something-’

‘There have been other planets blowing up- you can’t deny that there’s a pattern-’

‘Some sort of planet killer- some strange new tech I’m guessing-’

‘It’s not just planets- it’s suns too. Sapped out and drained to the extent where the fission inside of it has gone stone cold- I’ve been on one of them- it was fucking weird-’

‘There’s no point speculating on shit like this it doesn’t affect us-’

‘Of course it affects us! We’re a part of this universe- we live in it!’

The boot pulls away and tracks blood and organs behind it, causing the golden-skinned freeloader to slip on it as she slinked across the room. She falls painfully on her back and an uproar of boisterous laughter fills the eatery.

‘You sound fucking scared.’

‘That’s because I am- there has been a lot of question asking going around as well- it’s not just me. It’s not just pirates who are noticing- haven’t you realized how many agents are about? How many GLA officials are raiding our areas-’

‘Not to mention the GIU suddenly manning up and spreading around in that massive ship of their’s-’

‘So you’re all just scared of something you can’t even name- huh, the Hrul Clan really are a bunch of cowards-’

A scuffle breaks out and just as quietly as he had come, Yoongi leaves the eatery. No one saw him go in, no one sees him go out. Easily leaping up the rafts, Yoongi walks through the cramped rooftops of Nuqtai, electric frequency rising around him like the breeze.

Yoongi thinks back to all the memory that he now had- that he was now aware of.

A nameless fear.

Planet killer.

Sun reaper.

A lingering thread of fear sews its way through the fabric of Time and it won’t cut loose.
Sk’jin is smiling serenely as the Orvanan officers approach them. Hoseok walks a little behind Sk’jin, feeling almost like Sk’jin’s personal bodyguard and the Khol’isa was royalty he was protecting during a diplomatic meeting. Except this is not a diplomatic meeting, and Sk’jin is not royalty but in fact an ex-criminal with an extremely colourful past even by “normal” standards.

And for someone who was about to apparently face arrest, Sk’jin is extremely calm and almost excited about this whole process. Hoseok on the other hand feels nothing but dread.

After watching Namjoon and Sk’jin’s argument escalate, Hoseok was worried that his and Yoongi’s bet would come to conclusion a bit too soon and they’d both kill each other. They were in the weapons hold after all and it wouldn’t be too surprising considering the intensity of their argument.

But before he could intervene, Yoongi (who honestly Hoseok had forgotten about) had stopped him from attempting to break apart the argument because Sk’jin was honestly starting to freak Hoseok out.

‘Hoseok, it seems pointless to ask this, but how good is your hand-to-hand combat skills?’ Sk’jin asks as they step closer to the center of the passage-tube.

‘Sufficient enough for whatever you might be planning,’ Hoseok replies with a frown.

‘So modest,’ Sk’jin bestows him with a small smile. ‘I don’t need modesty though, if things don’t work out quite how I want them to.’

‘Well I guess you’ll have to really make this work,’ Hoseok grimaces as they pause to a stop.

Sk’jin simply chuckles before turning to address the Orvanan officer.

‘Good day-‘ Sk’jin begins but suddenly the Orvanan officers raise their TeorSers straight at Sk’jin’s face, just inches from his nose. To his credit, Sk’jin doesn’t even flinch or appear surprised. Instead he sighs and rolls his eyes.

One of the officers grabs Hoseok who allows himself to be captured and tries not to roll his eyes as they cuff him.
‘We do not tolerate terrorists entering our borders so freely, Khol’isa.’ The Orvanan officer spits out. ‘You are lucky we did not shoot down your ship.’

‘You couldn’t have shot it down in the first place- we were in warp,’ Sk’jin replies bluntly. ‘If you’re trying to threaten me, at least make it plausible.’

Hoseok really wonders how Sk’jin has survived this long considering how mouthy he was.

‘Silence scum!’ the Orvanan officer forcefully presses the nozzle of the TeorSer on Sk’jin’s forehead, tilting the Khol’isa’s head backwards.

‘You will not be given any trial or court hearing.’

‘Yes because if I did stand trial your entire planet will be kicked out of the GLA and a majority of your government tried and imprisoned for violation of the GLA Treaty,’ Sk’jin interrupts blithely, as though a TeorSer wasn’t nestled against his head. ‘Tell me officer, would the court so easily let your planet go scot-free when they find out that you’re one of the hidden planetary systems involved in the Isbahaysiga Alliance?’

Hoseok watches as the officers all quickly pale and look terrified. A few of them even lower their TeorSers.

Hoseok knows this case. The Isbahaysiga Alliance was the largest illegal trafficking pirating network. It had taken over 4 centuries of attempting to infiltrate the Alliance before the Venture Unit had finally been able to find and identify the pirate clans involved. And through this, were able to narrow down the list of planetary systems involved. Hoseok’s entire family line had at one point, been involved in this case. Both of his parents had participated in infiltrating the network, which frankly speaking, had been been extremely complex and well covered for a pirating network. It wasn’t like all pirates were dumb- not at all. But with a network this large and this extensive, it had been too difficult finding the root source of all the problems. And though there had been over 20 pirate clans involved in the Alliance, any information regarding the Alliance had been extremely difficult to find. But after its exposure 5 sols ago, the GLA and the Venture Unit had discovered that there had been over 10 planetary systems involved as well. Either selling out their own planet, or selling out their neighbouring planets.

The investigation and court trials regarding these planetary systems was still ongoing.

But that wasn’t the most horrifying part of this entire case. The Isbahaysiga Alliance had been working with the Akramanese, supplying them with any and everything they could get their hands on. At this point, it wasn’t just trafficking live Beings for ill intentions, this was harvesting and Orvanan was obviously deeply involved.

But Hoseok had no idea Orvan had been involved in the Isbahaysiga Alliance. How had they overlooked this planet? Hoseok was deeply involved in this case, having been assigned the mission in tracking down one of the many pirating clans involved in this.

There had been a few well known pirating clans involved. Clans that Hoseok knew had formed or struck a deal with the Venture Unit. So he had tried to use this same channel in order to gather information but there had been an alarming rate of disappearing clans.

Pirate clans were not small. The smallest had some thousand members in it, and the clans involved in the Isbahaysiga Alliance had been large and spread out.

Before they could even find or capture any of them, they all started dropping off of the face of the Universe and no one saw or heard from them anymore. The pirate clan Hoseok himself had been in tasked to find had also entirely vanished, followed shortly but a whole bunch of others.

But after overturning many of the remaining pirate clans who still remained, they were able to successfully stop the Alliance. Or that was what Hoseok thought. If Orvanan was still involved in this “business”, how many other systems were involved? And did the Venture Unit know of this?

But most importantly, how did Sk’jin know?

‘So tell me, Officer,’ Sk’jin takes a small step back away from the officer with an exaggerated innocent expression on his face. ‘What would Orvan do then? Oh, it would be so horrible! Outcast and shunned by all of the Universe- I mean I don’t even think any pirate clan would want to partner with any of you after that- right Hoseokkie?’

Hoseok only sighs in reply. Sk’jin was having too much fun.

The officers in the back glance at each other, and Hoseok can see how the officer holding him looks around confused and scared.

Sk’jin crosses his arms, ‘I mean I guess it would be all right for the high ranking officials- they would be able to escape, live a normal-ish life in some secluded place in disguise. They are rich enough. But what about you?’ Sk’jin looks around at the officers inside the tube.

‘What about the rest of you? I just bribed my way through the borders of your wonderful planet with a mere 20,000 units, I mean,’ Sk’jin shrugs. ‘Do you even have enough money for retirement?
Do you even have enough money if someone you love gets taken?’

This draws out the most reaction from the Orvanans. They all look frightened and at their wits end.
Hoseok wants to know what Sk’jin meant by what he said. But that would have to wait until later.

‘You haven’t sent the evidence yet- it’s been 800 years, you know this won’t end well for you either,’ the main officer snaps though Hoseok is beginning to see the unrest in his eyes.

‘What makes you think I haven’t,’ Sk’jin feigns surprise. ‘I have a good friend inside the ship who would very well indeed just push that button for me and you can say goodbye to any semblance of a normal life.’

‘Because if they do, we will kill you and destroy your ship,’ the officer growls.

‘Honestly I don’t think my Captain would really care if you did kill me,’ Sk’jin replies with a shrug. ‘In fact I’m pretty sure he’s planning something right about now to just get rid of me anyways.’

‘ Wouldn’t be too far off,’ Hoseok grumbles, causing the officers around them to look at each other in alarm.

‘So how about this hm?’ Sk’jin reaches over and holds the officer’s hands in his, making himself a little shorter than him. ‘You let us go, and we forget all about this. You all get to go back to your homes, no one gets hurt, your planet can continue to strive illegally and we’re all happy. Hm?’

There’s something different about Sk’jin’s voice. A strange lull falls over the passage-tube and all of the officers stare at Sk’jin as though mesmerized.

‘I-‘ the officer stammers.
‘Shh,’ Sk’jin says gently, rubbing his hands between his own. ‘It’s all right- I understand that you’re in a difficult position. But think of your planet, of the Orvanan people and how far they have come. But if you do this, then everything will fall apart. You don’t want that do you?’

A few of the officers shake their heads in reply.

‘Of course you don’t- you love your planet, your home planet. You would do anything to protect and save her, correct?’ Sk’jin’s voice is the most beautiful thing Hoseok has heard and as he speaks, almost feels the need to nod as well.

This time a majority of them nod their heads.

‘Hoseok snap out of it. Stay alert- these are not the only officers on board.’

Hoseok blinks a few times and only then notices how the officers in front of them have red tinted irises.

‘So what do you say officer? Let’s all just forget this, maybe you could start a worker’s union, get them to raise your pay more right?’ Sk’jin reaches out to pat another officer. ‘That way you can support your families better, and you could even go on holiday-!’

‘FIRE!’

Hoseok ducks immediately, grabbing Sk’jin down.

The officers in front of them crumple in bloodied heaps as TeorSer shots fire through the narrow space.

They were attacking their own people?!

‘Shut down the passage-tube and disconnect now!’ the voice roars.

To Hoseok’s immense alarm, glass doors start shutting down around them, sectioning the passage-tubes before each section is thrown out into space.

‘Sk’jin move!’ Hoseok hisses as he tries to pull the Khol’isa up. But Sk’jin is boneless and his weight throws around in a strange manner and to Hoseok’s horror, he notices an immense amount of blood pouring from his side. As he pulls up Sk’jin to stand, he notices how drawn and aged he appeared suddenly.

‘Shit-’

Namjoon appears out of nowhere, dragging both of them up and pushing them forward.

‘The doorway!’ Namjoon yells and Hoseok sprints forward, one of the glass doors shutting narrowly behind Namjoon who half carries Sk’jin’s unconscious form. To Hoseok’s utter and complete dismay, the glass casing of the passage-tube begins to crack. He nearly overruns and sprints through the doorway. Skidding to a stop, Hoseok activates the magnetic-panels to make sure the passage-tube is attached to their end.

There’s a loud explosive sound and a flare of light from the right of the ship.

‘Shields are holding. The ship is safe.’ Yoongi calls in quietly. ‘Attack?’

‘Don’t engage-!’ Namjoon yells.
There’s an alarming cracking sound that deafens Hoseok and for an alarming fraction of a second, Hoseok feels the harsh pull of vacuum, and air whipping around him and out of his lungs. There’s a brief wailing alarm, triggered clearly by the sudden breach in the internal sealing of the ship but it stops almost as abruptly as it began. It takes him a few seconds to find his bearings.

‘Hoseok?’

Yoongi sounds confused and this frightens Hoseok. There’s a coughing sound and Hoseok pushes himself up, trying to recover from whatever the fuck just happened.

Sk’jin is coughing, his blood smears the area around him, further staining his robes. The air-lock anteroom door is shut and there’s more flashing lights beyond the small window. The ship shakes from the force of what Hoseok gathers are proton-missiles and Grade A TeorSer fire.

‘Where’s Namjoon?’

‘Spaces fuck-’ Hoseok manages to stand up and barrels into the door way. ‘He’s out there-!’

It’s too bright outside, what with the continuous explosions and detonations over their ship.

‘Shit- Lisai locate Namjoon now- I’m heading out, Yoongi increase shield while I go and get Namjoon back-’ Hoseok nearly leaves the anteroom but remembers Sk’jin.

‘Shit- Lisai prepare Medical Bay 3 for emergency treatment for Communications Manager Sk’jin,’ Hoseok orders as he quickly stoops down and picks up Sk’jin. Sk’jin is much taller than him and is dead weight so it’s difficult for Hoseok to balance the injured Khol’isa properly- his breathing is quickly turning rapidly shallow and loud.

‘Understood. Opening Anteroom 2, airlock initiate.’

‘What-?’

Hoseok manages to get into the Lobby in front of the Medical Bays when Namjoon appears from the other hallway leading to the other anteroom.

‘Namjoon-?’ Hoseok manages to get out. How did he get there? When did he get there? What happened?!

‘Yoongi get us out now!’ Namjoon yells, running towards Hoseok and helping him carry Sk’jin into the Medical Bay.

‘But they have us in lock-rift,’ Hoseok manages to get out as they carry and place Sk’jin over the prepared Medical Bed at once.

‘We took care of that,’ Namjoon replies hurriedly as he hurriedly pulls down the emergency seats by the Medical Bay door.

‘Hitting warp in 10 seconds.’ Yoongi announces.

Hoseok jumps over to the emergency seat and straps himself on as well.

‘What the fuck happened?!’ Hoseok demands, turning to address Namjoon who honestly doesn’t look all that fazed or remotely rumpled. He looked completely fine.

‘You were thrown out into open space!’ Hoseok adds as though to remind Namjoon of what had just happened.
‘Yeah well,’ Namjoon grimaces as the familiar pull of warp settles in the lining of Hoseok’s stomach. ‘Good thing I don’t actively need air to survive.’

Though the mission was to assassinate the Venture Unit field agent Jongin, codename Kai, Yoongi and the unit he was in were tasked to set up a fake gathering of different pirate clans. Or at least, fake to an extent because actual representatives of massive pirate clans were making assembly in the allocated meeting place in one of the more obscure plateaus of Nuqtai.

Yoongi calculates that the other agents involved were responsible for bringing in the other clans—luring and tricking them to meet here. Or perhaps this was really a meeting that had nothing to do with them, but now they were going to make sure it never happened.

Yoongi notes that there are 2 pirate clans, and a poorly disguised GLA infiltration unit.

They’re fairly easy to take out. A single well placed and cleverly angled shot triggers a shootout amongst the meeting goers and the other agents take out the survivors from their vantage point.

Now they would wait for Jongin, study his movements, follow him as he investigates the meeting turned massacre and see who he reported back to.

It is Yoongi’s task to follow the Dakaṣayaii around, having been assigned this particular step of the plan. And being both a field agent and a Dakaṣayaii, made it incredibly difficult for Yoongi and the rest of the unit. Because although already trained to be covert and quick, Jongin had the ability to teleport.

They would have to make sure to bait him long enough to examine him and then assassinate him once they retrieved sufficient information. Yoongi doesn’t know who is doing all of the analysis but it’s not him.

Yoongi watches the Being, Jongin, carefully as he examines the ship that brought Yoongi over to Nuqtai. It made the most sense for them to use themselves as bait to lure Jongin in. So they moved in purposefully obvious yet covert ways that Jongin could track without it being too suspicious.

But this also raises a thought in Yoongi’s mind. Jongin knew about them. Or at least had an idea of who they were. Of who Yoongi could possibly be.

They have to pretend like they don’t know Jongin is there, and so they purposefully place themselves in places that can be seen or viewed. Hidden well enough from sight, but enough for Jongin to spy on them.

Yoongi finds that Jongin is exceptionally talented and is incredibly attuned to his surroundings. Almost in level with his own skill. Yoongi can already tell that Jongin is not comfortable— he does not have the surety of someone who is completely confident in their disguise. He keeps glancing around.
This has never happened before.

Whenever Yoongi has had to follow his targets, no matter how trained or attuned, they have never sensed or detected him. Yoongi could walk up right next to them and they wouldn’t notice. What was happening now that Jongin seemed to sense his presence.

Jongin’s head suddenly snaps up in his direction and for the first time in all of his known memory, Yoongi is suddenly fearful for himself. He moves instantly and it’s not a moment too soon because the Dakaṣayaii has teleported right above him.

Yoongi remains incredibly still.

There’s a small sound and Yoongi knows Jongin has teleported.

Yoongi realizes he’s sweating. He removes his helmet and finds that his breath is shallow and his hands are shaking.

His mind tells him what it is. What he was experiencing. What was happening. And Yoongi almost can’t believe it because he has never felt this or been aware of it.

Fear.

It was fear.

The Orvanan were involved with the Akramanese. That was how Gritha had been able to so easily gain wealth and power- he had clearly been in contact with the Isbahaysiga Alliance members- possibly the pirating clans, and had sold his people for power.

Namjoon feels a sick wave of nausea hitting him. Just how far and deep had the Akramanese infiltrated their Universe? Orvan had not been listed as one of the planets or systems involved in the Isbahaysiga Alliance, so how many remained and were still running a thriving business of selling their people out to cruel and disgusting clients?
‘What about the rest of you? I just bribed my way through the borders of your wonderful planet with a mere 20,000 units, I mean, do you even have enough money for retirement? Do you even have enough money if someone you love gets taken?’

Namjoon frowns at that. He remembers the Orvanan officer he had briefly talked to inside the Dock, how nervous and scared she seemed when Namjoon caught sight of her wrist.

In the underverse of all things illegal and sneaky, the marks on her wrists were known as “cuff-links”. A fancy term for a far from fancy chain of events that lead you to owning such a pair.

Slaves or trafficked Beings were all subdued heavily through drugs which were pumped directly into their system through specialized cuffs. These cuffs had the tendency of leaving behind nearly entirely permanent brands on the skins of the bearer’s wrists. The continued serration of the skin, exposure to not too hygienic conditions, and eventual adaption, the cuff-links remained a part of the Being’s skin for as long as they lived. A Yisheng could probably heal and smoothen over the skin, and some surgeries were available to have them removed and smoothed over, but these procedures are expensive and in all reality, Beings with cuff-links often didn’t survive long enough to have them removed.

‘Lisai, zoom into wrists of the officer holding the TeorSer to Sk’jin’s head,’ Namjoon orders.

‘You haven’t sent the evidence yet- it’s been 800 years, you know this won’t end well for you either,’ the officer looks unsettled.

Sending image.’

The footage is from Hoseok’s Iris and clear as day, Namjoon sees the serrations on the officer’s wrists. What did this mean?

‘What makes you think I haven’t,’ Sk’jin is adopting that annoyingly innocent voice of his. ‘I have a good friend inside the ship who would very well indeed just push that button for me and you can say goodbye to any semblance of a normal life.’

‘Because if they do, we will kill you and destroy your ship,’ the officer tries to threaten but Namjoon can see the panic in his eyes.

‘Honestly I don’t think my Captain would really care if you did kill me,’ Namjoon catches sight of Sk’jin shrugging. ‘In fact I’m pretty sure he’s planning something right about now to just get rid of me anyways.’

‘Wouldn’t be too far off.’

Namjoon rolls his eyes.

‘So how about this hm?’ Sk’jin reaches over and holds the officer’s hands in his, making himself a little shorter than him. ‘You let us go, and we forget all about this. You all get to go back to your homes, no one gets hurt, your planet can continue to strive illegally and we’re all happy. Hm?’

There’s something different about Sk’jin’s voice. A strange lull falls over the passage-tube and all of the officers stare at Sk’jin as though mesmerized.

‘I-‘ the officer stammers.

‘Joonie.’ Namjoon tries not to grimace.
‘What?’

‘I’m detecting movement. We need to get Sk’jin and Hoseok back inside.’ Yoongi replies, no urgency in his voice.

‘Movement?’

‘Shh,’ Sk’jin is actually soothingly patting the Orvanan officer’s hands in his. ‘It’s all right - I understand that you’re in a difficult position. But think of your planet, of the Orvanan people and how far they have come. But if you do this, then everything will fall apart. You don’t want that do you?’

‘Can you remove the rift-lock?’ Yoongi asks.

Namjoon can see the Human already readying the warp engines.

‘Almost done,’ Namjoon replies as he glances at his NaviLet. Lock-rifts were designed to seize and hold a ship hostage. They were practically impossible to get out of and often left your ship in lockdown. However, when the Far Space Operative had extended the passage-tube, it not only literally bridged the two ships together, but created a digital bridge for Namjoon to use and more or less, hack into their ship.

‘That’s not allowed.’ Yoongi comments.

‘Yeah well, try me,’ Namjoon grits out as he bypasses the security system easily and finds the lock-rift controls.

‘I did not mean to disapprove.’

Namjoon doesn’t know how to feel about this interaction with Yoongi exactly. But he doesn’t dwell on it. He has bigger issues to deal with.

‘Of course you don’t- you love your planet, your home planet. You would do anything to protect and save her, correct?’ Sk’jin’s voice sounds very pleasant and very agreeable.

‘Communications Manager Sk’jin is using Tšeptjoa, Captain.’

‘Thank you Lisai,’ Namjoon mumbles as he access the lock-rift. He could easily disengage at once but that would sound the alarm over at the Far Space Operative ship instead and Sk’jin and Hoseok would be in danger.

‘There are more officers gathering at their end of the passage-tube.’

‘Hoseok snap out of it. Stay alert- these are not the only officers on board.’ Namjoon warns. The Tšeptjoa was the Khol’isa method of hypnosis, or as they would prefer to call it, suggestion. It was much more potent when you stared into the eyes of the Khol’isa, or if you were weak-minded, caught off-guard, or disorientated.

‘So what do you say officer? Let’s all just forget this, maybe you could start a worker’s union, get them to raise your pay more right?’

If Sk’jin was able to carry this out right, then they might actually be able to get out of this without any problems.

‘That way you can support your families better, and you could even go on holiday-!’
‘FIRE!’

‘They won’t be able to make it back.’ Yoongi says over the Comm just as Lisai announces, ‘Communications Manager Sk’jin has been compromised.’

‘They’re firing at their own officer?!’ Namjoon gawks at the footage momentarily before he quickly disengages the rift-lock.

‘Namjoon they have a squadron assembling- they’re disconnecting the passage-tube.’

‘Shit-’ Namjoon opens the air-lock door and can already feel a draft pulling out from behind him. The passage-tube was already falling apart. He dodges one of the hastily shot TeorSer fire and runs down the clear tube, keeping low.

‘Yoongi make sure the shield holds!’ Namjoon yells, watching in alarm as the glass around turns opaque as fractures as fine as hair fork through the entirety of the passage-tube.

‘They’re shutting down the tube. The only magnetic lock left is from our end-’

‘Shit-’

Hoseok is trying to pick up an unconscious Sk’jin from the floor. There’s a lot of blood. Hoseok is uninjured, only a little fazed.

‘Get to the doorway quickly. The passage-tube is disengaging in sections.’

‘The doorway!’

Hoseok seems to understand right away and he sprints ahead.

‘Sk’jin you bastard why the fuck-’ Namjoon grits out as one of the dividers slams shut just inches behind him. Cursing even more, Namjoon hurries but oddly enough, Sk’jin is lighter than he appears, a strange displacement of his weight considering he was entirely unconscious and should be dead weight.

Something explodes behind him and there’s a bright light.

‘Shields are holding. The ship is safe. Attack?’ Yoongi’s voice is clear on his Comm-Device.

They can’t attack, there were too many issues they would have to deal with in a legal standing in any future Dock if they were to fire.

‘Don’t engage-!’ Namjoon yells but then he notices the divider in front of him start to lower. They weren’t going to make it.

But one of them could.

Namjoon bodily throws Sk’jin down the tube just as the tube around him breaks apart.

Then everything is eerily silent.

It wasn’t like it wasn’t painful. There was that compression around his body, his eyes feel pressured and his ears close up. This isn’t a natural thing to go through but then again, Namjoon doesn’t necessarily have a natural body either.

‘Namjoon?’
Namjoon can’t answer because that would mean having to speak. And speaking would mean expelling air from his lungs and he needed that for a while.

The blast from the explosion pushes him almost out into space but Namjoon grabs onto the aileron of the back right wing and quickly ducks under it, laying low to stay under the protection of the shield. He feels the entire ship shudder as another missile hits it. Washes of heat ripple across his exposed skin and Namjoon grimaces at the discomfort.

He manages to crawl-float over to the second anteroom doorway and only then he speaks in a rush of air leaving his body.

‘Lisai, open Anteroom 2.’

‘Understood Captain.’

The door opens and Namjoon floats inside, angling and pushing himself in a swimming motion and settling on the floor as the door closes automatically behind him.

The air-lock lifts and for most people they would suffer from disorientation or loss of senses, maybe even feel sluggish, but Namjoon moves quickly. He dashes out of the anteroom and out into the Lobby where a very stunned Hoseok carried Sk’jin.

‘Namjoon-?’

‘Yoongi get us out now!’ Namjoon orders as he helps Hoseok lift the Khol’isa.

‘But they have us in lock-rift,’ Hoseok argues.

‘We took care of that,’ Namjoon replies as he looks around for the emergency seats and pulls them down.

‘Hitting warp in 10 seconds.’ Yoongi announces.

Hoseok is also sitting down, strapping himself in as he asks, ‘What the fuck happened?! You were thrown out into open space!’

‘Yeah well,’ Namjoon sighs, taking a deep purposeful breath. ‘Good thing I don’t actively need air to survive.’

‘…what?’ Hoseok looks rightly dumbfounded.

‘We are in warp.’

‘I don’t exactly have lungs,’ Namjoon explains as he makes himself more comfortable. Hoseok is looking at him with a searching look.

‘…how does that even remotely work,’ Hoseok’s tone is almost a deadpan, like he wasn’t sure what he was even asking.

The Medical Bed gleams a little as the capsule like shield lifts and covers Sk’jin in a clear casing. Several animatronic arms disengage and start working on his injury.

‘Someone wondered if it would be possible to build lungs that could withstand the pressure and vacuum of space,’ Namjoon shrugs. ‘They failed because it’s not possible.’

‘And then?’
‘And then they decided to replace the failure with bionic lungs- I mean I don’t use them for their actual purpose of inhaling in oxygen and exhaling out carbon dioxide,’ Namjoon explains before adding, ‘You can ask if you want.’

Hoseok looks at Namjoon in serious wonder for a while.

‘How are you alive?’

‘Medication and this not so stable but irreplaceable bionic blood,’ Namjoon taps at the side of his neck where he knows some of his “veins” could be seen. Hoseok glances at his neck, eyes narrowing.

‘Designed and built just for me,’ Namjoon smiles dryly.

‘Can’t the Yishengs do anything about it?’ Hoseok’s tone of voice suggests that he’s done research about Kutsoglera. It was possible that he read up the Yisheng archives on his planet as well, just like Yoongi did.

‘They tried their best- but too much of my “body” depends on it. Last I heard, they were trying to recreate it, so that if I lose blood, I could replenish my body.’ Namjoon waits for the information to sink.

‘If you bleed, then basically you’re dead?’ Hoseok frowns even more.

‘More or less yeap,’ Namjoon replies just as Lisai announces, ‘Communications Manager Sk’jin is stabilized. Proceeding with knitting.’

Hoseok breathes out in relief.

‘It’s called Tšepţjoa,’ Namjoon indicates towards Sk’jin. ‘What he was doing. Or at least trying to do.’

‘What’s that?’

‘The Khol’isa hypnosis thing,’ Namjoon clarifies. ‘It was much more powerful before- caused a lot of precautionary acts to take place surrounding their addition to the GLA. But it’s subdued over time. Evolution.’

‘Evolution?’

‘Well, as much as it’s possible for their kind to evolve.’ Namjoon shrugs. ‘Anyways- it’s a bit like hypnosis- a bit like suggestion. More like very seductive suggestion- when applied it’s supposed to make you feel like what they’re saying is the best thing.’

‘We’re at green in 20 seconds.’

‘What did you mean by “trying to do”?’ Hoseok inquires, watching as the Knitter works its way over Sk’jin’s side.

‘It…didn’t work how I know it’s supposed to.’ Namjoon replies with a frown, also watching the Knitter work its way to the top of the injury. They’re not in the correct angle to watch as Sk’jin’s tissue heal together slowly, leaving behind a small bumpy lesion that would go away in a month or so. ‘He wasn’t supposed to lose consciousness.’

‘He lost consciousness after getting shot though,’ Hoseok counters with a frown on his face.
'No- not according to his health tab,’ Namjoon grimaces in reply. ‘Might be the same reason why it’s like this.’ He taps on the side of his head.

Hoseok looks at Sk’jin thoughtfully before saying, ‘They’re…they don’t fall asleep right?’

Namjoon nods in answer.

‘Is it all right for him to you know,’ Hoseok gestures towards Sk’jin’s unconscious form. ‘Pass out?’

‘Honestly I don’t know- nothing about him makes sense.’ Namjoon replies. He catches Hoseok giving him a look that clearly translated into ‘you’re one to speak’.

‘We’re in green. No indication of pursuit.’ Yoongi announces.

‘Has he told you why?’ Namjoon asks as they undo the safety belt and stand up before he clarifies himself. ‘Why he’s wanted in Orvan?’

Hoseok shakes his head.

‘What do we do about the trajectory?’ Yoongi asks.

Namjoon sighs.

‘It hasn’t even been a month and we’re probably going to have to fly off the grid already,’ Namjoon scowls before pausing to add, ‘Are you injured?’

‘No I’m fine- but are you sure you’re all right?’ Hoseok asks, eyebrows raised in question as he looks over his form quickly.

‘Lisai.’

‘Captain Namjoon is in optimum health.’

‘Thank you.’

Capturing Jongin takes a lot of planning. It made sense now that he was assigned a group to take him down. Predicting where he would teleport was close to impossible. But their plan included several variables which are covered extensively with traps designed to capture the Venture Unit agent.

Granted, Jongin does escape 3 out of the 8 traps they set out for him though it’s all out of sheer luck. And Yoongi doesn’t know why but he is relieved every time Jongin escapes capture.

However this time around, Jongin is captured in their 4th trap.

Although each trap was planned and designed differently, the extermination process was the same for each of them. Lock the Venture Unit down with porter-cuffs, disabling him from teleporting, and then swiftly stab him under the rib straight into one of his main arteries and then get rid of the evidence.

They capture him near one of the ships they put out for bait.

And Yoongi knows how this mission is supposed to end- and he already sees how one of the agents has a dagger out.

Yoongi watches, with a strange sense of urgency, as Jongin fights off one of the agents even though both of his hands have been compromised by the porter-cuff and he can no longer teleport.

Stop it. Now. He must live.

Yoongi gets their first, stabbing Jongin with his own dagger, purposefully lower and misdirected. He slaps on the porter-cuffs that are just a little too large on Jongin’s wrists.

They transport him to the hydroplant and Yoongi is chanting in his mind. It barely takes a minute before they arrive.

Don’t die don’t die don’t die don’t die don’t die don’t die

Quickly, they throw the Venture Unit agent into the long and narrow tube that had previously been empty but now was filled with water. Yoongi tries not to feel alarmed.

It’s a moonless night and it makes them blend in with the dark landscape to the point of being invisible. This is certainly not the first joint mission Yoongi has been in. But it’s the first time that he’s aware of the other Beings in this team. It’s the first time that he’s aware that they were also breathing.

And somehow he finds that this makes it almost difficult for him. Almost.

The lid to the tube closes and Yoongi sets into action immediately.

He was one against 5, but he moves fast, and he moves with surety.

He had already set his TeorSer to the highest setting and instantly takes down 2 of the other agents with clean shots straight into their necks. The others set into action as well, and are again seemingly confused like the agent Yoongi had come across in Zhoumi’s apartment. So he’s able to take one down fairly easy but the remaining two recover.

Yoongi flies backwards.

His back hits the side of a concrete wall but he’s up at once throwing a dagger that lands straight into one of the agent’s helmet. Using the fallen agent’s body as a shield, the remaining agent shields themselves from Yoongi’s TeorSer and bodily launches the freshly dead agent at him.

This fight is much more brutal than his first fight with one of his own fellow agents.

Yoongi feels his shoulder pop out as the agent grabs him by the arm, their intention was to clearly break his arm. But Yoongi quickly pops his shoulder back in. The Being in front of him was taller than him by a few inches and outweighed him by at least 15 kilos. Pivoting on his foot, Yoongi aims a kick that is easily deflected and causes his knee to entirely dislocate. But it’s exactly what he had planned.

Unsheathing his other dagger, and leg still captured by the agent, Yoongi drives it straight into the agent’s ribs, now exposed from having lifted their arms against Yoongi’s previous attack. But the agent doesn’t fall easily. Snapping the blade with a downward strike, the agent grabs Yoongi in a tight and almost paralyzing choke hold. But using his smaller stature and quickness, Yoongi climbs over this Being and using his good leg, holds the latter in a choke hold as well. At this angle, the agent can’t exert all of their force and just as Yoongi planned, let’s go of their hold. Yoongi swings downwards immediately, upsetting their balance. He bends his knee around their neck right before impact and he hears the crack indicating a broken neck.

Panting, Yoongi rights his dislocated knee. He feels it acutely. He’s so aware of the pain that shoots through his entire leg. Yoongi knows the entire list of injuries he has sustained. Down to every minor cut and bruise. But he doesn’t remember any of them the way he was feeling it now.

He hurries to the tube they had dumped the Venture Unit agent into and with some difficulty, opens the lid again.

It’s empty.

So he did survive and he was able to work his way out of the porter-cuff. Yoongi slides down the tube, gasping in pain.

There’s a faint hissing sound and Yoongi jumps to action at once. Coughing, Yoongi carefully pulls himself up, dragging himself off of the floor and crawls to each of the fallen agents. He quickly disengages their helmets, pulling them off before they can reduce to dust.

He finds one of them still alive. And a thought occurs to him.

Yoongi drags him back to the small hideout and taking off the Being’s helmet, attaches the Android chip into his helmet. Finding and stealing the Android chip was relatively simple and easy. First making sure that the agent was indeed entirely unconscious and keeping him that way, Yoongi accosts a maintenance Android and quickly relieves it of its chip.

Attaching the chip into the slot under the back of the helm, Yoongi readjusts the agent on the floor. Taking his own helmet, Yoongi rewires the other helmet to connect to his and initiates the download for the Android Core.

Then he waits.
It’s extremely dark and warped. There are voices and they sound distant and strange and harsh. Sk’jin tries to move but he can’t. It was dark but there’s too much light now- too much light and too much heat I’m melting I’m melting I’m melting someone please help me someone is someone there please help me-! Hands pull at him, tearing him apart and he’s too exposed but he can’t breathe- he’s suffocating there’s no air there’s no air I can’t breathe I’m melting where are you please help me what’s going on- His head feels like it’s on fire and everything falls away but the hands remain and Sk’jin fights and fights and fights and everything is screaming- ‘SAVE ME!!!’ The Medical Bay swims in front of his eyes and the pain on his head nearly overpowers the pain on his side. His throat hurts from having screamed himself awake. Someone’s face swims into view and for a moment Sk’jin momentarily thinks it’s- ‘Hoseok-’ Hoseok has his wrist in an unbelievably tight grip, one that Sk’jin can’t move out of. But it was understandable considering Sk’jin’s fingers were digging around his throat. Sk’jin stares around him in confusion and fatigue. ‘Sk’jin,’ Hoseok says quietly, eyes calm and level. ‘Let go.’ Sk’jin releasing his hand as quickly as possible, staring in surprise at the discolouration already forming on Hoseok’s throat. Hoseok lowers his hand, one eyebrow raised. ‘Nightmare?’ Sk’jin wants to laugh. Khol’isa didn’t sleep. They couldn’t sleep. They had no such things as nightmares. But he can’t say that. Hoseok is looking at him with that look. And Sk’jin can’t stand it. ‘Oh yes,’ Sk’jin huffs out, laying back on the Medical Bed. He had apparently sat up amidst his thrashing before nearly strangling Hoseok. ‘Very original nightmares.’ Hoseok gives him a skeptical look, clearly surprised by his sudden change in personality, before looking over his health tab on the mounted screen.
Sk’jin knew he was overdoing it. It had been a long time since he used Tšeptjoa. It wasn’t the same, and while he was speaking, he already knew he wasn’t going to last.

He could feel a headache build in the back of his head while he spoke to the officer, layering his voice with Tšeptjoa as best he could. He couldn’t even filter it out, channeling only towards the Orvanans. He had hoped Hoseok wouldn’t be too affected.

Everything rushes back to his mind and Sk’jin sits up abruptly again.

‘Woah easy there-’ Hoseok exclaims.

‘Are we in pursuit? Or in the process of being pursued?’ Sk’jin demands, ignoring Hoseok’s apparent worry as he made to get off of the Medical Bed.

‘You shouldn’t move- you just got knitted,’ Hoseok pushes Sk’jin back and the Khol’isa is surprised how easily Hoseok manhandles him.

‘You got shot,’ Hoseok adds and this is new information. It also explain why the side of his robes were soaked in blood and neatly cut off. It was a pity, he really liked those robes.

Hoseok wonders if Sk’jin was really all right- he seemed dazed as he stared at his side. He was probably in shock.

‘We’re not in pursuit- Namjoon hacked into their ship and disabled them then we jumped into warp,’ Hoseok explains. Sk’jin looks up from his healed wounds and stares blankly at some random spot before looking up at Hoseok and saying with the most earnest expression Hoseok has seen on the Khol’isa.

‘Thank you Hoseok- you saved my life.’

‘It wasn’t me,’ Hoseok replies, feeling taken aback at the genuine tone of Sk’jin’s thanks. ‘It was Namjoon.’

A ripple of different emotions washes over Sk’jin’s beautiful face. A contrast to how aged he had looked when they had been in the passage-tube. Sk’jin seems genuinely speechless and confused.

‘What were you doing in Orvan?’ Hoseok asks, remembering what Yoongi had said to him. Just ask.

Sk’jin raises one eyebrow in amusement before he replies with a chuckle, ‘Trying to set free a shipment of slaves.’

Hoseok guesses he must have looked incredulous because Sk’jin laughs out loud, wincing a little towards the end before he settles back more comfortably. His usual personality seems to come back as he gives Hoseok a beautiful smile and gestures for Hoseok to draw closer.

‘Come Hoseokkie, let me tell you a story.’

Sk’jin was honestly such a confusing Being.

‘One of my men,’ Sk’jin narrates. ‘Was from a war-torn planet- his federation was the usual, y’know. Corruption, monopoly of power, dictators, all that good stuff. He managed to escape while he was being transported through a slave ship. Oddly enough it’s the only possible way of getting out. So some years after working together, he received news that his family had been sold off to Orvan. Now poor fella thought his family had died. They hadn’t you see. Just sold off somewhere else.’

Hoseok nods, encouraging Sk’jin to continue. The channels in his Comm-Device is quiet and Hoseok knows that Namjoon and Yoongi were probably listening in on the conversation.

‘And he was a good Being,’ Sk’jin continues. ‘Being a pirate doesn’t mean you’re bad you know? I mean, I think we can all testify to the fact that your title doesn’t instantly make you “good”.’

Hoseok nods in agreement.

‘He was a good Being and most of all he was a good friend as well. Also really good at laying out traps, he was brilliant,’ Sk’jin looks like a proud parent. ‘So of course, being the kind and benevolent Clan Leader that I am, I told him we would get his family back. Maybe do a good deed by freeing the slaves and anonymously dropping off the entire lot of them at some GLA Dock you know?’

Sk’jin looks amused at his own narrative.

‘So we go all the way to Orvan, in disguise of course. It took us around a month until we were able to find them. Or at least what remained of them. Then that’s when we found out about the Isbahaysiga Alliance and oh boy it was like finding a treasure trove full of priceless jewels,’ Sk’jin chuckles in a rather dark way. ‘So we all stayed a little longer, I befriended the wonderful savior of Orvan, Prime Minister Gritha, and found out more information. And then one thing lead to another, I exposed him to all of Orvan- quite spectacularly mind you. But that’s when I found out that basically every Orvanan was a slave to the “Saviors”- basically upper-class politician snobs. There is an unspoken rule in Orvan- everyone has to buy their way out of the slavery contract they’re born under by a certain age. If not, then you were actually sold off, but if you could buy your freedom or someone helped buy you your freedom, then to an extent, you could continue living a “normal” life in Orvan.’ Sk’jin grimaces as he lightly scratches around his healing side.

Hoseok hands him an anti-inflammatory wipe and the Khol’isa swipes around his fair skin with a relieved expression.

‘So anyways. I was charged with defamation- and then of course arson because you can’t blame me for making my escape with what I had on hand,’ Sk’jin throws the wipe straight into the shredder tube.

‘What did you have?’ Yoongi asks unexpectedly.

Sk’jin gives Hoseok a gleeful smile before replying, ‘A 200 year old bottle of Orvanan wine, a birthday candle, and lots of anger.’

‘Birthday candle?’

‘It was Gritha’s birthday.’

Hoseok can’t control the laugh that escapes him. Sk’jin gives him an amused look.

‘So yes. I almost get captured, but my men come and rescue me. We burn down and destroy their parliament building and make our escape.’ Sk’jin concludes. ‘I like my stories to be happy ones, but I’m afraid this one doesn’t have a happy ending. We weren’t able to free any slaves. The entire planet was enslaved. We could do nothing.’

Sk’jin looks strangely melancholic which surprised Hoseok.
‘Why not report them to the GLA? Or even the Venture Unit?’ Hoseok asks though he knows the answer by now.

Sk’jin snorts. ‘Because the Venture Unit knew- and were involved in it of course. It wasn’t until your organization had its own little civil war that all of this got exposed.’

Hoseok sighs, thinking about the Gaia Case and how extensively it had spread throughout the Universe.

‘I guess it’s thanks to you Hoseokkie,’ Sk’jin adds, his expression turning a little serious. ‘You were the one who uncovered all of it right?’

Hoseok is spared having to answer when Yoongi asks, ‘But why were there birthday candles next to you.’

Sk’jin breaks out into laughter again before he replies to Yoongi’s question.

Hoseok leaves the Medical Bay before Sk’jin can ask him more questions.

Hoseok didn’t agree with nearly everything Lal Haenoon used to say, but he had once said something that Hoseok would never forget.

‘Don’t ask questions, it only invites more.’

Freshly showered, Namjoon takes care as he dries his hair. Though natural, his hair, like most features on his body, were implanted into him. Draping his damp towel over the air-vent, Namjoon proceeds to pull on his trousers before digging up a shirt to wear.

His panel-screen dings quietly with a familiar chime and Namjoon pulls out the tiny drawer over his bed and pulls out an oblong box. Lined neatly inside the box are small capsules in various colours. Namjoon picks out the white and blue pill and dry swallows it before putting the box back in.

‘Communications Manager Sk’jin is at the door, Captain.’

Glancing over at the projected camera live-feed Namjoon does indeed find Sk’jin standing by the doorway. He's wearing different robes, less flamboyant and somehow more pajama-like.

‘Open,’ Namjoon orders out as he goes back to finding himself a shirt.

‘Am I disturbing you?’ Sk’jin asks as he steps in.

‘Not at all,’ Namjoon replies, finding a shirt and shaking it out of its folds.

Sk’jin stares and it’s not in a perverse or disgusted manner. He’s genuinely baffled. And Namjoon understands how it can be shocking. If he hadn’t grown (so to speak) in this body, Namjoon would be in utter shock.

The skin on his neck ended abruptly just above his collarbones before patches of bionic skin pads over at random, diffusing into whole areas that were entirely metallic in appearance. His arms were a combination of exposed metallic framework, attempts made to recreate bionic tissue that then blended down to the skin on his hands. And Namjoon knows that Sk’jin has seen his very own "cuff-links". He doesn't bother to attempt to hide it. The best part of all of this were his ribs which were open wide and you could actually see through into his body.

And that was just his upper body.

Namjoon did own body-suits that replicated some semblance of skin that would cover his body if he chose, for whatever insane reason, to go shirtless in public. But it was also made of a very durable material with a tensile strength that far exceeded that of living skin and flesh so it made a good protective shield if Namjoon wanted extra-protection.

To his credit, Sk’jin only looked curious and not completely aghast by the sight of his frankly mutilated excuse of a body. A few Beings have walked in on Namjoon changing and have either fainted or screamed out loud.

‘How can I help you?’ Namjoon asks, putting on his shirt.

‘I came here to personally thank you for saving me back in the passage-tube. You were right, I purposefully withheld information that would have prevented all of this from happening and for that I apologize,’ Sk’jin doesn’t seem very apologetic but Namjoon can sense the sincerity in his words.

So if Sk’jin was able to do that, then so could Namjoon.

‘I accept your apology.’ Namjoon replies sitting down on his desk. ‘And in turn, I would like to apologize for purposefully excluding you and making it difficult for you to speak freely.’

Sk’jin raises one eyebrow at him as though amused.

‘Speak freely?’ Sk’jin repeats with a smirk.

Namjoon rolls his eyes, ‘You know what I mean.’

‘Sure sure,’ Sk’jin grins. ‘I accept your apology.

‘Do you have anything else to add? More Systems looking for you?’ Namjoon asks lightly though he’s pretty sure Sk’jin knows it was not meant as a joke.

‘I gave you the full detailed list of moons, Docks, Arcs, planets, Systems both GLA and non-GLA, as well as potential pirate-clans and federations that may want me dead or worse,’ Sk’jin replies. ‘I can vow that I have hidden nothing from you.’

‘Then why were you placing a call to Ngobut’jha?’ Namjoon crosses his arms, staring straight into Sk’jin’s neon red eyes.

‘How do you know this?’ Sk’jin’s eyes narrow dangerously, his entire countenance transforming immediately.

‘Lisai alerted me of an unregistered call taking place through unofficial channels. As Captain, I had to make sure where this call was going, to whom it was addressed to, and what was being said.’

‘You were listening to a private phone conversation-‘

‘You were making an illegal unlisted call from an unregistered device, I think that gives me, the Captain of this ship and mission, plenty of reason to listen in on what you were “conversing” about.’ Namjoon responds smoothly. ‘So why were you contacting Ngobut’jha? As far as I know, there’s nothing remarkable about that planet. Or is this like another Orvan situation—’

‘You are stepping out of line,’ Sk’jin seethes. ‘I have given you the list with more than enough detail regarding my past- I am hiding nothing in that aspect. My personal life, my personal business is my own- you have no authority over who I call!’

‘It is if it’s through unofficial channels,’ Namjoon repeats grimly.

‘It was a personal call. Stay. Out. Of. It.’

Sk’jin turns around sharply and leaves the room.

The door to his room closes shut and Namjoon sighs.

‘Lisai, have you been able to track who Sk’jin was calling?’

‘Negative. Call was placed to an unregistered device originally issued by the Yisheng Directory.’

‘Yisheng Directory?’

‘Affirmative.’

Even more than before, nothing made sense.

*

Why was he even doing this?

Yoongi waits for the Being to wake up, just like him, and just realize. But why was he doing this? Why did he need this other Being to Waken?

It’s a lot faster than what Yoongi anticipated. The agent’s body twitches in front of him, back arching stiffly before slumping down harshly.

Yoongi watches, unmoving and silently as the agent writhes in pain. His screaming is muffled inside the helmet.

Yoongi hesitates for a moment before approaching the writhing figure and relieves him of his helmet.

Eyes of anguish lock with his own and the screams are painful to Yoongi’s ears. Veins pop up around his head, blood pouring from his eyes.

But most of all, Yoongi sees nothing. He sees nothing more than motor responses to pain, mechanism to a flooding of unknown triggers unexplained and alien.

There’s a cracking sound and Yoongi knows his back has broken from the force of his seizures.

How had Yoongi survived this?

The Being is entirely still and Yoongi knows he’s died. He collects the chip from the helmet and puts it over the Being’s bloodied head. Yoongi watches as the body disintegrates completely 23 seconds later.

He raises his hand up, feeling the texture of his skin. He knows everything about Humans. Knows all there is to the species as a whole. What made him special?

He knows he won’t have the answers to that. The only other Being who would remotely understand him or explain to him why he was the way he was, would be Zhoumi. And Zhoumi is missing.

Collecting all of the chips, Yoongi heads back to the nondescript ship that brought them to Nuqtau. He pauses at a distance.

Disengaging his helmet, Yoongi extracts the chip from that helmet and waits.

The ship explodes- bright light and energy leveling the area around it, creating a sizeable crater in its wake.

The helmet in Yoongi’s hand disintegrates as well.

He watches as hoards of Beings gather around the remains of the explosion, he can hear their yelling and shouting. Attempts are made to subdue the roaring flames.

They were simply gone.

Nothing remained of the agents who had existed within that space, who occupied mass, who travelled with time. Nothing remained. They were nothing.

Yoongi pulls off his gloves completely and raises them up. They’re outlined against the roaring fire in the distance.

‘But I’m here.’

There are footsteps behind him and Yoongi slips away quietly.

It’s easy enough stealing an operating screen. Yoongi disconnects it from any active channels and terminates all other applications within it before sliding in one of the chips. Out of all of the chips he’s collected, only one of them had an additional mission after completing the Nuqtau mission.

Yoongi reads the mission carefully.

[MISSION 4125-9220-2811]

[COORDINATES _THE HIVE]

[OBJECTIVE: TRACKING]
[TARGET: STRAVECHI NAVA]
[OBSERVATION_DO NOT ENGAGE]
[INCOMING JOINT MISSION FROM HEADQUARTERS]
[ACCEPT]
[RECEIVING DATA]
[DECOY DELIVERED_EFFECTIVE IMMEDIATELY]
[DECOY DELIVERED_ALL CLANS MOVING]
[MISSION 4125-9220-2811 EXECUTE IMMEDIATELY]
[MEETING POINT NUQTAI:]

[21. 988. 1290. 81_ FINT’AL PLATEAU]
[GLA 12:00]

Again, this ship.
Zhoumi had that file on it. Tracking and following it. And now, there was this mission. This only fortifies Yoongi’s previous conclusion about the involvement of this ship, Zhoumi, and them. And he wants to understand.

Taking out the other pirate clans had not been a simple act of drawing the Venture Unit agent out. It had all been part a bigger plan.

And Yoongi can’t fathom why. There were other agents involved in this, judging by how this was a joint-mission. It was already approved, so this was another segment of the plan. But what was the plan? It wasn’t an assassination or termination of the Stravechi Nava. But one thing Yoongi knew for sure was that they knew about them. The Stravechi Nava was aware of them- and it was possible, that somehow, they would know about Yoongi.

They could help him understand.

And in order to understand, Yoongi would need to get close.

Wiping the screen of any of the previous information and then destroying it completely, Yoongi destroys the chips as well, crushing them into fine powder between his hands.

Setting up another screen he had nicked, Yoongi looks up the Hive. He has been there twice before, all for missions of assassination. It was easy. Because the Hive is a massive Dock, almost the size of a small moon, with cities within its structures. Spying on the Stravechi Nava from this point would be easy.

Yoongi glances at the time and searches for the Fint’al Plateau. It’s a 2 hour flight from where he was currently located. He had 3 hours to get there.

Taking a deep breath, Yoongi pulls the helmet over his head once more.
(Author’s Note)
finds out that first day back at uni is on my birthday hahahahaha I am so bitter
'How stocked are we?'

They were congregated around the large dining table in the Kitchen, eating a dinner of sorts.

'We’re at 70% with our fuel cells, 81% with our water cells, and 68% with our Beamers,' Hoseok reports at once, referring to the screen in his hands as he spoons soup into his mouth.

'How long until we need to Dock and get supplies?' Namjoon asks, he feels a headache coming on.

Yoongi pushes a cup of tea towards him surreptitiously.

'If we’re going in warp and with our shields running at this rate, then I’d say a week to 10 days.'

Namjoon grimaces, before giving Yoongi a nod of thanks.

'Are the shields really taking that much?' Sk’jin asks with a frown, piling his plate with a lot of food.

'Based on the readings yes,' Hoseok sighs. 'The Užkulisai is built for exploration and not for running away from authorities. Using the shield will drain our supplies by a whole lot.'

'Orvanan has a wide network of “trade”,' Sk’jin supplies, spearing a meatball with a long pronged fork. ‘I think it’s safe to assume that they would alert their channels- especially considering what we know, or at least what we all know now.-' Sk’jin waves his fork around, meatball dangerously tethering onto a single prong. ‘-and every pirate clan, planetary system or trade routes they’re in league with, will be alerted.’ Sk’jin places the entire meatball into his mouth, chewing with relish.

Yoongi stares at a meatball for a while before he mimics Sk’jin as well and puts the entire thing into his mouth. Sk’jin gives him a thumb’s up that Yoongi doesn’t return.

'Just how far does this even extend?' Namjoon frowns, tapping along the side of the cup in his hand. ‘I know that the Isbahaysiga Alliance was collapsed a little before the Gaia Case, but seeing as Orvan is still running their business, it’s safe to assume that a whole bunch of other networks are still running. We should report this back to the GLA.’

‘There’s more to this than just that,’ Hoseok sighs. ‘With the main “source”, meaning the Akramanese, gone. The Alliance, or what’s left of it, still benefits from trading with other parties. Buyers still exist.’
‘Like the Orvanan – they sell their own people to other Federations mainly- for labor or “immoral industries”, if you can pardon my saying.’ Sk’jin supplies through a mouthful of food and saying with some difficulty as he swallows, ‘Or to scientific academies.’

Namjoon scowls at that, sipping at his cup of tea.

‘I’d say that we can keep going off-grid for about a month max,’ Hoseok ruminates as he tears apart a bread roll, throwing the pieces into his bowl of soup. ‘Then we’ll have to get supplies somewhere.’

Namjoon nods, pulling up a small holographic projection of their now completely abandoned trajectory.

‘There aren’t a lot of ways of getting to Bhumi without going completely off track and taking too much time.’ Namjoon pushes the screen closer to the center, making Sk’jin pull away the platter of thick meat cutlets to make space for the device.

‘We’re here,’ Namjoon indicates a small orange dot at the outer most edge of the holograph. ‘And this is where Bhumi is.’ He points at the blue spot on the opposite end of the projection. ‘If we had been able to take our original-…fixed trajectory, it would have taken us 10 months, 3 weeks, and 3 days to get to its borders.’

A line lights up showing a rather zigzagged course.

‘But if we go off-grid and just find Dock in any available outpost,’ Namjoon lightly taps on the side of the screen and a rather curved but somehow shorter path lights up. ‘We could actually reach Bhumi in less than 7 months.’

‘Assuming if nothing goes wrong,’ Hoseok looks at the projection carefully, stirring his bowl absent mindedly.

‘Going off-grid and using outposts will most definitely guarantee delays and stops- potentially getting us arrested,’ Sk’jin waves about a sausage now. ‘We’re not associated with anything or anyone. We’d be targeted at once and brought in for questioning. And if it’s an outpost with Orvanan connections, we’d be arrested at once.’

Sk’jin reaches for another meatball but Yoongi deftly blocks his fork with his spoon. They engage in a short tiff, utensils clashing rather noisily for a few seconds, but Yoongi wins and Sk’jin digs into the cutlets instead, throwing Yoongi a dirty look. Yoongi triumphantly puts another meatball into his mouth.

Not even sparing a glance at the brief fight over meatballs, Namjoon continues, ‘Yes- this is assuming if nothing goes wrong. However, if we are cautious and carefully plot out our fuel supply, we won’t have to make landings in outposts too frequently.’

‘Should you be eating that much?’ Yoongi asks out of nowhere, one eyebrow raised behind the messy fringe of hair over his forehead. It’s the most expression any of them have ever seen on the Human’s face.

‘I’m weak. I’m storing up, don’t ‘tack me,’ Sk’jin grumbles at Yoongi, looking entirely unattractive as he chews on a bread roll.

‘Also food supplies- how much do we have?’ Hoseok asks, eyeing the amount Sk’jin was consuming in one sitting.
Sk’jin rolls his eyes, ‘The pantry is stocked- we have enough for a month minimum.’

‘We’ll need to make sure none of our cargo will get us into immediate trouble,’ Namjoon sighs heavily.

While a lot of the underverse routes were pretty much free-passes, their cargo could still get them into trouble. Besides, they weren’t affiliated to a pirate clan, or worked under known mercenary lines, and neither were they excavators who often used these channels to export/import stolen treasures and relics. To an extent they could pretend that they were escaping the GLA, which was something they could definitely work with, but then they wouldn’t be able to explain why the ship was registered under Namjoon’s name.

Proton missiles were not the most powerful weapons out there but did carry a lot of value in the black-market. They were light-weight, powerful, and easy to rewire and control via simple control systems. But these weren’t just any proton missiles; these were GLA issued, brand-new unregistered serial coded proton missiles.

A lot of Beings were under the impression that the underverse allowed any and every form of illegal activity to simply go in and out of its network. This was extremely inaccurate.

To an extent, the criminal underverse was far more complex and deeply controlled by their “government” of sorts. There were laws, rules, and though unwritten and undeclared, methods of action you had to abide by.

And outposts, the illegal equivalent of Docks, had pretty strict guides and regulations on their own, maintained by either a single or a small team of Beings called “governors” who watched over the ins and outs of each outpost.

‘Yoongi- how did you travel around when you were under the GI?’ Sk’jin asks, offering the Human a roll as though in exchange for information. Namjoon looks over at Yoongi curiously as well. The GI were the best kept secret, other than the Akramanese and the Yisheng’s betrayal. Yet they were able to traverse the entire Known Universe, biding the crazy and mind-boggling orders issued to them by the Yishengs. If anyone knew how to get around the Known Universe without leaving a trace, it would be a GI Agent. Even a field agent from the Venture Unit like Hoseok had to rely on outposts and fake identity to traverse across the Universe.

Yoongi reaches over and snags Sk’jin’s last cutlet instead and replies, ‘Unlimited access through the Yisheng Directory.’

Everyone pauses to stare at Yoongi who cuts into the cutlet and takes a bite. He clearly likes it, taking another bite again.

Hoseok and Sk’jin immediately turn to look at Namjoon with an expectant look.

‘Don’t look at me, this is the first time I’m hearing this.’ Namjoon frowns. ‘Could you clarify what you said Yoongi?’

Yoongi doesn’t look up from the cutlet he’s now heartily digging into as he says, ‘Yisheng’s have unlimited access and passes to any and all galaxy, system, and planet they choose to enter. Their ships are never checked. As an agent, the ship was registered to carry Yisheng supplies and was never questioned or searched.’

So much made sense now.

‘If that’s the case why didn’t the special-jury assign us one of these ships and just let us go to Bhumi without any issue?’

‘It’s obvious isn’t it? They want to track us- make sure we’re doing what we’re supposed to,’ Sk’jin rolls his eyes. It paints an extremely unflattering image considering his stuffed cheeks.

But this triggers an instant silence around the table where they all share shifty looks. Even Yoongi glances around at them.

‘So. Who’s going to tell the special-jury that we’re going off-grid.’ Sk’jin asks after he swallows his food.

No one speaks up.

Namjoon sighs.

‘How about we don’t tell them,’ Hoseok suggests. ‘I mean after all, doesn’t this entire operation prioritize utmost secrecy? With the special-jury not knowing we’re the only ones who know where we’re going. All ties are cut, we move with the utmost secrecy and no one knows.’

Namjoon studies Hoseok curiously for a brief second before saying, ‘I would rather not entirely fall off the radar like that.’

‘I agree with Namjoon,’ Sk’jin chimes in. ‘I think it’s better to report our situation to them. I doubt we’ll be pulled out from the mission- but it’s possible that they might have been able to clear something up for us.’

Hoseok nods in acquiescence, finishing his bowl of soup by soaking the remaining amount with a piece of roll and swallowing it up. ‘So, who’s gonna report in? I’d rather not have to talk to Lal Haenoon.’

Both Namjoon and Sk’jin grimace at that.

‘I guess I can-‘ Sk’jin doesn’t even have time to complete his sentence before Namjoon cuts across and says, ‘I’ll report back to Lmiura. I should send in the Captain’s Log after all.’

Sk’jin’s expression is very carefully controlled as he nods, suddenly completely disinterested in what he was eating, pushing his plate away. Hoseok notices this and glances over at Namjoon who was checking the Captain’s Log on his screen, his expression poised but guarded.

‘We’re going to have to plan our next step carefully- we need to find an outpost and where we can somewhat “safely” dock and restock,’ Namjoon looks up. ‘Any suggestions?’

‘Satellite or station?’ Hoseok asks as he pulls out his screen, going through the Venture Unit’s list of outposts.

‘Preferably station,’ Sk’jin chimes in, wiping his delicate looking hands on some tissues as though he had been merely nibbling on some biscuits instead of nearly emptying the entire table. ‘Escaping stations is easier.’

Hoseok nods in agreement.

Satellite-outposts were normally set up on moons or planetoids or even within asteroid belts. Low levels of atmosphere, if any, fluctuating gravity, and difficult to get into. However they were ideal for hiding or escaping into- but this was only advisable if you were from a known or partnered pirate-clan. Station-outposts were very much like Docking Arcs except they were mainly reconstructed or refashioned mega-ships from ages past. Sort of functional and somewhat unsafe, station-outposts made for quick touchdowns and even quicker liftoffs. But regardless of the general instability of their structural nature, were well maintained and stocked by either mercenaries, pirate-clans, or even ex-agents from the Venture Unit.

And as Hoseok eyes the list of possible outposts in front of him, he pauses at a station-outpost 3 weeks from where they were.

‘I think I found an outpost.’

Namjoon and Sk’jin lean forward to listen.

‘This is an outpost run by a few former agents of the Venture Unit- it’s 3 weeks from here, more or less,’ Hoseok reaches over and writes in the coordinates of the outpost and the location pops up near Grezma, a moon-graveyard. ‘I know one of the governors who now runs this place.’

‘Sounds good-‘ Namjoon begins but Sk’jin raises a hand and interrupts.

‘How safe is it?’ the Khol’isa asks, frowning down at the information.

‘Outposts aren’t meant to be safe-‘ Namjoon begins.

‘That’s not what I meant- former agents of the Venture Unit are normally some of the worst information dealers.’ Sk’jin replies sharply. ‘I’m sorry to say this so bluntly Hoseok but most former agents are assholes who too willingly sell information in order to gain units or favours from parties they might consider stronger. Not to mention governors in general make for unreliable Beings in general unless you buy their allegiance or threaten them into loyalty.’

Hoseok takes no offence from this, because he knows this all too well himself.

‘We’ll take that one,’ Namjoon says firmly.

Sk’jin glares at Namjoon before standing up and walking away.

Hoseok watches Sk’jin leave, headed for the stairs. He glances over at Namjoon quickly, noting that the Kutsogleran had a rather resigned yet ironed expression on his face. Did something else happen again between the two of them? It was starting to become less petty and somehow more serious. Hoseok can’t rightly explain it but puts it down to the two of them having another argument again.

Hoseok waits until Sk’jin is well out of earshot and asks Namjoon, ‘Are you sure? Sk’jin has a point.’

Hoseok doesn’t think Namjoon would make decisions purely out of spite or for the sake of having the last word, but then again, he doesn’t know Namjoon well enough to entirely rule it out.

‘You said you knew one of the governors running this outpost right?’ Namjoon asks.

‘I do- but last time I spoke to him was some decades ago.’ Hoseok replies, ‘I’m not sure if he’s still the governor of this outpost or not.’

‘Outpost governors rarely change- we both know that,’ Namjoon replies. ‘Did you have a bad relationship with this Being?’

‘Nothing like that- I worked with him once when I was younger for a few missions- I don’t know if he’ll remember me,’ Hoseok clarifies again.

Namjoon nods at that and says, ‘We’ll take it. It’s better than going into an outpost we have no idea about.’

Hoseok glances over at Yoongi who, to his disquiet, was staring hard at him.

‘Is there anything you want to add Yoongi?’ Hoseok asks hastily.

‘You finished the soup.’

‘Ah…’ Hoseok glances down at the bowl. ‘I’m sorry?’

‘However if you find that it’s a risk, then we won’t go,’ Namjoon adds, leaning back with a heavy sigh. ‘We still have time to find another outpost.’

Hoseok also leans back, crossing his arms over his chest as he thinks.

Namjoon looks over the Ngfy’widan carefully, studying his mannerism.

In Namjoon’s view, he posed the least amount of threat and suspicion compared to Sk’jin and Yoongi. Namjoon doesn’t know if this is purely projection or if he was reading the Venture Unit agent correctly, but he felt that Hoseok was genuinely in for the mission and its objectives without added intent or agenda.

‘No, leave it to me,’ Hoseok says easily a few seconds later. ‘I’ll get us there.’

However there were moments, just like this, where certain aspects of Hoseok’s mannerism and tone, made Namjoon wonder if he was being deeply deceived.

Dock NIW-43002 was better known across the Known Universe as The Hive. It was one of the largest Docks this side of the Universe, orbiting Cabc’d’s sun like a planet would. Its proximity to the sun powered and energized the entire Dock, making it almost entirely independent of fuel cells. The Hive housed over 150,000 launch rings leading up to over 300,000 private/public Hangar Bays. These launch rings, which were made of a yellowish metal, were shaped in a nontraditional outline of a hexagon rather than a circle. This was what gave rise to its nickname. From a distance, the entire structure gleamed a deep gold in colour, making it appear even more like its namesake. The Hive is stunningly beautiful, and slightly overwhelming. It’s teeming with life and all sorts of Beings who make their way around, busy in their own missions.

Yoongi had made sure that the other agents were taken care of in relatively empty areas, where chances of being interrupted were slim. Places like the sewer network, locked down cargo hulls, and closed down shutter stores. He had tried again, downloading and presenting the Android Core to the other agents. But no agent survived the ordeal.

Yoongi watches the last agent succumb to the information and sensory overload, blood bleeding from every single orifice of his body.

And like every time it has happened, Yoongi watches as they disintegrate into nothingness.

That could have been him. To an extent, that was him. They were all the same. Faceless and unknown, no mark left upon the arrival of their being into the Universe, and no mark remained once they left.

But it was important that Yoongi remembered. He doesn’t know why. But he wants to. Because he has to.

The helmet dissolves and fades away as well and Yoongi quietly steps out of the cargo hull. He makes his way towards their ship, docked in the reserved launch-ring at the top most level of the Hive. From here, he would be able to keep track of all of them. They would be landing in a few minutes, Yoongi was notified of their arrival at the borders of The Hive a few minutes ago.

Yoongi stares down at the continuous flow of Transporters, Shuttles, and Ships flying in and out of this busy Dock. He’s never noticed it before.

A strange sort of pain takes over his chest as he watches light and colour blend into one, forming shapes and movements that Yoongi cannot explain.

He removes his helmet and listens to the lights and colours around him.

*
The Hangar Bay of the Užkulisai is organized systematically and structured in a way that offered easy access despite being highly secured. Each cargo load was attached and bolted down using magnetic strips that used their own conductivity to generation friction energy, thereby securing it independently from the rest of the ship. According to the roster Namjoon was looking at their cargo consisted of 20 3x2 OrTanks, 15 storage units, 5 weapons crates, and 8 capsules carrying compressed terraforming biochemical agents.

But occupying the most space is the massive Spardyti- a Transporter that could be used for aerial, terrain, and water exploration in-planet. While it couldn’t be used to operate off-planet, it was a sturdy and durable automobile with a very famed reputation of being used by excavators during their not so legal “tomb-raidings”. There was a smaller 2-man Transporter that could be used for off-planet purposes as well. A compact Pluns’na that could be used to navigate through asteroid fields, and maybe scout ahead because the Transporter was speedy and used solar energy to power itself. But the Pluns’na is mainly used for repairing damages outside a ship; it’s typically armed with several automotive arms that could be controlled from within the Transporter and could perform delicate mechanical operations.

They had a few stacked gravity-lifts in various sizes as well as collapsible table-lifts stored under the floors.

‘Oh- they’re not that shade of blue anymore!’ Sk’jin exclaims from where he’s standing.

Namjoon turns to look at what Sk’jin is talking about. The Khol’isa is holding up spacesuits that were jet-black with grey and teal detailing around the cuffs and seams of the suit. Most standard spacesuits were dark blue with orange and blue details.

‘These feels a lot more serious and impressive doesn’t it?’ Sk’jin asks Hoseok who also looks over the spacesuits, looking impressed.

‘It feels much lighter as well,’ Hoseok remarks, feeling the fabric between his fingers. ‘Are the helmets in there too?’

‘Oh- yes. Here,’ Sk’jin reaches for the higher shelf and pulls out what looks almost like a glass bubble.

‘Woah,’ Hoseok exclaims, taking the fragile looking object into his hands. ‘These are expensive.’

The “glass bubbles” were the latest models of the standard spacesuit helmets readily available to the public. They had only been issued about a month ago and only to deep-space explorers from the scientific community of the GLA. Lmiura wasn’t lying when she said that they wouldn’t have to worry about anything.

Except, of course, individual criminal records and just general team dynamics or lack of it.

Namjoon understands that to an extent, Sk’jin was completely justified in his anger. However, Namjoon also knows that what he did was also completely justifiable. Because it all filters down to the fact that they were all brought here by different Beings with different sets of interest and the succession of these individual interests could very well reshape much of the Known Universe.

And it was up to Namjoon to find out what these interests were and make sure no one came out on top. And if that meant listening in on conversations and more or less, violating privacy of the rest of the crew, then Namjoon would do it.

So of course, Sk’jin wasn’t the only one he was actively “watching over”- a term he prefers to spying. He was keeping tabs on everything Hoseok and Yoongi were doing as well.

There was practically no activity beyond what was normal for Yoongi. The Human barely used his screen unless it was to watch movies or other entertainment programs from his home planet. But that didn’t make him any less suspicious. He had an odd “personality” if you could call it that. He frequently did and said things that seemed entirely out of place with how he behave and appeared. There was more to Yoongi than met the eye and it makes Namjoon uncomfortable.

Hoseok was a lot more active than Yoongi but still never went past anything suspicious. Hoseok conducted extensive research on each of them as expected of a former agent of the Venture Unit. He was also very thorough, and had quite a long list of hacks and shortcuts under his belt. But that was it.

By default, just because of association, Namjoon would find Hoseok the most suspicious and capable of carrying out a complete heist over the ship. If Hoseok could pilot a ship of almost every make, it made him highly capable in Navigating as well. He was a trained and seasoned agent in the Venture Unit and so his skills in weaponry would be extensive, no matter what type. He’s had to infiltrate and live many lives as an undercover spy, relying only on his ability to make himself believable, so Hoseok is very likely extremely good at talking himself out of potentially messy situations.

If anyone was going to overthrow and take over this mission to abide the order of their representee, in this case Lal Haenoon, and succeed: it would be Hoseok.

But Namjoon has seen and known of Hoseok since the Gaia Case. He knows of his backstory and based solely on that, doesn’t believe Hoseok would throw this mission down for a single individual’s ambition.

Sk’jin on the other hand, was a different story altogether. The Khol’isa had not only conducted extensive research, but also called and messaged unregistered lines. And Namjoon couldn’t have them translated. For a while he wonders if Sk’jin was perhaps speaking in a code of sorts. But he soon came to realize, after listening intently a few times, that it wasn’t so. The language Sk’jin was speaking wasn’t registered in Lisai’s registry of spoken languages. Which was why the AI couldn’t translate the Khol’isa’s conversation.

This revolution had once again filled Namjoon with an unknown fear. Lisai was the AI that granted them access to every available information within the GLA Digital Network. The language Sk’jin spoke most definitely had to be registered and made translatable- the GLA Directory of Language, Speech, and Communication was extremely thorough and had a department of extremely dedicated teams to continuously update and expand their database. If any habituated moon, planet, system has been discovered by the GLA then one of the first things they would do would be to study their language. Culture, identity, and understanding of the species psyche was better grasped after gaining linguistic information on their language. So even if they weren’t a planet under the GLA Treaty, then their language would be studied and logged into the database.

So if their ship’s AI had limited, or as Namjoon believes it, purposefully restricted access to information just for languages, then were any of the information he was receiving complete? Were they even true?

And more importantly, why were they being restricted?
‘What is all this anyways?’ Sk’jin asks, kicking the OrTanks lightly with his foot.

‘According to the roster they’re carrying birthing sacks-‘ Namjoon replies immediately.

‘Gross-‘ Sk’jin pulls a face of disgust.

‘-to help aid the growth of plants, animals, anything back in Bhumi,’ Namjoon continues, rolling his eyes. He wants to point out to Sk’jin that his species practically ate themselves at a cellular level and were reborn in a cocoon- he had no right in feeling grossed out.

‘Should we open one, I feel like opening one-‘ Sk’jin looks a bit too excitable as he reaches for the lid of one of the OrTanks.

‘We’re not opening anything Sk’jin please step away from the OrTanks or so help me-‘

‘You can’t threaten me, I’m injured.’ Sk’jin replies, pretending to be appalled at Namjoon’s words.

Sk’jin was far from being frail and weak. Khol’isa were known to be some of the hardiest species of Beings across the Universe and their recovery rate was one of the fastest as well. They rarely ever needed any form of extensive medical aid or check-up. Sk’jin’s health tab was nearly at full, and he didn’t need any medication in the first place either. He had pretty much bounded out of the Medical Bed, showered, changed his robes into a much more elegant looking one, and dedicated himself to repairing his damaged robes. He even employed Hoseok’s help because apparently the Ngfy’widan was quite skilled with a needle and thread and could actually embroider. They had spent 5 hours on the hem of Sk’jin’s robes, stitching little golden flowers over the torn fabric while Yoongi watched, obviously fascinated.

Ever since that conversation yesterday, Sk’jin had been acting odd. In the sense he wasn’t being petty or bitter in regards to Namjoon with his actions of words. There was a strange patience in what Sk’jin was doing- like he was waiting for something and Namjoon doesn’t know what. But what he does know is that it probably wouldn’t bode well for him.

So Sk’jin is civil and rather “friendly” with Namjoon, treating him the way he treats Hoseok and Yoongi but with something else added to it. Frankly speaking, this makes Namjoon very uncomfortable. But he tries his best to ignore it. If Sk’jin was looking for an opportunity to “get back at him” it would be difficult to do so because Namjoon really doesn’t have anything to hide, and neither was he secretly communicating with unknown Beings.

‘Can we please move on.’ Hoseok asks tiredly. ‘The readings registers that all biothermal functions are operational and the contents are stable.’

‘Nothing that will get us into trouble?’ Namjoon asks as Hoseok reads the tabs keeping track of the conditions inside the OrTanks.

‘All safe,’ Hoseok replies. ‘But maybe we should open them, I’d rather know exactly how everything looks inside each of these to know exactly what we’re dealing with.’

‘I’m with Hoseok,’ Sk’jin calls from his end of the shelves. ‘And though this is last resort, we could even use them to get out of sticky situations by using them as trade- I mean, this sort stuff is prime trading units.’

Sk’jin had a point. There was a lot of this stuff on board with them and if needed, or if they were truly desperate, then they could use it to trade in exchange for things like their freedom. Namjoon sighs inwardly as he heads for the first of the OrTanks.
‘All right- but let’s be careful when looking through,’ Namjoon warns. ‘Some of these have carefully maintained chemical balances in them- I’d rather not mess up anything and suddenly have mutated creatures roaming the ship.’

‘That sounds like fiction,’ Yoongi chimes in unexpectedly.

Unsure how to answer, the three of them look around at each other, expressions of amusement on their faces.

‘How’s the Bridge?’ Sk’jin asks.

‘Functional.’

‘Great!’ Sk’jin chuckles before he continues conversing with the Human.

Namjoon turns his attention back to the task at hand. The OrTanks were layered and thick, hosting inside of them clear cases filled with birthing sacs and some form of amniotic fluid. It’s a little bit gross, if Namjoon is being honest but doesn’t have a problem with it. Unlike Hoseok and Sk’jin, both of them reacting strongly to the contents.

Hoseok shudders, an honest to goodness full body shudder as he nervously looks into blood-filled birthing sac; its purpose clearly for hosting animals of sort.

‘So these sacs would just- birth things?’ Hoseok asks, looking a little green.

‘It’s part of the preservation technology,’ Namjoon explains. ‘It’s similar to AI technology, it takes the eggs or even just single DNA strands and replicates a sort of womb for the cell to grow and expand.’

‘Will it work on every type of species?’ Hoseok asks, stepping away and taking deep breaths as though trying not to throw up.

‘It should- most living creatures are made of the same basic elements after all- despite being born in different terrains, planets, systems- we all live in the same universe made of the same matter,’ Namjoon closes shut one of the OrTanks. ‘The mass of the universe exists in us, as we exist in the universe.’

He’s met with an extraordinarily loud silence and Namjoon looks up with some alarm. Hoseok and Sk’jin are both looking at him with an expression he can’t quite translate or understand.

‘What?’ Namjoon asks, feeling a little defensive.

‘Nothing,’ Sk’jin replies, before pushing himself away from the OrTanks and going up the Transporters.

‘Can you drive this?’ he asks Hoseok, pulling the Ngfy’widan away from the sight of the birthing sacs because he really did look like he was about to throw up.

‘Yeah I can,’ Hoseok looks relieved at not having to check the OrTanks as he pats the side of the Spardyti.

‘I’ve piloted her a few times before. Easy functions- good user interface,’ Hoseok looks over the Transporter with a pleased expression. ‘You could drop a 50 ton rock over this and it wouldn’t budge.’
‘That’s good to know,’ Sk’jin comments dryly.

‘And given the correct speed, it could break through said rock,’ Hoseok laughs as he opens the door to the Spardyti. ‘Lisai, can you switch her up?’

‘Starting up the Spardyti.’

‘Thanks,’ Hoseok looks around the Transporter, clearly comfortable with the entire set up. The Transporter hums to life and it makes a surprisingly quiet whirring sound.

‘It’s very quiet,’ Namjoon hears Sk’jin comment as he checks through the last OrTank. The birthing sacs were all stable and neatly secured within their cases. Namjoon, checks their systems one more time before closing the lid.

‘We should probably check on the storage units as well,’ Namjoon calls the attention of the other two who were fawning over the Spardyti’s functions and extra added features; he should probably go over them with Hoseok in detail later.

‘Aren’t they mainly extra parts and stuff for maintenance?’ Hoseok asks, jumping out of the tall Transporter.

‘Mostly yeah,’ Namjoon nods. ‘But I think it’s important that we keep a list based on what we find rather than rely on what’s noted.’

At that, both Sk’jin and Hoseok give him a searching look followed by a look of understanding and they both nod. Strangely enough, this manual search of the Hangar Bay seemed to be putting them all in the same metaphoric page of wanting to get things done quickly and with as little hiccups as possible.

‘I guess we should start with the smaller crates first- Sk’jin could you hand the medium sized gravity-lift?’ Namjoon asks, looking up at the smaller crates stacked over their heads.

Sk’jin starts walking up to where the gravity-lifts were stacked when he abruptly stops. Hoseok notices at once, a frown growing on his face as he asks, ‘Is everything all right?’.

Namjoon also turns, noting that Sk’jin’s posture looked strangely contorted. With some difficulty, Sk’jin turns a little, facing them again. He opens his mouth to reply but a strange look passes over his face. Sk’jin raises a hand, touching the side of his temples, then his movements pause oddly.

‘Sk’jin-’ Hoseok calls again, walking forward, a little confused.

Then quite suddenly, without warning, Sk’jin’s eyes roll back and he crumples onto the ground.

Namjoon and Hoseok just stare, frozen in their shock for a whole 3 seconds before Namjoon recovers first.

He approaches the Khol’isa carefully, calling upon their AI system as he does so, ‘Scan Communications Manager Sk’jin for any physical issues.’

‘Scanning.’

‘Is he all right?’ Yoongi asks.

‘I don’t know,’ Namjoon frowns, pulling back Sk’jin’s eyelid to check on his eyes. ‘And I have a feeling Lisai won’t be able to help us either.’
The Hive was going to get caught in the middle of a space battle that would render it asunder.

Yoongi doesn’t understand. Why was this happening? If they wanted this ship and the Beings inside of it, then why were they trying to have them killed? Or was Yoongi misunderstanding this from the very beginning?

He’s able to keep track of some of them as they walk around the Hive through his helmet. They’re all talking amongst each other, laughing and enthusiastically approaching stalls. The other two; the Captain and the Navigator, were inside the Immigration Office, obviously clearing their pass. The other group were there for more tourist-y reasons.

They seemed like ordinary happy Beings, all just living their lives together.

Together.

Not a unit of Beings designed and built to carry out missions. Not as individuals who were constructed for the sole purpose of not existing.

They existed in this pane of life and were Alive.

But they wouldn’t be.

They had all planned it. Make it look like a clash of pirate-clans, and the Hive would be an unfortunate victim to it all.

Yoongi holds a small screen in the palm of his hand, a line calling through.

‘This is the GIU Yaaig’Ra Ari Mothership Communications Tower. How may I help you?’

‘I would like to speak to Admiral K’mara. This is a Code-AlphaBlack emergency.’
‘So.’

‘What are we going to do?’

Namjoon, Yoongi, and Hoseok were gathered at the Bridge, standing at the Navigator’s Mast. Sk’jin was in the Medical Bay, still unconscious.

‘This isn’t supposed to be happening right?’ Hoseok asks Namjoon. ‘Khol’isa don’t just faint.’

Namjoon looks entirely unsure as well. He’d been on his screen for the past few hours, doing Spaces knew what, and he had even asked Yoongi for his screen. The Human had handed his over easily, never having really used it much to start off with, and had said something about making food. But that had been nearly 8 hours ago and Sk’jin was still knocked out and they had no answers either.

‘Communications Manager Sk’jin is waking up.’

‘Thank you Lisai,’ Namjoon looks relieved. It would be difficult to explain a sick team member back to the special-jury; even more so if he wasn’t waking up.

Hoseok makes to follow Yoongi out of the Bridge but Namjoon holds him back, nodding towards the stairs instead.

‘What is it?’ Hoseok asks at once, sensing something serious.

‘I think…I’m thinking of not sending in the log just yet,’ Namjoon says unexpectedly.

‘Why?’

‘There’s something else going on,’ Namjoon says to Hoseok, his expression wary and grim. ‘There’s something up with Lisai.’
‘The AI?’ Hoseok asks, feeling apprehensive at once. He can’t help but glance up towards the cameras.

Namjoon nods.

‘What’s wrong with it?’

‘It’s missing information and data,’ Namjoon sighs out. ‘I noticed some things, missing from Lisai’s search capacity. At first I thought it was simply an issue of firewalls or data encryption but it’s not the case.’

‘Missing information? But Lisai- the ship is connected to the GLA Digital Network. We can’t be missing any information,’ Hoseok frowns. That seemed rather impossible and also considering the nature of their task, detrimental to the successful outcome of their mission.

Unless it was done on purpose. And one look at Namjoon confirms Hoseok’s suspicions.

‘You think they did this?’ Hoseok asks, ‘But why?’

‘I don’t know. And-’ Namjoon pauses a moment at the landing. ‘And while I do not apologize for having to do it, I am sorry that it was at the cost of your privacy but I did conduct research-‘

Hoseok already knew this. He had expected it and it’s not news to him. He waves it off quickly and says, ‘I understand. What’s your point?’

Namjoon looks a little taken aback but he recovers quickly and says, ‘While your files were available to me after digging around-’

Hoseok wants to snort. Namjoon must be very good in order to “dig” around his classified files that weren’t supposed to exist.

‘-there were aspects of Sk’jin’s history that I couldn’t find or couldn’t access because of active firewalls. Then a few days ago, before th incident with the Orvanan, Sk’jin made an unregistered call to an unknown and unregistered line in Ngobut’jha.’

‘Ngobut’jha?’ Hoseok cannot, for the life of him, understand why the Khol’isa would make a call to the rather unimpressive planet. ‘What’s in Ngobut’jha?’

‘Nothing,’ Namjoon scowls, slowing down as they walk down the stairs. ‘And he was speaking in a language I couldn’t understand- and Lisai didn’t have it registered either.’

Now this is news to Hoseok.

‘Lisai was unable to translate a language? Not even identify it?’

Namjoon nods grimly.

‘Let me listen to the audio- I might be able to recognize it,’ Hoseok offers. Namjoon gives him a searching look, as though sizing him up and his offer. Then he nods.

‘Later?’ Namjoon looks down the stairs, they can hear Sk’jin’s voice speaking indistinctly.

Hoseok nods and they make their way down.

Sk’jin was sitting up, not looking particularly good.
His skin, normally a pearlescent rosy hue that highlighted Sk’jin’s natural beauty seemed dulled and oddly faded. His normally faintly rosy fingers were pale and almost see-through. Hoseok swears he sees Sk’jin’s blood vessels under his skin but the Khol’isa is quick to cover up any skin, shivering a little as though cold.

‘So- what’s wrong?’ Namjoon asks.

Sk’jin rolls his eyes and Hoseok privately thinks Namjoon could do with some classes in bedside manners.

‘If I rightly knew, then I would tell you,’ Sk’jin replies, gratefully accepting the blanket Yoongi digs out from one of the compartments that lined up the walls of the Bay.

‘So you have a general idea of why you’re like this?’ Namjoon asks.

‘I can’t be sure but I think it’s the sun actually,’ Sk’jin shrugs- or shivers, Hoseok isn’t sure. ‘Khol’isa, as you all know, have a strange affiliation with the sun. I’m not as young as I once was; all of this fighting and bleeding takes a lot out from me.’

‘Like a plant?’ Yoongi asks.

‘Something like that,’ Sk’jin replies with an amused grin before looking over at all of them. ‘I’m touched- you all came to see me.’

‘These outposts randomly have Yishengs with them,’ Hoseok says worriedly, looking over Sk’jin. ‘If this really is a sun thing- we should land us somewhere on a moon, maybe sneak into a federation Deck and-’

‘You’re really sweet you know that?’ Sk’jin interrupts Hoseok with a smile, a true and genuine smile. ‘It’s nice. It’s rare.’

Hoseok doesn’t know what to say exactly.

‘We’ll plot the next stop where we can get some sun,’ Namjoon concludes. ‘We’re only a week away from Grezma- it’s possible that we might find a synthesis booth.’

Sk’jin wrinkles his nose at that. Which was understandable because synthesis booths were honestly a little disturbing and gross. There were some creatures who required sunlight to exist- using a form of photosynthesis to generate energy and just live. While there was technology that existed that allowed these species of Beings to travel through space without having the need to sun bathe in the nearest available planet, soaking up as much of the UV rays was a sure and go to fix for any of their anaerobic accidents. Hoseok once witnessed a Being die from UV starvation, basically rotting from the inside out.

So synthesis booths were the fixes these species relied on in order to get these quick fixes. But they weren’t always the cleanest or safest. Some were crudely made, the UV generators inside of them going berserk and sometimes cooking the Being inside of it with radiation.

But it would be the only option they have right now, so Sk’jin nods after a while.

‘Oh Yoongi!’ Sk’jin exclaims, looking genuinely surprised and touched.

Turning, Hoseok finds that Yoongi had left the Medical Bay and had come back, bearing with him a tray of food he had obviously prepared earlier. Hoseok looks at the tray and is surprised to find what looked like actual edible food of decent quality. Namjoon also looks thoroughly surprised as Yoongi pulls out the table-tray from the side of Sk’jin’s Medical Bed and places the tray on it.

‘You need to store up.’ Is all Yoongi says, and hands Sk’jin a spoon then leaves.

‘That was the most precious thing I’ve ever witnessed in my life,’ Sk’jin whispers.

Hoseok has to somewhat agree.

Sk’jin continued to pass out at random intervals. It was never predictable and no one knew what triggered this bout of fainting. But the Being in question didn’t seem too bothered or worried by it. A different story for the others on board. They were more or less Sk’jin’s nurses at this point as well as his personal ‘fuck he’s falling catch him!’ guards.

At one point, Namjoon had to hack through Sk’jin’s cabin’s security to open the door and Hoseok had to pull him out of the shower where he’d collapsed. Luckily he hadn’t injured himself but carrying a soapy and wet Khol’isa out of the narrow showering stall proved to be detrimental to Hoseok’s elbows as he slipped and balanced himself by slamming against the wall, his elbow bruising spectacularly as a result.

Sk’jin had apologized to him but had also laughed, saying that they now had no secrets between them.

But he seemed all right now. Sk’jin hasn’t fainted in the past 17 hours and they were now close to Grezma and had just pulled out of warp. Though staying in warp had no physical effect in the overall environment of the ship, Hoseok always felt relieved when they pulled out of warp. Seeing the stars splayed endlessly around him made him feel much better.

But the relief is short-lived. From this distance they can see the moon-graveyard, an expanse of space where hundreds of thousands of years ago a planetary system once existed and then just died, leaving behind dead planets and moons.

The Grezma-space was one of these former systems. And though the sun of this system no longer existed, the remains of the planets congregated into a stationary pile of planetary remains, forming what looked like a planet of sorts but it’s entirely segmented and separated. The Grezma outpost was at the very top of this “planet” and Hoseok can see lights blinking from this distance. It was covered in a crosspatch of Atmoshield, rendering some areas of the “planet” with a pale blue glow from the distance.

Hoseok wills himself to calm down. He wasn’t sure about the outcome of this docking; he’s used outposts countless of times before. In fact, he’s so used to outposts, it had taken him a while to get used to using actual Docks legally. But all of that had been before the Gaia Case, and way before the Venture Unit’s internal scourge.

‘We’re getting a call from their tower,’ Sk’jin reports.

‘Patch them through,’ Namjoon replies.

‘Who is this, what do you want.’
It certainly was different to the standard GLA Dock and Hoseok hears Namjoon snort faintly.

‘We need to restock our supplies,’ Hoseok calls out. ‘And we’d like to speak to Governor Keghtsa.’

‘Your ship is a registered GLA ship, are you out of your fucking minds? You’re lucky we didn’t shoot you down at once.’

Hoseok rolls his eyes but before he can answer the line opens again, ‘This is Governor Keghtsa. Who is this?’ a calm and quiet voice replaces the coarse voice of the previous operator. Hoseok recognizes this voice.

‘Governor, this is Hoseok of the Infiltration Division. We worked together in the Antsy’aly case-’

‘-understood. You can land on Debris 51. Do you have a Transporter to bring you here or should I send one to pick you up?’

Hoseok looks over at Namjoon who mouths ‘pick up’, ignoring Sk’jin’s questioning look.

‘Pick up.’

‘Sending one over. We’re patching you through.’

‘That went easier than I expected,’ Sk’jin comments, not at all sounding relieved before adding, ‘We have the Pluns’na, we don’t need a pick-up Transporter.’

‘That’s because Yoongi and I are taking the Pluns’na and going over to the Flotsam and Jetsam,’ Namjoon explains.

Sk’jin raises an eyebrow at that but doesn’t comment. Namjoon had told Hoseok that he was going to get a screen that wasn’t based off of Lisai’s digital connectivity once they landed in Pluns’na. Hoseok had listened to the conversation and couldn’t recognize the language Sk’jin had been speaking in. It had a familiar ring to it but Hoseok has been exposed to a lot of languages already so he could just be overthinking it.

Yoongi is already making his way out of the Bridge, dressed fully in black as per usual. Namjoon had told him not to carry any weapons repeatedly and he had agreed though Hoseok could see the reluctance (?? Was it reluctance??) in Yoongi’s expression.

‘Yoongi if you can find any other ingredients that are similar to the ones on Earth then that’d be great!’ Sk’jin calls out. Yoongi nods in reply and exits the Bridge.

‘We’ll go get ready,’ Namjoon says, ‘Can you report the Pluns’na to their tower?’ he asks Sk’jin as he makes his way out of the Bridge.

‘Sure, why not, it’s not like I’m ever included in any of the plans here,’ Sk’jin mumbles under his breath before reporting to the tower.

‘By the way,’ Sk’jin calls over at Hoseok as they approach the rather make-shift launch-ring that was attached onto a large flat slab of moon-rock. ‘You sure you’ll be okay with this?’

‘What do you mean?’ Hoseok asks, hoping Sk’jin doesn’t voice out his fear.

‘Waiting for me while I get a tan in the synthesis booth,’ Sk’jin drawls out.

‘If there’s one,’ Hoseok replies, voice a little strained as they land.
‘And about the entire Venture Unit thing.’

It’s a good thing Hoseok has already landed them because his hands slip out of the control shafts.

‘I heard all about it,’ Sk’jin shrugs from where he sits. ‘It’s your main concern isn’t it? For using outposts.’

Hoseok sighs, standing up wearily. ‘Yeah it is.’

‘Well, your governor left a long time ago- I doubt he’s gonna hold anything that happened after his time against you.’

Hoseok glances out of the large HUD windows and grimaces as a light-grey Transporter approaches them.

‘Yeah I hope so too.’

Hoseok watches as the Pluns’na smoothly exits and drift off towards one of the larger slabs below them. The light-grey Transporter waits for them at the edge of the slab and closing the Užkulisai and locking it, Hoseok makes his way across the hard moon-rock with Sk’jin. The air was definitely thinner here, seeing as they didn’t use a natural atmosphere and it was entirely generated. He glances over worriedly at Sk’jin, wondering how he was holding up. The Khol’isa looked unwell, but that was only because Hoseok knew how he originally looked. The employees around the Grezma outposts however, didn’t seem to notice and ogle at Sk’jin.

Sk’jin seems to glow under the attention he’s receiving, looking like he was thinking ‘finally I’m being appreciated for my face’ as he smiles rather benignly at the pilot and working crew of the Transporter they enter.

‘You’re Hoseok?’ one of them asks, a green-tinted Being with obvious bionic features added to his form, making him look like a strange skeletal insect, in Hoseok’s private opinion.

‘Yes- that’s me,’ Hoseok nods.

‘We’re taking you to the Governor’s Hall,’ he explains. ‘Is your…friend, coming along as well or do we drop him off somewhere else?’

‘Do you have a-‘

‘I’m with Hoseokkie,’ Sk’jin drapes his arms around Hoseok from the back, hooking his chin over his shoulders with a beatific smile. ‘Right?’

Hoseok is grateful for his training and experience as he nods and replies with a convincing sigh, ‘Yeah, he’s with me.’

The Being nods and they’re shown to a sitting area where they buckle themselves in.

‘You know,’ Sk’jin says in a low whisper next to his ear, leaning in more than needed. ‘If I tried Hoseok chuckles, imagining the stoic Kutsogleran snapping and most probably freaking out as a result. The Transporter hums to life and Hoseok hears his Comm-Device make a small clicking sound and knows at once that the Transporter was rigged with a magnetic pulse that blocked out all communication lines. There’s no change in Sk’jin’s teasing expression so Hoseok doesn’t know if it’s just him or not.

‘Best not try it on him them,’ Hoseok sniggers, playing along.

Sk’jin laughs melodically, leaning his head on Hoseok’s shoulder and twisting their arms together. Hoseok notes how many of the crew around them look let down because of this single action.

‘But why are you doing this?’ Hoseok ask in a low whisper.

‘Because I don’t trust Venture Unit agents,’ Sk’jin replies easily, playing with Hoseok’s fingers. ‘And judging by that sound I just heard, I think I was right in doing so.’

‘Ouch- I’m a Venture Unit agent, you know that right?’ Hoseok laughs, pretending to be wounded.

‘What makes you think I even trust you?’ Sk’jin shoots back and Hoseok isn’t really surprised by Sk’jin’s response. He didn’t expect Sk’jin to trust him at all. Because this wasn’t about trust.

They all had that mutual understanding that they didn’t trust each other. But they all knew they were working for the same mission, meaning they would cooperate and play their part but that was the extent to which they would go. No more, no less.

This was compromise, and the desire to complete their given mission.

‘My unfailing charm, embroidery skills and piloting expertise?’

Sk’jin lets out an uncharacteristically unflattering snort, slapping Hoseok on his arm before leaning in comfortably again.

‘Trust is such a fickle notion.’ Sk’jin comments, observing his fingernails nonchalantly.

Hoseok wholeheartedly agrees.

‘But your embroidery skills moved me in a way no Being has moved me before,’ Sk’jin leans in dangerously close as though kissing the side of Hoseok’s neck. ‘Where did you learn how to move your fingers like that?’

Hoseok, to his chagrin, finds himself flushing. Because Sk’jin had said the latter part of that sentence in a carrying whisper and everyone was throwing him quick looks. Hoseok recognized jealousy, disgust, and lust in their glances, to name a few. One in particular was full on glaring at Hoseok.

Namjoon would definitely throw a fit if Sk’jin tried this on him. Or faint. Talk about fainting, Hoseok hopes Sk’jin doesn’t faint any time soon.

They land fairly quickly and as the Transporter doors open Hoseok’s previously unfounded and unexplained fears are confirmed when a whole array of TeorSers greet them. Hoseok hears the crew members behind him also raise their TeorSers at them. They were surrounded.
‘Spaces, not again,’ Sk’jin mumbles under his breath, dropping all of his previous act and releasing Hoseok from his clingy grasp.

They all look like pirates, most of them had green-tinted skin like the Being that had spoken to them earlier. Closer inspection tells Hoseok that they’re probably K’it’y; a species of Beings from the war-torn planet of Kana’ch. They were mostly humanoid in appearance with the exception of their tails that they looped around their waist when they weren’t running. They were some of the fastest runners across the Universe with the exception of the species of Beings from Kalchak and Begach who out ranked them. Their tails were used to balance them as they twisted sharp corner, shifting their axis of motion and balancing them over bumpy terrain.

‘Hoseok,’ a voice greets and the K’it’y spread out to let an exceptionally small Being pass through.

Barely 3 feet in height, Governor Keghtsa had a voice that didn’t match his appearance. While his voice was mild and soft sounding, rather soothing if that’s what floats your boat. But appearance-wise he was close to a grotesque yet childish nightmare.

Governor Keghtsa was from the planet of Hasarak; a small and humid planet in the distant galaxy of Andromeda. Characteristic of the Beings there, he had pale puckered skin more or less swathed around his form and he would have looked rather amphibious if it weren’t for the random tufts of wiry hair that grew out of deep and buried pores. His eyes were small and watery, but were a piercing magenta in colour. He had no hair, save for the random strands that grew here and there. His arms were thin and oddly long for his frame. And though he wore robes (in unflattering shades of yellow) that covered his lower body entirely, Hoseok knew that he had 2 pairs of legs under those robes. They were horrifying agile and fast and fighting one was frankly just exhausting because you didn’t know how to defend yourself or even attack.

‘So what’s a traitor doing here- crawling to me to beg for aid is that it?’

Sk’jin seems to have difficulty containing himself from making facial expressions of disgust. Keghtsa glances up at the Khol’isa briefly, magenta eyes narrowing.

‘Governor Keghtsa I am not here to cause any trouble,’ Hoseok says firmly. ‘I’m just here to restock my ship-‘

‘That may be so but tell me why you’re wanted by the Orvanans?’ Keghtsa asks.

‘That would be my fault,’ Sk’jin chimes in brightly. ‘I’m Sk’jin- I tried to kill their minister.’

Keghtsa blinks up at Sk’jin, clearly not amused.

‘What are you doing- you can’t be on a mission. You no longer work for the Venture Unit, seeing as how you stabbed them in the back.’

Hoseok grimaces.

‘Yes I’ve heard all about it Hoseok,’ Keghtsa comments. ‘How the Venture Unit tried to break away from the GLA, something I always supported you know, and how the Board was about to completely free themselves from the restraints of the GLA when you came along and killed not just one but three of the Board of Directors.’ Keghtsa laughs humorlessly. ‘All stabbed in the back. How cowardly of you Hoseok- your parents must be so disappointed in you.’

Hoseok keeps a mask of calm. He can feel Sk’jin’s curious eyes turn on him briefly.

‘A lot has changed since your time Keghtsa,’ Hoseok says calmly. ‘There were matters of great stake being weighed in inside the Board- I did not wish to-

‘But you did,’ Keghtsa shrugs. ‘And in doing so you killed not just one, but two of my closest friends- oh yes, Directors Drōhī and Gadd’a were close to me. They were good Beings- wise, strong- and they had to die in your hands.’

Hoseok sighs inwardly. He hadn’t known about this.

‘So now you have come to my outpost.’ Keghtsa waves his too thin, too long arms in a waving gesture. ‘I think I would be serving justice if I returned your head to the Board wouldn’t it?’

The K’it’y nod their approval, their TeorSer never lowering.

‘I heard a lot of accounts Hoseok- how you tortured them for days on end.’ Keghtsa cocks his head to the side. ‘I think it would be fair if I returned the favor don’t you think so?’

‘Okay that’s it,’ Sk’jin sighs out. ‘Look- Governor, I don’t know what you’re talking about but we’re kinda short on time and we just really wanna refuel and-

A hand appears out of nowhere and smacks Sk’jin straight across the face.

‘Look at this one speak,’ one of the K’it’y sneers. Hoseok recognizes him from inside the Transporter. The one who had been giving Hoseok very foul looks. ‘Aren’t you a Khol’isa?’

He steps forward, a bit too forward and is inches from Sk’jin’s face.

‘What happened to your horns pretty boy?’

‘What happened to your nose, fuck-face?’ Sk’jin asks, a serene smile on his face.

‘My nose-?!’

Sk’jin head-butts him with a resounding smack and the K’it’y howls in pain, doubling over instantly, clutching his nose.

‘You bitch-‘

Hoseok winces as Sk’jin is kneed in the stomach. But the Khol’isa has this wicked grin on his face, as though he was finding all of this amusing and once again Hoseok wonders how in Spaces the Khol’isa hadn’t been killed or was wanted by every pirate-clan across the underverse.

‘Run off now little runt,’ Sk’jin spits out with a menacing grin. ‘Tuck that tail between your legs and run to your midget of a master.’

‘Khol’isa?’ Keghtsa repeats, looking a little alarmed before ordering. ‘Bag him!’

4 of the Beings behind them converge on Sk’jin, man-handling him roughly.

‘Oh you’ve got to be kidding me-‘ Sk’jin huffs as a bag is thrown over his head. ‘Really? A fucking bag ouch!’

He’s smacked heavily over his head with the end of a TeorSer.

‘You fuckin’ asshole I’m gon’ rip you a new one-‘ Sk’jin growls as he faces the direction he’d been hit from only to be sent reeling back as he’s knocked clear unconscious.
Hoseok winces again. It shouldn’t be good losing consciousness so frequently.

‘Take them to the gibbets. We can sell the Khol’isa to the Orvanan,’ Keghta says easily before looking up at Hoseok and saying, ‘You’re a good agent Hoseok. Working with you was easy and you were a reliable partner. But you crossed the line. You should have known better than to come here.’ Keghta walks away. ‘Bind them both- be careful of him, he’s worth at least 5 of you.’

The K’it’y corner and bind him. There were a tad too much of them for Hoseok to handle- that and an unconscious Sk’jin to mind as well. Keghta clearly had it all planned.

‘Find the other crew members and take them down to the gibbets too. Then strip their ship.’

Hoseok is compliant as they pull a full body-bind over him. He doesn’t fight back or struggle. Sk’jin is hoisted up onto someone’s shoulders and they start marching forward.

Hoseok was well aware of the risks he was taking.

He always knew that this day would come.

---

Yoongi is at a safe distance, watching as the Hive falls apart slowly. Large chunks of goldish metal falls away as the Atmoshield around the massive Dock diminishes.

Yoongi watches as waves of Beings float out into space, struggling and flailing but all succumbing to the cold vacuum of the nothingness that would consume them inside out.

The Hive chips away, power explosions ripping it apart as fighter-ships and shuttles let fly their missiles and lasers. Unfortunate passenger ships and shuttles are caught and explode into bright light and energy, diminishing at once as the emptiness of space crushes them.

Yoongi can see the Stravechi Nava, stuck between a few ships- nestled almost, as though placed there purposefully.
And Yoongi wouldn’t have thought this in the first place, if he hadn’t seen it.

There was no explanation for it. Database and his mind weren’t able to explain what he saw. And he definitely saw it, because he had recorded it. It was not a hallucination, it was not a trick of light. It had been “real”- but what was real anymore?

A specter of light, gigantic in form and shape- moving as though the stars in the dark of space moved as one to form the shape and outline of a Being. But it had been for a brief moment of time- a flame of blue rippling and extending, guiding the falling ship to safety through clouds of flame before exhausting into vacuum.

What had happened?

All he understands, is that they survived.

Yoongi watches as the GIU arrive. Their fleets launching in neat deadly rows, almost plowing through the ranks of pirate ships.

The GIU Yaaig’Ra Ari Mothership is massive; the size of an average moon. During this time of rescue and transportation, Yoongi would be able to slip in easily. For the time being, he would wait again.

*]

Namjoon realizes, rather belatedly, that he’s never actually spent time alone with Yoongi.

He’s spent time with Hoseok, and even with Sk’jin if you can believe it. But never with Yoongi. But when Namjoon really thinks back to it, Yoongi’s presence was so entirely ambiguous that he can’t remember if he was ever with them as a group inside the Bridge or not. It didn’t help that Yoongi’s form could be entirely hidden behind the large seat of the tower-mast and that he was always dressed entirely in black. Yoongi just had the tendency of fading in with the rest of his surroundings with uncanny nonchalance. Not to mention the fact that Yoongi rarely ever spoke-but that wasn’t true either. Namjoon distinctly remembers Hoseok and Yoongi’s conversation on some trivia from an old Earthian movie. Hoseok sometimes watched these movies with the Human and Yoongi would explain the backstory in extraordinary detail. They had spent an entire morning talking about the lore of “elves” and some interspecies romance that according to Yoongi had been “very depressing”. Sk’jin had been trying not to laugh out loud, cheeks bulging with food, face turning red from the exertion of it all.

So it wasn’t like Yoongi didn’t talk… it was just… really easy to somehow overlook him.

Just like now, inside the Flotsam and Jetsam. Namjoon can’t believe that he’s lost Yoongi.

Taking a deep breath, Namjoon scans over the heads of the crowd. For a rather flung out and small outpost, the Grezma outpost certainly had a lot of Beings- mainly all K’it’y and a smattering of other Beings as well. But no short, black-clad, Human Being around.

Spaces, it hasn’t even been 10 minutes.

‘Yoongi- where are you?’ Namjoon calls, sighing deeply.

‘Behind you.’

‘Where were you?!!’ Namjoon demands at once, hoping no one heard him squeak.

‘I found ingredients.’ Yoongi holds up a bag of said ingredients.

‘I- you- why didn’t you tell me?’ Namjoon demands, feeling like he was talking to a child.

‘I did.’

‘…you didn’t.’

‘I did.’

‘Yoongi, you didn’t.’

‘I did, Joonie.’

Namjoon and Yoongi stare resolutely at each other, neither of them giving in.

‘I did-’

‘Fine,’ Namjoon huffs, turning away. ‘Let’s not separate again. We tell each other clearly, and wait for confirmation before we make a move.’

‘Fine.’

They stare at each other again.

‘I’m looking for a screen. I think we should look there.’

‘Understood. I will follow.’

‘…right…’

‘You mean left.’

‘Spaces- you know what-‘ Namjoon sighs in exasperation. ‘Let’s just go.’
Yoongi keeps to his side, just a little behind him as though using him as a shield or cover of sorts. And it sort of works because no one really looks at Yoongi. Everyone’s eyes just latch onto Namjoon at once.

‘Why are you looking for a screen.’ Yoongi’s questions, Namjoon found out, normally sound like statements.

Namjoon thinks for a while, wondering if he should tell Yoongi about Lisai’s shortcomings.

‘I needed something translated- Lisai doesn’t have the language set to her database,’ Namjoon replies, hoping that Yoongi would pick up on what he meant. The Human doesn’t say anything for a while before asking, ‘Can I listen to the audio.’

Honestly, Namjoon doesn’t know what to expect of the Human. He can’t predict his thoughts or movements so he doesn’t know if he should be surprised that Yoongi would ask him this question. He wasn’t surprised when Hoseok asked him, but in Yoongi’s case, he can’t help but be taken aback.

‘Yeah sure,’ Namjoon shrugs, handing Yoongi his NaviLet and pulling up the audio file. He might as well.

Yoongi taps the side of his Comm-Device, attaching it to the NaviLet instead.

Namjoon finds one of those shady little stalls with outdated screens set up around the front, as though it would be enough of a front to fool other Beings into thinking what they sold wasn’t illegal.

‘That’s Long-Huon.’ Yoongi suddenly says, making Namjoon stop halfway.

‘-what? How do you know?’

‘I understand it,’ Yoongi answers as though it was obvious.

‘-…really?’ Namjoon gapes at the Human. He wants to ask more questions. Like how did Yoongi understand and come to know Long-Huon? And also, why was Sk’jin of all Beings speaking the language?

‘What is he saying?’ Namjoon asks at once.

Yoongi opens his mouth to answer but he closes his mouth abruptly, puts the NaviLet into his jacket pocket and spins Namjoon around to face frontward.

‘Yoongi what the actual fu- oh.’

‘Please follow us and don’t cause a scene or we’ll have to use force.’ The K’it’y says easily, at least a dozen TeorSers aimed right at them. They wore slightly different looking clothes- probably employed for this outpost. They don’t look trained or skilled- rather they were just low level pirates who were bought to work in this outpost.

What had happened that they were being “arrested”? Did Sk’jin do something again? Namjoon sighs. Also, why hadn’t they tried to contact him or Yoongi? Their lines were open, but no word from Hoseok or Sk’jin. Namjoon studies the K’it’y around him quickly again. Calculating roughly, Namjoon guesses that he and Yoongi should be able to fight their way through-

Yoongi.
Where was Yoongi?!

Yoongi was missing.

Again.

Sighing deeply, Namjoon raises his arms and crosses his arms behind his head.

The GIU Yaaig’Ra Ari Mothership is massive.

Yoongi follows the crew member of the Stravechi Nava, separated and placed in different private medical rooms.

They were friends with a Yisheng who was part of the emergency unit sent to the GIU Yaaig’Ra Ari Mothership in order to aid with the disaster at the Hive. He watched as the Human Navigator rush up the Yisheng, hugging him tight.

Friendship, according to database and his mind, was considered a precious memory.

Why was it not considered a precious Present?

He didn’t understand.

He also watches as Admiral K’mara comes into view. He’s obviously too far to really hear what was happening or what was being said.

Behind her was Jongin, the Venture Unit agent that was supposed to have died in Nuqtai. And next to him was a Long-Huon. He bore a resemblance to Zhoumi in that fact that they were both from Long-Huo. But there was something different about him- a red light shone through his eyes and behind him, a shadow lingered.

Their group pauses in front of the medical rooms where the Captain was being kept. The Human Navigator was there as well.

Admiral K’mara walks away again and following her were the Captain and the Navigator.

Yoongi watches as they enter a Transporter and vanish through the wide streets of the internal city in the GIU Yaaig’Ra Ari Mothership.

Yoongi makes up his mind and follows their Transporter. There were massive train networks that interconnected each internal city within the Mothership. Yoongi sneaks into the one with Admiral K’mara, laying down flat on his back inside one of the empty cabins down the hallway, under the small beds. He hears occasional voices speak but he sees no one.

He feels the train stop and shadowing one of the last guards, Yoongi ducks out of the train before the doors can close in on him and then walks out into the grand city of Unnivel.

It’s not difficult tracing where Admiral K’mara would be from this point on. The GIU Yaaig’Ra Ari Mothership was run by K’mara so this city was in fact, her city. So Yoongi knew he would find her there. The largest and tallest tower within the city of Unnivel was dedicated to the core Headquarters of the GIU- or the seat of the Trifecta.

K’mara’s main office is massive. With many rooms and layers of levels. It was designed to make whoever came in here feel lost and confused and overwhelmed. But Yoongi easily walks through, bypassing the security with ease. They must have overestimated the security of the building because Yoongi simply walks down the long and tall hallways without alarming any security systems.

He places himself next to one of the many pillars inside her main study, where the covers on the couch look the most worn. The silk over the cushions threading just a little more than other places.

The flowers here were fresh too.

Yoongi counts them at 18 stalks in total.

K’mara had come in an hour ago and was now talking with a few of her lieutenants. They left one by one, receiving little missions and assignments, or handing in their reports.

‘Send Zitao to pick them up,’ K’mara says. ‘They trust him. They will listen to him and feel better at ease.’

‘Understood Admiral.’ The last of the lieutenants replies.

‘That is all. Are the others in their quarters?’

‘Yes Admiral.’

‘Very good. Have a good night lieutenant.’

‘Goodnight Admiral.’

The door closes shut and all Yoongi hears is the quiet sound of the air filtration units, the tapping of Admiral K’mara’s fingers over her screen, and if Yoongi listened closely, the sound of her breathing.
He steps out from behind the pillar silently and makes his way across the room. He doesn’t know what gives him away but K’mara turns on her chair to look at him.

‘How did you get in?’ Admiral K’mara is unafraid and calm. Her red eyes pierce into Yoongi’s but he looks back calmly.

K’mara doesn’t move. She simply watches. She knew that Yoongi wasn’t here to hurt her. If he was, she knew that he would have already done so.

‘Through the front door.’ Yoongi replies, lifting his visor.

‘I see.’

It’s silent again.

‘You wish to speak to me?’

‘I do.’

‘You were the one who made that emergency call from the Hive.’

‘I am.’

‘Take a seat,’ K’mara gestures to the couch.

‘Thank you Admiral.’

Yoongi sits down on the couch.

‘Would you like some tea.’

‘No, thank you.’

‘Who sent you?’

‘No one. I am by myself. I am Alone.’

K’mara stares intently at him for a while.

‘You seem to know me, yet I do not know you. I cannot place you or your species. Who are you?’ K’mara asks finally.

‘My name is Yoongi, and I am a Human,’ he answer, taking off his helmet fully. ‘I have information regarding the Galactic Inquisition and their involvement with the Yisheng Headquarters.’
(Author’s Note)
YOU MUST COME BACK HOOOOOo0000OoOoOoOoOoME!
Sorry
But I love Seo Taiji and that’s one of my favorite songs and I can’t believe BTS covered it I’m still shook I need to listen to this a billion times more bye.
Nightmares were strange.

Perhaps it was because he wasn’t supposed to see nightmares or dreams, but Sk’jin doesn’t know why nightmares control him like this. But that’s a lie. He knows. Sk’jin knows why this hurts him more than anything else. Why this drains him.

The world is white around him, and there is no end to this terrain of nothingness. No shadow, no depth, nothing. Simply white, and it is endless. He looks down at his hands.

They’re not his hands.

There were many hands.

And they all held the remains of what looked like glass shards. But looking closely at the shards told Sk’jin that they were his horns.

The blood that drips out of the sides of his head washes the whiteness around him in red and he’s back there again.

The Khol’isa didn’t have to sleep to be plagued by nightmares. They lived a nightmare. They called it the Wake of the Bloodmoon. The extended period of “living” in their treacherous and torturous planet. Blood was the colour of the sky, and blood was the colour of their eyes as they cried out against their sun.

Sk’jin has lived and has been reborn through several millenniums, reborn into the Bloodmoon time and time again. Until one day he woke to a peaceful quiet that unsettled him to his core. Because this was something he craved. Something he imagined- something he dreamt of.

So then why did the shadow of the Bloodmoon follow him here.

Raksane Tayi was beautiful- an oasis of life, colour, peace, and security. But everything is touched by the shadow of the Bloodmoon. Sk’jin tries to escape it, chasing after a relief that never comes. Chasing after a relief that would clear his eyes, shine a light strong enough to diminish the shadow of the Bloodmoon that followed him every waking second of his existence.

But it never came. It never came and Sk’jin continued to live, spreading the shadow of the nightmare that haunted him everywhere he looked.

There was no relief, no rest, no dreamless sleep. And he lived in eternal fear of it.
The landscape of his planet, long-gone and nothing more than a memory, transforms and lifts around him. The stained mountains, the cruel peaks, the bleeding rivers- even the air is rank with its colour. There was no escaping it and Sk’jin is afraid.

And Sk’jin knows why he’s afraid. Because nightmares were a reflection of life. In life you had no control over what happened to you, why it happened to you, and how it happens to you.

Hands, red and cruel in their form, rise around him from the mountains. They convolute in on themselves, hands after hands after hands in massive waves chasing after him, to pull him back to pull him out. Sk’jin doesn’t move. He can’t move. He’s tried running but that never worked. So he just waits and lets the hands like ocean waves pull him down towards a gaping darkness tinted red.

WHY ARE YOU HERE?!

The most frightening aspect of a nightmare was finding out that there was no waking from the one you were living.

WAKE UP!!

Sk’jin wakes up inside a cold room with metal walls, metal floors, and metal ceilings. He blinks a few times, waiting for the reddish tint of his vision to wash away, but it always lingered, tainting everything with blood.

One side of the room is caged and barred, the other side is only held up with an Atmoshield. His head throbs with pain as he sits up, unable to stop groaning a little as he does so.

Grezma stretches out before him in a thickly layered field of moon-rock. This was a pretty good prison; using an Atmoshield as part of the defenses meant that prisoners could jump out if they wanted, only to die rather immediately. Sk’jin would be impressed if it weren’t for the fact that he’s currently very irritated and in a lot of pain.

He touches the side of his head, wincing as he does so. There’s no bleeding, but a large and impressively bumpy lump has formed on the side of his head.

But that doesn’t hurt as much as his temples. Gingerly, Sk’jin massages at the side of his head, trying his best to breathe without giving in into hyperventilation. His heart was beating like crazy, his muscles felt extraordinarily weak. He tries not to think about his nightmare. But every time he closed his eyes, hands gripping bleeding shards of crystals appear out at him, beyond his reach, beyond his ability to heal.

He manages to move a little and lean against the wall of the room, concentrating on keeping it together.

‘Deep breaths,’ Sk’jin mumbles to himself. ‘Deep breaths- in and out.’

He could do this. He was alive and here and present again. He could do this.

‘Are you all right?’

Wincing sharply as a result of turning his head too quickly, Sk’jin blinks a few times and registers Hoseok peering across at him from beyond a few barred doors. In this dim light, the yellow of his eyes gleam bright.

‘Do I look all right?’ Sk’jin grumbles, unable to retain his normal refined and elegant mannerism.
'I tried to explain that you were unwell, that you needed medical help, but,’ Hoseok shrugs.

Sk’jin breathes out slowly, willing his pain away. He glances over at Hoseok, frowning a little though not out of pain.

‘How did you do it?’ Sk’jin asks.

Hoseok looks confused.

‘I’m good at reading Beings,’ Sk’jin states. And he’s not showing off either. Sk’jin has lived a very long time and he’s able to accurately guess a Beings character and their personalities easily. Living for so long, with little to really occupy and keep you, harnessed in you an uncanny sharpness in determining someone’s character.

‘Namjoon is a Being who has firm beliefs, prejudices, some self-righteousness, and an unwillingness to break from he considers pride because he believes that will make him weak. Of course he doesn’t realize his “pride” is in fact his own insecurity and doubts- but he hides them well and he’s intelligent enough to know. But there are aspects of your life you cannot control and that’s where he’s easy to manipulate. Easy to control,’ Sk’jin reels off. Hoseok is unmoving, staring at him.

‘Lal Haenoon is a power-hungry Being who despite his intelligence and long years guiding the Venture Unit, is bitter that he hadn’t been approached for the deal held between the Venture Unit, the Yishengs, and the Akramanese,’ Sk’jin says easily, letting go of his head and trying not to move it too much. ‘Because had he been approached, it’s extremely likely that his manipulation would have caused even more trouble through the Known Universe than it already has.’

Moving slowly, Sk’jin shifts where he’s sitting to look at Hoseok properly. The Ngfy’widan is leaning closer through the bars, as though to listen closer.

‘K’mara is shrewd and cunning- but her inability to garner trust disables her from truly gaining the power she craves,’ Sk’jin chuckles a little at the sight of Hoseok’s evident surprise at his criticism of his fellow Khol’isa. ‘Of course we have Lmiura who is similar to Namjoon except she’s somehow more unstable.’

‘Lmiura? Unstable?’ Hoseok can’t seem to help himself.

‘I understand if you don’t see it,’ Sk’jin smiles and he’s not saying it in a way that’s belittling Hoseok’s lack of understanding.

‘But then there’s you,’ Sk’jin carefully shifts forward and leans against the bars. ‘You’re a good Being Hoseok. It doesn’t matter what you have done, where you have done it, to whom you’ve done it. You are a good Being.’

Hoseok seems to squirm before leaning back away.

‘You have a good heart- an approach that isn’t darkened by the life you lead. And it’s not ignorant optimism,’ Sk’jin smiles at Hoseok. ‘What you did, what you decided to do, doesn’t make you a bad Being.’

Hoseok shifts away.

‘It doesn’t make you a good Being either,’ Sk’jin adds and Hoseok pauses, looking up curiously at him again.
‘It just makes you someone who’s trying to live.’

Hoseok’s expression doesn’t let up, still staring at him.

‘So you’re saying that killing my father was something I had to do to live?’

Sk’jin’s species, the Khol’isa, didn’t have parents or other Beings who bore them into the Universe. They were born, a result of natural evolution and metamorphosis that shaped them into their current state of existence and standing as Beings. Other species of Beings however, were born and existed as a result of procreation, leading to the branch of relationships between parent and child. So while Sk’jin has never experienced the idea or the notion of having parents, he can sympathize to a certain level, on how it must feel to know that your own father had been involved in a ploy to destroy the Known Universe.

‘Well it certainly is something you have to live with,’ Sk’jin replies.

‘How did you know?’

‘I did some digging,’ Sk’jin replies. ‘And I have my sources.’

‘Like your call to Ngobut’jha?’

‘Spaces, Namjoon told you too?’ Sk’jin chuckles, feeling just a minor flare of irritation.

‘Lisai doesn’t have the language you were speaking in her index.’ Hoseok says somewhat dully. There was a heavy sort of recklessness in the way Hoseok spoke, like he no longer cared for the consequences of his words or actions. Also, Sk’jin is pretty sure Namjoon wouldn’t want him knowing that he asked Hoseok about his conversation.

‘Is that why you’re here? To somehow justify yourself? To gain redemption?’ Sk’jin asks with a wry grin. ‘I won’t tease you- come on, it’s all right.’

Hoseok gives him a deadpan look from between the bars for a while before sighing and nodding.

‘Yeah, I figured,’ Sk’jin grins. ‘It’s all right Hoseokkie- it’s a cliché reason yes, but there’s a reason why it’s so cliché. Because we never learn.’

Hoseok gives him a questioning look.

‘We repeat the same mistakes over and over again- a circle.’ Sk’jin raises a hand and draws a circle in the air. ‘You committed what in general unbiased laws would only be considered an extreme act of terrorism and manslaughter. Personally killing 3 of the Board of Divisions, your father, and approximately 16 more Beings involved in one night. But the numbers don’t appall you, the act of killing itself doesn’t faze you. What did strike you was the fact that after killing your father you realized that those Beings you killed came from the exact same place your father did.’

Sk’jin looks over to find Hoseok staring blankly ahead of him, a stricken look on his face, clearly reliving something in his head.

‘Suddenly everyone was a father, a mother, a son, a daughter, a friend, a lover, a sister, a brother.’ Sk’jin sing-songs. ‘Beings who knew others- Beings who had their beliefs,- and then as you stared at them, you thought you recognized them- you saw your father in them- but when you looked at your father, you realized you didn’t know him at all. You didn’t recognize him.’

Sk’jin breathes out slowly, his headache now just a dull throbbing he could easily ignore.
‘Now you see your father everywhere; you see him in Namjoon, you see him in me, you see him even in Yoongi,’ Sk’jin names each of them. ‘And most of all you see him in yourself. What he was doing isn’t any different from what you did. He fought and killed and went around other Beings backs the same way you fought and killed and went around his back. All for what you believe in. Or at least thought you believed in.’

‘Am I that easy to read?’ Hoseok asks, his voice carrying a hint of amusement.

‘I’m just that good at reading people,’ Sk’jin scoffs before adding, ‘And getting a look at everyone’s files certainly helped.’

‘How did you even get those? I don’t think you’re allowed- even K’mara can’t touch those,’ Hoseok says somewhat dully but nowhere near angry that Sk’jin did some snooping. Sk’jin guesses that Namjoon would probably breathe fire if he knew that Sk’jin had been in neck-deep with his personal files.

‘Like I said,’ Sk’jin smiles. ‘I have my resources.’

‘You should hook me up to your source- they sound really efficient,’ Hoseok laughs humorlessly.

‘I’m afraid I can’t,’ Sk’jin chuckles. ‘They wouldn’t trust you.’

‘And they trust you?’

‘Considering what we went through…then yeah.’

‘I don’t think I want to know,’ Hoseok turns a little to smile at him.

‘Good, because I’m not telling. Some stories are better left untold,’ Sk’jin says dramatically.

‘Then why are you here?’ Hoseok asks, turning to look Sk’jin properly in the eye. ‘If you’re not here because of “self-righteous reasons”, or for “redemption”, then what are you here for?’

Sk’jin knows he probably doesn’t look very trustworthy as he smiles coyly at Hoseok, ‘Maybe if you help me embroider more robes, I might just tell you.’

Hoseok knows when he’s not going to get more information and he huffs out of short laugh in response.

‘I hope you know that you won’t find redemption,’ Sk’jin says bluntly, looking at Hoseok.

‘I know that.’

‘Doing this isn’t going to make any of that go away.’

‘I know that too.’

‘So why are you really here?’

Hoseok sighs out.

‘I don’t know.’

‘Nope,’ Sk’jin over accentuates the ‘p’. ‘You know exactly why.’

There’s a flash of anger in the Ngfy’widan eyes.
'You’re trying to prove to yourself that you’re not your father,’ Sk’jin says easily.

Hoseok looks away again.

‘Look, I’m not defending what they did because fuck the Yishengs honestly,’ Sk’jin says, the bitterness in his voice seeping in a little more than he intended, judging by the expression on Hoseok’s face. ‘But your father did what he thought was right. What he thought would protect the Universe, what remains of his planet, of his species, his family…he just wanted to protect what mattered the most to him. And that’s what you did too.’

‘Are you trying to make me feel better?’ Hoseok asks him after a while, a tinge of incredulity in his voice.

‘Hoseokkie, I’m not here at a therapist or as a Yisheng to listen to your problems. Spaces knows I have my fair share,’ Sk’jin chuckles humorlessly. ‘There is no definitive say to what is right, what is wrong. Many Beings believe that death, destruction, violence, is a resulting reaction of our failures, our lack. While some believe that it is a part of life- to equalize all the good there must be some bad right? And then there’s us- we’re not anywhere in particular in our beliefs- either because we don’t know what we want to believe in, or because we’re afraid of believing because that will lead to a bitter disappointment.’

It’s quiet again. There’s barely any sound.

‘Do you still think I have a “good heart”?’ the Ngfy’widan chuckles.

‘Oh honey,’ Sk’jin smiles, leaning against the bars to grin and wink at Hoseok. ‘You’re an absolute sweetheart.’

Hoseok snorts once. Then twice. Then he breaks out in to hysterical laughter.

‘This is so stupid,’ Hoseok manages to say as he pushes himself upright, having fallen over from laughing so much. ‘Look at us- look at all of us. There’s the Captain of our ship- some weird cyborg construct Being with years of trauma that we can’t even begin to hope to understand. There’s you, a Khol’isa who used to be the leader of one of the largest pirate-clans across the Universe, and there’s me- someone who killed their own father for a “cause” I don’t even know if I believe in anymore for reasons I cannot plainly state.’

‘And then there’s Yoongi,’ Sk’jin adds.

‘Please, let’s not start on him,’ Hoseok groans.

‘Not much to start on anyways,’ Sk’jin replies with a shrug that Hoseok doesn’t see but it didn’t matter.

They sit in silence for a while.

‘That’s how you knew? Through your father.’ Sk’jin clarifies.

‘Yeah- both of my parents were closely involved in the Isbahaysiga Alliance case,’ Hoseok chuckles under his breath. ‘It was a great cover-up, I have to say.’

‘Did you come across him having some shady meeting?’ Sk’jin grins. ‘Or did you walk in on some important phone call.’

‘No, nothing like that,’ Hoseok sighs out. ‘He told me about it.’
Sk’jin ignores the way the metal cage spins briefly as he turns to look at Hoseok.

‘I think he thought I’d be a good addition to the cause,’ Hoseok shrugs. ‘Or at least he thought I’d agree with him. I mean I get why he would think so…when you’re working as an agent…after some time…’

‘You realize everything repeats itself. All the violence, the deaths, the greed, the selfishness,’ Sk’jin yawns out. ‘It’s just one massive cycle.’

‘And I thought about it for a while,’ Hoseok sounds like he’s confessing something he has never said to anyone. And Sk’jin wouldn’t doubt it either. ‘I thought about it but- the idea of it just seemed so-‘

‘So bizarre? So outlandish? Wrong?’

‘Yeah…’

‘But at the same time you found yourself agreeing, you could understand why your father would think that.’ Sk’jin supplies.

Sk’jin looks away from Hoseok to stare out of the wide gap, to stare at the moon-rocks.

‘Well all make decisions and choices that we don’t always understand but we do them anyways. And the outcome is something we can’t blame on anyone but-’

‘-Yoongi.’

‘What -Spaces Yoongi!?’ Sk’jin flinches in alarm when he finds the Human sitting casually outside the barred wall.

Hoseok is scrambling up, eyes wide as he regards the Human.

‘Are you all right?’ Yoongi asks, completely unfazed and unsurprised at their reactions.

Sk’jin wonders if Yoongi actually liked creeping about like this just for the reaction.

‘How did you find us? Where’s Namjoon?’ Hoseok asks at once, looking around for the tall captain.

‘In Debris 337,’ Yoongi replies. ‘I tracked you.’

‘Tracked us-?’ Hoseok looks a little confused.

‘I put tracking tabs on all of you.’ Yoongi replies.

‘When?!’ Sk’jin demands.

‘During the first week,’ Yoongi supplies easily.

‘How did we not notice-‘ Sk’jin begins, wondering how the GI agent managed to pull off such a feat without his noticing. Then he pauses to think. Out of anyone in the Universe, Yoongi would be the one who could pull off something like this. Sk’jin feels a chill spread around his body as he thinks of how easily he had overlooked Yoongi, often ignoring what the former GI agent was potentially capable of.

‘Using what?’ Hoseok questions, looking incredibly wary and alarmed. ‘None of my triggers went Sk’jin and Hoseok stare at Yoongi in utter disbelief.

The previous tremor that had run through Sk’jin’s body is back and it feels rather permanent.

‘I’m joking.’ Yoongi’s face is stoic.

Hoseok seems to let go of a breath he didn’t know he was holding in. Sk’jin wonders if he should laugh.

‘It’s in the tea. Namjoon doesn’t eat, so I shifted it to tea.’

Or maybe not. Hoseok seems to be questioning everything he’s ever concluded about Yoongi, too stunned by this easily relayed revelations on bioengineered tracking. How was this even possible?

‘I put very small trace amounts of a rare radioactive element in the tea so I can isolate the isotope frequency straight to all of you.’

‘You poisoned us?!’ Sk’jin splutters out.

‘It wasn’t enough to harm any of you—‘

‘Okay wait- we can discuss this later but right now we need to know how in the fuck we’re gonna get out,’ Hoseok nearly yells out. ‘Yoongi- how do we get out of here. How did you even get here? We were pretty much delivered in here through a Transporter. There’s no way we can get out unless you happen to have a Transporter waiting for us.’

‘I don’t.’

Hoseok huffs loudly.

‘I came here to make sure you were both all right,’ Yoongi explains and honestly this would be sort of sweet if it weren’t for the fact that Yoongi says this without a single hint of emotion.

‘Where’s the Pluns’na?’ Hoseok asks.

‘It’s been towed away with the Užkulisaï at Debris 149,’ Yoongi replies. ‘The Orvan Forces will arrive in 3 hours. You’re being sold for 800,000 units.’

Sk’jin catches Hoseok looking at him with an alarmed expression but honestly Sk’jin is irritated.

‘I am worth twice that amount,’ he snaps, causing Hoseok to facepalm while Yoongi nods in agreement.

‘Yoongi- wait, how did you get here,’ Hoseok demands, his voice strained and his tone controlled as though trying not to scream.

‘I used the lifts.’

Sk’jin looks past Yoongi to look at Hoseok who looks like someone hit him over the head.

‘…the lifts.’
‘Yes. There’s a magnetic strip that lowers and raises a few of the moon-rock through the tiers.’
Yoongi explains.

‘…and you just got on it?’

‘There were other Beings there too. They didn’t see me.’

Sk’jin and Hoseok share a dumbfounded expression.

‘I’m joking. They were headed here to collect Hobi.’ Yoongi looks at Hoseok. ‘Your friend wants to chop off your head.’

‘…he’s not my friend.’

‘Wait- so what happened to the guards?’ Sk’jin asks.

‘I threw them off the lift.’

There’s another sticky silence that follows.

But before any of them can say anything there’s the distinct sound of footsteps hurrying in.

‘I think they’ve noticed the missing…where did Yoongi go.’ Hoseok begins before he’s spinning around, searching for the Human.

A full dozen K’it’y show up, armed and armoured, their eyes narrowing as they stare at Sk’jin and Hoseok both of whom looked far from oblivious to anything suspicious.

‘Search the cells,’ one of them barks. ‘Pair up and proceed through each row. There’s another one of them missing.’

Sk’jin shares a look with Hoseok, a fleeting one because the next thing that happens is the lights go off. Then they hear a shrieking gasp and by the faint light of the Atmoshield that surrounded the prison block, Sk’jin witnessed two of rear guards crumple to the ground.

‘What was that-?!’

Sk’jin swears he’s keeping watch of the fight (the better term to use would probably be “shooting fish in a barrel”) but he can’t spot Yoongi. Instead one by one, the small platoon of guards sent over to check on their tiny prison cell are being picked off in this dim lighting.

Sk’jin counts at least 5 that fall onto the ground in crumpled heaps before the guards scatter about, keeping space between each other, trying to cover more ground.

‘Hey-’

One of the guards closer to where Sk’jin’s cell was crumples down on to the floor. Sk’jin has no idea what’s going on. He can’t even spot Yoongi amidst all of this and the K’it’y start freaking out, reporting the situation desperately. One completely loses his mind and starts running off in one direction, firing his TeorSer, creating bright flashes of light.

Amidst this flashing of light, Sk’jin catches sight of a shadow that doesn’t seem to match up to anything Sk’jin can immediately see, moving quickly and swiftly.

‘Go stand by the prisoner cells!’ one of them shouts and they pell-mell run towards Sk’jin and Hoseok’s cells, aiming their TeorSers at them.
‘STAND BACK!’ they yell, aiming their TeorSers at them. Sk’jin could roll his eyes as he takes a modest step back.

‘What the fuck is that thing?!’ one them pants over the sound of yelling and TeorSer fire from the other side of the prison.

A rather short Human, Sk’jin wants to say, but now was not the time to run his mouth.

The sound of the previous TeorSer going off suddenly stops, followed by a not so pleasant cracking sound that causes everyone to flinch.

It’s deadly silent.

‘Is…is it gone?’ one of them whispers.

Hoseok actually snorts out loud, unable to control himself.

‘Shut up!’ one of them roars.

They stand back to back, TeorSers raised high, lights from its barrel shining brightly around in a rather chaotic manner. Sk’jin sighs and leans against the wall.

‘Yoongi I didn’t know you were so dramatic,’ Sk’jin yawns.

‘Shut up!!’

‘He is, isn’t he?’ Hoseok chuckles. ‘I guess he got a TeorSer now though.’

There’s a collective sound, of heads turning towards Hoseok’s direction and Sk’jin can practically smell their fear.

‘Who do you think is gonna go down first Sk’jin?’ Hoseok drawls from his cell.

‘Oh,’ Sk’jin mock poses a gesture of thoughtfulness, rubbing his chin with great care. ‘I think perhaps- the second one from the back with the slightly more yellow light on his TeorSer-’

A flash of light fills the air from the back of the prison cell and the K’it’y Sk’jin was describing spins where he stands, falling down in a heap. Everyone turns at once, TeorSers firing up a blazing storm. Sk’jin grimaces and sits back down, covering his ears from the excess noise.

‘Is it gone?’ one of the whispers.

Sk’jin could roll his eyes at their stupidity. Panic and fear made you do stupid things, but these Beings had to be some of the dumbest guards Sk’jin has had the misfortune of meeting.

‘Right,’ Hoseok says casually. ‘I have a really good feeling about the one standing to the edge over there-’

Hoseok doesn’t even complete his sentence as the aforementioned K’it’y literally flies out of the prison, a TeorSer shot carrying him down the hallway and out of the Atmoshield.

Hoseok makes a sound akin to wincing, as though he felt sorry.

‘My turn!’ Sk’jin says cheerfully, standing up and leaning against the bars, grinning at the K’it’y.

‘How about the-‘
‘You shut your mouth!’ he hisses at Sk’jin, reaching into cover Sk’jin’s mouth.

The K’it’y only realizes his mistake after his arm breaks, bent over the bars of Sk’jin’s cell room. Sk’jin reaches over and grabs the K’it’y by the hair and slams his head against the bar, a resonating cracking sound resounding through the air. He doesn’t care that a few of the TeorSers are aimed at him, clearly about to fire, because they fall to the ground with heavy metallic thunks, as their owners skid down the hallway in a flash of bright light.

There’s a momentary sound of struggling and the other guard who probably made the same unfortunate mistake of reaching into Hoseok’s prison cell also slides down the bars, eyes rolling to the back of his head.

‘Is that all?’ Hoseok asks Sk’jin who nods as the lights switch back on again. He glances at the heaps of K’it’y guards, feeling a little sorry for them. They had no idea what they walked into.

‘Yoongi?’ Hoseok calls.

There’s no answer.

Sk’jin and Hoseok share a look.

‘I swear, if he’s left us here-‘

‘Yoongi?’ Hoseok calls again, looking apprehensive. ‘Do you think he injured himself?’

‘…I honestly really doubt that…’

‘Yoongi?’

Sk’jin and Hoseok share another look. Then there’s a loud explosive sound from beyond their small prison and they both sigh.

‘He left us here didn’t he.’

‘He did.’
‘I have a mission for you, Yoongi, if you are willing to take it.’

‘What is it?’

‘I want you to keep track of the remaining crew members. I believe that the Yisheng Yixing, Baekhyun, and the Heladian Min-Seok will remain back, with the added company of my lieutenant Zitao.’

‘What do you expect me to observe during this tracking period?’

‘Simply keep watch. Follow their actions. Do not stop them, do not get in their way. But if they are in danger, make sure you survive it.’

‘And if they separate?’

‘Your priority is the Heladian and the Yisheng.’

‘The Heladian?’

‘Yes.’

K’mara stands up from her seat and walks over to the large window, pulling aside the curtain and allowing the oddly misty light of Unnivel to flood inwards.

‘Love is a strange thing. It is unpredictable and yet at the same time, entirely readable.’

‘I do not understand.’

K’mara turns slowly as she regards Yoongi with a smile.

‘No one does.’
Namjoon starts at the sound of the explosion. There’s excited exclamations from his prison mates in the other cells, all clearly waiting for their trial or possible ransom pick-up. Namjoon wonders what they’re going to do to him.

Also, where had Yoongi vanished to? He was literally right behind Namjoon the entire time, in plain sight for everyone to see and poof! He vanishes.

‘Woah- there goes another one!’ his prison mate to the left was apparently very enthusiastic about explosions.

‘Does this happen often?’ someone asks, probably new like Namjoon.

‘Nopes! First time! This is fascinating!’ the voice to his left declares. It’s a deep, strangely melodic voice that pitches up to something strangely child-like and perhaps altogether too giggly.

‘…how long have you been here?’

‘Around 6 months I think? I’m not sure to be honest…’

Namjoon drowns out the chatter around him.

This was going to be very difficult to explain to the special-jury. And honestly, it was a good thing he hadn’t sent in his Captain’s log just yet. They probably don’t need to know about this slight detour in their journey to Bhumi. It probably wasn’t going to settle well with them either.

Did the Orvan Forces reach out to the Grezma outpost and warn them about their coming? Did Sk’jin have bounty over his head now and everyone remaining and still actively involved in the Isbahaysiga Alliance was now after Sk’jin, so by association, the rest of them? Namjoon sighs heavily- Sk’jin was certainly more trouble than he was worth.

Long-Huo.

Why was that language barred from Lisai’s access probe? Long-Huo was a pretty decent planet with a good standing with the GLA. They produced some of the best pilots their side of the Universe, and the only other thing Namjoon can think about when the planet Long-Huo comes up is the foolish fire-breathing legend. Apparently, the Long-Huo species of Beings could breathe fire when enraged. This was honestly the stupidest thing Namjoon has ever heard. Stupidest, and biologically impossible too. Manipulation of fire was a different story, where you could contain and control the energy of the atoms as they oxidized into light, heat, and energy.

What did Sk’jin have to do with Long-Huo? During his long centuries of piracy, the Khol’isa never once came into contact with the planet or her people. Yet here he was, speaking like one of her natives.

But that didn’t matter now. Because Yoongi understood the language (the questions of how and why would probably be answered another day) so at least, Namjoon would be able to determine what was being said. He’d be able to determine if Sk’jin was in fact colluding with K’mara to take over this mission just like Lmiura feared.

He would definitely be mentioning this to her during the log.
If he could return to the ship in one piece of course. There’s a bright explosion that rapidly diminishes and a few cheers from around the prison again. Namjoon has no idea why these Beings are here, or what they were imprisoned here for. Either internal back-stabbing, or debts unpaid, or something equally basic and common for outpost prisons. Namjoon watches as a few of the populated moon-rocks, or Debris as they were called, light up in a chain reaction and Transporters fly out as quickly as they can.

This was probably Yoongi’s doing. Or Sk’jin and Hoseok. Had they been captured too? Or did they get separated. Maybe Hoseok would be able to talk them out of this but judging by the random explosions and chaos overtaking Grezma, any chance or hope of diplomacy is long gone.

Namjoon backs away from the view beyond the Atmoshield. Perhaps if he just climbed out, lowered himself onto an open platform, got a TeorSer, maybe steal a Transporter, he’d be able to get out of there. But he doesn’t know where the ship is. Where any of his “crew” are, and flying solely on autopilot wouldn’t get him anywhere. He was stuck in here, waiting for his “crew” or for anyone to get him out of this. Maybe Lmiura would hear of this one way or another. But then again, they were off-grid. Rolling his eyes at himself, Namjoon turns his back to the Atmoshield only to nearly jump out of his skin because Yoongi is standing outside his cell, like he’d been there the entire time. This was starting to feel a lot like déjà vu and Namjoon has a feeling that this wasn’t going to be the last time it happens.

‘Fuck! Yoongi!’ Namjoon approaches the bars quickly. ‘How in Spaces did you even get in here?!’

‘Through the main entrance,’ Yoongi points to the right.

‘…were there no guards?!’

‘I took them out.’

‘…what about the others?’ Namjoon asks, recovering a little from Yoongi’s monotone narrative.

‘Sk’jin and Hoseok are being held captive. The ship is in Debris 149. Sk’jin is being sold to the Orvan Force for 800,000 units-’

‘Isn’t that rather less-‘

‘-and Hoseok is scheduled for execution but I removed the execution party and disabled the lift leading to their prison.’

‘…that’s…very nice of you, Yoongi.’

‘You’re being sold to the Isbahaysiga Alliance for 500,000 units-‘

‘That’s really insulting.’ Namjoon scowls, wondering why he’s so bothered by this. ‘Also, how did you even find me here? Were you able to hack into the outpost’s operating system?’

‘I am headed for the Governors Hall to access the main operating system screen.’ Yoongi explains. ‘And I found you because I put a tracking tab on you.’

Namjoon’s thoughts are put on immediate pause.

‘I beg your pardon?’

‘I came here to make sure of your location then I’m going to isolate this prison so that it cannot be accessed.’
‘Wait- no, go back,’ Namjoon waves his hand. ‘What do you mean you’re tracking me?’

Yoongi blinks at him in what Namjoon suspects might be exasperation.

‘I put tracking tabs on all of you.’ Yoongi says, his tone sounding like he’s said this before.

‘When.’ Namjoon inquires as politely as he can.

‘During the first week,’ Yoongi replies.

Namjoon blinks a few times, suppressing the urge to search himself immediately for said tracking tab. How did he not notice? If Yoongi applied it on him, Lisai was supposed to warn him immediately. Or was Lisai somehow controlled by Yoongi? But his own firewalls and surveillance software would be triggered by the installation of any software or malware Yoongi could potentially use.

‘What sort of tracking tab?’ Namjoon asks, arms crossing.

Yoongi looks up at him, arms crossing as well, mirroring Namjoon’s stance.

‘I put it in the food.’

‘I don’t eat.’ Namjoon points out.

‘I’m joking.’

The possibility of Yoongi actually joking is one Namjoon never even considered. He doesn’t know how to deal with this statement.

‘So how did you put the tracking tabs on all of us?’

‘It’s in the tea.’

Namjoon feels his eyebrow twitch. Yoongi still stares up at him, expression unimpressed and entirely blank. Namjoon also thinks, somewhere in the back of his mind amidst all of the what the actual fuck-s that Yoongi had essentially lied to everyone on board the Užkulisai and proceeded to basically poison them.

‘Please explain.’

‘I put very small trace amounts of a rare radioactive element in the tea so I can isolate the isotope frequency straight to all of you.’

‘So you’re saying that you poisoned us with a radioactive chemical.’

‘It wasn’t enough to harm any of you. Only trace amounts to enable an isotropic frequency read.’

Namjoon is annoyed that it’s an extremely simple yet brilliant plan. There were countless elements that had a unique isotropic frequency that could be tracked based solely on their chemical and radioactive composition. They were exceptionally rare, making it all the more ideal for tracking purposes. The only reason such a tracking method hasn’t gained wider recognition in its functionality was because the elements in question were so rare, obtaining them often lead to lots of units and time spent, death, or a lot of deaths.

‘Can we move on.’ Yoongi intones, no hint or suggestion of asking for permission in his voice. It was more of an order.
'So, you’re going to isolate this prison. And then?’ Namjoon rubs at the side of his head.

‘Then I’m going to head to the Governor’s Hall, take over the operation system, freeze all communication channels and launch rings. All the Transporters are wired to the outpost’s operating system so I will disconnect all of them.’ Yoongi explains.

‘So was this your plan all along?’ Namjoon asks, rather impressed. ‘It’ a good plan. Though I wished you at least gave me a head’s up-‘

‘No- I ran away instinctively.’

Namjoon’s face falls comically.

‘So what are you planning on doing now?’ Namjoon asks, ‘Let me out and we can go get the ship-‘

‘I can’t open these bars without using the master-key.’

‘The what?’

‘The master-key.’

‘…I think there’s a way where you could hack-‘

‘It’s been programmed so that any tampering, both internal and external, will trigger and remove the Atmoshield.’

‘It’s fine, I can survive in vacuum,’ Namjoon waves his hand dismissively.

‘Any tampering, both internal and external, will trigger and remove the Atmoshield from around the Grezma.’

‘…I see your point now. And the master-key is in the Governors Hall?’

‘Yes.’

‘…so then why are you here?’

‘To check on you.’

Namjoon feels a little touched.

‘And to make sure you don’t do anything stupid.’

Namjoon grimaces down at the Human.

‘I’m not doing anything- you’re the one that’s causing all that,’ Namjoon points behind him and just on cue, there’s display of light energy and a few of the moon-rocks bounce off of each other, crashing into other moon-rocks.

‘I simply laid down a series of basic distraction tactics to pull the Grezma guards somewhere else.’

‘Basic.’ Namjoon turns briefly and another chain of moon-rocks detonate in the far distance.

‘Yes.’

They stare at each other contemplatively. Well it’s contemplative on Namjoon’s half; he has no idea what Yoongi is thinking. Then as abruptly as he had appeared, Yoongi turns and walks out.
‘Yoongi!’ Namjoon hisses after the Human.

‘What?’

‘What are you doing?!’

‘Getting the master-key.’

‘…you should have said so!’

‘I did.’

Namjoon doesn’t know what to say to that.

‘Oh. You wanted me to say goodbye.’ Yoongi pauses.

‘No-‘

‘I’ll catch you later Cap,’ Yoongi mimics Sk’jin’s pose, saluting him in mockery before turning heel and walking away.

Namjoon doesn’t know if he feels more irritated at Sk’jin for being a bad influence, or exasperated at Yoongi for picking up said bad habits.

‘Hey neighbour! Was that your friend?’

Namjoon ignores the question from his left and retreats into his cell.

‘Hello?’

If Yoongi is indeed successful in basically overtaking the Grezma operating system, then they were scot-free. They would have to get their ship to a decent enough place to launch them out, and they could leave this mess behind and just hope that they don’t get caught.

‘Hellooooooooooooooooooo?’

And for that they would probably have to “take care” of the governors who controlled Grezma and Namjoon has no doubt in his mind that Yoongi was more than capable of doing that.

‘Aaaaaaaaare youuuuuuuuuuu theeeeeeegghhhheeeeee?’

Namjoon can’t even hear himself think anymore.

‘Oh come on, don’t leave me hanging here- I’m sad and lonely- come on, talk to meeeeeeefffffffieee!’

Namjoon bristles with irritation and barks out, ‘What?’.

‘Finally!’ the voice turns from sorrowful and low to gleeful and pitched immediately. ‘What’s your name?’

Namjoon sighs heavily. This Being probably overheard his conversation with Yoongi though they were being quiet and it was generally quite noisy what with all the shouting and cheering going around.

‘Namjoon.’
‘Nice! Hi Namjoon!’

A hand waves awkwardly at Namjoon from around the wall separating their cells.

‘Yeah hi.’

Namjoon doesn’t bother waving.

‘You didn’t wave!’

Alarmed, Namjoon looks over at the hand that was now limply extending out towards him.

Tentatively, and questioning himself and his sanity, Namjoon waves.

‘Yay!’ the hand waves energetically.

‘It’s kinda awkward talking like this, so I’m gonna come over all right?’ the voice asks.

Namjoon rolls his eyes.

‘Yeah sure come over-’

There’s a flash of green light, a triangle forming on the wall in bright green before a triangle shaped hole replaces the wall and a Being stands there, bright grin on his face.

‘Hi!’ he waves a glowing green hand, like this was all normal.

‘What the fuck-’

‘So,’ the Being approaches him rapidly and Namjoon backtracks out of instinct, unsure how to react to this strange Being who is smiling a tad bit too much to his liking. He looked nothing like how his voice sounded like. He’s much too young, much too smiley, and entirely too pleased to be there. Namjoon had somehow envisioned a slight, wizened Being with long hair and crooked teeth, a permanently mad look to his eyes. But this Being in front of him radiates energy, strength, and a sort of joyful bounce to his steps. He’s entirely anthropomorphic save for the copper lines that extend from the corner of his eyes to his hairline. His eyes are glowing green, the same shade as the wall, and his hair has green strands weaving in and out of the overall brown. His skin is sun-kissed and freckled at the high points of his face, and Namjoon doesn’t know if he’s seeing things (he’s still working on the believing aspect of what he’s currently witnessing) but the Being’s skin seemed to faintly patterned over with the same copper colour edging from his eyes. He’s quite tall, though shorter than Namjoon, and had a slimmer narrower built as well.

‘How the fuck did you do that?!’ Namjoon gasps, blinking rapidly and wondering if his eyes were tricking him.

‘So- you’re planning on getting out of here right?’ the Being asks, ignoring Namjoon’s clearly defensive stance.

‘Uh- yes-?’ Namjoon manages to get out, unsure of what he was even saying because none of this made sense.

‘Great! So do I! Let’s help each other out! I’m guessing you have a ship?’ the Being asks again, crouching down next to Namjoon, peering at him with great interest before saying in a low voice, ‘Woah, Kutsogleran…”

He’s suddenly too close, almost nose to nose and Namjoon would have broken out into a defensive strike but there’s something about this Being that unhinges him deeply. A formidable power lurks around this Being and Namjoon is not one to poke a monster with a stick. With this proximity, Namjoon is able to really look into this Being’s eyes. They’re a dark green, ringed twice with copper and a strange depth to the darkness of his iris, like an entire universe lay behind his eyes.

‘Um yes-‘

‘But what’s this?’ the Being raises one eyebrow quizzically before he giggles and it’s probably the creepiest thing Namjoon has heard.

‘You have something in you-‘ he says and there’s a flash of light followed by a surge of pain that goes away as quickly as it comes and Namjoon is winded, too shocked to move.

‘There! Done! I don’t think it was important anyways.’

‘What-?’ Namjoon manages to wheeze out, his body doesn’t feel any different. He feels no surge of weakness or anything. There’s no change.

‘All right time is ticking!’ he bounces straight up again. ‘Let’s do this!’

He raises his hands and the air around them is green again and the bars simply vanish, leaving behind a gaping triangular hole. The Being turns around to look down at Namjoon.

‘What are you waiting for? Let’s go!’

It’s music. Yoongi is sure of it.
At least that’s what his mind tells him. If he thinks back enough, he might be able to name it and where it came from.

He can hear it all the better after the alarm that had rung loud and sharp from within the ship had stopped.

It was beautiful and tinged with sadness. Simply an old echo of the life that had once created its melodies and harmonies.

Yoongi stores this information into the depths of his mind.

It felt precious and pure.

He watches as the crew members make their goodbyes. He stands at a safe distance, close enough to see, but not enough to hear. Something inside Yoongi tells him he should give them privacy in this moment.

The Engineer is there too. The “digitized-soul”.

It’s only him and the Heladian now and he can’t seem to move away.

They’re speaking too quietly, their movements too small, their actions too loud.

Yoongi feels strange as he watches the ship take off and smoothly exit the Yaaig’Ra Ari Mothership.

The remaining members had moved away from the engines and the turbines. They now stood no more than 5 meters from where Yoongi sat.

‘What if they don’t come back?’ The Heladian asks out loud. His voice reminds Yoongi of empty and hollow caves that once shone brightly with crystals and ice.

‘They will,’ the Cahyan replies, voice quivering.

‘They have to.’
‘Hrik’thak Union. From the Baal System.’

‘The Shnezur-ghur-Shnezur United Front, from the Neina System.’

‘Oh- that’s a good one. Okay, Latise Clan, from the Ni’Ofln System.’

‘I’ve never been, but I knew someone who went there- are the planets really all that severe?’

‘You have no idea- I never bolted so fast in my life.’

‘Yeah, gonna avoid that System then. Okay, how about Qoçu from Quilincar?’

‘This is some severe name-dropping here Hoseokkie, I better up my game too.’ Sk’jin laughs from his cell.

Hoseok and Sk’jin were entertaining each other by naming pirate-clans they’ve either dealt with, or messed up with. They had been at it for nearly 15 minutes now and Hoseok finds that neither of them are running out of names.

‘Okay the Matit’ee Network in I’latri,’ Sk’jin calls out victoriously.

‘Wow- I’latri? Really?’ Hoseok hums in awe and wonder.

‘Unfortunately yes. Nearly died there.’

‘Will you two shut up?!’

Hoseok and Sk’jin glance over at the K’t’y in question with an unimpressed look. There were half a dozen of them, heavily armed and armoured. So heavily armoured you could barely see their faces.

‘What about the Kê Trôm Union?’ Hoseok asks, looking away from the guards.

‘Oh! I haven’t gone there,’ Sk’jin replies, tapping along the side of the bars of his cage.

He looks drained and tired. Despite his unwavering “cheerfulness” (Hoseok prefers to call it unwavering asshole-ness) Sk’jin definitely looks ill and weak. Even the red of his eyes don’t gleam like Hoseok has seen them gleam.

‘I met a few of that clan, but never dealt with them.’ Sk’jin adds.

‘If you two don’t shut up I will come in there-‘
‘-and I will personally decapitate you,’ Sk’jin drawls lazily. ‘Please, by all means, do come in and entertain me.’

There’s a chilling silence that follows. Because Sk’jin (even in his current state of ill-health) was most probably the most beautiful Being to have graced this prison cell but there was no mistaking that predatory gleam in his eyes that held promises of pain. It also didn’t help that there had been bodies littered around them. Though they had only been responsible for one each, the entire visual of it was pretty damning.

‘No? Then you shut up,’ Sk’jin smiles. ‘I’ve never been to Kể Trồm but I have had a few…meetings with their sister-network; the Ngườ’côn Estate. Frankly frightening and I believe a lot more ruthless than their male counterparts I must say.’

‘I’m surprised you made it out alive,’ Hoseok chuckles.

‘Oh, I had to make a lot of deals to get out of there alive,’ Sk’jin chuckles. ‘I had to be rather persuasive.’

Hoseok would rather not hear the details of this persuasion and proceeds to name another pirate-clan he had the pleasure of dealing with.

‘Rähilin Klann?’

‘I killed their pirate-head.’ a new voice says.

‘That’s cool-?!’ Hoseok looks up to find Yoongi standing outside his prison cell, looking nowhere near like he was clearly responsible for the thundering explosive sounds, the bright flashing of light, the chaotic show of Transporters flying about haphazardly, or the occasional screams they heard via the open-channel K’it’y Comm-Devices that were still switched on.

Then the guards around them fall over slowly, one by one.

‘Yoongi you piece of shit-‘ Sk’jin seethes, standing up at once.

‘I know how to get us out.’

‘Yoongi you’re the best-‘ Sk’jin coos delightedly, cheering a little.

‘But Namjoon is missing.’

‘Yoongi what the actual fuck-‘ Sk’jin exclaims, facepalming.

Hoseok looks down at the fallen bodies, wondering how in Spaces Yoongi just did that but there is a time and place for everything and now was not the time or place to question the former GI agent’s ability to kill. Also, to an extent, Hoseok does not want to know. He’s been living inside a relatively small space with this Human for nearly 2 months now and Hoseok has found out under a span of an hour that not only has he essentially poisoned them, but he’s single-handedly capable of overthrowing an entire outpost.

‘What do you mean he’s missing?’ Hoseok asks as Yoongi pulls out a device from his pocket that’s covered in a worrisome amount of blood and taps it to the side of Hoseok’s prison bar. The bars sink into the ground and Hoseok steps out quickly.

‘I cannot track him. He’s disappeared,’ Yoongi explains as he gingerly steps over the fallen bodies, headed for Sk’jin’s cell.
Hoseok picks up a TeorSer, making sure it was fully charged and functional.

‘…is he dead?’ Sk’jin looks alarmed. ‘How the fuck do we even start the ship if he’s dead? Spaces even when he’s dead he’s still annoying.’

So maybe Sk’jin wasn’t speaking out of concern over Namjoon’s whereabouts.

‘No he’s not dead,’ Yoongi replies as he taps the side of the wall next to Sk’jin’s cell. It glows blue briefly before the bars sink down as well. Sk’jin steps out, immediately grabbing a TeorSer for himself as well. Hoseok doesn’t have the time to think about how they’re all armed and off the grid and how this would make an ideal moment to take over the Užkulisai. This does however, make him pause for a moment to regard Yoongi.

The Human agent could have easily left them behind, taking over the mission easily. He could pilot the Užkulisai there was no doubt about it, and he was certainly more than capable of flying off-grid and getting to Bhumi without too much trouble if needed. Why did he come back? Sk’jin is asking Yoongi more questions as the latter weaves around the fallen guards, searching their pockets and bags for something.

‘Namjoon was being held in a larger and more populated prison than this one,’ Yoongi explains as he removes a few of the Comm-Devices. He hands them to Hoseok and Sk’jin before attaching one on his ear and he produces a slim heavily customized screen as well as a familiar looking one.

‘Then he disappeared 26 minutes ago.’

‘Isn’t that Namjoon’s-’ Sk’jin begins before Yoongi is thrusting it into his hands.

‘Yes. Please keep track of the Užkulisai,’ Yoongi says as he taps along the other screen.

‘What are you doing now?’ Sk’jin asks, unsure what to do with the screen in his hands.

‘I am looking for Namjoon through the Grezma surveillance feed.’

‘How did you get access to that??’ Hoseok demands.

‘I found the master-key-‘

‘Wait- what do you mean master-key?’ Hoseok asks.

Yoongi looks up from his screen to level him and Sk’jin with a blank look. Ordinarily, this would be that moment where the Being in question has an exasperated or frustrated expression on their face, clearly put off by the torrent of questions. But Yoongi is extraordinarily blank-faced.

‘After I left this cell hold, I went to the “gibbets” where Namjoon was being held to check on him. I secured your locations, and went to confirm our ship's location. After listening to some conversation, I was informed that I would need a master-key in order to find my way around. None of the guards had a master-key so I went straight up to the Governors Hall. Just as I assumed, the master-key was there. Your not-friend was there as well. I don’t know what story you might have with him, but he did want to behead you so I-‘

‘You beheaded him?!’ Hoseok splutters.

‘No. I thought maybe you might want to do it yourself. I do not know how a Ngfy’widan performs his revenge or if there was any to execute at all so I gagged him and put him inside a cupboard-‘

Sk’jin breaks out into hysterical giggles.
‘-then I broke into the main suite and found the master-key and came back here. I also found our ship in the process. The Užkulisai is docked near the Maintenance Bay to strip it down but I shut down that area.’

‘How did you do that?’ Sk’jin asks, staring down at the Human in shock and respect.

‘The Governors Hall has an operating screen that allowed me to control the entire outpost. I have shut down all outpost Transporter mobility save for the one outside and locked all magnetic rifts so the lifts cannot be used.’ Yoongi reells off. ‘I then loaded their software onto this, so I can control Grezma through this.’

‘That’s…’ Sk’jin trails off, ‘…you did that…in under an hour…’

‘We don’t have time. The Orvan Forces will arrive here in an hour.’ Yoongi holds up the screen, showing an message recently received from the Orvan Forces.

‘But what about Namjoon?’ Sk’jin asks again. ‘How did you lose his isotropic reading?’

‘I don’t know.’

Hoseok notes that this is the most expression he’s seen on Yoongi’s face.

There’s the slightest furrow between his brows, as he walks towards the exit. A small Transporter is waiting for them, half inside the shelf that was protected by the Atmoshield and half outside.

‘So what do we do now?’ Sk’jin asks, looking excited as he gets inside the cozy 6-seater Transporter.

‘We find Namjoon,’ Yoongi says simply as he slides into the pilot’s chair, handing Sk’jin the other screen. ‘Then we get out of here.’

‘But our records are here-‘ Hoseok argues. They were definitely going to get a random called over all of their heads and their ship, there was no doubt about that.

‘I’ve removed our record from their archive,’ Yoongi replies quietly as the Transporter hums to life and they swiftly take flight. Yoongi expertly navigates them through the shifting moon-rocks, as though he’d been doing it for years.

‘Yoongi didn’t you say that the Orvan Forces would be headed here in an hour?’ Sk’jin asks lightly out of nowhere, the light from the screens in his hands illuminating him in a pale blue light.

‘Yes.’

‘And you’ve basically shut down all communications going in and out of Grezma.’

Hoseok has a bad feeling about this.

‘Yes.’

‘So there was no information about what appears to be a slaver-ship making dock at Grezma?’

‘What?!’ Hoseok looks past where Sk’jin is sitting, staring in disbelief as a massive ship looms over the edge of the moon-rocks. It was most definitely a slaver-ship and clearly a powerful one. And more than that, this was a starcraft clearly designed by and for the Venture Unit. Meaning this outpost was more than just an outpost. What had Keghtsa gotten mixed into’
‘Who are they?!’ Hoseok asks into the air.

‘I don’t know but it seems like they’re sending their own fleet to check.’ Sk’jin looks over at Hoseok, a hard look in his eyes. ‘We both know that’s no ordinary slaver-ship,- we need to get out of here right now!’ Sk’jin secures himself in. ‘Yoongi, you need to get us to our ship and we need to get out now.’

‘We need to get Namjoon or we can’t start the ship,’ Hoseok frowns at Sk’jin.

‘We can- we have his NaviLet- but we can’t allow that to catch us.’ Sk’jin nods towards the twinkling lights. ‘This is and has to be the Isbahaysiga Alliance. The Orvan Forces clearly contacted them. If we get caught, it’s not just us. Our mission, our cargo- think about what they’ll do if they get their hands on our cargo! Think about what will happen if they find out why we’re here.’

The Isbahaysiga Alliance was technically eradicated but not even a few months into their mission, echoes of its reanimated corpse seems to trail after them everywhere they went. There was something strange about all of this. Hoseok doesn’t know why, and he can’t explain how, but clearly there was something, some information, some additional aspect of their mission that was entirely hidden from them.

Because their mission was one that closely corresponded with the Isbahaysiga Alliance, in one way or another. And if they find out their mission, and who they’re working for, then this was going to end horribly for them.

‘What about Namjoon?’

‘He’ll manage if he’s smart enough. They’ll most probably take him along- if I’m not mistaken then one of the reason why they’re here is most likely because they have “cargo” here. This outpost has too many prison cells to make sense,’ Sk’jin shake his head. ‘We’ll get Namjoon out, but right now we need to leave immediately.’

‘Understood,’ Yoongi says quietly, hearing the obvious logic in Sk’jin’s plan.

‘We need to find out who they are, and where they’re headed, then we can decide what exactly we have to do.’ Sk’jin’s expression changes entirely. He looks serious and contemplative, turned in his seat to watch the distant dark grey ship with apprehension reflected in his eyes.

But Hoseok can’t help but feel fearful for the Kutsogleran Captain. He would have no idea what was happening to them. And now that they couldn’t track him anymore, it would make everything all the more difficult.

‘He’ll be fine.’ Yoongi says out of nowhere as they take cover, weaving through thickly clustered moon-rocks. Yoongi has his eyes fixed on a large layered slab up ahead. Hoseok can just about make out their ship.

‘He’s faced worse.’
‘I hope you know what you are doing.’ K’mara says to the Yisheng.

‘And I hope you know what you are doing too.’ The Yisheng replies.

K’mara does not reply to this and instead raises her Comm-Device to her mouth and states clearly without any remorse or regret or hesitation in her voice.

‘Destroy it.’

It’s strange.

This wasn’t the first time Yoongi has watched the destruction of a planet.

Light in clear arcs spread over the screen, disrupting the holographic projection. It’s beautiful in a way that shouldn’t be beautiful. A cruel and sad beauty that doesn’t make sense to Yoongi.

The Yisheng’s eyes are closed, unable to watch.

The holographic projection shuts down as the light grows too bright. K’mara is unmoving and she doesn’t look away from the Yisheng who finally opens his eyes

‘I’m doing what I have to do.’

Did knowing what you were supposed to do in any way affect what you were supposed to do? What you had to do?

Yoongi watches them quietly, unmoving from behind the pillar.

The light from the broken remains of the planet burns into his mind.
‘HEY! GET US OUT OF HERE TOO!’

‘HEY KID- LOOK KID I’LL GIVE YOU A SHIT TON OF UNITS, JUST GET ME OUT OF HERE YEA?’

‘PLEASE GET US OUT OF HERE I BEG YOU.-’

Namjoon just follows the strange Being in front of him who skips down the long rows with ease, ignoring the pleading cries and extending hands merrily.

‘So- how did you end up here?’ he asks, not looking back as he merrily weaves in and out of the rows.

‘I’m still not entirely sure.’

‘But you have a ship right? Like you’re the captain?’

‘Yes?’

‘Cool- and what about your friend? What does he do?’

‘Uh- he’s the weapon’s specialist.’
‘Really? Nice!’ the Being stops in front of a heavy door. ‘Hey, do you mind if we make a quick detour?’

‘What—’

The Being raises his hands and places them on the door. There’s that same bright green light and suddenly the door isn’t there anymore, and instead a triangular hole is there. There’s no melting, no cutting, no shaving, no signs of force or energy used against the thick metal doors. The entire front slab is missing as though it had simply never been there in the first place. Bolts and screws are cleanly halved, no signs of cutting, no sawing, nothing. It just simply didn’t exist anymore.

The Being steps inside the dark opening, glowing faintly green.

‘Let’s go!’ he reaches forward and pulls Namjoon in.

Namjoon briefly wonders what’s wrong with himself, why he was allowing some random Being to pull him about. Then he realizes it.

He was afraid.

They’re on some stairs that go downwards. Honestly Namjoon didn’t think that they would excavate into the moon-rock to create dungeon like spaces.

‘I think they’re here somewhere,’ the Being mumbles looking like he had difficulty seeing before he makes a small sound of exclamation and rings of pure green energy pulse out of him, forming seemingly solid blocks of light in green.

‘That’s better- green’s all right for you?’ he turns to ask Namjoon, eyes glowing copper.

‘I—’

There’s a plaintive cry from below the stairs and Namjoon then realizes what he’s looking into.

A dungeon this most certainly was. Cramped cages of thick metal bars cropped up everywhere, forcing Beings to stand pressed up against each other without the possibility of rest or the possibility to stand straight. It was dark and damp and cold and the crying sound resembles a gasping and dying groan, one that sounds too familiar to Namjoon.

The Being lets go of Namjoon’s wrist and the rings around him expand wider outwards, illuminating the low ceiled dungeon. It wasn’t a large place but Namjoon can count at least 50 separate Beings of all age, gender, species, and race gathered in here.

‘Hey,’ the Being says softly, carefully walking up towards one of the cages.

‘Do you remember me? You remember me right?’ he asks softly.

What was going on?

‘I’m going to help you. I’m going to help all of you, all right? Just hang in there, you’re going to be safe soon, all right?’ the Being’s voice is gentle and soft.

He steps away, arms extending outwards until the rings of light reached the very end of the dungeon. Then in one collective sweep, everyone inside the dungeon seemingly loses consciousness.

Namjoon immediately backs out, scrambling up the stairs.
Who was that? What was he doing?

Never in all of Namjoon’s years alive has he witnessed such a display of “power”. He’s so caught up in his thoughts that he nearly doesn’t see the K’it’y guard that runs in, eyes wide as he regards the triangular entrance over the heavy metal doors. Namjoon easily knocks him out, a single swinging punch to his jaw, sending him crashing downwards. Namjoon arms himself with his TeorSer and just in time too, because a shot is fired at him and Namjoon ducks back inside the doorway only to come face to face with the stranger Being.

‘Hey-’

‘No!’ Namjoon says fiercely. ‘I don’t know what your deal is. But I don’t want anything to do with you or this fucked up shit you have going on there-’

‘Oh look! They’re here!’

Namjoon doesn’t want to look away but he does. Staring out of the triangular opening and into the Atmoshield covered gateway ahead, Namjoon watches as a large starcraft, clearly of Venture Unit make, and clearly a slaver-ship, pulling in slowly into Grezma’s orbital border.

His bones feel like they’re on fire, his wrists burn and his skin crawls with hatred.

‘Shhh, it’s okay.’

A soft voice says next to him. Somehow, he’s gently patting Namjoon on the head in a comforting manner. Namjoon jerks away, colliding painfully with the wall behind him.

‘I’m sorry you had to see this again- I bet you thought they were all gone right?’ the Being says, eyes wide and filled with sorrow.

‘What are you talking about-‘

‘The slaver-ships. They’re still here, just creeping along poor systems, too far from the GLA’s protection.’ He says softly. ‘Like them.’

He points down the stairs.

‘Robbed away from their planet.’

Namjoon grits his teeth. He couldn’t get sucked into this. He can’t. He was on a mission, and he had to fulfill it. He had to complete it.

There’s a burst of fire over their heads and Namjoon ducks even lower, quickly followed by the Being next to him. Aiming and firing quickly, Namjoon makes his target and hears a cry of pain.

‘Someone’s broken into the keep! Bring the guards here! At least hold it until they get here!’

Namjoon grimaces.

He was going to have to escape quickly.

‘Hey Namjoon?’

‘Spaces, what?’

‘Do you need help?’
Namjoon huffs irritably, firing another shot.

‘No really, I can totally help,’ the Being next to him grins, his hands glowing green.

‘No I got this.’ Namjoon grunts back.

‘You don’t “got this”,’ he intones, mimicking Namjoon’s tone. ‘They’re going to bring reinforcement and your TeorSer isn’t enough to hold them back.’

Namjoon huffs, closing his eyes.

‘So what do you suggest we do?’ he asks the stranger in front of him.

‘Nothing. We wait until they come arrest us, we surrender, and we get taken into their main ship,’ the Being points a glowing finger towards the looming starcraft. ‘Then we burst out of there, freeing all of the captured Beings, and we return them to safe Docks, and give them new lives to live!’

He does a little cheer.

‘Are you insane?’ Namjoon asks. And he asks this very seriously.

‘Would an insane person respond with a “yes” or a “no”?’

Namjoon wipes at his face. He’s had the worst possible luck in the past few months. This was the crowning glory.

Where even was Yoongi? Didn’t he say he would be coming back? And that Namjoon shouldn’t do anything stupid? Spaces, everything about this was stupid.

There’s a lot of noise, yelling and shouting and alarms ringing.

The Being next to him cups his hands over his ears and cocks one eyebrow up, as though listening intently.

‘Ah, the reinforcement is here. We’re really outnumbered here.’ he says with a shrug and a smile.

Namjoon did not have time for this. He did not have the time, the mental capacity, or the general wherewithal to process any of this.

‘Look- you can continue on your quest to free those Beings but I have things to do, places to be,’ Namjoon growls out, shouldering the TeorSer properly and aiming properly. There were gas lines that fed oxygen into the prisons, probably close to the doors where there control panels would be located. If Namjoon can aim at one of those and create a diversion, then he could simply escape the Atmoshield and find the closest Transporter which no doubt should be close-by and fully operational judging by the amount of guards pouring in at this given moment. Then he would have to of course find the others and get back to the ship.

‘So do I,’ the Being states, with a firm nod of his head. ‘So I’m sorry for having to do this.’

Namjoon should have expected this.

Green light flashes around him and he expects pain but there’s nothing. In fact Namjoon wonders if he’s just imagining things until he realizes he can’t move. He can’t even open his mouth. Is this really happening to me, what the actual fuck.
The Being stands up, brushing his knees.

‘I’ve been following them for a while now you see,’ he explains as Namjoon slowly lifts into the air. His eyes can still move and notices with horror as glowing green lengths of rope-like light binds him down and lifts him, following the Being back down the stairs. ‘And I have my heart set on freeing them.’

He looks back up at Namjoon, eyes wide with earnestness and sincerity.

‘I was given a chance, an opportunity.’ He says quietly, looking down with a sad smile. ‘And I wasn’t able to give back what I was given. So I want to make sure that I can extend that chance, that opportunity, and help those who can’t help themselves.’

Namjoon thinks this is all very good for this Being. Hooray for spreading hope and all that. But Namjoon cannot spare any of that right now.

‘But don’t worry Namjoon, you won’t be left behind and I’ll make sure you that you’re safe!’ the Being smiles gleefully again, eyes glowing a little. ‘I know for a fact that your crew will come back for you. Your friend won’t leave you. I can guarantee it!’

Namjoon rolls his eyes. Do you even know my crew? He wants to ask.

‘Oh right! I realized I haven’t introduced myself!’ the Being poses, fingers held up in a ‘v’ as thudding footsteps can be heard running down the stairs into the dungeon.

‘Call me Taeh’yung!’

‘They found out.’

‘About?’

‘Zhoumi and his involvement.’

‘Do you think you can find Zhoumi after this?’ K’mara doesn’t look up from her screen.
‘I don’t think he ever left Šerdesas in the first place.’

‘That is what I believe too. Do they plan on leaving?’

‘They are already headed there.’

‘Is the Yisheng there as well?’

‘He is.’

‘Good. Keep them all in one place.’

‘Understood.’

K’mara looks up from her screen.

‘Good luck, Yoongi.’

Yoongi pauses, mulling the words over in his mind. He catches sight of a large vase filled with large pale lavender flowers. Yoongi can smell their perfume from here.

‘Admiral.’

‘Yes?’

‘How many flowers do you see in that vase?’
AYO GUESS WHO IS FINALLY HERE.
Since I’m a broke ass student and I live off of kind and thoughtful people, I have been able to watch Bon Voyage 2 and can I just. Say. Something. Really. Quickly. And.
That’s.
EVERYTHING ABOUT THIS IS SO CUTE. I LOVE FAMILIES, I LOVE THEIR BOND, I LOVE HOW COMFORTABLE AND EASY THEY ARE WITH EACH OTHER THEY’RE JUST SO. HUGS THEM ALL VIOLENTLY
AND WE HAVE TO TALK ABOUT YOONMIN
I say we have to talk about Yoonmin but I don’t know what to say I’m at a loss I’m just waiting for inspired fanfics to drop like please, this is great material I beg of you.
AND ALSO KIM JONGDAE WITH BLOND HAIR AND FAKE FRECKLES IS KILLING ME I AM CURRENTLY DEAD
And SM why would you do this to Jongin my precious son, and to Baekhyun, my other son who honestly does sort of pull off the mullet BUT CAN WE NOT PLEASE BYE
It’s raining in Šerdesas and it has been for the past week. But Yoongi has been here for 3 days now, tailing after the crew of the Stravechi Nava without pause or break, no matter the weather. The Anningan Yisheng and the Cahyan were at the Yisheng Headquarters, the Heladian was keeping watch at the Trade Sector outside of Zhoumi’s office, and the Long-Huon GIU Lieutenant was sitting at a spot staring straight into Zhoumi’s apartment windows. If the Long-Huon shifted his gaze to the right, he would find Yoongi looking back out at him from the windows but he doesn’t.

‘Guys I’m so bored – someone tell me a story.’

It’s the Cahyan. Yoongi has learnt to differentiate their voices, learn the lilts and accents of their speech and dialect. The Cahyan had been closely linked to the Isbahaysiga Alliance. Whether or not the Cahyan knew what he had been doing was a different story altogether. But Yoongi now knows of his involvement and wonders if the Being would have chosen to do what he had done, if he had been aware of all the outcomes involved.

Yoongi has also hacked into their Comm-Devices, allowing him to listen in on their conversation. It had been difficult to do so. All four Beings were incredibly difficult to waylay or find an opening to gain access to their Comm-Devices. But inside the ship that carried them from the Mothership all the way here, Yoongi found the opportunity to temporarily nick the Cahyan’s Comm-Device when he had faked his own capture. The guards of the ship had removed all forms of communication device on the Cahyan and so Yoongi slipped into the prison-cell storage facility and had managed to download their specific frequency channel. It was an independent and heavily customized channel that was both impressive and a little daunting. The ship clearly had a lot of individuals who were far more capable than their appearances suggested.

‘How are you feeling Baekhyun?’

This was the Heladian- the Being K’mara had told him to keep an eye on.

There was nothing remotely outstanding about the Technician at first glance, but a closer study of his files lead Yoongi down another path. He was a survivor- the only survivor- of a space-storm.
And judging by what he had seen, this was the Being who held the most importance to the digitized-soul aboard the Stravechi Nava.

Yoongi had stood inside that Hangar Bay in the Mothership, watching the two walk around the raised ramps, looking over the slow demolition of the Hive.

How did one Being hold so much value for another? What did they see in each other, what did they feel in each other, what could they perceive beyond what could be seen within each other? Because Yoongi could feel an emptiness around the Heladian—a shell hollowed out and dormant near him, void of the Being whose value and enormity rendered the Heladian whole and Alive. Yoongi could see this, but didn’t understand it.

‘It’s kinda really cool here y’know?’ The Cahyan replies, sounding sleepy. ‘So relaxing – maybe a bit too relaxing.’

There’s slight chuckle, ‘Only you would find that to be a negative thing.’

And then there was the Long-Huon. Yoongi can see some small movement coming from the nearly entirely hidden form of the Lieutenant. Though he was trusted as a ranking individual within K’mara’s commanding force, Yoongi knew K’mara didn’t trust him all together. And the Long-Huon knew this as well. But more than anything, the thing that stood out from this Long-
Huon was the shadow that seemed to cling on to him.

Yoongi doesn’t understand this. It’s never mentioned nor is it ever addressed. K’mara obviously couldn’t see it. No one could. But Yoongi could. And he sees how the Long-Huon speaks to it time and time again. There was a strange resonance surround this shadow. In the correct angle or lighting, Yoongi can just about make out red-neon eyes.

‘Not negative. I know this is good for me…but at the same time I wish I were there with you guys.
Any luck finding Zhoumi?’

‘Nothing. Isn’t Yixing there? You could keep him company?’

‘Yixing suddenly went full on Yisheng-mode and practically ran away mumbling something under his breath while we were meditating. He said he was free the entire day and we would go around the Headquarters but now I don’t know where he is and I don’t know if I’m allowed to eat at the Service Hall – aren’t Yishengs all health-freaks? Would they stop me from eating again? I need to eat you know? But what if they say I’m fat? I’m not fat! I have two hearts and I need to heal!’

Yoongi notices how Zitao is silently arguing with the shadow next to him, and Yoongi concentrates even more but finds that he can’t see the form, rather he senses the form.

‘I’ve had enough – I’ll just go and check myself.’ Zitao is sitting up from his crouching position.
‘How are we going to find out more information about Zhoumi if we can’t even find him?’

‘I still think we should track him without him knowing we’re here. I know you want to go and punch him, I mean I know I do but we need to think past our immediate anger.’

The shadow next to the Long-Huon moves a little aggressively and the Long-Huon waves a hand as he says, ‘So what do we do now?’

‘Well, is there any activity from Zhoumi’s apartment?’

Yoongi notices how the Long-Huon’s eyes rove over the apartment, watching every window properly. He had entered the apartment yesterday, leaving very few traces of himself behind.
Yoongi himself had stayed out though he could have stayed hidden inside. But the shadow that clung to the Long-Huon had made him reconsider. There was something disconcerting about it so Yoongi had stayed in the next apartment. Yoongi made sure to clean up after the Long-Huon in case any more of the GI agents came back snooping.

‘Nothing. There are no lights, none of the main systems running to his apartment switched on. Didn’t da’ge mention that he’s never been able to contact Zhoumi after they first received their trade mission?’

‘Not even once.’

Zhoumi had gone missing sometime after that. Had he purposefully put off communication with the Stravechi Nava?

‘Where can we find information regarding his whereabouts? Isn’t there some form of directory we could potentially hack into?’

It wouldn’t be possible.

‘It’s too risky. Hacking into the GIU, which is one large ship essentially, is something. But this is the GLA directory we’re talking about – not even J-D would attempt to try it.’

‘You know I’m pretty good at sweet-talking my way into getting information.’

‘No Baekhyun, no one is going to dress as females and try to get information from GLA officers.’

There’s a choking sound and Yoongi notices how the Long-Huon seems to be coughing, his shoulders shaking. The shadow flits about him as though agitated.

‘I’m-I’m sorry what!?’

‘It’s a long story but making it short and to the point, I needed information, and getting two Beings into the plan would work out with better chances so I pulled Junmyeon in and made him wear a dress and heels and a wig and 2 hours later we got what we needed and we left. The end.’

Laughter was a beautiful and odd sound.

‘D-do you have pictures!?’

‘I think J-D could pull some out yes.’

They share laughter together, a lightness building around the Long-Huon as he laughs uncontrollably. The Cahyan is exuberantly explaining something with great detail. A story he had called it. A memory. Not only of one Beings. But shared and eternal between them.

They existed in each other. Their lives were merged with each other’s, creating an endless cycle of possibilities of their actions, of their words. Creating wavelengths of movement across the stars.

But Yoongi had no memory. He had no memory that converged and met with another. He was not a memory.

What was he?

‘Jongdae no-!’

Yoongi is startled at himself for not paying attention, for not listening.
‘Min-Seok!? Are you all right!? What’s going on!?’

There’s shaking breaths, a panic that Yoongi can feel even though it’s not his own. This was his memory, his present, inter-lapping with Yoongi’s own.

‘Minnie!? Are you all right what’s wrong—’

‘Jo-Jongdae. Something’s wrong – something’s wrong!’

Yoongi steps away from the wall where he’d been watching the Long-Huon Lieutenant, making note of where the Heladian was to track him and guard him.

‘Shit I just saw Zhoumi!’

Yoongi freezes.

‘What!?’

‘He was— shit, he was on a medical bed, he’s—’ There are footsteps, running and skidding. Added shaky breaths to the already pained gasps that fill the sound channel.

‘He’s in a medical bed, they’re pulling him into one of the recuperation rooms!? I don’t know what’s going on I can’t see beyond this anymore—’

‘Where are you? What can you see? Was he a patient all along!?’

Yoongi catches sight of the Long-Huon, abandoning any pretense of .

‘I don’t know – I’m at the garden and you can like, look down into some of the hallways but— shit!’ Baekhyun hisses. ‘I’m gonna go downstairs- but Min-Seok—!’

‘I’m fine, I’m fine – I need to—.’

Yoongi’s entire body feels electrocuted. Zhoumi was in the Yisheng Headquarters? This entire time? What did it mean? Didn’t he say he was friends with the Yishengs?

‘Go check in with Baekhyun Zitao. Baekhyun don’t get caught – I just. Track Zhoumi. I need to—’

‘Min-Seok what is going on!?’

‘Something’s happened – inside the Nava – we have to get to them. Baekhyun stay on Zhoumi – just- just leave this to me.’

Yoongi is torn. Who does he follow?

‘I’m coming to you right now Baek – it will take some time but I’ll be there as soon as I can. Did he look injured? Was he unconscious what’s happening?’

Yoongi makes up his mind quickly. He darts out of Zhoumi’s apartment, rushing towards the elevator.

‘I can’t tell exactly- I’m just—shit—.’

‘Baekhyun!?’

Yoongi sinks downwards, uncaring that he’s being caught on the surveillance feed.
I’m fine – I just collided with some plants. They’ve taken Zhoumi into a lift – I can’t go in – I’m going to find Yixing – he should know what’s happening!’

There’s a distinct clicking sound. The Cahyan had clearly gone offline.

‘I’m on my way- Min-Seok, what’s going on?’

‘I can’t connect with the Nava- something’s gone wrong-‘

How did the Heladian know about their ship? How was he connected? Yoongi knows that they stopped all communications so that they could keep their location a complete secret.

‘What do you mean something’s gone wrong – what happened?’

‘I- I saw something – I saw what Jongdae was seeing – something’s happened with Lu Han I think I’m not sure-’

The Android? Yoongi is completely confused.

He sprints past a crowd in front of the elevator, eliciting a few gasps from the surrounding Beings who were waiting for the elevator. Yoongi is past caring.

‘You saw something!? What do you mean you saw something-‘

‘I need to connect to the Nava now- make sure you know what’s happening with Zhoumi and meet up with Baekhyun as soon as possible.’

‘Min-Seok what are you going to do!? Where are you going-!?’

Was the Heladian going to break their communication silence? What was wrong with the digitized-soul? Yoongi finds his parked Drift-08 and spots the Long-Huon zooming past in blasting speed before spearing off into the polarized highways. The Drift-08 hums to life and the camouflage setting installs itself immediately, rendering Yoongi nearly entirely invisible and he zooms after the Long-Huon.

At this speed, the shadow behind the GIU Lieutenant seems to somehow seem more visible and Yoongi can see neon-red eyes, the outline of horns, and a crooked body echoing out of the Long-Huon’s form.

‘I’m going to sleep.’
‘Are you comfortable?’

Namjoon glares at Taeh’yung.

He was not comfortable. He was pressed up into a tight cage that was too short for his lengthy height, making him crouch uncomfortably. There were unconscious bleeding Beings pressed up against him and this Taeh’yung or whatever, was also pressed up against him, looking incredibly happy in the process. He’s leaning against Namjoon, practically roping his limbs around him like some strange creature, resting his head on his shoulder in a manner that was far too affectionate for someone who has known him for literally 15 minutes.

By the time the K’it’y had arrived, Namjoon had no choice but to entirely give up and allow himself to be restrained, cuffed, and then thrown into a cage already bursting with other Beings. They were now floating along on a gravity-lift, being pulled in and attached to another larger lift installed with an Atmoshield. Namjoon looks around as best as he could. He saw no signs of pale pink hair anywhere so Sk’jin wasn’t here, that probably (and hopefully) meant that the others evaded capture. But that also meant they were now more or less freed from the ties of their mission. Without a Captain to lead the mission, would the others follow up on it? As Captain, Namjoon was solely in charge of the Užkulisai, without his saying or his command, Lisai won’t start up the ship. But Yoongi had his NaviLet. Meaning they could use that to start up the ship and escape.

Honestly, Namjoon wouldn’t hold it against them if they planned on escaping and leaving him here to the mercies of these slavers. This was a sticky situation to be in and too much to think about and too much to plan.

‘We’ll be fine soon,’ Taeh’yung says, his hair poking into Namjoon’s under-jaw in an annoying way. ‘Your friends will come and we can set everyone free and destroy the ship and leave!’

‘And just how do you plan on doing that?’ Namjoon asks irritably.

‘Oh- not me!’ Taeh’yung beams up at Namjoon, squeezing him even tighter. Namjoon feels something damp feeling growing on his back as someone behind him groans in a pained way and he just prays it’s only blood and not something else.

‘What?’

‘Well- to be honest I don’t have much of a plan- I never normally I do- I just try my best and things luckily do work out,’ Taeh’yung says with a thoughtful nod. ‘But most of the time, I get help.’

‘Wait- so you’re saying you don’t have a plan, but you expect to free all these Beings, and blow up the ship?’ Namjoon asks incredulously. ‘How is any of this even timed? How are you going to set these Beings free? How do you plan on blowing up the ship without harming everyone on board?’

‘That’s a good question,’ Taeh’yung nods seriously. ‘I’ll think about it. Or we plan together! But wait! We have the perfect wild card for this!’

‘Wild card? What-,’ Namjoon stops himself. ‘Spaces, it’s like talking to a child.’

‘Yeap,’ Taeh’yung grins. ‘Your friend. He’s the wild card.’

‘Look- I don’t feel like explaining the relationship, or lack of it, that I have with my “friend” so I’ll just tell you right now you shouldn’t expect anything from him.’ Namjoon retorts, feeling frustration building up in him.
‘Oh?’

Taeh’yung blinks up at him in surprise, eyebrows going up as he looks away for a while.

‘But the last time I met him he was super helpful and dedicated.’

The gravity of Taeh’yung’s words hits Namjoon a little slowly.

‘Wait- wait a minute,’ Namjoon looks down at Taeh’yung unsure how to phrase his words. ‘You know Yoongi?’

‘Is that what his name is?’ Taeh’yung looks happy. ‘I’m happy he has a name! And friends!’

Namjoon’s mouth opens and closes a few times,

‘Are we talking about the same Being?’ Namjoon tries, hoping that he’s wrong. Actually he doesn’t know why he’s hoping he’s wrong- he doesn’t even know what he’s hoping for. Ever since the start of this mission, Namjoon’s mind has never been at rest and right now everything was getting increasingly confusing and the appearance of this Being is not helping him clear things up either.

‘Um- yeah? I mean, there can’t be a lot of Human GI agents right?’ Taeh’yung quirks his head to the side.

Taeh’yung really was talking about Yoongi. How did this even happen? How does this Being know anything about the GI? How did he know Yoongi was Human?

‘How do know Yoongi?’ Namjoon asks, feeling a little anticlimactic with his questions.

‘I mean I don’t know him- I just know of him, you know?’ Taeh’yung replies, jolting forwards a little more and he promptly makes himself more comfortable as he leans more into Namjoon and adds a ‘you’re really comfy to lean against’ as well.

