Struggle To Salvation

by LadyCelestialStar

Summary

Harry's had a hard life, much harder than most people could have ever thought of. Unfortunately, it only gets harder on him in his fifth year. Finally he's had enough and decides to go all out for once, but when Umbridge fights back, it affects both his life, and possibly her freedom...permanently.

This may sound like the story Exploring Harry Potter's Life. Well...it is.

When reading this story, you will have to have the appropriate book beside you. This is a reading the book fic, without the actual story line. You'll get the hang of it soon enough.

Labels: Paragraph = self explanatory.
Dialogue line = One or two lines where a character speaks or does an action while speaking.
Dialogue set = More than two lines where a character is speaking and doing actions.

Notes

I don't own Harry Potter.

Take it slow the first time around. There's no rush. When you get a notice of an update, then that means you've got ten chapters to go through. There was over one hundred and eighteen when this story got kicked off originally. So we've got a long way to go.
See the end of the work for more notes.
Umbridge was watching her class, containing the Gryffindor and Slytherin fifth years, as they read her "Ministry Approved" textbook. She was confident in the knowledge that now; there was no way that they were going to rise up against the Ministry. That was everyone's (who was truly loyal to the Ministry at any rate) worst fear, an army of students being commanded by that doddering old fool, Dumbledore.

She took a particular pleasure in watching young Mr. Potter read through the book and write some notes down in a notebook with a scowl on his face. Nothing seemed to brighten her day more then to see the horrible little liar get taken down several pegs.

"Ahh...being a teacher to small children is so wonderful" she thought with a large smirk on her toad like lips.

If she had moved a little closer towards the young, raven haired lad she would have had the chance to read what the boy was writing. Unfortunately for her, she didn't know that it wasn't anything that spelt good news for her.

After the bell had rang to signal that it was the end of class, Harry, Hermione and Ron had wandered down to the Great Hall for lunch. Harry was still writing into his little black notebook as they walked and that, in itself, attracted Hermione's attention.

"Harry, what are you writing?" she said trying to peer into the small book. It wasn't often that Harry would write in that book, normally it was just one or two lines and she never got to see what it was he was writing.

Harry looked sideways at her and smiled. "Something that will completely eradicate that sorry excuse for fiction she insists that we read."

Slightly taken aback by his tone and manner of speaking, she stared at Harry. But then Hermione frowned.

"Harry, while it’s true that the book preaches non-practical use of magic, it is still reasonably sound, the Ministry would have checked out all the facts. The Department of Magical Education wouldn't let the book past them without it having at the very least 95% truth to it." she said shortly.

Harry smirked "One word, Lockhart." and with that he turned away from the Great Hall's staircase and traveled onto the direction in which the library was located. Hermione wanted to follow him, but Ron held her back.

"Leave him be, when he gets this way, you know it will be good." he said with a wicked grin on his face.

“What are you talking about? He's never been this way! Every time he plans or thinks he knows what’s really going on, it turns out he's wrong. Name one time that he was right and I was wrong.” said Hermione with a slightly snobby attitude.

"One word, Lockhart" said Ron with that same evil grin, as he took an embarrassed Hermione by the hand and led her to the Great Hall.
Thankfully it was only a half-day that day because Harry didn't reappear to them until dinner had already started. They even went to the library to find him and try as they might. It was to no avail. Madam Pince had shuffled them both out, with a strange smile on her face, telling the both of them that Harry didn't want to be disturbed. It was no secret that even she held some contempt for the Defense Against the Dark Arts teacher. Especially after what she said about disposing of half of the books in the school library.

When he arrived in the Great Hall, he wasn't carrying anything except for a small white envelope and his little black book, the strange thing was, he wasn't alone. A tall, stern looking man came walking up behind him.

As Harry stopped he held up the small envelope, the man walked past him and snatched the envelope right out of his hand, without even stopping. Harry gave a small smile and placed both hands into his pocket, leaned back in a smug pose and smirked up to Umbridge, who didn't have any inkling of what was going on, but she did look quite frightened.

"Delores, how nice to see you again." said the man with an indifferent look upon his face.

Umbridge gulped. "H..Hello, R...R...Rivers. Nice to s..see you t..too."

"Do you have any idea, why I am here this evening?" said Rivers still looking indifferent, but ripping open the envelope and reading it quickly.

She shook her head quickly. He looked down at his chest and slowly shook his head. While he held the bridge of his nose in his left hand, he put the letter in the pocket of his cloak and pulled out a copy of her textbook.

"Recognize this?" when she nodded quickly, he continued. "I received a message from a very concerned student that you were teaching, outdated, unproven and harmful material in class."

"What do you mean, outdated, unproven and harmful? That book was certified by the International Department of Magical Education!" she said indignantly.

"True, it WAS certified by my department. In 1921. Since then the 'Theory of Gymndons Conjurtor' alone has caused many people who have tried to defend themselves with its so-called "aid" to suffer lifelong injuries. And that is the entire basis of the book! None of the other theories in it or any better. In fact, they are several times worse."

He then waved his wand over his head and every last copy of the Defense Against the Dark Art textbook was summoned to him. Then, in a flash of green smoke, they were gone.

"I'm going to be very nice and give you two weeks to get a better book for the students to learn from. If you don't have a better book, that teaches them BOTH theory AND practical, I will find a teacher that will. Oh yes, and I almost forgot, you have to run the books by me first. No going past me and authorizing them to the Minister. I can make damn sure that the people higher up on the food chain than him find out about your little stunts." He then turned on his heel and walked towards the door. He stopped when he reached Harry.

"Thanks for letting us know. God knows what kind of damage she could have done." Harry smiled in response. When Rivers left, Umbridge sent Harry a murderous look. Harry only smirked back and the teachers shared in the joy of bringing that old toad some well-deserved misery. The rest of the school stood up and applauded Mr. Potter, including even some of the Slytherins, and just to aggravate her, Harry took a bow.

After dinner Umbridge left the Great Hall, slammed her office door shut behind her. She couldn't believe it, beaten by a lying, spoiled, mentally challenged, brat! She wasn't going to let this slide, though she didn't know how she was going to get even with that little beast. Then, that very same "beast" came in through the door to her office. Umbridge looked up, a little confused, but then she remembered that she had given him a week long detention, and this was the last of those joyful nights. Tonight she was going to do something different.

Harry knew picking a fight with Umbridge while he still had detention was a bad idea, but he knew that the International representative of Magical Education was only in England for a short time. He needed to oust the book soon, before she ruined everyone in fifth and seventh's years chances of getting respectable and realistic grades in the class.

He made to sit down, but she grabbed his arm and gave him a vicious smile. He had seen that kind of look in his Uncle Vernon's eyes and he knew that he was not going to go to bed tonight without physical conflict. But she wouldn't be that stupid to do something like that in a school. Not with Dumbledore's office a few floors away.

She walked over to a small picture of Filch's ragged cat, Mr. Norris and nodded at it. The mangy old cat then meowed and turned and hurried off. Filch then came into the room, grinning ear to ear and his grin grew bigger when he saw Harry looking between the two of them.

"Not going to do the normal lines then, I take it?" said Harry, looking at Filch with curiosity, yet edging slightly away from the two of them. The smiles on their faces were not pleasant and it gave him an uneasy feeling.

"Not in the slightest Mr. Potter. My little reminder doesn't seem to help you not to tell lies." she said, with that large sneer on her toad like face.

"Actually it does, that's why I sent Mr. River's that owl." he smirked, wiping the grin off the horrible teacher's face. But then it came back in full force. She nodded towards Filch, who then brought out a....

"What's the whip for?" said Harry getting a little nervous now, but his voice didn't reveal it. Both sadists just smiled and moved forward, slowly. He backed up into the desk, and looked round quickly, there was no escape.

Three hours later he finally reached the seventh floor. He had to double over and get his breath to slow down quite a few times. His entire torso was on fire and his legs couldn't carry him anymore, after Filch and Umbridge both took the whip and other paraphenelia to him for the past three hours he had to hurry down to the school laundry room and wrap his bleeding chest, legs and back with one and a half sheets. It looked as if he gained the twenty pounds that Madame Pomfrey had always wanted him to. He tried to remember what had happened, but some of the parts were starting to get a little fuzzy and he felt himself getting colder and colder. He was getting very dizzy and he wasn't able to keep his eyes to stay focused. He had some healing potions in his trunk just for emergencies, now the only problem was getting to them, he was getting very tired.

Then a voice came from behind him, Harry slowly turned around and saw McGonagall come up the stairs. "Didn't you hear me Potter? I asked you what you were doing out so late, it's about five minutes after curfew." she said sternly.

He was too tired to give her a complete answer, and his world was beginning to spin out of control. Harry opened his mouth to answer "Long detention" when he couldn't stand anymore and he started to fall over the railing of the moving staircase. Professor McGonagall screamed and made a grab for him as he tumbled over. She managed to grab his foot and magicked him back onto the stairs.

"WHAT WERE YOU THINKING BOY?! WHAT'S WRONG WITH....." she stopped short. She kneeled down quickly laid his head on her lap and felt his forehead; he was burning up with fever. She noticed the sheets under his robes and lifted the layers; she screamed a second time, only this one was louder.

The teachers, who were patrolling the top floors, came running up from all different directions and the Gryffindor students came running when they heard both screams. Students were standing above and teachers below the sobbing Transfigurations Professor. Dumbledore came hurrying to where the throng of people stood and saw Harry laying in his Head of House's lap. His face paled.

"Minerva?" said Flitwick cautiously. She looked wildly around, this scared her poor Gryffindors to no ends. They thought she had gone mad. Ron, Hermione, Fred, George, Ginny, or Neville couldn't get to the front of line no matter how hard they tried. They couldn't see that it was Harry that she was crying about.

McGonagall was looking for Snape and when he came to the front, she pulled him done roughly to his knees and lifted the sheets, so little that only he could see. He was so taken aback that he fell off his feet and landed backwards into Dumbledore's knees.

"What is it? What is wrong?" he asked Snape. However, the Potions Master did not respond to him. He then scrambled back and started whipping out potions and administering them to the fevered boy. Once Harry was stable enough to be moved, they whisked him off to the Hospital Wing, it was there that the Weasely's and Hermione saw that the injured student was Harry, and they had to hold each other to stop themselves from falling down in shock.

Harry's fever didn't break till a week later, the entire school (including a few of the Slytherins) were happy to see the young man come down to the Great Hall. But they were horrified to see that he had to lean on a cane and was followed by a harassed looking Madam Pomfrey.

"You should have stayed in bed Potter! You're still very weak from losing all that blood!"

"I feel fine; I was losing the feeling in my legs from all the laying around. This gets me the exercise that I need and besides," he added with a look towards the Gryffindor table. "I want to see Hermione and Ron. You never let them in to see me that I know of."

He hobbled over to Ron and Hermione and they both rushed to him and took him in their arms. Harry gritted his teeth, they had clutched at him too quickly and too tightly, but he allowed them to hold onto him as tight as they wanted. They exchanged no words but just held onto each other, and then Fred, George and Ginny came over and enshrouded Harry even further. After five minutes of just standing there hugging, they helped Harry to the table and began loading a plate for him.

"Mr. Potter, I have a question for you." said Professor Dumbledore, who had happened to stand behind Harry. Harry looked up at him, for the first time that year their eyes met. Harry couldn't help but smile. Dumbledore sighed with relief, not sensing any redness in his eyes or hatred in his mind.

"Do you remember who had left you in that state that forced you to go to the Hospital Wing?"

Everyone in the Hall leaned forward, a few were eager to duel out some intense judgment to the person responsible. Even Malfoy fingered his wand in anticipation. He disliked Potter, but he really didn't HATE him. Not enough to actually wish him that kind of harm to happen to him. Maybe a bloody nose or black eye, but not something life threatening. Umbridge and Filch looked deadly pale and nervous; nobody noticed this, with the exception of Professor Snape. He made a mental note to tell Dumbledore his suspicions.

Harry shook his head. "I don't remember sir, I can only remember leaving the Great Hall to go to detention." It was the truth, he couldn't remember even being saved from certain death by McGonagall.

"Whom did you serve detention with that night?" asked Dumbledore quickly.

"Umbridge"

Students and teachers whipped around swiftly and stared. Umbridge composed herself quickly and stated. "He never made it to my detention that night. As a matter of fact, you owe me another one for not showing up, you now have to serve two more nights." she reverted back to her smug self. The students and staff stared at her in shock, but the dam finally broke.

"NO, HE MOST CERTAINLY WILL NOT!" screamed the staff. None more louder than Professor McGonagall.

DUMBLEDORE, DON'T LET HER!! HE WAS INJURED! shouted the students.

IT WAS NO FAULT OF HIS OWN!" screamed the entire staff and student body.

Harry looked around dazed, unsure of what was going on. Dumbledore nodded gravely.

"I will not allow her to do so. Harry won't be serving detention for quite some time. I will also say that you, Harry, are not to attend classes until you are well." said Dumbledore reassuring the students and staff.

"I'm fine" said Harry tiredly.

"You save that particular statement for the periods of time that you are most gravely injured it seems." said Dumbledore, his eyes twinkling, but with a sad smile upon his lips. "More of a reason for us who care deeply for you to have you, as they say in the Muggle world. 'sit this one out.' "

The entire school, besides Umbridge and Filch, nodded yes. Filch continued to shake fearfully, but Umbridge was furious. Just then, an owl came fluttering down to her and deposited a note, she opened it with her pink, kitten shaped letter opener and read it. Her eyes danced madly. She had him now! She had them both!
The Memorial Books have arrived, will it help the Minister's side, or Harry's...or will it hurt both?

Despite River's warning, Umbridge didn't even try to find a different book for her classes. As a matter of fact she didn't even try to accomplish anything in her classes. The students, besides Harry who would spend his days in Dumbledore's office, would be getting homework done that they had acquired with other teachers. She never noticed them, she was too busy sitting in her chair and counting down the hours in which her plan would take action.

Madam Pince, though for the life of her she couldn't figure out, gave her a long list of adequate books to use as texts. But Umbridge merely stared at the clock and the calendar on her desk.

Harry and Dumbledore spent the passing days discussing things that had no real importance. They would discuss the weather, different sweets they both enjoyed and even Quidditch games. Dumbledore was more relaxed around Harry now that he realized that Voldemort wouldn't dare venture into Harry's untainted mind. However, he was ashamed that he had abandoned the poor boy when he needed him the most. Mentally, he promised that he would never let this boy down again.

He was still trying to find out what had happened to his young protégé, but nothing came of it. He knew something had happened in Umbridge's office, but what it was, was a mystery to him. He subtly grilled Harry, asking him what had happened, but the poor boy's memory had been blocked and almost destroyed by the fever, discovering what had happened would take time.

Harry still had to continue using his cane, as his legs were still too weak to support his small weight, so Dumbledore made sure he got down to the Great Hall for dinner alright. He would have to take a few breaks as he made his way to dinner, but Dumbledore would allow the boy to rest as many times as he wanted on the way down. There had been times that they would have to stop and allow Harry to catch his breath.

“This sucks.” said Harry gasping.

“I can imagine, here is some water. Aquamenti!” he said as he filled a golden goblet with crystal clear water.

Suddenly, McGonagall came rushing up to the pair of them.
"Albus! Umbridge brought the Minister and several Ministry officials here!" she looked pale and nervous. She had not been the same since she had found Harry, nearly expiring on the staircase. It did not bode good tidings for them if the Minister and the vile woman were both smiling.

"What is it that they want?" said Dumbledore placing a protective arm around Harry's shoulders. He had been fearing for months that they would take Harry into their "protective" custody, and he had been foiling their plans, but if this was the straw that broke the hippogriff's back....

"They said something about Potter's past, bringing the truth to light. What do they mean by that?" said McGonagall, also throwing an arm around the young man's shoulders. Harry kept looking between the two of them. For some reason, since the fever, he was a little slow on the uptake. But talking to Dumbledore about different things, kept building up his mental strength like it used to be. But Dumbledore could see that sometimes Harry looked as if he were in a daze, as if he were just an empty shell at times, it began to frighten him, as if he were never to get his boy back.

"I wonder, did you see anything being carried in by the officials? An orb, a mirror, anything? said Dumbledore, eyes slowly taking on even brighter twinkle. "Books?"

McGonagall paused in thought and gasped. "Yes! They were carrying seven books, each one a different color. With silver and gold numbers on each one, one through seven."

"How do you remember that?" said Harry in awe.

Dumbledore smiled down to the youth, the smallest little thing seemed to impress him as of late. "Photographic memory. Her's is slightly more, we shall say, powerful than yours dear boy. As for these books, in the long run we have nothing to fear from them. We know we are telling the absolute truth. It will only strengthen our side."

"Albus, what do you mean, do you know what these books are?" she said gaping at the elderly man.

"Those books are forged from an ancient magic that was used to compose our history for us. We would only have to drop a single blot of blood on its pages and the history of that person would be written, first chapter would entail the significant information of their first year of birth then it would start before the subject's eleventh birthday. That time of age has always been a very important day since the very beginning of magical time. Then it would continue for seven more years. The all-powerful number, Harry, remember that. " said Dumbledore down to Harry, his eyes still twinkling.

"Then what do we do about it Albus?" said McGonagall anxiously. "Do we try and stop this or do we allow it go on? Think of the repercussions, if it discloses the location of Headquarters!"

"Summon the Order, including Sirius, but advise him to stay in his canine form, we don't want him whisked away. Also, invite the Diggorys, Book four should have the painful, but necessary truth behind their son's unfortunate passing. Bill and Charlie Weasely would get some information from this reading to be sure. I don't think we'll have to worry about much...after all, I didn't write the location of the Headquarters in these books."

"Why would the Ministry read my story in front of everyone?" said Harry, catching on, slowly but surely. Dumbledore sent a warm smile to the young man.

"To spread their belief that you and I are on our way to 'The Funny Farm' as you youngsters like to keep telling me."
"I've never said that to you Professor!" cried Harry in disbelief.

"Which is sad, everyone has a different way of saying it and I enjoy in hearing the different interpretations. Your friend Ron refers to me as 'off my rocker' that may very well be my favorite one."

By the unwanted orders of Madam Delores Jane Umbridge, the entire school was summoned down to the Great Hall. Dumbledore and Harry stood in the middle of the Great Hall and watched as the members of the Ministry and Order came into the ancient Hall that was the place of wonderful memories for everyone who came in those great doors.

"This is a private reading Albus." said Umbridge with her trademark smirk.

Dumbledore smiled warmly up to the woman. "If it is a private reading, then why are the students here? They cannot possibly keep a secret, that, alas, is the curse of youth." Dumbledore stated calmly, eyes twinkling madly. "Also, you have Rita Skeeter here, she of all people cannot be trusted with secrets or privacy." his eyes lost their twinkle as they gazed at her. She shuddered. He looked back at the head table and resumed his twinkling. "It's Mr. Potter's life you are reading, and it concerns this school and the people around him. They have every right to the knowledge quietly festering in those books. Well, I shouldn't say they have the right, only Harry has that, but I don't think he will mind."

Harry shook his head, showing he didn't mind, but he wasn't focusing all that much or he would have put up more of a fight.

Umbridge could find no argument with that, though she did try to make an effort, but Madam Bones cleared her throat and shook her head sternly. Umbridge reluctantly gave up. Dumbledore then turned to the rest of the school and described to them what the books were. The same explanation he gave McGonagall and Harry. Now, after his small speech, he was happily answering questions, though Hermione and a few Ravenclaws were the only ones asking them.

"Professor, how could it write the last two books if they hadn't happened yet?" asked Padma.

"Ah, Miss Patil, there we get into some very, very advanced and ancient magic that, if you may believe, I myself do not fully understand. But I know that in order to actually read Mr. Potter's future, he would have to hold each book and follow it's instructions. For every wizard or witch it is different."

"How do you mean?" said Padma, still a little confused.

"Well, the one of the last times the books were used, I believe Merlin had to hold the books to his head. The books instantly filled with knowledge. But I have heard that at other times, wizards and witches had to give more blood or even kiss the book. It could possibly be anything. But nothing that permanently harms the subject of the books," said Dumbledore smiling to all the students.

Harry looked up at him, with a question of his own burning in his own heart, and he was feeling ill because of it.

"Professor, whatever happens in these things, will we be held accountable?" he said quietly. Professor Dumbledore smiled down to him and patted his head. Harry heard a distinct sniff coming from behind him at the staff table.
'No one should have that close contact with a child, disgusting,' thought Umbridge.

"The things that you are talking about are called books, my dear boy and absolutely not, whatever mischief you got into in these books you had already gotten away with it. It would be unfair to punish you or anyone else. The same however cannot be the same for adults, they may be held for things they do. Mr. Weasley's flying car, for example, he cannot be fined again for it being enchanted. But if anyone were to hurt you physically, I am happy to say that they will be punished most severely. Even if I must do it myself." Dumbledore held onto his normal smile and glittering eyes, that is until the last statement. Then his eyes grew cold furious, Harry saw this and saw the man that defeated Grindewald. Not the man who he had come to think of as a grandfather.

Umbridge smirked down to them and said in her simpering voice.

"Now, Albus, you cannot possibly think that the Minister would pass up the opportunity to punish the boy, something you have obviously failed to do."

"I have never failed in, 'punishing' him. Especially when he really deserves it. Why, as matter of fact, in his second year after he arrived in the flying car I made it known to him that I was very disappointed in him." said Dumbledore looking up to her.

"I wish you had just screamed at me, at that point, anything was better then you looking the way you did." said Harry looking down. Dumbledore patted his back and Harry looked up to the man and smiled.

Fudge rolled his eyes.

"Delores, we won't hold any child accountable for what happens in these books. Or anyone else, you know better than to threaten that. These books cannot be used in a court of law. Unless they are to prove someone's innocence, not guilt. It's a strange law, but one I must uphold." said Madam Bones majestically. Umbridge scowled.

"Now that everything is all explained to suit the answers of students." said Dumbledore giving the staff a knowing smile. "Let us begin, who shall read first?"

"I will" said Madam Bones reaching for the book.

Dumbledore conjured cushions on the floor, some students moved from their tables and went to lay on the floor. Dumbledore led Harry to a large bowl like chair that laid on the floor and was filled with soft pillows and blankets. It was large enough for Lupin, Sirius (dog form) Hermione, Ron and Ginny to fit inside it and give some Harry some support.

Harry leaned back into Lupin's chest and ran his fingers over Sirius's coat.

"You're awfully affectionate today." said Lupin with a smile.

"I'm still a litte tired. Deal with it." he said cheekily.

"The title of the first book is Harry Potter and the Sorcerer's Stone and the first chapter is The Boy Who Lived" said Madam Bones.

"Here we go." sighed Harry shaking his head.
Chapter End Notes

Remember, you have to have the actual book beside you. It's the only way we're going to be able to get around the copyright stalker nuts!
A Day in the Soon to be Odd Life of Vernon Dursley.

Chapter Summary

The people of Hogwarts learn of the Dursleys, and only one of them likes these prim and proper Muggles.

Chapter Notes

I don't own Harry Potter!

First paragraph, first sentence.

"You're welcome." said Luna in a dream-like voice. The Hall was riddled with the snorts of people trying to hold their laughter.

"SILENCE!" demanded Umbridge forgetting her sickly sweet voice.

"Now Delores." said Madam Bones. "You can't expect them to just sit there and listen to this, do you? Let them voice their opinions, it will make the reading more, let's say, 'attention holding.'"

"She's got that right." said Fred.

"Imagine, just sitting here and listening to Harry's boring life." said George with a smirk.

"We need to spice things up a bit!" both twins said with a laugh.

First paragraph, end of paragraph.

"Wow, Harry, you've got awfully boring relatives" said Lee Jordan with a big grin.

"Makes us appreciate our family a lot more." said Ron with a look towards the twins and Percy, who was sitting beside the Minister. But he didn't look at Percy for very long.

Second paragraph, first sentence, first comma.

"I knew a Grunning once," said Bathilda Bagshot who had just entered the Great Hall and sat down near Hagrid's seat at the teacher's table. "I don't think it's the same one though. He died almost a hundred years ago."

“Hello Bathilda, I'm glad you could stop by.” said Dumbledore with a smile.
“I didn't realize that you were doing this, I came by to take you up on the offer for a cup of tea for old time's sake, I always did have impeccable timing.” she said with a smile.

Second paragraph. end of first sentence.

"Most definitely not him. Hardly would do anything if magic wasn't involved." she said shaking her head quickly.

Second paragraph, third sentence, first comma.

The entire school erupted in laughter.

"Don't they sound like people Romance Novels are made from?" said a seventh year Slytherin wiping tears from her eyes.

"Walrus and Horsie sitting in a tree! K...I...S...I...N...G!!" sang the twins and Lee at the top of their lungs to the applause of the school.

Second paragraph. Rest of third sentence.

"She never changed, that's no surprise." muttered Snape.

Second paragraph, fourth sentence, eighth word.

Harry however was confused.

"Wait a minute, did that just call Dudley small?" he asked loudly to the twins and Ron. The Weasely children and Hagrid both laughed. The others weren't sure what was so funny.

End of second paragraph.

"That's not right, the best guy in the world is right here." said Fred gently patting Harry's back. The people who knew Harry nodded, including a few of the teachers. Harry quickly blushed.

"And he is now the most embarrassed guy in the world." said George with a snigger.

Third paragraph, first sentence.
"Well, we're about to find out about it, aren't we?" said Ernie from the Hufflepuff table.

“There are things they are missing...my respect for one.” muttered Harry.

Third paragraph, third sentence first semicolon.

"That's sad. I don't think I could go years without talking to my sister." said Padma. She then moved towards Pavarti and sat beside her. The Weasely's all agreed and came to sit closer together then before, except for Percy. He was wanting to move, but his stubborn nature kept him in his seat.

Third paragraph, third sentence, second comma, seventh word.

Lupin stood up and glared at the book. His eyes flashing dangerously. There wasn't a person on the other side of those eyes, that didn't flinch. Even the dog on Harry's knee was growling viciously. Harry looked at Sirius and then Lupin, he grabbed his cane and slowly stood up. He took ahold of Lupin's arm and tugged it towards himself. Lupin turned quickly around and glared at the owner of the hand. His eyes softened considerably when he saw Harry and noticed that he didn't flinch at his look. He then pulled him into a big hug and helped the teen back to the chair. Even the dog whimpered as he put his nose back on Harry's knee.

Third paragraph, last nine words of third sentence.

"Thank bloody God." growled Lupin, rubbing Harry's right arm up and down, in a fatherly way.

Third paragraph, fourth sentence.

“'They'd prefer them to you.'” spat Remus harshly.

“Don't be too sure, they're all alike on that street.” said Harry.

Third paragraph, to the end of paragraph.

"Yeah, you wouldn't want 'poor little Dudley' to become nice.” said Fred.

"Or generous" replied George "Brave"

"Selfless"
"Gentle"
"Smart"
"Funny"
"Noble"

"AND TRUTHFUL" bellowed the twins towards the High Inquisitor. She only scowled

I wouldn't want my children messing around with that dirty little liar either. These muggles have the right idea. thought Umbridge nastily.

Harry was too busy to notice the small smirk of the Defense teacher, he had his buried in Lupin’s shoulder, blushing furiously. "I'm not any of those things."

"You might not think so, but that's our opinion." said Lupin with a smile.

Fourth paragraph, first sentence - second comma.

"Didn't it already start?" asked Malfoy, curiously.

"ENOUGH WITH THE INTERRUPTIONS!" cried Umbridge. Malfoy looked insulted.

"Leave the kids alone!" said Madame Bones. "You brought this up here, you'll have to take their comments and like it."

Fourth paragraph, second sentence first comma.

"Harry, why would he pick out a boring tie?" asked Mr. Weasley. "I get one for Father's Day every year and I can honestly say, none of them are boring. My favorite one is the one where it whistles a tune all day. Kids all chipped in and got it for me." he finished, beaming towards his kids.

Most of the Ministry people smiled at that. Every year on Father's day, Arthur would go around the Ministry and show off his ties. He was so proud of his children, and they loved to see the glimmer in his eyes when he spoke of them.

"He hates to stand out. I'm more amazed that he was humming." said Harry deep in thought.

"Why is that? People hum all the time." said Flitwick, an avid music lover.

"He doesn't allow music in the house. I don't remember the last time I even hummed, there anyway." Harry looked thoughtful, not noticing the incredulous looks from the people around him. Professor Flitwick clutched at his heart and nearly fainted.

Fourth paragraph to the end of paragraph.
"Umm...we weren't like that when we were younger, were we mom?" asked Ginny looking sideways at her mother.

"No, you and your brothers were very well behaved when you were babies. Even the twins were little angels, at that age, anyway." she smiled mischievously. The Weasely children released a large sigh of relief.

Fifth paragraph.

“How do you miss that?” asked Lee in amazement.

Sixth paragraph, first sentence third comma.

"QUICK! GET SOME DISINFECTANT!!" yelled Ron. His brother's fell off their seats and cushions clutching their sides. Harry laughed along with them, maybe this book wasn't so bad.

Sixth paragraph, end of first sentence.

"And he doesn't see anything wrong with that behavior? What a stupid man." growled Sprout.

End of sixth paragraph.

Seventh paragraph, first sentence.

"I know who that is!" chanted Harry with a smile.

"How would you know? It doesn't describe what the cat looks like." said Hermione with a frown.

"I saw a cat reading the street sign one morning when I was six. I walked up to it and sat there petting it all day, I even named her, and I found her five years later."

"Where?" asked Hermione, still not believing him.

"Here, turns out it was Professor McGonagall's animagus form, imagine my shock." he said grinning ear to ear. The Transfiguration teacher smiled broadly back.

"What was the name you gave her?" asked Fred with a smirk.

Harry looked up to McGonagall, she smiled proudly. "He called me 'Tootsie'. I've been called 'Minnie' in that form, but you Mr. Potter, came up with a name that I actually liked."

"You never told me you went to Privet Drive. Did he tell you anything we should be worried about?" said Dumbledore quietly.
"No, he didn't say a word about anything else, besides giving me a name and asking if I liked it, he was very thin though. We both just sat on the sidewalk. Whole day went by." said McGonagall quietly to him.

Seventh paragraph, third sentence.

"Wow, you're quick." said Fred whistling.

Seventh paragraph ninth sentence.

"Tootsie can" thought Harry with small smile.

Seventh paragraph, to end of paragraph.

"He doesn't even think about his family, just his darn business deals." muttered Madame Pomfrey.

Eighth paragraph, first sentence.

“Wouldn't have taken much.” snickered a first year.

Eighth paragraph, second sentence.

"I have seen the outfits young muggle adults wear. They are wonderfully eccentric." said Dumbledore smiling brightly.

Eighth paragraph, sixth sentence.

"What is odd about that?" said a little first year Ravenclaw.

"That isn't normal in the Muggle world." said Hermione quickly.

Eighth paragraph, eighth sentence.

"Collecting? What is this Muggle talking about?" questioned Malfoy.
"Didn't take him too long, not much must go on in his head." stated a Ravenclaw.

"Why were the owls going nuts?" asked Blaise.

"It was from all the letters of joy that were being sent around Britain that day." said Snape.

"Your Uncle Vernon needs to settle down I think." said Professor Lupin to Harry. Harry couldn't tell him that his temper was pretty easy going, that day by the sound of it.

"Wait a minute, if that is a good mood, then.....Harry, did your uncle ever get angry with you?" asked Lupin, looking sideways at Harry. The dog whimpered. Harry looked down and refused to answer him, he motioned to Madam Bones to continue reading. Madam Bones did rather reluctantly.

"Figures, the only way he'd actually do some exercise was to get a doughnut." muttered Harry darkly.

"He makes us uneasy too." said Charlie thoughtfully. Bill nodded.
People in the Great Hall turned to look at him. Harry just looked down.

"How did he get so high up to have a secretary?" asked Hermione. "It isn't his personality."

"He had to step on and destroy a bunch of people to get where he is." said Harry.

"HE DOESN'T EVEN KNOW YOUR NAME?!" screamed Mrs. Weasely. Harry only looked down. Now he could see the giant problem with the books. He was having all of his secrets exposed. This wasn't fair.

"Lily wanted to take you to meet her sister, but her sister always said they were going to be out of town those days." said Lupin sadly.

“Well, he nailed the Harold part.” said Lupin with a faint smile.

"Yeah, like your sister is any better." said Harry rolling his eyes.
"I'm amazed it didn't kill that poor guy." said Harry bemusedly.

"I'm much more sturdier built then most people give me credit for, Mr. Potter." said the Charms Professor kindly.

Fourteenth paragraph, fourth sentence.

"They just aren't used to my beautiful tenor voice." said Professor Flitwick haughtily.

"No denying that." said Bill with a smile.

End of fourteenth paragraph.

Fifteenth paragraph

"It wasn't easy hugging that man, I couldn't even get my arms halfway around his middle." said Flitwick with a smirk.

Sixteenth paragraph.

"Yeah Harry, imagination is a very bad thing." said George with straight face.

"Just look at us." said Fred, the school erupted in laughter.

Seventeenth paragraph, first sentence.

"Why were you all day, Professor?" asked a third year Gryffindor to his Head of House.

"You will hear about it very soon." she said, eyes misting.

End of seventeenth paragraph.

Eighteenth paragraph, first sentence.

"Even we knew that was going to happen. Same look she gives us when we tell her we didn't do anything." laughed Lee Jordan. Professor McGonagall's lips twitched slightly.

End of eighteenth paragraph.
Nineteenth paragraph, second sentence.

Mrs. Weasely and the teachers, except Umbridge, snarled at this. "Spoiled brat"

End of nineteenth paragraph.

Dialogue set,

Dialogue set, second sentence

Dedalus Diggle blushed deeply

End of dialogue set

Twentieth paragraph.

Twenty-first paragraph

Twenty-second paragraph

Twenty-third paragraph.

"Too bad Lily didn't pretend. She was always upset that Petunia wouldn't talk to her." said Lupin sadly.

Dialogue Line.

Dialogue Line.

Dialogue Line.

Dialogue Line.

The entire Hall was silent. Then people started whispering, then talking until finally they were yelling

"OUR CROWD? WHAT DOES HE MEAN ABOUT THAT!?" They rounded on Harry and he just sank deeper into the cushions of the bowl. Lupin had to lean in front of the raven-haired youth and send a stern look back to the rest of the school.

Twenty-fourth paragraph

Dialogue Line.
"Name may be common, but the person with it isn't" said Ginny angrily. All of Harry's friends shouted out in agreement and Dumbledore nodded. Harry buried his head in Lupin's chest again. Lupin just sat and smiled, he couldn’t believe how humble Harry was, especially living in that household.

"Oh, thank Merlin, I was getting ready to be sick." said Fred holding his stomach.

"I only wished that Lily had confided in me what her sister really thought about her and James. I never would have brought Harry to them." said Dumbledore whispered. McGonagall, thought about reminding him that she told all she knew about the Dursleys, but thought better of it. She patted his arm.

"Wishful thinking." said Harry out loud, causing people to turn towards him and have concerned looks on their faces.

"At least you have more fashion sense then someone else I know." said Harry with a smirk.

"Mr. Potter! My wardrobe is the peak of fashion!" yelled Umbridge
"I never said I meant you, ma'am." said Harry innocently. Dumbledore chuckled silently to himself.

Thirty-first paragraph, end of paragraph.

The entire school stood up and cheered. Even the ones who didn't believe Harry or Dumbledore.

Thirty-second paragraph, first sentence.

"You just love to go to places where you stick out like a sore thumb, don't you Albus?" said Bathilda Bagshot with a smile.

"I enjoy the look on people's faces." he said with a large grin.

Thirty-second paragraph, end of paragraph.

"Glad I was a source of amusement for you, Albus." McGonagall said, folding her arms but the sides of her mouth were twitching.

Thirty-third paragraph, sixth sentence.

"AWESOME PROFESSOR!!" yelled the twins. "Where did you get that thing?"

"I invented it myself many years ago, boys." said Dumbledore.

"Maybe we can make one ourselves, Fred." said George excitedly. Dumbledore chuckled over to them.

"I have no doubt that you can, and will. You have the same ingenuity that I myself possessed when I was younger." The twins grinned ear to ear and were even more hyped to start on their new goal.

End of Thirty-third paragraph

Dialogue Line.

Thirty-fourth paragraph, second sentence.

"I've always loved your glasses Professor." said Harry looking up at her admiringly. She blushed, which was extremely rare. "Living almost my whole life with giant, round glasses, it's really nice seeing something different."

"Yeah, you need a new pair badly. When this is done, I'll take you to the eyeglass shop in Diagon Alley." whispered Lupin to Harry, who beamed at him.

"But how are you going to pay for them? Nevermind, I pay."

"My cousin runs that shop, she won't charge me. She never does when I go in for reading glasses." said Lupin with smile.

Thirty-fourth paragraph,

Dialogue Line.

Dialogue Line.

"If you had asked Harry about ten years ago, Sir, he would have told you Tootsie." said the twins laughing. Then they stopped laughing and stared at McGonagall. She didn't seem angry.

"Aren't you going to yell at us?" said the twins, slightly disappointed.

"Absolutely not. I will never be embarrassed in spending a day with Harry when he was younger."

"Best day I ever had while at the Dursleys. I used that memory one time in my Patronus charm lessons."

"Is that the memory that broke all the windows in my office, because it was so large?" asked Lupin, Harry nodded. Lupin and McGonagall looked at each other with concern. Why was that memory so powerful? What was life Dursleys really like?

Dialogue Line.

Dialogue Line.

Thirty-fifth paragraph

Dialogue set.

Professor looked down at Dedalus horrified. She was about to profess her apologies, when he just smiled at her and nodded his head.

Dialogue Line.

All the adults, besides Umbridge, bowed their heads in somber remembrance.

Dialogue set.
"He HAS disappeared! He's never coming back." said Umbridge with authority.

"I'm not even going to argue, I'll let the books take over from here." said Harry dismissing her with a wave of his hand. She didn't like that one bit.

"You've to a week of detention with me Mr. Potter, for your cheek." said Umbridge with a scowl.

"You seem to forget Delores, Potter is excused from all detentions, especially those with you, until he is back to full health and we figure out what happened. As a matter of fact, the rest of the teachers will take care of any detentions you hand out to the students. You will not hold any detentions till the incident is resolved." said McGonagall sternly. The school erupted in cheers. The parents and guardians of the students that were there, looked concerned.

"What is with you and your penchant for sweets, Dumbledore." said Kingsley with a smirk.

"I have a very demanding sweet tooth. I always have a large bowl of candy hidden away in my office. Except at Christmas time." grinned Dumbledore.

"What? What is so different about Christmas time? That's the only time I actually eat candy." inquired Kingsley with his eyebrows raised.

"For the past, oh I should say, four years, I've received a large box of these delightful raspberry and chocolate chip cookies." Dumbledore sat back in his chair, with a longing look in his eyes.

"I don't recall you offering anyone else these cookies, usually you offer anyone and everyone your sweets." said Pomfrey with a mock indignant look.

"I actually refuse to have anyone else have them. That is the one thing, I will not share. I just wish my secret baker would send me more than one box." he pouted. Seeing that look on their headmaster, the students and a few teachers started to giggle and snicker.

"I'm sorry, Albus, but I was in no mood for sweets at that time." said McGonagall.
As did the rest of the school. Harry let out a sigh.
"Get a grip, people." said Harry rolling his eyes.

End of dialogue set.

Another wave a flinches went through the school, Harry groaned.

Dialogue set.

Dialogue Line.

"Only cause you're too noble to use them sir." said Harry up to the Head Table. Dumbledore smiled brightly and looked to McGonagall.

Dialogue Line.

McGonagall looked down to Harry and had a small smile.

Dialogue Line.

"Old people can flirt? I didn't think they knew how!" laughed a seventh year Slytherin.

"You think you invented it all, do you?" sneered Pomfrey. That wiped the smile of his face in an instant.

Thirty-seventh paragraph.

The entire hall went deadly silent. They all leaned forward.

Thirty-eighth paragraph,

Dialogue Line.

Lupin began to cringe and Sirius whined. Harry looked between the both of them, leaned on Lupin's arm and stroked Sirius's canine head.
The entire school looked over to Harry, who just closed his eyes. They couldn't see the single tear sliding down his face. Everyone except Luna, who came over and caught that single tear in a vial she had taken out of her pocket. Harry looked at Luna with curiosity.

"You had a Squakdoon hovering over you. They take your pain and manifest it into a tear. If you catch the tear and keep it with you in a bottle, you won't feel the pain as intensely as you did before." she ran a thin red string through the loop at the end of the vial. She placed it around Harry's neck. Amazingly, he did feel quite a bit better.

Maybe there was some truth to what she sees, but he'd better not tell Hermione...

"Great, now starts the reason we all have to worship him." said Fudge with a smile on his face. However, that smile was ripped off his face when he was forced to dodge flying pieces of paper and several bottles of ink. Umbridge was livid.

"HOW DARE YOU ATTACK THE MINISTER OF MAGIC?! ONE HUNDRED POINTS FROM GRYFFINDOR, MR. POTTER!"

"WHAT THE BLOODY HELL ARE YOU TALKING ABOUT?! HE DIDN'T THROW A DAMN THING! WE DID!!" screamed the entire student body. Dumbledore looked quickly over to the giant hourglasses and smiled broadly.

"It seems that the magic of the books we are reading is prohibiting us from taking points away from any student." Umbridge ran over to the hourglasses and examined them. She didn't know what to think, she began to tap and rock the hourglasses back and forth to move the gemstones inside. Madam Bones ignored her and continued on.

"Something we would all love to know, Albus." mumbled Moody from the end of the Slytherin table.
"You have awesome toys, Professor." cheered Bill, who was sitting beside Charlie at the Gryffindor table.

"What did make you late that night, Hagrid" said Dumbledore leaning forward to speak to the Care of Magical Creatures Teacher.

"Drunk probably, disgusting half-breed. The lot of them." said Umbridge with a smug look.

Hagrid shifted slowly and looked towards Harry before answering.

"It took me and Sirius Black a little while to find Harry, sir. The part o' the house where he was, was completely destroyed. We 'ad ta move a few charred pieces o' lumber to get to 'im. Wasn't even cryin' just kept trying ta..." Hagrid took out a giant polka-dotted handkerchief and blew his nose loudly. "kept trying ta cuddle up wid his momma. Get 'er to wake up." He howled so loud that it made the tables shake. Sirius looked up at Harry, whined and nuzzled his hand.

The school, minus Umbridge and the Minister, all looked down and started to cry. Dumbledore had to take a tissue that was offered by Madame Hooch. Every house table there was didn't hold a single dry eye. Harry looked down, he wanted to cry, but he couldn't. He felt the pain, but it didn't hurt as much as it should have. He looked at the little vial and saw the tear, it was glowing.

"Not no more mate," said Ron thickly. Drying his eyes with the back of his sleeve. "You've got us now."

"And me." said Lupin pulling him into a tight hug. Sirius sat up and licked his face.

"I couldn't be more ashamed of myself." said Dumbledore covering his face with his hands.

"What...the...A LETTER?" said Mrs. Weasely standing up. "How are you going to explain everything in a letter! A little boy just lost both his mother and father in the same night, at the hands of the most psychotic man the world has ever known and you explain things in a LETTER??" Then she rounded on Harry. "What did the letter say?"

"I don't know, I wasn't aware they even got one." said Harry simply.

"For God's sake, tell me there isn't one." said Harry horrified.

"Actually, today is Harry Potter Day." said Madam Bones.

"Were you expecting presents today Potter?" sneered Umbridge.

"Absolutely not, but I'll give presents if you quit your job here." retorted Harry. The entire student body sniggered.

"Despite the fact that I REALLY disapprove of you chucking James' son into that place, I've got to admit, I would hate to see a Harry Potter that loved all the fame and attention. Good Lord, you would act just like your father did at your age now, an attention seeking prat." said Lupin running a hand over the mess of black hair. Harry snapped his head up to him.

"My dad was attention seeking?" he said, face falling.

"In the worst way possible. I can honestly say that your dad was not only a prat, but a spoiled brat" said Lupin fondly, his smile faded fast when he noticed how troubled Harry looked. "What's wrong?"

"Everyone says I act...like....him...." said Harry clutching his chest. He felt sick. Lupin looked horrified at how pale Harry had turned.

"When people say that 'you act like him' they mean the man he had grown up to become!" said Lupin quickly, trying to calm Harry's fears. "If they had meant that you acted like your dad when he first started, they would have taken you back to the proverbial woodshed so many times, it could have been your permanent address."

"Then how do I act?" whispered Harry fearfully, he didn't want to come acrossed as an attention seeking idiot, like his cousin Dudley. Did the Dursleys rub off on him after all?

"To be perfectly honest, you don't even act like your dad at any age, you are your mother's son, didn't matter who it was, she stood up for them. Just like what the twins said a few moments ago, that is what she was. And you are almost the exact same. A lovely carbon copy." said Lupin pulling him in a tight embrace.

Madam Bones smiled down to them and ignored Umbridge's and Fudge's snorts of disbelief and "Can everybody please try to remember that!" said Harry out loud.

"It really doesn't surprise me that you thought that, with all the things I have hidden away in my cloak." said Dumbledore with a grin.

"Forgive me Hagrid. I didn't mean it the way it came I out...I...no I didn't mean it at all." said McGonagall pleadingly.

The staff looked sympathetically towards the Transfiguration Professor, McGonagall had been acting strangely, ever since she saw the horrible injuries on Harry that night, she was a little jumpy and quick to apologize. She would however stay her same strict fashion in classes, but the moment Harry would come on the scene, she would smile and continually ask him if he was alright. He was making progress, but it would still take a long time for her to return to her usual self.

"I agree with McGonagall's statement in the book. I wouldn't trust a gamekeeper with anything other than a yard full of dirt. Especially the one Hogwarts’s has." said Umbridge with her nose in the air.

Unbeknownst to anyone else, Hermione took a glob of magical putty from her bag, something she confiscated from the Weasely twins, and sent it magically over to the staff table and up Umbridge's upturned nose. It took several moments for it to come out and calm the students down. The twins gave Hermione a sly wink.

"Us too." said Harry, Hermione, and Ron. Hagrid beamed.
Forty-fifth paragraph.

Sirius let out a loud bark, jumped out of the bowl and ran around in a circle chasing his tail. The students all pointed at him and laughed.

"Love your dog, mate!" yelled Lee.

"I love my dog, too." said Harry fondly.

Forty-sixth paragraph, third sentence.

"Who could that possibly be, Fred?" asked George.

"Wow, I really don't know George. Could it possibly be..." said Fred his twinkling.

"You know you could be right, it does sound like..." said George slowly.

"HAGRID!!!!" yelled the entire Gryffindor table.

Forty-sixth paragraph, end of paragraph.

The girls and the majority of the teachers all sighed. "Awww" Harry put his hand to his face and covered his face, hiding a blush.

This is turning into a living hell. Thought Harry.

Umbridge had a similar thought, this wasn't starting out the way she wanted. When were they going to get to some of his lies?

"What was Harry doing as you were flying before he fell asleep, Hagrid?" asked Hermione. Harry groaned at her, but Hagrid smiled at her.

"While we was flyin' he was tryin' to catch the stars with 'is little 'ands." said Hagrid smiling over to Harry, the girls squealed.
"I remember you doing that too, when we would take you for a nighttime ride. You loved flying," said Lupin fondly.

Forty-seventh paragraph.

"Ooooh," and "Aww" rippled through the house tables.

Dialogue Line.

Dialogue Line.

Dialogue Line.

Harry sat up straight, too fast, his wounds sent a pain through him in reproach and it took most of Harry's strength to not cry out.

Dialogue set, third sentence.

"Huh? Really, sir?" said a few Muggleborns.

End of dialogue set.

I wanted to get it over with, before I could change my mind. Now I'm wishing I did, thought Dumbledore bitterly.

Forty-eighth paragraph.

Sirius let out a similar howl.

"How come that didn't wake you up Harry, you're a real light sleeper." asked Neville.

"Good quality to have Potter, never know when an enemy might come up and assassinate you," said Moody approvingly.

"Harry used to sleep like a log, Sirius would set off a firecracker under James's chair, wouldn't even make Harry flinch. Don't know what made that change." said Lupin with a furrowed brow. Harry said nothing.
"You know Professor? At one time, I would have been a little irked that you didn't fight for me, but now, I can honestly say that I really can't blame you." said Harry kindly.

"Why is that Potter?" said Snape with his eyebrows raised.

"My aunt and uncle are real good actors when they want to be, from what I hear from this book, they aren't the people I know. There was no way you could have known just how much of a living hell I go through when I'm there." said Harry in an offhand manner. However, when the comment left his mouth and he realized what he said, his hand flew to his forehead, smacking it hard.

The rest of the students didn't catch the significance of it, but Harry's friends and the adults that a hint of the situation going on, turned a deadly shade of white. What the hell went on during the summer?

Silence, heavy, thick silence, like Harry had never heard before. People just sat in their seats, blinking and staring up at the Head Table. Finally a voice broke through the barrier, Mrs. Weasely was screaming at the top of her lungs.

"THIS WAS OCTOBER! WHAT ARE YOU DOING LEAVING HIM ON A DOORSTEP! THEY SAID IT WAS GOING TO RAIN THAT NIGHT! HE COULD HAVE FROZEN TO DEATH, GOTTEN SICK KIDNAPPED, WOKEN UP AND WANDERED OFF! WHAT WERE THE THREE OF YOU THINKING? WHAT IF HE HAD DIED THEN AND THERE! WE NEVER....NEVER..." after her shouting rant, she broke down in sobs. Not even her husband could console her.

Harry sighed, reached for his cane, which was sitting to Lupin's left and used it to get over to Mrs. Weasely. He sat beside her and embraced her. He said nothing, just hugged her. He motioned for Madame Bones to continue on reading, she herself had tears in her eyes.

"Harry, we should be the ones comforting you, not the other way around." squeaked Hermione. He looked over to her and took her pulled her close to him as well. Hermione couldn't contain it anymore, she bawled, not so much because of him being left in the cold, that was bad enough, but the thought of him, just not being there. She couldn't bare it. Her best friend gone, her first and best friend. It was too much to handle. He just held both of the women and made a soothing 'shh' sound.

"I took precautions." said Dumbledore quietly. "I placed a charm over him, so that he couldn't have been moved, except by his aunt or Uncle and no harm by persons, or nature could have befallen him."

"That's never a good thing." said Fred thickly, wiping a tear from his eye. Anger was replaced by worry in the realization that Mrs. Weasely had brought to light.
"Aww! Sweet! You're so cute Harry!" said many of the seventh year girls. Harry buried his head in his hands.

"Yeah, what happened?" smirked Draco. Harry looked up at him.

"Same thing that happened to you." Draco's sneer slowly slid off his face. Both houses laughed.

"Well that's the end of the first chapter, Dumbledore." said Madame Bones looking over to the aged Headmaster. He now seemed to have aged a thousand years in an instant. He had tears falling freely down his crooked nose.
Set my Serpents Free!

Chapter Summary

The readers at Hogwarts learn of Harry's homelife and some of his bouts of accidental magic. They're confused though, how did the Harry Potter they know, come from a family like this?

Chapter Notes

Remember it names what paragraph, and where you're supposed to end! It'll get easier as the chapters go on, it'll become almost second nature!....hopefully....this way we can't be taken down!

Now there are only THREE clips from the book, because they are CHANGED slightly, from what the book is!

"With all these interruptions, we will never get through all these books. I say that the next person to speak when they aren't reading should be removed from the Hall. Agreed? Good!" said Umbridge without looking to anyone for approval. Madame Bones sat and looked at her colleague with disgust.

“Imagine her teaching you.” muttered Susan.

“I've told you're mother that I pitied you, she doesn't understand...doesn't surprise me...she's never met the woman.” said Madam Bones. "Who would like to read?”.When Madam Hooch raised her hand, she levitated the book to the flying instructor and she started.

Name of second chapter

People silently edged forward, one of every student's favorite conversation topics was accidental magic. It was always so hilarious when one talks about it. But Harry Potter's, they thought excitedly, should be amazing.

First paragraph, first five words.
"Why did it skip so many years?" said Umbridge with furrowed brows.

The entire school went silent looking at her with amazement. Fudge smacked his forehead with the palm of his hand and Percy groaned. Several of the teachers started to snicker into their hands and Madam Bones looked smug.

"What? What is so funny?" said Umbridge indignantly.

"You just said that the next person to speak, that wasn't reading, would be kicked out. No one else spoke, just you." said Kingsley with his deep calm voice, a faint smile on his face.

"I'm exempt from that rule of course. I'm the High Inquisitor." she replied with a sneer.

Down where Harry sat, a small recollection came to his thoughts.
"Exempt.....do....I....want...Minister..." it was fuzzy and not very clear, so Harry let it go.

"I think it would be better to just let the students and guests voice their opinions. I will not have that sort of behavior here, Delores." said Dumbledore sternly.

First paragraph, end of first sentence.

"Surprise, surprise." said Ginny sarcastically. Mrs. Weasely sent her only daughter a scolding look. That however didn't seem to have much effect.

First paragraph, fifth sentence, first comma, eighteenth word.

Laughter rang through the Great Hall.

"Harry, you are freaking hilarious!" yelled the twins
"Oh yes he is!" said Ron loudly. Creating another round of laughter.

"Aren't you there anymore?" said the same first years that almost frozen in panic when Harry smiled at him at the start of school term. Harry nodded.

"Why is it that you never seem to get to wake up peacefully?" asked Dean.

"I can understand now how come you don't sleep very soundly anymore." said Lupin with a concerned tone. "I wouldn't be able to sleep all through the night if I had to wait for her to come knocking." Harry, nor Lupin noticed Snape nod in agreement.

"You've got a damn good memory there Potter, very impressive." said Moody approvingly.

"Too bad I can't remember what happened two weeks ago." said Harry quietly. Lupin gave him a small hug.
“It's alright Harry, don't you worry about it.” said Lupin softly.

Fifth paragraph,

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set second sentence, first comma

"They made you cook? You could have burnt yourself!” said Hermione incredulously.

"I haven't burnt myself for over ten years." shrugged Harry.

"What?" yelled Mrs. Weasely.

"I've been cooking for eleven years at the Dursleys. Breakfast, lunch and dinner. Aunt Petunia never cooks anymore, unless I'm occupied."

"Define 'occupied'" said Lupin questioningly. Harry didn't answer.

"I actually really enjoy cooking, it even beats out flying. Funny thing is, they know I love to cook. They would rather have me happy at that one aspect, then eat Aunt Petunia's cooking. She sucks at it. Last time I remember her actually working in the kitchen was....when she baked Dudley a cake for his sixth birthday. Chocolate with strawberry icing. She wanted it to look real fancy, she made the frosting swirl and everything...it looked pretty good. Dudley took a big bite out of it and spat it out on the floor. I tried it real quick, she got sugar and salt mixed up. It was real bad.”

"She thought I threw the salt in it. Wasn't me, I was told that I had to weed the garden that day while she baked the cake. Wasn't pretty, what she did.” said Harry, unconcerned about the past hint of abuse, but focusing on the fond memory of cooking over the years.

His friends and the adults around were concerned. How was he punished for something he didn't do?

End of dialogue set

Sixth paragraph

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Seventh paragraph, third sentence.

"Harry, mate, did you have to mention you pulling off a spider from your sock." cringed Ron. The twins snickered, until their brother Charlie walked behind them and with both hands, cuffed his younger brothers.

“I would have squished it to be perfectly honest.” said Terry.

Harry groaned, he knew what was coming.

End of seventh paragraph.

Once again, the same thick silence covered the school. Harry looked through his fingers at the Head table. Professor Sprout and Madam Pomfrey were hugging each other crying silently. Madam Hooch and Professor Vector looked as if they were about to be violently ill, and Professor Flitwick was fingerling his wand viciously. His face tight and anger burning through his normally cheerful eyes.
Harry however didn't take much notice of them but focused on five other teachers.

Snape was snarling at the book that was now laying on the table. Professor McGonagall had turned as white as a ghost and had a hand covering her mouth, her eyes wide in horror. Hagrid was grasping the armrests of his chair, that is until he snapped them off. Dumbledore's mouth was hanging open and stared at Harry in shock and horror, his tense face matched the color of his beard. Umbridge was the only person in the entire room that was shaking with silent laughter.

Harry then looked around at his surrogate family and friends. Remus looked as if he were about to be violently ill, and Snuffles was nuzzling under Harry's chin and licking him tenderly, as if trying to kiss him and make it all better.

Every Weasely, including Percy who had come down to where his family was, deciding that family was more important than a Ministry who didn't care for the well-being of a child, were muttering darkly. Then they turned to him.

"Why didn't you tell us? Why didn't you come to us?" said Bill quickly

"You had a room when we came to get you! What happened to change that?" yelled Fred.

"How long did you have to sleep in there?" shouted George.

"A cupboard?" screamed Mrs. Weasely.

Harry didn't know what to say. He remained silent. The silence fell over all of them again, waiting for an answer. Umbridge started laughing out loud, people threw her quite a few murderous looks.

"May I ask what you find so funny Delores?" said Kingsley, calmness gone from his voice.

"I was under the impression that Muggles were common and not worth even an ounce of our time. Now I have finally found some that I actually admire. I applaud them, they seem know how to treat a worthless brat. They were even kind to the boy, I wouldn't have even let him sleep in the house." she smiled to all who were in the room.
When she received no smiles back, but only glares and snarls, she looked towards the Minister, who looked back with eyebrows raised and mouth opened in shock. She simply shrugged and leaned back in her chair majestically.

The dog that was sitting beside Harry leaped out of the bowl and rushed up to her and bit her on the leg. She let out a scream and kicked the dog away from herself, she looked down, there was a gash, not very deep, but it was bleeding moderately. She sent a curse after the dog, but he skillfully dodged it and ran back to stand in front of Harry. Guarding him and growling fiercely, showing all of its white, and very sharp teeth.

"MR. POTTER! HOW DARE YOU ATTACK ME WITH YOUR FILTHY ANIMAL!" screeched Umbridge, without a moment's hesitation, she whipped out her wand and sent a red shaft of light down to Harry. Everyone was frozen in shock, no one could whip out their wands, not even Dumbledore in time to stop the curse as it sped it's way towards it intended victim.

However when it reached about a foot away from Harry, it bounced off, flying straight up into the air. Lupin looked down at the young boy, his wand halfway out of his pocket. Harry had already drawn his wand and casted a protective shield around himself and Sirius, Moody was highly impressed with this, the boy even beat him in whipping out his wand. That was it, that boy was going to be an Auror, if he had anything to say about it.

He sat there, just as calmly as can be. She screamed again and brought her wand up again to send another spell down his way, but with small flick of his wand, Harry sent hers flying out of her hand and sideways towards Kingsley. Kingsley caught it and pocketed it. Umbridge threw a dirty look his way, but the Minister stood up.

"Delores, I think you better calm down. You're not acting yourself." said Fudge soothingly.

"She's acting exactly like herself. She's a psychotic nut!" yelled both Fred and George. Raising their scarred hands, but their famliy didn't see.

Madam Hooch trying to diffuse the situation and blowing her nose at the same time, tried to continue on with the reading.
"Holy Holyhead Harpies! That's a lot of presents! How many people actually like this kid, Harry?" asked Charlie with his mouth hanging open.

"Five are from his friends, twelve are from Aunt Marge and nineteen are from Uncle Vernon and Aunt Petunia." said Harry without hesitation.

"How do you remember that, Potter?" said Snape coldly.

"Dudley always brags how many presents he gets for his birthday. All day, every day, for two weeks straight. That year, he didn't brag about the presents, except right after he got them. It was an unusual spring, so I remember it very well." said Harry with a small smile.

Eighth paragraph, fourth sentence.

"If I find out that he's hit you, even once, I'm going to make sure I introduce him to a few, fifty feet tall, scaley friends of mine." said Charlie with a low growl.

"Then I'll take some time out of my busy schedule and have a little hand to rear 'talk'." muttered Lupin.

Eighth paragraph, fifth sentence, first comma.

"Wait'll we get a hold of that little brat." said Lupin and Charlie together.

End of eighth paragraph.

"We can barely catch up with you when you're goin' somewhere in a hurry." said Ron and Hermione. Harry laughed.
"Yeah, I know seven other people who had a hard time keeping up too.” said Harry with a smile.

"What do you mean.” said Ron with raised eyebrows.

"I'm Britain’s Junior Track Champ, I've won it every year I've entered. I've set several Junior National records for running.” Harry said proudly. “If I can't fly, then running is the next best thing.”

Ron and Hermione stared along with other students and the teachers.

"Where are your medals? Your cups? Can we see them." said Hermione excitedly. Harry's smile fell off slowly.

"Uncle Vernon keeps pile-driving them to the ground. Every time I win something, and I get a commendation, he breaks it.” he ignored the snarls that went around the Hall. "I saved one however, had to dig for it out of the garbage and glue it back together, but I still have it on me.” He reached deep into his cloak and pulled out a golden medal. Hermione and Ron saw a delicate picture of a man running with wings on his feet. It was cracked all the way through in several places. It even had the Queen's seal on the back, with Harry's name etched on the bottom and the year.

"I'll tell you all about it later.” he said to Ron and Hermione.

Ninth paragraph, first sentence.

"It doesn't have anything to do with living in a cupboard, Potter! But it really doesn't help!” said Madam Pomfrey fearfully.

"She's right Potter,” squeaked Professor Flitwick. "Your Father and Mother were of average height, but we will have to do some magical diagnostics to find out just how tall you are supposed to be and rectify it. We can do that soon.”

Harry smiled.
Ron snickered, Harry heard and scowled over to him. “Not...one...word...”

“Wouldn't dream of it.” said Ron with a smirk.

Ninth paragraph, second sentence.

"They didn't even give you your own clothes? Is your cousin really that big? Were the shirts shrunk to fit you?" asked Madam Bones Harry blinked and shook his head. He then took off his cloak, then uniform shirt. Underneath was a casual t-shirt. He stretched it out to show how large it really was.

"Dudley wore this about nine years ago." said Harry plainly. Mrs. Weasely turned a deep red after she uttered a curse that made Harry and the Weasely family stare at her.

Ninth paragraph, third sentence.

People who knew the Potters sighed and smiled at him. So did quite a number of girls in the school. His eyes were so lovely, but like Ginny, most of them couldn't look at him for long or they would start to blush.

Ninth paragraph, fourth sentence.

"That boy, if he was here now." said Mr. Weasley with a grumble.

Ninth paragraph, fifth sentence.
"SEE! I WAS RIGHT! HE IS ATTENTION SEEKING!" yelled Fudge to all who would hear.

"OH, WILL YOU SHUT UP?" yelled quite a few students, including Madame Bones herself.

End of ninth paragraph

Dialogue set, first sentence.

Again the room went silent. Lupin looked to Harry, who was just sitting there, unconcerned. Lupin on the other hand, had his mouth open and his eyes were watery.

"That is what you thought happened to your parents? For over ten years?" said Lupin faintly.

Harry nodded.

"A CAR CRASH?" That scream came from in the back of the Hall, but no one could seem to locate it. Only Harry and Lupin knew who screamed it, for then Snuffles came trotting back to them, climbed into the bowl and laid down on Harry's lap, whining.

End of dialogue set.

Tenth paragraph.

"Is this the reasons you don't ask questions in class Mr. Potter?" Harry looked away from the Herbology Professor and nodded. The teachers, excluding Umbridge looked horrified.

Good, these Muggles have the right idea. I wouldn't want the little beast to talk to me anymore then he absolutely has to. And even then it's too much. thought Madame Umbridge.
Eleventh paragraph,

Dialogue line.

Hermione let out a very, very rude phrase, that caused her to have her hand fly to her mouth in shock. Ron and Harry just sat in wonder of her. Then they looked at each other.

"We ruined her." they gulped. The students and even some of the teachers laughed.

Twelfth paragraph.

"Your dad's hair stuck up in the same way, even your grandfather's hair was identical." said Lupin, running his hand over the trademarked Potter hair.

Thirteenth paragraph, first sentence.

"Hey Potter, can't your cousin find the kitchen without help?" said Malfoy with a smirk. Harry thought for a moment.

"I really don't think so." with a mock frown on his lips. The twins took a break from sitting at the house table to roll on the floor laughing.

Thirteenth paragraph, third sentence.

"Doesn't he sound like a heartthrob?" said Lavender, Pavarti, and Padma giggling.
"YOU ARE FREAKING AWESOME!" yelled Fred and George getting up hugging Harry.

However it was way too tight of a hug and he could hardly contain a yelp of pain. It went unnoticed by the rest of the school except the people that were sitting close by. Fred and George immediately released him and Lupin conjured up another cushion, to ease some of the pain. Lupin looked up to Madame Pomfrey and that was the 'magic' signal to summon her to him. She lifted the back of his shirt and administered some more healing salve. Whatever was on the object that caused the poor boy such extensive injuries, was not allowing him to heal quickly.

"Are you freaking kidding me? What a spoiled brat!" said Draco, he then looked at the stunned looks gazing at him. "What?" Nobody answered him.

"What would happen if he had overturned the table Harry." said Mrs. Weasely. Harry cringed.

"I would need to make the Dursley's more food, and I would have to eat the stuff on the floor. Then spend the rest of the morning cleaning the floor." said Harry shrugging his shoulders.

"YOU AREN'T AN ANIMAL! NOBODY SHOULD EAT OFF THE FLOOR LIKE THAT!" screeched Mrs. Weasely.
He merely shrugged again. "It was either that or nothing, I went ten years without having any dignity."

Teacher, guests and students alike all paled. Umbridge smirked from where she was sitting. Snape looked as if he wanted to be ill.

"Can't your cousin count?" asked a Ravenclaw with wide eyes.

"Actually, no. He can't read either. He's dyslexic, Aunt Petunia and Uncle Vernon didn't want him to be made fun of at school for going to special classes. I wanted so bad to tell them they were idiots, the classes would help him, not hurt him. They never listen. So they do his homework for him. I should say, they make me do it. He's getting better though. He now can count up to a hundred and is starting to read some small second year primary books." said Harry seriously. No joking manner in his eyes.

"Nothing good will come of that boy. Or that family." mumbled Dumbledore. His eyes were lacking that twinkling luster, until he looked at Harry. Then his eyes grew bright again. He was so proud of Harry, coming through all of this just as innocent and pure as the day he was placed on their doorstep.
"Here comes the famous Harry Potter luck." laughed Hermione.

"Actually, I was somewhat lucky that day." said Harry smiling slightly at her.

"What's wrong with cats Mr. Potter?" smirked McGonagall.

"My heart belonged only to 'Tootsie,' Professor." beamed Harry.

"Feeling is mutual." snarled Harry. The twins looked between themselves excitedly. That was the one who....they could hardly wait.

Ron flinched, the word 'slug' still made him feel quite nauseous ever since his second year curse mishap
"Harry, they can't leave an eleven year old alone in the house." scolded Hermione.

"They wouldn't be leaving an eleven year old alone, they'd be leaving a ten year old." said Harry playfully. Hermione stuck her tongue out at him.

"Want a stamp for that?" teased Harry. She blushed and lightly smacked Harry on the back of his head.

"We will!" cheered the twins. All four houses clapped. Harry couldn't believe that the Slytherins were all of a sudden, since the start of the books, were on his side.

"If I hear anymore horrible stories about the Dursley's, I'll help you." said Mrs. Weasely, earning gasps from her children.
"They better not have." growled Lupin, gently pulling Harry closer to him.

Dialogue line.

"Who gives a damn about a stupid car?" said Dean.

Twenty-second paragraph.

"I call first dib's on smacking this brat upside the head!" yelled Malfoy over to the Weasley family. His dislike for Potter was being stripped away line by line thanks to this book.

"You'll have to beat us to him first!" yelled Ron.

Dialogue set, to the first comma.

It took the entire school fifteen minutes to stop laughing. Not even the teachers could contain their amusement at the name. What only made it worse was Umbridge speaking out loud and in a very serious tone, "I think it's a lovely nickname." It was a while till they could start again.

Dialogue set

Dialogue set

Growls could be heard all over the hall.
"Prat" growled several people in the Great Hall.

“Get out of his face, you fat walrus!” yelled Michael Corner from the Ravenclaw table.

End of dialogue set.

What? thought the people in the Hall. They were hating the Dursleys more and by the second. If anyone here was going to go to Privet Drive to beat these...things...up, they wanted to either get in on the action, or go to watch.

"That's it, Fred, George, let me know how you want the house blown up, I'll get what I need." she whispered viciously over to them. The twins looked at her in shock, but then grinned evilly. Oh the things they would do!

This made people shift guiltily in their seats.
“You poor thing.” said Remus trying hard not to laugh.

Remus stopped laughing.

Next morning, however, he had gotten up to find his hair exactly as it had been before Aunt Petunia had sheared it off. He had been given a week in his cupboard and an hour of whipping with a belt and electrical cord for this, even though he had tried to explain that he couldn’t explain how it had grown back so quickly.

"They...wh...whi...whipped you? Oh, Harry!” cried Hermione and she covered her eyes and began to weep bitterly. Harry wanted to reach over and comfort her, but Lupin pulled him back down and had Harry lean on him. Lupin wasn't going to let Harry move away from him. He couldn't protect him the way James and Lily would have wanted. To make up for it, Lupin was going to offer Harry all the comfort he possibly could, and he knew Sirius felt the same way.

Dumbledore buried his face in his hands, weeping silently. What had he done?

Hagrid had to be magically restrained by Madam Bones or he would have gone after the Dursleys.

Umbridge sniffed indignantly at the affection Potter was getting. Filthy wolf, enjoy his company while you can. Pretty soon, Potter will be out of here, and back with the Muggles that obviously have the talent of handling the brat.

The last statement reduced Mrs. Weasely to tears once more. Her husband had to rub her back slowly in an attempt to calm her down. No child should be that relieved.

Twenty-ninth paragraph, first sentence.

"Merlin, Harry! You apparated!" yelled Lee.

"I don't think so, from what the first book put it, I didn't spin in a circle like Dumbledore did."

"I think what happened is a very rare ability indeed. I believe that you had just flown, no broom, no thestral, no aid, but your own magic." said Dumbledore, grinning broadly.

"No way! Can one do that?" yelled a few seventh years. Dumbledore motioned Madame Hooch to continue.

Twenty-ninth paragraph, to the end of paragraph.

"Whoa! You did fly! AWESOME! Can you do it again?"

Harry frowned at them, “I can try...I suppose.”

He stood up slowly and tried to remember what was going through his mind at the time. He then remembered, a feeling, no, more like a desire to get out of reach, out of harm's way. Then, what sounded like quite a distance away, he heard cheering and yelling. Harry opened his eyes and was face to face with a beam on the ceiling. He slowly looked down and noticed the floor, about twenty-seven feet below him. His eyes widened and then, like a stone, he fell to the floor. About five feet from the ground, he summoned up the feeling once again, and he hung there in midair. Lupin took ahold of him and brought him back down to the bowl-chair.

"Don't do that again." said Lupin with a small smile as he pulled Harry back into the bowl. The rest of the school laughed and cheered.
"I'll give him something to complain about." snarled Bill.

Again, Sirius barked and wagged his tail.

"Potter, you should have waited for the ride to end before bringing up the subject of imagination." sneered Snape.

"I always sort of daydream when I'm in a car. I get to see the whole world go by my eyes. That doesn't happen very often when you're stuck under the stairs." with a dreamy look on his face that would have done Luna proud. Snape flinched at the reminder of the cupboard.

"Laugh it up, losers." mumbled Charlie. Listening to this book and watching his mother just barely endure was harsh. Harry came to their house plenty of times, he was family, and if he had anything to say about it, he was going make these Dursleys pay.
"Hermione, I forbid you to tell the twins anything about cartoons." said Mrs. Weasely quickly as she noticed the excited spark in their eyes.

"Overstuffed cheapskate." growled Bill.

A cascade of laughter and cheers rang through the school.

The laughter quickly died and was replaced by growls.

"They wouldn't hit you in front of your uncle and aunt, would they?" asked Ginny, shock washing over her face.

"They've done it before, Uncle Vernon even joined in once."

Tonks and Moody were whispering darkly in the corner, as Madame Bones was busy writing down charges of abuse against the Muggles. Rita Skeeter, her quill malfunctioning due to the magical pressure of the books, was trying to come up with flowery words on her own. She looked down at what she had written, and tossed it. Without her Quick-Quote Quill she couldn't write in the same manner as she was used to. Finally she gave up the endeavor.

Thirty-sixth paragraph, to the end of paragraph.

"What the heck is a knickerbocker glory? asked Malfoy, many purebloods also looked a little curious. Hermione was about to answer, but Harry beat her to it.

"It’s an ice cream sundae, it’s in a tall glass or clear bowl and it’s got gelatin, and cream layered underneath the ice cream. On top, you put different kinds of syrups, nuts and whipped cream. And finally you put a cherry on top."

"And they let you have one of those?" said Draco with his blonde eyebrows raised. Harry laughed.

"Dudley left me the last few spoonfuls of gelatin and cream."

"So he ate two of them? How big was it?" Harry showed with his hands. Crabbe and Goyle both blinked, not even the both of them could eat two of those things.

"After this chapter is done, I can go down to the kitchens and make everybody one, smaller version then what Dudley had though." Everyone brightened up at that, they were always up for something special for a treat.

Thirty-seventh paragraph.

"Gee, mate, you never catch a break do you?"

Thirty-eighth paragraph, fourth sentence.

"I would be more than happy to show them to them, if given the opportunity." mused Snape sitting with his fingertips drumming themselves against each other.

Thirty-eighth paragraph, to the end of paragraph.

"That's right, ignore them, they aint worth your time." yelled Charlie, an avid animal lover. Hagrid nodded approvingly.

Thirty-ninth paragraph.

"Bet he looked attractive on the other side of the glass." snickered Lavender.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

"Did that boy just order his father to do something? If he was here right now, he'd go over my knee right now!" said Mrs. Weasely.

"Mrs. Weasely, he's so big that you would need to magic him in the air and just smack him with a broom." said Harry.

End of dialogue set.

Dialogue line.

"Gee, so sorry that, maybe we should have talk to the zookeeper and advise him to teach the animals some tricks." said Charlie sarcastically. He wasn't happy in any sense by the way the Dursley kid was acting.

Fortieth paragraph.

"I didn't need to hear that you feel pity for a snake." said Lupin sadly

"Why?" asked Harry

"You have had harder life then that snake ever will."

"Yeah, Harry." said Neville, "It was most likely looking at you thinking at least I get meals"

Forty-first paragraph.

Forty-second paragraph.

"How can a snake wink? They don't have eyelids. You probably just incorporated the feeling with an action you understood." said Hermione logically.

Dumbledore smiled down to her, "Actually Miss Granger, when an animal comes into contact with a wizard/witch that can comprehend it. That wizard/witch's magic will grant the animal special abilities that they normally never have. And once the wizard or witch is gone, they lose the ability."

Hermione looked shocked. Harry chuckled.

Forty-third paragraph.
"Of course you would," said Ron, shaking his head. Harry only shrugged.

Forty-fourth paragraph

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Forty-fifth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Forty-sixth paragraph.

Species of snake, Brazil

Dialogue line.

Forty-seventh paragraph.

"Harry..." said Lupin.

"Did I fail to mention to you that I was a parselmouth? Oops." said Harry with wicked grin.

Lupin laughed "Don't smile like that, it scares me. You look like your dad plotting another prank."

Harry laughed as well.
"A Shooting Star broomstick would have been faster." smirked Harry. The Quidditch players and enthusiasts all laughed.

"Out of the way, you," he said, punching Harry in the ribs, breaking at least two.

"OI!" yelled Ron and Hermione.

Mrs. Weasely and Madame Pomfrey hurried to where the teen was, pulled Harry to a standing position and lifted his shirt. The entire school watched as they both took off Harry's shirt and they gasped. Harry was very, very skinny and his wounds from the mysterious attack were still wrapped up tightly. He had some muscle tone, but only on his chest and stomach. Madame Pomfrey felt his ribs to see if there was any breakage, and her face fell.

She couldn't believe she didn't notice it before, she could feel old breaks that hadn't healed properly and more recent ones that were still in the middle of the self-healing process.

"Potter, where did you get these muscles from? This is the only actual meat on your bones that you have." asked Madame Pomfrey, after healing the old and new breaks.

Harry blushed. "It's the only way I can keep weight on me. Everything else doesn't stay."

Girls all over the school pouted, they half-heartedly wanted his metabolism. Then they wouldn't have to try so hard to lose weight.

End of dialogue set.
"Whatever it is Harry, get out of there!" yelled Lupin. Harry sat back down in the bowl and looked at his old Defense Professor curiously.

Fiftieth paragraph, first sentence.

"Impressive Mr. Potter, no sound, no breaking. Just vanished very good." said Dumbledore nodding approvingly.

End of fiftieth paragraph.

Fifty-first paragraph.

"I can't believe it....."said Fred in in false shock.

"...a polite snake." said George in a similar attitude.

Fifty-second paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"It went bye-bye." said Ginny with a smirk.

Fifty-third paragraph, third sentence.

"Liars, snake wasn't even near you." said Bill.
"Why the heck did you bring that up, you jerk?" said Charlie.

"Drunkard." growled Madam Pomfrey angrily.

Harry lay in his dark cupboard much later, feeling stiff and finished putting the last Band-Aid he had on his temple, wishing he had a watch. He didn't know what time it was and he couldn't be sure the Dursleys were asleep yet. Until they were, he couldn't risk sneaking to the kitchen for some food and an ice pack for his bruises and bumps.

People acrossed the Hall actually started to yell even louder than any other time before. Harry looked at Lupin and then over to Dumbledore and McGonagall. All three of them were pale and their hands were tensed.

Dumbledore covered his face in his hands, tears coming down. What have I done?

THERE WAS NO CRASH! yelled both McGonagall and Lupin. Sirius growled and bared her teeth.
"How can he remember that?" asked Madame Hooch, worriedly.

"Dear God." Everyone looked around, it came from Fudge, his face pale and tears pricking his eyes.

Bout damn time, moron thought Harry, Hermione, the Weaselys and the rest of the Order.

Lupin and Sirius both looked down, guiltily.

Dumbledore looked up quickly, "How could random people find him?" then his eyes widened in shock. The Blood Wards weren't working! But why? Then he thought a little more carefully. Of course, it was because Harry never considered it his home.

"I'll disagree with them! Let me at 'em" yelled several students and were joined in angry protest. against the cousin of The Boy Who Lived. Harry stood up and sent a rainbow of sparks over the students. They stopped and turned quickly towards them.

"If you lot calm down, I'll go and make you all some knickerbocker glories." he said with a big smile. The entire student body yelled and cheered. He took a quick headcount left. Lupin and Sirius wanted to go with him, but Harry assured to them that he was fine. He worked better alone.

"Dumbledore, he isn't going back to those monsters, ever." said Mr. Weasely sternly.

"Absolutely not," said Lupin.

"I couldn't agree more, I have a lot of making up to do, especially to Harry." said Dumbledore quietly.

When Madame Hooch turned the page to read the title of the next chapter, a clear, glowing scroll blossomed out of the book and the book itself sealed shut.

"What is that thing Albus?" said Moody quickly, wand aimed at it.

"It’s a Recollection Scroll, they show us a part of Harry's history that the story can't put into words. It can either be a glorious memory, or a horrible memory. If we wish to continue on with the book, we must watch it." said Dumbledore with a puzzled look.

"Should we wait till Harry gets back?" asked George.

The scroll unfurled itself and blackness enveloped the entire room.

"I'll take that as a 'no"
The First Recollection Scroll

Chapter Summary

Where did the light take them? Harry wasn't with them...could they get back to him before whoever hurt him last time, hurt him once more? Before they can, they have to watch something that Harry had kept secret from them. Something soul shattering.

Chapter Notes

Warning! Severe abuse is in this chapter, if you don't wish to read it, skip to the next chapter. This a very strong T rating, borderlining M, it's bad. This isn't a reading chapter, chapter.
P.S. I don't own Harry Potter, but I do put it on my Christmas wish list.
P.P.S I was writing this while listening to Billy Gillman's "Spend Another Night" and "Til I Can Make It On My Own", they really go together, in my opinion anyway.

The entire Hall was transported to what looked liked a primary school gym, however, the tables were gone and they were all standing, not knowing what to do. Then all of a sudden, thirty little kids ran into the huge room and began running around, picking up basketballs and jump ropes to pass the time. They then saw a cluster of boys come in, there were five of them and one of them was the fattest little kid all of them had ever seen.

"This is boring, eh Dudley?" said one of the boys that looked like a small rat.

"Yeah Piers, where is Potter, he should be fun to play with." said Dudley looking around.

Then a small, thin boy with bright green eyes. He wasn't wearing glasses, but they could just make out the thin scar on his forehead.

"Holy cow!" yelled Ron looking down.

"What is it? Harry just came in!" said Hermion stamping her foot.

"One of those midgets just.."

"HARRY" yelled Lupin rushing forward.

Everyone turned and saw Dudley and his friends punching and kicking him right in front of the door. Piers was holding Harry's arms back from behind and laughed as each blow struck the boy. Lupin ran as fast as he could, but he was beaten to the children by Sirius Black, who was no longer in his canine form. Sirius lunged for the abusers, but sailed through them. He caught himself quickly and looked behind himself, stunned. He tried to clutch at Harry, but his hands fell only on air. Harry was crying out in pain, and his godfather could do nothing.

"SIRIUS BLACK!" yelled Umbridge, she whipped her wand out and pointed it towards Black.
Nothing happened, no sparks, no smoke. Umbridge looked at her wand in shock.

"Magic is useless here. We are back in the folds of time, nearly an audience for these past events. There is no going back, we must watch the past unfold. Then we may return." said Dumbledore with intense grief ripping through his throat. He could not take his heartbroken eyes from the small black haired lad. Hagrid was rooted on the spot, shocked to his very heart, that piglet was hurting Harry, HIS Harry.

"Explains how that one kid just walked right through me." said Ron looking at his middle. "Why didn't you mention that?" screamed Hermione.

"I was about to, then those brats started hitting Harry." said Ron quickly.

"When we get back to the school, we shall administer Veritiserum to show you the truth, Minister." said Dumbledore, pushing the Minister's wand down, which was pointed at the man kneeling and weeping. "I would normally wait until the third book and let you figure it out for yourself, but the dog is out of the bag." said Dumbledore, a shadow of a smile flashed acrossed his face. But disappeared just as quickly as he watched Harry get hit very hard in the face.

"Teacher's coming!" yelled a member of Dudley's gang. They broke apart quickly and shoved Harry away from them.

"Cowards!" yelled a few Gryffindors.

A cross looking woman came stomping in and noticed Harry running towards the bathroom. Holding a bloody nose.

"Clumsy fool fell again, did he?" she said with disdain.

"Stupid woman, he was attacked!" shouted a sixth year Hufflepuff.

The room then rushed forward and they saw Harry, taking a wet paper towel to his nose and holding his head back. Madame Pomfrey rushed to his side.

"That's it dear, now then..." she whispered, but Flitwick had to come pat her arm, shaking his head. The boy couldn't hear them. They watched as Harry washed away the blood from his face and hands. He looked up at the mirror. The watchers could see themselves in the mirror, but the boy couldn't see them. They noticed that Harry had a broken nose, Harry also took notice of this. He sighed, placed two thumbs up to the bridge of his nose, and forced it to straighten with a sickening crack.

"JEEZE! DOESN'T HARRY FEEL ANY PAIN?" howled a seventh year Hufflepuff cringing and shaking his head furiously. Harry looked to make sure it was straight, as if he had to do this before. When he was presentable enough, he left to go back to the gym.

They followed the young boy and saw everyone were lining up for a football game. Harry had to wait until the very end to be picked. The kid that chose him gave Dudley a quick glance and pointed towards the young boy. Harry came over and joined his team.

"Oh come on! He can't be all that bad." said Dean.

The Watchers, as one first year had dubbed them, sat on the side of the gym and cheered on Harry, who seemed to be the best one on the floor. They couldn't understand why Harry was chosen last, when he was the only one who could actually kick the ball straight. Dean was bombarded with questions on what the rules were and how the game was played. Harry was the only person on his team that managed to score a single goal, he even tried to let other's take a shot, but they kept kicking it back to him. What was amazing was that, there was no magic involved, this was Harry's own talent and he was good. Sirius and Remus couldn't look any prouder.

When the warning bell went off, the teacher grabbed the ball and told them to get ready for next class and left to put the ball away. Dudley waddled up to Harry and shoved him hard.

"What the..WHAT IS WRONG WITH YOU?" yelled Fred and George at Dudley.

Harry fell to the ground hard and threw a hand up to stop Dudley from hitting him. The Watchers stared in amazement when they saw Dudley fly through the air and land on a inflatable bouncy mat. Harry sat in shock.

"Serves him right! That's teaching that fat git!" shouted a few third years.

The room, once again zoomed ahead and they were now standing in a living room. They noticed that the room had elongated itself to fit all the people in it.

"This zooming forward is starting to make me feel sick." squeaked Neville.

"If your going to get sick, be sure to do it in that brown chair. Its sagging, looks like a walrus would sit in it." said Sirius pointing to the chair in the corner, by the television. Neville went and obliged, to the silent cheers of the others. After watching Neville, some had to go and let loose as well.

Then a man entered the living room.

"Petunia, I'm home." he said placing his coat on the hook by the mantle. "Why did you want me to come home early?"

Petunia came in with a sobbing Dudley who was obviously faking it. She herself was tense and pale.

"Go tell your daddy what your nasty cousin did, Dudderdums." Dudley went over to his father who took him on his knee, sitting right where Neville and several others got sick. They all couldn't help but laugh.

"H-he th-th-threw m-me in th-the a-a-a-air! I w-was s-s-scared!" Dudley pretended to bawl.

"It'll be okay Dudley, your daddy will sort him out. Where is he?" growled Vernon.

"In his cupboard. I already smacked him with your belt a few times." she said with disgust.

"HE DIDN'T DO ANYTHING!" yelled Draco, he couldn't understand it, what is wrong with these muggles?

"A few more lashes should make him pay for hurting my son. You go and take Dudley to that new movie. I'll sort that creature out." Petunia gathered her purse and coat and took Dudley's hand.

"CREATURE? I'LL CREATURE YOU!" said Lupin, took a step forward, Snape grabbed his arm and pulled him back. Snape whispered into his ear. "Don't bother, you'll only tire yourself out"

After they left, Uncle Vernon turned on the radio and tv and cranked up the volume. Then he went around the house and pulled down the blinds and drew the curtains. He grabbed several things and placed them in the living room, the cushion fluff was scattered all about the room. Once he was done, he went to the cupboard and pulled Harry out by his hair. Sirius tried to punch, kick and strangle the man, but he was unsuccessful.

The scroll, taking pity on them, instead of the boy, made the world go black, then it was restored. It was no longer afternoon, but early evening. Harry was laying on the ground, bleeding from head to foot and not moving. Uncle Vernon was wiping the blood from his hands. The teachers looked down at Harry and they saw beside the small, unconscious boy, a blood-stained poker, and a dent in the boy's head that matched it. Sirius and Remus began to gag and clutch at their throats.

"NO! OH GOD, NO! HE DIDN'T, HE COULDN'T!" yelled Dumbledore. He flung himself to the floor, beside the unconscious boy, trying to claw at him and revive him. Moody had to pick Dumbledore off the floor and started to shake him.

"DON'T DO THIS! GET AHOLD OF YOURSELF! THIS HARRY IS BEYOND HELP! WE CAN DO NOTHING! BUT THERE IS STILL A HARRY POTTER BACK HOME THAT NEEDS US, NEEDS YOU! HE'S BEEN DAMAGED! BUT YOU CAN FIX HIM! YOU CAN HELP HIM HEAL! BUT NOT IF YOUR IN ST. MUNGOS!" bellowed Moody. Dumbledore breathed quickly and nodded. He covered his face in his hands.

Snape was staring down at the bleeding boy. He started rocking forward and had to push his way through the wall of students. He went over to corner and became violently sick.

Uncle Vernon then turned down both the radio and television and started flinging his own possessions around the house. Once he was satisfied with the look, he left the house. He didn't even bother locking the door and zoomed off into the distance. Harry just laid there, bleeding, it was a half and hour till Harry so much as stirred. The Watchers cringed and howled with agony as they watched Harry crawling slowly on the ground.

The students nor the teachers could watch anymore, they cried, screamed and tried to pick Harry up. Only Umbridge sat and watched the events with a small smile, the brat is getting what he deserves, bravo, sir. McGonagall saw the smile on the toad's face and punched her square on the jaw, knocking the woman unconscious. Some students cried and covered their eyes, not looking at what had just transpired between the High Inquisitor and the Deputy Headmistress.

In twenty minutes he reached the sidetable and pulled on the cord to the telephone. It landed and flopped the phone off the receiver. Harry placed his bloody forefinger on the numbers and pressed the nine button three times. The phone rang, and then a lady could be heard on the other end.

"Nine-Nine-Nine, do you need Fire, Medical, or Rescue?"

Harry reached for the phone and dragged it closer to himself, brought his head up, as high as he could and tried to yell as loud as he could, but it only gained the strength of a whisper.

"..help.." then his head fell to the floor with a thump, passing out from the loss of blood.

"okay, honey, where are you at? Honey? Just stay on the phone, sweetheart, we'll find you. Stay on the phone, it'll be okay"
For an agonizing fifteen minutes, the Watchers could only stand, scream and vow to everything holy that Mr. Dursley was going to feel just what he put Harry through. The lady on the other side of the line was still trying to call out to Harry who still hadn't woken up, and they could hear the woman's voice becoming desperate.

“Sweetie? Can you hear me? I need you to answer me.” said the emergency call monitor.

Then they heard a siren blaring through the neighborhood. They heard two sharp knocks on the door, but then the door was flung open. They hurried to the living room, and stared in shock for a few seconds. They knelt beside the boy and yelled out to the others outside.

"HE'S IN HERE! GET THAT DAMN AMBULANCE IN HERE NOW! It's okay bud, we'll get you some help. Where the hell is this kid's parents?" said the younger police officer.

The older partner shook his head, "does he even belong here? There aint a picture of him anywhere in here," he said looking around. "just pictures of a fat, blonde beachball."

The ambulance medics, who were seasoned professionals and had seen horrible accidents and other unspeakable acts of destruction, flinched when they saw Harry. They covered him gently with gauze patches and placed him tenderly on the stretcher. Just then a loud voice came from outside.

"WHAT THE RUDDY HELL IS GOING ON!"

Uncle Vernon came stomping in, he looked down at Harry and flicked his eyes towards the phone that was laying on the floor, not more than a foot away. A split second later, he broke down crying, covering Harry with his body.

"GET HIM AWAY FROM HARRY! HE'S THE BASTARD THAT HURT HIM!" yelled Bill.

"What happened, tell your Unkie Vern what happened!" he pretended to bawl. Harry was not responding and the cops had to remove Vernon from the boy so they could take Harry to the hospital. Vernon wiped away the crocodile tears and looked around the house,

"Looks like someone, came in and destroyed my house, oh god! Those home invaders in town! They came here! Harry must've...startled them.."

"YOU KNOW PERFECTLY WELL WHO HURT HIM!" bellowed Fudge, forgetting that he was trying to discredit the boy. This was not the time, nor the place.

"Door wasn't forced, sir."

Uncle Vernon shook his head quickly, "I left the house unlocked, Harry was playing in the backyard and Petunia lost her spare key. I left it unlocked for them! Oh...ITS ALL MY FAULT!"

"YOU BETTER DAMN WELL BELIEVE IT YOU %^#$*^" shouted Charlie.

The younger police officer patted the large man's back sympathetically, the older police officer looked at him warily.

"Smart muggle that." said Moody, directing his words towards the older officer and holding Albus back.

They asked him if he wanted to ride with Harry, but Vernon said he would wait for his wife and son and go see his nephew together. The police officers left and saw two detectives approach the house.
"What happened."

"Seems like the house was trashed by the home invaders running loose." said the younger police officer.

"Then we may as well just start the paperwork, those guys wear gloves, and in all forty-seven break-ins they never left so much as a piece of fuzz behind. How bad was the kid hurt?"

"I don't think the kid is going to live to see the morning." said the older officer quietly. A thick silence blanketed the four of them and also The Watchers. "Also, I don't think the invaders did this." he said a little louder.

"What makes you think that?"

"That man, he looked from his nephew to the phone in disbelief. Like he didn't think the kid could do that."

"That's not uncommon, most kids don't know how to use the phone."

"This kid was six, right when you get to first grade, you learn 9-9-9." he growled. "My gut tells me that the uncle beat that kid."

"VERY smart Muggle that, he'd make a great Auror." nodded Moody.

"Courts need more then just a gut feeling."

"I know, we'll go and see if the kid can talk."

Again, the world zoomed forward and they watched in horror as Harry was rushed from the ambulance to the emergency room. They couldn't bring themselves to go in there and sit with him. They all stood, leaned against the wall and sat in the chairs in the hall. Umbridge was still laying on the ground and nobody was really paying her any notice.

They watched as the four police officers came and sat down in the waiting room. It was several hours later till a man dressed all in plain, funny-looking, loose fitting clothes came out to them.

"How is he?" said the older officer.

The doctor sighed, "Little guy is just barely hanging on, he's just too small, too fragile. What happened to this kid, looks like he picked a fight with an entire herd of bulls?"

The Watchers were silent, they hung their heads, forgetting that Harry was waiting for them back at the school.

"The uncle says the home invaders, I think it was him." the doctor took a step back in shock.

"If it was the uncle, the man is a monster."

"Got that right." said Tonks her hair turning red.

"Is he going to be alright?" said one of the detectives. The doctor shook his head.

"Only thing I can do is make his passing easier. I can make it so he won't feel anymore pain. Where is his family?" said the doctor looking around.

"We didn't know him yet, if we did, we would have been there." muttered Ron.
The older officer looked down the way and tilted his head down to the other end. Petunia, Vernon and Dudley were coming down the hall, calmly.

"Well," said Vernon gruffly.

"Try and act like you give a damn, why don't you?" said Madame Pomfrey angrily

The cops and the doctor stared at them in shock. The doctor cleared his throat and stated what he had told the police.

"He's in the Intensive Care Unit, he won't last the night." said the Doctor solemnly.

"Can we go over your house looking for fingerprints? That way we can catch the men that did this to your nephew." he said, he wanted to judge their reactions.

A glint came to Uncle Vernon's eyes, "I'm sorry, my wife cleaned our whole house, its a habit she has."

The Watchers stared in shock, even in the wizarding world, fingerprints were important to Aurors, and this lady wiped all the evidence away.

"You know, we needed that evidence to bring the monster's to court right?" said the older officer with anger tinting his voice.

"Oh he knew." snarled Snape.

"Sorry" said Vernon smugly.

"Are not." growled Bill.

The doctor then showed the Dursley's where Harry was, they didn't insist, but the older officer did. Even the watchers followed them down the hall.

Harry was hooked up to several different machines, his heartbeat being monitored on a screen, his breathing was slow and it seemed as if it hurt him greatly to take a breath. His eyes were closed and despite a bruised and pale face, he looked peaceful. The Watcher's couldn't hold in the tears any longer and they bawled. The Dursleys were not similar to them in any way, they only had indifference in their eyes. Despite the noises going on around them and the sobbing sounds they themselves were making, Sirius and Remus heard the doctor and the police talking in hushed tones.

"They destroyed the evidence, what are we going to do now?I want those bastards in jail." said the doctor in a furious whisper.

"As do the rest of us, but what can we do? The poor boy can't finger him when he's in heaven, and all we have is a gut feeling. The D.A would just laugh us out of the station." said the older officer.

Then, Harry's eyes snapped open and he started to gag and wheeze, the breathing tube still down his throat. The doctor rushed forward, frantically getting him to calm down and breathe normal. He slipped a oxygen mask over his face and the boy took a few gulps of air and settled back into the pillows. His eyes eyes looked dull and his entire looked even more frail than what seemed like hours ago.

"Its okay son, you're in the hospital. Don't you worry." He upped the dosage of morphine just a little bit and watched as the boy fell back to sleep.
The older cop looked up at the ceiling and said quite seriously "I haven't done this in a while but," he placed two finger on his forehead, then his chest, left shoulder and finally his right shoulder. He muttered a prayer quietly and made the same motions as before.

"I don't believe this, this kid's heartbeat and breathing is getting better! He's going to be just fine!" The Watchers jumped up and down in excitement, the students anyway, the teachers were hugging themselves and crying. Even Snape and McGonagall were holding each other, laughing. Sirius and Remus were doing a jig where they stood.

The older officer looked up and mouthed "Thank You" to the ceiling. "Can you wake him up quickly, I know the poor thing just fell asleep, but I want to ask..." he jerked his head in the direction of the Dursleys and scowled.

The doctor thought about it and nodded. He adjusted the machines and gave Harry a little shake. "This man wants to talk to you quick, then you can go back to sleep. Alright?" Harry nodded weakly.

"Come with me Dursleys, you need to fill out some paper work." they left, not looking at the boy in the hospital bed, but Vernon had a frown on his face.

The older police officer came over to the hurt little boy with a grim look on his face.

"Lad? I've got a quick question, who hurt you?"

Harry groaned and closed his eyes. Harry though long and hard, but he could only shake his head. "I don't remember sir, I only remember coming home from school." He rubbed his bandaged head tenderly with a weak hand.

"I can understand why you don't remember, boy. Listen, we have an idea who did it, but unfortunately, we can't prove it. Here's my card, if you're hurt again, look me up or call. Then we can get the people who hurt you taken away. Read me?" said the cop smiling kindly.

Harry took the card, he had to hold the car quite close to his eyes to read it.

"I think you need glasses kid. Hospital will get you hooked up."

The rushing sensation came again, but this time, it felt as if they were falling.

They didn't feel themselves land, they were sitting in the same seats as before and it looked as if nothing had happened. Umbridge sat up, with a groggy look on her face. No one was talking, everyone just looked down. Harry had been through hell and back and then hell again at the end of every school year. And he never said a word.
It's dinnertime now, but no one wants to eat...who could eat after seeing what they did. So they use their time productively, they talk abit, prove someone innocent of murder, and then they have a little dessert. Normal everyday things.

Not to worry, no abuse here, just a lot of good feelings and lots of tasty treats! Downside, it’s not a reading book chapter.
I don't own Harry Potter, but I did buy a poster with him on it. Does that count? No? I didn't think so.

It was ten minutes after they had arrived, that tables of food had appeared in front of them. However, no one felt like eating. they could only remember the vision of a fallen Harry, covered in blood, obviously dying. The hall was silent except for the sound of one person gulping down food eagerly. They, including the Minister, turned to glare at Madam Umbridge. Umbridge looked nonchalantly back, when her eyes locked on Sirius Black's she whipped out her wand. Dumbledore, still feeling the fury that had taken over him at the Dursleys, was much too quick for her, and disarmed her. Once again Kingsley took possession of her wand.

"Severus, do you have some Veritiserum about you? Let’s take care of this before anything else happens. I hope Harry forgives me, we could have done this a while ago.” said Dumbledore coldly.

"Why didn't you, professor?” squeaked Hermione, still red-eyed.

"I wanted to bring Peter in, before I brought Sirius. I didn't want the Minister perform the Kiss too hastily on Sirius, before his innocence was proven. Ah, thank you Severus. For Sirius's peace of mind and out of respect for Harry, is this tainted in anyway?” said Dumbledore with a twinkle in his eye.

"No, sir. That's the strongest vial of Veritiserum that I have on me. I wouldn't poison him, not in front of witnesses anyway. ” said Snape, muttering the last part.

"I heard that, but it is comforting to know that you have that much self-control. Now Sirius," he said Dumbledore as he waited for the man to approach the Head table. "Do you want the Veritiserum in a glass of red Chateauneuf or would you prefer Lalande de Pomerol?"

"Can't I take the potion straight?" asked Sirius.

"You can, but I thought you would like to celebrate your new freedom with a drink. That, and I thought you and I both would need a drink after what we both witnessed.” said Dumbledore sadly. Sirius nodded furiously. He took the glass containing the Chateauneuf and held it out. Dumbledore poured a bit of the potion into his glass and they both lifted their glasses in a toast and drained
Sirius was going to have to hunt down a similar bottle of what he just had for himself. It was a beautiful taste that danced acrossed his tongue. Even the smell brought about memories of Christmas time at the Potters, spices, fruit and a hint of truffles. This was a bottle he had to find. Sirius eyes closed his eyes and felt himself fall backwards, but a chair had appeared from behind him.

"There Minister, he's ready to answer any question you have to ask." said Dumbledore, motioning towards the limp man in the chair.

"I've never seen Veritiserum do that." said Fudge suspiciously. Madame Bones groaned and sat forward.

"When you mix wine and Veritiserum together, it has an intense calming effect. No doubt...Sirius needed it...I do too after seeing that poor boy..." eyes brimming with tears. She walked to the front of the table and faced Sirius Black, head tilted on his shoulder and glass dangling precariously from his limp hand.

"What is your name?" said Madame Bones.

"Sirius Orionus Black." said Sirius clearly, though appearing to be in a deep sleep.

"Were you the Secret-Keeper to the Potters?" said Madam Bones, her voice hard.

"Yes"

"Did you relinquish that position to someone else?" interjected Dumbledore.

"Yes"

"Who was it that was the latest Secret-Keeper to the Potters?" said Madame Bones, taking control of the interrogation again. Though she didn't mind him helping out, as long as she got to the truth, she didn't give a damn who lended a hand.

"Peter Pettigrew"

A gasp went through the hall, Peter Pettigrew? The Ministry workers and some of the teachers looked shocked. That weak little boy? That nervous little man? HE was the Secret-Keeper? Why? Why would Peter betray the Potters?

"Why did you give him the position?"

"To lure Voldemort away from James and Lily, I thought that he would come after me and try and force me to give up their location, let Lily and James at least a bit more time to put more defenses up."

"Did he come after you?"

"No, he didn't need to, he already had the information he needed."

"What do you mean?"

"Peter went straight to Voldemort and told him. He wasn't even Secret-Keeper two hours and he scampered to Voldemort."
"After you found out what happened, what did you do?" asked Madam Bones, her voice cracking slightly.

"I went to the house, saw James. I wanted to run, I wanted to hide somewhere and just die. I thought of Lily and Harry and hurried upstairs. I saw the whole nursery just completely buried in rubble. Hagrid came out of nowhere and helped me move the fallen beams. We found the both of them. Lily was laying there, as if she were asleep, Harry had a cut on his forehead and blood was trickling down his small face. He kept trying to nuzzle into Lily, wake her up. I went to pick him up and just held him and cried. Hagrid told me that Dumbledore wanted him. I fought with Hagrid. I wanted to keep him, raise him, protect him. Hagrid wouldn't budge an inch, I finally consented and conjured up some blankets and wrapped him in them. Let Hagrid borrow my bike and he zoomed off, I watched him leave."

"Then what happened?"

"I went after Peter, found him on a little side street. Don't remember where. I pulled my wand on him, I wanted to kill him, he took James away, he took Lily. I wanted to blast him into a million pieces. He yelled, as loud as he could, that I killed them, I betrayed them. He pointed his wand backwards and half the street exploded. I was knocked backwards but I wasn't hurt. I stood up and looked for Peter, I saw on the ground a finger and looked towards a sewer grate. There was a rat, running down into the sewer. A rat I knew so well, with a toe missing."

"How did you know the rat?"

"Peter, James and I were all animagi. I can transform into a dog, James a stag, and Peter a rat. I've seen him transform a hundred times. After I saw Peter disappear, I laughed."

"Why did you?" asked Professor McGonagall curiously, she always wondered, but never had the heart to ask.

"All those years, he was the weakest one of us all, he depended on us to protect him. A Gryffindor, the house known for its bravery and nobility. Its goodness, and he allied himself with the biggest excuse for a dark wizard the world ever knew. I found it ironic in a way, that he could best me and James, the best in our year. My mind snapped, I lost my best friend, a woman I considered my sister and a little boy I viewed as my cub. I lost them all, and the love in my heart turned to hatred, and my new goal was to find Peter and kill him. Rip him apart with my own fangs. I laughed in anticipation of that day. But then I was surrounded by Ministry officials and was arrested."

The whole school was deadly silent. Dumbledore had a small smile upon his lips and he waved his wand in front of Sirius's eyes. Sirius's eyes opened and he lifted his head off his shoulder. He blinked sleepily and leaned back in the chair with a frown.

"So, you gonna chuck me in Azkaban for convenience again?" smirked Sirius.

"Not for convenience, no, but for escaping Azkaban yes. And being an unregistered Animagus. Aurors, seize him." said Umbridge with a regal gleam in her eyes, pointing to Sirius dramatically. Her smile disappeared when no Auror moved.

"I said 'seize him'!" screeched Umbridge. Fudge looked at her with an astounded look upon his face. Madame Bones turned on her heel and glared at the woman.

"I will not allow any charges to be placed against him, and by the way the Minister looks, he won't either." said Madame Bones, looking to Fudge, who nodded towards the head of Magical Law Enforcement.

"Also, I believe the Ministry should make some serious monetary compensation for imprisoning him without proof. As well as all of his possessions returned to him. Including, Delores, his house." said Madam Bones sternly.

"That is impossible, I am residing there now." said Umbridge, with a furious glare.

"If she's there, I don't want it, I'll set it on fire first, then rebuild it." said Sirius with frown.

"If you feel that way, she may keep the house, but pay you for it. Let's see, it's a twenty suites, three level house, thirty bathrooms, basement, two pools, attic, fifty balconies, library. You owe Mr. Black, Delores," she summoned a parchment and it came up with the total net worth of the home. "Sixty-three and a half million galleons. Do you still wish to reside there?" she said in a smug tone.

"What did she pay to live there after I got arrested?" said a stunned Sirius.

"Nothing, it was owned by the Ministry, but now that you are free and proven innocent, she must pay you to live there. As well as back rent. Well, your answer Delores?"

Umbridge muttered, "Take the damn house."

"Not too sure I want it, if she was there." shuddered Sirius.

"You can have custody of Harry quicker if you have a house all ready for him." grinned Dumbledore.

"I'll take it." stated Sirius immediately. Madame Bones smiled at him.

"We will send the compensation to your account."

The students cheered and applauded, teachers were also showing their approval of the turn of events. Everyone felt a lot better and they decided to tuck in to their dinners, which was already past the uneaten appetizer stage and onto the main course.

Sirius wasn't hungry, he was too excited to eat, he wanted to find Harry and tell him all that had happened just now. He finally got his fondest and dearest wish, Harry was going to live with him! The dinner disappeared and was preparing for the dessert. Sirius was standing by the Head table, talking to Madame Bones when the door opened and Harry came in with his cane.

"Your Knic..." his smile fell quickly off his face as he saw Sirius standing beside Madame Umbridge and a Auror he didn't know.

Harry whipped his wand out and waved it above his head, a golden lasso appeared out of the end of it, flew towards Sirius, enveloped him. Harry pulled hard on the wand and Sirius was lifted from the ground, into the air and landed lightly behind Harry. He held out an arm, protecting his godfather and pointing his wand towards the table.

"Whoa." said a few students staring at the boy glaring fiercely over to the Head table. That was cool.

"WHAT ARE YOU THINKING! HAVE YOU LOST YOUR MIND? THEY'RE..." bellowed Harry, until Sirius turned him around and hugged him.
"I'm free...they found out I'm innocent." he said into the top of Harry's head. Harry pulled away, shock was frozen into his face, but the words broke through and Harry grinned ear to ear.

"Really?" he whispered, too shocked to speak any louder. Sirius nodded. "You're gonna live with me now. Dumbledore said so."

Harry started to chuckle, then giggled until finally the whole Great Hall was filled with his laughter.

"I'M GOING TO LIVE WITH YOU? HONESTLY? YOUR'RE FREE?" Sirius had to nod again, his own smile breaking through his face. Harry wanted to do a backflip, he wanted to show some real physical exertion to show how happy he was, but he knew that if he did that, he would pay dearly for it later.

Then, a hundreds of large, clear, beautiful glasses. Each glass, looked a little different than the one before, each one had thick layers of different colored and flavored syrup and cream. Topped with ice cream and whipped cream, cherry and a wafer fan behind each sundae.

"Oh yeah, I finished the Knickerbocker Glories." said Harry from the embrace that joyously held him captive. The entire school gazed admiringly at the treat in front of them.

Dumbledore looked all around the room, each sundae was different, Harry made them all by hand? That must have taken him a long time, he flicked out his watch. To his surprise, his theory was wrong. He assumed that time would stop as they left to journey through time. It didn't, it took Harry a good hour and a half to make all of these. He looked at his, instead of a cherry on top, like everyone else's his held two raspberries. His eyes opened in shock, he noticed another inconsistency. There was no wafer fan, but two raspberry, chocolate-chip cookies. Tears came to the old man's eyes.

"Harry?" his voice breaking with emotion.

"Yes sir," said Harry, who was sitting in the bowl again with Sirius and Remus, eating his own Glory.

"You...you're...you're the one who sent me those...cookies?" said Dumbledore with the tears threatening to fall from his eyes. The teachers looked to him quickly, surprise on each of their faces.

Harry smiled brightly, and nodded. "I noticed that every morning, with your toast, you put raspberry jam on them. A LOT of raspberry jam. You keep talking about hot chocolate whenever Christmas comes around. So, I put two and two together and made you some cookies. I didn't know if you really liked them till you said what you did an hour or two ago. How many boxes do you want this year?"

Dumbledore said nothing, just stood up and walked down to the boy. He took Harry's sundae out of his hands, handed it Remus, helped Harry to stand and embraced him. Harry didn't know what to make of the situation, he slowly smiled and hugged the old man back.

Dumbledore couldn't believe it, all the abuse that he and the rest of the school witnessed and Harry wasn't tainted in the slightest. He was kind, generous, thoughtful, industrious and supremely talented. Harry deserved much more than the hand he was dealt with. He was going to make sure, that having Harry live with Sirius was only the tip of the iceberg. He had a lot more making up to do.
"Your sundae is melting, Albus." said Professor Flitwick, whipped cream on the fringes of his mustache. "You aren't going to want to miss it." Dumbledore and Harry broke apart and he helped Harry back to the bowl. Giving him one more smile he strode up to the Head table.

"How is it?" he whispered to Madame Pomfrey as he passed.

"It's divine, nothing like I've ever tasted. I've had these before, but this is by far the best I've ever had."

Dumbledore eagerly went back to his sundae, as he did, he noticed the only unhappy face at the table and it wasn't Severus's. His was filled with a sort of faint happiness, as if he were recollecting a wonderful memory, but was too cautious to let it reach his heart. The unhappy face belonged to Umbridge, she was staring at her sundae with disgust. Amazingly, Harry didn't make it any less beautiful then the rest. She pushed it away from her sat back in her chair with her arms folded. Like a spoiled child. She jerked her head up, in the direction of the youth and called over to him.

"I refuse to eat anything that hasn't been professionally made, Mr. Potter." she sneered, but it fell apart completely when she noticed that he wasn't paying her any attention. He was too busy laughing with Fred and George and eating his own. Only Dumbledore noticed her and heard her, each student, teacher and guest alike were too busy enjoying their sundaes and taste testing the different syrups in each one.

She was about to throw her sundae on the floor, to get his attention when Dumbledore magicked it out of her hand. This the students took notice of, they wondered what was going on, to make the Headmaster look so grim.

"If you don't want it, I know about a hundred people including myself that would give their eye teeth for seconds. Now, who would like this?" There wasn't a hand that wasn't raised, except Hagird's he was still working on his, his sundae was the size a medium sized bucket. It took a lot of ingredients just to make it. After it was decided who should get it, Lupin won, they all sat in thought.

Then Harry muttered an "ouch", when Bill absent-mindedly patted him on the back, they were all given a harsh reminder of the scroll.

"Harry, we need to talk." said Dumbledore, looking a hundred years older.

"Yes sir?" said Harry, trying to convince Sirius and Remus that he was fine. Which was not working.

"After you went down to the kitchens, a scroll appeared. It showed us a part of your past." said Dumbledore sadly. Harry looked up in shock, everyone else, besides Umbridge who were sitting with her arms folded a scowl on her face and rubbing the bruise that had now fully formed on her jaw, looked saddened.

Harry gulped, "Which part? Was it a good one?" he asked hopefully, but that hope quickly died. Dumbledore shook his head sadly.

"You were in the hospital." Dumbledore looked into Harry's eyes, even from a distance, his eyes were the easiest thing to find in this giant room. "You were perilously injured, by your villainous uncle...Oh Harry, don't tell me I have to elaborate!" moaned Dumbledore when he saw Harry's puzzled look. Harry quickly looked away and paled.

Dumbledore sighed, how had he let this happen? "It was the time that you accidentally caused Dudley to fly backwards in your Gym class." Harry thought hard, then his eyes got bigger.

"That was right before I had to get glasses." Hermione and Dumbledore paled.

"You didn't need glasses before?"

"No, my eyesight was 20/20. School nurse said I had the best eyesight in our class, that changed real quick." Madame Pomfrey's list of what to do was getting longer and longer. As did Madame Bone's list of charges.

"Did your Uncle Vernon ever hit you again?" whispered Ron, dreading the answer.

"Never again, that badly. Officer McFinn made Uncle Vernon nervous, he controlled himself after that." said Harry quietly.

"But he never stopped? Didn't you tell Officer McFinn about the continuation of abuse?" said Tonks with widened eyes. Harry looked down again.

"He died, a year later. He was shot in an armed robbery. His wife is kind to me though, but she lost her husband, her whole world, I didn't want to put more strain on her by telling her what was going on." said Harry sadly.

"You really should have told someone, dear." whimpered Mrs. Weasely.

"Nothing I can do about it now." said Harry firmly. The entire school looked somber. "It's all behind me now, I've got a much better life ahead of me." he said leaning against Sirius.

Sirius smiled warmly, "That's right cub, I'll take care of you." then an evil grin came to his face. "Cause you can't seem to do anything right on your own." he teased, tickling Harry gently. Harry tried, laughingly, to push his hands away. "I'd like to see YOU cook." teased Harry back. Sirius pouted. The grim feeling in the hall was instantly washed away.

"Can we get back to the books? I think we've taken a long enough break." said Umbridge with her sickeningly sweet voice. Dumbledore looked at his watch once again and shook his head.

"I fear that we will have to take a longer break, Delores. It's now nine thirty and our first years are just barely keeping their eyes awake. We should break and continue the readings tomorrow morning. I'll have the house elves fix up some rooms for our guests to sleep in. Harry, I would ask if you would rather you spend the night with your new guardian, alas, Madame Pomfrey have me pay most dearly for not giving you over to her care. Especially since..." Dumbledore couldn't continue.

"Fine Dumbledore, but I will read ahead if I may." Umbridge picked up the book and to her dismay, it would not open.

"Oh, I apologize, I should have warned you. The books can only be read from nine o'clock in the morning to nine o'clock in the evening. That way, rest is assured. We shall resume reading after breakfast."

The school emptied as they all dispersed to their respective dorms. Harry, Sirius, Remus, Ron and Hermione traveled to the Hospital Wing. Ron helped Harry change into a pair of red and gold pajamas and then helped him into the bed. Harry was exhausted and they all knew it. Sirius tuck him in and slowly brushed the bangs out of his eyes. He continued brushing his hair back until Harry's eyes finally closed, he fell into a deep sleep.
Madame Pomfrey, McGonagall, Snape, Dumbledore and Mr. and Mrs. Wesealy all came in.

"Is he asleep?"

"Yep, and I ain't letting you wake him up." said Sirius without looking at them.

"I don't plan on it Sirius, I just need to check him for injuries. Ones that weren't caused here." she muttered. She waved her wand over the sleeping form and held her hand out for the scroll that popped out the end of her wand.

She unrolled it and gasped. It was so long, and so terrible. So many injuries, and all untreated by professionals. Harry's magic had to heal each one and even then, it wasn't healed properly. Just enough to keep him from suffering, and possibly dying. She wiped tears from her eyes, and turned towards Madame Bones who had just entered the Wing with Moody, Kingsley and Tonks.

"What more have they done to the boy?" growled Moody. He was itching and raring to go and put some real fear into the Dursleys. Madame Pomfrey handed the scroll to the Head of Magical Law Enforcement, who in turn paled when she read what was written.

"I'll have the necessary paperwork drawn up, the Dursleys will be seized by Midnight." she was about to take the scroll when Dumbledore snatched it quickly and began to read it.

"Albus, you don't..." whimpered the Healer.

Dumbledore's, normally, twinkling blue eyes clouded and tears fell from his eyes. He gave a shuddered breath, handed the parchment back to Madame Bones. He slowly walked over to Harry's side, opposite of Sirius. Sat down and placed his head on the bed. He cried, like a small child, he was inconsolable. Harry had traveled so far into the realm of sleep, that he heard nothing. He merely slept on, oblivious to the broken hearts that stood around him.
Chapter Summary

Once again, they read about the Dursleys, and now they see the manic side of Harry's Uncle, and just how far he's willing to go to escape the magical world.

Chapter Notes

I don't own Harry Potter.

Harry woke up and stretched luxuriously on the hospital bed. He couldn't believe the restful sleep he had. For once, since the Graveyard, he didn't have any nightmares. He smiled as the sun shined on his face as he took in the warmth. He looked down on the bed and was greeted with a slight shock.

Sirius was on his left, head resting on his bed, cradled by his own arms. It looked like he just drifted off to sleep by Harry's side. Then he looked to his right and there was Dumbledore, in the same position. He looked between the two of them. Two of the most important men in his life. He smiled and looked at sun, judging by where the sun was positioned, it was eight twenty-nine. He had to learn what time it was by where the sun and the moon hung when he was younger. He was never given a watch by the Dursley's, unless you counted that one watch that he had fished out of the trash a four years ago, yet they demanded that he be in the house at an exact time, no sooner no later, or all hell would break loose.

He gently shook the both of them, both groaned a bit until Harry put on a fake pout and shook them again. They sat up quickly and saw Harry, the pout still on his lips. But it disappeared into a cheeky grin.

"Good morning! Time for Breakfast! Ah, dang, I sound just like Ron." he said, with a thoughtful look. He shrugged and slowly got out of the hospital bed and then went to go change. Sirius and Dumbledore looked between themselves and the curtain that Harry went to go change behind. they couldn't help but smile. Harry hadn't been in this good of mood since, well, they couldn't remember. But they were ecstatic that he was finally experiencing some joy.

They helped Harry put his arms through the sleeves of his white shirt, though despite the restful sleep, stretching the way he did, opened a few of the wounds on his back. It, however didn't hurt him, he barely even felt it as the blood trickled slowly down his back, but Sirius saw the bloodstained shirt and yelled for Madame Pomfrey.

Those wounds still refused to heal, but Harry regained one more piece to the puzzle. As they walked down, a vision came into his mind. One shadow, no, two shadows were raising what looked like a long rope and bringing it down, laughing, or would it be called cackling? He shook his head, why wasn't he remembering it? What was preventing him from recollecting it, and what was causing him to slowly remember as opposed to normal remembering?
Thoughts of the incident were pushed back as Dumbledore conjured the same bowl chair and helped Harry into it while Sirius fixed him a plate of food. Remus groggily walked in and gathered up a plate as well and went to sit beside Harry.

"How did you sleep?" asked Harry, munching on an apple slice. Lupin groaned.

"I had nightmares, and all about you and the Dursleys, tell me, please God, tell me that the books get easier to listen to?" he said with worry in his eyes.

"How should I know? I didn't write them." said Harry, he wasn't sure if he should warn his favorite Defense teacher or not. He just continued to nibble at his food. Sirius had to stop Mrs. Weasely from giving him another plate of food.

"We gave him a nutritional potion up at the Hospital Wing, if you give him more food than he can handle, he's going to get sick." said Sirius quietly, but kindly. He wanted to stockpile his godson's plate too, but Pomfrey threatened him with bodily harm if he overdid it.

Once breakfast was over, Dumbledore stood up and addressed the students.

"We are in for another day of reading, so if you would like to make yourselves more comfortable, feel free to do so. If you are unskilled in making furniture just yet, you may ask for assistance from your Head of House, the Head Boy or Girl and your Prefects." It seemed no one wanted to sit at the house tables, so they were magically removed and squashy, comfortable chairs were put in their place.

"That's more like it," as Dumbledore sat in a purple armchair beside the bowl where Harry sat between Lupin and Sirius. Ron and Hermione shared a red couch and Ginny with Luna sat beside the Weasley twins.

"Who would like to start today's reading?" he said looking about the Hall.

"I will Albus," said McGonagall, from her straight, high backed chair.

Chapter three title.

"Here we go again," muttered Harry

First paragraph, first sentence.

Growls were heard across the hall and Dumbledore looked over to Harry, with a concerned look upon his face.

First paragraph, second sentence, sixteenth word.

"When is Dudley's birthday?" asked Draco

"May 2nd."

"And the summer holidays there start..?" asked Hermione, quickly getting angry.
Harry muttered quietly, "June 18th". The growls got more pronounced. Mrs. Weasely wanted to look towards Dumbledore and give him a good "Molly Weasely Rant" but saw how distraught Dumbledore was. His hands were shaking and his entire body was sagging, as if he were dying slowly. She kept it to herself. This wasn't the time. Perhaps later.

First paragraph, end of second sentence.

"Like father like son, a bloody monster." snarled Bill. His mother sent him a reproachful look, but he sent one back, which made her wince, the other Weasely children sniggered. It was the same look that Mrs. Weasely favored when yelling at the twins. Bill may look like a younger version of his father, but they saw their mother's discipline skills creeping out. It was actually quite funny, but also quite scary.

Second paragraph, second sentence.

"Very good logic Harry." said Luna. Harry smiled at her while people snorted and chuckled

Second paragraph, to the end of paragraph.

"They better not have done anything." said Sirius and Lupin at the same time. They both looked at each other, with a furious look. If those brats did anything, they would deal out some 'Maurader Justice'.

Third paragraph, first sentence.

"HOGWARTS!" yelled the Creevy brother's. Harry shook his head.

Third paragraph, second sentence.

"And I thank God, every day." said Harry, looking up into the sky.

Third paragraph, third sentence.

People started to snort and repress their laughter. The name Smeltings made them appreciate the name of Hogwarts even more.
"What the hell is a Stonewall High?" asked a Gryffindor pureblood.

"Wonder what Stonewall High is like?" asked a Slytherin sixth year.

"It's not bad, the Chemistry class that's there is supposed to have one of the best teachers in Surrey. That and the sports teams are considered high grade for a public school. I was actually looking forward to it. Just not the uniform."

"Chemistry?" said Neville curiously.

"Muggle version of Potions. My old science teacher told me I had a talent for it." shrugged Harry.

Snape's heart plummeted slightly, did he cast aside a possible potion brewer? He would have to study Mr. Potter a little better and see for himself.

"Of course he would." said Justin, rolling his eyes.

"Harry, we will disown you if you fall for that." said the twins with a dramatic pose. People around the hall laughed.

"Never mind us disowning you," said George

"can you adopt us?" said Fred with a smile. The school could hardly stay in their chairs and cushions.

"Harry, why didn't you tell Mrs. Figg what was going on? She could have sent me a letter and you would have been pulled from that house immediately!" said Dumbledore looking shocked. For years, Arabella only said that Harry was unhappy, but not abused, had he known the extent, he would have come running to Privet Drive.

Harry paled and turned his away, "After Officer McFinn passed away, Uncle Vernon told me that if I told anyone, he'd make sure that it was something that I would live to regret. At the time, I took it to heart and he made it seem to me that Officer McFinn's death was all my fault. I didn't want Mrs. Figg hurt too. Yeah, I thought she was crazy, but she was my only escape." he buried his face into Sirius's chest, a tear, betraying his trust, fell onto the man's shirt. And how was I to know she was a witch?

Sirius hugged his godson tightly "Harry, you didn't cause Officer McFinn's death, never think that."

"Sirius is right Harry, but I can see why you didn't go to Mrs. Figg. You really are a selfless child. I'm sorry for not checking up on you, on my own. Perhaps someday you can forgive me." said Dumbledore. He didn't smile, he merely rubbed the young boy's head.

"I already do." said Harry. Dumbledore gave him a small smile.

"Your Godfather, Remus and quite a few people don’t, and I don't blame them. I wouldn't forgive them if they did what I did, I still can't forgive myself. I think, tonight, I need to talk with a few people." He motioned to McGonagall to continue.

Fourth paragraph, second sentence.

“I wouldn't be either.” muttered Sirius.

Fourth paragraph, third sentence.

"You don't do that to chocolate, especially chocolate cake." said Lupin, trying to lighten the mood, which he halfway succeeded.

“Lupin loves his chocolate.” muttered Sirius to Harry.

End of fourth paragraph.

Fifth paragraph, second sentence.

A few of the fashion conscious seventh year girls looked around at the boys and then they rushed to where Dumbledore was still kneeling and rubbing Harry's head and each hugged him in turn.

"What was that all about?" said Dumbledore with a confused smile.

"Thank you for having the boys dress in black as opposed to what that school had in mind." Dumbledore laughed. "I would never subject my students to wear anything so ridiculous."

"Just himself." muttered Pansy.

Fifth paragraph, to the end of paragraph.
"What a horrible school! No wonder your uncle acts the way he does, they condoned his behavior!" screeched Madame Pomfrey.

"I think it sounds like a fine school." huffed Madame Umbridge.

"You would think so, wouldn't you?" muttered Snape.

Sixth paragraph, second paragraph, first comma.

The school laughed in unison at the name, Fred and George looked at each other in true shock and horror. They turned to Ron.

"We are never, EVER calling you 'Ickle Ronniekins' again."

Sixth paragraph, to the end of paragraph.

"You ain't the only one Harry." wheezed Terry.

Seventh paragraph, first sentence.

"I thought Aunt Petunia tried her hand at cooking again." said Harry, the school laughed and thought fondly back to the Knickerbocker Glories last night.

End of seventh paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"Hey, it wasn't as if she had a big, bloody sign saying 'This is what it is'" said Charlie.

Eighth paragraph, end of paragraph.

"I would do a double take too if it were me." said Draco with a smirk.

Dialogue line

"Sarcasm is wasted on her, Harry, she never had a sense of humor." whispered Lupin.
"You really like animal references don't you?" said Ginny. Harry shrugged.

"I'd shove that stick right up his..."

"GINERVA WEASELY! yelled Mrs. Weasely, before Ginny could finish.

"OH MY GOD! HEAD FOR HILLS PEOPLE!" bellowed Fred

"WOMEN AND CHILDREN FIRST" screamed George

"THE WORLD IS COMING TO AN END!" hollered Lee

"HE ASKED THE PIG TO DO SOMETHING!" yelled all three of them. The school could hardly contain their laughter, even the teachers had a hard time holding it in.

"Crisis averted people, go about your normal lives." shouted Ron. The laughter started again.

"He better not have touched my cub." growled Sirius. Harry smiled and leaned even further into his godfather.

The students began to cheer loudly.
Thirteenth paragraph, Fourth sentence, first comma.

Ron and Hermione looked over to him in shock? They were his first friends? It was hard for them to believe.

Thirteenth paragraph, fifth sentence, second comma.

You mean, all the stuff you know, and you didn't go to the library to learn it?" said Ron in shock.

"No, I went to the library, it's just I never took the books home. I learned to be a speed reader."

"What do you mean 'all the stuff you know'?" said Hermione suspiciously.

Ron and Harry looked up at the ceiling and whistled innocently. Hermione narrowed her eyes.

Address on letter.

"Minerva, we must stop using a self-addressing quill. We could have prevented something by looking at the addresses." said Dumbledore, shaking his head.

"Don't I know it." she replied with a tear trickling down her cheek.

Fourteenth paragraph.

"What the heck is a stamp?" asked a pureblood from Hufflepuff.

"It’s a small sort of sticker that Muggles put on their letters, it’s a way of paying to have it delivered." said Mrs. Weasley before Hermione could answer.

"They pay? What a waste of money." said Blaise with a smirk.

Fifteenth paragraph, third comma.

"GRYFFINDOR!" yelled the house known for its bravery and nobility.

Fifteenth paragraph, twenty-second word

"RAVENCLAW!" yelled the house known for wisdom and wit.
"HUFFLEPUFF!" yelled the house known for its loyalty.

"SLYTHERIN!~ yelled the house known for their cunning.

"HOGWARTS!" bellowed the entire student body.

"If you wanted it sooner, you should have gotten off your lazy arse and fetched it yourself!" bellowed Mr. Weasley. His children and wife stared at him in shock.

"What? I couldn't hold it in any longer."

"That was pathetic, I think I'm going to be sick." said Fred while George gagged.

"Potter! Why did you open your mail there? You know they were going to take it!" said a haggard looking Auror.

"He was excited to just get a letter." said Kingsley

"What the heck is a whelk," asked a Slytherin first year.
"It's sort of a snail that lives in seashells." said Harry

"Why would you eat them." said the poor Slytherin, face turning green.

"Oh I don't know, throw in some leeks, eels, and clams and you can make them taste pretty good." said Harry offhandedly.

Sirius looked shocked over at Harry.

"You've eaten it?" he said, turning just as green as the Slytherin.

"Made it actually, whelks are Aunt Marge's favorite food. Every time she visits, we have a fish pie or something else." he noticed the nauseated looks around the room. Harry laughed. "I won't even ask if you want me to make it."

"Thank you." said Ron quietly.

---

Dialogue line.

"He just had to ruin Harry's moment didn't he?" moaned Ernie.

---

Eighteenth paragraph, second comma.

"Potter, " growled Moody, "I've never been this impressed before..."

"Excuse me?" said Tonks indignantly.

"As I was saying, " sending his protégé a well-meaning growl. "I've never been this impressed with an eleven year old wizard before. Nice observation skills.

---

End of eighteenth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"Oooh! Harry's getting mad!" said Fred excitedly.

"And when Harry gets mad..." said George in an equally excited tone

"Things get scary." they both said together.

"What do you mean? Does he get violent? said Fudge excitedly.

"Not at all, but he does tend to give you a severe dressing down." said Fred matter-of-factly.

"And that you don't want, cause when he does." said George

"You pray to God it ends soon." said them both with what looked like a fake shudder.
Harry blushed.

Dialogue set, first comma.

"I WOULD!" yelled a majority of the students.

End of dialogue set.

"Eww! I don't think I want to eat porridge again." said a third year Ravenclaw.

"I didn't either for a week." said Harry.

Nineteenth paragraph.

"If only she would." muttered Ron

Twentieth paragraph.

The entire school was silent, they all slowly turned towards Harry.

"What?" asked Harry with his brows furrowed.

Harry grew up with these people right? He never acted like that. Hell, he was the nicest person in the school, really. Hermione and Ron were nice too, but if you came to Hermione with a personal problem she made everything sound logical, even the passing of a beloved pet. Ron was the same as Hermione, except instead of using logic, he could be tactless. Ernie spread the word after their second year that Harry stood up for Malfoy when everyone tried saying that he was the Slytherin heir after Hermione was attacked. How did Harry become the Harry they all knew, growing up with, obviously the worst people on the planet.

Dialogue line.

"I thought Dudley couldn't read." said a Slytherin.

"He can't, but, when there is something I want to read, like the paper or a book, he takes it, pretends to read it and then loses it on purpose." he tried doing that with a few of my school books. Aunt Petunia told him off, it was beautiful." smiled Harry fondly.
"You're sounding more and more like your mother." grinned Sirius.

"How do you mean?" asked Harry

"Your dad was laid back and easy going, hardly anything fazed him. Your mom on the other hand..." he whistled, "when she got mad, the whole world knew it."

"He sounds like a half and half mix of what his parents were." said Neville.

The yelling that would sometimes crop up in the Hall started again, but none so loud as Mrs. Weasely.

"HE COULD'VE HURT YOU!"

"I was fine Mrs. Weasley. I wasn't hurt." said Harry with a small smile. He was thinking back to that time and remembered something. After that first letter, his uncle was real careful around him. He didn't hurt him as bad as he normally did, unless Harry accidentally did something, that was considered really, REALLY, bad in his eyes. He silently thanked the school, for sending him the letter.

"Sorry Harry, but that would have been insanely funny to watch." said Bill with a small smile. Harry chuckled.

The school groaned, that would have been awesome if Harry could've won.

End of dialogue set.
"Resourceful too, not bad Potter." nodded Moody.

Dialogue line.

"...should have....could've saved..." mumbled Dumbledore quietly. Only Lupin and Harry could hear him. Harry crawled over Lupin's lap, who in shock, noticed how light he was. Harry grasped Dumbledore's tightened, pale hands and squeezed. Dumbledore looked up quickly gave him a small smile, before Sirius pulled him back. Jealous of the attention the old man was getting, and a little angry at Harry, who was so quick to forgive and forget.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"Not even that would keep Hogwarts from getting Potter." said Snape calmly.

Twenty-second paragraph.

"I should be impressed that he could bend over to polish his own shoes." said Percy.

"He never polishes his own shoes." said Harry. People turned quickly to him and stared.

"He better not have..." said Mr. Weasley hotly.

"Not even he would trust me with his two hundred pound shoes."

"He paid that much for ruddy shoes!" said a Muggleborn.

"Aunt Petunia's cocktail dresses are worth more than that." said Harry.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

People around the Great Hall blinked, they turned around to Harry, very slowly. Just staring. A few moments had passed till Harry finally couldn't take the deafening silence anymore.

"What's wrong now?" He looked to Dumbledore, and was in for a shock. Dumbledore was sobbing into his hands. Even harder, Sirius and Remus noticed, than last night. Lupin decided to answer Harry's question.

"Harry, 'stamping out' the magic in a person is a very dangerous thing. The consequences could have been disastrous, even...deadly. You could have been reduced to." he shuddered and his voice broke.

"...to a person similar to a victim of the Dementor's Kiss. All your magic and your soul would be stripped from your body. We...we would never know the real you." finished Sirius, his voice cracking. He brought Harry into a tight embrace and refused to let go. The Weasely's, teachers and the rest of Harry's friends looked down. They didn't want to think about it, they couldn't think about it. They could have lost Harry, forever. It was too terrible to imagine. It took a half hour for McGonagall to continue on with the reading.

Twenty-third paragraph.

"How could he fit? " asked Fred, remembering how small the cupboard really was.

"Wasn't easy for him." said Harry with a smirk.

Dialogue set.

Dialogue set, second sentence, first comma.

"Bull, it had his cupboard on it." said Angelina with snarl.

End of dialogue line.

"I'm gonna kill him." muttered Sirius. "The Acceptance Letter is supposed to be the most important moment in a young wizard or witch's life. And he &^%#^ BURNS IT!"

"SIRIUS! LANGUAGE!" reprimanded Mrs. Weasely, gesturing towards the students.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set.

"If he touches you in any shape or form, I'm gonna rip him apart". said Lupin, Sirius nodded.

"Hope his smile did hurt him." said Charlie.
"He was too big for it when you first put him in there you....."

"Molly! Language!" taunted Sirius, mimicking her gesture to the students.

The silence returned once more. The students looked at each other slowly. Did he say second bedroom? That fat git had a second bedroom, whereas Harry didn't even have one? The Weasely's looked over to Harry, Harry appeared to be dozing in Sirius's chest. His legs laying on top of Lupin's lap. Lupin had picked them up and set them there so Harry could just lay down instead of sitting all the time.

Harry was pretending to be napping, he didn't want to look at them. This book was horrible, none of Harry's thoughts were safe anymore, it was torture. "Well," thought Harry, "At least I got Sirius out of it, I guess I can endure it."

"Don't question a good thing Harry." said Lupin, knowing full well that Harry was pretending to be asleep.

Moody on the other hand, approved. "Good lad, get all the facts, never know what the Walrus has in mind, giving you a bedroom." he added with a sober tone.

Tonks blanched, "You don't think...he wouldn't.." she whimpered. She couldn't take it, she hurried over to the trio in the bowl and gave Harry a shake. Sirius also knew Harry was faking, so he didn't stop her. Harry opened his eyes slowly and she whispered in his ear. The entire school stared, they couldn't figure out what was going on. What Moody said to upset the female Auror was spoken too quietly, they didn't hear it. They, however heard a great sigh of relief when Harry shook his head to the question Tonks put to him.

"What was it that you all owned?" said Draco, no hint of a sneer. The same couldn't be said for his cohorts. They were laughing silently.

"Well, let’s see, I had six small, broken army figurines, five pairs of socks, underwear, pants and five different shirts. And an assortment of medals and plaques I won at primary school."

"What did you win them for?" asked Sirius, he was interested in knowing the talents his godson possessed besides flying.
Harry looked pensive, "I had about fourteen trophies and medals for running, but I managed to only salvage two. The one in my pocket and the other one is a big one that I still haven't been able to glue back together. I had a one for music, that was a piece of paper in a frame, Uncle Vernon set that one on fire. I saved it, not before it was mostly destroyed though. Then there was a chemistry award the teacher gave me. Dudley threw that one away personally. I had to rummage through the town dump just to fish it out. Took me two hours, I had to use the community showers by the town pool just to get presentable enough to go in the house. I had some other ones, but they didn't last very long in that house." So I've only got four out of more than twenty."

Subtle growls went around the school.

Twenty-fourth paragraph, fifth sentence, first semi-colon

"Ouch!" whined Sirius, rubbing his backside absentmindedly.

Twenty-fourth paragraph, fifth sentence, second semi-colon

"Good Lord!" moaned a Muggleborn, there had been shows that he liked too, that were canceled, but he never put his foot through a TV in anger before.

Twenty-fourth paragraph, fifth sentence, forth comma.

"What's an air rifle, dad?" asked Charlie curiously.

"Remember what I told you about guns? Instead of gunpowder, they use compressed air."

"And this idiot traded a living thing for something that could kill? I WANT TO BE THE FIRST ONE TO HEX THIS LITTLE TWIT!" screamed Charlie.

Twenty-fourth paragraph, to the end of the fifth sentence.

"Whoa! Dudley must be huge! My cousin has an air rifle, and those things are freaking hard to bend!"

Twenty-fourth paragraph, to the end of paragraph.

"WHAT?" yelled Hermione and some of the Ravenclaws.

"I told you, Dudley didn't know how to read then." seeing the looks on the Ravenclaws and Hermione, he added quickly. "But I've read them."
"What was your favorite, Harry? asked Hermione, forgetting to be furious.

"Oliver Twist"

The people in the room who had read that particular book, didn't look too happy.

"Why?"

"Makes me feel a lot better of my lot in life." said Harry. People started to growl, not to him, but the thought of the Dursleys. Harry had to hold his hands up.

"Listen, I get it, you don't like the Dursleys, I'm not a big fan of theirs either. What I meant by what I said, was that I was never, almost forced to a life of crime. And I wasn't shot, for being somewhere I never wanted to be. Now, is it possible to drop it for now? You're all kinda starting to scare me." he added playfully. The school hesitated, then nodded.

Twenty-fifth paragraph.

"I'll give yer what yer need yer little..." said Hagrid in a threatening tone.

Twenty-sixth paragraph.

Nobody had a funny comment or snide remark about that. They all sat in silence, they too would rather have the letter then a spacious room. Especially if that letter meant an escape from that wretched family.

Twenty-seventh paragraph, second sentence, second comma.

"That boy needs a spanking!" whispered Madame Bones to her niece. Susan nodded furiously.

Twenty-seventh paragraph, second sentence, third comma.

"No loss there." said Draco.

Twenty-seventh paragraph, second sentence, fourth comma.

"Someone please smack him!" said Percy, rolling his eyes.
Twenty-seventh paragraph, second sentence, fifth comma.

Shouting over Charlie's rants of animal cruelty, Neville asked Harry, "What kind of plants do you have in there?"

"Vegetables, and herbs I use for cooking, the Dursley's won't admit it, but the stuff in that greenhouse is all mine. I planted everything in there, the vegetables came in handy the summer I turned fourteen."

"Why is that?" asked Sirius.

"If the books print it, you'll see."

Twenty-seventh paragraph, third sentence.

"Hindsight is 20/20" muttered both Harry and Dumbledore in unison. They both looked at each other Dumbledore didn't smile, but Harry's was enough for the both of them.

End of twenty-seventh paragraph.

Twenty-eighth paragraph, first sentence, second comma.

"Ten years too late." snarled Flitwick.

End of twenty-eighth paragraph.

Twenty-ninth paragraph, first sentence.

"GET 'EM HARRY!" yelled the Gryffindors.

Twenty-ninth paragraph, second sentence.

"Practicing for your fight with the troll, Harry?" smiled Ron.

"What troll?" asked Sirius. Harry smiled pointed towards the book, looking sheepish. Sirius paled looking at the book, that was only the first year book!

"Fifty points to Gryffindor." whispered Snape, smirking at the look of distraught on Black's face.

Twenty-ninth paragraph, end of paragraph.
"Dear lord, if it's anything like James's plans, they won't go well." said Lupin with a smirk.

"I thought dad was your guy's leader." said Harry with a shocked look on his face.

"He was, but your dad's plans sucked," said Sirius tickling Harry's stomach. After Harry laughingly tried in vain to escape his Godfather's fingers, Lupin continued "I was the one who had to come up with the plans that didn't get us caught."

"You were a prankster, Professor!" said the twins and Lee, mouths open in obvious shock.

Harry looked between Sirius and Lupin and grinned ear to ear.

"Remember your idols?" said Harry

"Yeah, the Marauders." said Fred.

"Greatest pranksters ever." said George.

"You're looking at two of them." grinned Harry. The twins and Lee gaped at them, then each other and came over to kneel in front them. Then they kissed their feet.

"What the hell..?" said Sirius picking up his feet, out of their reach.

"You're our HEROES! We idolize you guys!"

"Doesn't mean you have to kiss my feet." said Sirius with an uncomfortable look on his face. Lupin agreed with him, he had also brought up his feet out of the clutches of Lee's hands.

"Back on plans," said Harry trying not to laugh in front of his Godfather. "It’s kinda not the same with us, is it Hermione?" Hermione blushed.

"Why do you say that?" Lupin asked puzzled.

"Hermione is the one that tries to plan everything out, then everything goes to hell. I take over when she can't find a way out of a situation. Which works out great in the long run."

"Harry is wonderful when everyone else is panicking." said Hermione grinning. Ron and Neville nodded.

"How did you get the alarm clock fixed?" asked Mr. Weasely earnestly.

"I've always been good with my hands." said Harry.

"Next time you're over, I need some help on some things." said Mr. Weasely excitedly.

"Alright." said Harry with a smile.
"Good thinking boy, move slowly and carefully." growled Moody.

"Not a bad plan, Potter." said Snape, the sides of his mouth twitching.

"Trust me, it doesn't end well, like one of Hermione's plans in action." said Harry.

"What the hell happened now?" asked Bill nervously.

"Dear God! Tell me it’s your uncle!" Sirius spoke excitedly.

"Come on..."

"Let's hear it..." his breathing becoming quick.
"YAHOO!" yelled Sirius and sat straight up and danced around in a circle. Harry was lifted off his Godfather's chest and unceremoniously fell behind him as he danced for joy. He could help but laugh. Fred and George joined him to the laughter and cheer of the rest of the school. It took fifteen minutes for the trio to calm down. Sirius picked Harry up and laid his torso back on his lap.

Umbridge scowled. "You should be ashamed of yourself Mr. Potter, stepping on the man who graciously took you in, gave you the clothes on your back and food in your stomach..." she would have continued, but she had to dodge a few curses and hexes sent from several students, teachers, Sirius, Remus, Dumbledore and Madame Bones herself.

Thirty-fourth paragraph, third sentence.

"Oi! He ain't your servant!" said Ron indignantly

End of thirty-fourth paragraph.

Dialogue line

"Oh, Harry." fretted Hermione and Mrs. Weasely.

"I'm so sorry Harry." said Professor McGonagall "You shouldn't have been put through that."

"It’s okay, I was used to it, Dudley and Uncle Vernon ripped apart and destroyed most of my awards, this actually wasn't anything different and it didn't bother me. I knew there would be more coming. I felt in my bones." he smiled broadly. The students at first looked angry, but then their expressions softened when they saw his smile.

Thirty-fifth paragraph.

"Yeah, cause that job will take all day to do." said Sprout, rolling her eyes.

Dialogue line

"I never give up." said McGonagall smugly.

Dialogue line

Dialogue set.

People snorted at this, this man was trying to say he was more intelligent than themselves, yet he was trying to hammer a nail into a piece of wood with food.

One person spoke this thought out loud when Harry spoke up. "The nail did gone in easier with the fruitcake then it would have with the hammer. Aunt Petunia made that one." More snorts were heard around the room.

"Fruitcake is nasty," said Sirius sticking his tongue out.

"We'll see if that opinion still holds true." said Harry smugly.

Thirty-sixth paragraph.

"Gave Uncle Vernon the shock of his life, seeing those poke through." said Harry with a smirk on his face. People were rolling on the floor laughing.

Thirty-seventh paragraph, second sentence, first comma.

Growls creeped through the Great Hall.

End of thirty-seventh paragraph.

"That was the only time that I heard him hum, I tried to hum at another time in the kitchen, he came up behind me and smacked me on the back of my head." said Harry.

"Why on earth, would he do that?" asked Professor Flitwick in shock.

Harry shrugged, "No music allowed in the house."

"Why not?" asked Hermione

"He saw me enjoying the music on in the kitchen, and singing along. Apparently he didn't like my singing voice." said Harry with a smile.

"To be brutally honest, Harry, your father couldn't carry a tune in a bucket." said Sirius.

"Lily was the same way," said Lupin with a small smile.

"How does that 'Tiptoe' song go?" asked a nervous first year from the Ravenclaw table.

Harry thought carefully, thinking of the words and remembering the tempo his uncle used. He closed his eyes and sang it out loud.

What he didn't know was that everyone stared at him. His voice was a soft, airy tenor, yet it held the possibilities of going deeper into a baritone and becoming rich and full. The lyrics and the melody coming from him, were beautiful. They silently begged for more.

Ron and Hermione were in shock, they had never heard him sing before and there he was, singing as if he had been singing for years. This was a side of Harry they had never seen before.

When Harry was done, he opened his eyes and saw everyone staring at him. He began to worry, he wondered if he was as bad as his uncle had said he was. That all changed when everyone, excluding Umbridge and a restrained Fudge, stood up and applauded. Harry blushed deeply and covered his face into his stunned Godfather's chest.

"Mr. Potter, I want to see you in choir next year!" squeaked Flitwick, tears coming down his face. "We need a voice like yours!"

Thirty-eighth paragraph.

"It’s hers, cause I refuse to use it. I prefer to do it myself, without help." said Harry, who was still buried in the folds of the man's cloak.

Dialogue line

"Everybody who really knows him." said Hermione with some pride in her voice.

Thirty-ninth paragraph, second comma.

"Good" said Kingsley, accidentally out loud, attracting some attention.

End of thirty-ninth paragraph.

"Damn, well life can't be perfect." he said out loud again. People around him snickered into their hands.

Dialogue set, first sentence, first comma.

"Really? Muggles don't get mail on Sunday's? Why not?" asked a Slytherin fourth year.

"Some muggles, consider it a day of rest, a governmental day off as it were, as well." stated Harry.

Dialogue set, second comma.

"However, no sane person should do that on any day, never mind a Sunday." said Harry amusingly
"That's what you think." said Harry in a singsong voice. Lupin smiled over to Harry, glad he was finally enjoying himself.

Fortieth paragraph.

“Just pick one up off the floor, Potter!” yelled Draco.

“Was too excited to think logically or rationally, I just wanted to grab one of those elusive little buggers.” said Harry with a wide grin.

Dialogue line

Forty-first paragraph, first sentence.

Another hush came over the school, Madame Pomfrey made to hurry to Harry, when Sirius and Remus stopped her.

“He’s fine, we’ve got him.”

End of forty-first paragraph.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

“Ouch.” said a few seventh and sixth year boys, feeling the faint traces of hair just above their top lip. The men who already had grown theirs out, winced.

End of dialogue set.

Forty-second paragraph.

“What he was doing with a sports bag, I have no idea. Never did anything athletic, even after ten feet of chasing me down, he gave up,” remarked Harry after Mrs. Weasely quietly ranted about hitting a child over the head for over packing.

Forty-third paragraph.
“Man after your own heart, Moody! OUCH!” said Tonks cheekily, then Moody smacked the back of her head.

“Don’t compare me to him.”

“Aww..poor baby.” said the twins.

“Geez what a hard life he lives, only one thing can make it worse.” said Ron “Living it for more than one day, like Harry does.” said Hermione.

The twins looked in shock. “They’re stealing our act.”

The school erupted with laughter.

“I’ve noticed something Harry, every time something is bothering you or you’re worried about something, you sit on the windowsill and stare out onto the grounds. You stay that way all night long.” said Dean.

The teachers exchanged looks, and then they looked to Poppy, next time they hear about that, they’ll have to give Potter a sleeping potion, even if they have to hold him down and pour it down his throat.

Before they could ask, he answered. “I was wondering who was sending the letters and what did they want with me?”

“What time is it?” Ron said as his stomach grumbled. Before Dumbledore could bring out his watch, Harry looked up in the sky, at the sun. “It’s two-sixteen.” said Harry calmly. Dumbledore frowned in curiosity at Harry and looked at his own watch, his eyes widened in shock.

“On...the...nose...” he slowly looked over to Harry with a surprised look on his face. Everyone gaped at the raven haired teen.

“Guess we missed lunch.” he said glumly. Then the a long table of food appeared in the center of the room.

“A late lunch is always welcomed.” said Dumbledore, his eyes twinkling, yet never really leaving the young man lying in the bowl. He waved his wand at the table and four plates of food began to fill themselves. They then levitated over to Dumbledore, Sirius, Lupin and Harry.

“With Harry draped over the both of you like that, I didn’t think you could bring yourselves to move.” he said with a smile.

Lupin sent a smile of appreciation back to him. While they ate, McGonagall continued on with the reading, in between mouthfuls.

End of forty-sixth paragraph.

Dialogue line

Forty-seventh paragraph.

Address of letter.

“You were in Cokeworth? Did you...” started Hermione, but with a glance from Harry, she quieted.

“I didn’t see much of anything Hermione. Just blurs going past the window.”

Forty-eighth paragraph.

Dialogue line

Dialogue set.

“What the hell is he doing?” asked Lupin.

“Running for his life.” said Harry plainly.

Dialogue set.

“What a horrid man!” screeched Madame Pomfrey.
Forty-ninth paragraph.

Dialogue line

“Who’s The Great Humwhatsit?” asked Ron.

“An annoying man who says he can impersonate the voice anybody who comes to the show, it’s faked, the people are already picked out for it.” said Hermione.

“Wonder what’s so great about him.”

“He’s a GREAT big fraud.” said Hermione.

Fiftieth paragraph, third sentence, first comma, third word.

“Go figure.” moaned Hermione.

Fiftieth paragraph, end of third sentence.

People in the school cheered. Harry blushed deeply.

Fiftieth paragraph, fourth sentence.

People turned to him in shock and disbelief, THOSE weren’t presents!

End of fiftieth paragraph.

“Way to stay positive, Potter” said Moody. Though he was deeply disturbed by the way his life had been up to this point.

Fifty-first paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Fifty-second paragraph, third sentence.

“That’s perfect?” exclaimed Tonks, “I’d love to see his version of terrible.”

“He said my singing voice was terrible.” said Harry.
“My point has just been made.” said Tonks gesticering towards Harry.

End of fifty-second paragraph.

“I kinda feel sorry...”said Fred with a sniff.

“.for Dudley..” George said while whipping a fake tear away.

“NOT!”

Dialogue set, second sentence, first comma.

“And he’s excited by that?” asked Professor Vector, with eyebrows raised.

End of dialogue set.

Fifty-third paragraph, second comma.

“I’ve read about old fashioned gentlemen, in romance books,” said a seventh year Gryffindor.

“Only Gentleman there is Harry.” Sirius nudged Harry in the ribs raising and lowering his eyebrows quickly. Harry groaned, blushed and buried his head again. The school laughed again.

End of fifty-third paragraph.

“You couldn’t pay me to go over that water on a broomstick!” yelped Dean.

Dialogue line

Fifty-fourth paragraph, second sentence.

“Out of curiosity,” said Lupin, a grim look on his face. “who rowed?”

“I started, but Uncle Vernon noticed I wasn’t nearly strong enough to keep us going in a straight line. He took over. Only after we nearly capsized a few times.”

Dark muttering took possession of the school till McGonagall stopped her own muttering with Flitwick to continue reading.

End of fifty-fourth paragraph.
“Nice, a real fixer-upper.” Hermione said rolling her eyes.

Some of the Gryffindors looked down at their plates, which still had some food, they stood up and wanted to give some to Harry, when Lupin held his hand up to halt them.

“He’s full, we made sure.”

“Well, duh, those bags aren’t made of paper or wood. Idiot.”

“Let me at him!” yelled Charlie, Bill had to pull him back down to his seat, which took a lot of effort.

People looked around nervously, they wouldn’t of want to spend a minute in that house, let alone the night!

Silence again ran rampant through the school. They turned around to look at Harry, who was still lounging against Sirius. Dumbledore stood up waved his wand in the air and a giant, thick red and gold quilt, with a phoenix on it, appeared. He covered Harry with it. Harry was initially embarrassed, he was fine, he wasn’t cold. But the weight of the covers felt too good to remove them.
Sirius placed another, but lighter, blanket over the gold one. This one was blue, with a giant broomstick on it.

Lupin took a plate of snacks from Mrs. Weasely and he himself placed some chocolates on the plate. He handed Harry a piece of fruit and waited for Harry to eat it.

“In my office, going through all the replies and awaiting yours, Mr. Potter.”

“A typical Harry thought.” snorted Ron. Hermione turned to glare at him.

“Good idea, Potter, have a plan already, ready to use.”

Few people squirmed in their seats, this was getting scary.

“Do it!” yelled the Weasely twins. “It would be so worth it!”

McGonagall yelled. People had fallen off their chairs and landed on the floor. Sirius and Lupin instinctively placed their bodies over Harry’s to protect him. Even Dumbledore jumped a little. Moody was cursing very loudly towards the Transfigurations Professor.

“Constant vigilance, Alastor.” said McGonagall said simply. People around the school started to laugh hard, but was silenced by the look the retired Auror sent them.

End of chapter.

“Who the bloody hell is it?” said Lupin. Harry and Sirius looked at him in shock.

“You cursed Moony!” said Sirius with an impressed look.

“Hey! I’m human...” he stated.

“Hardly.” Umbridge said, cutting him off.

Third years and up snarled at her. Even the teachers looked at her in fury.

“More human then you ever will be!” yelled Harry.

“Don’t you dare talk to me! You worthless boy!” she spat back.

Harry flinched, it wasn’t from her insulting him, just the words. He heard them somewhere before recently, who said it? He couldn’t remember. It must have something to do with the incident, but what was it? Harry’s brain was still a little fuzzy from the fever and he couldn’t think straight half the time.

While Harry was sitting in the bowl thinking, McGonagall stood up, walked over to her and punched her soundly in the jaw again. Knocking Umbridge once again to the floor, and she was once again, out cold.

“PROFESSOR! YOU ATTACKED...” yelled the Minister.

“SOMEONE WHO EARNED IT!” screamed McGonagall. The school erupted in cheers.

“I will have you arrested, Minerva!” said Fudge looking wildly around, “And I have plenty of witnesses.”

“I’m sorry Cornelius, did you say something?” said Madame Bones curiously. The Aurors, taking her lead, (for they had no love for the woman either) shrugged their shoulders too. The Minister watched as all the “witnesses” denied seeing anything. Even the Slytherins feigned blindness and said their attentions laid elsewhere. He sat down and tried to awaken his Undersecretary. To no avail, she wasn’t waking up, and no one was really upset by that.
Chapter Summary

They get to hear of how Harry met Hagrid for the first time, unfortunately for Hagrid, they also get to see him break a rule or two. But the plus side, Vernon Dursley isn't the biggest guy on the block anymore!

Chapter Notes

I hope these get to be easier to read as you go along, I would have page numbers and whatnot, but I don't have my own copy with me :(

Fudge kept trying to wake up Umbridge and nobody was even halfheartedly willing to help him, amazingly, not even Madame Pomfrey.

Professor McGonagall flipped the page to the next chapter, a smile came across her lips.

"Hagrid, I think you may want to read the next chapter." she said handing him the book.

"Alrigh'" he took the book and when he read the title, a bigger smile then McGonagall's stretched acrossed his face.

Title of Chapter

The school erupted into cheers. Fudge gave up trying to wake up Umbridge and satisfied himself with just conjuring up a cot and putting her on it. He might as well keep a constant vigil on the proceedings seeing as how she couldn't.

First paragraph, first sentence.

Hagrid bellowed out that word to the school, knocking a few students, who thought they were safe with Hagrid's reading, off their chairs a second time that afternoon.

First paragraph, end of paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"Can he talk any other way, really? said Draco snidely.
"OH MY GOD! HE COULD HURT SOMEONE WITH THAT THING!" screamed Hermione.

"The really scary thing is, he has no idea what to do with it." said Harry absently, snuggling underneath the blankets. He was very comfortable, and felt that the worst was finally over.

"What do you mean 'no idea what to do with it'?" asked Sirius clutching Harry's shoulder gently.

"He's never held a gun before, when he came out; it was facing the wrong damn way. He could've easily shot himself, that is, if the trigger wasn't so far away. I actually came over and flipped the gun around."

"Why would you do that?" asked Hermione fearfully. "He could've killed someone with it!"

"I put the safety on and took the shells out, Uncle Vernon never even noticed." smiled Harry.

"Very quick thinking Harry." said Dumbledore approvingly. "But what would have happened if it was someone who wished you and the Dursleys harm?"

Harry quickly noticed that Dumbledore didn't' say "your family" he smiled. Then he thought about it. "Wrenched the gun away, took the safety off, loaded the gun and fired." he said simply.

"Can you fire one of those things?" said Sirius in an amazed tone.

"With all of Dudley's shows, I've seen how they work, though I would've been knocked on my butt from the recoil. They've got a massive kick."

Sirius chuckled and kissed his Godson's head.

"So is he!" yelled Harry from amongst the blankets.

The students didn't know who he was talking about, but Ron, Hermione and the teachers all laughed.

Students hit the floor again as Hagrid yelled once again.
Sixth paragraph.

"HAGRID!" yelled the students, applauding.

"Yeh make me soun' scary 'arry." said Hagrid with a concerned look on his face.

Harry laughed as he pushed his head out of the covers. "I didn't know you Hagrid. I didn't know how gentle you are."

Hagrid blushed and tried to carry on with the reading.

Seventh paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"Hagrid, only you could knock a door down to the ground with a push of your finger and just carry on as if it were perfectly normal." smiled Lupin. Dumbledore smiled as well.

Eighth paragraph, to the end of paragraph.

"Thanks Hagrid, for putting some fear into that brat!" called Draco.

Most of the students turned and stared at him. "What?" he said again, they said nothing.

Dialogue line

Ninth paragraph, first sentence, first comma.

"That will be near impossible." said Ron, who had seen Dudley the summer that he came to Privet Drive. He couldn't believe the contrast between his best mate and his best mate's cousin.

Ninth paragraph, to the end of paragraph.

"Well that made it a little easier." smirked Ron.

Dialogue line

Tenth paragraph

Dialogue line.
"You were the first to say that to me Hagrid. I haven't stopped hearing it since." said Harry.

"You make it sound like you're tired of hearing it." said Sirius curiously.

"I'm not tired of it, I never will be, it's just...I'm not my father, or my mother...I'm my own person. And sometimes, I feel like some adults keep forgetting that." he said quietly.

This statement pulled at Sirius's heartstrings, as well as Lupin's, "Harry, we know that you are your own person. James was never a singer, neither was your mother. Yet, here you are, with the voice of an angel! James couldn't boil water, and your mother, well, she was learning. She couldn't make food the way you can! You've got so many talents that neither of them had! But you are right, we and other people keep shoving that statement down your throat, we promise not to confuse you with your parents, alright?"

Harry smiled, turned a light shade of pink and nodded.

Eleventh paragraph

Dialogue line

Dialogue set: to the first semi-colon.

"That's telling him Hagrid!" yelled the twins.

To the end of dialogue set.

The students jumped up in down, on the floor, in their chairs, they were excited. The Dursleys were finally getting their comeuppance!

Thirteenth paragraph, to the end of paragraph.

"The first birthday cake I've had in ten years, Hagrid!" Sirius, Remus, Mr. and Mrs. Weasely and Dumbledore all looked saddened by that statement.

Fourteenth paragraph, to the end of paragraph.

"Harry, where are your manners?" admonished Mrs. Weasely.

"Molly, the book just said he meant to say thank you, the kid was in shock." said Moody.
"Golly 'Arry, didn't mean ter hurt yeh." said Hagrid sadly.

"It's alright, Hagrid. I was fine."

"HAGRID! DON'T DRINK IN FRONT OF CHILDREN!" scolded Madame Pomfrey and Mrs. Weasely. Hagrid looked guilty.

"Knew that wasn't good enough ter start a fire with." he snorted, again.

Hermione brought a blanket she had transfigured and draped it on top of the other two.

"How many blankets are you people going to try and bury me under?" said Harry with his eyebrows raised.

"You keep saying you're cold!"

"That was five years ago! I'm perfectly comfortable right now!" said Harry with a playful smile.

"Cripes! How many pockets do you have, Hagrid?"

"'bout twenty-seven" said Hagrid offhandedly. People whistled.

Madam Pomfrey and Mrs. Weasely began to scold Hagrid angrily, Hagrid had to hide, unsuccessfully, behind the book.
"I...w..w..wasn't..." he gulped.

"It was butterbeer! I saw the same bottle at The Three Broomsticks! Same bottle, same scent." said Harry firmly.

The scolding stopped immediately.

Eighteenth paragraph, second sentence.

"Ron you just ate!" said Hermione in shock when she heard his stomach growl.

Eighteenth paragraph, third sentence.

"Course he would." spat Hermione bitterly.

Eighteenth paragraph, to the end of paragraph.

"He doesn't need any more fattening." said Charlie darkly.

Nineteenth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"Glad we agree on that." said Charlie walking up and shaking Hagrid's hand.

Twentieth paragraph, first sentence, first comma.

"Good! Harry needs some fattening up." said Charlie, who laughed at the indignant look Harry sent him.

Twentieth paragraph, first sentence, second comma.

It took Harry a while to convince Sirius, Lupin and Mrs. Weasely, who each conjured up a plate of snacks, that he was full.
"That's better, Harry." smiled Mrs. Weasely.

"Now, just need to work on Hagrid's manners." mumbled Mrs. Weasely, but meaning well.

As did the rest of the school.

"For what?" asked Ron.

"I'm used to saying that every time someone starts to look like that." Harry said simply.

"GET 'EM HAGRID! LET 'EM HAVE IT! yelled the twins and the rest of the Quidditch team.

"When you are accepted to Hogwarts and if you went to a muggle school before this, we get a copy of your marks, and we review them, seeing if you need any extra help in an area. Yours, Harry, were very impressive. Miss Granger's marks were nowhere near yours." said Dumbledore, staring straight ahead, thinking fondly.
Hermione looked at Harry with her mouth hanging open.

Dialogue line.

"Math and stuff?" asked Hermione with a smirk.

"I would like to hear how the conversation would go if you were there, instead of me." Harry said with a small sneer. Her smirk went away quickly with a blush

Twenty-fifth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"Really?" said Sirius with a smile.

"Hey I was still in shock, cut me some slack."

Twenty-sixth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Hagrid boomed it as well, students, again, were sent to the floor.

Twenty-seventh paragraph

"What?" said a Ravenclaw, "Mimblewimble?" No one could answer her.

Dialogue line

Dialogue line

Dialogue line

Dialogue line

Dialogue line

Twenty-eighth paragraph

"Damn, it was nice not hearing from him." growled Moody.
"Yeah, like Hagrid will listen to a man like you." said George.

"I wonder what they ever did with that letter?" asked McGonagall, burnt it most likely she thought.

"I had the same reaction." said Hermione and Dean.

"And so far, you are already, 'a thumpin' good'un.'" said Dumbledore, his eyes twinkling over to Harry. Sirius smiled and ruffled Harry's hair. You got that right thought the shaggy haired man.

"FINALLY!" yelled the crowd.
"All the questions you had, you settled for that one?" said Draco with widened eyes.

"Good choice, there was a deadline. Has to meet it." said Kingsley in his deep calm voice.

"Poor horse." said Bill with a smile.

"Poor owl." said Bill, trying to hide his laughter.

"Hagrid! How could you put an owl in your pocket?" said Hermione looking taken aback.

"There is a breed of owls that we wizards raise, Miss Granger, that are used for keeping in large pockets. I leant Beeboo to Hagrid for Harry's reply. He's quite used to traveling like that. Several people have small owls that are used for that fashion." said Dumbledore, smiling towards Hermione, who looked shocked, then thoughtful.

“Pigwidgeon is one of that breed.” said Sirius.

“Oh.” said Hermione, her face turning pink.

"Now I'm very impressed, I can barely read my own writing upside down." said Lupin looking at the teen, who smiled back at him amidst the blankets and cushions.

"Yes, Hermione, the owls are bred to handle any sort of weather. Minus a hurricane or tornado, of course." said Dumbledore holding a hand up, before she could even ask the question.
"Oh, yes he is!" chanted the Gryffindor table.

"An' that was what I was gettin' from jus' meetin' them." growled Hagrid, angrily remembering the scroll and what horrible truth it showed.

Everyone tensed up again from what had been said earlier. Sirius and Remus took a tighter hold on Harry. He was never going back, never. Never. Dumbledore paled once more.

"SHE WAS NOT A FREAK!" came a bloodcurdling scream. Harry sat straight up and vainly tried to ignore the shooting pain firing up his back. He looked around and saw Professor Snape, white with fury and his fists clenched. McGonagall had to pull him back down and began to pat his arm.

"If being normal is acting like you, then being abnormal is a really good thing." piped up a Hufflepuff first year. Then blushed when the school clapped and yelled in agreement.

"Well spoken, Mr. Davidson, well said." said Dumbledore kindly, clapping along with the students.
The clapping died in an instant. They all turned to Harry, Dumbledore leaned forward, a shocked look on his face.

"That...that...is...is how...you...you..found out...? stuttered Dumbledore.

He looked away and nodded. Dumbledore leaned back in the chair clutching his chest, face contorted with extreme grief. To find out that way, was being cruel, it was inhuman, what had he done?

It took a moment for Hagrid to stop crying and finish blowing his nose, to continue with the story.

"So you knew there would be trouble, did you?" said Lupin in a rough whisper. His angered face, however, was broken. Dumbledore was still clutching his chest and his eyes closed. His mind hadn't strayed or moved on from the moment Harry learned the truth about his parents. Lupin looked away, he'll have a word with the man, later.

People leaned in forward, they didn't want to miss a moment of this.
A twitch went through the school.

"He wouldn't dare." said McGonagall with pride. The rest of the school nodded in agreement, even Fudge couldn't begrudge that truth.

"I swear, Halloween is cursed." muttered Ron darkly, Hermione nodded. Harry was staring at the headmaster intently. His demeanor didn't change.

The families of the aforementioned bowed their heads in remembrance. It was so long ago, but the pain could still be felt in their hearts.
Forty-fourth paragraph.

Flitwick and McGonagall paled while the rest of the school shivered.

Forty-fifth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set, third sentence.

As did some of the students

End of dialogue set.

Dialogue set, third sentence, first comma, eighth word.

"Hagrid would kick your ass if you even tried!" bellowed Dean.

Dialogue set, third sentence, sixth comma.

A few adults’ fists clenched.

Dialogue set, third sentence, sixth comma, tenth word.

Sirius and Remus snarled and fists tensed on the blankets.

End of dialogue set.

"Don't bother leaving gentlemen." said Madame Bones, grinning evilly from where she was sitting.

"WE'RE GONNA HUNT THEM DOWN AND MAKE THEM PAY, FOR SAYING! WORSE STILL! THEY SAID IT IN FRONT OF HARRY! bellowed Sirius as he and Remus reached the door.

"They are in custody at the Ministry. Awaiting trial of child abuse." she said keeping the same smirk on her face. They slowly came back, breathing shallower. Harry was leaning over the side, trying to look into Dumbledore's face, which still hadn't moved. They picked him gently and draped him across their laps once more.

“When did that happen?” asked Harry.
“Late last night.” said Madam Bones with a sneer.

Forty-sixth paragraph.

"Come on, Dursley! Say one more word!" egged on some of the Slytherins.

Forty-seventh paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Forty-eighth paragraph.

One dialogue line

Dialogue set, first sentence.

"HE HAS DIED! These books will prove it." thundered Fudge.

"HE'S BACK!" These books will prove it." bellowed back Harry, not looking at him, but still staring at the Headmaster.

Dialogue set, fourth sentence.

"I don't believe that no more. I believe ya 'Arry." said Hagrid, speaking as if that should eradicate any doubt.

End of dialogue set.

Dialogue set.

The students were a little disappointed, they didn't learn anything new, except, perhaps HE was back. The way Harry bellowed back to the Minister. If he WAS back, what were they going to do?

Forty-ninth paragraph, first sentence.

"No mistake, Potter." Moody said, gruffly. Harry wasn't listening.
A wizard? Him? How could he possibly be? He'd spent his life being clouted by Dudley, and bullied and beaten by Aunt Petunia and Uncle Vernon; if he was really a wizard, why hadn't they been turned into warty toads every time they'd tried to lock him in his cupboard?

Growls came from the large group, but then turned to cheers.

Forty-ninth paragraph, end of paragraph.

And the growls came back in full force.

Dialogue line.

Fiftieth paragraph

Dialogue line.

Fifty-first paragraph, second sentence, third comma, ninth word

"The running part isn't magical, the flying part is though." muttered Ron to Hermione.

Fifty-first paragraph, second sentence, fourth comma, sixth word.

"Potter hair! No stopping it!" said Sirius, fondly messing up the hair, his face fell as he followed Harry's gaze. Dumbledore was paler now.

Fifty-first paragraph, to the end of paragraph.

"Boy, did I phrase that wrong." muttered Harry, still looking at Dumbledore. Something was wrong, very wrong.

Fifty-second paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Fifty-third paragraph.

Dialogue set, third sentence.

"Bull." snarled Tonks.
"I wrote the name down myself." said Flitwick proudly.

"This won't go well," said Fred.

"Not...at...all." whistled George.

"Wha' happened! Wha' happened!" yelled the twins excitedly.

"If you let the poor man finish, he'll tell you!" said Hermione shrilly. She was waiting to hear what happened as well.

People started to stand up, they were really interested now. What exactly happened? Whatever it was, Dudley deserved it and more.

"YES!" screamed everyone in the Hall. They danced in place, hugged each other, and every student ran up to Hagrid and shook him firmly by the hand. Malfoy shook Hagrid's hand twice.
"Should have done it sooner." bellowed Malfoy.

"Right on!" cheered Ron.

"And he never did!" said Hermione with a fake pout.

"Yes, well, you were proven innocent Hagrid." said Ron.

"Innocent of what?" asked Lupin, not noticing that Harry and Sirius were looking at Dumbledore and their eyes never strayed.

"You'll find out later." said Ron with a mysterious smile.

"Goody." he said leaning back in the bowl

"He'll never tell, we've tried." said Fred and George bitterly.

"Well at least he gave you something warmer to sleep under then that ragged old blanket, but he could keep the doo...."

"DUMBLEDORE!" screamed Harry.
Everyone turned quickly and saw the Headmaster, he was standing but he fell to the ground with great crash.

Harry, ignoring the unyielding pain, he flung himself to the floor and turned the old man over. His face was pale and his breathing, which was heavily labored just a moment before, had ceased.

Overhead, clouds were gathering and lightning was striking in sprastic points. Then, empty chairs, the torches and paintings started flying madly around the room. Madame Pomfrey came running over to the fallen man, she waved her wand over him, but the magic rebounded and knocked her off her feet.

"I can't use magic!" she shrieked. "His aura is going haywire."

Snape rushed over and whipped out a potion, but the glass shattered in his hand, sending shrapnel into his own hand. Snape sent out a loud shout as glass sliced his hands and sent rivers of blood down his palm.

"Not even my potions are working!" he bellowed over to her. “I can't get close enough!”

"He's suffering from a heart attack!" yelled Lupin, "We've got to do something, if not, he's done for!"

Harry placed two hands on Dumbledore's chest, right above his heart and pushed down forcefully, in quick succession. Then he placed his mouth of top the old man's and breathed down, he made sure the man didn't have anything lodged in his throat, before he started the compressions. Once he was done breathing down, he continued the chest compressions.

Nobody could move, they were in shock. Magic was useless here now, Dumbledore was gone, he had to be. They wanted to pull Harry back, but what he was doing, not a lot of them knew what he was doing. They weren't sure if Harry was beating him up in a fit of grief and kissing him, or what. Only the muggleborns and half-bloods recognized it and they stayed back. It looked like Harry knew what he was doing.

Harry looked up into the sky from doing the chest compressions. He was losing, he was losing Dumbledore, if only he had something, defibulator, anything! Harry looked at the lightning, that was it! He would have to time it right, he took a long piece of wire from his knapsack, he had an assortment of things in his bag. Ron was the only person alive that knew he carried that bag on his person at all times. He put a yellow pair of gloves on and he then pulled his custom kitchen knife out of his pocket. He tied one end of the wire to the knife and tossed it into the air, taking the other end of the wire and holding it a small ways away from Dumbledore's heart. Lightning struck the metal knife, traveled down the wire and split into two different directions, one path went down to Dumbledore. Which caused his body to jolt, and made everyone else cringe. The other surge of electricity tried to travel into Harry, but was nullified by the rubber gloves on his hands. Harry took off a glove and felt for a pulse, nothing.

Harry pulled the knife back, which landed a ways away and tossed it again. Once again, the power shot into Dumbledore, and again his body jumped on its own. Again he checked, and again he had to toss the knife in the air. Harry checked once more, he felt nothing. Then...he felt a tiny thump, then another. Dumbledore's heart was starting to fight back! The storm subsided and the chairs fell to a crash in the Hall. Harry sat back, leaning against the bowl. sweat pouring from his forehead and tears, that were from grief but they were now tears of relief, falling down. He smiled over to the Potion's Master and the school Healer, who were staring in amazement, and pointed weakly to Dumbledore.
"Your turn."
Meeting A Childhood Rival

Chapter Summary

Dumbledore recovers from his heart-attack, but now he has to keep Calming Draughts with him at all times, which might not be a bad thing. Hopefully Harry's first trip to Diagon Alley is uneventful.

Chapter Notes

I don't own Harry Potter.

The next morning, Dumbledore slowly made his way down to the Great Hall, it took some doing to get Madam Pomfrey to even allow him out of the hospital wing. She said something about that the books were more trouble than they were worth. She would've escorted Dumbledore down to breakfast, but she had to gather potions together, just in case someone else had need of them. Though Dumbledore highly doubted she meant to use them on anyone else.

After he saw the Great Hall swirl in front of his eyes, he couldn't recollect anything after that. He now knew just how frustrated Harry must feel, not being able to remember what had happened after a certain part. He could, however, remember what had sent him sprawling to the floor. He clutched his heart in remembrance of the pain, learning the awful truth in that fashion, with those words, how could Harry even stand it? Then Madam Pomfrey's words came screaming through his mind. He reached into his cloak and took a sip of a Calming Draught. This was the condition he had to agree to, in order to leave the Healer's care. He had to take several vials of the potion with him everywhere, until the books were done.

He entered the Great Hall and smiled as he strode forward into his favorite part of the castle. So many happy memories and so far, only two bad recollections associated with this great room. People were sitting in the random chairs once more, and enjoying their breakfasts. When they looked up and saw Dumbledore, who was looking just as well as he normally did, they all smiled and gave a loud cheer.

Harry was walking back towards the bowl with a large plate of food stopped and stared at the Headmaster who had just walked in. Harry grinned broadly. "Good morning, sir! Want some breakfast?" said Harry holding out his own plate without hesitation.

Dumbledore was taken aback by this, not because Harry was offering him his food, if it had had been his friend Ron though, it would have given him another heart attack. It was the manner in which he acted, Minerva had told him last night when he awoke that Harry had saved his life and the manner in which he did it. Any normal person would be bragging to the rooftops, or looking superior to the man in which he saved. Harry was carrying on, as if nothing were different between them. Just a student and a teacher, a grandson to his grandfather. It took Dumbledore a while to send Harry a smile in return, he walked towards Harry and embraced him. Harry returned the embrace and smiled.

"Thank you, Harry. Thank you, for saving this evil old man." said Dumbledore sadly when they broke apart. Harry looked at him shocked.

"You're not evil, sir! Why do you say that?"

"I placed you in a home, though I had no notion at the time just how bad, that in no way could be labeled habitable for you. I kept you there, despite all the signs of unhappiness, and obvious malnutrition, I kept you there. I ignored your needs and wants for a loving family, I choose to keep you protected from dark wizards, but left you to fend for yourself, defenseless, to deal with human monsters devoid of magic.

"I've placed challenges in your path, while you were here, in order to prepare you for the troubles ahead, and almost killing you in every one of those. I promise to you Harry, I will do that no more. You will never see the Dursleys again, unless you wish to travel to their hearing. You will not be forced into a dangerous situation, without me there to protect you. I will train you personally, the way I should have done to start with. Oh, Harry, I do believe that I myself am the cruelest person you could possibly ever, know!" Dumbledore lamented.

Harry smiled sadly. "Sir, you're not evil, and you aren't the cruelest person I know. I didn't let anyone know about what the Dursleys did to me, not even Ron and Hermione..

"Harry, I am an expert Legimens, I could see into your mind, I didn't even look!" cried Dumbledore, wringing his hands. This was a side of Dumbledore no one had ever seen. Harry reached into Dumbledore's cloak and handed him the vial of Calming Draught. Dumbledore stared at Harry, how did he know that was there? Harry saw his bewildered look and smiled.

"Who do you think gave Madam Pomfrey the idea to keep those with you? Now, to get back on track, I let you see what I want you to see in my mind, the same goes for Professor Snape. I don't know occlumency, but I do know how to arrange my thoughts so that I lay down the cards I want down. The unhappiness I can deal with on my own, it just makes Hogwarts more of a special place for me. Malnutrition, well, I'm still alive, and I get my fill here every day. I put on enough weight and keep it on to keep me safe during the summer.

"I can handle muggles no problem without magic, my knapsack sees to that." he said bringing the small bag out for Dumbledore to see. "I went headlong into those challenges on my own. I could've thrown up my hands and said 'Screw it, I can't do this, I won't do this' but I chose to follow the path you laid. Me almost getting killed a time or two was my own fault, not yours. And I won't have anyone, ANYONE," said Harry, looking at Mrs. Weasley sternly. "say otherwise." said Harry, quite plainly. Dumbledore stood in shock. Harry had to nudge the vial towards Dumbledore's lips, and waited till he finished sipping it.

"You must be getting better, Harry! You haven't talked like that for a while." said Ron with a grin. Harry thought a moment, and then smiled once more.

"I must be getting better, my mind is back on track like it should be. Still can't remember what happened though, it'll come I think, in time and my back still hurts like a son of a banshee. Though I think, with my actions yesterday, I think the secret of my mentality are out. I'm happy though, the books were being real nice about not showing what was going on in my head as well as the 'watered-down' thoughts. Hope it keeps it up."

"So I guess, we can't treat you like a kid anymore, huh?" said Sirius, trying very hard to hide his cheerlessness.

"I was actually going to ask you to keep it up, I missed out on your affection, and I fear you'll start going batty if I didn't let you 'vent' some of that paternal instinct you're trying to utilize, that way, you don't smother me during the summer break." Harry smiled. Both Sirius and Remus could hardly contain their joy.

It was true, they wanted to show Harry that the both of them could be excellent guardians and wanted to make up for lost time, even if it means treating him like a child. What made it even better, was that Harry was giving them the go ahead to continue treating him like a juvenile. Harry would never tell them that by having them act in an overly-paternal way, instead of having them treat him like the young adult he was, they wouldn't feel the guilt that they missed out on so much. Also, Harry liked this attention. It was nice, made him feel loved, and protected.

After breakfast and everyone huddled into their chairs, Harry transfigured a foot rest for Dumbledore and took another flask of the Draught and laid it beside him on a small cherry-table. "Take it when you need it, don't make me come over here and pour it down your throat. Cause I will." he said, wincing slightly as he slowly sat down. Sirius dragged him softly back over to him and Remus brought his legs up so they laid acrossed his lap once again.

"Who wants ter read?" asked Hagrid, who picked up the book that laid beside his giant chair.

"May I, sir?" asked Hermione, looking towards Dumbledore. Umbridge sat up in her pink, kitten patterned chair and hissed towards her.
"This is an official reading! Miss Granger, we've already enough time with everyone comment- ing and yesterday afternoons...occurrence." she glared over to Dumbledore and Harry. Dumbledore smiled over to her and Harry waved innocently.

"Just let her read, Delores, what harm is there?" asked Madam Bones.

"She could skip over something important! Or alter it." said Umbridge angrily

"Not possible, the books are protected against someone skipping ahead, or failing to read something. Also one cannot add words or phrases, unless it were to get to a greater sense of truth. Harry's brilliance may or may not be labeled here. We won't know, till we read. Go ahead Miss Granger." said Dumbledore kindly.

Hermione ran over to Hagrid and accepted the book.

Chapter title.

"This should be good." said Sirius pulling Harry tighter. Harry smiled, this WAS going to be a good one.

First paragraph.

"Wakey, wakey, Harry!" said both of the twins.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

"Quite an elaborate dream, Potter." sneered Snape.

End of dialogue set.

"Nope, you're on a rock in the middle of the bloody ocean!" said Bill, trying to hide a smile.

"WILLIAM!" scolded Mrs. Weasley

Second paragraph.
"What a depressing thought." said Ron.

"Still think it's a dream, Potter?" called Draco.

"If it do, longest one I've ever had." said Harry with a smile.

"I swear, those owls can smell money." said Lupin

"Vicious little feather dusters aren't they?" said Sirius looking at Harry.

"Reminded me of my knapsack, I have stuff that doesn't look useful to anybody, but to me, they are handy to have when you really need them."

"Hagrid, Harry wouldn't know what Knuts are, he just found out he was a wizard the night before!" admonished McGonagall.
"Hagrid was giving me a hands on lesson, he was teaching me what the money was." said Harry defensively. Hagrid mouthed 'Thank you.' towards him.

Dialogue line.

Ninth paragraph.

Tenth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Eleventh paragraph.

"OH, NO! MORE DEPRESSING THOUGHTS!" howled the twins, putting arms up to foreheads in a dramatic pose.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"Hell, it doesn't sound like he spent any money on you? Clothes, food, nothing." said Lupin.

"He paid my hospital bills." said Harry stretching slightly.

"Tell me they were check-ups." pleaded Sirius. Harry closed his eyes, refusing to answer. Sirius groaned and buried his face in his cub's hair.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"What made you think that their money was in the house?" asked Ron.

"The Dursleys have a second financial ledger hidden away in the room I sleep in. I stumbled on it one day as I was fixing some of Dudley's old, broken toys. It labeled a whole bunch of money they were getting from someone, and in it, was a number for a bank account. I saw how much money they were hoarding away. Taking the current exchange, in galleons it would be...." it took a Harry a moment of looking up at the sky. "Three hundred and fifty-eight thousand, eight hundred and twenty-one galleons and two sickles and that was when I was thirteen."

People whistled around the hall, that was a lot of money. Even Draco had his eyebrows raised and mouth hanging open.

Professor Vector's eyebrows raised in admiration and shock, how can this child do math that fast? Miss Granger still had to write down her figures to find out the solution. And this boy can do this in his head? He was highly impressed.
"Albus." said McGonagall, she came over and whispered viciously into his ear. "Isn't that the total amount of galleons you sent to those Muggles to care for the boy?"

Dumbledore quickly did the math in his head as well, he had sent the Dursleys child support in the form of Muggle money, easier for them to use, and his face fell. Harry's figure was dead on. That was the money Vernon was supposed to use for Harry. What was he doing, saving it like that?

"Without that account number, they wouldn't be able to get to it. Uncle Vernon came in my room one time, during my school year, and saw that I forgot to place the crease back in the book cover it was hiding in. I haven't seen the book since." said Harry, not really caring what the money was supposed to be for.

Dialogue set.
Dialogue line.
Dialogue line.
Twelfth paragraph.
Dialogue line.
Dialogue set, third sentence.
"Don't know about that." said Harry whispered mysteriously.
"Don't know about what?" whispered back Sirius, Lupin leaned in to hear.
"I've come up with about twenty-two different ways of breaking into Gringotts."
"Don't...even...try...it..." growled Sirius, though a small smile played acrossed his face.
"Why would you come up with ideas like that?" asked Remus stunned.
"Was the only exercise my brain got." said Harry with a shrug.