‘No, I don’t know,’ Namjoon splutters. ‘Explain!’

‘I first met- well, saw him in Šerdesas four years ago! He was present in a meeting of sorts in the Yisheng Headquarters,’ Taeh’yung narrates, making himself comfortable against Namjoon who struggles a little as he literally carries Taeh’yung now. ‘He was with a few of my friends for a while- well sort of “with”- more like just sneaking around and making sure they were okay.’

Namjoon understands nothing. Taeh’yung was there during the first ever Court hearing regarding the Gaia Case?

‘Your friends?’

‘Yeah!’ Taeh’yung beams brightly before he looks sad again. ‘But I had to say goodbye to two of them,- there was nothing I could do.’

‘Um-’ Namjoon finds himself filled with anticipation as he carefully asks, ‘Were your friends perhaps…involved with the uh-’

‘Akramanese? Yeap! They were being chased around, and it was terrible- then they freed me from Teronko’ng to help them out and heal a few of them. I was so happy! I hadn’t been freed in a while. So after that I went to Earth to help out my friend.’ Taeh’yung looks sad, his eyes gleaming strangely as though reliving a memory of sorts. ‘He was tired. So tired.’
‘Who?’ is the only question that comes out of Namjoon’s mouth. This Being was in Teronko’ng?!

Who was he?

Taeh’yung beams up again. His expression is so childishly innocent and almost carefree, that Namjoon questions his own ears and wonders if he might have just mistaken Taeh’yung’s words. There was no way he could have been in Teronko’ng. it was just impossible.

Taeh’yung gives him a smile, and for a brief second, Taeh’yung’s face entirely changes, morphing into different faces. But it’s gone so quickly that Namjoon, again, questions himself.

‘The most beautiful soul to have ever existed.’

Namjoon feels winded. Like he’d been punched in the face.

‘So how do you know Yoongi? I’m so happy that I saw him- well I mean, felt him more like. No one feels like Yoongi actually- no wait, that’s a lie. There are a few others who feel like Yoongi, but it doesn’t mean anything anymore now that it’s been sealed.’ Taeh’yung mumbles to himself.

Namjoon feels like he’s going to regret asking but he does anyways.

‘What do you mean he feels different?’

‘Yoongi you mean? Well, he’s from another Time you know? When they’re reborn from a Time that comes from another part of Continuum, they always feel a little bit different.’ Taeh’yung replies as though it’s the most obvious thing.

‘Born from another “time”?’ Namjoon repeats a little hollowly. He’s so taken aback with all of this sudden information from this unknown Being in front of him that he doesn’t even notice they’re being towed away towards the main ship past Grezma’s orbital border.

‘I mean- he’s just like the rest of my babies,’ is Taeh’yung’s extraordinary response. ‘Born in a Time long ago, brought through different dimensions, and reborn into this Continuum. They slept in Dreams for ages and ages.’

Before Namjoon can question this extraordinary “explanation” a few guards come over, leering into the cages aggressively.

‘Shut the fuck up!’ one of them growls. Namjoon notes that the Being’s nose is blotched and discoloured, its shape strangely disproportionate and from the looks of it, recently broken. Good, Namjoon thinks absent mindedly as the K’it’y guard rough-houses a few of the more awake imprisoned Beings, inwardly cheering the Being who punched him.

Taeh’yung’s attention has now shifted to the other Beings they’re cramped with. He’s talking in a low soothing voice, brushing his fingers through matted and dirty hair covered in Spaces knows what.

Who was he?

‘I’m Taeh’yung!’ he replies.

Namjoon belatedly realizes he’s spoken out loud.

‘No- I mean.’ Namjoon pauses. ‘Where are you from?’

‘Ah!’ Taeh’yung suddenly lifts a rather small child from out of nowhere as he disengages himself
Namjoon. Namjoon had no idea a child was even there. The child groans, a mess of fluids pouring out of his mouth onto Taeh’yung’s front but the latter pays it no attention, humming low before he replies.

‘Well, if you want me to get technical then I can,’ Taeh’yung repositions the child, elbowing Namjoon in the process. ‘I’m the fifth generation Zhak’gri from T’sayiti’k. I mean I wasn’t born there. But I guess I sort of am from there? I dunno the entire story- I was sold off by my parents when I was pretty young so I have no actual memory of all of that.’

This was getting too much for Namjoon. The crowded space, the cramped condition, the situation he was in, the catastrophic consequences of what might happen if he doesn’t get out of here, this Being and everything he is saying.

Namjoon knows that for most Beings they wouldn’t understand or even know what Taeh’yung was talking about. And what it meant.

If Taeh’yung was telling the truth, then he was descended from the oldest point of civilization developed and cultured in the Known Universe. T’sayiti’k was a system with only 3 planets in it but it has been pinpointed as the cradle of all life- the genesis of everything. Every species, every Being, every race ever born, could all trace their chemical and biological foundation to this System. It was a known fact that not all species of Beings could survive or be comfortable enough in another Being’s environment or planet due to their own unique chemical and DNA composition. However the T’sayiti’k System housed every possible elemental foundation known to the Universe. T’sayiti’k was used as a basis for all of the scientific facts known to the Universe to this day.

In fact, Raksane Tayi was built based on the T’sayiti’k System and her ideology.

The Zhak’gri were a race of Beings from one of the two planets in T’sayiti’k. They were a strange folk according to what Namjoon has read. They delved deep into the mysteries of Life-force and were, to an extent, the predecessors of the Yishengs. The Yisheng Code, for one, was based off of the findings of the Zhak’gri. Though the Zhak’gri did not have that ability or skill to heal, they delved in much stranger skills and abilities that were never properly documented or explained. Namjoon has never met anyone from T’sayiti’k, let alone a Zhak’gri. He doesn’t think anyone in the past few millennium has met them either. What did Taeh’yung mean by fifth generation? Where were her people? And what had happened to them now?

How did an entire species of Beings, an entire System of planets that basically laid out the foundation of the Known Universe, just disappear from history? How did they just disappear from the present?

‘Your…your people…where are they?’ Namjoon asks carefully.

‘Here, there, everywhere,’ Taeh’yung shrugs. ‘I don’t know- I haven’t met anyone from T’sayiti’k actually. All I know is that I’m the fifth Zhak’gri- or at least that’s what they tell me when they bother waking up.’

‘Who?’

‘The previous Zhak’gri,’ Taeh’yung replies, tapping his temple with a grin before patting the child in his arms. ‘We all share the same soul after all. According to what I’ve been told, I’m something like the fifth reincarnation of the first Zhak’gri.’

‘…I see…’
Taeh’yung nods emphatically and says, ‘But honestly none of that matters to me! I just want to do some good! Maybe blow up a moon? I mean I’ve done a bunch of other things that I’m pretty sure none of the other Four have done, but still, blowing up a moon is on my list of things-to-do’!

Just by his facial expression, you would think the Zhak’gri was talking about maybe going to some attraction site and buying souvenirs rather than purposefully blowing up a moon just for the sake of doing so.

For some inexplicable reason, Namjoon feels like Taeh’yung would fit right into his motley crew of less-than-savory disparate Beings.

The gravity-lift jolts to a stop and Namjoon belatedly realizes they’ve reached the open maw-like Hangar gate of this massive slaver-ship. There are choruses of Beings. Most of them were slaves themselves, judging by the cuffs on their wrists. Namjoon looks up, noting the uniform-like clothing some of the Beings were wearing, similar to the ones the K’it’y guards were wearing except in dark grey rather than dark olive green the Grezma outpost guards wore. They were fully armed with TeorSers as well as heavy looking batons, used clearly to subdue or subjugate the captured slaves.

There’s a rough but strangely fluid language thrown around and a few responses over the radio. A guard appears in front of Namjoon’s cage and the Being stares at him and Taeh’yung. He’s a large and hulking Being- like the rest of the guards inside the slaver-ship. They were clearly using size as a form of intimidation against the already weak and hopeless slaves being brought in. Mental suppression by creating a visual barrier more powerful and efficient than cuffs. There was no need to spend units on cuffs if your prisoners were caged in with more than just cages and chains.

Taeh’yung beams and waves brightly.

The K’it’y hastens to explain in their tongue- he speaks haltingly, but the slaver-guard seems to understand well enough and barks out an order. Their cage is thrown open and Namjoon is roughly yanked out and slammed down on the floor, arms behind his back. Namjoon could roll his eyes at the basic treatment, gritting his teeth. Taeh’yung is also thrown onto the ground and he too seems used to it. He smiles brightly at Namjoon.

A hand twists Namjoon’s wrists and he knows they’re studying his cuff-links. They would soon find out where he was from and Namjoon can only sigh, knowing what would come next. The cuffs are attached to his wrist and he’s yanked up by them and Namjoon feels the metal dig harshly into his wrist. Taeh’yung is treated the same and they’re made to stand up as though for inspection.

They’re assessed quickly, checking them both for deformities or injuries while another scans them for their identity and species. Namjoon is used to this, unfortunately. Being looked at with scrutiny as though he were an object to be sold on the market- an item to be speculated and bought.

Taeh’yung to his right, launches into a bright conversation with the guard checking him, brightly discussing what Namjoon suspects is a dream he had. He’s slapped harshly across the face to shut him up no doubt, but Taeh’yung continues talking just as brightly. The guards grumble something to each other and the cuffs around Taeh’yung’s wrists come off.

It’s clever, Namjoon thinks, watching as Taeh’yung jumps up and down a little, flapping his arms, presenting himself as an insane or mentally unstable Being. Because Taeh’yung is promptly ignored and Namjoon is under scrutiny again. They’re saying something in low tones and the K’it’y guard with the broken nose says something harshly, clearly not liking what was being said.
There’s a lot of shouting, and Taeh’yung comes and latches himself onto Namjoon, watching with intrigue.

‘Ah- they’re saying that they should help out in Grezma, to clear up the situation there.’ Taeh’yung translates. ‘But they’re saying that they won’t because it’s not their business what the Governors do as long as they have their load.’

Namjoon grimaces.

‘So he’s saying that he’s going to take you and me back because we’re technically not part of the deal. However, he’s saying that they’re taking us as compensation. For free and- ah, yeah-‘ Taeh’yung winces as a punch is thrown.

A quick brawl takes place but the K’it’y has no chance. He’s knocked back a good distance, crumpling on the floor instantly. The rest of the K’it’y crouch and hiss but don’t make take any action. The slaver-guard yells something again and the K’it’y move back grumbling. A bunch of other slaves, clearly employed by the slaver-guards, approach them quickly and push them further inside the Hangar Bay. Namjoon notes the blinking collars around their throats. You didn’t need to be a genius to figure out that the collars were all coded to explode or detonate if the wearer disobeyed.

It’s a large space, with large gravity-lifts stacked up against the tall walls. They must be carrying a lot of slaves. Taeh’yung is immediately engaging the slaves around him in conversation, breaking out into a language Namjoon doesn’t understand. The working slaves don’t reply of course. They’re pushed towards a hallway that lead to a large and open elevator that overlooked a horrifying sight.

There’s a large open space, cylindrical in shape, and crossed over with massive bridges and narrow guard-towers as rings and rings of caged spaces line up and stack over each, creating sickening pillars of slaves. It was like a storage facility, where the slaves were stored until they were sold. Namjoon cranes his neck looking up and finds that he can’t see the ceiling of this facility. The lighting is dim and creates a strange sense of feeling both claustrophobic and agoraphobic at the same time.

He hears Taeh’yung let out a low sound of what Namjoon thinks might be awe.

‘It’s not as bad as Teronko’ng,’ the Zhak’gri muses as though to himself. ‘Wouldn’t you say so?’ Namjoon doesn’t know how to respond, seeing as he’s never been to Teronko’ng.

They’re not lead into the central-facility, they cross over on one of the bridges and enter a lift. They descend downwards and down into the floor. Namjoon suspects this might be the only way to go in and out of the levels were descending into.

They stop and Namjoon doesn’t know how far down they’ve reached. He’s not entire sure if they’ve been travelling in a strictly up and down motion either. There were many lifts and elevators that traversed in cross sections diagonally and horizontally as well.

It’s a dark and cramped space they come out into, lit only by sparse light bulbs that flicker a bit. It’s cold down here and Namjoon’s breaths come out in white vapour.

Taeh’yung breathes out forcefully, creating a large cloud of white vapour and saying, ‘Look! I’m a volcano!’

He’s smacked harshly across the face.
They walk past thick doors, bolted over with actual bolts rather than digitally. Namjoon is wondering at the lack of security surrounding these cells when a scuffle breaks out ahead. The lighting is bad so Namjoon can’t exactly make out what was happening. But a prisoner seemed to have burst out of his cell, screaming maniacally. The working-slaves beside them all freeze, fear etched into their eyes.

The slaver-guard barks harshly at them and the two in the front move forward, a deadened expression in their eyes as they tackle the prisoner attempting to escape. But before they even fall to the ground, the collars around their necks detonate in a bright flash of light and blood and the screaming stops immediately.

The slaver-guard is barking orders again and the two working-slaves behind them rush forward, picking up the bodies of their fellow working-slaves and the prisoner, now obviously dead.

The slaver-guard shoves open a door and grabbing Taeh’yung, pushes the Zhak’gri into the cell. Namjoon briefly catches his expression and a chill runs down his spine at the intensity of anger in Taeh’yung’s eyes. The slaver-guard bolts the door and then moves to the next cell. Opening it with a loud clang, he grabs Namjoon and shoves him in too.

It’s completely dark and after feeling about with his cuffed hands, he finds that he’s inside a 3 by 5 meter cell that’s entirely empty. Sinking down at the very back, Namjoon takes a deep breath.

They certainly didn’t need security if they had collars that detonated like that.

Namjoon stares at the darkness, looking down where he knew his hands were cuffed. It was an annoyingly familiar sensation, having these cuffs around his wrists. Sighing, Namjoon closes his eyes though there’s no difference in opening or closing his eyes.

He might as well catch up on some sleep.

The Yisheng Headquarters is not his home. Yoongi knows this.

The facility hidden in its ground is also not his home. The more Yoongi thinks about it, it felt more like a storage facility of sorts.
This is where he Slept. This is where he Dreamed. This is where he was made. But this is not his home.

He’s here faster than Zitao because Yoongi only used the polarized highway to a certain degree before he flew here. The Drift-08 was a model that wasn’t set for release until after 20 years. Though it still carried its trademark drifting abilities over any and every possible surface, the Drift-08 was designed to fly in-planet. Keeping track of traffic and any incoming Transporters, Yoongi cut across the busy city below by soaring through the clouds for a while, landing silently near the edges of the forest that fenced in the Headquarters.

Yoongi almost instantly heads for his usual route, using the very old and underground tunnel passages that had been constructed a long time ago. Instead he heads for one of the open lobbies, expertly avoiding all Yishengs and patients who were dawdling about.

It's quiet as usual here. Filled with Life and a quiet energy that sates all of Yoongi’s being. The air smells like rain.

Starting up his screen again, Yoongi notes that according to his tracking screen set specifically on the frequency of soundwaves from their Comm-Device channel, the Cahyan and the Anningan Yisheng were headed towards the Yisheng Living Quarters. Travelling off-course as well as up in Šerdesa’s upper atmosphere rendered weakly latched frequency waves unstable and Yoongi hadn’t been able to keep track of the crew members Comm-Devices. However their locations were still present to him, having used Šerdesa’s powerful cross-satellites to pinpoint their location. The audio links up as well and Yoongi swiftly makes his way through familiar corridors.

’-eed him to not come to Raksane Tayi- well at least not here just yet.’

‘Yixing wait- please explain to me what’s going on! Where are we going?’

They’re right below Yoongi now.

‘I know someone who can “heal” you – you and Jongin.’

‘Heal!? What!? But…but Yishengs can’t- you can’t-‘

‘Not a Yisheng. Not a Yisheng – someone else. We’re going to go see him.’

Yoongi takes pause at this, unable to comprehend what the Yisheng was saying.

‘But Yixing,-I…I’ve already made up my mind. I… I don’t want to be healed. My time has come and-If this person we’re meeting is not a Yisheng – and this is Life-force we’re talking about.’

What did this Yisheng know? Yoongi had long ruled his involvement out of all of this. So had K’mara.

‘No Baekhyun. Your time has not come – Time is no longer relevant in this process- ever since the Akramanese tore through the dimensional barriers, ever since J-D himself has existed – what we know as the order of nature, the cycle of continuum – none of these are certain.’

The cycle of continuum? Dimensional barriers? Yoongi struggles to keep up.

‘Your time is not fixed – and I am not going to allow you to simply wither away – you have too much to live for – too much to love. So as your doctor I will not allow you to lose hope. You understand?’
What did the Cahyan live for? What did the Yisheng mean? Yoongi wants to reply,- to shake his head and ask the Yisheng what he meant.

‘Good – we have to pack. Not a lot, just bare necessities – it will take us around 3 days to get there.’

‘Where are we going?’

Where could they possibly go to gain something like this? It’s so beyond Yoongi’s immediate understanding that he can’t even place a name on it. They arrive at the Yisheng Yixing’s quarters, stepping inside hurriedly. Yoongi glances at his screen- the Long-Huong Lieutenant would be here in less than 10 minutes. Were they not going to wait?

‘Oh! Jongin must be in warp- the line keeps breaking – I should track what ship he’s on-‘

The Dakaṣayaii? What had happened to him? Why was he on a ship – he could teleport if he chose to.

‘Yixing! Where are we going!? Who are we going to meet!?’

‘I don’t know who they are, I’ve only heard of them – but I know that this will work, together it can work, Ubhuku wasn’t a mistake-‘

Yoongi tracks down the word Ubhuku but he comes out blank. There was no information from his mind about this place.

‘Ok but where!?’

‘Teronko’ng Prison.’

Teronko’ng Prison was a massive dead planet that somehow still remained in very slow orbit around Raksane Tayi. It was the largest, harshest, and most efficient prison in the entire Known Universe. Beings sent here were beyond despicable- a place made for the worst of Beings. Yoongi carefully thinks it through and guesses it would be the perfect place for himself.

His reaches for his screen, quietly placing a call as he sinks back into a shadowy recess near a pillar. A Yisheng walks past, completely unaware of Yoongi’s presence.

‘Yoongi. How have you been?’

‘Good afternoon Admiral,’ Yoongi replies quietly, using a term provided to him by his mind. ‘The Yisheng Yixing, and the Cahyan, are making plans to leave Šerdesas and head to Teronko’ng Prison.’

‘What?’

‘They are meeting a Being. Someone the Yisheng has said would heal the Cahyan and the Dakaṣayaii.’ Yoongi adds and not allowing K’mara to speak continues on. ‘Zhoumi is here.’

‘At the Yisheng Headquarters?’

‘Yes.’

It’s silent for a while.

‘Where are the other crew members?’
Yoongi gives K’mara a short breakdown of the events that took place as he trails after the Yisheng and the Cahyan, silently climbing down a pillar and keeping a safe distance from the two as they jog out towards the Hangar Bay.

‘Stay there.’ K’mara orders. ‘Keep watch over at Šerdesas. I will track the Yisheng.’

Yoongi stops in his tracks.

‘Stay on Zhoumi. Report anything else you find or see to me.’

‘Understood.’

---

It’s after 6 hours, 28 minutes, and 42 seconds and counting that his prison door cell opens. Namjoon is a light sleeper so when Taeh’yung’s door had opened he woke up at once.

It’s very bright— but nothing Namjoon can’t handle. His eyes weren’t like most Being’s eyes and he could very well stare straight into a burning star and not have his eyes evaporate from the gamma rays.

A slaver-guard walks in, roughly grabbing him and pulling him upwards. He shoves him out of the cell and Namjoon finds that Taeh’yung is already there, looking bright and happy. A completely different look than the last time Namjoon had seen the Zhak’gri wear on his face. There are four working-slaves waiting for them as well. Namjoon remembers what had happened and feels sickened by how they’re being used.

Namjoon is cuffed again and shoved forward down the long hallway. The slaver-guard walks ahead, no instructions given or words exchanged. They’re pushed along by the working-slaves and forced to follow after the slaver-guard. They’re not taken into the center-storage of this horrible facility, rather they’re being lead into another hallway leading inwards. Namjoon has no idea where they could be taken and he keeps his eyes peeled.

They’re lead into the same elevator again and they ascend. They come out into the huge cylindrical central-facility but don’t stop. They continue upwards until they move past it into a shaft headed upwards. They stop, almost at random, according to Namjoon, and they’re pushed out.

For such a large ship with such a massive population, the slaver-ship sure was quiet. Their footsteps creates loud clacking sounds against the metal of the floors. They walk past industrial walls and other hallways, passing through guarded doorways. Taeh’yung is still conversing with the working slaves next to him while Namjoon keeps a mental count of the number of steps he’s taken, the number of guarded doors they’ve walked past, and the number of guards walking about. He notes their weapons, their uniform, their surveillance system, and the types of systematic programming they used. Based on what he saw and counted previously, they were now 23 floors above the Hangar Bay they had come in from and possibly near the Central Bridge of the slaver-ship.

The metal-work starts to change gradually. From the harsh industrial looking walls, to smoother chrome walls. They eventually reach a modern and lavish door that the guard in front of Namjoon opens. This was where he was obviously going to be questioned or a place where they were going to label him with a price.

Inside is a large lobby, decorated lavishly and rather cheaply despite the obviously expensive products shoved into every corner of the room. There’s a large table at the center of the room, and surrounding the table were some very grim and greasy looking Beings, all clearly the brains behind this operation. There are 6 of them, dressed in rather simple clothing despite the gaudiness of the room. They were businessmen, all of them. And slaves were their trading units. This wasn’t a means of displaying power or some sadistic game. This was all a business to them. And right now, Namjoon, and Taeh’yung, were potentially very valuable assets the stumbled upon.

‘So- this the Kutsogleran,’ one of them drawls at once, gesturing to Namjoon to approach.

Namjoon doesn’t move an inch. Even when he’s struck harshly.

‘Oh well, it’s fine- I’ll stand and check him myself.’

He’s short and rather compactly built. Nothing about him really stands out to Namjoon- but these were the most dangerous types of Beings in the first place. He was obviously from Raksane Tayi. Namjoon sees Lal Haenoon in his features and he wants to grimace. Even if Lal Haenoon wasn’t the best of Beings, he was at least, not in the business of slavery.

The Raksane Tayian peers up at Namjoon, studying his face.

‘Damn pity what happened to your lot,’ he sighs out, walking around Namjoon to study him. ‘But great for the market.’

The Tayian then looks at Taeh’yung who grins brightly in response.

‘And this one- who is this?’

‘My name is Taeh’yung!’

‘Good for you kid- he has a pretty face- he’ll fetch a good sum,’ the Tayian nods at Taeh’yung who says a bright ‘thank you!’ in reply.

‘ Doesn’t seem like the brightest though,’ one of them remarks.

‘Does it matter?’ one of them blows out purple smoke, tapping at a long thin black cigarette. ‘Most of them would pay even more for that.’
‘But more would pay for an Information Analyst,’ the Tayian smiles at Namjoon. ‘Isn’t that right?’

Namjoon doesn’t reply and he’s smacked across the face again by the guard. The Tayian walks back and sits down on his chair again.

‘Care to explain what you’re doing here? Why you’re here? And why Sario here received a panicked call from Orvan?’ he nods towards his right.

An Orvanan was sitting there, looking remarkably bored though her eyes bore into Namjoon’s with fiery suspicion and distrust.

Namjoon doesn’t reply and honestly the smack across his face is starting to get old.

‘Apparently your “family ship” is a GLA issued trading ship,’ the Tayian peruses a screen in front of him, reading as he says, ‘And I mean I guess this would be normal. You’re retired and you want to work. The Venture Unit could have set you up with a false identity and given you a head-start to a normal life- but…your “crew” is rather particular won’t you say?’

The Tayian leans back, looking Namjoon up and down again before saying, ‘Another former Venture Unit agent who not only turned over most of the Board of Divisions Directors but also killed his own father. A former GI agent- is that even real? Ha! And the crowning glory! Sk’jin, the Khol’isa pirate-lord.’

The Tayian laughs, pushing away his screen.

‘Quite the crew you have there Namjoon, quite the crew.’ He smiles father genially at him. ‘And now here you are, from Orvan, now in Grezma, and now in my ship. Tell me Namjoon, are you here as part of the GLA or Venture Unit’s attempt to clear us out again? They’ve been trying, but they know where they get a lot of their funding from.’

The Tayian laughs again.

‘You can tell me Namjoon- it’s not like the Venture Unit really cares about you. They’re just using you; another terrible report of how brave and honest agents died in an attempt to stop the Alliance.’ The Tayian actually looks at him with some form of fatherly fondness. ‘I would know Namjoon- I used to be part of the GLA Departments- this is a futile mission. Just tell me what it’s about and we’ll let it go.’

Namjoon doesn’t say a word and he’s smacked across the face again, though this time it’s the other side of his face.

‘You won’t get anything out of him,’ another says with a shrug. ‘They’re trained to never speak and this one is from Kutsoglera. He has a lot of experience with pain- it won’t get him to speak. You won’t get anything out of him unless he wants to give you that information.’

‘Well I’m sure he’ll start talking as soon as we get buyers,’ the Tayian smiles, waving his hands in a shooing gesture. ‘All right, good- take them to the private cells. We’ll send out a message saying we have an Information Analyst. We’ll sell him to the highest bidder in the next 24 hours.’

The guard shoves them out of the room, nearly making Taeh’yung trip who grabs onto one of the working slaves for balance.

‘Ah! You saved me! Thank you!’ Taeh’yung beams, throwing an arm over the working-slaves shoulders. The guard shoves them apart, forcing Taeh’yung aside and harshly smacking the working-slave. There’s no reaction from the working-slave and Taeh’yung sulks a little, walking next to Namjoon.

‘Stop that,’ Namjoon says under his breath.

‘Hm?’

‘You’ll get them into trouble too,’ Namjoon glances over at the working-slaves, their heads bowed, collars standing out stark against their skin. Their uniform is a dull grey tunic over the same coloured trousers. Namjoon spots a plethora of bruises and cuts across visible skin and old scar tissue and lesions. He sighs inwardly.

There was nothing he could do. It would take an entire legion of operative forces to take over this facility and no life could be guaranteed. Innocent or not.

It was no secret that the Venture Unit colluded with the more nefarious side of the black-market for many things. And Namjoon also knows, all too well, that many of the Venture Unit missions and studies are sponsored and or funded by such facilities. Was Namjoon as guilty as those involved for not speaking up about it?

They’re not taken to the center facility or the cell he was being kept in but instead to another lift. They travel down a few floors in complete silence. Namjoon knows he can’t escape without a lot of the working-slaves dying in the process and he himself getting stuck in some place because he doesn’t know his way around. Besides that, Taeh’yung would probably tag along and cause more problems.

Speaking of Taeh’yung, wasn’t he capable of doing some seriously strange things? Why wasn’t he using his abilities to his benefit now? Instead he’s quietly humming under his breath, seemingly skipping a little. Namjoon’s only way of escape would be after he leaves this facility in the hands of whoever buys him. Namjoon rolls his eyes at himself.

The elevator opens into a large space with caged rooms lining up the walls. It’s entirely empty of prisoners or slaves, but there are 3 other guards in the middle, armed and waiting, looking bored as they watched a screen playing some form of entertainment media. This was obviously an observation room, where “clients” or “buyers” could come and inspect the goods. There’s a Medical Bed to the side as well. Namjoon feels sickened.

But as Namjoon takes one step out of the elevator, the guard leading them crumples down, a dagger buried deep into the back of his head. Before Namjoon even has the wherewithal to comprehend what was happening, the trio of guards at the center of the room also all fall over, daggers buried hilt deep into their heads.

‘That was so cool!’ Taeh’yung squeals.

Namjoon turns, eyes wide as he notices that Yoongi is behind him.

Taeh’yung is however, hugging another Being next to Yoongi and Namjoon watches in utter disbelief as the working-slave’s face morphs rather surreally into Hoseok’s. Namjoon notices how 2 of the other working-slaves behind them seem to be utterly bewildered, taken aback by the events folding out in front of them.

They’re raising their hands to their collars and Yoongi moves faster than Namjoon can process and the working-slaves crumple down as well.

Had Yoongi been there the entire time, not even in disguise like Hoseok, and he didn’t notice?!
‘Er-hi-?’ Hoseok manages to get out before Taeh’yung reciprocates by hugging Hoseok even harder, pressing a kiss to his cheek.

‘I almost couldn’t contain myself! That was amazing!’ Taeh’yung exclaims, looking deeply impressed. ‘It’s nice to meet you! And you too Yoongi!’

Taeh’yung dives to hug Yoongi but the Human side steps him easily. In response to Taeh’yung’s greeting, Yoongi nods, seemingly unsurprised at Taeh’yung’s greeting.

‘How did you get inside? What about the collars?!’ Namjoon splutters. ‘And where’s Sk’jin?!’

‘Can’t explain- it’s safe- we don’t have time,’ Hoseok says quickly as he starts stripping the working-slave of his uniform and clothes. ‘You’re gonna have to disguise yourself.’

‘Did you kill them?!’ Namjoon asks Yoongi, gesturing to the working-slaves.

‘No.’ Is Yoongi’s monosyllabic response. ‘They’re unconscious.’

Hoseok throws the uniform at Namjoon who easily breaks his cuffs, making Taeh’yung exclaim out in awe again.

‘Sk’jin is waiting for us-‘ Hoseok replies, handing Namjoon a Comm-Device and pausing before he hands Taeh’yung one too. ‘-we have to hurry.’

Namjoon feels elated and is deeply touched that they would actually come back and get him out. He steps after Hoseok and Yoongi at once, nearly entirely disguised as a working-slave. Yoongi hands him a deactivated collar to put around his neck.

‘Um- your friend is fine- we can pretend that we’re escorting him back up,’ Hoseok says as he jogs back into the elevator. Namjoon looks around wildly at the surveillance.

‘They’re fake,’ Yoongi says quietly. ‘Sk’jin checked.’

Namjoon has so many questions. But he knows they’re short on time so he stops himself.

‘But wait.’

Taeh’yung hasn’t moved. He’s holding the Comm-Device in his hands.

‘I still need to set them all free.’

Hoseok and Yoongi stare at Taeh’yung blankly before they both turn simultaneously to stare at Namjoon.

‘Taeh’yung look,’ Namjoon begins desperately as he pushes the Comm-Device into his ear. ‘We don’t have the time or the means to do this-‘ ‘Namjoon- is that you?’ Sk’jin’s voice suddenly cuts in into his ear.

‘-Spaces, what?’ Namjoon bristles as though on automatic response to the Khol’isa's voice.

‘Get Taeh’yung on the line.’

‘What?!’

‘I said get Taeh’yung on the line now.’
‘Taeh’yung? Please,’ Namjoon walks ahead, gently pulling the Zhak’gri into the elevator. ‘And put on the Comm-Device, please.’

Taeh’yung frowns a little, the air around him glowing a little and Namjoon is instantly nervous. He puts the device into his ear as he steps inside and his face goes completely blank before he breaks out into a bright and joyful smile, clapping as he joyfully says, ‘I can’t believe this!’.

Namjoon and Hoseok both sharply turn their heads in alarm, staring at the Zhak’gri in confusion. Yoongi on the other hand, sighs.

Taeh’yung beams even more brightly and adding to Namjoon and Hoseok’s immense confusion says, ‘It’s so nice to meet you again Jin!’

Yoongi can’t find a way to enter the lowest chambers of the Yisheng Headquarters. It was too densely protected.

So if Yoongi couldn’t find a way to get to Zhoumi, then neither did the Long-Huon Lieutenant. However, he does stay in the Headquarters, living in the Anningan Yisheng’s quarters. Strangely enough, no shadow lingers over him here. No neon-red eyes peer over his shoulders.

Yoongi is hiding rather openly, sitting down on one of the many benches on the second level atrium balconies overlooking the main Lobby downstairs. He sits next to a large potted plant, the leaves hiding him almost perfectly. In order to blend in better, Yoongi had discarded his uniform for a patient’s uniform. The Headquarters was much too populated to be overlooked

‘Has the source of the recent disturbances been discovered?’

Yoongi watches as a Yisheng walks into the Lobby, followed by a younger Yisheng.
‘I heard that there was a strange anomaly?’

‘It was very faint,’ the younger replies. ‘But it’s been 2 days now since the disturbance stopped.’

‘Odd – it simply vanished?’ the Yisheng notices the Long-Huon, smiling politely. Yoongi watches as the Long-Huon pulls on a charming smile.

‘It would seem so – we weren’t able to trace the exact location but it seemed to come from the lower floors.’

Yoongi isn’t surprised by the discussions the Yishengs were having. He’s been overhearing many conversations, citing that a strange disturbance seemed to be resonating from the lowest chambers. This wasn’t coming from Zhoumi, or from the stoic GLA personnel.

This was coming from that strange shadow that followed the Long-Huon Lieutenant around.

Yoongi cannot come up with any information or any idea regarding this entity. All he knew was that it could speak, it could see, and it existed. But its existence was one that Yoongi could not comprehend or sense. And though Yoongi knew that he could move without being seen or noticed, he had a strong sense- an intuitive warning inside his mind, that told him that it would be able to sense Yoongi.

The Long-Huon stretches where he sits. There is no communication amongst the crew members anymore.

The Yisheng, Cahyan, the Venture Unit agent had all landed on Teronko’ng’s outer orbit before vanishing from all tracking radar. This was to be expected, because Teronko’ng was one of the most isolated and controlled locations in the Known Universe.

Yoongi hears it before he sees him. A panicked and maddened frenzy laces through the air, the hair on the back of Yoongi’s neck rises. There’s shouting and Yoongi stands, reaching into the pot for his helmet and TeorSer at once.

A mad form runs out of one of the corridors and Yoongi recognizes him before he rushes into the opposite doorway. But bursting out again, Zhoumi remerges.

The elder Long-Huon looks terrible. His hair is unkempt, his skin pale and sallow, his eyes have a maddened expression to them. Where had he been? What had he seen?

Zhoumi seems to regard the Long-Huon Lieutenant in front of him with shock yet an expression that suggested he wasn’t all too surprised to see him. He yanks out the tubes that are trailing out of his arms, a spray of blood washing over the floors.

‘Zhoumi-‘

Zhoumi runs and tackles the Lieutenant and they fall backwards with a loud smack. The Lieutenant coughs out a pained gasp but the tackle is short-lived.

He was after all, a fully trained operative member of the GIU. His training would be on par with many of the agents of the Venture Unit. He quickly gains the upper-hand, flooring Zhoumi and pushing him down and restraining him.

Zhoumi is half-yelling, half-spluttering as he foams in the mouth, face reddening. Yoongi almost doesn’t recognize him. The Long-Huon Lieutenant is staring down at Zhoumi in horror and confusion.
There’s a scrambling approach of footsteps and a young Yisheng-in-training appears.

‘Calm him down or something!’ The Lieutenant orders at once.

But the moment he says this, Zhoumi’s actions still.

‘Oh, that was fast-‘

Yoongi can see the ploy before it happens. Zhoumi regains the upper-hand as he flips them over, and the Lieutenant cries out in pain as his head hits the hard floor with a cracking sound.

‘Zitao!’ Zhoumi hisses, his tone pitched and nothing like how Yoongi remembers it to be.

‘You need to warn them!’ he speaks in Long-Huon rather than in the GLA Standard. Zhoumi was much more aware than what his appearance might suggest.

The GLA personnel appear, pulling the flailing Long-Huon off of the Lieutenant who was gasping for breath, struggling to regain his composure.

‘NO! NO! LISTEN TO ME! YOU HAVE TO WARN THEM ZITAO! WARN THEM! THEY’RE GOING TO FIND HIM.-‘

Zhoumi’s face is almost purple from the exertion of screaming and struggling. The Lieutenant manages to stand, approaching Zhoumi who was battling against his guards mightily.

‘Find who? Zhoumi, what are you talking about-‘

‘He’s mentally incapacitated,’ one of the personnel says curtly to the Lieutenant, nodding towards a Yisheng who was on stand-by.

‘Are you a relative?’ one of the other officers asks the Lieutenant sharply.

‘Yes- wait please let me speak to him-‘ The Lieutenant lies immediately- trying to reach Zhoumi but the Yisheng reaches for the latter, palms over his temples and Zhoumi instantly weakens in between his guards grip, his head lolling backwards momentarily.

‘We’re sorry you had to see that, we will be taking him back – no visitors allowed under orders of the GLA,’ the guard says to the Long-Huon Lieutenant who has an incredulous expression on his face.

‘Zhoumi-!’

Zhoumi seems to respond to Zitao’s voice, shaking awake.

‘Zitao-‘ he whispers out as he’s pulled away hurriedly.

Zitao pushes past the personnel, behaving as a confused and panicked family member would as he reaches and successfully pulls Zhoumi to himself.

Yoongi cannot hear from this point on and after a few short seconds, watches as Zhoumi is pulled back.

The Long-Huon Lieutenant stands frozen still, a worried and anxious look on his face. Yoongi is about to follow after the GLA personnel when Yoongi realizes he’s not alone.

Looking over the side of the balcony he notes another Being, staring down at the scene calmly.
The Being is wearing full black, a helmet over his head. He doesn’t notice Yoongi who is hidden behind the lush leaves. The GI agent doesn’t follow Zhoumi but instead continues to keep track of the Long-Huon Lieutenant.

The Long-Huon regains his momentum and he starts jogging away, clearly headed for the Anningan Yisheng’s quarters. And then the GI agent follows.

Yoongi moves quickly, staying low and sticking to the wall.

The GI agent is ahead of him and Yoongi knows he’s keeping track of the Lieutenant in the corridor below them. Yoongi maintains a quiet and safe distance, watching with mounting confusion as the agent continues forward, making no move, making no action.

Then as soon as the Long-Huon enters the quarters, the agent spins and throws a startling fast and swift dagger straight at Yoongi. Yoongi dodges it just as quickly- using his screen as a deflective shield of sorts. The screen breaks in his hands, pieces falling over the carpeted ground with little to no noise. Another dagger flies straight at him and Yoongi skids to the side, feeling the blade slice through his hair as he rolls onto the ground, avoiding another dagger that, this time, he catches. He’s not wearing gloves so the blade cuts into his skin but Yoongi doesn’t care. He’s armed and that was all that mattered. Taking a leaping jump, Yoongi quickly and calmly overwhelms the agent.

Yoongi still has the element of surprise- of shocking his opponents whether it be because of his stature, his mannerism, or his identity. And he uses it well.

Yoongi hears footsteps from the corridor underneath them and he hastens to get rid of the agent at hand. But the GI agent recovers, swinging his left arm hard and true and striking Yoongi across his side. Yoongi doesn’t sense anything rupturing but knows that he can’t take another blow there.

He swings his knee up, just as he brings down his forearms over the agent’s shoulders. They’re the same height, so Yoongi cannot use their height difference to his advantage. This was on equal footing and Yoongi thinks quick to gain power over the agent.

The agent, however, seems prepared. He grabs Yoongi by his hair, yanking him backwards, his knee slamming into Yoongi’s lower back. He drops the knife from his hand, landing almost soundlessly over the thickly carpeted floors. This was why the agent had walked here- he was luring Yoongi out.

Yoongi sees stars for a brief moment but this momentary disorientation is all the GI agent needs. Yoongi finds himself lifted from the ground and his back bending backwards as he’s balanced over the railing of the balcony overlooking the living quarter hallway below.

Yoongi glances down briefly and notes that Zitao is struggling to remain calm as he’s being questioned. Yoongi pushes the hand grabbing at his throat away, letting his elbow swing upwards, landing in a quiet muffled blow against the sternum of the agent.

Winded, the agent stumbles back but Yoongi knows that the uniform absorbs most of the damage anyways. He was going to have to get to the weakest point quickly.

All armours had weaknesses in them- but this was not the case with the GI uniform. The all black uniform was almost entirely invulnerable and had no weakness. But Yoongi, unlike this agent in front of him, is experienced fighting other agents.

Sliding on his knees over to the knife, Yoongi strikes the blade down on the foot of the agent. The blade pushes past his foot, down past the soles of his shoes, and an inch into the floor below. Yoongi twists, pushing himself up on his arms, his legs swinging up to tie his legs around the agent and pulls him down on the ground.

Reaching behind him as he swings up, sitting down with purpose intent over the agent’s chest, Yoongi delivers the blade under the helmet, straight through the agent’s chin.

Breathing harshly but entirely quietly, Yoongi pushes off of the dead agent, finally feeling some of the pain inflicted on his body.

He quickly glances down and finds that Zitao and his guests were no longer there.

Jumping down the balcony, he lands quietly in front of the doorway. He listens closely,- he hears some movement and instantly he moves towards the side, sprinting for the hallway that lead to the gardens surrounding the living quarter perimeter. There were wide open balconies overlooking the woods, and he was on the second floor. He would need to put some distance between himself the crew he was tracking, to figure out whether it was only him that was being targeted or if the crew themselves were under threat.

He could be potentially endangering the Long-Huon and Zhoumi as well by staying here.

In retrospect, Yoongi should have suspected this was going to happen. Too many of their agents had died, and at terribly high efficient rates. They knew. They knew and they were going to move against him. Against them. He’s almost out into the gardens but the moment he does, Yoongi senses them at once.

He barely manages to avoid the figure that comes hurling at him from the woods, swinging upwards towards him through the trees. Yoongi senses another one approaching him from the back, and there’s more of the agents in the trees. He needed to pull them away from the Long-Huon inside lest he be dragged into the fight.

Yoongi runs straight ahead, using the wall as a lever and twists himself in the air, tackling an agent headed for him. His fighting movements are faster than normal, not being weighed down by his uniform though he’s never had a problem before. Yoongi has always been a speedy fighter, but today his movement seems to have increased twice over in speed. Though he’s unable to deliver the usual power at the end of his hits, he moves faster than the agents that try to converge on him.

There’s 4 on him on the balcony and using their slower and taller forms to his advantage, Yoongi climbs over them, his bare feet actually having more grip than he initially thought, easily twists the neck of one of the agents. Using his momentum, he pushes and dives off of the balcony, dragging one of the agents with him backwards, effectively breaking their back.

Yoongi lands on the balls of his feet, balancing himself as best he could with his injuries. But he can’t waste a single second. Yoongi counts them at 7. More could come. They were after all less than a hundred meters from where their home. No, not home. It was more like a storage facility, if Yoongi thinks about it.

A silent and accurately aimed reduced TeorSer shot is fired at him, singing his hair in the back as he darts straight into the woods, 3 of them at his heels.

Diving into the forest, Yoongi is already prepared.

This much was a fact,- no matter how trained, how efficient, how method the GI agents were, Yoongi knew that he would be able to defeat them all. Because the plain and simple truth being Yoongi had the upper-hand.

He was one of them. He fought like them, trained like them, he was them. But now- Yoongi can think beyond what they were capable of. And because of this- Yoongi knew he was going to defeat them all. He would probably come out with a few injuries- possibly some ruptured organs. Maybe a broken femur. But bones could be healed, organs could be regrown. But Yoongi cannot come back to life, so he knows he has to survive.

The moment he steps deep enough into the woods, Yoongi turns back and counter attacks. They’re surprised,- not expecting such a reaction from Yoongi who seemed determined in running away. This surprise allows him to disarm and easily shoot one of the agents.

He keeps a mental check-list. 1 down, 6 to go. But during this moment, Yoongi finds himself forcefully kneeling as a sharp pain blinds him, radiating from the back of his knee. Had he not been expecting it, this socket would have popped out. Using the TeorSer in his hands as a shield of sorts, Yoongi blocks the knee to his head, firing in the process in quick succession. One of the TeorSer rockets past him, grazing his arm and the flesh on his arm cooks at once. Thrusting his elbow back, he catches the agent approaching him from the back with resounding crack and grapples for his head at once just as another TeorSer fire is shot at him. The agent he pulls down takes the brunt of it and Yoongi manages to take down two more as they run towards him.

3 left.

But they all dodge away from Yoongi, ducking back to the trees.

Yoongi wonders if this is the first time any of them have had to actually fight against someone else other than a fat politician or panicked pirate-lord. Moving quickly, Yoongi pulls out the daggers from the side pockets of the fallen agents around him, staying low and practically crawling away. He hone in on hearing his surroundings rather than seeing. The GI agents were too good at staying hidden and in this dark forest, Yoongi can’t rely on his eyes without a helmet.

He hears the faintest whistle of sharp movement and Yoongi deflects the dagger thrown at him with the one in his hand and barely has time to brace himself as he’s tackled from his side. Hands are deftly reaching for his throat but Yoongi moves too quickly for a lasting result. Striking out right into his captives armpit, severing the tendons there, Yoongi doesn’t push back but instead collapses his arm, making the agent on top of him lose balance and collapse straight into the other dagger Yoongi is holding.

2 left.

Yoongi stands quickly, deflecting yet another dagger and rolling down when a steady flow of sharp metal blades fly at him, mixed in with TeorSer shots. But Yoongi moves closer and closer towards where the agents were.

His body is clearly fatigued so his movements, though so much lighter than before, loses speed. A few of the blades knick past him, but he can stand straight as he launches himself from the floor, pushing down an agent underneath him with his full body weight.

He’s thrown off and Yoongi had been expecting that- however the second agent remaining takes this as initiative to disarm and disorient Yoongi, his hands coming together in a thunderous clap over Yoongi’s ear.

Yoongi’s senses instantly drop away and he’s left completely defenseless. But his body is already moving, regardless of his senses being obstructed. His hands latch onto the agent’s wrists and he wrenches their arms apart, forcing them to arch inwards and Yoongi brings up a knee to gut the agent right at the hollow under his sternum. The blow is not as strong as Yoongi would want but it’s enough to get him close enough to pull out the dagger in the guard behind the agent’s back. Yoongi makes quick work of digging under the seam of the uniform and slices the agent open from back to chest, a wide arc of blood tainting his vision momentarily.

1 left.

With difficulty he blocks and defends himself from the onslaught of offensive attacks that don’t stop. Yoongi takes the brunt of it, unable to effectively defend himself. Rather than breaking his femur, Yoongi feels at least 3 of his ribs break and he’s sure his intestine has ruptured. There’s a cracking sound and Yoongi, despite his senses being limited, feels his collar bone snap. There’s something warm pouring around his face, and Yoongi knows it’s his own blood. He can’t focus and he knows he has to. But it’s proving nearly impossible.

He can’t extend his arms too much; rather than fighting, or even defending, Yoongi is flailing. He needs his opponent to get closer to him. Dropping down on his knees, Yoongi can only hope his plan works out.

It does.

The agent swings their arm downwards, elbow aiming for Yoongi’s head. But Yoongi shifts at the last second, the force of the attack landing on his shoulder and he knows it’s dislocated at once. But he ignores it and uses his good arm that’s holding the knife and thrusts it into the side of the agent’s neck.

They stumble backwards and Yoongi feels the warmth of their blood pour over his shirt at a rapid pace. The agent twitches on top of him, arms still moving as though to fight Yoongi. Yoongi manages to roll the agent off, heaving as he does so. His ears are still ringing but Yoongi has to move quickly.

Yoongi tears the uniform off of the agent, stumbling in the process and nearly blacking out a few times before he is pulling it over himself. But he needs to move fast so that the uniform doesn’t disintegrate into nothing. The agent is a female of a species Yoongi doesn’t instantly recognize. But the uniform fits him well, the fabric shifting and aligning to his muscles and bones, fixing what needed fixing and supporting and conforming around his injuries, somewhat lessening the pain. He takes her helmet as well, pushing it over his head and readjusting himself to the visor. There was a risk to this, unlike with the helmet, but Yoongi needs this if he’s going to survive the night. If there were agents after him, then he would need to be ahead of them- in order to defend himself. And he can’t do that if walking is painful, let alone running.

He pulls the helmet over his head and he’s just in time to witness a strange glitch takes over the HUD visor and Yoongi is momentarily distracted.

[System OVERRIDE_Y/N]

[Y]

[INITIATING SELF-DESTRUCT]

A strange blistering feeling rips through his scalp and into his skull and Yoongi removes his helmet faster than he’s ever moved. In a wave of black dust that disintegrates into nothing, his helmet crumbles apart. His heart is racing.
He nearly falls backwards but is saved the fall when his back comes in contact with a tree behind him. He slides down, his hands shaking, his entire body trembling. The uniform is really working to keep his body together.

He nearly died.

Yoongi realizes he’s sweating profusely, and there’s blood as well, staining the already blood soaked uniform twice over. His sense come back to him slowly. His breath comes out of him in loud shallow pants and the first thing he hears is the somewhat diminished but slowly increasing high-pitched ringing.

The moment he is able to hear better and his vision also clears, Yoongi stands up and he’s only just a little bit disoriented. The uniform, though lighter than it normally would be seeing as all the weaponry attached to it is gone, is still heavy on him. But the weight grounds him and shapes him up. He notes that the bodies of most of the agents are entirely gone already. Save for the female behind him.

As Yoongi walks away from the woods back towards the Yisheng Headquarters, he doesn’t know why but he feels strangely guilty for leaving her out in the open.

The sky is darkening and Yoongi forces himself to concentrate. His mind felt strangely blank- almost lifted. He didn’t understand what it was- or why everything around him looked so strangely different yet so familiar. With difficulty, he jumps up and scrambles into the balcony of the Yisheng living quarters and peers inside. It’s empty- the Long-Huon had left. He checks to see if there were any signs of disturbances but all was safe. So the Long-Huon was safe. For now.

Stepping into the room, Yoongi looks for a screen of any sort he can use. This was the Anningan Yisheng’s room- he should have a screen he could use in here, and one that allowed him to connect to the crew members of the Stravechi Nava.

Leaning heavily against the wall, Yoongi carefully opens the drawers of the desk over which notebooks and diaries were scattered. He finds a slightly older model of a screen but finds that it’s still fully charged. And just as he had hoped, the Anningan still kept the communication frequency for the Stravechi Nava on this screen. Activating it, Yoongi digs around for a Comm-Device and finds another rather outdated one but it would do.

Accessing the channels from the GLA Tracking switch, Yoongi instantly finds the Long-Huon Lieutenant. He was on his way back to his own apartment, where the Heladian was sleeping in his strangely cryogenic state of unconsciousness. Yoongi watches the small dot of light moving across the tracking screen and to his horror, finds that he’s tilting forward, eyes closing. He can’t afford to get knocked out. He needed healing.

It was ironic because though he was in a place meant for healing, Yoongi can’t allow himself to be seen. He quickly exits the room the same way he had come in. Dropping down on all fours, Yoongi leaves behind drops of blood on the grassy floor. Swaying dangerously, Yoongi stands up and heads back into the woods. If he’s attacked now, he won’t be able to fight back effectively. But he meets nothing and no one. Had they truly thought he was dead?

He needed medical attention. Immediately.

And the only thing he can think of is returning there.

He hasn’t been down there in a long time. He’s been away longer before- on missions. But this time, it felt wrong to even think of going back. But everything tells him to go back. His mind tells him that he was currently going through something called “gut instinct”. Pausing, Yoongi tries to think clearly again.

He needed the medical attention, and he needed a helmet. He would also need to arm himself again. There was no way he could carry out K’mar’s mission if he wasn’t able-bodied and armed.

His feet carry him, his body making the decision before he can fully comprehend.

He tries to remember everything about the place- this would be the first time he’s gone in after being aware. After being truly Awake. After understanding that this would be a memory for him to process. An epoch in the pages of his life.

Or would it be like every other time he as returned here.

The doorway is hidden rather openly. It’s a small shack of a room that has stairs that takes you down to another door.

Yoongi simply pushes through and he’s lead into an empty dome-roofed room. Low pedestals stood on the ground and he weaves his way around it. There was no security in this place. You didn’t need any either.

No one would ever think to ever look here. To ever come here.

There’s a door on the opposite end and Yoongi enters the narrow and cold hallway that turns left inwards.

The hallway is immensely long and dark. There are countless doors on either side. It’s utterly silent and the air is so still it was as though Yoongi was the first Being in an age to have stepped foot here.

He’s never thought about the other doors before. He’s never thought about what could be behind those doors. He’s never felt the urge to open them either. He’s also never known which of these doors was his. But his feet stop far into the hallway and as though by muscle memory, his body moves as his mind watches. The door swings open silently and easily. There are no handles. Just simply pushing forward.

It’s a small space. No windows. A narrow bed of sorts that lights up and throws light into the room. This is where Yoongi used to Sleep. Where he used to Dream. Where he was made Known of his missions.

It’s frighteningly empty. Beside the bed is a device similar to a helmet. On a shelf by the wall are his uniforms, helmets, and other gear.

It’s so empty and void.

Unable to help himself, Yoongi leaves the room and goes straight into the room opposite his.

An agent was Sleeping, helmet attached to their head. The glow of their bed illuminating the room faintly. Even with a living being inside the room, it felt deadened and lifeless.

Yoongi steps back into his room and quickly lays back down on the bed. This is the first time he’s aware as he’s being healed. The bed glows, clearly scanning him.

Mechanical arms unfold and work over Yoongi’s body and his head. He watches as his skin is re-sewn, his wounds sealed over with Tissueplast, and his bones knitted over. It’s faster, more efficient than the current standard of Medical Beds or Pods. Yoongi doesn’t feel any additional pain- he dimly realizes that this was probably because he was used to it.

Muscles burning and bones feeling like they were iced, Yoongi stands again. He reaches for a helmet, images of the helmet disintegrating in his hands comes to mind. He leaves the helmet and stocks up on his weapons and gear.

Yoongi steps out just in time to find a long line of agents walking past. He quietly joins them at the rear and easily takes out the rear agent. Silently immobilizing them and taking his place as he slots on his helmet.

He’s thinking of separating from the unit as they walk out when he realizes that this unit of 15 agents were headed after the Long-Huon Lieutenant and the Heladian.

[INCOMING JOINT MISSION FROM HEADQUARTERS]

[ACCEPT]

[RECEIVING DATA]

[MISSION 9357-2595-1109]

[COORDINATES _SERDESAS]

[OBJECTIVE: ASSASSINATION]

[TARGET: LIEUTENANT HUANG ZITAO]

[OBJECTIVE: CAPTURE]

[TARGET: MIN-SEOK]

[ASSASSINATION METHOD_HELADIAN ANTI-CORE]

IMPLEMENT_OBSERVE

CAPTURE_INTERROGATION

[CAUTION_HELADIAN ANTI-CORE UNSTABLE]

[PREVENTIVE CORE INITIATE TO STABILIZE]

[CAPTURE_LIVE]

[MISSION 9357-2595-1109 EXECUTE IMMEDIATELY]

Yoongi studies his fellow agents- unaware of his presence amongst them. There was a saying from Earth- his own Human roots.

A wolf amongst sheep.

Or was he the shepherd?

They step out into the cool night, headed for a series of Drift-08’s parked under the trees.

Did they see it too? The light of the moon edging along the blades of grass, the sound of the rustling of trees in the wind, the way the ground is soft under his feet. Could they hear how wildly his heart was beating? Could they sense him, the anomaly amidst them.

But were they just like their rooms. Deadened and empty, unaware, unknown, and nonexistent?

Yoongi’s body is buzzing- not from the adrenaline of what just happened or the result of the medication working into his system. It’s not because of how if his fellow agents study him properly, he would be discovered and he definitely wouldn’t walk away from this fight, or how he’s become aware of his standing as a Being who was now fully accepting and understanding his place in the Universe. Of understanding where and why he was in the Universe. It wasn’t a fear of dying that had gripped Yoongi. Rather it was the fear of being utterly forgotten.

His body is thrumming, his senses overwhelmed and everything is reborn to him. He was living the first of his memories right here and now. He was living the past, the present, and the future of his being, his existence.

Yoongi feels Alive.

(Book’s Note)

Please don’t hate me when I say that I liked The War over Exact. I liked Exact a lot but The War just takes it for me. and also please never let Kim Jongdae my bias and my grown ass man of a son, write lyrics because if that ain’t some poetry shit about handjobs then idk what it is anymore.

And does anyone like Game of Thrones.

Because I DO I LOVE GAME OF THRONES AND THIS SEASON IS ALREADY KILLING ME WOOOOO I AM SO READY FOR THIS

And to celebrate GoT7 (lol) I made moodboards!!!
BTS in Game of Thrones

Exo in Game of Thrones

Got7 in Game of Thrones

And if anyone is curious, I am House Tyrell. cries because of Season 6
By the time Yoongi reaches Šerdesas, he feels remarkably healthy. The only indication of pain or injury stems from his lower abdomen. He had sent a message to K’mara, relaying all that has happened. However, he keeps the information of the GI Base to himself. Just for now.

They’re flying over the Capital City now, headed past the Trade Sector and closer to the Long-Huon Lieutenant’s apartment. There are tall infra-cities spread across the Capital City, interconnected by glimmering polarized highways. The lower magnetic-field highways are broader strips of light, providing rather solid ribbons of colour lights as the backdrop for the silvery polarized ones. Lights from the metropolis shine like stars through the highways, reflecting the stars above like a mirror. Sunlight seems to mold over it, like molten gold. It’s a magnificent sight to behold even though Yoongi knows he should be concentrating on the task at hand.

It was just.

Everything felt different.

Approaching target point.

The plan was to apprehend and interrogate the Heladian, and assassinate the Long-Huon. The Lieutenant had arrived at his apartment no more than an hour ago according to Yoongi’s own tracking device. The Heladian seemed to be finally waking up, the main reason why the Long-Huon had gone rushing back here.

Yoongi and 15 of the GI agents slow down and like preying birds, slowly circle downwards. He sees them as little points on his HUD visor, tracking their movements. Yoongi was at the very top.

Zitao wouldn’t know of their coming. Yoongi doesn’t know if K’mara would see or read his message.

They swoop lower, their invisible forms creating warps in the imagery of the metropolis below. They drift down past the highest point of the infra-city tower- the Long-Huon lived on the 89th floor and they would reach it shortly.

‘Deliver message,’ Yoongi says quietly. ‘Recipient Lieutenant Huang Zitao of the GIU. Current location 9357-2595-1109. Using private channel for device S_NAVA_ZT-68.’

An error sign appears and Yoongi tries again. The line seems distorted, unavailable and offline. Had something happened from the root-source of the channel? They drop even lower, now only 200 storey above their designated location.

He was mid-air, nearly 2000 meters above the ground; if he tried anything, he would be shot down immediately. How could he warn the Long-Huon? He detects movement and notices how the lower GI agents break from their camouflage and reveal a long nozzle TeorSer, the device
Yoongi doesn’t stop to think.

He deactivates his Hover-08, shutting it down immediately and Yoongi plummets. He careens the Hover-08 dangerously close to the windows of the tower and when he falls past the Long-Huon’s apartment window, his eyes lock with neon-red eyes, glowing bright in shock.

Yoongi looks behind him, noticing how half of the GI agents were now following him. Yoongi continues to plummet, keeping an eye on the dropping levels. Something shoots past him- TeorSer fire. Though motionless and the engines aren’t activated, Yoongi steers the device until he’s successfully flipped the other way round. TeorSer fire falls around him and ricochet off of the protective shield around the Transporter, providing Yoongi with a nearly infallible security system. According to the scans of his visor, the GI agents following him were gaining up on him rapidly. Unlocking the TeorSers and arming both hands with them, Yoongi makes quick calculations; making sure the magnetic security system was set only on his legs, Yoongi waits just as the other agents hover close enough and he rotates himself mid-fall so that he fell upright again.

His aim is true and the agents are sent careening off to the sides, crashing into nearby buildings.

He activates the Hover-08 again and he feels his ribs burn at the sudden pressure fluctuation around his body. The other agents shoot past him and Yoongi easily takes out 3 more of their numbers.

[PURSUIT_COORDINATES HIGHWAY 02_55-SRDS]

[ASSEMBLE]

So the Long-Huon and the Heladian had made it out- Yoongi’s warning had worked.

The agents who were flying towards him stop and rocket downwards instead, closely followed by a whole new unit of agents. Yoongi counts them all at 14.

And none stop to take Yoongi out.

Yoongi redirects the Hover-08, activating the security straps again as he chases after the speeding agents.

This was their main mission after all. Yoongi easily takes out the agents in front of him, a strange sense of wonder settling into him. These agents weren’t fighting for their lives or their continuity- their own existence was not a concept or priority they kept in regard. What mission dictated, they followed.

Yoongi had been like that.

He had followed every single mission, every single operation, without thought, without consequence, without understanding. Yoongi fires again, each shot hitting the agents at the back of their heads and the Hover-08’s detonate into bright specks of light, crashing down the face of buildings. Yoongi feels a strange sense of heaviness tugging at the lining of his stomach at the sight of the destruction. And it had nothing to do with his injuries.

Tracking the Long-Huon’s location, Yoongi finds them at the lowest pier of the infra-city. Night had not come to the Capital City yet unlike in the Yisheng Headquarters so visibility is high.

[GROUND_UNIT_SET]
Yoongi grimaces at the message; there were more other than the aerial unit.

A shift in the horizon catches Yoongi’s attention and he notices how the polarized highways shift. Šerdesas activated certain highways during peak traffic hours and deactivated them during low traffic hours. They were currently in one of the more populated zones, being a commercial infra-city with a high number of Šerdesas’s population living in these areas. The highways were being re-set again.

‘Connect to Šerdesas highway controls. Activate manual control over coordinates district code 02_55-SRDS and its extensions.’

A map lights up on his visor.

‘Activate highway 02_55_43-SRDS.’

Yoongi pulls away and shoots across rather than descend down vertically.

A light glimmers and Yoongi catches sight of 6 bright explosions of light go off as the agents collide with the appearance of the roads.

‘Activate highway 02_55_49-SRDS.’

Another 4 light up and Yoongi reaches the lowest pier the moment a Hover6 pulls out from an alley, closely followed by small but powerful shots from sniper TeorSers. Yoongi follows the line of the projectile and finds more agents standing near bridge rafters. Yoongi’s TeorSer isn’t meant for long-ranged assassination accuracy but for close-range combat instead.

There’s loud screaming and 9 jet-black Hover-08’s whip past overhead, shortly followed by 3 more of Yoongi’s surviving unit. Yoongi chases after them immediately and they’re in one long, fast chase over the lower magnetic-field highways. Yoongi can see the Long-Huon many ways ahead- but mainly because of the red glow that sees to emanate from his being.

Yoongi pushes for more speed.

The moment he’s close enough, Yoongi fires at the closest agents and their Hover-08’s crash into buildings and bridges and some even into the tiered parks Šerdesas was unique for in their architecture.

The same gnawing sensation builds inside of Yoongi and he doesn’t know what it is. He’s almost distracted by the large cloud of flame that rises up from a smaller infra-city tower, his eyes latching onto the sight of Beings being flung out by the sheer force of it.

Yoongi looks away as quickly as he can and speeds up closer to the agent in front of him. The agent has a long-distance projectile TeorSer. Calculating his distance, Yoongi deactivates his safety system and switches off his Hover-08 and he flings across the distance between himself and the other agent.

As he lands he definitely feels his ribs dislodge again from the reforming setting his uniform had pushed it into. The magnetic paneling on his suit attaches him firmly to the other Hover-08 and Yoongi is quick unseat the unsuspecting agent by deactivating his safety paneling.

He spots how the agents in the front are already firing but the Long-Huon is a good driver, swerving through the intense later afternoon traffic with precision and ease of a veteran driver. Yoongi aims and fires, driving through flames of iridescent blue and purple flames as the Hover-08’s explode.
However, he’s no longer ignored.

Yoongi dodges the TeorSer aimed at him, aiming and firing behind himself, not entirely sure if he’s met the mark.

One of the agents further ahead manages to fire at the Heladian who was seated on the back of the Hover6. Yoongi takes the assassin agent out neatly. He zips past the flames of the Hover-08 and is in time to watch how the Heladian falls back, unseated from the Hover6. However, a blurred but glaring neon-red glows in the form of a full-fledged Being for a fraction of a second and picks the Heladian up again.

[HELADIAN_ANTI-CORE IMPLEMENTED]

Heladian anti-core? According to what he’d read earlier about Heladians, their species had the ability to manipulate their Life-force to an almost identical replication of the formidable frozen nature of their home-planet. With their in-built ability to conform Life-force into frost, Heladian’s were a formidable and powerful species though they were notably very peaceful in their diplomacy and policies. What did the Heladian anti-core imply?

[CAPTURE HELADIAN_INITIATE]

The Heladian is secured back on the Hover6 and Yoongi does a quick head count. Even more of the were appearing. They were already locked onto the Long-Huon’s coordinates and were probably actively tracking him.

‘Activate highways 02_58_132-SRDS, 02_58_134-SRDS, 02_58_135-SRDS.’

Yoongi lifts away from the pillar of bright fire that erupts, static shivers through the polarized highways like the final beat of a dying pulse.

The light of the eruption is so bright, the sky seems to darken momentarily and its surrounding shine all the brighter and Yoongi watches how Transporters in the highways are thrown back in ripples of energy, breaking apart with the Beings it carried. He watches as light seems to refract and bend as polarized highways erupt around each other, disrupting their electric charge and catalyzing more chaotic detonations down the highways. He watches how nearby building faces shatter, showering sharp shards of glass in large raining radius down on the streets and tiers.

Yoongi is flung back from the sheer power of the force of the explosion despite having moved away. His Hover-08 flips through the air a few times, stopping just in time before crashing into the face of a building.

Large sections of the Capital City loses power, and Yoongi watches how one of the power facility towers gives out and hundreds of surrounding Transports malfunction, lighting systems spark and fail, water systems flood, and in sections, highways lose light and Transporters fall down to their fiery demise.

[REASSEMBLE]

[UNIT 2 RETURN TO BASE]

[UNIT 3 DEPLOY_EXECUTE MISSION 9357-2595-1109]

Yoongi knows what it is. He understand that gut-wrenching feeling. He has a name for it now.

His Awareness had caused this. His desire to live, his desire to understand, his Mind.
He caused this.

Guilt courses through his vein and Yoongi understands.

The Užkulisai is docked neatly in Debris 149, the Pluns’na right next to her. There were no visible signs of obstructive scans or search conducted on the exterior of the ship though it was crawling with Para-Bots. The Pluns’na was strapped down to a gravity-lift, attached to a series of small docking platforms and a few guards were running about, getting into their own Transporter, clearly headed over to whatever shit-storm Yoongi had started and left behind. And with that huge slaver-ship in the way as well, the whole of Grezma was in a state of panic and frenzy.

‘We should wait for them to leave first-‘ Hoseok begins but Yoongi flies them straight into the Debris and Hoseok glares at the back of the Human’s head.

‘Yoongi-?’ Sk’jin begins too but Yoongi is already accessing the weapons-control panel and Hoseok dives across his seat to stop Yoongi from opening fire.

Yoongi side-eyes Hoseok who has a reprimanding expression on his face, countering Yoongi with exasperation.

‘We’ll draw unwanted attention to ourselves,’ Hoseok explains, clearly struggling with Yoongi who hasn’t budged an inch away from the weapons-control panel.

‘But we should clear out any potential threat we may encounter.’ Yoongi argues blandly.

‘We do not engage unless we’re attacked first-‘

‘-we’ve already been attacked-‘

‘-in a new environment.’ Hoseok’s face turns a little red with exertion, clearly pulling at Yoongi’s hands that is inches from the surface of the screen.
Sk’jin rolls his eyes, leaning over both of them and takes over the controls, guiding them over to a shelf under a Debris above them.

‘Yoongi, while I am not against violent displays of aggression and general bad-assery, I think it’s best if we stay low-key,’ Sk’jin mumbles. Yoongi sighs in defeat and nods.

‘Good- we wait for as much of them to leave and then we go get our ship. So right now what we do is plan.’ Sk’jin leans back, stifling a groan of pain, arms crossed. ‘As we have lost the isotope-tracking on our beloved Captain, we can’t pinpoint his direct location though no doubt he is inside the ship.’

‘He won’t get killed either,’ Hoseok chimes in. ‘They’ll find out his identity quickly enough and will probably sell him off to the highest bidder around. Information Analysts fetch an exceedingly high-price.’

‘Who exactly are they?’ Sk’jin gestures towards where the slaver-ship should be, on the other side of Grezma.

‘If they’re here in Grezma, an outpost run by former Venture Unit agents, then it’s most likely that they’re affiliated with the Isbahaysiga Alliance,’ Hoseok says grimly. ‘Probably what remains of the Alliance anyways.’

‘Aren’t they supposed to have been completely eradicated?’ Sk’jin questions, raising his eyebrows.

‘Networks like this,’ Hoseok nods in the general direction of the slaver-ship though his eyes never leave the Debris they’re staking out. ‘They’re allowed to exist by the Venture Unit in exchange for units or information.’

‘That’s not much of a surprise,’ Sk’jin shifts around to make himself comfortable. ‘If they were this close to Orvan, then I’m guessing they’re the ones who take in most of the Orvanan slaves. They’re probably out for me too.’

‘Regardless of who they’re out for- I don’t think they’re directly involved with pirates. Judging by the ships, and judging by the gear the guard here were wearing, I think they’re more of a “proper” business-network.’ Hoseok ruminates.

‘We could find more information about them if they use this outpost regularly right?’ Sk’jin taps along the screen. ‘Your buddy could have stored information regarding the ship.’

Hoseok grimaces at the term before shaking his head. ‘No- outposts don’t carry information like that- it’s too risky.’

‘What about in your buddy’s personal screen?’ Yoongi asks.

‘Well he could-’ Hoseok begins, clearly no longer feeling the need to correct the wrong labels.

‘Here.’ Yoongi pulls out a small sleek clear device from inside his clothes and hands it to Hoseok.

‘And you didn’t think this was necessary before this?!” Hoseok exclaims, quickly activating the device.

‘No.’

Hoseok groans quietly as he goes through the content.
‘Yoongi I think we’re clear- let’s go get our ship,’ Sk’jin says, peering out his side of the window for any incoming shuttles.

Yoongi lifts off from the shelf and heads for the Debris holding their ship.

‘Find anything?’ Sk’jin asks, glancing over at Hoseok who is scrolling down, tapping at random across the ship.

‘Yeah…and…this is not going to be easy,’ Hoseok frowns before he looks up. ‘This isn’t just part of the Isbahaysiga Alliance. This slaver-ship is run by a ring of pirate-lords, GLA officers, Venture Unit agents, and outpost governors. I think they’re trying to create their own Alliance- to replace the Isbahaysiga Alliance.’

‘There’s more of the ships?’ Sk’jin asks as they approach the landing dock.

‘Possibly- if we make ourselves known, or if we involve ourselves in this- not only could we jeopardize this mission completely, but hand them information and tools that would prove detrimental to the Known Universe,’ Hoseok’s eyes don’t leave the screen, narrowing them as he reads more. ‘What’s worse, we don’t know who could be involved, so even if we were to report this, it could prove fatal or at the very least, dangerous not only to us, but the Beings captured as slaves.’

‘A ship that large could be carrying close to a 100,000 Beings in it,’ Sk’jin muses, thinking back to the overall size of the slaver-ship. ‘The engines are on the side, leaving the entire central hull past the Bridge free for “storage”.’

‘Why don’t we report this to the Yishengs.’ Yoongi says unexpectedly as he lands the shuttle down next to their ship.

Hoseok seems stunned at Yoongi’s suggestion.

‘You mean to Yisheng Amme-?’

‘No- call the Yisheng public line; the public line is untraceable,’ Yoongi explains. ‘It was created for those who live in warzones across the Universe.’

‘That could actually work,’ Sk’jin nods. ‘If we report it, how long do you think it will take for the Yishengs- or well, anyone to come here?’

‘There are no nearby Yisheng stations in any of the Systems close by,’ Hoseok frowns, already searching for possible locations. ‘They would have to come directly from Tayi.’

‘Then it could take a full day, a little more,’ Sk’jin calculates quickly.

‘Do we wait for them to arrive?’ Hoseok inquires as they step out of the Transporter, staying low just in case there were K’it’y guards around. Yoongi however simply just walks over towards the Užkulisai without caution.

‘If the Yisheng come and stop this, Namjoon will be taken in for questioning and by extension us,’ Sk’jin shakes his head. ‘It’s possible that the jury might be able to bail him out.’

‘No- let’s…let’s not get the jury involved,’ Hoseok says as they follow after Yoongi.

‘Why not?’ Sk’jin questions curiously.
‘I don’t know if Namjoon would like me telling you this but, remember I told you that Lisai didn’t have the language you were speaking in registered in her database?’ Hoseok pauses by the entrance to the airlock antechamber room, allowing Sk’jin to enter first, locking up behind them.

Sk’jin nods in response, ignoring the welcome message from Lisai, taking in the dirty boot prints that messed up the floors of their ship. They had probably conducted a manual search of the ship.

‘Namjoon suspects that Lisai has been compromised- her database is barricaded or at least somehow restricted,’ Hoseok turns to look Sk’jin straight in the eye, not hiding the fact that he’s clearly looking for any indication or sign that this was something Sk’jin knew.

Sk’jin however is genuinely taken aback.

‘That’s not possible,’ Sk’jin argues flatly. ‘The GLA database is limitless and accessible to all living Beings in all corners of the Known Universe- you can’t “block” or keep away certain information like that- it’s impossible.’

Hoseok doesn’t let off the interrogative look and Sk’jin huffs in irritation.

‘Just because I was speaking in a language Lisai didn’t have in her database doesn’t mean I was involved in this Hoseok,’ Sk’jin declares firmly. ‘And if you want to know, I was speaking in Long-Huon, a language that should very well be included in the database considering it’s extremely important for translating as most of the GLA authorized pilots from the Trade Sector are from Long-Huo.’

‘That may be so, but wouldn’t you agree that it’s too much of a coincidence that it just so happens to be the language you were speaking?’ Hoseok shoots back. ‘If this situation was reversed, then you too wouldn’t just let me off.’

‘Hoseok look-‘ Sk’jin begins but they’re both startled by the sound of loud obvious sounds of a fist fight of sorts followed by a shriek and running footsteps.

A K’it’y guard comes bursting in but is met with Hoseok’s fist before he can even begin to regret his decision to run. Yoongi pops his head past the corner and says, ‘The ship is cleared. We should move.’

‘I’ll go start the ship, you two get rid of this lot,’ Hoseok mumbles, casting a wary glance at Sk’jin who rolls his eyes and bends over to grab the unconscious K’it’y’s booted legs.

Yoongi had taken out 4 of their numbers while the other had run away. They easily shove them out and Sk’jin waits for Yoongi in the Hangar as he pulls the Pluns’na into the Užkulais.

Sk’jin waits by the control screen by the Hangar gate, watching as Yoongi carefully maneuvered the Pluns’na. Why would the database be compromised? That too for the Long-Huon language? What else were they restricted from? If the database they had access to through Lisai was compromised, then all the screens, operation systems, even their Navigation Codes and information regarding outposts, current and recent changes to information regarding potentially dangerous locations were now all questionable facts.

‘Is it all set?’

‘Just need to secure the Pluns’na,’ Yoongi responds, prompting Sk’jin into action. He lowers the Hangar gates and walks over to Yoongi to secure the magnetic strips. The Hangar was a mess of course- all of their cargo had been pulled out and had been in the process of being opened.
‘Lisai, is anything missing from our cargo?’ Sk’jin asks, glancing over at the OrTanks that were luckily not open. They would require the access code for that. However other storage freight were opened and their contents strewn about. Sk’jin is positive that manual searches were conducted not for the purpose of actually finding something, but to irk and goad shuttle owners.

‘None are missing.’

Sk’jin grimaces, wondering if he should or could trust Lisai now that he knows.

They quickly make their way to the Bridge as Hoseok starts up the engines, checking the systems for any sign of tampering or error.

‘Everything all right?’ Hoseok asks, not looking away from his screens.

‘We’re good to take off,’ Sk’jin replies as he foregoes his usual station and instead takes up the Navigator’s Mast.

‘So what do we do?’ Hoseok asks, turning on his seat and addressing Sk’jin as Yoongi too looks up from his seat in the tower-mast.

‘First we need to contact the Yisheng public line- they need to extract Namjoon out of the slaver-ship,’ Sk’jin states their objectives. ‘The slaver-ship is still near Grezma- according to Keghtsa’s screen, they’re still loading the ship with slaves from the cells. They’re also waiting for the Orvan I think- seeing as Keghtsa was so kind as to report me to them.’

‘If they leave, we won’t have the chance to get Namjoon out or even follow them without being detected,’ Hoseok wipes at his face.

‘No- we can’t afford to let them go,’ Sk’jin states firmly. ‘We need to board them as soon as possible but we won’t be able to approach them without being detected- we’d be giving ourselves up.’

‘We have a time-frame of less than a day to penetrate the slaver-ship, retrieve Namjoon, and get out,’ Hoseok calculates, ignoring the sudden amused grin on Sk’jin’s face as he mouths ‘penetrate?’ quietly, shoulders shaking in suppressed laughter.

‘I’ve sent the message to the Yisheng public line with the coordinates of the slaver-ship,’ Yoongi interrupts. ‘We have a day to break Namjoon free.’

‘What if we can get close to the slaver-ship without getting detected,’ Hoseok asks, ‘Then what do we do after that?’

‘Someone has to stay back here of course,’ Sk’jin replies at once. ‘Because I stand out too much, I will stay back. Then that would mean you and Yoongi would enter the ship, possibly disguise yourselves as one of the guards and infiltrate their ranks.’

‘You make it sound easy,’ Hoseok frowns.

‘Simple plans are often the ones that work the best,’ Sk’jin counters.

‘It can work,’ Yoongi states from the front. ‘We can use the uniform of the Grezma guards and then apprehend the uniform of the guards aboard the slaver-ship.’

Hoseok’s face scrunches a little in thought, clearly planning the entire plan in his head.
‘It’s the only plan we have right now that we can pull off with most amount of success,’ Sk’jin states plainly. ‘We don’t have time.’

Hoseok nods grimly, turning back to the control-panel and activating the thrusters; ‘We can take the shuttle back to one of the Debris with the prison cells, and you can come pick us up later. Or we will return- we’ll keep open communication and you can track us on Yoongi’s… special tracker.’

Sk’jin jumps a little when Yoongi hands him his screen, having not seen him move earlier.

‘Sk’jin, how are you?’ the Human asks, leaning in to look Sk’jin clearly in the face.

Sk’jin glances at Hoseok with some surprise but nonetheless replies, ‘I’m fine Yoongi, really. Don’t worry about me.’

‘Will you be able to commandeer the Užkulisai while Hobster and I sneak penetrate the slaver-ship?’

‘Look I know I could have chosen a different word-‘

‘Yes I can Yoongi,’ Sk’jin sniggers as Hoseok huffs, blowing his hair off of his face and getting up from his chair. ‘I promise you I won’t just faint about.’

‘Wait- you can fly?’ Hoseok asks in surprise.

‘It’s a little unbelievable if the pirate-lord of one of the most notorious pirating networks didn’t know how to fly,’ Sk’jin intones with a wry smile, leaving the Navigator’s Mast and stepping into the cockpit.

‘You… lied to Namjoon?’ Hoseok sounds slightly disdain’d.

‘Well,’ Sk’jin throws himself into the chair Hoseok normally occupied and flexes his hands. ‘When you put it that way- it makes me sound like I did it out of malice.’

‘…so you lied out of… benevolence?’ Hoseok raises one eyebrow.

‘I did it for fun,’ Sk’jin smiles, brushing his hair back. ‘It’s easy messing up with Namjoon.’

‘But at what cost,’ Hoseok grumbles as he leaves the Bridge, following Yoongi closely.

Hoseok was still clearly thinking about their access to database and of Lisai’s restrictions but was putting it at a pause for now. Sk’jin sighs out in relief, because he needed time to think about this as well.
Unit 3 had compromised of 8 agents. Each of which Yoongi had trapped and caught, rummaging through their items and taking all of their gears and gadgets. He finds a series of compressor-syringes inside their uniform pockets and pulls them all out. They’re clear tubes with thin white markings on them. His visor scans the syringes and separates them into 2 types. Anti-Core, and Preventive Core. They had shot the Heladian with the Anti-Core. The Preventive Core was to counter the Anti-Core because it wasn’t stable. Did the Anti-Core subdue the Heladian abilities?

Yoongi pockets all of them and watches with increasing guilt mounting inside his chest as another agent twists in anguish, body arching to the point of nearly breaking, as they couldn’t handle the Android Core.

None of the 8 could handle it. Not a single one.

Yoongi removes his helmet, watching with his bare and uncovered eyes as each agent faded into nothingness. He would remember each of them, and he would remember them. Mark them into his memory and remember them.

Because no one else remembered them.

His body aches, even his uniform and the medication he consumed couldn’t prevent him from feeling pain anymore. Yoongi is sure that he’s bleeding out from somewhere. He’s had to stem the bleeding from his nose, breathing in only from his mouth though the air he breathed was laced with the tangy and heavy taste of blood.

The Long-Huon was headed for Galūnė; Šerdesas’s neighbouring sister-planet. It was a good idea to leave the planet, but if the GI were sent after them again, they wouldn’t be stopped. Yoongi isn’t sure how they’re being tracked, but he knows that if another mission is issued out. They would get caught again.

Yoongi checks his screen. There is no news from K’mara.

He waits inside the tiny room next to the one the Long-Huon had rented an hour ago, carrying with him an unconscious Heladian. Yoongi closes his eyes, not breathing, and empties his mind as they walk out and past his room. The shadow behind Zitao doesn’t notice him.

But at this proximity, Yoongi can hear him.

He hadn’t heard him before, having only used the frequency channel he had hacked from the Stravechi Nava channels. But here, like this, Yoongi can hear him clear as day. Could no one other than the Long-Huon hear him?
Yoongi couldn’t listen in on their conversation, as their Comm-Devices were offline. The Long-Huon had however, used a public line to call K’mara, giving her their location. So was K’mara ignoring his message?

But for what reason?

They walk past, clearly headed out. Yoongi knows that the GI agents have stopped, returning back to base. No new mission had been sent out, no new order had come in. It was quiet from base.

Great acting skills. Ever considered getting a career in actin’?

‘Shut the fuck up,’ the Long-Huon growls out in a low voice.

Yoongi steps out the moment they turn the corner.

That sounded more angry than drunk-shit stop!

The Shadow could detect him.

*They’re here- they’re here fuck shit how?!

‘Stop fucking freaking out – you’re not going to get hurt- it’s just me and Min-Seok!’ the Long-Huon hisses.

How did they even find us? Tracking us in the city should be nearly impossible!

The Lieutenant replies back in a low voice but Yoongi can’t hear.

Y’know that if you really want to escape you should probably leave snowman behind- logically speaking that’s for the better.

There’s no response. The Shadow has a logical and tactical point. Yoongi pauses by the hallway.

Figured as much. ‘sides you made a promise so I guess you’re gonna die today kiddo- it was nice knowin’ ya.

‘Will you shut up?! I’m trying to think here-’

Yoongi steps out entirely and is finally face to face with the Long-Huon. The Heladian in his arms is horrifyingly pale and drawn. Yoongi can barely detect any movement from his form, and as Yoongi runs a brief scan over the Heladian, finds that his heart was beating at an abnormally slow speed.

…so what do we do?

The Shadow is clearer to Yoongi now. Yet it still remains a blurred form but Yoongi can tell that it is taller than him. He can’t detect a face or proper features but the general outline is there. It floats, hunched and almost deformed in the air but the head is clear and the outline of low horns extend from its shadowed form.

Should I tackle him, blink twice for yes, once for no- come’on work with me here.

His eyes, however, are striking and vivid and Yoongi has a hard time believing that no one else can see it.

Yoongi moves cautiously and carefully. Any sudden movements would trigger an attack and he doesn’t know how he would combat this Shadow. He takes out the small device from his inner-lining pocket and tosses it to the Long-Huon who catches it, looking away briefly.

Yoongi steps away immediately and out of the hallway.

He pauses inside the room he’d been hiding in and he waits.

A few moments later the Shadow enters the room. It’s neon-red eyes bore into Yoongi, studying him.

What are you just doin’ sittin’ in here- fuck, y’all are creepy as fuck-

‘What is your name?’

The Shadow stops, eyes widening, realizing that Yoongi can see him.

‘What is your name?’

The Shadow drifts to the side, as though testing Yoongi’s sight. And Yoongi follows his movement.

‘I can see you. Who are you? What is your name?’ Yoongi repeats again.

The fuck…

‘Please inform the Lieutenant that the Heladian is in great danger. That he needs to inject him with the Preventive Core.’ Yoongi reports.

Spaces- you can see me.

‘I can.’

...what are you? You’re...you’re Human aren’t ya? You smell familiar.

‘Smell familiar?’

Yea- like those Humans back at that ship, y’know?

‘Navigator Kim Junmyeon, and Co-Navigator Do Kyungsoo.’

Yea- them. You’re from Earth? But y’seem different- dunno ‘xactly why.

The Shadow moves closer.

It’s like you’re one of them- from there.

‘From where?’

Shit-ass place- better if ya don’t know- but s’not the same ‘gain…

‘Who are you? What is your name?’

Shouldn’t ya tell me your name first hon?

‘My name is Yoongi.’

S’pretty name y’got there
'What is your name?'

I had a bunch of names- identities y’know? Had to,- ran a huge network before got stuck

‘Stuck where?’

Shit-ass place, s’where I met Mr. Eye-Bags out there- s’long story- don’t have time- so ya ain’t here to kill snowman?

‘No. I am here to protect him.’

Not doin’ a good job of it

Yoongi feels his bones protest to that remark but he doesn’t reply.

Well, if that’s it, imma leave now ‘k?

‘What is your name?’

So persistent- but if ya want one, just call me Jin yea? But like, not in fron’ of the others- s’complicated shit

‘Thank you, Jin.’

Sure kiddo, whatever, well gonna go-?! Where’re you goin’?

‘I have to make sure the Heladian survives. He must.’ Yoongi says as he walks out. The Shadow converges around him.

There’s a shit ton goin’ ‘round here- he ain’t gonna trust ya

‘But you trust me.’

I didn’t say that kiddo

‘But you haven’t killed me.’

Yoongi walks out of the stuffy red-lighted hallway of the eatery and lowers his visor again. He spots the Long-Huon easily enough. The Lieutenant was obviously tired, and carrying the dead weight of another Being was stressful, especially when they were dying.

‘It won’t kill him, if that’s what you’re afraid of.’

The Long-Huon gasps loudly as he notices Yoongi. His sulfuric-yellow eyes glow in the dark of the lowest streets of the Capital City, holding the Heladian in his arms fiercely.

‘Why should I trust you?’ The Long-Huon rolls his eyes- for what reason Yoongi does not understand.

‘It won’t kill him,’ Yoongi repeats.

‘You had no hesitation in shooting at us while we were on the high-way- why do this now?’

It was apparent and obvious that the Long-Huon wouldn’t trust him. Yoongi remembers what Zhoumi had said nearly a year ago. That living beings were not comfortable with behavior and mannerism they weren’t familiar with. Which was why he needed a name. Which was why he was always asked to sit down, so as to not discomfort others around him.

‘Because,’ Yoongi shrugs in imitation of the actions he had observed throughout his year of slowly increasing awareness. ‘You better do it before he really dies.’

‘Are you from the Galactic Inquisition?’

The Long-Huon’s resolve is slowly shaking. He’s desperate, Yoongi can tell. He wants to heal the Heladian, but he can’t trust Yoongi. And Yoongi doesn’t blame him either.

Yoongi remains still, watching as the Long-Huon watches him with burning intensity and wariness.

They’re out on a busy street, Beings walk around them, unaware of the gravity of the situation around them and what this could potentially lead up to. Yoongi himself doesn’t understand. And he believes that neither does the Long-Huon in front of him. At least, not entirely understand.

‘Sure,’ Yoongi mimics the Cahyan in his response, ‘Honestly- hurry up.’

The Long-Huon still doesn’t move and Yoongi watches as the Heladian’s health-tab starts alerting him of biofunction failure. Yoongi takes a quick step forward, reaching into the depths of the Long-Huon’s pockets and injects the Heladian, then steps back. The Long-Huon responds quickly but not quickly enough- which was what Yoongi had been hoping for.

He protectively holds the Heladian away and Yoongi watches as the health-tab stabilizes slowly.

‘There. Get out of here- you have nearly 15 minutes before the others arrive in this area. Take the underground- it messes with their signals.’

Yoongi follows the flow and movement of a Being who walks past in between them and dodges around.

He notes a pair of red-neon eyes follow him and Jin gives him a farewell wave before moving back towards the Long-Huon.

Yoongi feels the tiniest lift in the weight of the dead that now followed his every step.

‘Can you hear and see us?’
‘Loud and clear boys,’ Sk’jin replies, leaning comfortably back into Hoseok’s chair, legs propped up against one of the control-panels. The NaviLet in one hand, a glass of some sort of alcoholic drink in the other, and the weapons-console screen on his lap. He’s propped up one of the larger screens to serve as the main viewing displays. On it, Yoongi’s camera feed shows Hoseok in front of him. They had made quick work of the K’it’y uniform and had flown out to the Debris with the most shuttle-populated docks. They blended right in, what with the uniform, Yoongi’s lack of presence and not to mention, Hoseok’s complete change in appearance.

Of course Sk’jin knew about Hoseok’s species abilities. But he hadn’t known to what extent this “change” could go to. Though Hoseok couldn’t physically grow taller or shorter and couldn’t change the entirety of his gender, he could, however, completely alter his facial features, the colour of his skin, the length and colour of his hair, the colour of his eyes, and to an extent, the bulk of his being.

It had been utterly bizarre to watch—and also painful though Hoseok displayed no signs of experiencing pain.

His skin seemed to ripple, the masses of tissue and muscle and fat shifting and forming new outlines. It was so bizarre that even Yoongi stopped to stare. Then promptly smacked both of his hands over Hoseok’s face, squeezing and pulling.

Hoseok, entirely taken aback by Yoongi’s actions, more or less freezes up. Yoongi continues to pulls and squeeze at Hoseok’s face as though enthralled and Sk’jin wonders if he should perhaps step in and separate them. But then Hoseok bursts out laughing, clearly delighted by Yoongi’s reaction.

Hoseok now no longer looked like himself, his skin tinted green, and his hair completely receded out of sight, he looks like any other K’it’y though taller than most. Yoongi had moved to tear out the added bionic features from the unconscious K’it’y guards faces to make it more believable but was promptly stopped by Hoseok, claiming that it wasn’t needed, a wildly anxious look in his eyes.

They were now rounding up the slaves who were imprisoned in the Grezma outpost. This rather small but clustered moon-graveyard carried more than it appeared to. But the cramped cages the enslaved Beings were squashed into sure did save room space. He grimaces at the obvious cruelty and mishandling of the slaves. Not that Sk’jin would say that there was a “proper conduct” regarding the treatment of slaves (there isn’t—slavery was, and is, and will always be wrong according to Sk’jin), but he has known many slaver-ships and organizations that have imprisoned their slaves in individual cells that are clean and more or less designed to resemble prison albeit mobile.

This was torture, degradation, and a blatant abuse of power to exercise oppression to the basest level.

Sk’jin’s skin burns and he briefly wonders how Hoseok and Yoongi are handling this. But more than them, wonders how Namjoon is processing all of this. With a history like the ones all Kutsogleran faced, it wouldn’t be surprising to find Namjoon in a state of anger and hurt.

Hoseok and Yoongi can’t speak now, or they might break cover. Yoongi is easily overlooked but Hoseok gets a few looks, probably due to his height seeing as most of the K’it’y were rather short, more or less the same height as Yoongi. But he’s not questioned or looked back at. Hoseok also displays a flawlessly natural mimicry of the K’it’y’s posture, movements, and mannerism, displaying his long years of experience as an infiltration agent. Hoseok doesn’t possess Yoongi’s lack of presence but rather the unnerving ability to reflect on the atmosphere, environment, and composition of what surrounded him.
They enter the slaver-ship now, pushing and pulling at the cages to line them up.

‘Hoseok, Yoongi- direct the cages further to the back then slip to the back and find me any open port, jack, or screen,’ Sk’jin orders quietly, sipping at his drink.

Hoseok and Yoongi don’t reply but they do as Sk’jin commands. Sk’jin’s screen is divided into two, one feed from Yoongi’s Iris and other from Hoseok’s. Neither of them needed to be guided through any of this,- they were both solo operatives who have both done recon missions like this more times than they can recall. Sk’jin’s attention goes back to the NaviLet in his hands.

‘Lisai- please access Terminal Pod-030-219-RX811.’

‘Terminal Pod-030-219-RX811 not found.’

Sk’jin taps his fingers along the length of the chair.

‘Lisai,- please access GIU Mission code RG-399-0X2.’

‘GIU Mission code RG-399-0X2 not found.’

Sk’jin gazes out of the windows in front of him, not really seeing the view. He brushes his hair carefully, fingers running over his temples.

‘Lisai,- please pull up all public footage from coordinates 02_58_132-SRDS, Capital City, Serdesas.’

‘Footage inquired is corrupted. Would you like footage from another coordinate?’

‘What is the closest coordinate to highway 02_58_132-SRDS?’ Sk’jin asks as he absent mindedly watches how Hoseok and Yoongi overwhelm and overtake a small group of small differently clothed guards.

‘Closest footage found in highway 08_21_599-SRDS. Would you like to view?’

‘No,’ Sk’jin replies as he pays attention to the split screen in front of him, activating his Comm-Device to Hoseok and Yoongi’s.

‘Who are they?’

‘I think they’re slaves who are forced to work aboard the ship,’ Hoseok replies in a low and quiet voice. Even his voice was different. Sk’jin isn’t sure if it’s an act or if the physical changes across his body alters his larynx as well. ‘They have collars on their necks.’

‘They’re charged with detonative batteries,’ Yoongi says in an even quieter voice. ‘They have no cuffs.’

Sk’jin grimaces. This was beyond cruel.

‘Killing them would be more merciful than if they’re discovered,’ Yoongi states.

Sk’jin wants to protest but he knows Yoongi is correct. The collars could have always been charged with different methods on killing its wearer. An electric shock, a tightening reflex, maybe even some projectile that could sever the arteries inside the neck. But to actually detonate. This was probably an offensive use as well- not only were they forced to serve the very Beings who were oppressing them, they were walking around, living weapons that would probably not only kill the wearer but those around them.
We’re not doing that.’ Hoseok says, his voice harsh. ‘We’ll hide them for now.’

‘What happens after we leave. They will be killed.’

Sk’jin watches Hoseok glare at Yoongi, his eyes betraying his determined tone. Because he knew that what Yoongi was saying was the truth.

‘Leave them for now- the Yishengs will come and their lives might be spared,’ Sk’jin cuts in before anything else can happen. They both acquiesce and carry the bodies between themselves easily until they find a narrow doorway, leading into stuffy storage room of sorts.

‘I found you your port,’ Hoseok says as he settles the bodies down, glancing at an open transformer on the side of the wall. ‘Are you sure there’s no surveillance feed?’

‘Yes,’ Sk’jin and Yoongi both answer at once.

‘Ships as large as this don’t have surveillance systems- surveillance can lead to evidence if they’re caught.’ Yoongi replies. ‘If you find any camera, it’s a fake, installed to make the slaves believe they’re being watched.’

‘It’s their own fear that’s trapping them in.’ Sk’jin remarks as he sets up BluePrint and steals the entire layout of the ship. BluePrint was a highly illegal and brilliant little application that was undetectable. Though it did nothing to control the ship it was installed in, it travelled at the speed of light through every digital wiring network across any ship, building, shuttle and sent that data back to the user in the form of 3D shapes and outlines of whatever was scanned. Illegal and probably as expensive as buying an entire planet, Hoseok had casually downloaded the application into the NaviLet through his own screen and showed Sk’jin how to use it.

‘That- and the vacuum of space. Even if they were to escape, they would have no place to go.’ Hoseok chimes in gravely. ‘Are you getting the layout?’

‘Yeah- give me a minute and let me figure this out,’ Sk’jin mumbles, chewing on his lower lip as he studies the slaver-ship layout. It was massive all right, built mainly for storage. This was after all a Venture Unit issued ship, made for transporting large amounts of resources and materials mainly for the construction of Docking Arcs.

‘We’ll need to get our hands on one of the guard’s screens,’ Hoseok plans. ‘Then we can pinpoint Namjoon’s location.’

‘You should head down either way,’ Sk’jin states as he overlaps Yoongi’s tracking system over with the BluePrint system. ‘There are sections labeled as cell-gates in the lower hulls. Go back in the direction you came from, and take a left instead of a right. Then proceed up the stairs and you’ll come out into the Central Hull Facility. Then you take Bridge Gate 32 to the elevator.’

‘Got it.’

Hoseok and Yoongi leave quietly. In the dark of the small room, Hoseok has already altered his appearance. He has a sad mop of dullish brown hair and greying skin. He even has bruises and marking around his exposed skin. Curious, Sk’jin takes the manual control over Hoseok’s camera and angles it towards Yoongi.

His skin is extraordinarily fair but covered entirely in old scars. No single stretch of skin was free of scar tissue or permanent discolouration. Signs of burns, lesions, and every other possible physical injury has been imprinted upon Yoongi’s skin. Sk’jin hastily shifts the camera back to the front when Yoongi’s dark eyes stare straight into the lens, boring into Sk’jin’s eyes.
So far the two of them make it out into the Central Hull without any problem. However as they cross over the bridge extending over the deep drop of the Hull surrounded by the groaning sounds of the imprisoned Beings just brought in from Grezma- they’re stopped by a guard. Without any warning, Yoongi is struck across the face, jostling the camera view a little as Yoongi falters backwards.

Sk’jin winces, wondering if Yoongi will be able to control himself from reacting how he normally would. Though in all honesty, Sk’jin has no idea how Yoongi would have reacted if left unwarned.

Hoseok too is smacked across the face before they’re tossed into the elevator and the Guard is cursing out at them in another language.

‘Lisai, please translate.’ Sk’jin asks, looking around for a Translator-Cuff to attach to his Comm-Device.

‘Language not found.’

A flare of irritation burns up inside of Sk’jin.

‘Lisai, renew your language database to the most updated version through the GLA Database,’ Sk’jin orders irritably.

‘Communications Manager Sk’jin does not have the authorization to update the Užkulisai Core.’

‘Fucking Namjoon,’ Sk’jin growls as he goes through the aforementioned Being’s NaviLet with more force than necessary. He sets the update for the Language Core manually.

‘Captain Namjoon does not have the authorization to update the Užkulisai Core.’

‘What-?’

There’s a scuffle from the split screen in front of Sk’jin and he almost misses how easily Hoseok takes out the aggressive guard.

‘We got a screen.’

‘And just what do you plan on doing with the body?’ Sk’jin inquires irritably as he tries to update the Language Core through Hoseok and Yoongi’s authorization code.

‘Like this.’

Yoongi lifts the hatch on the floor of the lift and kicks down the body swiftly just as they stop on a floor.

‘Find a place to hide and find Namjoon,’ Sk’jin orders as their codes are both denied.

‘Working on it,’ Hoseok mumbles as they make their way out of the elevator.

‘Lisai- who has the highest authorization code aboard this ship?’ Sk’jin asks carefully, pulling his legs off of the screen, his skin suddenly crawling.

‘Authorization code 6055-2707-2188.’

Sk’jin knows that this code doesn’t belong to any of them on board. But he checks again anyways.

‘Lisai,’ Sk’jin says as firmly as he can, standing up despite feeling strangely weak and it had nothing to do with his recent bouts of fainting. ‘Please track crew member with that authorization code.’

‘Authorization code 6055-2707-2188 is currently located in the Hangar Bay. Unit 09.’

Yoongi finds no one waiting for him to ambush him as he returns.

He walks down the hallway and finds it just as empty, just as lifeless. He opens the doors and finds some rooms empty, some rooms occupied. The occupied rooms have the agents in Sleep and Yoongi watches the faint light of their bedding outline their shapes against the dark of each room.

In a sort of numbed state of being and mindlessness, Yoongi walks down the hallway, opening each and every door, filled with a growing sense of urgency he doesn’t understand.

He needs them to be here. He needs them awake. He needs them to understand.

Why was he alone in this.

He looks down at the agent on the bed. One hand carries a screen, ready to install the Android Core, ready to implement the core that had triggered his wakening. He holds the cable from the helmet device over the agent’s head in the other hand.

But he can’t do it.

According to the news in Šerdesas, an error in the main OS that controlled the polarized highway had short-circuited and caused the accident. The worst accident to have ever occurred in Šerdesas in over 3 centuries apparently. The body count was at 476 and increasing. The injured were thrice that in number and Yoongi doesn’t have enough bones in his body that can break as punishment for what he has done.
What would happen to the rest of the agents if they did gain awareness. Would Yoongi be able to explain. Would he be able to explain what it meant now. What this new Wakening meant for them as individuals?

Yoongi pockets the screen and connects the wire back to its seamless port on the wall. He steps out and closes the door quietly. He’s just in time to catch a trio of agents walking in through the main door down the hallway. Yoongi watches them, unmoving, quiet. And they walk past him, without a single indication that they noticed him.

Yoongi follows one inside their room. The agent gives pause to look at him, but doesn’t do anything else. He removes his helmet and places all of his gear on the shelves.

In this lighting Yoongi surmises that his skin is deep green in colour, and his hair is wispy and white. Yoongi isn’t sure where he’s from, but he knows that if he were to ask the agent, he wouldn’t get a reply. The agent strips himself of the uniform as well and steps into the bed. Yoongi can see the serrations, scars, wounds, lesions scattered thickly all over his skin. His feet ended in hoof-live cloven appendages, the skin of his legs suggesting a sort of hydrostatic skeletal system.

The helmet at the top of his bed lowers and the agent simply sleeps without a single acknowledgment towards Yoongi.

‘Can you hear me?’

There’s no response. Of course there isn’t.

‘Do you understand me?’

It’s silent again.

Yoongi doesn’t understand the feeling inside his chest. The urgent desire to do something but he doesn’t know what. He pushes out of the room and opens every door over and over and finds either empty beds or Sleeping agents.

Yoongi doesn’t know how many doors he’s opened, leaving many wide open and some slammed shut as though hoping to create noise enough for someone anyone to come find him. He wrenches open what feels like the thousandth door and instead of the typical room outfitted with a faintly glowing bed and shelves, he finds stairs leading down.

Yoongi hears his own breathing, harsh and loud. His mind wavers, unable to process what he was looking at. He blinks hard a few times, even pulling up his visor and pulling it down again. This was real. What he was seeing was real.

Recovering somewhat, Yoongi carefully scans the stairwell that ends at the 18th step before leveling out to stop in front another door. Yoongi steps through the door, closing the door behind him. It’s instantly pitch dark and activating the dark-lens over his visor, Yoongi steps down. He senses nothing different here. It’s a lot cooler down here though. He feels the chill of the ordinary door handle permeate the fabric of his gloves as he twists it open.

A faint light gleams through the small crack and Yoongi looks inside quietly and carefully.

He’s greeted by a tall but narrow room, lined with shelves from top to bottom. On these shelves were countless identical compressor-syringes. Each syringe was placed inside a clear glass casing. Yoongi walks up to the containers, reading the white labels on them. He finds them neatly labeled with a species, race, or genome type. They all looked like the Anti-Core used against the Heladian. And sure enough, when he reaches the index with the Heladian planet coordinates, he finds the Anti-Core nestled in there as well as the Preventive Core.

Were these all Anti-Core compressor-syringes created to be used against a species of Beings to nullify or exterminate their abilities? There’s another doorway at the end of the narrow hallway. Yoongi’s eyes flit side to side as he makes his way to the end of the hallway. He recognizes all sorts of species and races labeled there and wonders if he’ll find some form of Anti-Core for Humans as well.

The door here is a simple door without any lock or security other than just a simple handle. Pulling on the handle, the door opens to a landing with stairs on either side of it, overlooking a space that seemed to extend out the entirety of Yisheng Headquarters land-radius. And filling this space were long narrow tubes, filled with liquid and in each of these tubes were Beings.

Yoongi opens the door wide and steps into the landing, pushing up his visor.

Beings of all species, race, gender were inside the tubes. They were all naked, curled in on themselves like fetuses. No pipes extended from their forms, no indication of life-support. They were all just afloat but alive. Yoongi can see the pulse on the side of a floating Being’s neck, thrumming under his skin.

There is no information, no screen, no explanation. Yoongi’s mind cannot come up with any data for him to compare this to. He can’t process what he sees.

Stepping up to a tube, Yoongi places his gloved hand over it.

The Being inside is asleep. She was actually sleeping. What was happening? Why were they here? Where did they come from? What were their names?

Yoongi’s hand freezes, his body seizing up.

Had he been in one of these before?

Yoongi sprints down the long rows, eyes wildly searching for any answer- any form of explanation. He slams into a tube and falls back. His body screams in pain, his limbs throbbing and his mind reeling. This was too much. This was all too much.

By the time his eyes focus and his mind somewhat manages to quiet down, Yoongi recognizes what he’s been staring at.

Pushing himself up, Yoongi finds that he’s staring at a fetus. A small curled up form- its species is one Yoongi does not recognize. It floats connected to a tube that seems to integrate down its back. Yoongi's hand instantly flies to the back of his neck, feeling under the fabric of the uniform for the dent he couldn’t explain and didn’t have an explanation for. The fetus twitches just little, shifting inside the clear liquid. The umbilical cord that extends from it ends as it branches out into smaller wire like extensions downwards to the floor of the tube through a dark wide gaping hole. Yoongi crawls forward, a strange violent reaction forcing itself out of him and he coughs violently, retching as he spits out hot and bitter bile. He wipes his mouth with his hand, heaving loudly as he tries to straighten his back but his entire body feels like it’s on fire. Was he on fire? Yoongi can’t tell- his skin is burning- was his suit falling apart? He removes his gloves violently, but finds that his hands are all right. No sign of trauma or heating. He feels at his face, shocked to find his cheeks wet. Was it sweat? What was it?
He can’t process anything- the only thing that screams louder than the vortex of confusion that claims him is the need to get out.

He places his bare hand over the glass of the tube, trying to stand up when the glass lights up with writing.

SUBJECT NUMBER: UW-022-848511

GENOME DERIVED FROM: NNWAL’E

    PLANET: UWA
    SPECIES: OSISI
    SUB-SPECIES: NNWAL’E
    RACE: AGBURU

DESIGNATED BIRTH: GLA 9630

Yoongi pushes back violently.

Then just like the hallway upstairs, Yoongi is filled the urgent need, the almost violent desire to know more- to see more.

He slaps his hand across the next tube and writing lights up immediately.

SUBJECT NUMBER: LA-284-925581

GENOME DERIVED FROM: KUYUSERA

    PLANET: LAPANSI
    SPECIES: MAFUNSO
    SUB-SPECIES: KUYUSERA RACE: PAMENE

DESIGNATED BIRTH: GLA 943

And Yoongi goes to the next. He checks at least 10 more before his legs give out and he’s crashing down again.

This was where he was born.

This was where he was made.

Yoongi runs back out and up the stairs, past the shelves of Anti-Core, slamming the doors behind him.

‘I have arrived at the Yisheng Headquarters. Please come to the front Atrium. I will wait for you.’

In his shock, Yoongi unsheathes his TeorSer, aiming and pointing already, body tense and coiled up like a spring, ready to jump into action. His ears are ringing and his heartbeat erratic.

‘Understood Admiral.’ Yoongi finds that his voice, despite his internal state of being, sounds entirely normal and just as monotone as before. He sinks to the ground, his limbs suddenly numb. He pockets his TeorSer just as the strangest humming sound fills the long hallway. But before he can even remotely process what it was or begin to plan investigating it, his helmet makes a small sound near his ear- a mission indicator.

Completely taken aback, Yoongi lowers his visor, trying to process what he heard and what he saw. His eyes take a while to focus and he has to read the message twice over before he understands it.

[SYSTEMS COMPROMISE]

[BREACH DETECTED]

[ERROR_SELF-DESTRUCT INITIATE]

Yoongi tears the helmet off of his head and is showered in a rain of black dust that diminishes into nothing once again. Panting, and feeling sweat run down the side of his face, Yoongi dives into the room in front of him and watches as an agent disintegrates into dust. Hastily running out, Yoongi opens the next door and finds dusted remain that vanish again.

And with every door Yoongi opens he finds each agent laying in there, fall apart into dust. The chances of finding an agent without their helmet was slim, and Yoongi opens the door to every room and finds only dust.

But one door he opens to an agent who had apparently just returned from a mission. She stares at Yoongi, her expression blank. Did she too, have a hollowed line down her back? Was she made here, to serve this mindless and pointless purpose they weren’t aware of?

‘What is your name?’ Yoongi demands.

‘Restate your request.’

Yoongi’s chest constricts with pain that isn’t physical or a result of his many injuries.

‘What is your name?!’

‘Restate your request-‘

‘WHAT IS YOUR NAME!!’

The agent is unfazed, staring simply at Yoongi without any form of recognition or regard. Yoongi falls on his knees, overwhelmed, exhausted, and pained.

‘What is your name?’ he whispers.

‘Restate your request.’
After taking out 7 more guards, sneaking unnoticed and overlooked for the next 4 hours or so, Hoseok and Yoongi finally find Namjoon’s location. With some amount of guilt and regret, Hoseok knocks out the working-slaves that they were going to replace as part of the unit meant to guide Namjoon towards the 10th Bridge Chamber.

Under their working-slave uniform, Hoseok and Yoongi are armed to the teeth. The Guards inside the slaver-ship didn’t explicitly carry TeorSers – only the ones at the Hangars carried TeorSers. Hoseok thinks this might be because of the working-slave’s collars. Instead they carried an assortment of blade-like weapons, but not ordinary ones either. They were armed with Heliord blades, a highly dangerous and effective weapon if used properly after the proper training.

Hoseok grins as he pockets a few of the deactivated Heliord handles, carefully strapping them to his torso long with the many blades they’ve managed to collect between themselves. Fighting alongside with Yoongi is something of a surreal experience for Hoseok. Hoseok has worked with other Beings before so it’s not the first time he’s had to do so- however this is the first time he’s never had to plan a course of action with the Being he’s partnered up with. Yoongi neither leads their unit nor does he follow- instead as Hoseok jumps into action, Yoongi shadows him perfectly, creating a mirrored balanced effect that leaves them practically invulnerable. Hoseok barely ever had to say anything but Yoongi followed up on Hoseok’s schemes as though he had thought of the same, or he would be the first to move, and always in a way where Hoseok could follow up flawlessly.

Hoseok is itching for a wild and open combat-battle alongside the Human. His skills were beyond effective and Hoseok knows this isn’t the whole scope of it.

During their espionage trek throughout the slaver-ship, they find even more enslaved Beings. At one point, they come across wide spaces that look like massive laboratories and Medical Bays but Hoseok knows these weren’t established for the health of the enslaved Beings.

They come across sectionalized areas as well. Where the enslaved Beings were separated by age, gender, species. The worst had been coming across the children. Hoseok’s fingernails dug into the palms of his hands painfully but he walked on. The Yishengs would come, and they would be freed. He repeats this to himself like a chant, hardening his heart and refusing to acknowledge what his eyes were seeing.

Sk’jin was quiet too. He would randomly send reports, such as the Orvanan Forces arrival, or the Grezma outpost condition. But that was it. He sounded stricken and seemed to speak his words with a lot more effort and force than was natural for him, and Hoseok briefly worries over the Khol’isa’s health.

Yoongi on the other hand, shows no sign of remorse, pity, or any outward emotion. Hoseok wonders if Yoongi is capable of showing or even remotely feeling any emotion or if his emotional response was trained out of him.

Or perhaps he had seen too much before, and now none of this even fazed him anymore.

They exit the elevator alongside 2 other working-slaves and a large hulking guard. They stop in front of the door before Namjoon’s and Hoseok glances over at the plain simple door. Were they guiding someone else other than Namjoon? This could potentially prove to be difficult to work around. They hadn’t considered the prospect of someone else being there.

The door opens and out skips a Being, grinning too much, overall too happy to be locked up and enslaved and potentially get killed. He waves delightedly at them and for the first time in the past several hours, Hoseok catches Yoongi react.

His eyes widen, mouth parting as he looks at the Being. And before Hoseok can even process this reaction, the unknown Being launches himself at Yoongi, hugging him delightedly.

The Being is jerked back, shoved against the door and promptly kneed in the gut. Hoseok, though worried, is more taken aback at Yoongi’s reaction. Pure fury and anger paints his normally monotone features and his body tenses, ready to attack.

Hoseok is quick, reaching out to grab Yoongi above his elbow, shaking his head slightly.

‘Yoongi.’

Sk’jin’s warning sounds strangely off- like Sk’jin was having a hard time believing Yoongi’s reaction as well though Hoseok feels something heavier in the Khol’isa’s warning.

The Being, though just kneed, just bounces up as energetically as before and stands obediently in the middle of barrier the working-slaves form.

The Guard opens the other door and out pops up Namjoon, looking bedraggled, displeased, and generally pissed off. He doesn’t look at Hoseok or at Yoongi, only glancing over at the unknown Being once as though checking to see if he was all right. Of course Hoseok isn’t surprised that Namjoon doesn’t recognize him seeing as he’s wearing a different face and form. And of course he knew that Yoongi lacked physical presence but at this proximity and relation, Namjoon looks over Yoongi and doesn’t notice the Human at all. It almost makes Hoseok want to snigger.

They guide them quickly past several hallways and up the elevators. They had tried getting Namjoon out before this sudden “meeting” at the 20th Bridge Chamber, but it had proved impossible despite their efforts. And now with this new addition who seemed thoroughly unstable, Hoseok wonders how they’re going to work this out.

The unknown Being walks behind Namjoon and turns back swiftly to stare at Hoseok for an incredibly long period of time. Hoseok can’t help but feel like this Being can see past his disguise and can only hope he doesn’t say anything. Instead the unknown Being offers him a bright smile that is so heartfelt that Hoseok almost returns it.

They stop in front of the doorway that lead into the Bridge Chamber and Namjoon, the unknown Being, and the Guard walk in, closing the door shut behind them.

‘Hoseok, Yoongi, continue on with our plan.’
Hoseok wants to argue but he can’t speak. What did Sk’jin mean by that? He glances over at Yoongi who has his normal expression of utter indifference back on again.

It’s only after 10 short minutes that Namjoon comes back out. The side of his face is swollen and his eyes are dark with suppressed anger. The Being behind him trips as he’s shoved out of the room, and purely out of instinct, Hoseok catches him.

‘Ah! You saved me! Thank you!’ his voice is deep but so very bright- it’s a contrast Hoseok can’t quite process.

Hoseok wants to roll his eyes as he’s smacked across the face. This was getting old very quickly.

‘Stop that.’

Namjoon’s voice is low but Hoseok catches it.

‘Hm?’

‘You’ll get them into trouble too.’

Namjoon looks deeply troubled, clearly deep in thought as they walk back again. Except this time they don’t take the same route. They go downwards even lower.

‘Get them out of there.’ Sk’jin orders.

The elevator doors open and Hoseok strikes first. The dagger strapped to his back goes flying, burying itself hilt-deep into the Guards head. Yoongi is also already throwing, his dagger landing with precision as he takes out the additional Guards.

‘That was so cool!’

Hoseok nearly trips back as the unknown Being wraps his long arms around him in a tight embrace. Normally Hoseok would be very quick in pushing such approaches but finds that he doesn’t really mind. Hoseok shifts his face back to normal and notices how Namjoon gawks at him from the corner of his eyes.

‘Er-hi-?’ Hoseok starts but is nearly squeezed in half by the force of the hug and he’s given a delighted kiss on the cheek.

‘I almost couldn’t contain myself! That was amazing!’ The Being exclaims, radiating happiness. ‘It’s nice to meet you! And you too Yoongi!’

Hoseok does a double take as Yoongi dodges a hug, nodding at the Being in recognition. So he did know him.

‘How did you get inside? What about the collars?!’ Namjoon demands. ‘And where’s Sk’jin?!’

‘Can’t explain- it’s safe- we don’t have time,’ Hoseok manages to gather himself and starts stripping off the working-slave’s uniform off of his unconscious form courtesy of Yoongi. ‘You’re gonna have to disguise yourself.’

‘Did you kill them?!’ Namjoon directs this question at Yoongi.

‘No. They’re unconscious.’

Hoseok bundles up the uniform and tosses it at Namjoon. The Kutsogleran easily breaks his cuffs that makes the stranger exclaim out in awe. Just who was this Being again?

‘Sk’jin is waiting for us; we have to hurry.’ Hoseok says as he hands Namjoon a Comm-Device. The stranger gives him an expectant look, eagerly waiting for a Comm-Device as well and Hoseok finds himself handing one to him. Hoseok guesses they would bust this guy out too. If possible.

Yoongi has deactivated a few more collars and hands one to Namjoon to complete his look. Though he knows there’s no security cameras watching him, Hoseok can’t help but feel like they’re being watched. He glances over at the stranger and quickly forms a plan in his head that might actually be more sound.

‘Um- your friend is fine- we can pretend that we’re escorting him back up,’ he starts explaining as he heads back to the elevator. Namjoon is staring at the cameras, clearly alarmed at their rather blasé regard to the surveillance system.

‘They’re fake. Sk’jin checked.’ Yoongi explains, though Hoseok wouldn’t have worded it that way. They had no concrete proof that there was no form of surveillance but seeing as they made it this far, he’s willing to trust Hoseok and Sk’jin’s information. Namjoon looks equally unsure about the entire thing, but he lets it go, giving both him and Yoongi and nod and starts approaching the elevator as well.

‘But wait.’

The stranger calls out, not moving an inch. He’s dressed different than the other enslaved Beings. He’s wearing a wide loose light grey sweater on top and darker pants that were probably made with enough material for another pair or so. He’s barefoot as well and honestly looks like he’s just some form of holographic projection rather than being a real form in front of Hoseok. Everything about him just screamed outlandish and odd, his existence cutting a strange outline in the reality around them. He looks serious right now, green eyes glinting in the artificial light.

‘I still need to set them all free.’

Hoseok glances over at Namjoon. They obviously knew each other before this- probably through the cells in Grezma.

‘Taeh’yung look,’ Namjoon has a tone of something like desperation and apprehension in his voice as he attaches the Comm-Device to his ear. So that was his name. Who was he? ‘We don’t have the time or the means to do this-’

Taeh’yung gathers himself up, as though to make a counter argument but Namjoon randomly grumbles out harshly, ‘-Spaces, what?’

Namjoon’s expression goes blank, to shocked, and then confused in a span of a second before he’s staring at Taeh’yung who still looks resolutely determined to stay behind.

‘What?!’

Namjoon is listening to whatever Sk’jin is clearly saying and Hoseok casts a confused look at Yoongi who is fiddling with the battery charges from the collars as though completely disinterested from what was happening.

‘Taeh’yung? Please,’ Namjoon steps out of the elevator and draws Taeh’yung back towards them. ‘And put on the Comm-Device, please.’

This Taeh’yung steps inside, an alarming shift in the air around him follows him and it’s tinted a strange green. Hoseok feels the need to unleash the Heliord inside his shirt lining but neither Namjoon nor Yoongi seem to think much of it.

He’s thrown out of loop, however, when Taeh’yung exclaims in delight, ‘I can’t believe this!’.

The air around Taeh’yung rapidly turns normal and he’s actually quivering with excitement. What was Sk’jin saying? What could he possibly even say?

‘It’s so nice to meet you again Jin!’

Yoongi’s mind feels extraordinarily blank as he walks to the front Atrium of the Yisheng Headquarter. He does nothing to hide himself or reveal himself as he walks through the throngs of GIU officers that were now suddenly overtaking the place. The Yishengs are in a panic, eyes wide as they stare at the sudden intrusion of the GIU.

When he finds K’mara she’s just as composed, stately, and authoritative as he last saw her. Yoongi walks past her unnoticed by K’mara or the Beings surrounding her as they spoke and quietly walks into a room used to store supplies and other items required for the Atrium outside. Yoongi quietly dismantles the helmet in his hands, deactivating the OS and rendering it practically useless. When he slips it over his head he’s greeted with silence and blankness, the visor is dark with no information or tabs across it.

He taps on the screen in his hands, sending a message to the Khol’isa outside.

A minute later the door opens and K’mara walks in.

Despite the clearly chaotic nature of events unfolding around her, K’mara seems completely nonplussed and sits down on a storage box as though settling in for a casual chat with Yoongi.
'You have done well.' K’mara says. ‘Your mission is complete.’

Yoongi doesn’t reply.

‘Rather than send you on a mission, I would like to ask you for a favour,’ K’mara says. ‘I would like you to represent the GI- become the voice for your fellow agents who cannot speak or more accurately do not possess the capacity to formulate or understand the usage you have all been put through without your understanding.’

‘But why is that wrong?’

K’mara seems taken aback by Yoongi’s question.

‘What do you mean?’

‘Before I knew- before Zhoumi implemented the Android Core to my database, I was like them. I was not aware of what I was being used for. Does that count? Do you acknowledge and apologize to the screen in your hands for using it? Do you fly a shuttle, or a Transporter, and find that it is wrong for that object to carry you across distances?’

K’mara’s expression doesn’t change but her eyes are a different story.

‘Yoongi.’ She says gently. ‘You are not a thing. You are a living being. You live. And so do the others.’

‘We existed. We did not live,’ Yoongi replies. ‘To be Alive is different. To be Alive is to understand, to be aware, to create, to destroy.’

K’mara doesn’t say anything, watching Yoongi carefully.

‘Below the Yisheng Headquarters, under our very feet, is a large facility that houses the GI agents. How far it extends I do not know. If there are more, I do not know. But the agents who were birthed were destroyed. I do not know if the unborn live still.

K’mara blinks a few times, surprise is clearly painted on her features.

‘…all gone?’

‘A majority yes.’ Yoongi replies. ‘Part of the gear we were given as uniform is programmed to self-destruct. Those who were Sleeping and those who were wearing them were all destroyed.’

K’mara looks deeply troubled.

A small light goes off on the Comm-Device in her ear and she stands.

‘I must leave. Will you accept my request?’ K’mara asks, back to business.

‘What good will it do?’

‘It will make a difference that can either destroy or rebuild the Universe,’ K’mara replies. ‘Our actions and words today will forever craft and shape the future of all Life.’

‘I do not know what the GI have done. I do not know who made us. Why we were made. For what intentions we were used.’ Yoongi replies. ‘I want to know everything.’

‘And under the best of my ability I will help you find this understanding- I will help you find your answers,’ K’mara promises.

‘Thank you, Admiral.’ Yoongi intones blankly.

‘For the sake of those who remain, the others like yourself, the knowledge of our meetings should stay between us only.’ K’mara says as she gets ready to leave. ‘There is a lot that has happened. A lot that has triggered events that both of us are a part of. Our understanding of our positions is clear- we did what we had to do,’ K’mara subconsciously rubs at the side of her neck, her eyes flashing neon-red. ‘And you did what you had to do.’

Did he? Yoongi didn’t understand most of what he did. Didn’t understand most of what he saw. And most of all, didn’t understand most of what he felt.

‘I would have to ask you to pretend that we did not meet prior to today.’

‘Mission accepted.’

‘It is not a mission. A favour.’

Yoongi doesn’t know how to respond.

‘I will ask some of my men to retrieve you when the time is ready. Please wait for them in sub-room 0519.’ K’mara says as she opens the door. ‘I believe you know who is there.’

Yoongi knows all too well.

‘Good luck,’ K’mara says before she steps out of the tiny closet.

Yoongi sits inside the supply closet until the sounds outside have minimized. Stepping out into the oddly empty Atrium, Yoongi makes his way across and into the an elevator. He presses the panel for the 5th under-floor and he descends quietly.

It’s empty here too. As though all the Yishengs and GLA officers vanished into thin air. But Yoongi can hear quiet movement and even quieter voices from some of the rooms. He stops in front of room 19 and opens the door.

Zhoumi is sitting up on the bed; he looks worse than the last time Yoongi saw him not even 2 days past. He’s lost more weight. His skin is haggard and translucent, marked oddly by the scales that push out from his skin unwarranted.

He’s also awake.

‘Yoongi?’

His voice is coarse and weak. Very barely audible. He has tubes attached to his arms, the Medical-Bed he’s in encases him in a light that was battling whatever ailment besieged him. Had they used some form of Anti-Core on the Long-Huon?

‘Yoongi…is that…is that you?’

Yoongi steps closer, pulling off his helmet completely and placing it on the small table next to the Bed. There’s a screen mounted on the wall to the side without any volume, and Yoongi recognizes the frequency channel as a private GIU surveillance feed.

It’s Earth.
This was where he came from. The elemental foundation of his genome was printed from this planet, from her unique chemical composition, making him different from the rest of the Universe. Earth, by extension, was Yoongi. And Yoongi, was Earth.

Earth had only one moon, and right now Yoongi can see two large structures orbiting his native planet. One was a ship. A very massive one at that. He doesn’t know what it is. Yoongi has never seen such a construct before.

‘What is that?’

‘That…that is them,’ Zhoumi wheezes out weakly.

Yoongi doesn’t understand what Zhoumi means. And maybe he doesn’t have to.

He looks away from the screen and back at Zhoumi. The Long-Huon’s eyes are dull, his sulfuric-yellow eyes now a faded shade of its former vibrancy and hue.

‘They’ve found him,’ Zhoumi pants out. ‘They- they found him- and it’s all my-…all my fault.’

Yoongi looks back at the screen. The red-ship has shifted, angling its massive form differently and showing more of Earth.

Yoongi knows it’s his planet. Yet he doesn’t feel that connection. Doesn’t understand if what he felt was detachment or hopelessness. The surface of his planet pulses with magenta light, disrupting its atmosphere, clouds evaporating and thinning, pushing around in unnatural patterns and form.

Yoongi reaches out to the screen, lightly touching the surface. The moment his finger makes contact, a strong magenta light pulses even more violently over the entirety of the planet and Yoongi can actually see how the continents seem to crumble, breaking apart in giant fissures and rents, the oceans shifting violently.

‘What are you doing?’ Zhoumi’s voice is weak and frail.

‘Tell me.’ Yoongi’s eyes never leave the screen as he witnesses the death of his planet.

‘How many planets do you see from here?’
(Author’s Note)

Look, Yoongi and Hoseok combatting with super cool sci-fi swords I JUST NOPES

Also I’ve made a moodboard to show what the Užkulisai looks like both outside and inside, and other stuff here!

I almost couldn’t update tonight. My router was doing stupid stuff and my wifi died out on me FOR SPECIFIC WEBSITES LIKE BUZZFEED AO3 AND AFF EXCUSE YOU WIFI

ALSO I AM LIVING FOR NAMTAEGI IN BV2 I CAN’T WAIT FOR THE NEXT EPISODE

I LOVE 2SEOK SO MUCH I CAN’T BELIEVE THEM
“Birth” [noun]: the start of life as a physically separate Being.

There is a continuum that exists beyond the identity of Being, beyond the properties that are essential to the existence of being. The endless exchange, the endless surety that what starts, what is, what forms, has an end. There is no end of the spectrum—where one end begets life, and the other ends it. It is a cycle that exists beyond the realm of existence—beyond the realm of Matter and Time and Space. A cycle that Is. A cycle that is continuum. A cycle that unapologetically moves forward. Because where there is a beginning, there is always an end. Where there is an end, there is always a beginning.

Yoongi lines up all of the uniforms neatly folded from every shelf, from every room. He collects 650 uniforms, including his own, and lines them all up against the long corridor way of the base. He stands at the very edge of the doorway, uncaring of his naked state.

Life-force is a mysterious thing. It exists in everything and is the main component that comprises and formulates all Living Beings. It is the energy that exists between the bonds of atoms, the link that connects respiration to the intangible reactions that supply oxygen to fuel every cell, the elevation of the mind that brings forth the power of the mind and imagination. It is Life. It is Soul. It is everything that makes you Alive.

Yoongi stands still, arm raised up, his palm open towards the east, waiting for the sun to rise.

And now you are song, you are infinite—let the music of your souls live forever on among the stars, to guide us and direct us, to remind us and preserve us. And most of all, to live forever within us, that we may enrich your memories with our own, and together become one.

Sunlight fills the hallway behind him in pale golden light, pure and gentle, forgiving and welcoming.

A touch of beauty where only death had once reigned supreme.

He closes his fist, holding onto the sunlight and places his fist over his heart.

He’s not sure why he’s doing this. No one knew of them. No one would ever know of them. They had no name, no identity.

They were dead from before they took their first breath.
Yoongi can feel his heart beating under his palm. A steady beat, one that seems to contradict the bitter still of death.

Yoongi sits down on the gravelly landing before the doorway, watching the sun rise through the trees, listening to the song of birds, the whispering rush of distant voices, and faint footfall of the procession now leaving the Memorial Site.

Yoongi sits still for so long that little creatures from the forest climb up over him, inspecting his form curiously. They never go past the doorway of their base though.

It has been a little over a week now, and K’mara worked tirelessly and endlessly, searching the base top to bottom.

The entire facility spanned out further than even Yoongi had anticipated. Across the main grounds adjoining the Yisheng forest, they found 7 other bases, and within each, had discovered identical hallways and expansive spaces filled with more tubes. K’mara, the remaining Yisheng Directory, a few other officials from the GLA, and the Venture Unit had scanned and studied the base amidst shocked horror, morbid curiosity, and jaw-dropping fascination.

The surviving Yisheng population returned from every corner of the Universe and banded together to heal damages, redo all the wrong they had unknowingly allowed to happen. Many were studying the Beings inside the tubes, while the others were redistributed and sent to Earth, where over there they could aid in balancing the chaos that took place there.

A few agents had survived; but none seemed to have the same awareness, the same Life that Yoongi possessed. They were simply handed over to the Venture Unit, a matter that K’mara seemed to have great issues about.

Yoongi hears approaching footsteps but he doesn’t move away.

She appears through the trees, a wild and almost threatening addition to the environment. She pauses until she stands before Yoongi.

She’s tall and creates an alien silhouette against the backdrop of the morning forest behind her. Her form, to most, would have been frightening, but Yoongi doesn’t know what frightens him, if anything at all. He recognizes her species, from the planet of Khhem; were the Khemsas- a rare and strange race of Beings even by Universal standards. Yoongi believes that she might be the only registered Yisheng to have ever emerged from her planet. She burns a stark and almost violent colour, her presence seems to quiet and still the surroundings, almost as though in fear of her. But Yoongi sees the reflection of ancient stars in her eyes- wise, gentle, and powerful. She has 2 pairs of arms, one of them holds a robe, similar to the ones he’s seen patients in the Headquarters wear.

‘My name is Amme.’

Her voice is deep and low, strangely musical according to Yoongi though he has not heard any music at this stage of Awareness.

‘My name is Yoongi.’ He replies, still unmoving, looking up at her.

‘I know,’ she replies, all 6 of her eyes blinking in unison. ‘They told me I would you find you here.’

She hands him the robes, remembering his first formulated thoughts in Zhoumi’s apartment. Most Beings are uncomfortable with nudity. That felt like it had taken place light-years ago.
‘How may I help you Yisheng?’ Yoongi asks, wearing the robes and covering himself before he stands in front of the Yisheng. She walks past him, stepping down towards the doorway of the base. This base had already been studied and analyzed by the Yisheng team. But as today was the day that officiated the Memorial event, all Yishengs took leave of their tasks to pay tribute to those who gave their lives to right the wrongs of a past that held on to the future. She closes the door gently before turning back around and standing before Yoongi once more.

‘No Yoongi.’ She extends one of her hands towards Yoongi. ‘I am here to help you.’

‘It’s so nice to meet you again Jin!’

Namjoon glances over at Hoseok who appears to be just as surprised as himself. Sk’jin had separated the channels so now Namjoon can’t listen to their conversation though it’s not difficult to guess what was happening in the first place.

‘I didn’t know you were here- oh? Right!’ Taeh’yung begins but pauses a while before he turns serious. ‘I’ve been following this ship for a while now! But I didn’t know how to get on it without getting caught and then you know- yeah! So I tracked down one of their pick-up spots and it was here- well there, in Grezma and I waited there- yeah! I got caught- uh huh…ah! Okay!’ Taeh’yung nods, leaning into Hoseok’s chest and smiling at his front pocket. Hoseok leans back, looking mildly uncomfortable. They were obviously wearing an Iris each.

Namjoon can’t help but send a glare at one of them.

‘We’re wasting time,’ Yoongi puts in unexpectedly, displaying what appeared to be signs of frustration.

‘Okay! I got it!’ Taeh’yung holds up a thumbs-up.

‘Namjoon- the Yisheng will be arriving in approximately 2 to 3 hours,’ Sk’jin begins; Hoseok and Yoongi listen in as well as Sk’jin clears up all the channels, ‘From what I can tell, Grezma is emptying. A few ships have left from the main Debris where Keghtsa’s office was located. I think the rest of the Governors are headed there; the slaver-ship is stocking up as well it seems. So the slaver-ship will be docking a little longer, but will probably leave before the Yishengs arrive here. You’ll need to do something in order to stop them long enough for the Yishengs to get there.’

‘Wait-’ Namjoon interrupts with a frown. ‘We could probably leave now without any issue, pretend to be a shuttle headed back for res-stocks or something-’

‘And allow the ship to escape?’

‘Why does this matter to you?’ Namjoon demands.

‘And why doesn’t this matter to you?‘ Sk’jin retorts. ‘Out of everyone in this fucked up crew you should be the one who feels the most about this!’

‘It’s not that!’ Namjoon spits out, eyes glaring fiercely. ‘If I could I would stop it all! Do you really think I don’t want to? Especially after all I’ve been through? Do you really think I wouldn’t stop to burn this fucking ship to ashes?’

‘Then what’s stopping you?’

‘Just look at our numbers- we are not enough to do this- we’re barely escaping the ship on time and-‘

‘Taeh’yung can lead the way and all you’ll need to do is access the systems for an engine or turbine and fuck it up in a way where they can’t repair it.-‘

‘There are too many risks to that! Areas like the Engines Room will be heavily guarded and potentially be under surveillance as well! We’ll get caught for sure! There is no point if we achieve nothing other than death!’ Namjoon hisses out. ‘The Yisheng will be able to catch up to them- we know the make of this ship- Yoongi can keep some form of tracking device on them and we can send them the frequency for it-‘

‘The Yishengs do not fly with an offensive battle-ship! They won’t be able to take over unless they’re allowed to dock inside the ship!’ Sk’jin snaps. ‘I have the BluePrint for the ship, I can guide you through the entire place- neither Yoongi nor Hoseok were caught and they were in there for more than 4 hours. You know this can be done.-‘

‘This is not part of our mission!’ Namjoon groans in frustration. ‘We are already lagging far behind in our mission- any additional delay will only put us further back! News of our “capture” will spread, making it more and more difficult for us to get to places where we can actually dock and restock! We still have 7 months, hopefully, before we arrive at Bhumi-‘

‘Fuck the mission!’ Sk’jin yells, causing Hoseok and Taeh’yung to flinch. All three are watching Namjoon as though he was the most interesting entertainment program now showing. ‘Who the fuck cares about the compromises we’ll be making- we’re already crippled enough as it is- this mission was already intended to be something else- besides this is just a few more hours that we can definitely afford-‘

‘Sk’jin,’ Namjoon sighs out. ‘I understand how you feel. I understand how everyone feels about this- trust me, I really do. But I am the Captain of our ship, of this mission, I am responsible for not just the mission, but for each and every one of you. The mission’s success, your lives, are my responsibility.’
The line is quiet for a while.

Namjoon looks up at Hoseok and Yoongi, both of whom are no longer looking at him.

‘It’s all right,’ Taeh’yung says out of nowhere. ‘If the Yishengs are arriving in a few hours then I can stop the engine or something and put them all here in the meanwhile. You guys go ahead.’

‘Taeh’yung no-’

‘No.’ Yoongi states bluntly before he addresses Namjoon. ‘We’ll stay here until the Yishengs arrive. The 4th Engine Hull is closest to our current location. Accessing and tempering with it won’t take long. Hoseok and I can take care of it if you don’t want to go. Taeh’yung can stay with you. Sk’jin will find a place where you will be safe until the Yishengs arrive.’

Namjoon knows he’s gawking but he can’t help it. It’s the most they’ve heard Yoongi speak, and despite the spacey attitude he had in general, there was no denying the clear rationality and certainty in his voice.

‘Sk’jin, which level is the 4th Engine Hull located in? Also, please find an empty facility room where Namjoon and Taeh’yung can stay until after Hobi and I return.’

‘Oh- uh yeah, one second Yoongi.’

‘Hobi is a really cute name! I’m Taeh’yung,’ the Zhak’gri introduces himself to Hoseok who gives the latter a smile of sorts.

‘It’s a nickname. I’m very good at giving nicknames.’ Yoongi intones rather randomly, as though he weren’t just giving out orders.

Namjoon doesn’t know what he wants to feel. First of all he’s irritated that Yoongi’s plan basically has no immediate flaw. Second, he’s thoroughly confused as to how Taeh’yung knows not only Yoongi, but Sk’jin as well. Third, he’s uneasy with Sk’jin’s behavior because the Khol’isa distinctly sounds disturbed. And last of all, Namjoon feels strangely panicked. Sk’jin’s words from a few minutes ago unsettles Namjoon in a way he can’t rightly explain.

‘Please give me a nickname too!’ Taeh’yung makes his request excitedly.

‘I don’t have one yet.’

‘The 4th Engine Hull is located in the 14th level. Take the lift straight down and make your exit towards the 5th gateway.’ Sk’jin replies, his voice sounds a little strained.

‘Are you all right?’ Hoseok asks worriedly as he and Yoongi head towards the elevator.

‘Wait!’ Namjoon calls out, stopping Hoseok and Yoongi again, the latter of whom looks very exasperated now. ‘You’re just going now? What about-’

‘Under GLA Standard Laws regarding Unit Team legislation, members of the Unit Team can hold votes to decide upon the direction their Unit Team will go.’ Yoongi declares. ‘I call for a vote regarding our current predicament. Who agrees with Sk’jin?’

‘Me.’

‘Me.’
Hoseok gives him a swift apologetic smile and says, ‘Me.’

‘Votes stand at 3 against 1, we will now proceed.’ Yoongi swiftly turns and walks into the lift.

Namjoon knows for certainty that he’s greatly underestimated Yoongi.

‘Namjoon, Taeh’yung there’s actually a corridor past that room-’ Sk’jin begins, sounding a little stunned, as though recovering from Yoongi’s sudden input. However he stops when Namjoon, huffing irritably, follows after the two, Taeh’yung quickly catching up.

‘-Spaces what the fuck are you doing now-‘

‘A ship this size is operated on systems that can’t be easily overtaken unless you’re planning on physically blowing up huge chunks of it- that too, the back-up systems will act up at once,’ Namjoon sighs out, hitting the elevator panel and tapping on the number 14. ‘I’ll stop the engines.’

No one says anything and Namjoon starts changing, quickly pulling off his shirt that was honestly revolting, exchanging it for the working-slave uniform. His arms would be exposed in this, Namjoon grimaces at the idea of it. Before he’s able to pull the shirt over his head, Taeh’yung jumps him, arms wrapping around him.

‘I’m so happy!’ he declares, trapping Namjoon’s arms that are halfway inside the uniform sleeves. Namjoon, with some difficulty removes Taeh’yung off of himself, not heeding the way Hoseok and Yoongi are both openly staring at him as he proceeds to change.

‘You can dump them here-‘ Hoseok is saying, leaning down but Taeh’yung takes the clothes and there’s a green flash of light and they’re completely gone.

Yoongi, Hoseok, and Namjoon find themselves pressed into a corner of the elevator, their postures defensive and expressions wary as Taeh’yung simply dusts his hands as though it was some neat little magic-trick.

‘You can ask questions later- you’re almost there.’ Sk’jin says sharply.

Namjoon snaps the deactivated collar around his neck, fighting the urge to crush the object in between his fingers. The collar that used to cinch his neck was heavier and thicker than this, but nonetheless forces past anger and hatred to simmer and boil under his skin.

They stand in formation, Taeh’yung in the middle. Hoseok’s faces morphs and Taeh’yung watches in fascination.

‘I can’t believe we’re actually doing this,’ Namjoon mumbles as the doors open and they’re face to face with the Raksane Tayian Slaver and what appeared to be a whole group of Orvanan officers and a host of 15 Guards.

The Raksane Tayian is talking affably to the Orvanan and he doesn’t look over at them as Taeh’yung steps out first, led by Hoseok and followed by Yoongi and Namjoon. Namjoon actually holds his breath as they step closer.

Namjoon watches as the Tayian catches sight of Taeh’yung. He pauses, eyebrow furrowing and then one of the Guards bellows something,- clearly some form of question. The Tayian squints as he walks past Hoseok and Taeh’yung, and then his eyes meet Namjoon’s. The Raksane Tayian does a double-take at Namjoon just before he walks past. His eyes widen and he’s about to open his mouth, clearly about to alert the Guards around him but before he can Namjoon ducks down and yells out the one thing he knows will trigger the best response: ‘YOONGI!’.
There’s a blurred movement as the Tayian goes flying back, a dagger buried into his chest, knocking back a few Orvanan officers. There’s flash of light, the sound of something catching fire, a loud exclamation, and a flash of green.

There’s a mad giggle and this prompts Namjoon to look up.

Hoseok is wielding what appears to be a not so standard Heliord, countering similar ones to the ones the Guard are using to press their attack. Or at least, were trying to press their attack. The Guards are much taller than Hoseok and Yoongi but give up and start running backwards. But Yoongi is not having any of it.

As though preplanned, Hoseok first disarms and easily overwhelms a Guard before ducking low, making his back almost flat as he hunches down, and Yoongi makes a run, using Hoseok to vault himself over the Guards, landing neatly in front of them before they can escape. And as though mirroring Hoseok’s movements, he executes the same series of actions Hoseok does, except with simple looking daggers, and in less than a minute, Hoseok and Yoongi clear the host of Guards.

‘What do I do with them?’

Namjoon finds that his mouth is hanging open a bit. He shifts his attention from Hoseok and Yoongi who start to empty out the Guards pockets of weapons to address Taehyung.

Behind the Zhak’gri is a floating green pyramid like structure inside which the Orvanan officers are trapped, their faces pressing up inside the glass? Air? Thing? of a structure. Taeh’yung looks at Namjoon questioningly, as though waiting for an answer.

‘Come again?’

‘What do I do with them? Do I kill them?’ Taeh’yung lifts his hands, making as though to swat down some insect. Images of these Beings being squashed like insects come unbidden into Namjoon’s mind and he shakes himself out of it.

‘N-no!’ Namjoon stammers out, wondering why he was meeting so many blood-thirsty Beings all of a sudden.

‘Who are they? Officers bringing in more of their own kind?’ Hoseok spits out as he approaches the floating pyramid, not particularly fazed by the sight of it. Namjoon wonders if he’s just somehow overly emotional at the moment.

‘Get closer- I’ll scan them.’ Sk’jin says. Hoseok steps closer but they’re interrupted by the sound of something falling and breaking.

Towards the end of the hallway behind them, a Guard gawks at them and at the sight of fallen Guards on the floor, blood starting to pool about. He then looks up at them for a solid 3 seconds before scurrying out of sight.

‘Shit-!’ Hoseok curses but Yoongi is already sprinting forward, clearly intent on catching the Guard.

‘Wait- not yet-’ Hoseok stops the Human. ‘We need to get to the Engine Hull first-‘

‘If he reports what’s happened- he will raise the alarm and the ship will leave,’ Yoongi declares and he’s already running off.

‘No, Hoseok- Yoongi is right- Taeh’yung, go with Yoongi and help him out,’ Namjoon nods at Taeh’yung. ‘Can you just leave them here like this?’

‘No problem!’ Taeh’yung salutes, carelessly tossing the pyramid of Orvanan to the side. Namjoon can’t hear their voices as they obviously shriek in discomfort from being treated thus. But Namjoon’s eyes latches onto their wrists and finds them cleared of cuff-links, so he doesn’t feel remotely bad for them.

‘Hoseok and I will go to the Engine Hull- Sk’jin what next?’ Namjoon asks as Taeh’yung jogs over to where Yoongi had vanished.

There’s no reply from the Khol’isa.

Hoseok frowns at that.

‘Sk’jin?’

‘Yes- I’m sorry-’ Sk’jin coughs out.

‘Are you all right-’

‘Worried about me? How sweet,’ Sk’jin croons out, his voice a little raspy. If he’s making fun of Namjoon then he was most probably all right.

‘Which fucking way do we go?’ Namjoon grits out.

‘Left and then take the second right hallway.’ Sk’jin replies, clearing his throat.

Hoseok exchanges a worried look with Namjoon before he leads the way.

‘Yoongi caught up with the Guard- oh okay maybe not- oh wait, yeah it’s- you know what never mind.’ Sk’jin attempts to give them a live update but gives up.

‘You know how to use one of these?’ Hoseok asks, handing him one of the Heliord handles.

‘No, but I’m guessing it’s not too difficult?’ Namjoon asks, taking one of the handles. He was much more comfortable with a TeorSer but obviously there were none on this ship. It was possible that the Slavers or visiting Governors would have them but attempting to obtain them was too much of a risk.

‘Depends,’ Hoseok replies as he weighs one of the Heliord handles in one hand, and a regular dagger in the other. ‘On what you consider not too difficult.’

Namjoon’s never been much a sword kind of Being, but he guesses it probably isn’t too difficult swinging one around; so long as you were able to cut down your opponent or something.

‘Yoongi and Taeh’yung are on their way back- oh wait, never mind.’ Sk’jin sighs.

‘What’s going on?’

‘Taeh’yung got distracted- oh no.’ Sk’jin’s voice is heavy with exasperation. ‘Namjoon, Hoseok; move your asses, I think it’s safe to say that any secrecy we hoped for has been blown.’

Hoseok and Namjoon start full on sprinting, never minding the possibility of coming upon Guards.

‘What happened?’ Hoseok asks and Namjoon is about 5 seconds from saying ‘I told you so- we shouldn’t have done this’ when a loud sound thunders through the air and the hallway shakes.
‘Was it Taeh’yung?’ Namjoon asks; that boy was probably too impulsive for his own good, seeing how he’s behaved so far. He hopes no working-slaves have been killed.

‘No,’ Sk’jin sighs. ‘That was Yoongi.’

The Earthian Memorial Asteroid Belt glimmers in the distance- a shimmering graveyard of the remains of what was supposed to be Yoongi’s home-planet. He feels no particular connection to Earth. It was a planet, much like every other planet he has seen or heard about. There was nothing about it that held value for him. No actual meaning or relevance.

But the Yisheng Amme had sent him here on her behalf.

Yisheng Amme had said she was going to help Yoongi and he still doesn’t know what it is that she’s helping him with or on. But here he was. Having to witness the absence of what once existed, the source of his elemental core.

The ceremony held for the lives lost had been somewhat similar to the the memorial service held to honour the Yisheng’s back in Šerdesas. Except this time everyone wore black, and a majority of them were Human.

Yoongi had caught sight of the crew of the Stravechi Nava as well. They were now numbered only at 10.

K’mara had stuck true to her word. Yoongi did not participate in the trials or in the court hearings. He was never involved, asked, or requested for his presence though no doubt, Yoongi is sure it had been demanded.

However, his testimony had sufficed, at least for the time being. Yoongi doesn’t know how he’s going to be able to shed informative light onto the “Gaia Case” as they were publically calling it. K’mara had asked Yoongi to never reveal the details about what he had seen. A promise Yoongi could make easily because he had no one to tell.
Zhoumi remained in Šerdesas, and was kept for the trials as key witness and informant. It was possible that he would be tried and imprisoned for colluding with Yisheng Tlun'hla. But Zhoumi didn’t need to be punished anymore. The look in the Long-Huon’s eyes suggested that his entire existence was a prison in which he found himself.

Yoongi hasn’t seen Zhoumi since that day.

But that had been nearly 3 months ago now and Yoongi has been living in the Mars Docks since then. Titled as assistant to the Yisheng Directory, Yoongi watched over the extraction and safety of the 603,755 Beings found inside the Akramanese Ship. They would now be taking back the last of them to Šerdesas where they would be studied and observed by the Yisheng Headquarters and Venture Unit combined.

He hears no news or information regarding the trials. And he doesn’t care for it either. Yoongi simply proceeds with his tasks.

Most Beings working aboard the Mars Dock still aren’t aware of his presence. And Yoongi preferred it that way too. Which is why he’s genuinely taken aback by the sudden appearance of a tall Being, one Yoongi has seen in the first Court Hearing but never before aboard the Dock, smiling brightly at him as though he knew exactly who Yoongi was.

‘Hi!’ he waves blithely at Yoongi.

Yoongi doesn’t heed his greeting. He simply takes another turn to walk through the massive storage units built especially for the nesting Beings inside their specialized tubes. These tubes are different from the ones at base. The fluid they float in is strangely opaque and white, yet with a transparency and fluidity that likens it to mist rather than something liquid.

‘Wait up!’

Yoongi doesn’t wait and quick light footsteps approach him and he hears a rush of noisy breathing and it’s like he can hear this Being smile without having to see it.

‘I wanted to ask a question!’ he declares, putting himself in front of Yoongi.

In the past 3 months, Yoongi has not spoken to anyone inside the Dock. Only sending messages to Amme, replying to K’mara’s inquiries on his health and wellbeing, and sending instructions regarding the processes surrounding the extraction of the Beings inside the Akramanese ship.

‘So I heard that this is the last bunch of them!’ he exclaims. ‘All of my babies are headed off now! I was wondering if I could catch a ride back with them? I want to see them get there safe and sound!’

‘Who is your commanding officer?’ Yoongi asks, his voice lower than usual from continuous disuse.

‘Oh- the Being frowns. ‘I don’t have one? I mean, I’m kinda free-lancing this.’

‘…I don’t understand.’

‘I mean they know I’m here! I am assisting the Yishengs you see!’ he explains looking proud of himself.

‘I will contact Yisheng Amme and reserve a seat for you in the final shuttle.’ Yoongi replies, hoping that answer would suffice as he extracts his screen to look up this stranger’s records.
‘I’m so grateful! I’m Taeh’yung by the way,’ he introduces himself with a bright smile before looking around the large capsule. ‘You’re like one of them aren’t you?’

Yoongi goes back to staring into the strangely opaque white liquid and replies, ‘I don’t know. I have no memory of it. There are no records.’

Taeh’yung is unperturbed by his reply and continues addressing him as though this was an entirely normal conversation to have. Instead he extends his hand towards Yoongi, palm up. Yoongi notes the faint rings of copper etched into his palm. He can’t be sure if they’re natural or painted on. In the very center of his palm is an incomplete triangle, glowing a little almost. Yoongi doesn’t know what possesses him but his entire body just acts out of accordance and he places his gloved hand over Taeh’yung’s.

Taeh’yung takes off his glove and places his tanned hands over Yoongi’s incredibly pale and scarred ones.

‘You have Memory,’ Taeh’yung says simply. ‘You are Memory. You are in my memory.’ He glances over at the capsules, lightly brushing his hand over the surface. ‘They are all Memory.’

Yoongi glances around the massive room, unsure what Taeh’yung meant.

‘So- I think you’re supposed to be GI right? GI? IG?’ Taeh’yung looks confused.

‘GI.’

‘Ah! So- are all the GI Human?’

‘I don’t know.’

‘Do you have a name?’ he asks instead now studying his hand intently.

His hands are warm, a strange buzzing energy exudes from this Being- Yoongi can only describe it as power. Power enough to collapse this entire facility if he chose. But Yoongi feels no fear inside him. The weight and pressure of another hand in his is foreign and strange.

‘Does it matter?’

Yoongi wonders at his own name. He wonders why it’s so important to really have a name.

‘Well- I guess it doesn’t- it’s nice to have one though,’ Taeh’yung grins, and he sits down, still holding onto Yoongi’s hand. ‘I like my name- I chose it for my own.’

‘You had another name?’ Yoongi sits down as well, unsure why he was doing any of this.

‘Many,’ Taeh’yung waves his free hand a bit. ‘Sometimes they get confused- but I’m sticking with this name, so that later, when the others who come after me, will recognize me through this name.’

Yoongi doesn’t know how to respond to this statement. But Taeh’yung doesn’t seem to mind; he unabashedly stares at Yoongi as though reading him.

‘You’re like one of them- but different,’ Taeh’yung quirks his head, his hand holding Yoongi’s with a firm grip.

‘I’ve heard that before.’

‘Really? From who?’
Yoongi thinks back to the neon-red eyes and shadowy figure, and how Taeh’yung had been speaking to it back at the Court.

‘I don’t know.’

Taeh’yung’s expression takes on one of regretful disappointment, ‘Ah- I would have loved to meet them.’

They don’t say anything for a while and Yoongi stares at their hands. This Taeh’yung seems contemplative as his eyes flit between the tubes and then to Yoongi.

‘I’m sorry for what happened out there.’ Taeh’yung says out of nowhere.

‘Out there?’

‘Earth,’ Taeh’yung looks sad. ‘She was a survivor- her Soul expanded for much longer than she was supposed to you know? But I guess…she was tired in the end.’

‘Earth was destroyed.’ Yoongi states bluntly. ‘Earth is not a living Being. It did not choose death; the planet was destroyed.’

‘They’re all alive,’ Taeh’yung says with wide genuine eyes. ‘Earth lived, a precious Soul.’

He has peculiarly deep green eyes that glimmer, the copper tones in his eyes appeared to move.

‘But you’ll meet another lifetime.’

‘Another lifetime?’

‘Yeah!’ Taeh’yung nods enthusiastically. ‘Everything is Continuum!’

Taeh’yung says the word as though it’s the first time he’s spoken it, slowly, dragging it out. There’s a warm pulse that spreads from their connected palms.

‘Do you see dreams?’ Taeh’yung asks out of the blue. Yoongi pauses a while, unsure how to respond for a while.

‘I do not have the memory to see dreams.’

Taeh’yung makes a thoughtful face before pointing around them.

‘They see dreams. Lots and lots of them.’

Had Yoongi seen dreams before? While he was being grown inside these tubes?

‘How do you know?’

‘Because I could hear it once- when I went inside their ship,’ Taeh’yung replies. ‘So many dreams. Past lives, Present lives, Future lives. All there.’

Taeh’yung looks at him thoughtfully before he raises his free hand, one long finger extended out.

‘What are you doing.’

‘Well.’ Taeh’yung frowns and it’s more comical than serious. ‘I’m not too sure. But he’s saying something.’
‘Who?’

‘The Second.’

Taeh’yung offers no other explanation but instead lightly taps Yoongi on his forehead, his eyes glowing a little in the process. A strange shiver runs down Yoongi’s back. Not one from cold or his sense reacting to something dangerous—this didn’t feel like that. It was different.

Taeh’yung beams at him and then stands up.

‘Goodnight babies! Sweet dreams okay?’ then he looks down at Yoongi and says, ‘You too babe!’

He happily strides away, waving goodnight at the tubes, leaving behind a very stunned Yoongi.

After a while Yoongi too stands.

He approaches the tube, his nose an inch from the glass separating him from the floating _dreaming_ Being inside.

‘Goodnight.’

Yoongi falls asleep later that night, and for the first time in his life, he _dreams._

They were going to really have to get Namjoon a TeorSer before he sliced off Hoseok’s arm, or worse, his _own_ arm. Hoseok takes the Heliord handle from Namjoon who more or less chucks it back at him as though it was some infectious rabid animal out to bite him.

They easily take down the Guard who were patrolling the hallways. The security down here was a lot more lax than Hoseok initially thought it would be. Either there weren’t a lot of Guards, or the Slavers were overly confident in their own ship and security system.

‘Yoongi did what?!’ Namjoon hisses again as Hoseok easily overwhelms another Guard. He doesn’t feel too bad doing this; however whenever the working-slaves came up, Hoseok always felt a sense of guilt and regret. Luckily, the Engine Hulls were void of the working-slaves and manned with Guards.

‘The Hulls are connected to … well a storage facility of sorts- there’s a lot of…things. In this place.’ Sk’jin sounds strangely uncomfortable and a little breathless again. Hoseok wonders if his health was acting up again. ‘There were-’

‘-like my babies!’ Taeh’yung chimes in unexpectedly, reminding Hoseok that he had a Comm-Device just like them.

Hoseok doesn’t know how to react to this extraordinary statement and apparently, Namjoon felt the same because he mumbles quietly at Hoseok, ‘Who is this guy?’.

‘You were with him!’ Hoseok hisses back as they run down another hall, large doors at the end of it. According to Sk’jin the 4th Engine Mainframe was located there. ‘How am I supposed to know?’

‘He knows not only Yoongi, but Sk’jin as well,’ Namjoon grumbles. ‘They didn’t mention anything to you?’

‘I’m in the dark as much as you are,’ Hoseok sighs out as they reach the doors. Namjoon opens the door panels so easily Hoseok would have thought they were made to open if he didn’t see the little indents where Namjoon’s fingers dug into the metal sides.

‘You’re all right though right?’ Hoseok asks as he keeps a look out. Namjoon glances at him, a questioning look on his face.

‘I’m fine.’ He replies shortly, looking unsure as though guessing Hoseok’s motives.

‘What do you think he means by his “babies”?’ Hoseok asks, shifting the subject.

‘Honestly I don’t know- he got himself caught, dragging me into it because he just knew that Yoongi would come back for me or something.’ Namjoon shrugs, his jaw set as he concentrates. ‘He can do strange things- I can’t explain it. Have you heard of the term Zhak’gri before?’

‘No,’ Hoseok frowns in thought. ‘Is that what he is?’

‘It’s what he says he is- honestly it’s just too much to process- okay we’re in,’ Namjoon declares as the doors open slowly.

It’s wide and spacious, the walls and floors lined up with massive towers of faintly blinking lights, surround the mainframe core at the center of the room. There are Beings here, clearly Engineers or maintainers. They gape at Namjoon and Hoseok.

‘Get out,’ Hoseok barks out, igniting his Heliord to make his point.

The Engineers and maintainers scramble out, avoiding Namjoon and Hoseok as best they could. Any secrecy they had was already blown and they needed speed now.
‘Namjoon hurry.’

‘I’m on it,’ Namjoon huffs out- no doubt still touchy from being overruled by Yoongi earlier. That was something Hoseok had not been expecting. It was as though they were seeing a whole new side of Yoongi. Or maybe he was like this the entire time and they just never knew because Yoongi didn’t think it was necessary. It was also the first time where he spoke more than a few words and Hoseok is honestly still recovering.

Namjoon is already at the main core, his hands flying across the large panel and already, Hoseok can feel a strange charge take over the massive towers around them, the sound they’re emitting is different and all the lights stop blinking for a few seconds before everything changes.

‘Done,’ Namjoon declares, already stepping back but still typing something into the screen.

‘All right- you need to get back to Yoongi and Taeh’yung-’

‘What are they doing anyways?’ Namjoon demands as he presses something, jabbing harshly at the surface; a strange shudder takes over the entire place and if Hoseok hadn’t been somewhat prepared, he would have fallen over.

‘We’re going to set them free!’ Taeh’yung replies.

‘What is he talking about?’ Namjoon addresses Sk’jin as they make their way back, following the route they had taken to get there.

‘It seems as though they’ve been growing or at least, mimicking some form of AI birthing tank,’ Sk’jin replies. ‘I think that’s what those Orvanan came to see or something.’

‘So they didn’t have enough innocent Beings to fuck with so they decided to grow their own?’ Namjoon spits out venomously.

‘I can’t be sure but that’s my best guess too-’

‘So what are they doing? What were those explosions?’ Hoseok asks worriedly.

‘Yoongi found some TeorSers- a few Orvanan officers were there.’ Sk’jin explains. ‘Something you can use Joonie, so that you don’t hurt yourself.’

Namjoon turns and glares at Hoseok’s chest, where the Iris was securely fastened onto his shirt front.

‘So this is for the Orvanan?’ Hoseok questions.

‘Can’t say- just hurry- take a left here.’ Sk’jin adds as arrive near the elevator again. Namjoon gingerly makes his way over the slain Guards. Hoseok eyes the floating pyramid of green with the trapped Orvanan in it.

‘Do you understand what that is?’ Hoseok gestures at the pyramid.

‘Honestly I don’t know and I don’t care at this moment,’ Namjoon says bluntly, looking down the hallways they go past. ‘Doesn’t it feel too empty?’

‘It does,’ Hoseok grimaces.

‘Did you notice that the elevator hasn’t moved from this floor until now?’ Namjoon adds as they find a Guard slumped over the floor, clearly taken care of by Yoongi. Another Guard is up ahead-at this point all they’d have to do would be to follow the trail of dead bodies.

‘What?’ Hoseok looks back at the elevator and finds that the doors are still open and the lift itself hasn’t moved.

‘It hasn’t moved,’ Namjoon frowns as they approach the end of the faintly glowing hallway. The air is green, most probably because of Taeh’yung. And the Being in question pops out as well, smiling at them.

‘Hey! Come on quickly!’ he gestures at them to hurry.

Picking up their pace, they rush towards the doorway, not sure what to expect. But it definitely isn’t the sight of Yoongi carrying 3 CapTanks in his arms, containing fetuses in them.

‘Yoongi put them down now!’ Namjoon more or less shrieks after regaining his ability to speak.

The facility they’ve entered is the size of a modest Hangar. There’s broken glass everywhere on the floor, and some crumpled bodies to the side.

‘There was a thick glass wall!’ Taeh’yung explains, as though able to read Hoseok’s mind. ‘Yoongi blew it up!’

Hoseok remembers the charges the Human had taken from the collars of the working-slaves and briefly wonders how in Spaces he rewired them to work in his will.

‘Yoongi we can’t take them all with us,’ Namjoon is trying to explain to Yoongi who looks nonplussed as he puts the CapTanks back into their shelves.

‘I was returning them. A few of them had fallen over.’ Is Yoongi’s completely leveled response.

‘So you contained the Guard? Was he able to report us?’ Namjoon presses once he’s sure Yoongi wasn’t going to do something extraordinarily strange.

‘I stopped him. I do not know if he reported us.’ Yoongi replies, he moves past Namjoon to push in some of the CapTanks that had shifted in the shelves. ‘No alarm has gone off.’

That much was true. They started no alarm, but Hoseok can’t help but feel strangely disoriented about the entire thing.

‘Sk’jin, are the Orvanan officers still here? Did they come on their own shuttle?’ Namjoon asks, scanning the shelves, a heavy expression settling on his face.

‘Their shuttles are still there,’ Sk’jin replies. ‘The Grezma guards are also still there, they’re headed back now though. If you’re going to try and sneak into one of them, you’re going to have to move fast. Otherwise hijack an Orvanan shuttle- but in that case only Hobi would be somewhat able to get into one of them.’

‘How much time until the Yishengs arrive?’ Namjoon asks.

‘One hour, I managed to access the Yisheng Dock itinerary. I’m following their trajectory and they should be here in an hour.’

‘All right- we’ve handicapped them and now they can’t move even if they want to. The Yishengs will get here and then-‘

‘What about the working-slaves?’ Taeh’yung chimes in. ‘They all have those collars- what if the Guards and Slavers threaten the Yisheng by killing them all?’

Namjoon sighs into his palms as he rubs his face with frustration.

‘This is why I said we should have just left- nothing we can do right now can completely guarantee a safe and successful bout of planning,’ Namjoon mumbles. ‘Chances of us getting out of here without being spotted is already low.’

‘Shouldn’t there be a systems-board regarding the collars?’ Taeh’yung asks. ‘Can’t you easily override that too?’

Namjoon just gapes in response, clearly thinking of a counter response.

This Being was worse than Sk’jin and Yoongi combined. And Hoseok has a feeling he was going to somewhat be fond of this strange Being.

‘That can work- it’s probably located inside the Bridge.’ Sk’jin adds.

‘We would be removing their most effective weapons,’ Yoongi too adds to it. ‘We would disarm the slavers completely. The Guards are untrained and have no real tactical formation. The Yishengs can take over easily without fear of collateral damage.’

Again, it was bizarre hearing Yoongi speak so much. The words he was speaking contradicted everything Hoseok ever thought of him. Though his expression and voice is monotone and emotionless, his eyes seem to shine with a light Hoseok has never seen before.

Sighing and pinching the bridge of his nose, Namjoon says, ‘We won’t even have to go up to the Bridge, I just need a screen or something.’

Yoongi hands him 3 at once.

‘Fucking Spaces,’ Namjoon mumbles under his breath, his hands filled with screens.

‘Should we be staying here?’ Hoseok asks, peering out of the doorway into the empty doorway.

‘No- start moving. We’re still sticking to the original plan. If we’re able to deactivate the collars then there’s going to be enough chaos to cover our movement. Get up to the Central Facility at the very least- close to the Hangar so that you can access a shuttle.’ Sk’jin orders.

‘Hoseok you take the lead, I’ll cover from the back.’ Yoongi orders and Hoseok is still a little taken aback.

Yoongi hands Namjoon a TeorSer he picks up from the floor next to him and throws Hoseok one. Taeh’yung however, refuses any of the weapons and waves blithely at the CapTanks.

‘You’ll all be safe soon okay?’ he calls out, hurrying to the closest tank and kissing it gently. He rushes up towards Yoongi, walking alongside the Human, Namjoon behind them eyes glued to the screen, and Hoseok walks past all of them, leading them forward.

‘Have you met him again?’ Taeh’yung asks, clearly addressing Yoongi. Hoseok wishes he could watch their interaction.

This mess of a situation was surely throwing a new light on Yoongi. And Sk’jin. In fact, on everyone.

‘That’s too bad! He’s trying to help now, I saw him... I don’t remember when,- but I did. But enough about all that! What about you? Where have you been this entire time?’

‘The Yisheng Headquarters.’

‘Really? Were you watching over my babies?’

‘I tried.’

‘Have you been able to dream?’

They arrive at the elevator before Hoseok can hear Yoongi’s reply.

‘It’s still here,’ Namjoon comments, a frown forming on his face. ‘This is one of the only elevators available in this section isn’t it? Why is it still here?’

Hoseok glances over at Yoongi who studies the elevator with a blank face.

‘We have no other option than to take it.’ he says.

‘I’m gonna have to agree with Yoongi on this one,’ Sk’jin says though doubt and apprehension is obvious in his tone.

‘No alarm went off- it’s possible that it’s just not in use,’ Hoseok offers though he knows it’s probably all bullshit. Namjoon’s grimace tells him as much.

‘We’re wasting time,’ Yoongi says, pushing past them and entering the elevator. Taeh’yung follows and sighing for the nth time, Namjoon too steps inside.

They were most definitely walking into some sort of trap.

‘How much longer for that thing you’re doing there Joonie?’

‘Almost there,’ Namjoon grunts out. Hoseok chances a look and finds that Namjoon isn’t exactly doing anything that seemed to require him breaking some complicated code. He’s just going through what appeared to be archives instead. But before he can take a closer look, the elevator stops with a grinding halt, nowhere near close to the level Hoseok had pressed in. They were at the bottom of the Central Facility, with the narrow bridges connecting to the elevator shaft. And surrounding them were frightened looking working-slaves and they all press up against the elevator, expressions of hopelessness and misery echo around everywhere. As far as Hoseok could see, working-slaves were gathered around the elevator shaft and even above them, where they seemed to be cuffed to the railings. They had been detected and now very evidently trapped. There was going to be no escaping this without a few hundred Beings dying.

‘Ah- up there!’ Taeh’yung declares, pointing up.

Hoseok follows Taeh’yung’s line of sight and high up on one of the Bridges were a line of Beings who Hoseok guesses are the Slavers. Taeh’yung waves at them as he says, ‘They said I had a pretty face!’.

‘Yes, very good- what do we do now?’ Sk’jin snaps.

‘You- you will give up your weapons-’ one of the working-slaves that is now squashed up in front of the elevator railings stammers out. ‘Or- or you will destroyed.’

‘Destroyed- not even killed?’ Namjoon snorts, finally looking up from his screen.
‘Namjoon-‘ Sk’jin sounds troubled.

‘I guess we’re staying put until the Yishengs come,’ Namjoon grumbles, taking a seat. The working-slaves jump at Namjoon’s actions, they’re all panicked and glancing around each other, their hands shaking where they’re gripping the railings and bars. ‘It’s up to you guys to explain why we failed our mission and what we’re doing here to the Yishengs.’

‘Look-‘ Sk’jin begins, sounding irritated.

‘Jin? You’re on a ship right? Can you fly over here? Like as close as you can get?’ Taeh’yung asks unexpectedly. There’s murmuring that surrounds them, there’s hysterical crying from many places as well and Hoseok wonders why and how Namjoon was so at ease with all of this.

‘I can do that.’ Sk’jin replies after a few seconds. Namjoon’s expression is incredulous.

‘What are you doing?’ Namjoon demands, glancing up from where he’s sitting.

‘I’ll be there in 10 minutes- are you sure about this Taeh’yung?’

‘What-?!’ Namjoon’s jaw drops open. Hoseok guesses he could have tried and informed Namjoon that Sk’jin could in fact, pilot a ship. But the opportunity never presented itself; besides it was too late now anyways.

‘Trust me!’

Rather than a question of trust, this was more of a case of intense desperation.

‘I’ll tell you the moment I’m close enough.’

‘As close as you can!’ Taeh’yung pleads.

‘P-please lay down your weapons,’ the working-slaves beg again. ‘Or- or they’re going to- they’re going-’

There’s a loud shout, and the working-slaves around the elevator flinch, their expressions stricken.

But nothing happens.

The same shout is heard but nothing happens. With shaking hands, a few of them touch their collars in shock.

‘Oh! You did it in time!’ Taeh’yung beams down at Namjoon before addressing the working-slaves. ‘You’re free!’

The effect that takes place is instantaneous.

Like a ripple in a still pond, the massive crowd of working-slaves realize that their collars have been deactivated. At first they’re unsure what to do, some are still disbelieving, while others are tugging at the collars, breaking it in half with a stunned expression. Taeh’yung reaches through the bars, and snaps a collar in half.

‘See? Free.’

There’s a scream that rends the air and a Guard falls off of a bridge and lands with a sickening crunching splattering sound some ways from where they were.
Then everything is thrown into chaos.

Roaring shouts fill the air and TeorSer fire reigns down. Instantly a shield of green covers their elevator and the TeorSer fire aimed at them bursts overhead, leaving the translucent green shield unscathed and unaffected. It’s obviously Taeh’yung, his palms are glowing green and he looks around happily.

There’s loud shouting and doors open up, and in pour units of Guards, Heliords lit up and swinging through the crowds of freed working-slaves who were almost maddened by their sudden new found freedom.

In the beginning they appear to be mowing down the working-slaves but a shrieking scream fills the air and the Guards are being pushed back. The Guards are trying to fight back but they’re being overwhelmed by the freed slaves who, with complete disregard towards themselves, attack the Guard, uncaring if they died in the process.

‘Until Sk’jin gets here shouldn’t we-‘ Hoseok begins but before he’s contradicted by both Namjoon and Sk’jin, Yoongi tosses him one of the Heliord handles before activating his own, kicks open the elevator doors, and steps out of the protective green shield. He disappears for a while and Hoseok is slightly worried for a while. But then a fresh massive unit of Guards appear and he too steps outside of the shield.

Namjoon sighs deeply from where he’s sitting and he stands too.

‘He’s one of those assholes isn’t he? Give him a sword and he’s an expert at first swing?’ Namjoon scowls at Yoongi’s back. The Human activates the second Heliord; a flashing flare of electric blue swings in arcs as he dives into the crowd of the Guards, striking down their numbers in comically high amounts in a few seconds. The freed slaves roar their approval and it’s like watching madness come to life.

‘Well,’ Hoseok hands Namjoon his TeorSer while Taeh’yung’s eyes start to glow an ominous green, a wide smile growing on his face as he skips after Yoongi. Hoseok swings the handle, activating the sword mid-swing and deflecting a TeorSer fired at him.

‘Guess that makes me an asshole too.’

He doesn’t get to hear Namjoon’s response but it’s probably something along the lines of show-off.

‘I’ll be there in 5 minutes. Please don’t get yourselves killed, thank you very much.’

Hoseok hears Namjoon snort before he takes out the rows of Guards situated at the bridges above them where they were firing down on the masses of working-slaves. Hoseok has to admit that the Kutsogleran has uncanny aim as he doesn't waste a single shot, each fire taking out its target.

Namjoon goes back to his screen, tapping a little here and there. Hoseok covers the Kutsogleran as he works. Green arcs of light fly from one corner of the massive space and Hoseok watches in awe as chunks and chunks of construction and building simply vanishes and bridges fall upon each other, the ground over which the Guard stood disappearing in green flashes. Hoseok doesn’t know why but he feels as though Taeh’yung would be giggling as he did whatever it was that he was doing.

Suddenly all the doors in the surrounding prison cells all over the Central Facility springs open and Namjoon easily breaks apart the screen into crumpled shards and tosses it aside. Fresh waves of screams and Beings flood the ramparts and bridges.
Hoseok watches with some horror and some amount of satisfaction as they escaping Slavers are met by the freed working-slaves and are pushed off, falling all the way down screaming to their deaths. A bunch of them have managed to run off, Guards taking over and using their Heliords against the working-slaves.

‘I’m close- where do you want me to be?’

Taeh’yung pops up in front of them out of nowhere, Yoongi, who is somehow splattered with blood, is behind him, Heliords still blazed up, his eyes glittering ominously. Namjoon actually takes a step back before collecting himself.

‘I can sense you now!’ Taeh’yung smiles, ushering them together and closer, hands glowing green. He looks around for a while and nods as though satisfied with the chaos. A pyramid of green light forms around them and without any warning they sink down into the floor as though it were liquid.

Understandably, Hoseok and Namjoon shriek in shock. Yoongi seems entirely unperturbed as they sink into darkness, lit only the the glowing pyramid walls and Taeh’yung’s hands.

‘Just stay there Jin- we’re coming to you!’ Taeh’yung’s eyes glow an ominous green, the copper lines that cover his skin moving and shifting.

Hoseok takes back what he thought about possibly being fond of this Being.
'Your body is not injured.' Amme states, all four of her hand dropping to her side from where they had been raised around Yoongi’s head.

‘But what is the matter?’

‘Your Soul.’

‘My soul?’

‘You are a Human. The Life-force of a Human is considerably weaker than most in this Universe, yet I can sense that your life-span has expanded approximately 600 centuries.’

600 centuries of existence and yet only now Yoongi is aware of it.

‘Soul is another term for Life-force, is it not?’

‘The Soul and Life-force are completely different.’

Yoongi is in the Yisheng meditation gardens, seated in front of Amme. If his calculations are correct, then a base lay under where they were currently seated. It seems as though Amme is able to understand his flow of thoughts and says, ‘Do you worry for them?’

‘They are me. I am them.’

‘Do you feel that they are your people?’

‘No.’

This was his 2nd month living inside the Headquarters, keeping watch over the bases while the court hearing went on. There were researchers and scientists, working alongside the Yishengs to study and observe the masses of Beings inside the tubes and as well as the Beings who were found inside the Akramanese ship.

Yoongi followed their motions, keeping watch— they called him the silent sentinel and did their best to ignore his presence if they saw him though that was rare. Yoongi spent most of his time inside the bases, and though he was offered lodgings inside the Yisheng Headquarters he preferred sleeping close to the tubes.

‘I have dreams.’

This time they’re sitting under the trees near the cliffs overlooking a large lake beyond the tamer regions of the Yisheng Forest.

‘I do not understand my dreams.’

‘Not all dreams have meaning Yoongi.’ Amme is surrounded by flowers that bloom in her wake, the Life-force she emanates brings vitality around her. But the moment she steps away, the flowers wither and die. Yoongi collects the dried flowers, watching as they are reduced to nothing more than dust between his fingers.

‘What do you see in your dreams?’

‘I don’t know. I don’t recognize the Beings in it. The location I’m in, or who I am in them.’

‘You do not recognize yourself?’
‘I know my face. But I do not know who I am.’

Amme pauses to think a while. She had told Yoongi that she was studying him as though he were a new species of Being, recording all of his words, his actions, his methods.

_The first of your kind._

‘What does it mean to have memory?’ Yoongi asks. ‘Do you not need memory to dream?’

‘Fetus’s growing inside wombs have dreams Yoongi- yet they have no formed memory.’

‘Why is that?’

‘There are many explanations for that. Some believe it is because of sensory reactions- a fetus is mostly made of an expansive nervous system after all. Some believe it is their mother or host’s memories and emotions they translate into their own understanding. Some believe it is the echo of their past lives. It is what each Being wishes to believe.’

‘What do you believe in, Yisheng Amme?’

‘I believe that all Life is Continuum.’

Yoongi has heard this many times before. From so many places. But he doesn’t understand it.

‘What is memory?’

Amme is conducting a careful research over one of the tubes, two of her hands extending out over the tube while the other holds up a screen. She writes over it swiftly.

‘Memory is different for everyone,’ Amme replies, her eyes blinking in sequence. ‘It holds different value- many Beings do not realize the extent of the power or meaning of memory.’

‘If you have memory. Does it mean you exist?’ Yoongi looks into the tube curiously.

This tube contained a young female in it; large eyes closed, skin strangely transparent, allowing Yoongi to see her sinewy bones that seemed hollow and light- could she fly? Did she have memories of flying imprinted in her DNA?

‘To exist does not always correlate with memory Yoongi.’

‘What does it mean to exist?’ Yoongi asks. ‘You are standing in front of me. I know you exist. You are in my memory now. Your entirety is made known to me. What of the others?’

‘Others?’

Yoongi looks upwards towards the rosy sky beyond the large glass dome overhead, ‘Those who live everywhere else.’

‘Do you doubt the existence of the trees in the forest outside?’

‘No.’

‘Even though you cannot see every single one of them?’

‘Yes.’
‘Why is it so?’

‘I don’t know.’

‘It’s because you believe in the possibility of their existence, supported by the similar visual stimulation you are receiving.’ Amme explains though Yoongi finds that this explanation doesn’t seem to answer the questions he has. Though to be fair, the questions he has are unknown to himself too. He can’t seem to voice out the multitude of questions he has. While he understands Amme and her words, and how his mind backs this information up with what is known to be rational and logical facts, he finds that there is no real understanding of it.

Before the Android Core had been implemented and initiated into his consciousness, Yoongi never had the need for memory, just simple sensory reaction and implementation to succeed in his missions.

He existed, that was a fact. He still existed now.

But why did it matter now?

‘What does it mean to be alive?’

‘No one knows what it means to be alive Yoongi.’ Amme answers simply. ‘Some believe that living a life of servitude to a cause makes them Alive. Others believe that by leaving behind a legacy, they are living. Some Beings don’t even acknowledge the concept of their own life because it is not a notion they believe to be of immediate occurrence, rather a state of simply being.’

‘Which one is correct?’

Amme guides him through the massive Yisheng Archives.

‘We all just believe what we will. There is no right or wrong in what we believe. Time, Space, Matter, Mass- these are conventions, a medium in which we live. The petri dish within which we exist, if you will. But what that means to each of us varies. As there are stars in the universe, there are Beings. And as there are Beings, there are individual thoughts. These thoughts are a result of memory, senses, and environment.’

‘Then are the beliefs based on the destruction of lives as we witness in either political or religious genocide justifiable. Are the beliefs based on the suffering of one for the good for all just? Is murdering someone for revenge acceptable, knowing that you may have indirectly killed more than just one Being in your path to self-anointed redemption?’

‘Those who believe in that, are sure in themselves of their justification- one act of violence and loss can be translated into victory and gain for another.’ Amme states, stopping in front of an old vellum made of what appeared to be leather. Amme had told him that these original manuscripts were still being preserved in the Archives, from every corner of the Universe in order for their original metaphysical aura to stay intact.

‘Is this simply an indication of where you stand in that situation?’ Yoongi’s nose feels itchy from breathing the air in here.

‘Yes.’

‘Then why did the Yishengs oppose the Akramanese takeover of the Known Universe? The Akramanese were right in their own terms. Yishengs Ndica, Sttion, and Tlun’hla were all right in their own beliefs.’ Yoongi states out. ‘Why did the others condemn their actions as wrong, and why did they end their lives to “right” their “wrongs”.

‘For the same reason why you activated the highways in Šerdesas. You were aware of what was happening, and for what intent and purpose- yet you set about actions and motions that would take 631 lives and injure 2788 Beings. Do you remember why you did it?’

‘No.’

‘Are you sure.’

‘I don’t know.’

‘We all do things Yoongi- within our own right. Finding another Being who shares the same sentiment, the same value, the same purpose as your intentions, is close to impossible.’

‘Why is that? Everybody wants peace. They want happiness, they want success.’

‘And to each Being, peace, happiness, and success all mean entirely different things- they all represent different things. One Being’s peace, is another Being’s war. One Being’s freedom, is another Being’s enslavement.’ Amme turns the vellum carefully, perusing the soft pages.

‘Why does that happen?’

‘Because all Life is a Continuum Yoongi.’ Amme states, extending her free hands out and outlining a ring midair. ‘There is no end or beginning.’

Yoongi follows the motion of her hands, tracking the shape with his eyes.

‘That contradicts the Yisheng Code.’

‘Does it?’

‘Does it not?’

‘No Yoongi. We only add to it.’

Yoongi is silent.

‘If you want to live,’ Amme says after what feels like a full hour. ‘If you want to be, then you need to find that belief.’

‘From what I have learnt- all beliefs are right and wrong. And will bring both good and harm. To both myself and those around me.’

‘That is true.’ Amme states. ‘When I heal one Being, they may rise and inflict pain and sorrow onto others. Or they might spread peace and joy. When you assassinated an Officer, you might have ended a long line of corruption; or you might have added to it.’

‘Then why would you encourage me to find my own beliefs, when you know that the results will always be either or.’

‘Because Yoongi. That is what it means to live.’

The dusty motes from the Archives seem to follow him even out here in the gardens. Yoongi crouches down to better check on the budding sprouts, poking their pale green heads through the soft rich soil. They all seem to twitch, as though rustled by a wind. Yoongi instinctively digs his hands into the warm soil, cupping his hands over some of the saplings.

‘I have a mission for you Yoongi.’

Amme stands some ways beyond the garden.

Yoongi last saw her 4 months ago. She appears changed, or did Yoongi’s perception change? Yoongi stands up from where he’s crouching, hands still clasped over the saplings in his hands.

‘I was not aware I would be participating in missions, Yisheng Amme.’ Yoongi states. ‘It has been 4 sols since my last mission.’

‘This is a special mission Yoongi.’ Amme explains. ‘But only if you agree to it.’

‘What is the mission statement?’ Yoongi asks after a while. He watches as the saplings near his feet grow quickly, forming little bushels near his feet.

‘Mission 013-937619 is a special operation issued by the Special Jury. You are to fulfill the role of Weapons Specialist within a team of 3 other Beings.’ Amme hands him a screen from within her robes. ‘All details you will find in there.’

‘Why me?’ Yoongi doesn’t unclasp his hands.

‘Because I believe you will find the answers to all of your questions in this mission,’ Amme explains, lowering the screen to the ground. ‘And you will find that you are not alone in your questions.’

Yoongi looks down at the screen; it’s been a while since he’s used one.

‘Come find me when you have made your decision.’

Amme performs her customary bow and leaves.

The thriving bushels nearby wilt and wither away.

Carefully, Yoongi opens his hands and the morning breeze carries away the dust, rising momentarily before disappearing entirely.
Namjoon finds himself falling hard on his ass on the floor of the Bridge of the Užkulisai Bridge.

‘Spaces-!’ he hears Sk’jin gasp from somewhere behind him.

There’s a squawk of protest as Hoseok too hits the floor and few more muffled thuds.

‘Get ready to fly out now.’ Yoongi is ordering, on his feet and already making his way towards his seat.

Namjoon pulls himself up, coming face-to-face with Sk’jin who looks extraordinarily unwell and disheveled. Hoseok, who looks a little queasy is staring at the ceiling through which they had clearly slid through but there’s no gaping hole, just the fading remains of a lingering thin string of green light outlining a triangle. What in Spaces had just happened?

They had been inside that glowing green pyramid and it felt awfully a lot like they were inside some lift, except they seemed to be travelling sideways? Namjoon isn’t sure, and now here they were, inside the Užkulisai. Namjoon swears at one point they had been briefly tossed out into space but that was most probably his imagination. It had to be.

Hoseok seems to be wondering the same thing but they both snap out of it and get into action. Hoseok scrambles towards the cockpit and Namjoon is already starting up the Navigation Table and quickly chooses a path for any random system as far away as possible.

‘Ship is locked in trajectory- Hoseok take us out now!’ Namjoon calls, strapping himself in.

‘Taeh’yung, that means you too!’ Sk’jin orders and Namjoon berates himself for momentarily forgetting about the Zhak’gri amidst all that happened. Taeh’yung nods and straps himself into a footstool and despite his feet touching the floor, swings his legs much like a child would. Namjoon was definitely going to have to sit Sk’jin, Yoongi, and Taeh’yung down and get a full explanation of everything. About how they knew each other, what that meant, who Taeh’yung is, how did Sk’jin know how to pilot a ship, and basically everything else. Maybe shower first though.

‘We’re hitting warp in 10 seconds!’ Hoseok calls out.

‘Yisheng ship approaching,’ Yoongi calls out, his voice sharp and alert. Namjoon glances at his screen in front of him and studies the quickly approaching Yisheng Ship. It’s much larger than the Slaver-ship and though not armed, intimidating as it loomed larger than the Grezma outpost.

‘In 5!’

‘But what about the baby?’

Namjoon, Hoseok, Yoongi, and Sk’jin spin in alarm to look at the Zhak’gri.

‘What baby?’ they ask in one voice.
‘The one in the cargo? Inside the OrTank.’

‘Setting into warp.’

A white light fills the Bridge and the familiar pull tugs at the base of Namjoon’s stomach lining as they vault themselves into space at the speed of light.

‘Baby?! I beg your pardon?’ Hoseok asks in a high voice. Namjoon has vivid images of the CapTanks from the Slaver-ship burning in his mind’s eye.

‘What are you talking about-‘ Namjoon begins but there’s blurred movement and Namjoon knows that it’s Yoongi. His form darts through the Bridge and out of the doorway.

‘Yoongi! We’re not at green yet-!’ Sk’jin gasps out, turning wildly in his seat to warn the Human but he’s gone already.

‘Warp safety measures are cleared-‘

‘Yoongi!!’ Hoseok calls out in bewilderment, moving swiftly out of the cockpit as Taeh’yung too follows after him. Namjoon, with some difficulty, manages to get out of his chair and is followed closely by Sk’jin.

‘What are you talking about?’ Namjoon hears Hoseok addressing the Zhak’gri as they run down the stairs ahead of him. The hair of the back of his neck rises and Namjoon is already dreading what he’s going to find.

‘About 4 sols ago, I came across them- like Yoongi, others. Lots of them!’ Taeh’yung explains. Namjoon’s stomach drops, dread and apprehension building with every step he takes.

‘They’re from everywhere; from past Time and space.’

Namjoon can’t help but glance at Sk’jin who is incredibly pale, his face drawn and his eyes unblinking. But Namjoon doesn’t detect any surprise in his expression. And when the Khol’isa glances over at him, Namjoon reads a sense of guilt, fear, and anxiousness.

They arrive at the bottom most Lobby and catch the sight of Hoseok and Taeh’yung disappearing into the doorway leading to the Hangar.

‘Namjoon-‘ Sk’jin is beginning to say but Namjoon ignores the Khol’isa for now, stepping into the Hangar as well.

Yoongi stands next to the Zhak’gri who is pulling out one of the larger OrTanks from Unit 9.

‘Careful with that-‘ Namjoon warns as he rushes closer but his words die in his mouth as Taeh’yung opens the lid, pushes aside the birthing tanks and pulls out a very cleverly designed lid underneath the tanks to reveal a smaller OrTank underneath that.

‘What the actual fuck-‘ Hoseok whispers under his breath but all of them jump when Yoongi roughly takes apart the outer OrTank as though it were made out of flimsy driftwood, laying the smaller OrTank bare and out in the open.

‘Wait Yoongi-‘ Sk’jin warns making to stop the Human but Yoongi is too quick and he lifts the lid off.

‘Look! It’s my baby! Well, one of them,’ Taeh’yung pushes the lid off completely to crouch next to the OrTank.

Namjoon shuffles closer until he’s standing over the OrTank. Inside, suspended in what appeared to be mist, was a Being of unknown species.

‘What the fuck-’ Hoseok begins again as he too looks down at the OrTank in completely disbelief.

‘How did- what is this-‘ Hoseok can’t seem to formulate the questions he wants to ask.

‘He’s still sleeping- still dreaming,’ Taeh’yung says, placing his hand over the glass. Then he looks up at Yoongi and says, ‘Just like you.’

Namjoon is thoroughly taken aback by the expression on Yoongi’s face. A combination of shock, confusion, sorrow, pain, and what looked, strangely, like hope.

‘What do you mean?’ Hoseok asks, looking up from the tank to Taeh’yung and then to Yoongi. Instead of answering, Taeh’yung wraps his arms around the tube and pulls it upwards. Yoongi immediately helps the Zhak’gri, his face now displaying nothing but a strange sense of awe and wonder.

The Being inside the tank rotates gently as they make the tube-like tank stand up.

His face is young, cheeks slightly rounded, lips full, sloping eyes closed. His hair is a pale silver-gold, a colour Namjoon can’t rightly name. His skin is warm and tanned, as though he had just recently been in the sun. His features are entirely anthropomorphic and in fact, doesn’t look too different from Yoongi or Hoseok in built and form.

‘We should check for the battery-cells,’ Sk’jin says from behind Namjoon. ‘If this Being is surviving on…whatever that is, it must be charged or something.’

Sk’jin sounds composed and as though he’d been planning this out.

‘-this mission was already intended to be something else-‘ Namjoon studies Sk’jin carefully and something clicks.

‘Sk’jin,- can I have a word in private?’

Namjoon catches the way Sk’jin seems to catch himself, as though berating himself momentarily before he meets Namjoon’s eyes. His eyes flashes briefly and he nods once quickly.

Hoseok looks away from the tube to find Sk’jin glaring defiantly at Namjoon, while the latter looks angry.

‘Hoseok, watch over the Bridge please. Taeh’yung, Yoongi, please do not move the tank anymore and do not engage with the object or Being inside the tube.’ Namjoon orders, not looking away from Sk’jin.

‘Hoseok?’ Namjoon repeats, breaking their stare and addressing Hoseok. Sk’jin walks out of the Hangar Bay, his steps tired and heavy.

Glancing at Sk’jin’s retreating back, and then back at the tank, Hoseok nods; ‘Yeah, I’m going.’

Hoseok steps away and before he leaves, turns to look over the tank again.

He catches sight of Taeh’yung saying something softly to Yoongi, who has his hand up, as though wanting to touch the surface. Taeh’yung says something, and Yoongi is replying it seems, his hand presses up against the surface.

And then as though in response, the floating Being inside, though “asleep” or whatever state it was that he was in, raises his hand up and lines up next to Yoongi’s.