End of dialogue set.

"I wouldn't trust you to take out the garbage." spat Umbridge. Hagrid didn't look hurt, he knew, whatever she said, most of the school disagreed with her. And he was right. Growls and yells could be heard quite clearly.

"That is where you differ from me and the rest of the staff here at Hogwarts. And I fear, that isn't the only difference." said Dumbledore with a cryptic smile.

Dialogue line.
Thirteenth paragraph.
"How did you do it, Hagrid?" squeaked a small Hufflepuff girl.

"Was it my bike again Hagrid?" said Sirius with a cunning smile.

"Yep, it was. Once I got ter 'arry I sent it back." said Hagrid with smile.

"Whatever you did, he certainly didn't tell us." said Hermione, glaring at Harry.

"I keep my word, I never go back on it. Promises are very important to me." said Harry defensively.

Hermione's face fell in guilt she herself broke some promises, not to Harry and Ron though, Dumbledore's, Lupin's and Sirius's faces however, all lit up. He was very much like his mother, however, she would bend her promises sometimes.

"You weren't supposed to use magic! You were expelled!" screeched Umbridge gleefully.

"Delores, he was found innocent years ago! Try to keep up with the times, for heaven's sake!" groaned Madam Bones.

"There'd better not be, Bill." growled Charlie towards his older brother.

Bill raised his hands, "Hey I don't have anything to do with that aspect of the bank. Take it up with the goblins."

They all waited till Charlie and a few Care of Magical Creature enthusiasts finished ranting and planning a revolt on behalf of the dragons, so they could continue.
"How many ways did you plan out to rob the bank then?" asked Lupin quietly.

"Two, and even after I visited the bank and learned the geography, they both would work."

Lupin groaned.

"Ya could've asked anythin' yer liked 'arry I wouldn't 'a minded." said Hagrid, a little ashamed that he ignored Harry.

"WE DON'T MESS THINGS UP!" bellowed Umbridge and Fudge.

"You've got two people here, who are testimony to the fact that the ministry screwed up royally!" yelled Harry right back. He pointed to Sirius and Hagrid.

"I'M NOT A BUNGLER!" yelled Fudge, not nearly as loud as before.

"HE MOST CERTAINLY IS NOT!" screeched Umbridge.

"Delores, Cornelius, I think that it goes without saying that we, the Ministry made some very weighty mistakes. Drop it." said Madam Bones.

"Now, Hagrid, it’s not every morning." chided George playfully.

"It’s every quarter hour." finished Fred.

The Minister and his Senior Undersecretary scowled at them. I'll get them, once I'm done with Potter, I'll get them. thought Umbridge savagely.

"Nothing much." piped up a fifth year Ravenclaw. Fudge and Umbridge glared at her. Madam Bones had had enough.

"Honestly, you two are worse than children, getting angry at every little thing. Merlin, Potter has had insults thrown to him, and he slings them right back, or he simply accepts them. He's more mature then the both of you put together."

Umbridge scowled at Head of Law Enforcement. While Fudge looked slightly ashamed.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"Muggles are so greedy." sneered Umbridge. Some of the students, who were purebloods, nodded in agreement, they were remembering the Dursleys and the money they were hoarding.

"Wizards are just as greedy as Muggles, sometimes more so." stated Harry. "While the justice system in the wizarding world isn't always perfect, at least they, for the most part, don't have criminals make a large donation to the hospital to get off."

"WHO HAS DONE THAT MR. POTTER?" bellowed Madam Bones incredulously.

"You want a list? Give me a minute or two and I can give you a head start into an audit of some people's bank accounts." said Harry whipping out his small black book from his knapsack a spare roll of and a quill.

"There is no need Mr. Potter." simpered Umbridge. "The Minister knows all about them."

"And yet, they aren't in jail, and money for freedom is still used as a bartering tool. Right now, you didn't shed your Minister in a good light." said Harry with a raised eyebrow, still writing down names and dates, not even looking at the parchment. He turned towards Madam Bones, "I'll have the list for you...right...now." He rolled up the list and handed it to Sirius, who passed it to Madam Bones.

She unrolled it, her eyes getting larger as the list grew longer. Once she was done, she glared over to the Minister and Umbridge. Fudge shifted guiltily in his seat, however Umbridge was still snarling at Harry, who was ignoring her.

Sixteenth paragraph.

"How did the Dursleys get back to land Harry?" asked Lee.

"Before we left the town, I stopped at the Police Station and told them that there was a family stranded out on the rock. They went and picked them up, right after Hagrid and I left. Uncle Vernon wasn't happy that I sicced the cops on them, but I didn't want to think of another plan to get them off that rock."

"You didn't want to?" repeated Sirius.

"Wasn't worth my time to come up with a less conspicuous escape for them."

"That's my boy!" said Sirius ruffling Harry's hair. Lupin smiled.
Seventeenth paragraph.

"Hagrid." said Snape tiredly, rubbing the bridge of his hooked nose with his forefinger and thumb.

Dialogue line.

"Was that out of curiosity or were you still planning your heist?" whispered Lupin.

"Planning a third way." said Harry with an evil grin.

"Merlin, help me." Lupin moaned, massaging his temple.

Dialogue line.

"Only Hagrid." said Sirius fondly. Harry, Hermione and Ron shared a small smile.

Dialogue line.

Eighteenth paragraph.

"I don't see how people can have problems with Muggle money, the denominations are right there!" said Hermione exasperatedly.

Nineteenth paragraph.

"What was that for Hagrid." asked Harry.

"A blanket for Fluffy, he was gettin' the sniffles." said Hagrid.

"Who's Fluffy?" asked Charlie.

"You'll find out later." said Ron.

Dialogue line.

Twentieth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Twenty-first paragraph.

School list, first item on the school uniform list.
"Simple yet stylish, at least compared to the Smelting’s uniform." said the fashionistas of the school.

School uniform list, second item on list.

"I can only remember wearing it the first week." said Harry

School uniform list, third item on list.

They all looked at Charlie warily, he wasn't happy, but he wasn't furious.

"They harvest the dragon hide from the elderly that pass away. Their hides are considered the toughest."

School uniform list, fourth thing on list.

"Harry had to order another one, to go underneath the one he already had, he kept almost freezing to death going between classes and going outside. CRAP! Sorry Harry," said Ron. Dumbledore, Mrs. Weasley, and Madam Pomfrey quickly looked towards the raven haired youth, who slapped a hand across his eyes. Sirius and Remus summoned all the blankets from yesterday. back and laid them on top of their cub. "I didn't mean say that out loud." he said meekly.

Note for name tags.

"I remember Fred and George kept switching their name tags around in our first year." smiled Alicia.

Course books list, to the first book on book list including author.

"Actually quite handy to have on you." said Ron. Hermione's eyebrows raised in shock.

Course book list, second title and author.

"Ah, Harry, Ms. Bagshot would like to have a word with you soon. You and your parents used to live right next door to her. I would like to say, she would love to catch up with you, however, these books are doing it for you." said Dumbledore his eyes twinkling again.

Course book list, third title and author.
"I disproved every theory in that damn book in my first year." muttered Harry. Lupin and Sirius looked at him in amazement.

Course book list, fourth title and author.

"No use trying to butter me up Mr. Lee." said McGonagall sternly, she however couldn't stop the sides of her mouth from twitching.

Course book list, fifth title and author

"That is actually one of my favorite books." said Harry. Snape stared at him.

Course book list, sixth title and author.

"That is one of my other ones." continued Harry, Snape's jaw fell open.

Course book list, seventh title and author

The N.E.W.T.S Care of Magical Creature students all cheered.

Course book list, eighth title and author

Umbridge was the only one to applaud the book. Everyone else booed.

A thought had just struck Harry, "Wow, that is some kind of weird and twisted fate."

"What is?" asked Hermione.

"Look at some of the names of the authors. Sir, are all names, those people's real names? The names they were born with?" asked Harry, looking at Dumbledore. He nodded.

"Well, the magical theory book: author's last name is Waffling. And that book is the biggest load of bull I've ever read, It says everything so pretty and flowing that you can hardly understand it. The word "waffle" when used as a verb, is to speak or write with uncertain significance. Kinda like your speeches, Umbridge." said Harry.

People were frowning at this, but then their eyebrows were rising slowly.
"The transfiguration book: last name of that author is Switch, in that class, you learn to transfigure. The synonym for the word 'transfigure' is 'switch'!

Dumbledore sat there, staring at the young man, he was right!

"The herbology book: Phyllida Spore. Phyllidae is a noun that means leaf, insects, and the word spore? The reproductive cell of a fungus. Instead of seeds, they have spores.

"The potions book: Arsenius, arsenious means containing arsenic in the trivalent state. Arsenic is arsenic trioxide a white, tasteless water-soluble, poison. The word Jigger can mean several things, but one meaning is to manipulate or alter, mostly for illegal purposes. A potioneer manipulates and alters the ingredients of a potion and forming it into something completely different, a solid to a liquid. Early potions were used only for illegal purposes.

"The Magical Beast book: Newt Scamander. A newt is a salamander, Scamander is the an old name for a river that flows into the Aegean Sea, which derived its name from Greek myth, which holds tales of Pegasus, and other magical beasts. Or you can manipulate the name and have it be salamander.

"The Defense book: Trimble, well if you switch out the ‘i’ for an ‘e’ you get the word tremble. Which is something you really shouldn’t be doing when you’re trying to defend yourself, but he was always known to be a coward.” said Harry thoughtfully.

Dumbledore was sitting in shock during this narration. He knew now that Harry was a highly intelligent individual, but he never knew he was this staggeringly brilliant.

"This is some twisted kind of fate. For all those people to write books, and their names to be that, naturally. Boggles my flipping mind"

Sirius and Remus stared at him, then each other. Where the hell did Harry learn all this stuff? And just how much is he holding back?

Equipment list, and pet note.

"What about a rat?" asked Ron.

Dumbledore smiled, "As long as it's reasonably small, its fine."
No brooms for first years

"Whoopsy-daisy!" sang Harry sweetly. Those who were in their fifth year and up laughed loudly at this, to the confusion of those in earlier years.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Twenty-second paragraph, first sentence.

"Really? You've never been to London, before this?" asked Neville.

"Well...not downtown London, every time the Dursley's would go to London for shopping, I would be left behind at Mrs. Figgs." said Harry with a smile.

End of twenty-second paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Twenty-third paragraph, fifth sentence.

"I couldn't believe it either, Harry." said Hermione.

Twenty-third paragraph, sixth sentence.

"Hell, not even we would pull that kind of a prank." said George, shocked.

"We may be nutters, but we have standards." said Fred with dignity.

End of twenty-third paragraph.

Hagrid seemed to inflate with pride. Harry had trusted Hagrid, despite almost all the adults in his life letting him down. Harry chose to trust him!

Dialogue line.

Twenty-fourth paragraph, fifth sentence.

"You had a feeling, Potter?" asked Moody gruffly.

Harry nodded and Dumbledore and Moody exchange a significant glance.
"Harry, how did you know that was sherry?" asked Mrs. Weasley.

"Not only am I the cook at the Dursleys', I'm also the waiter. I know what drink goes best with what" he said simply.

"That would imply that you've taken a drink of something a little stronger than butterbeer a time or two." said Remus warningly.

"Shh! Don't tell Uncle Vernon, he couldn't figure out who took a sip of his wine two years ago." said Harry with a mischievous smile.

"HAROLD JAMES POTTER! YOU ARE TOO YOUNG TO DRINK!" reproached Madam Pomfrey.

Harry just gave a sheepish grin. "I know I am, I only took a sip. Of each."

"How many were there?" said Lupin in the same tone as before.

"Thirty-nine, NOT ALL IN ONE DAY! IT WAS OVER THE COURSE OF A FEW MONTHS!" said Harry defensively when he saw the look on Mrs. Weasley's face. "The last time I screwed up on the wine choice, they didn't let me cook for three weeks; I wanted to make sure that, that mistake never happened again!"

"You'd better not drink in front of him, though he's already had quite a few." growled Mrs. Weasley. Her tone changed when he saw the hurt and insulted look on Harry's face. "Sorry dear, I didn't mean..." Harry turned his head away from her quickly. He covered his face up with the phoenix quilt and motioned to Hermione to continue.

Hermione sent Mrs. Weasley a furious look, as did most of the adults in the room, before she continued.

"That has never happened before, that I can remember." said Lupin with his eyebrows raised.
"Bet you just loved that, didn't you Potter?" smirked Umbridge.

"Actually, he hates it. He'd rather go unnoticed." said Draco absently.

All the students, as well as all the teachers turned to look at him, with widened eyes.

"What?"

"You accuse him of liking attention every day!" said Cho.

"I was bullying him! I know he hates it!" said Draco waving his hand.

"I do, I really do hate it." muttered Harry from under the blankets, "The bullying I'm used to, I used to just sit an' take it, now I fight back. Lot of fun actually." said Harry looking over the blankets and smirking over to Draco.

Dedalus sat up straighter in his chair. A part of him felt ashamed that he was fawning over Harry, now that he knew he didn't like being stared at, but he couldn't help but feel a small twinge of pride.

Harry and Ron muttered something, "Watch your language, boys." said Lupin.
"He was the best teacher this school had, till I came around." said Umbridge, leaning back in her pink chair.

"Yeah, best of the worst." said Harry loudly. Students tried to hide their laughter, but for the most part were unsuccessful. Umbridge had a permanent scowl on her face.

Dialogue line.

"I'll just bet you are." muttered Harry darkly.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set.

“Ruddy coward.” growled Moody.

Thirtieth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

“If anyone else had been there, I don’t think they would have stopped. Hagrid could have just swung his arm and knock them all out.” said Tonks with a cheery smile.

Thirtieth paragraph.

Thirtieth-fourth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

“Perfect for the Defense Against the Dark Arts teaching position then.” said Kingsley rolling his eyes.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set, fifth sentence, first comma.

"Wasn't a vampire." snarled Ron.

End of dialogue set.

Thirtieth-five paragraph.

“Wasn’t too sure I wanted to become a wizard after that. I didn’t really want to meet up with one of them right then and there.” said Harry with a laugh.
“Can you imagine if Harry had not come to school?” muttered Hermione.

“Be a living hell.” said Ron shaking his head.

“We’d be dead.” said Neville.

Dialogue line.

Thirty-sixth paragraph.

Thirty-seventh paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Thirty-eighth paragraph, first sentence.

"The look on yer face was priceless.” said Hagrid.

End of thirty-eighth paragraph.

Thirty-ninth paragraph, second sentence, third comma, second word.

"I remember one time when we were our first year, James jinxed one of the self-stirring cauldrons in the potions classroom, Sirius took a hold of it and was spun around and around like a top. Went crashing into the wall. Funniest thing I have ever seen in my life!” said Lupin fondly.

“Glad I could amuse you.” Sirius rubbed his ribs, thinking about the prank.

End of thirty-ninth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Fortieth paragraph.

"Not really, we petitioned laws so that they couldn't take too many livers from too many dragons. They get a set amount every year. We're fighting to have it lowered even more." said Charlie with a pleased tone.

Forty-first paragraph, first sentence.

Out of the blue, came the rush of wings and a snowy owl landed on Harry's stomach.

"Hey Hedwig," said Harry, stroking her feathers. Several girls sighed and cooed.

"Your owl is the most beautiful owl here." said Lavenderlongingly. Hedwig puffed out her feathered chest proudly.

"No, in the whole world." said Harry fondly.
Sirius stroked her feathers as well. "Smart as a whip, too."

Forty-first paragraph, third sentence.

Harry let his mind wander, his first broom. He gave a great sigh, and smiled. Remembering the rushing of air underneath his knees and through his hair. God, he missed flying. He was going to have to get his Firebolt back somehow.

End of forty-first paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Forty-second paragraph.

Dialogue set.

Poem on door.

Dialogue line.

"Take the hint." whispered Lupin, tugging on Harry's pants leg.

Forty-third paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set, first sentence, second comma.

"How did Hagrid get ahold of Harry's key?" asked Sirius.

"The key was in my possession for safe keeping. I couldn't possibly give it to the Dursleys to hold onto for safe keeping. When Harry was to go to London, I gave the key to Hagrid, and then the key was to be given to Harry, as it was his property." said Dumbledore.

Dialogue set, end of first sentence.

"Oooh, bad move, they will not be very happy with that. They like to keep things tidy, goblins." winced Bill.

End of dialogue set.

Dialogue line.
"You had to say that in front the most inquisitive boy Hogwarts will ever know?" said McGonagall with a small smile.

"And so it begins." said Harry, Hermione and Ron all together. Nobody except for a Majority of the staff and the some of the fifth years and up knew what they were talking about.

"Those carts are awesome!" yelled Harry and a few Quidditch players.

"Why in the heck do you say that?" asked Ernie with a shocked look on his face.

"It’s a speed flying thing." said Harry with a shrug.

"You're a nutter." said Sirius shaking his head and tugging his hair lightly.

"Left, right, right, left, middle fork, right left, right fork, left, right, middle fork, down spiral, straight fork, right, right, left and left." said Harry quietly.

The hall went quiet.

"Memorized it on the way out.” said Harry shrugging.

"That was a little unnerving." said Harry.
"Bill..." growled Charlie.

"BRO, I DON'T KNOW!" yelled Bill.

End of forty-ninth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"Didn't you know at the time?" asked Hermione.

"Making conversation. Hagrid was real quiet." said Harry.

Dialogue line.

"If I had noticed that, I never would have bothered you Hagrid, sorry." called Harry to Hagrid.

Fiftieth paragraph.

"I offered him some gingerbread that I had baked from my knapsack. It was the last thing I baked at the Dursley’s."

"Harry, he was about to be sick!" said Lupin with a stunned look.

"Ginger settles your stomach and makes it so you don't throw up." stated Harry.

Lupin thought a moment, looked to Madam Pomfrey, who appeared impressed and said "Oh."

"Wish I took it, especially if ya made it." said Hagrid sheepishly.

"It was alright." said Harry grinning.

Fifty-first paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Fifty-second paragraph, second sentence.

People snarled at the memory of the Dursleys.

Fifty-second paragraph, third sentence.

"There was nothing that they paid for!" yelled Hermione looking up from the book.

End of fifty-second paragraph.
"That's just your school fund. Your complete vault is way down below that one. Your dad was the richest man in the world, now you are." whispered Sirius. Harry's eyes opened wide in shock.

Fifty-third paraph.

Dialogue set.

Dialogue line.

"Right on!" said Harry, the school players all cheered loudly. Others looked at them and shook their heads. Athletes are insane.

Fifty-fourth paragraph.

"Thanks Hagird." said Lupin as Sirius absent-mindedly rubbed the Harry's neck.

Fifty-fifth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"Can't get in there to rob it now can you?" said Sirius into Harry's ear.

"Actually..."

"Never mind."

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"How come I feel that you are asking this, so you know what could happen if you touch the door?" said Lupin warningly but his mouth twitched when Harry sent a cheeky grin towards the werewolf.

Fifty-sixth paragraph, first sentence, second comma, ninth word.

As did the most of the students in the Hall.

Fifty-sixth paragraph, second sentence.

"Well, that was a huge letdown." said Bill.
"Only restraint Potter has ever shown." sneered Snape.

Dialogue line.

Fifty-seventh paragraph.

Dialogue set, third sentence, first comma.

"Hagrid couldn't it of waited." admonished Mrs. Weasley.

"Leave him alone!" yelled Harry. Mrs. Weasley looked shocked, as did the rest of the Weasley children.

Sirius pulled Harry closer to him. "Molly I remember those carts, I would want a stiff drink too. Leave Hagrid alone." he said sternly.

Mrs. Weasley looked down, a little hurt.

End of dialogue set.

Fifty-eighth paragraph.

"What the hell is mauve?" asked Charlie.

"A light blue-purple mix." said Harry.

"How do you know what mauve is?" said Ron eyebrows raised far into his hairline.

"Aunt Petunia and her fashion conscious lifestyle." muttered Harry darkly.

Dialogue line.

Fifty-ninth paragraph, first sentence.

Draco paled, oh shit! he thought.

End of fifty-ninth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set.

Draco slowly sank into the chair he was sitting.
"OOOH HH!" said the twins. "BURN!"

The Gryffindor team couldn't help but smile. Harry was such a natural that he became a Quidditch star the first game.

The Hufflepuffs in the Hall, including Tonks, Professor Sprout and Madam Bones turned and looked at Malfoy severely.

"Sorry..." said Malfoy quietly.

"That was very kind of you Hagrid." said Dumbledore with his eyes twinkling.

Hagrid blushed, "He didn't have much breakfast."

Growls rippled through three of the four houses.
"I think an apology would be appropriate right now, Draco." said Snape from his serpentine chair.

"I concur." said Dumbledore, the twinkle absent from his eyes.

"I'm sorry." said Draco, looking down and meaning it.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Sirius and Remus snarled a little bit.

"Wasn't then, am now." said Draco quietly.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set, fourth sentence.

The Muggleborns in the Hall sent an angry look towards Draco.

"I agree with Mr. Malfoy, this school should only be kept in the family of purebloods." said Umbridge nastily. The whole school stared at her in shock. Even the Minister sat with his mouth agape at her. Dumbledore sent her a rare scowl.

"You remove the Muggleborns, the magic will be stripped from this place." said Harry calmly.

"You don't know what you are talking about Mr. Potter." simpered the toad like Professor.

Harry sighed and took his little notebook out quickly, flipping to a single page. "The magic that we use doesn't come from our magical heritage or our wands, but the spiritual core that all living things have. There are two cores in a living being, the spiritual core and the essence core. For some reason, Healers refer to this as a magical core, which is completely incorrect. It could mean both of them, but Healers only notice the spiritual core. A person is labeled a witch or wizard when their spiritual core is stronger than normal. A strong core can be passed down in the line of a family, but that doesn't always guarantee that a person will possess the necessary power to wield it.

"The essence core is the core that alerts us to different types of magic, and the power to absorb and contain spare power. This school is pure magic, and it gives off a strong pulse of magic. Purebloods, due to excessive inbreeding, have inadvertently narrowed the path that the magic flows through. The school would choke itself off, in other words, die. When the school dies, so does the magic that holds the school together. Paintings will cease to move, the staircases will freeze, ghosts will be forced to fade, wands and potions will be useless and the forest will die. With muggleborns and half-bloods, the school has a healthy supply of containers to receive and store their magic. The purebloods here have had their essence cores choked off so bad that they don't take any magic into themselves at all. Sad really." said Harry slowly closing his notebook.
The school stared at him and then turned slowly towards the Unspeakables that were present. They were staring at him as well.

"He's right, he's absolutely right. Boy ever thought of being an Unspeakable?"

Harry chuckled and shook his head, no.

End of dialogue set.

"What's it to you?" said a second year Gryffindor, recovering from the shock of Harry's release of information.

Sixty-first paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Sixty-second paragraph.

"That's your favorite." said Hermione. Hagrid looked surprised, then his face broke into a smile.

"I get it every chance I can." said Harry with a dreamy smile.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set, third sentence.

"You've never used that in class." said Hermione.

"I save it for this." he said holding up the little black book. Umbridge stared at it. She wanted that book.

End of dialogue set.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set.

"An' look at 'ermione!" said Hagrid happily. Hermione blushed and continued on.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set.
Tonks looked insulted. Hagrid looked unashamed. "I wasn' finished. I was gonna say 'but they're a good lot.'"

Tonks smiled in approval.

"Nothing wrong with that and we would have been glad to have you." said Madam Bones

"I know two off the bat that weren't in Slytherin, but you didn't know that at the time, Hagrid." said Harry kindly.

"He didn't 'almost drag' me," said Harry defensively "He had to pick me up, toss me over his shoulder and carry me away from the book." The school laughed at the mental image.

"WE'LL HELP!" yelled the students.

"And if you need to save your life, the Ministry will try to expel you." said Hermione viciously.

"I bought it two years later." said Harry with a slick smile.
Snape stirred guiltily in his chair, Potter was interested in Potions. Damn, sorry Lily.

Sixty-fifth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"You're so nice Hagrid." said Luna dreamily. Hagrid blushed.

Sixty-sixth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"You deserve it, what did he get you anyway?" said Lupin curiously.

"You'll find out soon." said Harry, stoking Hedwig’s feathers, who was now on a perch in front of the bowl.

Dialogue set, third sentence, first comma, fourth word.

"Sorry Neville." said Hagrid shamefully.

Neville just smiled. "It's okay."

Dialogue set, end of third sentence.

Hermione blushed, all the times she brought Crookshanks, “Sorry Hagrid, I didn't know Crookshanks made you sneeze."

"It's alright" Hagrid smiled down to her. “He don’t shed much.”

End of dialogue set.

Sixty-seventh paragraph.

"Aww! You’re so sweet Harry." said twins mockingly.

"What made you choose her?" asked Parvati. Hermione and Ron sat forward in their chairs. Hagrid would always tell them this story, it was their favorite.

Harry sat up a little bit and focused most of his weight on Sirius' side. "Well, we went inside to pick out an owl when a middle-aged man brushed us aside. Mostly me, Hagrid can't be brushed by anyone. Hagrid had to catch me from falling into a box of owl pellets beside the door."

People flinched.

"Well, he was carrying a birdcage, with the most beautiful bird I'd ever seen. She was hooting and fluttering angrily, she wasn't happy, and neither was the man. He said that she was acting up and he didn't want to deal with her. The man behind the counter sighed and took the owl and gestured towards the man to pick something else. The man wanted his money back, but the shopkeeper wouldn't give it to him. Big sign said behind him 'no returns, exchanges only'. The man threw a flipping fit, he whipped out his wand and things around the store started to explode. Owls were zooming around, trying to peck at anything they could. The shopkeeper tried to repair the damage as the man continued to rant and rave. There was a black cage, tucked away in the back and the man magicked that open. The shopkeeper screamed that, that particular owl was a something like an attack dog. If anything else in that room was living, it was going to be owl food. The man laughed and left the store, before the owl could reach him."

"Hagrid tried to drag me out of the store, but I was trying to get to the Snowy owl, that the man had returned, out of the store. Cause that black owl decided that she was easy pickings and tried to get to her through the wooden bars. I looked towards the man, but his hands were busy trying to get all the other owls back into their cages. So I picked up a broom and smacked the black owl away from the Snowy, right into the wall."

The school cheered, Harry had to wait to for them to finish.

"I picked up her cage and ran to Hagrid. I was afraid that the owl would get up, and start trying to peck her again. The man finally settled down his owls and stuffed them into their cages. The man came behind the counter and threw a wicker basket down on the owl. In order to keep the basket down on the owl, he had to sit on it. He looked up to us, and did his best to make his voice sound normal, didn't work. He asked what we needed, I looked at the owl in the cage, I said this owl. He paled a little bit, told me that, she might not be the best owl for me, she was stubborn and too proud to deliver much of anything. I told him I didn't care, I wanted her. He sighed, shook his head and rang her up, with a significant discount for trying to help and getting caught up in all that, and that's how I got her." Harry said fondly.

"So you saved her?" said Dennis quickly.

"In a way, we've saved each other." said Harry quietly. Hedwig nipped his finger affectionately and rubbed her head into his hand.
"As does everyone." said Professor Flitwick.

"Whose wand is that?" said Hermione interestingly.

"It was the first wand the Mr. Ollivander ever crafted." said Dumbledore.

Albus and Alastor looked at each other again, he could sense this? Dumbledore would have to ask Harry to take a sensing test.

"I must have gotten there after you left, Harry, because the chair was broken when we arrived." said Seamus.

"First wand?" asked Harry. Sirius looked down at him,

"Your mom had a bit of an accident in her third year. A Slytherin girl tried to get the best of her in a duel, your mom beat her hands down, but that little twit ran up to your mom and ripped the wand out of her hands and stamped on it."

"Sore loser." said Harry bemusedly.

"Yeah, Bellatrix always was a sore loser." said Lupin coldly.

"Bellatrix Lestrange?" said both Harry and Neville.

"Yeah, she was always jealous of your mom, your mom was prettier, more popular, better at potions, better duelist, everything. Always pissed her off." said Sirius fondly.

"When Sirius found out in our third year that Lily always managed to whip Bella in everything that had to deal with magic, he ran up to her and kissed her full on the lips."

"Bet she loved that." said Harry with a grin.
"Slapped me so hard that I flew backwards and landed on top of James." said Sirius rubbing his right cheek and chin. "I still can't smile right." The girls in the room started to giggle.

Seventy-second paragraph.

Dialogue set.

Seventy-third paragraph.

"That man likes to invade personal space doesn't he?" said Ron.

Dialogue line.

Seventy-fourth paragraph.

Dialogue set.

Seventy-fifth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"Sixteen inches? That is one big wand!" said Colin.

"Hagrid's bigger than other people, he would need a bigger wand than most people." said Hermione.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"He hates it when one of his wands gets snapped." said Dumbledore.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set, third sentence.

"What is the point of measuring you, when you just wave a wand or two?" said Draco.

"The measuring lets Ollivander narrow down the list of possible wand combinations. How it does is beyond my scope of knowledge. What do you think?" said Dumbledore and directing the question towards Harry.

People looked at him, what was his take on it?

"I'm not too sure, but I think he's measuring the aura and the pulsating of power from the spiritual core."

End of dialogue set.

Neville looked nervously down at his father's wand, he didn't want a new wand, but if this was why spells weren't working for him, then maybe he should give a new wand a chance.

Seventy-sixth paragraph, second comma.

"That made me rethink the whole core theory I had." said Harry with a smile.

End of seventy-sixth paragraph.

Dialogue set, sixth sentence.

"Oi! That's mine!" cheered Colin excitedly. He was thrilled that his hero had tried his wand.

End of dialogue set.

Seventy-seventh paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"That one is mine!" said Blaise with his eyebrows raised.

End of dialogue line.

Seventy-ninth paragraph, fourth sentence, first comma.

"How many wands did you try?" asked Bill

"Fifty-six." said Harry.

Dumbledore whistled, "That is a lot of wands, You must have been very difficult to find one to be compatible with your core."
Harry smiled and caressed his wand, in his cloak, and then the smile faded. Twin cores, shit! They're gonna find out. Don't know if that is good or not.

"Gryffindor colors!" hollered Dean.

"Phoenix colors." corrected Dumbledore. "The wand, when first wielded, will throw colors that symbolizes the core. Unicorn's are silver and white and Dragon's are red and green."

So did people in the Hall, Sirius and Remus looked between the two of them and then the teen that was stretched a crossed the both of them. Harry merely kept his eyes closed, ignoring them.

"Why was his wand so expensive?" asked Hermione. She and Ron only paid twelve Sickles for their wands.

"Mr. Ollivander sets the price by how rare the wood is, how long it took to make the wand and how difficult it was obtaining the core," said Dumbledore. He then leaned over to Harry, beckoning him forward. He whispered in Harry's ear. "It took Ollivander thirty years to convince Fawkes and I to give him a feather. He was amazed that Fawkes gave him two."

Harry laughed.
"One of the people from the Underground ran up behind me and ripped Hedwig's cage out of my arms. Yelling something about animal cruelty and some bird society. Then he flung the cage door open. Hedwig wasn't happy, she started pecking him and scratching him. It was real funny, actually." laughed Harry. “Surprised the hell out of him when she came and landed on my shoulder.”

People around the school laughed as well, they knew that you didn't come between her and Harry. Hedwig was very possessive of her owner.

"I can imagine." said Lupin.

"You are special, Harry, very special." said Lupin, rubbing Harry on the head.

"I know, I know, I fergot ter tell him how to get on the train. Train he was on was leavin'"

"Aww, Harry, you're so cute!" squealed Katie.

Then a bright flash of light came from the book in Hermione's hands. A scroll appeared, once again from the book.

"What the hell is that?" said Harry, he was staring at the scroll.
"It's a Recollection Scroll, Harry. This is how we knew about that time you landed in the hospital. I hope to God that this one is a good one." said Sirius.

The hall was smothered in a blanket of light.

"This didn't happen last time!" yelled Fred. The whole room whited out.
The light had deposited them in the middle of a locker room, and the girls quickly covered their eyes, for this was a boys locker room. They however needn’t had worried, for all the boys were clothed from at least the waist down. There were about thirty boys, ages varying from seven to thirteen changing into what looked like track outfits, but there were several different colors that the boys were dressing in. They looked around and saw a small black haired boy tying his laces on a bench. He had giant round glasses now, but they could tell that less than a year had passed since the last event the scroll had showed them. Harry leaned on his cane and walked over to the small boy and stared.

"This is so weird." he whispered.

"You're telling us." said Ron.

"What time is this supposed to be, Harry?" asked Dennis looking a little nervous. "Is this a bad memory, like last time?"

"Actually, this is the first track meet I had. I'm seven years old here, and no, this is a good one. Very good one actually." said Harry looking around quickly.

"How do you know how old you are here?" asked Zacharias, not believing that Harry could be as smart as he demonstrated to be.

"I'm seeing people that haven't taken part in this thing since I was seven. They were just turning thirteen, and once you hit that age, you get disqualified for these. You need to sign up for the Senior races and an easier way I know what age I am, is by the colors." said Harry.

"What colors?" asked Neville.

"The colors of the track shirts we all are wearing. Every age group has a different color. If your seven, see me, I'm in blue. Eight you wear green, nine you wear red, ten you wear yellow, eleven you wear white, twelve you wear orange and thirteen you wear black." he said pointing to a different boy in turn.
Without a warning, a man wearing a whistle came in with a lady with a clipboard and several people who went passed the two official looking people and went to go stand by what appeared to be their children.

"You'd think they would knock." said Charlie warily.

"We had twenty minutes to change." said Harry.

"Alright boys, we're all set for you, now I want you to remember. Do your best, you're all winners here and make your parents proud." Now I want to do a quick roll, just to make sure you are all still here. Let’s start with the youngest age group." he said nodding to the lady with the clipboard.

"Blue group! Seven year olds: Addelton! Cummings! Kingster! Narwins! Potter!"

Young Harry raised his hand and The Watchers cheered so loudly that the last three names were drowned out. Harry looked at them with one eyebrow raised.

"You know I can't hear you right?" he said trying not to laugh.

"We're cheering now. Makes us feel better. You should have seen us the last memory, worst experience of my life. Deal with us getting excited, you said it was a good memory." said Sirius, looking quite excited. Harry just smiled at them, but the cheering stopped for they noticed something odd. Everyone else in the room was surrounded by their mother or father or both. Harry was alone.

"Didn't anyone come to cheer for you?" asked Hermione nervously.

"Yeah, three people did." said Harry happily.

"Nope, not the Durselys." said Harry with a large smile.

"Alright boys. This is your first race here, do your best like I said. Don't be intimidated by the older guys, they've been through this before. Alright, you guys can go on out." said the Man with the whistle.

Younger Harry left with the rest of the boys, but fell to the back of the line. The Watcher's followed him down the hall out into the large track field. People were still filling the stands, but three people were walking towards the younger version of Harry.

"Hey, kid!" yelled an older man, his wife on his arm. Both Harrys looked over to the man, the younger Harry beamed, and the older one paled but had a small smile.

"Officer McFinn!" shouted younger Harry and whispered older Harry. The Watchers turned to look where both Harry's were looking. There stood the officer from the last Recollection Scroll, a woman they never saw before, and the Emergency Room doctor. The younger Harry rushed to the man and his wife. The officer patted his head kindly and his wife hugged him tightly.

"You remember Dr. Clark don't you? I told him that I got you set up for this and he wanted to see you run as well." he said gesturing towards the same doctor from the last Recollection Scroll.

"Hello Dr. Clark!" said Harry brightly. Dr. Clark patted Harry on the head.

"How are you feeling today, Harry?" asked the doctor.
"Fine sir, just fine!" said Harry happily.

"You all set to win all the races, Sport?" said the officer with a grin.

"Now Jim, they're supposed to do their best, winning isn't everything." scolded his wife gently.

"I know, I know, but I've got a feeling this boy's spirit is going to whip them all." he said winking down at the small boy.

"James," said Dr. Clark "You do realize that he hasn't been out of physical therapy for longer than three weeks? I can't even believe you signed him up for this."

"He needs the fresh air, besides you've been practicin' running, haven't you lad?"

"Yes, sir! Every day, Officer McFinn was timing me!" said the younger Harry happily.

"Did say James ?" said Sirius.

Harry nodded, "That was Officer McFinn's first name." Sirius looked intently at Officer McFinn and a small smile was placed on his lips.

"He really cares about you." said Ginny softly to the present Harry. She took a light hold of his hand.

"All three of them did, I did everything I could to make them proud." said Harry quietly.

"What happened to Dr. Clark?" asked Percy. "Do you still keep in touch with him?"

"No, he's gone as well." said Harry almost silently, tears forming in his eyes. "He was sent to be a military doctor, somewhere, he never came back."

"But he could come back!" said Lavender trying to keep optimistic.

"He was reported 'Missing in action.' Chances of him coming back are slim to almost none. I've never given up, but my hope is slipping." said Harry sadly. Dumbledore and Moody saw a few tears fall from his eyes as he looked down.

Dumbledore whispered to Moody, "Let's see what two old wizards can do." Moody nodded.

Ginny took and placed an arm around Harry's middle and gave him a supportive hug.

"ATTENTION, WILL THE PARTICIPANTS GATHER ON THE STARTING LINE FOR THE WARM UP RUN?" called the loudspeaker over the crowds.

"HOLY CATS! WHAT THE BLOODY HELL WAS THAT?" asked Draco in shock.

"A muggle version of the Sonorous charm." said Hermione with a smile.

"Well, you'd best run off and get warmed up Harry. Don't use your speed here, now, save it for the races." said Dr. Clark excitedly.

Younger Harry nodded and hurried off. Some of The Watchers made to follow him but stopped short when they heard Officer McFinn's wife speak.

"I wish we could raise him. Oh Jim, isn't there anything we could do?" she implored to her husband. He scratched his gray haired head.
"Trust me, Holly, Sam and I have tried everything to save that poor little guy from those monsters. That dumb ass of a judge thinks that the monsters were innocent of the abuse. That's what we get for appointing a judge that's still wet behind the ears. The District Attorney told me to leave it be."

"Why would he do that?" said Mrs. McFinn in shock.

"Dursley threatened to sue the police department for harassment. They wanted me to keep away from Harry as well, said I was inappropriate with him."

"Where do they live? I'll shoot them myself." hissed Mrs. McFinn. Older Harry took a step back in shock, with a faint smile on his face.

"Never heard her talk like that before." he whispered, almost laughing.

"I proved to child-services that I wasn't, took a lie detector test and had them watch on a day of their choice. They approved my spending time with him. They're labeling it as something called "Sons Without Fathers" program or something. Only difference is that I can sign him up for stuff that the Dursley's won't. I just have to have him home by six every night."

"He's seven years old, I would think that he could stay out till seven or eight at least." said Sam Clark.

"Harry's the cook at that house, they need him home in time to cook dinner, and I don't get him until his chores are done. A regular little 'Cinderella' life he leads."

"Too bad there isn't a royal ball anytime soon." said Mrs. McFinn sadly.

"Royal Ball?" asked Ron.

"Hermione and I will tell you the story later." said Harry quickly to Ron, stopping Hermione.

All of The Watchers walked alongside the McFinns and Dr. Clark and stood beside the sidelines. younger Harry was running around the large running track, he was the only blue-shirted runner towards the front of the line. The blue, green and red runners were all in the back of the group and trying hard to keep up.

When the warm up lap was over, younger Harry walked over to The Watchers and the McFinns.

"Here's some water dear." said Mrs. McFinn handing him a large bottle of water from the ice cooler she had brought.

"Thanks Mrs. McFinn!"

"I thought I told you not to pour on your speed too early." said Dr. Clark with a raised eyebrow.

"I didn't." said Harry simply.

Dr. Clark looked skeptical. "What races are you doing?" he asked, changing the subject.

"Well, I'm in all three sprints, the hundred, the two-hundred and the four-hundred meters. Then I am doing the three kilometer long distance." said Harry ticking the different races off his fingers.

"THREE KILOMETER? You are going to do the three kilometer?" said Dr. Clark with his jaw hanging. A few Watchers said the same thing and had the same appearance.

"Yes sir." said Harry nervously.
Dr. Clark stared at him, then he looked at Officer McFinn.

"Did you give an okay on that?" he whispered to him dangerously.

"He wanted to do it, I wasn't all that keen on the idea myself. But, he showed some persistence, asking me if he could do it every single time I came to pick him up."

The Doctor sighted. "Too late to back out now isn't it? Fine, but you pull out the moment you feel you can't take it anymore you got me?"

"Yes sir, I will." said Harry eagerly.

"WILL THE BLUE SQUAD PLEASE REPORT TO THE STARTING LINE FOR THE HUNDRED METER RACE?"

"Judging by your shirt Sport, that's you. Do your best lad!" said Officer McFinn giving Harry a pat on the back.

"Yes sir!" he said happily and ran off, waving to the three of them.

"Blue squad?" asked Lupin.

"The races are ran in the age groups, then the winners are then taken and placed in a the finals."

"This is an all-day event, isn't it?" asked Fred.

"It's eight thirty four right now." said Harry looking up at the sky.

"That is crazy how you do that, you know?" said Neville blinking up at the sun.

They watched as younger Harry positioned himself on the starting blocks with the other children lined up beside him. They all looked heavier than he did by at least twenty pounds. But Sirius wasn't looking at the size of his godson compared to the other children. He was looking at Harry's eyes. He saw a spark there that he had never seen before. The same look he had seen in a horse when it was about to run.

The starting gun went off and the boys went sprinting down the track. At first the children were neck and neck, but like a bullet shot out of a gun, Harry came right up to the front and led the way by at least a meter. The Watchers and the McFinns were jumping up and down excitedly. They all were screaming "GO HARRY! YOU CAN DO IT, GO! " and the McFinns and Dr. Clark were shouting "ATTA BOY! WAY TA GO!" They watched as Harry crossed the finish line, a good three seconds ahead of the rest of them.

The older Harry was standing beside them silently, he was smiling. Here was a memory he would have to try on a Patronus, just to see how strong it could be.

The scene shifted forward and they were standing beside the McFinns once again. This time, there were seven different kids in different colored shirts lining up on the starting line. Harry, in blue, was easiest the skinniest and smallest person amongst them, but when they looked at the time board, he had the fastest time.

"What is that thing up there with your name on it?" asked Neville.

"It tells people how fast they ran." said Harry quickly.

The gun went off and The Watchers all shouted in excitement as Harry took off like a shot. He was neck 'n neck with a black dressed boy, whose legs were almost as long as younger Harry's entire body. But Harry put a bit more speed on and was a few feet ahead of him when they crossed the finish line.

Sirius and Remus were jumping up and down and so were the Weasely children. The others were applauding as well but not nearly as loud. The only ones not joining in the excitement was Umbridge and Fudge. However, Fudge was trying very hard not to cheer on the small boy. Officer McFinn kissed his wife tightly and Dr. Clark clicked the heels of his own running shoes. Officer McFinn ran up to Harry as he was being congratulated by the rest of the blue squad and the other runners, picked him up and threw him into the air, then catching him as he came down.

"YOU DID IT SPORT! I KNEW YOU COULD!" he shouted placing him on his shoulder. Harry laughed and hugged the officer's head. Older Harry smiled, and he gripped his cane tightly. Oh, how he wished he could run again. This whole feeling, like he was being cursed with the Cruciatius curse every single time he moved, was getting to be too much to endure.

The same thing happened with every single sprint that he took part in, he was the best in his heat, and when it came time to do the finals, he would be fighting for the first place win against an older runner. But he always came out on top, one time, however it was a tie. They had to re-race quickly and Harry beat the twelve year old by half a second.

Sweat was pouring off younger Harry's face so much that Dr. Clark had to rush to the local store and buy him a towel. When the fifteen-hundred meter run was going on, which was designated thirteen year olds only, the McFinns and Dr. Clark wiped all the sweat off the boy's face and handed him cold bottles of water. Younger Harry took this time to rest for the two-mile race, Mrs. McFinn came back with a picnic basket and she handed him a sandwich and more water.

"How are you feeling now, Harry?" asked Dr. Clark, taking a big bite out of a turkey and Swiss sandwich.

"Still great, sir! I can't wait till the next race." said Harry eating his peanut butter and jelly sandwich, a bit of jelly was on his cheek. Mrs. McFinn dabbed the jelly away from his cheek gently.

"Now take your time with that one, Sport. You have a long time to race in that one. Don't push yourself to start with, take it slow. Wait till you are almost done to 'book it.' We'll keep track of the laps for you. When you run past, we'll tell you how many you have left to do. 'kay?" said Officer McFinn. Harry nodded.

"And remember, what I said, if you feel like you can't continue, just drop out. You've done really great today. Forget great, you've done brilliantly! I don't remember anyone under ten years old winning a complete sprint, let alone ALL of them." said Dr. Clark with broad smile.

The scene shifted once more, Harry was running with a group of larger boys. He looked a little tired again but he was still going strong. When he went past The Watcher's, who were about to start cheering when Officer McFinn and Dr. Clark bellowed out.

"LAST LAP HARRY!"

It was as if he had kicked on some internal after burners or something, because once those words left their lips, Harry began to sprint. He was fourth in line, but he began to overtake the other runners. When he flew past each one, they stared in shock and couldn't help but slow their own pace. He met up with the leader and slowly passed him just as he went turned the finally corner. The Watchers, Dr. Clark and the McFinns all jumped up and down, cheering for him. As Harry ran acrossed the finish line, Dr. Clark was the first to reach him and pull him into a great hug.

"THAT WAS AMAZING! YOU DID IT! YOU DID IT!"

"Hey, Doctor?" gasped Harry.

"What is it?" said Dr. Clark, holding arm’s length.

"Now, I'm tired." panted Harry with a smile, Dr. Clark laughed. Officer McFinn picked him up and hugged him tightly. Mrs. McFinn kissed Harry on the cheek.

The Watchers were cheering, dancing in the people around them and challenging Harry to a race when he was all better. The light that had brought them there, began to form again. Most of the students groaned, they wanted to see more. As the white light enveloped them. They all could hear a whisper, clear as day. It was Officer McFinn.

"I'm so proud of you Harry."

Chapter End Notes

I thought I would end this on a touching ending, at least I hope you found it touching. Reviews are always welcomed! Love getting notices of reviews in an email. Makes my day.
Chapter Summary

The Watchers finally get to see how Harry, Ron and Hermione met and their instant friendship...right?

Chapter Notes

I don't own Harry Potter.

The light faded and they were back in the Great Hall. The sun was beginning to set softly into the West and the people in the Hall were wiping away tears. Each one of them had heard Officer McFinns words and they looked to Harry, who was standing beside Ginny. He had a small smile on his face, and his eyes looked watery. His hand was gripping his cane tightly and he was chewing his bottom lip slightly.

Mrs. Weasely came over to him and brought him into a tight hug. Only Umbridge looked indifferent.

Harry forgot that he was somewhat angry at her, for her earlier remark from the book's last chapter. He buried his head into her shoulder. Sirius came over to him and enveloped him into a hug as well.

"I miss him, I miss him so much." said Harry quietly. Mrs. Weasely pulled him away and wiped the tears off his face.

"I know dear, We all know. He was a good man, though we only saw him twice, he was a very good man. He loved you very much. I need to say something to you, dear. I'm so sorry Harry, for what I said earlier, it was completely out of line." said Mrs. Weasely, handing him a tissue.

"It's okay, I was just being defensive. I didn't expect you to say that." he said after he blew his nose loudly.

"I never should have said that. Now let’s sit you down," she said as she helped Sirius lay him down in the bowl and this time, Lupin supported his head. "and get some food into you."
The tables of food once again reappeared and she hurried off to get Harry a plate. Sirius lifted his feet and placed them on his lap. Harry still had tears falling down his face and Lupin took out his own handkerchief and dried his eyes.

"I'm acting like a baby." Harry whispered between wipes of the handkerchief.

"No, you're just remembering how much he meant to you. There is no shame in it. Sirius and I still have breakdowns over your parents. But we make it better now by trying our best to take care of you. Do you have a way that eases the pain?"

Harry thought carefully "I guess that would be my cooking, I always feel better when I'm in the kitchen," he said quietly.

"There you go, anytime you want to cook, I'm pretty sure Dumbledore will let you, and so will we when you come to live with us." said Lupin gently ruffling his head.

Mrs. Weasely brought over a plate of food and handed it to Harry. He didn't feel up to eating at the moment, he couldn't get The McFinns and Dr. Clark out of his mind. He missed Officer McFinn and he really wanted to find Dr. Clark, But he had tried, he tried very hard, he even enlisted the help of some very powerful people in the Muggle world to help him. Not even the most powerful person in the country could help him. Not that she didn't try, much like Harry's personal endeavors, she did all she could too, but to no avail.

He heaved a sigh and took a look at the food, he sneaked a look over to Lupin and Sirius and saw that neither of them were eating, they were looking at him.

"Aren't either of you hungry?" he said thickly. His throat was hoarse from crying.

"We won't start eating till you do." said Lupin firmly.

"I'm not hungry, actually." said Harry, his brain was acting fuzzy again. He couldn't think straight like he would normally do. Madame Pomfrey had told him that he would have a problem thinking clearly sometimes, due to either the fever he had experienced, or some sort of curse he was put under during the incident.
Lupin motioned over the Snape, he begrudgingly strode across the room.

"What?" he asked with bored voice.

"Do you have a nutritional potion on you?"

"I do, why?" asked Snape with a plain look on his face.

"Could Harry have some? He's not feeling well enough to eat, and I don't want to force food down his stomach if he may throw it back up again." pleaded Lupin.

Snape thought about it for about half a second and took a small vial out of his cloak.

"Here Potter, drink it all." he said handing it straight to Harry.

Harry looked up to him, and Snape saw what appeared to be, pain. Not a physical pain, but a soulful pain. Any and all dislike he had for the boy temporarily disappeared. Harry took the vial and whispered 'thanks' and drank the potion down in one gulp.

Meanwhile, Dumbledore and Moody were in the small room off the Great Hall.

"What do you think about our chances of finding Dr. Clark, Alastor?" said Dumbledore seriously.

"Well, I still have some friends in the Rangers. They can hunt down anybody, Magical, or Muggle. They have to, being the frontlines of crime prevention, they have to be able to track people and discover their whereabouts. I can send an owl out to them right now and get them here. They would need an accurate description, if we have to, we can ask Potter for a memory of him. Without the help of the Rangers, our chances of finding the man is about ten percent. With their help, I would say, that the chances fly up to ninety-eight percent."

"I didn't know that you had friends in that secret society! How did that happen?" said Dumbledore in a pleased shock.
"Saved the life of one of English Captain’s lieutenants. He rewarded me with this eye, let me tell you, getting used to it was really trying."

"I've always wondered where you got that." said Dumbledore looking pleased.

"Yeah, they're further up on the 'Magical Knowledge' rung of the ladder then even you Albus. I'll send an owl off and get 'em here."

"Thank you Alastor, it would mean the world to Harry." said Dumbledore with a smile.

"That kid deserves a break. More than anyone." said Moody gruffly.

When Dumbledore returned to the Great Hall, he saw that Harry was taking a potion and gulping it down. He hurried over to Harry and asked.

"Harry, what is wrong?" said Dumbledore worriedly.

"He's not in the mood to eat, we asked Severus if he had a nutritional potion, and he gave Harry one." said Remus.

Dumbledore looked carefully at Harry. "Are you alright, Harry."

Harry looked down gave no reply, but Dumbledore was not to be deterred. “You miss Officer McFinn, don't you?"

Harry gulped down a few tears and nodded.

"And Dr. Clark?" added Dumbledore softly. Again Harry nodded.

"Harry, we will find him. The non-magical world may have not been able to locate him, but we will. I promise, we won't stop till we get you an answer. Alright?" said Dumbledore seriously, but with a kind tone.
Harry, looked at Dumbledore, with a mixture of hopelessness and grief, he flung his arms around his neck.

Dumbledore was stunned for a moment, but as soon as he felt the hot tears fall on his shoulder, he returned the hug.

He patted Harry on the back and soothingly said to the distraught boy, "It’s alright Harry, it'll be alright. Just let us take care of it now, we'll pick up where you left off. Moody is sending an owl to start the proverbial ball rolling."

"Can we get on with the book now?" said Umbridge in an irritated tone. "Were not getting any younger."

"That is evident just by looking at you." snarled Sirius.

"Do you feel up to continuing Harry?" said Dumbledore kindly.

"I don't see why it should be up to him!" said Umbridge, she was still glaring at Sirius.

"Harry must be present at all times, the books will immediately seal themselves if he isn't present." said one of the Unspeakables. Umbridge paled. There goes my plan. she growled to herself.

"Who would like to read now?" said McGonagall. Hermione looked at the next chapter and smiled.

"I nominate Ron." she said, grinning.

"I don't wanna read." he said quickly.

"Read the chapter title." she urged him.
He looked at it quickly and a smile came to him.

"Alright then, I'll read."

He cleared his throat dramatically and said aloud

Sixth Chapter title.

"Alright! Finally, we're getting to Hogwarts!" yelled Sirius.

One of the Unspeakables looked confused, he looked at the book with wonder in his eyes but said nothing.

First paragraph, first sentence.

"It never is." said Fred.

"And if it was." said George.

"It wouldn't be summer." they both finished.

First paragraph, second sentence, first comma.

The school cheered, Dudley would never bully Harry again. When one of the students voiced this, Harry only smiled sadly.

"You'd think that." that caused everyone to cease cheering.

First paragraph, second sentence, second comma.

"Well that's a bonus." said Dennis.

First paragraph, second sentence, third comma, fourth word.

"Well, at least it sounds like they didn't hurt you any further." said Lupin rubbing Harry's arm.

First paragraph, end of second sentence.

"Even better!" shouted a Slytherin.
"They should be!" yelled a Ravenclaw.

"Aside from getting caught trying to stash you away from this place. Why did they not want you to leave their house? It sounds like they would love to be rid of you!" asked Draco.

"They wanted to keep their butler, chef, gardener and housekeeper." said Ginny with a scowl towards the book.

"Nothing new." said Lee with a grim look. He was an only child and if he wasn't at the table for meals and making his parents laugh at his antics, they would think he wasn't well. He could hardly imagine his parent's ignoring him. It wasn't natural.

The students turned to gape at Harry, but he was currently being comforted by the two men in the bowl with him and Madame Pomfrey. Harry tried to sit up, for reasons unbeknownst even to him, but a pain shot straight through him and he collapsed almost panting in pain.

"You actually read the book, Harry?" asked Hermione with great surprise. Thankfully, due to Madame Pomfrey's timely and many potions. He was feeling better.

"Yeah, I read it a few times." he said.

"Oh Harry! HOW COULD YOU?" lamented the twins dramatically. The school laughed, even Harry chuckled a bit, which brightened the twins up quite a lot.

"Ewww." said the girls in the room, but Hedwig, who had just returned, hooted indignantly.
"I did that too!" said almost every single Muggleborn in the school as well as some Half-bloods and Purebloods.

Third paragraph, first sentence, first comma.

"Potter! Why did you wait until the very last day to ask them." said Snape sharply.

Harry rubbed his forehead, his mind was slowly getting back to normal. "I learned that asking them right away, and having the important day so far away, they could deny that I ever ask them. By asking them the day before, they can't say I never asked."

Snape looked down, that does sound like something Petunia would come up with for an excuse not to do something.

Third paragraph, end of first sentence.

"Quiz show?" asked a Slytherin. "I hate tests, why would you watch a show about quizzes?"

"It’s a show where people go and stand in front of a lot of people and answer a bunch of questions, you may or may not know the answer to. The more questions you answer right, the more money you get." said Harry.

"Wow? That sounds really easy!" said a few Purebloods.

Harry looked at them, sighed and asked them, “Yellow, brown, clear, blue, green, black, pink and red is the order of rarity of this valuable object."

The students looked at him in curiosity. The Muggleborns blinked then gasped and looked down, deep in thought.

"What nonsense are you rambling off Mr. Potter?" asked Umbridge with a puzzled look upon her face.

"One American quiz show, which has some following over here, gives you the answer; you have to give the question." He then looked over to the Purebloods who had said it was easy. "You have the question yet?" They shook their heads; he then looked over to the Muggleborns. Bill had his eyes closed, and then he had a smile upon his face.

"I've got it." said Bill "How do you answer the answer?" he said with a smirk.

"If the answer was a person you would say 'Who is..' an object would be 'What is' and so forth."

"Alright then, what is a diamond?" said Bill still smirking.

"You got it." he reached into his pocket and took out seven galleons and tossed them over to Bill. He caught them and stared at Harry. "You got the answer right." he said simply.

“So why did you give me money?” asked Bill.

“When you get an answer right, you get money, you get an answer wrong, some shows take away the money you've earned.” said Harry.
“I'm going to need to look into those games.” said Ron.

End of third paragraph.

"That is awesome!" said the students. "Serves you right, you great lump!"

Dialogue line.

Fourth paragraph.

"I'm amazed you know how to speak intelligently, Potter. Especially if for the most part you had to endure these people." said Professor Flitwick kindly, but then his tone turned to a stern one.

Dialogue line.

Fifth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Sixth paragraph.

“Guess that means that Harry can speak troll.” snickered Fred.

Dialogue line.

"And I'm impressed that you knew manners." said Flitwick with amazement.

"You're so polite, Harry." cooed Bathilda Bagshot. "You are just as polite and sweet as when you were a baby."

Several people sniggered as Harry blushed.

Seventh paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"I keep forgetting he's a bloody idiot."

"CHARLIE!" said Mrs. Weasely.

Eighth paragraph.

Dialogue line.
"Scotland." said several students.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Ninth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"Your Aunt Petunia is indeed a good faker Mr. Potter, she knew all about her sister going to Hogwarts and even went with her to that platform." said McGonagall bitterly.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

"Saner then you, Mr. Driving-Across-The-Country-To-Avoid-The-Bloody-Post."

"Molly, you just told off Charlie for saying what he did." said Mr. Weasely, smiling and shaking his head.

End of dialogue set.

Dialogue line.

"You really don't need to do that Harry," said Lupin with a frown on his face. "they don't try to make things friendly with you."

Dialogue line.

"Good thing I wasn't that Doctor." said Hermione nastily.

"Why is that? We would have loved it, would've been great fun." said Fred and George.

"In order to see the tail clearly, he would've had to remove his trousers." said Hermione
George and Fred, plus several others, started to gag.

Tenth paragraph, first sentence.

"Explains what happened to you on the train." said Ron looking up from the book.
"What happened to you on the train?" asked Lupin quickly.

"It'll most likely come up. If not I'll tell you." said Ron with a secretive smile.

Tenth paragraph, second sentence.

"Wise move, Potter." said Moody as he entered the Great Hall, he was just in time to catch the last sentence. He bent over to whisper in Dumbledore's ear.

"They're sending someone now."

Dumbledore smiled.

Tenth paragraph, third sentence.

"That is some patience, you've got Harry." said Sirius.

"Too bad he doesn't have that anymore." smirked Dean.

"I use it when I really need it." said Harry absently.

People looked over to him, wondering what he meant by that.

End of tenth paragraph.

"'Talked' nothing, I made three batches of triple chocolate chip cookies, that morning once they all woke up. She gave him two of those three batches for him to eat on the way to London." said Harry.

"Did you at least get one cookie?" asked Mrs. Weasely.

"No, but I did have a spoonful of cookie dough." said Harry with a smile.

"Best part of baking cookies." said Ginny smiling.

"Did you say 'triple chocolate chip'?" said Lupin his voice sounded excited.

Harry and Sirius laughed.

"I'll bake you some tomorrow if you wish." said Harry laughing hard.

"Please?" pleaded Lupin.

"Us too!" shouted a majority of the students.

Eleventh paragraph.

"This won't end well, will it?" said Sirius worriedly.
"It's there, it's just protected from Muggles finding it on accident." said Hermione.

Madame Pomfrey and Professor McGonagall voices rang superior over Mrs. Weaselys voice.

"HE COULD'VE BEEN KIDNAPPED! ANYTHING COULD HAVE HAPPENED!"

"Yeah, Harry...” said Fred.

“Be stupid on accident like the rest of us!” said George.

Snape snorted.

"You never panic, Harry." said Ron with a smile.

"I couldn't see the outside very well to tell the time on my own." said Harry.

"How foolish Mr. Potter." sneered Umbridge.

"He had no other recourse to act upon." said Snape quickly. He was going to say what she had said. But the moment she had said it, he wanted nothing to do with that thought.
"da-da-da-DA! The Weasely Calvary has arrived!"

Sixteenth paragraph, second sentence, first comma.

"I..am..so...sorry.." said Harry to Mrs. Weasely. She, however just smiled at him. Mr. Weasely whispered something into his wife's ear that made her giggle and blush.

“Oh Arthur.” she giggled and shoved her husband lightly.

End of sixteenth paragraph.

Seventeenth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"Molly! You had five boys before this even happened! How come you still ask what platform?" asked Tonks exasperated.

"This was the first time I brought Ginny with me. Other times she would stay home with Arthur and keep him company, and make sure he didn't blow up the house." she said teasingly.

"It's kinda a tradition with our family," said Charlie.

"You get to go to King's Cross the year before you are accepted at Hogwarts, that way, you are real excited for a whole year." said Fred and George.

"All Weasely's have done it that way." said Arthur.

"Oh...sorry.." said Tonks sheepishly.

Dialogue line.

"If anyone 'aww's' or 'ohh's' I'm going to beat them to a pulp." threatened Ginny.

“Ginny! Miss Weasley!” said Mrs. Weasly and Professor McGonagall together.

"Thank God we broke up." said Michael Corner quietly. Harry managed to catch what Michael had to say. Ginny also heard it but was unperturbed.

They broke up? thought Harry quickly, did he dare to cross that line? He would have to think about it, and decide fast.

Dialogue line.

Eigteenth paragraph.

Dialogue line.
"They love that joke." said their mother with smile. "It drives me nuts, but they love that joke."

End of dialogue set.

Twenty-first paragraph.

"Do I really look like that?" said Ron looking up from the book.

"You did when I was eleven, you don't look like that anymore." said Harry kindly.

“Yeah, you're taller, ganglier and you're growing into your nose and hands.” said Fred and George.

Twenty-second paragraph.

"And when it's solid, boy is it ever." muttered Harry and Ron.

People looked at them in confusion, when was the Platform ever solid?

Twenty-third paragraph.

Twenty-fourth paragraph.

Twenty-fifth paragraph.

The students all cheered at this, but were temporarily silenced by pink sparks coming from Madame Umbridge's wand.

"Of course he made it! He's sitting there! Unfortunately." spat Umbridge. The last part she said out loud on accident, but didn't make it seem like it just slipped out.

"Apologize Delores," said Madame Bones. Her wand out. Lupin and Sirius's wands were also out and pointing at her.

"No, I don't apologize to children. Children should apologize to their elders. I demand an apology from Mr. Potter."

"He doesn't have anything to apologize for! What the heck are you talking about?" shouted Bill.

Fudge was looking over to Umbridge with a raised brow. What _was_ she talking about?

"Because of him, I have been insulted and ridiculed. I demand an apology."

"Oh shut up, stupid woman!" shouted Madame Bones. "Continue Mr. Weasely, ignore her."

Ron nodded and continued.

Twenty-sixth paragraph.

Twenty-seventh paragraph.

Dialogue line.

People cheered when Neville, good-naturedly, took a bow.

Twenty-eighth paragraph.

Lee then stood up and took a bow. They all knew it was him, no one else in the school had dreadlocks.

Dialogue line.

Lee stood up and took another bow.

Twenty-ninth paragraph.

Ron paled quickly, but recovered.

Thirtieth paragraph.

"Ooow!" moaned the students and absent-mindedly massaging their feet.

Dialogue line.
"You mean to tell me, you two actually helped someone? Without pranking them afterword?" said Ginny with a mocked look of surprise.

"Oi! We aren't hooligans! Okay, maybe we are, but we aren't all that bad!" said Fred and George indignantly. Some people snorted.

"I had no upper body strength at all, at that point." Harry said with a smirk. Sirius and Lupin smiled, he was at least feeling a little better. But then, they froze. Did he say 'at that point?' Mrs. Weasely, realizing that he was feeling a bit better, brought over a tray of food and laid it on his lap. He picked out a roll and munched on it.

"From all the attention I was getting and some of the children's books I read in Flourish and Blotts, I was supposed to be some great warrior or something. A veritable superhero. I, in my opinion, hardly fitted the description. Still don't really. And I still couldn't believe that I was the reason that Voldemort, oh will you people get over it, that he was defeated. I learned later that I was right, it wasn't me that defeated him, but my mother. I just happened to survive by chance. If my mother wasn't there, I would have been dead, just like everyone else who fell before his wand." said Harry matter-of-factly.

Lupin almost choked on his grape. He hadn't thought about that, and now, when he was forced to, he couldn't bear it. He gripped Harry's hand tightly. Everyone else looked somber, it took Ron a moment to gather himself up and proceed with the reading.
"You stalking us, Harry?" said Fred with an evil smirk.

"You reminded me of the McFinns, though they didn't have children, something about you reminded me of them." he said with a small smile. The Weaselys looked saddened but they smiled.

"Aww, Mum, don't do that in front of people!" said Bill shaking his head.

Mrs. Weasely looked over at Ron, with an apologetic look on her face.

Ron merely shrugged.

"We vow never to say 'ickle anykins' again." said George.

"Cause 'Horseface' said it." said Fred.
“Wow, you do sound like a prat.” said Sirius simply.

Percy began to turn red.

"Molly! Don't give them any ideas!” admonished McGonagall.

"Don't say that! She's our best source of inspiration!” said the twins. The school erupted in a wave of laughter.

"Aww! Come on Ron! Come up with a different name! We don't want to remember that we and Horsie think the same!” cringed the twins.

"You shut up.” returned the twins with wide smiles.

"I get the feeling that my nose is going to be a focal point of this chapter.” said Ron bitterly.

"That specky little shrimp we saw before we came on Platform Nine and Three-Quarters!” said the twins.
Someone was about to 'ooh' and 'aww' but a glare and a balled up fist reminded them of her threat.

"You've always been so polite, Harry." said Mrs. Weasley kindly.

"You two have a death wish." said Bill staring at the twins while Charlie whistled.

"He said it." said the twins pointing to each other.

"I'm warning all of you..." Ginny growled.

“And I'm warning you.” said Mrs. Weasley said to her daughter.
"Awww!"

"ALRIGHT! WHO SAID IT?" shouted Ginny standing up.

Harry smiled and slowly stood up. "I did."

Ginny came over, and reared her fist back.

"Just like you, I keep my word." she then threw her fist forward. The teachers and Sirius and Remus moved quickly to try and stop her.

Harry smacked it swiftly away from its intended course, flipped his cane and shifted her leg. She fell backwards and Harry caught her in his right arm. She looked shocked but Harry simply smiled.

"Next time, be sure to connect." he said slyly. Ginny blushed, smiled and then nodded. Before he helped her stand again he pulled her close. "You and I both need to watch our tempers, I think." he whispered. She blurred even deeper.

As he watched her walk back to her chair he thought bitterly. Why didn't I kiss her just now? What am I waiting for?

"Ginny was thinking along the same lines.

"I'm starting to think you have separate personalities." said Sirius looking at him with widened eyes.

"I'm starting to think so too, there are times that I act like I don't have a clue what is going on, and then I have my normal frame of mind back and going strong. I think that the incident is behind of my 'stripping my mind's gears' so to speak."

Ron stared at the both his sister (who was being chastised by her mother) and Harry, shook his head vigorously and continued on.

"Hell would have been better." muttered Harry darkly.

"Everywhere else wasn't, Ron, and you know it." said Hermione smiling.

"I didn't care if they were full or not. I was feeling a bit lonely." said Harry.

Ron grinned.
"Didn't work." said Harry brightly.

End of forty-fifth paragraph.

"What is with you an observing things." said Ron in an irritated voice.

Dialogue line.

Forty-sixth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"I wanted to tell you lot, to keep it down there and maybe have you shove it off the train." said Ron looking a bit pale.

Dialogue line.

"Short, sweet and to the point." smirked Harry.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Forty-seventh paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"No, he don't know Weasely." said Draco with a snide smile.

Forty-eighth paragraph.

Forty-ninth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"Can't remember much of this either." said Harry bitterly, reaching behind himself. He then looked up at from where he laid, "Dumbledore, sir?"

"Yes, Harry?" said Dumbledore sitting back in his chair, drinking tea.

"I need to talk to you, when this is done for the day. I'm remembering some things."
"Do you wish to talk now?" said Dumbledore, almost spilling his tea.

"No it can wait a bit longer." said Harry.

Umbridge looked very worried.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set.

Dialogue line.

"Seriously mate?" asked Ron incredulously, Harry smiled and nodded.

Dialogue line.

"Cause he insulted Dad in the worst way possible. Mom don't take too kindly to that." said Fred and George with a small scowl. "Neither do we, for that matter."

Dialogue line.

Fiftieth paragraph.

"Yeah, he was one of the families I was talking about, but not really, Potter." said Draco quietly.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

"Bloody understatement." snarled Charlie quietly.

End of dialogue set.

"You've got six now, Harry." Bill called over. Harry blinked, then he smiled.

Dialogue set, second sentence, second comma.

"Why on earth were you gloomy?" asked Bill.

Dialogue set, third sentence, tenth word.
"Only cause everyone else in the year were almost as stupid as trolls." said Bill with a small smile, but still concerned over his brother's behavior.

Dialogue set, end of fourth sentence.

"Cause everyone else was a third year." said Charlie, not smiling, but looking at his little brother.

Dialogue set, fifth sentence.

"Cause I'm a prat." said Percy kindly to Ron. Fred and George looked at each other and stared at their older brother.

Dialogue set, sixth sentence.

The twins said nothing, where was Ron going with this?

End of dialogue set.

His brother's paled, Ron held all this in? Even Mr. and Mrs. Weasely looked concerned. They would have to have a talk with Ron once this chapter was done.

Fifty-first paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Mr. Weasely gulped loudly. He needed to talk to Ron, very soon.

Fifty-second paragraph.

Fifty-third paragraph.

"Oi, I thought he was overdramatizing it!" he said to all the glares he was receiving.

Dialogue line.

Fifty-fourth paragraph.

Ron repeated this act. Harry could hardly hold in his laughter.
"One moment, Mr. Potter, tomorrow, I want to give you a quick assessment test, just so we can rate you correctly. I have a feeling you have been holding back a majority of your knowledge from your schoolwork." said McGonagall quickly. Harry looked at Hermione nervously, then looked at his Head of House and nodded slowly.

"We weren't quiet Harry, you were passed out asleep. I never met a guy in my life that didn't snore in their sleep." said Ron with a smirk.

"Explains the racket you make every night." said Harry with a smirk as well.

"I don't snore!" said Ron indignantly.

"The hell you don't!" said Harry, Neville, Dean, and Seamus. Ron looked a bit shocked and then vainly cleared his throat, to carry on.

"Hearing her talk made you almost leap off the chair." said Ron with a smile.

"They didn't feed you that morning?" asked Mrs. Weasely with a grim look.

"I spent the entire morning cooking food."

"You spent the whole morning baking cookies?" said Ginny with her eyes widened.

"No, cooking food to put in the freezer. I made enough meals to last them awhile. Remember, Aunt Petunia can't cook."

"What are Mars Bars?" asked Draco.

Lupin reached deep into his cloak and brought out a slim, slightly cylinder wrapped chocolate bar, he tossed it over to Draco. Draco caught it and looked at it.

"That's a Mars Bar, it's a Muggle candy bar. Go ahead and try it, I have twenty more in my pockets.” said Lupin kindly.

They all watched as Draco stared at it, looked over to Lupin and slowly opened it. He looked at it suspiciously and then took a small bite. His eyes lit up, he smiled, and he wolfed the whole thing down in three bites.

Blaise Zabini nor Theodore Nott ever saw him get that way with chocolate before. They looked over to Lupin, "Where can we get some of those Mars Bars?"

Lupin had just handed Harry an unwrapped one and said "Muggle World, they sell them everywhere." Harry took a big bite of his, closed his eyes and smiled.

"I can try and make these if you really want." said Harry to them.

"How can you?" said Lupin with widened eyes. Harry smiled.

"I can taste almost all the ingredients when I bite into something, makes replicating someone’s favorite dish all the more easier."

Lupin and Sirius stared.

End of fifty-eighth paragraph.

"I thought I had a sweet tooth, I bow and toast to a better." said Dumbledore jovially raising his tea cup.

Fifty-ninth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"Didn't know he actually meant it." said Ron bitterly.

Sixtieth paragraph.

"I was wondering what I was doing with tuna." said Fred looking down.

Dialogue line.

"Take it Ron, not your fault he doesn't know what the bartering system of lunches is." said a Hufflepuff muggleborn.

Dialogue line.

"I'm sorry, Ron." said Mrs. Weasley sadly. Ron looked guilty.
"I had the McFinns and Dr. Clark to share things with, but that was years before this. I had forgotten the feeling." said Harry, looking down with a slight smile.

Ron laughed, "We had just taken a bite out of a cockroach cluster. When he saw one of the legs sticking out, he turned a shade of green that I never knew existed."

"Me too!" said a every student that was collecting them.

"Agrippa and Ptolemy are the two of the rarest cards in the entire world. I myself only have six of Agrippa and two of Ptolemy." said Dumbledore serenely.

"I've got twenty of each card there is." said Lupin smiling. "Including Agrippa and Ptolemy."

Ron and Dumbledore stared at him. "Once again, I bow to sweeter sweet tooth then the one I possess." said Dumbledore in shock.

"What do you a charge a person just to look at it?” said Ron with widened eyes.

"But what I wouldn't give for is a Harry Potter card." said Lupin wistfully.

"W-W-What?" stammered Harry.

"Your card is actually the rarest in the world. There are only seven in circulation, and I am proud to say, that I have one of the seven."

"Holy cripes! How many Chocolate Frogs did you have to go through to get that?" said Ron with amazement.

"Seven hundred and fifty-three thousand two hundred and nineteen frogs. The chocolate from all of those Frogs are downstairs in the kitchen." said Dumbledore simply. The students sat and stared.

"Sounds like two years’ worth of chocolate for you." said Sirius looking at Lupin.

"I melted some of that chocolate to make the Knickerbocker Glories. Sorry sir," said Harry apologetically.

"Not at all, use what you wish, that is what they are there for." beamed Dumbledore.
Sixty-first paragraph.
"I'm intensely honored that I was your first card, Harry." said Dumbledore with a broad smile.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Sixty-second paragraph.

Dumbledore's Chocolate Frog card.
"What's chamber music?" asked a small Gryffindor.
"It's music played by a small group of amateur musicians in a home of a friend. Have you ever been to a child's piano recital played in their house?" said Dumbledore addressing the boy. He thought and nodded.
"That is a form of chamber music."
"Explains why he wants to have the school sing the school song almost every year." whispered Ron to Hermione who giggled.

Sixty-third paragraph.

Dialogue line.
"That frightened me for a moment." said Harry with a smile.

Dialogue line.

Sixty-fourth paragraph.

Dialogue set, first sentence.
"So polite." sighed Bathilda Bagshot.

Dialogue set, third second sentence.

Dialogue line.
"That IS weird!" said a few Slytherins.

Sixty-fifth paragraph, third sentence, fourth comma.
"You got a Circe?" said Sirius in amazement. "That...that is one rare card." Harry noticed that, that was not where he was going with the conversation, but he let it go.

Sixty-fifth paragraph, end of third sentence.

"Merlin too? Wow!" said Neville.

End of sixty-fifth paragraph.

Dialogue set.

"I sympathize with you, I've had several bad experiences." said Dumbledore, looking over to George.

Sixty-sixth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Dean patted him on the back, he hated sprouts too.

Sixty-seventh paragraph.

"You are brave, mate." said Fred shaking his head.

Sixty-eighth paragraph.

Sixty-ninth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"Yep, that's Neville." said Seamus.

Seventieth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"All the hell and abuse you went through, how did you end up so nice?" said Sirius looking at Harry.

"The McFinns and Dr. Clark helped a lot." said Harry quietly.

Dialogue line.
"Harry, you and Ron are complete opposites." said Ginny shaking her head. Ron's face darkened.

"Actually, we're pretty much the same. Only difference is, is that he speaks his mind all the time, I hold it in." said Harry smiling at Ron. Ron brightened a bit. "I actually really like it when Ron speaks his mind like that. He's insanely funny."

"Damn rat."

"That is not good. Not good at all. From now on, if anyone's core is sticking out of their wands, please raise your hands." said Dumbledore sternly.

About five people raised their hands.

"See Professor McGonagall after this chapter, she will get in contact with Ollivander and we will provide you with new wands or have them repaired." said Dumbledore nodded towards McGonagall.

"I was amazed you came back so soon, Neville." said Harry.

"You made it sound like we lied to him for fun." said Ron looking at Hermione.

"Harry!" Hermione scolded him.

"Hey, you have to admit, you were bossy back then." said looking a bit guilty.
"I would have told you to bug off." said Sirius looking at Hermione with raised eyebrows. She blushed. She finally admitted to herself that she was a bit of prat when she was younger. But she changed, didn't she?

There was silence in the school, except for the twin's sniggering. Ron looked slowly over to the two of them. Charlie and Bill nodded to each other and smacked the back of their heads.

"YOU KNOW HOW DANGEROUS IT IS TO DO THAT? IF WE HEAR OF YOU DOING THAT AGAIN..." they paused because the twins still looked pleased with their joke. Bill jerked his head towards Harry and smiled evilly over to Harry. "We will have Harry give you a 'dressing down'."

The twins paled considerably. Mrs. Weasely looked over at Harry, deeply impressed.

"Blimey, Hermione, you really need to learn to breathe when you're talking." said Ron, heaving a gasp. Hermione blushed slightly, while the rest of the school and the guests laughed.

"Miss Granger, you were very rude, for two reasons: you sat down, without being invited, and the other reason is the way you introduced yourself." admonished McGonagall. Hermione blushed deeper.

"Sorry, Ron, Harry." she said quietly.

"It's alright, Hermione." said both Ron and Harry.

“I was close, but not quite, I hadn't memorized the Fungi book yet.” said Harry.
"No Granger, he's lying to you." said Pansy with a smirk, to her dismay, no one laughed.

"I'll admit it, you really sounded like a stalker, at the time, I found you a little creepy." said Harry with a slight smile. Hermione blanched.

"Wow, Hermione, you really didn't know how to talk to people did you." said Lupin with concern on his face.

"No, I really didn't, now that I look back." said Hermione sadly.

"For a moment there, I thought you forgot all about me." said Neville with a smile.

The school gasped, how the heck did these three become the closest group of friend the school had ever known? What brought them together?

"And if he ever does that again, I'll have a few words with him." said Harry, following Bill's lead. The twin's eyes widened and they slowly leaned away from the raven-haired teen.
"Not that I'm good enough for that house." said Ron with a smile.
"You can beat them all in chess, that's got to count for something, mate." said Harry.

"You sound like Draco, just a little bit." said Luna dreamily.
"I DO NOT SOUND LIKE HIM!" bellowed Ron and Draco at the same time.

"Thanks mate, I needed that, actually." said Ron.
"You shouldn't be trying to make everyone else feel better, Harry. You need someone to make YOU feel better." said Lupin a little crossly.
"At that time, for the past three years, I got used to having no one to help me in the emotional or physical department. I knew Ron needed help, so I helped. Made me feel a lot better." said Harry quietly. "Besides, I don't want to be smothered."

Charlie stood up and waved, he also showed off a few burns on his muscular arms. A few girls whistled.
"Curse Breaker," said Bill. A few more people cheered and a few more girls whistled. "Sorry girls, I'm taken, dating someone." said Bill. The girls groaned.
"You want to know what happens when you rob a bank do you?" said Lupin whispering into his ear.

Harry merely smiled.

Ron stammered over the Dark Lord's name.

"You're getting better Ron." said Harry with a smirk.

"Puddlemere United!" said Harry, Dumbledore and Sirius.

"Chudley Cannons!" said Ron and Mr. Weasley defiantly.

"Holyhead Harpies!" said Ginny, Alicia, Katie and Angelina.

Other students and parents shouted their favorite teams.

"It is." said the Quidditch players and the fans.

"Oh no." said Draco, covering his head.

"How did he and the rest of the train know? We didn't mention it!" said the twins.

"I didn't either." said Neville, looking puzzled.

"Sorry, Harry." said Hermione quietly.
"They are." said Draco almost silently.

"Actually, yeah." said Ron looking up at Draco. They glared at each other, until Harry coughed warningly. Which they took to mean 'don't try it.' They stopped glaring at each other and Ron continued reading.

The Weasely children turned slowly in their seats to face Draco, shifted in his seat and apologized before Professor Snape or Dumbledore could request that he do.

"You're a prat, you know that, right?" said Tonks severely. Draco looked down in a shamed sort of way. Though his family didn't like Tonks and her mother and father, he always thought she was really pretty cool.

"Good for you Harry, stand up for your friends." said Bathilda Bagshot with a doting smile.

"You don't need to tell him that. He'll go to any lengths to protect his friends." said Dennis Creevy.

"You can say that again." said Ginny, Neville, Ron, and Hermione. Harry looked down, blushing heavily.

"You go Harry!" shouted a few students.

"For the Malfoy family, that is red." muttered Seamus.
Professor Snape stomped over to Draco and pulled him out of his chair.

"You...me...now.." he said pulling him towards the door of the Great Hall. They left, Snape, slamming the door behind them.

Dumbledore watched with widened eyes towards the door. He then looked over to Ron.

"I think they wouldn't mind if we continued." said Dumbledore quietly.

"Hopefully." said the twins sitting forward eagerly, forgetting that they knew what had happened.

"That IS bravery, Harry. The very definition of bravery." said Dumbledore smilingly.

"Greedy gits." snarled Padma and Pavarti.

"What happened?" said Sirius and Bill leaning forward eagerly.

"Ouch!" moaned Sirius and Bill, absently massaging their hands.

"The only noble thing that little bastard ever did." growled Lupin.

People who were bullied by Goyle started to laugh so hard that tears came out of their eyes.
"Good." said Lupin, Sirius, Ron, Harry and Hermione.

Nintey-first paragraph, second sentence, second comma.
"Cowards." muttered Lavender

End of nintey-first paragraph.
"Wow! They were scared of me." bragged Hermione. The students and a few Aurors laughed.
"Wait'll they get you angry in the third, they'll be downright terrified of you." smirked Harry.

Dialogue line.
"Take a guess, Hermione." said George.

Dialogue line.
"What a stupid rat!" said Zacharias nastily. Thinking this would be a good insult, but it failed miserably when he saw Harry, Ron, Hermione, Sirius and Lupin laugh. One of his housemates noticed what he was attempting to do and smacked him soundly on the back of the head.

Ninety-second paragraph.
The school laughed, what a lazy rat!

Dialogue line.

Ninety-third paragraph.

Dialogue set, fifth sentence.
"Mr. Malfoy and his family were exonerated from all suspicion." said Umbridge smugly.
"First name on the list I gave you, Madame Bones." said Harry looking over to the Law Enforcement Head. Umbridge deepened her snarl.

End of dialogue set.
"Never saw a gray area of politeness." said Charlie with a small smile.
"You channeling Mrs. Weasely, Hermione?" smirked Tonks.

"What the...how did you two become friends? I kinda agree with Ron in this aspect, you were a bit much." said Sirius solemnly, Hermione nodded sadly.

"Hermione, I really hate to pick on you too..." said Lupin wearily

"I wasn't picking on her!" said Sirius taken aback.

"but," holding up a hand to silence Sirius. "Hermione, you're on a train with kids seventeen years old and all the way down to eleven year olds. They are going to act childish." Hermione blushed and slowly nodded.

"AGAIN, WITH THE NOSE! LAY OFF WILL YA?" shouted Ron.

"Sorry." said Harry and Hermione both smiling broadly.

"Good observations, Potter. You'd make a fine Auror." said Moody approvingly.

"Well, now I have a clue to who bought me brand new robes for my birthday." said Ron looking over to Harry, who whistled innocently while looking up at the enchanted ceiling.

"Wow, you two were scared?" said a majority of the school. They all knew that they were two of the three bravest people in the school and they couldn't picture them terrified.
"Sweets before feasts." muttered several boys and nodding.

Lupin and Sirius adjusted the blankets.

The students cheered.

"Very good Mr. Potter." beamed Professor Sprout.

"I thought I lost Trevor." Neville said blushing.

"Harry, your descriptions are positively lovely." said a fourth year Gryffindor girl Harry had never met, but she was batting her eyelashes.

"And their dead on, too." said Bill with a smirk.

"Bet Weasely was thrilled." said Blaise laughing.

"Oh, you have no idea how thrilled I was, at the time." smirked Ron.
People closed their eyes and thought back to their boat ride across the lake.

"How did he get there?" asked a few puzzled students.

"Ask Trevor, cause we don't know." said Neville and Hermione.

"Yes and thanks for asking, Hagrid." said Neville happily.

"Well, it's time for us to retire for the night, I think." said Dumbledore cheerfully.

Snape and Malfoy then came back into the Great Hall, Harry noticed that Malfoy was nursing his backside.

"You wanted to say something to Potter?" said Snape severely.

"Sorry, Potter. What I said four years ago, about your mum and dad." said Draco, wincing as he massaged his back end.

"It's alright, you were just repeating what your father said, you never knew just how bad it was till you hear it for yourself in the third person." said Harry kindly.

"Now Harry, you wanted to discuss something with me?" said Dumbledore, trying to hide his anticipation.

"Oh yeah, 'bout the incident. Do we talk here or elsewhere?" asked Harry standing up.

Snape came over and whispered into Dumbledore's ear. Dumbledore turned his head slightly towards Snape and nodded.

"I think my office might be the best place for it. Who would you like to have accompany us?"
"Sirius and Lupin, I think. Just them, sorry Ron and Hermione, it’s just..."

"We understand mate, when you're ready mate, you'll let us know." said Ron, taking ahold of Hermione's arm when she started to protest.

Snape, Lupin, Sirius and Dumbledore all helped Harry out of the Great Hall. Umbridge stared in fury at them leaving, was he starting to remember? She would have to put a stop to his remembering, now.
Harry's beginning to remember things about the incident, but it's still so fuzzy to his recollection. Dumbledore and Moody plot to bring Dr. Clark back into Harry's life, but it will take a bit of help, Ranger help...

As they entered the Headmaster's officer Fawkes swooped in and flew over Harry's head, then he landed on his perch, singing a soothing note all the way.

"Hey Fawkes," said Harry with a smile on his face.

"Would you like to take a seat Harry?" said Dumbledore kindly. He didn't motion over to the chair in front of his desk, but to the soft sofa in the corner beside the fireplace.

Harry walked over to the sofa, the cane clacking on the ground, a constant reminder how injured he was. It made Dumbledore's heart break in two every time he heard it. He laid his cane beside the couch and Fawkes flew down to the young man, landing on his knee. Fawkes nuzzled his head next to Harry's heart, suddenly Hedwig came fluttering in through the open window, and snapped her beak at Fawkes. Fawkes pulled his head back and looked at Hedwig in confusion.

"Hedwig, it's alright, Fawkes is just trying to make me feel better, ok?" he said cautiously.

Hedwig looked at Fawkes critically and then hooted in agreement. Fawkes looked between Hedwig and Harry slowly and nuzzled his head against Harry's chest again. Hedwig hopped onto Harry's shoulder and nipped his ear affectionately.

Dumbledore gazed fondly at the interactions between the young man and both of their pets. Snape was looking out the window and in the reflection of the glass, he watched as Lupin and Sirius sat beside the black haired boy.

"Alright Harry, what is it that you remember." said Dumbledore, summoning his chair from behind his desk.

"Not a lot, but you told me to let you know when I start to remember something."

"Do you remember what object caused you this harm, Potter? It would help us narrow down what is causing your wounds to not heal." said Snape turning around quickly.

Harry shook his head. "No, I don't. Not yet."

"Then why are we here?" said Snape.

"Words, I remember words." said Harry closing his eyes and thinking hard.

"What words?" said Lupin taking Harry by the hand.

Harry thought hard, "Something about the Minister, and being able to do it. And worthless. I don't know what else."

"Sir, before the Reading's took place, I saw Umbridge AND Filch look uncomfortable when the incident was mentioned. When you asked Mr. Potter if he had remembered what had happened," said Snape quietly. "They may know something about what had happened and refuse to come forward. Umbridge obviously despises the boy, and Filch, well...with Potter's rule-breaking tendencies, it's no wonder he's not a fan of the boy."

Sirius and Lupin paled, they ignored Snape's last comment, but what he had said worried them. "Was it Umbridge and Filch that hurt you, Harry?" they both said quickly.

"I don't remember, I can't even say that it might be them. It could have been a Slytherin who's really out to get me, or someone who snuck into the school. It took me a while, but I learned not to throw accusations around without some definite proof." he said a pointed look up to Professor Snape.

Snape took this subtle hint and gave him a nod.

"Well, it's a start Harry, it's a start. It'll come when it's ready, when you're ready." said Dumbledore with a knowing smile.

A knock came at the door. Dumbledore called over, "Come in."

It was Mad-Eye Moody and a tall person.

Harry couldn't see if this was a man or a woman, because there was a horrible mask covering this person's face. He immediately thought of a death eater's mask, and his hand itched for his wand, but it wasn't the same style that they wear, it was completely different yet frightfully similar.

"Here he is, Albus. Albus I'd like you to meet Lionus, he's the Captain of the England branch of the Rangers." said Moody.

"Hello Lionus, welcome to Hogwarts." said Dumbledore standing up, he tried to look at the eyes behind the mask, but they changed color and size almost constantly. "I'm sorry but I can't place the name, were you ever a student here?"

"I was, but Lionus is my Ranger name. I choose to give up my birth name a long time ago." said the Ranger with a voice that distorted with each syllable.

"Then I shall respect your name change, Mr. Lionus." It seemed that he would be able to decipher who the person was, so he felt it best to move onto what he could do. "We would like to ask you for a favor." said Dumbledore, eyes twinkling.

"Alastor already told me the reason for me being asked to come here. I just need a photo or an accurate description of him." said Lionus.

"Well, we only saw him twice, I don't think we could give a good enough description." said Sirius, sending Harry a look out of the corner of his eye.
Harry stared at the man, he had heard rumors of these men and women in the Muggle world but he never had met them. And for good reasons, they only went after massive drug dealers, mass human traffickers, genocidal maniacs, other criminals on a much larger scale. They were the front lines, any criminal that leaked through their grasp were only the smallest and the weakest of criminals. The world populace had a taste of the true criminal element that the Rangers held back, back in the days of World War II, an insane criminal deceived, Harry learned, the Rangers and took control of almost an entire continent. The Master Manipulator, Adolf Hitler. It was said that Hitler committed suicide, however, with a little digging, Harry learned, that it was the Rangers who were really behind it.

"Harry?" said a voice coming from beside him, Harry shook his head and was forcibly ripped from his thoughts. Dumbledore and the rest of them were looking at him.

"Huh?" said Harry.

"I need a photo or description, Mr. Potter." said the Ranger. Harry nodded and reached into his cloak, and pulled a worn photo.

"This was taken when I was about eight." he said handing the man the photo.

The ranger looked carefully at the picture, it was a photobooth picture, there was a man and a woman kissing each other, and a man with a child on his lap, the man and child were exchanging bunny ears behind each other's heads. "The man on the left?"

"Yes sir. Could you find him please? If he's....If he is, gone, it'll at least bring me some closure." Harry said quietly.

"I'll do what I can, I'm no miracle worker, despite what people say. I am amazed 'Kage'," he said looking over to Harry.

Harry looked at him quickly, not saying anything.

"that you couldn't find him. I will..what is that?" He turned quickly and pulled out a dark looking pistol and wand, his aim was straight on Dobby the house-elf, who looked dazed.

Harry hurried over to Dobby, kneeling in front of him, shielding him from the Ranger.

"It's Dobby, he's" Chunk "...my...fr........" Harry said quickly, but his speech slowed as he looked down, Dobby had plunged a long kitchen knife into his side and blood flowed freely from his side.

Sirius let out a yell and was about to curse Dobby into oblivion when Dumbledore, knocked Sirius aside and sent a spell towards Dobby, immediately, the dazed look was gone. The house-elf shook his head, his ears flapping on his face as he turned his head.

"What is Dobby doing in Dumbledore's office?" said Dobby blinking heavily. "Oh, hello Harry Potter, what is Harry Pot....." he looked in shock at his own thin hand holding the knife into Harry's side. Dobby, backed away slowly and squealed shrilly as Harry fell to the floor, clutching his side.

Sirius and Remus rushed to him, they took the blade slowly and carefully out of Harry's side, and they held a hand over the wound to keep pressure on it. Fawkes flew over to Harry and held his head above the wound and cried into the wound. Harry opened his eyes and his quick breathing slowed down and he sat up slowly. The wound was gone. Dumbledore checked the wound to make sure Harry was alright and then walked over and picked Dobby up into his arms.

"Dobby, he's alright, Harry's alright." he placed Dobby down beside Harry. Harry nodded smiled.
"I'm okay, I'm okay." said Harry to Dobby.

When Dobby came closer to Harry, Sirius whipped his wand out pointed it at Dobby.

“Get away from him!” snarled Sirius.

Harry ripped the wand out of his hand and threw it in the corner. Sirius stared at him.

"Knock it off." he snarled at Sirius. "Dobby didn't know what he was doing!"

"He's right Sirius, the counterspell I used, is for the Imperius curse. If he wasn't under that particular spell, then he would have been knocked unconscious." said Dumbledore sternly.

The Ranger looked down at Harry, he didn't look away for several moments, finally, he turned towards the house-elf.

"What do you remember before you found yourself here?" he said quietly.

"Dobby knows not sir, Dobby remembers cleaning boys bathroom on third floor, then Dobby remembers nothing." said Dobby looking as if he were about to cry.

"Amnesia seems to be contagious this year. It's alright Dobby, no lasting damage and it wasn't your fault. Take the rest of the night off, It seems I need to place protective charms over the house-elves." he said and left quickly. "Best take him to the Hospital Wing for the rest of the night."

Sirius and Lupin lifted Harry to his feet. Sirius mumbled an apology to Dobby and grabbed Harry's cane.

Once they left, only Moody and Lionus were left in the Headmaster's office.

"What did you mean by 'Kage?'" asked Moody.

"A name, he will tell you, if these books don't do it for him." said Lionus not looking at Moody.

Moody growled thoughtfully, then he asked, "What do think about finding this doctor?"

"Harder than I thought, I know where this doctor is."

"How does that make it harder?"

"It's WHERE the doctor is, that makes it hard."

Sirius and Remus escorted Harry and Dobby to the Hospital Wing where the Weasely's were waiting for them. When Harry changed into his pajamas, he was relieved that there was no scar and he went to go lay down in the bed. Bathilda Bagshot came over and sat beside Sirius.

"Hello, Harry dear." said Bathilda.

"Hello Ms. Bagshot." said Harry politely.

"Please, dear, call me Aunt Batty. It's what you used to call me." she said kindly.

"Alright." said Harry. He wasn't too sure what to say, he had some questions, but he wasn't sure how to go about asking her.
"I lived next door to you and your parents. Oh you were so cute, I have several baby pictures of you!"

"As do we." said Lupin and Siruis.

"Dear God." moaned Harry.

Bathilda pulled out a thick book and went to sit on the side of his bed. Sirius and Lupin eagerly clambered over the hospital bed, they wanted to see if she had any pictures they didn't.

Dumbledore, along with McGonagall, Moody, Tonks and Kingsley came in and when Dumbledore saw the book he magicked it to become large and easier to see. He smiled over to Harry when he moaned and buried his face into the pillow.

"It's not as bad as you think Harry, you were absolutely adorable back then." he said with a smile.

Tonks squealed when she saw the photo album and ran to sit next to Lupin. Dumbledore sat on the bed next to Harry and flicked his wand to turn the pages.

The first picture was one of Lily laying in a Hospital bed and James holding a tiny little baby in his arms.

"Aww! You were so tiny Harry!" squealed Hermione.

"He's still tiny." said Bill with a laugh.

And the night slowly wore on with them looking at old photos. Once midnight had arrived, Madame Pomfrey tore her eyes away from a picture of Harry being lightly tossed into the air and caught by Dumbledore himself, to announce that Harry needed rest.

Bathilda assured everyone that she would share the book with them again, and left to go sleep in her room.

"Kingsley," said Dumbledore quietly, "You and I will take the first watch." Kingsley nodded.

The next morning, Harry had woken Sirius and told him to come down to the kitchens with him, Sirius, remembering what Harry said he was going to make, eagerly waited for Harry to change and they made their way down to the kitchens.

When the rest of the school had woken up and eaten their breakfast, Harry and Sirius opened the doors and made their way to the bowl chair. When Umbridge saw Harry, she hid her scowl with a napkin and pretended to cough. She knew that damned house-elf failed her and the curse was lifted on it, she wanted to make another attempt, but that meddling old fool, Dumbledore went and placed protective charms around all of them.

Lupin turned in the chair and addressed them, "Where the heck did you go?"

"We went to the kitchens and baked some cookies, this morning." said Sirius, "Now, I know what an oven does." He added beaming good-naturedly.

"Where are the cookies?" said Ron and Lupin excitedly.

"You just ate breakfast! You'll get them at lunchtime." said Harry with a bemused look on his face.

"Have you found a suitable book yet, Delores?" said a voice coming from behind them.
Rivers was back.

Umbridge paled, as well as Fudge.

"What happened to you Mr. Potter? You weren't using a cane the last time I saw you." said Rivers looking at Harry with a frown on his face, he then slowly looked over to Sirius and his eyes widened.

"He's been proven innocent." said Madame Bones standing up quickly. He looked over to her, thought for a moment and nodded slowly.

"Back to what brought me here, did you find a suitable replacement book for your class?" He said, recovering from the shock.

"Well, we've been busy with these books, we're trying to expose the lies Mr. Potter has been telling." said Umbridge worriedly.

"I don't care. How long have you been reading these books?" said Rivers with a his eyes half open and his brows hiding in his graying hair.

"Five days." said Kingsley, counting the days.

"Out of two weeks, you've spent five days reading these books? Well, that still gave you ample time to look into finding another book for your Defense class. I see I will have to take appropriate actions, unless you wish to give me a better reason that you haven't found a book?" he said folding his arms.

Umbridge and Fudge looked at each other nervously.

"No? Well then, I will see to you in a moment." he said, then he turned towards McGonagall.

"I was asked to bring this Assessment Test." he said handing her five sheets of parchment.

"Oh, thank you. Harry, come here." said McGonagall conjuring a desk and chair. He walked slowly over. "This test isn't like your end of term exams. This test has no time limit, but you may cease whenever you feel like it. Complete the questions to the best of your ability. Take your time."

Harry looked over to Hermione and sighed. He picked up the quill that was provided and set to work.

Twenty minutes later, he leaned back in the chair and handed Rivers the five pieces of parchment.

"Couldn't finish, could you Potter?" sneered Umbridge. Fudge grinned evilly.

Rivers looked at them with confusion and unfurled the parchment, the test papers were extended by three feet each. The writing was small, tidy and the answers were long, very long. Rivers blinked in surprise. He took the papers and read the first answer. This was...was...incredible! He raised his wand and slowly brought his wand over the paper. A grade appeared on the top and he nearly dropped the paper, he had heard about this grade being given, but he never saw the grade apply to anyone personally! Not anyone living in Britain or America, anyway.

It was an 'O' and a golden star. A Star Outstanding! And on an Assessment Test! It was almost unheard of! Not even Dumbledore himself had received a Star Outstanding in anything thought Rivers.

Rivers cleared his throat nervously and addressed Fudge and Umbridge.
"You really want to know what grade this young man received." he said, doing his best to keep a straight face.

"Of course." Umbridge said sweetly. She wanted some satisfaction, because she couldn't seem to get anything done her way, and she was furious.

"He received a Star Outstanding." said Rivers softly to the people in the Great Hall.

The teachers and the Ravenclaws all gasped, minus Umbridge who snarled. Everyone else, was left in the dark, including Hermione.

"What's a 'Star Outstanding'?” said Hermione a little confused.

"A Star Outstanding, Miss Granger, is a much, much higher grade then a plain Outstanding. There is the standard scoring system, T-for Troll, P-for Poor, D-for Dreadful, A-for Acceptable, E-for Exceeds Expectations, and O-for Outstanding.” said Flitwick excitedly.

"When it comes to the Star scoring system there is only Star E-Exceeds Expectations and Star O-Outstanding. By receiving one of those grades on any test, including this one, you get the opportunity to take the W.A.N.D.S test. Then, if Mr. Potter manages to get Star Outstandings in the W.A.N.D.s test, then he will be able to take the M.A.G.I.C.s test! What the letters mean are a unknown by me, it's been so long since someone was qualified to take the test! " said McGonagall excitedly, her face broke into a proud smile.

Hermione stood up and walked over to Harry, he stood up. She asked him angrily, "Why didn't you tell me, that you were this smart? Why have I been helping you on your homework all these years, when you were obviously better than me?"

"I wanted you to stand out." he said loud enough for the people around to hear him.

Hermione looked stunned, "What?"

"I was told, by the Dursleys, that I wasn't to get better grades then Dudley was. Which was insanely difficult, might I add. Well, I just got so used to standing in the background, and yet excelling in my own way, without anyone knowing. It worked out intensely in my favor might I add."

"I really don't see how!" snapped Hermione.

"Well, I could tell, by our meeting on the train (thank goodness the books water down my thoughts, or we would still be on the second chapter) that you wanted to stand out, you wanted to be the best. I realized that I was already going to be gawked at and already, people set high expectations upon me. I also saw how Ron was overshadowed by his family, much like me. I decided to stand in the background and tutor Ron, in a secretive manner.” said Harry on a small smile.

"When we all became friends, Ron and I both agreed that we would let you tutor the both of us, because, like I said, we wanted you to stand out. Ron's the best at chess, and now some magical practices that I've taught him over the years. You, you're already the best in almost every class. It gives you pride, and it gives you joy, what right did I have to take that away from you. Unfortunately, I've already stolen that from you." said Harry with sadness on his face.

"Gee mate, you really do sound like Dumbledore when you talk like that." said Ron, gaining his speech back faster than anyone else in the school.
"I save it for when I know I can't dilute my words." said Harry sadly. Hermione blinked.

"So, you two kept this a secret from me?" she said weakly.

"Hermione, we are sorry, we can never say sorry enough. I will say it, I was debating whether to admit it or not. I did it for selfish reasons." said Harry with a sorrowful look.

"What selfish reason?" said Hermione looking confused, she was slowly forgetting to be angry.

"Both Ron and I actually really, really like seeing you so happy because you aced a paper. Because you beat everyone else in the class, we would swell with pride every time you would show us your test results, we would hold it in and Ron would act put off, he's a real good actor. Like an older brother, I wanted you to stand out. Show me all that you had in you. Be honest with me, would you have excelled in the classes as far as you did, if you knew how far ahead I was?" he said looking in her eyes.

She looked away, of course she would have excelled! She would have...wait, no. She thought to herself bitterly. The only reason she memorized the books, the only reason she answered questions first, was so she could prove she was the smartest. She wanted to prove that she, coming from an all muggle family, could be the best the school had. She looked back at him, and bit her lip.

"Now that the cat is out of the bag, I swear from this moment on, Ron and I will NEVER lie to you again. And you can choose which Harry you want to have in classes. The one I was, or the one I actually am."

"Why should it be up to me?" said Hermione taking a step back, this choice startled her.

"To slightly repay you for the what I put you through." said Harry kindly. "You don't need to make the decision now, we aren't holding classes. You can make the choice whenever you decide."

Hermione thought quickly.

"I want...the one that you are happier with, it shouldn't just be up to me." said Hermione earnestly, tears forming in her eyes.

Harry sighed, he looked over to Ron, who slowly nodded. Harry shook his head again, and sighed "I guess, I'm going to..."

He looked around and glanced over to Malfoy, he thought about Malfoy writing to his father, inadvertently reporting everything he learned from the books and what people were saying.

"hold back." he said.

Hermione blanched and Ron nodded, knowing Harry's reasons.

Harry looked at Hermione and walked over to her and whispered in her ear. "Malfoy, I would rather Voldemort not know just how much knowledge I've got stored away. I would rather have him guessing. But, if you ask me to go all out, at any time, I will." Hermione nodded, looking over to Malfoy.

That was the second reason, to hold himself back, she discovered. Take Voldemort off guard.
Hat Trick

Chapter Summary

Harry's been ousted as a somewhat of an intellectual, but he still wants to be just one of the guys, act his age...but will his godfather be supportive of him when he learns that he could have been placed in Slytherin?

Chapter Notes

I don't own Harry Potter.

Once nine o'clock rolled around, the book opened itself and hovered in the air.

"So who's going to read?" said Ron, looking around the school.

"I would like to." said Luna a dreamy voice. The book flew over to her and landed softly in her hands.

Chapter title said Luna in her trademarked dreamlike tone.

"Oh jeez." said Harry smacking his forehead. He could live his life happier without Sirius and Lupin knowing just how close he was placed in Slytherin.

First paragraph.

"Yet, Mr. Potter..." said McGonagall calling over to Harry.

"I keep crossing you left and right." said Harry with a small smile.

“Don't feel bad, your dad used to do that all the time.” said Sirius with a smirk.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Second paragraph, second sentence.

"I never noticed, but, you're right, the Great Hall is about that size." said one of the third year Slytherins, remembering the Dursley's house.
"Good, Potter, take in your surroundings. Very good." said Moody, nodding his head.

The teachers and some of the Ministry workers were impressed by this. The doors were quite thick and it was almost impossible to hear anything through those doors. But Potter heard several hundred people. He must have some very sensitive ears.

“How the hell did you hear that?” asked Sirius.

“Aunt Petunia would whisper to me what she wanted me to do when guests came around, if I didn't listen carefully and got them wrong, I'd catch hell for it.” said Harry plainly.

Sirius and the rest of the adults grumbled.

"Aww, scared little first years are so adorable!" said Fred sweetly and clasping his hands and bringing them under his chin.

Ron's stomach rumbled. Ginny and Hermione slowly looked over at him.

"Ron, breakfast was fifteen minutes ago." said the both of them slowly. Harry laughed.

Several people bumped fists with their housemates and others high-fived each other.

"I heard about this so-called free time, never got to experience any myself." said Harry with a smirk. People across the hall laughed. Neither had they.

Gryffindors stood up and cheered
Hufflepuffs also stood and shouted

Ravenclaws jumped to their feet and raised their voices

Slytherins bounded out of their chairs bellowed out their support.

"See, Ron, Slytherins aren't all that bad." said Harry and Hermione. Hermione looked at Harry quickly. Harry shrugged,

"I've been trying to tell him this for years."

"Name one good wizard from Slytherin, after You-Know-Who." said Ron stubbornly.

"Alastor Moody." said Harry quickly.

"Ah. Right. Well then never mind." said Ron looking over to Mad-Eye, looking sheepish. Moody smirked.

"Whatever points we lose, cause of our male stupidity, Hermione makes up for it." said Ron giving Hermione a one armed hug. Hermione blushed.

"You guys aren’t stupid, at least I know that now." she said stifling a giggle.

“We're guys, Hermione, and we were YOUNG boys, granting us the opportunity to be the biggest prats on the planet. Ron and I would like to offer a blanket apology for everything we say to you in these books." said Harry, slightly switching back to his restricted self.

Hermione laughed and nodded vigorously. "Only if you accept mine."

"In a heartbeat." said both Ron and Harry.

"I don't know if we are, Ron, but everyone else did become a credit to their houses." said Harry.

"Even Malfoy, Harry?" said Ron with his eyebrows raised in mock surprise.
Harry looked over to Malfoy, and Malfoy stared at him.

"Even Malfoy."

Malfoy's stare widened.

Dialogue line.

Fourth paragraph, first sentence, second comma.

"Wow, Harry, you do notice everything!" said Neville laughing with everyone else. Harry mouthed an apology.

Fourth paragraph, end of first sentence.

"Again with the nose?" said Ron throwing his hands up in surrender.

End of fourth paragraph.

"When I said smarten up, Potter, I didn't mean you. I knew your hair was a lost cause." said McGonagall kindly down to him.

Dialogue line.

"Never happens." said Flitwick, looking at all the students.

Fifth paragraph.

"Wow, Harry, you were nervous?" squeaked a small first year Hufflepuff. "Weren't you?" said Harry with an eyebrow raised. The little Hufflepuff blushed.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Bill stood up and took Fred by the ear anddragged him out of the Hall. “Oi!...ow ow ow ow!” shouted Fred as he was dragged out.

Luna sat and waited for them to come back. And they did, Bill was pulling Fred along by the arm, while Fred's free hand was massaging his rear.

“I didn't do that to you guys.” scowled Bill.
“We were just having fun...” said Fred easing back into his seat.

Sixth paragraph, third sentence.

"Most kids would focus on the 'hurt' part." said Sirius sadly.

Sixth paragraph, fourth sentence, seventh word.

"Really?" said Hermione with widened eyes.

Harry shrugged, "Hagird told me I couldn't use magic, outside of school. I knew the incantations, but didn't practice it.

Sixth paragraph, seventh sentence, first comma.

Neville smiled over to Hermione. "You tend to talk a lot when you're nervous." he said kindly

Sixth paragraph, eighth sentence.

"Sorry Hermione, but you weren't helping anyone at all. Made the rest of us feel a little bad." said Dean.

Sixth paragraph, ninth paragraph.

"What? Harry, how could she blame you for turning her wig blue?" said Dumbledore looking intently.

"Well, she was a substitute teacher, and she had a very high opinion of herself. She wanted to be a college teacher, not primary school. She handed out a test, it was a college level math test, just to make us feel inferior. She collected all of our papers after we were done. She saw mine, and told me that I must have cheated. Which told me that I got at least some of the questions right. She called me a cheater, and some other names, no profanities, but she got close a few times. I was ticked, all of a sudden, her hair turned blue. Looking back, it was hilarious. She danced around the room when she saw her reflection, she wanted to take the wig off, but it wouldn't budge. She glared at me and at the end of the day, she sent the letter home with me.” said Harry with a small smile, but it was wiped off at the end.

Some of the students were gaping at Harry, they knew what college was, and how hard it was. And in primary school he managed to pass a college math test! After Harry described his teacher dancing around with blue hair, more people started to laugh loudly.

Sirius then groaned, "What happened when you got home?" People stopped laughing and clapping.

Harry sighed. "That was the first time I was sent to the hospital. They waited, a day or two, then brought me. They said that a stray dog attacked me. When the hospital asked what the dog looked like, they made it seem like they couldn't remember what the dog looked like. Though the dog part was faked."

"Wasn't the hospital afraid of you getting rabies?" said Hermione placing her hands on her head, wanting to block out his words.

"I had to undergo rabies treatments for a dog attack that never happened." said Harry bitterly.

"Didn't they have to pay for it?" said Ron and Charlie.

"No, the RSPCA, came and asked me a few questions though. Uncle Vernon kept answering them for me, saying I was too traumatized. I think he made damn sure there wasn't enough evidence to say that the dog didn't have rabies. Getting all those shots really sucked." said Harry bitterly.

"What are shots?" asked Malfoy.

"It’s a small thick needle that Muggles use to send in, how to put this, a muggle potion. They puncture your skin and push the potion into your blood. Drinking it doesn't make it work." said Hermione.

People paled. They did that multiple times?

End of sixth paragraph.

"Yeah, I know I'm a drama king." said Harry with a laugh, causing everyone to start laughing.

Seventh paragraph, thirteenth word.

"It didn't look like you jumped a foot in the air, Harry. Then again, you might have, cause if I remember correctly, I jumped three feet in the air." said Dean.

End of seventh paragraph.

"What the--?" said Lupin quickly

Dialogue line.

Eighth paragraph, third sentence.

"I forgot, 'The Annual Ghostly Introduction.' They do it every year." said Lupin chuckling to himself.

"I know and every time I'm in here before sorting, I hear the screams." said Harry with a smile.

"Wait, you aren't in here every year?" said Sirius questioningly.
Eighth paragraph, sixth sentence, seventh word.

"That’s the Friar!" said the Hufflepuff students.

End of eighth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"They say the same thing every year, never changing. They actually are very fond of Peeves, he adds some spice to their after-life." said Dumbledore smiling.

Ninth paragraph.

"That’s Nick!" said almost all the Gryffindors.

Tenth paragraph.

"Not even you, Granger?" said Pansy snidely.

"I remember you almost fainted." said Draco absently to Pansy.

Pansy glared at him and whispered furiously. "Why are you defending her?"

Draco turned and glared at her. He was getting close to snapping, and he finally did. "I'm sick and tired of being the bully my father wants me to be. I want what Potter wants, to be my own person, not a carbon copy of my father." he said loudly, getting up and moving his chair away from her and Crabbe and Goyle and went to sit beside Professor Snape. She glared at him and snarled.

Harry, surprising everyone including Malfoy and Umbridge, applauded. Slowly everyone else, beside Crabbe, Goyle and Pansy and Umbridge, clapped. To the cheers of a majority of the school Malfoy ripped the Inquisitorial Squad badge off his chest and threw it on the floor, and stamped on it. A smile, so uncharacteristically of the Slytherin bully, brightly shone on his face.

Dialogue line.

Eleventh paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Twelfth paragraph.

"Also part of the standard "Ghostly Introduction." said McGonagall with a smile on her lips.

Dialogue line.
"That would be me!" said Seamus with a raised hand.

"Is it just me, or does Ron always have Harry's back?" said Ernie with a broad smile.

"Not always." said Ron sadly.

"What do you mean?" said Mrs. Weasely, a little concerned. Ron looked down in shame and refused to answer her.

"Good observation skills." mumbled Moody

"It was really scary, but I wouldn't have traded it for the world." said a third year.

"Were you watching me?" said Harry playfully.

Hermione blushed deeply, "Sort of, I wanted to keep telling you all the things I learned. Sorry about that."

"It’s alright. You don't need to say sorry, we already put in place a blanket apology remember?" he smiled broadly over to her.

"Your descriptions are quite picturesque, Harry. You should write music." said Dumbledore happily.

"I did write something once. During the summer." said Harry quietly.

"I would..." started Dumbledore.

"Trust me, you don't." said Harry quickly.
"Albus, could you make a copy of that hat? Just the appearance, I want to toss it in the holding cell of the Dursleys." said McGonagall viciously.

"I take it, it’s a muggle magic trick." said Malfoy.
"That's right." said Harry and Hermione

Luna stopped reading. She turned towards Harry and said:

"Harry can you sing the Sorting Hat Song? I would like to hear you sing again." she said looking over to Harry.

Then everyone, excluding Umbridge, began to clap and urge him on to sing, they hadn't heard him sing in such a long time, despite it only be a few days.
"I don't..."

"Come on Harry, we would love to hear you sing again." said Sirius.

Harry sighed and took the book Luna handed to him, cleared his throat and sang, his voice transcending from a soft tenor to (Flitwick was correct) a strong and vibrant baritone. People leaned forward, no one made any funny comments on the song, they just drank in music.

The school all began to clap and shout, Harry blushed, handed the book and tried to cover his face. Sirius whispered in his ear:
"You need to go into the music business. You've already got a huge fan base here." he grinned with a large evil smile. Harry took a cushion and bopped him on the head.

"As did we just now, only it was Harry and not the hat!" shouted Dennis. Harry groaned.
"Bill, you already smacked me for it!" shouted Fred after Bill smacked him on the back of the head.

Nineteenth paragraph, second sentence.
"It was nerve racking." said Harry quietly.

End of nineteenth paragraph.
"I felt the same way, Harry, when I came." said Dumbledore kindly.

Twentieth paragraph.
Dialogue line.
Hannah turned pink when her house and some of the others clapped for her.

Twenty-first paragraph.
Dialogue line.
The Hufflepuff house clapped wildly.

Twenty-second paragraph.
Dialogue line.
People then began to clap for her.

Dialogue line.
The Hufflepuffs didn't cease clapping.

Dialogue line.
Terry stood up and took a bow.

Dialogue line.
The Ravenclaws started clapping.
Amidst the cheering for the respective students, Fred and George did a repeat performance of the catcalling.

"You look it and you sometimes act it, but there are decencies about you." said Harry smiling over to the Slytherins. Sirius and Snape looked at Harry in the utmost shock.

Before Mrs. Weasely could come over and ask him if he really was alright, he said he was fine and to reassure her, he took a big bite of gingerbread.

"Damn straight! We saw you play football, you were the best on the field!" said Dean excitedly.
"When did you see me play?" said Harry brows furrowed.
"In the first scroll, you were awesome, we all cheered for you!" said a frail first year girl. She squeaked and blushed deeply.

Harry smiled down at her. He conjured a tiger lily and handed it to her. "Thank you."

"Why did you conjure up a lily?" asked Lupin.
"It's my favorite flower." said Harry simply. The little girl blushed even deeper.

“You're such a charmer.” said Sirius proudly.

Growls etched their ways acrossed the Hall again.

Again, cheers ran rampant across the hall, erasing the growls.
"It couldn't decide whether to send me to Hufflepuff or Gryffindor." said Seamus answering the unasked question.

"RONALD WEASELY!" screeched Mrs. Weasley. Hermione, stood up and said:

"He's already apologized, they both have. It's fine."

"Very wise thinking, Harry." said Luna.

"Oh Potter, I wished you had spoken up. I've had several students, both boys and girls tug at my robes and ask for reassurance. We've even had to administer Calming Draughts to some students." said McGonagall, feeling a bit ashamed.

"Sorry again." said Neville to Morag MacDougal.

"I wouldn't have it any other way." said Malfoy quietly. He always wanted to be a Slytherin ever since he was a child. He had heard wonderful stories that his mother had told him about her days at school.
People awaited for the reason why it took him so long to get sorted.

"Wow, that means you could have went in any house, Harry!" said Bill thinking out loud.

"He's right Harry, you have the courage and nerve that Godric Gryffindor took pride in. You have the loyalty and diligence that Helga Hufflepuff treasured. You have the intellect and wisdom that Rowena Ravenclaw held dear and you have the cunning and as I said many years ago, a certain disregard for the rules. You are quite a unique individual." said Dumbledore with his eyes twinkling.

"Don't know 'bout that." muttered Harry.

"We wouldn't have accepted you anyway, Mr. Potter." said Umbridge. Her nose high in the air, and looking down at Harry with disgust.

Both Snape and Malfoy sent her a dark look.

"Good, we'll take him!" shouted the twins.

"The hat said what?" said Lupin looking over to Harry.

"Said I could be in Slytherin." said Harry, not in a worried tone but in a calm one.

Lupin and Sirius looked at each other nodded and smiled at Harry.

"Whatever house you would have been placed in, we wouldn't care or love about you any less" they said together.

"Thanks Sirius....Remus." said Harry.

Lupin looked at Harry in shock and then he smiled. A broad and bright smile, one like he hadn't given to anyone in over fourteen years.
"You didn't look like you were walking shakily." said Hermione

They repeated their performance.

"It is a shock when they do that, but they mean well." said Justin with a slight shiver.

Hagrid smiled warmly down at Harry.

He did so again.

Dumbledore smiled brightly.

Harry, Ron and Hermione all snarled.

"Now we're the same height." said Dean.

"Thank goodness luck was on your side that day."
Percy turned pink.

Lupin reached down into his pocket and handed him two chocolate bars.

"I'm not hungry." said Harry looking at the chocolate in Lupin's hands.

"Deal with it, every time I hear you're hungry in these books, I'm giving you something to eat. Makes Sirius and I feel better."

Harry sighed and took the chocolate.

"I seem to be easy to read, to you, Harry." said Dumbledore looking over to him.

"You really like us being here sir?" said a first year Hufflepuff.

"Of course I do. Every teacher here, shares the same feeling I do." said Dumbledore brightly.

McGonagall coughed loudly and nodded towards Umbridge.

"Well...most of us" he said still brightly.

"My best speech." said Dumbledore his eyes twinkling. Students fifth year and up nodded.

"This just proves how, senile, you've gotten." said Umbridge sneering over to the venerable old man.

Students and guests turned to her with fury shooting from their eyes.

"The day he's gone senile is the day you're voted 'Best Teacher' by the students," retorted Harry. Several shouted in agreement, and only three students shouted her to be 'Second' or 'Third' best teacher.
"That was the only time that I remember calling you mad, sir." said Harry weakly. Dumbledore chuckled warmly.

"I feel that way again, now." said Percy to himself, his father gave him a one arm hug.

Ron's stomach grumbled again.

"Can't you wait, Ron?" said Neville with his eyes raised. He knew about Ron's appetite and love of food, but he never thought it was THIS big.

"You were only kidding yourself, Harry." said Sirius and Mrs. Weasley together.

"Stupid, fat, selfish, greedy, git!" snarled students across the Hall.

"Best food I've ever had, till I went to the Weasely's." said Harry looking over to Mrs. Weasley, who blushed.

"I love steak." said Lupin fondly, licking his lips.

"That's the wolf in him, he's a big meat and chocolate kinda guy. Screw the potatoes." said Sirius sniggering.

“That steak was really good too.” said Harry with a smile.
"He came up with that nickname, though." said Lupin looking thoughtful.

"No, it IS going the way he wants. He loves scaring all the first year Gryffindors like that. Peter's reaction is his favorite, fainted dead away." said Sirius smiling wickedly. "Too bad it didn't kill him outright." he added with a growl.

"See?" said Sirius gesturing towards the book.

"I would let him act any way he wanted." said Malfoy quietly.

"I wasn't either." he said even quieter.

"How much do you want to bet Ron, Hermione and Harry find out how it happened, before they graduate?" said Fred and George.

"I'll take that bet, I say they don't." said Malfoy.

"Five Galleons?" said the twins, Malfoy nodded.

"Where did you get that much money?" questioned Mr. and Mrs. Weasely.

"Ummm...savings...."they said meekly. Neither of their parents bought that excuse, but they didn't pursue it.
"I love treacle tarts. Love treacle anything really," said Harry fondly closing his eyes and smiling.

"Tell me you know how to make those!" said Lupin eagerly, he smiled broadly when he saw Harry nodded.

"I take it, that you're the designated cook at our place then." said Sirius with a smile.

"I wouldn't have it any other way." said Harry happily.

"That wasn't a funny statement." snarled Professor Snape.

"Professor Snape is right, Mr. Finnigan. Was your father abusive in any way?" said Professor Dumbledore seriously, the twinkling gone from his eyes.

"No, not in any sense of the word. It was a shock, but he got over it, we're best friends, we've always been." said Seamus quickly.

"Ron, we've talked to you about different families, including Augusta and her family." admonished Mrs. Weasely.

"I forgot, I was getting sleepy and I forgot." Ron said defending himself.

"Accidental magic doesn't work that way, Neville," said Harry, pulling out his little black notebook and flipping the pages, people waited to hear his take on it, but he said nothing.

The same growling that went on during the parts that mentioned the Dursleys, were now growling towards Neville’s Great Uncle Algie.
"Hey now, my great uncle was always an odd duck. He never tried to hurt me intentionally. He would always use his wand to stop me from getting hurt. And when my gran found out about all this she kicked him out for over a year.

Dialogue set, third sentence.

"She didn't know I was there!" Neville said loudly to the growling crowd.

Dialogue set, fourth sentence.

"That would be the spiritual core releasing a short burst of magic. Because of the times your Great Uncle tried to get magic out of you, your core shut it self away to protect itself. Your core is still trying to start up from the forced shut down." said Harry calmly.

"How long will it take to get going?" said Neville quickly.

"Well, keep up with the D.A practices and you should be fine. I'd say a few more months and your core will open fully like it should be. Also a new wand wouldn't hurt. Wielding your father's wand wasn't and isn't helping you."

"How long did you know I had my father's wand?" said Neville, his eyes big and round.

"Quite a while." said Harry calmly.

Dialogue set, fifth sentence.

"Wasn't after she learned what Uncle Algie did to cause me to bounce from the second floor and into the road." said Neville.

End of dialogue set.

"Mixed messages that is." muttered Ron. "Pleased and punishing you." he added silently laughing. Neville was listening and he laughed too.

Fiftieth paragraph.

"Never saw anyone so excited for classes." said Percy with a smile towards Hermione.

Fifty-first paragraph.

Snape glared at Harry, and was shocked to see Harry look down in shame.

"Sorry, Professor..." he said quietly.
Fifty-second paragraph.
"Say what?"
"Pain? In his scar?"
"Does that mean.."
"If it's in the books..."
"Then it's true..."
"He does get pain in his scar!"
"What does that mean?"

Snape sat in amazement, as did Dumbledore. Harry sensed Voldemort behind Quirrell's turban!

Umbridge wasn't in the least bit happy, but she shrugged it off. Brat must already be losing whatever mind he had. Good, any more of these spasms of pain, and he will be chucked into St.Mungos before the next book is finished!

Dialogue line.
Dialogue line.
Dialogue line.

"SEE! HE DOES LIE" screamed Fudge and Umbridge.

"Only when he doesn't want anyone to know he's hurting." shouted Ron bitterly.

The Weaselys, the rest of the staff, the guests, and the two men sitting in the bowl with him all turned to look at him in concern.

Fifty-third paragraph.

Now it was Snape's turn to look down in shame.

Dialogue line.
Dialogue set.

Snape shrugged, he did know a lot, about the Dark Arts.

Fifty-fourth paragraph.
The twins, Harry, Ron and Hermione all smiled mischievously. The adults around them all groaned.

“Hypocrit.” muttered Harry to Sirius.

“Proud of it.” said Sirius.

"Tries to enforce it, it never works." said Dumbledore still smiling.

"Or scaring your Head of House nearly senseless." said Professor McGonagall smiling at Harry.

"Huh? What? What did you say?" said Sirius looking past Lupin and Harry to look at Dumbledore.

But he wasn't listening, Dumbledore was looking down, I should have done more than just warn them, barriers or something. thought Dumbledore. But then the thought bitterly, I wanted Harry to fight Him, wanted him to meet the man, the monster, that took his family. I should have been there, sooner not later. What a monstrous old man I have carved myself to be. Dumbledore looked darkly at the floor. He looked up and saw a levitating crystal phial of Calming Draught. Dumbledore looked over at Harry and saw him waving his wand above his head and without looking at Dumbledore or the phial, lifted the Draught.

"Dead serious." said Ron.

"I didn't even let the Head Boy or Head Girl what was down that corridor." said Dumbledore firmly.
"Oh Potter, must you be so observant?" said Professor Flitwick covering his eyes. Dumbledore laughed.

"I want to hear Mr. Potter sing again!" cried Professor Flitwick. The rest of the school cheered once more.

"Do I have to?" whimpered Harry softly to Sirius.

"Most definitely." said Sirius.

"But, I already sang today!" whined Harry. Lupin smiled down at him.

"Too bad, Professor Flitwick wants to hear you sing, and so do we. Come on Harry, there's not many times we get to hear you sing."

"Come on Harry! Just this last song! We promise! No more singing today!" chanted the school.

Harry sighed in defeat. He scratched his head and thought of a tune. Nothing he could think of would fit the school song, till he thought of a song that he had heard once. He was in Mrs. Figgs and thought it was the most wonderful song he had heard. He flipped through the notebook on his lap and found the lyrics and the notes he had written down quickly when he heard it the second time. Reading the notes and keeping tempo with his thumb and forefinger, He sang the school song

School Song

When he was done singing, he blushed as the school and the guests gave him a standing ovation. He laid back down in the bowl and attempted to bury his head in the covers.

"What melody was that from, Mr. Potter?"

"Umm...Whistle Down the Wind..." said Harry quietly.

"Can you sing it for us Harry?" said Hermione excitedly.

"Hermione, you and the rest of the school promised me I wouldn't have to sing anymore today!" said Harry rolling his eyes and frowning at Hermione.

Hermione looked disappointed and pouted.

"That was very pretty Harry, you should sing professionally. I'm sure Stubby will give you some tips." said Luna, pointing to Sirius.
Sirius turned around, expecting to see another person behind the bowl. But no one was there. He turned back to Luna and pointed to himself.

"Are you talking about me?"

"Luna, he isn't Stubby Boardman. He's Sirius Black, he's always been Sirius Black." said Lupin kindly.

"We went to go see him and 'The Hobgoblins' in concert though once, if you can call it a concert anyway. Didn't you throw a turnip at him?" said Sirius.

"Yeah, I saved up money to take my girlfriend to the best restaurant in England, and she ditches me for the bloody Hobgoblins. So I took Sirius with me and I tossed the turnip. She always was a big fan of his."

"He had nothing to do with your girlfriend acting like that!" said Hermione, slightly scolding her ex-Professor.

"She was onstage with him, snogging him. Just declared that he going to take her on a date. She accepted. I tossed the turnip and broke up with her the next time I saw her. She wasn't happy."

Sixtieth paragraph, second paragraph.

"Why did you pick a funeral march?" asked Ron laughing.

"Cause we did Opera the year before." said Fred.

"And Yodeling the year before that." said George.

End of sixtieth paragraph.

"We were amazed you had the patience to wait for us, sir." said the twins grinning at Dumbledore.

"I enjoy all forms of music, if it has a melody, I love it." said Dumbledore beaming at them.

Dialogue line.

Sixty-first paragraph.

"Hmm..you weren't too tired not to take in your surroundings. Very impressive, Potter." said Kingsley nodding approvingly.

Sixty-second paragraph.

"Three guesses who that is!" cried the Weasely twins excitedly.
"He always had quick wit." said Professor Flitwick, whispering to Professor Snape who snorted slightly.

"Now, now Mr. Weasely. Do try and give him a sporting chance." said Dumbledore shaking a finger at the third oldest Weasely kindly. Percy blushed.

"He never introduces himself to the first years with the rest of the ghosts. He always waits and meets them when there is no teacher present." said Professor McGonagall.

"Baron won't listen to you, Weasely, you know that. He only listens to his Slytherins. Anyone else, he ignores." said Snape giving a sneer to the graduate.

"I want in on the bet, I say Harry doesn't find out what happened to Baron! Ten Galleons." said Blaise walking over and dropping ten galleons in a tin the twins conjured up.

A few more Slytherins walked over and dropped some money in the tin. Hermione was the official wager writer.

"Oh, Neville, he didn't hurt you? Did he?" said Luna, running a hand over Neville's head. Neville blushed and muttered that he was alright.

"He has no need to listen to Prefects, only teachers and Head Boy and Girl. And barely the Head Students."
"How did you know it was silk, Harry?' asked Hermione.
"Aunt Petunia's Cocktail dresses were made of silk."

"Thanks again Ron, Harry." said Neville

"Hey, their house doesn't sound anything different than ours!" pouted a disappointed Hufflepuff.

"The only differences are: the color theme of the rooms, the location, and the odd assortment of activities," said Dumbledore.

"What do you mean, sir?" said one of the first years from the Slytherin table.
"Well, for the Slytherin house, you have quite a bit of what? Mr. Douglas?"
"W-well," he stammered, amazed he was addressed to personally by the headmaster. "there are a lot of bookshelves and puzzles."
"Very good, do you enjoy them, the puzzles?" he said nodding.
"Oh, yes sir! I love puzzles! Especially the wooden ones!"
"Wonderful! And, Mr. Baker, what happens to be the activities in the Ravenclaw house?" he said addressing another first year.
"Umm--there are books like what Baker said, and there are chessboards all over. I love chess, next week I'm gonna challenge Ron to a game!" he said excitedly. Dumbledore chuckled as Ron blushed.
"Mr. O'Reily, what happens to lie about the Hufflepuff common room?" he said addressing a Hufflepuff first year this time.
"Well, there are a lot of games about the house, and according to my dad, Gryffindor is the same way."
"Very good. There are some similarities and some differences, but nothing you would rather trade for anything. Except for those horrid Gryffindor curtains on the beds. I set fire to them once. Accidental of course." he said beaming as the students fell on the floor laughing.
Harry smiled, Dumbledore told him that story at the end of last year to try and cheer him up, it worked.

Sixty-eighth paragraph, second sentence, fifteenth word.

"We're in the dungeons." piped Douglas.

"We're near the Greenhouses" shouted O'Reily.

"We're in a western tower." yelled Baker.

End of sixty-eighth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"I don't know why he would do that." said Lupin thoughtfully. People who didn't know who Scabbers really was, which was a majority of the school, looked at the man in confusion.

“He's blending in.” muttered Sirius.

Sixty-ninth paragraph.

"Explained why you didn't answer me." smirked Ron.

Seventieth paragraph, first sentence.

"Happens to me all the time." said Ron.

Seventieth paragraph, second sentence.

"Creepy turban." shivered Colin.

"You have no idea." moaned Ron, Harry and Hermione.

Seventieth paragraph, third sentence, first comma, eighth word.

Malfoy paled.

Seventieth paragraph, third sentence, third comma.

Then Snape paled.
Lupin and Sirius turned white and quickly turned towards Harry,

"I don't remember that dream." he said quietly.

"That explains it." said Harry with a blank expression.

"That is the end of the chapter. Who would like to read next?" asked Luna, looking around to the rest of the school dreamily.

"I'll take it!" said Bill. He stood up and accepted the book from Luna.

"This won't be good." said Snape shaking his head.

Professor McGonagall looked over to him in confusion.
Chapter Summary

Now the attention is turned to Snape, and he's beginning to wish he had just stayed in bed this year.

Chapter Notes

I don't own Harry Potter.

Chapter title. said Bill loudly.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

First paragraph.

"Drove me mad, I thought I was going in circles, because I kept seeing the same people time after time." said Harry thinking thoughtfully.

A few students paled in shame. They didn't know all they were doing was confusing him.

Second paragraph, first sentence, first colon.

"Did you count them Harry?" asked Neville with widened eyes.

"Ron and I kept getting late to class, so when we had free time, we would go and explore, we climbed up and down every staircase, and traveled down every corridor." said Harry simply. "Took a long time."

“Nearly wore out my shoes.” said Ron.
"I hate that one!" said Neville bitterly. "I fell through it a time or two." said both Harry and Ron.

"Tricksy tricksy!" chanted Harry in an imitation of Peeves. The students laughed and clutched at their sides.

"Found out half a year later, that they could, it's a defensive measure. But it takes the command of a teacher to get them to move about." said Harry absently fingering his little black notebook. McGonagall smiled to herself.

"They are particularly fond of doing that." said Madame Bones, thinking back to her school days.

"It's his job as House ghost." said McGonagall. "He is supposed to guide the new students in the right direction."

"And that's being kind." said Neville bitterly.

"If I find out who taught him that little joke, I will give them something they'll never forget." said McGonagall threateningly. Lupin cringed guiltily in his seat. Only Harry, due to the fact that he was laying against him, took notice.

Sirius, Lupin, Fred and George all whistled. It took all of them a week or two to get on his bad side.
"RONALD BILIUS WEASELY! HAROLD JAMES POTTER! I FORBID YOU TO GO NEAR THAT CORRIDOR AGAIN!" screeched Mrs. Weasely.

"From now on or back in time?" said Harry calmly, raising his eyebrows. Ron was too busy trying to hide in the love seat beside Hermione.

Mrs. Weasely stuttered and stammered, Ron gathered up the courage and meekly told his mother:

"Don't bother continuing mum. Harry won't let you win, never does when he has that tone in his voice." said Ron. “But you can count on us not going near that dog again, from now on.”

"SAY WHAT?" bellowed Sirius, he turned towards Harry, clutching his leg. "He better not have."

Harry's back arched and he couldn't catch his scream behind his teeth this time.

"AAAAAAAAARRRRRGGGGGHHHHH!"

Lupin and Sirius both jumped. They had forgotten that his leg was badly injured.

Madame Pomfrey rushed over along with Professor Snape and McGonagall. Dumbledore came over and did his best to offer comfort.

As Snape helped Harry drink potions and Madame Pomfrey applied some healing salves to his legs, Sirius cried and screamed his apologies to Harry. Lupin tried to give Sirius some reassurance.

"You didn't mean to hurt him, I know that, we all know that. We both just sort of forgot that Harry was hurt there, I just focused on his back. Poppy, Severus, will he be alright?" said Lupin holding onto Sirius’ arms as his friend sunk to the floor in anguish.

"Yes, he will be fine, he's resting now." said Madam Pomfrey covering Harry with the red and gold blanket. Snape was putting away the empty phials in a velvet sack.

Bill looked down, in a worried fashion, and noticed: "Oi, the books not closed! I thought Harry had to be awake for us to read it."

"Not really, Harry only has to be here for the books to be read. He is more than welcome to sleep through the proceedings." said one of the Unspeakables, looking concerned at the youth.

"Well, I think that Harry should be removed to the Hospital Wing!" said Madame Pomfrey indignantly.

"Absolutely not! We've wasted enough time, lets continue on!" said Umbridge with a snarl.

"As much as I hate to agree with her, we should continue on. The students are missing valuable school time." said McGonagall, looking furious with herself. She didn't want to say it, but as Deputy Headmistress, it was her duty.
"He was not passing just on chance." whispered Ron furiously.

"I think she's particularly lovely." said Luna dreamily. "I always get along with her, I give her leftover pieces of fish."

"You're the only one." said Ginny looking at Luna with a shocked look.

"That is a very nice compliment for Argus, Harry." said Dumbledore, brushing Harry's bangs out of his eyes. Harry still slept on.

"I've given her one or two in my time." muttered Lupin. Sirius nodded in agreement, still weeping silently over Harry.

"How could you know her from your school days?" asked Fred incredulously.

"She is Argus' familiar, they are very rare. Not all pets become a familiar, so far, only Hermione, Harry, Argus and myself have found familiars. Familiars tend to live much longer than most pets. They last just about as long as the master, retaining their youth." said Dumbledore, his eyes twinkling as he continued to brush back Harry's black bangs.

Sirius hiccupped a laugh and leaned over the top edge of the bowl, watching Harry sleep.

The Herbology enthusiasts and the Hufflepuffs cheered loudly.

People nodded in agreement.
"We should think about retiring Professor Binns." said Professor McGonagall.

"I'm not too sure about that. Even when we had living teachers, teaching the subject, it was dreadfully boring. But perhaps, if we could have someone a little more exciting teaching the class." said Dumbledore.

"I vote for Professor Lupin." said Dean to the applause of the majority of the school.

Lupin turned pink. He muttered something about being too dangerous, but Dumbledore stated loud and proud that he would start the paperwork immediately.

"I ABSOLUTELY FORBID IT!" yelled Umbridge. Sirius covered Harry's ears with both of his hands, making sure that Harry didn't wake up. Fudge looked from Umbridge and Dumbledore, not knowing which side to take part in.

"I would love to see you try." said Rivers firmly. “If he 's qualified, he'll have the job...regardless of personal afflictions. If you can take care of what needs to be taken care of then it's fine.”

Umbridge's screeching ceased immediately.

The Charms N.E.W.T.s students and the Ravenclaw students all gave their teacher a standing ovation.

Several students laughed at that, even a few teachers. When Flitwick would come to teach the first years, and he came to the offspring of a favorite student he would perform that acrobatic stunt.

McGonagall smiled, so pleased that tears pricked her eyes, she reached over Dumbledore's shoulder and caressed Harry's head.

"I need to warn students against foolishness in my class." said McGonagall sternly, but the sternness of her voice didn't reach the hand was touching Harry's cheek.
Many seventh years nodded.

"That was a big letdown." said Parvati.

"After class, when we were in an empty classroom, Harry showed me how to do it properly. That is when he told me that he wasn't going to go all out in class." Ron said to Hermione.

"It really was." said Neville. "Compared to Professor Lupin and Harry's teachings." he added, looking over to his old Defense teacher and his unconscious D.A. leader.

"The garlic smell was to cover something else." said Hermione and Ron.

"Garlic wouldn't have protected him." mumbled Harry, almost waking. Dumbledore waved his wand over Harry's face slowly, Harry's barely opened eyes, slowly closed once more.

"Good thinking Albus, let him rest a bit more." said Madame Pomfrey, she placed a silencing charm around him, so that no more noise disturbed him.

"No, turns out he was miles ahead. I even told him so." said Ron smiling at his sleeping best mate.

"Being friends with Harry gave me more than a head start. I had the bloody best tutor in the whole bloody world!" said Ron. His mother wanted to tell him off, but now she wasn't too sure if she Fourteenth paragraph.
"Hey it took a while, Harry was able to find his around fine, but when he told me to lead, it kind of went badly." said Ron turning pink.

Dialogue line.
"Harry can't eat porridge without sugar. He can't stand it, without it." said Ron smirking.

Dialogue line.
"Sadly, it’s true." muttered Dumbledore.

Dialogue set, first sentence.
Snape looked quickly over to McGonagall and his mouth hung open.
"You don't favor them?" he said weakly.
"Absolutely not, unfortunately you will see just how much I don't favor them." she said proudly first but then she ended in a hurt tone.

End of dialogue set.

Fifteenth paragraph.
"It was a bit scary." said a first year Gryffindor.

Sixteenth paragraph, second sentence.
"Aww!" cooed Pavarti, Padma and Lavender.

End of sixteenth paragraph.

Letter to Harry from Hagrid.
"Oh! Hagrid, that was very kind of you!" said Tonks smiling broadly.
"'Twas nuthin, jus' knew he needed a bit o' break." said Hagrid sitting next to the bowl, keeping close, protecting Harry as he slept.
Filthy half-breed, filthy hovel, I didn't want to stay in it a second more than I absolutely had to. thought Umbridge fiercely.

Seventeenth paragraph.

Eighteenth paragraph.

"I'm sure, Severus, that he meant since he had arrived at Hogwarts." said Dumbledore reassuring the Potion's Master. For Snape had turned a deadly shade of white and his mouth opened in massive shock.

Nineteenth paragraph.

Snape slowly sank into a chair that Dumbledore magicked underneath him.

"Severus, I think we need to have a chat with Harry." said Dumbledore.

"He doesn't feel that way anymore, he just makes it look like he still hates you. Harry doesn't hate anyone, except You-Know-Who." said Ron quietly. Snape looked thoughtful at Harry.

Twentieth paragraph.

"We've never used those, yet." said a seventh year.

Snape's mouth twitched. "You aren't supposed to, those are for my potions."

"Too bad, Harry isn't up, we could ask him what potions take them." said a few Gryffindors.

Twenty-first paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"Oh, Severus!" cried McGonagall and Dumbledore, covering their eyes with their hands.

Twenty-second paragraph, first sentence.

Only Crabbe and Goyle laughed this time around. Malfoy only groaned.

End of twenty-second paragraph.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

Snape performed a double-take down at the sleeping form to the right of him. Harry gave him a compliment.
"That speech was actually quite nice, Severus, very impressive." said Dumbledore, clapping his hands.

"Oh, dear." said Dumbledore, ceasing his clapping and massaging the bridge of his crooked nose. "Not the conclusion to your speech that I was expecting."

"Cause I knew Harry wasn't a dunderhead, and I knew Hermione wasn't one either." said Ron firmly.

"And you aren't one, Miss Granger." reassured Flitwick.

"We weren't paying attention." said Ron a little embarrassed.

"Harry saw your hand up in the air and wanted you to take the answer and the points. He wrote the answer to me under the table, after Snape repeated the question." said Ron.

"He always does." muttered Ron, so quietly that Snape didn't hear him.
"He actually didn't know what that was." said Ron with a small smile. "He went up to the dorms and looked it up real quick."

"There isn't a book that he hasn't opened." said Ron proudly.

“You're not being fair, Severus, no other student would be able to answer those questions, not many students open their books beforehand.” said Flitwick.

"He was hoping no one did, but Harry and Hermione showed him.” said Neville smiling broadly.

"Did he know that answer?" said Terry Boot.

"Yep, I even knew that too." said Ron with a smile.

Several Ravenclaws whistled

"There you go, Harry trying to nudge you to the spotlight." said Ron smiling over to Hermione.

“He won't like that one bit.” whispered Fred looking at Snape.
"He never is pleased." said a very brave and very foolish first year Gryffindor. Snape glared at him.

Dialogue set.

"Because you didn't tell them to, to start with." said Madame Hooch angrily.

Thirty-second paragraph.

"What? What cheek did you get from him? He merely said that he didn't know, and he offered the honor of answering to someone who knew that answer." shouted Madame Hooch once more.

“Requesting me to ask Granger was cheek.” said Snape sourly.

“Though I have to admit, he didn't take nearly as much as he normally did for cheek.” said McGonagall thoughtfully.

Thirty-third paragraph, fourth sentence.

"I saw his stewed horned slugs, they were done wrong." said Hermione in confusion.

Thirty-third paragraph, fifth sentence, first comma.

"Sorry about that Seamus." said Neville sadly.

"It's alright Nev, it was just a cauldron. Someone ordered a new one for me."

"That would be Harry. He felt bad, Snape actually sent him on a bit of a guilt-trip.” said Ron with a smile.

End of thirty-third paragraph.

"Oh, are you sure, you're alright Neville?" said Luna, looking at Neville. Neville blushed furiously and smiled.

"I'm fine. Really."

Dialogue set, second sentence, first comma.

"SEVERUS! HEAL NOW, SCOLD LATER!" shouted Madame Pomfrey. Snape looked away in guilt.
"Are you sure you're alright dear?" said Mrs. Weasely. Neville smiled at her and nodded.

"Severus..." said Dumbledore warningly.

"What on earth are you talking about, there was nothing the boy could have done!" said Professor Sprout.

"He looked over to Neville, but it was a little too late. Harry tried to say something, but then the hissing noise came from you guys and the potion was flying in Neville's face and then there was potion on the floor." said Ron, defending his sleeping friend.

"That is an understatement." muttered Ron quietly.

"Harry didn't need to worry, Fred, George, Sirius and James lost more than that in the first three seconds of their first years." said McGonagall fondly.

"Always 'appy to 'ave anyone 'round." said Hagird cheerfully. Umbridge snarled.

Hermione and Ron smiled fondly.
"Is he very vicious?" asked a nervous second year, who had never spoken to Hagrid since the voyage in the boats.

"No, he's very, very gentle." said Hermione, patting the Ravenclaw on the back.

"Harry says that it's the most comfortable bed he's ever slept on." said Ron with a smile.

"When did Harry sleep on Hagrid's bed?" asked Sirius, frowning a little.

"We were just walking around in our third year when Harry accidentally fell in a half-covered gnome hole. It started raining and with Harry's ankle all wrenched..." said Ron.

"Why didn't you bring him up to me? Despite the rain?" said Madame Pomfrey.

"Harry was in pain. He didn't want to go any further, he was gritting his teeth. And when you see him like that, you know it isn't good." said Ron, grimacing in remembrance of it. "We sat him down, and I ran and got Hagrid. It started to rain even harder when we got back to the spot where I left Harry and Hermione. Well, Hagrid picked him up and took him to his house."

"Still, why wasn't I called!" cried Madame Pomfrey.

"Hagrid had it all under control." said Ron shrugging. "Harry fell asleep after Hagrid made him some tea and while Harry slept, we helped Hagrid bind up his foot. He put some sort of salve on his ankle and his ankle stopped swelling, and it turned back to the normal color."

"What was that salve?" said Madame Pomfrey.

"T'was somethin' the centaurs gave me. Works for all kinds o' injuries, an' scrapes." said Hagrid.

"Filthy creatures." muttered Umbridge.

"He don't look at the hair, but looks for freckles." said Charlie smiling.

"FRED! GEORGE!" shouted Mr. Weasley, "YOU APOLOGIZE TO HAGRID, RIGHT NOW!"

"Sorry, Hagrid." they said quickly.
"Crikey, dad, you get scary, just like Harry!" said George.

Forty-second paragraph, first sentence.

"I'm sorry 'Arry, Ron, didn' know ye didn' like me cookin'" said Hagrid glumly.

"It's just that, maybe you're used to cooking for half-giants, Hagrid. Maybe Harry can teach you to cook for humans, when he gets all better." said Dumbledore kindly.

End of forty-second paragraph.

"Sorry, but that's gross." said Lavender giving a slight shudder.

Forty-third paragraph.

"Always nice to have an adult on our side." said Ron happily.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

"Don't know who would win in that fight." said Fred wondering.

End of dialogue set.

Forty-fourth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"Not you, just you're father." said Snape quietly, to the unconscious form.

Dialogue line.

Forty-fifth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"Like you too, Hagrid." said Charlie brightly.

Forty-sixth paragraph, first sentence.

"Hmm...Very shrewd thinking Potter." said Moody to himself.
"Cause I didn't remember it." said Ron a little sheepishly.

Was that what the thieves looked for? That grubby little package?

"I wouldn' ta minded if ya said no." said Hagrid.

"What did he learn?" said Sirius looking intently as he was brushing Harry's hair back.

"Those are very good key questions." said Dumbledore. He looked down at Harry, he was stirring again.

"Is that the end of the chapter, Mr. Weasely?" said Dumbledore quickly.

"Yes, sir."

"Very well, we shall have a bit of lunch then, good thing too, Harry's wishing to wake up." Dumbledore said, smiling down to the young man.

"You did fall asleep Harry, and you missed a good chunk of that chapter, as well." said Lupin kindly. "But you've woken up in time for lunch. I'll go and get a plate for you."

Sirius slowly walked over and looked ashamedly down at the ground.

"I'm so sorry, Harry, I didn't..should've..."

"It's alright, I sort of forgot my leg was injured. With me lying here, my leg doesn't hurt as bad as it did when I sat." said Harry, sending Sirius a smile.

Lupin came back with a plate loaded to the brim with different things, including three treacle tarts.
"I love you!" said Harry grasping the plate quickly.

"He'd say that to Umbridge if she was holding treacle tart." whispered Ron to Neville and Ginny. They both tried to stifle their laughter. Ron was then hit in the back of the head with a small cushion.

"I heard that." said Harry, with frown on his face, but his eyes were lit up.

Ron noticed, there was a spark behind them, that he hadn't seen since before the incident. He was getting better, slowly but surely, he was getting better.
As everyone finished their lunch, and laughing as Lupin and Ron gulped down as many triple chocolate chip cookies, that Harry had baked that morning, as they possibly could. Lupin and Sirius settled themselves back into the bowl and offered Harry some comfort as best they could, once again. This time, they took precautions with Harry's legs by putting cushions down around his legs and by having Lupin sit down supporting his feet. He was the least likely one to lose his head in a fit, so, down to the more painful area he sat.

Harry was once more covered by the gold and red blanket that he became so fond of, and the everyone resumed their seats. Madame Pomfrey offered to read the next chapter, and walked back to her chair with the book.

"Comfortable Harry? I don't want...you hurting again." said Sirius quietly.

"Perfectly comfortable Sirius." said Harry, stretching slightly.

"Harry, if you feel any pain..." said Mrs. Weasely soothingly.

"Molly, we've got him, he's fine. He's not your cub, he's ours." said Sirius in a stern tone.

Mrs. Weasely's lips quivered.

"Mrs. Weasely, I'm alright. If something goes amiss, I'll let Sirius know. And knowing him, he'll panic and you'll know straight off." said Harry with a broad smile.

Mrs. Weasely gave him a smile in return and sat down while Sirius gave his ear a flick.

To be on the safe side, Dumbledore saved a little tray of food and placed it near Sirius's left side.

"Just in case he gets hungry." he explained

Madame Pomfrey cleared her throat.

"One gets the feeling this won't be a good chapter." said Sirius staring at Madame Pomfrey.
"What were you doing, dueling?" shouted McGonagall.

"Umm.."

"Er.."

"Never mind." said McGonagall.

First paragraph, first sentence, first comma.

"Wow! There is a boy, Harry hated more than Dudley?"

"I thought I did at the time, that changed, years later.” said Harry.

First paragraph, end of first sentence.

"Ouch!" moaned and groaned half the school.

"That hurts." said Malfoy sadly.

First paragraph, third sentence.

"Not good, especially if Gryffindors groan. They can handle almost anything without batting an eye.” said a Hufflepuff whispering to her friends.

End of first paragraph.

"Yeah, that would make me groan too, at least when I had flying lessons, it was with the Ravenclaws." said the Hufflepuff girl.

Dialogue line.

"Malfoy turned out to be the fool on the broom compared to you." said Neville gleefully.

"Oh yes, Longbottom, tell us how you mastered flying in thirty seconds." said Pansy with a wide evil smile that would do Umbridge proud.

"You never left the ground." retorted Parvati. "Not even during the final class."

Second paragraph.

"That sounds more like Harry." said Katie.
"And was it, Ron?" said Harry, looking intently over to Ron.

"No, it wasn't. He was good." said Ron grudgingly.

"Just like he did at Madam Malkins" said Parvati rolling her eyes.

"When did you come face to face with one of those?" said Snape looking down at his prized student with a raised eyebrow and a frown on his lips.

"Well, it was when we were on holiday." he said quietly.

"And where were you when you saw this Muggle monstrosity?" he said, the eyebrow raising higher and higher.

"On the ground, hiding behind my mother." he said even quieter.

"Where?" asked Snape louder.

"On the ground." said Malfoy a little louder. He blushed when people started to snigger.

"Actually the countryside was just my backyard and the fields." said Seamus a little shamefully.

"Which was almost nobody." smirked Zacharias. Ron glared at him.

"Which was an absolute lie!" Zacharias laughed.

"No it wasn't actually. I had to go save him." said Charlie.

"And he was grounded for two months for being up there alone." said Mr. Weasely with a smile towards his youngest son. Ron looked down but smiled, while Zacharias stared.

"Your dad would take you for flights on his broom," said Sirius with a smile. "Lily made a halter so you could ride on the broom with him and not fall off. You kept wanting the broomstick to go faster, and the broom listened to you more than it listened to your dad."
"Funniest thing I ever saw." said Dumbledore chuckling loudly, "Your father trying to get the broom to slow down as you urged it to go faster."

"Look how red he's getting!" said Fred laughing loudly, pointing towards Harry.

End of third paragraph.

"Well, I didn't understand the game, now that I saw Harry play it, I want to see it again. Can you take me to a game sometime, Dean?" asked Ron eagerly.

"Sure thing Ron. That is actually what my mum and I had planned, the year we graduate, mum and I are going to take you guys to a game." said Dean smiling as Ron and the other boys whooped.

Fourth paragraph, first sentence.

"She was afraid I'd get hurt. She worries a lot about me." said Neville with a small smile.

End of fourth paragraph.

"HARRY!" shouted Mrs. Weasely and Lupin.

"Yes?" said Harry calmly.

"Oh, there's that tone again, they ain't going to win this one either." muttered Ron to Hermione and Neville. Neville smiled, he couldn't wait to see Harry fight back. Even the other students listened in intently.

"He's your friend! You shouldn't be that way!" scolded Lupin. Mrs. Weasely nodded in agreement.

"I didn't say it, I thought it." he said with a small smile.

"Still..." said Lupin irritably.

"Haven't you thought about something, that you didn't want shared?" said Harry with the same smile.

"Well...yes. What about it?" said Lupin slowly losing his footing

"And whatever you thought, is it still a secret? What you thought, is it still only known to you?" said Harry still smiling.

"Yeah." said Lupin looking confused.

"Were you persecuted for your thoughts?" pressed Harry.

"Well, no...but.." stammered Lupin.

"Why should I not expect that of my own thoughts? Why should I be punished for the thoughts I have? When you yourself have created thoughts similar to my own?" said Harry looking innocent.
"We didn't...we weren't going to pun...." stuttered Lupin, looking worried.

"In short, leave me alone." he said firmly, looking up to Lupin from where he laid. Lupin looked hurt.

Fifth paragraph, first sentence.

"More so, I'm not very fond of heights." she said weakly.

Fifth paragraph, second sentence.

"You wouldn't be Hermione if you didn't." said Harry kindly.

Fifth paragraph, third sentence, ninth word.

"Harry you are hilarious!" said Fred and George wiping away the tears that had formed from laughing so hard.

"That would take a lot boring material to make him stupid." Rivers said quietly to McGonagall.

Fifth paragraph, end of third sentence.

"Oh Hermione! That book doesn't hold any real flying tips! For Quidditch players, yes! But not for normal, everyday flying," said Sirius laughing and smacking his forehead. Hermione blushed.

Fifth paragraph, fourth sentence, second comma.

"You're right Sirius, it didn't help at all." said Neville with a broad smile.

End of fifth paragraph.

"Sorry Hermione." said the entire group of Gryffindor fifth years.

Sixth paragraph.

SMACK!

Snape had just struck Malfoy sharply on the back of the head. Malfoy offered an apology to Harry quickly.

Seventh paragraph.
"What is that thing?" said a muggleborn second year.

Dialogue set.

"The only wrong thing about it, is that it doesn't tell you what you forgot." said Professor Flitwick said sadly.

"Harry, Hermione and Ron taught me a bunch of good ways to remember things, so I actually don't need that Remembrall anymore." said Neville beaming over to Ron and Harry.

Eighth paragraph.

"You used to call Harry a little thief, Batty. Do you remember?" said Dumbledore, trying to calm her. He knew, that when she worked herself up, she was twenty times worse than Molly or Harry ever could be.

"Indeed I do, Albus." she said, smiling all of a sudden. "The young scamp would crawl on the table, from his mother or father's lap and pilfer all the coconut macaroons, that I would bake." she chided, shaking the same finger towards Harry, quite a bit gentler though.

Ninth paragraph.

"Due to your father, James, I had to develop that ability." said McGonagall sternly.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"Well aren't you a tattle tale, Longbottom?" snickered Millicent Bulstrode.

"Better than losing one's property." said Blaise.

Millicent, turned red. "Why are you now sticking up for them?"

Blaise couldn't answer her. He couldn't understand it either, why was he standing up for the Gryffindors? Especially Potter and his friends!

My mother's numerous husbands. He thought to himself coldly. Many of them would smack him at almost every opportunity they had. They didn't like that she doted on him instead of them and they took their frustration out on him. Potter had the same kind of life, only his abuse was worse off.

It wasn't pity that drew him to Potter, it was....parallelism of the two of them. They were the exact same, yet not.
"Bull, you would have taken it." said Angelina furiously, not wishing to forgive the little troll for taking her three best Quidditch players away.

"Perfect flying conditions." said Madame Hooch and the Quidditch players

"I'll say it again, you should write music, Harry, or poetry." said Dumbledore smiling over to Harry.

"Ruddy brooms." mumbled Fred.

"School needs new brooms." muttered George.

"Not really, those are the best brooms to learn from." said Harry brightly. "Not too fast, slow enough so we can learn the basics all right. As long as one doesn't panic." he added and sending an apologetic look to Neville.

“Yeah well, new brooms would be nice.” said Fred and George together.

"I like your description of me, Mr. Potter. Very nice." said Madam Hooch, trying to hide a slight twinge of pink in her cheeks.

"You were being modest Mr. Potter. Your broom was off the ground at least two minutes before anyone else's did." said Madam Hooch looking at him proudly.
"I found out right quick after that, just how much I wanted to stay on the ground." said Neville trying not to laugh at himself.

"It worked before I got to Hogwarts." said Draco a little stubbornly.

"It wouldn't have, if you have flown for longer than an hour. Your hands would have been stiff and sore, you'd fallen off easily." said Madam Hooch simply.

Draco uncrossed his arms slowly.

"Oh, dear. I hope you don't get hurt Neville dear." said Mrs. Weasely. Neville looked a bit taken aback.

"She worries about everyone, Nev. Everyone and anyone who needs it." whispered Ron. "I just tell people to go with it."

"You can even judge distances, at such a young age? Is there anything you can't do?" asked Rivers.

Harry gave it some thought, then he smiled. "I'm a ruddy awful dancer, and I can't lie to save my life." he then thought once more. "and I wouldn't be able to do all I do, without my friends, and lots of outside help."

His friends smiled and many adults, including Rivers, nodded.

"Not even on a broom yet and you still had Seeker's Sight." said Angelina happily.

"Oh you poor thing." said Luna patting Neville's arm.
"Well that explains how we lost one." said Dumbledore kindly over to Neville. "Were you alright?"

"Yes sir, I only hurt my wrist. I'm sorry about the broom, sir." said Neville nervously.

"Oh don’t worry about it, you should have seen all the brooms that I have seen banished into Forbidden Forest. Your father, if I remember, sent two or three into the woods a week until he got the hang of it. Mind you, it took several months."

Neville beamed immensely.

"What was I thinking? Leaving the Gryffindors and the Slytherins alone with a bunch broomsticks all over the place! The Ravenclaws and Hufflepuffs together are one thing, but those two! What was I thinking?" said Madam Hooch looking up into the sky.

"I feel kind of like a big baby and a big wuss now." said Neville sadly.

"Why do you say that Neville? Having a broken wrist is quite painful." said Mr. Weasely smiling down at him.

"Yeah, but..that was only time I broke a bone in my life. Harry...the scroll...." he said almost in a whimpering tone.

The school, which was in a reasonably good mood, despite the fears that Neville had really hurt himself, all of a sudden turned very somber and sad.

"Neville..." started Harry, but he stopped. How should he go about this, without sounding like a prat. He gave up, rather reluctantly. He wanted him to feel better. But nothing, absolutely nothing could he think up.

"Of course you would." said Ginny rather fiercely.
"Didn't know Dudley was there." said Harry with a smile. People started to laugh.

Twenty-third paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"Good for you Pavarti, stand up for your fellow housemate" said Tonks.

Dialogue line.

"Still don't know what you see in fat cry-babies." sneered Pansy.

"Thinking back to that day, he was only five pounds overweight. You on the other hand, were at least ten pounds over." Harry said maliciously.

Pansy blanched.

"And as for the here and now. Neville has gotten taller and is dead on with the weight he should be. You haven't changed, still ten pounds over." he added snidely.

Pansy turned even whiter.

Sirius tugged at the top of Harry's head, "That was a very low blow to say to a girl. Normally I say don't pick on 'em, cause they'll mess you up something fierce. But right on, good show." he said wickedly.

Dialogue line.

Twenty-fourth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"That's right, get Neville's Remembrall back for him." said Sirius looking at the book.

Dialogue line.

Twenty-fifth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"And how are you going to get it up there? Madam Hooch said no flying?" said Percy looking confused.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

"You expected him to follow the rules, Percy?" said Sirius with his eyebrows raised.
"Wait, what? What did that book just say?" said Malfoy, thinking that he didn't hear right.

"It said, that I thought, that you could fly well." said Harry repeating it for Malfoy. Malfoy looked shocked.

End of dialogue set.

Twenty-sixth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Twenty-seventh paragraph, first sentence.

"I really hate to say this Potter," said McGonagall, whispering in his ear while leaning over to him. "I'm sort of glad you did. But you still shouldn't have startled me so."

Twenty-seventh paragraph, third sentence.

The students cheered, this was the start of the school's star Quidditch player's career!

End of twenty-seventh paragraph.

"I appreciated that." said Harry over to Ron.

Twenty-eighth paragraph.

"I wasn't expecting anyone to follow me. Thought I was the only one who knew how to fly well."

Dialogue line.

"AHA! Violent tendencies!" bellowed Umbridge and Fudge.

"I'll show you 'violent tendencies' if you interrupt with your nonsense again!" said Sirius and Madam Bones loudly.

The Minister and Umbridge cowered slightly.

Dialogue line.

Twenty-ninth paragraph, second sentence.

"That is what you used to do on your father's broom, with him. Just like I said a moment or two ago." said Dumbledore brightly.

End of twenty-ninth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"He's right, Malfoy will have to deal with you on his own." said Kingsley with a smile.

Thirtieth paragraph.

Dialogue set, second sentence, first comma.

"Coward." muttered Kingsley.

End of dialogue set.

"Oh, dear. It's going to break!" said one of the third year Hufflepuffs.

Thirty-first paragraph, first sentence.

"Slow motion? Just how finely tuned are your senses?" said Sirius quickly.

Thirty-first paragraph, second sentence, fourth comma, seventh word.

"If it weren't for that first scroll, I would say I'd beat you soundly for giving me a heart attack." said Sirius, accepting a Calming Draught from Dumbledore.

End of thirty-first paragraph.

People that hadn't heard this story, clapped wildly.

Dialogue line.

"Oooh, way to kill the moment!" shouted the twins.

Thirty-second paragraph.

"Diving from a fifty-foot dive doesn't scare you, but my coming after you causes you to tremble in fear?" said McGonagall said with her eye open wide.
Harry turned and blushed.

"Very, very wise." mouthed Lupin.

Dialogue line.

Thirty-third paragraph, first sentence, first comma.

Sirius whistled, "That's a first." McGonagall rewarded him with a face full of cake, from the table of snacks for Harry, at his elbow. She smirked as she put her wand away.

End of thirty-third paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"Why didn't' you ask people to find out what had happened?" asked Tonks questioningly.

"I didn't need to ask, I've already seen what happened from the window in my office." said McGonagall.

Thirty-fourth paragraph, second sentence.

"Oh, Potter, I'm sorry I frightened you." said Madam Hooch. "We wouldn't expel you for flying, we would've given you a month's worth of detention, maybe, but not expel you."

Thirty-fourth paragraph, third sentence.

"I wondered why you weren't talking, I've pulled students out of class before, and they've always defended themselves." said McGonagall.

End of thirty-fourth paragraph.

Harry gave a full-body shiver. Sirius and Remus looked at him concerningly.

"What's wrong, cub?" said Sirius.

"I was thinking what would have happened if I got expelled then, I'm not too sure how it would have gone. Very badly I suspect."

Growls rippled through the Great Hall.
"Don' need an assistant 'Arry, but t'was nice o' you ta think o' me." said Hagrid kindly.

"Felt ta same way, when I was expelled, bit depressin'." said Hagrid, but strangely he didn't have a sad look on his face. "But, I got ter stay at Hogwarts when they had ter leave. So I got the best lot." said Hagrid beaming.

"We don't use that sort of punishment here. I won't stand for it." said Dumbledore firmly.

Harry on the other hand wasn't listening. A flurry of recollections of the incident came to him once again, it was a thick cudgel and it was smashing into his chest. Was that what happened to him? No, he thought, that wouldn't explain the lacerations on his legs and chest. But that would explain the cracked and broken ribs he gained from the incident.

"He wasn't the only one, you looked absolutely perplexed, Harry." said Professor Flitwick.

"We didn't teach him that!" said Fred, George, Lupin and Sirius loudly.

"Wait, you didn't give him a detention?" said Professor Snape incredulously.

"Well, what did you give Mr. Malfoy?" questioned McGonagall

Snape said nothing.
"That I could remember, apparently." said Harry gaining his voice back from his thoughtful ravine.

"You and I will have to play sometime, Harry." called Charlie.

"Too light, STILL too light." mumbled Madam Pomfrey.

"Too right!" said Ron, thinking of the second scroll.

"Cor, Harry!" said a first year Hufflepuff.

"Flying flobberworms would have been better than that year." said Snape quietly with a large smirk on his face.
"Excellent' is an understatement." whispered Sirius. "And he would have been extremely proud."

"Wow, Ron not eating? Rita, are you writing this down? This could be the biggest news you've ever written. The only news you've ever written." said Bill smirking over to the paper correspondent. She only scowled, dang blasted quill wouldn't work for her and she to just sit and try and remember all she was hearing. Which was becoming, quickly, an impossibility.

"Oh, dear! Don't choke!" said Madam Pomfrey worriedly.

"I taught Ron The Heimlich, 'cause I had to do it on him one or twice." said Harry laughing hard.

"It lasted a lot longer than I thought it would." said Harry chuckling.

"What? I left two years before that! What the heck..was going on, with you lot?" said Charlie in shock.

"No seekers, no winners." said Fred shrugging.

"Traumatizing, that was." said Fred faking a shiver.
"You could've let me know you knew about that one!" said Lee a little hurt.

"Never, he's never going back." said Sirius, Lupin and Dumbledore together.

"Very brave to say that in front of them, Potter." said Snape, with a very impressed sound in his voice.

"Thank goodness, you were there. Our faces, probably, would have been rearranged." said Ron.

"Hmph, that's not likely." scoffed Ginny.

"Of course not!, Living in the Muggle world, how was he to know what happens during that?" said Seamus.

"It's like a muggle duel. Only wands, instead of guns or swords." said Harry.
"Yeah, don't go with smarts or anything. And why are you sizing them up? You said no contact!" scolded Tonks.

Malfoy didn't answer her.

Dialogue line.

"You knew this how?" asked Snape looking at him in amazement. But Draco didn't answer, he only shifted nervously in his seat.

Fiftieth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

"You say that while you are eating? Are you outta your mind!?" said Bill.

"I didn't think anything could happen." shrugged Ron.

Dialogue set, second sentence, second comma.

"He looked at me like I was insane. Kinda funny really." said Ron with a laugh.

End of dialogue set.

"Not really, was hoping you took it." said Draco.

"Why?" asked another Slytherin.

"You'll find out, fast." said Harry.

Dialogue line.

"Throw it on the ground and punch him in the nose." said Sirius.

Dialogue line.
"Right on." said Sirius with a high five to Ron.

Dialogue line.

Fifty-first paragraph.

"Honestly Hermione, every single time I looked up, there you were. Staring at me." said Harry with a laugh.

Hermione smiled and blushed deeply.

Dialogue line.

"Apparently not." said a Slytherin.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"Oh, Hermione! You really have to learn to mind your own business." said Lavender laughing.

"Oi! Leave her alone!" said Ron and Harry. Lavender looked taken aback.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"Who were you addressing that to?" asked Ron.

"Umm, Harry..." said Hermione quietly.

"Are you nuts?" said several different people.

"No, I wasn’t’ thinking of the good of the House, I only wanted to kick Malfoy's ass." said Harry defending Hermione.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"Oh, Ron. Could you at least, try and be nice?" admonished Mrs. Weasely.
"Hey I tried! Then I gave up." Ron said defending himself.

Fifty-third paragraph, first sentence.

"Why weren't you in bed, Longbottom?" asked McGonagall.

"Umm...I forgot the password" said Neville quietly.

Fifty-third paragraph, second sentence.

"Sage advice, Mr. Weasely." smiled Dumbledore.

End of fifty-third paragraph.

"I thought of it, like, facing all the bullies that had messed with me in the Muggle school I went to." said Harry with a satisfied smile.

Dialogue line.

Fifty-fourth paragraph, second sentence.

"That makes the Gryffindor common room seem creepy." said Dean shaking slightly.

End of fifty-fourth paragraph.

"You are stalking him, aren't you Hermione?" said Lupin, laughing out loud.

"I just thought he was interesting person! Not at all like the books I read." she said with a defeated voice.

Fifty-fifth paragraph.

"You sound like a wife, waiting for her drunk husband to come home." said Sirius almost falling out of bowl.

Hermione chewed her lip.
"Good luck with that." said Hermione starting to fight back. However, her voice was weak.

"Now, that is one of the qualities that I find so endearing about you." said Harry with a broad smile.

"You act like boyfriend and girlfriend." said Charlie.

"More like brother and sister." said Harry and Hermione quickly.

"I didn't sound like that did I?" said Hermione fearfully.

"Well, sort of..." said Harry and Ron feeling a little bad.

"Hermione, don't ever let me catch you saying that again." scolded McGonagall.

"I won't, I promise I won’t." said Hermione shamefully. Ron patted her on the back.

A few sixth years whistled, "How many points did you give her?"

"Sixty." said McGonagall.

More people whistled.

"I'm real sorry Hermione, but thank goodness Ron and Harry calmed you down. You were a bit much." said Neville. Hermione smiled sadly and nodded.
Well that sucks." said Fred and George with shocked looks on their faces. "Oh, wait a bit...what time did he say it was? Half past eleven? She's out visiting her friends then, you've got to wait about thirty minutes then to get back inside." said Sirius with a smirk.

"Not their problem." said Moody, he was not happy with the young lady. The way she acted, it was wrong. Though he was anxious to know how she changed for the better.

"ARE YOU FLIPPING PSYCHO? Why the heck would they defend you? No sane person would defend you?" said Fred and George staring at her. Hermione stood up and ran out of the Hall, crying.

Harry shook his head and began to stand. "Harry, you should rest." said Madam Pomfrey. "I'll go find her." Harry ignored her and finished standing "When she gets back, you all lay off, understand? If you've got a beef with her, you go through me." said Harry firmly and walked slowly out of the Hall.

His cane clicked heavily on the stone floor as he exited the hall. He closed the door behind himself and heaved a sigh. He then listened carefully, he heard sobbing coming from outside. He hobbled out to the grounds and there she was, underneath a tree to the right of the door.

Harry sighed again and walked over to her, he handed her a handkerchief. "I told them to lay off of you." said Harry leaning with his back against the tree heavily.

"Thanks, how much longer are they going to hate me?" she said desperately, crying into the piece of cloth.

"Only till the troll. Then they are going to love you, they will be worried sick about you." he said.
with a smile.

"Oh, Harry, you and Ron, you…” she started, wiping her eyes.

"We wouldn't be here without you." said Harry seriously.

"You would have thought of escape routes. You always do." hiccupped Hermione.

"There were times that I was a little slow on the uptake, and you rose to the occasion." said Harry, pulling her into a tight hug.

They stood there for a good three minutes or more, Hermione, slowly calming down.

"Let’s go back, Umbridge must be having a fit." he said with a smile. "On second thought, let’s go for a walk. My leg could do with some stretching and it being a nice day and all."

Hermione laughed and she and Harry walked along the path nearest to them, leading down to the Greenhouses.

It was an hour later, when they arrived back into the Great Hall. Umbridge was shrieking and caterwauling, if she was trying to deafen everyone near her, she was doing a bang up job.

"Where were you? We've been waiting for you to stop your crying and get back!" she screamed.

"I needed to stretch my legs a bit, and it took a long time for me to find her, ma'am." he said with innocent eyes. "Remember what I said." said Harry sternly to the people around them.

Several people walked up to her, including the twins and apologized profusely, didn't mean to hurt her.

Hermione sat down beside Ron, "Sorry I didn't come looking for you, but I had a feeling he would do a lot better talking to you then I would." said Ron with a smile.

"How did you two become friends? She sounded like an absolute horror." said Zacharias, he was the only non-Slytherin to not apologize to her.

Harry ignored him, and Hermione and Ron were too busy talking to each other to take notice of him.

Dialogue line.

"I still can't believe you said that, Hermione." said Ron quietly to Hermione.

Dialogue line.

"Oh, crud. What is there now?" asked Katie fearfully.
"Was it?" asked the twins
"Nope, thank God." said Harry and Ron.

"What the..." said Lupin.

Some people laughed but that stopped when Harry glared at them.

The other houses tried to stifle their laughter, what kind of password is that?

"Your so kind, Harry." said the fourth year Gryffindor that kept batting her eyelashes at him.
"Who's that?" asked Sirius quietly.
"Beats me, never met her before." said Harry plainly.

"Well, what were you doing out of the tower then? Why weren't you in bed?" asked Percy.
"Madam Hooch just said that he couldn't remember the password." said Sirius.
"Oh, right." said Percy quietly.
"Is he even scarier at night?" asked a first year Ravenclaw.

"Yes!" said Neville and the entire Slytherin house.

"After I heard that, I refused to teach him that curse. You don't use magic like that." said Harry looking over at Ron, sternly.

"It took me three months to learn it on my own." said Ron shaking his head.

"Oh, no! Does that mean you got caught?" whined Sirius sadly. Harry and Ron pretended to look ashamed.

Sirius groaned, until he saw Hermione laugh and shake her head. Then he bopped Harry on the head with a cushion, and threw one at Ron.

"That would have been a very bad move, Hermione." said Dumbledore said with a smile.

"You mean to say, that you, at eleven years of age, were already training yourself for an attack?" asked Moody, both eyes staring at him.

Harry looked down scratching his head.

"Good work, boy! CONSTANT VIGILANCE!" bellowed Moody. Several students shrieked and fell off their chairs.
"Or, he never intended to come." growled Sirius.

"Oh, sweet Merlin!" cried Fred.

"This is not good!" said George, covering his eyes.

"You're horror-struck, and you can still think enough to get the bloody hell out of there?" asked Lupin staring at the young man.

"I think when that happened with James and I, we stood frozen. Filch had to drag us out of the room he caught us in." said Sirius laughing.

"For being petrified, you were moving very well." Snape sneered.

"Oooh! Not good, not good at all." said the students.

"I thought that was Peeves making all that racket." said Professor Snape bitterly, the other teachers nodded.
"Small wonder he was in the lead." said Sirius with chuckle.

"Ever get the feeling Harry, kinda knew where he was going?" whispered Ron to Hermione.

"I didn't have a clue, I was just trying to get us the hell outta there." whispered Harry to them. The three of them laughed.

"Oh, really?" said Pansy sarcastically.

"About one and a half miles, actually." said Harry with a smile.

"How in the world do you know that?" she sneered.

"I felt it in my legs." said Harry simply.

No one contested that.

"That means...whoa....the other guys must have been wiped out." whistled several different people.

"You are too flipping fast, Harry." said Hermione.

"Did you know that Draco wouldn't show up, Hermione?" said Luna, looking dreamily over to the Gryffindor Prefect.

"Well...no...but I knew that they were going to get in trouble." said Hermione quietly.

"Well, then you did know something would happen." said Luna happily.
"Good thinking, go back to bed before anyone sees, you." said Tonks quickly.

Hermione sent him a glare.

"Boys don't tell girls they're right." said Ron and Harry.

Every male, even Dumbledore, in the room nodded, it was true. Boys, especially adolescent boys, never let on that a girl was right.

"Just went from worse to even more worse." moaned Fred and George.

"Telling him to shut up isn't a wise thing, trust me." said Lupin sadly.

"Saying 'Please' to him will get him talking like that." said Sirius shaking his head.
"Very big mistake." moaned Ron.

Harry laughed as well as the rest of the school. "I bow to a greater 'Drama King'."

Ron waved his hand around regally, which set everyone off laughing again.

The teachers paled, wasn't that the.....oh Lord.

"That singsong voice of his is very annoying." mumbled Harry.

"We taught him that!" said Fred and George raising their hands.
"I heard swear words, that I had never even heard of." said Harry laughing quietly

"Oh, Merlin! What now?" groaned Lupin.

"That can't be good, if Harry is thinking that." said Dean, getting a little scared now.

"Take a breath guys, cause all hell is going to break loose." said Harry to Ron, Hermione and Neville.

"Oh he ain' monstrous!" said Hagrid, feeling a little hurt.

"He was to four, frightened first years." said Harry.

"Can we get on with the story!" said Sirius nervously.

"OH MY GOD! GET THE HELL OUT OF THERE!" screamed Sirius and Lupin.

"Didn't need to hear that, didn't need to hear that." said Lupin rocking back and forth, holding onto one of Harry's hands tightly. Sirius was hugging the young man, just as tightly as could without hurting him.
Dumbledore paled, as did the rest of the regular staff.

"Live to sneak another day, very wise decision." said Snape, handing Calming Draughts to the staff and guests.

A collective sigh rushed through the Great Hall.

"Don't tell her, she's the biggest gossip in the school." said Bill.

"It takes a lot for Harry to start trembling." said Neville a little proudly.

"That only lasted till morning." he said smiling.

"Ron! We didn't know you could be funny!" said the twins proudly, rebounding quickly from hiding their eyes behind their hands and leaning heavily against each other.

"The floor? Why were you focused on the floor?" said Justin in amazement.
"I couldn't look up, I was too scared." said Hermione.

"You made us think that you were the most observant one, Hermione." said Harry beaming. Hermione blushed heavily.

Dialogue line.

"Us too," said Neville and Ron.

Dialogue line.

Eighty-fourth paragraph.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

"We helped her prioritize her life a little bit." said Ron with a laugh.

"And she helped us prioritize our homework schedule." Harry laughed back.

"Not that you needed it." she said with a smile.

End of dialogue set.

Eighty-fifth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Eighty-sixth paragraph.

People looked at the book in earnest. Where was eleven year old Harry going with this?

End of chapter.

"You figured all that out, that quickly?" I am intensely impressed, Harry." said Dumbledore proudly.

"Harry, I don't want to hear you going near that dog again, not it this lifetime, or the next!" bellowed Sirius, causing Harry look up quickly.

"I had no intention of going near him again." said Harry looking up at his godfather.

"Good! Cause if you do I....wait a minute, d-d-did you s-say that y-you HAD no int-intention?" he said fearfully.
"It's kinda towards the end." said Harry guiltily.

"You are SO grounded when I get you home." said Sirius with fear-ridden eyes.

"I'm not afraid of what you'll do for my groundings." said Harry with a slight smile.

"Why is that?" said Sirius with furrowed brows, he had never been a parent, but he knew that a grounding is something to be feared, not smiled at!

"I've gone fourteen years of 'Dursley Groundings' the Cruciatatus Curse is better than what they did half the time." said Harry with a smile. Then he paused and smacked his forehead with his palm. "I need a filter for my mouth."

"Harry.....I...I won't...ever....EVER...hurt you! Your....your leg...accident...I...didn't mean it. You've got to know that!" wailed Sirius. He started to cry hold him tightly. Harry, feeling the full repercussions of his words and a fresh wave of guilt, he allowed Sirius to hold him just as tightly as he dared and whispered to his godfather:

"I know, I know. I trust you, you and Remus. It's just, I keep forgetting that, you all know, now, parts of what I've been hiding. I'm sorry." said Harry trying to calm Sirius down.

Trying to steer the attention away from the two of them, to give them privacy. Dumbledore asked: "Who would like to read now? I think we can squeeze another chapter in, before dinner."

"May I sir?" asked Charlie.

"Of course, here you are." smiled Dumbledore, magicking the book down to the Dragon Tamer.

"All right then, the title is 'Halloween.'" said Charlie loudly.

"Bloody Hell." said Ron, Hermione, and Harry, the other students looked at them in wonder.
Trick or Treat, Smell a Troll's feet...

Chapter Summary

Once again, Harry and Ron get in big trouble, and McGonagall finds out that she was lied to.

Chapter Notes

I don't own Harry Potter.

First paragraph, first sentence, first comma.

"I really was, I had hoped that Filch caught you." said Malfoy quietly.

First paragraph, end of first sentence.

"You had bags under your eyes and big smiles, I was so pissed." said Malfoy smirking over to them.

"Your shocked face was what made us smile." said Harry in a cutesy voice.

The school, even Malfoy, started to laugh.

First paragraph, second sentence, first comma.

"In retrospect it was an excellent adventure, not then and there. At the time, it was an absolute nightmare!" said Ron shaking his head, Harry nodded in agreement.

First paragraph, end of second sentence.

Under the glare of the adults in the room. Ron and Harry shifted uneasily in their seats.

End of first paragraph.

"I was absolutely floored when he told me. I could hardly believe it." said Ron shaking his head again.
"Or both." said Sirius and Lupin.

Sirius kissed the top of Harry's messy head, and Lupin gave him a broad smile.

Harry smiled, this was the kind of attention he liked, attention from a family, HIS family.

"Harry must've came up with about two hundred things that would fit that size. And what it really was, was the first ruddy thing he said." said Ron looking a little irked.

"What is it?" asked a second year, quickly.

"Not telling, you'll find out when first-year Hermione does." said Ron and Harry.

Several people groaned.

"Neville's smarter than the three of us in that aspect." said Harry happily over to a grinning Neville.

"Ouch, sorry about that Hermione." said Ron and Harry.

"It's alright guys." said Hermione.

"I really, REALLY don't mean to be mean, but, how in the BLOODY hell did you guys become friends. Because you lot are like enemies in this book." said Bill with widened eyes.

"WILLIAM! WATCH YOUR LANGUAGE!" admonished Mrs. Weasley.

"What happened?" said Sirius, getting excitedly.

"We know what that is!" cried the Gryffindor Quidditch team.
My second letter and my first parcel!" said Harry, beaming broadly.

"Very lucky that you read the letter first." said Lupin hiding a laugh.

"You got a Nimbus? Who paid for that?" asked Charlie incredulously.

"That would be me." said Dumbledore proudly.

The school went silent.

"What made you take it upon yourself to buy the broomstick, with the school funds?" said Umbridge angrily.

"I didn't spend a knut of the school's money. I spent my own. I missed out on several birthdays and several Christmas' presents and I thought I should get him his very first professional broom." said Dumbledore proudly.

Harry looked at him, and gave him a large grateful smile.

"You were ecstatic, mate." said Ron.

"Since then, I've ridden one!" said Ron remembering Harry's first broom.

"Several times, actually." corrected Harry.

"Which was wishful thinking." said Ron sadly.

People slowly turned and faced Malfoy with angry looks on their faces, who cringed slowly in his seat.
"You're brilliant." said Bill rolling his eyes, "a thin, long parcel and you needed to feel it to make sure?"

"Hey, we finally had something that Malfoy didn't, after all the crud we had to put up with, Harry deserved some bragging rights." said Ron defending himself against the condescending smiles sent his way.

"And I wasn't saying a word, I was letting Ron take the ball." said Harry brightly, trying not to laugh.

"Not a bad broom, but those aren't nearly as good as a Cleansweep or Nimbus, in the way of speed. Comet's are used mostly for just showing off with their extra features and colors." said Harry absently.

"How do you know?" asked Malfoy curiously. "You've only had the best racing brooms."

"I subscribe to a few Broomstick magazines." said Harry.

"How about 'Moonlit Flight'?" asked Sirius with a wicked grin. Lupin smacked Sirius' head roughly and turned to look over to Harry.

"If I catch you with that, you aren't going to be able to sit for a month." said Lupin quickly.

Harry laughed loudly. He could guess what that particular magazine was all about.

"Hey! The articles are great!" said Sirius indignantly.

"I'm sure, but you never read those articles, have you? You focus on the other part of the magazine." said Lupin with the sides of his mouth twitching.

"So do you." whispered Sirius to his friend. That statement earned him several smacks with cushion by the reddened face man.

"Coward." growled Moody.
"Ron aimed a swing at him, Malfoy stepped back and put Goyle in front of him." said Harry

End of dialogue set.

The Weasely children sat and scowled over to Malfoy.

Tenth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"We wouldn't do that! Not in a million years!" said Harry, Ron and Malfoy together sarcastically.

The entire school laughed.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"I'm just a big Quidditch enthusiast as Severus, Pomona, and Minerva." said Professor Flitwick.

Dialogue line.

"That was a low blow." said Sirius trying not to laugh out loud.

Eleventh paragraph.

"Funniest face I had ever seen since Dudley got that pig tail." said Harry laughing hard.

The school was reminded of the tail and they couldn't contain their riotous laughter.

Dialogue line.

"Give credit, where credit is due." said Dumbledore smiling.

Malfoy blushed heavily.

Dialogue set.

Hermione gulped loudly as McGonagall blinked at her in shock.

"Sorry, Professor. I-I-" she trailed off.

"She wasn't aware of the facts." said Harry quickly.
McGonagall nodded, Hermione mouthed 'thanks' to Harry.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Twelfth paragraph.
The three friends looked amongst themselves and mouthed an apology.

Thirteenth paragraph, third sentence, first comma.
"That tells you that he's excited about something really, really good." said Ron.

End of thirteenth paragraph.
"I thought you were going to open it before the first class." said Angelina
"I never got that far, Malfoy and Hermione stalled me way too long. I would've been late to class." said Harry.

Dialogue line.

Fourteenth paragraph.
Harry sighed in remembrance of his very first racing broom. His very favorite broom.

Fifteenth paragraph.
Mr. Weasley eagerly explained what the book was talking about. Hermione and Harry had to correct him a few times, however.

Sixteenth paragraph.
"God, I miss that broom." said Harry, wiping the moisture from his eyes. Sirius patted his arm as Hermione rolled her eyes.
"What is it with boys and toys?" she whispered to Ginny.
"They love to go fast, they're crazy like that. But then again...I'm a Quidditch player too Hermione." she smiled widely.
Both girls laughed.
"Those were the good old days." said Alicia, Katie, Fred, George, and Harry. Angelina huffed playfully and crossed her arms.

"I'm not that bad!" she pouted.

"Close." said the Gryffindor Quidditch team.

First year Muggleborns, who were confused at the very first game, listened intently.

The Chasers of the Hogwarts' Quidditch teams stood up to the loud cheers.

"What's basketball?" asked Malfoy.

"I'll explain at another time." said Harry.

The keeper's then stood and took a bow, even Ron, though he was blushing and looking down.

"Best one we've ever had, that is why we judge you so harshly Ron, it's nothing personal. We want you to be the best you possibly could be." said Angelina kindly.
So were some of the first years.

"Yeah, you are really going to need that." said Fred warningly.
"If we are right, on what he's about to set loose." said George quietly.

"They've broken those straps before." said Fred, rubbing his arm.
"Right after a game too, when we tried to put them away." said George rubbing his chin.
"Took us off guard." they both said.

"Wow. Nice shot!" complimented Fred and George.

The Beaters from each house stood up to the sound of cheers. Fred and George graciously allowed their replacements stand up.

The twins stood up quickly to the furious round of applause.
"I don't think I sounded offhand, I heard myself squeak." said Harry snickering.

"We can add broken arms to that, numerous cracked bones from falling from more than fifty feet in the air, and the wind being knocked out of someone." said Madame Pomfrey darkly.

"They had better not have all been from you” said Sirius warningly.

"Yet he could never compliment us to our faces." huffed Fred and George.

"Only cause you could barely fly with your heads being already swelled by your egos." said Angelina laughingly.

The seekers of the school began to cheer loudly this time.

The Seekers stood up and received the loudest cheer and applause yet. Harry remained seated and applauded his replacement, Ginny. Ginny stood and pulled Harry gently to his feet and when he did. The sound of clapping and cheering was almost deafening. Umbridge scowled.

People stared at Harry, he was nervous about playing? The star Quidditch player?! They couldn't believe it.
The Seekers all whistled, including Sirius and Lupin.

"Your dad did that little practice exercise, but he missed four of them!" exclaimed Sirius.

"Hey, now." said Charlie, pretending to look hurt.” I wouldn't give up my dragons for nothing," he said defiantly.

"No one should really say that, but I am glad that you can call this a home." said Dumbledore, his eyes brighter than usual.

The teachers smiled.

"Kinda warns you that something is going to happen. Learned that one real quick." muttered Harry. Hermione and Ron both nodded solemnly.

"Trevor's still afraid of heights." whispered Neville to Ron, who snorted.

"Sorry about that." Harry said looking over to Neville, he smiled and nodded in response.

"I don't mind being paired with her/him anymore." they both said absent-mindedly.
Dialogue set.

Several people turned to look at Harry, he looked back at them.

“What?” asked Harry curiously.

“I think they are wondering if you have some revelations about what Professor Flitwick said.” said Dumbledore kindly.

“Saying the word properly is very important, pronouncing it, can vary the spell’s results. I’ll explain later, I think I know where this is going.” said Harry, slowly taking out his little black notebook.

Umbridge looked longingly at that notebook, how she wanted it!

Twenty-eighth paragraph, second sentence.

“You didn’t even wave your wand. You let me go first with the feather, you never even got a chance.” said Seamus.

“Yeah I did, I just didn't really care.” said Harry.

End of twenty-eighth paragraph.

“The only good use for those hats.” said Harry and Seamus.

Ron, at the next table, wasn’t having much more luck. Twenty-ninth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

“There is no real way to say that particular spell wrong, Hermione, the only thing he was doing wrong was the impression of a spinning wheel.” said Harry flicking through the pages.

End of dialogue set.

“Not necessarily. It’s the swish and flick and saying the word that gets it done. Making the ‘gar’ nice and long, will make it hover four feet, no more, no less. When Ron does it now, he can make it climb to about seven to eight feet.” said Harry calmly. Hermione nodded and Ron beamed at the compliment.
“It’s kinda cool challenging her, and seeing her prove you wrong.” said Ron smiling broadly.

“Four feet, no more, no less.” said Harry looking kindly at Hermione.

“That was a major understatement.” said Harry and Ron.

“Sorry, Hermione, I didn’t really mean it.” said Ron sheepishly, before any adult could tell him off.

“It’s alright Ron, I forgave you years ago.” Hermione smiled brightly.

“That is all you could say, Harry?” asked Sirius in shock.

“That wasn’t all that I said.” said Harry quietly.

All of a sudden a several small balls of light erupted from the book, which startled Charlie.

“What are those, usually its scrolls!” shouted Charlie.

“Those are called Scattered Shots, they show some small part that pertains to the part of the book at hand. The Scrolls show’s Harry’s past, but those are longer bits. The Scrolls are long, the Shots are short.” said an Unspeakable.

The balls of light then circled around Great Hall and then they broke apart into hundreds of pieces. Each piece flew into a different person. Once it entered a person’s body, their vision blurred and then turned to darkness.
Then they found themselves in the corridor right beside the Charms’ classroom. They saw younger Harry and Ron come out of the Charms class. They heard Ron say:

“It’s no wonder no one can stand her, she’s a nightmare, honestly!”

They then saw Hermione run right into Harry and speed off.

“I think she heard you.” said younger Harry with a shocked look on his face.

“So? She must’ve noticed that she’s got no friends.” said Ron shifting slightly.

The Watchers then watched in shock as Harry looked over to Ron and then grabbed him by his ear and dragged him over to a deserted, empty classroom.

He just about threw Ron bodily into the room. The Watchers stared in amazement, what was going on?

“WHAT THE HELL IS WRONG WITH YOU? WHY ARE YOU ACTING THIS WAY?” shouted Harry.

“You know what she is like!” Ron shouted back. “She’s overbearing, a know-it-all!”

“THAT DOESN’T MEAN YOU GET TO SAY THINGS LIKE THAT!” shouted Harry again.

“Ron, she’s new here, she doesn’t know anybody. It’s hard to make friends in a whole new world.”

“You managed.” said Ron shortly.

“You wanted to sit in the same compartment as the ‘famous Harry Potter’, Ron. I know, I sound like a hypocrite talking to you like this when I don’t even watch my own mouth around her. But I saw her crying as she banged into me. You went too far, I went too far. We need to apologize to her in the next class. Alright?” then they heard Harry’s voice break. “I know what bullying can do; I know what it feels to be on the wrong side of the punch, be it physical or verbal. I don’t...I will not...allow the Dursleys affect me.”

Dumbledore paled, as did a majority of the other Watchers, but not nearly to the same degree.

“What do you mean?” asked Ron nervously.

“It’s nothing, just Dudley. Listen, we’ll both apologize, alright?” said Harry shaking his head and then looking at Ron.

Ron nodded.
The balls of light left their bodies and there they were back in the Great Hall. The students looked around to the three friends.

“So they apologized and you all became friends right?” said Lavender towards Hermione.

“Umm....more or less.” they said shifting about a little.

“How come I have the feeling it’s leaning towards the ‘more’ part.” said Lupin with a raised eyebrow.

“If it happened the way I suspect, it’s A LOT more.” said Snape drumming his fingers against each other.

“Thanks for agreeing to apologizing, Ron, means a lot actually.” said Hermione with a smile.

Ron blushed and gave a half shrug.

Thirty-fourth paragraph, first sentence.

“So you didn’t just apologize and become friends then.” said Ginny.

Thirty-fourth paragraph, second sentence.

“I felt real, REAL bad.” said Ron

End of thirty-fourth paragraph.

Hermione put her hands on her hips and opened her mouth in mock indignation.

“Hermione, I was hungry.” whined Ron.

“When are you not hungry.” said Ginny and Hermione, both were smiling.

“I was hungry too, actually.” Harry pouted, playing along.

“Oh well then, that’s fine.” said Hermione, Ginny and Sirius who caught on quickly.

The school laughed at the look of pretend shock on Ron’s face.

Thirty-fifth paragraph.

“Sorry I missed it now.” said Hermione sadly.

“Compared to where you were, yeah, I would be upset if I missed it too.” said Ron trying to cheer her up. Which amazingly worked.
“Oh no, what is it now?” groaned Remus.

“HOLY CRAP!” shouted Sirius

“Useless piece of garbage.” muttered Moody and Tonks.

“First there was dead silence.” said Harry with a smirk.

“THERE IS A TROLL IN THE DUNGEONS! THERE ISN’T ANYTHING FUNNY ABOUT IT!” shouted Sirius wringing his hands. Lupin was dead pale. “KNOWING YOUR LUCK, YOU’RE GOING TO MEET IT!”

Harry didn’t say anything. Sirius groaned even louder.

"Go figure." said Bill whispering to Charlie.

“What are you supposed to be able to do?” asked a first year. Percy blushed.

“Hex me if I start acting like that.” said Ron quietly to Neville.
“He wouldn’t do that, Peeves loves almost all the students. He enjoys bringing excitement into children’s life. But he wouldn’t do anything life threatening.” said Professor McGonagall.

“OH MY GOD! HERMIONE!” screamed Mrs. Weasely.

“I’m fine Mrs. Weasely, I’m fine!” reassured Hermione.

“Good reflexes, Weasely.” said Moody approvingly.

“Learned to dodge Percy all the time at home.” muttered Ron.

The guests and the students slowly turned to look at the man. The regular staff knew what he was doing and weren’t concerned. They were more worried about the three first year Gryffindors.
“One of only times I noticed something, before Harry.” said Ron brightly.

Students cringed, in their seats. They weren’t sure if they wanted to eat again.

“Don’t tell me what you saw was the troll.” begged Sirius.

“I don’t ever want to see it in person, ever.” said a group of first years.

“I found out later, much later, that what that means is that they hear something.” said Harry sadly.

“Sorry, Hermione, it was my idea.” Harry whispered to Hermione. She sent a reassuring smile over to him.

“Good! Now get the hell out of there! I don’t want you any nearer to that troll then you’ve already been.” said Lupin worriedly

“Then go get a teacher!” yelled Sirius.
“CRAP! WHAT NOW?” yelled Bill. He didn’t want his little brother getting almost killed by a fully grown mountain troll!

“Dear lord, that room,” said George weakly
“It was....” whispered Fred, even weaker than his brother.

They hurried over and pulled and hugged onto Hermione tightly.

“What the...” said Ron

“We aren't leaving till we know she's okay." they said quickly.

Sirius and Lupin looked over to Hermione worriedly.

People who didn't catch on nearly as quickly as the twins, started to scream:
"HERMIONE IS IN THERE!" screamed Ginny.

People screamed even louder.

"Do...not....tell...me....you....went....in....there!" moaned Lupin weakly.

"NO! DON'T GO IN THERE, GO FIND A TEACHER!" screamed Mrs. Weasely.

"I don't think they would've gotten there in time. From the dungeons to the girls’ bathroom, not even I could fast enough to be in time to help her.” said Harry quietly.

The teachers clutched at their throats, if they had gone for a teacher, would Miss Granger still be with them?
"OH, HERMIONE!" wailed Lavender.

Dialogue line.

"You look like a weak shrimp, but you are really strong when the need arises Harry." said Ron quietly to Harry.

Fifty-third paragraph.

"NO! NOT TOWARDS HARRY! NO!" screamed Sirius.

He stood up quickly and shielded Harry with his own body. As if the troll had made a repeat performance.

"Sirius, I'm fine, it's not here." said Harry looking up at his terrified godfather.

"Sirius, calm down!" yelled Lupin.

Snape hurried over and pulled Sirius' head back by the hair and poured a Calming Draught down his throat.

Sirius started breathing deeply, he was calming down, but he wasn't going to move from where he was kneeling.

Dialogue set, second sentence, third comma.

Bill ran over and embraced his younger brother now. "Don't get hurt, don't get hurt." he whispered over and over.

Mrs. Weasely and Mr. Weasely were practically sobbing into each other's shoulders.

End of dialogue set.

Dialogue line.

"Bad time to freeze Hermione." whimpered Tonks.

Fifty-fourth paragraph.

Charlie then rushed over and hugged Ron tightly as well. He threw the book to Moody, who continued on for him.

Fifty-fifth paragraph, first sentence, first colon.
"I think, all hell is going to break loose again Harry." said Ron sadly from the cocoon of his brother's arms.

Harry nodded, looking a little warily from Remus to Sirius who was still kneeling in front of him.

Fifty-fifth paragraph, second sentence.

Sirius moaned piteously and sank lower onto the floor.

End of fifty-fifth paragraph.

"Ewww..I forgot all about that, Harry." said Ron with a sickened look on his face.

"Tell me you cleaned your wand after words." said Hermione a little pale.

"I borrowed Ron's wand and used a disinfecting charm on it." said Harry with a laugh. Which shocked Sirius and Remus, Dumbledore chuckled as well.

"What the hell are you laughing at?" bellowed Sirius to Dumbledore. "Harry going to get killed by a bloody troll!"

"What year was he in, when this occurred, Sirius?" said Dumbledore brightly.

"What? Oh, um....first year....my godson was eleven..." he said, then erupted into tears.

"How old is Harry now?" said Dumbledore calmly.

"Fifteen...." said Sirius looking up slowly.

"So, that means he didn't get killed, he's right here. Now calm down, if you don't I won't let you take him for the summer. I won't have someone so high-strung taking care of such a rambunctious teen. I will care for him myself." he said firmly.

Sirius worked hard to calm himself down.

"That's better, now Alastor, continue please." said Dumbledore looking quite pleased with himself.

"Gladly." said Moody gruffly.

Fifty-sixth paragraph.

"Keep calm, Sirius, keep calm. He's just fine, he just fine." said Sirius grasping Harry's hands and holding them close to his chest.

Harry had no notion of what to do to calm him down. He was hoping the Troll bogies on his wand would have made him laugh at least. Harry placed his forehead on Sirius's forehead. His eyes fluttered open and his dark eyes, met Harry's green.

"I'm fine, I'm right here. I'm not gone." he said soothingly.
Sirius stood back up and sat back in the bowl. He laid Harry's head back on his lap and grasped one of his hands.

"Once again, you're so grounded when I get you home." he muttered into his ear.

Fifty-seventh paragraph.

"The only spell you can't do, you pick that one." said Malfoy, shaking his head.

"I think it was nice, Ron was so worried about Hermione that he used a spell that he associated with her. Shows that he learned something from her." said Luna serenely.

Hermione and Ron both blushed deeply.

Fifty-eighth paragraph, first sentence, fifth comma.

"Kinda describes the noise you made when you straightened your nose, during the scroll." said seventh year Hufflepuff to Harry.

Harry looked at him in confusion. Lupin quickly told him what the seventh year was talking about. Remembering, Harry nodded.

End of fifty-eighth paragraph.

"Tell me it didn't land on anyone." said Mr. Weasley weakly

Fifty-ninth paragraph, second sentence.

"Thank goodness, It didn't get Hermione or Ron and Harry didn't get hurt when the troll hit the floor." said Mr. Weasley, heaving a giant sigh of relief.

End of fifty-ninth paragraph.

"Hey I was in shock." he said to the people sniggering.

Sixtieth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"Good show, Potter, don't let your guard down. Could wake up at any moment." said Moody nodding.
"I didn't need to hear that." said Sirius weakly.

Sixty-first paragraph.

"Didn't need to hear that, either." he said chuckling a little.

Dialogue line.

Sixty-second paragraph.

"Not too sure if that would have made it better or worse really." said Harry.

Sixty-third paragraph.

"Plan didn't go too well for him did it?" whispered Hermione to Ron

Sixty-fourth paragraph.

"Don't ask me where that thought came from. Cause I won't be able to tell you." he said waving away the incredulous looks.

Dialogue set.

Sixty-fifth paragraph, second sentence.

"I wanted to use Legilimency to find out what had happened, but he looked down too fast." whispered Snape to Dumbledore.

End of sixty-fifth paragraph.

"I thought my wand was down." said Ron sheepishly.

Sixty-sixth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Sixty-seventh paragraph.

"Bout time." muttered Moody. He wasn't pleased with Hermione, freezing like that.
"What did she say?" said Lupin weakly.

"Miss Granger! You lied to me! You and I are going to have a little chat once this chapter is done." said McGonagall sternly. Hermione looked down and nodded slowly.

"Only truth to that story it seems." muttered Snape, looking over at McGonagall. "And it is the more important part of the story, how she came to be there, is not so significant."

"She still lied to me." she muttered McGonagall firmly. "All the same, I guess, I cannot blame her, but I will still have a talk with her about lying to me."

"As long as it has nothing similar to Harry's detentions with Umbridge, I'll take whatever she gives me," muttered Hermione seriously to Ron who was going to speak up against Hermione getting detention.

"We failed miserably, I think." said Ron with a smile over to Harry.

"Turns out she didn't think she could." said Tonks giving Hermione a wink.

"Good thing too. Freezing up like that, foolish girl." said Moody shaking his head.

Hermione smiled broadly over to Harry.

The school laughed loudly, but silenced immediately when Snape threw a glare at them.
Seventy-first paragraph.

"I didn't want to look at that troll anymore." she said blushing.

Seventy-second paragraph.

Dialogue set.

"Now we know all the facts." said Dumbledore brightly clapping his hands together. "I was a little concerned; I felt that I wasn't told everything."

"Why didn't you let me know that?" said McGonagall incredulously.

"I thought you were the one holding back." he said with smile and the twinkling in his eyes were going strong.

Seventy-third paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"I could've taken points, Mr. Weasely if you prefer." said McGonagall stiffly.

Ron quickly shook his head.

Dialogue line.

"I wasn't complaining." said Harry quickly to his Transfiguration teacher.

Dialogue line.

"Wouldn't need saving if you lot didn't make fun of her and lock the troll in there with her." said Lupin sternly.

Dialogue line.

"Spot on." said Lupin.

Seventy-fourth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Seventy-fifth paragraph.

"Bit anticlimactic, isn't it." said Fred, pulling himself away from Hermione. George did the same
"I think we'll have to take your word for it." said Bill with a smile untangling himself from Ron. "You better hope, you don't get into any more dangerous situations, or I'll do to you what Snape did to Malfoy." he said sternly.

"It was embarrassing coming back in here, after that." said Malfoy quietly.

"Don't feel too bad Malfoy, I'm guessing, that if I wasn't laid up, I'd of been paddled several hundred times by now." said Harry kindly. "Besides, not many people noticed you coming in."

Several people nodded.

"Oh," said Malfoy, feeling a bit better.

Charlie held the book out at arm’s length.

"Whatcha doin', Charlie?" asked Bill with a raised eyebrow.

"Well, every night, we have that scroll come popping out of this thing. I thought it would happen again." he said meekly.

"If a Scattered Shot happens during the story, there will not be a Recollection Scroll that day. It takes a lot of magical energy to produce both of those." said an Unspeakable.

"Thank goodness, if it was a bad Recollection Scroll today, I don't think my heart could take it." said Sirius brushing his lips in his godson's messy locks.

"Well, now I think we better have some dinner. Before we all perish from hunger." said Dumbledore brightly.

The tables of food appeared once again and plates of food were magicked over to the trio in the bowl again. Harry helped himself to a piece of chicken, he munched greedily at it.

Umbridge, who was quiet for a large portion of the chapter, sat glaring at the three in the bowl. She was about to lose her teaching position, and her power over the Ministry personnel is fading fast. Even her hold over the Minister is waning, she needed to act! Last night's attempt went wrong somewhere. House-elves are supposed to go about unnoticed, how did that stupid house-elf get caught before he could slit the boy's throat? At first, she wanted nothing more than to discredit him, show he was a liar. But now, she wanted him to...suffer...yes that was it. She wanted nothing but screams of pain coming from that wretched boy! Now, how was she to go about it?
Bathilda pulled out the photo album from her bag and began to thumb through it once more.

"Oi! Don't hog that all to yourself Batty, let us see it too!" whined Sirius.

"Hey, not in front of everybody!" cried Harry.

"Harry, I want to see more of your baby pictures, we don’t have any of you growing up." said Sirius gleefully.

"Doctor Clark has pictures of me, about a year's worth." said Harry quietly.

"When he gets here, then we will ask him for some. But for now, we are happily stuck with your baby pictures." said Lupin consolingly.

The pictures were magnified to an extremely large size and it showed a tiny version Harry chomping down on a chocolate chip cookie, the cookie was the same size of his head.

"Did you finish, that thing?" asked Malfoy, laughing out loud.

"Oh no, his father finished it for him." said Bathilda, smiling over to Harry, who was blushing.

The next picture was one of baby Harry, fast asleep, snuggling against a giant stuffed dragon.

"Awwww!" cooed the girls in the Great Hall.

"I got ya tha'!" said Hagrid proudly. "I even remember wha' ya named it. You named it..."

"Scorchie..." said Harry quietly, staring at the picture.

People cooed even louder.

Umbridge stole out of the room silently. No one even took notice of her leaving, their attentions lying on the pictures hovering in the air. She hurried up to the library and crept into the Restricted Section, she opened one book after another. Searching for something, anything, finally she found it. It was perfect, a delightful mix of emotional and physical pain. The only problem was, it required a potion, and from she noticed from the readings, Snape would never agree to making it. She would need another Brewer.

She knew just the man. She copied the spell and potion formula down and stole her way out of the castle.
As everyone was still in the Great Hall looking at the pictures, Umbridge made her way to the gates, after she stopped in her office for just a second. The moment she stepped outside the gates, she apparated. She came to be in a very dark and dirty street, with mice and rats squeaking and skittering across the path. She looked up and saw an ancient warped sign saying "Narrowmoor" moving slowly back in forth in the autumn wind. Smiling widely, she walked down the way and passed several shops with a different assortment of things. Blood quills, burning necklaces and other forms of subtle means of torture.

She stopped at store where a large cauldron, that had something that looked like bloodstains on the side, sat beside the door. She entered the store and a cackle went through the store as the door opened. She looked about the room, cudgels with small spikes or knobs sitting along the wall, rows and rows of glass phials of liquids levitating in a glass case with large sign plastered on it saying 'DON'T DRINK'. A pale man came from the back of the store, carrying a tank of green liquid and knives hovering over it, the tips of the knives slightly submerged.

"Oh, good evening Delores, how'd those whips turn out?" said the man, laying the tank gently down on the counter.

"It worked out fine, he's not healing and its causing him pain every time he's moving." said Umbridge brightly.

"Good, good, is he remembering anything?" asked the man.

"....yes, he's starting to remember, is there something wrong with that?" said Umbridge, her smirk sliding off quickly.

"Yeah, not for you, but for him. If he remembers anymore, the pain will grow and grow until it may be more humane to just kill him outright. Your ex-lover must have some mentality strength about him. Now what can I do for you tonight?" he said adjusting the knives.

"I need you to brew a potion for me, this one." she said uncrumpling the parchment.

He took the parchment and looked it over. "Hmm...the Leechhold potion...that's a bit drastic for your 'ex' isn't it? You know what this will do don't you?"

"I do, and I cannot wait to see the look on his face, every time it takes effect." she said gleefully

"You are a sadist, aren’t’ you?" said the man with a raised eyebrow. "Well, let me go brew it up, do
"Yes, I do. I'll get everything ready on my end." she said. The man went towards the back of the store, Umbridge took out a small phial with a black strand of hair, took it out and wrapped it around a piece of black onyx. Out of a small pouch, she removed a single emerald and an snowy owl feather, she took out a white bit of string and tied the both of them to the onyx piece. She then took out another phial, this one held a thick red liquid. She poured the contents of the phial onto the oddly decorated onyx piece. She laid the onyx and all its additions on top of a black cushion and waved her thick wand over it, muttering quietly.

An hour or so later, the man came back with a small, bubbling black cauldron. He placed down in front of her.

"Alright, drop in what you've got. I already spoke the incantation. Be warned, there is no going back. Not even I can remove it." he warned.

Without a hesitation, before he even finished his warning, she dropped the contents of the cushion in the cauldron. It bubbled and frothed, then a thick bit of golden smoke bellowed out of the cauldron.

"That's strange, from what you said about your 'ex', the smoke should be as dark as the cauldron. Gold smoke, means..." his eyes widened in shock. "means....he's a.....kid....."

The smoke parted and it showed Harry's face, he was laughing in Sirius' arms and smiling brightly, laying in the bowl.

"That's....that's Harry Potter!" said the man, falling back against the wall of his shop.

"What of it?" she asked with an air of superiority.

"YOU TOLD ME THIS WAS YOUR EX-BOYFIREND! THE PERSON, THE MAN ALL THIS WAS FOR!" he yelled pointing to the figure in the golden fog.

"You weren't supposed to ask who it was for." she said majestically. "What's done is done, as you said. Now, I thank you for your help. If I need any more help, I 'll come back." she said as she laid a large bag of galleons down on the counter and taking her leave.

The man sat down, touching his pale, and sweaty face with his now clammy hand. He was looking at the boy through the cloud of smoke. He was so carefree, all of a sudden, he saw the boy twitch and grasp his stomach absently.

"Dear, God. What have I done?" he said weakly, He slammed down his fist on the counter and covered his eyes.
His devices, and those of the other shops, were all supposed to be used by adults, on adults. They had an unspoken code of honor, not that many people knew. But they didn't hurt children, no one under twenty was to be a victim of their craft...If he had known, he never would have done it. Especially not to Harry Potter himself! Forget Dumbledore's rage if he ever found out that he was in on an assault on his favorite student, but he had a great-nephew in that school, and he always talked of Harry Potter and all the good he's done. He went to his crow's cage, brought it out, and carried it to the table. He took a quill and parchment and wrote swiftly:

Albus Dumbledore:

I am sorry I cannot tell you who purchased my services, and I cannot tell you all I know, but the young man known as Harry Potter is in grave danger. I was asked to make a Leechhold potion and it was fixed to the boy. You currently have Severus Snape in your employment, he can make the necessary potions to make the poor boy's suffering a little easier. Also, stop him from remembering anything more about the cause of his injuries. Urge him to forget, it is imperative! When you get this, do not bother coming, I will no longer be here. I'm sorry. Please, tell the boy, I'm sorry.

Sylvester Hexting

He sent the crow off and looked around his small place of business. He raised his wand and was about to bring it down and blow his place and himself to kingdom come, when a black-gloved hand clamped down on it. He turned and a terrible mask met his eyes.

The moment that the crow had reached the Great Hall and Dumbledore had read the letter, he had rushed out of the school. To the bewilderment of the students who were listening to him tell a story of Harry's first trip to Hogwarts as a baby.

The moment he had turned down Narrowmoor Street an explosion met him, he ran forward after the blast had concluded and saw the remains of Hexting's shop. And there was no sign of life left in the building. Aurors swarmed the street and Dumbledore told them what had happened. They went inside the destroyed building and searched around, but they couldn't find anything. Except for what seemed like a full-grown man's body. Charred and unrecognizable. Then they found another body, this one had burnt robes and the gold fastenings almost melted into its flesh.

Dumbledore looked at one of the half-melted golden buttons on the corpse, He had seen that button before. In his office a night or two ago. It was from the Ranger Lionus' jacket! Could this be him? And if so, what was going to happen to Harry's Dr. Clark? How could he possibly tell Harry?

He clutched at his heart and gritted his teeth with almost unbearable pain as he made his way back down the street. Then, as if to add another shock to the evening, a hand reached out and pulled him into the shadows, one arm around his waist and the other firmly placed over his mouth.

Dumbledore tried hard to get free of his captor, he reached for his wand but the hand, that belonged to the arm around his middle, gripped his wand hand and pulled it away.

"Ssshh. Dumbledore it's me, Lionus." said the man whispering into Dumbledore's ear. Dumbledore tried to look behind him, he saw the same mask that he had seen in his office. The Ranger spun him quickly around.

"Lionus! What...isn't...wasn't that you in there?" Dumbledore said pointing back towards the charred remains of the Hexting shop.

"No, that was one of my corporals." said Lionus, he slowly took his mask off, to reveal that he was a young blonde haired man, with face that bore several different scars.

Dumbledore stared at him, "I know you, you're..."

"Please, Dumbledore, I told you that I gave up that name years ago. Let it go."

"Sorry, but the explosion, your corporal, I'm sorry. What happened?" said Dumbledore, almost stumbling over his words.

"I had a private and a corporal keep an eye on your High Inquisitor." said the Ranger, very fluent in nervous and shocked ramblings. "Since I went to your office, I decided that she wasn't to be trusted much, I won't confuse you with how I got to that conclusion, but I decided to put a tail on her. And I received mixed results.

"They followed her here and they learned what was going on, and what she had done. After she left, Hexting wrote you the letter that brought you here. He then decided, for some ridiculous reason, to end his life. My corporal hurried in and stopped him from blowing up himself and the building."

"But he didn't, the explosion happened!" said Dumbledore, slowly getting his wits back.

"Not the explosion that Hexting was going for. My corporal stopped him, but my private decided to show his true colors there and then."

"I don't understand." said Dumbledore still confused.

"My private was a Death Eater." said Lionus bitterly.

Dumbledore paled, "What?" he asked weakly.

"You heard me." he snapped. "He used his position to get close to the boy. At least that was what he was aiming for. It didn't work obviously. My corporal was going to send 'Doc' to Hogwarts to take care of the Leechhold potion, however my private had other ideas. They got into a raging battle, it didn't agree with some of the potions and artifacts in that shop and that caused the explosion."
"Your private? Oh, dear. What about Hexting? They only found two bodies so far." said Dumbledore, keeping his voice low as a group of Aurors carried the charred remains away.

"Hexting is safe at Devil's Garden." said Lionus plainly.

"Devil's Garden? That's your prison, isn't it?" said Dumbledore, gaining some ground at last.

"That's right, we offered him a job. Told him the kind of people he would use his craft on, he didn't take it right away, then I told him it would make up for what he just did. Took it right after that."

"So both your private and corporal are gone." said Dumbledore.

"Yeah, my corporal was a good man, we'll have to get the both of them out of the Ministry. The Corporal will get a Squadron funeral, the Private will be given to the 'Wolf and Raven Squad'." he said with a snarl.

"What is the 'Wolf and Raven Squad'?" asked Dumbledore.

"It's our Elimination squad, any criminal that dies before he goes to 'Devil's Garden' gets handed over to them, as well as any rotten apple we have in our ranks. They use wolves and ravens and any other animal they see fit to....devour the bodies."

Dumbledore paled and clutched his stomach and moaned.

"Going off-track," said Lionus.

"Thank you." said Dumbledore weakly.

"We've got Dr. Clark." said Lionus with a smirk.
Dumbledore had not returned till the next morning, he was alone and he couldn't answer anyone's questions of where he rushed off to. He rushed over to Professor Snape and whispered hurriedly into his ear. Snape paled and ran as fast as he could out of the Great Hall.

Harry walked down to breakfast with Sirius and Remus half an hour later. When he entered the Great Hall he doubled over, teeth gritted with pain.

"Harry! What is it?" asked Sirius quickly.

"My...stomach..." he moaned.

"Here, let's sit you down in the bowl quick." said Remus picking Harry up gently and hurrying to the bowl.

Dumbledore rushed over and enlarged the bowl to twice its size, he then arranged the cushions and blankets.

Remus carried the suffering boy over to the bowl, Harry was gripping Remus' collar tightly and growled in pain. He laid Harry gently down in the bowl and Sirius sponged Harry's forehead. Ron and Hermione were looking at Harry anxiously, both of them were clutching at each other in fear.

Snape ran back into the Great Hall and hurried over to the bowl. As Harry gasped in pain, he helped Harry drink the potion completely. He continued to gasp in pain, until finally he opened his eyes.

"What..what happened?" he asked weakly.

Dumbledore threw a murderous look up to Umbridge, who sat with her sickening toad-like smile. He turned back to Harry and grasped his hand.

"It's a Leechhold potion, Harry. It's a vile poison that doesn't need to be drunk by the victim. Every hour on the hour, you'll be racked with pain in your abdomen, as if you had drank some strong poison. You'll get weaker and weaker until, you can no longer even get out of bed." he said grief-stricken.

"Isn't there an antidote." asked Hermione and Sirius quickly.

"No, there is nothing that can remove it." said Dumbledore sadly.

"How long will it last?" asked McGonagall fearfully.

Dumbledore looked away, tears falling freely from his eyes.

"Dear God." said Mrs. Weasely clutching her throat.
Suddenly, the doors opened and a man walked into the Great Hall, it was Lionus, unmasked. He was leading an old man towards the bowl. When he arrived he held out a hand.

"Here you go, Doc. Leechhold potion." said Lionus

"Alright lad, have you had any pain yet?" said the old man, opening a small doctor's bag.

"Just now." he said weakly.

"Well, this will take care of it." he said taking out a small needle with blue liquid inside.

He quickly stuck it in Harry's skin and pushed the liquid into this bloodstream. Sirius who looked down at the little needle in Harry's skin, turned pale and passed out on the floor. Harry and the Doctor looked at him and then each other. Harry tried not to laugh, the Doctor was too busy shaking his head.

"Alright boy, you're all done. It will take two days for it to take effect I'm sorry to say. So you will have to endure the pain for just forty-eight more hours, thankfully, you've got a Potions Master here, who can make the pain-relieving potions to help you through this." He put his syringe back into his bag.

"Will the pain get worse?" said Lupin while he was slapping Sirius' face to wake him up.

"Fortunately, it won't get worse than it has already and you won't get weaker. That's the small comfort the antidote will give you."

"I thought Dumbledore said there wasn't any antidote for the Leechhold potion." said Hermione suspiciously.

"Not to you, but to us, yes. We use it on some of our prisoners. Now," said the Doctor quickly, not completely answering Hermione's question, not to her satisfaction anyway.

"I want that woman." said the Doctor looking up a Lionus.

"Done, Madame Umbridge consider yourself in custody."

"What charges?" demanded Umbridge and Filch.

"Well we can start with 'Conspiracy to be a b*^$$%', but if you want more than that, then we've got the following: We've got torture on a child, person being eighteen years or younger, wrongful use of Dementors, person being eighteen years or younger."

"I did no such thing!" said Umbridge loudly.

"Oh get off it, we've got the paperwork you used to sign out the Dementors and send them to Little Whinging. Good Lord woman, if you're going to commit a crime, don't evidence like that laying out for anyone to see it. Pathetic really. Now, I would normally just ship you off to Devil's Garden, but I'm going to let you stay here, and listen to the books. If you're a good girl and you remain silent, you may stay, if not, off you go."

"She's entitled to a trial!" bellowed Fudge.

"Not with us, she doesn't, we don't make an arrest unless we have all the facts. Her goose is cooked. Oh, and your Caretaker Filch, he was in on it as well." he said matter-of-factly.

"WHAT?" yelled Dumbledore furiously.
Filch who was just entering, turned deadly shade of white.

Dumbledore made to leap and throttle the old caretaker when Lionus held him back. "Sir, allow me." he said with small smile.

Filch turned and began to run out of the Great Hall, but Lionus hurled a small pin-like object toward him, it struck him in the back and suddenly, he was gone.

"What happened to him?" shrieked Umbridge, afraid that, that was what was going to happen to her.

"He was just sent to Devil's Garden. He'll be there for maybe five or seven days." said Lionus.

"Why such a short stay?" asked Sirius baring his teeth, he got tired of Lupin slapping him.

"You'll see if it was enough or not when he gets back. Hey, Doc, about his prior injuries."

"Already seeing to them. There you are lad, it'll be a few more weeks with that cane, but it'll be a lot easier on you." said the Doctor.

"That's all then." said Lionus. "Thanks Doc, you can go back to torturing the other Rangers now." he finished with a smirk.

"If you all weren't such weaklings, it wouldn't be torture. And no, I'm not going anywhere, I don't see many 'Kodak moments' I'm not about to miss this." said the Doctor with a knowing smile.

"What's a 'Kodak moment'?" asked Ron.

"'Kodak' is a camera!" said Colin excitedly, "I asked Dad for one for my birthday this year! A Kodak Moment is a touching and special moment!"

"What moment are you talking about?" asked Harry.

"This moment." said Lionus walking toward the door exiting. He then came back, with a man with graying hair who bore an eye patch over his right eye. Despite the patch and the mass of the gray hair, Harry knew the man all too well.

"D-D-Dr....Dr. Clark!" screamed Harry. He stood up suddenly and hobbled as best he could over to the man. The man stared at him, and slowly moved forward. He then broke into a run and engulfed the young man in a embrace.

"Harry! My little Harry! Oh, I've missed you so much! Look how big you've grown." he said laughing holding Harry out at arm's length. He laughed and brushed back his hair, to look at his eyes. "Every night, I thought about those eyes of yours, the only thing that kept me going." he said hugging him once again.

"Where were you? I looked everywhere for you!" Harry sobbed, tears of joy rushing down his cheeks, like two small waterfalls.

"I'm not too sure where I was, to tell you the absolute truth. I just remember it being dark." said Dr. Clark tears streaming down his own face, he didn't care about the past, now that he had his little Harry back.

"And I'm not at liberty to say where he was, I've already said too much, and just about our prison system." said Lionus with a small smile.
Umbridge wanted to make a comment on how Muggles shouldn’t be at Hogwarts or know of its existence, when she was soundly smacked in the back of the head by a lieutenant who was standing beside her. Making sure she didn’t get away.

"Be silent." he hissed.

Sirius looked at Harry and Dr. Clark his smiled faltered a little. He looked down and slowly walked away, into one of the antechambers off the hall.

Sirius gripped his shoulders and leaned heavily against one of the pillars. He cried silently.

"Padfoot?" said Lupin coming in moments later.

"What, Moony?" said Sirius, quickly wiping his eyes.

"What's wrong? You should be happy that Dr. Clark is back! Harry doesn't have to worry about him anymore." said Lupin with a smile.

"I am, but, what if Harry wants to go live with him? Instead of us? I don't know if I could actually take it." said Sirius brokenly.

"Actually..." said Lupin quickly

"I KNEW IT! HARRY WANTS TO GO LIVE WITH HIM!!" wailed Sirius.

"Settle down! Geez, I thought I was high-strung. Harry isn't going to live with him, I asked Dr. Clark if he could live with us. He agreed, he lost his practice, being gone so long. And his apartment: given to another, his stuff: sent to charities, his money: lost in the system. Harry asked me if he could stay with us, And well, I said it was alright with me, and that I would come and ask you. Harry was a little scared when he wasn't seeing you in the Great Hall. Now, can Dr. Clark stay and live with us? With what Harry has shown us this far, on what he's like, we need all the help we can get." said Remus with a broad smile.

Sirius stared at his old friend and slowly grinned.

"I'll take that as a yes." he said clapping his friend on the back.

They both walked out into the Great Hall and saw Harry talking frantically to Dr. Clark. When Remus and Sirius came closer, he looked over to them quickly. Remus nodded and Harry's smile got bigger.

"Should we abandon the books, seeing as how the woman that orchestrated this event is in custody?" said McGonagall.

"No, that wouldn't be a good idea. You stop know, you could have some irreversible consequences. Best to continue on. Oh, speaking of the past, Dumbledore, you better tell Harry about the incident."

"That's right, Harry," said Dumbledore, walking over to the bowl, "about the incident, don't try and remember it. We don't need to know anymore, and if you do try to remember anymore, it would only cause you more pain. It would be best to just forget it, alright?" he said quietly.

"I'll try sir." he said honestly. Dumbledore smiled and patted his head.

"Well, let’s continue on the with the books then. Sirius, Remus aren’t you going to take your “seats?” said Dumbledore gesturing to the bowl.

Sirius hurried over to the bowl and sat on Harry's immediate right and Lupin sat on Dr. Clark's left.

Dumbledore picked up the book and looked at the next chapter. He read it quickly and laughed. "Mr. Jordan, you may be the perfect person to read this next chapter."

Lee frowned and walked over to the Headmaster and looked at the chapter title. He grinned broadly, Dumbledore handed over the book and went to go sit down, to the left of the bowl.

Lee took a deep breath and shouted: "The next chapter is Quidditch!"

The Quidditch players and fans all cheered, as Harry quickly told Dr. Clark what Quidditch was.

"I've got a lot to learn, I see." said Dr. Clark smiling down to Harry.

"So did I. When I first came here." said Harry brightly.
Lionus and the Doctor took seats beside Dumbledore, who conjured up the chairs for them.

"You always could describe things beautifully" said Dr. Clark giving Harry a one armed hug.

"I always wondered what you were doing, Hagrid." said Percy looking thoughtful. He wasn't upset that Umbridge was now in Ranger custody, he never really liked her at all. And he was glad he wouldn't have to look at her any longer. She was a severe strain on his eyes.

"Very fashionable, as always." sneered Pansy.

"Don't get me started again." said Harry warningly.

Pansy turned pink and scowled at him.

The Gryffindors, fifth years and up all groaned in memory of their devastating loss at the end of that year.

"Something tells me you didn't make it to the Championships." said Sirius consolingly.

"We made it to the Championships, but we didn't win." said Ron sadly.
"Some secrets are not very well kept in this school." said Harry wisely. "And this was one of those times."

"Um, yeah, that would be me." said Ron meekly.

"Oh, Ron! We wanted to keep Harry's playing a secret!" chided Katie.

"Sorry, I just bragged to a few people." said Ron sheepishly.

"Who then told a bunch more people." said Harry kindly.

"The mattress one was probably the one that made me feel worse." said Harry.

"I can understand that one." said Dr. Clark and Sirius.

"With all the Quidditch practice, he almost forgot to do his homework. You kept reminding him, and me for that matter." said Ron putting an arm around Hermione.

"Now I know neither of you needed it." she huffed.

"I did! I was still a nitwit then!" said Ron laughing.

"I thought you would like that book." said Hermione brightly.

"After he took it back, I went and checked it out too." said Ron.

"That is a lot of fouls, and all those happened in that one game?" asked Dr. Clark.

"From what I hear." said Sirius with a smile.
"That must have been one hell of a game." said Dr. Clark laughing quietly.

Fifth paragraph, first sentence, first comma.

"Well then you were perfect for the position." said Dr. Clark fondly.

Sirius looked on jealously as Harry smiled and leaned heavily against the Doctor.

Dr. Clark and Remus both saw the look on his face. Remus leaned over slightly and whispered in his ear "He's a little possessive of his cub." Remus had a slightly apologetic look on his face.

"I've noticed, Jim was the same way. Anybody who messed with his 'Sport' was asking for a fist in their face. If he could have gotten away with it, Vernon Dursley wouldn't be around for as long as he has. Speaking of which..." said Dr. Clark, his face growing dark.

"He's in Auror custody." said Lupin quickly. Dr. Clark smiled broadly.

End of fifth paragraph.

"And people still sign up for that job?" asked Dr. Clark.

"It pays pretty good, about two thousand galleons a game." said Sirius, he still was slightly put off by the Doctor.

"I take it that's a lot of money." said Dr. Clark with raised eyebrows.

"Hell, yeah." said Malfoy.

Sixth paragraph, first sentence, first comma.

"Like we said, we ruined you." said Harry and Ron brightly.

The whole school laughed.

Sixth paragraph, second sentence.

"That's a third year spell!" yelled the third years.

"And she used it in our first year." said Ron proudly.

Sixth paragraph, third sentence.
"Who's Snape?" asked Dr. Clark.

"Professor Snape," corrected Dumbledore absently. "is the Potion's Master of the school."

Harry let out a small gasp as the pain once again claimed hold of his body. Professor Snape hurried over and helped Harry drink the same potion as before. Dr. Clark held Harry's hand and Sirius took out his handkerchief and wiped the sweat that had appeared from the strain of holding back a scream.

Once again, he gasped and weakly laid his head down with his head in Dr. Clark's lap. Sirius picked up his legs and cradled them in his own lap.

"He seems decent enough." whispered Dr. Clark to Remus.

"He's gotten a lot better. He used to be a holy terror." said Remus with a small smile.

"Haven't we all?" said Dr. Clark with a smirk.

Sixth paragraph, fourth sentence.

"Potter, you're too observant for your own good." said Professor Snape sharply.

"You can blame that on Jim, he wanted Harry to become a police officer. Trained up his observations skills, Harry's so good that he could tell you what you had for lunch, just by looking at your footprints in the mud." said Dr. Clark proudly. Moody looked up quickly with excitement in his eyes.

Sixth paragraph, fifth sentence.

"Normally yes, but if it used to keep a student warm, outside, then you are permitted to use it." said McGonagall looking over to Snape. "You better not have taken points away from the fire." she warned.

"Not the fire, no." muttered Snape quietly.

Sixth paragraph, sixth sentence.

"Half the time, Severus, you LOOK for the guilty faces in the halls." squeaked Professor Flitwick.

"How else do I stop the students from destroying the school and it's integrity?" he snarled.

End of sixth paragraph.

"Go figure, Harry is over there, why shouldn't he look for a reason to tell them off?" said Fred
"Potter! Five points from Gryffindor for breathing too loud!" said George imitating Snape.

"I can't take points away, but that doesn't mean I can't give the two of you detentions!" snapped the Potions Master. Fred and George immediately silenced themselves.

"Severus! There is no rule against taking the books out of the school!" shouted McGonagall.

Snape shifted in his seat, "sorry." he muttered quietly.

"He most certainly did." said McGonagall furiously.

"RONALD!" screeched Mrs. Weasely. "YOU APOLOGIZE RIGHT NOW!"

"Sorry sir," he said just as quiet as Professor Snape's apology.

"When isn't it?" said the Gryffindors in unison.

"Very good Miss Granger, don't let them cheat." said Professor Vector.

"But it seems that Mr. Potter and Mr. Weasely already knew the answers." said Professor Sprout.

"I didn't, Harry was tutoring me when Hermione wasn't around, so in a sense, I had two tutors." said Ron
"You'd be a great teacher Hermione, you should look into that." said Harry gaining back some strength.

"You're a better teacher, Harry." she replied quickly, thinking of the upcoming and previous D.A. sessions.

"I can give forty reasons, Harry!" whimpered Colin.

"I can give you fifty." said Neville looking warily over to Professor Snape. Snape was trying to hide a smirk behind his hand.

"Nice to know that your friends have your back." said Dr. Clark with a small smile.

"We do, though!" cried Hermione, Ron looked ashamed.

"I was teasing, honey." he said with a warm smile. Hermione blushed.

"Sound reasoning." said Professor Flitwick.

"Ever think no one is in there?" shot Zacharias.

"I heard voices in there, there was someone in there." said Harry quickly.

"Oh no! Now what?" moaned Sirius and Remus.
"Things didn't go well for you earlier?" said Dr. Clark looking down at Harry.

"You could say that." said Harry carefully.

Twelfth paragraph, first sentence.

"Worse than I thought." said Sirius trying to hold in a laugh.

Remus was shaking with silent laughter.

Snape was snarling immensely.

Twelfth paragraph, second sentence.

More people sniggered slightly, with their hands over their eyes. Snape's eyes were almost bulging out of their sockets.

Twelfth paragraph, third sentence.

"What happened, sir?" said Malfoy, trying to recover from his silent laughing fit.

Snape refused to say.

End of twelfth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"Wait a minute...you went to that monster's corridor?" asked Sirius quickly.

Remus quickly explained to Dr. Clark what Sirius was talking about. Dr. Clark gripped Harry tightly.

Thirteenth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Fourteenth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"You've got some massive amount of guts to ask him for the book." said Charlie shaking his head.
"And some stupidity." said Bill shaking his head as well.

Dialogue line.

Fifteenth paragraph.

"How many floors?" asked Dr. Clark.

"Seven." said Hermione.

"Well that should have only taken you at the most seven minutes, unless you put on some of that speed of yours." he said proudly.

Dialogue line.

Sixteenth paragraph.

"Thanks for watering that down, mate." said Ron gratefully.

Dialogue set.

"If you want my broomstick, sir, the Whomping Willow is currently borrowing it right now. Feel free to try and go and get it." said Harry with a playful smile.

Seventeenth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"Thank you for the vote of confidence, Miss Granger." muttered Professor Snape with a smirk.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

"We know that ain't true now." said the three of them.

End of dialogue set.
"Can't you tell us?" whined Dennis.

"Nope, you'll find out just as soon as our younger selves do." said Harry, holding a hand up to stop Hermione.

Eighteenth paragraph, second sentence.

"Yeah, remember when we read about you in that hotel? You never could sleep if you're worried about something." said Dean.

"Miss. Granger, Mr. Weasely, if Mr. Potter isn't able to sleep for any reason, you go and get Madam Pomfrey. Understand?" said Professor McGonagall quickly.

To Harry's dislike, Hermione and Ron quickly nodded.

Eighteenth paragraph, third sentence, sixth word.

"So you do know how to close your mind!" said Dumbledore happily.

"Yeah, but it didn't work much that night." said Harry glumly.

End of eighteenth paragraph.

Ninteenth paragraph, second sentence, twelfth word.

"Ron.." said Hermione when she heard Ron's stomach growl.

End of ninteenth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"The same thing goes for him not eating!" said McGonagall sharply. Harry groaned.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Twentieth paragraph.
"I guess I could've put that a little better." said Seamus a little embarrassed.

"Gee, you think?" said Charlie rolling his eyes.

"I'm amazed I didn't throw up, there." said Harry quietly.

"You like them too, eh?" said Dr. Clark to Dean. Lee coughed as they were going into their eleventh minute of discussing the finer points of the team and their games.

"Quidditch now, West Ham, later." he said with a regal look.

"Stupid thing, he chewed them all to hell." muttered Ron.

"Don't tell me you can draw, as well!" said Hermione exasperatedly.

"Only floor plans." said Harry vaguely. “Thankfully that’s only squares.”

"Why would you draw floor plans?" said Hermione quickly.

"Never mind." said Harry. Hermione huffed.

"Oooohhh!" said the students impressively.

"That would have been cool to see!" said one of the small first years.
"Notice we said 'Oliver's SPEECH.'" said Fred, shaking his head.

"He never changes that speech, at least Angelina changes it around a bit." said Katie. She turned to look at Angelina, and was surprised to see her grinning maliciously.

"Why are you grinning like that Angelina?" asked Alicia. "It's a little scary."

"Because, Harry, Fred and George can play Quidditch again, Umbridge is gone! Her ban is lifted!"

The Gryffindors sat in shock, then they raised the roof with their shouts.

"Finally!" sighed George, Harry and Fred, all three of them were looking up at the ceiling.

"Nice guy." said Sirius with a chuckle.
"I take it she doesn't get paid the two thousand galleons a game." said Dr. Clark to Lupin.

"No, she is the flying instructor and the best one on a broom. She automatically gets to referee. She does get a bonus though for doing it." said Lupin smiling.

End of twenty-seventh paragraph.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

"Yeah, he was a real nasty and mean player." said Alicia furiously. "One time he actually picked me off my broom and dropped me in the stands. He wasn't allowed to play for the rest of the season."

Dialogue set, third sentence.

"Explains a whole lot." said Alicia venomously.

End of dialogue set.

"We could see your grin all the way from up there." said Hermione smiling and laughing.

Dialogue line.

Twenty-eighth paragraph.

Twenty-ninth paragraph.

Thirtieth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Lee looked over to Angelina, and smiled as she blew a kiss to him.

"Now I wish I asked you out before George got ahold of you." said Lee grudgingly.

"Sorry Lee, but I ain't letting go." said George slyly.
"I have to, goodness knows if anything would have been commented on if I didn't try and keep him on track." said McGonagall massaging the bridge of her nose.

"And not a bad looker either." said Lee. Alicia winked at him.

"Must been a good day for him, cause normally he flies like a drunken seagull." said Lee under his breath.

"another beauty of a flyer, on and off the field." said Lee looking at Katie.
"LEE!" shouted McGonagall. "Enough! Proposition the girls another time!"
"Yes ma'am." said Lee quickly, moving on with the book.

"It did, I saw stars for a while." said Katie.

Dr. Clark looked slowly at Harry.
"I didn't get hit, least not that year." said Harry quickly.
"That doesn't make me feel any better." said Remus, Sirius and Dr. Clark in unison.
"Oh, we are going to get along splendidly." said Sirius brightly, clapping Dr. Clark on the back.

"Still can't half the time." muttered Lee.
"Nice save Lee." said George and Fred laughing.

Dialogue set, first sentence, eighteenth comma, first word.

People who were fourth years or younger sat forward in their chairs.

End of dialogue set.

The Gryffindor House erupted in cheers.

Thirty-second paragraph.

The Slytherins moaned once more.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"That was nice of you Hagrid, coming to Harry's first game." said Luna dreamily.

"Well, I used to see 'Arry's dad play, all the time." said Hagrid.

Thirty-third paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"How high up in the air were you?" asked Dr. Clark.

"About sixty feet or so, I think." said Harry.

Dr. Clark whistled.

Thirty-fourth paragraph.
"I think we would rather you not be attacked at all." said Remus, the two other men nodded.

"I actually saw that Harry, and so did a bunch others. They couldn't wait to have Gryffindor score again, just to see what you would do." said Angelina.

Harry turned red.

"Kinda explains why you smacked us later on that day." said Fred, absently rubbing the back of his head.

As well as the crowd in the great hall.

"Oliver kinda yelled at us for that, but he was watching too." said Katie with a pout on her lips.

"And he gets it!" said Sirius excitedly.

"Not really." said Harry sadly, then he paled, he knew what was coming in a moment. He readjusted himself so he was leaning against Sirius now and held tightly onto his hand.

"You okay, cub?" said Sirius, with a worried look on his face.
"After last chapter, I think you need me over here," he said quietly.

"Not a wise idea, Harry." said Dr. Clark, who helped Harry pick his legs up and lay them on his lap.

"Why not?" said Harry confused.

"From your Rehabilitation days, I remember that you are ticklish...here" he stared digging his fingers into the back of Harry's leg.

"AAAAHH! NO PLEASE!" he said laughing and trying to squirm away.

Sirius laughed loudly.

"Dr. Clark, I mean, Sam, careful. His legs still hurt from a month ago." said Madame Pomfrey, not wishing to intervene. He stopped quickly, but smiled over to Harry.

“Gee, your mean.” said Harry shaking his head.

Thirty-ninth paragraph.

"What the..? THAT DIRTY LITTLE..." Sirius stopped when he saw Mrs. Weasely glower he swallowed his curse.

But other people were shouting as well, including a few younger Slytherins.

Dialogue line.

Fortieth paragraph.

The Gryffindors groaned.

Forty-first paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"Good question." said Lee, looking confused.

Dialogue line.

"Oh, well in that case...RED CARD!" yelled Lee.

People around the hall sniggered.
"Who cares?" said Lee and Dean.

"And if he had, I’d bust him right in the mouth." snarled Sirius.

"Sirius! He's a child!"

"Not anymore, Molly, the book said he was sixth year. He's twenty now." said Remus darkly.

People started to giggle.

Then they were laughing.

Then they were rolling on the floor laughing hard.

"Huh?" said most of the students.
Forty-fourth paragraph, second sentence.

"What?" asked Sirius, getting more and concerned by the minute.

End of forty-fourth paragraph.

“What’s going on?” asked Dr. Clark fearfully.

Forty-fifth paragraph, third sentence.

“They most certainly don’t! What in the hell?” asked Remus, he was quite pale.

End of forty-fifth paragraph.

People who weren't at the game, stared in fear. What was going on? Sirius, Dr. Clark, and Remus were holding on to Harry tightly.

Forty-sixth paragraph.

“I didn’t know all that was going on.” said Lee a little shamefully.

Dialogue set, first sentence, second comma, first word.

No one laughed, they wanted to find out what was going on with Harry’s broom.

End of dialogue set.

Forty-seventh paragraph.

"Get to the ground Harry!" yelled Dr. Clark.

"He can't, the broom's jinxed!" said Sirius fearfully.
"Well thank Merlin Hagrid was watching out for Harry." said Mr. Weasely, his face was white. "Goodness knows what could happen if no one noticed." he patted his wife on the back supportively.

Forty-eighth paragraph, fourth sentence.

Several girls screamed.

Sirius and Dr. Clark's grip tightened on Harry's hands.

End of forty-eighth paragraph.

Dr. Clark screwed his eyes shut. He wasn’t sure if he could take it anymore.

Forty-ninth paragraph.

"What are you doing?" asked Remus, gray-faced.

Fiftieth paragraph.

Several people turned in their chairs and glared at him. Snape merely ignored them. He knew he was innocent, but proclaiming it now, would not help in him in the slightest.

Dialogue line.

Sirius snarled in Snape's direction and was about to pull out his wand.

"Sirius! It wasn't him." yelled Harry, gripping the wand.

Sirius looked at him in shock.

"Remember what I said in Dumbledore's office, about accusing someone without definite proof?
He was one of the four people I was talking about!” said Harry, eyes flashing.

"Who were the other people?” said Remus, his wand was almost out of his pocket as well.

"You'll find out later.” said Harry tiredly.

"I'm starting to hate that sentence.” said the two Marauders.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"When you get like that, you remind me of Harry.” said Ron shaking his head.

Fifty-first paragraph, third sentence.

Mrs. Weasely was pale and sobbing into her husband’s chest, who was also pale looking. The men in the bowl were holding onto Harry just as tightly as they dared.

Fifty-first paragraph, fifth sentence.

"We felt completely useless. It sucked. We didn't want you riding a broom after that.” said George gravely.

End of fifty-first paragraph.

"Professor McGonagall noticed, she gave him five weeks of detention for that stunt of his.” said Lee, trying to lighten the mood, he failed miserably.

Dialogue line.

Fifty-second paragraph, first sentence.

"Well that explains how his jinx broke suddenly.” said Snape to himself.

End of fifty-second paragraph.

Hermione took one of the blankets from the floor and tried to cover herself up, away from Professor Snape's glare.

"You....were...the......one...who...set...fire...to me?" he said slowly, but his voice was loud and thunderous.

"Severus, she was trying to save Harry, you can understand, I hope?" said Dumbledore carefully.

"I DIDN'T JINX HIM!" he shouted.

"We know that now, but she didn't, not at the time. I will not allow you to punish her longer than two nights of detention. I'm sorry Miss Granger, but not even I can eradicate the whole." he said to her sadly.

"No detention, but she's buying me a new robe." he said, calming himself down.

"Yes sir, I will." she said quickly, still hiding herself.

"After this, we're throwing her a party, setting fire to Snape! She rules!" whispered Fred and George to Ron. He nodded furiously.

Fifty-third paragraph, first sentence.

"It’s a special potions robe, I had saved up money for it." he said still looking over at Hermione.

"Umm....how much were they?" asked Hermione nervously.

"They run about three hundred galleons." said Harry calmly. Noticing her stricken face, he added. "I'll pay for it, it was because of me that you 'lit him up'."

End of fifty-third paragraph.

"Till now anyway." said Neville.

Fifty-fourth paragraph.

There was a collective sigh of relief. Even the Ranger's Doctor was patting his chest, to steady his heart.

“The boy is worse than the lot of you.” he said towards Lionus.

“I’m more impressed with the fact that he could stay on for that long. He does have Ranger tendencies, very strong ones.” he said looking thoughtfully over to the bowl and its inhabitants.

Dialogue line.
"Sorry Hagird," said Neville sheepishly.
"S'all right Neville." said Hagrid kindly.

Fifty-fifth paragraph, first dash.

"I think I would have gotten sick up in the air, I wouldn't be waiting till I got to the ground." said Dr. Clark, looking slightly green. Sirius nodded in agreement.

Fifty-fifth paragraph, third dash.

"However, holding your hands out to catch the sick wasn't a good idea." said Dr. Clark flinching a bit.

"It wasn’t sick I was catching." said Harry with a cunning smile.

End of fifty-fifth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Dead silence.

"What?" said a first year.

“You didn’t!” said Charlie laughing.

“You caught the thing in your MOUTH?” yelled Sirius joyously.

"That sounds like the weirdest game ever to be played at Hogwarts. " said Remus shaking his head and laughing.

Dialogue set, first sentence, third comma.

"Suck it up, he didn't break any rules." said Sirius grasping Harry's shoulder and shaking it happily.

Dialogue set, third sentence.

"Dear lord, what now?" groaned Dr. Clark.
"Thank you Hagrid, strong tea is what he needed after that little episode." said Mrs. Weasely, wiping her eyes quickly on her husband’s handkerchief.

"Counter-curses sometimes use the same method, but you didn't know that then." said Harry looking over to Hermione and smiling.

"Cause he hated Harry since day one!" shouted Ron.

"Ron! Why would he, really?" said Mrs. Weasley.

"I used to think that it was just because I existed." said Harry with a small smile, unseen by him Sirius and Remus clutched at their chests, and Snape flinched.

"Only your monster of an uncle thinks that way." said Dr. Clark running his hand through the teen's hair.

"Like he always does!" shouted Ron and Hermione up to Fudge and Umbridge.

"Which he wasn't, by the way." said Harry loudly to the crowd.

"What did he just call that three-headed dog?" said Sirius with widened eyes.

"Fluffy." said Harry with a smile.

Sirius blinked several times at Hagrid, he then mouthed 'Fluffy?' to Hagrid with a disbelieving look on his face.
The students shot straight up in their chairs.

" Damn! " said the twins.

" Too bad the other person couldn't take a leaf out of Snape's book. " said Harry quietly.

" Never stopped us! " said Ron with a wide grin.

The teachers groaned and smacked their foreheads.

" You let something slip again, Hagrid. " said Harry with a smile.

" Never meant to " said Hagrid turning red.

End of chapter.
"We love you, Hagrid." said Harry with a laugh, and then, to his friends and newfound family’s horror, his laughs turned to cries of pain. Snape ran over, as well as the Ranger’s Doctor. They poured more and more potions down his throat. When he opened his eyes weakly, he gripped the Doctor’s collar, standing beside the bowl.

“Isn’t there anything you can do? To make it hurt less?” he begged. Sirius, Dr. Clark, and Remus looked up quickly.

“There is, but it will stop the readings for a the next forty six hours.”

“Please, I can’t take it anymore!” he said whimpering. Ron and Hermione looked at each other in fear. Harry was admitting he was in pain?

“Let’s see how much pain, your actually going through..” he said placing a small button-like object on his chest. A dummy then popped out of thin air. He pushed the button on Harry chest. The students and the guests watched in horror at what had happened to the dummy. Even the Doctor quickly turned it off.

“Alright, Lionus clear an area, we need to use a pod.”

Lionus whipped out a gold handled wand and cleared the chairs away from a section towards the back of the Hall.

The Doctor then walked over and placed a small box on the ground and pushed the top of the cube. It started to glow, slowly at first until the glow of the box grew to an immense size. In the box’s place stood a coffin shaped...thing....they couldn’t describe it. It looked like a coffin, but there was pipes curved over the edges of the sides. The lid was made of glass there were buttons all over the bottom and side.

The Doctor went over and opened the pod as the Ranger went and picked up the ailing boy.

“What are you doing? What is that going to do?” asked Sirius quickly.

“It will make him better, no side-effects. It will even heal the injuries from the incident.” he said, not bothering to turn around, he continued on walking and placed the young man in the pod.

The students started to crowd around, the Doctor was being bombarded with questions and first years were trying to get a closer look at the pod. Lionus had had enough, he whipped out a small black ball and immediately, the Hall was engulfed in darkness.
A moment later, they saw the pod was now filled with a sort of liquid, water it seemed, and inside......was Harry......asleep. His shirt was gone and they could see different coated wires attached to his chest and reporting their findings to a small monitor to the left of the unconscious figure. What stopped him from drowning was an oxygen mask attached to his mouth.

“What....WHAT DID YOU DO?” bellowed Sirius, flinging himself at the Doctor.

Lionus caught him by the throat and held him in the air, with one hand.

“Relax, Harry is fine, what he is right is an intensive care pod. We use it for serious cases, he’s not one of those, but it was quicker this way. He will sleep for two days. Take this time to think about what you learned about the boy and take this time to rest.” said Lionus sternly. He then lowered the man slowly to the ground.

“There is nothing you can do now, just wait till he wakes up. Then you can roughhouse with him all you want.” said the Doctor kindly.

Sirius glared at the Ranger and walked forward, before the Ranger could grab him again, Sirius took a chair and placed it next to the pod.

“I’ll stay till he wakes up, don’t even think about moving me.” said Sirius angrily. Lupin and Dr. Clark looked at each other and grabbed chairs to sit beside Harry as well.

The Doctor smiled. “He could use the company.”

“The rest of you might as well go off and relax, no readings till Sunday afternoon.” said the Ranger plainly. When no one moved, he shook his head. “There is no point you being here, go on and git!” he said sternly.

Dumbledore had to reassure that nothing would happen to Harry and that they should leave and let Harry rest. Slowly people left the hall.

“These books will take forever to go through!” whined Umbridge.

“What did we tell you, woman? Be silent!” said the lieutenant sharply.

“Deal with it, you stop reading now, as in permanently, it could cause some harm.” said Lionus tiredly.

“You said that earlier, what could happen?” asked Sirius

“Potter will lose all his memories, that’s where these books come from. You stop reading, he won’t remember who he is, and there will be no recovering from it.” said Lionus seriously.
Over the next two days, people were permitted to wander about as they saw fit. It was just as well, because there was a gaping hole in everyone's schedule. Umbridge was removed as a teacher, unable to be let go from Ranger custody, not to mention not being able to leave the Great Hall, and Lupin wasn't about to leave Harry's side for anything. People wandered aimlessly, discussing the books and all that Harry had seen and done. Some people even went to Hogsmeade to do a bit of shopping, to get their minds off of Harry's horrible home life and all the danger he seemed to find himself in, but found themselves buying something from Honeydukes for Harry when he woke up. The pile was growing steadily larger with each passing hour. As well as the numerous vases of get well flowers from female admirers.

Seeing Harry in that coffin-like pod was a little frightening. His hair was suspended by the water and his eyes were always closed, but they twitched if you looked close enough. And if you had the misfortune of watching too long, a yellow light would come on and Harry, inside the thing, would have his whole body twitch violently. Sirius just about lost his mind when he saw it for the first time.

In the meantime, while he was sitting beside the pod, Dr. Clark met and acquainted himself with the rest of the teachers of the school, as well as some of the guests. He was very popular with the Muggle Studies students and especially with Mr. Weasely. Despite Dr. Clark being worried about Harry, he couldn't help but laugh good-naturedly at Mr. Weasely’s enthusiasm.

It was lunchtime when the constant red light turned slowly to green. The Doctor hurried over and pushed several different buttons. Keeping a close eye on the monitors. The water slowly left the container, and when it was gone, the Doctor opened the chamber, he took the wires and other monitoring paraphernalia off the boys chest. Harry's eyes flickered and slowly opened. The Doctor removed the oxygen mask and helped the boy out of the pod. Harry was almost completely limp, he was so weak that he could barely stand.

"Alright lad, take a deep breath, how do you feel?" said the Doctor supporting his full weight.

Harry gulped in breaths of air. "A lot better than I did before I went in there. But I'm still so tired."
he gasped almost collapsing to the ground.

“I thought you said he wasn’t going to have any side-effects!” shouted Ron.

“So I did, ask the woman what she used for the Leechhold potion.” said the Doctor to Lionus.

“Why doesn’t he ask her, himself?” whispered Blaise to Draco.

“He’s the most lethal member of the Rangers. You say the wrong thing to him, and you’re a criminal, you’re dead in five seconds. No warnings.” said Lionus, catching Blaise’s question. “We like them to see Devil’s Garden before they die.” he said with a smirk.

Lionus then walked over to Umbridge, “What ingredients did you use in the potion, woman?”

“What if I don’t tell you?” said Umbridge smugly. Lionus didn’t answer, but he did take out a small object out of his pocket, it was a circular device with a giant glowing button. He pushed it and a thin needle shot out and embedded itself in her arm.

Immediately, she writhed in agony and the Great Hall was filled with her painful screams. He pushed the button again after five minutes.

“You’ll get that again if you don’t tell me and again if you lie to me. What were the ingredients?” She gasped, “What was that?” she said weakly.

“I don’t answer your questions, you answer mine. What were the ingredients?” he said quickly.

“All right, all right, it was one of his owl’s feathers, a strand of hair, and an emerald.” she said quickly.

“Is that all?” asked Lionus.

“Yes.” she said, then without warning, she began screaming.

“I told you, don’t lie to me! What else was there?” he said dangerously.

“...huff...huff...hair,” she gasped. “a....huff.....phial.....of....his....blood....huff.” No more screams came.

“See how easy that was?” said Lionus with an evil smile. “Well Doc?”

“Well in that case, he’ll be weak for an hour or so. Let’s let him rest a bit more, he’s all yours gentlemen.” said the Doctor, who was kneeling on the ground, Harry’s head resting against his chest.

Sirius hurried over and picked him up. The three men walked over to the bowl and sat down in it. Snape was about to hand them a strengthening potion to Remus when the Doctor stopped him.
"He won't need that. Give him some time, he'll be right as rain momentarily." said the Doctor kindly.

Harry was fast asleep, the Doctor said that he needed plenty of rest, but moving him too far would have been a bad idea. So, while everyone finished their lunch, Harry slept soundly in Remus' lap.

After lunch, it was decided that while Harry rested, the rest of the school would continue on with the book. Dumbledore volunteered to read the next chapter. He cleared his throat and stated loudly.

"The next chapter is Name of Chapter.

"What is Erised? Is that a place?" asked Dennis.

"It's 'desire' spelt backwards." said Luna serenely.

"Oh." said Dennis, he leaned towards his older brother and whispered. “She’s smart.”

First paragraph, first sentence.

"I remember the first Christmas we had with Harry, we had to do it a two weeks after December the twenty-fifth, just so he could come.” said Dr. Clark with a small smile.

"Why was that?" asked Blaise.

“Something about his cousin’s aunt. She didn’t like him being out of her sight. Then we found out that anything he got for Christmas we would have to keep it at Jim’s house or my apartment.”

“Why? Why wasn’t he allowed to take his stuff home?” asked Ron.

"His uncle threw away all of his presents, new clothes, toys, everything. Tried telling the proper authorities, never got anywhere. So we just decided to keep next year’s Christmas stuff at Jim's.

"Well, the that year, Holly built a small gingerbread house with him, he had a lot of fun dismantling it afterwards. I took him out to build a snowman and Jim got to play Father Christmas for him. Never saw a kid so happy.” said Dr. Clark smiling down at Harry with suspiciously wet eyes.

"You guys did a lot for him.” said Sirius quietly, feeling a little guilty for not being there.

"He deserved it, every minute." said Dr. Clark.

Sirius and Remus smiled down at Harry. He certainly does.

First paragraph, third sentence.

Ron blinked, he walked up and looked at the book in Dumbledore’s hands and reread the last part. He looked over to Hermione and started snorting with laughter. Hermione also tried hard to hold in her laughter.

"Hey! It wasn't funny! Quirrell almost killed us! Never saw him so angry, kinda out of character for him," said Fred indignantly.

“I think he would have hexed us if it weren't for Professor McGonagall stepping in and giving us detention." finished George.

"Remember that later. The whole 'out of character part'." said Hermione clutching the stitch in her side from her held in laughter.

End of first paragraph.

"Hedwig wouldn' let me touch ‘er, Harry had to come calm ‘er down." said Hagrid with a slight smile.

Second paragraph, second sentence.

Dumbledore took the blanket and lightly tossed it over the sleeping figure.

End of second paragraph.

"Why don't you put up some warming charms?" asked Professor Flitwick.

"You know that large hole I covered with a new bookshelf in my classroom?" said Snape calmly.

"Yes?" said Professor Flitwick.

"That's why." said Snape plainly. “Last time someone used a warming charm, they ended up in the dungeon down the hall.”

“I remember that, almost all of his bones were broken.” said Madame Pomfrey.

Dialogue line.

People turned to stare at Malfoy, who was shifting uneasily.

“How did you know he wasn’t welcomed at home?” asked Colin suspiciously.

“I didn’t really.” he said shamefully.
“Good Harry, don’t give into people like that, it only gives them satisfaction.” said Dr. Clark with a broad smile, ruffling Harry's messy locks.

“How would that make people laugh?” asked Fred.

“Beats me.” said George.

“Good! We were afraid someone actually found that funny.” sighed George.

“I didn’t see it, and I’m impressed, was scared out of mind, but impressed.” said Lupin smiling down at Harry.

“He had one, it was just a bit....scattered.” said Dr. Clark sadly.

“And you never will again.” said Dumbledore looking down at the sleeping form.

“Almost knocked into me, he was running so fast.” said Percy thoughtfully.

Professor McGonagall looked down. “I should have noticed.” she said bitterly.

“Don’t blame yourself Minerva.” said Professor Sprout kindly. “He hid his life away from even his closest friends.”
"That hurts." said Dr. Clark sadly.

"You were gone, and I couldn’t go to Mrs. McFinn’s, I was trying to forget.” said Harry sleepily.

"Mornin’ cub!” said Sirius brightly.

“What do you mean? I thought you said that you still saw Mrs. McFinn!” said Hermione quickly.

"Let me guess, It’s Holly’s mother, right?” said Dr. Clark solemnly. Harry nodded.

“What’s her mom got to do with anything?” asked Ron.

"Holly’s mom is on the fast-track of the elite social circles. She never approved of Jim, thought her daughter should have married someone of equally high breeding, or of royal blood. I remember the time Harry met her. Right before Jim passed away, the Queen threw a Garden Party, and she selected decorated Police Officers to be honored guests.

“Jim was one of the most decorated officers on the force at the time and so he received an invitation. Holly thought a really nice party would be wonderful to take Harry to, so we rented a small suit for him, Jim and I and we all went.

“Well when we got there, Holly saw her mother and wanted to run for it, she didn’t know that she was there and wanted to leave almost immediately. However, Harry saw the lilies and took off like a shot. You always had an attachment to those things, especially the Tiger Lilies.” he said down to Harry, who was yawning hugely.

“It was too late anyway, Holly’s mother saw her and walked straight over. Ignoring Jim and I she tried dragging her over to talk to some rich, single, male friend of hers. I will never forget this for as long as I live: Harry came running up and held out a lily for Holly. Her mother FREAKED, started shrieking about ruining the royal flowers and summoning the guards as if she owned the place. Who’d a guessed, that the Queen herself came up from behind him and told her that she said it was alright. That it was a gift for Holly. Holly’s mother looked as if a train had hit her dead on.
Holly took the flower, she was nervous as hell. Holly’s mom wouldn’t look at Harry at all that day.
Or any other day, that I remember.” said Dr. Clark laughing.

The school stared at Harry. “You met the Queen? Face to Face?” said Hermione weakly.

“Accidentally,” said Harry modestly.

“Do we get to hear about this, so called ‘accident?’” said Ron slowly. Harry looked away, his face red. “Guess not now anyway. You keeping track Hermione, of all the things he’s gonna tell us later.”

"That one is going on the top of the list." said Hermione writing quickly on a long piece of parchment.

"At least you got to come visit me two years later.” said Bill smiling.
Fifth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

“What could you do to help?” asked Zacharias snidely.

“Ron’s really good at the Levitation spell, he can lift things over eighty pounds with no strain, or have you forgotten the troll already? He was more than capable then handling a tree.” said Harry stretching his thin frame.

Zacharias gave a small snarl. “What does weight have to do with anything?”

“Try lifting something.” said Harry simply.

Zacharias looked around and smiled, he stood up and swished and flicked his wand toward the loveseat that Hermione and Ron sat in, it trembled a bit, but it wouldn’t move. His smile faded quickly.

“Hagrid, do you mind if we use you for a demonstration?” asked Harry.

“Nah, I don’ mind.” said Hagrid, a little confused.

“Ron?”

Ron, without standing up, used the same movements, and Hagrid’s chair levitated five feet off the ground. He then set the chair down gently.

“The more you practice that spell, lifting different things, the heavier the object you can lift. Most things require two wizards to lift, Ron’s worked so hard that he can lift things all on his own. No help required.” said Harry proudly. Ron blushed.

Dialogue line.

“T’was nice o’ you ta ask tho’” said Hagrid, still looking over at Ron with some pride.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

"Aren't you the polite one?” asked Katie with an upturned nose.

End of dialogue set.

"Can I offer a blanket apology too?” said Draco warily. Harry had to look up to look over him, he nodded.
"For what though?" he asked.

"For all the things I say about his family." he said quietly.

"Go for it." said Bill plainly.

"I apologize for every mean thing I say about your family." he said humbly.

"All right. We accept your apologies. Unless there is a big one that needs some considering, then we'll let you know." said Charlie wisely. Draco agreed to the terms.

Sixth paragraph, fourth word.

"Get him Ron!" yelled the twins.

End of sixth paragraph.

"AACCK! NO! ABORT! ABORT!" they cried after what Dumbledore had read. They covered their eyes and dived for the floor, even Snape couldn't suppress a chuckle while everyone else laughed.

Dialogue line.

Seventh paragraph.

"Wasn't quick enough." the twins whimpered.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

"It is against the rules, but what do you expect an eleven year old boy is to do, when someone insults his family?" asked Tonks with a look of disgust on her face. Her usual bubblegum pink hair had turned red and wavy.

End of dialogue set.

"And for insulting Ron's family, what did Draco get as punishment?" asked Luna serenely.

Draco and Snape didn't answer.
"You say that the other teachers are unfair towards the Slytherins, but you seem to be the only one who is unfair." she said calmly.

Snape stared at her with a frown on her face. Luna, however, switched her attention to something invisible flying over her head.

Eighth paragraph.

“And the sick thing is, you are so blind to that.” said Tonks angrily.

Snape folded his arms and looked at the floor.

Dialogue line.

"Ron, don't make threats like that!" chided Mrs. Weasely.

Dialogue line.

Dr. Clark looked down at Harry. "Harry....we talked about hate. Do you remember?"

"Yes, I do." said Harry guiltily.

"Then why do you hate them?" asked Dr. Clark.

"Right now they sound like really stupid reasons." said Harry honestly, but not meeting Dr. Clark's eyes.

"Do you still hate them, then?" continued Dr. Clark. Harry shook his head.

"Good boy. You can dislike people all you wish, but someone so young shouldn't be hating people already." he said with a smile.

"I hate Voldemort." he said simply looking up at him.

"I don't know who that is." said Dr. Clark, with a confused look on his face.

"He was the one who killed my parents." he said.

Dr. Clark stared at him, then looked over to Sirius, who nodded. "......you can hate him all you want, then." he said rubbing Harry's head.

"You love contradicting yourself, don't you?" said Harry with a small smile.

"From where I am sitting, I can reach behind your knee still."

"Point taken, please continue reading." said Harry quickly. Dumbledore tried not to laugh.
"Will the Great Hall be decorated for Christmas this year?" asked a first year Hufflepuff excitedly to his friend.

"It's decorated every year. You'll love it." said Sirius smiling broadly.

"I hope I'm around here to see it too." said Dr. Clark hopefully.

"You are always welcomed here, Dr. Clark, a gift, for taking care of Harry." said Dumbledore kindly.

"Yeah, like Harry and Ron are going to want to go to the library a DAY before holidays." said Charlie and Bill, shaking their heads.

"What the...who are you and what have you done with our little brother." said Bill standing and pointing his wand at Ron, who started laughing.

"That reminds me, Harry do you know any decorating spells? Cause I'm a Prefect, I have to help decorate the school." he added glumly.

"I know a few, write down what you had in mind and I'll come up with something."

"Thanks, mate. I think Hermione would like to sit in with that little tutoring class as well." said Ron looking at Hermione, who appeared very excited.
"I thought you knew some decorating spells already?" said Harry stunned.

"I want to know if you have some decorating spells I don't know!" she said quickly.

Dialogue line.

"I was thinking along the line of possessed." said Bill with a laugh. Harry heard Ginny groan, since his second year, she was always a little nervous around that word. Harry sent her a reassuring smile over to her.

Dialogue line.

"Okay, I can understand that then." said Bill brightly. "You had me scared there for a moment."

Dialogue line.

"It's only to satisfy our curiosity." said Harry brightly over to Hagrid.

"We weren't even thinking of invading that dog's personal space again." said Ron with a smile.

"You had better not." said every single adult in the school. Except for the Rangers, who weren't around soon enough to hear about the dog, and the Teachers, because they knew that they indeed go visit that dog again.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"I can't believe it was right FREAKIN' there and I didn't see it." said Harry angrily.

"Mate, I had been looking at it for years, never dawned on me either." said Ron consolingly.

People looked at them wonderingly. What were they talking about?

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"Sorry, Hagrid." said the three of them.
"Nothing, as it turns out." said Harry looking over to Snape.

"Looking back, there was no way in," Ron looked over to his mother quickly. "blazes, he would be in in there." he said shaking his head.

"It’ll take you forever to find him!” cried one of the second year Hufflepuffs.

"Wise decision Mr. Weasely. He is mentioned in several different books, you could get lucky." said Professor Dumbledore.

"However, we didn't get lucky." said Ron glumly.

He is, in a majority of those books actually, he is mentioned." said Dumbledore approvingly.

"However, I fear you aren't able to go examine those."

"Not until second year anyway." whispered Ron to Hermione, who giggled.

"Actually Mr. Potter, with you taking your W.A.N.D.S test, you have free access to those books now." said Professor McGonagall.

Harry's eyebrows raised, " Really?"
"Nice to know we can just browse and find something new to learn." said Ernie with smirk.

"She would tell people what you were looking for. If she feels that it isn't part of your curriculum, she will ask teachers what you needed it for. Unless you have a note." said Professor Sprout.

"Nice of you to have faith in us." said Ron smirking.

"Won't happen, she never leaves those books, except to eat, sleep, or to use the restroom." said Professor Flitwick.

"I was hoping they would keep looking." said Hermione with a small smile.

"We did, for a while." said Harry guiltily.

"Nicolas is known in both the wizarding world and the muggle world. They could have heard of him." said Dumbledore helpfully.

"Wish I did ask them, then." said Hermione, pouting.
"Okay, so we didn't look much longer." said Ron shifting uneasily.
Hermione rolled her eyes.

"Now, that's where you can always find them." whispered a sixth year Gryffindor.

Malfoy, as well as everyone else turned and stared at Harry, who was looking innocently up at the ceiling and whistling.

"Well seasoned." said Harry loudly with a smile.

"We had cousins and uncles that wanted that chess set, Grandpa wouldn't give it to them, they had to beat him in order to get it. Ron was the only one, and he was eight years old!" said Bill proudly.

"What made that old chess set so special?" asked Colin excitedly.

"It's The Chess Master chess set. It's the oldest chess set in the world, and the most valuable. If you wished to purchase it, instead of winning it in a Chess Master Duel, the board and the pieces are worth about twelve million galleons." said Harry, flipping through his little black book once again.

People stared at Ron. Ron and his family were staring at Harry, his mouth agape.

"W-W-What?" said the Weasely family, their voices combined were barely over a whisper.

"He's right," said Dumbledore with a broad smile. "That board is the most sought after chessboard in the world. It's a priceless treasure. Your Grandfather Bilius won it from me, almost three-quarters of a century ago. It was my most prized possession, and I lost it. He was a marvelous player, and for an eight year old to beat him, and, in a certain aspect, myself, you must be incredibly skillful." said Dumbledore beaming over to him. Ron blushed and scratched the back of his head.
"I always wondered why he made a speech the every time we played, especially after I beat him that one time."

"That's right, beating you in a friendly game won't get you the chessboard, you have to win it in a proper Chess Master Duel, and you have to make the traditional challenge. Your Grandfather always was one for the theatrics." said Dumbledore fondly. "Despite it's worth, I don't recommend selling it."

"We'll never sell it." said the entire Weasley family proudly.

Eighteenth paragraph, fourth paragraph.

"They never are." said Ron proudly.

End of eighteenth paragraph.

"That in itself is a great feat, Mr. Weasley. It took myself ten years for them to trust me. Even longer for your Grandfather." said Dumbledore.

Nineteenth paragraph, first sentence.

"They just barely trust me." said Seamus quietly.

Nineteenth paragraph, second sentence, seventh word.

"I still suck at the game." said Harry with a smirk.

End of nineteenth paragraph.

"I had to tell my chess pieces to shut up a few times when I first got them. They learned real quick that my plans were better than what they had in mind." said Ron with a snigger.

Twentieth paragraph, first sentence.

"Why not?" asked Draco.

"Well, the only time I received any real presents were when I still had the McFinn's and Dr. Clark around, ever since I lost both them, I didn't have anyone that cared about me. So I didn't expect anything." said Harry. A few people looked towards their Housemates sadly.

End of twentieth paragraph.

The students began to cheer, but Harry stared at them.

"What got into the lot of you?" asked Harry in confusion.

"You got presents! After so many years of nothing, you got presents!" said a first year excitedly.

"You lot are mental." he said shaking his head.

Dialogue line.

A few girls wolf-whistled and then giggled madly. Sirius couldn't hold his laughter in.

"What's so funny?" said Harry with a low growl.

"You're starting to be a chick magnet with the girls." said Sirius in a giggling whisper.

"Do yourself a favor Harry, don't take any advice from him, in the ways of women. Unless you like getting slapped." said Remus muttering over to Harry. Sirius frowned and crossed his arms

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"I think a turnip from the Dursleys would be a bit much, compared to their past presents." said Harry with a small smile. Some of the school students, teachers, and guests growled when they heard that. Sirius and Remus made a mental note to make his next Christmas better than ever before. Dr. Clark gave Harry's hand a gentle squeeze.

Twenty-first paragraph.

"I still have it." said Harry, reaching into his knapsack, that was sitting on the floor, and pulling out the flute. It was indeed hand-made, and the bottom of the flute was carved in the shape of an owl. He put it to his lips and began to blow. He was right, it did sound like an owl, but it had a tune to it.

Out of nowhere, Hedwig fluttered down, and landed on his knee and hooted along with the flute. The females in the Great Hall, except for Umbridge who was too busy glaring at Harry, cooed. It went on for a good three minutes till Harry finished with low note. The school applauded. Dr. Clark stared at the bird, "I had never seen an owl act like that." he said to Remus in a whisper.

"She's special." said Remus simply.
"You're telling me." he said keeping an eye on Hedwig.

"She won't bite, Dr. Clark. Hedwig, come here." he said holding out his arm. Hedwig fluttered up to the held out arm and nipped his finger affectionately.

"Hedwig, this is the Dr. Clark I told you about." said Harry. Hedwig, hopped over to Dr. Clark's leg and looked up to him. She got very close to his face and he leaned back a bit. "Hedwig, give him a bit of space." said Harry laughing quietly. "He's never met a owl before, let alone a beauty such as yourself, you are a bit overwhelming," he added silkily.

She puffed up importantly and settled herself down on his knee. Waiting for him to stroke her feathers.

"Stroke her head, that's what she's waiting for." he whispered to Dr. Clark. He slowly moved his forefinger down her feathers and she hooted happily. She turned her head around and nipped his fingers.

"So far she likes you." said Harry with a smile.

Twenty-second paragraph.

Note from the Dursleys.

"What message did you send?" asked Sirius and Dr. Clark incredulously.

"I just wished them the best of the season." said Harry simply.

"How can you wish them anything after all they've done to you?" asked Bill in shock.

"I just thought....." he said helplessly.

"You really are too noble." moaned Remus smiling.

Present from the Dursleys.

The Muggleborns stared at the book. Even Dumbledore mouth was distorted into a scowl.

"That's not a Christmas present! That's a five year old's allowance!" cried Hermione.

"It's more than what Potter's worth." said Umbridge loudly.

SNAP! CRACK!

Umbridge was on the ground clutching her cheek and the Ranger, who was standing guarding over her, was clutching a blood red whip.

"I told you once before. Be silent."

Harry nearly wrenched his neck as he snapped his head up to where the sound came from.
"Dumbledore, sir?" said Harry quickly.

"What is it, Harry?" said Dumbledore, a frown still on his face.

"I know what she used, during the incident, besides the cudgel." he said earnestly. The school became quiet, then students began to mutter and growl.

"Harry, I told you, try not to remember..." started Dumbledore soothingly.

"It was a whip." he replied quickly. After he said that, he rubbed his back suddenly, it felt as if something were slowly cutting into back. But nothing was there, and his back didn't feel as if there were any open wounds.

The school became as silent as a tomb. The three men in the bowl and Dumbledore stared in horror at Harry. He then turned towards the Ranger standing over Umbridge. "Would it be possible to hit her a thousand more times?" he snarled angrily.

"Not in front of the students we won't, but I'll add it to the list I'll give to Hexting." said Lionus with a sneer. Dumbledore nodded and continued. Remus pulled Harry back down, so that he was lying across the men's laps again. Hedwig flitted up and landed on Harry's knee again.

"I'm fine, I don't hurt anymore, Remus." Harry said indignantly.

"Don't care. You aren't moving out of arm's reach anytime soon." he said firmly.

Dialogue line.

"You've got to be kidding me." moaned Hermione.

Twenty-third paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"You are so your father's son." said Mrs. Weasely fondly. Ron beamed and accepted the hug from his father. Malfoy looked on, with a peculiar expression on his face.

Dialogue set, first sentence

"Do you still have it?" asked Mr. Weasely. Ron dug into his pocket and pulled it out.

"I keep it for luck." said Ron.

"May I borrow it?" said Mr. Weasely to his son. Ron nodded and Mr. Weasely walked back to the sofa he shared with his wife.
"So you knew he hadn't received anything, in the past?" said Hermione looking at him in anger.

"I...he told me....I didn't know it was that bad." Ron said in a defeated voice.

"What is wrong with them?" asked Bill wonderingly.

"Just... didn't know if he would like something homemade."

"I was happy just to see a parcel with my name on it to be perfectly honest, I didn't care what was in it. Turned out to be a wonderful gift." he said happily.

Mrs. Weasely blushed.

"MOM! Green isn't a Gryffindor color!" scolded Charlie.

"It went so beautifully with his eyes though!" said Mrs. Weasely defensibly.

"It still does." said Harry absently.

"What?" asked Dr. Clark.

"I still wear it." said Harry.

"This was when you were eleven, how can you still fit into it? Wait a minute, never mind, I forgot how skinny you are. That damned pod showed me just how thin you are. Harry, I could see your ribs!" admonished Dr. Clark fearfully.

"Looks like you will have to make some the ribs you made the summer I last saw you. Those 'stick to your ribs’ ribs.' Harry said brightly.

"I think I'll have to make you your own batch." he said with a small smile.

"The fudge was delicious by the way Mrs. Weasely." beamed Harry.
"I thought you liked maroon." said Mrs. Weasely, a little confused.

"Um....mom...I like maroon." said Charlie.

"Oh dear, Ron, what color is your favorite?" said Mrs. Weasely sheepishly.

"I like red." Ron said quietly. Mrs. Weasely quickly wrote it down on a piece of parchment.

Dialogue line.

Twenty-fifth paragraph.

"Those didn't last long when Ron found them." said Harry laughing.

Twenty-sixth paragraph.

Twenty-seventh paragraph, first sentence.

"What, wait...is that..?" asked Lupin quietly.

End of twenty-seventh paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Twenty-eighth paragraph.

"It is..!" whispered Sirius.

"I'm lost." said Dr. Clark. All the other students in the school, as well as a few guests were as well. Those that knew James Potter personally, knew what it was.

Dialogue set, first sentence, second comma.

A gasp breezed through the hall. "Those things actually exist?" breathed Dr. Clark.

End of dialogue set.

Twenty-ninth paragraph.

Dialogue line.
“Who gave that to you?” asked several students in amazement. Harry didn't answer them. He looked over to Sirius and Remus curiously and saw that both of their eyes were shining and tears were trickling down their cheeks.

Dr. Clark also noticed the current emotional state the two men beside him wore. "What is wrong with them?"

"The cloak belonged to my father, they were his best friends." whispered Harry. Dr. Clark nodded and patted both of them men on the back.

"So would we!" said the Twins.

"Yes...yes it did." said Sirius faintly.

"Gee, thanks for sharing. We would have liked to use it a few times, would have made pranking so much more awesome." said Fred and George with a pout.

"Thank you Mr. Potter for not sharing it with them." said Professor McGonagall.
"Oh I do not!" said Mrs. Weasely.

"It was thicker than ours." said Fred.

"Well...he was so skinny...I thought he would get cold." she said quietly.

"Oh...well...then...never mind." said Fred.

"They are." said the Weasely children and Harry.

"They love that joke as well." said Mrs. Weasley shaking her head.

"Who are we disturbing? There was nobody else there besides us!" said Ron throwing up his arms.

"That must have been embarrassing for you." said Luna dreamily.

"Like you haven't embarrassed us when we were younger." said George to Percy. "God, you would try and pull us all around the place when we were at other people's houses and telling people we were holy terrors."

"Well, you were!" said Percy defensively.
"Yeah, but mom at least let them figure it out for themselves. More fun for us!" said Fred indignantly.

Thirty-seventh paragraph, first sentence.

"Don't be insulted, wait till you hear about it." said Harry quickly up to Dr. Clark.

Thirty-seventh paragraph, third sentence, third semi-colon.

"I remember when you made them with Holly on when we celebrated Christmas. Those were the best chipolatas I had ever had." he said licking his lips. "Never thought sausage and bacon could taste so good."

Thirty-seventh paragraph, end of third sentence.

"Wizard crackers? They anything like normal, um.....Muggle?..Christmas crackers?" asked Dr. Clark.

"These are way better." said Hermione excitedly.

Thirty-seventh paragraph, fourth sentence.

"Yeah, that sums it up about right, you mean that wizard crackers have something else inside?" asked Dr. Clark.

"Yeah, they have a lot more." said Harry brightly.

Thirty-seventh paragraph, fifth sentence.

"Yeah, that is a little more than what our crackers contain. They don't carry live animals." said Dr. Clark with his eyebrows raised as he stroked Hedwig's feathers.

"Hedwig was happy, she caught a few of those" said Harry smiling.

End of thirty-seventh paragraph.

"I'm finding out very quickly that you march to the beat of a different drum, Professor." said Dr. Clark laughing over to Dumbledore.
"I pride myself on that, and please, call me 'Albus'." said Dumbledore reaching over and shaking Dr. Clark's hand.

"Then you can call me 'Sam'." said Dr. Clark.

Thirty-eighth paragraph, second sentence.

"Ouch!" said a few students.

"After I saw that, I cut my turkey into very small pieces." said Harry trying not to laugh.

End of thirty-eighth paragraph.

All the students gasped. McGonagall....giggled? Professor McGonagall blushed, as did Hagrid. The people who weren't there, and those that were there, but didn't notice, pouted. They would have killed to have seen that!

Thirty-ninth paragraph, first sentence, fifth comma.

"What did you do with that stuff?" asked Hermione.

Harry smiled mischievously, "I used both on Uncle Vernon."

The whole school sucked in a lungful of air.

"Harry, he beat the living S*&^ out of you! Why would you even think of using that stuff on him?!" asked Sirius staring at Harry in shock.

"I had a secret weapon at the time." said Harry with a smirk.

"What weapon could you possibly have against a man that almost beat you to death!" asked Dr. Clark worriedly.

Harry slowly took out his wand twirled in around his fingers. Not saying a word.

"Oh....that is a suitable weapon. But Petunia did grow up with Lily, she would have known that magic can't be used outside of school." said Sirius warningly.

"Lily never told her." said Snape plainly.

"How does he know?" asked Harry.

"Beats me." lied Remus, he hated to do it, but he promised Snape that he wouldn't tell Harry anything about Severus and his mother.
"They're starting to trust me, cause they know that Ron's too good for me to handle. Sometimes they help me narrow the score a bit." said Harry.

"And Hedwig's apparently." said Dr. Clark, warming up to the owl at last.

"Which we won." said Fred and Ron at the same time. They glared at each other.

"I think Hagrid won that one." said Harry smiling over to Hagrid.

"That wasn't fair, his snowballs just about knocked us out of our socks." said the Weasley's pouting playfully.

"Just about? I had to actually dig for one of mine!" said Harry laughing. The school joined in.

"No offense Percy, but never let him help you play, he's the worst one in the family." said Bill fondly.

"That was one of the funniest things I had ever seen." said Harry thinking fondly back to that evening. "Never knew that Fred and George were such acrobats."

"I guess I can let that one go." said Dr. Clark. "We didn't have you on Christmas day."
Forty-fourth paragraph.

"It's the first thing I had of my dad's." said Harry quietly.

Forty-fifth paragraph.

Part of Christmas note.

Forty-sixth paragraph, third sentence.

"If it's the excitement I know it is, this is isn't the first time you've had it." said Ranger Lionus.

Harry looked over to him quickly. People looked at him in puzzlement, what was he talking about?

End of forty-sixth paragraph.

Forty-seventh paragraph.

"I wouldn't have woken me either, mate." said Ron understandingly.

Forty-eighth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Forty-ninth paragraph, first sentence.

The students yelled out several different places at the school he should visit. A seventh year boy yelled out a certain place and got smacked soundly by the women around him.

Forty-ninth paragraph, fourth sentence.

"Oohh! Good choice! Find out who Nicolas Flamel is!" yelled a few first years.

End of forty-ninth paragraph.

Fiftieth paragraph.

"Just thinking of it gives me the creeps." said a second year.
"I say, pick up any book but that one." said Colin looking a bit green.

"Harry, I want you to take a 'Sensing' test sometime soon, you show amazing promise." said Dumbledore, looking over to Harry.

"Oh he'll take it." said Lupin smiling down at Harry, who nodded.

"Bad feeling alert." said Ginny almost completely covering her eyes.

"OH S%^$! GET OUT OF THERE!" shouted Dr. Clark. Harry stared at him.

"You cursed, you never curse!" said Harry with his eyebrows raised.

"Hey, I'm human." said Dr. Clark shrugging.

Sirius, Harry, and Remus stared at him.

"What?" asked Dr. Clark.

"You sound just like me." said Remus while Sirius was trying not to laugh.

"Harry, you panicked?" said Dennis in disbelief.

"I was eleven and the book was screaming at me! I think panicking would be the logical response to this scenario." said Harry defensively.

"That was a close one!" moaned George.
"I take it there's no window near you." said Ron.

"Why do you say that?" asked Hermione.

"He can tell where in the castle he is exactly by looking outside." answered Ron.

"Why did you want Filch to come straight to you?" asked Sirius questioningly.

"You'll find later." said Harry, before Snape could answer.

"Glad you learned that right away, wish we did." said Sirius pouting.

"We kinda ran right into a suit of armor and nearly got ourselves caught." said Remus, answering Harry's unasked question.

"Trust me, Harry, you're so skinny, you could fit in a keyhole." said Tonks plainly.

"You must have been freaking if you now decided to look around the room." said a third year Ravenclaw.

"Kinda like the corridor with the dog." said her friend.

"I would rather forget that dog." said Sirius, turning pale.
Fifty-ninth paragraph.

Very astute, Harry. I was just preparing to put it down in the chamber, thought Dumbledore.

Sixtieth paragraph.

"What does that mean?" asked Fudge absentmindedly.

Dr. Clark looked down at Harry and noticed, he was fingering the small glowing phial around his neck.

"Are you okay?"

"Yeah, I'm fine, just remembering," said Harry, still fingering the phial absently.

Sixty-first paragraph.

Sixty-second paragraph, first sentence.

There wasn't a head that wasn't facing Harry and staring at him. Harry didn't take notice of them, but was focusing his attentions at the ceiling.

"Harry, what the hell made you almost scream! You don't even flinch when we set off Filibuster fireworks!" said George.

"And right beside you," said Fred.

"Without you noticing!" they said together.

"You'll find out soon enough." he said calmly, his fingers never left the phial.

End of sixty-second paragraph.

"You got caught? That's what made you freak?" asked Fred in disbelief.

Sixty-third paragraph, first sentence.

"Huh?" but you said that the mirror showed a whole bunch of people." said George, looking confused.

End of sixty-third paragraph.
"Who were they, Harry?" asked Ginny looking over at him, she had a look of worry on her face.

"If they hurt you, I'll hunt them down myself." snarled Sirius.

"They would never hurt me. Even if they were able to, they wouldn't." said Harry calmly, he had a small smile on his lips.

"If they were able to? What are you talking about." asked Sirius.

Mrs. Weasely dabbed at her eyes with a handkerchief, she had an idea of who it was.

Snape paled, while Remus's hand flew to his mouth in shock. It's Lily, he's seeing Lily for the first time.

Sirius' mouth opened in shock.

Sirius then pulled Harry up by the arms and pulled him into a hug. "It's okay. I've got you." he whispered.

"I know, I'm alright." said Harry allowed himself to be dragged over to Sirius' side and buried himself Sirius' arms.

Sirius and Remus bowed their heads. Dr. Clark looked on in confusion.

"It's Harry's dad, their best friend." whispered Ron to Dr. Clark. He nodded and gripped Harry's free hand.

A few girls blew their noses quickly.
"It's okay Molly," said Mr. Weasely, trying to console his wife who was crying into his chest.

"Your mother's family." whispered Lupin.

"I think the man you're seeing is your grandfather." said Sirius putting his head on Harry's. “Your dad had knobby knees too.”

"Harry...." said Ginny quietly. Harry smiled at Ginny from the arms of his godfather. "I'm alright, Ginny."

Sirius gripped Harry tighter. "Harry....don't think about it. I'm begging you, don't...even...think about...it" said Sirius almost bawling.

"Think about what?" asked Harry curiously.

"Ki.....hurting yourself." he said changing the direction in which he was going, swiftly.

Harry shook his head. "I gave it a thought once, but I can't even contemplate it now."

"Harry!" wailed Hermione and Mrs. Weasely. Dumbledore gripped at his heart and almost dropped the book. Dr. Clark looked grief-stricken over at Harry. The students stared at Harry in disbelief. Some were holding each other in fear.

"I just said that I wouldn't do it! I only gave it a fleeting thought, that's why I won't sing you the song, I wrote That is what it was about.” he said looking over to Dumbledore. The teachers and the guests looked horrified over to the teen.

"Harry," croaked Dumbledore. "do you wish to talk to someone about this?"

Harry shook his head. "I'm feeling a lot better, this was months and months ago."

"I would feel a lot better if you would talk to someone about this." he said earnestly. Harry thought carefully and then nodded.

"I guess I could use a bit more venting." he said with a smile.

End of sixty-ninth paragraph.

Remus buried his face in his hands, Dr. Clark patted his back gently.

Seventieth paragraph.

"Oh! Harry don't! Please!" moaned Mrs. Weasely.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"You can see us any old time." said Bill with a smile.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

Bill high-fived his youngest brother.

Dialogue set, third sentence.

"That was a gentle way of putting it." hissed Hermione.

Ron looked down shamefully.

End of dialogue set.

Seventy-first paragraph, first sentence.
Remus picked up a large chocolate bar from the small stand beside their chair, which was overflowing with all the chocolate from his fellow students, and passed it over to Harry.

"Where did those come from?" asked Harry taking a bite of the bar, while he was still in Sirius' arms.

"Admirers." said Remus simply.

End of seventy-first paragraph.

Neville blinked heavily. "You actually gave up trying to defend something or someone?" he asked in a hushed voice.

Dialogue line.

"You were staring into space and getting paler and paler. You looked as if you were losing weight right in front of my eyes." said Ron looking over to Harry sadly.

Madam Pomfrey looked over to the boy devastated.

Seventy-second paragraph, first sentence.

"I didn't know you were that enthralled with the mirror." said Dumbledore a tear sliding down his crooked nose.

End of seventy-second paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"Yes! Go back to bed!" moaned Charlie.

Dialogue line.

Seventy-third paragraph, first sentence, first comma.

"That sounds like Helena." said Luna dreamily.

End of seventy-third paragraph.
Seventy-fourth paragraph.

"Usually he looked around the place, doesn't matter what room. He didn't care if someone else was in the room at all." said Ron.

Seventy-fifth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"Ron can't see them? Why is that?" asked Ginny.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Seventy-sixth paragraph.

Seventy-seventh paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"What?" asked the students.

Seventy-eighth paragraph.

"Not if it showed Potter's family, it doesn't" said Blaise quietly.
"Kinda reminds me of 'Return of the King' said Hermione quietly.

"What do you mean?" asked Malfoy. "What 'King'?"

"It's a Muggle book. It's part three of 'The Lord of the Rings'." said Hermione.

"What does that have to do with Weasely and Potter fighting over the mirror?"

"Two of the characters fought over a ring. One person ended up getting his finger bitten off." she explained.

"A ring? They fought over a ring?" said Malfoy in disbelief.

"The ring was the deciding factor between a world full of peace, or a world full of slavery and war." explained Harry.

"You read that book, Harry?" asked Hermione smiling broadly.

"I did, that trilogy was some of the other books in my room. My favorite character was Aragorn."

"I like Legolas!" said Hermione.

"Go figure." he said with a smirk, Hermione blushed.

"It wasn't a discussion, it was borderlining fistfight." said Harry with a laugh.

"It does." said Remus.
"He wouldn't move, not for anything." said Ron quietly.

Eighty-second paragraph.

"That tells you just how upset he is, he isn't describing what is going on outside as much as usual." said Neville.

Dialogue line.
Dialogue line.
Dialogue line.
Dialogue line.
Dialogue line.
Dialogue line.

"Listen to Ron! Don't go back." said Fred.

"That thing isn't good for you!" said George.

Dialogue line.
Dialogue set.
Dialogue line.
Dialogue line.

Eighty-third paragraph.

Remus groaned again, and Sirius held onto Harry tighter.

Eighty-fourth paragraph.

Eighty-fifth paragraph.

"Please tell me someone stopped you soon, and that you still aren't seeing that mirror." Dr. Clark pleaded.

"Someone did." said Harry with a smile.
"Who the hell is that?" asked Mr. Weasley.

"Thank goodness!" yelled a few students and some of the adults heaved a sigh of relief.

Dr. Clark looked over at Dumbledore, and raised an eyebrow. "I think I would have noticed you immediately, Albus."

Dumbledore chuckled.

"I don't think it was him being invisible, that made him miss you." said Kingsley.

"You went and sat on the floor, Sir? said a first year staring at the Headmaster. "That is why he's the best Headmaster, ever." said the people taught by the venerable old man.

Dumbledore smiled appreciatively.

"I actually meant 'delights' in a sarcastic way," he said quietly.
"It slowly kills you." whispered Sirius hugging Harry.

"Good question. How did you know?" asked Bill.

"You were there, then?" asked Ron.

"I was, I placed an 'Alerting Charm' on the room, and I came swiftly when you entered the room. I thought it was someone who wished to view the mirror for another purpose. I breathed a little easier when I saw it was just two students out of bed." he said with a very small smile.

"I show not your face but your heart's desire." said Luna and Harry, though he spoke very quietly.

"How do you know that?" said Terry Boot to Luna, he didn't hear Harry say it as well.

"The mirror said it. On the top. Erised stra ehru oyt ube cafru oyt on wohshi. Write it out and look at it." said Luna dreamily.

Terry wrote it down and looked at it hard. Then his eyes grew large.

"Holy...." he whispered.

"And yours is your family? Oh, Harry!" whimpered Mrs. Weasely.
The Weasely children all looked at Ron in shock, Ginny patted her brother's back. "You are the best, Ron. Remember when I was getting picked on when I was six? I came running to you and you socked that bully right in the jaw." she said brightly. "And you always have my back, when I really, really need you." she added happily. Ron smiled.

"It gave me some truth, though. I got to see my family. And I even saw Officer McFinn in the back." Harry said, looking over to Dumbledore.

"Yes, but it showed them, physically, around you. That is not a truth." said Dumbledore sadly.

"Harry was almost done wasting away." said Remus.

"I'm begging you not to go looking for it again." said Sirius crying silent tears.

"He planned on it happening again?" said Hermione whispering over to Ron angrily.

Dumbledore hung his head in shame. “Never again, never again.” he muttered to himself.

“One gets the feeling he gave it to Harry.” said Professor McGonagall to Professor Flitwick.
“It’s....” started Umbridge but flinched and silenced herself when the Ranger held up his hand and was prepared to backhand her.

“Good, you’re finally learning.” he said with a low growl.

“That’s a personal question, Mr. Potter.” drawled Snape.

“I was curious.” Harry said simply.

“What?” said the students trying to hold back a snigger.

“So since then, have you gotten socks?” said Dr. Clark.

“As a matter of fact I have, another anonymous gifter has sent me socks ever since as well. Would that possibly be you, Harry?” said Dumbledore.

“Boys don’t knit socks.” said Draco with smirk.

“Holly taught you how to crochet, did you make the socks?” asked Dr. Clark with a smile over to Harry.

“Maybe...” said Harry with a blush.

“Yes it was.” said Mrs. Weasely.

Sirius released Harry from the embrace at last and Harry leaned heavily on Sirius.

“That was a hard chapter to read.” said Remus, wiping the moisture from his eyes.

The afternoon was waning on, but the sun was far from ready to set.

They all looked over at Harry in a worried sort of way, but Harry ignored them.
“Are you sure you are alright. Do you want to stop the readings for the rest of the day?” said Madam Pomfrey hurrying over to the people in the bowl.

“No, I’m fine, I’ve slept enough this week.” said Harry with a slight smile. “I’m fine.” he stated once again when she leaned over and peered into his eyes.

“So do we continue on then?” asked Charlie a little hesitantly.

“I think so.” said Dumbledore looking over at Harry. “Who would like to read next?”

“I’ll read sir!” said Neville.

“All right then, I hope you have a better time of reading it then I did.” said Dumbledore kindly, levitating the book over to Neville.
Alright, these were the most recently typed up set of ten that I've done, you're going to have to wait for the next ten, but with this set, we are done with the first book! Best get or go out and buy the next book!

I don't own Harry Potter.

Chapter title said Neville excitedly when he read the title aloud.

"Bout time!" yelled the students.

"While we had the break, we looked all over the place trying to find where Nicolas Flamel was!" shouted a fourth year.

"No dice." said a muggleborn third year.

"What does that mean?" said a pureblood.

"It means no luck." said the muggleborn.

First paragraph, first sentence, first comma.

"Thank you!" said Sirius and Remus gratefully.

First paragraph, end of first sentence.

"I would say that is a little disappointing but you've had enough excitement to last my lifetime." said Sirius wiping the worried sweat off his brow.

"Good idea to stick it on the bottom of the trunk, boy. Don't want people just reaching in and grabbing it." growled Moody approvingly.

End of first paragraph.

"I still have that one every once in a while." said Harry leaning against Sirius.

Sirius gave his godson a reassuring squeeze.

Dialogue line.

"You never told me about that dream." said Hermione looking at Harry.
"You were worried about the dreams I have now, I don't want to think about how you would have reacted back then." said Harry with a small laugh.

Second paragraph, first sentence.

"She always does when it considers breaking the rules." moaned Fred.

End of second paragraph.

"Well, at least she has her priorities straight. She was thinking about Flamel." said Neville with a smile.

Third paragraph, first sentence.

"At the time, we didn't believe you." said Ron and Hermione honestly.

End of third paragraph.

"ALRIGHT!" yelled the Quidditch fans and players. Another game, as seen through the eyes of the Seeker!

Fourth paragraph, first sentence.

"Why? They did so good during the last game!" said Charlie incredulously.

Fourth paragraph, third sentence, first comma.

"Little did we know, he could get much worse!" said Fred shaking his head.

Fourth paragraph, end of third sentence.

"Traitor." said his Quidditch teammates. Harry couldn't help but laugh.

Fourth paragraph, fourth sentence.

"Holy....was it that long of time?" asked Charlie.

"Yes." said Snape with a small smirk.
"Maybe you'll have less nightmares now that you're back on the team, Harry!" said Neville hopefully.

Harry hoped so too, but he wasn't all together sure.

"Hey, he said we were done for the day. We were just letting out some energy." said George, shrugging his shoulders.

"Yeah, right. If messing around lost games, your dad would never have won a game in his life." said Remus shaking his head.

"Your dad hardly ever practiced, except for three days before a game, then he would fly around like a madman from dawn until dusk." said Sirius.

Sirius looked up quickly and stared at Neville, then Snape.

"You're refereeing? You've never even played Quidditch!" shouted Sirius.

"It doesn't taste nearly as good as it sounds." said George with his tongue sticking out.

"Yeah!" said Sirius looking suspiciously over to Snape.

"I can't say that we always play a clean game, to be honest, but we do play fairly for the most part." said Harry plainly.
Eighth paragraph.

"I wouldn't either." said Lionus leaning back in his giant wooden chair.

Snape wanted to send one of his famous glares at him, but he didn't want to pick a fight with the Ranger.

Ninth paragraph.

"Works wonders for me." said Harry with a smile. "Getting my butt handed to me."

Hermione huffed and crossed her arms, Harry and Ron couldn't help but laugh.

Dialogue set, first sentence, second comma, fourth word.

"You were being kind." muttered Hermione.

End of dialogue set.

Tenth paragraph.

"Nice way of putting it." said Ginny, trying not to laugh.

Dialogue line.

"Can't he's the only one to play Seeker." said George.

Dialogue line.

"I can't fake sick to save my life." said Harry with a smile.

Dialogue line.

"How would he do that? It would kind of be obvious." said Dr. Clark.

"Besides, three seconds with Madam Pomfrey and your leg is all better." said Sirius.

"Are you serious?" asked Dr. Clark with widened eyes.

"In both senses, yes!" he said happily.

"What?" asked Dr. Clark missing the joke, much to the dismay of Sirius.

"Don't dwell on it, or he'll use it every single time." warned Remus.
"I'm going to advise against that." said Dr. Clark quickly. "You've had enough damage done to your legs."

"There wasn't a replacement? Good lord, no wonder you haven't won in seven years." moaned Charlie.

"I sat on the edge and pulled my feet up after me. It was a little harder to stand up, though." said Neville.

"It was a really embarrassing." said Neville quietly, Luna patted him consolingly on the back.

"Sorry Neville." said Ron, Harry and everyone else who was in the dormitory at the time.

Malfoy shifted uneasily in the gaze of angry Gryffindors.

"I would have put you in detention faster than you could even say Locomotor Mortis." said Professor McGonagall. Draco squirmed even more.
"That doesn’t just apply to Malfoy, Neville." said Remus kindly.

"You're more than brave enough, to be in Gryffindor." said Harry.

I managed to save that one from Ron." said Harry with a laugh. Ron crossed his arms and pouted.

"I didn't know that was your last one Harry!" said Neville looking up from the book.

"That was really nice of you, Harry." said Luna over to him.

The three men in the bowl looked down at him proudly.

"You looked like you could've used it." said Harry simply.

"So that's where he got that statement from." said Malfoy mumbling quietly.

"Sorry!" Harry called over to the Slytherins quickly.

"What would have happened if Neville had just kept that card?" asked Hermione in a hushed voice.

"Dang, we never would have found out till we got another Dumbledore card, and his aren't all that common." said Ron.
"Ah!" said Dumbledore with a broad smile on his face. "I sense an epiphany coming."

Seventeenth paragraph.

Dialogue set, third sentence.

The school and some of the guests cheered loudly.

"Finally! Now we get to find out who he is!" shouted Dennis.

Dialogue set, fourth sentence, first comma.

"He kept telling us, we kept not believing him." said Ron with regret.

Dialogue set, fourth sentence, second comma.

Dumbledore looked down and at his knees, looking slightly ashamed, when people began to cheer for him. Harry, Remus, Dr. Clark, and Sirius were the only ones close enough who caught his odd behavior. They wanted to ask, but felt it was not the right time.

End of dialogue set.

"So he's a alchemy...person..."said a first year.

"I think the term you're looking for, Mr. Stapleton, is Alchemist." said Dumbledore kindly, rebounding from his sullen mood.

The first year blushed.

Eighteenth paragraph.

"You were way too excited." said Ron shaking his head.

Dialogue set.

Dialogue line.

"Light?" asked several people in the hall.

"Saw that coming." said Harry chuckling to himself.

Dialogue line.
The twins clutched at their sides and nearly fell over laughing.

"What else is new?" shrugged Ron with a small smile.

"What is that?" asked a seventh year. Hermione stared at her.

"See, Hermione, she doesn't know either." said Ron pointing to the seventh year.

"We honestly didn't know." said Harry and Ron together.

"Harry does." said Ron.

"He must love his wife very, VERY much to spend over six hundred years of living with her." said Lee quietly.

"She is a wonderful woman." said Dumbledore fondly.

"I thought your card said that you worked on the Stone with Flamel, Sir. How could you have helped him on it if he was already six hundred something?" asked Seamus.

"It was an imperfect stone, it created the Elixer of Life, but it didn't turn metal into pure, solid gold. It was transformed into a thick gold-plated metal. It wasn't a perfect transformation. So I helped him complete the stone." said Dumbledore, his eyes twinkling madly.

Dialogue set.

"Very good, Miss Granger. I also wished to confront the person trying to get it. But I unfortunately had another idea. A very cruel idea." said Dumbledore almost silently.

Dialogue line.

"Almost everyone." said Harry and Dumbledore.

Dialogue line.

"He's more renaissance." said Blaise with a chuckle.

Twenty-second paragraph, first sentence, second comma.

"The only proper way is to treat the bite is to kill the thing that was bit." said Umbridge loudly before the Ranger could turn towards her and stop her. She smirked in a sort of a superior way.

Lupin made to stand up quickly when the Ranger cracked the whip and struck her with it heavily.

"Nightstrike! That's enough." shouted Lionus. Immediately after Lionus shouted Nightstrike stopped.

"My apologies sir, but I felt the need to be vindicated." said the Ranger who, the school now realized, was called Nightstrike.

"I didn’t' say that you shouldn't have done it, but this man wants a shot as well." said Lionus with a grin, nodding over to Lupin.

"Whip, club, sword, what do you want to use?" said Nightstrike down to Lupin.

Lupin walked slowly over to Umbridge and watched as she cringed on the ground. He picked her up off the ground and looked towards the Ranger.

"I've never hit a woman." he said nervously.

"She's not a woman anymore, she's in Ranger custody, she's no longer even a person. Do what you will." said Nightstrike with a smirk.

Without hesitation, Lupin reared his fist back and punched her soundly in the face. Nightstrike laughed.

“That felt really good.” said Remus rubbing his knuckles.

"As one werewolf to another, nice shot.” Lupin stared at him.
"You're a werewolf? And a RANGER?" his voice trembled.

"There is a whole squad of werewolves and vampires at Headquarters, not to mention centaurs, merpeople and giants. We don't go into the muggle world, we stick mostly to dealing with the criminal element of the magical world. I'm the only werewolf in my squad." he said proudly. "Handpicked by Captain Lionus, himself."

End of twenty-second paragraph.

"That's a massive killjoy." said Katie.

"What would you do with a Sorcerer's Stone, Harry? It doesn't' say." said Colin excitedly.

"I don't remember what I said I would do with it." said Harry thoughtfully.

"I think you wanted to use the money to find someone, Harry. Looking back, must've been Dr. Clark." said Ron.

"Oh, that's right." said Harry quietly.

"You couldn't remember wanting to spend the Stone-made gold to find him?" asked Sirius looking down at Harry.

"He found another way to raise money." said Lionus. Harry looked quickly over to the Ranger again.

"How do you know so much about Harry?" asked Sirius suspiciously.

"You'll find out how and why I know so much about him soon enough, I believe." said Lionus with a cryptic smile.

Dialogue line.

"I like how you said the word 'IF'. " said Dr. Clark fondly. "Don't get a swelled head."

Dialogue line.

"....no offense, Ron, but I would have expected something like that coming from him, not from you, Hermione." said Tonks, with a disappointed look.

Hermione looked down at her feet.

Twenty-third paragraph, first sentence.

"We could see it in your eyes, that you were nervous, just about scared out of your mind." said Ron.
Snape shifted a little in his serpentine chair.

"That's one of the reasons why Madame Hooch is the referee, she isn't the Head of any House." said Professor Sprout.

"Were you?" asked Bill inquisitively.

"I don't need to answer your questions!" snapped Professor Snape, he was turning a little red.

"I take that to mean 'yes'," said Bill with a frown.

"Torture? TORTURE!? You have been beaten, nearly to death, starved nearly to death, and various other things that we haven't gotten to as of yet, AND YOU VIEW MY CLASS AS TORTURE?" shouted Snape loudly, standing and gnashing his teeth towards the youth. Harry almost jumped right into Sirius's lap, and scrambled out of the bowl. He drew his wand, and was about to mutter a curse, until he caught himself.

"Harry, are you alright?" asked Remus while Dr. Clark and Sirius shouted at Snape.

"I'm fine, I haven't been yelled at like that for so many years, I overreacted, I'll apologize." he said quietly.

"Don't bother, Snape's getting a lesson in when not to overreact, as well. I think you were justified just a bit." said Remus, throwing an arm around the young man's shoulders and guided him back to the bowl. Once Sirius and Dr. Clark were done yelling at Professor Snape, and Mrs. Weasely was able to put her two knuts in, Neville continued.

To the astonishment of Harry, the normally mellow Dr. Clark started to growl once again.

"One does not 'read' minds. The mind is not a book." said Snape quietly, he didn’t' want to speak too loudly, he wasn't too sure what would set off Potter's 'uncles'.

"It wasn't a comforting thought." said Harry, leaning against Sirius. Sirius whimpered quietly, it wasn't a comforting thought to him either.
"Duh." said Harry dully.

"Wood never was much of an 'Inspirational Speaker'." said Angelina with a smile.

"I do now," said Neville quietly.

Harry looked over to his two friends quickly, they simply waved back.

Professor Snape glared over to them and snarled. "I wasn't trying to hurt him!" he growled.
"We know, but you were the one most likely one responsible." said Harry apologetically.

"Just like an old married couple." said Harry and Ginny at the same time. Ron and Hermione blushed.

"He did more than that in the next year." said Fred angrily. He never forgave Wood for saying what he did to Harry in the first game of his second year on the team.

"Oliver couldn't believe that those words came out of his mouth." said Katie, giggling.
"Your heart does some odd things Harry, maybe it's Rumplepoufs, they like playing with hearts, making them dance around." said Luna dreamily.

"You doubted me?" asked Fred pretending to look hurt.

"I thought it was too good to be true." said Harry honestly.

"That's how I knew it was him." said Fred to his twin.

Harry sent a smile over to Dumbledore, Dumbledore however was looking down, a tear sliding down his crooked nose again. "See how much he trusted you, how much he depended on you to keep him safe? And you threw him into fire time and time again! Do you really deserve to know someone so...good, so pure? Do you have any real love for the boy? You say you do, but do you really?" he thought to himself bitterly. He could never make up to Harry enough, he would continue to repay for all his past cruelties, of course but could he ever forgive himself?

Harry saw darkness overtake the old man's eyes, and hopped out of the bowl, took a Calming Draught off the table and held it in front of Dumbledore's eyes. Dumbledore blinked and looked up at Harry.

"You're starting to scare me again." said Harry with a smile. "Don't make me do a repeat performance with the knife and the wire." said Harry still smiling.

"No one would dare hurt you in front of me." said Dumbledore sternly, as he took the potion.

"If I had some notion of him coming, I wouldn't have bothered of refereeing the match!" muttered Snape over to Dumbledore.
"One of the only redheads in your school, at least one and a half heads taller than you, and you don't see him?" asked Ginny with a scowl.

"Gambling is prohibited on school grounds!" said Professor McGonagall.

"There goes Poker Night." said Harry over to his dorm mates.

"What?!" screeched McGonagall.

"We play poker on Friday nights. Instead of money, we use candy. five beans are worth one galleon, licorice wands are worth five galleons, pumpkin pasties are ten galleons and chocolate frogs are worth twenty. We never cash in the candy, we just eat it when it's all said and done. And Neville whups us every dang week! We're lucky if we get some licorice wands for ourselves!" said Harry with a laugh.

Neville blushed.

Fred and George looked at each other and then Lee.

"Can we get in on this action?" all three of them said, Ginny also looked eager.

Professor McGonagall looked over to Dumbledore who smiled.

"Minerva, it's only gambling if they use money, but if it's for candy, I see nothing harmful about it." he said with twinkling eyes. McGonagall looked shocked for a moment, but nodded.

"Poker Night's back on then." said Seamus happily.

"The Hufflepuff Chaser was there! He flew right into the path!" shouted Fred, defending his twin. Snape scowled at Fred, but, amazingly, the combined snarls of the twins overpowered his own.

"You looked really cool." said Dean.
"They take only the best?" said Luna curiously. It didn't seem like she knew Malfoy was being sarcastic. The Gryffindors cheered her without restraint.

"There was a reason!" said Snape angrily.

"And that would have been....what?" asked Madam Hooch.

Snape only grinded his teeth.

Sirius and Remus started to growl.

The Weasely family ignored it, Malfoy already said he apologized for all the mean things he was going say in the books.

"Mr. Malfoy, please apologize, for the curse from before, and for this current development." said Dumbledore to Malfoy.

"Sorry, Longbottom." said Malfoy quietly.

Neville nodded, hesitantly.

Harry looked up to Neville quickly. Neville, meanwhile, blushed.

"Thanks Ron." said Neville with a smile.
"Sorry, again." said Malfoy.

Thirty-sixth paragraph.

Harry scratched the back of his head embarrassingly.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"Dear Lord, what now?" said Dr. Clark worriedly.

Dialogue line.

Thirty-seventh paragraph.

"Oh no! Is there something wrong with your broom again?" Dr. Clark asked nervously.

"I don't think so, what he's doing is one of the Seeker plays that I've seen James do." said Remus leaning forward.

Dialogue line.

"Okay, that's going too far." said Charlie angrily.

"I'm sorry." said Malfoy, looking down.

Thirty-eighth paragraph, third sentence.

"GO RON!" yelled the twins excitedly. "Wish we didn't miss that." the added sadly.

End of thirty-eighth paragraph.

"GO NEVILLE! Really wish we hadn't missed that." said the twins even sadder.

Dialogue set, second sentence, first comma, twelfth word

"You aimed right at Snape?" said Sirius with a shocked look.

Harry smiled slightly. "I only saw the Snitch."
"Gee thanks," said Ron and Neville with smirks on their faces.

"You took on Crabbe and Goyle?" asked Harry with a stunned look on his face. "I wouldn't have done that at eleven!"

Neville stared at Harry, paling slightly.

Ron laughed, "See Neville, we told you, you were brave enough to be in Gryffindor!"

"I wouldn't be surprised if he tried fouling you just then." said Dr. Clark calmly.

"He wouldn't have been able to. Once the Snitch is caught, game is over, no matter what." said Madam Hooch.

"He did break the previous record for the school, the prior record was ten minutes and forty-two seconds. That was set by your father." said Madam Hooch.

Harry stared at Madame Hooch a moment, then looked down, closed his eyes and smiled.

"The new record, set by you, is four minutes and twenty-four seconds." said Madame Hooch.

"I was dancing around too!" said Parvati.

"Most likely ticked off, 'cause you flew so close to him and he couldn't nail you with a foul." said Sirius with a grin.

"Quidditch and cooking always takes my mind off of things." said Harry thoughtfully.

"Quidditch and cooking always takes my mind off of things." said Harry thoughtfully.
"What would happen if someone tried taking a broom that doesn't belong to them?" asked Ginny.

"Some students place protective charms on their broomsticks." said Dumbledore.

"Harry put a charm on his broom, he made it so that if anyone else, besides him try and take it out of the broomshed, it starts beating them about the head and then it will fly to Harry." said Ron with a smile. "It actually was almost taken one day, the broom came right up to him in Charms class, never did find who tried to take it."

McClaggan rubbed the back of his head, making sure no one could see him. He just wanted a ride on it. Potter shouldn't be so selfish, not sharing his broom with other experienced Quidditch players.

Several people flinched and cringed in their seats. They were believers of Umbridge and Fudge, now they were quickly falling behind Harry.

"The last time that happened was at the Track Championships." said Harry remembering fondly.

"I couldn't figure out how that happened." said Harry with a laugh.

"Hmmm...very impressive...." said Moody and Lionus.

"Oh Harry, don't go in there!" cried Mrs. Weasely.
"Very good." said the two seasoned warriors.

Forty-ninth paragraph.

Fiftieth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Students leaned forward in their chairs.

Fifty-first paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Sirius and Remus looked quickly over to Snape with suspicious eyes.

Fifty-second paragraph, first sentence.

"Crud, Harry! Hang on!" shouted Lee.

End of fifty-second paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Fifty-third paragraph.

"You must realize, Severus, you don't put yourself in a good light." said Dumbledore kindly.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set, fourth sentence.

People started laughing loudly. "Hey, I was excited." said Ron defensively.
Ron's brothers and his sister all gave him a high-five and pats on the back.

People who were bullied by Crabbe and Goyle all stood up and cheered for Neville. Neville blushed and continued on.

"Awww....that sucks." said Lee, shaking his head.

"You did good Neville." said Harry.

"Did you give me that large box of Frogs, Harry?" asked Neville.

"I take it you got them, then?" he said with a smile.

"Not much danger in doing that, as it turns out." said Ron a little disappointed.

"That was wrong." muttered Harry.

"Very, very good!" muttered Dumbledore smiling broadly.

"It'll be gone by next Monday." said Arthur shaking his head.
"You were being kind, Ron." said Arthur with a smile.

"That's the end of the chapter. What now?" asked Neville.

"It's almost time for dinner, so I think we should take a bit of a break." said Dumbledore.

Harry stood up and walked towards the Great Hall door.

"What's up, Harry?" asked Remus looking concerned.

"I don't know, I just have the urge to go down to the kitchens and make something. Anything." he said looking back, smiling.

"If you're going to be cooking anything, make that 'Italian Night Pizza' you made for me before I left for the army," said Dr. Clark, licking his lips.

"Alright then, I'll make enough for everyone then. See you in a bit." said Harry as he left the Great Hall.

After Harry left, Sirius turned towards Dr. Clark. "Is the pizza really that good?"

"You have no idea, how good!" said Dr. Clark with a smile. Before Dr. Clark could elaborate on the pizza, a shout rang out.

Neville was staring at the book and the giant glowing scroll that came out of the book.

"Hope it's a good one." said Hermione hopefully.

"What is that thing?" said Dr. Clark.

"It shows us the times that aren't shown in the books." said Sirius looking warily at the scroll.

The scroll unfurled itself and blackness began to enveloped the entire room once again.

"Oh damn, this happened the first time and it didn't go well!" shrieked Ginny.

Darkness over took them all.
They landed in the middle of the Dursley's living room and judging from the outside, it was in the middle of the afternoon. They heard some noise coming from the kitchen and they all started to move towards the sounds.

They saw Harry, standing on a small little step stool and reaching for little jars and small canisters of spices, he had to stand on tiptoe just to reach the things he needed. He was shaking a canister of spice over a boiling pot when they heard the doorbell ring.

"BOY! GET THE DOOR!" shouted Uncle Vernon from the living room, which was, maybe, ten feet away from the aforementioned door. Harry turned the stove off, placed a lid on top and wandered out to the front door.

They followed him, so far this wasn't so bad, was this really a bad memory? Harry opened the door to find a much younger Dr. Clark he had reddened eyes. The present day Dr. Clark's hand flew to his mouth.

"I know what day this is. Oh......Harry......." said Dr. Clark weakly.
"How do you know?" asked Ron worriedly.
"This is the only time I came for Harry, alone." said Dr. Clark.

"Hello, Dr. Clark! What can I do for you?" said Harry brightly.
"Take them outside!" shouted Uncle Vernon, not knowing it was only Dr. Clark. "I don't want them in here!"
"Yes, sir." said Harry, he shut the door behind himself and The Watchers found themselves outside.
"What is it, Dr. Clark?" said Harry happily.
"Harry...um....let's...let's go for a ride." said Dr. Clark finally, his throat seemed to be constricted by something. He picked the smiling young boy up and took him to his car.

The scene shifted forward and they found themselves in a park. They watched as Dr. Clark, with Harry in his arms, came walking towards the bench The Watchers were standing in front of.

They watched as Dr. Clark sit Harry on his lap. Dr. Clark looked tired, and very upset, while Harry was bouncing around, excited to get out of Privet Drive.

"Harry I need to talk to you, about something." said Dr. Clark.
"What is it? Is Officer McFinn and Mrs. McFinn coming? Are we going somewhere?" said Harry "Excitedly.
"No, Harry, James and Holly aren't coming. I need to tell you something, very important."
"What is it?" smiled Harry.
"Dear God, I can't watch this." said the older Dr. Clark. He turned his whole body to face away from his past self, and little Harry. But he slowly turned back to face the scene before his eyes. "Harry, I'm.....Off......." he stammered, he looked up into the sky and tears began to well in his eyes. He was used to telling people bad news, but to someone he knew, and loved, it was very difficult.
"Harry....you know....uh....how...Officer McFinn had to....work today?" said Dr. Clark thickly.
"Yes, sir." said Harry nodding eagerly.
"Well Officer McFinn got called to a store today, and...well...he was met with some very bad people. They were taking things that didn't b-belong to them, and they were using guns to try and hu-hurt people..." said Dr. Clark, trying to explain to Harry what was wrong. He had to be very careful about how he put things, but he wasn't too sure how to go about it.
"And Officer McFinn got them no problem!" yelled Harry happily throwing his arms into the air in victory.
"There was a problem, Harry." said Dr. Clark sadly, Harry's hands slowly lowered. "They came out shooting their guns at anything and everything. There was......a little boy in the street, Officer McFinn saw him and tr....tried to get him out of there. Officer McFinn got hurt, very badly. They had to bring him to the hospital."

Harry had a look of the utmost horror. "Officer...." he hopped off Dr. Clark's lap and wanted to run back to the car and go to the hospital. But Dr. Clark caught him before he could touch the ground. "Let me go! I wanna see him, LET ME GO!" yelled Harry, kicking in the air.
"Oh, Harry!" moaned Mrs. Weasley.
"Harry," said Dr. Clark, he grabbed Harry's legs and cradled the little boy. "Harry, I'm sorry, we didn't want to tell you, until we had no choice, Officer McFinn is.....he's......gone....." he said, stray tears falling from his eyes.

Harry stared at him, it was several minutes before Harry even moved. He started to shake his head, "No....he can't....he...." Harry started to cry, uncontrollably. Dr. Clark hugged him tightly, Harry screamed and pounded his small fists against the man's chest. Passersby were standing around staring, some were even dialing 999* to get the police to come and get the boy away from the man, they suspected, was hurting him.

Several minutes later, police officers came out to the park and saw who it was, and who he was consoling. The officers reassured the people around that Dr. Clark was breaking really bad news to the little boy. Some people weren't convinced, especially when Harry gave a soul-wrenching scream.

When Dumbledore and all the other Watchers heard the scream, they all flinched, and covered their ears. Almost all the adults wanted to just pick Harry up and hold him tightly, whisper to him that everything is going to be alright, but they knew they couldn't.

Harry couldn't be consoled by anybody, he cried, screamed, and beat his small fists into Dr. Clark for twenty minutes more, until finally and unwillingly, he cried himself to sleep. Dr. Clark continued to hug him tightly and rock him back and forth gently. He looked up to the one of the officers that stayed behind.

"I'm going to take him to Holly's, don't know if that will help, but she wanted to see him." he said standing up.
"Okay, you want me to drive you? So you don't need to put the little guy down?" asked the officer.
"No, I'm fine. Thank you for coming by." said Dr. Clark standing up carefully.
The scene shifted forward once more and they found themselves in a very nice and tidy little house. They saw Harry laying on a sofa and the same lovely woman that was at the Track races. Instead of smiling and laughing, she was crying into Dr. Clark's shoulder.

"Oh...Sam.....what am I going to do? He was my world, my best friend!" she cried.
"I know Holly, he was great man. God!" he said bitterly. "I can't believe it, I still can't believe it!"
"Do you know if he was in any pain?" she asked after a half an hour of crying. "I don't think I can.."

"No, he didn't feel a thing, it went straight through his spine. Do you need help with any arrangements, Holly?" asked Dr. Clark carefully.
"No, no, Chief Harrison and his wife are helping me take care of things. I would like some help with Harry though." she said looking back towards the small figure on her couch.
"You've got it, I could never abandon him now." said Dr. Clark sadly.

"How did he take it?" she asked, walking over to him and brushing the bangs out of his tear-laden eyes, and throwing a fluffy blanket over top of him. She gently pulled the thumb out of his mouth.
"Really, really bad. The way he screamed, it tore my heart right out of my chest. Little guy's been through hell, and he's being thrown into a repeat performance. I don't know who has it in for this kid, but whoever it is, demon or human, they'll have me to deal with." said Dr. Clark, sitting beside the couch and rubbing Harry's little head.

Harry whimpered and opened his eyes, he looked at Mrs. McFinn, who still had some evidence of crying, then he started crying again. She sat one the couch and pulled him into a comforting embrace.

The scene shifted once more and they were now standing in a church cemetery. Harry, Dr. Clark, and Holly were standing in front of a large crowd and facing towards a dark brown casket. They saw Harry, dressed in a little blue suit and holding a lily, while Dr. Clark and Mrs. McFinn held a rose, each. Harry walked up and placed the lily on the casket and backed up slowly, not taking his eyes off the coffin, tears still flowing from them. The Watchers stared in amazement, as people walked past and give Mrs. McFinn hugs and reassuring words of sympathy, the Queen herself, came and placed a blue rose on the casket offered her condolences to Holly, taking her by the hand, and giving her a medal, in honor of Officer McFinn for saving the little boy. She then went over to little Harry and gave him a hug, wiping his eyes with her own handkerchief.

"Why was the Queen there?" asked Hermione, dabbing her eyes with her handkerchief.
"She sort of took to Harry after the garden party I told you about." said Dr. Clark sadly.

Once again, the scene shifted and they saw, Harry, it was the same day, but his clothes were once again the same oversized ones he normally wore around the Dursleys. He was carrying pots and pans from the sink to the cabinets, when Dudley shoved him roughly into the stove.
"Oi!" shouted Ron moving forward, but Hermione held him back.
"You can't do anything remember?" she reminded him.

"Dad says that police officer won't come by anymore. Says that he got shot." said Dudley with a wicked grin. Harry looked down in grief.

Uncle Vernon then came in the kitchen, with a broad, demonic grin.
"See, boy? See, what happens? You're jinxed, anyone that even remotely cares about you, dies. Your parent's died in a car crash, now your precious Officer McFinn was gunned down."

Harry fell to his knees and cried, Uncle Vernon pulled him off the floor by his arm, dragged him to the cupboard under the stairs picked him up and threw him inside the cupboard, like bag of unwanted rubbish.
The scene rushed once more this time, it looked like a few more months had past. They were back in Mrs. McFinn's living room, only this time, it was a sort of party. A giant banner was draped across the southern most wall. "COME HOME SOON!" There were several people that the Watchers didn't recognize, but they saw Dr. Clark in full ceremonial military apparel. "This was the farewell party for me," said Dr. Clark sadly.

Holly McFinn was walking around with a tray of drinks, the Watchers tried to find Harry but they couldn't. Then Harry came out with a freshly baked pizza. People turned to look at Harry and then they noticed the pizza.

It was a very large pizza, with a golden crust. It's cheese was still bubbling a little bit and steam rose languidly from the pizza. Ron started to drool when he saw it. "That is one tasty looking pizza, Harry! I've never a pizza with actual meatballs on it though, what do you call it?" said Dr. Clark, throwing an arm around Harry's shoulders. "Italian Night Pizza," said Harry quietly, he didn't look as happy as some of the other people. "It's got meatballs, pepperoni, mozzarella, parmesan, and asiago cheese, marinara sauce drizzled on top," said Harry just as quietly as before.

Dr. Clark took a slice of the pizza and smiled broadly as the cheese stringed itself between the liberated slice and the rest of pizza that was woefully left behind. "Looks like the pizza's you see on television commercials." said one of the partiers excitedly.

Harry moved away from the table of food and went to go sit on the sofa. Dr. Clark noticed this and went to go sit on the sofa with him, he continued feasting on the slice of pizza. "What's up, bud?" asked Dr. Clark. "Normally you're prouder than a peacock when you bring out something you cook."

Harry, leaning back into the sofa, heaved a sigh, "Now you're going away, Officer McFinn is gone, now you are going away too." tears began to form in his eyes.

Dr. Clark put the pizza down on the nearby table and brought him into a large hug. "I won't be gone for long. I'm just going to be gone till they get more doctor's in the area, I'm going to. I'm only going to be gone for a year, I promise, I'll come home, I'll be back by your birthday."

"I didn't keep that promise," moaned Dr. Clark woefully. "You didn't have much choice, Dr. Clark. You would have, had you of been able to." said Lionus helpfully.

The scene shifted once more to a bawling Harry seated in Mrs. McFinn's house once more and a highly decorated military officer was looking down at them, Harry was being consoled by Mrs. McFinn.

"That was when he was told you were missing, most likely." said Lionus. Dr. Clark placed a tightened fist on his chest and grimaced in pain. The darkness ebbed away and they all found themselves back in the Great Hall. "That was horrible." said Dr. Clark faintly. "The first one was much worse." said Bill he then added. "No offense." "I didn't know." said Dumbledore quietly.

Suddenly, the table of food came back and there was dozens of the same pizzas from the Recollection Scroll and other tasty dinner entrees. People didn't want to eat, not so soon after hearing Harry's scream like he did, and seeing Harry so upset. But the aroma of the pizza's was just too overpowering, Ron was the first one to go over and take a piece of pizza. "The cheese's just as stringy as it was in the scroll!" he said loudly. He took a bite of the pizza. "Mmmmm....this...is...really, REALLY good!"
People slowly made their way to the table and they helped themselves to a piece of the pizza. Harry came back to the Great Hall, after everyone had one piece at least. Dr. Clark and Ron each had three pieces to themselves.

"What did you think about the pizza's?" said Harry brightly.

Dr. Clark put his piece of pizza down and walked over to Harry and held onto him tightly.

"What the....what's wrong?" said Harry wonderingly, when he felt tears start to soak his shirt, he began to pat Dr. Clark on the back. "What is it? Can't you tell me?"

"We......we saw...." choked Dr. Clark.

"Was it another one of those scroll things? Good or bad?" asked Harry over to Dumbledore.

"It was a bad one. You just found out that Officer McFinn was gone and that Dr. Clark was going away." said Charlie quickly.

"Good thing I missed it, then." said Harry calmly.

One of the Unspeakables had a sudden thought, but he decided to let it go, for now. He would wait till he had some more evidence.
It was stormy weather that visited the school the next day. The students, teachers and the guests assembled themselves in the Great Hall to satisfy their hunger with a hearty breakfast. Harry walked through the Hall's doors with Remus, Sirius and Dr. Clark and they helped themselves with plates of fruit and toast.

“Sleep okay?” asked Sirius to Harry.

“Yeah, I slept fine, how about you?”

“No worse than normal, nightmares about you getting hurt...normal.” said Sirius with a smile.

After everyone had finished their tuck-in, Mr. Weasely decided that today, he would like to read. So he picked the book up off the dais and read the title to himself, he smiled to himself.

"I think Charlie should have requested to read this one," he said with a laugh.

"Why's that, dad?" asked Charlie.

"The title is Chapter fourteen."

Charlie paled, as did Hagrid, Ron, Hermione and Harry, who stood up quickly and unceremoniously took Madam Bones and Dumbledore by the hands and pulled them out of the hall. Causing Mr. Weasley and the rest of the people in the Great Hall to stare.

“Is there something wrong?” asked Mr. Weasley.
Harry pulled them almost to the Great Staircase when he finally stopped.

"What is wrong, Mr. Potter?" asked Madam Bones curiously.

Harry looked between the two of them, both of them could either protect Hagrid, or ship him off to Azkaban again, he hoped he could strike a deal if the worst came to pass. "I wanted to ask, if something happened four years ago, can one be held accountable?" Harry asked quickly.

"You don't need to worry, Harry, no student will be in trouble." Dumbledore said kindly.

"It's not a student I'm worried about." said Harry, "It's a teacher."

"I can't press charges against someone if I find out about it from these books." said Madam Bones gently.

"That obviously didn't stop you from arresting the Dursleys," said Harry with a raised eyebrow. "You carted them off, after hearing about...stuff...from the books."

"Child abuse is another matter entirely, and we had your physical evidence to back it up." said Madam Bones. She didn't press into why the boy didn't say 'everything' she would all she needed from these books.

"There may be physical evidence here to." said Harry carefully.

"I'll think about it, unless someone gets killed, I won't pursue anything." she said kindly. "Or if it was malicious in nature."

"I promise, it wasn't. Thank you Madam Bones, it's a weight off my mind." said Harry heaving a sigh, he walked back to the Great Hall.

"He shouldn't have anything weighing on his mind, in my opinion." said Madam Bones.

"I agree as well." said Dumbledore seriously. "But I fear, that he may have to at some point, this "Can't you leave it for when he's a bit older?" asked Madame Bones sternly.

"I don't think I can. He's deserving of some knowledge, especially that which I have been keeping from him." said Dumbledore sadly.

When they reentered the Great Hall, Dumbledore looked over to Charlie Weasely.

"Mr. Weasely, may we count on your expertise in this chapter? I think the students would absolutely love to hear some interesting facts about Ridgebacks and other species of dragons." said Dumbledore, eyes twinkling towards Charlie.

"Sure thing, sir, be happy to." said Charlie with a wide grin.

First paragraph, first sentence.

"Yeah, not nearly chicken-hearted." said Fred with a laugh.

"More like...turkey-hearted." said George.

"I don't get it." said a first year.

"Well...it's...sigh...nevermind." said Fred.

"Sometimes we're way advanced for our peers." said George.

"Advanced....sure..." said Bill.

End of first paragraph.

"I would have given him a day, to crack." said George with a smirk.

Second paragraph, first sentence.

"As long as you don't go in there, I have no problems." said Sirius, looking at Harry sideways.

Second paragraph, second sentence.
"Wow, is the stone STILL safe?" asked a brave first year, Snape heard it and sent a reproachful look towards the foolish young Gryffindor.

End of second paragraph.

"Pardon us, I think we're going to be sick." said Harry and Ron, shaking their heads.

Third paragraph.

"I don't nag!" said Hermione in a hurt voice.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

"That is over two months, Hermione!" said Sirius staring at fifth year girl.

"I just wanted them to be prepared." she said shuffling her feet.

"Trust us, we were fine." said Ron shaking his head. "Harry was tutoring me in the evenings. I needed a lot of work, but he and I were doing our best."

End of dialogue set.

"You aren't six hundred years old, Miss Granger." said Dumbledore kindly.

Dialogue set, first sentence, second comma.

"It appears that Mr. Weasely and I agree on that." said Dumbledore smiling happily. Ron had a pale tint in his cheeks as he smiled broadly.

End of dialogue set.

"You never know, I might have forgotten something!" said Hermione.

"You failing a test is like Harry screwing up a recipe, doesn't happen." said Ron with a broad grin.

Dialogue set, third sentence.

"We've never had a student fail their tests so badly that they didn't pass into the next year." said McGonagall. “Some have gotten close...but it has never happened.”
"cough....Nicolas Flamel....cough..." Harry coughed into his hand.

"When don't they?" asked Neville to Ron in a whisper. Ron snorted

"They never are." moaned a majority of the students.

"That is not on your first year tests, Miss. Granger." said Professor Flitwick.

"Some movements are required on the tests." said Professor Vector nodding.

"We managed to get through it, too bad it took a long time." said Ron moaning.

"Harry helped me a bit with that, it was for Herbology class." said Ron quietly.

"You really like colors don't you, Harry?" asked Luna serenely. Harry groaned.
"I wasn't looking forward to that." said Harry quietly.

"I wouldn't either if I had only the Dursley's to look forward to." said Sirius giving Harry a squeeze as the young man lounged against him. "But look on the bright side, you don't have to go back there anymore!" said Sirius brightly.

"I know, I'm looking forward to summer now." said Harry happily.

"That was one weird coincidence." said Harry calmly.

"What do you mean?" asked Charlie.

Harry got up and walked over to Charlie and whispered into his ear. "Dittany makes dragons sneeze."

"Oh! Duh!" he said smacking his forehead "That is one odd coincidence." said Charlie with his eyebrows raised. "Why not say it out loud?"

"Don't want to ruin the surprise for everyone." said Harry with a malicious grin.

"Sorry Hagrid, but you look out of place everywhere." said Harry fondly.

"Oh that's not fair." said Dr. Clark trying to stifle a laugh. "He can't even keep a secret to himself, without you three pestering him."

Ron, Hermione and Harry shifted their feet guiltily, but Hagrid laughed. That made them feel a bit better.

"Nope, they moved onto greener pastures." said Fred.

"Yeah, they want to know what else is going on that doesn't concern them." said George "Exactly." said a voice out into the Hall. People looked around keenly, trying to find the speaker. If they had looked over towards Professor Snape, they would have seen him an amused look on his face, and his hand covering his mouth.

Dialogue Line

"Oh, don't say it there! Go somewhere else, if you must!" moaned McGonagall slapping her forehead with her hand.

Dialogue Line

"Thank you Hagrid, for having sense!" she said shaking her head.

Dialogue Line

"I feel real ashamed of myself now." said Harry shaking his head while it was in his hands.

Dialogue set.

"And you didn't, least not in so many words." said Ron with a sheepish grin.

Dialogue Line

Dialogue Line

Dialogue Line

"Looking back, it couldn’t have, he didn't really care about what was down there, he knew what it was." said Hermione thoughtfully. Harry smiled over to her. She saw his face.

"You knew it didn't have anything to do with it!" she said with a shocked look on her own face.

"I had a feeling." said Harry with a sly smile.

Dialogue set, first sentence, second comma.

"Good thinking." said Dumbledore approvingly.
"Hope Madam Pince didn't hear that, she'd skin you alive for slamming the books down." said Terry Boot with a slight cringe.

"Huh?" asked a few students in confusion.

"Were you sleeping when I read the chapter?" asked Mr. Weasley with a laugh.

"Those are both really good Dragon books." said Charlie absently.

"Good memory there, Potter." said Moody approvingly. "Only heard it once and you memorized it."

Lionus's eyes twitched excitedly. Very good memory, that. He thought to himself. He had been toying with the idea to recruit Potter for several years now. Ever since he attracted their attention. But his age always made Lionus take a step back in that decision. But now, Potter was becoming more and more appealing as an agent, despite his age. The only downside he could foresee is that he may have a furious battle with the wizened old Auror over who got to take him under their wing.

"Ummm...not everyone...." said Seamus.

"Huh?" asked Ron.

"You only know that as common knowledge, because Charlie, here, wouldn't ever shut up about dragons." said Bill clapping a hand to his younger brother's back.
"Just misunderstood." said Hagrid defiantly.

End of dialogue set.

"They get pretty bad sometimes. I landed myself in the Romanian branch of St. Mungo's a few times. Nuthin' serious, Mum!" he said quickly seeing the shocked look on his mother's face.

Dialogue Line

"There are quite few dragons, still soaring about." said Charlie fondly, but then his face fell. "I just wish that we could at least tag them. That way, we don't have to worry about them so much. But we can't get near enough to do so."

Dialogue set.

"That spell does more harm than good, in my opinion." said Harry fiercely.

No one, aside from Dumbledore, McGonagall, Ron, Ginny and Hermione could understand why. However, a slight nagging happened in the back of Harry's mind, what was he trying to remember? And what did it have to do with memory charms?

Dialogue Line

"Good question! C'mon dad! Continue reading so we can find out!" said Fred.

"I would have continued on, if you...hadn't....had......interrupted...me." said Mr. Weasely sternly, but he said it with a smile.

Eighth paragraph.

"Sorry if I was a bit rude." said Hagrid a little guiltily.

"Don't be, Hagrid, we were imposing on you." said Harry with a smile.

Ninth paragraph.

"I'm all better now, Hagrid, when do you want some cooking lessons?" said Harry happily. He had heard from Dumbledore that Hagrid wanted them, and he was more than happy to help out, especially if they were going to get back to normal classes at any point and he, Ron and Hermione were going to go back to Sunday tea with Hagrid.

"Whenever is good." said Hagrid with a smile, "Sorry if I ain't much of a student." he added with a bit of worry in his black eyes.

"If I can tutor Ron in magic, I can teach anybody, anything." he said with a grin.

"Can you indeed?" said Rivers with a small smile. Harry turned over to him quickly. He had forgotten he was there. He wouldn't have said that if he had remembered he was there.

"I might want to talk to you at some point, Mr. Potter." he said drumming his fingers on his chair.

Moody and Lionus looked over to him quickly, as did the Unspeakables. They all wanted Harry to join their ranks. Harry saw the looks in their eyes. Picking his career might not be as easy as he thought. Especially if they wanted to put their two knuts in.

Dialogue Line

Dialogue set, second sentence.

"You never do waste time, when you want information." said Hermione with a grin.

End of dialogue set.

"No, he can't." said Professor McGonagall sternly.

Tenth paragraph.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

"Very good, Hagrid." she said approvingly.

End of dialogue set.

"They're just too nosy for their own good." said Remus trying not to laugh.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

"When you need information out of a guy, and he ain't giving it, always send in a girl. They'll spill their guts in a heartbeat. Especially if you use flattery." said Harry with a laugh.

"Did this little talk with Hagrid teach you that?" asked McGonagall sternly, crossing her arms and peering over to him.

"No, he's known that for a while." said Lionus with a laugh. Harry looked over at him again, how much about him did that Ranger know?

End of dialogue set.

"That was playing dirty." said Dumbledore, the sides of his mouth twitching.

Eleventh paragraph.

Dialogue set, first sentence, first dash.

"Yes it will! But I guess," said McGonagall to Professor Flitwick, "we should be thankful he told them, goodness knows if they went down there and they didn't have any idea of what was there."

"Oh dear, I really don't want to think about it." squeaked Professor Flitwick, covering his eyes.

Dialogue set, first sentence, fourth dash.

"We volunteered, we didn’t want anyone getting ahold of the Stone either." said Professor Sprout quietly.

End of dialogue set.

"He helped?" said Fred in disbelief.

"That's unbelievable!" said George loudly.

Snape snarled at them

Dialogue Line

Dialogue Line

"The same can't be said for someone else." said Hermione to Ron.
"Just switch Snape's name with someone else's and you've got it right." muttered Harry.

Dialogue line

"He told a student, what is so far-fetched about him telling a stranger?" said Pansy nastily.

"Were you conscious at all before this?" asked Harry, snapping out of his calm ravine.

"What are you talking about, Potter." she snapped.

"Hagrid didn't tell us how to get past the dog, just accidentally let on some clues as to what was down there. Everything else we found out." he said sternly. "So, unless you have an intelligent, or a half-way decent, witty remark, keep your forked-tongue behind your teeth." he hissed.

Pansy stared at him with pursed lips.

"I know where that statement came from." said Hermione with a broad grin.

"My favorite line from those books." said Harry with a large grin. "Gandalf rules!"

"Amen!" said Dumbledore broadly.

"You've read them too, sir?" said Harry and Hermione together.

"Oh, yes. I was good friends with Tolkien, I believe he said once that I was the inspiration for Gandalf."

"I can buy that." said Harry quickly but quietly.

"Though I don't see it myself." Dumbledore added.

"He's the only one." muttered Hermione.

Dialogue line

Dialogue line

Dialogue set, first sentence.

"Hagrid! The past neglect and malnourishment left him with a very weak internal system! He's very delicate! He must be handled carefully." said Madame Pomfrey angrily.

"I'm not delicate!" said Harry shortly, people were trying not to snigger or laugh out loud.

"Of course not dear." said Madam Pomfrey absently. Harry gritted his teeth.
"Never look at anything that you don't want him to know about." said Dumbledore a large smile.

"Wait a minute, wasn't he looking up dragons in the library?" asked Ernie.

"Yeah, so that means.....that's a dragon egg?" said Hannah.

Madam Bones looked to Hagrid quickly and then to Harry.

"That is what I meant." said Harry with a sheepish smile.

"An egg, especially what breed it is, is worth over nine hundred thousand galleons." said Charlie with widened eyes.

"How do you win something like that?" asked Charlie. "Where can I get in on that game?"

"Hagrid! That should have been your first clue! If he wanted to get rid of it, (though I hate saying that) he could have just sold it in Knockturn Alley! There are several different people that would have given you the full nine hundred thousand galleons!" said Charlie shaking his head.

"That is a very good question." said Remus carefully.
"That's a horrible book!" said Charlie angrily. "But it does have some helpful info on raising young hatchlings." he added rather half-heartedly.

Dialogue set, third sentence, second comma.

"Thank God I'm not a dragon. I'd be burnt to a crisp before I was even a year old." said a first year.

"Dragons have fireproof scales, their mothers strengthen them up by breathing fire on the eggs. The scales start to harden themselves as the heat builds inside. Unfortunately, sometimes the scales are too weak, and they don't form as fast. Some hatchlings don't even make it out of the egg." said Charlie sadly. "Survival of the fittest, right off the bat."

“Wow, that's a rough life.” said the first year.

Dialogue set, end of third sentence

"Why? Sounds nasty!" said Neville shuddering.

"It's a perfect mix to imitate the mother dragon's milk." said Charlie. "It's got the proteins and the burning taste it wants."

"That's disgusting." said Parvati faintly.

End of dialogue set.

"More than rare, there's only thirty left in the world. They're barely hanging on." said Charlie sounding even more depressed.

Fourteenth paragraph.

Dialogue line

"Yeah, that could pose a really big problem." said Tonks, with a small smile

"Why are you smiling?" asked Remus looking at her.

"His house is still standing, so nothing bad happened." she said shrugging.

Fifteenth paragraph.

Sixteenth paragraph.
"Harry lost a few night's sleep worrying about it." said Ron out loud.

Hagrid turned to look at Harry with a look of intense guilt on his face. Harry glared at Ron, as Remus and Dr. Clark swung his legs up onto their laps and covered him with a blanket.

"And I thought I needed a filter for my mouth." Harry said with a frown on his face.

Sirius made a 'shh' ed sound. "Hey, we want to know these things."

Dialogue set, first sentence, second comma.

"Wish I knew." said Harry wistfully.

Dumbledore closed his eyes and bowed his head slowly.

End of dialogue set.

"We already had a study time, and you giving us more was...yeah it was driving us nuts." said Ron trying to explain to Hermione, who was looking insulted.

Seventeenth paragraph.

Charlie leaned forward in his chair eagerly.

Eighteenth paragraph, first sentence.

"I would too!" shouted Charlie, Fred, George and Lee.

End of eighteenth paragraph.

"Awwwww! Come on, Hermione! How many times are you going to be able to see a hatching?" asked Lee disappointedly.

Dialogue line

"Not many times, I work with dragons, and I've never seen one up close. The mothers tend to scorch things that try to come in within visual range of their eggs." said Charlie.
"How did you manage the First Task, last year?" asked Harry.

"We had to knockout the dragons before we got too close." said Charlie.

Dialogue line

"I'm don't think that keeping an illegal dragon is the same as not doing your homework, Miss Granger." said Madam Bones seriously.

Dialogue line

Ninteenth paragraph.

"Your face is no better Potter!" smirked Pansy.

"Explain then, the Valentine you sent me in our second year." said Harry with a sneer.

Pansy whitened and stuttered.

"Did she really?" asked Lupin.

"Yeah, but it was more a hate-tine then a valentine." said Harry with a smile.

Twentieth paragraph, first sentence.

"Like I really would have missed it." said Hermione.

End of twentieth paragraph.

Dialogue line

Twenty-first paragraph.

"That would be the claws against the shell of the egg." said Charlie earnestly.

Twenty-second paragraph.

Twenty-third paragraph, third sentence, first semi-colon.

Charlie turned to stare at Harry. “Sorry, but, um...it was just a shock." said Harry smiling a little bit.
"Just hearing the description, she was a beautiful baby Ridgeback." sighed Charlie quietly.

"Aww!" said Charlie.

Bill slowly turned to look at his brother. "You're.....freaking....insane."

"Nice baby." said Blaise chuckling.

" 'Mommy'? Why not 'Daddy'?” asked Dennis curiously.

"Male dragons don't stick around for the baby dragon's life, once they mate with the female, then they take off again. Never to be seen by the baby dragon, unless either they fight over the same female, or they mate with each other." said Charlie matter-of-factly.

Several students stared at him, "They mate with their kids?" said Lavender faintly.

"Sometimes the Norwegian Ridgebacks have to, not enough young females to go around, after a female dragon lays eggs about three times, they can't lay anymore." said Charlie.

"They're the fastest growing species of all the dragon species." said Charlie. “And yet we still can't keep their numbers up.”

"Oh no." moaned Sirius, "What now?"
"Well that's not good." said Dr. Clark.

"That would be your seeker sight, right there." said Fred proudly.

"Oohh, not the person you want seeing something like that." said Tonks worriedly.

"Back when I was here, any smile on a Slytherin's face was never a good thing." said Sirius, "And we had Bella in there a few years ahead of us. You never wanted to see her smile."

"He's too young, he could die before he's even a week old." said Charlie.

"At the least the internal flame is going, that means the dragon is so far really healthy," said Charlie thoughtfully.

"That would explain why the grounds' flora were looking so decrepit." said Snape.
"And that means that the dragon is eating all right." said Charlie.

Dialogue line.

"Umm....we kinda needed to change the name, Hagrid." said Charlie looking up at Hagrid.

"What? Why?" said Hagrid. "What did you change it to?"

"Norberta. He's a she." said Charlie with a smile. Hagrid stared at Charlie, but then smiled.

"Didn't you people ever think to check?" asked Ernie.

"Dragons don't develop reproductive organs until they are at least seven months. So Hagrid would never have known in such a short amount of time." said Charlie.

"You, Mr. Weasley, are a fountain of knowledge, especially where dragons are concerned. Hagrid, perhaps you should have a Dragon Week for your class, Mr. Weasely here or one of his friends could come and give lectures. I think people would find that immensely fascinating." said Dumbledore, his eyes twinkling. Several students talked amongst themselves excitedly.

"If Charlie's up to it." said Hagrid smiling down at the Dragon keeper.

Charlie beamed.

Dialogue line.

"He lost them when he got that dragon." whispered Snape to McGonagall.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

"Actually that would need to take five weeks for that breed." said Charlie.

End of dialogue set.

"No, I never did." said Malfoy regret filling his usual drawling voice.

"Why not come to me?" asked Snape.

"Didn't think of it." said Malfoy sadly.
"Harry....I'm Charlie, he's Ron." said Charlie, pointing to himself and then to Ron.

Fred and George snorted.

"How often had you told him about me, Ron." said Charlie curiously.

"Actually, I only told him once about you." said Ron with a small smile.

"And months later.....HE REMEMBERED?" said Charlie in shock.

"Yeah...shocked me too..." said Ron smiling over to Harry.

"Where was Ron?" asked Ginny

"Who would have been out and about at that later hour?" demanded McGonagall.

"That's gross!" said Padma cringing.
"Oh, CRAP! That's not good! Ridgebacks have venom in their teeth!" said Charlie loudly.

Mrs. Weasely turned and stared fixedly over to Ron, "I'm fine mom." he said quickly.

"Tell me that you went to the hospital wing right away!" said Charlie weakly. “Please tell me you did.”

“Ah...I went to the hospital wing.” said Ron.

“But...not right away...” groaned Charlie.

"Sorry, Ron." said Hagrid shamefully, after Mrs. Weasley shouted at him.

"Don't be, I'm fine." said Ron graciously. "I was just ticked that Norbert...ta, bit me."

“You don't go anywhere near anything that bites.” said Sirius to Harry.

“Yeah...I'll get right on that.” said Harry and then he shifted away slightly.

“What are you doing?” asked Sirius.

“You turn into a dog and they bite.” said Harry with a smile.

“Not what I meant!” said Sirius.

McGonagall paled, that day, that Saturday, so there really was a dragon in the school!
“Normally Hermione puts up a bit of a fight.” said Harry with a smile.

Thirty-eighth paragraph, third sentence.

"CRAP! Go to the hospital wing!” moaned Charlie.

Thirty-eighth paragraph, fourth sentence.

"Not then anyway." said Madam Pomfrey angrily. She hated the students being subjected to dangerous situations. And last year was full of opportunities for the students to get hurt. "Also, I have a no questions asked policy. That way, if the students really wanted a teacher to know what was going on, they could just ask. But if I see something horrible, I ask. The bite was bad, but not nearly bad enough for me to ask questions."

“Why have such a policy?” asked Dr. Clark.

“It's either that or children being too scared to come to me, for fear of being interrogated.” said Madam Pomfrey.

End of thirty-eighth paragraph.

"They are, oh please go to Hospital Wing!” said Charlie trying hard to keep his mother in her seat.

Thirty-ninth paragraph.

Dialogue set, second sentence, first comma.

"I don't know why I bought that.” said Madam Pomfrey to the angry looks that she received.

Dialogue set, third sentence, second dash.

"I didn't, but I stuck to my policy." said Madam Pomfrey.

End of dialogue set.

"He would have come up with reason, even if you hadn't struck him, I shouldn't wonder.” said Mr. Weasely towards his son.
Fortieth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"Oooohh!" moaned the students.

"That was stroke of luck for Malfoy, wasn't it." said Dr. Clark, clapping a hand to his good eye.

Forty-first paragraph.

"You did, you looked really tired and worn." said Hermione.

Dialogue set.

"He knows now." said Tonks with a singsong voice.

Forty-second paragraph.

"Norbert, er...Norberta nipped his tail a little too hard." said Hagrid scratching the back of his head.

Dialogue line.

“What was he doing?” asked Charlie.

“He was attackin' me tea kettles and the change that would fall out the pockets in my coat...anythin' shiny he would pounce on it.” said Hagrid.

".....that was a good idea to keep them out, Hagrid. If anyone especially Harry had gone in there, They would almost had been ripped to shreds." said Charlie heaving a sigh of relief.

"Why would Harry have been in the most danger?" said Sirius worriedly.

"At that stage, they grab and latch onto anything shiny. Jewels, pearls, beads, stuff like that. They tend to like green things, we found that out in a behavior study. With Harry's emerald-like eyes....." Harry blushed a deep red.

"I think Norberta would have killed him. Despite Hagrid being there." said Charlie seriously.
Sirius gripped Harry tightly, Harry's breath hitched up, Remus had to smack Sirius's shoulder to release Harry just a bit so he could breathe.

"Thankfully the stage only lasts a day or two. But it is a dangerous stage to be around." said Charlie, continuing on.

Forty-third paragraph.

"I was sad! I was gonna lose 'im!" said Hagrid.

"Hagrid, it was either Norberta or Harry, you really couldn't choose both. Despite the stage ending, Harry's eyes would always attract her attention and she would always claw her way to him." said Charlie honestly.

Hagrid looked down sheepishly. "I would've picked 'Arry."

"There you go." said Charlie. Charlie then smiled over to Harry who looked at Hagrid with a small smile.

"Thanks, Hagrid." he said quietly.

Dialogue line.

Forty-fourth paragraph, first sentence.

George laughed loudly. "Nice, Harry."

End of forty-fourth paragraph.

Forty-fifth paragraph.

"Peeves?" asked Dr. Clark.

"He's the ghost that stole one of your eye patches and did a pirate impersonation." said Harry rolling his eyes.

"Oh, I thought he was kind of funny." said Dr. Clark with a smile.

"You'll want to smack him about, soon enough." said Sirius.

Forty-sixth paragraph.

"Good, then he can't see Harry, He might bust right through the crate." said Remus worriedly.
"His teddy? You packed his teddy?" said Draco with a laugh.

"Remember when we would take Harry for an outing? And we forgot Scorchie? He was not a happy little camper." said Lupin with a laugh.

"Oh lord, you screamed, cried. Nothing we gave you would make you happy, We had to finally go home and grab your stuffed dragon. Then you were all smiles. Only time I ever called you 'Brat'." said Sirius to Harry, laughing so hard he was crying.

People in the Hall began to laugh, even Hagrid.

"Thankfully," said Remus wiping a tear away from his eye, "you never tried to destroy Scorchie."

"That explains

"Neither will we." said a few students. "And we didn't know her nearly as long."

"It weighed about as much as I did." said Hermione.

"And twice Harry's weight." muttered Madam Pomfrey darkly.

"If that's the shortcut I think it is, that takes away the need to go up seven sets of stairs." said Ron.

"Where is that one?" said Neville.

"Is that one besides the tapestry of Merlin and Morgan Le-Fay? asked the twins.

"No, this one is next to the statue of Hogwarts founders on the second floor." said Harry.

"Whoa, might have to look for that one." said Seamus and Dean.
"We had to stop a few times to catch our breath." said Hermione.

"Can't be too careful." said Moody approvingly.

Several snickers rang through the hall as they imagined that picture in their minds.

"I apologize for accusing you of lying, but you should not have been out of bed." said McGonagall fairly.

Draco stared at her, and nodded slowly.

"I want Harry to sing again." said Hermione with a laugh.

"I would rather not." said Harry.
"I'll tell them you said that. They liked the two of you, a lot." said Charlie with a smile.

"They were sort of hoping you would have another dragon soon. They loved the excitement." said Charlie with a laugh.

"Sounds like a baseball game." said Colin.
"What's baseball." asked Ron.
"I'll show you sometime." said Harry.

"Famous last words." said Tonks, covering her eyes.

"Well at least he can't see you." said Sirius.

"What? How can he see you?" asked Remus questioningly.

"Oh no! This isn't good!" moaned Remus. "I'll read the next chapter, Arthur. I want to know what is going to happen, right now!" he said quickly.

He stood up and took the book quickly, he then walked over to the bowl and sat down.
"All right, let's see how much trouble you get into." he said turning the page.
Chapter fifteen title.

Remus stared at the chapter title. "It just went from bad to worse." he said looking deathly pale.
"Now I'm thinking I don't really want to read this one." said Remus looking over to Sirius.

"What makes you think I want it?" said Sirius leaning away from him.

"I think you are stuck Remus, you'd better just start right now." said Dumbledore with a saddened expression on his face.

Remus chewed his lip but cleared his throat loudly and bravely continued.

First paragraph.

"We were so wrong!" moaned Harry and Hermione.

“I don't want to hear that.” said Sirius.

Second paragraph, first sentence.

"Remember the first time we got caught, Moony?" asked Sirius, trying to lighten Remus' mood.
"We spent a majority of the time, before she got there and when she was there, bickering about who did what to get us caught."

Remus' mouth twitched slightly. "You got us caught, you stepped on Mrs. Norris' tail." he said with small smirk.

"No I didn't, I shoved Peter and HE stepped on Mrs. Norris' tail." said Sirius defensively. “I would have kicked her, not step on her.”

“Oh, that's not nice.” said Luna.

“Hey, she always stalked us, even when we weren't doing anything wrong.” said Sirius.

Second paragraph, third sentence.

"I wouldn't have been in the mood to hear excuses at the moment." said McGonagall sternly.
“Especially after Mr. Malfoy...and the other one I caught.”

“Someone else was out?” asked Charlie.

“They picked a bad night to go wandering.” said Bill.
"Very good question." said Sirius shaking his head.

"Stuff it, Paddy." said Harry.

He paid dearly for his cheek when Sirius reached down and tickled him mercilessly. “Keep pushing your luck, Junior.” sneered Sirius.

"At least you knew enough not to give me a cock and bull story." said McGonagall.

"Not that he doesn't try." said Snape with smirk on his lips.

"Hey now, I only remember lying to you...maybe...three times." said Harry ticking off the incidents that he could recall.

Snape snorted in disbelief. “I'll believe that....never.”

"We wouldn't have been surprised if you did send us home packing." said Harry and Hermione.

“If I had known about the dragon, you would have been close to being sent home.” said McGonagall.

"It was going to get even more worse than what happens next." said Harry.

“So he was the other one you caught!” said Colin.

"How does that make it worse?" asked Kingsley.

"Wait for it." said Neville sadly.

"Never mind." said Kingsley shaking his head.
"Sorry, ma'am." said Harry sheepishly.

"Don't be, Mr. Potter, nice to know that I'm like an enraged dragon when I get mad." said McGonagall with a smirk.

"I'd rather tackle a Hungarian Horntail than her." muttered Charlie. "They're safer."

Dialogue line.

"I don't think I would have believed you, even if you told me under Veritiserum." said McGonagall shaking her head.

“Well, then we were safe.” said Harry with a chuckle.

“It's not funny.” said Remus.

“Oh stuff it Remus, we did much worse when we first got here.” said Sirius.

“We're suppose to set an example.” said Remus.

“Pshh, you want a good example, Harry should have been the parent.” said Sirius.

Fifth paragraph.

Several students stared at Hermione in shock. How could she not answer a question?

Dialogue set, third sentence.

Pansy snickered loudly. Harry looked over to her quickly.

"You want to have a go? I can take you on with wands or insults. Choose your weapon."

"Wands then, cause I've had enough of your mouth." she said sneering and slipping the wand from her robes.

"Mr. Potter, don't make me give you a detention." smirked Professor Snape.

"You actually can't, sir, I'm defending the honor of my Head of House, school rules state that I can, it actually encourages it." Harry said standing up and flicking his wrist. His wand came swiftly down his sleeve and lodged firmly in Harry's grip.

“Whoa.” said Sirius under his breath.

“Harry...” said Remus warningly.

“Let me blow off some steam, I promise not to hurt her...just...stun her.”

He and Pansy raised their wands.
The battle was over in an instant, and Pansy's friends were trying to pick her up off the floor. Harry, unharmed and unphased sat back down in the bowl. "You and another fellow Slytherin should learn not to pick a fight with me. I took you on alone, with him, I have lots of backup." said Harry.

"Try to refrain from doing so again, Potter." said Snape darkly. He had tried several times to intervene, but Flitwick held him back, saying that it was indeed in the rules.

"Don't ruin it, Severus, besides, your student will never live it down that you had to save her." said Flitwick.

End of dialogue set.

"We didn't....we wouldn't...." said Harry a switching from a taunting behavior to a fretful one, looking between McGonagall and Neville. Sirius gave his arm a squeeze.

"We know, cub, we know. She didn't know at the time though, she does now, I'll bet." said Sirius with a smile.

McGonagall shifted nervously. “I do.”

Sixth paragraph, second sentence, first dash.

Remus turned and looked at Harry slowly. Before he could fully turn around, Harry quickly apologized to a Neville who just smiled back.

End of sixth paragraph.

"We appreciated it, Neville, but.....you shouldn't have risked expulsion just to find us." said Hermione kindly.

"You guys are worth risking that for though!" said Neville happily. Ron, Hermione and Harry turned a bright pink.

“Don't let your Grandmother hear that.” said Emmeline.

“Never.” said Neville nervously.

Dialogue set, third sentence.

Oh sure you have. said Sirius.

You four were in your own category, I'm talking about amateurs. said McGonagall.

Dialogue set, fifth sentence.
"That hurts. Bad form, Professor." moaned Charlie.

"Indeed, Minerva, not even I would say that to my Slytherin students." said Snape looking at her with widened eyes.

Professor McGonagall looked over to Harry, she had an apologetic look on her face.

Dialogue set, sixth sentence, fifth comma.

"What was going on in those days?" asked a fourth year Ravenclaw.

"I think the reason will make itself known in this chapter, Mr. Tomen." said Dumbledore addressing the student

End of dialogue set.

"Fifty? For being out of bed? And getting someone else out on a prank?" asked Sirius and George incredulously. "What were you playing at? You never took that much off of us for being out of bed and flooding the lower dungeons/setting off fireworks in the corridors!" they shouted. Then they looked at each other in shock. "You did what?"

“You've only taken twenty-five points off for us... granted you gave us two weeks of detention... but still, fifty is a lot.” said Fred.

“You're lucky, she gave us three weeks for the flooding incident.” said Lupin. “My hand still cramps up when I pick up a piece of chalk.”

"I... I didn't want Potter to be as much of a troublemaker as his father was." said McGonagall, trying to defend herself.

"One has to look at him, listen to him talk, and watch him walk and see he isn't going to be anything like his dad!" said Lupin sternly.

Dialogue line.

"Oh, come on, Professor!" moaned Charlie.

Dialogue line.

"Each?" asked Remus faintly.

Sirius let out a breath of air. "McGonagall, that was going overboard."

"Amazingly, I agree with the mutt, Minerva." said Snape quietly.

Dialogue line.
"If you think you were upset, I wonder if it will say how upset we were." said Neville wonderingly.

"I really hope it doesn't." said Harry sadly.

Seventh paragraph.

Harry looked down in shame.

Eighth paragraph, second sentence.

McGonagall looked a little upset, but she still held onto what little ground she had.

End of eighth paragraph.

Several balls of light popped out of the book in Remus' hands and began to spin around. Lionus, Rivers, Nightstrike and the two Doctors stared in amazement.

"What are those things?" asked Lionus quickly.

"They're called Scattered Shots, they reveal a past event, it's not like a Scroll though. But why would it show us this part, I don't know." replied Sirius quickly. The balls shattered and each of the fragments shot straight into each person in the Great Hall. The slightly familiar darkness claimed their sight for a brief instant.

They found themselves in the Gryffindor Dormitory, where Dean and Seamus were found to be fast asleep. Members of the other houses looked around the dormitory eagerly.

"This is a little different than ours are." whispered Ernie. "They have different color curtains on their beds."

They watched as Neville and Harry both came in, Neville was bawling while Harry was looking as white as Dumbledore's beard.

Neville fell heavily onto his bed, without undressing and cried loudly into the pillow. McGonagall looked at the sobbing boy in shame. It seemed like forever that eleven year old Harry stood in the corner, beside his bed and watched Neville, with regret and deep emotional pain radiating off his body. Sirius wanted to go over and hold him, tell him everything was going to be alright, but he knew he couldn't. Neville stopped crying and turned his head.

"What...what...what are we going to do, Harry?" he said tearfully.

"I don't know...I do know what I'm going to do now, though." said Harry weakly.

"What is that?" asked Neville.
Harry stood up and walked into their dorm's bathroom and closed the door behind himself. The dorm was silent, until they heard a retching sound. Madam Pomfrey, and most of the adults turned towards Harry and stared at him.

"I want an honest answer, Potter," said Madam Pomfrey angrily. "Did you make yourself sick."

"No, I didn't. I know better than to do that on purpose, it sucks when it comes about on its own." he said looking down sadly.

The Harry of the past came back, several minutes later, and laid down on the bed. His face, drawn, pale and sweaty. He clutched at his stomach and whimpered slightly. Neville continued his crying while Harry got up several times, and repeated the actions that he had done behind the closed doors.

Sirius hugged Harry tightly and whispered in his ear, "I don't want you getting that upset again."

"Neither do I." said Dr. Clark with a shocked face.

"I don't get that upset on purpose," said Harry quietly. He thought back to the past summer and flinched, if it showed them that summer, they would be seeing another repeat performance.

The balls of light left their bodies and they were back in the Great Hall. Remus sent Harry a worried look and sent a scowl over to McGonagall, who looked devastated. Reluctantly, he continued on reading.

Ninth paragraph, second sentence.

"We actually went and grabbed Professor Flitwick and asked him if it was malfunctioning." said a sixth year Gryffindor.

"It was very hard trying to explain to them what had happened." said Flitwick sadly.

End of ninth paragraph.

"We didn't know all the facts, now we did." said the sixth year apologetically.

Tenth paragraph, first sentence.

"That almost seems to happen at least once a year," said Harry absently. Several students cringed in their seats.

Tenth paragraph, second sentence, first comma.

Tonks and Rivers looked sternly at their two houses.
"Hufflepuffs are supposed to be loyal!" she growled to her House.

"And I would have expected more of my fellow Ravenclaws." said Rivers sternly.

Tenth paragraph, third sentence.

"Harry......" said Dumbledore quietly.

"Yes, sir?" asked Harry looking over to the Headmaster.

"Have you told a teacher about this?" asked Dumbledore seriously. The teachers sat up.

"No sir, I felt that I deserved what I was getting." said Harry quietly.

Most of the teachers and guests groaned at that statement. "No Harry, you most certainly did not deserve that kind of treatment from your fellow students." moaned Dumbledore.

_Damned Dursleys_ thought Sirius and several others.

End of tenth paragraph.

Sirius, Remus and Dr. Clark snarled over to the students of Slytherin House.

Eleventh paragraph.

"Good for you, Ron!" said Charlie. But Ron only stared at his knees, remembering his behavior last year.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"No, no we haven't." said Fred and George quietly.

Dialogue line.

Twelfth paragraph, first sentence.

" Seriously? You were _that_ upset?" said Dean with his mouth hanging open.

"At the time, I had had it." said Harry bitterly.

End of twelfth paragraph.
The Quidditch members of the other houses all gasped. Potter.....quitting? Professor McGonagall's hand flew to her mouth and horror. She almost caused her star Quidditch player to resign!

Dialogue line.

Thirteenth paragraph.

The Gryffindor Quidditch team shuffled their feet miserably. Fred and George turned and scowled at the chasers.

"We didn't turn our backs on them." said Fred.

"Yeah, we figured that a prank went wrong and we thought nothing of it. We knew that with Hermione answering all kinds of difficult questions and Harry's flying, we'd get back on top in no time flat." said George.

Fourteenth paragraph, second sentence.

"We didn't have a bad time at all, compared to you." said Hermione sadly.

End of fourteenth paragraph.

The teachers all looked down slowly, they remembered her keeping her hand down. They hurried to Professor McGonagall to tell her, they were shocked to learn that she was party to the massive loss of points for Gryffindor.

Fifteenth paragraph, first sentence.

Dean, Seamus, Neville, and Ron turned to stare at the black haired teen.

"It said 'almost'" said Harry without looking at them.

End of fifteenth paragraph.

"I hate end of term exams!" moaned Ron. Almost all of the students nodded their heads in agreement. Hermione and a few Ravenclaws however looked slightly irritated.

Sixteenth paragraph, first sentence.

"One gets the feeling you didn't pass." sneered Snape.

End of sixteenth paragraph.
“What the..? Who is talking to him?” asked Dr. Clark.

"Harry's there! He'll find out!” said Dennis quickly.

“He'd better not get seen.” said Lupin turning to look at Harry.

“No one saw me.” said Harry with a smile.