*

Chapter End Notes

(Author’s Note)
I love JJProject’s new album.
JJP is one of my first ships, I love this so much.
I have some bad news =( I won’t be able to update every week from now on. Uni starts next week and honestly this semester is really gonna kill me I can tell already. So I’ll only be able to update every 2 weeks T_T
Please wish me luck for the upcoming semester I am definitely going to die
Sk’jin looks incredibly unwell. His skin is dull, his eyes slightly glazed as though fevered, and even his posture is weakened; as though he didn’t possess the energy to stand straight. However his expression is defiant and undaunted as he leads Namjoon into the Lobby outside the Hangar Bay. The Khol’isa takes a seat, exhaling out as though relieved to be sitting down. Namjoon doesn’t sit down and instead stands in front of him, arms crossed.

He had wanted to take a shower and hold a discussion with the Khol’isa in question, Yoongi, and the Zhak’gri but in light of recent discoveries- that was going to have to wait.

‘I’m setting up our trajectory to open-space,’ Hoseok announces. ‘I’m keeping watch over the broadcasting channels as well as underverse channels just to stay clear.’

‘Thank you Hoseok,’ Namjoon says before addressing the nonchalantly lounging Khol’isa. ‘What do you know about this?’

‘Would it hurt you to explain your questions?’ Sk’jin asks back tiredly. ‘When you mean “this” do you mean our mission? Do you mean my ability to pilot? Or how I know Taeh’yung? Or about the lovely parcel in our cargo?’

Namjoon wills himself not to snap.

‘You weren’t surprised to see that OrTank.’ Namjoon states, staring at Sk’jin for any reaction. Sk’jin’s impassive expression is extremely impressive.

‘No I wasn’t.’ Sk’jin shrugs then adds. ‘But I sure was when I first saw it. I thought you were here to ask me questions but all I’m getting are statements. Are we done? I think I want to go nap for a while.’

Namjoon wonders if there was ever a time where Sk’jin wasn’t the most infuriating Being alive, this side of the Universe.

‘What is he? The Being inside the OrTank?’

‘I’m just as lost as you are. But judging from Yoongi’s reaction, shouldn’t you be asking him that instead?’

‘Yoongi wasn’t the one who knew about it,’ Namjoon says tersely. ‘Sk’jin, stop lying. There’s no going around this.’

‘But I’m not lying Namjoon,’ Sk’jin replies serenely. ‘I do not know who that Being is, or what he’s doing here, or how he’s here. All I know is that none of the special-jury members thought to tell us of his existence and have given him the highest authorization code aboard this ship- even higher than yours by the way.’ Sk’jin lowers down on the seat so that his head rests on the back of the couch. ‘Like I said, I only found out about-’ he glances at a non-existent screen in his palm and says, ‘-5 hours ago, so honestly Joonie, I’m as lost as you are on this one.’

Namjoon doesn’t say anything, studying the Khol’isa in front of him.

‘Look if you don’t believe me, just check the surveillance footage- I know you have them fed to your NaviLet directly.’ Sk’jin yawns, closing his eyes as though readying for a nap.

‘Surveillance footage means nothing,’ Namjoon states. ‘There is no-

‘Oh of course,’ Sk’jin opens one eye, sighing dramatically. ‘I could have staged all of that- the moment none of you were on the ship. How convenient yes? I took my opportunity, being the healthy and kind-hearted Being that I am- and plotted out some unfathomable plan about smuggling in some strange Being aboard the ship and simultaneously rescue your ass. Yes, a fine thing to do indeed.’

He goes back to closing his eyes. Normally Namjoon isn’t one to go seek out an argument or start up stressful triggering topics but here he was, arguing with the most obstinate Being he’s had the misfortune of meeting.

‘You’re still here? Spaces, Joonie I didn’t know you would miss me this much,’ Sk’jin mumbles, opening one eye sleepily.

‘How do you know Taeh’yung?’

‘I’ve known Taeh’yung for a while now,’ Sk’jin replies easily, with a badly suppressed yawn. ‘T’s just how it is y’know?’

‘I don’t. Clarify. Now.’

‘Monosyllables. I do love those,’ Sk’jin sits up just a little, obviously sensing that Namjoon wasn’t about to move away. He leans on his arm against the back of the couch, gazing up at Namjoon lazily.

‘Look- Taeh’yung helped me out when I was stuck. I pretty much owe him all of this,’ Sk’jin shrugs, gesturing to himself. ‘Kid’s weird, but he’s nice- and he can be trusted- though that probably means nothing to you. I’m pretty sure you weren’t looking for my approval and now you just doubt Taeh’yung even more. But seeing as how he knew Yoongi too, why not actually ask Yoongi hm?’

‘Stop diverting the subject towards Yoongi,’ Namjoon sighs out tiredly, sitting down on the table in front of Sk’jin. ‘Look- Sk’jin, I’m trying really hard to understand what any of this means-

‘And what makes you think I’m the one who knows the answer behind everything?’ Sk’jin side-eyes him sleepily. ‘You’re asking the wrong Being all the wrong questions. Besides, isn’t it too easy?’ Sk’jin adds. ‘Of course all of you suspect me. It’s easy enough to see that. It’s easy enough to conclude that it’s me too. But isn’t it too easy? I thought you were smarter than that.’

‘Sk’jin look,’ Namjoon is exhausted. ‘I am not accusing you of anything-‘

‘Oh? Sure felt like it,’ Sk’jin gives him an unimpressed look.
‘I am not accusing you of anything,’ Namjoon repeats firmly. ‘I just want answers. Will you please just answer my questions without playing games with me or trying to twist my words.’

‘While I’d love to play games with you Namjoonie, it’s honestly not worth my time,’ Sk’jin grins at him. ‘And I am doing exactly what you want me to do. I am answering your questions. You asked me who that Being is inside the OrTank, and I replied saying that I don’t know; which is the truth by the way. Then you asked me who Taeh’yung is and how I know him. While I don’t exactly know who or what he is- I mean I doubt he knows it himself, I met him some sols back and he helped me out of a situation. I haven’t met him since until today. Do you have any more questions or can I finally go and maybe sleep?’

‘How did you learn how to pilot and why did you lie about it?’

‘Honestly Namjoon- how is that even a question,’ Sk’jin rolls his eyes, looking disappointed. ‘I was the pirate-lord of one of the biggest and strongest pirating clans for nearly a thousand years- you tend to pick up on skills during such a time.’

‘But why did you lie about it?’

‘Namjoon, honey, have you met yourself?’ Sk’jin raises his eyebrow appraisingly. ‘You already decided that you didn’t like me- probably because I’m Khol’isa like K’mara- which by the way, is really racist of you- and also probably because of my stunning good looks. It was just simply self-preservation.’

‘Self-preservation.’ Namjoon echoes, disbelieving of Sk’jin’s claims.

‘Yes. If you had known about my piloting abilities since the beginning, you would have probably reduced my authority aboard the ship to nonexistent. Don’t deny it.’ Sk’jin says dismissively. ‘Honestly, the way you’re handling things- I’m surprised we’re actually at this point in our mission.’

‘Don’t act like I’m the only person on this ship who is causing issues- I am hardly the problem here.’

‘Oh and I am?’ Sk’jin spits back with unexpected aggressiveness. ‘Your lack of communication and inability to see past you own preconceived notions is immature and honestly a disgrace to your profession.’

‘Don’t bring this up again,’ Namjoon stands up, glaring down at Sk’jin. ‘I already spoke about that and I apologized for it but-‘

‘-oh and such a noble thing to do-‘

‘-but it wasn’t as though it was entirely my fault- had you been more honest-‘

‘-I am honest Namjoon- the most honest Being on this ship and you would have seen that from the beginning had it not been for your insufferable pride-‘ Sk’jin spits out, sitting up.

‘-my pride-?’

‘-and your oh so brave and noble attitude- you’re no better than the rest of us- we’re all expendable here- don’t you see? Did you really think this mission was all they stated it would be?’ Sk’jin too stands up and point at the Hangar Bay. ‘That Being in there- this ship- this entire mission- did you really just accept it the way Lmiura presented it? What did she do that made you so stoic in your trust over an assignment created by some of the most untrustworthy Beings in this Universe? Did she stroke your ego, made you feel like you were important or did she stroke something else-'

‘You are toeing a very thin line here,’ Namjoon all but growls, stepping straight up towards Sk’jin. ‘I have every right to doubt you— you were placed here, by K’mar as her spy, we both know this. Don’t deny it. Did you really think I bought anything you said? A “region expert”? That’s utter bullshit and everyone here knows it. And seeing as you can’t seem to let go of the past- your complete lack of participation in informing us about your criminal record and leading us on to Orvan and now here we are- possibly completely alienated and isolated from both GLA Docks and outposts- getting us stranded in the early phases of our mission. So if it’s my pride that’s trying to make this less than ideal mission work then you’ll be damn sure I’m going to continue behaving like this.’ Namjoon huffs out a humorless laugh. ‘You didn’t think it never occurred to me? You thought I’d just follow in on whatever orders they had- no Sk’jin; I am here for the same reasons like you- for the same reasons why K’mar made you her little bitch to report back to her-‘

Sk’jin seems to snap.

‘The same reasons as me?’ Sk’jin seethes out. ‘I think the fuck not you little asshole-’

‘Then care to tell me why exactly you’re here?’ Namjoon glares down at the Khol’isa under his nose. ‘Or why you were making calls to someone in a language that just so happens to not be included in Lisai’s directory of languages- maybe then I’ll “trust” you. Or maybe you can explain why Lisai’s directory is compromised and the databank is missing entire sections of information-‘

‘I owe you nothing- I could have left all of you back there,’ Sk’jin hisses, pushing Namjoon back, his eyes flashing bright and red. ‘Now that I think about it- maybe I should have done-’

‘And this is coming from the same Being who told me to believe in him,’ Namjoon laughs humorlessly again though his eyes are ablaze with fury. ‘I did not choose this- I did not want to be the Captain of this fucked up mission- but I felt that it required me to-‘

‘-oh of course! Of course!’ Sk’jin laughs, throwing his head back. ‘You would sacrifice your comfort and quiet lifestyle for the good of the Universe- thank you for honoring us with your magnanimous heart-‘

‘-you keep lecturing me on all of this- like you knew any better- just because you were a big fish in a small pond doesn’t make you the biggest or the best; doesn’t mean you know shit. You were a pirate-lord for longer than all of us combined have lived- what’s so great about that huh? You lost it all anyways-’ Namjoon is vaguely aware of Sk’jin’s expression shifting in a way that triggered warning bells inside his head but he can’t stop. ‘-and seeing the way you are, I wouldn’t be surprised if you lost your standing because you got all of your network killed because of your arrogance and inability to foresee the dangers you seem to thrive on-‘

Sk’jin shoves him backwards harshly.

‘Don’t-‘

‘-maybe you forgot to inform them of something important,’ Namjoon recklessly continues. ‘Maybe you forgot or maybe you just didn’t tell them because they didn’t ask you-’

There’s a strange pulse in the air around them and Namjoon is hit with a wave of nausea. Sk’jin is trembling where he stands, his entire being appears strangely luminescent and a strange red glow emanates from near his temples.

‘Do not tell me,’ Sk’jin’s voice is low, his features morphing horrifically. ‘You know nothing!
The air around Namjoon pulses again and Sk’jin seems to somehow appear taller, his features stretching and his eyes burning red and Namjoon can’t look away. Namjoon is horrified by the change taking over Sk’jin’s features- there’s a strangely dangerous and ethereal beauty to Sk’jin-one that could kill.

‘Jin!’

All sound is distorted and Namjoon can’t look away, his body is frozen and his chest feels compressed as though pressured in a way that makes him believe that if he had actual lungs, he would be struggling to breathe. Sk’jin lifts his hand, as though reaching for him and Namjoon knows he should move but his legs refuse to cooperate. Was this the Khol’isa’s abilities? Was this what made them such a formidable and deadly species of Beings?

‘JIN!’

Taeh’yung appears out of nowhere, entering the strangely warped bubble Namjoon and Sk’jin were trapped in, breaking the strange pressure in the air. The Zhak’gri steps forward in front of Sk’jin, blocking him from view.

Namjoon falls backwards against the wall, panting heavily as though starved of air. His limbs feel strangely disconnected from his body and he slides down the wall.

‘Hey, it’s okay Jinnie, don’t use your energy like that all right?’ Taeh’yung has the Khol’isa wrapped in a hug, unafraid of the still glowing Being in his arms.

Sk’jin’s eyes bore into Namjoon’s- and the Kutsoglerin still can’t look away.

‘You- you know nothing-’ Sk’jin grits out before his eyes roll backwards into his head and his entire body slumps against Taeh’yung.

Cold shivers run down Namjoon’s back, the hair on the back on his neck rising.

‘Jin? Babe? Oh no- how long has he been like this?’ Taeh’yung asks, looking back at Namjoon as though he hadn’t just interrupted what was no doubt going to be the horrific end-result of Namjoon’s recklessness.

‘He’s been unwell for a while now.’

Yoongi is standing by the entrance to the Lobby, as though he’d been there the entire time. Maybe he was, Namjoon can’t be sure. Yoongi doesn’t seem to have any opinions regarding what just happened- he doesn’t even seem interested, let alone inclined to judging Namjoon.

‘He just needs a little sunshine in his life,’ Taeh’yung smiles at them as he maneuvers Sk’jin around as though the Khol’isa hardly weighed anything. Lifting him up in his arms, Taeh’yung makes his way upwards.

‘The Medical Bay is this way,’ Namjoon finds himself saying, pointing behind himself.

‘Oh- no need for that!’ Taeh’yung beams. ‘I can do it.’

‘Wait- Taeh’yung,’ Namjoon frowns; he would stand but his limbs are still protesting. ‘You can’t just-‘
‘It’s all right,’ Yoongi cuts across, walking over to Namjoon. ‘He’s done it before.’

Taeh’yung just nods and walks up the stairs calling back with a cheerful, ‘He’ll be as good as new soon!’ and disappears to Level Two.

Yoongi sits down in front of him, legs crossed. He slouches forward, his spine curving in a way that probably wasn’t very good for him.

‘How do you know Taeh’yung?’ Namjoon asks tiredly.

‘I saw him in the Yisheng Headquarters,’ Yoongi replies directly. ‘He was involved in the Gaia Case. Then I met him again in the Mars Dock. He was part of the team responsible for handling the remains of the evidence left in that area.’

‘You knew Sk’jin before any of this, didn’t you?’ Namjoon asks with a sigh, feeling the urge to sleep for a week.

‘Yes. He was closely linked to the Beings involved directly with the Gaia Case.’ Yoongi replies. ‘I spoke to him once. He was different then. Now that I see them together, I believe Taeh’yung helped Sk’jin.’

‘What does that mean?’

Yoongi pauses, his expression is blank as ever. Sk’jin’s words from earlier rings in Namjoon’s mind.

‘And what makes you think I’m the one who knows the answer behind everything? You’re asking the wrong Being all the wrong questions.’

‘It’s not in my place to say.’

Namjoon carefully regards Yoongi. He thinks back to the Flotsam and Jetsam back in Grezma, how the Human didn’t seem fazed or confused by the fact that Lisai, an operating AI system, didn’t have a language in its database.

‘Yoongi.’

‘Yes.’

‘Were you aware of Lisai’s faulty database?’

‘Yes.’

‘Why didn’t you tell me?’ Namjoon feels a faint flare of irritation at this revelation but it subsides quickly. He was just too tired for this.

‘I thought you knew,’ Yoongi replies simply. ‘I noticed the first time I boarded the ship and used a screen. I wasn’t aware that none of you realized.’

Yoongi’s assumption made sense to an extent. It seemed like the kind of thing an Information Analyst would have figured out. Or even a Venture Unit agent should have figured out.

‘Why are you in this mission? And not because you were assigned or whatever- what made you decide that you wanted to be part of this?’ Namjoon asks, sitting up properly.

‘Because Yisheng Amme told me I would be able to find the answers to my questions.’
‘What questions?’

‘About everything.’

Namjoon sighs. Well that was helpful.

‘What do you know about that Being inside there? This isn’t the first time you’ve seen someone like him?’

‘Yes and no.’

‘What does that mean?’ Namjoon is really exhausted at this point; he wonders what in Spaces Taeh’yung is doing. He knows he should probably go check up on it- see what the Zhak’gri is really doing. But after everything that has happened and everything that has transpired, Namjoon finds that he’s quickly losing any inclination to really care at all.

‘I saw many like him,’ Yoongi replies, turning his head towards the direction of the Hangar Bay. ‘But he is like and unlike them. Like and unlike me.’

‘Is that how you were before?’ Namjoon asks, gathering the will to stand up and make his way upstairs and at least take a shower or something. Yoongi is still splattered in blood but he doesn’t seem to care.

‘I don’t remember.’

‘So is that one of the reasons why you’re in this mission? To maybe find out more about yourself?’

‘Yes.’

‘I see,’ Namjoon sighs one more time and struggles to his feet. Yoongi does the same, mirroring his actions.

‘Do you trust Taeh’yung?’

‘I do.’ Yoongi’s reply is immediate and firm.

‘What about Sk’jin?’

‘He wasn’t lying to you.’ Yoongi replies. ‘There was no lie in his eyes.’

‘Namjoon could you come up to the Bridge? We need to set course.’ Hoseok chimes in, sounding exhausted.

‘Just set it to wherever for the moment- put the ship on auto; get some rest Hoseok,’ Namjoon replies before addressing Yoongi. ‘Thank you for coming back and getting me out. I realize how easy it would have been for all of you to simply leave me behind. I am grateful that you didn’t.’

‘It was not my decision alone.’ Yoongi steps back, clearly headed towards the Hangar again. ‘It was a group decision.’

‘Either way, thank you.’

Yoongi doesn’t reply to that and walks away.

Trudging upwards, Namjoon makes his way towards the Living Quarters. He glances over at Cabin 01 and wonders if Taeh’yung and Sk’jin were all right. He contemplates for a while, wondering if he should knock and inquire after the health of the Khol’isa. But after that explosive reaction and argument, Namjoon guesses he should probably make himself scarce around the Khol’isa.

Typing in his password, Namjoon enters his room with a sense of relief. His joints were starting to hurt a little, nothing too serious or distracting but it was better to be safe than sorry. He accesses the drawer over his bed and pulls out an oblong box. Picking out a white and blue pill and a dotted white tablet, Namjoon swallows them dry.

Making quick work of his clothes and discarding them down the shredder-chute, Namjoon checks over his body with a trained eye.

He’s grown used to his body- he doesn’t remember a time where he hasn’t looked like this. And perhaps that was for the better. He’s known many Kutsoglerin who haven’t been able to cope with the cruel afflictions casted on them. Namjoon doesn’t accept or appreciate what has been done to him, but he lives with it because he knows that there’s no other way to it. With practiced moves, Namjoon reaches behind his back and slowly undoes the latches that attaches the bionic case that makes up his back. Adjusting the wired mirror, Namjoon scans his exposed back for any misalignment or damage.

Namjoon stands under the shower longer than he normally does, allowing the hot water to wash down all of his bionic joints. Sensory perception was a strange thing for Namjoon; what he knew registered as pain wasn’t quite so for him. He carefully washes over his cuff-links, staring at the permanently reformed flesh on his wrists.

Were the Yishengs already taking care of the working-slaves? Would they be able to subdue and take over the slave-ship? How connected were they to the Venture Unit? The slaver from Raksane Tayi was no doubt a high ranking officer within the GLA- how many of them were involved in this? Still involved in the Alliance? Would Orvan finally be liberated or would their strange economic trade continue to flourish and her people living under the cruel reign of terror that they’ve come to accept as normalcy?

But what even constituted of normalcy anymore? The Orvanan knew no other life than the one they were living right now- they knew of no other culture except for this reality of slavery- would they even consider it slavery?

Namjoon stares down at his hands- one of the few original parts of him that remained. A constant reminder of what he was- where he came from. If Namjoon didn’t have these subtle reminders of himself, and what he looked like, would he consider his current body the same way he viewed it now?

What about the Orvanan? They were now living this lifestyle of slavery for over 700 sols; would they even begin to understand what freedom outside of their planet meant? What it felt like? Or would it feel strange- would it feel wrong, like something they couldn’t accept or even begin to understand.

Suddenly feeling indescribably exhausted, Namjoon leans back on the cold tiles of the shower stall.

So much happened in such a short period of time, each event transcended the former and none of these events made any form of sense or had a logical sound explanation. Everything that has happened since they left Šerdesas was a chain of events leading to this chaotic and tense position where Namjoon finds himself utterly lost and confused.
The Being inside the OrTank was purposefully kept there. None of them had reason to carry onboard a living Being inside an OrTank. Not to mention the cargo had already been placed inside their ship before any of them had even gotten in.

What was the reason behind this placement? What was this Being, who was this Being? Why was he placed in here? Was he dangerous? Was he a living biological weapon intended to destroy all of them? If this was a birthing tank of sorts then there would be a birthing date and they wouldn’t be able to stop it. What would happen?

But most importantly why didn’t the special-jury inform them of this? Who in the special-jury was responsible for his? Was it just one of them? Or was it all of them? Was this Being part of their mission? Sk’jin had said his authorization code had been more powerful than his own- that meant at least one of the special-jury members knew of this Being. Were they meant to discover him? If so why?

‘We’re all expendable here- don’t you see? Did you really think this mission was all they stated it would be?’

What could this Being possible mean in relation to the mission? Or was the mission simply made up and this Being was in fact, the main objective of the mission?

All Namjoon knows is that none of the special-jury could be trusted.

By the time he leaves his room, he hears Taeh’yung’s loud laughter ringing across the ship. There are other voices as well, they’re all speaking rather easily and casually. It’s odd, in contrast to the turmoil and apprehension mounting inside of Namjoon. A little wary and unsettled, he makes his way downstairs again.

The OrTank with the floating Being is tilted backwards against the Lobby couch next to Taeh’yung who was dressed in Sk’jin’s robes and his hair is sopping wet. Sk’jin himself is sitting on one of the larger single couches. Namjoon does a double take because the Khol’isa looks incredibly healthy again. Though his normal attitude of general vain cockiness is absent and he seems strangely subdued. Namjoon had checked the surveillance and followed the footage from when Sk’jin sensed something off, up until he made his way to the OrTank. He hadn’t opened the device, staring down at it, his entire body stricken with shock. Due to the high quality footage of the cameras installed all over the ship, Namjoon was able to very easily study the Khol’isa’s face and found only genuine confusion and wariness in his eyes. He also saw the way Sk’jin was very obviously unwell, his feet dragging, and his breathing strained. Every time he spoke into the Comm-Device he would take a moment to collect himself. But now here he sat, looking remarkably healthy. His eyes are bright and his skin glowing again.

Hoseok is also there, laughing in response to a story Taeh’yung is excitedly narrating. The Ngfy’widan laughs freely, tossing his head back. He’s got a towel around his shoulders and he’s holding an empty tray in his hands. Namjoon notes cups on the Lobby table. As usual, Namjoon doesn’t spot Yoongi at once who was sitting next to the OrTank, staring at the floating Being inside.

The Being inside is turned towards Yoongi. Namjoon is pretty sure the Being inside is soundly unconscious- it was slightly disconcerting to see the way he was attuned to Yoongi- or was he just like that with any single Being?

‘Namjoon!’

Taeh’yung gets up at once, jostling the OrTank that Yoongi instantly steadies, his eyes never leaving the object.

‘You smell nice!’ is Taeh’yung’s greeting, sniffing him enthusiastically.

‘Uh yeah that’s great.’ Namjoon fidgets, edging away from the overly enthusiastic Zhak’gri. He catches Sk’jin’s eye and can instantly tell that there was no way in hell he was going to come out of this in the Khol’isa’s good books. Not that it mattered to Namjoon but considering the mess of the situation they were all in and they would need team effort and collaboration to figure things out, he was going to have to make an effort to at least pacify their non-existent relationship to one that didn’t always lead to a violent shouting match.

‘Sk’jin I am sor-‘

‘You’re here. We need to discuss what we’re going to do next,’ Sk’jin talks over Namjoon before he even has the chance to finish what he was trying to say.

‘It’s safe to say in light of recent discoveries that we need to reevaluate our mission and how we’re going to approach it,’ Sk’jin continues. Without his vain façade on display, Sk’jin is an entirely different Being. Everything about his body language has changed, his facial expression which was normally one of serene yet contemptuous beauty was now statue-like: beautiful, daunting, and cold.

Namjoon can feel the curious look Hoseok is giving both him and Sk’jin while Taeh’yung stares unabashed at both of them, mouth slightly open.

‘I feel like we need to pool our cumulative information and resources and plot out our next move,’ Sk’jin continues. ‘While GLA Docks are entirely out of the question, our only chance is with a limited amount of outposts.’

‘I agree; we should,’ Namjoon says as he makes his way towards the Lobby, standing next to the single couch chair opposite the one Sk’jin was sitting on across the large flat table in the center. ‘But before that I wanted to say that I’m sorry-‘

‘I’ll say this once,’ Sk’jin states flatly. It’s uncanny how emotionless and unresponsive his attitude is towards Namjoon. ‘I have no interest in hearing what you have to say outside of the mission and fulfilling the objectives of said mission. I don’t care what you have to say, what you think, what you feel, or what you’re going to do. We’re here for the mission and that’s the only reason why I am here. So as I was saying, most outposts are out of the question, however if we are able to weed through the list carefully, find out who the governors are, and possible even change ships or at least alter its appearance and digital ID, we should be able to use outposts safely. If not, we will have to go in-planet in a non-GLA system and use private Docks which will be expensive and time-consuming, and raise a lot of questions.’

His statement is met with silence for a while before Hoseok speaks up.

‘Private Docks are normally used a lot by Excavators and their guilds- I was thinking about this and wondering if we could disguise ourselves as Excavators; I’ve dealt with Excavators before and I know which channels they use. If we can mimic their usual way of business transaction and approach to outposts and in-planet docks, we could create a pretty stable and full-proof disguise.’ Hoseok glances at Namjoon, one eyebrow subtly raised in question. ‘Creating a new digital ID for the ship should be easy right?’

Namjoon pauses a while before answering.
Taeh’yung is looking at him with wide eyes whereas Sk’jin regards him with zero attentiveness or response.

‘Yeah it’s pretty simple – we just need to maybe adjust the Užkulisai from the outside- it’s a new model so it stands out,’ Namjoon huffs out dry laugh. If the special-jury were instigating something more than just this mission, they sure did an excellent job of making it difficult for them to simply blend in with their environment by giving them a one-of-a-kind ship.

‘I can help!’ Taeh’yung offers brightly.

‘Are you trained in mechanical engineering?’ Hoseok inquires curiously.

‘No! But I like to take things apart and put them back together.’

Taeh’yung says this with such an earnest expression Namjoon is almost inclined to agree but he stops himself. He glances over at Sk’jin surreptitiously and finds that the Khol’isa has an uncharacteristically fond smile on his face as he looks at Taeh’yung.

‘Oh- I uh, I see,’ Hoseok replies somewhat confused before addressing Namjoon again. ‘Where do we head then?’

‘Well first we need to clear a definitive path towards a Dock we know is safe,’ Namjoon sits down, noting that his joints didn’t hurt anymore. He looks around for his NaviLet before he realizes he should probably get a new one from the Navigation Table when it’s handed to him.

Namjoon had again, forgotten about Yoongi- apparently so did everyone else except for Taeh’yung who sits next to the Human, throwing an arm around him.

It’s strangely bizarre, seeing the Human in actual contact with another Being without it being a hand-to-hand combat move or reasoning. Namjoon suddenly remembers how Yoongi had essentially poisoned all of them just to track them without their notice and he suppresses a shudder.

‘Thank you,’ Namjoon says a second too late. But Yoongi doesn’t seem to mind. Or care. The correct term would probably be notice but Namjoon goes back to concentrating on his NaviLet for the time being.

‘We’re all right for another week for sure,’ Hoseok replies a little hesitantly.

‘A week? But I thought our calculations had us good for another fortnight or so,’ Sk’jin frowns a little.

‘Well that’s what I thought too- but I put into consideration this fellow here,’ Hoseok nods at the OrTank.

‘I don’t know how he’s being fueled or how his uh OrTank is being powered but if-‘

‘Nothing powers it,’ Yoongi speaks up. ‘He’s suspended inside independently off of his own Life-force.’

‘What do you mean?’ Sk’jin asks, a crease appearing between his brows.

‘Do you remember that place?’ Taeh’yung asks the Khol’isa. ‘It was all white and there were voices everywhere-‘
‘Yes,’ Sk’jin replies tersely, looking uncomfortable.

‘That’s this.’ Taeh’yung gestures to the OrTank. ‘Just contained.’

Sk’jin glances over at Yoongi who nods.

‘I see. So the OrTank isn’t really powered by anything?’ he asks.

‘Nopes!’ Taeh’yung pats the surface gently as though afraid of waking up the Being inside. ‘It’s just all him in there.’

‘What does that mean?’ Hoseok asks glancing over at Sk’jin.

‘These are Beings cultivated and preserved the same way the GI were cultivated and created,’ Yoongi explains.

‘So that makes him a GI agent?’ Hoseok asks slowly, his tone confused.

‘No. It makes him free.’ Is Yoongi’s extraordinary reply before he adds, ‘The GI were formed as a result of the Yishengs cultivating entire species of Beings from all around the Universe to harness them in their raw and true potential and to manipulate them for their own use. The Gaia Case touches on the subject of the GI experiments briefly but were overshadowed by the other parts of the Case.’

The discovery of the GI had been one that nearly crippled the major organizations with fear. Upon realizing that such a powerful and secret force beyond the control of any of their reach existed with agents who had no personal objective that could be manipulated, the major organizations had done all they could to obtain the GI agents.

‘But…but aren’t all the agents compromised? I mean,’ Hoseok glances at Namjoon for clarification. ‘A majority of the agents were all detained and kept under observation by the Venture Unit right?’

‘That’s what has been said,’ Yoongi replies calmly. ‘The GI agents who were released for duty - the ones who were birthed were all terminated the moment the GIU arrived in Šerdesas. There were some who survived. But they weren’t able to Sleep anymore, and weren’t able to process sentient understanding of their surroundings or their own placement in the universe. They fell into a vegetative state of being and are now being kept in the Yisheng Headquarters under surveillance.’

‘…wait what about the others?’ Sk’jin asks, frowning heavily. ‘Weren’t they being watched over by the Yishengs? What does the Venture Unit have to do with this? I thought they were given the GI?’

‘The Beings found after the Gaia Case were sent to the Yisheng Headquarters and are watched over by both the Yishengs and the Venture Unit.’

Namjoon doesn’t have a good feeling about this. He glances over at the Being inside the OrTank and then back at Yoongi before looking back at Sk’jin. The Khol’isa’s eyes are narrowed and calculating, as though processing what Yoongi had just said.

‘Have any of them woken up?’ Hoseok asks, his voice laced with trepidation.

‘I don’t know,’ Yoongi replies blandly.
‘So what does he have to do with this?’ Hoseok asks, gesturing to Taeh’yung. ‘I am trying to understand this but I can’t make sense of it.’

‘I met Taeh’yung before the Gaia Case was even called that,’ Sk’jin interjects. ‘He was able to help me out of a difficult situation and saved my life.’

Taeh’yung beams at the Khol’isa, sending him a wink that Sk’jin returns.

‘I met Yoongi before I met Taeh’yung; we helped each other- more like together we helped someone,’ Sk’jin surmises.

‘And I met Yoongi here in the Mars Docks! Well I saw him a few times before that but actually only ever really met him in the Mars Docks- I was helping out the Yishengs with my babies,’ Taeh’yung pats the OrTank. ‘Like him!’

‘Helped you out of a difficult situation?’ Hoseok repeats carefully.

‘It’s something from my past I’d rather not discuss Hoseok,’ Sk’jin replies carefully. ‘I can assure you it won’t affect our mission.’

‘So that’s out of the way,’ Namjoon sighs out before addressing Taeh’yung. ‘Where do you want us to drop you off? I can’t guarantee where we’ll be able to go-’

‘Can I stay?’

His request is met with extraordinary silence.

‘Taeh’yung,’ Sk’jin begins hesitantly. ‘I don’t think it’s a good idea-‘

‘But I swore that I’d always watch over my babies!’ Taeh’yung insists. ‘And here he is! I found him; and you and Yoongi! This is a sure sign! They’re telling me to stay as well.’

‘They?’

‘The others,’ Taeh’yung taps at his head and both Namjoon and Hoseok grimace in discomfort, unsure how to read into this.

‘Besides, I can help you guys! I’m pretty useful,’ Taeh’yung lifts his hands up, fingers forming ‘v’s, smiling brightly up at them.

‘I can agree to his statement, he would make a valuable addition to our mission.’ Yoongi chimes in unexpectedly.

‘I agree as well,’ Sk’jin adds seconds later. ‘Especially now that he’s here,’ he gestures to the OrTank. ‘I think we’ll need Taeh’yung involved.’

Namjoon glances over at Hoseok who is studying Sk’jin intently before looking over at Yoongi and then Taeh’yung. Namjoon already knows what he’s about to say and sighs inwardly.

‘You can stay,’ Namjoon resigns. ‘Sk’jin or Yoongi will inform you on our mission so you know what we’re going to do.’

‘Yay!’ Taeh’yung cheers, throwing his hands up and promptly goes and throws himself at Sk’jin who laughs in amusement.

‘However I think I can speak for almost all of us in saying that we know nothing about you or what you do and what you can do,’ Namjoon interjects. ‘What is it that you do? What have you been doing all this time?’

‘Ah, which do I answer first,’ Taeh’yung scratches at the side of his neck as he settles against Sk’jin comfortably. ‘Well all right, so I’m the fifth generation “Zhak’gri”- I don’t like being called that, so I chose my name for myself. I don’t know how to explain what I do- I can see it- but I don’t know how to really explain it. But someone sort of explained it to me before, so here goes.’
Taeh’yung clears his throat, his expression taking on a mild and serene expression and his voice is higher and softer as well. ‘Yishengs use the continuum of Life-force and take it and are able to work in the width of its spectrum of allotted time and space. A Yisheng redirects and corrects the forward flow of the cycle of continuum. But the Zhak’gri are able to go back in the cycle of continuum and displace certain events without repercussions in the time loop.’

Taeh’yung expression serene expression drops and adds with a shrug, ‘Or something like that.’

‘Wait- come again?’ Hoseok is understandably very confused.

‘They displace links in the Life-force cycle. An acceleration to link loops within the same continuum.’ Namjoon explains. ‘This is if you’re basing your theory on the Yisheng Code- did a Yisheng tell you that?’

‘Yeap!’

‘That’s a little like time-manipulation isn’t it?’ Hoseok ruminates uneasily.

‘Not exactly- I don’t really know to be honest,’ Taeh’yung shrugs again. ‘I can see what I can do-but I don’t know what it is exactly.’

‘So what have you been doing lately?’ Sk’jin asks.

‘Well after I finished my job in the Mars Dock, I wandered around for a while you know? It kinda felt odd to not do something- so I thought I’d visit a friend of mine for a while and he told me about this slave-ship.’

‘A friend?’

‘Yeah! He’s really nice and bright! He visited me in Teronko’ng Prison and I helped him out there!
He was really sad about what was happening. And I don’t like seeing anyone sad; so I went to see if I could do anything to help.’ Taeh’yung rambles.

‘And then you got caught?’ Hoseok asks tentatively.

‘I wanted to get caught,’ Taeh’yung explains looking serious all of a sudden. ‘They’re a very expansive network and very well organized. I couldn’t just go and blow up their ship without killing so many innocents- besides, that would get rid of only one small part of a much larger system. I wanted to understand where it was coming from, so I managed to get myself captured and sent up to Grezma to get picked up. Then I met you!’

Taeh’yung beams at Namjoon.

‘So I just want to say thank you for helping me out! My friend won’t be sad anymore!’

‘Uh-’ Namjoon doesn’t know what to say.

‘We need to set-up the ship,’ Yoongi interjects out of nowhere. ‘We shouldn’t waste time in dead-
'Right,’ Namjoon nods.

‘Let’s go set-up then,’ Hoseok turns to address Namjoon. Namjoon nods wearily, following after the Ngfy’widan.

Looking back, Taeh’yung has seated himself across Sk’jin’s lap, listening intently with wide eyes as Sk’jin starts telling him their mission.

Neon-red eyes find his and Namjoon shivers at the strange hollowness he finds in the previously fiery taunting eyes.

* *

Namjoon looks exhausted.

Not in the sense of being physically exhausted but he just looks drained. He looks like he feels powerless and it’s quite apparent from the way he carries himself. Hoseok wasn’t there for whatever argument Namjoon and Sk’jin had. Again. But he guesses it didn’t end well considering the way Sk’jin was treating the Kutsoglerin. But at this moment, interrelationships between team-members was far from Hoseok’s immediate train of thoughts.

‘Anything from the news channels?’

‘Nothing,’ Hoseok replies. That was to be expected. For something as serious and intricately connected to the Alliance and possibly with many high ranking officers within the GLA and Venture Unit, news like this wouldn’t make it to the general GLA Broadcasting Channels. Hoseok had quickly dived into the underverse channels as well but there was no news there yet. That wasn’t a surprise either. To prevent any form link-up, all of the other possibly connected parties would instantly cut off all ties and that normally meant communication lines were the first to go.

‘This was a set-up,’ Namjoon says without preamble, sighing as they make their way up to the Bridge.

‘The OrTank you mean?’ Hoseok asks, not looking back.

‘Yeap.’

That much was obvious. But the main question now remained why they weren’t informed about this Being. And also who this Being was. It was true that during the Gaia Case, a large number of Beings were found, cultivated and created as a means of creating some form of “stock” or “preserve” of Beings to be grown and raised in another universe of sorts. Species and races that were extinct or erased from the Universe were found and had caused a great stir in the inner most circles of the main organizations. Whether these Beings were friendly, “natural”, and safe were questions that couldn’t be answered. So they had been put under observation, with all sorts of top-secret research facilities from every organization chiming in to figure them out.
So what were they doing now with this single OrTank with this particular Being? Hoseok had obviously run a scan through the Being, trying to identify the Being inside. But Lisai’s directory came out blank. And Hoseok doesn’t know if this Being was truly and alien or if this was Lisai’s faulty database working up again.

‘What do you think this means?’ Hoseok asks as they step into the Bridge. The HUD windows are white as they jet through warp-space with no particular trajectory set out.

‘I don’t know,’ Namjoon sighs out as he makes his way to the Navigation Table, activating the column listlessly. ‘I don’t know what any of this means anymore. This mission- or well, what we thought this mission was supposed to be, what we’re carrying, what we found- every single one of us- I don’t know what any of this means anymore.’

‘What did you and Sk’jin talk about?’ Hoseok asks as he leans on the Table, facing Namjoon who sinks down into his chair.

‘He discovered the OrTank while we were in the slaver-ship,’ Namjoon explains, tapping along the NaviLet. ‘It’s why he wasn’t surprised. And I don’t know if he would have told us about it had Taeh’yung not “sensed” it or whatever.’

‘How did he discover it?’

‘He was trying to update Lisai’s language database,’ Namjoon snorts like he thought it was ironic. ‘He tried to use my authorization-code but it wasn’t high enough.’

‘Wait- so that Being inside the OrTank- his authorization-code is higher than yours?’ Hoseok interrupts.

‘Yes,’ Namjoon leans back, rubbing at his face tiredly. ‘He was placed here purposefully. And I have a feeling we were supposed to eventually discover him- or maybe that’s just me overthinking all of this. I don’t know what to think if I’m being honest. I don’t know what agenda this Being has by being here. I don’t know why the special-jury failed to mention his existence. I don’t know if Sk’jin should be trusted in what he says; Spaces I don’t know if any of you should be trusted in this-‘

‘So what you’re saying is that there’s more to this mission than just delivering shit and fixing up planets?’ Hoseok asks bluntly.

‘Yes-‘

‘Wasn’t that obvious from the beginning?’

Namjoon stares at him blankly for a fraction of a second before huffing out as though mildly irritated and saying, ‘Yes of course it is- there was obviously more to this than they let on. It’s just this Being being here doesn’t make sense- nothing adds up. This mission itself doesn’t add up either. We’re trying to go to a System that could possibly contain technology that could potentially be used to manipulate the entirety of the universe and we have to destroy it while also “renewing” their planets? And all of this in secret? And now with this Being in the picture, what does it even mean anymore?’

‘Forget the mission for a second,’ Hoseok interjects, crossing his arms. ‘This was always going to be more than just a delivery mission- but I could never figure out what other purpose we would be serving if not for this mission’s objective- but his appearance is just…it’s just throwing me for a loop. I don’t know what to think.’ Hoseok squats down, leaning back on the Table. ‘Look- when you’re made into a team for any mission,- no matter what type of mission, what sort of Beings are involved, they will always put into consideration team dynamics. None of us have ever been put into a team together- I don’t even think Sk’jin has been alive for the past few centuries to be put into a team. Yoongi is just…Yoongi- and then there’s the two of us- we were never intended to mix well. We can’t. Our backgrounds are vastly different- it’s like they purposefully put us together knowing we would never be able to tolerate each other or cooperate with each other while dangling what seems like an extremely dire situation to the outcome of our mission’s success. Our mission which as we now know is possibly just a dunce and the real reason for our departure is something else.’

‘What are you trying to say?’ Namjoon asks carefully.

‘What if they’re using our differences to hide the real purpose of this mission?’ Hoseok asks back. ‘Don’t take this the wrong way Namjoon but you’re not an agent; I know you’re undoubtedly intelligent and I’m not saying you don’t know what’s happening- but you were never in a position where you questioned every single aspect of your surrounding based on your immediate action.’

Namjoon shrugs like he takes no offence to it and asks, ‘So what do you, as an experienced agent suggest we do?’

Hoseok studies Namjoon for a while before answering.

‘I have a proposition and I don’t think you’ll like it,’ he says flatly.

Namjoon gestures for him to continue.

‘I suggest we dock in-planet; maybe in one of the cultivation-projects; there’s a system not too far from here with young planets. We could disguise ourselves as Excavators wanting to claim the planet first to discover any possible artifact and all that Excavator shit.’

‘For what purpose would we be doing that?’ Namjoon asks curiously, clearly sensing a deeper purpose to Hoseok’s suggestion.

‘I want to test out the things we’re carrying,’ Hoseok thumbs behind him. ‘See if they’re actually real or not. In fact I want to go through every single crate and OrTank and any other thing we’re carrying in our Hangar somewhere on a planet where we can dispose of it if necessary. I also want to take apart many of the components within the Užkulisai and see what all has been modified- check for trackers, check for rigging.’

Namjoon nods slowly, eyes narrowing a little.

‘That should give us time to adjust the ship as well, change up the exterior,’ Namjoon says slowly, his fingers slow down over the NaviLet as he thinks.

‘How much time would it take to create a new digital ID for the ship?’ Hoseok asks.

‘A day or so,’ Namjoon replies, ‘I’ll need to find a hub through which we can register the ship- I guess it’s good we have Taeh’yung on board- we can register the ship using his identity.’

‘Does he have any on him? Wasn’t he in Teronko’ng- that would make it extremely impossible to use him.’

‘We can give him a new one,’ Namjoon shrugs, looking back at his NaviLet. ‘Do you have a hub-line we could use to register the ship in?’
Hubs were like license registries through which independent ships or shuttles could legally register themselves as new ships within the Trade System. They were generally difficult to access, being set-up in offices within the Immigration Offices in GLA Docks. However most high-ranking officers within the GLA could directly access hubs. Or better yet, most Venture Unit agents knew of several hubs through which they could register their ships if needed, depending on their mission.

‘I do but I don’t know if it’s a good idea to use anything that could be traced back to me,’ Hoseok grimaces. Grezma was leaving a bitter taste in his mouth and he doesn’t think it’s going to go away easily either. ‘I used several before and have access to a bunch- but they could get traced back to me because they’re agent-specified hubs.’

‘The same with me,’ Namjoon looks up, one eyebrow raised. ‘What about Yoongi?’

‘I don’t know how the GI agents registered or used their shuttles- if they even had any need to register their Transporters through the International Space Registrar Laws,’ Hoseok muses.

‘Well I’ll go ask,’ Namjoon tiredly stands up but Hoseok stops him.

‘No I’ll go. I’ll also check on Sk’jin and Taeh’yung- probably have to give him a Cabin and input a new set of codes for him as well,’ Hoseok slides out a screen from the slim column of the Navigation Table. ‘He’ll need a screen too.’

‘What do you think of Taeh’yung?’ Namjoon asks as Hoseok sets up the screen to connect with the rest of the ship.

‘Honestly I don’t know.’ Hoseok replies bluntly. ‘I’ve never met someone like him before. And I did some research as well- Zhak’gri right?’

Namjoon nods.

‘Just sounds incredibly strange.’ Hoseok confesses, unsure what to think of. If what he said was true, and what Namjoon said was true, then Taeh’yung was a living walking breathing relic of a past so ancient, it was unfathomable. And based on his own explanation of his abilities and identity, it would seem like Taeh’yung didn’t know much about himself to start off with. Just how was he even still around?

‘What do you think?’ Hoseok asks instead.

Namjoon just shrugs.

‘At this point I just don’t care anymore,’ he sighs. ‘I don’t care who he is. I don’t care who or how he came to know Sk’jin and Yoongi- their past, their objectives – that Being inside the OrTank. I just don’t care anymore.’

Namjoon almost looks like Sk’jin. Fed-up and resigned to this confusion. They were both withdrawing into themselves, away from everything except for the mission. They were never trained for this.

Sk’jin and Namjoon were both incredibly capable and intelligent strategists with exceptional individual skill. But they both lacked in experience of being directed and controlled by a mission objective. Hoseok could tell from the beginning. Sk’jin was used to the way he lived before- when he was in control and he made the decisions. He was used to a time that no longer existed, used to a way of living and conducting his actions in a way that was backed up by countless pirates and heavy armoured ships and shuttles.
Namjoon came from a purely behind-the-screen background experience. He’s never worked the field before though he no doubt felt like he’s been doing so all his life. But Information Analysts worked alone. And they singlehandedly controlled and plotted the outcomes of their cleverly planned out strategies and plots, controlling everything from beyond a screen that distanced them from the messy reality of working and living within a mission field.

And it just so happened that the two of their personalities clashed in this way, resulting in this uncomfortable and strained grudging “relationship”.

‘Right well, I’ll go down and talk to Yoongi,’ Hoseok frowns a little to himself, remembering the way Yoongi wouldn’t move away from the OrTank. He hadn’t even cleaned up or anything, simply staring at the Being inside. That Being in there meant something to Yoongi, something Hoseok didn’t and would probably never really be able to understand.

‘What was the system you were telling me about? I’ll input the coordinates and set up a trajectory,’ Namjoon cuts into his thoughts.

‘It’s called Präyōka,’ Hoseok turns a little to access the Table better, tapping onto the surface. ‘It’s 4 days from here- there are a few planets in the system- all of them are habitable but I think we should aim for one of the moons instead.’

Namjoon pulls up the system and information on it and says, ‘Right, I’ll start checking on it. I’ll take the first watch on the Bridge.’

Hoseok nods and makes his way out. He spots Sk’jin in the kitchen, listening to Taeh’yung who seems to be deeply invested in recounting some story to the Khol’isa. Sk’jin simply smiles and nods, his attitude towards the Zhak’gri a complete change to how he normally treated the other crew members. Hoseok would probably put down the change to that of respect. Similar to the way you would when addressing or speaking to someone of a higher rank than yourself.

Yoongi isn’t anywhere around Level Two and Hoseok has a feeling he’d be with the OrTank that Namjoon had explicitly ordered them not to move out of Level One. And Hoseok is right.

Yoongi is still sitting on the Lobby couch, his entire body turned facing the Being inside the OrTank. He still hasn’t cleaned up, and the couch where he sat had some stains on it that looked suspiciously like bloodstains. Yoongi is still splattered in blood though it’s dried off now. The Heliord handles are still attached to the side of his working-slaver trousers.

‘Hey Yoongi.’

Yoongi looks away from the OrTank.

‘I wanted to ask you if you knew any hubs we could use to register the ship under a new digital ID,’ Hoseok explains briefly. ‘Namjoon and I can’t use ours – it could get tracked back to us.’

‘I do,’ Yoongi nods. ‘I can set it up for you.’

‘Thanks- just make sure it won’t get traced back to you or to us,’ Hoseok adds though he’s sure Yoongi knows this.

The Human simply nods before staring back at the OrTank.

‘Uh- maybe you should wash up? It’s probably not hygienic staying like that,’ Hoseok suggests.

‘Do you remember your dreams?’ Yoongi asks instead.
‘Not all of them,’ Hoseok replies, somehow used to Yoongi’s inconsistent conversation skills.

‘Do you remember your first dream?’

‘I don’t think anyone can remember their first ever dream,’ Hoseok chuckles a little.

‘I remember mine,’ Yoongi states.

‘What did you see?’

‘I don’t know.’

Hoseok pauses for a bit, wondering how to ask the next question without coming off rude.

‘So…how do you know you remember what you say, if you don’t know what it was that you saw?’

‘I remember what I saw, but I didn’t understand what it was.’ Yoongi clarifies. ‘Does that happen to you?’

It’s happening to me right now, Hoseok wants to say.

‘Not always,’ he says instead and adds, ‘Go clean up Yoongi- he’ll be all right here.’

To Hoseok’s surprise, Yoongi listens to him and gets up. He places the Heliord handles on the table and just like that makes his way upwards.

The OrTank is unexpectedly light. Hoseok had thought it would be incredibly heavy but it weighed no more than an average Being. Whatever fluid or gas the Being floated in clearly didn’t weigh much. Hoseok settles the OrTank on the ground instead of leaning back awkwardly on the Lobby couch.

‘Who are you?’ Hoseok mumbles under his breath as he squats down to regard the Being inside the OrTank. Hoseok has seen the way the Being inside shifts slowly, facing Yoongi every time he sat close enough. The Being doesn’t shift to turn to face Hoseok and somehow Hoseok thinks he prefers that. He repositions himself to look at this Being properly, studying his features which weren’t so different from his or Yoongi’s.

Hoseok understands why Yoongi stares at this Being as though riveted. Though his eyes aren’t open and he’s clearly asleep/unconscious, there was a strange connection; as though the Being inside was watching you, was studying you. Hoseok almost feels as though his eyes might open at any time and the thought of it somehow frightens Hoseok.

He quickly steps away from the OrTank and makes his way up, determinedly not looking back at the OrTank.
Taeh’yung is an unexpectedly refreshing change within the ship. Namjoon isn’t sure if it’s because it’s after what happened in the slave-ship or if it’s the sudden lift of tense and badly hidden animosity he normally receives from Sk’jin.

He fits into the dynamics (or at least creates one) of the ship and could be found all over the ship, doing the strangest things. In the past days, Namjoon has come to learn that the Zhak’gri enjoyed walking around barefoot, liked to wear other Being’s clothes, had no concept of personal space, and had many stories to tell. Usually, Hoseok and Yoongi were the ones who would indulge and listen to the Zhak’gri and his ramblings that sometimes went from sweet child-like storylines to carnage and death in a span of seconds while smiling the entire time.

Namjoon was right. Taeh’yung fit all too well with the rest of them and Namjoon doesn’t know if that makes him relieved or not.

Taeh’yung also had the complete inability to stick to one subject at hand. Sometimes he spoke as though he was addressing someone else entirely but it was only momentary. Then he’d go back to whatever narrative he was enthusiastically reenacting.

There was no change in the Being inside the OrTank. No sign of waking up, no movement, nothing. They had conducted scans they felt were secure and safe enough on the OrTank but they received no information or data on the Being. Even his age was confusing. While the scan used to read his internal biological system reported his age at approximately 1450 sols, the scans conducted on his exterior, accounting for the state of his hair, skin, and nails, put him at no more than 250 sols. Wondering if the scans were faulty, Hoseok had volunteered himself to be scanned and his readings had come out accurate on both scales. They were able to attach a screen that read the Beings health-tab over his OrTank. Through the sensors placed all over the OrTank, they were able to record and watch the Being’s heartbeat, brain-wave patterns, and nervous frequency. While his heart rate was very low, like a hibernating creature’s heart rate would be, his brain-wave patterns were extremely active.

‘He’s dreaming,’ Taeh’yung had said fondly, looking at the Being inside.

His brain-wave patterns did suggest that he was dreaming. Sometimes his heartbeat increased, and you could see his eyes moving behind his eyelids.

But perhaps what was strangest of all in this was the Being’s reaction to each of them individually.

When Sk’jin was closest to him, the Being seemed to be at ease, his heartbeat easing to a slow lull and his nervous frequencies settling down, as though he were falling deeper into sleep.

When Hoseok was close to him, there was not much change in his heart rate or in his brain-wave reading- rather his nervous frequencies seemed to increase and his fingers twitched several times as well. This seemed to unsettle the Ngfy’widan a lot and chose to avoid staying too close to the OrTank.

His reaction to Namjoon was subtle- like an acknowledgment. It was strange; Namjoon couldn’t describe it but he knows that everyone else felt it too. It was as though the Being inside the OrTank was aware of them, even in his sleep. His reaction towards them was a responsive one. And he seemed to respond the most to Taeh’yung who spoke to the Being as though they had been friends for centuries already. His heart rate, brain-wave pattern, nervous frequencies all pitched up whenever Taeh’yung was around.
But the strangest reaction was most probably with Yoongi.

The unknown Being seemed to actively move in accordance to Yoongi’s actions. If Yoongi stood to the right of the OrTank, the Being inside would slowly but surely drift to face the Human. If Yoongi placed his hand over the glass of the OrTank, the Being inside would raise his hand against the glass as well. His brain-wave pattern would spike, as though he was seeing multiple dreams. Unlike Hoseok’s wary reaction, Yoongi’s was one of utter awe and fascination. He spent a majority of his time in front of the OrTank. Sometimes sitting idly next to the OrTank, perusing his screen or watching something on the large entertainment system, or sometimes simply staring at the Being as though waiting for some form of reaction or response.

‘Approaching Ch’dra in 4 minutes.’

Namjoon shakes himself out of his revere.

The Prāyōka System was a young one, with a large sun and even larger habitable zone for her planets and their moons. They were closing in on Ch’dra, the moon of a volatile and volcano-riddled planet that seemed to glow even from this distance with all the lava that boiled on a majority of its surface. Though the planet was uninhabitable, it was a rich source of sulfur and many mining companies were settled in its moon. Scarcely populated and that too only by mining companies, a majority of the population was mainly Cyborg, Android, and possibly a handful of officers scattered about to supervise. They had purposefully chosen a dock that was populated only by Cyborgs so as to give themselves all the privacy they would need.

The moon Ch’dra still had a Dock where many Excavator Guilds came to temporarily dock or repair their ships. Which was what they had disguised themselves as for this trip.

‘All right so Sk’jin and Hoseok will oversee the cargo, I’ll look over the restocking and Taeh’yung will…will watch over the OrTank,’ Namjoon adds rather lamely but Taeh’yung gives him a bright thumbs up from behind him where he’s strapped onto a footstool. ‘And Yoongi will remain in the ship to keep an eye on our systems and on the channels.’

Everyone mumbles their agreement in varying levels of enthusiasm and stress.

‘Let’s land Hoseok.’

Ch’dra has an easy atmosphere, one that doesn’t burn too much as they enter the moon gently. It was a beautiful moon, with large circular lakes of clear blue liquid (which were actually pools of acid) dotting its oddly flat terrain. According to what Namjoon had read, safe water was available but it was underground and had to be mined. This factor had removed Ch’dra from being listed as a potentially habitable planet as it would be too much of a hassle to create a hydro-system avoiding all the underground pockets of acid as well. Not only that but the soil in Ch’dra was mainly infertile due to the salt excess from the acid pools. So when they land, the landscape around Ch’dra is a massive expansive stretch of granular dark grey soil, occasionally interrupted by larger pumice-like boulders.

‘All right, we can move out now,’ Hoseok calls as the ship is stabilized after landing. Taeh’yung whoops and bounds out of the Bridge excitedly.

‘See you in a bit Yoongi,’ Sk’jin calls out to the Human who doesn’t respond but that was to be expected.

‘Will you be all right using the Spardyti?’ Hoseok asks as they make their way down towards the Hangar Bay.
‘Yeah- I’ve driven one before,’ Namjoon replies. ‘It won’t be an issue. Just need to add some gravity-lifts and bring in the fuel cells.’

Hoseok nods, making his way inside the Hangar and opens the Hangar gate as Namjoon slides into the Spardyti.

‘Yoongi could you activate the Spardyti controls?’ Namjoon asks as he releases the magnetic safety strap.

The Spardyti dashboard lights up a few seconds later.

‘Thanks.’

It’s always delightful to feel natural air rushing about you no matter what planet you’re on. The air is a little dry and feels a bit gritty but it’s a definite welcome. Namjoon catches sight of Sk’jin standing outside already, his face turned up towards the sun, eyes closed. Taeh’yung might have “healed” the Khol’isa but Namjoon can’t be too sure about it. Namjoon stops the Spardyti just outside of the Hangar gate.

“How many?” Hoseok calls as he drags out a gravity-lift.

‘I think 3 should be enough,’ Namjoon replies, taking one of the lifts from Hoseok and easing it into the back of the Spardyti.

‘All right so here,’ Namjoon hands Hoseok the NaviLet. ‘The entire inventory list is on that, I’ve made it so that you can just check off the list according to the serial number on each of the cargo.’

Sk’jin approaches them as well, looking radiant under the sunlight and a lot happier than he has in days.

‘I think we should start with the bigger OrTanks first,’ Sk’jin suggests, shielding his eyes as he squints down at the screen in Hoseok’s hands.

‘Right, let’s begin by-’ Hoseok stops abruptly.

‘What’s wrong?’ Namjoon asks then he hears it too. The Spardyti quiets down, the dashboard darkens. A small sound suggesting that his Comm-Device shut down rings in his ear. The gentle hum of the Užkulisiä also quiets down and the turbines on the wings of the ship stops as well.

‘What in Spaces is going on?’ Hoseok taps on the NaviLet a few times before he does a double take, staring behind Namjoon with a befuddled expression on his face.

Namjoon turns to find Yoongi walking out of the ship, headed towards them.

‘Wasn’t he supposed to be keeping watch inside the ship?’ Sk’jin questions, looking confused before raising his voice, ‘Yoongi what happened?’

‘Did he start-up the ship?’ Hoseok ruminates as Namjoon steps forward to talk to the Human. Hoseok turns to address Sk’jin again.

‘I think we should begin with the last of the OrTanks-’

A familiar hum suddenly fills the air and Hoseok moves instinctively.

The NaviLet in his hand burns into bright pieces as something incredibly hot sears over his ear. Hoseok hears Namjoon gasp in shock and Sk’jin stumbling.
Hoseok reaches back, grappling Yoongi who was still holding up the Heliord in his hands and twists his wrist, making him drop the weapon onto the granular sandy floor. But before Hoseok can even begin to try and apprehend Yoongi, the Human is moving already - straight for Sk’jin.

Another Heliord blade burns up in the air and it flashes and slices across the air right around Sk’jin’s head.

A green bubble immediately erupts around the Human who nonchalantly drops the Heliord onto the ground and then proceeds to strip.

‘Yoongi-!’ Sk’jin gasps as he stumbles and falls back, his hand automatically clutching his ear, his expression slightly pained. There’s blood seeping through Sk’jin’s fair fingers.

‘What in Spaces-‘ Namjoon pants out, helping Sk’jin stand up as Hoseok stands in front of the two of them. Taeh’yung appears from near the Hangar gateway, his hands glowing green and a quizzical expression on his face.

What was Yoongi doing?

Standing in just his underwear Yoongi finally turns to address them, hands raised up above his head as though to show he held no weapons. Hoseok can’t help but notice the intensity of scars and discolouration all over the Human’s body. Not a single inch of his skin was left unmarred.

‘We are under surveillance,’ is his extraordinary statement, unfazed by his near complete nakedness. ‘And we are being tracked. This entire mission was a set-up.’

‘What the fuck-‘ Sk’jin still sounds like he can’t believe what just happened.

Hoseok carefully studies what Yoongi just did. The ship shut-down. He just destroyed the NaviLet in Hoseok’s hands, including all of their Comm-Devices.

‘How do you know this?’ Namjoon demands.

‘Because Yisheng Amme told me.’

‘What?!’

Taeh’yung approaches them cautiously, peeking over Namjoon’s shoulders.

‘The Užkulisai-02 was designed and rigged to be used and operated for Mission 013-937619.’ Yoongi states. ‘Mission 013-937619 was also designed and orchestrated to fail 3 months into its operation where the objective of the mission, what it was carrying, where it was headed, and for what reasons it was issued would be revealed to the entirety of the Known Universe.’

‘What-‘ Sk’jin sounds stricken, barely grasping for words, his eyes flashing red.

Yoongi stares at them steadily.

‘I am sorry for not revealing this earlier but due to recent events I was unable to inform you. Now that we have landed here where we can readjust the ship and make it completely-‘

‘And why the fuck should we trust anything you’re saying?’ Sk’jin hisses, storming up towards Yoongi.

‘You don’t,’ Yoongi replies simply. ‘But you know you should. What with all that we’ve seen, and with the way nothing adds up. I know that all of you have had doubts. And now with his arrival, it’s apparent that the mission we were set out to complete is just a set-up.’

No one speaks.

‘We were tricked,’ Yoongi says simply. ‘They knew what would work against us. They knew the exact right things to say, knew exactly what would make us agree to this mission, and they set us up.’

Sk’jin curses in a jumble of his own language, walking away, anger obvious in his movements. Namjoon is still staring at Yoongi, studying the Human intently.

‘Fuckin’ hell this fucked up–‘ Sk’jin is seething furiously while Taeh’yung jumps around trying to placate the Khol’isa.

‘Namjoon, Hoseok, Sk’jin,’ Yoongi addresses them steadily. ‘Please.’

Sk’jin pauses in the middle of his angry outbreak before sitting down on the ground, clearly done with the entire situation. He glances up at them and says, ‘So what do we now?’

‘Yoongi, put your clothes back on,’ Namjoon orders. ‘Taeh’yung you can remove the…whatever that is. We empty the ship, rewire everything and purge it,’ Namjoon declares sharply. ‘The closest station is no more than 30 minutes from here we can go on foot and retrieve what we need.’

Namjoon glances back at the Užkulisai with a dark gleam in his eyes.

‘The ship is in complete power lockdown until we clear it.’
(Author’s Note)

Wow two weeks into university and I want it to end already this is a great start guys, I love life, I love university, why am I doing this? Oh right, so that I can get a job in the future so that I can eat, have a roof over my head, and have access to wifi.

So yes! I will only be updating every two weeks from now on! I could probably do weekly updates but I don’t want to compromise the quality of my chapters ehe, so yeah

I want to say I hope this chapter clarifies things but I know that’s a lie but hey! Taeh’yung is officially a part of the Užkulīsai! Yay!

I also just found out that Hansol from Toppdogg just came out as asexual and I feel like I could cry

This is such a big deal omg. While I don’t know the band all too well, I did read articles about how fans were worried about him some time ago and how appeared to be suicidal and oh god this is such an important news omg bless his soul fuck that was such a brave thing to do oh my god. As an asexual person myself, this really hits me hard. I really REALLY FUCKING hope he’s not given a harsh time for this. Oh my god I’m shook, legit wow.

Most people won’t really understand what this would mean to other aces – it’s different from coming out as any of the other lgbqt but at the same time similar.

Most times people ask you if there’s something wrong with you, or that you probably haven’t met the “right person to fuck” or something along that line and to come out and just very honestly state that you’re asexual and don’t want anything to do with sex is just- god I don’t even know what to say.

But fuck yes! FUCK YES! Go Hansol! Embrace it, be proud of it, and fuck anyone who thinks otherwise! #REPRESENTACE also this was beta-d very quickly so please excuse any grammatical errors.

See you in the next update!!
The sun is shining.

It’s warm. Maybe a bit too warm. But there’s a gentle breeze that blows about occasionally and the sweat on his skin cools. He fights the urge to yawn, instead opting to stretch his arms over his head. He blocks the sun with his hands for a while, rings of light burst through his fingers, light splitting into spectrums of colour for a fraction of a second.

‘Don’t look at the sun! You know that the eclipse is going to take place soon- do you want to fry your eyes?’

He snorts, rolling his eyes and looking over to the side.

‘So hand me those glasses and stop complaining.’

‘GUYS! HEY GUYS! COME OVER HERE AND CHECK THIS OUT!’

‘Please control your sister’s volume settings I swear to god the entire neighbourhood can hear her.’

‘Just because she’s AI doesn’t mean she has “settings” what the fuck-’

‘Don’t tell me you didn’t ask your parents for a remote control for her settings-’

‘I was five let it go-’

‘I SAID COME CHECK THIS OUT YOU ASSHOLES-’

‘WE’RE COMING FOR FUCK’S SAKE CONTROL YOUR VOLUME-’

‘Siblings indeed you both swear so much-’

‘Shut the fuck up-’

The floorboards are warmed by the sun and they’re dry under his bare feet. It’s a lazy afternoon and the urge to nap is slowly overtaking his senses.

‘Finally- come check this out!’

She just turned 13 last week and to celebrate turning into a teenager, she decided to chop off a majority of her hair, leaving it into a silky rather bushy bob of a cut below her ears. They had to salvage her hair, seeing as she had taken to the scissors herself. Their mother nearly had an aneurism at the sight of badly butchered hair and rushed her willful daughter to the salon to somewhat make it look better. She had a sparkly little star-shaped clip on her hair, pulling it back behind her ears that were recently pierced as well. He remembers buying the clip for her from an accessory store from the Mars Docks. It was made in Earth, but she still freaked out nonetheless.

She points enthusiastically at the floor. They had a large tree outside of their apartment unit facing one of the many parks that was grown and maintained in the Settlement Arc. Sunlight was pouring through the canopy of leaves and the floor was riddled with crescent shaped lights.

‘Isn’t this amazing?’ she asks, eyes wide and filled with awe.

‘It is,’ he admits before he adds, ‘Don’t let mum hear you swearing – she’ll blame me again.’

‘We both know she swears more than the two of us-besides, you aren’t even here long enough for me to learn your “wicked ways”.’ She rolls her eyes.

‘Yes well, I’ll be gone soon enough so you’re saved from my influence for another 7 years.’

She suddenly looks sad.

‘I’ll be 20 by the time you come back- that’s not fair.’ She frowns. ‘I’ll be old.’

‘If you think 20 is old what do you think I am?’

‘ancient.’ She giggles.

‘You’ll be taller than your brother no doubt-ouch!’

He takes a seat next to her on the ground, ruffling her hair.

‘You’re talking as though you won’t message me every other day and like we won’t see each other through calls.’

She sighs, leaning into her brother.

‘Next time we meet I might even come to Tayi and surprise you.’

‘Yeah?’

‘Yeap- and I’ll be better than you- just wait.’

He laughs, throwing his head back.

‘It’s a deal.’

‘We should probably get going if we want to watch the eclipse properly.’

‘Do we have to- I mean, it’s not that great of a thing-‘

‘Don’t be a spoil sport and move your ass- am I right?’

‘He’s right.’

He huffs out a defeated laugh.

‘Fine- gang up on me then.’
Yisheng Amme’s quarters served as her office as well. And this is where Yoongi finds her. The entirety of her room, a tall dome ceilinged chamber, is covered in thick leafy vines. It’s warmer in here as well and the air thicker somehow.

Amme is sitting cross legged over some mats, on her lap is a great serpent like creature, its scales a deep red that almost seems black. It was probably her pet, a creature from her own dangerous planet. It coils about her, its strange blunt head regarding Yoongi with milky white eyes.

‘Did you make up your mind?’

‘What is the mission’s original objective?’ Yoongi asks, taking a seat in front of Amme. The creature bares its teeth at Yoongi—displaying 3 rows of sharp translucent teeth.

‘You will find it in the—’

‘That’s not what I meant. This is a mission doomed to fail. Logically speaking, this is a collective unit of Beings who have no common ground, no shared viewpoint, and all from clashing parties. This is a mission created to fail. What is the reason behind this?’ Yoongi clarifies.

Amme puts her hands together for a while and regards Yoongi carefully. The creature in her lap slithers away and disappears into the plants.

‘We are existing in a very delicate and dangerous position right now Yoongi.’

‘The Yisheng Headquarters?’

‘No. The Universe as we know it.’

‘I do not understand.’

‘What happened 4 years ago has triggered a genesis that could destroy everything,’ Amme says flatly. ‘And if this is to occur again, then we will not be so lucky as we were. As you are well aware, there are Beings within this committee who would probably want to use this technology in Bhumi for their own agenda. For what purpose or result, we can only imagine, but it’s clear that we cannot allow this to happen.’

‘Is it not a natural progression Yisheng? The cycle of life; we all live as predators until another comes and we become prey.’

‘And so is fighting for survival. Would you choose to witness the end of all Life as we know it?’

‘I know little of it. It wouldn’t be a waste, Yisheng.’

‘So are you refusing the mission?’

‘No. I just wanted to know why you would send these Beings to a mission that is obviously going to end in their demise and inevitable failure.’

‘And I believe that you would change that Yoongi,’ Amme replies. ‘These candidates that the other committee members have submitted were not random choices— they were not selected for their ability or skill— rather they were chosen for their connection to this mission and for their clashing ideals and goals. You are a Being with no direct goal or inhibition. By attending this mission you will make sure that the mission is a success— and that no one single member gains the upper-hand. These Beings have been brought in as pawns. To move about as their masters would.’

‘Is that what I am? A pawn?’

‘Yes. And no.’

‘Please explain.’

‘I did not lie when I said I would be sending you on a mission that could help you find the answers you’re looking for Yoongi,’ Amme replies quietly. ‘This is a mission that has been created to fail, there is no doubt in that. Everyone involved in your unit; the Ngfy’widan who killed his father, the Kutsoglerin who comes from a horrific past, and the Khol’isa pirate-lord who existed as nothing more than memory for centuries and now you, a GI agent with no cognitive memory. There is no possible outcome where your entire team could ever properly work together. However I believe that you can see to the success of this mission. And that you will find the answers to your questions.’

They sit in silence for a while. Sometimes Yoongi isn’t sure which of Amme’s eyes to look at. He settles for the first pair most times.

‘So while I fulfill your agenda against the others, I would be finding the answers to my own questions?’

‘Yes.’

The serpent-like creature approaches Yoongi and coils around him. Yoongi can feel the heat it emanates through his clothes.

‘The entire ship has been rewired to the precise order and command of the committee— the database network has been compromised and many of the other features such as security, firewalls, engine systems, ship controls, and archive systems have been redesigned to send a direct feedback of its records and changes back to each of the committee members.’ Amme informs him. ‘This information is of course hidden from the other crew members.’

‘Why are the committee handicapping the mission if so much depends on it?’
‘Because while they want it to succeed, they also want it to fail so that it might fail and be discovered, leading them to a much more public and easily controllable state of events.’ Amme explains. ‘Where they can use the panic and confusion of the masses to their advantage and gain control.’

‘You are telling me that while the other committee members have a second agenda regarding this mission, you do not, and therefore would like to see it succeed? Why should I believe you? You are a member yourself; you could be lying to me and have your own agenda.’

‘That might be true.’ Amme nods. ‘I could be lying to you. But I could be telling you the truth. I do not ask you to believe me Yoongi- I am simply asking you to see to this mission’s success as is stated in the mission objective. That is all I care about.’

Yoongi considers Amme. As a Yisheng, she was bound at a much higher, nearly spiritual obligation and duty, to the Universe. However well this might be translated over into some individuals, the actions of the Yisheng was to always preserve and maintain the balance of the Universe.

‘So we’ll be under constant surveillance?’

‘Yes.’

‘Why did you tell me?’

‘Because I want this mission to succeed. The true intentions of this mission, the true objective of this mission must succeed. Because we have to live.’

The serpent-like creature turns its head towards Yoongi again, staring at him balefully.

‘What is your answer?’

‘Mission accepted.’
Develop Communication Skills!” by Dr. Prof. J.S. Sklien was of no help. Yoongi closes the screen on the final chapter of the book with a quiet sigh.

‘All right so Sk’jin and Hoseok will oversee the cargo, I’ll look over the restocking and Taeh’yung will…will watch over the OtTank,’ Namjoon orders from where he sits. ‘And Yoongi will remain in the ship to keep an eye on our systems and on the channels.’

Yoongi doesn’t reply- not exactly knowing how to respond in all honesty. He’s probably read more than 500 books on the topic of communication and social etiquette and even listened to many programs designed specifically for agents or other Beings working in the emissary positions and or GLA status. But none of them were of any help.

He’s spent this entire time onboard the Užkulisai in perpetual silence that he knows most people would find awkward or uncomfortable under normal circumstances. In his case however, Namjoon and Hoseok seem to think he’s aloof and distant rather than lacking in the social etiquette department.

‘Let’s land Hoseok.’

Yoongi taps along the screen in his hands, reading through the ship’s archives on fuel distribution, keeping note of where most of the fuel was being used up the most.

The Užkulisai used a lot of fuel for a ship her size- something Yoongi had instantly noticed and also something he had expected. Many of the gages and measurement systems regarding the fuel management of the ship had been altered and shifted purposefully to give the crew members an incorrect reading of the ship’s status. They were running very low on fuel and he’s glad that Hoseok had come up with his own idea about the fuel usage rather than Yoongi somehow interject or hint at restocking. He wasn’t sure how he would say it and he wasn’t sure how it would be taken in the first place.

That was something else he was going to have to discuss with Namjoon as well. If they don’t kill him first of course. No chapter in any book he’s read offered any sound advice on how to break a news of such weight. There were plenty of chapters on “How to Tell People Bad News!” or “Passing on Difficult Messages the Easy Way!” and none of them seemed to exactly fit Yoongi’s situation. Besides, he doesn’t think sitting the crew around at a table surrounded with aroma-therapeutic scents would help his cause. Besides, there were no fragrance-oils readily available in the ship and it would take a long time to order and have it delivered to the ship.

So Yoongi has thought long and hard on how to break the news to them. Luckily he didn’t have to instigate or guide their next steps to get them to this point. Yoongi guesses that all of them needed some time out, considering the direction Namjoon and Sk’jin relationship (or lack thereof) was headed, it was probably a good idea to head somewhere they could stay away from each other and not just inside the ship.

‘All right, we can move out now.’

Yoongi hadn’t even been aware of the fact that they had landed already. He glances up at the camera situated right above him, watching over all of the Bridge from a high angle. There were more cameras planted all around the ship. It had taken Yoongi nearly a week to find all of them.

Hoseok eases the ship down to stand-by mode, rearranging the ship system’s to in-planet settings. The ship’s shield shimmers brightly once before fading away with the slightest twinkle.

Taeh’yung cheers as he gets off of the footstool, his borrowed robe fluttering behind him as he skips out. Finding Taeh’yung had confirmed his decisions in Grezma; further inspiring Yoongi to quickly come clean. He had even gotten time alone with Namjoon and had even gone out of his way to buy ingredients for food with which he hoped to get Sk’jin in a good mood for the moment he told the Khol’isa what he knew. But then everything else happened and Yoongi worked off his frustration as he laid waste to the K’it’y guards based there.

‘See you in a bit Yoongi,’ Sk’jin chimes at him. Before Yoongi can think of a response the Khol’isa turns away, as though he hadn’t been expecting a reply anyways. Yoongi deflates a little in his seat, wondering if a he should have replied with ‘okay’ or ‘of course you’ll see me later— we live in the same ship’ or ‘in a while, crocodile’. The first one seemed the most appropriate— it was a word of confirmation that was casual and easygoing without sounding too formal or rude. And Yoongi has seen pictures of crocodiles and doesn’t think Sk’jin would appreciate the comparison once he finds out.

They leave the Bridge, making a lot of noise as they do so. It was often very easy to hear the crew members walking around the ship. The noisiest was Taeh’yung who had no care or heeded what his limbs made contact with. He was the definition of a storm as he skipped down the stairs, bare feet making extraordinary noise against the matted steps. Next was Namjoon who walked with a slightly heavier gait than the rest. Yoongi puts it down to his bionic built.

Sk’jin, though elegant and smooth in his movements, wasn’t as quiet as one would expect. There was times where he would make the most uncharacteristically clumsy move, as though miscalculating his own physical density or the proximity of an object. He also walked slightly tilted, as though permanently imbalanced in his core. Yet he hid these with exceptional grace, using them to his advantage and exuding something like effortless/lazy grace while in fact disguising his slightly skewed sense of perspective.

The most quiet Being after Yoongi was Hoseok. Which was to be expected considering what he had been before. Hoseok moved with unexpected grace and fluidity- a trait that reminds Yoongi of the GI agents. Hoseok’s physical appearance betrayed his real capabilities. He was a lithe and slim Being and at first glance didn’t seem imposing in the least bit. He was neither very tall or short- his built wasn’t heavy or spritely; overall Hoseok just seemed average in his physical capabilities. However after Grezma and the slave-ship, it only firmly confirmed to Yoongi of the Ngfy’widan’s lethality. Yoongi doesn’t remember the last time he worked so flawlessly with another Being in such a hastily thrown together situation as the one they faced in the slave-ship. It was as though Hoseok was in the same wavelength as Yoongi- moving and mirroring and supporting Yoongi’s every line of action and thought. Hoseok would be a terrifying opponent to have in a fight- so he would have to base his next few steps in anticipation of Hoseok’s instinctive abilities.

He glances out of the large HUD windows, taking in the dry dark landscape a little absently. The massive lakes of acid glimmered at him from the distance in the horizon. This was a good moon to land on. It was perfect for discarding anything they might find that would potentially harm them. That would potentially harm him.

‘Will you be all right using the Spardyti?’ he hears Hoseok ask Namjoon. He would have to make sure that the entire ship was fully shut down.

‘Yeah- I’ve driven one before,’ Namjoon replies. ‘It won’t be an issue. Just need to add some gravity-lifts and bring in the fuel cells.’

Yoongi gets up from his seat and exits the Bridge.

‘Yoongi could you activate the Spardyti controls?’ Namjoon asks, his voice a little strained. Yoongi activates the controls from the screen in his hands as he walks down the stairs to the Living Quarters.

‘Thanks.’

The cabins were all designed to look the same and to be the same. However Yoongi had taken quite a lot liberty in “redesigning” his cabin space. A manual search (meaning Yoongi took apart the entire room) lead to the discovery of 3 cameras, 4 microphones, and 3 sensors. He removed each and every one of them and basically separated his room from the rest of the ship. Judging by the faces of the other group members, they had no idea they were being spied on. He would need to inform them on that too.

After carefully scanning through every inch of his cabin and deeming it clear, Yoongi had put back the walls, floor, and ceiling and unpacked the one thing he had brought with him.

His helmet.

Picking up the black helmet from on top of his table, Yoongi slips it on.

[UŽKULISAI SYSTEMS CORE]
[ACCESSING SYSTEM-LISAI]
[INITIATE OVERRIDE]
[INITIATE OVERRIDE]
[OVERRIDE SUCCESS]

[ENGINE CORE_ON/OFF]
[SYSTEMS CORE_ON/OFF]
[LIFE SUPPORT_ON/OFF]
[MASTER SWITCH_ON/OFF]
[MASTER SWITCH_OFF]

Removing the helmet, Yoongi hears the ship quiet down, the hallways fall into darkness where no natural light can permeate. Yoongi picks up the Heliord handle and makes his way down.

‘I think we should start with the bigger OrTanks first,’ Sk’jin is suggesting. He sounds healthy.

‘Right, let’s begin by-‘ Hoseok is obviously the first one to notice. Yoongi is surprised he hadn’t noticed the moment he shut down the ship.

‘What’s wrong?’

Communications goes down as Yoongi makes his way to Level One. Taeh’yung is there, sitting next to the OrTank. There is no light save for the strange green luminance that the Zhak’gri seems to naturally emit.

‘Yoongi?’ he quirks his head in question as though he knew that the sudden power loss wasn’t one of mistake or some systems reboot.

Instead of answering his unasked question, Yoongi taps at his own ear and holds out his hand in front of Taeh’yung. Clearly confused but still compliant, he hands Yoongi the Comm-Device in his ear. Yoongi crushes the little device between his fingers.

‘Thank you.’

Taeh’yung beams at him and wraps an arm around the OrTank, no questions asked. Yoongi makes his way out and finds Namjoon and Hoseok with their heads bent over the NaviLet and with Sk’jin looking down at them from a short distance. This was almost entirely too perfect.

‘What in Spaces is going on?’ he sees confusion and wariness settle on Hoseok’s face as he taps on the NaviLet as though in hopes of waking it up. The systems shutdown was catching up now and so all the system-communications from the Navigation Table was now shutting down. He looks up and Yoongi doesn’t find suspicion in his eyes- instead Hoseok goes back to the NaviLet as though he had other things to think about other than potentially faulty ship-systems. This might be easier than he calculated.

‘Wasn’t he supposed to be keeping watch inside the ship?’ Sk’jin sounds a little sleepy, as though by standing under the sunlight made him at ease. ‘Yoongi what happened?’

‘Did he start-up the ship?’ Hoseok doesn’t pay him heed, clearly dismissing the issue for Namjoon to handle who walks towards him, a questioning look in his expression.

‘I think we should begin with the last of the OrTanks-‘

Yoongi realizes just as he starts up the Heliord blade that they trusted him. It was the only reason why Hoseok would turn his back to him, disadvantaging himself. Why Sk’jin wasn’t regarding him with instant distrust and rapid calculation. It was the reason why Namjoon was walking towards him, a question on his lips and his attitude easy and open.

Yoongi is filled with guilt as he realizes that he’s manipulating their trust in him.

It’s easy calculating the speed in which the Heliord blade activates and he times it perfectly to extend over both Namjoon and Hoseok’s ears- destroying the Comm-Devices on their ears. Deactivating the device and activating it again, it extends over Hoseok’s hands, breaking the NaviLet into pieces. He reaches, so quickly he’s sure Namjoon doesn’t realize, over for the Kutsoglerin’s personal screen and crushes the device with just a single hand just as Hoseok’s instincts take over.

Just as Yoongi anticipated, Hoseok takes on the offence and is quick to disarm Yoongi through being disarmed was a part of Yoongi’s plan in the first place. The Heliord handle drops and while still held captive by Hoseok, Yoongi reaches for the other handle in his pocket and the blade seers into life and slices at Sk’jin’s ear. His timing is a little off, feeling a little disoriented by the sheer disbelief in Sk’jin’s eyes. As though he couldn’t believe Yoongi was doing what he was doing.

A green light erupts around Yoongi and he instantly drops the Heliord from his hand. He remembers what Zhoumi had said about nudity but right now he had to show that he hid nothing on himself and so he strips.

‘Yoongi-!’ Sk’jin’s gasp is pained, incredulous, and confused. His ear is bleeding and Yoongi feels guilty again. He spots Taeh’yung near the Hangar gateway, looking confused but still trying to help.

‘What in Spaces-‘ Namjoon looks stunned. He doesn’t seem to realize he’s holding Sk’jin up, his stance protective. Hoseok is there just as quickly, placing himself in front of the two behind him.
Tactically speaking, Yoongi would praise Hoseok’s quick thinking but he has no intentions of attacking them.

Raising his hands over his head in the universally accepted gesture of “I have no weapons on me” and “I mean no harm” Yoongi hopes to convey his friendliness as such. Chapter 15 in “Building Better Relations in the Work Place!” had said that body language was extremely important. It clearly doesn’t work because the three in front of him are regarding him as though they thought he lost his mind. Which Yoongi doesn’t blame them for.

So rather than stretch out this strangeness and possibly get killed by Taeh’yung who was very unpredictable, Yoongi speaks up.

‘We are under surveillance. And we are being tracked. This entire mission was a set-up.’ He summarizes briefly.

A good introduction was key to captivating your audience’s attention. Something he read in “How to Improve Your Speaking Skills!”. That chapter might have been the best thing he’s read so far because everyone is riveted.

‘What the fuck-’ Sk’jin sounds even more confused.

Hoseok is regarding him carefully now, his yellow-ringed eyes calculative as he studies Yoongi’s previous actions.

‘How do you know this?’ Namjoon demands, still standing in front of Sk’jin.

‘Because Yisheng Amme told me.’ Yoongi replies, arms still up. The sun felt nice on his back. Pleasant and warm. Maybe a bit too dry. Taeh’yung is stepping out into the ramp now, still looking puzzled.

‘What?!’ Namjoon’s eyes are wide with confusion.

‘The Užkulisai-02 was designed and rigged to be used and operated for Mission 013-937619.’ Yoongi further explains. ‘Mission 013-937619 was also designed and orchestrated to fail 3 months into its operation where the objective of the mission, what it was carrying, where it was headed, and for what reasons it was issued would be revealed to the entirety of the Known Universe.’

‘What-‘ Sk’jin is so genuinely confused, he looks like he’s close to passing out again.

‘I am sorry for not revealing this earlier but due to recent events I was unable to inform you. Now that we have landed here where we can readjust the ship and make it completely-‘

‘And why the fuck should we trust anything you’re saying?’ Sk’jin storms up to him, eyes burning, his entire body language exuding frustration and incredulity.

‘You don’t,’ Yoongi answers. ‘But you know you should. What with all that we’ve seen, and with the way nothing adds up. I know that all of you have had doubts. And now with his arrival, it’s apparent that the mission we were set out to complete is just a set-up.’

It’s remarkably quiet. Yoongi can see the way each and every single one of them is furiously thinking.

‘We were tricked. They knew what would work against us. They knew the exact right things to say, knew exactly what would make us agree to this mission, and they set us up.’ Yoongi explains simply. Amme might have said that she didn’t have her own agenda within this mission, but Yoongi didn’t believe her. He never believed her in the first place. And now even more so with his appearance.

Sk’jin is hissing, shoulders bunched and head low as he gesticulates violently in the air. Namjoon looks uncertain yet at the same time like he wasn’t entirely surprised.

‘Fuckin’ hell this fucked up—’

Taeh’yung’s attempts in placating the Khol’isa are both amusing and worrying as he hops around trying to face Sk’jin, pulling funny faces at him.

‘Namjoon, Hoseok, Sk’jin,’ Yoongi read in “Making Friends!” that continuously repeating a Being’s name familiarized your voice to them, therefore creating a better platform by which you could appeal to them. Nicknames were good, but in a serious situation, the writers had advised that the reader stick to official names. ‘Please.’

It seems to work, as Sk’jin stops his furious pacing and throws himself on the ground looking completely done with everything. He glares expectedly at Namjoon and asks: ‘So what do we now?’.

Namjoon doesn’t notice Sk’jin’s glare, instead he’s already looking at Yoongi.

As individuals, they all had their shortcomings within the team. However, one thing Namjoon didn’t lack was initiative.

‘Yoongi, put your clothes back on,’ the Kutsoglerin commands. ‘Taeh’yung you can remove the… whatever that is. We empty the ship, rewire everything and purge it. The closest station is no more than 30 minutes from here we can go on foot and retrieve what we need.’

The shield around Yoongi disappears.

‘The ship is in complete power lockdown until we clear it.’ Namjoon declares.

‘I’m sorry about your ear,’ is the first thing Yoongi says to Sk’jin who stares at him blankly for a whole 3 seconds before throwing a punch that Yoongi saw coming and could have blocked but he doesn’t.

Sk’jin’s fist lands squarely across his jaw, rattling his teeth a little. This probably wasn’t Sk’jin’s full strength but it still hurt a bit.

Taeh’yung squeaks, flailing as he puts himself between Yoongi and Sk’jin, arms thrown wide. Namjoon looks ready to pull back Sk’jin while Hoseok situates himself in between to put an end to any sort of scuffle.

‘No violence please!’ the Zhak’gri pleads, hopping about. ‘It doesn’t solve anything!’

‘You could have fucking decapitated me you Earthian piece of shit!’ Sk’jin shrieks and adds in the same tone as he turns around storming off towards the ship, ‘Wear some fuckin’ clothes!’

Taeh’yung glances back at him, a slightly amused but at the same time curious expression on his face.

‘All right Yoongi?’

Yoongi isn’t sure how to answer to that so he simply nods. He wears his clothes again, dusting them a little as they picked up a massive amount of the dark granular dust that made up the ground of the moon.

Holding up a hand and pulling his fist to form a thumbs-up, he says: ‘I’m a-okay.’

‘I keep telling you; don’t look at the eclipse directly like that- we need to get to the hill-top first you fucking idiot-’

‘-stop yammering- I’ll do what I want dick-face-‘

‘There are children here, will you two control yourselves?!’

‘Sorry-‘

‘-swearing in front of the children and lying my goodness you’re really something-ouch!!’

He laughs out loud, shaking his head at the two in front of him.

‘Come on! You want me to carry you?’

‘No- I can walk there myself!’ he declares stubbornly despite the way his thighs were burning and his feet were sore.

‘Atta boy!’

‘Can you carry me instead?’ she asks, looking tired and sweaty.

‘Sure thing kid; want some water?’

‘Ma already gave me some. I can drink at the lake.’

‘You sure? Don’t want you fainting about.’

‘I’m fine-‘

‘No attitude!’

‘Yes ma.’
She flashes a cheeky wink at him which he returns. They both knew she had too much attitude anyways- something she picked up from having too many older brothers around her all the time.

‘Where’s dad?’

‘Being slow- as usual.’ His older brother snorts.

‘I’ll go check on him. Might be his knees,’ he offers, already turning back around.

The landscape is amazing- wide winding valleys and a steady trickle of people moving upwards to the hill-top. The sky was a strange colour, because of the way the sun and the moon were dancing. A heavenly dance. He personally thought it was a bit too slow for a dance.

‘Be careful!’ their mother calls out after him.

‘I will ma!’

* *

Sk’jin is still glaring at him, his ear covered in tissue-plast and ointment (carefully applied by Taeh’yung who treated the latter like he was a child) as they sit above the ramp of the Hangar bay. Taeh’yung was outside, dragging the OrTank behind him as he scuffled around the soil, creating mounds and structures with delight, talking animatedly to the Being inside the OrTank.

Sunlight seemed to have a visible effect on the Being, his form uncurling even more, as though trying to expose himself to more of the sunlight. Making sure to keep Taeh’yung and the OrTank in his peripheral vision the entire time, Yoongi turns his full attention towards the remaining crew members. He just told them about his last meeting with Amme and all that she told him.

‘Lal Haenoon told me something similar,’ Hoseok says, rubbing at his face tiredly. He’s procured a head-band of sorts, pushing back his hair from his face. ‘He wanted me to make sure that the “mission” would succeed because every other Being in the special-jury wanted their own agenda to be fulfilled.’

‘Lmiura said the same,’ Namjoon divulges. ‘She wanted me to make sure that the Venture Unit and the GIU didn’t interfere with the success of the mission- she said that you were probably working for their agenda so I had to make sure that none of you would succeed.’

Sk’jin looks like he wants to say something but he stops himself and instead says, ‘K’mara said no such thing- she offered me a deal, and I accepted.’
‘What?’ Namjoon looks like he wants to ask more but didn’t know how.

‘All of you were brought in because of this who Gaia Case thing and about making sure the “universe would be kept safe” or some other noble bullshit,’ Sk’jin scoffs. ‘Clearly, you can tell I’m not exactly the most legal or normal of Beings around. K’mara offered me new identification, a ranking officer title in the GIU,- basically a new life, if I agreed to carry out this mission.’

‘Couldn’t you have done that regardless?’ Hoseok asks carefully. ‘You’ve been off the grid for a … fairly long time I’m thinking.’

‘There aren’t a lot of Khol’isa out there,’ Sk’jin shrugs, leaning back on his arms. ‘sides my handsome face stands out a bit too much.’

‘Considering the fact that they all basically said the same thing to each of us,’ Namjoon takes them back to the main topic at hand. ‘It’s obvious that it was all intentionally planned to make us agree, setting us up against each other.’

‘Or-‘ Sk’jin interrupts. ‘Considering I wasn’t told the same-‘

‘-because you wouldn’t have agreed to the mission if you were approached the same way we were,’ Hoseok says simply, ignoring Sk’jin’s irritated look. ‘Like Yoongi said, we were all tricked- very cleverly, to agree to go into this mission. They used our background against us. They used my guilt against me,’ Hoseok says easily before looking at Namjoon, ‘They used your beliefs regarding duty and obligation,’ he turns to address Sk’jin, ‘K’mara used what you needed to start over to get you to agree.’

Hoseok then nods at Yoongi, ‘And the same with you- Amme used something she knew she could manipulate you with something and she did.’

Hoseok sighs heavily, ‘This entire mission was designed to blow up in our faces and we were the scapegoats to take the blame while the GLA and the Venture Unit and the GIU clamor to “control” the mess.’

‘So what do we do next?’ Sk’jin asks a little forcefully. ‘I mean yeah, we figured it out and the “mission” didn’t fail- yet. Where does that put us? So what if we strip the ship down- so what if we switch ships completely and hide away from the special-jury; what do we now? And what even is the point anymore?’

‘We still continue with the mission,’ Yoongi states bluntly.

‘You can’t be serious,’ Sk’jin frowns. ‘You yourself said this mission was a farce-‘

‘-it was designed to fail but the main and real objective behind this mission is still extremely important,’ Yoongi cuts across. ‘You should know that- you have single handedly witnessed and lived through the result of-‘

‘-yes. And I don’t need reminding of it again,’ Sk’jin says curtly. ‘And neither do I want to risk going back to that-‘

‘-then what is he doing here?’ Namjoon butts in, gesturing towards the OrTank that Taeh’yung was now using as a foundation pillar to build a sort of sandy structure around. He clears his throat, sitting up a little before he continues.

‘So, fine- we now know how they wanted this mission to turn out, and how they were all just waiting for one of us to blow a fuse and jeopardize the mission and get discovered,’ Namjoon summarizes off. ‘And let’s say we abandon the mission and we just run away from this. Technically, they wouldn’t have a reason to come after us. They could string together a bunch of other people who were involved in the Gaia Case and send them off on the same mission. But they won’t. And we won’t be able to hide anymore either.’

‘What do you mean?’ Sk’jin blinks in confusion. The Khol’isa seemed ready to warp off into the most distant remote system he could find and stay there away from this entire mess for the rest of his life, new identity be damned.

‘Because of him.’ Namjoon points at the OrTank again.

‘Why was he placed here- what is he doing here? What does he have to do with any of this? What is his purpose in this mission?’ Namjoon questions before he continues. ‘He’s clearly important.’

‘Important in what way?’ Hoseok asks.

‘In a way that suggests his discovery would trigger a huge eruption within the GLA,’ Namjoon says carefully. ‘Even if our mission were to be exposed as it is, revealing the true nature of the Gaia Case to the Known Universe and all that- his discovery would probably be a whole lot more effective in a completely different way.’

‘What are you trying to say?’ Sk’jin looks fed-up.

‘This Being isn’t connected to the Gaia Case as we know it- I think it has to do more with Bhumi and the treaty that barricades the GLA from entering the system,’ Namjoon replies thoughtfully. ‘You all know what the Bhumi System holds,- the history behind it and the treaty- what if this Being is connected to all of that?’

‘How?’ Hoseok inquires.

‘I don’t know,’ Namjoon shrugs. ‘But Lisai wasn’t able to detect his species or race- his age is off, his identity is untraceable. Yet his authorization code is the highest. ‘

‘Lisai is faulty-’ Hoseok begins but then he pauses. ‘Do you think Lisai was purposefully altered to hide his identity from us in case we were to discover him?’

‘That, amongst other reasons,’ Namjoon nods but adds in an unsure tone, ‘But I feel like the GLA Database won’t have any information on him anyways. The Gaia Case discovered a lot of new and lost species of Beings.’

‘What if he’s from there?’ Hoseok asks with a frown. ‘What if he’s from Bhumi?’

‘Well there’s only one way to find out why he’s here. I say we wake him up- I don’t know, break the OrTank or something,’ Sk’jin throws out with a huff.

‘No,’ Yoongi says firmly. ‘He will be born when he’s meant to. Not out of force.

Sk’jin rolls his eyes.

‘I have to agree with Yoongi on that one,’ Hoseok says slowly. ‘We don’t know what sort of Being he is- it’s too much of a risk to wake him up; for both us and him.’

They fall into silence again.

‘All right let’s consider this.’ Namjoon exhales, a permanent furrow appearing between his brows.
‘We know that it’s not only the special-jury who know about this mission. The Venture Unit Board of Divisions, the GIU Trifecta, Yisheng Directory, and a few of the GLA Head of Departments know the full extent of this mission.’

Hoseok and Sk’jin nod slowly, waiting for Namjoon to elaborate.

‘What if when this mission was first conceived; it was indeed created for the objective it was based on- to go to Bhumi, rid the System of every possible Akramanese technology or remains, and secure the surviving planets in there if possible.’ Namjoon summarizes briefly. ‘But what if there were individuals within this group of Beings who thought they should take a different route- the one where we all think each of the organizations we represent is trying to undermine the other and trigger some universal-scale calamity that could potentially retrigger the events from the Gaia Case.’

‘Then of course their suggestion would be shot down immediately,’ Hoseok counters. ‘It’s just not right.’

‘Which would then lead to internal conflict- they’re now all paranoid, suspicious of each other and their intentions,’ Namjoon nods.

‘So instead of further investigating amongst themselves- they decided to pack up all of their problems into another location- into us,’ Sk’jin says emphatically. ‘Then they send us on our merry way on a faulty ship and considering our fantastic group dynamics, we’d probably end up killing each other- and whoever rose as the victor would then win over the cause of whatever side they supported.’

‘But then Amme decided to put Yoongi in,’ Hoseok smiles grimly at the Human. ‘Maybe the Yisheng Directory can be trusted-‘

‘No,’ Yoongi says simply. ‘Because if we are to consider Namjoon’s theory and think of it as true, it still doesn’t explain him.’

‘You mean my baby?’

They all try not to flinch but it’s futile. Taeh’yung is standing next to the ramp, holding up the OrTank as though it weighed nothing.

‘Taeh’yung, you said you were involved with the Yisheng regarding the um…the process of moving Beings like him around right?’ Namjoon asks.

‘Yeap!’ Taeh’yung grunts a bit as he leaps up onto the ramp. ‘My little sleeping babies.’

‘You said…you said that they came from a different time,’ Hoseok says hesitantly. ‘What did you mean by that?’

‘Oh,’ Taeh’yung pulls up the OrTank and squeezes himself and the OrTank between Yoongi and Hoseok. ‘A bit like Yoongi actually.’

All heads turn towards Yoongi who shrugs and says, ‘I don’t know anything about myself. It’s the main reason why I came on this mission. To understand.’

Everyone deflates again.

‘Can you like…look into the past and see who he is?’ Hoseok tries.
‘It doesn’t work like that,’ Taeh’yung explains with a short laugh. ‘That’s not something I can do.’

‘So…what can you tell us about him?’ Namjoon asks, nodding at the OrTank.

‘Well-‘ Taeh’yung glances at the OrTank, the Being inside hovering around slowly, making to face Yoongi who sat next to the OrTank. ‘He’s been in there for quite a while but he’s overall quite young I think. He feels familiar to me the same way Yoongi feels familiar to me- the same way Jin feels familiar to me.’

Sk’jin raises both of his eyebrows in question.

‘From a different Time,’ Taeh’yung explains. ‘From long long ago.’

‘Okay how about I put this bluntly. Is he dangerous?’ Hoseok asks.

‘Being dangerous is solely situational isn’t it?’ Taeh’yung replies, shifting around where he sat until he lay back with his head on Hoseok’s lap. He squirms a bit before stretching his long legs out. ‘Anyone can be dangerous given the correct circumstances.’

‘Correct circumstances?’ Namjoon repeats quietly, sounding amused.

‘I meant-‘ Hoseok begins impatiently.

‘He’s not dangerous,’ Taeh’yung grins up at the Ngfy’widan. ‘He’s not going to…explode or like, be radioactive. He’s pretty…pretty normal. A bit like Yoongi.’

Hoseok glances over at Yoongi, wondering what aspect of the Human was remotely normal.

‘How can you tell?’ Namjoon asks.

‘The flow of Life-force,’ Taeh’yung shrugs. ‘It’s different in everyone, in every species, race. The way it’s structured inside each person- it’s like magic.’

Taeh’yung long fingers wiggle about as though casting some spell-effect in the air.

‘He’s been in the tank? Not born there?’ Yoongi inquires out of nowhere, watching the way the Being’s iridescent hair seemed to glow under the sunlight. His cheeks appeared rosy almost from the exposure to the light.

‘Not a lot of them were born in there,’ Taeh’yung explains. ‘Just like you.’

It’s the most facial expression anyone has seen on Yoongi’s face. His eyes widen, mouth opening slightly.

‘What do you…what do you mean?’ his voice is still the same though.

‘You weren’t born in there,’ Taeh’yung says thoughtfully. ‘You were…in there.’

Yoongi seems stunned into silence- or at least he was slipping into some thoughtful revere.

‘So…he’s safe?’ Hoseok asks, glancing over at the floating Being.

‘Pretty much,’ Taeh’yung tries nodding and fails.

‘Wait- how do we know we’re not being tracked the way Yoongi poisoned us?’ Sk’jin snaps.
‘How do we know that Being isn’t a living tracking device placed here. What if we just dump him
Sk’jin’s eyes widen at Yoongi’s tone and the pure threat laced in his normally monotone deadpan voice.

‘There’s nothing on him,’ Taeh’yung pipes up. ‘Or I’d see it.’

‘Wait- you did something to me in Grezma,’ Namjoon frowns. ‘You touched my forehead-‘

‘Oh yeah- you had something in you- a weird structure. I thought it was like, an accident or something, so I removed it from you- but I can see it in Jin and in Hobi too, so I guess it’s normal? I saw lots of it in the food!’

Every other head turns to glare at Yoongi who shrugs as though he couldn’t help his actions.

‘So we’re back to square one,’ Namjoon sighs.

‘What were you guys discussing?’ Taeh’yung asks from Hoseok’s lap.

‘What we’re going to do next,’ Sk’jin replies before Namjoon can. ‘Long story short, we’re fucked.’

‘Ah…’ Taeh’yung blinks up at them with a confused expression. ‘So…you’re not going to be taking him back?’

‘Taking him back-? What are you talking about?’ Hoseok looks down at the Being intruding on his lap.

‘He said you were taking him back to his planet,’ Taeh’yung replies, eyes wide and innocent.

‘He spoke to you-?’

‘Taeh’yung-‘

‘WAIT JUST A MOMENT!’ Sk’jin literally screams, standing up. He aggressively points at the OrTank and then at Taeh’yung and then back at the OrTank and then back at Taeh’yung. He does this for a while before clearly giving up and sitting down again, taking a deep breath and forcing a smile.

‘Taeh’yung. Please explain what you mean. From the beginning; maybe from the part where you can talk to him hm?’ Sk’jin’s eyes are glowing red and his smile is beautiful yet slightly demented.

This does nothing to throw off Taeh’yung who sits up, hair frazzled.

‘It’s not like I can speak to him all the time,’ he clarifies, patting the OrTank. ‘It’s only been twice so far.’

‘And…and what did you guys uh, talk about?’ Hoseok’s voice is a little strained. Namjoon just watches on in complete disbelief.

‘He spoke to me first- it’s a little tricky?’ Taeh’yung scratches the back of his head. ‘He asked me if we were there yet. And I said I didn’t know. Before I could ask him more questions he drifted off again.’
Taeh’yung places his ear against the surface of the clear glass encasement.

‘Then the next time he spoke to me, he asked me the same question. And he stayed a little longer to explain that the ship was taking him back.’ Taeh’yung explains. ‘He said it was very important?’

Hoseok shiftily moves away from the OrTank, eyeing it warily. The Being inside is facing Yoongi, still in the same unconscious state of being. Yoongi is staring at the Being, as though trying to communicate with him or get him to talk to him. Sk’jin seems to be lost in thought, eyes unfocused and glazed.

‘This still puts us in square one,’ Namjoon cuts into the silence.

‘What do you mean?’ Taeh’yung sounds as though he thinks Namjoon has lost his mind.

‘What do you mean?’ Namjoon shoots back.

‘You have to take him back,’ Taeh’yung pats the OrTank.

‘I agree with Taeh’yung,’ Yoongi speaks up unexpectedly.

‘This isn’t about casting a vote-’ Namjoon starts to say but Sk’jin quickly interrupts him.

‘I agree with Taeh’yung and Yoongi.’

Namjoon frowns across at Sk’jin who expertly ignores him, looking over at Hoseok who squirms from being under the spotlight.

‘I choose neither,’ he says slowly but firmly. ‘While I can’t agree on going to Bhumi based on Taeh’yung’s word- no offence to you-’

Taeh’yung just smiles brightly to show that he took no offence.

‘I can’t seem to think of any other plan of action we could take. I feel like I know too much yet nothing conclusive is coming out of it. I just don’t know what to do.’ Hoseok finishes, crossing his arms.

‘We’re a unit, a team- the votes are 4 for going to Bhumi,’ Sk’jin summarizes.

‘Four-?’ Namjoon frowns heavily.

‘His authorization code is higher than yours- meaning his rank is higher than yours- if he wants to go to Bhumi, then we’re doing that,’ Sk’jin points at the Being inside the OrTank.

‘You don’t even know if he meant Bhumi if what Taeh’yung is saying is true- no offence,’ Namjoon adds with a nod at Taeh’yung who shrugs in reply.

‘You said so yourself that this was connected to Bhumi-’

‘I theorized- it’s not conclusive-’ Namjoon corrects Sk’jin quickly.

‘It makes the most sense-’

‘The most-!’ Namjoon actually stands up in his frustration. ‘Then fine,’ Namjoon throws up his hands. ‘Let’s all just continue with this mission despite knowing full well that this isn’t going to end well for any of us! We just found out that this entire thing is a set-up, a trap, and we’re still going to continue?’
No one replies. Sk’jin doesn’t look away, staring up at Namjoon defiantly. Yoongi is staring intently at the Being inside the OrTank while Taeh’yung looks a little dazed. Hoseok avoids eye contact and busies himself with one of the Heliord handles.

‘Fine,’ Namjoon turns around, walking away back into the Hangar. ‘Then let’s do exactly that!’

‘You could just leave,’ Sk’jin butts in, stopping Namjoon in his tracks. ‘It’s not like you have to stay. Besides, I can Navigate- pretty sure Yoongi can too.’

The air turns tense and Hoseok actually facepalms.

‘Fuck off,’ Namjoon mutters, turning his back and walking away.

Sk’jin actually looks surprised at Namjoon’s reaction.

‘So…’ Taeh’yung looks unsure, looking at each of them for some conclusive statement.

‘We’ll take him to Bhumi,’ Sk’jin says with a tired smile.

‘Yay!’ Taeh’yung cheers and stands up, his long sleeves flapping as he exits the Hangar.

‘You’re really not helping your case out with Namjoon you know,’ Hoseok comments wryly.

Sk’jin shrugs dismissively.

‘Why…why are you making this decision?’ Hoseok asks carefully.

‘Why aren’t you fully against it?’ Sk’jin asks back at once.

Hoseok doesn’t know what to say. Sk’jin gives him a look as though saying that’s exactly what I mean.

‘Yeah- probably why Namjoon decided to stick around too,’ the Khol’isa laughs. ‘And also to say I told you so when the moment is right.’

‘Are you really just doing this to irk Namjoon?’ Hoseok asks incredulously.

‘I’m not making my decisions for petty reasons,’ Sk’jin replies with a heavy frown, still looking like his mind was elsewhere. ‘It’s just there’s something strange about this entire mission or whatever it is. I don’t understand it, and I want to.’ There’s a dark gleam in his eyes as he regards the Being inside the OrTank.

‘I hate not knowing,’ he says quietly.

‘So…so you would risk going to Bhumi in hopes of understanding this situation?’ Hoseok asks incredulously.

‘Yes,’ Sk’jin replies simply, his eyes glowing neon. ‘Because I made a promise.’
‘Mind your steps!’

‘I got it!’

‘I don’t think it’s a good idea to send him all the way down?’

‘It’s good for him- he’ll get used to the place.’ He sits back, lifting his feet up and groaning. His feet were sore. He glances up at the sky. They still had some time before the eclipse would properly start.

‘It really isn’t that impressive.’ He comments.

‘Not for you I wouldn’t think so,’ he wiggles his eyebrows.

‘Hey- I’m sensitive, don’t say things like that-‘

‘I understand what you mean. I’ve flown past nebulas and supernovas and black holes and nearly everything you could think of but-…but there’s something that will always captivate me about the solar eclipse.’

‘There’s a special tour just to watch eclipses; you should consider taking it up.’

‘No way!’

‘I am not kidding- I swear on- on…on my life!’

‘It’s not worth much then.’

‘Shut the fuck up.’

They all sit in silence for a while, taking a short break. The wind is refreshing after all that climbing. Landing the ship had been difficult due to the wind-speed earlier in the morning, but right now it was god-send.

‘Any news?’

He looks away, a slightly pained expression on his face.

‘None.’

‘We’ll keep searching. There are a lot more known trajectory paths that lead to Tayi- we’ll track it and find it.’

‘Thank you.’

‘Don’t thank me until we get it done.’

‘You’re just saying that to sound cool.’

‘I am cool you dick! I’m giving you the first watch for that comment!’
Mutiny! I call mutiny!

Using the natural lighting wherever they could, the Užkulisai motley crew of Beings get to work with speedy efficiency. They first strip down the Spardyti, installing a new systems-core into her engines and computerized assets. Making sure that it was no longer connected to the ship and all surveillance and tracking devices were removed and destroyed, they leave it out to complete its installation process. Namjoon had left nearly 45 minutes ago to get supplies from the nearest station and Yoongi catches sight of him walking back, tugging along a long line of gravity-lifts loaded with fuel-cells and batteries as well as an additional lift with materials Yoongi had requested him to bring.

For a whole 5 minutes, they all had to seriously consider their next series of action. The Užkulisai wasn’t considered a large ship by most standard, but with a total of only 5 Beings available to essentially take apart and scour the ship, and then reinstall everything, was a daunting task.

They were still in the Hangar Bay, going through each OrTank and crate they carried, taking apart everything they could and scanning what they couldn’t. There was already a huge pile of devices and objects they deemed suspicious and was kept outside to be discarded.

‘Are any of these actually legit?’ Hoseok asks out loud to no one in particular, holding up a small tank.

‘The fuck is that?’ Sk’jin asks.

‘…some form of…organic uh tissue?’ Hoseok replies unsurely.

‘Organic is a rather broad term. “Organic” means any and all elemental compound containing carbon atoms in their molecular formula therefore both salad leaves and diamonds can be considered organic- in fact, diamonds are more organic than leaves.’ Is Yoongi’s extraordinary input.

‘…but i think salad leaves are a better option for consumption.’ Sk’jin replies somewhat slowly, exchanging an amused look with Hoseok.

They had all made the unanimous agreement to first remove all forms of tracking/surveillance devices all over the ship. It was easier said than done and Yoongi and Hoseok were tasked with the delicate task of retrieving said devices from between walls, floors, ceilings, and nearly every other object around the ship. Being the most experienced in such a field, the two work quickly though it’s exhausting.

Hoseok drags his feet out of the final cabin room, carrying a small crate of chips, surveillance devices, and lengths of chopped wires. Though they removed the physical hardware objects, the most important task of removing the digital manifestation of these devices was much more difficult and tasked to Namjoon. He’s sitting at the Lobby outside their cabins where he’s set up his own station of newly bought screens as well as an independent and wholly brand new connection to the GLA Database. He hadn’t moved from his position for the past 7 hours and Hoseok finds a large stack of mugs and cups and bottles set around him, all empty. The table is ringed with condensation prints from his drinks and Hoseok, not for the first time, wonders at Namjoon’s metabolism and how it could even exist in a functional homeostasis.

‘Is that the last?’ Namjoon asks, not looking up from his screen.

‘Yes- for the cabins at least,’ Hoseok drops the crate on the couch. They had been getting rid of all of them in the acid lakes nearby. There was something strangely therapeutic about watching the devices fizzle and spit out violently into nothing as the lake dissolved everything. A little frightening, but still cool.

‘Where’s Yoongi?’

‘Bridge.’

‘Ah.’ Hoseok sighs a little. Namjoon was a little curt with him, answering in monosyllables and not exactly looking at him. But then again- he was doing the exact same thing with everyone else so Hoseok decides not to feel guilty about it.

He makes his way up to the Bridge and he finds Taeh’yung there as well. The OrTank is standing rather precariously on one of the footstools and Hoseok is torn between going and placing it down on the ground or just letting it be. But Taeh’yung is making his way back to the OrTank. He notices Hoseok and waves enthusiastically as though he hadn’t just seen him an hour ago.

‘Hi Hobi!’

‘Hey,’ Hoseok smiles. It was somehow natural to just smile every time Taeh’yung smiled. He had that effect on everyone on the ship in varying levels. Hoseok has never actually seen Yoongi smile (or hold any other expression) so he doesn’t know if it’s the same with the Human.

‘I thought you were helping Sk’jin with the cargo?’ Hoseok questions the Zhak’gri.

‘We finished,’ he explains with a smile. ‘Thought I’d come and help you here!’

‘Where’s Sk’jin?’ Hoseok looks around the Bridge wondering if the Khol’isa was there in the Bridge.

‘He went to the lake,’ Taeh’yung explains, pointing out of the wide windows over at the distant glimmering line indicating the acid-lake.

Hoseok knows that most of the suspicion and paranoia he had in regards to his fellow crew members had all been choreographed by the special-jury. They purposefully played on their wariness and skepticism and used it to create this atmosphere of mistrust and doubt. But he still can’t help it.
He feels uneasy at the idea of Sk’jin going by himself to get rid of their junk at the acid lake. He knew that Sk’jin probably wouldn’t jeopardize their mission but at the same time he can’t guarantee it either.

Hoseok finds that he can’t make any more decisions based solely on his intuition because now, not only does he doubt the others and their intentions, he doubts the foundation by which he made those conclusions regarding each individual crew member.

The appearance of this Being clearly meant something else for both Sk’jin and Yoongi. All of their decisions seemed to be made in regards to this Being and seemed of utmost importance to them too.

‘Did you find anything interesting?’ Namjoon asks, appearing at the doorway, carrying a large screen and long loop of wires in the hook of his arm.

‘Nothing!’ Taeh’yung looks sad. ‘It was all exactly what was written in the inventory list.’

‘I guess that’s a good thing then,’ Namjoon sighs as he throws himself in his chair.

‘Did you find a new system for the ship?’ Hoseok asks.

‘Yeap- customized it as well. Based it off of the first model,’ Namjoon explains. ‘The ship should be able to fly by tomorrow evening.’

‘Gives us time to fix the outside,’ Hoseok looks out of the windows and up into the sky. The planet that Ch’dra orbited was glowing a dull orange in the watery blue sky.

There’s an ear-piercing metallic shriek and everyone winces.

‘Sorry,’ Yoongi says appearing from behind his chair, pulling on a piece of metal until it gave way and came off.

‘What is that-’ Hoseok begins to ask but Namjoon suddenly jolts, his eyes opening wide as though he’d just seen a ghost.

‘What happened?’ Hoseok asks the Kutsoglerin instead, looking around at wherever Namjoon was gawking at.

‘He- he reacted to the sound.’ Namjoon points at the Being in the OrTank. ‘He flinched too.’

There’s a stumbling sound and Taeh’yung is leaping over a footstool, his eyes glowing green as he nearly slams into the OrTank.

‘I’m sorry, I’m so sorry- everything is all right,’ he coos.

This wasn’t abnormal- Taeh’yung frequently spoke out loud to the Being inside. But what isn’t normal is Taeh’yung turning excitedly around and gesticulating at them, whispering loudly.

‘He’s talking!’

Before Hoseok can even take a step forward, Yoongi is already there, an almost wary distance of a foot between himself and the OrTank.

Taeh’yung takes his hand and places it over the OrTank.

‘Say hi Yoongi,’ Taeh’yung encourages.
Hoseok notices the apprehensive look Namjoon throws him.

It’s quiet. Utterly quiet.

‘Ah- he’s asleep again,’ Taeh’yung says, letting go of Yoongi’s hand. ‘He got startled by the sound.’

‘I’m sorry,’ Yoongi says unexpectedly, addressing the Being inside.

Nothing happens for a while. And then to Hoseok’s immense disquiet, the Being inside the OrTank smiles.

‘Hey dad!’

‘Oh! What’s the matter?’

‘You were taking long- thought I’d come check on you.’

‘You mean your mum told you to check on me.’

‘…that might have been the case.’

‘Glad to know you genuinely care for my well-being.’

‘Dad,’ he deadpans.

‘Just kidding,’ his father laughs, the yellow rings around his eyes gleaming. ‘So, are you excited to finally start up in Tayi?’

‘I think you’re both more excited than I am- I’ve been to Tayi many times dad.’ He scoffs. ‘It’s not all that great.’

‘If you say so,’ his father says gently. ‘But neither your mum or I will be there this time.’

‘I swear not to get drunk and get into trouble.’
‘That’s the least of my concerns if I’m being honest,’ his father chuckles. ‘Not a lot of us get around- I don’t want you feeling alienated.’

‘That’s the least of my concerns- here, give me that dad, I don’t want you throwing your back. Again.’

‘Literally just the one time that happened and you and your mother will never let it go-’

‘Well, if we want to catch the eclipse and join in on the celebrations, then we need to hurry and honestly dad- you’re really getting older.’

‘Attitude young man!’ he scolds though there’s a twinkle in his eyes.

They walk up the ramps around the more unstable rock formation of the hill. Metallic ramps are situated everywhere, making it easier for the lifts to work. But for today, it was a holiday.

A celebration.

And a memorial.

‘You don’t have to worry dad,’ he says after a few minutes of silence. A few other Beings walk past them but he keeps in pace with his father.

‘As your parent I am always worried,’ his father replies. ‘What we do isn’t the most ideal thing- and I guess now I know how my parents felt about it too.’

‘Well- then you can also understand how I feel right now, don’t you?’

‘Well if one things for sure you can really work your way around words,’ his father grumbles.

He laughs heartily at his father’s disgruntled voice.

‘I’ll be fine dad- it won’t be any different than what you or mum did.’

His father pulls a funny face.

‘That’s exactly what I’m afraid of.’

*Earth might have been destroyed but nearly every aspect of its recorded history was archived and saved within the GLA Database. Yoongi spent years digging through the eons of information, history, stories, and every little thing available to him from the planet where his DNA came from. Yet Yoongi still feels no connection. He had thought that by perhaps exposing himself to what Earth was, how the Humans there behaved, that he would be able to somehow rekindle or awaken some form of deeply grounded genetic memory or characterization that would help him regain a sense of identity, a realization of self.

‘I know you

I walked with you

Once Upon a dream.’

It’s an old old form of entertainment from Ancient Earth. He doesn’t really pay it too much attention though. Instead he watches as the Being inside seems to respond to the old melody of the tune. Yoongi notices that his readings were changing; his pulse increasing and his fingers twitching.

‘I know you.

That gleam in your eyes

Is so familiar a gleam.

Yet I know it’s true

That visions are seldom what they seem.’

He saw dreams. That much was apparent. But what did he see in them?

‘But if I know you I know what you do’

You’ll love me at once

The way you did once upon a dream.’

‘Please talk to me.’ Yoongi pleads quietly. He spoke to Taeh’yung before. If they were both the same, why couldn’t Yoongi hear his voice? Why didn’t he choose to speak to him? He had smiled a few hours ago- but Yoongi wasn’t sure if that had been a result of his apology.

‘Oh!’

‘Oh- I’m awfully sorry! I didn’t mean to frighten you!’

‘It wasn’t that! It’s just that you’re a- a…’

‘A stranger? But don’t you remember? We’ve met before!’

‘We- we have?’

‘Of course! You said so yourself! Once upon a dream!’

‘What do you dream of?’ Yoongi asks quietly.

The Being inside doesn’t reply. He never does. Not that Yoongi is expecting a response per se. He’s just waiting.

‘Will you remember what you dreamt of? Or will you forget them?’

Yoongi wasn’t sure for the Being in front of him, but at least 40% of the known species throughout the Known Universe couldn’t remember a majority of their dreams 5 minutes after waking.

‘Are you the answer to my questions?’

The Being in front of him doesn’t respond. He’s Dreaming. The same way the others had been Dreaming. Probably the same way Yoongi had been Dreaming before he was woken up. But this Being was unlike him and unlike those he has seen inside the long tubes back in base. For one, his back was smooth, no indentation drawn down his spine unlike Yoongi’s and unlike the others who were inside the tubes. Yoongi also spotted light indications of aged scars and natural discolouration on his skin.

What did Taeh’yung mean?

There had to be no other explanation. They were created and birthed in those tubes, nursed and housed until they were fully grown and then put through Dreams so that they could Know. What did Taeh’yung mean by saying he wasn’t born in one of these?

It’s silent inside the Lobby.

The Užkulisai is a naturally silent ship. Yoongi has been on countless shuttles and ships before, but none have been as quiet as this one. He appreciates the silence, it’s soothing; almost like the Yisheng Headquarters. But now even more so with the entire ship in shutdown and most of the crew members in their cabins asleep. Namjoon’s newly installed system was picking up slowly but surely. So much so that internal communications systems, life-support, gravity-functions, and shield-systems were all fully installed. Lisai, or how Lisai was originally supposed to be, was also nearly fully updated, giving Yoongi the chance to watch these old entertainment mediums.

He plays it in the background more for white noise than anything else.

‘My name is Yoongi. What is your name?’

Was this Being the reason why Amme told him he’d find the answers he was looking for? Because right now Yoongi only has more questions. Like why didn’t Amme tell him about this Being inside the ship? Or did she not know about him herself? If so, who was responsible for keeping him here?

Judging by the expressions of the other crew members, they had no idea either. Their reactions were genuine and completely authentic.

Music from the screen fills the Lobby, startling Yoongi out of his revere. He lowers the volume a little before looking back at the Being inside the OrTank. There’s the briefest hint of a smile on the Being’s lips, as though he was seeing something that made him happy. Or perhaps he heard the music?

‘What are you dreaming of?’

Yoongi places his hand on the OrTank cover.

‘Can you hear me?’

‘Yoongi?’

Yoongi isn’t one to be crept on but Taeh’yung was unique. Though the Zhak’ gri was one of the noisiest Beings Yoongi has ever known, he had the uncanny ability to completely lose his presence time to time. As though what you saw of him right then wasn’t exactly where he was.
‘Taeh’yung.’

‘Not sleeping?’ the Zhak’gri smiles at him, taking a seat opposite him on the table. ‘Can’t sleep? Won’t sleep?’

‘All.’

Taeh’yung laughs a deep rumbling chuckle.

‘What did you mean?’

‘Hm?’

‘What did you mean by “a different time”?’

‘Ah,’ Taeh’yung nods in understanding.

He looks a bit more serious as he pauses before answering.

‘There are many things I don’t understand. Thing I can just know- things that I’ve seen; in here, and in here,’ he taps at his head and at his chest, over his heart. ‘So for most parts…I don’t know how to explain what it is I know- except that I know. Does that make sense?’

Yoongi shrugs.

‘Yeah…so…the best way to say it…would be…’ Taeh’yung struggles for a while, crossing his legs as he makes himself comfortable. ‘It’s like you came…from a different lifetime.’

‘A different lifetime?’ Yoongi repeats.

Taeh’yung nods, proud of himself, as though that explained everything. But it doesn’t.

‘What are you watching?’ Taeh’yung asks, already looking excited.

‘It’s from Earth,’ Yoongi explains. ‘It’s called “Sleeping Beauty”.’

Taeh’yung makes a sound of awe and then adds, ‘It’s rather fitting, don’t you think?’

He pats the OrTank fondly.

‘It is.’
Namjoon leans back on the wall of the Bridge, looking out of the massive window down outside. Sk’jin was pacing about the dark ground, pale robes fluttering in the strange orange-twilight that was apparently Ch’dra’s night light.

Unable to sleep, Namjoon had the idea of maybe walking outside- he always felt better being in-planet. Felt a lot more stable and, no pun intended, grounded. But Sk’jin had claimed territory outside, pacing about here and there. Sometimes he would stand still for long periods of time, sometimes he would make short burst of pacing. Other times he’d just crouch.

What was he thinking? What was he even doing?

In the strange twilight, Namjoon randomly catches glimpses of neon red eyes. It’s a little frightening, but from this distance, Namjoon pays little mind to it. He had then decided to maybe work on the rest of the Bridge, but all that was left to do was to wait for the systems to finish installing.

He pulls himself off of the wall and turns his back to the window, away from Sk’jin’s pacing. It wouldn’t do him good if he was caught. Sk’jin might accuse him of spying or something else and another argument would ensue.

Making his way out, Namjoon nearly trips over Taeh’yung on the stairs, catching himself just in time.

‘Captain!’ Taeh’yung grins in greeting. ‘Whatcha doing?’

‘Just…just thinking,’ Namjoon replies and internally adds trying not to get killed falling down the stairs. ‘Thought I’d go for a walk but outside is currently occupied.’

‘Ah- I saw Jin walking around,’ Taeh’yung nods as he takes a seat next to Namjoon. ‘I’ve been wondering- for the Beings born on moons- do they consider the planet they’re orbiting at their moon or are they aware of the fact that they are a moon?’

Namjoon chuckles, glancing down at the Zhak’gri.

‘I don’t know- ask someone from a moon next time?’

‘I should.’ Taeh’yung nods seriously, like he was really serious about doing it.

‘What are you doing here?’ Namjoon asks in turn.

‘I kinda got stuck here,’ Taeh’yung grins. ‘Yoongi is in the Lobby downstairs and you were here- I didn’t want to disturb the two of you, you see. So I just sat here, listening and sightseeing.’

‘What’s Yoongi doing?’ Namjoon asks, taking a seat next to the Zhak’gri though he could guess what the Human was doing.
‘He’s watching over my baby,’ Taeh’yung bounces his knees about as though flapping them.

‘Is that… I mean, he’s been there for a really long time,’ Namjoon says with some concern, glancing down at the staircase. He had seen Yoongi sitting next to the OrTank, staring deep into the tube at the floating Being inside. It was strange, as though sensing someone else beyond the tube, the Being inside was angled facing Yoongi, not shifting around as Namjoon has seen him do so as he floats via surveillance. Seeing him smile earlier had been disarming.

Namjoon sighs out heavily.

‘Don’t worry,’ Taeh’yung says with a smile, leaning against him. ‘They’re just dreaming now.’

They sit in silence for a while.

‘By the way- it’s not like… it’s not that I don’t believe in what you can do…’ Namjoon starts off hesitantly. Taeh’yung look up at him from where he’s leaning on his shoulder with wide eyes.

‘I just… everything that’s happening doesn’t… doesn’t make any sense to me.’ Namjoon explains, feeling a little lame. ‘I don’t know what to think.’

‘Then don’t think!’ Taeh’yung says enthusiastically. ‘Be like me! Just let things flow the way it’s supposed to!’

‘That’s the most reckless advice I’ve ever heard,’ Namjoon chortles.

‘But I’m still here,’ Taeh’yung states simply before sitting up straight again and reaching up to cup Namjoon’s face.

The Kutsoglerin freezes, unsure what to do. Taeh’yung squeezes his face a little, smiling in delight.

‘You have cute dimples,’ he states before kissing said dimples.

‘Uh-‘

‘You think too much. Four used to think too much too- he still does,’ Taeh’yung doesn’t let go of his face and honestly Namjoon thinks he might start sweating soon because he’s so not used to this. If he still had intestines, he guesses they would be coiling about the way he’s read in books.

‘Your Life-force is super strong- and so are you. So is your mind. Strong- a little dense,’ he adds.

Namjoon tries not to feel offended.

‘A lot like metal,’ Taeh’yung clarifies unnecessarily. ‘Metal is nice- it’s smooth and strong, and it can be malleable too. But metal can rust, it can break, it can wear off- you’re wearing a little. Don’t wear down. Okay?’

‘I uh- I’ll try-?’

‘Good,’ Taeh’yung finally lets go of his face and smiles even more brightly and gets up.

‘If I’m metal, what are you?’ Namjoon finds himself asking as Taeh’yung makes his way down the stairs with uncharacteristic quietness.

The Zhak’gri turns around, face strangely void of expression as he looks up at Namjoon.

Half of his face is bathed in the dim emergency light switched on around the ship, and the rest is in shadow. His eyes gleam a strangely ominous green as he states in a voice that sounded strangely layered.

‘I’m Nothing.’
(Author’s Note)
HAPPY BIRTHDAY JUNGKOOKIE MY SON MY CHILD YOU’RE 20 NOW NO LONGER A TEENAGER BLESS YOUR GOLDEN SOUL idc if in Korea they say 21, I follow modern Earth rotations as the basis for calculating age and years so HE’S 20 coughs
It’d been really cool if Jungkook popped in out of nowhere because it’s his birthday and that seems poignant but storyline
Hahaha
laughs nervously
“Phosphene” [noun]: the ring of light or stars you see when you rub your eyes.

Chapter Notes

See the end of the chapter for notes

‘Can’t you, I dunno, like take leave or something.’

‘I don’t think that’s possible?’ he laughs.

‘You know what I mean,’ she huffs irritably, blowing her hair out of her face.

‘I’ll see y’all in a bit- you’re both too slow and I refuse to third-wheel emotional family stuff.’

‘Then get the fuck out of here,’ he responds without missing a beat.

‘Language!’

They both flick him off, making him cackle at their identical reaction. He draws some attention to himself as he skips up ahead, gangly form bouncing all over the place with surprising weight for someone so slight.

‘Still not used to seeing others here,’ he comments, watching the way the crowd parted to let him through, gaping after him with some awe.

‘Well- not ones that look like him,’ she replies with a small laugh.

‘Take care of mum while I’m gone.’ He says quietly after a while.

‘You don’t have to tell me that,’ she mumbles.

He feels bad about having to do this. But this was a rare opportunity after all- not everyone was offered the chance to join the Raksane Tayi Scientific Research Panel. And their mother had insisted- lecturing him with a bewildered tone at his hesitation to accept. But that had been during one of her better spells- when she was more herself than whatever it was she had turned into now. And even though he knew that he would be light-years away, this would create a better future, establish a better future for his sister.

The only thing he regretted from all of this was knowing that he she would have to grow faster than other children her age. That she wouldn’t be allowed many of the experiences that she would normally go through for a girl her age. That she would have to give up on so much not out of necessity but out of obligation and love. That was always the worst- knowing that you would hate yourself for not doing it. And he knew that all too well, because that was what he was doing now.
'Did you go see him?' she asks quietly as they climb up some of the stairs.

'No,' he replies easily. 'I will when I come back.'

'That’s…that’s so far away.'

'You’re starting school and trust me, it won’t feel too long.' He grins as he bends down to hug her. 'Remember? I’m ancient, I know how schools are.'

'Try to come back as quickly as you can.' Her voice is wobbly, like it was about to break.

'I will.'

The gritty dark soil of Ch’dra’s crust is oddly heavy but strangely soft. Namjoon leaves behind deep footprints that remain untouched even when a strong breeze blows about. Closer to the lakes the soil solidifies to chunkier salt-based rock, forming gleaming graphite-like slabs towards the edges of the overly saturated blue lakes of acid.

Tilting the gravity lift, Namjoon empties the last stack of mechanical waste from the ship and avoids getting splashed. The acid is rather dense, not creating a lot of splash but Namjoon would rather not have his clothes riddled with holes.

Not sure why, Namjoon sits on the edge of the jutting lip of the slab over the lake. He removes his boots, wiggling his mechanical digits a little before he lowers his foot down to touch the surface.

It’s not pain- it’s just a strange sensation. The first outer layer, the polished layer of the bionic metal used to replace a majority of his bone, slowly erodes away.

‘That’s a rather dumb thing to do.’

Namjoon doesn’t have to look up to know it’s Sk’jin.

‘Just testing the acidity level.’ Namjoon replies evenly.

‘You could have just one of the pH papers to do that.’

‘It’s not like it matters to you,’ Namjoon comments with a shrug as he pulls his foot up and puts his boot on again. Sk’jin doesn’t comment and doesn’t speak until after he eases the last of their waste into the lake. Under normal circumstance, Namjoon would have to step back, avoiding the dangerous fumes that could burn his throat and possibly even his bronchioles raw; but seeing as he didn’t exactly have a pair of working organic lungs, Namjoon continues to watch the metal of their junk corrode and dissolve away as it sinks slowly into the deep blue pits of the lake.

‘Did I forget something?’ Namjoon asks, still not turning around. He knows Sk’jin is still there, as his shadow extends over into Namjoon’s slightly wider peripheral vision.

‘No.’

‘So why are you here?’

The last of the waste dissolves into nothing and Namjoon bends down to pick up the handle of the gravity-lift. Sk’jin wasn’t avoiding Namjoon- he was simply ignoring him. And very expertly too. So Namjoon doesn’t know what to expect now that the Khol’isa is here.

‘To talk.’

At this Namjoon finally turns around and faces the Khol’isa. He looks serious, and not like he’s trying to get a rise from Namjoon or mock him in any manner or way.

‘How can I help you?’ Namjoon asks, tugging on the gravity-lift as he sets out into an easy-paced walk. He was exhausted, having worked endlessly without much break. His mind was still buzzing with codes and formulas; this was the sort of thing he enjoyed but given the circumstances under which he was forced to work, Namjoon longs for any form of reprieve- even if it was throwing out the junk.

‘I wanted to discuss what we’re going to be doing for this mission,’ Sk’jin replies, keeping pace with him, hands behind his back.

‘What else is there to discuss?’ Namjoon inquires and it’s not like he’s trying to instigate some sort of argument- he really doesn’t think there was anything more to discuss. ‘We all collectively concluded that this mission was just a scapegoat for the special jury to use for their agenda, and that it was probably going to end with our deaths or worse, and then it was decided that we would follow through on the mission regardless. There’s not much to discuss about it anymore.’

Sk’jin doesn’t say anything for a while, and as Namjoon would rather not look at the Khol’isa, he wasn’t sure what sort of expression he had either.

‘734 sols ago, I was leading my ship through the dead-space between the Systems of Cabcd and Sluchaen. We were tracking a slaver-ship, possibly carrying a few Beings that were closely related to some of my crew.’ Sk’jin suddenly states without preamble. ‘Ever the champion of freedom, I prepared one of my best and fastest ships, took with me my most capable and worthy crew and set out for this dead-space. We didn’t find the ship, instead we found an unregistered planet. It was odd- we could see it, but we couldn’t sense it in any of our scanners. We made up a plan- that we would closely watch the planet. Maybe it was being used to hide the slaver’s headquarters- maybe this was where the Alliance were situated you know?’

Namjoon finally glances over at Sk’jin who was looking up at the sky thoughtfully.

‘I was a pirate yes, but- the shit the Alliance was doing was too much you know? It’s amazing how things still haven’t changed till now,’ Sk’jin sighs a little, looking away from the sky, prompting Namjoon to look ahead again.
‘Well, we didn’t think much of the planet- space is after all, unpredictable- some spike in radiation could have caused a major block on our scans. Shit like that happens all the time.’ Sk’jin continues and adds with a smirk. ‘There was a short problem though- being from Khol’isa, I have uncontrollable urges to cocoon myself in my own cells and breakdown to a cellular mass of gooey gunk. My “hibernation period” was hitting me and I had to retire- as usual I handed over my title and position to my most trusted crew member who had been with me for nearly half a millennium and I went to “sleep”. It’s not all that great,- sleeping that is,’ he clarifies. ‘We get sent back to a weird hallucinatory state of mind- it’s like being back in Khol’isa all over again. Not the best of times you know? Anyways- so as I broke down to cellular levels in my cocoon, a lot of shit happened. The unregistered planet happened to be the crash-site of an illegal Venture Unit operation known as the Hyper-Reality Expansion program- you’ve heard of it, no doubt?’

Namjoon nods, wondering where this story was headed.

‘Well, they crashed into that planet due to the entity they were hosting in their ship- called the “First Nightmare”- poignant isn’t it? A sort of strange Being created by the Venture Unit scientists as a result of continuous and horrific experimentation. It could create these rifts in reality- create an alternative dimension with the help of certain technology and its own twisted mind. It was one of the reasons why this planet was hidden from our scans and couldn’t be detected- it was to an extent, existing in its own dimension of reality even though we could see it. I’m not all too clear on the science behind it- but just as you might be suspecting, it had a lot of connection with the Gaia Case.’ Sk’jin pauses a while before continuing. ‘Well, as it would happen, our ship picked up on a distress signal from that planet. My lieutenant sent down a small ship to check on it. We lost communications for a while and only got it back when the ship returned. Except it returned with only 1 of the 8 Beings my lieutenant sent down. The surviving member reported that he had barely escaped- that the others were kept prisoner by some pirates that were stranded down in-planet.’

Sk’jin clears his throat a bit, ‘We have a policy- as all pirates do- we don’t leave anyone behind. And so they decided to go down there, TeorSers blazing, proton missiles ready, and shields at maximum. The moment they were close enough to the atmosphere of the ship, it completely malfunctioned internally. You see, the surviving crew member was in fact an imposter- a doppelgänger if you will. He crippled the ship and we crash landed. I was still in a cocoon but the crash jolted me out- it was strange- I never experienced that state of consciousness before- I was awake, I could see all over my ship, yet I could not move, I could not speak, and I could not touch. But I could watch my crew members die as they succumbed to their injuries, I could hear their screams of terror as strange carnivorous creatures feasted on the injured, and I could feel it- the First Nightmare.’

A shudder runs down Namjoon’s back. They’ve both stopped walking and Namjoon can’t look away from Sk’jin as he continues to narrate his story with a light nonchalance.

‘It was odd- I could see how it consumed the sanctity of everyone’s minds, mimicking and copying and cloning every Being’s form to lure them into its trap. I watched, without being able to do anything, as every single surviving crew members got sucked into an eternal loop of terror and darkness within their own minds. They slept and slept and slept and in their minds they were trapped, dying over and over again as terror trapped them. I watched as their bodies decomposed, I watched as the ship gave out, collapsing and at some point even mercifully falling over some of the crew, ending their suffering. Or so I thought- their bodies perished but their minds were trapped in that alternative realm.’

‘How did you survive?’ Namjoon finds himself asking.
‘Survive?’ Sk’jin laughs. ‘I didn’t survive- I died too. My body decayed, but my mind wasn’t ensnared by it. It tried so hard, but it could never take me- it couldn’t latch onto my physical state because I didn’t have one when we crashed. But I couldn’t return either- so I just lingered. It soon forgot about me and I just stayed there, unable to get out, unable to kill myself, unable to sleep. I watched many ships crash into that planet- and I watched many Beings die and get trapped. But I remained- I was just there. I just witnessed. I tried to protect- tried to help- some of them could see me. Some of them could sense me- but they were all too freaked out to really understand what was happening- and they all ran away before I could do anything. But I kept trying- I tried over and over and over again,’ Sk’jin huffs out a laughter. ‘I was exhausted. But what could I have done? Nothing- I could do nothing.’

‘So how are you here?’ Namjoon asks carefully.

‘A ship crashed again- like it did so many times,’ Sk’jin replies, carefully brushing his hair, his hands lingering on his temple. ‘Except this time, it wasn’t some trade ship or pirate ship- it was a GIU ship. Carrying a team of Beings sent to investigate the planet- sent to investigate the First Nightmare though they didn’t know what it was. They all died of course- save for one. A young lieutenant from Long-Huo.’

Long-Huo. Things started clicking inside Namjoon’s mind.

‘He was different- there was something about him- and I knew at once that he would survive- that he would be the key. So I latched onto him- helping him as he too nearly lost his mind. I would sometimes take over his body, controlling him- it was like having my own body again.’ Sk’jin raises his hand, looking at it as though he didn’t quite understand what it was he seeing.

‘Well- long story short, a few other Beings arrived- the First Nightmare was defeated and the planet relieved of its control. All those who were trapped there, all those who were contained, all the minds that were ensnared were all freed. Save for one.’ Sk’jin points at himself with a smile. ‘So I stayed with the Long-Huo lieutenant; he was a little unstable anyways, and he had brashly made a promise to me that he would make sure I was “cured”. We both knew it wasn’t possible, but I let him believe it. Somewhere along the line I met Yoongi- he could see me- odd I know,’ Sk’jin laughs. ‘I didn’t have a form- I just was- there was no explaining it. But I thought to myself at that point- maybe there was some hope to it- then I met Taeh’yun and here I am.’

‘Taeh’yun?’ Namjoon repeats, hoping for some explanation but Sk’jin continues past that.

‘The reason why I’m telling you this is because the Venture Unit was behind all that bullshit I just told you,’ Sk’jin states. ‘Not just the Venture Unit- but the Yisheng Directory, probably even the GIU, and of course head-members of the GLA.’

‘What are you trying to say here?’ Namjoon asks carefully.

‘What I’m saying is that we both know that there is something beyond the mission- more than what Hoseok or even Yoongi can understand or comprehend.’ Sk’jin replies, an uncharacteristic worried expression on his face. ‘I read through the logs and archives off of that ship carrying the First Nightmare- I read every single file; there were many countless other programs and operations being run just like the Hyper-Reality Expansion program. And there are probably many being run now. And now with the Gaia Case being exposed- even to this contained level that it’s currently in- it’s creating too many opportunities, too many possibilities.’

‘The Being we’re carrying, the “objectives” of this mission- all of us in this ship.’ Sk’jin waves his hand around. ‘Hoseok’s father was directly involved in aiding the Yishengs with the Gaia Case- his father tried to recruit him but Hoseok refused- it’s why and how he was exposed and the Venture
Unit held their own internal coup d'etat. Yoongi is from the GI- he was there for everything. And then there’s me, and then there’s you. I know that we all agreed that this was so much more than what we initially thought it would be about- but I think this goes beyond that- beyond any level we thought possible.’

Namjoon doesn’t reply- it’s a little overwhelming, hearing all of this and having to come to terms with it. Sk’jin looks genuinely disturbed, a strange sense of instability to his normally put together countenance.

‘I’m not asking you to trust me- this isn’t about trust,’ Sk’jin sighs, translating his silence to that of distrust. ‘This is about understanding why we’re here. We need to figure this out. The two of us.’

‘And you think going to Bhumi, that actually following through with the mission, will help us understand everything?’

‘It’s the only option there is,’ Sk’jin replies carefully. ‘If you do not choose to believe me then it’s all right, if you cannot trust me that’s all right too- I don’t expect you to; but I hope you can accept the fact that I’m not taking the situation we are in lightly.’

‘You said K’mara offered you a new life- that that was why you accepted this mission- were you lying about that?’ Namjoon asks.

‘I know you don’t trust K’mara- and believe me when I say I don’t trust her even more than you do,’ Sk’jin’s eyes darken as though recalling some memory. ‘I know too much- but she believes that I’m selfish, greedy, vain- kinda like what you think of me. She thought she could use that to manipulate me.’

‘So you’re here to make sure the GLA and every other organization isn’t about to create some fucked up operation like the one you were stuck in?’

‘I’m here because I was purposefully chosen and placed in this mission and I would like to know exactly why and for what reason,’ Sk’jin replies as they catch sight of Taeh’yung running out of the ship, waving at them with his long arms. ‘It goes past everything we talked about.’

They start walking again, approaching the ship. The colour had been altered and any possible physical transformation that they felt was safe enough to alter had been completed a few hours ago. Though it didn’t look all that different, the Užkulisai looked completely different from its former appearance. Luckily the Užkulisai-02 wasn’t all too different from the Užkulisai-01, and the first model was rather popular so they didn’t stand out too much. A few ParaBots were still scuttling over the surface, smoothening out the outer layer and checking on the new paint job. According to Hoseok, painting it a rather bright colour would actually help camouflage it more than a neutral colour. Which was why the Užkulisai was now an obnoxious green.

‘This colour still pains me,’ Sk’jin comments lightly. Namjoon hums back in agreement.

‘I still don’t like this plan, of going to Bhumi,’ Namjoon says after a minute of silence. ‘But I agree with you.’

Sk’jin doesn’t say anything in reply. Taeh’yung bounds over to them, a wide smile on his face.

‘Hobi and Yoongi have finished the final check-up on the engines,’ he informs them brightly, skidding to a stop in front of them and throwing himself at Namjoon.

With a grunt, Namjoon catches the long-limbed Zhak’gri.
‘The shipment should have arrived by now,’ Sk’jin looks up at the sky as though judging the time. ‘See you later Captain.’

Namjoon puts down Taeh’yung who immediately makes for the gravity-lift, sitting on it and looking at Namjoon expectantly.

Namjoon doesn’t move, watching the Khol’isa disappear into the ship.

‘Taeh’yung.’

‘Hm?’

‘How did you fix Sk’jin from his previous state?’

‘Oh! He told you?’

‘He did.’

‘Sk’jin is special- Khol’isa’s are special,’ Taeh’yung says in a strangely thoughtful manner. ‘Their Memory is strong- it shapes them, more than their cells, more than their bones- they are who they are, because of their Memory. I just had to help him Remember what it was like- I had to show him where to go back to.’

‘Is that why he doesn’t have horns? Khol’isa have horns right?’ Namjoon asks, pulling on the gravity-lift when Taeh’yung pleads at him with large eyes and a hopeful smile.

‘I think it’s on purpose,’ Taeh’yung replies, bouncing a little on the gravity-lift. He lifts his hands, they glow green and a shape reminiscent of horns form for a moment before vanishing into the air. He smiles up at Namjoon before saying, ‘I don’t think he feels like he deserves them.’

He finds his father halfway up the plateau, taking a rest near one of the jutting rock shelves. He looks worn and sunburnt, but still healthy and ail. There’s an aged wisdom to him- in the way his hands are rough and coarse, yet somehow his wrists smooth and only marked by veins that pop out because he’s feeling hot. He wonders if his wrists will look like that too when he grows older.

‘Are you here to help your old pa out?’ his father winks.
'Is it your knees?'

'Actually this time it’s my ankles.'

'You’re falling apart pa.'

'You will too when you get to my age,' his father admonishes with an amused smile. ‘Our crop isn’t going to magically water itself- we need to keep an eye out on the flood zones too- too many things to watch over.’

'I’ll be able to help you from next season,’ he declares. ‘I’ve learnt a lot from the grain houses. I know I can help out in the fields.’

'The grain houses will miss you,’ his father grins, getting up with a groan. He instantly steps closer to his father, allowing him to take his shoulder to better balance himself.

'But I want to help Pa- besides, Ma always puts me in cleaning- I like running the grinders,’ he complains half-heartedly.

'My Ma used to put me in cleaning too,’ his father reminiscences fondly. ‘It will teach you a lot as you grow older- only the smart ones are put in cleaning.’

'So you used to be smart?’ he asks innocently.

'Your older brothers are such a bad influence,’ his father grumbles just as a bright light, something he could only describe as the brightest lightning he’s ever seen flashes through the sky above them.

There are gasps and shrieks.

'What is that?’

Everyone is staring up at the sky- the sun was still entirely round and full- the moon still hadn’t moved to block it out yet.

'What’s what?’ he asks, confused- there were no clouds, it couldn’t have been lightning right?

His father frowns, squinting a little as he peers into the distant horizon; his expression quickly transforming from confused to fearful at once.

‘RUN-!!’

There is too much sound, too much light, too much everything. He feels himself flying through the air- the whole world a mess as he spins and spins and spins. What was happening? Did he slip and fall? But the ground wasn’t wet- they weren’t close enough to the lake for the ground to be damp.

The sky is suddenly made clear to him and in this eclipsed light, strange sights- like mountains afloat rings of pure fire fill up the sky. The clouds seem to disappear in their wake and he can’t think straight.

Then the mountains start to erupt into beams of light, rocky discs shooting out of them from their sides. He doesn’t understand, he can’t possibly begin to understand. But all he knows is that this wasn’t good.

Suddenly he hears screaming- and the earth around screams in harmony.
Dirt fills the air and so does light- it’s a strange combination- a strange sight. White fire bounces off of the slopes and he can feel their heat- nothing like the fires he was used to burning in the little kitchen hearth of their hut, nothing like the torches lit up at night to keep the yards safe.

*His father is there- half of his face covered in blood- he’s saying something but he can’t hear him- he sees his lips moving but there’s no sound. Just white noise, white light, white screams-

Everything is white.

---

Sk’jin drew too much attention- and the Khol’isa clearly knew this, judging by the way he was more or less strutting around the Station. His walk is somehow even more elegant than before, robes fluttering behind him as though moving along the flow of a breeze that seemed to only blow around the Khol’isa. Heads turn everywhere and he’s instantly super popular amongst the Excavators.

Excavators were glorified titles for historians turned relic/antique/grave robbers. Though they aren’t up in the radar as much as pirates are, they held their own reputation around the Universe. A much more ditsy, more academic, and slightly “mad” air to them. They weren’t necessarily a “bad” lot to hang out with. You wouldn’t have to worry about being stabbed in the back (literally or metaphorically), or something worse (literally and metaphorically) if you hung with the Excavator crowd. In fact, many students from Raksane Tayi’s School of Cosmic Archaeology and Research were known to take their internships with certain guilds of Excavators for at least a year. Sometimes the interns would return- sometimes they’d come back after a decade or so, having been stuck in some prison in another System.

Yoongi has never had an issue with the Excavators before and has used their channels several times before. It was easy slipping into their ships unnoticed because all they ever had eyes for were either very ancient things, or very beautiful things. And at this moment, though Yoongi won’t voice
Excavators had a, putting it mildly, rather manic obsession with any species of Beings who were known to live for long periods of time. And though Excavators aren’t known outside the criminal offence charges of breaking and entering, robbery, desecration, and illegal migration- they were sometimes known for kidnapping. Not for money or ransom; most Beings kidnapped were treated with care and almost all accounts were summarized with “confused, but never endangered”.

Yoongi wonders how they’d react to Taeh’yung.

It was probably a very good decision on Namjoon’s part to put the Zhak’gri in the ship at all times, naming him the defender of the Being inside the OrTank. And Taeh’yung took that position with perhaps too much heart and zeal.

This particular guild were restocking their very battered ship, having spent too much time in a planet that was too close to a dying sun- the radiation the star spewed eating away at the atmosphere of the planet and the radiation nearly frying their ship and the guild in question. It would explain why a bunch of them were covered in tissue-plast and had a slightly doped expression on their face- no doubt a result of too much pain medication. Lucky for them, this Station had a very well stocked and advanced Medical Bay and were being treated accordingly.

‘I was there,’ Sk’jin tells an Excavator with a bright smile. ‘And it’s so much more beautiful than the reports have said.’

Yoongi stands behind Sk’jin, a sort of bodyguard because he’s sure that, given the chance, the Excavators would really love to grab Sk’jin and hightail away to record and verify his stories and tales. It’s not quite necessary though, because though the Excavators are eager to listen to Sk’jin and interrogate him in the least creepy manner, they keep a safe respectful distance from the Khol’isa. But Sk’jin is really enjoying himself, answering every question, adding more information, telling them stories and first-hand accounts on certain major events. It really put into perspective how long Sk’jin has been alive, and how much he remembers.

‘You are blessed to have witnessed such a sight Mahodya Sk’jin!’ one of the Excavators say with awe in his eyes. A majority of the guild were from the planet of Pr’thvee; their people were very flamboyant and had a flair for dramatics, using long elegant terms to address each other. They had some of the best poems across the Known Universe and were known for their poets and lyricists. They were also known for their long beards- the longer your beard, the higher you were regarded. This was the norm for all genders in Pr’thvee. If Yoongi isn’t mistaken, the title Mahodya meant ‘kingly guest’ and Sk’jin seemed to know this too as he practically preens under the address.

‘I wouldn’t necessarily say blessed, but it was something,’ Sk’jin laughs elegantly though the glint in his eyes makes Yoongi wonder under what exact circumstance the Khol’isa was in when he had witnessed the continental rift on the planet of Drar.

‘Mahodya Sk’jin,’ one of them says respectfully, approaching the Khol’isa with an armful of what appeared to be clusters of living crystals. A closer look shows Yoongi that they weren’t crystals, they were flowers.

‘We were stopping by Man’ibv and picked up on a few relics there- these flowers, Vitka’v, are native to the moon and we believe that it’s quite fitting for someone of your legacy.’ He states, handing Sk’jin the flowers.

The Khol’isa looks genuinely moved, taking the flowers with an awed look on his face.
‘You are most generous,’ Sk’jin begins to say.

‘But you have graced us with so much more Mahodya,’ he counters. ‘We are honoured to have met someone like you. A chance meeting, a most wonderful thing!’

‘I will treasure our meeting,’ Sk’jin smiles, bowing elegantly in true Khol’isa fashion - he had even gradually changed his speech, matching the elegance of the Pr’thveen. ‘I am honoured to have met you here.’

There’s a profuse amount of bowing and thank you thrown about. Yoongi wonders if Sk’jin would notice if he slipped away outside.

‘Sir! I have your items!’

They turn to address one of the Station keepers - an Android fashioned after the natives of Raksane Tayi. He’s entirely humanoid and his silver eyes carry only the slightest hint of the Android goldtint.

‘Oh thank you!’ Sk’jin bows elegantly to the Excavators one last time before taking the smaller items from the sprightly Android while Yoongi took the handles for the gravity-lift laden with the larger and bulkier goods.

‘The other items are being loaded outside in your vehicle. I’m afraid you will have to wait before we receive our stock of beamer cells,’ the Android states apologetically. ‘The GLA Patrol will be arriving with new stock in 4 days’ time. If you can wait till then, we would be happy to supply you again.’

‘Oh that’s all right,’ Sk’jin replies affably. ‘I understand - but we are short on time so we will make do. Thank you for your service once more.’

‘Not at all, would you like an additional lift?’ the Android turns to address Yoongi, causing the nearby Excavators to finally notice him.

‘No,’ Yoongi replies, wondering if he should tack on a thank you or a it’s not a bother but he’s too late to add anything when an Excavator approaches him, eyes wide and sparkling as he says, ‘Forgive me if I’m wrong, but are you Human? From Earth?’

Sk’jin’s eyes narrow, watching the interaction carefully as he settles the payment with the Android to the side.

‘I am Human yes. I have never been to Earth.’

‘Ah- you are an expat- how many generations now?’ the Excavator asks, looking and sounding genuinely interested.

‘I don’t know,’ Yoongi replies truthfully.

‘Well, it does get confusing I would suppose,’ the Excavator ruminates, stroking his long beard before adding, ‘But I just simple wanted to give my condolences and at least give my respects. Although you said you never were there, the idea of losing the womb that birthed your very DNA must be deeply unsettling.’

Yoongi supposes it does, and manages a nod. The Excavator seems satisfied, translating his silence to contemplative reflection of the destruction of his home planet.
‘A young planet, not too interesting by Excavator’s standards; but she was a strong little thing,’ he smiles widely, his mouth stretching a little to reveal small sharp teeth. Most might consider it disconcerting. ‘I am glad you didn’t lose a home.’

The tall bearded Pr’thveen hands him a single flower.

Yoongi is at a complete loss on how to reply even more so now. He dumbly takes the flower, finding it softer than he expected. The petals are transparent, opaque only where veins thinner than hair thread through the petals, creating the appearance of faceted gems. It’s exceedingly beautiful and Yoongi feels the urge to wash his hands before touching the flower again.

‘Come on Yoongi,’ Sk’jin calls, saving him the trouble to reply. ‘Let’s get going. It was a great honour talking and meeting with all of you!’ Sk’jin adds with a benign smile at the guild of Excavators.

They all wave their beards merrily at Sk’jin, and some at Yoongi when they notice him.

Sk’jin is definitely in a good mood. The trip would have taken 2 hours, but they were now more or less gone for nearly 5 hours because Sk’jin had decided to befriend nearly every Excavator in the guild. And he really did befriend the guild. Though his title as Communications Manager might have been more or less phony, Sk’jin was certainly a smooth talker. Yoongi finds himself wishing he had at least a marginal percentage of the Khol’isa’s eloquence.

‘Well,’ Sk’jin says conversationally as they leave the Station lobby, he sniffs the flowers delicately. ‘We’re sort of fucked.’

Yoongi has to agree as he takes a sniff of the flower. It’s lightly fragrant—something Yoongi isn’t familiar with. It’s pleasant though.

‘How long can we stay up with what we have?’ Sk’jin asks.

Beamers were an extraordinarily important component of a ship— it transformed, distributed, and directed raw energy from fuel cells for the entirety of the ship. And due to the previous tampering of the ship’s system, they were going to have to redo all of the beamer network across the ship if they wanted accurate readings on the ship’s systems. System failure was not an option and they needed to be at maximum functionality if they were going to succeed in this mission.

‘Maybe 5 days,’ Yoongi replies.

‘We’ll need to travel on temporary systems then,’ Sk’jin frowns. ‘We can’t afford to stay here— they know we’re here— or at least in this System; but if we can only fly a maximum of 5 days on what we currently have— we’ll need to land somewhere else quickly.’

‘The GLA Patrol will be arriving in 4 days,’ Yoongi adds as they step out into the sunlight. The entire landscape is bathed in an eerie reddish colour; a result of the sunset— or rather a result of the eclipse. The planet that Ch’dra orbited was now eclipsing the sun, reading the small acidic moon for its own bizarre version of night.

The Spardyti is docked outside, the back open as Androids load up the heavy items to the back, securing the crates of much needed ship parts and extras are latched on to the hollowed out back of the Transporter.

‘I’m not much of a fan of solar eclipses,’ Sk’jin comments wryly out of nowhere, watching the planet eclipse the sun. A strange halo of reds and oranges erupts— casting silhouettes of the high bursts of sulfur clouds from the planet’s surface. ‘We’re a contradicting lot, us Khol’isa’s— hate the sun, yet somehow we can’t rightly live without it.’

Yoongi doesn’t reply back- unsure what to say at that given moment.

‘Is it still called a solar eclipse when it’s the planet that’s eclipsing the sun or is it called planetary eclipse?’ Sk’jin ruminates.

Yoongi shrugs in reply. There’s a flare of light up in the atmosphere.

‘Ship’s coming in,’ Sk’jin comments, squinting a little as he looks up. ‘Doesn’t appear to be of GLA make.’

Yoongi notices how a bunch of the Androids Comm-Devices all glow at the same time and a few of them leave the Spardyti and head back inwards.

‘What do you think?’ Sk’jin asks with a slight frown as he begins threading some of the flower stalks together.

‘Possibly another guild,’ Yoongi replies. ‘Or just a private trade ship. Or pirates.’

Sk’jin sighs out of his nose.

‘Do you think they’ll have the beamer cells?’

‘Would it be worth asking?’ Yoongi asks back, removing his screen from his pocket to use to zoom up into the bloody sky. Sk’jin steps closer, peering down at the screen as Yoongi sets the focus.

The ship in question is large, shaped like a slightly wonky cube, and Yoongi can’t be sure if it’s the light of volcanic planet looming to the side but it appeared to be an ochre hue. But despite the rather unconventional design, it was quite obvious what type of ship it was and who it belonged to.

Pirates.

Sk’jin glances down at Yoongi, one eyebrow raised subtly. It’s a non-verbal question. And if they weren’t stuck in such a situation; Yoongi wouldn’t be agreeing to this situation. But they were in dire need of beamer cells; and it was possible that the pirates would sell them some.

There’s some scuffling sound behind them and Sk’jin is smiling in greeting but the Excavators hasten to make themselves scarce, rushing towards their own Transporter, waving their beards hastily at them in goodbye. Pirates and Excavators left each other alone- sometimes they helped each other out, sometimes they reported on each other to the GLA. Excavators thought that all pirates were either too destructive or crass and pirates thought that Excavators were just a bunch of maniacs with a penchant for weirdness.

‘Do you reckon they’re bad news?’ Sk’jin asks, gesturing to the approaching ship in the sky as he watches the Excavators drive off. He akes a wreath of the flowers and places it over his head carefully.

Yoongi shrugs again.

‘Looks like a crew of…maybe 100?’ Sk’jin estimates, eyeing the ship carefully. ‘Do you think they’re affiliated with Grezma?’

Yoongi doesn’t know and he wonders how many times he can shrug before it looked too repetitive.

‘Guess we’ll risk it,’ Sk’jin claps his hands together with a resigned sigh. ‘I’ll do the talking. Do you think you could like, sneak in and steal it off of their ship?’

‘I don’t think that’s a smart idea. Beamer cells are large- they can’t be snuck in and out of a ship that’s most likely still active after it lands.’ Yoongi replies.

‘Worth a try,’ Sk’jin mumbles off, arms crossed as he regards the approaching ship, clearly thinking of how to approach them. He looks like a deity planning on his next step towards creation, crowned with those flowers that were glowing red and pink in this lighting, flaring out into bright beams of violent orange at some angles.

‘Do you want to stay back or sit with me?’ Sk’jin grins.

‘My feet hurt,’ is Yoongi’s reply, making Sk’jin laugh out loud. Yoongi doesn’t know why that’s funny. His feet did hurt, he would probably have to purchase some new soles for his shoes.

‘Sir. Your Transporter is ready, would you like to be driven back?’ one of the Station Androids approaches them.

‘Bless your heart, that’s quite all right,’ Sk’jin spins on his heels, flashing a beatific smile at the Android. ‘Thank you for your hard work!’. He waves at the other Androids as well who smile in response.

‘Do you happen to know who they might be?’ Sk’jin points at the landing ship. Yoongi can hear it now, a distinct low hum of heavy engines and machinery.

‘Fuel stop,’ the Android replies with a smile before adding. ‘You are perfectly safe here.’

Sk’jin has a slightly amused smile before he thanks the Android again.

‘Do you maybe want to take back the Spardyti and I’ll talk to their lot?’ Sk’jin nods towards the Transporter, ready with all their goods.

‘No. I’ll stay.’ Yoongi replies, making sure that the Heliord handle was in reaching distance and the TeorSer set to stun. ‘Please hold my flower.’

‘You’re so sweet,’ Sk’jin grins as he adds Yoongi’s flower to his own bunch. ‘Staying back to protect me?’

‘Staying back to witness everything so that you and Namjoon don’t have another argument over what you have been doing,’ Yoongi replies bluntly.

Sk’jin’s smile slips off of his face with a rapidity that’s comical but Yoongi doesn’t laugh. He pulls a face, groaning dramatically.

‘Guess that’s also sweet of you,’ Sk’jin snorts, throwing his head back before he adds: ‘I think we should go back inside and sit? If we’re standing out here they might think we’re making to confront them or something- pirate, you know?’

Yoongi nods his agreement and they step back into the Station in silence. Yoongi wonders if he should apologize for what he said, though he’s not entirely sure if there was anything offensive in what he said. Sk’jin’s ear was no longer bandaged, having been carefully treated by Taeh’yung who cooed and petted Sk’jin’s head every time, blowing gently on the wound even though the ointment was designed not to sting.
‘What do you think?’ Sk’jin asks out of the blue after they sit in a rather strained silence inside the lobby. It’s entirely empty now, save for the serving Android behind the bar. It’s a lot wider than Yoongi had estimated, without the guild sitting inside of it.

‘About what?’

‘This mission.’

‘That’s what I want to find out.’ Yoongi replies.

‘…as in?’ Sk’jin looks like he’s struggling to understand what Yoongi meant. But they’re interrupted by the sound of approaching footsteps and raucous laughter. Sk’jin rolls his eyes at the approaching sound.

The Station lobby doors burst open and a rather robust Being bellies in. Quite literally. His belly proceeds him and he waddles inwards. He appeared to be a guard of sorts, looking about the Station with beady eyes. He spots Sk’jin and Yoongi- or possibly only Sk’jin who has shifted to lounge very elegantly over the inelegant chairs of the lobby. The flowers gleam white under the Lobby lighting and only highlights Sk’jin’s beauty to the newcomers.

The guard appeared to be watching over someone who clearly thought he was very important, judging from the way he strutted inside, holding an expression of self-importance and purposeful criminal intent; as though he was actively thinking about the best way to be evil in all of his actions. Yoongi hears Sk’jin stifle a chuckle.

He was probably the Pirate lord- or captain level at least.

A bunch of other pirates come bumbling in, whistling in appreciation at Sk’jin who does a great job of acting out “fake” nonchalance as they enter. Sk’jin idly fiddles with one of the flowers in his arms, feeling at the petal with rosy fingertips. The pirates gather around the Lobby, throwing themselves onto the more comfortable lounge chairs while some took on the long bar table, calling for drinks from the serving Android behind it.

‘Hey! What a pretty thing you are,’ one of them grins at Sk’jin as they get closer. ‘Are you headed to Kyakkyawa? I’d like to place my bet on your serial number.’

Yoongi doesn’t need a better light to see Sk’jin’s face to recognize the distaste on his features. It’s subtle, and he doesn’t think anyone else other than himself notices. This Being was from Ceteri, Yoongi is sure of it- more specifically from Bakin Karfe. A majority of them seemed to be from that general planet or System. They had a reputation of being perverse and the planet was overall avoided by planet-hopping tourists who would rather not be harassed or groped whilst touring their host planet’s countries. Unless you were into that sort of thing of course- if that was the case then Ceteri was a planet for you.

‘I’m afraid not,’ Sk’jin replies easily, blinking demurely up from his flowers and adds, ‘Might I know what you’re referring to?’

‘But you have to be- you’re replying smart and shit- is the little twerp your manager or something?’ another other asks, slinging his arm over the first Karfine nodding at Yoongi.

‘What he means, my pretty, is if you were headed for the annual Kyakkyawa Hosting Pageant.’

Yoongi has to stop himself from firing his TeorSer as the captain leans over to whisper into Sk’jin’s ear. Sk’jin seems to be containing himself from letting loose an elbow or something as well.
‘The Kyakkyawa Hosting Pageant?’ Sk’jin repeats, glancing over at Yoongi who honestly doesn’t know what this pirate scum is talking about. A few others gather around, eyeing Sk’jin with another type of appreciation that borders on disgusting.

The captain takes his time walking around the couch, clearly thinking he was quite the alpha-male as he sits on the table in front of Sk’jin, legs spread wide as though to emphasize his presence. Yoongi has the intense desire to shoot his kneecaps.

‘It’s a…contest of sorts,’ the Karfine captain says slowly, smiling at Sk’jin. ‘Only the most beautiful are put up on stage and a massive panel of judges vote to see who will win.’

Sk’jin smiles but it’s not the elegant beatific smile he had earlier. This was somehow rather dark, a little bit more dangerous.

‘I’m flattered but no,’ Sk’jin replies, his eyes narrowing just a little.

‘Pity- you’d be a very good contestant,’ he leans back a little, regarding Sk’jin with a critical eye. ‘Maybe a bit old- but you’d do.’

Yoongi notes the slightest hint of annoyance spark up in Sk’jin’s eyes.

‘That’s where we’re headed- needed a little break y’know? Away from the prying eyes of the GLA, gives us all the time we need to appreciate real beauty,’ he drawls, looking around and jumping a little when he finally notices Yoongi.

Sk’jin and Yoongi both quickly glance at each other. Yoongi gives him the slightest quickest nod and Sk’jin’s mannerism entirely changes.

‘Is that so?’ Sk’jin angles his head to the side a little, leaning in to talk to the captain, coyly fiddling with the flowers in his hands as he looks up through his eyelashes. ‘Tell me more about this contest.’
It takes a while for his eyes to adjust to the intense burst of light.

‘What was that?!’

‘What was what?’

‘Shh-!’

They pause momentarily, ears pricked.

‘There-‘ he points, his voice sharp.

He watches carefully, the sloping lands around them still and seemingly serene. The light was starting to tint, a strange colour taking over- and there.

‘Start us up now-‘

‘What is it-‘

‘Do it now!’

‘-shit it’s them- something’s wrong with the ship-‘

‘Send out the breakers- how the fuck did they get through the atmosphere it’s crumbling even as it moves-‘

‘Wait-! They’re-‘

‘-shit!’

‘He’s still there! They’re- they’re still there-‘

‘We can’t go back now it’s not- we don’t know what it was or-‘

‘No! We’re going back now! We’re not leaving anyone behind. Set us back and put all thrusters on stand-by for emergency warp- I don’t care if we lose some of our beamers.’

‘But-‘

‘Did I fucking stutter?! Get to it now!’
Watching Taeh’yung “work” is equal parts fascinating and confusing.

For one it’s absolutely breathtaking. Hoseok feels like he’s witnessing something akin to real magic.

‘It’s not magic,’ Taeh’yung had tried to explain. ‘It’s just…it’s part of Life, and of Time.’

That did nothing to explain or help Hoseok understand but it seemed like Taeh’yung himself didn’t really know what he meant either. So instead he sits at the kitchen counter opposite Taeh’yung, and watches him remove the trace remains of whatever radioactive isotope Yoongi had mixed in with their food.

Taeh’yung’s skin is warm in tone with a hint of some copper-ish shimmer under this natural lighting. It’s even more obvious when he’s doing…whatever it is that he’s doing. His hands were glowing green- and Hoseok isn’t just describing the light that glows out from a source in his hands- but Taeh’yung’s entire hand glows a tinted light. Lines and shapes form and move over his skin—too fast for Hoseok to really catch proper sight of but somehow still visible. Taeh’yung’s eyes also seemed to glow; not in the same way Sk’jin’s eyes gleamed a neon-red; and not the way Namjoon’s eyes sometimes caught the light at a strange angle, making his eyes look like pale glowing orbs reminiscent of pale moons. There was something distant and hollow about it— as though staring into his eyes for too long would somehow transport you elsewhere. Hoseok couldn’t bring himself to look at Taeh’yung’s eyes for too long, feeling a strange sense of intense uncomfortableness from doing so. But it was all right because Taeh’yung, much like his wide and exaggerated body movements, never looked at one thing for longer than 3-4 seconds.

Taeh’yung struggles a little with a sealed container of tea leaves. As expected, most of the contaminated items were used in drinks. Sugar, salt, tea, and other food items the crew members used most frequently. Yoongi certainly kept a sharp eye on everything. But Hoseok can’t bring himself to really mind it all too much. After all, Yoongi’s less than savory technique of tracking did sort of save their lives in Grezma.

‘Hobi!’ Taeh’yung grimaces in a comical manner, handing Hoseok the container he’d been struggling with for the past minute.

Hoseok takes the offending item and opens it easily, making the Zhak’gri clap and pretend to swoon.

Other than Taeh’yung’s nifty abilities and tricks (the extent and capacity of which Hoseok doesn’t think he’ll ever understand), having the Being aboard the ship was almost therapeutic.
Taeh’yung seemed to bring out a gentler, somehow much more honest version of Sk’jin than how he was before. Though Hoseok has never doubted Sk’jin’s honesty before, there was always a layer of “glamour” over his actions and words- making him seem untrustworthy and suspicious. Most of that act had been reduced and Hoseok was looking at a whole new side of the Khol’isa.

The effect on Yoongi was probably more on the subtle side, but it was one that Hoseok noticed nonetheless. He was more inclined to talk, more visible, if that made any sense, and somehow strangely more real. There was a strange sense of illusion to Yoongi’s overall presence and having Taeh’yung around somehow created a lucidity over the Human.

In Namjoon’s case, Hoseok puts it down to the line of events that led them up to this point. It had been nearly 4 days now, since Yoongi’s mind breaking reveal and their Captain was somehow strangely more relaxed though Hoseok wouldn’t word it that way. His behavior was changing, not forcibly presenting himself as a leader or captain, but rather slipping in with them as part of the group, rather than someone controlling them. He was normally cooped up in one of the lobbies where he’d set up his screens to create a whole new system for the Užkulisai and rarely spoke unless spoken to. And Taeh’yung being Taeh’yung, spent most of his free time sprawled on the couches, pillowing the Kutsoglerin’s lap and talking a mile as Namjoon actually did respond.

It was close to nightfall and it was going to be their last night here. They had been delayed a full day due to late deliveries on some of the parts they needed for the Užkulisai. Sk’jin and Yoongi were at the Station picking up their items; speaking of them, they were late. Hoseok grimaces at the idea of those two in specific being late and how Namjoon would react to it. They would probably work into the night and hopefully everything they had fixed would work well.

But Hoseok has no doubt about it.

Despite the chaotic combination of the individuals forced into this team, they were very skilled in what they did. Combining skilled Beings who were somehow all united in the same crisis miraculously brought about effective and constructive teamwork.

Not only did Namjoon recalibrate and reprogram nearly more than half of the ship’s systems, but created new ones from raw code in a matter of 2 days. Not to mention Sk’jin’s shocking expertise in mechanical-engineering, working down in the engine hull with Yoongi for continuous hours on end. They were both able to rewire the entire engine beamers and recalibrate the gages and readings.

Hoseok himself had finished working with Namjoon on the commandeering systems for the Užkulisai just that morning and had worked with Yoongi on the weapons/defence systems.

‘Thank you Hobi,’ Taeh’yung beams, taking the container and his hands glow again for a split-second before he nods emphatically as he did after every object he “cleaned” out. ‘Everything is good now!’

The Zhak’gri leaps off of the counter and randomly selects a tin.

‘We should brew some to celebrate!’ Taeh’yung declares, looking around for cups.

Hoseok gets off of the counter as well, wondering if he should get something to eat before he heads back to the engines room.

‘Which cup do you want?’ Taeh’yung asks, dangling a bunch by their ears on his fingers. Hoseok glances at the cups with some surprise- first he didn’t know they had that many cups; second, he actually does find one to his liking. He points at the glossy green cup with a flower-shaped imprint all over the surface creating a nice texture.

‘Nice choice! This is the Hobi cup,’ Taeh’yung declares, actually whipping out a marker of sorts and with flourish writes the letter “H” on the bottom.

The sound of a door opening alerts both of them and Namjoon appears. He waves at them, walking over towards the Kitchen area.

‘Namjoonie!’ Taeh’yung holds up the cups again. ‘Choose one!’

Blinking a little slowly, as though tired, he squints before he’s close enough and points at the obnoxiously yellow mug. Hoseok tries not to judge the Kutsoglerin.

Taeh’yung, sticking his tongue out a little, writes down “N” on the bottom of the cup before settling it down. His own cup, an all too dainty white cup with elegant filigree painted in gold around the rim is placed carefully down next to Namjoon’s. He measures out the tea leaves with a lot of care before pouring out hot water. Beaming with satisfaction, Taeh’yung turns around with the cups, handing one to Hoseok and then to Namjoon.

‘Tea?’ he asks the Captain, handing him the cup.

Stretching stiffly before accepting the drink from Taeh’yung, Namjoon glances down at the tea dubiously as though remembering what it used to contain. With a sort of amused grimace, he nods his thanks at the Zhak’gri before taking a seat at the dining table.

He looked exhausted- as though he hadn’t been able to sleep all too well. There were dark shadows under his eyes and Hoseok wonders if the Kutsoglerin was somehow in a state of malnutrition. He’s still not entirely sure how he managed to sustain his metabolic functions and wondered if it would be too sensitive a topic to probe into. His hair was damp- probably just showered to freshen up and stay alert for the final push before take-off.

‘Hey- are the ParaBots done?’ Namjoon yawns before taking a sip.

‘The paints all done,’ Hoseok replies.

‘Baby do you want some tea too?’ Taeh’yung skips over to the OrTank stood up on the floor to the side and hoists it up and over onto the dining table seat. ‘I think you’d like this cup- it’s small and cute like you!’

Taeh’yung busies himself with a small soft orange cup with a curled lip before he drops said cup, eyes widening as he stares at the OrTank.

Alarmed, Hoseok too quickly looks about to observe the OrTank and his heart nearly leaps out of his chest because-

‘Is he crying-?!’ Namjoon chokes out before recovering and adding, ‘I thought he was encased in fluid-‘

But even from where he sat, the little droplets were apparent. At first they clung to his cheeks, as tears normally did- however after a certain period of time they just floated off- little globules of tears floating in the misty substance that sustained the Being.

Taeh’yung approaches the OrTank, saying something low in a soothing tone as he pats the OrTank.
‘Is he- uh, is he saying something?’ Hoseok asks nervously. No matter how many times he tried to tell himself that the Being inside there was probably harmless, he still can’t help but feel greatly unsettled by him. Hoseok felt as though he could not only sense them, but hear and see them too.

‘No- I think,’ Taeh’yung makes a cooing sound before continuing, ‘I think he saw a nightmare.’

‘…is that possible?’ Namjoon asks as he shifts his chair further away from the OrTank.

‘If you can see dreams, you can see nightmares,’ Taeh’yung replies simply.

Sk’jin and Yoongi walk in just at that moment. The Khol’isa looks extraordinarily beautiful in a crown of crystal-like flowers; he’s carrying an armful of the flowers with him whereas Yoongi’s overall presence seems to diminish entirely beside him. And not for the first time, Hoseok wonders what Sk’jin would look like with his horns, before whatever it was that happened happened to him.
Because right now Sk’jin could probably go to some non-GLA planet and declare himself a deity of sorts and it wouldn’t be entirely unbelievable. Hoseok is reminded of the sculptures put up on display in Šerdesas’s art galleries except Sk’jin is not a statue carved out of diamond geodes. Light refracts off of him and fills the Lobby with bright spots of dancing light and everyone has to take a moment to blink at the sudden brightness.

Sk’jin and Yoongi pause, studying them and their expressions carefully.

‘Did I miss something?’ Sk’jin asks after a few seconds, eyes darting around the Lobby before latching onto the Being in the OrTank. Yoongi is already making his way to the OrTank, putting down the items he was carrying in his arms.

‘He’s crying. Why.’

If Hoseok didn’t know Yoongi any better (though he can’t rightly say he knows Yoongi), he would think he wasn’t interested and was asking out of politeness. But he knew Yoongi (or as well as anyone could possibly familiarize themselves with the Human) and could hear the strained worry in his voice.

‘We don’t know,’ Namjoon replies. ‘He just- it just happened.’

‘Is he in pain? Hurt?’ Yoongi asks Taeh’yung who has his ear pressed against the cool surface of the OrTank.

‘No- but I think he feels better now- he’s heard everyone’s voices. It’s calmed him down,’ Taeh’yung beams at them.

‘He heard our voices?’ Sk’jin repeats, looking at the Being in some confusion. ‘He can hear us?’

‘I don’t know,’ Taeh’yung shrugs a little. ‘He can sense you; I don’t know about hearing, but I wouldn’t be surprised if he could.’

Taeh’yung looks proud, like a parent would of their child.

‘It was just a nightmare,’ he explains to Yoongi who was bent over, watching the Being intently.

‘Nightmare?’ he says the word carefully, like it was foreign.

‘So- how was your trip?’ Namjoon asks. Hoseok glances over at the Khol’isa with some wary expectancy. Sk’jin normally didn’t answer Namjoon’s questions directed at him, so he glances at Yoongi instead who, as expected, doesn’t reply. The Human’s attention is drawn entirely to the ‘Wow! Those are amazing!’ Taeh’yung walks around the table and bounces up to Sk’jin.

‘They’re called Vitka’v,’ Sk’jin informs the Zhak’gri, holding up the bunch for him.

‘They smell great!’ he adds, sniffing the flowers (!?!?!) enthusiastically. ‘Can I have one?’

‘You can have all of them,’ Sk’jin smiles benignly at the Zhak’gri who takes up the bunch enthusiastically.

‘I take it you met with some Excavators?’ Hoseok asks, as Sk’jin brushes his hands delicately over the side of his robes as though dusting them off.

‘Yes- as well as some hot-shot pirates; and I have information that I think we can use,’ Sk’jin adds, walking up and sitting on a chair regally.

Taeh’yung plops himself next to Hoseok, fiddling with the flowers in his arms- now table- and Hoseok has to admit that they smelled nice- which was odd considering how unusual and fake they appeared.

‘Did you buy those? They’re expensive,’ Namjoon asks, eyeing the flowers on Sk’jin’s head with some trepidation.

‘They were a present- a thank you present from some very nice Excavators,’ Sk’jin replies serenely before he adds, looking a tad bit too pleased with himself. Hoseok is surprised Sk’jin actually answered Namjoon’s question. ‘Let me tell you what happened, but first I have a question.’

The Khol’isa leans forward on the table and asks, ‘Have you heard of the Kyakkyawa Hosting Pageant?’

Hoseok has heard of it- it was supposed to be a sort of beauty pageant- except it was actually an extremely illegal and horrifying fighting arena. Most contestants were genetically modified or reconstructed to enhance not only their appearance but their bodies as well. The most recent winner that Hoseok remembers hearing about, was a slender female, no more than 4 feet tall with hair as blue as the sky and the strength to literally rip the spine off of her pageant competition in under 8 seconds of stepping into the arena.

Fighting arenas were of course, illegal under the GLA. However, this was a truly primitive source of entertainment that seemed to delight many many Beings all across the Universe. In fact it was so popular that the organizations that hosted this “event” collected impossibly massive sums of money and units from the gambling it produced, leading them to make deals with the GLA to make the officials and patrols suddenly turn a blind eye to the weeklong event. It was similar to the Cogs- the highly illegal planet-hopping racing competition. And similar to the way the GLA sent scouts to select Racers from the Cogs, they had scouts sent to collect potential assassins or guards from amongst the “beauty contestants”. Hoseok is pretty sure some of the Venture Unit Heads of Divisions had one or two of these contestants as part of their personal vanguard.

Judging from Namjoon’s expression, he too seems to know about this “pageant” because his expression changes to disgust.

‘What about it?’ he asks.

‘Well, it’s going to be hosted in 2 days’ time- not so far from where we are actually,’ Sk’jin tells them pleasantly. ‘In a planet called Pompa. Less than 30 hours from here.’ he wiggles his eyebrows at Namjoon looks contemplative as he mulls over Sk’jin’s unspoken but clear suggestion.

It was actually a pretty good idea. They could use this event to cover their tracks while still being able to access everything they could need as well as have time to wait for orders to be delivered. The organizers of the event practically paid the GLA to look away and right now that was what they would need. Not to mention there would be a lot of Beings from all over the Universe from every side and “faction”- they could blend right in.

‘Don’t we need to bring in a contestant ourselves to enter the planet that’s hosting the event?’ Namjoon asks, one eyebrow raised.

‘Not necessary- even if that’s required, we could I was a contestant,’ Sk’jin poses elegantly. ‘I think I’d fit right in.’

‘Too old.’

Sk’jin glares at Yoongi who doesn’t seem bothered by Sk’jin’s death stare. Namjoon turns his laughter into a hacking cough.

‘So what’s the consensus?’ Namjoon asks around the table. ‘Do we go to Pompa?’

Yoongi nods his agreement, while Taeh’yung beams in response. Sk’jin also nods and then turns to address Hoseok. Glancing quickly over at Namjoon who seemed resigned to the situation, he too nods his consent.

‘Then that’s what we’ll do,’ Namjoon declares, standing up.

‘Another thing,’ Sk’jin says suddenly, ‘A GLA Patrol will be arriving in 4 days’ time here.’

‘We’ll be gone by then,’ Namjoon shrugs.

‘And we couldn’t find any beamer-cells.’

Namjoon swears under his breath before turning to address him, ‘How far can we make it on what we have?’

‘Around 4-5 days?’ Hoseok replies, looking over at Yoongi for confirmation who nods.

‘Then I guess we really should go to Pompa,’ Namjoon scowls. ‘Let’s get back to work and get out of here.’

‘Here Hobi,’ Taeh’yung says suddenly, a little too close to his ear. He places a crown of flowers on his head, clapping with delight.

‘Absolutely stunning,’ he declares with a proud nod. He has a flower tucked behind one ear as well.

‘Thanks Taeh’yung,’ Hoseok manages to smile as he secures the item on his head before standing.

‘Can I have one?’

Hoseok does a double take at Yoongi’s question but Taeh’yung more or less flies towards Yoongi, using his hands to take measurement of the Human’s head.
‘We’re all going to look very handsome!’ Taeh’yung declares emphatically.

Namjoon slowly walks back as though hoping Taeh’yung wouldn’t notice him. But it fails of course and after 15 minutes, everyone is walking around the ship with crystal flowers on their heads.

And everyone still has the flowers on their heads 10 hours later as the eclipse over the planet moves away to welcome the morning and the sky is no longer a strange fiery colour but instead a familiar watery blue. They were now all nervously gathered in the Bridge; Namjoon stands at the Navigator’s Mast, NaviLet in hand and his lips pressed tight together into a thin line.

‘All ready?’ he asks tersely.

Everyone nods in reply, holding up screens in their hands.

‘Wait—’ Sk’jin interrupts before addressing Taeh’yung. ‘I think he should be put back into his original storage? If something goes wrong, it would be safer for him to stay in the tank’s original casing.’

Taeh’yung looks down at the OrTank in his arms and then up at Namjoon as though for verification.

‘Sk’jin is right; put him back in the storage Taeh’yung,’ Namjoon orders. ‘We don’t know what will happen but OrTank cases are designed to withstand any technical issues- so he’ll be safer in there than anywhere else when we start up.’

Taeh’yung pouts but nonetheless nods in agreement.

‘I’ll see you later all right?’ Taeh’yung says as he makes his way across the Bridge.

Hoseok wonders what transpired between Namjoon and Sk’jin because they were both…normal with each other. And not just as some civil front of sorts.

‘Ship locked and secured?’ Namjoon asks Yoongi who nods in reply, staring down at the offline screen in his hands.

‘Containment and emergency procedures ready?’ Namjoon turns to Sk’jin who also nods in reply from where he was sat.

‘Hoseok?’

Hoseok glances over at the dashboard in front of him, his hands already on the controls. He too nods in reply.

They stand in silence until Taeh’yung returns.

‘On 3,’ Namjoon calls out. ‘1…2…-3!’

Everyone taps on the green tab on their respective screens and for a split second nothing happens and then—

The Užkulisai hums to life, a whirr of electronic movement, some clicking sounds, small pops and then complete and utter silence.

‘Welcome to the Užkulisai. I am Lisai- the Užkulisai AI System under your command. How may I aid you today?’
There’s a collective exhale of relief from everyone in the Bridge.

‘Hoseok, start her up.’ Namjoon orders, carefully watching his screen. This entire situation would have been a lot more serious and stressful if they weren’t all crowned with Vitka’v.

‘Starting up engines and systems,’ Hoseok replies, voice light but strained.

The Užkulisai engines hums to life, the air outside the windows billow with dark soot-like dust and dim the light that filters inside briefly.

Namjoon doesn’t say anything for a while, only intensely perusing his NaviLet but then, after a solid minute of strained silence, his shoulders loosen a little, his posture easing.

‘We’re green,’ he declares, looking relieved. ‘All systems are running- no indication of original setup detected. We’re off the grid.’

Taeh’yung cheers and Hoseok slumps against his chair, utterly relieved but it’s only for a while.

‘All right- getting readings,’ Sk’jin announces from where he sat, frowning at the screen and muttering under his breath what were clearly curses before he says. ‘I think we’ll need a whole lot more to really fix up the ship.’

‘But we’re at green to take off,’ Namjoon says as he readies himself behind the Mast. ‘Let’s get out of here quickly- I’ll lay out the trajectory for Pompa; Sk’jin, create a list of everything we’ll need. Yoongi, as soon as we’re stable, double-check on the engine gages.’

‘And me?’ Taeh’yung raises his hand up.

‘Uh- you can…’ Namjoon trails off.

‘You can go get your baby out of his case,’ Sk’jin cuts in. ‘After we’ve safely made it out.’

Taeh’yung gives them both a thumb’s up, which Yoongi returns for some odd reason. Namjoon gives him a brief amused smile before saying, ‘Trajectory set for Pompa- take us out of here Hoseok.’

Hoseok taps across the dashboard, tapping on the engine tabs and he feels the ship respond to every slide of his hand.

‘Aye aye Captain.’
After the final flash of light, it’s too quite. Too still.

But it’s not cold.

Everything is quiet again.

Sound waves and frequency was nullified in space- and even if all the screaming and yelling and shouting had abruptly come to an end, he knows he’s still going to hear it.

Sweat drips down his face, his skin burns hot and blood oozes from his many wounds.

Bodies litter the floor, blood splattered everywhere.

The knife is still hot in his hands- with some difficulty he drops it.

It felt like a dream- a nightmare. He felt strangely unhinged from reality- like this wasn’t really him.

Everything has shifted- has tilted from perspective. The entire Universe seems warped; and the only thing he can feel is the intense heat that spreads over his body from the knife that was in his hand.

It’s not the sight of blood that gets to him. It’s not the bodies that litter the floor that unsettles him. It’s not the stench of death that laces the air that disturbs him.

It’s the heat in his hands.

His footsteps echo loudly behind him and all around. The emergency lights had been activated and it casts long shadows on the obsidian black floors. Somehow he finds himself in front of a large ornate sink. The metal of the tap is hot on his skin.

Methodically he washes his hands. He’s not sure if they’re his hands though- he doesn’t necessarily feel connected to them- the only thing he could sense was that strange heat. The water worsens the feeling and it’s starting to boil now. Switching the tap off, he looks up, expecting to find the mirror fogged up from the amount of heat he must have been exuding.

But the mirror is clear.

The mirror was definitely reflecting him, covered in blood, many cuts and wounds and burns decorating any visible surface of his skin. He’s surprised he’s not on fire. And just to be sure that he was looking at himself, he raises his hand, pressing a wet finger on the surface that should have made a sizzling sound because of how hot it was.

He doesn’t recognize himself. But then again, wasn’t this just a dream?
Pompa was a planet that felt entirely too designed for Namjoon’s personal taste. Even from this distance, the planet looked oddly fabricated. The oceans too blue and sparkly, the clouds too swirly and the continents too geometrically aligned. The continents line up across the equator in a band of geometric-triangles facing each other to create a literal belt around the planet. The poles of the planet are capped with nearly perfectly circular continental plateaus of unnaturally smooth ice. According to what Namjoon read about the planet, it was in fact entirely natural.

‘Pretty,’ Taeh’yung comments as they approach said planet. ‘In like- a very weird way.’

The planet was quite rich in phosphorescent elements laced into their thermosphere and exosphere, causing the rather “plastic” glow around the planet. The sky as seen from the surface of the planet was a slightly kaleidoscopic view of space intermingled with the tranquil blue of their ozone. “Sky-fortune” was apparently quite a popular practice in Pompa; where their fortune-tellers (who preferred the titles “Skryer”- a play on words that Namjoon begrudgingly finds amusing) read the patterns of the phosphorescent patterns in their atmosphere and predicted futures, fortunes, and any other thing you could think of asking.

Just the other day, they had watched a screening of a popular “Skryer” from Pompa who predicted the winner of the Pageant over dinner. This “Skryer” had described the “King/Queen” as a true noble, with silver blood in their veins (‘is that a thing?’ Taeh’yung looked fascinated), and with the sun hidden in their eyes (‘I feel like that’s really practical- especially at night- wait would there even be a night if you had the sun in your eyes? Or is it inverted? But then that would blind you?"
Joonie, what does it mean?’). This sent a mass-mania amongst avid fans and they were lined up to watch the matches out on the streets already. But then another rival “Skryer” had predicted that a quote “shrouded demon of many faces” would win the Pageant.