"Why would he be straightening it?” asked Tonks loudly. "Did he get in a fight with someone?"

"Well, well, you did fail miserably, didn't you?” said Snape with a smirk.

"Wait for it.” warned Harry.

"I stopped myself before I could even begin to meddle," said Harry with a small smile. "But you are right, I did just about fail." continued Harry, giving Snape (surprisingly) some credit.

Snape slowly extended an open palm to Harry, "I'll take the stones now," he said with a smirk.

Harry looked down, thinking deeply. He then stood up and walked over to the Potions Master. He reached behind his neck, appearing to unfasten something. When he pulled his arms back, in his hands was a fine golden-wrought chain. He held it out for the Professor to take.

"It's not a Sorcerer's Stone, but it's the most valuable thing I have." he said seriously.

Snape slowly took it, he was only kidding about taking anything from the boy. He didn't want anything from him...he preferred to keep his distance. He looked at the small charm in his hands. It was small locket, ornately decorated with a delicate gold flower, a lily.

"What is this?" he said, he wanted to sound snarky, but it only came out in a pale whisper.

"I bought this last year, it’s nothing special to anyone else but me, so I'll do anything to win it back.” said Harry looking down at the golden bauble. The phial that Luna had captured his tear in, was still glowing silently.
"What's this inside?" said Snape opening it. It held a small, glass bead, with a lock of red hair inside.

"I had to go to Godric's Hollow just to get that." said Harry quietly. " Took me some doing to find it."

"What is it?" pressured Snape. He had a feeling what it was, but he needed to know for sure.

"It's a lock of my mother's hair. I scoured all over the remnants of my parents' house just to find it." said Harry with a small smile. " Took me all day."

Dumbledore sat forward in the chair and stared, as some of the other teachers started to blow their noses loudly.

Snape held it out for Harry to take it back. "I can't take this." he said in a hoarse whisper.

"Take it, till I win it back." he said finally.

He left the chain with Professor Snape and went to go sit back down. Snape couldn't take his eyes off the locket, or the lock of hair resting inside.

"But Harry you be your broomstick! And you didn't give it to him!" said Zacharias loudly, he had to dodge a smack from Hannah.

"The broom is there for him to grab, the remnants anyway." said Harry with a smirk. "Though I think the tree might make a grab at him first."

Nineteenth paragraph, first sentence, third comma, first dash.

"That's a horrible picture, right there." said Ron to Neville, who chuckled, but looked nervously over to Professor Snape. But he wasn't listening, the locket captured his attention for the time being.

End of nineteenth paragraph.

"He lasted longer than what I gave him credit for." said Bill.

Twentieth paragraph, first sentence.

"He wasn't doing too badly." said Hermione honestly.

End of twentieth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"His what?" said Draco with a smile.

"Hey, I was panicking a little." said Ron defensively
Dialogue line.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

"Actually, there is no book that states how to get past Fluffy. That's a special quirk only he has." said Dumbledore with a smile.

"Unless you count any Greek Mythology book in the Muggle World." muttered Harry.

End of dialogue set.

Twenty-first paragraph, first sentence, first comma.

"I don't want to hear it!" screeched Mrs. Weasely.

Dr. Clark looked over to her. "I wish some parents were a lot like her. Protective, instead of neglectful."

"Have you seen many parents like the Dursleys?" asked Hermione.

"Quite a few, but none nearly as bad as the Dursleys." said Dr. Clark with a dark look.

End of twenty-first paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set.

"Very true, it would have been almost impossible to explain." said Dumbledore wisely, he didn't however smile. Professor McGonagall looked down in shame.

Twenty-second paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"Yeah! That will help you guys figure it out!" said Colin excitedly.

Dialogue line.

"Wow, he was still staying true to his word?" said Dennis in wonder.

Twenty-third paragraph.
"That must have taken a lot of self-control, Harry." said Dumbledore over to him.

"It was either that or giving up and poking around." said Harry quietly.

Twenty-fourth paragraph.

Note From McGonagall.

"Eleven o'clock? You are going to give first year students detention at eleven o'clock?" shouted Sirius.

"It was a Friday night!" she said defending herself.

"I DON'T CARE IF IT WAS CHRISTMAS EVE! YOU...." shouted Sirius, but stopped when Harry, and Dr. Clark gripped his arm and shoulder, trying to calm him down.

"Since then Sirius, I have placed into teacher/detention policy that no detention should start past nine o'clock, especially for students under fourth year. Having a detention starting that late is very excessive." said Dumbledore sternly, while looking over to McGonagall.

Twenty-fifth paragraph.

"You didn't deserve that many points lost, or that late of a detention!" snarled Sirius.

Twenty-sixth paragraph.

"Seeing Malfoy down there made me feel a lot better." said Neville quietly.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set, third sentence.

"Exactly." said Umbridge quickly.

"I don't normally bite garbage, but if you don't shut up soon, you're going to be in a lifetime worth of hurt." snarled Nightstrike.

Dialogue set, fourth sentence, first comma.

Harry blinked heavily and then turned to Dumbledore, before he could say anything, his wrists and ankles began to slowly burn.

"Sir?" said Harry rubbing his wrists.

"Yes, Harry?" Dumbledore looked irate, but Harry bravely continued to speak.
"I think I remember something from the incident," said Harry quickly.

"Harry we discussed this three times now, don't try to remember, it only hurts you further." said Dumbledore worriedly.

"There were chains, on my wrists and ankles." said Harry quietly.

Dumbledore paled, "Are you sure?"

"I think so, I remember that I marked the chain on accident." He looked down at his hand, several nails were jagged, "I dug my nails into the steel so much that I broke several of them. They should have some scratches on the cuff."

Dumbledore left the Great Hall quickly, his robes fluttering angrily behind him. Suddenly, the students heard several deafening 'bangs' and then Dumbledore returned, with a satisfied yet grim look on his face.

"He doesn't have them anymore." he said fiercely. "And he better not catch me in a bad mood, because I will not be kind."

"I just had a thought," said Bill quickly. "When does he get back?"

"Today." said Lionus, "I have one of Hangman's crew bringing him."

"Who's Hangman?" said Charlie.

"She's the Chief Jailer. Warden, as it were." said Lionus.

Dialogue set, end of fourth sentence.

"They won't be." snarled Dumbledore.

End of dialogue set.

Twenty-seventh paragraph.

Sirius clutched Harry to him tightly.

Twenty-eighth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"Well, at least if it's with Hagrid he won't make the detention too hard. Hell...if you start falling asleep, he'll take you to his hut and let you sleep." said Charlie with a fond smile up to Hagrid.

Twenty-ninth paragraph.

"The forest? You're taking them into the forest?" growled Sirius threateningly. McGonagall and Hagrid both shuffled their feet nervously.

Thirtieth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"There aren’t any werewolves in there. Who told you that?" asked Remus looking over to Malfoy.

"My father." said Malfoy, a little indignantly.

"There was a werewolf in the forest when he was there. But not now, right Moony?" said Sirius with a grin. Remus almost heaved the book towards his head.

Thirty-first paragraph.

"I was about to either faint or start bawling." said Neville.

"Or wet your pants." said Draco quietly with a smirk.

"You DID the last time I saw you in the forest." said Harry when he heard that.

Draco blushed heavily as Ron sniggered.

Dialogue line.

"How can they think of them, when they aren't there, and...." said Sirius with a dark look. "you should never have thought that the teachers would send you in there."

McGonagall gave up trying to defend herself.

Thirty-second paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"At least he wanted to see if you two were alright, seeing as how it was sort of his fault you got in trouble." said Mrs. Weasely.

Hagrid shuffled his feet.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"Let him have it, Hagrid." said Fred and George.
"More than what's going to be left of you when I get ahold of you." muttered Dumbledore darkly.

End of dialogue set.

"Let’s see how far that statement takes you." sneered Angelina.

End of dialogue set.

"Why?" asked Dr. Clark.

"It was his fault he was there. He wanted to get us three in trouble, and instead, he pulled himself down in the muck." said Harry with a smile.

"Wasn't talking to the you three, just Malfoy." said Hagrid quietly.

"We knew, Hagrid." said Harry and Hermione, Neville just nodded.

"Tell you that is how it is done, if you're out of bed, you don't just copy lines. You work." said Sirius and Remus.

"I didn't want to leave, really." said Malfoy quietly.

"D-D-Dangerous?" squeaked Sirius. "Just how much danger were you in?" he said weakly. Harry didn't answer, he merely squeezed Sirius' hand. Remus gulped but continued on.
"Unicorn b-b-blood?" whispered the students crossed the hall.

Everyone, including the Rangers, paled and had a sorrowful look on their faces.

"That is what danger was lurking about Hogwarts, Mr. Tomen. Something was killing our unicorn herd." said Dumbledore sadly.

“And you send kids in to find it...what the hell is wrong with you people?” said Dr. Clark pulling Harry a little closer to himself.

"I hope you don't." said Tonks faintly.

"That is a very good question to ask." said Bill, looking pale.

"That is true." said Charlie. "Hagrid has earned the respect of the creatures in the forest, and if they see him, or if they see Fang. They won't come near you guys. The centaurs may come and visit a bit, but only if Hagrid is with you."

"You split them up?!" moaned Sirius weakly.

"If Fang or Hagrid was with them, they would have been fine." reminded Charlie.

"That poor thing." moaned Lavender and Parvati.
"That wasn't comforting." said Malfoy quietly.

"Pairing me with Malfoy wasn't a very good idea." said Neville shaking his head.

"I wasn't about to put him with 'ermione." said Hagrid gruffly. "And 'arry had the sharpest eyes. I wanted him to help me with findin' the unicorn."

Several people flinched, and others were trying to stop crying.

"That's not good." said Charlie.

"Since Malfoy brought it up, I was concerned." said Harry defensively.

"Werewolves aren't fast enough." said Remus looking down at him.

"So what could be killing them?" asked a first year nervously.
Lionus and Moody were getting more and more impressed by the minute. Despite the danger, and the late hour, he was taking in his surroundings. They wanted him badly now.

End of thirty-ninth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"She was shiverin' somethin' awful." said Hagrid looking down at Hermione.

Dialogue line.

"Oh F#@&! WHAT NOW?" bellowed Sirius pulling Harry up to his lap and twisting his body around as if to protect him from an invisible foe.

"Sirius, I'm fine!" said Harry quickly.

Not till you're out of this damned forest, you're not! thought Sirius frantically, not willing to untangle himself from his godson.

Fortieth paragraph, fourth sentence.

Sirius screwed his eye shut and hugged Harry tighter. Harry couldn't breathe, he wanted to whisper to Sirius to let him go, but couldn't. He was about to pass out from lack of oxygen when he felt Sirius grip lessen considerably.

"SIRIUS! HE CAN'T BREATHE!" shouted Dr. Clark. Harry fell back into Sirius' outstretched arms and breathed deeply.

"I-I'm sorry Harry." whimpered Sirius.

"I'm fine, just relax, I'm right here. Nothing major happens." said Harry weakly, but smiled up to his godfather, massaging his ribs. Sirius stretched Harry out crossed his and Dr. Clark's lap and held onto Harry's hand as he tried to control his breathing. Remus had to be reassured that Harry was okay before he would continue.

End of fortieth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Forty-first paragraph.
"A centaur! Oh...." moaned Charlie.

"Disgusting half-breeds." snarled the ever ignorant Umbridge.

A flying disc zoomed over people's heads and crashed right into Umbridge's chest. It flew back to its owner, who was standing in the doorway.

It was a centaur woman, she had light blue eyes and long flowing white hair, her humanoid torso was covered in what would have passed for an Amazon woman's battle armor, intricately designed, and very well kept. The rest of her body, the body of a Irish Cob horse, was a sleek white, the shade of which matched her long hair perfectly.

"I would prefer that you keep your filthy mouth shut, woman." said the centaur.

"Ah! Tempest, how kind of you to stop by, did you bring Filch?" said Lionus innocently.

"I did, little pest barely lasted the two days, and we kept him in Isolation." said the centaur named Tempest. She reached behind herself and Filch came stumbling out from behind her.

He was horribly sunburnt, but behind the burns, you could see that he was pale, his whole, now extremely gaunt body trembling. He didn't hold that malicious look in his eyes anymore, now they were filled with an almost ever present fear.

Tempest smacked the back of his head and he slowly hobbled over to Harry. He whispered, for he could barely talk, an apology and then backed away very slowly.

"You can go now." said Tempest in a warning tone. Filch hurried out of the hall and went to barricade himself in his office.

"What you do with him is up to you, he's paid his debt. What do I take back with me?" she said at first to Dumbledore, but then addressed Lionus.

"You take the thing you just smacked, back with you. But I, unfortunately, I promised it that it could sit and listen to the books, if it behaved." said Lionus with a smile.

"Has it?" said Tempest with a raised eyebrow.

"Not really, but it's making other people feel better." said Lionus turning his smile to a smirk. "They get the opportunity to smack the living daylights out of it."

Remus shuffled his feet guiltily. Tempest caught sight of it.

"Seems one person regrets it." she said with smile.

"Why is that 'cousin'?" asked Nightstrike with a smile.

"So he's a werewolf, eh?" mumbled Tempest to herself.

"I don't know what came over me..." whispered Lupin.
"Full moon is in a week, could be that." said Nightstrike plainly. Remus' head snapped up, his eyes widened with fear.

"Don't worry lad," said the Ranger's doctor. "I can give you the same medicine I give all the other werewolves. Makes them as innocent and gentle as lambs."

"Why not..." said Hermione.

"Not many people have earned the right to that medication. Mr. Lupin has." said the Doctor.

With a slightly new spring in his step, Remus continued on with the reading, as Tempest went over and stood beside her new prisoner. But before Lupin could start. Sirius had a question to Lionus.

"Why are you calling Umbridge, 'it'?" asked Sirius.

"When we take a criminal in custody, they aren't people anymore. When they get out, after they serve their sentence, we give them back their humanity. They learn to appreciate being a person more, and not likely to commit another crime." said Lionus with a smile. "Umbridge won't have that luxury, she's never getting out. So she better appreciate the readings, because if she pushes her luck, off she goes. And when it's all done, off she goes." said Lionus with an evil grin.

Dialogue line.

Forty-third paragraph

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set.

Dialogue line.

"I wouldn'ta shot unless I was sure of what I was shootin'" said Hagrid.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"Nice manners that girl has." smirked Tempest. Hermione blushed heavily.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"One of the reasons I left my herd, they all want to preoccupy their times with the stars, when actions are called for!" said Tempest pawing the ground waringly.
Tempest gasped and clutched at her heart.

Sirius gripped Harry a little tighter, but making sure he didn't hurt Harry this time.

Tempest rolled her eyes. "He sounds like an elder, you won't get anything out of him."

"He better hide himself, he's not helping that unicorn, or helping you find it! If I catch him..." Tempest pawed the ground again.

“Already she's wound up in the story.” said Dr. Nicodemus with a smile.

"Bane's no better than Ronan." muttered Tempest angrily. No one else dared make a comment while she was here.

"Ronan wasn't so bad." said Harry absently. People looked up and saw Tempest staring at him. Lionus looked at Harry with a sort of new interest. No one would have dared spoken to her while she was commenting on something, let alone tell her she was mistaken on something!

Dialogue line.

Forty-eighth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"Not all of them, it seems." said Dumbledore, smiling up to Tempest. Tempest looked down at the Headmaster and gave him a smile. If one thought no one could possibly improve on her beauty, they were sorely mistaken.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set.

Dialogue line.

"I was clutching at straws." said Harry to himself.

Dialogue line.

Forty-ninth paragraph, third sentence.

"Knowing your feelings, you are being watched." said Tonks with a shudder.

Forty-ninth paragraph, fifth sentence.

Dialogue line.

Snape turned swiftly and looked at Malfoy, while Mrs. Weasely looked over to Neville in horror.

Dialogue line.

"Don't leave them!" cried Dr. Clark.
Fiftieth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"We weren't." said Draco, sheepishly.

Dialogue line.

"Thanks Harry." said Neville quietly.

"Yeah, thanks Potter." said Malfoy rolling his eyes.

Fifty-first paragraph, third sentence.

"Yours maybe, not mine, I was too busy panicking." said Hermione.

End of fifty-first paragraph.

Fifty-second paragraph, third sentence.

"Not a good idea to piss off Hagrid." said Fred

"You won't like it." said George.

End of fifty-second paragraph.

"Either you apologize right now, or I'll drag you out of here by your ear again." muttered Snape in Draco's ear.

Draco hurriedly stood up and apologized to Neville for scaring him.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

"You kind of made it sound like you all were fishing." said Kingsley with a small smile.

"We were going to take you fishing, sadly that never happened." said Dr. Clark with a frown.

"We can go fishing this summer. No harm in it." said Lupin and Sirius with bright smiles.
"Apt description." said Lionus with a frown over to Draco, who flinched horribly under his stern gaze.

"It's almost impossible to scare him, we've tried." said George shaking his head sadly.

"You're a good tracker, Potter." said Madam Bones, she, like Moody, was dead-set on having Harry join her Aurors.

"Wow, you were shielding Malfoy?" asked Neville in a hushed voice. "You'll protect anybody, won't you?"

A sorrowful moan crept through the students of the hall. People began to dab at their eyes, and cry into their neighbor's shoulders.

"You have such a horrible way of putting things, boy." said Tempest, flinching a little.
Fifty-sixth paragraph, third sentence.
Dr. Clark now tightened his grip on Harry's right hand and wasn't about to relinquish it's hold.

End of fifty-sixth paragraph.

Dialogue line.
Several people screamed as well. They weren't even aware of the fact that someone in the book had screamed as well. Though, Lupin may have just screamed for his own purposes.

Fifty-seventh paragraph, first sentence.
"It doesn't say that you ran as well." said Dr. Clark worriedly
"Umm....cause I didn't." said Harry quietly.

End of fifty-seventh paragraph.

"DON'T FREEZE, NOT THERE! RUN!" screamed Sirius. Several other people were hollering too, but not nearly as loudly so they were drowned out.

Fifty-eighth paragraph, first sentence.
"It picked a bad time to start hurting." said Remus worriedly, his hands were trembling horribly.

Fifty-eighth paragraph, second sentence.
"No....no...." moaned Sirius hugging Harry tightly. "Someone....anyone....save him....save my cub....please...."

End of fifty-eighth paragraph.
Sirius sighed, "Someone came to save you, thank Merlin."
"I was afraid that you were hurt before I had time to arrive." said a voice towards the Great Hall doors.

The crowd in the Great Hall turned quickly in their chairs and saw the centaur from the book, standing in the doorway, as real as anything.

"Ah, Firenze, what can we do for you on this," Dumbledore looked at the sky, "dismal day."

"I come bearing a message, and, though it hurts my pride, a request. The message is, due to the Ministry cutting our access to our land, the centaurs are refusing to allow any wizard, or witch allowed in the forest." said Firenze solemnly.

"Oh, dear. Well, I don't blame them for wanting to protect their land, until the Ministry relinquishes their hold, I will comply with their wishes. Now, what is your request?" said Dumbledore thoughtfully.

Firenze took a deep breath and asked with great dignity," May I seek refuge here? I spoke in your def....."

"Of course Firenze, we would be most honored to have you in our company. Please, make yourself comfortable, and help us worry about the events of the past. Dear...me...Firenze...you have an arrow sticking through your arm!" he stated quickly as Firenze came over slowly and knelt beside Dumbledore's chair.

"It was Bane's, you don't have any ginger root, do you?" He asked calmly. "It's an old centaur remedy. Ginger heals most of our ailments, and Bane poisons his arrows."

Harry reached into his knapsack quickly and pulled out a thick tan cookie slab.

"Will gingerbread work?" he said standing up and handing it to Firenze. The centaur looked at it cautiously but took it. He bit into the side of it slowly, when the taste filled his mouth, he ate the rest quickly.

While Firenze ate, and before Hagrid or Madame Pomfrey could hurry over. Harry snapped the side of the arrow and pulled the broken shaft and tip out of Firenze's arm. He took a bottle of healing potion out of his bag, and a thick, long bandage. He wrapped Firenze's arm and tied the ends.
"Feeling better?" asked Harry carefully.

"Much, it seems you've grown up, and learned much since our last meeting Harry Potter." said Firenze with a smile. "And seen much more than foals your age should." said Firenze sadly, looking into Harry's eyes.

"You rest Firenze, while we continue on with the story." said Dumbledore smiling.

“How do you know how to treat an arrow wound?” asked Sirius accusingly.

“Never you mind.” said Harry sitting back down.

Dialogue line.

Sixtieth paragraph.

"I needed no introduction to know who you were." said Firenze calmly.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Tempest whinnied suddenly, Firenze, had not noticed her, but when he did, he stood up quickly.

"You let him ride you?” she asked incredulously. Firenze nodded defiantly. People thought she was going to be upset, but she merely smiled. "Finally, a male centaur with some sense." Firenze blushed.

Sixty-first paragraph.

Dialogue set, fourth sentence.

"Bane's a genius." said Tempest rolling her eyes.

Firenze couldn’t’ t take his eyes off her, he had never seen such a lovely centaur woman. His heart pounded madly beneath his chest.

End of dialogue set.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

"Nothing! You old nag!” snarled Tempest. Firenze was quickly starting to like her.
"I have never forgotten, but that doesn't mean that I allow foals to die, just because the stars say it is so." he said bitterly. "And I have seen that your time, Harry, has yet to end."

"That's welcoming to hear." said Sirius with a small smile.

"At least Ronan was kinda on your side." said Ron.

"He wasn't today." said Firenze, sadly.

"We'll get everything sorted out soon Firenze. just you wait." said Dumbledore kindly.

"It's our duty!" shouted Tempest. "We are the guardians of the woods, caretakers of the unicorns and all creatures. If there is a stray child in the forest, we abandon our current activity and attend to the child!"

Firenze looked towards her, and she looked back. They stared at each other for a moment. Then broke apart, looking away.

"Bet you a galleon they get together." said Ron to Hermione.

"My apologies." said Firenze looking over to the boy.

"Very noble of you, Firenze. And thank you for saving Harry. I don't want to think what might have happened to him, had you not been there." said Dumbledore gratefully.
"I was scared, I didn't really want to think at that moment." said Harry honestly.

"I was debating how to tell you." said Firenze quietly. "One so young shouldn't be burden with such horrific facts."

"No, I was just thinking, and I am so used to not speaking to many people, that I remain silent for a majority of the time." said Firenze.

"We don't use it for anything." said Snape coldly. "No potion uses it."

"At least you remember something from the classes, Mr. Potter." sneered Professor Snape.

"Oh, dear....who would ever want such a life." whispered Mrs. Weasely.

Remus groaned while Dr. Clark cringed. Sirius tugged at Harry and looked at his green eyes.

"I don't want you to say that...ever again." said Sirius warningly.
"What? I only said that I wouldn't want to be cursed forever." said Harry in confusion.

"You mentioned death, you'd rather die than be cursed." said Lupin fretfully.

"I'd rather die, then kill a unicorn." said Harry finally. “I didn't say I'd go and jump off the astronomy tower, in ten minutes.”

Lupin blinked, "Sorry, I'm getting really jumpy."

"You're telling me." said Harry shaking his head.

Dialogue set.

"How did you know about its whereabouts?" asked Dumbledore curiously.

"The stars tell us many things, also we could sense the arrival of such a magical object." said Firenze. He would have left it at 'the stars' comment, but saw the look on Tempest's face and decided to elaborate quickly. Not wanting to incur her wrath.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"Were you talking about You-Know-Who?" asked Parvati, who couldn't help but sneak glimpses at the centaur.

"Indeed I was." said Firenze simply.

"Must I say it again? HE...ISN'T...BACK!" shouted Fudge.

"Must I say it again? We will find out the truth in due time!" said Madam Bones crossly.

Sixty-ninth paragraph.

"Like I said Potter, you have one hell of a memory." said Moody quietly.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Seventieth paragraph.

"Where was Neville and Malfoy?" asked Fred.
"Hagrid sent them back with another centaur. I wouldn't go, I wanted to make sure Harry was alright." said Hermione.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

"It now seems to be that you use that statement for just about anything. I think those around you should take careful warning if you ever say it again." said Dumbledore with a small smile.

End of dialogue set.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

"You left them alone, AGAIN?" moaned Mrs. Weasely.

"He had to go and see to the poor, innocent victim, Madam. For if any creature were to inadvertently start feasting on it, though highly unlikely for any decent sort of creature, the results would be disastrous." said Firenze calmly.

"What would have happened?" asked Dennis.

"I would rather not say." said Firenze quietly.

End of dialogue set.

Seventy-first paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"It was, and I was very glad." said Firenze with a smile.

Seventy-second paragraph.

"Once Hagrid came back and saw Harry shivering like that, he picked Harry up, wrapped him in his coat and carried him to the castle." said Hermione thinking back.

"Hey! Hagrid gave me his coat to wear in my first year, too!" said Dennis excitedly.

"Harry didn't wear it, he was wrapped up in it." said Hermione, explaining it a bit further to the small Creevey brother.
"It was a dream about the Chudley Cannons." said Ron defensively. "The other teams always smack them about."

"You looked like you had a run in with a banshee, mate." said Ron.

Every time that Remus said "Voldemort" the crowd in the school would flinch and cringe. Except the Rangers, Dumbledore, Harry and a select few members of the Order.

"HE'S..." said Fudge angrily.

"I'll give you the same treatment I gave Umbridge, unless you be silent. I'm getting tired of you." said Tempest, fingering her disk.

"Not quite, but close." said Firenze quietly.

"What are you talking about?" asked Sirius looking down at him.

Sirius and Remus both went silent, and then they both looked over to Harry, staring with widened eyes.

"One so young shouldn't be dwelling on death." said Lionus darkly. "It's too bad you grabbed his family before we had a go at them."

"How does he know?" asked Harry.

"While you were sleeping in that thing he asked a lot of questions." said Bill.

Seventy-sixth paragraph.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

"That part made me feel a lot better." said Harry quietly.

End of dialogue set.

"Very rarely does it actually prove itself to be even remotely useful." growled McGonagall.

Seventy-seventh paragraph.

"I hope nothing bad happens." said Sirius. Remus read a head quickly.

"It all depends on how you look at it, I guess." said Remus with a frown.

Seventy-eighth paragraph.

Note on the cloak.

"'Just in case'? Just in case of what?" moaned Sirius.

"Just in case he has great need of it." said Dumbledore simply.

"Who wants to read next? Because I don't want to." said Remus with distaste.

"We will!" shouted the twins. They hurried up to him and grabbed the book. When they turned the page and read the next chapter title, they paled.

"Oh...." said Fred.

"We picked a doozy, didn't we?" said George.

"Chapter Sixteenth." said the twins.

"WHAT?" shouted some of the adults and some of the younger students. Ron and Hermione huddled closer together while Sirius, Remus and Dr. Clark took hold of Harry tightly.
"Before we read, I think we should have a bit of lunch." said Dumbledore, hearing, not Ron's stomach, but Harry's.

"Really, Albus, you want people to eat, especially after what the chapter title is?" asked McGonagall in shock.

"I heard something that tells me it is time for lunch." said Dumbledore, nodding slightly in Harry's direction. McGonagall caught the subtle hint and nodded in agreement.

So the table was magicked back to the center of the room and people began to fill their golden plates with sandwiches and fruit. They wanted to eat quickly and get back to the readings, only the Rangers were refraining the repast. While everyone, (other than her comrades), were eating, Tempest was turning her gaze from Umbridge to Firenze.

It was Dr. Clark's turn to fetch their food this time, he chose only the choicest morsels of everything for Harry. He came back with three moderately full plates and one towering one for Harry. Harry stared at the mountain of food coming his way.

"If you don't finish it, you can snack on it as we go, and if you do finish it, you're gonna have one hell of a stomach ache." said Dr. Clark with a teasing smile.

"I think if I polish off a fourth of that, I'll have a stomach ache." said Harry staring at the plate.

When the twins finished their lunches, they tore open the book and jumped into the reading.

First paragraph, first sentence.

"It wasn't very easy to concentrate when you're worried about getting killed before you finish question fourteen." said Harry with a small smile.

Sirius groaned and pulled Harry tight to him. "I could have gone my whole life without hearing you say that, and I would have been happy."

“Well, we can't all be happy.” said Harry.

End of first paragraph.

"We kept checking on him to be safe." said Hermione.
"Good idea, whoever is after the stone, could have snuck down without you knowing," said Tempest approvingly.

Second paragraph.

"Your father, Lupin and Black tested them personally." said Dumbledore with a broad smile.

"What happened?" said Dennis eagerly.

"It sprayed their parchment with ink, Mr. Creevey. They had to start all over, with a whole new question layout." said McGonagall with a smirk.

"Well that just ruins all the fun." pouted George.

“I wasn't even cheating, they were looking at my paper, I had everything detailed and explained and they go and ruin it all.” said Remus nudging Sirius.

Third paragraph, second sentence.

"His tests are always so much fun!" said Lavender happily. The rest of the students nodded in agreement and smiled at the blushing Charms professor.

Third paragraph, third sentence.

"I still have mine!" said Hermione happily. Several other students nodded.

"Pitched mine." said Ron shrugging. Most of the students nodded in agreement, they also threw theirs away.

"I don't think I got mine back." said Harry thoughtfully. "Moment I did mine, she took it."

"I have it Mr. Potter, here," said McGonagall, reaching into her cloak. She walked over to Dumbledore and showed it to him. “I use it to hold my mother's ring.” whispered McGonagall.

"Oh my! Harry.....you do have a fascination with lilies." whispered Dumbledore. Harry's cherry-wood snuffbox had a single lily decorating the top. But what the lily was composed of was what made it absolutely exquisite.

The stem of the lily was made up of tiny emeralds each one the size of the head of a pin. The petals, that crowned the emerald stem, were made of minuscule rubies glittering with a hidden fire in each stone. The lowest ruby-encrusted petal had a single dewdrop, clinging to the petal a dewdrop in the form of an almond shaped opal. However, the dewdrop resembled more of a tear drop than anything else. The entire flower glinted and glimmered in the candlelight.

"I've never seen a seventh year, let alone a first year transfigure jewels on anything!" said McGonagall eagerly.
Snape stood up and looked over Dumbledore's shoulder. His breath was snatched clean out of his body, and his hand tightened on the locket in his cloak pocket.

Dumbledore passed it to the three in the bowl. Sirius, Remus and Dr. Clark stared at the box. They marveled at it and handed it between themselves.

Harry looked at it, "I didn't even get to really see it when I made it. If you want, Professor McGonagall, you can keep it."

"I would love to, Mr. Potter. I've grown quite attached to it, and had forgotten to give it to you. That snuffbox should have told me that you were ready to take the W.A.N.D's tests." said Professor McGonagall shaking her head.

Hearing the word 'wands' a light clicked on in Hermione's head.

"Oh! I found out what W.A.N.D.S. stands for!" said Hermione quickly after examining the snuffbox eagerly. "It took me so long to find it, but I finally did! It stands for 'Warlocks Accomplishments Nearing Dusk's Set'. But I don't really know what that means." she said dejectedly.

"What that means, Miss Granger, is that the person taking the test, is almost completing his academic learning. 'Dawn' would be considered when you arrive here at school, 'Dusk' is when you have mastered what there is to master. Once he passes his W.A.N.D.S' test, he has the opportunity to take his M.A.G.I.C.S test. Once he takes the W.A.N.D.S. test, he is a full fledge scholar. In which grants him immense privileges, such as visiting other schools and having full access to their books and secrets" said Dumbledore with pride. "Despite not passing my W.A.N.D.S test yet, I've been given some privileges, due to my past experiences. By the way, have you discovered what M.A.G.I.C.S means yet, Miss Grangers." he asked with a smile.

"Not yet, sir." said Hermione sadly.

"Fortunately, I have." said Dumbledore with a smile. "It stands for Magicians, Alchemists, Gnostics, Illusionists, Conjurers, and Sorcerers."

"It doesn't spell out what the test is like the other three." said Terry thoughtfully.

"Actually, it spells out what wizards who typically take that test becomes. Magicians are your most common type of wizard, they can do everything fairly well, compared to the Alchemists, Gnostics, Illusionists, and Conjurers who only focus on one or two practices. Alchemists deal mostly with potionereing and, obviously, alchemy. Gnostics deal mostly on spiritual matters, religion and such. Illusionists, well..they deal with illusions of course. Conjurers mostly forge things out of thin air with much more precision than most wizards can. Sorcerers are the most powerful of all, there is nothing they cannot do."

The students stared at their old Headmaster in shock. They thought their tests were hard, but if their headmaster, Albus Dumbledore, couldn't pass this test, what hope did Harry have to even think about passing!

"I think I will give the W.A.N.D.S another try this year, care to study with me Harry?" said Dumbledore with a bright smile.

"I would be very grateful sir, that test is starting to freak me out." said Harry honestly.

Fred and George had to slap themselves to get back to reading. They couldn't freak Harry out, but a test was going to?
"You always did love irony." said Remus looking over to Snape, who scowled.

Harry absently rubbed his scar, it was hurting all the time again, but when he blocked his mind to the fullest extent, it didn't hurt much at all.

Sirius pulled Harry towards him a little further and Dr. Clark adjusted the blankets.

"If you want to take a nap, cub, you can." said Sirius quietly.

"I just might at some point." said Harry with a yawn.

"Children shouldn't be worried about anything except tests." said Tempest looking haughty. The adults nodded in agreement, while Harry rolled his eyes.

"I would love to only have to worry about tests, but with my life, that doesn't happen." said Harry bitterly.

"Careful lad, you don't want to pick a fight with her. She's a jailer." said Lionus warningly.

"They're the most vicious."

"Kinda gives you a clue that Harry doesn't find the tests all that difficult. He wasn't worried about the tests at all." said Ron.

The students, nor the staff and guests couldn't keep themselves from laughing. It was an apt description of the class, to be perfectly honest.
"He never notices that we're cheering, just ignores us." said Fred shaking his head.

Dialogue set.

"I should hope not Miss Granger, those are learned in your third year." said McGonagall with her eyes wide.

Seventh paragraph, first sentence, second comma.

"Not really." said Ron with a small smile.

End of seventh paragraph.

"A what?" asked Dr. Clark.

"Yeah, Octavius is awesome! If someone falls in, he'll go right over and save you!" said Dennis excitedly.

"And Oct loves being tickled. Just a big lovable lug." said George.

"Take a guess who trained him." said Dumbledore with a broad smile.

"I'm guessing Hagrid." said Harry snuggling down in the covers.

"Very good, Harry...oh!" said Dumbledore, seeing Harry almost falling asleep. "Why don't you take a rest, we'll carry on."

"Sounds..." he yawned hugely "...good to me." he said, finally succumbing to sleep.

"You'd best give those three a strong calming draught, so they don't awaken him." said Dumbledore to Snape, tilting his head to the three in the bowl.

Each of them were given the strongest calming draught Snape had. Dr. Clark wasn't too sure what to make of himself drinking a potion, it wasn't the most pleasant thing he's ever tasted, but it wasn't all that bad. He felt himself become more easygoing, and calmer.

Dumbledore gave the twins the go-ahead to continue on with the story.

Dialogue set.
"You weren't worried about your exams at all were you?" said Hermione shrewdly.

"Nah, I knew I did alright. We both knew you knocked it out the window, Harry was kind of aiming to get an 'E' in everything." said Ron.

"And so he did if I remember correctly. A dead-on 'Exceeds Expectations' in every class." said Dumbledore thinking back.

"Very impressive, aiming for a certain grade at the age of eleven." said Nightstrike. "Remind you of anyone, Captain?"

"Indeed, Nightstrike. He is much like myself." said Lionus with a cryptic smile.

Eighth paragraph.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

"SILENCE!" shouted Tempest, backhanding Umbridge who had mumbled something.

"Now see here!..." shouted Fudge, he had had enough.

Nightstrike whipped out a long sword and placed it to Fudge's throat. "Sir, Tempest and I have authorization to kill anyone we see fit. We've been very meek so far. Don't push your luck."

Fudge gulped loudly and felt his throat move against the cold, sharp steel.

"I really like those two." mumbled Fred to Lee.

End of dialogue set.

Dialogue line.

"Not even she can help, I'm sorry to say." said Dumbledore with a downcast look.

Dialogue line.

"Very astute." said Dumbledore to the sleeping form.

"I still can't get over the fact he doesn't snore." said Sirius.

"Why is that?" asked Ron.

"His dad sounded like a bloody, roaring dragon when he slept." said Lupin, shaking his head.

Ninth paragraph.
"All Weasely men are like that." said Mrs. Weasely shaking her head, while Ginny rolled her eyes. "When it gets to be hot, they can't seem to work."

"Or much of anything else." said Ginny.

The Weasely men all pouted playfully, while the two Weasely women laughed loudly.

Dialogue set, third sentence.

"That had happened months ago though, so he could have been ready for another go." said Ron quietly.

End of dialogue set.

Several people laughed.

Tenth paragraph.

"He doesn't often forget things, especially important things, but when he does, he'll freak out until he remembers." said Ron.

Eleventh paragraph, second sentence.

"Nothing escapes those brilliant green eyes." said Dumbledore beaming.

"Is that the letter...?" asked Hermione.

"It was indeed, Miss Granger." nodded Dumbledore.

End of eleventh paragraph.

Twelfth paragraph.

"And here is the...what did you call it sir...epiphany?" said Ron excitedly.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.
"The smallest thing will set him off like that, some little fact or phrase. Bit annoying really, cause we can't see the connection till he explains it fully." said Ron.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set.

"Wow....he put that all together by watching an owl fly overhead?" said Ernie stunned.

Dialogue line.

"He was so fast, even faster than what the scroll showed him!" said Hermione thinking back to that day.

Thirteenth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"It was pumpkin juice, mom." said Ron exasperated, before his mom could accuse Hagrid of anything.

Dialogue line.

"Good question, and good job keeping your visit straight and to the point." said Moody approvingly.

Dialogue line.

Fourteenth paragraph.

"Who plays cards with someone they can't identify?" asked Hermione rolling her eyes. The adult males in the room, except for Dr. Clark, raised their hands, shockingly even Tempest raised hers. She stared at each of them.

"You're all mental." she scolded.
"If you want a quiet drink, you go there, anything else, you better go to the Three Broomsticks." said Sirius with a wink over to Hermione, who shuffled her feet.

"You never know, it could have been, but I kinda doubt it, if Harry's this concerned." said Charlie.

"That should have been your first clue to bail on that guy, Hagrid." said Tonks carefully.

"He just happened to have a dragon egg on him, and he would play cards for it?" said Charlie weakly. "Man, Hagrid, you must have been tanked to agree to that."

"So that's the second clue to bail, third if you count not seeing his face." said Tonks keeping track.

"Most dragon dealers don't give a damn about the dragons, Hagrid." said Charlie faintly, shaking his head.

"Clue four." said Tonks.

"Oh, crap." moaned Fred.

"You did tell someone how to get past Fluffy." groaned George slapping his forehead.
"And now these three know." whined Fred.

"And now they need to save the world." sighed George.

Sixteenth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"Off to save humanity and small animals from a fate worse than death." said George dramatically.

Firenze looked at them questioningly and whispered to Dumbledore.

"They are very.....odd." said Firenze quietly.

"So they are, so they are." said Dumbledore with a broad smile.

Seventeenth paragraph.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

"Don't be offended, Hagrid. You can just about anything out of anybody when they're drunk enough." said Lupin reassuringly. "Right, Sirius?"

"Shut up." said Sirius quickly.

"What did he tell you?" asked Dr. Clark with a smirk.

"He'll kill me if I tell you." said Remus quietly.

Dialogue set, third sentence.

"He would have stopped me. And I suppose I would have....'backed you up'." said Firenze calmly.

"Good, I knew I liked you." said Tempest with a broad smile.

Firenze jumped slightly and beamed towards Tempest.

"Ever notice that when she speaks, he switches from calm and bored, to happy and excitable?" said George to Fred quietly.

"Yeah, flipping hilarious, that is." said Fred trying not to laugh out loud.

End of dialogue set.
"Gee, we don't even know. We always draw the line just before we get into really big trouble." said Fred looking over at George.

“No, we've been there.” said George, “They just sent us through the Floo so we don't get away and try and hide.”

“Oh, that's right.” said Fred. “All our mischief making runs together sometimes.”

Eighteenth paragraph, first sentence.

"You never can tell with Hogwarts." said Lupin with a smile.

End of eighteenth paragraph.

"We really should show the first year students where my office resides. That way if they have an issue, and they wish to talk to me directly, they can come and see me." said Dumbledore to McGonagall.

"I think that is a very good idea, Albus. It would put some of the students' mind at ease, knowing they can come to you if they have a serious problem." said McGonagall.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Ninteenth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"Normally you say 'please'." said Ron to Hermione.

Dialogue line.

"Fishy? To want to come and speak to me?" said Dumbledore with a confused smile.

"Well...I..." said McGonagall trying her best to explain, but sadly, she was failing.

Twentieth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"She hates it when students keep things from her." said Sirius with a smile.
"The owl Harry saw must have been the one with the letter!" said Dean quickly.

"Harry told us that too, after we talked to McGonagall." said Ron.

"But none as important as the students of my school." said Dumbledore sternly. Professor McGonagall looked down.

"Anything he has to say is more important than the Ministry of Magic." said Sirius importantly.

Fudge wanted to speak, but was silenced by the look in Madam Bones' eyes.

"That'll get her attention." said Fred with a smirk.

"It most certainly wasn't! No one, let alone three first years were supposed to know about it!" said McGonagall.

Fred and George stared at Harry.

"We've said about a thousand things, trying to get a response out of her..." said George.

"And you say what," said Fred, looking at the book and counting the words. "seven words and you get her so stunned that drops her books?" finished Fred looking insulted.
"We hate you." said George simply to Harry, who didn't hear him, on account he was still sleeping.

"That look didn't make us feel any better." said Hermione.

"That's what you think." chanted Ron and Hermione.

"How can we, if we're worried about the Stone being stolen." said Ron rolling his eyes.

"Duh!" said the people who knew the trio personally, the number of people who knew them so well was growing with each passing chapter.

"It was." said Dumbledore and Fudge together.

"Oooh! Not good." said the twins wincing.
"Pfft, when does he say that and mean it?" said Dean to Neville.

"He never said that to us before, didn't really know what to say." said Ron.

"What are you going to do?" asked Sirius leaning forward, being careful not to wake Harry up. "Take points off for not being outside during free time?"

Snape only snarled back at him.

"You can't hide that if you're Harry. He's so damned pale that it shows up easily." said Sirius caressing Harry's cheek with a finger. Still asleep, he moved his hand to swat Sirius' finger away. The ones who saw it, laughed and cooed quietly.

Snape stared at Sirius, turning a pale white. He had been in the same room with that blasted dog before, he did not wish to make it's acquaintence again.
"You wouldn't look out of place, asking questions about the tests." said Moody looking over to her.

"I didn't say it like that! It was more like this..." and Ron repeated his falsetto voice and the rest of the school could hardly contain their laughter.

"Harry didn't plan on her coming to check on Fluffy." said Ron loudly.

McGonagall wringed her hands nervously. She feared, that by not believing him and not taking him seriously, she had ruined whatever trust she was building with the young boy. But they did rattle her something awful.

"Harry knew you meant well, Minerva." said Dumbledore, knowing her fears. "And he does trust you."

"She's not on his tail anymore." said Tonks.
"I wondered where you went to." said Flitwick with a chuckle.

"That's his, 'My life be damned' look. He's planning several different things in his head, all having to do with saving someone, or something." said Ron with a grin.

"His life be damned?" said Remus grasping Harry's hand.

"Ah..." said Ron looking a bit nervous.

The Calming Draught was really kicking into high gear now, the three in the bowl were frightened, but they merely accepted the fact that, Harry was lying on top of them, and he was perfectly fine.

"Shoot!" said Fred reading on.

"I want to leap into this book and join him." said George, reading ahead as well.

"He has a wonderful way of drawing you in." said Fred.

"Don't interrupt us, until we give you the go ahead." said George to the rest of the hall.

"There you go. What do you think of that?" asked Fred.

Dumbledore stared at the sleeping form. "You are right, you do want to leap into the book and join in the battle."

Sirius bent low and kissed the top of his messy head. "At least you got out of this mess in one piece."

McGonagall stared at the three in the bowl. Her heart was going about a mile a minute, and yet.....they sit there, as calm as could be. "I take it, the Draught you gave them was amazingly
"Delayed reaction one, makes it last longer, and yes, it was one of the strongest ones I had." said Snape with a smirk. "I didn't want to go another day with that mutt howling and moaning."

Thirty-third paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"He's more than right." said Moody approvingly.

"He'd make a wonderful Minister." said Madam Bones with a bright smile.

"Here now!" said Fudge irritably.

Dialogue line.

"Or planned." said Lupin, his now calm eyes were flashing from serenity to anger and fear.

"Severus, I do believe that they are inadvertently casting off the Calming Draughts." said Dumbledore, noticing the same occurrences in the two other men's eyes.

“I didn't figure Black to have more than mediocre mental abilities.” said Snape folding his arms.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"He always thinks he going to go on alone. Never thinks we intend to stick by him." said Ron and Hermione.

Dialogue line.

"Thankfully I went through those books, that's where I read about the second obstacle." said Hermione quietly to Ron.

Dialogue line.

"Why does he have to be so selfless?" moaned Hermione.
"I fear that living with the Dursleys have given him the feeling that his life is worthless, as opposed to how we feel it to be most valuable." said Dumbledore sadly. "We must do what we can to rectify that, but not in a way that makes us appear to merely just pity him."

"Yeah, that's one of things he hates the most, pity." said Ron quietly.

Dialogue line.

"If you take part in something bad enough, you could be expelled, Miss Granger." said Dumbledore kindly. "But no, chances are, that Professor Flitwick would defend you to the very end."

"I would, too." squeaked Professor Flitwick with a smile. “I defend every student that is in trouble, especially the studious ones.”

Thirty-fourth paragraph, first sentence, second word.

"None of you ate very much, you two picked at your food, but Harry was eating a lot of bread though." said Neville thinking out loud.

"The carbs in the bread would have given him energy to burn for whatever he planned on doing." said Dr. Clark to Neville.

Thirty-fourth paragraph, third sentence.

"I was crying almost every night, so was Hermione, Harry didn't have a single tear coming down though, I heard some of the sixth years call him 'heartless.'" said Neville.

"Give me their names, if you can, and I'll set them straight myself." said Dumbledore with the twinkle gone from his eyes, now they held a sort of fiery power behind them. He despised bullying and hearing about it, set his pulse racing with anger.

"Well, after this all ended, they went up and apologized to him, he ignored them though." said Neville with a smile.

"Hmmm..." said Dumbledore thoughtfully, then smiled. "Giving them a taste of their own medicine."

End of thirty-fourth paragraph.

"Harry was giving me some small notes, with plans on them. Like what to do if something specific were to happen. Like if there was a troll or something like that. He had about forty plans or so. At least those were the ones he told me about." said Ron with a smile.
"Lee, Fred and George were the only ones who even remotely nice to us." said Hermione bitterly.

"That's too bad." said Luna sadly, yet serenely.

"That would be a very bad thing." said Fred with a smile.

Neville laughed along with most of the other students.

"Very good! Nev, you win a Kewpie doll!" said Fred he took a cup and transfigured it into a small, winged, baby-like doll.

Neville took it graciously. “Thank you, thank you...but this thing's a little creepy.”

“Yeah, Muggles come up with the creepiest things.” said George.

“You should see Cabbage Patch dolls, those will give you nightmares.” muttered Lionus.
"It actually is, it's really important." said Fred.

"Say what? You were going to fight them?" asked Tonks incredulously.

"I don't think they meant that you fight them!" moaned Bill.

"No offense, Neville, but I'd love to see you or anyone try and stop one of Harry's kicks." said Ron with a smirk.

"Kicks?" asked Kingsley curiously.

"Kicks like a hippogriff, he does." said Ron rubbing his chin. "Says he's been strengthening up his legs for running and other things."

"If he had the spare time, he could win some major awards in kickboxing." said Lionus with a smirk.

"Have you been stalking him or something?" asked Tonks scrutinizing the Ranger Captain.

"You'll find out later." said Lionus with cryptic smile.

"I'm getting tired of that statement and that smile." whispered Tonks to Remus.
"Why did he want her to do something?" asked Lavender indignantly.

"Harry didn't want to hurt Neville, and we really didn't learn any charms or hexes in our classes to knock him out with, he didn't want to let on that he knew a lot more than what Hermione thought he did." said Ron quickly.

Hermione stepped forward. Forty-second paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Forty-third paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Forty-fourth paragraph.

"So you were the one who did it? I would have thought Harry..." said Percy thoughtfully.

“Harry would never hurt Neville.” said Hermione stiffly.

Forty-fifth paragraph.

"I didn't expect you to stand up to me!" said Neville with a small smile. "I wanted you guys to just listen to me and go back to bed."

“Neville...” said Fred.

“They don't listen to teachers...” said George.

“They certainly won't listen to another student.” said the twins together.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Forty-sixth paragraph.

"That's what you get for attacking people." said Fred with mock dignity. "Paranoia."
Forty-seventh paragraph.

"Oh, give her a good kick." moaned George eagerly.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

"He really is a gentleman." said Alicia sighing.

“No, he just didn't want Filch to come tearing after anyone who would dare touch his cat.” said Fred.

End of dialogue set.

The students released a long sigh of relief.

Suddenly crackles and pops could be heard from the bowl. Everyone looked over and saw that there were small sparks coming from the men's heads and their bodies. Finally a loud bang was heard and the bowl overturned itself. The bowl was covering the three men and the sleeping teen, like a retreated turtle.

The bowl, suddenly flipped itself right and Harry stood, his wand pointing straight ahead of him looking quickly from side to side.

"What happened?" asked Harry quickly.

"It seems your 'uncles' fought off their calming draughts unintentionally." said Dumbledore with a smile. He magicked the bowl back to where it was, while the men scrambled to stand. "It was an odd time to do it though. I would have thought that it would have happened during a more hazardous part."

"Him almost getting caught might have been the twig that broke the hippogriff's back." said Luna dreamily.

"Sorry about that." said Sirius scratching and rubbing the back of his head, looking embarrassed.

Forty-eighth paragraph.

"Nice." said Dr. Clark smiling and shaking his head and rubbing his now bruised side.

"You still like him don't you?" said Sirius, looking at him in wonder. He conjured up an icepack and placed it lightly against the bump on his head.

Dialogue set.
"He always had a fascination for rhymes." said Remus shaking his head and massaging his shoulder.

Forty-ninth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Fiftieth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

The entire school went quiet.

"That....is....AWESOME!" yelled Fred.

"Why didn't we think of that?" said Sirius angrily.

"If your father were here, he'd be doing backflips. His son, a true prankster." said Remus a tear in his eye.

Fifty-first paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"Geez, I really wish we had thought of it." pouted Sirius.

Dialogue line.

Fifty-second paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"More than just brilliant." said Sirius proudly.

Fifty-third paragraph.

"Oh yeah, Stone's safe alright." said Dean rolling his eyes.

Dialogue line.
"Don't you dare leave him alone." said Remus growling. "Better yet, don't go in there."

"Should I break the news to him?" said Harry to Ron and Hermione in a serious tone.

"What?" said Remus hurriedly.

"We go in there." said Harry teasingly.

"I don't need to be teased right now." said Remus angrily.

"Just thought I'd raise your spirits, can't happen now I guess." said Harry rolling his eyes.

"Well, at least you don't get killed right on the spot." Seamus laughed weakly.

"Definitely wasn't Snape then, he's not a harp kinda guy." muttered Sirius with a small smile.

"Definitely not." drawled Snape.

"Actually that was the first time I played the flute, I've played it almost once a week ever since." said Harry with a large smile.

"Well that was kinda easy." said Dennis eagerly.

"Yeah...easy..." groaned the three fifth years rolling their eyes.
"Didn't need to tell me twice." said Harry with a smile.

"Be careful now." moaned Mr. Weasely, who was consoling his wife, who was crying loudly once again.

"I think 'Ladies first' doesn’t apply to this, Mr. Weasely." said Dumbledore with a small smile.

"Don't blame you." said Ginny.

"Oh, no!" moaned Mrs. Weasley.

"Don't tell me you volunteered to be the first one to drop!" groaned Dr. Clark.

"You were doing pretty good about being in charge, Ron." said Harry with smile.
I wouldn't fall down that." said Fred with a shudder.

"You that's some upper body strength, Harry." whistled Lee.

"It's just he's so light." growled Madam Pomfrey.

Several people gasped loudly. Mrs. Weasely took a tighter hold of her husband and moaned.

"Flump?" asked Sirius, who was covering his eyes, peeked through his fingers.

"Hey," said George.

"We didn't write it." said Fred defensively.

"Oh dear." whispered Professor Sprout in horror, she knew what it was that Harry landed on.

"Oh dear, oh dear." moaned Professor Sprout.

No it's not! thought Professor Sprout frantically.
"Good idea to ask, once you've already landed in it." said Charlie with a small laugh.

"How did you get the flute back?" asked Luna.

"I had to go back several days later and get it." said Harry simply.

"What did you use to put the dog to sleep?" asked Luna.

"I sang that time." said Harry with an embarrassed smile.

"What song?" asked Cho eagerly.

"I don't want to say, you lot might ask me to sing it." said Harry quickly.

"Dear lord, now what?" cried Tonks.

"What the hell is that thing?" yelled Bill.

"It's Devil's Snare!" cried Professor Sprout.

"What the....dear god...." moaned Charlie.
"Well, Harry wasn't too nervous about being in that predicament." said Luna calmly.

"How do you know?" asked Hannah anxiously.

"He was still examining his surroundings." said Luna dreamily.

Hermione opened and closed her mouth several times. Then she looked over to Harry slowly.

"Could you have saved us?" she said faintly.

"Only if you couldn't." said Harry quietly. "And only in the beginning."

"Bill! I'm fine!" shouted Ron as his oldest brother enveloped him in a tight hug.

"FIRE! LIGHT A GOD-DAMNED FIRE!" shouted Remus.

"HURRY UP! HARRY'S GOING TO DIE!" shouted Dr. Clark.

"SO IS RON!" yelled Bill.

"It was the only hint I could cough up." said Harry simply. "And I'm not too sure I would have been able to help at that point." he said humbly.

"Have you gone mad? Are you a witch or not?" shouted Malfoy loudly.
Ron and Malfoy groaned loudly. The school, despite the danger happening in the book, couldn't help but give a small laugh.

"At least that obstacle is conquered. Please tell me that is the hardest one." pleaded Sirius.

"Um...one of the five hardest ones." said Harry carefully.

"Five?" said Sirius, then he ticked off the challenges that he remembered Hagrid mentioning earlier in the book. "Out of seven challenges? Well, the odds aren't with you at all then." he finished, his face was ghostly pale.

"Lucky you don't lose your head when you're in danger, boy." said Lionus with a smile.

Lionus laughed out loud while Ron blushed.

"Seems like the some children aren't completely hopeless." said Lionus with a laugh.

"Not much choice in direction." said Harry with a smile.

"Wondered why you told us to walk quieter, and why you kept putting you hand down on the ground....why did you put your hand on the ground by the way?" asked Ron questioningly.

"I was feeling for vibrations, if something large was stomping around down the way, I wanted to know about it. BEFORE we stumbled on it." said Harry calmly.
"Who said what?" asked Ginny inquisitively.

Harry, Ron and Hermione looked between each other.

"Ron said the ghost one I think." said Harry thoughtfully.

Hermione paused. "Harry said the one about the wings."

"And Hermione," said Ron. "noticed the light."

"What the heck are you supposed to do with the birds?" asked Blaise curiously.

"They aren't birds." said Harry with a pensive look.

"Why do you keep insisting on going first?" said Remus with a large sigh.

"Thankfully." sighed Sirius.

"Go figure." said Angelina.

"Alohomora Charm should open it up!" said Colin excitedly.
"Oh, never mind then." said Colin sadly.

"That challenge is designed to keep them there forever, until they give up completely." said Flitwick.

"That is the one thing about humans that I cannot possibly understand. Flying, I like to keep all four hooves on the ground." said Firenze.

"I find flying invigorating, actually." said Tempest with a smirk.

"How can, um....you fly?" asked Ernie, hoping not to sound insulting.

She gazed at him, then snapped her fingers. A large pair of white, feathered wings emerged from the sides of her Irish cob body. She smiled smugly at the shocked looks on students, and other guests.

"Where did you get the wings?" asked Firenze weakly.

"Rangers, who take the rank of lieutenant or higher, have the option of undergoing surgery. Some have their bodies altered, things taken, or added. My wings are invisible for the most part." said Tempest caressing her wings. "Took seven months of painful training to get my wings strong enough to lift me off the ground. I don't stop training them either, they can now take me on flights that last more than twelve hours at a time."

"Wow..." said a few students.
"Hmmm....maybe I should have changed the color of the key." said Flitwick thoughtfully.

"That complicates things a bit." said Dr. Clark with a worried look.

"That seems to be the one." said Charlie.

"Seems my challenge didn't slow down the villain at all." said Flitwick sadly.

"Well that didn't work very well." said Remus with a small smile.

"You looked like a flipping comet chasing after that thing." said Ron, cheering along with the rest of the school.

Harry stood up and walked over to Dumbledore and whispered in his ear: "How did you get past all the challenges so quickly, sir?" Harry asked.

"I didn't need to complete any of them, I merely radiated my aura and made all the enchantments, flora and fauna shrink back." whispered Dumbledore back, smiling brightly.

"Cheater." said Harry with a fake pout.
"They normally have faces." said Ron quietly.

"Oh dear! If it's Wizard Chess...." moaned Mrs. Weasely.

"I hate to tell you this ma'am, but that definitely means it's Wizard Chess." said Lionus to Mrs. Weasely carefully.

Professor Snape had to hand Mr. Weasely a calming draught for his wife.

"Trust me, we weren't offended. Neither one of us could ever hope to beat you in chess, we were happy to let you take over." said Harry and Hermione with broad smiles.
If I knew more about chess, I could figure out if Harry was in a good position or not. thought Dr. Clark fretfully.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"You always loved that piece, you always have him win the whole game." said Bill with a smile.

"Not always." said Ron carefully.

Eighty-sixth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Eighty-seventh paragraph.

Eighty-eighth paragraph.

"Sorry, Ron. I should have had more faith in you." said Harry apologetically.

"Don't worry mate, it's one thing to play Wizard Chess while you are just directing them where to go. It's another thing competely to be one of the pieces." said Ron wisely.

Dialogue line.

Eighty-ninth paragraph.

Mrs. Weasely whimpered. The Calming Draught was working hard to keep her quiet.

Dialogue line.

Nintieth paragraph, second sentence.

"Oh, no..." moaned Mrs. Weasely into her husband's shirt.

Nintieth paragraph, third sentence.

"At least you were keeping track of them. You must have had several things attracting your attention." said Dumbledore approvingly.
"Just barely got to them in time." mumbled Ron humbly.

End of nintieth paragraph.

"GO RON!" cheered the twins, Ron's ears went a bright red.

Dialogue line.

Ninety-first paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"WHAT? NO, RON!" shouted the twins when they reread the last thing Ron had said.

"Ronald Bilius Weasley, Don't you dare!" shouted Mrs. Weasely crying loudly. Her Calming Draught breaking down at last.

Professor Snape looked at his phials of remaining Calming Draught. "I'm going to have to rebrew more. These aren't as strong as I thought they were."

"How can you even think about letting yourself be taken!" shrieked Ginny. "You're going to get hurt!" she clamped her hands together in a pleading way.

"It's chess! You've got to let pieces get taken, that's the only way you win!" said Ron loudly.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"Oh, Ron." moaned Remus. "I'm going to say the same thing to you, I have the unsettling feeling that I'm going to say to Harry about a hundred times. Please don't do anything dangerous ever again."

"Um...from now on? Or from this point in the book, on?" asked Ron innocently.

Remus groaned. I don't need to hear that." he said shaking his head. Mrs. Weasely wimpered again.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.
"Harry would have come up with a plan!" said Colin eagerly.

"Not really, I suck at chess. If Ron couldn't figure out a way to save all three of us. What hope did I have?" said Harry plainly.

"Oh, Ron! You're so noble!" cooed Lavender.

Mr. and Mrs. Weasely stood up quickly and took their youngest son into a great hug. Bill was rocking back and forth his arms clamped together, knuckles whitened. Charlie was staring at Ron, making sure that Ron didn't suddenly disappear, or fade away. Fred and George gulped loudly and kept looking at their brother, with new respect in their eyes. Ginny started shaking so horribly that Harry had to get up out of the bowl and wrapped an arm around her.

"Get back here." said Sirius, who was pale.

"What about Ginny?" asked Harry, a little short-tempered.

"Bring her over." said Sirius simply.

Harry helped Ginny to her feet and while the men in the bowl shifted themselves. Sirius moved over so Harry could sit beside him, and Ginny sat beside Harry.

"You two dating yet?" asked Dr. Clark, with a mischievous smile, but like the other three, he was still pale.

"When have I had time to ask her out?" said Harry with raised eyebrows.

"What's stopping you from asking her now?" said Sirius with a small smile.

Harry stared at him, and then picked up Ginny's hand. It was trembling. "I'll wait till after this book is done."

Harry magicked the phoenix blanket over to him and he draped it over her and himself. Ginny didn't even notice Harry pulling her close. When she did take notice, she gave Harry a weak smile and they both held hands under the covers.

"You mess with her...." warned Fred, noticing where his sister was sitting.

"I wouldn't dare, I actually like living." said Harry with a smile. "But let's get back to Ron."
The good mood was immediately squashed. Mrs. Weasely moaned in her son's red hair.

"That was all that was wrong with him." said Madam Pomfrey. "A slight concussion, and a bruise or two. He was all right after an hour of sleep in the hospital wing, Molly." She succeeded in trying to calm the woman's fears.

"I remember Harry having to shout at me, I wanted to go and see to Ron, but he reminded me that we were still playing." said Hermione quietly.

"You didn't even check to see if he was alright?" screeched Mrs. Weasely. Hermione and Harry shuffled their feet guiltily. Ron quickly came to their defense:

"Mom! I was fine! I told them to leave me and go! If they hadn't I would of been pissed at them. We needed to save the Stone." said Ron angrily

"At least they just didn't take off, mom and not give him a second thought." said Fred, trying to calm his angry mother.
Ninety-seventh paragraph.

Ninety-eighth paragraph.

Sirius sighed with relief, "Well, that was easy, whoever is..........", he suddenly stopped. "The person after the stone is still ahead." he finished quietly.

Fred and George just about dropped the book. They hadn't thought of that.

Ginny looked up at Harry quickly. "Do you get out of it alright."

"I get out just fine. I'm right here, aren't I?" he said with a smile.

Two pairs of eyes stared angrily at the two of them in the bowl. Not so much towards the young man, but the young girl with him. Cho and a fourth year Gryffindor were far from happy.

Dialogue line.

Ninety-ninth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

One hundredth paragraph, second sentence.

"That's a Teleportal fire. Step in that, without the proper potion and you'll just be dropped right back into that same room. Only you'll be dropped from a height of ten feet." said Bill quietly.

One hundredth paragraph, third sentence.

"Don't touch that one! Touching that fire will kill you! Unless you have the proper potion, but you guys didn't know that was down there! How can you possibly get through?" cried Bill loudly.

“How the hell do you know what the fires are?” asked Fred.

“How common are purple and black fires?” said Bill impatiently.

End of one hundredth paragraph.

"You really are!” moaned Charlie, his brother Bill was shaking violently.

Dialogue line.

Potion riddle.

"Wow! I don't think I can figure it out without looking at the bottles!” whistled Terry.
"Who figured this one out?" asked Neville.

"It'll tell you." said Harry with a smile.

One hundred and first paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"I may be slightly book smart, I have no logic skills. I'm good when it comes to practical obstacles, I'm good. Words on paper however....leave me out of it. I tried my hand at it before she answered. I would have killed us both I think." said Harry with a weak laugh.

"Which ones did you pick out to be the ones that would send us on?" asked Hermione.

"Middle one and the first one, I think it was." said Harry thinking back.

"We would only have had a bottle of nettle wine each to drink with you choosing." said Hermione with a smile.

"PARTY!" yelled the twins. They began to dance in place, however, their mother glared at them so fiercely that they ceased immediately.

Dialogue set.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

One hundred and second paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"Took me a whole month to come up with that riddle and an eleven year old girl solves it, in under a minute!" snarled Professor Snape.

"Don't be too upset, Severus. If you remember, you handed that puzzle and a photograph of the potion bottles to myself, Minerva and Filius. None of us could get the correct answer in less than two days," said Dumbledore with a smile. "Miss Granger just has a very logical mind, and she was twelve, not eleven."

Hermione blushed heavily.

“Makes no difference.” spat Snape.

One hundred and third paragraph.

Dialogue line.
"My escape plan for her and Ron kept changing with each passing room." said Harry with a slight smile.

"What about your escape plan?" asked Sirius quickly.

"I thought I could hold him off from using the Stone. At least until Dumbledore would arrive." said Harry honestly. "And I would leave with Dumbledore."

"Did he leave with you?" asked Remus.

"He did." said Dumbledore choosing his words carefully.

Snape stared at him, Snape knew it wasn't him that was after the Stone, of course. But Potter....despite knowing that he couldn't contend against a Dark Wizard (as Potter thought he was) he still went on alone. Not, taking Miss Granger so that he may show off in front of her, but sending her out of harm's way. He had seriously misjudged Harry Potter.

Dumbledore looked down sadly. He knew Harry didn't mean that.

"What the...?" said George looking between the two of them.

"Read on." said Harry.

"Aww tender moment, before more horrible things happen." said Fred.
"Sounds like a plot to a play doesn't it?" smiled George condescendingly.

Dialogue line.

"She can never be as good a wizard as you." said Ginny brightly.

"Why do you say that?" said Harry confused.

"She's not a boy." said Ginny with a smile. Hermione laughed loudly, as did the rest of the girls in the Great Hall. Even Tempest laughed gaily, she laughed harder when she saw Harry blushing heavily.

Dialogue set, fourth sentence.

"I didn't catch on to what you realized, Ginny!" said Hermione still laughing.

Dialogue set, fifth sentence, eighth word.

"She has a point, Harry. You knew more about friendship and bravery than any other eleven year old I had ever seen. And more importantly, you were never taught those things." said Dumbledore happily.

"I was shown what both of those things." said Harry quietly. "Officer McFinn showed me."

"It's one thing to be taught, another thing entirely to put it into practice." said Firenze wisely.

End of dialogue set.

"Worry wart. Harry's always careful!" said George.

"Except for when he's in danger." added Fred.

"Which is all the time." said George.

"So....nope your right, better warn him to be careful." said both the twins with large grins on their faces.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.
"So Potter, you knew the potion required to get past the purple flames has a twenty second time limit." said Snape with widened eyes.

"I had read about transporting flames." said Harry with a smile. "And not the Floo Powder kind."

"Yeah, yeah, we already established the fact that I was Drama King." said Harry with a smile.

"Who was it?" asked several fourth years and under gasped. The adults leaned forward in their chairs and eagerly waited for the twins to say who it was.

"It doesn't say. It's in the next chapter, I guess." said George.

"So who wants to read it now?" asked Fred eagerly.

No one wanted to read, they didn't want to be the one reading what might happen.

"I think I will read." said the Ranger Doctor.

He walked over and took the book from the twins.

He walked back to his chair and read the chapter title aloud.

"Chapter Seventeen."

"Two, what?" asked Sirius. He stared at 'Doc' and then looked to Harry and Ginny. "I'm sorry, but I may be pulling him over here without warning."

"I may be holding onto him too." said Ginny.
"Great, I've always wanted to be used for tug-of-war." said Harry rolling his eyes.
The Ranger Doctor read the first sentence of the chapter and smiled.

“Saw that coming.” he smirked.

First paragraph.

"Him?” said several students and guests.

"It was.” said Dumbledore quietly.

"He helped protect the stone! Why?” shrieked Mrs. Weasely.

"I think it will all become clear in due time.” said Dumbledore.

"If he hurts you, we'll kill him.” growled Sirius and Remus.

Dialogue line.

Second paragraph.

"What? He wasn't twitching?” said Fred in amazement.

"It can't be him.” said George.

"It was him.” said Dumbledore just as quiet as before.

Dialogue line.

"So he was waiting for you.” said Sirius worriedly.

“But, how could he been waiting for him?” asked Remus.

“It appears, that he knew Harry and his friends were piecing the puzzle together.” said Dumbledore.
Snape scowled at the book. Dumbledore didn't mention that Quirrell had mocked and insulted him. He wished that he himself were down there to greet the Defense teacher. He would have hexed him until he was a quivering mass.

There was so much evidence against Professor Snape, it didn't even register that someone else could be the one behind it all." said Harry.

“It must be easier when you read it instead of living it.” said Lionus with a smirk.

“You knew?” said Professor Lupin.

“It’s what we get paid to do. See things that go unnoticed.” said Nightstrike.

Lionus chuckled to himself. It also helps that we were monitoring the school.

"No I didn't." said Snape tiredly.

"He was trying to save Harry?” said Sirius stunned.

"That he was." said Dumbledore.

"I wouldn't believe it either." said Sirius with a small smile.

"To take the Slytherin opposition out?" said Fred innocently. Trying to lighten the mood, but he failed.
Dialogue set, fifth sentence.

"I always feel safer knowing Dumbledore is nearby." said Harry with a small smile.

"Yet, he's the one that puts you in danger." said Remus with a scowl.

"That was the only time, Remus, that I actually gave him the tools and the means of doing something dangerous. I think you will realize that." said Dumbledore.

"What about last year then?" said Remus angrily.

"That was a magical contract." said Harry loudly. "There was nothing he could do. Trust me; I pleaded with him to get me out of it."

End of dialogue set.

Sirius gripped Harry tightly about the shoulders, while Ginny squeezed Harry's hand.

Mrs. Weasely looked over to Harry in horror.

Fourth paragraph.

"NO!" yelled Sirius and Dr. Clark. Remus clutched at his throat.

Dialogue line.

"He was going to save a friend from a stupid troll!" yelled Fred.

Dialogue line.

"He let it in?" asked George weakly.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

"That isn't a special gift, all you did was knock the stupid thing out." snarled Charlie.
"Wow, you go, Professor Snape!" said a small first year Gryffindor.

"Yeah! You're so cool!" said another first year Gryffindor.

Professor Snape stared at the two first years, eyes wide and mouth slackened.

Dumbledore smiled brightly over at him.

"Thanks to Ron." said Harry with a smile.

Snape growled threateningly.

"What mirror?" asked Dr. Clark.

"OH, SHIT!" yelled Bill. "Harry! Don't look at it! You'll get distracted again!"

"I don't get distracted this time, I don't even see my family this time." said Harry with the same small smile that he had had on his face since the beginning of the chapter.

"That's true, who else would use a mirror that drives you nuts?" said Sirius shaking his head, but pulling Harry close to him.

"That's what you think." said Dumbledore and Harry at the same time.
"No! Don't do that!" moaned Mr. Weasely.

"Why not, dad? If it keeps the Stone away from him..." said George curiously.

"He's dangerous! If Harry ticks him off, or distracts him too much, he could just kill him outright!" cried Tonks answering for Mr. Weasely.

"Harry....don't distract him!" moaned Sirius. "I don't want him to hurt you!"

"So....He WAS in on it..." said Madam Bones quietly,

"NO, HE...." shouted Fudge, but was silenced by Nightstrike fingering his sword.

"He's starting to be enthralled with the mirror." said Tempest wisely.

"You know of it?" asked Charlie stunned.

"There is no magical object that we don't know about." said Lionus calmly.

Ginny whimpered slightly. Harry had to lean over and whisper in her ear. "I'm alright; I get out of it ok."

"No you don't!" said Katie shrilly.
"That seems to be true." said Neville. "He picks on you more than he picks on me."

"They most certainly did." said Remus thoughtfully, yet still panicking. "Though I can't remember what really made them hate each other, right off the bat."

"Sometimes, I wonder though..." said Harry quietly with a faint smile.

"Why do you say that, Potter?" said McGonagall taken aback.

"You'll find out in the fourth book, I think." said Harry.

"That's what I thought too." said Seamus.

"He was in the room with him?" asked Moody quickly.

"Thank god you didn’t go through that ajar door, then. If you had..." said Angelina faintly.

"Going through that door wouldn't have done anything." said Harry with another small smile.

"Say what?" asked Bill.
"There is good and there is evil. Sadly, some people sit in a gray area, in between the two." said Dumbledore quietly.

"The Dursleys are evil." muttered Katie.

"I think they fit in the gray area." said Harry absently.

"Bull." said the three Gryffindor Chasers sharply.

"I agree with the girls." said Dr. Clark sternly.

"How were you to know he was the one after the Stone?" asked Hermione. "He was right! Who would consider him a threat?"

"If he breaks it, the Stone is lost forever. Never to appear in this world again." said Dumbledore. “Break it then.” said Sirius.

"Wow, Harry. That was some fast thinking!" said Tonks.

"Good luck with that." said Fred.
Fred and George snorted loudly.

"What's so funny?" shrieked Mrs. Weasely.

"The mental picture of Harry tied up and falling over." said Fred quickly, he began to laugh out loud.

"Sorry, Harry. But it sounds hilarious!" said George wiping a tear from his eye.

"I almost started laughing when I fell actually. I had to stop myself." said Harry.

“So you weren’t, all together, that much worried?” said Remus his eyebrows raised.

“I was worried, but I knew there was help coming.” said Harry honestly.

End of thirteenth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"Don't tell me he was there." moaned Remus standing up and walking behind the bowl. He placed a hand on Harry's right shoulder.

Fourteenth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"No...no...don't...." moaned Remus again.

Fifteenth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Sixteenth paragraph.

"RUN!" yelled the inhabitants of the Great Hall.

Dialogue line.

Seventeenth paragraph.

"What made you walk towards him?" yelled Sirius.

"I'm not too sure." said Harry thoughtfully.
"You can't lie, we already established that! You're a horrible liar." said George clapping his hand to his forehead.

"If he does anything...." snarled Dr. Clark.

"What do you mean?" said Harry curiously.

"If he molests you down there..." said Dr. Clark darkly.

Harry turned and stared at Dr. Clark, “No…no one touched me, not him, not anyone. I didn’t need that image in my head, thank you very much!” he shook his head furiously.

But Dr. Clark only looked at him with a confused look. Why did he say that? He had an episode years ago, sure he never touched him but....did he forget about it?

The Ranger's doctor looked at the pair of them, his face unreadable.

"Oh...that was a bad move, Potter." said Lionus looking over to Harry.

"Why?" asked Ron quickly.

"It makes him a target, all it would take now to get the Stone is to either incapacitate or kill an eleven year old boy." said Tempest plainly.

Remus' nails dug into Harry's flesh. When Harry flinched, Sirius shoved the hand off Harry's shoulder.

Remus looked at Sirius quickly, Sirius pulled Harry’s shirt down a little and he saw the marks dug into the alabaster skin, and the small crescent moons of blood that showed. Remus blanched, and then whispered an apology to Harry. Harry merely waved the apology away.
The twins stared at the book. "...that was actually a pretty good lie..." said Fred.

Twenty-first paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"Don't turn your back on him, boy." said Moody quickly.

Twenty-second paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"Oh, crap." moaned Mr. Weasley.

"Is he a ventriloquist or something?" asked Dr. Clark.

"No, the voice belongs to someone else." said Harry plainly.

Dialogue line.

Twenty-third paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Ginny gave a small squeak, while Sirius yelped as if someone had stamped on his animagus form's tail.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Twenty-fourth paragraph, second sentence.

"FOR GOD'S SAKE, MOVE!" yelled McGonagall. She had been silent for a majority of the time, wringing her hands and turning paler and paler.

End of twenty-fourth paragraph.

Twenty-fifth paragraph, first sentence.
"When Harry tries to scream and doesn't. You know that if you were to see it, you'd faint dead away." said George carefully.

End of twenty-fifth paragraph.

"Dear...God...." said Dr. Clark.

"That's Lord Voldemort." said Dumbledore to Dr. Clark, "The....one...who killed Harry's parents."

Dr. Clark sent a distraught look over to Harry, who sat looking forward, not noticing the looks he was receiving.

"What do you have to say now, Minister?" said Harry quietly, eyes closed.

Fudge was sitting and staring at the book in shock. Umbridge merely sniffed and turned her nose upwards. That action earned her a sharp slap to her face.

"Sit and don't make a nuisance of yourself." snarled Nightstrike.

Dialogue line.

Twenty-sixth paragraph.

"I'm guessing you told your friends that you were standing your ground, bravely staring him down." said Professor Snape with a smirk.

"No, he did not!" screeched Hermione.

"He told us he couldn't move he was so scared." said Ron.

Dialogue set, fifth pause.

"That was him?" whispered McGonagall. She and Hagrid both paled, they had taken first year students into the forest, where Lord Voldemort himself was hunting and killing unicorns!

End of dialogue set.

"Oh no...He knows..." moaned Charlie.

Twenty-seventh paragraph.
"LIAR!" shouted Sirius and Remus. "THEY DIDN'T BEG! DON'T LISTEN TO HIM!"

"I know they didn't, trust me, I know." said Harry quietly.

"How could you know?" said Fudge suspiciously.

"The Dementors you sent to the school two years ago." said Harry plainly.

"Him smiling, is not a good thing." said Flitwick faintly.

"That's a lie, if he did, he'd like Harry." said Neville jokingly. Instead of laughs he received only stares.

"Don't do it, Harry!" shouted Bill.

"Good lad!" said Lionus, the Doctor, Tempest, and Nightstrike. The Aurors nodded in approval. "You'd make a fine Ranger, boy." said Lionus with a smile.

"Or Auror." added Madame Bones quickly.

"If he touches the flame now, what would have happened?" asked Colin.

"It would have sent them straight to Dumbledore's office. And placing them in a full-body bind." said Snape. "You only die if you wish to go forward without a potion, not backwards."
"Wha’ happened?" asked Lee in shock.

"How the hell did that happen?" asked Terry.

"NO!" yelled Sirius.

"GET OFF HIM!" shouted Remus.

"NO! NO, PLEASE!" cried Dr. Clark.

"HARRY!" shouted Sirius.

"I'm right here!" said Harry turning Sirius' face to look at his own. "I'm right here." he said quietly. He took ahold of Remus' hand with his other hand, letting go of Ginny's hand, and gave it a squeeze. "Both of you need to settle down, you too." he said including Dr. Clark in his scolding.
"Good instincts." said Kingsley wiping the sweat off his brow.

Thirty-second paragraph.

"Alright! Harry can fight back!" said Fred excitedly.

"Why didn’t you use your wand?" asked Moody.

"I didn’t think I could beat him with what spells I learned. To be perfectly honest, I was scared." said Harry quietly.

Thirty-third paragraph, second sentence, third dash.

"Hold on, Harry!" shouted George.

End of thirty-third paragraph.

"What?" asked George looking confused.

Harry looked to Dumbledore who smiled, and nodded.

Thirty-fourth paragraph.

"Oh no, Harry..." said Mrs. Weasely faintly.

Sirius and Remus stared fearfully at the book in the Ranger’s hands.

Thirty-fifth paragraph, second sentence.

"What’s the Snitch doing there?" asked Seamus.

"It wasn't the Snitch." said Harry.

End of thirty-fifth paragraph.

"What?" What are you going on about?" asked Zacharias.
Thirty-sixth paragraph.

"Are you stoned or something?" asked Dean wonderingly.

"No, he wasn't." said Dumbledore with a smile.

Thirty-seventh paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"The way I woke up that afternoon was a lot better than the way I would wake up at the Dursleys'." said Harry brightly.

"Getting ice cold water dumped on you at three in the morning is a better way of waking up, then what your Aunt Petunia does." said Fred shaking his head.

Thirty-eighth paragraph.

"You just about climbed out of the bed and lunged yourself at me." said Dumbledore with a small smile.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"So does that mean he's in the hospital wing?" asked a second year Hufflepuff.

"Yeah, and you don't want to tick off, the school nurse, just agree with whatever she says." said George warningly.

Thirty-ninth paragraph.

"I didn't expect to see candy." said Harry shaking his head.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

"Ain't that the truth." said Lee with a broad smile.
"FRED, GEORGE! I SAID: DON'T BLOW UP TOILETS!" yelled Mrs. Weasely.

"But, mom!" whined George.

“We wanted to make him feel better!” whined Fred.

"Dang, so you never did get it." said Fred disappointed.

"What did you think of the toilet seat we sent you, Ginny?" asked George, walking over and whispering into her ear.

"It's hanging in my room. Right behind the door, so mom doesn't see it." said Ginny, trying not laugh out loud.

Sirius and Remus moaned, whined, groaned and held onto Harry tightly.

“Why are you upset now?” asked Harry.

“Three days with Madam Pomfrey means that you were really bad.” said Sirius. Dr. Clark paled.

They were three very long, and very agonizing days. thought Dumbledore.

"Not nearly as worried as Dumbledore was." said Ron quietly to Hermione.

"He never is when he's worried about something." said Neville.
"At least before he passed out." said Dumbledore quickly to the furious glares sent in his direction.

"Oh! So the person yelling 'Harry' was you, sir?" asked Colin eagerly.

Dumbledore merely nodded.

Sirius, Remus and Dr. Clark were completely silent.

"What do you mean, 'effort nearly killed him'?" asked Remus in barely a whisper.

Little balls of light came popping out of the book in the Doctor's hands.

"Didn't we already do one of these today?" asked Lionus, slightly confused.

"Scattered Shots can sometimes happen multiple times in a day as the books progress. Scrolls only happen once every twenty four hours, at this point anyway, as the books progress they will become more numerous." said an Unspeakable.

After the now familiar spinning and shattering was completed and the balls found their way into each reader's chest, they found themselves down in an open, yet frightfully dark chamber. In the center of the room, they saw Harry holding on tightly to the Defense Against the Dark Arts teacher of four years past.

Sirius rushed forward and tried his best to grab ahold of the man who dared to hurt his cub. But his clawing hands fell on empty space.
They all saw the face behind Professor Quirrell's own burnt face give him orders to kill the boy hanging on for dear life. All the students and a few of the guests screamed when they saw it, while Mrs. Weasley just about fainted dead away.

"Don't you dare!" shouted Dr. Clark to Professor Quirrell.

"We've already been through this part." said Harry quietly.

"Yeah, well, we weren't standing here watching it happen!" said Sirius loudly.

Younger Harry's head was hung backwards, his eyes were squeezed tightly shut and his teeth were gritted in pain. They heard a loud bang and saw another Dumbledore come running down the stairs and shouting Harry's name.

"So that was you, sir." said Colin, staring at his wounded and blinded hero.

He disarmed Quirrell and wrenched the man's arms away from Harry. As if in slow motion, Harry fell to the ground, his hand limply holding the much sought after stone.

Sirius, Remus and Dr. Clark clutched at the present-day Harry, and not relinquishing their hold.

Quirrell screamed as Harry's hold on him was removed, and then some sort of mist came from his mouth. As the mist left him, his skin began to dry and cling to his bones. His eyes bulged out of their sockets and his hands flew to his throat.

"That's disgusting." said Fred and George weakly.

The Watchers and the Dumbledore of the past stared in horror and shock as the mist left the poor man's body completely. Quirrell crumpled to the ground his arm slowly raised and tried to reach out to the vapor above him, but his arm fell and his breath was reduced to a weak shudder. The vapor hissed at him, and then tried to waft quickly over to the fallen first year. Dumbledore casted a spell over Harry, covering him with a shimmering veil of light. Try as it might, the vapor couldn't penetrate the veil.

"You will never have him Tom." said the Dumbledore of years past, the twinkling lights in his eyes gone. "Not so long as I live."

The vapor hissed viciously, it then disappeared out the door and through the flames.

Dumbledore dispersed the veil and bent low over the unconscious child, the boy looked as he was merely sleeping on the cold stone.

"Harry? Harry, it's over, wake up." said Dumbledore, giving the boy's shoulder a shake. The moment he touched him he pulled back slightly. "Why are you so cold, Harry? Harry? HARRY!" yelled Dumbledore shaking Harry harder.
"Oh, no!" moaned Sirius. Mrs. Weasely came rushing over to the present day Harry and held onto him just as tightly as the three men were.

The scene shifted forward and they saw Madam Pomfrey covering Ron, who had fallen asleep, with a warm blanket. The door to the Hospital Wing burst open and Dumbledore came running towards the Medi-witch with Harry hanging limply in his arms.

"Poppy! Poppy, Please!" cried Dumbledore hurriedly. "It's Harry, he's...." he laid the pale and lifeless body down on a nearby bed.

"I didn't hear all this, must've been the potion she gave me." said Ron quietly.

Fudge merely stared in shock down at the injured boy of the past.

Madam Pomfrey quickly rushed over and examined him, as she did, her face turned from worry to absolute horror.

"Poppy, please, please don't tell me..." said Dumbledore weakly. "Don't tell me he's gone."

"Not yet, but I don't know how much longer he's going to last." said Madam Pomfrey, waving her wand over the boy and letting the magical waves wash over his body.

"Is there anything I can do?" said Dumbledore quickly.

"No, there's......what is that thing?" said Madam Pomfrey looking under Harry's eyelids, then looking to the stone, which caught her eye, laying on the table.

"It's the Sorcerer's Stone." said Dumbledore bitterly.

"Give it here!" she quickly, taking it off the table. She took a large glass and placed it down on the side-table, picked up the stone and between her two hands, squeezed it.

Soon, a small trickle of golden liquid fell from the Stone and began to pool into the glass. When the glass was almost a fourth of the way full, she stopped squeezing and placed the stone back down. She picked the glass up and lifted Harry's limp head.

"Open his mouth!" ordered Madam Pomfrey to Dumbledore. He stood up and gently opened the boy's mouth. Madam Pomfrey poured the liquid slowly into the boy's slightly opened mouth, a faint breath escaped but it was labored, and shallow. With the help of Madam Pomfrey's wand, the liquid was swallowed down.

"Now what?" said Dumbledore anxiously.

"You really are shaken up, aren't you? You should know what that was." said Madam Pomfrey with a dry chuckle. "Now he rests, he's going to be just fine. He'll be sore and very weak for a while, and magically drained for a month or two, but fine. Good thing that stone is here, without it..." she said wiping her wet eyes on a handkerchief.

"Thank goodness....thank goodness." whispered Dumbledore, burying his eyes into Harry's messy
The balls of light left their bodies and they once again found themselves in Great Hall. They all turned and looked at Harry, who felt his abdomen.

"I drank Elixir of Life?" he said weakly.

"It was the only thing that kept you from dying that night." said Madam Pomfrey sadly.

It was several moments till 'Doc' cleared his throat and continued on with the reading.

End of dialogue set.

"Destroyed?" asked Fred and George quietly in unison.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set, third sentence.

"It only took us about three-quarters of a year." said Ron with a smirk.

End of dialogue set.

"Little chat?" said Dr. Clark. "How do you have a little chat with that topic? 'Sorry Nicolas, someone tried to steal the thing you spent so long to create, so you're going to have to destroy it and die'?"

"It didn't quite go like that, Sam," said Dumbledore with a small smile. "more along the lines of just showing the disastrous effects of protecting a stone such as that."

"What did you show him?" asked Tonks questioningly.

"Harry, unconscious in the hospital wing. Once he saw you Harry and heard what had placed you in that condition, he destroyed it right then and there." said Dumbledore.

Dialogue line.

"You're in the hospital wing, and you don't even give a damn about what is wrong with you?" said Charlie stunned.

"I was more concerned about someone dying because of me." said Harry sadly.

"It wasn't because of you, it was because of Voldemort that Nicolas had to remove that path of empowerment." said Dumbledore giving Harry a reassuring smile.
"And you were the last person to drink straight from that stone," said Dumbledore with a small smile. "Speaking of their affairs, I fear that I have not told you, though it was my duty to do so as the executor of his will, they left all their wealth and possessions to you."

Harry looked quickly over to Dumbledore. "What?" he said in barely a whisper.

"They had no children and obviously, no living relatives. They had no one to give their assets to. Also, it was Nicolas' way of apologizing, for being the cause of someone almost taking your life. Also, there is a trust fund for Mr. Weasley and Miss Granger, about a million galleons each."

"Huh?" said Ron staring at Dumbledore. Hermione's mouth slackened and hung loosely open.

"It will be available to you the year after you graduate from Hogwarts. Giving you a large head start in your future careers," said Dumbledore with a broad smile.

"Why? Why did he give us..." said Hermione weakly.

"For your participation in trying to save the Stone as well." said Dumbledore with a smile.

"Wonderful Ron! You'll be financially secure for many many years." said Mr. Weasley patting his son's back. "I wish I could thank them."

"He'll be secure," said Fred.

"So long as he doesn't blow it all." said George.

"You know, you should invest it." said Percy helpfully.

He flinched when all of his younger brothers and sister turned and glared at him.

"To anyone but you, I think, it's incredible." said Bill shaking his head.

"That's an odd way of looking at it, but then again, being a doctor, I don't always see people die peacefully." said Dr. Clark thinking carefully.

"Who do you mostly treat, Dr. Clark?" asked Hermione, extremely interested, Mr. Weasley also turned and looked over excitedly.

"I'm an E.R. surgeon." said Dr. Clark with a smile.
“E.R.?” said Mr. Weasley confusedly.

“Emergency Room.” said Dr. Clark.

"So you ARE one of the muggle nutters that cut people open? OUCH!" said Ron and then yelped as Hermione elbowed him hard in the ribs.

Dr. Clark, was not insulted however, he merely laughed. "Yeah, Ron, I guess you could call me and my profession that. Especially after what I've seen of magical healing." he said with a smile.

Dialogue set, third sentence.

"Except for the part about it saving Harry's life, correct?" said McGonagall.

"I didn't think that Harry was up to hearing that tale just yet." said Dumbledore sadly.

"I really wasn't, after a while, I just wanted to go back to sleep." said Harry with a smile.

Dialogue set, fifth sentence, first dash.

"Not all of us." said the Rangers, Aurors, and Harry.

"We want it so that there is no more need for us, so we can take it easy." said Lionus, as the other Rangers nodded.

"Same thing with us." said Moody.

Harry said nothing, thinking of his parents, Officer McFinn, Cedric and the end of Voldemort.

End of dialogue set.

"That's true." said Firenze and Tempest together.

Forty-first paragraph.

"You do love to have people think about what you say and then try and come up with a rebuttal.” said McGonagall with a smile.

"And I didn't have one." said Harry with a smile.

Dialogue line.
"How come you don’t stutter over his name, like everyone else?" asked Percy suspiciously.

"We don't worry about him, he's not on our radar." said the Doctor, shrugging.

"He's on our radar now, Doc. He used my squad to try and get the Potter boy. It's personal." said Lionus with a snarl.

"Oh, well, killing him won't take too long now." said Doc shrugging.

"Why didn’t you take him out if he’s no problem?" said Sirius angrily.

"You had the means to take him out, you didn't need us." said Lionus simply.

"Wise words." said Tempest nodding approvingly over to the Headmaster.

"YES HE HAS!" shouted Umbridge. Lionus whipped out his wand and immediately a gag appeared over her mouth and ropes around her wrists, securing her to the chair.

"I'm not ready to go and take care of the paper work just yet, and neither is Nightstrike or Tempest, I shouldn't wonder. So this," he said standing up and walking over to her. He pulled the gag out of her mouth and snapping it back, like a rubber band. "should take care of your bothersome chatter."

Fudge was still staring at Harry in shock, he hadn’t noticed that his colleague was now gagged and bound.

"That was obvious from the Scattered Shot." said Kingsley shuddering; he was remembering what had happened to the unsuspecting Quirrell.

"That was a little promise to myself, that I would not have you do something like this again." said Dumbledore sadly.
"I remember you wincing in pain. I just about summoned Madam Pomfrey." said Dumbledore quietly.

“That is what stopped me dead in my tracks.” said Dumbledore sadly.

"That was a little hint to me that, you weren’t going to tell me much.” said Harry with a small smile.

"A question the whole world would like to know." said Remus.

"I was right." said Harry with a larger smile.

"His famous 'love speech'." said Nightstrike smiling with his eyes looking up at the ceiling.

Sirius smiled broadly with tears in his eyes, he kissed the top of Harry's head.
"Awww!" cooed several girls.

"Wasn't just using it to sneak food." said Remus with a broad smile.

"You still have to keep reminding me of the title in front of his name." said Harry to Dumbledore.

"Bout as true as true can be." said Sirius with a glare towards Snape.

"I don't detest him anymore, at least not really." said Harry quietly. "I just dislike him.”
Sirius shuffled his feet guiltily and chewed his lip.

"Makes sense." said Fred.

"I guess." said George.

"You wanted to find it, and not use it." said Luna dreamily.

Dumbledore smiled brightly at her. "We must have a chat sometime Miss. Lovegood. I think we would have the most stimulating conversations."

Luna looked happily over to the man, “Oh yes sir! I’ve heard that you have a Humroonbow in your office!”

“A Humroonbow, Miss Lovegood?” said Dumbledore with a smile.

“It’s a creature that instills comfort and calmness in a room. They love to be near powerful people.” she said dreamily.

“There might be one in there, if so, it is a very good hider.” said Dumbledore, his eyes twinkling brightly.

"From what I've heard, you have every right to have a high opinion of yourself." said Dr. Clark with a bright smile.

Dumbledore laughed. "Dear me, what has become of my humility? I must get it in check."
Dumbledore continued laughing but now he was burying his face in his hands. "Oh, dear me!" he said still laughing.

"That’s is a very nice way of shutting him up.” said Dr. Clark teasingly.

"If he had another question, I would have answered him.” said Dumbledore brightly.

“And I did have one more, I asked if you were alright.” said Harry with a smile.

“Why would you ask him that?” said Mrs. Weasely.

“You’ll find out real soon.” said Harry with a grin. Dumbledore chuckled.

"Since you had that one, sir, I don't eat them either." said Harry laughing along with Dumbledore. Several students laughed too, along with Mrs. Weasely, who got the answer to her question.

"Nice description of me Mr. Potter.” said Madam Pomfrey smiling.

"I can't really say no to Dumbledore." said Madam Pomfrey smiling.
"Oh no. you've got your mother's cheek! What is living with you going to bring?" said Sirius pretending to look worried.

"Madam Pomfrey said she'd throw us out if we were too rough with you." said Hermione with a small smile.

"I guess we didn't know just how worried." said Ron quietly.

"And we didn't know how close you were to....." said Hermione faintly.

"Well you softened it quite a bit." said Hermione looking over to Harry with a fond smile. "Thanks for that by the way."

"I'm amazed that Madam Pomfrey didn't come and check what was going on." said Ron thinking back.

"I was too busy listening to the story, Mr. Weasely, and I had to barely hold back my scream as well." said Madam Pomfrey defensively.
"Like I said Harry, that one is my favorite phrase to describe my eccentricities." said Dumbledore, smiling towards Ron.

"He was just about as fast a runner as Harry is." said Ron loudly.

"And I swear, I will never do that again." said Dumbledore sadly. "From that point on, I always made sure that I or someone else was within calling distance."

"Made sure? You mean to say that he's gotten into more danger after this?" said Sirius weakly.

"Sort of..." said Harry plainly.

"Damn, that sucks." said Remus sadly.

"Being without a seeker will do that." said Charlie shaking his head.

"The end-of-the-year feasts are always good." said Bill with a smile.
"Story time was over, now it's sleepy time." said Fred in a cutesy voice.

"I'm not too sure what normal is." said Harry with a chuckle.

"They can be! He was fragile!" said Madam Pomfrey ignoring Harry's groan. "He could have been jostled around and injured further!"

"Wonder who it is?" said Ernie.

"That was nice of you Hagrid!" said Mrs. Weasely. She was feeling much better, now that Harry, Ron, and Hermione were out of danger.

"What was wrong, Hagrid?" said Mrs. Weasely confused.

"Whoa! Hagrid never cries, or swears off drinking! Did you really do it?" asked Charlie looking up to Hagrid.

"He did, for quite a while." said Dumbledore kindly.
"That was nice of you, trying to calm him down." said Ginny quietly.

"I was in shock, he was so big, and he was so strong, I didn't know he could cry like that." whispered Harry.

"Dumbledore gave me the go ahead to say it. Before, I was too nervous to say it, just in case someone would get angry at me for saying it." said Harry quietly.

Sirius and Remus thought back to the Dursleys. Sirius growled softly. "Unless you swear, we aren't going to get mad at you." said Remus.

"You're so generous, Harry!" cooed Mrs. Weasely.

"I didn't have my knapsack or anything, or I would have given him some gingerbread, but chocolate made Neville feel better." said Harry, blushing furiously.

"Seems like he's always got something for you." said Remus with a smile.

"I only eat stoats or weasels while I'm in dog form." said Sirius shaking his head.

"Your dog form needs a bath, now that I think about it." said Dr. Clark smirking.

Remus and Harry laughed as Sirius smacked him on head with a cushion.
"Fix what?" asked Dean.

End of dialogue set.

Fifty-sixth paragraph.

"Oh, Hagrid." said Sirius smiling up to Hagrid, Remus was drying his eyes.

"Dumbledore put me in charge of gatherin' it all up." said Hagrid proudly.

Dialogue set, first pause.

"Sorry, Harry, I wasn't one of the people who gave Hagrid photos. But I've got a bunch, all of the ones that Sirius and I took." said Remus sadly.

"Why didn't you send Hagrid any?" asked Ron confused.

"I was abroad. In South America actually." said Remus.

End of dialogue set.

"I loved it, I still love it." said Harry, wiping the tears from his eyes.

Fifty-seventh paragraph.

Fifty-eighth paragraph, second sentence, second comma.

"I wish I did one to look for non-magically caused injuries." said Madam Pomfrey bitterly.

End of fifty-eighth paragraph.

Fifty-ninth paragraph, second sentence.

"Nothing all that different from what happens now." said Harry to himself.

End of fifty-ninth paragraph.

Sixtieth paragraph.
"Whereas with 'The Toad' she has to clear her throat." said Fred with a smirk.

"And still people talk over her." said George with a grin.

Dialogue set, third sentence.

"Nice opening speech." said Dr. Clark laughing heartily.

End of dialogue set.

"We all do try our best to forget everything." said Harry happily.

Dialogue set.

Sixty-first paragraph.

"Took everything I had not to smack you." said Harry over to Draco.

Dialogue line.

"Huh?" asked Sirius and Bill at the same time.

Sixty-second paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"Can he do that?" asked Tonks to McGonagall.

"He can, and for any reason he sees fit. This, as the rest of the teacher (except for Snape) agreed, was a very good reason." said McGonagall.

Dialogue line.

Sixty-third paragraph.

"Gee, thanks mate." said Ron with a raised eyebrow.
"Go Ron!" yelled Charlie and Bill.

"Yeah, if I had known just how difficult it was..." said Percy weakly.

"Were you trying to make a joke? Cause if you did, you did one heck of a job." said Kingsley, trying to hide a smile.

"I had never been awarded points in front of the whole school before." said Hermione trying to defend herself.

"You're narrowing the lead!" yelled Sirius, getting more and more excited.

"Come on! One more point and they would win!" said Dr. Clark counting up the points fast. "Has there ever been a year in which houses are tied?"

"Nope, never. If it does happen, then Dumbledore, or if there is another headmaster, gives points for things he's noticed throughout the year." said Remus.
"Go Neville! I guess getting cursed and left on the ground all night, sort of paid off!" said Charlie clapping Neville on the back.

Sixty-ninth paragraph, third sentence.

"Since then, he's won quite a bit in Herbology class." said Harry proudly.

End of sixty-ninth paragraph.

"I had to tell my students that it was well within the rules what Dumbledore did." said Snape with a frown.

Dialogue line.

Seventieth paragraph, fourth sentence.

"Big surprise." said Fred and George rolling their eyes.

End of seventieth paragraph.

Seventy-first paragraph.

"I still haven't." said Harry quietly.

Seventy-second paragraph, second sentence, first semi-colon.

"Meaning I got through with mostly 'E's and Harry scored all 'E's he was worried that he might have hit an 'O' or dropped down too low." said Ron with a smirk.

Seventy-second paragraph, end of second sentence.

"Big surprise." chanted Fred and George again, but they were smiling.

Seventy-second paragraph, third sentence.

"That hasn't changed at all." said Neville with a small smile.
"Goyle managed to get an 'A' in Potions, which raised his average from a 'T' to a 'P'." muttered Draco.

"Which is just enough to get you through to second year." said Snape.

"Not with you two as students, I won't" said Professor McGonagall sternly.

"It never seems like to take a long time to get there, but it takes all day to get to the school." said Hermione thoughtfully.

"That's because the train goes slower at the beginning of the year." said Harry absently.

"How do you know?" said Hermione quickly.

"I timed it." said Harry with a broad smile.

"Could use him at the beginning for the Muggle-borns." said Harry to Dumbledore.

"I will see if he wishes to do so." said Dumbledore with a smile.

"Wish I had asked about that further." said Ron angrily.
"Tell me we don't have to listen to more of the Dursley's." whined Remus.

"Sorry." said Harry.

"You don't need to be sorry, they do," said Remus quickly.

Seventy-sixth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Seventy-seventh paragraph.

"Sorry, Ron." said Ginny sadly.

"It's all good." said Ron waving away the apology.

Seventy-eighth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Seventy-ninth paragraph, first sentence.

"Oh, just let me at him for a few moments. It's all I'm asking." said Remus angrily.

End of seventy-ninth paragraph.
"They thought I could fight back, now. They used to be this nervous...around...Officer McFinn..." said Harry changing quickly from a happy mood, to a downtrodden one. Dr. Clark reached around and gave his shoulder a squeeze.

Dialogue line.
Dialogue line.

"I just thought they were grumpy." said Mrs. Weasely earnestly to Harry.

"It's alright, you were there when I really needed you." said Harry consolingly.

Eightieth paragraph.
Dialogue line.
Dialogue line.

"They were more than just unpleasant." said Hermione angrily.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

"It wasn't just the smile, it was that you looked really evil." said Ron with a laugh.

End of chapter.

"Don't push your luck boy." growled Moody warningly.

"Well that's the end of this book." said the Doctor.

"Good job, Nicodemus. I'm amazed you didn't all of a sudden switch to Latin. He loves to do that." said Lionus rolling his eyes.

"These are children, I didn't want to overwhelm them." said Nicodemus haughtily.

"Can we start the next book?" asked Colin excitedly. "I'm in that one!"

"It’s six forty-two." said Harry looking at the sunset. "And if it starts the way I think it does, we better save it for tomorrow."

"Your choice, Harry." said Dumbledore kindly. "Well, let’s stretch our legs and await dinner."

"Mind if I go down and cook something?" asked Harry. "Better vent before tomorrow rolls around."
"Of course not, dear boy. Go and cook to your heart's desire." said Dumbledore smiling broadly.

“Harry, we need to talk.” said Remus.

“Is it about punishing me for going down the trapdoor?” said Harry looking up to him.

“Yes, I…” said Remus.

“Dumbledore said we weren’t going to be punished for anything that happened in the past.” said Ron worriedly.

“School won’t punish you, but we will.” said Remus nodding over to Mrs. Weasley.

“What sort of punishment did you have in mind?” asked Harry plainly.

“We can talk about that in private.” said Remus.

“Like I told Sirius before, I’ve had worse, whatever you do.” said Harry shrugging. “Paddling won’t do much to me, better get creative.” Harry stood up in the bowl and walked out and towards the kitchens. But stopped before he closed the door behind him, he addressed the rest of the students without looking at them.

“You believed the rumors that year, and they mentioned Voldemort, and yet when I tell you almost directly what happened last year, not one of you believed me.” he then took leave.

As the students digested this Remus had his own worries, he turned to Sirius.

“Why does he keep fighting me?” he asked worriedly.

“Beats me, I’ll ask him later.” said Sirius shrugging.

He was pouring candied chestnuts and syrup in a bowl when Ginny came in, she looked around until she found Harry.

"What are you making?" asked Ginny walking over to him.

"Candied Chestnuts, thought they’d be a nice snack for tomorrow. Whatcha need?" said Harry wiping his hands on a towel.

"Dumbledore just announced that on the weekends, we won't be doing any reading. I just wanted to know, if you wanted to go to Hogsmede with me on Saturday.” she said giving Harry a shy smile.

"I'd love to.” he said with a smile and a blush. “You hungry? I've got a small pot of my seven-day spaghetti on the stove, it's just about ready." said Harry looking over to the streaming pot.

"Sure, um..what makes it 'seven-day spaghetti'." asked Ginny sitting down at a little table.

"Every day, I add more spices to the mix. Here we go.” said Harry placing some of it onto a plate and hands it to her. She twirled her fork around the noodles and places the fork full of spaghetti into her mouth. She moaned in delight of the multitude of flavors blending together in her mouth. It was sweet and spicy all in one tasty bite.
"Hmm...mmm.." moaned Ginny.

"I take it, you like it?" said Harry eating from his own plate.

"You need to teach mom this recipe." said Ginny getting another forkful.

"Your mom doesn't need any help in the kitchen." said Harry with a smile. "So, what do you want to do in Hogsmede?" said Harry pouring Ginny a tall glass of butterbeer.

"Well, we can just wander about." said Ginny with a smile. "We can talk and walk..."

"That sounds great. I think both of our families would kill us if we moved way too fast. Ron might not like the idea of me dating you though." said Harry helping himself to seconds.

"When it comes to my choice of who I date, I don't care what Ron thinks." said Ginny rolling her eyes.

"You don't sleep in the same room with him." said Harry shaking his fork at her playfully.

Once they ate all they wanted, which was the entire pot, Harry magicked the pot into the sink and it began to clean itself.

"Want to help me finish off the chestnuts?" said Harry with a broad smile. Ginny nodded and listened to Harry's instructions.

It was ten o'clock when they were almost finished, Harry was magicking the syrup to be absorbed faster into the delectable little chestnuts, when Sirius came down with Mrs. Weasely on his heels. When they saw both teens in the kitchen together; Mrs. Weasely placed her hands on her hips.

"What are you two doing? It's ten at night!" she scolded.

"Making a snack for tomorrow." said Harry getting a large baking sheet. "Thank God for magic, this would normally take a whole week to make."

"Well, it's time for the both of you to go to bed." said Sirius looking suspiciously over to Harry. Ginny left with her mother and Sirius came over to Harry.

"You like pushing your luck, don't you?" said Sirius with a mischievous grin.

"I'm not too sure what you're talking about." said Harry, placing the nuts in the stove.

"Don't go too fast with Ginny. You don't want to ostracize yourself from that family." said Sirius with a smirk.

"I don't intend to do anything hasty with Ginny. I may be reckless with my life, but I've got morals." said Harry smacking Sirius' hand with a wooden spoon when he reached for a finger-full of the excess syrup.
"I was about to kiss her a week ago, if you can bother to remember, but I pulled back. I don't want to rush in; I want to take it slow. I had a crush on Cho, and I wanted to run into a relationship with her." said Harry setting the timer.

“That really, really cute Ravenclaw? Hell, I would have!” said Sirius with a smirk.

“I would have gone headlong, forgetting about her lingering feelings for...Cedric." Harry looked down, with a saddened expression. "I don't want to put her through hell."

Sirius stared at him and smiled. "Alright, finish cooking and let’s get you to bed. I have a feeling that tomorrow is going to be a long day for me, if it's got the Dursley's in the chapter. And on the way, Remus wants me to ask why you keep scrapping with him.”

“He wants to punish me for either things that had already happened four years ago, or for things I’ve thought. He needs to lay off. Also, Ron and I ended up in the hospital wing; I think we were punished enough.” said Harry looking at the stove intently. “And you already told me I was going to be grounded when I get home, so what’s the point of going on about it?”

Sirius thought for a moment. “Fair enough, little late for Ron, but…I’ll have a talk with Moony.” said Sirius ruffling his godson’s hair. “Thanks again for letting us treat you like a kid.”

“No problem, thanks for letting me sleep when I want to.” said Harry.

“Yeah, Dumbledore and I were wondering about that, why do you sleep all the time?” asked Sirius, finally sneaking a bit of syrup.

“I’m not all together sure; I just get so tired at random times. I have a theory, but I don’t’ know…” said Harry quietly.

“Well, no matter, take all the naps you want, we’ll stay alert for you. Come on, the house-elves can polish it up, let’s get you to bed.” said Sirius putting an arm around the youth and leading him out of the kitchen.
The next morning, after everyone had finished with their breakfast and Bathilda had returned from going home quickly to check on her cat, Harry wanted to read the next chapter, but Sirius wouldn't have it.

"I don't need you skipping a part, just to avoid us worrying about you." he said scolding him lightly.

“The Unspeakables said that we couldn’t do that.” pouted Harry.

“Don’t care.” said Sirius, “Besides, remember what I said last night? What if you get tired right in the middle of reading? If I volunteer to read, you can read half.” he said fairly.

So it was decided that Professor Flitwick would begin the reading of the second chapter. He went and picked up a completely different book then the one they had spent the past week or so reading.

"The next book is called 'Title of second book'." he said loudly.

Ginny motioned to Harry that she would sit beside her mother, father and oldest brothers. Harry nodded and smiled understandingly.

“I think I ‘d better explain something, I rechecked the powers of ‘Memorial Books’ and found that as the books progress, they gain a bit more strength. Now for this chapter, we may experience a Scattered Shot and a Recollection Scroll in one day, or three Scattered Shots.” said the Head Unspeakable. People began to talk about themselves excitedly, they loved the short movies (as one of the muggleborns called it.) though they didn’t really like the bad memories.

Professor Flitwick took a deep breath and read the chapter title, rather reluctantly.

First chapter title.

"Oh, I don't think I really want to hear this." said Sirius wincing a little.

First paragraph, first sentence.

"And it won't be the last." said Harry shaking his head.

End of first paragraph.
"That would be Hedwig." said Ron with a smirk.

"She is the best alarm clock, during the summer." said Harry, watching his owl as she fluttered down to him. She puffed out her feathered chest importantly.

Dialogue line.

"If you would let me let her out, she wouldn't be hooting so loudly in the morning." said Harry rolling his eyes.

"He didn't let her out?" asked Sirius angrily.

"He hates her with a passion." said Harry stroking Hedwig's feathers absently. "She's not too fond of him either."

Hedwig clicked her beak angrily at the book.

Second paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

"Yes!" yelled everyone in the Great Hall in unison.

“Or was that a trick question?” said George out loud.

End of dialogue set.

"What would happen if you did let her out?" asked Charlie.

"I would send letters to Hagrid or Dumbledore for help." said Harry forgetting to censor his words.

"What do you mean, help?" said Remus slowly.

"Umm..." said Harry.

"Maybe the readings will let us know." said Flitwick, trying to spare Harry from releasing information that he wasn't ready to let go.

Third paragraph.

"That doesn't mean anything good." said Sirius looking worried.

Fourth paragraph.
"Disgusting child." said McGonagall turning up her nose.

"Sounds like he got better over the year." said Ron sarcastically.

Dialogue line.

"There is something wrong with that." said Fred with a smirk.

"The pig wants more bacon?" said George looking horrified.

"Cannibal!" the twins yelled.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

"I made almost eight rashers of bacon. He went through five of them." said Harry with a laugh.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

"More likely while I'm there." said Harry angrily.

End of dialogue set.

"What kind of food do they have there?" asked Hermione.

"Dudley bragged about what he gets at Smeltings to me. They get porridge, eggs, bacon, sausages, cereal, milk and juice in the morning. Sandwiches and tea, for lunch. And a different choice of meat, vegetable, and dessert every night for dinner." said Harry ticking off the things that Dudley had told him. "He asked me what 'pathetic excuse for a meal' we get here." said Harry rolling his eyes. "I told him that we get about seven times more of a selection than he does."

"How did he take to that?" asked Ron with a smirk.

"He...um......." said Harry almost silently.

"What did you say?" asked Sirius quickly.

"He...dislocated...my...arm...” he said louder.

Sirius stared at Harry, as did most of the people in the room.

"I'm going to beat that little b@$!@&@!" yelled Sirius.

"Get in line." snarled Hermione.

"There's a long line." growled Ginny.

“Hey, I was fine, I just...snapped it back in place…” said Harry helplessly.

“Like your nose?” asked Remus with a pale look.
“Maybe…” said Harry quietly.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

"He's never gone hungry, period." snarled Harry.

End of dialogue set.

"Too much." said Fred shaking his head.

"Way too much." said George rolling his eyes.

Fifth paragraph, third comma.

"That sounds absolutely horrible!" said a few girls, their hands quickly tracing their hips.

"I'm an amazed that most of us don't become that size, easily." said a seventh year girl.

"Not with our classes so far apart, Transfiguration is at least three-quarters of a mile away from at least Charms class, and the distance varies, but it doesn't get much shorter than that." said Harry with a grin. "We work off our meals just going to the first two lessons of the day."

The students stared at Harry in amazement. They really do all that walking?

End of fifth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"Stupid prat can't even say 'please'." said Dean.

Dialogue line.

"That was a bad, BAD choice of words." moaned Tonks.

"Tell me about it." said Harry shaking his head.

Sixth paragraph, first sentence, firs semi-colon.

"That should have been a clue to someone that he was too big, especially for an eleven year old." said Mrs. Weasely bitterly.

End of sixth paragraph.
Sirius sat forward, his baring his teeth like vicious dog.

"Steady, steady..." growled Remus to himself.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set, first sentence, third comma.

"Say it, don't spray it." said Hermione quietly, her eyes flashing in anger.

End of dialogue set.

"What 'M' word is he talking about?" asked Neville.

"Magic." said Harry simply.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"He didn't threaten your fat, worthless son!" yelled Sirius angrily. "I'll show him threaten." he finished clenching his fist.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"Abnormality? That's what he calls it?" said Draco viciously.

"He doesn't like anything out of his so-called norm." said Harry shrugging.

Seventh paragraph.

"That took her a while to do." said Harry with a smirk.

Dialogue line.

Eighth paragraph, first sentence, first comma.

"I would have thought walrus, but I guess a rhino is good too." said Lee shrugging.

End of eighth paragraph.
"A bomb?" asked Remus, confused.

"It's like a firework, only louder, larger and lethal." said Dr. Clark sadly. "I've seen men, women and children blown to pieces by them."

"Merlin." said Remus gulping loudly.

"Why is it going over what we already know?" said Zacharias rolling his eyes.

"In past readings, more and more people have been added to the readings as the books go on. So the books recap themselves." said the lead Unspeakable nodding towards Dr. Clark, Tempest, and Firenze.

"Can't we cut these bits out, Speckerton?" asked Fudge to the head Unspeakable.

"No." he said plainly.

The current and past students cheered loudly.

"Not one person blames you." said Blaise, "I wouldn't want to go back there either."

Ginny looked at Harry, "That's called being....homesick."

"No one should be homesick, when they are home." said McGonagall sadly.

"Feeling was mutual." drawled Snape.

"Missed yeh too 'Arry." said Hagrid with a smile.
Fred and George whistled.

"Wasn't top-of-the-line much longer after that." said Draco with a sneer.

"What?" said Hermione and the teachers quickly.

"The only way we would kick you off the team, is if someone bans you." said Angelina scowling up to Umbridge.

"What would have happened if I did come to school and none of my homework was done? Would you have believed me?" asked Harry looking to the teachers.

"No, I don't think we would have." said McGonagall sadly. "But if we had, we would have given you a pass on the homework."

"My mom and dad are so proud of me, they brag to all my aunts and uncles." said Hermione, "Its' not right that they feel ashamed of you."

"That's not all that's wrong with them." mumbled Dr. Clark.

"That's cruel! She needs to stretch her wings!" shouted Charlie.
"Walrus!" shouted Fred.

Thirteenth paragraph, first sentence, second semi-colon.

"Horsie!" yelled George.

Thirteenth paragraph, end of first sentence.

"Piggy!" chanted the school's students.

Thirteenth paragraph, second sentence, sixth word.

"Attractive!" said Cho.

"Handsome!" said Ginny.

"Cute!" said the fourth year Gryffindor that kept trying to catch Harry's eye.

They all spoke at the same time, and their words were jumbled about. The three girls scowled at each other, as Harry looked at the three of them with a confused look.

"Think there’s going to be a cat-fight?" asked Fred eagerly.

"My money's on Ginny." said George.

"That's an easy bet." said Fred.

"Don't give those girls any idea!" scolded Mrs. Weasley.

"I think you better stop the fight, before it starts." said Dr. Clark quickly.

"If I knew how, I would." said Harry looking over to Ginny, worried. For she was still glaring at the two other girls.

"You are clueless about girls, aren't you?" said Sirius shaking his head and smiling broadly.

"Don't take any of his advice, Harry. I'm begging you." said Remus giving Sirius a scrutinizing look.

End of thirteenth paragraph.

"Funny, Harry." said George with a straight face.

"You don’t sound attractive," said Fred.

"Or handsome," said George.

"Or cute." the twins said together.
"I guess not." said Harry with a laugh.

Fourteenth paragraph.

"Now there is no reason for you to go back." said Sirius ruffling his godson's hair.

Fifteenth paragraph, first sentence, third comma.

A strong flinch went through the school.

Fifteenth paragraph, second sentence, first comma.

Sirius bowed his head, while Remus wiped a tear from his eye.

End of fifteenth paragraph.

Umbridge, who had been tied to the chair and gagged once again, thrashed about angrily. Whereas Fudge looked down in shame.

Sixteenth paragraph, first sentence.

"I wouldn't say 'brought up'. I would say 'beaten up'." said Madam Bones angrily.

End of sixteenth paragraph.

"Wasn't an accident." muttered Sirius furiously.

Seventeenth paragraph.

"How dare they!" shouted Mrs. Weasely angrily.

"Say one more crack about my dog form Sam, and I'll beat you senseless with this pillow." said Sirius to Dr. Clark, raising a large cushion.

"Why aren't you angry about this?" yelled Mrs. Weasely.

"They're already going to get their come-uppance, thanks to Madam Bones. All I'm asking is to go to their trial and the opportunity to smack Vernon about a few times." said Sirius with an evil grin.

Eighteenth paragraph, second sentence, first dash.
"You are getting, a cake, presents, a party, and anything else you could possibly want for your birthday this coming year.” said Sirius and Dr. Clark quickly. Remus took a piece of parchment out of his pocket and started writing ideas down for the party.

End of eighteenth paragraph.

"Your standards shouldn't have been so low." said Tonks angrily.

Nineteenth paragraph, first sentence, first comma, sixth word.

"He sounds like Umbridge." said Ginny with a smirk.

End of nineteenth paragraph.

"You mean to tell me that they are going to do something nice for your birthday?" asked Dr. Clark in amazement.

Twentieth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"What a...F#@&!#& BASTARD!" yelled Bill.

"WILLIAM!" screeched Mrs. Weasley.

"MOM! HE PUT HIS BUSINESS DEAL ON HIS NEPHEW'S BIRTHDAY!" yelled Bill.

Twenty-first paragraph, second sentence.

"Dinner party? Are they going to at least have cake for your birthday then?" asked Neville, trying to find the silver lining.

"Nope, they have another activity for me to do." said Harry with scowl.

End of twenty-first paragraph.

"Well, you love cooking right? You can at least make them enjoy their meal with your food." said Lavender hopefully.

"I'll explain when it comes around, why I won't be cooking that night." said Harry kicking the air.

Dialogue set, second sentence.
"Schedule? You don't have a schedule for a dinner party. You just enjoy yourself." said Bathilda Bagshot looking incredulous.

End of dialogue set.

Dialogue set, first sentence, second comma.

"Is it a nice lounge?" asked Luna.

"It's clean, that's all I can say about it." said Harry with a scowl.

End of dialogue set.

"I wouldn't want to go anywhere near her." said Snape with a snarl.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"Hell no! I don't want your pudgy hands all over my nice designer coat!" said Fred to an invisible Dudley.

Dialogue line.

"They'll hate him!" said George mimicking Aunt Petunia.

Dialogue line.

"Setting the table and putting the finishing touches on the food?" said Seamus half-heartedly.

Dialogue line.

"Wait, what? It's your birthday and you've got to stay in your room all night?" said Charlie looking at Harry in shock.

"That's one reason why the chapter is labeled 'Worst Birthday' I suppose." said Harry shrugging.

"One?" mouthed Sirius.

“Another reason is that they didn’t want me cooking. Thought I would screw up the food on purpose." said Harry with a scowl.
"Dinner should be served nice and hot, not freaking stone cold!" said Ron angrily.

"She kept the food in the oven, it only burnt a little." said Harry shrugging.

"I wouldn't let that wretched boy touch me." said McGonagall her nose turned upward.

"Neither would I." nodded Professor Sprout.

"Again, like Rebecca said, the only gentleman there is Harry." said Alicia

"I'm going to go out and enjoy my bloody birthday!" said Bill, speaking for Harry.

"I would have given anything to say that." said Harry laughing hard.

"He's still asking you what you are going to do? I'm gonna kill him." said Remus angrily. "He shouldn't...keep reminding you that your birthday isn't something to be recognized!"

Harry stared him with a large smile. "You better think about what you just said." said Harry with a laugh.

Remus thought quickly and then smacked himself in the forehead. "Oh...I didn't mean it!"

"I know you didn't, it's just so funny." said Harry laughing.

"Who plans a compliment?" said Hermione in disbelief.

"Dysfunctional people." said Ron rolling his eyes.
"Um...I take golfing lessons and I need a forty point handicap in mini-golf?" said Fred in a deep voice.

"The local consignment store." said George in a high-pitched voice.

"Really? Mind if you read a bit of it? Love to hear it." said Fred in the same deep voice.

"What a sap." said Blaise shaking his head.

"Oh, come on, Harry, laugh in his face! It's your birthday!" said Tonks eagerly.

"I get him, it's not much, but I get him." said Harry with a smirk.

"Is that when you used those things you got in the Wizard Crackers?" said Dean, remembering what Harry said.

"About seven days after I got back." said Harry with a smirk. "I heard Uncle Vernon complaining about gas he was getting from restaurant food. And he said he was getting boils from all the stress at work. So, I put the balloons in the bed, filled them only a little and didn't seal them all the way, and snuck into their room a few nights later and put the boils all over his face and arms."

"What did he do when he found out everything." said Remus anxiously, he loved hearing about pranks, but not if it meant his cub getting hurt.

"Well...um...he...can we forget about it?" said Harry helplessly.

"No. What..did..he..do?" said Sirius sternly.

Harry looked down in shame. "He...just..." he couldn't finish. He wasn't defending his Uncle's abusive ways, it was just...embarrassing. With all his brains and leg strength, he couldn't defend himself against his overstuffed Uncle.

"I guess...you'll tell us when you're ready." said Sirius in a defeated tone.

Professor Flitwick looked over to Harry sadly, then continued on.
"He's got a name you..." said Ginny, not finishing what she was saying.

"I'd a failed, miserably." said Lee, still laughing.

"They keep making you repeat it? That's got be some form of torture." said Charlie, his fists clenching.

"Too bad, the Masons might have loved you." said Angelina with a smile.

"She can't even make a decent cup of coffee." muttered Harry.

"How would he do that?" asked Fred curiously.

"I found a drill bit in the pork roast. Speaking of which...?" said Harry shrugging his shoulders. "He's not a smooth talker."

"Would that have worked?" asked Neville with a smile.

"Only if Aunt Petunia had cooked that night." said Harry with a smirk.

“If you didn’t cook then who did?” asked Neville.

“It was all frozen meat, and store-bought dessert.” said Harry rolling his eyes.

"Wow, that must have been a massive sale." said Hermione staring at Harry.

"Yeah, it was a big one." said Harry shaking his head.
That is, IF they took me.” said Harry rolling his eyes.

"Wouldn't they?” asked Hermione worriedly.

"They didn't need me there, there are tons of restaurants in Majorca." said Harry shrugging.

"Oh!” said Harry suddenly.

"What is it?” said Sirius quickly.

"Uncle Vernon did give me a present, though I shot it all to hell. Damn, it was a good one too.” said Harry disappointedly.

"What was it?” said Remus.

"It was a day, with no chores. And I screwed it up." said Harry sadly.

"How did you screw it up?” asked Ron.

"You'll find out later.” said Harry.

"At least the sun was shining on your birthday.” said Mrs. Weasley kindly to Harry.

"That's not a good thing, if it the sun shines on your birthday, your year will be smothered in darkness.” said Luna dreamily.

"Oh, that's not true!” said Hermione shortly.

"Oh, I don’t know, the past five years, there was sunshine on my birthday. And yeah, the years were sort of dark.” said Harry thoughtfully.

Luna smiled at him, while Hermione stared at him.

Lee stared at the book, "Wow, that's depressing.”

Fred dragged him over to himself and George and had a quick discussion. When Ron and Hermione caught wind of it, they also hurried over and plotted.

"That's never a good sign, seeing Fred and George smile like that.” said Harry worriedly.
"Ron and Hermione didn't even send you a card?" said Dr. Clark, looking angrily over to the two fifth years.

"We didn't forget!" said Hermione tearfully.

"They actually didn't, it'll say what happened to their letters." said Harry trying to ease the situation.

Sirius looked over to Harry sadly and pulled him into a tight hug. "You won't be lonely anymore cub." he said whispering in his ear.

“I know.” said Harry with a smile.

"We were!" said Ron.

"I didn't know that at the time. I found out what happened that night." said Harry quietly.

"And I did, mate, right as I got home! I told mom if you could come and stay for the whole summer. She reckoned, at the time anyway, that you wanted to spend a bit of time with your family.” said Ron.

"Do it! You shouldn't be there!" said Sirius loudly.

"Bull$#!%. do it!" said Sirius again.

"SIRIUS! Watch your mouth!" said Mrs. Weasely angrily.

Several students snorted with laughter.

"You only would have stopped at dung beetles? I would have gone past that and straight to dung!"
said Charlie laughing loudly.

"I didn't want to hurt them." said Harry quietly.

"Why the hell not?" asked Remus stunned.

"They hit me unprovoked, I didn't want to be just like them." said Harry, looking away from the large gathering, a grimace of pain on his lips.

Twenty-seventh paragraph, end of third sentence.

"Wait, what? They would have locked you up? If you hadn't of threatened them with magic?" said Remus angrily.

Twenty-seventh paragraph, fourth sentence.

"Which was about as fast as a flooberworm's crawl." said Harry with a smirk.

Twenty-seventh paragraph, fifth sentence, first dash.

"Wow, you didn't even want to make fun of Dudley anymore?" said Neville with a shocked look.

"I was depressed." said Harry quietly.

"Are you still, depressed." asked Dr. Clark quickly.

"With all the stuff going on, especially after last year? To be honest, how can anyone expect me to be anything else?" muttered Harry shaking his head.

Dumbledore looked over to Harry quickly. He met Harry’s eyes, without speaking they agreed to have a talk later.

End of twenty-seventh paragraph.

"Honestly! We didn't!" said Hermione fretfully.

Twenty-eighth paragraph, third sentence, first comma.

"Voldemort? You would welcome a glimpse of him?" said Remus faintly.

Twenty-eighth paragraph, third sentence, second comma.

"Forget You-Know-Who, the foe that holds his attention at all times..." said Fred in a dramatic tone.
"Is the little twit of Slytherin House!" said George.

End of twenty-eighth paragraph.

"Last year sounded more like a nightmare, than a dream." said Tonks.

Twenty-ninth paragraph, first sentence.

"First part, yeah, last part....not so much..." said Bill cracking a smile.

"Oi! Bill!" said Fred looking indignant.

"Leave the comedy to the professionals!" said George annoyed.

"I would if there were some comedians here." said Bill nastily.

Fred and George stared at their oldest brother, while Lee was rolling on the floor laughing.

"Ouch! That's gotta hurt!" wheezed Lee.

Twenty-ninth paragraph, third sentence, first comma.

"You have such an interesting way of describing things Harry, and very accurate too." said Dumbledore kindly.

"I wouldn't even try and think about Voldemort." said Dr. Clark with a shudder.

"You...said...his name!" said Ron stunned.

"Why shouldn't I?" said Dr. Clark.

"Do me a favor, just say the stupid name." said Harry shaking his head.

Twenty-ninth paragraph, fifth sentence, second comma.

"You're not kidding." said Terry shaking his head.

End of twenty-ninth paragraph.

Sirius, without speaking, pulled Harry up and placed him onto his lap.

"What the..." said Harry confused.

Sirius only hugged him tighter.
"What? Who was looking at you?" asked Lavender.

"You'll find out later." said Harry with a small smile.

"Now who the hell is it?" said Tonks angrily.

"Wonderful, you know what day it is." said Kingsley shaking his head and rolling his eyes.

People began to laugh and clutch at their sides.

"That's right, don't take your eyes off it. Never know what it might be." said Moody.

Kingsley and Harry smiled at each other.

“You two are freaking awesome!” said Fred clutching his side.

“Too cool!” Said George.

“Why do you only use this attitude on Dudley and Malfoy?” asked Charlie to Harry.

“That hurt, that really hurt.” said Harry from Sirius’s lap.

“It’s okay cub.” said Sirius. “You don’t need to deal with him anymore.”
Thirty-third paragraph.

“Gross!” yelled Lavender or Parvati.

Dialogue line.

“It was those creepy eyes that stared at me. I wanted to know whose stalking me’.” said Ernie with a smirk.

Dialogue line.

Umbridge started to wrestle out of her bonds and tried hard to yell something out.

“You might as well just shut up, ’cause we aren’t going to listen to you.” said Nightstrike.

“I think she wants to yell at Harry for threatening the young Dursley.” said Dumbledore kindly.

Thirty-fourth paragraph.

Dialogue set, first sentence, third dash.

“Like that would be a bad thing, really.” said Ron rolling his eyes.

End of dialogue set.

“Bull! You had the whole entire Weasely family to take you in.” said Charlie.

Dialogue line.

Malfroy started laughing, “What the hell was that, Potter?”

“In the muggle world, those might count as incantations.” said Harry with a smile.

“Dumbest thing I’ve ever heard.” Malfroy said shaking his head.

Dialogue line.

“He needs a smack, badly.” said Malfroy and Blaise.
“I’ll give him ‘you-know-what’.” said Ginny clenching her fist.

Thirty-fifth paragraph, first sentence.
The laughter died almost immediately.

Thirty-fifth paragraph, second sentence.
Before Harry could reassure her that he was fine, Madam Pomfrey came over and examined his head.

“It said I ducked. That means it missed me.” said Harry calmly.

“Can’t be too careful.” she said, not stopping her inspection until she was absolutely sure nothing was broken or bruised.

“Besides, Poppy,” said Nicodemus. “The pod he was in would have healed all broken bones, lacerations, gashes, and some other forms of injury.”

Lionus looked over to Nicodemus, he felt that the doctor held back slightly, the doctor slipped him a small note and Lionus slyly read it. His eyes widened slightly and he looked over to the doctor, who nodded solemnly.

End of thirty-fifth paragraph.

“What? They wouldn’t have fed you till you finished doing stuff?” said Ron quietly.

“That is how I ruined the birthday present Uncle Vernon gave me.” said Harry with a smirk.

Thirty-sixth paragraph, first sentence, first comma.
“He’s not the child that needs the extra nourishment!” said Madam Pomfrey.

Thirty-sixth paragraph, end of first sentence.
Everyone sat and stared Harry.

“You had to do all that in one day, and on your birthday?” asked Dr. Clark.

“And you had to get it all done before you could eat?” said Ron weakly.

Thirty-sixth paragraph, second sentence.
“Explains the nasty sunburn you had on your neck.” said Fred staring at Harry.
“You really shouldn’t have dear,” said Mrs. Weasley looking slightly guilty. Were her son’s telling her the truth all those years ago?

Ron and Hermione looked over to him, they had a strange, worried look on their faces.

Both Draco and Snape cringed in their seats. They really did misjudge Harry. They thought he led the perfect life, now they realized…this was far from even a decent life.

“What time did you start all this?” asked Bill angrily.

“Maybe nine o’clock in the morning.” said Harry thinking back.

“So you worked your butt off for ten hours, in the hot sun, too? Jeez, a twelve year old shouldn’t have to work that long.” said Bill shaking his head. “I would love to see them try and do days like that.” he finished angrily.

“She bought that at a store.” said Harry. “Cost her about thirty one pounds.”

“Why didn’t she just have you make it?” asked Hermione.

“I was busy with my punishment.” said Harry shrugging.

“That is all she can do for food. Thaw out the meat I season.” said Harry rolling his eyes.

“That isn’t a meal!” said Ron and Mrs. Weasely furiously.
All that work you did, that was all you got?” said Neville sadly.

Remus, Sirius and Dr. Clark were snarling at the book in Professor Flitwick’s arms. Madam Bones wrote a little note on a piece of parchment.

End of dialogue set.

“I hate that color, it’s her favorite.” said Harry bitterly.

Fortieth paragraph, second sentence.

“Was there even a crumb left on the plate?” asked Tonks angrily.

“Nope, I picked up every last one.” said Harry quietly.

End of fortieth paragraph.

Forty-first paragraph, first sentence.

“Bow ties are so horrible, worst fashion accessory for men…ever…created…” said Parvati.

End of forty-first paragraph.

“Doorbell rang, dumb@$.” said Charlie.

“CHARLES!” scolded Mrs. Weasely.

“Hey! He ain’t worth respecting!” said Charlie to his mother, he was even angrier than she was.

Dialogue line.

Forty-second paragraph, first comma.

“I would have stomped, and made sure that the Masons heard me.” said Seamus.

End of forty-second paragraph.

“Well, sleeping will keep you out of trouble, and you could use the rest after that waste of a day.” said Sirius holding onto Harry still.

End of chapter.
“What? Who the hell is on your bed?” asked Dean.

“You’ll find out soon.” said Harry.

“You say that one more time, and I’m gonna snap.” said Sirius sternly.

“What else am I going to say?” asked Harry innocently.

“How about telling us what happens.” said Sirius.

“I don’t want to, ruins the surprise.” smirked Harry.

“You’re just asking for it, aren’t you?” said Sirius with a playful scowl.
“Who would like to read now?” asked Professor Flitwick to the group of people.

“Guess I will again, sir.” said Bill when he saw no one raising their hands.

Bill took the book and opened to the chapter they were going to start on.

“Second Chapter title.” said Bill to the group.

“Dobby?” said Draco quietly. “Who’s he warning?”

“You know him?” asked Blaise quietly.

“Yeah, I do.” whispered Draco.

“Wait, wasn’t that the name of that house-elf from Dumbledore’s office?” asked Sirius, who didn’t hear what Draco had said.

“Yes, Harry?” said Dumbledore.

“What ever happened to…?” said Harry carefully.

“He’s back down in the kitchens.” said Dumbledore with a smile.

First paragraph, first sentence.

“If I had yelled, I’m pretty sure that they would have heard me downstairs.” said Harry with a smile.

“And that wouldn't have been a good thing.” said Sirius not smiling.

First paragraph, second sentence.

“That’s where the eyes from the hedge came from!” said Tonks excitedly.
“See! Harry knew it too!” said Tonks excitedly.

Moody rolled his eyes.

Second paragraph.

Dialogue line.

“Just as rehearsed.” said Hannah rolling her eyes.

Third paragraph.

“Why is it wearing that?” asked Lavender crinkling her nose in disgust.

“It’s the mark of a house-elf’s enslavement. While a house-elf is enslaved to a family, it doesn’t wear regular clothes. They feel that they shouldn’t be allowed to, not being regular members of the family. They attach themselves to a family,( or when they reach adulthood in a family their parents served), after about a month or two, they find a sheet, or something, with their master’s scent on it and wear it. The scent serves as a constant reminder that they belong to someone.” said Harry whipping out his little black book and flipping to a certain page.

“They don’t even wash it really, if it is washed, then it loses the master’s scent. Some people have an assortment of different things for their house-elf wears, different pillowcases and other things with the family crest. Each thing has their scent, that way, they look presentable if the house-elf is seen.” said Harry, still looking at his little book passively.

“If a family has a house-elf, the family only has one chore to do about the house, and that’s laundry.” said Harry with a smirk.

“Why does the family have to do their own laundry?” asked Colin. “My mum hates doing that.”

“If you give a house-elf an article of clothing, it could even be a single, solitary sock,” said Harry with a smile, enjoying his little inside joke. “That means that the house-elf is free and must leave your house, and never to return. House-elves don’t like that one bit.”

“Why not? If it means that they get their freedom?” asked Justin, Hermione looked over to Harry quickly.

“House-elves don’t need to eat or drink, hell, they don’t even sleep really, unless they are very ill. The thing that gives them sustenance, and gives them energy, is the comfort they give to others.” said Harry with a fleeting look over to Hermione, who looked shocked.

“Allow me to explain. Imagine you eating a large plate of, well, bacon, eggs, sausages and other things in the morning.” said Dumbledore interjecting. “That gives you energy that lasts till you eat lunch. The same energy you get from breakfast is the exact same energy they get from let’s say, picking up the dormitories and/or making dinner. If you take that away, by giving them clothes, then you are basically starving them to death. If they don’t have a family to care for, then they slowly fade away to nothing.”

“But most families don’t have house-elves and want them, why don’t the house-elves find those families?” asked Charlie looking over to his mother quickly.
“Not many people want a house-elf that had been dismissed. They have the misconception that the house-elf had done something seriously wrong. Which doesn’t happen, they are mostly dismissed out of misplaced anger, or the house-elf didn’t overcome a personal fear they had. Or if the owner was attempting to be kind and let them go.” said Harry looking over to Hermione, his tone was gentle, but Hermione only looked at him in horror.

“There are only about twenty-two hundred house-elves left in this world due to the stupidity of wizard’s and witches.” said Dumbledore thinking deeply.

Hermione looked down in shame, as did a majority of the others in the Great Hall.

“Great thing about Hogwarts and other magical schools is that they take in the dismissed house-elves with open arms. They welcome them gratefully, ‘cause if they didn’t then they would have to hire wizards, or witches to clean up after all the students.” said Harry with a smile.

“And what is wrong with that!” said Hermione indignantly.

Harry sighed, shook his head and looked over to her. “If they had to pay for people to clean up after the students and cook for them, than that would take away from the school’s fund for Muggleborns and orphaned wizarding children. When you first came here, you and a bunch of others, there was a fund for you all to get books, wands, and such like that. You didn’t need to pay for anything, that money is there for you to use, at least the first year.”

“Hogwarts has more than enough money!” said Draco indignanty.

“And that is because we employs house-elves, if we didn’t then the school wouldn’t be able to support itself. If the house-elves didn’t have schools to go to when they get dismissed for no reason, they would disappear. So it’s a mutualism.” said Dumbledore with a smile.

“What the hell is a mootcha-whatever?” asked Fred wonderingly.

“A mutualism is a relationship between two living things, in which both things get something out of the partnership. Like the bees and flowers, flowers can’t reproduce until they get pollinated by another flower. Bees need the nectar for food. While the bee gets the nectar, pollen is attached to the bee and the bee goes to another flower, after that, a seed forms, and that’s how flowers reproduce.” said Harry. “Sorry if I stated the obvious.” he added with a smile up to Professor Sprout.

“Trust me, Mr. Potter, any extra knowledge is greatly appreciated.” said Professor Sprout with a beaming smile.

Dialogue line.

“Some of the students here could also use some knowledge in manners from you as well.” Professor Sprout added with a giggle.

Dialogue line.

“Indeed it is.” said Dumbledore quietly.
“Was finding someone in your room so shocking that you needed to sit down?” asked Dr. Clark.

“I had a very long day, and I didn’t really know what to do in this situation.” said Harry shaking his head.

“Normally, she has a fit when someone is in the room with me.” said Harry with a smile. “But she was so bored and tired; she didn’t give much of a damn.”

“Good choice.” said McGonagall approvingly.

“And you managed to find out what he was at the same time.” said Sirius. Dr. Clark was still trying to wrap his mind around the concept of house-elves; his head was starting to hurt. He’d have to have a chat with Remus about them later.

“So there was a house-elf in that house.” said Madam Bones looking up to Fudge.

“D-D-Doesn’t mean that the elf used the Hover Charm.” said Fudge nervously.

“It really wasn’t, if Uncle Vernon had heard him and found Dobby there, I don’t think it would have gone very well.” said Harry, mostly to himself.

Growls cascaded through the Great Hall.

“I wouldn’t be hanging my head, I’d be covering my ears.” said Michael whispering to Terry.

“I don’t think that the elf was hanging his head because of the laughter, mate.” said Terry with a smirk.

“I would like to know that too.” said Draco wonderingly.
“Why are you so concerned about that elf?” asked Blaise. “When Potter was talking about house-elves you were cringing all over the place.”

“I’ll tell you later.” mouthed Draco.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

“You’re wonderful, Harry.” cooed the fourth year Gryffindor.

“Who is that? She keeps looking over here.” asked Sirius to Remus.

“That’s Romilda Vane. I remember her from my teaching here. She was always sort of…clingy.” said Remus.

“Just what you need, a bloody stalker.” whispered Sirius to Harry. “Don’t talk with her; they tend to get a bit, whacked out.”

“He knows all about ‘stalker girls’.” said Remus with a smirk.

Fifth paragraph.

“Oh dang, I hope they don’t hear you downstairs.” said Remus worriedly.

Dialogue line.

“He’s never been asked to sit down before?” asked Ginny.

“Apparently not, at least, not in a polite way.” said Dumbledore.

Sixth paragraph.

“Oh no. this isn’t good.” moaned Mr. Weasely.

Dialogue line.

“You didn’t offend him, they are just very sensitive for some reason.” said Fred rolling his eyes.

Dialogue line.

“They are just as good!” shrieked Hermione. “They are no less of people than we are!”

“That’s not the kind of equality he was talking about, Hermione, though I didn’t know it at the time. When a house-elf talks about ‘equality’ he’s talking about friendship and camaraderie. There aren’t many wizards at all that will sit down and listen to a house-elf, let alone have a civil conversation.” said Harry over to Hermione.

“But still…” said Hermione angrily.

“But nothing, Hermione, it’s great what you are trying to do, I respect that. There isn’t a person with a soul that doesn’t respect that. But you have to realize something. Humans and house-elves don’t always have the same point of view of things. The same thing can be said about the centaurs, giants, mer-people, goblins, and other magical entities. We can’t think that we all have the same points of view on things. We can think that we are doing what is best for them, what we view as right and just, in their eyes, we are just destroying everything they hold dear.”

Tempest and Firenze both nodded and marveled at the wisdom coming from such a young child.

“I just didn’t want them working so hard!” said Hermione irritably.

“Did you even sit down and ask a house-elf about their history or their feelings? That’s where I got all my information.” said Harry with a smile. “Them working hard is the same way as Ron gorging out on food. They love it; they can’t get enough of it. You can ask them, the next time you go down in the kitchens, Hermione. Let’s let Bill continue and you can chalk that up to another thing you and I have to have a discussion on when this is done.”

Seventh paragraph, first sentence, second comma.

“I hope I did, he looked pretty upset.” said Harry with a concerned look.

Seventh paragraph, first sentence, third comma.

“It’s not a word, but that describes what he was doing.” said Harry with a slight smile.

Seventh paragraph, end of first sentence.

“You make one more comment on how that’s not nice, I’m never making those triple chocolate chip cookies you love so much, again.” said Harry, not looking at Remus, whose mouth was opened, prepared to tell Harry off, quickly snapped shut.

End of seventh paragraph.

“….Peter used to look at us like that.” said Remus tensely.

Dialogue line.

“That was the completely wrong thing to say.” said Snape shaking his head. He was well aware of whose house-elf he was.

Eighth paragraph.

“Is there something wrong with that house-elf? Why is he doing that?” asked Dean quickly.

“You’ll find out.” said Harry simply.

Dialogue set, second sentence, first dash.

“I was sure that Uncle Vernon had heard that.” said Harry quietly.

End of dialogue set.

“Even more noise for Uncle Vernon to hear.” said Sirius worriedly.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

“Just about got a fractured skull there.” said Madam Pomfrey bitterly. She hated any sort of harm to any creature, be it human or non.

End of dialogue set.

“So if he bad mouths his family, he’s got to smack himself?” asked Dean. “My mom would really like that ability stuck on me when I take the mickey out of my cousins.”

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

“So, it’s sort of obvious that he doesn’t like his family that he serves…wow…he must have a miserable life.” said Bill thoughtfully.

Draco shifted uneasily again.

Dialogue line.

Ninth paragraph.

“Definitely not.” said Ernie.
“Poor Dobby!” said Padma with saddened look on her face.

“Hell! That’s got to hurt.” said Seamus holding his ears.

“I would kinda notice someone slamming their ears in the oven.” said Fred nodding.

“I’m going to curse the family that has ownership over that poor little elf!” muttered Mrs. Weasely threateningly.

Draco shifted even more uneasily. He was remembering Mrs. Weasely’s howler and he hoped that she would never find out that Dobby belonged to his family.

“He can’t, not until his family sets him free. Or unless he passes away.” said Remus sadly.

“Now you think a house-elf has a worse life than you?” said Sirius in shock.

“Well, my opinion at the time was that they really did. I didn’t have to slam my ears in an oven when I didn’t do something, or went were I wasn’t supposed to be.” said Harry honestly.

“I like how you said ‘almost’.” smirked Dr. Clark.
“Oh, Harry! You’re so noble!” cooed Romilda.

Harry looked over at her and stared, then at Ginny who was looking at him in a confused way.

“I don’t know what she’s on about.” mouthed Harry.

“I know what it is, I recognize the symptoms.” she mouthed back with a smile.

Eleventh paragraph.

“The day I need to be absolutely silent, I get a noisy house-guest.” said Harry with a smile.

Dialogue line.

“What would have happened?” said Sirius quickly.

Harry ignored him, much to his and some other people’s dismay.

“Harry, I think we need to have a chat later, about what has been going on in the Dursleys’ house.” said Dr. Clark solemnly. “No holding back.”

Harry looked down, “Yes, sir.”

Dialogue line.

“No surprise.” said Snape quietly, giving Draco a knowing looking.

Twelfth paragraph, first sentence, second comma.

“Aww! Harrykins is blushing!” cooed Fred and George.

End of twelfth paragraph.

“On paper, maybe.” said Hermione with a fake pout.

Thirteenth paragraph.

Hermione’s pout went away quickly and she looked over to him in anguish.

Dialogue set, first sentence, first comma.

“He is actually.” said Remus smiling over at the young man.
“Yeah, I hate it when you say it too.” said Ron.

Fifteenth paragraph.

Ron scratched his head and looked over to Harry sadly.

Sixteenth paragraph.

“Yeah, but he won’t talk about it.” said Ron with a chuckle.

Seventeenth paragraph.

“Makes me sound like a knight from King Arthur’s time.” said Harry with a blush.

End of dialogue set.

“Huh? Why the hell not?” asked Sirius worriedly.

Eighteenth paragraph.

“At least they ignored the noise he was making.” said Dr. Clark with a sigh.

Dialogue set, fourth sentence.

Bill froze after he read those words, then he and the rest of the school turned slowly towards him and stared.

“What did you mean by that, Harry?” asked Kingsley.

Harry refused to speak, but shifted in the bowl uncomfortably. Sirius moaned loudly and held him tightly. “You ever feel like that again, you let me know, I don’t want you to…” he couldn’t finish it.

“I won’t I promise I won’t.” said Harry whispering in Sirius’ ear.

End of dialogue set.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

“I’m sorry Harry, but he’s as dumb as a box of cauldron cakes. You are not safe there in any sense of the word.” said Remus irritated.

End of dialogue set.

“Apparently, if he had stayed at Privet Drive much longer, He might not of been around much longer he won’t have to worry about the mortal danger at Hogwarts.” said Sirius still holding onto Harry. He was greatly relieved to hear Harry promise that he wasn’t going to hurt himself, but it didn’t stop him from worrying.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

“Nothing different than any other year.” said Ron with a smirk.

End of dialogue set.

Zacharias scoffed. “He’s nothing special.”

He had to duck down quickly to avoid flying objects that came from the Gryffindor table, but mostly they were enchanted over by Sirius and thrown by Dr., Clark.

“Listen, brat, we don’t know who the hell you are, but you’d better take care not to push your luck with us.” said Sirius and Dr. Clark together.

Zacharias sneered over to them and rolled his eyes. Sirius and Dr. Clark wanted to hurl more things at him, but were stopped by Remus and Harry.

“He’s not worth the time. Let it go.” they said simply.

Dialogue line.

“He might not be able to, especially if it’s his master plotting them.” said Moody.
“That means that it is Dobby’s master.” Moody growled.

“That’s an unpleasant thought to you?” said Fred staring at him. Harry merely shrugged.

“So it’s not Voldemort, then who the heck is it?” said Bill looking up from the book.

“You aren’t the only one.” said Charlie.

“That would be frightening, wonder if they would have a resemblance?” said George with a snigger.

“George!” shouted Mrs. Weasely fearfully.

“What?” asked Fred innocently.

“Mum, he’s not here to hear what we’re saying, he won’t know if I insult him or not.” said George.

“That reminds me, remember in the last book, when you bounced snowballs off Quirrell’s turban?” said Harry with a smirk.

“Yeah, what about it?” asked George.

“Oh, man…George!” said Fred grabbing his twin’s arm. “Remember what was under that turban?” George thought quickly than paled, he turned to Fred; both of their mouths were slackened.

“We smacked You-Know-Who with snowballs…in the face.” they whispered together. Then they turned to Dumbledore and Harry.

“Save us…..” they said in hushed voices.

“You two better write a will quick.” said Lee, trying not to laugh.
“It’s not funny!” screeched Mrs. Weasely.

Twenty-second paragraph.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

“Voldemort was the only one with the stupidity to try and do something at Hogwarts with Dumbledore there.” said Harry with a smirk.

End of dialogue set.

“There isn’t a creature that speaks that doesn’t know who Dumbledore is.” said Firenze.

Twenty-third paragraph.

Dialogue set,

Twenty-fourth paragraph.

“Dobby is going to get you killed.” said Dr. Clark.

Harry looked up in the air and whistled innocently.

“What are you whistling for?” asked Bill.

“First Quidditch game of the year.” he said plainly.

Twenty-fifth paragraph.

“Oh, no! Harry! Run!” shouted Seamus.

Dialogue line.

“You don’t run, but you do stuff Dobby somewhere safe and you lay on the bed like nothing is going on? Do you welcome pain?” asked Dean.

“No, it’s just I know that there was nowhere to go.” said Harry.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

“He had better not hurt you.” snarled Sirius.
“Those kind of jokes are the worst jokes on the planet.” said Fred, George, Lee and Professor Flitwick together.

“Madam Bones, I’m begging you, let me at them, three minutes is all I’m asking.” said Sirius and Remus pleadingly.

“The Masons are going to wonder what is going on upstairs, if he keeps stomping around.” said Luna dreamily.

“You do Harry!” said Hermione almost in tears.

“Hey! How did he know?” asked Anthony Goldstein.

“That’s what I want to know!” said Anthony.

“I wasn’ too sure if yeh got the letter.” said Hagrid. “I’m sorry tha’ I didn’ check on yeh.”
“It would take more than that to keep me from Hogwarts.” said Harry defiantly.

“Just tell him yes, than go anyway!” said Tonks anxiously.

“I couldn’t.” said Harry looking over to her.

“Why the bloody hell not?” said Tonks angrily.

“He was asking for my word. I would have had to promise not to go. I couldn’t give him that.” said Harry quietly.

“What do they mean ‘cat like’?” asked George.

Harry sighed and took out his wand and conjured a staircase with exactly twelve steps on it, with a landing above. Harry climbed the stairs and crossed the landing.

“I did this.” he said simply.

He ran over the landing ran down the stairs and jumped the last six steps. He landed on his hands and brought his feet down after himself.

“Wow…that’s cool!” whistled Fred and George.

“How the hell did you get so agile, with all the beatings your uncle did?” asked Colin in wonder.

“Lots of practice.” said Harry.

“Why would you practice stuff like that?” asked Colin.

Harry only smiled.
“You don’t have much of a stomach to start with.” said Sirius tickling his godson’s stomach. Harry, laughingly, fell victim to his godfathers tickling and could find no means of escape.

Thirty-fourth paragraph, first sentence first comma.

“Her paid-for masterpiece.” said Hermione rolling her eyes.

Thirty-fourth paragraph, end of first sentence.

“Did it just say floating?” said Madam Bones cautiously.

End of thirty-fourth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

“Harry’s begging? He never begs!” said Fred looking horrorstruck at Bill.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

“Quit being noble and lie to him!” screeched Tonks.

Thirty-fifth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

“Ever since then, every time someone said ‘for your own good.’ I don’t believe them, especially after what happened next.” said Harry with a frown. Dumbledore and Mrs. Weasley both looked apologetically over to him.

Thirty-sixth paragraph.

Fudge stared at the book in shock. Harry was telling the truth? Umbridge only rolled her eyes and groaned, but with her mouth gagged, no one else heard her.

“So it was a house-elf. Mr. Potter I would like to offer an apology, for holding you accountable for the Hover charm in your house. I don’t really see how we could have mixed up the aura signatures. I wonder who was working that night.” said Madam Bones thoughtfully.
“You’ll find out who and what happened afterwards.” said Harry sadly.

Thirty-seventh paragraph.

“Oh, shit.” said Draco.

“You aren’t kidding.” said Blaise.

Thirty-eighth paragraph, second sentence.

“What did the Masons say about that?” asked Hermione.

“Before Uncle Vernon took them back to the other room, Mrs. Mason wiped my face with her handkerchief, surprisingly she was actually a nice lady. She asked if I was alright and if I had hurt myself. Mr. Mason even asked what I liked to do, it was kinda hard to play along with what Uncle Vernon described me as. I had to say I liked…finger-painting.” said Harry with a smirk.

“You actually did like painting with your fingers…when you were a year old, and that was with mashed peas and banana mush.” said Remus laughing hard.

Thirty-eighth paragraph, third sentence, second comma.

“I’m gonna….” said Sirius threateningly. Remus’ fists were clenched and Dr. Clark growled menacingly.

The rest of the school were quietly discussing what they would love to do if they had five minutes alone with them.

Thirty-eighth paragraph, fourth sentence, second comma.

“Your Uncle terrifies you that bad?” asked Dennis anxiously.

Harry only looked down at his knees. “He used to, yeah.” he said finally.

End of thirty-eighth paragraph.

“Didn’t the Masons wonder why you were cleaning?” said Hermione.

“Uncle Vernon said that my therapist told them to teach me not to make messes.” said Harry shaking his head. “They bought it, no fault of their own.”

Thirty-ninth paragraph.

“What owl?” asked Colin. “Did Hedwig get out?”
“Nope.” said Harry simply.

Fortieth paragraph, first sentence.

The Ministry officials stared in amazement. A letter from the wizarding world came and landed right in front of a whole living room full of muggles. Fudge smacked his forehead.

End of fortieth paragraph.

“That’s one sick joke.” said Fred shaking his head.

Forty-first paragraph, first sentence, second comma.

“I didn’t expect a letter to show up then and there, and I wasn’t all together sure what Uncle Vernon was going to do.” said Harry weakly.

End of forty-first paragraph.

“Sounds like the same glint in his eyes that was in the first scroll.” said Sirius weakly.

Dialogue line.

Forty-second paragraph.

Letter from the Ministry

“That explains it. Mafalda never looks at the monitoring instruments.” said Madam Bones angrily. “She just sends the letters, doesn’t matter if it’s life threatening or a magical creature near you.”

Forty-third paragraph.

Dialogue line.

“You…He’d better not touch you.” said Sirius quietly, a storm of thunderous fury raging in his eyes.

Forty-fourth paragraph.

Forty-fifth paragraph.

Little balls of light appeared out of the book and circled around.
“NO! I…he didn’t….!” shouted Sirius.

But it was too late.

They found themselves in the Dursleys living room, they saw the tail-lights of the Mason’s car light cast a red glow on the windows. Then they saw Vernon taking a hold of twelve year old Harry’s wrist and dragging him upstairs. Laughing as if some demon had taken a hold of him. Sirius looked to the present day Harry worriedly, but Harry only clutched at his arm and rubbed it absently. Younger Harry's face was contorted with fear and he tried to escape his uncle's grip, but the man's hand was so tightly clenched his wrist that there were bruises forming slowly on the white skin.

Like the Recollection Scrolls, the scene shifted and they found Harry, slightly bloodied but mostly bruised, gasping for air. Uncle Vernon was still in the room, looking down on the unfortunate boy, laughing.

“You’re never going to that freak place again, boy! You better get comfortable, you’re going to be here a long time.” he said, giving Harry one last kick to the stomach and then slamming the door.

The Watchers looked over to Harry, who was being almost squeezed to death by Remus, Sirius and Dr. Clark. Then they noticed Hedwig fluttering and clicking her beak angrily at the door. By the looks of it, she wanted to rip open the cage and attack the man who had hurt her master.

Twelve year old Harry remained on the floor and grasping at the covers of the bed. He slowly reached under the bed and pulled out a small box.

“Never thought I would need these so soon.” he said pulling out a crystal phial. He dipped his finger in the phial and gently rubbed it on the open sores on his face and on the bruises. He poured the rest of the potion down his throat. He felt the area where his ribs were and a little while later, he released an enormous sigh of relief.

“This beats snapping my bones back into place.” said Harry with a smile up to Hedwig.

Harry lifted himself slowly onto the bed and groaned as he laid down.

“Yeah, Dobby, I’m really safe here.” he said sarcastically as sleep claimed his pain racked body.

“Wish I could get away from here.”

The balls of light left each person and were brought back to the Great Hall. People shifted uneasily and dried their eyes quickly.

“I hate those things.” whimpered Remus, burying his face in Harry’s hair.

Madam Bones looked at Harry in horror. “Oh, Mr. Potter, I’m so sorry. We will be making restitution to you, believe me.” she wiped a tear away from eyes. “I-I’m sorry.”
Bill coughed nervously, he was unsure if he should continue.

“Please, Mr. Weasely,” said Dumbledore quietly, knowing what was on the young man’s mind. “The sooner Harry gets away from them, the better.”

“I agree.” said Sirius darkly.

Forty-sixth paragraph, second sentence.

Mrs. Weasely paled even further and stared at Harry.

“What excuse did he give the man to put the bars on your window?” asked Hermione, she was seething with anger more than Harry had ever seen her.

“He told the man that I had seizures and fell through the window.” said Harry rolling his eyes.

End of forty-sixth paragraph.

“THOSE MONSTERS!” screeched Mrs. Weasely and McGonagall.

Dumbledore had a hand to throat and the other to his mouth. He had once again taken the same shade of white that his beard was.

Forty-seventh paragraph, first sentence.

“Really?” asked Lionus, his jaw clenched but his voice soft.

“Not without getting smacked around even more.” said Harry.

“I am amazed you couldn’t find a way out.” said Lionus.

“The last confrontation sort of knocked the fight out of me.” said Harry quietly.

Dumbledore paled even further and gulped loudly. What had he done?

End of forty-seventh paragraph.

Forty-eighth paragraph, second sentence.

“That’s the understatement of the year.” said Fred snarling.

End forty-eighth paragraph.

Lavender and Parvati held each other tightly.
Forty-ninth paragraph, third sentence.

Madam Pomfrey’s lip trembled and blew her nose quickly. Harry took the opportunity to summon the bowls of candied chestnuts from down in the kitchen.

“Snacks anyone?” he said as he magicked the chestnuts into smaller bowls and levitated each small bowl to a person. He himself took a larger bowl and placed it on his lap, well within reaching distance of the three men and passing distance of Dumbledore.

“What are those?” asked Remus weakly, he was still reeling from the Scattered Shot.

“Candied chestnuts.” he said popping one of the small nuts in his mouth. No one else reached for the small chestnuts, they just looked at the ground, seething with anger towards the Dursleys.

Bill looked over to Harry with a curious expression, and then continued on.

End of forty-ninth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

“You’re starving death, you only have one bowl of soup to eat, and you give half of it to Hedwig?” said Dumbledore, looking at Harry with higher reverence.

Fiftieth paragraph.

“My cores were taking most of the nutrients from the food, before my body could even utilize it.” said Harry. “Speaking of which, how come the Ministry thought I could use magic outside of school? I was told by Madam Pomfrey the end of first year that I couldn’t even summon sparks out of my wand. Surely she sent a notice or something?”

“Mafalda must not have looked your file then either, it would have had it in big bold letters if you were suffering from magic fatigue.” said Madam Bones bitterly.

Fifty-first paragraph, second sentence.

“Most assuredly, Potter.” drawled Snape.

End of fifty-first paragraph.

“I, personally, would have come and persuaded them to let you go.” said Dumbledore with a furious growl in his voice.

Fifty-second paragraph.

“You’d better get some food in your stomach in the next few hours.” said Madam Pomfrey, getting more and more worried by the minute.
Fifty-third paragraph.

Bill held the book at arm’s length and looked slowly over to Harry.

“I’ve had some whacked out dreams before,” said Bill slowly, “but this one…” he whistled.

End of chapter.

“Ron came to save you?” said Sirius stunned.

“And Fred and George.” said Harry with a smile.

Sirius looked over to the three Weasely children.

“I could kiss you!” he said smiling broadly.

“Please don’t.” said Ron, Fred and George leaning back with their tongues sticking out.
“Who wants to read now?” asked Bill.

“Can I?” said Dr. Clark.

“Sure you want to?” said Remus faintly.

“Why not?” said Dr. Clark. “It sounds like Harry escapes.”

He took the book and read the title, he looked a little puzzled.

“Third Chapter title. What burrow are they talking about?” asked Dr. Clark.

“It’s sort of the name of our house.” said Fred shrugging.

“Oh! Okay!” said Dr. Clark with a smile. “Then he does get away.”

Dialogue line.

“You looked like you got hit with a brick. It was really funny.” said Ron with a smirk.

First paragraph, second sentence.

Several first years looked at the Weasely’s with shocked looks. Their faces slowly turned to intense excitement. They wanted to know what else the twins and Ron would do next.

End of first paragraph.

“Like we would let Ickle...cough...we could let Ron go on a rescue mission alone.” said Fred, catching himself quickly.

Dialogue line.

“Just looking at him, I should have known he wasn’t alright. Last we saw him, he had some meat on his bones, looking at him then, his skin was getting tighter to his bones. Hell, he didn’t look much better than Quirrell did in that Scattered Shot.” said Fred trying hard to suppress a shudder.
I didn’t know someone was stealing your mail, mate.” said Ron apologetically.

Umbridge strained against the ropes and the gag once again.

“What’s the problem now?” said Lionus rolling his eyes.

“I think it’s complaining that Mr. Weasely knew about it.” said Tempest looking over at Umbridge haughtily.

“How did you find out about Potter’s warning?” asked Fudge suspiciously.

“Mafalda never keeps secrets, she tells everyone who’ll listen who uses magic outside of school.” said Madam Bones rolling her eyes. “It’s no surprise that he heard about it.”

“Nice to know you guys believed me.” said Harry with a smirk.

“I think we were more shocked by how you looked and the bars on the window.” said George trying to apologize.

“That’s a gray area.” said Dumbledore with a smile.

“You don’t listen to him do you?” said Dr. Clark looking over at Ron with raised eyebrows.

“We planned to tell him off, but the speech sort of fell apart.” said Fred.

“When we saw him locked up.” said George quietly. “And saw the state he was in.”

“Did you just ask them to go and find a teacher and rescue you?” asked Sirius worriedly.

“I was kinda desperate.” said Harry shrugging.
Sirius stared at him with his mouth open.

Dialogue line.

“You make it sound like he’s a puppy.” said Anthony with a smirk.

Dialogue line.

“He’s got you there.” said Dean.

Dialogue line.

“There’s nothing we can’t do.” said Fred and George with broad smiles.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

“Now I think he really meant it.” said Fred quietly to George.

Dialogue line.

Second paragraph, first sentence.

“Wow, she’s brilliant.” said Dr. Clark leaning over and stroking Hedwig’s feathers.

“She sure is.” said Harry with a smile.

Second paragraph, second sentence.

"Yay! Jailbreak!" shouted Sirius happily.

"I knew you were going to say something like that." said Remus shaking his head.

Second paragraph, fourth sentence.

"Hey! They were heavy!" said Ron to the snickers that crept through the hall.

End of second paragraph.
"Not even snoring?" asked Fred looking confused.

"No, only Dudley snores." said Harry.

Third paragraph.

"Wait a minute. How old were you?" asked Lionus.

"Um, we were, what Fred, fourteen?" said George.

"Wow, you were able to drive with that much precision? I’m impressed." said Lionus with a smile.

Fred and George beamed at each other.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"Harry, wands, books, cauldrons and broomsticks can be replaced, you can’t be." said Dumbledore sadly over to Harry.

Harry shifted uneasily in the bowl.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"Never saw him look so desperate." said Fred shaking his head.

Dialogue line.

Fourth paragraph, first sentence.

"And you thought leaping cat-like was impressive? You guys looked like had practiced that." said Harry with a smile.

"Well, one never knows when one has to save someone from a second floor, locked bedroom and you need to climb over a car seat to do it." said Fred with mock dignity.

End of fourth paragraph.

"And you couldn’t think of that?" asked Lionus with a smirk.

"Do I look like I use hairpins?" said Harry with a smirk. “Besides, there isn’t one to find in the Dursley’s. Aunt Petunia only uses hairspray.”
“You knew how to do that?” said Fred in shock.

“Not with a hairpin, till you taught me.” said Harry with a smile. “I can do it with a paper clip, but there wasn’t one in the room either, and my knapsack was in the trunk.”

Dialogue line.

“FRED!” yelled Mrs. Weasley. She didn’t want her son learning such things.

“Mum, it was either that or magic. We weren’t going to leave Harry there.” said Fred tiredly.

(Of course you shouldn’t leave him there, but….never mind…it was for a good cause….” said Mrs. Weasely in a guilty tone.

“I think Mum is still reeling from the whole ‘not believing the bars and starvation’ thing.” said George to Fred in a whisper.

“Who taught you how to do that?” asked Remus wonderingly.

“Umm…the source of our knowledge must be kept secret.” said George unconvincingly.

Harry, Sirius, and Remus all saw Mr. Weasely mouth, “Me” behind his wife’s back.

Fifth paragraph.

“Not bad, boys, not bad.” said Nightstrike with a broad grin.

Fred and George beamed at each other.

Dialogue line.

“So who was making sure the car didn’t fall, with Ron in it?” asked Sirius over to Fred.

“It’s an automatic hover.” said Fred shrugging.

Dialogue line.

“I didn’t hear that, did you George?” said Fred.

“Nope, good thing we jumped that step.” said George staring wide-eyed.

“And jumped over it as we went up the stairs.” said Fred gulping.

Sixth paragraph, first sentence.
“There wasn’t a whole lot there, just a few notebooks and few of Hedwig’s things.” said Ron.

End of sixth paragraph.

“I thought Harry was going to have a strained neck, he looked around so quickly.” said George with a small smile.

“We looked in that cupboard, the one where your stuff was, please say it wasn’t THAT cupboard you slept in.” said Fred with a worried look. He of course knew the answer, but he wished it weren’t true.

“Umm….” said Harry looking down.

“How could you fit in there?” said George looking confused and angry all at the same time.

“I’m small, I can get into almost anything just fine.” said Harry shrugging.

Seventh paragraph.

“I wanted to say to you: ‘What in blazes do you have in this thing?’” said Fred staring at Harry.

“Almost everything I owned.” said Harry with a smile.

Eighth paragraph.

“We all stopped when we heard that.” said Ron with a smile.

Dialogue line.

Ninth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

“You got out of there without waking them up! Good work!” said Remus with a bright smile.

“Not quite.” said the twins, Ron and Harry.

Tenth paragraph, first sentence, first comma.

“Screech?” asked Bill.

“Did Petunia wake up?” said Snape with a smirk.

“No, we forgot something important.” said Fred.

“VERY important.” said Harry stroking Hedwig’s feathers.
“Hedwig? Oh no! You forgot her!” said Dr. Clark looking over to Harry in horror.

“At least you remembered her before you left.” said Luna dreamily.

“She was mad at me for the longest time though, especially after what happened when we arrived at Hogwarts.” said Harry

“What happened?” asked Sirius.

“You’ll…um…uh…” said Harry.

“Let me guess, ‘you’ll find out later’?” said Sirius looking at him with one eyebrow raised.

“Yeah.” said Harry scratching the back of his head.

“Well, do I have to wait very long?” said Sirius tapping his forefinger on his knee.

“No, not really.” said Harry with a slight smile as Hedwig hooted loudly.

“Too soon for her liking, I think.” said Dumbledore with a smile.

“Better hurry it up!” said Bill worriedly.

“Occupied!” shouted Fred.

Despite the tension, a ripple of laughter wandered about the hall.

“NO!” shouted Sirius and Remus.

“I’m gonna kill him…” muttered Dr. Clark, his knuckles tightened on the side of the book.

Dumbledore closed his eyes and rocked back and forth in his purple plush rocking chair. His jaw clenched.
Harry took notice of Dumbledore’s rocking, which was quickly getting faster and faster, he leaned forward and magicked a small phial of Calming Draught to slightly bounce off the tip of his crooked nose. Dumbledore’s eyes snapped open and recoiled slightly from the crystal phial.

“Drink it, please.” said Harry quietly.

Dumbledore smiled over to Harry, guilt written all over his face. He put the phial to his lips and drank the contents down in one gulp.

Thirteenth paragraph.

Madam Pomfrey Dr. Clark sent stern looks over to the twins and Ron.

Sirius noticed this, “What’s up, Doc?”

Hermione, Harry and other Muggleborns began laughing out loud. Even the sides of Dr. Clark’s mouth twitched.

“What’s so funny?” asked Sirius.

“It’s…what you just said is something a cartoon character in the Muggle world says.” said Harry with a smile.

Sirius thought quickly. “Is it at least a cool character?” he said with a smile.

“And here I thought James was always the egotistic one of the group.” said Lupin with a smile and fond remembrance of his old friend.

“Oh, yeah, Bugs Bunny was always brilliant.” said Harry trying not to laugh.

“…I quoted a bunny?” said Sirius with a disbelieving look.

“You asked.” said Hermione with a cheeky grin.

“Wish I hadn’t. A bunny?” he shook his head quickly. “Anyway, why are you looking pissed off at Ron and the twins?”

“They could’ve hurt Harry, pulling him the way they did.” said Dr. Clark. He then turned to Harry quickly. “Were you sore, later?”

“A little bit, but I would rather be sore at the Weasely’s then trapped at the Dursley’s.” said Harry with a weak smile.

“Point taken.” said Dr. Clark. “But how was your ankle.”

“Bruised.” muttered Harry.

Dialogue line.

Dumbledore heaved a sigh and continued to rock back and forth in his chair.

“How DARE YOU ACT INDIFFERENT?” screeched Mrs. Weasely.
“He’s not Mrs. Weasely, he just took a calming draught. A freshly brewed, super strong one.” said Harry.

“It’s true, Molly.” said McGonagall.

“I just made it this morning; it’s what you should have received the other day. Dumbledore now cannot even try and work himself up, which may be for the best.” drawled Snape.

“I don’t see how!” said Mrs. Weasely.

“I don’t feel like electrocuting him again, Mrs. Weasely.” said Harry simply.

Mrs. Weasely paled and looked down, shame etched across her face. “Sorry.”

“It’s alright Molly, I would be upset too.” said Dumbledore kindly. “I am trying to stir up some anger, but I can’t seem to do so at the moment. I’ve never had a Calming Draught this strong before, it is an odd sensation.”

“I would rather you have that sensation, than me shocking you.” said Harry with a smile.

Fourteenth paragraph.

The students cheered and applauded the twins and Ron. Mr. Weasely gave each of his youngest sons a large hug.

Mrs. Weasely was still ashamed of her not believing her sons and snapping at Dumbledore for wishing to avoid another heart attack.

Dialogue line.

Fifteenth paragraph, first sentence.

Sirius smiled and gave Harry a hug.

End of fifteenth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Remus lightly smacked the back of Harry’s head.

“Yipe! What?” said Harry rubbing the back of his head.

“Don’t goad them. I don’t want to hear that they were horrible to you next year.” said Remus sternly.

“Well…” said Harry teasingly. “They weren’t the ones mean to me next year.”

“You’re going to love what happens next summer.” said Fred eagerly.

“Can’t wait.” said Remus skeptically.
Sixteenth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

“That was so nice of you to think of her.” said Katie. “Especially after you almost left her.” she finished with a smirk.

“I thought I would try and make it up to her.” said Harry shrugging slightly.

Seventeenth paragraph.

Hedwig’s fans all sighed with enjoyment, while Ron had to dodge his mother’s glare, she didn’t know her youngest son could pick locks too. Harry, Sirius and Remus all smiled at each other. Mr. Weasely’s secret was safe with them.

Dialogue line.

Eighteenth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

“That’s all you could say?” said Sirius looking over to the two of them in shock.

“Hey! It was late at night and we were still riding off the excitement.” said Fred defensively.

End of dialogue set.

Dialogue line.

Nineteenth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

“Howe-elves can’t lie. It is physically impossible for them to.” said Dumbledore with a smile. “Unless they are ordered to do so...but it still causes them great pain...they're such honest creatures.”

Dialogue set.

“At the time, the entire Slytherin house.” said Harry with a smile.
“The one and only.” said Ron with a smirk.

Several students turned and stared at Malfoy. He looked down, unwilling to meet the other students’ gaze.

“He was proven innocent!” shouted Fudge.

“Hang on,” said Harry as he whipped out his black notebook and copied down something on a spare piece of parchment. “Here you go, Madam Bones.” he said handing her the piece of parchment.

She took it and read it slowly, her eyes getting wider and wider until the monocle couldn’t hold itself to her face.

Ranger Lionus walked over and read what was written, his eyes widening as well. “It would seem,” he said without taking his eyes away from the parchment. “that I need to utilize my authority and request to my chief that he perform an audit of your Ministry goings-on.”

Fudge gulped loudly, however Madam Bones agreed whole-heartedly. “Things must be changed, for the better. I will fully cooperate with your superior.”

“He’ll appreciate it.” said Lionus with a smirk. “The chief’s getting on in years and he isn’t all that active in the field anymore.”

“Mind your tongue, Lionus. He still manages to beat you in the training room every time.” said Dr. Nicodemus, with a smirk.

Nightstrike and Tempest shared a broad smile.

“Are there really rumors about me?” said Malfoy quickly.

“There are rumors about everyone.” said Harry. “Some are proven true, some aren’t. Your father’s rumors were easy to prove.”
“Ouch, that really, really hurts.” said Bill with a smirk.

Dialogue line.

“We do.” said Malfoy softly. “Two of them, one’s assigned to do house work and be the valet to my father and I and the other is my mother’s personal maid.”

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set, first sentence, second sentence.

“Dobby should have gone to my house, Mum would have loved him.” said Ron whispering to Hermione, who sat quietly.

She was torn between trying to stand up for what she called ‘Elf Rights’ and what Harry and Dumbledore had told everyone about ‘Elf Culture’. She knew slavery was wrong, and she knew that Ron and Harry believed that too. But…could there be a situation in the Magical world where creatures depend on the work they are given? That if they had no family to care for, that they would perish? She wasn’t sure what to believe now, at least on a ‘SPEW’ perspective.

End of dialogue set.

“There isn’t anything wrong with ‘The Burrow’.” said the Weaselys and Harry.

“And I don’t know why a house-elf wouldn’t be at the Weasely home, it should be large enough…” said Lionus quietly, looking over at all the Weasely children.

Twenty-first paragraph.

“Malfoy shifted nervously in his seat, he had toyed with the idea of pranking Harry in his own home.

Twenty-second paragraph.

“You never know when people mention danger you need to retain CONSTANT VIGILANCE!” said Tonks yelling the last part a few inches away from Moody’s ear. As he pulled himself off the floor, cursing all the way, she moved her chair quickly and sat beside Dumbledore, grinning cheekily over to her mentor.

Dialogue line.

“Errol?” asked a Slytherin third year.

“He was the last hatchling of the owl I had with me when I went to school.” said Mr. Weasely with
“I never did understand that. How come Percy got to get two things for becoming Prefect when Bill and Ron only got the one thing each?” asked Fred.

“Well, that was a mistake, no offense Percy, that your father and I made. I got him the robes. I forgot to tell your father that I had already rewarded him, so he went out and got Percy his own owl. Ron, dear, did you want something else to go with that broom? To make up for it?” said Mrs. Weasely anxiously.

“No Mum, the broom was more than enough.” said Ron with a smile.

“What reason did you have anyway?” said George looking puzzled.

“None of your business.” said Percy quickly.

“It was a girl than.” said Fred with a smirk. Percy turned bright red.

“I wanted to call you a backseat driver.” said Fred with a smirk.

Both Charlie and Bill snorted loudly. That was never going to happen. Their mother knew everything that goes on at home.

“Um..er..dad…uh..” said Ron quickly.

“It’s alright Ron. My department is pretty boring next to the others.” said Mr. Weasely with a
“It’s a very important department. That’s way we give Ministries full funding for the department, to pay for the resources and the people to work in it.” said Lionus with a smile.

The Weaselys looked over to the Ranger curiously while Fudge shifted nervously.

“God man! Glad someone besides the Aurors has a work ethic.” said Dr. Nicodemus approvingly.

Lionus stared at the book, “That can’t be right, I sign the monetary release every month and it states there are supposed to be ten people in there.”

Fudge gulped loudly.

Lionus looked up to him quickly, his eyes blazing, “Explains why I only get two reports every month.”

Fudge ceased his nervous antics and glared at Mr. Weasely menacingly. Who took his turn at shifting about.

Harry looked at Mr. Weasely worriedly, and then turned his attention to the Ranger, who was snarling at the Minister. The Ranger snapped his fingers and Nightstrike came swooping over to Lionus’ side. The Ranger captain whispered in Nightstrikes’ ear and in an instant, the werewolf was gone.
“Hey, that town is near the area we were going to take you fishing! Man, you almost met the Weaselys early.” said Dr. Clark with a broad smile.

Fred and George both gave a loud crow like a rooster, to the amusement of their fellow students.

“I love the Burrow.” sighed Harry fondly. Mr. Weasely and Mrs. Weasely beamed at each other.

“As do I, it is such a restful place.” said Dumbledore with a smile. Mr. and Mrs. Weasely beamed even brighter. Despite her recent disagreements with Dumbledore, she was happy that even he thought highly of their home.

“Yeah, about once a year we need to reinforce the spells.” said Mr. Weasely with a smile.

“Why are you living in a refurbished pigpen? No offense meant, but I pay you enough to own a large house. Why do you have need to live there?” said Lionus growing genuinely concerned.

“How much do you think you pay dad, sir?” said Bill looking over to the Ranger Captain with raised brows.

“I signed the release for your father to get paid about twenty-five galleons an hour. He’s been in that department for so long and his reports are always good.” said Lionus, when he saw their disbelieving looks; he turned an even more furious glare towards the Minister. “How much do you get paid, Mr. Weasely?” he said without looking at the man he was addressing.

“about five galleons’s an hour.” said Mr. Weasely looking confused.

“I AM going to find out where the money went, and you better hope that I’m in a fair mood when I do, Cornelius. If I’m not, I’ll send you to the same place I’m gonna send her!” he shouted.

He then turned quickly over to Mr. Weasely, “Expect a check for back wages, Arthur.” he said shortly.

Mrs. Weasely gripped her husband’s arm and smiled. “I always said you were worth more than what they were paying you.”

“You did, you really did.” he said giving her a kiss.
“An outhouse would be wonderful compared to Privet Drive.” said Ron with a smirk.

“True, but I loved your house the moment I saw it. It was perfect, you couldn’t believe how jealous I was of you.” said Harry with a smile.

“….what?” said Ron weakly.

“I would have given everything I had, just to be you for ten minutes. Have a home that’s really a home, a family I could hold and all that went with it. I still wish that quite often.” said Harry with an even more sincere smile.

“You don’t need to wish anymore, you’ve got it.” said Sirius hugging him.

“You two are way too cheesy for me.” said Remus with a smirk.

“Go howl at a moon, Moony.” Sirius shot back.

Remus laughed loudly.

“Twenty-eighth paragraph.

Dialogue set.

“I wouldn’t have bought that.” whispered Mrs. Weasely to her husband, who snickered.

Dialogue line.

“Twenty-ninth paragraph, first sentence.

“What happened? What frightened Ron that much?” said Neville quickly.

End of twenty-ninth paragraph.

“Thirtieth paragraph, first sentence, first comma.

“That’ll do it.” said the Weasely children, Harry, Sirius, Remus and Dumbledore.

End of thirtieth paragraph.

Sirius gave a bark-like laugh. “She is over-protective of her cubs, not to mention everyone else’s cubs too.”

“I’ll take that as a compliment.” said Mrs. Weasely with a smirk.

“Good! Cause I meant it as one.” said Sirius with a grin.
Harry thought back to that day and gulped loudly. Mrs. Weasley would never hurt him like his Uncle would, or at all, but he was more afraid of upsetting her than he ever was of upsetting Uncle Vernon.

“It didn’t come out that way.” said Fred, Ron, Harry and Mrs. Weasely.

“What did it sound like then.” said George who looked hurt.

“Like a mouse being stepped on.” said Fred with a smirk.

“What time did you see the car gone, mum?” asked Charlie eagerly.

“I saw them pull out of the driveway.” said Mrs. Weasely sending a stern look to her three youngest sons.

“Damn, I knew she heard you tripping over that bucket.” said George to Fred.

“How was I to know that dad magicked it to fill itself full of chicken feed in the middle of the night?” said Fred defending himself.

“You should have known! We watched him enchant it the day before!” said George.

“Oh…right…” said Fred looking sheepish.
“Would rather not to be perfectly honest.” muttered Fred to George. Neither one of them was all that forgiving to Percy yet.

End of dialogue set.

“I think the first one would have been the most important one.” said Kingsley in his calm, deep voice.

“I know, but…just….” said Mrs. Weasley.

“We understood you mum.” said Fred with a smile.

Thirty-third paragraph.

“You fling yourself into a fight with a troll, and a dark wizard and you back away from an angry mother?” said Dean with a smile on his lips.

“You weren’t there.” said Ron and Harry together.

Dialogue line.

“I was really taken aback. I had never seen anyone do an about-face like that.” said Harry with a smile to Mrs. Weasely.

“She’s good at that, she can soothe and comfort one kid and scream at the other for getting the other one hurt.” said Fred with a smirk.

“Happens a lot at home.” said George.

“Especially with you two for brothers.” said Ginny with a grin.

Thirty-fourth paragraph.

“You looked so pale, I was afraid you were either going to faint or get sick.” said Ron with a small smile.

“Oh, dear! I didn’t mean to frighten you!” said Mrs. Weasely anxiously.

“I was a little tired, Mrs. Weasely, and hungry. I was jumping at the least little thing.” said Harry soothingly.

“I hope you got to eat something and get some sleep.” said Remus quickly.

“I got to eat, but after a while, I wasn’t tired at all.” said Harry. “Adrenaline is a fickle visitor.”

“You’re talking like Dumbledore again.” said Sirius with a smirk.
“You still have wonderful posture, Potter.” said Madam Pomfrey.

“It comes from Aunt Marge visiting constantly.” said Harry bitterly.

“I don’t see why you should sound so bitter…” said Madam Bones.

“She hates it when anyone slouches, with the great exception of Dudley. You’ll find out in the next book why I despise her.” said Harry with a snarl.

“Any other wizard house would pale in comparison.” said Harry with a grin.

“Wait’ll you see ours, after I clean all the kitten crap out of there.” said Sirius beaming.

“That clock is such a wondrous thing, Molly. I greatly admire it.” said Dumbledore with a broad smile.

“It was a wedding gift from my grandmother.” said Mrs. Weasley with a smile. “She used it for her own family.”

“I looked at those books while I was there; I was really interested in the ‘Enchantments in Baking’ one.” said Harry. “There was a few recipes that attracted my attention and I wrote them down quick…let me see…oh here’s the one I wanted to make but I haven’t had the time. ‘Black Magic Cake’.”

“Black Magic Cake?” said Sirius slowly.

“Oh it’s delicious!” said Mrs. Weasley earnestly. “Remus, I think you would like it, it’s a chocolate cake with a taste of coffee.”

“If it has chocolate in it or on it, he’ll eat it.” said Sirius with a smirk.

“Sirius is a big fan of hers.” said Remus with a smirk.

“Hey! She’s got a great singing voice!” said Sirius defensively.

“That’s not the only thing you like about her.” said Remus slyly.
Thirty-seventh paragraph, first sentence.

“I cook when I’m pissed too, but it’s better if there is no one else in the room. I tend to fling things around.” said Harry with a smile.

“Like what?” said Sirius quickly.

“Knives, plates, you name it, it’s flying.” said Harry with a smile.

End of thirty-seventh paragraph.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

“I could tell that he was just about or near starving to death, but I was so angry that I didn’t even give my children the chance to explain further. I only thought of the four of them crashing to the ground.” said Mrs. Weasley shamefully. “I’m so sorry that I didn’t listen to you boys, back then!”

“It’s okay mom, it must have sounded like we were just trying to get out of trouble.” said George quickly.

“And beside Mrs. Weasley, you made me all better.” said Harry with child-like grin.

“But…” said Mrs. Weasley worriedly.

“Hindsight is twenty-twenty.” said Dumbledore and Harry.

“We all have parts of our lives that we wish we could go back and change it. I have several points in my life that I wish I could go back and change.” said Dumbledore kindly, “Due to these books, the list of moments are growing with each passing day.” he finished with a grieved look.

Dialogue set, third sentence.

“What day was it?” asked Dean.

“It was a Tuesday.” said Harry.

“You wouldn’t have been able to get out of the room on your own if they had waited till Friday.” said Madam Pomfrey bitterly.

Dialogue set, fourth sentence, first comma.

“You went from eating only half a can of soup for a meal to eating enough for two people? That won’t go well with your stomach.” said Dr. Clark worriedly.

“I got sick later in the garden, yeah.” said Harry quietly.

“That’ll happen when you aren’t used to eating that much.” said Dr. Clark sadly.
“Oh, I’m sorry, Harry!” said Mrs. Weasely horrified.

“It’s alright, Mrs. Weasely, I didn’t throw up everything.” said Harry trying to comfort her. “I managed to keep some of it down.”

End of dialogue set.

Thirty-eighth paragraph.

“That charm is really handy when I cook here at school.” said Harry with a broad smile. “Love to cook, hate to do the damn dishes.”

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

“Were you eating Fred?” asked Lee in a whisper. “Or was your mom still freaking out?”

“No, I was eating. She always tells me to close my mouth. It’s a reflex with her.” he said with a smile.

“Cause you do eat with your mouth open.” said George. “It’s nasty when you eat mashed potatoes.”

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set, second sentence, first comma.

“So you didn’t believe him?” asked Sirius frowning.

“I could see that he was very thin, but…I just couldn’t believe that any family could be so cruel.” said Mrs. Weasely anxiously.

“I know just how you feel Molly. First year in the Emergency room and the things I saw, not just the accidents, but all the abuse and self-inflicted wounds, I couldn’t believe people could do things like that. It was so horrible.” said Dr. Clark, a full-body shiver ran through his body. He then gave Harry a tight one-arm hug. “I saw you when you first came in there and you….I wanted to spend the rest of my life protecting you the best I could.” he said with a broad smile.

End of dialogue set.

“Well, at least you’re being gentle with him.” said Dr. Clark kindly. “He’d had enough going on that summer.”

Thirty-ninth paragraph.
Ginny sent a stern glare around the school, but she couldn’t stop one person who wolf-whistled. She turned slowly over Harry with a smirk, Harry, in turn, smiled back and shrugged his shoulders.

“I’m going to get you for that.” said Ginny, still smirking.

“Like last time? I shaking in my shoes.” he grinned cheekily.

“Ginny,” said Ron in an undertone to Harry. “My sister. She’s been talking about you all summer.”

Dialogue set, first sentence.

“I think we’ll have a bit of lunch real quick. While we read.” said McGonagall quickly, she had heard a loud grumble coming from several different students, she whipped out her wand and summoned the table full of food.

Dr. Clark waited until Harry had returned with the four food-filled plates to resume his reading.

End of dialogue set.

“Food never stays long at the Burrow.” said Mrs. Weasely smiling at all her sons who all were wolfing down their sandwiches.

Dialogue line.

“Oh no you don’t, you stay up all night, you don’t go to bed during the day.” said Bill with a smirk.

Dialogue line.

“Well, at least she gave you a fun job to do.” said Charlie. “So she wasn’t completely pissed at you. She believed you a little bit.”

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

“This is when my adrenaline visited me, wasn’t tired at all for the rest of the day.” said Harry with a smile. “But boy, did I crash that night.”

Fortieth paragraph.

“Oh that’s sad; you really shouldn’t kick them out. They bring good fortune.” said Luna dreamily.
“Gnomes tend to come back if they really like the garden.” said Neville grinning.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

“After doing it, I’ve had duller work.” said Harry with a smile. “It was actually a lot of fun.”

End of dialogue set.

Remus and Kingsley both groaned loudly.

“Who is he?” asked Dr. Clark.

“Worthless waste of hair tonic and space.” said Remus stiffly.

“And that’s being kind.” said Kingsley with a scowl.

“How do you two know him?” asked Neville.

“I was in school with that…” Remus coughed loudly into his hand.

“And he just about stalked me all about the Ministry a few years ago.” said Kingsley, his fingers massaging the bridge of his nose.

Mrs. Weasely blushed quickly, while her husband smiled broadly.

Forty-first paragraph.

Dialogue line.

“Pick up, spin around and let ‘er fly!” said the Weasely children and Harry, who all smiled broadly.

Forty-second paragraph, second sentence.

“Did you read that book?” asked Ginny eagerly.

“Yep.” Harry said simply. “Wasn’t worth the time I spent reading it.” he finished shaking his head.

Forty-second paragraph, third sentence.

Sirius blinked several times and then turned slowly to face the young man in the bowl. He had a smirk on his lips.

“No, I don’t go for blokes.” said Harry smacking Sirius about the head with a cushion.
“And if you did, you could really do better.” said Kingsley with a smirk.

Forty-second paragraph, fourth sentence, third comma.

“That was a no brainer.” said Harry with a smirk. “There’s no one else he’d have on his book covers.”

End of forty-second paragraph.

“Why would you?” said Remus gagging on his plate of turkey sandwiches.

“He was quite dapper.” said Mrs. Weasely turning red.

Dialogue set, second sentence, first comma.

“He should, seeing as how he’s almost always been one.” said Remus bitterly.

“I don’t think I remember this Lockhart guy…” said Sirius questioningly.

“He’s the one that flirted with Lily and, I think you would sort of call it, tried to flirt with James.” said Remus carefully.

“Dazzle Gums? That was Lockhart?” said Sirius with widened eyes.

“Yeah.” said Remus nodding.

“He flirted with both of my parents?” said Harry staring at Remus dumbfounded.

Yeah, there were several people at school that played either straight, both sides of the field or the same side, some were secretive about it, some were proud. He was downright obnoxious about it. Thought himself ‘God’s gift to women and men.” said Remus shaking his head.

“The only girls who dated him were only after his looks, the guys, who were either bi or homosexual, wouldn’t touch him with a twenty foot broomstick.” said Sirius with a small chuckle. “They knew what he was all about. Imagine your dad’s surprise when ‘Dazzle Gums’ asked him out on a date. Your dad ran and hid in the Gryffindor Quidditch Locker Room. We had to use the map to find him, and had to spend the whole weekend coaxing him from the rafters.” he finished laughing loudly.

“Lockhart asking him out scared him that bad?” said Harry

“Not so much the whole ‘a bloke asking another bloke out’ part. Your Great-Uncle Rudolph Potter is homosexual. His boyfriend Leroy is always good for a laugh, great cook too.” said Sirius thoughtfully. “It was the fact that ‘Dazzle Gums’ asked your dad out. James couldn’t show his face for three days. Freaking hilarious, it was.”

“I have an actual living relative?” said Harry dumbstruck. He was more focused on the knowledge of a living blood relative, than funny stories about his least favorite school teacher.

“Yeah, we’d take you to meet them both, but um…they’re in Africa right now. They’ve been down there for the past…what Moony…fourteen years. They study animals and plants down there. When they come back to Europe, we’ll take you to them. They would absolutely adore you. They did when you were a baby. Uncle Rudolph and Leroy would always come over and dote on you something fierce, just like Batty.” said Sirius with a broad smile up to Bathilda who blushed heavily.

“They know about Lily and James right?” said Sirius asking Remus quickly.

“I tried finding them years ago, but all I was doing was chasing their dust. I think, last I heard, they were in the Congo.” said Remus thoughtfully. “So I don’t think they do know. When they get back, I guess we’ll have to tell them.”

End of dialogue set.

“It’s got the basics, but nothing more than what anybody else would know from common sense.” said McGonagall with an irritated sniff.

Dialogue line.

“No different than dozens of others. I don’t blame you, Molly, he’s always been a charmer.” said Remus and Sirius.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

“Wow, Arthur, you don’t care about this little crush your wife has?” said Tonks with a cheeky grin.

“I wasn’t worried, I knew she fancied him, but she wouldn’t run off with him even if the opportunity arose. She wouldn’t leave me or the kids.” said Mr. Weasely. He and his wife shared a loving kiss.

End of dialogue set.

“What would have happened if there was a gnome in the garden?” said Sirius looking over to her sternly.

“I don’t know, they’ve always had the garden cleared of gnomes. I never had to dream up anything, I guess they would have had to finish de-gnoming and then weed a patch of the garden.” said Mrs. Weasely thinking carefully.

“Yeah, when Mum tells you to do a chore in the house, you do it and do it right.” said Bill and the rest of the Weasely children. “But de-gnoming the garden is always fun, so we do it right.”
“Oh thank you, dear!” said Mrs. Weasley happily.

Dr. Clark read a head a little and smirked. “Hold that thought.”

“Fred and George are the ones, who are supposed to cut the grass, but we were all sort of worried about you that Arthur and I couldn’t bring ourselves to have the children do much of anything.” said Mrs. Weasley looking over to Harry.

“I loved your garden, I still do.” said Harry with a broad smile.

“Professor Sprout loves to come and look at the plants and our pond every summer.” said Bill with a broad smile.

“It has such a lovely specimen of fresh water gillyweed growing in in your pond, Molly.” said Sprout eagerly.

“And they don’t move, made of some sort of clay or something.” said Ron.

“Thank goodness, he’d frighten small children if he looked like a garden gnome.” said Sirius smirking.

“I remember going over to your house a year ago or so, Seamus, and your mom asked me to go find a potato for the stew she was cooking, scared me out of my mind when I saw a body with it and it was talking to me.” said Dean laughing.
“You really are way too kind sometimes.” whispered Sirius kissing the top of Harry’s head. Harry blushed heavily.

“And they really enjoy it actually. They get a kick out of it.” said George with a grin. “Didn’t find that out till the following year, though.”

“Pitiful.” said Fred smugly.

“And did you Fred?” said Ron cheekily.

“Shut up.” said Fred quickly.

“His flew back behind him and smacked the house.” said Harry with a large smile. Fred turned beet red when the students and guests laughed good-naturedly.

“Aww! That was nice of you!” said Parvati.

“It bit you?” said Dr. Clark quickly and closed the book quickly and turning his body to examine Harry’s fingers.

“This was three years ago.” said Harry as he watched Dr. Clark examine his fingers with worry.

“That explained why Ron hurried in and grabbed a bandage.” said Ginny with a small smile.

“Were you hurt badly?” said Dr. Clark quickly.

“No, it was just a small bite. Ron overreacted.” said Harry quickly, giving Ron a quick warning look.
Forty-eighth paragraph.

Dialogue set.

“Professor Sprout told me that they come up to have a look and to get in line for the de-gnoming.” said George beaming up to the Herbology Professor.

Forty-ninth paragraph.

“They’re pretending, makes it more funny for them when they sneak on back.” said Fred smirking.

Dialogue set.

“They are funny! It’s the only reason I go out and sit in the garden every night. They pull pranks on each other.” said Mr. Weasley grinning broadly. “Reminds me of two twins I know.” he added looking over to his twin sons.

They heard this and started shoving each other saying “Gerloff!”

Fiftieth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Fifty-first paragraph.

“That’s cute! They’re so excited when you come home!” said Tonks joyfully.

“I may have a boring office job, but they love the in-the-field stories I bring home.” said Mr. Weasley with a broad grin.

Malfoy looked down; his father was never this open with him. His father only talked about their family history. There were no funny stories coming from his father’s lips, only serious business.

Fifty-second paragraph.

“By the way, thanks for the new robes I received that year for Christmas, Harry.” said Mr. Weasley smiling over to the youth in the bowl.

Dialogue set.

“Speaking of him…” said a voice by the door.

It was Nightstrike and he had ahold of Mundungus by the collar. In his other hand, there was a large cream colored bag, and it was bulging out at the sides.

“I was coming back from the Burrow when I caught this man coming out of your father’s house.”
“What?” said Sirius and the Weasleys together.

“I’ll start with the Burrow: I was ordered by Captain Lionus to seize your muggle artifacts, Arthur,” said Nightstrike.

“My…my…why?” said Mr. Weasley stuttering loudly.

“If we seized the things, than that would be the end of it, your Ministry can’t touch you on them. Even if we hand them back to you, just as we took them. All you would have to do is pay a fine.” said Lionus over to Mr. Weasley.

“What fine? How much?” said Mr. Weasley earnestly.

“Six hundred thousand galleons.” said Lionus quietly. Mr. Weasley paled. “I know you can’t pay it, I’ll discuss how you’ll get your belonging later. Now, what was Mr. Fletcher doing in the place in which you found him?” he finished, he knew the significance of the place in which Mundungus was found.

“Looting.” said Nightstrike simply. Dropping the bag gently down to the ground, “This is all yours Mr. Black. I however, removed one item, its back at our headquarters. It has some significance, nothing you need worry about at the moment.” he said cryptically.

“What are you going to do to Mundungus?” asked George and Fred.

“Nothing, except detain him till the books are over, just to waste his time.” said Nightstrike with a grin. “It’ll spare other people from falling victim to his sticky fingers”

“Good, he could learn a thing or two from this experience.” said Lionus with a smirk.

Fifty-third paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set.

“You don’t want to know what they were doing.” said Mr. Weasely waringly. He wasn’t enjoying himself as he was, he didn’t want to have all of his treasures taken away, and as for the fine, how was he going to raise or save up that much money?

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set, third sentence.

“I wonder if that’s what happened to a few sets of my keys. I never did find them.” said Dr. Clark absently.

End of dialogue set.
“This won’t go well.” said Remus with a small smile.

“I wasn’t too sure why she was bringing it up, we talked about this a year ago, I already got chewed out for it.” said Mr. Weasely with a small smile to his wife.

Mrs. Weasley knew what was troubling her husband and reassured him that they were going to get his things back.

“Explains why you asked me all those questions.” said Madam Bones with a slight smile.

“I didn’t mean it like that, dear.” said Mrs. Weasley anxiously.

“I wanted to hug you, right then and there.” said Harry with a grin.

“I also loved how your eyes didn’t look for this stupid thing.” said Harry pointing to his scar.

“I had the feeling you were tired of people looking for it.” said Mr. Weasely with a smile.
Laughter rang throughout the hall.

“Why can’t my dad be that easy going?” said Dean jealously.

“Mine too.” said Draco quietly.

“And that is why I don’t scold often, I never can, unless it’s a major incident.” said Mr. Weasely smiling at his wife.

“Aww! Harry noticed your eyes!” said Tonks squealing with glee.

“Wow, mate, you actually notice eye color?” said Ron in a whisper; he was rewarded with an elbow to the stomach, delivered by Hermione.

“That’s nice.” said Hermione with a smirk.

“I meant that she’s just as nuts as Fred and George.” said Ron defensively.

“It didn’t come out that way, mate.” said Harry with a smile.

“Do you have to notice everything?” said Ron exasperatedly.

“Sorry.” said Harry apologetically.

“What? It wasn’t that warm in there.” said Ron inquisitively.

“Like I said the other day, he’s delicate!” said Madam Pomfrey. Harry groaned and buried himself in Sirius’ shoulder.

“It wasn’t the temperature.” mumbled Harry.
“With all that orange, I was amazed that you liked blue.” said Harry with a smile.

“I’d love to join the team.” said Ron dreamily.

“With you as keeper, I’m sure they’d win a lot more.” said Harry and Hermione.

However, they couldn’t stop a few Slytherins from pretending to cough in their hands.

“Do you have the issue where he goes to that place in America, what is it…that Ripley’s Believe or Not building?” asked Ernie earnestly.

“Yeah, I got it up in my trunk.” said Ron. “Why do you want it?”

“I haven’t read it all yet, I lost my copy.” said Ernie excitedly “Can I read it later?”

“Sure, I guess.” said Ron shrugging.

“Boys and their comic books.” said Hermione shaking her head.

Remus, Sirius, Ron, Harry and Hermione all scowled.

“What’s with you guys?” asked Dr. Clark, hearing all the grinding teeth.

“Wait till the third book, Sam.” said Remus angrily.

“We use those for poker night.” said Harry with a laugh.

“At least my room didn’t have bars on the windows and a cat flap on the door.” said Ron quietly.
“I’m still amazed he doesn’t’ wake you up in the middle of the night.” said Ron.

“He did the second night. First night I was just too tired, second I wasn’t used to the noise. I went downstairs and slept on the sofa.” said Harry with a smile. “After dawn, and after I ran around outside a bit, I went back up to your room and slept for the rest of the morning.”

“You get up at dawn?” said Fred and George incredulously.

“I always do, unless I had a rough day the day before.” said Harry shrugging.

End of chapter.

“I should have turned bright red, we saw the McFinn’s, they had an awesome house.” said Ron quietly.

“Who’d like to read now?” said Dr. Clark.

“I will!” said Professor Sprout eagerly.

Dr. Clark handed the book to her and returned to the bowl.

“Is the next chapter as good as the one I read?” said Dr. Clark eagerly.

“The next chapter is Fourth chapter title.” said Professor Sprout.

“Nope.” said Harry.
“So, we get to hear more about your take on Diagon Alley?” said Tonks brightly.

“Hopefully, nothing bad happens.” said Bill.

“Well, not at the Burrow or in Diagon Alley at least.” said Harry plainly.

“Where else did you go?” said Sirius quickly.

“Oh, you’ll find out.” said Fred and George excitedly.

First paragraph, first sentence

“I would certainly hope so, dear.” said Mrs. Weasely, she sniffed in disgust, she had certainly hoped that her household was very different than an abusive one.

First paragraph, second sentence.

“Never a dull moment in our house.” said Charlie with pride. “My friends love coming over and spending a day or two during the normal year. They love the spontaneity of it.”

“Never knew Charlie knew such big words.” whispered Fred to his twin.

Charlie heard what Fred had said and threw a handful of chestnuts at his younger brother.

First paragraph, third sentence.

“I received that as a present from Great Aunt Muriel when Bill was born, she went on about how boys were scruffy little monsters.” said Mrs. Weasley smiling at all her children.

“It’s a lot of fun to overwhelm it. It’s image in the glass starts swirling around and tries to show you what you’re supposed to look like. Mind you, the mirror’s tastes are from the late 1800’s.” said Fred laughing hard.

“We laugh ourselves silly when we see what the mirror wants us to look like.” said George trying not to fall off his seat laughing.

First paragraph, fourth sentence, first comma.
“Yeah, Merlin forbid that anyone gets any peace and quiet.” said George shaking his head.

“Or gets any sleep.” said Fred.

First paragraph, end of fourth sentence.

“Except when it knocks the door right off it’s hinges.” said Mr. Weasely with a broad grin. “I’ve had to fix that door seven times in three years.”

First paragraph, fifth sentence, first colon.

“I would have thought that those would have been the most unusual things.” said Bill.

End of first paragraph.

The Weasleys turned and stared at Harry.

“Why wouldn’t we like you, mate?” said Ron.

“I never felt welcomed or even remotely liked at the Dursleys, it was an odd feeling.” said Harry absently. “The last time I had felt liked at somewhere besides Hogwarts was the McFinn’s.”

“Yeah, Holly had a way of welcoming you into a house, no matter if she didn’t like you or not. It was easy for her to welcome you into her house, she absolutely adored you.” said Dr. Clark giving Harry a quick hug.

“I miss both of them.” he said quietly. Dr. Clark kissed the top of Harry’s head.

Second paragraph, first sentence, ninth word.

“There was holes in each pair he had!” said Mrs. Weasley to the staring eyes she received. “I made him ten new pairs of socks that summer.”

“Were they warm?” asked Dr. Clark.

“They’re really nice.” said Harry with a smile. “You’d love them.”

Second paragraph, end of first sentence.

“You didn’t throw those meals up did you?” asked Remus quickly.

“Only after the first two days.” said Harry with a smile. Mrs. Weasley looked around fearfully at Harry.

“After that, I could keep them down.” said Harry trying to reassure her.
“I never learned so much in one summer!” said Mr. Weasley with a smile over to Harry.

“From what happened when Ron used the phone, I think I should have told you how to use it twice.” said Harry with a smile.

“Sorry about that, mate” said Ron.

“Now that I think about it, it is amazing how we get along without it, but I guess we make up for it, with some of the stuff we invent.” said Dr. Clark with a smile.

“It’s true, Muggles make up for their lack of magic for their ingenuity with electricity.” said Lionus with a smile.

“What the…? How come you all of a sudden became clumsy?” said Bill and Charlie to Ginny, who quickly blushed.

“Oh!” said Bill and Charlie nodding, they knew now what had caused their sister’s clumsiness. Young girl crushes could be dangerous and disastrous things.

Ginny did a pale imitation of her past self’s blush. Harry smiled over to her.

“He knew you had a crush on him, then.” said Fred wickedly to Ginny.

“You stalking him too? Just like the Rangers?” said Remus quickly over to Dumbledore.
“For Harry’s safety, I put monitoring wards around Privet Drive. If someone or something magical were to enter the perimeter, I would be aware of it.” said Dumbledore calmly.

“So you knew about Dobby?” said Remus, “yet you didn’t bother to tell the Ministry and clear Harry’s record?” he finished angrily.

“I tried to tell Miss Hopkirk, but she wouldn’t have it. She didn’t believe me, I find that woman quite infuriating.” said Dumbledore sternly, not to Remus but to the absent Mafalda.

End of dialogue set.

Fourth paragraph.

“I ordered that before Christmas the year prior. It was already in my trunk.” said Harry with a smirk.

“You had the second year spellbook?” asked Hermione.

“I had grades 1-3 in my first year. When mastered the basics of each spell, in each book, I ordered the next year’s.” said Harry with a smile.

“Explains why your trunk was so damn heavy.” said Fred rolling his eyes.

Letter from Hogwarts, rest of booklist.

“What the hell?” said Remus slowly.

“Yeah, a whole book list of his stuff.” said Ron rolling his eyes.

“I don’t believe it, I was hoping we would only hear about ‘Dazzle Gums’ once this book!” said Remus groaning.

“Nope, his name pops up a lot this year.” said Fred with a secretive sneer.

Fifth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

“Cough up.” said Ron, whispering over to Fred.

“Doesn’t count, he was as good as a witch.” said Fred with a smirk.

Sixth paragraph.

Dialogue line.
“I wouldn’t give him three knuts for all of his books.” said Kingsley shaking his head.

“I wouldn’t even give him that much.” said Remus snarling a bit.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

“Oh dear! I wish you wouldn’t be so observant!” said Mrs. Weasley, she smiled but her face fell when she saw Harry look down in shame slightly. “Oh, Harry dear, I didn’t mean it. I was kidding.” Her face lit up when she saw him smile.

End of dialogue set.

Dialogue line.

Seventh paragraph, first sentence.

“I don’t remember seeing that.” said George looking at Ginny.

End of seventh paragraph.

“Thank Merlin for Percy.” said Ginny rolling her eyes.

Dialogue line.

Eighth paragraph.

“Poor Errol.” said Fred and George, trying not to laugh.

“Be thankful that it wasn’t Dudley that sat on him.” said Harry with a snigger.

“He wouldn’t be three-dimensional, if that had happened.” said George laughing out loud.

Dialogue set.

“So you had an idea that something awful had happened.” said Dr. Clark looking at the two in the loveseat.

“Well…we had a feeling.” said Ron carefully.

Ninth paragraph, first sentence.

A few giggles and snickers went through Great Hall, even Mr. Weasley smiled a little, making a mental note to get a new owl and retire his faithful pet.
Letter from Hermione.

“Nice to know that she can tell you off one minute and then ask to go shopping with you the next moment.” said Ron with a smile.

Dialogue line.

“Hang Harry by his ankles from Ron’s bedroom window, and see if he can fly again.” said Fred and George together.

“You can fly?” said Dr. Clark.

“I’ll tell you about it later.” said Remus with a proud smile.

Tenth paragraph, third sentence.

“It happened once with a bludger, the village florist was nearly pummeled to the ground by one of them.” said Fred with a smirk.

End of tenth paragraph.

“Despite it being dreadfully slow, it didn’t stop Harry from doing some tricks on it.” said Fred whispering to Charlie.

“On the Shooting Star? I’m not too sure I wanna play him now.” said Charlie with a smirk.

“Trust me, it would be one hell of a game if you did.” said George excitedly.

Eleventh paragraph, second sentence.

“He hates sports.” said Bill shaking his head.

“I was a Prefect!” said Percy defensively.

“I was a Prefect and Head Boy and I still went out and raised hell at a Quidditch game.” said Bill looking over to Percy. “Hell, you were there! You saw me….” he looked quickly over to his mother and silenced himself. “Never mind.” he said quietly.

End of eleventh paragraph.

Dialogue line.
“We snuck into his room, when he was sleeping and used a baby thermometer to see if he had a temperature. We shoved it under his armpit, and he nearly smacked the both of us in his sleep. I swear smacking us is a reflex of his.” said Fred with a smirk.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

“Did you know about O.W.Ls at the time?” said George.

“I knew of them, but I was amazed, with all the panicking he did he managed to scrape twelve.” said Harry with a smile.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

“I didn’t panic much, just enough to blend in with the others.” said Bill laughing. “I wasn’t too worried about them.”

End of dialogue set.

“That’s nice.” said Tonks.

Twelfth paragraph.

Dialogue set.

Thirteenth paragraph, second sentence.

“Why are you feeling awkward?” asked Colin.

Thirteenth paragraph, fourth sentence, first semi-colon.

“What? No money?” said Lionus with a raised brow.

Harry shifted uneasily. How much did this man….of course, the Rangers would know what he does, it was foolish of him to think it would go unnoticed by them.

“I stored my Muggle money away for someone else, after I established the funds to find Dr. Clark.” said Harry with a small smile.

“Someone else? Finding Dr. Clark?” asked Remus.

“I have a….summer job….that I do from time to time and I started up a fund for me to go about and search for Dr. Clark. After I graduated from here or at the time, the Muggle School, I was going to go around the world and see if I can find him. No one else could, so I thought I would give myself a try.” said Harry leaning on Dr. Clark’s shoulder.

“What about the someone else?” said Sirius.
“It’s a friend, I started a fund for him, she needed some help and I thought I’d help him out.” said Harry.

“What’s wrong with him? What did he need the help with?” asked Ron.

“Just something he needed.” said Harry, the tone in his voice stated that the conversation was over.

“What summer job do you do?” asked Neville.

“You’ll find out soon enough.” said Lionus saving Harry the trouble of answering Neville.

“That's not the only one he's helping.” said Dr. Nicodemus with a smile.

“Guess he's modest.” said Lionus with a smirk.

End of thirteenth paragraph.

“They’d take it in a heartbeat.” said Harry quietly. “I know they would.”

“They wouldn’t be able to get ahold of it.” said Remus with a growl.

Fourteenth paragraph, second sentence, first comma.

“Six sandwiches? That’s a hefty lunch.” said Ernie.

End of fourteenth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Fifteenth paragraph.

“What is he supposed to do with a flowerpot?” asked Colin.

Sixteenth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

“I hate Floo powder travel.” said Harry bitterly.

“Why? What is it like?” asked Dr. Clark.

“It's awful, don't do it.” said Harry with a grumble.

“Harry only hates it, cause he does it wrong.” said Ron with a smirk.

“I did it right when I did it a third time, and I still hated it.” said Harry in retort.
“That was the last time you did it right.” said Ron still smirking.

“Your first two tries didn’t go too well, huh?” said Zacharias snidely.

“What happened with your first Floo powder traveling experience?” said Bill quickly.

Zacharias did a wonderful impression of a fish out of water, his mouth opening and closing quickly.

“Thought so.” said Bill with a smug smile.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

“We never would have gotten to London if we had let Arthur interrogate Harry on those things.” said Mrs. Weasley with a smile towards her husband.

Dialogue set, second sentence, first comma.

“I would rather walk to London with rocks in my trainers than travel by Floo powder.” said Harry in a quiet voice to Sirius. Sirius snorted and worked hard to hold his laughter in.

End of dialogue set.

Dialogue line.

Seventeenth paragraph.

Eighteenth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

“I saw your face before we left. You were pale and shaking.” said George with a small smile.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

“They would love to hear that.” said Harry with an evil smirk.
“All you’re doing is making me want to bite them, Harry.” whispered Remus.

“I keep forgetting you’re a werewolf.” said Dr. Clark leaning back a little.

“He isn’t F.M-ing yet.” said Harry.

“F.M-ing?” said Sirius.

“Full Mooning.” said Harry with a smirk.

“I’m gonna get you.” said Remus with an evil smile.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

“It’s alright that he get shoved up a chimney?” said Sirius staring at Mrs. Weasley.

“No, I….” said Mrs. Weasley quickly. “I just….”

“Let her be, it was a very tiring day.” said Harry with a smile.

End of dialogue set.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

“I think you overwhelmed his brain.” said Dr. Clark with a smile.

Nineteenth paragraph.

“Oh, crap, we didn’t tell you about that part.” said Ron worriedly. “Sorry mate.”

“And you didn’t tell me to take off my glasses.” thought Harry to himself.

Dialogue line.

“That wasn’t speaking clearly.” said Bill shaking his head. “I hope you didn’t get shot clear out of the country.”

“No, I went to London.” said Harry slowly.
“Well, that’s good, but hopefully you landed in a good part of London.” said Bill feeling reassured. But when he saw the look Harry’s face, his face fell.

Twentieth paragraph, first sentence.

“Yeah, that’s what it normally feels like. I actually really like that sensation.” said Sirius with a grin.

Harry stared at him, “If we go anywhere, I am taking the Knight bus, broom, car, train, or walking. I am not Flooing anywhere.” said Harry looking over to Sirius sternly.

“Oooh! Are we demanding now?” said Sirius with a smirk.

“I’m not demanding, I’m pleading that we…don’t…Floo…anywhere…” said Harry clasping his hands together dramatically. “You can, just don’t ask me to.”

Sirius smirked over to Remus, who shook his head. “Promise him, Padfoot.”

“Alright, alright, I promise.” said Sirius smiling at Harry and throwing his hands up in defeat.

Twentieth paragraph, second sentence, first dash, seventh word.

“But Ron said to keep your eyes shut.” said Dennis quickly.

Twentieth paragraph, second sentence, second dash, first comma.

“We told you keep your elbows in.” chided Fred mockingly.

Twentieth paragraph, second sentence, fourth dash.

“Oh….crap…that means you’re going somewhere you shouldn’t be, right?” asked Charlie to his father.

“Yeah, he’s going somewhere that isn’t even open to the normal Floo network system anymore. He’s going through an old, old Floo network path. One that had been shut down for at least eleven years.” said Mr. Weasley.

Twentieth paragraph, second sentence, fifth dash.

“Did you see anywhere familiar?” asked George eagerly.

“Not really, everything was moving way too fast, and I didn’t want to open my eyes too wide.
“That’s why.” said Harry with a smirk.

End of twentieth paragraph.

Twenty-first paragraph.

“I hope you didn’t get hurt badly.” said Madam Pomfrey.

“No, just my glasses, they suffered some damage.” said Harry with a smile. “And scratched my nose up a bit.”

“That reminds me, we need to get you, some new glasses, how about Saturday, no readings to worry about or keep you here.” said Remus with a smile over to Harry.

“Um…” said Harry looking over to Ginny quickly, “are they open Sunday? I have a…thing going on, on Saturday.”

“Well, no, they’re not usually open on Sunday, do you want to go next weekend then?” said Remus frowning at Harry, but then brightening up when he saw the significant look that was exchanged between the only Weasley daughter and Harry.

“Harry can go on this Saturday, his thing can wait till Sunday.” said Ginny with a smirk.

“You sure?” asked Harry quickly.

“Go for it, I want to see what glasses you get.” said Ginny with a smile.

“You two dating?” said Ron quickly.

“Saturday was going to be our first date.” said Harry and Ginny with broad grins.

Cho Chang and Romilda Vane scowled from their seats.

Twenty-second paragraph, first sentence, first comma.

“I’m fine.” said Harry tiredly as Sirius gripped his shoulder.

Twenty-second paragraph, end of first sentence.

“You couldn’t just use ‘Reparo’?” asked Neville.

“No, I still couldn’t use magic cause of what happened at the end of first year and I didn’t want to get another letter.” said Harry with a smile.

Twenty-second paragraph, third sentence, first dash.

“What drew you to that conclusion?” asked Anthony.
“One, I don’t think that some stray witch or wizard could Floo into a muggle’s house and the other was, I saw things that no Muggle-shop would carry. Not without being shut down permanently and the owner being arrested.” said Harry.

End of twenty-second paragraph.

Twenty-third paragraph, second sentence.

“I would certainly hope those wouldn’t show up on a school supply list.” said Rivers with a disgusted look.

“It sounds like… Borgin and Burkes.” said Dumbledore carefully.

“What are you doing in there?” asked Sirius quickly.

“You act like I asked to go there.” said Harry with a pointed look.

“Right… I forgot…it was an accident…” said Sirius sheepishly.

End of twenty-third paragraph.

“I was panicking a bit; I didn’t know where I was. I thought for a moment that I was completely out of the country.” said Harry with a small smile. “I didn’t have Hedwig to send a message to anyone, no money on me to even hope for a train ticket or bus fare, and the contents of the shop scared me. I was actually frightened.” said Harry shaking slightly.

Twenty-fourth paragraph, first sentence.

“My sentiments exactly.” said Dr. Clark uneasily.

Twenty-fourth paragraph, second sentence, first comma.

“It was a scratch, nothing more.” said Harry to the men in the bowl and to Madam Pomfrey.

End of twenty-fourth paragraph.

Draco paled, had Potter heard what his father had said to Mr. Borgin? He hoped not. His father would be in serious trouble if it had gotten out what he was doing there.

Twenty-fifth paragraph, first sentence.

“I learned from another book that was in my bedroom, that you don’t close a cabinet when you’re in there.” said Harry with smile. Hermione smiled broadly.
“What book is that?” asked Seamus quickly.

“What on earth were you doing in that shop, Mr. Malfoy?” said McGonagall quickly.

“It will be revealed, I suspect.” drawled Snape, coming to Draco’s defense. He had been silent for so long, absently fingering the locket that rested in his hand. He didn’t know how Potter was going to win it back, and a part of him wanted to just hand it over. But there was another part that wanted to hold onto it tightly.

Twenty-sixth paragraph.

“Why bring you to the shop if he feels that things are too dangerous for you to touch?” asked Terry.

“My mother wasn’t with us that trip, we were doing my school shopping that day too.” said Draco quickly.

“So instead of doing your school shopping another day, or going to Borgin and Burkes some other time, he brings you along?” said Tonks incredulously.

Draco looked down at his feet.

Twenty-seventh paragraph.

“What a brat.” said Fred rolling his eyes.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

“If we had acted like that, Mum would have smacked us.” said Charlie to Bill.

Dialogue set, fifth sentence, first comma.

“Good enough to impress the greatest Chaser Gryffindor ever had.” said Dumbledore with a broad smile.

“Who was that, sir?” asked Dennis eagerly.

“That of course, would be Minerva McGonagall.” said Dumbledore. He chuckled warmly as the stunned looks on the student’s face. “Why one game, she scored thirty goals, all on her own, and within the same two hours.”

The current Chasers of each house turned at stared at McGonagall.

“Got any tips?” asked Katie with a hopeful smile.

“None that you don’t already know.” said the Head of Gryffindor house. “I made sure that you were trained with the basics that I learned myself in my playing days.

End of dialogue set.

“Pretty accurate in my opinion.” said Harry with a smirk.

Twenty-eighth paragraph.

Dialogue set, first sentence, first comma.

Harry looked thoughtful, “Who the heck thought I was smart? I was only aiming for slightly better than average grades.”

“Beats me mate, maybe someone saw right through you.” said Ron shrugging.

End of dialogue set.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

“He didn’t tell it to him, he whined it to him.” smirked Fred.

Dialogue set, second sentence, third dash.

“So, fake fondness, huh? Good luck with that. I’ve seen what he looks like, he’ll need all the help he can get to act fond.” said Charlie.

End of dialogue set,

“So it is Borgin and Burkes.” said Kingsley.

Twenty-ninth paragraph.

Dialogue set.

“You have got to be kidding me! He’s purchased stuff from Borgin and Burkes?” said Madam Bones, “Openly?”
“It…he…he could be doing….DOESN’T MEAN THAT HE’S DOING ANYTHING ILLICIT!” shouted Fudge. “He’s been proven innocent, beyond a shadow of any doubt!”

“I don’t remember holding a trial for him, when was this?” asked Madam Bones shrewdly.

“Well…it was by some members of the Wizengamot.” said Fudge quietly.

“Really? The ones that we discovered were under the Imperius curse themselves?” said Madam Bones sternly.

“Well…um…” said Fudge, growing ever more quiet.

“I thought not…well let’s add Mr. Malfoy’s name to the group of people that needs to be investi…oh…his name’s already on the list. Never mind.” said Madam Bones. “I had forgotten that while reading the last chapter, Mr. Potter had informed me of several reasons to question Mr. Malfoy.”

Fudge looked angrily down at Harry, who merely waved innocently.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

“Selling?” said Moody eagerly.

Dialogue set.

“Nice to know that he doesn’t think he’s so high up on the food chain, that he can’t be subjected to raids.” said Sirius bitterly.

Thirtieth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Thirty-first paragraph.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

Fudge blinked hard. What did Lucius say?

End of dialogue set.

Bill and Charlie’s faces were both contorted in snarls. Percy had turned white and looked down. Fred, George and Ron smirked evilly. They knew he was going to get his comeuppance.

Thirty-second paragraph.
Mr. Weasley smiled over to Harry.

“Nice of you to get angry at that.” said Charlie with a grin as well.

“I liked Mr. Weasley.” said Harry simply.

Dialogue line.

“‘Appear’ nothing, no self-respecting wizard keeps poison about the place. Unless they’re pest control poisons.” said Tonks sharply.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

“Why?” asked Dr. Clark, wrinkling his nose at the description of it.

“It looked cool.” said Draco simply.

“Children are psychotic nowadays.” said Dr. Clark shaking his head.

Dialogue set.

“‘The Hand of Glory?’” said Tempest inquisitively. “Wasn’t that in Panic’s care, Nightstrike?”

“He did have it in his possession, but he was the Death Eater spy in our company.” said Nightstrike bitterly.

“Oh…my apologies, but it looks like he sold some of the weapons he was supposed to guard.” said Tempest somberly.

“It seems that way, we’ll have to hunt down the weapons and tools all over again.” said Lionus tiredly. “I hate ‘Weapons detail’.”

“What is ‘Weapon’s detail’?” asked Padma quietly.

“In a nutshell, we go around the world and confiscate different weapons that could potentially be harmful to the masses. Each Operative has at least five to thirty different weapons in their protective custody. He had about twenty in his care, so we’ve got some searching to do, if he sold them.” said Lionus.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

“Wow…nice dad…” said Dr. Clark with raised eyebrows.

“Gee, wonder who would get father of the year…Arthur or Lucius?” said Sirius with a smirk.
“Give me a moment to think about that.” said Tonks, pretending to think hard.

Dialogue line.

"We don’t have favorites, we appreciate hard work from everyone, not just from Miss Granger.” said Professor McGonagall.

Dialogue line.

“Nice, real nice.” said Lavender. “Just what you want to teach your kids, sexual and blood discrimination.”

Dialogue line.

“Don’t get caught Harry!” said a second year Ravenclaw.

“Save the celebrating for later.” said Moody.

Dialogue line.

“As it really should.” said Harry with a slight smile. “Bloodlines should not be the first things you talk about in a conversation.”

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

“Grrr…” snarled Harry, leaning forward in the bowl.

“What is it, pup?” said Sirius.

“Nothing, at least, nothing I’ll tell you about yet.” said Harry not meeting his eyes.

Thirty-third paragraph.

“Hmph…he would smirk at something that hurt Muggles.” said Hannah disgustedly.

Thirty-fourth paragraph.

Dialogue line.
“You have luck working for you in the oddest moments, dear boy.” said Dumbledore letting out a sigh of relief.

Moody looked at the book eagerly, “Did you catch what he was selling, boy?”

Harry scratched his head. “There were some poisons he mentioned. Other than that he only pointed and they haggled over the prices of the stuff.”

“Hmm…too bad…” said Kingsley.

“Outside of that store is just about as dangerous as the inside.” said Kingsley wisely.

“Bet you looked like a dork.” said Pansy with a smirk.

“We could have been twins that day, Pansy!” said Harry gleefully.

Hermione tried to hold in her laugh, meanwhile Fred and George looked insulted.

Ron cringed and moaned loudly.

“There are no spiders here, Ron.” said Hermione soothingly.

“Don’t go over there!” said Sirius quickly.

“Gee, I had no idea. Thanks for the warning.” said Harry rolling his eyes.

“I’m not kidding!” said Sirius angrily. “There are some people down where you’re at that kidnap children and sell them off to other people! Or people that would want to…hurt you…!”

“I know, I know. But calm down! I don’t go over there, and someone comes to my rescue real soon.” said Harry leaning against Sirius.

End of thirty-eighth paragraph.

Thirty-ninth paragraph, first sentence, twelfth word.

“Stay out of there boy, the air in there is toxic.” said Moody with a stern gaze.

Thirty-ninth paragraph, end of first sentence.

“I always wanted to go down there, just to see what is there, I don’t want to now.” said Blaise.

Thirty-ninth paragraph, third sentence.

“How could you speak clearly with hot ash in your mouth?” asked Dennis.

“You can’t.” said Harry with a frown.

End of thirty-ninth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Fortieth paragraph.

“I know of that woman, she’ll stun people and rip the nails right off people.” said Snape quietly. People started to cringe and Sirius wrapped his arms around Harry.

“Why would someone want fingernails?” said Parvati with a green tint to her face.

“They are used for some poisons.” said Snape plainly.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

“How do you know?” asked a first year Slytherin.

“Who else talks like that?” said Charlie shrugging.

Forty-first paragraph.

“I believe that she was upset that she lost the opportunity to collect some young fingernails.” said
Snape quietly.

“And thank goodness for that.” whispered Sirius.

Dialogue line.

Forty-second paragraph, first sentence, first comma.

“Thank god!” sighed Dr. Clark

“I was sorta shocked ter see yeh down there.” said Hagrid.

End of forty-second paragraph.

“I was never so happy to see the bank.” said Harry with a broad smile.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

“Sorry ‘bout that.” said Hagrid sheepishly.

“Don’t worry about it, you caught me before I fell.” said Harry brightly.

End of dialogue set.

Dialogue line.

“Harry! He’s an adult! He may go where he pleases.” chided Mrs. Weasely.

“Well aware of that. But…I wanted to know if someone…” Harry looked over to Dumbledore.

“sent him to find me.”

“I had no notion that you were missing.” said Dumbledore honestly. “If you were missing, I would have come and found you myself.”

Dialogue set, second sentence.

“Are the slugs flesh-eating, or the repellant?” asked Dean.

“The slugs are the ones that eat flesh. The repellant is quite safe.” said Professor Sprout.

“They can keep the cabbages.” said Ernie sticking his tongue out.

“I know a great Cheddar Cabbage Casserole recipe. I could make it for you and see if you still hate it.” said Harry with a smile.

“Cheese and cabbage?” said Ernie a twinge of green in his cheeks.
“It’s not just cheese and cabbage; it’s got onion, cream of celery soup, mayonnaise and believe it or not, cornflakes. It’s not too bad. Dudley hates cabbage too, but I have to make two baking dishes of it when I make it. Only time he eats the stuff.”

“That’s not his favorite dish is it? I don’t want to be like him in any sense.” warned Ernie.

“Almost everything is his favorite dish. You’ll have to stop eating to be the opposite of him.” said Harry with a smirk.

End of dialogue set.

Dialogue line.

Forty-third paragraph.

Dialogue set.

“Oh…I fergot yeh told me ‘bout it, sorry, ‘arry.” said Hagrid. “I didn’ remember yeh tellin’ me. An’ if I had known the entire story, I woulda’...”

Dialogue line.

“And I don’ think yeh told me everythin’. I’d’ve remembered the beatin’ if yeh had told me. I woulda gone to the Dursley’s and gave ‘em what fer.” said Hagrid softly, but his tone turned harsher towards the end of his statement.

Dialogue line.

Forty-fourth paragraph

Dialogue line.

“How do shift from different topics like that without a clutch?” asked Dr. Clark looking at Hermione with an amused look on his face.

“What’s a clutch?” asked Malfoy.

“It’s the part of a car.” said Dr. Clark with a smile. Malfoy looked down, he was taught to be harsh and aggressive towards Muggles and Muggle-borns, but this one…he sort of…liked.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Forty-fifth paragraph.

“'I was amazed to see Percy running, he’s thin, but I’ve never seen him take part in much exercise.”
said Harry.

“I run, just not often.” said Percy quietly.

Dialogue set, third sentence.

“Turns out, you went about thirteen grates too far.” said Mr. Weasley.

End of dialogue set.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

“If you had said Knockturn Alley, and underage, it would of course not have let you through.” said Dumbledore with a smile. “I’m not too sure how you managed to get past the underage blocks in the Floo network. Perhaps…fate is what made you stop at that particular one. It was very fortunate, for someone that you did stop there.” finished Dumbledore with a gentle smile.

“It’s fortunate that Hagrid was down there.” growled Remus not knowing the significance of Dumbledore’s statement.

Dialogue line.

Forty-sixth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Forty-seventh paragraph, first sentence.

“And I thought I was prepared for anything.” said Harry with a smile.

End of forty-seventh paragraph.

Dialogue set.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

“At least you’re interested in catching the blighter as well.” said Moody with a smirk.
“It’s my job to worry frantically.” said Mrs. Weasley with a smile.

“Why were they nervous?” asked Padma.

“This was the first time they were in Gringotts without someone there to mind us.” said Hermione with a smile. “The first time, we had Professor McGonagall.”

“For a moment, my parents thought you were mad. But then, after they talked with you a while longer, they really liked you.” said Hermione brightly.

“You weren’t the only one. Fred and George were whooping it up on the way down.” said Ron with a smile.

“Wow…I kinda would’ve gone bragging about all the money I had, if I had it.” said Seamus quietly.

“So…there is no adult watching you.” said Dr. Clark looking down at Harry.

“No, but we were always within shouting distance of someone. And we knew where everyone was.” said Harry with a smile.

“Did you listen to me for once?” said Mrs. Weasley quickly.
“We actually did.” said Fred and George, “we went straight to Gambol and Japes.”

“Oh...that's even better.” said McGonagall rolling her eyes.

Fiftieth paragraph, second sentence, third comma.

“I hope you didn’t go spending your money frivolously, young man.” said Sirius in a mock paternal voice.

Fiftieth paragraph, second sentence, fourth comma.

“Nope, you didn’t, very practical.” said Sirius with a smirk.

“Why would you mix strawberry and peanut butter together?” said Lavender looking revolted.

“We thought it was gross too, but Harry told us to try it. Turns out I love those two flavors together.” said Hermione happily.

Fiftieth paragraph, end of second sentence.

“We knew we weren’t allowed in, so we just window shopped.” said Ron with a smirk.

Fiftieth paragraph, third sentence, eighteenth word.

“ Took everything I had not to beg you to buy those for me.” said Ron with a guilty smile.

“You never know...you could get them at some point.” said Harry with a smile.

Fiftieth paragraph, end of third sentence.

“That sucked, we went from fun shopping to boring shopping in two minutes.” sulked Ron.

Fiftieth paragraph, fourth sentence, sixth comma.

“What did I tell you about those things?” scolded Mrs. Weasley.

“We forget, you tell us not to do so many things.” said George cutely.

“I told you not to buy those before school starts. I don’t need a letter telling me that you shot those things in corridors, and hurt someone!” she continued to scold.

“We don’t set them off in the corridors!” said Fred indignantly.

“We set them off in the dorms.” said George quietly with a smile.
“Ugh…we really need to speak to Turner…he shouldn’t be selling broken wands.” said McGonagall tiredly.

“How do you know it’s boring?” said Percy defensively.

“I read it in my first year. Trust me, it’s boring.” said Harry shaking his head.

Fred and George high-fived their little brother.

“He doesn’t have what it takes.” said Madam Bones sternly.

Percy shot back angrily. “What don’t I have?”

“Loyalty to the people.” said Madam Bones twice as stern as before. “You couldn’t even show loyalty to your family.”

Percy shuffled his feet guiltily.

“What the hell were you guys doing for an hour?” asked Fred.

“We were just bobbing about,” said Harry. “doing nothing important.”

“Are they having a big sale or what?” asked Dr. Clark.

“They only have a sale the first part of summer. For the students who are eager to start on the next year.” said Flitwick.
“Oh…goody…” groaned Remus.

“Wonderful…” said Kingsley quietly.

“Tell me you don’t go in.” moaned Sirius.

“That’s where we were told to meet the Weasely’s so we don’t have a choice.” said Hermione with a smile.

“Hermione was overjoyed when she read that little sign.” said Ron with a smirk. He had to dodge as she smacked him with a pillow.

Dialogue line.

“You squealed?” said Remus in disbelief.

“He was…nice to look at…” said Hermione.

“Only if you don’t know him.” said Remus plainly. “Once you know him, you want to stab your eyes out with a rusty nail.”

Fifty-second paragraph, first sentence,

“Bet Dazzle Gums didn’t like that.” said Sirius with a smirk.

“Why do you say that?” said Harry wonderingly. “It seemed like he was having a good time.” he thought back to that day.

“He likes dates that are a little younger than him.” said Remus rolling his eyes. He then blinked hard and slowly looked over to Harry, his eyes filled with worry.

End of fifty-second paragraph.

“He won’t allow another author to do a book signing ever again. He suffered quite a lot of damages to the store.” said Dumbledore shaking his head.

Fifty-third paragraph, third sentence, thirteenth word.

“Why did you buy a second copy?” said Hermione curiously. “Why spend your money like that?”

“You wouldn’t happen to be the unknown philanthropist that donates books to the ‘Stray Spell’ organization would you?” said Dumbledore beaming.

“What is that?” asked Seamus quickly.
“It’s an organization that gives books and some equipment to Muggleborns, and Purebloods who otherwise wouldn’t be able to afford it.” said McGonagall.

Sirius looked down at his blushing godson and smiled broadly.

End of fifty-third paragraph.

Dialogue line.

“Oh…boy…” moaned Remus.

“You looked great Mrs. Weasley,” said Harry with a smile.

Fifty-fourth paragraph, first sentence.

“He hasn’t changed a bit, has he?” said Sirius shaking his head.

“Not a bit. From what I hear.” said Remus tiredly.

Fifty-fourth paragraph, second sentence, first semi-colon.

“He always wore the shade of blue that matched his eyes.” said Sirius rolling his eyes. “According to him,’ no other color would do’. He wasn’t in Ravenclaw, but he would always wear at least a blue tie.” said Sirius groaning.

“What House was he in?” asked Ron quickly. “Don’t tell me Gryffindor!” he moaned.

“He was in Hufflepuff.” said Professor Sprout, she looked slightly put out.

End of fifty-fourth paragraph.

“He always had his hat on a stupid angle.” moaned Remus.

“I thought it looked pretty good.” said Hermione sheepishly.

“You should have tried growing up with ‘Dazzle Gums’.” said Sirius rolling his eyes.

Fifty-fifth paragraph.

“He was taking so many pictures, that nobody could even breathe.” said Fred.

Dialogue line.

“Big deal.” said Remus and Sirius.
“Go Ron.” said the two Marauders.

“Yeah, he always had a very high opinion of himself. He didn’t like anyone else not having the same high opinion as he did.” said Remus rolling his eyes.

“Bet he noticed the hair and the eyes first.” growled Remus.

“Right now, I’m kinda hoping that he looked at the scar.” said Harry shaking his head. “I don’t think I want him hitting on me.”

“Did he hit on you at all that year or…anything else…?” said Sirius carefully. Remus, Dumbledore and Dr. Clark looked quickly over to Harry.

“Not that I remember, and I think I would.” said Harry shaking his head. “I’d remember if…Dazzle Gums…tried anything.”

“He still could’ve looked at your hair and eyes. There wasn’t a person that your parent’s went to school with that didn’t know your name. Your parents bragged about you all the time. ‘Harry summoned all the cookies out of the cookie jar.’ and stuff like that.” said Sirius giving Harry a tight one armed hug.

“Wow, if one didn’t know better, I would think you didn’t want to be up there.” said Dr. Clark with a grin. “I still cannot believe that they find you famous here. And for such a horrible reason.”

“You’re telling me.” said Harry shaking his head.

“Damn, would have loved to have seen that picture.” said Sirius with a smirk.

“I’ve got a scrapbook.” said Hermione, “It’s got a whole bunch of pictures and newspaper clippings with Harry in them. Not the more recent ones though, those aren’t worth the parchment their written on.” Hermione said with a scowl. Rita Skeeter snarled over to her.

“Oh sure, nothing with me in there.” said Ron indignantly.

“It’s not just Harry! I’ve pictures of all three of us in there.” said Hermione soothingly.

End of fifty-seventh paragraph.

“I’d kick the photographer.” said Remus shaking his head.

Dialogue line.

“Harry alone is worth a year full of front pages, and the pages after for that matter.” said Sirius quickly.

“Harry didn’t even smile, it was more like someone stamped on his foot and he was trying not to call out.” said George with a grin.

Fifty-eighth paragraph.

“Every time I tried to get away, he’d pull me back again.” said Harry shaking his head.

“Tell me where he’s at, and I’ll rearrange his face for you.” said Sirius quickly.

“Oh don’t I wish you could, but…he’s almost harmless now.” said Harry slowly.

“What do you mean?” asked Remus carefully.

“He’s…not all there anymore.” said Ron with a smirk.

Dialogue set.

“He already came out of the closet in our third year…what extra info did he need to release?” mumbled Sirius to Remus quietly.

Dialogue set, first sentence, first dash.

“Bullshit…I didn’t want that book.” muttered Harry quietly.

Dr. Clark smacked the back of Harry’s head. “Watch your mouth.” he warned.

“Sorry.” said Harry rubbing the back of his head.

“Did he have issues with language when he was little?” asked Remus with a smile.
“Not really, he didn’t swear at James’ or my place. I don’t know where he got the mouth…” said Dr. Clark looking at Harry questioningly.

Fred and George smirked at each other.

“Wasn’t just you two.” said Harry quietly.

Dialogue set, end of first sentence.

“Bet you were thrilled!” mocked Remus.

“Even free, they weren’t worth it.” said Harry rolling his eyes.

Dialogue set, third sentence.

Slowly, a scowl appeared on Sirius and Remus’ face. When Harry heard the growls coming from both sides of him He looked up at them.

“What is it?” asked Harry.

“Don’t mind us, we just aren’t very comfortable with him touching you.” said Sirius, his teeth bared.

Dumbledore looked over quickly, “Harry…he didn’t…” he was pale and shaking.

“No, how many times…?” asked Harry shaking his head.

“After seeing the living daylights beaten out of you, we want to be absolutely sure that nothing… even more horrible has happened to you, dear boy.” said Dumbledore with a sad smile.

“I know, I know…but still…nothing like, what you lot are thinking, happened.” said Harry in a defeated voice.

Dialogue set, fourth sentence.

“What did he just say?” said Dr. Clark slowly.

End of dialogue set.

Remus, and Sirius stared at the book with their mouths opened, then they turned slowly to look at Dumbledore. “You didn’t. He’s kidding, right? said Sirius faintly.

“He was the only one who applied for the job, I waited to see if Remus would come back to the country sooner than what he did, but…” said Dumbledore rubbing the bridge of his nose. “He didn’t, so, I had no other recourse to take.”

“I knew I shouldn’t have stopped at Amboro National Park.” said Remus clapping a hand to his forehead. “I stayed an extra week just to explore that place.”
“Did you enjoy yourself?” asked Hermione eagerly.

“Actually, I did. It was beautiful down there, the forest, the falls, the animals.” said Remus fondly.

“Then we can forgive you for staying there, if you had fun. Though I don’t think you got much of a tan down there.” said Harry shoving Remus slightly.

“I burn, I don’t tan.” said Remus with a grin.

Fifty-ninth paragraph, first sentence.

Fifty-ninth paragraph, second sentence, first comma.

“Hey there were a lot of books and there wasn’t a whole lot of room to walk.” said Harry, slightly irritated by the snickering.

Fifty-ninth paragraph, second sentence, second comma.

“You never did like the lime-light did you?” asked George with a smile.

End of fifty-ninth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

“Gee, and here I thought you were being kind.” said Ginny sarcastically.

“Hey! I…no you’re right, I was being cruel.” said Harry with a broad smile. Ginny picked up an abandoned cushion and hurled it over to him. After it hit him in the face, he picked it up and threw it back to her, laughing.

“Oi!” said Sirius, after getting clipped by the second throw Ginny did. “Save it for the…never mind.” said Sirius catching himself before he said something wrong.

“Good save.” said Remus shaking his head.

Dialogue set.

“That was the only part that I saw a similarity between you and a Defense Professor.” said Harry to Malfoy with a smirk. “Lockhart didn’t respect personal space either.”

“Gee, thanks.” said Draco slightly scowling.
“You’ve known him for a whole year, and you think he likes all that attention.” asked Sirius stunned.

“Well…” said Draco quietly.

“He was only trying to push my buttons.” said Harry to Sirius.

“I was impressed, not even Neville wanted to stand up to him at first. I got a quick glimpse at the real you, though I was an immature little kid, I didn’t know what it really meant.” said Harry with a smile.

“Only took me three years to wake up to that little fact.” said Harry with a smirk.

Snickers and giggles could be heard rippling across the floor. “So much for the name of Malfoy commanding respect, huh?” said Anthony with a smirk on his face.

“So, does that mean that he had nothing to do with Dobby?” asked Tonks questioningly.

“Yeah, all he did was blink at me and think I was crazy.” said Ron with a small smile.

“Sorry again.” said Draco quietly.

“You already gave us a blanket apology, forget it.” said Bill kindly.

“It was getting very, very heavy then.” said Ginny.
“Sorry ‘bout that.” said Harry and Ron.

End of sixtieth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

“So you’d let them fight, if they were outside?” asked Bathilda incredulously.

“Boys will be boys.” said Mr. Weasley, Sirius and Moody.

Dialogue line.

Sixty-first paragraph.

“I started to think that a sneer is a Malfoy family trait. Like red hair with the Weasleys.” said Harry with a smile. “Either that or a permanent fixture.”

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

“He knows you don’t get overtime.” said Fudge absently.

“How…would he know?” asked Madam Bones carefully.

“Well…he...uh…advised me…” said Fudge quietly.

“Stupid, stupid man.” said Madam Bones and Tempest angrily.

“Well…that explains a lot.” said Nightstrike looking at his Captain.

“You are done.” said Lionus angrily to Fudge.

Sixty-second paragraph.

Dialogue line.

“I’ve known this man for one chapter, I already hate him.” said Dr. Clark.

“What about the ‘No hating people’ shtick you tell me?” said Harry with an amused smile.

“This is different.” said Dr. Clark sharply.

“Hypocrite.” said Harry with a chuckle, but it was turned to high pitched laughter when Dr. Clark reached under his knee and began to tickle Harry.
Sixty-third paragraph.

Dialogue line.

“Any decent wizard’s opinion is different from his.” said Kingsley in his deep voice.

Dialogue set.

A majority of people in the Great Hall began to snarl and growl towards the book and towards Draco. Draco shuffled his feet sheepishly. He opened his mouth to apologize, but Mr. Weasley stopped him.

“You didn’t insult us, your father did.” said Mr. Weasley, his tone slightly cold.

“I didn’t stop him.” said Malfoy quietly.

“You didn’t want to at the time.” said Charlie.

Sixty-fourth paragraph, first sentence.

Bill and Charlie stared in amazement at their mild-mannered father. “You tackled Malfoy, Dad?” said Bill quietly.

“Awesome!” Charlie said in a whisper.

Sixty-fourth paragraph, second sentence, first semi-colon.

Remus slowly turned and looked at Harry, Harry felt Remus looking at him and he leaned forward.

“What?” asked Harry. “Let me guess, ‘did a book hit you?’ I can understand you having an anxiety attack when something dangerous happens, but not when it’s something this…for the want of a better word, petty. Please calm down, or you’re gonna have Calming Draught coming out of your ears.” said Harry with a small smile.

Remus sighed, “Well, at least you and I aren’t fighting anymore.” he smiled.

“We were never fighting, you were freaking out over something that happened years ago and it was getting a bit much.” said Harry still smiling. “Well, getting back to where you were going, I did get hit in the head with a book, but I didn’t sustain any real injuries.”

Sixty-fourth paragraph, second sentence, second semi-colon.

“I couldn’t believe that you both shouted that.” chided Mrs. Weasley.

“If they didn’t, we would have.” said Bill and Charlie grinning ear to ear.
“And that is the reason Flourish and Blotts will no longer do book signings. After the almost riot going on in their poor store, they banned them.” said Dumbledore with a smile.

“He didn’t start the fight.” said Fred.

“But he’ll finish it.” said George

“So…who won?” asked Colin curiously.

“I think it was a tie. To be perfectly honest.” said Mr. Weasley. “It felt good to smack him with that book though.”

“I would have beaten him with a thicker book than that one.” said Kingsley with a smirk.

“Bastard” Harry hissed. Dr. Clark quickly looked over to Harry.

“What the hell was that?” he asked

“What?” said Harry quickly.

“You sort of choked and hissed at the same time.” said Dr. Clark.

“Oh…that was called Parseltongue, I can…talk to snakes…” said Harry quietly.

The Rangers’ eyes flashed in excitement, while Dr. Clark blinked.

“Really? That’s…really cool! Show me sometime, will you?” said Dr. Clark excitedly. “Always loved snakes…” he said absently.

The entire Slytherin house stared at him in amazement.

“What a jerk.” said Lavender angrily.
Dialogue set, fourth sentence, first dash.

Malfy shuffled his feet.

“Yer getting’ better.” said Hagird gruffly down to the pale faced young man.

End of dialogue set.

Sixty-sixth paragraph, first sentence.

“You couldn’t ask for a better protector.” said Harry beaming up to Hagrid. He then looked to the men in the bowl with him, they looked at him with slightly hurt faces. “When it comes to physical strength, I mean.” he added quickly.

Sixty-sixth paragraph, third sentence, first comma, fifth word.

“They were afraid they would have to dodge spells and curses.” said Hermione “They were relieved to not have to.” said Hermione.

End of sixty-sixth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

“Who gives a damn what he thought?” said Remus.

“Well…it was his book signing” she said quietly.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

“Seriously?” asked Remus rolling his eyes.

End of dialogue set.

“What a…” he gulped loudly and looked down at Harry. “an idiot.”

“Not where you were heading.” said Harry with a smirk.

“Don’t want to swear, least not in front of you.” said Sirius sternly.

“Whatever you say, I’ve heard worse…” said Harry with a smile.

Sixty-seventh paragraph, first sentence.
Sirius snorted loudly.

“Don’t make me beat you.” said Harry with a smirk.

End of sixty-seventh paragraph.

“You were in so much trouble at that time, you didn’t deserve a treat.” said Mrs. Weasley frowning slightly at her husband.

Sixty-eighth paragraph, first sentence.

“Well, at least you learned to not wear glasses when flooing.” said Remus with a smile.

“Yeah, no one told me that rule when I left the first time.” said Harry solemnly.

End of chapter.

“What happened when you got back to the Burrow, was that a good landing?” asked Colin.

“I got shot out of the fireplace like a cannon.” said Harry chewing his lip.

“Were you hurt?” asked Dr. Clark.

“No, I got thrown into the sofa.” said Harry.

“Well…” said Dumbledore chuckling silently, “It’s about six o’clock now, shall we read on, or have dinner first.”

“Eeeek!” screamed Professor Sprout. She almost dropped the book as a Recollection scroll appeared.

“What could it be now?” said Harry questioningly. “Officer McFinn is gone, so are you.” said Harry looking up to Dr. Clark. “What could it be, now?”

A red light, with golden twinges in the middle enveloped them all.
The Winds of Change

Chapter Notes

I don't own Harry Potter

The dual colored light deposited them in room where several people were hurrying about carrying files, answering phones, and leading people that looked as if they had seen better days out of the room The Watchers were standing in.

“This is a Police Station!” said Dr. Clark. “What are we doing here?” he turned to look at Harry, but Harry looked as confused as the rest of them.

“Parker! Where is that Stapelton file?” said an important man coming out of the corner office. He had salt-and-pepper hair, clean shaven and strong arms. Though he spoke with high authority, he had a kind smile on his face.

“Right here, Inspector Homes” said the man named Parker standing up and walking the file over to the Inspector.

“Hey! That Parker guy is the same guy that was at the Dursley’s in the first Scroll! He was one of the Detectives that came once you were heading for the ambulance!” said Hermione eagerly.

“Yep, that’s him.” said Harry looking around curiously. “We never really talked, he’s sort of cynical and Officer McFinn and Mrs. McFinn never really wanted me to become that. But I get along really great with Inspector Homes.”

“Little late for you not to be cynical.” said Sirius with a smirk.

“Oh, I can be even more cynical if you want.” said Harry teasingly.

“I need to you go and speak to Mrs. Heavebow on Wilkin Street. She may know something about her sister’s disappearance. She if she can give you an insight to their mother. I don’t trust that cold old fish.” said the Inspector.

“Yes, sir.”

“Lunch!” shouted a young voice coming from the door which swung widely open.

Several officers stood up and walked over to the door, the Watchers walked over as well, half-knowing whose voice it belonged to.

There was Harry, with a neatly repaired food trolley bearing the photos of several different foods which included pizza, spaghetti, different sandwiches, chili, soup, chicken, hamburgers, hot dogs and several other things, each bearing a different price.

“What’s the special today, Bud?” asked Inspector Homes, walking over.

“My ‘Seven-day spaghetti’, with garlic bread, fruit of your choice and a slice of apple pie, only twelve pounds.” said Harry pointing to the large pot on a portable hot plate.

“Twelve pounds? I’d charge forty galleons for that spaghetti.” said Ginny looking at Harry in shock.

“You’ve had it?” asked Ron quickly.

“Yeah, the other night.” said Ginny with a smile.

“Sounds good to me, sign me up.” said Inspector Homes smiling broadly, he took out his wallet and placed the money on the small counter on the food trolley that wasn’t covered with sandwiches or fruit. “How’s the fund raising going? Are you going to have enough money to find Sam when you graduate?”

“I hope so…but it’s going pretty slow.” said Harry sadly.

“What did you expect? You can’t raise almost two million pounds in the course of a few months. There are people that work two jobs a day and they don’t make even a half million pounds in a few years. It’s gonna take some time, Bud.” said Inspector Homes with a smile.

“Why is he smiling?” asked Fred.

“He was happy that I was still naïve. He thought Uncle Vernon killed my childhood.” said Harry plainly.

“He was close to doing so.” growled Dr. Clark. “And not just to your childhood.”

“I know, but I thought I would get some money together and send someone else first. Like a Private Eye.” said younger Harry sadly.

“Well, I can understand that, but it is going to take some time. I would say, go home and enjoy your childhood, but you really can’t do that at your house, can you?” said Inspector Homes with a frown.

“Why couldn’t they arrest your Uncle Vernon?” said Hermione angrily.

“He threatened the Police departments’ solicitor with a lawsuit if the police bugged him again about me.” said Harry scratching the back of his head absentely.

“Would they have lost that lawsuit?” asked Dean.
“Yeah, I think they would have.” said Harry. “Somehow, Uncle Vernon can convince and bribe just about anyone.”

The scene shifted slightly and they found themselves in Inspector Homes’s office.

“How much money have you raised so far, Bud?” asked Inspector Homes twirling his fork in the spaghetti.

Harry whipped out a small white book and read quickly. “Five thousand and twenty six pounds and fifty-four shillings.”

Inspector Homes dropped his fork in shock. “Wow! You must be working very hard, how did you raise that much money so soon?”

“Mrs. McFinn and I take food all over the building here and sell baked goods out of her house. I even made a wedding cake a month ago.” said Harry with a smile.

“Have you even given yourself a day off, or anything?” said Inspector Homes concernedly. “You should be out having fun, acting like a kid! Let the military fellows find Sam.” He stood up to get a drink of water from the water cooler in his office.

The younger Harry looked down, his eyes brimming with tears “All they’re going to do is label him M.I.A nothing more.” said Harry beginning to weep bitterly. “I…I want to find him! I wanna bring him home!”

Inspector Homes, took a quick step back, but then walked around his desk and brought the small eight year old into a tight hug. “I’m sorry, Bud, I’m sorry. Why don’t you let us help you raise the money? We could start a collection here.”

“I wanna earn the money, I don’t want people going without their own hard-earned money ‘cause I can’t raise it.” he dried his eyes quickly. “I gotta get back; Mrs. McFinn and I are making a cake for a garden party.”

“Sure thing, Bud, see you tomorrow.” he said as Harry pushed his little cart out of the room. He then sighed, and spoke too quietly for young Harry to hear, but The Watchers heard. “Are you ever going to let other’s help you?”

Sirius and Remus looked quickly down at Harry and smiled. “Apparently, that took a few years didn’t it?”

“So…the first time you actually took help from someone since then, was with us?” said Ron in shock.

“Yep.” said Harry simply.

The scene shifted forward and now they were at the entrance of the Police Department. There was a well-dressed, rotund man, hair combed over the ever present bald spot on his head, surrounded by several different cameras and reporters.
“This latest string of thefts in getting out of hand, thieves are just coming into our places of business, our havens of cultural enrichment and thieving all we hold dear and cherish. This has to end now!” he shouted dramatically.

“What the hell is this guy going on about?” asked Sirius.

“And to help restore the peace of mind of our noble and fellow citizens.” The man stated loud, like a preacher shouting the good word to a congregation. “I have created a brand new security system! And to prove that it will halt any criminal in his path, I will invite any thief who dares to try, can come and test it out. If you lose…well,” he laughed slightly. “You go to jail.” he said with a smirk.

“Can you tell us anything about this security system?” asked one of the reporters.

“Unfortunately no, it would take away the surprise, for when the culprit comes calling.” said the man stroking his mustache.

“I know this guy.” said Lionus with a smirk. “That is Edward Buckthorn. He wasn’t all that dangerous, but he did attempt to eradicate a portion of the Police Department.”

“How was he going to do that?” asked Dean curiously.

“By creating so-called security systems and placing them in every business, museum, bank, and home, halting burgling dead in its tracks, after stopping all the thefts in the country, he would tell Parliament that the Police Department was no longer needed for those particular occurrences. with one portion of the police department removed, they wouldn’t need to give them that much funding.” said Lionus.

“That couldn’t happen.” said Hermione skeptically.

“You didn’t know those politicians. They were all about money and trying to get a little something on the side for themselves.” said Lionus. Hermione thought deeply.

“Not even the Ministry of Magic is without those who try and line their pockets with gold.” said Nightstrike looking over to Fudge.

“How do you know all this?” said Dean skeptically. “About this Buckthorn guy and his plans.”

“We just know, and that’s all I’m saying on that subject. As for making sure that no criminal could get past his system, he joined forces with most of the professional thieves in the country and told them not to rob anywhere that had his security systems. Everywhere else would get hit hard and the villains would vanish without a trace. People would have to buy his high priced system…”

“But how does that satisfy the other thieves?” asked Ron.

“They would take on the guise of maintenance men and enter the house, to upgrade the systems. They would tell the people that they would have to leave for an hour and leave them to their ‘sensitive’ work. Priceless paintings would be replaced with forgeries; antique silver would be replaced with silver plated objects and so forth. It was a very cunning plan.”
“Holy…crap…” said Justin in a whisper. “So did you guys stop him?”

“No, we didn’t, someone else did for us.” said Lionus with a smile.

“What is it that they are going to try and steal?” asked a reporter.

“Well…my entire manor is engulfed in my security system, but…I happen to have the famous ‘Forbidden Fruit’ ruby in my manor. If they can steal that…I will give the thief three million pounds!” said Mr. Buckthorn.

The photographers began to click madly and reporters asked questions, however, they were asking them all at the same time so no one could really hear one question in particular.

Dumbledore looked over to younger Harry quickly and saw…an odd gleam in his eyes. He turned to the present day Harry and caught his eye. This Harry was smiling excitedly.

Finally one reporter asked a question with a louder voice than any other one had.

“How would they collect the reward, sir?” asked the reporter.

“They can come here, hand it to the officers and ask them to call me. I hereby swear, on tape, that I will not press any charges and that the money will be theirs, if they can get past my security systems!” he said smugly. “And if they get caught by my methods, off to jail they go.”

“What a fraud.” said Inspector Homes walking up behind younger Harry. “I’ll bet that he’s told all the thieves in town to go to his house and surrender the moment they go in there, then turn around and bail them all out, through a “prepaid” attorney.”

“He was right on the money.” said Lionus with a smirk.

“So, anyone could go in and rob the place?” said Harry quietly.

“Anyone with brains, I suppose. You better head on to Holly’s.” said Inspector Homes patting Harry’s head. “She’s most likely waiting for you.”

Harry reached under the cart and slid a bicycle out, attached the cart to the back of the bike, clambered on board and pedaled off.

“Oh! What a cute little boy! Quick get a shot of the kid!” said one of the reporters.

“Would rather you didn’t.” said the veteran officer quickly. “Don’t ask why, we would just rather you didn’t.“

“Camera shy, eh?” said one of the photographers.

“None of your business to be honest.” muttered Inspector Homes making sure that he stood between the camera and Harry.
“Why not take your picture?” asked Colin.

“Yeah, it would have looked cute.” said Lavender.

“If Uncle Vernon had seen the news or the paper and saw me at the Police Station…it wouldn’t have gone well.” said Harry rubbing the back of his neck. A low rumble of growls etched its way across the Watchers.

The scene shifted once more and they saw fleeting glimpses of Harry in a kitchen mixing the contents of a bowl, in a library pouring over several different books, typing swiftly on a computer, and pouring different compounds in different beakers in what looked like a high school chemistry classroom and in a junkyard sifting through different piles of unwanted refuse.

“What the heck is this all about?” asked George.

“I’m working hard.” said Harry with a worried look towards the men in the bowl and the Weasleys.

The scene shifted once more and they found themselves against a large brick wall. It was a dark night and the wind was howling fiercely as they stood beside the giant wall. But oddly enough, the branches weren’t swaying in the wind. They were completely motionless.

“What are we doing here?” asked Hermione, “And how come it’s so windy but none of the trees are moving?”

“The Winds of Change, it’s a turning point in Harry’s life.” said Speckerton.

“And as for the reason why we’re here, here it comes.” said Nightstrike with a smile.

They turned and saw a dark clothed figure come hurrying over to them, when they reached them; they noticed that the figure was a little shorter than even the first years.

“This wouldn’t be you, would it?” asked Sirius quickly to Harry.

The dark figure stopped underneath a large tree and tossed a thin rope up to one of the higher branches, as he climbed the Watchers rose with him.

“I’ll take this as a ‘yes’.” said Sirius, when he caught a flash of Harry’s face.

“Oh, Harry! Don’t tell me you turn to thievery!” said Mrs. Weasley worriedly.

Harry ignored her.

“Answer her.” warned Remus sternly.

“He’s testing the security system.” said Lionus shortly to the two adults.

“Do you do a good job?” asked Sirius excitedly, he was trying to get Harry to speak. Harry ignored
Dumbledore however was confused, for Harry was excited not more than a minute ago, why would Harry worry about this episode now?

He continued to climb onto the tree and pulled himself one of the higher branches. He pulled his rope up from along the wall. He climbed further up the tree and pulled out a large bag of powdered sugar out of the knapsack on his bag. He tossed it high into the air and watched it as it fell, as it fell, the entire ground was lit up with crisscrossing lasers.

“What the heck?” said Remus staring at the ground.

“If you touch one of those, an alarm will go off.” said Tempest.

“Non-magic folk are quite…strange…” said Firenze.

“You’re telling me.” said Draco staring at the small red beams of light.

The dark figure took out a large tube from the knapsack and aimed it carefully, when he decided on a spot, he pulled on a small trigger underneath the tube. Something came whizzing out of the end and flew all the way over to the manor on the other side of the lawn. Then the scene shifted once more.

“What? Don’t we get to see you rob this place? That’s not fair!” moaned Fred.

“So much for getting tips.” said George, begrudgingly putting a piece of parchment back in his pocket.

“How did you know how to do that stuff?” asked Dr. Clark.

“Remember that T.V. show, MacGyver?” said Harry quietly.

“Yeah, James and I would watch it…every…afternoon…” he said slowly, then slapped his forehead. “I forgot, you learn a lot of interesting things on that show.”

“Can we watch it?” said Fred excitedly, but quickly cringed under the stern gaze of his mother.

They found themselves back in Inspector Homes’ office this time the same man from the press conference was in the office and two men with briefcases sitting on either side Inspector Homes’ desk.

“I DON’T BELIEVE IT! YOU CAN’T HAVE MY RUBY!” shouted Mr. Buckthorn slamming his fist down on the table.
“So someone did take it, awesome!” said Dean eagerly.

“Not someone! Harry! He took it! He had to have!” said George.

“But, sir, I have it right here,” said Inspector Homes innocently with a broad smile. He pulled out a small white bag and tipped the sole content out onto his hand. Out came a single ruby, the exact same size and color as an apple and round as an orange. “This is the Forbidden Fruit ruby isn’t it?”

“It cannot be! I have the ruby right here!” shouted Mr. Buckthorn, pulling out another similar looking ruby. Inspector Homes, placed the ruby he had in his hand, in a drawer and then took the ruby from Mr. Buckthorn and examined it carefully. He then smiled.

“Yours is a fake.” He said handing it back to the man.

“WHAT?” shouted the man. “That’s not possible!”

“Trust me, I’ve had several years of experience with what this is, to know it’s not a real ruby.” Inspector Homes smiled and looked over the man’s shoulder. “Hello sir, thanks for coming.”

Mr. Buckthorn turned around and took a quick step back. The man was obviously of Asian descent and he had a jeweler’s eyepiece dangling around his neck. He wore a finely tailored suit and a solid gold watch on his wrist.

“It is my pleasure, what did you need?” said the man bowing deeply.

“I need you to examine this,” said Inspector Homes pointing to the ruby in the man’s hand. “Do you know of the Forbidden Fruit ruby?” asked Inspector Homes.

“I do, sir. It is a very famous jewel.” he said taking the jewel in hand. He examined it, turning it over and over in his hand. “And this is not it.”

Mr. Buckthorn stared, fearfully. “What...How can this be?”

“This is not it.” said the jeweler once again.

“Prove it!” said Mr. Buckthorn’s lawyer.

The jeweler smiled and placed his teeth on the jewel and bit...a chunk off...

“You wouldn’t be able to do that with the real thing.” said the jeweler munching on the piece in his mouth.

“What...what is that...?” asked Mr. Buckthorn his finger pointing shakily.

“A type of rock candy it seems. It doesn’t leave a sticky residue anywhere and it is absolutely clear. A very good idea to use as a jewel replacement.” said the jeweler.

“I’ve got children that love that stuff, my daughter is very good at making it.” said Inspector Homes tapping a picture of his family. “Here is the one that was taken from his house last night.” said Inspector Homes handing the jewel over to the Asian man with great care.

After a moment of examination, he looked up with a smile. “This IS the Forbidden Fruit ruby.”

“So that means that you lose, and someone is three million pounds richer.” said the man standing beside Inspector Homes. “And if you think you’re going to go back on your word, I’ve got a surprise for you.”

He took out a remote and pointed it towards the TV hanging on the wall. On the TV, it showed Mr. Buckthorn, standing in front of the Police Department and saying: “I hereby swear, on tape, that I will not press charges and that the money will be theirs, if they can get past my security system.”

“What have you got to say to that?” said Inspector Homes.

Mr. Buckthorn growled fiercely.

“Bring the money here tomorrow, I’ll see to it that the money is given to the person who broke through your system.” said Inspector Homes, “And until you do, the Police Department will keep your ruby safe for you, we’ll call it evidence.”

“I want to meet the foul beast that stole it!” shouted Mr. Buckthorn.

“He doesn’t particularly trust you, so he’s going to remain anonymous.” said the man standing beside Inspector Homes. “And, you opened your home, and invited thieves to come and steal the ruby. You cannot possibly be angry with someone who took the ball you dropped and ran with it.”

“Fine, whatever just keep this to yourselves!” growled Mr. Buckthorn.

“Ooh, sorry about that. I already called the TV stations and newspapers. They were waiting a whole week to hear news of someone to try and succeed.” said the man beside Inspector Homes.

Mr. Buckthorn turned and stormed out of the room, with his solicitor in tow. The jeweler bowed and left.

“You think he’s going to give me the three million pounds?” said a quiet voice coming from behind a cabinet.

“He’s going to have to, Bud.” said Inspector Homes, “guess this takes care of raising the money you need to hire the P.I.” he smiled.

“It’s more than enough!” said Harry happily stepping out from hiding. “Now I’m certain to find him!”

“That however wasn’t the case, obviously.” said Dumbledore sadly.

“What did the Private Eye, find out?” asked Hermione.

“Nothing helpful at all, after he came back, I was in the same boat as I was before.” said Harry angrily.

The red and gold light enveloped them again.

“Why was the light like that, before this it was white or black.” asked Ginny curiously after the light had disappeared and they were once more in the Great Hall.

“It was the Dawning of a Change, the Winds of Change’s partner.” said Speckerton plainly. “It’s only been seen once before this, I’m...we’re very lucky.”

Harry stood up and walked out of the Great Hall and left them all behind, not stopping even when Dumbledore and Remus called his name.
Dumbledore strolled casually down to the kitchens, remembering words that Harry and Remus had exchanged days prior. Harry always felt better when he was cooking, so the logical place to search for his young protégé would be in the kitchens.

When he opened the door, he was met with the sound of clanging and muttered curses towards the corner of the room. He slowly walked over towards the noise when a bottle of wine flew past his head and smashed into the wall.

“ARRGGHH!” shouted Harry, stabbing the knife down into the cutting board.

Dumbledore gathered up all the glass and deposited it into a waste basket that a house-elf had carried over quickly. Then he walked over to Harry placing his hand on his young man’s shoulder.

“What is it, Harry?” asked Dumbledore. “What is troubling you?”

Harry shook his head furiously and began stirring what looked like cheese, apple pieces, and breadcrumbs together in a large bowl.

Dumbledore took a step back and allowed him to vent his anger on the ingredients and the utensils.

“I forgot how…unfair…these books were.” said Harry slamming two hands down on two pieces of wax-papered covered chicken breasts.

“They do have their good points Harry.” said Dumbledore kindly.

“And yet, they seem to want to make my life a living hell.” he spat angrily.
“We want to know these things, Harry. There isn’t a person here who doesn’t care for your well-being. Well…except for a select few, but still. Your friends, the Weasleys, Sirius, Remus, Dr. Clark, myself and the rest of the staff, we want to be able to help you. We worry about you.” said Dumbledore sadly.

“But why did it have to show that!” shouted Harry angrily. “Now Mrs. Weasley, Sirius, Remus, everybody, is going the think that I’m a CRIMINAL!” shouted Harry even louder. “I don’t steal to take things! I don’t steal here!” he shouted, pounding the counter hard.

“You did nothing wrong, Harry. I remember what that man said, he welcomed anyone into his home to try and get past that system of his. You were merely testing to see if it was as great as he said.” said Dumbledore calmly.

“Did you see Remus’ face? Or Mrs. Weasley’s?” yelled Harry.

“I didn’t, but I do know, that if they feel you did something wrong, they find themselves in the wrong.” said Dumbledore. “They will come to their senses in due time, rest assured.”

Harry looked down and poured the stuff in the bowl on top of the flattened chicken breasts.

“What are you making, Harry?” asked Dumbledore interestedly.

“It’s ‘Apple Stuffed Chicken Breast’ do you want some?” said Harry absently as he rolled the meat up.

“I’d love some, aside from the cookies, pizza and those delightful ‘glories’ I haven’t had the chance to partake in any other culinary masterpiece you bring to light.”

After a short while, Harry brought the chicken breast to Dumbledore’s golden plate and poured gravy on top.

Dumbledore carved a slice of the chicken and placed a bit into his mouth.

“This is utterly delicious, Harry. Miss Weasley was correct. Your cooking is worth more than what you charged at the police department!” said Dumbledore happily, relishing the flavors dancing in his mouth.

“Thanks.” said Harry glumly, as he put the fork to his mouth.

“I wouldn’t worry about what your Uncles or Mrs. Weasley thinks, dear boy. You are almost a man now, and besides, you seemed to really enjoy what you did.” said Dumbledore with a smile.

“So that’s why you didn’t see their faces, you were watching me.” said Harry with a grim smile.

“You were enjoying yourself, until something changed it.” said Dumbledore softly.

“Their faces.” said Harry simply.

“It’ll be alright, Harry. Just give them time. They’ll come around.” reassured Dumbledore. “Don’t worry, if anything, I’ll take care of it.”

A few hours later, while Dumbledore was looking over some papers in his office, Sirius and Remus came in with Dr. Clark close behind, who was marveling at everything his good eye saw.

“What can I do for you three gentlemen tonight?” said Dumbledore.

“Where is Harry?” asked Remus quickly.

“He’s in the Gryffindor dorms, sleeping.” said Dumbledore smiling in amusement at the wonder on Dr. Clark’s face. Dr. Clark was staring intently at Fawkes with a longing gaze.

“So he didn’t eat?” said Remus sternly.

“Actually he made his own dinner, a wonderful ‘Apple Stuffed Chicken Breast’. It was quite delicious.” said Dumbledore with a wide smile. “Now, could you tell what is troubling you?” said Dumbledore, staring at Remus intently.
"I don’t know what you mean." said Remus stiffly.

“Remus…” said Sirius wearily. “You’ve been snapping at Dumbledore since the books first started, and then you start inadvertently picking fights with Harry. What’s up?”

“Full moon’s coming.” said Remus sharply.

“That excuse isn’t going to work today. Cough up another one.” said Sirius tiredly.

“I’m worried about him, so sue me.” said Remus still sharply.

“That doesn’t explain what going on with you and Albus.” said Dr. Clark still staring at Fawkes.

“I haven’t forgiven you for dropping Harry off at the Dursley’s on a cold night and LEAVING HIM WITH THOSE BASTARDS!” said Remus angrily to Dumbledore.

Dumbledore sighed and leaned back in his giant chair. “Remus, I never said that my actions were justified. Now that I know the truth, I regret my actions every single time that I look in Harry’s eyes.”

Remus gnashed his teeth and turned away, he then turned to Sirius and Dr. Clark.

“Why the hell aren’t you pissed?” said Remus angrily to Dr. Clark.

“Harry told me what happened, I was angry, but…I just couldn’t bring myself to blame him.” said Dr. Clark.

“What?” shouted Remus.

“When James did the investigating when Harry was first hurt, James went and talked to all the teachers and neighbors that knew the Dursleys, they couldn’t and wouldn’t believe it. If we hadn’t of had James’ keen mind and his observations, we wouldn’t have had any idea that Vernon had done it. Harry never spoke of it to anyone, nor had he shown the bruises to others. Not that they noticed anything...”

“He can bloody look into people’s minds!” shouted Remus, pointing to Dumbledore.

“Unless he lets you in, you can’t tell that he’s hurting.” said one of the portraits behind Dumbledore shortly. “Even a Legimency master can’t break through such a powerful emotional block.”

Remus stared.

“When he was still in rehabilitation for his legs, we finally earned his trust. He still never told us the worst of it, from all the old breaks and internal bruises we both could tell that this was not the first time he was smacked about that severely. And it wasn’t’ the worst one, it was most likely the third to worst one.” said Dr. Clark sadly. Dumbledore covered his eyes with both hands and wept silently. Remus and Sirius both paled.

“When he opened up, we caught a glimpse of the pain he experienced, the pain he felt deep in his heart and soul. I don’t know how we managed to feel what was going on in his soul, but we felt… crushed, buried. I don’t know how he could have survived the force on his mind, it just about killed me.” Dr. Clark finished quietly.

Dumbledore looked up from his hands quickly. “You felt the pain?”

“I felt it, and almost saw it, I guess.” said Dr. Clark. “Why do you ask?”

“Harry’s core must have been screaming out for help.” said Dumbledore taking out a black notebook.

“You have one of those too?” said Sirius staring at Dumbledore.

“Oh, no, this is Harry’s, I borrowed it. However, he did warn me reading it is not so easy, and I fear that this book is more protected than what magic could ever do.” said Dumbledore holding up the book. “It’s in code. From what I’ve deciphered so far, it’s staggering. He and I really must talk
“on a scholastic level.” said Dumbledore beaming widely.

Remus stared at the floor with a stern gaze. “I’m not ready to forgive you yet.”

“I’m not ready to forgive myself either. Let’s just work together to ease Harry’s life.” said Dumbledore with a small smile. “I at the very least owe him that. Well then, would you care for a nightcap? I have an intense feeling that we will be in for a rough day tomorrow.”

The next morning, Harry walked down to the Great Hall and the moment he walked three feet beyond the door Remus came walking up to him.

“Harry…you okay?” said Remus quickly.

“Fine, you angry?” said Harry seriously.

“About your ‘summer job’? No. Captain Lionus explained everything to us.” said Remus with a smile. “More pissed at Dumbledore, than you any day.”

“I’d say something, but I don’t need you being moody.” said Harry walking past Remus towards the breakfast table.

“What’s that?” said Remus with a smile.

“You’re mad at Dumbledore for not getting me out of there sooner, so, where were you?” said Harry not facing him. Remus blanched and looked down at the ground, his face contorted in pain.

“Harry!” said Mrs. Weasley sharply. “He’s only concerned about you!”

“Well aware of it, but the both of you need to lay off him.” said Harry nodding towards Dumbledore.

“Harry…We’re adults, we can treat people the way we see fit.” said Remus growling at the floor, still reeling from the pain of Harry’s words.
“And I’m a teenager, and I have the capacity to act rebellious and reject your affections. Either we can play nice and accept each other’s wishes, or cause each other harm. Pick you poison.” said Harry shortly. “I don’t need to sit by you; I’m a big boy now. I can sit by myself.” said Harry with his brows raised.

Sirius rushed up and smacked Remus’ head. “Agree to the terms, dammit. Bury the bloody hatchet!”

Remus rubbed the back of his head and nodded.

Harry turned to Mrs. Weasley, “I hate to pull this card, but looking around, you owe me a favor.”

Mrs. Weasley looked at all of her children and her eyes rested on Ginny, and nodded slowly.

After breakfast everyone took their regular seats. Remarkably, Harry sat next to Remus.

“I promise to take a chill pill, if you do.” said Harry with a smile.

“If it avoids a fight with you, I’ll do it.” said Remus with a smile.

“Let’s press on, shall we?” said Dr. Nicodemus. “Who’d like to read now?”

“I will!” said Neville excitedly.

“Fifth Chapter”

“What are you doing near that thing?” said Remus quickly.

“Hey now.” said Harry with a smirk. “You promised.”

“Sam, I’m switching with you.” said Sirius quickly.

“What could a willow do to you?” said Dr. Clark with a cynical smile as he switched positions.

“I hope you don’t find out. Least not till the next book.” said Sirius worriedly throwing an arm around Harry.

First paragraph, first sentence.

“Exact opposite of the year before that.” said Ernie.

First paragraph, second sentence.

“Nice of you to say that mate.” said Ron happily.

End of first paragraph.

“Did you think about it often while you were at our house?” asked George.

“About every other day towards the end of summer, why?” asked Harry.

“Cause you kinda did full body shivers every once in a while.” said Fred.

Second paragraph, first sentence.

“Where Harry’s concerned, you could’ve just made an entire meal of treacle tart.” said Remus with a smile.

“I made sure that he had other food, not just treacle tart.” said Mrs. Weasley with a smile. “He had seconds of everything and still had two platefuls of treacle tart.”

“Did you get sick later?” asked Dr. Clark with a smirk.

“Nope, it was treacle tart, I wasn’t going to allow myself to get sick.” said Harry indignantly.

“Sounds like me and that pizza you make, I could eat thirty helpings of it and I tell myself that I’m not going to get sick.” said Dr. Clark with a smile.

Second paragraph, second sentence.

“So you don’t mind them setting off fireworks in the kitchen?” asked Tonks quickly.

“We kinda just did it, we didn’t bother asking.” said Fred with a smile.

“We got told off for it later though.” said George.
“Their hot chocolate is the best.” said Harry wistfully. “I’ve tried again and again to replicate the recipe, but it never turns out right.”

“I can teach it to you, Harry.” said Mr. Weasley. “It’s a family recipe.”

“I thought mom came up with it.” said Percy quickly.

“No, your father’s great-great-great grandmother came up with it.” said Mrs. Weasley with a kind smile to her husband.

“Yeah, that always happens on first day of school, you can plan all you want, and still you can’t get out of there on the time you want.” said George.

“Mum tries to keep us on a schedule, never works.” said Fred.

“I forget, who was missing the socks?” asked Ron.

“Me.” said Harry. “It turns out you shoved my socks in your trunk.”

“Oh, yeah, at least I gave you them back.” said Ron with a smile.

“Percy was the one missing the quills.” said Fred. “He lost his somehow.”

“Yeah, I wonder how.” said Charlie looking suspiciously at the twins.

“Ginny dropped her piece when she saw Harry coming down without a shirt on, Mum had all of his on the line and forgot to take them off.” said George wickedly.

“I had a shirt on!” said Harry quickly blushing. “It was a sleeveless shirt!”

Fred and George merely shrugged. “We didn’t see it.”
“Were you okay dad?” asked Bill quickly.

“I was fine, it was funny though.” said Mr. Weasley.

“What was?” asked Charlie.

“Watching all the boys trying to catch that chicken and put it in the coop. Molly was too busy fussing over me to use magic to catch it.” said Mr. Weasley with a laugh.

Fourth paragraph, first sentence.

“You mean it can’t normally?” said Mrs. Weasley quickly, she turned to her husband who began to look up and interest himself with the clouds overhead.

End of fourth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

“Arthur…” she said warningly.

“Uh…umm…” said Arthur.

Fifth paragraph, end of first sentence.

“We tried to pretend that that was normal for a car. Apparently it worked.” said Ron.

End of fifth paragraph.

“Sorry, Molly.” said Mr. Weasley apologetically.

Sixth paragraph, third sentence.

“I thought Fred had it.” said George with mock angry look towards his twin.

“You said that you left some of your potion ingredients!” said Mrs. Weasley angrily.

“Well…uh…” said the twins softly.

Sixth paragraph, fourth sentence.
“I was quickly losing my patience.” said Mr. Weasley with a smile.

“And that is a bad thing if he does.” said Fred

“Even worse than Mum sometimes.” said George. Percy nodded.

Sixth paragraph, fifth sentence.

Some of the people in the Hall couldn’t figure out why the Weasley family was growling, Harry baring his teeth like a wrathful wolf, and Dumbledore’s eyes lost their twinkle.

Even Bill and Charlie were looking curiously at their own family.

“What’s going on? Why are you upset over her forgetting a diary.” asked Bill.

“It wasn’t hers.” said Harry angrily.

Sirius tugged on Remus’ cloak. “You never looked that pissed.” he said glancing at Harry.

“Wonder what has him so upset.” said Remus quietly.

End of sixth paragraph.

“Tempers? Only Mum’s temper was running high.” said Fred in a whisper.

Seventh paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

“You wanna fly don’t you?” said Sirius excitedly.

“He wouldn’t, not with Molly right there.” said Remus smacking Sirius on the back of his head.

Dialogue set.

Sirius smiled broadly to Remus who groaned loudly. Remus leaned his head over, and taking the cue, Sirius smacked the back of his head.

Dialogue line.
“Seems your son and his leader didn’t hear you.” sneered Snape.

Ron and Harry both looked about uncomfortably.

Eighth paragraph.

“That is cutting it really close.” said Sirius shaking his head.

Ninth paragraph.

“Why does it say stuff like that? It’s common knowledge.” said Zacharias irritably.

“Not to me.” said Dr. Clark indignantly.

Zacharias opened his mouth to argue, but was elbowed by a nearby Hufflepuff.

“Stuff it Zach.” said Ernie sharply.

Dialogue line.

Tenth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Eleventh paragraph, first sentence.

“You always worry about her.” cooed a sixth year Ravenclaw.

“I didn’t want her p…angry with me.” Harry said with a quick glance up at Remus.

Eleventh paragraph, second sentence, first semi-colon.

“This won’t go well.” said Dr. Clark with a smile.

“Why not?” asked Remus quickly.

“Call it a feeling.” said Dr. Clark.

End of eleventh paragraph.
Sirius and Remus both stared at Neville.

“Did it really say ‘crash’? Or was that an attempt at a joke?” said Remus, a little hopefully.

“No, it said ‘Crash’.” Neville said regretfully.

“I wonder what happened to the barrier?” said Luna dreamily.

“Stupid idiot, what does it look like happened. They ran into a brick wall.” said Fred.

“And crashed and burned.” said George.

Dr. Clark turned and looked at Harry quickly. He had to lean forward very far to see him, for Sirius had turned his entire body to look at Harry.

“Were you alright?” asked Remus as Sirius stared at Harry.

“Are you nuts? He probably broke several ribs!” said Dr. Clark anxiously.

“No, I just had the wind knocked out of me. I’ve crashed into a wall worse than that before.” said Harry quickly.

“When?” said the three men in the bowl together.

“If the Scroll had let you seen, I smacked the wall like a birds smacks a window.” said Harry with a smile. “And I got out of there just fine, obviously.”

Remus looked at Harry skeptically, but Sirius thought about the mental picture and snorted.

“As worried I am about you that would have been really funny to see.” said Sirius.

“No one grabbed her that time?” said Parvati earnestly.

“No, someone tried though, when I handed her back to him.” said Ron with a smirk.

“I kicked him right where it counts.” said Harry with a smile.

“A skinny shrimp can’t kick all that hard.” said Pansy nastily.
Ron whispered something in Hermione’s ear and she conjured up a padded chair.

“Here you go mate, kick through that.” said Ron magicking it over to the bowl.

Harry stood up and met the chair halfway. In one swift movement, he brought his back and then brought it up like a rocket shooting up from the ground. The chair broke in two and laid splintered on the ground.

“Oohh!” moaned every male in the room. Remus even gasped and leaned forward, clutching his knees.

“Bet he sounded like a chipmunk.” moaned Dean. “After that.”

Dialogue line.

“That’s what we’d all like to know.” said Kingsley thoughtfully.

Dialogue line.

Fourteenth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Fifteenth paragraph.

“Crap, even if you could get through the barrier now, you wouldn’t have made it.” said Tonks.

Sixteenth paragraph, first sentence.

“I was ready to start kicking the damn wall to get in there.” said Harry.

End of sixteenth paragraph.

Seventeenth paragraph.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

“Could they get through?” asked Remus.

“It turns out that, if we had waited two more minutes, they would have come out.” said Harry bitterly. “The barrier was only blocked for the time it took the train to leave.”

“How do you know?” said Charlie.
“I owled your dad later.” said Harry.

End of dialogue set.

“Did Ron know about your summer job?” asked Neville.

“Nope, he kept that a deep dark secret.” said Ron and Hermione.

“And I didn’t have money on me at all.” said Harry.

Eighteenth paragraph.

“Have they actually given you money?” asked Bill quickly.

“To get groceries, nothing else, and I needed to keep the receipt, there supposed to be nothing else on that receipt besides what I was sent for.” said Harry.

“And if you got a candy bar or a snack?” said Sirius gritting his teeth.

“Read on Neville.” said Harry quickly.

Ninteenth paragraph.

Dialogue set, first sentence, second comma.

“Don’t ask me why I thought I could hear something through that.” said Ron holding up his hands.

End of dialogue set.

“Three minutes.” said Harry and Ron glumly.

Twentieth paragraph.

“She was angry.” said Harry shaking his head.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.
“What about it?” said Remus and Sirius plainly.

Dialogue line.

“Awesome.” said the two Marauders together, giving Harry a one armed hug each.

Dialogue line.

Snape leaned forward in the serpentine chair he sat in. “So, Weasley, it was your idea. Unfortunately, it seems that I owe you an apology, Potter. Not that you deserve it.” he ended in a mutter.

Harry shrugged, “Evidence was there, and you’ve never seen Ron take charge, it was logical that I would come up with something that reckless and stupid.”

“So, you did take the car?” said Remus rubbing both his eyes wearily he was hoping they didn’t.

“Yeah.” said Ron and Harry.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

“Send an owl.” said all the teachers and adults together.

“Don’t we know it, now at least.” said Ron and Harry.

End of dialogue set.

“I don’t believe I know that one, Mr. Weasley. How does that one go?” said Dumbledore, his eyes regaining their usual twinkle.

“I’d love to hear it.” said Madam Bones good-naturedly.

Ron blushed and smiled, but remained silent.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

“I really didn’t want to take their car.” said Harry quietly.
“Did you know about it?” said Hermione quickly.

“Not before then. After he said that, and when we got to school, I looked it up real quick. Not too fond of that travel either, I can live without the chance of me missing a foot or something.” said Harry shaking his head.

Harry shook his head. “I’m such an idiot. A stupid reckless idiot.” said Harry angrily.

“You were acting like a kid, let it go.” said Sirius in a whisper.

“Uh…” he said slowly, taking notice of the twins who were shaking their heads swiftly. “I just watched what Dad was doing.” he said almost convincingly.

Fred and George wiped the sweat off their brows.
“At least no one saw you.” said Sirius heaving a sigh.

“Would rather he didn’t do it at all.” said Remus quietly.

“Write that down.” said Fred to George, who whipped out a piece of parchment.

“Floating Eyes.” said George as he wrote.

“That must have looked so cool.” said Blaise quietly.

“Cool part over.” said Blaise quickly.

“That’s not good.” said Dr. Clark, “we aren’t supposed to see flying cars.”

A few people laughed at it, despite them warning if the two boys were going to be caught, it was funny to picture them pummeling a button.

“Weren’t fast enough.” said Snape, McGonagall, and Dumbledore.
“…Sage idea, Harry, but perhaps, a double edged sword.” said Dumbledore with a smile.

“How do you mean?” asked Sirius.

“They could see them/us.” said Ron, Harry, Remus and Dumbledore.

“Oh…right.” said Sirius grinning sheepishly.

“That sounds awesome.” said Fred wistfully.

“Really wish we had been with you guys.” said George in a whisper to Ron.

All across the room, eyes closed and smiled as the picture formed in their minds.

“It sounds beautiful.” sighed Hermione and Dr. Clark.

“That was the idea, anyway, a very stupid one at that.” said Ron scratching his head.

“Aww! That sounded like a wonderful way to go about.” squealed a couple of fourth year girls.
“Sounds like my bike when I take it out.” said Sirius with a fond smile.

“Yeah, but on this trip the good times leave eventually.” said Harry glumly.

Thirty-fifth paragraph, third sentence.

“Yup, good times gone.” said Sirius with a smirk.

Thirty-fifth paragraph, fourth sentence.

“Okay, now we’re happy we didn’t go with you.” said Fred to Ron.

End of thirty-fifth paragraph.

Dialogue set, second sentence, first comma.

“We were really getting thirsty.” said Ron.

End of dialogue set.

Thirty-sixth paragraph.

“Wow, you guys were up really high, if you were up higher than that mountain.” said Remus with a smile.

Thirty-seventh paragraph.

“Shit!” said Dr. Clark.

“What?” said Remus and Sirius.

“You don’t want a car dying way up there.” said Dr. Clark becoming pale, as did Sirius and Remus.

Thirty-eighth paragraph.

Dialogue line.
“Couldn’t you fix it, Harry? You seem to know everything.” said Colin excitedly.

“I’m still reading up on car mechanics, and even if I did know how to fix it I wouldn’t be able to fix it in midair.” said Harry rolling his eyes.

Thirty-ninth paragraph.

“They just turned themselves on, don’t know how that happened.” said Ron thinking back.

Dialogue line.

“Why are you talking to the car?” asked Seamus.

“I was nervous, so sue me.” said Ron shortly.

Fortieth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

“Good thing he saw it, cause I didn’t.” said Ron.

Forty-first paragraph.

Forty-second paragraph.

“Oh, dear.” said Mr. Weasley looking worried.

Dialogue line.

Forty-third paragraph.

“Were you scared.” said Remus quickly.

“Yeah, but I hadn’t seen anything yet.” said Harry leaning harder against the werewolf and swinging his legs up onto the men’s laps.

“I’m not going to like this one bit, am I?” said Remus seriously.

“That’s why I’m laying like this.” said Harry plainly looking up from Remus’ side.
“Please don’t hit the lake.” said Tonks earnestly.

Remus took a deep breath and released it slowly.

“You’re doing good Moony. I’ll fret for you.” said Sirius quietly.

Those that understood what happens when an engine died in a car, yelled and screamed.

“No! Harry! Ron!” shrieked Mrs. Weasley.

“Mum! You know what happens.” said Ron gasping for air, his mother had hurried over and clutched her son to her.

Few people started to snicker nervously.

“It was either that or screaming.” said Ron sourly.

Remus, Sirius and Dr. Clark gripped Harry tightly, he flinched from the pain (from holding him so tight) but he barely showed it.

The three men in the bowl released the breath they held hostage slowly.

“You…are…never…ever…flying…in…a…car…again.” said Dr. Clark sternly.

“I don’t plan on it.” said Harry with a smirk.

“This ain’t funny anymore.” said Sirius gripping Harry’s right hand.
Forty-eighth paragraph.

“ARE YOU MENTAL?” shouted Fred.

“PUT THE DAMN WAND AWAY AND PUT YOUR FOOT ON THE BREAK!” yelled George.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Forty-ninth paragraph.

People covered their eyes and began to cry softly, they all forgot that the two who were in the car were in the room and alive and well.

Mrs. Weasley and Mr. Weasley were holding onto Ron tightly, while the three men were hugging any part of Harry they could. Even the teachers were holding each other’s hands, and Dumbledore was quickly drinking a Calming Draught.

Neville gulped and continued on with the chapter, he knew they were fine, but it was hard reading about it.

Fiftieth paragraph, second sentence, third semi-colon.

Trying to be subtle, Remus brought his hand up and started to pat Harry’s head, looking for a lump, however, two other hands met his.

“What are you three doing?” said Harry not moving his head but looking over to each of them in turn.

“Nothing.” said the three of them together.

“Sure.” said Harry rolling his eyes.

“Were you hurt, Harry.” said Dumbledore quickly. McGonagall looked over quickly, she remembered blood coming from a cut on Ron’s head, but she didn’t bother asking if Harry was alright.

“I was fine, just a knock on my head, nothing more.” said Harry with a reassuring smile.

End of fiftieth paragraph.
“I didn’t know you were hurt, and you ask how I was doing?” asked Ron incredulously.

“Do you remember how you moaned? I thought you were dying!” said Harry over to Ron.

“Ron, why didn’t you tell us that your wand was broken?” said Mr. Weasley calmly from Ron’s left.

“Howler.” said Ron and Harry simply.

Mr. and Mrs. Weasley looked at each other uneasily.

“What now?” moaned Remus.

“You remember the title of the chapter?” said Sirius weakly.

“…oh…no….” said Remus faintly. “Please get out of this alright.” said Remus burying his face in Harry’s locks.

Several people screamed and the men in the bowl whimpered and clutched Harry tightly.

“What the hell!” shouted Bill, the entire school acted as if the tree were attacking them right then and there. People were scrambling to get under cover and hide under their chairs.
“GET OUT OF THERE!” shouted Charlie, running over to join his mother and father in embracing his little brother. Bill couldn’t move from shock. Percy, Ginny, Fred and George were rocking back and forth, whispering to themselves that they got out of the situation alright.

Dialogue set.

Dialogue line.

Mrs. Weasley shrieked loudly and hugged her son even tighter.

Dialogue line.

“Harry’s luck at work again.” said Draco quietly.

Dialogue set, second sentence, first semi-colon.

“Did Ron even get to the driver’s seat?” asked Neville looking up from the book.

“No, Harry shouted and it just went backwards.” said Ron smiling over to Harry. “Thank goodness for that.”

End of dialogue set.

Dialogue line.

“Seriously?” said Sirius staring at Ron in disbelief.

Fifty-fourth paragraph, fourth sentence, first semi-colon.

“If I was forced to go over a hundred miles, with no rest, and nearly crashing into castle wall, and knocked about by a tree that unfortunately fights back. Yeah I would be a little irked with you two as well.” said Remus with a sigh and a smile. He was highly relived that they got away from that horrible tree.

Fifty-fourth paragraph, end of fourth sentence.

“She still refuses to go near that tree.” said Harry with a small smile.
“How can you tell if a car is angry?” asked Zacharias with a sneer. “Can you speak car now?”

“I’m really against corporal punishment of any sort, but that kid is begging for a paddling.” said Dr. Clark sternly to Sirius.

“You’re telling me.” said Sirius scowling at the youth.

“The car seemed to think for itself, so…” said Harry shrugging, ignoring the plotting men.

“I would have guessed that your mom would kill you first.” said Colin looking nervously to Mrs. Weasley.

“You’d think that, but this was Dad’s car.” said Ron pointedly.

“I’d say it was good luck, the tree could have harmed you more than what it did.” said Kingsley thoughtfully.

The twins and quite a few others snorted with laughter.

“They were still hurting, weren’t you boy.” said Dr. Nicodemus searchingly.

“I was just tired.” said Harry quickly. The Ranger scoffed in disbelief.

“He is like you. You don’t come to me even if your arm is hanging on a thin piece of tendon.” said Dr. Nicodemus to Lionus.
Lionus just smiled. He was getting more and more determined to have Harry join his ranks.

Fifty-seventh paragraph, first sentence.

“Wasn’t even close.” said Ron and Harry together.

End of fifty-seventh paragraph.

Dialogue set.

“That sucks, there is no way to sneak into the feast now.” said Sirius ruffling Harry’s hair.

Fifty-eighth paragraph.

Fifty-ninth paragraph.

“You looked all around the Great Hall before watching Sorting?” said Ernie.

Harry shrugged.

Sixtieth paragraph, first sentence, first comma.

“Good thing I wasn’t there, my hat is nothing but burns and scorch marks, never did get a new one.” said Harry with a smirk.

Sixtieth paragraph, second sentence.

“Felt guilty then.” said Harry.

“Why?” asked Ginny.

“I would have told you there was nothing to be worried about with the Sorting”

“Oh, Ron told me all about it, he told me not to listen to Fred or George.” said Ginny with a smile.

“We wouldn’t have lied to you!” said Fred and George together to Ginny.

“You lied to me! What would have stopped you from lying to her?” asked Ron quickly.

“She’s a little girl, they tend to cry if you scare them too much.” said Fred seriously.
Each student, old and present, shouted and cheered when their house was called out.

“Sorry.” said Harry sincerely to the members of Slytherin house.

“Still say that it wasn’t fair.” said Pansy sorely.

“Here’s an idea, get over it.” said Harry irritably.

“That’s me!” said Colin excitedly.

“We received word of what had happened and I had someone waiting for them when they arrived.” said Dumbledore with a calm smile.

“You drank a Calming Draught again haven’t you?” asked Remus.

“Yes he did.” said McGonagall sternly. “When that tree came about. So don’t…”

“I know, I know.” said Remus. “Just asking.”

“Nice to know that Hagrid isn’t worried.” said Charlie with a smirk.

“I wasn’ aware o’ them comin’ ter school tha’ way.” said Hagrid “Missed tha’ briefin’”
“You picked him to meet them? You out of your mind?” said Sirius angrily.

“He volunteered.” said Dumbledore with a smile.

“I’ll bet he did.” said Sirius bitterly.

“Nice to know you two hold each other in such high esteem.” said Moody with a laugh.

“Wow, you call him cruel, but you don’t call your Uncle that?” said a third year Hufflepuff.

Snape flinched.

End of sixty-third paragraph.

“Ronald!” scolded Mrs. Weasley.

“I’m not that petty.” said Snape sternly.

“Students hating him isn’t enough to get him sacked.” said McGonagall. “Or someone here would have been out of here months ago.” she said sternly, looking over to Umbridge, who was still straining against the bonds and gag.

“She still isn’t giving up is she? I’m amazed she didn’t say anything during the last scroll.” said Sirius with a smirk.

“Tempest had her Circle blade to her throat, the entire time.” said Nightstrike with a cruel smile.
“That would take a few years off of one’s life.” said Remus with a smirk.

“Nice dramatic touch.” said Sirius with a bark like laugh.

“Why are you laughing Black?” drawled Snape.

“Ever since I heard you were a teacher here, I couldn’t believe it, you weren’t teacher material. But, with what I’ve just heard…you are. Wish Slughorn was like you, a veritable challenge. Besides the one McGonagall always was.” said Sirius laughing again. “Would have been awesome to try and outwit you.”

Snape stared, than looked down, his face a faint pink.

“Yeah, he’s happiest when Gryffindors get in trouble.” muttered Fred.

“Wow, that’s dramatic thinking.” said Blaise laughing silently.

“If you hit him…” said Sirius warningly, switching from being in a good mood.

“He doesn’t.” said Harry quickly.

“He didn’t plan on missing the train!” said a first year Gryffindor.
“Yeah, something stopped him!” said a third year Hufflepuff.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

“You asked them a question!” said Dr. Clark looking over at Snape incredulously.

End of dialogue set.

“It drove itself away.” said Fred.

“No, a tree ate it.” said George with a smirk.

Sixty-seventh paragraph, second sentence.

“You can’t read minds. The mind isn’t a book.” said Snape in a bored tone.

End of sixty-seventh paragraph.

Dialogue set, third sentence.

“Damn, that’s not good.” said Sirius slapping his hand to his forehead.

Dialogue set.

“That was a low blow, Severus.” said Dumbledore as stern as he could.

Sixty-eighth paragraph, first sentence.

“Why?” asked Dr. Clark.

End of sixty-eighth paragraph.

Mr. Weasley smiled over to him. “Nice of you to worry about me.”
“Little late though.” said Snape quietly.

Dialogue line.

“Oh, that’s a lie. It’s worth more to take the damn thing out than it is to keep it. Smacking that thing and knocking it right off its roots did a service to the school.” said Remus snarling a bit.

Dialogue line.

“That is true. The damage done to the three was very minimal.” said Professor Sprout.

Dialogue set, third sentence.

“He can’t even expel people, or even decide it.” said McGonagall sternly.

“Like he would go and expel someone in his house.” said Fred skeptically.

“I’ve have had to ask for expulsion for a student or two from my own house.” said Snape defensively.

Dialogue set, fourth sentence.

“Jealous much?” asked Lionus with a smile.

End of dialogue set.

Sixty-ninth paragraph, third sentence.

“I didn’t think he would appreciate me throwing up on his office floor.” said Harry the sides of his mouth twitching.

End of sixty-ninth paragraph.

“I thought we were dead before she and Dumbledore even got in there.” said Ron faintly.
Seventieth paragraph, second sentence.

“Nope, she was madder than I have ever seen her before.” said Harry.

“It was really scary.” said Ron.

End of seventieth paragraph.

“What did you think was going to happen?” said McGonagall.

“We weren’t sure, but our nerves just couldn’t take any more surprises.” said Harry in almost a whisper.

Dialogue line.

“You two didn’t even blink when you two sat down. Nor did you even turn around.” said McGonagall.

Dialogue line.

“Wow single word sentences, you must be royally pissed.” said Fred worriedly.

Seventy-first paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

“Like we said earlier, ‘send an owl.’” said most of the teachers.

Seventy-second paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

“Ouch, that hurts real bad.” said Remus shaking his head.

“Remember when she told that to James and us? Oh hell, we did something way worse than just get seen by a couple of muggles.” said Sirius with a laugh. “Least by some people’s opinions.”
“What did you guys do?” asked Fred eagerly.

“We sort of…made all the toilets in the school have sticky glue on the lids.” said Sirius with a smirk.

“Oh, she was angry!” said Remus shaking his head.

“It was hilarious seeing the Prefect hunched over with a towel around his waist.” said Sirius laughing hard.

“How was that worse than being seen by muggles.” asked Colin.

“Well we also snuck some heavy duty laxative potions in the student’s food.” said Sirius smiling with glee. “Every student was in the bathroom! Classes were canceled till Slughorn could figure out how to release the students, from the toilet seat and a cure for the laxative.”

“Couldn’t you tell them how to get out?” said Hermione sternly.

“We were busy.” said Remus with a frown.

“Making all new food without the potion we put in it.” said Sirius. “We couldn’t cook worth anything, so everyone got sandwiches for dinner.”

“It didn’t take him too long to figure out how to cure everyone.” said Remus. “Only a few hours.”

“Thank god you can cook, or we’d be living on chicken sandwiches.” said Sirius with a broad smile to smile.

Seventy-third paragraph, first sentence.

“You’re such a sadist.” said Remus to Snape.

End of seventy-third paragraph.

Seventy-fourth paragraph, first sentence.

“Why?” said Sirius looking down at Harry.

End of seventy-fourth paragraph.

“Yeah, Dumbledore has that ability.” said Fred, George, Sirius and Remus.

Seventy-fifth paragraph.
Seventy-sixth paragraph, first sentence.

“He doesn’t yell, but when he does, you just want to curl up and hide. Kinda like when you shout, Harry.” said Ron with a nervous smile.

Seventy-sixth paragraph, third sentence.

“That’s called shame.” said Sirius giving Harry a hug.

“What made me upset was that Harry was crying, not making a sound, just crying.” said Ron.

Harry looked down.

He told Dumbledore everything except that Mr. Weasley owned the bewitched car, making Seventy-sixth paragraph, fourth sentence.

“I knew where it came from, but I did find it quite honorable that you skipped that little fact.” said Dumbledore with a smile.

End of seventy-sixth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

“Oooh, Ron gave up.” said Fred.

“Never give up, Ron!” said George.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line..

Seventy-seventh paragraph.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

“That was an ominous way of putting it.” said Dr. Clark.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

“Oh trust me, we knew how serious it was.” said Ron tensely.
Dialogue set, third sentence.

“Obviously Mrs. Weasley got it, but what about the Dursley’s?” asked Ernie.

“They threatened that if I got expelled, It would be the last breath of freedom I would know.” said Harry stretching his arms.

“What? Why didn’t’ you tell us?” said Ron angrily.

“I didn’t want you to worry.” said Harry.

“I thought they wanted you to never come here again.” said Remus.

“After the whole car incident, they knew they couldn’t keep me there when I have school.” said Harry.

End of dialogue set.

“At least they’re giving you another chance.” said Kingsley.

Seventy-eighth paragraph, first sentence.

“And interesting way of putting it.” said Dumbledore with a smile.

“I didn’t look like that.” said Snape hotly.

End of seventy-eighth paragraph.

Sirius glared at Snape angrily.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

“As it always will be.” said McGonagall. “No going behind my back.” she looked sternly up to Umbridge.

End of dialogue set.

“That’s his weakness.” said Harry with a smile.

Snape stared at him. “How do you know?” he said in a hiss.
“The house-elves have a platter of that stuff in the kitchen with your name on it, it’s always there when I go down.” said Harry.

Seventy-ninth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

“It was the only wound I saw, I didn’t see the lump on Harry’s head.” said McGonagall.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

“That’s not hygienic.” said Madam Pomfrey.

End of dialogue set.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

“I was almost expelled and killed in the same day! Give me a break!” said Ron looking at the false look of insult on his sister’s face.

Dialogue set.

“You’d be one hell of a gambler.” whistled Sirius.

“You, I lose on Poker Night.” said Harry with a smile.

Eightieth paragraph.

“I was impressed by your reasoning.” said McGonagall with a smile.

Dialogue line.

“We deserved much worse, so we were grateful.” said Harry.
Eighty-first paragraph.
Growls emerged from people around the Great Hall.

Eighty-second paragraph.
Dialogue line.
“She didn’t want you to brag to people.” said Dr. Clark.

Eighty-third paragraph.
Dialogue line.
Dialogue line.
Dialogue set.
Eighty-fourth paragraph.
“You really were way too tired, weren’t you?” said Fred.
“You weren’t thinking at all were you?” said George.
“Nope.” said Harry with a slight smile.

Dialogue line.
“Very good, Mr. Weasley, very good.” said Dumbledore happily.

Eighty-fifth paragraph, first sentence, first comma.
“I ate about ten.” said Harry.
“Fifteen for me.” said Ron with a smirk.

End of eighty-fifth paragraph.
Dialogue line.
Dialogue line.
“You forgot to ask Professor McGonagall what the password was.” said Bill smacking his forehead.

Eighty-sixth paragraph.

“Hermione to the rescue!” shouted Ron and Harry.

Dialogue line.

“Half right, half wrong.” said Harry.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

“I’ve learned to hold that kind of info till after I’ve scolded them.” said Hermione.

“Which really sucks for us.” said Ron and Harry.

Eighty-seventh paragraph.

“We always celebrate stuff like that!” said Fred happily, to the quizzical looks from the other houses.

“Wish I was in Gryffindor then.” said a second year Hufflepuff.

Dialogue line.

“We still talk about it.” said a few fourth years.

“Yeah, it’s sort of a saying now. ‘I feel like I crashed into the Whomping Willow.’ or ‘make a Weasley and Potter entrance.’.” said another fourth year.

“Wonderful.” said Harry rolling his eyes, while Ron smiled.
“Oh, yeah, after…um…did anyone come to see you run?” asked Parvati.

“No, I just ran for myself, helped with my…summer job.” said Harry quietly.

“Like I said, Lionus talked to us. It’s alright, only…don’t do it every night.” said Remus.

“I don’t, I only do three jobs a summer.” said Harry.

“Now we know we didn’t want to.” said Fred and George.

Percy looked at the two of them, insulted.

“Hey, you can be overbearing.” said Bill shrugging his shoulders.

“That was scary.” said Ron. “Please don’t look like that again.”

“Can’t promise that, you two tend to do stupid stuff.” said Hermione haughtily.

“It’s nice to have the familiar dorms as opposed to someplace new.” said Harry with a smile.

“It was nice to be popular.” whispered Ron to Hermione.
End of chapter.

“I felt really stupid later.” said Harry.

“Who’d like to read now?” asked Neville.

“I’ll do it.” said Colin excitedly.

He took the book and almost dropped it in his excitement.

“Sixth chapter” said Colin happily.

“Yay!” said Sirius sarcastically. “More adventures with Dazzle Gums.”
“Before these books came about, you didn’t smile or laugh much before this.” said Neville.

“Glad we could rectify that.” said Dr. Clark reaching behind Harry’s knee and tickling him mercilessly.

“GAH! NO! PLEASE!” said Harry laughing uncontrollably.

“I don’t see how this is bad at all.” said Colin looking up from the book confused.

“Okay, that doesn’t help.” said Colin with a small smile.

“Sorry, Neville.” said Harry quickly.

“It’s alright, I know I don’t have the best memory in the school.” said Neville with a smile.

“You have the worst memory.” sneered Pansy.

“Better than yours, you seem to have forgotten the last time you and I locked horns.” said Harry sternly.

Pansy silenced herself, but glared over to the bowl.
“Almost every year, Gran has to send me something that I’ve forgotten.” said Neville still smiling.

Second paragraph, second sentence first comma, sixth word.

“It was the rest of my socks, I only remembered to pack two pair.” said Neville with a blush.

End of second paragraph.

“Took a week for me to get the stray bits of feather-fluff out of my hair.” said Hermione.

“And two days to get the milk stains off my glasses.” said Harry examining his glasses and wiping them on his robes.

Dialogue line.

“Poor Ron.” said Sirius.

“Poor Ron? Poor owl!” said Dr. Clark.

“Yeah, but Ron’s got a Howler.” said Sirius in a whisper.

“What in the world is that?” asked Dr. Clark.

“You’ll find out.” said Harry. “And it won’t be pretty.”

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Third paragraph, first sentence.

“Nice that you give a hoot over your dad’s owl.” said Tonks with a smile.

End of third paragraph.

“Cause they do!” said the both of them.
Several people, who were fourth year and under, groaned and looked over to Ron sympathetically, the students that remembered the Howler, looked over to Ron with pitying looks.

“Did that happen here?” asked Ron.

“No, this was when I was staying with a relative, I broke a lamp, and…yeah…” said Neville.

“Wish I had never heard of them, now.” said Harry.

“It wasn’t all over, I can still hear it.” muttered Ron.

“Wish I took the hint.” said Harry shaking his head.

“I had dust in my tea after that was all done.” said Ron glumly.

Colin shouted himself almost hoarse reading the book.

“Mr. Creevy, you don’t need to shout, speaking normal will do just fine.’ said McGonagall crossly.
“Sorry Professor,” said Colin.

“We thought a Muggle teenager had taken the car,” said Mrs. Weasley angrily. “When we first came out of King’s Cross.”

“Sorry Mum,” said Ron quieter.

Seventh paragraph.

“We could still see you,” said Ernie with a laugh.

Ron glared fiercely over to Ernie, who ceased his laughter just as soon as he had started.

Dialogue set.

Eighth paragraph.

“Didn’t work, I could actually see a tear sliding down your face,” said Hermione almost silently.

Dialogue set.

“Nice to know you took that warning to heart,” said Mrs. Weasley sternly.

“Yes, Mum,” said Ron quietly.

Ninth paragraph, fourth sentence, first comma.

“Sadists,” said Sirius angrily.

“Padfoot received one every day when he got sorted into Gryffindor, by his mother and father. They were really bad to start out, but after a while, he just burnt them,” said Remus.

End of ninth paragraph.

Tenth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

“Hermione…” said Remus sternly.

“Sorry,” said Hermione.
“Have I told you lately that I appreciate the fact that you only did that once every five years.” said Sirius to Remus.

Dialogue line.

Eleventh paragraph, first sentence.

“Mr. Potter! You must eat!” said Madam Pomfrey.

“I know, but…I just couldn’t, not without it coming back up to me.” said Harry quietly.

Eleventh paragraph, second sentence.

“It wasn’t your fault mate, I was the one who came up with the idea.” said Ron quickly.

“But I should’ve known better, I had an owl, and I was smart enough to know that it wouldn’t have ended well for either of us.” said Harry angrily. “But I went along with it anyway.” Harry placed his hands on his face, to block their view of stray tears falling from his brilliant green eyes.

Ron and the rest of Weasley family said nothing. They couldn’t think of one comforting to say to remove the guilt he was feeling. But they saw Sirius pull Harry to lean on him, Harry tore his hands away from his face and silently leaned against Sirius.

End of eleventh paragraph.

“We were perfectly fine Harry, no real damage done, we were more relieved that the two of you were fine.” said Mr. Weasley kindly.

Twelfth paragraph.

“At least the first class of the day wasn’t all that bad.” said Remus. “The Hufflepuffs are always decent.”

“Thanks for the shout-out.” said Tonks happily.

Thirteenth paragraph.

“That was the only good thing that came from that Howler.” said Ron bitterly.

“Thanks to my mother, I can guarantee that I won’t be sending you a Howler.” said Sirius with a smile.
“I don’t know what they are, but I can promise that I’d just send an angry non-vocal letter.” said Dr. Clark beaming.

“I’d probably send a Howler, but only if you did something really, really bad.” said Remus with a slight smile.

“I can deal with that.” said Harry. “How do you rate ‘really, really bad’?”

“You almost dying again.” said Remus smacking Harry’s head slightly.

Fourteenth paragraph, second sentence, third comma.

“Well this sounds like a nice calm day.” said Remus smiling a little.

Fourteenth paragraph, end of second sentence.

“And the whole week is ruined.” he said in a defeated tone.

End of fourteenth paragraph.

"That twinge didn't last long." said Harry with a smirk.

"I would hope not, it did more damage to you than you did to it." said Remus.

"What was wrong with it anyway?" asked Sirius.

"It had several sprained limbs." said Professor Sprout.

Fifteenth paragraph, first sentence.

"Really, Mr. Potter? I wonder if I could spend a day with Mrs. Dursley then." said Professor Sprout spitefully.

End of fifteenth paragraph.

"I thought he was wearing blue." said Ron.

"Turquoise is blue." said Hermione.

"And you knew what that kind of blue was called?" said Fred and George staring at Harry in horror.
"Was he shocked to see you guys there?" said Bill. "It's class time!"
"He's always been an idiot." said Sirius and Remus together.

"Which is complete bullocks, she's the most respected and celebrated authority on Herbology alive!" said Neville proudly.

"Thank you Mr. Longbottom." said Professor Sprout blushingly.

"Exotic my ass. They are only indigenous to Europe. You can't find Whomping Willows in any other part of the world." said Kingsley angrily.

"Wow, Kingsley is actually getting angry and swearing? That's a first.” said Tonks teasingly.

"He had been pestering me all morning, telling me that he was my most prized student and that I absolutely must read his latest book because that I was mentioned in it and all sorts of other nonsense." said Professor Sprout rolling her eyes.

“Wow, you kids are lucky, we weren’t allowed into greenhouse three until we became fourth years.” said Tonks eagerly.

“IT was actually a decent sort of smell.” said Harry absently.

“I find it quite nice as well.” said Professor Sprout.
“Oh he did not just pull him out of Herbology.” said Sirius in shock.

“You can pull anybody out of anywhere…just not Herbology…” said Remus with a smile.

“She doesn’t like it when someone is pulled. She doesn’t even allow me to remove someone.” said Dumbledore with a smile.

“Of course! That class happened to be very important!” she said indignantly. “More important than even I thought.” she finished quietly.

Several of the adults and older students groaned.

“That won’t do.” said Sirius with a pained smile.

“We heard you the first time.” said Sirius to Colin.

“No, that’s what he said, he said it four times.” said Colin pointing in the book.

“Like I said before, he’s an idiot.” said Remus.

“What could I say? I didn’t know what he wanted.” said Harry.

“I’ll give you a kick, right up your…”

“REMUS!” scolded Mrs. Weasley.
“Careful Moony, that could be taken another way…” said Sirius with a smirk.

It was a full half-hour before Colin could start reading again, for that’s how long it took to pull Remus off of Sirius (of whom Remus was pummeling heavily with an over-stuffed cushion).

Nineteenth paragraph, second sentence, first comma.

“I swear, he knows right when you want to talk, and then interjects with his garbage.” said Sirius rolling his eyes, rubbing his head from where Remus smacked him repeatedly.

Nineteenth paragraph, sixth sentence.

“Did he stop you from going through the barrier?” accused Kingsley.

“Nope, wasn’t him.” said Ron, Hermione and Harry.

End of nineteenth paragraph.

“If he says Harry’s name three times again, I swear, I’m gonna snap.” said Dr. Clark.

“Welcome to our world.” said Harry, Sirius and Remus.

Twentieth paragraph.

“Man, you would not believe how happy I was to see him not smile for a week.” said Fred.

“What do you mean…?” said Remus slowly.

“He wore a muffler for one whole week.” said George with glee.

“How did you guys manage that?” asked Sirius and Remus eagerly.

“Well, you know, it’s really sad how we didn’t notice his capabilities then isn’t it, Fred?” said George smiling to his twin.

“’Tis true.” said Fred nodding solemnly.

“What happened?” pressed Sirius.

“Well, there was this trick toothpaste we had, it’s supposed to turn your teeth looking old, cracked, and dark gray for a week. No charm can release it.” said George grinning maliciously.

“George!” scolded Mrs. Weasley.
“Leave them be, it was for a very good cause.” said Remus quickly. “So how did you do it?” he asked excitedly.

“Well, actually, we couldn’t figure that part out, but Harry overheard what we were doing and volunteered for the mission.” said George.

“How did that go? How did you do it?” asked Bill and Sirius quickly.

“Um…well…” said Harry.

“He won’t even tell us how he got into Lockhart’s office.” said Fred pouting.

“Well, when I got in there, I got rid of all of the rest of his usual toothpaste, and replaced it with the trick one. It took a while, twice he almost woke up.” said Harry.

“You did this at night?” asked Remus slowly. “I hope you didn’t get too close to him.” said Remus quietly.

“Yeah…but he didn’t wake up and no one saw me.” said Harry carefully. He looked slowly over to Dumbledore, who merely smiled.

“Tell them what sort of pajamas he wears.” said Fred excitedly.

“I DON’T WANNA KNOW!” shouted Sirius plugging his ears.

“They’re pink, with little purple bunnies.” said Harry with a smirk.

Sirius actually pulled the fingers out of his ears and stared in wonder as the rest of the school laughed loudly. He broke down and asked what the sleepwear looked like. When he was told, he joined in the raucous laughter.

_Dialogue set, second sentence._

“No, he made Harry hate it even more actually.” said Ginny with a smile.

_End of dialogue set._

“He wouldn’t have needed you to get on the front page, you prat.” said Dr. Clark.

_Dialogue line._

_Dialogue set, first sentence, third comma._

“Breathe in, breathe out.” said Dr. Clark to himself over and over again.

“Do you want a Calming Draught, Sam?” asked Dumbledore, passing a phial over to the bowl.
“No, just hoping to God, that he doesn’t say it again.” said Dr. Clark with a smile.

Dialogue set, end of first sentence.

“He really likes touching you doesn’t he?” said Sirius gritting his teeth.

“You know, if I start waking up screaming from all these images you’ve put in my head, I’m going to smack the daylights out of you, you know that right?” said Harry looking up to his godfather.

“I’m serious.” said the black-haired man. Abandoning his own personal joke.

“I know, quit dwelling on it, nothing happened, with him or anybody else.” said Harry reassuringly.

Dialogue set, third sentence, first dash.

“You are the complete opposite of him, Harry. And for that, I’m immensely proud of you.” said Dumbledore, beaming brightly.

Harry smiled shyly and accepted the hug that the men in the bowl gave him.

Dialogue set, third sentence, second dash.

“It hasn’t.” said Harry’s close friends.

Dialogue set, third sentence, third comma, fifth word.

“Well, I’ll give him that.” said Remus grudgingly.

Dialogue set, end of third sentence.

“I take it back.” said Remus angrily.

Dialogue set, sixth sentence.

“‘Get away from me, you loser?’ said Sirius with a shrug.

“‘Don’t touch me, you’re scaring me?’ said Remus with his brows raised.
“Quit smiling at me, I’m going ‘snow-blind’?” smirked Dr. Clark.

Several people laughed loudly.

“I love you guys.” said Harry laughing along with the rest of the school. The men beamed.

Dialogue set, seventh sentence.

“He wasn’t all that famous to us. I would think that being a great ‘Anti-Dark wizard’ you should at least be known by us.” said Lionus with a smirk.

Dialogue set, eighth sentence.

“Excuse me?” said most of the people in the Great Hall.

“He’s not a nobody! Everyone knew his name before he could get his first real tooth.” said Sirius.

“Dear Lord.” said Harry burying his face in his hands.

Dialogue set, tenth sentence.

“A few?” said McGonagall indignantly.

Dialogue set, twelfth sentence.

“Merlin! Tell me he isn’t there the entire year.” said Remus rubbing the bridge of his nose.

“Sorry.” said Harry with a smile.

End of dialogue set.

“He’s delusional isn’t he?” said Neville staring at the book.

“Let’s think about this for a moment,” said Nightstrike with a faked seriousness. “if you were a criminal, would you quake in fear from someone who has defeated a dark wizard in his infancy. OR someone who won a smiling contest?”

Several people pointed towards Harry, who looked down and blushed.

“But I didn’t do anything.” said Harry. “It was my mom…”
“Your first year, when you went up against him, you didn’t have your mom.” said Sirius giving Harry a quick one armed hug.

“If you think about it, I did.” said Harry quietly.

Twenty-first paragraph, second sentence, first comma.

“Why were you stunned?” asked Remus quickly.

“I didn’t know he was an even bigger idiot than what I thought.” said Harry with a smirk.

“Oh, I thought he tried to use a memory charm or something.” said Remus worriedly.

“No, you can actually tell if a memory charm is used on yourself.” said Dumbledore. “It gives the sensation of butterflies fluttering about your brain. Have you felt like that at all, Harry?”

“Not then, a few weeks ago sort of and little sprastic periods here and there. Since the incident.” said Harry scratching his head.

“That was a memory charm, yes, but it was a much darker version of it.” said Dumbledore with a saddened expression. “Once again, I ask you not to remember anything more than what you have already. I don’t want you suffering anymore.”

“Us either.” said most of the adults.

Twenty-first paragraph, second sentence, third comma.

“Harry…” said Remus quickly.

“Nothing happened, if it had, I’m pretty sure Madam Pomfrey would have seen some evidence of anything that might have happened.” said Harry calmly.

“….this is true…if something like that had happened; I would have found it out.” said Madam Pomfrey thoughtfully. “Especially when I ran my Diagnostic spell.”

“Well that’s a relief.” said Remus with a sigh. But then he caught himself quickly. “You guys didn’t see anything like that have you?” he said quickly to the Rangers. “When you had him in that pod thing?”

“I’d rather forget that you were in there, it was…disturbing…” said Sirius wincing.

“We saw no evidence of that….sort of assault.” said Nicodemus, trying to be gentle about it.

“It’s odd hearing you put things softly, you know?” said Lionus with a smirk.

“I don’t need to be gentle with you lot, you’re all just big babies.” said Nicodemus.

End of twenty-first paragraph.
“I waited till he came in, this was an important lesson and I didn’t want him coming in when they would start crying.” said Professor Sprout.

“Crying?” said Dr. Clark confused. Some other students were also in the dark.

“Nobody else’s hand even twitched to be raised.” said Ernie.

“You really need to put things in your own words, Granger.” said Snape smoothly. “It’s quite annoying when you recite things in that fashion.”

“But, it’s the information you’re asking for!” said Hermione defensively.

“We know dear, but it is better to hear it from your own words. You get points yes for knowing the answer, but we would like it more if you gave it to us in your own words.” said Professor McGonagall kindly.

“How did you come about having Mandrakes that year, Pomona?” asked Dumbledore with a smile.

“Well, the year before, I had my N.E.W.T.s students use the parents in their exams, so I thought I would start the year with the infants.” said Professor Sprout proudly. “Everyone dealt with them in their first Herbology class of the year.”

“A plant can be dangerous? Really?” asked Dr. Clark.

“You’re forgetting the Devil’s Snare, and the Whomping Willow.” said Neville.

“Oh crap!” moaned Dr. Clark.

“Geez, everyone just wants to smack me about.” said Harry with a laugh.
“Is there anything in this school that isn’t fatal?” asked Dr. Clark with a nervous laugh.

“Peevesie isn’t!” said a voice above the bowl.

Suddenly a pale hand reached down and took the eye patch off of Dr. Clark’s head. When the patch was removed, they all saw small vertical slice down his eyelid. When his eye fluttered open, they saw his pupil and iris had a black slice through it.

Pevees placed the patch over his eye, and began to do a sort of sailor’s jig.

“Yo ho ho, and a bottle of Butterbeer!” sang Peeves in a sea chantey style.

Dr. Clark laughed and rubbed his sliced eye.

“That’s enough Peeves, give Sam back his patch.” said Dumbledore with a smile.

Peeves dropped the patch in Sam’s lap and glided out of the room. Sam put the patch back on and noticed Harry’s face.

“I’m alright, I just can’t see out of this eye. Dr. Nicodemus said that it should get better at some point.” said Dr. Clark reassuringly. “He even gave me some sort of eye drops that ease the pain immensely.”

“Really?” asked Hermione quickly.

“Well, Miss Granger, Mandrakes are really a plant I wouldn’t have gotten to for quite some time, till about your seventh year.” said Professor Sprout.

“So I was really proud of you, then.” said Harry beaming.

“Well, at least the boys were scrambling to grab ones that weren’t pink.” said Dean bitterly.

“What’s up with him?” asked Fred.

“He had to take one that was pink and fluffy.” said Seamus with a smirk.
“I screamed.” said Parvati blushing.
“I did too.” said Lavender.

“How did you know it was a boy?” asked Dr. Clark.

Every male in the room turned towards him and stared, some of the girls giggled.
“What…oh…” said Dr. Clark, realizing the answer. Several people smirked when he mouthed “On a plant?”

“Wow.” said Dr. Clark looking at Professor Sprout in an impressed tone. Professor Sprout blushed.

“And it’s painful when it is. Not for the tentacula, but the people around it.” said Harry, Ron and Hermione.

“Have you three been bitten?” asked Dr. Clark quickly.

“Ron was,” said Harry and Hermione. “backed up too far.”

“It can also be fresh.” said Professor Sprout with a frown.
Thirty-second paragraph.

“Wow, really?” said Justin with a bright smile.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

“Harry groaned there.” said Ron with a smirk.

End of dialogue set.

Thirty-third paragraph.

“Right then, I knew what you felt like, mate. With everyone talking about you.” said Ron sadly.
“Stupid me, I didn’t remember it last year.”

“What happened last year?” asked Dr. Clark.

“You’ll find out.” said Harry.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

“Oh yeah, he’s something.” said Remus rolling his eyes.

Dialogue set, third sentence.

“Are you freaking nut? He couldn’t even face a niffler in Care of Magical Creatures class! Scared him almost out of his mind. And if you show him a snake…he loses his damn mind, faints right on the spot.” said Remus clapping a hand to his eyes.

Dialogue set, fourth sentence, first comma.

“Oh he didn’t corner that werewolf.” said Nightstrike angrily.

“How do you know?” asked Remus, “not that I believe Dazzle Gums.”

“I was right there; I was taking out the stronger ones, in my werewolf form. It was an ugly old guy that did it. Funny thing is, he never came to the headquarters and receive his medal.” said Nightstrike worryingly.

“You’ll find out why, towards the end of the book.” said Harry.
“But how do you know when or where this was?” asked Hermione.

“How often do you think werewolves get defeated in a telephone booth?” asked Nightstrike.

“Wait, how can you control yourself in during the full moon?” asked Remus, not catching what Harry had said.

“The shot you get from Dr. Nicodemus, it keeps your mind while you’re having the furry out of body experience. You even get a bit of a strength boost too.”

End of dialogue set.

“Zap?” said Remus and Sirius together, staring at Justin in disbelief.

“Hey!” he said indignantly. “I didn’t know much about magic yet!”

“You had one whole year.” said Sirius.

“Yeah…well…” said Justin weakly.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

Dr. Clark smiled. “I went there, nice school. Nothing like this though.” he beamed while looking around.

Dialogue set, third sentence, second comma.

“I would sort of hope so. It takes a lot to get in there.” said Dr. Clark.

End of dialogue set.

“Useful?” said Fred.

“That’s insulting.” George.

Thirty-fourth paragraph, third sentence.

“That’s the bonus of being an adult.” said Sirius with a smirk. “We make everything look easy.”

“I showed you how to set the oven and you still couldn’t figure it out.” said Harry.
“Hey, it was hard! You made it look…never mind.” said Sirius pouting.

Thirty-fourth paragraph, fourth sentence.

“Why is that?” asked Colin.

“They’re nice and warm in the ground, but when they get out, they realize they’re free and they can do whatever they want.” said Harry simply.

“Why aren’t you whipping out your book?” asked Ron.

“It’s in Dumbledore’s office.” said Harry.

Thirty-fourth paragraph, fifth sentence, first semi-colon.

“I really hated those things. One scratched my face.” said Sirius absently touching his cheek.

“He was obsessed with his face when he was younger.” said Remus whispering to Harry.

“Hey! I had a good face!” said Sirius indignantly.

“He was a major ladies man.” said Remus with a smirk.

End of thirty-fourth paragraph.

“You picked him.” said Ron with a smirk. “Your fault.”

“Why would you? Those are the hardest.” said Remus confused.

“Reminded me of Dudley. Fat and ugly.” said Harry with a laugh.

Thirty-fifth paragraph, first sentence.

“Was just like trying to weed the Dursley’s garden on my birthday. I was ready to just pass out.” said Harry. “But I still had classes to go to, man that sucked. No offense Professor!” said Harry looking up to McGonagall quickly. She merely smiled slightly and nodded.

End of thirty-fifth paragraph.

“Well that explained why all of you were almost falling asleep in class and rubbing your shoulders.” said McGonagall with a smile.
“Ahh, the misfortune of youth.” said Dumbledore with a smile.

“I actually intended to actually do it right at least the first three times, but that didn’t work out to well.” said Harry with a slight smile.

“Everybody’s arms were so sore that only Hermione managed to turn her beetles into buttons.” said Ron.

“How come she wasn’t sore?” asked Charlie.

“Ron and Harry both handled my mandrake, it wouldn’t go in.” said Hermione with blush.

“Well, compared to the other objects you could use, that would be the best thing to use.” said Dumbledore kindly. “At least the best thing to use that is available to you.”

“Why didn’t you send us an owl to get you a new wand!” said Mrs. Weasley.

Ron stared at her. “‘If you put another toe out of line.’” said Ron in a shrill voice. “I was nervous about you pulling me out of Hogwarts.”

“I had to go and open a window real quick.” said Harry with a smile.

“She hates it when people accidentally kill the animal they’re trying to transfigure. She’s a real animal lover.” said Remus with a smile.

“Harry you have a real funny way of describing things, you know that?” said Lee clutching his
“Just about fried my eyebrows right off, like Seamus did in one of our first year classes.” said Harry with a smirk.

“We wouldn’t have done that, Ron dear.” said Mrs. Weasley. “It's dangerous to have a broken wand, we would have gotten you another one right away.”

“From your howler, I wasn’t too secure with that knowledge.” said Ron.

“I wasn’t in the mood to be secretly thrilled for you at the moment.” said Ron apologetically.

Remus and Sirius both groaned and covered their eyes. “Hermione,” said Sirius in a pained voice. “you could do so much better!”

“It was my favorite book at the time.” said Hermione.

“Thank Merlin, that changed.” said Remus.
Remus removed the hand away from his face and slowly looked up.

“It’s not that house-elf again is it?” he said carefully.

“Nope.” said Harry.

“It's not Lockhart is it?” he pressed.

“Nope.” repeated Harry.

“What’s that kid’s problem?” asked Sirius with a raised eyebrow.

“That’s me!” said Colin defensively.

“Oh, sorry.” said Sirius quickly.

“Why would you?” asked Remus curiously.

“Well, I was only a first year and he was famous.” said Colin shyly.

“Yeah but he’s just a second year, and he doesn’t like his fame, so you can look at him all you want.” said Sirius shrugging.

“Gee, thanks.” whispered Harry, nudging him hard with his elbow.

“Prove it to whom?” asked Dr. Clark.

“My family.” said Colin.

“But your family are Muggleborns, Col.” said one of his friends.
“Yeah, but when I wrote back home the first time, I told my family all about Harry.” said Colin with a smile.

Dialogue set, end of first sentence.

“You do know all about personal space, right?” said Sirius questioningly.

“Well, yeah…” said Colin slowly.

“Think about it.” said Sirius.

Colin looked down sadly.

“Do you want me to read?” asked Dean.

“No, I’m fine. Sorry Harry.” said Colin sorrowfully.

“It’s okay.” said Harry kindly.

Dialogue set, end of parenthesis.

“Jeez, wish people wouldn’t look for that the moment they see me.” said Harry bitterly.

Dialogue set, fifth sentence, eighth word.

Remus and Sirius stared at the young fourth year.

“That made me sound really creepy.” said Colin uneasily.

Dialogue set, eighth sentence.

Umbridge, despite the bonds and the gag, gave a muffled shout and strained against her restraints.

“How dare you take pictures and give them out to Muggles!” shouted Fudge, guessing what she was upset about.

“Oh, leave him be! He asked permission to take pictures of the school! The Headmaster gave him special permission with strict guidelines and rules. He’s not allowed to share them with anyone else besides close family member and not to take pictures of anyone if they don’t want it.” said McGonagall.
“Oh I was thrilled.” said Ron rolling his eyes.

Draco looked down shamefully.

“When he doesn’t have Crabbe and Goyle, he’s got his Daddy.” said a seventh year Gryffindor quietly.

“Little twat never did fight his own fight.” said his friend.

“The ones that were heading over first were the first year girls.” said Hermione with a smirk. “Till the guys pulled them back and said, ‘Malfoy’s joking.’”

“It was hilarious, the look on Malfoy’s face.” said Ron.

“When you were a baby, and you happened to come across a picture of yourself, you would grab a crayon and scribble something on the bottom. So you were really into signing something on the bottom of your pictures.” said Remus with a smirk. “You were signing photos before you could even say ‘Momma.’”

A few people snorted.

“I could’ve gone without knowing that.” said Harry crossly.
“Though it does sound like he’s jealous of something.” said Dr. Clark plainly.

“Like what?” asked Blaise.

“Perhaps the fact that Harry is always surrounded by his friends.” said Dr. Clark shrugging.

Draco said nothing.

Forty-third paragraph.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

Malfoy smirked slightly, while Ron turned slightly green.

End of dialogue set.

“ Took several minutes for it to dawn on him that Ron had said that.” said Harry with a smirk.

Dialogue set.

“That was a low blow.” said Tonks angrily.

“Even for a Slytherin.” said Moody looking at Draco with a stern look, his other eye looking over at Fudge.

Forty-fourth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

“Actually, that is pretty accurate.” said seventh year Hufflepuff girl. “He never signs any and he doesn’t pose for any.”

Forty-fifth paragraph.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

“ACCK! You could have warned them who it was!” said Sirius.

“Or us!” moaned Remus covering his eyes.
“Not me.” said Harry quickly.

Forty-sixth paragraph.

Remus began to growl.

“Nothing happened.” said Harry in a bored tone.

“Doesn’t mean that I have to like him touching you.” said Remus.

“Look, we all know he’s bats for both teams, but what makes you think that he likes little kids?” said Harry tiredly.

“We remember seeing him asking a first year out on a date when we were in our final year.” said Sirius bitterly.

“I ran up and blacked his eye.” said Remus with a satisfied look. “Sirius kicked him in the groin, and James slammed his fist in his jaw.”

“Okay, granted that is really freaking creepy….,” said Harry, he wanted to continue to say that nothing happened, but he gave up.

Forty-seventh paragraph.

“I knew you hated the attention, that’s why I did it.” said Draco quietly.

Dialogue set, second sentence, second comma.

“A picture of a flobberworm is better than one of you, Dazzle Gums.” said Remus crossly.

End of dialogue set.

“Harry never did sign it I don’t think.” said Colin thoughtfully.

“Nope, and I refuse to.” said Harry.

Forty-eighth paragraph.
“Genius, bell rang, Harry-boy needs to go to class now.” said Sirius rolling his eyes.

“It was his class we were going to next.” said Harry.

“That is a huge insult to James.” said Sirius staring at the book.

“I agree.” said Remus.

“What a twat, he only came over because he heard the word ‘picture’.” said Remus skeptically.

“Anybody that really knows him knows that he isn’t trying to attract attention.” said Fred.

“We didn’t expect to see you with him. Your sort of modest and quiet, and he…isn’t” said a seventh year Hufflepuff.

“He’s a complete and utter idiot.” said Kingsley shaking his head.

“I can’t believe he was in our house.” said Ernie and Hannah together.

“What an egotistical bastard!” said Bill.

“WILLIAM!” shouted Mrs. Weasley.
Fiftieth paragraph, second sentence, first comma.

Sirius squeezed Harry’s hand. “You dad and us used to sit all the way in the back of the class too, especially for teachers we didn’t like.”

End of fiftieth paragraph.

“Good thinking.” said Moody gruffly.

Fifty-first paragraph.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

“You looked so funny.” said Ron with a laugh.

End of dialogue set.

“That actually does exist, before they had about forty people in it. Then after the final task, it sort of dropped to about twenty, then after the books started, it zoomed up to about a hundred or so.” said Neville.

Harry groaned and buried his face in Remus’ cloak.

Dialogue line.

“Tell me there wasn’t a “Gilderoy Lockhart fan club.” said Sirius with a pained expression.

“There was, but that only lasted one year.” said Hermione.

“She was a founding member.” said Harry with a smirk.

Fifty-second paragraph.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

“Really? I thought it was the troll in the book.” said Harry sarcastically.

People in the Great Hall began to laugh; even Remus cracked a huge smile.
“Means that he’s not very important and hasn’t done much. They just gave it to him to shut him up.” said Kingsley.

“He came to us and asked if he could join up. He wasn’t all that qualified to become one of us, so we made him honorary.” said Kingsley.

“You part of it?” asked Ron eagerly.

“Yeah, I’m one of the higher ranked ones.” said Kingsley with some slight pride.

“He never was much of a comedian.” said Remus.

“Remember the one time when Hogwarts held a sort of stand-up comedy competition? God, most people booed him right off the stage.” said Sirius with a smile. “Some even threw fruit.”

“I threw the grapefruit.” said Remus proudly.

“Who won it?” asked George.

“My brother Regulus, from Slytherin House. I’ll admit it, he was insanely funny.” said Sirius.

“Cause we had a choice.” said Ron with a groan.
“Oh, you have got to be kidding me.” said Kingsley.

“That’s not a Defense quiz.” said Moody irritably.

Fifty-fourth question.

“That was a pathetic excuse for a test.” said Remus.

Fifty-seventh paragraph.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

“Did he greet a Tibetan man and say “Hi, I’m Lockhart and my favorite color is lilac?” scoffed Sirius.

“Actually, in the book he commented on the lilac trees in a hidden valley.” said Hermione.

“Bull.” said Remus simply. “He couldn't find the exit in an empty room. Let alone a hidden valley.”

Dialogue set, third sentence, first dash.

“Would really rather not.” said Bill.

Dialogue set, third sentence, second dash.

“He sounds like a beauty pageant contender.” said Sirius with a smirk.

“He couldn’t even win Miss. or Mr. Congeniality.” said Tonks with a laugh.

End of dialogue set.

“Wonderful, tell that to a bunch of twelve you olds.” said McGonagall irritably.

Fifty-eighth paragraph, second sentence, first semi-colon.

“I thought he was a complete idiot. I still do.” said Ron.
“First time we heard a Professor talk about wanting liquor.” said Seamus with a smirk.

“Wonder which one he would have failed at first.” said Dr. Clark to Sirius.

“AWESOME!” I’ve successfully corrupted him!” said Sirius with a fist raised and clapping Dr. Clark on the back.

“Merlin help us all.” said Professors all together.

“Oh, come on.” said Charlie shaking his head.

“He had better not have released anything dangerous with all of you in there.” said Professor Sprout angrily.

“Nope that happens the next year, with an actual teacher, teaching us.” said Harry proudly.

“They’re dead.” said Lee.
"Hey! I was curious." said Harry to the looks he was receiving from Remus and Sirius.

"It'll be okay, Neville." said Luna patting Neville’s head.

"I know." said Neville blushingly.

"Say what?" said Remus slowly.

"Pixies." said Sirius with a laugh.

"Yeah, it was sort of loud and obvious." said Seamus with another snort.

"I was holding back a laugh." said Seamus with a chuckling.

"That is actually true." said Remus thoughtfully.
Sixty-fourth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Remus face-palmed while Sirius moaned loudly. “What an idiot! Didn’t he remember what happened when we did it?” said Remus irritably.

“You released a bunch of pixies?” said Fred dumbfounded.

“Yeah, in our sixth year. We let them loose in the Great Hall, two batches of them. They never caught us.” said Remus with a small smile.

“Who did you think it was?” said George.

“There was a colony infesting the upper part of the Great Hall. We had assumed that they just decided to swarm down upon everyone.” said Dumbledore, his eyes twinkling while looking over to the two men.

Sixty-fifth paragraph, first sentence.

“It was a nightmare.” said Harry.

“Pandemonium is an understatement.” said Neville.

Sixty-fifth paragraph, third sentence.

“My ears are still sore from that.” said Neville rubbing his ears absently.

“Be thankful Miss Trunchbull wasn’t there.” said Hermione with a smile.

“Who?” said Neville and the Weasley children.

“A fictional Headmistress in Muggle book. She swung a small boy around by his ears.” said Harry.

“You’ve read it too, huh?” said Hermione with a smile.

“It was one of the books in the room at the Dursleys.” said Harry with a smile.

Sixty-fifth paragraph, fourth sentence.

“Oh! No one was hurt, I hope.” said Madam Pomfrey anxiously.

“No, everyone was mostly fine.” said Ron.

Sixty-fifth paragraph, fifth sentence.
“Apt description.” said Hermione.

End of sixty-fifth paragraph.

“Where the hell was Gilderoy?” asked Professor Sprout angrily.

The Hufflepuffs stared at their Head of House in shock.

Dialogue line.

“Five or so is one thing. Not forty!” said Ron angrily.

Sixty-sixth paragraph.

The Aurors, Rangers, Professors, and several other people laughed hard.

“What the hell was that?” said Sirius wiping a tear from his eye.

“Yeah, he’s trying to add an ‘r’ to the end of everything. He’s really saying ‘Pesky Pixie Pester Not Me.’ He just eliminates the ‘y’ and the ‘t’. “ said Harry with a smile.

“More stuff from your notebook?” said Sirius.

“No, that book of Umbridge’s.” said Harry with a smile.

Sixty-seventh paragraph, first paragraph, first semi-colon.

“Exactly.” said Rivers looking sternly over to Umbridge.

Sixty-seventh paragraph, first paragraph, first comma.

“ Took him two days to find it.” said Ron with a laugh. “He gave thirty points to the first person to find it. Only the girls volunteered.”

End of sixty-seventh paragraph.
“I hope he learned something from this at the very least.” said McGonagall massaging her temples.

Sixty-eighth paragraph, second sentence, first comma.

“There was still panic going on in the room, most of the pixies were still in there.” said Ron.

End of sixty-eighth paragraph.

“I’m going to kill him.” said Remus.

“You think you’re going to want to kill him now, wait till later.” said Ron with a smile.

“Thanks Ron.” said Harry through gritted teeth.

“Oh, sorry mate.” said Ron noticing the look in Remus’ eye.

Dialouge line.

“I certainly can’t.” said Sirius bitterly.

Dialouge line.

“You’re as delusional as he is.” said Dr. Clark with a laugh.

Dialouge line.

“Well Harry figured him out the first day.” said Remus with a proud smile.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

“Oh, really?” said Sirius.

End of dialogue set.

“He says he’s done.” said Dr. Clark.
“Amen.” said Dr. Clark with a smile.

“I think that it is lunch time.” said Dumbledore kindly, he pulled out his wand and the table of food emerged.

“Let’s change readers now, who would like to read?” said Professor McGonagall.

“May I?” said Sirius.

“Of course.” said Dumbledore happily.

Sirius took the book and read the title

“Oh I don’t want to read that word…” said Sirius with a groan.

“What word?” asked Remus.

Remus looked at the word and gasped. “I don’t think we have a choice mate.” said Remus.

Sirius sighed. “Mudbloods” the school gasped and the teachers clenched their hands. “And Murmurs.” said Sirius. “Well right off the bat you know this won’t be a good one.”

“Who in this school would call somebody that!” shrieked Madam Pomfrey.

“Well we got Pansy and the person who said it in this chapter.” said Harry. “So far we’re up to two people.”

Chapter End Notes

I did leave the title of the next chapter at the bottom, it’s separated.
I don't own Harry Potter

“You going to help me read.” said Sirius. “Right?”

“Sure, I’ll read the second half.” said Harry quickly. He knew what was in the back half of the chapter and he didn’t want Sirius reading it.

Sirius however, looked at Harry skeptically. “Hmm, I think I’ll have you read the first part. You answered a bit too quickly for my liking.”

Harry grumbled and snatched the book.

First paragraph, first sentence.

“Good, keep away from him, he makes me nervous when you are with him.” said Remus calmly.

“He ain’t going to like ending part is he?” whispered Ron with a smirk.

First paragraph, second sentence.

“You didn’t, did you?” asked Fred staring at Colin stunned.

Colin looked nervous.

End of first paragraph.

Colin shuffled his feet embarrassingly.

“Poor Colin.” whispered Hermione.

“He asked for it.” said Ron.

Second paragraph, first sentence, eleventh word.

“It took a long time to have her warm back up to me.” said Harry with a small smile.
“What did it take?” asked Remus.

“I think she finally thought that I had enough of the silent treatment.” said Harry with a smile. “And making her homemade owl treats didn’t hurt either.”

Second paragraph, first sentence, first comma.

“Uh oh.” said several students in the Great Hall.

Second paragraph, end of first sentence.

“Oooh!” moaned Sirius and Remus together.

“Were you okay?” asked Dr. Clark trying not to laugh.

“I was fine. I’ve suffered worse.” said Professor Flitwick with a broad grin. “A boil is nothing serious.”

Second paragraph, second sentence.

“I was ready to sleep in that day.” said Ron with a broad smile.

“I planned on finishing reading my books.” said Hermione.

“I was going to go down to the kitchen and make something real early that morning.” said Harry with a smile.

“Then we were going to go down to Hagrid’s at in the afternoon.” said Ron.

Second paragraph, third sentence

“‘Planning’ is a good choice of words.” said the trio.

End of second paragraph.

“I was pissed.” said Harry with a smile. “That was one of the mornings that I didn’t want to get up all that early. Six o clock in the morning was one thing, not five.”
“You make it sound like you’ve been woken up in the middle of the night before. By someone with a problem.” said Dumbledore thoughtfully.

Neville, Seamus, and Dean looked up innocently.

“Sort of.” said Harry.

“Why would someone wake you up in the middle of the bloody night?” asked Sirius.

“Homesick, questions about random stuff, stuff like that.” said Harry shrugging. “It only began the second year. And it wouldn’t exactly be my year either.”

“Oh you have got to be kidding me! That early?” said Remus stunned.

“James was never that bad, he was bad, but at least he let you get some sleep.” said Sirius with a smile.

“I thought that you always got up at dawn.” said Hermione with a smirk.

“That was one of those mornings that I really wanted sleep in.” said Harry. “And that is the only part of dawn I hate, normally I love songbirds, but those birds,” said Harry shaking his head, “God, right away in the morning, they don’t sound all that wonderful. It’s a horrible sound right away in the morning, it’s like they’ve all got bronchitis.”

Several people laughed.

“‘Crazed’?” said George looking at Harry.

“That is a HUGE understatement, mate.” said Fred shaking his head.

“I would really freaking hope so.” said Charlie shaking his head. “I would hope no other house trains right away in the year.”
“Was it cold that morning?” asked Dean.

“Sort of, but you try and get up hours earlier than what you wanted, you start shaking too.” said Harry “Tried is a good choice of words. I just about started to use a shirt for pants.” said Harry with an embarrassed smile.

“I’ve done that after a full moon.” said Remus with a smile. “I actually almost stepped outside with that ensemble.”

“So he really doesn’t give you a chance to eat something when you get up?” said McGonagall appalled.

“Nope,” said the veteran Gryffindor Quidditch team.

“That was nice of him.” said Mrs. Weasley smiling over at him.

“Yeah, Scabbers tried to eat the note when I woke up.” said Ron.

“What in the world were you doing up so early?” asked McGonagall sternly.

“I just wanted watch Harry practice.” said Colin quickly.

“How did you know that we were going to practice that early?” asked Fred.

“Yeah, cause not even we really knew when we were going to go to the pitch.” said George.

“Well…” said Colin even quieter.

“I’m not too sure we wanna know.” said Fred and George.
End of fifth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

“What the heck were you talking about?” said Ron.

“The picture of Lockhart and me.” said Harry with a smirk.

Sixth paragraph.

Seventh paragraph, second sentence.

“That’s the wonderful thing about magical photos.” said Dumbledore with a broad smile. “If you don’t want to show up in the picture, your photo self won’t appear.”

“Wish that would happen sometimes in the Muggle World.” said Dr. Clark. “I’ve had a few that I wish I weren’t in.”

End of seventh paragraph.

“Yeah, he never was in shape.” said Sirius. “He looks skinny, but he was in worse shape than, well, Peter.”

“And that’s saying something.” said Remus with a smirk.

Dialogue line.

“No.” said Harry automatically.

Dialogue set first sentence.

“Why did you look around?” asked Anthony.

“I didn’t want a repeat of last time.” said Harry.

End of dialogue set.

Eighth paragraph.
“Jeez, you can’t shake him can you?” said Fred quietly.

“You really can’t lie, Harry, you keep forgetting that.” said Tonks grinning broadly.

“Holy…” said Sirius shaking his head. “I’d have gone absolutely mad with you following me all around the place.” said Sirius looking over to Colin.

Colin turned and looked at Harry in shock.

“It was real early and…sorry.” said Harry looking up from the book apologetically.

Colin looked down hurtfully, but then looked up with a smile.

“It’s okay, I forgive you, if,” said Colin.

“If you sign one of the photos I took of you.” he said with a mischievous smile.

Harry opened his mouth to protest, but sighed and held out a hand for a photo.

Colin reached into his big photo album and selected the best photo he had and ran it over to Harry. He smirked as he saw it was the one where he was talking and laughing with Ron and Hermione. He signed it quick and walked it over to Ron and Hermione. “You guys need to sign it too.”

Ron and Hermione both looked confused, but when they saw the picture, they took the quill and signed the photo and handed it back to Colin, who looked ecstatic.
“I would have snapped by that time.” said Sirius groaning.

Fred and George stood up and took a bow.

“Harry actually caught me and stopped me from busting my face on the steps.” said Colin excitedly.

“Did you?” asked Remus impressed.

“I caught his collar and broke his fall a bit.” said Harry shrugging.

Angelina, Alicia, and Katie comically curtsied.

“You bet your wand he is.” said Sirius giving Harry a shove with his shoulder.

“That made a very complex game sound so simple.” said Dr. Clark with a laugh.

“I didn’t want to bother him when he was changing.” said Colin with a slight blush.
“What did Harry look like?” asked Sirius wickedly.

“His hair was flat on one side.” said Angelina with a smirk.

“I was sleepwalking.” said Harry with a smile.

“Oh that’s nice, he didn’t even wait to hear what kept you.” said Cho, she kept sending small smiles and quick glances over to Harry.

“It actually did help, especially for what the Slytherins had up their sleeves.” said Katie.

“Yeah, I don’t remember much of what he said.” said Fred with a smirk.

“Explains how you managed to fly in the complete opposite direction you were supposed to go.” said George smiling.

“I was about to excuse myself to the bathroom and sleep in the shower.” said Harry with a laugh.

“Not what I would have been fantasizing about.” said Sirius with a wicked grin.
“You’d better not share that little fantasy with him, if it’s the one you told me about years ago.” said Remus warningly.

“There was nothing wrong with it!” defended Sirius.

“It couldn’t even be labeled triple X! It would have to be severely watered down to be allowed into that category!” said Remus curtly.

“I’m fifteen now, how much longer do I have to wait to hear it?” said Harry teasingly.

“Dumbledore isn’t even old enough to hear it.” said Remus shortly.

“Hmm, it must be one very explicit sort of fantasy.” said Dumbledore with a knowing smile.

End of dialogue set.

Dialogue line.

“That’s a good point, might as well tell them all this stuff when their brains are actually functioning.” said Rivers with a smile.

Fifteenth paragraph.

“When is he, during a strategy session?” said Katie rolling her eyes.

Dialogue set.

Sixteenth paragraph.

“It wasn’t your fault mate, we should have had a reserve.” said Fred soothingly.

“Besides, it’s not like you planned on getting knocked out for three days.” said George.

“And almost dying.” said Remus sternly.

“Yeah, I didn’t plan on that either.” said Harry not looking at Remus.

Remus was about to strike up another argument but received a sharp blow to the back of his head. He glared over to Sirius, but Sirius smiled and nodded over to Remus’ left. Remus looked over and saw Dumbledore smiling as well, but his eyes were focusing on the ceiling.

Seventeenth paragraph.

“Harry too apparently.” said Alicia to Angelina sadly.
Dialogue set.

“I voted that we stun him and then lock him in his Quidditch locker.” said Fred.

“Then we go up to the castle and get some sleep.” said George.

Eighteenth paragraph, first sentence, first comma.

“What time was it?” asked Hannah.

“It was about seven-thirteen.” said Harry.

End of eighteenth paragraph.

“Nice of you guys to come out and watch his first practice of the year.” said Charlie.

Dialogue line.

“I wished I was.” said Harry rolling his eyes.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

“Sorry mate, didn’t know you didn’t eat.” said Ron.

“You should have asked for some, we would’ve gone and grabbed you some.” said Hermione.

“I was drooling.” said Harry. “I don’t know how I could’ve asked any plainer.”

End of dialogue set.

Nineteenth paragraph, second sentence.

“That’s one of the bad things about morning training, once you do it, you’re awake the whole day.” said Fred.

“Then you’re not able to fall back asleep.” said George.
“Bet you paid for that one later.” said Sirius with a smirk.

“Actually, that was one of the moves, it never did pan out.” said Harry.

“But you gotta admit, it was a lot of fun to practice.” said George.

“I’m still amazed that I heard that.” said Fred with a smile.

“You sound like a member of the paparazzi.” said Dr. Clark shaking his head.

“What’s that?” asked Draco.

“It’s a photographer that follows around celebrities and other famous people, taking pictures of them all the time. They’re really annoying actually, from what I hear.”

“Why would you want to have that job?” asked Blaise confused.

“The opportunity to get close to a celebrity I guess.” said Dr. Clark.

“He was busy Mr. Creevey.” said McGonagall sternly.

Most of the people in the great hall gave a large gasp.

“Harry lied!” said some first year Hufflepuffs.

“Why did his first lie have to be to me.” said Fred beginning to cry.

“Think of it this way, you were his first.” said George with a snide smile.

Several people laughed as Fred and Harry glared at George.
“Sweet Merlin!” said Remus wiping his eye and looking over at Sirius. “It’s like seeing you and James going at each other again!”

Dialogue line.

“We’ve never had to stoop to spying.” said Snape sniffing in disgust.

“Don’t be too sure about that.” said Katie.

“We’ve caught several Slytherin boys trying to catch Chaser practice.” said Angelina folding her arms.

“But I wouldn’t exactly call them spies.” said Alicia.

“Yeah, spies don’t try and sneak into the girl’s locker rooms.” said Katie.

McGonagall looked as if she could breathe fire again, Snape had paled and stared at the three Gryffindor chasers, and the sky above darkened once again.

“Who were they?” said Dumbledore coldly, his voice vibrating off the walls.

“They were already dealt with,” said Angelina with a smile. “We sort of made sure of that.”

“And so did the boys.” said Katie with an evil grin. “If they thought they were in bad shape after dealing with us, they were sorely mistaken after the boys got through with them.”

Dialogue line.

“Should have realized that you had lied to me then, if you didn’t know who he was, you wouldn’t have known which house he belonged to.” said Fred pouting.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

“That would eliminate the need for spying alright.” said Ernie with a smirk.

Twenty-first paragraph.

“Hey, that’s not fair, the Gryffindors were there first.” said Sirius angrily.
“Can you book the field for the whole day?” asked Remus over to McGonagall.

“Only if the other Heads of Houses agree, however, that entitles the other houses to have the field for one whole day as well.” said McGonagall.

“It doesn’t happen often.” said Professor Flitwick.

“Yeah, he couldn’t walk very well after that.” said Fred.

“We landed a bit softer though.” said George.

“No point hurting ourselves.” said Fred.

“I told Flint that the field was off limits. What is he doing there.” said Snape thoughtfully.

Draco cringed in his seat.

“That’s a contradiction in terms.” said Charlie with a smirk.

“I don’t know what gave him the gall to disobey me and go to the Quidditch pitch.” said Snape sternly.

“There is a long standing Quidditch rule that no two teams can occupy the field at the same time. It's ridiculous to even think that notion.” said McGonagall.
“Especially Gryffindor and Slytherin.” said Flitwick.

Twenty-fourth paragraph.

“You leer at a girl, you get slapped.” said one of the Slytherin Chasers. “And it would have killed the chance to date them.”

Dialogue line.

“He heard you the first time.” said George.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

“What?” said the Potions Master dumbfounded.

End of dialogue set.

“I did not write that letter.” said Snape tensely.

Dialogue line.

Twenty-fifth paragraph.

“Mind telling me whose idea it was to forge that letter?” growled Snape to Malfoy.

“Well….um…it was Flint’s idea.” said Malfoy quickly.

“You’re lying to me.” said Snape sternly.

“It was mine.” said Malfoy quietly.

“We will talk about this later.” said Snape sternly.

Dialogue line.

“Yeah we never actually met the twit.” said Fred.
“Gifts?” said McGonagall, Flitwick and Sprout, each one stunned.

“You told me that they pooled their money and sold their old brooms!” said McGonagall angrily.

“That was what I was told.” drawled Snape but staring at Draco with anger in his eyes. “I wasn’t aware of the fact that Lucius had struck a deal with Flint to get his son on the team.”

“Not true, the speed is only ten more miles per hour, and the wood is stained black. Nothing more special than that.” said Harry with a smirk. “But speed is only one factor in a game, they hold special games in the United States for one team to ride Shooting Stars and go up against Nimbus’. The ones on the Shooting Stars actually win some of the time.”

“Seriously?” said Draco stunned.

“If you would read the articles instead of looking at the pictures in Witch Broomstick you’d learn something.” said Harry with a small smile.

“And yet, you lot still have the best, well…the second best brooms in the school, and you haven’t won a game against us.” said Fred.

“Least not with us and Harry playing.” said George.

“Ahem.” said the three Chasers together.

“Against all of us, including Ron.” said Harry with a quick look over to Ron. “Nobody can beat us in a fair game.”

“Which must have been a first.” said Remus shaking his head.
“You weren’t very pleasant to look at, let me tell you.” said Katie with her tongue sticking out. “You looked like a real freak.”

Dialogue line.

Twenty-eighth paragraph.

“Two people make an invasion?” said George with a raised brow.

“What an idiot.” said Fred slapping his forehead.

Dialogue line.

“Um, the Slytherins had brooms in their hands, and their Quidditch gear on. Chances are we’re here to practice.” said Draco with a smirk.

Ron blinked and opened his mouth, but slowly closed it. “Shut up.” he mumbled.

Twenty-ninth paragraph.

“And that didn’t give it away?” asked a smirking Slytherin.

Dialogue line.

“Nice to know you can buy your way onto a sports team.” said Dr. Clark. “Can you at least play well?” he asked the fifteen year old Slytherin Student.

“He’s alright, he’s the fifth best seeker the school has.” said Angelina tartly.

“Fifth, aren’t there only four teams?” asked Dr. Clark.

“I was replaced.” said Harry pointing over to Ginny.

“Yeah, I don’t know how Gryffindor managed to get the two best Seekers.” said Ernie pouting slightly.

“Hey!” shouted Cho angrily.

“You’re third best; Harry was always the best one in the school. Then came….Cedric….” said Ernie.
The entire school looked down in grief.

Dr. Clark looked around in confusion. “Am I missing something?”

“Cedric…” Harry started but couldn’t finish.

“He was a seventh year Hufflepuff, a very brave and loyal young man, who unfortunately passed away last year.” said Dumbledore somberly.

“How did it happen, seventeen year olds don’t just fall down dead!” said Dr. Clark.

“He was murdered by order of Voldemort.” said Dumbledore solemnly.

Dr. Clark paled. “I’m sorry.”

Thirtieth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

“What a beast.” said Katie quietly.

Thirty-first paragraph.

Dialogue line.

“You go girl!” said Fred bobbing his head.

“He did not just say that!” said a small first year Ravenclaw.

“He did!” said her friend covering her mouth.

“Just like a boy, both of them are idiots.” said Alicia.

Thirty-second paragraph.

Dialogue line.

People in the Great Hall released a loud gasp.

“He did not just say that!” said a small first year Ravenclaw.

“He did!” said her friend covering her mouth.

Muttering and growling fluttered around the Great Hall.

Draco looked slowly up to his Head of house. Snape looked at him, fury thundering from his eyes.
“We’re going to talk now.” he said venomously.

Snape took Malfoy by the arm and dragged him out of the Great Hall.

“I take it, thatMu…um…that word is a real bad word.” said Dr. Clark nervously as he watched the furious professor drag the young man out of the room.

“Real bad.” said Sirius.

“It’s a foul name for someone born from an all muggle family. People like the Malfoy family don’t like Muggleborns and Half-Bloods.” said Ron angrily.

Dr. Clark sighed, “We’ve got people like that in our world, as well. They don’t accept people of different cultures, skin or love life.”

“I don’t see how humans can be so cruel to their own kind.” said Tempest shortly.

Firenze gave a small snort and rubbed the hoof prints on his chest and flank.

“Oh…” said Tempest sympathetically. “I’m sorry.”

Lionus stared at the two of them. “She said ‘sorry’? I don’t believe it!” he said with a broad smile.

“That young stallion is ruining her.” said Dr. Nicodemus with a smirk.

“She could use some softening.” said Nightstrike.

Thirty-third paragraph, first sentence.

“I’m happy you didn’t know that word before this.” said Sirius.

“Hell, I hated reading that word. Let alone saying it.” said Harry with a snarl.

Thirty-third paragraph, second sentence, first comma.

“That must have been the only brave thing Flint’s ever done.” said Angelina.

“And stupid, did you see all the teeth that Fred knocked out of Flint’s mouth?” said Katie.

“How about the black eyes, George gave him.” said Alicia.

End of thirty-third paragraph.

“Oh this won’t end well.” said Remus closing his eyes.

“Why not! Ron is a skilled enough wizard.” said Mrs. Weasley defending her son.

“Ron’s wand is busted.” reminded Dr. Clark.
“Oh dear!” said Mrs. Weasley fretfully, she didn’t remember that little fact.

Thirty-fourth paragraph, first sentence, fifteenth word.

“RONALD! WHAT HAVE YOU DONE?” shouted Mrs. Weasley.

“It wasn’t that spell, Mum” said Ron.

Thirty-fourth paragraph, first sentence, first comma.

“Oh no!” said Bill anxiously. “Ron, this can’t be good!”

End of thirty-fourth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

“That really scared me.” said Hermione with a deep blush.

Thirty-fifth paragraph.

“Eeeww!” cried quite a few girls from every house.

“You have spells that do that? Of what use is that?” said Dr. Clark holding his stomach.

“It’s a school-age curse; they aren’t really supposed to do much of anything, except give you something to laugh at.” said Sirius shrugging.

Thirty-sixth paragraph, first sentence.

“Oh that’s real nice.” said Dr. Clark.

Thirty-sixth paragraph, second sentence.

“I hope it snaps.” said Sirius glaring at the book.

“It did, he had to use a repair kit to fix it.” said Harry with a malicious laugh.
Thirty-sixth paragraph, third sentence.

“I hope he gets whatever is coming to him.” said Mr. Weasley angrily.

“Oh he will.” said Remus looking at the closed Great Hall door.

End of thirty-sixth paragraph.

“I don’t blame you.” said one of the seventh year Hufflepuffs.

Dialogue set, first sentence, fourth comma.

“What do you mean ‘bravely’?” asked a third year Gryffindor.

“Would you want to touch someone belching up slugs?” asked Hermione irritably.

“No.” said the third year girl and her friends quickly.

End of dialogue set.

“I’ll take it from here, cub.” said Sirius taking the book from Harry’s hands.

“Oh, come on! It hasn’t been half a chapter yet!” pouted Harry trying to take the book back playfully.

“It’s been more than half a chapter!” said Sirius tugging on the book. Finally he wrenched the book out of his godson’s hands.

Dialogue set, fourth sentence.

“Three guesses to who that is.” said Fred with a laugh.

End of dialogue set.

“That had to really suck.” said Sirius.

“It did.” said Ron turning greener by the minute.
“Are you freaking kidding me!” said Bill wearily.

“You want a picture of someone sicking up slugs?” said Charlie.

“I had never seen it before.” said Colin quietly.

“Be thankful for that.” said Lee.

“I am.” said Dr. Clark.

“That’s your first warning, never incur the ‘Evans Wrath’.” said Remus with a smirk.

“You’re life expectancy decreases immensely.” said Sirius with a smirk. “Bout forty years per scolding.” said Sirius tugging at a lock of gray hair. “I got this when I turned nineteen, when I scared your mother while she was pregnant with you. I thought the screaming and the curses were never going to end.”

“I don’t remember you reassuring me.” said Ron.

“You were a little…um…busy.” said Harry with a slight smile.

“ACCK! RUN!” shouted Harry and Ron together.

“Thanks Harry, I didn’t want him to try and help me.” said Ron appreciatively.

“He was a teacher, I thought he could help us!” said Hermione defensively.

“I would rather ask help from Aragog then Lockhart.” said Ron shortly.

“Who’s Aragog.” said Sirius.

“Never mind.” said Harry and Ron quickly.
“Must be one of those ‘you’ll find out later’ moments.” said Remus frowning slightly.

Dialogue set, third sentence.

“Trying to get your hands on Harry?’ said Remus shortly.

“Moony, drop it, okay? Cub says that nothing happened.” said Sirius.

Dialogue set, fourth sentence, first dash.

“Hagrid only gets books that have something to do with creatures.” said Charlie. “Factual books.”

End of dialogue set.

“Used it ter start me fire that next night.” said Hagrid with a smile.

Several students laughed loudly. Remus and Sirius clapped loudly.

“Wish I had been there to see it.” said Harry wistfully.

Thirty-eighth paragraph.

Thirty-ninth paragraph.

“I was wonderin’ if it were him again.” said Hagrid gruffly.

Dialogue line.

“We wouldn’t do that to you.” said Ron kindly.

Fortieth paragraph, first sentence.

“We love going to Hagrid’s during the winter. It’s always so nice and warm in there.” said Hermione.

“Hey, how come Hagrid didn't carry me like he carried Harry in our third year?” asked Ron with a slight frown.
“We had you, you just were a little queasy, Harry’s ankle was messed up.” said Hermione.

End of fortieth paragraph.

“I’ve seen worse.” said Hagrid shrugging slightly.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set, first sentence, second comma.

“There isn’t anything you can do.” said Remus thoughtfully. “Not with that curse.”

Dialogue set, second sentence, first comma.

“Wow! So that means that Harry’s tutoring was really working!” said Dennis excitedly.

End of dialogue set.

“If it had been casted in the right direction, it would have been most impressive.” said Dumbledore quietly, but he had a large smile on his face.

Forty-first paragraph.

“He knocked me off my chair and pinned me on the floor. I had to scratch his ears like mad to get him off.” said Harry with a bright smile.

Dialogue line.

“It was the only way to get up off the floor.” said Harry.

Dialogue set, first sentence, second comma.

“Hagrid’s been getting kelpies out of a well, way before Lockhart’s mother even thought of having kids.” said Charlie defending the large man.
“Not what I would call a conversation piece.” said Dr. Clark with a laugh.

“Weren’ going ter talk about it, it was my lunch.” said Hagrid slightly confused.

“You in the habit of using school chickens for your own meals?” asked Rivers.

“It was already dead. Got to the coops and it was just layin’ there.” said Hagrid shrugging.

“And I still got me kettle.” said Hagrid with a smirk.

“He doesn’t criticize anyone except for Filch.” said Ron.

“The only man for the job.” said Professor McGonagall grudgingly.

McGonagall smiled.

“I was sold.” said Harry with a smile.

“But it’s Hagrid cooking.” whispered Sirius.

“I don’t care, it’s treacle.” said Harry licking his lips.

“We could stick you in a maze, and leave a small piece of treacle at the end. You’d find the exit in two seconds.” said Sirius.

“I’d give him half a second.” said Remus. “I’ve seen him eat treacle; the bowl has to keep refilling itself every three minutes.”
“Okay, your descriptions have gone from picturesque to disgusting.” said Fred sticking out his tongue.

Dialogue set, third sentence.

“I couldn’t even locate an applicant this year, That is why I had to settle for…” said Dumbledore looking up at the restrained Umbridge.

Dialogue set, fifth sentence.

“Trust me, it is.” said Remus with a small smile.

“Least you didn’t die.” said Harry with a smile. “The jinx looked out for at least the one real teacher we’ve had in the class.”

“Didn’t work for Professor Moody.” said Dean quickly.

“That wasn’t really him.” said Harry.

“Oh, yeah. I forgot.” said Dean.

“At least you could.” said Moody gruffly, trying to put his magical eye back into place.

End of dialogue set.

“Someone who deserved it.” said Snape sweeping back into the Great Hall.

Draco came following closely behind him, rubbing the back of his head in an embarrassed way. It didn’t seem that Snape used corporal punishment this time.

“If I ever hear anyone saying that word one more time, be it boy or girl, I will make you wish I could just expel you.” said Snape snarling mostly at the Slytherin students.

“Thank goodness I’m in the house I’m in.” muttered a small Pure-Blood Ravenclaw student.