At that Taeh’yung had looked up from his bowl of potato soup and rather blankly said, ‘That’s rude- Hobi isn’t a shrouded demon, he’s an angel!’; causing Sk’jin to swallow his soup down the wrong pipe, spraying an unfortunate Hoseok as he coughed most unattractively.

There was even a live-stream of the skies of Pompa for those who wanted to try their hand at “Skrying”- most Beings used the live-stream as aesthetic background visual effects for their eateries or other similarly pleasant establishments.

‘Seems like the perfect place to host the Pageant,’ Hoseok had commented with a snort.

‘It’s always been like that,’ Yoongi had offered.

‘You’ve been there before?’ Sk’jin looks surprised.

‘417 sols ago- I assassinated the parliament from Métrico-05 and made it look like they were all infected by the same virus they caught during a diplomatic trip to Métrico-11 and died as a result of the combination of jungle-fever, dehydration, and sunburn.’ Yoongi replies, blowing on his food to cool it before eating it and adding: ‘I have no record in Pompa- we’re all right.’

Sk’jin had choked again, this time splattering an unfortunate Taeh’yung with tea.

Namjoon had obviously conducted a thorough search of the case later and found to his utter dismay that Yoongi’s cover had been so thoroughly convincing in its strangeness that had he not known about it, would have really thought it was an unfortunate (17 Pompen parliament members all died hours within each other in the exact same manner) and fascinating incident.

‘Uh- how exactly did you do that?’ Hoseok had asked warily, handing Taeh’yung a tissue without looking at the Zhak’gri. Yoongi takes a long time to chew and swallow his food before he replies.

‘I poisoned their food.’

Needless to say none of them continued eating their dinner that night.

‘All right- we’re close enough to make our call. Namjoon?’ Hoseok turns in his seat a little to look up at the Navigator’s Mast.

‘Right- as we’ve already pre-ordered the stuff we need, we’ll be able to collect everything within 6 hours of landing- during this time we can restock on stuff we couldn’t find before, maybe actually buy things that aren’t just Flotsam and Jetsam branded goods.’

‘Hear hear,’ Sk’jin mumbles as he taps along his dashboard.

‘I for one, would like more tea,’ Yoongi comments.

‘Yes well- tea and all that,’ Namjoon waves. ‘Hoseok and Yoongi will go pick up our stuff from the docking station- I’d rather not have anyone, Android or not, come over to the Užkulisai. We’re trying to stay hidden so I’d prefer it we remained so- which leads me to Sk’jin and Taeh’yung-‘

Sk’jin makes an affronted sound though he doesn’t look up from the screen.

‘-you’ll both be getting the other supplies- please don’t draw attention to yourselves,’ Namjoon ends bluntly.

‘Okay!’ Taeh’yung gives him an enthusiastic nod that does nothing to reassure Namjoon.

Rather than believing in his team members, Namjoon trusted in their loyalty to their own agenda. It was clear that none of them were doing any of this for each other, or out of respect for each other, or even for the sake of the Universe- but instead were bonded through a unanimous agreement to see through the mission for their own reasons. And whatever agenda they might have, they all knew that the secrecy of their presence was the most important factor weighing in on achieving whatever it was they wanted. Namjoon doesn’t know how much of that is actually a good thing, but if that meant that they weren’t going to jeopardize the overall mission or the Beings directly involved, then he was willing to accept it.

‘Is everyone buckled in?’ Hoseok calls out even though he has indicators on his dashboard telling him the same.

The ship was running smooth and well. They all kept a careful eye over the systems, constantly checking over the most important components of the ship. Their schedule was stricter and everyone much more vigilant- the slightest sound triggering responses such as screen/NaviLet extraction, running out of the Bridge/Kitchen/Cabin/Engines-Room and sprinting off towards the Bridge/Kitchen/Cabin/Engines-Room, pulling out tool kits, readying emergency doorways just in case there was a vacuum breach though that system wasn’t even remotely touched. So after nearly 24 hours of living in intense level of anxiety, coming upon the enhanced planet of Pompa was honestly a relief.

‘We’re good,’ Namjoon replies for everyone as he checks on Taeh’yung specifically.

They descend into the atmosphere and already their windows are alit with strange lights that almost seem solid, bokeh like effects roll off the panes like actual physical masses of light.

‘Trippy,’ Hoseok mumbles, blinking a little with the continuous flashing of light.

The moment they’re past the top most layer of Pompa’s atmosphere and they close in on the sight of the curvature of Pompa’s circumference Hoseok announces that they’re free to move about. Taeh’yung jumps down to the tower-mast with Yoongi and sits on one empty chairs. Namjoon makes a mental note to make the weapons inaccessible for Taeh’yung.

‘Oh wow they’re really not hiding the fact they’re hosting aren’t they?’ Sk’jin snorts from the side.

Floating amongst the clouds and honestly creating flying hazards were gigantic holographic advertisement boards each with a face of the Pageant contestants. Many of the contestants looked like very young males and females with delicate bone structure, fragile looking skin, and rosy cheeks. But according to their “promotion videos” could probably break Namjoon in half in a matter of seconds. There were other contestants who were of varying aesthetics but the Pageant this time around seemed to really like the delicate look over others.

Sk’jin snorts again as he reads one of the holographs they fly past.

‘Excuse me, but I am far better looking than all of them,’ he comments in a superior tone.

‘But old.’

‘Look you Earthian piece of shit-‘

‘What’s our launch-ring number again?’ Hoseok interrupts pleasantly over Sk’jin’s would be tirade about his age (a comically touchy subject with the Khol’isa).

‘M13-04-229,’ Sk’jin grumbles, arms crossed and honest to Spaces pouting as he glares at the back of Yoongi’s head.

‘Thank you,’ Hoseok beams.

‘While we’re here can we go watch a match?’ Taeh’yung asks eagerly, pressing his face on the surface of the HUD windows while Yoongi grabbed the hem of his borrowed shirt in a cautionary manner.

‘That’s not legal,’ Hoseok rolls his eyes, ‘And in events like these, the GLA might have an agreement with the Pageant but their agents still hang around- it’s best if we stay away from the arenas and gambling pools.’

‘Legality is a construct of powerful Beings,’ Namjoon finds himself saying absent-mindedly as they fly past another hologram; this time of a sprite-like Being, his skin shades of soft magenta and with pitch black eyes with crystal-like wings that looked more like decoration than actual anatomical use but Namjoon is willing to believe it was probably some strange defence-mechanism. ‘It doesn’t really mean anything.’

A rather profound silence follows his statement and Namjoon feels a little sheepish.

‘But what about slavery? That’s considered illegal or is it also just another construct of the powerful?’ Sk’jin asks, breaking the silence. There’s no actual challenge in his voice- it was as though he was just simply wanted to know Namjoon’s opinion on the matter. Understandably, this really takes Namjoon aback.

‘That’s basic moral principle,’ Yoongi replies from the tower-mast before Namjoon can. ‘But that too is conjecture,- morale and ethics are variables that are ever changing depending on whatever principle or form it is implicated upon. Most of which are selfish.’

No one speaks for another 15 seconds, just looks shared.

‘That’s fair,’ Sk’jin nods slowly in agreement, tapping along his arm in thought. Hoseok seems to be suppressing a smile of sorts as he steers the Užkulisai towards the launch-ring.

In their attempt to make their planet a true exotic/tropical getaway, the Pompen refused to construct buildings or structures past 30 meters at most. And most of these tall buildings were part of their Docking Bays and Spaceports.

At this distance, the water below looks less fake and more familiar- the sky over Pompa really did cast a filter over the whole planet. There were a total of 21 geometric continents, all quite close to each other so expansive colourful bridges were built to connect each continent to each other. As the majority of lived-in continents were clustered in a ring around the equator, Namjoon figured their stay, however short, would be a rather warm one. And as luck would have it, it was high summer in Métrico-15 and Namjoon doesn’t even have to step out of the ship to know it’s hot. He can see heat waves warping the air around the Dock they land on and to everyone’s amusement Yoongi complaining in the most neutral tone about how much he disliked hot weather.

Muted black bands now ringed all of their left earlobes; a new set of Comm-Devices that Namjoon had customized. Sk’jin had clearly thought he was being overly paranoid but Namjoon ignored the raised eyebrow when he explained the changes he made. It would now act like a tracking device with added sensors linking the wearer to the health-tabs on the ship. It was also custom designed to only work when the Being it was designed for used it.

The Docks are wide and open, as though built so that any tourist who came there wouldn’t miss the scenery. And Namjoon appreciates good scenery but there seemed to be more holograph than actual scenery from where he was sitting. The sun was also directly above them and so the sunlight was pouring down on him inside the Bridge and despite the filters and deflective shields over their ship, Namjoon feels like he’s surrounded by whatever humid heat awaited the others outside.

‘Do you want anything?’ Taeh’yung asks as he hops up to the first tier after they land.

‘No, I’m good,’ Namjoon smiles. ‘I’ll see you all later.’

Taeh’yung gives him a loud smacking kiss on his cheek followed by a throaty giggle as he gleefully runs off. Hoseok waves, smiling at Taeh’yung’s antics while Yoongi raises one hand in a random salute of sorts. Sk’jin smiles wryly and says as he walks past, ‘Don’t have too much fun by yourself.’

Honestly Namjoon would have been irritated before but now he replies with a ‘I’ll try,’ making the Khol’isa cackle in mirth. He opens up the tracking application, keeping note of where each Being was headed. Rather than have their cargo delivered to them, Namjoon thought it better if they went themselves. A ship and details regarding the ship could be easily remembered whereas faces could just easily get confused and muddled especially during such a busy time.

Switching on the camera feed outside their Hangar gate, Namjoon watches the others leave, all complaining about the heat except for Sk’jin who seemed to welcome the warmth with great delight. Making sure that the perimeter around the ship was covered and properly under surveillance, Namjoon dives back into tweaking some of the Užkulisai’s systems again. Though the ship was running smooth, Namjoon caught up on some small glitches and aspects that he knew he could improve upon. But as they had been flying through space, thought better than to try something while they were out there.

Namjoon loses track of time though he periodically glances at the screens for the surveillance feed and the tracking application. Hoseok and Yoongi had reported every hour or so on their progress whereas Taeh’yung and Sk’jin were a lot more random and sporadic, updating Namjoon on arena matches and some grizzly detail on how a contestant’s jaw was punched clean off of their face.

‘Hey, can you access the traffic report? My hands are a little occupied,’ Hoseok comms in.

‘I’m sure they’re quite busy,’ Sk’jin suggestively comments.

There’s a resigned sigh from Hoseok while Taeh’yung makes inappropriate sounds in the background. Namjoon hopes no one around them notices.

‘Give me a minute,’ Namjoon replies as he extracts Hoseok’s location.

There were no airways in Pompa as they didn’t want to “mar” the scenery with extended and high airways so instead all traffic was directed on ground. That and the added sudden peak in tourists and avid Pageant watchers, made for terrible traffic conditions.

‘Seems like you’re gonna be stuck there for half an hour so,’ Namjoon says as he studies the traffic-level indicators of the area they were in.

‘Sucks not having airways here,’ Hoseok mumbles.

‘It’s their aesthetic- it’s fine,’ Namjoon grins, scanning the area and finding that the traffic eases up closer to the Docks. Seeing as the Pageant had already started, most of the heaviest traffic was located further inside Métrico-13.

‘My aesthetic is not being stuck in traffic.’

‘What other aesthetic do you have?’

‘...uh, what do you mean?’

‘I don’t know- I was asking so that I could understand what you meant and why you would classify being stuck in traffic as a possible aesthetic some Beings might enjoy while you don’t.’

‘I don’t think anyone enjoys being stuck in traffic-‘

‘But the word aesthetic means something concerning great beauty or an appreciation of beauty- if you are addressing traffic-jams with obvious contempt, then using the word “aesthetic” is incorrect.’

‘This is the most hilarious thing I’ve ever heard this entire month,’ Sk’jin chimes in while Taeh’yung is laughing his head off in the background.

‘It’s uh- it’s supposed to be ironic- like sarcasm Yoongi,’ Hoseok tries to explain.

‘I see,’ Yoongi replies.

‘You do?’

‘No.’

Namjoon hears Hoseok sigh just a little before he rather naturally starts explaining the nuances and subtleties of sarcasm. Sk’jin will randomly comment while Taeh’yung laughs appreciatively at the examples Hoseok makes up on spot. Oddly enough this entire situation feels pleasant and comfortable.

‘Oh this is too heavy for me!’ Sk’jin exclaims dramatically out of nowhere. Glancing over at the tracking application, Namjoon notes that Sk’jin and Taeh’yung were just downstairs.

‘Whatever will we do?’ Taeh’yung declares with a plaintive sigh.

‘Oh no, you must carry on young one! Leave me behind! I will defend our burdens!’

Namjoon literally facepalms.

‘Oh no Jin! Fear not! I know our Captain is strong and capable! His arms are so smooth and strong and-‘

‘You both realize there are lifts in this Dock?’

‘But the walk from the lift to our docking bay is so far!’ Taeh’yung whines. ‘Pretty please help us?’

‘All right, all right, I’m coming,’ Namjoon rolls his eyes. He’s pretty sure Taeh’yung and Sk’jin could easily bring back their “shopping haul” by themselves. He hears them sniggering. He also notes that Hoseok and Yoongi were now close by, no doubt looking for a gravity-lift near the terminal. They would be able to leave in an hour or so, depending on how long it took to install the beamers.
With a resigned sigh, Namjoon leaves the Bridge, making as much noise as he wanted down the stairs.

In the Lobby before the Kitchen was the OrTank. The Being was floating serenely as usual and Namjoon is happy to note that he hadn’t cried or done anything remotely strange or unanswerable and was as normal as he could be. He’s facing Namjoon, as though he had heard him come down the stairs and had turned to greet him. Namjoon is only just a little disturbed by that but decides to ignore it. Namjoon waves at the OrTank, then rolls his eyes at himself.

However he’s startled when the Being inside lifts his hand with swiftness he hasn’t witnessed before. Pausing in front of the stairs, Namjoon squints a little even though he can see clearly. There was no follow up movement, no change. Taking a tentative step closer, Namjoon notices that though he wasn’t crying, the Being’s eyebrows were furrowed, eyes moving rapidly behind his eyelids. Was he seeing another nightmare?

‘Hey, you okay in there?’ Namjoon says quietly, remembering how Taeh’yung had said that the Being had relaxed once he heard their voices.

The rapid eye movement ceases but he still looked a little disturbed.

‘You’re okay- we’re just-…’ Namjoon struggles a little, wondering what to say and wondering if any of it would make a difference and also why was he attempting to placate this Being.

‘-we’re just making a short stop- we’ll fly soon okay? We’ll get you back to your planet?’ Namjoon says, patting the OrTank hesitantly.

The Being inside relaxes a bit more.

So perhaps he did understand- or perhaps it was all just sensory. Babies didn’t understand speech but speaking to them in soft soothing tones calmed them down. Maybe it was the same case?

‘We’ll be there in a few minutes- Namjoon could you ready the payment?’ Hoseok asks, sounding a little breathless, jolting Namjoon out of his reverie.

nThe “shrouded-demon” speaks,’ Sk’jin cackles as Taeh’yung laughs boisterously.

‘Please- I beg of you.’ Hoseok sounds both amused and fed-up.

‘Yeah, I’m headed down anyways,’ Namjoon replies, tearing his eyes away and quickly heads for the stairs. He was going to have to ask Taeh’yung to check on the Being just in case.

It’s terribly hot out but luckily the sun was going down and it wasn’t as harsh as it was when they had landed. Making sure that the ship was locked up, Namjoon heads for the elevators, watching the distant horizon that wasn’t glossed over with holographic billboards of ethereal Pageant contestants.

‘That took you forever,’ is the first thing Sk’jin says when the elevator doors open to reveal Sk’jin and Taeh’yung with what appeared to be at least 6 crates of goods. They’re both wearing completely different clothes in obnoxiously colourful pastel shades of yellow, lavender, and green.

‘What in the fuck-‘

‘Don’t swear, there are children here!’ Sk’jin hisses admonishingly, covering Taeh’yung’s ears.

‘We’re the only ones here!’ Namjoon gapes at the crates. ‘What did you buy?!’
‘Stuff!’ Taeh’yung explains. ‘For me! I needed clothes! And other things!’

‘I-‘

‘Okay let’s get these loaded and into the ship!’ Sk’jin beams, pushing one of the handles of the gravity-lifts at Namjoon and breezing past, hands empty. Taeh’yung shoves a flappy looking garment into his face, hands him the other handle and also breezes past.

‘What’s this?’ Namjoon shakes his head to remove the affronting item from his face.

‘A present!’ Taeh’yung declares. ‘I saw it and thought of you!’

‘Uh-‘ Namjoon looks at the garment, a rather large pale blue smock-like garment but with excessively long sleeves. Then he looks up again and notices that both Sk’jin and Taeh’yung were wearing similarly designed clothes.

‘Thank you?’

Taeh’yung just beams in response before Sk’jin gestures at him to hurry up. Grumbling, Namjoon pulls the lifts into the wide elevator.

‘Please wear it!’

‘I uh- I will, after we leave- or later after we get in- or now- now is good too,’ Namjoon hastily adds because Taeh’yung’s eyes widen as though sad.

He ignores Sk’jin snort as he shrugs on the thin garment.

They struggle a little out of the elevator, because Taeh’yung insisted on sitting on the crates, causing him to hit his head on the elevator’s door post when they exited. Taeh’yung is clutching at his head while Sk’jin is doubled over with laughter and Namjoon is struggling pulling both gravity-lifts out of the elevator with impossible sleeves when Hoseok and Yoongi appear from inside the neighbouring elevator; Hoseok looking deeply unimpressed while Yoongi looked impassive as ever.

‘Well- I suppose we should get going now-?!’ Hoseok splutters when Taeh’yung throws a flappy garment at him- this one in soft orange.

‘Present!’ Taeh’yung hands Yoongi a soft petal-pink one which the Human takes without question and pulls it over his own clothing.

‘Uh-‘ Hoseok looks over at Namjoon, eyeing his clothing and then somewhat slowly and carefully pulls the garment on as they start making their way to their docking bay.

‘The colour really suits you-‘ Taeh’yung stops smiling suddenly, eyes widening, head turning towards the direction of the Užkulisai sharply.

‘Taeh’yung-?’ Sk’jin begins but suddenly Yoongi pushes past, sprinting forward towards their docking bay. Hoseok is second to move and Namjoon follows up a split second later.

‘Guys-?!’ Sk’jin is calling after them, sounding confused but alert as well. Hoseok has already removed and readied his hidden TeorSer from the holster on his side, aiming in preparation to attack/defend. But there’s no need to fire, because as they make their way towards their ship, Namjoon already knows that they’re too late.
The Hangar gate of the ship has been pried open and exposed.

Namjoon’s mind is reeling- he hadn’t even been gone from the vicinity for more than 5 minutes at most- the entire ship was locked and their security incredibly tight. There was surveillance everywhere and it was still day. There were sensors all over the ship, with alarms and reports sent to Namjoon’s NaviLet at every subtle disturbance.

How did this happen without their knowing.

Then suddenly, a cold rush of fear overtakes Namjoon.

Taeh’yung and Yoongi are already sprinting in, but they don’t stop at the Hangar. They don’t check to see if their cargo was touched- they both head upwards at once.

Namjoon is vaguely aware of Sk’jin cursing behind him while Hoseok deviates a moment, reaching for the screen over on the Lobby. Namjoon sprints up the stairs to find Taeh’yung and Yoongi standing extraordinarily still in the middle of the Lobby.

An empty Lobby.

‘He’s gone.’ Yoongi stares blankly at the Lobby couch where they had last left the OrTank. Where Namjoon had last seen the OrTank- he had even waved at the OrTank, even spoke to him, touched the OrTank before he walked down.

‘He has to be here-’ Sk’jin stammers, eyes widening as he looks about helplessly.

‘No-‘ Taeh’yung is staring blankly at the table. ‘He’s gone.’
Chapter End Notes

(Author’s Note)

DID YOU SEE MY BAG?? DID YOU SEE MY BAG??
Sorry
NOT SORRY
DNA
BYE
LOVE YOURSELF-HER
BYE
PIED PIPER
BYE
THIS ENTIRE ALBUM BYE
I HATE THEM SO MUCH this is a lie I love them so much I can’t even Also but uh, Mic Drop is gonna be my wedding song. Idc what anyone has to say about it, im gonna walk down the aisle to Hoseok’s rap. And like, why wasn’t I born with dimples.
I would also like to sacrifice a kidney in order to learn the choreo for Also, I don’t think I can properly say when I can update anymore T_T because of uni that’s why. God, it’s like, a sudden outpour of assignments left and right. One class has 5 assignments that NEED TO BE COMPLETED IN ONE WEEK WHAT SORT OF BULLSHIT IS THIS I DID NOT PAY YOU TO KILL ME THANK YOU
So as an apology for being a whole week late, here is a very long chapter ^_^
Also happy belated birthday to the other half of my Moon Children, Namjoon.
“Kaleidoscope“ [noun]: a constantly changing pattern or sequence of objects or elements.

Chapter Notes

[warning- some parts of this chapter might be very grotesque, so I’m just giving anyone who gets queasy or effected by the idea of gore-related things a warning. When you see “2 hours ago” just skip the first 4 paragraphs and you can continue reading!]

See the end of the chapter for more notes

‘It’s beautiful.’

‘You’ve seen it at least 3 times already.’

‘Doesn’t stop it from being beautiful- and it’s gonna be another 56 years before the next one shows up on this side.’

‘Do you know old you’ll be in 56 years?’

‘Yeah- do you?’

‘I’m too aware.’

The lights shift- a strange tint fills the air and everything turns quiet. If he listens close enough, he guesses he’d be able to hear the sound of the wind outside the Arc and the sound of the massive turbines keeping them afloat. Instead he listens to the sound of her breathing.

He’s seen the eclipse one too many times for it to be anything interesting or new. But the look of awe and fascination on her face makes him feel like it was worth coming up all the way here just to be part of her memory. After all, this did make a pretty cool event marker in his timeline.

‘There’s that story- about how the moon and the sun are lovers- you heard that before?’ he asks.

‘Yes! I read a story about that!’

‘Back in my planet- it’s actually a part of one of our religions you know?’ he doesn’t even blink, looking up at the slowly forming eclipse without any protection- not that he needed it anyways.
'Oh! That's kinda cool!'

'Cataclysmic more like,' he snorts. 'Literally everyone wanted to get married during the eclipse— it was like, good luck or something. Like how no matter what, the moon and sun would always find each other— the married couple would always find each other too.'

'But that's cute,' she argues.

'I mean I guess, but it's like, such a common thing you know? My parents did the same.' He rolls his eyes and gets distracted by the sight of a food stand.

'Finally it's empty— be right back!' he waves and lopes his way towards the hotdog stand, something that never failed to delight him for some reason. He wonders if he should get him a keychain with a hotdog on it or something.

'Do you think it's possible for the eclipse to last forever?' she asks out of nowhere, still looking up at the sky as a dark wedge starts to form in the sky.

'I'm pretty sure the reason why people like the eclipse so much and freak out about it is because it's temporary and doesn't happen frequently,' he replies wryly. 'It's why we're all out here despite having seen it happen so many times.'

'No I meant- ' she stops for a while, still not looking away. 'What if time froze? And all we ever saw was this— like, what would that be like?'

He doesn't reply. Instead he looks up as well, watching as the dark wedge grows bigger and bigger, fully covering the sun in a matter of seconds. The sky turns a strange dim shade and there are gasps and sounds of exclamation.

A flare erupts through the sky and the brightness of it all ingrains itself into his mind. The ring of white fire glows and every time he blinked it beamed at him.

The world is transformed under this light— under this sky— and the entirety of time seems to pause, to allow them to witness this known cosmic beauty for just a few seconds longer— just a few heartbeats longer. Just long enough for him to feel as though he was breathing at the same pace with everyone gathered around them. To feel as though he were looking at the same sky with everyone— to feel the planet sigh at the sight of the eclipse.

'It would be just like this.'

Sighing, Hoseok wonders, really, if it was too late for him to call this entire thing quits.
He did not sign up for any of this.

Long gone was the initial excitement and rush he felt, feeling as though he were back on a mission from the Venture Unit. Long gone.

His jaw is still sore, his fists still sting, and he’s sure his ribs are bruised, and honestly, he would kill for something cold to drink at this moment. He would actually kill for a lot things at this moment, but noooooooo. He scowls at himself, hefting Namjoon properly across his back as he quietly creeps out through the heady smelling bushes of overly luscious looking flowers, nearly fluorescent under this lighting.

Spaces, what a pretentious neighbourhood with all of their ridiculous plants and topiary trees that were fucking inconvenient to climb. There’s some slight rustling sound behind him which he ignores- or tries to ignore. He wants to turn his head and whisper, ‘Be more quiet- if this wasn’t part of the plan I’d have fucking killed you already you dumbass!’ but that would defeat the purpose of their plan.

Right. Their plan.

Hoseok can only hope that Taeh’yung hasn’t killed anyone- or worse befriended anyone. Also, who knew Namjoon was that uncoordinated?! And Sk’jin really should stop feeding Taeh’yung hare-brained ideas like that if they all wanted to come out of this unscathed.

Then of course Yoongi.

‘I hope you’re all happy,’ Hoseok grumbles.

‘I’m so sorry!’ Taeh’yung still sounds extremely guilty and a little amused. ‘I didn’t know that Pa would get knocked out like that- I swear it was an accident I thought he was going to dodge!’

That’s what Hoseok thought too, but apparently the Kutsoglerin’s reflexes weren’t the best.

‘Where are you?!’

‘With Jin!’

‘Is he still knocked out?’ Sk’jin asks, amusement laced in his voice.

‘Yes he is- can you not sound so keen about it though,’ Hoseok grumbles before adding, ‘How’s Yoongi.’

‘Doing great. Right Yoongi?’

Predictably, there’s no reply.

Sighing, Hoseok makes his way towards the Hover-7 parked behind the topiary tree shaped like a Hover-7.

‘How much time do we have left?’ he asks, gritting his teeth as he maneuvers Namjoon over the Hover-7. Damn the Kutsoglerin for having ridiculously long limbs. Hoseok was not cut out for this.

‘The first match is in an hour. Is your tracker still following you?’

Hoseok glances back at the topiary tree shaped in a phallic form and spots movement in the shadow.
‘Yeap.’

‘Great. See you soon Hobi- you should make some bets- get us back some units.’

Hoseok sighs again.

He looks up at the sky wistfully and mourns for the simpler days of his life as an agent for the Venture Unit.

10 Hours Ago:

‘This is fine.’

There were probably too many situations where Hoseok has had to deal with live bombs.

To name a few, Hoseok was once strapped to a chair with a plasma-bomb attached to his feet while he tried to rewire the hair-like wires with his only his pinky and ring-man finger of his left hand. The other time was when he was trying to retrieve an “item” from a “safe house” that was rigged with explosives which were triggered by motion sensors. The most memorable is of course tackling a rogue militant personnel who had gone completely mad and nearly blew up an entire Dock. Hoseok had packed up the raving militant into an OrTank and hoped for the best.

‘This is totally fine.’

Luckily it worked out for him and Hoseok was praised for his quick thinking.

However this was very different.

Because while bombs consisted of wires, fuses, explosives, timers, sometimes bionic triggers, chemical catalysts, and a complex digital system safeguarding the timer, and Hoseok knew how to deal with most bombs with confidence, this situation was a little difficult.

And Hoseok knows it’s not fair for him to compare Yoongi to a live bomb but that’s how he felt at the moment.

The air around the Human is entirely dark and his expression suggests that he’s rather unhinged. Hoseok has never been able to really predict or read the Human before, and now with this unsettling air surrounding him, Hoseok doesn’t know what to expect. Hence, the comparison with live bombs.
Hoseok tries to ignore the steadily growing thrumming sensation under the skin.

‘Everything is fine- we’re fine, this is fine.’

Yoongi looked close enough to exploding despite having absolutely no facial expression. Hoseok wonders how he does it and if it’s a skill he could pick up if he morphed himself to look like the Human.

There was no way to describe the look in his eyes.

‘Everything is fine-‘

‘Will you shut-up!’ Namjoon hisses at Sk’jin who was talking to himself in a low voice, reassuring himself repeatedly.

Taeh’yung seemed equally disturbed, his head tilted as though he didn’t understand what was happening. His gaze is riveted on the spot where the OrTank had last been placed, a dent on the cushion of the couch from the rim of its exterior shell still lingered.

‘Lisai pull up surveillance from the past 15 minutes,’ Namjoon orders at once, sliding into one of the chairs over the large table in the middle of the Lobby.

‘Shouldn’t we alert security?’ Taeh’yung asks skeptically as he seems to somewhat recover, blinking rapidly as though clearing his sight.

‘No,’ Namjoon shakes his head at once. ‘We need to know if this was purposefully directed at us or not-‘

He stops midway his sentence as their surveillance is fed into the screen mounted above the table.

‘You just left the ship- fast forward a little…’ Sk’jin begins to say but Namjoon hasn’t even been out of frame for more than 10 seconds when two figures appear, walking casually as though everything was completely normal. They didn’t even hide their faces, chatting amongst themselves easily.

‘What the fuck-?’ Sk’jin curses out in obvious disbelief at the two Being’s complete disregard to their identity. They even walk around the Hangar Gate until they find the camera and even lean in as though to make their faces more apparent. What was going on?!

‘Lisai, scan their faces and make a comparison through the GLA Database,’ Namjoon orders as he hurriedly types on another screen.

They watch carefully as the two Beings pause before the Hangar Gate and they seem to study it carefully for a few seconds before one of them backs away and the other pulls out an oblong device from inside their pocket.

Hoseok reaches over and pulls up their readings on their security field surrounding the Užkulisai- any foreign object that didn’t have the same serial code as the ship or didn’t have permission from the ship would instantly trigger their alarm on contact.

However the moment the object touches the Hangar Gate, the security field readings flat-lines.

‘What did they do?’ Sk’jin demands, sounding angrier and angrier by the second.

The object then proceeds to crumble, but along with it, pull the nearly 10 inch thick metal door apart. Namjoon switches the camera view from within the ship instead. The two Beings proceed to investigate their cargo, looking over the Spardyti with what looked like an impressed look. One of them pulls out what could only be a bio-scanner and as he waves it about, pauses rather abruptly, alerting the other who was pulling out one of the OrTanks carrying the birthing technology.

They don’t say anything but move together at once. Namjoon changes the camera feed again and they track them moving up. When they catch sight of the OrTank they high-five each other in obvious satisfaction.

‘Nice- I’d say we’re getting a good sum for this.’

‘Yeah- wait up, lemme check if he’s dangerous or some shit.’

‘Twerp like that? He’s naked, can’t do much harm naked.’

‘Y’never know- well, seems to be asleep- hey!’

One of them approaches and slaps the surface of the OrTank and there’s a strange crunching sound directly behind Hoseok. The screen in Yoongi’s hand crumbles to the ground in a sad combination of metal shards and wires and glass. Hoseok doesn’t want to look at Yoongi at this moment so he looks back at the screen.

‘He’s completely out- maybe a new experiment?’ the one closer to the OrTank squats down to take a closer look. ‘He’s real pretty too.’

‘Could be- this’ll make them happy. Reckon they’ll come looking for him? Apparently they’re a private trade ship? Says here they’re headed for Matlaab.’ One of them peruses a screen.

Hoseok frowns. This sounded strangely familiar- a situation he’s heard of before.

‘I think so- should we leave our note?’

‘Go ahead.’

To everyone’s immense disquiet, the one who was squatting stands up and turns his head around a little before he finds one of the cameras. Namjoon switches to that one immediately, zooming in on the Being’s face in the process.

‘Hey- so we’re taking your stuff here. If you want him back, you’ll need to buy him back from us tonight in Métério-09, Pangpar District, 00-417, 8 o’clock sharp- remember that time- it’s your allotted appointment time. Also, it’s the house without the flowers. You can’t miss it- the entire place is stuffed with flowers- we kinda stick out.’

The other Being snorts in reply, nodding as he doesn’t look up from the screen.

‘Right- and don’t try alerting the GLA or the forces here, it just won’t work. Great doing business with you; if you don’t show by 8:30, he’s officially ours and I think that’s that- so, yeah. Bye!’

And just like that, the two Beings heft the OrTank between them and make their out of the ship.

Hoseok curses internally.

In some twisted underverse logic, this made perfect sense. Events like the Pageant or the Cogs made it an all too perfect environment for smaller criminal syndicates or pirate-clans to try and give themselves a “boost up” in the market; either by establishing their abilities and skills as an organized party for hire, or by raising their “reputation” within the undervese, or sometimes simply to stir shit up. If there was one thing Hoseok could take away from this situation and be relieved was in the fact that this wasn’t a targeted attack, but rather simply an unfortunate event they were now roped into.

Before arriving here, Hoseok had done his research on the Pageant as well. Similar to the way the Cogs was used by pirates to channel some of their more frowned upon business transactions, the Pageant hosted not only their normal roundup of fighting matches and arenas, but underground auctions, illegal (even by Pageant standards) matches, gambling (using more than just units), and worst of all- trafficking.

And situations like this didn’t just happen in large-scale events like these,—even commercial and “legal” fighting arenas were rigged with blackmail, bribery, and threats. Fighters were paid or ransomed to lose their fights- or contestant parties were compromised by other parties and were made to lose. However, those were predictable and often easy enough to overpower- but this was being executed in a much larger scale than Hoseok was capable of handling- even with their current numbers.

Hoseok can no longer ignore the energy swirling just under his skin, egging him on silently.

Namjoon has somehow pulled up the surveillance feed from the Deck itself and they watch as more Beings similarly dressed as the two who entered their ship meet near the elevators on different levels. Namjoon quickly accesses other cameras from all over the Dock and they watch as nearly every ship is easily and rather casually robbed.

‘They’re…are they thieves?!’ Sk’jin demands, mouth previously agape. ‘They’re robbing other ships?! Just like that?! And demanding we buy back what’s ours?!!’

‘Wait look-’ Namjoon switches the main frame and pulls up a feed showing a few Beings fighting the thieves outside a ship a few levels below them. Then again, with the same casualness, one of the “thieves” pulls out a TeorSer and fires multiple times, killing the other Beings.

Sk’jin seems to be in permanent shock, disbelief etched all over his face. But this was starting to make sense to Hoseok, and obviously to Namjoon too.

‘They left less than 5 minutes ago- no attempt in hiding their getaway vehicle, nothing,’ he wipes at his face in frustration. ‘They wanted us to get a look at their faces, to identify their ship,- they’re not hiding. We won’t get anywhere reporting this to the forces here-’

‘And we can’t even if we want to,’ Sk’jin intercedes sharply. ‘We don’t even know what the OrTank is and who he is- if we receive help, how do we explain what or who he is? We can’t bring in anyone who might potentially expose us-‘

‘And they won’t?’ Namjoon indicates at the screen.

‘We can get away with it from them,’ Sk’jin says emphatically. ‘We’re in Pompa after all- with the Pageant going on,- clearly they think he’s a contestant or something, they’ve taken a lot of other stuff from the ships here, I think we should wait it out while they’re being distracted and-‘

‘-what if he’s scanned?’ Namjoon demands, eyes flashing angrily. ‘What if they try to break the OrTank and take him out of it-‘

‘-no one is going to be stupid enough to try something as dangerous as breaking free an unidentified Being during a fucking Pageant Namjoon,’ Sk’jin snaps.
There’s a strangely familiar sound that hums around in the air.

‘This entire place is crawling with GLA agents- we were obviously tracked all the way to Ch’dra and it doesn’t take a lot to figure out that we’d come here to make use of the Pageant to cover our steps,’ Namjoon spits out. ‘These Beings are doing this with casual ease that suggests that they’re backed by the GLA- what if he’s taken back and his appearance is noted-’

The sound grows louder and Hoseok notices a small blinking light from the screen in Namjoon’s hand and a minimized tab over the ship’s surveillance shows movement in it.

‘-the likeliness is too low and highly improbable-’

‘What are we going to do about Yoongi and Taeh’yung?’ Hoseok interjects sharply.

‘What about Yoongi and Taeh’yung-‘ Sk’jin begins to ask but pauses, eyes widening as they hear the familiar humming vibration of the Spardyti. It’s only then that the Captain and the Communications Manager realize that Yoongi and Taeh’yung are missing.

Sk’jin is yelling Yoongi and Taeh’yung’s name as he darts out.

Namjoon stands up at once, looking over at the surveillance feed and watching as the Spardyti pulls out. He had no control over the Transporter and couldn’t stop it from inside the ship.

‘Yoongi, Taeh’yung- get back here now,’ Namjoon orders over Sk’jin’s cursing and angry tirade directed at the two. But there’s no reply from either of them.

Hoseok glances at the time- they had approximately 4 hours left before their “appointment”.

‘Yoongi won’t do anything rash,’ Hoseok supplies with a sigh.

Namjoon gives him a look that roughly translated to ‘no offence but how the fuck would you know that’.

‘He’s gone to scout,’ Hoseok explains absentmindedly as he allows himself to sink into that familiar sensation again, his skin warming all over. ‘He’s checking the area, looking for good places to camp out in. To spy, essentially. We would eventually have to do that and Yoongi is the best option for spying.’

Namjoon looks like he wants to argue but Hoseok sees the way Namjoon realizes that yes, if they had planned this out, Yoongi would have been assigned to spy and then-

‘-and Taeh’yung would be sent with him because he can sense the OrTank and would be able to tell if he’s all right or not,’ Hoseok finishes Namjoon’s thoughts for him.

Namjoon looks like he’s really struggling to come up with some sort of counter argument or something. He gives up a few seconds later before throwing his hands up into the air and slumping where he sat.

‘So what do we do next?’ he asks, looking at Hoseok expectedly but not in a patronizing manner. Rather Namjoon looked relieved that someone else seemed to have a better grasp/understanding of the situation.

Sk’jin is still cursing as he examines their Hangar Gate, clearly having lost any semblance of collectiveness as he pulls at his hair, ranting in Khol’isa, fists flying in the air.
‘Well, we’re first going to need units to buy him back- if units are what they want,’ Hoseok begins at once. ‘So we need to start shifting our units to an untraceable source, ready to be transferred.’

‘Right-‘ Namjoon nods, already pulling up their accounts. If there was one thing they weren’t worried about, it was about their financial support. But they couldn’t use GLA-funded units because their source and delivery point could be tracked, they needed underverse units.

Namjoon also seems to realize this at the same time.

‘How much do you have on you?’ he asks.

‘Not a lot,’ Hoseok replies honestly. ‘It’s been years since I had any dealings with the underverse and haven’t had any missions in that area either.’

‘Same,’ Namjoon frowns. ‘I changed all of my units, Sk’jin, what about you?’

‘What the fuck do you think?!’ Sk’jin hisses in reply. ‘I didn’t even have a fucking body until 4 sols ago-‘

‘Right, right- sorry I asked,’ Namjoon sighs, shaking his head in response to Hoseok’s stunned questioning look. What did Sk’jin mean by that?

‘Yoongi?’

‘There’s a bank located in the coast-‘

‘We are not robbing a bank,’ Namjoon buries his face into his hands, voice muffled.

‘We aren’t? But that sounds like fun? We can wear masks right?’

‘YOU’RE BOTH GOING TO STAY PUT AND NOT DO SHIT OTHER THAN SPYING ON THAT PLACE YOU HEAR ME?’ Sk’jin screams, causing both Hoseok and Namjoon to flinch.

‘ANSWER ME OR SO HELP ME I WILL-‘

‘Yes! We won’t! We’ll just watch- right Yoongi?’

There’s no answer.

‘Don’t nod- Jin can’t see you, remember?’

There’s a moment of silence before Yoongi speaks.

‘We’re only going to watch.’

‘Why does that sound like a lie,’ Namjoon groans.

‘Well, first we get all the units we can gather,’ Hoseok sighs. ‘Next we find out who’s behind this— is Lisai still running their faces through database?’

Namjoon nods, pointing at one of the open tabs on the screen.

‘We track and locate their position- find their network, associates, motives, connections, everything.’ Hoseok grimaces. If they wanted more than just units then it was going to be a whole other level of trouble for them.
‘Sk’jin,’ Hoseok adds. ‘Could you fix the door?’

‘What does it look like I’m doing?’ Sk’jin snaps. The screen with the live footage from the Hangar shows the Khol’isa extracting a few kits.

‘Where are you going?’ Namjoon demands.

‘Gonna get information from the streets,’ Hoseok replies, feeling his face warm up as the muscle, fat, and tissue shift over bone.

‘You’re leaving me alone, with an angry Khol’isa, while attempting to get units that we don’t have?’ Namjoon deadpans.

‘You’ll be fine,’ Hoseok says, patting the Kutsoglerin on his shoulder as he pockets the Heliord handle in his inner pocket and a small compact TeorSer as well.

‘But I’m the Captain,’ he hears Namjoon mumble though he’s already beginning to access what appeared to be financial accounts from the GLA Departments.

‘If that’s the case, I’d appreciate it if the Captain would kindly request the Dock for some ParaBots.’ Sk’jin chimes in, voice still laced with irritation masking his obvious anxiety.

Hoseok hears Namjoon sigh before he’s out of earshot.

Carefully adjusting the TeorSer deeper into his inner pocket, Hoseok steps out of the ship into Pompa’s humid heat.

But Hoseok doesn’t feel the weather, neither does he care for it- the only thing he can feel is the pulse of excitement, the promise of cause and effect; but mostly, thrill of the hunt.

This felt exactly like a mission- and though Hoseok tells himself that he didn’t miss being back in the field, that he didn’t long for the swift and almost natural lifestyle of an agent- he couldn’t deny the fact that it felt good.

He can’t hear anything and everything is still white.
Things move in the white landscape around him. Things he doesn’t understand. Fire blossoms from their hands. Mountains fly in the sky above them but everything is still white.

Who were they? What was happening anymore?

He desperately wishes that everything would at least turn back to a normal colour. That this bleached white landscape would go away. He rubs at his eyes, creating a strange reddish tint around his vision in the process.

He’s pushed back, falling all over the place; for a while he allows himself to be pushed around. He can’t fight this white-stain that bleeds at him from the sky. The mountains in the sky erupts in loud colours, like avalanches of snow except this wasn’t snow. Snow was soft and clean, and he remembers being pushed around on a smooth piece of bark by his brothers. This wasn’t winter, this wasn’t snow.

This was just madness.

He gives up, falling and being thrown harshly against the side of the rocky hillside. The sky looms above him and the mountains simply hover- no movement, no falling- nothing.

Massive bird like shapes stream across but these were not migratory birds; these were not the flocks that they hunted seasonally. These had wings of fire, beaks of cruel light, and every time they landed, more white erupted everywhere.

He can’t feel his hands but he somehow manages to lift them. And for the first time he notices colour.

Red.

His hands are red.

But that wasn’t right- his hands were like his brother’s hands- his mother’s hands. His father’s hands.

The colour bleeds from his hands, spreading everywhere rapidly and with alarming saturation and clarity.

He suddenly wishes everything was white again.

Because in this red, he can clearly make out the dead faces; their vacant eyes reflecting the strange fire that blossomed all over the air.

Because in this red, he can see his father collapsing, losing his outline stark against the white and bleeding into the never ending red that threatens to drown him. His hand stretching out to him- the same hand that he knows so well.

There’s a shrill continuous shriek- like someone was screaming at him to run. But he can’t move. He can’t take a single step.

He can only watch and he can only breathe until everything turns red.
8 Hours Ago:

The Hover-7 was a little too easy to borrow and Hoseok doesn’t really feel guilty about it but pretends to do so anyways. The roads are stuffed and traffic is as ridiculous as Hoseok last saw it some hours ago but considering he was on a Hover-7, customized and designed to be a little slimmer than its predecessors, Hoseok easily zips through the jammed streets and finds his intended location easily enough.

Parking the Hover-7 in a much safer place than he found it, Hoseok makes sure to change his face properly before removing his helmet.

Hoseok feels at ease out here.

It’s hot. It’s humid. The streets are dirty and a lingering smell of city-pollution, fuel, exhaust, sweat, and greasy food stains the air. And there are too many Beings around for it to be remotely comfortable or pleasant. But Hoseok feels freed.

He takes on the native appearance of the Pompen- large rounded eyes, a short and slight forehead, and high-set cheekbones. His hair shifts colour to a ruddier hue and with some quick borrowing finds clothing that allowed him to better blend with the environment.

Hoseok has never been uncomfortable with his own appearance, but the idea of slipping into a newly formed identity somehow calmed him down. Allowed him to think differently, to see differently, and to be seen differently by others as well. It was probably because of his lifestyle that he preferred existing in a permanently disguised manner; this mission was the first in many many sols where he remained in his natural form.

Or at least that’s what he told himself. Hoseok stares at his hand- a new hand, one that wasn’t covered in scars that no amount of medical care could get rid of. Turning his open hand into a fist and then releasing it again, Hoseok trails the deep, thin wound down his palm. He’d been hiding it ever since he got it- but he never took the treatment to fully remove or erase it despite a Yisheng offering him to completely remove it. Hoseok still kept that scar on him despite transforming his hand all the time.

Lowering his hand and allowing the colour to shift to one that better suited the natives of the Pompen, Hoseok shifts his attention away from his thoughts and focuses at that task before him.

‘Yoongi?’

‘There are 10 guards outside. Only for show- no purpose. They’re not there to defend or attack- just for display.’

‘What about communication-transformers? Or receivers?’ Namjoon asks hopefully.

‘None. If there are any- they will be short radio-waves- inaccessible without the correct frequency gage.’ Yoongi replies at once. ‘I could take down one of the guards but none of them are carrying Comm-Devices or any other form of communication device.’

‘Yeah- and Finel tried too, like, an hour ago- he got nothing.’ Taeh’yung adds, not explaining who or what this Finel was. ‘They scanned the guards and none of them register in any database either- they’re all clean.’

The faces Namjoon had scanned and attempted to identify through the GLA Database had been fruitless. So any possible leads they were hoping to glean from the surveillance footage was dashed away almost immediately.

Yoongi and Taeh’yung had arrived at the location of their destined meeting place in a completely different continent an hour or so ago and had already placed themselves at a decent location, scouting out the area. But apparently they weren’t the only ones. Yoongi reported at least, fifteen other Beings, similarly positioned and tasked, all spying at the opulent mansion that was their given meeting point.

‘This is taking place underground.’ Yoongi adds. ‘There’s probably a whole underground network.’

The area of Métrico-09 was one of the wealthier and better structured continents. And Pangpar District was a small section close to the scenic shorelines that seemed to house impossibly rich Pompens. Having expected to sneak through security, Yoongi had placed the Spardyti some ways along the shoreline almost underwater but found to his surprise that no such security existed. But based on his reports, there were plenty of cameras (which were all turned off), and lots of security posts (which were all empty), and plenty of security measurements in the form of motion sensor-triggered stun-nets, sirens, and even a small cyborg task force (all deactivated and found in a container unit just outside the District border). This was also how Yoongi had found the other Beings who were similarly occupied. Apparently Taeh’yung had befriended all of them and they were now all gathered outside street 00-417, and more or less just chilling. There was no point in spying on a place that literally just threw open all of their doors for you, welcoming you and entreating you to “spy” on them. It was clear- that they had no fear and that no single authority could touch them during this Pageant season. It only meant one thing.

‘So they’re not worried- possibly linked with the Pompen government?’

‘Yes.’

Hoseok had been expecting that. Based on how casual and at ease the thieves had been, it was safe to say that this entire stunt was being conducted by the Pompen government rather than just the Pageant.

‘How’s your baby Tae?’ Sk’jin asks, now no longer sounding like he was about to flip tables. He had finished sealing the doorway a few minutes ago and had been loudly complaining about staining his robes with metal-polish.

‘He’s all right- safe,’ Taeh’yung chirps back, his mood having lifted once he could sense (Hoseok doesn’t understand how the Zhak’gri is doing that or how much he could trust in his abilities but he would take Taeh’yung’s [and by extension, Sk’jin and Yoongi’s] word for it) the OrTank and befriending a bunch of Beings around them. They were now apparently watching one of the matches on a screen and had already placed bets on who would win. Also, if Taeh’yung was to be trusted in this information, one of the guards was watching with them as well.

‘Do you…do you think you can like- talk to him? See how he is?’ Namjoon asks hesitantly.

‘Nopes! He only communicates when he wants to – and I’m too far- well, that, and also there’s too much here, you know?’

‘Uh- yeah?’ Namjoon replies, sounding like he really didn’t know but didn’t want to ask either.

‘Where are you Hobi?’ Taeh’yung asks.

‘Browsing,’ Hoseok replies, walking into a small gulley that smelt strongly of unwashed public bathrooms.

‘You’re in Métrico-07 though? What are you doing there?’ Taeh’yung inquires, sounding curious.

‘Check the pawn-shops.’ Yoongi says quietly before he can reply.

‘Or one of the Android Maintenance places,’ Namjoon chimes in. ‘You should be able to get a live-in there.’

Hoseok hums in reply, not wanting to explain that he wasn’t looking for someone for information; rather he was looking for something. Besides, a live-in (field agents or Information Analysts who were stationed permanently in certain planets) was too risky to approach considering their immediate predicament.

Although Yoongi was a GI agent and has possibly done more field-work than Hoseok, he wasn’t trained to infiltrate and neither was he…Hoseok frowns a little in his thoughts. Was Yoongi even aware of his missions? He read the files regarding the GI and he’s seen the way Yoongi behaves and acts- did the Human remember what it was like?

Then there was Namjoon who went through his missions via screens, never actively being present in the field in a physical way. He was normally galaxies away, surrounded by walls and walls of screens, conducting his missions with the taps of his fingers.

For field-agents, it was different. Finding information, or as they put it, browsing, was different. Depending on what sort of mission you were assigned, field-agents were normally paired with an Information Analyst who would aid the field-agent in finding information, performing more complex database/systems dive, or simply digitally controlling technical aspects of the mission from their station. Hoseok has worked numerous times with a small group of Information Analysts and appreciated how much easier it was for him during these times. But Hoseok doesn’t have his own personal Information Analyst who has been pre-informed on the mission objective because none of this was planned.

So in situations like these, where field-agents found themselves stranded in foreign planets they weren’t supposed to be in or simply needed a short getaway, they all had an unspoken agreement and understanding of setting up a “safe-room” where information regarding that planet, contact information for connections that were safe and approved, supplies, and most importantly, data containing Venture Unit deals with said planet, were carefully hidden.

Hoseok doesn’t know if Pompa has one such place, but considering its location, and with current events surrounding it, he’s sure that there should be at least one of these in the planet. Besides, planning events like the Pageant required a few years at least, so it’s possible that in the past few years, a few agents dropped by.

He breaks free of the stinking gulley and finds himself in a bustling metropolitan zone, with massive holographic screens everywhere, showing the live-match for the general public. There’s a large city-square to one side where masses of Pompen and other tourists were gathered, all cheering as the fights progressed. Hoseok is in time to watch a slender male Being spit out glaringly red blood before screaming at his opponent, teeth bloody and pointed. Looking away, Hoseok spots one of the massive Transportation terminals and makes his way over. This would be the third one he’s checked for a “safe-house” and he hopes that he’s in the right place.

‘Ooh- yes, bite him!’ Taeh’ yung cheers and it corresponds to the cheers behind Hoseok, coming from the city-square he just walked through.

‘That’s a nice way of confessing your biting-kink Tae,’ Sk’jin comments with some amusement.

‘Don’t shame it till you’ve tried it,’ is all Taeh’yung says and Hoseok silently sniggers at Namjoon’s spluttering reaction.

Crossing over to the station lockers, Hoseok walks across with easy determination; like he knew exactly where to go. Because to an extent he did. He quietly counts the lockers, making his move as he heads towards the locker numbered 7213.

And just one look at it tells Hoseok he’s in the right place. Tapping his finger on the security screen of the locker, he opens the small door and pulls out the lone screen inside of it. It’s attached to a charger at the back so Hoseok doesn’t unplug it, knowing someone else might need to use it later. Instead he pulls out his own screen, connected to the Užkulisai, and begins to transfer the files after connecting the two over a temporary line. Checking over the screen, Hoseok finds that the last user had accessed this 8 months ago. He hears some cheering in the background but that doesn’t mask the purposeful step that’s directed in his direction. Keeping his stance just as casual and free, Hoseok checks around the locker for any additional material he might want to use. There’s a few medical-kits stacked neatly over each other, a few TeorSer chargers for a variety of models, and other forms of chargers.

Not all safe-houses were actual houses- sometimes they were lockers, sometimes they were entire pent-houses, and other times a stationary Android working in public maintenance. But whatever it was, it was always disguised in fairly public and open locations. Hiding in plain sight. The most common were lockers in terminals- normally the main Transportation hubs in-planet.

‘Is this you Hoseok?’ Namjoon asks.

‘Yeah.’ Hoseok sets the timer at

‘This is great. Thank you.’

‘No problem- how’s Pompa’s system security?’ Hoseok asks, waiting patiently for the transfer to complete.

‘Unsurprisingly easy,’ Sk’jin replies instead. ‘As a result, there’s nothing concrete here at all- just statements, laws, normal government shit.’
The transfer is complete and Hoseok carefully places back the screen, pocketing his own back into his jacket. Making sure he didn’t overlook anything, Hoseok deactivates the screen, mentally apologizing to any Agent who might come here to look for this in the future, and watches all of the data permanently delete itself till the very end. He hopes they understand that the safe-house location was compromised so it had to be changed.

‘Where is this from?’ Namjoon asks carefully.

‘Sources,’ Hoseok replies evasively, hoping Namjoon has heard the term thrown around before so that he would understand what Hoseok meant. He places the screen back and promises to come back and “restock” the locker.

‘Ah- all right. You’re headed back?’

‘Yeap-‘

‘Can you pick up something to eat, I’m starving.’ Sk’jin butts in.

‘There’s a kitchen downstairs-‘

‘Then why don’t you go and cook something- no? What do you know! Me too.’ Sk’jin trills in an exaggeratedly enthusiastic voice before he drops it to his normal one. ‘Hoseok, can you please buy some food? Something spicy please.’

Shaking his head at the Khol’isa’s antics, he replies in affirmation and heads back out.

Forgoing the route he took to get here, Hoseok walks through the city-square leisurely, looking up at the holographic screens as though interested in the live-match.

‘Wow- this is a shitload of information…‘ Sk’jin says slowly.

Hoseok looks around casually, blending in perfectly with the crowd and without having to see the Being, keys in on their location and overall appearance.

‘This code is a little…‘ Namjoon says and Hoseok grins to himself, somehow proud that other fellow Field-Agents were giving an Information Analyst of Namjoon’s skill some difficulty.

‘You can do it!’ Taeh’yung cheers, followed shortly by Yoongi’s bland and deadpan, ‘I believe in you’ making Sk’jin laugh hysterically in response.

‘All right- I’m in,’ Namjoon says a few minutes later, sounding a little miffed and defensive.

‘You’re so cool!’ Taeh’yung cheers again.

‘Well done,’ Yoongi intones in monotone.

Sk’jin is laughing again and Namjoon hastens to speak if only to move onto another topic as soon as possible.

‘Well- I don’t think we need information regarding Métrico-03’s seven deals with pirates for smuggling in Shirinm’eva,’ Namjoon chuckles.

‘This place is really hard-core,’ Sk’jin comments in amusement before Namjoon whistles low and long.

‘What is it?’ Hoseok asks as he walks out of the city-square, looking about the stalls of food. The Being stalking him isn’t doing a very good job and Hoseok wants to sigh.

‘Well- this is from the government here in Pompa,’ Namjoon confirms slowly. ‘Wow…well, this is…’

‘This is interesting,’ Sk’jin completes, a hint of seriousness laced in his voice.

‘Yoongi- why did you assassinate the parliament from Métrico-05?’ Namjoon asks.

‘Though they were not involved with the Isbahaysiga Alliance, they bought a lot of slaves- singular. For betting in arenas.’ Yoongi replies. ‘They would buy slaves, send them to train, and have them fight. The Isbahaysiga Alliance never set foot in Pompa or the System, but many of her emissaries frequently took part in illegal arenas similar to the Pageant.’

Not strictly guilty for forming a bond with the Alliance, but nonetheless still in the wrong.

‘So you were ordered to assassinate them because they took part in arena gambling?’

‘It was during the time the Alliance were getting out of hand- I believe many buyers were killed to send a message to the Alliance and to tame them.’ Yoongi replies.

Hoseok pauses to buy some juicy roasted meat from a stall and thinks that it was a pretty good idea. If you removed the buyers, then business would go down- so of course the Alliance would have to comply.

‘Were these orders from the Venture Unit?’ Sk’jin asks. ‘Do you know?’

‘We were never told who gave us our mission- all our mission were distributed from database. Unless a…senior GI officer personally employed you.’ Yoongi explains.

‘Senior GI officer?’ Sk’jin repeats.

‘I don’t know what they were called. But they were from different organizations- sometimes none at all.’ Yoongi replies.

‘Turns out Pompa has quite the history with arena-fights,’ Namjoon continues speaking as though he hadn’t heard the other’s conversation. ‘Culturally speaking, they’ve always hosted large tournaments like these. And there used to be two species living in Pompa- the Pompen are one, the other were called Pompain- but the latter were smaller in population, populating the continents in the poles.’

‘This already sounds like a great bedtime story,’ Sk’jin snorts.

‘Yeah- something about believing they’re a superior race, the Pompen overruled the Pompain and had them fight in their arenas for centuries- their belief was that the sky indicated their species superiority over the Pompain.’

‘Please tell me it wasn’t based on something stupid like skin-tone,’ Sk’jin sighs exasperatedly.

‘No- based on hair colour,’ Namjoon replies. ‘Red hair is considered superior because that colour doesn’t exist in the sky; the Pompain had either silver or azure hair.’

‘That’s even more stupid than I initially thought; I’m sorry I asked,’ and Hoseok can hear Sk’jin scowling.
Hoseok glances around and finds that yes, nearly every Pompen had ruddy hair. There were a few exceptions but those were other Beings from other planets. Nearly every native of Pompa were red-headed.

‘So I’m guessing after they banded with the GLA that particular sport was banned?’

‘Yeah- banned and made illegal but still practiced in secret sometimes. And then later they left the planet to attend other arenas, and after a few centuries here we are.’ Namjoon sighs.

‘So that’s what this is then?’ Hoseok asks, scanning the food stalls carefully.

‘It’s been around for a while. They’re called the Gremio-’ Namjoon stops.

‘And?’ Sk’jin sounds a little irritable as Namjoon doesn’t follow up. Namjoon still doesn’t say anything and Hoseok hears Sk’jin sigh. He hears the Khol’isa huff, sounding like he was moving about. Probably headed to wherever Namjoon was, to look at whatever it was that had Namjoon silent.

There’s a roaring cheer from behind him and Hoseok glances back. He catches a clear look of the Being stalking him- a Pompen. And he doesn’t look away from Hoseok; again with the cool casual ease. Like he didn’t care that Hoseok had caught him in the act of stalking him.

‘It’s an auction-house,’ Sk’jin says sharply. ‘The Pompen government and the Pageant have banded together to create an auction house. Fucking Spaces.’

The Khol’isa mumbles under his breath indistinctly, as though reading from something before he speaks clearly again.

‘The Gremio Auction House is created as a result of the Pageant and its host planet. It’s what they call their partnership. Fuck-‘ Sk’jin pauses before he continues, his voice hard and his tone harsh. ‘They put up items for auction, and if you can’t afford to buy it back, you have fight for it in the auction-arena. Spaces, this is…’

‘So there are other bidders- probably placed there to create impossibly high bids, forcing their victims to fight,’ Hoseok gathers.

‘They run the Pageant and in the meanwhile create these fight pits- they’re more brutal, a lot more violent- regular Beings, simple traders and merchants fighting against the bidder’s choices, and with no rules whatsoever- this is all catered to the rich-upper-class society of Pompa. Fucking Spaces, is this what’s been happening while I was gone?’

‘But I thought that the Pageant was already illegal to start off with, and didn’t have rules or regulations regarding their fights.’ Taeh’yung chimes in, sounding unsure.

‘That’s true but this brings in more money- anyone can join,- and the target audience is somewhat…’ Sk’jin sounds even more uncomfortable.

‘Is it made controllable by the audience?’ Yoongi asks.

‘Yes.’

Hoseok grimaces. He’s not surprised to hear about it; he’s just disappointed. Because the Pageant fell under the care of the Liaisons and Parley Division in the Venture Unit. Which had been led for over 120 sols by S’ava Hhlai, the very Being who was now leading Hoseok’s former Division. Any and all decisions regarding the extent of how much the Venture Unit would ignore and allow these events to continue on was controlled directly by the Division Leader and his associates.

So that meant that he definitely knew about the fighting pits. And that he had either decided to ignore it, or in return, gain more profit from it.

‘They’re all one large network,’ Namjoon explains with a tired sigh, speaking for the first time. ‘They’ve been doing their utmost to gain profit, and the Pageant found a great target-market to leech off of here in Pompa.’

‘So why are they stealing from other ships?’ Taeh’yung asks sounding confused.

‘I think it’s to make sure no one talks about this outside of the Pageant grounds,’ Namjoon ruminates before sighing again. Namjoon sounded like an extremely aged Being burdened with the Universe’s problems.

‘Wait- does this mean we’ll have to out-bid other Beings who might try to buy our OrTank?’ Sk’jin asks sharply. ‘Fuck- is this public? Are you fucking kidding me-?!’

Hoseok would have felt more comfortable at the idea of bidding in this auction if their own stolen property wasn’t so eye-catching. If it had been something as simple as an engine-part or in some unfortunate ship’s case, their entire left wing, it would have been easier to buy back their property. But this was the OrTank and that was definitely going to attract the attention of potential bidders. This was obviously a great way to make money, so Hoseok knows they’re not going to be the only ones there, bidding for their item.

‘How much money did you get Pa?’ Taeh’yung asks out of nowhere.

Pa?

There’s stunned silence over the Comm and Hoseok can actually feel Namjoon’s confusion over the line.

‘Uh…I’m getting there?’ Namjoon replies tentatively. ‘I’ve gotten 125,000 units?’

‘That’s great! You’re so cool Pa!’

There’s a suspicious coughing sound from Sk’jin’s end of the line.

‘Where is this from?’ Hoseok asks as he stops in front of a drink-stand, looking over the neon colours of the iced drinks and wondering if any of them were potentially poisonous or hazardous to his system.

‘…sources.’

Good enough, Hoseok thinks to himself.

‘I’m being tailed.’ He adds casually, pointing at the violently purple drink on display and raising two fingers.

‘You have a tail?’ Sk’jin sounds alarmed.

‘It’s been an hour or so,’ Hoseok replies calmly as he hands over some units, nodding his thanks to the distracted vendor. ‘Not really hiding it though.’

‘I think it’s safe to say we’re being watched as well,’ Namjoon says a little later before adding, ‘But aren’t you changed?’
'I am- but I think he’s been following me from the start- they have pretty interesting gadgets with them- it’s possible they’ve marked me,’ Hoseok sips on the drink and finds that it’s pleasantly sweet with a hint of sour. It’s extremely refreshing.

‘Shouldn’t we head over to Métrico-09 now?’ Sk’jin asks. ‘I’ll feel better knowing our ship is close by in case we need to gtfo.’

‘What does gtfo mean?’ Yoongi asks.

‘Get the fuck out,’ Sk’jin replies.

‘Hoseok- you want us to pick you up or you’ll head there yourself?’ Namjoon asks.

‘I’ll go over myself,’ Hoseok replies, looking over and catching sight of his tracker some distance away. ‘Need to see how good these trackers are.’

He throws the other drink over at Pompen tracker who catches it, eyes widening in shock. Hoseok gives him a nod and walks over to the parking lot.

‘Don’t forget food.’ Sk’jin reminds him as Namjoon barks out: ‘Priorities!’

*

Hoseok doesn’t know if he wants to roll his eyes or laugh or join in on the loud and amused game of catch Taeh’yung has started around the massive gardens of the Pangpar District. Street 00-417 was bustling with all sorts of Beings, all displaying their anxiety and stress in different ways. And Taeh’yung was there, dead-center of it all, playing catch. Using a real life Being as the object being tossed around. Though the Being tossed seemed to be having the time of her life, high-pitched giggles filling the air as more of her very minute species are tossed into the air as well. It’s already nightfall, the street lit up with powerful lights hovering above them like miniature suns.

The gardens here were ridiculous- in every sense of the word. If flowers could be flamboyant then that’s exactly what they all were here. But it wasn’t the flowers that were putting Hoseok off- rather the topiary trees situated all over the area. Shaped like nearly everything you could think of, the trees, which were dyed (!?!?!!) in different colours all stood at least 4 meters in height, making Hoseok’s eyes hurt at the sheer saturation of their colours in this bright lighting. He parked his Hover-7 behind one of the topiary trees which was coincidently shaped like a Hover-7 and hoped no one would steal it.

‘This has been going on for 32 minutes.’

Hoseok nearly jumps out of his skin at Yoongi’s voice.

‘Spaces-! Wait,’ Hoseok frowns down at the Human who appeared out of nowhere. ‘How did you know it was me.’

‘I know what you look like,’ Yoongi replies as though it’s the most obvious thing. Before Hoseok can reply there’s a shrill cry of ‘HOBi!’ and his arms are full of Taeh’yung who abandons his game of catch and throws himself at Hoseok. Hoseok is grateful for his reflexes as he catches the Zhak’gri who happens to be taller than himself and sets him down as quickly as possible though Taeh’yung still manages to wrap both arms and a leg around him. His face is inches from Hoseok’s, eyes wide as he takes in his appearance.

‘Handsome- but I like the real Hobi!’ he declares as he unwinds himself from Hoseok, reaching up to feel his hair and saying, ‘Will I look good with this hair colour?’

‘Honey you’ll look great in every hair colour,’ Sk’jin tells him.

Taeh’yung cheers, looking down at Yoongi expectantly before the Human nods as though in agreement not before sending Hoseok a look of amusement. Or at least, what Hoseok guesses is amusement. Hoseok grins back nonetheless.

‘How is he?’ Hoseok asks, nodding towards the mansion that was more decoration than actual house. There were fountains on the rooftop- the fucking rooftops.

‘He’s all right- nothing fishy happening,’ Taeh’yung says before glancing down and asking, ‘Is that for me?’, pointing at the food Hoseok had brought.

‘It’s mine too,’ Sk’jin butts in, his voice sharp with warning.

‘But you’re not here! So it’s mine!’ Taeh’yung eagerly reaches for the bag of food, eyes twinkling.

‘We need someone to remain back in the ship- I volunteer,’ Namjoon says over Sk’jin’s warnings at the Zhak’gri. ‘In case we need to “gtfo”.’

‘We need security inside the ship as well- can’t risk getting robbed twice over,’ Hoseok replies.

‘Tae- why don’t you stay with your Pa on the ship?’ Sk’jin proposes, glee palpable in his tone of voice.

‘Please don’t call me that-‘

‘I’ll go to Pa,’ Taeh’yung volunteers.

‘Why are you calling him that?’ Hoseok asks curiously.

‘Uh- he’s total daddy material?’ Taeh’yung waves his spork that came with the food about as though it was the most obvious thing in the Universe.

‘Taeh’yung-!’

Sk’jin’s hysterical high-pitched laughter cackles the line, making Yoongi close his eyes as though pained.

‘But I think you’d make a great dad? I mean, 2 agrees too?’ Taeh’yung says over a mouthful of meat, offering one to Yoongi who stares at it for a second too long before taking a bite.

‘Uh that’s- um nice Taeh’yung-‘

‘Namjoon! Are you insinuating that Taeh’yung makes you uncomfortable?’

Taeh’yung looks so genuinely sad and put-out that Hoseok immediately feels the need to somehow placate the Zhak’gri but oddly enough, instead Yoongi reaches up and pats Taeh’yung once on the head, rather stiffly, and the latter grins brightly in return, offering him another piece of meat.

Namjoon is spluttering, ‘What-?! No! Spaces, it’s just- well-‘
‘I won’t call you Pa then,’ Taeh’yung says, sounding sheepish.

‘No- no it’s fine- you can call me- I just- I don’t mind being called Pa-’ Namjoon says.

‘Oh- that’s a pretty good way of confessing your kink-’

‘Sk’jin-!’

‘Pa, it’s okay if you like it that way too!’ Taeh’yung says over another mouthful of meat. ‘To each their own!’

Hoseok doesn’t know if he’ll be able to look the Kutsoglerin in the eye after this without remembering this gem of a conversation.

‘We- we’re landing in 10 minutes- Taeh’yung-’

‘Yes daddy?’

Hoseok momentarily wonders if Taeh’yung was actually unaware of the situation but the Zhak’gri gives him a roguish grin and Hoseok does his best to reign in his snort.

‘Just-…wait, are you all doing this on purpose- you are aren’t you- fucking Spaces you’re all assholes-’

Sk’jin’s laughter is infectious and Taeh’yung and Hoseok laugh out loud while Namjoon fumes.

‘Is it a good idea to have Taeh’yung stay in the ship?’ Hoseok asks. ‘He’s the only one who can sense our friend in the OrTank-’

‘It’s the ship we need to worry about as well,’ Namjoon cuts in. ‘If we don’t have a means to escape, then there’s no point for any of us trying to protect the OrTank- Taeh’yung is the best singular option to remain and watch the ship- you and Yoongi are more than enough to deal with any situation that might arise inside the auction.’

‘I’m not too bad myself you know?’ Sk’jin comments.

‘Uh huh sure.’

‘I could literally take you down right now you exoskeleton-’

Suddenly, a tinkling music sounds throughout the air from the mansion they were congregating outside of.

A clear female voice starts announcing something in Pompen before switching to GLA Standard.

‘Welcome, esteemed bidders and guests to the Gremio Auction. We thank you for partaking in our humble event. Our doors will open in 10 minutes. Please gather yourselves and make a neat line at the main path. Please comply to our rules and hand in any weapon you might be carrying! You will receive your items after the Auction is over! We guarantee the safety of your items!’

Hoseok hears both Namjoon and Sk’jin snort at that.

‘Please do not push and please be patient! Everyone will be submitted into the auctions!’

Everyone looks around shiftily, eyeing each other in confusion and hesitation as well. Then a bunch of Pompen who were gathered closer to the mansion begin to line up, looking excited and talking amongst each other. Not only were the Beings who were robbed gathered outside, but spectators, bidders, and other sorts of Beings were also gathered.

‘You guys line up- I’ll join you soon. Taeh’yung?’ Sk’jin says. Hoseok checks his screen and finds that their ship just landed outside of the District border, close to the Spardyti.

‘I’m coming,’ Taeh’yung sing-songs.

‘Don’t get distracted- go straight back to the ship all right?’ Hoseok calls after the Zhak’gri who skips away, waving goodbye at the Beings he had befriended. The Zhak’gri turns mid-skip and gives him two thumbs-up before disappearing into the crowd.

Hoseok and Yoongi shuffle over to the long line, keeping an eye over everyone gathered there.

‘Some agents here,’ Yoongi says quietly. ‘Observers.’

Hoseok sighs out, scanning the crowd. Many of the Beings there who were in similar disposition like themselves all had a wide-eyed anxious look to them. But the others, all excessively dressed upper-class Pompen, were all excited and gleeful, talking about what they could possibly buy. It makes Hoseok sick to his stomach.

‘Sk’jin.’

Hoseok looks around in the direction Yoongi was looking at and finds the Khol’isa walking with elegant leisure towards them. He’s changed his robes to very elegant and rich looking ones in silky blood red and a contrasting soft pastel-blue with flowering gold designs over the hems of his sleeves and on his collar. His hair is artfully styled, gleaming a darker shade of his normally silvery pink to a more dusty-rose. He has a silver and gold circlet around his head, giving him a regal appearance that makes everyone stare at him as he passes them.

‘Hello,’ he smiles down at them when he’s close enough. ‘Where is my food?’

Hoseok hands him over the container he’d managed to save from Taeh’yung and the Khol’isa proceeds to eat the juicy meat with uncanny finesse and neatness. It was as though they had an unspoken agreement, not to talk once they stood in line- this seemed to be the sentiment shared by the others like them and entire sections of the line were in complete silence, fidgeting with anxiety and nerves.

‘Hi daddy!’

Sk’jin promptly coughs out his food, his circlet shifting on his head and nearly falling over his eyes as he half-chokes, half-cackles. Yoongi, with a hint of judgment on his face, helps Sk’jin clean up.

The lines move rapidly and they were now close enough to spot a large scanner situated outside the door and some burly Beings carrying baskets in which weapons and anything considered inappropriate for the auction were being placed. Hoseok catches sight of a male Pompen with long auburn hair, animatedly talking to the Beings who stepped up the patio stairs, a large screen in his hands. Looking around, Hoseok catches sight of his tracker and nods at him before they make their way forward.

‘Welcome to the Gremio Auction! On behalf of the Auction, here is a care package!’ the Pompen chirps when they step up the mansion patio, handing them silky bags. ‘What is your house name?’

Hoseok frowns a little, glancing over at Sk’jin and Yoongi. They had not thought about naming themselves- that was a little foolish after all. Yoongi is simply caught up in going through the bag, a blank expression on his face so Hoseok knows there’s no help from the Human.

‘We’re uh-’ Hoseok tries but Sk’jin smiles pleasantly and says, ‘House of Falling Vitka’v Petals.’

‘Are you fucking kidding me, Spaces what the actual fuck-’

‘All right! You’re all registered!’ the clerk trills. ‘Please make your way inside into the arena and take a seat! The auctions will start in 20 minutes!’

‘Thank you,’ Sk’jin smiles again, causing the clerk to give Sk’jin an even brighter smile than Hoseok thought was possible.

‘House of Falling Vitka’v Petals- really?’ Hoseok inquires, glancing at the tall Khol’isa who was clearly suppressing a wicked grin.

‘Yes- very poetic isn’t it?’ he replies lightly. ‘Do you like it Yoongi?’

‘No.’ Yoongi replies, pulling on a freakishly bright hat over his head that read ‘Camera! Set! Auction!’ in even flashier writing. Hoseok checks his own “care package” and finds a similar hat with a bottle of water.

‘What about you Taeh’yung?’

‘You have dead cells coming out of your mouth.’

There’s a moment of stunned silence and then Sk’jin breaks out into hysterical laughter, clapping Hoseok on his back painfully.

‘That’s the first time in my life that I’ve heard that!’ he exclaims, wiping at his eyes.

‘What does that even mean?’ Hoseok snorts.

‘It sounded cool? I wanted a poetic comeback!’

‘And “dead cells” is poetic?’ Namjoon scoffs.

‘It’s innovative.’

‘Okay- sure.’

‘It is, daddy.’

‘fucking hell-‘

The interior of the house is as grand as the exterior. Opulent marble walls lined with gold trimmings and excessively decorated chandeliers hang off of the ceilings. They enter the main lobby that is lit up with at least 8 different crystal chandeliers of varying opulence and excess. Two winding staircases overlook a central doorway that’s flung open, revealing a wide staircase leading downwards to what appeared to be a large tunnel made of blocks of marble and chunks of rock. There are chains and cuffs hanging from the side as well and Hoseok can’t help but wrinkle his nose at the sight.

‘Ooh, kinky,’ Sk’jin comments. Hoseok has a feeling that if Namjoon were here he’d facepalm.

A few other Beings were making their way down skeptically, eyeing the chains with obvious horror, and Hoseok is sure they’re other crew members from different ships, all robbed in the past 24 hours. The Pompens simply walk past, not batting a single eye.

They make their way down, Sk’jin leading while Hoseok and Yoongi walked behind him, eyes peeled. Hoseok notices the excessive amount of cameras and grimaces. The tunnel is long and straight, with no other doorway save for the ones at the end. There are more Beings here, some standing to have a chat, while others were frantically typing on their screens, and others keeping panic attacks at bay.

‘I have a contestant here!’ a voice shouts. ‘This is madness! I am here with the Alliance-‘

Hoseok frowns at that, looking over the shouting indignant Being quickly as they walk past him and a few other Beings trying to placate him.

‘They really don’t discriminate in their victims do they?’ Sk’jin snorts. ‘I guess it’s good for some of them- one good turn deserves another after all.’

They finally make their way to the main arena and true to Yoongi’s observation and scanning, the entire area underneath the mansion above was much much larger. Nearly spanning twice the length of the gardens above, the arena shaped and designed like an amphitheater is domed with a single guard-tower hanging above with powerful headlights directly downwards into the lowest tier of the amphitheater. The lowest tier spanned out to a slightly concave floor and on opposite ends of the slightly oval tier were two massive gateways. Frequent and slender pillars hold up the ceiling at intervals, and a few of the more agile long-limbed, tailed, and webbed Beings have situated themselves on the pillars already. There are at least 50 rings in the arena and it was already more than halfway full of Beings, gathered there for the Gremio Auction.

Sk’jin whistles lowly.

‘Wow- guess a lot of us are gonna lose our shit eh?’

No one replies to that. Sk’jin guides them over to one of the middle-rings, taking a seat next to one of the pillars.

‘How much have you gathered Cap?’ Sk’jin asks after a while.

‘170,000 units.’ Namjoon replies tersely.

Hoseok knows it’s not enough. That’s already a ridiculous amount of units but he knows it won’t be enough. Not for a real life living Being like the one they had in the OrTank.

‘I can really go and rob a bank right now,’ Taeh’yung offers perhaps too eagerly.

‘No- the banks are all closed and emptied out.’ Yoongi supplies unexpectedly, as though he had been considering that idea too.

By the time the entire arena is packed with Beings, some even standing by the aisles as there were no seats, the two gateways at the bottom tier open up. A petite female Pompen appears and judging by the cheers she gets from the natives of the planet, she must be famous. She was slender and petite, like the rest of her species, and her skin was a neutral creamy sandy colour. Her eyes were larger than normal and Hoseok wonders if that’s a regional thing or some form of cosmetic surgery made to enhance her eyes. Her long red braids swing around in strangely timed waves, as though controlled by a separate force, not following her line of motion. She’s wearing bright yellow clothes, as though to stand out even more than she was. She stands behind a slender metallic podium and poses as though she were in some photo-shoot.
This was starting to feel a lot like the matches Hoseok caught sight of on the holographic screens earlier that day. A large arena, a presenter, and a huge excited crowd. Except this felt a whole lot more dangerous. Hoseok hasn’t forgotten the fact that these Beings inside the arena were the very ones who would be controlling the arena matches as well. He prays to every single deity he’s heard of, praying that they can afford to buy back the OrTank.

‘Hello Gremio Auction!’ she trills. The bidders and native-watchers simply cheer in response. The others, like Hoseok, Sk’jin, and Yoongi, keep quiet, watching and listening carefully.

‘Welcome to this lovely event tonight! Are you all ready to spend your units?’ she points the microphone in her hand towards the arena to deafening screams.

‘All right! Let me first lay down the rules for first time comers!’ she twirls around.

‘As you all know- no weapons allowed, no fighting, and no cheating!’ she winks, twirling again. ‘We have our own security here and they will not hesitate to stop any disturbances that might arise! You have been warned! We will not take any responsibility!’

She twirls once more before continuing: ‘And now for the auction rules! In order to gain back your item- you will either need to bid in underverse units against other bidders and buyers; or win a series of rogue-rounds in our special arenas! If you cannot afford the bidding cost- you are always welcome to the rogue-rounds! Each guild will contribute a fighter in order to gain back their item, no units required!’ the auctioneer announces too cheerily, wide smile in place and teeth gleaming. ‘Are there any volunteers?’

The entire arena is deadly silent. Everyone seems to have done their research, judging by the apprehensive and sweaty faces of the ship-crews gathered there. Some were deathly pale, balking at this information. The rest of the audience watch with perhaps too much glee.

‘Right then! Let’s start off our auction!’ she trills brightly and taps the podium once with a silver hammer.

A bunch of burly Beings step forward from the lower doorways, carrying a bunch of items amongst them. Hoseok does a quick scan and doesn’t find their OrTank there. He breathes a sigh of relief for a moment before he focuses his attention forward again.

It’s a horrible thing to witness. Because the auction doesn’t just involve the ships that were robbed, but also other Beings who were excessively rich and had nothing better to do than toss about their units, raising the bar of the item in question to ridiculous heights. The ships that were robbed of their items are forced to pay extravagant amounts of money and when they manage to beat the other offers, are trumped by some random rich asshole who doubles the price offered. Hoseok watches as many crews scream hysterically, launching themselves into physical fights but are instantly restrained by unnervingly effective guards who knock them out with well-aimed TeorSer fire shot from the guard’s dome above.

‘239,000 units.’

Some are forced to think about fighting, looking increasingly agitated, while others simply give up, watching with hollow eyes as important ship parts, obvious relics or memorabilia, or even sometimes actual Beings, and Androids are taken away to be used by the Gremio as they saw fit. Hoseok knows for a fact that many of the items would simply be discarded or “recycled” as waste while the unfortunate living Beings were sold off into slavery or worse.

Namjoon updates them frequently on the amount he’s managed to get while Taeh’yung offers the occasional commentary from the live-shows above-ground.

Hoseok gnaws at his lower lip, willing himself not to give in into anxiety. As the auction goes on, more and more bidders come in and it gets even more difficult for the ships to pay the cost of their items. A total of 11 ships already lost their items while 2 chose to fight. Only 3 ships were able to buy back their items and Hoseok is glad for them. As time went on, the bidding prices went higher and higher.

‘271,000 units.’

Almost an hour later, their OrTank is carried forward and to Hoseok’s immense disquiet, the entire arena seems to quiet down a bit as all heads turn to stare at it. Hoseok feels Yoongi tense next to him and Sk’jin’s foot tapping increases rapidly. He seemed unharmed, the OrTank untouched and undamaged as well. But to Hoseok’s agitation, the Being inside seemed distinctly uncomfortable; a furrow between his eyebrows, his hands clenched into fists. Exposed like this, to a massive crowd, Hoseok feels the weight of what this could do- what this could instigate. Here, in front of this raving and mad crowd, was living proof of the Gaia Case. They were now all balancing on the very edge of exposing everything in the worst way possible.

‘Yoongi.’ He hears Sk’jin says sharply.

Hoseok looks over at the Human, his entire posture screaming distress though his face remained neutral.

‘Calm- we need to stay calm- he’s all right.’

‘He’s just a little stressed Yoongi- he’s all right,’ Taeh’yung says quietly, clearly watching the entire thing through the Iris on Sk’jin’s robes.

A few other items are brought in- including what appeared to be a large pet creature of sorts with brown bushy wiry hair, a very wet snout, and no visible eyes but with its ears pressed back on its head in clear dejection, whining piteously as its owner, a very small Being, squeaks out plaintively from across the arena.

‘We have quite the items here!’ the auctioneer announces brightly, waving one of her arms in a grand gesture. ‘First up! This…thing!’

She gestures to the immense create that just ducks its head even more as jeering laughs ring across the arena.

‘We’re starting up with soon-to-be steak meat-’ the auctioneer points out again, clearly enjoying the howling laughter of the bidders.

‘Oh! That’s a N’nukwu,’ Taeh’yung exclaims. ‘They’re very rare- and very loyal to their masters. They live for ages and ages- he must be a part of the Obere’s family for a long time- they’re like, really strong, but are super docile. Poor baby. He must be so scared.’

Hoseok would feel bad for the Obere and the N’nukwu under different circumstances, but at this moment his attention is drawn to the bidders who were attempting to take a closer look at their OrTank.

‘I think my baby can feel his distress- it’s why he’s stressed,’ Taeh’yung comments.

If the Being inside the OrTank could feel the N’nukwu’s distress, then he could most certainly sense the danger he was in. Hoseok is almost beside himself with anxiety as he waits for their turn.
'Oh Spaces, you really don’t want to mess with the Obere though,’ Sk’jin comments wryly as there’s a literal harmonious shriek of anger that rings sharply through the air.

The Obere were a rather small species of Beings that reminded Hoseok of badly carved wooden figurines. They were strangely endearing to an extent with their burlap-like robes draped across their bodies covering their rough skin. They had 3 eyes, all large and opal like in colour with small rosy noses and lips with pointy ears. They had no hair but instead had craggy twig like horns protruding like aged gnarled roots through their heads in a gradient of ashy wood to rosy peach. They made vicious fighters, having very sharp fingers perfect for stabbing and poking their enemies to death. But most of all their voices were dangerous, causing permanent damage if they screamed loud enough.

As a result of their screaming symphony, a few around them keel but the guards are quick to take action, firing at a few of them and knocking them out as though in warning.

‘100,000 units!’ one of bidders yells.

‘No! I got this! 110,000 units!’

‘We have 110,000 units! Any more offers for this lump of meat?’

‘Listen you fucking asshole-‘ the Obere squeaks out, raising his tiny fist at the auctioneer.

‘And sold to the Guild of R’ce!’ the auctioneer waves her hand.

The Obere bursts out into tears, hiding his face in his small gnarled hands. The rest of the Obere are trying to comfort him, their opal-like eyes wide and gleaming with unshed tears.

Taeh’yung makes a small sad sound and Hoseok feels a twinge of sadness. Nothing good would await the N’nukwu and the Obere probably knew this.

The auction continues and Hoseok knows that their OrTank is being put up the last. It was clearly being coveted the most by other bidders as well, many saving up to bid for it and the few ships gathered there were able to buy their items as a result.

‘Next up!’ the auctioneer walks over to the OrTank, the only item left on stand.

‘What a pretty face! Look at that body! A mysterious Being!’ she trills in a high voice. ‘A lovely gift,- perhaps a muse? Or perhaps, a friend to keep close and personal?’ she winks suggestively.

Hoseok feels a very strong urge to throw something at the auctioneer.

‘Mysterious Being in the OrTank bidding time is open now and we- wow! We already have an offer for 150,000 units!’ the auctioneer announces, throwing about exaggerated exclamations.

‘Don’t put any offers yet-‘ Namjoon says urgently.

‘How much do we have now?’ Sk’jin asks tersely.

‘I just got an additional 10,000 units- we’re at 280,000 units-‘

‘That’s not going to be enough,‘ Sk’jin says, eyes scanning the area as more bidders raise their offer.

‘House of Sh’marr offers 300,000 units!’
Hoseok’s eyes widen, his body growing numb. This was the highest bid to ever be placed since the auction started.

‘Fuck-‘

‘335,000 units-‘

‘House of Falling Vitka’v Petals offers 335,000 units!’ Sk’jin proclaims at once, standing regally, all eyes turning to look at the Khol’isa, his presence intimidating and a strange light wrapping around the Khol’isa. There’s murmuring at once and a few Beings around them look at Sk’jin uncomfortably. Then there’s a swelling silence that immediately follows as the auctioneer looks around for a higher bidder and Hoseok can feel sweat dripping down his back, ears pricked up.

‘And 335,000 units-‘

‘House of Jtāharū offers 500,000 units.’

Hoseok feels the pit of his stomach fall. Looking over he finds a small group of Beings sitting at the very back row of the arena, dressed entirely in white, half of their faces covered in alabaster masks, revealing only their mouths.

Sk’jin grabs at his arm, his eyes narrowing as he studies the group.

‘500,000 units going once!’ the auctioneer seems stunned too, her already big eyes even bigger.

‘We don’t have the money for this!’ Namjoon hisses. ‘I’m trying and I don’t-‘

‘500,000 units going twice!’

‘Then what the fuck do we do-?’

‘500,000 units going thrice and-!’

‘House of Falling Vitka’v Petals would like to win a series of rogue-rounds to regain the Mysterious Being in the OrTank,’ Yoongi states, standing up.

‘Sit the fuck down,’ Sk’jin hisses, pulling Yoongi down again and already putting on a winning smile on his face. But before he can even begin to make excuses, the auctioneer latches onto Yoongi’s words like a leech to flesh and she brings down her hammer thrice in succession and points at them with a flourish.

‘Contenders for the rogue-rounds pledged and accepted by the Gremio!’ she states excitedly. ‘Please bring forth your contestant after the auction-‘

‘I would also like to purchase the N’nukwu for 335,000 units from the Guild of R’ce.’ Yoongi adds.

‘YOONGI WHAT IN SPACES-‘

The Guild of R’ce cheer in enthusiasm, agreeing to Yoongi’s terms.

‘Sold! The OrTank will be kept safely until your guild wins the rogue-rounds; you may retrieve your item now!’ the auctioneer announces as the burly guards take back the items that were either lost or waiting to be won via rogue-rounds.

Yoongi stands up, walking down calmly towards the lowest pit without sparing them a single Hoseok glances over again at the small group, the Guild of Jtāharū and is immediately wary of the fact that they were now all staring at Yoongi. He can’t place their species and he most certainly can’t tell what they’re thinking. They hadn’t spoken up until just now, and that in itself rings all sorts of alarms in Hoseok’s mind. He grabs the front of Sk’jin’s robes, pointing it over to their direction.

‘Namjoon?’

‘Yeah I’m on it- just- just give me a second’ Namjoon replies, sounding harassed.

‘I don’t like them,’ Taeh’yung says suddenly, stopping midway in his dramatic sobbing over Yoongi’s act of “heroism”.

Yoongi walks down to the pit and straight towards the N’nukwu who was hunched over on the dais it was placed on.

Riveted, Hoseok and Sk’jin lean forward, watching as Yoongi raises his hand up to the giant of a creature, allowing it to sniff his hand. He seemed to be speaking but they were too far to hear. After what seemed to be the longest minute of Hoseok’s life, the N’nukwu raises its head up to Yoongi’s hand, wet snout sniffing. Then after a few seconds, a large red tongue pokes out and licks Yoongi’s hand. Sk’jin grabs his arm rather painfully while biting down on his other hand as though to repress any urge to squeal.

Then, with a gentleness Hoseok didn’t know the Human possessed, he pats the creature on the head (much more natural and genuine than with Taeh’yung from earlier) and coaxes it to stand and walk. Standing on its legs, the N’nukwu’s head is almost at Yoongi’s shoulder height. Hoseok glances over at the Obere clan and they’re frozen too- the owner of the N’nukwu was crying, obvious pain and heartache etched across his features. But that soon morphs into shock and disbelief. Because instead of bringing the N’nukwu over to their side of the arena, Yoongi guides the docile and shivering N’nukwu by its leash over to the other side of the arena. Everyone’s attention is riveted at them; the silence so heavy Hoseok is sure you could cut through it. The previously crying Obere is watching Yoongi with shock while his fellow crew-mates watch in equal disbelief.

Yoongi hands over the leash to the Obere the moment he’s close enough and the silence breaks as the Obere squeaks in delight, hugging the N’nukwu- more like mounting over it in sheer joy. The N’nukwu gives out a weird sort of barking sound that breaks the silence even more and there’s some clapping before the entire arena breaks out into tremulous applause.

‘I…’ Sk’jin is gawking at Yoongi who is nearly knocked over as the whole of the Obere crew launch themselves at him, hugging his limbs and torso in thanks.

‘I can’t believe I just witnessed that with my own two eyes,’ Sk’jin says reverently.

‘I can’t believe we just lost 335,000 units for something that wasn’t even ours.’ Namjoon sighs despondently.

Hoseok can’t help the smile that grows on his face, despite everything that has happened, as he watches Yoongi carefully detach himself from the weeping Obere. He glances over to where the House of Jtāharū were sitting and he’s filled with immediate apprehension when he doesn’t see them anymore.

‘What are we going to do?’ Sk’jin asks, looking a little dazed.

‘I guess we’re going to fight the fucking rogue-rounds. Who wants to volunteer because it’s certain not going to be me.’

‘I’ll do it.’ Yoongi says quietly, making his way through the crowd that were cheering him on.

There’s a snort from the Comm-Device, clearly from Namjoon who mumbles something about rhetoric questions.

‘YES! LET’S MAKE YOU REALLY PRETTY YOONGI!!’ Taeh’yung squeals in delight, followed shortly by a comic groan of pain from the Zhak’gri while Namjoon mumbled darkly under his breath.

Sk’jin looks over at him, an amused smile on his face and says, ‘I don’t think this could any worse than it is now.’

---

He can’t do anything but hide.

Hiding hiding hiding hiding hiding hiding

Was that all he was capable of now?

He wants to tell them to run. To hide. He’s screaming on the top of his lungs – if he could he would bleed the warning to them. But he can’t. And instead he has to keep watching every single one of them collapse- their minds sinking into the red gloom that had once plagued him but was not his immediate reality. He watches them slip away and every single time, he feels himself die.

Nothing remained anymore; they didn’t remain anymore.

His hand was still stretched out- as though reaching for him as though he knew that he was watching.

And there was fear in his eyes right before he fell. Fear of not knowing what would happen.

There was also forgiveness. Or was that damnation?
He can’t tell the difference anymore. Not in this reddish emergency-light. Not even when day breaks overhead and sometimes manages to filter through the vines that have crept over the windows. But no matter what lighting was available- that hand was still outstretched towards him. And he always came back to that spot, to look at that hand. Unable to grasp it, unable to help.

Until time went on and the hand was nothing more than an imprint in his mind’s eye and one that haunted him.

And it kept coming back- it kept bringing back the strange forms and outlines, white at first, and then a disturbing red as though it tore them off of some searing nightmarish flesh.

He keeps screaming: STOP STOP STOP STOP STOP STOP

But it doesn’t stop. It probably won’t stop. And he has no escape.

He can’t move from this spot- he can’t escape.

All he can do is watch.

Watch and hide.

---

It does get worse.

At least 10 times worse than before.

5 Hours Ago:

Hoseok finds himself acting like Sk’jin’s guard, his normal face on this time around, following the Khol’isa around the shockingly large underground network. Not a lot of ships had chosen to fight—rather they chose to give up on their item, knowing there was no way that they were going to win.
But the ships that did choose to fight- a total of 9 ships, and their representatives, were now waiting inside an anteroom waiting to register their “fighters”. Some of their “fighters” are with them, large strong burly Beings of different species and different levels of nervousness. It’s an oppressive environment, laced with desperation and anger both. But Sk’jin is surprisingly composed, a smile set on his face as he makes conversation with the Being sitting next to him despite not receiving any reply whatsoever.

‘Ah- it’s your turn now,’ Sk’jin smiles beatifically, causing the Being in front of them to literally stop and stare as though unable to process how and why Sk’jin was so at ease. ‘Good luck!’

‘Is that a good idea?’ Hoseok asks, watching as everyone around them looks at them uncomfortably.

‘Ah, I enjoy spending company with you Hobi,’ Sk’jin says pleasantly. ‘It’s like a breath of fresh air.’

‘Okay…?’

‘Really refreshing,’ Sk’jin adds before saying, ‘I’m just laying out an advantage. A psychological one of course.’

‘Advantage?’

‘Yes- so that the others gathered here will feel disabled by my ease and will automatically think our fighter is ridiculously strong.’ Sk’jin explains.

‘Yoongi is strong though? I’m not worried about them – I’m worried about the bidder’s contestants and what the audience will do during the match.’ Hoseok mutters. Things could go horribly wrong- most Beings who were involved in these sorts of events were sadistic by nature and though Hoseok doesn’t doubt Yoongi’s abilities, it doesn’t stop him from imagining the worst.

‘Psychological play goes a long way,’ Sk’jin smiles.

Hoseok leaves Sk’jin to his “mental games” and back to his screen. Hoseok had tried knowing that there wouldn’t be a concrete answer, on searching for any data related to “House of Jtāharū”. It seemed as though everyone involved in this auction were all there under extensively complex pseudonyms and aliases. Namjoon was having a field-day with all the work he suddenly found himself in. Hoseok still hadn’t caught sight of those Beings after the auction ended, the crowd was too thick and they needed to register Yoongi into the rogue-rounds. Namjoon had found some footage of the rogue-rounds from other Gremio Auctions from the past years and it was not pleasant.

‘Sk’jin?’

‘Yes oh Captain of mine, how can I help you?’ Sk’jin replies with a bright smile, humming under his breath.

‘What are you wearing?’

‘Never in my life did I expect to start off any conversation with you like this- but I guess I’m down for it?’ Sk’jin replies as Hoseok heaves, having choked spectacularly on his own spit.

‘Just- fucking Spaces,-‘

‘What do you want me to wear?’ Sk’jin teases, ignoring Hoseok’s glares. ‘I guess you’re one of those types with really strange kinks—'

‘We need different clothes for Yoongi, fucking Spaces will you stop?!’

Sk’jin laughs uncontrollably for a while before replying, ‘Robes, sweetheart- in red. Why don’t you come here and help me out of it? Or you could watch?’

‘Taeh’yung is coming to get it.’ Namjoon says sharply.

Sk’jin muffles his laughter into his fist, whacking Hoseok on his back repeatedly out of mirth while the other Beings gathered around the room stared on. Contestants were given their own “dressing rooms” to get ready in. They were also ordered to have their entire crew participate in the event. They were asked politely but Hoseok knew at once that it wasn’t a request- rather it was a threat. So Namjoon and Taeh’yung had locked up the ship, grabbed the basic necessities, and had arrived about 30 minutes ago. They were now watching a few matches apparently, and Taeh’yung had a favorite as well.

Similar to the way the Pageant was hosted, contestants were made to look “beautiful” or appeasing to the eye so that they could better sway the crowd to their favour and win them favourable help or simply prevent them from releasing any potential harmful action against them. Sk’jin had loudly lamented that if he had been included in that, everyone would be swayed to his side due to his beauty. It had been awkwardly silent for a few seconds before Namjoon separated them and they left for the dressing-room.

‘House of Falling Vitka’v Petals!’ a voice calls as the previous Being walks out, looking much paler and his hands shake while his crew members behind him were equally disturbed.

Sk’jin and Hoseok stand, walking into the adjoining room. It’s a large airy space with wide windows and a domed ceiling open to the night sky above. The entire room is decorated (rather tastelessly) in crystal statues and gold figurines. The floors are glossy and everything is too reflective to Hoseok’s liking.

A female Pompen sits behind a ridiculously ornate desk and gestures to them to sit. She’s dressed in neon blue, the contrast with her fiery hair makes Hoseok’s eyes hurt.

‘Welcome! Please take a seat and I will begin with our rules and regulations!’ she chirps, looking all too pleased with the whole situation.

Sk’jin takes a seat while Hoseok stands behind him, posture stiff and unrelenting. The Pompen doesn’t press him to sit and instead pours Sk’jin out an iced cup of something tinted green. Sk’jin politely nods in thanks and probably had his overly charming smile on his face.

‘So, before we start, here is a form that you must sign declaring that we, the Gremio Auction, are not accountable for the death of your contestant. And should your contestant die, we will claim the item he/she/it was fighting for. If you win the rogue-rounds, then you and your contestant as well as your item are free to leave at once.’ She relays pleasantly while Sk’jin reads the contract with nonchalant ease.

He takes up the pen offered and scribbles a loopy signature over on the line and hands it back to the Pompen.

‘Perfect, thank you for your cooperation,’ she smiles, tucking the paper into a drawer filled with similar papers.

‘So here are the rules to the rogue-rounds,’ she crosses her hands over the desk. ‘No weapons allowed—no help from crew members, and to never harm the audience.’

‘Is that all?’ Sk’jin asks.

‘Yes,’ she smiles again. ‘Do you have any questions?’

‘Yes—what marks a victory in the rogue-rounds?’

‘Death of your opponent,’ she replies chirpily.

‘Of course!’ Sk’jin chuckles.

‘Any other question?’

‘None at all,’ Sk’jin replies pleasantly.

‘Excellent! I hope you enjoy your stay,’ she says standing up, clearly dismissing them.

Sk’jin stands too and without a second glance, turns away. Hoseok notes that the female Pompen looks a little surprised at Sk’jin’s behavior. Clearly no one else had behaved with such ease or this flippantly.

She calls for the next house as they exit and a few shaky Beings step into the room after Sk’jin and Hoseok. Taeh’yung is waiting for them outside, staring blankly at a point on the floor without blinking.

‘Tae?’

Taeh’yung snaps out of it, grinning as he notices them.

‘I was just making sure my baby was all right,’ Taeh’yung points downwards. ‘He’s down there.’

‘Is he all right?’ Hoseok asks, glancing at the floor too.

‘He’s all right—asleep again. Dreaming.’

‘Well at least one of us is getting sleep,’ Sk’jin laughs. ‘Let’s go dress up Yoongi—’

The Khol’isa stops dead in his tracks, smile slipping off of his face before he quickly pulls Taeh’yung back and Hoseok follows immediately, ducking behind one of the large ornate pillars out in the main hallway of the mansion.

‘What is it?’ Hoseok asks, peering over Sk’jin’s shoulders and his stomach churns.

‘That’s the Tayian from the slaver-ship?’ Namjoon asks sharply, clearly having spotted what was going on through the Iris still attached on Sk’jin’s robes.

After leaving Grezma, they had all reviewed the footage from his and Yoongi’s Iris’s, scanning the faces of those who were there in the lobby of the Central-Bridge in the slaver-ship. The Tayian in question, Van Seulgaan, was from the Department of Trade; a high ranking officer who, they found to their immense disquiet, worked directly under Chief Shn’ow, one of the other Beings that comprised the special-jury.

Whether or not Chief Shn’ow was involved in the Alliance was still all conjecture and theory, but Seulgaan being here so openly opened up a whole new list of possible internal corruption and negotiations between the Alliance and the GLA. Not for the first time, Hoseok feels like he’s learning too much information that was going to lead him somewhere he would regret.

‘Is he here because he tracked us or is this some crazy coincidence?’ Sk’jin hisses in question.

‘He’s lining up to sign up contestants,’ Hoseok says slowly, watching the Tayian making his way through. He didn’t look any worse for wear and Hoseok wonders how he must have escaped the slaver-ship. He’s being guarded by two other Beings, not the slaver-guards from Grezma, but entirely different looking Beings.

‘He’s part of the Alliance- it’s possible that he brings in the occasional contestant to fight- maybe not in the main arenas, but for the fighting-pits,’ Namjoon mumbles quietly.

‘Should I follow him?’ Hoseok asks, tracking the Tayian’s movement carefully.

‘I think we should keep our distance,’ Namjoon replies at once. ‘You’re already being tracked, and I’m sure we’re all under surveillance- we can’t bring ourselves into the spotlight more than we already have.’

‘What if he recognizes Yoongi?’ Sk’jin asks, gnawing at his lower lip.

‘We’ll worry about that when the time comes- it’s possible that his contestant will fight before Yoongi. And he might leave,’ Namjoon theorizes.

Sk’jin looks like he’s inclined to disagree but he doesn’t say anything.

‘Let’s just really change up Yoongi so that he’s unrecognizable.’ Namjoon says, ‘Come on guys, the first match will start in 15 minutes.’

‘Can we watch Pa?’ Taeh’yung asks excitedly as they make their way back to the dressing rooms, making sure to stay hidden the entire time.

‘Actually we should,’ Namjoon replies. ‘We can understand how the arena is conducted.’

Sk’jin hums in agreement distractedly, glancing over at where the Tayian stood, looking disturbed.

‘Jin?’

Sk’jin starts out of his revere before smiling at Taeh’yung, ‘I think we should colour Yoongi’s hair- what do you think?’

Taeh’yung giggles madly at that and the two start discussing what hair colour they should use. Hoseok looks back discreetly and instead catches the eye of his tracker. Even in here, they were being tracked.

‘What about a nice soft blue?’ Sk’jin offers.

At that, Yoongi, who hadn’t spoken since he offered up himself to the rogue-rounds, voices his reply in his usual monotone.

‘No.’
His perspective feels a little skewed. Or maybe it’s because exhaustion finally took a hold of him and he was now somewhat collapsed on the floor at an awkward angle and the mirrors around him were reflecting angles of the ceiling in a way he’s never seen before.

His breath comes out harsh now- as though he didn’t need to breathe before and his body just only realized he needed to breathe.

The sound of his pants echo harshly in the empty room along with the steady dripping sound of water leaking from a nearby faucet. Normally the sound would irritate him- but he’s too far gone to sit up and tighten the tap. But his hand still attempts to reach up, desperately but unknowingly reaching up to quiet the tap.

It’s still red, no matter how many times he washes his hands.

How long had it been?

Seconds minutes hours days weeks months years decades centuries.

Who knew anymore.

Didn’t she once say, that if time could stop, or pause, it would be because the Divinity willed it so- so that they could experience that moment for longer. Time slowed down for love, time slowed down for happiness- pushing and pulling the moment longer so that all could cherish that moment and appreciate it better. But this wasn’t a moment of happiness.

There was no love in what happened here.

They would be here soon. They would find what happened, and then would find him as well.

Would she be there? Would she understand?

But how could she? Because he didn’t understand either.

His vision starts to blur- and maybe he was finally offered the relief of death. Was it possible? Maybe it was for the better?

He hears footsteps, clacking loudly and he can feel their voices before he hears them.

They’re yelling and shouting. His vision blurs so much it’s as though their hands are inflamed and wrought in white flames.

Maybe he could burn in that fire and it might purge him of what he had done.
2 Hours Ago:

Hoseok grimaces as another sweaty body pushes themselves up against his arm. Taeh’yung seemed to be enjoying himself, looking around excitedly as the crowd cheer on the new fighters in the pit. This appeared to be an actual fight between potential contenders- and not Beings forced to fight for their items. That had been horrible to witness, even more so when the bidders and audience threw in their units to have flames thrown at the contestants, or have them horribly handicapped by actually buying the favoured contestant weapons. It was only the beginning and Hoseok knew it would only get worse.

What shocked Hoseok was the fact that there were children watching the rogue-rounds. They were cheering on the fights, their parents lifting them onto their shoulders so that they could a clearer view of everything that was taking place. Sk’jin had looked properly aghast at that while Namjoon didn’t seem perturbed by this at all. Oddly enough, Hoseok finds that their reactions contradicted their personalities so far.

The lowest tier of the amphitheater is splattered in blood and other biological parts. There had been a horrible death 2 fights ago, where one of the contestants had the entirety of their guts spilling out onto the floor, tumbling backwards and leaving a horrible trail of innards.

The doors open again and this time two female Beings enter. The crowd roars even louder than before and Hoseok leans in a little to study the new contestants. They bore a striking resemblance to the Pompen and Hoseok understands the situation perfectly.

‘They- they look incredibly alike,’ Hoseok says slowly, feeling uneasy as he studies their form carefully. Not just as a species, but these two Pompain looked related.

‘That’s because they’re probably related,’ Namjoon says quietly before adding, ‘This is cruel- the Pompain must still exist- but only for sport.’

There’s a quiet sigh from Sk’jin over the Comm-Device.

The crowd is roaring and jeering, and though Hoseok doesn’t understand the language, he’s pretty sure filthy and cruel words were being flung down at the Pompain contestants below. The air is charged with the domineering superiority of a privileged race of species, feeling powerful in light of the result of their cruelty and inflicted oppression. Hoseok feels nauseas.

‘They’ve been reduced to something lower than animals.’ Namjoon watches with hardened eyes.

‘What do you mean Pa?’ Taeh’yeung asks, voice soft and deep, ignoring the arena-master who was yelling out the rules at the Pompain.

‘That’s what happened in Kutsoglera,’ Namjoon says with a short scoffing laugh. ‘They would make the strong young ones fight each other- entertainment and sport for the bored pirates. If they refused, their families were killed off- slowly, painfully. Or worse.’

Hoseok doesn’t want to ask or know what Namjoon means by “worse” but he knows enough to understand. And he also understands why Namjoon seemed so strangely off when they had first discovered the Gremio.

The female Pompain start fighting and it’s brutal. It was obvious that they were trained for this fight. They both fight, impassive and blank- but not the way Yoongi was expressionless. This was different. They looked completely destroyed.

‘It’s a way of asserting dominance- of suppression; to completely destroy any worth, any value, any respect you would have as a living Being- to completely destroy you and to remove any notion or love to live.’ Namjoon doesn’t flinch as the shorter of the two Pompain falls back, landing on her arm wrong and the sound of bone breaking rips through the air.

Taeh’yeung doesn’t say anything but instead wraps his arms around Namjoon, resting his head against the Kutsoglerin’s, briefly nuzzling the side of his face.

‘It’s all right,’ Namjoon smiles at the Zhak’gri. ‘It was in the past- long gone and finished.’

Taeh’yeung keeps his arms around the Kutsoglerin regardless.

Hoseok notices that Namjoon didn’t even looked remotely disturbed at the idea of this whole arena-fight. Sk’jin had looked disgusted and even outraged. Taeh’yeung had looked sad and disappointed, but Namjoon. Namjoon looked like he was used to the entire setup behind the Pageant. The Kutsoglerin looked resigned – as though he expected nothing more from this reality before him.

Hoseok turns his mind back towards Yoongi, and what he would have to face. He had no doubt that Yoongi would sail through these rounds and win them back the OrTank- but at what cost? His stomach burns and Hoseok wants nothing more than to burn this entire establishment to the ground. Namjoon seemed unmoved, his eyes impassive as he watches the Pompain shred each other apart. Taeh’yeung seemed strangely quiet, somber almost, eyes a little vacant as though listening to someone speak, he even nods a few times as he rests his head against Namjoon’s shoulder.

The crowd cheers as one of the Pompain practically throws the other across the pit and the crowd is chanting, bloodlust thick and heavy in the air.

Suddenly, Namjoon starts, cursing under his breath as he stands to a crouch, gesturing quickly at them to start moving.

‘What? What is it?’ Hoseok asks at once as Taeh’yeung jolts, looking about confused.

‘It’s Van,’ Namjoon hisses and Hoseok and Taeh’yeung are quick to crouch up and follow after the Kutsoglerin as well.
‘He’s headed our way-‘ Namjoon curses under his breath, looking around the arena for the closest exit. But there were too many Beings and the lighting too bright to successfully hide and getaway.

‘Did he see you?’ Hoseok asks, wanting to look back but not wanting to risk being recognized or noted. He could always change his face but seeing as his tracker knew his whereabouts even when he changed his face made him rethink his actions. If Van Seulgaan was involved in the Gremio Auction, then whatever technology they were using would be accessible to the Tayian.

‘Yes- but there were too many Beings between us at that moment- it’s possible that he didn’t recognize me-,’ Namjoon relies back as best he could as they push through the throngs of Beings. The chances were slim- the Tayian would, without a doubt, recognize Namjoon and Taeh’yung. They needed to get them out of there at once. Or at least hide them somewhere until Yoongi won the rogue-rounds.

‘Guys get out of there now,’ Sk’jin orders at once. ‘At least Namjoon should- he won’t recognize Hoseok but-‘ ‘Taeh’yung- blow something up,’ Namjoon turns, addressing the Zhak’gri who blinks slowly in reply for a whole 5 seconds before he breaks out into a bright grin.

‘So you want me to create a diversion?’ Taeh’yung looks surprised and too eager.

‘Go bat-shit crazy,’ Namjoon waves his hand dismissively and Hoseok wants to maybe stop this idea but he doesn’t have a better one up his sleeve and Taeh’yung seems to already know what to do. His eyes glow an ominous green and Hoseok instinctively holds his breath.

‘Wait!! Spaces don’t fucking do anything!!’ Sk’jin screams. ‘He’ll know it’s us indefinitely if you use your abilities- he’s seen them before- he’ll recognize it! We still have to stay in the arena you dimwits!’

Taeh’yung pauses, mouth open in a perfect “o” of surprise.

‘Right- right, that was dumb-‘ Namjoon fidgets, looking around a little desperately for another route of escape, clearly racking his mind for another idea.

‘You can create another kind of diversion,’ Sk’jin says exasperatedly and Taeh’yung makes a sound of realization that really, should be very foreboding but at this point, they really couldn’t afford to be recognized by the Tayian. Taeh’yung then snags a random scarf off of some Being’s head, covers his face, and nods once.

‘Okay! Don’t clench your jaw too much!’ Taeh’yung flexes his hands a bit, causing Namjoon and Hoseok to both glance down at his hands in confusion.

‘Don’t clench my jaw-?’ Namjoon repeats, head tilting a little before Taeh’yung lets out a rather convincing gasp of horror and rather violently pushes Namjoon away into the highly excited crowd.

‘How dare you touch me like that-?!’ Taeh’yung demands in mock horror, shoving Namjoon again, who honestly wasn’t even standing that close to the Zhak’gri. Namjoon gives him a slightly wary confused expression before his eyes widen in realization. Taeh’yung then takes it upon himself to wink at Namjoon and without changing a single expression on his face, socks the Kutsoglerin hard. Namjoon, who Hoseok prays was expecting it, flies backwards, a spray of blood issuing from his mouth? Nose? And he falls over in a heavy heap, taking down a bunch of rowdy drunk Beings with him.
‘Take this Being away!’ Taeh’yung continues to cry out, wringing his hands as though caught in traumatic throws of hysteria. Not that anyone would actually notice seeing as everyone was now throwing punches and yelling loudly. Hoseok dives towards Namjoon’s convincingly unconscious body and heaves him up and discovers that the only reason why Namjoon looked so convincingly unconscious was because he was actually unconscious.

Taeh’yung continues to send everyone into hysteric bouts of rage and soon everyone in the arena is fighting.

Hoseok sends Taeh’yung a grim smile before making his way towards one of the exits. Namjoon is incredibly heavy and Hoseok is already working up a sweat. He’s about to ask Taeh’yung for help in lifting the Kutsoglerin but Taeh’yung is gone.

‘Fucking Spaces, Taeh’yung where are you-!’

Hoseok narrowly dodges an angry drunk Pompen’s fist but unfortunately drops Namjoon on the floor. In his attempt to pick up the Kutsoglerin again, Hoseok is too slow to dodge the random fist thrown his direction and his jaw rattles in his head- more from shock rather than pain.

Quickly shoving off the Being who attacked him, Hoseok grits his teeth and picks up Namjoon and quickly makes his way out, avoiding the raucous crowd as best he could.

‘Hoseok?’

‘What?’ Hoseok barks, dodging another punch but getting shoved into the wall and falling heavily on his side in a way that he knows probably wasn’t good for his ribs. He grimaces at the pain but continues forward. Unfortunately some random idiot really wanted to pick a fight with him so steadying Namjoon on the wall and hoping he would stick there, Hoseok makes quick work of the angry Pompen, his fist meeting the Pompen’s jaw with a sharp and resounding thwack sending him flying back. He returns to Namjoon who was slowly slipping down. This was all fine- peachy.

‘I was just thinking- we need more information.’

‘You think?’ Hoseok pants as he finally gets out into the main hallway where it’s thankfully less crowded.

‘Yes,’ Sk’jin sniggers. ‘Everything all right?’

‘Fucking peachy,’ Hoseok blows hair out of his face, adjusting Namjoon to his side properly.

‘Great! So I think you should kidnap your stalker and get information off of him- he works for the Auction, he should know why Van is here and how he’s connected. Someone of his status- he must be well known,’ Sk’jin suggests.

‘Oh yea- don’t worry about that,’ Hoseok pants, dragging Namjoon’s dead weight over the entrance lobby that was bustling with eager looking Beings, trying to catch a glimpse of the fight inside. He looks over and yes, his tracker was following him, albeit with some difficulty. Seemed like he got caught in some of the fight as well. Hoseok manages to finally get himself and Namjoon out into the patio outside.

Sighing, Hoseok wonders, really, if it was too late for him to call this entire thing quits.
I’ve been listening to the soundtrack for Planet Earth II and it’s the best. Honestly. Please listen just for ambiance or for when you’re studying it’s literally so motivating yet calming yet enthralling yet soothing I love it.

ALSO HAPPY BIRTHDAY PARK JIMIN SUNSHINE MOCHI BOY

I wanted to be on time to update this fic for his birthday but...yeah, so coughs please take this long ass chapter instead.

Also, the idea behind the pageant is inspired by this event that takes place in Texas. It’s something that’s horrendous and honestly appalling. It’s an annual rattlesnake killing FESTIVAL- a fucking festival where they capture and round up nearly thousands of rattlesnake and make sport of killing them in brutal and torturous ways. What’s even more messed up is that they bring children to this festival and have them partake in killing the snakes, even making them paint with rattlesnake blood. I’m not the biggest fan of snakes, like I’m not gonna approach one to pet one, but that doesn’t mean I’m going to go into the wild, purposefully hunt these creatures, and torture them for entertainment. Rattlesnakes are creatures that congregate in families-they’re sensitive to their family, like they LIVE in families, mothers fathers children-all one nest. They’re also very easily agitated and nervous which is why they rattle their tails- to display their nervousness. It’s not a sign of aggression. So in the festival they take the rattlesnake families and torture them in front of the other snakes- it’s disgusting and it should stop. This is the article about the festival and WARNING the pictures are really graphic so if you’re effected by that, don’t look. Especially if you’re triggered by the sight of snakes.
but if you want to sign petition to stop this festival- which I am imploring all of you to do so, please sign up here!
https://www.rattlesnakeroundups.com/#1
“Breakeven” [noun]: the point at which cost and income are equal and there is neither profit nor loss.

Chapter Notes

See the end of the chapter for notes

The curvature of the Earth is pale blue only for a fraction of a second before it turns bright gold. He feels himself jolt in his seat, gravity returning to the ship. If he concentrated enough, he would be able to see the Settlement Arc from here. But he doesn’t.

It was difficult saying goodbye. Knowing that it would be a long while before he returned. How much would it change. How much would still remain the way he remembered?

Would he still be able to get his favorite coffee from the small café across the school compound?

Would he still be able to run up the stairs of their house, knowing, out of sheer habit and reinforced behavior, to skip the 6th step because no matter how many times they fixed it, creaked ominously every time you stepped it.

Would the lily ponds around the Arc Square still look fake, and would he always go and pinch their leaves just to make sure they were real?

Would the air outside his favorite spot to relax and smoke on the wind-turbines still smell a lot like cat-piss, laundry detergent, and engine fuel?

Would she still scold him for smoking? Would she still remain the same?

Would their mother still remember him? Or would she forget him too, lost in her sorrow and pain.

He looks away from the view to his right, and instead to his left.

He was already flat out asleep, mouth slightly open, snoring lightly. He wants to roll his eyes and maybe put a small piece of candy or something inside his mouth so that he would sort of choke. Not in the sense of wanting to kill him or cause him harm- of course not. Just for the sake of revenge because that’s what he did to him once.
Needless to say now would be the perfect time for revenge. But he doesn’t.

Instead he rearranges his neck so that he won’t get cramps.

He looks back out again and his breath gets caught in his throat. To his horror, he finds himself choked up- eyes starting to burn. Unsure why, he feels as though this was going to be the last time he would see this view again.

He knows he’s being irrational- that his emotions are getting the best of him. But at the same time he allows himself this small moment and repeats his sister’s words in his mind, taking the warmth of her voice, the joy in her eyes, and the beauty of the sorrow of the moment into his memory. To remember it forever.

‘You’ll see it again.’ He says from the left quietly, as though he’d been awake the entire time. ‘You’ll come back before you know it.’

He doesn’t reply, just nods once.

Would he still be able to count the flowers in their garden?

*\n
It takes a lot to knock Namjoon out.

His head was rock hard seeing as his skull was nearly entirely bionic plates fused together and galvanized with a carbon-based “softening” gel that absorbed any shock his brain (which was still entirely very original and untouched) might suffer from.

But apparently, despite his thin and lanky appearance, Taeh’yung was fucking strong and when Namjoon wakes up, feels like his teeth are loose, a strange throbbing sensation that wouldn’t constitute as pain (because he knew, quite intimately, every and all sorts of pain) but a weirdly uncomfortable presence on the side of his face. As he regains awareness, Namjoon finds that he’s been seated, a little carelessly if he’s being honest, on the floor, slumped against a very familiar Hangar wall.

He hears voices- one familiar and the other foreign. He realizes his hearing has gone a little shot and fucking Spaces what were Taeh’yung’s bones made of?

Taking a deep breath (not that it was strictly compulsory) and closing his eyes, Namjoon counts to 10. There’s a weirdly congealed feeling that is stuck somewhere in his nasal passage- had something ruptured? Maybe one of the smaller capillaries? Fuck, Taeh’yung was strong.

Footsteps approach him as he reaches 7, but Namjoon doesn’t worry. He knows the quiet light gait, the steady and balanced footfall, with no preference over weight distribution.

Sk’jin always favoured leaning his weight on his right leg, his footfall a little uneven. Namjoon doesn’t even hear Yoongi approaching so he can’t really analyze the Human’s walking style. Taeh'yung was a whirlwind of noise and sound, announcing his arrival before he was even in the general vicinity.

Hoseok is eyeing him carefully when Namjoon looks up.

‘You all right?’

Namjoon rolls his shoulders as though experimenting, flexing his fingers and pulling up his legs from where they were splayed on the floor, clearly having been dumped there. Most likely by the Ngfy’widan before him.

‘I’m good,’ Namjoon replies truthfully as he gets up. There’s no displacement or discomfort so Namjoon knows he’s not broken or unhinged anything. He looks around before asking, ‘How long was I out?’

‘Almost an hour,’ Hoseok replies, leaning back on the newly repaired Hangar Bay door. It’s a different colour and sections of it scarred from where Sk’jin hastily reconstructed the damage inflicted on the main frame. But Namjoon isn’t complaining- the ship was ready for take-off at any time and that was all that mattered. They had restocked, refueled, and made sure that every single aspect of the ship was running smooth. All of the parts they had ordered had been delivered- they were ready to go and Namjoon’s next priority (after making sure no one died or worse get caught) was to get them the fuck out of there as soon as possible.

‘What’s happened since then?’ Namjoon asks, wondering why Hoseok hadn’t made to move at all. Instead looking as though he had something to tell Namjoon.

‘Pa? You’re awake?’

Namjoon’s reaction to his sudden new “title” was involuntary and uncontrollable. He practically recoils, not that he was averse to the new nickname or term of endearment or whatever reason Taeh’yung had in mind. It wasn’t a negative sensation either. But something else entirely he didn’t exactly know how to explain.

Definitely not a kink though. Unlike how Sk’jin framed it.

‘Yes- I’m here.’ Namjoon replies.

‘Hooray! I’m sorry for punching you so hard!’
‘It- uh, it’s inconsequential at the moment,’ Namjoon replies with a shrug before getting back to the point. ‘Where’s Van Seulgaan?’

‘I think it’s fair to say he doesn’t know we’re here.’ Hoseok replies. ‘He hasn’t raised the alarm and we haven’t been followed.’

‘You had a tracker on you though,’ Namjoon frowns. ‘Related or not- he could trigger an alarm.’

‘I do. Well- did,’ Hoseok replies with a small grin before turning serious. ‘Sk’jin did some research- Van has a few fighters involved in the Gremio Arena as well as in the Pageant. As far as we know, he’s come alone. He’s been given top-class security as well as his own private quarters back in the mansions. I’m guessing he’s a benefactor or patron of sorts.’

Namjoon nods, indicating his understanding.

‘We’re safe pa,’ Taeh’yung’s voice suggests he’s grinning and Namjoon can almost see his face, beaming brightly, fingers raised to form “v”.

‘OrTank?’

‘Asleep!’

‘Okay- right.’ Namjoon then nods at Hoseok who has an politely expectant look on his face, as though waiting for Namjoon to recover or finish his niceties, ‘What is it?’

‘I went through the source I sent you earlier today,’ Hoseok begins at once. ‘I was reading into the information collected on Pompa. It was a thought I had, but I didn’t want to bring it up without having actual proof or at least, a decent enough argument to support my theory.’

‘About Seulgaan?’ Namjoon asks sharply.

Hoseok nods before continuing, ‘You’ve heard about how the previous Head of the Infiltration Division was terminated when it was revealed he was directly involved with the Gaia Case?’

Namjoon nods in recollection. That had been Hoseok’s former Division in the Venture Unit before he quit the organization as a whole.

‘The new Head Division is S’ava Hhlai- who was moved from his previous position as Head of the Liaisons and Parley Division,’ Hoseok looks at Namjoon, as though checking to see if he understood his implication. And Namjoon does and almost wishes he hadn’t.

‘You think S’ava Hhlai is involved with this?’ Namjoon asks tersely.

‘For an organization this large and complex, and so completely hidden, you need at least, a few Beings in positions that high up,’ Hoseok tells him blankly. ‘Based on the information collected on Pompa and everything else related to the Pageant, and the fact that organizations like the Cogs and the Pageant are directly under the Liaisons Division- I think it’s safe to bet that S’ava is a benefactor of the Pageant, even if he’s not directly connected or involved with the Alliance.’

‘It would explain how and why Van so easily escaped capture in Grezma,’ Namjoon ruminates.

‘That’s what we thought too,’ Sk’jin joins in. ‘Which also means that someone from the Yisheng Directory is involved. All Beings taken by the Yishengs are under their direct authority. Van was ‘There were 6 of them,’ Namjoon muses out, remembering the Central Bridge room and the Beings gathered in there.

‘Only four are left though!’ Taeh’yung pipes in unexpectedly.

‘What? How do you know?’ Namjoon presses.

‘I killed one of them?’ Taeh’yung replies like it’s obvious. ‘During that huge fight - and the other was like, trampled to death when they were trying to escape! It was terrible!’ he adds with a laugh.

Hoseok grimaces at him at that.

‘Well… in that case, yes 4 of them,’ Namjoon says before saying quietly to Hoseok, ‘Taeh’yung will really have to stay hidden - the others from the Alliance - or at least Van or someone from that room, might want revenge.’

Hoseok nods in grim agreement before continuing, ‘It’s not just that- S’ava was here less than a year ago.’

When Namjoon had received the files from Hoseok’s “sources”, he hadn’t checked further beyond files directly relating to the Pageant and the history behind Pompa and her arenas. The data had been heavily encrypted with a code Namjoon knew was designed and maintained by the agents of the Venture Unit.

‘And he wasn’t alone.’

Namjoon frowns at that.

‘Who was he here with.’

‘Chief Shn’ow, Head of the Trade Department,’ Hoseok grimaces. ‘And member of the special jury.’

Namjoon could balk at the sheer implication of this information- and in relation, how that information could potentially harm them.

‘Are you sure?’ Namjoon asks sharply.

‘100% sure,’ Hoseok replies, not at all offended by Namjoon’s questioning. ‘The data collected and saved by agents are kept as sources in planets- to help each other out,’ Hoseok explains. ‘We all work for the Venture Unit, but we know they won’t hesitate to drop us if it serves their purpose better. So we sort of create a safety net for each other- to save us from the system we’re working for.’

‘And S’ava and Shn’ow’s arrival was listed in the data?’

‘It was- they stayed for a week.’

‘So the Isbahaysiga Alliance continues to exist and the Pageant is most likely its commercial link with the Venture Unit,’ Sk’jin summarizes before he adds a: ‘Smart.’

‘So if we’re not careful,’ Hoseok shrugs, not having to complete his sentence.

And Namjoon knows.
If they weren’t careful, and if Van Seulgaan saw them, reported them back to S’ava, who would then report it to Shn’ow; then they would have the entirety of the Venture Unit, GIU, and GLA forces after them. Also, they could stand to lose the OrTank once Van Seulgaan catches wind of it.

‘If the Yishengs are involved in this- do you think it could be Amme?’ Namjoon asks. ‘Do you think Lal Haenoon and the others know about this?’

‘It’s possible,’ Yoongi says quietly. ‘It is also highly unlikely.’

‘Not a lot of high-ranking Yishengs exist anymore,’ Hoseok says thoughtfully. ‘Not to mention, they’ve lost the respect they once had with the higher working circles of the organizations.’

‘Still doesn’t stop them from being incredibly powerful,’ Sk’jin puts in. ‘Losing respect won’t stop you from still being the most powerful Being in the room. If they can’t command respect, the Yishengs could always use fear- they’ve already proven that they’re not hesitant in manipulating their status and positions for power; what would stop them now?’

‘Because they’re not all like that,’ Taeh’yung chimes in unexpectedly and says gently, ‘You saw it.’

It’s silent from Sk’jin’s part after that.

‘So it’s safe to say the Venture Unit definitely knows about this, but still allow it to happen?’ Namjoon asks.

‘It probably still exists because of the Venture Unit,’ Hoseok scoffs. ‘It’s not like a lot of these things are secret- the Venture Unit is quite open with their dealings. It’s what we’re known for.’

‘Does that mean you were involved in stuff like this when you were in the Venture Unit?’ Taeh’yung asks, voice a little awed.

Hoseok has a strangely haunted expression on his face for a fraction of a second before his expression goes back to nonchalance and he shrugs saying, ‘We all were. In the end.’

‘Well- one way to make sure,’ Sk’jin comments before Namjoon can say anything, tone even. ‘Hoseok?’

‘Right- so, remember my tracker?’ Hoseok questions.

‘Yes?’

‘He’s in the Lobby.’

‘What?’

Hoseok starts to move towards the door leading to the aforementioned Lobby. Namjoon quickly catches up.

‘How did you catch him?’ Namjoon asks as they step out and sure enough, there sat a Pompen, tied up with just a single rope on the Lobby couch. Closer inspection shows that he’s not exactly sitting- he appeared to be suspended, only an inch from the couch, at a very strained angle, from the vent above.

‘Hm? We’re practically best-friends,’ Hoseok shrugs one shoulder as he waves at the Pompen. ‘I invited him in.’

The Pompen spits angrily at that, wincing as the cut on his lip widens.
Hoseok has used only a single length of mechanical rope but it’s to great effect. It must be something agents knew how to do because despite being looped only once around the Being’s torso, it cleverly twists around the Pompen’s wrists, elbows, neck, crisscrossing behind on his back and looping under his upper-thighs in what should be a nearly painful strained angle at his crotch.

‘I told Hoseok to interrogate him- we need inside information.’ Sk’jin explains.

‘I think we all know why you’re here,’ Hoseok begins simply, his stance doesn’t indicate any threat or aggression, neither was he playing with the Pompen or trying to taunt him. He was simply speaking in a business-like manner. ‘Answer our questions. And we’ll negotiate your release.’

‘This is bullshit-‘

‘I have no issue killing you now and getting another one of you in here,’ Hoseok interrupts coolly.

‘First question: who are the Beings controlling both the Pageant and the Auctions?’

‘I’m not answering you-‘

Hoseok doesn’t even approach the Being- he doesn’t inflict any of the usual interrogation tactics Namjoon has witnessed (and suffered) before. Instead he tilts his head to the side, expression hidden from Namjoon.

The Pompen’s eyes are locked into Hoseok’s, unblinking and strained. His jaw tensing and veins popping on the side of his forehead. With some difficulty, his breath coming out in forced exhales, the Pompen grits out: ‘-what-…what did you- do?’

‘Your name is S’gui Tllo, 93 sols by GLA Standard, and currently unemployed,’ Hoseok lists.

‘You were born in Métrico-11 out of wedlock between a Pompen and a Pompain. Which is why you cannot find employment, and also the reason why you are currently “working” for the Auction, is this correct?’

Namjoon is stuck between wanting to ask Hoseok how he knew this, and also asking why the Pompen/Pompain was slowly turning purple for no apparent reason. The rope around his throat wasn’t tight and it wasn’t digging on his trachea either.

‘I also have reason to believe that mixed Pompen are not regarded highly; and I think it’s safe to believe that though you volunteered to work with the Auction, you also have something being held against you. False charges? Accusations? Have you been framed for the wrong doings of some Pompen and they’ve baited you with the promise of removing all charges from your background?’

Hoseok hasn’t moved, hasn’t changed his posture from the casual stance. The Pompen sends a pleading look at Namjoon, desperate and tear-filled as his eyes start to bulge a little, his skin blotching.

‘Don’t say anything. Let Hoseok finish.’ Sk’jin warns quietly in his ear. ‘He knows what he’s doing. And he won’t actually die- it’s just a simple drug used by agents for interrogation in most prisons.’

‘But it couldn’t just be that? That’s too easy; too simple,’ Hoseok continues. ‘You have family don’t you? You were one of the luckier ones I’m guessing. For a while at least. Your hair is more red than the others descended from the Pompain. But unfortunately, your sister took on more of your father’s genes.’

The Pompen/Pompain’s eyes close, spit dribbling down the side of his mouth uncontrollably.

‘Did they say she would be freed after the Pageant was over?’
It’s a while before S’gui Tllo nods.

‘Like I said- I won’t hesitate killing you,’ Hoseok repeats. ‘Your life and existence don’t matter to me. However it matters to your sister. So are you ready to talk?’

A few seconds later, there’s another nod.

‘Thank you,’ Hoseok says as he finally moves, holding up a sealed compressor-syringe. Applying it to the exposed skin on the Pompen/Pompain’s arm, the effect is instantaneous. He’s retching as he coughs, finally able to breathe normally.

Hoseok steps back, waiting for S’gui Tllo to recover a bit more.

‘Who are the Beings controlling the Pageant and the Auction?’ Hoseok repeats.

‘I don’t know everything,’ S’gui Tllo coughs out at once. ‘We’re just- we’re just pawns, being used for this event. I don’t know who outside of Pompa are involved- and the ones here- I’m not sure either.’

‘Tell us what you know,’ Hoseok sits down and Namjoon follows suit.

S’gui Tllo continues to float at an awkward angle, but his head is no longer angled to strain upwards to talk to them. He wasn’t comfortable, but one of the annoying strains on his body was removed.

Gradual and systematic “rewards” while letting your captive still know who was in power; straight out of basic agent training.

‘F-from what I know,’ S’gui Tllo begins. ‘Nearly all the Ministers of all the districts are involved- at least from the Nationalist party.’

‘There’s an opposing government party?’ Namjoon asks curiously. He hadn’t heard about opposing government factions in Pompa. Pompa was run by Nationalists who clung to their old cultures and beliefs, implicating them into the policies and laws while still somehow maintaining a decent relationship with the GLA.

‘There aren’t- officially. But in order to live under the GLA policy, there’s a neutral party- mainly consisting of GLA authorities who are involved in the government in each of the districts,’ S’gui Tllo explains, his voice still strained and weak.

Before Namjoon can even begin to search for a screen, Hoseok hands him one at once.

‘Are the ministers here?’ Hoseok asks.

‘Not all,’ S’gui Tllo replies thickly, swallowing with difficulty. ‘9 of them are. The others are in their own districts. But-‘

He stops, looking like he wasn’t sure if he should continue or not.

‘What is it?’ Hoseok asks, tone still neutral.

‘You’re…one of your items was taken up for the auctions, and I understand that you’d be angry- I’ve seen all sorts of reactions; it’s not just the Pageant that starts off this sort of arena you know? The government here does things like this frequently; it’s just never been this big before,’ S’gui Tllo says slowly. ‘If you’re…you’re trying to get revenge or something- it won’t work. It can’t.’
‘What do you mean?’ Namjoon asks, looking up from the screen from his search.

‘They have connections- within the GLA, pirates, others,’ S’gui Tllo tells them quietly. ‘A lot of cases have taken place- where the Ministers will get killed, or assassinated- or will go missing. But they’re always replaced. It’s not the Beings here that controls this entire situation- they’re replaceable. If one falls, two will take over. It won’t stop. It’s why we’ve given up. Every time we try to stop it, every time we try to put an end to it, we’re crushed at once.’

Namjoon feels incredibly bad for these Beings- stuck in a vile situation that exists only for you and your kind, while the others around you have adapted your pain and suffering into a culture that is celebrated, where profit is made from the your torture.

But Namjoon has also seen this before. So many planets, countries and regions within planets- even entire systems. The root of the problem ran so deep that there was no real method of finding the main cause and destroying it. It was just left to continue to grow. Allowed to exist.

‘There was a Being in the Auction,’ Hoseok’s voice hasn’t changed- still neutral, his expression as impassive as before, showing no emotion or change from what he’s heard. ‘From Raksane Tayi. He’s a high-ranking officer in the GLA, by the name of Van Seulgaan. What do you know of him?’

S’gui Tllo frowns a little, expression of disgust.

‘He’s one of the slavers- he buys fighters from the ministers, and sells some to them too. Is he really a high-ranking officer from the GLA?’ he looks stunned and appalled.

‘Have you seen him here before?’ Hoseok asks just as Namjoon’s search completes and the complete list of Beings who were involved the Pompen neutral-party unfolds in front of him.

A total of 43 Beings- and at the very top of the list was Van Seulgaan’s name.

‘He’s the Deputy Minister of the neutral-party.’

‘Wait- who’s the Minister then?’ Hoseok asks with a frown, glancing at the screen in Namjoon’s hands.

‘There’s never been one,’ S’gui Tllo shrugs with difficulty. ‘At least we’ve never known one. There’s only ever been a Deputy.’

‘If that isn’t suspicious as fuck.’ Sk’jin chimes in. 'My unit is on Shn’ow.'

‘S’gui Tllo, have you heard of the Isbahaysiga Alliance?’ Namjoon asks, ignoring the fleeting glance thrown at him from Hoseok.

S’gui Tllo’s expression darkens, spitting out again before he asks, ‘Who hasn’t?’

‘Your race weren’t exterminated were they? They were sold to the Alliance,’ Namjoon says quietly.

S’gui Tllo nods, looking down, anger emanating from his tied up form.

‘Well- that ties everything in quite well. Full offence but the Pompen are fucked up.’ Sk’jin scoffs.

‘They come here every year- choosing amongst us- those who are taken never return,’ S’gui Tllo growls out. ‘They’re here now- their ship is stationed outside; broadcasting the arena-event to all the sick fucks who couldn’t be here to watch first-hand.’

‘Van’s ship is here? It can’t be the slaver-ship can it? That’s too obvious and blatant.’ Sk’jin ruminates.

‘What about the deal with the arena- will they really let you go if you win the rogue-rounds?’ Hoseok asks.

‘If you win, then yes,’ S’gui Tllo replies. ‘But they normally lose- I have personally never seen anyone win- a non-contestant never wins in rogue-rounds. I’m sorry- but your friend will probably die tonight and you will lose your item.’ S’gui Tllo pauses for a moment before he says, ‘You’re not a trade-ship. You’re agents- but, you’re also in hiding. If you weren’t- then you could always get Van or the other GLA officers here to help you. I’ve seen that happen before too.’

Hoseok stills entirely.

‘Your item- it’s…it’s caused a lot of excitement. They’ve tried to open it; but they couldn’t,’ S’gui Tllo continues. ‘Normally the contestants from the Ransoms are slotted to fight first- they’re not entertaining you see. Too easy to defeat; but…your friend has been pushed back. Much further down the timeline.’ S’gui Tllo looks unsure before he blurts out, ‘I think they’re trying to delay your stay here. I don’t know why- but…but I think they want the OrTank. Or they’re trying to get higher bidders for the OrTank- the Pompen are known for their greed. It’s possible they’ve put him for auction beyond the one here- over on the underverse channels with the Alliance.’

It’s completely quiet; both inside the ship and over the line.

Hoseok grimaces a little before he makes to stand. The look of apprehension is back in S’gui Tllo’s eyes as Hoseok approaches him. But with a simply tug, the rope binding him comes undone and he falls onto the couch, limbs finally free. He’s shaking a little, uncertainty and anxiety apparent in his movement.

‘You understand that you’re not allowed to tell anyone about our conversation here, correct?’ Hoseok asks.

S’gui Tllo nods fervently in reply, ‘I won’t- I swear, I won’t.’

‘All right.’

It happens almost too quickly and Namjoon barely has time to register Hoseok’s movements. Hoseok reaches for his TeorSer and raises it up, is set to fire mode, finger on the trigger.

‘Hoseok-!’

Namjoon reaches over, pulling away Hoseok’s arm just in time for the shot to just graze over the Pompen’s scalp, singing his hair.

‘What the-!’ Hoseok looks livid. ‘He’s a liability! We can’t let him go- and we can’t stay here to watch him either. They’ll notice he’s missing and track him back to us-‘

S’gui Tllo is screaming in pain, doubled over, clutching at his head in clear agony.

‘We can’t just kill him- Hoseok, this is not one of your missions-‘

‘No it’s not!’ Hoseok ignores the pained cries of the Pompen as though he doesn’t hear it. ‘This is our mission- this could expose us- much more than just to the special-jury- just- fuck, Namjoon-
‘The auction is already interested in us, they want us to stay longer, until they can figure out the OrTank,’ Hoseok hisses. ‘Van Seulgaan is here as well- and right now literally nothing can get us out of here, except for ourselves and that too only if we’re extremely careful! If Van catches wind of us, or if the auction somehow informs him of the OrTank- we’re fucked. The only thing keeping us alive is this fucked up planet and its people’s greed. And this-’

He points down at S’gui Tllo who has passed out from his pain, his inky blood staining the Lobby couch.

‘He’s desperate- we owe him nothing. Him helping us will do nothing for him. The fact that we’ve taken him in has already signed off the death certificates over his own head and his sister’s head!’ Hoseok continues without pause. ‘The only thing that could save him and his sister is telling the closest authority figure in the auction about what’s happened to him. He knows this- if we let him go free, then he’s definitely going to expose us!’

‘I know what you mean- I understand the decision you think we need to make,’ Namjoon tries to interject but Hoseok isn’t done.

‘Do you!?’

‘I do!’ Namjoon spits back out. ‘But this isn’t-’

‘No,’ Hoseok replies firmly. ‘There are not “buts” and “ifs” in this- we all made the choice of following through this mission. And that’s what I am doing right now. For this mission to be successful, we need to understand that we’re not going to able to do this without blood-shed. Do you think Yoongi wants to fight? You think he doesn’t know that he’s fighting other Beings, with their own agendas, their lives, their family’s lives, even their planets lives on the balance?’

Namjoon doesn’t have a reply- he has nothing to say. Because Hoseok is right.

‘Do it outside,’ Namjoon finally gets out. ‘Take him outside and do it there. Not in here. Not in my ship.’

‘It’s not your ship-’ Hoseok begins.

‘I don’t fucking care Hoseok!’ Namjoon yells as he steps away. ‘Take it outside!’

* *

Namjoon washes his face, taking deep breaths. There’s no swelling, no bruising. Just some slight dents that would even out later. You couldn’t bruise if the capillaries under your skin didn’t break and swell, causing slow asphyxiation over the cells there. You just couldn’t bruise or swell if you didn’t even have capillaries in the first place. He presses over the tissue around his jaw. Shifting the layers under his skin to rearrange them properly. He turns his face around, pushing until he felt it looked nearly back to normal.

Stepping out of the en-suite, Namjoon immediately reaches for the thin oblong box over his bed.
He takes out the red, blue, as well as white lined with purple pill.

‘What are those for?’

Namjoon doesn’t need to turn to know what Hoseok is referring to.

The past few days of working around the ship, going in and out of places and rooms, conditioned Namjoon into forgetting to close his door. Also, at this point, he no longer really cared much for secrecy or privacy.

‘Medicine- life-support,’ Namjoon shrugs, placing the box on his desk before dry swallowing the pills.

‘What do they do?’

‘Stabilize my body’s pH balance, makes sure my “circuits” are working just fine, makes sure the rest of my remaining biological functions are still operational,’ Namjoon lists off as he digs for a new shirt to wear. ‘Just things to make sure I’m in my optimal health.’

‘Do you have to take them every day?’

‘Not all of them.’ Namjoon replies as he removes his shirt and wears a new one.

‘What if you forget?’

‘Do you forget to breathe?’

‘I beg your pardon?’

‘Do you forget to breathe?’ Namjoon asks, finally turning around.

Hoseok is already carrying a bag, his jacket changed out for another one.

‘No.’

‘That’s my answer to your question.’

They step out of the Užkulisai, the sound of the sea rushing up to the shore greets them. It’s almost tranquil and peaceful- and it would be if the knowledge of what was happening, of what happened, and what would happen wasn’t so staggering.

Namjoon doesn’t find any evidence to suggest what happened to S’gui Tllo and he’d rather not ask. The sea was a convenient enough place to get rid of a body.

Hoseok doesn’t offer any answer, and doesn’t bother telling Namjoon what happened either.

‘Can someone please bring food, I swear on my ass if I don’t get any food I’m going to fucking eat Yoongi.’

‘I don’t think Yoongi would taste good? Not enough fat.’

‘Taeh’yung honey, no. That was just a joke- I wouldn’t eat Yoongi.’

‘Ah, okay.’

‘Because you’re right- not enough fat.’
‘Theoretically who would you eat?’

‘Why is this conversation taking place?’ Yoongi asks quietly.

‘Well- Namjoon is out of the list- sorry hon.’ Sk’jin replies with genuine seriousness, as though actually contemplating the entire situation. ‘Not Hoseok either- he’s all lean muscle. He’d be a bit dry.’

Hoseok looks like he doesn’t know if he should be relieved or insulted.

‘Tae, I love you with all my heart, but I don’t know where you’ve been, and what you’ve been doing, and I like to know all of these before it goes into my mouth- to an extent.’ Sk’jin declares. ‘In the end, I’d eat myself, because I think I have the perfect balance of fatty muscles.’

Hoseok grimaces uncomfortably, shaking his head quietly.

‘I’m still learning.’

Hoseok looks unsure how to reply, glancing over at him with a questioning look, clearly still caught up with the whole “he’s be a bit dry” statement.

‘I’m still learning about working in the field- not to the extent of how you or Yoongi or even Sk’jin have done so far,’ Namjoon clarifies. ‘There are beliefs I have; either influenced or created by myself, about how the universe around me should and shouldn’t be. My view is based on what I saw, what I read, what I was able to live through the screens of my office. The ideas and logic I live by are reflected off of digital space- on electrical code, systems, and networks I know I can control. And that’s what I like. What I am good at.’

‘I understand that,’ Hoseok says slowly.

‘So I am still learning- the universe beyond the one I know. It’s not one I’m fond of. The heat, the realness, the instantaneous spontaneity of tens of hundreds of other Beings around me. They’re all things I would rather ignore, rather stay away from,’ Namjoon snorts. ‘You’d think it was something that wouldn’t or shouldn’t faze me; but that’s just how it is.’

They stop in front of the parked Hover-7 by a crop of sea-worn rocks.

Hoseok had been right. And Namjoon knew that. He wished he wasn’t right.

‘So I’m learning that now. I need to learn- if I want to lead our team, to complete this mission. I need to know. So next time there’s a situation like that- and if I argue, just tell me I’m being an idiot.’ Namjoon half-grins.

‘Namjoon-’

‘No- you were right.’ Namjoon says as Hoseok looks somehow conflicted. ‘We couldn’t risk it. We couldn’t risk him- I wasn’t thinking for the mission.’

Namjoon had felt terrible for S’gui Tllo. His situation, the life he lead, the burdens he carried, and the weight of the responsibility he had for his sister. It all felt too much. But Namjoon also knew, that they couldn’t risk the mission. They couldn’t risk being caught, couldn’t risk losing when they’ve come this far, this deep.

Hoseok remains quiet for a while before nodding. Namjoon wonders if he imagined the slight shake in the Ngfy’widan’s hands.
‘Come on- let’s go get Sk’jin his food. I don’t trust him or Taeh’yung with anyone or anything.’

Red is all he sees.

For hours. Days. Weeks. Years. For a hundred lifetimes.

Red stains the surface of his skin. Red stains the vision of his eyes. Even when he’s given a reprieve. A rest. Or even when his eyes close without his knowing, everything is red.

Red is pain.

Red is death.

Red is horror.

Red is the colour of his tears, burning his red skin, as red fire is applied, in a room full of red objects.

Red is sharp.

Red is cruel.

Red is shrill.

Red is the colour of his bones, exposed in the red air, as red metal replaces it, in a bed covered in red sheets.

Red is final.
Red is death.

Red is the promise of hopelessness.

The waiting room was supposed to be a neat sizeable room with comfortable chairs, full length mirrors, even a shower, and a table with refreshments (long depleted), and a large entertainment screen that couldn’t be switched off and only played the live Pageant fights above-ground. It smells slightly moldy and some attempt was made in covering up the smell by planting excessive amounts of potpourri around the room in precariously placed crystal bowls. When Namjoon was previously here, it had still been somewhat neat and orderly, but now it’s changed entirely. Not just in terms of furniture placement but also in number of Beings inside the room.

Namjoon finds that the entirety of the Obere clan are there, and the large fluffy N’nukwu is also there, dozing with its head on Taeh’yung’s lap. The Zhak’gri is chatting animatedly with the Obere in their own language before he notices them. Jumping up, Taeh’yung dives at Namjoon, nearly in tears, apologizing for hitting him.

‘I’m so sorry pa!’ he wails, eyes sparkling with unshed tears.

‘It’s all right,’ Namjoon replies, trying his best to gently break out of Taeh’yung strong hold. Honestly, how strong was this kid? Namjoon stops himself there; Taeh’yung was most likely older than himself—possibly older than all of them with the exception of Sk’jin.

Speaking of Sk’jin, he’s lounging rather majestically on a day-bed of sorts, greeting them with a regal wave of his hand, looking effortlessly handsome. Hoseok is handing him his food and all appearances of looking elegant and regal is gone in a flash.

But what is most surprising is Yoongi. More accurately: Yoongi’s hair.

Yoongi’s hair is a neon pastel blue.

It’s practically fluorescent the way it’s so stark yet somehow soft. Namjoon doesn’t know how to describe it. He’s never paid attention to hair colour before, let alone shades of colour in general. So he finds it quite hard to describe the shade of the Human’s hair.
The Human in question looks as passive as ever, seemingly uncaring about the state of his hair, his clothing (in Sk’jin’s robes, turned inside out and trimmed so that it was gold with red lining), his accessories (Sk’jin’s ridiculous gold circlet), or the state of his face in general (made up with make-up Sk’jin procured from Spaces knows where).

‘He looks great doesn’t he? He’d qualify for the actual Pageant upstairs,’ Sk’jin grins through a mouthful of food.

There’s a high-pitched chorus of agreement and the Obere flock around Yoongi again. The single Obere, who was probably the owner of the N’nukwu, was seated next to the Human, tiny minute hand clutching onto Yoongi’s sleeves, short legs swinging from the settee they shared.

‘What are they doing here?’ Namjoon asks quietly, smiling at the Obere who have to literally lean back to smile up at him. They were cute, in a rather creepy way. Maybe that’s why they were fond of Yoongi and Taeh’yung- both of whom could very well be considered cute but rather creepy.

Birds of a feather- or something like that.

‘They came here to wish Yoongi luck- and to thank him again,’ Sk’jin explains, waving Namjoon over to sit down. ‘We need to talk,’ Namjoon says as he sits on the floor, leaning back on the day-bed.

Yoongi must have heard him (how, Namjoon doesn’t know, what with the Obere’s high-pitched voices, the Pageant on the screen, Taeh’yung’s loud and deep voice, and Hoseok’s laughter as Taeh’yung tells him something) because he quietly leans down to the Obere next to him and says something.

Within a minute the Obere have packed up, and with a final shrilly cry, and a loud bark from the N’nukwu, they leave.

‘Well, that solves that,’ Sk’jin says with an amused grin before biting into a pastry like baked-item. ‘Considering the fact that we’re royally fucked, what’s our next step?’

‘I asked Sehr about the rogue-arenas,’ Taeh’yung pipes us as he settles down on the floor, cushioning Namjoon’s thigh under his head. Namjoon can only imagine that Sehr was one of the Obere. ‘No one whose stuff got taken has ever won. They’re all lost.’

Namjoon grimaces down at Taeh’yung.

‘How do they know?’

‘I think they kidnapped someone too; got information out of them,’ Taeh’yung replies with an uncomfortable expression on his face, wiggling a little. He sits up and scooting across on the floor on his butt, goes and pillows Hoseok’s thighs instead. ‘Ah! Much better!’

‘I’ll win them all.’

Every head in the room turns to look at Yoongi.

His expression is as neutral as ever, as though he was talking about some inconsequential topic like the weather from that morning.

‘It’s not that I don’t believe in you,’ Namjoon begins. ‘There are a lot of variables to this- these fights are designed so that the Beings trying to fight back their items all lose- and in our case it’s even more so.’

‘I will win. I won’t lose.’ Yoongi repeats.

‘We’ll leave the fighting to Yoongi,’ Sk’jin speaks before anyone else can say anything. ‘Right now we need to plan what to do next.’

‘First we need to make sure we’re not spotted or seen,’ Hoseok says at once. ‘Secrecy is key here-Van cannot know we’re here. He’s never seen me, Yoongi, or Sk’jin before. But we can’t be 100% sure on that. If S’ava Hhlai is involved in this and Van is working for him; then it’s possible that he knows who we are- and what we carry. If he sees us, he’ll know at once. We need to make sure Yoongi is unrecognizable or Van is at least, unable to watch his fights.’

‘It’s not just Van too- there are other Ministers involved- we can’t rule them out. If all of this is connected, we need to make sure that they’re all compromised,’ Namjoon adds. ‘Also let’s not forget this entire thing is being broadcasted through the underverse as well.’

‘Can’t you stop that pa?’ Taeh’yung asks, turning on Hoseok’s thigh to look at Namjoon with wide eyes.

‘I could- but I don’t know where the distribution source is located- it’s safe to assume it won’t be here,’ Namjoon replies.

‘Van’s ship is here isn’t it? Or well, nearby,’ Sk’jin corrects himself. ‘Based off of what our friend said, I think it’s safe to assume that Van is always here even for the local arenas- so the distributor is surely in his office? Or maybe it’s in-planet? Does it say where the neutral party’s office is located?’

‘It’s in Métrico-01,’ Namjoon replies, remembering the information he pulled up on the GLA’s headquarters here.

‘The main recording system would be down here- but the distribution channel should be on the ship,’ Hoseok ruminates.

‘Why don’t we like blow up the Minister’s offices here, and the ship, distract everyone involved, and Yoongi will win his fight- we grab my baby, and we leave?’ Taeh’yung suggests with a mad twinkle in his eye.

‘Tae honey that’s-‘

‘-a good idea.’

Even Taeh’yung looks at him as though Namjoon was mad.

‘What?’ Sk’jin sits up. ‘That’s not going to stop the arena, or the Pageant-’ Sk’jin begins rationalizing.

‘We’re not trying to stop the arena,’ Namjoon explains. ‘Distract- without punching anyone- get any potential officer or Being who might know about our mission away from this place. They’re doing this out in the open- but I don’t think they’d appreciate everyone in the GLA knowing about their connections and dealings with organizations like the Pageant- their headquarters or offices getting blown up or invaded will distract them from watching.’

Hoseok, who had reacted similarly to Sk’jin, has a look of understanding on his face. He nods slowly in agreement as he grabs his screen, absent mindedly balancing it on Taeh’yung’s head.
'But we all can’t just go and blow up these places,’ Sk’jin argues.

‘We won’t have to go there ourselves,’ Hoseok remarks, ‘If we can sectionalize areas around the offices or headquarters, cut off the power supply or trigger a false alarm, or like Taeh’yung said, blow something up via their computerized systems, then we won’t have to even leave this place.’

‘Van’s ship?’

‘I can do that by myself- or with Hoseok,’ Namjoon replies at once. ‘We can borrow a ship or Transporter up to Van’s ship.’

‘Which is it though?’ Sk’jin asks skeptically.

‘Well it’s not the slaver-ship, but close,’ Hoseok faces his screen towards them, displaying the Pompa Dock log. To the side of the screen, Namjoon sees the tab open for the registered GLA officers on duty in Pompa.

‘Yeah,’ Hoseok snorts, ‘He’s using his official ship. He’s very confident in himself, this one.’

‘But if we block out the video feed- won’t Van be notified? You’ll get caught in the ship,’ Sk’jin argues.

‘Not if I cut the feed at the distributor- Van’s ship will still receive the footage, but it won’t get sent out,’ Namjoon replies.

Sk’jin still doesn’t look happy about their plan.

‘Look I don’t like it either- but we have to,’ Namjoon says as he stands up.

‘Wait- you’re going now?!’ Sk’jin asks incredulously.

‘Yes? I can access the city-systems while getting to Van’s ship- signals might actually be stronger than down here,’ Namjoon replies before looking over at Hoseok, ‘Ready?’

Hoseok is about to stand, gently removing Taeh’yung from his lap with a friendly head-ruffle when Sk’jin speaks up, ‘Wait- Hoseok should stay here- keep an eye out on Van down here. He can follow him around without being noticed.’

‘But Taeh’yung has to stay here-‘

‘I’m coming with you,’ Sk’jin states plainly.

Namjoon can feel 3 pairs of eyes going back and forth between Sk’jin and himself.

‘Right- well, stop eating and let’s go,’ Namjoon nods.

‘I eat when I’m stressed, fucking sue me,’ Sk’jin growls out over a mouthful of pastry but he’s already getting up, brushing off crumbs from the front of his robes. It should look disgusting, but the Khol’isa manages to do even that with elegance.

‘I’ll go check if the coast is clear,’ Hoseok says, ‘Come out when I say so.’

‘Yoongi’s match begins in 90 minutes,’ Taeh’yung says as he occupies Sk’jin’s former day-bed, reclining back with no semblance of grace or elegance. ‘Will you be back by then?’

‘We should be back by then,’ Namjoon estimates. ‘If not- we meet back up in the ship.’
Yoongi nods in understanding before adding with two thumbs-up, ‘Good luck.’

‘Uh- you too,’ Namjoon replies.

Yoongi still doesn’t lower his hands, an expectant look in his face.

Taeh’yung from the day-bed subtly (read: not subtly) gestures a thumbs-up as well, nodding in Yoongi’s direction.

Hesitantly, Namjoon raises his hand into a reluctant thumbs-up and Yoongi finally lowers his hands.

Suddenly Namjoon is gripped with a strange sense of fear as he looks over at the Human. He’s not sure if it’s the new hair colour, the clothes, the make-up; but he looks incredibly slight, fragile almost. He’s seen what Yoongi can do. What he has done. All great feats of extreme physical and mental prowess, exceeding nearly everything Namjoon has witnessed in terms of skill, forethought, speed, and strength.

Yoongi is no longer looking at him, just looking down at the floors with blank interest. And Namjoon is frightened.

For a single moment he’s suddenly lost- unhinged from the reality surrounding this mission. What about this was so important that Yoongi was going to risk doing all of this, knowing for a fact that his survival was low, that losing would bring about a disaster they couldn’t even comprehend- a disaster that was still somewhat theoretical.

‘Right- I’m ready, let’s go,’ Sk’jin butts into his thoughts. He’s changed clothes, to something darker and more practical instead of robes. Closer inspection shows that it’s Yoongi and Taeh’yung’s clothes combined.

‘All clear you two. Take the right and through the normal route- most of the Beings have gathered to the arena to watch the fights.’ Hoseok lines in.

‘Yeah- we’re on it.’
They start to appear before him.

Voiceless, shapeless, formless.

Just—...nowhere, everywhere, somewhere, elsewhere.

He tries to speak to them. He has a voice. He can speak. He can almost touch them.

But they don’t know.

They just don’t know.

But they gather around him. Those who still clung on. Those who were still trapped. Those who still remained.

Sometimes he could see their faces.

On those days he would cry, his heartbreaking as this nightmare continued over and over and over.

And sometimes it was as though they knew. They would come to him, formless and shapeless yet somehow trying to approach him.

Although it was possible he was just wishing for that. He couldn’t tell.

‘Do you remember me?’ he asks all of them every day.

He gets no response.

Sometimes it came back—sometimes surprised as though it had forgotten he was there.

How long has he been here now? He doesn’t remember.

There were some days that felt so extraordinarily still— it was as though he was timeless— and he wanted to give into that endlessness. But he liked to believe they wouldn’t want that. He liked to believe that they wouldn’t want him to go.

‘I can’t go not because I don’t want to— but because I don’t know how to,’ he tells them one day.

He can move. He can be outside the ship, in the forest, in the waterfall, in other destroyed ships— but he could never leave.

He wanders and wanders. Wading through the thick stagnant drag of Time and nightmares— but he would always end up back there again. Back in that broken ship, in that broken room, in the darkness that awoke him. And they’re always there too. Waiting for him.

‘Do you remember me?’ he asks again. ‘Because I don’t.’
‘So what are we doing?’ Sk’jin asks again, yawning.

Namjoon wonders if Sk’jin’s abilities extend past his Khol’isa ones into being a permanent pain in the ass. His ass in specific. Not that Namjoon would mention it. Sk’jin would probably smirk, wink, and then say, ‘if you want me to be the reason of the pain in your ass, then of course,’ and Taeh’yung will burst out laughing, Hoseok will try not to laugh, and Yoongi will (as usual) look like he doesn’t want to be there. It’s strangely quiet out and the sky is a dark hazy techno-coloured mess, holographic advertisements blocking out the view of the stars. The neighbourhood is quiet and dark and littered with parked terrain-transporters all over the main streets. It almost feels wrong to be walking with Sk’jin of all Beings down this seemingly normal street, surrounded by family homes (albeit filthy rich and dubiously associated) on either side.

‘Well first we get a Transporter that can go off-planet,’ Namjoon replies.

‘Where do we get that?’

‘I was hoping you would use your communication abilities to get us one,’ Namjoon replies lightly.

‘Ah!’ Sk’jin smirks at him. ‘Well of course Captain, your wish is my command. Upon whom should I bless my dulcet tones? What worthy fool shall hear temptation-‘

‘The closest Dock is located not too far from here,’ Namjoon interrupts, ‘But I think we’ll stand a good chance of snitching some of the guest’s ships.’

Sk’jin looks around at the rows and rows of Transporters.

‘Well, security is off,’ Sk’jin scratches at his chin in a dramatic manner. ‘And we’re not being tailed I see.’

‘It’s probably the timing,’ Namjoon replies.

‘Or they’re just confident that no matter what we do, they’re going to gain the upper-hand' anyways.’ Sk’jin shrugs, walking over to one of the Transporters.

‘You don’t like this plan do you?’ Namjoon asks.

‘No. But it’s the only one we have, and I have nothing else to offer. So I’m going to help in any way I can to make sure it succeeds,’ Sk’jin replies before adding as he points at the Transporters, ‘These have pretty good security in these,- I think it’s better to get to the Dock.’

Namjoon nods in agreement and they continue walking.

‘Hoseok didn’t kill that tracker by the way,’ Sk’jin says conversationally.

‘What?’

‘He didn’t kill that Pompen. He just knocked him out and shot him with some sleeping pill or something.’ Sk’jin clarifies.

Namjoon suddenly doesn’t know how to feel about it.

‘They’re doing this because they want to- because this means something to them,’ Sk’jin adds. ‘And as their team-members, as Beings who have agreed to take part in the same mission, we have to respect and accommodate their actions and intentions- whatever it is that they need to do- whatever it is that we need to do in turn.’

Sk’jin jogs forward a little until he’s ahead of Namjoon and begins walking backwards, facing Namjoon.

‘You’re going to fall,’ Namjoon warns.

‘I won’t- I trust you,’ Sk’jin winks before continuing. ‘I saw the way you were looking at Yoongi, and at Hoseok as well. The way you look at Taeh’yung, at me. We’re all doing what we’re doing because we want to. Because of what we believe in, what we know, what we want to know. We’re all doing this within our capabilities- Yoongi knows what he’s doing. He volunteered for a reason. Hoseok knows what he’s doing. His actions are not influenced by what we say or do. And Taeh’yung…’ Sk’jin trails off with a laugh. ‘Taeh’yung is just Taeh’yung.’

‘And you? You still want to know what this is all about?’ Namjoon asks, remembering their conversation in Ch’dra.

Sk’jin smirks at him, cocking his fingers at him as though holding up a TeorSer and says, ‘Bingo. And it seems like all of this is a part of what we’re trying to understand.’

He turns back around, walking in pace with Namjoon.

The walk to the Dock is spent in relative quietness, only interrupted by random updates from Hoseok or Taeh’yung. They’re close to the local Dock, already stuffed with parked Transporters of all kind. There are a few eateries as well, packed with locals or the drivers/pilots of the Transporters belonging to the rich Pompen.

‘Why don’t you go get us something quick to eat,’ Sk’jin gestures towards one of the eateries. ‘I’ll go get us a Transporter.’

Namjoon frowns at that.

‘Trust me- you being there won’t help me,’ Sk’jin snorts. ‘I can’t have you looming behind me trying to persuade someone into giving me access to their Transporter.’

‘We could just steal-’

‘We don’t want to raise alarms- besides, we need the authorization code and all of that while leaving the skies,’ Sk’jin rolls his eyes at Namjoon as though he was being purposely obtuse. ‘We should invest in a small Transporter- something to use outside for shit situations like this.’

‘I’ll…look into that.’ Namjoon says somewhat lamely.

‘Good boy- I mean, daddy,’ Sk’jin winks at him before skipping off. ‘Get me some food!’

Sighing, Namjoon enters the closest eatery. If they were being followed, it could look as though they simply wanted to go somewhere to eat, or even try and get sponsors outside the venue. This wasn’t strictly legal (there were many laws and regulations within the arena apparently- which was ironic considering the entire thing was illegal through and through), but it was far better for them to act like they were doing this rather than show what they were really up to.

The eatery is stuffed with Pompens and tourists alike. Their attention is riveted on the match- apparently they had reached the semi-finals and everyone was betting units by the thousands like it was nothing. Namjoon doesn’t think even Sk’jin would enjoy the food served in here so he orders some Pompen beverage instead- a lurid orange in colour. It has a clear slightly bland taste that’s rather refreshing. Positioning himself with his back to the empty bar save for the Android server facing the crowd ahead, Namjoon reaches for his screen and casually hacks into Pompen’s city system. It takes a while finding the electricity/energy channels and locating all of the district minister headquarters and offices as well as their private homes or residences. But once he’s in, it’s child’s play. Internally apologizing to their neighbours and in some cases, entire regions, Namjoon starts decoding the pathetically easy firewall and enters the control panel. Choosing a random pattern, Namjoon selects an even number of office to residence and purposefully creates a sudden surge of power through their electric/energy lines in that region. The first "glitch" in the upcoming series of electrical surges.

‘Hoseok- you there?’

‘Here.’

‘Van?’

‘In the arena- he’s watching the match,’ Hoseok replies. ‘I’ve seen a few of the other minister’s here too.’

‘All right good. Sk’jin?’

‘Please don’t break my flow.’ Comes a quick and hissed whisper.

Namjoon looks over to the screens mounted high up on the eatery wall. The fight is nothing short of violent. Except it’s been shot to look aesthetically pleasing. There are over a hundred cameras, focused and trained on individual fighters. They pan, zoom, stretch, the fights- even do dramatic slow-motion during recap, adding effects of strobes and lens flare during the play-backs at break time. The eatery is cheering- clearly divided in the center, one side supporting one fighter each.

An arm curls around his waist and a pair of lips all too close to his ear whispers, ‘Hey, you come around here often?’

Namjoon really wants to punch Sk’jin, because of course it’s the Khol’isa.
‘Got a ship? Let’s go,’ Namjoon knocks back the last of his drink.

‘Wow- won’t buy me a drink? Straight to business?’ Sk’jin is still a bit too close to him.

Sighing, Namjoon swipes a unit-card over the till and leaves, Sk’jin clinging to his arm.

‘You’re never going to be able to pick anyone up with that sort of expression-’ Sk’jin begins berating him the moment they leave the eatery. Sk’jin still hasn’t let go of his arm.

‘I’m not interested in picking up anyone from anywhere,’ Namjoon sighs out, wondering if he could ask Hoseok to partner with him instead of Sk’jin. But Sk’jin did make a strong argument so he gives in.

‘Well- if someone is really interested- or they’re drawn to your dark brooding thing you’ve got going on- you might not have to,’ Sk’jin laughs lightly.

‘Dark and brooding?’ Namjoon finds himself repeating to his horror. Sk’jin looks surprised that out of all he said, Namjoon would pick up on that.

‘Yes? You have that whole tall dark mysterious shit down to an art- it’s great, you should learn to use it to your advantage,’ Sk’jin grins.

‘I’ll consider it.’

Namjoon wonders if he’s slipped into some weird dimension or alternative universe where he’s having a rather amusing and equally footed conversation with Sk’jin. Or maybe something was in his drink. They walk around the Hangar a little, and if Namjoon finds a completely unconscious Pompen posed to appear as though he were asleep or drunk on the floor, leaning on a mechanic’s stool, then he doesn’t mention it.

‘Well, here’s our ride,’ Sk’jin waves an arm casually.

It’s a maintenance-transporter; one designed to go up the highest levels of the stratosphere and even a little beyond that, to maintain the holographic billboards.

‘Perfect disguise I say,’ Sk’jin nods proudly, quite pleased with his catch, eyes flashing red. ‘No one will look twice.’

‘You make it sound so simple,’ Namjoon grumbles, looking over the small sturdy ship before adding, ‘You can fly this?’

Sk’jin snorts.

‘I could fly this in my sleep.’

‘You don’t sleep.’

‘I said what I said.’

The maintenance-transporter carried a maximum of 6 Beings. Or at least it was supposed to. The transporter was clearly designed for the Pompen anatomy and Sk’jin and Namjoon find themselves uncomfortably squashed at the cockpit, their shoulders rubbing and their heads nearly brushing over the ceiling.

‘Cozy,’ Sk’jin comments as he starts up the Transporter and speaks into the communication board, his voice changing, his accent pulling and slurring much like a Pompen: ‘Control, this is MT-09-
332-TB9 headed out for a round. Did I do that right? What else do I say? Do I say “copy”? Copy?
Sk’jin acts as though he’s conversing with someone, adding suppressed giggles and sounding convincingly intoxicated.

‘Gotcha- you guys have fun out there,’ a similarly accented voice replies followed by a snicker.

‘There’s no security check though?’ Namjoon questions.

‘Yeah- but this Pompen was pretty chatty with the rest of his mates,’ Sk’jin replies. ‘Gotta make sure there’s a sort of story to follow up on why he took the ship out. Why not for wild night out in the sky y’know?’

‘I’d rather not know.’

‘Poor innocent baby, I’ll protect you,’ Sk’jin says in a mockingly babying tone.

Namjoon rolls his eyes in response, reaching for his screen again as the Transporter takes off with a mighty rumble of its powerful engines.

‘Makes me realize how quiet our ship is,’ Sk’jin says loudly over the sound of the turbines.

‘Hoseok- what’s the situation?’

‘Everyone’s still in place.’ Hoseok replies at once. ‘You’re up?’

‘Yeah- I’m cutting the power,’ Namjoon replies, looking up to check on the view below. The city beyond the suburban area was sprawling and chaotically lit.

‘3…2…1.’

The effect is instantaneous.

Huge sections suddenly flicker and go off, some areas lighting up again and the others bathe in darkness.

‘Anything?’

‘Nothing yet.’

Sk’jin takes them up steadily, allowing them a wider view of the planet below.

‘Visibility will go down for a bit,’ Sk’jin says over the sound of the engines. ‘We hit the stratosphere and then we’ll be out in the clearing again.’

Namjoon nods in reply.

‘Wait- yeah- I think they got notified; wow, a whole bunch of them just got up and left.’ Hoseok reports back.

‘Van?’

‘Yeah- he’s leaving too.’ Hoseok replies, ‘I’ll follow him out.’

‘Be careful.’ Namjoon, Sk’jin, Yoongi, and Taeh’yung all say at the same time.

There’s a slight stunned silence from Hoseok before he chuckles and says, ‘I hope you all know
I’ve never been captured even once during my time as an agent.’

‘That’s so cool Hobi! I hope you get to experience it once!’

‘Uh-‘

‘Let him be,’ Sk’jin says dismissively, waving a hand.

‘Thank you?’

‘You’re welcome!’

Sk’jin shrugs as though saying, ‘there, see? Handled’.

Namjoon continues to fluctuate the power grid, switching on and off the power, flooding some areas with bursts of power, in some places weakening them to barely there levels. He can see how a little later, efforts were made in trying to stabilize the energy but Namjoon has complete control. He’s concentrating so much he barely registers the fact that the engine noise has completely gone and they were momentarily floating as the gravity function took a while to initiate.

‘All right Captain and Navigator- guide us to the Dock,’ Sk’jin looks over at him expectantly.

The Pompen Dock is like any other regular Dock- only a little smaller seeing as they knew now that most tourists who came to Pompa for one particular reason- and that reason being the sole cause of this entire mess. So the Dock wasn’t used much, and most Beings landed their ships or Transporters in-planet.

Namjoon keys in the coordinates into the small NaviLet planted on the dashboard of the Transporter and they slowly shift, the position of the beamers changing. The purr of the space-engines vibrates the small Transporter and they start moving upwards.

‘How much time left for Yoongi’s match?’ Namjoon asks, just to confirm again.

Sk’jin doesn’t even look down at his screen or at the dashboard when he replies, ’47 minutes.’

‘Do you guys have enough time?’ Hoseok asks.

The Dock looms ahead and above them. Docks felt even larger than they normally did when you were in a Transporter this small. Apprehension washes Namjoon anew and he nods grimly before replying, ‘It’ll do.’
'Are you all right?'

He doesn’t know.

They all approach him from a distance. They stay back. Wary. Unsure.

He can feel the Yisheng’s ability working; knitting open skin, numbing aches and pain, relieving exhaustion. But his hands are still on fire. And it doesn’t purify him.

He once witnessed a sacrificial offering— a live Being walked straight over a board over a great roaring furnace. He could clearly see the way their eyes were glazed— hypnosis or drugs, he’s not sure. He also sees the surgical marks on the side of their throat, removing their vocal chords so that they wouldn’t scream once they hit the flames below.

‘Sir? How do you feel?’

He felt nothing when they jumped into the large drum of fire.

He felt nothing when the drum fell apart in a ceremonial representation of birth, and the Being inside writhed around, looking as though they were dancing in ecstasy.

He felt nothing when their skin got caught on the floor, peeling off.

He felt nothing when the smell of burning flesh wafted around him. He simply watched on, intrigued by the reactions of the others around him.

‘What you did was necessary— what you did had meaning. It wasn’t pointless. You have saved us all.’

They all applauded— almost seemed to envy the Being, but didn’t approach them to replace them. They just watched, and spoke and spoke and spoke. They all look up to the high-priest who doesn’t move, doesn’t say anything.

The officers around him watch him carefully, before looking over at the Yisheng, as though to check if they could approach him or not.

When in the end the Being burnt out, collapsing in a twitching state that he knows was caused more by asphyxiation rather than actually burning, the entirety of the temple breaks out into song. The high-priest raises their hands into the air, leading the song into full volume. A song to guide and lead the noble sacrificial spirit into an afterlife of glory and pleasure.

‘You did well— right now it doesn’t feel like it. But you will see. What you did, what has happened— this will change the Universe.’
The temple empties, and the burnt charred remains of the Being is abandoned. The songs sung about their spirit is sung elsewhere now- somewhere below where they will feast and dance-praising exaltations over the charred bones.

‘What will you do?’ he asks.

‘Nothing,’ the high-priest replied. ‘The birds and rats will come to eat it.’

They don’t have enough time.

By the time they land, move around unnoticed (a difficult feat considering they were both rather tall, and Sk’jin was just generally very eye-catching and was naturally inclined to be the center of attention rather than not), and get to the Bay where Van Seulgaan’s ship was docked, they barely had 20 minutes left before Yoongi’s match would start.

‘We coloured his hair, and I put make-up on him,’ Sk’jin argues next to him. ‘Not to mention the fact that this is a fight. No matter how skilled you are, you’re gonna get hit, Yoongi’s face might get bust and swell up-’

‘-I don’t want to sound like I’m judging you from an ethical platform here but that’s exactly what I’m doing-’

‘-I’m just saying even if we don’t make it in time- there might still be a chance of some kind,’ Sk’jin scowls.

They were standing at the platform crossing over the Bay where Van’s ship was docked. It’s a massive ship, 4 times taller than the Užkulisai and 6 times as wide. They had managed to snag the Dock’s maintenance uniform and so they were properly disguised. But it wasn’t as though they would be allowed to casually enter the ship. There wasn’t a lot of security around the place, but any possible point of entry was being guarded by Beings similar to the slaver-guards they had seen in Grezma. Sure they could take them out, but they didn’t want to get caught.

‘Can’t you just access their core-system by like, I don’t know, throwing in your Comm-Device somewhere close by, latching on to the frequency, or something like that?’ Sk’jin asks.

‘That’s…impossible?’ Namjoon replies, wondering where in Spaces Sk’jin came up with that idea.
‘You need access to the direct source of all the ship’s systems and programs to manipulate it.’

‘Huh,’ Sk’jin raises both eyebrows. ‘He really was something then.’

‘Who?’

‘Hm?’ Sk’jin looks over at him as though realizing they were on a timed mission to get to the central-core station. ‘Nothing- I was just remembering some stuff.’

‘Right well- I think we can sneak under the ship- go up through the water cells,’ Namjoon glances down at the ship. ‘Might be a tight squeeze through the vents.’

‘That’s risky. We could still be seen,’ Sk’jin argues, looking down at the ship with a frown.

‘Well- I can’t hack into the ship’s internal system but I can mess up the Dock’s ParaBots and have them swarm the ship.’ Namjoon holds up the screen displaying the interface for the Dock’s mechanical station functions. Sk’jin gives him a vaguely impressed look.

‘How much time would that give us?’ Sk’jin asks.

‘The Dock will be able to fix the error in a few minutes- we’ll be able to sneak in.’ Namjoon calculates quickly.

‘You seem confident,’ Sk’jin comments before they start making their way down.

‘I’ve done this before,’ Namjoon replies, pulling the hood of the uniform over his head. It was uncomfortable, seeing as the uniform was made for a Being who did not exactly fit his build. Luckily it was long enough. ‘Well- not personally, but for an agent.’

Sk’jin doesn’t press for answers.

The ParaBots suddenly burst out of their alcoves lining up the walls of the Dock. They scuttle over in a massive hoard and begin analyzing and scrutinizing the exterior of the ship.

Standing behind a few of the cargo crates close to the ship, Namjoon and Sk’jin wait until the guards and sufficiently distracted and make a quick walk towards the underbelly of the ship. Finding an opening, Namjoon and Sk’jin squeeze through the water-cells and immediately climb up the plank, pressing their backs onto the narrow scaffolding lining the water-storage hull.

‘And now?’ Sk’jin asks before adding, ’11 minutes left.’

‘We’re taking Yoongi out now,’ Hoseok adds, his voice strained with stress. He had followed Van out, seen him take off on his Transporter and headed back in just over 10 minutes ago.

‘We’re getting there,’ Namjoon replies tersely as he accesses BluePrint and the full working outline of the ship lights up on his screen.

‘Right, the central-system core is located below the Bridge- we can get there through the Bot-lines,’ Namjoon quickly shuffles along the scaffolding, as an orange line makes a path from their location on the screen to the room they were headed for. Bot-lines were small ducts that veined most commercial and or cargo-ships so that ParaBots and other smaller bots could enter for maintenance purposes. Though ParaBots were very efficient in their tasks, most ducts were made to fit the average Being inside of it. And by average, definitely not Namjoon or Sk’jin’s size.

‘Lead,’ Sk’jin says simply.
Every passing second feels like a large ax swinging closer and closer to his neck. There’s a bolted down barred blockage in front of the Bot-line which Namjoon easily removes with a quick tug. They both wince at the jarring metallic sound that follows but they don’t linger long. Namjoon hoists himself up with difficulty before waiting for Sk’jin to climb in as well.

‘Small cramped spaces- my favorite,’ Sk’jin grunts.

Namjoon has no time to reply, so instead making sure the screen in his hand was stabilized, starts following the line.

They were both too tall, too broad to be doing things like this. They couldn’t crouch properly- it was more of a prolonged and weirdly angled plank-crawling more than anything. Every few seconds, Namjoon scrapes his head on the jutting metal lips of pipes and tubes and smaller vents bringing in wires. Namjoon ignores Sk’jin’s complaints of pain as they creep through the cramped vents.

‘I hate everything right now- I can’t see anything except for Namjoon’s flat ass,’ Sk’jin hisses.

‘This is not helping!’ Namjoon whispers quietly as they wait for the steam vent ahead to clear.

‘I’ll complain as much as I want!’ Sk’jin snaps back quietly.

‘You guys realize that you don’t have to whisper right?’ Hoseok chimes in, his voice laced with amusement.

‘Are we almost there?’ Sk’jin continues to whisper.

‘Almost- I see the wire frame from here.’ Namjoon replies. It was starting to feel very claustrophobic in here.

‘Wire frame? Don’t we have to go into some room?’ Sk’jin questions sounding suspicious.

‘No- I just need the main wiring system-’ Namjoon manages to get out before Sk’jin lets out a huff of annoyance.

‘So why am I here?’ Sk’jin asks emphatically.

‘I told you I would have gone myself but-’

‘-they really are like two kids aren’t they?’ Hoseok chuckles.

‘It’s cute!’ Taeh’yung adds.

This promptly shuts them both up.

After some more pained crawling/planking, Namjoon and Sk’jin pull themselves over to a thickly coiled nest of wires.

‘The air-ducts are down here,’ Sk’jin comments before adding, ‘6 minutes.’

‘No sign of the ministers coming back,’ Hoseok says quietly. ‘Yoongi?’
‘I’m just outside the arena gates.’

‘Tae?’

‘I’m inside the waiting room- don’t worry! I won’t let anyone see me!’

‘Namjoon?’

‘I’m going in now,’ Namjoon grits out as he quickly rewire one of the mainframe wires into his screen. Most systems will alert the ship for intrusion if you were to do this outside the Bot-line wires. However, seeing as Namjoon wasn’t planning on just separating some wires and checking to see if any were burnt or damaged, but doing a deep-dive into the ship’s system, that was definitely going to trigger the firewalls. So instead Namjoon activates his own personal and customized virus; it allowed him to duplicate the exact same coding used in the ship’s system to enter unnoticed without raising any alarms despite being a rather direct and obvious intrusion.

‘So there’s this wonderful application,’ Sk’jin begins, voice carrying over quietly to where Namjoon is patiently waiting on tenterhooks as his little brand of virus makes its way into Van’s ship’s system. ‘You simply input the name of the dish, the planet of origin, and the list of ingredients comes out. Then you have the option of recreating this dish, with similar ingredients found in your vicinity. Many of the Flotsam and Jetsam have been asked to cooperate with this software, so that travellers who prefer cooking for themselves, or are perhaps craving home-based meals, have a close match to their native ingredients. It’s what I did when I cooked Yoongi food from Earth. Do you think I should that? I should cook him a great meal for his win. Maybe this thing called pizza.’

Namjoon isn’t sure why but he asks, ‘What’s that?’

Sk’jin makes a sound suggesting that he’s extremely pleased with Namjoon’s question. The installation is completed and all the channels open up.

‘It was listed on the Top Ten Most Popular Dishes from Earth, ranked by both Humans and other Beings in a poll conducted by the GLA Universal Culture Report,’ Sk’jin says rather excitedly. ‘The most popular version of this pizza – spelt P, I, Z, Z, A- pizza, is a flat round dough, covered in a sauce made of tomatoes, garlic, salt, and some pepper. A thing called cheese is added on this, and a wide range of assorted vegetables and meats- some of the more popular choices are mushrooms, greens, ham, something called pepperoni. It looks amazing. I want to look for replacement ingredients.’

‘Uh- yeah, we can do that,’ Namjoon replies somewhat absentmindedly as he finally reaches the broadcasting channels under the communications mainframe.

‘Really? How marvelous! Yoongi would appreciate that, right?’

‘Uh- yeah sure.’

‘Joonie? 2 minutes.’

Namjoon doesn’t bother replying to that as the entire networking system finally uploads on his screen. He wishes he had a bigger screen as he scrolls down to find the main distribution channel. It wasn’t as though this was difficult- the time constraint was really stressful and Namjoon could honestly do without that.

He exhales with relief as he disconnects all of the ports, scrambling the signals. No alarm is triggered and the main distribution channel is still sending out signals except it’s all scrambled and irreversible. Namjoon doesn’t know how long it will take to alert Van about this situation- or if he would be alerted about it. He cushions his head on his arms for a brief second, his muscles strained and his body rushed from intensity of it all.

‘It’s done,’ Namjoon quietly whispers out.

‘Yoongi’s just stepped out into the arena,’ Hoseok says almost at the same time. ‘They’re introducing the fighters and the stakes.’

‘The OrTank?’

‘He’s not shown,’ Hoseok sounds confused, ‘Taeh’yung?’

‘He’s asleep- they haven’t moved him.’

‘What’s wrong?’ Namjoon asks, pushing himself up again, getting ready to leave. How was he going to turn around in this cramped space?

‘It’s just…the item the fighters are battling for is normally placed up on a dais,’ Hoseok mumbles.

‘We know they’re interested in him,’ Namjoon replies, pulling back the wires and coiling them back to their sockets. ‘They probably don’t want to cause more Beings to be interested. Sk’jin let’s go-’

Sk’jin is nowhere to be seen

‘Sk’jin?’

‘Namjoon- crawl up ahead- I…you have to see this.’

‘Sk’jin we should leave-’

‘Namjoon. Now.’ Sk’jin sounds unsure.

‘Are you coming back pa?’

‘Yeah- in a moment- stand by all right? Get ready to leave as soon as possible after Yoongi wins.’ Namjoon grits out as he crawls forward quickly, not liking Sk’jin’s tone of voice. He makes it down the vent and he comes across a cross-section. But he doesn’t have to guess where to look next. To the right, the duct widens out a little, allowing Namjoon to actually crouch on his hands and knees. Sk’jin is at the end, looking through a ventilation turbine that was slowly spinning.

And only now does the smell Sk’jin was talking about before hits Namjoon.

It’s strangely rank- not rotten or fermented; just incredibly old and stale almost.

‘Are you guys almost out? What’s wrong?’ Hoseok asks, by whatever agent-honed senses he was able to pick up on their silence, knowing at one something was awry.

‘We’re- we’re finding another exit out,’ Namjoon doesn’t know why he’s lying.

Sk’jin turns his head, eyes gleaming red in the weird light that filtered through the shifting fins of the turbine. Namjoon quickens his pace until he’s shoulder to shoulder with the Khol’isa. Sk’jin just nods at the gap between the fins and Namjoon peers through.

It’s clearly a laboratory of sorts- sterile white walls, a Medical-Bed just a little to the side, and a bunch of cabinets. But that wasn’t what was the most alarming, or why Namjoon is reeling in his mind.

‘Guys what’s wrong?’ Hoseok asks.

‘We can’t tell them,’ Sk’jin says at once in a barely audible voice. ‘I don’t know how Yoongi thinks or processes information- but I can guarantee this isn’t going to help him in the arena!’

‘Just a dead end,’ Namjoon replies tersely. ‘Sorry- we got spooked. Is the fight starting?’

‘The final bets are taking place.’

Namjoon takes a deep breath.

The laboratory is filled with OrTanks- not just any regular OrTank, but identical to the one Yoongi was about to fight to death for.

And they were all empty.

‘We need to get out of this planet.’ Namjoon grits through his teeth, crawling backwards quickly. ‘Now. Taeh’yung? Are you there?’

‘What’s wrong pa?’

‘I don’t care what you do- I need you to get to the OrTank, pull him out of there and start heading for the ship,’ Namjoon orders as Sk’jin also crawls back towards him

‘What’s wrong? Why? Pa?’

‘They’ll see us- they’ll know it’s us-‘ Sk’jin argues at once from behind him.

‘I know-‘ Namjoon flattens down as they reach the smaller vents. ‘-and at this point I don’t care- we just need to get out as soon as possible-‘

There’s a distinct clunking sound that resounds through the vents.

Namjoon stops immediately. Turning around to look at Sk’jin as though to confirm what he heard, he finds that the Khol’isa is frozen, eyes wide, looking tense.

‘Was that-?’

Something metallic; a canister of sorts, falls through vent on the other side of the cross-section in the vents. And almost immediately a white smoke starts to fill the vent.

‘They know we’re here-!’ Sk’jin hisses, shooting forward. ‘Hurry and get out-!’

‘Namjoon?! Sk’jin-?!’

Not caring about the wires or that they were definitely making a lot of noise, Namjoon scuttles forward but he knows that it’s too late. He doesn’t need to breathe for an extended period of time but Sk’jin is a different story. His pace behind him has slowed down dramatically in the past 5 seconds and the white smoke around them thickens even more. Sk’jin’s eyes gleam faintly in the weirdly viscous white smoke before blinking shut and he collapses.

‘Hoseok get ready to leave- Taeh’yung-!’ there’s a pop in his ear and Namjoon knows they’re doomed now.
Cursing, Namjoon reaches over to pull Sk’jin but at that moment the entire duct shudders. Freezing his movement, Namjoon manages to catch hold of Sk’jin’s hand and grips hard.

The duct thunders again and this time wires around him snap, catching at his skin. Moving without realizing what he was doing, Namjoon rushes backwards towards Sk’jin, shielding the unconscious Khol’isa.

There’s an ominous grating metallic shriek and suddenly Namjoon is falling and bright light surrounds him.

The horrible stench of something foul and rank overwhelms him as he opens his eyes properly, trying to shake off his disorientation. He finds himself on the floor of the laboratory, surrounded by even more OrTanks.

‘Perfect,’ a voice says just as a booted leg comes into Namjoon’s view.

‘Tell Seulgaan we got them.’

There’s a sharp blinding pain that blossoms on the back of Namjoon’s head and right before he loses consciousness, Namjoon thinks: not again.
(Author’s Notes)

Guess who actually made it in time with the update?? Yes me. I don’t know why, and I’m suspicious AF but university has gotten less stressful after midterm. Did they lower the pressure on our assignments and projects, or is it that I’ve gotten used to it now? Or is this a combination? Because I find that I have a bit more time? And I don’t know if I should be suspicious or not…
I also found that I’ve been getting unexpectedly good grades in my 3D classes like, okay? Since when?? These two classes were the ones I was most worried about?!?! And I suddenly have legit good grades???. is shook and confused

ALSO SOMEONE NEEDS TO WRITE A ZOMBIE AU WITH BTS IN IT. NOT A SCARY FEELS TRIP ZOMBIE AU BUT LIKE A CRACK ONE. I love how Jin practically threw Yoongi to the zombies to save himself. also someone needs to write a Snow White and the Seven...Six dwarves au or something. fucking hilarious. and and and!!
i've had this WIP since like, March this year and it's a chaptered yoonmin arranged-marriage ABO-ish au. it's gonna be like, 5 chapters is anyone interested. it's also i think an apology to the people have read passengers and cried at me about it so...like a super fluffy fic as a "please forgive me"? even though it's late? i swear i wanted to put it up before uni started but i got caught up with...a lot of stuff...ehe, and then i tried to put it up for jimin's birthday but then...uni...and i haven't had the time to really write it so it's been slow....but i enjoy writing a lot of fluff to take a break from the intensity of adegu *sweats * so yeah, i should be posting the first chapter like next week ^_^
i hope you all enjoy this.
'All good?'

‘Yes, fucking hell, I already told you less than a minute ago.’

‘Yeah well, Humans are weak- gotta make sure.’

‘I’ll fucking show you weak you bean pole- move!’

His friend cackles as he jumps away from his swinging punch.

‘Short arms! Are all Humans small like you?’

‘Literally fight me.’

‘Nah- I don’t fight children.’

‘You two! We’re still on mission!’

‘Sorry!’ they both yell back, but their team-leader has a suppressed smile on her face. Or a grimace. Either one, it was hard to tell with her features. But it was probably a smile; because they were finally out in clear open air, in-planet, and not inside a ship.

They jab at each other as they track through the rocks, low but strong lights illuminating their paths from their hand-held TeorSers.

‘You still haven’t told them about this have you?’ he asks as they stop goofing around. They couldn’t help it. They’d been stuck in a ship for almost a year. And this was the first planet they were able to dock into. And it smells fresh, but at the same time, it smells old. Up until now, they were walking over ancient igneous rock; black and smooth. But he knew they would soon approach; the massive valley they had flown over. Visibility was low- but morning was just beyond the horizon and they were walking towards it. Heavy storm clouds hung overhead, but with no sign of rain.

‘They’ll worry,’ he replies. ‘I don’t want her to worry. Besides, it’s not like I could anyways. Confidentiality and all that shit.’

‘Confidentiality or honest to goodness no communications line? I feel so stranded here.’
‘We got here just fine didn’t we? We’ll get out all right,’ he snorts, pausing a moment to catch his breath.

‘It’s getting steeper.’

‘Yeah, no shit Sherlock.’

‘Sherlock?’

‘Human phrase,’ he waves his hand dismissively.

‘What did you tell them?’ he asks.

‘I said it was a special case study; that I was part of a diplomatic mission,’ he explains.

‘Well…that’s not entirely a lie.’

‘No…no it’s not.’ He agrees.

‘You didn’t even tell them that you were joining the corps were you?’

‘I don’t think they would like the idea of it,’ he shrugs. ‘They think I’m still part of the Raksane Tayi Scientific Panel.’

That part wasn’t a lie. He was still part of the Scientific Panel. Maybe just not the “scientific” branch of it though.

‘She’ll find out when she joins the schools in Tayi; you know that, right?’

‘Yeah- but that’s something I will worry about in 2 years’ time.’

They walk in silence for a while. Their team is spread out but evenly, all within eye-sight. They’d been walking for nearly 5 hours now, but they encountered nothing. No insect, no animal, no Beings.

‘You think we could discover anything though? I mean; we were given permission but this still sort of feels like breaking and entering.’

‘The entire planet is under their supervision- their people as well,’ he shrugs. ‘We’ll be fine.’

‘Yeah; I hope so. Can’t wait to sleep on the fucking ground with rocks and everything.’

‘I’m not that desperate.’

‘Yeah sure...what was that?’

He pauses, ears pricking up at once.

‘What is it?’ their team-leader asks at once.

‘Do you hear that?’ he asks. They all trusted his ears the most. His species were known for their particularly keen hearing abilities- rumors were that they could even hear thoughts if they tried hard enough (all complete bullshit, according to him).

Everyone quiets down, alert and cautious. Then he hears it.
A soft quiet voice, singing in the distance, carried by the wind.

They were in a wide rocky terrain, the wind could pick up on the sound, no matter how far, and spread it wide and around, bouncing and echoing on the rocks.

‘Is that…is that singing?’

‘I think it’s singing.’ He confirms.

‘Bring out the frequency-radar,’ she orders one of the others. ‘Run a scan- is it digital or real. It’s too clear to be heard.’

Then a loud very real, very deep sound permeates the air followed by a flash of bright magenta light.

They all cover their eyes immediately but he’s still looking up at the sky, into the stormy clouds, pupils following movement over the dark sky.

‘What is it-?’ he tries to ask but the sound is gone just as immediately as it had come. The singing had stopped too.

‘What was that?’

‘A ship,’ he reports at once. ‘Extremely large- very fast. Round in shape.’

‘Are you sure?’

‘Positive.’

‘We can’t take chances- we’re in unchartered territory; we need to make careful moves. We need to be cautious.’

‘I thought it was said that the planet was dormant?’ one of them demands. ‘Practically unknown to the rest of the Universe?’

‘That’s what the readings say- we can’t be sure.’

‘Did you recognize the design?’ she asks him.

‘No,’ he replies at once. ‘I’ve never seen it before. And I don’t think anyone would forget it.’

‘All right- we stick to the plan. No splitting up, no deviating. Just keep a sharp eye out; anything unusual, you report at once. Everyone clear?’

‘Clear.’

‘Run that frequency –radar, let’s find that source.’
Curses leaving his mouth in a rough torrent of languages, Sk’jin finds himself on a mildly cool marble floor, patterned with light and thin veins of gold.

‘Sk’jin, thank you for coming to meet me.’

Khol’isa etiquette dictated that you bow, lowering yourself while bowing your head once. They had a culture of being courteous; an entire culture situated around the elegance of movement, of refined and systematic gestures used to convey and or reflect thoughts and behavior. The Khol’isa were known as some of the most elegant, noble, and wise Beings living in the Universe.

But Sk’jin does none of this. He feels far from elegant, far from refined. He’d been jumped- and then knocked out. When he had come around, he had found himself bound, gagged, and stuffed into a cage of sorts.

He just stands at the doorway, looking into the office he remembers all too well.

‘What do y’want?’ Sk’jin demands at once.

‘I just wished to speak to you,’ K’mara states simply. ‘When we awoke from the Bloodmoon, only 73, 821 of us were sane enough to survive. Ever since then, only 48, 104 of us adapted to the new world we found ourselves in. I know each and every of my people- I know them by face, by name, and by the nightmare we all shared. And yet, I do not know you. I do not see you in my memory. Who are you?’

Sk’jin doesn’t reply, instead he makes himself comfortable on the chair. The office is incredibly pristine, opulent but not tasteless. Sk’jin feels out of place in here. It was a complete reversal from his current living conditions. Speaking of which.

‘I wasn’t aware you knew where I lived,’ Sk’jin scowls at the Khol’isa in front of him. ‘How’d you find me?’

Their eyes lock and the sharp, bright pull of her eyes summons a blinding pain to his temples. He hates himself for looking away. Hates himself for the way the world of red, hands, and glass spear through his memories.

‘I have a very good team under my command,’ she says instead. ‘No one can truly hide from me. Where there are Beings, there is greed, there is need, there is desperation. This greed, their desperation, can all be bought in exchange of information.’

‘Well congratulations then,’ he spits out.

‘So, will you speak with me? You are the prodigal son, long lost, and now returned. I would welcome you amongst our people again- to give you a home-’

‘Nice try- it ain’t happening,’ Sk’jin sneers. ‘I’m here, livin’, doin’ what I want, not getting’ ‘to trouble. I ain’t causing shit, so you can leave me ‘lone. T’was nice meetin’ you and shit- so I’m gone.’

Sk’jin stands, pushing back his chair.
‘How is Zitao?’

Sk’jin was expecting this. So he doesn’t show any change in his expression. He also knew that he couldn’t lie to K’mara.

He had known, the moment the guards had shown up at his door. He had hoped that he would be able to live, undisturbed, just for a while, before he felt ready and sure enough to move out into the Universe again.

Taeh’yung had done his best. Bringing him back, pulling him out of that space- he had been given no explanation, because Taeh’yung didn’t know how to explain it. He did, however, carefully and gently tell him one thing that now haunted his steps and every move.

‘I’m sure y’know better than me,’ he mutters, still standing. ‘Didn’t ya say ya got eyes everywhere? Why ask me when you probably track ‘im?’

‘It’s safety precaution- and we do not invade privacy. I just simply know where he is- and besides, it’s not like he’s hiding either. Unlike you.’ K’mara leans back on the chair, lifting her chin a little to look him straight in the eye again. Sk’jin looks away.

‘As you well know; I was able to find out more about your life- a little more about your story. You were difficult to track- but you lead quite the illustrious life didn’t you?’ K’mara smiles before she lifts up an incredible flat and highly customized screen. She taps across the surface for a moment in feigned contemplative action. ‘Sk’jin, you were the leader of what most would consider to be the largest pirating network in the Known Universe. You controlled more than half of the Underverse and you were one of the main reasons why the Venture Unit couldn’t buy or deal connections with the Underverse. Such power- a pity it all fell away because of one smartly placed agent who lead you awry.’

Sk’jin grits his teeth down, hands itching to rub at his temples because his headache was persisting now.

Lies, he thinks.

‘That was a lifetime ago,’ he manages. ‘It’s irrelevant.’

‘Is it?’ She tilts her head to the side. ‘It says here you went to Orẹ 7 months ago- how is that irrelevant? Wasn’t he from Orẹ? Why did you go there if it was irrelevant?’

‘Why are you following me?’ Sk’jin demands.

‘Please sit down Sk’jin, and allow me to explain why I asked you here-‘

‘-your fucking men dragged me here out of force!’ Sk’jin gesticulates wildly.

‘And I apologize for that,’ K’mara replies smoothly. ‘We had no choice but to use force; I knew you would refuse to come see me if I asked you.’

Sk’jin stares down at K’mara for a while before he takes a seat stiffly again. K’mara smiles and leans forward as though preparing herself to speak. Clearing her throat, she starts.

‘I will not ask you for details regarding your life while you were away, or pry into how you are here, or about Zitao,’ she declares. ‘These are private aspects of your life-‘

‘-so now you respect my privacy?’ Sk’jin mutters scathingly. Nonplussed, K’mara continues.
‘Private aspects of your life and so it shall remain. I have brought you here because I wish to offer you a deal.’

‘No.’

‘No?’

‘No.’

‘You don’t know what I’m going to say.’

‘No I don’t, and I don’t care either,’ Sk’jin shrugs. ‘I ain’t about whatever shit you do ‘round here.’

‘So you’re saying you’re not at all curious? About what happened to you? Why it happened? Don’t you want to know more?’ K’mara asks. ‘You were tricked by-’

‘Look,’ Sk’jin interrupts. ‘I was played- shit happened. It’s not a big deal ‘nymore. It happened, so it happened. It’s in the past.’

‘How generous of you,’ K’mara smiles. ‘So are you saying you don’t want to read his files?’

Sk’jin’s eyes snap up to meet K’mara’s.

‘What the fuck do y’mean?’

‘He was an agent- of course he kept records and made reports. He also had a highly detailed private account- it was only recovered less than a sol ago, after we were able to finally go through all of the remains on that planet.’

‘He worked for the Venture Unit,’ Sk’jin says sharply. ‘Why do you have it?’

‘Under the GLA Clause of mission-related recovery on GLA-authorized mission, the recovery and or discovery of such items is under the property ownership of the organization responsible for bringing it back,’ K’mara says smoothly. ‘Any and every thing we found on that planet is under the GIU now. Including you.’

Sk’jin tenses.

‘I am a living Being- I am not owned,’ Sk’jin hisses out.

‘But are you?’ K’mara leans forward a little bit again. ‘What happened to your horns?’

‘Fuck you,’ Sk’jin hisses. ‘I’m through here.’

‘You can’t leave. I won’t allow it.’ K’mara states simply. ‘Please sit down. You may leave after I explain everything.’

‘Then stop fucking talkin’ in circles and get to the point!’ Sk’jin snaps.

‘As Khol’isa, we come the closest to immortality,’ K’mara says instead. ‘Immortality, as we both know, is nothing more than just extending a single nightmare. A nightmare you can’t escape, make what you will of it.’

‘The fuck are you trying to say?’ Sk’jin sighs out.
‘The Hyper-Reality Expansion program was designed to look into the possibility of creating an alternative dimension that would be able to control and manage large numbers of Beings. Not just within planets; this program, if successful, would have been able to control Systems and galaxies—maybe even the entire Universe. Of course, as we both know, it was not successful.’ K’mara laughs lightly. ‘Creating this blanket would have required a source of energy— a force that could continue on and on, ever expanding, ever growing— continuously over and through time and space. And of course, you would think Life-force is the answer. But I think we both know it’s not.’

Sk’jin feels his palm sweating.

‘I won’t ask you about what you know— but I think we both know what I’m talking about. Who we’re talking about,’ K’mara emphasizes lightly.

‘What does this have to do with me?’ Sk’jin asks tersely.

‘As you know, the Gaia case has been closed and shut from the mass public,’ K’mara sips on her tea for a moment before continuing. ‘No one is to know about what took place— who orchestrated it, and why it was done.’

‘Sure,’ Sk’jin shrugs.

‘And it is regrettable to say that though this discovery has been one of monumental exposure of just how truly enriched in evil we are as a system of organizations, it has also exposed unexplainable additions that we cannot explore openly.’ K’mara adds with a pause, ‘Additions that could all combine to form and create another Gaia Case.’

‘This has nothing to do with me,’ Sk’jin mutters.

‘It does.’ K’mara replies carefully. ‘When you were the pirate-lord of the Underverse, you kept all alliances between the Venture Unit and the pirating networks at bay— or at least most of it. After you left, we were able to form a stronger alliance with the Underverse— we were able to trace and find stronger connections within our cases, purge those who would wish to harm the lives of innocents and ruin what we have worked so hard to achieve.’

‘Well, I’m sorry I stole that from y’all,’ Sk’jin scoffs with an eye-roll. ‘Spaces, the entire fuckin’ GLA and GIU couldn’t fucking break through the Underverse— it’s no wonder y’didn’t catch wind of any of what was happenin’ round you— you fuckin’ think you’re all doin’ a good job aren’t you? Think twice— y’don’t know shit ‘bout anythin’.’

‘And I agree,’ K’mara nods. ‘We don’t know anything. If what has happened recently implied anything, it is that we’re blind. Extremely blind— and it’s not just us— not just the GLA, not just the GIU— even the Underverse. There are forces, there are dimensions, creations and Beings beyond the scope of our understanding— with abilities and power we cannot hope to understand.’

‘And I’m here because you want me to go back ‘n stop it all for you? Sweet, but not ‘nterested—sorry,’ Sk’jin raises his hands up.

‘Not stop it. I want you to go and understand it for me.’

‘You want me to work for you?’

‘I do.’

Sk’jin laughs, throwing his head back.
‘There is a mission being created and put together right now; by myself, and a few others who think like me- perhaps not all honourable or trustworthy, but we all still stand by the same thing,’ K’mara says, ignoring the way Sk’jin slumps against the table, still wheezing.

‘Oh yeah?’ Sk’jin hiccups. ‘What’s that side?’

‘The side where I can still live as I do- where I can still do as I please,’ K’mara states simply. ‘I am not going to try and sell you GLA propaganda and tell you that this is for the betterment of the Universe and all living Beings. I am here, asking you to risk yourself for me because I am selfish and will not allow some misinformation, or ignorance, to take away what I’ve worked so hard for.’

Sk’jin is taken aback.

‘Well- y’ain’t holdin’ back anythin’ are you?’ Sk’jin laugh humourlessly.

‘I do not lie to my fellow Khol’isa,’ K’mara says. ‘And I do not think you would appreciate it either.’

‘And what’s this mission ‘bout?’

‘We were able to trace back, with information we were lucky enough to gain directly from an eyewitness and source, about the possible genesis of what triggered the start of the Gaia Case,’ K’mara explains. ‘I think you might have met him before.’

Sk’jin doesn’t respond to that, a vivid image of striking silver eyes comes to mind.

‘When we studied this information further we came across an “addition”,’ K’mara says carefully.

‘You mean when the GLA or the GIU do something they’re not supposed to do and fuck things up?’ Sk’jin offers.

‘Possibly yes,’ K’mara sighs. ‘We were able to trace this information to Bhumi- an estranged System that refused the GLA but signed a treaty of peace as long as they were left undisturbed.’

‘I’m guessing this peace didn’t last long.’

‘It did not. They were a strange race of species- their abilities and skills, not to mention their elemental structure- it was all ancient- they had a culture, a whole new life and existence beyond anything we have ever seen and known- untouched and hidden almost.’

‘But you found them- or did at least once.’

‘An accident,’ K’mara says carefully. ‘There are no details further explaining what happened.’

‘Sure.’

For the first time since this entire ordeal started, K’mara seems to lose her composure at Sk’jin’s lack of interest. And before she can say anything Sk’jin makes a show of yawning and gets up.

‘Well- this was fun ‘n all, but I’m gonna go-‘

‘Some of them are still alive,’ K’mara says abruptly.

‘What?’

‘Members of your crew- some of them are still living,’ K’mara says gently. ‘Some are in prison-some are still roaming the Underverse.’

Sk’jin doesn’t say anything- doesn’t speak.

‘Don’t you wish to see them?’

See them and do what?

‘I cannot imagine what you must have gone through,’ K’mara says quietly. ‘I cannot imagine the pain you must have suffered. It was as though the Bloodmoon followed you there.’

‘Yeah well- what’s done is done.’

‘And this could all repeat again.’ K’mara says emphatically.

‘And what do you want me to do about it?’ Sk’jin demands. ‘Sure I know shit- sure I went through shit- I’m not involving myself anymore-‘

K’mara pulls out another screen and slides it over to Sk’jin.

‘These are all the files he ever had- reports, entries, everything,’ K’mara pushes it towards him. ‘I am sorry I had to break your privacy to read it.’

‘My privacy?’ Sk’jin repeats.

‘You were mentioned many times in there.’ She smiles. ‘I am sorry.’

Sk’jin frowns.

‘Consider this my gift to you,’ she says with a small sigh. ‘And if you are willing to speak to me again; then you can come to me any time.’

Sk’jin wonders just how many sols it took for any single Being to ever find themselves truly free of what once held them together.

‘Or I’ll come find you,’ she smiles. And it’s a promise. A threat. Sk’jin’s wariness spikes up again as he looks up from the screen on the table to K’mara’s face.

‘Would you like a new place to stay perhaps? I’d hate to see a brother in such an unfair disposition.’

‘I’m doing quite well- thank you,’ Sk’jin says in clipped tones, stepping back. ‘I would appreciate you not comin’ ‘round to bother me ‘nynore.’

He turns and walks towards the doors.

‘You won’t take it? I think you should.’ K’mara calls after him.

‘The past is in the past,’ Sk’jin turns to look her straight in the eye even though his head hurts as a result. ‘That’s the problem with our people- we live in the past. We can’t move on.’

His hand is on the door-handles when K’mara calls after him again.

‘Sk’jin.’ She says quietly. ‘He left you a message.’

‘I don’t care!’ Sk’jin turns around, voice shrill and sharp. ‘I don’t give a fuck about some fucking message- or any of this shit! It won’t stop what happened- it won’t stop the nightmares- it won’t stop their voices! It won’t bring them back to life!’

‘If that’s so, what’s the harm in taking this?’ K’mara replies calmly, unperturbed by Sk’jin’s retort.

Fuming and disbelieving of his own actions, Sk’jin storms back to the desk and grabs the screen.

‘I’ll be waiting,’ K’mara says, no expression on her face.

Sk’jin slams the door behind him.

In the beginning it was different. There was a room he’d be taken to. Once a week.

And at first they do nothing more than analyze him. Strange looking- they were all strange. None of them looked alike. None of them seemed related to each other. Their faces and forms were all strange and different. A few looked like his people, but they clearly weren’t. They spoke a lot- but he couldn’t understand their words.

Then it started changing.

He was taken to another room, at regular intervals. They would look at his skin, apply something cold, or sometimes hot, or simply spray him with something. He didn’t know what was happening.

Until one day he woke from his nightmares into another one. His skin was on fire, and his bones were frozen.

They took him away and put him to sleep.

When he woke up he lay in a bed soaked with blood- his own. And with the side of his body open.

When he screams he’s cut short and made to sleep again. He doesn’t know or understand how they do it but he goes back to sleep.

And when he wakes again, he’s on a cold hard surface. No blood. No colours. Only cold and grey. There are 8 moons above him; shining bright and strong.

He calls for his mother. For his father. For his brothers and sisters. But no one comes. No one answers.
There is no eclipse in the sun. There is no ceremony celebrating the eye in the sky.

Someone steps in front of the 8 moons- a giant it would seem. It speaks, voice harsh and coarse to his ears.

He raises something in his hand- something small but something that looked sharp.

Darkness falls again and he’s in his nightmares again. But he finds safety in them now. Because in these nightmares, he knew wasn’t really in pain. That he wasn’t actually bleeding.

Everything changes when he opens his eyes again.

‘He’s too young for the fights. There’s no point in sending pipsqueaks like him to the fights.’

Their words made sense.

‘We could get the young ones fight against each other.’

‘That’s not gonna entertain- that’s shit and boring as fuck.’ Another voice snorts. ‘He seems resilient though- not a lot of his category survived you know? It’s been maybe a whole sol since we started? We should use him as one of the study-subjects. I think the researchers will want him.’

How did he understand them?

‘We’ll get paid good for him- he seems more advanced than the rest.’

‘All right- take him away.’

He stops feeling the colours one by one; until everything fades away into one blurred scream of pain and hopelessness. At one point, he just stops feeling.

He no longer felt like himself.

There was only one thing that persisted in him.

And that was colour.

One single colour.

Bleeding into his vision, stinging him under whatever remained of his skin. And despite coming to hate it. Despite wishing it away. It’s the only thing that grounds him. The only thing he can cling on to.
Sk’jin really hates himself for this. He was so predictably weak. So predictable. Of course K’mara would come for him from this angle.

He slumps onto the low flat bed of the apartment he’d been hiding in- the owner had apparently left for a holiday of sorts. It was one of the better living arrangements he had gotten into.

It was taking him longer than we wanted, adapting to the Universe and how much it had progressed and changed since he was a part of it. And now he wasn’t sure if he was even part of the universe anymore. Was he even alive?

He takes out the screen and without allowing himself to think much about it, scrolls through the menu tab until he comes across a video message with his name on it.

Hands shaking, Sk’jin takes a deep breath before tapping on the file.

It’s old. The quality of the footage is a little scratched and Sk’jin can tell it’s been edited to clear up the damaged bits of the pixels of the corrupted data. But it does nothing to prepare him.

Despite the jagged edges of the footage and the obvious aged appearance to the video, he has never looked so real to Sk’jin. Dimpled smile on place, large brown eyes filled with nervousness rather than his usual dignified glare. His body language indicated just how high his nervousness must have been when he’d been recording this. It was strange seeing him like this- he was always so reassuring, so well poised, serious, and calm. His mannerism bordering on stoic- egging Sk’jin to heckle and tease him.

It was surreal seeing him like this. What he’d been seeing in his waking nightmares was nothing more than a tinted hazy echo.

It was almost as though he had come back.

‘Hey,’ he coughs. He always coughed when he was nervous. And he was only ever nervous around Sk’jin. ‘I’m guessing this is something you’d watch if…if things don’t go how I planned them to go.’

He looks around for a moment, dark grey hair falling over his eyes before he pushes it away as though annoyed. It did annoy him, Sk’jin knew that all too well. But he grew it out because Sk’jin had told him that he liked his hair like that. That he enjoyed brushing his hair with his fingers.

‘I think you always knew-‘

‘I did,’ Sk’jin whispers in reply, unable to help himself.

‘-but you just kept me around- keep me around,’ he corrects himself. ‘I thought you were gonna toy around with me- then if I was lucky you’d kick me out. Or maybe even kill me. But you didn’t. You
‘I didn’t,’ Sk’jin replies quietly. ‘You know I didn’t.’

‘They sent me here on an off-chance, that I’d be able to convince you- or maybe influence you. To discover more about the Alliance. To really infiltrate the shit that’s going on in this Universe. You always said I cared too much- that it would be used against me. That it was a point that could be used to manipulate me. And maybe that is what they used to get me here- and maybe I’ll die because of it. But...I got to meet you, didn’t I?’ he laughs quietly, wiping at his face before he looks down, expression serious.

His chest aches. Sk’jin hasn’t felt this in a long time.

‘It’s not...it’s not just the Alliance. There’s something darker- something far worse than what we think the Alliance is doing. There were records of sightings- rumors and stories. Things that don’t make sense. But it all stemmed from the Underverse- it’s why we’re trying so hard to forge this deal- trying to open the Underverse so that we can get the connections. But...’

‘But you knew that opening that connection would also mean opening it for everyone and everything else,’ Sk’jin says quietly.

‘You’ve lived for so long- not calling you old!’ he grins in that rare way Sk’jin loved; where his dimples seemed to deepen to impossible depths. Sk’jin remembers poking into them sometimes, asking him if he kept food there to eat later. ‘And you’ve seen so much. Been through so much. And I know why you would...try to protect what you have now. Because I try to protect what I have. And at this moment, it’s this place. It’s this ship. It’s you.’ He pauses a while. ‘I want to be serious, but it’s kinda difficult when I can hear you shouting in the Bridge even from here. I think Ti is going to come get me in a moment- she’ll probably scream at me to scream at you.’

That was possible. It was extremely possible. Sk’jin guesses that’s exactly what happens.

‘I still don’t know if you’re just...if you’re just toying with me. I hope you’re not. I hope you weren’t. Or maybe it would be better if you did. I don’t know,’ he pauses, as though distracted. Sk’jin hears his own voice in the background.

He laughs quietly, eyes twinkling in that rare way they sometimes did.

‘I...I think I should just stop this here- and tell you face to face.’

And he did. He did, and Sk’jin now wishes he hadn’t.

‘And I shouldn’t…I shouldn’t leave this for you should I? I should probably also tell you- I have faith. Not in the fact that you have to make the right choice. The right decision or because you feel obliged- morally or whatever. But faith in you. And unless I’m being played. Unless this is all... just a way of messing with me- then I’ll say it here,’ he looks straight at the camera, warm brown eyes serious and heavy. ‘The Universe is so much wider, so much more than we could ever fathom. There are forces that exist- either good or bad, we cannot tell. And I know you’ll say that it’s my “annoying hero-complex” and “stereotypical protagonist who lives with his own self-righteous convictions” speaking but I also know that you understand exactly what I mean. And I know, that you will do it one day. Because you’re not what you make yourself to be. You are so much more.’
He smiles that smile again- impossibly fond and endearing.

‘I NEED YOU TO COME AND CONTROL YOUR DAMNED BOYFRIEND FOR A MOMENT HERE-‘ Ti bursts through the door, light flooding the dark room.

‘NOT MY BOYFRIEND!’ Sk’jin hears himself scream back.

‘I LITERALLY DON’T CARE- DO SOMETHING!’

He chuckles, shaking his head fondly.

‘The Khol’isa make life-long promises and hold true to that,’ he ponders a moment, readying himself to head back to the Bridge. He’s fiddling with the edge of his sweater. ‘And I promise you now, that I’ll make you see it.’

*

It’s a beautiful day.

Šerdesas was typically beautiful all day round- including their nights which Sk’jin preferred. But the sunrise feels nice.

And dressed as though to match the sunrise, K’mar fixes a smile to his face as he walks towards Sk’jin. He’s wearing robes of rosy pink lined with gold leaves.

‘It is a beautiful morning,’ K’mar says in way of greeting before he bows elegantly.

‘It is,’ Sk’jin replies, standing to bow in response. K’mar seems pleased at his mannerism before they both sit on the park bench. They both sit in silence for a while, not speaking.

‘I accept your offer.’ Sk’jin says lightly. ‘Under a few conditions of course.’

‘Of course,’ K’mar laughs in reply before asking, ‘What made you change your mind?’

‘I made a promise,’ Sk’jin replies smoothly, looking up at the rosy sky. ‘I don’t break my promises.’

‘Of course,’ K’mar says again.

‘When does this mission start?’ Sk’jin asks, relaxing as he feels the sun on his skin.

‘In two years,’ K’mara replies. ‘You will have plenty of time to catch up, get back on your feet.’

Sk’jin wants to laugh at that. He’d been on his feet for a long time now. Too long.

‘Sounds good,’ he replies instead. He feels K’mar staring at him, her gaze questioning, as though unsure of how to react to Sk’jin’s behavior.

‘Well then,’ K’mar says, a little slowly. ‘I am glad. Welcome back Sk’jin; I hope we can finally conclude this mess together.’
‘Hm,’ Sk’jin hums in reply. He looks over at K’mara, sending her a bedazzling smile that seems to disturb his fellow Khol’isa. ‘I hope so too.’

K’mara is still looking at him with a guarded questioning look.

Sk’jin sits up straighter, turning his body towards the smaller Khol’isa.

‘So, shall we discuss my terms and conditions?’

---

The ground beneath him shakes.

Portends of another fall. Of lives lost.

Of voices screaming endlessly into the void. Of dreams stained black and red and white.

Out of habit, out of routine, out of need he steps out towards the sound.

The sun is neon but bleak- fumes of heat rise about him, the foliage heavy with humidity; almost as though bearing the same fate as all who landed here.

The sound was far off. Perhaps over two or three horizons. But the tremors had reached him- they always did. No matter how far off, no matter how distant. Because he was connected to it- to that world where time was replaced with the fear of slipping into a nightmare. A great plunge, slow, dark, and crushing.

He takes his time walking. Was he even walking? He just was- he just… moved. He felt no form of himself- he felt no shape of his Being, placed within the dimensions of this reality. Or rather, the reality he once knew.

Smoke rises- a tall column, stark yet faded; tinted red.

He can hear their voices before he sees them. Confusion, distrust, panic, worry.

It’s the same.

He watches them for a while- never too close in case it saw him again. It might have forgotten him for a while now; and he preferred it staying that way.
They last longer than the previous ones that fell. It’s unfortunate because it appeared as though they had come to this planet with the intention of finding it. They don’t seem surprised to see that ship; they study it; watching and observing. But they don’t have to look at it from afar to know of its nature when it stood amongst them—wearing the skin of one of their members.

It locks eyes with him for a moment before turning away. It knew he wouldn’t stop him. He never has. He never could.

They were at a stalemate with each other. Grudging forces in tandem with each other.

‘WHY ARE YOU HERE?’ it screamed at him.

‘I don’t know,’ he wanted to reply. It didn’t matter anyways.

In the end, there’s one that lingers. One that has understood. He doesn’t know how this Being has figured it out. But he’s accepting this—accepting the reality around him, or at least trying to, better than anyone he’s seen on the planet. He looks distraught but that was to be expected.

‘Who— who’s there?’ he demands one day, expression wild. He’d been following him around—wandering behind him slowly. Seeing if he was indeed capable of surviving. And so far, he had lasted the longest out of them all.

‘You can see me?’

‘I can fucking see everything—get the fuck out there and tell me what’s happening!’ he screams.

Not one to disappoint, he takes a step forward.

The Being, to his credit, doesn’t flinch, doesn’t waver. He just stares.

‘Who are you?’

‘I dunno.’

He seems to accept this answer.

‘How do I know you’re not…not part of that thing.’ He rephrases his question. ‘Fuck—how do I know I’m not fucking crazy?’

‘Listen—kid, y’know you’re dehydrated and shit right? Go get some water or somethin’.’

‘No—no I can’t stay— I have to leave—there’s so much—there’s too much, I have to report back—’ he begins freaking out again. His panic, confusion, and fear seem to coil out of him in smoky ribbons. A strange sight.

‘—they need to know—he needs to know, if they find him; if they understand this—’

‘Kid—calm down. Breathe— you need to breathe.’

He suddenly drops on the ground, his body shaking with shivers despite the fact that he’s sweating heavily, skin flushed in a way that suggested over-heating and sunburn.

He knew where everything was in this god-forsaken planet. And he knows that it wouldn’t take more than 10 minutes to get to a stream. Not that he ever used it or needed it; but he liked the sound. It was better than the white-noise that permeated his surroundings. Like some horrendous elegy into a nightmare.

‘Kid- calm down-‘

He’s not calming down. That much was for sure. And he doesn’t know how or why he does it but he swoops down on the Being, grasping onto his shoulders and dives straight into his mind.

Everything is black- and for a fraction of a second, he sees the inside of a foreign ship, the silhouette of a tall Being, a lopsided lazy grin, and a nice gentle voice speaking.

When he comes around, he goes into shock.

His vision is clear- no red to tint his surroundings. He could smell the damp green in the air, feel the oppressive heat of the humid weather around him. He lifts his hands- talons on his fingers, scales spreading down from his wrist.

‘What are you doing?’ a small voice sounds inside his mind. Or their mind. ‘Who are you?’

‘Jus’sleep for a while kid- I need to do some stuff.’

He takes a while walking back. He wasn’t used to this form; not having a form for so long. But this...this felt different- it felt almost like hope. He drinks from the streams- and his senses go haywire, nearly collapsing under the sudden overload of information and feelings. And he finds himself collapsing onto the ground, breathing in harsh gasps. There was pain, but also comfort.

It felt strange.

And a little like redemption.

When he makes his way back, he realizes now just how bad it had all been. He barely recognizes the ship anymore. It’s entirely covered up in vines, grown over and thick from centuries of growth. The main ship is barely visible. It takes him a while to cross through. He cuts his body a little on the harsher, stronger, older vines. But he finally makes it inside.

It’s strangely preserved. As though he were walking through one of those recreational museums the younger ones were so enthusiastic about.

It takes him a while, but he manages to find all of them. Or at least, what was left of them. He takes them outside, towards a soft brown patch of soil. He dedicates the entire day into digging; keeping himself hydrated regularly.

He places the bones into the pit and carefully covers it.

The sun is low on the horizon and he turns back, walking back to the ship, and towards where he knew he was waiting.

His form is still there- stretched out towards the direction of his room, hand held up.

He still can’t decide if the look in his eyes was of damnation, or if it was of forgiveness.

He takes the fragile skeletal hand in his, remembering the flesh that covered it, the high and free laughter that fell from his lips in peals when he lightened up.

‘Maybe I can live up to that promise now.’ He says quietly, picking up the bones with utmost care. It felt strange to hear himself speak- to hear words mirroring his thoughts into real phonics and Namjoon’s worried expression greets him when he opens his eyes. Momentarily, instead of Namjoon, it’s him, watching him with a worried look.

‘Hey,’ he says quietly. ‘How are you feeling? Can you hear me?’

Namjoon’s brow is furrowed, expression controlled and careful.

‘Unfortunately,’ Sk’jin replies, shaking himself awake. Neither of them were bound or cuffed-they’re inside a small room with no furnishing. Just bare walls. Namjoon is on one side, not looking too worse for wear. Namjoon’s skin is broken but there’s no bleeding. There’s a smattering of…something- Sk’jin isn’t sure. Bruises of some sort.

Namjoon rolls his eyes but it’s not out of irritation. Rather out of habit.

Sk’jin’s head is pounding and his throat feels as dry and coarse as sandpaper. He hated losing consciousness. Unnecessary memories resurfaced and he couldn’t stand it.

‘So- are we headed to our execution or are we about to witness the apocalypse?’ Sk’jin asks, sitting up carefully. He’s incredibly dizzy but speaks to distract himself.

‘They were just waiting for you to wake up,’ Namjoon jerks his hand to one side of the wall which promptly opens up and Van Seulgaan stands behind it.

‘Fuck- go away,’ Sk’jin mumbles irritably. ‘I don’t want to see your ugly face so soon after waking- it was hard enough with him being here.’ He nods at Namjoon who gives him a resigned frown.

‘Cheeky,’ Van chuckles. ‘Get up and follow me.’

‘No “please?”,’ Sk’jin mumbles again as he gets up, fighting his nausea. Namjoon helps him stand up though he waves the Kutsoglerin away the moment he’s stable enough not to totter about.
‘Sk’jin,’ Namjoon grits through his teeth, as though in warning.

‘Yeah yeah I know,’ Sk’jin grumbles in response. ‘Don’t be an asshole etc. Right?’

Oddly enough this makes Namjoon smile. ‘At least you know yourself.’

‘Lead the fucking way.’

The ship, now that they’re not crawling through bot-vents, is spacious and well designed.

There were staff, scuttling around in the long hallways. Many of them dressed in medically affiliated uniforms and Sk’jin doesn’t want to think of what takes place in this ship. It was perhaps a bit too ordinary, a bit too neat, and a bit too sterile looking. The stench from the vents still lingers in the air though.

For some reason, Sk’jin expects Van to take them to some prison or something, with OrTanks and cages, maybe throw them in there and aggressively torture them or something along that line. He doesn’t expect Van to take them to a spacious meeting room, overlooking the wide and open Hangar Bay opening, with Pompa looming a little below. There’s a long table at the center with comfortable seats and plates line up in front of three of the chairs. One at the head, and two facing each other.

Van gestures towards the seats and beckons them to sit down as he reclines back, reaching for a silver goblet filled with a pale orange liquid.

‘Something to eat? Drink?’ he gestures at the table as he grabs a bunch of fruits from a bowl and puts it on his plate. Namjoon doesn’t budge, shoulders a little tense but otherwise putting up a very convincing look of nonchalance laced with some mild irritation. As though he was being awfully delayed or set back with what was happening.

Sk’jin thinks ah fuck it and reaches for a few of the fruits himself. Namjoon doesn’t seem surprised at his movements.

‘So- we meet again,’ he nods at Namjoon after taking a sip from his goblet. ‘I was honestly just happy, ignoring you and your ship. But then you had to involve yourself with my ship- and you just happened to be carrying something rather interesting, mildly put,- and word is that you’re quite the catch right now.’

He peels one of the fruits, chewing thoughtfully before glancing over at Sk’jin, one eyebrow raised.

‘Sk’jin the pirate-lord,’ he says as though impressed. ‘One of K’mara’s now?’

‘I’d be mad because I’d say you're racially associating me, but you’re right,’ Sk’jin replies through a mouthful of fruit.

‘Honesty. That’s nice.’

‘t’s expensive,’ Sk’jin manages to reply before swallowing. Namjoon gives him a tired look.

‘That too,’ Van nods in agreement.

‘So- why are we here?’ Sk’jin asks, wiping at his mouth.

‘Well- other than the fact that I caught you sneaking around my ship and completely corrupting my Van explains. ‘And also, you nearly drove me bankrupt with that little stunt you pulled off in Grezma. I lost a lot of my bonds, most of my dealers, and an entire ship of goods. I had a lot of angry clients- and barely made it out alive.’

‘Pity,’ Sk’jin says before popping a few fruits into his mouth. They were delicious.

‘So it seems like you took my words to heart Namjoon,’ Van turns to address Namjoon. ‘Though I didn’t expect you to just suddenly drop out from the GLA radar like that. Word is that you’ve all gone rogue. Quite the bounty on your heads. Pulling off stunts like this isn’t going to help you out.’

He gestures towards the window, down at Pompa.

‘And I could report you. Or just arrest you right now.’ Van shrugs. ‘But I thought to myself. Why should I disregard a unit of Beings who were able to single-handedly, and I think I must add, unknowingly and unwillingly hindered and destroyed a business transaction that took 2 decades in the making.’

‘Indeed why should you,’ Sk’jin mumbles over his fruit. He feels Namjoon kick him. Instead he twists his feet and latches onto Namjoon’s foot, trapping him down. Namjoon glares at him from across the table, struggling to get his foot out but Sk’jin latches on. Van eyes the two of them, a mild look of judgment on his features before he continues.

‘I’ve long been a patron of the Pageant,’ he declares. ‘I have won some, lost some- it was a hobby of mine. I enjoy watching- something of a past time you could say. But it was never of much worth to me. Until today. In the Pageant, if you win, you could stand to earn a very good amount of units.’

‘You surprise me,’ Sk’jin peels a fruit with some difficulty.

Van hands him a fruit knife which Sk’jin takes with a nod of thanks.

‘And though I am not one for physical wealth-’

Sk’jin snorts and Namjoon rolls his eyes.

‘-I have lost quite a bit recently. And you and your fellow…”crew members”- are to blame for this.’ Van reaches for a jelly like dessert, again filled with fruits and tucks into it with an elegant silver spoon. ‘So I will now strike up a deal- one that I might add, you don’t deserve-‘-you’re so kind,’ Sk’jin mutters lightly as he reaches for the dessert as well. Namjoon has given up trying to pull his foot away.

‘-and will now offer you to clear up your debt to me, so to speak,’ Van concludes, ignoring Sk’jin’s random inputs.

He looks at the two of them, as though expecting some sort of response to his statement. When he receives nothing but blank stares from both Sk’jin and Namjoon, Van continues.

‘You have an extremely capable fighter at your employment,’ he addresses Namjoon.

‘He’s not under my employment,’ Namjoon replies at once.

Van smiles blandly at that, ‘You have an extremely capable fighter in your crew. And we are now standing before the largest fighting arena in all of the Known Universe and Underverse combined.’
‘We don’t earn money from rogue-rounds,’ Namjoon states, his voice steely. ‘We are fighting to pay off our ransom.’

‘We all know that your GI friend could easily wipe through the rogue-rounds,’ Van waves his hand dismissively. ‘This isn’t a fight worthy of someone like him. He deserves to fight where his true worth can be really seen.’

Sk’jin’s skin crawls at that statement.

‘I have been lucky enough to witness the GI fight before,’ Van says unexpectedly, drawing the faintest look of interest in Namjoon’s eyes. ‘And I’m sure that this one will be able to pull through and win the Pageant for me.’

‘The Pageant?’ Namjoon repeats.

‘Yes. This is where the most money is made.’

‘I hate to be that Being but we aren’t registered,’ Sk’jin states, pushing away the jelly fruit. It was too sweet to his liking. ‘We can’t just hop into the Pageant and start fighting. There’s a process and they’re already at the semi-final rounds.’

‘Yes- that is true- but such contestants can back down and nominate another player in their stead,’ Van declares. ‘I’m sure some Houses and Guilds would prefer to back down, earn a lot of money, save their contestant, and come back for another year.’

‘You’re willing to spend units on that?’ Namjoon scoffs. ‘You contradict yourself.’

‘Not everything is bought with units,’ Van turns to address Namjoon with a thoughtful nod. ‘But you don’t have to worry about that aspect- the GI can enter the Pageant safely and within the rules-’ he turns to address Sk’jin now and says with a smile, ‘So don’t worry.’

Sk’jin rolls his eyes in response.

‘So- what is your decision? Do you agree, or do I simply hand you over to the GLA?’ Van asks. ‘If you fight for me, and you win me my profits back- you are free to go.’

‘We will not make decisions without the rest of our crew-‘ Namjoon begins.

Van just reaches into his pocket, produces a screen and with a single tap, a holographic 3D live-footage plays.

Hoseok and Taeh’yung are sitting on either side of Yoongi, who appeared unscathed and actually a little bored. His hair was rumpled and his skin a little sweaty. But other than that, he didn’t have a single scratch on him.

‘Your captain wants to speak to you,’ he says to the hologram.

Taeh’yung starts at that and his eyes zero in on the camera lens and he beams brightly.

‘Pa! Jin! You’re both okay?’

‘Fine,’ Namjoon sighs in reply. ‘All good there?’

‘Peachy,’ Hoseok replies casually.

‘Yoongi? Doing all right?’ Sk’jin asks as he cuts up another fruit. The bowl was starting to get empty.

The Human holds up a thumbs up.

‘He won that round so easily! It was so cool! It was like, 10 seconds!’ Taeh’yung says excitedly.
‘He just went and bam! Done!’

Sk’jin and Namjoon share a look at that.

‘So. What’s up?’ Hoseok asks, grimacing and not even bothering looking at the camera.

Sk’jin speaks before Namjoon can, ‘You guys remember Van right? Slaver?’

‘He called me pretty!’ Taeh’yung chirps. ‘It was creepy!’

‘Yes- him,’ Sk’jin glances at Van who is watching all of this as though somewhat amused. ‘Well; it would seem that he lost a lot of units, and he’s holding us responsible for it for some reason.’

Taeh’yung gasps dramatically while Hoseok rolls his eyes. Yoongi is entirely unfazed, attention drawn elsewhere. Sk’jin isn’t even sure if he was listening to them.

‘So he’s saying if we win the Pageant, he’ll let us off of our “debt” and we’ll be “free”, though we had nothing to do with it.’ Sk’jin purposefully intones his voice, dripping with annoyance and irony.

‘That’s unfair!’ Taeh’yung stands up only to be pulled down by Yoongi who says, ‘That’s fine by me.’

Namjoon grimaces at that and again before he can say anything, Van claps his hands together, and smiles as he says, ‘Well- approval from your contestant, and your crew members know enough to understand that there’s no other way than to agree to my terms and conditions.’

Hoseok gives a short nod while Taeh’yung sighs dramatically and also nods.

‘Good.’ Van taps the screen and the hologram dies out.

‘So then, Captain Namjoon,’ he puts his hands together in a contemplative manner. ‘What do you say?’

Namjoon looks over at Sk’jin, one eyebrow raised. Sk’jin rubs his legs between his own, bouncing a little on his seat as he does so. He shrugs in reply, ‘Not much of a choice.’

Namjoon sighs before nodding stiffly.

‘Agreed.’

‘Perfect! Your contestant has 2 more rounds to win in the rogue-rounds, and then we’ll take him up to the Pageant,’ Van claps his hands together. ‘Well- now that that is out of the way. Let’s discuss the OrTank and why you have it.’ Van pushes his plate away, expression still mild and unchanged.

Sk’jin feels Namjoon stiffen though his interest is definitely piqued.

‘Throughout my long years in this business, I have come across many Beings. Rare, dangerous, unique, ancient- some downright abominable; but the most interesting ones I’ve come across are the eggs.’ Van says delicately.
‘The “eggs”?’ Sk’jin repeats, making sure his distaste was loud and clear over on his tone.

‘Yes. It’s what we call them. They’re extremely rare- and only sometimes do we get our hands on them. So when I saw that egg, and found that it belonged to your ship- I was doubly curious.’ Van replies. ‘How did you come by this egg?’

‘We don’t owe you an explanation-‘ Namjoon begins roughly, eyebrows furrowing in that way where his eyes become hooded.

It’s a good look for intimidation and looking aggressive but that’s not what they needed right now. Right now they needed some good ol’ honesty.

‘We’re working on a classified mission issued by the joint authority of the GLA, GIU, Yisheng Directory, and Venture Unit,’ Sk’jin reels off smoothly. ‘We are contractually obliged and restricted from telling anyone else other than those directly involved in this mission about the contents and objective of the mission. If you wish to inquire about our mission, however, please contact Admiral K’mara. She will readily explain to you.’

Namjoon gives him an unmasked and very open expression of disbelief and incredulity.

‘If you are indeed working for the GLA and all of them combined,’ Van waves a hand in a circle in the air. ‘Then why are you on the run?’

‘I am Admiral K’mara’s trusted aide,’ Sk’jin states simply as he leans back, allowing a coy smile to settle on his lips. ‘What has happened so far- being hunted across the Universe, being tracked and traced- is all part of our mission. Your involvement in our plan was not intended- I wish we could gather the full authority of the GLA to clear matters up between us, but that would be under direct violation of our contract as well as mission statement. Not to mention, you would probably not wish for this to take place, considering your position and status.’

‘If that’s the case, as a commanding officer of the GLA, I will further apprehend this egg as well as your mission and take over as advisor,’ Van replies smoothly. ‘By using the clause under the GLA policy of mission failure.’

‘You are first and foremost a member of the GLA are you not?’ Sk’jin asks, ignoring Namjoon’s nudges under the table.

Van nods to that.

‘So you should know that by under the GLA Clause of mission-related recovery on GLA-authorized mission, the recovery and or discovery of such items is under the property ownership of the organization responsible for bringing it back.’ Sk’jin reels off. ‘And this is only applicable if said mission has actually been terminated or has been set to deactivated. This is not the case with our mission, henceforth that clause is null. The egg is under our property and right- and our mission is still set. Whatever inconvenience we are facing at this moment is in fact due to your appearance and involvement.’ Sk’jin leans forward, brushing aside his hair.

‘Or do you want to associate yourself to the failure of this mission?’ Sk’jin asks. ‘And find yourself in court, questioned not only by the GLA but the Venture Unit, the GIU, and the Yisheng Directory?’

Van Seulgaan doesn’t comment. He simply stares straight at Sk’jin. But Sk’jin sees it. Sees him calculating.

Namjoon hasn’t said a word, watching them quietly from the side.
‘K’mara did well in choosing you as her pawn,’ Van says after a while. ‘We are at a stalemate.’

‘As agreed, we will win the Pageant, and all winnings will be transferred to you,’ Sk’jin leans back again, nodding once at Namjoon as though for confirmation. ‘Then we will leave- taking back with us everything that is rightfully and lawfully ours, under the mission statement. If you want to intrude you’re going to have to talk to Admiral K’mara.’

Sk’jin stands and not a second later, so does Namjoon.

‘This was a fun talk- we’ll be leaving now,’ Sk’jin says, giving his best dismissive nod towards Van before turning around and heading towards the doorway. He spares Namjoon a look and he can see the questions in his eyes. In this dim light, his eyes look like a warm shade of brown.

‘You’re relying on the goodwill of one of the most cruel Beings to ever place a seat on the GIU Trifecta,’ Van calls after him. ‘I hope you understand what it is that you’re doing.’

Sk’jin only turns his head around, smiling sweetly at the Tayian.

‘Thank you for your concern Van Seulgaan.’

*

Sk’jin walks past the ranks of Van’s guards breezily, arms clasped behind him as he takes lofty steps down. Namjoon is just a little behind him to his right, grimacing at everything and everyone. They walk out of the Hangar and back towards where their stolen maintenance Transporter was waiting for them. If it was still there.

He can feel Namjoon’s agitation rolling off of the Kutsoglerin in waves. He wants to look back and maybe tease him a bit about it but it’s most likely that he’ll burst out into some agitated speech and Sk’jin doesn’t have time for that.

‘Hey! Hey you two!’

They both pause, finding a bunch of Docking Bay officers approaching them.

‘You’re trespassing- we’re here to take you back to Pompa, back to your ship,’ one of the Pompen states brusquely.

‘Oh! Oh my! We’ve been trespassing Namjoonie!’ Sk’jin giggles at the Kutsoglerin who grimaces even more in reply. ‘Please take us!’

The Pompen eye them suspiciously before they round around them and lead them through another hallway. Sk’jin skips along in the front, looking back to wink at Namjoon. Namjoon shoots him the most unimpressed look he’s ever managed. It’s a new record.

They’re taken to a regular Transporter used by the Pompen Sphere-Patrol and then unceremoniously pushed into a small holding cell with no seats and only hand rails.

‘Cozy,’ Sk’jin comments, leaning up against Namjoon.

‘There’s enough space for us to stand separately,’ Namjoon says brusquely.
Namjoon’s exaggerating- there was barely enough space for two of them. This would be small even for the Pompen.

‘But what’s the fun in that?’ Sk’jin leans a little closer- his head was still hurting. He was going to have to ask Taeh’yung about this- if he could give him an explanation that is. Namjoon tenses up even more, arching his body away despite not being able to.

‘Do I make you nervous?’ Sk’jin asks as he grins at Namjoon’s obvious discomfort. Namjoon stops fidgeting for a moment before sighing.

‘I’m not comfortable with close contact.’ He replies roughly, glancing down briefly at Sk’jin.

His eyes are warm and brown in this lighting.

Shaking his head a little, trying to clear his mind, Sk’jin grins a little late in reply. To make up for that, he leans in even more to the point where he now looped his arms around the Kutsoglerin. Namjoon isn’t the most comfortable Being to lean on but Sk’jin isn’t looking for comfortable. He’s just…teasing.

‘Well I’m comfortable with close contact,’ he says, resting his chin on Namjoon’s shoulder.

They’re quiet for a while. The transporter starts up, the holding cell hums lightly around them. There’s a single bar that’s loose and it rattles ever so slightly, creating a repetitive sound that Sk’jin knows will irritate him in a few minutes.

‘This is humiliating,’ Namjoon mumbles after a moment.

Sk’jin laughs.

‘Are you embarrassed?’

‘I’m uncomfortable.’ Namjoon says, his tone suggesting Sk’jin better move. But moving away would mean being almost face-to-face. And in this lighting, Sk’jin would prefer not to look at the Kutsoglerin’s face.

‘Don’t be- I’ll keep this moment secret and safe.’ Sk’jin readjusts his arms and makes himself more comfortable. ‘Might bring it up randomly but only suggest at it.’

‘Spaces, please don’t,’ Namjoon huffs out, hands awkwardly placed. Namjoon was slightly physically awkward when he wasn’t holding onto a screen or a using the Navigation Table.

‘Hm, sure daddy.’

Namjoon sighs as though exhausted. Sk’jin cackles.

‘How much of what you said was true?’ Namjoon asks.

‘Well- that depends,’ Sk’jin replies with an honest shrug. ‘K’mara does indeed trust me- and the OrTank is ours by law. Van can’t take it from us under the cover of following “laws” without exposing himself.’

‘And what if he does report to K’mara?’

‘He won’t,’ Sk’jin laughs a little. ‘You’re cute- you think he actually will? He knows he can’t.’

Namjoon finally looks down at him at that.
‘Good thing we have you as Communications Manager,’ is what he says and it’s not what Sk’jin was expecting.

‘Only the best for you Namjoonie,’ Sk’jin gives him his most beautiful smile- more effective under the sunlight but this would do for now. As usual, Namjoon is hardly fazed by his smile- Sk’jin isn’t exactly used to Beings not being effected by his beauty. So it’s honestly a little refreshing. Instead it’s like he’s studying him. Again, something Sk’jin is not used to.

Most Beings, when they discover his species, prefer not to look him in the eye. The same way Hoseok didn’t actually really hold eye-contact with him.

‘You’re keeping something,’ he states. It’s not a question, or one of musing- it’s a direct statement. And Sk’jin can’t contradict him. ‘I don’t know what it is. And at this point, I know I should be asking you about it. But I won’t. Because you know more about all of this then you want to explain. Maybe because you aren’t allowed. Maybe because you won’t- I don’t know. But what I want to know, is why you’re here. Why you’re still here.’

Sk’jin studies the Kutsoglerin’s face carefully in turn. At this distance it was hard not to.

There was an almost seamless blend between real and bionic skin- and Sk’jin can only tell the difference because he’s this close. Namjoon’s eyes are dark- a strange combination of something dark yet transparent. His eyes reflected light in a strange manner, making Sk’jin wonder how much of anything did he really see clearly. The strange mottled bruising is slowly fading away- faster in the area where bionic skin covered his face. Sk’jin wants to feel at Namjoon’s skin to see if the textures were different or not.

‘Other than enjoying your wonderful and invigorating company?’ Sk’jin asks in reply.

‘Yes- let’s not use my winning personality as the reason behind everything,’ Namjoon sighs, looking upwards again.

‘Well Namjoonie, it’s because now I see.’

He doesn’t know why he dreamt of the eclipse. He didn’t even know that something like that had happened when he was young.
Out of all the memories that could have resurfaced, it had to be one he had no recollection of.

Had it always been that way? Had he always lied to them?

Slowly, he gets out of bed.

They would be returning to Raksane Tayi today. A lot had happened apparently, but he couldn’t bring himself to stay up to date. All he knew was that it was over. Or that was what they had told him.

It was over, and it was thanks to him they were able to uncover so much. Thanks to him that they had come this far.

His hands are still burning, and he’s surprised no fire starts when he folds his blankets up.

It’s white out. The stars pulled into bright streaks as they warp through space, tearing through time and life. They would be there in an hour or so. He stands in front of the window, eyes fixed on nothing until the lines start to slow and form strange shapes and blobs. When he blinks the image is seared into his mind. But all he sees is the eclipse of that memory. Starker, brighter, and stronger than the stars that start to settle into their natural shape and form.

The bright and strangely sparkly lines around the Raksane Tayi System appears before him; her twin suns blinking at him from a high distance.

‘We will be arriving in 15 minutes.’

Mechanically he prepares himself. Logically speaking, he knew that the moment he stepped down, he would be whisked away for questioning and more questioning. Nothing he didn’t go through here in the ship. Then after that he would be expected to testify before the GLA Court, repeat everything he’s been repeating for the past 6 months.

It fell out of his mouth in perfect recital. He no longer felt anything about it anymore. It no longer even made sense to him. He was entirely detached and sometimes he wonders if it was a good thing.

By the time they arrive on one of the outer-system moons, docking the massive ship, he’s someone else. Not that he looked any different- he just could never recover who he was and now he was no one.

His parents always told him that to be a true agent, you had to be no one, and you had to be everyone.

If that was the case, he had done an excellent; because clearly all he had grown to believe and understand had all been a lie.

The moon is lightly populated- seeing as it was used for transit most of the time, the Beings gathered in this massive moon-dock were simply temporary tourists or maintenance workers. However, amongst this faceless crowd one sticks out to him in the most painful manner.

She looks older than the last time he saw her.

But then again, so did he. Or so he was told. Most of the time he barely recognized himself.

They don’t move any closer or any further. They just stare.
Then carefully, as though drawn to each other, they take careful light steps.

And with each step he feels himself ignite. The floor cracks and splits from the heat he emanates- his shadow is warped like a mirage and his body tilts, back bending, head bowing and he can’t take it anymore.

Like a crumbling log of burnt wood, he falls over at her feet.

Air chokes out of him and it’s smoke- black, thick, and smothering.

But her hands are cool- her air is cool and as she falls next to him, he shudders from the sudden cold.

He gathers enough courage to look at her and he finds that he doesn’t recognize her anymore.

‘Was it…was it painless-‘ she breaks down.

The cold is gone, replaced with fire, dark and intense.

‘P-please-‘ she heaves out. ‘Tell me-‘

Broken chants. He can’t say anything more. There was nothing to say. Because words meant nothing now.

Her hair is on fire.

‘I’m sorry.’

‘PA!’

A bundle in the shape of Taeh’yung erupts at them as they make their way down the street towards the hosting mansion. The sun was rising behind them and Sk’jin feels his headache abate as the rays of the sun touch down on him. The street looks different from when they had last walked on it less than 10 hours ago.

Landing had been entertaining- apparently Namjoon had done such an effective job, the power was still out in many places across Pompa. And not one to miss out on being petty, Sk’jin thinks it’s well deserved.

‘Are you all right?’ Taeh’yung wails, nearly strangling Namjoon in the process and practically lifting him up into the air much to the latter’s disapproval.

‘I- I’m fine- yes thank you please put me down-‘ Namjoon says in his best stable voice. Sometimes Namjoon spoke to Taeh’yung like he was an animal that could sense fear and would attack him if he showed any signs of discomfort. In Namjoon’s defence, it was likely to happen.

‘Jin!’

Sk’jin is prepared and greets the Zhak’gri with a warm hug. Taeh’yung pretty much rubs his face against his own before he pauses rather dramatically.

‘Oh-!’ Taeh’yung gasps, pulling back to look him dead in the eye. ‘You collapsed again.’

There’s that frown on his face, his eyes dancing with a faint green light.

‘Sun’s out- I’m all right,’ Sk’jin reassures.

‘If you say so,’ Taeh’yung says after a while. ‘There’s food! You want?’

Sk’jin chuckles, wrapping an arm around Taeh’yung.

‘Yeah- let’s go.’

‘Where’s Hoseok?’ Namjoon asks.

‘Oh right! He told me to give these to you guys!’ Taeh’yung reaches into his pockets and hands them new Comm-Devices. ‘Yoongi’s second match is going to start in 10 minutes-‘

‘-it’s what?’ Namjoon demands- frozen halfway in attaching his Comm-Device to his ear.

‘It starts in 10 minutes?’ Taeh’yung repeats.

‘It’s not supposed to be this rushed-‘ Namjoon hisses, now jogging towards the mansion, ignoring the greeting calls of the Pompen hosts by the doors.

‘Oh yeah! They’re doing that because Yoongi’s such a good fighter!’

Namjoon gives him a quick look and Sk’jin grimaces in reply.

‘We can catch the fight now! Hoseok’s taking him down!’

‘Hey- I thought his fight was scheduled only for later tonight?’ Namjoon says at once.

‘That’s what we were told- but no,’ Hoseok sounds tired and disgruntled. ‘We can’t say anything about it. We just have to follow through with it.’

‘I think they want to tire him out,’ Sk’jin tells Namjoon quietly as they make their way down the long stone paved hallway to the arena. ‘This is definitely Van’s doing.’

‘How’s Yoongi?’ Namjoon asks, absentmindedly accepting Taeh’yung’s hand who then takes Sk’jin’s hand and he skips between the two of them, trying to brush the top of his head on the low hanging light fixtures.
‘The same,’ Hoseok replies grimly. ‘I guess.’

‘Yoongi?’ Sk’jin tries.

‘I’m all right.’

‘Hoseok- what was his first fight like?’ Namjoon asks quietly- clearly only for Hoseok’s channel.

‘Short.’ Is Hoseok’s blunt reply.

The cheers of the crowd eggs them forward.

‘I think Van will try to injure Yoongi from this point,’ Namjoon says suddenly.

‘But doesn’t he want to win?’ Hoseok asks, sounding confused.

‘He does- but he always wants what we have,’ Namjoon replies. ‘He can’t claim it- Pageant laws though twisted are strict. They abide their own laws regarding the ransom. And even though Van’s involved- he can’t twist his way here- he’s only part of the neutral party. He has no actual authority regarding their cultural events. The Pompen were incredibly shrewd in how they managed this. And even more so now with the Pageant hosting in their planet.’

They step into the arena and it’s somehow entirely changed in the past 10 hours. The Beings gathered now appeared less Pompen and more like other Beings. This unsettles Sk’jin and apparently Namjoon as well.

‘Who are all these Beings?’ Namjoon asks no one is specific.

‘They started showing up and the Pompen just dwindled off upwards.’ Hoseok replies tersely.

‘We’re getting ready to leave.’

Sk’jin feels a bitter bubble of discomfort rise up in his throat.

‘This is too much exposure,’ Namjoon says quietly. ‘We’re really going to draw too much attention.’

‘Too late to think about that,’ Sk’jin says quietly as he scans the arena. ‘Yoongi’s going to have to fight upstairs- that’s even more televised.’

‘WELCOME TO THE SEMI-FINALS!’ a high-pitched voice bellows. It’s not the same Pompen, but another- this time male. ‘INTRODUCING THE ONLY REMAINING MEMBER OF THE AUCTION-ARENA! FROM THE HOUSE OF FALLING VITKA’V PETALS- SUGA!’

‘Wait what-‘

‘Suga?’ Sk’jin repeats, laughing and momentarily forgetting his worries.

‘Yeah! It’s because he’s so sweet!’ Taeh’yung explains. Sk’jin doesn’t see that sweetness in the Human but he lets Taeh’yung be.

‘Oh- you were the one who came up with that name,’ Namjoon says as though not surprised.

‘SUGA COMES TO CHALLENGE OUR CONTENDOR FROM THE HOUSE DL’ ANG- THE SPLENDID ORNAS!’
'I guess “Suga” isn’t too bad then…’ Namjoon mumbles a little.

The crowd goes wild as a K’hlak comes charging out of the opposite doorway, leaping around and bellowing a mighty roar just feet from Yoongi. The Human doesn’t even blink, just simply looks up at the hulking beast of a Being.

‘Let’s go get a seat!’ Taeh’yung says excitedly, leaping into the crowd before they can stop him.

‘I missed his first fight- I look forward to this one.’

Van Seulgaan stands behind them, looking down as the arena doors open and Yoongi steps out. Small, discreet even with his pale blue hair and flowing robes.

‘I shall be placing a high bet,’ Van informs them before bowing and walking away.

Namjoon looks over at Sk’jin with an expression Sk’jin can quite place.

‘We might as well,’ the Kutsoglerin says. Sk’jin nods in agreement and makes his way down the steps. They flag Taeh’yung down who was standing to his full height, waving his long arms at them.

No one is sitting- everyone stands, devices clutched to their hands as they cheered and took pictures.

‘ARENA IS CLEAR IN!’

The crowd screams alongside the arena-master.

‘3!’

‘2!’

‘1!’

Yoongi is a brutal fighter. But strangely kind.

The K’hlak were a fighting species of Beings from a rough and tropical planet some 3 galaxies away. They were 90% muscle mass and 8% roaring and 2% brain. This made fighting them something of a hassle because though predictable and easy to dodge- they practically never tired and had extremely thick skin. And Yoongi was weaponless.

The K’hlak, or Ornas, charges at Yoongi with a bellowing roar.

Yoongi is fast. Sk’jin thought he’d seen him fight before. Seen him really move before. But here.

He’s nothing more than a fleeting shadow, a bright blue blur at some point. It should be impossible for someone of Yoongi’s biological built to move like this. To be able to function in this rate.

‘WOOO!! GO SUGA!!’ Taeh’yung screams from next to Sk’jin.

The first minute is spent dodging and ducking. Yoongi was analyzing the Being before him. Studying his form, looking for weaknesses.

‘He’s going to need a weapon,’ Sk’jin mumbles to himself.

‘Don’t worry!’ Taeh’yung screams into his ear, clearly having heard him. ‘He’ll get one!’
‘What-?’ Sk’jin wants to ask Taeh’yung what he meant but the cheer roars and Yoongi is suddenly sprinting across the arena to one side, diving and rolling and when he stands, he’s suddenly armed with double axes.

‘Who-?’

‘It’s the Obere,’ Namjoon says tensely. ‘They’re trying to help. They’re sponsoring him.’

Sk’jin can’t spot the Obere in this crowd; the screaming and cheering increases. To Sk’jin’s disquiet, Van is clearly seated on a raised step, looking impressed and an expression that was far too collected and calm to Sk’jin’s taste.

‘The fight will be over soon,’ Taeh’yung says excitedly. And not even 15 seconds later, the K’hlak totters around, dizzied by the tight-knit chase Yoongi lead it on.

The K’hlak roars out but it’s made short as Yoongi leaps impossibly high- the ax in his hand gleams bright for a fraction of a second before burying itself into and out of its thick throat. The second ax gleams cold and sharp and with a sound that echoes throughout of the arena, buries itself over its gnarly thick head.

Yoongi lands on his feet nimbly and not 3 seconds later, the K’hlak keels over, a pool of deep purple blood pooling about him.

The crowd cheers on aggressively.

Sk’jin feels a tug on his sleeve as the arena-cleaners move forward, body bags and cleaning props at hand.

‘AND THE WINNER IS SUGA! WE WILL SEE YOU IN THE FINAL ROUNDS IN AN HOUR!’ the high-pitched voice trills.

‘Let’s go,’ Namjoon says quietly. Sk’jin grabs Taeh’yung’s tunic around his nape and tugs, bringing the Zhak’gri with him. Sk’jin feels van’s eyes following them out and when he turns around to look, refuses to acknowledge the small smile on the Tayian’s face.

They try to move quickly away from the arena but they’re interrupted by the appearance of white-garbed Beings. They’re slender and slight in built, a majority of their faces hidden behind a white mask of alabaster-like material. The House of Jtāharū, if Sk’jin isn’t mistaken- they had outbid them during the Gremio Auction. There were three of them in total, all of varying heights but the same slight built carried over on all of them.

‘We will give you 500,000 units for the OrTank,’ the shortest of them says without preamble. His/her (?!? Sk’jin can’t tell) mouth was the only thing exposed and it only opened a small bit. Their voices sound strangely digitized- as though they spoke through a badly wired speaker-unit.

‘The OrTank is ours,’ Namjoon says firmly, eyeing them carefully. If Sk’jin isn’t mistaken, he had also run research on this House, but had found nothing conclusive. Taeh’yung on the other hand seems obviously upset at their appearance and hostile. His features are twisted, frowning heavily and his eyes gleaming. There are patterns swirling just under his skin and to Sk’jin’s absolute disquiet, his hands were starting to glow.

‘We will accept no price-’ Namjoon is saying, but the speaker of the House of Jtāharū actually takes a step forward and says, ‘1,000,000 units for the OrTank.’

Namjoon gawks at them and Sk’jin can’t help but mirror the same expression. Their joint shock distracts them momentarily from Taeh’yung who charges past them and straight at the House of Jtāharū.

‘Taeh’yung-!’ Namjoon scrambles to grab him. But the Zhak’gri pays no heed. He hisses in a different language and actually lunges at them, hands glowing bright green.

But the Beings from the House of Jtāharū are quick. Though the accurate term would be they were fluid.

There’s a strange moment where they seemed to lose their corporeal quality—fading as though a hologram and warping in the air as they shot backwards, reappearing into full solidity. What’s even more disconcerting was that they appeared unfazed by Taeh’yung’s actions.

‘Taeh’yung stop-’ Namjoon grabs the Zhak’gri back, holding him down.

‘We require the OrTank- we offer you more if you-’

‘The OrTank is not for sale,’ Sk’jin says sternly, stepping over to stand in front of Taeh’yung and Namjoon. Taeh’yung still hasn’t looked away—eyes gleaming bright green. ‘No amount of unit or trade will buy him over.’

The Beings of the House of Jtāharū turn their heads over towards Sk’jin and his skin crawls.

‘Very well.’ The main speaker says in automated tones. They slip away and disappear into the crowd as the arena momentarily relieves itself of the gathered Beings during the short breaks between the fights.

‘Taeh’yung.’

Sk’jin looks around to find that Taeh’yung is still upset, eyes narrowed and he’s still struggling a little, as though trying to pull away from Namjoon to go after them.

‘What is it?’ Sk’jin asks, wondering if he wanted to know the answer.

‘I don’t like the way they smell,’ Taeh’yung hisses, standing straight and his posture relaxing a bit. Namjoon still holds his arm warily, eyeing the Zhak’gri carefully.

‘Smell?’ Namjoon repeats.

Sk’jin can’t help but glance back, feeling extremely unsettled.

There’s roaring screams, announcing the new up-coming fight.

‘Where are you guys?’ Hoseok asks.

‘We’re coming,’ Namjoon replies, still holding Taeh’yung’s arm in his hand.

‘What do you mean?’ Sk’jin asks quietly.

Taeh’yung doesn’t reply for a moment, his eyes suddenly distant, as though thinking of some distant memory.

‘We should go—let’s not talk here,’ Namjoon says quietly, pulling Taeh’yung firmly but gently. Sk’jin nods in agreement.

‘How’s Yoongi?’ Namjoon asks as they make their way to the dressing-rooms.
‘He’s all right. He got a scratch but it’s not deep- no poison, no toxin.’ Hoseok replies.

‘Jin.’

Namjoon is saying something to Hoseok, guiding them through the hallways. Taeh’yung turns his head just a little bit.

‘What is it?’ Sk’jin finds himself adopting a gentle tone as he addresses the Zhak’gri.

‘Do…-do you remember?’ he asks vaguely. ‘That place? It was white- filled with voices and forms and shapes? Old, a little sad?’

Sk’jin swallows, throat constricting a little bit.

‘What about it?’ he asks.

‘Do you remember the ship-‘

‘Taeh’yung.’

Sk’jin doesn’t even realize he’s stopped walking.

‘Sk’jin?’ Namjoon is looking between the two of them in worry.

‘They smell like that ship.’ Taeh’yung says quietly.

Sk’jin is pulled back- his mind reeling as he pushes away overwhelming memories of that white void- of the endless voices and memories. Of the pain and permanent end of life and death- pushing Time away into nothingness.

‘Sk’jin?’

Snapping out of his involuntary stupor, Sk’jin looks up to find Namjoon looking down at him worriedly, Taeh’yung hovering just behind the Kutsoglerin.

‘What's wrong,’ he asks carefully.

Sk’jin realizes that Namjoon’s instead holding him up.

‘I think-‘ Sk’jin’s tongue feels heavy.

Namjoon leans forward, as though to urge him to speak.

‘I think we have to report back to the special-jury.’
Has anyone watched “Call me by your name”? I’ve been listening to the audio book while doing my assignments and the music for the movie is JUST FUCKING PERFECT I HOPE SUFIAN FINALLY GETS THE RECOGNITION HE DESERVES FOR BEING SUCH A GOOD MUSICIAN And who else was not expecting that Sk’jin flashback. I sure as hell wasn’t. AND I LOVE MONSTA X’S COMEBACK YASSSSSSSSSSSSSSSSSSSSSSSSSSSSS QUALITY CONTENT I AM HERE FOR THAT And the next update might be late! It’s my finals week and laughs nervously I haven’t even started on one of my final projects coughs BUT AFTER THAT I AM FREE FOR LIKE A MONTH SO EXPECT WEEKLY UPDATES AFTER THAT AYO Also my jikook heart is singing with that GCF in Tokyo thing I’m crying they’re so precious I love them bye Also I had to bring up “Suga” because THAT AMA INSTA STORY WAS SO CRINGE-WORTHY- “his smile is sweet as sugar” NO PLEASE STOP ODGHLSDFGHSLDKFJSDFGDF my diaphragm inverted into itself when I read that. But I can’t wait to see my sons dressed to the nines, killing it on the red (?) carpet again. I hope though this time, Jimin looks a little happier this time around sweats. I ALSO FUCKING HOPE THEY DON’T GET ASKED FUCKIGN STUPID QUESTIONS AND REPORTERS ACTUALLY FUCKING DO THEIR RESEARCH “Beauty” [noun]: a combination of qualities, such as shape, color, or form, that pleases the aesthetic senses.

Chapter Notes

This chapter contains quite a lot of violence and considerably graphic depictions of morally questionable fighting techniques! Please tread carefully!

See the end of the chapter for more notes

‘Are you all right?’

His friend seemed troubled ever since the day they saw that unidentified ship. It hadn’t appeared again and they didn’t detect anything out of the ordinary on their radars either. Their core-ship that was orbiting the planet detected nothing either- though both might be due to the heavy and thick layer of storm clouds that shrouds the planet. Their timing was a little unfortunate, what with the season and all. It seemed to cast a heavy air of wariness, tiredness, and paranoia around the team. Even short-radio signals occasionally messed up, causing them to frown, their thoughts turning grim and the desire to head back out building up each second.

‘Yeah I’m good,’ he replies with a nod. ‘This is getting old pretty quickly though.’

He gestures around them; it’s damp, muddy, dim, and cold. Though he had originally appreciated finally being in-planet after so long, he can’t help but agree with his friend.

‘You can say that again,’ someone in the back mumbles. ‘My feet have been wet for 2 days straight. Two. This is some unhealthy shit.’

There are murmurs of agreement.

‘Also- when is this forest going to end? I swear to all that is holy I might start a fire and fucking burn this place down.’

‘Please keep all arsenic tendencies under control,’ their leader barks from the front though she sounds 2 seconds away with agreeing.

‘Yeah- might not want to bring back our little ghost now would you?’
‘Fuck, don’t say that- fucking creepy.’

That voice they had heard singing had definitely been real. The scanning team had managed to record the last 2 seconds of the voice and had processed and filtered it as best they could. There were words in there, but none they could recognize or identify; even with the GLA Database.

But they hadn’t heard it since that one time, but the memory of it lingered in everyone’s minds. While it might have spooked the others, it felt almost serene to him. And to his friend too.

‘It sounded sad,’ was what he had said. ‘Sad, pained- full of longing.’

‘Cap,- let’s take a short break? Please? I need to drain my boots,’ one of them calls out.

‘We’re approaching a ridge in 10 minutes- higher ground,’ she calls back. ‘We’ll take 1.’

‘One minute?’

‘One hour.’

They groan gratefully in response; spurred on a little by the idea of higher ground and a break. They had been on their feet with little to no breaks for over 15 hours now. A break was long overdue.

The forest seems to cut off rather abruptly, giving way to hard dark stone from muddy clay in a span of a few steps.

‘Well…okay?’ their leader looks confused but relieved. ‘All clear?’

‘We’re good!’ the scanning team calls back.

The ridge is a wide cliff that gently breaks off to an easy slope downwards into a strangely autumn-hued forest below. His friend takes a deep breath of the cool air and exhales out long and exaggerated. The team laughs, relief obvious in their body language as they dump their heavy wet bags on the hard ground, stretching cramped and tired limbs. But now that he was here, out in the open, he suddenly feels restive.

‘We should scan for a water source,’ their team leader announces.

‘There’s a waterfall 15 minutes south-east from here, up there,’ one of the scanners replies, mouth filled with dried (partially) fruits.

‘I’ll go,’ he volunteers at once, before anyone else can. Not that they would, seeing how tired they were. They’d probably settle it by drawing lots like they did before.

‘You sure?’ she asks, giving him a once over.

‘I’m sure Cap,’ he replies, already unpacking the frame for the collapsible tank and gravity-lift.

‘I’ll come with you,’ his friend says at once, standing up with a groan.

They walk quietly- his friend seems to sense whatever weird burst of energy that suddenly possessed him and asks no questions.

The air around them lightens the higher they climb. The ground is craggy and dark grey, fresh moss growing in spirals over the wet surface. He hears the waterfall before he sees it. It’s not big, just a steady stream that pools into a dark clear pond. Starting the filtration process, they set up the pipes and inflate the tank.

‘I’ll look after this,’ his friend says. He smiles in thanks before making his way higher. He could still see their team below, not moving too far off if he needed help or vice-versa. The forest they trudged through is below him to one side, dark and gloomy- but on the other side, the autumnal forest sways gently in an early morning breeze. Taking a deep breath, he takes a seat on one of the many flat rocks.

Sitting seems to sap him of his strength and he closes his eyes. If he emptied his mind, then this felt exactly like how it did during the monsoon season back on Earth. He didn’t go in-planet on Earth too often- only a few times for academic purposes and the occasional family vacation. But he loved the rainy season- even more so when the sun would shine through the clouds. There was something entirely different- something entirely wholesome about the way the sunlight felt on his skin when he was on a planet.

He’s stirred from his thoughts as his friend approaches, sitting on another rock heavily.

‘Don’t you want to rest?’ he asks.

He is tired- incredibly so. But something told him he had to be here.

‘It’s fine,’ he replies with an easy shrug. ‘I’ll rest later.’

‘You should rest now,’ he insists, ‘Or well- when we get back.’

He stares out into the cloudy sky for a while- unsure why or how he was feeling this way. Maybe it was homesickness- or maybe it was just his fatigue getting to him.

‘I feel like I’ve spent…spent all my life resting,’ he huffs out a short laugh, his head spinning a little from the exertion- he’s not sure why, but he’s feeling an incredible pull to all of this. ‘And now I can finally…’

He pauses- he doesn’t know how to explain this to him. Maybe it was all just plain old quarter-life crisis.

‘And now I can finally be.’

And then suddenly, quite out of nowhere, he hears a soft and light humming tune. It’s a surprise, but somehow- he’d been anticipating it ever since he broke free from the damp forest. Scrambling, he turns, rather desperately, to locate that sound. He finds nothing-

‘What is it?’ his friend asks, alarmed.

The clouds above them break, and through the heavy grey and purple clouds, soft rosy skies peak through, and a golden light falls upon the moss covered rocks nearby.

This was why he came here. As though he knew that he would see this. He isn’t even aware that he’s holding up a hand, as though to reach forward and grab at the light- to hold it close and never let go.

‘Sunshine.’
Yoongi understands fighting.

He understands missions.

He understands objectives and goals.

He understands that in order to function, he needs to eat, drink, sleep.

He understands that in order to maintain stability in a group dynamic, he needs to contribute equally and keep up an equal level of tolerance, space to adjust, and acceptance.

He understands that right now, with this situation, he needs to win, for more than just one reason.

He understands that there are aspects to this situation that he does not understand. That he may never come to understand.

He understands that if he is injured right now, it would diminish his chances of winning.

‘Are you hurt? Got any injuries?’ Hoseok asks immediately.

Yoongi shakes his head. He’s had to fight off K’hlaks before. More than 2 at a time, on more than one occasion. So it had been relatively simple- especially after he received the axes.

Yoongi understands that in order to win, he must remain unharmed. Which was why Hoseok was making this inquiry.

‘Only a scratch,’ Yoongi shows the side of his arm- he had grazed the side of his arm on the K’hlak’s armoured flank.

Hoseok takes a quick look at it, passing a small hand-held scanner over the scratch.

‘Okay- there’s no poison or toxin,’ he says in a low voice, as though speaking to himself. ‘Just clean it up later. Tired? You should stock up on ionized-water the moment we get back. That was a heavy blow,’ Hoseok presses. There’s a permanent furrow between his brows. One that hasn’t gone away since all of this started.

Yoongi understands that Hoseok is under heavy stress. He doesn’t, however, understand why he did not like the strained frown on the Ngfy’widan’s eyebrows. Unsure but somehow feeling like it was the right thing to do, Yoongi reaches over and with his pointer finger presses on the crease between Hoseok’s eyebrows and replies, ‘I’m fine.’
Hoseok is momentarily cross-eyed as he stares at Yoongi’s hand, expression shocked.

‘Let’s go.’ He says. He wants to take a shower, he had blood splattered on one side of his body. Sk’jin was going to get mad that he dirtied his robes.

‘…right.’

Hoseok leads the way, rummaging in his pockets momentarily before asking, ‘Where are you guys?’

He pulls out Yoongi’s Comm-Device from inside his pocket and hands it to him.

‘How’s Yoongi?’ Namjoon asks.

‘He’s all right. He got a scratch but it’s not deep- no poison, no toxin.’ Hoseok replies for him.

Yoongi understands that his health is priority.

‘All right- we have things to go over- we’re going to have to create our own database on the next fights- we’re at a great disadvantage not knowing the opponents in the Pageant and not knowing their skill sets,’ Namjoon says, his voice heavy with fatigue. ‘Not that I don’t trust in Yoongi’s abilities. But we need to start studying his possible opponents outside of the rogue-rounds.’

‘Agreed- I think we can ask Taeh’yung about some of the opponents- he was watching them before,’ Hoseok replies, glancing over at him every few seconds as though to make sure he was all right.

Yoongi doesn’t understand why he was doing this.

Database has no explanation.

‘Okay then- Yoongi how are you feelin- Sk’jin?’ Namjoon’s tone changes to one of worry.

‘They smell like that ship.’ Taeh’yung’s voice says softly.

Yoongi stops mid-step.

‘Sk’jin?’

‘Yoongi- you okay?’ Hoseok asks immediately, giving him a quick once over, health-scanner already at hand despite having scanned him not even a minute ago.

The ship?

‘What’s wrong,’ Namjoon sounds vaguely wary.

‘I think-‘ Sk’jin stutters. ‘I think we have to report back to the special-jury.’

---

Namjoon and Sk’jin both look worse for wear. It didn’t help that they were both wearing ill-fitted maintenance uniforms- it pulled comically at Namjoon’s long legs. Yoongi wants to maybe point them out and make a joke; but the “How to be Funny! An easy guide for the socially awkward!” book had nothing to do with short pant-legs so Yoongi remains quiet.

Sk’jin doesn’t even blink at the state of Yoongi’s (well, his) robes and is instead pacing rather restlessly. Yoongi can see the confusion on both Hoseok and Namjoon’s faces. Taeh’yung is uncharacteristically quiet- his eyes a little glazed as though he wasn’t quite there with them.

Yoongi can understand why they were confused. Yoongi would explain, but no one has asked the questions he knows he can answer.

‘What do you mean we should report back?’ Hoseok asks, clearly trying to establish a common ground of information in this discussion. ‘We’ve spent weeks avoiding the GLA and any other possible way in which they could possibly find us, and now we report back?’

‘This- this is something else,’ Sk’jin gnaws at his lower lip.

‘Sk’jin- please, just sit down for a moment, and tell us what you mean. And you too Taeh’yung.’

Taeh’yung doesn’t appear to have heard his name. Sk’jin pauses a moment, struggling, it would appear, with what to say.

‘4 sols ago, when the Gaia Case was created and the special jury founded- it was all a result of the discovery of the mysterious species of Beings simply known as the Akramanese,’ Yoongi finds himself speaking up instead. ‘The Akramanese were created as a result of the Yisheng’s involvement in their attempt to create a Universe without freewill- a Universe they could control. Out of the many experiments they conducted, this one in particular would go awry. Not only did the Akramanese inherit their creator’s objectives, they took it a step further and wanted to overtake this dimension of existence. They were defeated of course- their ship, technology, and existence obliterated from history. During this crucial war for the freewill of the Universe, Taeh’yung, Sk’jin, and I were closely situated to the occurrence surrounding the defeat of the Akramanese.’

‘…we get that part,’ Namjoon says slowly. ‘But why do we have to report back to the special-jury?’

‘Because Taeh’yung could smell it.’ Sk’jin blurs out. ‘That damn fuckin’ ship!’

‘Smell what exactly?’ Hoseok asks, exasperation lacing into his voice.

‘The Akramanese mothership,’ Yoongi explains.

Hoseok still looks lost whereas Namjoon looks like he’s thinking extremely hard.

‘But if they were destroyed- why would any semblance of them still exist?’ Hoseok questions.

‘The same reason why we’re being sent to Bhumi,’ Sk’jin replies, gripping at his hair. ‘Every single thing, every single Being, every embryo, every tech, pulled from that Akramanese ship was completely destroyed in the explosion that demolished it and Earth. So why should it still exist here if it didn’t mean that they could still be out there?!’

Hoseok actually backs away as Sk’jin leans down to hiss at him.

‘Sk’jin- sit down,’ Namjoon says tersely, leaning over to push the Khol’isa away from Hoseok. ‘Taeh’yung, are you sure?’ he adds, looking over at the Zhak’gri.

‘I am,’ Taeh’yung replies. ‘I won’t ever forget the way it smelt. The way it felt.’
‘So what does this mean and why should we be effected by it?’ Hoseok asks, clearly trying to lay out some form of equal footing on information.

‘It means,’ Sk’jin takes a deep breath. ‘That we’re fucked.’

Yoongi understands that this response makes no sense and only serves to irritate the former Venture Unit agent more.

‘Sk’jin,’ Hoseok begins with a heavy scowl. ‘You’re not making sense- could you please just explain to me why this is bothering you so much?’

‘YOU WEREN’T THERE!’ Sk’jin screams in frustration, causing Hoseok to take a step back. ‘YOU DIDN’T HEAR THEM! YOU DIDN’T SEE THEM- IT’S-’

He stops, taking a deep breath. Hoseok is understandably baffled.

‘I agree with Sk’jin.’ Namjoon cuts in firmly. ‘We should report back to the special-jury.’

‘I don’t know how I can explain this to you…’ Sk’jin actually loses track, gaping at Namjoon. ‘What did you say?’

‘I said I agree. We will call the special-jury.’ Namjoon repeats.

Sk’jin seems too stunned to speak, mouth still agape, eyes wide.

‘But-‘ Hoseok begins, standing up as well, a deep frown etched on his face.

‘Okay- we need to first get into the order of things here,’ Namjoon steps a little away in order to face the entire room and all of them. ‘First of all, we’re not going to be able to leave this planet,’ Namjoon says bluntly. ‘Van Seulgaan is not going to let us go- we’re too valuable, and we have too many possible variables he can exploit to his advantage. It’s not just the OrTank- it’s us. Each and every single one of us. There’s no possible way he’ll stick to his word- He’d be stupid to. We’re too valuable and vulnerable at this stage- and we do not have the means to overturn this situation around for our benefit.’

‘But he knows we’re on a specialized mission- he wouldn’t dare stop us-‘ Hoseok counters.

‘But he also suspects we’re on the run- I mean we do have a bounty on our heads now, according to him,’ Namjoon replies with a sigh. ‘The further he studies Sk’jin’s statement from the ship, he’s going to realize that it doesn’t add up- he probably already did.’ Namjoon glances over at Sk’jin who is still gawking at him in surprise. ‘Not that you did a bad job- it’s just with someone like Van, we can’t possibly take any chances.’

Sk’jin snaps out of whatever stunned stupor he’d been caught in and nods.

‘Not to mention those Beings- the House of Jtāharū,’ Sk’jin continues his point. ‘I don’t know how they’re connected to that ship- and I’d rather not find out- and knowing that they want our OrTank, we can’t afford to get caught up in this.’

Hoseok’s eyes narrow, studying them both before looking across, over at Yoongi.

‘What do you say?’ Hoseok addresses him.

‘We should call the special-jury,’ Yoongi says in agreement. ‘But we should get away before they arrive.’
‘How do we do that?’ Hoseok asks emphatically.

‘We could just stay until they get here,’ Sk’jin begins to say hesitantly, but Namjoon shakes his head.

‘No- if they come here, and we’re here, I can guarantee you that we will be pulled out of the mission,’ the Kutsoglerin states.

There’s sudden pause- as though everyone just took a step back to analyze their situation, minds calculating and theorizing. Sk’jin breaks the silence first.

‘Not that I don’t appreciate your support here Namjoon but,’ Sk’jin states flatly, ‘You were never for this mission- why do you want to leave before the jury get here? That is if we are going to call them here.’

Namjoon remains motionless for a moment before positioning himself to look around at all of them.

‘Up there- in Van’s ship,’ he begins. ‘OrTanks, just like the one we have, were lined up, empty. Meaning he had access to them- to what extent I’m not sure, it’s all just theory at the moment but that also means that he is involved deeper and further into whatever this is.’

‘Empty?’ Hoseok repeats in a hollow voice.

‘Empty,’ Namjoon confirms. ‘We can’t tell if he got them empty, or if there were Beings in there-like ours. He even referred to them as “eggs”- something I haven’t heard of or read in any of my research. We don’t know the full details but we have to assume the worst.’

‘And the worst here being?’ Hoseok asks, listening intently.

‘That Van Seulgaan is not only a part of the Alliance but directly involved with the connection between the Alliance, the rest of the GLA and the Yisheng Directory, and the Akramanese,’ Namjoon says bluntly. ‘And if someone like Van is involved this deep with this situation- then that doesn’t stop the others from the jury from being involved as well.’ He stops, looking over at each of them carefully before asking, ‘What was it that they said- when they first each came to us all.’

No one replies.

‘They selected each one of us to represent them and act on their behalf because they didn’t trust the other members within the jury,’ Yoongi replies.

‘Exactly,’ Namjoon nods. ‘We were sent here, to find out, through each other, who would want to use the Akramanese technology to further their agenda. This is the same thing they all said to us; our reason for division.’

‘Are you suggesting that we find out who out of the jury is actually involved?’ Hoseok asks incredulously.

‘That’s exactly what I’m saying,’ Namjoon nods. ‘We were sent out on this mission, deliberately blinded and crippled- if we are able to find out who it is, then by extension, we are also completing our mission; which is to entirely rid the Universe of any remnants of the Gaia Case.’

Sk’jin and Hoseok glance at each other, checking each other’s reactions.

‘You’re talking about luring out the very Beings who put this entire thing together- those Beings are singlehandedly some of the most powerful Beings in the Universe, and setting them up to find out, which is of course all conjecture, if they’re involved with the Akramanese?’

‘Yes.’

‘So we call the special-jury,’ Sk’jin begins, ‘Then what? We escape before they come? Like Hoseok mentioned- how do we do that? And out of the jury who do we call? Because I’m not sure about you guys, but I’m not keen on calling any of them.’

‘No- we call all of them.’ Namjoon says. ‘We call each of them separately- I don’t care if they figure it out- I don’t care if they’re all gathered in the same place when we call- they can’t back out. Especially K’mara and Lal Haenoon- if we draw them all here, they have no choice but to purge this organization.’

‘They can still effectively cover it up-’ Sk’jin begins to say but Hoseok speaks up as though thoroughly amused.

‘You want to make this live don’t you? The broadcasting channel? From Van’s ship?’

Namjoon nods.

‘They have no choice.’ Namjoon actually grins. ‘They have to come. Either to cover up their own involvement or to claim the victory over Pompa’s highly illegal and anti-GLA activity. They will come.’

Sk’jin looks thoroughly shaken but at the same time entirely enthusiastic.

‘Not bad Joonie,’ he grins. ‘How are we doing this then?’

‘Well first,’ Namjoon looks over to address him. ‘Yoongi-’

‘I won’t lose,’ Yoongi replies at once.

Namjoon just blinks in response- clearly taken aback. Yoongi wonders if he’s said something wrong.

Of course he would win. There was no other option.

Regardless of whether or not Van Seulgaan was planning on overtaking them; regardless of whatever and whoever were after them- he was going to win. Regardless of how any of this was connected or not. Because he had to.

Yoongi understands this perfectly.

The OrTank was kept under their protection- it was their duty, and if what Taeh’yung said was to be trusted, then the Being inside the OrTank was depending on them to take him back. They had more than just the stated objective in this mission, and Yoongi would make sure that he would see through to it.

‘That’s not what I was trying to say,’ Namjoon huffs out. ‘I just…- I just want to say that I am sorry.’

Yoongi does not understand. He’s thoroughly confused; what did the Kutsoglerin mean by that?

Database has no explanation.
‘I am sorry that I’m asking you to do this- that we’re asking you to do this.’ Namjoon clarifies.

‘You didn’t ask me,’ Yoongi states bluntly. It was as though Namjoon didn’t understand that. ‘I volunteered. It was my intention to do so- and I will carry it out until I win and I can bring him back and take him home.’

‘Him-?’ Namjoon is saying before his eyes widen a little with understanding.

‘It is within my capability,’ Yoongi further clarifies. ‘Out of all of us, I am the only one qualified and skilled to undertake these fights.’

Yoongi is briefly worried that the others would take offence to his words. Because all of them were skilled beyond average- whether it was in hand-to-hand combat or weapons skill. But no one looked offended- in fact Sk’jin is shaking his head and smiling to himself while Hoseok shrugs as though to say, ‘he’s right’.

Namjoon looks at him for a moment longer and then he too smiles. Yoongi wonders if he’s missed something here. Some minor detail of sorts.

‘All right then- Yoongi’s next fight is in 45 minutes right?’ Namjoon addresses Taeh’yung who seems to have recovered a little.

The Zhak’gri nods.

‘Right- based on my calculations, the GLA patrol unit are probably still in the Grezma area, along with the Yisheng ship. If we send out an emergency broadcast for help- they will arrive here within 6 hours.’ Namjoon says as he retrieves his screen. ‘However we cannot allow any communication to make it through here – and the only one we can send out is the broadcasting channel from Van’s ship.’

‘You’ve already taken care of most of the power-lines here- could you completely fry their communication signals?’ Hoseok asks, also pulling out his screen.

‘I can put Pompa under complete radio-silence in and off-planet,’ Namjoon states without a hint of pride or arrogance in his voice. ‘We’ll have to go back up to Van’s ship-’

‘I’ll do that,’ Hoseok volunteers at once. ‘Just run me through what needs to be done.’

Namjoon nods at that before questioning Taeh’yung again, ‘How many rounds do you think Yoongi will have to fight in the Arena upstairs?’

‘They’re in the semi-finals!’ Taeh’yung looks excited again. ‘He’ll have to beat an opponent in the semi-finals before entering the Final Round.’

‘So all together you’ll be fighting 3 fights,’ Namjoon glances over at him as though to make sure he understood. Yoongi nods, a tad bit slow, in reply.

‘The fights are pretty back to back,’ Taeh’yung supplies. ‘It depends on how fast the other fights take place- it’s all high-paced entertainment value here!’

‘If-…when Yoongi wins the rogue-rounds,’ Sk’jin corrects himself. ‘We get the OrTank back right? Immediately?’

‘Yeah! I watched some of the older rogue-rounds,’ Taeh’yung confirms. ‘They’ll bring out the prize during the Final Round and if you win, the champion can take it back!’
‘All right then,’ Namjoon claps his hands together once. ‘The moment Yoongi wins, he’ll bring over the OrTank, and we safely deposit him back to our ship. He’s our priority here, so we make sure he’s always safe.’

Everyone nods in unison.

‘After that, we go up to the Arena. And then Sk’jin will take over the Užkulisaï and keep her on standby near the Arena,’ Namjoon nods at the Khol’isa who winks in response, pushing back his hair in a flirtatious manner. ‘There’s no guarantee what conditions we’ll be facing and when we can leave—how we’re going to leave.’

‘I’m the emergency getaway transporter,’ Sk’jin quips.

‘What about me?’ Taeh’yung asks eagerly.

‘I need you to stay with our OrTank,’ Namjoon says seriously. ‘He’s a target right now— and we can’t afford to lose him. Stick close to him—no matter what, protect him at all cost.’

Taeh’yung nods enthusiastically at that.

‘If things get bad—then Taeh’yung, I don’t care what you do—either of you. Just get out of the planet at once.’ Namjoon continues, ‘Yoongi and I will be fine here and we’ll be able to get out—’

‘Are you sure?’ Sk’jin asks skeptically.

‘Positive—it’s the most logical thing to do,’ Namjoon affirms quickly. ‘After I’m done with my stuff, I’ll go to the Arena to wait for Yoongi; see what needs to be done in case of injuries, stuff like that. But if things go sour—just leave.’

‘But what about Hobi?’ Taeh’yung rushes to Hoseok, rubbing his face against the Ngfy’widan’s.

‘Hoseok will head up to Van’s ship and restart the broadcasting— at this point, Van will find out, I’m sure, but he won’t be able to do anything because I will cut Pompa off from any form of communication coming in and out of the planet.’ Namjoon explains. ‘And like I said, if things go bad, then you and Taeh’yung will leave, pick up Hoseok, and just—I guess just continue on. Yoongi and I will come and meet you.’

‘We should make a rendezvous point—just to be safe,’ Hoseok adds.

‘How about back to Ch’dra? No one will expect us to go backwards,’ Taeh’yung suggest, clapping his hands together.

‘Yeah—let’s do that,’ Namjoon nods in agreement.

‘Van is going to suspect something, you know that, don’t you?’ Sk’jin says this more like a fact than a question.

‘Of course he does,’ Namjoon snorts. ‘But he’s never going to suspect us calling all of the jury.’

‘When do we do that?’ Hoseok asks.

‘Right after Yoongi’s win, the moment we get our hands on the OrTank,’ Namjoon checks over at him as though to make sure he was all right with it. It amuses Yoongi a little. Nonetheless he nods.

‘You’ll be alone for the first match in the Arena,’ Namjoon continues, ‘I’ll try to make it there—you’ll be all right?’
Yoongi doesn’t know how to respond to that. So he just nods.

Database has no explanation.

‘We have some time before the match starts- Yoongi do you want something to eat?’ Sk’jin asks, his eyes studying Yoongi’s robes with a look of disdain.

‘He needs ionized-water,’ Hoseok says at once. ‘And I’m taking a look at your cut.’

Sk’jin nods, already stepping out to retrieve the required items followed by Taeh’yung who latches onto the Khol’isa, clearly intent on conversing. Yoongi notes how Namjoon watches after them for a moment before shaking his head slowly to himself.

‘I’ll be right back- need more tissue-plast,’ Hoseok states after he rummages for a while inside the medical kit. Namjoon nods in reply before making his way over to Yoongi and sitting down.

‘Do you think this is a good idea?’ he asks suddenly.

‘I don’t know,’ Yoongi replies honestly. ‘No amount of planning can ever predict what will or will not happen. There are too many unseen factors involved with our situation for us to properly plan and foresee the future.’

Namjoon huffs out a laugh before wiping at his face.

‘Yeah you’re right.’ He nods in agreement before he turns his head a little to look at him. ‘I wanted to talk to you about something,’ Namjoon says quietly. He pauses, as though waiting for Yoongi to tell him to continue. Before Yoongi can nod or do something, Namjoon continues.

‘Van said he had seen the GI fight before- is there any way, any possibility in which you might have come across him before?’

Yoongi doesn’t even have to think back for this as he replies, ‘No. I do not remember him.’

‘Is it possible if you could find out, how he’s connected to the GI? If I’m not mistaken, only the deep inner circles of the Yisheng Directory had access to the GI,’ Namjoon presses.

‘When we were given our missions, we were never told who issued them or who commissioned them,’ Yoongi states honestly. ‘I had an officer who distributed my missions to me. But beyond that, I knew nothing of the other agents, what they did, and who they worked for.’

Namjoon nods in understanding, looking disappointed.

‘I am sorry.’

‘No- I get it,’ Namjoon shakes his head.

What did Namjoon get?

Database has no explanation.

‘I was wondering if maybe we should ask Taeh’yung to go to Van’s ship- to understand what he’s carrying,’ Namjoon says out of nowhere. ‘But I think it’s better to assign him to the OrTank.’

Yoongi nods. He understands this decision. Taeh’yung was the only one out of them who could sense the OrTank. More accurately the Being inside of it. And while the idea that there might be others out there like this OrTank, not under the joint care of the Venture Unit and the Yisheng Directory as they were meant to be, what mattered most now was the one under their protection.

‘I have another question Yoongi- if you don’t mind my asking.’ Namjoon says carefully.

Yoongi is a bit more prepared for this and so he nods in reply.

‘Why are you doing this?’ Namjoon asks carefully.

In all honesty, Yoongi doesn’t understand why he’s doing this.

Database has no explanation.

Yoongi thinks back to the Yisheng Headquarters, to the rows and rows of OrTanks, to all the Beings placed inside there. He thinks of his own situation- of his placement in all of this. He thinks about the young face, asleep and drifting inside the OrTank- of how he feels each time he looks at him.

Yoongi doesn’t understand and neither can he explain it- but if he were to put it into simple words, provided by what he’s understood of the emotional spectrum, he would say he feels a sense of kinship with the Being inside the OrTank- a sense of belonging that connects further and deeper than just this strange connection they shared through the OrTank as their basis for birth. He felt a sense of need- each time the Being drifted in the Tank to face him- like he needed Yoongi to hear him. To hear him speak. He felt it even more when he raised his hand to the surface- as though reaching out for Yoongi with something. Something Yoongi knew he needed.

Something he knew he missed.

It made no logical sense. There was no explanation to his thoughts- just a feeling. He doesn’t know how to put these into words, but he does say what he understands. So he just says: ‘Because I want answers.’

Database has no explanation.
It had been an invasion.

A raid.

Rape.

A grand purge- a cruel and great plague spread across the entirety of their land- their country, their planet.

He knows now. He knows too much. Sometimes he can’t handle it- and he’ll be taken to another place- another lab and there he’s knocked unconscious again. When he wakes up he’s “improved”.

They tell him that they're giving him a great opportunity- a wonderful chance. That he was helping them gain so much.

Was their gain bought with his depravity and loss?

He had once managed to run away. Escape, using his sudden new found knowledge. But he’d been caught.

But not before he caught a glimpse of his land. Of his home. Of his everything.

Great mountainous structures of ugly metal stretched over the land and towards the sky- its perverseness left no area unscathed.

They had come with the intention to rape- to humiliate, degrade, and destroy all sense of self, all memory of self. The only thing they would leave behind would be self-loathing, madness, and broken remains of what was.

‘We’re here to improve the savages.’ He heard them say.

How was he a savage when they were mercilessly slaughtering his people for their entertainment and gain?

Was this what lay beyond the great Stretch above?

‘We know better- this is what you need. You will thank us.’

Were they telling him this, or were they just reassuring themselves? Because surely, no living being alive could ever possibly believe themselves capable of such entitlement.

When he is rescued it is already too late.

It was already too late the moment those “mountains” had appeared in their skies.

It was already too late when he had run down the hilly slopes looking for his father.

It was already too late when the eclipse had formed.

The others are surprised when they see him. He spoke calmly- he had no fear when he saw them coming. He didn’t move, didn’t question, didn’t react. Not even when one of them burst out into tears. He doesn’t understand why. Because he had cried for years- but it had done nothing but bring him more pain.

‘You’re going to be all right.’ They had said.
But nothing right in him remained anymore. Everything inside of him was wrong.

‘We’re here to help you,’ they had said, their faces stricken and sad.

‘You’ll be all right,’ they keep repeating. ‘We’re taking you somewhere safe. You’ll be safe.’

Safe?

‘Is it what I need?’

His question tastes red on his tongue.

They don’t understand his question.

And it remains unanswered.

---

Stepping out into an arena to fight feels like routine. There was a set of objectives he had to complete. A mark he had to reach. An end-result he had to achieve. Fighting in the rogue-rounds feels a lot like setting out on a mission.

[RECEIVING DATA]

COORDINATES: POMPA

CONTENDER – FINAL ROUND. ROGUE-ROUNDS.

TERMINATION

MISSION ACCEPTED

And Yoongi understands missions.

The moment he walks into the arena, Hoseok would leave for Van’s ship to begin the process of broadcasting the Pageant. Namjoon will also leave for the closest circuit-systems utility station to take over all of Pompa’s communication networks. Sk’jin and Taeh’yung will wait for Yoongi’s match to be over, take back the OrTank to the Užkulisai, and wait for the Pageant to be over. At the same time, each of them will call or message the special-jury member responsible for putting them there while Hoseok makes sure that Van’s broadcasting channel is directly in line to target Raksane Tayi- in particular: Šerdesas. By that time, Namjoon would have finished his work quick enough and will be in time to join and wait for him inside the Pageant arena.

‘You’ll be all right,’ Hoseok says, his lips thin and pressed down hard against each other. The Ngfy’widan’s eyes gleam a little in this little alcove created for the contenders to wait before being set out in the arena.

Yoongi knows he’ll be all right. No matter what awaited him outside these doors, he was going to win. Hoseok doesn’t look at him while he’s saying this, confusing Yoongi. Was he speaking to himself? Was he reaffirming to himself that Yoongi would win?

Database has no explanation.

Unsure what to do, Yoongi hesitates, wondering if he should maybe extend a comforting hand. He awkwardly raises a hand, which draws Hoseok’s attention and a quizzical eyebrow.

‘Are you all right? Is something wrong?’ Hoseok asks instead.

Yoongi can hear the Pompen’s voice as they announce the final match, riling up the crowds. The roars will be deafening once he exits this small room instead of the constant buzz that surrounds him.

Yoongi stretches his hand out and places it on top of Hoseok’s head, which is higher than his own head. Hoseok looks down at him with some confusion before he bursts out into laughter.

‘A bit more like this,’ he says, holding up his own hand and smoothly patting over Yoongi’s blue hair. Yoongi had seen his own reflection and wasn’t sure what to think of it. It was the first time he’d seen his hair in that colour, or cut into that style. But Sk’jin and Taeh’yung were immensely pleased so he guesses it’s not an appalling sight. At least not by their own standards.

‘A bit more relaxed,’ Hoseok grins.

Yoongi bends his arm at the elbow, attempting to mirror Hoseok’s arm.

‘Whatever this is, I want no part in it,’ Sk’jin’s voice floats in.

Sk’jin looks tired despite his exposure to the sun and having consumed nearly his weight in food at the speed of light. Yoongi extends his arm over to reach the top of Sk’jin’s head- a difficult feat as the Khol’isa is much taller than Hoseok. Sk’jin just takes it in by stride and hastily pats Yoongi’s head too.

‘Here- change of clothes,’ he says.

‘Where’s Taeh’yung?’ Hoseok asks, looking around for the lanky Zhak’gri.

‘He’s tracking the OrTank- they’re bringing it up,’ Sk’jin explains as he unfurls the robes and holds it up for Yoongi to slip into. It’s one of his other robes, a silky pale rose coloured one with intricate silver patterns around the hem and collar. Yoongi already feels vaguely guilty, knowing that it would be covered in blood at some point in the next 10 minutes.

He removes the red and gold robes and exchanges it for the rose and silver ones. Sk’jin is quick to “fix” his hair just as the telltale signs of the countdown for the arena begins.

‘Everything is still in order,’ Sk’jin tells him, expression easy though his tone is a little tight.
‘Everything is going according to plan. You go do the best you can do.’

Yoongi nods, wondering why they kept speaking to themselves while addressing him.

‘It will be all right,’ he tells Sk’jin.

The Khol’isa smiles at that, a pained look in his eyes.

‘He’s been taken over!’ Taeh’yung announces loudly as he scrambles into the alcove. ‘He’s outside now!’

Yoongi is somehow filled with anticipation at this news.

‘How is he?’ Yoongi asks Taeh’yung quietly.

‘Asleep- he’s dreaming a lot right now. I think it’s the sudden rush of consciousness around him- it’s effecting him.’

‘Surely not in a bad way right?’ Sk’jin asks tersely, looking over Taeh’yung and Yoongi with a strained expression.

‘No! Not at all! He’s very curious!’ Taeh’yung says. ‘Or nervous? Scared? They’re a little confusing when-‘

‘-and okay let’s go Yoongi,’ Sk’jin turns him around to face the large double-doors.

‘He’ll be all right- he’s fine.’ Sk’jin’s grip on his shoulders is starting to become painful. ‘We’ve got this. Everything will be all right.’

‘Go get my baby Yoongi!’ Taeh’yung cheers excitedly from the back.

Before Yoongi can give him a thumb’s up in response, the doors open and the roars of the crowd quite literally pushes Sk’jin off of his shoulders. Without looking back, Yoongi steps out into the arena for the third time that night.

He was tired. But not to the point where he couldn’t function. The tiredness in his limbs was a familiar one. A sensation he lived with for a long time without fully registering what it was. And now it was back, and it was as though his body was triggered into motion- one that it never really quit.

His eyes find the OrTank at once, stood up on the dais that’s been pushed up to the side of the arena.

It calms him down, seeing that OrTank still safe and unharmed. Except now it was wholly exposed for everyone to see. To Yoongi’s immense disquiet, the Being inside is not relaxed as he normally was when floating inside the OrTank. His form is somehow tense, legs curled up to his chest even more, shoulders bunched up, head tucked in. It was as though he knew that he had to remain hidden.

It fills him with a strange sensation- one that feel burning hot in the lining on his stomach- something akin to anger, but not quite.

His eyes focus next on his opponent and Yoongi knows at once that this final stage is different.

His first fight had been against another ransom-contender. Yoongi ended it quickly to spare the Being, and it had been decidedly “un-fun” for the audience, according to Taeh’yung. Which was why his second fight consisted of the K’hlak. But this time he’s sure that Van Seulgaan must have selected, or at least, nudged this fighter into the arena for this final round.

The Being is tall and elegant, her features are bold and strong- her aura and stage presence was no joke. She was beautiful in a surreal way. Her skin sparkled as though gold dust was embedded into her very cells. Her hair was fine and long, sweeping the ground elegantly in a silky coil of jet black. She looked unassuming- simply beautiful, and nothing more. But these types- the most unassuming types- were often times the most dangerous.

She regards him quietly, no expression on her rather delicate features. Her cheeks are dusted with a rosy hue similar to Yoongi’s robes and her eyelashes were transparent and sparkled as though each single strand was dipped in diamonds. She was breathtaking and clearly had the favor of the crowd. Based on what Yoongi can summarize, she was a Vel’leno- heavily altered and operated on though. Because their skin did not look like that naturally- but her hair was a big clue.

It was appalling to think that the Alliance had spread all the way to this species who were known only for the beauty of their hair. What could they want from them? Illegal hair? That made no sense.

Yoongi doesn’t hear the countdown end, or the screams of the crowd. Instead he zeroes in on his opponent.

Who has disappeared.

Yoongi instantly lowers himself, nearly flat onto the ground, narrowly escaping a powerful leg that comes swinging out nowhere for his head.

She was fast.

And armed.

She clearly had sponsors lined up, battling it out to hand her weapons. She’s wielding a long barb-ended spear that winks in the flashing lights of the arena. Yoongi instantly calibrates himself to adjust to the reach of the spear- putting it at 2.3 meters- the shaft of the spear was very smooth- the only area with texture was the area for gripping at the end, meaning she wouldn’t be able to shorten the spear at close combat.

Yoongi slides on his knees, his robes following his movements in a swirl of rose and silver as he quickly takes over their distance. She was fast. But he was faster.

She lands the first blow- her almost fragile and delicate fist meets the side of his body with a resounding crack. The force is strong- but not enough to crack a rib. He would bruise but that was of no consequence. Deflecting her other arm, Yoongi uses her spear as a shield- causing her other fist to hit and slip across the smooth shaft of the spear. This causes her grip to loosen and Yoongi is quick to disengage himself from her recovering arm, stealing the spear in turn. Taking advantage of the smoothness of the handle, he lets it slide down the length of his arm before gripping on the textured handle and burying the barbed head into the ground, vaulting his way over her head, to land behind her.

Yoongi doesn’t understand why the Vel’leno wasn’t fighting her full strength. Yoongi can tell the difference when Beings fought with their all, or with those who were holding back. Despite her beauty, obvious strength and ability- there was something strangely odd about her.

His leg sweeps back- catching her ankles and causing her to fall back. Yoongi acts fast, lifting the spear and bringing it down lengthwise. She raises her arms into a cross to defend herself- grappling with it, and pulling Yoongi forward, forcing his own momentum to work against him. But it was all right- because Yoongi was expecting that. At this close range, he’s quick to bring down his elbow to her throat- enough to crush her windpipe. But she’s seen his intention and deflects his move easily with a quick jab- bringing her foot upwards to throw Yoongi aside.

Yoongi isn’t even fighting with a lot of complicated action or plan- at this level of fighting, even Namjoon or Sk’jin could easily defeat her in hand-to-hand combat.

Yoongi lands on his feet but is quick to leap forward. His plan was to tackle her- which she would deflect by shifting to the right. Then Yoongi would use this to lunge at her leg, and fracture her bone at the thigh, disabling her movement.

However, the Vel’leno doesn’t move away. Instead she too lunges forward in a move that was simply suicidal. He was better posed for this- their velocity would mean landing on her back, with his on top, potentially cracking a rib and causing a concussion which would most definitely lead to disorientation and vertigo.

At this close range, Yoongi is able to observe his opponent better. Though undoubtedly beautiful, there was a strange haze to the glow of her skin- Yoongi sees the make-up, the cracking skin under the layer of cover-up- he sees the strange smokiness in her eyes, as though glazed over. The Vel’leno’s hair was glossy and full but at the roots they were pulling in bunches- attached by some form of silicone gel to a heavily discoloured scalp. At this close range, Yoongi can smell her too. A nauseatingly sweet smell- one of decay and rot.

She was dying.

Yoongi realizes his mistake- she had intended for him to do this very move. From the beginning- from the choice is weapon she was wielding- it had all been done so that he would gradually move closer. She chose to flaunt her speed because she knew it meant that Yoongi would have to get closer to fight her. Yoongi realizes his mistake too late.

Because the moment they’re falling back, she leans down to bite down on his neck.

Yoongi has never been bitten before- in any of his fights. Attempts were made but his uniform was like an exoskeleton. These attempts were normally desperate ones, made while struggling. But this was intentional. Her teeth are thin and sharp, and pierces through his skin easily. And even though Yoongi has never been bitten before- he knows that it’s not supposed to feel like this.

He rolls off of her the moment they land and a pair of daggers drop by her side- sponsored. Yoongi winces at the surging burning pain on his shoulders but he doesn’t have the time to look or check on it. She’s already picking up the daggers- just a little disoriented, and she’s glaring him down. Her mouth is stained with his blood and Yoongi gives them a wide berth. He needed to rethink- that bite had been intended. Surely. Was that bite the entire purpose of this fight?

It hits him at once.

She hadn’t been set out into this arena to defeat him.

The lights overhead flicker, bathing them in darkness for a moment and Yoongi, not expecting it, readies himself for an attack from the Vel’leno but instead she screams as though frightened.

The lights come back on and she’s frantically shifting around, as though terrified.

She was afraid of the dark. Yoongi thinks of the way her eyes were smoky- she was dying, her eyes couldn’t function well.

Yoongi darts forward, only to nearly lose his jaw as she blindly swipes backwards. Her movements are crazed now- uncontained and wild. Her speed is still tremendous but she trips easily. She’s careless now- moving in havoc. She throws one of the daggers at Yoongi but he catches it mid-air and meets her halfway.

Their daggers clash, sparks flying. She isn’t even defending herself as much- the only reason why she was even moving was out of habit- out of conditioning. The lights flicker again and Yoongi wonders if this is Namjoon fiddling with the power-system grid. He did say he would get this done quickly.

She screams again, jumping an extraordinary distance to back off. The burning feeling on Yoongi’s shoulder is spreading all over his body.

She needs light.

Yoongi blinks the sweat out of his eyes, and to his horror his vision swims before him. Struggling for a moment, Yoongi focuses again and on the Vel’leno.

Their eyes meet and the smokiness to her eyes doesn’t mask the panic and pain she was feeling. It was as though he was begging her to end it now.

Yoongi was essentially made to exist in the darkness- both metaphorically and literally. The entirety of his missions were conducted while his senses were obstructed by the tight confinements of his suit and helmet- not to mention the weight of it.

But here.

Where he was wearing simple light robes and his head was free from any encasement, Yoongi is all too ready to end this. Not to end this for the sake of winning- but because of the Vel’leno.

The lights flicker again and Yoongi aims and throws the dagger in his hands. The arena turns pitch black and she screams.

Yoongi only has a 3 second window.

But it’s more than enough.

When the lights turn back on, the crowd witnesses Yoongi on the ground, the Vel’leno underneath him, and her dagger upright and buried deep into her chest, her blood spraying high and upward.

The arena is dead silent for a total of 5 seconds and the roar of voices is enough to physically jolt Yoongi. His entire body feels like it’s on fire. And he’s not sure if he heard it or imagined it. But there’s a faint whisper- one that sounds of apology just before the Vel’leno’s eyes dim and close. He gets up with difficulty, nausea hitting him hard. His dagger was still shuddering where it was stuck embedded on the wall of the arena, stuck there when the Vel’leno defended herself from its path, but exposing herself to Yoongi’s direct attack.

But Yoongi ignores the dagger and his feet take him to the other side- towards the dais. The sharp pain right under his ribs is burning now- he sustained no real injury- because that hadn’t been her intention. Or more accurately, that hadn’t been Van Seulgaan’s intention.

He sees a flash of ruddy hair and the Pompen host is back. Yoongi pants, his chest heaving in a way he knew wasn’t right. He painfully make his way to the dais, struggling to reach for the OrTank. He’s not sure but he thinks he blacks out for a few seconds because he’s leaning on the OrTank heavily. The Pompen is shrilly exclaiming congratulations, but Yoongi pays no mind.

The screams of the battle fade away rather blissfully, his ears filled with a muffled sort of sound. Despite feeling like he is on fire, his skin feels cold but the touch of the OrTank is soothing in a strange way. The Being inside jerks as though waking up- but his eyes remain closed. He moves faster than Yoongi has ever seen- not that it was at all fast. His movements are still delayed but they were definitely faster than normal. He’s facing Yoongi now, hair fanning around his face in a network of silver gold.

‘I got you,’ Yoongi manages to mumble out. He hears familiar footsteps hurrying towards him. ‘We’re taking you home.’

There are hands on him- Sk’jin’s- and another presence he identifies as Taeh’yung’s. Yoongi is incredibly disoriented but he manages to focus on the Zhak’gri.

‘That was one of the champions from the past Pageants!’ Taeh’yung exclaims, his voice muffled, looking awed before he glances down at Yoongi and promptly blurts out, ‘Poison.’

That made sense now.

The next few minutes are blurred and when he’s lucid enough to scope his surroundings, Yoongi finds himself back in the dressing-room.

Sk’jin and Taeh’yung are arguing loudly over him.

‘I’m not a Yisheng!’ Taeh’yung repeats, looking upset. ‘This is not within my ability to heal! I don’t even heal- you were different-!’

‘The more he moves, the faster the poison will spread-’ Sk’jin is going through every medical product they had. ‘Namjoon I’m going to need you to hurry and get us supplies here-’

‘What did you say-‘ Taeh’yung seemingly asks no one but then looks down at Yoongi.

‘You’re awake! Good okay, drink this-‘ Taeh’yung holds up a cup to Yoongi’s lips and he just drinks, unsure of anything.

The moment he’s able to swallow the strangely thick liquid he gasps out, ‘Is he- is he safe-’

‘He’s right here,’ Taeh’yung immediately reassures him. ‘He’s all right- he’s worried- so don’t move okay? Just drink this we’ll get you a cure-‘

Sk’jin is on his neck and Yoongi can smell cleaning agents. He can’t feel his neck- or any part of his body actually at this point.

The door suddenly burst open, making Sk’jin and Taeh’yung jump. Sk’jin’s eyes flash red but Taeh’yung is already smiling in greeting.

‘Sehr! You guys! This is amazing! You’re the real MVP!’

The Obere flock around him and Yoongi would find Sk’jin’s expression humorous if he had the energy to react. The N’nukwu bounds in, sniffing at Yoongi worriedly. The N’nukwu sneezes, as though offended by what he smelt. Some of the Obere observe the OrTank with unmasked awe and surprise while a bunch of them are talking loudly to Taeh’yung who is nodding vehemently, his hands held out as they place items into his palms. Sk’jin is talking on the Comm-Device in a low and fast tone- most probably arguing with Namjoon.

‘-I don’t care about that at this moment Hoseok, you and Namjoon can just send the messages for us, I don’t have the time-’

Despite being unable to feel his limbs- Yoongi forces himself to focus. Yoongi struggles to sit up but manages with the help of the N’nukwu. The nausea that hits him is disorienting. The very singular strands of muscles within his body feel like they’re frozen up and disconnected from each other- like he had no control over his limbs. He’s never felt like this before.

The Being inside the OrTank is facing him- body turned all the way, hands reaching up as though to reach for Yoongi.

‘I’m-…I’m all right,’ Yoongi wants to say this a little louder, but his voice is strained and weakened. Taeh’yung, however seems to understand. He takes Yoongi’s hand in his and with his other touches the surface of the OrTank.

‘I’m all right. I’m all right,’ Yoongi mumbles, not registering the slight sting of the compressorsyringe snapping on his forearm and neck at the same time.

‘You’re not all right- so stop fucking moving he’s not going anywhere!’ Sk’jin pulls him back and makes him lie down. ‘That bitch was sent to fucking poison you- what the fuck is this I can’t identify it-’ Sk’jin is seething, holding up a small basic scanner over his neck.

‘Here use this-‘ Taeh’yung cut in, long arms extending past Yoongi’s head.

His vision gives out for a while and he’s suddenly back- his ears ringing, vision cleared, and his skin clammy.

‘-his heartbeat is somewhat stabilizing but his temperature is still really high- I already administered everything I feel is safe enough-’ Sk’jin was clearly talking to Namjoon and Hoseok, giving them live updates.

Yoongi definitely feels much more awake and stronger, but he can tell that his strength has greatly diminished. The N’nukwu is snuffling him, as though trying to lick off whatever poison was now coursing through his veins.

One of the Obere- the one who Taeh’yung said was called Sehr, is by his side, an empty compressor syringe in his/her hands. They say something, which Yoongi doesn’t understand.

‘It’s really fast working- it’s eating up his cells, Namjoon I could really use some help here-‘ Sk’jin is saying when he stops suddenly.

The door to the dressing room slides open and Van Seulgaan stands there, hands clasped behind his back.

Before Yoongi was even aware, he’s moved and stands in front of the OrTank, Taeh’yung only a step behind him. The N’nukwu growls, standing in front of Yoongi protectively.

‘Please relax,’ Van Seulgaan smiles. ‘I simply came here to offer my congratulations. You have won me a lot of units.’

The Obere hiss at him, though they don’t raise their voices.

‘My friends, I would advise you to leave,’ Van Seulgaan addresses them genially. ‘It won’t be safe if you stay any longer.’

‘You can’t just threaten third party members like this you slime ball-‘ Sk’jin bursts out.

Yoongi reaches over to tap Sehr on their shoulder. The Obere looks up at him expectantly.

‘Thank you for all your help,’ Yoongi says quietly, his words come out slow, as though he was lagging. ‘You have repaid your debt twice over- please secure your safety.’

The Obere’s 3 opal-like eyes are wide and unblinking, processing Yoongi’s words.

‘We are in honor together, Human Yoongi,’ they squeak, twig like hair shifting a little. ‘Our bond is at peace.’

Database has no explanation.

The Obere gather themselves and line up to leave. The N’nukwu licks Yoongi’s face before allowing Taeh’yung to pet him and they leave the dressing room.

‘Adorable,’ Van comments, still standing at the doorway though his eyes now lingered on the OrTank. ‘Well. It is unfortunate to see you so Yoongi. If you wish to pull out of the Pageant, I can have that arranged of course. All you have to do is hand the egg over to me, and I will consider your debt paid. As the Obere said it: our bond will be at peace.’

‘No,’ Sk’jin, Taeh’yung, and Yoongi say at the same time.

Van Seulgaan’s eyes twinkle at that.

‘You understand that in your condition, you will not be able to win the Pageant- let alone a single round.’ Van states.

‘We will see about that,’ Sk’jin replies, complete and utter cool confidence in his voice.

‘You understand that you cannot escape, don’t you?’ Van comments. ‘I can take down your ship before it even takes off. You cannot leave this planet without my consent.’

‘We have no plans on running away,’ Sk’jin replies coldly, stepping forward, blocking Van’s view of the OrTank.

‘Oh I have complete faith in you, Khol’isa,’ Van smiles benignly. ‘So I hope you understand when I say, that according to Pageant protocol, that Pageant’s guards will now be following you throughout your House involvement in the Pageant? It’s just to make sure that no rules are broken of course.’

Tall, strongly built, non-Pompen appear behind him in the hallway. They appeared humanoid in form, though Yoongi cannot see their faces. They were most likely the Pageant’s security- except knowing the fact that Van was so deeply involved with the Pageant, they were most likely his own personal security unit.

‘We wouldn’t want to break any rules,’ Sk’jin replies with a sweet smile though his voice is dripping with anger.

‘Indeed- so, my contestant will be taken over to the Pageant in 15 minutes,’ Van gestures to Yoongi. ‘Will you be accompanying him?’

Sk’jin pauses for a moment and Yoongi wishes he had the Comm-Device in his ear.
‘No,’ Yoongi speaks. ‘They will return to the ship and bring it to the Pageant arena.’

Van looks down at him with some amusement while Sk’jin nods in agreement though he looks like he wants to argue.

‘Very well then, your guards will take you to-‘

The power in the room suddenly surges and then flickers and completely dies before coming back on again. And the moment it does, there’s a buzzing sound from Van Seulgaan’s pocket. He doesn’t even check to see what it was. Instead Van narrows his eyes at them, cursing under his breath.

‘This is you, isn’t it?’

‘I don’t know what you mean,’ Sk’jin replies coolly.

Van regards them with mild temperance before turning heel and walking out. The guards, however, remain. Sk’jin walks over and slams the door shut on their faces.

‘Good timing Joonie,’ Sk’jin says as he rushes over to Yoongi and asking, ‘Hoseok- are you in place? Yoongi-how are you now?’

Yoongi slumps back, leaning back on the OrTank that has shifted again to face Yoongi.

‘Better,’ Yoongi replies.

Sk’jin looks like he wants to argue this point but he stops, clearly listening to something. Yoongi nudges Taeh’yung, tapping at his ear. The Zhak’gri removes his own Comm-Device and carefully attaches it on Yoongi’s ear.

‘-the special-jury have all received the messages,’ Hoseok is saying, ‘And I’ve already started the broadcast. It’s live on every channel in Raksane Tayi. Unless Van blows up his own ship with all of his “goods” in here, nothing will stop this broadcast. I’m making my way to the top of the Dock now to hide.’

‘All right- no signal is leaving or entering the planet as well,’ Namjoon is saying. ‘I’ll be there in 15 minutes I just need to make sure it remains like this for at least 3-4 more hours.’

‘But we can’t do this anymore,’ Sk’jin argues. ‘Yoongi is not capable of fighting anymore- we can just-‘

‘Do what? There’s no option here!’ Namjoon argues back. ‘We continue with the plan- we have to- or at least until Yoongi is inside the Pageant arena- then you and Taeh’yung do whatever needs to be done, and escape!’

Sk’jin exclaims out loud in a few languages- none of them good words- before he spits out, ‘This was a dumb idea from the beginning- why don’t we just use Taeh’yung’s abilities and just fucking get out of here- we’ve already cut the communication lines- you can, I don’t know, completely overtake the planet and make it so that only we can go-‘

‘I am not doing that- to make that happen would mean to completely overwrite the power grid structure which would not only effect just simply electricity and communication signals but power for hospitals, highways, living units, Docks, and other ports- our action could cause countless of accidents and deaths.’
‘Then Taeh’yung can just go-‘ Sk’jin argues again but Yoongi stops him.

‘No- we stick to the plan. I can still fight. I will win this. So you and Taeh’yung should also stick to your original plan and head back to the ship now,’ Yoongi states firmly. ‘The medicine is working. I can do this-‘

‘This is not good- we have to re-evaluate our plan-‘ Sk’jin argues.

‘The next match is in 20 minutes we can’t do anything- there are no Yishengs around and we’ve already sent the messages. This isn’t going to end well either way- the only factor here that we didn’t count was Yoongi getting poisoned- other than that, the plan is still executable-‘ Sk’jin snorts derisively at that but Namjoon doesn’t stop. ‘-

‘Namjoon is right,’ Taeh’yung declares suddenly, ‘We should stick to our plan.’

Sk’jin is close to fuming but after a moment he nods stiffly.

‘Fine then. If any of us dies in this stupid plan then I’m going to fucking leave this planet and all of you. I don’t fucking care anymore!’ he declares as he holds up a towel to Yoongi’s face. ‘Now hold still I need to make you beautiful.’

---

He doesn’t tell him his name. It wasn’t important. And he doesn’t ask either.

He’s not sure if it was because of the fact that he could now possess a form, to move as he wished- to feel and touch as he once did so long ago- that he feels awake. As though he was emerging from a deep sleep- but his nightmares still follow him.

But now it was their nightmare. And sometimes when his nightmares got too strong- he would take over. He once took over for nearly a month. And during this time he finds them a cave to live in. He was Long-Huon- still very young, but undoubtedly talented, skilled, and intelligent. But what had happened- this place- what he’d seen, had taken a lot out of him. The same way it did with the others. He was not quite broken- he was cracked- and that was where he would take over. Filling in the cracks, completing them both.

They relied on each other- depended on each other. Together they grew stronger, putting together a strange semblance of normalcy and dependency.

And as though sensing him- sensing them- the others start to appear.
White and pale and wispy—almost invisible under sunlight. Translucent, yet strangely solid at times. They were echoes, rings of their former vibrance.

At first he’s afraid—were these sent by it? But they just hover close, appearing away from the shadow of his memories—leaking out into this pane—shifting through the space his possession creates.

They speak to him. To them. Soft voices—this is new as well.

‘You promised.’ They whispered to him.

‘I know I did. And I will do everything I can,’ he tells them quietly.

‘You promised.’

‘I know.’

He still can’t tell if the look in his eyes were of condemnation or forgiveness.

‘I won’t stop— I will never stop.’

It used to spook the Long-Huon a bit— but then he started speaking to them by his own volition. On days where his lucidness was clearer and stronger he would speak to him too. Telling him information, new data, sometimes an anecdote of his past. He mentioned a few Beings many times over. He can hear the love he has for them in his voice.

He also hears the guilt.

They sometimes share dreams—sometimes nightmares.

‘Who was he?’ he asks one day, eyes locked on a wispy form that lingers by the trees. And the Long-Huon knows—he can see his dreams, his nightmares—see the hand that had reached out for him. The hand he couldn’t take in his own.

‘You know.’

It’s after over a year when something happens. When a miracle takes place.

A familiar sound thunders through the air—and a bright streak of light. They step out, peering into the sky to spot the ship because that was what it was.

It’s a small ship this time around—private, probably involved in trade. When he spots it, tearing through the thin clouds into full visibility, a sensation builds up in him—one that they shared. Because he knew that ship—he knew.

He saw it in their dreams.

‘How—’

He chokes on his words.

‘I promised you that we’d get out of here,’ he grits through his teeth as he raises one hand, finger pointing and tracing the path of the unsteady ship. ‘And that’s how.’

It vanishes behind a hill and they hear crushing sounds.
Yoongi isn’t entirely aware or properly awake during his journey to the Pageant arena above ground. All he knows is he’s guided out of the dressing room, leaving behind an extremely agitated Sk’jin, an almost crying Taeh’yung, and the OrTank behind. His robes were different too; Sk’jin forcibly changing him into white robes with little to no decoration. It was just a simple white robe with sleeves that were perhaps just a little too long but the span of it seemed to make him look like he had wings. The material was thin and soft- comfortable against his skin that felt feverish and pained.

The poison was really taking a toll on his appearance as well. And Yoongi wonders if that was the reason why the Vel’leno looked so odd. Their biology was clearly different, which was why the poison would affect them differently. His skin was paler than usual and though his eyes weren’t smoky, his vision was definitely giving out. He’s not sure how much of his strength was compromised- but his muscles still felt disconnected and frozen. Though he told Sk’jin that the medication he had received had helped him somewhat, it had only cleared his disorientation and somewhat reduced the amount of pain he was feeling.

Yoongi could deal with pain- it wasn’t an issue- but he was compromised, and he didn’t know to what or which extent.

‘We’re back at the ship Yoongi- he’s in here safe, next to me,’ Taeh’yung tells him quietly. ‘He’s-uh…he’s speaking a lot right now- or dreaming- I’m not sure, but I can hear him a lot right now. I think he’s worried.’

‘We’re on the ship- we’re headed out to the arena grounds- we found a place to park, it’s on Section 41-0062- about 5 minutes away from the stadium.’ Sk’jin reports tersely. ‘Namjoon?’

‘I’m already there- found a Transporter and got here,’ Namjoon replies. ‘I have some medicine that might help Yoongi.’
'Tayi is going nuts,' Hoseok reports shortly. 'I don’t know about Pompa- I don’t think they’ve really noticed, but all the channels going out are going crazy- the Underverse is pretty much going insane. The GLA should be here soon- give it an hour at the most.'

'Have they responded?'

'No- but I don’t think that matters at this point,' Hoseok replies. 'I’m moving again- Van’s set out a massive search for me.'

'Please stay safe Hobi!'

'Don’t worry- I’m just hiding in plain sight, the guards have walked past me like, 4 times already.' Hoseok sounds a little amused.

'At least some of us are enjoying themselves,' Sk’jin grits out. 'We’re up- we’ll be at the Arena in a bit.'

The Transporter he’s in stops and his “guards” stand, gesturing to the doorway. Yoongi suspects that the guards are some form of Android, built specially for this event. He hasn’t seen their chests rise to indicate breathing, and neither has he seen them adjust themselves.

With pained difficulty, Yoongi stands up. He catches sight of his own reflection and is only just a little surprised.

Sk’jin hadn’t done much- only added colour to his cheeks and lips, and added a layer of some form of luminance on his skin. He looked incredibly young.

'Yoongi will be fighting up against a semi-finalist from Lum called Tl’mei- and…well. Her last opponent was literally broken in half-'

'Namjoon I don’t think we need to hear this at this very moment-' Sk’jin interrupts.

'OH! I saw her fight! She was so cool! She’s like, tiny! But like, so powerful! Not fast though- but incredibly strong, like once you get in her grip it’s kinda-'

'SO we maintain distance in the fight,' Sk’jin interrupts angrily.

'It will be all right,’ Yoongi repeats himself as he steps out of the Transporter and finds himself inside another facility of sorts. It smelt like sweat, antiseptic cleaners, and blood in here. Namjoon is waiting for him by one of the doorways. He’s carrying a medical kit of sorts and Yoongi vaguely wonders where he might have gotten it from.

There are guards standing next to him as well but the Kutsoglerin disregards them easily.

'Hey,’ he nods in greeting. ‘They took my screen- apparently someone messed up something massive here.’

'Oh,’ Yoongi says lamely. He wishes he could say more.

'Let’s go get you scanned and shot,’ Namjoon smiles tightly.

They walk together in silence into a small hallway. Yoongi briefly entertains the idea of overtaking the guards around them- numbered only at 15 (easy enough for him and Namjoon to overtake) and getting out of there. However Van Seulgaan waits for them at the end of the hallway, an irritated expression on his face.
The moment they’re close enough the Tayian lashes out a fist across Namjoon’s jaw. Namjoon barely even moves, his head turning a little. Instead Van Seulgaan wrings his hand in pain.

‘What have you done?’ he demands. ‘I cannot make contact with my ship, or anything outside of the planet- what have you done?’

‘I don’t know what you’re talking about,’ Namjoon states coolly.

‘Give me his items! Have you kept the ship on lockdown?’ he demands, facing one of the guards.

‘Yes sir,’ an automated voice replies and Yoongi is now certain they were Androids of sorts. ‘The ship Užkulisai-02 is under rift-lock. All passengers have been detained inside.’

Van Seulgaan searches through Namjoon’s screen but judging from his mounting frustration, he couldn’t find anything condemning. He throws the screen down on the ground and stomps on it.

‘What exactly are you doing? We have a match to get to,’ Namjoon asks with a frown.

‘I could have all of you killed right now!’ he seethes.

‘Namjoon- be careful-’ Sk’jin’s warning tone is seeped with worry and panic.

‘You will have to wait until after we win the Pageant,’ Namjoon says in a patronizing tone glancing down at a non-existent watch on his wrist. ‘I need to treat my friend here before the fight-so if you will excuse us.’

Database has no explanation.

‘Namjoon he could literally kill you right now-’

Namjoon pushes past Van and walks away. Yoongi follows suit.

‘You think you’re doing the right thing,’ Van calls after them, ‘You know nothing! You don’t know what you have done!’

Namjoon turns his head briefly, eyes cold as he addresses the Tayian: ‘Do you?’

They walk a few more steps and Namjoon calls back, ‘I would leave, if I were you.’

Yoongi looks back to find Van gaping at the back of Namjoon’s head.

‘But he can’t, can he? No communication signals means no way of flying out.’ Yoongi asks.

Namjoon chuckles for a moment, ‘Yeah, he can’t leave until the signal-block is lifted.’

‘Yeah- about that. He just broke your screen, how are you getting that lifted?’ Hoseok asks.

Namjoon smiles mysteriously, ‘Don’t worry about it.’

‘Nice. I’m almost attracted to you right now Namjoon,’ Sk’jin quips in with a fake laugh. ‘But what the fuck was that about? He could have killed you!’

Namjoon rolls his eyes.

‘No- he wouldn’t have,’ Namjoon replies as they enter the elevator. ‘He’s obviously working for someone- or at least answering to someone. Van’s already messed up twice now- he can’t afford to mess up again. He’s going to want to keep us alive so that we take all the blame- he needs a scapegoat.’

‘Did you just fucking throw us under a Transporter to save us from another Transporter?’ Sk’jin demands.

‘Double usage of the same metaphor; nice.’

‘Don’t fucking start-’

‘Am I your friend?’ Yoongi asks as they exit the elevator to an excessively grand hallway that would have been quite luxurious if it weren’t for the random pools of blood on the rich carpet and the stench of rot.

Namjoon looks taken aback, pausing a moment before saying, ‘I’d like to believe we are friends
Yoongi- as much as it is possible given our situation.’

Database has no explanation.

‘Contestant- this is your room.’

The guards stop them, pointing them to a room.

It’s a clean but still excessively opulent room with gold ornaments everywhere and a large gilded circular bed at the very center. A few chandeliers hang from the ceiling, all bright neon colours and it hurts Yoongi’s eyes.

‘Are you in pain?’ Namjoon asks worriedly, noticing the fact that his eyes were watering.

‘No.’ Yoongi replies despite the burning in his eyes.

‘Just sit for a moment- we have 5 minutes left, this should help,’ Namjoon says, guiding him to sit down.

The compressor-syringe hurts this time, and Yoongi instantly notices that his pain tolerance has gone down as well. However, whatever Namjoon has shot him with does make him feel better. In fact, a bit too well.

‘What is it?’ Yoongi asks, opening his eyes and finding that his vision was clearing. The lights didn’t hurt as much and he was starting to feel stronger as well.

‘In Kutsoglera,’ Namjoon says lightly. ‘When they experimented on us- on the others, our bodies were failing to remain stable, so they would use a combination of medication to give us a “boost”.
It was the only thing that worked for us- and it’s part of the medication I need to take regularly as well.’

‘Is this your medication?’ Yoongi asks, looking down at the compressor-syringe in Namjoon’s hands.

‘Some bits, yes,’ Namjoon replies, looking over him carefully. ‘I added a few other things from a nearby hospital while I was making my way here- you should be all right for-…for a few hours.
But after that, we will need to get you completely treated.’

Yoongi nods, feeling a surge of energy flow through him. He stands up, feeling no pain from his neck, his side. He felt incredibly strung up.
‘Yoongi- just because you feel better doesn’t mean the poison isn’t working anymore- it’s still in your system and works even faster and stronger when you move. So try and end it as quickly as you can.’ Sk’jin says sharply. ‘I’m checking your blood sample in our Medical Bay and by the time you get back I should have some form of reasonable cure for you.’

‘Thank you- I will remember that,’ Yoongi replies.

‘Contestant, it is time for your match.’ One of the guard announces.

Yoongi nods, making his way to the door.

‘Yoongi wait.’

Yoongi looks around to face the Kutsoglerin.

‘I know you said you volunteered to do this- that you want to do this- but I am sorry.’ Namjoon says, his tone sincere.

Yoongi doesn’t know what to say- mostly because he’s not sure what Namjoon actually means by all of this.

_Database has no explanation._

‘Yoongi! You can do it! I believe in you!’

‘We believe in you- and we’ll get you out of there. Don’t worry.’

‘Don’t’ fuck up my robes, those were fucking expensive.’

He removes his Comm-Device and hands it over to Namjoon.

‘You consume very powerful drugs,’ Yoongi says.

Namjoon snorts at that before letting out a truly amused laugh.

‘Yeah- yeah I do,’ he nods, taking the Comm-Device. ‘I’ll be here waiting.’

Yoongi nods and turns.

The door closes behind him as he walks out of the room and into the hallway.

It’s quiet but Yoongi is not fooled. They exit the hallway and into a larger atrium-like hallway where other contestants were gathered. They all stare at him, silence filling the large room. There’s an elevator waiting for him towards the end where a small petite female stood. She was obviously his opponent for this fight.

Her features are porcelain like, her lavender hair soft and tied away in a simple braid. She appeared to look like a child but Yoongi can tell immediately that she was nothing of the sort. Her arms are longer than normal, but almost vine like. Yoongi remembers Taeh’yung ramble, about her grip being strong. Nothing out of the ordinary was discernible about her and when he is feet from her, she finally looks up at him.

Her eyes are bright blue, the skin around her skin silver giving way to a pearlescent white.

It was as though an artist had been given free rein to create the most ethereal Being he could create and as a result, this Tl’mei was born. Yoongi doesn’t know anything about their species- and even if he did, he wouldn’t be able to determine her abilities. All he knew was that she was immensely strong.

They both step into the elevator and Yoongi can feel the way the booth tilts the moment she takes a step inside. Her weight was clearly disproportionate to her size. 10 guards step in with them, surrounding and dividing them. No one says a single word.

Until-

‘Human.’

‘Yes.’

The elevator comes to a stop and the doors open to deafening applause and blinding lights.

The guards step out first, forming a rank on either side.

The Tl’mei steps out and Yoongi follows suit.

The Pageant arena is at least 10 times the size of the underground arena. It’s also open to the sky overhead and Yoongi can see the floating holographic advertisements in neon. Right now it was his face and the Tl’mei face on display. Yoongi vaguely wonders when they got that picture of his face.

The arena ground is large and Yoongi walks a complete minute before stepping towards the middle, indicated by a golden mat that’s very new, covering the blood and gore that’s splattered all over the dark floors around it.

It smelt like excitement, carnage, and death.

They arrive at the center and face each other.

Yoongi looks around, the crowds blurring to haphazard shapes and forms of colour and screams. He looks up, hoping to catch some stars in the sky above but he’s a little disappointed. There are a few neon coloured clouds though, but Yoongi doesn’t care much for those. Fighting out here in the open felt better somehow, in a strange way.

Above him the holographs all transform to a countdown, starting at 10.

He watches until the numbers shift to 5 before looking away.

The Tl’mei is simply watching him, form petite and elegant. They were both somehow disadvantaged here. They had never seen each other fight, and they knew nothing of each other. They were both tired from their previous fights, but they both had something to fight for.

The colours change to red around him as the countdown ends and the Tl’mei attacks first.

Yoongi maintains his distance, finding that his speed was only just a little compromised. The Tl’mei was expecting him to move away, judging by the fact that she slams her slender arms down on the ground, causing the floors to erupt upwards, blowing dust and bits of flooring up at Yoongi’s face. The ground shakes and cracks at a huge radius and the crowd screams in favor.

Yoongi backs up even more- here, they would be offered no weapons, no “gifts”. This was all just raw hand-to-hand combat. Or anything they could use to their advantage. So as Yoongi rolls away, his hands catch onto the loose surface of the floor and he peels off a chunk of it and throws it with all his force at the Tl’mei. She punches it away without even blinking but Yoongi doesn’t let up.

His hands dig into the cracked floors, hurling slab after slab at her, approaching her closer and closer. She too shifts closer and closer.

All Yoongi had to do was not get caught in her grip. He estimates her reach, calculating the length of her arms and estimates it at 3.7 feet-

Her arms extend forward in a bizarre rope like manner, looping around him as quick as lightning.

Startled, Yoongi manages to slip free though the side of his robes tear off and he finds himself apologizing to Sk’jin.

Her arms could extend.

He doesn’t have the time to experiment or figure out the extent of how far her arms could extend so Yoongi does what no one in this situation should do and dives forward towards the Tl’mei. She’s clearly not expecting it but she’s quick to recover. But it’s not fast enough because she can’t match up to Yoongi’s speed. He’s ducked under her arms, crouching incredibly low onto the ground, picking up a bit of the cracked slabs on the floor, Yoongi slams his laden hand upwards.

The slab cracks under her chin and Yoongi almost instantly regrets it.

Most Beings would fly off, or at least tether backwards. But she barely even lifts her head at the force. Instead Yoongi’s arm hurts from the density of her body.

Her knee comes flying out of nowhere and Yoongi crosses his arms over his torso, absorbing the force of her delivery. Yoongi’s bones were reinforced- possibly not to the degree as it was with Namjoon’s, but it’s the only reason why his arms weren’t broken immediately. His left shoulder, however, does disconnect briefly. But by the time he lands lightly on his feet, squatting down to balance himself, he pushes it back into place, not registering the stinging pain.

She was beyond strong. And Yoongi calmly realizes that he was not going to win this through strength. He was going to have to be very careful. And fast.

She jumps forward, her legs clearly a lot more powerful than they appeared, and she’s vaulting in the air, arms held up to slam downwards at him.

Yoongi realizes at this moment that though he should be careful and fast- meaning he had to duck out of the way quickly before she smashed him with her twig-like arms- he could do something incredibly dumb by (Sk’jin’s standard) but effective.

He chooses the latter and also makes a running jump upwards- meeting her head on. From the way her eyes widen, it’s clear she was not expecting him to do that. And she’s already too high up, her velocity carrying her too fast, to change her arms or truly defend herself as Yoongi twists midair, his knee coming into sharp contact with her abdomen.

They fall together, but Yoongi manages to land on top and uses the few seconds he has to pummel hard and speedy punches. Her head is as hard as rock, and though Yoongi understands the sentiment of a fair and justified fight, he has never, in his many years of being a GI agent or even now, fought by what was considered honourable. So it’s without hesitation that he blinds her, fingers hooking into sockets as quick as lightning and he’s rolling away as quickly as possible.

She screams, arms reaching up to grab at him but Yoongi is already a few meters away. He’s quick to move though, picking more slabs and charging down at her where she was partially encased into the flooring as a result of their fall. She screams louder and pushes herself up despite the steady flow of debris Yoongi throws at her. Blinded, she is disadvantaged as she wildly spins around, trying to locate Yoongi. Thinking quickly, Yoongi picks up more of the floor slabs and throws them towards her left; she lurches in that direction blindly and Yoongi moves quickly, making a leaping run and lands on her back. They don’t fall, as Yoongi had hoped, but she remains standing. Quickly, Yoongi grapples around her neck, choking her backwards. Most Beings would have had their necks snapped backwards but not her. She struggles for a moment before she tilts backwards. Yoongi jumps off but she catches the end of his robes, causing him to fall backwards.

Her arm comes landing down, just inches from his outstretched arm, the ground cracking with contact. Rolling over Yoongi is back on his feet but is suddenly overcome with nausea, his vision swimming violently.

It’s only for 2 seconds but it’s enough for the Tl’mei to swing her arm just so and Yoongi is flying backwards, pain erupting on the side of his body. He lands painfully on his back, his head cracking something beneath it. His vision is jarred and blurred but he can just about make out the form flying down at him. Yoongi moves as quickly as he can, and is just in time to avoid being crushed to death. She does however, grab him and Yoongi is forced into some very quick hand-to-hand defensive stances as he blocks what feels like tons of rocks thrown at him.

His breath is knocked out of his body, his ears ringing dangerously, but not loud enough to hear his ribs cracking, as her fist makes contact with his chest.

Yoongi’s body is numb- he feels like he’s breaking at every possible surface. Namjoon’s medication had clearly worn off now.

He looks up just in time to see her running towards him, though the direction is a little off, considering she can’t see him. Yoongi quickly throws a slab to her left and she pauses. Clearly listening hard. Yoongi is barely moving, not even allowing himself to breathe. She listens intently. Yoongi’s vision swims, his body on fire, and his head pulsing. But he could do this. He has to.

He crouches down, low and quiet.

On all fours he crawls forward- he was doing something incredible un-careful and un-fast but he knows he has to do this. The crowd is screaming even more and she’s losing concentration. Her arms are moving around carefully as though to feel for Yoongi nearby.

Just as she is 3 feet in front of him, Yoongi leaps.

She’s hears him just as he leaps, crossing her arms over and it’s exactly what Yoongi wants. Grabbing a single arm, Yoongi uses his momentum to swing it back and as he lands, bringing her falling down onto her back, rolls forward with the long limb, and hears the resonating crack of breaking bones.

She screams but it’s not exactly enough to completely incapacitate her because that very broken arm grabs and pulls at him. But it’s not as strong and she’s still too slow.

Noting where the bone was sticking out from her pale skin, Yoongi uses these points to swing his own arms own, breaking the arm off cleanly, moving forward towards her form and dodging the arm that comes up to defend herself, lands an uppercut to her jaw.

But Yoongi is losing strength- and he’s losing speed. She only jolts backwards and her good arm is already swinging forward and catches him around the middle again and this time he can’t slip out.
A pained groan escapes him as she squeezes and he jerks him forward. His ribs crack and his back strains- she was trying to literally break him in half.

Yoongi brings down his elbow on her head 5 times in a row but she doesn’t let off. He notices the bone of her arm sticking out on her now useless arm and he leans to the side, definitely feeling something in him break, he grabs at the bone and tears it off, bringing it to the side, slicing at her throat.

She drops him with a garble shriek.

‘HUMAN!!’

Yoongi can do no more than crawl backwards, his body shaking against his own will. She grabs him and with astounding strength hurls him across the floor. He skids across the ground but his momentum forces him to stand up, lurching into place- he coughs and he knows there’s blood. But there’s nothing he can do. She’s facing him now- running purely off of instinct, running up to him- ready to strike. But Yoongi can still dodge- he’s still able-

He’s too slow and she catches him across his shoulder and he falls. But he refuses to stay down and gets up at once. The Tl’mei smiles a bloody smile at him and bounds up to him- legs still graceful coiling and launching her up and forward and-

He was losing. He lost.

His hearing must be the first of his senses to fail him because no sound hits him. His vision was also now fully fading away as everything started to fade out, oddly into white rather than black- he can’t move away- he can’t dodge this fall anymore, he can’t-

There’s a ripple of light- pure gold and soft. A quite humming settles around him- Yoongi doesn’t understand.

The Tl’mei falls mid-jump, a strange ripple in the air blocking her leap and she crumples to the ground. Overwhelmed by what was happening, Yoongi manages to turn around and witnesses a bright but soft light, and a great rush of wind that envelopes him from above.

‘Yoongi?’

Database has no explanation.

He doesn’t know this voice. But why did it sound so familiar? He doesn’t know this voice but somehow the only thing that comes to his mind is safe.

His legs give out on him and Yoongi falls.
He doesn’t go back.

They don’t seem surprised.

Disappointed perhaps. But not surprised.

‘I am sorry,’ they tell him.

He shrugs it off. It made no difference in the end. Whether or not they were sorry. What did it matter?

They weren’t the ones who pulled the knife out.

They weren’t the ones who could still feel the heat of the blade searing into his palm to this very day.

He doesn’t go back to her either.

He can’t and he doesn’t expect her to wait for him either. There is no return. And there is no moving forward either.

He just stays.

His mind strays back to the sacrifice he had witnessed.

The fire has ebbed away now, and only charcoal, dust, and ash remains. This was the finale- the end of his participation. The fire claimed him and now all that was left was this.

‘What will you do?’ he had asked. The body disintegrates- cracked and broken bones, charred flesh and liquidized fat.

It just stays.

‘Nothing,’ the high-priest replied. ‘The birds and rats will come to eat it.’

Looking down at his hands, he no longer feels the flames or the heat of the knife.

But he can taste ashes in his mouth.
The pain that shoots through him as he lands on his knees jolts him to some degree of lucidness. But it still doesn’t help him. Yoongi doesn’t understand what it is that he’s seeing.

Database has no explanation.

Opening his eyes, he finds a strange shield of light hides him from the audience. It’s opaque- much like fleeting glimpses of sunlight filtering through the trees- creating cascading ribbons of light that exist only for a fraction of a second. But it surrounds him now and Yoongi is alone in this strangely peaceful light.

No- not alone.

It wasn’t the Tl’mei- she was stunned- crazed, flaying against whatever this shield of light was -at this light. This was…- he was the source of light.

There’s a rift in the light before him- and a form appears, clearer and outlined a bit more.

Database has no explanation.

Was this another contestant he had to fight? Was this part of the Pageant? But Yoongi hadn’t heard of this before. And he had heard his name being spoken. His name in the rogue-rounds had been Suga– his real name wasn’t used. How could his opponent know? Or did Van send this Being out to finish him?

Database has no explanation.

Yoongi tries to stand; the screams of the crowd around him feels physical. Their voices crushing him, digging deep into his injuries and tearing him open. He’s exhausted. What was happening? Was this part of the Pageant?

He’s so exhausted.

The lights are concentrated over him- waiting for him to fall; waiting for him to succumb.

He’s only mildly aware of spitting something out- or was it just pouring out of his mouth without his control? Yoongi closes his eyes, relief flooding him. Like this, he could stand. A cool breeze runs over him, over bare and bruised and bleeding skin. It’s nothing short of bliss.

It was obvious he wouldn’t be able to fight after this- that meant Sk’jin and Taeh’yung would fly out now. If Namjoon is smart, he would leave with them seeing as they were only 5 minutes away from the arena- they would then go pick up Hoseok, and leave. Taeh’yung could easily destroy the rift-lock, and provide the ship with a strong shield. Pompen forces wouldn’t be able to follow them with the communications signals messed up, and the Užkulisai was outfitted with its own system that made it independent, it would be able to fly out of Pompa safely.
Golden light like a halo radiates from this Being, too blurred and far away for Yoongi to really see.
But Yoongi doesn’t need to see.
Because he can feel.
And Yoongi knows exactly who he is.
The Being from the OrTank steps up right in front of Yoongi, expression worried, and oh- his eyes.
Database has no explanation.
Eyes as dark as the night sky empty of stars, yet ringed with a bright ring of white, the Being from the OrTank stands before him. He’s clad in a tunic like shirt that looks strangely familiar, his hair is soft and dry- no trace of dampness. Save for the tears that are welled up in his eyes.
‘Yoongi?’
He hears sorrow in his voice. Sorrow, and pain.
Memories flood Yoongi’s mind. None of which makes sense. Were these memories, or were they dreams?
‘No I meant-‘ she stops for a while, still not looking away. ‘What if time froze? And all we ever saw was this- like, what would that be like?’
Database has no explanation.
Hands, cool and soft, cradle his face. It should hurt. It probably did. But Yoongi can’t tear his eyes away from the twin eclipses in his eyes. He can’t look away from the silvery-gold hair, the warm tan skin, the light freckles dusting the high points of his face.
Database has no explanation.
Yoongi tries to speak, but his body is numb and his vision is blurring in the way he was all too familiar with.
‘What is your name?’ he wants to ask. But his tongue is numb, and all of his senses are fading away.
A flare erupts through the sky and the brightness of it all ingrains itself into his mind. The ring of white fire glows and every time he blinked it beamed at him.
The Being smiles softly, eyes turning into crescents as he kneels down with Yoongi carefully, arms looping around his form and holding him close. The tears in his eyes fall, creating tiny streaks of light down his cheeks. His hair is longer now that it’s not suspended in whatever fluid that encased him.
Database has no explanation.
Yoongi feels his exhaustion overwhelm him and he keels.
But he’s there to keep him upright- he’s there to catch him.
The world is transformed under this light- under this sky- and the entirety of time seems to pause.
Sun-warmed leaves, a summer breeze carrying the promise of rain, and a vivid memory of a blue planet, curved perfectly against the starry expanse of the Universe behind it.

And Yoongi wants this moment to last longer. To allow him to witness this cosmic beauty for just a few seconds longer- just a few heartbeats longer. Just long enough for him to feel as though he was breathing at the same pace with everyone gathered around them. To feel as though he were looking at the same sky with everyone- to feel the planet sigh at the sight of the eclipse.

This is what it felt like.

Database has no explanation.

Bright lights erupt above him- above them. Familiar symmetrical lights and the burning blue energy flames of engine turbines. Yoongi is vaguely aware that he’s being moved but the eclipse appears again. Rosy lips move, forming the syllables of his name.

‘Yoongi?’

‘It would be just like this.’

*
(Author’s Note)

So that’s happening.
Ehe
Please scream at me.

DID YOU SEE MY BAG?
DID YOU SEE MY FUCKING BAG?????????
IT’S THICK
I CAN’T LOL OMG

There’s so much that has happened since I updated the last chapter I can’t think of anything to write except congratulations to all of my sons and daughters on winning their awards and for giving epic performances.

AND HAPPY BIRTHDAY TO KIM SEOKJIN I WISH I HAD HALF THE LEVEL OF CONFIDENCE THAT YOU DO- no but legit I have mad respect and love for Jin. I admire his effort, his tenacity, and his determination to prove himself, not just because of others, but for himself- his self-discipline, the lack of fucks he has to give, and the obvious care he has for his band members. Kim Seokjin is the best eldest hyung they could ever have and I love him so much. Mr World Wide Handsome I pray that you will only ever receive love and happiness for the rest of your life you ridiculously funny and beautiful man. I can’t even with you.

I was listening to the Thor original sound score while writing this chapter. Some epic shit right there people.

All right- time for some serious business

Net neutrality

I am going to leave some links here that you can all sign up for. TLDR guys if this passes, people in the US, and let's admit it, soon, around the world, we're going to have to pay for using sites like tumblr, ao3,aff,twitter, even youtube- not to mention pay even MORE for amazon, netflix, and any other thing that requires the internet. the internet needs to remain free. this can't happen and we need to stop this at once. imagine having to study for a paper and having to pay to use wikipedia. For more information you can go here: over here.

or if you just want to sign up, it won’t take more than 2 minutes for each of these links, go to these websites and sign the petition. It won’t require anything more than your name, country, and email address and later a verification email will come to you and you just click at the link and it's done.
here
and here
this doesn’t just effect the US- but the rest of the world, because we know that this will spread. The sites have their signatures already but we need to do more- need to show HOW FUCKING STUPID THIS IS please do this it is SO important
imagine having to PAY to read fanfiction- or having to pay to WRITE fanfiction. Or worse yet, having to pay to use twitter or tumblr, OR YOUTUBE- HOW WILL WE WATCH BTS????
HOW WILL WE FUCKING STUDY? I PASSED ALL OF MY EXAMS BECAUSE OF WIKIPEDIA so please. Let’s do this. the internet is the only place where we can actually be free- even the shitty side of it, let’s do this guys on a much lighter and happier note

UNIVERSITY IS OVER for a month AND I AM FREE for a month SO YOU CAN EXPECT WEEKLY UPDATES AGAIN for a month
AND ALSO THAT YOONMIN AU I WAS TALKING ABOUT SOME TIME AGO
AYO
SEE YOU ALL NEXT SUNDAY
“Promnesia” [noun] [modern Latin]: From Greek pre- "before" -mnesia "memory".

Chapter Notes

See the end of the chapter for notes

I want to leave.

It’s an ocean of light.

A sky of light.

An eternity of nothingness that encompasses no shape or form or colour- only light.

There are voices here- of him. Of her. Of them.

Of everyone.
Voices of the past.

Voices of the present.

Voices of the future.

I know you, I walked with you once upon a dream

There is singing, there is crying, there is screaming, there is laughter.

If you asked him where this was, he would say It was, it is, and it will be because that was what this truly was.

Was he happy? He’s not sure- was that a concept that was remotely important here?

Was he sad? He’s not sure.

What he does know is that he needs to be somewhere. He needs to go home.

He needs to go back.

That is all he remembers. That is the core of who he is.

I know you, that look in your eyes is so familiar a gleam

And he clings to that- and he lingers in what is. Sometimes he hears voices that are clearer than others, feels colours that are louder than others. Sometimes it’s just empty. But recently, if there is a concept of time here, after many an age, he finally hears something.

He can hear their memories.

And it’s louder than anything he’s heard before. Clearer, brighter, stronger.

And they are colourful – with so many emotions. It hurts his heart- because the colours he sees the most are pain, anger, sorrow, fear, regret, self-loathing, and worst of all, the colour that is starkest and brightest yet darkest of them all: homelessness.

And I know it's true that visions are seldom all they seem.

Sometimes he feels the colours close by, and sometimes they’re far away. Sometimes the colour of suspicion and doubt shine brightest. Then sometimes the colour of confusion and paranoia deepen in hue.

And sometimes it’s empty. It’s empty and he wonders if it’s going to be empty again but suddenly-amidst this endlessness of light, there is an eruption of pure and green energy.

But if I know you, I know what you'll do

And through this light he hears a voice. Or was it 5?
'Who are you?'

'I am the Yemenifesi Ch’inik’eti,' he responds to the voice. ‘Who are you?’

‘We are the Fifth, born of the first Awakening. What are you doing here?’

'I came here to seek shelter, to bring safety to my people. To take them home. What are you doing here?'

‘We could feel you. How long have you been here?’

'I don’t know. Time is not a concept that exists here. I don’t know where I am.’

‘We have seen this place before. Do you wish to leave?’

'I need to go back.'

You'll love me at once, the way you did once upon a dream

‘Where?’

‘Back home.’

‘Can you leave? I will try to help you, I don’t know if I can.’

He looks at the green energy- almost as ancient as this light around him- almost as powerful.

‘I have never tried- I don’t know how to.’

‘Follow it.’

‘Follow what?’ he asks. He really wants to leave now. Because he sees another colour bleeding in through the green. A colour he wants to eradicate. A colour he needs to remove.

‘Follow their voices, their dreams, follow their souls, follow their memories, follow their hearts- they will guide you.’

‘I will try.’

He’s searching now- for a way out.

‘What is your name?’

What was his name? He had a name.

He has a name.

He finds the exit. Through the bleeding colour that he has come to hate. It’s faint at first. But not for long.
A soft light fills the air before—soft and golden—like sunshine.

And he remembers his name.

‘My name is Jimin.’

Jimin stands besides Hoseok, watching as the body blackens, the fat glistens and melts, gathering the soot around it and forming waxy shapes coiled like solid smoke.

‘What will you do?’ Hoseok asks the high-priest.

‘Nothing,’ the high-priest replies, with shocking casualness and ease. ‘The birds and rats will come to eat it.’

Jimin feels a shudder run through him. He wants to stand in front of Hoseok, and block his vision from this sight.

Because Jimin can see how Hoseok sees himself in the charred bones, remains of a sacrifice offered and honoured but forgotten and consumed. But he can’t—instead he can taste the ashes of the air in his mouth—dry and bitter as the pain Hoseok feels, dropping the knife he used to kill his own father.

‘I’m so sorry,’ his father had whispered in the end. And Jimin’s heart breaks at the love that is so clear and apparent in his eyes. In their eyes. He chases after Hoseok as he trips across the hallways of this massive ship that housed the Venture Unit. The knife falls from his hands and Jimin can feel it burning in his own palm.

When Hoseok looks up into the mirror Jimin stares deep into his eyes.

This was that moment— it is that moment— where the fires have burnt away from around Hoseok, and left nothing but charred bones, liquidized fat, and cracked raw flesh.
Jimin watches as Venture Unit officers and agents come running in, a Yisheng behind them. They whisper amongst themselves, pointing at Hoseok, expressions of fear, disgust, as well as relief etched on their faces. He watches them thank him, Jimin watches them pour their gratitude over Hoseok but they all leave after the sacrifice has been offered. They all leave before they can see the charred remains.

They hold no glory over bones.

Jimin wants to take Hoseok’s hand, where he feels the fire of the knife etched there. But before he can reach for his hand, a loud sound thunders through the air- and a bright streak of light erupts above him.

Jimin steps out alongside Sk’jin, his form shrouded and hidden within the form of this other Being. His eyes burn strong and neon red. Determination and the strength of a promise long kept, long protected.

Together they track the motion of a ship- one that is laced with familiarity that does not come from himself. Jimin has seen it in their dreams.

‘How-‘

‘I promised you that we’d get out of here,’ he grits through his teeth as he raises one hand, finger pointing and tracing the path of the unsteady ship. ‘And that’s how.’

It vanishes behind a hill and they hear crushing sounds.

‘If they’re still ‘live kid- ‘s go check on ‘em.’

Jimin quickly follows the Venture Unit agents through the crude and cruelly constructed maze of a lab. The stench of death, chemicals, and blood seeps into his pores. They had destroyed the power grid, shrouding the place in darkness and overtaking it with a stealth attack.

Jimin can’t take his eyes off of the remains of the people that once lived peacefully in this planet. This planet that was once young, lush, green- with just the smallest hint of civilization growing near the river lands. What was once farmlands were barren and overridden with cruel iron and metal. The ground that was soft and rich with clay was watered with blood, tears, and curses. Even the sky had changed colour, from a bright clean turquoise to dead ash-grey.

Kutsoglera had died, and along with her, her children too.

Remnants of her people that managed to survive were limited in number, and were barely recognizable for who they were and what they originally looked like. Jimin can only see the echo of their previous selves. The rest shrouded in bionic metal, experimental elements, and cruel bioengineering.

But what does surprise him, amidst the fear and death that coloured the bland walls of this facility, was the intense ruddy glow surrounding a few of the Beings here. And mainly so around him.

‘You’re going to be all right.’ One of the agents who had previously broken down into tears says to a much younger Namjoon.

The gravity of the darkness in his eyes weighs down Jimin’s chest- feeling an overwhelming rush to push aside the other agents and hold the young child in his arms, willing him to forget the years of torment he lived through.
'We’re here to help you,' one of them says and Jimin wants to scream.

What had the Universe come to? What had all Life come to? Did Life hold no more value?

‘You’ll be all right,’ they keep repeating. ‘We’re taking you somewhere safe. You’ll be safe.’

No one could promise safety. Not when the Universe moved like this.

‘Is it what I need?’

Jamin sinks to the floor before Namjoon, where he sat on a table, the weight of his gaze crushing him.

‘Do you want to rest?’

Jimin is startled as he finds himself on a cluffy hill. He can smell a storm in the air- the promise of rain. He could shudder in relief at the transition. But that relief is short-lived.

Because that colour is everywhere here. It stains the sky red and the promise of death brews more imminently than the storm overhead. Jimin quickly pushes himself up from the rocky ground he found himself in. He follows the sound of the voice and he climbs up a few boulders before he catches sight of a distant sunrise over an autumnal forest.

A sudden sorrowful exhilaration, a realization that he’s been here before.

Movement catches his eye and Jimin quickly scrambles over. There’s a tall stringy Being- Yoongi’s friend. He’s stained with that colour too, and Jimin already knows what’s going to happen. What will happen.

Desperately, he tries to find Yoongi. would there be a way to warn him? He had to. How did he not realize this until now?

All Life is connected- a Continuum that goes on and on, looping into each other. How could he have not figured it out. Finally- he catches sight of the Human.

He look tired, his hair dim and matted, and his skin a little ashen from too much physical strain and not enough rest. But what mattered the most was that Yoongi wasn’t stained that colour.

‘It’s fine,’ Yoongi replies with an easy shrug. ‘I’ll rest later.’

‘You should rest now,’ his friend insists. Jimin has never been able to see Yoongi’s friends face properly- was this because Yoongi himself couldn’t remember?

‘I feel like I’ve spent…spent all my life resting,’ Yoongi replies with a small huff of a laugh. ‘And now I can finally…”

The young Human pauses a while, looking over the great horizon with an expression bordering between sorrow and bliss. Jimin wants to walk towards the Human, but he’s stuck. He can’t move.

‘And now I can finally be.’

Jimin wishes he could reach up and touch the Human. But he can’t.

So instead he hums. The tune that Jimin can hum from sheer memory. The tune that filters through the ocean of light.
Yoongi suddenly turns, his eyes locking onto Jimin’s. Jimin stumbles back a little, overwhelmed beyond words.

‘What is it?’

Jimin wants to say something- tell Yoongi to please please please run- run now-

But he’s frozen and that pale golden light starts to wrap shine from behind him. It was time to go. He found the exit and he has to leave. Leave the past, leave what was and enter the present to what is.

Yoongi smiles, still looking deep into Jimin’s eyes.

‘Sunshine.’

The sun to his right breaks through the clouds and is shining around Jimin, warm and bright, soft and gentle. It eats away at that colour and Yoongi approaches him, hand reaching out as though craving for its warmth on his skin.

Jimin holds his hands out before him and catches Yoongi before he falls over.

He’s drenched in sweat, blood splattered over his face- he’s barely awake and yet his eyes remain stubbornly open. Locked onto his.

Jimin can’t stop the tears rolling down his eyes as he helplessly holds the Human in his arms. Finally able to grab hold of him.

He couldn’t do anything before- the past Was and he could do nothing to change it. But he was here Now and Jimin is determined.

‘Yoongi,’ he keeps repeating because it’s the only word he knows Yoongi will understand.

Oddly enough, and in a way that hurts Jimin’s heart even more, Yoongi smiles. It’s small, strained, and so misplaced with their situation. And ever so softly, the Human whispers, ‘It would be just like this.’

* You have to wake him up

‘Did you hear that?’
Taeh’yung is 99.99% sure they heard singing. He glances at Sk’jin, checking to see if the Khol’isa heard it too.

He’s talking to you. Listen closely.

But Sk’jin doesn’t pay them heed. Because the Khol’isa is paying close attention to the fight.

Taeh’yung narrows their eyes at the OrTank.

‘Was that you?’ they ask quietly.

Lean in closer- you can speak to him. You have to wake him up

They don’t hear much. Only feel.

And they felt a lot. Taeh’yung could sit there for hours, communicating just like that. Reading his emotions, understanding what he wanted to say. Sometimes the connection was there. Sometimes it wasn’t. Like he was falling in and out of sleep.

Somewhere just beyond the panes of sleep and death.

It is Light there. Only Light, and only Death.

‘Can you hear me?’ Taeh’yung asks quietly, looking into the Being’s face. He wasn’t of a Species Taeh’yung directly recognizes. They have a feeling the First might know. But the First’s memories and thoughts were always too faint, and Taeh’yung’s never had the patience to really listen to her.

He can hear all of them. He can see all of them. You have to wake him up Sk’jin is wincing as he watches the fight. He couldn’t watch it, unable to witness as Yoongi is thrown across the arena like a rag-doll. But Taeh’yung watches. They don’t look away.

They would witness this moment- so that it would live on and with each Awakening, he would remember this and they would know.

He has unexplained memories.

Imagery of unexplained darkness that was living and breathing- each exhale and inhale shaping the dimension they knew and occupied. Vivid colours of the genesis of creation, raw and chaotic energy that pulsed; a wild and crazed heart suddenly beating, pumping Life through its system. And like a great heaving mess, the Universe was born of darkness and colour, Life circulating and spreading.

Lean in closer- you can speak to him. Let me speak to him.

What was, what is, what would be all existed continuously in the Universe. Nothing was ever truly forgotten, nothing truly died- the dimensions of what was, what is, and would will be just expanded and expanded, creating new space and form. The memory of what was building what is to make way for what will be.

This was Continuum. And this was the Universe.

This is everything and nothing.

The Zhak’gri were the first. First born of the Awakening, first born of the Darkness.
And the first to be consumed.

Because where there is Life and Darkness, there is Death and Light. And the Zhak’gri contain this within themselves- because they knew that all that was, would come to what is, and would later become what will be.

Or at least that’s what they keep telling him. But Taeh’yung has never cared much for the Universe or what was going in around it. Regardless of past, present, future. There was too much happening around them, too much to see, too much to experience, for him to really bother getting caught up with the “truths” and “realities” he was being told to understand.

What mattered the most to Taeh’yung, was to do what none of the other 4 ever did. And it wasn’t just about blowing up moons, building a planet, or kick-starting a whole new species of Beings from their elemental core.

Taeh’yung figures it was pretty cool that it was their people, the Zhak’gri, the first of all living Beings to have ever existed in the Universe, were the blueprints of all living Beings. He also thinks it’s cool that their people, or well, what remained of them, were the first and only Beings to have ever gotten close to succeeding in creating and using dimensional rifts. As a result of this, their people were somehow able to achieve a sort of reincarnation that allowed their souls to continuously exist. So that when the host died but the soul was reborn, memories created in its previous host would still exist.

It was cool, but honestly Taeh’yung doesn’t understand why it was even a thing that had to happen. Taeh’yung was the Fifth, born of the Awakening. The period between his consciousness and his previous host had been a very long time. So much so that Taeh’yung believes they might actually be one of the last surviving. Many of the other Zhak’gri’s, tired of their continuous existence, took the dramatic end of the stick and literally flung themselves into the nearest blackhole. Taeh’yung, despite his behavior, was not prone to such dramatics.

Instead he just wanted to live.

To just be alive for the time he was meant to live, and continue on living to the fullest of his ability, and to aid those around them who might need it.

This was the Fifth birth, and Taeh’yung is pretty sure it’s the only time they’ve ever felt alive. Sometimes the other 4 voices come up to argue, to try and direct him to a certain path- to continue the search. What was this search even about? Taeh’yung doesn’t care about dimensional rifts and reaching into other life-forms not of this reality. He doesn’t care for breaking the Continuum or to control Life.

He just wanted to live, discover and find new planets and civilizations, make friends, make sure other Beings were living good lives, and be happy.

But there are times, during this time of his Birth, where they are witness to certain things, and he will stay to make sure that they see it, so that the memory of it may permeate the entirety of his soul, so that when the Sixth is born, that they too would feel what he felt, see what he saw, and understand what he did.

And today was one of them.

‘This is fucking stupid!’ Sk’jin hisses, his eyes gleam as though wet. ‘Get him out of there now- withdraw from it now- is this worth it-?!’

‘He’ll pull through- he can do this-’ Namjoon argues back.

Sk’jin has looked away, and there really are tears in his eyes.

‘Yoongi is going to die!’ Sk’jin says harshly. ‘And we’re just-’ Sk’jin pauses, he’s distracted from the screen they were watching to another screen. Taeh’yung looks away from Yoongi’s fight and feels a flare of irritation at the sight of Van Seulgaan making his way inside their ship.

The Tayian doesn’t look as composed or collected as he normally did and Taeh’yung registers the Second expressing her disappointment. They were descended of her, as were many from that general System. But whatever remained of her essence, her elemental core, had long been diluted. The only source of almost entirely unadulterated elemental essence from the Awakening based off of the Zhak’gri could be found in the Khol’isa.

That was why K’mara had been so careful around him. Because she could see them.

The first of my children

Sk’jin was different- his core altered in a way that even Taeh’yung couldn’t see. In a way none of the 4 could really explain.

Because you don’t want to see

The same way he couldn’t really see into Yoongi.

Because you don’t want to see

The same way he couldn’t see into the Being inside the OrTank.

Because you don’t want to see

Taeh’yung just wanted to live and explore and have friends, but it would seem that the Universe didn’t want him to just be an observer.

‘What the fuck is he doing here-’ Sk’jin burst out, turning around to get up but the Android guard pushes him back down to his seat on the couch. They’re in the Bridge, Sk’jin occupying Hoseok’s seat at the cockpit and Taeh’yung standing behind him, the OrTank safely strapped to one of the unoccupied seats.

‘He’s here for him,’ Taeh’yung says at once, gripping the handles on the side of the OrTank.

‘Let me go or so help me I will end you-’ Sk’jin hisses at the Android just as Van walks in.

He’s attempting to look poised but Taeh’yung can practically smell anger and fear emanating off of him in strong rolls.

You have to hide him.

You have to wake him up
The Being in the OrTank suddenly twitches but Sk’jin and Van are too occupied, glaring each other down to notice.

_-…walked with you…a dream-_ the song, with a soft singing voice suddenly sounds again. Except it’s louder and clearer this time.

‘I can hear you,’ Taeh’yung breathes out softly, crouching down and taking the OrTank to the other side of the cockpit, looking as though he was hiding. ‘Speak to me please.’

_He’s speaking to you, but you’re not listening to him._

The Being inside shifts a little, fingers flexing. Taeh’yung has spoken to him before. Has introduced himself, spoken to him. But it was all sporadic, without any pattern.

_You need to guide him. Guide him out. Guide him back out. You have to wake him up_

‘You said you wanted to go home, that they would take you home. But they can’t right now- not without losing,’ Taeh’yung says quietly, stroking the surface of the OrTank in a soothing manner. ‘They’re all trying very hard- especially Yoongi and-‘ Taeh’yung glances over at the fight. Taeh’yung knew that Yoongi would lose. And he also knew that Yoongi knew that.

He might be the best fighter out of all of them- but he wasn’t trained for this.

_You know that he can see all of this. that he can see all of this. let him follow the colours. You have to wake him up_

‘-I think he’s in trouble right now.’

_I want to leave._

_Lean in closer- you can speak to him. Let me speak to him. You have to wake him up_

‘Can you leave? I will try to help you, I don’t know if I can.’ Taeh’yung speaks for the Second.

_You have to wake him up_

_Closer- you know you can go closer- don’t worry, trust us, we won’t lose you in there_

_I have never tried- I don’t know how to._

_He’s been waiting. He’s been waiting and waiting. He needs to leave. And we will See. He needs to leave._

‘Follow it.’ The First speaks.

_Follow what?_

_Lean in closer- you can speak to him. Let me speak to him. You have to wake him up_

‘Follow their voices, their dreams, follow their souls, follow their memories, follow their hearts- they will guide you.’ The First speaks again and Taeh’yung finds himself back there again.

The world of white.
They stand behind him, their hands on his shoulder, looking on. You have to wake him up they say in unison. Taeh’yung is tempted to wave them off. Instead he directs his attention to the tear in the light. A shape bleeds out into form, pulsing in the wavelength of the song.

And he is born of song, Taeh’yung finds out. Ancient, unknown.

You have to wake him up You have to wake him up You have to wake him up You have to wake him up You have to wake him up You have to wake him up You have to wake him up You have to wake him up You have to wake him up You have to wake him up You have to wake him up You have to wake him up You have to wake him up You have to wake him up You have to wake him up You have to wake him up You have to wake him up You have to wake him up You have to wake him up You have to wake him up You have to wake him up You have to wake him up You have to wake him up You have to wake him up You have to wake him up You have to wake him up You have to wake him up You have to wake him up You have to wake him up You have to wake him up You have to wake him up You have to wake him up You have to wake him up

‘I will try.’ The Being stands before him, his expression lost.

He’s searching now- for a way out.

‘What is your name?’ the Third asks.

He looks confused, thinking hard.

Please remember please remember please remember please remember

He will remember. He will. He just needs Time.

‘My name is Jimin.’

wake up

Sk’jin doesn’t normally get angry.

Irritated? Yes.

Frustrated? Maybe a bit too frequently.

Exasperated? All the fucking time.

But the moment he sees Van’s face Sk’jin is flooded with pure anger. The kind he hasn’t felt in a while.

‘Your contestant is losing. He’s already lost. He lost the moment he stepped inside that building- so now hand that egg over to me and I’ll allow you to take back whatever remains you can scrape off of the floor.’ The Tayian announces the moment he’s close enough.

Sk’jin pushes past the Android guards, uncaring of what they might do and goes and shoves Van Seulgaan.

He knows it’s not effective but he’s not trying to beat Van into a pulp here even though he wants to.

‘Sk’jin? What’s going on? Hey-’

‘You listen here you little shit-face,’ Sk’jin towers over Van and he leans down so close their foreheads are almost touching. ‘You will leave my ship right now, or you are going to regret it.’

‘That’s not going to work- I’m done indulging you and your crew,’ Van shoves him back, normally passive face hostile and frenzied. ‘You think I believed any of the bullshit you told me? You’re all fugitives- running away, at the first opportunity, hiding and avoiding the real issue here- do you have any idea what you’ve done? What this could do-’

‘Oh- so we’re the ones who fucked things up?’ Sk’jin pushes him out again but he’s restrained as a few hands hold him back. ‘We were just fucking stocking up on the fucking Dock and this bullshit you’ve been funding threw us in for a loop and your fucking greed put us all here-’

‘I thought you would understand- out of all the Beings in this ship- I thought you would understand!’ Van Seulgaan barks back.

‘I don’t fucking care! Get the fuck out of my ship-’

‘They’re here!’ Hoseok suddenly announce. ‘Fuck they’re here-’

‘What? How? That’s not possible,’ Namjoon argues. ‘That’s not possible-’

Sk’jin freezes- and he also notes how Van has frozen where he’s stood.

‘What did you do?’ he whispers. ‘What did YOU DO?!’

His silvery eyes burn with fear and rage and he charges at Sk’jin. And it’s for a fraction of a second, just the tiniest movement, but Sk’jin notes how Van Seulgaan is suddenly distracted, his eyes shifting to look at something behind Sk’jin. But he’s already moving forward.

However, he doesn’t make it past a single step.

Soft yet strangely corporeal golden light erupts from behind Sk’jin and a flash of green forks around him.

‘Sk’jin, you and Taeh’yung get out of there now, they’ve brought the entire fucking Tayi fleet fucking Spaces-!’

By the time the light has dimmed and Sk’jin can finally open his eyes, the Androids have all collapsed in a heap and the ship hums to life, the rift-lock having been lifted. Van Seulgaan is out cold where he was standing.

‘SK’JIN!’

Sk’jin spins on his feet and nothing could have prepared him for the sight that greets him.

Taeh’yung is standing by the Navigator’s Mast, his eyes flaring green and a dancing ring of dark green light around him like some bizarre upright halo. But this isn’t what’s blowing Sk’jin’s mind.

‘Jin! Are you all right!’ Taeh’yung nearly bowls him over, green light fading abruptly.

‘Tae-’ Sk’jin feebly raises a hand, pointing towards the Navigator’s Mast.

‘Ah right! This is Jimin! Jimin this is Sk’jin! Or just Jin!’ Taeh’yung steps aside, casually introducing the Being that has been asleep inside that OrTank ever since before this bullshit started what the actual-

He’s entirely naked, and not entirely embarrassed by that fact. Whatever liquid that was containing him dissipates into air in a matter of seconds, leaving this Jimin dry. Standing upright, he’s probably Yoongi’s height, but quite slight. His skin tone is warmer than Sk’jin had first observed, with freckles smattering the expanse of his skin. His hair sways about, a strange gossamer shade of silver and gold combined.

‘Sk’jin what is going on?! Answer me!;

But what really stuns Sk’jin is his eyes.

They looked just like solar eclipses.

‘Right! Clothes!’ Taeh’yung then strips off his outer tunic, holding it up for the Being to wear.

His movements look unsure but not unsteady. As though he hadn’t been “asleep” for probably centuries. He just…seemed curious.

And then all of Sk’jin’s anger comes rushing back in again.

‘All right so who the fuck are you?!’

The Being jumps at Sk’jin’s loud and angry tone. And honestly Sk’jin is so done with this situation he doesn’t care anymore. He marches forward to where he’s standing and before anyone has time to react Sk’jin grabs him by the shoulders, shaking him hard.

‘Sk’jin what’s going on? Taeh’yung answer me!’

‘Who are you and why were you in there? This is all because of you and I need to know why this bullshit started!’

The Being is, understandably, very shocked and stunned speechless.

‘Jin wait-‘

‘No! I need to know why he’s here- why we’re here!’ Sk’jin doesn’t even bother looking at Taeh’yung as he grips the Being’s bare shoulders even harder, uncaring if he was hurting him or not.

The Being doesn’t answer, just gaping a little before his eyes dart around Sk’jin’s face and instead of answering him or even looking abashed at this proximity, he reaches upwards, not to push Sk’jin away, but to gently place them on his temples.

‘Khoi ah gne an kal?’ he asks softly.

He has a gentle voice- not a low voice but he’s not pitchy either. There was something melodic in the way he spoke his words, a lilt to his vowels that made the language somehow strangely harsh yet melodically soft. At this distance, Jimin’s eyes are hypnotic.

Never stare straight at the eclipse- it’s dangerous.

Before Sk’jin can even process the strangeness of what was happening before him, “Jimin” is stepping away from him, distracted by something. Then he pales- his skin losing colour in a shockingly fast manner, eyes widening.

‘Yoongi!’

Sk’jin has a million and one questions. But for now he’s going to stick to: how does he know Yoongi’s name?

Jimin is addressing Taeh’yung in the same unknown language, and before Sk’jin can even ask Lisai to translate, Taeh’yung is responding in the same language rapidly- hands flying, pleading it would seem. And Sk’jin understands why because Jimin suddenly turns about, quickly adjusting his tunic and overstepping the Androids and makes his way out of the Bridge.

‘Hold up-!’ Sk’jin feels like everything is happening too quickly for him to process.

‘Sk’jin! For fucks sake-!’

‘Jimin!’ Taeh’yung sprints forward, catching the Being by the hand and pulling him back, rapidly speaking.

‘FOR FUCK’S SAKE ONE OF YOU ANSWER ME-‘

‘He’s awake.’ Sk’jin mumbles, watching now with utter bewilderment as Taeh’yung and Jimin seem to be arguing back and forth.

‘What-?’

‘Sk’jin- don’t fucking lie-‘

‘I am not lying- that thing from the OrTank is awake and he did some weird shit and-‘

‘Fucking Spaces-‘

‘Namjoon, Sk’jin, you guys have to get out of there-‘

‘But Yoongi-!’

‘JIN!’

‘WHAT? FUCKING SPACES, WHAT?!’ Sk’jin screams back.

Taeh’yung and Jimin, to their credit, don’t flinch, instead they both step up towards the Khol’isa, invading his space.

‘Do you trust me?’ Taeh’yung asks, uncharacteristically serious.

‘What-?’ Sk’jin actually does trust Taeh’yung-maybe not his methods, but his intent. But at this moment, he’s not too sure about any of it.

‘Sk’jin please,’ Taeh’yung pleads, holding his hand out to take his own. Sk’jin feels a ripple, the familiar thrumming that always comes from Taeh’yung’s touch, as though he contained an energy that was bursting to free itself right from under the Zhak’gri’s skin.

Listen to me child

It’s so faint, Sk’jin wants to believe it was in his mind. But he knows that it’s not. Because he’s heard this voice before.

‘Sk’jin- could you please just explain what’s happening- are you leaving? You have to leave- Hoseok just stay put until Sk’jin comes to get you-I’m going up, I have to get Yoongi out-’

‘You’ll get caught for fuck’s sake. Namjoon you can’t possibly escape the Pageant, Van, and the GLA by yourself-’

‘Sk’jin?’ Jimin’s tone is imploring and an added touch of something. One that doesn’t make sense but Sk’jin finds himself nodding.

‘All right. I trust you.’

Taeh’yung breaks out into a huge smile and says, ‘Joonie! Can you go over to the Pageant arena? There should be a place where contestant managers or House representatives can stay!’

‘Taeh’yung?! Can someone please fucking explain-’

‘Not now Joonie,’ Taeh’yung gently pushes Sk’jin towards the cockpit, making him sit. ‘Jinnie, can you take us to the arena?’

‘You want me to fly us into the arena?!’ Sk’jin splutters, unsure why his body wasn’t protesting as much as his brain.

Instead of Taeh’yung responding, Jimin suddenly crowds into him, taking his hands into his own. The warmth of his skin feels like unexpected sunlight.

‘Sk’jin, khognei tak in, kal to ang.’

Sk’jin has no idea what he’s saying but he finds himself nodding, hands already starting up the ship.

‘I’ll set up our flight trajectory!’ Taeh’yung volunteers cheerily.

‘You don’t know how to use it-’ Sk’jin argues though he’s already boosting their engines. Taeh’yung must have taken care of the rift-lock with his previous stunt with the green lightning thing.

‘I watched Joonie do it all the time,’ Taeh’yung says dismissively and to Sk’jin’s surprise, the trajectory is accurate and the ship’s cockpit system aligns to it, straight for the Pageant arena.

‘Ka lom eh,’ Jimin smiles down at him, ‘Nakin ah min gnai dam ang che aw?’ and he kisses his brow.

‘Uh- okay?’ Sk’jin somewhat dumbly replies, unsure why he wasn’t opposing any of this, as the ship lifts into the air.

‘Sk’jin? Are you all right? Taeh’yung?’

‘Just get your ass into the arena.’
'Just get your ass into the arena.' Sk’jin replies, sounding strangely at-ease and not at all harassed like he did literally 20 seconds ago. Namjoon steps into the elevator, glaring at the Android guards that step in with him, taking up additional seconds of his precious time.

‘Namjoon- can you please tell me what’s going on- some of the ships have landed on the Dock, the others are making their way in-planet- and if I’m not mistaken, I think I just saw a bunch of GIU ships too.’ Hoseok asks, exasperation laced into his voice. ‘The ship can’t come up here- it’s not possible without getting caught-‘

‘I don’t know what’s going on either- they’re just telling me to go up-‘

‘You’re going to get caught- I don’t know how- but this is not looking good for Yoongi,’ Hoseok says tersely. ‘If he was fully armed and armoured then he would be on equal footing- but he’s losing. Namjoon he’s losing; we need to get the OrTank out-‘

‘Well apparently he’s awake and-‘

‘They’re leaving! Sk’jin and Taeh’yung- the ship’s taken off!’ Hoseok exclaims with surprise. ‘I don’t know what you think you can do up there…shit, SHIT-‘

Namjoon exits the elevator, anticipation mounting inside of him. Here, he can hear the crowd roaring without any filter or added effect.

‘Hoseok, what’s going on-‘

‘They’re there- shit, Namjoon hurry up and get there, what the fuck is Sk’jin thinking?’

Namjoon doesn’t have to wait for an explanation because the moment he’s out in the balcony ledge that rings around the wide space of the Arena for the contestant Houses to sit in, he’s caught off-guard by the sight of the Užkulisai appearing overhead, her powerful lights casting a blinding radiance over the Arena grounds.

The lights focus and highlight an area on the grounds and Namjoon can just about make out two figures.

‘They’re getting Yoongi-‘ Namjoon’s realization comes out with a choked cough. ‘Spaces, fuck-‘

The back of the ship comes into view and to Namjoon’s intense alarm a figure jumps off.

‘What in the fuck-‘

‘Namjoon! Can you see us? Get over here now!’ Sk’jin commands, yet again, sounding strangely calm.

‘I can’t fucking believe this-‘ Hoseok is mumbling. ‘Namjoon-‘
‘I can’t just go!’ Namjoon retorts back, feeling everything from anger to amusement as he watches the ship lower down. ‘I’m a little surrounded if you remember!’

‘It’s fine! I’ll come help!’ Taeh’yung chirps in.

‘What do you mean-’

There’s a strange bright light that radiates from underneath the Užkulisai, right at the arena grounds where Yoongi should be. It’s not the ship’s own set of lights- this was different. It felt different. It’s followed by a bright crack of green light that is familiar to Namjoon. The green light forks through the arena, and Namjoon is already running. Because the Android guards all collapse in a heap on the ground at Namjoon’s wake.

He leaps over the balcony ledge, dropping down heavily but nimbly onto his feet some 10 feet below.