“That goes for all houses.” snapped Professor Snape.

Dialogue line.

“That was an understatement.” said Fred.
“The book said it, not me.” said Sirius holding up his hands in surrender.

“Cause of the slugs?” asked Dennis.

“Cause of the word.” said Remus.

“Just rude?” said George stunned.

“It was way more than that.” said Angelina growling over to Draco.

“That’s saying something.” said a small first year Gryffindor.

“I would rather be a Muggleborn.” said Hermione defiantly.

“Exactly.” said Mr. Weasley.

“Sorry, Neville.” said Ron quietly.
“There isn’t a spell she hasn’t been able to master.” said Ron.

“Except for the Patronus.” said Hermione in a whisper.

“You’ll get it, I wasn’t able to do it right for the longest time.” said Harry with a smile.

“Wow, seriously?” said Dr. Clark.

Do you wish to hear the story of our origins? It is quite the tale?” asked Dumbledore with twinkling eyes. “I told this story a few weeks ago to Harry and he thoroughly enjoyed it.”

“I think the students would benefit from that narrative as well. I don’t think that Binns has dwelled on it yet.” said McGonagall with a small smile.

“Might I start?” asked Harry. “I’m pretty sure that I remember it all, anything before is still a little foggy though.”

“Of course.” said Dumbledore with a bright smile.

“Thousands of years ago, there were four different separate sets of beings in this world. There were the animals, the beings that wander about in the normal world. You know, giraffes and stuff. Then there were the creatures, these had special abilities that the animals didn’t, such as longevity or fire breathing. The only drawback was, was that the creatures didn’t reproduce as often, so they were very rare. But they did live in some harmony with the animals. Though they mostly kept their distance.” said Harry.

“Then there were the Men,” said Dumbledore with a smile, “they lived in the caves and hunted and gathered for their food, they had no special abilities except for their ingenuity to utilize the materials around them and their ability to increase their strength. The final beings were the Milenia, they resembled the Men in every way, but they had many special talents to make up for their inability to increase their strength all that far and they were quite a bit more advanced in knowledge. These beings quarreled with each other constantly, over the fact that the Men had to work hard to hunt and gather their food, while the Milenia only had to wave their hands and food appeared out of nowhere. It was quite a petty reason not to get along with each other.”

“The Men however forgot their jealousy when the weather grew cold, and the Men’s food supply ran out. The Milenia weren’t so forgetful towards the past arguments and refused to help. So the Men had to work twice as hard just to find game to hunt, and when the spring storms came, the Milenia needed help rebuilding their own wooden houses and moving the debris left over by the storm.” said Harry still reading. “However, the Men refused. So the Milenia had to create a way to lift the fallen trees. By the time they found a way to lift the trees out of the way, it was almost fall.”

“It took them that long to come up with the levitation spell?” asked Fred.

“Life is easy due to the fact someone worked hard.” said Dumbledore kindly.

“And they could whip food out of thin air? Isn’t that against a magical physics law?” asked Hermione.

“Those were put up when we began using wands.” said Harry.

“For several decades it went on like this,” said Dumbledore shaking his head and continuing on with the story. “All the petty squabbling when the both of them could have created such a wonderful world for us to inherit, but alas, as it seems to be the common theme of late, ‘hindsight is twenty-twenty’.”

Harry smiled, “One day there was a fateful occurrence that caused quite an uproar that both parties tried their best to bury the knowledge as best they could. However, only the men were able to bury the knowledge, ‘cause one of the Milenia tried to make the best of it.”

“One day, a beautiful young Milenia woman, who had just been married to one of the most powerful Milenia men, had gone wandering. She however was attacked viciously by one of the Men, and was raped. Her husband Harmonia, went to join her and discovered the attacker, still in the process of ravaging his wife. Using his powers, he emitted a green jet of light and the man was instantly killed.” said Dumbledore, his voice as cold as ice. “Thus the form of the ‘Avada Kevada’ curse was born.”

“The woman lived, but due to the attack, nine months later she gave birth, to three children. None of them had the silver hair of Harmonia, or the blonde hair of the woman, but they did have the dark brown hair of the assaulter.” said Harry. “Most of the Milenia wanted to abandon the children, or drop them off at the Men’s dwellings, but Harmonia wouldn’t have it, he and his wife decided to leave their village and live away from the rest of the Milenia and raise the small children.”

“It was discovered as the children got older, that they couldn’t just wave their hands and conjure the magic, like their mother and their loving adopted father. They would need some additional magical objects, and something to be an appendage of their hand. So Harmonia gathered an assortment of things and asked his children to find something to go with them, first on the list was a long stick for each of them. So they ran to the woods and gathered long and short sticks to use. Thus, creating the very first wands and the very first staff.” said Dumbledore smiling.

The school stared in amazement, even Hermione and Ron stared, mostly at Harry.

“I see everyone’s got a wand.” said Dr. Clark looking around. “But not one staff.”
“Oh those are used only for the most powerful of wizards and witches, I have one myself, but I hardly ever use it.” said Dumbledore with a smile. “A wand is less cumbersome.”

“Let’s continue on with the reading, or we’ll never get the chapter done with today.” said Harry nudging Sirius.

“Hey! I found that stuff interesting.” said Sirius defensively. “And you were telling the story too!”

“Only because there was a pretty girl in it.” said Remus with a small smile.

“Yeah, but…that shouldn’t have happened to her, I don’t care if we came to be after that.” said Sirius.

“What happened to the Milenia after that?” asked a small first year Ravenclaw.

“They died, it was never discovered how, but the entire village was destroyed by some unknown force. The Men who lived nearby managed to escape it for they moved several months before it happened.” said Dumbledore.

Forty-fourth paragraph.

“You picked a great line to start reading again on.” said Fred laughing hard.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

“Oh that’s gross.” said Bill shaking his head. “Tell me you got better soon, Ron.”

“Yeah, but it took a while.” said Ron.

“I remember when Percy got cursed once; he had kippers flying out of his nose. Funniest thing I ever saw.” said Charlie whispering to his older brother.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

“I disagree, throwing up slugs really sucked.” muttered Ron.

Dialogue set, third sentence.

“He would have, and you would have been punished, but not more than what coincides with the crime.” said McGonagall sternly.
“Exactly!” said Ron.

“You didn’t learn from last year?” said Charlie shaking his head.

“He said it was treacle fudge, I was willing to risk it.” said Harry with a broad smile.

“So we can tack treacle to the list of your weaknesses, huh?” said Moody. “You’ve got about ten or so now.”

“Looks like I have to get stronger than, doesn’t it? To protect those weaknesses.” said Harry with a smile.

Moody stared at him.

“Oooh, sorry Hagrid, but I hope Harry whacks out on you.” said Fred cringing.

“That’s a low blow.” said George shaking his head at Hagrid.

“He can have all the pictures he wants of Hermione, Ron and I, but I’m not signing any of them.” said Harry.

“My jaw was sore for a week after that.” said Harry rubbing his jowls absently.

“He actually was, said you were his protégé.” said Professor Flitwick rubbing his temple.

“Sweet Merlin...” moaned Remus.
“I still would have whacked out on you.” said Fred shaking his head.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

Several people laughed loudly.

“Sorry ‘arry.” said Hagrid apologetically.

“I was fine.” said Harry with a smile. “But it didn’t do my jaws any favors.”

End of dialogue set.

“Bet he didn’t like that.” said Ernie with a snigger.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

“Wasn’t a very good day for Dazzle Gum’s ego.” said Sirius with a loud, bark-like laugh.

End of dialogue set.

Dialogue line.

“I saw how hard it was for you to open your mouth, didn’t want that happening to me at the moment.” said Ron with a weak smile.

Dialogue line.

Forty-eighth paragraph.

Lionus whistled. “You must have had a secret weapon.”

Hagrid, Hermione, Ron and Harry stared at him in wonder.

Dialogue line.

“They sound big enough now!” said Dr. Clark laughing. “What day is it now?”
“It’s October eighteenth.” said Professor Vector.

“Excellent! I want to see what a Halloween is like here.” said Dr. Clark excitedly.

Dialogue line.

Forty-ninth paragraph.

“Something not exactly normal, judging by his suspicious behavior.” said Tonks with a smirk.

Dialogue line.

Fiftieth paragraph, first sentence.

“Oh, that’s cheating!” said Sirius with a laugh.

Fiftieth paragraph, second sentence.

“Jeez, took me three years to come to that conclusion.” said Charlie pouting.

Fiftieth paragraph, fourth sentence, first dash.

“I still say they’re going to find out.” said Fred rubbing his hands plottingly.

“We’ll see.” mumbled Zacharias.

End of fiftieth paragraph.

“I can only imagine that, doing so, only made that boy more suspicious.” said Professor McGonagall with a smile.

Dialogue line.

“You never lighten up do you?” asked Anthony with a smile.

“She’s lighten up a lot since first year.” said Harry and Ron.
“You knew about the Engorgement Charm?” asked Bill, highly impressed.

“Well, I did read a few of your old books.” said Ginny with a mischievous smile.

“Oh come on! Even he knew you had a crush on Harry.” said George with a laugh.

“Harry was blushing all the way down to his socks.” said Ron with a laugh.

“That’s the great thing about Hagrid. He will mess with you and welcome all the comeback you got.” said Charlie.

“Hagrid won’t like that one bit.” said Tonks with a smirk.

“Yeah, Hagrid’s garden is his pride and joy, you don’t want to deface it.” said Remus. “One year, he had three fifth years blow up several of his pumpkins, they had to fertilized his garden for six months. By hand.”

“Yeah, that really sucked.” said Sirius, looking at his fingernail. “I swear I still have fertilizer under my nails.”
Remus handed Harry the bowl of candied chestnuts from the day prior. “Eat something.”
“I actually really like those, I’m gonna have a handful.” said Sirius as Harry took some.

End of fifty-first paragraph.

“Well at least the curse is wearing off.” said Dedalus, who had kept his mouth closed during most of the readings.
“I thought you were going to go the entire readings without speaking.” said Bathilda with a smile.
“Well, I didn’t really want to speak, these books are quite terrifying.” said Dedalus.
“And he’s a member of the Order?” whispered Ron.
“He deals mostly with taking people and putting them in a sort of protection program.” said Sirius whispering back.

Fifty-second paragraph.

“That’s a way to ruin your whole day. You get up at the crack of dawn and then you have to do detention till who-knows-when.” said Sirius with a laugh, but then he stopped. “You aren’t going into the forest again, are you?”
“No, he did not, neither of them.” said Professor McGonagall.

Dialogue line.

“I didn’t want to vomit slugs all over her shoes. I would have gotten another night of detention tacked on.” said Ron.
“Unless you make yourself sick, I wouldn’t have given you a detention. I would have sent you straight to Hospital Wing and you might have gotten out of detention, at least for one week anyway.” said McGonagall.
“Dang, I’ll need to remember that.” said Ron pouting slightly.

Dialogue line.

“That was the worst detention ever.” said Sirius. “James and I’ve done it all, but that was the worst one I’ve done. Hate cleaning.”
“He threw garbage on the trophies we had to do,” said Sirius baring his teeth.

The entire school went quiet.

“What…were…you…thinking?” asked Remus to the Transfiguration teacher.

“What happened? You were the best one to assign detentions, you’re slipping,” said Sirius shaking his head.

“She didn’t pick it,” said Harry.

“And you didn’t notice him not wanting to do something easy?” asked Remus slowly. “And that Lockhart asked for Harry specially?”

“It concerned me, but I made sure he was fine.” said McGonagall defiantly.

“How?” asked Remus sharply.

“There was a cat outside the window of the Lockhart’s office,” said Harry with a broad smile. “It was Tootsie.”

“Moony gave that look to us once, what happened after that?” asked Sirius innocently.

“Someone put frog spawn in my shorts,” muttered Remus.

“Who would have? If they knew they had Dazzle Gums to deal with later?” said Tonks with a laugh.
“I still say I got the worse deal.” said Ron and Harry together.

“I’m actually not too sure who to vote for who had the short end of the stick.” said Sirius with a smile.

“Harry did.” said Remus quickly.

Dialogue line.

“Nobody in our family except for Mum is all that good at Muggle cleaning.” said Charlie.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

Snarls and growls crawled along the Great Hall.

“What did they have you polish, Harry?” asked Dumbledore coldly.

“Their silver, Aunt Petunia’s wedding present from Uncle Vernon’s family.” said Harry.

“There wasn’t a lot of it, was there?” asked Remus.

“They had a complete silverware set, platters and other small stuff like that. They also had some small silver statuettes. Takes the whole day to get them as shiny and clean as Aunt Petunia wants it.” said Harry.

“How many times do you do it?” asked Sirius.

“About once a week.” said Harry shrug. “I usually do it on a Sunday.”

“Did do it on Sundays.” corrected Sirius. “You aren’t going back, you’re never going back.”

End of dialogue set.

“I can understand that.” said Remus with a growl.

Fifty-fifth paragraph.

“Wow, you sound really excited to go see Lockhart.” said Lee with a smirk.
“Dear Lord, he was waiting for you way too eagerly for my liking.” said Remus muttering darkly.

“Shoot me.” said Sirius covering his eyes.

“What the f…? He gave himself a signed photograph?” said Dr. Clark stunned.

Yeah, it even said ‘To the bravest and handsomest man, sighed Me’. It was beyond awkward.” said Harry.

Remus and Sirius stared at Harry, and then started gagging.

“Hey! Do that somewhere else!” said Harry lifting the bowl of chestnuts out of harm’s way.

“I would rather have licked a boot.” said Harry in disgust.

“Poor, stupid Gladys.” muttered Sirius to Remus.

“I would have snapped and beaten the man to a bloody pulp.” said Kingsley quietly.

“I’d pay good money to see that.” said Tonks eagerly.
“That was the only...disturbing...part of that detention.” said McGonagall quietly.

“I still remember almost every single stupid address from those letters.” said Harry darkly.

Several people snapped their necks up to stare at Harry.

“What is it?” asked Bill quickly. Remus, Sirius, and Dr. Clark looked pale.

Harry said nothing.

The entire school went as silent as a tomb.

Sirius stared at the page he was reading, “Tell me you don’t go chasing after that thing.”

“I don’t.” said Harry reassuringly.

“Least not then.” muttered Ron to Hermione.

“He wasn’t talking about that you idiot! The homicidal voice!” screeched Tonks.

“Wow, Harry was frantic? That’s a first.” said George.
“So…he didn’t hear it?” said Dr. Clark worriedly.

“Not for Harry it didn’t.” said Lee with a small chuckle.

Remus tensed once more. McGonagall noticed this and reassured him. “Nothing happened, I was right there, watching it all.”

“Did you hear the voice?” asked Sirius quickly.

“No, I didn’t.” said McGonagall.

“Wow, I thought you had just gotten there about five minutes ahead of me.” said Ron.

“Explains the cleaning dream I had.” said Seamus with a smirk.

“Ouch, that sucks.” said Charlie shaking his head.
“Living hell.” said Harry.

Sixty-sixth paragraph.

Dialogue set.

“Unless they were ghosts.” said Moody thoughtfully.

“But Dazzle Gums would have heard that.” said Remus.

“This is getting scary.” said Dr. Clark reaching behind Sirius’ head and rubbing the back of Harry’s neck.

“I’m fine.” said Harry with a small smile.

“I’m starting not to believe you when you say that.” said Remus shortly.

End of chapter.

“And you don’t tell a Professor that you heard a disembodied voice of someone thinking of killing?” asked Bill stunned.

“Would you believe me?” said Harry seriously.

“No I guess not.” said Bill embarrassed.

“Who would like to read the next chapter?” asked Sirius.

“I’ll take a crack at it.” said Tonks happily.

“How the hell can you be happy?” asked Remus looking at Tonks in disbelief.

“Harry’s fine, so I know he gets out of stuff all right.” said Tonks.

She took the book passed to her and read the chapter title loudly.

“Eighth chapter.”

“The what party? asked Dr. Clark.

“You’ll find out.” said Harry.

“This won’t go well.” whispered Hermione to Ron.
“Yeah, I’ve noticed that it gets a little cold in here, sometimes.” said Dr. Clark picking up the phoenix blanket and covering Harry with it, who had for some reason fallen asleep.

Sirius looked over to Dumbledore pointedly who nodded solemnly.

“Poppy come here quickly, run another checkup on him quick and see what is wrong.” said Dumbledore quietly. “But take care not to wake him.”

Madam Pomfrey nodded and waved her wand. Dumbledore nodded his head over to Tonks, signaling for her to continue reading.

“Won’t it wake him?” she whispered.

“I don’t think so.” said Remus brushing the hair from Harry’s eyes.

“Watch.” she said and she opened Harry’s eyes gently. When she did, they stayed open. If they hadn’t seen Harry’s chest rise and fall slowly, they would have thought that Harry had suddenly died in the arms (and laps) of the three men.

“What’s going on?” said Sirius fearfully.

“I’d answer that, but I think I’ll wait.” said Dr. Nicodemus with a frown.

“Why? I’m begging you, tell us!” said Dumbledore his hands shaking.

“I’ve got tests running back at headquarters, we will know for certain if it is what I fear it to be.” said Dr. Nicodemus.
Several people paled. If a doctor to the Rangers was afraid of what was wrong with Harry, it had to be really bad.

“So what can we do?” asked Remus quickly.

“Just let him rest when he wishes, there isn’t much we can do.” said Lionus his brows furrowed.

“Let’s continue on. It being Harry’s life, he won’t miss out on anything.” said Dumbledore trying to regain his cheerful tone of voice, but a shaking hand remained on Harry's brow.

First paragraph, third sentence.

“What does that potion do again?” asked Dr. Clark holding onto one of Harry’s hands tightly.

“It cures the common cold.” said Madam Pomfrey, still examining Harry.

“And the side effect is smoke coming out of a person’s ears? I’ll stick with the stuffy nose and cough. Don’t want people thinking my head’s on fire.” said Dr. Clark with a laugh.

“Don’t you guys have a cure?” asked Draco.

“Well, there are products and medicines that cut the cold short, but we don’t have a real cure.” said Dr. Clark.

First paragraph, fourth sentence, second comma.

“Were you okay, Gin.” said Bill quickly.

Ginny said nothing, but just looked over to where Harry laid.

First paragraph, end of fourth sentence.

“I didn’t bully her!” said Percy defensively.

“You threatened to call Mum and have her come and take her home.” said Fred sternly. “That’s called ‘bullying’.”

End of first paragraph.

Ginny blushed heavily. “I hate that potion.”
“Wow, think you can get them that size again, Hagrid?” asked Dr. Clark, trying to keep his mind of the nagging worry in his heart.

“I might be able to.” said Hagrid looking down at Harry with a sorrowful look.

“It never is, where practice is concerned.” said George shaking his head.

“Oh, the poor thing.” said Mrs. Weasley.

“I hope he didn’t stay in those wet things for long.” said Bathilda, who moved closer to the bowl and ran her old, bony fingers through Harry’s hair.

“Hey! At least we didn’t go into the girls’ locker room!” said Fred defensively.

“But then again, they don’t have girls on their team, so it made it easier.” said George wickedly.

“We should have had Harry do it, he could have gotten in there without being seen I’ll bet.” said Fred excitedly.

“It didn’t look to us like they were only going ten miles faster than Harry flies.” said Fred thoughtfully.

“Harry was most likely referring to the Nimbus Two Thousand’s top speed.” said Dumbledore with a smile.

“Why doesn’t Harry fly that fast, we’d win every game easily.” said George.

“If you continue to go at top speed all the time, your broomstick will start to wear away.” said Sirius knowledgably, “Harry goes at a pretty standard speed, not too slow to lose sight of the snitch and not fast enough to accelerate the wear and tear on his broom.”
“What’s the point in telling us all this, we know already.” moaned Zacharias.

“Mr. Smith.” said Dumbledore warningly.

“Hey! Everyone else is picking on different people, why can’t I pick on Potter?” said Zacharias.

“Mr. Potter didn’t write these books, the knowledge is repeated for the benefit of those who might come into the readings at a later time. So unless you want to be removed from the Great Hall, please choose your words carefully.” said McGonagall sternly.

End of fourth paragraph.

“He’s still complaining about that?” said Lionus clapping his hand to his eyes.

“You know him?” asked Sirius quickly.

“Yeah, I went to school here.” said Lionus with a smile.

“Do you remember him?” Sirius whispered to Remus.

“No, he could have been before us, or after us. I can’t place his face, or narrow his age.” whispered back Remus. “But he looks close in age to us.”

Lionus smirked when heard their discussion.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set, third sentence, first comma.

“Harry described him perfectly.” said Professor McGonagall with a smile.

End of dialogue set.

“Good thing you aren’t still out there.” said Sirius ruffling Harry’s hair gently.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

“He always did notice other people’s problems before he would even think of his own.” cooed Parvati.
“Yeah.” sighed Lavender.

“Too bad you didn’t believe him this year, instead you thought he was a nutter.” growled Ron over to the two girls.

Dialogue set.

“If it’s what I think it is, he’s been refused many a time before.” said Dumbledore sadly. “It’s most distressing for him.”

Fifth paragraph.

Dialogue set.

“I would be happy with less hits to the neck to be completely honest.” said Remus with a small smile yet he rubbed the back of his neck.

Dialogue line.

“He really is too eager to please.” said Flitwick whispering to Professor Sprout. “Makes me wonder just what he had to do to keep the peace at the Dursleys.”

Professor Sprout shook her head. “I don’t want to think about it.”

Dialogue set, first sentence.

“Nobody from our house, I know that.” said George.

“He probably means other ghosts.” said Hermione. “From outside the school.”

End of dialogue set.

Rejection Letter from the Headless Hunt

“Wow, they aren’t asking much are they?” said Lee with a smirk.

Sixth paragraph.
Dialogue set.

Several people snorted with laughter.

“Never knew he was so funny.” said Charlie with a laugh.

Seventh paragraph.

“Hmm…the only two gentlemen in Gryffindor Tower. One is dead and one is too insecure to try and charm the ladies.” said Katie with a giggle.

“He may be younger, but I wouldn’t mind it if he tried charming us.” said Alicia with a squeal.

“He is a little cutie.” said Angelina quietly.

Fred, George and Lee all pouted.

“Yeah, but guys, we’re dating you, not Harry.” said Angelina tapping Fred’s nose.

“And I’m not sharing.” said Ginny with a smirk.

Dialogue set.

“Good luck, you can’t even find one free Shooting Star.” said Sirius. “You can’t find anything for free these days.”

Eighth paragraph, first sentence.

“Oh crap, it’s Mrs. Norris.” said George covering his eyes.

End of eighth paragraph.

“Well he’s getting very close to losing the war.” said Dumbledore, still furious over the part the caretaker took in the attack on Harry. “He’s lucky he’s still breathing right now. And when this is over, he may not have a job here any more.”

Dialogue set, second sentence, first dash.

“Oh, hell, he’s never in a good mood.” said Sirius with hollow laugh, as he squeezed Harry’s hand.
“Aww…poor baby.” said Fred sarcastically.

“We gave him the option of taking time off to get better, it’s his own fault for not resting.” said McGonagall shortly.

“Sounds like something Fred and George would do.” said Charlie looking fixedly over to his brothers.

“It wasn’t them.” said Snape plainly.

Fred and George stared. “Wow, he defended us.” said Fred in an awed whisper.

“You weren’t third years.” drawled Snape. “And if you had done the defacing, which you tend to do on purpose, I would have had you clean it up.”

“Just like Slughorn.” groaned Sirius.

“It’s raining, what does Filch think is going to happen?” asked Tonks incredulously.

“Wow.” said Fred looking at the sleeping form of Harry with intense disappointment.

“You didn’t have the sense to hightail it the moment you see her?” said George looking at Harry as well.

“That’s pathetic.” said Lee shaking his head.

“And you call yourself a runner.” said Sirius joining in on the fun and tapping the boy’s nose.

“Knock it off.” said Remus smacking the back of Sirius’ head sharply. “You’ll wake him.”

“That would be a ‘familiar’s’ connection.” said Dumbledore, looking down at the young man with a smile. He was worried about what kept knocking the small young man into unconsciousness but he knew that if the Rangers had an idea what it could be, they would sort it all out. For he himself had no ideas of his own.

Dialogue set, end of second sentence.

“Oooh, yeah, he loves that second floor passageway, we always try to avoid that area.” said Fred.

“He’s caught us there about sixty-four times out of a hundred there.” said George.

End of dialogue set.

“Wow, that don’t sound like the flu, sounds more like a cold.” said a first year quietly.

Dialogue set, second sentence, second comma.

“It’s mud, it’s not like he dumped a bunch of rubbish in the corridors.” said Bill angrily.

Dialogue set, end of second sentence.

“I wonder how big the puddle really was.” asked Neville.

“It was only the size of a saucer.” said a somber voice overhead. Everyone looked up and saw Nearly Headless Nick, in the flesh. Well…the ghostly flesh anyway.

“Good afternoon, Sir Nicholas, what can we do for you? Or would you like to sit in on the readings? I am surprised that the rest of the school’s ghosts aren’t here.” said Dumbledore cordially.

“Thank you, Headmaster but, no I will not be staying. I only wish to convey on our guest, my fellow ghost’s and I our deepest apologies.” said Nick with a low bow.

“For what?” asked Dr. Clark with a smile as he held onto Harry’s hand.

“For the inconceivable conduct of Peeves, we’ve heard that he has stolen your eye patch and made a mockery of you several times.” said Nick solemnly.

“Oh, don’t worry about that, I think he’s really funny.” said Dr. Clark with a laugh.

“You…you do?” said Nick slightly stunned.

“Oh, yeah!” said Dr. Clark “He’s hilarious.”

“Oh, well…I guess…everything’s alright then.” said Nick, slightly taken aback. “In answer to your last question sir, we, the other ghosts and I, are taking this opportunity to have a few dearly departed friends over.”

“Oh! Well, I hope you all have a pleasant time.” said Dumbledore with a bright smile.

“Is Harry alright?” asked Nick curiously. “He seems to be paler than usual.”

“We hope he’s alright.” said most of the adults in the room.

“Well, I do hope he gets well.” said Nick seriously. He bowed deeply again and slowly drifted towards the door.

“You sure you don’t want to stay, Nick? This chapter has your Deathday Party!” said an excited first year Gryffindor girl.

Nick looked down at the small girl and gave her a slight smile. “If it is the year that I think it is, I would rather not. It was not one of my best years.” With that, he took his leave.

“Is he always that serious?” asked Dr. Clark.

“Not all the time, but he is most of the time.” said Remus with a smile.

Dialogue set, third sentence.

“How can it be all over the place?” asked Romilda. “Has he even seen Harry walk? He walks a straight line, he never deters from that.”

Several people stared at her.

“You’ve watched him walk?” said Fred slowly.

Romilda shrugged. “So?”

“It’s creepy.” said George leaning away from her.

End of dialogue set.

Ninth paragraph, first sentence.

“Why would he do that?” asked Seamus.

“Politeness? That seems to be the constant setting for him.” said Emmeline Vance fondly.

End of ninth paragraph.

“He just doubled his work load, didn’t he?” said Bill with a smirk.
Sirius blinked heavily. “I’ve never been more disappointed, his dad and I were in trouble the second we got off the Hogwarts Express.” he pouted.

“Well I’ve never been more proud.” said Remus smugly.

“You would be.” said Sirius still pouting.

“What did you guys do?” asked Fred eagerly.

“We’ll tell you all about it later.” said Sirius with a smirk.

“And with good reason.” said Sirius plainly.

“Oh, we try and sneak in once a year.” said George with a large grin. “Just to nick something, out of our file and see if he notices or not, nothing so far.”

“George!” shouted Mrs. Weasley angrily.

“He picked it, I offered him a big office, with large windows and a giant personal room, but, he chose the most disheveled room the school had to offer.” said Dumbledore his frown turning quickly into a scowl at the mere mention of the caretaker.

“No wonder he has such poor eyesight.” said Madam Pomfrey, who was now placing slight pressure on Harry’s stomach, feeling for something not even she was aware of. Harry, while still asleep, he swatted her hands away. Madam Pomfrey smiled warmly.

“Big surprise, Mrs. Norris is a cat.” said Zacharias rolling his eyes.

“No wonder there were so many of them.” said Sirius.
“Top that!” shouted Fred and George together.

“We had two filing cabinets dedicated in our honor.” said Remus with a smirk.

“Top that.” mimicked Sirius with a wicked smile.

“There aren’t anything like that in his office, not anymore” said Dumbledore grimly. “I saw to that personally.”

“And every single time, I told him that he couldn’t. The last time he asked me that, it was this year, I told him that if did that, I would suspend him from the top of the Great Hall and blast the chains hanging above him.” said Dumbledore viciously.

“He’s lost his mind, hasn’t he?” asked a seventh year Slytherin.

“So, he’s sick and tired of his job?” said Tonks slowly. “Find another job, moron.”

“He’d better not make an example of my cub, I’ll make an example of him first.” growled Sirius.
Fred and George rubbed the back of their hands absent-mindedly.

“What’s up with you two?” asked Charlie.

“Nothing.” they both said quickly.

“What’s that on the back of your hand?” asked Bill quickly seizing Fred’s hand. Bill looked at the marks on the back of his brother’s hand. “What the hell is this?”

“Her work.” said George sending a look up to Umbridge quickly.

“Harry has one too.” said Fred quickly.

Madam Pomfrey, Sirius and Remus lifted Harry’s hand and inspected it thoroughly, they noticed a thin piece of pseudo-skin attached to his hand, like a glove, when they removed it Sirius and Remus gasped loudly. Dr. Clark read the words out loud, the words etched into Harry’s skin, which was a light red.

“I must not tell lies!” said Dr. Clark staring at the words in horror. “Who makes a child right that into their own hand?” Tears began to fall down his face.

“That is where the torture charge came from.” said Lionus calmly.

“Is there any way to remove this? Is this why he’s sleeping at the drop of a hat?” said Remus quickly.

“That is not the reason, we believe it is something else.” said Dr. Nicodemus. “And there is nothing we can do to remove it. We must allow it to heal on its own.”

Dumbledore sent a fierce glare up to the chair in which Umbridge was restrained. Tempest and Nightstrike took several steps back and flinched visibly.

“You need to patent that look, sir.” said Nightstrike with a small smile. “We could use that look.”

End of twelfth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

“It was only a small bit of mud!” said Sirius incredulously as he noticed that Tonks was continuing on with the readings.

“To him, a dot of ink on the floor is like flooding the room with paint.” said Fred rolling his eyes, and trying to wrench his hand away from his oldest brother.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set, second sentence, first comma.

“Oh, please, you get mop and drag it about! How hard is that?” said Dr. Clark exasperatedly. “And if he had the flu, he could have gotten help!”
“Some house-elves were assigned to help him, but he seems to neglect to utilize them.” said McGonagall.

Dialogue set, end of second sentence.

“One of the times, it must really suck, being so observant.” cringed Neville.

Dialogue set, third sentence, second pause.

“I would have laughed him right out of my office if I had asked what Harry ‘befouled’. ” said Dumbledore and McGonagall.

End of dialogue set.

“It would have been nothing. But knowing him, it would have been something terrible.” said McGonagall.

Thirteenth paragraph.

“I think we cured him of his torture-happy tendencies.” said Tempest smugly.

“If you were the one in charge of him, I think you did take away that little hobby.” said Lionus with a laugh.

Fourteenth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

“Hey! We could have done it!” said George indignantly.

“But we were still trudging up to the castle.” said Fred calmly.

“Yeah, but still…” said George.

Fifteenth paragraph.

“Oh, they left! Get out of there!” said Sirius eagerly.
“I think he’s going to stay.” said Dr. Clark with a smirk.

“Potter wouldn’t stick around to get a punishment.” sneered Snape.

“Yeah, no kid does that.” said Remus rolling his eyes.

Sixteenth paragraph, first sentence.

“Distress? Nah, he’s a load of laughs.” said Dr. Clark with a bright smile.

Sixteenth paragraph, second sentence.

“See! He’s going to bolt!” said Sirius.

“I’ll bet you ten pounds he doesn’t.” said Dr. Clark wickedly.

"I don’t have ten pounds on me, but I’ve got some wizard money. I’ll bet you ten galleons that he runs for it. He James’ son after all, we’ve run away from his office time after time.” said Sirius taking out ten pieces of gold.

End of sixteenth paragraph.

“I told you he’s going to run!” said Remus with a small smile.

“Don’t count your chick…dragon’s before they’re hatched.” said Dr. Clark. Dumbledore smiled broadly.

“Nice blend, I think you’ll fit right in.” said Dumbledore happily.

Seventeenth paragraph first sentence, first comma.

“What?” said Remus slowly.

Seventeenth paragraph, end of first sentence.

Sirius and Remus stared, Snape blinked.

“Ha! I told you he’d stick around!” said Dr. Clark. “I’ll take my wizard money now.” said Dr. Clark holding out his hand.

“I want to know what made Harry still sit in that room.” said Remus thoughtfully.
“I learned a long time ago, that if I ran away from a punishment, that it would only get worse for me.” said a groggy voice from the men’s laps.

All eyes turned towards Harry who was trying to sit up. “You have a nice nap?” asked Sirius jovially.

“I didn’t know that I did.” said Harry honestly. “Till I woke up.”

“You okay, cub?” asked Remus concernedly.

“A little sleepy, and feeling a bit worn, but nothing more than that.” said Harry sitting up fully and stretching his arms.

“So though you slept for at least,” Dumbledore checked his watch quickly. “forty-five minutes and yet, you didn’t gain any rest from it?”

“Guess not.” said Harry leaning heavily against Remus again. “So what did I miss?”

Remus looked down at Harry with a worried expression, but put on a brave face. “We’ve got you in Filch’s office.”

“Oh, for the mud?” said Harry thinking hard.

“Yeah, why didn’t you leave?” said Sirius crossing his arms after he gave ten pieces of gold to Dr. Clark.

“I just told you, running away only makes the punishment worse, best to just lay there and take it.” said Harry covering himself up again with the blanket. He didn’t notice the pained and pitiful looks he received. Or the growls that came from the four men in and around the bowl.

Tonks cleared her throat and did her best to continue on.

Seventeenth paragraph, second sentence.

“If it was a black glossy envelope, don’t open it.” said Sirius warningly.

“Why?” asked Neville.

“Harry isn’t old enough for those. Those are some explicit letters.” said Sirius with a broad grin.

“I’ve read one before, every time I think about it, my blood pressure goes up.” said Remus breathing deep. “I could have killed you for leaving that damned thing out.” he finished smacking Sirius with a pillow.

“Hey! You chose to read it!” said Sirius defending himself. “Besides, James got a kick out of it!”

“Yeah, and he got slapped by Lily when he told her all about it.” said Remus still beating the scraggly haired man.

Tonks had to stop laughing before she could start reading again.
“You read someone else’s mail?” said Dumbledore looking over to Harry with wide, twinkling eyes.

Harry smiled guiltily. “Sorry. I was…curious.”

“That seems to be another one of your default settings.” said Dumbledore with a bright smile.

Kwikspell letter

First line

“I had a great-uncle use that thing, he didn’t learn a darn thing.” said Neville shaking his head.

“It doesn’t work?” asked Harry.

“Not at all, just one big scam.” said Neville.

Eighteenth paragraph, first sentence, first comma.

“Seriously? Why?” asked a fourth year Hufflepuff.

“I don’t know really.” said Harry shrugging. “I had just never heard of this sort of thing in the wizarding world. Magical learning is very important and can be very dangerous. I didn’t think someone could just learn this stuff in the mail.”

“Very true and very wise thinking, there is no possible way to learn magic in that fashion.” said Dumbledore with a large grin.

End of eighteenth paragraph.

Kwikspell letter, second line, first sentence.

“Try these new dance steps!” said Fred jokingly, as George tried to do a flamenco step.

Kwikspell letter, first paragraph third sentence.

“Woeful wandwork?” said Bathilda slowly. “Who came up with that?”

“Someone who has doesn’t have any writing skills I should think.” said McGonagall.

“They should get some tips from Harry’s mind.” said Dennis brightly.
“I’ll just bet.” said Rivers with slight distaste.

“My Great-Uncle would disagree with that.” said Neville.

“Is it your Great-Uncle Algie?” asked Luna dreamily.

“Nah, this was my Great-Uncle Addelton, he’s worse than I am.” said Neville with a smile.

“Was, Mr. Longbottom, was.” said Professor McGonagall with a small smile.

“I haven’t heard of anyone learning from anything remotely like Kwikspell.” said Rivers growling even louder.

“What’s got him so upset?” whispered Ron.

“Well, he one of the heads of Magical Education. He takes learning seriously.” said Hermione whispered back.

“I have an Auntie Zelda that lives in Topsham. But, she’s always been really good at magic and potions.” said Lavender

“If it’s the Zelda Nettles I think it is, you’re right, she was an excellent student.” said Dumbledore.

“I did know a Donovan Prod.” said Professor Flitwick, “and he did turn his wife into a yak once. But, this was over seventy years ago, and that happened on accident.”
The entire student body, and including several different teachers turned and stared at Harry.

“Really? You didn’t know that little fact?” said Fred slowly.

“I…I just thought you guys were just being mean.” said Harry embarrassedly.

Nineteenth paragraph, fourth sentence, twelfth word.

“Was there any helpful hints?” asked Hermione, remembering what Harry had said about the levitation spell.

“I experimented with the ones I had time to read, they weren’t worth cra…the paper they were written on.” said Harry looking quickly over to Remus.

Nineteenth paragraph, end of fourth sentence.

“Put it back! Put it back!” yelled Fred and George together.

End of nineteenth paragraph.

“Ooh!” groaned Remus, Sirius, Fred and George.

“You didn’t put it back in the right spot, very sloppy.” said Sirius shaking his head.

“I wasn’t sure what he would do. I had an Uncle Vernon flashback.” said Harry quietly.

“An Uncle Vernon flashback? What are those?” asked Remus quickly.

Harry turned and looked away quickly.

“Don’t make me use veritiserum, I’ll steal some if I have to.” said Sirius shortly.

Harry was silent for a moment, until Dumbledore coughed loudly. Harry sighed uneasily.

“Sometimes, when I know I’m doing something wrong, I start hearing Uncle Vernon’s footsteps, his breathing and then his voice. I start freaking out. Three times I’ve almost gotten caught while working at night.” said Harry quietly.

Remus stared at Harry and then at the other two men in the bowl with them.

“You don’t need to worry cub, you won’t be hearing him anymore.” said Sirius soothingly.

“THIS PROVES HE’S INSANE!” shouted Fudge. “HEARING VOICES! FIRST HOMICIDAL VOICES AND NOW THIS!”

“He’s not crazy!” screeched Madam Bones. “The poor thing has been abused so badly that he cannot even feel that being in a magical castle is enough to get away from his monster of an uncle!

Dumbledore looked away, the twinkling gone from his eyes, now only held a large abundance of tears, and rapidly, they fell down his crooked nose.

Twentieth paragraph.

“That’s not a very good thing, run when he looks happy.” said George wisely.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

“Vanishing cabinet? There was a Vanishing Cabinet here?” said Kingsley shocked. “Where was the corresponding one kept?”

“That was in my house.” said Dumbledore calmly. “However it was stolen from there many, many years ago.”

“There was something stolen from your house?” said Anthony stunned.

“I am hardly home, I am only at my place of residence during the summer break, and even that is only for a night or two.” said Dumbledore with a smile. “I didn’t notice that it had been stolen until at least a month or two after the fact.”

“So you put the matching one out and about, so students can wander about in it? And end up Merlin knows where?” asked Remus quickly.

“I placed an extremely powerful spell on the cabinet, no student could break it.” said Dumbledore reassuringly.

End of dialogue set.

“He’s always had it out for Peeves, nothing anyone can do can change that.” said McGonagall.

Twenty-first paragraph.

“I could have kicked myself.” said Harry.

Twenty-second paragraph, second sentence.

Harry rubbed his back without even thinking. Sirius noticed this and took ahold of his godson’s hand.
“Don’t think about it. Just let it go.” said Sirius in Harry’s ear.

End of twenty-second paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

“Pathetic, learn to lie to him at least.” said Sirius shaking his head.

“I agree with him on this, I don’t want him hurting you again.” said Remus giving Harry’s shoulder a small squeeze.

Twenty-third paragraph.

“Someone’s gotta go potty!” sang Lee.

Dialogue line.

“Wow, no wonder he wanted revenge.” mumbled Fred to George.

“I’ll kill him myself, if I get the chance.” said George. “Stupid reason to want revenge like that.”

“Sort of explains why he accused Harry of turning his cat almost to stone.” said Lee.

“Yeah, he did say something like that didn’t he?” said Fred.

Twenty-fourth paragraph, first sentence, first semi-colon.

People turned and stared at Tonks and the book she was reading from.

“Harry was alarmed?” said a fourth year Slytherin.

“But…But Harry’s not scared of anything!”

End of twenty-fourth paragraph.

“Wow, we’ve never pissed him off that much.” said George.
“As mad as you got him, he let you go?” said Remus slowly.

“I’m mad now.” pouted Sirius.

“I didn’t want to give him the opportunity to change his mind.” said Harry.

“It is.” said Sirius grudgingly.

“You don’t have my big, green, innocent eyes. You look like a trouble maker.” said Harry playfully.

“Don’t push your luck.” said Sirius giving Harry a small shove.

“Peeves helped you?” said Remus stunned.

“Nick rules!” said Gryffindors, young and old in the room.

“I’ll bet that didn’t take much persuasion.” said Ernie with a laugh.

“It never does.” said Fred eagerly.

“It worked.” said Harry with a bright smile.
“Why do you look for people with problems and try and fix them.” said Tonks looking over to Harry.

“He did me a very big favor.” said Harry.

“That sucks.” said Fred.

“I’ve had a cold shower, they are really unpleasant, especially if it’s cold outside.” said Dr. Clark.

“That’s what it felt like.” said Harry with a smile.

“I wish people would just spit out what they want.” said Harry rolling his eyes.

“A momentous occasion.” said Dumbledore brightly.

“Indeed, but what does one get for someone’s deathday?” said McGonagall inquisitively.

“My opinion still stands. He’s too flexible for a child.” said Flitwick.
“That explains why it got so cold in the castle that night.” said Katie.

“He was always so polite.” said McGonagall. “Even in life he was famous for it.”

“You’re giving up a Halloween feast, for something that’s not even going to have food or anything fun for living people to do?” asked Remus stunned.

“Yeah, sort of.” said Harry with a smile.

“Harry Potter goes right up and leaps onto the back of a troll, doesn’t back down from a bucking broomstick over fifty feet in the air,” said George ticking off the first year’s events.

“Doesn’t scream and run away from a mysterious, dark being in the forest, and rushes to fight a dark wizard, but is terrified from a ghost wearing tights and a ruffed collar?” said Fred with a raised eyebrow.

“Yeah right.” said Fred and George rolling their eyes.

“Come on, Harry! No one would believe you afraid of a ghost, besides, they can’t hurt anybody!” said Lee slapping a hand to his forehead.

Several Gryffindors of the past blinked.

“Nick beamed at you? He’s always so…somber.” said Remus, trying hard to not instigate Sirius’s favorite joke. However, Sirius noticed this, and crossed his arms.

“I don’t use that joke all the time.” pouted Sirius.
“Yes, you do.” said a collective group of adult voices.

“Do not!” Sirius retorted. “I could have used it a bunch of times, but I didn’t!”

Dialogue set, second sentence.

“I had to almost bury him in blankets when he came down from his dormitory.” said Hermione. “He was shivering.”

End of dialogue set.

“Deathday party, not deathday study.” said Fred with a teasing smile.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

“He’s always grumpy when he has homework to do.” said Harry and Hermione together.

End of dialogue set.

“Nice pun.” said Dr. Clark with a laugh.

Thirtieth paragraph, second sentence, second comma, second word.

“Wow, makes me want to go back upstairs and just relax in the common room, don’t it?” said Charlie wistfully.

Thirtieth paragraph, end of second sentence.

“You didn’t!” said Charlie angrily.

“It was a Fire Salamander!” said George defensively.

“Oh, well, alright.” said Charlie apologetically.

“Really? You gave up that easily?” said Bill slowly.

“Fire salamanders actually really like those things. We found that out about four years ago.” said Charlie with a small smile. “It’s like exploding candy to them.”
‘Rescued’ my foot.” said McGonagall tartly, though she had a small smile on her lips.

“I took that as a sign.” said Harry with a bright smile.

“What do you mean?” asked Colin.

“I almost went back on my word not to tell about it.” said Harry.

“You didn’t promise, he make you.” said Sirius with a grin.

“They enjoy those things?” said Hermione.

“They actually do. When ours was stupid enough to eat one, it whizzed around the place, landed outside and came crawling back in to eat another one. It did it till the box was empty.” said Charlie with a bright smile. “I think it’s the powder inside, it’s like sugar to them.”

“Didn’t sound like it enjoyed it.” said Tonks with a laugh.

“It came back out and ate one more after everyone else went to bed.” said Harry. “I couldn’t sleep that night.”

“Why not?” said Sirius quickly.

“Something was worrying me. And I couldn’t put my finger on why I was restless.” said Harry.

“It was really mind-blowing.” said Harry with a fond smile. “I love fireworks.”
“Why would you?” asked Percy.

Dr. Clark whistled excitedly.

“Wasn’t rumors, there really were skeletons there.” said Fred.

“I was not bossy!” said Hermione angrily.

“Yeah, but I never said I wasn’t going! I said I was starting to regret promising to go to the party.” said Harry.

“Why didn’t you stop in for a quick bite, and be fashionably late for the party.” said Sirius quickly.

Harry and Ron looked pointedly at Hermione, who blushed and shuffled her feet.

“We were already, sort of late. Party started at five-thirty.” said Harry.

“Hermione couldn’t get her hair to sit right. We kept telling her she looked fine, but did she believe us? NO!” said Ron shaking his head and rolling his eyes.

“That’s creepy, perfect for dead people, I guess.” said Justin.

Sirius did he best to slyly tuck the blanket in around Harry. Harry watched with amusement as Sirius, (who was staring ahead), tried to tuck the blanket behind Remus, who was wondering why a blanket was getting shoved behind him.

End of thirty-fourth paragraph.

“Sets my teeth on fire just thinking about it.” said Remus cringing horribly and covering his ears.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

“How can you be pleased and mournful at the same time?” asked Hannah to Susan.

Thirty-fifth paragraph.

Thirty-sixth paragraph, second sentence.

“Did you hear any songs you could recognize?” asked Ginny with a slight smile. The school sat up quickly, eager to hear Harry sing again.

“I heard ‘Danny Boy’ and some other funeral dirges I didn’t know. Or at least I thought they were funeral dirges.” said Harry.

“Yeah, it’s kinda hard to tell when it’s being played on musical saws.” said Hermione.

“I don’t want to be forced to learn how to play those things.” said Ron. “What if it were to slip the wrong way.”

“I don’t want to think about it.” said Sirius leaning forward quickly.

Thirty-sixth paragraph

“I was freezing, and I had about four layers on.” said Harry.

Dialogue line.

“Explains why you were hopping around.” said Ron with a smile.

Dialogue set, first sentence.
“Don’t have to tell me twice.” said Harry and Hermione.

Dialogue set, second sentence, first comma.

“Oh! Those are the Halleluiah Sisters, they haunt Westminster Abbey. They love to sing for people who come into the church at midnight.” said Professor Sprout. “Though, that does tend to send them away screaming when they can’t see anyone there to sing.”

Dialogue set, second sentence, second comma.

“Hmm, I do believe that is the Prisoner of the Tower of London. I’m amazed that Sir Nicholas invited him.” said Dumbledore. “He was a serial killer.”

“I didn’t need to hear that.” said Remus and Dr. Clark together.

“How can you tell what ghost they are, it’s just a one sentence description.” said Colin.

“We have met quite a few ghosts in our time.” said Dumbledore with a smile.

Dialogue set, end of second sentence.

“Sir Langdon. A most unfortunate knight. He was granted knighthood after he was killed in his first battle. He took that arrow for his king.” said Professor Flitwick.

End of dialogue set.

“Who wouldn’t.” said Draco quietly.

Dialogue line.

“Who?” asked Dennis.

“She haunts a bathroom in the school.” said Hermione.

“She’d like to haunt something else.” said Ron with a wicked grin. But stopped his smiling when Hermione slammed an elbow into his side.

Dialogue line.
“You’ve got the boys trained pretty well, don’t you?” said Madam Bones with a broad smile.

“Of course. JUMP!” shouted Hermione.

“How high?” said both of the boys, going along with the gag. The students and guests laughed loudly.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

“How hope that doesn’t happen to me when I pass away.” said a small first year Slytherin boy.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

“It was her fifty year anniversary.” whispered Hermione to Ron.

End of dialogue set.

Hermione blushed heavily.

“You told boys that kind of stuff?” said Tonks nearly dropping the book.

“They’re so easy to talk to. Harry even tries to get “girl talk” out of my system when I can’t talk to Ginny, Luna or some other girl.” said Hermione quietly.

“How does that go?” asked Sirius laughing like mad.

“It’s harder than it looks.” said Harry.

Dialogue line.

“He’s got a radar for food, nothing else registers.” said Ginny shaking her head.

“Just like all the other Weasley men, dear.” said Mrs. Weasley with a smile.

Thirty-seventh paragraph, second sentence.

“Harry was more horrified than Ron was. I was shocked.” said Hermione with a laugh.

“What was wrong?” said Remus.
Tonks read ahead quickly and gave a laugh. “Oh, in Harry’s case, it was mortifying.”

Thirty-seventh paragraph, third sentence.

“What is it?” asked Sirius worriedly.

“The worse thing I had ever seen.” said Harry shaking his head, his eyes weren’t as playful and full of light as they were earlier.

Thirty-seventh paragraph, fourth sentence, first semi-colon.

Harry flinched horribly.

Thirty-seventh paragraph, fourth sentence, second semi-colon.

Then he whimpered.

Thirty-seventh paragraph, fourth sentence, second semi colon, first comma.

Then he whined.

Thirty-seventh paragraph, fourth sentence, second semi-colon, first comma, ninth word.

Then Harry moaned loudly.

End of thirty-seventh paragraph.

Tombstone Cake iced words.

“I CAN’T TAKE IT ANYMORE, JUST SKIP OVER THE REST!” cried Harry, covering his head with the blanket.

“We can’t skip over it, and you’re having conniptions over food?” said Sirius wonderingly.

“Harry hates wasting food, he’s never thrown anything away.” said Ron and Dr. Clark.
“Harry, quit cringing. You’re almost falling out of the bowl.” said Sirius pulling Harry back onto the cushions and Remus’s side.

“I didn’t want to hear him say that he liked it.” said Harry turning pale.

“I didn’t want to hear that either.” said Harry.

“Why would you lean forward to look at it?” said Dumbledore looking over to Hermione in shock.

“I don’t even know why I did it.” said Hermione.

“All three of us looked a little green.” said Harry recovering.

“I’m amazed that Nicholas invited him.” said Professor McGonagall.

“Ever get the feeling he invited himself?” said Fred.
“Harry rushed over to the corner and almost got sick.” said Hermione.

“You were actually.” said Luna dreamily. “But then again, she’s used to it, she likes the dramatics.”

“Oh, he’s a real lady killer.” said Dr. Clark with a smirk.

“Don’t you hate doing that at a party?” said Lavender.

“Yeah, but at least we get along with everybody.” said Parvati happily.

“Sure you do.” said Harry rolling his eyes.

Sirius snorted. “Makes her sound like she has a problem.”

“PADFOOT!” shouted Remus.

“Bet she didn’t believe that for one minute.” said Lee with a smirk.
“You could be completely serious, and she would still think you’re making fun of her.” said Padma.

“We didn’t need the motivation, we knew where you were going with this.” said Harry and Ron together.

“She needs a self-esteem boost.” said Remus with a raised brow.

“Okay, now he went a bit too far.” said Dr. Clark his smile fading slightly.

“Poor kids.” said Moody with a smile.
“She was ‘singing’ at that point.” said Ron with a laugh.

End of dialogue set.

“Warn is a good word for it, he has really boring speeches. Just like Percy.” said Fred.

Forty-sixth paragraph, second sentence, fourth comma.

“Wow, someone was excited to hear Nick talk?” said Charlie.

End of forty-sixth paragraph.

“Oh, alright, now it makes a little bit more sense.” said Bill

Dialogue line.

“Well, whatever it is, Nick didn’t plan it.” said Kingsley.

Forty-seventh paragraph.

“I didn’t know what was going on, but the moment I saw Nick’s scowl, I stopped pretty quick.” said Harry.

Forty-eighth paragraph, second sentence.

“That was actually quite disturbing to watch.” said Hermione.

End of forty-eighth paragraph.

“Gross!” said several students.

Dialogue line.
Forty-ninth paragraph.

“What a jerk.” said Tonks angrily.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

“Hermione just about jumped into both of our arms.” said Ron.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

“Oh, he’s a real charmer.” said a third year Gryffindor girl a frown on her face.

Dialogue line.

Some people giggled at that.

“No one would buy that.” said Lionus with a laugh.

Dialogue line.

“Well, he’s not a complete idiot.” said Dr. Nicodemus.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

“What a happy party.” said Hannah.

Fiftieth paragraph, second sentence.

“I’d’ve chucked him out.” said Susan.
“He was pissed off.” said Harry with a small smile. “Couldn’t help but feel sorry for him.”

“Why focus on me? Both you and Ron were there too.” said Harry.

“We weren’t shaking nearly as bad.” said Ron.

“That’s right, keep a happy thought.” said Sirius with a smile.

The smile was ripped off of Sirius’ face and was replaced with a gasp of horror.

“Oh, no.” muttered several people in hushed whispers.

“Wherever it is, keep away from it!” shouted Remus fearfully.

Harry was dragged from his laying position and was pulled onto Sirius’ lap and the men scooted a little closer.

“What the…?” said Harry.

“You aren’t moving.” said all three of them in unison.
“We thought you were having a heart attack.” said Ron. “You had your hand almost clutching your chest.”

“You didn’t hear it?” asked Dr. Clark wildly.

“No, we didn’t hear anything?” said Hermione shakily.

“The voice was creepier than what you told us.” said Ron.

“Why would you wish to hear that?” said a small first year Gryffindor.

“We thought you were going nuts on us.” said Ron

Sirius went pale.

“You go near that voice or follow that voice, and I’m going say you can’t go to Hogsmede on your date.” said Remus.

“How in the hell is that fair? This already happened, I can’t make choices now!” said Harry shortly.

“He has a point, Remus.” said Dumbledore, his eyes fixed on the book.

“Good, keep away from it.” said Kingsley, “go tell a teacher.”

“And being in the dungeons doesn’t help much.” said Mrs. Weasley fearfully.
Slowly, Remus looked over to Harry, who was still in his lap. “Adrenaline, that’s all I’m saying,” said Harry, crossing his arms.

“Sound reasoning.” said Professor Flitwick. “Where ghosts can’t hurt people, but can become invisible. Phantoms can hurt people and they also can become invisible.”

“But we would have heard it, if it was a ghost or phantom.” said Hermione.

“I didn’t know that you guys couldn’t hear it.” said Harry.

“Oh, right.” said Hermione quickly.

“It was heartbreaking going past the feast.” said Ron sorrowfully.

“Far behind him.” said Ron. “We were barely going up half-way, when he was off and running towards the next floor.”

“It’s killed someone already, hasn’t it?” said Tonks faintly.

“No, it didn’t.” said Dumbledore, who knew what was going to happen next.
Harry noticed Remus getting paler by the second and grasped his hand. “Relax, I’m just fine.”

Dialogue set, second sentence, second comma.

“We were both ready to ship you to Madam Pomfrey, I think the rotten food had gotten to you real bad.” said Ron.

End of dialogue set.

“Why do you think you have to save everyone.” asked Sirius clutching Harry’s free hand.

Fifty-ninth paragraph, first sentence, second comma.

“What made us angry, was that he wasn’t even breathing hard.” said Ron shaking his head.

End of fifty-ninth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

“Thanks for waiting for us at the end.” said Ron.

Sixtieth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Sixty-first paragraph, second sentence, first comma.

“Harry hears a psycho voice, then something shiny appears and you walk towards it?” said Nightstrike stunned. “Kids are way too trusting these days.”

End of sixty-first paragraph.

Writing on the wall.

Those who were fourth year and up and knew the story clamped their hands together and hugged one another. Those younger or who weren’t there gave a loud gasp.
“That thing…is real…?” said Sirius stunned.

“But…it’s only a legend…” said Remus.

“Um…it’s the title of the book.” reminded Harry.

“No one told us the title of the book!” said Remus shortly.

“Nice try, Skippy.” said Harry tapping Remus’ forehead. “Professor Flitwick said it, you all just ignored it.”

“I’m going to call you ‘Skippy’ from now on.” said Sirius trying hard to sound cheerful.

“Don’t make me bite you.” said Remus angrily. “This isn’t funny!”

“Of course not, but you everyone gets out all right, well mostly all right.” said Harry sending a fleeting glimpse over to Ginny who nodded.

Dialogue line.

Sixty-second paragraph, second comma.

“Imagine my shock when I learned how light he really was.” said Hermione.

“Explains why you kept piling food on my plate after that.” said Harry.

End of sixty-second paragraph.

“What? What is it?” asked Remus quickly, hugging Harry tightly.

Sixty-third paragraph.

“If she’s dead, how come she stalked me when I came back from the bathroom?” asked Sirius.

“She isn’t dead.” said Harry.

Sixty-fourth paragraph.

“Good idea, move it, go get a teacher.” said Remus.

Dialogue line.
“Screw the self-help, go get a teacher.” said Sirius. “That thing might still be around.”

“I didn’t need to hear that.” said Dr. Clark.

Dialogue line.

“Listen to Ron.” said Bill.

Sixty-fifth paragraph, second sentence.

“So much for getting away without being seen.”

“We didn’t do anything wrong.” said Harry.

“Won’t stop Filch from accusing you of something.” said Sirius.

Sixty-fifth paragraph, third sentence, first semi-colon.

“Well don’t you sound a bit bitter.” said Fred teasingly.

End of sixty-fifth paragraph.

Sixty-sixth paragraph.

“It was a bit too much to see you three and Mrs. Norris hanging like that.” said George.

Sixty-seventh paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Draco looked quickly up to Snape who was grinding his teeth.

“Sorry.” said Draco quietly.

End of chapter.

“Just as sadistic as his father.” muttered Moody.
“Harry, where are you going?” said Remus as Harry got off of his lap and walked over to door slowly.

“It’s like he’s in a trance! He’s… ooof” Sirius crashed into….the open door. There was nothing in his way, the door coming into the Great Hall was wide open, but for some reason, he couldn’t leave.

“Stop, Harry!” said Sirius loudly, but he stared in wonder as Harry passed through the barrier that stopped him. Sirius extended a hand to catch hold of Harry’s shoulder, but his hand was being pushed back by an invisible force. Suddenly the doors slammed shut behind Harry and the same force that kept Sirius from leaving sent him sprawling back to the bowl.

“What’s going on?” asked Tonks loudly.

Suddenly, the same scroll that had appeared all those times before appeared once again, just like their very first experience, the room went black.
The darkness departed them in the middle of the Dursley’s living room, and they saw as they looked around that it was the middle of the afternoon. They heard the door open and in came a younger, though older than they had seen him yet in these scrolls, Harry come into the living room. He threw his tattered and frayed backpack into the cupboard and walked into the kitchen. He looked as if nothing in his life gave him any joy, any more.

Firenze tried to reach out to the vision of the past, but Tempest took his hand.

“We can do nothing to help him here.” said Tempest.

“I’ve never seen a child look so melancholy.” said Firenze.

They followed and saw him take bowls and other assorted cooking utensils out of the cupboards and drawers. He reached up and took an old battered notebook and flipped through the pages, Hermione walked behind him and saw that the notebook was full of different recipes for all sorts of different ingredients. As Harry began to take ingredients out of the fridge, Aunt Petunia came stomping in.

“What do you think you’re doing?” she shrieked. She wore a flowered apron and had gloves and a spray bottle of cleaner in one hand and a white cloth in the other.

“Fixing dinner, Aunt Petunia, Uncle Vernon said he wanted steaks tonight.” said Harry not looking at her, but staring fixedly at the recipe book.

“I’ve invited the new neighbors over to eat dinner. I can’t serve them steaks!” Petunia screeched. She stamped her foot and slammed a hand down on the page Harry was reading from.

“Why wouldn’t you serve your best food?” said Mrs. Weasley in a whisper. “Especially when making a first impression?”

“I want to have a fruit appetizer, wine, salad, lobster, and dessert!” said Aunt Petunia ticking off the different meal courses. Harry stared at her in shock.

“You realize I’m going to be cooking all afternoon, right?” he muttered.

“Well then you best get going about doing it!” she snapped. “Here’s some money go and get the things I want!”

“You didn’t give him any ideas what to do!” said Ron angrily.

“You didn’t tell me what you really wanted!” said Harry shortly.
“Don’t argue, get going! Oh and by the way, Aunt Marge is coming as well, she’s staying for a while.” said Aunt Petunia as she left the room. “So everything must be absolutely perfect.”

Harry groaned slammed the money down on the counter. He picked up the notebook again and flipped through it quickly.

The room shifted forward and they saw Harry staggering under the large and heavy bags that easily outweighed him.

As he laid them down on the counters, a loud booming voice came from lounge. Harry flinched.

“BOY! What are you doing?” shouted Uncle Vernon, stomping into the kitchen.

“Making dinner, Uncle Vernon.” said Harry as he placed the different foods on the counter.

“That doesn’t look like steak and mushrooms.” growled Uncle Vernon.

“Aunt Petunia invited the new neighbors over for dinner and she wanted to serve something special.” said Harry tiredly. “And isn’t Aunt Marge coming, too?”

Uncle Vernon growled and stomped out of the room. “Make sure you do things right.”

The scene shifted again and they found themselves still in the kitchen, all around themselves they saw the product of Harry’s hard work. There was giant bouquet of wild looking flowers, but when they looked closer, they saw that it was made entirely of fruit.

“That looks awesome!” said Colin.

They saw the lobsters laying on silver platters, a large bowl of multicolored salad, and a bottle of chilled wine in a tub of ice. Then in the corner, they saw a giant chocolate torte, with chocolate rosettes.

“This stuff looks really good.” said Ron, his mouth watering.

“Knock it off!” said Hermione. “This is a black scroll remember? Something awful is going to happen!”

They watched as Harry, who was wearing a faded black button up shirt, carried several plates and sets of silverware wrapped neatly in napkins, Despite the fadedness of his shirt, he looked quite charming and gentle. He looked quickly over his different masterpieces and smiled warmly.

“How is this a bad memory, it looks pretty good to me.” said Tonks quietly, “By Dursley standards anyway.”

A doorbell chimed all the way into the kitchen and they all heard Aunt Petunia’s false happy voice coming from the hall.

“So happy you could come!” said Aunt Petunia in a false rapturous voice. “Oh and here’s Marge!”

The younger Harry groaned softly and finished placing the garnishes on the lobsters before putting it in the warmed oven. They watched as Harry continued to prepare the meals for their debut appearance, and observed as Harry whisked the food out to the table, unseen by the guests who sat in the lounge.
After Harry had lit the candles on the table, the doorbell rang once more. Harry’s head snapped up quickly.

“I’ll get it Petunia, dear.” said Uncle Vernon cheerfully and walked to the door. As he passed the entrance to the dining room, he sent a warning look to Harry. Harry was frozen in place, his eyes as wide as saucers.

The Watchers could hear the door open and a young man’s voice coming from the door.

“Evening sir, I’m Higgens from the Police Station, is Harry Potter here?”

“This won't end well...” said Sirius weakly.

The scene shifted once more, and they found themselves at the very end of the dinner party. But something was wrong. The lobster’s shell was left in pieces, as per normal, the flower bouquet was stripped of it’s fruit blossoms, the salad was reduced to stray strips of green and purple lettuce, and the chocolate torte was reduced to only a few smears of chocolate cream. But that wasn’t what was wrong; it was the fact that they saw Aunt Petunia cleaning her kitchen with a large scowl on her face.

“Isn't she a clean freak? Shouldn't she be enjoying herself?” asked Tonks.

They heard a crashing coming from in the lounge and they headed in there. They saw Harry lying against the wall, apparently knocked out and sporting a blackened eye, bleeding temple and a bruised cheek.

“It must have had something to do with that cop!” said Hermione fearfully, clutching at her face, horrified at what she was seeing.

They saw a large woman, with a slight mustache, sitting in one of the large, plush chairs. Gripping a cane and patting the head of a large bulldog. In the bulldog’s teeth they saw shreds of cloth dangling from the dog’s mouth. When Sirius looked at Harry closer, he saw that the shreds from the dog’s mouth were from the pants Harry was wearing, and several trickles of blood flowed from his leg.

“Good Ripper, good boy. Seems his training is working out just fine.” said the large woman happily.

“Let’s see if the little beast learned his lesson.” said Uncle Vernon nastily. He pulled Harry roughly to his feet by the poor boy’s collar. “I’m waiting.”

Dumbledore lunged forward, but flew right through Vernon and landed hard on the ground the other side.

“Albus! We can’t do anything!” reminded McGonagall as she rushed to his side.

“I can’t stand it, please, make it end.” gasped Dumbledore as he clutched his now sprained wrist.

“It will be over soon.” assured McGonagall wrapping his wrist in her handkerchief.

Harry hung limply in his Uncle’s grip, he groaned softly and his eyes fluttered open.

“What do you say?” said Uncle Vernon putting his large face very close to Harry’s small, thin one.
“I’m sorry.” said Harry in a hoarse whisper.

“For what?” cried Remus.

“For what?” said Uncle Vernon nastily. Remus cringed.

“I…I don’t know…” said Harry quietly.

“The police came asking for you. You’ve been to station, haven’t you? I’ve warned you, I didn’t want to catch you going there…ever…again…” said Uncle Vernon angrily.

“Nasty brutes, police officers, meddlers every one of them.” said the woman smugly. “Not a decent one in the lot.”

“YOUR WRONG! ABOUT ALL OF THEM! THEY’RE GOOD PEOPLE!” shouted Harry angrily. He tried to wrench his body away from his uncle and slapped his Uncle square in the face with all the strength he had. But against the large man, it did very little.

Uncle Vernon and the woman blinked, the large woman sneered wickedly as Uncle Vernon’s fist rose and fell, the room went dark once more.

They found themselves in Harry’s cupboard; to their surprise they found themselves shrunken down this time so they could fit in the small and enclosed space. The wall and ceiling were draped in cobwebs and the smell of dried blood lingered in the air.

“How can someone sleep in here?” said Rivers looking around in shock.

The door to the cupboard flew open and they watched as Harry was flung inside so forcefully that he slammed against the back wall and landed on the dirty, lumpy mattress, he was bleeding now profusely from the small wound on his head, and from a bloodied nose. They stood what felt like hours waiting for Harry to stir and wake up. Sirius, Remus, Dr. Clark and Dumbledore rushed over and tried to nudge Harry and wake him up. But just as Dumbledore was forced to remember, their hands fell on dead air. He wouldn’t stir, not until the door to the cupboard opened once more, only it was someone they didn’t expect to see at all.

It was Aunt Petunia, and she had a small first aid box in her hands, and a small bottle of water. She dabbed a small gauze patch laced with ointment on the cut on his head. Harry gave a low groan and his eyes fluttered open again. She helped him drink from the bottle of water.

“You’d best tell your police friends not to come around here anymore. The next time, I’m not helping you.” she snapped quietly.

“Thank you, Aunt Petunia.” he said weakly, sitting up and gently taking the box from her. She snatched it back and finished patching him up. Once again the room went black and they found themselves back in the Great Hall.

Hermione’s mind was racing. “So, she helped him? But why?”

“That is what we all would like to know.” said Madam Bones looking at the now fading scroll, as if seeing it for the first time.

“She could have pitied him ‘cause he didn’t do anything to cause the police to show up.” said Dennis.

“That could very well be.” said Dumbledore, drying the tears that were falling down his nose and settling into his snow-white beard still nursing his now bruising wrist. “We may never know for sure.”

Madam Pomfrey hurried over and healed his wrist. “Think before you leap, Albus. You’re not nearly as young as you used to be.”

Without warning, dinner arrived on the table, but what they saw, none of them had really seen before in the castle. It was the same fruit bouquets that they had seen at the Dursleys.

The door had opened and Harry walked in.

“So what do you guys think of the flower fruit.” said Harry with a broad smile.

“Are you alright?” said Sirius quickly, the three men and Dumbledore rushed over to him.

“I’m fine, why do you ask?” said Harry looking at each of the men with concern.

“You left sort of…funny.” said Sirius.

“How did I leave funny? I told you I was going down to the kitchens, to make those things.” said Harry pointing over to the table.

Umbridge strained against the bonds but ceased when she saw Tempest scowl at her.

“No, Harry, you didn’t, you just walked out of here, not a single word to anybody.” said Remus anxiously.

Harry stared at the men with a bewildered look. Dumbledore looked at Harry’s eyes and saw…

“He truly believes that we spoke to him when he left.” said Dumbledore with a gasp.

“How is that possible?” asked Remus quickly.

“That trance, it made him think or believe that something else transpired. When we saw what really had happened.” said Dumbledore.

“The books do have that effect on the subject.” said Speckerton from the back of the room. He walked slowly up to the front of the room where the men stood. “In some cases, they become very protective of the subject of the books, and they tend to have the person pass out during the scrolls or shots and have the person leave for the black Recollection Scrolls. If you remember Mr. Black, the room wouldn’t let you leave, but it did let him. The books wanted you to know, but it gave him a chance to bow out.”

“These books can think?” said Hermione shocked.

“In a way, yes.” said Speckerton simply.

“Could they be the reason that he’s sleeping at the drop of a hat?” said Madam Pomfrey.

“No. I don’t think that is the reason.” said Speckerton thoughtfully. “Passing out is one thing, but if it was the reason, he would have been enveloped in light, and that hasn’t happened yet.”

Harry watched the adults consult with each other about his apparent narcolepsy, when he coughed loudly. All the adult’s eyes turned to him.

“If you let all this fruit go to waste, I’m not cooking again here, you want to talk, do it with a plate.” said Harry.

Dumbledore smiled and began waving his wand and conjuring all the plates to come flying into each person’s hand.

An hour later, after everyone had their fill of food, and after Mrs. Weasley pestered Harry to teach her how to make the fruit look the way it did, they all began to talk about what had transpired in the scroll.

“What did the police officer want that day?” asked Dr. Clark quietly.

“It was a rookie, his wife wanted the recipe for the pecan pie he took home that afternoon.” said Harry taking a bite out of a watermelon tulip. “He didn’t realize that it wasn’t a very good idea to do that. He didn’t get the recipe until a week later anyway.”

“Why didn’t you get him the recipe?” asked Mr. Weasley.

“Uncle Vernon wouldn’t let me go to the door, let alone outside. I couldn’t go to the station with the bruises and the cuts. The last thing the police need is an incentive to try and help me again and get them in trouble again.” said Harry.

Once nine o’clock rolled around, the students drifted off to bed. Sirius threw an arm around Harry’s shoulders and led him to the room made up for the three men and Harry specially. When they entered their room, Sirius flung himself on the giant sofa and stretched.

“Merlin, when you come home, I’m going to gain forty pounds on your cooking.” said Sirius patting his still flat, but full stomach.

“So are we.” said Remus with a large smile with Dr. Clark following him.

Harry smiled brightly and yawned; he muttered about taking a shower and left the room.

All three men sat in the chairs beside the fire, each one as somber as the next, with the scroll weighing heavily in their minds.

“Enough of this depressing crap, where are those drawings? We need to finish planning Harry’s wing.” said Sirius digging around the couch.

“How can you think about planning? After seeing Harry get struck and hurt like that?” said Remus stunned.

“All we can really do is promise this won’t happen to him from now on.” said Sirius wisely as he pulled several pieces of parchment and laying them out on the table. “So did we decide on what color his bedroom is going to be?”

“I think we decided on red, with gold trim, did you say wing?” said Dr. Clark. “Just how big is your house?”

“It’s the biggest wizarding house in Cheshire.” said Sirius without looking up, and then he heard a knocking on the door. “Come in.”

Dumbledore came in carrying Harry’s small little black book and had a frown on his face. “Where is Harry?” he asked when he saw that the youth was not there.

“He’s taking a shower, we thought we would pick up the pace on planning his wing.” said Sirius.
“A wing, now? It was a room, now it’s a wing?” said Dumbledore with a smile forming on his face.

“Yeah, he’s getting older and well, I thought he could use the privacy.” said Sirius with a smile.

“Does your mind revolve around sex or what?” said Remus groaning.

“Hey, it’s been almost fourteen years, give me some slack here. What can we do for you?” asked Sirius.

“I came to return the book, such a marvelous read, I managed to break the code, and I found the lyrics to that song he wrote...he was right, I didn’t want to hear it.” said Dumbledore, losing the twinkling in his eyes.

“Why?” asked the three men.

“It is a very depression influenced song.” said Dumbledore.

“Well, let’s hope he doesn’t write another one like it.” said Remus carefully.

“Mind helping us decorate Harry’s rooms? This is taking more thought then I thought it would be.” said Sirius with a bright smile.

“I would be happy to help. What have you already gotten down in stone.” said Dumbledore regaining the light in his eyes.

“Well, we got the color of his room done, but what to decorate it with, we’ve got all these magazines on interior decorating, but we just can’t pick on we like.” said Dr. Clark.

“Have you asked Harry what he would like?” asked Dumbledore.

“It’s supposed to be a surprise.” said the three men together.

“What’s supposed to be a surprise?” said a voice coming from the bathroom.

They all turned and saw Harry, drying his hair with a towel and wrapped warmly in a bathrobe.

“Nothing.” said the four men quickly.

“Uh, huh. Mind if I go to bed then? I’m tired as hell.” said Harry folding his arms.

“Go for it.” said Sirius brightly. “Want me to tuck you in?”

“Nah. I think I can manage on my own. Goodnight.” said Harry waving to the men.

They waited till Harry had slipped into the bedroom he shared with Sirius and closed the door.

“Alright, let’s get back to work.” said Dr. Clark flipping through a bathroom magazine.

“I can turn this old study into a music room for him. I never used it, and he seems to really like music.” said Sirius pointing to blueprints of a large estate.

“Kids nowadays like that skihop music.” said Remus thinking out loud.

“Hiphop.” corrected Dr. Clark marking different pages.
“Whatever, it isn’t the music you and I grew up on.” said Remus.

“When does music ever stay constant.” said Sirius with a smirk. “Though you’ve got to admit, the music nowadays has a lot more screaming.”

“Harry, seems to favor old fashioned songs, and show tunes.” said Dumbledore picking up a magazine on kitchen cabinets.

“How do you know?” said Sirius quickly.

“It was the style that his song was. I went down to the choir room and played the song on one of the pianos.” said Dumbledore. “The melody was quite beautiful. It was the lyrics that had the style of a dying swan. Graceful, yet highly depressing.”

“Oh, well, then I guess keeping it simple would do it best.” said Sirius.

“I think Harry would like quick access to the kitchens.” said Dumbledore absently looking at a cherry wood spice rack.

Sirius, Remus and Dr. Clark looked up and then at each other.

“I forgot that.” said Remus.

“I think the last calming draught you took destroyed your mind.” said Sirius shaking his head, “Funny thing is, when I left, there wasn’t a kitchen in the house, I always ate out. If ‘Psycho Bitch’ made a kitchen in that house, I don’t think Harry would want to cook in it.”

“I wouldn’t either.” growled Remus. “So let’s take this big room on the first floor and make it into the kitchen, give him plenty of space, is that room used for anything?”

“No, it was one of the old living rooms that I never used.” said Sirius.

“Why have such a big place when you don’t use all the rooms?” asked Dr. Clark.

“I planned on housing all my mates, and their families. That idea didn’t pan out, but the house was always there for a bit of a vacation resort.” said Sirius with a smirk.

“Before you got sent away, I always crashed at your place. I think Harry will have the time of his life there.” said Remus happily.

“Should we get him a pet, you know a dog or something?” asked Sirius absently.

“He has an owl already. Let’s see if he wants another responsibility.” said Remus, “besides, after that damned dog bit him, how do we know he even wants a dog, besides you.” he looked up at Sirius quickly.

“Does this picture mean that he’s got a balcony?” said Dr. Clark pointing to a small square picture.

“Yeah, it looks out to the front gardens and when the sun comes up in the morning, the sun hits you right in the face.” said Sirius with a smile.

“Harry will love it.” said Dumbledore with a bright smile.

“I hope so.” said Sirius worriedly. “Now where’s that blasted furniture catalog?”
The next morning, just like all the reading days before, everyone slowly made their way down to the Great Hall and took their seats with their plates and bowls of different breakfast meals.

“So what happened yesterday, in the last chapter?” said Sirius yawning and running a hand through his scraggy hair and stabbing his scrambled eggs with the other. "I forgot."

“The Chamber of Secrets was opened.” said Hermione.

Sirius blinked hard and the tiredness was removed forcibly from his body. “Crap, that’s right.”

“So, who wants to get the ball rolling this morning?” said Madam Bones loudly.

Everyone looked around at each other, not many people wanted to volunteer to read that morning, not with a starting chapter like that.

“I will.” said Hermione speaking clearly.

“Very well, Miss Granger.” said Professor McGonagall, levitating the book over to her.

"Ninth chapter title," said Hermione loudly.

“You mean the words that say ‘Chamber of Secrets?’” asked Fudge.

“No, the house passwords on the bathroom walls.” said Sirius rolling his eyes. Some of the boys laughed, but they were all silenced by the glare that McGonagall and the other female teachers and adult women sent them.

Dialogue line.

First paragraph, first sentence, first comma, second word.

“Oh, damn. That’s his cat.” said Tonks.

“He won’t take kindly to his cat being like that.” said Charlie.

End of first paragraph.
“Seeing your pet like that, I don’t think I could stand it.” said Dr. Clark sadly. “I lost my dog like that, had him for nine years. The day after I asked the prettiest girl in the school to the Sunset Dance, I got home and my dog was…” he shivered.

“All because you asked a girl out?” said Ron in shock.

“It turns out that that girl was being admired from afar, by one of the football team’s lead forwards. He didn’t take kindly to me asking her out and getting a ‘yes’ in return.” said Dr. Clark bitterly.

“Were you a nerd?” asked Sirius, trying to cheer him up, though the death of a dog shook him. Dr. Clark smiled and laughed.

“Yeah, but I was a good-looking nerd.” said Dr. Clark. “The other ones in secondary school didn’t look all that great.”

“Do you miss your dog?” asked Harry quietly, making a quiet mental note.

“I do, not a day goes by that I don’t miss Max.” said Dr. Clark.

“Your dog was named Max?” asked Charlie with a sympathetic smile.

“Maxine, actually. I thought she was a boy for the longest time, scared the daylights out of me when she had her first litter, right under my bed too.” said Dr. Clark with a fond smile. “Guess that’s why I became a doctor, I liked helping people and it being her first litter, she needed help too.”

“Dogs aren’t people.” said Ron pointing out the obvious.

“I’m also a Vet. I care for people’s animals in my free time, for charity, or at least I used to.” said Dr. Clark with a smile.

“You’ll be able to do that again. You can bet on that.” said Remus supportively.

Dialogue line.

“Good question, and not one of them knows, I’ll bet. Seeing as how they’re children!” screeched Mrs. Weasley.

“It’ll be alright honey.” said Mr. Weasley soothingly.

Second paragraph.

“Every time something bad happens, I swear people look at me first.” said Harry.

“Kinda hard to sound bitter, you asked for trouble the moment you came.” said Zacharias.

Zacharias had to duck down and cover his ears from all the shouting that was sent his way. Not to mention all the hexes and curses, mostly sent by Sirius, and Ginny, also Remus and Dr. Clark shouted furiously over to the boy.

Dialogue set, fourth sentence.

“What proof did he have?” screeched Mrs. Weasley. She didn’t want Harry to get hurt, not like what had happened all those weeks ago.

“No proof but psychotic anguish.” said Kingsley calmly. “And that can get people killed.”

“I think I would have snapped if someone had hurt Crookshanks.” said Hermione honestly.

“Nothing would be left of whoever would hurt Hedwig.” said Harry bitterly, stroking his precious owl’s feathers as she came fluttering down.

“I swear, she knows right when we’re going to talk about her.” said Dr. Clark with large smile.

End of dialogue set.

The little balls of light, that represented the Scattered Shots, emerged rapidly from the book and spun quickly around and buried themselves in each person.

They found themselves in a darkened corridor with a large gathering of students. Each student had a look of intense confusion mixed with a heavy load of fear. Some students were standing on tiptoe and others were whispering hurriedly to the others.

The adults could easily see over the heads of all the children and see the horrible words written on the wall. They saw Filch and heard his terrible screech

“You! You murdered my cat!”

The Harry of the past stammered. “I-I didn’t…I wouldn’t….”

Ginny hurried over to Harry and engulfed him in a hug. Harry held onto her tightly and made quiet ‘shhh.’ sounds to calm her.

The adults watched in horror as Filch lifted Harry off the ground by the collar of his shirt and raised a first to strike him, just like from the scroll the night before. And before the strike fell, the lights left their bodies. Ginny and Harry found themselves holding onto nothing but air.

“That’s a deal breaker.” said Harry good-naturedly. Ginny gave a nervous giggle.

Dialogue line.

“Thank Merlin, a teacher.” said Lionus heaving a sigh.

“You’re worried?” said Dr. Nicodemus.
“I’m human, though I may not act like one, all the time.” said Lionus shortly.

“You act like a baby when you come to me for healing.” said Dr. Nicodemus with a smirk.

Third paragraph, first sentence, first comma.

“What took you so long to get there?” asked Remus angrily.

“Being the Headmaster, does not mean you get to shove students out of the way just to make way for yourself. Manners apply to us as well.” said Dumbledore calmly. “It was hard time trying to get through the throng of students.”

Third paragraph, end of first sentence.

“Number? Weren’t all of them there?” asked Bill.

“No, some had papers to grade and they stayed in the Teacher’s Lounge, after dinner to finish.” said McGonagall.

Third paragraph, second sentence, second comma, third word.

“He ripped Filch off me first.” said Harry patting Remus’ arm, who stared angrily at the old man. “You promised you’d settle down.”

“That was before all the dangerous stuff happened.” said Remus in a hoarse whisper.

“I can sit elsewhere.” warned Harry.

Remus looked at Harry quickly, swiped a Calming draught off of Dumbledore’s table and drank it down in one gulp.

“That’s better.” said Harry with a smile.

End of third paragraph.

“Poor kitty.” said Luna sadly.

“You were the only one who felt sorry for her.” said Neville seriously.

“She didn’t ask to be petrified and hung from a torch bracket.” said Luna as serious as she could.
“Why ask them?” said Charlie.

“For several reasons: I noticed everyone was looking over to the three of them every other second, they were soaking wet from the water on the floor. They weren’t at dinner, and they didn’t look quite as shocked as the rest of the students.” said Dumbledore.

“Oh.” said Charlie quietly.

“Who could be eager, in that corridor?” asked Fred.

“Someone who doesn’t have a clue.” said Sirius.

“There had to be a better office to use. A spare room or something!” said Remus anxiously.

“Plenty of empty classrooms and unused rooms, but I didn’t want to risk taking the three students into a room that might hold whatever attacked Mrs. Norris.” said Dumbledore. “And I needed to find out what had happened immediately.”

“Why? Take them up to your office! It’s the safest place in the whole castle for them to be!” cried Remus.

As I just said, I needed somewhere quickly, and I heard no other options voiced from my staff.” said Dumbledore calmly. Professor McGonagall shifted uneasily.

“So who escorted the students back to their dormitories?” asked Mr. Weasley curiously.

“Well, in the case of Severus and myself, other teachers took the students of both houses to the opening of their Common Rooms.” said McGonagall. “Pamona, and Filius took care of their own houses.”

“I was shocked when they didn’t allow the Prefects to do it.” said Percy indignantly.

“You were still children, and if we didn’t know what it was, we weren’t about to let you go on your own.” scolded McGonagall.
“Stupid ass. How can you feel excited when the Chamber of Secrets is opened? The same chamber that’s supposed to hold a monster in it?” said Sirius.

“What?” squeaked Dr. Clark and Remus.

“You don’t know about it?” said Sirius to Remus.

“I don’t remember reading about it.” said Remus quietly. “So there’s a monster in there?”

“Yeah.” said Sirius slowly.

Remus and Dr. Clark gulped loudly.

“Why is Snape going with you?” asked Bill.

“I am the potion master of the school. If there is a potion that is needed to restore Mrs. Norris, than I am the one to brew it.” drawled Snape.

Several people looked about nervously. What was happening now?

Despite the fear flooding from book, a flurry of laughter danced about the Great Hall, until everyone was clutching their sides.

“And the twit always said that his curls and waves were all natural.” gasped Remus holding his stomach.

“Good. Let the people who know what they’re doing to take charge.” said Moody gruffly.
“Tell me you found a cure for her.” said Emmeline Vance earnestly. “Tell me she isn’t dead!”

“She loves cats, she can’t get enough of them.” said Remus.

“We didn’t know what they were going to ask, or if they thought we did it.” said Ron quietly.

“And of course, don’t reassure the children that they have nothing to worry about.” grumbled Bathilda bitterly.

“I don’t think that worrying about three nervous second years was at the top of anyone’s priority list. I’m pretty sure that worrying about the welfare of the entire school is more important.” said Harry sternly.

“He’s got a point.” said Sirius with a smirk.

“Why were you so close?” asked Bill.

“I could smell singed fur.” said Dumbledore. “And her eyes were looking quite odd.”

Zacharias was about to open his mouth, but the looks he received from every member of his house and all the adults silenced him instantly.

“I think we’ll leave the questions on what Dumbledore is doing for another time.” said Professor McGonagall sternly, knowing what Zacharias was going to ask.

“Could either of you two figure out what had happened to her?” asked Luna dreamily.

“No dear, we couldn’t.” said McGonagall gently.

“Sure, she can ask, but not anyone else.” muttered Zacharias.

“You are on very thin ice, Mr. Smith.” said Professor Flitwick.

“I will find something else for you to do, while the readings take place if you are not careful.” said Professor Sprout.
Seventh paragraph, fourth sentence.
Sirius snorted and covered his mouth to hide the fact he was grinning.
“Hey! I had never seen him look like that.” said Harry, sending a small smile over to Snape quickly. “It was frightening.”
As other people laughed loudly, Snape covered his mouth to hide a smirk.
“Why were you smiling though?” asked Remus.
“I never liked Mrs. Norris.” said Snape.

End of seventh paragraph.
“Dear lord, just what we don’t need.” said Remus putting a hand to his face.

Dialogue set, first sentence, first dash.
“He’s not even close enough to see if she’s dead or not!” said Bathilda sharply.

Dialogue set, first sentence, second dash.
“Oh he’s got to be kidding me.” said Lionus rubbing his eyes tiredly.
“What is that?” said Draco.
“It’s a curse that changes your body, constantly, bones grow, lung shrinks, blood constricts, and it doesn’t happen gently either. If that cat doesn’t have an injured eye at the very least, than it wasn’t the Transmogrifian Torture.” said Dr. Nicodemus.
“Injured eye?” said Harry slowly, sending a quick look to Dr. Clark in his eye patch.
“Very good, lad.” said Dr. Nicodemus approvingly. “Your Dr. Clark did have that particular curse placed on him.”
Unexpectedly, Harry leapt over Sirius’ lap and embraced Dr. Clark tightly. Dr. Clark blinked and looked over at the Rangers.
“I don’t remember that happening.” he said weakly, patting the back of the young man, who was silently crying into his chest.
“We removed that memory from you. It was for the best.” said Lionus kindly. “That memory would only have sent you to the mental ward and kept you there.”
“Then I can definitely live without it.” said Dr. Clark hugging Harry back. Sirius looked at the two of them, despite his hard work to get along and be happy for Harry; he couldn’t help but feel slightly jealous from time to time.

“He won’t ever remember it, will he?” asked Dumbledore quickly.

“No, we removed it completely.” said Dr. Nicodemus.

Dialogue set, first sentence, first comma.

“If that was true, we’d have arrested him before he even saw his third one.” said Lionus angrily.

“That particular spell only lasts for as long as the caster is standing there, and no one else can be in the room.” explained Nighstrike to the confused students. “It infects everyone in the room, except the caster.”

End of dialogue set.

“I wasn’t aware that there was a counter-curse for that.” said Nightstrike.

“Isn’t there?” asked Remus questioningly.

“No, the only cure is multiple, powerful potions.” said Dr. Nicodemus. “The constant changing ceases when the caster stops, but the pain remains.”

“What could a wizard want with Dr. Clark?” whispered Tonks to Dumbledore.

“I’m not sure.” said Dumbledore thoughtfully. “But I think we should try and find out.”

“Could it have something to do with how close Harry is to him?” asked Moody quietly, walking over and looking at the man and the teen, still holding onto each other.

“That is entirely possible.” said Dumbledore. “But I wasn’t even aware that Dr. Clark even existed. I suppose that goes to show just how observant I was about Harry’s life.” Dumbledore buried his face in his hands. Tonks patted his back consolingly.

“You’re making it up to him now, that’s all you can do.” said Tonks.

Eighth paragraph, first sentence.

“Much as I dislike him, gotta feel sorry for him just a bit. Not too much, just a little bit.” said Sirius.
The school stayed respectively silent. Even Dumbledore, who was utterly furious with the man and still wished to rip him limb from limb, stayed quiet, but he did drum his fingers on his purple, plush armchair.

Remus smiled at Harry who had crawled back to sit between Sirius and himself and patted his head fondly.

Remus stopped patting Harry’s head and looked down at him with weak smile. “Nice.”

Sirius couldn’t help but laugh.

“There aren’t many times that I listen to him in the ways of discipline.” said Dumbledore grimly.

“Which is a very good thing.” said Mrs. Weasley.

“Alright!” shouted a small first year Hufflepuff. “Dumbledore will fix her up!”

“Or not.” he said sadly.

“I love my rabbits, but I wouldn’t want my pets stuffed.” said Lavender with a pale face.
“Couldn’t someone put a silence charm on him?” said Dr. Clark covering his ears.

“Someone’s been reading magical books!” said Fred in a singsong voice.

“I making myself hoarse asking all the questions I have.” said Dr. Clark with a smile. “So I thought I’d just read up on some things.”

Dialogue set, first sentence, fourth comma.

“More of a reason not to pay attention to him.” said Sirius.

End of dialogue set.

“Amulets don’t do crap, not against the Transmogrifian Torture. Or is he changing the diagnosis?” said Nightstrike.

“He changed his mind.” said Snape with a sneer. “He couldn’t elaborate on that story, not with the Headmaster there, to possibly correct him.”

Tenth paragraph, first sentence.

“Go figure, they would agree with him, no one else would.” said Remus shaking his head.

End of tenth paragraph.

More snorts of laughter sprang up from all over the Great Hall.

“You’re right, he is as good as a witch.” said Ron to Fred.

Eleventh paragraph.

Dialogue line.

“Nice of you to reassure him.” said Professor Sprout.

Twelfth paragraph.

“I’ll count them for you.” said Remus nastily, people waited for him to speak, but he said nothing.
“Aww! After all these years, James and my bad influence finally broke through.” said Sirius laughing loudly.

Dialogue line.

“Freezer burn.” said Fred in a whisper to George.

Dialogue set, first sentence, first comma, second word.

“How?” asked Sirius stunned

“At the time, we didn’t know.” said Dumbledore.

“And you aren’t going to tell us what caused it, are you? I didn’t think so.” said Remus miserably.

Dialouge set, first sentence, first parenthesis set.

“Bullshit.” said Sirius bitterly.

End of dialogue set.

Dialogue line.

“He still thought you did it?” said Remus.

“He still thinks I did it.” said Harry rubbing his back absently.

Remus and Sirius both caught his hand and said, “Don’t try.”

Dialogue line.

“Even more so, if Dumbledore can’t cure her.” said Dennis.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

“Hermione shot out of her chair, she was so scared.” said Ron with a laugh.
“I did not jump!” she said angrily.

“Hermione I had a bruise on my legs from where you landed.” said Harry with a smile.

Dialogue set, third sentence.

“He didn’t write that on the wall!” said Dean.

End of dialogue set.

“Dear lord, the entire school knew what he was!” said Kingsley.

“Except for maybe Harry.” said Seamus with a grin.

Several people laughed good-naturedly, even Harry joined in.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

“Made me think that you all thought I was guilty.” said Harry quietly.

“Only an idiot would think you did it.” said Sirius soothingly.

The fourth years and older Hufflepuff, Ravenclaw and Gryffindor students all shuffled their feet.

Remus looked around noticed their discomforts. But he noticed that Slytherin students were unmoved by it.

End of dialogue set.

“Ron never told you?” asked Bill.

“We never got around to cultural enrichment lessons.” said Ron with a broad smile. “We were working on fundamentals of magic.”

Dialogue line.

“And he didn’t tell anyone! Which means, he don’t really give a damn what you are.” said Sirius.

Dialogue set, first sentence, third comma.
“Oh this won’t be good.” said George.

End of dialogue set.

“Right on.” said George.

Dialogue set, first sentence, second comma.

“Wow, he’s actually on your side.” said Sirius brightly.

Dialogue set, first sentence, third comma.

“Well, that was shot all to hell.” said Sirius shaking his head.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

“Why not just freaking ask them?” said Charlie loudly. “Honestly! Even children can see things too!”

End of dialogue set.

“How about saying ‘Why weren’t you at the feast?’” said Bill.

Thirteenth paragraph.

“Knowing Snape, he won’t check the facts.” said George quietly.

“I did, actually.” said Snape sharply, hearing Georges words. “The Bloody Baron told me.”

Dialogue line.

“Good luck answering that question without incriminating yourself.” said Tonks with a small smile.
“Yeah, I can see that.” said Sirius smileing.

“Half right, we were tired, but we were hungry too.” said Ron.

“He knew Ron’s weakness.” said Hermione with a beaming grin.

“They don’t” said the three young fifth years together.

“If your surname is Weasley and you’re a male, you’re always hungry.” said Mr. Weasley with a broad smile.

“Crap, he heard it.” said Ron with a mock groan.

“Well, to be honest, you weren’t being honest.” said Remus carefully.

Harry held in a laugh.

“Still doesn’t mean he can pick on my cub. Dumbledore even said that a kid couldn’t do that sort of damage.” said Sirius angrily.
“That is true.” Dr. Clark.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

“You jerk!” shouted Sirius.

“Now, I can sort of see where he’s coming from.” said Remus quietly.

“What?” said Sirius and Dr. Clark loudly.

“If a student was withholding information that might be pertinent of to an incident, they should be restricted with their privileges.” said Remus carefully.

“BUT HE DIDN’T DO ANYTHING WRONG!” yelled Sirius.

“I know, and I’m not saying that Harry did anything wrong, but he should have told a teacher.” said Remus. “But then again, Parselmouth would never have been believable, especially coming from Harry.”

End of dialogue set.

“Okay, that’s pushing it too far. Don’t tell me he succeeded in that.” said Remus.

“He didn’t, I would not allow that.” said McGonagall sternly.

“And neither would I.” said Dumbledore twice as stern as she was.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

“Good reasoning.” said Tonks.

“The punishment should fit the crime, and in this case, there was no crime committed by the boy.” said Moody.

End of dialogue set.

“Good thing Minerva is on the ball.” said Moody with a smirk.
“Oh, come on, Dumbledore! You need to use legimency to see if he’s lying to you?” said Sirius clapping a hand to his forehead. “Harry would never lie to you, especially if something bad had just happened.”

Harry squirmed slightly.

“He did last year.” said Fudge loudly.

“Can we get a gag for him too?” asked Remus tiredly.

“It has crossed our minds to use one.” threatened Lionus looking up to the Minister.

“What is legi…man…see?” asked Dr. Clark.

“It’s where you can force your way into a person’s mind and see if they are lying to you or not.” said Sirius.

“It has other uses as well…” said Dumbledore, looking over to Harry briefly.

“That sounds very…invasive.” said Dr. Clark.

“But necessary against a castle full of mischievous students.” said Snape quietly.

“That is not what it was created for.” said McGonagall with a snarl. “And you better not have used it.”

“I swear, he forgets that the second after he hears it.” said McGonagall sharply looking over at Snape.

“They both wanted bloodshed.” said Ernie. When the school looked over to him and stared. Ernie quickly began to stammer.

“I-I-I meant tha-that that they w-wanted t-to see H-H-Harry given de-detention for someth- something he didn’t do!” stuttered Ernie.

“Thank you for clarifying that.” growled Snape.

“No, he wants to see Harry get the snot beaten out of him.” said Ron angrily.

“While he watches.” said Hermione gritting her teeth.
“Really Albus, you call last year, recently?” said Professor Sprout with a smile.

“When you are one hundred and fourteen years old, a year is as good as a week.” said Dumbledore with a broad smile.

Dr. Clark spat out his tea that he had been drinking. Sirius thumped him hard on his back as Dr. Clark began to cough., while Dumbledore happily waved his wand and magicked away the tea that had been sprayed on the floor.

“You are how old?” asked Dr. Clark weakly.

“One hundred and fourteen.” said Dumbledore brightly. “at the time anyway.”

“How old did you think he was?” asked Remus.

“No more than seventy.” said Dr. Clark faintly.

“Hagrid’s sixty-three this year.” said Harry.

Dr. Clark looked over to the half giant so quickly that it seemed that his neck would have most surely would have snapped if Hagrid was any further to the right.

“I was thinking….you were…nevermind.” said Dr. Clark throwing his hands into the air.

“If the Mandrakes are still babies…you have a long time to go.” said Kingsley.

“We did, it was a very long wait, but nonetheless, all the victims were restored.” said Madam Pomfrey, she squeaked and covered her mouth.

“Victims! There were more than one?” said most of the guests in shock.

“Why do that, when you’ve got the youngest Potion Master the school’s ever had.” said Sirius.

Snape and Remus both stared at the man, as well as every Gryffindor in the room.

“What? He is.” said Sirius shrugging.
“He couldn’t even make a first year potion when he was in school.” said Remus rolling his eyes.

End of dialogue set.

“Yeah, in your dreams.” said Sirius with a smirk.

Dialogue line.

Eighteenth paragraph.

“It was very awkward. Lockhart couldn’t come up with a single thing to say, I almost said ‘Thank goodness.’” said Harry with a smile.

Dialogue line.

“Finally, time for them to get to bed, they had one rough day.” said Sirius.

Nineteenth paragraph, first sentence.

“I had never seen a student vault over a chair before.” said Dumbledore with a smile.

Nineteenth paragraph, second sentence.

“Why aren’t you going to the dorms, where it’s safe?” said Bathilda worriedly. “Even Albus wasn’t secure enough to take you to an empty classroom, don’t you be going inside.”

End of nineteenth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

“Yes!” said the teachers.

“Would you really have believed me?” asked Harry seriously.

They all exchanged pained expressions and each shook their head slowly.

“Didn’t think so.” said Harry, Ron and Hermione.
“Sure tell sign you’ve gone off your chump.” said Fred with a snicker.

Ron blushed slightly.

“I knew you didn’t believe me.” said Harry with a sad smile.

“Well, I wasn’t too sure what to make of it.” said Ron.

“It’s alright.” said Harry smiled.

“Liar.” said Harry, Fred and George.

“Can’t argue with that, especially if Ron didn’t know you were a Parselmouth.” said Remus.

“Were you just withholding your intellect again?” asked Hermione.

“I read about the Chamber the year before. But I thought it was just a legend and just skimmed over it. When we got to bed that night, I read it again and this time I paid a little bit more attention.” said Harry sheepishly.

“You had a copy of Hogwarts A History? Why didn’t you let me borrow it!” said Hermione angrily.

“You didn’t ask.” said Harry. “I thought you brought your copy to school.” sad Harry. “And when you said that you didn’t have it, we were already heading to class.”

“I didn’t tell you any story about the Chamber of Secrets.” said Bill looking confused.
“That was me.” said Charlie.

Dialogue line.

“All that knowledge and you don’t know what it is?” said Zacharias.

“Squib is a slang term, it’s not written down in any book. That comes from an old childhood taunt many, many decades ago.” said Dumbledore. “Squibbly, Squibby, can’t do diddly. Can’t work magic, ain’t life tragic.”

“Children under ten aren’t known to have much sense in the ways of poetry.” said Bathilda with a smirk.

“I can’t even say it was catchy.” said Dumbledore, “then again, I might have forgotten a line or two.”

Twenty-first paragraph.

“Ronald.” said Mrs. Weasley warningly.

“Sorry.” said Ron quickly.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

“Nothings all that funny, unless it happens to Filch, or Umbridge.” said Sirius.

Dialogue set, third sentence.

Umbridge strained against her bonds even more fiercely than before, finally the gag slipped away from her mouth and she sneered.

“Squibs come from Muggleborns who steal their wands from Purebloods and use it for themselves.” she said to the entire group that was there.

Everyone stared at her, even Fudge.

“Stuff and nonsense.” growled Dr. Nicodemus, Tempest replaced the gag while the Muggleborns screamed out in indignation and fury over her implications.

“You stupid woman!” shouted McGonagall furiously. “How dare you?”

“That notion died about hundred years ago and, was squashed two minutes after someone brought that idea to light.” said Bathilda angrily.
“Does she _have_ to stay here?” asked a third year Ravenclaw.

“He’s got a point, I’m getting tired of watching her, Sir, and she’s a strain on the eyes. Especially when I could be keeping an eye on someone _else_.” said Nightstrike sending a wink over to Emmeline Vance who looked at Nightstrike and blushed heavily and gave a girlish giggle.

Sirius gave a loud wolf-whistle and laughed loudly. “Finally, I didn’t think anyone would break through that tough exterior!”

Emmeline glared at him, though joined in Nightstrike as he laughed.

“Normally, I would agree, she should be taken to Devil’s Garden, days ago, but if I take her now, I don’t have a viable reason to come back here.” said Tempest looking at Firenze longingly.

“Hmm…we’ll have to come up with something.” said Lionus.

“Can’t she just come back, for like a vacation?” said George.

“I’m not due for my seven year furlough.” said Tempest.

“Seven _years_?” said the students stunned.

“We work tirelessly for seven years and after that comes around, we take the next seven off.” said Lionus. “It’s an old system.”

“But wait, what about, you know, days off during the week?” asked Hermione.

“We do have shifts, when you are in training, and when you aren’t in a squad. But when you are in a squad, you only get time off when there is no cases that need investigating.” said Nightstrike.

_Dialogue set, fourth sentence._

“Have _you_ heard of Kwikspell?” asked Mrs. Weasley.

“I heard of it, but nothing much.” said Ron. “Uncle Martin talked about it once.”

_End of dialogue set._

“Why were you happy about that?” said Dr. Clark.

“Cause I won the Foul Filch pool.” said Ron excitedly. “Hermione and Harry had to be witnesses, I ended up winning about fifty galleons!”

“Who started this pool?” asked McGonagall angrily. “And what do you mean by ‘The Foul Filch?’”

“It’s a challenge to find out why he hates the students and to get proof.” said Bill excitedly.

“It’s been around for a long time actually.” said Charlie with a bright smile. “Even before Bill and my’s time.”
“We had the same pool as well.” said Sirius, Remus nodded.

“But, shouldn’t the amount be much higher if that was the case?” said McGongall confusedly.

“Not when the bet is a knut a person.” said Bill with a smile.

“So that means, that it has been a long time, a very long time.” said Dumbledore beaming.

“Yeah, almost every Gryffindor puts money in the pot.” Fred smiled. “Harry was the only one not to.”

“And when someone finally comes up with the proof of why he hates students, they win!” said George.

“For so long, there was no proof, his word doesn’t count.” said Sirius. “Or I’d of won a long time ago.”

“So did anyone come up with a new pool?” asked Remus with a small smile.

“Yeah, the challenge was to find out how old Dumbledore is.” said Fred. “We update that every year.”

“Who won it?” asked Dumbledore his eyes twinkling madly.

“We’re still trying to find that part out.” said George. “Whoever wins, they get about thirty sickles.” said George.

“I had a hundred even.” said Harry. “But I think I remember someone putting down on hundred and thirteen.”

“That was me!” said Dennis eagerly.

“We’ll get you your money later.” said Fred quietly to Dennis.

“You mean you guys were the chosen Keepers of the Challenge?” said Charlie impressed. “I didn’t get to be that.”

“That’s right!” said George importantly. “We were something you weren’t.”

“And I won the challenge, something no one else in our family did.” said Ron importantly.

Twenty-second paragraph.

Dialogue line.

“Nice choice of words.” said Sirius with a smirk.

“I don’t frame anyone.” said Snape angrily.

“Never stopped you during our school days.” said Sirius. “There wasn’t a week you didn’t try and pin the blame on us for something we didn’t do.”
“There was nothing else to talk about.” said Harry. “Nothing else happened at all that month.”

“That couldn’t have helped his mental state.” said Mrs. Weasley.

“Mum loves that stuff.” said Charlie with a smile.

“What can’t be taken off with that stuff.” said Bill questioningly.

“Blood or paint.” said Harry matter-of-factly.

“Blood?” said Sirius turning pale.

“Poor Filch.” said Luna sorrowfully.

“You’re the only one to feel sorry for him.” growled George.

“While he doesn’t treat others right, it doesn’t mean that he doesn’t deserve some sympathy for losing his most precious treasure.” said Luna dreamily

“Treasure can be whatever you hold dear to you. My brother, Aberforth, treasures a beautiful portrait of our dear sister, Ariana.” said Dumbledore with a small smile. “It is quite a beautiful painting.”

“Your sister?” asked Ron quickly. Hermione nudged him hard in the ribs.

“We lost her many years ago.” said Dumbledore sadly. “I go to down to visit him when I’m feeling particularly, out of normal character, I gaze at her picture and I feel myself reverting back into the brother she always knew and admired.”

People looked at Dumbledore sadly, not even Remus could look at him skeptically.
“Wow, treasure, that’s not treasure huh?” said Dr. Clark.

“My bunnies are my treasure.” said Lavender happily.

“My broom.” said Draco.

“I’d have to say, my treasure would have to be, my family.” said Mr. Weasley with a smile. The Weasleys all beamed.

“What’s yours, Sir?” asked Dennis eagerly looking up to Dumbledore.

“Mr. Creevey!” scolded McGonagall.

“Quite alright, Minerva. I am here to answer any student’s questions. My treasure would have to be my students.” said Dumbledore brightly, but sending a swift, pointed look over to Harry.

“I don’t think I have one, now that I think about it.” said Sirius pretending to think hard. He slowly moved his hand over to Harry’s neck, brought him into a choke hold and pulled him in close. “I don’t think I like anything in particular. What about you, Harry? Notice anything I’m particularly fond of?”

“Nope, not a clue.” gasped Harry, who smiled largely. Remus and Dr. Clark laughed loudly.

End of twenty-third paragraph.

“Did he succeed in giving someone detention for that.” asked Remus with a snarl.

“He tried, and if they were sent to detention for that, they were just sent to their dorms.” said McGonagall. “I had to send a dozen or so to their houses.”

Twenty-fourth paragraph.

“She always tried bringing stray cats into the house.” said Ron with a smile towards his little sister.

“Stray cats don’t do well in houses with a pet rat and an ancient owl.” said Mr. Weasley, giving his daughter a hug, knowing full well why she wasn’t happy, in the book.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

“Didn’t make her feel any better.” said Harry shaking his head.

Dialogue set, fourth sentence.

“That didn’t help either.” said Ginny sadly.
“Hey, I didn’t know!” whispered Ron after Hermione sent him a glowering look.

“Gee thanks.” said Ron sourly.

“Don’t worry about it, Ron. I was just like that, I got better when I turned seventeen.” said Bill. “I was book smart, but when it came to talking to girls, I was lousy. I had no sensitivity towards women.”

Ron brightened slightly.

“Were you nervous too?” asked Sirius quickly.

“When she gets nervous, she reads even more than normal.” said Harry.

“How can you tell? She’s always reading.” said Ernie.

“Not two books at once.” said Harry fond smile.

“She wasn’t talking, or eating, it was getting scary.” said Ron.

“She was getting as small as I was.” said Harry.

“Oh, we’re you asking?” said Hermione stunned.

“Umm…YEAH!” said Harry and Ron.

“We tried everything we could think of that wouldn’t blow Harry’s cover to try and get you to look and talk to us.” said Ron.
“We even tried one of Ron’s ideas.” said Harry with smile.

“What was that?” asked George.

“Fall down and pretend to have a broken leg.” said Harry with a laugh. “Dead depressing when she wouldn’t even look up from the book.”

“Yeah, Harry screamed and cried and everything. Whole group gathered around, trying to make him feel better. Hermione? She wasn’t fazed at all.” said Ron.

Hermione stammered an apology.

End of twenty-fifth paragraph.

“If it was the year before, silence would have been a good thing, now it distresses you guys?” said Tonks with a smirk.

“Before, we weren’t used to her, now it’s a bit much to swallow.” said Ron.

Twenty-sixth paragraph, first sentence, first comma.

“Go figure, he couldn’t get you off the team, so he has to do what he can.” said Sirius with a low growl.

Twenty-sixth paragraph, end of first sentence.

“Oh come on! That is supposed to be a designated detention chore!” said Sirius angrily. “You can’t do all the tubeworms that a class uses in one free period.”

“He has a point, Severus.” said Professor Flitwick, “You shouldn’t have had him do that on his lunch period.”

“He was messing around.” said Professor Snape defensively.

“What did you do?” said Remus sternly.

“Someone made a jar of tubeworms explode, and it wasn’t me.” said Harry.

“I told you I accidentally did it!” squeaked Neville to Snape.

The staff looked at Neville and turned and stared at Snape slowly.

“Stupid, petty…” mumbled McGonagall. Snape looked uncomfortable he fingered the locket in his pocket.
“Gah!” said Fred grabbing his hair.

“You don’t even have a good enough excuse to go!” said George.

“Homework is a good excuse!” said Hermione shortly

“But it’s not like they’re looking for Nicolas Flamel or something!” said Fred.

“Fine, be that way.” said Tonks turning her nose up. “Why did you just up and run like that?”

Justin looked down and scratched the back of his head.

“What is the point of having a certain length for essay questions, people can write as big as they can get away with?” said Emmeline Vance, she was still trying not to meet Nightstrike’s eyes for fear of blushing nonstop.

“Despite how big people write Emmeline, it is still the challenge of making sure you stay on topic and to explain what you learned.” said Dumbledore brightly.

“It really must’ve sucked to be Harry.” said Ron with a smile.

“What do you mean?” asked Zacharias. “It sucked for everybody, not just him.”

“Yeah, but Harry went through several drafts. He went all out on the first one, and then dumbed down the second one, had me read it, changed it again; read it again, then dragged out the sentences.”

“So how many feet did you write?” asked Anthony with shock in his voice.

“About twelve.” said Harry. “It’s hard to get it right so Ron could understand it.”

The teachers stared at Harry. “Mr. Potter, the next assignment you have, write to the fullest capacity you have.” said Professor McGonagall.

“Yes ma’am.” said Harry shrinking slightly.
“It will be good practice for the W.A.N.D.S test.” said Dumbledore with a smile.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

“Wow, how did you get self-rolling parchment? That’s quality stuff.” said George jealously.

“I borrowed some from Harry.” said Ron.

“If you read Harry’s so many times, how the hell can you be short?” said Fred.

“I already covered what he wrote. I didn’t copy!” said Ron quickly looking over to the teachers. “Just wrote in my own words the common sense stuff he wrote down. But I was wishing I took a better look at his second revision.”

“If it’s for Binns. just turn in what you have, he’s not going to notice any difference.” said Sirius nonchalantly.

End of dialogue set.

“How else am I going to write down all I want to.” said Hermione.

“Dumb it down.” said Harry and Ron together.

Dialogue line.

“Harry wanted it exactly two feet and eleven and a half inches.” said Ron rolling his eyes.

“So sue me for being a perfectionist with my less than perfect scoring homework.” said Harry with a smirk

Dialogue line.

“That would be an impressive feat.” said Dumbledore with a smile.

Twenty-eighth paragraph.

Dialogue set, first sentence, fourth word.

“Why did you care?” asked Ron.

“I hate seeing people run away from me. It’s a mite depressing.” said Harry.
“Those two things shouldn’t be put together. You calling someone an idiot and trying to scrape a passing grade.” said Seamus with a laugh.

“‘Rubbish’ is an understatement.” said Sirius.

“Um, normal girls, when they’re pissed, they don’t wanna talk. Not unless you did something wrong.” said Charlie.

“Don’t we know it, but Hermione isn’t all that normal.” said Harry with a smile. “When we do something wrong, she lets us know all about it.”

“And you didn’t bother to tell me you had a copy!” said Hermione pouting.

“Like I said before, you didn’t ask.” said Harry. “If you had asked, you could have had it. And I thought you were going to buy another copy.”

“Why buy a second copy of a book I already have?” said Hermione.

“I have several copies of different books.” said Harry.

“As do I.” said Dumbledore.

“Must have been the first time she ever had to put a waiting list on any book.” said Tonks with a laugh.

“Just goes to show how often you visited the library.” said Charlie with smirk. “She’s always got a book list on something or other.”
“Stuff it.” said Tonks irritably.

End of dialogue set.

“You were better off just not packing those damn books.” said Remus.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

“I’m amazed she didn’t catch on then. I just about slapped my forehead when you answered too fast.” said Ron with a smile.

Dialogue line.

“That is true, Hogwarts, A History is the only book that holds the entire legend. Other books merely mention it in passing.” said Dumbledore thoughtfully.

Dialogue line.

“That Mr. Weasley, would be considered cheating.” said Professor McGonagall angrily.

“I wasn’t going to cheat, I just wanted to look and see if I missed something.” said Ron quickly.

“You were in the library, there are tons of books.” said Professor Sprout. Ron stammered.

Dialogue line.

“Just like any normal boy, saves it for the last minute.” said Sirius with a bright smile. He looked over to Harry. “Doing it ahead of the deadline’s good too!” he added rapidly, not wishing to hurt is feelings.

“It’s alright.” said Harry. “I know I’m far from normal.”

Dialogue line.

“She won’t do it. Just leave it with the two inches not on.” said Neville with a smile.
“Yeah, Binns won’t notice.” said Seamus.

Thirtieth paragraph.

“Nothing new.” said Harry and the rest of the Gryffindor house, Ron and Hermione blushed heavily.

Thirty-first paragraph, first sentence.

Thirty-first paragraph, second sentence.

“Yeah, he’s about as exciting as watching a puddle of the floor dry up.” said Remus.

Thirty-first paragraph, third sentence.

“I think he has noticed, it’s either that he cannot remember, or that he simply does not care.” said Dumbledore with a small smile.

Thirty-first paragraph, fourth sentence, first semi-colon.

“That is close to what had actually happened.” said Dumbledore. “Only it wasn’t from his armchair, it was from his bed in his office. He passed away during the night. Imagine our shock when he came down to breakfast like that.”

End of thirty-first paragraph.

“A true creature of habit.” said Professor Sprout fondly.

Thirty-second paragraph, second sentence, first comma.

“Same damn routine.” said Sirius with a laugh.
“A class cannot be taught like that, it is no wonder we haven’t had an N.E.W.T.S. History of Magic Class, let alone an O.W.L.S. class.” said Professor McGonagall.

“You are right, of course, it is time for a change.” said Dumbledore nodding towards his Deputy and looking with a smile towards Remus.

“Really, she’s never done that?” said Bill amusedly.

“Not in that class.” said Ron and Harry together.

“If I was him, I would be amazed that someone was interested enough to wake up and ask a question.” said Bill.

“There wasn’t a person in there, except for Hermione, that wasn’t drooling on their hands.” said Harry with a laugh.

“We know that, just tell us the stupid legend.” said Fred rolling his eyes.
“Worse memory, ever.” said George shaking his head.

Dialogue line.

“She’s got him there.” Professor Sprout whispered to Madam Hooch.

Thirty-seventh paragraph.

“That is true, I don’t know of anyone interrupting his monologue.” said Sirius.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

“Probably hasn’t.” muttered George.

End of dialogue set.

“Which makes it more appealing to kids.” said Lionus with a smirk.

Thirty-eighth paragraph.

“The look on his face was priceless.” said Ron laughing.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set.

Thirty-ninth paragraph.

“He was hoping we were bored.” said Dean.

“I hope he doesn’t stop!” said Dr. Clark, leaning forward eagerly. He was excited to learn more, he was the polar opposite of Mr. Weasley, whereas Mr. Weasley was excited over Muggle things and history. Dr. Clark was overeager towards everything magical.
“What was the argument about?” asked Dr. Clark looking over to Dumbledore quickly. “Was it about student selection?”

“It was about Godric wooing and courting a woman with non-magical parents.” said Dumbledore. “Some people say that Slytherin didn’t think the woman was good enough for Gryffindor.”

“Other people say that Slytherin wanted to marry the Muggleborn woman too.” said Harry flipping through his black notebook.

“THAT’S A LIE!” shrieked Pansy.

“Actually, it is becoming more and more plausible, to Magical Historians, that Salazar Slytherin did have affections towards the Muggleborn woman.” said Dumbledore with a kind smile.

Pansy paled and growled towards the venerable old man.

Fortieth paragraph.

Dialogue set.

“Why would he build a chamber and not tell anyone about it?” asked Dr. Clark.

“You’re like a kid in a museum, asking all sorts of questions and not waiting for the guide to tell you.” said Harry with a smile.

“A kid, huh?” said Dr. Clark with a sneer. “Get over here!” He took Harry by the arm and pulled him over to himself. He reached down behind Harry’s knee and tickled the bend behind Harry’s knees. “You gonna take it back?”

“YES! YES! I’M SORRY! PLEASE!” Harry laughed and screamed all at the same time.

Dialogue set, second sentence, first comma.

“I’m taking a hint from the name that there is something inside that Chamber.” said Dr. Clark with a worried smile, he was still holding onto Harry.

“Yeah, there is something down there.” said Harry quietly. Dr. Clark gave a small whimper.

Dialogue set, second sentence, second comma.

Sirius and Remus coughed out the air they sucked in and looked over to Harry worriedly.

“You better not have gone after it.” said Remus anxiously.

Ginny fidgeted, and Harry bit his lip slightly.

“That doesn’t reassure me one bit I’ll have you know.” said Sirius groaning.
“Wait a minute! If he had a crush on a Muggleborn, why would he create something like that!” yelled a first year Slytherin.

“You don’t need to shout, dear, we can hear you.” said Professor Sprout over to the young girl.

“Salazar created the Chamber yes, but it was his son who placed the monster in there and set up the defenses. The Chamber was originally just supposed to be a place where he could meditate. However, his son decided to, how do you youngsters say? Amp up his father’s story.” said Dumbledore.

“Why would he do that?” asked Draco.

“Who knows, perhaps he wanted his father to have a horror story attached to him.” said Hermione thoughtfully.

“Forty-first paragraph.

“He was annoyed that students were actually interested in what he had to say? That’s a little backwards.” said Dr. Clark with a smirk.

“Dialogue set, third sentence.

“And yet it was found by three young, meager learned students.” said Ron in a giggly whisper.

“End of dialogue set.

“Forty-second paragraph.

“She never gives up.” said Remus with a smile. “Not till she learns everything she can.”

“Dialogue line.

“Dialogue line.

“So when they are talking about heir of Slytherin…they’re talking about the heir of Salazar’s son?” said a third year Ravenclaw.

“It is. Salazar did have some grudges against Muggleborns, but I think once he met Godric’s wife to be, Elinia, he lost his prejudices and left broken-hearted.”

“Dialogue line.
“So if he decided to like Muggleborns, why was his son so anti-Muggle?” asked Fred.

Dumbledore shook his head. “He didn’t approve of his father leaving his mother pregnant and going to parts unknown.” said Dumbledore. “Though Salazar did leave the mother of his child with all of his possessions and his money as he left on a soul-searching quest.”

“Wow, poor psychotic guy.” said George shaking his head.

Forty-third paragraph.

Dialogue line.

“Tell that to the person who wrote the message on the wall.” said Ernie.

Ginny whimpered quietly.

Dialogue line.

“Not really.” said Dumbledore with a smile. “Someone with a particular talent could find it.”

Dialogue set, first sentence, second comma.

“Not even close.” said Seamus with a laugh.

End of dialogue set.

Dialogue line.

Harry flinched slightly.

Remus saw this, but was confused as to the reason why.

Dialogue line.

“So you couldn’t find it?” asked Dr. Clark.

“No, I was unable to find it. However, it was found in the end.” said Dumbledore.

Dialogue line.
“I’ve never pushed him so far to have him ticked.” said Sirius.

“That’s because you always fell asleep five minutes into the class.” said Remus snidely.

Dialogue set, fourth sentence.

“So you looked for something only based on legend, Sir?” asked Anthony in shock.

“I have investigated many different things that were merely mentioned in tales and legends.” said Dumbledore with a bright smile. “Four out of ten tales were proven to be true and vast treasures and magical knowledge were gained. So it is best to not disregard a chance to learn something new.”

End of dialogue set.

Forty-fourth paragraph.

“Every head had just fallen and hit the desks.” said Hermione with a smirk. “Ron had a slight dent in his head from falling so hard.”

Dialogue set, first sentence.

“Salazar wasn’t crazy, his son was though.” said Harry with a smile.

End of dialogue set.

“To be honest so would I.” said Fred and George together.

“My mother wasn’t happy when I told her something close to what Ron said.” said Sirius.

Forty-fifth paragraph, first sentence, first comma.

“We wouldn’t have taken you anyway Granger.” sneered Pansy. “It would be a disgrace to our house to have a filthy Muggleborn sleeping there.”

As people shouted and defended Hermione, Harry slipped his foot underneath the bowl. He nudged his foot towards the knapsack tucked away and pulled it slowly forward.

The moment that a third year sat down and the path was clear from Harry to Pansy, he kicked the bag into the air, reached into the open knapsack and pulled out a small balloon. He threw it at Pansy and before she could raise her wand to stop it, it exploded a centimeter away from her nose.
When the smoke cleared, her friends and fellow housemates noticed that Pansy’s pink face, was now covered in black slime.

“What did you DO, Potter!” screeched Pansy.

“It’s sort of obvious what I did, but what will be more amusing, is you trying to get that stuff off.” said Harry with a wicked grin and leaning back in the bowl satisfied.

Pansy pulled and tugged at the slime coating her face but all it did was snap back onto her skin and caused her to let out a shriek.

“Get this off me!” screamed Pansy and glaring as best she could over to Harry, but had a hard time, due to the slime dangling from her eyelashes.

“There is nothing I can do about taking that stuff off, you’re stuck like that. Least for the next fifty-seven hours.” said Harry grinning happily. “Though it will get worse before it gets better.”

“How? Tell me!” demanded Pansy.

“And ruin the surprise? That wouldn’t be nearly as fun.” sneered Harry.

“PROFESSOR!” shrieked Pansy.

“I didn’t see a thing, best go to the bathroom, Miss Parkinson, you have something on your face.” said Snape coldly. Pansy looked between Harry and Snape than ran as fast as she could out of the room.

“Shall we continue?” drawled Snape. Sirius stared at Snape with shock and surprise.

“Did he just go along with what you did to Pansy.” said Sirius in disbelief.

“He did.” said Harry with a smile towards the Potions teacher, who ignored him completely.

End of forty-fifth paragraph.

“Were you sick, Mr. Potter?” asked Madam Pomfrey quickly.

“Sort of.” said Harry stuffing the knapsack back under the bowl.

Forty-sixth paragraph.

Forty-seventh paragraph.

“Harry, you really shouldn’t have been worrying about that. It’s pretty often that some students fit into just one house.” said Dumbledore kindly. “I was placed in Gryffindor and yet I could have been easily placed into three separate houses.”

“No, Mr. McClaggan. Ravenclaw, Gryffindor and Slytherin.” said Dumbledore with a smile.
No one moved from shock.

“You have got to be kidding me.” said Sirius in a whisper, his eyes wide.

“It is true, I am what is considered a Pureblood and in my younger days, I wouldn’t be considered an approachable person. I was more into my learning and improving my skills and connections and spreading my name to the far corners of the world. I, in what seems to be in every sense, the complete opposite of you, dear boy.” said Dumbledore with a fond smile over to Harry.

“What?” asked Harry stunned.

“You relish your friends and the time you spend with them. I was only interested in accelerating my learning and forsaking all those around me. I would maintain a decent relationship with my fellow students. But no more than what would have been deemed mildly polite.

“But since then, I have developed friendships with my old schoolmates, to make up for lost time.” said Dumbledore, his warm smile turning to a sorrowful one.

Hermione stared at Dumbledore, but shook her head and bravely went on with the reading.

Forty-eighth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

“You mean to tell me that people were starting to say that Harry was the heir?” said Remus his mouth agape.

“His family tree isn’t a direct line from Slytherin! At the most he’s like a one hundred and twenty-fifth cousin, four times removed!” said Sirius irritably.

“Actually, I’m a little closer related to him than that.” said Harry.

“Hey, I’m trying to defend you here.” said Sirius clapping a hand to Harry’s mouth.

Forty-ninth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

“Were you going to go and defend Harry’s honor?” asked Dr. Clark with a smile.

“I still want to smack who ever started that rumor.” said Hermione angrily.

“What can a girl do?” sneered Zacharias.

“She can hit real hard.” said Draco rubbing his cheek.
Remus gave Harry a reassuring hug. “Anyone with some sense knows you aren’t the heir.”

“That’s true. Just look at what happened this year. All the lives you saved, and they believe the person who didn’t even witness what had happened.” said Hermione bitterly.

“Did you and Harry have any ideas at that time?” asked Hermione sternly.

“Nope.” said Harry and Ron. “Not a clue. And if we had any idea, we would have told you.”

“You were border lining, freaking out.” said Ron.

“You kids don’t need to be there. You were traumatized enough for one year.” said Emmeline.

“Get out of there. You don’t really want to be seen in there.” said Bill anxiously.

“On your hands and knees?” said Tonks in shock.
“James taught him to examine every little piece of information.” said Dr. Clark.

“Never leave a clue unfound.” said Harry with a fond smile.

Dialogue line.

“You can find scorch marks on a wall? And a brick wall to boot?” said Kingsley highly impressed.

Both Lionus and Moody grinned excitedly.

Dialogue line.

Fifty-third paragraph.

Ron twitched nervously.

“It’s okay.” said Hermione soothingly to Ron.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Fifty-fourth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Fred started to smile, but was soundly slapped on the back of his head. He looked up and saw both his brother Charlie and his mother.

“You owe him a large apology.” said Mrs. Weasley.

“Yes, Mum. Sorry Ron.” said Fred.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Fifty-fifth paragraph.

“That’s not funny Miss Granger.” said McGonagall sternly.

“I’m sorry, Ron.” said Hermione quietly.
“And he had to stay home instead of going to London that day.” said Mr. Weasley, sending a rare scowl to his third youngest son.

Dr. Clark shivered, “You’re making me arachnophobic.”

Ron glared at Hermione, who stared intently at the floor.

“You don’t miss a thing don’t you?” said Nightstrike with a smile.

“How could I miss it? I ruined my favorite pair of hand knitted socks.” said Harry miserably. “Now they can only fit a small baby doll.”

“Good eyes, you remember that, despite the shocking scene that laid before you.” said Moody nodding approvingly.

Ron smiled brightly.

“What’s the matter?” asked Remus.

“Aw! Isn’t that cute?” cooed Sirius. Remus cuffed him sharply.
“That would keep me out of there.” said Sirius.

“Sure it would.” said Remus rolling his eyes.

“Mrs. Granger!” said Professor Sprout in shock.

Hermione blushed and shuffled her feet.

“So why doesn’t anyone clean that bathroom?” asked Remus.

“Every time we try, the bathroom is destroyed within two hours.” said Dumbledore. “Not even protective charms can prevent the damage.

“Thank god.” said Harry and Ron.

“I beg your pardon.” said Hermione indignantly.

“Us? As girls? We like our attempt at a simple life, thank you.” said Harry.

“Can you imagine going through that once a month thing?” whispered Ron smiling wickedly.

“I’m afraid I’d have to shoot you.” said Harry with faked seriousness.

“No one in their right mind would believe you.” said Remus shaking his head.
Sixty-second paragraph.

“And that’s just a part of the reason.” said Sirius with a laugh.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

“I wasn’t lying technically, I mouthed it, I didn’t whisper it.” said Harry with a small smile.

Dialogue line.

“No one ever said she didn’t have feelings.” said Ginny.

“She tends to hear things that go unsaid.” said Luna softly.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

“She really likes drama, doesn’t she?” said Fred quietly.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

“Wow, Harry, you must be the first person to get a straight answer out of her.” said Luna with a dreamlike smile. “She must really like you.”

Ron snorted.

End of dialogue set

Dialogue line.

“That’s not helpful.” said a majority of the school.
“Hit the deck.” said Sirius holding onto Harry with a small smile.

Sixty-third paragraph.

“She splashed you with toilet water? That’s nasty.” said Sirius pushing Harry away slightly.

“Beats drinking out of it.” said Harry nastily.

“Ooh! Burn!” said Fred and George excitedly.

“I’m going to get you for that!” said Sirius laughingly.

Sixty-fourth paragraph.

Sixty-fifth paragraph.

“What happened now?” said Remus worriedly.

Dialogue line.

Sixty-sixth paragraph.

“What worse than I thought.” said Sirius with a smile.

Dialogue line.

“Brother dear, I’ve got a secret to tell you.” said Charlie in a high pitched voice.

Fred and George snorted loudly. “When did you get to be so funny?”

“I’ve always been funny, I just don’t show it.” said Charlie with a mischievous smile.

Dialogue line.

Sixty-seventh paragraph.

Percy looked over to his mother the back of his neck turned a faint pink.
“You looked like a giant red haired bird.” said Harry with a smirk.

“Nice to know that you believe us.” said Ron bitterly.

“Did he?” asked Bill.

“He overheard me talking to Fred and George and tried to be the voice of reason.” said Ginny.

“Excited? You picked the word excited?” said Ginny angrily. “I was freaking and so was all the other Gryffindor first years and you describe it as excited?”

“Well…I…” stuttered Percy, but fell silent.

Mrs. Weasley looked between her two children, who stared at each other.

“Boys…knock it off.” said Mr. Weasley sternly. Both boys looked down and away.

“That hurts.” said Fred.

“No fair, dragging her into this, least not this early in the fight.” said George.

Both young men smirked.
Percy looked down hurtfully.

“You brought it on yourself.” said Charlie shortly.

“Bad day for Ron.” said George.

“You have no idea, I was almost done with it.” said Ron.

Several students laughed loudly.

“Wow, Harry, you’re funnier than hell.” said Fred.

“It scared me.” said Harry with a fond smile.

“I thought she lost her mind.” said Ron.

“We know where he’s going with it.” said George with a nod to his brother.
“Who else? At the time anyway.” said Lee, looking over at the paled face of Draco.

Dialogue line
Draco looked over to Ron, with the beginnings of a scowl on his face.

Dialogue line
“You don’t believe he could be it?” said Moody thoughtfully.
“His doesn’t have the brains to be behind it.” said Hermione, not looking at Draco.

Dialogue line
“We aren’t his descendants.” said Draco seriously. “But I can’t argue with the part about my father.” he finished silently.

Professor Snape heard his whispers and patted Draco on the back.

Dialogue line
“You’re grasping at straws.” said Lionus with a smile.

Dialogue line
Dialogue line
Dialogue line
“You didn’t buy it did you?” said Sirius with a smirk.
“I was out of options, I was willing to eliminate people.” said Harry quietly.

Dialogue set.
“Sounds like she’s already got a plan.” said Remus thoughtfully.
“Funny, you should have mentioned a month.” said Hermione with a smirk.

“What are you driving at?” asked Dr. Clark.

“What?” asked Draco dumbfounded.

“Good luck with that.” said Neville with a smile.

“Oh, really?” asked Hermione with a smug look.

“Impossible for two twelve year olds, with only two years of magical learning under their belts.” said Harry.

The adults gasped and Snape stared fixedly at Hermione, Ron and Harry.

“Where do you kids think you are going to get it?” asked Remus.

“We were going to make it!” said Hermione happily.

“I wouldn’t be happy if I were you.” growled Snape. Hermione shrunk back and looked down.

“You both knew about it, after all didn’t you!” said Hermione angrily.

“Well…” said Ron tenderly.

“I would hope that listening to me in Potions class would be the most important thing.” said Snape with an irritated voice.
Several Gryffindors gagged horribly.

“You kids really plan on taking Polyjuice and sneaking into the Slytherin common room?” said Tonks impressed.

“That would be a nightmare.” said Sirius shuddering.

“It is very hard. You must have a teacher’s permission to get that particular book out of the Restricted Section.” said Dumbledore.

“Correct.” said Dumbledore with a smile.

“Another sage thought. Very good Mr. Weasley.” said Dumbledore happily.

“Not likely.” said McGonagall tapping her foot.
End of chapter.

“Go to Lockhart.” said Sirius and Remus together.
As they ate lunch, Professor Snape continued to scowl at the three fifth years. Hermione and Ron cringed slightly under his gaze, but Harry calmly sipped his tea and ate large spoonfuls of treacle tart.

“Severus, if the wind changes, your face is going to stay that way.” said Dumbledore with a smile as he bit into a corned-beef sandwich.

“You don’t seem to understand, Headmaster, that in order to make that potion…” said Snape angrily.

“To make that potion, you need ingredients that can only be found in your private storeroom, and not even an apothecary would stock them normally.” said Dumbledore with a smile. “Yes, I am well aware of it.”

“How can you smile? They could seriously hurt themselves with that potion!” asked Mrs. Weasley worriedly.

“I know that nothing truly awful happens. I would have been notified, despite Madam Pomfrey’s ‘No questions’ policy. In the case of potion experiments, and disastrous results, she tells me, so I may acquire the necessary potions that aren’t readily available to her.” said Dumbledore with a slight smile, taking a quick look over to Hermione.

“Why not ask Professor Snape to make the potions?” asked Draco.

“He’s detention happy.” said all the other teachers together in unison.

“Who’d like to read it now?” asked Professor McGonagall levitating the book and quickly changing the subject.

“I will.” said Bill with a smile. He took the book and read the title to himself. His face paled, “What…?”

Tenth Chapter

“The what? How can a Bludger go rouge?” said Sirius in a stunned whisper. “They’re protected by massive charms, especially school ones.”

“He should know, he tried getting a few to club the Slytherin team when James was out sick.” said Remus.
“I would rather forget that happened.” said Remus covering his eyes.

“Thank bloody goodness.” said Dr. Clark shaking his head.

“I think the live creatures were better.” said Remus.

“I agree.” muttered Harry.

“Say what?” said Remus stunned.

“That was an understatement.” said Dean. “The first time he called you up to screech like a banshee, I thought you were going to throw him through the window.”

“It crossed my mind.” said Harry bitterly.

“So he brought you to the front of the class to screech?” asked Sirius in disbelief.

“I pretended to be sick and left the room.” said Harry. “I couldn’t get out of the other times, not without trying at least.”

“That’s my boy.” said Sirius throwing an arm around Harry’s shoulders.

“Normally, I don’t like students skivvying off classes, but in this case: Dodge all the lessons you can.” said Remus sternly.

Sirius stared in amazement at his old friend. “Who are you and what did you to the responsible one of the group?”

“What did he make you do?” asked Professor McGonagall.

“Babble like an idiot and then later fall down dead in his arms.” said Harry.
“WHAT?” said Sirius and Remus in alarm.

“What were you thinking?” shouted Dr. Clark.

“It’s in his storybook,” said Harry with a grim look. “He ‘cured’ the villager but the young man died, from another illness.”

“No!” said Remus quickly holding his hands up in defense. The balls of light had erupted from the book. “I don’t want to see it!”

Seconds later, they found themselves in the Defense Against the Dark Arts classroom. Lockart was crouching about the room and while doing so, was telling the students what he was doing and what he had experienced in the past. They looked over to the teacher’s desk and saw Harry leaning against it, with a bored look on his face.

“And once I found the Calypso leaf, I turned to go back to the village, to cure that poor unfortunate young man. But when I turned, I came face to face with a gigantic troll!” said Lockhart dramatically.

The girls, in the desks were hanging onto his every word, as for most of the boys, and the Watchers, they groaned quietly and shook their heads slightly.

“It took me a whole twenty minutes to defeat that monstrosity. I continued on running towards the village. I managed to make it to the village, when I thought I had just made it. The clock… struck…” said Lockhart pausing for dramatic flair.

“What’s so important about a clock?” said Sirius.

“In the book, he had exactly one hour to find the Calypso leaf. Once the clock struck, the young man died.” said Hermione.

“Alright Harry now come staggering out of your house.” said Lockhart, a smile on his face.

The younger Harry slightly rolled his eyes, and began to stagger slightly to the left. “No, towards me.” said Lockhart encouragingly. Begrudgingly, Harry staggered towards the man. “Then, he fell down to the ground, but I caught him before he could hit.” said Lockhart falling down on one knee. “Come on Harry, you won’t hit the ground I’ll catch you.”

“You won’t be living much longer if I catch you.” mumbled Remus darkly.

“Trust me.” said Lockhart.

“Don’t trust him!” said Remus.

Harry fell to his knees and laid rigid in Lockhart’s arms. “Relax Harry, he wasn’t that stiff. He gave a great shuddering breath (little more than that, there you go.) and died.” said Lockhart, still holding Harry. “And that is what I consider my greatest failure, and the most tragic loss of life.”

Younger Harry stood up quickly and sat in his chair. The balls of light left their bodies and they found themselves in the Great Hall once again.

“I’m going to kill him, seven different ways if I can.” muttered Remus under his breath as he sat back down in the bowl.
“What did he do to you this time?” asked Remus tapping his fingers irritably.
“I had to act all stuffed up. Then try and be upset when he left.” said Harry with a smirk.
“Yeah, Harry couldn’t grasp the sad part. He cheered when Lockhart turned and left the room.”
“Had to pretend that I misheard him, when he came back in and told me off.” said Harry the smirk on his face deepening.

“I take it you didn’t have to die for this one either?” asked Kingsley, getting as irritable as the men in the bowl.
“No, but he did pick me up and throw me.” said Harry.
“HE WHAT?” shouted the adults.
“First time he tried, Harry kicked him in the groin. Never heard a guy scream that loud before.” said Ron with a laugh. “Class was canceled till the next day. Harry had to say that it was instinct and he was sorry.”
“I was, sorry that I didn’t do it sooner.” said Harry, his smirk turning into a devilish grin.
“Don’t smile like that, you’re scaring me.” said Sirius with a chuckle.

“Hauled?” asked Tonks.
“Yeah, he took me by the wrist and told me he wanted to reenact another part.” said Harry.
“Why didn’t you tell him to buzz off?” asked Nightstrike.
“I needed to keep him in a good mood.” said Harry.

“And what was supposed to be wrong with this werewolf?” asked Remus, still tapping his fingers, but strangely had a slight smile on his face.
“Harry had to pretend to go nuts.” said Ron with a smile. “Worst decision Lockhart made in class.”
“What makes you say that?” asked Sirius.

“He overturned Lockhart’s desk with a kick and slammed a chair into the window. It was hilarious.”

“It backfired, Lockhart loved it.” said Hermione. “He loved the ‘raw energy’.”

“Raw energy? I could have gone without hearing that.” said Dr. Clark turning pale.

“I’ll kill him. I swear, I’ll kill him.” muttered Remus.

End of second paragraph.

“Refuse anyway, don’t get near him!” said Remus.

“Nice to know Harry’s a user.” said Lee.

Harry paled, his mouth agape.

“I was kidding.” said Lee quickly.

Dialogue set, first sentence, first dash.

“Care to repeat that performance?” asked Nightstrike.

Harry looked at Remus quickly, who smiled and nodded. He rolled his eyes and sighed, but he howled loudly, several people laughed including, Nightstrike and Remus.

“He’s got promise!” said Nightstrike laughing hard. “He’d make a good werewolf.”

Dialogue set, first sentence, third dash.

The laughter died away instantly.

“He didn’t!” shouted McGonagall.

“Yeah, Harry didn’t expect him to actually jump him like that. It sort of took him by surprise.” said Lavender.

“It was sort of scary, We thought that Professor Lockhart killed him.” said Hermione.

“Till he groaned and told Lockhart to get off, Lockhart didn’t hear him telling him to get off.” said Ron angrily. “Harry walked sort of stiff afterwards.”

“Did he hurt you?” asked Dumbledore. “Did you go to Madam Pomfrey?”

“No he did some weird thing with his back.” said Hermione. “He took a hold of a pillar and twisted his torso. It was really gross hearing his back crack like that.”
“Sorry, but I told you to walk ahead and talk loudly.” said Harry.

Dialogue set, first sentence, sixth dash.

“How did he hold you down?” asked Dr. Clark angrily.

“His hand was on Harry’s throat.” said Hermione with a squeak.

“I’m going to kill him before any of you have a chance.” said Dumbledore viciously.

“Can we at least watch?” asked Sirius.

Dialogue set, first sentence, sixth dash, first comma.

“Where was that hand?” asked Remus quickly.

“Getting his wand.” said Harry.

“By wand…”

“Don’t go there.” said Harry to Remus sternly. “He didn’t touch me.”

“Oh he touched you, just not the way that I’m dreading.” said Remus.

Dialogue set, first sentence, seventh dash.

“Oh, I’ll put my wand to his throat, if he wants to do that to a student.” said McGonagall. angrily.

Fred and George leaned away. “I forgot how scary she can be.” said Fred.

Dialogue set, first sentence, seventh dash, seventh word.

“His full strength isn’t enough to even snap a twig.” said Sirius.

Dialogue set, first sentence, eighth dash.

“The what?” asked Kingsley.

“Is there such a thing?” asked Tonks.

“This is starting to concern me.” said Lionus thoughtfully.
“Why?” asked a third year Slytherin.

“So far he’s mentioned the Transmogrifian Torture and now this, another spell that normal people shouldn’t know about. I might have little chat with this Lockhart, soon.” said Lionus.

“Good luck with that.” muttered Harry.

Dialogue set, first sentence, ninth dash.

“It didn’t sound like it was piteous, more like ‘fine I’ll do it just get off me’ moan.” said Ron with a laugh.

“Now that we’ve heard you moan piteously.” said Hermione tearfully. “I don’t want to hear you do it again.”

Dialogue set, first sentence, eleventh dash.

“Well isn’t he picky.” said George.

Dialogue set, end of first sentence.

“That is not is not all that the spell does.” said Nightstrike darkly. “It doesn’t just turn the person back into human, it kills them when the next full moon come.”

Remus paled and Sirius gasped.

“At least it’s hard to do right?” said Ron with a nervous laugh.

“It is, even the most powerful wizards are sometimes incapable of performing it.” said Tempest.

“We centaurs are more adept into using it than you are.” said Firenze.

“We use it as a last resort if werewolves come too close to our villages.” said Tempest. “I have, thankfully, never had to use it.”

“I’ve used it twice.” said Frienze quietly. “There was a pair of them after a few of our foals. I had no choice.”

Tempest sent him a small smile.

End of dialogue set.

“Ever notice that the books never say the name of the village.” said Harry with a smirk, though leaning heavily against Remus, in response to what the Rangers had said. Remus noticing Harry’s weight on his arm, brought him into a tight one armed hug.

Third paragraph.

Dialogue line.

“A poem? For Defense Against the Dark Arts class?” said Remus in disbelief.

“Who won that?” said Mrs. Weasley.

“Believe it or not, Harry won it.” said Hermione with a smile.

“You…did…what?” said the adults in the Great Hall.

“Tell me she is lying.” said Sirius begging Harry.

“Sorry.” said Harry embarrassed.

“Tell me you didn’t praise him.” said Remus leaning away from Harry.

“He didn’t even mention him once. It wasn’t even a poem, it was more like…like a song.” said Hermione wistfully.

“How did it go?” asked Dr. Clark slowly.

“You think I remember the entire thing?” asked Harry.

“I wrote it down somewhere…” said Hermione digging through her bag.

“Hermione…” said Ron, trying to tell her Harry didn’t want it read.

“Got it!” said Hermione holding it up. She handed it over to the bowl, Dr. Clark handed it to Sirius who held it out for all three of them to read.

“Wow, this is pretty good.” said Remus looking down at Harry.

“I’m amazed it won, it doesn’t mention Dazzle Gums anywhere, just the fear and the pleads of the people.” said Sirius.

Fourth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

“What do you kids have planned?” asked Mr. Weasley.

“They’re going to ask Lockhart for his signature.” said Sirius with a broad smile.

“How can they justify getting that book for a Defense class?” asked Kingsley.
“Any normal teacher you would be sunk.” said Moody with a gnarled grin. “But with this idiot, any lie will do.”

Fifth paragraph.

“Good thing you two were, I don’t think I ever would have asked him.” said Hermione.

“Hell, just leave a piece of blank parchment on his desk, he’ll sign it.” said Ron sourly.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

“Not a good thing to stammer when you want to get one over on someone.” said Kingsley.

“Oh, hell, he probably thought she was another nervous fan.” said Fred.

“I was.” said Hermione quietly.

Dialogue set, fifth sentence.

“You noticed that?” said Hermione anxiously.

“I didn’t see it.” said Ron.

End of dialogue set.

“Well, that is a plausible lie.” said Kingsley approvingly.

“If the slow acting poisons were in that book.” said Harry with a smirk.

“Oh no, that wasn’t the right book! The venom is talked about in Holidays with Hags!” screeched Hermione “Oh, no!”

“Trust me, I don’t think he noticed.” said Bill with a laugh, reading on.

Dialogue set, third sentence.

“His favorite book and yet he doesn’t know what is in it?” said George with a laugh.

End of dialogue set.
“Yeah, it made a lovely fire.” said Fred.

“Made great tissues too.” said Lee.

Dialogue line.

“Huh?” asked Dr. Nicodemus. “What is that girl going on about?”

“Apparently he can trap a ghoul in a tea strainer.” said Lionus.

“I know someone who had done that actually. But it most definitely was not him.” said Tempest.

“I would dearly love to hear more about what you do.” said Firenze quietly.

“Well…it’s Nightstrike’s turn to stand guard, we could go out to that lake and have a talk.” said Tempest with a smile.

“I’d love that.” said Firenze, blushing slightly.

“We can kiss our little filly goodbye.” said Lionus quietly with a smirk.

Dialogue set, first sentence, third comma.

“Hermione turned bright red.” said Ron with a smile; he dodged a hard smack by Hermione.

End of dialogue set.

“I almost had to leave the room to get sick.” said Ron.

Sixth paragraph.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

“You believe? Do you remember another Quidditch match happening that year?” asked Charlie.

Dialogue set, third sentence.

“Useful? Is he nuts?” asked a third year Ravenclaw.
“Oh, he was not.” said Sirius. “He couldn’t even get a job as a towel boy for the team.”

“Not that he didn’t try out for the Seeker position, he couldn’t even fly straight on a broom.” said Remus. “And as for seeing a Snitch, the Hufflepuff captain didn’t even want to waste his time.”

“The only reason he wanted to be a Seeker, was so he could go up against James.” said Sirius. “I swear, he was a borderline stalker.”

“The National Squads only take the best fliers, they don’t bother with amateurs.” said Charlie. “I’ll bet that you get recruited.” he added looking over at Harry.

“They’d be stupid not to.” said Sirius proudly.

“Yeah, and I dedicated my life to be a Horklump breeder.” said Sirius with a smirk.

“Now, I’m sure he wanted to try something.” said Remus snarling towards the book.

“Are you kidding?” said Fred in disgust.

“Less able? He’s the best!” shouted George.

“Good, don’t egg him onto a conversation, get out of there, you don’t need any help from him.” said Remus.
“That’s because he’s an idiot.” said Dr. Clark.

“And who cares, you got what you needed, ditch the twerp and get the book.” said Charlie.

“Amen!” said Dr. Clark and Charlie

“Yes he is.” said Remus and Sirius.

Professor Flitwick held a laugh, while Professor Snape snorted quietly.

“Now, now! She was a beautiful woman years ago.” said Professor Vector.

“A century is a long time ago.” mumbled Sirius.

“Why the hell not?” asked Bill looking up from the book.

“It was his autograph.” said George in a cutesy voice.

“Bet Madam Pince loved having something thrust at her.” said Remus with a chuckle.

“I’ll bet she doesn’t believe you got it straight from Lockhart. She might think you forged it.” said Sirius.

“Why would she think that?” asked Colin.
“Cause we did it.” said Sirius. “Forging Professor Slughorn’s wasn’t as easy as it looked.”

Ninth paragraph, first sentence, second comma.

“Sort of hard to say it’s a forgery when it has his purple sparkly ink.” asked Ron.

“That is true.” said McGonagall thoughtfully.

Ninth paragraph, end of first sentence.

“Seriously, no one uses that ink but him.” said Ron.

Ninth paragraph, second sentence.

“You’d think that with all the psychotic love she has for her books, they wouldn’t get moldy.” said Fred.

“They were moldy before she got here.” said McGonagall defending her longtime colleague.

“Were books invented before she got here?” asked George in a whisper.

End of ninth paragraph.

“Would have been fine, if she hadn’t been sprinting almost on and off.” said Ron with a smirk.

“You kept looking back and biting your lip.” said Harry to Ron. “And jumping whenever someone came too close.”

“Oh…” said Ron sheepishly, while Hermione giggled. “And I don’t figure you’d teach us how to get away with stuff like this huh?” he said looking at Harry.

“No. I won’t even pass on what I do to my kids. Let alone friends.” said Harry with a smile.

“Might come in handy Potter.” said Moody absently. “Teaching them those skills might not be a bad idea.”

“ALASTOR!” shouted McGonagall and Mrs. Weasley.

Tenth paragraph, first sentence.

“Really?” said Sirius. “You’re going to stay in the girl’s bathroom, with an overly sensitive ghost?”
“You guys are nuts.” said Fred shaking his head at Ron, Harry and Hermione.

“Her idea.” said Harry and Ron, pointing at Hermione.

Tenth paragraph, second sentence, first comma.

“So you guys go right in there and to hold a meeting? What is wrong with an old unused classroom, or a broom cupboard?” said Remus.

“What would you think happened in a broom cupboard if a boy and a girl came out of a broom cupboard.” whispered Dr. Clark.

“Forget the broom cupboard idea.” said Sirius and Remus loudly. Ron, Hermione and Harry looked at them in confusion, but then it hit them. Three faces burned fiercely.

End of tenth paragraph.

“Nice mutual relationship.” said Anthony with a smirk.

Eleventh paragraph, third sentence, first comma.

“And that is why it isn’t for twelve year old’s eyes.” scolded Mrs. Weasley.

Eleventh paragraph, third sentence, second comma, twelfth word.

“That would be the Vivsectio potion, it has several unpleasant uses.” said Professor Snape calmly. “For wizards who wish to find out how the body works, or to torture a person mercilessly.”

Several people gulped loudly.

End of eleventh paragraph.

“That one is the Apendius potion. It’s a cursed potion, the arms reach down and strangle the victim.” said Snape thoughtfully. More people were starting to become frightened.

Dialogue set.

“It isn’t just imagination.” said Kingsley, Moody, Ron, Harry and Hermione.
“Of course it is. Being able to turn into different people is a powerful and dangerous ability. Not to mention, sometimes unlawful.” said Lionus with a small smile. “And I would hope that a Polyjuice Potion looks complicated to a second year.”

“That sort of explains where all your healing potions came from, you just used the student storecupboard.” said Ron.

Harry smiled and nodded. “It’s a good thing I always replenish my stock when I come to school.”

Remus looked at Harry quickly, “You make it sound like you get hurt a lot.”

“Ugh, I still can’t seem to get my mouth shut.” groaned Harry.

“Oh, that stuff’s not too hard to get, it’s just in Slughorn’s storeroom.” said Sirius shrugging.

“We’ve nicked stuff from in there all the time.”

“That’s Snape’s storeroom now.” said Neville.

“Now you have a problem.” said Sirius.

“GROSS!” shouted the students loudly as they gagged.

More people gagged and cringed in their chairs. Crabbe sat in his usual stupor, not even following what is going on.
“You’re more worried about something else? What the hell could that be?” asked Sirius holding his stomach.

“Why the heck not? You steal….?” said Colin excitedly, but his voice dropped off when Harry glared fiercely at him. Behind him, a window cracked.

“I take what people, who own the stuff, want me to take. Then I take it right back in the morning, with a detailed reconnaissance report.” said Harry, his voice rippling with anger. “I…do…not…steal!”

“We know you don’t cub.” said Sirius pulling Harry closer to him. “We know, he just chose his words wrong.”

“So did you go and get the stuff, Harry?” asked Fred carefully.

“No, someone else volunteered, I don’t know if I could have gotten away with it.” said Harry calming down.

“So that is where those ingredients went to.” said Snape gritting his teeth.

“This is a good time to remind the teachers that whatever the students do, they cannot be punished for.” said Dumbledore with a smile.

“Doesn’t stop it from happening to me.” said Draco feeling his backside.

“That is different. I wasn’t punishing you as a teacher, but as a Godfather.” said Snape sternly.

“You’re his what?” asked Ron in shock.

“He’s my Godfather.” said Draco. Ron stared.

“So why do you stop me from punishing you for almost dying and other things?” asked Remus, looking at Harry, deciding to take the ball and running with it.

Harry sighed. “Let’s put it this way, I’m beginning to think of you guys as parental figures, and well, I haven’t had much experience with... endearing parental guidance. When you say that I’m in trouble, I tend to think immediately of getting the crap beaten out of me.” said Harry.

“I would never hurt you Harry! None of us would! You have to believe us!” cried Remus anxiously.

“Me becoming trusting doesn’t happen overnight.” said Harry shaking his head. “I’ll lean on you guys, and play around, but when it comes to discipline, I’m a little wary.” said Harry.

Remus, Sirius, and Dr. Clark looked down shamefully, so did most of the adults.

“Enough of this discipline talk.” said Harry quickly. “How about if I give something to look forward to tonight? I’ll make an all Knickerbocker Glories for dessert, I’ll even make you an all chocolate one?” asked Harry with a sly smile looking at Remus.
Remus’s head snapped back quickly. “Sounds good to me!”

“Us too!” asked Sirius laughing. “Can you make an all cherry one? I’m a cherry freak.” he said in a whisper.

“I can make them any way you want.” said Harry with a grin.

Fourteenth paragraph.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

“Does Harry even know how to act chicken?” asked Fred.

“Harry isn’t afraid of anything!” said Dennis excitedly.

“Oh, trust me, he’s got his fears.” said Remus ruffling the teen’s hair.

“First you bring up the subject of grounding, now your acting all kind and loving? Way to send mixed messages mate.” said Sirius with a laugh.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

“Brings to mind the look on your face from the last pleasant Recollection Scroll.” said Dumbledore brightly. “Like a bird, ready to take flight.”

“I thought he looked like a horse ready to race.” said Sirius.

Dialogue set, fifth sentence, first comma.

“You make it sound like the boys don’t even give a damn.” said Angelina.

End of dialogue set.

“Aw, come on, that’s hitting below the belt.” said George.

“And I would have been pissed off. All that work, tolerating Lockhart’s play acting, if she took that book back…” Harry released a breath of air. “I would tell her just how I wasn’t exactly happy with her.”

“Have you ever seen Hermione pale like that?” said Lavender, whispering to Parvati.

“You haven’t been yelled at by him yet.” said Fred shaking slightly.
“I don’t think anyone could deny you that request.” said Dumbledore with a smile.

“A month?” said Colin in disbelief.

“Wow, the heir could wipe out half the Muggleborns in the school by that time!” said Charlie.

“You two dating yet?” asked Sirius nastily.

Ron and Hermione blushed heavily.

“Didn’t want Percy to catch us again.” said Ron.

“That is true.” said Sirius. “Save a whole month’s time, but then again, according to you and Malfoy, he isn’t behind it.”

A few third years looked around in shock. Harry Potter was nervous? Before a game?
“Yeah, but you’ve got much better people on those brooms.” said Bill.

“Wow, all you guys were getting nervous.” said Dr. Clark with a kind smile.
“Good thing we didn’t eat much.” said Fred.
“Wouldn’t have lasted past the Greenhouses.” said George.

“Not good flying conditions.” said Charlie.
“Not with the thunder at least.” said Remus. “Where there’s thunder…”
“There is lightning.” said Sirius patting Harry’s head and running a finger over the scar.
“Get off.” said Harry shoving the arm away.
“His scolding voice does sound like thunder if you think about it.” said George quietly to Fred

“Too much talk, not enough pep.” said the veteran players of Gryffindor.

“Every kind of weather but a tornado and hurricane.” said Fred.

“They can’t, that’s the best choice they’ve got for a Seeker, everyone else sucks.” said Fred.
“What? Does he have a thing for you?” asked Neville with a smile.

“No, he just gets overdramatic when it comes to first Quidditch games of the year.” said Fred.

Dialogue set, second sentence, first comma.

“He did not just say that to the most selfless person in the world.” said Sirius clapping a hand to eyes.

“He did, After the game, he got to say hello to a black eye.” said George.

End of dialogue set.

Dialogue line.

“You know, I wanted you to take Wood’s words as a joke.” said Fred his ever present smile changing to a scowl.

“Something tells me this game doesn’t go well.” said Sirius worriedly.

“Gee you think?” said George.

Nineteenth paragraph, first sentence, second comma

“Heck, they’ll cheer for anyone who isn’t in Slytherin, and if they aren’t playing.” said Tonks and Emmeline Vance.

Nineteenth paragraph, end of first sentence.

“It’s easy to hear, because they cast a Sonorous Charm.” said Lee.

End of nineteenth paragraph.

“I think we’ll have to switch to bows.” said Madam Hooch.

“But then they’d try and head butt each other.” said Professor Sprout.

Dialogue line.
“And he’s on last year’s broom and beats the rest of you up into the air.” said Sirius smugly.

“Stupid show-off.” said one of the Slytherin first year girls.

“Say what?” said Charlie in shock. “Bludgers are supposed to start flying around after the games been playing for at least a minute.”

“Seriously?” asked Dean.

“Yeah, it’s supposed let you get into position before you start having to dodge them.” said Charlie.

“That’s a close one.” said Remus, gripping Harry’s shoulder.

“Well, at least George is there to keep them away from you.” said Mrs. Weasley sighing with relief.

“SOMEONE TAMPERED WITH THAT THING!” shouted Remus and Sirius together.

“Tell me someone stopped the game!” shouted Charlie.

Madame Hooch shuffled nervously.

“I’m going to take that as a ‘no’. ” said Remus weakly
The men in the bowl cringed and held onto Harry tightly. Mrs. Weasley held onto her husband tightly and whimpered into his shoulder.

“There’s no escaping that thing!” shouted Sirius.

“Why did you pause?” asked Sirius.

“Don’t tell me…it hit him?” said Remus weakly.

“No, he didn’t get hit.” said Bill reading on quickly.

“Thank goodness!” said Remus.

“Alright!” shouted Sirius.

“Oh crap.” said Sirius worriedly.

“So you really were holding back your speed.” said Fred in an awed whisper.

“Ouch, that sucks.” said Charlie.

“Wait! It’s not a fair game! That Bludger’s nuts!” said Sirius.
“And no one stopped the game.” said Remus looking over to Madam Hooch. “Why didn’t you stop the game at least?” he yelled at Dumbledore.

“I was not there.” said Dumbledore. “I was in the library trying to research what could have happened to Mrs. Norris. I hadn’t left the library except for meals and some sleep.”

Twenty-sixth paragraph, first sentence.

“I could have gone without that little revelation.” said Sirius.

End of twenty-sixth paragraph.

“Man, the game could have gone on forever.” said Angelina. “But still, you shouldn’t have done what you did..”

“What did you do?” asked Remus to Harry.

“Something stupid.” said Alicia, Katie, Angelina, Fred and George.

Dialogue line.

“T ook you a while to figure that out?” said Remus faintly.

“We were more concerned about making sure that Harry didn’t lose his head as opposed to actually thinking.” said Fred.

Dialogue line.

“What did that look like?” said Sirius chuckling nervously.

“I don’t even know how I did it.” said George.

Twenty-seventh paragraph.

“What the hell? Those things are supposed to fall to the ground the moment Madam Hooch blows her whistled, until the games starts up again!” said Sirius becoming frightened.

Dialogue set, first sentence.
“What did they do to that Bludger?” asked Sirius angrily.

“Believe it or not, nothing.” said Harry holding Sirius’ hand.

“Then who’s behind it?” asked Remus.

“It’ll tell you soon.” said Harry.

End of dialogue set.

“Stopping an out of control Bludger.” said Remus shortly. “Tell me that the game is called off, at least long enough to get a new Bludger for the game.”

“Would have been a better alternative.” said Alicia bitterly.

“I’m starting to freak out.” said Dr. Clark.

Dialogue set, first sentence, third comma.

“You could have put that a little better.” said Dumbledore his face pale.

End of dialogue set.

“I would hope that no one in my house would stoop to trying to severely harm someone, just for a Quidditch game.” said Snape looking intently at his charges.

“We didn’t do anything! We didn’t know why the Bludger was going after him!” said Draco.

“Where the hell were the two of you to stop it!” shouted Remus to the two heads of houses.

McGonagall cringed guiltily, and Snape averted his eyes.

Dialogue line.

“Doesn’t mean that someone couldn’t have gone in and switched one out, or cursed one.” said Sirius.

Twenty-eighth paragraph.

“Jackals.” said Sirius growling.
“YOU SAID WHAT?” shouted the men in the bowl.

“Yeah, we’re still pissed at him.” said the Gryffindor team. Harry looked down shamefully.

“Never thought I would say this, but: Listen to Fred.” said Mr. Weasley.

“Exactly, don’t send Harry up into the air again!” said Tonks.

“And what is wrong with that?” said Remus. “If it saves your neck?”

“No! You did not just ask them to do that!” said Sirius. “Harry the fate of the world doesn’t revolve around a freaking Quidditch game!”

Harry hung his head.

“How could you be so stupid?” shouted Remus. Suddenly the book shook and glowed in Bill’s hand. Suddenly, a red light came shooting out of the binder and slammed itself into Remus’s chest.

“MOONY! REMUS! PROFESSOR LUPIN!” shouted the people in the Great Hall. He flew in the air and landed hard on the ground. Harry stood up and flung himself to where Remus fell. Another shot of light came out of the book, heading straight to where Remus and Harry was. Dumbledore sent a spell at the beam of light, but was shocked to see that it was unaffected.

The beam of light continued on its path until it had almost reached Remus, and Harry, who was shielding him.

“How could you be so stupid?” shouted Remus. Suddenly the book shook and glowed in Bill’s hand. Suddenly, a red light came shooting out of the binder and slammed itself into Remus’s chest.

“MOONY! REMUS! PROFESSOR LUPIN!” shouted the people in the Great Hall. He flew in the air and landed hard on the ground. Harry stood up and flung himself to where Remus fell. Another shot of light came out of the book, heading straight to where Remus and Harry was. Dumbledore sent a spell at the beam of light, but was shocked to see that it was unaffected.

The beam of light continued on its path until it had almost reached Remus, and Harry, who was shielding him.

“How could you be so stupid?” shouted Remus. Suddenly the book shook and glowed in Bill’s hand. Suddenly, a red light came shooting out of the binder and slammed itself into Remus’s chest.

“MOONY! REMUS! PROFESSOR LUPIN!” shouted the people in the Great Hall. He flew in the air and landed hard on the ground. Harry stood up and flung himself to where Remus fell. Another shot of light came out of the book, heading straight to where Remus and Harry was. Dumbledore sent a spell at the beam of light, but was shocked to see that it was unaffected.

The beam of light continued on its path until it had almost reached Remus, and Harry, who was shielding him.

“How could you be so stupid?” shouted Remus. Suddenly the book shook and glowed in Bill’s hand. Suddenly, a red light came shooting out of the binder and slammed itself into Remus’s chest.

“MOONY! REMUS! PROFESSOR LUPIN!” shouted the people in the Great Hall. He flew in the air and landed hard on the ground. Harry stood up and flung himself to where Remus fell. Another shot of light came out of the book, heading straight to where Remus and Harry was. Dumbledore sent a spell at the beam of light, but was shocked to see that it was unaffected.

The beam of light continued on its path until it had almost reached Remus, and Harry, who was shielding him.

“How could you be so stupid?” shouted Remus. Suddenly the book shook and glowed in Bill’s hand. Suddenly, a red light came shooting out of the binder and slammed itself into Remus’s chest.

“MOONY! REMUS! PROFESSOR LUPIN!” shouted the people in the Great Hall. He flew in the air and landed hard on the ground. Harry stood up and flung himself to where Remus fell. Another shot of light came out of the book, heading straight to where Remus and Harry was. Dumbledore sent a spell at the beam of light, but was shocked to see that it was unaffected.

The beam of light continued on its path until it had almost reached Remus, and Harry, who was shielding him.

“How could you be so stupid?” shouted Remus. Suddenly the book shook and glowed in Bill’s hand. Suddenly, a red light came shooting out of the binder and slammed itself into Remus’s chest.

“MOONY! REMUS! PROFESSOR LUPIN!” shouted the people in the Great Hall. He flew in the air and landed hard on the ground. Harry stood up and flung himself to where Remus fell. Another shot of light came out of the book, heading straight to where Remus and Harry was. Dumbledore sent a spell at the beam of light, but was shocked to see that it was unaffected.

The beam of light continued on its path until it had almost reached Remus, and Harry, who was shielding him.

“How could you be so stupid?” shouted Remus. Suddenly the book shook and glowed in Bill’s hand. Suddenly, a red light came shooting out of the binder and slammed itself into Remus’s chest.

“MOONY! REMUS! PROFESSOR LUPIN!” shouted the people in the Great Hall. He flew in the air and landed hard on the ground. Harry stood up and flung himself to where Remus fell. Another shot of light came out of the book, heading straight to where Remus and Harry was. Dumbledore sent a spell at the beam of light, but was shocked to see that it was unaffected.
“How?...” said Hermione.

“That book really can think! It didn’t want to hurt Harry!” said Ron.

Remus still laid on the ground, unconscious but at least he was breathing. Harry knelt to the ground and placed his hands on his chest. A jolt of electricity came shooting out of Remus’ body, Harry reared his head back and screamed loudly.

“HARRY!” shouted Sirius, but Harry wouldn’t remove his hands, somewhere deep within him, he knew he had to hang on. It was the only way to wake Remus up. His vision went dark.

“Just let him go!” said Mr. Weasley worriedly. “We’ll take care of him!”

Suddenly, two pale white hands came from the book, which had fallen to the floor, and traveled serenely over to where Harry was kneeling and screaming. The hands wrapped their arms around him and gently pulled him back. Harry hung limply in the ghostly arms’ embrace. As they pulled him back to the center of the room, one of the hands released their hold and it laid itself on top of Remus’ body, the same jolts of electricity that slammed through Harry’s body, went through the hands, but it seemed to not feel anything.

When the hand released its hold, Remus finally groaned. Sirius hurried over and threw Remus over his shoulder and carried him to the bowl. Hagrid picked Harry up gingerly from where he laid, and Sirius sat Remus down in the bowl. Hagrid laid Harry down in it as well, resting Harry’s head in Remus’ lap.

“Looks like we’re sitting on the floor.” said Dr. Clark, helping Sirius cover the two unconscious figures.

“I don’t want to read anymore, not if the book’s going to explode like that again.” said Bill apprehensively.

“I think, as long as no one insults Harry like that again, we have nothing to fear.” said Dumbledore, draping the phoenix quilt over top the two men.

“All that, because Remus called Harry stupid?” said Fred.

“It appears so.” said Speckerton. “I have never heard of this occurring before.”

“Let’s hope it doesn’t happen again, c’mon Bill. Nothing’s going to happen now.” said Charlie reassuringly.

“Hope not, too bad Remus will miss out on how Harry gets out of this.” said Bill picking the book up gingerly.

“I think it might be a good thing.” said McGonagall.

Dialogue line.

“You have no idea.” said Sirius. “I wonder what made Harry keep holding onto Remus like that?”

“Who knows?” said Dr. Clark. “I don’t think we’ll know till Harry wakes up.”
“Why didn’t you stop the game, didn’t you notice one of the Bludgers assault only Harry?” asked Mrs. Weasley angrily.

“It was not one of my better jobs at refereeing.” said Madam Hooch.

“You can say that again.” said Charlie under his breath.

“He did not just say that. Tell me that I heard him wrong.” said Dr. Clark covering his eye.

“You didn’t.” said Sirius.

“Why didn’t the Bludger attack him, while he was on the ground?” asked Bill.

“Something held it back.” said Fred. “We couldn’t figure it out.”

“Umm…” said Ron.

“Spill it.” said George. “Do you know what happened?”

“Harry…has an ability, though he's really only used it that time and not often after that…he has to be calm, and not moving.” said Ron.

“What ability is that?” asked Dr. Clark.

“He can…well…control things, but he says it’s not as strong as it could be. He could only hold things in place, but the moment he would move, it would too.” said Ron.

“Impressive.” said Dumbledore in a whisper. “His Grandfather Matthew had the same ability. I feared that it was lost forever.”

“I will admit, he looked really cool.” said Neville, “But it was really scary watching.”
“Took him while to get the rain out of his nose.” said Hermione with a weak smile. But she stopped smiling when she saw Harry still unconscious.

“The only ones laughing were the Slytherin. Everyone else was screaming their heads off.” said Dean.

“With his speed and how light he is, no one can change direction like him.” said Alicia.

“This is getting scary.” said a small first year Hufflepuff.

“Be thankful you weren’t there.” said Hannah.

Dr. Clark started to laugh.

“Why are you laughing?” asked Sirius.

“Holly tried signing him up for ballet classes once. She wanted him to try out, and he ran for the hills.” said Dr. Clark still laughing.

“Don’t blame him.” said the boys in the Great Hall.

“If it was the twirl I think it is. It wasn’t stupid, looked sort of cool.” whispered Dean to Seamus.
“I remember that look. Made me shake all over, and he wasn’t even looking at me.” said Ron quietly.

Dialogue set, end of third sentence.

“Alright! Get it and end this suicidal game!” said Sirius excitedly.

End of dialogue set.

Draco mumbled bitterly, while the Seekers in the Great Hall laughed.

“Don’t feel too bad, Draco.” said Snape seriously. “Even the best Seekers can’t see behind their heads.”

“Yeah, looked what happened to Harry.” said Seamus.

“What happened to Harry?” asked Dr. Clark quickly.

“Um…” said Ron.

“Just read on.” said Dr. Clark to Bill. “I can’t stand this anymore.”

Thirty-fourth paragraph.

“Why did it say agonizing?” asked Firenze wonderingly.

“Well, all Malfoy would have to do is reach out and grab by his ear. Game would be over and Slytherin would win.” said Sirius.

“Hmm…” said Firenze. “Somehow I don’t think that is all that was agonizing.”

Thirty-fifth paragraph.

“What happened now?” asked Sirius and Dr. Clark looking up from sponging the foreheads of their charges.

“Bludger caught up with him.” said Fred sadly.

“We never should have left him alone.” said George gritting his teeth.

Thirty-sixth paragraph, second sentence, first comma.

“Oh no.” said Mrs. Weasley whimpering. Her husband held her tightly.
“Tell me he doesn’t get hurt too bad.” said Dr. Clark clasping his hands tightly.

Thirty-sixth paragraph, second sentence, second comma.

Everyone took a sharp intake of breath and gripped their elbows quickly.

“That had to hurt.” said Sirius turning pale and looking down at the face he was cooling with a cold washcloth. Since being shocked and carried over by the mysterious force, he had been running a temperature; the same could be said for Remus.

Thirty-sixth paragraph, end of second sentence.

Several people cringed and grabbed their arms.

Thirty-sixth paragraph, third sentence, third comma.

“Anyone remember if he screamed or not?” asked Alicia weakly.

“I don’t think he did.” said Fred turning pale.

“Kids shouldn’t have that high tolerance for pain.” said Lionus sternly.

Thirty-sixth paragraph, third sentence, sixth comma.

“He can still think? After all that?” asked Madam Pomfrey in shock.

Thirty-sixth paragraph, third sentence, first colon.

“Not so numb that he can’t think straight enough to get out of harm’s way.” said Firenze with an impressed smile.

End of thirty-sixth paragraph.

“An odd motivational thought.” said Professor Flitwick with a small smile.
Sirius clasped the hand of his beloved godson.

“Hang on, how did he know what I was thinking?” asked Malfoy quickly.

“What else could you have been thinking?” asked Ron. “He was heading straight for you.”

“He didn’t even need to move. Harry would never have hit him.” said Hermione smugly.

“Thank god, I think it’s a good thing that Remus missed out on it. He would have been freaking out.” said Dr. Clark wiping the sweat off his own brow with another cloth.

“OH, SHIT!” shouted Mr. Weasley and Sirius together, while Dr. Clark turned pale. Harry groaned softly, and was about to awaken, but despite his eyes starting to flutter, he fell back to sleep. Sirius dumped the cloth in the cold water conjured by Dumbledore and dabbed at the boy’s forehead.

“It was hard to look at.” said Neville.

Mrs. Weasley and Hermione both sniffed loudly and wiped the tears from their eyes. Ginny was holding onto her knees, which were brought up to her chest.
“We were happy! One: they beat the Slytherins with their state of the art brooms, and two: watching Harry almost get murdered every other minute was over.” said Anthony.

End of thirty-ninth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Fortieth paragraph.

“If Harry isn’t careful, I’m going to take his broom away.” said Sirius with a nervous laugh.

Forty-first paragraph, first sentence, third comma.

“Why didn’t anyone take him to the castle by then?” asked Charlie.

“He was only out for a minute or two.” said Fred.

End of forty-first paragraph.

“Yay!” said Dr. Clark plainly. “Dazzle Gums to the rescue.”

“Remus would be going ballistic right now.” said Sirius with a dry laugh. “But I’m starting to feel a bit nervous with him around Harry too.”

Dialogue line.

Sirius laughed loudly and kissed the top of Harry’s fevered head.

Dialogue set, first sentence, second comma.

“The hell he don’t.” said Ron.

“He didn’t want everyone else to think that Harry doesn’t idolize him.” said Moody roughly.

End of dialogue set.

“This won’t end well.” said Bill.
“That must’ve hurt. He’d rather have a broken arm, than let you heal him.” said Luna dreamily.

“He kept turning paler and paler.” said Ron.

“Mr. Creevey, you should be very thankful that Mr. Potter didn’t tell me about you taking his picture when he was injured. I would have taken that camera away from you permanently.” said McGonagall furiously.

“Nothing, just something I remembered from school. One of the girls I…dated…said something about that phrase. Gilderoy said it to her and few of her girlfriends.” said Sirius shaking his head quickly.

“Yeah, take him to the hospital wing.” said Sirius trying to get the memories out of his head.

“Yeah, we sort of gave him another black eye when we saw him smiling like that.” said Angelina clenching a fist, “He learned real quick when NOT to smile.”
“I thought his best one would have been his school record holding catch.” said Sirius.

“Not enough drama.” said George bitterly.

Forty-third paragraph

“It was a near thing, Professor McGonagall sent it crashing into ground about thirty yards away, when it tried to clobber Harry while he was on the ground.” said Ron. “Before you ask, she didn’t want to do it while the game was playing, she might have hit Harry.”

“Then when it got back up, we smacked it with the bats and tackled it back to the Quidditch box.” said Fred.

“I’m amazed we didn’t get busted ribs from that.” said George, feeling his chest.

Dialogue line.

“He actually wore Slytherin colors?” said Blaise. “I’ve never felt so insulted.”

Dialogue set, first sentence, first comma.

“If there were several people there, why didn’t anyone save Harry from Lockhart?” asked Sirius angrily.

“Well…we didn’t know what he was doing.” said a seventh year Hufflepuff. “And we sort of thought Harry was suffering from a concussion.”

End of dialogue set.

Forty-fourth paragraph, second sentence.

“That is not what magical bone healing is supposed to feel like.” said Dr. Nicodemus.

Forty-fourth paragraph, fourth sentence.

“Doesn’t sound good.” said Dr. Clark worriedly.
“What happened?” asked Sirius carefully.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

Hagrid began to growl.

Dialogue set.

“He called what I had to do, tidying?” screeched Madam Pomfrey.

Forty-fifth paragraph, first sentence.

Mr. Weasley, Mrs. Weasley, Charlie, Sirius and Dr. Clark didn’t know what Harry was talking about. What had happened to his arm?

End of forty-fifth paragraph.

“He did, actually, on the way up to the castle. We had to run back and get Hagrid.” said Ron.

Forty-sixth paragraph.

Dr. Clark looked worried and confused.

Forty-seventh paragraph.

“SAM!” shouted Dumbledore quickly. Dr. Clark had passed out cold on the floor.

Madam Pomfrey and Dumbledore hurried over to him and revived him.

“Wha…what happened? Harry’s arm…?” stuttered Dr. Clark.

“It gets fixed in the end.” said Dumbledore reassuringly. “Do you want me to conjure you up a chair?”
Dr. Clark recoiled slightly, but then shook his head quickly. “Sorry, yeah, a chair would be great.”

“It’s not a crime to start fearing what you are just learning about.” said Dumbledore kindly.

“I forgot you can see into people’s minds.” said Dr. Clark smiling slightly. “I’ll get used to this stuff eventually. Everything else I can understand and go with it, just the magical healing throws me.”

“Understandable.” said Madam Pomfrey comfortably. “Now let’s get you into a chair.”

Forty-eighth paragraph.

“I can understand that.” said Dr. Clark weakly as he was put into a chair and covered with a blanket.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

“Remind me to apologize to him. I thought he wanted Lockhart to do it.” said Madam Pomfrey sadly.

End of dialogue set.

Dialogue line.

“He was really worried about that. Before we got to the hospital wing, where he woke up, he was mumbling about it not working ever again.” said Hermione.

Dialogue set, first sentence, fourth comma.

“Nothing I’m not used to.” said a groggy voice. Harry was trying to sit up, but was failing.

“Just rest Cub, you’ve had a hell of a day.” said Sirius.

“Those are becoming very common.” said Harry. “What’s up with Remus? And why is Dr. Clark sitting over there? Did you have a fight or something? Why do I feel so cold?” he said shivering slightly.

“He’s sleeping, he fainted, no and you’ve got a slight fever. Does that sum things up?” said Sirius pushing Harry back down and continued sponging the boy’s forehead.

“I don’t remember what I asked.” said Harry leaning back and falling back to sleep.

“This sleeping thing’s starting to worry me.” said Dr. Clark. “And so is the fever.”
“You’re telling me. Did you get the owl that tells you what the hell’s going on?” asked Sirius.

“Not yet.” said Lionus looking over to Dr. Nicodemus quickly.

End of dialogue set.

“You threw clothes to a one armed person, real nice.” said Tonks.

“I was…distracted.” said Madam Pomfrey quietly.

Forty-ninth paragraph.

“It was really gross. I didn’t want to touch him really.” said Ron.

Dialogue set.

Dialogue set, first sentence, second comma.

“You can’t afford to make mistakes like that.” said the adults in the room.

End of dialogue set.

“Really? You’re trying to find the silver lining in this?” said Charlie shaking his head.

Dialogue line.

Fiftieth paragraph.

Fifty-first paragraph.

“Oh that stuff’s nasty.” said Charlie.

“Tell me about it.” said Moody.

“Can’t you take it to get your leg back, sir?” asked a nervous third year Ravenclaw.

“Can’t fix what happened to my leg, you can’t fix what happens to some dark magic wounds.” said Moody. “CONSTANT VIGILANCE!” he shouted, making several people jump.
“Well, now we know why he always says that.” said Tonks.

Dialogue line.

“Sounds like it.” said Dr. Clark weakly.

“Taking the potion is worse.” said Sirius.

Fifty-second paragraph, second sentence.

“It’s one thing to get punished for something you did and have to take that stupid potion cause you hurt yourself in the process. But when you didn’t do anything wrong, it sucks.” said Chalie.

“He didn’t let us stop the game and save his butt.” said Fred shortly.

“I would think that was doing something wrong.” said George.

Fifty-second paragraph.

“How much help did he need, that he needed the both of you?” asked Zacharias snidely.

“He threw up the first glass.” said Ron.

“You can’t throw up liquid.” said Zacharias.

“Yeah you can, and Harry proved it.” said Hermione sharply.

Dialogue line.

“Oh he was pissed off. There was no denying that.” said Fred.

“First game of the year and he gets owned like that.” said Lee. “Pathetic really.”

“Especially when our little eleven year old got the Snitch while riding a bucking broomstick.” said George with a laugh.

Dialogue line.

“I didn’t.” said Draco quickly.

“We know that, but not at the time.” said Hermione.
“Not a snowball’s chance in hell.” said Moody.

Several Gryffindors gagged horribly.

“That was an understatement.” said Fred.

“But it was funny to watch Marcus screaming at a teammate of his.” said George.

“That it was.” said Fred with a smile.

“Good, the party will take the boy’s mind off the stabbing pain in his arm. Distraction is the best of pain relievers.” said Dr. Nicodemus.

Madam Pomfrey looked at the Ranger doctor and looked down sheepishly.

“He would have been better off with the party to distract him.” said Dr. Nicodemus shaking his head.

Sirius looked down at his young charge and wiped a small tear away from his eye.

‘No more pain’ he thought to himself. ‘Please, don’t let him get hurt again.’
Fifty-sixth paragraph, third sentence, second sentence.

Sirius snapped his neck upwards, as did most of the people in the hall.

“IT’S THE MONSTER!” shrieked a small first year girl.

“No it wasn’t!” said Ginny hurrying over and holding the small girl.

“Believe us, it wasn’t the monster.” said Ron.

End of fifty-sixth paragraph.

“Oh, it was just Madam Pomfrey.” said Sirius heaving a sigh of relief.

“It wasn’t me.” said Madam Pomfrey confusedly.

“Then it was Dumbledore.” said Dr. Clark. “He’s fond of Harry.”

Dumbledore shook his head slowly.

“Better not be who I think it is. If it’s Dazzle Gums….” said Sirius clenching his jaw.

Dialogue line.

“Oh, well…than that’s not that bad.” said Sirius. “But he could’ve picked a better time.”

Fifty-seventh paragraph.

“What’s got him so upset?” asked Dr. Clark.

“You’ll find out, I wanted to smack the stuffing out of him when we found out.” said Ron.

Dialogue set.

“How does that house-elf know he missed the train?” asked Kingsley leaning forward quickly.

Fifty-eighth paragraph.

Dialogue line.
“Potter didn’t miss the little slip either.” said Moody with a smirk.

Fifty-ninth paragraph.
Dialogue line.

“Not bad for a twelve year old.” said Nightstrike smiling down at the smaller person in the bowl.

Dialogue set, second sentence, third comma.

“I’d say ‘Poor Dobby,’ but he almost got Harry killed by a tree.” said Dr. Clark trying to stand up.

“Take a seat partner, you, Remus, and Harry have been through the wringer today.” said Sirius.

“All I did was faint.” said Dr. Clark defensively.

“Still…take a seat.” said Sirius pushing Dr. Clark back down.

End of dialogue set.

“Dobby didn’t bet on Ron using a flying car.” said Fred smugly.

“Or that fact WE would have gone and fetched the BOTH of them.” said McGonagall.

“That too.” said George.

Sixtieth paragraph.
Dialogue line.

Draco cringed horribly.

“Is he your house-elf?” asked Mr. Weasley angrily, noticing how uncomfortable Draco looked.

“Yes.” said Draco quietly.

“At the most, you have a lot of making up to that house-elf for your past treatment of him.” said Mrs. Weasley.

“Yes ma’am.” said Draco quickly.

“Wow, he called someone other than a teacher or Ministry worker, ma’am.” said Daphne Greengrass.

“Where is Pansy to hear this?” said her sister with a smirk.

“Still trying to get that black stuff off her face I’ll bet.” said Daphne with a laugh.
Sixty-first paragraph.

Dialogue line.

“That’s a threat?” asked Fred.

“Who gives a warning before issuing a threat?” said George.

“Someone who really doesn’t want to hurt someone, who knows what pain really is.” said Dr. Clark sadly.

Everyone fell silent. Dumbledore covered his face with both hands.

Bill had to clear his throat to continue.

Sixty-second paragraph.

Dialogue line.

“I’ll bet Harry got twice that in an hour.” spat Professor Flitwick angrily.

Sixty-third paragraph.

“So when he shouts at you, all you have to do is cry?” said Fred.

“We’ll have to try that.” said George.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set.

“Too bad Harry ain’t up, we could question him about what else he knows about house-elves.” said Neville eagerly.

“Let’s not wake him though, let him wake up on his own.” said Ginny.

Sixty-fourth paragraph, first sentence.

“Harry isn’t safe there!” said a first year Gryffindor.
“Wait…did he say his Bludger?” said Dr.Clark slowly.

“Should’ve throttled him when I had a chance.” said Sirius.

“Harry wouldn’t forgive you.” said Hermione.

“Yeah, he stopped me once already.” said Sirius. “Him and Dumbledore.”

“Tell that to your Bludger.” said Fred bitterly.

“He’s got a funny way of showing it.” said George.

“Yet he’s sent away from home grievously injured.” said Dr. Clark angrily.

“I wouldn’t trust the Dursleys taking care of Harry’s wounds; they wouldn’t even take him to the hospital when he really needed. James had to bring him. Especially when Harry was really sick.” said Dr. Clark.

“What was he sick with?” asked Sirius quickly.

“He had pneumonia.” said Dr. Clark. “Took him a while to get better. It was one of the only times the Dursleys let him spend the night at James’. They didn’t want their precious Dinky Duddykins to get sick.” he finished in a cutesy voice.

“Where’s he at? I’ll go cough on him.” said Lionus with a smirk.
“Then tell the stupid kid! No offense.” said Sirius to the sleeping teen.

Dialogue set, sixth sentence.

“Aww. The poor little guy.” said Parvati.

“I hope everything turns out alright for him.” said Lavender.

“It does.” said Ron.

Dialogue set, eighth sentence.

“Ain’t he the dramatic one?” whispered Ernie.

“You have no room to talk.” said Ron angrily.

End of dialogue set.

“Once more? Has it happened before?” asked Dr. Clark.

“I don’t remember if it ever did or not.” said Sirius.

Sixty-fifth paragraph.

“We should fix a pillow to Dobby’s head. So he can’t hurt himself.” said Ron.

“I don’t think he will now.” said Dumbledore.

Dialogue line.

Sixty-sixth paragraph.

“He’s got a point, he’s in no danger.” said Sirius sighing with relief.

Dialogue set.
“Yeah, like last year was as safe as castle full of teddy bears.” said Ron rolling his eyes.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

“It’s like Dobby’s a stuck record.” said Charlie.

Dialogue line.

The people in the Great Hall stared.

“So that’s why he’s working so hard to solve this thing? So he can protect Hermione?” said Tonks.

Hermione looked down and blushed.

“He has to stop self-sacrificing himself like that.” said McGonagall in a whisper.

“Didn’t anyone want to leave for home when they saw the writing on the wall?” said Mrs. Weasley.

“There were some people who left, but they mostly had confidence that the Headmaster would find out what had happened. And when news got around that Mrs. Norris would be restored, they felt a bit more at ease, that if something were to happen, it could be set right.” said McGonagall.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

“That’s going to stop soon; he’s going to learn to ask older people for help.” said Sirius.

Dialogue set, fourth sentence.

“So true!” said Fred rapturously.

End of dialogue set.

Sixty-seventh paragraph.

“Not surprising, it being the middle of the night.” said Seamus.

“Still, Harry being able to hear something at the same time a house-elf can? That’s not bad.” said Kingsley.
“Why back into a room? What’s wrong with walking forward?” asked Sirius.

“Always the pinnacle of fashion.” said Fred whispering to Lee.

“Why would you put a statue on a bed?” asked Firenze.

“We didn’t even sense that he was awake.” said Dumbledore, “If he was, I would have placed a sleeping spell on him.”

“He’s a good faker.” said Dumbledore with a bright smile.

“Hold on. Did someone else get petrified?” asked Dr. Clark.

“Who was it?” asked Bill quickly.
“RON!” shouted Bill and Charlie.

“It wasn’t me.” said Ron quickly.

“Then who the hell is it?” asked Charlie.

“He must’ve thought it was you too.” said Hermione.

“Sounds like something out of a horror story.” said Justin.

“When Harry left the hospital wing, he was horrified, and he felt so guilty that he yelled at you.” said Hermione.

Colin looked down, his face a pale pink.

“What did you mean by that? Do you mean that if Dumbledore had gone another way, HE would have been petrified, or what would have happened to Colin if Dumbledore had gone the way he did?” asked Tempest.

McGonagall paled, “I suppose, both would have worked, I didn’t think of Dumbledore becoming petrified.”

“Oh yeah! I took a picture of what it was that attacked me!” said Colin excitedly.

“Excellent!” said Sirius excitedly.
Seventy-second paragraph.

Several students leaned forward apprehensively, the same with a few adults.

Seventy-third paragraph.

“So much for a photo of the attacker.” said Dr. Clark glumly.

Seventy-fourth paragraph.

“We would all love to know.” said Tonks.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

“Weren’t you concerned about who was behind it?” asked Charlie.

“I was more concerned with how it was done, so it can be stopped. The person behind it can wait a few moments more.” said Dumbledore.

End of chapter.

“Bet that set his mind at ease.” said Fred.

“Hope Professor Lupin gets better soon.” said a fourth year Hufflepuff. “Him and Harry.”

“Looks like Remus is waking up.” said Dr. Clark.

“Hmm, hope he’s up for the bad news about Harry’s arm.” said Sirius with a sad smile.
Remus felt his himself falling down a long cavernous hole for what seemed like forever, he couldn’t figure out what was going on. Finally, the sensation ended and he opened his eyes. He was standing in a house he couldn’t recognize. There was pictures hanging precariously off the hooks, the curtains were ripped and torn, with red stains on them, the entire room was almost destroyed, then he noticed, that it was the Dursleys. Suddenly he saw a door open, he reached for his wand, but it was gone. The door opened and he saw Harry slowly walking in.

“Harry! Where are we? What happened?” said Remus quickly But stared in horror as he got a closer look at Harry. The sight of the boy almost made Remus scream out loud. He had cuts, and bruises all over his body and there was a deep gash on his head, causing blood to trickle down his cheek. His nose was bleeding and even small rivers of blood were leaking out of Harry's eyes in the place of tears.

“Why didn’t you save me? Why did you let them keep me? Don’t you know what happened to me when I got home? Look what he did to me, after what happened to Aunt Marge.” said Harry holding out his arms. Remus gazed transfixed in horror at the wounds on the poor boy’s body.

“Harry…I…I didn’t know…” said Remus weakly.

“I told you, I sent you dozens of letters to come and save me!” cried Harry tears of blood continued falling down his face. “I told you everything!” he covered his face and cried, blood flowing from the crevices of his fingers. Remus staggered and rushed to Harry, but with every step he took, he gained no ground, but lost it.

Suddenly, a spectral figure that resembled Vernon appeared and in a whirl of gray, and red, Harry was dragged away screaming into the darkness.

“REMUS! PLEASE! DON’T LET HIM TAKE ME!” screamed Harry, his hands trying to claw at Remus frantically.

“HARRY!” yelled Remus, he tried running faster after the boy, but found his way blocked by a large wolf like form. It was the form he took every full moon.

“What makes you think we want to take care of some little brat? You can barely see to my needs. Of course, if you really want to take care of the little morsel, I wouldn’t mind a snack for the next full moon.” said the wolf eagerly.

“NO!” shouted Remus. The wolf grinned maliciously.

“No? But what is to stop me from getting him?” said the wolf pacing back and forth, the same evil grin on his face.

“I…Harry…” Remus fell to his knees. “You’re right, it’s too dangerous for me to take him…”
“That’s right, now, let’s get out of this dump. There’s a full moon in two days and I’m dying to get out and shake the dust out of my fur.” he said pushing another door open with his paw.

Remus slowly stood up, as if in a trance.

“That’s right, come on…you belong to me…” said the wolf licking his chops.

Suddenly a lightning bolt came crashing down right between werewolf and the distraught man. The bolt of lightning left behind a young man, the same young man that was dragged away into the darkness, the only difference was, was that he was a little older and the wounds were gone.

“Harry…?” said Remus weakly the fog in his brain quickly dissipating.

Harry was on all fours and gasping for breath. “Gotta hang on….gotta hang on…” gasped Harry. The werewolf pounced on the boy, but was sent flying back; a strange aura was connecting the two of them. Remus watched as the werewolf began to drain away slowly; the skin grew tight against his skin and the hair slowly fell from the werewolf’s body. The werewolf tried once more to attack, this time, he lunged at Remus, but Harry took a hold of the aura and slammed him into the wall, but then, Harry collapsed from exhaustion.

Then, just as miraculous as Harry arrived, someone else had arrived and Harry was taken away by a man that Remus had seen before, but he couldn’t believe that it was actually him. Harry disappeared with the man, but then the man reappeared. The man then walked over and pulled Remus upward.

“He forgave you, so I guess, I have to too.” said the man with a smile. The light enveloped him, leaving the remains of the werewolf behind. “Watch yourself, cause I will not be kind next time.”

Remus sat up quickly and found himself back in the Great Hall.

“Easy mate.” said a familiar voice. Remus looked up and saw Sirius smiling down at him. “You’re still feeling warm, best let yourself rest a bit more. “

“Harry…where is Harry…” said Remus weakly.

“He’s in your lap, so don’t move about too much, he’s still feeling a bit under the weather.” said Sirius.

Remus looked down at his stomach and saw Harry's head resting, his face looked flushed and his brows were furrowed slightly. “What’s wrong with him?” asked Remus quickly.

“He has a slight fever, and so do you so you take a rest. We’re starting on the next chapter.” said Dr. Clark.

“How did the game go?” asked Remus sinking back into the cushions and running fingers through Harry’s hair.

“He won, but he broke his arm.” said Fred with a frown on his face.

“Then Dazzle Gums magicked the bones out of Harry’s arm.” said George.

“When I feel better, I’m going to kill him.” said Remus with a groan.

“Get in line, there’s a long line.” said Dr. Clark.

“Can we make Justin read?” asked Hermione with an innocent smile..
“Do you feel up to it?” asked Professor Sprout.

“Sure.” said Justin taking the book, but then his face paled.

Eleventh Chapter

Ernie and several Hufflepuffs looked guiltily around.

“You get the feeling it’s another bad one?” said Tonks helping Remus drink a cup of hot chocolate.

First paragraph, first sentence.

“That sort of sounds familiar.” said Dr. Clark.

“It should, you had to take that particular potion at Headquarters.” said Dr. Nicodemus, “Your hands were almost completely nonexistent.”

Dr. Clark looked at his hands, his face twisted with horror.

“It’s okay, you’ve got them back.” said Sirius reassuringly.

First paragraph, second sentence.

“Well of course, I didn’t need him upsetting himself, especially seeing how delicate he is.” said Madam Pomfrey.

“He won’t like you calling him delicate again.” said Sirius with a laugh.

“I have to agree with her, the boy is very brittle. All the abuse he’s been through saw to that.” said Dr. Nicodemus.

End of first chapter.

“You sound about as cruel as a chiropractor.” said Dr. Clark with a laugh.

“What is that?” asked Draco.

“A person you pay to hurt you and twist you into knots.” said Dr. Clark.

Draco stared.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

“It was quite adorable.” whispered Madam Pomfrey to Professor Sprout.
“Where the heck were you kids? Why weren’t you guys at Harry’s side?” said Bill with disappointment etched in his voice.

“We were doing something.” said Hermione.

“Nice, real nice.” said Fred.

“This something couldn’t wait until after Harry got out of the hospital wing?” asked George.

“The guy gets up before seven o’clock every blessed morning! You guys would have had plenty of daylight left in the day.” said Lee.

Ron and Hermione looked down shamefully.

“But we did!” said Hermione shrilly.

“You guys have a funny way of showing it.” said Charlie.

“None of your business.” said Percy quickly, turning red.

“Girlfriend.” said the twins together.

Percy turned an even brighter red.

“He received bodily harm, and people are telling him that it was excellent flying? Idiots.” said Charlie. “It would only have been excellent flying if he didn’t get clobbered by the Bludger.”
“You catch him there once and now you label him for life?” said Bill angrily.

Percy bit his lip.

“Moron.” said Bill shaking his head.

“So I guess he didn’t get our note after all.” said Hermione,

“What note?” asked Ron.

“The note you were supposed to write!” said Hermione crossly.

“I thought you were going to write it!” said Ron defensively.

“You guys couldn’t cast a charm so no one heard you?” asked Tonks.

“We didn’t know one at the time.” said Ron.

“What the hell are you two doing in there?” asked Tonks looking over at the two with wide eyes.

”We were just working on the potion.” said Ron turning as bright red as Hermione was.

“You don’t know the sound of his voice and footsteps by now?” asked Sirius. “I could tell if Remus was walking around by the first half of the first year.”

“Now you care.” muttered George bitterly.
Dialogue set.

Hermione blushed.

Dialogue set, first sentence, third comma.

“Who came up with that priority list?” asked Alicia. Ron pointed to Hermione.

“Figures, she always was one for logic as opposed to other’s feelings.” said a seventh year Gryffindor.

Hermione buried her face in her hands, and then a hoarse whisper came from the bowl.

“Leave her be!”

They looked over to the bowl and saw Harry trying vainly to sit up. “We needed to find out what was going on. It didn’t bother me.” said Harry clutching the blanket to his chest, his face deathly pale and his hands shaking.

“You should have gone to the adults.” said Sirius soothingly, “now lay back.”

“They’re picking on Hermione.” said Harry faintly, his whole body shivering.

“We’ll protect Hermione,” said Remus, standing up carefully. “You need to rest.”

“You’re sick too!” said Hermione.

“I know, but Harry might sleep better without someone else in there. I’ll make myself a chair.” said Remus conjuring up a large recliner.

Sirius helped him sit in the large chair and covered up his old friend. He went back to Harry and lightly pushed him back down into the cushions, then turned to Dr. Clark and handed him a cup of tea. “I’m getting worn out.” he said with a laugh.

“I’ll help.” said Dumbledore standing up and standing beside Harry, Madam Pomfrey joined them and tended to Remus, Sirius frowned slightly at Dumbledore, who was making Harry comfortable.

“You two just relax.” said Madam Pomfrey said to the other two men.

Dialogue set, end of first sentence.

“Why did he have difficulty locking it?” asked Bill, trying to leave Hermione alone. He didn’t want to cause Harry any more stress, and he sensed that Hermione had learned her lesson.

“There were three of us in a bathroom stall. Little hard to do.” said Ron.
“Good idea, no one would go into a haunted bathroom.” said Kingsley.

Fifth paragraph.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

“Where were you when you heard us talking about it?” asked McGonagall stunned.

“Library. We were in the Muggle History section. Hermione was telling me all about the War of 1913.” said Ron.

End of dialogue set.

Dialogue line.

“That is plausible, but obviously not the case.” said Lionus looking at the still enrolled Draco.

Dialogue line.

Sixth paragraph.

“And here I thought he held something back.” said Hermione looking down guiltily.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

“My father’s old but not that old.” said Draco with a smile.

“When was the Chamber last opened?” asked Dr. Clark.

“About fifty-three years ago.” said Hermione adding the years up quickly.

“No, Lucius isn’t that old.” said Severus. “He’s only about four years older than myself.”
“Can it make itself invisible? Or perhaps change it’s appearance to look like something else?” said Kingsley.

“Wow, Hermione thinks like you!” said Tonks excitedly.

“At least she doesn’t sound like you.” said Kingsley with a smile.

“You do!” said Ron holding up his hands. “When was that last thing you did that was fun, WITHOUT a book?”

Hermione had to stop and think.

“That’s okay, take your time.” said Fred with a smile.

“Does he stop trying to save him?” asked Sirius hopefully.

“He actually does save me in the end, not from the heir though.” said Harry thickly, "Sorry, Cub, didn’t mean to wake you. You go back to sleep.” said Sirius tucking Harry in. Harry yawned and buried his face in the pillows. Dumbledore lifted one of the covers and placed a very old, and much worn stuffed dragon, under Harry’s arm.

“Isn’t that…?” asked Sirius.

“You had him?” said Remus with a whisper.

“James forgot it the last time I babysat Harry.” said Dumbledore smiling down at Harry. “I kept it safe.”

“Would you look at that? Look how tight he’s gripping Scorchie.” said Sirius with a laugh.

“Still has some insecurities doesn’t he?” said Zacharias with a sneer.

“Want to talk about your bedwetting?” said a fifth year Hufflepuff. Zacharias looked down and quickly blushed.
“Not that the teachers didn’t try and quash those. Professor McGonagall even tried telling the first years that he had to go home, sick relative or something.” said a fourth year Gryffindor.

“There was no telling the difference.” said Percy.

“People avoided the Slytherins like the plague though.” said George.

“And Harry.” reminded Fred.

“That only makes it easier to wipe out a larger amount of children.” said Moody.

“We didn’t need to hear that.” said Bathilda crossly.

Colin smiled brightly over to her, but Fred tugged at the boy’s collar.

“She’s taken.” said Fred. Ginny hadn’t noticed, she was too busy looking over to Harry and wishing to move, but was being restrained by her father.

“Let him rest.” he whispered in his small daughter’s ear.

“What did you two do now?” said Charlie tiredly.

“We only did what we normally did.” said George cautiously.

“That works when she’s upset about not going somewhere, not when there’s a monster somewhere lurking about.” said Bill.
End of eighth paragraph.

“It also didn’t hurt to have Harry shout us out either.” said Fred.

Ninth paragraph, first sentence.

“Who started that trade?” said McGonagall angrily.

“Seventh years.” said Hermione with disgust. “They bought stupid little trinkets, and foul smelling things and tried passing them off as protective stuff.”

“Probably the same people I have to deal with nowadays,” said Tonks. “They love defrauding people, to get a few galleons.”

Ninth paragraph, second sentence, second comma, eighth word.

“I hope you don’t still have those things.” said Professor Sinistra.

“I woke up and all the stuff was gone and the money I paid for it was in my trunk.” said Neville thoughtfully.

“How much do want to bet that Harry gave the seventh years back their stuff and he took Neville’s money?” asked Lee quietly.

“Without them even knowing they were giving a refund.” said Fred with a smirk.

End of ninth paragraph.

“That is a good point. Slytherin’s heir would never attack a pureblood.” said Sirius.

Dialogue line.

“No you’re not, you just have no confidence.” said Professor McGonagall.

Neville smiled.

Tenth paragraph, first sentence.
“Wonder how many people would leave and come back?” said Bill.

“Plenty of people left, but only a handful of them stayed home.” said Professor McGonagall.

Tenth paragraph, second sentence, first semi-colon.

“You both could have gone home and left it to others to take care of.” said Sirius.

“But Harry didn’t have anywhere to go. I didn’t know if he could come and visit us for Christmas.” said Ron

Tenth paragraph, end of second sentence.

“You gotta admit, it didn’t put you into a good light.” said Sirius.

End of tenth paragraph.

“Nice choice of words. Malfoy’s always were siding with the more powerful and profitable side. They almost always flip-flopped sides.” said Bill.

Eleventh paragraph, second sentence.

“It was nice knowing you.” said Sirius trying to keep a straight face.

End of eleventh paragraph.

“Really?” asked Snape amused.

“Out of all the people I’ve worked for, you were one of the ones that I would rather not mess with on that level.” said Harry, his eyes still closed, and still holding the stuffed dragon.

“Shh…” said Dumbledore soothingly, rubbing the top of Harry’s hair and placing a silencing spell around him.

“Best to let him rest.” said Dumbledore. “Having him wake up constantly will not give him the chance to get any better.”

Dialogue set.
Snape stared at Hermione hard, who shrunk and held onto Ron.

Twelfth paragraph.

“We didn’t want to get expelled.” said Ron.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

The teachers stared in shock.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

“Wouldn’t stop me from expelling you.” said Snape nastily.

End of dialogue set.

“Causing mayhem in Snape’s class can get you killed.” said George.

Thirteenth paragraph.

Snape smiled to himself; that was perhaps the nicest thing any student had ever said about him.

Fourteenth paragraph, third sentence.

“Aww…such a cheerful yuletide scene.” said Fred clasping his hands together.

Fourteenth paragraph, fourth sentence.

“That was one good thing about Slughorn, he didn’t give a damn what house you were in, if you did good work or were related to someone famous he praised your work.” said Sirius.

End of fourteenth paragraph.
Draco couldn’t help but smile, but the smile was washed away by the glare sent by his godfather.

Fifteenth paragraph, first sentence, first comma.

“I thought he wanted to mess up on purpose.” said a seventh year Ravenclaw.

“Yeah, but he was aiming for it to be a little runny and purple, it turned really runny, but it was the right color.” said Ron. “He wasn’t paying close enough attention, for a pretty good reason.”

Fifteenth paragraph, second sentence.

“He never cares when you tell him his potions are bad.” said Ron. “Well, sometimes he does...only when you press.”

Fifteenth paragraph, third sentence, first comma.

“Perfect choice of words.” said Remus remembering the year in which he taught Harry’s year about Boggarts.

End of fifteenth paragraph.

Sixteenth paragraph, first sentence.

Fred and George stared, shocked to the core.

“When he said he wanted one, we were happy to give it to him, thinking he’d prank someone good.” said George faintly.

“I never thought he’d use it in Snape’s classroom.” said Fred turning white.

“I’m amazed he’s still breathing.” said Lee.

Sixteenth paragraph.

Snape stared in amazement. “He actually aimed for Goyle’s potion?”

“Is there something significant about that particular one?” asked Firenze.

“Only that it was not completed fully, and it only had a tenth of the strength the other potions had.” said Snape quietly. “I had thought that it was quite lucky that the potion it landed in was that one.”
Ron and Hermione stared at each other, as well as several other people.

Seventeenth paragraph, first sentence.

Sirius could hardly contain his laughter.

“I’m so proud.” said Sirius beaming brightly and wiping a tear from his eye.

Seventeenth paragraph, third sentence, first dash.

“He got everyone but Crabbe, which might explain why he looked a little upset during all that ruckus.” said Ron thoughtfully.

End of seventeenth paragraph.

“That was a pretty good plan.” said Moody. “Not bad for a bookworm.”

Hermione smiled.

Dialogue line.

“And you’re going to get caught.” said Fred covering his eyes.

Eighteenth paragraph, second sentence, third comma.

“Pansy had gotten some of it on her…fanny.” said Parvati giggling like mad.

“I have that burned in my memory.” said Lavender holding her sides.

End of eighteenth paragraph.

Nineteenth paragraph, first sentence, first comma.

“That had to of been one of the funniest classes, EVER!” shouted Sirius laughing hard.
“Here it comes, he’s going to find out it’s Harry’s.” said George. “His fingerprints or something.”

Dialogue line.

“You didn’t see anything? You always see something when we pull something.” said Fred, slightly hurt.

“I tried finding something, something more concrete than just the evidence I would need to issue a detention.” said Snape sourly.

Twentieth paragraph, first sentence.

“He succeeded in that endeavor, but I knew he did it, I just didn’t have the means to prove it.” said Snape angrily.

End of twentieth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

“Wow, and I know that I didn’t believe that he knew, that Snape knew that he did it.” said Hermione.

“What?” asked Ron, completely lost.

Twenty-first paragraph.

Dialogue line.

“Make his life hell.” said almost everyone in the Great Hall.

Dialogue line.

“And Harry was right.” said Hermione in a whisper.
“Oh, did someone start up the Trick Flying Club, again? That was always popular with the guys and the girls loved to go and watch.” said Sirius.

“No, but we would have been a little safer with that.” said Fred.

“I don’t think they’re going to let in third years and under.” said Mr. Weasley. “Dueling is too advanced for smaller students.”

“Harry seemed to do pretty well.” said Fred with a smirk.

“Wow, Ron can even be sarcastic!” said Charlie laughing loudly.

“You wouldn’t shut up about it, till we agreed to go with you.” said Hermione.

“After a whole meal of badgering, yeah, we were all for it.” said Hermione.

“Most of the school? Who didn’t show up?” said Bill.

“The ones who said that it would promote violence and further discord amongst the students.” said Ron.

The Weasleys stared.

“Never heard you put anything quite like that before.” said Mrs. Weasley.

“I didn’t come up with it, they were handing out fliers for protesting against it.” said Ron. “I kept one, makes me laugh every time.”
Dialogue set.

“I wasn’t told about it, I would have taught, if I had known.” said Professor Flitwick.

Dialogue set, first sentence, second comma.

“Too late.” said several people together.

End of dialogue set.

“I’m rooting for Severua.” said Sirius excitedly.

“So are we.” said Dr. Clark and Remus eagerly. Snape stared at both of the men baffled.

Twenty-fourth paragraph, third sentence.

“Nope.” said the twins.

End of twenty-fourth paragraph.

“We thought so too.” said the twins with large smiles.

Dialogue set, first sentence, second comma.

“He asked to start it up, but he assured that someone who was a qualified Duelist would be teaching them.” said Dumbledore quickly in response to all the glares sent his way. “I had assumed that Professor Flitwick was the one who would be training the students.”

“Why would you assume that, with him?” asked Professor Sprout.

“Because that is what Gilderoy had told me.” said Dumbledore.

End of dialogue set.

“Well, thank goodness that we don’t have to sit here and hear him preen his own feathers.” said
Sirius sighing with relief.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

“Trust us, we know who he is.” said Charlie.

“And he's not going to like being called your assistant.” said Sirius with a malicious smile.

Dialogue set, second sentence, twelfth word.

“A tiny little bit, huh?” said Remus over to Professor Snape with a smile.

“Shouldn’t you be sleeping?” said Dr. Clark trying to sit up, but Sirius pushed him back down.

“I’m feeling quite a bit better now.” said Remus with a smile.

“We’ll see about that.” said Madam Pomfrey placing the tip of her wand to Remus’ forehead. A thin piece of parchment came out and she read it. “Your temperature is back to normal!” she said shocked.

“Told you. Now we just need to worry about Harry and Sam.” said Remus with a sad smile.

“I just fainted nothing major.” said Dr. Clark with a smile.

End of dialogue set.

“Dazzle Gums couldn’t duel his way out of a chicken coop.” said Sirius.

“Remember in our third year when he boasted that he could beat anyone in a duel? He got his butt handed to him by Lily. She didn’t even look at him, just waved her wand once and it was all over.” said Remus with a bright smile. “The Disarming Spell is all it took.”

Professor Snape fingered the locket and smiled.

Dialogue line.

“RONALD!” shouted Mrs. Weasley.

“Sorry, Professor.” said Ron quickly. “But I wished you had finished him off.”

“As do I.” said Professor Snape, sneering.
“And Harry’s not afraid of anything.” said Fred.

“If Harry’s scared, everyone else has already run far, far away.” said George.

“You’ve got to admit, Lockhart tries to have style.” said Kingsley with a smirk.

“Well, they’re starting out right.” said Professor Flitwick, eagerly waiting for the fur to fly in the book. He remembered teaching dueling many years ago, and Lockhart would have never stood a chance against Severus Snape, and he doubt anything had changed since.

“Too bad.” said Tonks.

“Doesn’t miss a tick, does he?” said Fred with an eager smile.

“You used Lily’s spell? Nice touch.” said Remus.

The students all cheered, even Gryffindor House.

“You’re awesome!” said a first year Gryffindor. Snape stared at the youth.
“Now if only you would chill out with kids, you’d be one of the more popular teachers here.” said Sirius with a laugh. Snape sat dumbfounded.

Twenty-eighth paragraph.

“Who cares?” asked Sirius, Remus and Dr. Clark together.

Dialogue line.

“Right on.” said Remus smiling hugely.

Twenty-ninth paragraph.

“Beautiful, absolutely beautiful.” said Sirius tears coming down from laughing so hard.

Dialogue set, third sentence, second dash.

“He began feeling around the ground, like he lost his glasses.” said Ron with a snort.

Dialogue set, third sentence, third dash.

“Should have thrown it away.” said Fred looking disappointed at Lavender.

Dialogue set, end of third sentence.

“Liar.” said the students and most of the adults.

End of dialogue set.

“There were practice dummies in the corner, they could have used them, if he was aiming for showing what happens with what spell.” said Ernie.
“Run Dazzle Gums, run away fast.” said Sirius.

“Good call.” said Remus.

“I hope Professor Lockhart doesn’t pair Harry with himself.” said Remus warningly.

“Nope, he picks someone worse.” said Ron.

“I couldn’t believe it, I was the better dueler.” said Neville with a small smile. “Not by much though.”

“It is a good idea for two reasons. One, it is good to know what other people have learned.” said Remus. “Two, Ron’s wand is still on the fritz.”

“Jeez, there is no getting your way, is there?” said Dr. Clark looking over at the sleeping young man fondly.

Harry was still sleeping soundly, but was still running a temperature. Dumbledore continued wiping the boy’s brow with a cool cloth. Harry gave a quiet moan.

“Poor thing.” said Madam Pomfrey gently fluffing the pillow the boy’s head rested on.
End of dialogue set.

“It’s a double header folks! We’ve got the Pampered Prince, and the Noble Knight going head to head in one ring.” said Fred.

“And Beauty facing the Beast in the other!” said George. “Who will be victorious?” both pretending to hold invisible microphones.

Thirty-third paragraph.

“Take a guess who the ‘Beast’ is.” said George.

Dialogue line.

Thirty-fourth paragraph.

“Nice to know that Potter isn’t too trusting.” said Moody.

Dialogue set, second sentence, second dash.

“Now, let’s see how many people actually follow that little rule.” said Tonks with a smile.

End of dialogue set.

“BANG! People lay injured all across the hall.” said Fred dramatically.

“And the source of the blast came from the clash of power between the two rival’s houses.” said George in a hushed tone. Both talking into their microphones.

“Very funny, I thought there really was an explosion.” said Mr. Weasley severely crossed and holding his chest.

Thirty-fifth paragraph, first sentence, first colon.

“What a dirty cheat!” said a Hufflepuff third year.

“Of course he’d start early, the only way to beat Potter’s reflexes.” said Moody.
Harry coughed loudly, moaned a little and buried himself deeper into the soft pillows.

“His fever isn’t breaking, is it?” asked Hermione in a whisper.

“No, not yet.” said Madam Pomfrey worriedly. “And I’ve placed several fever reducing spells on him.”

Moody and Lionus smiled, both couldn’t wait to train him up even farther and see what he could become.

“He said ‘Disarm!’” shouted the Minister.

“Well the Malfoy boy didn’t exactly follow the rules to start with.” snapped Lionus. “Be silent!”

“If there were two different houses going at each other, there was no such thing as only disarming,” said Angelina.

“Not the time to be a gentleman, boy.” growled Moody.

“It was sort of funny.” said Ron. “I caught a bit of it, he said that, that was the only time he could actually dance.”

“Bad is he?” said Sirius.

“In his own words, he’s got the dance coordination of a fawn on ice. Climbing and leaping are one thing, The Foxtrot and all those other dances throw him completely.”
“Shame, his father was a beautiful dancer.” said Professor McGonagall.

“Lily was the best girl dancer in the school. Every guy wanted to do a few steps with her.” said Remus fondly.

“Guess what Harry lacks in dance-floor coordination, he makes up with his vocal chords.” said Sirius.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

“Lockhart is utterly useless.” said McGonagall massage her temples.

Thirty-seventh paragraph, second sentence, second semi-colon.

“What did his wand do?” asked Charlie.

“My eyebrows were singed off, for the second time in two years.” said Seamus.

Thirty-seven paragraph, second sentence, third semi-colon.

“Go Hermione!” shouted Fred and George.

Thirty-seventh paragraph, second sentence, fourth semi-colon.

“Oh…dear…..” said the twins in small voices.

End of thirty-seventh paragraph.

“But he managed to do it.” said Ron. “He tripped her with his feet and for added measure, he pulled her hair.”

“Never touch a woman’s hair. Voice of experience, right here.” said Sirius pointing to himself.

Dialogue set, first pause.

“I got hit with a stray spell took me by surprise.” said Cormac tragically.
“He didn’t say McClaggan, he said Macmillian.” said Blaise.

“He didn’t talk to me, he was actually talking to McClaggan, he got the names wrong.” said Ernie.

“But he did realize that I was hit, he promised that he would find out who shot that stray spell and have a good talking to, to them.” said Cormac, trying to appear dramatic again.

“You didn’t get hit with a stray spell, I jinxed you.” said a Hufflepuff girl. “You were just trying to show off flaunting your wand about.”

Dialogue set, second pause, second comma.

“Aww…were you okay?” said her best friend.

“I was fine, I just got hit with someone’s shoe.” said the Hufflepuff girl.

End of dialogue set.

“He had to pick me up off the floor.” said Terry.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

“Gee, you think?” said Lee rolling his eyes.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

“He didn’t want to be the one to try and block spells. OR the one to cast them, just in case they rebounded.” said a seventh year Ravenclaw sniggering.

End of dialogue set.

“Would have been fun to be up on that stage.” said Justin grudgingly.

“You weren’t up there.” said Malfoy with a snarl.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

“Sirius, stop laughing.” said Remus with a disappointed look.
“Only because you’re nervous.” said Ron.

“That doesn’t do Neville’s confidence any favors.” said Remus looking over to Snape sharply.

“I’m here to teach, not boost their morale.” drawled Snape.

“I’m amazed none of the Slytherins have inferiority complexes.” said Professor Sprout.

“Oh, come on.” said Dr. Clark. “You don’t think Lockhart is that stupid to put the two students, who hate each other, free reign of a stage and go at each other do you?”

Professor Snape only sneered.

“I wouldn’t be smiling, that just means you’re a stupid fool, for suggesting it.” said Nightstrike with a smirk.

“You…have got…to be kidding me…” said Dr. Clark shaking his head.

“Moron.” said voices all over the Great Hall.

“Over excited at what?” said Remus looking repulsed.

“I don’t want to know.” said Sirius covering his ears.
“Never a good sign to see a smirking snake.” said Sirius wisely.

“I don’t blame him, if I was seeing Snape whispering, than one of his house smiling, I’d be a little nervous too.” said Remus.

“So cool.” sighed a few younger girls.

“Not a good idea. Don’t listen to Dazzle Gums.” said Sirius quickly.

“OI! THAT’S NOT A DISARMING SPELL EITHER!” shouted Sirius.

“We never said we would be blocking the Disarming Spell.” sneered Snape.

“He was shocked? How come? Surely he had heard of this spell.” said Sirius.

Hermione turned and looked interested over to Ron.

“Harry didn’t expect to have an animal sicked on him.” said Ron.
“Just back up slowly, keep looking at it, but back up real slow.” said Dr. Clark.

Dumbledore turned and sent a glare over to the Potions Master. Professor Snape released a breath of air and awaited the screaming match that would immediately commence.

Mrs. Weasley glowered fiercely at him, she was quickly becoming hoarse from all the shouting she had done the past weeks, and McGonagall shouted angry threats at him for endangering students and not being there to protect them. Sirius was promising him that he would be torn limb from limb while Dr. Clark stared in disbelief that a teacher would do such a thing.

“You owe, Mr. Potter a very large apology Severus.” said Dumbledore, his voice so cold that the windows were becoming covered in frost.

Snape flinched from the coldness of the Headmaster’s voice, and fingered the locket in his hand. He breathed deeply and stood up. When Sirius noticed he was heading straight for his Godson, Sirius stood up quickly and shielded him.

“Think again.” said Sirius viciously.

Snape said nothing but held out the locket.

“He can have this back.” said Snape quietly. “As an apology.”

Sirius was taken aback, but took the small golden locket. He gave a curt nod, and placed the locket around the sleeping figure’s neck.

“Big help this guy is.” said Nightstrike rolling his eyes.

Justin threw the book down.

“What’s up with you?” asked Zacharias.

“This…this…” said Justin, turning pale.
“Oh for the love of…I’ll read.” said Lee hurrying over and taking the book off the floor.

Forty-fourth paragraph, third sentence.

“Of what use was that?” asked a third year Slytherin.

“You’re forgetting what he is.” said Blaise. “He’s a Parseltmouth.”

“So he did say that.” said Ernie.

“Of course he did, you idiot.” said Ron.

Forty-fourth paragraph, fourth sentence.

“Go Harry!” said Dr. Clark excitedly.

End of forty-fourth paragraph.

“Cause you ordered it.” said Lionus with a bright and excited smile.

Forty-fifth paragraph.

Justin looked down shamefully. “How was I supposed to know that was what he was saying?”

“Let’s think about this carefully.” said Fred mockingly.

“Harry is a selfless, noble, kind, trustworthy, generous, gentle, brilliant, gentlemanly, and gallant.” said George ticking off each one.

“If he saw someone about to be attacked by an angry snake, and he could only shout one thing at it. What would he say?” asked Fred pointedly.

Dialogue line.

“You’re…an…idiot…” said the twins together.

Forty-sixth paragraph, second sentence.
“His being a Parselmouth was ...unexpected.” said Snape solemnly.

Forty-sixth paragraph, third sentence.

“He must have felt so devastated.” said Luna calmly.

“What makes you say that, Luna?” said Ginny quickly.

“People were already saying he was the heir of Slytherin, now it seemed to have cemented itself.” said Luna.

Forty-sixth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

“Good Ron, get him out of there.” said Charlie.

Forty-seventh paragraph, second sentence.

“Harry was starting to freak out a little bit. He didn’t know what was going on.” said Hermione.

Forty-seventh paragraph, third sentence.

“Way to reassure him guys.” said Sirius shaking his head.

End of forty-seventh paragraph.

Dialogue line.

“Really? He didn’t know? He never looked up his talent?” asked Parvati.

“He thought every wizard could do it.” said Ron.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set.

“Boy, he said that all matter-of-factly didn’t he?” said Rivers blinking.
“Nope, not at all.” said Blaise, “it would be cool to have though.”

“At the time, no one heard that.” said a sixth year Hufflepuff.

“He became really worried when I told him that.” said Ron.

“Even you thought he was egging on the snake?” said Bill shaking his head.

“That’s what I heard from other people in the Hall.” said Ron quickly.

“That is a very good question.” said Dumbledore with a slight smile.

“Are you kidding? At that point he couldn’t put two and two together?” said Zacharias.

“Being accused of the heir didn’t outweigh the bonus of being able to speak to snakes.” said Ron. “And thank goodness he had the ability.” he finished quietly.
Justin looked down shamefully as Sirius glared at him. “Yeah, what is wrong with that?” asked Sirius angrily.

“Good blend.” said George with a chortle.

“That was when he found the downside to being a Parselmouth.” said Ron.

“Which he is not.” said Dumbledore still cooling Harry’s forehead.

“Poor Harry.” said Tonks.

“But he doesn’t have to worry, he’s not descended from Slytherin.” said Sirius.

“Are you kidding me? There are hundreds of books on family ancestry, for each Pureblood wizarding family. The Potter’s book is in the Ancestry section, fourth unit in, sixth shelf, tenth book from the left.” said Remus.

Hermione looked over to Remus quickly and ran from the room.

“Well, she won’t be back till she can get her hands on that book.” said Ron with a smile.

“That may be harder to get than she thinks.” said McGonagall with a small smile.

“What do you mean?” asked Dean.
“Not just anyone can look at those books. You need to be related to people in the book to just look inside the book.” said Sirius.

“Madam Pince will let her, she could just say…” said Ron.

“It’s not Madam Pince who will stop her. It’s the book, the cover is enchanted to let no one but a blood relative open it.” said Remus.

“Yeah, James showed us, we couldn’t open it for the life of us.” said Sirius.

They waited for Hermione to appear, aimlessly speaking of different things, some people even came up with a great idea for a party.

“A sort of joined up Birthday Parties that he missed out on.” said Fred.

“Yeah…should be a blast. Hermione’s back, she’s got the book, but nope, not opened.” said
George.

“Sorry we didn’t warn you.” said Sirius apologetically. “You’re going to have to wait till Harry wakes up to read that book.” he pointed to the book in Hermione’s hands.

End of dialogue set.

Fifty-first paragraph, first sentence.

“That boy does not need to be worrying so much that he cannot sleep.” said McGonagall worriedly.

End of fifty-first paragraph.

Fifty-second paragraph, first sentence.

“No.” said Sirius and Remus.

Fifty-second paragraph, second sentence.

Remus and Sirius paled, and looked down in shame. They should have been there, to tell him all of this stuff? Would he still want to know?

End of fifty-second paragraph.

“Hell, they ban questions on anything.” said Charlie.
“Well reasoned.” said Dumbledore with a broad smile.

“That, I can’t guarantee.” said Sirius thinking of his biological family.

“Hearing voices eh?” said Fudge nastily.

“Shut up. You’re already in hot enough water.” said Tempest.

“Yeah, now that I think about it, what else could he have said.” said a sixth year Hufflepuff.

“Lucky!” said Sirius with a smile.

“Not so lucky, Harry wanted to talk to Justin in that class.” said Remus.

“Oh, right.” said Sirius.

“We couldn’t afford screw ups.” said Professor Sprout and Madam Pomfrey.

“You did not just snap at him for worrying.” said Fred.

Hermione looked down.
“And girls say boys don’t have tact.” said Lee shaking his head.

Fifty-ninth paragraph.

“Should have went with him, Hermione could have been with him and that would have been proof enough for anyone that he isn’t a Muggleborn hater.” said Ron.

Sixtieth paragraph, second sentence, first comma.

“We need to get him a nice triple thick cloak for winter or something.” said Sirius.

Sixtieth paragraph, third sentence.

“That would be me.” said a seventh year Hufflepuff.

“I have to keep apologizing for that.” said another Hufflepuff student.

End of sixtieth paragraph.

Ernie gulped loudly, what was everyone going to say about what he says? And what happens if a Scattered Shot shows what else had happened?

Sixty-first paragraph, first sentence.

“Madam Pince won’t like that. The library is not a social place.” said Anthony.

End of sixty-first paragraph.

“Wow, we didn’t even see him.” said Hannah.

“Or hear him. The Invisibility section was right next to us. You’d think we’d of heard his breathing.” said Ernie.

Kingsley looked at Harry, deeply impressed.
“WHAT?” shouted several adults as well as a few students younger than the fourth years.

“Harry wouldn’t attack anyone you nit!” said a second year Gryffindor.

“You’re a bigger idiot than what I thought.” said Ron.

Ernie looked at him.

“Harry didn’t tell us this part.” said Hermione.

“Nothing happened when Justin told us that he was a Muggleborn. Stupid idiot.” said Ron glaring.

“Can we beat him up now?” asked Fred scowling at Ernie.

“The Chamber wasn’t opened at the time!” said George.

“Panic will turn children into mindless idiots.” said Snape shaking his head.

“What a prat! I thought Percy was bad.” said Charlie.

“HARRY POTTER!” shouted the majority of the school at the fifth year Hufflepuff, who cringed in his seat with each passing word.
“And what student hasn’t had a run in with him.” said McGonagall sternly.

Sixty-second paragraph, fourth sentence.

“The culprit could be anybody!” said Fred.

“Hell! We could have done it!” said George.

Sixty-second paragraph, fifth sentence.

“Wouldn’t you be annoyed?” asked Mr. Weasley to the young man. Ernie swallowed and nodded.

End of sixty-second paragraph.

“Harry was regrowing his bones in the Infirmary! Ask Pomfrey!” shouted Tonks. “I’ve never been so ashamed of my own house.”

Dialogue line.

“The only one there with a brain.” said Blaise.

Sixty-third paragraph.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

“So far the only true thing you’ve said so far.” said Sirius crossly.

Dialogue set, third sentence.

“I didn’t want him to be blasted!” said Ernie quickly when he saw the look on the adult’s faces.

Dialogue set, fourth sentence.

Dumbledore massaged his temple, while Professor Sprout told off the loud mouthed Hufflepuff.
“When you eventually grow up.” said Tonks. “Don’t become an Auror, we don’t’ want you.”

Kingsley smirked. “No comment.”

“I’m not like him!” said Tonks irritably.

“I’m referring to the ‘grow up’ part.” said Kingsley.

“Shut up.” she said throwing a cushion at the man.

“None that he’s going to share with you now.” said Ron.

“Dun, dun, duunnn.” said Lee jokingly.

“I can imagine.” said Sirius forgetting to be angry for a moment.

“And look, he doesn’t attack you right off the bat, gee, what could be the reason?” said Ron.

“Because he didn’t do anything to Colin or Mrs. Norris.” said Hermione.

“That was absolutely the wrong thing to say.” said Dr. Nicodemus.

“Harry wanted to tell them that he meant Justin no harm. He just wanted to talk.” said Ron.
“To tell him the truth and not have you lot over exaggerate it.” said Lee.

Sirius smiled and gave his godson’s shoulder a small squeeze.

“You need thicker glasses than Harry has.” said Dean.

“Silly fool.” said Professor Sprout.

Ernie didn’t want the rest of the school knowing just how worse it gets later.

“If he really was the heir of Slytherin, you annoying him like that won’t help you in the slightest and he would have made a great exception in your favor.” said Moody.

Ernie paled.

“That’ll teach you to treat people better, you never know what they can do.” said Kingsley.
“Should we let you live with the Dursleys for about a week, see if you like them or not?” said Dr. Clark.

Ernie shook his head quickly.

Remus, Dr. Clark and Sirius looked up quickly.

“T’wasn’t the monster.” said Hagrid reassuringly.

Sirius smiled in relief.

“It’s so easy to pick you out of a crowd Hagrid.” said Dr. Clark with a broad smile.

“What are you doing with a dead chicken in the castle?” asked Remus wonderingly.

“I needed Dumbledore’s permission fer somethin’.” said Hagrid.

“What the heck is a Blood-Sucking Bugbear?” asked Dr. Clark.
“Sort of like a leech, only about five times bigger.” said Remus. “Nasty little bastards.”

“He gets a few of them almost every time he transforms.” said Sirius.

“I still can’t believe that you’re a werewolf.” said Dr. Clark shaking his head.

Seventy-first paragraph.

Dialogue line.

“Shouldn’ta put it that way.” said Hagrid, the face under his beard turning a bright red.

Seventy-second paragraph.

“He shoulda told me, I’d a sort them kids out.” said Hagrid.

Dialogue line.

Seventy-third paragraph.

Dialogue line.

“So Harry’s not as thick-skinned as he would like everyone to think.” said Luna dreamily.

That statement shook several people.

Seventy-fourth paragraph.

“Was Peeves making a nuisance of himself again?” asked Sirius.

“No, much worse.” said McGonagall.

Seventy-fifth paragraph.

“Oh, no! Another attack!” said Remus.

Seventy-sixth paragraph, first sentence, first comma.
“Damn…..the timing could have been so much better.” said Sirius shaking his head.

“What the hell made you leave the dormitory?” asked Hannah.

“I wanted to ask Ernie if it was safe enough for me to come out.” said Justin.

“Well, you got your answer didn’t you?” said Nightstrike.

End of seventy-sixth paragraph.

“The monster?” asked Dr. Clark weakly.

“No, it wasn’t that.” said Hermione.

Seventy-seventh paragraph.

“So…whatever it is, it can attack dead people?” said Tonks faintly.

“We’re doomed.” said a third year Gryffindor.

Seventy-eighth paragraph, second sentence.

“Spiders, again?” said Sirius rubbing his chin thoughtfully.

End of seventy-eighth paragraph.

Seventy-ninth paragraph.

“Harry really needs to learn to just run away.” said Alicia.

Eightieth paragraph.

“Not the ideal person to find Harry there.” said Remus.

Dialogue line.

“Peeves actually really likes Harry.” said Dr. Clark.
“What?” said Sirius.

“He just tries to make Harry laugh. Sometimes it works, sometimes it doesn’t.” said Dr. Clark with a bright smile. “He knows Harry doesn’t laugh a whole lot.”

Eighty-first paragraph.

“That is the only time he took his job as ‘School ghost’ seriously.” said McGonagall.

Eighty-second paragraph, second sentence, first comma, fifteenth word.

“Can’t say I’m very sorry to hear it.” said Sirius. “After the headache you gave my cub.”

Eighty-second paragraph, end of second sentence.

“Bet they regretted that.” said Fred with a smirk.

Eighty-second paragraph, third sentence.

“Who pinned him there?” asked Sirius.

“I did.” said Professor Vector, “the students were about to pounce on him. I had to send a few students flying backwards.”

The men that were once in the bowl paled.

End of eighty-second paragraph.

Dialogue line.

“I hope you did something about him.” said Sirius.

“Not enough.” said Ron quietly.

Dialogue line.

Eighty-third paragraph.
“Peeves’ singing voice is awful. I sort of envy Justin.” said Sirius shaking his head.

Peeves Song

“I’m going to shove him in vacuum cleaner.” said Sirius.

Dialogue line.

Eighty-fourth paragraph, first sentence, first comma.

“They made you carry him?” said Sirius to Professor Flitwick. “Sinistra is pretty tall.”

“It did take some doing to get to the Hospital Wing.” said Professor Flitwick.

Eighty-fourth paragraph, third sentence.

“I’ll bet he didn’t like that job one bit.” said Remus.

“I, at the time, didn’t care one bit what he did or did not like.” said Professor McGonagall.

End of eighty-fourth paragraph.

“At least it isn’t Professor Snape.” said a seventh year Gryffindor.

“Or Lockhart.” said Remus, Sirius, and Dr. Clark.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

“I should have told him that I don’t believe it was him.” said McGonagall distraughtly.

“I reassured him for you.” said Dumbledore patting her arm.

Eighty-fifth paragraph.
“Wow, that was really close to the Headmaster’s office.” said Remus carefully.
“You don’t think that the monster is after him? Do you?” asked Sirius quickly.
“Sounds like it. The Headmaster had two attacks near him so far.” said Remus.

Dialogue set, fourth sentence.

“That is what Albus hopes for when all come into his office. They forget their fears, calm down and tell him what they need to tell him.” said McGonagall.

Dialogue set, seventh sentence, fourth comma.

“That’s what it was like for our first twenty times too.” said Sirius.

End of dialogue set.

Eighty-sixth paragraph, first sentence.

“He didn’t know where he was going?” said Fred.

“I didn’t tell him, and he did seem a bit dazed.” said McGonagall.

End of chapter.

“Dumbledore will believe him.” said Sirius with a smile.

Suddenly, the book began to shake and smoke poured out of it. “What’s going on with it now?” asked Lee, holding the book out at arm’s length.

“I’m…not…sure…” said Speckerton faintly.

The smoke etched it’s way across the floor, and the moment it touched one person they couldn’t move.

“What’s going on?” said Fred trying to move his legs, but were cemented to the ground.

“Don’t worry, the books wouldn’t hurt anyone.” said Speckerton trying to reassure the students who were panicking slightly.

“Tell that to Remus.” said Sirius, trying to move, but was unsuccessful. The only person who went untouched by the smoke was Harry. It swirled around him and before the smoke captured the last person, it began to twist and turned into a smoky cyclone, protecting him.
Once the last person was captured, the smoke rose and they felt themselves falling into space.
I don't own Harry Potter

ALSO I have a new job and am going to volunteer at a store, so it may take a while to upload. I would say I'm sorry...but...everyone needs to work, I've had one month vacation...so it's time to get back to work.

The smoke dropped them off in what appeared to be a deserted corridor. At first glance, the students of the past and students of the present recognized their location as the corridor near the library.

“What are you doing?” asked Sirius to Speckerton, who was writing furiously on a roll of parchment.

“This is a new development, I want to make sure I learn everything I can.” he said excitedly, but the parchment suddenly caught fire and was reduced to ashes. He stared at the ashes in shock.

“Apparently the book doesn’t want you to spend your time writing instead of watching.” said Lionus with a smirk. “Just try to remember what you see.”

Then, a large group of Hufflepuffs, mostly seventh years but a scattering of the younger years, came by muttering to amongst themselves and hurried into an unused classroom, leaving the door open a crack.

“Hey Ernie, what were you guys going in there for?” asked Hannah, who pointed out the Prefect. They looked at Ernie, but were stunned to see him looking so pale.

“Um…we won’t get expelled during these things, right?” said Ernie and few older Hufflepuffs worriedly.

“I said no earlier, but should we be contemplating it?” asked Dumbledore seriously.

“Well…I…we…” said Ernie helplessly.

“Hey, look! It’s Harry.” said Colin excitedly.

Harry came walking from the direction of the library and was deeply immersed in a book. He didn’t even notice the Hufflepuffs looking out of the classroom quickly and duck back in.

Hermione hurried over and read the cover, "Fangs and Talons: Magical Beasts and their Weapons.” read Hermione.

“What is he reading that book for?” asked Justin.

“Harry figured that he would try and find out what the monster is, while we try and discover who the heir is.” said Ron. “He never did find out, and for somewhat of a good reason.”
As Harry continued down the corridor, the door opened a little more. When Harry passed the door, still reading his book, hands shot out and grabbed Harry roughly and dragged him into the empty room, the book flew out of his hands, but was magicked into the spare classroom.

“What the hell are you kids playing at?” asked Sirius furiously.

Ernie cringed and looked around nervously.

The scene seemed to have shifted into fast forward mode. A short while later, they watched, in high speed, people from the empty leave, some with satisfied sneers on their face and others with nervous glances towards the darkened room. They all waited, but Harry never came to the door. Then, they saw something that looked like glittery powder come from under the crack of the door and waft down the hall.

“What was that?” asked Dr. Clark.

“Who cares? I want to find out what happened to Harry.” said Sirius walking towards the door.

They all went into the dark room, but they couldn’t see anything. They could hear shallow breathing but nothing more than that. Minutes passed like hours, till the door behind them opened and in came Ron, a large bag slung over his shoulder.

“Harry?” he whispered, peering into the darkness. “You in here?”

“Over here.” said a raspy voice.

“That powder told you to come and find him?” said Hermione in wonder.

“It was something Harry came up with.” said Ron. “He used it only that one time.”

Ron lit the tip of his wand, he and the Watchers both gasped in horror down at the young man laying against the wall. Harry was now sporting two black eyes; his nose was bloodied, and was covered with bruises all over his body.

“What happened to you, mate?” said Ron kneeling beside him quickly.

“Hufflepuffs…jumped…me.” said Harry weakly. “They’re….scared, they don’t know…..what to believe anymore.” he gasped loudly and arched his back when Ron touched a spot on his chest.

“Sorry Harry.” said Ron hastily. “Should I try and get Madam Pomfrey?”

“No, for this, she’d ask questions.” said Harry.

“And why the hell not.” said Ron opening the large bag. “You like getting the magic smacked out of you?”

“No more than the next person.” said Harry reaching into the bag and taking a phial.

They watched as Ron helped Harry drink a clear potion and helped Harry to his feet. “Well that takes care of any broken bones, and most of the cuts and scrapes. But what about those two black eyes, they aren’t going to swell now, but kinda hard to hide the bruises.” said Ron.

“Simple, where’s my bag?” he reached down and pulled out a small compact.

“That’s makeup.” said Ron taking a step back.
“That’s right.” said Harry. “Glamour charms don’t last long and they disappear without warning. At least this stuff doesn’t disappear on me.” he finished putting the fair colored powder on his face.

“You know how to do that a little too well.” said Ron with a smirk. “Now what do we do?”

“Those potions were only a temporary fix. I’ve got more powerful ones upstairs in my trunk.” said Harry.

“Why didn’t you tell me to bring those ones down?” asked Ron.

“I’ve got some other things in there you don’t want to mess with.” said Harry magicking the classroom back to the way it was before the attack began.

“Like what?” said Ron. as they walked towards the direction of the Gryffindor dormitories.

“Dirty socks.” said Harry with a laugh.

They followed the two Gryffindors back to their Common Room and up into their dormitory. Harry opened the trunk and dug down to the bottom of the trunk and pulled out three small vials. He downed one right after the other and went to go lay in the bed.

“You gonna okay mate?” asked Ron worriedly.

“I’ll be fine. Just need to sleep for the rest of the day.” said Harry. “Don’t tell Hermione, she’s panicky enough, she doesn’t need to worry about me.”

The smoke came back to claim them and returned each person safely back to the Great Hall. Harry was still asleep when they got there. Hermione glared at Ron, but it wasn’t as hard or threatening as it could have been.

“I think that’s more than enough reading for today. Let’s get some food in our stomachs and then off to bed.” said Dumbledore with a strained smile, trying not to shout, being so close to Harry. He stayed beside the bed, along with the three men; none of them were feeling very hungry at the moment.

Before the Hufflepuffs could even walk over and get their plates, Tonks, Madam Bones, Professor Sprout and Professor McGonagall gave each of the assaulters (that were present at the time) a severe tongue lashing and promised each of them a long and very strong letter to each of their parents.

Ron even received a slight one from both Mrs. Weasley and Hermione.

“You should have told us!” said the both of them angrily.

“Harry didn’t…” said Ron.

“Harry has to learn to trust us, Ron.” said Remus.

“You’re sounding calmer.” said Sirius looking stunned.

“I don’t want to get shot in the chest again.” said Remus quietly.

“That was scary.” said Tonks giving him a hug. “Don’t do that again.”

“I won’t, I learned my lesson.” said Remus.
“Hopefully.” muttered Sirius.

As they ate their dinner, the members of Hufflepuff distinctly quiet, they discussed what had happened over the course of so many days.

“It’s going to be odd, going back to lessons.” said a fourth year Gryffindor. “Once these readings are done.”

“Yeah, but these books are starting to scare me a bit, can they really think?” said Hannah quietly.

“If it can, I want to give it a piece of my mind.” said Ernie bitterly.

“You deserved it.” said Hannah shortly. “I can’t believe you actually went out and attacked him!” Ernie shuffled his feet.

After Harry was put to bed in the suite prepared for them, Sirius placed an everlasting ice bag on his forehead. He ruffled his hair gently and blew out the candles. He walked out of the room, but not before turning around and looking worriedly at the young boy, who moaned slightly.

“I wish we could find out what is going on with Harry.” said Dr. Clark looking up from his book, Fantastic Beasts and Where to Find Them. He found reading helped ease his mind slightly.

“So do I.” said Remus looking up from his own book, “But I’ve gone through all the Magical Ailments reference books, but I can’t find a bloody thing on what it might be.”

“Could be that you skipped over it.” said a voice coming from the door. The men turned and saw Lionus and Dr. Nicodemus standing in the door way.

“Did you finally find out what is causing Harry to sleep?” said Dr. Clark

“And why he’s sick?” asked Sirius hopefully.

“We just got the message now.” said Dr. Nicodemus, walking swiftly over to the door and going inside.

“Best let him do his work.” said Lionus, stopping them from going in the room.

“What is wrong with him then?” asked Dr. Clark quickly.

Lionus looked over to the two wizards. “Ever heard of Wizard’s Flu?”

“Wizard’s Flu?” said the two of them, they shook their heads.

“I didn’t think so, it’s not a secret like all the other things we have, but it is an old ailment. Nowadays, wizarding babies have a potion given to them in a bottle after they’ve turned six months. Turns out, Harry was never given it.”

“But we took him to the Hospital for his baby boosters.” said Sirius. “I held him myself….but…there was one potion that he couldn’t take.” he finished slowly.

“That’s right, he was allergic to the wormroot in it. But the Healer said he wouldn’t need it.” said Remus.

“Obviously, he needed it desperately. Or perhaps he was destined to procure this disease?” said
Lionus cryptically.

“Say what?” said Sirius with a raised brow. Lionus ignored him.

“For this disease, it makes you weak, and causes you to sleep uncontrollably. That’s the first stage. The second stage is the fever.” said Lionus. “It was ill luck that it struck when it did.”

“What’s the next stage? When will that hit?” asked Remus.

“It’s hitting him right now.” said Lionus.

“What’s happening?” said Sirius frantically.

“You don’t want to know.” said Lionus. “Let’s just say, it’s a bit traumatizing, and you’d best stay out here for the night.” he addressed Sirius.

“But,” said Sirius.

“No buts, let the Doc do what he needs to do.” said Lionus. “And in the morning, he’ll be right as rain.”

“You guys said that last time.” said Remus skeptically.

“Yeah, doesn’t do much for Doc’s pride, or mine for that matter.” said Lionus scratching the back of his head. “But I think you’ll be surprised at the change.”

Suddenly, a scream emitted from the room behind him again. Sirius leapt into the air and accidentally landed in Dr. Clark’s arms.

“What the hell…that was HARRY!” shouted Sirius.

Lionus quickly casted a silencing charm behind him and smiled towards the men. “Like I said, going in there would be a very bad idea.”

“What is he doing to Harry in there?” asked Remus accusingly.

“Trying to ease the suffering, that scream came from the pain caused by the disease.” said Lionus. “You might want to sleep elsewhere if it bothers you; it’s going to be a long night.”

He motioned them away from the door and ushered them into chairs.

“Going completely off track, remember when I was out cold?” said Remus trying to get his mind off his poor cub’s suffering.

“Yeah, what about it?” asked Sirius looking nervously back to the door to his room.

“Well, you won’t believe what I saw when I was out.” said Remus. He quickly told them all that he saw.

“You saw him? How is that possible? He’s been dead for so long!” said Sirius.

“Do you think he’s controlling the book?” asked Dr. Clark.

“It would make sense.” said Lionus thoughtfully. “The books sometimes do channel a loved one’s spirit. Someone who sacrificed their bodies for the subject.”
“But he…why isn’t…” said Sirius.

Dr. Clark looked uncomfortable.

“We probably won’t know for sure, but at least we know the book means no harm to Harry, we just have to watch what we say and do.” said Lionus.
The next morning, Harry, nor Dr. Nicodemus had left the bedroom. Lionus led the three men down to the Entrance Hall for an early start to the day. However, his early start was six in the morning.

“What the hell did you get us up for?” asked Sirius walking down to the front doors.

“To keep me company, and to make sure you don’t sneak into the room and disturb the Doc.” Lionus said with a smile. “Come on, you can keep me company while I work out today, I feel my strength just ebbing away just sitting in there.”

Sirius and Remus shook their heads and walked with Dr. Clark and Lionus. “I don’t mind going outside. I haven’t been outside much since I’ve been here.” said Dr. Clark.

Well the idea of just a few simple push ups and jogging around done by Lionus was anything but simple, and the idea was just mere fantasy.

They stared in complete shock as he ran up the castle wall and leaped and bounded from tower to torrent and then back down to the ground. Before he touched down, they saw that his nails had extended themselves into what looked like long claws.

And just as soon as one foot touched the grass, he sped off again, but this time, he dove into the lake. Remus looked around for him to start swimming laps or something, but he never came up. Suddenly, after a frantic seven minutes, he came shooting out of the lake like a rocket taking off.

He finally came to a halt and sat on a large boulder beside the lake. He shook the excess water from his hair while the men ran over to him.

“Are you out of your mind?” shouted Sirius.
“How did you do all that?” asked Remus in a shocked whisper. He noticed that the claws were gone.

“Years of training.” said Lionus with a smile. He then looked to the left and saw a dead tree, crowding a young sapling. He brought his arm quickly back behind him and walked away, suddenly the tree slid off the now severed trunk and landed heavily on the shore of the lake.

“Who do you think you are? Chuck Norris?” said Dr. Clark staring in amazement.

“No, but I love watching his movies.” said Lionus with a smile. “Being a Ranger means you have got to be able to handle any situation at any given time. Which means, you have to be strong,” he said flexing his arm, what appeared to be just lean arm under his cloak, was in reality, pure muscle. “Smart, resourceful and not afraid of danger. The real qualifications of a Ranger go on and on. But those are the main ones.”.

“And you want Harry to be one of you guys?” said Sirius in an awed whisper.

“That’s right, all we would need to do is build up his actual muscle tone and he’s all set. He’s lieutenant material already.” said Lionus with a smile. “He’d make a fine Ranger.”

Sirius, Remus and Dr. Clark looked at each other quickly. “You going to make up his mind for him? Or you going to let him choose?” asked Remus.

“He’d have to decide for himself of course. You have to give a reason for wanting to be a Ranger before you even get to try out for them.” said Lionus.

“…So you won’t try and force Harry to become a Ranger?” asked Dr. Clark.

“Absolutely not, but as a Ranger Captain, I would love to have him on my squad. Hell, I’d follow him into battle if he were put in charge of me. But as an adult who’d love to have a kid of his own, I cannot possibly allow him to get into anymore danger than he already has.” said Lionus with a smile.

“Right on.” said the men happily.
After Lionus had finished toning his body back in shape, and talking the three of them to join in, they walked into the Great Hall for breakfast.

More like Lionus walked, they staggered and panted from exhaustion.

“Never…never…again…” said Sirius collapsing in the bowl.

“I’m hurting in places I didn’t know I had.” said Remus leaning against a chair.

“I’ve worked out before, not enough to kill me in less than two hours though.” said Dr. Clark collapsing to the ground.

“What happened to you guys?” said Fred in wonder.

“All I did was run them about the grounds.” said Lionus with a smile.

“You guys should be thankful that it isn’t Monday, those days are the worst.” said Nightstrike with a smile. “You guys had it really easy.”

“That..was…easy…?” gasped Sirius gulping down glasses of water right after the other.

“Yeah, and if we were back at headquarters, it would be even tougher.” said Nightstrike.

Sirius groaned and fell back into the cushions.

“Good Morning, Dr. Nicodemus. Oh, you too, Mr. Potter.” said Tempest from the door, where she stood with Firenze. Everyone turned and quickly looked at the door. Dr. Nicodemus walked into the Great Hall and was followed by Harry, who looked different.

He was taller, yet still skinny. His eyes were still a brilliant shade of emerald green, but…his hair….
“Harry…why is your hair white?” asked Remus staring at the youth.

His once messy black locks were now long and white. The top was still sticking up all over the place, but the rest was smooth and shiny, like a flat sheet of pure snow.

“Well…Dr. Nicodemus here says that it’ll turn back to black at some time down the line. It’s just, I’ve been really drained of magic last night.” said Harry tugging at the locks of hair. His voice was a little deeper, but Professor Flitwick could tell that his singing voice did not change one bit over night. Of which he was very thankful for.

“Draining your magic makes your hair turn white?” said Sirius examining a gray strand off of Remus’s head.

“Look at your own.” Remus said shrugging Sirius off.

“That hurts.” said Sirius pouting. Harry laughed loudly and walked over to Ron and Hermione.

“It’s great seeing you look so much better.” said Hermione hugging him tightly.

“This is odd.” said Ron, looking eye to eye with Harry.

“Awesome! No more short jokes.” said Harry beaming. “I was about to kick you if I heard another one.”

“So no more illnesses, no more sleeping, no more injuries?” said Sirius hopefully.

“I can’t fix the one thing that is afflicting him, but with Dumbledore’s help we discussed it with him.” said Dr. Nicodemus.

“When did you talk to him?” asked Remus.
‘When I took you guys outside, it was a conversation best left to the two of them.’ said Lionus.

‘But he was with him too!’ said Sirius pointing to the Doctor.

‘I went in later.’ said Dr. Nicodemus.

Sirius and Remus looked between each other and rubbed the back of their heads, ‘Now we really don’t have any grounds to treat you like a kid, you’re as big as us.’ said Sirius

Harry smiled at his father’s two friends, ‘I don’t mind if you guys treat me like a kid. For…the…readings…’ said Harry to the two men. They high-fived each other.

‘Mad as a March Hare, the both of them.’ said Harry shaking his head.

The Doctor cleared his throat loudly. ‘Unfortunately, the ailment that afflicted him took away one magical ability that he had.’

‘What do you mean?’ asked Sirius.

‘Everyone is born with different abilities, every witch or wizard, doesn’t matter if you are a Muggleborn or not. It takes a lot of tragedy and hardships to discover your powers. Everyone here has a different ability that sets them apart from the rest. Harry might be the only one to know about his at such a young age. The abuse helped bring that about.’ he added bitterly.

‘What ability did Harry lose?’ asked Sirius.

‘We are not sure; he has all the abilities he knew he was gifted with. It might have been one that he was not aware of yet.’ said Doctor Clark.

‘How many does each person have?’ asked Colin excitedly.

‘Seven. Everyone has seven.’ said Harry. ‘I know of…’ he looked up, counting something invisible flying around him. ‘at least five that I have.’
Ginny walked into the Great Hall, stifling a yawn and as she walked, she nearly walked into Harry.

“Sorry…” she said sleepily. She looked up slowly and her eyes widened when she saw him. Without warning, she leaped into his arms and kissed him fiercely on the lips. Mrs. Weasley blinked at her youngest daughter and moved to say something, but withdrew.

When they pulled apart, she tapped his nose. “You’d better be feeling better.”

“Right now, I could carry this entire castle into London.” said Harry with a mischievous grin. Percy walked up and began to drag her back towards where her family was sitting. Harry waved playfully over to her and sat in between the men in the bowl.

It was decided that George was going to read the next chapter. So when everyone settled down and waited for him to clear his throat dramatically and start reading

Chapter Twelve

“Awesome!” said Fred excitedly.

First paragraph, first sentence.

“Oh that’s right, you were heading to my office.” said Dumbledore happily.

“Oh, I forgot, think you can keep something safe for me?” said Harry reaching behind himself.

“What is that?” asked Dumbledore with a bright smile and twinkle in his eye.

Harry held out the stuffed dragon.

“Think you can keep this safe? Till I have kids?” said Harry with a smile.

Dumbledore stared at the dragon, and smiled. “Of course I will.” he said, with tears pricking his eyes.

End of first paragraph.

“Did you at least reassure him that you thought he was innocent?” asked Mrs. Weasley shortly.

“She did, as I walked in. She told me that she knew that I didn’t do it, and told me not to worry, the whole not worrying part didn’t work out too well.” said Harry with a smile.

Second paragraph, second sentence.

“Yeah, we loved to just go in there and spend the weekends just talking and asking him all about the stuff he had.” said Sirius thinking back fondly.

“I think ‘interrogating’ would be a better choice of words.” said Dumbledore chuckling warmly.

End of second paragraph.

“I’m sorry, Harry.” said McGonagall worriedly.

“No real harm done.” said Harry smiling warmly.

“Least his smile hasn’t changed.” said Hermione in a whisper.

“Yeah, his smile was always more pleasing to look at then Lockhart’s.” said Ginny with glee.

Third paragraph, second sentence.

“Yeah, he’d never tell us what those things would do.” said Remus. “Only would say how he got them.”

Third paragraph, third sentence.

“They’re very good actors, every one of them.” said Dumbledore with a smile.

Third paragraph, fourth sentence, second sentence.

“That desk that had served countless Headmasters and Headmistresses before me.” said Dumbledore.

End of third paragraph.

“And here I thought they just chuck it into an old broom cupboard when they don’t need it.” said Fred quietly laughing.
“There is no rule against it, but even if the hat says a different house, you would still stay with the house you were sorted into.” said McGonagall.

“It did, trust us.” said the entire Gryffindor house.

“Godric must have had a large head.” said Zacharias.

“Larger than a twelve year old’s at least.” said Fred in retort.

“That’s creepy how it knows your name.” said Dr. Clark.

“Once it touches your head, it can recognize your core instantly, even your kid’s core.” said Harry flipping through his little book. “Families have similar cores.”

Umbridge stared hungrily at the book, if only she could get her hands on it.

“So what’s it like to have a bee in your bonnet?” asked Sirius ruffling the teen’s hair.

“Reminds me of you, a pain in my…” said Harry teasingly.

“Harry.” warned Mrs. Weasley gently.

“Sure, we get yelled at, and she only tells you off quietly.” said George pouting slightly.

“Mom always liked me best.” said Harry with a playful smile.

The Weasely children all laughed when Mrs. Weasley got flustered, trying to say that she loved all her children equally.
End of dialogue set.

Dialogue set, first sentence,

“Yeah, a talking hat would be pretty smart.” said George with a smirk.

Dialogue set, third sentence, second sentence.

“Why would your heart leap?” asked Colin.

“I focused more on the ‘GRYFFINDOR’ part.” said Harry shrugging.

End of dialogue set.

Sixth sentence, first sentence.

“Harry, you really need to stop having your hopes crushed like that.” said Hermione with a laugh.

“My hopes are sort of fragile.” said Harry shrugging. Hermione stopped laughing immediately.

“With height and white hair, comes absolutely no wisdom.” groaned Harry clapping a hand to his eyes.

End of sixth sentence.

“Remember when James got sick in Dumbledore’s office?” asked Sirius, trying to boost the morale.

“Yeah.” said Remus catching on quickly. “Right on Dumbledore’s shoes. They both were facing each other, then Dumbledore was watching James’s lunch try and decorate the nice new shoes he had gotten.”

“You didn’t even blink!” said Sirius laughing, Dumbledore smiling. “You just handed him a potion told him it was alright and cleaned your shoes!”

“Nasty bout of flu was going around the school; I learned many years ago, that being ill is not something one can control. Though some try.” said Dumbledore, sneaking a twinkle over to the twins.

“Think he knows about the Snackboxes?” said Fred quietly.

“I think we can bet on that.” said George. “Especially if the books reveal it.”

Dialogue set.
“Was it your turn to be sick?” asked Sirius.

“No, with Madam Pomfrey around, she never allows me to be sick.” said Dumbledore cheerfully.

“Of course not. Being as old as yourself, a cold could do you irreparable harm.” said Madam Pomfrey hotly.

“Thank goodness she won’t be around when I’m elderly.” said Sirius in a whisper, but Madam Pomfrey heard it.

“You will be lucky to see Middle-Aged if I could have my way. After all the dangerous pranks you pulled on the other students when you were younger.” said Madam Pomfrey, still angry.

Seventh paragraph, second sentence, first comma.

“What the…?” asked a first year Slytherin. “What’s a bird like that doing in the Headmaster’s office?”

Seventh paragraph, end of second sentence.

“Note to self: Make a large batch of Pepper cookies for Fawkes, to apologize.” said Harry with a smile.

“Pepper cookies?” said Sirius.

“Hot chili peppers, habanero peppers, jalapeño peppers, hot sauce, all in a biscuit.” said Harry. “Fawkes absolutely loves them.”

“Since Harry has started making them, his feathers have certain gleam to them. Not to mention he’s put on about five pounds.” said Dumbledore with a bright smile.

Seventh paragraph, third sentence.

“That poor bird.” said Dr. Clark sadly. “Couldn’t you take the poor thing to a Vet, Albus?” asked Dr. Clark.

“You’ll find out in a small while why it is not necessary to take him to Vet.” said Sirius.

Seventh paragraph, fourth sentence.

“He was ill. The poor thing had pneumonia.” said Dumbledore shaking his head sympathetically.
“That sounds so sad.” said Lavender.

“Don’t jinx yourself, Harry.” said Fred with a loud laugh.

“B-b-but I was….I was kidding.” said Fred in shock.

“What the hell…?” said Dr. Clark stunned.

“So was the noise I heard.” said Dumbledore with a smile over to Harry.

“And you came running right?” asked Sirius.

“Alas, I was thinking too excessively to investigate. I only heard the noise and continued to ponder what was attacking my students.” said Dumbledore, regret etched in his face. “It did not sound like a scream to me, or a shout.”

“I was fine.” said Harry smiling reassuringly.

“Poor you.” said Dr. Clark looking over to Harry.

“Man, Harry wants to save everyone, doesn’t he?” said George with a smile.

“That sometimes is the curse of being abused at such a young age. You are taught that there is no worth for your life, but other’s life, must be treasured.” said Doctor Nicodemus. “The abused will go to any lengths to spare others the pain they themselves have been subjected to.”

George’s smile disappeared immediately and everyone turned to look at Harry intently.

Harry looked at everyone staring at him. “Could you lot blink? You’re creeping me out.” he said with a smile.

“No more saving people.” said Fred.

“You start saving yourself.” said George.
“I don’t think I can.” said Harry honestly. “It’s not like changing the curtains from season to season. If what he says is right, it may take years to get me to stop. And I don’t think I would want to stop.” he finished faintly, looking down and rubbing his elbow.

Sirius, Remus, and Dr. Clark looked at each other, then smiled and group hugged Harry.

“We’ll help you with that.” said Sirius giving Harry a tight squeeze.

End of ninth paragraph.

The students stared at Harry, he had to be the unluckiest kid in the school.

Tenth paragraph.

“I had just been to see Nicholas and Mr. Finch-Fletchley.” said Dumbledore seriously. “But seeing the look on Harry’s face was just too amusing.” his frown turned to a smile. “I almost began to laugh.”

Dialogue line.

Eleventh paragraph.

“I never thought I would see someone smile when they learn their pet just died.” said Harry.

Dialogue line.

“Wait, what?” asked Dr. Clark confused.

Twelfth paragraph.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

“Speak of the devil.” said Dumbledore laughing warmly. Suddenly the red and golden bird flew down to the students and fluttered to land on a golden perch conjured by Dumbledore. Dr. Clark stared in wonder at the bird.

“He’s stunning.” said Dr. Clark in an awed whisper.

“He sure is. But he’s not beautiful like you.” said Harry quickly when he saw Hedwig flying down to the Great Hall. She inflated her feathered chest proudly.
Dialogue set, second sentence.

“That is why it one reason to not have to take Phoenixes to the doctor in case of emergencies. Regular checkups are something completely different though.” said Dumbledore, stroking Fawkes’ feathers.

End of dialogue set.

Thirteenth paragraph.

“Sorry.” said Harry quickly, Fawkes turned, flapped over and landed on Harry’s knee and nuzzled against Harry’s chest. Hedwig screeched loudly.

“Hedwig, he was forgiving me. It’s okay, you’re the only bird for me.” said Harry scratching behind her head.

Hedwig hooted indignantly, but buried her head into his palm. Fawkes continued to nuzzle into his chest and then dug his beak into the folds of Harry’s cloak. He came out with a fire red cookie in his beak.

“He seems to have found one of his Pepper cookies.” said Dumbledore with a laugh.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

“Phoenixes hardly ever let others watch it decline. They are a very proud species of bird.” said Dumbledore. “Fawkes has only allowed myself, Harry and Lily to watch him pass on. Lily dearly loved Fawkes.” he wiped a tear from his eye.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

“That description does not do you justice.” said Dr. Clark, slowly reaching his hand out to Fawkes. Fawkes looked at the hand and laid his head down upon. it. “He feels so warm.” said Dr. Clark in fascination.

“He was the perfect playmate for little Harry.” said Dumbledore fondly.

Dialogue set, fourth sentence, first comma.

“I remember one time, Fawkes carried you all around the school on his talons. I thought your mother would have been frightened out of her wits or at least murder me in a furious rage, but she trusted him enough with you.” said Dumbledore beaming. “How you loved going on rides with him.”

“I’d love to remember that.” said Harry dreamily.

Dialogue set, fourth sentence, second comma.

“Wow, really?” asked Colin eagerly.

“Oh, my god.” said Dr. Clark, touching his patched eye. Fawkes was now sitting on his shoulder. Dr. Clark removed his eye patch and slowly opened his eye, there were pearly drops of what appeared to be water on his cheek, and the slit in his eye…was gone.

“I can see out this eye again.” said Dr. Clark with amazement. “Thanks.” he looked up to Fawkes appreciatively. He let out a beautiful tune that made Harry’s heart soar and he flew back to his perch.

“That…was beautiful.” said Dr. Clark happily. Other people in the Hall nodded, but Umbridge was the only one that was emitting a muffled scream.

End of dialogue set.

Hedwig turned and stared fixedly at Harry. “You’re twice as loyal as he is.” said Harry quickly.

Hedwig seemed satisfied with that statement.

Fourteenth paragraph.

“So you didn’t even need to ask him what had happened?” said Remus.

“I prefer when they tell me. I don’t start using Legilimency unless they cannot find the courage to tell me what is wrong.” said Dumbledore kindly.

Fifteenth paragraph, first sentence, third comma.

“You forget to knock, Hagrid?” asked Sirius playfully.

“I just…was worried he was gonna expel Harry.” said Hagrid sheepishly.

“Of course he wouldn’t expel his favorite student.” said Fudge rolling his eyes.

“You like steak?” asked Nightstrike innocently.

“What?” asked Fudge quickly. “Well…yes.”
“If you would like to chew that at any time in the future, I suggest you shut your mouth, before I knock all your teeth out.” said Nightstrike threateningly.

End of fifteenth paragraph

“I would have fell down laughing.” said Remus.

“I think I would have pissed my pants from laughing so hard.” said Sirius with a bright smile.

Dialogue line.

“Woah, Nellie.” said Fred.

“Easy Hagrid, if Harry was going to be expelled, he would have been chucked out of the school before you even got there.” said George.

Sixteenth paragraph.

Hagrid looked sheepishly down at the floor.

Dialogue line.

“Not like that nitwit of a Minister would recognize the truth.” said Sirius scowling at the cringing man.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

“He knows Hagrid!” said Sirius shaking his head and smiling.

Dialogue line.

“What was your proof?” asked Fudge, trying hard to build his courage back up.

“Just shut up.” said Tempest gritting her teeth.
Seventeenth paragraph.

“I love you Hagrid.” said Harry with a broad smile.

Dialogue line.

“Sometimes, I wonder if you even give a damn about when people get all flustered around you.” said Remus with a smirk.

“Sometimes I wonder why you don’t just burst out laughing.” said Sirius grinning.

“I laugh later.” said Dumbledore with a twinkle in his eyes.

Dialogue line.

“Bout what?” asked Sirius.

Eighteenth paragraph.

“Not a good sign.” said Sirius, once again, the voice of experience.

Dialogue line.

“Tell him everything.” said almost every adult in the Great Hall.

“I do, sort of.” said Harry.

Nineteenth paragraph, first sentence.

“Yeah, you really told him.” said Zacharias rolling his eyes.

“Wait for it.” said Harry with a smirk.

End of nineteenth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Harry smiled as people turned and stared at him.

“I didn’t say a word.” said Harry.

“Harry! It was supposed to be a secret!” said Hermione worriedly.

“It’s a good thing that he allowed Dumbledore to know that. Without it, I wouldn’t have had the necessary potions to fix whatever would have happened.” said Madam Pomfrey.

“It was very fortunate that Harry took me into his confidence.” said Dumbledore thoughtfully.

“You make it sound like something really bad happened.” said Sirius worriedly.

Harry gave him a ‘you’ll find out look’.

“Whoopie.” said Sirius.

“So if you knew, you could have stopped it!” said Mrs. Weasley.

“I thought it best to have them stretch their wings, besides, stopping the brewing process of a Polyjuice Potion, could have some very disastrous effects. Am I correct.” said Dumbledore looking over to Snape.

“Indeed, the fumes, even if you make the potion disappear, over the next few days can cause everyone within a five mile radius seriously ill.” said Snape.

Twentieth paragraph, first sentence.

“And is that when the assault happened?” asked Remus angrily.

“Yep, right before the holidays.” said Harry plainly. “Wait…what?”

“It showed you getting the snot beaten out of you by the Hufflepuffs.” said Ron.

“Geez louise.” said Harry rubbing the bridge of his nose.

“Harry, we want to know about this kind of stuff.” said Dr. Clark.

“I realize that. But really…this happened so many years ago, and I paid them back in full for it.” said Harry.

“How?” said Dr. Clark.

“Once everyone was revitalized and the threat gone, I asked them each to another abandoned room and whupped each of their asses.” said Harry. “One at a time. With the seventh years though, Ron helped me out on.”

“Helped me alleviate some stress.” shrugged Ron.

“How could two twelve year olds go against a seventh year?” asked Sirius.

Harry and Ron grinned wickedly. “We’ll never tell.” said Ron and Harry.
“Good question.” said Remus, still thinking hard.

“He’s a lot calmer now.” whispered Harry.

“Having the light smack into his chest did wonders for his disposition.” said Sirius whispering back.

“And to get away from Harry, so as to not incur his demonic wrath.” said Fred dramatically.

The students laughed, knowing full well that the threat was gone, and that Harry wasn’t the heir.

“They think we're joking?” said George.

“They've never been yelled at by him before...poor naïve things.” said George.

“Hey, he forgot us.” said Fred pouting.

“Yeah, we can make the holidays all the more wonderful for him.” said George.

“Having all the cushions fly over and start bashing us in the head and sides isn’t what I call festive.” said Hermione.

“Haven’t you ever heard of a pillow fight? They’re great fun!” said Fred innocently.

“Only if you can fight back.” said Ron. “And you already took control of all the cushions.”

“I doubt they can even think for themselves.” said Ron in a whisper. Draco suppressed a laugh; he doubted Crabbe and Goyle could think too.

“Oh really?” asked Rivers looking slightly confused.
“Oh, yes, I would be happy with less students too.” said Rivers quickly.

“What were they hissing?” asked Professor McGonagall.

“Some were just trying to sound like snakes, and others were telling him to go home and never come back.” said Ron.

“I got something, something macaroni when they hissed like that.” said Harry shrugging. “Parseltongue doesn’t translate well when you don’t know what you’re doing.”

“Really? What am I saying now?” asked Fred, he hissed softly.

Harry blinked. “Tell him to take bicarbonate and stay off his feet.” said Harry.

“What? What did I say?” asked Fred.

“You told me that your uncle has gas.” said Harry. Several people snorted and others just busted out in laughter.

“How about now?” asked Fred and he hissed again.

“I’m not too sure how to respond to that one.” said Harry.

“What did he say that time?” asked Sirius trying not to laugh.

“His uncle with the gas is now pregnant.” said Harry. The kids fell out of their seats and clutched their stomachs, trying to stop from laughing so hard. The adults could hardly contain themselves.

“It isn’t!” said Mrs. Weasley angrily switching from a jovial mood to an agitated one.

“I appreciated that they did.” said Harry, but sending a quick look over to Ginny and giving her a smile, who smiled back.

“It was so awesome. One of our funnier moments.” said Fred polishing his nails on his cloak.
“Not one of your better lines though.” said Sirius shaking his head.

Twenty-fourth paragraph.

“Remember when he said ‘you’ once?” asked Fred to Lee.

“Yeah, I choked loudly and fell down ‘dead’.” said Lee with a laugh.

End of dialogue set.

“Smile for me quick.” said Sirius.

“What?” said Harry looking at him.

“Do it.” said Sirius with a smirk.

Harry smiled then stopped.

“Come on. Wider than that. That’s it, little wider…nope no fangs.” said Sirius with a teasing grin.

“Jackass.” said Harry bopping Sirius with a cushion.

Twenty-fifth paragraph, first sentence.

“Sorry boys.” said Mrs. Weasley.

“It’s okay, Mum, we wouldn’t do it if you approved, really.” said Fred with an evil grin.

End of twenty-fifth paragraph.

“Why did it upset you?” asked Snape.

“He was getting all the attention.” said Draco quietly.

“He got all the attention before all this stuff happened. What would have made it any different.” asked Bill.

“He made a pretty good catch in the last game of the term, against Ravenclaw, caught it right in front of their Beater taking aim on a Bludger.” said Harry.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

“He didn’t go to the game, it wasn’t his day off.” said Hermione.

“Day off?” asked Charlie.

“Someone has to stir the potion on the weekends. We can’t have Hermione doing it all.” said Harry.

End of dialogue set.

“Close, but this isn’t horseshoes.” said Rivers with a smile.

“Huh?” asked Draco and Blaise.

“Muggle game.” said Rivers.

Dialogue line.

Twenty-sixth paragraph, first sentence.

“You really need to write poetry or something mate.” said George looking up from the book.

“He does a wonderful job writing songs.” said Dumbledore smiling over at Harry.

Twenty-sixth paragraph, second sentence, first comma.

“Explains why you kept sitting on the window sills and looking outside.” said Ron.

Twenty-sixth paragraph, second sentence, fifth comma.

“It’s embarrassing when Hermione beats you every single time.” said Harry shaking his head.

“Everyone one is good at somethings.” said Hermione wickedly.

“It was her idea to play for stuff.” said Ron. “I still owe her three quills and a pot of blue ink.” said Ron.

“You’re lucky, I’m out two books. I need to give up games that don’t involve flying.” said Harry.
“Don’t do that Harry, who else are we going to take for all the candy he’s got.” said Neville with a smirk.

“Or writing material.” said Hermione with a giggle.

Twenty-sixth paragraph, end of second sentence.

“Man all those wasted nights, WE were the ones showing them how to block them and everything. Could’ve had Harry teaching us.” said George pouting.

Twenty-sixth paragraph, third sentence.

“You guys would rather be in danger at school then visit me? That makes me feel REAL popular.” said Bill crossing his arms.

Twenty-sixth paragraph, fourth sentence, second comma.

“So a twelve year old kid, and a pair of fourteen year olds have to act like adults? That’s wishful thinking.” said Sirius.

“Seeing as how Sirius still doesn’t act like an adult.” said Remus with a smirk.

End of twenty-sixth paragraph.

“We didn’t need the support Mr. Weasley,” said McGonagall sternly.

Twenty-seventh paragraph, second sentence, second comma.

“Two less snorers in the dorms.” said Harry with a smirk. Seamus, Dean and Neville looked between themselves and wondered who the snorers were.

End of twenty-seventh paragraph.

“Christmas presents could have waited a half hour more.” said Ron.
“Well aren’t you two just full of the Christmas spirit.” said Tonks.

“Hey, it’s a dangerous potion, I didn’t want to be stuck with half of Goyle’s face,” said Harry defensively.

“Not many girls will touch a rat on purpose.” said Dr. Clark looking at her highly impressed.

“Well that’s a pathetic Christmas present. Looking like those gits.” said Lee.

“Wow, it took her a long time to forgive you.” said a seventh year Ravenclaw.

“I didn’t blame her though.” said Harry.

Hedwig repeated the show of affection.

“That is too cute!” squealed Lavender and Parvati.

Hedwig clicked her beak irritably at Fawkes and then continued nibbling Harry’s ear.

Sirius mouthed to Remus, ‘Someone’s a little jealous’.
“Well that’s a kind thing to say.” said Dr. Clark caressing Hedwig’s feathers.

“Nope, wasn’t kindness, it was a fact.” said Fred.

Growls scattered the Hall and glares were fired at the book from almost every angle.

“Would rather have the toothpick then have Goyle’s face.” said Harry.

“You are definitely getting something better than that for Christmas.” said Remus angrily.

“I’d sort of hope so.” said Harry with a small smile.

“Did you at least ask?” said Remus.

“I knew the answer was going to be ‘no’.” said Harry. “There was no point in asking.”

“Though I should’ve known, you could’ve told me.” said Dumbledore sadly. “I never would have sent you back.”

“But I couldn’t stay here; you and the rest of the staff have lives of your own to live. Where would I go? No, I could endure a few months with the Dursleys.” said Harry.

“No more enduring for you now.” said Sirius bringing Harry into a tight, one-armed hug.

“Getting absolutely nothing would be a step up.” said Remus angrily.
“It made it taste even better.” said Harry fondly. “I ate that right away after it softened.”

“Harry, eating sweets for breakfast is not good for you.” said Madam Pomfrey and Mrs. Weasley.

“Didn’t care.” said Harry with a cheeky grin. “It was treacle.”

Thirty-first paragraph, first sentence, second semi-colon.

“Why give him a book on your favorite team?” asked Dr. Clark.

Ron shrugged.

“It was fine. I like that book.” said Harry.

Thirty-first paragraph, end of first sentence.

“I haven’t seen you use it lately.” said Hermione thoughtfully.

“It broke.” said Harry. “Someone accidentally sat on it.”

Goyle and Crabbe laughed dully.

Thirty-first paragraph, second sentence.

“It was really good, took me a long time to eat it all.” said Harry gratefully.

Thirty-first paragraph, third sentence, first comma.

“What were you feeling guilty about, dear?” asked Mrs. Weasley.

Thirty-first paragraph, third sentence, third comma.

“Oh…sorry dear…” said Mrs. Weasley sheepishly.

End of thirty-first paragraph.

“Well that probably ruined Christmas for you.” said Tonks sadly.
“That’s true, those are always excellent.” said Remus happily. “And at least your Christmas wasn’t completely ruined.”

The first years and Dr. Clark looked excitedly around the Great Hall, trying to picture the festive sights and wishing that Christmas was going to come tomorrow.

“That were fun actually.” said Harry.

“Did you do any solos?” asked Sirius quickly.

“No and I’m not singing.” said Harry sternly.

“Come on! You haven’t sang in so long!” whined Hermione. “Just one little carol?”

“It’s not Christmas yet.” said Harry. “Kinda stupid to sing Let it Snow, Let it Snow, Let it Snow, when the leaves haven’t even completely fallen out of the trees yet.”

“The staff’s eggnog was made with wine.” said Harry.

“How do you know?” asked Mrs. Weasley.

“Where else was I going to bake Dumbledore’s Raspberry Chocolate Chip cookies?” said Harry plainly. “And I took a glass off a tray. Spat it out right away. I like eggnog, but you don’t add anything else to it.”

“Oh, I found out later.” said Percy scowling at his younger brothers.
“Never did care what he said about my sweaters.” said Harry shrugging.

End of thirty-third paragraph.

“Didn’t happen.” said Draco.

“Oh, yes it did.” said Harry and Ron.

Thirty-fourth paragraph.

“They had three of everything!” said Hermione in response to the glares sent by both Madam Pomfrey and Mrs. Weasley.

“But we were going for five of everything!” whined Ron and Harry.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

“Sorry about that.” said Hermione.

Dialogue set, second sentence, second comma.

“‘Best friends’ is not what I would call them.” said Harry quietly. Draco heard and looked down shamefully.

End of dialogue set.

“I don’t see how this plan goes horribly wrong.” said Kingsley thoughtfully. He remembered back when Harry had said Hermione’s plans all went to hell.

“You have to wait for it.” said Hermione quietly.

Dialogue set, third sentence.

“I’d still eat them.” said Ron and Remus.

“That’s sad.” said Sirius shaking his head. “To be that desperate for chocolate.”
“That won’t be too hard. They’d eat anything and they always want to have their hands on food.” said Fred.

“Beats the idea of just wrenching them out in the hallway.” said Moody.

“We thought of that idea. Till it dawned on Harry and me that they would turn around and proceed to kill us both.” said Ron.

“I wished I had listened to you.” said Hermione.

“WE wish we had listened to us too.” said Harry and Ron.

“We knew that she wasn’t going to let it go.” said Ron.

“She kept pulling that card.” said Harry rolling his eyes.

“How the hell did you manage that?” said Sirius. “The Slytherins aren’t exactly ‘buddy buddy’ with you.”
Dialogue set, fourth sentence.

“That, right there, is a bad idea.” said Sirius quickly.

“Why didn’t you stop her?” asked Remus looking at Harry.

“It was the same shade as Millicent’s hair. It looked like hers.”

“By the way you just phrased that, it wasn’t.” said Dr. Clark.

End of dialogue set.

Millicent snorted loudly. “They won’t buy that.”

“She didn’t even have to try it out.” said Harry.

Thirty-seventh paragraph.

Dialogue line.

“And yet, we blindly followed like sheep.” said Ron.

Thirty-eighth paragraph, first sentence.

“We were pretty relived. If it hadn’t of gone well, we would have been in for a serious pounding.” said Harry.

“I thought you took care of the Hufflepuffs on your own.” said Zacharias with a sneer.

“Well…you were one of them, go have a rough and tumble with Goyle and Crabbe. See how you fair.” said Harry. “Take a seventh year with you, while you’re at it.”

Zacharias looked quickly over to the two Slytherins who were only passively responding to their names, turned to Harry and quickly shook his head.

“Thought not.” said Harry.

Thirty-eighth paragraph, second sentence.

“Hell, they were alone in the entire Great Hall.” said Ron.
“They aren’t that stupid.” said Malfoy. He knew they didn’t succeed in their endeavors, Crabbe and Goyle didn’t act out of character at all that year.

“We were hoping nobody bigger and tougher than them came by to eat those cakes.” said Ron.

Sirius laughed quietly, “They are that stupid.”

“That is too funny.” said Fred rolling on the floor laughing.

The entire school erupted with laughter.

“They are that stupid.”

“We used the Levitation spell to start with, but the problem with that was we just couldn’t stop them from hitting their heads on the doorway.” said Harry looking innocent.

“Tragic really, we had to drag them into the cupboard, problem was, when he we did that, we had to lay all the stuff on top of them. It was the only way to fit them in there.” said Ron just as innocently.

“Ron had to put his foot on Crabbe’s stomach and pull.” said Harry.
“Good thinking.” said Kingsley.

“We came up with that idea together.” said Harry.

“You still run way too damn fast.” said Ron.

“Ummm…..the potion is supposed to smoke like that, right Professor?” asked Hermione quietly.

Snape looked at her, his expression unreadable. “Yes, it’s supposed to be like that. I suppose you did a good job brewing it.”

“No, we failed miserably.” said Fred.

“It’s all up to you Hermione.” said George.

“How the hell do you know where the laundry is?” asked Dean.
“I like to do my own.” said Hermione.

Forty-third paragraph.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

“Madam Pince won’t like that one bit.” said a sixth year Ravenclaw.

End of dialogue set.

Dialogue line.

“How were you whispering?” asked Seamus.

“Cause Hermione was whispering.” said Ron.

Dialogue line.

Forty-fourth paragraph, first sentence.

“I’d of gotten sick right then and there.” said Remus holding his stomach.

End of forty-fourth paragraph.

Forty-fifth paragraph.

“Out of all the colors to represent your character, yellow is not what I would have guessed for Millicent.” said Professor Snape thoughtfully.

Dialogue line.

Millicent turned red.

Dialogue line.

Forty-sixth paragraph, second sentence, first comma.

Snape looked at the larger of the two Slytherin thugs. Sounds about right, he thought to himself.
Him too, Snape smirked to himself.

Dialogue set.

Millicent glared at the scarred youth, while other people laughed.

“Good thinking.” thought Firenze calmly.

Dialogue line.

Forty-seventh paragraph, first sentence, first comma.

“I’d drop it, nasty stuff.” said Kingsley shaking his head.

“I’m glad I don’t need it.” said Tonks.

End of forty-seventh paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Forty-eighth paragraph.

“I didn’t make anything out of cabbage for the longest time.” said Harry.

Forty-ninth paragraph, first dash.

Harry absently placed a hand on his stomach and held it there.

Forty-ninth paragraph, third dash.

“Well this will discourage students to try and make this potion, if anything,” said Professor McGonagall.
People began to cringe horribly in their seats.

Sirius rubbed the top of his hands without thinking.

“Who was the one screaming?” asked Hermione trying not to have a squeak in her voice.

“It was me.” said Ron blushing. “Hey, it hurt.”

“I think I screamed too.” said Harry.

“Did you pass out, Harry?” asked Dumbledore worriedly.

“I think I did.” said Harry thoughtfully. “But only for a moment.”

“I can think of several better places to pass out then a bathroom floor.” said Charlie.

“I almost had to cut the shoes off my feet.” said Harry.

“Hated it, I felt…grounded.” said Harry.

“What do you mean ‘grounded’?” asked Remus.

“I couldn’t leap up like I’m used to doing.” said Harry.
“If I had seen that, I would have known you weren’t Goyle.” said Draco quietly. “He doesn’t know how to tie his shoes.”

“Shampoo and Conditioner works wonders by the way.” said Harry over to Goyle.

“That…was frightening.” said Harry.

“You’re telling me, I thought they woke up. But then again, he wouldn’t have asked how we were.” said Ron.

Harry gave a full body shiver, “I’m not the best thing to look at by far, but looking like Goyle was horrible.” said Harry.

“You’ve got to be kidding!” said Ginny staring at Harry in shock. “You’re handsome!”

“She’s right, you’re a little cutie!” said the three Chasers.

“You could light something on fire with how hot his face is getting right now.” said Sirius gleefully. His godson was trying to hide his burning face in the man’s robes.

“Well, you aren’t kind for their descriptions.” said Dr. Clark.

“Never am with bullies.” said Harry plainly.

“Wow, did the Dursley’s actually give you a watch?” asked Sirius shocked.
“It was one of Uncle Vernon’s Rolexes, He got porridge all over it and tossed it. I dug it out of the garbage and fixed it up.” said Harry shrugging.

“Where is that watch now?” asked Dr. Clark.

“Watches and lakes do NOT mix.” said Harry. “I had to pitch it.”

End of dialogue set.

“You didn’t even bother to try and find the Common Room beforehand?” said Bill.

“We tried, it didn’t go too well.” said Harry.

“We got detention for lurking.” said Ron. “Courtesy of Filch.”

Fifty-third paragraph, first sentence.

“It was startling.” said Ron.

End of fifty-third paragraph.

Fifty-fourth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

“All that work and you’re not going?” asked Tonks.

Dialogue line.

Millicent’s scowl grew and grew.

Dialogue line.

Fifty-fifth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

“No time for jokes, get moving.” said Moody.
“Don’t worry about her, she’ll be fine, just get going,” said Fred.

“MOVE IT!” shouted the people in the Great Hall.

“You stalking Crabbe and Goyle now?” asked Sirius with a smirk.
“I watched them to make sure we acted the right way,” said Harry.
“Good thinking.” said Lionus with a smile.

“Well, I was.” said one of the seventh year Ravenclaw girls, who figured it was Harry and Ron she was talking to all those years ago.

“They didn’t say you were in Slytherin, they were just hoping you knew where it was.” said Hermione.

“It wasn’t her we asked.” said Ron quietly.

“They really are that stupid aren’t they.” said Fred.

“Can’t believe the real Crabbe and Goyle have to ask where their common room is.” said George shaking his head.

Fifty-ninth paragraph.

The girl scowled, she didn’t realize that they were imposters, just overly stupid, but perhaps, if what the red head said was true, perhaps they were that stupid.

Sixtieth paragraph.

“Not when you don’t know where to go.” said Blaise.

Sixty-first paragraph, third sentence, first comma.

“Twenty minutes gone.” said Fred. “Or is it only fifteen.”

“Twenty minutes were gone.” said Harry.

End of sixty-first paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Sixty-second paragraph.

“What the hell were you doing down there? That’s not a Gryffindor Prefect route.” said Charlie.

“How would you know?” said Percy smugly.

“I dated a Gryffindor Prefect, I knew all of her routes, and her male counterpart. Had to make sure he didn’t see me drag her off to an empty classroom.” said Charlie.

“I think we’d better LOCK all the empty classrooms.” said McGonagall.
“Honest question, did I get an honest answer? NO!” said Ron rolling his eyes.

“Nearly blew it there.” said Moody.

“That badge isn’t an impenetrable shield, Mr. Weasley. You were in just as much danger as everyone else.” said McGonagall sternly

Draco clapped a hand to his eyes, he let them in.

“He wasn’t too far off.” said Sirius with a laugh.

“Whatever he thinks is funny, you can bet that it isn’t.” said Lee.
“He doesn’t have to show you respect, you can’t take points away from him.” said Hermione.

“Your kindness just about ruined everything. You need to learn to act tough.” said Moody.

“One word…Pansy…” said Harry with a smirk.

“He’s got you there Alastor.” said Kingsley.

“Percy.” said the Weasley family together.

“Not the time to do it, but, good for you Ron, stand up for your brother.” said Mr. Weasley proudly.

“No, I was not.” said Percy defiantly.

“He went to meet his girlfriend.” said Fred with a smirk.

Percy surprisingly turned and glared at Ginny.

“I didn’t say a word to him.” said Ginny defensively.

“So close.” said a first year Gryffindor.
“Who came up with that password?” asked McGonagall.

“The Prefects chose the password not me.” said Snape quickly.

 sounds gloomy.” said Ernie.

“We have more elegantly carved furniture in our house than any other house has to offer.” said Snape.

“They didn’t too bad a job.” said a sixth year Slytherin, he could vaguely remember that Christmas and he didn’t notice anything out of the ordinary.

“Why, what was wrong with it?” asked Sirius.
“Oh…” said Sirius sheepishly.

“It was the smallest amount I could fine you, Arthur.” said Madam Bones apologetically.

“HAH! FAVORITISM!” shouted Fudge.

“But she still fined him! Whereas you take money under the table and look the other way.” said Harry irritably. “A politician such as yourself should maintain dignity, honor and integrity. Each of those things you lack.”

“Amen.” said Madam Bones.

“He's talking fancy again.” said Fred.

Daily Prophet clipping: second line.

“That didn’t get too far.” said Kingsley.

“Thanks for defending me by the way, Dumbledore.” said Mr. Weasley gratefully.

“Think nothing of it. It was our tree that tried to destroy the car you worked so hard on.” said Dumbledore smiling.

“I don’t know how you managed to get the authorization to put the money directly into our family vault for the fine. I was afraid the goblins were going to come and seize our family treasures.” said Mrs. Weasley.

“Alas, I couldn’t donate the money, I was not a blood relative.” said Dumbledore shaking his head.

Harry and Ron looked at each other quickly. “After we read that, Harry gave me the fifty galleons to have it deposited in the vault.” said Ron.

“Oh, Harry dear.” said Mrs. Weasley, “You didn’t need to.”

“I wanted to. Besides, you just said that the goblins could have taken your stuff, I would say that it was a necessity.” said Harry with a smirk.

Daily Prophet clipping: third line.

“That didn’t get too far either.” said Tonks.

End of Daily Prophet clipping

“And I would have too.” said Mrs. Weasley angrily.
“Not too far off on how Goyle normally laughs,” said Draco.

“I’m not too sure I wouldn’t mind it half the time.” said Mr. Weasley.

“I’d love to go to school here. You and I can switch anytime.” said Dr. Clark.

“That’s a good lie to use, with all the crap he eats.” said Fred.

“Sorry!” said Draco swiftly.

“Of course.” said Dumbledore.

“Why would you?” asked Dr. Clark. “Shouldn’t parents know what is going on?”

“There are wizards and witches that try and make a good thing out of a monster. They come in throngs and jostle the students about. Some may even try and kidnap some of our students that come from wealthier families.” said Dumbledore. “Or for more devious reasons.”

“He would.” said Remus bitterly.
Colin and Dennis glared fiercely.

“I wouldn’t do that; that snake bites back.” said Harry with a smirk.

“Why are you defending him!” said Hermione.

“I’m not, just warning Colin and Dennis not to bite off more than they can chew. Take it from someone who does every year.” said Harry.

“Sorry.” he said to Colin quietly.

“And to think, you saved this for Crabbe and Goyle. I’m hurt.” said Harry with a laugh.

Draco, he was looking intently down at the floor, smiled in spite of himself.

“We were sort of growling.” said Harry.

“They are.” said Draco and Blaise.

George growled when he said the word aloud.

“Sorry.” said Draco still cringing.

“You’d better be.” said Snape with a look of disgust.
“Sorry Hermione.” said Draco.

“Well, he said your first name, so he really means it.” said Harry.

“Is he going to tell you who it is?” asked Dennis.

“Dang nabbit.” said Dennis pouting.

“It’s a good question. If anyone should know who the heir of Slytherin is, it would be a Malfoy.” said Moody.

“Wow, is Lucius trying to protect his son?” asked Kingsley.

“Or is he trying keep his son from screwing things up?” said Moody.

“Could still be both.” said the two Aurors.

Several younger students gasped and a few of the adults gulped loudly.
“SORRY!” yelled Draco.

Hermione turned her nose up. Harry looked over to Draco and shook his head. “It’s going to be a while to get forgiven for that one. Though I’m sure that everyone here is appreciative that your attitude has changed.” said Harry, though his tone was quite cold.

“SO, you would have stopped him right?” asked Tonks. She noticed the glares that she received. “For the good of the mission!”

“I sent him a facial warning, but after that, no, I wouldn’t have stopped him.” said Harry sitting back in the chair.

“No, they didn’t get the person. Not then anyway.” said Harry angrily.

“The person that was framed was expelled, yes, but he didn’t go to Azkaban.” said Hermione angrily.

“Azkaban?” asked Dr. Clark in a whisper that no one heard.

“Oh, I gotcha.” said Dr. Clark with a satisfied smile.

“Yup, he only wanted to keep his son from screwing it all up.” said Moody.
“Oh, just wait till I get my hands on that slimy bastard!”

“Molly!” said Mr. Weasley in shock.

“First time in his life that twit’s gotta work.” said Fred with a snarl.

“Good for the Ministry of Magic!” said Lee. “You can’t say that much for them lately though.”

“We wanted to do it months ago, when he still had the more dangerous lying about, But someone,” said Mr. Weasley looking up to the Minister. “wanted us to wait, to give Lucius more time to get rid of the stuff. Give him a thirty-fourth chance.”

“Tell me, you can’t justify doing that.” said Lionus looking disgusted.

“He is a major financial backer to St. Mungos.” said Fudge defiantly, trying his best to now ignore what the book says.

“Bullocks, the Potter family finances the hospital, Malfoy isn't really needed.” muttered Sirius.

“You’re an idiot. Consider yourself formally under arrest, I’ll get Whizzerd to go through your bank accounts and we will see if you have been taking from the people instead of giving.” said Lionus angrily.

Fudge stared pale faced and obviously frightened.

Suddenly, two cloaked figures flittered down and landed on either side of the now ex-Minister of Magic.

“Say hello to your new guards. Lieutenant Wildfire” the one on the left removed their hood and revealed a beautiful woman, with half her head shaved, but the other half had flowing red hair.

“and Lieutenant Viper.” the other person took of their hood and revealed a gaunt, pale faced man, he smiled maliciously down to the Minister to reveal…

“A vampire?” asked Fred in wonder.

“Very true.” said Viper.

“He won’t bite anyone, don’t worry about that.” said Lionus.

“Of course not.” said Viper sticking his nose in the air. “Cheeldren’s blood ees deesgusting. I preefur adults. Purfectly aged.”
“Wasn’t easy.” said Harry.

Draco paled, his father had accused him of divulging that information, and he had even punished him severely for it. But Draco kept telling him that he didn’t, but now it turns out he did. Oh well, he didn’t rightly care anymore.

“Time to go, get out of there!” said Sirius.

“Yeah, that wasn’t suspicious at all.” said Neville with a laugh.

“I actually didn’t, I just ignored you.” said Draco.

“Didn’t you notice anything when you had to retell them about the newspaper clipping?” asked Hannah.

“No, I have to retell them stuff all the time.” said Draco shrugging.

Harry laughed along with the rest of the school. “This is embarrassing.” said Harry covering his eyes.
The people in Great Hall laughed again.

“Well that was kind, but who came to unlock the door?” said Lionus.

“We didn’t lock it, all they would have had to do is try the knob.” said Harry and Ron with a smirk.

The laughter grew louder and louder. “THAT IS PRICELESS!” screamed Lee holding his sides.

“Harry actually slipped once.” said Ron. “Nearly banged his face on the floor.”

“That’s right, look on the bright side.” said Charlie.

“And we did too, we decided to go a different route, we went straight to Madam Bones.” said Mr. Weasley.

“Explains why you kissed the broken mirror.” said Ron with a smirk.

“Not before you kissed your own arms.” said Harry with a similar smirk.

“Well that’s nice.” said Sirius.
“What happened?” said Remus “The hour is up. She should have turned back by now.”

Eighty-seventh paragraph.

Dialogue line.

“Ron thinks like you, too bad he don’t keep the group out of trouble too.” said Sirius.

“Nah, I help it along.” said Ron proudly.

Eighty-eighth paragraph.

“Something didn’t go quite well.” said Tonks. “It’s the only reason why she would be happy.”

Dialogue line.

“Oh dear.” said Mrs. Weasley worriedly.

Eighty-ninth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

“If only it was that.” said Hermione, Ron and Harry.

Ninetieth paragraph.

“Another bad sign.” said Sirius.

“Sorry Hermione, I just, didn’t expect it.” said Ron.

Ninety-first paragraph.

“The hair was…a cat’s…” said Snape his hand over his eyes. “That is not good. Polyjuice is not for animal transformations. I hope you went and saw Madam Pomfrey, you didn’t come to me, but you had better have gone to her.”

“I don’t think they would want to go to you; that would be like giving a murderer the bullets to kill you with.” said Dr. Clark.
“No I don’t.” said Millicent, “but Pansy’s cat, Twinklefluff, loves to lay all over my robes.” said Millicent thoughtfully.

“That’s what Professor Snape just said.” said a first year Hufflepuff.

“She’s evil.” said Remus angrily.

“I didn’t need to, I gathered all the information I needed from Dumbledore.” said Madam Pomfrey.

“That took some shielding to hide, but thankfully we didn’t have anyone else walking the corridors that day.” said Harry.

“At least you got better Hermione, umm…you didn’t…” said Sirius.

“No, no hairballs.” said Hermione with a grin.

“Thank goodness, nasty things.” said Sirius.

“He stepped on one once, it was hilarious.” said Remus. “He wasn’t even wearing shoes.”

"Took me three days to get the gunk out from between my toes." said Sirius.

Thanks for reading!
“Who’s going to read now?” asked George holding the book up high.

“Let me take a crack at it, brother dear.” said Fred with a posh like voice.

Chapter Thirteen

“We picked another doozy I think.” said Fred.

“Is this all about your notebook Harry?” asked Colin.

“Nope.” said Harry plainly.

First paragraph, first sentence.

“Better to stay in the Hospital wing then walking around looking like a giant cat.” said Sirius helpfully.

“You have got to get over this cat hating thing.” muttered Remus.

First paragraph, second sentence, first comma.

“We thought you were attacked.” said Seamus.

“But then all of you guys wouldn’t have still accused Harry of being the heir…” said Hermione said thoughtfully.

“Did anyone attack you that time?” said Remus to Harry warningly.

“Some people almost did, but Ron came up and said she was just in there because she was sick.”

“Who tried?” asked Dumbledore, his voice growling.

“….not saying.” said Harry folding his arms. "They freaked, they weren’t aware of what they were doing.”

“It was the Gryffindor seventh years.” said Ron angrily. “They had him slammed against a wall by the collar.”
Dumbledore scowled, as well as several other adults.
“This is getting to be a bit much.” said Harry rubbing his eyes.

First paragraph, end of second sentence.
“We almost lost our voices, all the times we had to say you weren’t.” said Ron.

End of first sentence.
“Thanks again, Madam Pomfrey.” said Hermione.
“You’re welcome, dear.” smiled Madam Pomfrey. She could finally relax; she was assured (most sincerely) by the Rangers that Harry was in no further danger.

Second paragraph, first sentence.
“That really made me feel a lot better.” said Hermione.
“We did what we could.” said Harry and Ron shrugging.

End of second paragraph.
“Oh come on! Take a break for once!” said Sirius looking at Hermione in disbelief.
“I couldn’t! It’s not my nature.” said Hermione.
“Very good Miss. Granger.” said McGonagall smiling down at the fifth year.

Dialogue line.
“You could get a hangnail and you’d still want to shirk work.” said Percy with kind smile.
“Hey, those hurt.” said Charlie with a fake pout.

Dialogue set, first sentence.
“You were ahead of everyone else, you don’t need to keep up.” said Neville.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

“POTTER! WHAT DID YOU DO TO ME!” came a shrieking voice from the door.

Everyone turned and saw Pansy, the sticky, black slime was still clinging to most of her face, but the other part that she had managed to peel off, had turned her skin to a sick sort of green.

“WHAT DID YOU DO?” she said, scratching at the green parts of her face.

“I said you’d need to wait fifty-two hours or so, now your skin’s all itchy, isn’t it?” said Harry with a broad smile, not bothering to turn around and look at Pansy. “Here,” He flung a small jar of what looked like ointment back towards her. “that’ll clear it all off, but…” said Harry. But before he could finish, the large door slammed shut.

Harry sighed. “I guess she didn’t want to hear about the last part.”

“What last part?” asked Hermione.

“She’s supposed to put that on, and then clean it off…” said Harry.

“Girls normally do that with their cosmetic stuff, Harry.” said Angelina.

“When was the last time you cleaned your face off with milk and honey?” asked Harry.

“Oh, never mind.” said Angelina with a small smile hidden behind her hands.

Millicent hurried as fast as she could out of the Great Hall after her friend, to tell her the important information. But before she could even reach the door, a scream emerged from what seemed to be the first floor girl’s lavatory.

“Too late.” said Harry with an evil smile on his face, the tips of his fingers pressed against each other.

“I told you not to look like that, you’re scaring me.” said Sirius with a laugh.

“Try as I may, I can’t really be angry with you.” said Remus thoughtfully.

End of dialogue set.

“Wow, you guys just don’t want to drop it do you?” asked Bill.

“It was actually a very good thing that they didn’t.” said Dumbledore, McGonagall nodded.

Dialogue line.
“Now you have no suspects that must really suck.” said Charlie.

“It did, now we didn’t feel even confident that this was going to be solved.” said Harry.

“Yeah, especially when Dobby said that it had happened before.” said Ron.

“Does she have money under there? Did the tooth goblin come and visit you?” asked Sirius with a playful smile.

“Tooth goblin? Don’t you mean Tooth fairy?” asked Hermione.

“Fairy’s don’t have money, where else would you get money from if not a Goblin?” asked Ron. "They come in the middle of the night, yank out your loose teeth and leave a sickle under your pillow."

“In the Muggleworld, they have something called a Tooth Fairy,” said Hermione. "She at least waits for the tooth to come out."

“You put a tooth under a pillow and she leaves you money.” said Harry. “Dudley used to knock my teeth out and stuff them under his pillow.” said Harry. “Strangely enough, my teeth grew back in less than a week.”

“Instead of ‘Dinky Duddykins’ as a nickname, his new one will be ‘Gummy’ when I get my hands on him.” said Sirius growling.

“That’s a hereditary thing. Your Great-Great-Great Uncle Broderick had that ability too, he was always getting into scraps.” said Remus thoughtfully. “But then once he hit twenty-four, that ability was gone.”

“Ron! That card belonged to Hermione.” admonished Mrs. Weasley.

“I gave it right back.” said Ron. “She should have pitched it right after she got it though.”

“Okay, now I’m concerned about you.” said Remus. “He didn’t catch you alone without the boys, did he?”

“No! No he didn’t” said Hermione quickly.
“He’s seems to be branching out his affections from Harry to other students.” said Moody thoughtfully. “When he can’t have him, he’ll try someone else.”

“I think Hermione and I were happier without that little notion.” said Harry sternly.

“Nice to know you play hard to get though.” said Ginny with a sly smile.

Harry looked over to her, and smiled brightly.

Third paragraph.

Dialogue line.

“Why would you?” asked Remus with similar disgust.

Hermione blushed. “He was nice to look at.”

“So is a Golden Firetail, but you don’t go right up to one.” said Remus.

“A what?” asked Dr. Clark,

“It’s the rarest breed of dragon, from the tip of it’s snout, to it’s tail, it looks like solid gold, with a bejeweled underbelly. We don’t know a single thing about it’s habits or anything. Some people only get to see a fleeting glimpse of one.” said Charlie excitedly. He sighed, “Everyone at the Dragon Reserve would just love to have five seconds just to stare at one.”

Then he snapped out of his daydream. “Despite how beautiful it is, it’s still very dangerous to go up to one, Dragons are a crunch first and ask questions later sort of animal.”

Fourth paragraph.

“She was turning beet red.” said Harry with a kind smile.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

“Dumbest, and most egotistical is what I would say.” said Sirius.

“And that’s being kind.” said Remus grinding his teeth.

Dialogue set, third sentence.

“With all the revisions I was going to have to do, I was amazed I got it all done.” said Harry dragging his hand down his face.
“It wasn’t that much.” said Snape smugly.

“Eight feet of essay on the Hair-Raising Potion, and then another two on what happens when you do it wrong, isn’t a lot?” asked Ron and Harry together. "And then Harry doing at least three different versions?"

"You're right, that was a lot." said Sirius.

Dialogue set, fourth sentence, first comma.

“Twelve.” said Hermione.

“Little late for that now.” said Ron with a smirk. “Besides, Harry answered it for me.”

End of dialogue set.

Dialogue line.

Snape massaged the bridge of his nose. “Meddlesome nuisances.”

Dialogue line.

“If there was someone attacked, don’t you think keeping Harry away and keeping yourselves safe should be a priority?” asked Sirius.

“You don’t want another house beating the magic out of him.” said Remus.

The people who were in on the assault blanched, that’s what the Dursley’s had threatened to do….

Fifth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Sixth paragraph.

“What the hell was he complaining about?” said Tonks.

“Something that I do not have the heart to change.” said Professor Dumbledore, guilt and regret radiating off his body.

Seventh paragraph, second sentence.
“We offered him a nice vacation, to get his mind off things, he refused.” said Professor McGonagall.

“Now that I think about it, I haven’t seen hide nor hair of Filch.” said Remus turning around in the bowl. “Not that I want to look at that bastard.”

“I told him that if I saw him anytime soon, I would be the last thing he ever saw.” said Dumbledore growing angry.

Seventh paragraph, fourth sentence.

“Sounds like something we’ve been trying to work on. A portable swamp.” said Fred whispering to Charlie.

“Sounds great, let me know when you perfect it, it would be awesome at the reserve, especially with that new guy. He’s still a bit jumpy.” said Charlie with a wide smile.

End of seventh paragraph.

“He was complaining about Myrtle? And you can’t bear to see her go? Why?” said Dr. Clark curiously.

Dumbledore wiped a stray tear that had slid down his crooked nose, but smiled over to the good Doctor.

“You are as inquisitive as Harry is.” said Dumbledore brightly.

Dr. Clark beamed brightly, reached over and ruffled Harry’s hair. He did not notice that his question went unanswered.

Dialogue line.

“Anything would do to upset her enough to flood the bathroom.” said Ron.

Dialogue set, first sentence, second comma fifteenth word.

“Never pictured you to be dainty, Harry maybe, but not you Ron.” said Fred.

“Shut up, I didn’t want my robes to end up soaking my socks.” said Harry defensively.

End of dialogue set.
“Sometimes you have to listen to those signs you know.” said Bill.

“Yeah, but we’ve been in there so many times that nothing in there could hurt us.” said Ron with a smug grin.

Harry sent him a pointed look, “Ah…yeah…forget I said anything.” said Ron meekly.

Eighth paragraph, first sentence.

“Thank goodness I wasn’t there.” whispered a Slytherin fifth year girl.

End of eighth paragraph.

“Well, I can sort of understand why Filch would be a mite pissed off.” said Sirius.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

“She flooded the entire bathroom, because someone threw something at her?” asked Remus.

“She was very much the same in life.” said Dumbledore.

Ninth paragraph.

“You’re so kind.” sighed Romilda.

What’s her damage? Harry thought to himself.

Dialogue set.

“Who could be that cruel?” asked Charlie. Ginny cringed.

It did not go unnoticed by Harry, he held out his arms, beckoning her to come and sit with him. She stood up and walked over, Harry had Sirius to make the bowl to stretch itself out and motioned her to sit beside him. She sat beside him and laid her head on his shoulder, He draped his arm behind her and held her close.

“What was up with that?” asked Charlie.
“That was right there that I learned logic doesn’t work for a bunch of people under twenty.” said Harry.

“I haven’t quite figured that one out yet.” said Hermione almost silently.

“You try.” said Harry and Ron together.

“The very wrong thing.” said most of the girls in the Great Hall.

“I think she took it wrong.” said Fred.

“Not even we would throw something through a ghost for fun.” said George.

“Someone could have just pitched the book and not realize she was in there.” said Fred.

“Or that she flew through it on accident.” said George.

“Wow…” said Fred and George together. “…gloomy…”

“I was right!” said Fred proudly.

“Okay, a dictionary, or an encyclopedia I could understand being upset. Alive or dead. But a small thin book?” said Sirius. “Someone needs to take a chill pill.”
“Good thinking, Ron,” said Mr. Weasley.

“It’s just a book.” said Dr. Clark.

“Sometimes, the most innocent thing can be the most harmful of weapons.” said Dumbledore wisely.

“Should we keep an eye on you?” asked Sirius, grinning at Harry.

“Stuff it.” said Harry. "I'm far from innocent."

“Guess we should keep an eye on you for another reason.” said Remus with a smirk.

“Ask Dad, he’ll tell you about ninety different ways an unknown book can be bad.” said Fred.

“Hmph, the Minister wouldn’t have confiscated them, without Arthur’s pressuring.” said Madam Bones. “I wish you would take the diplomatic training, Arthur, I think you would make a fine Minister.”

Umbridge struggled against her restraints.

“Don’t make me come over there.” growled Lionus. She immediately ceased.

“Ah, yes, ‘Phoenix’s Firelight Fancy’ I was given that book once, by some unscrupulous person. I had no notion of what it would do, until a house elf was cleaning my office and the book fell opened and he had happened to look at one of the pages.” said Dumbledore sadly.

“What happened to the house elf?” asked Hermione worriedly.

“I placed the house elf with a family member who could take better care of him then I could. After a while, his sight healed itself. Wondrous creatures, house elves.” said Dumbledore.
“Your Great-Great-Great Grandmother read that on accident. According to your dad, she would never shut up.” said Sirius to Harry.

“Though you had to admit, she did write some pretty amazing poetry. I wonder if it’s hereditary.” said Remus looking inquisitively at Harry.

“That was my Great-Aunt Matilda.” said Neville. “She tells everyone what happens in the book, so no one else will read it.”

“Good plan.” said Kingsley. “If she reads it to others, they won’t want to read it.”

“I was getting tired of the horror stories.” said Harry.

“You really don’t listen to warnings do you?” asked Remus.

“I’m starting to listen now, how’s that?” said Harry with innocent eyes.

Remus sighed but smiled. “Better late than never, I guess.”

“Fifty? Did it say fifty?” asked Sirius.

“That cannot be a coincidence.” said Remus thoughtfully.
Ginny whimpered slightly, Harry held onto her tighter.

“What’s wrong hon?” asked Dr. Clark.

“You’ll find out later.” said Harry quietly.

Dialogue set.

The school went silent.

“How do you know something like that? Even I don’t know that right off the bat.” said Percy.

“Well, you just have to have a great memory like mine.” said Ron proudly.

Fred read on quickly. “Sure Ron, keep telling yourself that.” he said with a smirk.

“Hey, I did remember, can’t dock me points.” said Ron slyly.

“…Well, you got me there.” said Fred.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set.

“Like I said, I’ve got a great memory.” said Ron.

“Continuously polishing and looking at it doesn’t hurt either.” said George.

Fourteenth paragraph.

“That would be a really boring diary.” said Sirius. “You’d need to spice up your life a bit.”

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

“Yeah, why throw away a blank book?” asked Fred.

Fifteenth paragraph.

Dialogue line.
The Hall went silent again.

“What is it this time?” asked Harry looking around.

“For someone who had only been to London twice in his life, you sure knew that Vauxhall Road was in the Muggle part of London.” said Fred.

“There is only one magical street in London, and it isn’t Vauxhall Road. If he was a Pureblood or Halfblood, he would have most likely gotten the book at Diagon Alley.” said Harry. "And I had been to London a few times before I got locked up in my room that year."

Dialogue line.

“RONALD!” said Mrs. Weasley.

“I was kidding!” said Ron quickly.

Sixteenth paragraph.

“I cannot say for certain if that was a good thing or bad thing.” said Remus.

“It was a good thing, for the long run.” said Harry and Dumbledore together.

Seventeenth paragraph, first sentence.

“Well, you only missed the time that they review the first term, so you really didn’t miss much.” said Bill.

End of seventeenth paragraph.

“I couldn’t figure out why someone wanted to pitch a blank book either.” said Hermione.

Dialogue line.

“Good luck finding them.” said Nightstrike. “I’d be impressed if a twelve year old can find out what that book is all about.”

Dialogue set, second sentence.
“Normally, I wouldn’t say a book has feelings, but after all this, I’m not too sure.” said Remus touching his chest absently.

“Does it hurt there?” asked Harry looking concerned.

“No, no.” said Remus quickly. “It’s nothing, it doesn’t hurt.”

End of dialogue set.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

Moody and Lionus smiled. He’d make a fine Auror.

End of dialogue set.

“Do you know Professor?” asked Colin.

“The books will tell us very soon I believe.” said Dumbledore his eyes lacking their normal twinkle.

Dialogue set, second sentence, fifth word.

“Yeah I know, you don’t get special services to the school for excelling in class.” said Ron.

Dialogue set, end of second sentence.

“But Octavius is friendly.” said Fred.

End of dialogue set.

Hermione, Ginny, Dumbledore, Mr. and Mrs. Wesley, McGonagall, Ron and Harry cringed slightly.

“Yeah, I didn’t really mean that.” said Ron.

“Ever get the feeling they’re hiding something.” said Sirius to Dr. Clark.

“Every time we read another sentence.” said Dr. Clark.
“It wasn’t enough to think you were holding back.” said Hermione sadly. “I just thought you had a brainstorm.”

“That’s what I remembered.” said Sirius.

“Hey, I was tired.” said Ron in his own defense.

Fred looked up from the book. “That would warrant a plaque in the trophy room I guess.”

“If they really did catch the heir of Slytherin, they would have found out where the Chamber is. So, whoever they put in Azkaban isn’t the one.” said Luna.

“She’s got a point.” said Sirius.

“That’s another point.” said Sirius smiling.

“You won’t be smiling for long, not when you see what the book has in it.” muttered Harry.
“From what Harry just said, yes there is.” said Tonks.

Nineteenth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Twentieth paragraph.

Twenty-first paragraph, first sentence.

“Well…you get an ‘O’ for effort.” said Remus kindly.

End of twenty-first paragraph.

Dialogue line.

“Why would you need a Revealer?” asked Charlie.

“Sometimes, someone changes my notes or removes the words on my homework.” said Hermione.

“Who is it?” said McGonagall quickly.

“Harry and Ron already taught them better manners.” said Hermione giving a quick look over to Parvati and Lavender.

Twenty-second paragraph.

Dialogue line.

“I had a cousin who did that, she has hundreds of journals, not a word in any of them.” said Dr. Clark.

“How would you know?” asked Remus.

“I looked in each and every one of them.” said Dr. Clark with a smirk.

“We are going to be the best of friends, mate!” said Sirius throwing an arm around Dr. Clark.

Twenty-third paragraph, first sentence.

Harry looked over to Dumbledore and then Lionus, they both nodded.
“You looked really different when you flipped through that book.” said Ron. “You looked a lot more intent.”

Not many people noticed the snarl on Harry’s face. Ginny held onto his hand tighter.

“Its okay.” said Ginny soothingly.

“Lousy ass, jerk.” said Neville, not to Harry, but an invisible Dudley.

“You’ve got some determination there kid.” said Wildfire with a smile, her eyes were an almost blinding blue.

“If I had to polish everything in it for four hours, I wouldn’t exactly go back in there either.” said George.

“If he saved the castle from a monster, you’d think that it would right out in front, at least a little further towards the middle than the Prefect and Head Boy/Girl list.” said Remus thoughtfully.

“I chose to put it over there, out of the way of casual glances, and perhaps today or tomorrow you will find out why.” said Dumbledore, a twinge of bitterness in his voice.

“Poor Ron.” snickered Ernie.
“How did he earn that one?” asked Moody, who knew full well who the boy was.

“Getting high marks in his N.E.W.T’s” said Dumbledore. “He actually received one ‘Star Exceeds Expectations.’”

“Wow, and Harry got a ‘Star Outstanding’.” said Sirius whistling.

“I am SO sorry.” said Ron to Percy. Percy was unsure why.

“You still say it like it’s a bad thing.” said Hermione. “And here you are a Prefect.”

Remus looked quickly over at the young man who sat beside him.

“Tell me you aren’t going to be like that.” said Remus.

“I might be going through it now, you never know.” said Harry with a broad smile.

“Merlin, give me strength.” said Sirius groaning loudly.
“At least you don’t need to worry about acne.” said Eloise

“What makes you think I didn’t have acne?” asked Harry inquisitively.

“Your face is still blemish free.” said Ginny, tapping Harry’s nose.

“I’m pretty sure I looked like I had the chicken pox sometime last night.” said Harry.

Dialogue set, end of first sentence.

“Well, he was whimpering just a bit outside the Hospital Wing.” said Professor Sprout.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

“Those things that were crying, then getting moody, and then having acne...you are going to cut them up and stew them?” said Dr. Clark faintly, he was turning a little green.

“Yes.” said Professor Sprout. “That is what you do with them.”

“Pardon me.” he said and ran out of the room.

“What’s up with him?” asked Draco.

“He went to go and get sick.” said Harry his head still facing the door.

End of dialogue set.

Twenty-seventh paragraph, first sentence.

“That was foolish and stupid thinking.” said Harry shaking his head.

Twenty-seventh paragraph, second sentence.

“I don’t know, seems like pretty wise thinking.” said Kingsley.

“Wait till someone else sort of thinks along the same lines.” said Harry bitterly.

End of twenty-seventh paragraph.

“I don’t think the monster hibernates.” said Ron. He looked at Harry and Hermione quickly. “Does it?” he asked.
“I’m not all that sure.” said Hermione.

“They do.” said Harry. “They can sleep for forty years at a time.”

“Can you put us out of our misery and tell us what it is?” pleaded Sirius.

“And ruin the excitement? Never.” said Ginny with a shaky laugh.

“Don’t make me sic your mother on you.” said Sirius teasingly

“Come on, play fair.” pouted Ginny.

Twenty-eighth paragraph, first sentence.

“What?” asked Remus.

Twenty-eighth paragraph, second sentence, first comma.

“Dumbledore, tell me that you told the students that you don’t think that Harry wasn’t the heir.” said Charlie tiredly.

“I told the students that the heir was no student going to school here.” said Dumbledore.

“Unfortunately, I do not think they believed me at the time.” he added sadly.

Twenty-eighth paragraph, end of second sentence.

“You’re still an idiot.” said Fred. Ernie shuffled shamefully, his mother’s howler from very early this morning burning in his ears.

End of twenty-eighth paragraph.

“He was really happy that I didn’t need the eye patches anymore, he took all I had.” said Dr. Clark with a laugh as he came back. He still looked a little pale, but was quickly getting his spirits back up.

Twenty-ninth paragraph, first sentence.

“That man needs a reality check.” said McGonagall. “No one made the attacks stop.”
“Lockhart must have seen you and wished to impress you.” said McGonagall. “He talked quite a bit louder when you came to stand behind Miss Granger.”

“Good Lord.” said Remus closing his eyes.

“I think Lockhart was the least of the monster and heir’s worries.” said Bill with a snicker.

Remus snorted and covered his mouth to stop from laughing too loud.

“Don’t sugarcoat it, tell us how you really feel.” said Harry with a smirk.

"You know, what the school needs now is a morale-booster.

“Oh, did he finally leave?” asked Tempest hopefully.

“Great! He really did leave!” said Charlie.

“Wait…what?” said Sirius.

“Valentine’s Day.” said Remus with a loud groan.

“This isn’t going to end well.” said Sirius.
“What was stopping you from just leaving and going to bed?” asked Tonks.

“Wood would have woken me up early the next day to practice again.” said Harry with a slight smile.

“I couldn’t wake you up for the life of me.” said Ron. “I even put on of Fred’s firecrackers under you, you didn’t even make a sound.”

“It was sort of scary, we thought you passed away in the night.” said Dean.

“But Seamus saw that you were breathing.” said Neville.

The teachers and the fourth years and up laughed loudly. Even Snape smirked.

“Something tells me it was good.” said Sirius.

“It was awful.” said Ron and Harry shaking their heads.

Sirius began to gag.

“Boys have no sense of cuteness.” said Angelina to Katie and Alicia.

“Thank goodness.” muttered Fred, George, Ron and Harry.

“It was horrible.” said Ron.

“It thought it looked lovely.” said Hermione indignantly.
“I have to side with Weasley on this one.” said Snape with his face twisted in disgust.

Dialogue line.

“That’s the great part about when the other teachers decorate, the stuff floating down from the ceiling doesn’t get on the food.” said Harry. ”I coughed up a little pink heart about ten minutes after breakfast.”

Thirty-third paragraph, first sentence.

“Don’t blame you Ron.” said Sirius holding his stomach.

Thirty-third paragraph, second sentence, second comma.

This time, Remus and Sirius gagged.

“There is nothing wrong with pink.” said Tonks, her hair turning to a bright bubble gum shade of pink.

“Your pink is one thing, his is something completely different.” said Remus giving a weak smile to his tentative girlfriend.

She smiled and planted a kiss on his lips, which took him completely off guard.

“Get a room.” said Sirius with a laugh.

Without missing a beat, Tonks flipped him off.

“Oooh! I see how it is.” said Sirius teasingly.

End of thirty-third paragraph.

Several students smiled weakly and others laughed quickly, but were silenced by the look both McGonagall and Snape gave them.

Dialogue set, third sentence.

“Only forty-six? I would have thought he’d have more.” said Remus with a smirk.

“It was only morning, he received about two hundred more by lunch time.” said Hermione.
Remus, Sirius and Dr. Clark groaned.

"Tell me he didn't give you anything." said Remus with a groan, looking at Harry.

"I got something in the afternoon," Harry looked pointedly at Ginny. "and then I got sort of frilly valentine towards dinner time, didn't know who sent it."

"How come?" asked Remus.

"It started singing something, then I burnt it." said Harry shrugging.

Ginny looked at Harry.

"Wasn’t yours.” said Harry. “Besides, you can’t burn a dwarf, least not quickly.”

End of dialogue set.

“Dear lord.” said Bill covering his eyes.

“Oh trust me, they get even worse.” said Fred with a frown on his face.

Thirty-fourth paragraph, first sentence.

“What are the dwarfs for?” asked Dennis.

“You have dwarfs too?” asked Dr. Clark.

“Not like the ones in our story books.” said Hermione.

End of thirty-fourth paragraph.

Most of the adults in the room stared.

“That…is demeaning…” said Dr. Nicodemus angrily.

“Hope Mighty doesn’t find out about this one.” said Nightstrike whistling quietly.

“Mighty?” asked Remus.

“He’s a dwarf lieutenant to Old Glory, the American Captain. He’s one of the strongest Rangers we have.” said Lionus. “And I hope he doesn’t find out, either. I’m looking for something definite to arrest this twit on.”

“I thought you guys could arrest people just for the hell of it.” said George.

“Yeah, but it makes the paperwork go a little easier when you have a reason. That way it’s just check the box that fits the scenario.” said Lionus. “Otherwise, you need to fill out another piece of “Then it goes to your superior for approval right?” asked Percy, slightly hoping that there was an escape for his two bosses.

“He only reviews cases every twenty years or so, all the while, you’re in Devil’s Garden. Most people don’t last longer than four years in there.” said Lionus wickedly. “And even then, if he notices that a Captain made the arrest it goes straight for approval.”

Dialogue set, second sentence.

“Those aren’t cupids.” said Fred.

“Those are dwarfs.” said George.

“And they don’t like the pink tutus you made them wear.” said both of the twins.

“How did he get them to do it?” asked Tempest. “Like us, they are a proud race.”

“He paid them handsomely.” said Harry. “I saw him give the leader a large bag of gold.”

“Whereas, actual Cherubs don’t cost a thing to have them come, they love spreading love and cheer everywhere.” said Emmeline.

“I think he wanted something that wasn’t as good looking as him.” whispered Rivers to Kingsley, who snorted loudly.

Dialogue set, third sentence.

“Whatever happened to the good old days when boys would almost die from embarrassment from handing a girl a Valentine?” asked Sirius.

“Or vice versa.” said McGonagall with a smirk.

Dialogue set, fourth sentence.

“Crud, I was hoping that it would.” sniggered Dr. Clark.

Dialogue set, fifth sentence.

“No we don’t!” said the staff loudly.
“I don’t think that Professor Snape would be all that festive and show anybody how to do that.” said Sirius.

“Also, they are against school rules.” said Snape menacingly.

Cho looked disappointed, but Romilda had a sneaky smile on her face.

“You poor man.” said Emmeline and Tonks together.

“I had never been so embarrassed in my entire life.” said Flitwick covering his face.

“No one laughed, and I’ll bet no one asked you.” said Harry.

“No, everyone else respected me enough to not ask.” said Flitwick gratefully.

“Everyone else was just as observant. I received no request to teach how to make Love Potions.” said Snape with a sneer.

“She was.” said Ron, Harry and Sirius kindly.

“You can do better, honey.” said Dr. Clark with a small laugh.

“Why do you call girls honey?” asked Sirius.

“In my line of work, well what was my line of work, I’d get some pretty terrified little kids and when I would talk to the girls and call them ‘honey’, or something along those lines, they would settle down a little bit.” said Dr. Clark. "They don't quite take to being called Miss blankety blank.”

“Bet you guys didn’t like that.” said Remus to the rest of the staff.

“We most certainly did not.” said McGonagall.
“That was an understatement.” said the staff in unison.

“Aww…little Harrykins got a Valentine!” said Sirius giving Harry a slight shove.

“First one from a girl that was actually near my age.” said Harry with a smile, Ginny smiled.

“Who wasn’t near your age?” asked Hermione.

“Mrs. McFinn, she got me a big chocolate heart.” said Harry. “I had the worst stomachache ever.”

“You weren’t supposed to eat it in less than three minutes like that.” said Dr. Clark shaking his head and laughing. “That thing was bigger than your head!”

“‘Friendly’ my ass.” muttered Remus.

“Your face was as red as a beet, mate, it was insanely funny.” said Ron.

“Why did you care if she was in line or not?” asked Cho.

“Well…” said Harry scratching the back of his head absently.

“He knew that Ginny had a crush on him, and he didn’t want to hurt her feelings.” said Bill.

“Sure, we’ll go with that.” said Harry blushingly.

The students slowly began to laugh.

“Wait, you’ll run up to a troll and all that other stuff, but a dwarf wearing golden wings and a Valentine, you hightail it out of there?” said Sirius trying not to laugh.
“Shut up.” said Harry.

End of thirty-seventh paragraph.

“He never stood a chance.” sniffed Fred.

“Poor Harry, it was so tragic.” said George, his hand over his heart.

Dialogue set, first sentence, first comma.

“A Valentine, and it’s MUSICAL!” said Sirius excitedly. “I’m so proud.”

End of dialogue set.

“Oh, he’s going to sing it. I’m glad I wasn’t there in the flesh.” said Sirius quickly.

Dialogue line.

“Don’t blame you, dwarves aren’t known for their singing voice.” said Lionus trying to hide his smirk.

Dialogue line.

Sirius stopped laughing, as did Remus and Dr. Clark.

Dialogue line.

Thirty-eighth paragraph.

“Madam Pince was royally pissed, there was a library book in there.” said Harry.

Thirty-ninth paragraph.

“We weren’t sure what the horrible noise was.” said Parvati.
Dialogue set, second sentence.

“What’s it to you what’s going on?” asked Sirius.

Draco looked down. “The corridor was being blocked by something.”

“That’s plausible, I guess.” said Sirius crossing his arms.

End of dialogue set.

“How’d that work for you?” asked Remus with a smile.

“Waste of time.” said Harry shaking his head.

Dialogue line.

“You were no help, whatsoever.” said Ron.

Percy looked down at the floor.

Fortieth paragraph.

Sirius, Remus and Dr. Clark looked at him quickly.

“I was fine, no bruise, no nothing.” said Harry quickly.

Dialogue line.

“Please.” said Harry with a broad smile. “Allow me.” He sang aloud the Valentine he had received so many years ago.

Harry's Valentine.

“I can’t believe you remembered it.” said Ginny giggling.

“It wasn’t hard to forget really.” said Harry smiling at her.

“Will you two quit getting all lovey dovey?” asked Fred holding his stomach. Both twins rushed over and picked their sister up and plopped her down next to their parents.

“Oi!” said Harry, he couldn’t help but smile.

“Be romantic on your own time.” said George.

“Wait till I get my hands on you two.” said Ginny, blushing madly and unable to hide her smile.

“Gotta catch us first.” said Fred teasingly.

Forty-first paragraph, first sentence.

“I was twelve.” said Harry defensively, when he noticed Ginny putting her hands on her hips. “And you were there.”

“Still, I can take it out on you now.” said Ginny with a smirk.

“Don’t please,” he said playing along, “I’m already getting the mickey taken out of me.” said Harry gesturing to the room.

Forty-first paragraph, second sentence, first comma.

“Didn’t work mate, you were still blushing.” said Ron.

End of forty-first paragraph.

“Like I said, you were no freaking help.” said Ron.

Dialogue line.

“Doesn’t sound like he wasn’t much help.” said Mr. Weasley wonderingly. “He’s trying to have Malfoy move along.”

“Wait for it dad.” said Ginny.

Forty-second paragraph.

“I thought it was yours.” said Draco.

Harry reached behind himself and tossed the black notebook over to Draco.

“Here, knock yourself out.” he said, not caring.
Draco opened it slowly. “What the…what the hell language is this?” asked Draco.

“I guess you could say my own. Give up yet?” asked Harry.

Draco tossed the book back.

Dialogue line.

“I just did.” said Draco with a smile.

“Dear lord, he made a joke.” said Fred.

“And it was funny!” said George in shock. Both pretended to swoon on the spot.

Dialogue set, second sentence, second comma.

“No I didn’t.” said Draco.

End of dialogue set.

“Why were you freaking about Harry’s diary?” asked Charlie.

“I…” said Ginny quietly.

“You’ll find out later.” said Harry quickly.

Dialogue line.

“Yeah, like that worked for your younger brothers.” said Bill rolling his eyes.

Dialogue line.

Snape looked round at Draco, his face and eyes doing more scolding then his voice ever could.

Forty-third paragraph, first sentence.

“And that never goes well for the person on the other end of that.” said Fred shivering slightly.
“Awesome!” said a few first years.

Snape stared at the young man.

“And you thought I don’t learn anything from you.” said Harry with a snide smile.

“That was beyond cool!” said Ron thinking back to that day.

“Blow it out your ear.” said Fred and George.

“Oh, is it Mr. Potter?” asked McGonagall crossing her arms.

“Well…you see…I…” said Harry trying to explain. “…never mind.”

“That was a low blow!” said Bill angrily.

Draco looked down.

“I did start it though.” said Harry cautiously.

“He can go after you then, but not our sister.” said Charlie snarling at Draco.

“Thanks mate.” said Ron.
“What? Did it disappear?” asked Ernie.

“No, something else.” said Harry.

“Okay, that’s just plain freaky.” said Sirius.

“Worst year ever.” said Ron.

“You’re telling me.” said Ginny.

“Oh, come on! Stay up late!” said Sirius. Remus smacked him behind the head sharply.

“He already doesn’t get enough sleep, he doesn’t need to lose any more.” said Remus.

“Oh, I see how you are.” said Ginny teasingly.

“Hey, they didn’t sing it as good as I did.” said Harry, mockingly preening his own feathers.

"Yeah, yeah, stuff it." said Fred teasingly.

“Harry, you have to get rid of that book, you’re becoming infatuated with that thing, just like that blasted mirror.” said Remus.

“I’m siding with Moony on this one.” said Sirius worriedly.
“Be wary lad.” said Moody.

End of forty-eighth paragraph.

Hermione stared. “Is that you going all out? What the heck made you do that?”

Harry only smiled. “I’ll never tell.”

Forty-ninth paragraph, first sentence.

“That…is not normal.” said Kingsley thoughtfully.

End of forty-ninth paragraph.

“What made you write your name?” asked Tonks.

“Call it a gut feeling.” said Harry.

Fiftieth paragraph.

Fifty-first paragraph.

Dialogue line.

“PITCH THAT BOOK!” shouted Mr. Weasley, Moody, Tonks, Kingsley, Remus and Sirius.

“Throw that book away, don’t write in it anymore.” said Mr. Weasley, desperately hoping that shouting at the book would change his daughter’s past.

Fifty-second paragraph.

Dialogue line.

“Should have went all the way down.” said Mrs. Weasley growling.

“What’s up with Molly?” asked Remus.

Fifty-third paragraph.
“God, he was a slick one.” thought Harry viciously.

“Harry’s the neatest writer in the dormitory.” said Neville.

“But when I’m in a rush, my handwriting looks as bad as Seamus’.” said Harry with a sneer.

“Yeah, yeah.” said Seamus folding his arms and smiling despite himself.

“Formal ain’t he?” whispered George, but they took quick notice of their little sister.

“You okay, shortcake?” asked Fred.

“Fine, just fine.” said Ginny trying to stop her hands from shaking.

Bill stood up, walked over and put her on his lap. “Feel better?” asked Bill soothingly.

“Little.” said Ginny, sending a worried look over to Harry, who smiled warmly over to her.

“Boy…” said Moody.

“Don’t call him that!” said Sirius. “That’s what that walrus called him.”

Moody spat disgustedly, then continued, “Don’t get too involved in that thing, seems like a trap to me.”

“I can’t even disagree with that. In a sense, it was a trap.” said Harry sagely.

“You have a wonderful way of making me feel better, you know that?” asked Remus worriedly.

“How convenient.” said Dr. Clark tensely.

Harry looked up quickly out of his ravine, he hadn’t thought of it like that before. It was convenient, that a diary of someone fifty years ago would miraculously turn up when the same plight began to affect the school. How could he possibly miss that?

Dialogue set, fourth sentence.

“No he didn’t.” snarled Ron, Harry and Hermione.

End of dialogue set.

“Can’t argue with him on that.” said Hermione. “The person behind it all was never imprisoned.”

Fifty-fifth paragraph.

“It’s the damned mirror all over again.” groaned Tonks.

Dialogue line.

“Well you might get a clue, to whoever it is by the person they accused.” said Moody.

“Years ago, I thought this guy was right.” said Harry sheepishly. He sent an apologetic look up to Hagrid, who smiled and waved away Harry’s unspoken apology.

Dialogue line.

“Don’t do it.” said Sirius swiftly.

Fifty-sixth paragraph, fourth sentence, first comma.

“Not one word.” said Remus warningly.

“I wasn’t going to say a single word.” said Sirius innocently.

End of fifty-sixth paragraph.

Dialogue line.
“Alright, you are really close to getting grounded this weekend.” said Sirius.

“Hey, now. This happened years ago!” said Harry. “You channeling Remus or something?” asked Harry.

“What the hell?” asked Dr. Clark.

“Wow, kinda reminds you of a Scattered Shot doesn’t it?” asked Ron.

“It does, but then again, it doesn’t” said Kingsley.

Speckerton looked interestedly at the book. It’s not possible for a diary to be a Memorial Book, but it could be something completely different.

“It was like being in a blender.” said Harry shaking his head.

“So you went from the Gryffindor Dormitory to Dumbledore’s office? I guess that’s not too bad.” said Dr. Clark carefully.

“I’m amazed that you didn’t see his picture in the Headmaster’s office.” said McGonagall, recognizing who the old man was immediately.
“I think his portrait was out for cleaning.” said Dumbledore thoughtfully.

Dialogue line.

Sixty-first paragraph.

“You are way too polite.” said Fred.

“We need to teach him to be a bit ruder, don’t you think?” said George.

Sixty-second paragraph.

Dialogue line.

“If he doesn’t hear you, you didn’t disturb him!” shouted Fred.

Sixty-third paragraph.

“Well aint he rude?” said George.

Sixty-fourth paragraph.

“What the heck is he waiting for?” asked Sirius.

“At least you always occupy your time with something constructive.” said McGonagall.

“Now Minerva, he had arthritis, he didn’t have the dexterity I do.” said Dumbledore.

Sixty-fifth paragraph.

“Whoa….you got that all in a quick look round?” asked Colin excitedly.

“Wasn’t that hard to figure out, actually.” said Harry shrugging his shoulders.

Sixty-sixth paragraph.

Dialogue line.
“Right then and there, I was happy you were Headmaster sir.” said Harry looking over to the man.

“Why is that?” asked Dumbledore, a twinkle in his eye.

“One can tell just how strong you are by your voice. You sound more able to protect the people around then he ever gave the impression of.” said Harry, sounding more confident with his words than anyone else had heard before.

Dumbledore smiled warmly and looked down, humbled.

Sixty-seventh paragraph.

Harry made a sound like a cobra preparing to strike.

“Hate being compared to him.” said Harry grimly. “Even though I’m the one who did the comparing.”

"What's so bad about this Riddle guy?" whispered Dr. Clark.

"Nothing that I know of yet.” said Sirius.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

“That always bugged me. Why did he look nervous I wonder.” said Harry thoughtfully.

"One can only guess." said Dumbledore.

Dialogue line.

"Why would you send a letter? Just go up and talk to the Headmaster." said Fred.

"Well, years ago, that was the way things were done. You needed to send a letter of request to speak to the Headmaster, and give the reason you wish to speak to him." said McGonagall.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Harry groaned louder.

"You aren't him, Harry." said Dumbledore comfortingly.

Harry smiled genuinely.
"He didn't have an abusive family did he?" asked Colin uneasily.

"No, I actually envied him. He had a much easier lot in life than I did." said Harry.

"Beef cattle have it better than you did." said Dr. Clark angrily.

"Sounds good to me. At least there would have been a chance to get adopted out." said Harry.

"I wonder why he didn't get adopted." said Ginny quietly.

"Strange occurrences happened around him, and he refused to allow anyone to adopt him. Though there were plenty of families who asked for him." said Dumbledore.

"He always had an intense dislike for that place." said Dumbledore thoughtfully.

"More of a reason to want to get adopted out." said George.

"This guy makes no sense." said Fred, shaking his head.

"So what is he doing in a muggle orphanage?" asked Draco wonderingly.

"That's sad. Poor Tom." said a first year Gryffindor.

"'Poor Tom' is not what I would say actually." said Harry bitterly.
"I really hate that sound." said Charlie. "Every time I hear it, I want to just smack the daylights out of the person doing it."

"Could that have happened with Harry?" asked Dennis.

"Yes, he would have come and stayed with a member of the staff, most likely myself." said Dumbledore. "Tom would have most likely stayed with the Head of his house."

"Maybe we'll find out something to show us what the heck is going on!" said Remus excitedly.

"But if he was going to stay with his Head of house..." said Seamus.

"The Head of house would have had the option of staying in the castle, and it was no secret that Slughorn wished to stay all year round." said Dumbledore.

"Hate to say it, but he sort of sounds like you, sir." said Harry.

"Indeed." said Dumbledore choking slightly.

"But not completely." said Harry earnestly.

"They wouldn't dare!" shouted Mrs. Weasley.

"Times were desperate then, and three years ago, it was again." said Dumbledore.
"A child died!" said Mrs. Weasley angrily, "And he calls it unpleasantness?"

Sixty-ninth paragraph.

Dialogue line.
"Sounds like he knows exactly who it is. I wonder how long has he known?" asked Moody suspiciously.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"Liar." said many of the students in the hall.

Seventieth paragraph.

"Not entirely the same, dear boy." said Dumbledore soothingly.

Seventy-first paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Seventy-second paragraph.

That is one of the many things that you and him differ." whispered Dumbledore, coming to stand behind Harry to whisper in his ear. "He had horrible posture."

Harry snorted.

Seventy-third paragraph.

"Was he trying to figure out who the heir was?" asked Ernie.

"Not even close." said Harry angrily.
"Gliding?" asked Sirius.

"Turns out, in the memory, that I didn't need to walk, if I willed hard enough, I could float behind him." said Harry.

"Three guesses who that is!" chanted Fred and George.

"Fifty years ago?" said Dr. Clark weakly.

"He was still plenty old back then too." said Sirius in a whisper.

"The one you give me is kinder." said Harry with a smile.

"At least you showed that poor child respect." said Madam Bones.

"Harry's a stalker!" shouted George.

"Don't give me any more bad press. She did enough damage." said Harry nodding towards Rita Skeeter who was sitting secludedly in the corner.

"Why hasn't she wrote or said anything?" asked Hermione.

"We stunned her. We prefer to go about without the press knowing anything about us." said
Lionus. "She's been knocked out since I and Doc started giving away secrets."

Seventy-seventh paragraph, first sentence.

"Why is he going to the Potions classroom?" asked Neville.

"That wasn't always a Potions classroom." said Snape, without his normal sneer towards the teen.

"Tha's true." said Hagrid.

End of seventy-seventh paragraph.

"He's acting a bit odd, isn’t’ he?" said Colin.

Seventy-eighth paragraph, second sentence.

"What the hell is he waiting for?" asked Bill.

"The right moment." said Harry, his face twisted in anger.

Seventy-eighth paragraph, third sentence, second comma.

"I was amazed that my patience lasted that long." said Harry with a smile.

End of seventy-eighth paragraph.

Seventy-ninth paragraph, second sentence.

"Who is it?" asked a worried fourth year Ravenclaw.

End of seventy-ninth paragraph.

"Felt like a real idiot, didn't you?" said Zacharias snidely.

"You're really pushing your luck, you know that right?" said Fred threateningly.
"Hagrid, is that you?" asked Luna.
"Yup." said Hagrid, his face darkened.

"What's with the box?" asked Lee.

"This won't end well." said Ernie worriedly.
"It IS Hagrid." said Dennis.

"Ever get the feeling he won't tell you?" said Anthony.

"What is he talking about?" asked Dr. Clark.
"He's saying that Hagrid was the one that attacked those people!" said Ernie.
"It can't have been him! I may not have known him nearly as long as the rest of you lot, but I know he wouldn't have done it!" said Dr. Clark angrily.
"RIGHT ON!" said Ron, Harry and Hermione.
"TWAS'NT HIM!" shouted Hagrid.

"Huh?" said the people in the Great Hall.

"If he knew where to find it so fast, he could have saved that girl!" said Remus angrily.

"Thank goodness you couldn't be hurt." said Sirius.

"That must have been one lulu of a spell to knock Hagrid into a wall." said Rivers.

The students and adults turned and stared at him. Even Hagrid looked concerned.

"What could make you scream like that?" asked Sirius.

"That sounds like...." said Dr. Clark.

"ACROMANTULA!" shouted Charlie.

"Not where I was going." said Dr. Clark.
"An acromantula is a giant spider." said Charlie worriedly.

"Jesus! You have those?" said Dr. Clark lifting both legs into the bowl.

"Yeah, but aren't you reading 'Fantastic Beasts and Where to Find Them'?" said Sirius.

"It's the unabridged version." said Remus. "It's about four times longer than the school version."

End of eighty-sixth paragraph.

"I don't know who to really root for." said Michael Corner.

Eighty-seventh paragraph.

"Destroy...that...book..." said Sirius slowly.

"I agree." said Dr. Clark anxiously.

Eighty-eighth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"I couldn't seem to find you anywhere, I did everything but look outside the tower window." said Ron.

Eighty-ninth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"You looked really ill. I was about to get Madam Pomfrey, or at the most send a letter to Mum." said Ron.

End of chapter.

"I am really sorry Hagrid, I believed him." said Harry.

"Well...yeh believed me in the end, so it was alrigh'." said Hagrid kindly.

Harry's stomach growled loudly. Much to Harry's surprise.

"Lunch time." said Sirius quickly.
"Good idea, best keep your stomach full, boy. You're still undergoing some changes, slight as they may be." said Dr. Nicodemus.

Chapter End Notes

Thanks for reading!
“So who is gonna read now?” asked twins together.
“I'll take a turn,” said Dean walking over and taking the book.

“Fourteenth chapter.” said Dean loudly.

“Should I be kind and not be present for this chapter?” said Lionus snidely.
Fudge paled and nodded quickly.
"But then again, I'm not necessarily known for my kindness, now am I" said Lionus smirking.

First paragraph, first sentence.

All three of them looked at each other quickly then turned towards Hagrid.

"SORRY!" they all shouted.

First paragraph, second sentence, first comma.

"I still miss the poor little tyke." said Hagrid blowing his nose loudly.

“Norberta isn’t exactly little anymore.” said Charlie with a smile. “She’s one of the biggest youngsters we’ve ever seen.”

First paragraph, end of second sentence.

"I'm still having nightmares about that. I'm sorry Hagrid, but a dog twice as large as me, with three heads...I'm going to take a pass." said Dr. Clark.
Hagrid shuffled his feet miserably. "Did you go and search after it?" asked Remus curiously, though his face lined with worry and suspicion. "I did, only a little bit though. Never did find nothin'." said Hagrid.

"I'll admit, I did think tha', but after the first attack, I changed me mind." said Hagrid. "Fascinating mental image." said Snape with a sneer. "Quite the Norman Rockwell picture." "What is..." asked Draco. "I'll tell you all about that sort of art, when classes resume." said the Hogwarts Arts teacher. "How do you know about muggle pictures?" asked Draco. "Something I’ll tell you when you’re older.” said Snape.

"Not unless them damned Dursley's hurt you again." said Hagrid cracking his knuckles, which sounded like gunshots sounding off. "Our sentiments exactly." said Sirius rubbing and cracking his own knuckles.

"As I have said before, the truth can be a terrible thing." said Dumbledore looking sadly at Harry. "Don't I know it. I was almost happier being in the dark." said Harry. "But nowadays, being kept in the loop can keep you alive." he sent a pointed look towards the old man.
"So sue us for wanting to make sure we heard it right." huffed Hermione.

"I told you forty-seven times!" said Harry. "If you couldn't hear me right the first twenty times, you need to see Madam Pomfrey."

End of second paragraph.

"I hated that part, trying to find the holes in almost every part of that memory. Just about drove me mad. Its one thing to do it maybe four times, but more than thirty is unbearable." said Harry.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

"He did." said Dumbledore, his eyes absent of their twinkling, but filled with a cold fury.

End of dialogue set.

"It was." said Harry with a growl.

Dialogue line.

"Well, we have the current one, there was a troll, and a three headed dog." said Fred ticking off each creature.

"And the most horrible. most diabolical monster to wizardkind." said George.

"UMBRIDGE!" shouted the twins loudly.

“If only she was.” mumbled Nightstrike wistfully.

“We could have more frequent furloughs.” said Tempest.

Dialogue line.

"It wouldn't have made any sense to frame Hagrid and then continue with the attacks." said Kingsley thinking carefully.

Third paragraph.
“Again, I’m real sorry.” said Ron to his older brother.

Everybody was trying to frame everyone else at that point.” said Harry. “I had a few people try and sneak what looked like a list of all the Muggleborns in my bag. Every time I got to a classroom I would have to check my bag and take out all the stuff that wasn’t mine.”

“There was some really weird stuff in his bag.” said Ron. “There was quite a few strange looking darts in his bag.”

“Why weren’t we informed?” said Professor Flitwick horrified.

“We managed to handle it pretty well on our own, Ron and I.” said Harry.

“Still don’t blame him for wanting to stay here.” said Harry looking around the Great Hall.

“Don’t bother with that. You’re staying somewhere just as good. You’re going to love it!” said Sirius happily.

“Now who brought that up?” asked Charlie.

“Hermione.” said Ron.

“Oh, I did not!” said Hermione.

“Which is the only place in London to buy that particular garden pest remover.” said Dumbledore with a slight smile. “It’s a harmful powder that if it comes in contact with children, they can get very ill.”

“No children are allowed in Knockturn Alley, it’s the safest place for the most harmful, yet helpful items. Knockturn Alley isn’t just full of Dark Art shops, there are some kind shop keepers there.” said Kingsley.
Fourth paragraph.
“The same question she kept asking every time they made me retell what I saw.” sighed Harry.

Dialogue line.
“Miss Granger! That would be extremely rude and invasive!” scolded McGonagall.
“We didn’t actually go and ask him about it.” said Hermione.
“We never got the chance.” said Ron.

Dialogue line.
“According to the Ministry, Harry is mad.” said a first year, giggling.
Harry smirked.

Fifth paragraph, first sentence, first comma.
“If you become and Auror Harry, you’ll have to drop that little bit of kindness.” said Madam Bones somewhat fondly. “But it was nice of you to do that, giving Hagrid a second chance and the benefit of a doubt.”
“We’d of put Hagrid in protective custody, but the Minister overstepped his boundaries.” muttered Kingsley.

Fifth paragraph, first sentence, second comma.
“Thank bloody goodness.” said Bill.

Fifth paragraph end of first sentence.
“That reminds me, did the people who bet that we would find out how Hagrid got expelled get their money?” asked Ron.
“Yeah, not a whole lot of people had faith in you.” said Fred.
“I won twenty galleons.” said Luna holding her small pouch.

“Wish we could have put our money in.” muttered Ron.

Fifth paragraph, second sentence, first comma.

“Wow, time flies when you’re scared witless.” said Fred.

Fifth paragraph, end of second sentence.

“Or at least for another fifty years.” said Dr. Clark worriedly.

Fifth paragraph, third sentence, first comma.

“You can only come up with so many dance routines and extra verses.” said Ron with a laugh.

Fifth paragraph third sentence, second comma.

“I didn’t realize that it was you that I was asking.” said Ernie honestly.

“I figured that after you stared at me when I handed you the bucket.” said Harry.

Fifth paragraph end of third sentence.

“How does a plant throw a party.” asked Dr. Clark.

“Haven’t you ever heard of a garden party?” said Percy, grinning at his own joke.

Fred and George stared. “That was bad.”

“But you get bonus points for trying.” said Charlie.

End of fifth paragraph.

“She always did like parties.” said Tonks with a smile. “She loved the ones I would plan.”

“Yours were more fun than what the other students would have.” said Professor Sprout. “But the reason of my happiness lay a little deeper.”
“Dear lord.” said Dr. Clark massaging his brow. “That was more information that what I would have liked.”

“Do we need to have a little talk?” said Sirius looking at Harry.

“On what?” asked Harry.

“Uh…you know…the birds and the bees…” said Sirius carefully.

“Oh that, sure we can talk about it.” said Harry. “What do you want to know?”

Sirius and Remus both stared, Dr. Clark’s mouth hung open.

“I’m kidding.” said Harry with a laugh.

“I would hope so.” said Remus, trying vainly not to laugh.

“It was nice of you to ask after the Mandrakes by the way.” said Professor Sprout.

“I was curious. And it was getting a little annoying with the Hufflepuffs and the Ravenclaws trying to set me up,” said Harry. “And even a few Gryffindors.”

“I don’t think I ever regretted the classes I chose.” said Tonks.

“Me either.” said Bill.

“I just wish that they offered counseling for third years, so if they have a dream job they can actually take the classes for it.” said Remus.

“Like I told you in your fifth year, Remus, you were told to come to me if you had a job in mind at the time.” said McGonagall.

“But still…” he said with a quiet whine in his voice.

“He still whines about not taking Professor McGonagall up on her offer. Everyone else did, but he took on a self-pity road, cause of his furry little problem.” said Sirius with a smirk.
“Go figure.” said Fred.

Dialogue line.

“That’s true.” said Luna dreamily. “You never know what could decide your fate, that’s why I wear my radish earrings. They’re made from Wrackspurt scales. They clear my mind and tug slightly when I make a wrong choice, then I quickly change it.”

“Wow, that’s cool.” said Dr. Clark.

Hermione rolled her eyes.

"After this," said Harry holding up the little vial around his neck, "I believe you."

Dialogue line.

Professor Snape stared.

“The sneering was getting on my nerves just a bit.” said Harry shrugging.

Dialogue line.

“Ronald!” shouted Mrs. Weasley.

“Hey! The teacher teaching the class was a joke.” said Ron defensively.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

“Learned real fast that doing that was a really bad idea.” said Ron.

Seventh paragraph, first sentence, first comma.

“That was a lot of letters to get in one session. He had to ask some people to help him carry all the letters.” said Ron.

“I counted about thirty two letters.” said Harry.
said me people to help him carry all the letters." had to slightlt ttle problem."job they can actually take the cl

“Both are pretty hard.” said Harry. “If you have good math skills than Arithmancy is for you, but Ancient Runes you need to undergo a lot of studying.”

Seventh paragraph, third sentence.
"Yeah, I had to change that tactic, two of the classes I picked were going on at the same time." said Dean with a sheepish grin.

End of seventh paragraph.
"You won't be able to sleep with all the homework those classes issue." said Sirius.

"And you won't be able to do all them, they take place at the same time some other classes are going on." said Tonks.

"I managed." said Hermione proudly.

"Not for long." murmured Harry.

Eighth paragraph, first sentence.
Harry whistled low. "How that conversation would have gone, I would rather not think about it."

End of eighth paragraph.
"Here we go." said Fred.

"Brace yourselves." said George.

Dialogue set, first sentence.
"Okay, you got one good point there." said Fred grudgingly.

Dialogue set, second sentence.
"And you lost it." said Hermione. Professor Trelawny sent quick scowl towards the fifth year girl.

Dialogue set, third sentence, second comma.

"At least one of your secretaries had a brain." said Lionus sneering up to the ex-Minister.

“But Harry grew up in the Muggle world, it’s would be pointless for him to take the class.” said Seamus.

Dialogue set, end of third sentence.

"Best worker in that department I've ever seen." said Dr. Nicodemus with a smile.

Dialogue set, fourth sentence.

"I wouldn't trade my dragons for anything." said Charlie, thinking fondly of his scaly charges.

End of dialogue set.

"Okay, okay, you gave some decent advice." said Fred.

"Except for the Divination part." said George.

Ninth paragraph, first sentence.

"Really Potter?" sneered Zacharias.

"The only thing I let people know I'm good at, yeah." said Harry smugly.

Ninth paragraph, second sentence, second comma.

"We are sort of similar." said Ron with a smile.

End of ninth paragraph.
"What did you mean by that?" asked Sirius.

"Just in case that I studied them wrong. And I would at least have Ron there to make sure that I dumb down my homework enough." said Harry shrugging.

Tenth paragraph, second sentence, first comma.

"That's sort of a compliment. He thought he would need to work hard to beat our team. To be honest, the only good players we had was the Seeker position and the Beaters." said Ernie.

Tenth paragraph, end of second sentence.

"And sleep, I hope," said McGonagall quietly.

"Yes." said Harry quickly. Professor McGonagall looked at him skeptically.

“Now why don’t we believe you dear boy?” said Dumbledore with a sad smile.

Tenth paragraph, third sentence, third comma.

"Drier." said the veteran members of the Gryffindor team.

End of tenth paragraph.

"Nice to know that you're humble about your seeking skills. Your dad on the other hand...he was awful about it." said Sirius.

"Thing was, he could back up his claims." said Remus with a smile.

Eleventh paragraph.

"What was wrong dear?" asked Mrs. Weasley worriedly.

"Something pretty bad." said Neville.

"It wasn't another attack." said Ron reassuringly.

Dialogue line.
"I was afraid he was going to blame me for what happened." said Neville. "But after the first initial shock, he wasn't really fazed."

"Holy….! I didn't have my trunk gone through till I was at least sixth year." said Sirius.

"What did you do?" asked Ron.

"I sort of kissed another guy's girl. I don't recommend doing that." said Sirius with a smirk.

"Thank goodness that wasn't my favorite one." said Harry with a smile.

"Just what I wanted to show God and everyone, my boxers."

"Aww...he's so modest." said Dr. Clark with a laugh.

"I was still finding socks under the sheets the next day." said Harry with a laugh, and sending a sly wink over to Ginny. She smiled warmly.

"I sort of took great care to step on them." said Harry with a laugh.

"It was one that I had never heard of before." said Harry with a smile.
"Someone was desperate to find something." said Moody thoughtfully.

"Good lad." growled Moody appreciatively.

"The books missing, isn't it." said Bill worriedly.

"That's not good." said Remus worriedly.

"That's the telltale sign that says, 'We need to talk, right now.'" said Ron with a smirk.

"It was a very fascinating read." said Hermione with a smile.

"They misinterpreted the fourth line of the sixth chapter." said Harry looking in his little black book.

Hermione and the Ancient Runes teacher stared at him. Hermione reached into her bag and brought out the book from her bag. She flipped to the page as described by Harry, read it slowly and released a gasp.

"You're right! It should be retquard not retquarb!" said Hermione in shock.
Seventeenth paragraph.

"And at this news." said Hermione staring at the book.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"You think fast." said Lionus, with an impressed smile.

Eighteenth paragraph.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

"Well, at least he knows the significance of protein." said Dr. Clark with a smile.

End of dialogue set.

"Hell, you need a decent breakfast every day." said Madam Pomfrey.

“Poppy…!” said Professor Sprout.

Nineteenth paragraph, first sentence.

"That's a creepy thought." said Dennis.

Nineteenth paragraph, second sentence, first comma.

"How do you report the theft of something that you really cannot stake a claim to?" asked Mr. Weasley.

End of nineteenth paragraph.

"It was bad enough, I was still being framed for almost everything." said Harry.

Twentieth paragraph, first sentence.
"That problem list just keeps right on growing sometimes." said Harry shaking his head.

End of twentieth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"Dear God not again." said Sirius his face slowly turning pale.

Twenty-first paragraph.

That startled the hell out of us." said Ron. "First you were silent, then you're yelling in our ears."

Dialogue line.

Twenty-second paragraph, first sentence.

"Hold on, if Ron couldn't hear it, could you?" said Dr. Clark asked Hermione quickly. She shook her head.

"Then..." he said slowly.

He reached behind himself and pulled out Fantastic Beasts and Where to Find Them.

"It has to be a snake." said Dr. Clark flipping through the textbook. He turned to several different pages, and stopped on one. "I remember reading about this one in primary school," he read the section quickly. "Oh, dear. I hope to everything holy that this is not what is crawling around the school."

Sirius looked over his shoulder and turned a ghostly white. "I hope that thing isn't around either."

"What is it?" asked Remus quickly.

"You don't want to know, and if there is any luck in this world, it won't be that thing." said Sirius quickly.

End of twenty-second paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Twenty-third paragraph.

"She must've figured out the snake part too." said Dr. Clark weakly.
"He was actually shaking." said Ron. "You could've put a milk in his hand and made a milkshake."

"Understatement." said Ron.

"I was freaking out from the voice, I wasn't focusing much." said Harry sheepishly.

"A troll could have walked past me, I wouldn't have noticed." said Harry.

"Another voice speaking of killing and you think of a Quidditch Match!" shrieked Mrs. Weasley.

"Sorry." said Ron quietly.

"You really should have told someone." said Tonks, "That way you wouldn't have to worry about it."

"But I would have, only I could hear it." said Harry. "I would have been asked every other minute if I heard anything."

"Thanks Harry." said Hermione with a small smile, but she stopped when she noticed that he was looking down at the floor, his face turning chalky.
"Well yeah, it was one of the first times to forget our troubles and just be kids," said Fred.

"We had the Valentine's Day thing," said Hermione.

"Yeah...I don't think you quite realized something Hermione." said Ron.

"Guys don't really go for the romantic, touchy feely sort of stuff when we're under seventeen years old." said George shrugging.

"That had to be the first time ever that Oliver didn't have a pregame talk." said Angelina. "He was too excited to play."

"Bad feeling." said Charlie.

"Why not..." asked Kingsley.

"We weren't exactly thinking of most time saving things at the moment." said Professor McGonagall sharply.

Harry took a ragged breath.

"Wow, there has never been a game cancellation before, not even severe weather would stop a game." said Sirius.
"It was hilarious." said Fred. "That was the last time I laughed for quite a while." he gave a quick look over to Hermione.

"That boy needed a reality check." said McGonagall bitterly.

"I'm starting to freak out." whimpered Dr. Clark. "Your life would make one epic of a movie. There would have to be one for each school year though."

"I can’t picture anyone watching it." said Harry.

"We could!" shouted the school happily.

"People love to single you out, don't they?" said Tonks.

"You sure are a pessimist. That's something we can try and help you change." said Sirius with a laugh. But his laughter died when he noticed Harry looking fixedly at the floor.

"I guess that means you aren't accusing him of anything, but what the bloody hell happened?" asked Remus worriedly.
"Those were the smart ones." said Lionus.

"Where would you take them if not to an office?" said Kingsley.

Sirius looked at his old Head of House in shock. "What the..."

"Oh crap." said Remus worriedly.

Hermione looked at Harry.
"Did you know what was coming?" she asked quietly.
Harry did not answer.

Percy turned white and gulped loudly.
“Oh, so it wasn’t me.” muttered the girl quietly.

Harry stood up and walked swiftly out of the room, to the confusion of several people.
Ten minutes later, in the boys’ bathroom, he looked up ashen faced and gazed into the mirror that lay before him. His forehead was sweaty and tears streamed down his cheeks. He held his stomach moaned softly.

"Are you alright Harry?" asked a gentle voice coming from the door. Harry turned and came eye to eye to Dumbledore.

"I'm fine." said Harry wiping his brow quickly.

"Alas, that statement tells me that you most certainly are not." said Dumbledore with a sad smile and he walked over to young man. "You are upset that you could not protect Miss Granger all those years ago, are you not?"

"I should have told her that it could wait, she never should have gone to library alone." said Harry shaking his head.

"Ah...the dreaded 'should have'." said Dumbledore shaking his head. "I am telling myself quite a few of those every day since these books started. When we look into the past, dear boy, we will always find something that we regret most furiously, but there is nothing we can do about them now. All we can do is make the best of what our actions have caused."

"Can't we stop reading these things? Part of the time, they're a great fun reading, everyone is enjoying themselves, but other times...not so much." asked Harry quietly.

"We cannot stop now, not when we have come so far. Besides, if you remember, there are seven books total." said Dumbledore with a slight smile. "You could find out what could happen to you in the last two years of your school year."

"What 'could'? It's not definite?"

"Nothing in the future is definite; their existence relies on the choices we make. By knowing a head of time something, we can do our best to prevent it." said Dumbledore with a smile.

"Where were these things last year?" asked Harry with a smirk.

It was a half hour before they came down to Great Hall. Harry was still pale but he had a faint smile on his lips.

"You alright, Cub?" asked Sirius worriedly.

"I'm fine, for the time being anyway." he said with a smile.

“Well, come here anyway.” said Sirius extending his arms.

Harry slowly went and sat beside Sirius, who wrapped his arms protectively around him.

Dialogue line.

Thirty-sixth paragraph.

Thirty-seventh paragraph.

"Well...you never were one to primp." said Ron shrugged at the indignant Hermione.
"That and we were in shock." said Harry with a small smile.

Dialogue line.

“You poor guys.” said Tonks sympathetically.

“But Hermione was the one who was attacked?” said Lavender indignantly.

“Yeah, but they had to see her lying like that.” said Remus.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

“I did not want the Prefects or the Head Boy and Girl out, but they wouldn't hear of us keeping them from helping.” said Professor McGonagall.

Dialogue set, third sentence.

“Wow, that must have hurt your guy’s class preparations.” said Sirius shaking his head.

“We had to plan everything the night before, patrol the corridors and grade the papers. We lost quite a bit of sleep.” said Professor Flitwick.

Dialogue set, fourth sentence.

Remus stared in shock. “You have got to be kidding me. Why the hell would you have the teachers follow the students into the lavatory? Especially…” he shivered.

“Harry, for god’s sake tell me you didn’t need to go to the bathroom in his class.” said Sirius pleadingly.

“I held it till the next class, so did everyone else.” said Harry.

Dialogue set, fifth sentence.

“Damn, that really sucks.” said Sirius.

End of dialogue set.
“Not that there was a whole lot of them going on anyway.” said Fred.

Thirty-eighth paragraph, second sentence.

“Hermione always was her favorite student.” said George in a hushed voice.

Thirty-eighth paragraph, third sentence.

“Wow, that’s saying a lot.” said Fred.

Thirty-eighth paragraph, fourth sentence.

"That's a horrible thought." said Remus shivering.

End of thirty-eighth paragraph.

"And of course, the boys said nothing." said Sirius looking slightly angry at Harry.

"We weren't sure if she would believe us." said Harry defensively. “Besides, she didn’t believe us the year prior.”

“But that was your first year and you proved you were telling the truth, she had to believe you!” said Sirius.

“She and the rest of the teachers were getting theories and suspicions tossed at them every day!” said Harry getting slightly irritated. “I didn’t want to add to her stress.”

Thirty-ninth paragraph, first sentence, first comma.

"You really need to stop noticing everything." said McGonagall with a fond smile.

End of thirty-ninth paragraph.

"We were starting to freak out right about then." said Lee.
"We were aware of it yes." said Professor Sprout. "But Severus could offer no explanation except for the obvious."

"Mr. Jordan!" said McGonagall shortly.

"Sorry, bout that. I just wanted everything and everyone to be safe again." said Lee apologetically.

“That’s probably the same speech that was going on in other houses.” said Ron. “Only they were slamming Harry as the heir.”

"What was up with you?" asked Sirius.

"The other girl with Hermione was my girlfriend." said Percy quietly.

"Ouch, sorry to hear that." said Sirius sympathetically.

"That wasn't it, but it wasn't too far off." said Percy quietly.

"It's good that you don't join in with the lynch mob." said Dr. Clark.

“There already was a lynch mob after him.” said Ron with a growl.

"Ron and I both were about ready to get sick." said Harry faintly.
Harry flinched horribly.

"Don't blame you." growled Remus.

End of forty-first paragraph.

"Still doesn't give him the right to have an innocent person chucked out." said Harry angrily.

Dialogue line.

"I'm sorry, but they'd be stupid not to." said Lionus. "Not that I believe them." he added quickly to Hagrid.

Dialogue set.

"I am REALLY sorry, Hagrid." said Harry sincerely.

"It's alrigh' I wouldn'ta believed me either." said Hagrid with warm smile.

"Should have been obvious though, at least this current round, if Hagrid had been the one, he never would have let Hermione in his house." said Ron thoughtfully.

Dialogue line.

"Like that ever stops you three." said McGonagall crossing her arms, but her eyes held a small hint of fondness.

Dialogue line.

"You did not just do that." said Remus with a hint of anger in his voice. "You did not go out of the tower with a monster out and about."

"Not even your dad would let you get away with that." said Sirius shaking his head. "And he would let you get away with basically murder."

"We got some information out of this little adventure." said Harry shrugging.

"Next time...you...get...a...teacher..." said the three men.
"You have a lot more magical artifacts in your main vault. It's just your dad loved that cloak more than most of the other stuff." said Sirius.

"Which you really shouldn't have done." said Sirius.

"Did you two flipflop roles or something?" asked Harry with a smirk.

"Hey, with a monster running amuck, I'm going to step up the worrying." said Sirius sternly.

"You're beautiful when your angry." said Harry playfully, trying not to laugh.

"Stuff it." said Sirius trying not to crack a smile.

"Kiss me." said Harry, finally laughing.

Sirius shoved him out of the bowl and all three men plus Harry fell into peals of laughter. It took Harry awhile to gain the strength to get up off the floor.

Dumbledore could only smile, it was nice to hear the boy’s laughter, especially how distraught he was earlier.

"Sorry, Harry...but I like blondes." said Sirius still laughing hard.

"Works for me, I'm into redheads." said Harry sending Ginny a beaming smile.

"I just about went around and knocked all of you guys out." said Harry.

"Took forever for you guys to shut up and go to sleep." said Ron with a smile.

"Well duh, there's a monster loose!" said Tonks worriedly.
"Where were I for those walks?" asked Ron.

"When you can't sleep, you can't sleep." said Harry plainly. "And you were lost to the world. Trust me, I tried to wake you up the first couple of times."

"Staring about was a really bad idea." muttered Hermione.

"Or from being solid, said Sirius with a small smirk.

"I'm lucky at the completely wrong times." said Harry shaking his head.

"How do you mean? I'll say I agree with you this time, Merlin knows what could have happened with you two wandering about, but all the other times you really needed that luck."

"I could use the luck for Poker Nights, I've won, maybe two out of twenty hands. Ron wins five, Seamus three, Dean wins two, Neville wins flipping eight!" said Harry.

"Why the hell were those doors open?" asked Remus quickly.

"I was expecting two people to arrive, it would not have been a wise idea to keep them outside that night." said Dumbledore calmly. A half emptied vial of Calming Draught beside him.

"I love that painting." said Harry dreamily.

"What painting?" asked Sirius.

"Starry Night, by Vincent Van Gogh. A beautiful painting, the artist was a nutter towards the end, but his works of art are just beautiful." said Harry looking up and smiling fondly.
"How was he a nutter?" asked Mr. Weasley.

"He cut off his own ear and sent it to his girlfriend." said Harry.

"Yep, he's a nutter." said Bill.

"I wish I could have the opportunity to get that request. I'd love to borrow that painting for a night." said Harry sighing. “Just the chance to touch the frame would be enough.”

End of forty-fourth paragraph.

"Good idea." said Moody. "Don't let others see you, not until you are ready to get inside to somewhere safe."

Forty-fifth paragraph, first sentence.

"Were you waiting for someone, Hagrid?" asked Dennis.

"I expected it, but not them." said Hagrid, turning a bit pale.

Forty-fifth paragraph, second sentence.

"Whoa! Just how freaked were you?" asked Fred.

"So, you would have shot whoever would have come to the door eh?" said Fudge loudly. Wildfire smacked his head.

"Be silent, or you'll end up in the same fix as her." she said venomously.

End of forty-fifth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"I never woulda expected ter see the two of you ter show up." said Hagrid.

Dialogue line.

"Appropriate question." said Flitwick.
"Well, now it's obvious who you were expecting," said Charlie looking at Fudge.

Forty-sixth paragraph.

"Poor Hagrid." said Luna, sending Hagrid a warm smile.

"I was amazed Harry didn't walk up and take over the tea making process." said Ron.

"I didn't want to accidentally get smacked, I saw what happened to the pot, that could have been my head." said Harry.

“I wouldn’ta hurt ya.” said Hagrid looking frightened.

“I know you wouldn’t.” said Harry.

Forty-seventh paragraph, second sentence, second sentence.

"He was quite distraught when I told him.” said McGonagall.

Forty-seventh paragraph, second sentence, end of parenthesis.

"Sorta explains why neither of you two drank." said Hagrid with a weak smile.

Forty-seventh paragraph, second sentence, eleventh word after parenthesis.