‘PA! OVER HERE!’ a loud voice yells. And it’s only then that Namjoon realizes that a strange silence has fallen over arena- a weird stillness. And to Namjoon’s increasing bewilderment, he catches sight of a few Beings from the stands, eyes wide and expressions full of reverence. As though they were looking upon some godly sight, filling them all with awe.

Taeh’yung appears from beyond the strange light, that upon closer inspection, looks almost solid.

‘Pa!’ he waves his long arms in greeting but he’s tackled down by a blurred object.

‘Taeh’yung-!?’

There’s a flash of green and Yoongi’s fragile looking opponent goes flying into the air, head strangely limp as she falls down with a thud.

‘Pa!’

Taeh’yung reappears, entirely unfazed. Namjoon decides not to ask questions, casting another glance at the alarmingly limp body of the contestant on the ground. Namjoon has seen his fair share of dead bodies to recognize them, no matter the species. Taeh’yung pulls him in towards the light and it feels strangely corporeal, as though passing through a strange membrane of sorts.

‘Is everyone all right-’ Namjoon begins to ask but he’s stunned into silence when he comes upon a strange sight.

Standing, as though waiting for him and Taeh’yung, is the Being from the OrTank. He has tears down his face, expression pained and filled with worry, and in his arms is an incredibly bloodied and beaten Yoongi.

He’s speaking rapidly in a language Namjoon doesn’t understand or identify to Taeh’yung who responds back, his tone placating.

‘Yoongi-‘ Namjoon tries to say but Taeh’yung is already speaking over him.

‘Pa! Go to the Bridge! Jimin and I will take care of Yoongi! Let’s go get Hobi and get out of here!’ Taeh’yung quite literally pushes him away, hurrying “Jimin” towards the direction of the Medical Bays.

‘Uh-‘
‘Namjoon! Up here! Now!’

Namjoon gives up on trying to understand and just listens to the Zhak’gri, casting one more look towards Yoongi’s direction. The Human is unconscious and barely breathing. Ignoring the bitter guilt that burns up his throat, Namjoon runs up towards the Bridge.

Hoseok is so entirely done and exasperated.

It wasn’t as though the line had died. There was a difference when the line through the Comm-Device died. There was the tell-tale click sound

No one was replying to him, no one was explaining anything, he’s literally stranded on a Dock, teeming with GLA officers and agents from both the Venture Unit and GIU. He’s shifted to blend in with the Pompen once again, easily following through with their confusion. Because that’s what Hoseok is.

Confused.

Very confused.

He’d been watching Yoongi’s match, stomach burning as he watched the Human get flung across the arena grounds. His hands shook as Yoongi wouldn’t stay down, wouldn’t stop. But with the arrival of the GLA, Hoseok hadn’t been able to keep track. But now here was the Užkulisai, quite simply entering the Pageant arena.

And then landing.

And then a bright light erupts.

The camera angles of the events sort of just freezes and no matter how many times Hoseok changes the channel or adjusts the frequency, nothing happens.

And then less than a minute later, the light is suddenly gone from one of the camera feeds, the arena is in chaos, and the Užkulisai missing.

‘-oseok? Can you hear me?’

Hoseok has placed himself in the Hangar containing Van Seulgaan’s ship, watching alongside other confused Pompen maintenance workers, as GLA officers purge the ship in a matter of seconds. They were terrifyingly thorough and quick to apprehend all of the Beings inside of the ship. They’re being shooed off towards the main atrium and Hoseok easily follows. He doesn’t bother hiding his screen or the content of what he was watching- every other Pompen made to work during the Pageants had a screen on them, watching the event take place. They’re ignored for the vast majority of the time the GLA officers have been in the Dock and Hoseok is all too eager being ignored.
‘Yes I can fucking hear you- what in Spaces happened?’ Hoseok demands in a fierce and low whisper as they make their way into the large Atrium.

The Atrium, like all other atriums in every other GLA-standard Dock, was a massive space within the Docks, creating hollows within the massive floating structure where entrances and bridges opened out and connected to each other. GLA Offices were located here. As well as medical bays, shops, eateries, hotels, even entire spas and luxury facilities such as salons, museums, garden spaces, and several restaurant chains. Each Dock had 4 Atriums, spanning the entire length of a Dock on four symmetrical sides. So the side of the Atrium facing out into space was nothing more than a massive window the travelled up and down the length of the Atrium.

‘I need you to switch back on all of the communication signal lines in and off-planet.’ Namjoon orders, sounding tense.

‘I can’t!’ Hoseok replies and before he can even begin to ask what was going on, Namjoon cuts over and says, ‘I transferred the main malware to the screen with you- you can control it now.’

So that was why Namjoon was unaffected by the fact that Van Seulgaan had destroyed his screen. The extent of Namjoon’s skills was a little overwhelming, but at this moment it’s entirely welcome. He switches tabs on the screen, looking for anything that might indicate he had the sole control over an entire planet’s communication channel signals.

‘Switch it all back on!’ Namjoon orders. ‘Access the tab to the left.’

Just as Namjoon says the words, Hoseok comes across a rather plain and obvious tab that reads COMMUNICATIONS GRID SYSTEMS and a very simple ON and OFF beneath it.

‘I got it!’ Hoseok taps on the ON and then asks, ‘What’s this for? Why? Aren’t we stopping their signals from reaching out-?’

‘We’re coming to get you- we needed a camouflage.’ Sk’jin explains, soundly strangely relaxed. Hoseok has simply stopped asking questions ever since Sk’jin’s statement of ‘he’s awake’.

There’s a wave of gasping sounds and shouts that fill the Atrium. This Atrium faced Pompa, and Hoseok understands why everyone was freaking out.

A sudden onslaught of multitudes of ships and Transporters, previously unable to leave all lift off.

Hoseok had of course kept track of all the ships that had left the planet, but were stuck in the stratosphere, unable to leave due to lack of signals coming in from the planet and from the Dock. There were some thousands in numbers but it seems to have increased, what with panic and the sudden appearance of the GLA.

It seemed to be a universal thing: that everyone loses their collective minds the moment an form of authority figure steps in.

‘Hoseok, can you please make your way to Hangar Bay 83-00FD?’ Namjoon asks.

‘Yeah I’ll be there in a few minutes-’

A small Transporter lands and as the doors open, the entirety of the special-jury steps out.

K’mara leads the group forwards, followed closely by Van Seulgaan, Lmiura, Xmi, Shn’ow, and last of all, Amme. But the Atrium is in too much chaos, dealing with the sudden barrage of ships and transporters coming from Pompa. And not to mention the entire GLA fleet suddenly hovering ‘They’re here. They’re all here,’ Hoseok reports at once, keeping a steady eye on all of them as he makes his way towards one of the exits that would take him to Section 83. He was in Section 21, so he would have to make his way to the next Atrium and then downwards.

‘All of them? Even Amme?’ Namjoon asks, sounding shocked.

Hoseok eyes the Yisheng carefully as he replies, ‘All of them. In the same ship.’

‘Well, that worked as planned.’

It’s the only thing that has worked out from the plan, Hoseok wants to say but he bites his tongue. He spots the exit and before making his way into it, glances back one more time.

A shudder runs down his back when he finds Yisheng Amme staring straight at him, her eyes unwavering. And even from this distance, Hoseok knows, that she knew.

‘Shit.’

‘What’s wrong?’

‘Amme just saw me.’

‘Shit.’ Namjoon agrees. ‘Move. Quickly. We’ll be there in a minute.’

Hoseok hurries, purposefully weaving through crowded areas, ducking under taller Pompens and other Beings alike. His heart is pounding, the back of his neck prickled. He can’t wave off the feeling of Amme’s dark eyes following after him and he fights the urge to look back. It’s only when he reaches the elevator that he allows himself to look back into the Atrium.

And to his intense disquiet, he spots Amme, standing tall beyond the crowd, closer than he ever anticipated, watching him.

The elevator doors close and Hoseok nearly slumps against the walls from relief.

‘She definitely saw me.’ Hoseok says, more to himself than Namjoon.

‘30 seconds.’

Hoseok spots the Užkulisai, already docked but ready to leave. And he hurries, disregarding any subtlety or discretion. The panicked gut instinct that he was being followed never letting up even this far from that Atrium. He doesn’t look back- not trusting himself and what he might see.

The ramp is already lowered though only halfway, the door is open and Hoseok can see the antechamber lit up. He picks up his speed and grits out, ‘Get ready- I’m almost there.’

‘We’re ready to move out.’ Namjoon replies back, just as tense.

Hoseok doesn’t realize he was holding his breath until he gasps his exhales, slumped against the back wall of the antechamber inside the Užkulisai.

‘Go!’ Hoseok gasps out but it’s not needed because the door has already closed and the ship is humming.

‘Strap yourselves- we’re going into warp in 10 seconds!’ Sk’jin announces.
Hoseok scrambles, exiting the antechamber and launching himself towards the Lobby. He runs past the Medical Bay and if it weren’t for the imminent warp-mode they were about to enter, he would stop to stare.

Yoongi is unconscious on one of the Medical Beds, a bunch of tubes attached to his arms. The capsule like casing has been lowered over him and clinging to that is an extremely familiar Being.

He glances up from Yoongi’s unconscious form, looking straight at Hoseok.

Chills run down Hoseok’s back as he quickly sits down, the security straps wrapping around him in an instant.

His eyes remind Hoseok of another time he had seen a solar eclipse. Just as the familiar pull of warp-mode tugs at the lining of his stomach, a voice comes to Hoseok’s mind unbidden.

‘I’ll be fine dad- it won’t be any different than what you or mum did.’

His father had pulled a funny face.

‘That’s exactly what I’m afraid of.’

It’s pleasantly quiet.

The sun is shining above him and it’s windy. He has a feeling that he’s quite high up, but he’s not sure where he is. That bit of information is a bit foggy. He remembers the taste of something bitter, something that coils around his tongue, spreads down his throat, and somehow to the rest of his body. It’s a tepid bitter sensation that Yoongi finds he doesn’t really like, but has somehow grown accustomed to it, feeling strange in its absence.

Small flecks of red flicker at the end of a small white smoking object between his fingers. Lifting his head he looks over at a magnificent view of the skies- clouds looming above, below, all around him. He blows out smoke, as white as the clouds.

He exhales wrong, coughing harshly, and excruciating pain throbs across his ribs.

‘-ongi!’

Startled, he makes to turn but he slips and falls, strangely enough, into the sky.

He wakes up coughing, pain that is somehow numb but very present and very very real, spreads over him. Pain isn’t really much of an issue for Yoongi. He doesn’t fear pain, doesn’t fear the aches and bruises and cuts.
His vision is blurred and everything is too bright. But he instantly recognizes the forms and outlines of his surroundings.

He was in the Užkulisai Medical Bay.

Flashing memories of his fight appear before his eyes, startlingly clear and stark before the blurred background of the Medical Bay. He’s still coughing. His chest feels like it’s shattered and compressed, sharp bits of his own bones piercing him continuously. The Tl’mei flails against an invisible shield- formless but bright.

Had that been a dream? Was he reliving a dream? Then that meant he would appear-

Yoongi tries to turn to face the light, anticipating his reappearance. There’s that light again, and just like he predicted, just like he dreamt, he appears again.

The Tl’mei blurs out instead- and so does the arena. His face comes into focus and slowly, so does the Medical Bay.

His chest doesn’t feel shattered anymore- rather he feels incredibly heavy. As though a great hook had latched onto his ribs, pulling him down. He can’t feel his limbs, but that part doesn’t bother Yoongi. It’s something he’s gone through before.

He was healing right now. And he knew he was safe.

He can detect a smile, a voice speaking to him, but his hearing isn’t all too great at this moment, so Yoongi doesn’t understand him. There’s a hand that appears, clearer than the face because of its proximity. Yoongi feels the hand carefully thread through his hair. It hurts. But at the same time, it feels all right. He closes his eyes, unable to open them longer. But he tries to open them again and the face reappears. The lights behind him are a little different. The face gets clearer and clearer and this time, so does the eclipse.

‘It would be just like this.’

When Yoongi finally wakes up properly, he’s able to sit up just a little, causing little alarms and sounds to go off around him. This is instantly followed by the sound of footsteps and a loud cry from Taeh’yung: ‘He’s awake!’.

The Zhak’gri bursts in, wide grin set on his face, hair a mess, and for reasons unknown, a ladle in his hand. His appearance is pushed aside, quite literally, by Sk’jin who storms inside the Medical Bay.

The Khol’isa’s skin is glowing, his eyes bright, and he smelled like something Yoongi can’t quite name, but associates with somewhere hot and dry.

‘Yoongi-‘

‘Where are we?’ Yoongi manages a croak, his mind finally coming up with the correct scent. ‘You smell like dust.’

Sk’jin blinks and then he rolls his eyes as he says, ‘You nearly fucking died. Put away that GI agent intuition- we’re in Ch’dra.’

‘Namjoon?’ Yoongi is pushed back with a surprisingly gentle hand as Sk’jin looks over his health tab, studying his readings while adjusting some form of drip.
‘Upstairs- and confused. Probably making his way down.’ He replies carelessly.

‘Hoseok?’

‘Outside, also confused. Probably headed back in.’ Sk’jin mutters. If Yoongi isn’t mistaken, Sk’jin looks irritated. And not at Yoongi. But at something else.

‘I’m here!’ Taeh’yung beams, his head popping from behind Sk’jin.

‘How long?’

‘Two days,’ Sk’jin finally looks away from the screen mounted on the wall next to his Medical Bed. ‘Your regenerative levels are insane.’

Yoongi pauses, wondering how he should reply to that. Taeh’yung walks over to sit on his Medical Bed, a feat considering it’s designed for one general sized Being and Taeh’yung is quite tall. He carefully puts his arms around Yoongi, holding him in a gentle hug. He presses his cheek against Yoongi’s, and the Human can quite literally feel his smile against his cheek.

‘Thank you.’

For a moment, Sk’jin’s irritation abates, and he looks at Yoongi with what the Human can only properly term as fond. But then Namjoon appears and Sk’jin’s irritated expression comes back.

‘Yoongi- hey,’ Namjoon says somewhat lamely.

‘Hi.’ Yoongi replies, hoping the response suffices. He feels Taeh’yung smile even wider.

‘Uh- how are you feeling-‘

‘Wow, I really wonder how he’s feeling,’ Sk’jin spits out. ‘You know, from nearly DYING!’

Namjoon closes his eyes tight, clearly trying to conjure up some patience.

‘I don’t know,’ Yoongi replies before he asks, ‘What is the situation of our mission?’

Sk’jin throws Namjoon a glare which Namjoon returns with a frustrated grimace. But before this exchange of tense facial expressions can continue, Yoongi hears a door banging open and Hoseok’s voice filling the area. Taeh’yung pulls away from Yoongi, obvious excitement in his body language.

‘-wait! Please be careful-!’ is all Hoseok manages to say when he appears in the doorway, out of breath, hair disheveled, eyes wide.

Yoongi’s mind is reeling.

He feels his jaw drop. He’s blinking rapidly, somehow unable to look directly at this Being’s face.

He was awake, and he was standing in front of him. In fact, he’s walking towards Yoongi, a smile breaking out on his face, hands lifted before him.

‘Yoongi!’

Yoongi is vaguely aware of Taeh’yung squealing while Hoseok appears at the doorway, also looking breathless as though he suddenly had to run. Everyone is speaking but Yoongi doesn’t really hear them. Not when his solid warmth wraps around him, triggering memories from the arena.

He was real.

*

Chapter End Notes

(Author’s Notes)

The only ship mentioned in this fic and it’s finally here. after 18 chapters. And they don’t speak the same language.
I hate myself.
The language Jimin speaks is a language I speak and it’s a legit language lol. My mum’s from a small state in India called Mizoram and the language there is kinda… unusual and unique with over 8 tones in the dialect. It’s called Mizo but don’t take my word for it when I say the spelling and meaning is accurate, I’ve purposefully changed some of the spelling and the words used because I prefer some words over another because I think it looks better.
And yeah, this update is a little…short- well short for this fic’s recent standard, because it’s gonna be weekly for a while ehe. So yeah…scratches back of neck I hope you enjoy.
Taeh’yung POV might be a bit difficult to understand so I’ll just clarify some parts here. When writing Taeh’yung’s sole perspective, I use they/them/their as his pronouns. However when Taeh’yung is referring to one of the other 4, the pronouns he/she will be used. The writing that's oriented to the left are the “voices in his head”. They were supposed to be MUCH SMALLER IN FONT SIZE but AO3 has really limited editing options i’m sad. They’re meant to be hard to read because Taeh’yung can’t hear them all too well either. So instead on AO3 i’ve put them oriented towards the left. Because Taeh’yung’s character is a complex one- he’s a lot of different Beings in one so when it’s his POV, all of him, speak at the same time, unless an individual voice comes out. It’s one of the reasons why he’s sort of so chaotic with his behavior and persona.
‘What in Spaces just happened?!’ Hoseok demands as he bursts in, in time to witness Sk’jin sinking into his pilot’s seat, face buried in his hands. Namjoon is in a similar disposition but he’s quick to recover. The Bridge lit up with the white light of warped space, the flare of it reduced and comfortably familiar to Hoseok. At least here in warp space they were momentarily safe.

Namjoon stands up from where he’d been squatting, making his way towards the Bridge door.

‘Need to check on Yoongi-‘

Hoseok stops him, holding him back.

‘He’s being taken care of by Taeh’yung- he’ll be fine without any of us having to butt in.’ Hoseok says, grip tightening over the Kutsoglerin’s arm. ‘I need an explanation.’

‘So do I,’ Namjoon retorts, pulling his arm out of Hoseok’s hold.

‘We all need an explanation,’ Sk’jin says tiredly from the front. ‘And none of us have the answers- only Jimin does.’

‘Wait- how did this even happen? How is he awake? Since when?’ Hoseok demands, walking up towards Sk’jin who stands wearily.

‘You can both watch the moment it happened.’ The Khol’isa says instead.

Pulling up the surveillance footage from barely an hour ago, the three gather around the Navigation Table and watch.

Sk’jin’s back is turned to Taeh’yung who is crouched beside the OrTank. They can hear that he’s speaking- but it’s in a language none of them understand.

‘Lisai- can you translate that?’ Namjoon asks, sectionalizing that audio in particular.

They watch as Sk’jin pushes Van Seulgaan back, only to be shoved back as well. And then suddenly Taeh’yung steps back from his kneeling position. Namjoon quickly zooms in on the surveillance here.
The Being in the OrTank- Jimin – opens his eyes.

And quite instantly the OrTank’s fixtures come apart, the side bars opening up like a blossoming flower and the liquid he was suspended in dissipating into the air like mist. It’s somehow entirely unremarkable. Maybe except for the fact that he seemed to be illuminated from within, blurry his outline momentarily. The Android guards are alert, aiming their TeorSers at Jimin and that’s also when Van seems to notice him. It’s an unassuming light- almost primitive, resembling the faint radiance of a candle’s flame. But it suddenly flares from the entirety of his being, solid and lingering. Taeh’yung is quick to act as well, a powerful ring of green light expanding from him, knocking out the entirety of the guards as well as Van.

They survey the footage a little longer until when Taeh’yung disposes of the Android guards and Van Seulgaan with little to no ceremony out of the ship.

‘Just like that?’ Namjoon is talking to himself.

‘It’s Taeh’yung- it has to be.’ Hoseok says at once. There was no other logical explanation. ‘He did say he could communicate with him-’

‘But he said it wasn’t clear,’ Sk’jin argues. ‘Trust me on this- I don’t think this was Taeh’yung’s doing. Something triggered this event, and I’m pretty sure only Jimin has the answer.’

‘This feels odd,’ Namjoon says, as though he hadn’t heard them speaking.

He rewinds the footage and it’s not to the awakening- but rather to where Jimin is speaking to Sk’jin.

‘What about this is weird?’ Sk’jin asks a little slowly, as though severely judging the Kutsoglerin’s priorities.

‘You just complied.’ Namjoon looks up and then adds, ‘You don’t just comply like this.’

Sk’jin doesn’t even bother looking irritated at what Namjoon is implying, but instead looks thoughtful too. When Hoseok analyzes the footage properly again, he does find it odd, how Sk’jin somehow easily agrees to Taeh’yung’s and Jimin’s requests with little to no argument. Or how Sk’jin just simply drops a topic, his panicked frustration ebbing away in a matter of seconds.

‘It’s not-’

‘It’s not Taeh’yung,’ Sk’jin says firmly. The conviction in his voice is solid. ‘I don’t know what I was thinking during these moments- when I watch them like this, it’s as though I don’t have any consistent thought- I only remember his words.’

‘Did you understand?’ Namjoon asks as he replays that one short section again.

‘Sk’jin, khognei tak in, kal to ang.’

‘No- I don’t,’ Sk’jin frowns before his eyes widen, leaning back a little as though astounded by the sheer force of his thoughts. ‘I know what this is.’

‘Sk’jin-’ Namjoon is already standing up from his crouched form, as though ready to placate the Khol’isa.

‘This is hypnosis- it has to be.’ Sk’jin points down. ‘The symptoms all match up. That thing uses hypnosis-‘
Hoseok doesn’t feel like that’s right.

‘Wait,’ Namjoon cuts in, hand raised. ‘But that doesn’t explain the arena.’

‘What about the arena?’ Sk’jin demands, head swiveling over towards Namjoon. Hoseok wouldn’t be surprised if he started breathing out fire.

‘When you landed- it was as though the entire arena were caught in some daze- they were all...awestruck,’ Namjoon says with some hesitance, he’s already typing up something on the side of the Table. ‘This wasn’t just crowd frenzy- it wasn’t-’

‘Hypnosis requires some form of eye-contact, a trigger to activate the hypnosis,’ Hoseok supplies, thinking back to how Yoongi had snagged the bells off of Sk’jin’s robes. Namjoon pulls up the live footage that had been streaming only minutes ago and rewinds it to the moment the Užkulisai lands and the moment Jimin apparently jumps off.

Namjoon zooms in on the crowds of the arena.

‘They look stunned,’ Sk’jin says slowly. ‘Caught in some…trance or something.’

Their eyes are wide, expressions similar to that of pious Beings reverently worshipping their Deity with all of their heart and devotion. This couldn’t be hypnosis.

But there was somehow literally no other explanation.

‘Is this something coming from him or is it just...Pompen trait?’ Hoseok asks. ‘Because you ran through and you were unaffected.’

Namjoon nods slowly.

‘We’ll have to talk to him,’ Sk’jin says flatly. ‘Just look at his behavior- does this look like someone whose been practically comatose for centuries? When I used to go into chrysalis I was disoriented for days, and that lasted a year max.’

It most certainly didn’t look like it. The Being walks around- well runs around- as though he knew the ship, as though he was used to the technology that was around him. Hoseok can’t be too sure, but whatever tech they had now surely had to be different from whatever time this Being lived in.

‘He also knew our names- well, mine and Yoongi’s,’ Sk’jin adds when no one speaks.

‘We’ll ask Taeh’yung about that- seeing as he’s the only one who’s able to communicate with him,’ Namjoon nods at the freeze-frame of the Being’s face. ‘But for now-’

He pulls up a screen with the GLA News Broadcast as well as another screen for the Underverse. And just one look shows how much of a mess everything is.

‘They were all there?’ Namjoon asks him.

Hoseok nods, pulling up a holographic screen of his own. ‘Venture Unit is going crazy as well.’

‘You said Amme was there too right?’ Sk’jin asks with a slight frown. ‘I wasn’t expecting her to appear. She’s one of the last members of the Directory.’

‘Yoongi is involved- and I think she’s far more involved with our OrTank than we can guess,’ Namjoon says slowly. ‘After all- they were supposed to be in the combined care of the Yishengs and the Venture Unit.’
‘So you’re saying that she might be more involved in this?’ Sk’jin asks immediately. ‘Are you saying she placed Yoongi here for a reason and it’s because of the OrTank?’

‘I don’t know,’ Namjoon shrugs. ‘I don’t know anything. We need to talk to him.’

They stare at the flashing headlines across the multiple news channels. All of the Universe was focused on Pompa- immediate outcries of taking Pompa out of the GLA are the most popular notion. Followed by confusion and shock because when Hoseok had released the live-feed, not only did it extend throughout the most of the GLA Universe, but the Underverse again. This brought out their Analysts, who were able to find the source of the channel distribution. By doing so, they were able to identify the ship as GLA property, and that too under the name of a high-profile Officer within the GLA. Many Beings from across the Universe, representing their planet or even System took to the channels, proclaiming their disgust at the corruption and blindness within the GLA.

The GLA never proclaimed that they were perfect. They had a few laws and regulations which were applicable and advantageous for all involved. But they made their mistakes. However the good that came from the GLA was always perceived strong and high enough to gloss over the “few” bad things they engaged in. Besides, the GLA had a good scapegoat in the shape of the Venture Unit.

But this.

This was exposing every single GLA organization.

‘I guess we’ve really kick started something,’ Sk’jin breaks the silence, waving one hand over the screens.

Hoseok isn’t naïve.

To start an avalanche, sometimes all you needed was to throw down a small pebble. And then everything would follow.

The screens display that a total of 8 planets and an entire System had already pulled out of the GLA. And this was only the first hour since the broadcast; which they hadn’t been able to shut down, and had resorted to physically block the satellite camera. Many Beings were already storming up GLA headquarters locations across the Universe, demanding explanations.

‘What did you do?’ Van Seulgaan had sounded so fearful in the footage. ‘What did YOU DO?!’

Had they just unknowingly cast the pebble?

They wait until Yoongi is stabilized. The moment he’s cleared and the moment Taeh’yung calls them, Namjoon, Hoseok, and Sk’jin pool downstairs, barricading the way out of the Medical Bay.
Yoongi’s bloodied robes are gone, instead dressed in a pair of clean looking clothes that Namjoon is pretty sure belonged to Hoseok. Hoseok too squints but decides not to ask, probably deciding that there was no point. The Human is stable, and the Medical Bay performing surgery. It smelled like disinfectants and blood but the Bay’s air-freshener system kicks in, cleansing the area.

Namjoon gets a better look at this Jimin, trying to place his species despite knowing that he wouldn’t be able to. Not when even the GLA database had come up empty.

‘So-’ Namjoon is about to start when Sk’jin cuts in.

‘Explain now,’ the Khol’isa demands, towering over the shorter Being.

Jimin takes a step back, eyebrows furrowed a little, glancing over at Taeh’yung.

Taeh’yung says something, his eyes darting over to all of them. Namjoon recognizes protectiveness from the Zhak’gri, as though ready to defend the unknown Being if needed.

Jimin replies, a little hesitant, eyes darting around at all of them carefully. He doesn’t look scared-he’s careful though, but not out of fear.

Taeh’yung nods with his words, sometimes saying a word or two as though to encourage him.

‘I think we should all introduce ourselves first,’ Taeh’yung beams at them, walking up to stand next to Jimin.

‘Sk’jin,’ the Khol’isa says, though it sounds more like a warning than anything else.

‘Hoseok,’ the Ngfy’widan states clearly with a small nod.

‘Namjoon,’ he adds.

‘And I’m Taeh’yung!’ the Zhak’gri adds unnecessarily.

Jimin seems to find this funny and chuckles a little at the Zhak’gri before he speaks. Taeh’yung listens carefully, nodding before he translates.

‘Right so- his name is Jimin,’ Taeh’yung begins. ‘He is from Ma’ikelawī, the center of the System of Menigišiti. And he is the Yemenifesi Ch’i nik’eti of his people.’

‘…is that supposed to mean something…’ Sk’jin asks carefully.

‘Yeah- he’s like, the prince- maybe even king. The words don’t really translate all too well into Standard,’ Taeh’yung replies easily.

Every head in the room snaps towards Jimin again who colours a little at the intensity of their stares.

‘…so he’s…royalty?’

‘Well- I think the better term would be…’ Taeh’yung struggles a little. Jimin says something quietly, a questioning tone to his voice.

‘He’s like the…protector? Defender? No that’s not it…-deity? No,’ Taeh’yung shakes his head, pausing to think. The silence continues on for far too long and Namjoon decides to break the silence.
‘We’ll just stick with prince for now?’ Namjoon offers, noticing how Sk’jin rolls his eyes, arms crossed.

‘Well yes- prince I guess.’ Taeh’yung nods before adding, ‘What would you like to know?’

‘First of all, what was he doing inside the OrTank? How did he get in there?’ Namjoon asks before Sk’jin can say anything. They needed to get some base questions answered first before they could proceed to other details.

Taeh’yung translates, words pulling and pausing as though he was listening to someone else speak and he was merely repeating the words. It does sound a little different than how Jimin spoke it, that was for sure. The language was purely tonal, the lilts of his syllables changing with every word, sounding oddly melodic.

Jimin’s expression darkens a little, looking melancholic and suddenly withdrawn. He nods once before he speaks.

‘I was on a diplomatic mission,’ Taeh’yung translates immediately, leaning in into Jimin as though to better hear him. Jimin looks at all of them as he speaks, earnestness and honesty apparent in his voice. ‘My sister who is the queen sent me to outer rim to meet with the GLA authorities. We were unsure of what the GLA meant- because they claimed that we had sent them a distress signal, but we had done no such thing. I lead my group of guards, as well as researchers, towards the Gateway. As our System was so well guarded, and we did not allow any to enter, we met at the Gateway. However, when we arrived there we would find out that it was all a trap.’

Jimin’s expression darkens even more before he continues, staring down at the floor, his hands clenched into tight fists.

‘The Gateway had been attacked- by a great Red Evil we did not recognize. They plundered the Gateway, and all her people. We were too late to help- I had left with the purpose of diplomatic negotiations, and armed only to escape or defend. Not for offence. We were stranded in the Gateway.’ Taeh’yung pauses as he listens to Jimin speak. ‘-and then we were discovered. Slowly, they took us one by one, until it was only me.’

Jimin looks away for a moment, to look down at Yoongi.

‘I was alone, running away- and then I met Yoongi-‘

Jimin’s words are met with stunned disbelief and shock.

‘Wait what-?’ Hoseok cuts in, disbelief etched on his features.

‘He’s lying-’ Sk’jin rolls his eyes at once.

‘He can’t.’ Taeh’yung cuts in unexpectedly.

‘What?’

‘He can’t lie.’ Taeh’yung repeats. ‘It is against his nature- the Yemenifesi Ch’inik’eti do not and cannot lie.’

‘That’s a lie,’ Sk’jin points out. ‘Everyone lies. Children, before they are aware of truth and falsehoods lie. He’s a grown ass midget adult- of course he lies.’

‘No, Sk’jin,’ Taeh’yung’s expression is deadly serious. ‘There is no lie in his soul.’
Everyone stares at Jimin and then at Yoongi, their thoughts haywire.

‘Assuming he’s truthful,’ Namjoon ploughs on, wanting to get to the bottom of this story. ‘That’s impossible. I know what Jimin is talking about. The Bhumi Treaty is a known piece of historical data within the GLA- the results were never made public, but the GLA, and especially the Venture Unit Information Analysts know of it. The System of Bhumi refused to join the GLA, and so signed a Treaty to never interfere with the GLA so long as the GLA didn’t interfere with them- they were run by a regency…’ Namjoon pauses.

He spoke to Lmiura about this exact same piece of information when she had come to him in Dziko.

‘What do you know about the Bhumi System?’ Lmiura asks.

Namjoon sighs heavily in resignation, leaning back on the wall and crossing his arms over his chest as he replies, ‘It was never a part of the GLA- they had their own planetary regency that ruled the planets. They had surprisingly advance technology developed by the natives of the System- most notably a sort of “space-camouflage” that hid their existence from the rest of the Known Universe. They refused to merge with the GLA – even in Trade and Tourism. They signed a treaty with the GLA, declaring their own independence. Their only request was to be left alone and the GLA respected that as per the laws of the GLA. However, 8 centuries later, a distress signal from Bhumi was detected and the GLA sent a small platoon to check on the System. They picked up some refugees who refused to seek shelter from the GLA and instead accompanied them back to their home-System. The platoon, including the native ships were annihilated upon arrival without any survivors. The System of Bhumi was lost for a few sols before the GLA was able to enter and find it again, thus giving the GLA the first evidence on the existence of the Akramanese.’

‘Well summarized,’ Lmiura nods. ‘Now, let me ask you a question: for a System that had no contact beyond its own borders, and a System that remained purposefully hidden for so long, how is it that you think the Akramanese found them?’

Namjoon studies Lmiura’s expression, searching for something, anything.

‘You can’t be serious?’

‘I am- it was perfect. At the time, the Yishengs needed a vast scape for their experimentation- a place that the GLA wouldn’t enter or observe. When Bhumi signed that treaty, they signed their own death sentence.’

‘They knew who he was,’ Namjoon says at once. ‘They found him, inside the ship, with the other OrTanks, and identified him. According to Lmiura, the entire thing had been conducted as a result of the Yisheng Directory’s meddling- which was how the Akramanese got to them- they used his System’s “camouflage” technology to develop and create their own.’

‘But how is this connected to Yoongi,’ Hoseok points out. ‘Unless-‘

‘Unless he was really there, and he too was similarly captured,’ Namjoon adds, before turning to Jimin, ‘How did you meet Yoongi? Who was he?’

Taeh’yung rushes to translate to a confused Jimin who was just staring blankly at them.

‘He says Yoongi was there with another team- they arrived after the Gateway was overtaken. He was afraid that they were planted there to lure him out. Because the Red Evil had many aides and kept many enslaved minds to do their bidding. That had been their original downfall, which led to 'Yoongi was part of the GLA?' Hoseok frowns. 'He has to be- if he was an Agent in the Venture Unit, we would have been able to find evidence of his participation. All Agents of the Venture Unit are archived, no matter who they were.'

'He also says,' Taeh’yung continues, 'That after he decided to trust them, they tried to take him out of the Gateway, to at least give him protection from the Red Evil, and report the situation to the GLA. They were unsuccessful, and the team, similar to his own guards, were taken one by one. Yoongi was the last- and he died trying to protect him.'

Namjoon hears Sk’jin’s breath getting caught.

'He couldn’t have died,’ the Khol’isa says slowly.

‘I’m going to make a guess here,’ Hoseok says grimly. ‘But the Red Evil he’s talking about- they were the Akramanese, weren’t they? Based on the first findings of the Venture Unit regarding the Akramanese, they were said to originate from Bhumi. But seeing as Jimin here seems to consider them an invading group- they probably were not from Bhumi.’

‘So then the Akramanese conducted this?’ Sk’jin looks skeptical. ‘They lured in the GLA and the Bhumians?’

‘Taeh’yung?’ Namjoon asks.

The Zhak’gri nods before translating. Jimin nods at the question before he replies.

‘No- we were not called by the Red Evil,’ Taeh’yung translates. ‘We were contacted through the GLA channel kept by the treaty-panel, which included my sister and myself. Which was why I left. Had we been contacted by another channel, we would have left with the armada. Our system is special and unique- and we would protect it to the death.’

‘Does...does he remember? The names of the Beings involved in the treaty-panel?’ Sk’jin asks carefully. Taeh’yung translates immediately.

‘Senator Enza, Yisheng Ndica, Zo Ingaal, and Admiral K’mara.’

Everyone reacts to the final name, eyes widening, curses being mumbled.

‘Why am I not surprised,’ Hoseok breathes out under his breath.

‘How did you communicate?’ Sk’jin asks, eyebrow raised.

‘Yisheng Ndica could speak for the Panel- he was able to understand us, as we were able to understand him, though his vocabulary was somewhat lacking.’

‘So-‘

‘Wait- we need to hear the end,’ Namjoon takes a deep breath, his mind reeling with all of this information. ‘What happened after- after Yoongi died.’

Taeh’yung translate again, his voice sad. Jimin’s head suddenly bows, looking pained as he speaks.

‘There was nothing I could do,’ Taeh’yung repeats softly. ‘We hid and hid for so long- it wasn’t just physical exhaustion. The Red Evil spread, tainting not only the planet but our very souls, our hearts. And we tried so hard to fight it. Yoongi tried so hard.’
To Namjoon’s disquiet, there are tears in both Jimin and Taeh’yung’s eyes. Jimin’s voice is watery, breaking every now and then.

‘After Yoongi died, I couldn’t do it anymore,’ Taeh’yung translates quietly, reaching over to hold Jimin’s hand. ‘So when they came for me. I didn’t fight. They tried to make me talk. To tell them the secret of my home. But I didn’t. I refused. When I tried to take my own life- they stopped me and put me to Sleep. And I was trapped. Sometimes I could hear voices- sometimes I could hear singing, whispers. It was always white- always empty. But somehow, always so full.’

Jimin finally looks up, looking them all in the eye.

‘I cannot explain to you what that was- where that was, but I was trapped, for a very long time. But I could almost wake at one point. I was able to hear. And I could hear your voices. All of your voices.’ Taeh’yung repeats. Jimin smiles, looking back at Yoongi. ‘And I could see your dreams. Your nightmares. And I knew I was close. That I could wake up. And then I heard Taeh’yung, and we spoke. He told me about you, and who you were.’

‘Didn’t you say he told you that we were supposed to take him back to his home?’ Hoseok quips up. ‘That’s how he knew- because if he is telling the truth, then it means he thought we were still the same GLA mission team that was with him before.’

Taeh’yung nods at that, ‘Yeap! I told them you guys were cool GLA people!’

Sk’jin grimaces comically at that.

‘All right- before anything, we need to redraw our trajectory,’ Namjoon announces. Sk’jin’s head turns sharply towards him, his expression dubious and questioning.

‘He’s from Bhumi- and he’s talking about his system- the one that’s hidden.’ Hoseok explains before Namjoon can. ‘If anyone knows a way in- then he should know.’

Taeh’yung starts to question Jimin immediately who nods at once in understanding before he replies, looking at them with a hopeful smile that doesn’t need translating.

‘All right- let’s go up to the Navigation Table,’ Namjoon says. ‘We’ll find a way to get in, and get him back to his planet.’

‘Namjoon-’ Sk’jin frowns.

‘He doesn’t want to leave Yoongi,’ Taeh’yung interrupts as he translates for Jimin. And sure enough, Jimin hasn’t budged an inch.

Namjoon catches Sk’jin raising one irritated eyebrow at him, and then a very skeptical eyebrow at Jimin. Talent.

‘Well- we can’t bring the Navigation Table down here,’ Sk’jin says with blunt emphasis.

Taeh’yung says something again and Jimin’s expression takes on one that promises stubbornness. One that Namjoon doesn’t want to deal with.

‘It’s fine- I’ll bring the NaviLet,’ Namjoon intercedes before Sk’jin goes off again. He leaves the Medical Bay and isn’t surprised to hear Sk’jin follow after him.

‘What is it-’
‘You know perfectly well!’ Sk’jin snaps as they climb up the stairs. ‘What we’re doing right now is beyond stupid! Going straight to Bhumi? Really?’

‘Look,’ Namjoon turns his head a little to address the Khol’isa. ‘The GI do not have any memories or any form of identity- so how does Yoongi still have his name? Why does Jimin know him by this name?’ Namjoon asks quietly. ‘No- this wasn’t random. Yoongi being the only GI agent with fully functional self-awareness and identity is not a coincidence- this was done on purpose. They knew- they knew who Yoongi was, and they knew who Jimin was. And they’ve purposefully sent them here together.’

‘And so us going and doing exactly what they sent us out to do is the correct thing to do?’ Sk’jin hisses. ‘What if this is what triggers another Gaia Case?’

‘It won’t because we know,’ Namjoon argues back. ‘Didn’t you say you wanted to know what was happening too?’

‘I do! But what I’m saying is that we need more time! To better understand and analyze-‘

‘We’ve started something,’ Namjoon shakes his head. ‘And it’s going to catch up to us. And when it does, we’ll be stopped- and we will never know.’

‘Is that what you’re telling yourself?’ Sk’jin demands. ‘And don’t talk about Yoongi as if you care for him. Yoongi could have died- he would be dead if it weren’t for Jimin. How are you so blasé about this?’

‘He wouldn’t have died-‘ Namjoon grits out as they arrive at the Bridge.

‘Can you even hear yourself?!’ Sk’jin hisses. ‘I can’t believe you’re the leader of this group! Your reckless plans and pride nearly got someone from your team killed and you don’t even seem remotely ashamed?!’

‘For fucks sake Sk’jin you don’t think I know that?’ Namjoon demands, pulling out the NaviLet from under the Navigation Table a little too forcefully.

‘Looking at you right now I don’t think you do!’ Sk’jin snaps back.

‘And might I remind you that it was Yoongi who continued on with the plan- he was the one who said he wanted to fight. I didn’t make him- none of us did. He was the one who volunteered in the beginning!’ Namjoon argues back as they make their way out.

‘Yoongi is not normal!’ Sk’jin hisses, his footsteps loud as he follows him down the stairs. ‘He doesn’t think the same way like we do- he doesn’t see what-‘

‘Are you second-guessing Yoongi’s decisions? Because he sure didn’t seem unsure when he poisoned us all-‘

‘-he was under orders-‘

‘-like you? Like the rest of us-‘

‘We are- were under orders- what Yoongi did, his decision, was his own-‘

‘-which wouldn’t have happened if-‘

‘If what?’ Namjoon finally stands straight, facing Sk’jin head on. ‘Please tell me what else we could have done—please tell me my mistakes Sk’jin, I beg of you.’

Sk’jin glares at him, eyes fierce. But behind all that irritation, Namjoon sees something else. Fear.

‘Look—’

‘Did you guys…’ Hoseok is standing by the doorway to the Medical Bay, eyebrows raised.

‘I got the NaviLet,’ Namjoon raises the device up as he continues to walk. Sk’jin had paused for a moment.

He leaves the two outside for a moment, trying not to think about it. Instead he pulls up one of the surgical tray-arms from the wall and balances the NaviLet over it.

‘All right Jimin,’ Namjoon says with a nod towards Taeh’yung to start translate. ‘I’m gonna show you a map of a System we call Bhumi. Tell me if you recognize it.’

Jemin nods as he listens to Taeh’yung translate his words.

Namjoon pulls up the map, expanding it so that it was in Jimin’s eyelevel. Sk’jin and Hoseok walk in, the former looking calmer and less agitated. Jimin scans the holographic map, eyebrows furrowed. He’s saying something to Taeh’yung who nods once more.

‘Bhumi,’ Taeh’yung replies to one of Jimin’s questions.

‘Bhu-Bhumi?’ Jimin repeats the word slowly, eyebrows furrowing before his eyes widen just a little. An expression flits across his features— one of pain and sorrow. He’s quickly asking Taeh’yung something who nods in understanding and the Zhak’gri is reaching across, tapping over the NaviLet. Namjoon would have never guessed that Taeh’yung would be efficient in matters regarding Navigation, or in all honesty, anything technical considering how scatter-brained the latter seemed. Namjoon was obviously wrong because Taeh’yung pulls up the customization tab for the map. But before he can explain what it is, Jimin exclaims out loud, reaching forward to shift the map.

For someone who was asleep for a long period of time, or something along that line, Jimin had an incredibly easy command over the technology in front of him. He slowly rotates the map, before pulling at the edges of the holograph, expanding it until he stood at the center of the holograph. He turns around in the spot slowly, the blue of the holograph highlighting his hair.

‘Menigišiti,’ Jimin says simply. Then he frowns, saying something to Taeh’yung who points at the customization panel on the holographic display. Jimin reaches up, touching the panel with a slight frown. Taeh’yung is explaining and Jimin nods. Then with a little more confidence he taps across the holograph and then adds 3 more planets. Then he steps away, shrinking the map a little so that they could look at it from around the map.

Jemin points at each planet, naming them easily. He reaches the outer most planet before he says: ‘Megibïya.’

‘Gateway,’ Taeh’yung translates. ‘It means gateway, in his language.’

‘So this is where it happened,’ Hoseok frowns, stepping closer. ‘He’s placed 14 planets here though— but we know that Bhumi has 11 planets.’

Jemin shakes his head at that and Taeh’yung translates for him: ‘I would know— I lived there. It is my home.’
‘Tae, ask him if he knows anything about the Akramanese,’ Sk’jin puts in bluntly. Taeh’yung nods and repeats Sk’jin’s question to Jimin.

‘Akramanese?’ Jimin repeats, looking thoughtful. But then, a few moments later he points at one of the newly added planets and says, ‘Akramana.’

‘Can he tell us more about this planet?’ Namjoon asks at once.

Taeh’yung relays the question and Jimin’s expression takes on one that’s a little confused and also suddenly dark.

‘It’s the planet where they met with the Treaty Panel,’ Taeh’yung says. ‘It was where they hosted the GLA emissary for the duration they were there.’

Namjoon studies its placement in the map.

‘How did they find it? How did the GLA come there?’ Hoseok asks.

Jimin pauses a little, eyes narrowing slightly as he regards all of them. Taeh’yung says something else but Jimin shakes his head.

‘He is not allowed to speak of the secrets of his System to those who are not born of their core,’ Taeh’yung translates. ‘But there are some ways of entering Menigišiti, that are not just through Megibīya. They were however all sealed and protected after the Treaty Panel left.’

‘Not at all suspicious or weird,’ Sk’jin says under his breath.

‘But can we get in?’ Namjoon asks, ignoring Sk’jin.

Jimin nods at that, and asks a question.

‘Where are we right now?’ Taeh’yung translates.

Namjoon minimizes the map of Bhumi and pulls up their current coordinates.

‘We’re here,’ Namjoon points at their moving dot. ‘We’re going here.’ he taps at Ch’dra.

Jimin nods, head turning between the two priority maps set up.

‘How long will it take to get to Menigišiti from this location?’ Taeh’yung asks.

‘It depends on which trajectory we’re taking,’ Namjoon replies, glancing at Hoseok. ‘It also depends on where we can safely dock to restock on fuel and other supplies.’

‘But if we’re going by a route we had first planned,’ Hoseok adds, ‘It would take us approximately 3 GLA months.’

Taeh’yung translates the information and Jimin nods in understanding.

‘We can access 3 different entrances- one is obviously through the Gateway,’ Taeh’yung says. ‘But there are two that should be unknown and still hidden.’

‘I think the Gateway won’t be advisable,’ Hoseok ruminates. ‘It’s the planet that’s exposed to the rest of the Universe despite the entire area being barricaded. We can’t risk going through.’

Everyone jumps when Yoongi’s Medical Bed beeps loudly. Jimin’s attention is instantly riveted, looking over the Human with apparent worry and fear.

‘It’s all right,’ Sk’jin says sharply. ‘It’s just the indication that the surgery was successful.’

Taeh’yung translates and Jimin nods, smiling at Sk’jin in thanks.

‘I have a few questions,’ Sk’jin continues, sending Namjoon a glare that dares him to interrupt. ‘I would appreciate some answers.’

Jimin nods as soon as Taeh’yung finishes translating.

‘What is this?’ Sk’jin asks, shoving a screen at Jimin. It’s playing the footage of the moment where the Užkulisai lands, and the people of Pompen are all at awe. Then the footage changes to the one from inside the ship, where Jimin himself is speaking to Sk’jin.

Namjoon is about to step in and stop this rather aggressive interrogation but Jimin ducks his head, looking sheepish and guilty.

He starts to talk, sounding somehow small and as though expecting some form of reprimanding lecture. Sk’jin looks livid.

Taeh’yung looks like he’s struggling to translate.

‘Uh- he says it was not done for the sake of manipulating you-‘

Sk’jin’s eyes narrow dangerously.

‘-and that there are no lasting effects,’ Taeh’yung continues, looking nervous on behalf of Jimin who continues with some difficulty. ‘It’s some form of hypnosis, but I don’t think that’s the correct word-’

‘You fucking hypnotized me?!’ Sk’jin hisses.

Jimin doesn’t understand what the Khol’isa is saying but he didn’t need to understand what he meant. His hands go up at once, stammering quickly and fidgeting where he stood.

‘It’s not hypnosis!’ Taeh’yung says at once. ‘It’s just- there’s no word I can use to translate this. It’s unique to him— to the Yemenifesi Ch’inik’eti-’

‘That doesn’t mean anything to me-‘

‘Sk’jin-‘ Namjoon pulls the Khol’isa aside, whispering low and quickly. ‘Weren’t you just telling me that this entire shit situation would have ended with Yoongi’s death if it weren’t for Jimin? His actions, meaning his “hypnosis” of you lead to that. He wasn’t doing it for the purpose of misleading you or influencing you to do bad- he did it to save Yoongi.’

Sk’jin pulls his arm out of Namjoon’s hold with a glare.

‘Is that what you did with the crowd?’ Hoseok is asking.

‘The Yemenifesi Ch’inik’eti have the ability to bring…to inspire…awe?’ Taeh’yung tries. ‘Inspire something like…something like mindless amazement. To somehow sway masses, without question, and without awareness of thought.’

‘Oh right- that’s a totally not dangerous ability,’ Sk’jin snaps.
Jimin doesn’t understand, but he can guess what Sk’jin is saying because he looks a little angry as he speaks.

‘It’s not permanent- I can only use it for a short period of time. And only in moments of grave danger, or absolute desperation. I cannot use it like a weapon.’ Taeh’yung translates quickly.

Sk’jin rolls his eyes, clearing disbelieving.

‘Jimin,’ Hoseok calls, as he types along his own screen. ‘Do you recognize any of these Beings?’

Hoseok has pulled up the pictures of Special-Jury. Jimin studies their faces carefully, listening to Taeh’yung’s translation.

He taps on the picture of K’mara, and then at Amme.

‘Amme?’ Sk’jin’s shock seems to momentarily make him forget his anger.

Jimin says something to Taeh’yung who in turn asks him back a question. For a short moment, Namjoon feels distrust as he regards Taeh’yung. Was he truly translating everything accurately? Namjoon glances down at Yoongi for a brief moment, wondering if the Human would understand Jimin or not.

‘Amme was with the Yisheng Ndica,’ Taeh’yung translates. ‘She was only present, but was not part of the Panel.’

‘Well…’ Hoseok trails off, eyebrow raised at Namjoon.

‘Thank you, Jimin,’ Namjoon says as he takes a step back. ‘We’re going to plot the safest trajectory back to Bhumi- I mean, back to your System. If you have anything you want to ask, or know, please do not hesitate to come to any of us.’

Taeh’yung translates as much and Jimin nods, saying something in return.

‘He says if you have any more questions, then he will be more than happy to give you any information you deem is important.’

‘Feel free to do whatever,’ Hoseok adds, ‘He can choose any one of the free cabins.’

Taeh’yung is translating as Namjoon, Hoseok, and Sk’jin walk out.

‘I still think this is dumb, but I know you’re not going to listen to me,’ Sk’jin says as they make for the stairs.

‘I agree with Sk’jin,’ Hoseok adds. ‘We’re doing exactly what they want us to do.’

‘But they don’t know-’

‘Spaces, Namjoon,’ Sk’jin sighs tiredly as they make it to the second level. ‘I think Van Seulgaan is a pretty good eyewitness, not to mention every single fucking Pompen.’

‘I’m not defending this plan-‘ Namjoon starts, pausing on the landing.

‘Yeah? Then why aren’t you listening to me?’ Sk’jin demands.

‘You yourself told me that you wanted to see this through-‘
‘That was before he woke up!’ Sk’jin hisses. ‘Before he said what he said! Before we knew Yoongi is part of this far more than we could have ever thought! Before we realized how fucking massive this thing is!’

‘Then you can leave!’ Namjoon retorts in exasperation. ‘If you don’t agree to this, you can just leave!’

Sk’jin glares at him.

‘You can get off on the next planet or Dock-‘

‘You know full well I am not going to do that,’ Sk’jin snaps. ‘I am saying we need to rethink this—come up with a better plan. Find out more information.’

‘And how do you want us to do this? Like I said before Sk’jin, if you have a better idea, please tell me.’ Namjoon huffs out.

‘While I agree with Sk’jin that we need another plan,’ Hoseok cuts in, clearly fed-up with their arguing. ‘We currently don’t have another plan. This isn’t even much of a plan. It’s a part of a plan we haven’t set in concrete. So if you both could put away your defensiveness and anger, I would appreciate it.’

Namjoon feels like he’s a child being chastised and Sk’jin too, frowns, glaring at the floor.

‘While it is our intention to eventually get to Bhumi, or whatever the fuck it’s called, we need to be careful regarding everything. It hasn’t even been more than an hour since Pompa, we cannot come up with a concrete and exclusive plan. We’ve been relying too much on one set-up, and overreacting when something amiss happens.’ Hoseok states. ‘We need to create a flexible plan, one that not only has a plan B or C, but an endless supply. We use what we have, what we know, to our advantage, but we set nothing in stone.’

Namjoon and Sk’jin both nod at the same time at that.

‘So what we do now is concentrate on getting Yoongi conscious and well. Getting supplies and really stocking up on them to the extreme. And keeping a constant eye on the news. And then we come up with a trajectory, making our way, safely, to Bhumi. Our priority is safety, security, and secrecy.’ Hoseok pauses. ‘The GLA is distracted right now— and we can use that to our advantage. No matter how much priority the Special Jury will try to place on us— they cannot do it publically without revealing who we are— they can’t even put out a mass wanted-list or frame us for something else because the higher-ranking officers of every GLA organization as well as the Underverse will be able to guess what they’re up to.’

‘We could throw them off,’ Sk’jin offers. ‘Send false information around the Underverse, make it seem like we’ve been spotted somewhere. Because you can be sure as hell they’ll be actively looking for us— maybe not publically, but they will be scouring for us.’

‘Scatter their forces everywhere,’ Namjoon nods in agreement. ‘Distract them elsewhere and we make our move.’

‘We start there.’ Hoseok nods. ‘Then we make it up as we go.’

Namjoon is uncomfortable at that, and apparently so is Sk’jin.

‘Trust me on this,’ Hoseok says as he walks towards his Cabin, ‘No offence to the both of you but this is a mission. And we need to start thinking like agents.’
The news about the Pompen involvement with the Pageant is the only thing over on the GLA news broadcast in nearly every channel. Reporters from across the Universe are gathered there- while some even bring up the Alliance and some other shady trafficking pirate-networks.

Namjoon switches the screen to the ship’s surveillance footage instead, taking a short break. There was nothing about the ship in the stadium, nothing about the bright light. The entire Pageant issue taking up, rightly so, the news networks. They were covered for now.

He understands Hoseok’s point of view, and Namjoon is all too willing to take it up and apply it to their situation. But that didn’t mean he was comfortable with it. Namjoon always had a plan- always had a concrete goal, and was able to move within those confines because he knew exactly what to do and how to do it. But like this, it was difficult.

He checks the Medical Bay and finds that Jimin hasn’t moved away from Yoongi.

He had met and known Yoongi eight centuries ago. How long had they remained in that planet? Running and hiding from a force they were not equipped to fight, incapable of understanding because who could? There was so much Jimin’s story explained, but Namjoon has so many more questions.

Checking over at the cockpit Namjoon eyes Hoseok who is reading some Underverse communication line he had just hacked, clearly looking up information.

‘I’m stretching,’ Namjoon calls. Hoseok nods in reply.

Namjoon makes his way down to the lowest level and to the Medical Bay.

Jimin is sitting next to the Medical Bed, looking over at Yoongi’s still unconscious form. He’s humming under his breath. Jimin has Yoongi’s hand in his, gentle but firm.

It was hard to believe, that such a strange, long winded and stretched out reunion would have ever taken place. Namjoon still isn’t sure what to believe in. But Taeh’yung trusted Jimin. And Sk’jin trusted Taeh’yung. And oddly enough, Hoseok trusted Sk’jin. And Namjoon finds that he trusts Hoseok. So in one long twisted way, here they were, suspended in this not-plan-plan.

Jimin looks up when he notices Namjoon there.

They were without lies and falsehoods; according to Taeh’yung. Something that honestly just triggers a whole lot of distrust inside Namjoon. Because no Being in this Universe could be like this. But apparently Jimin was exactly that.

He smiles, calling his name, ‘Namjoon.’

Namjoon looks over at Yoongi. His health is improving at a great rate, though he was really using up a lot of medical supplies. Namjoon puts the supplies for the Medical Bay at highest priority.

Ji

Jimin smiles and holds out his hand, expression expectant.

Namjoon hesitates before giving him his hand.

Jimin’s touch is light but quick. He flips Namjoon’s hand around, pushing up the sleeves of his shirt. His expression is disturbed; pained almost. Then he’s on tiptoe, reaching up to touch Namjoon’s face. He doesn’t mask his feelings; he’s open and free with what he’s feeling.

Honestly, if living with Taeh’yung (even though it wasn’t too long) taught him one thing, it was not to fidget too much or be too shocked when he decided to randomly stroke your face. Though when Jimin does it, it’s different.

He’s studying, reading, analyzing.

At this proximity his eyes really do look a lot like solar eclipses. Permanently stuck solar eclipses.

To Namjoon’s horror, Jimin’s eyes are filling up with tears. Namjoon has a feeling he’s able to see more than just the surface of his own skin. Namjoon doesn’t move or squirm as Jimin continues to check his limbs carefully; touching the bionic flesh lightly. He’s saying something, voice tight and wet. Taeh’yung’s head peaks in. He asks Jimin a question and the latter replies, voice wobbly.

Taeh’yung looks sad as well. But not in regards to Jimin. Because he’s looking at Namjoon.

‘What is it?’ Namjoon asks, a little unnerved.

Taeh’yung shakes his head, and doesn’t translate what Jimin says. Instead the latter rolls his sleeves down, gently stroking his hand and then his face. He really has to tiptoe, reaching up this forehead. Namjoon squats down a little, and this gives Jimin the opportunity to kiss his forehead.

‘And I could see your dreams. Your nightmares.’

How much had Jimin seen? Jimin leans back a little and smiles. Namjoon tries his best to return it. What he isn’t expecting is the hug.

It feels almost as though Jimin is trying to hold him together- trying to channel all of his feelings towards Namjoon, as though hoping he would understand. But Namjoon’s not sure what the context is. But instead of questioning his actions, Namjoon hugs the shorter Being back.

‘Uh- it’s all right? Thank you?’ Namjoon finds himself saying.

Taeh’yung must be translating because Jimin nods into his shoulder before pulling away.

Namjoon is confused. And even more so when he finds Jimin doing the same to Hoseok a few hours later.

Jimin cornered Hoseok in the Kitchen where the latter had been fixing himself up something to eat. At first Hoseok thought Jimin wanted to eat and had offered his food. Instead of taking the proffered sautéed greens, Jimin took Hoseok’s face in his hands.
The Ngfy’widan actually took it better than Namjoon anticipated as he watched a little cautiously from the Lobby. Yoongi had done something similar to him before, so maybe Hoseok thought it was a Beings-Who-Were-Born-From-OrTanks sort of characteristic.

Hoseok had, for the fun of it, changed his face while Jimin was examining him. There was a lot of panicking, confusion, and then wonder, and then delight as Jimin understood what was happening. Jimin breaks out into laughter as Hoseok changes his face into a number of different sets, all intentionally unflattering. Jimin places his hand over his face as it undergoes change and his facial expression is priceless. But there was a point where Jimin took Hoseok’s hands in his. He gently traces the lines on his palm, making lines over Hoseok’s skin.

His expression is the same as when he was holding Namjoon’s hand. Pained, sad, and something Namjoon doesn’t recognize. What Namjoon doesn’t expect is Hoseok’s reaction.

He jumps, as though Jimin’s touch scalded him. But Jimin doesn’t let go. Instead he flattens the hand in his, and mimes something in the air. Judging by the stunned look on Hoseok’s face, it wasn’t making sense to him too. But Jimin is sort of satisfied- and he kisses his palm before he lets go. And then he’s smiling, gesturing to his face and then back at his own. He does this a few times before Hoseok guesses what he’s asking.

With an amused smile Hoseok’s face shifts into something that could almost pass off as Jimin’s face.

Jumin’s entire body is shaking as he laughs, clearly delighted. He then drags Hoseok over to Namjoon, gesturing again. Namjoon waits apprehensively and his apprehension is not for nothing because he never wants to see his face on Hoseok’s ever again.

Despite their rather rough “relationship”, Sk’jin stays put as Jimin “studies” him as well. He was still clearly distrustful, his posture stiff. But it was as though Sk’jin took this opportunity to study Jimin as well. They’re both studying each other, eyes piercing though the intent is completely different. Sk’jin had made rounds, checking up on Yoongi with his own eyes, when Jimin approached him.

Namjoon had held his breath in trepidation, ready to intervene in case Sk’jin flipped. But it’s not the case.

Jumin carefully runs his hands through Sk’jin’s hair, remaining for a while over his temples. He says something and Sk’jin has an unexpectedly melancholic smile as he mimes something at Jimin. Jimin is still studying his temples with great care and then lowers his hands. And then strangely enough, he places a kiss on Sk’jin’s temple. Even stranger, Sk’jin doesn’t protest.

Taeh’yung certainly didn’t mind. That was when you could hear Jimin speaking rapidly, asking questions and speaking a mile. Then they would both burst out into giggles, Taeh’yung tickling the Ma’ikelawīan’s sides.

Jumin is given his own room, Cabin-06, but he rarely stayed there. He had looked through the chamber with great interest, feeling the pillows and mattress. But he stayed in the Medical Bay more often than not.

Yoongi was recovering slowly but surely. The fight, what with the long-term effects of the poison, had greatly drained and damaged the Human’s muscular system. His organs had, at one point, all failed. Taeh’yung and Jimin’s combined efforts, along with the Medical Bed’s operation system, pulled him through. All they could do now was wait for the Human to regain consciousness.
When they’re close enough to Ch’dra, Hoseok calls Taeh’yung and Jimin up for landing. Jimin’s eyes were wide and in awe as they entered the moon’s atmosphere. He doesn’t say anything, just sticking to the window of the Bridge despite warnings of remaining seated. In the end, Hoseok is the one who drags the Ma’ikelawīan back, grimacing pointedly. Jimin smiles sheepishly before he acquiesces and remains seated until they land.

They land in Ch’dra and it’s blissfully void of any other ship. According to the latest news, every media-based organization was still over at Pompa to cover the situation. The GLA could do nothing to prevent this sudden surge of traffic and were barely making progress with investigations. They had created a perimeter around the planet’s borders but were barely maintaining it. Namjoon spares them no pity.

This also meant that the Special Jury were stuck there and Namjoon prefers that as well.

The moment Jimin sees Namjoon un-buckling himself, he flies out of the Bridge, Taeh’yung right at his heels. Sk’jin snorts when the two drop by the Medical Bay, carefully checking on Yoongi’s still unconscious form before scrambling away.

‘Children,’ Sk’jin snorts, rolling his eyes.

‘Do we just let them go out?’ Hoseok asks.

‘By all means, go after them,’ Sk’jin sighs tiredly, looking like he just wanted to sleep the day away. He would, if he could.

Hoseok pauses to think before he too leaves the Bridge. Namjoon spots him standing by the doorway leading out of the Bridge, watching Jimin and Taeh’yung run about in the strange glaring light from Ch’dra’s planet. They quickly stock up on supplies again, really keeping store with the fuel, water cells, and medical supplies.

Towards the evening, Hoseok takes the final trip to the Android-serviced Station and Jimin trailing him. The Ma’ikelawīan doesn’t seem to care that Hoseok doesn’t understand him, and engages him in conversation. It’s mainly lots of pointing and Namjoon guesses Jimin is describing some landscape feature he’s seen before and was making a comparison. Hoseok tries his best to respond but it’s a little futile.

‘Pa! I’m gonna cook! Would you like some tea?’ Taeh’yung chirps across the line.

Namjoon is working at his station while Sk’jin carefully overlooks their next trajectory in the Bridge, the blue of the holographic map turned purple as they sky above them reflected the orange glare of volcano riddled planet they were orbiting.

‘Sure,’ Namjoon replies dismissively. He can feel Sk’jin’s irritation without having to look at the Khol’isa. It had been building for a while now, but Namjoon didn’t want to address it. His main excuse being it wasn’t his duty, and he had other bigger priorities. But after the 6th sigh Namjoon looks up, one eyebrow raised.

Sk’jin raises one perfect eyebrow back.

Namjoon sighs in turn, and looks back down at his screen.

‘What are you doing?’ Sk’jin asks as little later as leans over the Table to look at the screen.

‘Setting up a new language reader,’ Namjoon replies. ‘This will provide Jimin with pictures- he’ll provide the name or word that describes that object and Lisai will store it, creating a new lexicon.
And of course, vice versa.’

‘So like- a dictionary? But just for his language?’ Sk’jin asks for clarification.

‘It’s a language we’ve never heard before- with very very little similarity to the ones that already exist in the GLA database,’ Namjoon can’t help the excitement leaking through into his voice. ‘The only similarity this language has is with the root language of K’arishkhali and that’s only by 1.4%. Be recording and archiving this language, we can not only establish a new lingual branch into the GLA Database, but also understand the foundations of speech and vocalization.’

‘…that sounds exciting.’

It was actually. But Namjoon doesn’t know how to really express this to him because he feels like the Khol’isa might make light of it.

‘Are you still mad about the hypnosis thing? It’s not hypnosis, you know that right?’ Namjoon tries.

‘Oh- I know it’s not hypnosis. I’m all too familiar with that, won’t you agree?’ Sk’jin asks dryly. ‘Regardless of what it’s called; reverence, awe, whatever, doesn’t stop him from being dangerous.’

‘You’re worried he might manipulate us?’ Namjoon asks, looking away from the screen.

‘I’m worried about what he might be influenced to believe, therefore using his abilities to convince others,’ Sk’jin replies, tapping across the display map.

‘There’s not much he can get influenced by, realistically speaking,’ Namjoon frowns a little. ‘Not to mention the language barrier-‘

‘You don’t need language to understand emotions Namjoon,’ Sk’jin rolls his eyes. ‘In fact, language often acts as a barrier- a filter of sorts, to mask intent and purpose. Lack of it might reveal more than he’s ready to accept or understand.’

Namjoon seems to be thinking hard for a while before he goes back to the screen saying, ‘That probably won’t matter- we’re taking him to Bhumi- I mean to…’ he struggles a bit but fails at saying the real name, ‘-to Bhumi. He’ll return to his planet, and there…maybe that way we can complete what needs to be completed faster.’

‘I sometimes can’t believe the lies you feed yourself.’ Sk’jin says, looking up at him blankly.

Namjoon sighs out wearily.

‘They are not lies- I am trying to think optimistically here-‘

‘Optimism won’t get you far Namjoon- you need to be practical and realistic here,’ Sk’jin says calmly. ‘You said so yourself- he was placed on this ship for a reason. They want us to take him there. Why are we still doing this, knowing now his history and his supposed mission?’

‘HE’S AWAKE!’

They both jump, Taeh’yung’s loud voice suddenly pitching. And sure enough, Yoongi’s health tab lights up on the side of Namjoon’s screen where he’d kept it activated all the time. Sk’jin leaves without preamble and Namjoon sighs. Taking a moment, he reads Yoongi’s charts. Not just for a Human, but for a standard Being, Yoongi’s regeneration speed was incredibly high. It was almost as high as Namjoon’s and Namjoon wasn’t even really all biological. In fact, based on Namjoon’s studies of Yoongi’s health-tab from earlier on the mission, he found that the Human shared a lot of traits in cellular factors with him. Which was why he had immediately thought of giving the Human his own medication. It was a gamble, but it had somewhat paid off.

Namjoon understands Sk’jin’s point of view. He really does.

Because that’s how he felt.

With a heavy heart, Namjoon makes his way down.

‘Is Yoongi awake?!’ Hoseok suddenly gasps.

‘Yeah?’ Namjoon is taken aback. ‘How do you know-’

‘Jimin!’

Hurrying down to the lowest Level, Namjoon is in time to watch Taeh’yung hug the Human, pressing their faces together.

‘Yoongi- hey,’ Namjoon is all he can say when the Human looks over at him, eyes slightly disoriented but very much awake.

‘Hi.’ Yoongi says blankly. No tone in his voice to indicate how he was feeling.

‘Uh- how are you feeling-’ Namjoon tries.

‘Wow, I really wonder how he’s feeling,’ Sk’jin cuts over. ‘You know, from nearly DYING!’

Namjoon has to take a literal moment to collect himself.

‘I don’t know,’ Yoongi replies and then follows it up with, ‘What is the situation of our mission?’

At this, Sk’jin sends him a glare- as though saying see? The mission is the only thing he’s thinking about- he’s not thinking for himself! Namjoon scowls back but before he can reply to Yoongi, Namjoon hears the door to the antechamber burst open. There’s an excited sound from Taeh’yung and Namjoon steps aside, somehow feeling a sense of anticipation for what was about to happen. He hears Hoseok’s warnings before he sees either of them.

‘-wait! Please be careful-!’

Jimin runs inwards, expression hopeful and bright, bringing with him sand and salt, slipping a little around the corner before he barrels in.

‘Yoongi!’

Jimin practically slides across the floors, hands lifted up to cup Yoongi’s face briefly before pulling him into an embrace.

Namjoon can’t help the smile on his face as he watches Yoongi stare about at them, his eyes the widest they’ve ever been. His jaw is a little slack, and his hands lifted up as though in defence before his chest. He looks so confused it’s somehow adorable. Even Sk’jin watches with a somewhat begrudging fondness.

Hoseok appears behind Namjoon. He’s panting, sweat pouring down his face.

‘He bolted for no reason- well, I guess I know why now,’ the Ngfy’widan pants before holding up a small packet, ‘Got the meds.’

Sk’jin takes the packet from Hoseok with a nod of thanks, ignoring Namjoon again.

Namjoon rolls his eyes, and shakes his head at Hoseok when he raises one sweaty eyebrow in inquiry.

Jimin is asking Yoongi questions, hands carefully touching his face. Yoongi is still stunned, eyes wide and unblinking as he gawks at Jimin. Taeh’yung starts providing translations though honestly, Namjoon is pretty sure it’s all going over Yoongi’s head.

And Namjoon is right.

Not only does it go over his head, Yoongi quite literally passes out.

His eyes roll behind his head and his body goes limp.

Jimin is gasping, fearful and worried as he calls Yoongi’s name a few time, gently shaking the Human. Taeh’yung is all over the Medical Bay, rambling in a bunch of languages. Namjoon hears Sk’jin sigh before he takes over the Medical Bed. When Namjoon makes sure Yoongi is all right, he regards Hoseok properly only to find the Ngfy’widan doubled over in suppressed laughter.

‘I’m glad you find the situation funny,’ Namjoon says with a short huff of a laugh. Hoseok just shakes his head, hand over mouth as he walks away. When Namjoon looks back inside the Bay and finds a half-hysterical Jimin being placated by Taeh’yung and his flailing limbs, while Sk’jin looks like he would rather warp straight into a blackhole than be there, Namjoon has to excuse himself to have a good laugh in the neighbouring Medical Bay.

Something was different.

‘Do you remember me?’

Jimin is hopeful as he sits close to Yoongi.

Hoseok is hopeful for Jimin. If Yoongi is able to remember, and he’s able to confirm that what Jimin is saying is true, not to mention information from a source that is hidden to them, they would definitely have a bigger head-start than the GLA. They would be able to make plans with more confidence.

‘What?’ Yoongi’s features register nothing but confusion.

Or not.

Jimin doesn’t look too disappointed or surprised. Hoseok has a feeling Taeh’yung might have told him the possibility of that happening.

‘Jimin,’ he repeats again, pointing at himself, and then in turn at Yoongi, ‘Yoongi.’

Hoseok feels like Jimin is trying to trigger some memory in Yoongi, reenacting something that might have taken place a long time ago. If what Jimin is saying is true.

They fill Yoongi in on what happened up until the moment he woke up. As usual he takes the news in all without limited facial expressions, looking at each of them in turn as they spoke. This seems to disturb Jimin the most. He’s watching Yoongi with a sad expression, features occasionally twitching as though controlling himself. Yoongi notices everything and with his usual blank gaze, studies Jimin as though wondering what was the matter. But amidst that blankness, Hoseok notices his ever present confusion. And not to mention something a little frenzied, like he was keeping something back with great will power.

Jimin leaves the Bay a little later, followed by Taeh’yung.

‘Is what he’s saying true?’ Yoongi asks after they’ve finished their summary of everything that’s happened.

‘It adds up to what we know happened,’ Namjoon replies. ‘We cannot be 100% certain.’

‘The sun is behind his eyes.’ is his next remark.

Everyone stares at Yoongi, before looking at each other in confusion.

‘Um yes. So, how are you feeling? Better?’ Sk’jin asks, walking around the Bed to pull up the tray of food he had brought for the Human.

Yoongi nods slowly in reply, looking down at his hands, flexing his fingers.

‘Yoongi look,’ Namjoon sighs out. ‘I’m–‘

‘Don’t say it,’ Yoongi jumps in unexpectedly, still not looking up from his hands. ‘I did what I wanted to do. By my choice, knowing exactly what I was getting myself into. It was necessary, so I did it. Do not apologize.’

Everyone in the room is stunned again.

Hoseok leaves the Bay eventually, followed by Sk’jin who carries the empty food tray.

‘So,’ Sk’jin says in ways of greeting. ‘Do you notice it too?’

‘It could be a fluke,’ Hoseok replies grimly, making his way up to the Bridge. They would leave within the hour so he was going to check over everything one more time to be safe.

‘With everything that’s going on?’ Sk’jin snorts. ‘No Hobi- this isn’t coincidence. And you know it.’

Hoseok grimaces at that before heading up the stairs to the Bridge.

Of course he noticed. It was so so subtle, and Hoseok thought he was imagining it. But he sees it in Sk’jin’s expression, as well as Namjoon. And most of all, in Taeh’yung.

Yoongi woke up different.
Yoongi blankly scans the screen in his hands, scanning over the headlines and news. Half of his mind is occupied with the news at hand, and the other half with the information he’s gained from listening to Jimin via Taeh’yung and the questions that came with it.

According to Hoseok, Amme herself had been there, arriving at Pompa after their messages had been sent. Amme had long declared herself stationed in Šerdesas, to remain there and be ready for any questions or inquiries the GLA would have for her. Her coming to Pompa meant something. That what they had uncovered had the potential to trigger something huge. To catalyze a reaction they could not foresee.

Not to mention the fact that Amme had been there, to a location where Yoongi himself had been to. Had Amme known him before this? Had Zhoumi known of him? Had they singled him out? Orchestrated this entire “wakening” for this purpose?

What of himself did he know anymore?

Would he ever be able to remember, if what Jimin says is true?

Was his name Yoongi all along?

But other than these main thoughts- something small tries to wiggle its way up.

His thoughts feel different- in what way, Yoongi can’t explain. Because he doesn’t have the words for it either. His responses, his actions, seemed to come from his without second thought. A natural reflex- and only after he speaks or acts or sees or feels, he realizes it.

The way he replied to Namjoon’s attempt at apology. The way he couldn’t understand why his body felt so strange. The way his body seemed angled almost differently.

But most of all, the way he wanted to take Jimin and immediately hide him. It made no sense to him, now that we thought about it.

His thoughts are interrupted by movement at the doorway. They had hit warp a few moments ago, so Yoongi guesses they were now able to move. Most of them had announced they would try and sleep and the response from Taeh’yung had been a snore. It almost made Yoongi laugh. But he caught himself, and wondered why that would have made him laugh.

Jimin stands by the door, in his hands the screen Namjoon had given him to speak into to record and archive his language with added pictures so that everyone could better their communications.

‘Yoongi?’

Yoongi wonders if he should nod, gesture for him to enter, indicate towards the stool near the foot of his bed, or respond verbally. Whatever that thing was that was making him be different, was apparently not a permanent thing. But Jimin makes up his mind for him and walks up to him, forgoing the stool and instead sitting on the bed so that he could face Yoongi better.

They sit in silence together for a while. Yoongi somehow can’t face Jimin like this alone, and that unknown sensation comes back again. Making the pit of his stomach churn and clench, his chest constricting.

Jimin carefully takes his hands, unclenching his fists and then placing them over his own face as though telling Yoongi it was okay; that he could touch him too. Or at least that’s what Yoongi thinks- he could be reading Jimin’s actions wrong. He didn’t have enough experience- body language and motion, yes. But such simple and subtle gestures are lost on him. He ignores the small sudden thought in his mind telling him that he read Jimin correctly.

Unsure what to do, Yoongi’s hands remain rather stiffly over Jimin’s face.

Jimin smiles encouragingly, letting go of his hand before reaching up to draw Yoongi’s face closer into his hands. Yoongi mimics Jimin’s motions and touch.

His cheeks are soft and warm, as though the sun had just warmed it over. His eyelashes are long and a dark grey. The freckles on his skin vary in size and colour but concentrate over on the high-points of his face. Yoongi momentarily wonders if Jimin is uncomfortable with having his face held like this. According to what he’s read in Appropriate Behavior and Manners for the Distinguished Being of the Modern Universe touching Being’s faces was considered invasive and classified as a form of assault.

But Jimin doesn’t seem uncomfortable by it. In fact, he seems used to it. Was this a cultural trait from his home-planet? Was this how they greeted each other? How they introduced each other? Yoongi has heard of certain cultures that were difficult to adapt to across the Universe- such as that of the Anning, who greeted each other with kisses on the mouth, regardless of gender, age, status, and position.

Jimin stares right back at Yoongi, his oddly glowing eyes looking straight at him unabashedly and seeing more than what Yoongi had to offer. He allows Yoongi to feel his arms, touch his neck, study his feet. He closes his eyes, apparently enjoying the feeling of having fingers run through his hair. Yoongi carefully brushes through his hair, awed by the colour and light each strand seemed to exude. Out of water, his hair is wavy and longer, but the colour somehow richer and even more confusing. Yoongi can’t tell if it’s gold or silver.

Jimin has lowered his hands already, but Yoongi is stuck.

There was something different. Something entirely unexplainable and out of Time, but this Being’s presence seemed to him like the rising of the sun. Something he’d been waiting for, something he knew would come, something so known, and routine. Something ancient and timeless, but at the same time entirely new and beautiful.
‘Yoongi,’ Jimin repeats again, and then points at himself, ‘Jimin.’

This clearly meant something. But Yoongi just can’t figure it out.

Who was he to Jimin? Who was Jimin to him?

‘I’m sorry I don’t remember you,’ he says despite knowing full well Jimin doesn’t understand him.

Jimin’s hands move. He feels the texture of Yoongi’s skin; carefully thumbing over the soft skin under his eyes. He fingers his hair, as though checking the texture. He even strokes his eyebrows gently and then his own, as though comparing them. He even peers curiously into Yoongi’s mouth, counting his teeth it would seem. His fingers follow the curve of Yoongi’s ears; he touches his own ear as well, and like with his eyebrows, seemingly comparing them. His fingers comb through his hair, feeling his scalp and frowning a little at the bumps he comes across- old scars and surgery wounds. Yoongi’s eyes close almost automatically, leaning into the gentle touch. He thinks he hears a soft sound, as though Jimin was smiling. When he does open his eyes, he finds that he was in fact smiling.

He continues to smile before he takes Yoongi’s hands in his, pushing up the sleeves and looking over healed over and old scars, lesions on his skin.

He asks him something, but Yoongi has no hope in understanding what he has to say.

‘I don’t understand,’ Yoongi whispers.

Jimin blinks a few times, clearly deep in thought.

‘Taeh’yung?’ Jimin says, and then rolls his hands forward. ‘Nak tuk?’

‘…Taeh’yung, tomorrow?’ Yoongi tries, also gesturing forward.

Jimin nods slowly, as though still unsure if Yoongi got his meaning. Then he goes into miming. He mimes falling asleep, and then waking up- then he does the rolling motion with his hand, looking at Yoongi hopefully.

Yoongi nods, giving him a thumbs up in hopes that he too could convey that he understood (hopefully) what Jimin was saying.

Jimin stares at his hand for a moment, then replicates the thumbs up as well.

They stare blankly at each other, Yoongi is unsure what to do. Should he say something additional? Jimin is just looking at him- he’s not expectant, not waiting for Yoongi to say something. He was just looking.

Yoongi really wants to call Taeh’yung even though the Zhak’gri was asleep, if only to understand what Jimin means by all this looking. But before he can do it, Jimin leans in close and hugs him again.

Yoongi might be wrong, but he feels as though Jimin might be trying to convey something to him. But before he can inquire via mime, Jimin pulls away, hands reaching up to cup his face again. He leans in close and Yoongi automatically closes his eyes at the proximity.

Jimin kisses both of his lids.

Yoongi opens his eyes when he feels Jimin’s hands slide away from his face. Jimin is looking at him again, his expression unreadable. Yoongi suddenly feels exhausted.

‘Mu tui,’ he says quietly.

Yoongi’s eyes immediately close and all he can see is sunlight.

Chapter End Notes

(Author’s Notes)

I love Uhm Jung Hwa’s new song so much. And I found out that Suran composed the song!! Go queens!!

Well.
Net neutrality
Hahahaha
sighs heavily

But we can still do things. We can still continue to sign up petitions, email and post at the people responsible for this.

Speaking of whom
WOW I FUCKING HATE THEIR FACES SO MUCH JESUS FUCKING CHRIST IT MAKES ME SO ANGRY. WHY AM I NOT SURPRISED THAT THE VOTE WAS 3-2 AND THOSE WHO VOTED TO END NET NEUTRALITY WERE ALL MEN?? THE WOMEN VOTED NO OMFG ISN’T THIS ALREADY CLEAR THAT WOMEN SHOULD BE TAKING OVER WTAF

ALSO FUCK YOU AJIT PAI- MY HALF-INDIAN BLOOD IS SCREAMING AT YOUR ASS . DON’T FUCKING MOCK US BY MAKING STUPID ASS VIDEOS AND TRYING TO BE RELEVANT. YOU’RE NOT ASS-FACE, YOU’RE MOCKING US AND WE KNOW IT. SO TAKE THAT STUPID REESE’S CUP AND SHOVE IT UP YOUR ASS

I’m sorry to my readers im really upset about this.

BUT WHAT DO YOU MEAN THIS WON’T EFFECT OUR EDUCATION. ARE Y OU FUCKING KIDDING ME? ARE YOU REALLY THIS STUPID?
Okay im done for real now.
I hope you all liked this chapter!!! See you next week!!!
“Serendipity” [noun]: an unsought, unintended, and/or unexpected, but fortunate, discovery.

Chapter Notes

Embraces you loosely
I wonder what dream it is
A thousand moons
Another river above the sky
I made it.

Be at peace Jonghyun

See the end of the chapter for more notes

This chapter contains several OC deaths, and this isn’t a spoiler because we knew from the previous chapter that in Jimin’s character’s past, Yoongi had died, and this chapter contains that scene. If you don’t want to read that part, it begins after the double asterisk marks. Then you can scroll till you see the double asterisk marks again. If you don’t want to read this chapter, then that’s fine too, the first section of this chapter is safe, and after the first asterisk you can just discontinue reading until the next chapter, because it’s not exactly what you already don’t know in terms of what happens. This is a detailed account of what happened in Jimin’s past as he explained in the previous chapter.
Jimin hurries down the hallway.

Normally he would pause to talk to the gardeners, asking them on the conditions of the crops on the fields, and if the greenhouses were in good condition. And then he would join them as well, although he was always partial to the pasture of soft petal yellow flowers. They were grown there for his benefit and no one blamed him if he was partial towards it. But he is barely able to spare a smile as he sprints down the smooth sandstone floors. He picks up his speed until he comes to the thick wall of white linen curtains, drawn back with ropes of threaded reeds.

‘Jimin!’

His sister, the Yelibi Inati, is already standing at the council table. The Great Council were gathering there as well, all dressed haphazardly like Jimin, having rushed here so early in the morning. There were a total of 22 members in the Great Council. Two representations of their planets all gathered at the heart of their System, Ma’ikelawî, to discuss and finalize any decisions that needed to be made.

Jimin’s older sister was born and anointed the Yelibi Inati, otherwise known as the Heart of the Menigišiti. Those born as the Yelibi Inati were marked at birth, with a glowing sigil on their forehead- a single ring of light to show that their heart was bound to that of the System.

Those born as the Yelibi Inati were random, and no prediction could be made of where they would be born next. However, what was known, for certainty, was that never in their long history, did the Yelibi Inati and the Yemenifesi Ch’inin’eti come from the same planet at the same time. The Yemenifesi Ch’inin’eti, otherwise known as the Fate of the Menigišiti, were born to unite the planets together, ruled under the Heart.

But when Jimin was born, opening his eyes to show dark eyes, ringed with light like a solar eclipse, the siblings changed the course of history. They were beloved and respected, and Jimin and his sister did their utmost to make sure they were deserving of such trust, guiding their united people together hand in hand for the past 138 years.

‘Tsirin! What’s happened?’ Jimin asks immediately, reaching out for his sister’s hands.

‘We have received an emergency call, from the Panel members,’ Tsirin explains. ‘They have sent a relief platoon, to “help” us with our situation.’

‘What?! What emergency?’ Jimin is bewildered, looking over at the other Council members who were also equally confused.
‘There is none. We sent no such message to the Panel,’ Tsirin confirms and adds, ‘But a message was sent nonetheless.’

Jimin frowns—that made no sense, ‘Has the Akramanan Council sent word?’

‘The message was not sent from Akramana,’ Tsirin says, still maintaining her calm. ‘The message was sent from Megibīya.’

She walks over to the table, activating the map of their System and making it large for clarity. The rest of the Council find their seats and are at the ready, rapt with attention.

‘But I received no such news,’ the representative of Megibīya is thoroughly bewildered, checking his screen for any message or notice on the planet he represented on the Great Council.

‘The Panel are there? But that’s not possible, they were only made aware of Akramana,’ the representative of Akramana, the Akramana Wenedi, asks with confusion. The Akramanan had obviously received no such information from his planet or the Council he was part of. It was in his planet, one of the outer-most within the system, that hosted the Panel when they signed the treaty with the GLA. It was one of the few gateways into the System, but it was well hidden, and the Panel were told it was the only gateway in.

‘Is there a possibility that there was a fault in the Transmitter?’ the Gorebēti Wenedi asks the Akramanan.

They were all sister-planets, and despite being the children of such close planets, the 11 species of Menigišiti were diverse and varying. Jimin always considered his own species incredibly simple and dull. Especially compared to those of Be’iji who were tall and elegant, six-armed, and their skin the colour of young saplings. The Be’iji Wenedi stand taller than all of them, peering into the map, their moss-green eyes scanning the broken message transcript. They were unique where they could read sound waves, rather than hear them. Jimin often wanted to ask how sound waves looked like, but had always stopped himself. Because there could be no fundamental explanation they could give him that he would be able to understand. Because if they asked him what his vision was like, Jimin would also have no explanation. How was he to explain the dimensions of his sight, when those dimensions did not exist in the Bei’iji’s sensory world? But T’ati, one of the two Wenedi, had laughed and tried her best to explain to Jimin. As though sensing his gaze, she sends him a gentle smile which Jimin mirrors though he knows she wouldn’t be able to actually see it how he saw smiles.

She probably saw the sound waves of his smile, the way they saw the sound waves of everything around them.

‘None- there cannot be any fault,’ the Akramanan replies immediately. ‘We designed it, we created it. There is no possibility.’

The Akramanan were skilled beyond words in technology and innovative mechanism. It was due to their ingenuity that they were able to harvest and direct their System’s special magnetism and allowed them to hide from the rest of the Universe.

‘What did the message say?’

‘The Panel sent this,’ Tsirin pulls up the message for all of them to see. ‘They sent it directly to me, and not to the Council. This worries me.’

Before Jimin can ask what she meant, the message pops up, a video that’s static and blurred, the audio grainy and filled with background noise. It was the Yisheng Ndica, who had been able to understand them, a gift, no doubt, from their abilities as a Yisheng. Yishengs were called S’wezete in Menigišiti. But none had been born for over a millennia.

‘I hope you can receive this message,’ the Yisheng Ndica declares, looking unsure and worried. ‘We received a strange signal from a planet close to your System, from a planet the GLA calls Bhumi. We’re not sure if this is part of your extended System, but reports of great destruction, and a reported “cleansing” has taken place there. We have already sent out our forces to observe the situation. This is the message sent, and I hope you can clarify this for us. If this is simply my over-thinking, please correct me. If not, I am making my way to Akramana now, and we can discuss what to do.’

Tsirin immediately plays the message sent.

It’s incredibly fragmented and filled with excessive noise. However, words can be made out, and the Megibīya Wenedi both pale, their black eyes widening. They were tall and hulking, their skin texture rough and almost stone like even in colour. Their eyes were jet black, with a sort of yellow-ochre star shaped iris at the center.

‘-ing. We are leaving-…hips have left with the women and childr-…tayed behind to divert-…oming-…rong and many I cannot expla-…T’S HERE. THEY’RE HERE. WE NEED TO LEA-…ything is red-…it is evil-…’

The message breaks off to play another section. This one a different voice.

‘-just a few of us have escaped. We beg of you. Please help us-…hips flying out but are being hunted-…ping to the closest system we can find- …is evil. They are evil- … hat is it. It came and made the sky red-…everything was bleeding- nnot escape-‘ the message falls silent for almost 10 whole seconds before there’s a burst of static and then suddenly the message is crisp clean and clear: ‘-it appeared out of nowhere. They knew our home. They were able to overcome our defenses. My Heart, they are here to bleed us dry.’

An extraordinary silence falls over the room.

‘Please allow us to leave and return to our planet,’ the female Megibīyan exclaims at once, her voice shaking. ‘The gateway is closed- there must have been some issue, I don’t know- please allow me and Prat’nna to return and see what we can do!’

‘We need to go there at once,’ Jimin agrees at once. ‘If we can open the gateway from here and-‘

‘No wait-‘ the Akramanan Wenedi calls, looking troubled. ‘What if this is a trap?’

The entire Council falls into stunned silence.

‘By the GLA,’ the Akramanan Wenedi declares. ‘What if this is all a ploy- that they have, some way, found out that there are more gateways- Megibīya is not well hidden, and by entering our System the first time during the Treaty, they would be able to override many of our security measures. What if they’re attacking Megibīya, and are trying to trick us into breaking the Treaty, to sign with the GLA?’

There is a pregnant pause in air, heavy with doubt and suspicion.

‘But the Treaty-.’
‘How do we know they will abide to it? They are the most powerful organization across the Universe- they have joined and united countless Systems and Galaxies together- it cannot all be done in peace.’

‘There is a possibility that this is a trap,’ Tsirin agrees. ‘But that cannot be fake. It is not.’

‘I can confirm Tsirin’s statement,’ the Be’iji confirms. ‘I heard no alteration, no temperance, and no lie in the Yisheng Ndica’s words. This is all true. If they spoke out of concealment, I would hear it.’

‘If Megibiya is truly in danger, we would have known,’ the Megibiyan Wenedi declare though they look doubtful.

‘But there has been a recent report, of great changes in the tides of space beyond our borders,’ another Council reports. ‘It is possible that these fluctuations in radiation has potentially scrambled our connection, as well as potentially exposing the gateway to the outside world.’

Jimin shudders at that, worry filling him.

‘Get me a full detailed report on that,’ Tsirin nods at the Council member. ‘But we must move quickly. If the Megibiyan are already evacuating then we must take action immediately.’

Tsirin looks over at the Wenedi from Megibiya, both of whom were stunned, with the beginnings of fear quickly settling into their features.

‘I will leave with you and go to Megibiya,’ she declares. ‘We will safeguard our people, and bring them back here-‘

Jimin shakes his head.

‘This is not a good idea,’ he argues.

‘I know it’s not,’ his sister replies. ‘But I have to do this-‘

‘-but why you? Tsirin- you’re the Mother. You are the heart of our people, the Yelibi Inati of our planet, of our system. If you go, and this is more than what we can handle, then you will be-‘

‘-but you will be here. If all is amiss, and I fall, you will be there to take up my place. But if you fall- then I cannot lead, how can I lead without you by my side?’ Tsirin takes his hands in hers, placing them over her face before placing her hands on his face. ‘I am the Mother, yet you are our Fate. If there is anyone who could shape the course of our planet, of our system, then it is you. You must be kept safe.’

‘What of our people? If we both leave-‘

‘We do this for our people, we do this for our home. For the homes of the Megibiya.’

‘Yelibi Inati, I must agree with Jimin,’ the Megibiyan speaks up. ‘If there is a problem, then who better to counter a massive force than the Yemenifes Ch’inik’eti? My Heart, you must go to Akramana instead.’

‘And if this is indeed a trap, to lure you to Megibiya, then their plans will be at risk,’ the Akramanan declares. ‘We will accompany you to Akramana instead- Jimin is more than capable of handling any possible trick the GLA might have against you- I implore you, they spoke most to you during the Panel, Jimin was barely present- if they try to make a plan, it would be made against ‘Please sister. You know he is right,’ Jimin counters as calmly as he can.

It was the responsibility of the Yemenifesi Ch’inik’eti to unite the planets. But it was also their responsibility to bring safety to the System. It was in their given ability to do so. They were born for this purpose.

‘Please.’ Jimin adds one more time.

Tsirin pauses, looking over at each Council member one by one before she holds Jimin’s determined gaze with trouble but with hints of understanding.

‘You are right.’ Tsirin declares. ‘Forgive me, I spoke out of selfishness.’

There are smiles on the faces of the Council and Jimin squeezes her hand.

‘Who would you like to take with you?’ she asks.

‘Only my Guards. As well as Megibīya Wenedi, and Be’iji Wenedi.’ Jimin declares at once. ‘I do not wish to take our forces- take them with you instead, and position them at the gateways. We will travel to Megibīya and analyze the situation. My ship will be enough for any rescue mission.’

‘The Akramanan Science and Security Division will accompany you,’ the Akramanan Wenedi states. ‘If there is an issue with the gateway, they can figure it out.’

Jimin nods in agreement.

‘The Wenedi will depart for their planets, and unite once more in their Units to secure the gateway you are responsible for.’ Tsirin orders. ‘Report each and every occurrence, no matter how obscure, to the Council.’

The System of Menigišiti is a complex one. Small, but complex.

Eleven distinctly unique planets call this System their home and orbit a small but powerful sun they call Yino. They were closely linked, the other planet clearly visible from the next. Only two of their planets had moons though both were uninhabitable. But it was this close distance that enabled them to unify. The planets pass so close to one another that gravitational interactions are significant, and their orbital periods are nearly resonant. They were all roughly the same size and had almost equal distance between each planet. Except for Megibīya and Akramana which orbited at a much further range, causing both planets to have longer years and colder surfaces. Once every 32 years, their planets would all align, creating a strong orbital resonance between all 11, a passageway of sorts. This was what lead to the unification of the System, and the birth of the first Yemenifesi Ch’inik’eti.

This unity was reflected in the eyes of those born with the title. They had abilities that enabled them to guide, lead, and bring peace during periods of strife and woe. And for over 20 millenniums, the Yemenifesi Ch’ink’eti alongside the Yelibi Inati, united the planets together in peace and harmony, hiding away from the rest of the Universe.

The naturally occurring magnetic displacement surrounding their tight-knitted planets created a natural and strong shield of sort, blocking all radio signals as well as most frequencies. This rendered the System of Menigişiti nearly invisible to the rest of the Universe. However, similar to the tidal fluctuations caused by orbital resonance, the movement of the planets within Menigişiti sometimes caused a rift to open in their space border, exposing the System out to the Universe.

This issue was fixed by the Akramana, who were the second closest to this naturally occurring shield and could observe and experiment upon it. They were able to create massive systematic battery-like cell system placed all over the System to harness and store the magnetic waves. Then it is used in areas where the rifts were going to open. The Akramana were in charge of watching these cells from within the System. And the Megibiya watched the cells from outside this reinforced border.

It wasn’t as though the planets of Menigişiti were ignorant of the existence of everything else outside their borders. They were all too aware, and as a result, chose not to include themselves or partake in it. They kept to each other; learning, expanding, and building.

Megibiya was a tidal-locked planet, like 3 other planets in their System. Meaning one side was always facing the sun without any rotation in its natural axis. This was one of its natural defenses, as potential inhabitants or dwellers would be dissuaded to attempt to live on the planet due to its extreme polar conditions. However, the people of Megibiya lived in the twilight zone, at a permanent sunrise, or a permanent sunset.

Jimin himself has been there many times. And he’s always enjoyed travelling around the center longitude of the planet, watching the sky turn from soft gold to dusty rose. It was a beautiful planet, ringed with light along its longitude. The side exposed to the rays of the sun was bright, almost like gold. There was no actual gold, just burnt and dried out desert, the sand in a permanent state of liquefied glass, reflecting light back into the System.

But to Jimin’s horror, this light glows a strange red.

‘Something is horribly wrong,’ the Megibiya Wenedi, Yyna, shakes her head. Her partner, Prat’tna, is grim and Jimin can sense anger and fear coming from him.

They hadn’t been able to contact the planet, as though they were being blocked out of reaching the planet. They were still far away, but were able to get a visual read on the planet. And what they were able to see terrified them. Jimin has a live frequency sent out to the Council on the whole time.

‘It’s as though the planet is on fire.’

Jimin nods in agreement. He turns his gaze towards his most trusted Guard, Nineti.

Jimin didn’t need guards, it was a formality he couldn’t argue. Because while it was made so that the guards would protect Jimin, they were there to make sure he didn’t over exert himself, or somehow use his abilities in a way that could be considered biased. They were his guardians, advisors, and best friends. He grew up with most of them, while some were older. They studied, trained, and were raised in the same place together. While their studies were based more on military strategy, defence, and tactical operation, they were schooled the same.
There were 6 all together, and wherever Jimin went, they went with him.

While Tsirin was his blood-sister, he felt the same kinship with them as he did with her.

‘What is your advice?’ Jimin asks.

‘Send a patrolling unit,’ Nineti declares at once. ‘Keep a safe distance, scan the area to make sure it’s secure, and then only approach. We cannot conduct a rescue mission if we are under attack.’

‘How can we know if they are indeed under attack,’ Dehin, his other Guard, asks from the Mast.

‘Though Megibīya is a tidal-locked planet, it still rotates on its axis at a very slow pace. Perhaps it is a planetary disturbance?’

‘No it is not,’ Yyna counters immediately. ‘There are different messages sent out for such situations. As well as monitors to trigger any such changes to notify not only Megibīya but the Council as well.’

‘I will lead a small unit from the gateway cells,’ Jimin declares. ‘We will fly off the radar, completely invisible. When we are sure we are secure, then you can come in.’

Jimin can already tell that Dehin and Nineti were inclined to argue but he counters their expression with his own. His sister often joked that he didn’t need words to communicate with his Guards, that a single expression could speak whole sentences. They both nod, though clearly displeased, and move out of the Mast to prepare the smaller, and faster ship.

‘Any frequency detected?’ Jimin asks to no one in particular.

‘None, we can report nothing. There is nothing out there. Not a single radio single, not a single radioactive wave- it’s just empty.’ The Akramanan Wenedi reports back immediately.

‘How close are we to the first border?’

‘10 more minutes,’ Yyna replies at once. ‘I have the repairs ship at the ready.’

‘Good. Can I speak to you for a moment?’ Jimin asks, nodding towards the doorway of the Mast. The Akramanan nods, standing up from her seat. Jimin leads her close to the stairs before turning to address her.

‘I don’t think any of us here think this is simply an issue with radioactive waves or some weather problem,’ Jimin says in a quiet voice as the Akramanan nods in agreement. ‘If there is indeed an issue with the cells powering the gateway, please fix it. Fix it, and if I cannot control the situation in Megibīya, then shut it down, and block all other gateways. Whatever this is, the GLA, some foreign invasion, it is clearly here for war. And we will not risk the safety of our home.’

The Akramanan holds Jimin’s gaze for a long while, disturbed and moved.

‘I understand,’ she nods slowly. ‘But I do not think the rest of the ship will agree.’

‘Which is why I must entrust you with this,’ Jimin pleads quietly. ‘When I heard that message- the description, the words they used. That, and the fact that the GLA were the ones who sent us this message- I cannot help but imagine the worst.’

The Akramanan Wenedi nods slowly, before she says, ‘Perhaps it will simply be a matter of radiation spikes.’
Jimin had imagined the worst.

But this transcended anything he could have imagined.

The planet was glowing red. The clouds that normally covered its surface, creating another layer of protection for the planet against possible mercenaries, were bright red. And even from this distance, Jimin can see bright forks of magenta lacing through the clouds. Unnatural and unreal-the serene grey and gold planet of Megibīya was covered in a blanket of red.

There is a field of broken debris around the planet, massive chunks of familiar technology and mechanics. And Jimin doesn’t need to concentrate to feel death bearing down upon them the closer they got.

But the closer they flew in, avoiding the remains of the Megibīyan naval-fleet, a massive moon rises beyond the curve of Megibīya, burning bright red as though inflamed.

It was no moon.

A ship so massive it appeared before them as though it were a moon, a deep red in colour, and carrying death.

Surrounding it was a strange hazy cluster, and upon closer and frightening inspection, revealed smaller ships, innumerable in their count, flocking back to the mothership.

And as though waiting for them, as though expecting them, they are found.

Jimin doesn’t understand how they are found- how they’re discovered. But they are.

And that was when Jimin knew, that they would have no chance of return, without bringing back this red evil with them.

They were too late. The message delivered to them had been old. Perhaps by weeks. Maybe even an entire month. Remnants of GLA ships could also be seen. Jimin sends this report back, wondering when and if the report would be received.

The haze of ships rocket towards them, and it was as though the massive mothership was crushing them with its gaze. Jimin felt sick to his stomach, his body going numb. He’s numbly aware of the way the Be’iji Wenedi collapses, hands clenched over her head, screaming without voice at the pain. He’s numbly aware of how his Guards rush, pulling up defenses as best as they could.

‘Take us to Megibīya,’ Jimin orders them, his voice surprisingly stable. ‘We will distract them, and allow the others to close the gateway permanently.’

No one hesitates- no one doubts Jimin’s words for a second. Even though they all knew that they were headed to their doom.

Because with just one look, with just one glimpse, Jimin knew, no amount of effort, would save the lives of his people.
‘Yyna. Destroy the cells.’

It is after 3 weeks of crash-landing through the churning atmosphere of Megibīya that they finally reach the twilight zone. They had crash-landed on the dark side of the planet- which was lucky to an extent as they had no need to wade through an ocean of liquid glass. They did, however, have to survive a frozen terrain.

It was a nightmare.

The landscape was dark and frozen, the only light that shone down was from the red clouds above. And that cast only a garish red glare over the solid ice planes. Strange creatures lived here, but none approached them, because no living creature could approach Jimin awake. He slept little.

And it wasn’t as though he could sleep.

The gateway had been closed. That much was for sure.

He could no longer hear the resonance of his home. It was blank.

Empty.

He could see the wear growing on his Guards. There were only 9 of them remaining.

The Be’iji Wenedi succumbed to their pain, their forms curling in.

They could not lay them to rest in the way of their tradition. They make do by covering their bodies with whatever they could spare and keeping them in the small backroom of the ship. The Megibiyan lead the way, their built far better suited for the harsh climates and rough environment.

And added to all of this, Jimin could sense a corrosion. Slow but obvious, gnawing at the souls of those around him.

It is however, by the edge of the end of the frozen climate, when a sudden warm breeze erupts around them, that Dehin falls.

Jimin holds him to his chest, telling his friend that he didn’t need to apologize. Dehin tells him that there was no need for him to apologize either.

And Jimin doesn’t apologize 3 times more in the following month. No matter how much the words want to spill from his mouth. Instead he listens for their final breath, their final word, and he captures it in his hand, in his mind, in his heart.

In his soul. Whatever was left of it.

And he holds it close to his heart, never letting go.
The first time Jimin saw them was when they broke through into the twilight zone. They stood high above on a craggy Cliffside, watching them, observing them. Whatever they were, were definitely nowhere similar to any Being Jimin could recognize.

They were cloaked in a shade of red that seemed to bleed into the air around them- and if you stared too long, it was as though they multiplied within this colour. Jimin’s blood runs cold at the sight of them.

He could sense no resonance in them- he could feel no pulse of life, no extension of any essence that could be considered a life-form. Even the Androids that accompanied the Panel had a faint form of life in their bionic bodies.

They came at random.

And every time they did. Jimin was forced to say goodbye.

Jimin felt drained. His body was still functioning- but it was as though his spirit was falling apart. As though it was seeping off of him into the red that was staining everything on the planet.

It was as though they could tell. That they knew Jimin was who he was.

The storm clouds above continued to boil and rage, and it’s under this light they discover broken cities and homes.

Destruction was minimum almost- only certain areas damaged. Almost as though to showcase their immense power.

And powerful they were.

Craters carve impossibly deep holes in the center of the cities, the wind howling as debris falls in continuously into them.

But what frightens Jimin the most, is how empty it is.

Not a single voice, a cry, a groan. No sound of insects, animals, any other creature.

Jimin feels empty by now.

This place was barren of living forms. Jimin felt as though his breath was too loud. And judging by how the others appeared, they seemed to feel the same way too. And out here, where the cities stood, they felt too exposed.

Paranoia took over them, and every single corner, every single window, every single alleyway, was occupied by them. One night, when they take shelter inside an empty building, high above the ground, Jimin wakes for no reason only to find every single window facing him has a hooded face staring straight at him.

His body felt empty, making way for fear and darkness.

They attempt to look for hiding spots that the Megibīyan could have possibly sought or created. They check even the sewers but find nothing.

No bodies, no remains.

Just emptiness.
'We need to return to the forest,' Nineti says quietly after one night. His chiseled face ashen and pale. Jimin notices that Yyna is no longer with them. ‘I think they get confused when we’re in the forest.’

They couldn’t confirm it. But they cling to the theory.

So they don’t stop and make for the closest hill. And while they’re moving out of the city, quickly passing under a fallen building, they are met, head on, with the Red Evil.

Jimin had not coined that term- rather it had been Prat’tna after he first laid eyes on them. And it stuck.

5 of them stood at the end of the perfectly intact elevated highway. Nineti is quick to cover him, his weapons raised. But Jimin stops him.

Focusing with all his heart and soul, Jimin steps forward.

‘Who are you?’ he asks.

Any Living Being who would hear this would simply feel his voice deep in their soul. They would hear no actual words- no actual sound. Simply an urgency, a need, to follow that feeling and return its call.

But the Red Evil was no Living Being.

They remain unmoving, disproportionately tall and thin. Yet their presence is overwhelming and Jimin wants to run and hide. But he won’t. He can’t.

If he can understand them. If he can somehow just reach to them-

Their movement is unnatural- their movements don’t make sense in this dimension. They seem to expand even more in height, their faces revealed as their robes give. Blank formless faces, with the smallest tear for a mouth, and hollowed sockets where eyes should be.

Jimin doesn’t know if what he can hear is actually their voice- or if he was glimpsing into a realm unknown to him.

One of a darkness so corporeal, it was breathing and pulsing- and it had its own life, its own form.

Its own mind.

Jimin is only vaguely aware of shouts- the sound of weapons being fired, and a great ominous straining sound. But he can’t move. He’s paralyzed.

The Red Evil looms over him, and all Jimin can see is darkness. His nostrils, throat, stomach, are instantly overwhelmed with the sweet rotting stench of something long dead and decayed.

It’s hand wraps around his neck and -panse of darkness and pain pain pain pain PAIN PAIN PAIN PAIN PAI-

When Jimin wakes up, he’s slung over someone’s back.

Jimin knows his breaths.

‘Nineti-‘ Jimin tries to speak but he’s urgently and quietly shushed. Jimin is suddenly extremely awake- his senses peaking to an almost painful level as he tries to scope his surroundings. He can sense how worn and rough his friend’s soul is, death corroding his very essence.

They were in a forest- that much was obvious. It was raining as well, which overwhelms Jimin’s senses for a moment.

He blacks out again, the last thought in his mind being where the others were.

When he comes back, Jimin finds himself incredibly alone. He’s under a cliff face, to protect him from the strange torrent of rain that comes and goes without warning.

Nineti doesn’t come back.

Jimin can’t keep track of time here.

Had it been a month? A year? He doesn’t remember. He barely scrapes by, being unable to create a fire without potentially giving himself away, he moves closer to the sunrise zone. It’s warmer here and he can sleep better at night. It’s incredibly quiet, so Jimin finds a waterfall, hiding himself in a rocky alcove.

He finds no animals, no insects, but vegetation there was plenty.

He sometimes caught glimpses of ships- red, cruel, carrying death. And they flew past. Sometimes they hovered, lingered. Sometimes the sky wasn’t tinted red, though it still remained heavily cloudy and thunder cracked through the air. Sometimes it almost looked normal. But Jimin hid, covering his presence in the thicket of life that grew around him. Perhaps Nineti had been right. Perhaps they could not detect them amidst this abundance of life. But this wasn’t going to last long.

Life existed on a balance. And without animals or insects, this great vast green expanse would die too.

Sometimes, but barely, the sun shone down.

Distant and small- but Jimin could still feel its rays on his skin. He would soak it all up- as much as he could. He was looking upon the same sun his sister was looking at. The same sun he was born under. The same sun that shone behind his eyes.

And it’s during one of these rare occasions, when the sky is a normal colour, and the sun is out for a brief amount of time, that Jimin catches sight of a ship flying through the temporarily still sky. Jimin’s heart leaps to his throat.

That was a GLA ship.

It’s flying, but with great difficulty. With what equipment Jimin had left, he could focus his vision and spots that one of the wings on the flying ship is entirely broken, smoking profusely. Whoever was flying that was an exceptional pilot. It doesn’t crash, but that’s just barely. It lands far past Jimin’s hideout location. Much further down the waterfall and the cliffs.
Weighing the odds in his mind, Jimin makes his decision and makes his move.

It takes him, by his own calculation based on the subtle transformation of the plants around him, 6 days to find the GLA ship that has crashed. The ship was clearly beyond repair – Jimin wonders why they would just leave it so. Did they not feel as though they could repair it? Or was it perhaps they were planning on coming back here? Jimin glances up at the sky. It was always too cloudy for him to see past the thick stormy veil. Did they have another ship waiting for them?

Jimin quietly enters the ship- a small one made only for transportation it would seem. There were no living quarters- just a long seated galley connected to an open cockpit. Jimin walks up towards the cockpit and tries to read the labels. He was unfamiliar with this language so he’s lost in attempting to understand.

Had he been too late? Had the Red Evil already approached them? Taken them all one by one?

A shiver runs up his back and Jimin rushes out. His eyes scan the city line and he focuses his entire being, simply feeling.

The city is empty. A graveyard of hollow remains- homes robbed of their occupants.

Panting and feeling drained from not having exerted himself in so long, Jimin puts his back to the city and concentrates on the forest ahead.

It’s faint. But it’s there.

He can feel their life, pulsing deep within the forest. And it’s a sensation that he feels almost starved of. The presence of other living beings around him. Not just quietness and fear.

He follows their presence like a compass needle, guiding him in the right direction.

He’s exhausted, but Jimin doesn’t stop. He doesn’t falter. He takes short breaks, digging through the soil to find tubers and through shrubs for edible berries and other vegetation. It had been raining for days, and Jimin wonders if this was one of the reasons why the Red Evil were unable to really track him down. It also provides him with drinking water, drinking from large fronds and leaves. He keeps a sharp eye out for anything red- not too difficult out here in the dense forest where the tree foliage was thick enough to filter what available light they had into a dim greenish-light.

Jimin wonders how he’s going to approach these Beings. It’s the only other conscious thought in his mind.

It’s the 3rd day and Jimin finally catches sight of them. He was still inside the forest while the small group of Beings were gathered outside on a small clearing. And at this distance, with them at sight, Jimin can sense them all the better.

They were relieved- he can sense their spirits healing- absorbing life from the forest around them. They probably weren’t aware, but it was as though their very souls were thirsting for nourishment. Jimin knows how it feels. Because he too was drinking in their presence, the energy from their bonds, and the unity of their gathering.

There were a total of 11 Beings, all varying in appearance, carrying heavy gear and foreign weaponry. Where were they headed?

Jimin wants to reach out to them, in one way or another. And before he knows it, he’s singing.
He’s quiet and his voice purposefully soft. But the wind carries his voice. And he sees the moment they hear his song.

Jimin can sense no hostility. Only shock, surprise, some fear- and most of all, curiosity. Jimin feels a burst of joy in his heart, and he’s planning on leaving the high banks of the forest when a crippling cold catches him around the back of his neck, darkness pooling around his vision.

He’s quick to duck down, barely breathing, as one of the larger ships from the Red Evil shoots past.

Had they seen them? They were out in the open. Had they seen them?

Jimin knows he has to warn them. To tell them to leave this planet if they could. To report to the GLA on what was happening, if anything could be done at all. But Jimin can barely breathe.

His body was drained, and he shakes uncontrollably as he looks behind him, back into the forest.

It was dark, and he can see the outlines of the forest beyond.

And the darkness was looking back at him.

* *

When he finds the strength to walk again, it takes him much longer to catch up to the GLA. And this time, he doesn’t hesitate.

The forest they were walking through smelled like death. Life on the planet was giving out slowly, and this place, with so much damp and moisture was one of the first to give in. Jimin finds an exit faster than they do, and he checks to make sure they would be safe in the approaching opening. It wasn’t too far from his hiding spot near the waterfall. The same river that fed his waterfall had branched off here, creating a small cool stream of water. He quickly washes himself, drinking deeply. The sun was about to “rise”, with the clouds shifting in a way that would clear in the horizon. Jimin quickly hides himself in anticipation of their arrival.

He can feel them- feel their tenseness, their anxiety. Worry, fear, and nervousness surrounded them like the storm clouds above. And Jimin knows that he won’t be able to approach them without causing a great stir. He watches two of their members walk away from out of the damp and rotting forest, clearly looking for a source of water.

There are jutting rocks over on one side before giving way to impossible cliffs and mountains. He waits beyond an outcrop of clean mossy rocks, holding his breath.

He appears first, heart-achingly similar in form and face to his own people. He looks tired, his skin ashen and his shoulders slumped.

Death was draining this planet of life, even from those who did not know.

Another Being appears, taller and different looking. He too appeared tired, a lag in his movements that worries Jimin. The shorter of the two pauses, head turning to greet the permanent sunrise. Had they been able to figure out and understand this planet? Or was this the first of the permanent sunrise he was going to witness.
They speak to each other— their voices sound almost hollow. But there’s a sort of ring to the dark-haired Being; one that Jimin is drawn to. Because it sounds just like the voice in his heart, calling for home. To return once again where he belonged. His friend comes and stands next to him. They’re speaking in low voices, watching the sky above break to reveal the sunrise beyond.

Jimin realizes he’s singing, too caught up in listening to the familiar ring surrounding this Being. He was singing, but he hadn’t even opened his mouth. Fear takes over him – he didn’t know who they were. What they were here for. The Red Evil could be using them, to lure him out. To capture him. What if he had walked into a trap?

The unknown Being is startled, eyes widening as he gets up, his posture defensive.

But at that moment, sunlight breaks through and the entire clearing is covered in warm light and colour.

Their eyes meet, and Jimin’s fear abates.

* *

His name is Yoongi.

It took them a while to understand that Jimin did not speak any of the languages they knew. They could not translate it on their devices either. And so they were left to point, mime, and express themselves in order to communicate.

Yoongi had pointed at himself, saying his name out loud a few times. And then back at Jimin. ‘Jimin.’ Jimin had pointed at himself, and then back at him, ‘Yoongi.’

He smiles, nodding. And then he points at everyone else, going through their names.

When at least the names are established, they try to further their explanation. Jimin knows it was going to be pointless to try and speak. So after almost 10 minutes of miming his request, Yoongi understands his attempt and hands him his own device. His friend, Amic, is quick to catch on and activates the program he needs.

Jimin quickly but with comprehensive skill, illustrates what had happened. The Yemenifesi Ch’inik’eti could not lie. But Jimin was not lying when he chose to omit parts of the story involving where he came from. Based on what Jimin can tell from their reactions or responses, they must think he was part of a non-GLA system. Jimin wishes he could study them better, look into their eyes, feel their life under his hands, to be able to better hear the ring in their souls. But he’s not sure how well they would take to it. So he keeps back, studying them from afar as they were doing the same to him.

They clearly had roles and positions. Amic was responsible for what appeared to be some form of reading/scanning device. Yoongi was busy most of the time running some form of analysis on samples he harvested from every single place he could. He had, at one point, mimed to Jimin, asking him for a strand of his hair. Jimin had been unsure at first, wondering why Yoongi was asking him to pluck out his hair for him. But then he reached forward and lightly tugged at his hair, and Jimin understood.
When Yoongi read whatever analysis he gathered after studying his hair, his expression had turned confused. A few of the others gathered around him, asking questions. Jimin radiates peace, just a small amount, so that it would calm their spirits, and not cause their fear to corrode their souls. It had already taken some effect, and Jimin refused to watch as it happened.

They were headed to a location they had scanned and found in the their map-scans. They showed it to Jimin, in hopes that he would know just in case. But Jimin doesn’t. He carefully studies their map and is surprised to find that their scans and readings were fairly accurate. These scans had to be old. No map could be this detailed without years of observation and mapping. Had the GLA always kept track of Megibīya? Based on what Ndica had said, they knew of the planet, and had even given it a name. How long had they been under observation, and how much information were they keeping from them?

He follows them through the forests. He’s not sure how much of what he’s said actually translated well to them. He’s not sure how much they believe in him, because despite knowing about the existence of the Red Evil, they don’t seem too perturbed by this information.

Language barriers really did dull the extent of fear.

The leader of this unit, a slight yet very strong female Being by the name of Amad’la, often asked Jimin to walk with her. She seemed to think he knew the lay of the land. And though Jimin did not, he was able to better use his abilities to channel ahead, making sure all was clear. And it is clear. Most of the time, too much so, and it causes Jimin to feel unsettled.

The group don’t take frequent breaks. They knew they had little time, and taking Jimin’s attempts at warning, they only rarely stopped. But every time they did, Jimin couldn’t help but feel strangely endeared, or at the very least somewhat pleased by their attempt to converse with him. This was normally a common source of light-hearted entertainment as they attempted to mime certain actions, words, questions at Jimin, while the others watched with amusement. Leading this was usually Yoongi and Amic.

Jimin just looks at him curiously. Communication was difficult without the help of translators. But they’re somehow able to establish some form of mimicry-based language, and Jimin was always exceptionally good at reading the emotions and meanings behind spoken word.

Standard was a strange mix of words that felt heavy and steeped with a dullness that Jimin doesn’t like. There were few who spoke it well- with a certain accent that made it sound better. Yoongi’s was a little lazy, a little slurred- it made the cold dull language sound familiar. Like how you can casually slip into your regional accent without fear of being mocked or judged.

Yoongi always sought him out, handed him food and drinks, and walked close. Perhaps it was because he was the first to notice him, and the first to reach out to him, but Jimin too sought him out first.

And there was something pleasantly warm, a resonance in the way Yoongi’s soul seemed to sing out. Something that Jimin finds soothing and easing.

Yoongi was easily closest with Amic, who also walked alongside Jimin a lot, though most times he was tending to his own devices. Him and Yoongi appeared to be the oddest of friends. Yet a combination that clearly worked.

They were surprisingly filled with mirth and must have been funny based on how they made the others laugh with their antics and comments. Amic seemed to enjoy making fun of Yoongi’s height- and Jimin notices that he was in fact, the shortest in the entire group.
Until it’s discovered that Jimin is almost the exact same height as Yoongi, and they’re made to stand together, shoulders touching. Yoongi is obviously loudly whining about something as he’s made to remove his shoes, removing his added almost 2 inches. He grimaces comically as he stands next to Jimin. There’s burst of laughter and Yoongi sighs heavily, as though exhausted of his group. He then gives Jimin a small wink and easy grin before ruffling his hair.

It’s almost too easy to smile back. And it’s too easy to reach for Yoongi’s hand, stopping his movement. He looks over at Jimin with question, head tilted. Jimin’s hand linger on Yoongi’s, reading as best as he could for that short period of time.

There was nothing extraordinary about Yoongi.

He could detect nothing out of the ordinary in his soul. He could detect no swirling sense of resonance in his soul either. He was just very simply, ordinary. But one thing that struck out the most was one thing Yoongi had- or actually lacked.

While there was a corrosion settling in everyone’s souls- Jimin could find none in Yoongi.

‘Where are you from?’ Jimin asks quietly.

Yoongi is a little flustered, clearly not understanding. Hurriedly he takes out his device and hands it to Jimin. Jimin notes that his previous illustrations, had been all saved in sub-tabs along the side. It makes him smile. He illustrates a single circle, and outlines the continents of his home planet.
Then he points at it, and then back at himself.

‘Home.’ He says, willing Yoongi to understand.

Yoongi eyebrows go up and he nods, saying something and his friend hands him a device. Yoongi smiles, raising a finger to tell Jimin to wait a moment. He gestures for them to sit and they take a seat on one of the stretched out raised planks, avoiding the puddles of rain water gathered around the forest floor. Yoongi shifts closer, their knees touching a little. Suddenly the device in Yoongi’s hand lights up and a holographic projection takes form.

Yoongi points at something before gesturing around. This was where they were, according to Yoongi. Jimin looks at the map, and finds that a few planets were missing. So the GLA had been scanning them- for how long, Jimin is not sure, but the safety of his System was greatly compromised, that was all he could tell. But he doesn’t comment and nods to show his understanding. Yoongi taps on the surface of the device and leans back a little to give the map some space.

Yoongi’s planet is blue and beautiful- almost the same size as Jimin’s own planet. Yoongi taps on the map, indicating an area. He then points at it, and then at himself. He slowly says a word and looks expectantly at Jimin.

‘Urrth?’ Jimin tries.

Yoongi smiles, nodding.

Jimin points at himself and then at his planet he had drawn.

‘Dis’bēti,’ Jimin says slowly.

Yoongi tries. He really does. It’s obvious language is not his forte because Amic is cackling at him from the other plank. Yoongi’s aim, however, is much better than his language skills. Amic is met with a wet splat of grassy roots. The tall gangly fellow wails dramatically before pretending to faint.

Jimin looks back at the map while Yoongi yells at Amic.

Yoongi was so far away. Everyone here was so far away.

Would they be able to return? Jimin had his suspicions, but he knew, from the first hour of meeting these Beings, that they could be trusted.

Did they know what they had come across? What had they been told that they were here? What led them here?

‘Your home is stars away,’ Jimin says quietly. ‘I’m sorry you’re so far away.’

Yoongi turns to look at him curiously. So instead Jimin smiles and taps once on Yoongi’s planet, pulling it up from the map. He pulls up the map of Megibīya and puts them together. He indicates with his fingers, stretching his arms as far apart as possible, and then pointing at Yoongi.

Understanding lights up Yoongi’s eyes. He smiles, with a small shrug, as though to say, what can I do? It’s my job.

‘I’m sorry.’ Jimin tells him quietly.

The lights of the holograph seem to shed light into his eyes, showing Jimin the longing and sorrow he carried in him. He missed home, Jimin could tell. Reaching through the holograph, Jimin cradles Yoongi’s face in his hands. Yoongi is startled but doesn’t move away.

Jinim is aware that a few of the others are watching them, some with amusement and teasing, some with question. But he ignores them in favor of reaching out to Yoongi. He can finally really feel Yoongi like this.

Jinim knows that some find it intrusive, staring so deeply into their eyes. But Yoongi doesn’t flinch, he just stays still, relaxed and in turn, looks back at Jimin. What Jinim doesn’t expect is for Yoongi to raise his hands and mirror Jinim.

Jinim can’t help but smile, leaning forward to lean their foreheads together. Yoongi’s face is suddenly warm. He’s blinking rapidly, and Jinim can tell he’s nervous. Smiling wider, Jinim leans up to kiss his forehead.

He can see blue skies- high up. Clouds are floating below his feet, and he can smell some form of smoke. The vision is gone as quickly as it came.

There’s a sudden burst of applause, some hoots, and suppressed giggles. Yoongi is red in the face but he’s smiling too. He looks confused, unsure what to do. And someone is yelling something at him and he too moves forward and kisses Jinim on his forehead.

His lips are dry but soft, and it’s more of a graze than an actual kiss.

Amic cheers and barrels in, arms open wide towards Jinim.

Jinim spends the rest of that break doing the same to everyone, looking at everyone’s planets and some even attempting to describe what was famous or cool in their respective homes.

Yoongi sits next to him the entire time. And Jinim can feel his soul growing again, as he takes from the solidity of Yoongi’s presence next to him.
Despite feeling safer than he has in ages, Jimin still cannot fully rest. His senses were on high alert, and his paranoia never resting. He could barely catch sleep despite the insistence of the GLA team that he rest. Even that part Jimin was able to understand without the need for words. They had stopped to rest for the night in a small forest clearing just nigh of a mountain cliff. They were progressing around the twilight zone, closer to the location they had pointed out to Jimin. Jimin really really hopes that this location can grant them access to whatever frequencies and channels they would need to send messages.

They had been in this location far longer than Jimin was comfortable with. He tried to communicate this to the team but the Captain had only nodded in reply. She then pointed at some of their equipment, and mimed repair and maintenance. Jimin didn’t mention it again, but he kept his vigilance high.

The sky was less red today, and as Jimin steps out of the small tent they had given him to rest inside, he’s greeted with the permanent sunrise. The GLA team had known about the planet enough not to be too surprised at the phenomenon. But they still studied it and kept track, taking notes on the angle of the sun, the intensity of the light, and wavelengths.

Most of the team are asleep, catching up on much needed rest. A few others were around, keeping watch. They smile at Jimin in greeting. It would now be over a 7 weeks he travelled with them. And despite the language barrier, they take to him easily.

Jimin had doubts, for the longest time, about himself. As the Yemenifesi Ch’i’nik’eti, he could bring people together. Unite, unify, connect. He could move hearts, sway minds, and bring agreement in strife. And sometimes he wondered, if the people of his System ever held him in true companionship or regard. Outside of who he was, Jimin knew little of who he was. Outside of his work and title, Jimin knew little else of what it meant to truly introduce and establish yourself.

But here, with these unknown GLA team members, Jimin has no only had to earn their trust, but also do this without words.

Jimin upheld a vow that all Yemenifesi Ch’i’nik’eti did. They never used their abilities for selfish motives, or for situations and purposes that would cause significant changes to its alteration. And most of all, they never used their abilities to manipulate for personal gain.

It went against every fiber of his being, even thinking about it.

He hears Yoongi stepping out of the tent, his movements quiet and light. He can almost see it, as though he was watching Yoongi move. White mist escaping his mouth as he shivers a little in the cold morning. A strange chill had fallen over the past few days, bringing frost and a chill. Jimin doesn’t know if this was a result of the Red Evil, or if this was an actual seasonal change in the planet. He concentrates on the sounds coming from Yoongi.

He was probably performing a perimeter search, scanning their surroundings. Jimin smiles to himself when he hears Yoongi speaking in a low voice, asking questions, only to have a grunt in reply.

Jimin knows Yoongi’s routine. After doing the perimeter search Yoongi will make sure to check all his immediate equipment and devices with him, despite having it on him all the time. Then he’ll take a step forward – crunch – and then he’ll come to stand behind Jimin. It was always like this, for the past few days that they’d been here. After a minute, Yoongi will step inside – shuffling steps, fabric brushing on fabric – and he’ll walk back to relieve the night duty.

Light breaks brighter over the horizon and Jimin hears the sound of life wakening. The sound of the other Beings inside their tents, shifting and adjusting. Some drained sounding yawns and creaks. The sound of plants pushing through the soil, the sound of leaves falling in the light morning breeze. It’s beautiful, and Jimin’s heart hurts to return home.

Jimin wasn’t even aware he was cold until he feels Yoongi’s hand on his arm. He smiles when he regards his friend. Yoongi has never approached him before out here and he’s only a little surprised. He’s also surprised when Yoongi more or less throws a blanket over him, not meeting his eyes. He says something, pretending to shiver and then pointing at him again.

Jimin smiles in thanks, wrapping the blanket around him.

Yoongi speaks words yet again, as he’s taking a seat next to him. He always spoke to him, despite not understanding each other. Sometimes he sounded like he was ranting, other times he was laughing, as though telling him a story. And Jimin listened, hearing more than just words as he could hear the emotions behind his words.

He tries to repeat Yoongi’s greeting to him. He can only assume that it’s a greeting of sorts. Perhaps strictly from his own planet.

‘Hei s-sunshhrine?’ Jimin tries out, with a waving gesture that seemed to extend System to System, throughout the Universe.

Yoongi gives him an amused grin before pointing at Jimin and saying, ‘Sunshine,’ and then at himself, ‘Yoongi.’

Wondering if he should be offended, Jimin quirks an eyebrow at that and shakes his head. Did Yoongi not get his name yet now?

‘Jimin,’ he points at himself and then at Yoongi, ‘Yoongi.’

Yoongi puts on a funnily serious face and shakes his head, pointing at Jimin again, ‘Sunshine.’

And before Jimin can say anything else Yoongi points at himself and says ‘Yoongi’ and then points at Amic who blearily blinking in the unexpected light. He’s waiting for Jimin to reply and he does so, a little slowly, with clear indication of his confusion.

‘Amic?’

Yoongi nods, and then pointing at Amic again he says, ‘Mickey.’

Thoroughly confused, Jimin tilts his head to the side. Yoongi just grins a bit more before pointing at the Captain Amad’la and says, ‘Cap.’

He does the same for everyone, naming them and then adding another name. Then it hits Jimin.

Nicknames. Yoongi was giving him a nickname.

Jimin feels a bit embarrassed at that, for not having caught on sooner. So he makes an exaggerated sound of understanding that makes Yoongi laugh.
‘Sunshine.’ Yoongi points at Jimin again.

‘S-sunshine,’ Jimin points at himself.

Yoongi nods and gives him a lopsided grin before saying something. There’s laughter from Yoongi’s friend, wholehearted and free. He’s shaking his head at Yoongi who makes some sort of hand gesture at his friend, clearly meant to be offensive.

‘What does it mean?’ Jimin asks. But Yoongi patiently hands him his device instead. Jimin pauses a moment, wondering how to illustrate his question when there’s an alarmed and terse voice calling out.

Yoongi is up at once and Jimin stands up too.

There’s a confusing continuous back and forth of words- but out of all the words, Jimin hears “Thua” repeated over and over again.

Thua was one of the team members who carried the equipment that was being repaired. He was the audio/frequency maintainer, if Jimin was correct in his observation. His skin crawls as he too launches back into the area where their tents were. He had been in the tent next to Yoongi’s but it was empty. They call his name, run scans, but they can’t find him.

Had the Red Evil come here and taken Thua? How did he not hear? How did he not know? He was barely asleep for 3 hours, and there was a watch around the tents. How did this happen?

Jimin takes a step back, racking his mind, wondering how he couldn’t sense it, when a suffocating cold feeling wraps around his throat, his nostrils filled with the sickly sweet stench of decay and rot. His body shaking, Jimin manages to turn his head.

Standing where he had been sitting with Yoongi is the Red Evil.

The red of its robes stains the air around him, whatever sunlight that was shining through is contaminated and red. The earth around it turns to ash and the trees begin to crumble.

Death.

Jimin was looking at Death.

It raises its hand towards Jimin- blackened and dry looking. It points at Jimin and-

‘Sunshine?’

Gasping for breath as though he’d been underwater, Jimin nearly buckles as the freezing chokehold he was in vanishes. Yoongi, pale and alarmed, manages to catch him before he falls to the ground.

He’s saying his name, repeating words.

But Jimin is heavily disoriented- as though he was ill-ridden with a terrible fever. His mind is woozy and his body numb. His head tilts back and looking down at him, at them, from above were the Red Evil.

His eyes threaten to close, his body shutting down.

Yoongi’s face swims before his eyes and Jimin remembers every single time he didn’t apologize. He remembers every single last breath he held to his heart.
He would not add more. And he would not die here where all those voices would be simply lost.

Filled with a mad type of energy, Jimin stands up, head tilted up.

He hears Yoongi’s voice behind him, and the gasps of the other team members. He is vaguely aware of the sound of their weapons clicking and loading.

Raising his hand he points back at the Red Evil and light erupts from him.

‘Death. You will not come for me. Or for them. You will leave.’ He commands- his voice expands in rings of light around him. Each word more powerful than the last. Words of Fate. Jimin focuses even more and he feels his feet lifting off of the ground.

‘Death- you will not conquer me.’

The red beyond the trees blur suddenly before rippling stark and bright.

‘We do not bring death.’

The red light vanishes and Jimin is falling. It’s not a high fall and Yoongi and Amic are there at once. They help him stand straight, looking over him in fear of injury. Amad’la appears out of nowhere, fear in her eyes. Jimin can feel all their emotions with startling clarity right now.

Confusion. Panic. Fear.

And an equally divided portion of these emotions are directed towards him.

She’s full geared, weapons up and at the ready. She’s clearly giving orders and Yoongi is saying something- his tone sharp and his voice low.

Amidst all of the fear, confusion, and panic, Jimin detects something else. Worry, concern, and something bright. Something warm.

Jemin looks away from Amad’la who is frowning heavily, replying back with harsh sounding words, and instead looks around at Yoongi.

Yoongi’s expression has changed completely. Yoongi was either apathetic, mildly annoyed, making funny faces with heavy sarcasm, or yawning mightily because he appeared to be in constant need of sleep. But right now Yoongi looks mildly terrifying.

His features are surprisingly relaxed, no glaring expression on his face. But his eyes are burning, an intensity that is unnerving, enough to make crowds quake. His words are calm and steady as he says something.

And despite all of this, his hand is still gentle. He gently pulls Jimin back and around him, so that Yoongi stood in front of him instead. Amic stands behind Jimin and he too, places a gentle hand on his shoulder, protectively almost.

Jemin isn’t sure what’s being said, but he feels as though a few of the team members there seem to blame him for the absence of Thua.

Jemin looks up again shakily and finds it bare of any red.

When Jimin comes to meet the team member’s eyes- he finds cold suspicion and doubt in them. And Jimin doesn’t blame them. Because if he were in the same position as them, he too would be suspicious of him.
However both Yoongi and Amic are free of these emotions. And Jimin finds comfort in their eyes.

**

The second disappearance takes place when they’re making a move down the mountain cliffs. Amad’la is saying something again, and Jimin understands now. They want him to stay back, to leave the team. But Yoongi and Amic are arguing against her. But Jimin can see the reasoning behind their words, behind their doubts. They had not known of the Red Evil until Jimin told them about it. And then they never saw it again. But just as they are so close to their targeted location, it appears out of nowhere. And Jimin had told them that he hadn’t been able to do anything to push back the Red Evil but for some reason, back in the forest clearing, he had been able to do so. Not just that, but he had displayed his abilities- they heard him speak the Words of Fate without knowing what Jimin was trying to do.

And perhaps they would be safer without Jimin there. Perhaps the Red Evil would ignore them. They had been safe up until then. Maybe it was Jimin they were after.

He stops their arguing, pulling Yoongi and Amic away with a shake of his head.

‘I will leave,’ he tells them, miming the action. Yoongi is quick to take on to his words and instead of saying anything firmly grabs him by the hand with a shake of his head.

‘No.’

Jimin came to understand a few Standard words. And this was one of them.

Yoongi doesn’t let go and continues to argue. But in the midst of this argument, there’s a warning cry from Amic who pushes them down quickly.

Jimin nearly retches at the overwhelming stench of rot that fills the air around him. His head spins as he scrambles to stand up. There’s a shock of light that erupts from next to him. Yoongi and Amad’la are already using their weapons in quick accurate succession, firing in the direction of the Red Evil who move at impossible speed and fluidity.

If the GLA team were afraid, they make no show of it. Instead they continue firing, their coordination and skill coming through to show that they weren’t just a team of researchers and scientists.

This continues to happen for the next 3 weeks. And in that span of time, Jimin is horrified as he witnesses the rapidity by which the souls of the GLA team corrodes. He kneels next to Amic who is breathing heavily, a strange sound coming from his chest as air clogs in his passageways.

His body functions and systems were breaking down.

Amic’s species were different from other various species in the team. Their wellbeing depended on the stability and strength of their heart. Perhaps this was why he was drawn to Yoongi, whose soul still remained whole and complete. Yoongi was growing fatigued as well. His cheeks sunken and his face pinched. There was a tremor in his hands and his breath comes short after extended periods of time. But it’s worse for Amic and a few others. And it didn’t matter if they had more food or medicine. Jimin tries to tell them that it’s not a sickness of the body- but of the soul.

This planet was being drained of life, and so all living beings in it were slowly dying with her. Jimin could feel it in himself too. His head felt heavy- but most of all his heart weighed down, curling his back and dragging his feet. Yoongi walks besides him and tries to help. Jimin reaches for his hand and Yoongi doesn’t let go.

When Amic collapses, his limbs trembling and twitching out of his control, he just smiles. He coughs out a few words and Yoongi nods, refusing to look away, refusing to cry.

Jimin saves his last breath in his heart and later presses Yoongi’s head against his chest, in hopes that he could hear Amic’s voice there as he wept.

When they arrive at the location they had been walking towards for the past near 3 months, there’s only 4 of them left. But before they can even begin to plan how to scale the mountain side, Amad’la keels over and stops breathing.

They cannot spare the strength to give her a burial, so they place her under a tree instead. Jimin kneels besides her, folding her hands over each other before leaning over to press his forehead against hers in silent goodbye. He feels Yoongi’s hand on his shoulder and he makes to get up only to nearly fall over when the overwhelming stench of rot and decay fills the air again. There’s a flash of red and then it’s gone.

‘Yoongi-!’

Scrambling around Jimin finds that it’s only him and Yoongi left. He trips forward, nearly pushing Yoongi down with the wild desperation of his embrace. He tries to make Yoongi smaller, to hold him hard and tight against himself to protect him. He looks around wildly, his breath stuttering and when his hearing comes back to him, he realizes he’s singing in a broken voice.

Yoongi is watching him with great worry, desperate as he tries to understand. ‘I can’t protect you,’ Jimin manages to whisper.

They had lost most of their equipment, broken or damaged, or lost as they tried to escape the flashes of red that leapt around the trees.

‘I’m so sorry I can’t protect you.’

Yoongi is making hushing sounds, trying to placate him but this only serves to frighten Jimin more. Up until now, Yoongi still did not understand.

They scale the mountain side, slowly and painfully. Jimin has lost count on the amount of times he’s scraped his knees and hands raw. He’s lost track of the amount of times they’ve both slipped and broken skin over sharp cold rock. Jimin wonders why Yoongi is still so adamant. Though they still carried the equipment they would need to create the frequency to communicate, they still didn’t know if it would work. The sky is a fiery blood red, and forks of magenta lightning streak through the thick heavy clouds.

They’re resting by a small alcove, leaning against each other gracelessly. Jimin gazes up, willing the sky to clear. He missed the stars. He missed the sight of moons. He missed the warmth of the sun on his skin.
He missed his sister, his planet, his people.

Yoongi says something quietly and for a moment Jimin wonders if he’s sleep talking. But Yoongi opens his eyes and looks straight into Jimin’s. Yoongi was exhausted beyond hope, but his eyes were still clear. Jimin doesn’t understand how it’s possible. But it’s the only thing giving him strength.

He repeats his word and Jimin tries to repeat it as best as he can.

‘Saw..saw-ree?’ Jimin tries.

Yoongi just nods.

Whatever had been indicated on that map, had marked the existence of a construct of sorts. A slim tower that appeared to be a part of the mountain side almost. Stepping inside away from the high-mountain wind made Jimin realize exactly how cold it was. But the moment Yoongi steps inside behind him, he collapses.

Jimin is at his side immediately. He removes the equipment from Yoongi, stripping off the bags he carried that they had emptied out as best as they could before trekking up here. Yoongi is cold and no matter what Jimin does he doesn’t regain any warmth back. He lifts a shaking finger, pointing at his bag.

Jimin takes out the equipment and takes it back. But Yoongi just smiles and shakes his head.

Jimin is confused for a total of 2 seconds before he realizes it.

Of course Yoongi knew. He had understood all along.

Jimin digs through Yoongi’s bag quickly and comes across a crumpled paper and plastic packet. He’s not sure what it is. Inside there are small white rolls and a small sparkly star-shaped clip falls into Jimin’s hand. It was purple edged with glittery silver, clearly meant for a young female being’s hair. Jimin hands it to Yoongi with shaking hands.

‘Was this your sisters?’ Jimin asks, feeling the way Yoongi’s heart pulsed in sounds of homesickness and love. ‘Mother?’

Yoongi simply smiles at him. With shaking hands he puts the clip on his hair and Jimin helps him at once.

He asks him a question, shifting as though to pose.

‘Yes,’ Jimin nods, only now aware that he was crying. ‘Yes it looks very good on you. Very handsome.’

Yoongi laughs, and it’s such a small but precious moment- of delight and joy.

‘Sunshine,’ he smiles, holding a hand out. Jimin takes it, heart heavy with all the words he’s heard-with all the breaths he’s saved in his soul. He holds Yoongi’s hand to his face. It’s so cold.

Yoongi’s thumb slowly traces the skin under his eye. He says something else, and ends it with ‘sunshine’.

He still hasn’t asked what that word meant.

There was still no corrosion in Yoongi’s soul and Jimin wants to save him forever. To never let go of that strength and purity. He shifts closer, practically hugging Yoongi’s arm to his chest. Yoongi gives him another haggard smile.

He was so exhausted. Jimin can feel it. His soul wasn’t corroded but his heart, his spirit, and his body was failing.

He says something else. Jimin shakes his head, indicating that he didn’t understand.

Still smiling, Yoongi tugs at Jimin’s shirt with his free hand.

Jimin shuffles even closer, till there’s less than a few inches between their faces. Yoongi smiles and with a small nod forward presses a kiss on Jimin’s lips.

He says something, knowing full well Jimin wouldn’t understand.

And Jimin knows that this was the last of his breaths. That he was going to be forced to watch Yoongi die, the same way he was forced to watch everyone die. And despite how heavy his heart felt- how weighed his soul was- he would save Yoongi’s last word permanently in his heart. It was a burden he would gladly bear for the rest of his life.

‘Yoongi-‘

He’s suddenly yanked back and the stench of rot overwhelms him.

He tries to scream- to pull them away from Yoongi but he can’t. His head hits something and his world turns black.

‘We do not bring death.’

Jimin gasps awake.

The tower room is empty, the door flung open, letting in red light.

Yoongi is gone.

He couldn’t save his last word. Jimin is not allowed to save Yoongi’s last breath in his soul, where it would continue to live, pulsing and beating with life next to Jimin’s.

Enraged with sorrow, Jimin pushes himself off of the ground, never minding his injuries or the exhaustion he was feeling too. He emerges from the tower only to find the Red Evil standing before him. There are 5 of them again. All the same height, all the same size. They loom down at him in uniform stillness.

Feeling a reckless anger take over him, light bursts out of him. But the Red Evil doesn’t flinch.

‘I know you understand me. I heard you speak. Why are you here?’ Jimin asks.

He’s exhausted. He knows he can’t do this for any longer.

‘We do not bring death.’

‘But that is all you have done!’ Jimin screams. ‘That is all you have brought here!’

A powerful ripple of light burst from him, chipping the mountain side and creating a hollow thunderous sound to echo around him.
'We do not bring death. We bring life.'

On of it steps forward suddenly, bending down at a strange and impossible angle. It raises its hand until it wraps around Jimin’s head.

Jimin is locked, unable to move. He’s slowly lifted into the air and the light around him is being pressed down- it’s painful, as though a great weight was bearing down on him, compressing him, threatening to crush him to his very core.

‘Would you like to see life?’

Jimin raises his hands, stretching and reaching until the tips of his fingers touch the Red Evil on its face.

It’s cold, strangely wet, and ancient.

Jimin is flooded with pain- not his own, but not of the Red Evil. There is pain- from a Universe of Memories that has been forgotten and abandoned. A Universe of life that once was.

And a Universe of obsession.

‘Can you see it?’

Jimin is staring into its eyes, unable to blink away or speak.

‘You will see it. Like the rest of them.’

Jimin drops to the ground, reality rushing back around him in harsh lines and sounds.

‘You will see it.’

Jimin shakes, his entire body shuddering- with cold, fear- he doesn’t know. All he knows is that he wants this to end.

The edge of the cliff swims before his eyes. The thought is half-formed, half-created. But before he can even make another attempt at moving, the bone-chilling cold settles over his head again.

And this time, everything turns white.
Jimin wakes up, his heart pounding almost painfully in his chest.

It takes him a moment to realize that he was not in Megibīya. That the Red Evil was not there. That it had been conquered and destroyed some 4 years back according to Taeh’yung. He had seen it. They had seen it.

Jimin notices that Yoongi is standing by the doorway, expression blank. Had he heard Jimin during his nightmare? Had Jimin called his name out loud in his sleep?

Jimin sits up properly on his bed. The cabin he was given was identical to the rest, and was the first room from the entrance.

‘Yoongi?’

He was greatly changed. His mind, his heart, and his soul felt different. Transformed, changed. Alchemized.

Altered.

And still exhausted. And it terrifies Jimin.

But it was still Yoongi.

And it wasn’t just because of his face- because even his face seemed a little different. The Yoongi Jimin remembers from Megibīya was expressive, spoke frequently, and was surprisingly noisy at most times. This Yoongi was completely different.

But that doesn’t bother Jimin.

He raises his hand up, smiling at him and beckoning him in. Yoongi blinks a little, as though contemplating. Then he walks inside and takes a stiff seat next to Jimin, hand carefully taking Jimin’s.

‘Even if you don’t remember me, I am glad you look at me the same way,’ Jimin says, knowing that Yoongi wouldn’t understand a single word.

Everything about Yoongi had changed. But the way he looked at Jimin still remained the same. And just like before, Jimin finds comfort and safety in them.

Yoongi still looks confused, a battle in his mind, in his soul. Would he ever remember? Jimin tries again, and points at himself and says, ‘Jimin.’ And then at the Human, ‘Yoongi.’

Yoongi nods, clearly not understanding. He repeats the actions back to Jimin, clearly hoping it was what Jimin wanted to hear from him. It was so similar to the way Yoongi had tried to communicate with him back in Megibīya that it makes Jimin smile. Yoongi smiles too, and though it’s not the same as before, it still warms Jimin’s heart.
He takes Yoongi’s hands in his, wondering, not for the first time, where he got all of the scars and lesions from. So instead of asking a question Yoongi wouldn’t understand, he kisses the Human’s hands. Yoongi is extremely confused but doesn’t pull away.

‘The last time I saw you, you had a star-shaped clip on your hair,’ Jimin smiles, touching his hair gently. The colour was different. Yoongi’s hair had been brown, but now it was close to black. ‘The last time I saw you, the sky was red, and we were both so exhausted.’

Yoongi is listening intently.

‘And you kissed me. Do you remember that?’ Jimin asks.

Yoongi only blinks in response.

‘The first time I saw you, you were so shocked to see me,’ Jimin smiles as he continues forward. ‘You were so spooked- you actually nearly threw the device in your hands. But you acted like you weren’t. You were the first one to introduce yourself. You told me all about your planet, even though I didn’t understand. Have you gone back? I want to see it now that I’m here. Do you think it’s possible?’

Yoongi doesn’t reply but it was all right. This felt exactly like how it was back in Megibīya. When they exchanged stories without understanding each other.

‘Then you tried to insist that I was shorter than you- but we were exactly the same height. Just like now. Would you insist on being the same height now?’ Jimin laughs and Yoongi smiles. ‘You and Amic were so funny. I know that Amad’la kept a stern face, but she found the two of you really funny you know? She would sometimes repeat your words and laugh to herself.’

Jemin lifts Yoongi’s hand in his and places it on the side of face and slowly lets go.

‘What does sunshine mean?’

Yoongi is silent, his eyes moving back and forth from his hand back to his eyes.

‘Sunshine?’ Jimin tries again.

Yoongi blinks slowly, a small furrow forming between his brows. He lowers his hand and says, ‘Sunshine?’

Jemin didn’t think it would be possible to feel the way he did hearing him say that again. So instead he nods and points at Yoongi and says, ‘Yoongi,’ and then back at himself and says, ‘Sunshine.’

Yoongi blinks a little at that, as though processing the words. Then he too points at himself, ‘Yoongi’, and then back at Jimin.

‘Sunshine.’

Jemin nods fervently.

Yoongi slowly nods back.

They just stare at each other for a while before Yoongi mimes eating, pointing back out of the door.

Jemin nods in response and also gets up as Yoongi stands up. Yoongi steps out first, looking back as though to make sure Jimin was following him out. Jimin just smiles, making a show to explain he was going to wear a sweater. Yoongi nods and as though he thought of it last minute, adds a smile.

Jimin slowly wears the sweater, pulling at the sleeves until it fully covered his arms. He peeks out of the door quietly, watching Yoongi awkwardly hover near the dining table, clearly waiting for Jimin. Sk’jin is at the Kitchen, talking loudly while Hoseok was just leaving, heading for the stairs with a tray of drinks in his hands. Taeh’yung spots him at once and waves at him to hurry.

Yoongi looks up and their eyes meet. Jimin feels safe.

‘Thank you for coming back.’
MERRY CHRISTMAS YA HEATHENS

Predictably
I listened to Serendipity while writing this chapter.
I have this entire story preplanned and chronicled in my mind. And so this chapter has been stewing in my mind for a solid year already. So when this mv came out, and the lyrics, and the video and the songs, and the way Jimin looks and everything I just wanted to fucking cry.
The System of Menigišiti is based off of TRAPPIST-1, an actual solar system located 39.6 lights years away from us AND GUYS IT’S LIKE THE CLOSEST THING TO ANOTHER EARTH-LIKE SOLAR SYSTEM IT’S AMAZING PLEASE READ ABOUT IT WHEN YOU CAN.
I WAS SO EXCITED WHEN I READ THE NEWS ABOUT THIS SOLAR SYSTEM AND IMMEDIATELY DECIDED TO BASE MENIGISITI OFF OF TRAPPIST-1 So of course, like I mentioned, the science in this is kinda…made up. but it is based off of actual scientific facts! For example, you could potentially harvest magnetic energy and use it to generate magnetic fields. Of course, containing that energy in a malleable way and being able to control it is an entirely different story ofc. And ofc as we all know, blocking radio signals or frequencies can cause “blindness” – if an area exists where you cannot send any form of radio signal, it is basically invisible. And I thought the idea that the orbital resonance between planets should be cause enough to create some form of barrier that could deflect frequencies outside of their own direct orbit.
I hope this chapter wasn’t too terrible a thing to read during Christmas.
But then again, if you’re reading this during Christmas…and I was writing it during that time as well…I guess it makes us all kinda…yeah…Well we’re all in it together.
shrugs
All things created in nature have an opposing side.

The opposite of life is death.

The opposite of love is hate.

The opposite of creation is destruction.

The opposite of chaos is peace.

The opposite of light is darkness.

And the opposite of the Known Universe is the Underverse.

The GLA Known Universe was the entirety of galaxies and Systems that signed the GLA Treaty on Trade and Peace. And the flipside of this was the messy, chaotic, and often violent Underverse. Beneath the smooth sailing, peaceful reign of the GLA and its associate organizations, existed this expansive and intricate universe. The Underverse consisted of pirates, crime organizations, and mercenaries to name a few. And Hoseok has walked and lived the Underverse more than he has the Known Universe. He knew of the way it worked, the way it shifted, and the way it wasn’t really under the GLA, but rather, closely veined around it. The Underverse has always been a part of the Known Universe- this was a known fact in the Venture Unit as most of their dealings revolved around it. Hoseok always knew it was much more than just the “pirates and bad Beings that have to be arrested and locked up” propaganda that was being fed to the general public.

The same way everything created in nature had an opposing side, these sides balanced each other—meeting at a careful and often fragile moot. And whatever was maintaining this fragile balance between the Known Universe and the Underverse was falling apart. And it most probably had to do with what happened in Pompa. Or more accurately, what was still happening in Pompa.

After the Broadcast (as it was dubbed in the Underverse) had aired, it took nearly 5 hours to shut it down because that was just how good Namjoon was. This gave the rest of the Known Universe and the Underverse plenty of time to duplicate and record the original Broadcast and send it out into even further broader channels. While the GLA had done an almost decent job of covering up the entire thing and saving their own skin by masking their involvement as an attempt to go undercover, the truth was most definitely not lost in the Underverse.

Pompa was immediately removed from the GLA treaty, with heavy declarations of punishment and repeal set over their government and politicians. Many Pompens tried to escape but were caught. According to a few news sources, an entirely new prison was going to be built for this case alone. So now every organization involved with the Pompen Arena, as well as the Pageant, instantly liquidized and disappeared.
Hoseok, and Namjoon, had done some deep-dive hacking into some of the bigger channels in the Underverse and found out that not only had the Arena business in the Underverse had been greatly affected, but the chain of organizations that distributed medication through the Underverse to non-GLA systems and planets had been greatly compromised.

Knowing what he knew, Hoseok still felt that the Venture Unit did more good than harm. While they did take their profits and funds from war-torn systems and planets and through bribery and blackmail, they used those very same channels to send medical aid, escape ships, and smuggling channels through which victimized species could escape.

While the fact that the Venture Unit was very much involved with the Alliance was now too obvious a truth and one that couldn’t be ignored, Hoseok wants to believe that the other spectrum of good the Venture Unit was doing somehow balanced that. Hoseok tries to ignore the gnawing guilt building in him as he reads about how an entire system was now out of contact due to the termination of a pirate-network that had been involved with the Pageant. The System in question was a non-GLA System and suffering from great radiation spikes from their unstable sun. Hoseok switches off the screen, sighing out slowly.

‘Hoseok- I’ve just updated the complete trajectory.’

‘Cross-reference?’

‘Yeap.’

Hoseok sits up, his knees popping from having sat too long as he calls into the comm. ‘Could everyone come up to the Bridge?’

‘Coming up!’ Taeh’yung cheerily replies.

‘Yoongi?’ Hoseok leans over the cockpit and into the tower-mast to find Jimin looking up at him, smile on his face as he greets him with a wave. Yoongi, seated on the side, was explaining the functions of the weapons to Jimin, or at least somewhat attempting to do so.

Yoongi had been able to leave the Medical Bay earlier that day, and had made his way straight to the shower, then to the Kitchen to eat, and then straight to the tower-mast. Jimin had in turn, followed him nearly everywhere.

Jimin spoke quite a lot to the rest of them, despite the language barrier. He spoke most to Taeh’yung of course, the latter trailing after Jimin like a large cheerful shadow. However, whenever he was around Yoongi, he barely spoke. It was as though he was waiting for Yoongi to speak. To start something or initiate something. Jimin also seemed very alert on Yoongi’s health – he’d been given his own screen and it was constantly open on Yoongi’s health tab. Hoseok himself had gone over it a few times, wondering if he missed something with the way Jimin would stare at the reading. But there was nothing wrong. Yoongi’s health was improving quickly and everything was repairing itself at an exceptional and healthy rate.

Jimin also kept touching Yoongi. But it wasn’t out of some strange leery intention- rather it was similar to the way Jimin held his hand. As though he could see everything in your mind. Like he was looking straight into your soul, and through your memories.

It was also always incredibly quiet whenever the two sat together. But it didn’t feel strained or uncomfortable- it was almost as though they were simply waiting. And Hoseok isn’t sure what they’re waiting for. He’s not sure if they knew what they were waiting for either.
Hoseok gestures for him to come up, pointing behind him. Jimin nods in understanding and gets up while Yoongi does the same, falling behind Jimin by just a step.

Watching their interaction is interesting. While Yoongi knew nothing and had no memory of this Being, and this was made apparent by his obvious confusion, his mannerism spoke differently. His body language was entirely different. He didn’t flinch or move away from Jimin’s contact unlike how he would shift away from the rest of the team. He mirrored Jimin’s movements, as though constantly protecting him and shielding him. It seemed like a natural reaction— one honed into the Human without prior knowledge or conscious effort. As though Jimin’s presence was an expected one, one that occupied his awareness.

‘I’m here!’ Taeh’yung announces as he quite literally flounces in, borrowed robes fluttering. But he pauses dramatically, causing Namjoon, who was behind him, to walk straight into the Zhak’gri. ‘Wait- I have to do that again. It wasn’t right.’

Then walking back out of the Bridge he flounces in again, the flimsier material of the robes falling as though in slow-motion. It’s very elegant, Hoseok will admit—but entirely unnecessary. The Zhak’gri grins with satisfaction.

‘Taeh’yung, I know I said you could borrow my clothes until you get new ones, but can you not borrow my best ones?’ Sk’jin comments wryly as he too enters the Bridge.

‘I wanted to show Jimin!’ Taeh’yung explains as he latches onto Jimin who smiles brightly at the Zhak’gri, saying something in his language. Taeh’yung enthusiastically displays the fabric and holds it up for Jimin to touch. Jimin smiles indulgently as he says something—probably a question. He takes the fabric between his fingers and exclaims out as though impressed. He turns and waves at Yoongi to touch the fabric as well. The Human blinks for a moment and a second too late he steps forward and stiffly feels at the fabric. Sk’jin doesn’t even bother suppressing his laughter.

‘It’s very nice,’ Yoongi says. ‘It’s softer than it seems.’

Hoseok catches Sk’jin’s eye who gives him a pointed look.

It was somehow even more obvious now, without Yoongi being stuck in the Medical Bay. How whenever Yoongi spoke, there was something altered; something subtly changed within the Human. It seemed to happen more when Jimin was close by.

‘Fabric aside, if everyone could gather closer,’ Namjoon calls over to the three. ‘This is important—especially for Jimin.’

Upon hearing his name Jimin looks up, his countenance serious and ready.

They gather around the Navigation Table and Namjoon gives Hoseok a nod.

‘All right so,’ Hoseok draws everyone’s attention towards the center of the Navigation Table. ‘Here is our trajectory.’

Tapping along the NaviLet in his hands, a sizeable holographic map highlighted with bright coloured lines and dots appear. Taeh’yung leans down from behind Jimin, whispering low near his ear, providing translations. Hoseok is a little surprised by how Taeh’yung seemed so professional. Given his impulsive character and rather scatter-brained personality, Hoseok thought he might have to keep reminding the Zhak’gri about translating for Jimin.

Just like everybody else on the ship, Taeh’yung had a lot of facets and sides to him. And all of them were unpredictable.
‘That’s…really messy,’ Sk’jin comments as he leans against the side of the Mast.

‘That’s because it’s supposed to be messy,’ Namjoon says as he reaches into the map and touches the pale-blue line. ‘This is our main trajectory.’

The others fade a little, just thin and faint lines and the blue shines brighter.

‘Following this trajectory, we will arrive in Bhumi in 6 GLA months at most. This is the safest route we could come up with, taking into account our criminal records, GLA activity, and political status of each Dock, Planet, System, and Galaxy.’ Hoseok begins to explain.

It had been incredibly difficult coming up with a path- they had to think at least 10 steps ahead. The Special Jury would most likely set up another specialized team up against them to track them. A team consisting of agents, Information Analysts, agents and pirates from the Underverse, and highly trained GLA officers. They would probably have a similar trajectory like this, as they attempted to plot out their true path to Bhumi.

‘However, we have also created 4 other pathways to Bhumi- all of which can be immediately switched to at any given point and time,’ Hoseok explains as 5 other different coloured lines crisscross over the main blue one and merge into one singular blue over the rest of the colours. ‘The other pathways-’ he taps on the pale orange mesh of lines that expand all over the map and out of sight. ‘-are false networks. These are the ones we will trigger, either through GLA Docks, outposts, anything that has a broadcasting frequency directly connected to the GLA or the GIU.’

‘How do we do that?’ Sk’jin asks, head turning in question at Namjoon.

‘We create false records; first by imitating the Hub used by the ship or station we’re going to hack, and then writing up the report or account- in some cases video footage or even photographs, and send the information out through the local GLA channel.’ Hoseok explains at once. ‘This will create a frenzy of sightings- most of which will just be baseless spam that’s copying itself all over the network – this will give us time as well as cause any Analysts a massive headache.’

‘I hated it when agents did it,’ Namjoon mumbles under his breath before speaking up; ‘Which is why we’re going to double the spam- send double reports that duplicate and spread all over- some might even crash some Hubs- which is even better because that way their back-up systems will be effected as well.’

‘Nice,’ Sk’jin smiles in approval. ‘So where do we first access all these hubs? We need to get a good Dock or Port- one that we know spreads all over.’

Hoseok nods to that and reaches over to tap on one side of the blue lines.

‘We go here first,’ Hoseok taps on it, making it glow white momentarily.

‘Nuqtai- it’s a planet bordering the Ymir Solar System,’ Namjoon begins.

‘Nuqtai?’ Yoongi repeats unexpectedly.

‘Ymir?’ Sk’jin echoes, a frown replacing his smile.

‘Yeah? Please tell me you two don’t have a record there,’ Namjoon pleads.

‘No.’ Sk’jin and Yoongi both reply.

‘…but you’ve been there?’ Hoseok and Namjoon ask at the same time.
'Yes. Several times.' Sk'jin and Yoongi reply again at the same time.

Jimin lets out a nervous laugh, eyes flitting around at all of them as he subtly elbows Taeh’yung who is watching them with a slightly dazed expression.

‘For what?’ Namjoon asks and Hoseok is already regretting the answer because it’s: ‘Assassination,’ and ‘Dying,’ from Yoongi and Sk’jin respectively.

There’s a sticky silence before Hoseok hesitantly addresses the Khol’isa.

‘Dying?’

‘It’s where my ship crashed- like, a little outside- in between these two,’ Sk’jin waves casually between a stretch of space to the side of Ymir. ‘An itsy-bitsy creation gone wrong.’

Namjoon gives Sk’jin a curious look at that, and Hoseok can already tell that his mind is working a mile a second.

‘…this might sound redundant but would you have any history of being documented there?’ Hoseok asks.

‘Nopes! We just vanished- it’s dead space there. No one cared,’ Sk’jin shrugs easily.

‘And uh- Yoongi-?’

‘There were no eye-witnesses.’ Is his unfortunately chilling but reassuring response. Hoseok pushes on.

‘Nuqtai is not the best place, I can confirm that. However, it’s also where we can get the best information not available on the channels. We can also start circulating rumors from there regarding our location.’ Hoseok explains. ‘The planet is a giant hub for information and news- as well as an excellent place to start circulating rumors.’

‘Won’t it have too many actual eye-witnesses?’ Sk’jin asks, as he reads up the summary of the planet on the side of the map. ‘It looks like a trove.’

‘Trove?’ Taeh’yung repeats, pausing in his interpretation.

‘It’s a term used in the Underverse,’ Hoseok explains. ‘A grey-zone, where all sides of the party come to gather information, buy or sell it- unsafe, dangerous.’

Taeh’yung nods in understanding, providing Jimin with an extraordinarily short sentence in explanation. Jimin’s eyes widen comically.

‘Is it a trove?’ Sk’jin asks.

‘No- the GLA don’t step foot in here- it’s Venture Unit agents mainly but only when we have to. It’s Underverse property through and through.’ Hoseok replies and adds, ‘And I know that doesn’t exactly bring about the greatest comfort but given the chaos in the GLA as well as the Underverse- we have an advantageous cover and we can move about unnoticed.’

‘You’re sure?’ Sk’jin asks, eyes darting between Hoseok and Namjoon.

‘Absolutely,’ Hoseok and Namjoon reply at once.

‘When do we get there?’ Sk’jin asks.
‘1 week,’ Hoseok replies, tapping on the NaviLet and a small bright yellow light pops up, following one of the blue lines in the map. ‘We’re here now. We’ll need to leave warp before entering Ymir- it’s a no-warp zone.’

‘Will that be a problem?’ Sk’jin asks sharply.

‘No- Nuqtai is too far from patrols and this border here is void of asteroids, moons, or planets- not to mention Ymir is extremely large and quite uninhabited. The GLA don’t have a lot of branches here- neither do the GIU or the Venture Unit.’ Hoseok explains.

‘Why didn’t we even consider Nuqtai before?’ Yoongi asks unexpectedly. ‘If the planet is ideal to make a stop.’

‘Because it takes us out of our path,’ Namjoon replies, showing a somewhat compressed but still daunting view of how much they would be going off course just to go to Bhumi. ‘It wastes a lot of time, fuel, and units. But it’s also ideal in keeping the GLA off of our tracks.’

‘Everything we do is going to be risky- there’s no doubt about it,’ Hoseok states bluntly. ‘No matter how safe and secure we plot our trajectory, and how much we try and minimize probability and risk, we’re always in danger of being found or noticed. Which is why we’re making sure that our messy false trajectory is good enough to cover for us for long periods of time.’

Sk’jin nods slowly at that while Yoongi doesn’t move. Taeh’yung finishes translating and Jimin also nods, a small smile on his lips.

‘What about Docks though- we still need to register our ship, as well as submit logs,’ Sk’jin asks before nodding at Jimin, ‘And little tiny here is as illegal as it gets.’

‘We need to make an identity for Jimin first,’ Namjoon says as he taps along his screen. ‘I took the liberty of using a Hub from Ch’dra and made us all new identities- as well as for the ship. So our pass-codes have changed- don’t worry, we’re still at Trade B level.’

Hoseok nods in thanks.

‘Seeing as Jimin’s DNA and biochemistry is closest to Taeh’yung’s, and Taeh’yung has been frequently registered as being from Tayi, I’ve created a fake Tayian ID for Jimin. His fake position in the crew is medic,’ Namjoon smiles briefly at Jimin who smiles back a bit confused before Taeh’yung explains. He makes a sound of understanding and nods in understanding.

‘What am I then pa?’ Taeh’yung asks eagerly.

‘Uh- you’re our…’ Namjoon glances down at his screen, subtly making some edit. ‘Engineer.’

Taeh’yung looks extremely pleased and jabbers away at Jimin who looks impressed, patting Taeh’yung on the back.

‘So- that’s our trajectory and plan,’ Hoseok concludes. ‘Any questions?’

‘Where are we headed after Nuqtai?’ Sk’jin asks at once.

‘Grisial,’ Hoseok replies at once.

‘Grisial?’ Namjoon looks impressed. ‘That would make tracking us difficult.’

‘What’s in Grisial?’ Sk’jin asks.
‘It’s actually the Grisial System- but there’s only one planet, one sun,’ Hoseok explains. ‘The planet itself is uninhabitable- but there are mining companies around the rings- they mine crystals here.’

He taps on the planet, expanding it above the rest of the map. It’s a large planet with a wide sparkling ring around it.

‘If you like, put a ring on it.’ Yoongi chimes in unexpectedly.

Sk’jin lets out a loud laugh, head tossed back while Namjoon is stuck between laughing and also looking confused. Taeh’yung, who unnecessarily translates this, is also laughing and is shortly followed by Jimin’s own burst of laughter. He laughs so hard, his entire body tilts forward before bending all the way back, clapping in a delighted way. Yoongi himself looks surprised at himself- as though unsure how and why he said it in the first place.

‘Uhh- so yeah,’ Hoseok snorts before continuing, ‘The planet has a very unique and wide magnetism – the entire System does actually. And while it doesn’t mess with any issues inside ships or Transporters, it does make the area difficult to scan. It’s a nice wide stretch of space and we should be quite safe while warping through here in case we need to escape if things in Nuqtaï don’t go well.’

‘That’s nice to know,’ Sk’jin snorts, finally calming down after Yoongi’s joke.

‘Any questions? Jimin?’ Namjoon regards the Prince with an expectant look.

Jimin shakes his head after Taeh’yung repeats the question.

‘He says thank you,’ Taeh’yung translates, ‘And wants to know if there’s anything he can do to help.’

‘If there is anything we need to know or understand- we’ll ask-‘ Namjoon is beginning to say but Yoongi suddenly interrupts by raising his hand. It’s only a little stiff and awkward as everyone looks at Yoongi, waiting a second too long before the Human speaks.

‘This is not related to the mission or the map,’ he states bluntly.

‘…okay?’ Sk’jin leans closer as though increasingly interested.

‘The OrTank Jimin was placed inside was the same as the OrTanks found in the Akramanese ship. And is the same the GI agents were stored in before they are born.’ Yoongi states. Everyone nods in reply. ‘But there is a difference- because Jimin doesn’t have the scar on his back.’

‘Scar?’ Namjoon repeats. ‘What sort of scar?’

‘I have it- but I don’t know why,’ Yoongi explains.

Jimin shakes his head as Taeh’yung continues to translate. And before anyone can even say anything, Yoongi stands up and pulls off his shirt. Sk’jin makes a rather amused expression while Namjoon covers his eyes instinctively out of panic. But everyone is soon preoccupied by the intensity of scars and permanent discolouration over Yoongi’s skin. He looks like a patchwork of different skin- abrasions protrude outwards, scars layer over each other, and broken patches of capillaries and tissue create deep purple bruises in random burst of painful spots. But what’s most bizarre is the dent on Yoongi’s back.

Hoseok likens it to a dent you can find on your skin after having something pressed against it for a long time. Like if you sat on the folds of your trousers for too long, you could see the print of the fold on your skin. Except Yoongi’s is permanent. And Hoseok can’t come up with an explanation regarding its function or creation. He’s pretty sure no Human was born with this characteristic. Mainly because it didn’t look natural at all.

Taeh’yung says something to Jimin who slowly shakes his head, eyeing the dent on Yoongi’s back with shock and confusion. He tentatively reaches under his shirt, as though to feel at his back.

‘The others had it too. I don’t know why Jimin doesn’t have it.’ Yoongi says.

‘Does it hurt?’ Namjoon asks, having lowered his hands and was now studying the dent on Yoongi’s back.

‘No,’ Yoongi replies before putting his shirt back on. ‘I’ve seen fetuses in the OrTank, and they have wires connected to their backs. It comes off after they fully grown- suspended the way Jimin was. But he has no dent on his back.’

‘It could be a life-support thing?’ Hoseok ruminates. ‘And as far as we can tell- that fluid was neither liquid or gas- it just kept them in a state of sleep right?’

‘Jimin- you said that Yoongi died during your time- but did you see his body?’ Namjoon asks sharply. Sk’jin’s eyes narrow as he regards Namjoon for a moment before glancing over at Jimin. Jimin stiffens, lips pressed down against each other tightly before he says something in short words.

‘No- he was taken away,’ Taeh’yung translates. ‘There was no body- many of them were taken and were never seen again.’

Namjoon mulls over this, his expression serious.

‘Any other questions?’ Hoseok asks.

‘Can I buy new clothes in Nuqta?’ Taeh’yung asks eagerly.

‘No- only Hoseok is leaving the ship,’ Namjoon replies at once. ‘Everyone else stays inside. We can get you new clothes after Grisial.’

Taeh’yung pouts- honest to goodness pouts, making sad eyes at Namjoon who tries not to fidget.

‘I’ll see if I can get something for you Tae,’ Hoseok says only to suddenly get an armful of the Zhak’gri as he squeals out delightfully and hugs him.

‘Anything else?’ Hoseok asks with some difficulty.

‘Sk’jin can I talk to you for a moment- in private,’ Namjoon asks out of nowhere, making everyone in the Mast look back at the Kutsoglerin.

Sk’jin narrows his eyes a little before giving him a small nod. They walk out of the Bridge, leaving everyone behind in some form of awkward silence. Until-‘Hobi, here’s a list of what I want!’

Sk’jin follows Namjoon out to the landing by the stairs before entering the Bridge. He can already guess what Namjoon’s purpose is and he’s more than ready.

So before Namjoon can even say anything Sk’jin speaks up: ‘If I think you’re about to suggest what I think you’re going to suggesting- that’s a dumb idea, and it’s under the supervision of the GIU.’

Undeterred Namjoon speaks, ‘We won’t be that far away-’

‘We will be. We’ll be at least 2 entire Systems away even at Nuqta,’ Sk’jin retorts.

Namjoon’s lips press into a thin line.

‘The planet you crashed into all those years ago had the same inability to be mapped or scanned-similar to Bhumi. Not to mention the strange occurrences in that planet relating to the Venture Unit’s attempt in creating other dimensions- what if it’s all connected?’ Namjoon demands. ‘You cannot just hide planets, let alone entire Systems; this planet in dead space, and the Bhumi System are connected.’

Sk’jin knows they’re connected because the first time he heard of Bhumi, that correlation was the first thing he thought of. But Sk’jin puts his metaphoric foot down.

‘There is also no evidence that suggests there is any similarity to-’

‘Yes there is- and you know it-’ Namjoon presses.

Sk’jin grits his teeth down, visions flashing before his eyes.

‘I am not going back there are you out of your mind? Would you go back to your planet?’ Sk’jin demands.

Namjoon’s expression darkens.

‘I can’t go back because there’s nothing to go back to,’ Namjoon states bluntly.

Sk’jin takes a deep breath, trying to pacify himself.

‘Is it currently under GIU supervision?’ Namjoon asks, gnawing at his lip.

‘Yes it is.’ Sk’jin replies at once. ‘And every form of evidence found in that planet has been contained and sealed, stored away in the GIU mothership. What’s left is simply the planet itself. And I do not think our trajectory has added this planet to its calculations. We cannot deter, Namjoon.’

‘This isn’t about ignoring the mission- you know our mission covers more than just delivering Jimin to Bhumi- there are other connections here-’

‘I don’t remember signing up for some vigilante bullshit,’ Sk’jin snaps back. ‘What happened before with the slaver ship, and then with Pompa- those were great mistakes we made, with repercussions we are barely capable of handling, and most certainly don’t need to add to. I don’t know what you’re thinking- maybe that what we did was some bull-shit hero-like thing- but it’s not- we fucked up big time and now we’re trying to hide from that fuck-up shit. So let’s not add to it. Got it?’

‘You told me you wanted to understand what else was happening- what other things the GLA were doing that-’ Namjoon ploughs on, ignoring Sk’jin’s statement.

‘Yes- that is what I said,’ Sk’jin snaps, remembering their discussion in Ch’dra. ‘But like I told you before that was before we triggered all of this into action.’

Namjoon grimaces at him. And honestly Sk’jin knows what Namjoon is saying. If they were in a different situation, where the entire Known Universe forces wasn’t looking for them, then yeah, Sk’jin would like to study these similarities in order to gain better understanding of what happened in that fucked up planet, and to prepare for what they might face in Bhumi. But they couldn’t simply do that on such a small whim. And one look at Namjoon tells him that the Kutsoglerin wasn’t just going to let this go.

‘Hoseok!’ they both call out at the same time.

Hoseok appears in a few seconds, expression confused and a little wary.

‘What?’

‘Namjoon has a crack-pot idea and I have a sound reasoning to bury it. Wanna hear?’

Namjoon glares at him before clearing his throat, drawing Hoseok’s attention.

‘Bhumi is not the only planet or system that has the ability to remain undetected and hidden,’ Namjoon says. ‘There is another planet that was hidden as a result of what we suspect-’

‘-there is no we here-’

‘-to be a result of early Venture Unit and GLA experiments regarding the Hyper-Reality Expansion Program that was shut down over a millennia ago,’ Namjoon explains.

‘You’re saying that there’s a connection?’

‘Yes- Jimin said that his System was hidden. But it’s not. At least not fully. It’s a System that was discovered and studied for near centuries- and even then it was still a mystery because you couldn’t ever scan or observe it without losing it in front of your very eyes. And based on what Jimin has said – they have tech that allows them to do this.’ Namjoon states. ‘And I think this connects to Jimin- at least based on what he’s explained. The Akramanese were only ever known of after that incident in Bhumi- and the Treaty Panel had been visiting them for years before that-based on what Lmiura said, and the fact that despite being hidden, the GLA was still able to make some scan of their System, they were able to somehow either overtake their tech or mimic it.’ Namjoon explains. ‘Their technology is something we have never experienced- and the way Jimin handles our tech-’

‘-is with too much ease,’ Hoseok agrees. ‘He clearly comes from a place with advanced technology- probably even more advanced than us.’

‘-what if the GLA stole their tech, and using that created whatever messed up that other planet?’ Namjoon concludes.

‘And while that is a good point,’ Sk’jin butts in. ‘We do not have the security or time to do something like this. The planet I was on is in dead space, under heavy protection of the GIU- and need I remind you that K’mara leads the GIU?’

‘But this can explain so much-‘

‘Why not just ask Jimin?’ Hoseok offers.

‘What?’ Sk’jin and Namjoon echo at the same time. Sk’jin grimaces inwardly- they all had to stop doing that twinning thing.

Hoseok pauses a moment before calling, ‘Could everyone come up to the Bridge?’

* *

‘We never left!’ Taeh’yung exclaims when they walk back in.

They’re still at the Mast, and Yoongi and Jimin are attempting to have a conversation. He’s doing that thing again, where Jimin will point at himself and then back at Yoongi, waiting.

‘I think he’s expecting something- some statement or word?’ Sk’jin offers offhandedly as they step up on the Mast. ‘He keeps repeating your name and his name- he clearly wants you to remember something.’

Yoongi is obviously thinking hard, his mind practically whirring.

Jemin is leaning forward, expression expectant as Yoongi opens his mouth.

‘Your majesty?’ Yoongi sounds unsure. Sk’jin nearly chokes.

Jemin is confused for a total of 10 seconds while Taeh’yung translates. He then turns bright red, waving his hands frantically at Yoongi, stuttering rapidly.

‘He doesn’t want to be called that,’ Taeh’yung explains, translating Jimin’s embarrassed stammers.

‘Yoongi’s failing memory aside,’ Sk’jin calls out dryly, amused by the look Yoongi sends his direction, ‘Cap here has something he wants to ask Jimin about.’

Sk’jin is very amused by the look Namjoon sends his direction before he starts to speak: ‘There’s an uninhabited planet in the dead space that borders Sluchaen and Cabcd. It was previously undetectable and was the cause of strange magnetic waves that were credited to the massive disappearances of ships and Transporters alike. It was later discovered that an extremely old Venture Unit ship had first crashed into this planet carrying the remains of an experiment gone wrong in the Hyper-Reality Expansion Program.’

Taeh’yung translates before stopping abruptly.

‘There’s no word for Hyper-Reality in his language,’ he explains.

‘…uh… I guess, dreams?’ Namjoon provides.

Taeh’yung looks skeptical but he continues. Jimin listens closely, not speaking a single word as he nods.
‘I believe that this tech might come from your system.’

They wait in silence as Taeh’yung translates. Jimin’s expression remains the same, not a single hint or indication of what he was feeling.

Then he begins to speak, Taeh’yung nods along a few times. Jimin speaks for nearly over a minute, hands waving a little. Taeh’yung asks one question before he nods and then the Zhak’gri faces them and says, ‘He doesn’t know!’

Namjoon blinks a few times.

‘He spoke for nearly over a minute- and that’s all he said?’ Hoseok asks with a frown.

‘Yeah- there was some long thing about how he’s not really supposed to talk about how they hide their System- but he did say he really doesn’t know if what they use for their planet is the same as whatever planet you’re talking about,’ Taeh’yung expands.

But before anyone can say anything else Jimin asks Taeh’yung a question, a curious expression on his face.

‘He wants to know what you mean by the “dream space”.’

‘It was an experiment,’ Namjoon explains. ‘The Venture Unit wanted to create an alternative reality- a secondary dimension that was all inside your head- but it connected your mind to everyone else’s- a link, and it would be controllable by one Being. It was one of their attempts in taking over the Universe. The program was shut down and the ship carrying that technology and experiment went missing. We found out 4 sols ago that it had crashed in that planet I mentioned earlier.’

Taeh’yung translates this. It takes a while because Taeh’yung seems to be struggling with some of the words, thinking hard. Sk’jin doesn’t know why but he feels like this was leading to something he would prefer not to know. One glance at Namjoon tells him that the Kutsoglerin is about 2 seconds from bursting with anticipation. Yoongi is looking down, and Sk’jin notices how Jimin is still holding onto his hand. It makes Sk’jin stop his other thoughts and concentrate on their hands.

Jimin had that thing that he did. Touching them carefully, hands framing their cheeks, or touching their hands. Always skin on skin. Like he was reading into their minds, or sensing something. It wasn’t the same as with Yishengs- because Sk’jin couldn’t feel anything in his Life-stream. It was just a touch.

To connect.

‘Sounds very cruel and inhumane,’ Taeh’yung finishes translating for Jimin who looks very serious.

‘Jimin. Can you read minds?’ Sk’jin asks bluntly. He ignores the bewildered expression he gets from Hoseok and Namjoon. Yoongi actually looks around at Jimin as though anticipating an answer.

‘He can see memories- dreams, nightmares-,’ Taeh’yung explains after Jimin replies. ‘He can’t read minds. It’s not something he can do all the time.’

A strange shudder runs down Sk’jin’s back at that. He glances at Jimin who is slowly explaining something to Taeh’yung while the latter translated. ‘It’s not an ability he has non-stop- like it’s not uh…it can be stopped- and it’s only possible if the other person is willing. Or when Jimin is in…a trance? It needs to be done on purpose- with purpose and the correct intention.’
Jimin nods as Taeh’yung repeats a few words.

‘He requires touch right? With his hands?’ Sk’jin asks carefully. ‘So that if we just nudged arms, he wouldn’t just see my dreams or shit.’

Taeh’yung repeats Sk’jin’s question and Jimin nods in reply, adding a few words as though to placate. But Sk’jin doesn’t bother listening and instead catches Namjoon’s eyes who is already looking at him.

‘I’m tired,’ Taeh’yung is whining. ‘I think I want to sleep-’

‘Namjoon can I talk to you for a moment- in private.’

*%

Namjoon finds himself in the same place, the same stairwell, as Sk’jin faces him, same posture, same facial expression. They wait as Taeh’yung skips down the stairs with Jimin next to him. The latter gives them a curious look before waving goodnight. Yoongi slips past as well, following after the two down the stairs. They wait 10 more seconds before Sk’jin begins.

‘Remember when I said that I thought what you were suggesting was a dumb idea, and that it was under the supervision of the GIU?’

Namjoon nods.

‘Right. I lied. Everything is still present in the planet, and though the GIU are still running supervision over it, they’re been stopped to only observe the planet and have been banned from entering under orders of the GLA Judiciary.’

Namjoon finds himself literally praying for patience.

‘You lied-’

‘You’re always ignoring the more important facts for mundane gibberish,’ Sk’jin waves his hand dismissively.

‘The “important fact” you’re talking about was hidden because of your lie!’ Namjoon hisses out, ‘It’s not mundane gibberish- Sk’jin, I thought we agreed not to keep back information we know will be relevant to what we’re doing!’

‘And it wasn’t relevant! It still isn’t!’ Sk’jin snaps back. ‘Our mission is to take tiny-princeling back to his System- not take detours to heavily guarded risky planets in dead space!’

‘Then why are you saying you want to do it now?!’

‘Because I want to know if the GLA took his technology and manipulated it to create whatever the fuck nightmare I lived for centuries!’ Sk’jin snaps. ‘I’m being honest here- I selfishly want to know- to see if the hell I lived through was in fact created because of pip-squeak’s tech. And yeah-maybe we might somehow figure out something useful that will help us- which I still doubt by the way- but I’m willing to take that risk.’
‘You’re hiding something here again,’ Namjoon huffs out. ‘I already told you about the tech part-you weren’t convinced. What else are you thinking about? You asked him very specific questions and I’m ready to do the same unless you tell me what your real agenda is.’

‘Oh wow I’m shaking in my shoes,’ Sk’jin rolls his eyes. ‘Fine- remember when we had that really nice bonding moment in Ch’dra, and I told you about the First Nightmare,’ Sk’jin winks at Namjoon who grimaces but nods in remembrance of that information. ‘It saw me. And I saw it. But it could never touch me.’

‘Touch you?’ Namjoon remembers what Sk’jin told him with startling clarity. He sometimes mulls over it, and he shudders at the idea of it.

‘The First Nightmare had the ability to duplicate itself- replicate itself into another form-pretending to be someone else. It would take their memories, dreams, nightmares, - consume them. All it needed was a touch. It needed to touch its victims and they would get caught. It would be able to see into their minds. Does this sound familiar to you?’

Namjoon pauses. Because yes it did sound familiar.

‘But that’s a long stretch-’

‘So was your tech-talk.’

Sk’jin was brutally honest, that was one thing. He was also clearly a liar. Namjoon doesn’t know what to do. While the entire story about how whatever the thing- First Nightmare - Sk’jin encountered in that planet had to touch its victims to “read”/”consume” them was similar to the way Jimin had to touch someone in order to gain access to their thoughts- it was still rather sketchy in Namjoon’s opinion. But then again, so was his theory about the planet and Bhumi.

They’re at a stalemate once again.

Sk’jin raises one eyebrow and at the same time they both call out, ‘Hoseok!’

Hoseok has his arms crossed, expression unimpressed, as he listens to Sk’jin.

‘So you’re saying now that you agree with Namjoon’s plan. And that you want to go to this dead space planet- that’s guarded by the GIU, because by chance, Jimin might be able to explain what happened to the planet, also explain the reason why the planet couldn’t be seen, as well as demonstrate his abilities, explain the possible connection he has with the “experiment” that was in that planet, and what happened to your ship?’ Hoseok summarizes.

‘Yes.’ Sk’jin and Namjoon both reply.

Hoseok pauses a moment before calling, ‘Could everyone come up to the Bridge?’
They’re gathered around the Navigation Mast again, Hoseok literally facepalming where he stood.

Taeh’yung is half-asleep, slumped over Jimin who is holding onto Yoongi’s hand again, eyes darting around the room at all of their faces.

‘After we go to Nuqtai- we’re taking a detour here,’ Hoseok points at a blank space.

‘That’s dead space though?’ Taeh’yung yawns, looking down at it with sleepy curiosity.

‘That’s the planet that was undetectable- where I died,’ Sk’jin states simply. ‘And we believe this connects to Jimin and his System.’

Taeh’yung translates amidst yawns. Jimin nods, water dripping from his hair, clearly having just showered. His hair is darker like this, but it’s still difficult to tell if it was gold or silver. If he had any questions regarding Sk’jin’s death he doesn’t voice them.

‘He says he’ll do all he can to help. He also wants to know if there’s a possibility that their technology was stolen from them. He said something about how that might explain a few questions he has too.’

Namjoon nods grimly at that, feeling a little strange to have Sk’jin’s agreement. He almost wants to take it back but he doesn’t. With this, they could uncover more about their situation in a wider perspective.

‘Is that it?’ Taeh’yung asks with a mighty yawn. ‘I really wanna sleep pa.’

‘Yes- we’re sorry,’ Namjoon says with a smile, patting the Zhak’gri on his shoulder. ‘You guys go get some sleep. And Jimin, could I have your screen? I’ll archive the new words you set into the dictionary.’

He points at the screen in Jimin’s hands. Jimin nods in understanding without needing translation. After all this wasn’t the first time Namjoon asked him this. Namjoon was recording and tracking the process of transcribing Jimin’s language into a form that could be used to provide translations. Every word he asked Jimin to speak is recorded, in every variation possible, and then cross-referenced into the GLA Database to find similarities. They already had a numerical chart, as well as the alphabets. The more complicated grammatical and structural aspect of the language would have to wait. For now they needed commonly used words and terms.

‘Taking the night-round?’ Hoseok asks as he makes to step away from the Mast.

‘Yeah,’ Namjoon nods as he slots the screen under the Navigation Table. ‘I’m just going to put this into our archive.’

Hoseok nods and bids him goodnight.

Namjoon nearly has a heart attack when he realizes that Yoongi is still there. He almost didn’t see him despite the fact that the Human was literally feet away from him.

‘Spaces-‘

‘Going there might hurt him,’ Yoongi says unexpectedly.

‘What do you mean?’ Namjoon asks, bewildered by Yoongi’s statement. ‘Who?’

‘Memories are painful,’ is all Yoongi says before he quietly leaves.
The OrTank is kept in the Hangar Bay. They had analyzed it completely but found that there was nothing strange or unique about it. But Yoongi comes back to it frequently. It seemed fragile and almost cheap without a Being inside of it. Yoongi wonders where his own OrTank was.

‘Yoongi?’

Yoongi realizes that he’s never seen an eclipse before.

None that he’s actually realized and experienced as he was. He simply knew about them, knew what they looked like, and how they came to form. But he’s never seen one. But there are two of them, looking straight at him. And Yoongi knows that the moon blocks the sun, orbiting to cover its light, creating a ring around it before eventually moving past. But in Jimin’s eyes they’re permanent. Staying there, unmoving, caught in time.

And they’re blinding.

Yoongi couldn’t sleep. Instead he stayed up memorizing the trajectories and maps and details of their upcoming plan. When he finished doing that in 10 minutes Yoongi left his Cabin and mindlessly wandered around the ship. Despite not being able to sleep, Sk’jin sure acted like he needed it. Taeh’yung rarely closed his doors, and Yoongi can hear him snoring from the Lobby. So he made his way down instead, to just stare at the OrTank.

‘I couldn’t sleep,’ Yoongi says.

For some reason this makes Jimin smile, shaking his head.

‘Hhman ang khan tu na pon i la mu thei lo mo?’

Yoongi briefly thinks of calling Taeh’yung but decides not to.

‘Enge i ti mek?’ Jimin walks up next to him, looking down at his OrTank as well.

‘I was just…thinking.’

This also makes Jimin laugh. Yoongi smiles slowly in response.

Jimin studies the OrTank, mumbling to himself as he touches it, looking over it. He steps inside of it and for some reason this freaks Yoongi out. And before he’s aware, he’s yanking Jimin out, halfway across the Hangar away from the OrTank.

Jimin’s eyes widen in shock.

‘S-sorry,’ Yoongi manages to get out. ‘I- I uh, I don’t think you should go in there.’

He points at the OrTank and crosses his hands together to form an “X”. Jimin nods, still confused. Not sure what to do, Yoongi turns and promptly leaves the Bay. He’s aware that Jimin is following him and Yoongi finds himself in the Bridge. Namjoon doesn’t notice him until he walks past. He’s used to the way Namjoon jumps every time he spots Yoongi.

Yoongi finds it extremely funny and sometimes does it on purpose.

He almost smiles but stops himself, unsure where that particular impulse came from.

Making his way to the tower-mast, Yoongi sits down, and Jimin is sitting next to him a few seconds later. He smiles at him, a slight hesitance to the way his lips pull up, his eyes holding a worried expression. It was boring sitting here, or at least, Yoongi thinks it’s supposed to be boring for most Beings. When Yoongi sat here, he normally listened to audio-books through his screen, read up history, studied basic GLA education, and tried to catch up on all of Earth’s filmography to better understand his original culture and past. If what Jimin was saying was true, then Yoongi had been alive and…and Yoongi over 800 years ago. What was happening in Ancient Earth 800 years ago?

A thought occurs to him and he reaches for his screen. Jimin watches his movements carefully, his legs drawn in, folded up and pressed against his chest.

He pulls up the records and archives from Earth, outlined by the GLA Database. He’s not sure about how many exact sols ago he was alive so he just types in a random year 850 years ago. Earth wasn’t the most interesting of planets and her solar system wasn’t exciting. The planets in it were normal and dormant, with the exception of Jupiter which was the largest planet in the solar system. No important or eye-catching activity is recorded- the option is available for headlines that came from Earth that year but before Yoongi threw himself into reading a full Earth-sol worth of news and headlines, Jimin leans closer and points.

‘Urthh?’ Jimin says carefully.

Yoongi wonders how Jimin recognized the planet. He nods.

Jimin’s expression turns bright at once, smiling as he looks down at the screen. He’s about to speak but then pauses, head swiveling clearly looking for Taeh’yung. But the Zhak’gri is not in the Bridge. Seemingly making up his mind, Jimin excuses himself. His movements are light and graceful; he’s almost as quiet as Hoseok. Yoongi hears him speak, and Namjoon reply with a questioning sound. A few seconds later, Jimin appears again, this time with his screen. He taps a few times on the surface before activating a sketching tab. Carefully but hurriedly, Jimin sketches a basic picture of a house- the design of it somehow transcending most galaxies and systems: a square box with a roof and windows. He then draws a stick figure and points at Yoongi, and then back at his own screen.

‘In?’ Jimin tilts his head.

‘…home,’ Yoongi nods slowly.

‘H-home,’ Jimin repeats carefully, his accent a little skewed.

Yoongi nods again.

Jimin goes back to the tab and next to the figure that’s supposed to be Yoongi, he draws another figure. This one is slightly smaller, and clearly female. Then next to that one, another female. He smiles expectantly at Yoongi, waiting for something. Yoongi looks back at the image, his mind suddenly filled with white noise. He’s not sure what to do or say.

Jimin looks back at the drawing and then adds a small detail to the figure of the smaller female. A small star-shaped item and colours it in carefully with purple.

Yoongi stares at the stick-figures, his mind drawing blanks. He looks back at Jimin and shakes his head. He expects Jimin to maybe attempt drawing again but instead he feels fingers carefully feeling at his palm. He stretches his hand open. Jimin could “read” into his memories with contact. Yoongi isn’t sure if that was what he was doing right now. If someone tried to probe into your mind, wouldn’t you feel it? Jimin is watching him with a careful expression.

Was he doing it now?

Jimin places his palm over Yoongi’s and then he points at himself with his free hand, and then taps Yoongi’s head lightly, his head tilted to the side. He was asking permission, Yoongi figures, and so he slowly nods, not sure what to do now. So instead he settles for studying the illustration on Jimin’s tab. Yoongi doesn’t know what Jimin means by what he drew- but there was something of importance in what he just shared, Yoongi knew of it. And something deep inside of him doesn’t want to know. But another small small part of him, is reaching out.

Before he knows it, Yoongi changes the tabs on his screen and putting aside the image of Earth as she once was, Yoongi pulls up the footage of Earth’s remains. It was now a stretch of asteroids marking the former existence of a planet that was supposed to be Yoongi’s home. Yoongi points at the side-by-side pictures and then at the one Jimin drew, drawing the latter’s attention away.

‘How many planets do you see from here?’

He points slowly, pointing first at Jimin’s drawing, then at Earth, and then the asteroid remains. It takes a moment for Jimin to realize what Yoongi is trying to tell him.

His face blanches, breath caught in his throat. It’s automatic- his hands shake and Yoongi doesn’t understand.

Why was Jimin behaving as though it was his planet that was destroyed?

‘Yoongi-‘ he manages to say before he pulls him into a hug.

Yoongi is not the most comfortable at the moment. He’s squashed to the side, the arm of his chair digging into his ribs that are still a little sore. He’s not used to physical contact like this- and to this extent. It’s been 13 seconds and counting and Jimin still hasn’t let go.

‘It’s okay,’ he finds himself saying. ‘I don’t remember anything about Earth.’

Jimin pulls away, eyes wet as he looks over Yoongi’s face before placing both his hands on his face. Yoongi sits still, looking over Jimin’s face instead of feeling uncomfortable.

And it’s not uncomfortable- Yoongi feels like he’s long-gone past the time of feeling uncomfortable though it’s only been a few days since Jimin woke up and since he woke up as well. All of this felt familiar- his mind doesn’t register this sensation. Rather it’s his body that responds. He relaxes in a strange manner when Jimin was around. He felt better, though Yoongi doesn’t know why or how and in what relation, when Jimin was in sight. It was the same when he was in the OrTank. But now it was clearer, but just as confusing.

Jimin still looks upset, hands shaking as he holds the screen in his hands, looking down at the asteroids. Yoongi’s mind jumps to every book he’s read about offering comfort to Beings when they were upset.

‘Do…do you want to watch a movie?’ Yoongi asks tentatively.
Jimin looks up, eyelashes wet. Fidgeting with his sleeves, Yoongi dabs, probably a bit too harshly, at Jimin’s cheeks. His attempt at blotting Jimin’s face ends up with laughter from Jimin who pushes his hand away and wipes at his face himself.

Yoongi points at his screen for a moment before he decides to just pick a movie and watch it. He’s going through the list of movies when Jimin’s hand reaches in and takes the screen from him. Surprised but not acting out, Yoongi waits as Jimin scrolls through the almost endless list of movies. The titles were written and next to it a small moving clip and poster— but Jimin doesn’t pause to ogle at them or even study them. It was as though he knew exactly what he was looking for. It was almost as though he knew exactly what he was doing, as though this wasn’t the first time he’s seen something like this. Perhaps his past-self had done the same? If that was actually a thing?

Jimin pauses at a title and then taps on it before handing it back to Yoongi.

To Yoongi’s surprise it’s The Sleeping Beauty— a movie he just recently watched. It starts to play and Yoongi has a feeling that this would be the second time they both watched it together. Halfway through the movie, Taeh’yung appears. His bed-hair is spectacular and his clothes are inside out. He’s dragged a blanket with him and throwing it over Jimin, manages to worm his way into Jimin’s seat. They adjust for a while until they’re both squashed up in one place. Taeh’yung pauses a moment before he throws a small square of blanket over Yoongi’s knee.

It's warm.

‘Heard Chim singing,’ he yawns wide, though Yoongi has asked him no question.

‘Chim?’ Yoongi repeats.

Taeh’yung nods and with a sleepy grin says, ‘t’s his nickname.’

Yoongi glances at Jimin who is eyeing him as though he just realized something. He hurriedly points at Yoongi, rather aggressively.

‘Yoongi?’ Yoongi answers.

Jimin nods. Then he points at himself.

‘Jimin.’

He nods, and then he points at himself again and says, ‘Chim.’

Yoongi glances at Taeh’yung who is already asleep, arms sticking out randomly.

‘Chim,’ Yoongi nods. ‘It’s your nickname from Taeh’yung.’

‘N-nikk naim,’ Jimin tries out with a nod, before pointing at Yoongi and then at himself.

‘…you want me,’ Yoongi points at himself, and then at Jimin, ‘To give you a nickname?’

Jimin nods, waiting expectantly.

Yoongi tries. He really does. But he suspects that there was more to this than just simply wanting a nickname. If what Jimin was saying was true, then did that mean Yoongi had once given him a nickname? He searches Jimin’s face, wondering what he saw in the past, what he felt, what he thought, that would elicit a nickname.
‘I’m sorry I don’t remember,’ Yoongi whispers.

Jimin looks down for a moment, gnawing at his lip in thought. They don’t speak after that, and instead continue watching the movie.

Jimin hums along to the tune of Once Upon a Dream and Yoongi doesn’t question it.

Ymir is an extraordinarily beautiful stretch of space. It’s a no warp zone and though they’re only passing through for a total of 5 hours, they find themselves looking down upon a wide stretch of a massive golden nebula. It seems to move, liquid almost, as though the stars encased in their light and colour could move – dancing upon music unheard and beyond their imagination.

It’s breathtaking and predictably, Taeh’yung and Jimin are stuck onto the windows around the tower-mast, peering down with obvious excitement and awe. It’s been over 3 hours and the two of them were still excited. Namjoon finds it endearing- a little odd, but endearing. Odd, especially considering the fact that Taeh’yung should have probably witnessed a few nebulas in his lifetime. He’s not sure if Bhumi saw nebulas, considering Jimin’s awe over them. Maybe he was just enthusiastic? They were beautiful after all.

‘Kids, look up ahead,’ Sk’jin calls indulgently from where he stood strategically, the light from the nebula highlighting him in a flattering angle. Sk’jin had been doing that for hours- star-bathing, apparently. But Namjoon has spotted the Khol’isa taking discreet pictures of himself on his own screen.

Taeh’yung and Jimin both look upwards and gasps of amazement ensues as a whirling mass of blue and magenta swirl above them. Jimin actually stretches his hand upwards, as though to try and touch it. He stops himself halfway, as though realizing his action, looking a little embarrassed. Taeh’yung has no shame and jumps on his feet as though to reach for the stars above.

‘It’s even more beautiful than when I came here,’ he proclaims, ignorant of the way everyone’s (sans Jimin) heads swivel to stare at him.

‘You’ve been in Ymir before?!’ Hoseok demands, no doubt already thinking of potential routes around to Nuqṭai.

‘Yeah! It’s where the Yisheng found me! I was breaking a law or something,’ Taeh’yung shrugs.

Namjoon wonders why everything has turned into a space-drama with a plot even the readers of Sk’jin’s trash novels would turn their noses at.

‘…where in Ymir?’ Hoseok asks carefully.

‘Uh- swampy. Humid. Small,’ Taeh’yung says absently as he tries to look and down at the same time, nodding at a violent pace.

‘…what were you- wait.’ Hoseok takes a short moment while Namjoon looks up this swampy humid small planet. The Ymir System was home to 27 planets, 2 suns, some 78 moons, and 2 asteroid belts. And out of all of these, only 9 were capable of housing life and sustaining it. Ymir had an incredibly narrow and carefully maintained habitable zone.

Namjoon filters the list down to Ubhuku, a small uninhabitable planet. It wasn’t uninhabitable because it was barren- on the contrary it was bursting with life and was basically a planet-sized greenhouse. The atmosphere was quite acidic, so all the plants that grew there were evolved to thrive in those conditions. Many of the plants were carnivorous, Namjoon discovers. And it was also a planet where the GLA had tried to maintain a program of sorts.

‘Tae- were you ever involved in something called the ‘Accelerated Evolution Program’?’ Namjoon asks, clearing his throat.

‘No!’ Taeh’yung finally looks away, his eyes cross-eyed from nodding so violently. ‘It’s fake- it was made to cover up my “crimes”.’

Sk’jin and Hoseok both pale.

‘And that was?’

‘I only wanted to see if I could create life?’ Taeh’yung shrugs as he recovers from his disorientation. ‘I wasn’t trying to kill anyone or destroy anything-’

‘And so the GLA found you,’ Namjoon is trying hard to remain calm. ‘-and stopped you, and covered up your experiment by saying it was something they did?’

‘They didn’t stop me!’ Taeh’yung explains as he skips up to the Navigator’s Mast. ‘They just told me to continue and watched what I could do. Then after I made Umholi they decided to stop and they took me to prison!’

Hoseok looks like he’s about 2 seconds from fainting- or firing his TeorSer at Taeh’yung.

‘So you have a record?’

‘Nopes! I’m not supposed to exist,’ Taeh’yung replies easily.

‘It should be fine,’ Yoongi chimes in unexpectedly. ‘We are far from Ubhuku.’

While that was true, it still didn’t make this information any less disturbing. Also, what did Taeh’yung mean by create life? And what was an Umholi? Something tells him he doesn’t really want to know.

A small beep from his screen alerts him, signaling that his search was completed. Stepping away from the Mast, he makes his way down to the lowest tier of the Bridge where Yoongi sat. The Human was also watching the nebulas, though what he thought of them was a little vague as he held no expression on his face. Namjoon takes a seat next to him, handing him his NaviLet.

‘I found it,’ he says simply.

Yoongi takes the NaviLet but he doesn’t open the tab yet.

‘You can take your time with it- it’s pretty monumental I would think,’ Namjoon tells him.

‘Thank you,’ Yoongi says quietly, sloting his own screen over the NaviLet to transfer the contents.

Yoongi had asked him to look his name up on Earth- narrowing it down to a 30 sol gap on Earth from approximately over 800 years ago. It wasn’t difficult to do- finding and pulling old records because every GLA-based planet or System was always recorded and archived in the GLA Database. It wasn’t surprising to Namjoon that Yoongi or any Human that looked like him wasn’t on the official GLA office records or credits. If what Jimin was saying was true, and seeing how closely related Yoongi was to all of this in the past, they would have removed every trace of his existence and or involvement. So instead he scanned Earth’s media and local forums. And after nearly 4 days he found an almost accurate match. He takes back the NaviLet from Yoongi once the transfer is done. Namjoon doesn’t know how Yoongi must feel, knowing that there was a lifetime of memories he couldn't remember- a life he once lived, with his own unique complexities.

Namjoon feels as though it might drive him crazy if he knew.

‘You’re welcome,’ Namjoon replies back sincerely.

‘For the last time, does anyone have anything else they might want to add before we go to Nuqtai?’ Hoseok calls tiredly from the cockpit.

‘It’s noisy as hell,’ Yoongi mumbles.

Namjoon is sure he’s the only one who heard.

* * *

‘It’s noisy as hell,’ Hoseok complains.

They had landed in Nuqtai some hour ago at a landing strip south of the main sprawling city. They were closer to the aqua-ducts that fed water to the cities. Yoongi is standing next to him, staring at the aqua-ducts with more intensity than strictly required.

‘I’ll get to the main system in a few minutes. Is Sk’jin done?’ Hoseok asks.

They left it to Sk’jin to “talk” to the immigration officers in Nuqtai. They weren’t actually officers- just a bunch of organized gangs that controlled certain areas of Nuqtai. You had to pay for their silence, rather than a landing spot. And Sk’jin was probably their best choice in such a task so the Khol’isa had left with a skip to his step, hair flipping back in a sparkling wave of pink.

‘He’s on his way back,’ Namjoon replies.

‘All right- I’ll call if anything’s amiss, otherwise I should be done pretty soon.’

‘Don’t forget my clothes!’ Taeh’yung adds.

Namjoon hears Hoseok hum a response before the harsh white-noise of Nuqtai’s sprawling excuse of a city cuts out.

‘Sk’jin has been standing outside for a while,’ Yoongi comments.

Namjoon checks his screen and finds that yes, the Khol’isa was just standing still some ways from the ship.

‘Sk’jin?’ Namjoon calls.
There’s no reply.

‘Lisai- can you check on Sk’jin?’

‘Communications Manager Sk’jin is currently on line. He is attending a call.’

Namjoon swiftly makes his way out of the Bridge and down the ship.

The air out is cool- the weather taking a turn with the day. It smells like stagnant water, rust, and pollution out here. Namjoon is quiet when needed and Sk’jin is close to a slightly rumbly aquaduct. The Khol’isa is talking in a low voice, attention riveted as he stands aimlessly atop the tank. It’s not Standard, and Namjoon has listened to that tape-recording from the first few weeks of their mission to recognize Long-Huon. Namjoon waits until Sk’jin finishes his conversation to clear his throat. Turning swiftly, Sk’jin levels him with a cool gaze.

‘Is this something you don’t want to tell me about because it’s not important?’ Namjoon asks.

‘You’re right. Is Hoseok back?’ Sk’jin asks sharply.

‘Not yet.’ Namjoon sighs out, ignoring the unpleasant feeling at the back of his neck. ‘Who were you talking to?’

‘Contact,’ Sk’jin replies evasively, there’s a sudden fierce look to his eye as he says, ‘Since we both decided to go to that planet, I thought it would be a good idea to nose around for additional information. He should know, after all he was there with me and was the reason why I could leave in the first place.’

‘Who is it? Your contact.’

‘I can’t tell you.’

‘Won’t or can’t?’

‘It’s none of your business.’

Namjoon doesn’t press on the subject.

‘What else did your contact say?’

‘That this was a dumb idea and you shouldn’t be our captain,’ Sk’jin replies at once.

Namjoon rolls his eyes.

‘He also said that there are only 2 ships surrounding the planet. There are no patrols- just spatial observation and footage recording,’ Sk’jin adds. ‘A simple magnetic detonation can cut them off long enough for us to enter the planet undetected.’

Namjoon nods in reply to that.

‘Hey- is Taeh’yung there with you? Does he prefer green or purple?’ Hoseok asks.

‘Purple,’ Sk’jin replies before adding, ‘Tae- Hobi’s buying you clothes, you got yourself a new daddy.’

‘Sk’jin please-‘
‘Yoongi, where is Taeh’yung, please tell him to put his Comm-Device back on,’ Namjoon sighs as he turns back around to go back to the ship.

There’s no reply.

Namjoon hears Sk’jin swear quietly under his breath. A second unpleasant sensation grips the back of his neck.

‘Yoongi, Taeh’yung, Jimin- where are you?’

There’s no reply.

Namjoon and Sk’jin sprint back into the ship. And they don’t need to search for too long to know that it’s empty.

‘They’re not here,’ Sk’jin huffs out.

‘Are you fucking kidding me?!’

Taeh’yung and Jimin walk a little ahead as Yoongi trails behind them. Taeh’yung convinced Jimin that they needed new clothes, to which Jimin had readily agreed. Yoongi is unsure but he believes that Jimin felt like he didn’t want to impose on anyone else for clothing and other items he needed. And though he knew they weren’t supposed to leave the ship- least of all Jimin and Taeh’yung, Yoongi just nodded in consent to Taeh’yung’s plea to go shopping.

The two walk in front of him, hands held and talking a mile a minute. Jimin had been wearing Hoseok’s clothes, which were the most practical and comfortable. Though similar in size, Yoongi’s own clothes ranged between tactical and full black. Jimin refused to wear black, a colour of mourning, according to Taeh’yung, in Jimin’s culture.

His screen was inside his inner pocket. Waiting for him to open the files. Unsure why, Yoongi found that he couldn’t open it.

Not yet anyways. He wanted to know. But he wasn’t sure if he wanted to remember.

Memories were painful. Thoughts and knowing were painful.

Did he even want to know? What would it show him? What would he find out? Would it be important to him where he was now? Or would it be rudimentary, useless junk taking up space in his mind.

‘Yoongi!’ Jimin calls him, talking rapidly as he points at one of the stalls, clearly delighted. Yoongi doesn’t understand a single word but he nods nonetheless, listening closely to the lilts of his voice, the rise and fall of his tone for timing.

But Jimin knew Yoongi- the Yoongi from the past. And he expected something from him. Wanted something from him. He was waiting for something from Yoongi.

Would Yoongi be able to remember Jimin?

‘That’s really pretty Chim,’ Taeh’yung grins down at them. ‘It’s nice quality too!’

His mind didn’t remember Jimin. But the way Jimin’s hand felt in his told him otherwise.

‘Let’s buy it!’

Yoongi isn’t sure from where Taeh’yung is producing the units from- but then again, he did slip into Sk’jin’s Cabin, claiming he needed to change for the outing. It was as though the Zhak’gri had been waiting for Namjoon to leave, the way he so quickly rounded up Jimin and then Yoongi.
Yoongi has the feeling that Taeh’yung also didn’t tell Jimin about Namjoon explicitly telling them not to leave the ship. Taeh’yung had then switched off their Comm-Devices, grinning deviously before exiting the ship in an uncannily quiet manner. It was all too easy to slip past Namjoon and Sk’jin. Yoongi is almost apologetic towards their Captain.

Taeh’yung pulls Jimin forward and deeper into the market. Jimin reaches out to grab Yoongi’s hand as well, pulling him forward along with them. Taeh’yung with his height stares forward, eyeing the stalls and leading them this way and that.

Yoongi knows that they should go back. That they shouldn’t have left in the first place. But watching Jimin and Taeh’yung outside of the confines of the ship, around in this questionable crowd selling questionable items felt...felt nice. Like he was living a life that wasn’t his own. When he hears Jimin laughing at something Taeh’yung says, the force of his laughter shaking their joint hands, Yoongi wants to join in. But he doesn’t know how. And instead takes to eyeing pick-pockets and travelling merchants until they scurry off.

Jimin stops walking abruptly, nearly face-planting on Taeh’yung’s back. Yoongi is quick to hold him upright.

‘Tae?’ Jimin looks up at his tall friend. Yoongi recognizes Taeh’yung posture- he’s seen it a few times, when the Zhak’gri is alert- alert and wary. Yoongi covers Jimin from the back, angling him behind Taeh’yung properly so that the Zhak’gri’s larger frame shielded Jimin.

‘Taeh’yung?’

Taeh’yung stares up ahead blankly, his height an advantage in this crowd.

‘What is it?’

Jimin catches on quickly, his posture changing and his expression full of concentration.

‘I can smell it,’ Taeh’yung says quietly. ‘They were here.’

Jimin is quietly asking a question, his hand reaching out to shift under Yoongi’s sleeve, skin pressing against skin, trying to read Yoongi’s reaction.

‘It’s them- from Pompa,’ Taeh’yung doesn’t reply to Jimin’s question and instead repeats. ‘They were here.’

Taeh’yung could only mean one thing. Yoongi can instantly feel himself tensing, his senses flaring and despite his nearly entirely healed injuries, his body was still sore. But despite this his body is coiling in anticipation to attack or defend.
‘Then we leave.’ Yoongi says simply, already taking a step back while guiding Jimin back.

Taeh’yung doesn’t even bother looking at Yoongi when he says, ‘I’m going to look.’

Yoongi knows he should stop the Zhak’gri. But he doesn’t. Because if Taeh’yung hadn’t been the one to say it, he would have ordered the Zhak’gri to take Jimin back, and he would have taken Taeh’yung’s place. And Taeh’yung had that strange skill- ability- to smell those Beings from the arena- the ones that wanted to buy Jimin when he had been in the OrTank. He had the upper-hand here.

The Beings they had encountered in Pompa had definitely been strange. They bore no resemblance to the form of the Akramanese, or to the GI in general. Who they were, and what they were, was a complete mystery. But they wanted Jimin.

Yoongi guides Jimin back to the ship, Taeh’yung stepping into the crowd and vanishing in an instant.

‘Yoongi?’

‘Back – we have to go back,’ Yoongi says carefully as he guides them easily and quickly through the crowd. Jimin doesn’t ask any more questions- only once turns to look back around before falling into step with Yoongi. Yoongi taps on the small Comm-Device on his ear.

‘Namjoon it’s Yoongi.’

‘WHERE THE FUCK HAVE YOU BEEN-’ Sk’jin shrieks. Jimin jolts, having heard the Khol’isa.

‘The House of Jtāharū. They were here.’ Yoongi states calmly.

Sk’jin’s tirade suddenly stops.

‘When do you get back?’ Namjoon asks tersely.

‘5 minutes,’ Yoongi replies at once.

But Jimin suddenly stops, pulling at their joint hands. With unexpected strength, he pulls Yoongi over to a stall inside one of the alleys until he stops in front of a trinket store. Yoongi glances around, scanning the area as he takes into account an additional branch of the street they were in. He needs to get Jimin back into the ship immediately.

‘We’re leaving the moment you get back. Hurry.’

‘Taeh’yung went after them.’

Jimin reaches for a small item, sparkling in the dim light. He turns to look at Yoongi, a sad smile on his face.

‘Yoongi-‘

‘WHAT DO YOU MEAN-‘

Yoongi steps closer and recognizes the small item as a hair clip. It’s purple, with some small silver dots around it. The main decorative item is shaped like a star. Jimin reaches up to pin the item on Yoongi’s hair. Yoongi remembers Jimin's small illustration.

‘Hey- you paying for that-‘
‘Yoongi what do you mean Taeh’yung went after them?’

Yoongi pulls Jimin back into the crowd, disappearing from the sight of the shop vendor who was now yelling. Ducking low and in the murky shadow of the throngs of Beings around the market, Yoongi leads them out, not responding to Namjoon, Sk’jin, or Hoseok. He concentrates on getting back, Jimin placed a little ahead of him.

They break out of the crowd and are instantly at the forefront of the landing strip gates. They slip past unnoticed by the officers and spot the Užkulisai up ahead. Yoongi can spot a pacing Sk’jin at the doorway. Some part of him is already regretting everything but he ignores it.

Jimin looks back once, to stare at him, eyes hopeful. He glances up at the clip on his hair but then sighs quietly before turning to face Sk’jin’s wrath.

They’re not met with screaming, in fact, Sk’jin just closes the door behind them and follows them up the stairs and into the Bridge. Yoongi wonders why they always took the stairs when they had a fully functional elevator installed at very convenient bends of the ship.

Namjoon and Hoseok are standing by the Navigation Table, both arms crossed.

‘Did they see you?’ Namjoon asks at once.

‘No- Taeh’yung said he smelled them. And said he would go check.’

Namjoon curses under his breath while Hoseok sighs, leaning back on the Table.

‘What do we do?’ he asks dully, fingers thrumming on the surface of the Table.

‘Clearly nothing- until Taeh’yung comes back or calls,’ Sk’jin throws himself on Namjoon’s seat.

‘Why did you even leave?’

‘Taeh’yung wanted to go shopping.’

‘Why didn’t you stop them?!’ Namjoon demands.

‘Jimin wanted to go. I followed them for security.’

‘But—’

‘Joonie I think if Yoongi tried to stop them, Taeh’yung would have still gone,’ Sk’jin says tiredly.

‘At least they had Yoongi with them.’

Namjoon curses under his breath.

‘Jimin honey why don’t you go wash up? Did you at least buy shoes?’ Sk’jin asks, voice still tired and nearly monotone from where he’s slumped, staring up at the glass ceiling.

Yoongi stares at Jimin’s bare feet, dirty from having walked around the crowded market street. He hadn’t noticed that Jimin was walking around without shoes. He had never asked for them, and had never mentioned them either. Jimin’s toes curl, as though a little embarrassed from having his feet stared at for so long.

Something suddenly clicks inside Yoongi’s mind.

‘Pa!’
‘Taeh’yung what the actual fuck-?!’

Namjoon looks like he’s about to burst a blood vessel on his temple.

‘Uh- so I’m kinda inside a ship? And they’re flying off?’

Namjoon visibly balks at that while Sk’jin looks 5 shades paler and 5 shades redder at the same time. Talent.

‘Taeh’yung. Explain yourself.’ Hoseok takes a deep calming breath, his hands straining over the Table.

‘Uh- so I followed that scent. And it’s this small ship? Like, a supplies ship? And I’m at the back? With some supplies? It has food!’

‘Turn on the tracker,’ Namjoon orders as he pulls up a different holographic screen. 'Twist your Comm-Device.'

‘Taeh’yung- don’t move from where you are. Stay hidden all right?’ Hoseok rubs at his temples, closing his eyes briefly before he starts typing on the Table as well. A small purple dot appears and Yoongi knows that Taeh’yung has activated his tracker.

‘Are they there?’ Sk’jin asks tersely.

‘No- but I think this ship belongs to them. It smells like them- but they’re not here.’

Jimin fidgets, unable to understand what was happening. He tugs at Yoongi’s sleeve, eyes darting around the Bridge.

‘Yoongi-’ Jimin begins.

_The clouds above them break, and through the heavy grey and purple clouds, soft rosy skies peak through, and a golden light falls upon the moss covered rocks nearby._

_This was why he came here. As though he knew that he would see this. He isn’t even aware that he’s holding up a hand, as though to reach forward and grab at the light- to hold it close and never let go._

Jimin reaches for his hand and Yoongi holds it tight.

‘Sunshine?’
(Author’s Note)

AYO NICE ONE YOONGI
AND HAPPY NEW YEAR Y’ALL
2018 HAHAHAHA honestly I have no expectations
The only good I can expect is quality music from my children (and I have many sons and daughters)
And Black Panther
Infinity War
Uh…concerts if I have the money for it
Other movies
Yeap
Okay
Keeping standards low since 1990
'think he’s telling us his name?'

'I’ll try.'

The sun is warm and bright- a permanent sunrise that made Yoongi feel like he was stuck in time.

The strange Being is clad in simple clothes- dirty and torn, but somehow maintained. His hair is a strange colour- neither silver or gold, but somehow both at the same time. It’s beautiful- but it seems out of place. This Being seemed out of place. Like he didn’t belong here.

Yoongi steps up close, squatting down to be on the same eye-level as him.

He points at himself, ‘Yoongi.’

And then at the Being.

His eyes freak Yoongi out just a little. Despite being exposed to so many races and species of Beings, Yoongi has never seen eyes like his. Strange, beautiful, and out of place.

Yoongi notices that his feet are bare. There’s a fresh scratch over the top of his left foot.

Was he the one that was singing?

‘Yoongi,’ he tries again, pointing at himself. He smiles encouragingly as he points back at the stranger.

He raises a hand, pointing at Yoongi.

‘Yoongi,’ he says quietly. His voice is soft and clear. And it’s undoubtedly the voice that had been singing. Then he points at himself.

‘Jimin.’
‘Sunshine?’

It made sense now.

When Yoongi had gone to wake Jimin up the other day, he had tried to tell Yoongi this. But for some reason it didn’t mean anything to him. And now, the moment the words leave his tongue, it was as though he was seeing Jimin for the first time.

But also as though he had known him his entire life.

Jumin’s smile is wide, joy obvious in his features as he nods fervently.

‘Sunshine,’ he beams, pointing at himself and then back at Yoongi, ‘Yoongi!’

‘Sunshine-‘

‘Everyone sit down or something- we’re about to take off!’ Hoseok yells.

Yoongi tugs at Jimin’s hand and leads him towards one of the footstools.

‘They’re headed inwards into Ymir,’ Hoseok grits through his teeth as he starts up the ship, one eye scanning the sky above, the other concentrating on the tracking map to his left. ‘Any information on the ship?’

‘It’s a private ship- trade apparently,’ Namjoon replies at once. ‘They supposedly stocked up on over 50 cells of fuel. Information is probably wrong.’

Jumin reaches over, hand brushing against his chin and turning Yoongi’s head to face him. The ship readies for space-travel, gravity settings turning on and the air around them compressing- Yoongi feels it in the lining of his stomach. He also feels a strange sense of floating as he gazes back at Jimin- a strange sensation taking over the rest of his body. Jumin says something quietly before dropping his hand and smiling.

‘It’s part of the truth,’ Sk’jin states from where he’s sitting- bringing with him the sounds of the ship back to sharp volume. The Khol’isa is scanning the screen in his hands. ‘According to the officers, they were here for 8 hours. You don’t need 8 hours to buy 50 cells of fuel- is it possible to pull up footage or surveillance?’

‘No- Nuqtai basically has no surveillance- it’s all eye-witness and we won’t get far with that,’ Hoseok replies at once. ‘We don’t have the time either.’

‘Taeh’yung- I need to know with as much detail as possible- where in the ship are you?’ Namjoon asks.

‘Uh…I hopped in at the back? And I’m surrounded with crates and OrTanks and there’s food! I think it’s just the storage pa.’
‘Do you see an outlet? A vent?’ Namjoon asks desperately.

‘Uh…’ Taeh’yung hums for a long period of time. ‘Nope!’

Namjoon pulls at his hair for a second before he’s tapping along the screen hurriedly.

The Užkulisai lifts off easily and they’re high above the ground in a matter of seconds. Jimin tugs at his hand and pulls him towards the Navigation Table where the tracking scan was set up. He points at the small purple dot and says, ‘Taeh’yung?’

Yoongi nods. Jimin looks on worriedly- without translations he’s stuck not knowing or understanding the gravity of the situation.

‘Taeh’yung- could you tell Jimin where you are and what’s happening,’ Yoongi asks quietly. He ignores the way Namjoon and Sk’jin glance at him at his words.

Jimin tenses for a moment before his shoulders relax, his hand going up to his ear. He nods once, twice- before he’s saying something quietly. He pauses a moment before he smiles- Taeh’yung was clearly saying something funny to make Jimin feel better.

Of all the nicknames he could have chosen- why that one in particular?

‘We need to get close enough so that Taeh’yung can get back into the ship,’ Namjoon says tensely. ‘We can’t have them know that we’re following them-‘

‘Pa-‘

There’s a burst of static, some scuffling sounds, and what sounds like running feet.

Namjoon stops.

‘Tae?’ Sk’jin calls out tentatively.

‘Taeh’yung?!’

Everyone quiets down at once.

‘Uh- I think they discovered me-?’

‘Taeh’yung?’ Sk’jin’s eyes look like they’re about to pop out of his head.

Everyone quiets down again. The ship picks up, light flashing as they push through Nuqtaí’s atmosphere.

‘Taeh’yung?’ Jimin asks again, tugging at their held hands.

‘I…I don’t know-‘ Yoongi doesn’t know how to explain this to Jimin.

‘Who the fuck are you? What the fuck are you doing following us?’ a rough voice cuts into the Bridge, accent thick and heavy.

‘Hello my name is Sk’jin- I am so grateful that you found my baby brother on your ship,’ Sk’jin gushes out, a perfect balance of relief, gratitude, and emotion. ‘I have been worried sick.’

Namjoon is violently gesturing at Sk’jin- Yoongi doesn’t know exactly what he’s channeling, but he seems frustrated.
‘Who the fuck are you Sk’jin- and why is your baby brother on board my ship? Tell me why I shouldn’t shove him out of my ship?’

‘Oh please don’t!’ Sk’jin declares, emotion dripping in his tone though he’s raising a victorious fist into the air. Jimin is alarmed, reaching for Sk’jin quickly, eyes worried as he looks over the Khol’isa. ‘I’ll do anything! Please spare him!’

Jimin is glancing back at him and then to the others, clearly confused at Sk’jin’s thoroughly convincing acting and the reaction of the rest of the crew. He leaves Sk’jin’s side for a moment and comes back to Yoongi, taking his hand.

‘Taeh’yung?’ he asks desperately.

‘Taeh’yung is all right,’ Yoongi says quietly as Sk’jin continues to cry over the Comm, begging that Taeh’yung be spared. Yoongi takes Jimin’s hand and carefully repeats, ‘Taeh’yung’ and raises his hand into a thumb’s up. ‘Okay.’

Jimin stares at his hand for a moment before he nods slowly.

‘-please- if you have a heart, please spare him!’ Sk’jin is sobbing actual tears, his voice cracking, but his eyes are filled with delight and mirth. Jimin tilts his head, bewildered.

‘I hope they’re really thick because I wouldn’t believe this for a second,’ Hoseok sighs from the cockpit before he says, ‘Everybody please buckle up- we’re leaving Nuqtai.’

‘-please I beg of you! He’s my only family left! I promised our parents I would take care of him-’ Sk’jin casually seats himself, securing his harness around him. Yoongi guides Jimin to the cockpit and makes him sit next to Hoseok, activating the safety belt for him before taking a seat on Hoseok’s other side.

‘-seems adamant in running away though, if he decided to stowaway.’ Is the response they get.

‘I think they are thick,’ Hoseok raises one eyebrow at Yoongi. Namjoon on the other hand is adamantly staring at the ceiling, as though hoping that the stars above would grant him relief from what he was listening to.

But Yoongi finds that there was some hope. These Beings were clearly just muscle- just extra Beings who were possibly roped into all of this for the units. It was possible that they would be able to get Taeh’yung back and leave as quickly as possible.

Hoseok is cursing under his breath. He looked determined, locking in the ship Taeh’yung was in to the HUD in front of him. He puts the ship on autopilot, following after the small ship.

‘Forget going to that stretch of dead space past Ymir- we’re headed straight for Grisial after this,’ Hoseok mumbles. ‘We’re not going to put ourselves out at risk like this again.’

‘-I’m so sorry for putting you in this family drama,’ Sk’jin cries out, ‘But please- Tae? Tae- can you hear me? Why would you do this to me? Do you know how much you’re putting me through? What this does to me? What would our parents think?’

‘I wouldn’t know because they died Jin! They died and I’m stuck with you! I just wanted to get some space!’ Taeh’yung cries back.

Namjoon facepalms. He literally hunches over in his seat, both of his hands covering his face, feet curled from severe embarrassment.
‘It’s difficult Tae! We don’t have a lot- and we’re barely scrapping here where we are. I am selling my body so that you can survive! I just added more sols in service to the Captain so that we could retrieve you!’ Sk’jin sobs out though he sends a sly wink at Namjoon’s direction. Yoongi is sure that Namjoon would be falling out of his chair if he wasn’t being strapped in.

‘I didn’t ask you to do that- what was wrong with living in the farm? Why didn’t we just stay there-’

‘Because of our debts Tae! Mother and father were not the good folks you thought they were- they made bets and drove our farm to the ground!’ Sk’jin chokes out. ‘-if I didn’t take us out of there we would have been sold into slavery- at least here like this we can make our choices- even if they are limited-’

“We’re green,” Hoseok calls out in a low dull voice, pulling off his security belt.

‘-you never gave me choices!’ Taeh’yung is honest to Spaces hysterical crying. Hoseok glances over at Jimin who now looks confused rather than troubled. He seems to be putting 2 and 2 together. ‘-you’re too loyal to Cap and he gives you nothing in return! He doesn’t love you like that-’

‘Tae! I’m telling you we can do this- just please please trust in me! Okay? Please trust in me and believe in me! I can take us out of here- and give us a good life. But I need you to come to me, please? You’re my only family!’

There’s a stifling silence that follows and Hoseok looks like he’s appalled to find himself engrossed in this ridiculous drama. Yoongi stands, walking out over to the Navigator’s Mast. Jimin follows him, his eyes are wide, as though now fully realizing what was happening. Namjoon is huddled down on the floor next to his chair, cradling his head in his arms. Jimin looks torn between wanting to reach out to the Captain but not knowing what was acceptable to do either.

‘fine. Fine. And I’m sorry- I was- I was just so mad – I thought you gave up on us-‘ Taeh’yung hiccups, voice thick and wobbly.

‘Oh Tae baby, I would never give up on us- I love you so much my precious brother,’ Sk’jin coos softly, voice cracking and fading. ‘I’ll come and get you all right? Just stay there and be a good boy, okay? Don’t give anyone any trouble, all right baby?’

‘Yes Jin- I’m sorry,’ Taeh’yung sniffs, sincere apology and regret in his voice. ‘I’ll be good.’

‘Namjoon!’ Sk’jin hisses, ‘Talk! Now!’

Namjoon is unmoving.

Jimin seems to understand now, and he looks impressed. He mimes clapping his hands at the Khol’isa. Sk’jin smiles, pleased, and flips his hair.

‘I think you broke him,’ Hoseok mumbles from the cockpit. But then the Kutsoglerin starts speaking.

‘This is Captain Neemal speaking,’ Namjoon easily gives his 1/50 fake identities he created. They all had at least, 30 fake identities, all created through different Hubs and Port-spaces, all under 1 hour. ‘I see that one of my kids has stowed away on your ship- I can only apologize for the trouble he must be giving you- Spaces knows he gives me enough.’

‘Guh,’ the Being over the Comm grunts out. For some reason this makes Sk’jin raise a fist in the air, a delighted expression on his face.
‘We’re set!’ he whispers over at Yoongi.

‘You can pick this brat up over at Ts’ets’khli-,’ the voice grunts.

‘We can’t go there- we’ll be scanned and discovered,’ Hoseok hisses at once though he knows Namjoon knows this.

‘How about we meet in Ubhuku,’ Namjoon offers. ‘It’s closer, and we can retrieve the brat and get him out of your hair as soon as possible.’

‘Sweet kid though-’

Sk’jin mouths, ‘wow- Tae sure moves fast,’ and looks extremely proud as though it was his own achievement.

‘You won’t think that for long,’ Namjoon fakes disinterest and irritation in his tone of voice. ‘It’s empty there- we can conduct our business with ease, and gives me some time to take care of things, you know?’

Sk’jin mimes projectile vomiting and Jimin is pressing his hand over his mouth, stopping himself from laughing out loud.

‘Yeah look here kid- you’re gonna have to keep a real tight eye out on your crew y’hear? If ya can’t tame them, don’t take them in. whatever ass you’re sticking it into- ain’t worth losing all the units over.’

‘If you don’t say that my ass is totally worth it I’m killing you in your sleep!’ Sk’jin hisses from where he’s sitting. Namjoon doesn’t even look up from where he’s slumped on the ground, still holding his head up in his hands.

‘Oh you have no idea how much I regret it.’

‘You’ll get the kid back when you transfer the units and cells we used for the detour- and an inconvenience fee too.’ The voice adds.

‘Yeah- of course,’ Namjoon wearily reaches out to grab at his NaviLet, but he’s too far down on the floor. Jimin takes pity and hands it to him before squatting down and gently pets Namjoon’s head with his hand.

‘I’m sorry Captain- I’m sorry Jin,’ Taeh’yung sniffs again.

‘All right kid- I’ll be taking this from you now- see bye to your brother and your Captain.’

‘See you later Jin- and-…. and thank you Captain.’

‘This is drama I’d pay to watch,’ Sk’jin comments in a whisper before choking out a reply, ‘Be good baby.’

Namjoon curls up on the floor in a fetal position.

Jimin laughs out loud, his head thrown back. Their hands are still connected and Yoongi can feel Jimin’s laughter- the vibrations of it moving from the other into him.

It’s warm and heartening.

Yoongi feels like he’s growing, something inside him expanding outwards towards the warmth of it.

And Yoongi guesses he understands why he chose that nickname.

The nagging feeling won’t go away. And Hoseok wonders if its indigestion.

The identity they had adopted was of a private trade ship- the easiest cover-up, as well as the most common. Most pirate ships were registered as private trade ships so they just blended in with the other billions of ships zooming about the Universe.

But that doesn’t stop Hoseok from being jumpy. It was going to take a full 2 days to get to Ubhuku and they were now on their 40th hour of moving through GLA borders in this suspicious System. Hoseok never liked Ymir or the Systems around it. But Nuqtaï was the only option they had to access that many Hubs with the lowest chance of discovery.

Or so he thought.

Hoseok knew that it would be difficult to stick to a divisive plan- which was why he had even come up with so many alternative plans and sets of action. He just wasn’t expecting this early a deviation- they hadn’t even left Nuqtaï and things were already messing up.

One comfort he has is that their plan on setting off anyone who might come after them was working. It was obvious that they were on some form of searching/hunting list because the moment Hoseok had set off the fake information, there were ripples of action taking place. Maybe not as organized, but clearly targeting them and their leaked false information. He scoured the Underverse for news coming

While he wasn’t happy that they were now in fact on the run, it made him better knowing that they were able to direct the attention of the GLA elsewhere while they weaved their way through to their plan.

But what even was their plan? All of this was a complete mess- Namjoon and Sk’jin both with their own criteria. Both trying to see things done and through. Jimin trying to get back to his planet, and Yoongi…well, now with the information they gained from Jimin, probably also trying to figure out his past.

Then there was Taeh’yung I’m going to strangle you when I see you- Hoseok palms at his face.

The Zhak’gri was clearly a troublemaker. Hoseok has half the mind to leave him be- to tell Namjoon to just leave him there. He was certainly more than capable of handling himself. He would have no issue escaping from a small ship based on what Hoseok has seen. But then again, based on what Hoseok has seen Taeh’yung do, he knows that the Zhak’gri was an irreplaceable asset in their ship.

And the nagging feeling inside him is worry- and he knows that (not indigestion because Sk’jin was a shockingly excellent cook and made the most amazing food and had the tendency to stress-cook- lucky for them Jimin was a big eater and Yoongi just ate whatever was placed in front of him, no questions asked).

He knows he’s worried over Taeh’yung despite the fact that the latter could probably walk out of a nuclear war unharmed, probably wearing a flower crown. An odd imagination but somehow oddly fitting. But he can’t help it. To Hoseok’s disbelief and shock, he’s come to realize that he actually cares about the wellbeing of the Beings in this team- not just because they were useful additions into their joint cause and effort (which was honestly just questionable and life-threatening).

The ship carrying Taeh’yung was far up ahead, slowing down as they arrived at Ubhuku’s space borders. The planet itself wasn’t all too bad on the outside, the atmosphere thin and forgiving. However, like her sister-planets, Ubhuku had an extremely acidic atmosphere, as a result of their volatile oceans and seas. Despite Ubhuku being more land than water, the acidity in the air was like breathing in wafts of acidic vapour- all the plants that grew in that planet were adapted to the planet’s strange acidity, covered in a gooey substance that alkalized the acid, creating a constant shield of water around them. Which was probably why the planet was so humid and swampy. Upon checking up on the planet, they found out that Namjoon and Sk’jin could breathe the air on land-level. But Hoseok and Yoongi would have to wear a filter and full Space-Gear, and just to be safe, Jimin too. The ship would be protected from the acidic air but they don’t want to take any risks. The planet was interesting- it used to house a GLA research facility but due to the weak crust and loose soil, no structure could stay upright. That and prolonged exposure catalyzed most material into strange gooey rotted matter. Hoseok has heard that it’s something of a quick pit-stop for pirates. But only if they’re desperate.

It was also where Taeh’yung had apparently tried to play actual god.

Acidic planet, weird evolution, and gooey mush Hoseok could understand and deal with. But the idea that someone he knew, and shared a ship with, had somehow played god in this volatile planet, and was observed by the GLA was something that really didn’t sit well with him.

‘Scanner ready?’ Namjoon asks, appearing to his side.

Hoseok nods.

‘Right- if Taeh’yung tracked them right, they could give us a better lead into those Beings,’ Namjoon mumbles under his breath.

‘I still don’t think we should be doing this,’ Hoseok chimes in.

‘It’s not,’ Namjoon agrees with a shrug. ‘But we all have to do risky things in missions- it’s how we get information.’

Hoseok wants to disagree but there is truth in Namjoon’s words. Hoseok’s entire life has been surrounded and made by risks and chances he’s taken. Of course he was extremely careful-planning ahead for hours days weeks. But that had been only his life- Hoseok was only ever responsible for his life, his single mission.

Now he feels the burden of the team- having to think of 5 other Beings, calculate the risk of error and probability from their actions, with his own, and create some form of solid plan on what they had to do. And clearly it wasn’t working out.

‘We have the advantage of a better ship- so we can land faster, and prepare on site,’ Namjoon ruminates, eyes fixed on the view outside. The planet Ubhuku was slowly approaching- now a small dot of muddy green against the backdrop of space. They were following the coordinates the other ship had sent them.

‘We’ll be entering Ubhuku in 30 minutes,’ Hoseok calls out in warning over the Comm. ‘Sk’jin have you finished cooking?’

‘Shut up.’

‘He’s still cooking,’ Namjoon sighs out as he walks over to the cockpit.

Hoseok wonders if Sk’jin had explicitly chosen cooking as his stress breaker because he knew Namjoon didn’t eat. It was probably in retaliation of Namjoon loudly announcing that he was going to bed every other night. They would be a second from going at each other’s throats but Hoseok stops them every time he can. Hoseok rolls his eyes at the two, wondering when and why he ended up becoming the “adult supervision” on the ship.

The coordinates took them to a flat swampy clear area.

Jimin is pressed to the window, eyes wide as he takes in the sight of the planet below him. It was a rather flat planet- the horizon continuing along without much break. It was just… lumpy.

‘Jimin should stay inside,’ Namjoon repeats the plan again, ‘Sk’jin and I will go out to talk. Hoseok will stand at the ready to take off. Yoongi, are you ready?’

‘Ready,’ Yoongi replies from the front.

‘Oh Captain- spare my brother and punish me instead!’ Sk’jin trills from where he sits. Hoseok grimaces at the way Sk’jin says punish. Namjoon sighs heavily and just throws Sk’jin a mask.

They didn’t need it, but it made for a good cover-up. Their faces wouldn’t be exposed.

With some difficulty, they had explained to Jimin that he shouldn’t be seen, and that he should stay inside until Taeh’yung came back and they were safely on their way out. He had nodded in understanding, looking a little upset at the idea of staying inside.

Hoseok has changed though he knows he shouldn’t leave the ship- as pilot, he would need to be at the cockpit, ready to take off at a moment’s notice.

When they land, the ship takes a while to calibrate the landing gear.

‘The surface isn’t ideal for landing,’ Hoseok grits out, watching the ongoing analysis on the whole process.

‘Any signs of life?’ Namjoon calls.

‘None,’ Sk’jin replies as he gazes out distastefully. ‘Nothing other than the plants could survive on this planet.’

‘All right- we have a 5 minute window here- Hoseok, is everything ready?’ Namjoon asks.

Hoseok starts up the aerial scanner and readies a tracker, holding it up for Yoongi when he walks past. It’s still unsettling every time Yoongi wears his GI uniform along with the helmet. He wasn’t in the standard dark blue Space-Gear Hoseok was wearing under his regular clothes- Hoseok doesn’t know how it’s been made, but apparently it had a decent ability to withstand almost every force invented. Jimin fidgets by the tower-mast, watching after Yoongi as the Human walks out. He was obviously not at all happy with the plan and he kept glancing out of the window, jumpy... and confused.

‘Yoongi tell us when you get into position,’ Namjoon calls as he readies a unit-chip, and the code for a tidy amount of units.

‘Understood.’

‘I need to look like I’ve been crying,’ Sk’jin states, glancing at his reflection before addressing Hoseok, ‘Should I look ugly worried or beautiful worried? Should I try to look panicked?’ Sk’jin adopts a theatrical panicked expression.

‘Maybe just stick with normal worried,’ Hoseok offers.

Sk’jin sighs dramatically before saying, ‘You’re boring Hobi.’

Hoseok is about to counter Sk’jin and tell him that he was lucky that Taeh’yung’s captives were pretty thick because Sk’jin’s act was so obvious when he feels a tug on his sleeve.

Jimin is pulling at his sleeve urgently.

‘Pon ah thil an om.’

‘…sorry?’

Jimin points outside.

Sk’jin and Hoseok both look out.

There’s nothing outside the window. Nothing in the swampy clearing.

‘What do you mean?’ Sk’jin asks.

Jimin just points, a bit more vehemently outside.

‘Pon ah thil an om- enge ni ka hre lo.’

He looks worried, gnawing at his lower lip.

‘Jimin-?’ Sk’jin tries but Jimin lets out a frustrated exhale and runs out of the Bridge.

‘Hobi- scan the area again,’ Sk’jin orders sharply as he makes his way down to the tower-mast, pressing his face against the window.

Hoseok scans the place but comes up with nothing. The only form of life around was that of plant-life. Nothing more. Nothing less. Hoseok has heard of how if there were too many plants and algae growth in condensed areas, it could lead to confusion in scanners.

‘Motion sensors?’ Sk’jin suggests, shoulders tense as he carefully scans the horizon, fingers reaching out to activate the HUD settings on the pane before him.

Wondering what the Khol’isa was on about, Hoseok activates the motion sensors. A small signal tells him that Taeh’yung’s captor’s ship just entered the planet.

‘Sk’jin- if you could come down plea-woaH HEY JIMIN-‘ Namjoon begins but ends up yelling.

The motion sensor lights up on the window in front of Sk’jin and he gasps out loud.
‘Shit! Yoongi get back in now!’ Sk’jin shrieks, turning on his spot and running out. Hoseok quickly pulls up the sensor as well and to his horror finds a huge ring of movement closing in on them. Just meters from where Yoongi’s blue signal was lit up.

Hoseok quickly closes every single ventilation outlet- firing up the plasma engines and expanding the radius of their shield.

‘Jimin get back in here-!’ Hoseok’s heart leaps to his throat.

‘Yoongi!?’ Hoseok calls out as he leaps out of his chair, running out of the Bridge. ‘Lisai- return to autopilot and put the ship on green!’

‘Understood, Head-Pilot Hoseok.’

Jumping down the rest of the stairs, Hoseok sprints over the Lobby and into the Hangar.

The acidity of the air outside has seeped in a little and his eyes water at once, his skin smarting. Quickly pulling up his mask, Hoseok rushes forward to where Namjoon and Sk’jin are standing. The heat from the planet is instantaneous even though he was exposed for only a few seconds. He was already sweating. Namjoon didn’t seem too effected, though Sk’jin has a ruddy glow to his skin, sweat beading down the sides of his face already.

‘Why aren’t you-‘ Hoseok is about to yell, demanding why the two who weren’t affected by the planet’s acidity and environment weren’t doing anything.

‘Where’s Jimin?’ Hoseok demands, making sure no sliver of skin was exposed.

Sk’jin and Namjoon just point ahead.

Jimin is standing ankle deep in muddy water some distance ahead. He looks entirely fine and unaffected by the volatile air. Yoongi is there too, helmet on. But that’s not what was most startling.

Surrounding Jimin and Yoongi, were weird shaped blobs that slowly bubbled about them. They have strangely shaped antler-like projections atop their blob-heads. They were transparent-ish, but in a muddy way. They had no faces- and just appeared…like blobs. They were crowding around Jimin, weird oblong bodies bent over as though to look at Jimin clearly. Yoongi is there, his stance defensive but he’s not acting out. It could be because Jimin was holding his hand. Jimin is clearly talking to these blobs, neck craning in order to face (?!?!?) the blobs.

‘What the fuck-‘

Jimin turns a little, waving at them. And then all the blobs shift, their faceless forms obviously regarding them all. Hoseok swears he hears Sk’jin whimper out a curse.

‘In-coming ship.’ They all jump at Lisai’s announcement.

‘Shit-‘ Namjoon curses, finally moving.

‘Uh-‘

‘We have to get Yoongi back in hiding and we need to get Jimin back in-‘ Sk’jin hisses, real panic settling on his features. Hoseok has half the mind to tell Sk’jin he still looked handsome whilst panicked.
‘Yoongi- you need to go back to position and Jimin needs to hide- take him with you and just please stay away from sight!’ Namjoon hisses.

Yoongi doesn’t respond but he sees the Human tugging Jimin gently.

Their odd party move out of the swampy clearing and into the strange mushy lumps dotting the area. And it’s not even 30 seconds later when the other ship appears.

‘Do you think they scanned them?’ Namjoon asks worriedly as Sk’jin hurries to set up the fuel-cells on the gravity-lift.

‘It’s possible that the signals from the vegetation might have covered them but I’m not sure,’ Hoseok replies tersely.

‘Do you think those were Taeh’yung’s…creations?’ Namjoon asks carefully as they watch the small ship land some ways down the swamp. It’s smaller than the Užkulisai and older. It was clearly just a temporary ship- what with the license and model stamp freshly painted over the hull despite the entire ship being in dire need of a redo. The back of the ship opens slowly and it’s as though they hear Taeh’yung before they see them. A loud and dramatic shout of ‘brother!’ rings through the swamp. Hoseok nervously eyes the lumpy growth to the side.

‘Let’s go,’ Namjoon grits through his teeth, nodding once at Sk’jin as the latter pulls the filter-mask over his face. ‘Hoseok- let’s get ready to leave.’

Hoseok nods in response.

Namjoon and Sk’jin step out, feet squelching into the muddy and slimy water.

‘Lisai, redirect all weapons to the ship ahead.’ Hoseok orders as he closes the Hangar gates and makes his way to the antechamber to the side. ‘Yoongi- are you clear?’

‘Clear.’

Hoseok quickly activates the large screen before opening the side door by a smidgeon. He can still see the ship from here. Pulling up the scanner he had activated in the Bridge, Hoseok starts the application.

‘All right- let’s get into their system and see who else they’ve been talking to.’

*

‘Jin!’ Taeh’yung cries, running forwards, legit tears down his face.

Sk’jin, not one to do anything half-assed, also has tears down his face, tripping elegantly (if that was a thing) as he too runs towards Taeh’yung. They crash into each other, Sk’jin sobbing as he scolds but hugs Taeh’yung. Taeh’yung is also sobbing, apologizing on top of his voice.

Namjoon is thankful for the mask over his face- it stops him from giving himself away as he tries not to roll his eyes at Sk’jin’s and Taeh’yung’ act. So instead Namjoon turns his attention back towards the lanky Being who walked Taeh’yung out of the ship.

A total of 4 of them came along, hanging around the back, leery glances sent in Taeh’yung and Sk’jin’s direction as the two “brothers” sink to the ground, sobbing heartily. They were enjoying this too much.

‘Namjoon- Yoongi has placed the bug on their ship. Downloading their information now. I need 5 minutes.’

‘You’ve got a bunch of pretty ones with you,’ the Being says casually. ‘They seem like a handful- I can offer you a good price, I know someone who would be interested in a face like that- we can split the profits.’

Namjoon wants to maybe punch this Being’s face in and send him face first into the swamp. Namjoon can’t place his species, his face covered with a mask. The others behind him also have masks on. Namjoon notices that they hadn’t spared Taeh’yung one. This further irritates him.

‘Yeah- we know a bunch who are really into the pretty ones you know?’ the other adds, their eyes gleaming maniacally.

They were clearly just pirates- probably bought to work for the House of Jtāharū or something along that line. Money bought- meaning their loyalty could be bought, as well as their silence.

‘A handful they are- and I’ll be sure to see to their punishment,’ Namjoon replies easily, sending a withering look in Sk’jin and Taeh’yung’s direction. They both act accordingly, heads lowering, shoulders curling inwards. It’s suddenly so convincing Namjoon almost feels bad. He looks straight at the pirate before continuing, ‘Here’s a small thank you for your trouble.’

He hands over the unit-chip to the pirate before snaps out, ‘Stop being so pathetic cur, get the fuck out of my sight right now!’

‘Namjoon- the ship was last deployed from Pompa.’

‘And don’t try and save him- I’m not forgiving him,’ Namjoon yells at Sk’jin and Taeh’yung who pathetically trip back towards the ship. Namjoon faces the pirates again.

‘We’re good?’ he asks, jutting his chin out.

‘Those cells ours?’ one of them asks, pointing at the gravity-lift next to Namjoon.

‘For your trouble,’ Namjoon pushes the lift in their direction.

‘Hey- you’re from Kutsoglera aren’t you?’ one of them suddenly states.

‘Does it matter?’ Namjoon doesn’t fake his irritation.

‘Well-‘

‘Their last call came from an unknown source- just 5 minutes ago. Namjoon I think they’re stalling-‘

‘-not really. It’s rare to see your lot around here,’ the pirate shrugs casually before nodding at the other pirate to his side. ‘Grab the cells- check them.’ Then he turns to face Namjoon. ‘So- what brings you around here?’
‘Heard some shit went down in Pompa,’ Namjoon replies. ‘Seemed like a good opportunity to scan the area, y’know?’

‘Huh- scavenging,’ one of the other mumbles, kicking at the watery soil.

‘Hey- it’s what puts food on the table then that’s good ain’t it?’ the main pirate shrugs. ‘Seems like you like to spoil your pretty ones- this’s some high-tech Device on him.’

He holds up the Comm-Device in his hand, rolling it about between his fingers.

‘And a waste of money seeing as he still manages to run off,’ Namjoon scoffs, reaching his hand out for the device.

The pirate doesn’t move, still rolling the small cuff between his fingers. His eyes study Namjoon for a while.

‘How’s the cell?’ he asks.

‘Seems fine to me- all clear. Maybe we want a set more?’ the other suggests from where he’s crouched over on the ground.

‘I need only a minute more and I have everything.’

Namjoon makes a face at the pirate, sighing tiredly before he calls out, ‘Bring another set you pieces of shit!’

Namjoon wonders if all exchanges were this heavily tense. The pirates in front of him were all feigning nonchalance but Namjoon can easily read their tenseness. Hoseok said that they were stalling- and they had received a call 5 minutes prior. They had most likely reported the situation-and it was possible that they were being told to stall until further notice.

There’s squelching sounds behind him and Namjoon recognizes Sk’jin’s footfall. The Khol’isa’s presence triggers a few lusty gazes.

‘He’s a real prize that one- must’ve paid a lot to get him,’ the main pirate remarks. Sk’jin appears to the side, timidly pushing forward another gravity-lift.

‘Yeah- he sure is pretty- I see why you keep him with you,’ one of the pirates crouched on the ground says, eyeing Sk’jin up and down. ‘Bet he’d look real pretty when he cries.’

Sk’jin pretends to shudder, his hands shaking as he unties the tanks.

‘Hey- he just complimented you,’ the other pirate shouts at Sk’jin. ‘Why don’t you thank him huh?’

‘Movement from the ship. Do I take care of it?’ Yoongi asks quietly.

‘No,’ Namjoon shakes his head, ‘My property- eyes off why don’t you?’

‘Fine hey- just appreciating,’ the pirates raises his hands as though he meant no harm.

‘Well- we’ll check on this and then be on our way,’ the main pirate says as Sk’jin shuffles meekly to stand behind Namjoon, making himself small. ‘Boys- get this back in.’

Namjoon spots movement too. One of the other pirates comes walking forward, a screen in his hands. His stance is casual. Too casual. He’s looking around as though taking in the scenery.
'Done.'

Namjoon is about to end the entire thing, already making to step back. But then he meets the main pirate’s gaze and he knows.

Everyone moves at the same time. There’s an eruption of TeorSer fire aimed right at Namjoon but he dodges it.

But before he can even speak, there’s a brief moment everything turns bright green.

Namjoon finds himself on the ground, splattered in muddy swampy water. He hears Sk’jin mumble out a curse, some squelching sounds and the Khol’isa’s face swims in his vision.

‘The fuck-’

‘You need to work on your acting skills,’ the Khol’isa states blankly. ‘You at least need to call me a bitch.’

‘Pa! Are you all right?’

Namjoon is jerked up and pulled into a tight hug. And over Taeh’yung’s shoulder Namjoon finds the 5 pirates in a heap on the ground, and the main pirate fully compressed in a familiar green triangle. Namjoon pulls off his mask, the heat of the swamp pressing down on him. It wasn’t too bad, seeing as his body instantly calibrated to whatever environment was presented to him. He looks over at Sk’jin who is splattered in some muddy water, hair slicked back and drenched from sweat. Any trace of meekness is gone from his features as he eyes the pirates on the ground with undisguised distaste.

‘Their ship-’ Namjoon points out sharply, eyeing the ship in the distance.

‘Yoongi’s taking care of it,’ Hoseok replies. ‘I’ve deactivated their ship for now. No signals being sent out, but channels still opened to receive.’

‘Keep an eye out on the space borders- I don’t want to jumped,’ Namjoon pats Taeh’yung, looking him over before asking, ‘You’re all right?’

‘Yes pa- oh! CHIM!’ Taeh’yung shouts loudly, arms waving in wide circles.

Coming out of the pirate ship are Yoongi and Jimin.

‘The ship is clear for inspection,’ Yoongi says quietly as Taeh’yung bounds over the swamp easily. Jimin waves back eagerly.

‘I’m so happy to see you-?!’

Taeh’yung is slammed into the ground by a wave of blobs.

Sk’jin lets out a shocked gasp, freezing on spot. But instead of defending himself, Taeh’yung is laughing loudly and delightedly.

‘…remember what Taeh’yung said about this place?’ Namjoon asks, swallowing thickly.

‘Uh huh,’ Sk’jin replies weakly, raising a finger and pointing at the blobs. ‘I guess…I guess that’s what he made?’

‘Yeah…’
By the time they reach Taeh’yung, Jimin is also already there. He’s nearly splattered head to toe with muddy water. He’s speaking rapidly, looking pleased as Taeh’yung continues to squeal, arms open wide as he hugs the blobs. It almost looked as though Taeh’yung was about to consumed, amoeba style, but the blobs seem to be hugging him back. Then Jimin leaps forward as well, pointing and exclaiming in delight. Taeh’yung turns quickly and gives out a loud shout of delight.

Sk’jin groans next to him.

Namjoon’s nonexistent blood runs cold when a titan-blob emerges from the ground, great heaving transparent antlers emerging from the muddy waters around the swamp.

‘UMHOLI!’ Taeh’yung shouts.

‘…what in Spaces is that- should I open fire…?’ Hoseok asks worriedly.

The blob stands at least 3 meters tall, antlers reaching higher than that.

‘No- I think- I think we’re fine,’ Sk’jin says sounding tired. ‘Let’s go check on that ship first shall we? I think the two of them will be all right here.’

Namjoon finds himself being pushed forward by the Khol’isa. Namjoon glances back at the blob and then at the heap of unconscious pirates and the floating green triangle. He wonders why he was ever worried for Taeh’yung.

Yoongi is waiting for them near the doorway leading into the pirate ship. It’s smaller than the Užkulisai but still definitely sizeable. Not being able to see Yoongi’s face is odd- like he was someone else entirely. It’s unsettling seeing him like this, and it makes Namjoon realize just how little they knew about the Human. But what was worse, was how less Yoongi knew of himself in all of this.

‘What a piece of junk,’ Sk’jin sniffs, wiping his face with his sleeve. ‘I know pirates have this rep and a sense of aesthetic but this is just going overboard.’

The ship is dirty to the point of looking like it was purposefully done. There are stacks and stacks of OrTanks, crates, damp boxes of wood and paper even, all crushed up to the sides. There are 4 other pirates in a heap on the ground- all (thankfully) unconscious- probably Yoongi’s work.

‘Most of them are empty,’ Yoongi says as he removes his helmet, safe inside the interior of the ship. He appeared entirely unaffected by the environment around him. ‘Come- you need to see the Bridge.’

Namjoon and Sk’jin follow the Human up a sloping ramp to the Bridge above. This entire ship was really more catered for shipment and cargo, seeing as there was no separation or divisions inside, save for support beams and pillars, and a walkway crossing the space above. Hammocks hung around the place, and ratty mattresses rolled up at random. The Bridge is by far the cleanest place inside the ship. Yoongi approaches the Navigation Table and taps on the surface once with a gloved finger.

A map appears, with a pale blue trajectory highlighted. There was nothing extraordinary about it by looking at it just once but Namjoon spots it at once.

‘Hoseok-‘

‘Hey- their last call came from Raksane Tayi.’
The ship is like every other ordinary pirate-ship. Dirty, disorganized, and littered with useless shit everywhere.

Sk’jin grimaces at the place, wondering why pirates insisted on living like this. When he had been pirate-lord, all the ships he commanded had been clean and organized. Sk’jin was a staunch believer in hygiene, and being inside this ship, as well as this planet, made him want to scrub off his skin and bun the clothes he was wearing.

Most of the loot in here was junk- despite being a cargo ship, they didn’t carry much of it. They were carrying fuel-cells, but it was out here in the open instead of being stored in the cell-slots under the hull where they were supposed to be stored. Taeh’yung hadn’t mentioned anything additional in relation to the House of Jtāharū, if that was even their actual name. It still creeps him out.

Yoongi quietly makes his way around to the front of the Table, removing a small screen from inside his pocket. He slots it over the table, immediately transferring all of the records.

Namjoon is already typing away, studying the trajectory.

‘Do you think that House was involved with the Alliance? Or with the GLA? Or the Gaia Case?’ Hoseok asks.

‘Or all,’ Sk’jin remarks, walking around the Bridge and studying the place. This was just a temporary ship- one that could be abandoned when needed.

‘I think we need to consider the fact that the House of Jtāharū will also be looking for us- or at least for Jimin,’ Namjoon says tensely. ‘If they did indeed “smell” like the Akramanese ship- the probability of their relation with the Gaia Case has just doubled. And I think we can safely say it is separated from the Alliance or from whatever Van Seulgaan was doing.’

‘How can you say that?’ Sk’jin presses.

‘Because they would have banded with Van,’ Namjoon answers simply. ‘When I conducted research on them I could find no name alluding to their House name- there was no record of their arriving in Pompa either. I tried finding them on the GLA database but there was nothing that resembled them based on the imagery we captured.’

‘Why would the pirates receive a call from Tayi though? Seems like a bad place for anyone working actively against the GLA policies to just hang out in.’

‘The GI were based in the heart of Raksane Tayi and were used to take down members of the GLA,’ Yoongi states suddenly. ‘Where else can you best hide, if not right under your enemies nose?’

Yoongi is right. But it hurt Sk’jin’s head just thinking about. Corruption and foul play was a thing Sk’jin was used to- but it was as though it had gotten three times as worse as he had imagined during the time he was asleep. And it seemed to plague the stronghold of the Known Universe the most.
‘Theorizing about this without sufficient information isn’t going to get us anywhere- let’s just find their trajectory and make sure we don’t overlap in any of the planets they have registered.’ Hoseok sighs.

‘Well, according to this trajectory, they were headed next to Ts’ets’khli and then to Ynqaba,’ Namjoon frowns. ‘That’s a war-zone, you’re not supposed to go there.’

Sk’jin sometimes wonders if Namjoon really was a veteran Information Analyst who discovered information vitally important to the Gaia Case.

‘Honey, war means money- war is the best business out there,’ Sk’jin rolls his eyes dismissively. ‘Why do you think it keeps happening? Within a country, between countries- between planets- within planets- it’s all for power, and it’s all for money. It’s the natural cycle of manufactured life.’

‘Manufactured life?’ Namjoon tilts his head, eyes steely.

‘The moment a governing authority is formed- the moment there is a deity, a figure-head that creates authority and a sense of structure- all who follow it automatically fall into manufactured life,’ Sk’jin shrugs. ‘A life that is dictated by policies, or religion, or oppression, or reverence- this is all manufactured. And in this, war is key, because that generates power, dependency, fear, and money.’

Namjoon’s jaw is tight.

‘Well, we can only figure out the meaning behind all of this by interrogating one of them,’ Hoseok chimes in before he calls out on the Comm, ‘Taeh’yung- is that pirate guy alive?’

Sk’jin catches the way Namjoon winces at his words.

‘Yeah? You want me to get rid of them?’

‘No!’ Namjoon replies at once. ‘Make sure the others are secured, and bring them back into the ship. We need to talk to the main pirate.’

‘A-okay!’

‘I’m done,’ Yoongi states, holding up his screen. ‘Should I get rid of the ship.’

‘No- no,’ Namjoon looks exasperated. ‘There’s no need for any additional violence.’

Sk’jin wants to laugh despite not finding this situation amusing at all. Because it’s annoying and gives him a sense of déjà vu he did not want or need.

Jimin turns to wave at them- it had become surprisingly dark rather quickly. And to Sk’jin’s fascination as well as a fair amount of nervousness, the blobs are actually glowing. Taeh’yung is humming in a low tone, and it’s rather eerie with the way faint pulses of green escape him in the muddy water, creating ripples that reflect on the blobs.

Jimin walks over to them, expression turning serious as he regards the ship behind them. His eyes are glowing in this dim light. And they really do look like solar eclipses now. He looks over at Yoongi who though was already wearing his helmet again, was obviously only looking at Jimin. Jimin holds his hand out for the Human. And Yoongi takes it of course.

When Sk’jin looks at the two of them, he can’t help the feeling of something foreboding. Not for a minute does Sk’jin think any of this is coincidence. This was all too purposeful, all too planned.
And this reunion was all part of that plan.

It’s too clear to Sk’jin- watching the two in front of him. He’s not sure if Namjoon and Hoseok really see it for what it is. Or maybe Sk’jin was looking too deep, looking for things that weren’t there. But what he does know is that it was probably going to end in pain- and that no one was going to be spared.

‘Pa! What do you want me to do with him?’ Taeh’yung asks as the triangle carrying the pirate from before emerges from the swampy soil. Sk’jin catches Namjoon quickly looking about for the other pirates, and is relieved to find them by one of the landing wheels of the pirate ship to the side. They were not bound or anything, but Sk’jin knows there was no chance of escape even if they wanted to.

‘We just need to go back and interrogate him,’ Namjoon explains, glancing about, ‘It’s getting dark. We should take this inside.’

Taeh’yung nods, the triangle floating back into the pirate’s ship. Jimin follows, a short question directed at Taeh’yung.

‘How do we know if he knows anything anyways,’ Sk’jin asks with a frown. ‘He just seems like a pawn.’

‘Because of what he said earlier,’ Namjoon replies, pulling out an OrTank to sit on it. ‘He said he could arrange for a meeting to sell you and Taeh’yung if I wanted to- to a buyer who would like your faces.’

‘I mean I’m flattered-‘ Sk’jin jokes. But as usual his jokes fly over Namjoon’s all too literal head as the Kutsoglerin sends him a glare.

‘It’s unlikely he’ll talk, is what I’m saying,’ Sk’jin sighs. ‘And even if he knew stuff- it’ll most likely ‘WAIT!’ Taeh’yung suddenly yells, causing all of them to pause and for the green triangle to break with a small popping sounds. He then rapidly asks Jimin something. The latter replies somewhat dazed but he smiles quickly, nodding as to affirm what he said.

‘Chim is so amazing!’ Taeh’yung exclaims before explaining. ‘He can make anyone tell the truth!’

A shiver runs down Sk’jin’s back. He catches sight of Namjoon tensing up as well.

‘That’s so amazing Chim- isn’t that great Pa?’ Taeh’yung hugs Jimin to himself. They’re both incredibly muddy and splattered- they look a lot like children at that moment.

Jimin smiles, pleased, and proceeds to imitate Sk’jin, flipping his hair in a wave of muddy silvery-gold. For some reason this makes Sk’jin smile.

‘Of all the Beings he could have imitated,’ Namjoon grumbles under his voice before he adds, ‘All right then- let’s get the truth out of him. Hoseok?’

‘I’ll be there in a minute.’
Jimin stands behind the bound and gagged pirate, hands reaching out and ready.

Namjoon takes a seat in front of the pirate alongside Hoseok who has changed his appearance. Namjoon wears his mask and nods at Jimin. Without further ado, Jimin places his palms over the temples of the pirate. They had decided that only Namjoon and Hoseok would be visually present before the pirate.

There is no visible change, no shifting in light, no surge of power, or anything that could be denoted as brilliant. Sk’jin glances over at Jimin who takes a small step back and nods at Namjoon. Sk’jin almost wants to ask, ‘that’s it?’ but stops himself. Taeh’ying gives him an excited double thumbs-up which Jimin returns slowly.

This was almost like Yoongi 2.0.

‘What is your name?’ Namjoon asks.

‘Khonen.’

Sk’jin is taken aback at the change in voice. The pirate- Khonen – had previously spoken in a guttural and harsh tone. Now his voice was…happy?! Oddly quiet and not at all gruff and aggressive.

‘Khonen, who do you work for?’ Namjoon asks.

‘I work for no one but myself.’ The pirate replies.

‘All right…what do you do Khonen?’ Hoseok asks instead.

‘I lead a small network of smugglers. We bandy with a few pirating-networks as well as the Venture Unit,’ he replies, still sounding happy.

‘Who are you currently associated with?’ Namjoon asks. ‘Who have you joined with?’

‘They are called the pure ones- the Creators.’

Sk’jin glances over at Taeh’ying who is exceptionally serious. He’s not translating, simply staring hard at the pirate, eyes glowing a green light.

‘Tell me everything you know about them,’ Hoseok says, leaning forward.

‘They call themselves the Omhlophe. They seek to create only the best, to birth the strongest, the most beautiful.’ Is Khonen’s shocking reply. ‘They move in small numbers- taking in small numbers. Only in small numbers.’

‘Does the term House of Jtāharū mean anything to you?’

‘No.’

‘Have you met them? What did they want from you?’ Hoseok presses.
‘I have spoken to them through the HoloComm,’ Khonen replies. ‘They requested our services, to enter the borders of Ynqaba, to retrieve their eggs.’

‘Eggs? What are those?’ Namjoon asks, voice strained.

‘The specimen they developed and created,’ Khonen replies. ‘They are retrieving them from the Universe, where they have been scattered.’

‘Scattered? How?’ Hoseok presses.

‘I do not know.’

Hoseok curses under his breath but Namjoon is quick to pick up the questions.

‘Do you know who Van Seulgaan is?’ the Kutsoglerin asks tersely.

‘No.’

Sk’jin can’t help but fidget. Van Seulgaan had referred to Jimin’s OrTank state as egg. And this was the second time they were now hearing this.

‘Have you ever worked for the Isbahaysiga Alliance?’

‘I do not answer to the Alliance,’ the pirate says with a smile. ‘The Alliance is falling apart- it has been for decades now, and even more so in the past few sols. I now only obey the Omhlophe.’

‘What payment do you receive from the Omhlophe?’ Namjoon asks with a frown.

‘They have a cure- to relieve my people of the plague that eats our crops,’ Khonen explains. ‘The GLA do not help us. The Yisheng refuse to aid us. They have a cure- and my people and I are paying for it as we can.’

‘Where are you from?’ Namjoon sighs out.

‘Zelek, 6th planet from the Ukuye System,’ Khonen replies.

Yoongi starts tapping on his small screen, clearly looking it up. Sk’jin steps back to stand next to the Human.

‘Have you seen other eggs?’ Hoseok asks.

‘I have delivered 3 eggs from Kutsoglera to the Omhlophe,’ Khonen replies to stunned silence.

Namjoon actually physically leans back.

‘Kutsoglera?’ his voice comes out in a cracked whisper. ‘How?’

‘The Galactic Security and Safety Department are only stationed off-planet. Security is weak- we were able to enter the planet and obtain the eggs.’

‘What were the eggs doing in Kutsoglera? How did they get there?’ Namjoon demands.

‘I do not know.’

Namjoon doesn’t move- his expression is a little unstable, eyes focusing on a spot on the floor.
‘Where were you going to take the egg if you managed to retrieve it from Ynqaba?’ Hoseok asks, casting a brief worried look over at Namjoon.

‘Our meeting points are sent to us after we pick up the eggs. They are not pre-planned,’ Khonen explains gently.

‘What line do you use to call the Omhlophe?’

‘It changes frequently- and they are the ones who call to inquire.’

‘The last call you received was from Raksane Tayi- who was that?’

‘My other crew- they called to report that eggs they were sent to retrieve had been ordered to find.’

‘Where were those eggs from?’

‘I don’t know. They get their orders differently.’ Khonen replies with a small yawn.

Yoongi nudges him quietly and Sk’jin glances down at the screen the Human was holding up.

Khonen was right- news on the planet was morbid. Their agriculture was suffering from bouts of unusual plagues and blights. Zelek was not part of the GLA- the System they were included in was in open hostile relations with the GLA and banned any help from the GLA. Not that that mattered to the Yishengs. This was probably a ploy by the GLA, to get the Ukuye System to suffer until they had no choice but to surrender themselves over to the GLA.

‘But the second call was from the Omhlophe- they wanted to know why we deviated from our trajectory.’

A chill runs down Sk’jin’s spine.

‘What did you tell them?’

‘We didn’t want them to be disappointed in us- so we lied, and said we had to do some repairs.’ Khonen explains.

Sk’jin is only a little relieved.

‘What do the Omhlophe look like? Where are they from?’ Hoseok asks, a last minute attempt in trying to rule out the House of Jtāharū.

‘They are white, and they are young. They come from everywhere,’ Khonen replies simply, yawning again. ‘They are the Universe, and the Universe is them. When they told me this, I wanted to laugh. But they weren’t joking.’

‘What does that mean?’

‘It means they are from the Universe,’ Khonen replies with a small laugh. ‘And now they just want to live and create.’

Namjoon and Hoseok sit in silence for a long while.

Jimin says something quietly to Taeh’yung who speaks out softly, ‘He’ll fall asleep soon- if you have any more questions to ask him, you should do it now- he won’t wake up for a while.’

Hoseok glances at Namjoon who isn’t responsive, and shakes his head for both of them.
They gather behind the now lightly snoring pirate.

‘Well that certainly confuses me more,’ Sk’jin says loudly, breaking the heavy silence around them. ‘So whoever this House is- they are now looking for the eggs- the very same OrTanks Jimin, and possibly Yoongi, were kept in. Which as we all know, were taken from the Akramanese mothership, and is now supposedly being kept safe by the Venture Unit and the Yishengs. And we also know now that Van Seulgaan knows about these OrTanks and also refers to them as eggs and has several in his ship. I’m also willing to bet that the empty OrTanks we saw in his ship were probably empty because that House or whatever bought them from Seulgaan- oh, and Seulgaan is part of the Alliance- which provided the Yishengs with live experimental dummies whenever they needed, in exchange for running the slave market business around the Universe.’

No one adds anything to that.

‘Oh and of course- apparently these eggs are scattered around the Universe and this House is looking for them.’ Sk’jin heaves out a sigh. ‘So basically from today we have come to know at least 4 more confusing and questionable facts and none of our answers have been answered.’

Khonen snores loudly.

‘How did these OrTanks even get around?’ Hoseok demands out loud at no one in particular. ‘Were they always out there, stored away randomly by the Akramanese or are they being carted off by the Venture Unit and the Yishengs into different Systems?’

‘Do you know what’s happened to the other OrTanks?’ Namjoon addresses Yoongi suddenly. ‘Yoongi please- we need to know in order to understand.’

Yoongi had told them that the OrTanks were kept under surveillance and security by the joint forces of the Venture Unit and the Yishengs. It was clear that Namjoon hadn’t particularly believed the Human.

‘I do not know,’ Yoongi replies, face impassive as usual. ‘If I did, then I would have told you.’

‘What are the OrTanks even doing in Kutsoglera? The entire planet is under repair,’ Hoseok quirks an eyebrow at Namjoon. ‘Is there anything else going on in Kutsoglera?’

‘None that I know of,’ Namjoon replies tersely. ‘It’s barely alive as it is.’

‘The Galactic Security and Safety Department is run by Xmi- another coincidence that he happens to be in the Special Jury?’ Hoseok exhales out heavily.

‘We need to get back to the ship,’ Yoongi says unexpectedly. ‘Their location is known to their other associates. They sent a report about meeting with us. And the Omhlophe call upon them at random. We do not want to be here.’

‘Yoongi’s right,’ Sk’jin quickly adds. ‘We should leave. Staying here isn’t going to explain anything else, and we don’t have the time to pick apart Khonen’s words.’

‘All right- Yoongi, you have all their records with you?’

Yoongi nods.

‘Let’s get going then,’ Namjoon turns and makes to leave.

‘Namjoon wait-’ Hoseok calls, making the Kutsoglerin stop.
‘What?’

‘We can’t just leave them here,’ Hoseok points at the pirate.

Sk’jin senses Jimin tensing, eyes darting between the pirate, Namjoon, and Hoseok.

Namjoon eyes Hoseok carefully.

‘Namjoon,’ Hoseok says firmly. ‘We can’t do this again.’

‘Not all of them have become pirates out of their own volition,’ Namjoon says tensely. ‘Not all of them have chosen the life they are living right now- they’re doing it for their planet- not out of choice.’

‘You’re right- and we’re in the same position too,’ Sk’jin cuts in before Hoseok can. ‘And they know it. And then they chose it. They exact same way we chose. They knew what they were getting into – they were aware of the lifestyle they were getting into. They knew what they would have to do – they didn’t take this step lightly. They knew exactly what they were doing, the same way we know what we’re doing. We cannot always make the right decision for everyone Namjoon- but we can always make the right decision for ourselves. And right now, making sure cover our tracks is the most important decision we can make because we certainly don’t need those freaks after us.’

‘We can’t let them go,’ Hoseok says quietly from the side. ‘Namjoon- they know too much.’

Namjoon seems to struggle for a moment. Then he nods.

‘Leave them behind-‘

‘-no, you know we can’t do that. They’re going to report back to them about this. and even if we block all of their channels and they’re unable to respond back, they’re going to come looking,’ Hoseok states bluntly. ‘We talked about this.’

Namjoon breathes out heavily.

‘Then I’m not doing this,’ Namjoon shakes his head. ‘I’m not going to issue the command either- if you want to do this, then it’s out of your own volition.’

Hoseok grimaces.

‘Gnoi ro!’ Jimin suddenly calls out, hand held up, furrow between his brows. Taeh’yung is quickly saying something but Jimin shakes his head.

Sk’jin wants to sigh heavily- he had a feeling Jimin would be Namjoon 2.0 and would be worse to deal with. Sk’jin wants to give up already. If Jimin supports Namjoon then there was really no point in arguing anymore. But Jimin doesn’t say anything else- he just walks up to the pirate again and places his hand over his head.

Again, there is nothing strange, no show of light, no surge of power. Nothing happens to Khonen- or at least none that Sk’jin can see.

Then Jimin makes his way towards the doorway, clearly headed for the other pirates.

‘What did he just do?’ Namjoon asks sharply.

‘He…’ Taeh’yung smiles sheepishly at them. ‘You know how he pretty much blew everyone’s minds back in Pompa with like, cool gold light and stuff?’

‘…yeah?’

‘Yeah- so like, he’s concentrated that effect- and he’s like…stunned the pirate?’

Sk’jin feels his stomach fall to his feet.

‘I beg your pardon?!’ Sk’jin hisses, glaring at Jimin’s retreating back before addressing Taeh’yung. ‘He said he it didn’t harm anyone- and that it’s not permanent- he lied. He lied about lying! What else can he do?! What else is he keeping from us?!’

‘Well- omission isn’t lying is it?’ Taeh’yung shrugs. ‘Besides- he really isn’t lying about lying Jinnie- trust me!’

‘I don’t want to trust you! I want to punch you!’ Sk’jin snaps before asking, ‘So what- this alters their memories? What does it do?’

‘It leaves them in a sort of…elevated state of mind,’ Taeh’yung waves his arms elegantly. ‘No pain- and no recollection of what happened either. So they won’t be able to sell information on us!’

Namjoon seems to sag from relief.

‘All right- good. Let’s at least make this look like some robbery or something,’ the Kutsoglerin orders, sounding lighter than before. ‘Throw them off or something.’

‘Okay!’ Taeh’yung beams, looking too excited at Namjoon’s orders.

‘And tell Jimin I said thank you,’ Namjoon adds before he too exits the ship. ‘Yoongi- can you upload the information to Lisai’s database?’

‘Uploading,’ Yoongi replies from the doorway. Sk’jin isn’t sure when the Human got there. But his helmet was on. He was clearly watching over Jimin’s actions outside.

‘Jinnie? Hobi? Is everything all right?’

Taeh’yung is watching them, a curious expression on his face.

Smiling, Sk’jin walks over to the tall Zhak’gri and ruffles his hair fondly.

‘It’s all right Tae- come on, let’s make this place look bad- I mean…’ Sk’jin scrunches his nose and looks around. ‘Worse?’

‘Worse!’ Taeh’yung cheers, throwing his hands up before he makes his way to the Bridge.

‘Now we just chill here for a while,’ Sk’jin grins at Hoseok before taking a seat on an empty OrTank and dragging over a half-opened crate. ‘And maybe shop.’

Hoseok looks like he wants to argue. But then he shrugs to himself and walks off to the piles of crates to the side.

They make quick work of the ship- especially with Jimin and Yoongi coming to quicken their pace. They also carry back in all the pirates and position them about the ship. Sk’jin is surprised to find it very dark as they step outside of the ship. But the eerie luminance of the blob-creatures as well as Taeh’yung’s oddly dark-green light casts enough around the swamp for Sk’jin to make his way through without tripping.
Hoseok is walking behind him, pulling an OrTank of supplies they deemed clean enough to take back. Taeh’ung had apparently found some random clothes as well and could barely contain his excitement. Hoseok made sure to make the Zhak’gri swear to disinfect and thoroughly wash anything he took back into the ship.

The planet is quiet, but Sk’jin can hear life teeming about them. It was much cooler now than it was at day and despite feeling itchy and dirty, the cool breeze helps Sk’jin relax just a little. The Užkulisai is waiting for them and Sk’jin catches sight of Namjoon, helping Yoongi bring in the extra fuel-cells from the pirate ship.

‘You shouldn’t hold it against Namjoon,’ Sk’jin says to Hoseok as they splash about the swamp, their feet pulling into the mud. ‘He sees the Universe in two colours- black and white. Good and bad- victim and oppressor.’

‘It’s funny considering his background,’ Hoseok grumbles, not even flinching when one of the blobs appear to his side. ‘For someone who was the sole discoverer of the links between the Akramanese and the Yishengs, he should know that it’s not all black and white.’

‘It’s precisely because of his background,’ Sk’jin shrugs. ‘He was only a child- and to an extent what he sees, how he sees things- they’re still through the eyes of a child.’

Hoseok gives him an odd look.

‘He’s pure in that regard- he’s not like us Seokkie,’ Sk’jin grins. ‘We’ve been living in a universe of grey; things are rarely ever just black and white for us.’

He hears Hoseok grumble a noncommittal sound.

‘Jimin is a good kid,’ Hoseok sighs out.

Sk’jin snorts at that, causing the Ngfy’widan to shoot him another odd look.

‘Not denying that but- Jimin did that for Namjoon.’ Sk’jin shakes his head. ‘That had nothing to do with being good or having compassion- he didn’t understand a single word we were saying but he could tell well enough from what he saw- also proves to show he’s seen a lot in his time despite the fact that he looks like a literal child.’ Sk’jin snorts. He pulls the gravity-lift a little harder. ‘And he agreed with us- there was no hesitation in his act. He did it to spare Namjoon.’

‘Spare Namjoon?’ Hoseok looks wildly confused.

‘What do you think will happen when those weirdoes get here?’ Sk’jin asks, nodding back at the ship. ‘They’re pretty much memory-less. They’re useless now. What use would they be? They’re looking for beautiful perfect creations- what’s the point of those smugglers now?’

Hoseok doesn’t reply for a while.

‘And don’t think Jimin doesn’t realize this. You can’t be the prince of anything without having a painfully in-depth knowledge on the consequences of your actions. He knew exactly what he was doing,’ Sk’jin shrugs. ‘At least proves he’s not immature.’

Hoseok stops completely.

‘How can you be so sure?’

Sk’jin also stops.
‘Because it’s the truth. And you know it too.’

Hoseok stares off into the swamp, a deep furrow between his brows.

‘Anyways- that’s not important. What is important is what we’ve discovered from today.’

‘That everything is fucked up and connected so it’s even more fucked up?’ Hoseok rolls his eyes so hard Sk’jin is vaguely worried that they’ll roll all the way back into his head.

‘Well that too- but that’s something we already knew- it’s not a surprise. I’m talking about something new.’ Sk’jin wiggles his eyebrows before turning his attention back ahead. Namjoon is waiting for them at the opening of the Hangar Gate.

Sk’jin waves brightly, blowing the Kutsoglerin a kiss. Predictably, Namjoon walks away.

‘Something new? You mean Jimin’s newfound abilities?’ Hoseok inquires.

‘Good job!’ Sk’jin laughs before adding, ‘We have a living lie-detector now Hoseok. So why do you think Namjoon, the Being who has charged every single Being on this ship for lying, not immediately jumped the idea of interrogating all of us?’ Sk’jin stops to pat Hoseok on his cheek and wrap his arm around his shoulders.

‘It’s because he’s not all that mighty and good,’ Sk’jin whispers with a smile. ‘Namjoon’s just like us- he’s hiding something too.’

Chapter End Notes
AYO LOOK AT THIS MORE CONFUSION
Also, I read the tweet fic Outcast and first of all I am HOOKED AND REALLY
INTO IT LIKE WOW I THINK YOONGI IS THE MAIN BAY GUY- LIKE SPLIT PERSONALITY OR SOMETHING IDK- THE GAME MESSES WITH MEMORIES
SO I THINK YOONGI’S THE ONE THAT’S MADE THE GAME AND NOW HE GOT CAUGHT IN IT HIMSELF
And about that very tweet fic- can we not, as a collective fandom, tag the boys in this?
I mean yea its fun and stuff but actually dragging them into it and commenting on their posts etc – stuff like ‘omg Hoseok is fake’ and ‘yoongi is going to get Namjoon killed’ and things is just really weird and also honestly I think a little creepy
I don’t think the author intended for this to blow up like this and im happy she hasn’t stopped amidst the sensation this has caused- but please- moderation in tagging please.
There was a really good post on tumblr about this:
here,
and it outlines the situation quite clearly I think in other news
UNI STARTS TOMORROW I AM NOT READY PLEASE SEND HELP
As it’s just the first week it should be okay
But! From later this month I think I’ll be going back to updates every fortnight?
I apologize for that T_T
See you next update!!!! sends hearts
‘Do you think he needs shoes? Has he lost them?’

‘I could try and ask…’

‘Of course you could.’

‘Shut up.’

Yoongi makes his way towards Jimin who stares about at them, posture uncertain and yet not afraid or shocked by their team.

‘Jimin.’

He turns around, a smile on his face. Yoongi tries not to let this stranger’s eyes get to him too much.

‘Yoongi,’ he says, giving him a small wave. Yoongi pauses—how was he going to ask about his shoes?

‘Uh-’ Yoongi points down at Jimin’s feet. ‘Your feet?’

Jimin looks down at his feet, toes curling slightly on the leaf strewn floor.

‘Do you need shoes?’

‘I don’t see any scars on his feet,’ someone says behind him, ‘No heel scars from shoes.’

Yoongi finds that this statement is true. It seemed almost universal that all Beings with anthropomorphic bodily features all possessed the similar age-worn scar on their ankles as a result of the wear and chaffing of shoes. But Jimin doesn’t have them. He had plenty of other scars—but none to show any visible indication that he ever wore shoes. It’s confusing but Yoongi wants to make sure. The floors around the area were rather unsafe, with harsh stones or broken pieces of twigs and bark ready to cut or stab.

‘Shoes?’ Yoongi tries again and this time he balances on one leg and removes his boot. Then he points at it, and then back at Jimin’s feet. Jimin’s eyes light up in understanding and he shakes his head, speaking in his language as he points at his feet and then back at Yoongi’s shoes and shakes his head again.

‘No shoe I guess,’ Yoongi thinks to himself as he puts his boot back on.
'Are you sure?' he asks again. Just to be sure. But Jimin just tilts his head to the side quizzically. Yoongi smiles instead, which is returned quickly.

‘Uh- you want food?’ Yoongi asks again, this time miming eating with his hands and patting his stomach. He’s briefly worried about the state of this Being’s clothes. They weren’t the thickest or the most durable. Simple tunic, over which he wore a hooded cloak, and trousers with the bottom rolled up to under his knees. Was he warm enough? Or perhaps his body just functioned differently.

Jimin nods a little later, a small slightly embarrassed smile following. It’s a beautiful smile, and Yoongi tries not to stare too much.

‘Food is always the best isn’t it?’ Yoongi grins as he sits down on one of the nearby rocks, beckoning Jimin over and pulling his bag over to the front. He can sense the Captain and the others watching them.

Jimin stands to the side a little hesitantly before settling on the stone next to him. Yoongi rummages around for the light-weight compressed food heavily laced with an excess of vitamins and health supplements.

‘I’m never satisfied eating these, but I’ve never been healthier,’ Yoongi says as he hands the packet to Jimin who looks at it dubiously. Not out of suspicion, but rather in a way that translated to: you eat this?!

‘Trust me, your hair will really improve in quality,- mine did,’ Yoongi opens the flat white packet and inside are flat wafer like biscuits. They’re not all bad- the flavor pleasant and didn’t leave a bitter aftertaste in your mouth. It’s almost similar to the flat-breads you could find on Earth in some of the specialty stores over at the neighbouring SettlementArcs.

Jimin watches his movements, as though ready to copy. Somehow Yoongi wants to tell this young Being that he needed to be more careful. What if (not that Yoongi was going to) he was trying to poison him?

Jimin opens the packet and takes out the wafer curiously. He sniffs it a bit, one eyebrow lifted. Then he looks up at Yoongi as though asking: you expect me to eat this?

Yoongi laughs before he bites into the wafer, ‘Good for your hair.’ He repeats and adds, ‘Not that you need it.’

Jimin’s head tilts in confusion again but nonetheless bites into the wafer. Yoongi points at the wafer and makes a happy face and an upset face. Jimin laughs, biting into the wafer again before miming a middle ground.

‘That’s pretty accurate,’ Yoongi laughs, looking away from the Being before him.

There’s a cracking noise from behind them, from inside the forest. Jimin jumps, posture defensive, eyes wide. But it’s only another member of their team, walking back from using a convenient tree to relieve themselves probably. Jimin calms down a little, eyes still wide and scanning.

‘You look scared,’ Yoongi remarks, glancing at the forest and then back at Jimin who also looks away. There’s unmistakable fear and worry in his eyes. What had he seen? What had he been through?

‘Why are you scared? Is there something here we don’t know about? Something we can’t see?’
Jimin opens his mouth but stops. He grimaces a little before hesitantly pointing at the forest and then taps right below his eye and the gestures at the camp.

A shiver runs down Yoongi’s back. Words were not needed when the implication was so obvious.

They were being watched.

There’s little else Namjoon can really think about.

His mind has consistently been a mess since the mission started and now it was a perfect riot.

Why were they picking up these OrTanks from Kutsoglera? Were there Kutsoglerin Beings inside the OrTanks? But for what purpose and for what reason?

According to what Khonen had said, the Omhlophe wanted to create only the best, to birth the strongest, the most beautiful. Kutsoglera was nothing more than ashes and horrifying distorted destruction. And her people broken and far away from their mother planet.

Loud squelching sounds shakes Namjoon out of his thoughts. Some ways from the open Hangar entryway stood Taeh’yung, ankle deep in mud, glowing a faint green in the dark of Ubhuku’s night.

Namjoon watches with mounting discomfort as Taeh’yung is lifted into the air by slimy gooey arms. The Zhak’gri seems to be enjoying himself and was far from uncomfortable or threatened. He’s talking to the gigantic blob-thing he referred to as Umholi.

‘Anything on the radars?’ Namjoon asks though a screen is in his hands.

‘Nothing- but we should get going. Taeh’yung?’ Hoseok replies.

‘I’ll be right there!’ Taeh’yung chirps back, turning his head to flash a smile that’s visible even from this distance.

To Namjoon’s side, Jimin chuckles quietly as he watches the scene progress to a loud squelching hug-session as Taeh’yung hugs the blob-thing. The other blobs are all gathered around the two, bobbing up and down like thick bubbles in a theatrically designed pot of soup. Jimin is splattered head to toe in mud, swamp water, and slime clings to his hair and parts of his clothes. Namjoon doesn’t even want to think about Taeh’yung’s state of cleanliness or lack thereof.

Jimin chuckles again, crouching down as he watches on. Namjoon has a lot to think about at this given moment. But he can’t help but go back to Jimin.
Namjoon is more than just a little confused at Jimin’s biological functions. They had taken the time to run tests and investigate his DNA and biochemistry in order to better understand him better, as well as have a sort of definitive list that clarified what could be harmful for Jimin. And the test results had come out not too far off from the general DNA structure and biochemistry of Humans.

To summarize it, there was nothing special about Jimin. At least, biologically, there was nothing out of the ordinary. There was still that confusion regarding his age, but Namjoon puts it down to the fact that Jimin had existed in whatever strange comatose state for an extended period of time.

It was possible that the Akramanese had kept him stored up in their mothership, for all those years.
It would explain his aging as well as preservation. Namjoon frowns at the idea of technology existing where you could perfectly preserve an actual living Being without any side-effects. Well, at least they hadn’t seen any side-effects on Jimin. Yet.

Growing embryos and harvesting cells from genetic coding and sampling made sense- it was more or less just like AI technology. It was the whole preservation aspect of it that raised a lot of questions.

They had performed a full medical check-up on Jimin as well, with Taeh’yung translating. Jimin had said he was 247 sols old- though it’s confusing because Namjoon doesn’t know how to convert that in GLA standard measurement. But based off of their own previous scans, Jimin’s age matched with one of their scans. However, according to what they knew about Bhumi, the issue with the planet and the system, had been more or less a millennium ago. So when they scanned Jimin again, the same approximation age of 1450 sols kept appearing. It threw everything off by at least 300 sols.

The scans weren’t wrong, that much was for sure. So where did those 300 sols go off to? Was it a mistake?

There had been mentions of time-alteration, of time-manipulation, in some of the wilder reports Namjoon had dug into during his time as Information Analyst. But nothing could be proven, and nothing was conclusive.

So now here there were with an honest to Spaces alien- knowing nothing about him save from translations and possibly inaccurate medical scans. Not to mention his very broad set of skills and abilities. What else was he hiding up his sleeves? How much of what Taeh’yung translated could they trust? How much of Jimin could they even trust?

Namjoon is well aware of the risks they were taking right now, especially considering what they knew, where they stood in all of that, and how this was connected to some of the biggest criminal and horrifying secrets of the GLA and all associated organizations. But Namjoon’s been feeling like he was at the edge of discovery- of uncovering something. He would be naïve if he said he wanted the truth. He didn’t want the truth- because most times, the truth always originated in the selfish greed of some power-hungry Being.

Namjoon’s curiosity wasn’t based on figuring out the truth or uncovering the source of any of this.
He just wanted to know why.

Why did the Special-Jury put them together like this? Why did decide that Jimin’ OrTank needed to be taken back to Bhumi. Why did they want Yoongi and Jimin to reunite? Because that much was obvious- it was staged to a certain degree, and made to happen. What was in Yoongi’s past with Jimin that made his addition to this so important?
Were they born the same way?

Had Yoongi been taken, the exact same way Jimin had been taken? But that didn’t explain it either- because despite what Jimin has said about his apparent history with Yoongi, the Human clearly didn’t remember him. No records of a Human named Min Yoongi was ever reported to be part of any investigative panel in the GLA either. Namjoon had checked thoroughly.

Namjoon has had a lot of questions ever since the beginning of this mission. And at first he felt as though nothing could answer his questions. But now, with where they were and where they stood in all of this, Namjoon feels like he’ll finally be able to get answers.

‘We should close,’ Yoongi states blankly from behind them. Namjoon starts just a little but Jimin doesn’t seem surprised. Instead he beams up at Yoongi.

Yoongi pauses, and then he bows stiffly, extending his hand out to Jimin and says, ‘Your majesty.’

Jimin flushes bright red, hands waving frantically as he gets up, stammering in his language. Namjoon eyes Yoongi who has a curiously amused expression on his face, simply gestures for Jimin to go back inside the ship. Jimin is rapidly speaking, head shaking and hands covering his face as though embarrassed as he scurries off, Yoongi right behind him.

‘That was totally on purpose wasn’t it pa?’

Namjoon curses- mainly because he told himself to get used to Taeh’yung’s ability to pop up literally everywhere. It’s basically how they met in the first place.

‘What-?’

‘Yoongi,’ Taeh’yung explains, unaware (or uncaring) of the wad of goo sliding down from his hair to his cheek and under his tunic. ‘He just purposefully addressed Jimin like that.’

‘Uh-’

‘It’s so cute! It’s like he’s remembering!’ Taeh’yung grins before he shakes himself, goo and swamp water flying everywhere. Namjoon winces as he’s splashed. He makes a mental note to shower in the hottest water setting available.

‘Remembering?’ Namjoon repeats.

‘Yeah! How it was for him from that time,’ Taeh’yung sweeps back his hair, pushing the goo into his hair. Namjoon wants to push Taeh’yung into a vat of boiling water in hopes of maybe cleaning him.

‘…you mean remembering how things were before?’

‘Well yeah?’ Taeh’yung stops spreading goo deeper into his scalp as he says, ‘-I guess you could say it like that.’

Namjoon has a feeling that Taeh’yung saw more than he understood. The Zhak’gri waves brightly, palms glowing green as the blobs outside quiver and bob around as though in farewell.

‘Say “bye” pa!’ Taeh’yung grins at him. Namjoon turns properly to wave at the blobs. To his immense disquiet, they wave back weird gooey blob-arms.

‘BYE UMHOLI! BE A GOOD GIRL OKAY?’ Taeh’yung cups his hands together to yell.
‘How did you create those?’ Namjoon asks hesitantly as the engines hum to life and the Hangar doors close, narrowing their view of the swamp.

‘Hm-’ Taeh’yung continues waving his arms. ‘-well, there were a bunch of…cells? And they were just, you know, thriving around the place.’

The Zhak’gri waves around the scenery dismissively.

‘And they kept dying- I don’t think that uh…living beings like creatures and animals can survive this environment- so those organisms kept dying?’ Taeh’yung explains. ‘And so I felt bad for them- then I decided why not give them a helping hand right?’

Namjoon nods hesitantly.

‘So I just sort of- you know,’ Taeh’yung rolls his hands in a forward motion and no, Namjoon does not know. But he nods anyways because he’s not entirely sure he wants to know the answer.

The Hangar doors close and Taeh’yung lets out a sad sigh.

‘You uh- you’ll see them again,’ Namjoon tries, ‘They’ll be here, and you can come back, right?’

‘It’s not that,’ Taeh’yung smiles, a melancholic expression settling on his features. ‘I could still sense him here- it was as though he was still living.’

Namjoon doesn’t have time to ask Taeh’yung who he was talking about as Hoseok calls them to secure themselves for take-off. Namjoon is spared having to ask Taeh’yung to not sit on the Lobby couches as the Zhak’gri sits himself down on the benches to the side of the Hangar Bay. Namjoon takes a seat on the bench as well, at a safe distance from the goo Taeh’yung was dripping in his wake.

There was so much shock, so many revelations, in the span of a single day, that Namjoon finds it hard to really scope the general outrageousness of their situation and the Beings involved. Not that he wasn’t aware of it. Sometimes the subject at hand was so overwhelming, you forgot to look at it individually. And so much had happened since Taeh’yung somehow slipped into the ship as part of their crew, Namjoon realizes that he’s never actually spoken to the Zhak’gri about their situation in detail. Or the fact that he was so closely involved with the whole case. He could even smell these Beings- whoever the Omhlophe were.

If he was going to get answers and start uncovering reasons, he might as well start with the Being who witnessed so much.

‘What do you think about this situation?’ Namjoon asks as the ship picks up speed.

‘Hm? About?’ Taeh’yung’s eyes widen in question.

‘Those Beings- the ones the smugglers were talking about,’ Namjoon clarifies. ‘The Omhlophe. And not just that- about the Alliance- how they’re connected to the Akramanese- how the Omhlophe are connected to the Akramanese- how Jimin and Yoongi are born from those eggs-‘

‘-Chim isn’t born from an egg,’ Taeh’yung interrupts.

‘…what do you mean?’
‘Yoongi is- for sure, but not Chim. Chim was just- always like how you found him,’ Taeh’yung explains.

‘How do you know this?’

‘They’re both from a different time- but Chim’s soul is still the same. Yoongi’s has changed.’ Taeh’yung says with a serious nod. ‘I didn’t know about it until Chim told me that Yoongi felt different. He is the same- just different.’

Namjoon doesn’t know how to ask more questions based on that so instead he asks, ‘And do you think…do you think these Omhlophe- whoever they are, are like the Akramanese? Are they another Yisheng experiment gone wrong?’

This was one of Namjoon’s biggest worries.

The Akramanese were created by mistake and overlooked. They were able to discover through the Gaia Case that the some of the Yisheng Directory and a few of the Venture Unit Head of Divisions had organized their own attempt in creating a method through which they could somehow monopolize not just the entire Universe but to completely take over the freewill of the Beings living in it. With this came countless experimentations and studies, all conducted in hopes of creating a way to achieve this goal. Some were outright failures, while some fell off the grid, as was the case with Sk’jin’s history. The Akramanese however, had been a disastrous experiment and it was decided that they be cast out into a black-hole in order to completely obliterate and remove any such evidence of their existence.

However they survived this brutal attempt at execution and as a result they grew stronger and crept along the Universe. Transcending into Beings that were nearly multi-dimensional, the Akramanese succeeded in nearly over throwing the Known Universe into complete and utter chaos. The Akramanese had inherited a skewed notion of what the Yishengs and the Venture Unit had wanted to achieve- and so evolved into Beings with one singular goal in mind: to overtake the Universe.

Namjoon guesses they will probably never know how many planets, moons, stars, suns, this extra-dimensional force absorbed to power themselves- and Namjoon honestly would rather not find out.

So what if the Omhlophe were just like the Akramanese? Created by the Yishengs in their attempts to rule the Known Universe and then discarded and left to evolve on their own? Because what that smuggler Khonen had said was too similar to the way the Akramanese saw the Universe.

Like a place they had to cleanse and replace with their idea of creation and life.

‘No- they just smell like that ship. They’re not even similar to those weirdoes,’ Taeh’yung shrugs casually. ‘They smelt like them- but they were nothing like them. They seemed just…just like us.’

Namjoon frowns at that, looking over at Taeh’yung who pauses, eyes vacant as though listening to something else.

‘Just like us but-’ he stops. ‘-a bit different.’

‘Different how?’ Namjoon asks.

‘…I don’t know,’ Taeh’yung replies softly, concentrating on something else.

‘Is that how the rest of the “eggs” were? I know that you were involved with removing the OrTanks from the destruction zone. What did they feel like?’
Taeh’yung hums low before he says, ‘Like they were children, fast asleep, getting ready to wake up- hoping to wake up.’

‘What sort of Beings were they?’ Namjoon presses, desperate for solid answers rather than metaphoric symbols and analogies. ‘What did they look like, from where- and why-‘

‘They were from this Universe, but from a much longer past. From a different Time. Some were old, weary-‘ Taeh’yung smiles softly at this, ‘Exhausted.’

Who were exhausted and why?

‘But some were young, strong, bright,’ Taeh’yung concludes and adds with a frown, ‘I thought they would all be safe. I guess there are more babies to save now.’

‘How do you think Jimin is connected to this? To the Akramanese?’ Namjoon asks. He was surprised to find that Taeh’yung was serious in all of this. The Zhak’gri’s expression is thoughtful and his demeanor focused.

Taeh’yung leans back, arms crossed. His movements are accentuated by sloppy wet sounds and more goo seeps out of him around the bench and on to the floors. He suddenly seems aged; harsh lines falling across the lines of his face that seemed to morph, slowly changing his features. But the moment Namjoon blinks, it’s gone and Taeh’yung gives him a squelchy shrug, eyes bright as he says, ‘I don’t know!’.

Namjoon nods with a disappointed sigh. It was sort of a stretch to expect Taeh’yung to know all of the answers when they didn’t even know what sort of questions they should be asking.

‘Are you all right leaving your uh, children, back in the planet?’ Namjoon asks awkwardly.

Taeh’yung’s expression changes from pleasantly surprised to emotional in 0.2 seconds and he leaps straight into Namjoon, never minding the strain of the security harness around his chest. Namjoon’s shirt is instantly soaked in slime.

‘Thank you for asking pa,’ the Zhak’gri beams up. ‘But they’ll be fine! Always trust in evolution! The progression of time!’

‘Uh- yeah,’ Namjoon tries to move away but slime and the power of Taeh’yung’s hugs is a little too much for him to counter.

‘Pa can I harvest some of the slime and grow them in the Medical Bay?’

‘What the fuck-?! No!’

Hoseok is obviously not pleased with the decision to forego Grisial for the moment and detour to the dead space between Cabcd and Sluchaen. It’s quite obvious from the permanent frown and the ‘Are all of you actually fucking insane?’ that he spits out the moment Namjoon had asked if they should fly under the Ymir System or over it.

And Sk’jin has lived long enough to predict what was about to happen.

Namjoon, a little affronted, replies with a, ‘We already went through this- we’re going to gather information beneficial to the mission.’

Hoseok is very obviously not here for this.

Yoongi is watching the Head Pilot and Navigator stare each other down over the Navigation Table, neither of them backing away. His stance is easy and casual, but he’s at the perfect distance to separate the two if needed. Jimin is sitting on one of the footstools, looking uncomfortable and concerned, eyes flitting between Hoseok, Namjoon, and Taeh’yung, as though asking for translation. Taeh’yung on the other hand, is yawning mightily, looking like he was about to drop off to sleep any time now. He was miraculously squeaky clean and had decided to dress in the clothes he’d found in the smuggler’s ship cargo.

Sk’jin wants to sit back on his seat and just enjoy the show. He’s counting down inside his head, to how many more seconds it would take for Hoseok to snap.

Namjoon and Hoseok normally agreed on most matters, and listened to each other’s input more than they did anyone else on the ship. They both seemed to have that ‘Being A is from the same organization so Being A must be reliable’ mentality that seemed pretty pervasive throughout the Universe. It was applicable in almost any situation. And it wasn’t as though Sk’jin blamed them.

But Sk’jin isn’t like that. His motto (one of his mottos) in life is ‘trust no one ever’ and so far that sentiment allowed him to continue on this far. Or at least, it did, to an extent. As Living Beings, we were all more than capable of going against what we know is good for us. Like right now.

In Sk’jin’s opinion, not that either Namjoon or Hoseok were asking him, was of indifference. He didn’t care where they went as long as they didn’t stay long. And if asked, Sk’jin would frankly answer that this entire idea of actually carrying out the mission was stupid. And seeing as his opinion was ignored, any additional journey made within that plan of stupidity was honestly just meh to the Khol’isa.

So while he did have a reason to go back, it was one he didn’t feel the urgency to see through into fruition.

‘You agreed on going here-‘ Namjoon states, repeating Hoseok’s agreement to their previous plan.

‘I did, and that was before the Omhlophe showed up,’ Hoseok replies with a frown. ‘We need to get out of the vicinity – even if that vicinity includes a few systems-‘

‘-but this is too good an opportunity to pass up!’ Namjoon defends. ‘There are aspects to this that we do not understand, and with this planet, we have a higher possibility of understanding or clarifying what we need to know!’

‘Knowing more doesn’t equate understanding anything!’ Hoseok snaps back, ‘I think we’re all living a prime example of that- this side-trip is not going to ground any of our theories as the correct one- it’s just going to add more to our confusion and will create even more questions that we cannot afford to find out! We need to think smart here-‘

‘-and we are!’ Namjoon retorts. ‘We are thinking smart- we are thinking steps ahead of the Special-Jury, making layers upon layers within our plans and creating safety nets for ourselves! By doing this- we are not flying blind towards Bhumi without any additional information-‘

‘We are always flying blind!’ Hoseok looks 2 seconds away from pulling at his hair. ‘Not to mention Jimin doesn’t want to talk about his planet’s security measures- what makes you think he’ll explain anything when we go to this place? We’re just creating more openings through which we can be found-‘

‘But if we are able to-‘

‘Your plans have too many variables – it’s always what ifs and “what if” is not a good enough reason for me to willingly pilot this ship out of our planned trajectory!’ Hoseok spits out.

Namjoon gives pause before asking, ‘So you’re saying you won’t pilot the ship if we follow this trajectory?’

‘Yes,’ Hoseok replies stiffly.

‘Sk’jin- can you pilot us to that planet?’ Namjoon asks without looking away from Hoseok.

Hoseok also doesn’t back down.

Sk’jin sighs.

He wants to say no- because he agrees that this is stupid despite his agreement to the plan. However, he does see a valid point in all of this mess. So he shrugs and says, ‘Eh, why not?’.

It’s not the most reassuring response Sk’jin knows, especially from the way Namjoon grimaces a little.

‘Hoseok you are relieved from your pilot-duties-‘ Namjoon begins but Sk’jin cuts across easily, spinning on his chair.

‘You don’t have the authority to do that.’

Both Namjoon and Hoseok break their glaring competition to raise a questioning eyebrow at Sk’jin.

‘Princeling there has that authority,’ Sk’jin nods at Jimin who’s expression shifts into a wary one as all eyes fall on him.

‘You don’t need to do anything- I quit this mess,’ Hoseok spits out, walking off of the Navigator’s Mast and out of the Bridge. Taeh’yung suddenly sits up at that, wide awake. Even Sk’jin finds himself feeling surprised. ‘You can drop me off in Ts’ets’khli as you’re so adamant in blatantly fucking up everything!’ Hoseok yells behind him and vanishes around the doorway.

Sk’jin wants to laugh even though he knows it’s a bad idea. Because it was true- if they wanted to pass through Cabcd and Sluchaen they would have to make the compulsory stop inside Ymir in at least 2 different planets in order to gain the required and sufficient passes through the space-borders. If they decided to take another route- it would take 3 additional weeks in warp-speed to reach that location. Going through Ymir meant 2 days of normal-speed, and then a mere day in warp before they arrived in their location.
Jimin and Taeh’yung follow after the Ngfy’widan and quietly make their exit though it’s not without looking back with confused expressions.

Namjoon curses under his breath, throwing himself into his chair heavily, head in his hands at once.

‘You should apologize,’ Yoongi says randomly from where he’s standing. ‘We need a head pilot.’

‘I’m sure Sk’jin is more than capable-‘ Namjoon mumbles from behind his hands.

Yoongi eyes him, as though silently asking him if he was indeed more than capable of being head pilot. And yes, Sk’jin is more than capable of course. But he raises an eyebrow in Namjoon’s hunched direction and shakes his head before nodding towards the doorway.

‘I don’t know what you mean by that.’

Sk’jin almost facepalms.

‘Let’s go prepare lunch,’ Sk’jin says instead, getting up from his chair. ‘Give Namjoon time to cool off.’

Yoongi nods shortly and follows after Sk’jin as soon as he crosses over the Bridge.

‘If you’re sure about this-‘ Sk’jin begins but Namjoon cuts him off quickly.

‘I’m sure.’

They exit the Bridge and make their way down the stairs in relative silence until Yoongi asks, ‘Do you think he’s sure?’

‘He could be,’ Sk’jin replies truthfully before adding, ‘We’re all under a lot of stress- what with all the things we’ve just recently learnt.’

‘You mean about the eggs from Kutsoglera?’

‘Exactly that,’ Sk’jin nods as they walk across the Lobby towards the Kitchens. Hoseok’s Cabin door is closed, but Taeh’yung’s and Jimin’s are closed. They were probably inside with the Ngfy’widan. Yoongi seemed to have come to the same conclusion as well, head turned towards Hoseok’s Cabin door.

If there was a possibility of understand where and what these eggs were- the answers were most likely with Yoongi. Sk’jin knew that Taeh’yung oversaw many of the procedures involving moving the “eggs” from the broken Akramanese mothership into safety. But Yoongi, a Being that Sk’jin is now nearly entire sure was chosen to specifically be “woken up” or at least, was allowed a form of evolution in his self-awareness, was probably the one Being who held the most answers to all of this. Even if the Being in question wasn’t aware of this.

Besides, Sk’jin had spoken to Taeh’yung, but the young Zhak’gri, for all his raw power and abilities, could be as dense as a meteorite and couldn’t really shed any light on the matter. Sk’jin has come to realize that in order to gain any consequential reply or information from Taeh’yung, you had to ask the right question. And at this very moment, they didn’t have enough concrete information to come up with a question Taeh’yung could answer for them. Or at least, they wouldn’t be able to understand Taeh’yung’s answer.

‘Could you take out the preserves from the pantry? I think I’ll make something sweet to eat.’ Sk’jin says as he passes his hands over the UV counter to clean them.

Yoongi carefully balances the jar of preserves in his hands and places it on the counter, eyeing the dark red jelly inside rather dubiously.

‘Isn’t this jam?’ he asks.

‘Jam?’ Sk’jin repeats as he holds out a sift for Yoongi to hold and places a bowl beneath it.

‘…I think it’s a Human term.’ Yoongi explains, eyeing the sift with interest.

‘Hm…seems rather fitting,’ Sk’jin shrugs and begins pouring the preserve into the sift before he grins and adds, ‘Because the ingredients are jammed together.’

Yoongi looks up at him slowly, and for someone who had a pretty expressionless face, Sk’jin feels incredibly judged.

‘Do you really know nothing about the eggs?’ Sk’jin hadn’t been planning on asking about this subject in this manner but the level of judgment he was receiving threw him off.

Yoongi doesn’t look up from watching the preserve slowly ooze out of the sift as he replies, ‘I saw a lot. But I do not understand.’

‘Keep holding that up,’ Sk’jin stops pouring out the amount he was eyeballing. Grabbing a flat spatula he presses down on the more solid bits of preserved fruit. ‘Care to tell me what you saw? Maybe we can understand together?’

‘I can try,’ Yoongi replies before asking, ‘You were inside that place. Did you understand what it was?’

Sk’jin shrugs, making sure that no lumps remained before dragging the bowl out from under the sift. ‘You can eat that. You might like it.’

Reaching for the compressor jar of cream, Sk’jin pours out the thick cream into the bowl of preserves before he answers, ‘There are things- some things, that can’t be explained. Thing that don’t have a logical explanation because its birth and foundation doesn’t always reflect or originate from what we know.’

He glances at Yoongi who was scraping the sift with a spoon. He seemed to be regarding the preserve with more concentration than what Sk’jin had said. Sk’jin wasn’t the most patient Being in the Universe. But he’s had his fair share of having to be careful and having to wait.

‘But that doesn’t mean you can’t try to understand it.’ Sk’jin mixes the combination together with a whisk. ‘Or at least see how it might affect the things you already understand.’

‘Like love?’

Sk’jin nearly upsets the bowl of creamed preserves.

‘Uh-‘

‘K’mara said that to me once.’

‘K’mara?’ Sk’jin repeats in a hollow voice, his mind racing.

‘I reported to her before the Gaia Case was in court.’ Yoongi says over a mouthful of preserves.
‘It’s very sweet.’

‘…it’s supposed to be. Do you like it?’ Sk’jin asks, hand stilling over the whisk.

‘It’s very sweet.’

‘…so, you worked for K’mara?’ Sk’jin presses.

‘For a brief period of time. It’s how I met you in Šerdesas, she asked me to keep an eye on the Heladian and the Long-Huon lieutenant.’

Sk’jin’s mind reels back, remembering the day he first met Yoongi. Had K’mara kept track of him since then? Sk’jin tries to quell the intensity of paranoia building in him. He hadn’t felt like this since the initiation of this mission. Maybe he was starting to slack-off. He was going to have to stay more alert from now on.

‘Did you tell her about me back then?’ Sk’jin can’t help the sharpness in his voice.

‘No.’ Yoongi reaches for the cream. ‘I deemed it unnecessary.’

‘Did…did K’mara mention anything about the “eggs”?’

‘No.’

‘Did she know you were born from one of them?’

‘I told her who I was at that time.’

‘At that time?’

Yoongi puts the sift down into the sink carefully.

‘I Am,’ Yoongi replies with no context.

Yoongi and K’mara. Both of them actively involved with the Gaia Case together, possibly before it even became an actual issue in court.

Before Sk’jin can ask any more questions, the door to Hoseok’s Cabin opens and for some reason Taeh’yung is on Jimin’s back while the Ngfy’widan follows after them looking a little better than when he stormed out of the Bridge.

‘I’m making dessert!’ he announces.

‘Dessert! Forward Chim!’ Taeh’yung yells exuberantly as he points ahead. Jimin just laughs and as though Taeh’yung was a small child, runs around with him on his back around the Lobby.

‘Children,’ Sk’jin snorts.

But instead Yoongi smiles- a softened look on his face as he watches Jimin running around with Taeh’yung on his back. Sk’jin wants to alert Hoseok, draw his attention to the Human but Hoseok clears his throat and says, ‘Are you free for a moment?’

Sk’jin looks away from Yoongi, the cheers and squeals coming from Jimin and Taeh’yung turning into breathless giggles as they chased each other about.

‘Well- I can multitask?’ Sk’jin indicates down at the bowl. His mind is still reeling from the information Yoongi so casually dropped. Hoseok should know about this- or should he?

‘I don’t know what happened to you,’ Hoseok begins with no preamble. ‘Or much about anything that’s happened in that planet, how it relates to you- but do you really think any of this will actually bring about anything productive? I know what you said about going here- but even now, after what just happened, and knowing more about those Omhlophe Beings, are you still willing to take a risk for something that could potentially turn out to be nothing more than a waste of time?’

Sk’jin perfectly understands why Hoseok is clearly confused over his agreement to this trip. Back in Pompa, Sk’jin hadn’t exactly portrayed himself in the strongest light in regards to what happened in his past. So it was understandable that Hoseok would find his sudden change of mind to be questionable.

‘Jimin…’ Sk’jin begins quietly. ‘Jimin’s presence here. Who he is- where he’s from, and what he can do, all strangely ties in with everything we’re involved in. It might even be the reason why we’re all here in the first place. Or it could all just be over-thinking,’ Sk’jin admits truthfully. ‘But I can’t deny that there is something- connecting all of us with each other- to Jimin- to this planet, and what happened there. Not to mention the fact that these eggs seem to exist everywhere now. We’ve come this far- and I don’t want to remain in the dark about any of this anymore.’

Sk’jin is being genuine- after watching Jimin, listening to his story, putting all of the facts and data they knew- there was an undeniable desire building in him to recklessly dive in and discover what any of this meant.

And there was also another thing to all of this that was fuelling his decision.

‘And I also made a promise,’ Sk’jin adds casually, reaching for a baking tray. ‘Can you hand me a loaf of bread- the lighter one, please.’

Hoseok, unsure of this statement as well as randomness of his request, obliges in silence.

Taeh’yung and Jimin are still laughing, somehow having roped Yoongi into their antics. Taeh’yung uses Yoongi as a shield of sorts, hiding behind the much shorter Human as he giggles madly. Jimin tries his best to go around but Sk’jin has a feeling that despite looking like he didn’t want to be there, Yoongi was actually participating, deflecting Jimin’s attempts with such subtlety it could be overlooked.

‘…so what’s this supposed to be?’ Hoseok asks.

‘A sort of pudding,’ Sk’jin explains as he crumbles the bread into another bowl.

‘You’ve made it before?’ Hoseok asks, looking down at the preserves and cream mixture.

‘No- I just thought the combination should be nice,’ Sk’jin replies truthfully.

Hoseok gives him an amused look before laughing under his breath.

‘Is there another reason why you’re leaving?’ Sk’jin asks as he flattens the bite-size pieces of bread into a tray.

Hoseok fidgets for a moment, glancing out of the kitchen window, a distant look in his eyes.

‘There’s a lot,’ Hoseok mumbles, absent mindedly popping a piece of bread in his mouth. ‘But I don’t think I can do this anymore. But you guys don’t have to worry- it’s not like I’m going back to the GLA or Venture Unit. I think it’s pretty obvious that I’m not welcome there anymore.’
‘If you have nowhere to go- you could just stay here,’ Sk’jin offers. ‘If it’s all the same to you.’

Hoseok shakes his head, smiling ruefully as he says, ‘I think, you know as well as I do, that it’s never like that.’

Sk’jin nods in reply.

‘What do you think you’ll do now?’ Sk’jin asks as he grabs the preserve and cream batter. Hoseok holds the tray down for him as he pours the thick batter over the bread.

‘Go under for a few sols- if it’s just me, it’s easy,’ Hoseok replies with an easy shrug and Sk’jin believes him. Other than Yoongi, Hoseok would probably be the most difficult Being to find if he chose to remain hidden. And it wasn’t just because of his abilities as a Ngfy’widan.

‘If I hear about anything- I’ll try to get it to you guys,’ Hoseok adds.

Sk’jin chuckles at that, shaking his head.

‘You should stay away as much as you can,’ he advices with a wink.

‘Well you know me- attracted to danger,’ Hoseok winks back easily.

‘Take that handsome face away and put that tray in the oven,’ Sk’jin huffs as though flustered.

Hoseok laughs easily as he takes up the tray.

‘Children! What do you want to drink?’ Sk’jin calls out.

‘ANYTHING IS GOOD!’ Taeh’yung yells back amidst scuffling sounds.

By the time tea (without any trace amounts of radioactive isotopes) is set and poured into cups, and the pudding fully baked, Sk’jin calls the children over. This time Jimin is on Taeh’yung’s back, having finally managed to grab a hold of the Zhak’gri. Yoongi follows after them.

Despite Namjoon’s obvious absence looming around them, they have a relatively easy-going and light-hearted impromptu dessert-meal together. Jimin is clearly singing praises about the dish, having first taken a bite with some dubiousness.

They didn’t have any whipping cream, so Sk’jin wasn’t able to decorate the weirdly toasted yet mushy reddish lump that was pudding preserve. But despite it’s weird appearance, it tasted very delicious and the tray was emptied in minutes.

Food seemed to be the universal language of gathering and bring everyone together as a whole. Because despite the tense moment in the Bridge and the result that came about from it, they’re all freely conversing. Or at least trying to.

‘Tae- how about you and Jimin archive his language?’ Sk’jin suggests as Taeh’yung struggles to translate the more complex questions Jimin has about the food. ‘This will make everyone’s lives easier I think- especially Jimin’s, if he can easily communicate with us, even if it’s the basics.’

Taeh’yung nods enthusiastically at that, quickly translating Sk’jin’s suggestion to Jimin who is also nodding quickly, looking around for the screen Namjoon had fitted for him. Hoseok also looks on intrigued at the application Namjoon had designed.

‘It’s almost like every other GLA standard language translator during Exploration missions,’ Hoseok remarks. ‘It provides examples of key phrases that should carry the most commonly used words in a given language and forms a pattern based off of it. Except in this case, it also creates a response back to the foreign language, allowing the alien to converse back.’

Taeh’yung translates this excitedly and Jimin’s eyes brighten up, looking relieved and delighted. He turns to Yoongi, taking the Human’s hand in his as he excitedly speaks to him. There’s a slight look of alarm in the Human’s eyes, still not used to the way Jimin so freely interacted with him. Sk’jin looks away, trying to ignore the way his chest feels the faintest of pain.

Using their distraction, Sk’jin slips away quietly and pulls up another cup and saucer. He knows Hoseok is watching as he carries the items with him upwards.

‘You sound like you’re having quite the party,’ Namjoon says dully even before Sk’jin can make his way to the Navigator’s Mast. It was dark inside the Bridge and Sk’jin feels like an exasperated parent trying to amend some argument between his sons. Namjoon is slumped on his chair, eyes unfocused as he gazes out of the large HUD windows.

‘If you’re talking about the loud laughter, it’s all Taeh’yung,’ Sk’jin comments before placing the cup of tea on the side of the Table. Namjoon eyes it cautiously, as though surprised and suspicious.

‘Look- I’m not the type to poison okay? That’s Yoongi,’ Sk’jin rolls his eyes and adds without preamble, ‘You should probably apologize to Hoseok- attempting to officially throw him out of the ship is a little much isn’t it?’

Namjoon scowls as he sips on the tea.

Sk’jin leans against the edge of the Navigation Table, something he knows Namjoon really doesn’t like.

‘He said he was leaving-‘ Namjoon says almost petulantly.

‘-and you saw that as a real threat?’

‘Why would he say it if he didn’t mean it?’

‘It was his attempt at bargaining- he knew you wanted to go- fucking Spaces he even agreed to go, he was literally the one who officiated the marriage of our opinions.’ Sk’jin waves a hand about. Namjoon doesn’t look amused by his analogy. ‘And you simply stopped it all.’

‘So now you want me to go and apologize and ask him to stay and go to Grisial?’ Namjoon asks back.

Sk’jin wants to roll his eyes until they roll back permanently. Instead he sighs as patiently as possible and reaches over to flick Namjoon’s ear.

‘I don’t want you to do anything you little shit-head,’ Sk’jin says calmly. ‘I want you to maybe stop thinking out of your ass for a moment but seeing as you can’t at the moment I brought you tea- because it’s supposed to make you Zen or something.’

He expects Namjoon to retort back a snappy remark but he gets nothing.

Sk’jin wonders if Namjoon knows about Yoongi’s involvement with K’mara and how far that transaction had gone on. He has half the mind to tell the Kutsoglerin but stops himself. It was, at this moment, inconsequential. And Yoongi hadn’t regarded it as a secret of sorts, so Namjoon would come to know the next time Yoongi drops an extraordinary fact about himself on them.
‘Take a fucking moment and be calm. You’re smarter than this. Be smarter than this.’ Sk’jin adds before he pushes himself off of the Table and makes his way to the exit again before calling back, ‘And stop sulking in the dark! You’re a grown ass adult!’

Yoongi wants to talk to someone. Though he’s not sure how to instigate it. He could just ask someone if they had a moment to spare. That was the standard in most of the books he’s read. So now the question was: who to ask?

He immediately rules out Taeh’yung.

Yoongi feels he’ll be more confused.

He also rules out Sk’jin. He has a feeling things might take a completely different route on this one if he’s able to fully finish what he wants to discuss.

He weighs in on Namjoon. But the Captain was more than just distracted. News that more of the eggs were out and about the Universe- and that too in Kutsoglera, really seemed to have shaken Namjoon. That and the argument from the Bridge.

So that’s why he corners Hoseok in his Cabin, fresh out of a shower.

‘Fucking Spaces Yoongi!’ Hoseok hisses, holding up a TeorSer right at Yoongi’s forehead.

He had impressive reflexes though if Yoongi wanted he could have definitely dodged and disarmed Hoseok but now was not the time. He’s also quite sure no one showered with a TeorSer on their being so he’s confused as to where and how Hoseok pulled that TeorSer out from.

‘Do you have a moment.’

Hoseok gapes at him for a moment before sighing and nodding.

‘When do you have a moment.’ Yoongi asks.

‘Uh…I guess now is as good a time as any?’ Hoseok replies, tightening the towel around his waist.

'I want to talk.'

'...okay...' Hoseok pauses in his movements, looking like he wanted to ask Yoongi a question. But he moves on, walking towards his dresser. 'What about?'

'This.' Yoongi hands Hoseok the clip who takes it with a confused expression.
‘What’s this?’ Hoseok holds up the sparkly purple hair clip.

‘Jimin bought it for me.’

‘…I mean…’ Hoseok squints at the object. ‘I guess it’s pretty?’

‘I think he wanted to tell me something.’

‘About your past you mean?’ Hoseok asks sharply.

‘I think I had a sister.’ Yoongi states simply.

Hoseok looks up from the clip and then at Yoongi.

‘Are you remembering? Things from your past?’

Yoongi still had the records Namjoon had given him- untouched, unread. Namjoon had said it was monumental. But Yoongi doesn’t know why it should be. He only knows that he wouldn’t really understand most of what he read if he were to explore the contents.

‘I am different,’ Yoongi tries to explain. ‘There are things, inside database- inside my mind- that are new. Or improved. Or regressed. But there is something I didn’t know before.’

‘So do you understand what that is?’ Hoseok asks as he returns the clip.

‘No. And yes.’

Hoseok pauses at that, blinking a few times before asking, ‘What do you mean by that?’

‘I have an answer for that; an understanding based on what I have come to know from being Awake,’ Yoongi replies. ‘But my answer only brings more questions, and I have no definite answers for those.’

‘So…why don’t you tell me your answer? Maybe we can put things together? From an outer perspective,’ Hoseok offers.

Yoongi nods, this was exactly what he wanted to do.

‘Jimin says that he knew me. That I existed, and Was, all those sols ago.’ Yoongi begins, ‘He also says that I died.’

Hoseok nods, reaching for a shirt, a lone one hanging inside the dresser. Yoongi notices Hoseok’s bags are all packed.

‘Yet I am here. And so is he.’

Hoseok nods again.

‘But I do not remember what happened. But he does.’ Yoongi fidgets with the clip in his hand. ‘We spoke, we communicated- we protected each other. And I died. I do not remember, but he does.’

‘Okay…so what are you trying to say?’ Hoseok asks as he pulls the shirt over his head.

‘The scar on my back,’ Yoongi replies. ‘I have it. But he doesn’t. The rest of the GIU had it. But Jimin, who was inside the same Or Tanks I came across in the Yisheng Headquarters, doesn’t have it.’
‘And none of the GIU, before you that is, had a cognitive memory or response to their existence,’ Hoseok ruminates slowly.

Yoongi nods in reply.

‘So my answer to your question is yes, I understand why this is happening to me,’ Yoongi has a strange feeling curling in the pit of his stomach. It was similar to how he felt when he first started waking up, and when he fell down the side of Zhoumi’s living complex.

A strange rush- light yet heavy at the same time, taking over his stomach.

‘The Human Jimin knew was not me,’ Yoongi states bluntly. ‘I am born of him- created and harvested, an exact replica- a complete and identical clone. The Human Jimin knew was not me. I am not that Yoongi.’

Hoseok pauses halfway pulling up his trousers.

‘So then…Jimin has remained the same. He hasn’t been replicated or cloned- the way you have, if what you’re saying turns out to be the truth of course,’ he adds as he slowly pulls his leg through the trousers. ‘So then why not replicate Jimin?’

‘That’s a question I cannot answer,’ Yoongi replies quietly and continues slowly, ‘But there’s also another question I cannot answer.’

Hoseok finally manages to wear his trousers, tossing his towel to the side.

‘And that is?’

‘I see dreams,’ Yoongi feels an almost strange sense of disassociation as he speaks.

‘What sort of dreams?’ Hoseok asks, pulling up his chair and taking a seat, leaning over to listen closer.

‘Of sunlight and rain- tiredness and pain. Of a planet I do not know. Of faces I do not recognize. Of voices I do not know. Of feelings I cannot comprehend. Of myself- but not quite myself. Of sunrises that never make it to day. Of Jimin.’ Yoongi lists the sights and visions that have laced through the darkness of his sleep for the past sols of being Awake. But now with Jimin’s arrival, his dreams were more than just blurred colours and shapes and sounds. There was form, line, and sense to the dreams he saw. And in them he sees Jimin.

‘Are these dreams…or are they memories?’ Hoseok asks carefully.

‘I cannot answer that- I do not know.’

Hoseok is quiet for a while, finger worrying at the edge of his trouser cuffs as he sits crossed legged.

‘When you clone someone,’ Hoseok begin seriously, ‘There is no possible way of cloning their memories- or their personalities. Memory, personality, perception- is all different no matter how similar you try to recreate the conditions by which they were created.’

Yoongi nods in agreement. He read the studies on cloning (illegal and banned with penalty of lifetime imprisonment in Teronko’ng Prison), and it had all been the same. Identical Beings were created, but none were the same in personality. In fact most cloning came out entirely wrong and incredibly ineffective.
‘Is this part of their technology?’ Hoseok ruminates slowly. ‘Is it something they do?’

‘I think it might have something to do, in their inherited obsession of finding a digitized soul.’

The moment Yoongi says it, he can tell from Hoseok’s response it’s something he wasn’t expecting. Hoseok’s eyes widen, yellow rings bright and alarmed.

‘What-‘

‘I am not a digitized soul,’ Yoongi states clearly.

‘…how can you know for sure-‘

‘Because I have seen one. I am not like him,’ Yoongi explains quietly.

‘You met-‘ Hoseok seems to balk at this. He stammers a bit.

‘Sk’jin has, so has Taeh’yung. But I don’t know if they knew.’ Yoongi adds.

Hoseok blinks a few times, head shaking a little as though trying to shake himself into understanding.

‘So…so if you’re not…then what are you?’

‘An attempt. A mass product. A failure,’ Yoongi replies. ‘Just a pawn to be used.’

Hoseok’s expression shifts, a ripple of pain spreading across his features.

‘Then why do you continue on?’ the Ngfy’widan asks quietly.

‘Because I want to know,’ Yoongi replies simply. ‘I want to know all the answers.’

Hoseok smiles but there’s no warmth to it.

‘Knowing doesn’t always make things better. It makes it worse.’

‘I know.’ Yoongi replies. ‘I want to know- not just for me. But for all of them. For the faces that I promised to remember. For Jimin.’

‘But Jimin remembers,’ Hoseok sounds confused.

‘But he doesn’t know why,’ Yoongi replies. ‘He left his home to understand why. And he never could. I promised him that I would protect him, that’s what Jimin said, and by doing so, I know I will find the answers.’

‘So the answers…could come from Jimin?’ Hoseok says tentatively.

‘They will.’ Yoongi replies.

Hoseok is clearly surprised by his confidence, his belief.

‘Namjoon found my records. From Earth- when I was alive,’ Yoongi adds without pause. He’s sure he’s read somewhere that there were better ways of going about a conversation. But he had a lot to say. And Hoseok wasn’t going to be there after today. So Yoongi doesn’t have time. Speaking of which.

‘Don’t leave.’
Hoseok looks like he’s not quite sure what to feel.

‘Wait- go back,’ Hoseok waves a hand. ‘You found your old records? Have you gone through them?’

‘No. I don’t…I don’t know if…’ Yoongi stops.

‘I understand,’ Hoseok cuts in gently, nodding at the clip in his hand. ‘It’s a lot to take in.’

Yoongi supposes so.

‘Why do you want to leave?’

Hoseok leans back, exhaling heavily.

‘I can’t watch this go on in this vein anymore,’ Hoseok shakes his head. ‘I am not going to relive this again.’

‘Does this have to do with your father’s involvement in the Gaia Case?’ Yoongi asks.

Hoseok hesitates before he nods. The Ngfy’widan looks like he’s weighing his options, eyeing Yoongi carefully. But Yoongi sees the way his expression of hesitance dissipates entirely- like he’d just given up. A sort of reckless abandon overtaking the latter.

‘How much do you know about me and my involvement in the Venture Unit?’ Hoseok asks as he gets up and falls to sit on his bedding instead.

Yoongi knew a lot. He even accessed the full video footage of the massacre as they dubbed it. But instead he replies, ‘Enough.’

Hoseok snorts at that, making himself comfortable on the bed and leaning all the way back onto the wall, legs stretched out before him.

Yoongi decides that he will take a seat on the chair. According to what he read in ‘20 Easy Steps for Your Android to be more Life Like!’ in step 6, they said that most living Beings didn’t stand still for extended periods of time. That they shifted about a lot. And this was very true. Both Sk’jin and Taeh’yung rarely ever stayed still for longer than a minute. Namjoon was always fidgeting, hands moving a lot. Hoseok himself was prone to doing that too.

He’s about to sit at the chair when Hoseok’s damp towel catches his attention. A flare of irritation fills him for a fraction of a second. And before he knows it, he’s moving towards the offending piece of fabric. Picking it up, he spreads it out over the back of the chair and finally sits.

‘…why did you do that?’ Hoseok eyes the towel and then Yoongi. Yoongi doesn’t really know how to explain the urge that suddenly filled him out of nowhere when he saw the crumpled towel. Or the irritation.

‘…it was annoying.’

Hoseok eyes him for a solid moment before he speaks.

‘When I was “invited” to join the Yisheng’s cause of Universe-Domination by my father- it obviously messed up a lot of things,’ Hoseok scoffs. ‘I didn’t know what to think- and when I did, I had too many thoughts, too many questions, too much of everything. I couldn’t look at what I considered to be normal or routine as normal or routine anymore- I suspected everything and everyone. I almost went mad with the idea that everything was fake- everything was just one grand illusion- a cover-up for a cover-up for a cover-up and on and on, stacked layers of deceit and lies. And in all of this I just wanted the truth- I just wanted answers. And I searched for them- and I did all I could to get them. In the end, it destroyed the Venture Unit, it destroyed my family, and it has probably destroyed countless other families, countries, even whole planets and systems.’

Yoongi knows Hoseok is not exaggerating. Every action had a consequence, no matter how big or small. One object in motion is extremely likely to trigger another object in motion. And that would form a pattern of creating motion. On and on and on.

And this particular one Hoseok is talking about was the event that caused the Venture Unit to purge itself, inside out. The exact official count of the Beings who died during this purge has never been counted.

Because it was still ongoing.

‘I knew what I was getting myself into. But I didn’t stop- it was too close to me, as a Being, as a son-’ Hoseok pauses here. ‘I wanted to know more- I wanted to understand why- and that’s exactly what Namjoon is doing right now. What Sk’jin is doing.’

‘You regret it.’

‘Of course I regret it!’ Hoseok exhales a humorless laugh. ‘Not a single day- a single minute-‘

Hoseok takes a deep breath and shakes his head as he speak, ‘So no- I am not going to involve myself in something like this again.’

Yoongi nods, maybe a little too late, and says, ‘Be safe.’

Hoseok looks surprised by his reply but gives him a small smile.

‘I’ll try,’ Hoseok huffs out with a humorless laugh but his expression is light and the air around him not as heavy. It was as though he too shed off some of the weight around his shoulders. He looks across at Yoongi and adds, ‘Is that all?’

‘One more thing,’ Yoongi had ruled Sk’jin out as a candidate to speak to because of this final segment he wanted to discuss.

‘What’s up?’ Hoseok asks, crossing his legs over each other and reaching over his bed for the night-stand where a bottle of water stood. Yoongi waits until Hoseok finishes drinking because he’s afraid that the Ngfy’widan might choke.

‘I think in the past, my relationship with Jimin might have been different.’

He does actually choke on air, hacking out a loud choking cough before settling down to calm himself. Hoseok grips the bottle in his hands almost apprehensively.

‘Okay…could you elaborate?’

Yoongi doesn’t know how to elaborate on this because it doesn’t make sense to him. Which was why he was even talking about it.

‘In my dreams- I…’ Yoongi pauses. ‘I feel different.’

‘…as in- physically? Or just- how you see things, or know things?’ Hoseok tries. Yoongi shakes his head.

‘All of that- but…whenever I see Jimin- I…’ Yoongi can’t explain the dreams- which he suspects are memories, but the very notion of that felt impossible. How could he inherit the memories of another Being he was cloned after? It was impossible.

‘In your dreams,’ Hoseok starts carefully. ‘Do you see yourself?’

‘See myself?’ Yoongi repeats.

‘Like…like in a movie- do you see yourself as an actor? Or is it as though you are seeing this through your own eyes?’

‘It’s me,’ Yoongi replies. ‘I see through my own eyes. When Jimin talks to me, I see him with my own eyes.’

Hoseok seems to have come to the same conclusion as Yoongi about memories and clones, a small frown settling on his features.

‘So you’re saying that your relationship with Jimin might have been…eh,’ Hoseok shrugs and adds with a hesitant expression, ‘Something more?’

‘I don’t know- because it’s different. I feel it in me, when I’m dreaming- I feel it, like it’s my own- but it’s his-’ Yoongi really doesn’t know how to voice it.

His dreams have been laced with a strange sensation- one that fills him every time he spoke to Jimin, every time he looked at Jimin. He can’t explain it. And it doesn’t help because whatever he was feeling in his dreams/memories transferred out into reality.

‘Why don’t you talk to him about it?’ Hoseok suggests. ‘He can help you remember. If it’s something you want to do- maybe it will help you, maybe it will help Jimin too. Maybe it will help the mission.’

‘What’s the opposite of what might happen?’

Hoseok smiles ruefully at that.

‘Memories are tricky Yoongi,’ the Ngfy’widan says with a small shrug, going back to take another sip of water. ‘Because they outline who you are- and sometimes you don’t want to remember who you used to be.’
His hand is burning.

He picks up his bag and with one last sweeping glance around his Cabin, Hoseok walks out. There wasn’t a lot to pack up in the first place, so it hadn’t taken him long. He’s wearing what he wore when he first boarded the Užkulisai, so in a sense, there’s a nice feeling of completion.

To his surprise, Yoongi is standing outside his door, and he’s holding out the Heliord handle they had taken with them during their fight in the slaving ship back in Grezma.

‘I think you’ll be needing it more than I will Yoongi,’ Hoseok smiles.

Yoongi shakes his head and says, ‘You’re better using it.’

Hoseok wants to laugh because he knows for a fact that no one could defeat Yoongi in weapon usage. But he accepts it anyways and takes the handle from the Human.

‘Thank you.’

Yoongi nods and then as though really thinking it through, holds his arms out stiffly. It takes Hoseok a second too long to realize what Yoongi was trying to do and he can’t help but laugh out loud. He takes a step forward and embraces the all too stiff Human, patting his back in the process.

Yoongi steps away, looking the most uncomfortable Hoseok has ever seen him (except during that time when Jimin hugged him after he woke up in the Medical Bay).

‘Take care of yourself,’ Yoongi mumbles before he promptly walks away.

‘Isn’t he the cutest?’ Yoongi mumbles before he promptly walks away.

‘Fucking Spaces-!’ Hoseok jumps when a pair of arms wrap around him from behind him. He hadn’t even left his Cabin – how in Spaces did Taeh’yung manage to slip in behind him without Hoseok noticing?!

‘Hi Hobi!’ Taeh’yung grins brightly, making himself shorter than Hoseok.

‘Eh- I can’t even stay mad at you,’ Hoseok grumbles as he struggles to walk forward, essentially dragging Taeh’yung along towards the stairs. He stops himself from taking the stairs and instead heads for the rarely used lift.

‘I’m gonna miss you Hobi,’ Taeh’yung states happily. ‘So will number 3!’

‘…I’ll you two too?’

‘No- it’s 3.’

‘…I’ll miss all of you?’

Taeh’yung makes a contemplative face, mouth puckering in thought.

‘I don’t know about 1, but I think 4 appreciates it. 2 doesn’t care but then again,’ Taeh’yung shrugs dismissively.

Hoseok manages to get them into the elevator and is a little alarmed to find himself actually breathless from tugging around Taeh’yung. He was going to have to increase his stamina level again.
‘I would go with you Hobi,’ Taeh’yung continues as though there had been no interruption or change of subject. ‘But I can’t.’

‘Stay with Jimin-‘ Hoseok knows how important Taeh’yung is to Jimin, and that was based only on the communications aspect of it.

‘Chim can take care of himself,’ is Taeh’yung’s unexpected reply. ‘I can’t leave Jin. Especially if we’re going there.’

‘What do you mean?’ Hoseok inquires worriedly. The Khol’isa had told him he’d be all right- and despite not knowing much about his history with the planet, Hoseok is still worried.

But the elevator doors open and Taeh’yung pushes them out. Sk’jin and Jimin are standing by the Hangar doorway facing the Lobby, Yoongi standing behind them.

A breeze fills the area- a natural breeze- and Taeh’yung inhales dramatically.

They had landed in Ts’ets’khli just about 15 minutes ago. The planet itself, much like every other planet in Ymir, was rather atmospherically toxic.

Ts’ets’khli was a rather large planet. Orbiting the planet were 3 half rings, creating a crooked and broken glittering ring of debris around the planet. From a distance, the planet was a powdery indigo, reflecting her natural state of geography and atmosphere. Ts’ets’khli was a very cloudy and misty planet, with a rather even distribution of land and water. The land was mainly mountains and valleys and due to the planet’s naturally acidic air. But unlike its sister-planets, Ts’ets’khli’s occupants dwelled underwater in large settlements, filtering their toxic air through intricate water-filtration systems. The landing docks were above water and had their own reinforced Atmoshield-allowing filtered air to flow through to mimic fresh and clean air.

Flying into the planet was tricky, what with all the heavy clouds and atmospheric storms with acidity levels that could melt rocks. But the GLA Officer on the Comm line made things easier as Sk’jin piloted them with ease through the opaque clouds and into a beautiful early morning sky.

Jimin’s reaction to this planet was different, watching with quiet awe as they had flown over the faint glowing patches of light from the underwater settlements below. The rings around the planet cast their own unique light over the planet and Hoseok had held back a smile when Jimin traced the lines of light that fell into the Bridge right into Yoongi’s hair. Yoongi hadn’t moved, allowing Jimin to trace the tracks of light over his face and hair, watching his movements with confused yet content eyes.

Taeh’yung’s grip around him tightens as they walk over to the Hangar. The sun was starting to rise and it would soon be very warm. Hoseok would have to wait a full day before he can get another ship to go elsewhere.

‘We’re like an unhealthy relationship,’ Sk’jin laughs in greeting. ‘Only together for the drama. Though none of us are getting any make-up sex from this.’

Hoseok is surprised to find that he might actually miss Sk’jin’ antics.

‘We can have make-up sex if it means you’ll stay!’ Taeh’yung cries out, now wriggling down like some weird worm to the floor.

Sk’jin laughs so much Jimin ends up laughing as well.

Taeh’yung is latched onto his leg, long limbs successfully wrapping themselves in a weird knot. He looks up, eyes pleading and wide. Hoseok feels like he’s leaving behind a beloved pet.

‘Yeah well- I’ll get going,’ Hoseok says as he tries, with very small success, to get his leg out of Taeh’yung’s grip.

This felt weirdly awkward. And wrong. But Hoseok can’t stay here anymore. Not with the direction they were headed- both literally and metaphorically. His hand is burning and Hoseok needs to leave before his touch incinerates everything again.

They follow him to the Hangar opening. Namjoon isn’t there. And Hoseok wasn’t expecting him to be either. The grip on his legs is gone; Yoongi had deftly released Taeh’yung’s grip around him in a scariley easy manner and dragged the Zhak’gri by his long legs to the side.

The sun is fully out as Jimin steps forward, hair gleaming in an almost unreal manner in the Ts’ets’khli sun. He holds out his hand and Hoseok wonders if he too should call Jimin ‘your majesty’ just for the sake of it. But he doesn’t- because out here under the sunlight and with the breeze flowing around them, there’s something majestic in the way Jimin stood.

Hoseok finds himself feeling oddly subdued. Was this the effect Jimin had on Beings? Or did he just naturally command this sort of reaction? Hoseok takes his proffered hand in his left hand. But Jimin shakes his head and pointedly looks down at his burning hand. Hoseok almost feels as though it could literally be on fire as he lifts up his right hand.

Jimin takes it and presses both of his hands on either side, sandwiching Hoseok’s hand between his own. There’s a small hard object pressed into his palm and on instinct Hoseok takes a hold of it. Jimin smiles and kisses his hand.

It’s weird- because Hoseok feels like he should be getting on one knee and kissing this actual royalty on his hand instead. But Jimin takes a step back and gives him a small wave.

It’s unsettling as Hoseok turns his back to the Užkulisiai. He doesn’t look back even though he knows they’re watching after him. He enters the aquatic-lift to take him down to the T’se’tskhlese settlements below and as he sits, comes in full view of the Užkulisiai again.

Taeh’yung is prostrated on the ground, only his head arched up. Jimin is crouched next to him, patting his head in a soothing manner. Sk’jin is standing at an angle, making sure to absorb as much sunlight as possible. Yoongi lingers in the back, barely visible. And right next to the Human is Namjoon.

Hoseok sighs.

He didn’t hate Namjoon. He didn’t dislike any one of them. The last day before this had been awkward and expertly maneuvered so they didn’t meet. He wants to tell Namjoon this wasn’t against him- against any one of them. But he doesn’t know how well it will translate. He tries a small smile and finds that it’s not forced. He manages a small wave, hoping to convey to Namjoon that he didn’t have anything personal against him.

It was just the fact that this entire mission was starting to feel too personal, in a way he hadn’t imagined would be possible. The lift completely submerges into the water and Hoseok slowly breathes out.

It feels strange. There’s no sense of finality or end.

Not the way it had felt when he walked out of the Venture Unit.
Or when he walked away from his mother.

He fiddle with his hands, rolling the small Comm-Device Jimin had slipped into his hand. A way to stay connected. Hoseok would have put it back- could have put it back. But he kept it with him. Hoseok is dimly aware of the fact that his hand no longer felt like it was burning.

A great shadow passes over him and Hoseok looks up from his hand.

ts’ets’khli, like her sister-planets, was not the kindest to living creatures. Her land had plants and other flora, but not so much in terms of living creatures. However, her oceans and seas did host quite a bunch of diverse species. And the most famous of all their creatures was the balèn.

Large than the Užkulisai, the balèn were aquatic creatures with long thick bodies, flapper like fins, and a large fin-tail that slowly propelled them forward. They were gentle creatures, and were rarely recorded to be aggressive. Their skin is bumpy and textured and as they float past the aquatic-lift, Hoseok involuntarily holds his breath, gripping his seat a little tighter.

But they pay him no heed, and the balèn swim past him, straight upwards.

They travelled in herds, that’s what Hoseok had read about them. But they normally lived quite deep down underwater, and rarely surfaced if at all. Yet here they were, more than a dozen, all slowly drifting upwards. And Hoseok knows the reason why even before he can formulate the thought in his mind. And somehow it makes him smile.

The balèn all huddle under the shadow of the dock where the Užkulisai was docked.

Maybe even these creatures could sense royalty.

Jimin doesn’t have to understand their language to sense the ongoing tension in the ship.

It was already there ever since he was aware of what was happening in his dreams. A rift in the bonds within them. And not because of lack of connectivity- but rather a reflection of their own insecurities projecting out. And now it was increasing, monumentally- and now it had grown so large it was pushing someone out.

Jimin brushes his hand through Taeh’yung’s hair where he’s prostrated himself on the floor of the ship. The Zhak’gri was exaggerating of course, but Jimin could sense genuine sorrow at seeing Hoseok leave.

‘Is this because of me?’ Jimin asks carefully. He knew that the crew had a lot of disagreements. He’s had his fair share of dealing with committees and boards that never got along and tended to make things difficult for each other. It was easy enough to sense the discord and paranoia laced throughout the ship.

‘No,’ Taeh’yung pouts. ‘This is just stupid.’
Jimin turns his head to find Sk’jin also still gazing out, red eyes gleaming under the sunlight. A shadow forms around his head, shaped into two distinct shapes- an echo of what was. Taeh’yung had explained in some detail, what had happened to Sk’jin. But beyond what he knew, Jimin could sense what he can only describe as a storm brewing deep within this Being. A deep dark bloody storm that was contained and somewhat lost in this Being. But what confused Jimin about this, was how the storm had no beginning, but only a very violent and clear end.

Namjoon calls from behind them, already turning his back. He was probably telling them to get ready to leave.

Sk’jin says something along with Taeh’yung’s name before he too turns around and heads back inside. Only Yoongi remains, looking out with disconcertingly blank eyes.

The Human looks away from where Hoseok had previously and meets Jimin’s gaze, as though sensing it almost immediately. Jimin wants to see the liveliness and sheer strength of Life shining in the Human’s eyes again. He wants to see that familiar smile, hear that lilting voice as he laughs or cracks an obvious joke or smart response. But the look in Yoongi’s eyes haven’t changed.

He smiles, in hopes of having the Human smile back, like how he used to. But Yoongi doesn’t. Instead he walks up to them, and to Jimin’s surprise, sits next to Jimin. Taeh’yung turns his head, giving the Human a bright smile.

‘Yoongi looks like he doesn’t know what to do under the sunlight,’ Taeh’yung comments as he stretches rather violently.

‘He used to move through the woods as quickly as possible to get to sunlight before,’ Jimin says, watching Yoongi’s profile for a moment before looking down at Taeh’yung. ‘He was always looking for the sun. I think it made him feel better- like he was back on his planet.’

A pang of pain racks through Jimin. Earth had been destroyed not so long ago. Not only did Yoongi lose who he had been, but he lost his home in the process. Jimin cannot imagine how he must feel at this moment.

Taeh’yung turns over on his back, eyes nearly rolling back to look out into the sky. A breeze ruffles through his hair, a soft green glow in his eyes.

‘Do you know what it means?’ he asks.

‘What does what mean?’ Jimin asks in turn.

‘The nickname he gave you. Do you know what it means?’ Taeh’yung looks away from the sky and back at Jimin.

Taeh’yung had an interesting face- continuously changing though not in the same way as Hoseok’s did. Taeh’yung’s features shifted subtly, giving way to 4 distinctly different faces. Jimin can sometimes hear their voices when Taeh’yung spoke. It was very soft, and only audible if Jimin concentrated hard enough. And it was comforting.

Jimin has never met anyone like Taeh’yung before, and he doubts he ever will. Even the Yishengs he had met so long ago were nothing like the way Taeh’yung just existed.

He seemed to encompass Time, Memory, and Life- yet not possess any of it within him simultaneously- as though the raw power of those forces held no control over him.

‘No? Does it mean something funny?’ Jimin laughs, remembering the way Yoongi used to call the members of his team in altering names frequently. Sometimes the responses were to throw whatever was close at hand at the Human, amused scowls following quickly.

Taeh’yung laughs, a throaty laugh that Jimin associates with the oldest face that sometimes appears on Taeh’yung’s features. There’s a fond look on Taeh’yung’s face as he glances at the Human and then back at Jimin.

‘No- it means sunshine.’

On the first day itself, Hoseok finds a bunch of Excavators loitering around in an eatery and easily befriends the group. Ts’ets’khli had a unique geological history and if you were brave (stupid) enough to attempt going about on the Ts’ets’khli lands, then you could come across some very interesting minerals and deposits. These Excavators were clearly dumb enough to do exactly that and had just finished recovering from the intense acid burns all over their bodies. Despite wearing specialized gear, Ts’ets’khli’s atmosphere altered all the time, rendering it impossible to accurately pinpoint how and when the acidity in the air would change.

Hoseok makes friends with them easily, shifting in to the form of a Tayian (the go-to, most trust-worthy species form based on Hoseok’s experience) and taking up the identity of a lone traveller searching for his inner-self past the privileged confines of Raksane Tayi. His disguise is accepted and unquestioned and he’s welcomed to their ranks (with the added bonus of units) and Hoseok has a ship to get to a System some 90 light years away. That had been 2 days ago. And now they were going to leave the next morning.

Hoseok still can’t shake the feeling of being unsettled- as though he’d forgotten something.

And he knows he hasn’t forgotten anything. He rolls his eyes at himself and excuses himself from the Excavators under the pretense of being too drunk. Which is a joke because Ngfy’widan’s had a strong internal system and rarely got drunk. Dropping his drunken walk (an art form in itself) Hoseok walks back to where the Excavators parked their terrain-based vehicle.

As Hoseok easily walks through the crowds of people going about the night market, his attention is caught by the sight of a bunch of Beings who were easily pirates. Ignoring them and taking a different route, Hoseok casually strolls through the street, pretending to window-shop. He glances at the window-displays, absent mindedly wondering if he should get his hair trimmed when loud carrying voices come towards him in the form of other pirates. They’re scurrying, clearly in a hurry, pulling a gravity-lift with them.

‘-Khonen should have already been here,’ one of them hisses angrily just as they make it into Hoseok’s ear-shot.

‘They’re going to fucking flip- we were supposed to meet up. Have they left already-’

The sound of the crowds rush in again.

Hoseok can’t help himself as his body turns casually and follows after the two pirates. They’re both lugging gravity-lifts, behind which were stacked a pair of sealed OrTanks. A shiver runs down his spine.

Hoseok tries to stop but it’s too ingrained into his Being.

Studying the two in front of him, he notices their clothing and their appearances- they were just like Khonen. Had the smugglers he mentioned before already here? Or were these other smugglers? He casually checks out their OrTanks. They were the standard issue tanks- but were large enough to fit the OrTanks that had contained Jimin.

Hoseok easily walks past them when they meet up with some of their other crew. They’re angrily discussing amongst themselves while Hoseok walks over to a stand selling trinkets. He finds hairclips and briefly thinks about Yoongi. Out of the corner of his eyes, the smugglers all gather and begin moving. This time, there’s another added gravity-lift with them carrying an additional pair of OrTanks.

Randomly purchasing a star-shaped clip that was similar to the one Yoongi had shown him, Hoseok trails after them easily.

Just as he thought, they were headed for one of the aquatic-lifts. Hoseok walks past a few shops, snitching some items here and there and quickly changes his external clothing and shifts his face again. When they reach the lift, a few Beings were already there. Hoseok acts drunk again, tripping on his feet and losing his balance.

Some laughter follows as he attempts to stand and no more attention is paid to him. He trips after the smugglers and collapses on one of the chairs.

‘C-can someone wake- wake me up when we get up?’ he hiccups, words slurred and slow.

‘Yeah yeah- go off now,’ they snort. Hoseok’s head snaps back and he fakes passing out.

‘No word from Khonen?’ one of them asks gruffly.

‘Nothing- it’s why they’ve gone to check.’

‘I know our deal- but do they have to be here? They give me the creeps- and what are these anyways? We don’t traffic other Beings! This is the worst of illegal shit!’

‘We don’t have a choice! We have to do this!’

It’s silent after that.

‘Besides- it’s just that one last delivery from Khonen- and then we can take back what we need.’

‘Not all of it.’

‘This is business-‘

‘-our planet is not a business-‘
'it’s the only thing we can do! You think the heads of states care? Shut your mouth and just stay quiet! We don’t ask questions and we get what we need!’

Hoseok feels cold.

Khonen was back in Ubhuku, memories wiped clean from his mind. His hand starts to burn up, fiery warmth licking over his fingers, up his wrist.

And now it would seem the Omhlophe were headed there- or at least already there. How did they travel so quickly?

‘Should we wake him up?’

‘I doubt he’ll wake up,’ one of them snorts. ‘Can you smell that? It’s strong shit.’

They huff a little and exit the aquatic-lift. Moving quickly and swiftly, Hoseok slips past the closing doors of the lift, his form shifted. Discarding his jacket and picking up another shirt, Hoseok makes his way across the large Dock.

It was night but well lit. He catches up with their group a minute later, moving along the shadows of the ships docked there.

Hoseok is unsure where any of this was going to lead. What it would show him, or where it would take him. But he nonetheless activates the tracker in the Comm-Device and quickly attaches it to his ear. If he discovers something- anything – then he would be able to instantly alert Sk’jin.

He quietly thanks Jimin for slipping the device into his palm.

They stop at a large rather ordinary ship. Hoseok makes a round in its perimeter and estimates the crew at no more than 15 Beings. So far, no signs of the Omhlophe.

Quickly making his way into the ship, Hoseok sneaks in unseen and undetected.

Just like he suspected there were no surveillance, no active crew members, and zero security measures. He easily makes his way into the Bridge area. So far, nothing odd stood out to him. But then again, this ship was almost identical to Khonen’s ship. Nothing was out of the ordinary there too.

At the Bridge there are two Beings- both asleep.

Quietly Hoseok makes his way to their Navigation Table. Without the proper screen or identification or Namjoon’s hacking skills, Hoseok would have no way of getting through its contents. However, a small NaviLet is casually open to the side of one of the sleeping Being’s head. Without a sound, Hoseok reaches over and picks up the device.

Creeping out of the Bridge, he nearly shows himself but the smuggler who runs past him is too hassled to really notice Hoseok’s shadowed form in the dark hallway.

A bunch of them walk out quickly as well, groaning as they do so. Which was perfect because Hoseok now had a clear path to the Hull. Based on Van Seulgaan’s ship, all of the OrTanks had been stored there. So Hoseok quickly makes his way down.

He’s almost disappointed to find nothing when he ducks his head around the opening to the Hull. But the sound of footsteps alert him and he slips behind one of the engine-cores to the side. One of the smugglers from earlier in the night comes in with a gravity-lift and a pair of OrTanks. He walks straight towards Hoseok and past him to another section. He tugs at what looks like an ordinary lever-switch and the floors to one side slides open to reveal a dark ramp. Hoseok keeps still until the smuggler goes in and reappears a minute later.

He switches off the lights and leaves the Hull.

Waiting another minute, Hoseok activates his Heliord, the handle tucked away inside the inner pocket of his shirt, to shed some light. He finds the same lever and pulls on it. The floor opens quietly again and Hoseok steps onto the ramp. It’s darker in here than above and Hoseok carefully activates the Heliord on full power.

The under-floor storage is no ordinary storage space.

Two entire rows of OrTanks, stacked over each other, lined up the sides and middle of the storage hull. And inside of them lay a floating Being, suspended in mist-like fluid, eyes closed. Over towards the end, the OrTanks he had seen being pulled in stood there, still covered.

Hoseok feels a shiver running down his back. He takes a single step forward and as though creating a chain reaction, all the Being inside the OrTanks slowly drift in the misty-fluid to face him.

‘Shit-’ Hoseok reaches for his Comm-Device. He had to tell the others about this now. The NaviLet in his hand suddenly vibrates- nearly making him drop it. The screen was blank and unresponsive. Frowning, Hoseok pockets it safely inside his shirt and taps on his ear.

‘They listen to you. Because he has seen your dreams. Their dreams.’

Hoseok is quick to raise the Heliord over his torso, taking a few steps back and angling it to protect his chest as he crouches down in quick defence. But there is no attack.

Only a single Being stands by the door. An all too familiar unknown Being, clad fully in white, face partially masked, and their entire stance extraordinarily stagnant.

The Omhlophe.

‘Where are the others? We did not sense him arriving here. Or perhaps it was simply the water.’

The Being’s voice is neither male nor female- neither rough or smooth. There was something oddly automated and delayed with the words- as though they simply repeated the words given to them.

‘I’m here alone,’ Hoseok states, repositioning his foot to make a quick run past the Being if he could manage.

They weren’t supposed to be here- unless that smuggler from earlier had been misinformed. Did they go to Ubhuku and already come back? His hand holding the Heliord burns hotter.

‘You still stay here, Ngfy’widan. And then,’ it says, voice strangely flat and monotone, as though forced through a stabilizer of sorts. ‘They will come for you.’

‘I don’t work for the Venture Unit anymore,’ Hoseok states. ‘I am no longer an agent- I have nothing to offer you.’

‘We do not care for the Venture Unit,’ it replies. ‘We speak of your ship. We speak of the Kutsoglerin, of the Human, of the Khol’isa, of the Zhak’gri. And now of the Yemenifesi Ch’inin’eti.’
‘They won’t,’ Hoseok shrugs easily, his heart racing and his mind frenzied. They knew who Jimin was. ‘I quit- I am no longer part of their team. Working conditions- too much shit from the Pageant.’

‘They will come for you,’ it repeats. ‘And until then, you will remain among us.’

Hoseok doesn’t even see it move but the Heliord in his hand is now in the Omhlophe’s possession and it’s already standing past the doorway that was now closing.

‘Namjoon are you there-‘ Hoseok calls at once. He first feels the trickle of something sliding down his neck and then the pain hits him.

The entire side of his face feels like it’s burning and his body convulses from delayed shock. Hands shaking he feels at the side of his head, struggling to stand up as he feels the lower half of his ear has been clear ripped-off.

His Comm-Device is missing.

‘Shit-! Fucking Spaces-!’

Hastily ripping at the edge of his shirt, Hoseok tears a make-shift bandage to wrap around his head, hoping to stem the bleeding. He grits his teeth as the over-sensitive exposed flesh of his ear is pressed down by the rough fabric of his shirt. Taking a deep breath Hoseok scans the under-floor storage for anything he could use.

The OrTanks are secured and bolted to frames to keep them contained. There were security harnesses for maintenance workers and or androids and Hoseok makes his way there. There had to be some sort of maintenance kit here. Or a port for electric units and chargers. But there’s none. It’s dark but Hoseok doesn’t have an issue with the darkness. However, the darkness gives way to the soft and eerie light of the OrTanks.

He feels the ship start up, the air humming in vibration.

He was stuck.

‘Shit.’

Securing himself into place on the wall, Hoseok leans back, taking a deep breath.

The Omhlophe were here- and they had left to check on Khonen and his ship because they clearly felt like something was wrong. And whatever these eggs were- they were important to them.

And more than that- they knew exactly who Jimin was.

And they wanted him.

He needs to get some form of communication through with the Užkulisai, to tell them to flee as far as possible. To take Jimin far away. He doesn’t know why they want him- but it couldn’t be for any good. He would have to be hidden- they would all need to work even harder to hide him. But how long would it take until they find him?

With both the GLA and the Omhlophe after them- and judging by how things were, they both knew exactly where they were headed. It was only a matter of time before either of them caught up to them in their trajectory to Bhumi.
He searches his pockets for any possible device he could use or attempt to fix to communicate with the Užkulisai. The NaviLet was switched off from the Navigation Table up in the Bridge so there was no chance of activating it unless he got to a power source to directly power it up. They had probably discovered that it was missing and so switched it off automatically. He puts the device back and his hand brushes against a small object. Pulling it out, Hoseok finds the clip he had bought in the market. He doesn’t remember even paying for it. He holds it up in his palm, the blue glitter catching the faint light of the OrTanks.

The burning sensation on his palm slowly abates.
I AM SORRY
FOR BEING LATE
BUT WOW
UNIVERSITY HAS BEEN A TOTAL AND UTTER DICK THESE PAST FEW WEEKS AND ONE SPECIFIC PROFESSOR WHO WANTS TO SEE ME SUFFER I HATE HIM SO MUCH
I’m fine
So, my updates might be a bit random- but I will make sure to update every fortnight!! So don’t worry!!
I hope you enjoy this update!!!!
‘He doesn’t seem surprised by us.’

‘What do you mean?’

‘He’s not surprised by our appearance, our clothing, our tech – he’s curious but it’s not unknown to him,’ she comments.

‘Why should he be? He looks like he could be from Tayi, minus the eyes. Even from Earth.’

‘Don’t typecast me and my species,’ Yoongi deadpans.

‘Yeah- they don’t make them that pretty back in Earth.’

‘Moving on,’ she sends Yoongi a flat look. ‘Our scans can’t place his species- which is saying a lot. He also speaks in a language that isn’t part of the directory- and he looks nothing like the Bhumians we were briefed on.’

‘Not everyone from the same planet looks alike,’ he ruminates. ‘We can’t be sure if he is actually from here or not.’

‘He’s not,’ Yoongi replies easily. When they give him questioning looks he hastens to reply, ‘He’s curious about this place too- he sometimes studies the plants, the soil- he’s new to this place. A bit more familiar than we are surely- but he’s not from here.’

Yoongi glances over at Jimin who was sitting by the stream, a single hand in the cool water, eyes closed. He’s humming under his breath again- a habit, it would seem.

‘I think he has a rank of sorts,’ Yoongi continues.

‘Yeah- in your heart-‘

‘Shut the fuck up,’ Yoongi frowns though it’s without any irritation. ‘He carries himself in a different way- the way he is around us. The way he behaves- he carries some form of title.’

‘No- Yoongi’s right,’ she confirms. ‘We probably won’t be able to figure it out now- but he’s definitely carrying a high title or rank. Also, he looks the part.’

‘Shouldn’t we be more objective about that,’ they laugh though they’re not arguing the statement.
But Yoongi agrees.

‘Any sighting of that ship?’

Yoongi looks questioningly over at the tracking team. They all shake their heads.

‘Nothing shows up on our feed- the planet is blanketed in heavy storm clouds- it’s fucking up with our connections,’ they reply worriedly.

‘Well- according to the Director, the tower has those GLA standard machinery,’ she huffs with a small frown on her face. ‘I think it’s safe to say we’ll be able to get our systems charged and running up there.’

‘This sucks,’ he says with a tired sigh. ‘This place is exhausting.’

‘I know – same.’

‘No- it’s different.’

Yoongi listens curiously.

‘There’s a strange…a strange presence – it’s just…sapping everything- I feel something- I don’t know what- but it feels like waves, rising from the ground and upwards,’ he points upwards at the sky. ‘Like it’s being absorbed away- and I feel like I’m going up too.’

Yoongi gulps at that.

‘Don’t worry,’ she says firmly. ‘We’ll get out of here and I’m taking us all to a resort in Šerdesas- maybe at the Yisheng Headquarters.’

‘Fuck that sounds good,’ they groan.

‘Still- doesn’t make sense why the reports we were given make no sense,’ the others state. ‘I mean- are we even sure we’re in the right place? It’s been weeks.’

‘I’m certain,’ she nods. ‘I heard the messages and saw the clips. But I also don’t understand how it’s the way it is right now. We were sent out 3 weeks after that- there should still be an excess of debris around the planet.’

‘Solar winds? The sun in this System is dying- lots of flares,’ he ruminates before asking, ‘You think they got to that place- uh,-Akramain?’

‘Akramana,’ she corrects them with a roll of eye. ‘And I don’t know.’

‘What the fuck are the GLA even thinking,’ he rolls his eyes and Yoongi agrees. ‘Also shouldn’t the Venture Unit be handling this? Not us?’

‘Well- we just need to get the report through first of all I guess- then we can speculate. For now we should keep our main task as main priority.’ She replies with a shrug and sigh. ‘All right- break time’s over- let’s go.’ She orders before nodding at Yoongi, ‘Go get Jimin.’

‘Why me?’

She gives him an unimpressed look before walking away. Yoongi can feel his face heating up a little and he wants to maybe facepalm into the nearest tree. But before he can do that, he hears Jimin calling his name.
Jimin is standing near the tree line, beckoning Yoongi over. Cautiously, he makes his way forward. He’s not sure why he’s being so cautious—because they had spotted no living being or creature before—save for Jimin. But Jimin’s mimed words from the other day still echoes around in Yoongi’s mind. That they were being watched. And he can’t shake it off.

Jimin points forward, smiling as though quite pleased. He notices someone behind Yoongi and waves at them too. Yoongi hears footsteps and voices but his attention is captured by the sheet of water pouring out from between two cliff faces, creating a curtain of pure light, filtering the ruddy sky into something that resembled a soft sunrise.

And it takes Yoongi’s breath away.

He feels someone pat him on the shoulder and he starts. He’s shocked at how much the sight captured his attention— but then he realizes he was also listening to the sound of Jimin humming. A sweet soft melody that Yoongi feels as though he’s heard before—perhaps from a past memory, or maybe in a dream— but it’s familiar.

He turns slightly to observe Jimin, not wanting to stare outright.

And she was right. Jimin definitely looked the part of a ranked Being—possibly even royal, if Yoongi is being honest.

It wasn’t just his hair or eyes. There was something that called attention and a sort of reverence from deep within you when Jimin was around.

The clouds above break a little more and the permanent sunrise shines across into the cliff edge they’re walking on.

It wasn’t a physical aspect that made Jimin look the way he did. There were no words that came to Yoongi’s mind—instead it’s just an abstract notion; one that he feels might be a little biased. Or maybe a little whimsical. But as Yoongi steals glances at Jimin, he can’t help but think it was in the way the sun shone around him.

It was as though all that was light loved him— the glow of the distant ruddy sun actually casting gentle and soft illuminations over his skin. The way his hair seemed to absorb light and reflect it back with more ardor and brilliance.

It was as though he embodied sunlight.

‘Yoongi! You can go sightseeing later! Let’s go!’

Yoongi finally properly glances over at Jimin who looks over at the owner of the calling voice, a quizzical smile on his face.

Yoongi smiles, jerking his head to the side.

‘Come on sunshine, let’s go.’
‘Could you repeat that again,’ Namjoon gestures with his hand. Jimin nods, not needing translation as he slowly repeats the name.

They were renaming the planets in the System of Bhumi- or Menigišiti, as Jimin called it. He adjusted the planets, eyes calculating as he adjusted the distance between the planets through the NaviLet, typing in the correct formula to accurately realign the planets.

To their surprise the System is much smaller than they anticipated- smaller, and fuller.

The planets were closely spaced with little to almost no moons orbiting the planets. The planets further out in the system were tidal-locked; the main one here being the representative planet of Bhumi which they now knew was called Megibīya by Jimin.

Jimin is serious as he concentrates, typing through the number system Namjoon had been able to convert for him with Taeh’yung’s help and input. The Zhak’gri is also there, eyes illuminated by the blue light of the Navigation Table though the green in his eyes still shone through.

Yoongi would be standing there too, if it weren’t for the headaches he got.

They had started building up- slowly and increasing in pain bit by bit. At first Yoongi didn’t notice it – and when he did, he ignored it. But now his mind felt inflamed- his skull sensitive and his temples sore. He had taken pain medication- a first in a long while. But it did little to help. It almost felt the same way it did when the Android-Core had been introduced to his helmet by Zhoumi.

‘Akramana?’ Namjoon asks, his voice cutting through the controlled pained haze of Yoongi’s mind.

Jimin nods once, adjusting the size of the planet they were discussing. Jimin explains something while Taeh’yung leans in from the side, his lower lip jutting out in concentration.

‘It was the planet where they held meetings with GLA,’ Taeh’yung explains. ‘Like Megibīya, Akramana was a planet open to the rest of the Universe- or at least, somewhat visible.’

‘Based on the Venture Unit report at the time, they said the invading force came from Akramanese planet,’ Namjoon frowns. ‘What can he say about that?’

Taeh’yung repeats Namjoon’s question and Jimin is confused. He replies haltingly, head tilting to one side.

‘He doesn’t understand why anyone would think that- it makes no sense,’ Taeh’yung slowly translates, nodding as he listens to Jimin. ‘The people of Akramana were peaceful and were the sole reason why their System was kept safe- it was the Red Evil that destroyed Megibīya.’
‘Whatever report the GLA got was clearly mistranslated or confused then,’ Namjoon frowns while Sk’jin snorts and says, ‘Or purposefully waylaid to redirect the blame and suspicion to another source.’

‘Jimin says his sister meant to go to Akramana, where the Yisheng Ndica said they were headed, while he left for Megibiya to check on the distress signals Ndica forwarded to them.’ Taeh’yung summarizes.

‘So Jimin and his sister, the uh- leaders –of their System,’ Namjoon says carefully, ‘Received a distress signal, forwarded to them, by Yisheng Ndica, about a planet in their System, that was being under attack?’

Jimin nods at the translation.

‘It sounds as though this entire thing was planned,’ Sk’jin comments from the cockpit, eyes ahead as he flies them through space. ‘How did the GLA receive the distress signal clearly sent out for Jimin– if Bhumi– I mean Megibiya, had in fact even sent out a signal? Ndica was definitely involved in the whole mess,’ Sk’jin snorts. ‘Sniveling fool was pathetic and unworthy of his title- it was probably all his doing. This was most definitely a set-up- for what exact purpose I’m not sure but most definitely done to jump Jimin and his people.’

Yoongi wants to agree as well- and he would have said so, if his head wasn’t on fire. He remembers Ndica from the first court hearing held in the Yisheng Directory.

‘Or it could’ve been K’mara too,’ Namjoon ruminates slowly. ‘She was there.’

Yoongi catches Sk’jin’s brief glance at his direction with his words, as though he couldn’t help it. But then his expression turns alarmed.

‘Yoongi- you all right?’

At this, everyone turns to look at him.

Yoongi opens his mouth to say yes but instead he says, ‘I need to sleep.’

His dreams were longer now. Not just images, rushing sound, strange sights and smells.

He had progressed a lot from his first dreams- all colours and forms- blurred and haphazard. Now they were clearer, with purpose- and with continuation. Yoongi looked forward to sleeping, because it meant he was able to understand a little better. To somehow be.

But it also confuses him.

The records Namjoon had given him were still untouched, unchecked. Knowing didn’t always equate understanding. And that was where Yoongi stood.

‘Knowing doesn’t always make things better. It makes it worse.’ Hoseok had said to him.

He doesn’t remember their faces. Only Jimin’s stood out. Everyone else was blurred- their voices a little faded, and their forms somehow wispy. But Jimin is in his dreams- bright, clear, and stark.

And with every single dream- he remembered. But it was more than just memory.

It was similar to how he felt when the Android-Core was introduced to him- but somehow, despite having the entirety of the GLA database information transferred to him and shocked into him-wasn’t this heavy.

When he wakes up again, his head is pounding and the strange cloying air of the forests in his dreams lingers in his nose. He’s also filled with a panic-driven impulse. Yoongi follows the strange desperate rush that fills him to make sure Jimin was all right. He’s not sure for how long he’s managed to sleep- but they were still all at the Bridge. Jimin was standing by the windows in the lower tier- talking to Taeh’yung as they point out the nebula they were flying past.

‘Sunshine?’

Jimin’s entire body turns, eyes widened as though stunned. His expression is clearly shocked for a long second before he smiles at him. It’s such a joyful smile, one laced with relief. Jimin rushes forward, cheeks pushed up with the force of his smile. His joy in hearing Yoongi address him with the nickname he was accustomed to was palpable enough for everyone to see. Or perhaps he heard something else- Yoongi’s not sure.

‘Yoongi,’ his smile falters, a look of worry settling on his face as he gets closer.

Yoongi feels better, hearing Jimin’s voice and seeing him standing before him. Not just in a dream- but here, right in front of him. He’s not sure what’s overtaking him but he barrels straight forward and pulls Jimin into a fierce embrace.

There’s a stunned silence that falls over the Bridge.

‘Group hug!’

Taeh’yung charges into them, wrapping his long arms around them both tightly.

‘Yoongi? Na ti vang gne?’ Jimin asks worriedly though he returns his embrace. He’s obviously asking what was wrong— but Yoongi doesn’t know. It’s just a strangely desperate feeling permeating into him through his dreams- it made no sense. Yoongi steps back and Jimin doesn’t try to follow or rebuff him- he’s just there, looking at him carefully.

‘Yoongi- is everything all right?’ Namjoon asks.

Taking a deep breath, Yoongi nods.

‘Chim! Look there!’ Taeh’yung pulls Jimin away and down to the lower tier of the Bridge.

Yoongi shakily makes his way to the Navigation Table. Namjoon is clearly doing a health-read on him. But Yoongi knows he’s going to come up blank. Namjoon doesn’t ask and Yoongi doesn’t say anything. What could he say in the first place?

‘Sunshine?’ Sk’jin smirks from the cockpit. At this Namjoon looks up from his screen curiously.

‘It’s what I called him before,’ Yoongi replies, watching the soft rosy light of the nebula above flicker across Jimin’s hair. It reminds him of his dreams- his memories.

‘Interesting-.’

‘I remember the exact moment I called him that the first time.’ Yoongi continues, unable to stop himself. ‘We were exhausted- we took a break by the cliff. We were making plans for our next move. She told me to get Jimin. And he was watching the sunrise. Which was odd because it never shifted- the sun was always rising- it felt as though time had no effect there. It messed with us a lot- I had terrible headaches too- I kept taking meds for it. We assumed he was royalty- or some titled rank. For a lot of reasons- but I remember thinking, rather foolishly, that it was because of the way the sunlight seemed to love him.'

He’s met with deafening silence and Yoongi doesn’t know how to react.

Namjoon’s eyes are wide, unblinking as he stares unabashed at Yoongi. Sk’jin is no better, mouth agape and his hands no longer holding up the NaviLet which has fallen to his lap. Jimin is also looking at him, head turned away from the window. Taeh’ung doesn’t pay any attention, instead his face is pressed up to the surface of the window.

‘…what else do you remember?’ Sk’jin asks after opening and closing his mouth a few times.

‘Do you remember anything about why you were there?’ Namjoon asks, leaning into the Navigation Table attentively.

‘No.’ Yoongi replies, shaking his head mainly to force himself out of the images of his dreams. ‘I don’t remember their faces, or their names- why we were there. Their voices are all messed up. But I heard words- names of planets- of Akramana- but the information was unclear- we- we didn’t know what was going on either. We just wanted to get to the tower.’

‘Tower?’

‘How long have you been seeing these dreams?’ Namjoon asks.

‘They’ve started becoming clearer ever since Jimin woke up,’ Yoongi replies.

‘It’s…possible that his presence has triggered your memories,’ Sk’jin theorizes, his fingers tapping a beat on the side of his chair.

‘Have you gone through the records?’ Namjoon asks quietly.

‘Memories are tricky Yoongi,’ Hoseok’s words rings in his mind. ‘Because they outline who you are- and sometimes you don’t want to remember who you used to be.’

‘No,’ Yoongi replies.

Namjoon nods slowly before asking, ‘Is it causing you pain? Discomforts?’

‘I have headaches. I had medication, but it’s not going away.’ Yoongi replies.

Sk’jin stares blankly at him for a moment before he clears his throat pointedly and calls out, ‘Jimin!’

Jimin looks around, turning in Taeh’ung’s embrace, expression attentive.

Sk’jin then very exaggeratedly mimes placing hands on Yoongi’s head and points repeatedly between the two of them. Yoongi wants to laugh but he doesn’t. Namjoon looks slightly scandalized and a look of understanding settles on Jimin’s face. He easily slides out of Taeh’ung’s excited grip and makes his way to Yoongi. The worried expression on his face is still there as he approaches him.

He’s saying something to Taeh’ung who gives him a reply in the form of ‘eh’ and a shrug before saying something reassuringly. Jimin seems doubtful but he doesn’t say anything more.

The moment Jimin places his hands over his head, Yoongi’s headache abates.
'Is it gone?' Sk’jin asks from where he’s sitting.

Yoongi nods, a soothing cooling sensation gently calming his feverish headache.

‘I think it’s fair enough to say that Jimin might be both the catalyst and inhibitor of your memories,’ Sk’jin states simply. ‘His awakening has triggered your memories, and his presence seems to ease it.’

‘Jimin wants to know what type of pain you’re going through,’ Taeh’yung asks as he steps up as well, eyeing Yoongi curiously over Jimin’s head.

‘It’s my head. It hurts,’ Yoongi replies, explaining it to Jimin despite the fact they didn’t understand each other. Yoongi just continues staring straight into the twin eclipses that were Jimin’s eyes. The anxiety-driven desperation completely vanishes from within him. He’s so caught up staring he doesn’t hear Namjoon’s question.

Instead it’s Jimin who looks away, expression asking Taeh’yung to translate.

‘I think if we can somehow trigger more of Yoongi’s memories to reveal themselves, we might understand what more happened in Bhumi- uh, I mean in Megibiya,’ Namjoon ruminates.

‘That doesn’t sound like the best idea,’ Sk’jin frowns, turning in his seat to look over at them. ‘Memory retrieval forced or pressured can cause more than just psychological trauma.’

‘That’s up to Yoongi,’ Namjoon replies with an irritated look. ‘I’m just saying we need to look into every possible source we can find and seeing as Yoongi was, at one point in one way, present during the moment that triggered the appearance of the Akramanese- I mean “Red Evil”- we not only have a primary source of information, we have another Being who has knowledge of this area of Space.’

‘It shouldn’t be rushed,’ Taeh’yung pipes in unexpectedly, leaning from behind Jimin to place his hands over Jimin’s on Yoongi’s head. ‘Yoongi is my baby too- so I don’t want him to break.’

And it’s an odd word to use, really, but Yoongi can’t think of a better word to describe the way the other GI agents had died from mental and sensory overload. The living body was nothing more than a mechanism- a construct of systems and biological parts that fit in together for a function. And if the construct is pushed too far- if it is pressured into a certain set-up or installation it isn’t made for, or isn’t remodeled for a reboot, then it would break.

‘That’s a little ominous Tae but yes, I agree,’ Sk’jin says, his voice laced with relief. ‘We are all important assets to this mission and even though Yoongi might have information locked inside his…his DNA or something, we’ll just wait for it to unwind at its own pace. We can’t afford losing more than we already have.’

At this Sk’jin gives Namjoon a pointed look and any fight from Namjoon seems to dissipate at that.

‘Well- you’re here so I’m going to lay out our plan for the next few days,’ Namjoon announces.

Taeh’yung leans in suddenly, pushing them into another tight embrace, placing a loud kiss over both Yoongi’s and Jimin’s heads before jumping (quite literally, and very high) over to the Navigator’s Mast.

Jimin removes his hands from Yoongi’s head and brushes through his hair once before tilting his head to one side, as though to ask Yoongi if he was all right.
'I’m good sunshine,’ Yoongi says quietly.

‘Sunshine?’ Jimin repeats, a small private smile on his lips.

A vivid memory of Jimin saying the same thing runs through Yoongi’s mind- and somehow a voice that sounds like his, but not quite entirely replies, ‘That you are.’

This makes Jimin smile and he steps back a little before pulling Yoongi towards the Table.

‘Based on Sk’jin’s layout of the planet—’

‘-it’s not the most accurate but I tried,’ Sk’jin cuts in as he steps into the Mast as well.

‘-we’re headed here, above the general equator zone,’ Namjoon points at the 3D holographic model of a large planet. It’s a mock-design, based off of a template used by Navigators to illustrate rogue planets or non-GLA planets on the map. ‘This is where the Venture Unit ship is crashed- we’re headed there to investigate it. And even though it’s been thoroughly searched by both the GIU and the Venture Unit, I think it’s safe to say they don’t have what we have.’

‘What do we have?’ Taeh’yung asks, eyes round.

‘We have me,’ Sk’jin replies, flipping his hair back which Jimin imitates subtly. ‘And Yoongi, and Jimin, and you.’

Taeh’yung lifts a hand, clearly counting his fingers, muttering under his breath and then exclaiming, ‘Jin! You forgot someone!’

‘Well- Hobi isn’t here-’ Sk’jin begins, a badly hidden grin on his face.

‘Oh right,’ Taeh’yung looks down at his hand before his head snaps up towards Namjoon and gasps, ‘You forgot pa!’

Namjoon gives him a pained smile before he speaks.

‘So we’ll be investigating the remains- see if there is anything there that Jimin can identify or sense- see if there is anything the GIU has overlooked or left behind that we can use to better understand the situation we’re in.’

‘How long,’ Yoongi asks.

‘It depends- but no more than 2-3 days,’ Namjoon replies as he scratches his chin in thought. ‘If it’s nothing but a dead-end, then we just leave quickly and make our way to Grisial.’

Yoongi nods.

‘When will we get there?’

‘We’re a few hours away from the borders of Ymir,’ Namjoon closes the hologram and pulls up their current trajectory. ‘Then we go to warp for a day, and we’re there.’

‘What about the GIU observation crew?’ Yoongi asks.

‘Not an issue,’ Sk’jin replies with a shrug. ‘Trust me on that.’

Yoongi nods though Namjoon doesn’t seem comfortable. Sk’jin stretches before he says, ‘I think you need food- how about I cook you something hm? Jimin? Tae? Want to help?’
Taeh’yung takes Jimin’s hand and lifts their hands together, making Jimin stretch up to his toes to accommodate the height.

‘Yes!’ Taeh’yung exclaims.

‘All right- Lisai, take over for me will you sweetheart?’

‘Of course.’

The moment Jimin leaves the Bridge, a sight throbbing takes over Yoongi’s head. But it’s not painful- just a soft throb that he could ignore for now.

‘You’ll be all right?’ Namjoon asks as he takes a seat back in his chair.

‘I will,’ Yoongi replies though he’s not sure. ‘I recovered from something similar before.’

‘...you mean when you uh- gained awareness? Or something like that?’

‘When the Android-Core was implicated into my system yes.’

‘How long did it take you to recover?’

‘I cannot determine the point of recovery or the completion of it. I theorize that it is an ongoing process.’

Namjoon nods slowly at that.

‘If there’s anything I can do to help- then let me know.’ Namjoon says slowly, as though choosing his words carefully. ‘I wasn’t thinking- about how what we are doing would affect the others. Or how they might look at it. And while I know that- intention put aside- that we all want the same thing from this, I want us to do it on the same level of understanding, taking into account everyone’s input and deciding what’s the best thing to do.’

‘I’m not leaving, if that’s what you’re worried about.’ Yoongi finds himself saying.

Namjoon looks surprised before he says, ‘That’s good to know.’

‘I believe if you contacted and asked Hoseok, he will come back.’

Shaking his head Namjoon sits back on his chair. ‘I don’t think he will. But if he ever does decide to come back- the Užkulisai will always welcome him back.’
There’s a nervous energy emanating from Sk’jin. It peaked even more as they hit warp and the Khol’isa is anxiously going about, occupying his time doing any and everything.

Jimin learns that he cannot sleep- and it sorrows him. There’s a strange strain, an ancient barrier around Sk’jin’s stormy soul. It’s a strange description- and Jimin can’t help but feel anxious about it. But instead of the usual anxiety, suspicion, and frustration Jimin normally detects from Sk’jin, he can sense apprehension and fear.

But amidst this, he can sense a strange sense of anticipation.

The closest Jimin can come to describing what Sk’jin was feeling was when he had been a child, and he stayed out much longer than his sister or tutors had allowed him. The feeling of returning home, but knowing you were going to have to take responsibility for the wrong you did.

Because Sk’jin always felt oddly hollowed out- a great storm brewed in him- but it only existed to occupy the void within him. The storms were born from this chaotic void, in hopes of filling it up. But there was a great strain- one that stretched and pulled within the Khol’isa.

Overextending itself to somehow cover how incomplete Sk’jin really was.

Then it hits Jimin.

‘You lost someone there,’ Jimin states out loud as he stirs a bowl Sk’jin had given him to take care of as he cooked endlessly, ‘Who was he?’

‘I don’t think he’ll want to answer that,’ Taeh’yung tells him plaintively as he creates a coloured mosaic from dyed sugar cubes- Taeh’yung was useless in cooking, and so was assigned menial tasks around the Kitchen to keep him occupied. ‘It’s gonna be difficult for him.’

‘I know,’ Jimin replies, smiling at Sk’jin, hoping to relieve the obvious distrust he had in Jimin. Not that Sk’jin was hostile towards him. He was just wary and though he hid it very well, Sk’jin was fearful of him.

‘He lost all of his crew in this planet- he died in there too- and he watched his crew, his friends, countless strangers, all die there.’

Jimin feels as though there might be more to the story than they could guess.

‘Then why return? Or maybe he should have stayed back as we investigate the planet?’ Jimin suggests.

‘But I think he has a reason to go,’ Taeh’yung explains, popping a green sugar cube into his mouth and holding up a blue one for Jimin. Jimin takes the cube, feeling the texture of the cube between his fingers carefully. ‘He isn’t the type to do things unless he wants to do it. Or unless he feels…-‘ ‘-like he needs to atone for something?’ Jimin suggests. ‘Because it feels as though he’s going back to seek justice- against himself.’

‘Being alive is so complex Chim,’ Taeh’yung says randomly. ‘But it’s the greatest thing- next to death.’

Taken aback, Jimin can’t help himself when he asks, ‘Why do you say that? How do you know?’
Taeh’yung gives him a secretive smile, holding his finger up to his lips and whispers, ‘We all live to die Chim.’

A shiver runs down Jimin’s spine, a scratchy voice itches at his ears, in his mind, in his very soul.

‘We do not bring death. We bring life.’

‘Pompen news is still the same,’ Namjoon says out loud to no one in particular. He hates to think of it in this way but Spaces he missed Hoseok’s presence in the ship. Hoseok was the most stable and sanest mind in the ship and his absence was astounding loud- especially for Namjoon.

Hoseok was always on top of the information game- he was constantly monitoring the channels, both from the Known Universe and the Underverse. He had a way of shifting along the information, finding the most feasible and dependable sources amidst the mess of misinformation and lies.

Namjoon feels strangely disabled.

Of course it hadn’t been personal. Not in the way most Beings would assume so. Hoseok left because he could no longer participate in the direction the mission was taking them. Or at least, in the direction Namjoon was leading them in.

His NaviLet lights up and Lisai’s automated voice sounds at his ear.

‘Captain- we are 1 hour from our destination and pulling out from warp in 30 minutes.’

‘Thanks Lisai,’ Namjoon sighs out before sitting up properly. It’s odd to see a mop of styled pink hair rather than the messy shaggy cut of Hoseok’s dark hair by the cockpit below the Navigator’s Mast.

‘Sk’jin- you want to make the Pilot’s log?’ Namjoon asks, feeling weirdly odd saying those words. Bu he gets not response.

A little confused, Namjoon stands up and walks down to the cockpit. This expanse of space was rather empty and vacant so there was no need to really keep an eye out for stray asteroids or debris.
But Sk’jin has been rooted in his seat for past his schedule cycle by a few hours already. At first it was as though Sk’jin was avoiding his duties as Head Pilot- remaining only as long as was required of him and then bolting to the Kitchens to cook overly complex meals, using Jimin and Taeh’yung as taste-testers (Namjoon thinks he might be a bit mental but he thinks he sees Jimin’s cheeks filling out a little and Taeh’yung’s jaw softening just the slightest). He was clearly stress-cooking. And stress-sewing too because he suddenly took to taking away the hem of Jimin’s new-found trousers and sleeves, a weirdly forced animated force to his actions (oddly enough Yoongi helps him out, displaying his neat stitches to the delighted surprise of everyone in the ship). If not he was loudly discussing inconsequential topics with Taeh’yung who was more than eager to laugh and talk.

‘Sk’jin-?’ Namjoon reaches over to touch Sk’jin’s shoulder, leaning in to get a look at the Khol’isa’s face. There was an alarmingly vacant look in Sk’jin’s eyes- as though he wasn’t all there. And for a startling moment, Sk’jin’s eyes roll back into his head before he snaps back into reality, eyes flashing and he’s reeling away from Namjoon, a low hiss escaping him.

‘Don’t fuckin’ touch me.’

Namjoon takes two whole steps back, hands raised up.

‘I won’t,’ he immediately replies. ‘I was just checking on you-‘

Sk’jin turns in his seat and looks away for a few seconds, shoulders rising up and down as though he was panting. When he turns to face Namjoon his expression is incredibly poised – as though nothing had happened.

‘We’re ready for landing in an hour so everyone get ready to buckle up- atmospheric pressure shouldn’t be too bad for Lisai- right honey?’ Sk’jin calls over the Comm pleasantly.

‘Of course.’

Sk’jin smiles though there’s no warmth in his eyes; only fear.

‘Everyone get ready for the Pilot’s log.’

*

The planet is rather ordinary. It had no satellite and was a more land than water. They’re at the very top of the planet- the whitened polar caps of the planet gleaming from below. Great masses of clouds cover parts of the planet from view, but from what Namjoon can tell, it’s rather lush and green with little variation.

Sk’jin’s expression is vacant again, eyes reflecting the planet below ominously.

‘The GIU station is unresponsive,’ Namjoon calls out as he studies the bogey-signal he had sent out to check if there were any active scans around the planet. ‘Your source was right.’

The Khol’isa doesn’t appear to have heard him. So instead Namjoon shifts his attention to Taeh’yung and Jimin.

‘Can he sense anything?’ Namjoon asks, glancing over at Jimin who eyes the planet with confused concentration.

‘He says he wants to get closer- to be sure,’ Taeh’yung replies, also watching the planet with a thoughtful frown.

Yoongi was at his station. He didn’t look well in the slightest. His health-tab read him at normal and with only the slightest of fevers. He had said he had a headache but Namjoon hadn’t heard anything more. He also didn’t have any more random outbursts of speech. He did however, go to sleep more often than before. For the past 3 days, Yoongi had spent more time asleep than awake. And despite their conversation, Namjoon is still worried over the Human’s health condition.

But Taeh’yung wasn’t worried. And though Jimin was obviously worried, it wasn’t to the extent of being alarmed.

Namjoon briefly wonders if he’s projecting his worries and guilt over Hoseok leaving over Yoongi’s slight illness. He sighs quietly to himself and checks on the small tab on his screen.

He’s sure Hoseok wouldn’t appreciate it but he’d been tracking the Ngfy’widan ever since he left. He still hadn’t left Ts’ets’khli- maybe he was waiting for a ship to take off. Namjoon tells himself it’s just to make sure Hoseok wouldn’t go back to the GLA and report them- but he knows Hoseok wouldn’t. He would never.

Hoseok was too loyal, and possibly too kind.

Looking away from the tab, Namjoon glances about the Bridge one more time before calling out, ‘If anyone wants to remain back in the ship- they’re more than welcome to. I’m not expecting anyone to go out of their comfort zone, and I don’t want them to either.’

‘t’s a bit late for that, in’it?’ Sk’jin mumbles from below.

Namjoon sighs to himself. It probably was.

* *

His entire being protests. His mind, his heart, his very soul seemed to be screaming at him.

But his hands move on their own accord. Safely passing through the light atmosphere of the planet. It’s so different.

So so different from when he first landed here all those centuries ago.

Everything had been bright flashing lights- heat, pain, darkness, and more pain. But now the contrast is a little too much. It’s too gentle and there is no screaming, no mounting fear.
No haunting eyes and pleading voices.

And most of all- no pressing presence of darkness.

Sk’jin’s calculations were pretty accurate.

The huge area that housed the extremely large and broken down remains of the Venture Unit ship gleams at them from a deep valley. There’s no immediate landing space large enough for the Užkulisai so Sk’jin flies them over to the top edge of the valley. The cliffs were strong here; Sk’jin would know.

And despite having existed in a surreal state during his entire stay here, Sk’jin remembers every single aspect of this area down to the most painful detail.

‘We’re green,’ Sk’jin announces, his voice strained no matter how hard he tried to control himself and sound casual.

‘Sk’jin-’ Namjoon is already saying and Sk’jin hates it- hates the pity and understanding.

So instead of responding to Namjoon Sk’jin gets up and walks out of the Bridge, claiming he needed to change to appropriate gear.

He tries to keep his mind blank- he’d been preparing himself for this moment ever since he made the executive decision to actually see it done. But he’s still not ready. And Sk’jin doesn’t think he’ll be ready either. He wanted to see Jimin’s reaction- to ask Taeh’yung what he thought in his point of view. He wanted to ask Yoongi his opinions as well. But he can barely keep himself together so asking the others about how and what they thought felt a little redundant.

He changes into more practical clothes- something he did own because though Sk’jin loved walking and lounging around in his beautiful robes, he was a practical Being and this situation required a lot of it.

By the time he gets out of his Cabin and makes his way down, he can smell the air and feel the humidity of the planet. Sweat forms on his brow and it’s not from the heat. Taeh’yung is standing by the doorway, clearly waiting for him. He smiles brightly, reaching out for Sk’jin and he gladly takes the Zhak’gri’s proffered hand.

‘It’s all right,’ Taeh’yung whispers into his ear, squeezing him into a hug. ‘It’s all right- nothing is here. It’s fine. I won’t allow you to get hurt or go back, okay?’

Sk’jin feels incredibly small and he nods shakily, squeezing Taeh’yung’s hand hard.

The urgency to turn back and hide overwhelms him. But he can’t hide.

Not again.

The Hangar Bay door is opened wide and the Spardyti ready to leave. Sk’jin had forgotten about the state of the Spardyti until the other day when he came across Yoongi tinkering around it. It had sustained some damage from its stay in Pompa but it was nothing Yoongi couldn’t fix. Speaking of Yoongi, the Human was standing behind Jimin who was quiet throughout their descent.

He made no noticeable or definitive reaction towards the planet and Sk’jin thinks that he’s being careful before jumping to conclusions. But Taeh’yung wasn’t uneasy- he was smiling, and this reassures Sk’jin.
Namjoon appears behind them, expression wary and careful.

‘Everything is ready so that we can leave immediately,’ Namjoon states. ‘We cannot leave the ship unguarded so Yoongi is staying back.’

Sk’jin is surprised. But as he looks over at the Human properly, he notices how unwell he seemed. He wasn’t recovering or improving- it almost appeared as though after every nap he took, he got worse.

Sk’jin feels a strange sense of disassociation as he walks towards the Hangar doorway. He notices how the others remain back a little- as though waiting for Sk’jin to make the first move.

It really hits Sk’jin, as the balmy sunrays and moist wind whip around him, that though he spent so many years trapped in this planet, this would be the first time he’s actually stepped foot on it.

It was still every bit muggy and hot as he remembered it to be. Or at least, could sense- he was never in the physical state of actually sensing on his own. But the heavy oppression is lifted- the weight of some shadow no longer pressing down. It was just another planet- a wild and uncivilized planet- but it was no longer trapped.

Distinct sounds of wildlife filter through the air and the nearby bushes and trees rustle with unseen creatures, watching them. Sk’jin remembers the great strange beasts that roamed this planet- some more animalistic, while the others were truly mind-boggling. He hopes they don’t spend too much time here to meet the creatures; either that or they were going to have to be careful not to spill any blood in case they attract attention.

Taking a deep breath, Sk’jin fully steps out.

‘Good?’ Taeh’yung asks from behind him, voice much more distant than he thought.

To Sk’jin’s surprise, he’s standing at the very end of the lowered ramp with his eyes closed.

‘Yeah- yeah, t’s good.’ he exhales out in reply.

The Zhak’gri steps up to his side, a wide grin on his face before he inhales deeply.

‘It’s old here,’ he comments. ‘Old and lost.’

‘Don’t insult me like this,’ Sk’jin tries at humor. But it’s lost on Taeh’yung who is now staring out, head tilted a little as though curious.

‘…is it safe?’ Namjoon asks carefully as he too steps closer, also eyeing the jungle curiously.

‘Oh yeah- nothing bad or weird!’ Taeh’yung replies a second late. Sk’jin tries to find any sign of falsehood or apprehension in Taeh’yung’s eyes but comes up blank.

There’s sound of movement behind him and voices. The Spardyti starts up and Namjoon is calling for the ramp to be cleared. Sk’jin side steps and to his extreme discomfort, finds that the eaves of the thick and extremely tall jungle woods sprung up entirely too close to the ship. He finds himself peering into the murky dark light of the jungle and he shudders despite the heat.

‘Sk’jin?’

He tries to look back but he can’t- he can’t look away from the depths of the jungle, can’t tear his eyes away from the blurred background of endless trees, vines, huge trunks covered in decades of moss and climbers, shifting columns of light, hollowed eyes finding his line of sight-

‘Sk’jin.’

Sk’jin starts as he feels a hand on his arm. His immediate reaction is to shake it off but the calm that spreads into him makes him want to lean into the touch. Ducking down to avoid staring into the jungle that was staring back at him, Sk’jin allows himself to be pulled away and closer to the Spardyti.

It’s Jimin.

He has a worried look on his face, eyeing Sk’jin and then the jungle behind them. He doesn’t say anything and just one look at Jimin, Sk’jin knows that whatever was looking back at him from the jungle was not just in his head.

‘Jin! Chim! Let’s go!’ Taeh’yung calls, waving violently at them as he jumped off of the ramp, bouncing along on the soft jungle floors.

Jimin pulls him back towards the ship and it’s all Sk’jin can do to not scramble forward away from the intensely buildup of suspense attempting to grab him from the back.

They make their way back to the Spardyti where Namjoon is standing by the door. He’s watching them approach curiously, eyes flitting behind them towards the jungle.

‘Here,’ he says gruffly, ‘Emergency rations.’

‘It’s not like we’re going to separate or get lost,’ Sk’jin mumbles though he takes the small sling-bag and straps it over his shoulder.

‘Are you all right?’

Sk’jin is about to roll his eyes and reply with some conviction that yes, he was all right, and maybe mention something about how Namjoon should stop projecting his guilt towards him but he realizes it’s not directed at him. Namjoon is looking past Sk’jin and the Khol’isa turns in alarm.

It’s Yoongi.

His eyes roll behind his head and his body crumples almost gracefully off of the ramp.

There’s sharp gasp and Jimin’s blurred shape runs past Sk’jin and he’s in time to catch the Human before he hits the ground.

‘Fuck-’ Namjoon curses as he too quickly moves forward.

Yoongi has always been pale- but he’s pale to the point of transparency. His vein stick out like tastelessly painted on streaks of blue and violet- dark circles blossom around his eyes, his breathing shallow.

Jimin is carefully lowering him to the ground, pushing back Yoongi’s hair before placing his palms on either side of the Human’s temples.

‘Is he dehydrated-’ Namjoon skids to a stop before the Human, lowering the emergency-rations he was carrying to the floor as he looks over the Human with scanning eyes.

Taeh’yung comes slipping back on the moss-covered floors, expression bewildered until he sees Yoongi.
‘Oh no baby!’ Taeh’yung squats down, mumbling in Jimin’s language and the latter lifts him up.

‘Is he all right?’ Sk’jin asks, ignoring the prickle on the back of his neck- a warning that he was being watched.

‘It’s nothing to really worry about,’ Taeh’yung says quietly as they scurry back into the ship. ‘Yoongi isn’t…he isn’t himself in the way we are.’

‘What does that mean?’ Namjoon presses, eyeing the Human apprehensively.

‘Who he is, what he is- it isn’t a result of a natural progression of being,’ Taeh’yung says with light emphasis as they quickly make their way into the Medical Bay. ‘I can sense who he is- I can see him- but he’s like a child.’

‘Mentally?’ Namjoon asks but Sk’jin already knows that answer to that.

‘No,’ Taeh’yung shakes his head. ‘His memories are young- very young, but his mind-’ Taeh’yung smiles widely at that, ‘-His mind is wide and expansive.’

‘So…what’s happening to him now?’ Namjoon asks a little impatiently as they gather in the Medical Bay. Jimin carefully places the Human on the Bed, worry pinching his features.

‘His old memories are coming back- he doesn’t know how to process it,’ Sk’jin replies, finding it easier to breathe now that he was inside the Užkulisai, away from sight. ‘It’s information overload. It’s been happening for a while now.’

Namjoon grimaces, probably thinking back to all the odd moments of Yoongi’s recent behavior and obvious deterioration in his physical appearance.

‘Will he be all right when he wakes up?’ the Kutsoglerin asks, his chin jutting out in thought.

Taeh’yung shrugs as he helps Jimin pull out the IV patches and bag, ‘Physically he’ll be fine- I don’t know who he’ll be when he wakes up.’

Namjoon looks unsure at this statement. And rightly so.

‘But I could be wrong- maybe sleeping like this will be better for him.’ Taeh’yung smiles at Jimin who smiles back reassuringly, hand still resting over Yoongi’s head. Sk’jin doesn’t know how to feel about this. ‘Maybe this will help him become.’

It’s obvious from Namjoon’s confused expression that he didn’t really understand Taeh’yung’s words. So it was all just conjecture- and Sk’jin cannot come up with a sound hypothesis regarding any of this. He just wants to finish this and get over with it.

‘I’ll stay back with Yoongi,’ the Zhak’gri says unexpectedly. ‘You guys go ahead. There’s a lot of daylight left, but it’s best to get back in time.’

Namjoon looks a little taken aback by Taeh’yung’s clear and practical statements but he nods nonetheless. Jimin seems to understand and he doesn’t seem too worried as he looks back down at Yoongi. He asks something and Taeh’yung replies with a grin and a teasing tone towards the end of his statement. The idea of venturing out without Taeh’yung unnerves Sk’jin and he can’t help the way his stomach coils and twists. His mouth tastes bitter and he’s sweating again.

‘Jin.’
It’s Taeh’yung but it’s not him at the same time. Sk’jin can sometimes differentiate the voices, the faces. Not always, but sometimes. And he’s not sure what to expect he looks up at the Zhak’gri.

‘You’ll be all right- Chim will be there,’ Taeh’yung says in what Sk’jin guesses is reassuring.

‘How do we communicate?’ Sk’jin blurts out. ‘If Tae isn’t there, how do we understand Jimin?’

‘We have basic words of communication,’ Namjoon pats at the screen-pouch to his side and nodding at Jimin. ‘We just need him to see, need to verify our questions; besides, it’s not like we can’t use the Comm.’

Sk’jin’s attempt at a humming response dies in his throat, so instead he nods. Of course communication channels would be stronger now that everything has changed.

‘Let’s go then?’ Namjoon asks a little hesitantly, clearly not knowing how to react to Sk’jin and Taeh’yung’s previous conversation.

Feeling a slight flare of irritation, Sk’jin uses this and spurs himself into movement. He hears Namjoon follow him out, can feel his eyes on him but he doesn’t say anything. He doesn’t want to hear anything else either and Namjoon seems to sense this too.

‘What do you think will happen to Yoongi?’ Namjoon asks in a low voice as they cross the Hangar. The overwhelming feeling of being watched comes back and Sk’jin wants to shrink away immediately.

‘I don’t know- Tae is not worried- we shouldn’t be either.’ Sk’jin manages to reply, averting his eyes and staring at the floor instead as he walked.

‘It’s what they wanted I think,’ Namjoon says as they make their way to the Spardyti.

‘The Special-Jury?’ Sk’jin asks, still not looking up.

‘At least some of the Special-Jury,’ Namjoon clarifies as Sk’jin feels him carefully nudge him to the side, indicating the doorway for him. Namjoon obviously noticed Sk’jin’s sudden inclination for the floors, but he doesn’t say anything. Sk’jin climbs into the well ventilated Spardyti and doesn’t look up until he’s seated.

‘Maybe they want to know what he knows too?’

‘Yeah- maybe.’

Jimin enters, a small smile on his face.

‘Yoongi?’ Namjoon asks, turning his head to address him. Jimin nods in reply, holding up a thumb’s up.

‘All right,’ Namjoon pats his seat-buckle before adding, ‘Security on.’

Jimin makes sure to secure himself in and sits back, eyes searching the jungle.

They don’t speak at all. The coordinates were already implemented so the Spardyti simply follows the trajectory on autopilot. Sk’jin barely has to do anything. Jimin is simply looking down, sometimes making soft sounds of exclamation. Namjoon is studying the environment too, eyes narrowed as he clearly used whatever enhancement he possessed to take a look around.

Sk’jin just stares at the sky above.
'How dangerous is it to stay out while it’s dark?’ Namjoon asks after a while.

‘Remarkably dangerous - I wouldn’t advice it,’ Sk’jin replies. ‘There are really weird things about the place- why?’

Namjoon shrugs, ‘I’m just thinking of all the possibilities. What sort of danger? Creatures? Toxins?’

‘Creatures,’ Sk’jin replies. ‘It’s best if we leave quickly. They hide in the jungles so stick to open places rather than hide.’

Namjoon nods.

It’s quiet again and the Spardyti starts to dips gently. Sk’jin looks at his lap determinedly the moment he sees the tops of the jungle trees.

‘I’m sorry.’

Sk’jin glances to the side. Namjoon is looking out of the window, eyes reflecting the bright noon sky.

‘It’s fine,’ Sk’jin says tersely. ‘I wanted to know too. No one is forcing me.’

‘Regardless,’ Namjoon looks away to meet Sk’jin’s gaze, ‘I’m sorry.’

Sk’jin tries to shrug in response but it’s more of a twitch. He hears Jimin exclaiming as they dip lower and Namjoon’s attention is diverted as well. A shadow falls into the cockpit of the Spardyti and Sk’jin finally looks up.

The remains of the titanic ship looms ahead of him.

They had called it the Ghost Ship, Sk’jin remembers vividly, listening in on the GIU meetings and conversations. But they were wrong- they were so wrong.

A ghost was a term used to describe the spiritual remains of a once alive living being.

This ship was more than just alive.

The Ghost Ship is almost the size of an average GLA Immigration Office building with massive turbine engines spread out on long extending wings, curving into the main body of the ship like a crescent. Half of one of the mammoth wings had torn off, buried in centuries of vegetation and growth, off to the side. The remaining intact body is half buried, half uncovered- and what was exposed, was covered in thick vegetation and growth.

It lay on its side, tilted at a strange angle. A great broken dome shimmered, its glass broken through and replaced by strong and thick networks of vines and climbers. There was a tree growing out of one of the domes- one that wasn’t there before.

‘Spaces,’ Namjoon whistles. ‘This is something.’

Jimin is out of his seat, his gaze confused and his brows furrowed. His lips are pressed together in a thin line, as though aggravated.

‘Yeah- it gets old quickly,’ Sk’jin breathes out, hands gripping the controls of the Spardyti. ‘Jimin?’
Jimin looks back, his eyes searching for a connection. Sk’jin nods jerkily at the seat.

‘Sit- we’re landing.’

Jimin nods a second late and goes back to his seat.

His heart hammering in his chest, Sk’jin lands the Spardyti down safely in the massive grassy clearing.

He ignores the vivid imagery that threatens to overtake his present view- *fleshy shadows emerging- imitation skin melting off- screams of horror and pain- lifeless eyes and bodies- outstretched hands desperate for help for answers for relief for-

Sk’jin shakes his head, inhaling shakily as he gets up before Namjoon or Jimin can ask him if he was all right. He doesn’t want their understanding looks, or apologies, or anything- he just wants answers and to get the fuck out as quickly as possible.

‘TeorSers?’

‘Fuck yes.’

Jimin refuses the weapon and Sk’jin isn’t surprised by that- and he would have voiced this if his mind wasn’t so preoccupied. Stepping out of the Spardyti is less dramatic and a whole lot more anticlimactic than Sk’jin had imagined. Though he’s not sure what he was expecting in the first place. He knew that this place was safe. That there was nothing to fear anymore. That the Nightmare he survived was gone and would never come back again.

But the Nightmare in his mind was still very much alive- and he can already feel it creeping up on him, watching from the thick shadows of the jungle beyond the wide field.

‘It’s odd that there’s no growth around the ship,’ Namjoon remarks, eyeing the reedy grass around the crash-site.

‘It’s always been like this,’ Sk’jin comments, his instincts telling him to reach a water-source to hide himself. But instead he faces the looming ship and despite the slight tremors running down his body, he stands firm.

‘All right- I think it won’t be too hard to find an entrance-‘ Namjoon is saying but there’s a sudden eruption of wood, leaves, and general foliage from their right.

Sk’jin remembers these creatures. And he doesn’t like those memories either.

Massive- nearly 8 feet tall, and strangely lean, these oddly reptilian creatures ran at a tremendous pace, and in packs.

‘What the fuck -‘ Namjoon raises his TeorSer but Sk’jin is already grabbing the back of the Kutsoglerin’s shirt, his immediate fear and shock overwhelming his crippling anxiety and he bodily drags Namjoon back into the Spardyti.

‘We need to get the fuck out-‘ Sk’jin hisses before nearly choking on his own tongue when Jimin walks out into the grassy field- towards the stampeding pack of carnivorous creatures.

‘JIMIN-!’ Namjoon yells out, pulling away from Sk’jin’s grip.

Jimin pauses, not because of Namjoon’s yell- but for no direct reasoning.
And once again, he displays nothing out of the ordinary—no flashing lights, no surge of power—nothing. Jimin just simply stands there, posture at ease and carefree, as though nearly 2 dozen beasts weren’t charging at him?

The great pack of beasts break to a halt feet from Jimin and Sk’jin’s eyes water at the rank smell that they bring with them. How was Jimin standing that close and not recoiling? Namjoon is cursing under his breath, TeorSer still raised.

Jimin raises his hand and the creatures flinch—-one snaps its long jaws at him. But Jimin doesn’t mind, instead he gently pats their scaly heads.

Then in one sudden motion, the entire pack seem to perform a strange bow, their forearms lowering their upper torsos to the ground.

Namjoon gawks at the sight and then back at Sk’jin as though to confirm what it was that he was seeing. Sk’jin has no explanation.

The pack leaves, the ground thundering in their wake as they break through the jungle and disappear into the shadows. Jimin turns around to face them and makes a sour face, miming throwing up and exhaling violently as though to get rid of the smell now stuck in his nose.

Sk’jin wheezes out a laugh, the nervous agitation seizing his body now somehow gone from this extraordinary display. Namjoon sort of laughs too, though it sounds more like a strained groan.

‘That was something,’ Namjoon comments weakly.

Sk’jin can do nothing but nod slowly in response.

Jimin looks up at the massive ship, taking in all of its broken glory and destruction. He points at it, and then at Sk’jin, a questioning expression on his face.

‘Not me—this isn’t me,’ Sk’jin replies, shaking his head for added effect. Jimin doesn’t respond exactly but just presses his lips together in a thin hard line before looking at it again.

‘Tae, could you ask Jimin what he’s thinking?’ Sk’jin asks as they slowly make their way across the short distance between the two ships.

‘Gotcha!’

It’s a moment before Jimin starts speaking again, hands gesturing lightly though Taeh’yung wouldn’t be able to see.

‘He’s asking how old the ship is.’

Sk’jin can feel Namjoon’s gaze on him. But Sk’jin isn’t 100% sure either. Of course the Venture Unit had started experimentations for a long period of time—but this ship was special.

‘We don’t know for sure—but it was already this broken up and destroyed when I got here,’ Sk’jin replies. ‘From what I overheard and was told, I think it’s almost 1500 years old—possibly more.’

Jimin listens to the translation, still studying the ship with intrigue and wariness.

‘Based on the design of the ship I’d say you were correct,’ Namjoon says beside him. ‘The model and make—the materials, the overall appearance isn’t from this millennium even.’

The ship was a tad bit opulent and excessive—Sk’jin has gone through the interior of the ship and he knows that there was no actual functional use to many of the grand lobbies and atriums that lined up the ship layers.

‘Chim says it feels older.’

‘Yeah—probably because time was weirdly altered,’ Sk’jin replies as he takes the first step forward. It felt as though both Namjoon and Jimin were waiting for him to make the first move.

Jimin asks no questions after listening to Taeh’yung’s translations, as though he had been expecting to hear that. Feeling somehow oddly hollow, Sk’jin steps into the long shadow cast by the ship and into sprouting green mess of vines. The ground beneath his boots is soft and black, the grit of the clay loose and ash-like almost.

The climbers are young and easy to tear off, but the deeper they get, the stronger the vines become. Namjoon steps in a few seconds later and calmly pulls at the vines. They snap easily under his hands even though the Kutusoglerin is exerting no real force or strength. Jimin looks around the thick alcove of vines they’re walking through, the sheen of sweat highlighted in this strange lighting. His eyes glow brighter in this weird twilight inside the thicket of vines and climbers, a strangely non-violent and less traumatic version of a solar eclipse.

‘I understand what you mean. I’ve flown past nebulae and supernovas and black holes and nearly everything you could think of but—...but there’s something that will always captivate me about the solar eclipse.’

The memory is vivid—tinted red from the Bloodmoon that chased him tirelessly.

‘There’s a special tour just to watch eclipses; you should consider taking it up.’

The atmosphere of the planet was pale and bright as the curvature of the globe expanded beneath them—

‘No way!’

‘I am not kidding— I swear on— on...on my life!’

‘It’s not worth much then.’ His grin is teasing, dimple showing clear on his cheek. And his eyes bright, warm, and clear. Too clear, too kind, too naïve.

‘Shut the fuck up.’

Jimin smiles when he notices Sk’jin’s staring. Sk’jin tries to smile back and it works a little. He hears Namjoon stumble a little before the vines suddenly give way in a series of cracking sounds and they meet a dark metallic surface. Namjoon presses his hand over the face, pushing back the vines.

‘You sure it’s near here?’ Namjoon asks looking back, barely sweating or effected by the heat.

‘It is,’ Sk’jin nods with surety. He remembers the broken gaping hole on the side of the ship, blasted open by a bunch of rowdy pirates who were screaming for their lives only to be consumed by the creatures Jimin had so easily placated a few minutes ago. There had been a massive nursing den of them, and the pirates had been careless enough in their fear to trigger the violent protective urges of the creatures. Sk’jin could do nothing but watch as their blood pooled around the large atrium.

He walks forward, surprised at how his body seemed to listen to him despite the initial gripping fear that threatened to paralyze him just minutes ago. He squeezes past a few thick vines that were more like trees at this point, and his hand slips over aged metal edges, covered in centuries of moss and vegetation.

‘Here-’ Sk’jin is starting to say but Namjoon is quick to walk out first, angling a hand out as though to stop Sk’jin and Jimin from walking in.

‘What in Spaces are you doing.’ Sk’jin asks in a deadpan.

‘Making sure it’s clear,’ Namjoon grunts back before he vanishes around a mossy edge. Sk’jin feels a hand grip at his arm and Jimin is standing next to him. He nods forward, an expectant look on his face. Sk’jin sighs and he’s about to make his way forward when he’s alarmed by a thought.

Was Jimin somehow calming him down right now? Had he suppressed his anxiety and fear while they were out? Deciding to question him via Taeh’yung later, Sk’jin guides them out.

The atrium that had been one of the locations of many bloodbaths and torturous nightmares opens to him in a disturbingly anticlimactic manner. It’s wide as it is tall and in their current location, they were walking on the walls rather on the designated floors.

‘The GIU entered through the roof?’ Namjoon remarks, looking upwards.

‘From the walls I’d say,’ Sk’jin glances up and finds that a large hole had been drilled through all the way down on one side of the tilted walls of the ship. Vines hung down, offering the possibility of climbing it.

Jimin is talking quietly to Taeh’yung on the Comm, his hand over his ear as though he couldn’t help it.

Namjoon walks over to the middle, glancing downwards instead at the floors covered in natural fauna and soil to the point where they couldn’t see any of the original metallic walls. Water is dripping somewhere- condensation of sorts, Sk’jin presumes. At one point, there had been a strange outburst of mini waterfalls inside this ship- but that had been centuries ago.

If it had been surreal to enter the planet, Sk’jin would categorize this very moment as a feverish relapse into a nightmare you couldn’t escape. Sk’jin looks at the ground, covered in at least 4 sols of growth and the general circle of life. It felt both familiar and unfamiliar at the same time.

Looking upwards again and into the drilled ceiling above, Sk’jin finally allows himself to wonder if his ship was still intact where it had crashed.

‘Namjoon, Sk’jin,’ Jimin calls out to them, pointing to one side of the wide atrium.

He’s pointing a little upwards, towards a slope that lead up to tilted doorways.

‘That’s the way into the lower levels,’ Sk’jin tells Namjoon quietly before adding, ‘Tae- tell Jimin to go wherever he wants to- and that we’ll follow him instead.’

Jemin pauses in his movements before he nods in their direction.

And then walking with a sense of confidence and familiarity, Jimin walks up the vegetation covered slope towards the slanted walls.

‘I’ll bring up the rear,’ Namjoon says quietly, taking a step back. Sk’jin is briefly thankful- his back covered, he won’t have to look back. It’s quiet the further they walk inwards- all about are signs of the GIU’s expedition of the planet and the ship. The remains of light fixtures, new pipes and wires not yet covered in layers of moss or entirely buried. There are broken gravity-lifts and what appeared to be empty crates and OrTanks as well. Sk’jin hears Namjoon side-stepping briefly as though to scan the objects.

Things changed- and Sk’jin doesn’t recognize many parts of the place. He’s also not sure on how to maneuver in the ship in this form of solidness. And the further they walk, the higher they climb, yet it feels as though they were entering into the very core of the ship. They don’t talk- no one says a word. Jimin walks the tilted walls and ceilings like he’s been doing it for a long time, only occasionally looking back as though to check on them.

His feet were bare, and it reminds Sk’jin of bare scaly feet, untrimmed talons scratching along the earth and grass.

Jimin stops in front of a wall- or at least the point where a wall and the ceiling met, before going up and opening into several wide doorways.

‘Elevator doors,’ Namjoon comments. Jimin clambers over a few broken debris and mounds of sedimentation and heads straight for the second-left opening. With more strength than Sk’jin thought he was capable of possessing, Jimin pulls the rusted and jammed door apart and sticks his head into the darkness.

‘I doubt those are operating,’ Namjoon remarks.

‘The wires should still be strong- vines as well,’ Sk’jin sighs as Jimin pulls his head out, a small frown on his face. ‘What’s wrong?’

Jimin looks around at the elevator doorways again, head tilting like he’s not sure about something. Then he proceeds to check every elevator doorway.

‘Tae- could you ask Jimin what he’s doing?’ Sk’jin asks as he takes a break against a fallen over ventilation shaft, crumpled in a heap up against the slanted floors.

Jimin starts speaking, quiet voice filling the dilapidated lobby area. Namjoon is carefully observing the area, eyes narrowed as he takes in the interior.

‘There was a lot of funding for this,’ Namjoon states quietly. ‘Not just the size- material and make. It’s been centuries but under all this dirt, the entire ship is still intact. I won’t be surprised if you could start it up if it’s fueled again.’

‘Let’s not get ahead of ourselves,’ Sk’jin replies dryly. He feels exhausted though it’s not in a physical sense. He felt the intense urge to sleep though he knew there was no option there.

‘Chim is saying he lost it.’

‘Lost what?’

‘The sound he was following,’ Taeh’yung explains, his voice sounding a little stuffed, as though he was eating. He probably was. ‘It’s gone.’

‘What sort of sound?’ Namjoon asks, taking out his screen.

‘He didn’t specify.’

Jimin makes a small sound of exclamation suddenly and spins on his heel and rushes towards Sk’jin.
‘I think he’s heard it again,’ Namjoon is saying when Jimin charges straight towards the floors behind Sk’jin.

Before either Namjoon or Sk’jin can warn out a yelling, to their intense shock Jimin simply vanishes through the wall.

‘What the fuck-‘ Namjoon immediately steps forward, hand stretched out.

‘This isn’t supposed to be here anymore,’ Sk’jin can’t help but retract backwards, eyeing the seemingly solid wall with heart pounding fear. ‘It’s not supposed to be here-’

Jimin appears again, his expression bewildered but not surprised at the seemingly fake wall he just walked through. He gestures for them to start moving but then the wall behind him vanishes as though it was never there in the first place, taking away the grime covered, aged barrier, revealing a seamless continuation of the broken remains of the ventilation pipes Sk’jin had been sitting on, and downwards to wide staircases.

‘What is doing that? Is this digitized-walls? But those require excessive amounts of energy and fuel,’ Namjoon asks sharply, his posture defensive and apprehensive.

Jimin starts talking again and this time jogs towards Sk’jin. Taking his hand Jimin guides him forward and Sk’jin knows he’s using his abilities on him. It worries Sk’jin that any one Being has such an ability as Jimin’s but he’s distracted by what lay at the bottom of the stairs.

An even wider atrium opens to them, lit up by broken beams of sunlight filtering in from high broken seams above. Sk’jin is vaguely aware of Namjoon starting up the headlamps and the area starts to light up properly as the lamps soar past Sk’jin’s head and straight outwards.

It’s a huge computerized core, stretching up like some strange mountain in the middle of this atrium. And like wires meeting an electric outpost, great thick pipes as large as Sk’jin’s entire body string through the air, feeding into the very top and cavernous mouth of this core. And Sk’jin feels shivers overtaking his body as he eyes the glass chamber at the top, large enough to fit one single Being inside of it.

‘Spaces- what the fuck is this place,’ Namjoon whispers, as though afraid of being overheard.

Jimin lets go of his hand and jogs downwards.

There are more glass chambers around the main floors of the atrium- and in them are clear signs of imprisonment and restriction. Sk’jin doesn’t have to look at Namjoon to see how it affected the Kutsoglerin.

‘They worked on It here,’ Sk’jin says as his feet continue to take him down. The headlamps situate themselves midair, offering more than enough light over the place that saw the birth of the First Nightmare.

Namjoon doesn’t ask any questions, simply observing instead. Jimin is at the bottom and he sprints straight forward.

Namjoon hurries and Sk’jin follows the Kutsoglerin.

‘What’s gotten him-‘ Namjoon is beginning to ask when he pauses. Because Sk’jin can hear it too now. There’s a distinct hum in the air.

‘Something’s still running,’ Sk’jin frowns as he glances up at the core. If it weren’t for what Jimin did, he would be a shaking mess at the stairs, unable to move, speak, or even think.

‘Something left by the GIU?’ Namjoon asks as they get to the bottom just in time to see Jimin pulling open a large metal door with a groaning creak.

‘Something tells me they never got in here.’ Sk’jin comments before adding, ‘Tae get ready!’

There’s choking sounds, proving that the Zhak’gri was most probably eating. Jimin disappears inside and they pick up their pace. They skid over the atrium floors, nearly tripping on the countless wires and ancient roots that had entwined itself over the place.

Jimin reappears, face ashen and eyes wide. And in his hand he’s holding a small device that shouldn’t be eliciting such a reaction from the latter. But Sk’jin knows better than to question seemingly normal things.

‘What is it-’

Jimin starts speaking, haltingly, like he was in a state of disbelief. He’s twisting the item in his hands, incredulous and shocked as he literally has to take a seat. He plonks down on the ground while Namjoon walks over to the doorway to investigate. Sk’jin crouches down, any excuse to sit really, and waits for Jimin to finish speaking.

‘It’s a part of the technology from his System,’ Taeh’yung translates slowly. ‘It’s part of their security- uh-it’s supposed to use orbital magnetism and converts that energy to create a…refraction? Deflection? Of its surroundings and like…project a dense non-penetrating shield…and uh, it’s not supposed to be here.’

‘So it is- this is tech from his System, they’ve been using his technology to fuel their research and experiments,’ Namjoon states harshly as he reappears.

Jimin looks up helplessly at them, his expression so plainly confused and desperate. Like he was asking them how his System’s technology got here. He opens his mouth as though to speak but nothing comes out.

‘Can I?’ Namjoon asks, reaching for the cell. Jimin places it in his hand and gets up immediately, feet hurrying him along the girth of the atrium as he continued going through every doorway and opening he could find.

Sk’jin just sits still, concentrating on breathing in and out.

‘Just this…this one single cell,’ Namjoon can’t even seem to vocalize his thoughts at the moment. ‘Of course, it’s possible that they were already messing with a lot of things, and this just added to it…was using this the cause of everything?’

Sk’jin glances at the small cell, wondering the same thing.

Was that small, insignificant and incomplete cell from Jimin’s System’s technology the reason why the First Nightmare even existed? Was it the reason why all of this had happened?

‘It makes sense- they knew for a fact that Bhumi- Menigišiti, had this sort of tech. They were able to tie in the connections- it’s how the Venture Unit was able to figure it all out. They saw the connections between this planet, the Akramanese, and then traced it all the way back to this treaty.’ Namjoon is mumbling to himself.

Jimin reappears empty handed, his expression not as wild and lost as it was some minutes ago.
‘Taeh’yung can you ask Jimin if there’s anything else in here he can sense or hear—’ Namjoon begins as he hands the cell back to Jimin who immediately reaches for it. There’s a small pang in Sk’jin’s chest—this was a piece of his home.

A piece of his home that was most probably responsible for the destruction of so many other homes.

Jemin shakes his head in reply.

‘We should get going then,’ Namjoon says as he checks his screen again. ‘Let’s not stay too long.’

The sun was still out and Sk’jin is surprised that the Kutsoglerin isn’t pushing their stay. But he wasn’t going to argue this suggestion so he gets up. He glances upwards at the empty glass chamber.

Pale elongated groping hands, sightless eyes, screaming mouths, melting skin.

‘WHY ARE YOU HERE?’

Sk’jin looks away firmly.

‘Does Jimin want to stay longer?’ Namjoon asks hesitantly, eyeing the area warily as the headlamps float back towards him, darkness following in their wake. It was as though confirmation of his theory did nothing to placate him or make him feel confident.

Jemin shakes his head again after Taeh’yung translates.

Namjoon gestures forward, jerking his head to the side with a look directed at Sk’jin, ‘Let’s go.’

Jemin is quiet as they make their way back, clearly deep in thought. He’s holding the cell in his hands, and his posture is a little stooped, as though burdened by the lives lost as a direct result of that cell’s existence.

‘Do you realize that this is the only time something has come out how it was planned?’ Sk’jin asks absently.

Namjoon hums a noncommittal reply before adding, ‘Has it really?’

When they reach the tilted atrium, they’re surprised to find that it’s much darker out than they anticipated. The sky above was a watery inky blue and Sk’jin can just about make out the stars. Jimin’s pace has slowed down; his movements seemed weighed down and he was tripping over roots and wires. He was clearly very distracted and upset.

‘We should hurry,’ Sk’jin says at once. Namjoon nods, feet hurrying in response.

‘Jimin?’ Sk’jin calls, looking around at the slightly distracted Being. ‘Let’s go— it’s getting dark.’

He points upwards and at his palm to indicate time. Jimin nods, still distracted but hurries nonetheless. Namjoon is waiting for them at the broken down entrance, already pushing aside vines with one arm.

‘All good? We can come back tomorrow if we need to,’ Namjoon says uncertainly at both Sk’jin and Jimin.

‘It’s all the same to me,’ Sk’jin replies, exhaustion seeping into him.
It’s cooler out now that it was evening and Sk’jin can hear nightly sounds of creatures and insects and general night life in the wild. He hears Namjoon breathe in sharply and Sk’jin can smell them before he sees them. The carnivorous creatures are asleep in heaps all around the Spardyti, darkened lumps, barely visible under the starlight.

A soft light movement catches Sk’jin’s eye and he readies himself to face some nightly creature but he’s mistaken. A cold rush holds him in place and Sk’jin is paralyzed.

It’s not the sight of the creatures that spooks Sk’jin, freezing his legs and stunning him to his core.

‘Spaces,’ Namjoon curses softly next to him. ‘They won’t chase after us when we lift off will they?’

Namjoon and Jimin continue walking forward but Sk’jin is stuck, eyes unable to look away, his lungs refusing air. The Spardyti lights up with their approach and throws a harsh light all over the wide clearing. The carnivorous creatures don’t stir, deep asleep as they slumber, ignoring the glaring lights.

And if Sk’jin thought what he was seeing was all in his head, he’s mistaken.

‘Sk’jin?’

Namjoon’s voice is careful and soft.

‘What’s wrong?’

Sk’jin wants to shake his head. His heart thundering, and the jungle seems to expand, red light bleeding into his sight. Under normal circumstance, he would joke it off. He would make a crude remark to embarrass Namjoon and make him go away. But he can’t.

Because he’s there. Watching from the depths of the jungle.

His silhouette is familiar, it’s clear, and it’s painfully familiar. A form he knew well. It’s imprinted into his memories: outlined by lights of a bright display screen, by flashing traffic lights, powerful headlamps near the edge of cliffs, by dim ceiling lights above his bedposts, by warp-light shining across the Bridge.

His hands extends out to him, reaching for him even though they both knew he was going to fail. And to this very second, to this very moment, Sk’jin doesn’t know if the look in his eyes were of condemnation or forgiveness.

Sk’jin startles backwards when a pair of very real, warm brown eyes appear before him. He blinks and he realizes there are tears in his eyes. He hears the last distorted words spoken in Taeh’yung’s voice and for a moment everything spins sharply and vertigo hits Sk’jin like a sack of rocks.

‘It’s not real,’ Namjoon says evenly as he holds him upright. ‘It’s not real. There’s nothing here Sk’jin.’

Sk’jin lets go of the breath he was holding; he would be ashamed to find himself shaking- his breaths uneven and almost hysterical. But he can’t find it in himself to care. Jimin is there too, staring out into the jungle as well. And quite suddenly, Jimin reaches forward, his hand over Sk’jin’s chest right above his heart, and the Khol’isa knows for certain that he was doing something. A calm settles into his muscles, his shaking stops and his breath returns to him at a normal pace.
'There’s nothing here,' Namjoon repeats again. Sk’jin realizes Namjoon’s leaning down slightly, keeping them in the same eye-level. ‘It’s all gone. You said so- and Taeh’yung said so. There’s nothing here.’

Sk’jin takes a deep breath, finally able to look past Namjoon’s eyes and back into the jungle.

They’re all looking back at him now.

‘You promised.’

‘I know.’

‘No,’ he manages to get out, raising a shaking hand and placing it over where Jimin’s hand rested against his chest. ‘They’re always here.’

Jimin can feel Sk’jin’s soul straining even more- almost to breaking point.

Planets were aligned to their suns, pulled by the gravitational forces exerted by the star, drawing them into various distances and maintaining this velocity to create a stable orbit. And Jimin has often thought that the very core of anyone’s being- their Souls, were very much like planets in their dependence and existence.

But Sk’jin was unlike this- he orbited an unknown force- one that was barred from him, but one that drew him in at violent velocities. And at this very moment, Jimin can feel it pulling at the Khol’isa with brutal force.

Jimin places his hand over Sk’jin’s chest, right where his heart was.

Strong, powerful, and forthright- Sk’jin’s heart hammered under his palm and Jimin can taste his fear, his anger, his pain- and most of all, his overwhelming guilt. Whatever had happened here was eating away at Sk’jin- beyond what Jimin could possibly hope to understand. The weight of this burden- of this storm- was so excessive, it was nearly overtaking the Khol’isa’s wearied and strained soul.

And it progressed into higher velocities the moment they landed on this planet.

Similar to the way planets were aligned to their stars; adjusting and composing themselves to the pull of the center of their solar system, this planet, like Sk’jin, felt as though it orbited another force. But Jimin knew this was not the case. There was nothing wrong with the planet. It felt tilted- almost as though the living core of the planet had shifted axis- altering its existence.
When they had first approached the planet, Jimin had sensed a strange sort of familiarity. And he hadn’t wanted to jump to conclusions, but it’s almost the same form of illusion or retraction of immediate mass as the technology they had developed in Akramana. But if that was the case, how was it here? And how was it obtained?

Jimin cradles the cell in his arms as the Spardyti lifts up. Those were the questions he had before landing on the planet. But now he knew.

It doesn’t surprised Jimin.

He has spent lifetimes in thought- occupied by singular notions or drowning in every conceivable idea- all born from the series of events that led up to his arrival in Megibīya. Every action executed, every word spoken. Jimin has drowned over and over again in these thoughts- in this guilt. And he long came to conclude, only to be cemented now by information given to him by Taeh’yung, that he had been betrayed by the Panel.

What happened in Megibiy. The coming of the Red Evil. The death of his people, of the bystanders in the form of Yoongi’s team- this was all a ploy- a carefully planned divisive attempt to enter Menigišiti.

And the cell in his hands was proof enough that the Panel had been interfering with his Home- probably long before they were introduced. And the ship below was also prime example of this betrayal- of this treason.

The cell in his hands was proof enough to know that they- in part himself- were responsible for the numerous pain and destruction that took place in this Known Universe. A small part of him is worried that once Sk’jin regains himself, once he’s far from this planet, he will conclude that the result of his current state- both physical and spiritual- was Jimin’s fault. But he doesn’t think about it, and pushes the thought out of his mind and instead focuses on the cell in his hands.

Jimin could always feel his planet- could always sense his sister. And the moment he awoke- the pain and fear that he had been shocked into, that he had been woken into- had long informed him that he was, in every sense of the word: alone.

But Jimin keeps a small and quiet hope deep in his heart. He has never left his System before- has never travelled beyond the ridges of their borders. He has existed within its security measures, within its technology and power- so Jimin has no conclusive comparison to contrast the lack of connectivity he felt with his Home and with his sister.

Would their own technology hide them from each other? He knew he ordered the Akramanan Wenedi Yyna to destroy the two-way cell that powered and charged their shields. Would that have effected how Jimin can reach to his own Home?

He almost feels a sense of pride- he hadn’t been able to detect the defensive barrier or see past the illusion.

Jimin carefully turns the cell in his hands; this little device had singlehandedly disoriented and confused him. Infused with foreign technology and implicated to be used for something certainly more nefarious than a security system, it had still undoubtedly, thrown him off-guard. So it was possible, that his Home, still existed- and continued to move on in safety.

And even if he was away, unable to fulfill his duties as the Yemenifesi Ch’nik’eti of his people, they would still be left under the protection of the Heart of their Home.
Sk’jin exhales shakily.

This planet, and Sk’jin, felt dislodged and incomplete.

While it was true that the technology from Akramana allowed immediate space-mass to be manipulated and altered, deviating and refracting channels of communication and or observation, their technology did not create this emptiness.

Jimin felt nothing harmful from this planet- but he did sense a strange gaping void. As though scooped out and completely eradicated. A strange void- barren and desert like. Only the distant memory of it existed- and Jimin feels as though it should remain so.

Some memories were made to linger, to remain. Some were meant to be forgotten- out of fear of what it might birth.

So he looks past the void- and instead he listened to the voices. There were countless voices- audible once the ship was close enough to the planet. Jimin has never experienced something like this- the space he existed in, the expanse of white, had been different to this.

It was as though whatever was here was waiting.

Just waiting for a return.

The same way Sk’jin’s soul seemed to be waiting- drawn towards a strong and powerful pull. But it’s too chaotic for Jimin to properly divine. He can’t pinpoint what it is exactly about the Khol’isa that seems to simultaneously drain him, yet rage about within him to bursting point. But the way he had stared out into the jungle- there was a strange joy in his eyes- but most of it had been fear and guilt.

‘Being alive is so complex Chim. But it’s the greatest thing- next to death.’

Namjoon is quiet as well.

He had guessed, theorized, that there was a possible connection- the GLA who sent them out had feared it. And now it was true. That the technology from Menigišiti fueled and powered countless research and experimentations- most of them for selfish and cruel reasons. And it was probably this very technology that led to the series of events that made Sk’jin who he was today- and what he went through.

Namjoon subtly glances over at him and Sk’jin.

Jimin knows Namjoon wants answers. That his search for answers does not only come from the need to fulfill this mission- but from a deep seated desire to know why.

Why any of this happened.

Why the GLA evolved into this state. Why the Yishengs betrayed the Universe. Why Jimin’s Home was subjected to cruel attempts of invasion. Why Hoseok had to live through what he had to do. Why Sk’jin was the way he was. Why his planet was destroyed for no reason than to serve as a sick experimental facility. Why Yoongi was the way he was.

But Jimin doesn’t know either.

He has no single clue- not an inkling to understand why any of this happened. What else had been effected, what else triggered and started, by the technology stolen from his Home? What other souls and hearts were completely destroyed and forgotten, as Beings of vain self-righteousness attempted to shape the Universe to their ideal?

He wishes he could give Namjoon the answers.

But he can’t.

When they land the Spardyti in front of the Užkulisai, Taeh’yung is waiting for them at the Hangar gate.

‘How is he?’ Jimin asks immediately the moment he’s close enough to the Zhak’gri.

‘He’s still asleep- I think he might wake up soon,’ Taeh’yung replies gently before going over to Sk’jin who trails in tiredly. Namjoon hovers outside, watching carefully.

The Kutsoglerin was obviously at a loss.

He was right after all- his theory had been proven correct. But what did that mean now? What could they do with this information?

Jimin quickly makes his way to the Medical Bay and quietly peaks inside.

Yoongi was fast asleep on the Bed, the drip connected to this hand halfway finished. His features were disturbed and restive, a slight furrow between his brows. He was just as pale though his veins weren’t that prominent anymore.

Jimin stands by the doorway as Sk’jin and Taeh’yung walk past. Taeh’yung is half-carrying Sk’jin, speaking in a low comforting voice. Sk’jin has calmed since- but it’s also because Jimin had made sure to ease his mind.

His heart, however, was an entirely different story.

The sound of nightlife and gentle shifting of naturally moving air quiets down again, replaced by the barely audible hum of the ship. And then Namjoon appears, looking quite haggard, as though he was finally letting go of the confident and upright visage he put over his lost and confused self.

He catches sight of Jimin and his posture changes immediately.

‘Yoongi?’ Namjoon gestures to the room behind Jimin, his tone questioning. Jimin nods and raises his hand with his fists clenched and thumb sticking out. This seemed to be a generally widely used gesture to indicate that the user was in agreement with the other in question. Namjoon gives him a small smile, glancing at the Bay behind him before moving upwards himself.

Jimin finally walks into the Bay. He knows he should probably wash- his feet were leaving darkened tracks of old soil and ashy vegetation and mechanical dust. But he’s tired. And being by Yoongi’s side is as comforting as it has always been since the beginning.

No matter how changed he was, Yoongi was still effortlessly reassuring- even despite his own confusion and how lost he was; Jimin has never felt a more steadfast or reassuring presence in his life.

As the Yemenifesi Ch’ìnik’eti of his people, Jimin was the pillar of comfort, of reassurance, of peace and harmony. Yet he rarely felt these things given to him. An occupational hazard, his sister had once said to him. But Jimin had never minded- because being able to bring his people together in peaceful harmony and unity was what brought him joy and fulfillment.
But being with Yoongi.

Was this what it felt like? To be reassured and comforted?

Jimin sits on the chair by the Bed, leaning his head on his arms crossed over the cushioning. Already his mind is settling, his limbs less strained. The cell rests inside his pocket but Jimin pays it no mind now.

However, now that his mind has quieted down, a lingering question still prevails in his mind. This is the one that baffles him the most.

Why was Yoongi here?

And how?

Jimin hums quietly under his breath, his hand finding and taking Yoongi’s into his own. He automatically closes his eyes, feeling at peace.

It’s strange because this Yoongi is different.

Like Sk’jin he’s incomplete, a little unhinged, and yet strangely wearied.

Yoongi’s breathing changes audibly and the hand in Jimin’s hold twitches just a little before his entire body shudders. Jimin stops humming and stands up immediately to find Yoongi opening his eyes, struggling with the shift in light. Jimin leans in, anxious to see if Yoongi was delirious or not.

There’s a strange film over his eyes- one that resembles the delirium of fevered Beings. And Jimin knows Yoongi’s not all there. But the Human’s eyes meets his and Jimin’s breath is caught in his throat- he’s taken back to Megibīya, back to that tower- back to that last straining moment-

Yoongi reaches up, hand cupping the back of Jimin’s head and gently pulls him down.

He smiles and Jimin’s heart is breaking- was this a dream? No- it was a nightmare- he was reliving his nightmare over again.

But this time he hears Yoongi’s whispered words and keeps them in his heart- memorizes the syllables and sounds. Because he would remember them this time- and he would never lose Yoongi again.

Yoongi was clearly going through some strange state of sleep, his body moving and his awareness confusing dreams for reality. Or in this case, memories with the present.

And Jimin knows this memory so well- because it’s acutely clear in his mind. So this time Jimin leans in first, pressing a soft kiss over Yoongi’s lips, lingering long before pulling away.

The difference in that few short seconds is staggering. Colour returns to Yoongi’s face, his breath restful, and the strain between his brows gone. He was simply asleep now.

Jimin misses Yoongi.

The one who gave him bright gummy smiles, the sunrise painting him soft muted colours. The one who would mime stories out to him in funny voices and expressions that made Jimin sometimes physically fall to the ground. The one that stayed by him, shielding him from any and everything- defending him from his own team-leader.

But that Yoongi was gone. Or at least, was gone for now. The Being before Jimin, this Yoongi, was here- and that was what mattered. Leaning in again, Jimin kisses the Human’s lips softly once more- but this time it’s a promise.

‘It’s all right if you don’t remember- you don’t have to try so hard,’ Jimin whispers- hoping that though Yoongi couldn’t hear or understand his words- his Soul might.

‘You’re here; that’s all I want.’

*

Chapter End Notes

(Author’s Notes)
I can smell
A mixtape
I am ready to be slain
This week has been a little kinder to me in terms of uni, thankfully.
BUT THE NEXT UPDATE SHOULD BE UP FASTER THAN THIS ONE
BECAUSE- well I can’t tell you I won’t spoil it. Also! For anyone curious about when Kookie is showing up I’m sorry to say it won’t be too immediate but it will be within the next 10 chapters!! Muscle bunny will make his appearance!!
Have a good weekend!! BECAUSE I SURE AS FUCK AM GONNA ENJOY MY SORT OF NOT REALLY FREE TIME BY WRITING LIKE A MAD MAN
It is the heat of a burn, the burn of a screaming throat, the silent scream of a dying sun, the death of the familiar warmth of their skin.

It is the fragrance of something blossoming under the summer sun, the flavour of giddy laughter under a neon sign-post, the reflection of a bonfire late at night.

It is the softness of their lips against yours, hesitance but desperate as they try to convey what their words can’t.

It is the edge of the shadows that crawl out from under their hand, reaching out to you, knowing that you cannot hold on.

It is the broken smile on an ashen face, pain and loss etched liked tattoos on their skin.

It is their absence; their pulse no longer beating against yours, the music of their heart silenced and hollow.

It is the price paid; doubled tripled. Heavy and ever growing.

It is pain; bitter and ever gnawing.

It is anger; destructive and purifying.

It is death; ever-lurking and drawing.

Sk’jin is startled from the report he’s reading when an annoyed face pops up on the side-tab.

‘Cap- we got him here.’

‘Hello my love-’

‘-for fucks sake,’ Nambike rolls her eyes, ‘Please act like that Captain you are and tell me what you want to do with him.’
‘Hm,’ Sk’jin hums, stretching under his sheets. ‘Bring him up.’

‘...the Bridge?’

‘No, bring him to my quarters.’ Sk’jin yawns as he props himself up elegantly on the bed.

‘Are you at least not naked.’

‘I can’t promise you anything,’ Sk’jin sing-songs.

He thinks he hears her sigh.

Sk’jin puts away the screen and pushes himself off of the bed long enough to pull on a pair of billowy pajamas but foregoes the top-robes for a practically transparent tunic instead. He lounges back on his bed and he doesn’t even have time to fluff up his hair to the perfect I woke up like this tousled effect he enjoyed the most when Nambike burst it.

A skill no doubt, seeing as all the doors slid open or shut. Yet here she was, short angry figure, powerful enough to probably single-handedly take down an entire fleet of GLA streamers with her bare-hands, glaring at him, unimpressed.

‘Cap,’ she grimaces, as though it pained her to call him that. But it was all a front of course. Sk’jin likens Nambike to a little sister, or sometimes to irk her, a daughter. He did practically raise her; her parents had been killed, slaves in the great Fytikos war that expended the poor as though they were ammunition. Sk’jin had barely managed to rescue her and a few other of her people before he then got falsely arrested for smuggling Cheimarosium.

6 sols after that in the prison Sk’jin had been locked up in which he successfully controlled by himself within 6 months of imprisonment, he’s “rescued” by the Negrhan and the rest of his crew.

‘Did you steal it?’ she had asked, furrow etched far too deep in her brow for so young a Being. Sk’jin snorts and picks her up despite her protests. He cradles her, balancing her on his hip and they stroll out of the prison that didn’t really need breaking into. Honestly, Sk’jin was just waiting for them to finally take the initiative to come pick him up. He could have walked out anytime he wanted.

‘Do I look like I’d steal from a mother?’

She regarded him with serious eyes, but still filled with an odd innocence. Commendable for someone who had witnessed all that she did at her age.

‘No,’ she had replied with surety. ‘You would ask permission.’

‘I doubt Cheimi would allow but you’re right.’

‘My child- my grown little child-’ he waves elegantly.

Unimpressed, Nambike steps aside and in walks the Being Sk’jin was reading the report on and it takes all of Sk’jin’s will-power to not laugh out loud.

Everything about him screams Venture Unit.

Even down to his hair. It’s dark grey and short, Sk’jin thinks he would look better with longer hair.

He was fresh off of their training academy, it’s obvious. According to the report he was from Mwenzi, a lone planet that orbited a red-star in the Gyāla galaxy towards the borders of the Known Universe. And like his species, he was very tall, grey haired, and generally anthropomorphic. They were hardy and tough, and were disproportionately heavy for their slim built given their bone density and chemical make was made of heavier elements than commonly found in the anthropomorphic sub-species. Sk’jin is aware of the politics of his planet, of how his people had previously been enslaved by a neighbouring planet until the Venture Unit rescued them.

This was of course, only after the Venture Unit carefully removed themselves from the situation, having milked all they could from this simple planet. It made Sk’jin sick to see the Venture Unit now championing the Mwenzini knowing what they did to them.

‘Captain,’ Nambike nods curtly. ‘I present to you Ahadi- he’s been a great help to the Chikwata Clan and they wish to fulfill their gratitude to you by offering their strongest soldier.’

Sk’jin could laugh but he’s a professional dammit and he was going to play along. After all, this Ahadi did manage to get along this far- and quite cleverly too.

The Chikwata Clan were basically all brawn and no brain. They were undoubtedly very loyal, and after Sk’jin personally helped them (without doing much in all frankness) they declared that they would pay him back in kind. They weren’t the most subtle of Beings and loudly and boldly declared their allegiance to Sk’jin. It was also known that the Clan followed a tradition of gift-bearing and giving. So the Chikwata have been gifting Sk’jin for years now, and though the Khol’isa has tried to dissuade them, wasn’t able to stop them.

So it was quite obvious that Ahadi had gained their favour (again, not difficult) and persuaded the pirate-lord to give him over to Sk’jin.

Fighting the laugh growing in his throat, Sk’jin instead graces him with a smile and a genial bow of his head, knowing full well how his hair strands would fall over his face as he did so.

Nambike rolls her eyes so hard it’s a miracle they haven’t rolled backwards into her head.

‘I welcome you aboard, Ahadi,’ Sk’jin brushes his hair away from his eyes with fair and slender fingers, looking up through his lashes.

Ahadi is completely unaffected, not even slightly distracted by what Sk’jin knows are his factually entrancing good-looks.

‘Thank you Captain- I will show you my work’s worth.’

‘I’m sure you are more than worthy,’ Sk’jin smiles, his tone suggestive as he slowly eyes the tall Being before him. Nambike pretends to throw-up behind Ahadi before exiting the room with another unimpressed look thrown at Sk’jin.

Ahadi gives nothing. There’s absolutely no reaction from the openly lewd expression Sk’jin is giving him.

No defensiveness.

No interest.

No discomfort.

Not even amusement.
“He’s just…looking back.”

“Of course I expect you to be loyal to the ship, the Bridge, and the code.” Sk’jin sits up properly, pretending to stretch a little, his arms uncovered in all their bare glory. He knows that the tunic he’s wearing gives him little to no coverage as he gets up.

“Not to you?” he inquires, looking childishly puzzled. Suddenly he looks incredibly young and Sk’jin could coo. He almost feels bad for this Being and decides to let him off easy. He points at his robes hanging behind the Mwenzini and the latter takes a moment to realize what Sk’jin was asking before he carefully lifts the delicate fabric off of the hook and holds it up.

Sk’jin smiles beatifically at the Mwenzini and turns around, slipping his arms into the sleeves of his robes.

“Thank you,” Sk’jin nods before he steps away. He suddenly feels very comfortable and gestures for Ahadi to follow him to the window seat. After taking a seat himself, Sk’jin points at the pillows and gives Ahadi a welcoming nod.

“Sit sit,” Sk’jin smiles before he continues off with their conversation. ‘And no, not to me- never to me. Loyalty subjected to a single Being never ends well- has your training in the Venture Unit taught you nothing?’

Ahadi freezes, eyes widening just a little, brows furrowing immediately. His stance, though subtle, is already defensive. He also immediately lowers his gaze, away from Sk’jin’s red irises.

“You’re going to have to be better than that if you want to continue staying here,” Sk’jin says conversationally. ‘If you freeze like that the next time someone joking mentions it you’re gonna get killed. The Chikwata are kinda thick, so they wouldn’t notice. But here…’ Sk’jin trails off delicately. ‘Besides, it’d be a pity if you get killed- you have nice dimples.’

Ahadi hasn’t moved- he’s frozen and Sk’jin is about to take pity on him and maybe have him escorted out but he’s surprised when the Mwenzini takes a step forward and throws himself on the cushion in front of Sk’jin, looking heavily disgruntled.

“What?” Sk’jin laughs, ‘Did you think I wouldn’t be able to see? To be honest I think everyone saw.’

Ahadi groans, hands pressing hard into the sockets of his eyes as though embarrassed. And embarrassed he was, the tips of his ears are red and his entire body curved inwards.

Sk’jin leans back, amused as he watches Ahadi continue to bow his head in shame.

“So- how do you want to do this?” Sk’jin grins.

Ahadi looks away from his hands, wariness and hesitance in his expression.

‘Do you want to stay and do you want to go back to the Venture Unit? We could even stage a whole escape scene for you,’ Sk’jin leans in, feeling excited as he plots, ‘We could say I used my cool creepy Khol’isa eye magic on you and made you spill- but you were too cool to be hypnotized for too long and defeated me! Then you punch me across the face, not in a way that leaves scars- y’know, aesthetic type shit! And then ya get runnin’ off, and we can give ya a TeorSer and ya can fake it and fire off’n randomly and so ya have the fire count’n all- then ya steal a Transporter’n warp off!’

Sk’jin is standing, arms flailing as he describes this A+ plan to Mwenzini who looks thoroughly shocked.

‘-I uh-’ he stammers out.

Sk’jin leans in, their faces inches apart.

‘Or,’ he lowers his voice and his hands reach behind Ahadi, balancing himself on the wall behind the Mwenzini. ‘You can stay here, and learn how things work- disappear from the Venture Unit- or you can continue to report me back, I don’t care- they can’t do anything to me anyways.’

‘They can,’ he argues back almost instantly.

‘You’re so cute,’ Sk’jin elegantly seats himself on the Mwenzini’s lap and he’s amused that now he’s getting a reaction. But it’s more out of sheer embarrassment than anything else. ‘You have so much to learn- stay, and I will teach you.’

Honestly, Sk’jin is expecting this young Agent to say no. Because who would say yes?

Sk’jin might not be a violent pirate or a cliché uncultured brute of a Being, but that didn’t mean he was incapable of making the choices and decisions he had to in order to get him here, as the leader of the most powerful pirating network in the Underverse.

Because Sk’jin was more than capable, more than ready, to execute some of the most morally questionable acts in order to fulfill his plans. And he didn’t heed the Underverse and their laws, or the Venture Unit and their requests to ally with him.

And that’s what scared the Venture Unit the most.

Sk’jin was not only one of the largest pirating networks in the Underverse, but was the largest private pirating network. He had no connections or inner dealings with the other pirates. He was not funded by any political force or organization. His network was nameless, closed-off, and station-free. They had no base, no specified location they gathered in.

And for centuries the Venture Unit has tried to stop them, or infiltrate them. But Sk’jin has captured the agents and sent them back on their merry way over 30 times. Sometimes they called it the Khol’isa Internship and no one has ever passed.

‘Yes.’

Sk’jin takes an embarrassingly long time to realize what Ahadi has just said.

‘I mean-’ the Mwenzini stammers. ‘I mean, uh, I’d like to stay. And learn.’

He looks so nervous, warm brown eyes wide and panicked. Like he’s not sure if Sk’jin is going to kill him or not. Or if this was all a trick or not.

And it’s not a trick or lure. Because Sk’jin isn’t interested in finding out what the Venture Unit wants from him now.

Sk’jin has never been interested in this ridiculous state of political agenda or deep-state issues or romanticized notions of espionage. Sk’jin is interested in knowing the minds of Beings. He doesn’t want to understand it, he just likes to know.

It is what brought him here so far, and it’s what Sk’jin guesses is the reason why he’s been so successful in leading a pirating network- because he didn’t have any intentions of doing so.
And right now- he just wants to know this Being- know his mind, his intentions, his actions.

Sk’jin smooshes the Mwenzini’s cheeks together the moment he recovers and places a kiss on his puckered lips.

‘You’re so precious I can’t believe this- they’re sending babies- literal babies to me,’ Sk’jin trills delightfully before he gets off with flourish.

‘Uh-’ Ahadi looks like he’s about to argue back but also terrified that Sk’jin might turn around and maybe slice him. Sk’jin yanks him off of the sitting area and drags him towards the doorway and out to the hallway. Ahadi makes a terrified sound behind him.

‘Oh I know you’re like, 240 sols old- still a baby by my calculations,’ Sk’jin shrugs before he adds, ‘Come along- I’ll give you a tour of the place! And please- for the love of everything beautiful,- meaning my face, pick up on your acting-.’

‘Jin!’

A young voice shrilly shrieks and Sk’jin is already ready.

Out pops out a young Ožkan, glistening blue skin blushing pink around the still soft horns adorning his head from exertion, bright eyes sparkling and his hands outstretched.

Sk’jin catches him and hoists him up into the air, tail, horns, hooves and all just as the loud clopping sounds of another Ožkan comes rounding up the corner.

‘Oh- Captain,’ Mri wheezes out a greeting before glaring at her son in Sk’jin’s arms. ‘I’d like to request a direct order from you.’

‘Oh? Does it have something to do with this one?’ Sk’jin leans back away from the Ožkan’s curious hands that always aim straight for his horns.

‘Yes,’ Mri glares unimpressed at her son, ‘He refuses to bathe.’

‘Ilya!’ Sk’jin holds the lanky boy at arm’s length, leveling him with a comic reprimanding look.

‘What did I say about hygiene when you’re on my ship.’

‘That it should be everyone’s priority,’ the little Ožkan mumbles, eyes turned down.

‘Are you disobeying the laws of the ship?’

‘…no.’

‘So does that mean you’re going to bathe?’

‘…yes.’

‘Good boy- listen to your mother you hear me?’

‘Yes Jin.’

Sk’jin hands over the little Ožkan over to his mother who gives him a grateful smile and a roll of her eyes before she notices Ahadi.

‘Ah- hello! Intern?’ she waves at the Mwenzini.
‘The freshest of them all,’ Sk’jin grins. ‘Isn’t that right?’

Sk’jin could laugh because Ahadi looks frozen again but then he recovers quickly (not quick enough but hey, he was learning a little) and replies with a winning dimpled smile (that takes Sk’jin back by surprise) and says, ‘I heard great stories from the other interns- had to try and see for myself.’

Mri chuckles, hoisting Ilya on her hip properly, ‘Oh yes they had the time of their lives didn’t they Cap?’

‘Only the best,’ Sk’jin winks at Ahadi who has lost all of his nervousness and actually even winks back, dimple deepening on his cheek.

Interesting.

‘I look forward to it.’

Mri actually giggles and Ilya waves at them from his mother’s back.

‘I’d give that a solid 6 out of 10,’ Sk’jin remarks as he walks ahead, Ahadi skipping a step to catch up. ‘Don’t panic- always be prepared.’

It’s a bit cliché and honestly expected because Sk’jin can sense the nervous energy emanating from the Mwenzini in growing volume since he stepped in, so it’s easy to sidestep the slim carbon-dagger that retracts out from under Ahadi’s sleeves.

Sk’jin is quick to disarm and shove him against the nearby wall.

‘You’re going to have to try harder if you really want to kill me or get yourself killed,’ Sk’jin smiles. ‘We’re a pretty tolerant bunch here with years of experience-‘

Sk’jin deftly blocks the punch and knee jab, not breaking his speech.

‘-and I will not hesitate to leave you stranded in an isolated moon with sub-par atmospheric levels where you will die from a combination of slow asphyxiation, incineration, and dehydration. So be a good boy, and enjoy your internship until your masters pick you up or you escape during our next fuel-restock.’

Ahadi’s eyes are not filled with fear or nervousness- instead they’re filled with a sense of intrigue, some confusion, and something Sk’jin can only label as begrudging respect.

The sound of the TeorSer trigger being set to stun-mode alerts them of another presence in the hallway.

‘Captain.’

‘Ah! Ti-!’ Sk’jin steps away and beams his best smile at Ti, his Navigator. Ahadi slides off of the wall to the ground rather gracelessly.

‘Enjoying your walk?’ she asks politely, pointing her TeorSer at Ahadi. ‘Need me to handle the trash for you?’

‘Honey, it’s rude to address the intern like that!’ Sk’jin scolds with a grin before reaching down and yanking Ahadi up. ‘Ti, meet Ahadi- Ahadi, this is Ti- she knows how to kick your ass in 50 ways with one finger!’
Ti’s sharp jet-black eyes scans Ahadi without even attempting to mask her intention.

‘51,’ she adds, ‘He’s got a little more give- more room to work with.’

Ahadi doesn’t know if he should be offended, scared, or amused. His facial expression is a combination of all.

‘Ready to launch?’ Sk’jin asks, fixing his cuffs properly before carefully rearranging his hair. Ti reaches up fixes his bangs for him while replying, ‘Yeah- we’re at green. Are we clear to leave? Or are we dumping trash?’

‘Hm,’ Sk’jin side-eyes Ahadi who is watching them carefully. ‘I don’t know- do we take out the trash Ahadi?’

Ahadi’s expression is unreadable for a fraction of a second, brown eyes blank before he looks away with a shrug and a smile and says, ‘I don’t know- seems like there’s a lot around here. Might take a while.’

‘Can I dispose of him?’ Ti asks, her tone deadpan.

‘No no,’ Sk’jin laughs pushing her forward and away. ‘I’ll come up in a bit and we can leave.’

‘If you say so.’ Ti refuses to budge, still eyeing down Ahadi.

‘Go- you worry-butt.’

‘Really? Worry-butt?’ she repeats, finally looking away from Ahadi.

‘You want “worry-ass” because I can say that-’

She scoffs out a huffy laugh and walks away, middle finger high above her head.

‘Right- that was Ti,’ Sk’jin points after his Navigator. ‘She’s great!’

‘You said that they weren’t loyal to you- that they were loyal to the ship- the code,’ Ahadi blurts out. ‘That was loyalty to you.’

‘Not to me,’ Sk’jin shakes his head and crosses his arm around Ahadi’s though it’s not before handing him back the carbon-knife. ‘My crew are not loyal to me. You see, loyalty to the ship and the Code means wanting what’s best for it- and what’s best for it,’ Sk’jin bows his head elegantly. ‘Is of course, myself.’

‘You are?’ Ahadi asks incredulously before he seems to realize what he’s just asked and looks like he’s 5 seconds from throwing himself out of the ship, eyes widened with horror.

Sk’jin laughs, shifting his arm around so that it wrapped around the Mwenzini’s waist and draws him close. He tiptoes just a little to whisper in his ear.

‘Honey, I’m the best thing you’ll ever see.’
Ahadi is, to an extent comic relief for Sk’jin.

He’s never been more entertained by the behavior, actions, or words of a Being the way he’s amused with the Mwenzini.

There are moments where he seems entirely capable, and in full control of his situation and surroundings. And then a moment later he plunges into confusion and extraordinary clumsiness that Ti was certain was an act for a while.

But it’s not.

Unfortunately.

Sk’jin is not amused when he looks down at the sight of the tall Mwenzini, prostrated on the ground, Ilya seated atop of him, surrounded by countless shards of an extremely expensive and rare artifact Sk’jin had been keeping for a good bargain.

‘Listen- even I’m not worth that,’ Sk’jin points at the seemingly dull looking fragments of the soot-like clay on the ground.

Ahadi sighs heavily, glancing over at Ilya who looks down at him with wide yellow eyes, a pleading look to them.

‘I guess Captain, you should punish me as you see fit.’

‘You’re very eager aren’t you?’ Sk’jin grins as the CleanBots roll in, removing the now worthless piles of ancient artifact dust on the ground.

‘Only for what you have to offer,’ he replies. It would be cheeky, if his tone wasn’t entirely deadpan.

Sk’jin laughs heartily and helps him stand before lifting Ilya into his arms and walking away.

‘Wait- you aren’t going to do anything?’ the Mwenzini looks understandably confused.

‘What’s done is done,’ Sk’jin shrugs. ‘I’ll make sure you pay though!’

But as time went on, and Ahadi started feeling more comfortable, wariness no longer stuttering his speech and behavior, his real personality started to show. And it was both amusing as well as intriguing.

For someone who grew up in the environment he did, with the history he lived in, and the involvement he had within the Venture Unit, he sure as fuck lacked awareness in what happened in the Underverse. Not that he was entirely unaware- he just seemed thoroughly taken aback by some of the things they discussed or some of the stories exchanged inside the Bridge.

‘Why don’t you do something about it?’ he asks one day.

Sk’jin looks up from his screen, lounging on his chair at the Bridge.

‘What do you mean?’ Sk’jin inquires.

Ahadi looks troubled for a moment before he approaches Sk’jin to squat down next to him.

‘I know I lack a lot of things- experience, understanding- I have a lot to learn and I will keep on learning,’ he pauses, gnawing at his lower lip. ‘But this is something you know- you live this reality and you know how to deal with it. Don’t you want to stop it?’

Sk’jin thinks it’s commendable to be optimistic but he knows it’s not realistic.

And it wasn’t just an age or era or progress thing. Sk’jin has lived through everything. And optimism wasn’t something that got him through.

‘If you live with that mentality, you’re going to die a brokenhearted Being,’ Sk’jin says simply. ‘Life comes with a price- that you have to return it after a period of time. Peace comes with a price- even death comes with a price. Everything in life comes with a price that you have to pay- or make someone else pay. And when I do something, I do it in a way where I know I can pay the price, to the best of my abilities, without putting the ship in danger.’

Sk’jin glances out of the window of the Bridge, eyes latching onto the sight of the display of lights, bright and colourful- almost like a nebula in motion from this distance. It was anything but.

‘We’re just…going to fly past? Not do anything to help?’ Ahadi looks incredulous. ‘Those are innocent Beings! They’re being attacked for no reason!’

‘The cargo-freight under attack at this very moment carries in it raw materials and resources that the Cősăn pirating network are taking from it in order to supply the Vao’c Defence Brigade, which we all are aware are trying to overthrow their invaders who have enslaved half of their planet despite being lawfully protected under the GLA,’ Sk’jin reels off.

‘But that cargo-freight has innocent Beings in it,’ Ahadi emphasizes. ‘The result does not justify the means.’

‘And who are we to state that?’ Sk’jin asks. ‘Who are we to place judgment or decisions? If we stop them here- the Defence Brigade will lose their resources to build ships and defence weapons- entire races of Beings will be wiped out- legally, I might add,’ Sk’jin pauses before continuing, ‘Cargo-freights are operated by approximately 150 to 200 Beings. They all have families, friends, loved ones who no doubt depend on them. In fact, everyone you know or ever met is like this- we all have loved ones, we all have friends. We see beggars on the streets and we give them some of our loose change, hoping to help them- and maybe they do better with those units- or maybe they use it to buy illegal drugs and dope themselves away- what do we know?’

‘We know that there are Beings there that need our help,’ Ahadi states firmly. ‘Sk’jin, this doesn’t even require violence- we clearly outnumber and outmatch them- they would run away at once!’

‘Would you be willing to pay the price for your actions?’ Sk’jin asks. He ignores the way Ti’s head snaps up, eyes narrowing as she leans in to listen intently.

‘I would!’ he nods defiantly.

‘Then give the order,’ Sk’jin shrugs.

Ahadi does a double take and so does everyone else in the Bridge.

‘What-’

‘If that’s what you feel- and you believe you can pay the price for it, then give the order,’ Sk’jin gestures towards the Communication Port. ‘Announce it, if you want.’

Ahadi is gaping at him, but he doesn’t look away. Then slowly, he shakes his head.
‘I can’t pay it.’ He shakes his head.

‘You can’t,’ Sk’jin agrees. ‘But I can. Ti, send a warning to the Cósăn’s, telling them to back off. Call the GLA as well- where the fuck are they even?’

Ahadi doesn’t move but Sk’jin can feel his eyes on him as he readies the ship for battle mode. The rest of the Bridge follows through his actions quickly and without question.

‘Ahadi- you wanna man the Medic Port?’ Dariga, their highly skilled and illegally trained medic offers, standing up as well on his purely bionic limbs. ‘I think we might need a few extra hands yes?’

Ahadi blinks at last, looking back and forth between Sk’jin and Dariga before nodding and following the portly medic.

‘Why are you doing this?’ Ti asks him the moment the two leave the bridge, spiky eyebrow raised in question.

‘What do you mean?’

‘That,’ she nods in the direction of the doorway where Ahadi, ‘You know that it’s all an act right?’

Oh Sk’jin knew that all right.

It was a good act. A simple yet good act.

One that didn’t require a good player or actor.

Because it was a game Sk’jin knew how to play, and he knew how to use to his benefit.

The only difference here being Sk’jin knew the game settings but Ahadi didn’t.

The Venture Unit would never send anyone this incredibly inexperienced for no reason. No, they saw something in him that they thought they could use against Sk’jin. And it wasn’t to usurp him or overthrow his network.

The Venture Unit sent over this young Being, filled with a frustratingly stoic sense of idealism, well-intended propaganda speeches, and hopeful outlook to life to influence Sk’jin and sway him to join forces with the Venture Unit.

Sk’jin wasn’t the largest pirating network because of the number of ships he commanded or the fear he evoked with his presence. It was in his presence of the literal meaning behind the word network.

Sk’jin wanted to know a lot of things.

And by knowing a lot of things, he gathered limitless data, sources, resources, and information regarding almost everything in both the Undiverse and Known Universe.

And all the Venture Unit had to tell Ahadi was that Sk’jin was in a position where he could change all of that. Where he could shift the axis of this delicate balance and finally put an end to the criminal injustice, to the senseless death, and to the other Venture Unit propaganda Sk’jin doesn’t keep track of.

And Ahadi, who happened to be a genuinely well-intending Being who suffered only the ending of his planet’s brutal conquest and saw only the revival of their basic rights, was already filled with the desire to do better, and was easily roped in to push their attempt to gain access to Sk’jin’s network.

‘Are you just playing around with him?’ Ti asks carefully.

‘I’m not,’ Sk’jin replies truthfully before he can stop himself.

‘Then why keep him here? Why entertain his ideas? Why actually follow through with them?’

‘Because I want what’s best for us- for the Beings we protect in here, for the families who call all of this their home, for the places and planets and people who need us,’ Sk’jin replies. ‘For homes lost and not found.’

‘But will this help?’ Ti asks, nodding towards the battle up ahead, no longer appearing like a distant nebula as they approached it.

‘I don’t know,’ Sk’jin replies truthfully. ‘We’ve always done it like this before—just never beyond what we knew, or who we knew.’

‘Isn’t that what’s keeping us safe?’

‘If this is a change we’re going to be keeping, then it’s one that I won’t make alone,’ Sk’jin smiles at his Navigator. ‘I would hear each and every one speak.’

Ti smiles at him, head tilted, ‘So if you always knew about that, did you also always know about the fact that he’s fallen in love with you?’

Sk’jin’s head snaps up so quickly he swears he hears his neck crack.

‘What?’ he asks sharply.

‘Ahadi. He’s fallen in love with you— or well, is falling in love with you.’

‘…you say that too easily.’ Sk’jin waves aside her comment dismissively. How absurd. Sk’jin makes sure that their shield levels are at maximum.

‘Because it’s easy to see. You’re telling me you don’t see it?’ it’s her turn to sound incredulous. ‘He’s always coughing around you. It’s funny, and embarrassing to witness.’

‘What do you mean he’s coughing— he’s clearing his throat— got an infection or somethin’,’ Sk’jin really doesn’t understand why Ti was pushing this. It made no sense. ‘sides, he’s always coughing.’

‘Yeah— in front of you. It’s his nervous tick, fucking Spaces,’ she rolls her eyes before getting up.

‘And where the fuck d’you think you’re goin’?’ Sk’jin calls after her with annoyance.

‘Somewhere I don’t have to witness your stupid ass!’ she calls back before adding, ‘And maybe check up on your boyfriend’s overzealous ass!’

‘Not my boyfriend!’ Sk’jin screams back.
And now Sk’jin wants to know.

And maybe he’s not doing this in the most advisable way, but he’s determined and the Khol’isa have always lived a rather reckless life, being nearly immortal and all that shit. But Sk’jin has never been known for his subtlety even though he can be when the situation needed it. So he’s extremely obvious, to the point where Ti actually physically leaves the room whenever Sk’jin leans over against Ahadi flirtatiously, fingers trailing up his skin. He’ll press up excessively close, lips moving close to his ears.

Ahadi begins to stammer, as per usual, escaping with panicked smiles and an obvious comic cry for an explanation as he hides behind various members of the crew who were too used to Sk’jin’s random antics to care. But Sk’jin never gains any evidence of any attraction and so he proudly states to Ti, gloating over her mistake.

She just levels him with a blank stare that looks a little patronizing. It irks Sk’jin greatly.

‘Spaces, you really have no idea do you,’ she sighs heavily before she reaches up to grapple his neck and put him in a headlock.

‘Shit like that don’t work with decent folk,’ she grunts as Sk’jin tries to struggle against her hold. It was futile of course- Ti was ridiculously strong and Sk’jin isn’t really trying either.

‘Who the fuck are decent folk?’ Sk’jin wheezes out, back aching from the angle he’s bent at.

‘Sounds fake-‘

She squeezes tighter, making Sk’jin actually squeak.

‘Uh-‘

Ahadi walks in, brown eyes widening a little before narrowing. He takes a careful step back, ‘I uh-will come back?’

‘It’s fine,’ Sk’jin tries to smile but okay, was Ti actually trying to kill him? ‘Ti and I were, you know-‘ he clears his throat with difficulty. ‘-just fooling around.’

Ti releases him, shoving him towards the Mwenzini who catches him and sets him upright at once.

‘What’s up intern?’ she grins.

It was funny because Ahadi has been with them for nearly 5 sols at this point, but Ti and a few others still liked to call him intern; either just to fool around, or sometimes remind everyone exactly who he was. Trust was not easily gained, and neither was it freely given. It was earned, and though in the past 5 sols, Ahadi has managed to win over and gain almost everyone’s trust and respect, a healthy level of wariness and caution still existed. And it would probably remain so as well.

‘I found something,’ he reports grimly.

‘…is it my collection of Heliords because I swear it’s just a hobby,’ Ti cracks a wide smile.

‘Your what-‘ Ahadi is distracted for a moment before Ti smacks him upside head.
‘OW!’

‘Stop whining- what did you find?’

Ahadi rubs at the side of his head, the skin on his nape actually turning red from the force of Ti’s smack. Sk’jin coos and presses his hand over the spot, soothing the sting gently. Ahadi actually leans closer, turning his body away from Ti’s small and powerful form.

It’s funny, seeing these two tall Beings attempting to put space between themselves and a Being who if really measured properly, could barely look over their shoulders.

‘Have you guys ever been to Orvan?’

‘Orvan? It’s in Trunga right?’ Ti asks.

‘Orvan?’ Sk’jin doesn’t register that his hand is still caressing Ahadi’s hair, fingers combing through the now, thankfully, longer grey strands. ‘Nopes.’

‘Eh,’ he shrugs, ‘Not surprising.’

It’s Sk’jin’s turn to smack him on the side of the head and Ahadi stands by the opposite wall, at a clear distance away from Sk’jin and Ti.

‘Anyways- just received a message from Açkın- more like Bjegli received a message from Açkın- and it was…’ Ahadi looks greatly troubled.

Açkın was one of their “free-lancers” as Sk’jin referred to them. They were the equivalent of Venture Unit agents that roamed about, going through different networks and working mainly in infiltration and information gathering.

Bjegli on the other hand was part of Sk’jin’s tech crew. They had picked him up a few sols ago, barely alive, having escaped the great slave-wars of his planet’s federation through, ironically, a slaver-ship. He was a brilliant mind and Sk’jin was quick to take him in. They came to learn the terrors of his federation and respected his wishes to be taken as far away as possible. He now lead the technical team and was crucial to any large-party “excursions” they initiated.

‘What is it?’

‘He claims that Bjegli’s family is still alive- and that he saw them being taken into Orvan.’

Sk’jin would have doubted this information if it weren’t for the fact that it came from Açkın.

‘Why Orvan? That makes no sense,’ Ti frowns.

‘Yeah- that’s what I asked too but-’ Ahadi looks beyond disturbed at this point, ‘Do…do you know about the Isbahaysiga Alliance?’

Sk’jin is already shaking his head.

‘We’re not going anywhere near the Alliance,’ Sk’jin says at once.

‘So you know what’s going on but you won’t do anything?!’ Ahadi demands. ‘This isn’t even a random thing- this is Bjegli- this is his family- and it’s not just that! You don’t need justification or a connection to want to do the right things-’

‘Stop being such a cliché protagonist,’ Sk’jin snaps.
‘A what?!’

Ahadi had a quick temper, easily riled up if you knew where to attack him.

‘You’re just like every other protagonist that is a massive hit for some reason- unreasonably emotional but it’s excusable because they come from a place of honour and well-intention- well-intention doesn’t save shit out here!’ Sk’jin retorts back just as quickly. ‘We’re not involving ourselves in this because this is something we cannot afford to meddle in.’

Ahadi exhales out heavily, eyes narrowed as he studies Sk’jin.

‘I know you say we always have to pay a price- that we need to be aware of what we’re paying for and with what,’ Ahadi states. ‘But I have seen you make countless decisions and perform countless actions that goes against what you say!’

‘Don’t fucking tell me about my own decisions-’

‘-you keep yourself in this heightened position- as though you know everything, and yeah maybe you do,’ Ahadi shrugs, brown eyes flaring. ‘You’ve lived longer than all of us- I can see why you would think the way you do- see things the way you do-’

‘-because I know-’

‘I’m not saying you don’t!’ Ahadi hisses back. ‘I am saying that it’s stopping you from doing what you could do- you claim you know all of these things, you have the answer and prediction for everything that could possibly take place- yet you never use it to your advantage. You just let it be- and for what? You claim the crew is loyal to the ship- to the Bridge, the code- it’s bullshit- they’re loyal to you- do you know why I’m so sure of this? Because I’m loyal to you!’

Sk’jin takes a physical step back.

‘I see the decisions you make, and yes, they’re for the benefit of the ship, for the Beings here. You’re more than just an asset needed for this ship- you said you were the best thing for this ship but you aren’t,’ Ahadi spits out. ‘If we were really discussing who is the most important it’s Ti- or Nambike, but the crew are not loyal to them- they’re loyal to you-’

‘Did you know that the Venture Unit is in league with the Alliance- that they profit off of the cruelty and oppression the Alliance weaves throughout the Universe?’ Sk’jin demands. ‘I don’t know what you were told, but that’s the hard truth. And we’re not going anywhere near that because the Alliance is bigger than you can imagine- there are things bigger than just hoping to do the right thing. So yeah- I want consequential meaning to motivate me to action- because if I do take action, I need to account for the other lives I might be altering as a result of my involvement- of our involvement. I need to account everyone’s lives involved here- and how each of them are going to affect other lives- so no. I am not going anywhere near here. Bjemli is free to do as he pleases and he knows this. Because he respects the code- “we do not challenge anything larger than us”.’

‘So will you tell him face-to-face-’

‘I already did and I will. Again,’ Sk’jin cuts across.

‘You’re being a coward-’

‘That’s not going to work,’ Sk’jin snaps. ‘You do not live life thinking about bravery, about courage, about what’s good or bad, what’s ethically correct or not- you think about survival.’
'That’s quite the saying to live by,’ Ahadi retorts, ‘-is that how your people survived-!’

Sk’jin doesn’t even have to touch Ahadi.

The Khol’isa lengthens suddenly, his entire being emanating heat and his features pulling. A bright liquid flame seems to erupt around his horns and his eyes are glaring red. Ahadi is pressed to the wall but he’s not looking away.

No, he’s challenging Sk’jin’s anger head on, his own eyes bright and furious.

‘Do not-’ Sk’jin hisses, voice layered and low-pitched. ‘-speak of it as though you were there.’

‘Captain.’ Ti says in a low warning tone behind him.

Sk’jin takes a step back, returning to normal and Ahadi slips down the wall a little from the lack of pressure pushing him. Sk’jin takes a careful and deep breath, sweeping his hair back around his horns that still felt hot to the touch even under his own skin.

‘Tone down the hero-complex,’ Sk’jin says simply. ‘It’ll get you killed.’

Ahadi walks out without another word.

‘I normally agree with you,’ Ti begins and Sk’jin already doesn’t want to hear it.

‘Do you think I was too harsh?’

‘Yes,’ Ti shrugs and adds, ‘Besides, he doesn’t want to be a hero- sure he’s a little naïve, and just because he wants to see something good done, just because he wants to see something change for the better, doesn’t mean he’s an idiot- it doesn’t mean he’s not realistic. He is realistic- he’s young and a little rash but he’s smart. He knows what he’s going. He’s not just an idiot.’

‘I’m not saying he’s an idiot-’

‘-well you’re making him feel like one. You do realize what you’re doing right?’ Ti raises an eyebrow. ‘You’re in denial. And this is how you’re handling it. You’re pushing him away.’

‘This has nothing to do with how I feel about him-’

‘But it does,’ Ti shrugs dismissively. ‘I know how you feel about the Alliance- but this is Bjegli we’re talking about. Stop thinking out of your ass for a moment and go cool down.’

‘I don’t think-‘

‘I said go cool down, fucking Spaces your eyes are still glaring,’ she squints looking away.

Sk’jin curses and storms out.

He doesn’t remember the last time he was this upset. He ends up pacing for hours, his mind abuzz with thoughts that basically spell out !????????????????????????????!!!!!!! with a lot of anger. He only stops when he gets a cramp on one leg and he instead ends up limping aggressively out of the Engines Room, grimacing in greeting at his crew who know when to keep their distance from their Captain. This in turn makes Sk’jin mad, and he huffs off. He’s thinking of maybe cooking something, angrily mumbling ingredients under his breath when he nearly trips over Ilya.

‘Jin!’
‘Spaces— didn’t see y’there,’ Sk’jin grumbles as he rights himself before he looks down at the young carefully. ‘What are you doing down here?’

‘I am not down here, I’m in the middle of being here, I am headed up!’

Children had so much cheek these days. It almost brings a smile on Sk’jin’s face. But he masks his anger for a moment, not wanting to mar anything for the young Ožkan.

‘…right— so why are you in the middle of being here? Shouldn’t you be in bed?’ Sk’jin asks sternly, tapping his foot.

‘I will! But I’m going for my secret meeting!’ he whispers in a conspiring tone.

Sk’jin crouches down, lowering his tone as well.

‘A secret! In my ship?’ Sk’jin pretends to be aghast. ‘Whatever do you do?’

‘It’s a secret!’ Ilya giggles. ‘Just between me, and Ahadi!’

‘Is that so?’ Sk’jin’s interest perks up.

‘Yeah!’

‘Well then— run along and make sure you get back to your mother,’ Sk’jin nods down the hall. ‘And be more quiet if it’s a secret!’

Ilya nods obediently and salutes Sk’jin before clopping off just as noisily.

Naturally, Sk’jin follows.

‘You’re late,’ Ahadi scolds at once.

Ilya giggles as he clops faster and there’s a grunt of a sound. As though Ilya threw himself at the Mwenzini, giggling in the process.

‘I ran into Jin! Like really ran into him!’

‘Oh?’

‘Yeah! And I told him I had a secret meeting to attend!’

‘Is that so?’

And Sk’jin already knows that Ahadi knows he’s there. But he doesn’t go away. Instead he stays and continues to listen.

‘Hm! Do you like horns?’

‘I think your horns are cool and pretty.’

‘Not as pretty as Jin’s,’ Ilya says in a matter of fact tone. ‘But almost there.’

‘Almost?’ Sk’jin can hear laughter in Ahadi’s tone.

‘Yeah! I’ll beat him when I grow older and become captain!’

‘Wow! That’s so cool! You’ll be a great captain,’ Ahadi laughs.
’I’ll be better than Jin!’

’How will you be better than Jin?’ Ahadi asks.

’Anyone can sleep anytime they want,’ Ilya replies gravely. ‘And I will buy a big moon!’

’Why a moon?’

’So that my mum has a house to live in.’

’Can I come live in that house too?’

’Don’t you have a house?’

’This is my house- but I think I want another one too.’

Sk’jin doesn’t know why he suddenly wants to cry.

Ahadi knew of his reality, of the many realities that existed within the Universe.

And just because one was different from the other, didn’t mean it wasn’t as real- or as important.

Just because Ahadi didn’t suffer through the oppression of his people didn’t mean he didn’t know how it felt. It didn’t mean he never saw how broken his people became- it meant he could see the potential for them to heal, and to create a better future, a stronger growth, a safe place for those who would come later.

Just because he didn’t see the gritty dirty aspects of the Venture Unit didn’t mean he didn’t know enough to understand how so many aspects of the Universe worked. It didn’t mean it discredited his thoughts and ideas.

And just because he still saw hope, and still saw good, and could still see a possibility in the future, where a better reality could exist, didn’t mean he wasn’t aware of what he would have to pay in order to see it through.

The only difference between their way of thinking was that Ahadi held on to the idea of a home, whereas Sk’jin long abandoned his, trapped in neon nightmares.

’We’re going to Orvan,’ Sk’jin states as he walks into the Bridge a few hours later. ‘Let’s see what we can do eh?’

The Bridge falls into silence.

’The Alliance has taken a lot from all of us in here. Be it directly or through what we have seen or heard. While we cannot change what has been done, or cannot hope to alter much within our current capacities, we can and will create a way to return Bjegli to his family, and in turn free those we can.’ Sk’jin leans against the back of his seat, pushing back his hair elegantly. ‘For anyone who doesn’t wish to participate, as usual I will not force you, for those who choose to stay, thank you.’

’The Alliance as in the Isbahaysiga Alliance?’ Nambike asks carefully.

’Are there any other Alliances that we know of?’ Sk’jin winks.

Ahadi simply strides forward, away from his station and practically lifts Sk’jin into the air with the force of his embrace. Sk’jin can’t help but squeak in surprise, and to his extreme chagrin, discovers that he’s blushing. The entire Bridge erupts in cheer and to Sk’jin’s surprise, the enthusiasm mounts. Sk’jin is embraced by a majority of the Bridge crew and he doesn’t know how to feel.

He knows that his crew aren’t idiots. That they well understood what all of this could trigger. How no matter how much they plan everything, they would meet instances where they would have no control over any of the things they encounter. He knows each and every single Being in there, what steps they took, what steps they were forced to make, and what steps they couldn’t take, to get here.

‘My criminal record is going to have its own individual database at this point,’ Sk’jin grumbles though he’s smiling as Nambike, in a rare display of affection, hugs him. Then true to her fashion, she punches Sk’jin (he’d been expecting it, so he’s not quite winded as her fist meets his side) playfully.

‘Eh- you enjoy it,’ Nambike shrugs with a grin as she walks out of the Bridge, clearly to alert her platoon. Sk’jin doesn’t know how to handle the looks of excitement or of what he used to call “naïve protagonist expression” on the faces of his crew. So he quietly exits the Bridge instead.

He’s thinking of maybe taking a bath- he wasn’t exactly at his best, not having performed his daily cosmetic and hygienic routine. But he’s stopped by familiar footsteps hurrying behind him, and a pair of arms enveloping him into a hug that said more than words could.

‘If I get killed or arrested I’m beating your ass into a black-hole,’ Sk’jin manages to say, patting Ahadi’s arms around him, eyes threatening to close. This was a risky decision; too risky, in fact. And it’s stupid because Sk’jin can predict this- he can predict it down to the point where everything would go wrong- how everyone would react- and how much they would have to pay, how much they would have to lose. But with the sound of cheer from the Bridge behind him, and the warmth pressed to his back, the very notion of worry completely fades out.

And Sk’jin would be angry at himself, but he can’t.

‘That won’t happen.’ Ahadi grins, his smile too close to Sk’jin’s.

‘Oh yeah? What makes you think so?’ Sk’jin can’t even attempt to be flirty at this moment because he’s suddenly too caught up, too aware-

‘Because I know you,’ Ahadi whispers quietly, like it’s a secret.

And he’s right.

They discover more than they bargained for in Orvan and though Sk’jin doesn’t get killed or caught, he does obtain a few other notes to his criminal record. A Class 2 Arson, a Class 3 attempted murder, and a Class 2 defamation of the Prime Minister of the Orvan State of Tui.

But Sk’jin is also proven right.

Because they were unable to do what they originally set out to do.

Ahadi’s head is lowered, helping Sk’jin with the burn on his arm from the fire the latter had started as a means of escaping from the burning Tui parliament house.

‘It’s not your fault. Some things aren’t meant to work out,’ Sk’jin tells him gently. ‘None of us were caught, none of us died. And Bjegli stayed behind out of his own volition. He made his own decision.’

‘But they weren’t there.’
‘No. But what’s left now is to respect Bjegli’s decision.’

‘You’re not surprised.’

‘I’m not.’

‘Because you knew this would happen?’

‘I cannot always know what’s going to happen- nothing we do can ever be predicted accurately,’ Sk’jin tells him honestly.

‘But you knew.’

Sk’jin nods.

‘Why?’

Sk’jin chuckles.

‘I’m not a hero, or a protagonist.’ Sk’jin studies the burn on his forearm. It was healing well enough. ‘I am just living- not even aiming to do good, just simply out of selfishness and the need to know more. I do what I want to do, because it’s what I want to do. Nothing more, nothing less.’

Ahadi presses his lips together in a thin line. Even like this his dimples show. Patting him on the cheek, Sk’jin jumps off of the Medical Bed.

‘But that’s not you.’

Sk’jin laughs before leaning up to kiss the Mwenzini on his cheek, poking at where he knew his dimples were. Sk’jin doesn’t want to sound cliché but it is what it is.

‘You don’t know me.’

‘I do,’ Ahadi says earnestly. ‘And I will make you see it.’

‘See what?’

Ahadi smiles softly, looking down briefly as he says, ‘You.’

It’s always been described as the colour for passion.

For lust.

For love.

But Sk’jin doesn’t see it that way. And it’s definitely not what he sees either.

Instead it is gone. The bleeding edges of his vision, itching its way to paint his sight in the nightmarish hues of the Bloodmoon. It ebbs away into something else.

Something calm.
And it’s not as though Sk’jin finds himself “falling in love” or slipping into some fuzzy state of near delirious giddiness. He doesn’t suddenly look at Ahadi and see a new light. He doesn’t look at the Mwenzini and come to a sudden state of realization.

And even when Ahadi corners him in his own room, his expression unfathomable and his words quiet, Sk’jin still feels that calm.

‘Are…are you just toying with me?’ he asks carefully.

‘I’m not,’ Sk’jin replies. ‘You would know if I was.’

‘Would I?’

Sk’jin falls backwards with a groan. His back making popping sounds. He pats the bed next to him and Ahadi leans back, their arms brushing against each other’s.

‘I know why you’re here,’ Sk’jin states simply. ‘The real reason- not just the “internship”.’

Ahadi has greatly improved in his reactions and skills- either that or he’s already suspected Sk’jin to know.

‘If you did, why didn’t you drop me?’

‘At first I thought it’d be interesting to see,’ Sk’jin confesses. ‘I thought it’d be interesting to see the way you handled it, to see what you might see- knowledge, understanding, information- all of these are the same thing- the same idea basically, just seen through a different perspective. This perception, filtered through a Being, is what creates variations in thoughts, it’s what creates variety of information- it allows me to breakdown the data, and predict how it will be handled.’

‘So- I was just a study?’

‘Something like that,’ Sk’jin replies honestly. ‘But…well, you’re here now. You haven’t left, I haven’t kicked you out.’

Ahadi chuckles under his breath.

‘I know you know,’ he says quietly. ‘I know that you were trying to figure it out. It was probably Ti wasn’t it?’

Sk’jin exhales out slowly.

‘Yeah.’

‘So you weren’t playing with me?’

Sk’jin turns his head to find that Ahadi is already watching him. He looks away for a moment before rolling over to his side.

‘I…-‘ Sk’jin doesn’t know how to say any of this.

‘Can I kiss you?’

Sk’jin gawks for a moment, and he doesn’t know why he’s nodding.

Ahadi leans in and Sk’jin is caught mid-inhale, their lips pressing soft yet firm. Ahadi’s eyes are curious, hopeful, and expectant.
He’s asking a question, and despite not knowing the answer, Sk’jin responds with his lips.

Sk’jin is shocked at the way he completely loses his sense of self.

‘Wait-‘ Sk’jin doesn’t even push the Mwenzini away but Ahadi is quick to sit up, putting space between them.

‘I’m not-‘ Sk’jin can’t believe that he’s stammering. He sits up as well, dizzy with the warmth he was feeling, the way his body tingled pleasantly and for a shockingly clear moment, his vision is clear and untainted. ‘I uh-‘

Ahadi just smiles, leaning his cheek against Sk’jin’s- a gentle kiss of warmth, skin, and breath.

‘Yeah, I know,’ he smiles. ‘I’m sorry for making you uncomfortable.’

‘It’s- it’s not that-‘ Sk’jin can’t believe he’s stammering. Ahadi just smiles, nodding in understanding.

Sk’jin has never felt romantic interest in Beings- he’s never felt physical attraction despite knowing how to draw physical attraction. Despite knowing how other Beings were attracted to him. He knew what to do, how to behave, which postures to execute, to draw the attention of any and every one. He’s never met another Khol’isa outside of their ruined planet, so he doesn’t know how it was for them. It was never a thing Sk’jin felt an inclination for.

And it’s not as though he’s never experienced it. He has. But Sk’jin came to realize that it gave him nothing, and he felt nothing. Instead after a while, he felt wrong – and that was certainly not what he wanted. But kissing felt nice- and it wasn’t in the same sense or with the same intention as most would initiate or seek it. He could fake it, if needed. He could pretend to imitate lust because that was easy- because lust is self-generated and most Beings were too wrapped up in their own lust to determine whether or not it was consensual or even reciprocated by the other party.

Sk’jin kisses in trust- in a way that represented hope, patience, and care.

And it’s never out of lust or love.

When Sk’jin looks at Ahadi, he doesn’t feel the blushing rose of “first love”, he doesn’t see the flares of an all-consuming passion.

What he sees are warm brown eyes, open and trusting, still inexperienced and untainted by the decay of hope and expectation. Ahadi was so young, yet so old- his presence mutes the tint in Sk’jin’s vision. Cooling it down to a softened and pleasant desaturation.

‘I know,’ Ahadi says again quietly before chuckling a little, ‘And by the way, you’re going to have to do better than that if you really want to cause the effect you want.’

‘Effect?’

‘The whole sexy-seduction thing,’ Ahadi grins, his dimples making an appearance. ‘It’s…eh.’

‘The fuck does that mean-‘ Sk’jin starts throwing hands.

‘-it feels a little too trash-novel like!’ Ahadi ducks Sk’jin jabs with a laugh, falling back into the bed. Sk’jin crawls next to him, keeping himself elevated on his forearms.

‘Are you saying I’m too dramatic? It’s always worked,’ Sk’jin can feel his ears burning.
‘I don’t think you have to do anything more,’ Ahadi shrugs.

‘Yeah well- it worked on you,’ Sk’jin deadpans.

‘I knew you were trying to test and see how I felt. It was an act,’ Ahadi shrugs. ‘It was uncomfortable but funny. Besides, that’s not why… why I chose to come here.’

Sk’jin faceplants on the bed, not sure where to look.

‘Why are you here?’ Sk’jin can’t help himself from asking, voice muffled.

He feels a hand brushing through his hair, fingers carefully drawing over the outline of his horns. Sk’jin turns his head around and he can’t read the expression in Ahadi’s eyes.

‘Because you are you.’

*

Nothing changes really. Except sometimes Sk’jin finds himself curled around Ahadi in the Bridge, the Mwenzini dozing off against his shoulder. Sometimes he’ll carefully card through his hair, smiling in greeting as warm brown eyes blink sleepily at him. Sometimes he’ll feel a kiss on his cheek and Sk’jin catches a playful wink sent in his direction as the Mwenzini lopes off.

Sometimes Sk’jin catches Ahadi watching him, his expression beyond fond- beyond loyal, beyond anything Sk’jin has ever witnessed.

And he wishes he could give that to him, return the same.

‘You don’t have to,’ Ahadi looks disturbed when one day Sk’jin confesses as much. ‘I’m not waiting for you to do any of these- I’m not expecting anything. I just…’ he takes Sk’jin’s hand in his. ‘I am so honoured- that you trust me. That I am here, with you. You are you, and all of who you are, is what I respect, and I cherish.’

Sk’jin suddenly feels incredibly young and foolish- he feels as though he’s part of the trash-romance novels Ti secretly loved to read.

‘And you are who you are and you want things- need things- I can’t give those to you-’ Sk’jin tries. ‘I can’t even love Beings the way you’re supposed to-

‘-because it’s not yours to give,’ Ahadi stops him, making his way to kneel by his feet and taking both his hands between his darker ones. ‘Sk’jin, I meant it- who you are, is all of you. You are whole and complete- and just because there are others who are different than you, doesn’t make you incomplete- doesn’t mean I think you’re incomplete.’

‘You’re incredibly woke for someone who couldn’t accept that fact that the Venture Unit funded the Alliance.’

Ahadi gives him a really? look before he bursts out into laughter.

‘Trust me on this,’ Ahadi gives him his favorite smile- where both his dimples could be seen. Sk’jin removes his hands from Ahadi’s and carefully cups his face.
And maybe it was a mistake, because Sk’jin does trust him.

The Venture Unit comes around, poking about until Sk’jin corners one of the Division Heads and his bodyguards in an eatery in the Ghandhar System.

‘What is it.’ Sk’jin demands, not sparing his usual smile and greeting on the Division Head. The Head is gaping at him, drink dribbling out of his mouth unattractively as he tries not to jump in fright at having Sk’jin suddenly seated on the table next to him.

‘Oh uh-‘

‘Hello!’ Ahadi greets as he walks in, waving a hand.

The Division Head is trying his best to recover but Ahadi doesn’t give him a chance.

‘Here is my final report, as well as my formal letter of resignation,’ he says politely.

‘And adding to that I would like to say, again, that no, I don’t want to open my network to you,’ Sk’jin smiles beatifically for a second before getting up with a flourish and exiting the place as magnificently as he had entered it.

Ahadi grins at him, sun warm on his tanned skin, his eyes twinkling. Sk’jin feels as though they were children running about the market but he doesn’t care. Or at least he tries not to.

Nothing changes inside the ship either. Everyone had long accepted Ahadi and there wasn’t even a process of initiation. He was just there. And it made perfect sense.

But Sk’jin can’t enjoy it for too long. Because it was starting to get difficult to differentiate the nightmares from reality. Increasingly so.

And as usual Sk’jin pressed on, hoping that he’d be able to will it away.

‘You never learn,’ Nambike snorts when Sk’jin groans, rubbing at the base of his horns where they throbbed in pain. ‘It happens, without fail, like clockwork and you always freak out and wonder if you’re unwell. You’ve never been sick and yet you insist on getting every treatment from the medics.’

‘Don’t attack me like this on my own fuckin’ ship.’ Sk’jin gratefully accepts the pain-killer from Dariga who is also chuckling under his breath. ‘I’ll kick you out.’

‘With what, your fevered ass?’ Nambike scoffs.

‘Ahadi they’re being mean!’ Sk’jin whines at the Mwenzini who, having never experienced Sk’jin’s autophagocytosis, was in a sort of stunned state of research. Never has Sk’jin seen anyone more intrigued and horrified at the same time when he explained the general process.

‘You basically degenerate back into a cell?’

‘I guess you could say that it’s my-‘

‘-oh Spaces don’t-‘

‘-cell-ing point!’

Ahadi looks up from the screen he was perusing, Ilya seated on his shoulders.
‘I mean- I guess most would agree that you do have a hot ass-‘

‘There are children present-‘

‘I most certainly did not mean it in that way-‘

‘Can you and your boyfriend not do this here-‘

‘NOT MY BOYFRIEND-‘

But within a few days Sk’jin can barely stand without wanting to collapse so he guesses it’s not the best idea to prolong this any longer than he should and so gets ready. And by getting ready meaning he finally uses his bed for its intended purpose.

To go to sleep.

Or at least, what the Khol’isa understood as sleep.

With some difficulty Sk’jin prepares himself for the inevitable autophagocytosis. Even his hair was falling in thick chunks and he could barely stand to look at himself. And as usual, Nambike is there to help him out. But this time Ahadi is there as well- and so is Ilya.

‘I’ll be here,’ Ahadi teases, ‘A little older, but then again, not as old as you-!’ he dodges Sk’jin’s weak kick.

Ilya grins at them from the doorway.

‘Right,’ Sk’jin can feel the reddish burn of fever covering his eyes and he doesn’t want to remember Ahadi like this. Doesn’t want the Bloodmoon to taint the warm brown of his eyes into something else. ‘I’ll see you guys soon- don’t fuck up. If I wake up in prison I’ll kill all of you.’

Ilya makes a sad face, innocence and confusion on his face.

‘Oh Spaces,’ Nambike huffs out, walking over to the young Ožkan with a grimace aimed at Sk’jin. ‘Go get your melting ass fixed already- no need to scar innocent eyes.’

‘Yeah, love you too darlin’,’ Sk’jin waves, leaning back into his bedding.

She flips him off, not even looking back.

‘You’re nervous,’ he remarks, sitting on the side of the bed.

‘Yeah well,’ Sk’jin removes his robes and carefully folds it over the side of his chair. ‘A lot can happen- be it in a second, a minute- an hour. Or absolutely nothing will happen.’

‘What are you more afraid of?’

Sk’jin brushes back his thin hair, nervously feeling the base of his horns.

‘It’s the permanence of waiting,’ Sk’jin looks over at the Mwenzini. ‘That moment of agitation, anticipation- just stretched on.’

‘Is that how it is when you sleep?’

Sk’jin nods and also shrugs.
‘It’s hard to explain really.’
They stay in silence for a while.

‘I’ll miss you.’

‘It’ll be like, 2 sols tops,’ Sk’jin grins. He’s still unable to read the look in his eyes.

Ahadi carefully brushes back his hair, fingers lingering around the smooth texture of his horns. It feels nice, soothing and relaxing.

‘You’re gonna keep growing your hair right?’ Sk’jin teases, reaching up to take his hand.

‘Oh yeah,’ he grins looking back at Sk’jin, his gaze unwavering and trusting. ‘Make you swoon at the sight of my hair when you get back.’

Sk’jin laughs though it’s heavy in his chest. Ahadi looks worried.

‘I swear- get the fuck out, it’s normal,’ Sk’jin waves him off with a roll of his eyes despite being instantly nauseous in the process.

Ahadi just smiles, dimples forming deep on his cheeks before he leans in a little before he seems to reconsider and backs away.

‘I would like a goodnight kiss though,’ Sk’jin quips, attempting a wink.

Ahadi shakes his head, laughing low under his breath before he leans all the way in.

The lights overhead blocks Sk’jin from seeing Ahadi’s expression before their lips touch. Sk’jin only sees the familiar outline of the Mwenzini but he doesn’t have to see him to know that he’s smiling. He can feel it against his lips and it makes Sk’jin smile.

When Ahadi pulls back he is smiling down at Sk’jin with that same fondness, laced a little with exasperation and an expression Sk’jin isn’t entirely sure how to label. Instead he reaches up to feel at his dimples with a fond chuckle and pushes him off with a flick on his forehead.

‘I’ll see you when I’m beautiful again,’ Sk’jin laughs as Ahadi gets up.

‘Is that your way of getting me to tell you that you’re always beautiful?’ Ahadi asks, laughing as he looks back.

‘Is it working?’ Sk’jin has never heard Ahadi compliment him on his looks.

Ever.

Ahadi stands by the doorway, dimpled smile on place, shaking his head.

‘You’re gonna have to work harder than that Captain, I have a very specific aesthetic.’

Sk’jin manages to lift a finger at him before the door slides shut.

Sk’jin continues to laugh under his breath as the room is slowly bathed in darkness. All of the power directed towards the room is cut off and slowly the air starts thinning. Sk’jin understands why some might find it creepy seeing as Sk’jin had to literally die for this process to take place, but it’s as easy as…well,- as easy as falling asleep.
It’s not painful- at least not for the Khol’isa. They knew pain all too well. Besides, it wasn’t as though he wasn’t already dying.

Every other time he’s done this, it’s never been like this. And by this, Sk’jin isn’t entirely sure what he means by it either. It was just different. As though this time, when he woke up, things would be different.

And he’s not sure if it’s the whole dying thing getting to his head but there’s a sort of half-formed but very determined notion that grips his mind as the feverish pitch of his entire being rises up several knots. Maybe the Venture Unit were successful in their attempt to influence Sk’jin- or maybe this was always meant to be. No living thing can exist and not evolve- not be subjected to change.

And maybe this was Sk’jin’s change.

‘I-I promise-,’ Sk’jin mumbles out loud. ‘I promise you,- that I’ll make everything right again when I come back. I’ll even be the fuckin’ hero if that’s what’s needed.’

He exhales slowly, closing his eyes and giving himself into the burn of the fever that burns from within his very soul. Sk’jin slips into the reddish haze of his mind, his body stilling and his mind slipping until a familiar colour overwhelms him.

It is the heat of a burn, the burn of a screaming throat, the silent scream of a dying sun, the death of the familiar warmth of their skin.

It is the fragrance of something blossoming under the summer sun, the flavour of giddy laughter under a neon sign-post, the reflection of a bonfire late at night.

It is the softness of their lips against yours, hesitance but desperate as they try to convey what their words can’t.

It is the edge of the shadows that crawl out from under their hand, reaching out to you, knowing that you cannot hold on.

It is the broken smile on an ashen face, pain and loss etched liked tattoos on their skin.

It is their absence; their pulse no longer beating against yours, the music of their heart silenced and hollow.

It is the price paid; doubled tripled. Heavy and ever growing.

It is pain; bitter and ever gnawing.

It is anger; destructive and purifying.

It is death; ever-lurking and drawing.

The glare of the Bloodmoon erupts around him in full strength and Sk’jin steps foot inside Khol’isa again.

But unlike before, he knows that when he wakes up from this ancient nightmare, he would see them again. And when he returns, he would make everything right.

After all, Sk’jin thinks, his Being dissipating and turning to ash, the Khol’isa never break their promises.
‘And I’ll miss you too.’

It’s early in the morning.

But then again. It always is early here.

A tidal-locked planet only gave you so much option in term of weather.

Yoongi sits up, his back sore and cold. But at least he’s not wet or damp. Trying to sleep while your mattress is wet was the grossest and most depressing thing you could experience.

Exiting the tent, Yoongi scans his surroundings and immediately notices Jimin by the side of the encampment, facing a clearing that overlooked a valley below.

Jimin barely slept, staying up and only lightly dozing off. Yoongi notices how it’s normally with him being around and tries not to dwell on it too much. It was cold this morning, and Jimin was still only dressed in the clothes they had found him in. stepping back into his tent, Yoongi grabs a blanket and makes his way towards Jimin.

He carefully touches Jimin on his arm, hoping not to alarm him. Jimin doesn’t start, only looking mildly surprised.

There’s a deep emotion in his eyes- one of nostalgia, of longing.

‘It’s cold,’ Yoongi says, unintentionally rather gruffly. Jimin’s expression changes to one of amused confusion. Yoongi pretends to shiver and points at the blanket again. Jimin smiles, clearly in thanks and wraps the blanket around himself in a secure manner.

‘Hey sunshine,’ Yoongi says as he sits next to Jimin.

‘Hei s-sunshhrine?’ Jimin gives him a small wave, something he picked up no doubt from observing them all.

It makes Yoongi smile and he shakes his head.

‘Sunshine,’ he says, pointing at Jimin. And then back to himself, ‘Yoongi.’

Jimin shakes his head, expression confused as though wondering how thick could Yoongi be not to get his name till now.

‘Jimin,’ he points at himself and then at Yoongi, ‘Yoongi.’

Pretending to be serious, Yoongi repeats: ‘Sunshine.’

But before Jimin can argue him again Yoongi points at him and gives Jimin a questioning look. Jimin gives him a narrow eyed look of confusion before slowly saying, ‘Amic?’

Yoongi nods, pointing and says, ‘Mickey.’

Jimin is beyond confused. But then Yoongi carefully breaks down the names and gives him the nicknames- some not so flattering or meaningful, while others were plays on their names. It takes a moment but Yoongi sees the way Jimin’s eyes light up. Making a sound of realization Jimin nods enthusiastically.

‘Sunshine.’ Yoongi feels quite accomplished.

‘S-sunshine,’ Jimin points at himself.

Yoongi nods and gives him a lopsided grin.

‘That you are.’

Amic laughs loudly from the side.

‘Fucking Spaces, you’re so gone,’ he teases.

Yoongi flips him a finger casually, setting him off even more.

Jimin nudges him, a look of confusion in his eyes. He repeats his question slowly but Yoongi doesn’t understand. So instead he hands him the screen, hoping Jimin would be able to illustrate his question to him. But before he can, a sharp voice rings out.

‘Thua?’

There’s clear alarm and confusion in her voice and Yoongi reacts before he can think, standing up. Beside him, Jimin does the same.

‘What is it?’

‘Thua’s missing.’ Amic tells him at once, worry etched across his features.
‘What?!’

Yoongi makes his way back towards the main encampment. Thua’s tent was right next to his own but it’s empty.

‘Did no one see him?’ he asks. But everyone is too confused to respond.

He couldn’t have just vanished without anyone having seen him. This made no sense.

‘Run scans to detect motion,’ she orders immediately. ‘Bring in our perimeter and let’s isolate the-‘ ‘-guys bring it in tighter we need to make our reading smaller so we can detect Thua if he’s nearby!’

Yoongi quickly looks around for Jimin, to bring him closer when he notices how strangely still he was. It was as though he were frozen.

‘Jimin?’

He doesn’t seem to hear Yoongi, his posture statue-like, his attention riveted.

‘Sunshine?’ Yoongi reaches over and the moment he touches Jimin the latter collapses. Yoongi is quick to catch him, holding him upright immediately while scanning the forest. There was nothing there.

‘Hey- what’s wrong-‘

‘I don’t know but-‘ Yoongi’s chest constricts as Jimin pales rapidly, eyes rolling back momentarily before he’s greeted with the twin eclipses. Jimin’s eyes are clear and bright- but they’re not looking at Yoongi.

‘Sunshine? Jimin? Hey look at me for a bit yeah?’ Yoongi says urgently, holding Jimin securely against his chest with one arm while the other secured a TeorSer.

‘What’s going on-‘

Yoongi sees something red, something strangely bright growing in the reflection on Jimin’s eyes and his head tilts up before he can stop himself.

The canopy above was normally leaf strewn with branches weaving in and out. But this time it’s different.

Yoongi’s blood freezes over and his entire body is suddenly rooted to the ground. He can’t move, can’t speak.

Yoongi feels as though he were looking Death straight in the eye.

And everything burns red.
Yoongi wakes up feeling oddly light and disconnected.

But his chest feels incredibly heavy. Water clogged almost, yet his breath comes to him freely.

The ship is humming lightly but they were not flying. There’s something different in the air- an openness and movement that is distinctly natural. A differentiation that is stark to Yoongi for some reason.

While he felt rather normal save for the strange heaviness, Yoongi realizes that he’s shivering.

He’s wearing his own clothes, though the additional weapon holders and straps have been removed. His feet are bare as well but he’s wearing oddly colourful socks. Taeh’yung’s, Yoongi guesses.

He doesn’t make a sound as he walks out of the Medical Bay. He’s about to head upwards to his Cabin to change or maybe catch up on what’s happened so far with anyone who was awake when he hears soft humming.

His feet are carrying him without his say and Yoongi is in the Hangar instead. The Spardyti is parked outside, leaving the rest of the Hangar spacious and free. The gateway is partially open and a soft cool light floods in.

Sk’jin’s warning about the planet’s not too friendly wildlife comes to mind but Jimin was outside, and Yoongi has to go to him.

Ducking under the gateway Yoongi finds himself in the misty clearing outside, the ramp lowered and glistening with morning dew. The trees look different- less strange, but also very new. Yoongi spots slow sleepy movements beyond the foliage- great hulking shapes move around slowly and weave through the trees just beyond the edge of the clearing. At first glance Yoongi thinks they’re just grazing, but the beasts are swaying back and forth, as though caught in a trance.

And Yoongi knows why.

Jimin is standing in the middle of the clearing, his back to Yoongi’s. He’s humming and it’s as though the entire clearing, the jungle, the beasts, the very soil of this planet, are riveted with Jimin’s song. Yoongi finds himself feet from Jimin.

The sun is rising far ahead and Yoongi anticipates its warmth.

Slowly, Yoongi takes Jimin’s hand in his. Jimin doesn’t look away from the sunrise. Though he has a small smile on his face and steps closer to Yoongi.

‘It’s cold- that’s what I said to you right?’ Yoongi says quietly.
Jimin doesn’t reply, only squeezing his hand tighter.

‘I remember a little- some small thing here and there. And I think it will come back to me slowly- who I was, what I was.’ Yoongi breathes out slowly.

‘Do you think you could tell me who I was?’ Yoongi’s words are impossibly quiet. ‘But I don’t know if I want to remember who I was.’

The sun breaks through the mist and the temperature starts to change noticeably. There’s a hum in the air of insects and other creatures stirring awake as the sun rose higher, shaken from their stupor induced by Jimin’s voice.

‘Will that make a difference? Because I don’t know who I am now. Can I still be me, without knowing who I was?’ Yoongi asks. ‘Or am I not me- and am I just the reflection?’

Jimin looks away, the warmth of the sun in his eyes and Yoongi feels warm. Jimin reaches up to press his hands against his temples, the warmth of his gaze blossoming on Yoongi’s skin and the Human leans into his touch.

Jimin tilts his head to the side, as though considering Yoongi carefully.

‘You,’ he says quietly.

‘Me?’

Jimin smiles, gently patting his cheeks and nods. ‘You.’

‘I only see myself when I look at the mirror.’ Yoongi says quietly.

‘Tell me Yoongi, how many flowers can you see from there?’

Twin eclipses, bright and beautiful- hypnotic and familiar.

‘How many Yoongi’s do you see?’

Namjoon carefully looks over Yoongi who appears the same as usual. He wasn’t in pain or any discomfort, and he hadn’t somehow woken up with centuries old memory or information regarding any of the things he had done or seen in the past. He was just…about the same.
Sk’jin seemed subdued, unwilling to leave the ship and all for leaving it at once. Namjoon had left with Taeh’yung to return once more into the crashed ship, hoping the Zhak’gri would have something else to add. But Taeh’yung had simply run about, opening old cabinets and doors, talking loudly and walking noisily. He did however, pause a while to stare up the empty glass chambers that both Jimin and Sk’jin had been staring at too. Taeh’yung actually climbs up to the highest one, staring with unblinking eyes.

Then it’s all fine and he comes down, humming brightly under his breath before nagging Namjoon to go back.

It felt indescribably odd.

That something Namjoon had planned, or something he was looking for, actually came to fruition and produced a result.

It felt wrong, because nothing has gone right since day 1 of this mission and Namjoon doesn’t know how to handle any of this.

Jimin is carefully speaking into the screen, with Taeh’yung providing translation. They’d be able to create a somewhat accurate translation method if the two input Jimin’s language accurately. It would make for easier communication and hopefully wider understanding of each other in general. But then again, despite all speaking the Standard, Namjoon can’t say the rest of the had the best communication skills.

‘What do we do next?’ Sk’jin asks from where he’s seated, feet up and basking under the sunlight that streamed in from the windows overhead the Bridge. Yoongi sits next to Jimin, though he’s facing them, expression as blank as ever.

Namjoon can’t help but look out over at the cockpit and miss the familiar head of brown hair that provided him with the stability he hadn’t realized had supported him.

‘We fly to Grisial of course- we continue on with our plan. We study this,’ Namjoon nods at the cell sitting on top of the Navigator’s Table. Jimin’s initial explanation had been the only one he provided and it was all he would say about it, claiming that was all there was to it. Normally Sk’jin would make a comment about how he didn’t trust Jimin’s statement but the Khol’isa hadn’t said anything.

‘And see what it can show us.’

Sk’jin nods at that, his mind clearly elsewhere.

‘Could we use it.’ Yoongi asks unexpectedly.

‘Use what?’ Sk’jin asks, looking away from the sky above.

‘This planet was hidden from the rest of the Known Universe as a result of this technology. Could we cover our movements by facilitating this technology into our own?’

Namjoon notices how Sk’jin glances over him, a look in his expression that says he’s doing that thing again but before either of them can say anything Lisai speaks.

‘Incoming message from unknown source. Requesting permission.’

‘Shit-,’ Sk’jin curses under his breath, ‘-shit did they figure out we’re here-‘
Namjoon quickly pulls up the NaviLet to check the incoming call, activating his tracing systems to follow and trace back the call.

‘How is any communication channel coming in here?’ Namjoon mutters as his tracker fails to find the source, instead simply bouncing back to Ts’ets’khli instead, where it had last registered a location Namjoon had been tracking. There’s a sudden sharp sound that renders through the main Communication Board and the line automatically patches through.

‘Lisai cut the call immediately-’ Namjoon orders immediately, activating the virus he personally built to work against the system he created for the Užkulisai.

‘Hello.’

Everyone stops. Jimin and Taeh’yung who had stopped their work are now standing, alarm etched on their features.

‘Who is this and what do you want.’ Namjoon demands instantly.

It’s painfully quiet for a while before the voice speaks again.

‘We have a proposal for you. One that we had politely offered to you in Pompa. We would like to renew this proposal.’ This voice sounded different. Still flat, still incredibly odd, with a tone that Namjoon cannot identify as male or female or anything else.

Sk’jin suddenly stands and whispers, ‘It’s them.’

Dread courses through Namjoon’s mind. How did they find them? They were no doubt affiliated with Van Seulgaan, considering they were looking for the “eggs” the same way the Tayian was. And there was no doubt that Seulgaan had connections with at least one of the members of the Special Jury.

‘We spoke of this previously,’ Namjoon says firmly, fingers moving across the NaviLet with alarmed hurry. ‘We will not give you the OrTank. Nothing you can offer us will make us reconsider.’

‘We have an offer for you.’ The voice continues, as though it didn’t hear Namjoon speak.

‘I said we don’t want anything-‘

‘Please take a look.’

And Namjoon already knows what he was going to see.

The Communication Boards holographic display lights up without their approval and it displays a direct and obviously live-feed of what appeared to be a storage hull of a ship. And inside the hull are stacked OrTanks, this time filled with Beings who similar to Jimin, were afloat inside of it. It’s dimly lit but it’s more than enough to show them the purpose of this hijacked hologram.

Hoseok.

Jimin gasps as Sk’jin curses under his breath. Namjoon closes his eyes, fists gripping the edges of the NaviLet.

‘If you wish to recover the Ngfy’widan Hoseok, then we are willing to give him back to you in exchange for the Yemenifesi Ch’inik’eti.’
Jimin, who had been halfway across towards the hologram, pauses in his steps, hearing his own title spoken out loud. His eyes widen, looking around at Namjoon as though begging for an explanation. But Namjoon has no idea. He cannot even begin to fathom how they could have known. Why they know.

And the bigger question that comes with it.

What did they want from Jimin?

‘If you do not act, we will not hesitate to dispose of the former agent. He is of no consequential use to us. Thank you for listening, we await your response. Have a good day.’

Chapter End Notes

(Author’s Notes)

Yeah coughs Sk’jin is kinda…how’d you say, ace/aro I guess. I’m just not using those terms because in the scope of the Known Universe, where gender isn’t strictly a label of identification or blatant discrimination.
The Khol’isa have a unique culture, biology, and physiology- they don’t reproduce in the traditional sense of reproduction. So it’s not a part of their norm, to really feel or need sexual attraction.
It is who they are.
This chapter took long because I wanted to be careful with Sk’jin’s history, to give a better explanation of it, and the reason behind why and how he is the way he is now, or at least seems to show how he is. I hope you enjoyed it!!
AND THANK YOU "LATTEFORLATER” FOR ALLOWING ME TO USE YOUR OC
And AYE HOB- well news about Hobi. speaking of which
WHO ELSE
CAN’T WAIT FOR MARCH
2ND
BECAUSE I’M INTERNALLY DYING FOR SOME HIXTAPE GOODNESS

I have midterms coming up - meaning I have no exams lol, so it’s like a nice long break for me so I will be able to bring the next update on time!!
See you next update!!
There’s too much going on at the same time.

Yoongi suddenly loses Jimin who had just been in his arms seconds ago. He’s also suddenly fully armed, his team gathered around in position, all of their TeorSers aimed up and at the same time a liquid golden light erupts and Yoongi has never fallen to his knees as quickly as he does now.

There were great pieces of art from Ancient Earth. Great paintings and sculptures and media that denoted the lives of those who lived eras ago in the past. Yoongi never paid much attention to those. While it was important to study history to understand and learn for the future, Yoongi didn’t think it was necessary to dwell in it. Or at least that was the excuse he had as a teen- he just found it generally a little boring.

However, there were some pieces of art that stuck to him- ones he remembered clearly.

Works that were classified under street-urban, modern contemporary, and a niche collection of a style that persevered into their present in the form of graffiti. He loved the remakes, the classics, and the new ideas that surrounded these styles of art and though he was no artist himself, appreciated it and applauded the artists.

He didn’t think much of the “traditional classics” as they were referred to. The ongoing theme of religious depictions put him off of what he thought were, frankly speaking, uneventful pieces of art. He often found religious depictions to be a little too excessive- too worshipful (the irony) and glorified the notion that a god would come down to pass judgment and justice upon “sinners”. In Yoongi’s humble opinion, that sort of thinking gave you what he called the “holier than you” complex and as a result, depraved them of empathy and openness. And Yoongi could see it play out so well throughout Earth’s history.

But moving past that, and past the caged mentality most religion seemed to force its followers into, Yoongi never thought much for their artwork either. Save for one.

A baroque painting titled “The Archangel Michael defeating Satan” by Guido Reni.

Nothing about it stood out that much. In terms of execution and overall style, there were countless others in that same genre that were much more beautiful, much more intriguing. But when Yoongi saw it, for his own eyes, he had been unexplainably drawn towards it.

There was a raw power, strength and beauty, surety of victory, fluidity and sternness.

A call for awe, belief, faith, and devotion.

And that was what Yoongi felt as he beholds Jimin, wrought in light and majesty.

Jimin is up in the air, hand extended up, his entire being shining with light- no, he was light. He speaks and his words like a distant bell, a thunderous storm, a soft breeze, a morning lullaby echoes sweetly, dangerously, intoxicatingly, soothingly around Yoongi and he wants to follow.

Yoongi almost expects a host of angels to appear by Jimin’s side- singing exaltations and hymns as he smites down the red devil before him. And with that, a floodgate of light will drown them all- in safety and security, saved by the coming of this deity, to bring wrath upon evil, and paradise for the good.

But Yoongi is rather far from being good, and they were far from paradise.

There’s a burst of light and the singing (Yoongi hadn’t realized that he had been listening to singing) ends abruptly.

Gone is the crippling fear and strange pressure in the air around them and Jimin is falling. He lands with a thud on his back and Yoongi’s feet are carrying him before he realizes it. Amic is there too, helping him stand. Yoongi’s heart is in his throat, looking over his form- was he injured? In pain?

But Jimin seems all right- a little shaken, weak, but nonetheless fine. His eyes are bright, the ring of light gleaming bright.

‘Jimin? Hey are you okay-‘

‘What the fuck was that?’

Yoongi glances behind him to find the rest of the team wide-eyed and terrified, weapons raised, forming a compact ring to cover all sides. Away from where Yoongi was now helping Jimin stand.

‘Yoongi, Amic, step away from him and come over to this side,’ she orders simply, TeorSer still aimed at the ready. Yoongi knew not to mess with her. She was an excellent shot and no matter the situation, never missed once she fired.

‘What?’ Amic sounds confused.

‘-this is clearly a trap!’ one of them bursts out. ‘We’re being drawn out and they’re taking us out!’

The panic in the air is palpable and almost bitter in Yoongi’s mouth. They were scared. Fuck, Yoongi is scared too, but that doesn’t mean he’s going to blame Jimin for what just happened. One of the other reasons being they didn’t even know what just happened.

‘Listen,’ Yoongi stands in front of Jimin. ‘We need to think about this rationally-‘

‘He’s here as bait!’ one of them snaps. ‘Whatever that was is-‘

‘If he’s bait and working for whatever the fuck that was, why would he go out of his way to protect us?’ Amic demands.

Yoongi feels Jimin’s hands gripping at the back of his gear.

‘This is not the time to be blind-sighted,’ she snaps. ‘If you could just for once, look past the pretty face and see the situation we’re in and just think-‘

‘I am thinking!’ Yoongi snaps. ‘He is not affiliated with them- he was afraid of them-‘

‘His presence here is luring whatever that thing was-‘
‘His presence is the only thing we have found!’ Amic cuts in angrily. ‘We were told that this was a trading planet under attack— that we had to come here to aid the GLA leave the atmosphere but we have found nothing— not only have we lost contact with our main-ship, we have also been going around in circles for days!’

‘I think we would know if we weren’t headed in the right direction—’ one of the mappers snaps at once.

‘Something is wrong with this planet,’ Amic emphasizes. ‘There is something deeply wrong and it’s all I could sense since we got here— and whatever it is, is like some strange—…some strange strain or flu it’s gotten all over us I can feel it!’ Amic breathes out heavily, expression determined, exasperated but most of all afraid. He points one long finger at Jimin and continues, ‘But him! Jimin— he’s the only thing that doesn’t feel wrong here, the only existence in this entire fucked up place that doesn’t make me feel sick.’

It’s silent, only the sound of their minimal movements as they fidget.

Jimin says something quietly from behind him and Yoongi doesn’t need to understand him to know what he’s saying.

‘No, you’re not going anywhere— you’re staying here with me. With us.’ Yoongi says firmly before facing her. ‘Before we were even aware of it, he could sense it. He knew how to drive it away. And that, by my books, is an important and necessary skill we need right now to survive. So if you want him to leave, I’m leaving with him.’

‘Me too,’ Amic quips at once.

She gives them all a hard glare before speaking.

‘Fine. I’d rather not all of us separate—’

There are voices of disagreement but she stops them with a single wave of her hand.

‘Yoongi and Amic have a point,’ she says tersely. ‘There’s a lot of information we’re missing here. Not just about this planet, but the reasoning behind why we’re here. I didn’t want to mention it before, but I think our purpose in coming here was not just a clean-up mission or anything else.’

Everyone tenses as that.

‘We’re going to figure out what the fuck any of this means, and if we’re going to understand any of this, we’ll need him— especially with what we just saw.’

Yoongi is relieved but also tense. There were some clear disagreements but Yoongi knew that no one wanted to separate. Safety came in numbers and as a team designed to function together as a single unit, losing one member was like losing a limb.

‘We pack up and search the area keep an eye out— stay close and do not for the love of god do anything stupid,’ she ends before adding, ‘I know what you’re trying to say here and I appreciate you looking at this situation from a different point of view.’

Yoongi internally gears up for the rebuttal of her previous words regarding Jimin.

‘You’re going to have to answer for him from now on. I don’t care what it is— but the moment anything goes wrong, if I so much as sense something strange he’s going and that means so are you.’ She ends quietly.
‘You’ll have to count me in that,’ Amic states from behind Jimin who was now simply looking back into the forest, eyes searching.

‘That won’t be necessary,’ Yoongi replies just as quietly. ‘But in any case I’ll gladly go with him.’

She gives him a look that isn’t one of disappointment or disapproval. Rather it’s one that’s a little confused.

Yoongi reaches back and takes Jimin’s hand in his, drawing his attention away from the forest.

Yoongi doesn’t understand the feeling himself, and he doesn’t know why it’s like this, but if the moment called for it, then he would follow Jimin.

He would follow the sun.

*

‘If you wish to recover the Ngfy’widan Hoseok, then we are willing to give him back to you in exchange for the Yemenifesi Ch’inik’eti.’

Jimin, who had been halfway across towards the hologram, pauses in his steps, hearing his own title spoken out loud. His eyes widen, looking around at Namjoon as though begging for an explanation. But Namjoon has no idea. He cannot even begin to fathom how they could have known. Why they know.

And the bigger question that comes with it.

What did they want from Jimin?

‘If you do not act, we will not hesitate to dispose of the former agent. He is of no consequential use to us. Thank you for listening, we await your response. Have a good day.’

The line cuts immediately and it’s silent for 4 whole seconds before Sk’jin splutters out, ‘Have a good day?!?! Who the fuck do they think they are?!’

‘Can you trace the call,’ Yoongi asks immediately as he approaches the Table.

‘It’s from back in Ts’ets’khli,’ Namjoon readily replies, showing the NaviLet.
‘We can’t be sure-’ Sk’jin says as he too hurries towards the Table, doubt etched on his features.

‘No I’m sure they’re there,’ Namjoon sighs, suddenly feeling wearied. ‘Hoseok has a Comm-Device, it’s putting him in Ts’ets’khli.’

‘How? He returned the Device-’ Sk’jin frowns.

Namjoon had given the Comm-Device to Jimin, hoping he would understand to give it to Hoseok. And he did.

‘I asked Jimin to give it to him before he left-‘ Namjoon glances over at Jimin who is listening with increasing horror as Taeh’yung explains what was happening.

‘-you were keeping track of him? Like what, to make sure he didn’t report us-‘ Sk’jin demands.

‘Namjoon. If they have the Device it means they can track back to us,’ Yoongi states bluntly.

‘I know,’ Namjoon presses his palm into his face, taking a deep breath. ‘But if I deactivate it, we lose chances of tracking Hoseok, make sure he’s all right.’

‘But then again they can track us,’ Sk’jin throws his hands up.

‘How were they there? Why didn’t we notice? How did we not notice?’ Namjoon demands out loud.

Taeh’yung suddenly asks Jimin a question that makes the latter stammer out a response as though shocked. Taeh’yung makes a curious face before saying, ‘I think it’s because Ts’ets’khli is surrounded by water- or well, a majority of it is anyways.’

Namjoon glances at Jimin whose expression has settled to a completely neutral one.

‘What does that mean? Why is that so?’ Namjoon asks sharply.

‘We can talk about that later,’ Sk’jin cuts in sharply. ‘We need to discuss what we can do now- they could call back any time and we need a response. They can track us now, and I’m willing to bet that they have the ability to find us even if we deactivate the Comm-Device later; and I’m not sure about you guys but I’m not willing to leave Hoseok in their hands.’

‘We can’t bargain with them,’ Namjoon states at once. ‘We can’t just give the Omhlophe Jimin in exchange like this who knows what that could lead to-‘

‘So you’re suggesting we just leave Hoseok there-‘

‘I am not saying that for fuck’s sake can you stop jumping to conclusions before I even say anything-‘

‘Then what do we do-‘

‘I don’t know that’s why we should all talk about it I can’t just think of everything all the time-‘

‘Well that’s what you seem to do all the time-‘

‘Stop it!’

Namjoon and Sk’jin both stare in shock at Jimin, who had clearly snapped in Standard. He begins to speak quickly, hands gesturing emphatically and looking at the two of them with obvious disapproval.

‘Uh- okay so uh he’s saying you two need to stop arguing all the time it’s not funny and there’s no benefit to it, you have to comply together to make this work.’

Namjoon can actually physically feel Sk’jin’s anger mounting.

‘-and that we’re wasting time. There are many questions that need answering but we first need to get Hoseok back’

‘Pipsqueak can shut his can right now unless he has something legitimate to offer.’

‘-and the surest and fastest way to do that is to agree to their plans and accept the exchange.’
Taeh’yung quickly finishes.

Sk’jin blinks a few times before staring hard at Jimin.

‘What did you just say?’

Jimin emphatically points at the Communications Board, and then himself and then gestures an obvious pantomime indicating an exchange.

‘Wait-’

‘No.’

Yoongi, who up until now, hasn’t said a word since this started, has an expression that is the closest thing Namjoon has seen to pure anger.

‘They know who he is. There was a reason why Menigišiti was attacked, the reason why their technology was discovered outside of their System.’ Yoongi states, a hardened look in his eyes.
‘They knew who he was before we did and they’ve been collecting more of these OrTanks as well.
We cannot allow this exchange to take place- if this is anything like what was discovered during the Gaia case we cannot allow them to take Jimin especially now that we can see how such a small piece of their technology can create such nightmares.’

‘Jimin is actually right,’ Sk’jin counters bluntly. ‘They are already capable of tracking us, we have no way of hiding and we have no lead or idea of what they’re capable of, who they’re connected to, and what they want. We cannot run from them and refusing to make a deal with them will most definitely lead to some pretty shitty situations regarding Hoseok and later ourselves. We can plan this out carefully and-‘

‘-you’re countering yourself with your argument,’ Yoongi actually snaps, his expression the most complex Namjoon has seen. The Human actually steps forward, arms uncrossed and strangely very sentient in his mannerism. It’s enough to stun Sk’jin into silence as well, eyes wide as he regards the Human with surprise.

‘What you’re saying is true and it can also be applied to why exchanging Jimin won’t work. We know nothing of the Omhlophe, do not know what they’re capable of, who they’re connected to.
And what makes you so sure that they won’t obliterate us the moment we hand Jimin over?’
Yoongi asks and it’s wild because Namjoon almost doesn’t recognize this Human in front of him.

‘Yoongi,’ Jimin has an unimpressed look on his face, arms actually crossed over and one foot tapping. Namjoon almost feels like he’s watching a child being chastised. He starts talking rapidly in his language at Yoongi who to Namjoon’s continued surprised actually responds though he doesn’t understand a word Jimin is saying.

‘-this is too risky, there are no certain safety marks we can measure with this situation-‘

‘-kan ti thei, kan thrian a nia chuan kei mani vang in tuna hian-‘ the earnestness in Jimin’s tone is apparent.

‘-and not only will we be definitively losing track of you once this takes place-‘ Yoongi continues to argue, taking steps towards Jimin as though hoping to convince him by getting closer.

‘-a buia ah. Kei ma vang in thihian in awm- kei ma vang in harsat na in dawng ah-‘ Jimin also steps forward, adamant in his argument that only Taeh’yung understands. The Zhak’gri looks oddly sad as he listens to Jimin’s words.

‘-there’s no guarantee of what we can expect from them-‘ Yoongi stops in front of Jimin, an almost pleading tone to his voice at this point.

‘-ka ti thrat a gnai! Kan khovel hi aw, a sual ah chuan a-‘ Jimin actually shakes Yoongi, gripping him around the arms with both hands.

‘And he has the audacity to tell us not to argue,’ Sk’jin comments wryly from the side. ‘At least we’re not dramatic like this.’

But Jimin seems to win, Namjoon doesn’t know how, considering the language barrier, but Yoongi bows his head, defeat apparent in his body language and his facial expression back to his normal one.

Jimin looks over at Namjoon expectantly, as though he and Yoongi hadn’t just stopped to argue at each other without understanding a single word.

And regardless of what Jimin says, handing him over felt wrong. But everyone is looking at him. They’re looking to him.

Namjoon internally woes the decision the Panel made in anointing him captain of this crew. But before he’s forced to come to some form of decisive conclusion their Communications Board lights up again and Lisai announces it.

‘Incoming message from unknown source. Requesting permission.’

Sk’jin glances over at him sharply before saying, ‘Request granted.’

‘Hello. Have you come to a decision?’ the voice asks the moment the line links.

‘Before we discuss anything I want to talk to Hoseok- patch him through,’ Sk’jin orders quickly.

There’s silence for a moment before the hologram reappears and Hoseok is standing, a careful wariness in his eyes as he glances around the room once before looking up straight into the camera.

‘Namjoon?’

Namjoon feels his energy drained from him suddenly. And before he knows it, guilt replaces it in an instance and Namjoon can’t even face the hologram.

‘Hoseok- it’s Sk’jin,’ the Khol’isa speaks at once. ‘We’re coming to get you.’

Yoongi twitches at Sk’jin’s words but doesn’t say anything.
‘All right.’ Hoseok pauses before asking carefully, ‘How’s everything.’

‘More or less exactly how Namjoon said it would be.’

‘Yeah? Good, I guess.’

Namjoon slowly looks up and finds that Hoseok has a small smile on his face. But the hologram cuts off and the voice returns.

‘Have you come to a decision?’

Sk’jin nods his approval from where he stood. Namjoon next eyes Jimin who also nods firmly. Taeh’yung also nods, though he looks a little guilty because Yoongi is adamant and he shakes his head. It strikes Namjoon that this wasn’t a decision for him to make, but a group decision.

‘We have. We agree to the exchange.’ Namjoon states clearly. ‘We also propose that we meet there in Ts’ets’khli-’

‘We are on our merry way to Ynqaba it would be nice if you meet us there,’ the voice states. ‘We can accomplish our deal without anyone butting in.’

Namjoon reigns in his frustration and with another glance at Sk’jin who again nods, he says, ‘Very well. Send us the coordinates-’

‘There is no need. We will come meet you the moment we see you. Please start moving along as from your current location, it will take you 5 sols via warp.’

‘This is a trap.’ Yoongi intones blandly from the side.

‘Namjoon.’

Jimin’s tone isn’t what Namjoon would define as authoritative or commanding. But he can sense the determination, the surety, and the confidence in his tone, simply telling him with just a call of his name, to agree with the Omhlophe.

‘Understood. We will see you in Ynqaba in 5 sols.’ Namjoon replies.

‘Perfect. Thank you for your cooperation. Have a good day.’

The line cuts.

‘Ynqaba was the next location Khonen and his crew were headed to- they were going to pick up some more eggs there,’ Sk’jin says at once. ‘Well there’s no way we’re going to be able to use the normal channels to get there with the war going on.’

‘That’s the least of our worries,’ Namjoon mumbles back, glancing over at Jimin quickly.

‘What the fuck do you have in mind,’ Sk’jin asks sharply, also looking at Jimin who was listening intently to Taeh’yung.

‘It’s just a theory, one that if it works will save us a lot of trouble,’ Namjoon replies, ‘And I don’t think Jimin will be happy.’

‘You sure?’ Sk’jin asks, a rare look of genuine concern in his red eyes. ‘We don’t know much about him, we’re basically only relying on Taeh’yung’s word and Yoongi’s past which he does not remember.’
‘It’s a price I’m willing to pay,’ Namjoon shrugs.

An odd look crosses over Sk’jin’s face, his eyes widening slightly. But he blinks and the moment is gone.

‘Well, if you’re sure,’ he says and his tone is withdrawn.

‘I am- anyways, let’s get going,’ Namjoon says even though the Khol’isa is already making his way to the cockpit, calling out orders to Lisai. He turns to address Yoongi now who still looked upset.

‘We’re flying out asap- so Yoongi, if you could prepare the Hangar Bay-‘ Namjoon hasn’t even finished before the Human all but runs out. Namjoon hears Jimin sigh out in exasperation and he too makes to walk out after Yoongi.

‘Jimin- please, before you go,’ Namjoon calls after his retreating figure before glancing at Taeh’yung. ‘I need to ask you something that could potentially make our upcoming attempt safer and easier.’

Taeh’yung haltingly translates, seating himself on Sk’jin’s vacant seat.

Jimin looks torn, glancing at the Bridge doorway quickly before he nods, stepping closer to the Navigator’s Mast.

‘I know you are sworn to never reveal the secret behind your System’s technology,’ Namjoon begins, ‘And I respect that.’

Jimin nods as Taeh’yung translates.

‘But I think we can easily agree on the fact that your tech has existed outside of your System for centuries now- and is possibly being used by forces of unknown evil, or by organizations who would exploit this if they found out about it.’ Namjoon continues. ‘I think it’s obvious that the mission we had been sent on was, to a certain degree, aiming to do something similar. But everyone on this ship collectively agrees that whatever tech you possess should remain in your System and out of the potential use of Beings who would mistreat it.’

Jimin nods again though it’s slower, eyes narrowed.

‘Which is why I need you to tell me what I can do with this that can help us get out of this situation safely and surely, and return you to your System,’ Namjoon finishes. Taeh’yung translates carefully, his tone though normally neutral as he does his translations, has a slightly pleading tone to it, as though also personally asking Jimin the same favor.

It’s not surprising when Jimin shakes his head.

‘He’s saying no,’ Taeh’yung translates apologetically.

Jimin’s expression is genuinely apologetic as well, but the determination in his gaze tells Namjoon that there was no point pressing it.

‘All right,’ Namjoon nods before facing Taeh’yung. ‘As you know, you are an official member of this ship, permitted to be part of the crew under my command. All crew members must respond to the acting captain of the ship, especially in cases regarding the safety of the ship and the rest of the crew. Therefore it is my express order to you to tell me what you deduced by yourself about this tech.’
Taeh’yung gapes at Namjoon for a moment, mouth opening and closing, eyes moving from Jimin to Namjoon every second.

‘Taeh’yung?’ Jimin reaches out to touch the Zhak’gri in alarm, his expression turning graver with every second as though he was suspecting something.

‘You understood that water had something to do with not being able to detect those Beings- and I know for a fact you thought of something, correctly at that,’ Namjoon glances at Jimin remembering how he had reacted. ‘-so I have to order you to tell me what you discovered.’

Taeh’yung looks stuck, truly caught in the middle. Then he pauses, lips pressed in a thin line together before he speaks to Jimin.

Jimin’s response is immediate, shaking his head, brows furrowing as he glares at Namjoon. It’s odd, being glared at by someone that looks like Jimin. It doesn’t help with the guilt Namjoon feels but he stands firm.

‘I just explained to him about your order and uh my place in the ship but-‘ Taeh’yung begins to say, but before he can continue Jimin’s eyes flash light, a golden sheen erupting for a fraction of a second but it stops the moment Yoongi appears in Namjoon’s sight, a hand wrapping around Jimin’s wrist.

If Namjoon had functioning heart that responded to his senses the way most natural Beings did, his heart would be racing.

Jimin appeared, in all honesty, extremely unthreatening.

His countenance was more welcoming, more gentle, kind- the way a stereotypical prince or idyllic king would be drawn in illustrated books for children. His movements were gentle in a way that was unlike Sk’jin’s whose motives were clearly unclear, creating mistrust at once. But Jimin had an aura that just radiated warmth and kindness.

But for that fraction of a second, Namjoon felt as though he was looking straight into the heart of the sun; crushing, powerful, and despite its light, unfathomably dark.

Jimin blinks rapidly, surprised to find Yoongi there.

‘Just tell us if we can use this, if you can help us,’ Yoongi says quietly as he takes Jimin’s hands in his. They’re glowing faintly and though it’s soft, Namjoon can just about make out the heat waves emanating from Jimin’s hands. How Yoongi is able to hold his hands, Namjoon doesn’t know.

‘You want to help I know,’ Yoongi continues saying quietly. ‘You don’t have to tell us everything.’

Taeh’yung translates the words as quietly as Yoongi speaks it and Jimin finally looks a little less stubborn.

‘Namjoon, explain why you want the tech,’ Yoongi says quietly, not looking away from Jimin. Namjoon is quick to take this opportunity.

‘This cell was the reason why this planet was hidden from scans and sensors. The ship that used this technology was also hidden permanently and allowed the Venture Unit to work in peace without being stopped or inspected. I know that this is part of your shielding technology from your System which is almost entirely hidden from us. So if something this small and singular could somehow hide an entire planet, can it be used to shield us?’
Namjoon waits as Taeh’yung translates. He seemed to be adding more to Namjoon’s words as well, his words earnest and appealing.

‘If they can’t see us, then they can’t shoot at us or attack us- their systems won’t be able to lock us in.’ Namjoon continues. ‘This means we can bring back Hoseok, and if we are backed with the certainty that this could cover us, we can take you back immediately without having to exchange you and make our escape and head towards Bhumi- I mean Menigištîti. Please, I am not asking you to tell me all the secrets of your technology or to explain how it’s created- we just need this to secure our mission.’

The more Taeh’yung translates Jimin’s expression softens little by little. He finally looks down, staring at his hands held in Yoongi’s. Namjoon wants to add more, but something in him (and the warning grip on the back of his arm from Sk’jin) tells him to stay quiet.

After a few more seconds Jimin finally nods and says something shortly to Taeh’yung who nods immediately.

‘He’ll do it,’ Taeh’yung grins brightly and happily.

Jimin adds something else quickly, glancing over at Namjoon and Sk’jin as well.

‘-he’s saying we will probably need something like a…facilitator? To transform the energy of the cell so that it can be used by the ship?’ Taeh’yung frowns, trying his best to translate the more technical terms.

‘Where do we get those-‘

‘-from the wreckage,’ Sk’jin replies at once. ‘I think what Jimin means is we will need a conductor designed to translate the energy or whatever it is this cell uses in order to harness whatever its abilities are.’

‘Will he be able to tell what it looks like,’ Namjoon asks Taeh’yung who repeats the question.

Jimin replies, expression hardened and distant.

‘Yes- the entire ship’s inner facility was designed around the cell,’ Taeh’yung replies carefully. ‘It’s been designed to distribute the cell’s energy.’

‘All right- let’s go,’ Namjoon glances at Yoongi, ‘Spardyti still outside?’

‘Yes.’

‘All right- Sk’jin-‘

‘I’ll fly Jimin and Yoongi there,’ Sk’jin replies blankly, expression guarded and carefully neutral. ‘You and Tae prepare for take-off.’

Namjoon gives Yoongi an inquiring look, for any objection but the Human simply nods in reply and later Jimin does too.

‘All right. Taeh’yung, could you prepare the Hangar Bay and make sure it’s ready to receive the Spardyti once it comes back?’ Namjoon asks the Zhak’gri who looks eager to help.

‘Got it pa!’

‘We should be back in a couple of hours,’ Sk’jin says already making his way out of the Bridge,
‘We’re gonna take the expandable gravity-lifts just in case.’

Namjoon nods, watching as they exit the Bridge before taking a moment to gather his thoughts. He stares blankly at his NaviLet for a moment.

‘Lisai, keep track of Comm-Device 32-0XV and maintain it under highest priority,’ Namjoon orders.

‘Yes captain.’

The unique black-bands he had customized and designed were created to register only to Lisai and to the unique channel within the Užkulisai. It was also designed to only work when worn by the ship crew only. But clearly Hoseok isn’t wearing his, but it was still registering under Lisai’s channel register. Eyes fixed on the lone cell on top of the Table, Namjoon wonders how many of these existed outside of the Ma’ikelawī System and what else they were being used for. There was a whole other reality within their own that used this technology, with uses and purpose far beyond what they could imagine.

What was possible now was unfathomable and beyond anything Namjoon could imagine. This entire planet itself was a prime example of that. Sk’jin’s relation to it, his story, what was born here, and what transpired here, was all a result of this singular cell.

This was beyond comprehension – something akin to how strange and ancient Taeh’yung’s abilities were, or even to an extent, strangely surreal like the Khol’isa as a whole.

Something like magic.

The Akramanese, or whatever it was they were called; the Red Evil, etc. were capable of things beyond what any of them could imagine. And even now, knowing what they knew, they still couldn’t understand what they truly were. What they were capable of.

And these Beings- the Omhlophe; their intention, their motives, their goals were unknown and as unpredictable as the Gaia Case. Taeh’yung had said they smelled like the Akramanese ship, that they felt the same, but that they weren’t the same. What did that mean? Were they some extension? A subunit?

But it all boiled down to this.

To this singular cell, and where it came from.

And this all led to Jimin.

And something tells Namjoon that Jimin would be the one to lead them, to show them the answers.
Yoongi cranes his neck in order to see the very top of the wreckage.

It was an amazing and curious sight to behold. A sight heavy with past pain, sorrow, and death. But today it is covered in green, covered in life and Yoongi would give it another century before it is entirely erased from sight, and possibly, from all memory.

‘I’ll stay here and keep watch from inside,’ Sk’jin says from the doorway, not stepping out.

Yoongi nods in reply. Sk’jin hadn’t been willing to return to the planet as a whole, so expecting him to willingly enter this ship again seemed a little harsh. That, and also the fact that Yoongi suspects Sk’jin needed some time alone. So Yoongi follows after Jimin, pulling along the lifts after him. Jimin easily guides them through a thicket of vines and climbers before they come upon an opening.

There’s a strange familiarity with how it felt inside the ship. Yoongi thinks back to headquarters, where he used to Sleep, and where he was made to Dream.

It’s empty, and it’s void.

Despite being surrounded by so much life and growth; in both places, one where the Yisheng Headquarters was built above, and this where a thriving tropical jungle grew wildly- stepping inside the secret and hidden places felt startlingly like it belonged to another dimension.

Jimin turns a little, pausing in his motions to wait for Yoongi to reach him. He smiles, pointing forwards and miming at himself and then at Yoongi.

‘Lead,’ Yoongi tells him quietly. ‘And I will follow.’

For a few seconds, Jimin doesn’t move. His eyes hold a rather distant expression, a little bit like pain, before he nods, a faint smile on his lips, understanding Yoongi’s tone more than his words.

They’re both quiet; Jimin with his bare feet, and Yoongi with his uncanny soundlessness.

Yoongi wants to tell Jimin that this was a bad idea. Not the part where they try and infuse this technology with their ship. But the part about the exchange. Every cell in his body, every fiber of his being rejects the very notion of this plan. And while theoretically it does seem like the best solution at this given moment, Yoongi can’t help but strongly feel against it.

Of course he doesn’t expect Namjoon to actually give Jimin over. Everyone on board the ship is well aware of how important Jimin is, and his safety and security is their main priority. But the very idea of having Jimin that close to the Omhlophe was extremely repulsive to Yoongi.

Of course he wanted to bring Hoseok back; the Ngfy’widan was an important ally that fell into this unfortunate situation as a result of their inability to come together as a working team. This was all their responsibility and Yoongi could see that.

And though Yoongi didn’t like any of this, he also saw no other way of getting out of this situation. The Omhlophe could track their movement via the Comm-Device Hoseok had on him. So even if they were to abandon Hoseok and attempt to run away, that would be effectively killing Hoseok while leaving everything unresolved without any idea of what to expect from these Beings.
They were stuck in a stalemate, and there was no other way to approach it other than to follow through with the Omhlophe’s proposal.

Not to mention, Jimin was incredibly adamant. Though he didn’t understand a single thing he had said to him and his understanding of Jimin’s character was probably not very deep or possibly even correct due to his own incapability within the functional emotional range, he knew could tell at once that Jimin could be incredibly stubborn if he wanted.

Little streams of light illuminate parts of the ship, but otherwise it’s almost entirely dark. But Jimin doesn’t have any problem seeing in the dark. Yoongi quietly slips on the helmet he’d brought with him, purely out of habit, and allows himself to see better. When Jimin turns around to check on him, he doesn’t seem surprised by the helmet. Instead he has a curious look in his eyes- one that Yoongi doesn’t understand.

They reach a tilted hallway that breaks downwards, revealing a large and almost cylindrical chamber, with stairs on almost all sides leading downwards to a main wide working dais-like platform. Jimin glances back at him again, as though to say they had arrived.

Yoongi takes a good look, the visor recording each section, running basic scans, identifying known parts.

This place was old, incredibly so.

But seeing as it was built to support and accommodate the cell from Jimin’s System, it simply begged the question of how long the GLA had known of what Menigiští truly was and whether or not they could see deeper and into Ma’ikelawī. There was much to be asked, much to be answered, but based on Yoongi’s relatively short experience living, he believes that not everything should be revealed at once, but rather gradually in due time.

They descend downwards; Yoongi counts 56 steps before he’s at the bottom. Jimin doesn’t pause but instead leads them towards the center and inwards the great structure that tapered upwards into a singular glass-encased box of sorts.

Yoongi follows Jimin into a slim and rather narrow hallway, the walls and ceiling lined with intricate network of wires and exposed chips. At the center of the furthest most wall was a small pocket, shaped and outlined to perfectly fit the cell that was now resting in the Užkulisai Navigation Table.

Jimin reaches the end, fingers carefully following the grid of wires and tracking their layout.

‘Yoongi,’ he points towards a mounted transformer to one side of the wall where a series of wires vanished into. Posing to stand the lifts by the doorway, Yoongi walks up to where Jimin was pointing and reaches up. The transformer opens up and a complicated matrix of wires and chips appear. Jimin taps his elbow and gesture to pulling out the wires from the sockets. Yoongi nods in understanding and they set about, deconstructing the wires. Yoongi hands Jimin a small but effective flat knife to pry the wire clasps off of the wall while Yoongi deftly unplugged the sockets, clipping the raw and extended wires quickly. They do this 4 more time before they can pull off the board on which the cell-socket had been mounted. Jimin is thorough in his search, peering at the wires and other boards carefully.

It was entirely possible that someone within his System had been distributing these to the GLA. It was also possible that they were being very carefully and systematically robbed. Or possibly, all of this happened at random, that there were no real bad sides, that it was just one unfortunate series of events that led up to all that happened. The possibilities were endless and Jimin was probably just as confused as the rest of them.

‘Done?’ Yoongi asks as they place the board over the lift. It wasn’t heavy, but the wires were long and cumbersome.

Jimin nods, tucking in all the wires securely. Yoongi grabs the handles and begins pulling it up the stairs. Jimin joins him, trying to share in the task of pulling the lift. He smiles sheepishly, as though he thought it was funny but at the same time didn’t want to leave Yoongi to do the job.

‘It’s all right,’ Yoongi takes Jimin’s hand off of the handle. ‘I’m only directing it.’

Jimin puts his hand back, his expression adamant.

‘Lead, and I will follow.’ Yoongi tells him.

Jimin has that same expression from earlier when Yoongi had said those words. Something almost like pain.

‘Did I say that before?’ Yoongi asks.

Jimin approaches him, hands reaching up and removing his helmet almost gently.

It’s dark but not so much that the environment wasn’t visible. Yoongi blinks a few times before his eyes can properly adjust. His sight, he knew, had been altered and fixed to be of superior quality as compared to his fellow species and others as well. It takes only a few seconds for him to completely and fully adjust, using Jimin as his focal point.

His surroundings illuminate and clarify around him, centering from Jimin.

Jimin is looking closely at him, his expression searching, almost expectant. Yoongi has a feeling he definitely said those very words to Jimin before, to have initiated such a strong reaction from the latter.

It’s entirely silent and Yoongi remains still as Jimin continues to watch him. Finally, Jimin looks away and instead focuses on the helmet. He studies the object carefully, turning it over a few times before he makes to slip it over his head but Yoongi stops him, a strange feeling at the idea of seeing Jimin wearing the helmet.

‘No?’ Jimin asks.

‘No,’ Yoongi replies with a nod.

‘Okay,’ Jimin smiles, seemingly pleased with this small bit of communication. He hands it over to Yoongi who takes it with both hands. By the time he’s slipped it back on Jimin is beaming, quite pleased, and a step ahead, tugging at the lift.

‘Lead,’ he says, pointing forward.

Yoongi feels the urge to laugh— not a full-belly laugh, but more of a chuckle more than anything. Jimin seemed so pleased with himself that Yoongi can’t find it in him to change their arrangement.

Jimin hums under his breath as they make their way out. It’s a little surreal but Yoongi feels as though the dust motes in the air shift in motion in accordance to the tune of Jimin’s humming. Surreal, but probably not unlikely.

When they push past the vines and climbers Sk’jin is standing out by the opening under the sun, peering out into the jungle. He doesn’t seem to notice their presence, instead simply staring out. He feels Jimin’s hand on his arm, as though inquiring what the matter was.

‘Take it inside,’ Yoongi tells him quietly, pointing into the Spardyti as he pulls off his helmet. ‘I’ll collect Sk’jin.’

Jimin nods, concern in his eyes as he looks at Sk’jin’s still form.

Yoongi makes his way through the overgrowth, making sure to make some noise so as to not startle the Khol’isa. He pauses, feet from Sk’jin before speaking.

‘We are ready to leave.’

Sk’jin nods slowly in reply.

‘Do you want to go in there?’ Yoongi asks the Khol’isa quietly. ‘We can, if you wish it.’

Sk’jin still doesn’t move, eyes fixed on something past the trees.

‘No. Not yet.’ He replies. ‘They’re not there.’

Yoongi doesn’t know what Sk’jin means by this but he doesn’t push it.

Sk’jin looks away, a smile on his face as he regards Yoongi.

‘Thank you Yoongi,’ he smiles.

Yoongi isn’t sure why Sk’jin is thanking him but he nods in reply.

‘We got the stuff,’ Sk’jin announces, ‘We’re coming back, please be ready!’

‘Got it!’ Taeh’yung replies chirpily.

‘How’d you like it in there?’ Sk’jin asks conversationally, suddenly rather light and seemingly back to his regular self. The past hour must have been very fruitful for the Khol’isa, seeing as he had entirely recovered.

‘Strange,’ Yoongi replies truthfully. ‘Familiar, yet new.’

Sk’jin nods to that, ‘I totally get what you mean.’

But Yoongi doesn’t totally get what Sk’jin means.

Jimin is already seated inside the Spardyti, the gravity-lift secured and put to the side.

‘Had fun?’ Sk’jin smiles down at Jimin who regards Sk’jin with confusion for just a split second before he smiles in reply, as though hoping that would suffice.

‘He’s cute,’ Sk’jin whispers loudly.

‘The cutest!’ Taeh’yung chimes in.

‘I’m not cute?’ Sk’jin chuckles back as he starts up the Spardyti.

‘No! You’re handsome! Like, super handsome!’

Sk’jin laughs, delighted. The Transporter rises in the air and they turn away from the wreckage.
Sk’jin doesn’t so much as glance back at it, his attitude carefree and nonchalant.

‘Thank you Tae, you are too.’

Taeh’yung makes screeching sounds that makes Jimin laugh out loud even though he doesn’t understand the interaction.

‘Ah! I think I can see you guys now! The Hangar is open wide and ready-?!’

There’s shuffling sounds and a lot of gasping from Taeh’yung that sounds excited and a lot of sudden cursing from Namjoon that sounds anything but excited.

‘Hey- you guys okay?’ Sk’jin asks, not a single trace of amusement in his voice. They’re not far from the Užkulisai but not close enough to exactly spot the ship so they have no clue as to what was causing this sudden commotion.

There’s an excited scream and a shrieking roar that to Yoongi’s alarm could be heard not just from the Comm-Device but from outside the ship.

Both Sk’jin and Jimin jump in shock, hands at their ears wincing at the loudness of the sound.

‘Fuck- shit what the fuck is that-’

‘Oh fuck-‘ Sk’jin curses, increasing speed suddenly and dangerously.

Jimin is spluttering questions, clearly directed at Taeh’yung but there’s no response.

‘Uh- I think it might be one of those things,’ Sk’jin ruminates. ‘Shit- guess we were in one place for too long-‘

‘-what the fuck is that?! Taeh’yung get back here-!’

Yoongi spots it before he spots the Užkulisai.

A strange dark green mottled hulking creature that stood hunched nearly on all fours, seemed to loom above their ship. It was incredibly large, to the point of being an actual physical threat to their ship. It had no visible eyes, yet it appeared to have a head of sorts and weirdly anthropomorphic limbs. And though it lacked in eyes, it more than made up in teeth.

‘Ah fuck, I think that’s Lumpy.’

‘WHY DOES IT HAVE A NAME-?!’ Namjoon yells.

Sk’jin actually laughs for a moment before he replies, worry in his tone, ‘There’s a bunch of them- I’ve never seen them like this before though- never knew they were this large.’

‘That doesn’t help- I’m back inside the ship I can’t fire at it-‘

‘Don’t! It’ll turn more aggressive,’ Sk’jin slows down at a safe distance, regarding the hulking mass. ‘Where’s Tae?’

‘He’s running around it,’ Namjoon hisses out clearly frustrated and panicked. ‘Fuck- Taeh’yung please stop-‘

‘I’ll distract it by firing a missile in the distance to attract it-‘ Sk’jin is beginning to say, activating the weapons board but Jimin suddenly stands from his seat and walks out of the main cock-pit towards the door.

‘Jimin?’ Yoongi stands at once but Jimin makes him sit down again with exaggerated reassuring smiles and nods before calling Sk’jin and miming that he get closer.

‘...should I?’ Sk’jin asks Yoongi instead.

Flashing imagery of ancient paintings, golden light, and overwhelming power goes through Yoongi’s mind before he nods.

‘Well fuck,’ is all Sk’jin says.

They fly closer, successfully gaining the attention of the creature that rears its eyeless head at them. Jimin opens the door quickly and the emergency cabin-pressure functions activate, creating strong Atmoshield barriers around the open door area. They’re a little over the creature, with some distance from its long limbs. It screams at them, the velocity of its pitch physically shaking them a little. Jimin struggles a little to stand before he stabilizes himself.

Only to casually jump down.

‘Fucking Spaces-‘ Sk’jin curses, eyes widening almost comically and for once looking rather ugly in his shock. And Yoongi would laugh if he too wasn’t entirely reeling from what he just witnessed.

There’s a bright light from below them and it hazily reminds Yoongi of what he had witnessed with his poison-induced fevered mind back in Pompa. The way Jimin had descended down towards him in a flood of golden light.

And suddenly he’s not worried at all.

‘Sk’jin, prepare to land,’ he says quietly over Sk’jin’s stream of curses and profanities. Sk’jin, clearly taken aback by Yoongi’s lack of reaction, takes this to somehow calm himself down enough to take them downwards.

The moment they hit the tree-line Sk’jin burst out into hysterical laughter.

The strange create is crouched down, making itself small, Jimin on its shoulder. Taeh’yung is standing quite steadily on the creature’s lifted palm and he’s waving at them as though it was a completely normal thing.

Sk’jin continues to laugh hysterically all the way until they land.

‘Nam- Namjoon, are you seeing this?’ he gasps, actual tears in his eyes as they step out of the Spardyti.

The Kutsoglerin is there by the Hangar Bay, mouth hanging open, a large TeorSer in his hands.

‘I swear,’ he says in a dazed tone. ‘I thought I saw all there was to see.’

And Yoongi has to agree.

Here was clearly an unknown wildly dangerous creature behaving like a docile pet, head bowed as Jimin jumps off of its shoulder and onto its palm where Taeh’yung catches him gleefully. It lowers the duo down to the ground and while Taeh’yung runs back towards them, looking as though he was having the time of his life to gush at Namjoon who still can’t seem to close him mouth, Jimin remains close to the creature.

Jimin places his hand over the great beast’s head.

And again, there is no great display of visible power or splendor. Nothing but a single touch—out of everything that Jimin was, out of everything that Jimin is—Yoongi can’t help but feel drawn towards this seemingly unimpressive moment. This simple touch, this quiet gesture. Everything about it was so much more powerful. So much more dangerous. So much more—

The creature stands on all fours again, a foul stench rolling off of it and Sk’jin actually retches next to him. Then slowly, it turns around and with a fluidity that was odd for such a large creature, slips through the thick trees.

‘That was fucking amazing wasn’t it?’ Sk’jin breathes out, hands on his hips, as though disapproving but also impressed.

Jimin turns his head around, beaming brightly and exaggerating his relief with a hand to his forehead as though he was feeling faint. Taeh’yung cheers him with a loud chorus of ‘CHIM!’ as he walks over to them.

But Yoongi shakes his head in reply.

‘What, you’re saying that isn’t impressive?’ Sk’jin snorts, crossing his arms in incredulity.

‘No,’ Yoongi finds himself saying. ‘It’s beautiful.’

---

Jimin is relieved to leave the planet. He’s not sure if it was because of the way the emotional weight of the planet bore down on Sk’jin, or because of what he had discovered in the planet, or if it was because of what he could sense had been created and then removed from the planet, or if it was because leaving meant being able to bring back Hoseok and understand just who it was that wanted and knew him.

It could be a combination of all of these, but either way, Jimin is relieved to leave its surface.

He’s sitting inside the Engines Room, where the main components of the ship could be accessed. The technology from the GLA was not unlike what he was familiar with though Jimin feels like the entirety of the designs felt as though it was purposefully created to appear complex and difficult. He could see at least 10 different ways to simplify and improve the designs of the Engines Room, to use less resources, material, and fortify the energy-cells to be twice as powerful.

But perhaps they would evolve in the future, to better understand mechanics and systems. Life moved ahead in accordance to what the beings within it could handle and understand. And in Jimin’s experience he saw just how badly Beings reacted to something they didn’t understand or could immediately facilitate into their reality.

There was always two main reactions: fear and aggression.

And these two sparked hatred, violence, panic, assumptions, and triggered illogical responses.

Rarely has Jimin seen a fair reaction.

And he had felt that the Panel that had been sent to negotiate with Ma‘ikelawí had been some of the rare Beings who could accept and react with proper conduct and neutrality. But it would appear that he was wrong.

There was no doubt in Jimin’s mind that someone of the Panel had betrayed them. There was no other possible way of possibly obtaining their technology like this. The Panel had stayed in Akramana for weeks, which could have given them the time and opportunity to potentially steal or mimic their technology.

But they had not been able to detect any lie within the Panel- doubt, mistrust, and wariness for sure. But they could hear no lie, hear no falsehood in their treaty and agreement. So how was it that they could have betrayed them without their knowing?

‘This is really complicated,’ Taeh’yung frowns down at the wires jumbled about them.

‘Then it’s a good thing I’m doing this and not you,’ Jimin teases.

Taeh’yung drops the wires and goes back to juggling the cell in his hands. He gives Jimin a short but sheepish look, one that Jimin understands instantly as guilt.

‘You don’t have to feel guilty,’ Jimin tells him at once. ‘I understand why you’re doing this- and I will do all I can within my allowance as well.’

‘You’re scared,’ Taeh’yung observes, spinning the cell on his finger tip.

‘I am,’ Jimin nods as he kneels down next to a large core, popping open the covering lid. ‘What else has been stolen from my home that has destroyed so many others? What has been exploited and robbed, to serve the selfish and the wicked and feed their agenda? What did I miss? What did I see but did not understand?’

‘You do not have control over that,’ Taeh’yung shrugs. ‘It’s not something you can orchestrate- no one has that ability.’

‘No- but I carry that responsibility,’ Jimin replies, carefully studying the circuit board in front of him. ‘It is who I am.’

‘Hmm,’ Taeh’yung hums thoughtfully. ‘I doubt that.’

A little irked, Jimin looks away from the circuit board at the Zhak’gri.

‘But it is- I am the fate of my people, I was born to guide and lead them in peace and unity. To make them safe, to keep them safe.’ Jimin explains. ‘It is who I am.’

‘I knew someone,’ Taeh’yung stops spinning the cell. ‘Who felt the same way. That he was born simply to do one thing, to be one thing.’
'Who was he? What did he do?' Jimin asks.

Taeh’yung carefully places the cell on the floor.

‘Everyone believes that they are born for one specific reason- that they are born to do one thing, that there is a cosmic reasoning of their existence; that their importance and identity comes from simply one thing and they are lost without it.’ Taeh’yung says instead. ‘That thought shapes their lives, it recreates them continuously- they are slaves to that notion. The way you are to your title, the way he was to his duty.

‘But it is purpose that gives meaning to our actions- otherwise we are simply nothing in the vastness of the Universe,’ Jimin argues.

‘Then would you say that all purpose is right?’ Taeh’yung shoots back. ‘It was the purpose of the Red Evil that destroyed Menigišiti, their identity and calling that made them do what they did. Would you say that their purpose is correct?’

‘…no.’

‘But it is who they are,’ Taeh’yung smiles. ‘You cannot control what can happen, you cannot carry that responsibility, because you are not them- you can only carry your own responsibility, control only what you do.’

‘What are you trying to say?’ Jimin asks, confused beyond words.

But Taeh’yung just smiles in reply and says, ‘Namjoon is here!’

And true to his word, Namjoon appears inside the Engines Room, carrying with him a few screens, a box of mechanical tools and supplies, while balancing a tray of what appeared to be tea.

He says something to Taeh’yung, nodding towards the tea. The Zhak’gri laughs, getting up to relieve the Kutsoglerin of his burdens.

Jemin looks back at the cell on the floor. He tries to make sense of Taeh’yung’s words. What did he mean by it?

All his life, Jimin was aware of his rank, his title, his purpose. He knew what he was meant to do, what he was supposed to do, and who he was supposed to be. After all, the title of Yemenifesi Ch’inik’eti was not an easy or light one to bear. So Jimin did all he could to live to this title, to this meaning. And with it came duties, responsibilities, vows, and guidelines that he bore and followed.

It was stated in his title; his purpose and meaning. He was the fate of his people- he would guide them to live in peace and harmony.

But he had obviously failed.

He vowed to protect and keep safe his home, his planet, his System. And yet here they were, here he was, ages into the future without knowing what happened, with no answer, no connection, and no direction.

‘You cannot control what can happen, you cannot carry that responsibility, because you are not them- you can only carry your own responsibility, control only what you do.’

Had he done something, instigated something within the boundaries of what he considered to be his duties, that started this? Did the purpose of his title blind him to what was happening around him, that was glaringly obvious to those around him?

And Taeh’yung was right.

Each living Being lived in accordance to their own purpose- whether self-appointed or given- and that moved and motivated them. But was that purpose always right? Of course not, Jimin knew that.

So had the purpose of his title, of his birth-right, catalyzed a reaction that he could have stopped had it not been for borders he limited himself to? He stares at the cell for a while longer.

The secrets of his people’s creations, of their discoveries and hard work – long they swore to protect it, long they swore to maintain it and never let it leave the borders of their System. But for what? What was the basis of this secret? They preferred to keep to themselves, and there was no fault in that- yet what drove them to hide and defend themselves.

Did a fear for an unforeseeable future stop them from moving forward, from being a solution to an equation rather than being the problem or factor of fear?

‘Jimin?’

Jimin starts, surprised to find Yoongi sitting next to him. He’s holding a cup of tea in his hands, clearly made for Jimin.

A sudden and powerful wave of emotion hits Jimin.

Yoongi had cleaned up, changed his clothes; his hair was damp and a mess. Jimin can’t help but see all the scars on Yoongi, see all the years old lesions and layers of healed over tissue damage. He can’t help but sense the weariness within the Human.

Shakily he takes the cup and it only serves to bring a worried look in Yoongi’s eyes. The Human tilts his head, as though in question.

There was no predicting the future. There was no use in regretting the past.

The only thing anyone could be responsible for, the only thing anyone could control, was to do what they could in the present.

And Jimin couldn’t prevent what happened in the past. He couldn’t predict what would happen in the future. Maybe he would never know how or why this cell was here before him. But he could do something now, to enable them to succeed, and to at the very least, make the Beings of this ship safe.

‘Jimin! Namjoon wants to know if you’ll need any additional help or tools-‘

Jimin places the cup of tea next to the cell before he stands up, taking the cell with him.

‘In order to activate and use this cell, we will need at least 10 separate energy-cells to stabilize and defuse the orbital-resonance. We will also need at least 5 anti-matter cells to fuel the rate of fusion and transform it into a stable accessible source of fuel to replace the already existing shield-settings of the ship; I will also need at least 20 water-cells,’ Jimin reels off. ‘I cannot single-handedly operate this change in the ship in time for us to use it, and I want us to succeed- I want to bring Hoseok back, to complete this mission, and to go home. And in order to do that, I will do all I can to help you.’
Taeh’yung hastens to translate, a bright light growing in his eyes, unable to stop grinning broadly as he does so. Namjoon’s expression is first confused and then he brightens up as well. Jimin feels a hand gripping on the back of his shirt, looking back, it’s Yoongi and the Human has an oddly startled look on his face.

‘You’ll explain your tech?’ Taeh’yung asks excitedly.

Jimin nods in reply.

‘A lot has been done, by misusing what my people created in order to protect our homes. This cell alone has robbed lives, homes, cities, planets. It has destroyed more than I can comprehend, more than what I can see. I am no longer home, it is unknown to me now,’ Jimin grips the cell tighter, ignoring the emptiness that came whenever he tried to reconnect with his home. ‘And maybe I can stop that from happening- or-…or something like that.’

Taeh’yung pulls him into a strong hug out of the blue before he hastens to translate. Jimin is sort of stuck in Taeh’yung’s embrace though he doesn’t fight it. He can’t help but smile in reaction to the eagerness in Taeh’yung’s voice. When Jimin does finally manage to escape Taeh’yung’s strong hug he finds that Namjoon has an intensely relieved expression on his face, backed with joy and delight. But for some reason, Yoongi still appeared hesitant. Which was odd considering he had also asked Jimin to at least explain what he could about his tech to increase their chances of success.

‘Could you repeat what you need again? Namjoon says he’ll bring them out,’ Taeh’yung is vibrating where he stands.

Jimin nods and repeats the items they would need to properly install and use the cell to their advantage.

‘We might need stop somewhere to make sure it’s functioning as it should,’ Jimin adds.

Namjoon looks concerned at that. Then he hears Sk’jin’s voice on his Comm-Device and Namjoon is slowly nodding in agreement. They continue to speak amongst themselves but then Yoongi asks a question, and Namjoon replies a little slowly, like he was unsure. And then without preamble, Yoongi just leaves the Engines Room.

‘If we stop it could make the Omhlophe suspicious,’ Taeh’yung translates quickly. ‘They might change something or try something- we’re going to have to risk it-‘

‘I’m not sure if that…oh,’ Jimin pauses.

‘I think…well, I don’t think Yoongi likes this idea at all. Especially with so many loopholes…’ Taeh’yung says thoughtfully, scratching at his chin.

If the shield didn’t work, it meant that they wouldn’t be able to mask their movements and protect them from sensors, leaving them exposed and chances of Jimin actually being taken would increase. Jimin trusts that no one on the ship would allow him to be taken away. That was in itself a fact. And this wasn’t because Jimin had a self-entitled sense of importance, but because they did actually need him to complete their main mission and objective.

They needed each other, and that was a simple fact.

‘I’ll be right back,’ Jimin tells Taeh’yung who nods in understanding and Jimin appreciates that. What he doesn’t appreciate is the wild eyebrow wiggling and suggestive smile.
Ignoring how his ears felt hot, Jimin exits the Engines Room and makes his way upwards.

It’s easy enough being able to sense where Yoongi was. So his feet take him to up to the Second Level and straight to Yoongi’s Cabin door. It’s closed, but Jimin remembers Taeh’yung telling him he had the highest authority in the ship. Hesitantly, at first, he knocks tentatively.

‘That’s not going to work,’ Taeh’yung chuckles and it makes Jimin’s face burn with embarrassment. ‘The word you’re looking for is “open”- just call the ship’s name and say that.’

Jimin nods tentatively and clears his throat.

‘Lisai, open.’

The door slides open, making Jimin feel a little like he was doing something illegal but at the same time glad. Because Yoongi is on his bed, back turned to the doorway. It makes Jimin want to laugh; the Human’s behavior is incredibly child-like and most likely a result of not knowing how to feel or react.

‘Yoongi?’