"Hagrid's fruitcake actually isn't all that bad." said Harry.

End of forty-seventh paragraph.

Forty-eighth paragraph, first sentence.

Harry cringed, "I hate wasted food."

Forty-eighth paragraph, second sentence.
"You know, kids aren't suppose to be this resourceful. Kids are suppose to just get into minor hijinx and prank people, not be all stealthy and solve crimes." said Tonks.

Forty-eighth paragraph, third sentence, first comma.

"Not that's a good friend." said Bill.

End of forty-eighth paragraph.

"Did you have it pointing towards the door this time?" asked Professor Sprout.

"Yep, this time, I needed to protect the boys in the back." said Hagrid sheepishly.

"Good man." said Madam Bones appreciatively.

Dialogue line.

Forty-ninth paragraph, second sentence, second comma.

"Not a good thing, not by a long shot." said Sirius.

End of forty-ninth paragraph.

Fudge glared at Harry, who shrugged innocently.

Fiftieth paragraph, first sentence.

"Are you color blind?" asked Dr. Clark seriously.

Fudge glared at him in turn.

"It was an honest question." said Dr. Clark taken aback.

End of fiftieth paragraph.

"I think he is." said Harry.
"That right there, alerted me to your presence." said Dumbledore smiling.

"I knew what was comin'." said Hagrid quietly.

"Yeah, that's the only reason he'll step in, when it's starting to make him look bad." said Sirius with a snarl.

"I've always believed you Hagrid." said Dumbledore with a kind smile.

"Cripes, even they were dragging their feet." said Remus angrily.

"I want their names." said Lionus his face stern and his fingertips touching.

"You've had that look in your eyes quite a few times since." said Harry with a smile.

"These books do take quite a toll on my temper." said Dumbledore sending Harry a smile in return.

"Really don't want to, thanks." said George.
"You've never been seen doing anything, so no one is really all that shocked." said Nightstrike with a sneer.

"Not like you've ever done it to start with." muttered McGonagall viciously.

"Better not to be where I think it is." said Lionus drumming his fingers angrily.

"You are not long for this world if you send him to where I think you are going to." said Loinus growing angrier and angrier.

Lionus glared at the ex-Minister. "He'd had better of just been kept at the Ministry's holding cells, or you won't like what I have planned for you."

"At least I didn't speak." said Harry.

"It was a near thing." said Ron.

"Good dog." said Remus, his teeth bared.
"WILLIAM!" scolded Mrs. Weasley after she heard her oldest son utter a particularly foul word.

"You tell him, Hagrid." cheered the Weasley boys.

"Does he still act like that?" said Lionus swiftly.

"He hasn't changed one bit." said Harry with a snarl.

"Viper..." said Lionus looking at the vampire. When everyone else looked towards the thin gaunt man, he was gone.

"Where did he go?" asked Padma, who was staring fixedly at the man, but the moment she had looked away and then looked back, he was gone.

"My guess is to fetch Lucius Malfoy." said Harry with a smirk.

"On the money." said Lionus with a sneer.

"On what charges?" asked Fudge looking incredulous.

"If he gives me the creeps and I don't trust him. That's good enough for me." said Lionus plainly.

"I wish I hadn't opened my mouth." said Flitwick regretfully.

"At least Dumbledore's on his guard." said Dr. Clark.

"He's never off his guard." said Sirius.
"Blasted man." said Madam Bones irritably. "Whatever you do to him, it's not enough." she added looking over to Lionus.

Dialogue set, end of first sentence.

"No...way...they honestly took him away?" asked Dr. Clark stunned. "That was the dumbest thing they ever could have done."

"You don't know how true that is." said Sirius.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

"Two, it turns out, were forged. The rest were threatened. Not one of the governors, except for Malfoy wanted me out." said Dumbledore his eyes quickly losing their twinkling.

Dialogue set, fifth sentence.

"Like he ever cared." said Mr. Weasley with a growl.

End of dialogue set.

"It would be a bad thing, but an idiot like that wouldn't really understand that, now would he?" said Ron bitterly.

Dialogue line.

"So far the only right thing you've ever said." said Sirius.

Dialogue line.

"And to no fault of his own!" snapped McGonagall.

Dialogue line.
"It seems I have another reason to arrest Mr. Malfoy, in addition with his Knockturn Alley business." said Lionus.

Draco said nothing, he only focused his attention on his knees. He wanted to tell the Ranger… Captain…person something important, but he couldn’t seem to locate the courage to do more than just swallow.

"Yeah! You tell him Hagrid." yelled the twins loudly.

"You're done." He whipped out the what looked like same pin that had transported Filch to Devil's Garden. In a second, Corneilius Fudge, ex-Minister of Magic, was gone.

"How long are you going to keep him there?" asked Sirius.

"Twenty-five hours." said Lionus sitting down. “More or less.”

"Wow. Filch got five days." said Fred.

"That was to Devil's Garden, this place is far worse." said Lionus with a sneer.

"Where did he go?" asked George.

“Some place where he will learn a very valuable lesson.” he said still sneering.

"That takes a lot to have Fang become like that around Hagrid." said Charlie.

“He was right actually, someone did sort of die.” said Harry thoughtfully.
“Not a good idea.” said Kingsley, “The students are only safe with him there.”

“Explain then how we kept getting petrified.” muttered Zacharias.

“Better petrified, then dead.” said Harry wisely.

“Never turn you back on a Death Eater.” said Moody.

“Gee, wonder who he was trying to send that message to.” said Hermione with a smile.

“What were you trying to tell them?” asked Mrs. Weasley.

“If they had sent me an owl, I would have come. It seems Harry took it another way, but his way was very effective as well.” said Dumbledore, stroking Fawkes feathers.

“I heard both the gasp and Mr. Weasley.” said Dumbledore with a bright smile.

“He doesn’t know what’s going on.” said Kingsley with a smirk.

“No one could ever be the Headmaster you are.” said Remus loyally, forgetting his recent dislike for the man.
“I wanted to smack that smile right off his face.” said Harry.

“Coward.” said Charlie. “Hagrid never runs away. Not when he’s knows he’s broken the law.”

“Huh?” asked a majority of the students.

“Is he talking about those spiders that Harry and them see every time someone is attacked?” asked Fred.

“Spiders?” said Dr. Clark he said weakly. He flipped through his textbook quickly and stopped on the page he had looked at earlier. His face paled.

“Not good.” he said in a fear ridden voice. He sent a panicked look over to Harry, who could only run his fingers through his own snow-white hair.

“Don’t worry, we did.” said Harry.

“Yeah, we sort of walked him a bit too.” said Ron.

“Poor Fang.” said Charlie. “Fang has never been away from him.”

“I can’t believe they took you without any evidence. He’s should have been removed years ago.” said Lionus angrily.

Then, as it was soon becoming the norm at nights, a scroll blossomed out of the book.

“Dear Lord, I hope it’s good one.” said Bill.

“I’m still here, so it’s got to be at least a decent one.” said Harry with a smile.
The room was enveloped in a golden light and then, the light over took them all.

Chapter End Notes

Thanks of reading!
They were deposited by the light in a giant museum. There were people, some with their children and some wandering about on their own, exploring the room that The Watchers found themselves in. The Watchers gazed about, Umbridge, whose gag and chains were removed by the power of the scroll, sniffed indignantly.

"Too bad these aren’t as good as the first one." she whispered to herself.

Madame Bones, hearing this and remembering the absence of their wands, walked behind her and smacked the back of her head. Tempest, Wildfire, Viper and Nightstrike smiled at the Law Enforcement Head.

Tonks looked to the left of herself and noticed a giant marble statue of a man, a naked man.

“Nice statue.” she said with a smile.

Remus looked over to her, saw the statue and looked at her quickly, his eyes wide and his face red. She noticed his look and gripped his hand tightly. “You’re better.”

“I appreciate that, nice to know I’m better than some non-living statue.” said Remus with a smirk.

Harry looked around quickly and groaned, he knew what was going to happen, and he remembered this place. People were walking slowly out as the security guard wandered amongst them and saying quietly:

"Museum is closing." said the security guard.

"Sorry." said Fred and George. "We aren't leaving."

“We like it here, let’s put the sofa in that corner, Fred.” said George, pointing over to a distant corner.

As the people were leaving, a skinny elderly man with a long mustache and bushy eyebrows came striding out of one of the further rooms, being followed by a very heavy-set man with red cheeks, and short black hair with graying strands randomly on his head.

"Honestly Mr. Claydonin, you needn't worry, the jewel will be protected with the utmost caution." said the fat man trying to keep up. "My security system and guards are all top of the line designed "True, Brildir, I know that the security system is your pride and joy. But the 'Dragon's Eye' diamond is mine. And I want my diamond protected, and I am more than willing than to prove, if it is just to myself, that my diamond is not in any danger of being stolen." He said gesturing towards a pedestal. The Watchers, excluding Harry, moved forward and saw what was being displayed. They all gasped, even Dumbledore and the Rangers.

It was a brilliant and shimmering yellow diamond, spinning slowly on a revolving dais, and light refracting off it. It was almond shaped and six inches wide, but only three inches thick in diameter. Charlie stared at it in amazement. The color and size of it explained the name. "It does look like a dragon's eye," he whispered.

"It's so pretty!" said a few of the first year girls.

"And that is why I asked Shadow to come and see what he makes of the security measures." said Mr. Claydonin gazing at the stone along with The Watchers. Harry strolled behind the rest of them and stood behind Sirius.

"That scoundrel, 'Professional Security-Tester' they call him. 'Professional Thief' is more like it." growled Mr. Brildir.

"Thieves do not return the spoils to their original owners the next day." said Mr. Claydonin calmly. "Please, let your men know what will transpire, have them be at their best. If we catch Shadow, then I will give you and your men a significant bonus. If we don't, Shadow will let us know where to improve our skills. Fair enough?"

Mr. Brildir growled even more, but nodded.

"Also, Mr. Brildir, you do not hurt Shadow, no shooting," said Mr. Claydonin sternly.

After Mr. Claydonin left for the night, Mr. Brildir summoned his entire security team. He stood in front of the 'Dragon's Eye' jewel.

"Alright boys, we've got Shadow coming tonight. Be on your guard. If we catch this miscreant, we all get bonuses. Let’s catch this so-called 'Professional Tester', oh...and no guns. Apparently we can't use them against him. After all the trouble we went to get the proper permits...."

"What is so important about this diamond?" asked Bill, he looked at Charlie, but he was still fixated on the diamond.

“You've been around jewels too much.” said Charlie, his eyes transfixed on the stone.

“No, it's a beautiful stone, but I deal with stones with magical abilities, the novices handle the plain ones.” said Bill.

“I think the uniqueness of the stone is what makes it so precious.” said Dumbledore with a smile.

The scene shifted forward rapidly, Neville looked queasy again.
"Hate when that happens." he said, getting paler by the second.

"And Vernon's chair ain't here either." said Sirius, patting Neville on the back softly.

"I've got some gingerbread here. Made it this morning." said Harry taking out a sheet of something brown.

"Why do you make them so often? Didn't you say earlier that it makes your stomach feel better? Do you get sick often?" said Remus looking worried.

"No, just really like it." said Harry taking a bite and handing some to Neville.

Neville took some, he took a small nibble and was amazed at how good it tasted. Harry had to break more chunks and hand them out when they noticed some color coming back to Neville's face.

A security guard came to the doorway, leaned in and glanced around closely. He pulled himself back and gazed at the dark room. A crash was heard someone further away in the museum, the lights outside, which were visible from inside, were gone. The guard turned and hurried away from the room. A few students made to go with him, but Dumbledore stopped them.

"We were placed here for a reason, it must have something to do with this jewel." said Dumbledore quickly. The students stopped.

"Look up," said Harry quietly.

They all looked up quickly, to see a tile in the ceiling being removed. No noise was being made, how could Harry possibly know that something was happening up there?

A pale hand dropped down and dropped some sparkling powder. When the light powder drifted down far enough, the room was a blazed with thin red lines.

"What the hell is all this?" said Sirius looking crossed-eyed at the one going through his head.

"They're lasers, if someone trips them, an alarm will go off." said Dr. Clark as he stared around, there were lasers everywhere.

Suddenly a wide, transparent fabric fluttered down, miraculously missing the beams of light, they looked up and they saw a small, thin, darkly dressed person started sliding down the fabric, head first, he only stopped to check the doorway. When he was halfway, the figure reached into his bag, dangling from clip on his shirt, and dropped a single black box. When it hit the ground, it emitted a low hum and flashed dully. The camera's normal red light turned to a pale yellow and the lasers that intertwined about the room, disappeared, but the floor lasers were still activated.

The person continued down slowly and landed nimbly on the ground, he crept cautiously towards the pedestal, avoiding the lasers zigzagging across the floor, and gazed at the diamond in the case. He looked at the doorway, then the cameras. He pulled the black mask off his face.

It was Harry Potter.

The Watchers stared at the younger version of Harry and then to the present day one. Was this another job? They wanted to ask Harry himself, but they were all too interested in watching and remained silent.

Shadow (Younger Harry) pulled out another black box and placed it on the side of the pedestal. The lasers that were reflecting about the box and the jewel disappeared. Shadow reached into his bag and pulled a fat tube of something, he squirted it all around the base of the glass, being careful to not touch one of the lasers that ran along the ground.

Once the gel was in place, he blew on it, the glass instantly cracked towards the bottom and continued all the way up. He watched as the glass collapsed under its own fragile weight. The glass fell like powdered snow in a thin square around the diamond, Shadow caught the top of the glass box before it had disintegrated onto of the diamond and set off an alarm. Shadow placed the glass on the side of the pedestal, and took ahold of the diamond. He pulled another Dragon's Eye from his knapsack. There was a definite difference between the two of them. In a quick motion he exchanged the two of them.

Shadow put the real Dragon's Eye in a silk bag and took out a folded piece of what looked like plastic. He flipped it open to show it was a cube and threw it over the fake diamond. He then took a thick syringe and sucked up all the gel that was left over, He placed the glass lid onto of the plastic cube, and removed the small black box. They watched as a laser bounced off the lid of the cube and then the fake diamond and then landed back on the sensors.

Shadow jumped up onto the fabric and began to climb. Little over halfway up, the fabric, began following him up for he had tucked the end into his bag, and then he flicked his wrist and the black box, which was attached to a very long, thin wire, flew up to Shadow and the lasers and the camera's resumed functioning.

They watched as Shadow pulled up the remaining fabric and covered the hole with the tile once again. The Watchers turned to Harry, who looked around the dark room. When he turned to face the rest of them, he saw a mixture of shock, anger, and excitement.

"You're stealing from the museum?" said Mrs. Weasely weakly.

"If you had heard Mr. Claydonin, Mrs. Weasely, I'm considered a Professional Security Tester, anything I take, I return the next day. I only work during the summer, when I'm at the Dursleys, I don't do this during the school year." he said simply and shrugged.

“And this is how we know so much about Kage.” said Lionus with a smile. “His methods are beyond normal.”

“I thought the Museum dude called you ‘Shadow’?" asked Seamus quickly.

“'Kage' is Japanese for shadow.” said Nightstrike, with a sneer.

The scene shifted forward once again but it was considerably shorter. They were now floating above the roof and they watched as Shadow slinked out of a hole in the roof, the mask back on his face. He closed the hole in the roof behind him.

He then took a tight hold on his knapsack and turned towards the side of the roof. He looked down the side of the building and saw that the lights had kicked back on.

"I had the bulbs blow." said Harry, when The Watchers were looking over the side of the building curiously.

They watched as Shadow stepped back, and then turned to the left and ran headlong across the roof and leaped off the roof.

The Watchers floated right beside him, and fell with him.

"ARE YOU OUT OF YOUR MIND!" bellowed Sirius. Several girls screamed and Professor Trelawny almost fainted.

Shadow reached into his bag, brought out a long, thin, cord-like object and aimed to towards the flagpole several feet below him.

CRA-CRACK!

They watched as Shadow swung on the whip and landed on a fourth floor landing, continued running and jumped off this roof as well.

“Are you freaking out of your mind mate! What the hell?” shouted Ron as they glided along with the younger version of his friend. Harry however didn't pay attention, he was feeling his back absently.

This time he landed in a tall tree and sat there, perched like a hawk waiting to strike. He was watching the passing traffic and when a large freight truck went underneath; he fell forward and landed on the roof of the freight. The truck was going about ninety-five kilometers an hour so Shadow whipped two circular objects from his bag as he quickly slid backwards off the truck. He slammed the both of them down on the roof of the truck and he stopped sliding.

“Magnets.” said Harry simply at the shocked faces on the rest of the Watchers.

He looked back and saw that no one was trailing the truck and then he looked forward, right on time, the Veldon overpass, trucks just barely scraped underneath it, some would even cause sparks as they passed under, if they were too tall. Shadow lifted the magnets and continued to slide back until he was almost completely off the truck. He took a magnet and placed it right on the unloading doors of the truck. Sparks flew above him, but were extinguished before they came too low. When the over pass was gone, he climbed back onto of the truck, pulling the magnet off and slamming it down at a higher point, and there he laid for several kilometers.

When he reached Little Whinging, Shadow took the magnets off the truck and jumped off again. He tumbled into the grass and stood up and ran down the street, sticking to the shadows, the Watchers, except Harry, watched in amazement, they could barely see him, if at all.

“How old are you here?” asked Neville.

“I was eleven, this is a few days after learning what I really was from Hagrid, I needed something to do, something to vent out on. I don’t know why I was angry, perhaps it was because I was kept in the dark, and I felt exiled somewhat” said Harry watching the younger version of himself. Dumbledore looked over to Harry sadly. “I’ve been doing this for at least two years before Hagrid came to me.” Harry continued “It kept me active, physically, and mentally. I used this to raise the money to find Dr. Clark, not too sure what I’m going to do with that money now.”

As they watched Harry’s younger self running in the darkened patches of Little Whinging, they knew where the name Shadow came from. They could barely see him, they caught only fleeting glimpses of him.

His running, leaping and sneaking around didn't end till he reached Privet Drive. The Watchers gaped at Harry, Privet Drive was a long way from where he jumped from the truck. He stopped just under an opened window and threw up a fabric that he had taken from his bag and climbed. Once he was inside he took the bag off his shoulder and ripped the black mask off his face. Hedwig flew in through the opened window with dead rat in her beak.

"Did you have good hunting Hedwig?" he whispered joyfully, tickling her feathers. "Me too, look at this.” he pulled out the diamond. Hedwig peered at the jewel with great interest.

"You know what this is? The Dragon's Eye, this thing is worth over a hundred million pounds, to the right people! People have been killed over this thing; more blood coats this piece of crystallized carbon then the Hope diamond! This little sparkler is more trouble than it's worth though, and it's not even guarded in the right fashion.” He then yawned.

"Well, I better get some sleep, need to take this thing back to the museum in the morning and prepare my assessment for the curator.” He stuck the diamond in a loose floorboard under his bed. Yawned hugely and prepared to change his clothes. He ripped his shirt off and tossed it into the corner. The girls were going to turn around and give him some privacy, but they couldn't. What attracted everyone’s attention were the healing cuts and deep purple bruises. He was insanely skinny, but he still had some muscle tone to him, not a lot but a little.

“How did you come by those injuries?” asked Tempest to Harry.

Harry said nothing.

“That tells you, that his Uncle did it.” growled Remus.

He then flopped down into bed, not even bothering to cover up with a blanket. He fell asleep instantly. Mrs. Weasely wanted to pull the covers over Harry, but the scene shifted again.

They were outside on a busy street, the sun was shining but something odd was happening at the entrance of the museum across the street. The Watchers could see the security man Mr. Brildir orchestrating a team of security personnel, and they were examining the possessions of everyone who came in the doors. All of a sudden, a delicate, young, red headed girl came walking up and "That kinda looked like Lily..." said Remus quietly. Harry smiled mischievously, Sirius took notice of that and ran in front of the girl. His eyes widened in shock.

"BLOODY BANSHEES! HARRY, THAT'S....THAT'S...THAT'S YOU!" he bellowed. The Watchers stared at Harry and then back to the girl. “And you’re wearing make-up?” he added faintly.

She, well, HE was wearing a green blouse with a red skirt and matching red flowered flip-flops, and clutching a large, fluffy, glitter laden red purse. Hiding the scar on his forehead was a red ribbon wrapped around his head.

Ron looked over at Harry with his eyebrows raised and leaning a little ways away from him, a restrained smile was about to break on his face.

"Stuff it, this was the only way in that didn't rely on me getting back on the roof." said Harry with an uncaring smile. Ron shook with laughter.

"I think I would rather see you in a dress then watch you jump off the roof again." said Remus quietly. Sirius and Dr. Clark stared at him. Remus quickly added. "Not that wearing...just that I....never mind." sighed Remus. Sirius snorted a laugh, while Dr. Clark’s knees buckled he was laughing so hard.

The girl/guy walked up the steps of the museum and stood in line to get inside. She/he looked around the people in front of her, she/he looked nervous, but the Watchers could tell that that was an act, only because they knew Harry. Or at least, they thought they knew Harry. These books and Scrolls were showing sides of him that they had never realized were there.

It came to be her/his turn; the youth looked between the menacing security guards and pulled off a perfect tremble and girl's voice. "Umm...I just wanted to see the pretty paintings." Harry covered his eyes and smiled in shame as his younger self cried nervously.

"What the hell...?" asked Dean, but they were amazed when the guards patted her on the back and allowed her/him in without checking the bag. "You sneaky git!" shouted Dean gleefully. They followed her/him down the hall and watched as she/he wandered down different hallways.

"Should we call you Harriet now, Potter?" said Draco snidely.

"The name I used for this persona was actually 'Amber', Malfoy, I wasn't foolish enough to use a feminine version of my birth name."

"You've done this before?" said Professor Flitwick with his eyes wide.

"The dress or the using different names?" said Harry innocently.

"Both." said the teaching staff.

"Well, it was the first time for the dress, the different names, no. I've used several names and never the same one twice." said Harry with a smile. “I learned one thing; I’m not wearing a dress again.”

“Thats too bad, you have great legs.” teased Ginny holding his arm.

“Gee, thanks.” said Harry with a smirk. “But I really don’t understand how you girls can wear those things. They give you an awful draft.” he added in a teasing whisper.
Ginny was overcome with a giggling fit.

They watched as Amber smoothly entered an 'Employees Only' door.

"Harry, you aren't supposed to be down there!" admonished Mrs. Weasely.

"I had an appointment." said Harry with a smile. "And I’m pretty sure I shouldn’t do what I did the night prior to this, or wear a dress."

Amber ducked into an employee restroom when she heard someone come down the hall. After the guard walked past, the door to the bathroom opened. Amber was gone, and young Harry was back. He was wearing a white shirt and white pants and one of his new, black Hogwarts robes, without the school crest, and was stuffing the skirt and blouse in the knapsack. He looked both ways at the fork in the hall and continued down the right.

He continued down and stopped at a fancy ornamental door. He knocked softly on the door and they could hear a voice on the other side.

"Come in."

Harry entered the room, and Mr. Claydonin smiled at him.

"What can I do for you, young man?" he said kindly.

"Well sir, I would like to give this back to you." Harry said, taking out the silk bag and handing it to Mr. Claydonin.

"What is this?" he said as he opened the bag, and as he tipped the content of the bag out, the grandfather clock in the corner struck nine-thirty. When he saw the Dragon's Eye his face paled, "You're Shadow?" he said in a faint whisper. Harry nodded and smiled.

Taking a gulp of air, he looked at the clock in the corner and laughed nervously. "The man that told me to get in contact with you was right. You are amazingly punctual. I should apologize for the disturbance out in front of the door."

The young man laughed and sat down in the chair. "It's alright. Your Head of Security was furious he didn't catch me. Greed is a great motivator, and unfortunately a great abductor of one's senses."

"Merlin, Harry, you sound like Dumbledore, again." said Colin with his eyes wide.

“So, Shadow, what should we improve on?” asked Mr. Claydonin, smiling down at the young man.

“Well, for your front door…” said Harry whipping out a white notebook.

“I thought you had a black notebook…why do you have a white one here?” asked Ron.

“Black is for magic, white if for summer stuff.” said Harry. “That way I don’t write the wrong stuff in it.”

“…and that’s it. Your security is basically fine but I would amp it up, especially around the Dragon’s Eye. It only took me fifteen minutes to get in and out.” said Harry closing his book.
“I understand. I have a question for you.” said Mr. Claydonin. “What do your parents think about this? Doing what you do?”

Younger Harry sighed heavily. “Well…my parents are gone, but the family I stay with don’t have any idea what I do. And I would be most appreciative if you don’t mention it to anyone. They and I…we don’t get along at all…”

Mr. Claydonin looked at Harry, and smiled. “Alright then, Shadow, as you wish. If you need anything…”

“Come see you…I know…almost everyone I test security for say that, except for that odd American, he just asked for report and kicked me out with my money. What I want, no one can help me it seems, but me.” said Harry with a smile. He looked outside quickly. “It’s eleven twenty-four, I’ve gotta go.” he said standing up. “Just send my fee the bank account here.” he handed over a small card.

“Oh well, thank you for taking time out of your summer vacation to test the security system of my beloved diamond.” said Mr. Claydonin with a smile.

Then a knock was heard coming from outside the office door. “Mr. Claydonin, may I speak with you?” said a voice.

Harry hurried over to the fireplace, that held some glowing embers, and tossed a powder down on the embers. They immediately went dark for a brief moment, as Harry crawled up the chimney.

This was good timing, for Mr. Brildir had just come in. “No sign of Shadow, sir, and no visitor had the gem on ‘em. I knew he couldn’t be trusted.”

“I have the diamond.” said Mr. Claydonin, pulling the stone out of the silk bag once again. Mr. Brildir stared in shock at the curator.

“I…don’t….” stuttered Brildir. Then suddenly, the flames started up again. The watchers zoomed up to the ceiling and watched as Harry climbed out of the chimney. He stepped out of the shaft and shook his entire body to get rid of the soot, all the while laughing.

"Life just keeps getting better and better!” he said excitedly.

And the light from the scrolls claimed them once more.

Chapter End Notes

Thanks for reading
When the light dropped them off in the Great Hall again, many of the people began asking him several different questions about the tools he used in the museum.

“Muggle science stuff, you wouldn’t understand.” said Harry to everyone who came up to him.

“Try me.” said Dr. Clark with a smirk, when Harry absent mindedly told him the same thing.

Harry sighed, “What bit?”

“We’ll start with that powder you dropped.” said Sirius eagerly.

“Just regular powder with miniature crystals inside, they keep the lasers from disappearing for about five minutes. After a while, they get absorbed into the floor, by the moisture lingering in the air.” said Harry.

“And that ribbon, cloth thing.” asked Remus.

“Just a special fabric, normal fabric would completely stop the light from coming through if it accidentally hits one.” said Harry. “That fabric at least lets laser go through, if even a little bit.”

“What about that gel stuff that made the glass shatter like that?” asked Ron.

“Just a compound my old chemistry teacher and I found. He couldn’t really see a use, but I sure did.” said Harry with a smile. “Anything else?”

“Yeah, that little black box, and that other powder stuff.” asked Sirius.

“The box is an invention of mine,” he said plainly and didn’t extend on that. “the powder, was just soot with some chemicals in it, they build the fire back up again.” said Harry.

Harry stood up and stretched his legs arms. “Well, it’s too late to go and make something I think.” he looked up at the sky and located the moon.

“Yeah, the house-elves are almost done. No point now.” said Ron.

Suddenly, the doors flung open and two men came running in and shouting at the top of their lungs.

One of the men, who had very long salt and pepper hair, which came all the way down to his calves in a long braid came up to Dumbledore, picked him up by the collar and brought him close to his own face.
“What…happened…to their house?” growled the man holding tightly to Dumbledore’s collar.

“Rudolph, if you would let go of his throat, he’ll tell you.” said Bathilda shortly.

“Batty….what in blazes are you doing here, and what is going on? Why are the tables missing, and…” said the man with short blonde hair, looking around quickly.

“Rudolph, Leroy…” said Remus, he tried to speak, but couldn’t find the words.

“Lily and James are gone.” said Dumbledore sadly. “Voldemort killed them.”

Rudolph and Leroy stared at Dumbledore in shock, Rudolph slowly released Dumbledore from his grasp and then both strangers fell to their knees and screamed out in pain.

Harry stared at the two men who were trying to pull out their hair, clench their fists and curse the sky. Sirius rushed over and pulled both men to their feet. He motioned Harry over to him.

“C’mere. Listen you two, Lily and James are gone, but someone is still here.” He threw an arm around Harry’s shoulders.

The blonde haired man blinked and placed a thin hand on Harry’s cheek.

“I know that face. Can it be…” he whispered. “Rudy…look…”

Rudolph stopped weeping bitterly and looked over to where his partner was. He saw Harry.

“It can’t be…is that you? It is…it’s our little Harry.” He said, his eyes brimming with tears.

Immediately, the two men enshrouded Harry with a hug and kissed the top of his head repeatedly.

“You’re all grown up…” said Uncle Rudolph smiling and laughing. “I can’t bounce you on me knee anymore. Oh my god, look at you.” He ran his fingers through his great-nephew’s hair. “How come you have white hair?”

“I’ve been sick.” said Harry with a small smile. These were his uncles?

“With what? Rudy where is our bag?” said Leroy stammering.

“The illness already past.” said Dr. Nicodemus. “Now we are merely waiting for his cores to come back online.”

“What do you mean?” asked Ron.

“What he means is, I can’t do magic, I’m extremely vulnerable.”

The school went silent.

“How long will that take, for your magic to come back.” asked McGonagall in a fearful whisper.

“Could be a day, a week, a month, or a whole year, we don’t know.” said Harry shrugging.

“It was another reason to bring more guards; I’ve got my entire company stationed outside these walls. I thought another two in here would do nicely.” said Lionus seriously.

Some of the students looked around out the windows into the night sky. Harry looked up into the windows that lined the top part of the wall, and saw a fleeting glimpse of someone swooping past.
“Don’t worry, you all are safe.” said Lionus with a smile.

A little past midnight, all the adults, including Lionus and Doctor Nicodemus stood in Dumbledore’s office.

“So Harry has no magic, what’s going to happen when we continue with these readings?” asked Sirius.

“The book has it’s own magical stock, it won’t feed on his.” said Speckerton.

“So what can we do?” asked Tonks

“We can do nothing, but I can assure you, Harry won’t be in any danger.” said Speckerton.

“Every time we turn around, it seems that Harry’s getting the stuffing taken out of him in some sort of way.” said Sirius.

Do I really want to know?” asked Rudolph worriedly.

“We’d best tell them what is going on, or they’ll never understand.” said Flitwick.

It took the better part of two hours to tell them what has happened to their Great-Nephew and just the events that had happened before school had started. Hearing the horrible tales of their little Harry, they held onto each other for support.

“Our little Harry was forced through all that?” said Leroy in a frightened voice, tears streaming down his face.

“I’ll kill those bastards if I ever get the chance.” growled Rudolph.

“You don’t need to fret about that,” said Madam Bones. “They are already in Auror custody.”

“They’re safer there.” snarled Rudolph. “I’ve got some venomous plants in my bags that I would love to introduce them to.”

The next morning, the adults somewhat staggered downstairs, they had spent almost the entire night discussing what the books were revealing with the two men and trying to calm them down.

When they entered the Great Hall, the saw all the students waiting for them and Harry passing around several small bowls of what looked like little bits of cereal and pretzels.

“You guys all slept in, it’s nine twenty-four.” said Harry looking up at the sun.

Rudolph and Leroy rushed over and hugged Harry once more.

“This again?” said Harry with a smile. “You guys brought them up to speed then, I take it.”

“We did, I hope you don’t mind.” said Remus carefully.

“It’s fine.” said Harry. “Should we get started then?” said Harry.
“Who wants to read, now?” asked Dumbledore settling into his armchair. Rudolph and Leroy took the opportunity to conjure up a large, blue sofa and stretched themselves out on it. They made sure they were within arm’s reach of the bowl chair.

“I think I’ll read this time.” said Nightstrike. “If I may sir.” he added looking over to Lionus.

“By all means.” he said.

Fifteenth chapter

“This won’t go well.” said Ron shaking his head.

“I don’t think you guys really told me what happened.” said Hermione.

“You really didn’t want to know.” said Harry.

"Who, or what is an Aragog?" asked Sirius.

Ron and Harry remained silent. "Just lovely." groaned Sirius.

First paragraph, first sentence.

“I always loved those flowers.” said Mrs. Weasley.

First paragraph, second sentence, first semi-colon.

“It’s not Hogwarts without you.” said Harry up to the half-giant, who blushed behind his bushy beard.

End of first paragraph.

“Oh boy.” groaned Remus. “I don’t think I want to know.”

Second paragraph.

“Security reasons.” said Madam Pomfrey plainly.

“They were already attacked, what more could happen?” asked Sirius.

“I didn’t want to risk it.” said Madam Pomfrey stiffly.
“It was nice of you two to want to see me though.” said Hermione with a blush.

“We kept coming back, we were sort of hoping you would just wake up.” said Ron turning a bit red as well.

“We never did blame you, I wouldn’t let anyone in either.” said Harry.

“The first day, I swear, I heard so many people screaming spontaneously I had to wear earplugs.” said Harry.

“It was like someone turned off the heat in this place, and the only time you could get warm was if you stepped outside.” said Harry.

“I cannot imagine that.” said Rudolph quietly. “This place is always full of laughter and cheer.”

“Except for that one year, the one you told me about.” said Leroy.

“I don’t like talking about that year.” said Rudolph quickly.

“How old are you?” asked Ron.

Rudolph stared fixedly at Ron.

“It’s impolite to ask that, kid.” said Leroy with a smile. “Let’s just say, he’s perfectly aged.” he gave his partner’s hand a squeeze.

“I must remember that.” said Tonks with a smirk looking over to Remus.
“That is my big downfall, I never consider the obvious.” said Harry with a smirk.

End of fourth paragraph.

“Even the teachers?” said Remus with an incredulous look.

“They were a bit jumpy, yeah.” said Ron.

Fifth paragraph, first sentence.

“Well, yeah, it wasn’t encrypted or anything.” said Fred.

Fifth paragraph, second sentence.

“That’s the famous Harry Potter luck for you.” said Dean.

“I take it that you aren’t all that lucky.” said Leroy with a small smile.

“Not on a bit.” said Harry with a smile.

Fifth paragraph, third sentence.

“Don’t like spiders.” said Ron shortly.

Fifth paragraph, fourth sentence, second comma, thirteenth word.

“Sorry to inconvenience you with safety precautions.” sneered Snape.

Fifth paragraph end of fourth sentence.

“Who the hell came up with that idea?” said Sirius. “Now it’s easier to pick off the students.”

“The Governors actually.” said McGonagall. "It seemed like a good idea at the time.”

“Hate to say it, but that means that Lucius had a hand in that idea.” said Remus.
“As did I.” muttered Snape. “Classes weren’t as prepared as they were before the last attack happened.”

“My money’s on Lucius’s son.” said Sirius.

“Yeah, I can see that.” said Leroy. “My cousin Lucius never was the most sympathetic man.”

The room turned and stared, even Draco stared.

“Wait a minute…you’re a…” said Ron.

“On my mother’s side.” said Leroy with a smile. “She was actually really happy that I didn’t marry into the Black family. Bellatrix was my betrothed, then I found this twit,” he nodded his head over to Rudolph. “And my mother told me to run away with him. Screw my dad.” said Leroy with a smile. “My dad however found out, and came to Rudolph’s house. It didn’t go well.”

“What happened?” asked Hermione eagerly.

“I’ll tell that story at another time. There’s a few kids in here, and…well…the beginning’s a bit graphic.” said Rudolph with a smirk. “And you’re a bit young still.”

“If you would just get your grades up you could be a candidate for that.” said Snape in a whisper.

“But I’m a prefect.” Draco whispered back.

“You were the only choice. Nott and Zabini were also eligible, but due to your father, I had no choice but to nominate you.” muttered Snape. “Though, I might have chosen you anyway.” he gave his godson the rarest of smiles.

“I could smack myself for not knowing right away.” muttered Harry massaging his temples.

“I wanted to smack the daylights out of him.” said Dean.
Lionus stared at the youth, Draco cringed under his gaze.

“How dare…” said Bathilda irritably.

“I’d let it go, he’s changing for the better.” said Lionus.

“Thank you Severus.” said McGonagall.

“I’m not heartless.” said Snape.

"Can you imagine Snape being Headmaster?" asked Fred in a whisper.

"It would be all dark and gloomy here." said George.

"I cannot explain that action." said Snape rubbing his eyelids.

"Thank you Severus." said Dumbledore with a smile.

"You mean that you don't do it all the time?" asked George.

"He just wanted to say that in front of everyone." said Dean.
Eighth paragraph.

Seamus made sure to look elsewhere, besides the chair where the Potions Master was sitting.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

"And you allowed that?" said McGonagall with a snarl.

"I had left the room, by that time." said Snape, sending a stern look to the young man sitting beside him.

End of dialogue set.

"You are lucky that we cannot take points away, Mr. Malfoy." said Dumbledore sternly, his eyes missing their shimmering light. "You owe Miss Granger a very sincere apology."

"I'm sorry." said Draco quietly, but sincerely.

Ninth paragraph.

"Can you really be that oblivious?" asked Moody with a stunned look, Malfoy looked down.

"He could use some of your teachings." said Tonks with a scowl.

Dialogue line.

"I don't think I can scold you for that." said Mrs. Weasley quietly.

Dialogue set, first sentence, seventh comma.

"Why were you guys in the back?" asked Fred.

Dialogue set, end of first sentence.

"Ah, that will do it." said George.
"Yeah, couldn't really come up with a plausible excuse to go back inside the castle." said Ron bitterly.

"Both Houses were missing someone." said Harry.

"I hated that chore, out of all of the classes, that particular one I hated the most." said Sirius with a frown.

"What's so wrong with them." asked Neville curiously.

"My mother had a bunch of them, and she always had me doing that." said Sirius with a scowl.

Sirius, Remus and Dr. Clark sent a scowl over to Ernie, the staff however didn't go to that extreme, they only glared.

"It wasn't bad." said Harry with a groan.

"I haven't exactly forgiven him for beating the snot out of you." growled Sirius.

"Have you even apologize to him?" asked Remus angrily. “For smacking you about?”

"Not then, no." said Harry rubbing the back of his white-haired head. "This is where he apologizes for suspecting me. But he apologizes later for the smackdown."

"And did." said Ernie in a whisper.
Several people snorted. "I guess this sort of counts as payback, huh?" said Harry with a chuckle.

"I wouldn't." said Bill with disgust.

"Only thing I can say is that at least you apologized." said Tonks in disgust.

"Who invited you?" asked Fred.

"Hannah's fine, Ernie can shunt off." said George.

"Oh, my bloody god." said Charlie clapping an hand to his forehead.

"It took you that many months to figure that out?" said Bill incredulously.

"And you made him a prefect?" said Sirius in shock. Professor Sprout cringed slightly.

"Well you saw what he looked like after Ernie and his mates got ahold of him, I don't think any one of you lot would jump at forgiving him." said Ron stubbornly.

"Now you're trying to be all "buddy-buddy" now, huh?" said Charlie.
"So...is that..." said Draco quietly.

"That's why no one came to rearrange your face, yeah." said Lee. "Harry stood up for you."

Fourteenth paragraph.

Dr. Clark's knuckles paled on the textbook in his hands.

Fifteenth paragraph, first sentence, first comma.

Dr. Clark released a sigh of relief; it wasn't what he thought it was.

End of fifteenth paragraph.

"Ooh! That hurts." said Fred.

"Don't do that." said George.

Dialogue line.

Sixteenth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"Can't hide anything from you, can I." said Ron pouting.

"That's not exactly true, you and everyone else seems to completely rip me off on Poker Night." said Harry smirking.

Seventeenth paragraph.

"As nosey as us, but not quite." said Harry with a smile.

"We couldn't even figure out what you were talking about." said Hannah.

Eighteenth paragraph.

Dialogue line.
"Don't go in there." said Remus, almost pleading. "If you do, I'm going to take you over my knee and smack the daylights out of you."

"I'm as big as you now. That would look really...awkward." said Harry leaning away from him with a wary.

"Don't even try and twist it like that." said Remus getting more and tenser by the minute.

"Listen, I'm right here, nothing truly bad happens. I'm all right." said Harry soothingly.

Nineteenth paragraph.

"Go figure, due to someone," said Charlie looking over at the twins. "him and spiders don't get along."

Twentieth paragraph.

"You kids shouldn't be keeping back like that, especially with something dangerous walking about." said Professor Sprout scolding slightly.

Dialogue line.

"Except tha' he's a ruddy coward." said Hagrid. "But no one in the forest will 'urt him, or you if yer with him."

Dialogue set.

"Not really." said Remus tiredly.

Twenty-first paragraph, first sentence, first comma.

"He was already nervous, didn't want to add to it." said Harry.

End of twenty-first paragraph.

"Don't just focus on the good things, notice the evil too." growled Moody.
"See? It's not like I wanted to go back in there." said Harry defensively.

"Never saw a man leap like that." said Ron.

"Jackass." muttered Sirius.

"Seriously?" said Dr. Clark. "Oh, my bloody God."

"We thought he had lost his blinking mind." said Neville.

"The only dim one is him." said Remus with a growl. "And Harry's got more intelligence in his little finger than he's got in his wildest dreams."

"Atta boy, Dean!" said Fred clapping loudly.
"Took Dazzle Gums three years to figure out that a wand can't cure split ends." said Remus.

Dialogue line.
"Careful, you aren't supposed to know about it." said Kingsley.

Dialogue line.
"Bull, he makes it sound like he was the one who arrested Hagrid single-handedly." said Bill.

"He never really liked Hagrid." said Sirius. "Hagrid wouldn't let him take one of the hippogriffs out for his date with a Slytherin girl. Also, not reading any of his books didn't help matters either." he grinned cheekily up to Hagrid.

Twenty-fifth paragraph.
"Wow, Harry looks so gentle." said Fred.

"And yet, he keeps smacking Ron about." said George.

Dialogue line.
"At least someone's watching what you both say." said Moody.

Twenty-sixth paragraph, first sentence, first comma.
"Accurate way of putting it." said McGonagall with hint of a growl in her voice.

Twenty-sixth paragraph, first sentence, second comma.
"I could have killed him." said Harry rubbing his scarred temple with two fingers.

Twenty-sixth paragraph, end of first sentence.
"Oh, come on! We would have been so proud of you!" said Siruis and Remus together.
"Didn't need to add onto McGonagall's troubles." said Harry.

"I would have given you seventy points to Gryffindor for that." said McGonagall with smirk.

"As would we." said Snape and the rest of the staff.

"Dang, wish I had done that then." said Harry with a smile.

End of twenty-sixth paragraph.

"Quit giving me gray hair." said Remus groaning and throwing an arm around Harry's shoulders.

"But it's so much fun," whined Harry playfully.

"I'm betting your dad would have hair like yours right now, by the time you would turn seven." said Sirius fondly.

Twenty-seventh paragraph.

"You're so brave!" cooed Lavender.

"Oh...thanks..." said Ron uncertainly.

Twenty-eighth paragraph, first sentence.

"We couldn't go anywhere." said Ron.

End of twenty-eighth paragraph.

"No one was sleeping much." said Ron.

Twenty-ninth paragraph, first sentence, second comma.

"Nice thing to do with the family heirloom." said Sirius snickering.

Twenty-ninth paragraph, second sentence, first comma.

"Cripes, sorry about that. Didn't know you were out to save the school." said Fred with a shrug.
"Wasn't too sure if it was right for me to sit there." said Ginny.
"She didn't have her name on the chair." said Harry shrugging.

"Knew we couldn't beat Ron that easily." said George pouting slightly.

"So, you two went out, to the forest, with nobody knowing where you are heading?" asked Sirius in a stunned voice.
"Uh...yeah...not our best move by a long shot." said Harry.

"Well, at least they were keeping watch." said Remus tiredly.

"Harry didn't have to do much squeezing." said Ron.

"That's right, keep a happy thought." said Charlie with a smirk.
"Not likely." said Harry with a smile.

"Dead depressing that was." said Ron.

"He must've thought Hagrid was coming back with you." said Tonks.

"Actually, we've been taking him for walks, and with classes, we haven't been able to do that much, the Care of Magical Creatures teacher is supposed to take care of him during the normal class week." said Harry. "But apparently, with the escorting, he wasn't able to."

"No offense, Hagrid, but knowing your cooking, that's cruelty to animals." said Charlie with a smile.

“It wasn’t Hagrid who gave him the fudge.” said Harry.

"Bad move, dear boy. Very bad move." said Dumbledore quietly.

"Not bad for someone who is somewhat afraid of dogs." said Harry with a laugh.

"You're what?" said Sirius in shock.

"Since Aunt Marge and Ripper, I've been sort of afraid of handling dogs without their owners being around.” said Harry.

"Wow, I didn’t' really know that." said Ron.
"Oh, so cute!" said Emmeline Vance.

"Cute part gone." said Sirius snorting loudly.

"Did you have to notice that, Harry?" asked Seamus laughing loudly.

"Good idea for a weapon, though." said Moody with an appreciative smirk.

"You are going to follow two tiny little spiders in a deep dark forest? You both are mad." said Rudolph.

“And that’s coming from a man that backtracked an ant trail to find a rare plant in Africa.” said Leroy teasingly.

"You are one of the bravest men in the world." said Hermione giving Ron’s hand a squeeze.

"Hope he doesn't try and go to the bathroom again." said Remus with a snicker.

"Good lads." said Dr. Nicodemus with smile.
"You have an uncanny way of making things sound just as scary as if we were there beside you." said Cho shaking slightly.

"I don't think I could even begin to reassure you three." said Harry guiltily.

"Good idea." said Remus darkly.

"Good idea." said Charlie.

"Bad idea," said Moody. "others travel the pathways too."

"Let's just focus on them not getting lost, how about that." said Kingsley.

"Which should never have happened." said Lionus with a snarl.

"Oh crap!" said Sirius worriedly.

"Light as you are, wasn't much crushing, I'll warrant." said Madam Pomfrey.

“Cripes all mighty, don’t do that.” said Sirius shortly over to Nightstrike.

“Take it out on the book, not me.” said Nightstrike defensively.
"You looked creepy." said Harry and Ron to each other.

"Jeez, just get out of there." said Tonks worriedly.

"Didn't have any more treacle fudge." said Harry shrugging.

"Dammit Harry! Do something else at school besides get into dangerous stuff, do something like collect butterflies or something!" said Siruis covering his ears.

"Too exciting, my poor nerves wouldn't be able to take it." said Harry teasingly.

"It's like a horror story." squeaked a little first year girl.
"Right little ray of sunshine, aint you?" said Fred as he and George walked over to where Ron was sitting.

"Okay, I've got nothing." said Sirius worriedly. "What the bloody hell is it?"

"If you hadn't stopped me, I would have told you." said Nightstrike with a smirk. "And it's not all that bad."

"Judging by Fang, it sounds bad." said Remus.

"It's not." said Lionus with a smirk.

"How do you know? You aren't reading the book!" said Parvati.

"If my lieutenant says it's not dangerous, it's not." said Lionus.

"What?" said the congregation of the school.

"I can't really tell if that's a good thing or not." said Lionus thoughtfully.
"Did it just say...empty?" said Rudolph.

"Yeah, the car is somewhat possessed." said Ron with a smile.

"It's a...car....though..." said Leroy.

End of forty-eighth paragraph.

"Interestin' thought." said Hagrid with a thoughtful look.

Dialogue line.

Forty-ninth paragraph, third sentence.

"Poor Fang, he's always been a ruddy coward." said Hagrid with a sympathetic smile.

End of forty-ninth paragraph.

All eyes turned to face Harry, who took this opportunity to hide under the phoenix blanket.

"Oh no you don't." said Sirius tugging the blanket off him. “Get back here and face the music.”

"What were you thinking?" asked McGonagall, almost screeching.

"You could have been attacked! At any moment!" said Mrs. Weasley fearfully.

"I can't even...explain what made me do that." said Harry.

"Try." said Moody sternly.

"Stupidity." said Harry simply.

"You did a good job explaining it, if you ask me." said Snape with a raised brow.

Dialogue line.

Fiftieth paragraph.

"Good, if the car can be driven, get the hell out of there." said Charlie.

Dialogue line.
"Two words." said Remus. "Learn them: Get...out..."

Fifty-first paragraph.

"Ron, if you want..." said Harry.

"I'm fine." said Ron.

Fifty-second paragraph, second sentence.

Nightstrike looked at the book in horror. It couldn't be acromantulas, could it? He looked up and saw his Captain staring at Nightstrike in shock and noticed the men in and beside the bowl reach and try and grab any piece of Harry they could.

"You aren't to move from this spot, understand." said Leroy in a whisper to Harry, his hand tight on the boy’s sleeve.

"Got it sir." said Harry with a small smile.

"Good lad." said Dumbledore, clutching Harry’s collar as he stood behind the young man.

Fifty-second paragraph, third sentence, second comma.

"Well, then, Ron's as good as doomed." said Fred.

"If Harry is scared." said George. Both of them were standing behind Ron and keeping an eye on him, just in case he disappeared right in front of them.

End of fifty-second paragraph.

Mr. and Mrs. Weasley, Remus, Sirius, Dr. Clark, Rudolph, Leroy and Dumbledore all gave the boys a quick squeeze, (on whatever they were holding at the time) to make sure they were still there.

Fifty-third paragraph, first sentence.

"They're spiders!" shrieked Tonks loudly.
"What...?" said Dr. Clark quickly.

"Acromantulas." said Dr. Nicodemus. "Large spiders, very rare, very deadly."

"Now here..." said Hagrid quickly.

"I think, Hagrid, that we will see just how these two second years handle them, and we shall see if they are dangerous." said Lionus quickly.

Fifty-third paragraph, third sentence,

"That doesn't make it sound any better." said Charlie worriedly.

End of fifty-third paragraph.

Sirius threw both arms around Harry and enclosed him tightly.

Fifty-fourth paragraph, first sentence, first semi-colon.

Harry could feel the hands holding onto him trembling.

End of fifty-fourth paragraph.

Girls in the Great Hall began to whimper and cry. A few teachers had to step over to them and console a few of the hysterical ones.

Fifty-fifth paragraph, third sentence.

Both Ron and Tonks began to shiver uncontrollably.

End of fifty-fifth paragraph.

"Makes me sound like five pounds of beef from the butchers." said Harry with a laugh, but then he stopped abruptly when he saw the looks on people's faces. "Never mind."

"Thank you." said Remus, his face pale.
"Get the hell out of there!" shouted most of the adults and the staff.

"What did Harry look like?" asked Zacharias with a smirk.
"I wasn't exactly looking at him at the time." said Ron with a growl.

"You mean that you can speak spider as well?" asked Dr. Clark in a stunned voice.
"No, it was speaking English." said Harry and Ron together.
"Best send a letter to Scamander then, huh?" said Charlie with a half-hearted laugh.

Sirius gave a slight whimper, like a whipped puppy and held onto Harry even tighter.

Tonks began to shake almost violently, until Dumbledore threw an arm around his graduated student and offered her some comfort. Remus was otherwise busy whispering feverishly a prayer that Harry and Ron get out of there unharmed.

"I'm impressed boy, despite the danger and being frightened, you can still take in your surroundings and deduce." said Moody.
"Start using that energy for running away." said Dr. Clark fearfully.
"Children." said Sirius almost drowning in worry. "Tiny, defenseless babies."

Harry and Ron looked at each other, letting it slide. Now was not the time or the place to defend themselves.

The school went as quiet as a tomb. Hagrid was as white as a sheet, and kept muttering "No." over and over again.

"Hope that works and keeps you safe." said Bill, standing behind the loveseat where Ron and Hermione both sat, enshrouded in people who wanted to make sure that Ron and Hermione were still there by hanging onto them.

Ron and Harry exchanged nervous looks.

"Still couldn't believe that you were able to talk, the most I could do is whine." said Ron with a nervous smile.

"Well, then it sounds like he won't hurt you then, if he wants to help you save Hagrid." said Charlie.
"I guess that Aragog could interpret that as a form of respect, kneeling in front of him." said Dr. Nicodemus hopefully.

"Didn't want to say monster, not there." said Harry.

"Smart move." said Michael Corner.

"Where he should never have gone." said Lionus with a growl.

"Why would they applaud that?" asked Ginny weakly.

"That's what it sounded like, they weren't exactly clapping." said Harry. "I guess that's their way of being angry."

"Tell me that this is almost the end of this chapter." pleaded Tonks.

"Just about." said Nightstrike.

"Can a spider sound fretful?" asked Colin wonderingly.

End of dialogue set.
"What made you so nervous?" asked Fred.

"I was starting to think we weren't going to get out of there." said Harry. "I could see more and more spiders coming to join the party. Trying to plan a means of escape, while talking to a giant spider, and keeping Ron from fainting wasn't a very easy task."

Dialogue set, fourth sentence.

"Where the hell do you get spiders that grow that size?" asked Dr. Clark worriedly.

"They mostly live in the Middle East." said Hagrid.

Dialogue set, sixth sentence.

"So you had an adult give you something so dangerous?" said Mrs. Weasley angrily. "You were only a child!"

"I was tall for me age, he thought I was older." said Hagrid with a shrug, he told himself that Aragog wouldn't hurt the two boys.

Dialogue set, eighth sentence.

"He most surely did. This is the first time that I learned that this was the creature that Hagrid had. He wouldn't even tell me about it." said Dumbledore with a kind smile up to the half giant.

End of dialogue set.

"Wow, that was kind of you, Hagrid." said Charlie. "Though, I would be regretting the whole mate thing right now."

"They wouldn' do nuthin' to the boys." said Hagrid, though in his voice, he was starting to show some doubt.

Sixty-third paragraph.

"Which wasn't much, anymore." said Harry with a small smile.
"Not yet." said Remus, voice full of worry.

"That would be horrible to die in a bathroom. If given a choice, I’d like to die of old age and in my sleep. Thank you very much." said Fred crossing his arms.

"I'm not too sure why I asked him that, he just said that he never left the cupboard. Then again, it's a really good idea that I did ask." said Harry with a smile.

"Don’t' piss them off!" cried Lee.

Dr. Clark whimpered slightly, still clutching the textbook.

"I sort of don’t want to know." said Remus looking over at Dr. Clark's pale face.

"See? I was tryin' to figure out what was goin' on. Only I never did." said Hagrid rubbing the back of his head.
Sixty-sixth paragraph, first sentence.

Ron began to start shaking even more so than before.

End of sixty-sixth paragraph.

Mrs. Weasley as well as the rest of her family gave a small whimper. Harry’s extended family remained silent, but Harry could hear their breathing becoming faster.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"What?" said Hagrid in shock.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"HAGRID!" screamed most of the people in the Hall.

"I DIDN’ KNOW HE WOULD HURT ’EM! ARAGOG NEVER...." said Hagrid loudly, but he couldn't finish it, due to the glare that Dumbledore sent his way.

"Hagrid, I will create a barrier so that no one walks into that part of the forest. But you tell Aragog that if he or any of his children attempt to cause harm to any students here, I personally will see to them myself." said Dumbledore darkly.

Sixty-seventh paragraph.

"You okay, kid?" asked Nightstrike looking over to Ron, who was deathly pale and trembling.

"F-F-Fine, n-n-never bet-better." said Ron who was being held tighter in his mother's arms.

"Here lad." said Dr. Nicodemus walking over to Ron and handing him a small capsule. "It's a Ranger tranquilizer, a bit stronger than a calming draught and lasts almost the rest of your life."

"Hold up." said Bill, as Ron reached for the small pill. "You mean to say that, that thing will keep him calm his whole life?"

"Yes, and no." said Dr. Nicodemus. "This little pill will keep him nice and calm for an hour or two, but for the rest of his life, when he meets up with another acromantula, he will stay nice and calm and keep his wits about him.” he finished with a smile.

“How can you pinpoint it to acromantulas?” said Fred.

“I just programmed it for that.” said Dr. Nicodemus waving a thin black wand.

"And the side effects, downsides?” asked Charlie with scrutiny.

"Well...there is one." said Dr. Nicodemus.

"And that would be?” said Bill.

"Since he is a child now, on the night he turns seventeen..." said Dr. Nicodemus.

"What would happen?” said Mr. Weasley quickly.

"Let's just say, his brothers should come and fetch him. He's going to desire a long night of drinking, of an alcoholic nature." said Dr. Nicodemus with a smirk.

"That's it?” said Fred.

"That's it." said Dr. Nicodemus with a smile. "To steady past nerves."

"Hell...we could take him out tonight." whispered Charlie. Bill shoved his shoulder hard.

"He's too young." he snarled.

"Like that stopped us." said Charlie with a sneer.

Sixty-eighth paragraph, first sentence, third comma.

Every eye turned towards the two boys, every eye bursting with horror and fear.

Sixty-eighth paragraph, first sentence, fifth comma.

Harry turned to look upwards into the sky, not desiring to meet any of his uncle's eyes.

“Children should not be prepared for that.” said Tempest shaking her head.

End of sixty-eighth paragraph.

Sixty-ninth paragraph, first sentence, first comma.

"Thank God, hop in and get the bloody hell out of there!” shouted Dr. Clark.
“Where's a giant flyswatter when you need it?” asked Fred.

"Or at least some bug spray." said George.

"Found out he gets car sick." said Ron with a laugh, the capsule was doing it's job beautifully.

"Oh, that's nice." said Fred.

The school began to cheer, yet Hagrid was still sitting dumbfounded. He almost got Harry and Ron killed, he never thought that Aragog would let them get hurt, perhaps it was time for Hagrid to draw the line in the sand. Didn't matter if he was ill, Aragog had no right to do that.

"You'd think that it would run out of gas." said Dr. Clark calming down at last.

"I...um...upped it's gas mileage." said Mr. Weasley with a blush. "It won't need refilling for a real long time."

"That’s...amazing..." said Dr. Clark with awed look.

"At least he won't suffer a heart-attack then." said George.

"Can't say the same thing for us though." said Fred wiping the sweat off his brow.
"Oh yeah, just fine, just got down having a nice sit down tea with Aragog and his family." said Ron with a smirk.

"Nice to know you're feeling better." said Harry with a laugh.

"You're safe, you get out ok." said Sirius sighing with relief.

"Well that shoots the safe part down." said Sirius with a nervous chuckle.

"Should have had your seat belts on." said Dr. Clark.

"Poor thing." said Hagrid sadly.

"Yeah, it took a lot of Harry's homemade biscuits to get back on his good side." said Ron with a smile.

"Dog biscuits?" asked Sirius.

"Buttermilk." said Harry. “Now when I bring a knapsack to Hagrid’s he knocks me down and ruts through my bag.”

"Arthur, I think the school and Hagrid owes you a great debt of gratitude, for enchanting that car." said Dumbledore tidying up the empty phials of Calming Draught.

"The school, sir?" asked Mr. Weasley confused.

"Well, it saved two students, and helped them come back with the truth." said Dumbledore.
"You alright now, Ron?" asked Luna dreamily.

"I've fine, thanks Luna." said Ron with a smile.

Dialogue line.

"I forgave you Hagrid, I was still scared out of my mind." said Ron quickly.

Dialogue line.

"That I did, I'm really sorry." said Hagrid sadly.

"It wasn't your fault, really. You should really trust people you call friends." said Harry.

"Not always boy." said Moody disapprovingly.

Dialogue set, fifth sentence.

Ron looked apologetically up to Hagrid and tried to offer an apology, but no words came past his throat.

End of dialogue set.

"You found out that Hagrid was not the one behind the Chamber of Secrets the last time." said Dumbledore with a smile.

Dialogue line.

"Still can't believe you managed to bounce back that fast." said Ron.

"I'm not arachnophobic," said Harry. "Though, if you put in me in a glade full of dementors, I think I would be in way worse shape than you."

Seventy-fifth paragraph.

Seventy-sixth paragraph, first sentence.

"So...who left the door unlocked?" asked Charlie.
"Filch wasn't exactly all that focused that year." said Fred.

End of seventy-sixth paragraph.

"You alright, Remus?" asked Sirius and Dr. Clark, noticing how tense the man look.

"This was a bad chapter to read so early in the morning." said Remus running a cold hand over his sweaty face.

"Better to read it in the morning, as opposed to last night." said Harry.

"You got a point." said Remus with a sigh.

Seventy-seventh paragraph.

"Harry, you need rest too." said Mrs. Weasley.

"After that night, I don't think sleeping would have been all that restful." said Harry.

Seventy-eighth paragraph, first sentence.

"That's a scary thought." said a first year.

End of seventy-eighth paragraph.

Seventy-ninth paragraph.

Eightieth paragraph.

"Just leave it for tomorrow." said Ernie, "We were still safe for a little while."

"You've got a really bad memory." said Fred.

Eighty-first paragraph.

"You and your inspiring thoughts are going to drive me nuts. I still don't figure how you managed to remember everything that Aragog said. I still can't remember a tenth of it." said Ron shaking his head.
"I thought a spider had snuck in." said Ron sheepishly.

"Oh crap!" said George.

"Is that what you meant by; you didn't have the heart to remove her?" asked Dr. Clark.

"That it is," said Dumbledore with a sad look.

Chapter End Notes

Thanks for reading!
I’ll read this chapter, I think.” said Dr. Nicodemus. “It may be best, if you let us read the ending parts. That way, the story keeps going on.”

“Thank you.” said Dumbledore kindly.

Chapter Sixteen.

“Thank heavens that you’re reading.” said Bill nervously.

“I don’t think I really want to know.” said Remus putting his hands to his ears.

“Me either.” said Sirius doing the same.

Dialogue line.

“It’s not all that abnormal to walk up to a ghost and ask how they died. When you do, they tend to embellish it just a bit.” said Bill. “Nick’s story keeps changing almost every time you ask.”

First paragraph, first sentence.

“You looking for spiders again?” asked Charlie.

“No, spider searching was done.” said Harry.

End of first paragraph.

“Gee, you make it sound like a bad thing.” said Remus. “Protecting students.”

“The teachers leading us about, is one thing, but Lockhart is something completely different.” said Harry.

“Understandable.” said Sirius, Dr. Clark and Remus quickly.
“In Transfiguration? What the hell could be so important in there that…um…er…” said Sirius quickly but his voice faded into slight whimpers under McGonagall’s furious stare.

The visiting adults in the room went silent.

“Exams? After all that terror and the attacks, you’re going to have them take the exams? They won’t be thinking clearly. Especially the first years, fifth years and the seventh years. The first years will be too traumatized to think about their first tests, and the other two will ruin their chances for future careers.” said Remus incredulously.

“The school had to continue on as normal.” said McGonagall, “Dumbledore’s orders.”

“Doesn’t put you in a good light.” said Sirius shortly.

“I had a plan.” said Dumbledore with a kind smile.

“Go figure, a boy would be the first one to shout out.” said Emmeline Vance with a smirk.

“I got nervous.” said Neville meekly.

“You’d be foolish not to be nervous about those exams.” said Remus with a comforting smile.

“It’s always been commonplace to replace the legs of desks in my class.” said McGonagall.
“We couldn’t even sleep without having nightmares, what makes you think we’re studying?” said Fred.

Fourth paragraph, second sentence.

“I couldn’t even open a textbook and focus on a subject for the past few weeks.” said Harry.

End of fourth paragraph.

“That silenced everyone quite quick.” said Ron.

Dialogue set.

“Well, one thing we learned was that terrified kids will become savages and beat the crap out of the first thing that sneezes.” said Sirius sending an angry look over to the Hufflepuffs.

“And that there is a Chamber in the school that holds a terrifying monster that can petrify people without much trouble.” said Dr. Clark weakly.

“And Hagrid was framed for a crime he didn’t commit.” said Remus.

“And that Harry is in deep trouble for going in the forest.” said Rudolph and Leroy.

“That too.” said the three men in the bowl.

“And to think, once upon a time, I wished for people that cared about me.” said Harry with a teasing smile and a dramatic sigh. “What was I thinking?”

“You’re asking for it.” said Sirius, though the sternness in his voice didn’t reach his eyes.

Fifth paragraph, first sentence.

“All I could manage to do to them was make the bunnies themselves tap-dance.” said Ron shaking his head.

End of fifth paragraph.

“Yeah, we didn’t exactly cover Polyjuice Potions in Potions class, and running away from spiders won’t exactly help in Charms.” said Harry with a smirk.
Sixth paragraph.

“I think I actually would have rather go in there as opposed to facing the exams that year. One wrong move with my wand, I would’ve blown up the entire class, and everyone in it.” said Ron.

Dialogue line.

“You’re doomed.” said Charlie shaking his head.

Seventh paragraph.

“Goody, more good news.” said Tonks rolling her eyes.

“Don’t knock it, it was good news.” said Harry.

Dialogue line.

“Never happens when Dumbledore talks.” said Rudolph with a smile.

“We were freaking out, thank you very much.” said Dean.

Dialogue line.

“That would set the kid’s minds at ease.” said Kingsley.

Dialogue line.

“Now that would be good news. Hell, good enough reason to throw a party.” said Tonks.

“Or cancel the exams.” said Remus.

Dialogue line.

“She’s a Quidditch nut, but not that much of a Quidditch nut.” said Charlie.
“That IS good news!” said Sirius happily. “Though, catching the heir would have been better.”

“Not really, I don’t remember much.” said Justin rubbing the back of his head.

“Strange, Nick remembers, kept talking about it for months as a matter of fact.” said Fred.

“How do you cure a ghost?” asked Dr. Clark. “You can’t exactly pour a potion down his throat.”

“We had to waft him through the potion.” said Madam Pomfrey with a smile.

“Sort of…” said Ron and Harry.

“What do you mean?” asked Remus.

“It sort of happened, the heir getting caught.” said Ron.

“Fabulous.” groaned Leroy, burying his face in Rudolph’s chest. “‘Sort of happened’ when applied to catching a criminal means, you don’t get him.”

Seeing an opening in the fear and the terror, the school did an encore of the cheers and yells, to the amusement of the adults.

Malfoy shuffled his feet nervously.

“Didn’t know it was that bad.” said Leroy looking over at the small boy sadly.

“Finally had something to look forward to, after the whole spider incident.” said Ron with a slight
Dialogue set, third sentence.

“Hey! There you go! Then for about the millionth time,” said Sirius smiling widely, then he bellowed “GO GET A TEACHER AND TELL THEM!”

End of dialogue set.

“With anyone else, yes, but not Hermione.” said Remus fondly.

Tenth paragraph.

“Were you okay short-stuff?” asked Bill coming over to sit beside her.

Ginny shrugged and looked away.

“Scoot, we’re sitting here, now.” said Charlie as both elder Weasley children sat on either side of her. “You look like you could use some big brother time.” as they both wrapped their arms around her.

Dialogue line.

Eleventh paragraph.

“You yourself?” asked Zacharias snidely.

“She’s braver and stronger than me, it wasn’t me that she reminded me of.” said Harry with a smirk. “Someone just as equally brave and strong as her though.”

Dialogue line.

Twelfth paragraph, second sentence, first comma, third word.

Ginny looked over to him in confusion, but slowly her confused frown turned to a smile. She knew what he was talking about.
“I still don’t get what you mean.” said Sirius confused.

“She knows something, and she’s not telling.” said Ron.

“So who’s she talking to?” asked a first year.

“Harry, but she was still suffering from her crush.” said Hermione with a kind smile.

“Nice Ron.” said Angelina rolling her eyes.

“Way to reassure her, mate.” said Fred. “Pressuring her to talk to you is a great way to calm her down.”

“You could have come to us, sweet-stuff.” said George looking at Ginny.

“Didn’t know who to go to. I though you two would have laughed at me.” said Ginny quietly.

“When do we ever laugh at you, we laugh with you, not at you.” said George.

“Unless you really deserve it.” said Fred.

“Well…yeah.” said George. “Like that time that you put hot sauce in our jell-o?”

“We’re still trying to find a way to get you back for that one.” said Fred.

Ginny began to giggle.

“Haven’t eaten the stuff since.” said the twins together. “And we used to love that slimy stuff!”
“Oh, what was wrong, Percykins?” said George in a baby voice.

“Did you go patrolling again?” said Fred.

“What’s wrong with trying to protect the students?” said Percy indignantly.

“It’s a problem when you don’t even remember to sleep or eat, Perce.” said Fred.

“That’s why we snuck that sleeping potion in your tea that one time.” said George.

“And left you in the laundry room.” said Fred. “On a nice bed of pillows and linen, slept like a baby.”

Percy snarled at his brothers, but it was short-lived.

“Thank you boys, no need for Percy to get himself sick.” said Mrs. Weasely praising her sons.

Percy, Fred and George stared. “Who are you and what have you done with our mother?” said Fred and George together.

Dialogue line.

“PERCY! Leave your sister alone!” said Mr. Weasley. “Couldn’t you see what she was like?”

Percy shuffled his feet nervously.

Sixteenth paragraph, first sentence.

“Huh?” said Charlie.

“You know, I’ve sort of wondered what that was about.” said Percy absently.

“You were always going on about how you were willing to turn Fred and George in if they broke the rules.” snapped Ginny. “I didn’t want to be your first sacrifice down the path you chose.”

Percy stared at his little sister. “Ginny, I never…not you…”

“Really? How was I to know that you were going to spare me?” she spat. “You threatened to take Ron to McGonagall when you saw him come out of the bathroom! You even ratted out Charlie when he snuck into the dorms late one night when he was still here.”

“You did that? What the hell…?” said Charlie looking at his younger brother.

“Then you sided with that monster! Both of them!” shrieked Ginny pointing up to Umbridge and Fudge’s empty seat. “Against Harry! What has he ever done to you? All he’s ever done was protect this family! Better than you ever could, or ever will.” she finished, her voice as cold as ice.

Percy sat in shock, his parted lips trembling.

“Easy sweetie…Percy just…took us for granted…that’s all.” said Bill soothingly.
Nightstrike cleared his throat and pressed on.

End of sixteenth paragraph.
Dialogue line.

Seventeenth paragraph.
“What the heck for?” asked Mr. Weasley curiously, trying to breeze past the rant his daughter had just released.

Dialogue line.
Dialogue line.
Dialogue line.
Dialogue line.
“How would you know?” asked Rudolph curiously.

Dialogue line.
“Yeah, what he said.” said Rudolph with a laugh.

Dialogue set.
“What the…just spit it out already!” said Sirius.
“I think his little sister walked in on him snogging someone.” said Dr. Clark with a laugh.
“Oh that would be precious.” said Remus with a laugh.

Eighteenth paragraph.
A few of the people in the Hall began to laugh, Percy looked just about as uncomfortable as the book described.

Dialogue line.
“Nobody would buy that if you’re smiling like that.” said Tonks with a smirk.

Nineteenth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

“Compared to Harry, you don’t know the meaning of the word.” said a seventh year Hufflepuff.

Twentieth paragraph, first dash.

The adults in the room stared at the boy.

“And why is that?” asked McGonagall sternly.

“I just had a bad feeling.” said Harry shrugging. “That it was really important to talk to Myrtle.”

End of twentieth paragraph.

“Damn, I thought we were done with that imbecile.” said Remus groaning.

Twenty-first paragraph, first sentence, third comma.

“Which was never very hard.” said Harry with a smirk.

Twenty-first paragraph, end of first sentence.

“Oh…if he had said that in the teacher’s lounge...” growled McGonagall angrily.

“There wouldn’t much left of him to send him to the Hospital Wing after we would get done with him.” said Professor Flitwick angrily.

End of twenty-first paragraph.

“Aww…poor baby.” said Dr. Clark with a smirk.

“Hey now, I can remember freaking out about my hair.” said Rudolph.

“Yeah, but you mostly just braid it and have done with it.” said Leroy.
“Sure, now. Before, I was a nervous wreck trying to get it to do things God never intended hair to do.” said Rudolph with a smile.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

“That never goes well, that’s about as bad as saying ‘Thing’s couldn’t possibly get any worse.’” said Michael with a laugh.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

“I’m hoping that the next attack happens to him.” said Sirius.

“If he was the only one attacked, I’d forget completely how to make the Mandrake draught.” said Poppy with an evil grin.

“As would I.” said Snape with a sneer.

End of dialogue set.

“Stupid fool.” muttered Moody grimly.

Dialogue set, first sentence, third comma.

The school went completely silent.

Sirius stared at Harry in confusion. “What?”

“You’ll see.” said Harry.

End of dialogue set.

“Forget dropping the books, I’d faint if I had been there in person hearing that.” said Bill.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

“His fondest wish, Harry agreeing with him.” snarled Remus.
“Why that loathsome cockroach! It is our duty to protect the students from any and all danger!” said Professor Sprout shortly.

“You two are pretty good about going about and acting on the spur of the moment.” said Moody impressively.

“You should hear Harry soon after this.” said Ron.

“Prepping a class?” snorted Sirius. “More like to style his hair up.”

“Awesome!” said Sirius with a laugh.

“Note to self, never do that.” said Harry. “Things only get worse when you do that.”

“Unaccompanied students in these troubled times was only asking for another attack to happen.” said McGonagall, she remembered this day, and they had lied to her!

“Never stutter. That won’t help with convincing anyone.” said Kingsley.
“What?” said the school.

Moody laughed. “Now there’s an insight to his real way of thinking. I wouldn’t have come up with that one!”

“I wasn’t too sure if that card was going to win me the game, or send me home.” said Harry absently.

“I’ve never seen you like that before, I wasn’t too sure if you could act like that anymore.” said Harry helplessly.

“I can’t see anything wrong or make fun of that.” said Sirius, “all it shows is that you have a heart.”

“Who the hell are you?” asked Harry and Remus together.

“Hey…I’m….” said Sirius but stopping himself quickly.

“Say it.” said the three people in the bowl eagerly.

“I’m…human…” growled Sirius.

“HA!” said Remus with a laugh.

“Screw detention, we were lucky she didn’t lop off and kill us.” said Ron.
“I’m sorry.” said Harry guiltily.

McGonagall sent him a fierce look over his way, but her anger wavered when she saw him flinch.

“Good idea, she might check up on the story.” said Tonks appreciatively.

“Well, there isn’t.” said Madam Pomfrey.

“You’re about as good at sympathy as Hermione.” said Ron absently. Hermione replied by shoving in elbow into his side.

Hermione glared at both of the boys, who then looked at each other.

“Oh that’s nice.” said Katie.
“What?” said Katie and Alicia. “Her hand?”

“James would be so proud.” said Dr. Clark with a loving smile. Harry looked down and smiled to himself.

“Both of them.” said Sirius.

Dr. Nicodemus lowered the book, then he and the rest of the Rangers, including the Aurors turned and stared at the two boys.

“You two are good.” said Lionus with a smirk. “I’m going to have to keep an eye on you two, along with Miss Granger.”

“Or snap her fingers off.” said Harry.

“We replaced the book!” said Harry quickly.

“IT’S A BASILISK? EVACUATE THE F*%&^%&^% SCHOOL!” yelled Remus.

Several adults and students then began to panic, no amount of sparks from Dumbledore’s wand could bring them back to their senses.

Lionus stood up and shouted. “TEN SHUN!” the school went quiet. “Now, that’s better, the threat is long gone, relax.” he said sitting back down.

Everyone else sat slowly back down and settled into their chairs nervously.

“How did you do that?” asked Dean.

“A great leader can command anyone.” said Viper proudly.

Thirty-third paragraph.

“Is that how the monster was getting about?” said Remus calming down.

“Glad I didn’t find it.” said Hagrid. “I woulda been killed.”

Thirty-fourth paragraph.

Dialogue set.

“Crap, that makes everything come into focus doesn’t it.” said Charlie.

“You both a had better of gone to a teacher.” said Bill warningly.

“We did.” said Harry honestly, but the sides of his mouth twitched.

“Can’t wait to hear this one.” said Madam Bones with a groan

Thirty-fifth paragraph.

Dialogue set, fourth sentence.

“I loved that camera, and I had some really good pictures on that roll.” said Colin sadly.

End of dialogue set.

“That’s exactly what happened.” said Hermione looking at Harry in shock.

Thirty-sixth paragraph.
“That’s von hell of a memory you’ve got there.” said Viper with an impressed look.

“He even remembered that, you’re way too much.” said Tonks shaking her head.

“I had a brainstorm of my own right there.” said Ron proudly.

The people in the school took a sharp intake of breath.

“And you’ve been in there several times.” said Sirius weakly. “You kids are the luckiest people on the planet.”

“I’m taking a Calming Draught, Albus.” said Remus reaching over.

“Pass ‘em on.” said Dr. Clark.
“Dear me.” said Bathilda worriedly.

Dialogue line.

“Finally! They’re showing some sense.” said Madam Pomfrey.

Dialogue line.

“Good, tell a whole bunch of teachers, one of them is bound to believe you.” said George. But the teachers looked worried, when they went to the teacher’s lounge that day…dear lord.

Forty-second paragraph.

“But, then, where did you go?” said Professor Sprout, hoping they weren’t in there for much longer.

Forty-third paragraph.

“Huh? But then what told everyone that class was over?” said Sirius.

Forty-fourth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

“Oh, no, another attack.” said Remus faintly.

Forty-fifth paragraph

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

“Oh, please yes.” said Professor Flitwick worriedly.
“You know, I was sort of skeptical about how clever you were and if you were really holding back. Now I’m seeing, you do hold back quite a bit.” said one of the Unspeakables.

“Those were the smart ones.” said Mr. Weasley.

All around the room, where every guest and ever student third years and under sat, a collective nervous gulp went around the room.

Ginny began to start shaking.

“It’s alright short-stuff, was she a friend of yours?” asked Bill. But Ginny wouldn’t reply.

Both Charlie and Bill jumped about a foot in the air and enclosed their little sister in their arms.

“B-bu-but she’s right here! She’s not down there!” said Charlie nervously.

“She was saved from the Chamber of Secrets.” said Dumbledore kindly.

“What saved her?” asked Bill.

“She was saved by her brother Ronald, and Harry.” said Dumbledore with a smile over to the two boys.

Charlie and Bill stared at their little brother; they didn’t look at Harry, who was having a staring contest of his own to deal with. It was between him and the floor.
“You went down there…?” said Remus grimly.

“Um…” said Harry slowly.

Forty-ninth paragraph.

“I couldn’t believe it, I thought she was gone.” said Ron sheepishly.

Dialogue line.

“Always said what?” asked Sirius.

“That if another student had died from this, I personally would shut the school down myself.” said Dumbledore sadly.

Fiftieth paragraph, second sentence.

“Hope mixed with desperation.” said Harry.

“You aren’t allowed to talk for the rest of the book. Or I’ll tape your mouth.” said Remus sternly.

Sirius turned and looked at Remus. Remus must be getting really worked up, he hadn’t done something like that since James tried to convince Peter to scale the roofs of Hogwarts with him. If Peter had gone along with it, there was a good chance Peter wouldn’t have lived past Christmas his fourth year. Remus had been furious when he heard what James had planned for “Fun”.

Remus had taped James’ mouth for an entire weekend and refused to take it off.

End of fiftieth paragraph.

“What right does he have to be happy?” said Remus angrily. Harry opened his mouth, but swiftly a magical piece of tape went across his mouth, and then it faded. Harry tried, but he couldn't speak or remove it. He could feel it still there, despite it looking like it disappeared.

“I told you…” said Remus warningly.

"Remus..." said Dumbledore in a warning like tone.

"It'll only stay till this chapter's over." said Remus shortly. Harry glared at Remus.

“Remus…” said Sirius. Remus glared at his old friend, a wild look in his eye.

“Just endure it for a bit, only he can take it off.” said Sirius whispering to Harry.
“I’ll kill him with my own hands if I can manage it.” said Bill angrily. He looked worriedly over to Harry. He had his arms folded across his chest and his face was twisted in a scowl. He didn’t know who to feel sorry for, Harry for having his mouth taped, or Remus for when the tape finally came off.

“It wasn’t ‘like it’ it was ‘it.’” said Snape with a scowl. He also looked over to the boy…a slight twinge of pity flitted through his mind.

“For god’s sake hex the man.” said Sirius, positively begging Snape.

“That’s his mind screaming ‘MOMMY!’” said George with a laugh. He didn’t want to look over to bowl, he and Fred figured they wouldn’t notice, giving Harry some dignity.

“He’s backfiring on himself, this is priceless.” said Dr. Clark with a laugh. “Do you really have to tape Harry’s mouth, I’m not too happy about that.” he added with a frown. He looked at Harry, but Harry only shrugged, though he still looked far from happy.

“He always dances around me punishing him with his talking, I’m not letting him get away with it this time.” said Remus angrily.
“Just like his grandpa.” said Rudolph with a chuckle.

“What do you mean?” asked Sirius.

“When we were little, his grandpa would always manage to get out of trouble, talked his way out of anything. Drove me just about mad.” said Rudolph. “I'd get punished some of the time, not him though. But you can take the tape off, now, he gets the picture.”

“It’s only till the end of the chapter.” said Remus.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

“Didn’t recall? He told me the day before.” said Flitwick with a light laugh.

Dialogue set.

“Students would have been petrified left and right.” said Dr. Clark shaking his head.

Fifty-third paragraph.

Dialogue line.

“Bull, you make sure that no one misunderstands you.” said Professor Hooch.

Dialogue set.

“Free reign to choke yourself.” said Remus.

Fifty-fourth paragraph, first sentence.

“Who’d want to rescue him?” asked Dean.

“Rudolph asked me that once. Lockhart’s not my type, I like older men.” said Leroy with a sly smile.

End of fifty-fourth paragraph.
“Wuss.” said Charlie, still hugging his small sister.

Dialogue line.

Fifty-fifth paragraph.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

“You sneaky…” said Remus with a laugh.

“I have my moments.” said Professor McGonagall smugly.

End of dialogue set.

“You’re about to find out that two of yours are out.” said Sirius. Harry shook his head. Sirius looked uncomfortably at him and at his old friend.

“We made it back in time.” said Ron who was looking at Harry.

Fifty-sixth paragraph.

Fifty-seventh paragraph.

The Weasley family went silent.

Fifty-eighth paragraph.

Dialogue set.

“Good reasoning lad.” said Dr. Nicodemus kindly.

Fifty-ninth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Sixtieth paragraph.

“Thanks for not saying that.” said Ron.

Harry shrugged.
“You really thought that he was going in there.” said Remus staring at Harry and Ron.

Harry rolled his eyes.

“Well?” asked Remus.

“Uh..Moony? Are you hysterical right now?” asked Sirius.

“Little, why?” asked Remus quickly.

“Cause you’re asking him a question that he can’t answer, his mouth is all taped up.” said Sirius.

“Oh, right…” he looked uneasy “what is he doing?” said Remus looking at Harry.

Harry began to quickly move his arms and hands spastically.

"Is he okay?” asked Neville worriedly.

“Hang on.” said Dr. Clark watching Harry closely. “He said that Lockhart was the only one they knew going down into the Chamber, it was Ginny’s only hope.”

“How the hell do you know that?” asked Remus.

“Sign language, I taught him that years ago, can’t believe he remembered.” said Dr. Clark he looked at Sirius “That’s enough silent treatment.”

Sirius nodded and grabbed Remus by the collar. “Let him go.”

Remus looked full of regret and waved his wand over Harry's mouth.

“Ow.” said Harry as the final piece of the tape was taken off, it fluttered down onto his lap. “Let's put tape onto your mouth, and see how you like it.” he sent a scowl up to Remus, then he slammed the piece of tape on his mouth.

“Yowch!” said Remus as he pulled the tape off.

“You hurt me one more time as a form of punishment, I’ll kick your ass.” said Harry sourly.

He stood up and sat between Leroy and Rudolph, Remus stared at Harry as he lounged on the sofa, then he was smacked twice in the back of the head.

“You better find a way to get him back over here.” snarled Dr. Clark and Sirius.

“So it was Ron’s idea, huh?” said Fred proudly. He was relieved that the awkward punishment was over.
“Damn, we would have gone with you to save Ginny.” said George.

“You guys were stressed enough.” said Ron.

End of sixty-first paragraph.

Sixty-second paragraph.

“You mean he was actually preparing to go down?...Nah…” said Sirius shaking his head.

Sixty-third paragraph.

“He was freaking out like you wouldn’t believe.” said Ron with a smirk.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Sixty-fourth paragraph.

Remus bit his bottom lip. Don’t go in there! He couldn't think of a way of convincing the boy to come back and sit, but he would have to think of something very quickly.

“We could be holding him right now…you’d better fix this.” snarled Sirius baring his teeth.

Sixty-fifth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

“Bloody coward.” snarled Sirius.

Dialogue line.

“The only unavoidable thing you have to worry about is Ginny in the chamber!” said Kingsley angrily.
“Bullshit.” said Remus through gritted teeth.

A small ripple of laughter fluttered about the school.

“Well that ‘s your own stupid fault, isn’t it?” said Fred.

“Well...we can charge him with fraud at least.” said Moody with a large grim like smile.
"Would rather hear about true events, despite what the hero looks like." said Tonks sourly.

"He always put looks before actual talent." said Sirius with a snort of disgust.

"I've seen it done it the Muggle world. But with people here going about how they're better than they are, it was shock that this world and the Muggle world was nothing different. Both places are similar." said Harry with a smirk.

Umbridge thrashed about in her seat, gag still on her mouth. Tempest gave her a sharp slap across her face.

"Behave." she spat.

"The hell it isn't." said Harry.

"He's as feisty as Lily was." said Rudolph patting Harry's head.

"No, I think she could give him a run for his money. She was a terror when you got her all wound up." said Leroy with a laugh. "Remember when I ate her plate of cookies she was making for McGonagall that one time? I had to hide in our closet for two weeks, just to escape her wrath."

"I've still got the footprints on my shorts from all the time you stood in there." said Rudolph with a smirk.

"Horrible...absolutely criminal...going to get him." muttered Madam Bones angrily.
"That's a shock, he couldn't do it in school, what made him think he could do it then." said Sirius.

End of dialogue set.

"He still thinks that he's more famous than Harry?" said Kingsley with a laugh.

"He's always been a delusional moron." said Sprout angrily.

Sixty-sixth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Sixty-seventh paragraph.

Sirius, Dr. Clark, Rudolph, and Leroy went deathly quiet.

"Good thing Remus isn't here, he go off and bite Lockhart if he ever gets the chance." said Sirius in a cold whisper.

"I have half a mind to tell him just where he is." said Dumbledore coldly.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

"DON'T YOU DARE!" screeched Mrs. Weasley.

"Do not worry, he doesn't hurt either of the boys." said Dumbledore with a malicious smile.

"With that smile, how can we believe you?" said Lionus with smirk.

End of dialogue set.

"That's a plus." growled Fred.

"We didn't know about this part of the story." said George angrily.

"Didn't want you two sent up for murder." said Ron shrugging.

Sixty-eighth paragraph.

Cheers erupted in the school, then Remus entered. He was carrying a large plate of what looked like small pie pieces.
"What did I miss?" asked Remus looking around the room somewhat confused.

"Harry disarmed Dazzle Gums when he tried to oblivate him and Ron." said Sirius excitedly.

Remus almost dropped the plate in shock. "He...he did what?"

"Yeah, but Harry was faster than Lockhart was, it was cool." said a squeaky first year boy.

Harry didn't look back at Remus when he came back. He was still cross at him for taping his mouth shut, his Uncle Vernon had done that years and years ago, and he thought he and Sirius were different than his Uncle had been.

"Harry, I um...I went down to..uh...I got something for you. To say, I'm sorry for putting tape on your mouth." said Remus quietly.

Harry still did not look at him. Leroy smiled sadly and cupped his hands under the boy's chin.

"Come on, Harry. He's new at raising kids, he doesn't know what is a good thing or not." said Leroy kindly.

"Common sense helps." muttered Harry darkly.

"Give him another chance, Harry, after the life you've had, you know what is a good thing and what's a bad thing. He's not too sure." said Rudolph.

"He had a childhood, he could tell." said Harry still angry.

"Once he got bitten, Harry, his whole life changed, he didn't have as happy a childhood as you think. His own family began to shun him, it doesn't rate on the scale of abuse you have, but still..." said Leroy. “You can teach him the appropriate boundaries.”

Harry sighed, turned on the sofa and faced Remus. "Alright, I'm listening."

Remus gulped and sighed. "I...I'm sorry that I did what I did. I said I was going to settle down and I didn't. I'm really sorry and well, I got you these..." he handed the plate to Harry. He look at it slowly and stared at it in shock. It was piled high, not with pie slices, but treacle tart.

Harry reached for one immediately, but withdrew his hand quickly. Remus's face fell, but was confused when Harry went back to the bowl and ducked underneath it. He pulled his knapsack out from under the bowl and withdrew what looked like several wrapped treats.

"I’m still cross at you, but I guess let's bury the hatchet. I won't hurt your feelings, as long you don't hurt me." he handed the treats to Remus.

"What are these?" asked Remus, his eyes drowning in unfallen tears.

"Well, I tried my hand at making Mars Bars, and I found out that I could improve the recipe with some simple ingredients. Try them out." said Harry with a smile.

"You have got to be kidding me. Treacle Tart? That's your attitude changer?" said Rudolph with a laugh as he looked at the plate.

"Salt water taffy had the same effect on James, don't you remember?" said Leroy with a smile. "He could be pissed off about not getting the dark wizard he was after, give him a piece and he's all smiles."
Remus extended a hand to take Harry back to the bowl, but Harry looked away. “I’ll sit with them for right now.”

“Oh…ok.” said Remus slowly. “I’m sorry, and I do love you…”

Harry still looked away. Remus sighed and walked past him to sit in the bowl, he slowly unwrapped the treat and took a bite.

"How’s the chocolate?” asked Sirius.

"I will never piss off Harry again.” said Remus thickly, the entire candy bar crammed in his mouth.

"Just, don't try and punish me for stuff that's happened years ago. When we get to year five, then by all means, let me have it.” said Harry fairly.

“Without hurting you.” agreed Remus.

Sixty-ninth paragraph.

"You could have used that wand.” said Moody. "Seeing as how Ron's wand is unpredictable.”

"Lockhart's wand would have been the same way, besides it worked out for the best.” said Harry.

Dialogue set, first sentence, second comma.

"The first spell Snape teaches you becomes your pretty much favorite. I don't think I'll ever get over that.” said Tonks.

Snape stared hard at the boy, who had, through much coaxing from the two uncles, taken his old seat back in the bowl.

End of dialogue set.

"Twelve years old and he knows Ranger protocol about not taking your eyes off a criminal." said Nightstrike in awe.

"That's Auror protocol too.” said Moody defensively.

"And you guys got your first trainings from whom?” said Nightstrike with a sneer.

Dialogue line.

"First time that whole year he was right." said Remus with a smirk.
"God, this is precious! When he was younger, he wanted to be the leader of the pack, the dominating male, and here you are. A shrimpy, underfed scruffy little toddler telling him where to go and what to do." said Sirius laughing hysterically. "I love you!" he engulfed Harry in a tight hug.

"Very good plan, he can be replaced with another ludicrous idiot." said Professor Sprout shortly.

"That made my day." said Harry with smirk. "Ron and I weren't shaking, but he was."

"Wow, normally she ignores people when she doesn't want to be overly-dramatic." said Lavender.

"She must like you." said Parvati.

"How do you have a relationship with a ghost?" asked Dr. Clark.

"You can't, you just go nuts after a while." said Sirius in a whisper.

"I haven't met a ghost yet that doesn't love telling their death story." said Dumbledore with a small smile.
"I swear, children can be just as cruel, if not more so, than the most hardened criminals." said Dr. Nicodemus sourly.

"Poof? Just like that?" said George.

"Well there's a discovery, you can't really look into a Basilisks eyes without getting killed, and really after you kill one, the color disappears. Have to write that one down." said Charlie.

"Oh, she haunted Miss Hornby for many years." said Dumbledore, "After a while, I had to step in and tell Myrtle to come back to the castle."

"Nice to know she cares about what killed her." said Hannah.

"He's never had to face any sort of dark creature." said McGonagall with a scowl.

"Harry took over when I squirted him and Lockhart with water." said Ron.
"You can fix sinks too?" said Sirius.

"The Dursley's never wanted to pay for a handyman. They can't wait for the day that I finally learn how to fix cars." said Harry

"That day will never come for them, you aren't ever going back to them." said Remus

“But you still learn how to do that if you really want to.” said Dr. Clark with a smile.

“Good, cause there is a really nice car down at the Little Whinging Junk yard.” said Harry.

End of seventy-fifth paragraph.

"The past Headmasters and staff of the school have searched for the Chamber of Secrets for over two hundred years. And it takes three second years a little under a year to find it." said Flitwick shamefully.

"You lacked what they had an abundance of." said Lionus wisely.

"What was that? Luck?" asked Snape with slight disdain.

"Imagination." said Lionus.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set.

Dialogue line.

Seventy-sixth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"Well that sucks." said Fred.

"Yeah, how are you going to get down there now?" asked George.

Seventy-seventh paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Seventy-eighth paragraph.

"And of course you and Ron are going to slide down into." said Remus sighing.
"Hey, we toss something down there to make sure it was safe." said Ron defensively.

"A stone won’t tell you it’s safe." said Sirius.

"It was something a little more worthless than a rock." said Harry with a smirk.

Seventy-ninth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"We’ve got to do something about your 'saving the world' fetish you’ve got going on." said Sirius.

"Huh?" said Harry in shock.

"Not that definition of 'fetish'." said Sirius with a laugh. “There’s another one that works with this.”

“I hope so, I was just about ready to smack you.” said Harry with a smile.

“You’re so violent.” said Fred with mock surprise.

Eightieth paragraph.

“Okay, that is a slightly good reason, but you really should have gotten a teacher to go down instead.” said Remus.

“Well…” said Ron.

“A real teacher, not a pathetic faker.” said Remus stopping Ron quickly from finishing.

Dialogue line.

Eighty-first paragraph.

Dialogue line.

“Isn’t that nice.” said George wickedly. “He’s volunteering to go first.”

“Such a brave and senseless soul.” said Fred rapturously.

“Give the Basilisk indigestion for us!” said the twins together.

Eighty-second paragraph.

Dialogue line.
“GO RON!” said the Weasley’s together in unison.

_Eighty-third paragraph._

_Dialogue line._

“Better you than them.” said Dr. Clark.

_Eighty-fourth paragraph._

_Dialogue set, second sentence._

Harry noticed the looks of shock on the other people’s faces. “I waited till he hit bottom.” he reassured them. “That’s the first rule of a slide.” he added with a smirk.

_Eighty-fifth paragraph._

“Kept forgetting to keep my feet together.” said Ron.

“That’s okay, I just about dislocated my shoulder trying to grab onto a passing tunnel.” said Harry.

_Eighty-sixth paragraph, first sentence._

“Well, at least the Basilisk wasn’t waiting for you at the end of the tunnel.” said Sirius worriedly. “With it’s mouth open.”

“I would have liked to have not realized that little tidbit of information.” said Dr. Clark.

_Eighty-sixth paragraph, second sentence._

Several people laughed maliciously at the old Defense Against the Dark Arts teacher’s misfortune.

_End of eighty-sixth paragraph._

_Dialogue line._
“Keep your voice down!” hissed Rivers.

“Aw…I was hoping the hysterics bypassed you.” said Harry. “You hadn’t spoken in a while.”

“Terror silenced my tongue.” said Rivers meekly. “You have a very terrifying life.”

Dialogue line.

Eighty-seventh paragraph.

Dialogue line.

“It’s not easy to be quiet when your sloshing through a sewer.” said Harry.

Eighty-eighth paragraph.

“Lockhart screamed twice.” said Ron with a smirk.

Dialogue line.

“Getting around the fangs however, not a clue.” said Harry.

“One problem at a time.” said Lionus.

Eighty-ninth paragraph, first sentence, first comma.

“Not the best time to use that analogy.” said Remus.

Eighty-ninth paragraph, end of first sentence.

“Such a happy sound.” said Sirius.

“That’s nasty.” said Harry. “I understand where you’re coming from, but it’s still nasty.”

Eighty-ninth paragraph, third sentence, first comma.

The Weasley family shuddered, and all converged around Ginny.
Dr. Clark looked quickly over.

“I’m fine.” said Harry quickly.

“You are now lad. You had a weak heart.” said Dr. Nicodemus. Harry looked quickly over in shock. “The malnutrition, your cores working in overdrive just to keep that heart pumping, despite the fact you should have died by the age of seven, and the fact that I’ve told you about before.”

“Then what solved it? Or does he still have it?” asked Dr. Clark. “Why didn’t I see that in hospital when he came the time I met James?”

“The pod cured and strengthened his heart.” said Dr. Nicodemus. “And we look quite a bit deeper than what normal means do.”

Several people whimpered in fear.

“Foolish coward.” said Moody with a snarl.

“I’m going to kill him!” shouted Mr. Weasley, “First for wanting to abandon Ginny, then for tackling Ron!”

“I’ll help!” said Mrs. Weasley.
Ninety-fifth paragraph.

“Oh, no…” said Tonks.

“He didn't obliterate the boys. If he did, they wouldn’t have the faintest idea what is going on.” said Kingsley.

Dialogue set, third sentence, first dash.

“And Albus would have killed him for taking the boys down there.” said McGonagall.

“If I didn’t kill him, I’m sure the entire staff would have.” said Albus.

End of dialogue set.

"He's a dead man, after I get ahold of him." growled Remus angrily.

Ninety-sixth paragraph, ninth word.

"Oh, that's right! He's got Ron's wand! I wonder how that went?” said Charlie eagerly.

End of ninety-sixth paragraph.

Ninety-seventh paragraph, second sentence.

"Not a good thing," said Charlie worriedly.

End of ninety-seventh paragraph.

"Ron! Where did you get to?” asked Mr. Weasley as his wife sobbed.

"I was alright." said Ron trying to reassure his family, which was difficult, as both of the twins had him in an unintended choke hold.

Dialogue line.
"Sort of says that Lockhart's unconscious." said Moody with a smirk.

"Good boy." said almost all of the adults in the room.

"Kick him again, this time in the face." said Remus.

"So that means that you've tried with smaller stuff, huh?" said Seamus.

"Rocks shaped like Dudley, yeah." said Harry with a smile.

"It was my only way out, that wouldn't have been the best idea. And anything could have happened to Ron over there." said Harry.

"Kicked him again." said Ron proudly.

"You had better have had a meek and mild year this year." growled Remus.

Harry looked from side to side, and then looked back at Remus.

"Right, never mind." said Remus sheepishly.
"I didn't want to say it." said Harry looking down.

"And I didn't want to hear it." said Ron.

"I didn't want to think about losing my sister and best mate all in the same twelve hours." said Ron quietly.

"So you didn't want to die either, that's good." said Sirius wiping the sweat off his brow.

"I'm fond of living thanks." said Harry.

"What about your wand?" asked Mrs.Weasley worriedly.

"Buried under the rocks." said Ron.

"The Real Chamber of Secrets." said Severus in a hushed voice. Malfoy gulped, as well as the rest of the school.

"Just run in and grab Ginny and get the hell out of there, no sticking around." said Remus frantically.
"That was the game plan yeah." said Harry slowly. Harry then swung his legs up onto Sirius' lap.

"What's wrong? You're legs hurt again?" asked Sirius quickly.

"No, just, giving you something to hold onto, this won't be an easy chapter." said Harry.

"They never are." said Dr. Clark turning pale.

"I'll read the next one." said Lionus. "I won't faint from shock."

Chapter End Notes

Thanks for reading.
Harry looked between the six people that Harry was sitting closest to and cleared his throat.

“Um…we need to talk.” said Harry carefully.

“Bout what, cub?” asked Sirius ruffling his hair. He was so relieved that Harry had come back to the bowl, nothing could bother him.

“This chapter, can we go somewhere private?” said Harry.

“Sure, just us three?” said Remus kindly, doing his best to keep in Harry’s good books.

“No, you guys, Dumbledore and um…” he pointed to Rudolph and Leroy.

“The names you are looking for is Uncle Rudy and Uncle Lee.” said Leroy with a broad smile.

“Yeah.” said Harry rubbing the back of his white haired head, embarrassingly. “Can we go to the teacher’s lounge or something?”

“Of course, we won’t be a moment.” said Dumbledore standing up and smiling to the others in the room.

All seven of them made their way into the Teacher’s Lounge and took seats at the table. Everyone except for Harry, who stood beside the wardrobe and ran a hand down the paneling that had hidden himself and Ron from the teachers all those years ago.
“You wanted to talk to us about something Harry?” said Leroy, trying to gently prompt the boy to speak.

“This chapter…down in the chamber…things don’t go well.” said Harry quietly.

“Things never go well towards the end of any book.” said Dumbledore wisely, “Not even these sorts of books.”

Harry muttered quietly, his words unheard by the men in the room.

“What was that, Harry?” asked Dr. Clark.

“I…I almost die, I get really close.” said Harry quietly.

The room went silent.

“What did you say?” asked Dumbledore weakly. He hoped that the boy had misspoke.

“I almost died.” he repeated, “But I got help just in time.” he added reassuringly.

“Harry…” said Remus in an almost inaudible whisper, his face pale. Guilt ripping through his chest at his actions earlier.

“Was it the Basilisk?” said Dr. Clark weakly. Knuckles began to whiten as Harry nodded.

Dumbledore buried his face in his hands. “Harry..”

“I just wanted to…pre-warn you, before it…was read to you.” said Harry

“We can understand that, Harry.” said Rudolph, who was a sickly sort of green. “And we appreciate it, but do your friends know?”
“Well…I don’t remember if I ever told them that…” said Harry thoughtfully. “I didn’t want them to worry.”

“Well, they’re worrying now.” said Leroy his whole body shaking. “Should we get back to the readings? End this blasted book, like taking a Band-Aid off a wound, fast and painless.”

“Excellent idea, let’s get this over with.” said Rudolph, “Best stretch that bowl out, so we all can sit in it.” He handed a large box of tissues around the room and each adult took one, blew their nose and wiped the tears forming in their eyes.

They made their way back into the Great Hall, and were met by Ron and Hermione, standing right in front of the Great Hall’s door.

“What did you guys talk about?” asked Hermione quickly.

“Harry, you’d best tell them.” said Leroy softly.

Harry took them outside of the Great Hall, leaving everyone else sitting and wondering what was so terrible that Harry had to talk to people in private.

“Let’s stretch this bowl out, shall we?” said Rudolph, rolling up his sleeves. The men, except for Dr. Clark who just watched and was preparing to run to the nearest bathroom to throw up, lengthened and stretched out the bowl.

“Okay, now we’re just missing the green eyed terror and we’ll be all set.” said Remus with a shaky smile.

They watched as the door to the Great Hall open and in came Ron and Hermione both being supported by Harry. Hermione was weeping bitterly and Ron was deathly pale.

“Why didn’t you ever tell us?” hiccupped Hermione.
“Didn’t want to freak you guys out.” said Harry quietly.

“Come here, cub.” said Sirius holding out his arms. “We aren’t letting you get away today.”

Harry gave his friends one last hug and went to go and sit in the bowl.

“Alright, let’s get this show on the road.” said Lionus. “I’m amazed the kids didn’t want lunch.”

“We were too nauseated to even think about eating.” said Ron who was pale and shaking.

“Chapter seventeen” said Lionus loudly.

“Well…at least the nightmares will end.” said Charlie with a weak smile.

First paragraph.

“Harry, this is the one time that having a very good descriptive mind is not a good thing.” said Bill holding Ginny tightly.

Second paragraph, second sentence.

People in the Great Hall took a collective gulp.

End of second sentence.

“Damn good question.” said Charlie.

Third paragraph, third sentence.

“Good boy, very good boy.” said Rudolph as he hugged Harry’s elbow.

“I didn’t expect to be draped across you guys again.” said Harry. He was laid across the men’s lap and unable to really move.

“Again? We’ve never held you.” said Leroy, trying his hand at being funny during the current chapter. “You’ve leaned against us, yeah, but we never held you while the reading was going on.”
“I’m amazed that Dumbledore isn’t sitting over here.” said Dr. Clark with a smile.

“Best let you bond with him, I’ve had five years, the rest of you haven’t had the time.” said Dumbledore with a smile. “When the opportunity arises, I will make every effort to let my fear get the best of me and latch onto Harry’s shirt.”

“Good luck finding a piece that isn’t otherwise occupied by us.” said Sirius.

End of third paragraph.

“Did it?” said Neville with a squeak.

“Yeah.” said Fred with a low voice. “They say that the statues down there are haunted.”

“With the poor unfortunate souls of the victims of the monster.” said George.

“They stand guard over the entrance to the chamber, trying to deter people from awakening the monster that laid dormant in the chamber.” said Fred finishing on a soft voice.

“But if they fail, and the unfortunate individual continues down the gloomy path, they have no choice, but…to…” said George.

“EAT YOU!” shouted the twins in Neville’s ear. He squeaked loudly and jumped about a foot in the air.

“You guys sure aren’t helping to ease people.” said Dean.

Fourth paragraph.

Fifth paragraph, first colon.

“You are in the Chamber of Secrets, Ginny’s been captured, Ron’s stuck back there with an idiot who tried obliterate the both of you. AND YOU TAKE IN THE SITES?” said Tonks in shock.

Harry mouthed an apology to Ginny, who was too busy giggling to take offense.

Fifth paragraph, first comma.

“He wasn’t the handsomest man around.” said Dumbledore honestly.

“If he posed for that, then that’s an understatement.” muttered Ginny with a small smile.

Fifth paragraph, end of first sentence.
“I’ve got a question, why did he not pose with shoes on?” said Harry.

“He walked barefoot almost everywhere he went, he believed that shoes inhibited him from using the powers of the earth. There are some people still in this world that believe that their skin should always be in contact with the earth.” said Rudolph.

“We met two tribes of them down in Africa. One of them were pretty pleasant people, their sister tribe however, not so much.” said Leroy.

“Sad thing is, they behave the same way, same clothing style, same homes, only difference is that they’ll kill you when given half a chance.” said Rudolph.

End of fifth paragraph.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

"Wow, just like in the movies.” said Dennis in a whisper.

Dialogue set, fourth sentence, first comma.

"You didn't tell us about this part.” said Dumbledore in shock, "Never throw your wand away." he scolded Harry gently.

"Yeah, I learned my lesson pretty quickly." said Harry sheepishly.

"I can permanently fix your wand to hand if you ever have the desire to throw your wand again.” said Sirius.

Dialogue set, fifth sentence, second comma.

"You touched my face?” said Ginny blushing.

"Well...I wasn't sure if you were okay, and I sort of...slapped your face.”

"Does this mean I get a free hit?” said Ginny with a teasing smile.

"Whether it hits or not is completely up for debate." said Harry wickedly.

End of dialogue set.

"I couldn't think of it, I didn't want to think of it." said Harry clapping his hands to his ears.

"She's okay, Cub. She's fine." said Sirius.
“I just about went mad.” said Harry quietly. “It was all my fault.”

“How do you figure?” asked Ron quickly.

“I should have figured it out sooner, I should have woken up and fixed everything right away.” said Harry.

“Do you think you could have managed it?” said Remus.

“I could have tried!” shouted Harry. “I could have given up the idea of making people think that I was nothing more than a mediocre twelve year old! I could have put all my resources into finding out what the hell it was! No, I was too busy…too busy…”

“Acting like a twelve year old, and enjoying what you had at the time. It’s not your burden to solve the world’s problems, dear boy.” said Dumbledore kindly but his eyes were saddened. “I should have had half of the mental prowess you, Mr. Weasley and Miss Granger used that year. It should have been my weight to bear.”

Harry looked unconvinced.

“Wow, have you ever tried breakdancing?” asked Lee.

“What part of, ‘can’t dance to save my life’ didn’t you catch?” said Harry with a smirk.

“You could learn…” said Fred.

“I’ve tried dancing, didn’t go well for my dance partner, or teacher.” said Harry with a slight blush. “They couldn’t walk for weeks.”

“That’s when we decided to sign him up for electronic’s classes.” said Dr. Clark. “He did pretty good in that class. He managed to make a remote controlled airplane out of a pop bottle.” he said proudly.

“Who the hell would be down there?” asked a fourth year Hufflepuff.

“How long was he down there? Did the monster grab him too?” asked a second year Slytherin.

“No, he planned on being down there.” said Ron with a snarl.
“Wait? What the hell is he doing there?” asked Bill.

“He’s just a memory! What is going on?” asked Charlie.

“Wait? What the hell is he doing there?” asked Bill.

“He’s just a memory! What is going on?” asked Charlie.

“That’s disturbing, it’s like he fancies you.” said Sirius.

“Sometimes, I’m not too sure he doesn’t.” said Harry matter-of-factly.

People turned and looked at him quickly.

“What makes you say that, Mon?” asked Rudolph quickly.

“Mon?” said Harry confused.

“It was short for ‘Little Monster’.” said Leroy. “You were the absolute definition of a monster when you were a baby, running amuck here and there, well I should say crawling amuck. You would crawl right to where your favorite cookies were, reach in and grab one. And when we would catch you, you would point to us and motion that you were getting one for us, and then when we’d say that we didn’t want it, you’d point to yourself as if you were asking if you could have it.”

“Like we said, Little Monster.” said Rudolph said with a smile, “And like I said, what makes you say that?”

“Just the way he looks at me, makes me uneasy.” said Harry clutching his shoulder.

“Why does it sound like you’ve seen him a few times since?” asked Ernie.

“I’ve sort of met him one more time after this.” said Harry quietly.

“You weren’t this frantic in the last book.” said Sirius.

“Nobody was what looked like dead lying in front of me.” said Harry quietly.

Ninth paragraph.
“Wishful thinking.” snarled Remus.

“Tell me about it.” said Harry.

“Harry, wonder about that some other time!” said Bathilda Bagshot worriedly.

“Well, you got your good sense from your mother, your father would just start wandering about.” said Professor McGonagall fondly.

“I was gentle this time.” said Harry holding his hands up quickly.

“You’re asking for help? The world is doomed.” sneered Zacharias. Suddenly he was blasted back by six curses, miraculously dodging four of them and a trio of shouting adults.

“NOT THE TIME FOR THAT SORT OF HUMOR!” screeched the Weasleys and Dr. Clark.

“I thought Ron said you were tough.” said Zacharias cursing as he climbed back into his seat.

“Didn’t mean I was used to picking up unconscious people.” shot back Harry.
“That’s what happens when you throw your wand like that. Better hope that Ollivander doesn’t hear about this.” said Sirius trying to tease his gloomy godson.

Dialogue line.

Thirteenth paragraph.

“Dear lord.” said Dumbledore faintly. “Him wielding your wand could prove disastrous.”

“He doesn’t have a real body, if he were to cast, even the simplest of spells, he could have drained Harry’s wand of all it’s magical energy.” said Dumbledore.

“That is something to worry about.” said Dr. Clark weakly.

Dialogue line.

“While you’re holding Ginny? That’s impressive.” said Sirius.

“I wasn’t heavy!” said Ginny indignantly.

“You were to someone who weighed even less than you.” said Poppy gently.

Fourteenth paragraph.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

Ginny pouted and crossed her arms.

“Ginny…I…” said Harry hopelessly. “I didn’t…you weren’t…you aren’t…”

“You are on your own kid.” said Sirius with a smirk.

End of dialogue set.

Dialogue line.

“Wait, what?” said Charlie.

“That’s becoming the slogan for these books.” said George.
“Might? We can go well beyond ‘might’!” said Moody sharply.

“What do you mean; he won’t be needing it?” said Remus faintly.

“Bad feeling.” said Sirius worriedly.

“Yeah, he’s gone from Prefect and Head Boy, to stalker and pedophile.” said Charlie.

“Sounds as creepy as Lockhart.” said Dr. Clark.

“Oh, he got it, alrighty.” said Harry sourly.

“I’m going to attribute the slowness of the mind to seeing Ginny on the floor.” said Dr. Nicodemus.

“Works for me.” said Harry.
“You did what?” said Bill.

Ginny looked down shamefully.

Both Bill and Charlie grew pale.

“Who teased you?” asked Fred and George. “We didn’t tease you!”

“We certainly didn’t do it either!” said Bill and Charlie. Both Ron and Percy shuffled their feet.

“Mom, sit this one out, we’ll handle them.” said Charlie snarling.

“Ron made up for it, for coming to find me.” said Ginny quietly.

“They Percy is going to have a lot of explaining to do.” said Bill angrily.

Mr. Weasley looked at his daughter, with a sorrowful look on his face.

“I didn’t mean it Daddy.” said Ginny quickly.

“What would have gotten you to like me, Harry?” asked Ginny quietly.

“I already did like you.” said Harry with a smile. “I was a twelve year old boy, I wasn’t interested in relationship making.”
“Okay, now that’s really creepy.” said Ron.

Dialogue set, first sentence, first comma.

Ginny looked at the book in shock, and looked at Harry. He smiled slightly at her and mouthed, ‘You’re far from boring.’

Dialogue set, end of first sentence.

“Would rather listen to a little girl than an insane maniac.” muttered Harry.

Dialogue set, fourth sentence.

“Harry, you’re sounding like Sirius when he’s in his animagus form.” said Remus as he heard Harry growling fiercely.

Dialogue set, fifth sentence.

Ginny blushed a deep shade of red.

End of dialogue set.

Ginny blushed even deeper, but no one laughed, this was too serious a moment to make fun of her.

Twentieth paragraph.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

“Not everyone he needed.” said Harry with a smirk.

End of dialogue set.

“Oh, Ginny.” said Charlie worriedly.

Mr. and Mrs. Weasley were too busy sobbing into each other’s shoulders and whispering prayers to even move or take in the fact that their daughter was just fine and safe in her brother’s arms.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set, third sentence.

The school went silent. Even the fourth years and up hadn’t heard who was the one who opened the terrible chamber, they had only heard that the nightmare was over. They couldn’t believe that Ginny had been the one.

End of dialogue set.

Dialogue line.

“Yes.” said Ginny weakly.

“No you didn’t.” said Harry strongly, making Ginny jump slightly. “He controlled you, you had no idea, no choice in the matter. You didn’t do it, he only used your physical body to do it, not your soul, or your heart.”

“…Harry…” said Ginny, eye brimming with tears. Romilda scowled.

“What the hell is up with the sappy talk?” said Sirius sticking his tongue out. “You’re sounding like a love sick nut.”

Dialogue set, fifth sentence, third comma.

Harry began to growl even louder, this time his teeth baring fiercely. Strangely, his white hair began to swirl around in an unknown wind.

“Cub…?” said Sirius quietly.

“Fine, just getting a mite pissed.” said Harry angrily.

Dialogue set, seventh sentence.

“At least I thought it was paint.” said Ginny quietly.

Dialogue set, ninth sentence.

Mrs. Weasley glared at her ambitious son. “You did what?” shrieked Mrs. Weasley.
“No! I didn’t, I swear!” said Percy quickly.

End of dialogue set.

Twenty-first paragraph.

“They weren’t all that long.” said Harry with a smirk.

“Had a manicure recently?” said a sixth years Slytherin with smirk.

“No, I was nail biter, well…should say am a nail biter. Haven’t kicked the habit yet.” said Harry.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

“She was wise and strong enough for her to almost break your hold on her.” said Dumbledore sternly.

Dialogue set, fourth sentence.

“You’re right, there is some other feelings in that…thing…besides hate and bloodlust.” said Lionus with a careful voice.

End of dialogue set.

Dialogue line.

“Wow, Harry’s getting pissed, time to run for it Tommykins.” George.

Dialogue set, fourth sentence.

“He sounds like a demented fan.” said Dean.

End of dialogue set.

“Back fired on him. Didn’t trust him and went to prove him wrong.” said Harry with a smirk.
“Jerk.” said Seamus. “Framed the first available person.”

“If the current Headmaster had a brain, he never would have chosen Hagrid to be the scapegoat.” said Tempest shortly.

“Brave…sure…whatever you say.” said Lee rolling his eyes.

“Model for what? Psychos Illustrated?” said Ron.

“Huh?” asked Remus confused.

“I never did that!” said Hagrid quickly.

“I didn’t think you could, werewolf cubs are humans during the day, and during the nights without a full moon.” said Nightstrike.

“He was just inflating Hagrid’s mischief making.” said McGonagall.

“That is actually an instinct for a young half-giant, wrestling. The school should have been eternally grateful that Hagrid choose to go into the forest and play with the trolls. Imagine if he tried to tumble with the students. Madam Pomfrey would still be working on them.” said Lionus with a smirk.

“How do you know?” asked Hermione.

“One of our past Captains, called Mountain’s King, was a half giant. He told us everything about giants and half giants.” said Lionus.
“And we’ve got Atlas.” said Nightstrike, “he’s full giant, but he never talks about them.”

Dialogue set, fourth sentence.

“Dumbledore knew it right away!” squeaked Dennis quickly.

Dialogue set, fifth sentence, first pause.

“And it took three second years, one year to find it and what the monster was.” said Sirius proudly.

“Only because someone was attacked by it.” said Harry. “There were clues all over the place.”

“Quit that, we’re trying to boost your confidence here.” said Sirius playfully.

End of dialogue set.

“He could still squish you with one hand.” said Harry proudly.

Dialogue set.

“I’m not so easily beguiled by a child’s charm.” said Dumbledore with a smile.

The staff and a few of the adults looked between him and Harry quickly.

“That’s different.” said Dumbledore quickly.

“Whatsoever you say, Albus.” said Flitwick with a smile.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

“Good for you.” said Kingsley to Dumbledore.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

“Yeah, then your credibility would have been shot.” said Seamus.
“Noble work? Who’s sick and twisted mind would think that that’s noble work?” asked Lee in shock.

“You tell him Harry.” said Fred.

“No you didn’t say anything about that.” said George.

“What? Dear God.” said Dr. Clark.

“If it was your diary Ginny, without Mr. Personality in it, I wouldn’t have opened it.” said Harry kindly.

“The only thing she destroyed were the Lockhart books, for that I’m very thankful.” said Harry with a smirk.

“So…” said Hermione weakly.
“You were the fire that ignited both of the boy’s desire to find the Chamber.” said Dr. Nicodemus.

End of dialogue set.

“More like hissing at me, and saying some pretty weird stuff.” said Harry.

“Like what?” asked Seamus.

“One person said something about putting turnips and pudding in their socks to divert the weather.” said Harry.

“We must try that Fred.” said George with a solemn face.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

The Weasley family began to growl so much that it sounded like a pack of angry wolves had made their way into the castle.

End of dialogue set.

Dialogue line.

“Why are you still talking? Get her and get out!” said Leroy worriedly.

“That git still has his wand.” said Rudolph. “It’s alright Lee, he gets out of it just fine.”

Dialogue set, first sentence, second dash.

“You clever boy, hiding your power away from him.” said Wildfire with a large smile. Her smile was large and bright, which didn’t fit her occupation, nor her eyes, which looked as if she had seen many dangers.

End of dialogue set.

“The mystery of the century.” said Lionus thoughtfully.

Twenty-fourth paragraph.

“Quit mentioning the hungry eyes bit.” said Fred moaning slightly.
“What made you say that?” asked Sirius.

“If it was a memory, and he wasn’t there in person, I assumed he was dead.” said Harry.

“Sound reasoning.” said Flitwick.

Silence etched across the hall.

“Whoa.” said Dennis.

“Gee, and here I thought his mommy came up with that name.” said George.

“I thought he really was a Lord.” said Fred “Apparently, he’s only a wanna-be royal.”

“He had friends like I had a happy home life.” scoffed Harry.

“Alas, that fate has happened to several poor witches, wizards and their children. Some cannot bring themselves to believe that their husbands, wives and children could possess such wondrous abilities. Though, Tom’s mother brought that upon herself with her actions.” said Dumbledore.

“How can you say that?” said Hermione.

“Quite easily, for I just had.” said Dumbledore. “Though I didn’t mean for it to come across as though I approved of such abandonment, but she did help what had come to pass, occur.”

“What happened?” said Hermione pressed on.

“A tale for another time Miss Granger.” said Dumbledore.
“He’s not! Dumbledore’s the greatest sorcerer in the world!” said several students indignantly.

“IT didn’t make any sense, psychologically speaking.” said Harry. “He must have smacked his head really hard when he was really young. If he lost his parents, why take someone else’s? He knows what the pain is like. Unless he wants to everyone else to feel the same way.”

“Oh, that’ll piss him off.” said George.

“Harry, didn’t anyone ever tell you not to antagonize a poisonous snake?” said Fred.

Slowly a small evil smile crept across Harry’s face and he pressed his fingers together. “But where is the fun in not doing so? Though, you are right, debating with him isn’t a great idea. But I had nothing else to do, until I could come up with a way to get Ginny out of there.”

“Oh.” said Fred.

“And his past statement, was not going to go unchallenged.” said Harry darkly.

“He can be really really scary sometimes.” said George in a whisper.

“Harry’s got attitude.” said a seventh year excitedly.

“And hutzpah.” said Rudolph. “Just like what um…George?” said Rudolph.

“Fred.” corrected Leroy.

“Oh, yeah, Fred. Just like Fred said, don’t antagonize a poisonous snake.” said Rudolph.

“He started it.” said Harry in a whiny voice.

“I’ll end it.” said Rudolph with a smirk.
“That’s actually true, even Africa you’re famous, and some of those wizard tribes haven’t even left their villages at all in their lives.” said Leroy.

Dumbledore looked down humbly.

Dumbledore looked over to Harry, his eyes twice as shiny as normal. “You didn’t mention this part.”

“Didn’t seem like the time…” said Harry sheepishly.

“After what he looked like in the last book, I would know if it was an improvement or a hindrance.” said Ron.

“An ugly Voldemort would be an improvement.” said Harry with a laugh.

“No, he was forced out by the cowardice of the school governors.” said Kingsley shortly.

“Hey that’s what Dumbledore said!” said Colin.

“It worked, Riddle turned a bit paler.” said Harry.
“Alright, who brought the accordion?” said Fred putting his hands on his hips.

“What is music doing down there?” asked Charlie.

“Is that a good thing?” asked Sirius.

“Oh, yeah. It’s a really good thing!” said Harry.

“Sounds painful.” said Luna.

That same bird reappeared in the Great Hall.

“So, Fawkes went down to be with Harry?” asked Dennis.

“That he did, I couldn’t find the way down to the Chamber of Secrets, and it turns out, even if I could, I wouldn’t have been able to get inside. I gave Fawkes something that I had a feeling would come handy.” said Dumbledore.

“Good thing you had the feeling.” said Harry gratefully.

“That’s the thing you sent with Fawkes? A bundle?” said Sirius in an uneasy voice.

“Don’t knock it, it’s important.” said Harry.

“I remember him meeting Riddle once before, but he didn’t get along with him very well.” said
Dumbledore with a fond smile as he stroked Fawkes’ feathers.

“What happened?” said Neville. “Why didn’t Fawkes like him?”

“Well, he tried to take a feather without asking. Fawkes didn’t like that one bit.” said Dumbledore with a smile. “I wonder if he still has that cut on his finger?”

“What cut?” asked a first year Slytherin.

“Fawkes bit him.” said Dumbledore.

“Good birdie.” said Remus with a smirk.

Dialogue line.

“You’re a genius.” said Fred.

Dialogue line.

“I’ll admit, it was like you were standing right there.” said Harry looking up at Dumbledore, who was standing behind him.

Dumbledore smiled fondly at Harry and patted Harry on the shoulder.

Dialogue line.

“Why did you send him the school Sorting Hat?” asked Dr. Clark.

“It’s said that when a student is in danger, the Sorting Hat will give aid to the student. What aid they receive depends on the house they belong to.” said Dumbledore.

Thirty-fourth paragraph.

“Yeah, it’s a great big help.” said Tonks skeptically.

Thirty-fifth paragraph.

“That’s a terrible idea.” said Professor Sprout.
“That songbird whupped your ass.” said Harry with a beaming smile.

“He always did hold some resentment towards Fawkes since he wouldn’t let him take a feather.” said Dumbledore.

“Why did he want a feather anyway?” asked Hermione.

“Phoenix feathers are a very sought after feather for quill use.” said Dumbledore. “One feather quill could go for at least a hundred galleons.”

“A hundred galleons?” said Hermione weakly.

“Phoenixes are rare, and they don’t drop feathers all that often. Phoenix feathers have a sort of oil on the base of the feather that can either allow or forbid it to be used as a quill. If the feather was given willingly it can be used as a quill. If not, then the feather will disappear once the phoenix reaches it’s next burning day.” said Dumbledore.

“So, Riddle wouldn’t have been able to use it as a quill anyway.” said a small first year Hufflepuff.

“Correct Mr. Jacobs. He would not have.” said Dumbledore with a smile.

“Matter of fact…yeah.” said Harry.

“See?” said Harry with a smirk.

“Piss off.” said Bill.

“William!” scolded Mrs. Weasley.

“Well it seems he was informed in torture.” said Moody.
“Boy I was wrong, on both parts.” said Harry.

“Wow, Harry was going to fight dirty!” said Fred excitedly.
George wiped an imaginary tear from his eye. “We’ve taught him so much.”

“Um…should you really tell him that?” asked Tonks.

“I didn’t want to say common.” said Harry regretfully.
“That’s alright. You were just trying to piss him off.” said Remus.
“You’re a mommy’s boy, even if she isn’t around anymore.” said Leroy. “You always were.”

“Bet he loved that.” said Percy with a smirk.

“Quit arguing with him, he’ll only kill you faster.” said Remus worriedly.

“Tom at a young age was quite the narcissist. He wouldn’t have liked that.” said Dumbledore gravely.
“You love flirting with danger don’t you?” asked Dr. Clark.

“Wow, so you pulled a fast one!” said a second year Gryffindor. “You made him think that you weren’t smart!”

Hermione looked over and sent Harry a shy smile. I thought so.” she said.

“Didn’t want to notice.” said Harry grumbling.

“You made him that way!’ said Sirius angrily.

“That might not be true. Not many people admit to being a Parselmouth.” said Snape.

“Oh he does not!” said Ginny angrily.

“Thank goodness.” said Harry.

“What were you going to do?” asked Dennis.

“Well, I had an idea, if he was able to use the wand, then he was solid enough for me to attack.”
said Harry.

End of twenty-ninth paragraph.

Dialogue set.

Fortieth paragraph, first sentence, first comma.

“Stupid jerk.” snarled Parvati.

End of fortieth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

“He was no better than the other Founders.” said Madam Bones shortly.

Forty-first paragraph.

“At least he didn’t leave you.” said Madam Hooch.

Forty-second paragraph.

Forty-third paragraph.

“Oh, no. It’s…the…basilisk!” shouted the students fearfully.

Forty-fourth paragraph, first sentence.

“Oh, no. he did leave you.” said Madam Hooch worriedly.

“Oh, no. Fawkes was still there.” said Dumbledore.

End of forty-fourth paragraph.

“He can hold his own pretty easily.” said Dumbledore. “He’s quite the fighter.”

“Then why isn’t he staying?” said Sirius hotly.
“My eyes were shut.” said Harry.
“Good, keep them shut and get the hell out of there.” said Remus.
“And take Ginny with you.” said Dr. Clark.

“Wow, you’re good.” said Viper impressed.

“Dear lord, Harry’s fighting blind.” said Charlie.

“Sadistic bastard.” said Kingsley furiously.

“Harry! What happened?” asked Remus quickly.
“I cut my lip and knocked out a tooth.” said Harry. “Madam Pomfrey fixed me up.”

The men in the bowl paled horribly.
“Harry?...” whimpered Sirius.
“Tell me when it’s over!” said Dr. Clark covering his head.

“Oh no you don’t!” said Rudolph moving his hands. “If we have to sit through it, you do too.”

“We were okay?” asked Leroy weakly.

“I was sore for a bit.” said Harry honestly.

Forty-eighth paragraph, second sentence, first comma.

Several girls screamed loudly.

Sirius then leaned over and shielded Harry’s body with his own.

“I’m okay, I’m right here.” said Harry reassuringly.

End of forty-eighth paragraph.

“What is that damn thing doing?” asked Remus frantically.

Forty-ninth paragraph.

“ARE YOU NUTS?” shouted the adults in the room.

Fiftieth paragraph.

Fifty-first paragraph.

Sirius whimpered even louder.

Charlie was staring fixedly at his sister and refused to remove his gaze.

Fifty-second paragraph, second sentence.

Dumbledore smiled at the shocked looks on the people’s faces turned towards him.

“I told you that he could hold his own.” said Dumbledore happily.

Fifty-second paragraph, third sentence, fourth comma.
“HARRY!” shouted the people in the room.

“What the hell are you doing?” asked Hermione nearly scared out of her mind.

End of fifty-second paragraph.

“GO FAWKES!” shouted the students.

Fawkes looked around the room confusedly.

Dialogue line.

Fifty-third paragraph.

“Thank goodness we didn’t eat anything.” said Ron holding his stomach.

“Never thought I’d hear that come out of your mouth.” said Mr. Weasley with a small, weak smile.

Dialogue line.

“Come Harry! The eyes are gone!” said Colin.

“But the fangs were still there.” said Harry.

Fifty-fourth paragraph.

Fifty-fifth paragraph.

“That was too close!” said Hannah.

Dialogue line.

Fifty-sixth paragraph.

“What? What’s happening to the hat?” asked Tonks.

Fifty-seventh paragraph, second sentence, first comma.

“Now is not the time to pass out Harry.” said Sirius worriedly.
“Well…whaddaya know?” said Nightstrike with a smile. The hat is useful.”

“He actually said the word, sniff?” said Fred with a nervous chuckle.

“Harry, don’t say stuff like that!” said Leroy fretfully.

“That explains the burn you had on your side.” said Madam Pomfrey.

“Calming Draught time.” said Harry reaching over and grabbing a large handful of them.

“Is this the bad part?” asked Sirius turning very white.

“Yeah, chug this.” said Harry passing out the phials to everyone he could reach. He even got up and passed phials over to the Weasley family, Ron and Hermione included.

“I’m fine.” said Mrs. Weasley, despite her hands shaking.

“I’m not reading till you drink that potion.” said Lionus sternly.

Obediently, they drank the potions.
“GO HARRY!” shouted the students.
“I thought you said this was bad.” said Sirius with a deeply calmed face.

“Harry…” whimpered Remus softly.

The Hall went silent. Suddenly the bowl exploded with a horrific bang and the bowl and it’s contents were slammed into the wall.
“This again?” said Harry throwing the bowl off of himself and the rest of the men.
“Sorry, but you know…that’s a little hard to listen to.” said Dr. Clark weakly, holding his side again.
“Little?” said Remus incredulously. “He got poisoned by the most venomous snake in the history of the world! It’s…he’s….” tears began to form in his eyes.
Harry sighed, and tried squirming out of the surrounding hug that was being given to him by Sirius, Rudolph and Leroy. “I’m fine”
“Liar.” said Rudolph.
“Maybe not then, but I am now.” said Harry with a smile. “Put the bowl back upright and lets get on with the story. You guys broke through the Calming Draught quickly.”
“You nearly dying has that effect.” said Sirius still gripping Harry.
“Okay, well, let’s sit down then.” said Harry patting Sirius on the back.
“No, let’s just stand and fret.” said Leroy trying to hold Harry tightly.

The men holding him let a sharp hiss of pain.
“T-too…too late?” said Mrs. Weasley weakly.

The Hall went almost completely silent, minus the whimpers and sobs coming from random parts of the Great Hall.

“Basilisk venom can stop the body's ability to form clots and stop the bleeding after a while the body bleeds out. That way the basilisk can have the taste of blood in its mouth when they eat their prey.” said Snape quietly.

"SHUT UP!" bellowed Sirius.

"But the place where Potter was bitten, the poison would have eaten away a great hole until it went straight through his arm." said Snape, his voice getting quieter and quieter.

"I told you to SHUT UP!" said Sirius angrily.

"Oh, no...Harry..." said Mr. Weasley as he tried to console his wife.

"Wait, if Fawkes is there, he should be fine!" said Leroy excitedly.

"Damn you, you son of a bitch." muttered Leroy. But he knew that Harry got out of it okay, but that would never stop him from worrying about his little monster.
"I'd love to watch him die." snarled Sirius. “I’m talking about Voldemort.” he added quickly.

"Don't fall asleep, Harry!" yelled Hermione fearfully.

"No we didn't!" said Harry's closest friends.

"No, that snake thing did it, you just stood back and watched it try and do the job you never could." said Fred.

"You'd think the stupid twat would learn not to come after me." said Harry with a sly smile.

"WHAT?" shouted the people in the Hall. Harry noticed Ginny looking intently down at the floor. He tried to make his way down to her, thought it was a wee bit difficult, as the men were trying hard to cling to him as tightly as they dared.

He took Ginny by the hand and embraced her tightly as she jumped up and hugged him.

"What's wrong, Ginny? You still a bit nervous?" said Harry in a gentle voice. He smiled as she nodded. "I'm right here, see?" He placed a hand softly to the back of her head and held her head to his chest. "Hear that? That means I'm just fine."

Ginny smiled as she heard and felt the constant thumping of Harry's heart. Suddenly the warmth of Harry's body and beat of Harry's heart was gone. She looked up and laughed, Harry's uncles were dragging him back to where the bowl laid forgotten on the floor.

"Enough with the sappy stuff" said Sirius.

Sixty-ninth paragraph.

Seventieth paragraph, second sentence, first comma.

"How would you know?" said Professor McGonagall said in a frightened voice.

"One of the first times in the hospital...I...um...never mind." said Harry but not finishing his sentence.

Several people whimpered.

End of seventieth paragraph.

"Thank bloody god." said Rudolph heaving a sigh of relief.

Dialogue line.

Seventy-first paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"He wasn't the only one who forgot." said Harry sheepishly.

Seventy-second paragraph.

"If he had done that to start with, he'd still have his monster." said Moody.

"ALASTOR!" scolded McGonagall.

Seventy-third paragraph.

Seventy-fourth paragraph.

"Huh? I forgot all about it." said George.
Seventy-fifth paragraph, first paragraph.

"So did they apparently." said Fred.

"Just like in the cartoons!" said Dennis with a giggle.

End of seventy-fifth paragraph.

"Bout time!" said Dr. Clark happily.

Seventy-sixth paragraph, first sentence.

"Tell me that wasn't you." pleaded Leroy.

"No, it wasn't me." said Harry with a smile.

End of seventy-sixth paragraph.

Seventy-seventh paragraph, first sentence.

"Goodbye and good riddance." said Kingsley smirking.

End of seventy-seventh paragraph.

"Oh, my god! That would have happened to your arm!" shrieked Hermione.

Suddenly, the familiar little balls of light came shooting out of the book.

“NO! NOT NOW! NOT THIS! WHAT ABOUT THE BASILISK?” shouted Remus.

“We can’t be affected.” said Speckerton faintly.

“What the…” asked Leroy.

“Are these those Scattered Shots you talked about?” said Rudolph.

“Yeah, but we haven’t seen them around for a while.” said Ron.

The balls of light entered the bodies of everyone there, even Rudolph and Leroy. They all landed in a large, dank and stone walled chamber, pillars lining each side, and a large pool of water towards the end of it. But the décor didn’t attract their attention, it was the giant snake towering high above them.
“Oh…my…GOD!” screamed Tonks. They looked behind them and saw Harry running with his hands stretched out, as if he were blind.

The snake lifted its head and sent it crashing into Harry’s side, slamming him into the wall, younger Harry screamed out loud, as his back and head bounced off the wall harshly.

“You didn’t say anything about you screaming!” said Sirius accusingly.

“I didn’t expect you to watch it firsthand.” said Harrys quickly. The basilisk pulled its head back slowly and opened its jaws and prepared to swallow the stunned boy whole.

Sirius rushed over and did his best to shield Harry from the giant beast, he wasn’t the only one, every adult and Weasley rushed over and did the same thing.

Suddenly, they saw Fawkes come swooping out of nowhere and use its talons and beak to gouge out the eyes of the giant basilisk.

They watched in horror as the phoenix continued its calculating attack, so much so that they didn’t even notice that younger Harry had already crammed the tossed Sorting Hat on his head.

“Hurts more than it looks.” said Harry smiling at the younger version of himself as it staggered.

They watched as Harry slowly made his way towards the Basilisk and raised the sword almost parallel to the ground.

“I can’t watch this.” said Leroy covering his eyes, but he allowed himself to look through the cracks in his fingers.

Younger Harry swung the sword swiftly and managed to slash at the nose of the basilisk, which sadly, only made it angrier.

“Harry! Your side!” said Hermione. “It’s tongue cut your shirt!”

“We covered this in the book.” said Harry shaking his head.

The Watchers ignored Tom’s psychotic cheering on the monster, which was getting harder by the minute. The basilisk lunged again and Harry met its fangs with the blade in his hand. But as the basilisk’s fang sank deeper into his arm…

“AHHHHHRRRGGGG!” screamed Harry, his head reared back and his eyes clenched in pain.

“HARRY!” screamed the Watchers. They paid the dying basilisk no heed and rushed to Harry as he fell slowly to the fall along the wall.

“Harry…oh my god…Harry.” said Dumbledore, tears falling from his eyes.

“Um…I’m right here.” said Harry with a raised brow.

“We know Harry, but…” said Sirius weakly.

“You’ve got to understand it from our point of view.” said Rudolph.

“YOU’RE DYING RIGHT IN FRONT OF US AND WE CAN’T DO A THING TO HELP YOU!” screeched Hermione.

Harry stared at her, “Fawkes doing a great job if you ask me.” said Harry pointing. They looked back at the younger Harry and saw Fawkes, his healing tears falling slowly off his beak and landing on the wound. Suddenly the balls of light left their bodies, and they found themselves back in the Great Hall.

“That…that was horrible.” said Neville weakly.

“Captain?” asked Tempest from her post. Strangely, Umbridge wasn’t thrashing about, all she was doing was sitting there and staring at the floor.

“Doctor?” said Lionus looking at Dr. Nicodemus.

“I’ve got a phial of his blood already here.” said Doctor Nicodemus pulling out a small crystal phial of a red liquid. “Should be excellent for what I need.”

“What do you want his blood for?” asked Remus quickly.

“Phoenix tears heal the wounds and are an antidote for basilisk venom and other poisons. But the tears do not take the basilisk poison out of your system. The venom stays in your body for the rest of your life. Turning it into your advantage.” said Dr. Nicodemus.

“What are you trying to say?” asked Fred.

“If Harry ever gets poisoned by another basilisk, he has nothing to worry about, he’s forever immune to it.” said Lionus with a smirk. “And the reason we want the blood, is so we can make our officers immune to it as well. That will take a large load off of Icarus.”

“Who’s Icarus?” asked George.

“He’s our phoenix.” said Nightstrike. “And he gets overworked at times. So this will help him out immensely.”

“So if Harry’s immune to it…” said Sirius thoughtfully.

“Voldemort is immune to it as well.” said Harry.

“Well so much for going down there, grabbing a fang and stabbing him in the face with it and watching him die.” said Remus.

“Let’s get this over with, my poor nerves can’t take much more.” said Leroy, reaching for a phial of calming draught.

“Good thing I had St. Mungos send some more over.” said Snape with a smirk.

Seventy-eighth paragraph, first sentence.

"Oh, lord, you hate that stuff too? I cannot stand that damn stuff." said Leroy.

"The plant part is fine, but not the traveling aspect." said Rudolph.

End of seventy-eighth paragraph.
"Don't hurt yourself again!" said Tonks.

Seventy-ninth paragraph, second sentence.

"Thank goodness!" said Charlie.

Seventy-ninth paragraph, fourth sentence, first comma.

"I didn't have the faintest idea what the heck that monster was." said Ginny quietly.

Seventy-ninth paragraph, fourth sentence, third comma.

"I thought you were dying there for a moment." said Ginny.

Seventy-ninth paragraph, end of fourth sentence.

"I could tell that you were freaking out about that one." said Harry.

End of seventy-ninth paragraph.

"Poor Ginny." said Sirius with a sort of compassion that he hadn't shown anyone else besides Harry.

Dialogue set.

"You weren't to blame dear, little one. You had no control over what you did." said Dumbledore kindly.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

"I was still a little weak from the loss of blood and Ginny was still a woozy." said Harry.
"If they had blamed you for anything, they would have another thing coming," said Harry.

"My sentiments exactly." said Dumbledore.

"Why did you make her go ahead of you?" asked Remus.

"She wouldn't stop staring at the blood on my robes." said Harry.

"Thank goodness all that excitement is over." said Kingsley wiping the sweat off his brow.

"What did it say?" asked Ginny.

"For some strange reason, it said Thank you." said Harry.

"I believe that that might have been Salazar, thanking you for saving what little honor was left to him." said Dumbledore.

"Ron's still hard at work." said Mr. Weasley proudly.

"Well, yeah, it was the only thing that kept me going." said Ron sheepishly. "And other than kicking the daylights out of Lockhart, I had nothing better to do with my time."

"How about getting a competent teacher?" asked Bathilda.

"Couldn't get up the tunnel." said Ron shrugging.

"I was busy trying a lug a boulder out of the way." said Ron.
"I was impressed, I wouldn't have been able to do that much in that short amount of time." said Harry.

"How long was Harry down there?" asked Remus.

"Only about forty minutes or so." said Ron.

"I never hugged her so tight in my life." said Ron with a smile.

"I could hardly breathe." said Ginny.

"How could he miss a giant flaming bird?" asked George.

"He can erupt into flames and appear anywhere in the world he chooses." said Dumbledore slightly proud. “He would not have had to pass Ron to get to where Harry was.”

"Squeezing?" asked Sirius with a smirk. "You could stroll through a keyhole."

"I had to carry a hat, book and sword, squeezing was required." said Harry.

"Every hero has a sword." said George.

"Hang on, you focused on the sword, but the blood didn't catch your eye?" said Fred.

"I thought it was from whatever he fought back there." said Ron.
"I didn't notice her crying, I just wanted to know what the hell happened." said Ron.

"Why do you care?" asked Sirius in a confused voice.

"Didn't want to make a second trip down there." said Harry.

"Dear God shoot me." said Remus.

"Dazzle Gums can't sing." said Sirius.

“When justice happens, it’s wonderful.” said Charlie.

“He deserves more than that.” said Remus with a growl.

“You rule Ron!” said a third year Gryffindor, laughing so hard that he fell out of his chair.

Ron perked up and puffed out his chest proudly.

“Do we have to cover this again?” asked Harry with a groan.
“You should have said, ‘Yeah, you do.’” said Sirius.

“That’s why I looked at Harry, I wanted to, but Harry looked a bit tense and didn’t want to push it.” said Ron.

“I couldn’t believe you were asking me that.” said Ron.

“I was devoting my time trying to think of a way to stay alive.” said Harry with a smirk. “Wasn’t thinking how we were going to climb the miles back to the castle.”

“I didn’t think he could lift everyone. He was really light when he landed on my shoulder, and us three weighed a little bit more than the idiot decorating the floor with rocks, was.” said Harry.

“Wow, you guys do think alike don’t you?” said Bill with a laugh.

“I decided to trust him, which wasn’t very hard to do.” said Harry.

“Aww! Does that mean that you get to hold his hand?” said Tonks cooing.
“This is wonderful!” said Dr. Clark laughing hard.

“Well, damn.” said Tonks.

“I didn’t want her to lose her grip on me. Ron would hold onto her, he was stronger than I was.” said Harry.

“I would not have put a sharp, pointy object near there.” said Sirius.

“Us either.” said the twins.

“Did you burn yourself dear?” asked Bathilda, Mrs. Weasely would have said it, but she was too busy hugging her two youngest tightly.

“I had light burns, but Fawkes helped me out again.” said Harry.

“Oh, sweet Merlin…” groaned Moody.

“It was a lot of fun, actually. Despite the slow burning.” said Harry.

“Must be an unconscious thing.” said Dean with a snicker.
“Thanks for caring.” said George.

“She was disappointed?” said Remus in shock.

“She’s got a crush on Harry.” said Ron with a smirk.

“She sort of pulled a Ginny though.” said Hermione.

“What do you mean?” asked Ginny quickly.

“She still wants to be with him, but she’s settling down a bit.” said Hermione.

“How would a living person date a dead one?” asked Sirius.

“Do you get a choice to come back as a ghost?” asked a third year Slytherin.

“Well...in a way.” said Dumbledore. “It all depends if you are ready to pass on. If not, you may come back as a ghost.”

“I don’t think I’d want to hang around as a ghost.” said Harry thoughtfully. The men surrounding him looked at him quickly.

“You’d leave us?” said Sirius in a whimper.

“Would you stick around, or would you go to wherever dad and mom are?” questioned Harry.

“Good point, but...don’t be in too big of a rush to see them.” said Remus with a constricted voice.

“I was trying to be funny!” said Ron defensively.
“And there I learned it didn’t work.” said Ron.

Dialogue line, first sentence.

“See, and I thought she needed some attention.” said Ron.

End of dialogue set.

Ninety-second paragraph.

“How did he know to go there?” asked Michael.

“He can find me, wherever I go.” said Dumbledore.

End of chapter.

“Forget knocking, just walk in. You deserve a little leniency from good manners.” said Fred.

“Only one chapter left, should we press on?” asked Seamus looking the thinness of the book in the Ranger Captain’s hands.

Suddenly, a scroll blossomed once more from the book.

“My guess would be, no.” said Lionus as the bright light enclosed around them.

Chapter End Notes

Thanks for reading.
The Keep

Chapter Notes

I don't own Harry Potter

See the end of the chapter for more notes

The Watchers were deposited just outside of a neat house, which mirrored all the other houses next to it. The only difference was that the lawn and garden was absolutely pristine.

“Hang on…we’re at Privet Drive.” said Dean aloud. “What’s a good memory doing here?”

“I’ve had some…not a lot…but some.” said Harry kindly.

“Yeah, and I’m Chinese Fireball.” said Charlie rolling his eyes.

“The garden looks beautiful.” said Professor Sprout.

“No doubt Potter did it, I cannot see Petunia getting her hands dirty for anything.” sneered Snape.

They saw a younger Harry walk out of the door of Privet Drive and call into the house.

“I’m done with the chores and made your lunch, I’ll be back soon.” said Harry.

“Wow, they let you do that?” asked Ron in shock. “How did you manage to get away with that?”

“If this is when I think it is, it was a few days since I went to get the Dragon’s Eyes. They were still reeling from Hagrid’s visit at the hut on the rock.” said Harry with a bright smile up to Hagrid.

“Glad I could help.” said Hagrid beaming back down to the white haired lad.

The scene shifted and they found themselves in a small pub, there were only a small handful of people in there, sitting at a booth towards the back of the pub, talking amongst themselves. The Watchers noticed that the sign on the door said ‘Closed’.

“Hang on, how are these people in here, if the place is closed?” asked Lee.

“They work here. They’re prepping the food.” said Harry. “Though it doesn’t look like it now.”

“Then why are we here, do you work here?” asked Hermione.

“Not always, just a few times a month or so.” said Harry. "Only during the summer and whenever I can manage to get away from the Dursley's. Which wasn't much time the next two years after this."

“So, you gave up with the whole Mission Impossible thing?” said Dean with a disappointed tone to his voice.

“No, I’m still doing that. Like I said before, if this is the day I think it is, it has something to do with it.” said Harry with a smile.

Then the door to the kitchen opened up and Harry came out with a large serving tray, with a silver
“What are you doing here?” asked Sirius.

“I’m trying out a new recipe.” said Harry.

“What have you come up for us this time?” asked one of the men in the booth.

“Something I came up with last night, I call it “Sunken Treasure.” said Harry with a smile as he lifted the silver cover. Inside was what looked like eight giant clams.

“What are they?” asked Remus.

“What are they?” asked one of the women in the booth. Remus slammed his elbow into Sirius’ side, after he sniggered.

“They’re cakes!” said Harry. “Lift the top of the clam, and see what’s inside.” said Harry excitedly.

The people in the booth lifted the top of the clam and saw that it was indeed a sort of soft cake. Inside was a creamy pink custard and a white pearl sitting carefully on top.

“See, it can either be strawberry or cherry custard, and each will have a sugar pearl in the middle.” said Harry opening his own.

“That’s pretty ingenious.” said Leroy, a slight frown on his face.

“Uh, oh.” said Rudolph, “Someone might have finally met a challenger…” he smiled wickedly.

“What do you mean?” asked Blaise.

“Leroy is a culinary master. There isn’t a person we know that knows more about food than Lee.” said Rudolph with a smile. “He gets sort of jealous sometimes, if someone else comes along.”

“I do not!” said Leroy angrily.

“You do too, don’t deny it.” said Sirius with a laugh, he laughed even harder when Leroy crossed his arms and pouted. "Azkaban couldn't take away that memory of you trying to sabotage Lily's pecan pie."

The people in the pub finished off the clams and sat back completely filled with the delicious cakes and custard.

“That was delicious. It’s definitely something that has to go on the children’s menu.” said one of the men that happened to be wearing an apron.

“He’s one of the cooks.” said Harry with a smile. "He taught me how to make a really awesome shepherd's pie, haven't mastered it completely yet, though."

“Forget that, it’s going on the regular one.” said one of the waitresses.

"She's one of my cooking fans." said Harry with a slight blush.

“Now, you better tell us all about how that last job went.” said one of the waiters excitedly.

“But I’ve already told you.” whined Harry.
“Tell us again, Harry, they’re always so exciting!” said one of the waitresses.

“You told them about it?” asked Remus.

“Sure, the Inspector told me I should have a alibi ready in case it’s a trap and they're just out for revenge or something.” said Harry.

“So...he's playing both sides of the law.” said Lionus with a smirk.

“What I do is legal, they tell me to come in, they just don't unlock the front door.” said Harry with a smile.

So Harry sat down and told them what had happened, and it turned out, he described what had happened in the last scroll.

“Aww, come on! You could have told a different story.” said Fred pouting slightly.

Suddenly, a loud banging knock came at the door.

“Who the heck is that?” asked said one of the waiters standing up and walking towards the door.

He came back and was followed closely by a young woman, who was obviously distraught.

“Emily? What’s wrong?” said one of the waitresses worriedly.

“I…It's…” said Emily frantically.

“What is it?” one of the waiters.

“It’s my Aunt’s necklace! It was stolen!” said Emily.

“Have you called the police? Haven’t they been able to figure out who took it?” said Harry quickly.

“Who’s he?” said Emily calming down enough to look about and seeing Harry for the first time.

“He’s...he’s uh…” said one of the waiters.

“So, this Emily person doesn’t know who you are?” asked Hermione.

“No, just the people who work here.” said Harry. “She’s friends with one of the waiters.”

“I did call the police, and they did find the person that has it, but the man said that my mother sold it to him, he has a bill of sale and everything! But she would never sell that! Especially for the price he said she got.” said Emily finally answering Harry's question

What was it?” asked one of the cooks.

“A thousand pounds!” said Emily.

“That’s a heck of a lot, are you sure she didn’t sell it?” said one of the waitresses.

“No! That necklace has been passed down in my family for over two hundred years! It’s priceless!” said Emily. “A thousand pounds isn’t even enough to take care of the solid gold chain! The strange thing is, when Mother checked the bank balance, there was the thousand pounds!”

“So what's the name of the guy who stole your necklace?” said Harry from the back.
Suddenly, a telephone rang from behind the counter. The barkeep went behind the counter and answered the phone.

“Hello? Yeah, he’s here. Harry! It’s for you?” shouted the barkeep. Harry walked up to the counter and took the phone from the older man. Suddenly, a faint buzzing entered the Watchers’ ears.

“What the heck is this?” said Draco, covering his ears.

“It’s…a telephone call.” said Hermione in awe.

“Hello?” said younger Harry.

“Harry, I’ve got a job for you.” said a familiar voice.

“Hey! That’s the Inspector’s voice!” said Colin.

“Does it have something to do with a necklace?” said younger Harry quietly with a small smile.

“Okay, how’d you figure that part out?” said the Inspector, his voice sounding amused.

“Miss Emily came in and told the people here at ‘The Keep’ what had happened.” said Harry.

“I see, well…meet me at the pond in the park. I’ll clue you in on the details.” said the Inspector.

“Sure thing sir, happy to help.” said Harry as he hung up the phone. The faint buzzing disappeared.

Soon, the scene shifted again and they found themselves at a large park, with a calm pond in the center, little ducks waddling about, the ones on the water dipped their bills into the water and coming up with little bits of water grass. There on a bench, staring out onto the water was Inspector Homes.

“Thanks for coming, Bud.” said the man standing up and shaking Harry’s hand. “Haven’t seen you about in a while, I had something all planned for your birthday, and you never showed up.” he said with a smile.

“The Dursleys…decided to go for a…road trip.” said Harry.

“And they took you with them? That’s a shocker.” said Inspector Homes.

“Well…” said Harry looking slightly uncomfortable.

“You’re not telling me something again.” said Inspector Homes with a stern look.

“Well, my parents signed me up for a certain school before they died and the Dursleys didn’t want me to go. It’s a boarding school and they wouldn’t have me to do all the cooking and gardening. So they tried outrunning the…the representative from finding me and telling me that I was to go to their school.” said Harry with a smile.

“Don’t the Dursley's get to decide where to send you?” asked Inspector Homes, slightly confused.

“It was my parents’ wishes that I get sent to that school, and I’m sort of really excited to go.” said Harry. “I’ll finally be away from the Dursleys, at least for most of the year.”

The Inspector looked sideways quickly, his face clouded, but then turned his head back towards the small boy with a forced smile. “Well, as long as your happy…but if you ever want to come back, just give me a call, I’ll come and fetch you….where is this school of yours?”

“Scotland, I believe.” said Harry sitting down on the bench.

The Inspector blinked, “Well, I’ll still come and get you anyway.” he said with a smile. “You just let me know if you get homesick.”

“I can send you letters in a different sort of way.” said Harry with a bright smile. “That way I don’t homesick much.”

“Well, you were doing moderately well about not telling anyone about us.” drawled Snape.

“I don’t think he’d believe me if I tried.” said Harry.

“How’s that?” asked the Inspector.

Younger Harry looked up into the tree and called Hedwig’s name. From the higher branches, she came fluttering down.

“This is Hedwig, she’s brilliant.” said Harry proudly, “This way, I don’t have to wait on the postman to come, and she can make the trip in a blink of an eye.”

The Inspector stared at Hedwig and then at Harry. “Harry, where did you find her?”

“We sort of found each other. Hedwig, this is Inspector Homes.”

She looked up at him and landed lightly on his shoulder, giving his ear an affectionate nip.

“I’ve never seen an owl behave like this.” said the Inspector hesitantly stroking the top of Hedwig’s head. “Well, alright then…”

“Now about this necklace…” said Harry.

“Right, well, the person that took it, you know all too well.” said Inspector Homes, he watched as Hedwig flew back into the tree she had come down from.

“Not Mr. Buckthorn…” groaned Harry.

“The very same, we found out that the bill of sale was forged and bullied him into admitting that he took it. He's sitting in a jail cell, but there’s a problem with getting the necklace back.” said Inspector Homes.

“He keeps sending forgeries huh?” said Harry.

“Right on the nose, we sent the one his lawyer said it was to Miss Emily, the real owner and she said it wasn’t it. Though a jeweler said the necklace itself was worth about a thousand pounds, she said it wasn’t it. I think the necklace in question is still in Buckthorn's house. So? Do you remember how to go about the place.” said Inspector Homes.

“Like those gossiping ladies down at the supermarket say, you always remember your first.” said Harry with a smirk.

The scene shifted once more and they found themselves back at ‘The Keep.” The wait staff and the cooks were gathered about once more at one of the booths, trying to console Emily. The girls noticed that Emily was wearing something different, so they knew this was a different day.
“This was the next day.” said Harry with a smirk to the boys who hadn’t noticed Emily's clothes.

“Aw! Come on! I want to see you do awesome stuff again!” said George pouting.

Suddenly the police Inspector came in, with Harry lagging behind. They watched as Harry dodged behind the counter.

“Miss Emily, I have your necklace, and we took it to the jeweler, this time, he matched it perfectly to the picture you gave us.” said Inspector Homes.

“Just to double check.” she said with a choked voice, she took the necklace gently and turned it over. “Yes! This IS it! It has my teeth marks on the gold!”

“There’s what?” said the Inspector In shock.

“I accidentally gnawed on the gold when I was little, it was the worse paddling I ever got, but here they are!” said Emily. “They weren’t on any of the copies.”

“What about that guy that took it?” said one of the waiters. “What are you going to do about him?”

“He's already in jail for having stolen objects in his possession.” said the Inspector with a smirk.

“Thank you so much!” said Emily happily.

“Don’t thank me, we had help.” said the Inspector. His eyes flittered over to the counter, where Harry was crouched down, hiding behind it with a satisfied smile on his face.

Suddenly the light enveloped them once again.

Chapter End Notes

Thanks for reading!
They were all deposited back into the Great Hall without much trouble, much like all the times before.

"Are you serious?" said one of the first years. "We have to wait till tomorrow to finish the book?"

"Actually, if you remember last week, I said that we would not be doing any reading on the weekends," said Dumbledore smiling brightly.

"It's Friday, isn't it?" said Ernie sadly.

"That it is. No readings on the weekend, that way we have two days to stretch our legs and perhaps some of the teachers can issue some essay or something along those lines for the students to work on." he gave a sympathetic smile to the students that groaned.

"Can't we just read in the morning?" said one of the second years.

"Well, we could, but then that would cut into your Hogsmeade time." said Dumbledore with a bright smile.

"Our...what?" said one of the second years. "We aren't third years."

"Yes, but last night, it was discussed with the staff and some of our guests that we ask some of the adult guests here to be chaperones for Saturday. Sunday is the day, that they can have off and unfortunately the Hogwarts second years and under are required to stay within the grounds." said Dumbledore his eyes twinkling.

"How soon can we send owls, to our parents asking for some money for tomorrow?" asked the second year excitedly.

"Don't worry, we already sent the notices." said McGonagall. "Most of you will receive money in the morning and the rest of you; we have taken some money out of the funds for muggleborns, that money can be reimbursed later."

"Awesome!" shouted the younger students happily.

"Alright!" said Leroy happily. "Harry! Tomorrow when we go, I'm going to tell you all about our travels down in Africa!"

"Um..." said Harry uncomfortably.

"He's got a date, and then early Sunday, I'm going to take him to the eyeglass shop in Diagon Alley." said Lupin with a small smile.
"Oh..." said Leroy sadly.

"I've got no plans for later on Sunday." said Harry quickly.

"Great than we can drag you about the place and be a happy, happy family." said Rudolph with a bright smile.

Harry looked over at Ron and Hermione.

"Save me." he whined piteously.

"You're on your own." said Ron with a straight face.

Harry had turned in early so he and Ginny could get up and head off to Hogsmede. While Harry slept soundly, Leroy, Rudolph, Remus, Dr. Clark, Sirius and Dumbledore sat in the sitting room of Harry, Sirius, Remus and Dr. Clark's suite.

"I can't believe how grown up Harry is." said Leroy sadly. "It seems like only yesterday that I was feeding him mashed peas."

"Yeah, and now he can out-cook almost anyone." said Sirius with a smile.

"He grew up way too fast. He should have had a happy childhood." said Dr. Clark bitterly.

"Damn them Dursley's." said Sirius angrily.

"I should have seen it, I should have known it." said Dumbledore, tears falling down into his beard.

"Unless you yourself struck him, I don't have any grudge against you." said Rudolph waving his hand dismissively to Dumbledore. "What's happened happened. We're as much to blame as you are, we should have stayed in the country when Voldemort was out and about before. If we had stayed, we would have gotten custody of Little Monster."

"But the blood wards..." said Dumbledore bitterly.

"Would have worked with us. James laid down his life for Harry too. He had a chance to run, and he didn't. But like I said, we should have stayed back and made sure they were safe." said Leroy.

"I didn't think of James' sacrifice..." said Dumbledore faintly.

"Can we talk about something else?" said Sirius slamming his wine glass down on the table.

Remus looked at Sirius, "How many glasses have you had?"

"Only two." he said honestly. "But, if we talk about....I'm going to have another."

"Well, what do you want to talk about?" asked Leroy.

"Well, we aren't done finishing the designs on Harry's wing." said Sirius whipping out a stack of designing books.

"Like a kid in a candy store." said Remus shaking his head.

"Oh! Let me at them! Have you designed the kitchen yet?" said Leroy quickly taking the papers
"Well sort of, here's what we thought." said Remus handing Leroy the drawings. Leroy flipped through the drawings and the small pictures of different appliances.

"How did we do?" asked Sirius with a smile.

Leroy chewed his tongue slightly. "How about I take over this one room?"

"What's wrong with the way it is now?" asked Remus wonderingly.

"Well, you've got two different types of wood for the cabinets, and different stone for each of the countertops, and the metal doesn't match." said Leroy with a sympathetic smile.

"Oh, oops." said Sirius sheepishly. Didn't know it had to match...

"Did Harry decide what sort of stove he wanted? Does he want electric or gas?"

"This is a surprise." said Dr. Clark. "What's the best thing to cook with?"

"Well, it all depends on your cooking style. Gas gives you more control, but electric is a bit faster." said Leroy thoughtfully.

"So go with gas?" said Sirius.

"Yeah." said Leroy.

"What other rooms do you have for him?" asked Rudolph.

"Well, we have a music room, kitchen, huge bedroom, library, his own living room, bathroom...I don't think we came up with any other room for him." said Sirius ticking off the rooms they had already discussed and planned.

"How about a training room?" said a voice from behind them. They turned around quickly and saw Lionus and Moody.

"Hello Lionus, Alastor, a good idea to have that. Especially if Harry wishes to continue his security testing." said Dumbledore with a smile.

"Well, unless that old hag has destroyed it with kittens and pink fluff, there is a large gym in the north part of the house." said Sirius.

"She'd most likely would have trashed it." said Remus with a grim look.

"Yay, oh well, it won't take much to get all that stuff back." said Sirius shrugging.

"So what brings you guys here?" asked Leroy looking back at the two champions of justice.

"Oh, right, I've got Wildfire and Viper willing to escort the children around Hogsmede from Slytherin and Gryffindor." said Lionus with a smile. "They should be able to handle them with no problem."

"Tonks and Kingsley are going to show the Ravenclaws and Hufflepuffs about." said Moody. "Tonks volunteered for the job pretty quickly, Kingsley took a bit of time."

"I would have thought he was going to jump at the occasion, he actually likes being a mentor to
"Teaching Auror skills is one thing, but minding a bunch of little kids doing some frivolous sweet shopping?"

"Oh, right." said Remus with a smile. "Poor guy."

"Glad you think that, because Tonks volunteered you to help with the Hufflepuffs." said Moody with a smirk.

"Wait, what?" stuttered Remus.

"That's a large bunch, and as....accident prone as she is....best have someone else there to keep an eye on her as well." said Moody.

"Oh...uh...Sirius and I..." said Remus quickly.

"Don't drag me into this." said Sirius throwing up his hands. "Besides, it's been a long time since you've had a date."

"Not much of a date when you're chaperoning students about town." said Remus through gritted teeth.

"Make do with what you have." said Dr. Clark with a mischievous smile. "Dumbledore and I are going to get all the stuff for the house, could the both of you come with us?" said Dr. Clark to Leroy and Rudolph.

"Sure, but...aren't you MIA?" said Rudolph.

"We fixed that right up." said Lionus with a smirk. "We made it so that he was found by neutral powers and he's in the hospital undergoing treatment, only the military have authorization to know it."

The next morning Harry made his way down to the kitchens, very, very early in the morning, he left the castle while the dawn had just began to stain the dark sky, came back and prepared a picnic basket full of different foods. He had the whole day planned out, and he hoped that it would at least go close to plan.

He was going to meet Ginny up in the Great Hall and they were going to have a quiet breakfast alone, then go to wandering about for a while, stop in at the Three Broomsticks for a pint or two of butterbeer, hit Honeydukes for a shopping spree of chocolate and sweets, and then go for their picnic. After that, the rest of the day would be up to Ginny.

As he placed the last piece of fried chicken in the basket the door to the kitchen and in walked in Bill and Charlie.

"Hey, how's it going?" said Harry happily, as he gently placed a small towel on top of the basket.

"We want to talk to you, before you leave for Hogsmeade." said Bill his voice stern.

"Alright, sit down or stand up chat." said Harry with cautious smile.

"Either way." said Charlie.
Harry placed the basket down and sat on one of the stools. Bill and Charlie sat across from him and stared fixedly at him.

"We want to give you fair warning." said Bill.

"You hurt our sister or try anything funny with her, as young as she is," said Charlie.

"We'll kill you." said the both of them together.

Harry stared at them in shock. But did his absolutely best to reassure the two men that he viewed as older brothers.

"I promise, nothing will happen, and I won't hurt her. If I do, kill me all you want." said Harry honestly.

"We'll hold you to that." said Charlie, and with that, they left.

Harry released a sigh of relief. "Thank bloody god I have some morals. Or I'd be a dead man. And without magic, I'd be screwed twenty times over." He finished off preparing the basket and then headed up to the Great Hall.

After Harry and Ginny had a quick breakfast, quicker than Harry even expected, due to the glares that he received from Percy and a few small glares from Ron. Ron's glares were stopped soon afterward, after a smack from Hermione. Harry hadn't noticed that Ginny received a few glares of her own, from Romilda and a few other girls.

Harry and Ginny walked down to the small village nestled safely beneath the grandeur of the castle. They walked arm and arm and chatted candidly with each other.

"C'mon, tell me what's in the basket!" whined Ginny playfully. "What are we having for lunch?"

"Not telling." said Harry with a bright smile.

They wandered about aimlessly, pointing at the things in the shop windows. Out of the corner of his eye, he noticed two separate shadows that followed him, He saw Sirius's foot behind a tree and saw the glinting of Bill's earring.

"Something up?" asked Ginny.

"Nope, everything's fine." said Harry smiling genuinely down at Ginny. "What do you want to do? It'll be another half-hour till Three Broomsticks opens up. I'd kill for a butterbeer right now."

"Mmm, me too." said Ginny closing her eyes dreamily. "Let's see, mind if we head to the Gladrags? I've got a potion stain on my robes."

"House-elves couldn't get it?" said Harry in shock.

"This sort of potion burnt a hole right through the sleeve of my robes." said Ginny.

"Hiccup solution?" said Harry.

"Hiccup solution." said Ginny.

They entered Gladrags, and Harry stopped Ginny from walking over to the second hand robe section.
"Nuh uh." he said with a smile. "Call it really belated Valentine gift." he led her over to the more stylish robes.

"They don't meet the Hogwarts' dress code, Harry." said Ginny with a shy smile.

"We can wear whatever we want on the weekends, whether we read this damned books on my life or not." said Harry with a smile. "Pick out whatever you want."

Harry and Ginny took about a half hour in that shop and when they left, they left with two bags each of clothes, they both held onto the basket as they made their way to the Three Broomsticks.

"We're going to pick up a few bottles of butterbeer for our lunch and then stop at Honeydukes." said Harry with a smile. They walked towards the door but a wizard beside the entrance to the Three Broomsticks, held out his hand to stop them.

"Sorry kids, no children allowed in there today." said the man holding out his hand and stopping them a sneer on his face.

"Then why is there a Hogwarts crest on the door?" said Harry.

"What?" said the man, his sneer faltering slightly.

"The crest, that means that kids are allowed in there. That's the way it has been since this place was built and kids have been allowed in." said Ginny.

"Maybe they've forgotten to take the sign down?" said the man trying to make a comeback.

"It's a magical crest, it comes down when Madam Rosemerta wants it down." said Harry.

"LOOK!" said the man angrily, "no kids allowed!" suddenly he brought a wand up to the air and was about the swing it back down. However, he was stopped by Ginny's disarming spell and Harry's swift round-house kick to his legs.

Suddenly, Madam Rosemerta came stomping out of the pub. "What's going on?" said Madam Rosemerta, and then she looked down and saw who it was on the ground.

"You again? I've told you I don't want you in my pub! What are you doing here?" said Madam Rosemerta irritably.

"He said that Hogwarts students weren't allowed here. Yet, there is the crest." said Harry pointing to the crest on the door.

"Of course he would stop the students from coming in here. I do most of my best business on these days." said Madam Rosemerta crossly. "Get out of here! Jack, Robert!" said Madam Rosemerta calling into the pub. Two large and beefy wizards came out of the pub and looked down at the man lying on the ground.

"Yeh need something Rosie?" asked one of them.

"Get him out of here, I don't care where you take him." said Madam Rosemerta.

"Here's his wand." said Ginny handing it to the man.

"C'mon in kids, your drinks are on me." said Madam Rosemerta appreciatively.

Harry and Ginny sat in one of the booths towards the back of the pub and smiled at each other.
"Well, adds a bit of excitement to today doesn't it?" said Harry with a smile.

"With you, as magically drained as you are, I don't think excitement is a good idea. That's what I thought anyway. That was a really awesome looking kick." said Ginny.

"I thought that your Expelliarmus spell was excellent." said Harry with a beaming smile.

"Learned from the best." said Ginny with a smile.

"So did I." said Harry, giving credit where credit was due.

"Here's your butterbeer kids. Anything else I can get you?" said Madam Rosemerta.

"Can we get a few bottles for later, we're having a fall picnic after this." said Harry reaching into pocket.

"Like I said kid, on the house, you'll have six bottles when you leave here." said Madam Rosemerta giving him a wink.

"What was that guy's problem, anyway?" asked Ginny sipping her butterbeer.

"Old boyfriend, he thinks that women shouldn't be running a business. Thinks we should be in the home, cooking cleaning and serving men." said Madam Rosemerta.

"Smack him." said Harry and Ginny together.

"Oh, I have. And now Jack and Robert smack him about when he comes around." said Madam Rosemerta with a satisfied smile.

After they enjoyed their pint of butterbeer each, they expressed their thanks to Madam Rosemerta who slipped the six bottles in their picnic basket and headed out. They couldn't see hide nor hair of the man that had impeded their and the several other students, who were now in the pub, from going inside.

"Can we go to Honeydukes?" said Ginny.

"Anything you want." said Harry with a smile.

They stopped in at Honeydukes at examined all the candies.

"Since you got my outfit, I'm getting you candy." said Ginny.

Harry opened his mouth to decline, but her hand flew up to his lips.

"No arguing, my treat." said Ginny with sly smile. "By not paying for my own robes, I've got a bit of spending money."

"Saved your allowance?" said Harry, hoping that this sweet shop spending spree wouldn't break her.

"And borrowed a bit from Charlie and Bill." said Ginny looking at the different colored toffees in the case. "So pick out something, and I'll buy it."

He went and grabbed several sugar spun quills and three bars of his favorite flavor of Honeydukes' chocolate.
After she paid for all their sweets, Harry looked at the woman behind the counter and said "On another order, I'd like a pound of everything in here, have it sent up to the Hogwarts kitchen please."

The woman stared at him, with a doubtful look on her face, till he whipped out from his knapsack a jet black bag, and deposited ninety galleons on the counter.

"Does that cover it?" said Harry with a smile. The shopkeeper nodded quickly. After much figuring and counting she reached into her till and pulled out several Sickles and Knuts and pushed back a few galleons.

"A p-p-pound of each?" said the woman stuttering.

"That's right, and just send it up to the castle's kitchens, with the letters...never mind, just put "Shadow" on them." said Harry.

"All right." said the woman as she gathered up all the candy she could reach.

"Save it for when you have no one else in here, wait on them first, then you can work on my order, I don't need it today, but I'd like it by tomorrow evening." said Harry.

"Yes sir!." said the woman nervously.

As Ginny and Harry left, Ginny sent Harry a questioning look.

"What's with all the candy?" she asked. "And why not write your name...oh...wait, you didn't want her to get even more flustered right?"

"Right. Well, I like making things with candy, thought I'd come up with some interesting stuff for snacks during the readings." said Harry.

"Can I help?" asked Ginny.

"Anytime." Harry smiled then looked up at the sky. "It's about eleven fifteen; do you want to have lunch?"

"Sure! Where at?" asked Ginny.

"Somewhere I found a few years back."

Harry gently pulled the long willow strands out from Ginny's path and when she saw it, she gasped loudly.

There was a large red and gold blanket laying on the ground, with a two cushions for sitting side by side, a single rose in a crystal vase. A stream, leading away from the vastness of the Black lake traveled past their spot and gurgled softly. The sun was scattered by the willow branches and added a sort of dazzle effect on the water and the blanket.

"What do you think?" asked Harry with a smile.

"I didn't think that boys could be this romantic." she said, her eyes bright.

"We can, it's just...Ron's got a romantic side." said Harry.
"I can't see it, but maybe it's cause I'm his sister." said Ginny.

"Shall we?" said Harry with a bright smile.

Ginny and Harry enjoyed their lunch, which included a large helping of the spaghetti that Harry had made for her, fried chicken, chocolate raspberry torte, salad, and the butterbeer that he and Ginny had earned from helping Madam Rosemerta.

Ginny and Harry laid side by side to each other and watched the clouds go rolling gently by.

"It's getting colder out, we aren't' going to see many days like this." said Ginny.

"With Voldemort around, we may not even have much of a future." said Harry absently.

Ginny turned on her side and faced him. "The books may have a clue to what we have to do to survive." she said quickly.

"We can only hope." said Harry looking over to Ginny. "If I have a chance at a future..." he looked unblinking at her, and took her hand gently into his own.

They laid, minutes passing them by unknowingly, they were lost in their own serene little world. Until they heard the snapping of a twig. Quickly they both stood up and looked around.

"Harry..." whispered Ginny. "Get behind me." she flung her arm out to protect him in his still weakened state. "WHOEVER YOU ARE YOU'D BETTER COME OUT BEFORE I COME IN AFTER YOU!"

"Easy Shortstuff!" came a voice behind one of the trees.

"You'd best come out too, Sirius." called Harry.

"Dammit." muttered a voice a little ways to left.

"You knew they were here?" said Ginny.

"I thought they'd give us privacy and keep quiet, apparently I overestimated their tact." said Harry.

"We just wanted to make sure you kids were alright." said Sirius.

"But you didn't step in at the Three Broomsticks." said Harry smugly.

"Why? What happened there?" said Bill quickly.

"We must of ditched them on accident." said Ginny with a smirk.

"What...happened?" pressed Sirius.

"Nothing you need to worry about." said Harry.

"Fine whatever, but it's time to head back." said Bill.

Harry looked up at the sky. "It's only two-twenty."

"But it's going to take forever to get back." said Bill, trying to convince them that the date was over.

Ginny groaned and glared at her over-protective older brother.
"C'mere and look to the east." said Harry with a smirk. Bill and Sirius walked over to them and looked to the left. And there they saw the castle, only a thirty minute walk from where they were.

"Oh...." said Bill sheepishly.

"Can you leave now?" said Ginny impatiently.

"I just want to make sure Harry's alright." said Sirius.

"I can protect him just fine." said Ginny getting more and more impatient.

"You'd best leave. We'll see you guys later." said Harry, his tone of voice meant the sincerity of his words and the hint of the severity of punishment if they had bothered them again for the rest of the day.

Sirius and Bill looked at each other quickly and strolled off, hurtfully.

Ginny groaned again. "Ugh! Sometimes, he's the coolest guy in the world, but sometimes, he's worse than Ron."

"But you still love him." said Harry, laying back down on the blanket and cushion.

"Of course I do, I love all my brothers." said Ginny.

"Even Percy?" said Harry with a playful smile.

"That's up for debate still." said Ginny with a slight scowl. Instead of lying on her cushion, she rested her head on Harry's chest. "Thank Merlin that this book is over." she said yawning slightly.

"Tell me about it." said Harry yawning as well. He knew that neither he nor Ginny were in any danger if either of them had fallen asleep. In the parting of the willow branches, they could faintly see a lone and silent sentry.

Lionus.

Chapter End Notes

Thanks for reading!
Harry and Ginny came back into the castle just as dinner was being served, Sirius and Bill turned in their seats and kept a close eye on the both of them as they both sat down.

"You know, I'm amazed that Charlie wasn't stalking us today." said Ginny. "I figured he'd follow us all over the place."

"He didn't need to, I don't think. He trusted me." said Harry.

"He had a talk with you didn't he?" said Ginny.

"Yeah, he had the 'hurt her, you die' talk with me." said Harry with a smile.

"Ugh." groaned Ginny embarrassingly. "Why do boys do that?"

"Cause you're their only sister? They want to protect you." said Harry still smiling.

Ginny rolled her eyes, but she had a smile on her face and tucked into the stew that was ladled into her plate.

Later on, Harry was in the kitchens finishing a chocolate mousse when Mr. Weasley came in and stood behind him.

"You too?" said Harry with a slight smile.

"I just came down, to thank you…for being a gentleman." said Mr. Weasley. "Ginny told us all about what you did."
"Even..." said Harry.

"Yeah, we had a little chat with Bill, and Remus had a nice talk with Sirius. You must have noticed that little limp Sirius had?" said Mr. Weasley with a small smile.

"Yeah, I'm guessing a Stinging Hex." said Harry with a smirk.

"On the nose." said Mr. Weasley tapping his nose. "Are you going to go out with her tomorrow?"

"No, I have plans with uh...Uncle Leroy, Uncle Rudolph, Sirius, Remus and Dr. Clark." said Harry.

"Oh, that's right, sorry about that. I was just wondering, because we were going to have a family outing, especially after this book." Mr. Weasley's eyes grew cold quickly, but his eyes warmed up back to his normal, kind temperature. "I think we all need to have a bit of a sit-down."

"Don't blame you, I think my family needs to have a bit of a chat too." said Harry. "Don't know where we are going to do it, though. Here, I've made a lot, take some chocolate mousse with you, it can be a sort of before bed snack for...well...whoever you want to give it to."

He handed Mr. Weasley a medium sized bowl full of the fluffy chocolate treat and put the rest of it into another, much larger bowl. "This ought to keep Remus happy." he said with a smile.

Harry woke up the next morning bright and early. Last night, Remus, scooping as much chocolate mousse as he could into his mouth, reminded him that he was going to take Harry to the eyeglass shop in Diagon Alley. Harry thought however that the store was closed on Sundays, but Remus said that he got in touch with the owner and she’d open up the shop just for them.

Harry went down into Great Hall and ate breakfast with Ron and Hermione. Once Ginny had told her family what had happened on their date, Ron seemed to have calmed down and accepted the fact that she and Harry were dating. He had to admit, she could have picked a really worse off choice than the one she made. But it did slightly irk him that Harry hadn't asked him if he could date Ginny, but he dare not voice that opinion, not with Ginny or Hermione within striking distance.
'What are you guys going to do today?' asked Hermione.

'Well, I was told that my family was going to have a little meeting.' said Ron.

'I'm going to Diagon Alley to get new glasses, after that, I wouldn't have the faintest idea.' said Harry. 'What about you?'

'Well...I'm not all together sure. I might do some research on these Memoir books, that and everything else we've learned.' she said and without further ado, she finished her breakfast and headed up to the library.

'I swear, she doesn't believe in days off.' said Ron shaking his head.

'Get done with your family meeting quickly, then go join her.' said Harry, his voice strangely calm.

'What's up?' said Ron quickly, that tone of voice was never good.

'She won't like what she reads. I know what she will find, if she asks you to keep a secret about the books, do it. Take one of these,' said Harry, he pulled a few small phials of Calming Draught from his jacket pocket. 'give her one of these just in case.'

'I'm not going to like it either, am I?' said Ron.

'There's another reason why there are Rangers are all about, if something were to happen to the books, like being snatched away, and then we weren't able to read them for about a week or so...' said Harry. 'Or if I'm taken...'

'You start dying, don't you?' said Ron in a weak voice.

Harry spoke no further.
Much later, at the Eyeglass shop with Remus, Tonks, Rudolph and Leroy, Harry stared straight ahead, glasses off and trying to see the large poster on the end of the room.

"Can you tell me what that picture is?" said the woman that was Remus' cousin.

Harry leaned forward in the chair and squinted, he was oblivious to the fact that the woman was casting a silent spell over Harry's line of vision.

"Umm... is it a horse?" said Harry uncertainly.

"Actually, it's a chicken. So Mr. Potter, let's get you a better set of glasses." said the woman kindly.

"How do you get a horse from that?" asked Tonks.

"I don't know." said Harry shrugging.

"Alright dear, I've got your lenses all done. Let's pick you some frames." she said with a smile.

Harry walked over and looked at all the choices he had, strangely, there were a bunch frames that looked just like his.

"Are these popular in this world?" said Harry with a raised brow.

"They are because you wear them, dear." said the woman with a smile.

"Time for a change." said Harry quickly. Suddenly he saw the glasses he wanted; they were a thin square framed pair, sort of like Professor McGonagall's glasses.

"You like those?" said the woman kindly. "Alright, then." she then took her wand out again and magicked the lenses to slip seamlessly into the frames.

"Thanks Winny." said Remus, but the look in her eyes told him, that she wanted a small chat with him.
"Um, Harry, go outside with Leroy. I'll be right there." said Remus, looking slightly worried.

Harry looked slightly confused, but left with his Uncles and Tonks.

"What can I do for you, Winny?" said Remus curiously.

"His eyes...I can tell what caused it..." she said with a growl in her voice.

Remus gave her a small smirk. "The people that caused it are already in Auror custody."

"Hope they stay there." she snarled.

"Sometimes, I swear you're more wolf than I am." he said with a smirk. He dodged a heavy blow to his shoulder.

After Remus had a nice, lengthy chat with his cousin, he went outside to find that the rest of his party was gone, nowhere to be seen. He had to travel down Diagon Alley a bit to find them, enjoying ice cream treats in front of Fortescue's.

"Aw...come on!" he said throwing his hands up. "I wanted some!"

"You mean this?" said Harry holding up a three scooped chocolate ice cream cone.

"Remus, you're going to give yourself a brain freeze." chided Tonks as she watched him almost swallow the entire cone.

"Too late." said Harry laughing. "What do we do now?" said Harry.

"Ugh..." moaned Remus holding his head. "Stupid brain freeze. Now we go to where we're meeting Sam and Sirius." Remus took ahold of Harry's shoulder and side-apparated with him.
Before Harry could look around, after the sickening spinning had ended, a blindfold was placed over his eyes.

"What the...?" said Harry.

"It's a surprise." said Lupin his voice sounded excited.

"Goody, I love surprises." said Harry sarcastically.

He allowed himself to be led quite a ways, until he was finally getting slightly annoyed. But the smell of ripened fruits quickly calmed his nerves.

"Alright cub," said Sirius' voice. "Here you go! It took all morning, with Dumbledore's help, to get rid of all the pink crap."

Suddenly the blindfold was taken off and Harry, blinking in the early afternoon sun, gazed at the surprise. The best surprise he had ever seen.

It was a house, then it dawned on them, it was their house.

It was a large manor, with at least three floors and countless grand windows. There were vines that intertwined about the front of the house, giving it a classic country house look. There were gardens stationed on both sides of the large path up to the house. There were fruit trees lining the walls of this large manor and Harry looked briefly behind him and saw that the entire house was blocked by woods, and Harry couldn't see an end to them.

"What do you think?" said Sirius.

"I love it." said Harry looking all around, and taking in all of the house he could see.

"We'll take a tour of the grounds later, first things first, let's go in the house, you're going to love it even more!" said Sirius grabbing Harry by the hand and dragging him into the house.
Sirius took a hold of the double oak doors and opened them both. When Harry saw the entrance hall to their house, he could only stare.

"It looks like the Entrance Hall of Hogwarts..." said Harry with an awed whisper.

"That's what I was going for." said Sirius with a smirk. "I wanted the entrance to look just like it. Alright, then, let's give you the grand tour!"

"The entire place would take too long, let's just take him around his wing." said Remus.

"My wing?" said Harry faintly.

"Yeah, you're getting a bit older and...yeah...I thought you'd like some privacy and well...it may keep you living at home for a long while." said Sirius.

"Even after I get married? I think you're nuts." said Harry with a smirk.

"We'll see." said Sirius with a bright smile, "Let's take you to your room, I think you'll like it."

They went up two floors and took Harry to a large ornate door. Harry opened the door and saw that his room looked so much more different than what his room, Ron's or even Dudley's room looked like.

Dudley's room was littered with posters of rock bands, wrappers of different sweets, boxing gloves, video games cartridges, disks, consoles, three TV’s, and weights. Ron's had an assortment of different magical games, Chudley Cannon merchandise, and then a fish tank with frogs spawn and full grown frogs.

Harry's room had an enormous fireplace straight ahead of the door, and a few large armchairs sitting beside it with ottomans. There was a large king size bed with gossamer curtains on each side, with deep red curtains on the right side of the room and directly across from the bed, there was a large balcony that overlooked the eastern part of the house and it’s estate.
"So, Harry? What do you think?" said Dumbledore with a bright smile. "Dr. Clark and I went about London and picked up all the furniture and other appliances."

"It's not done yet, but it should be done by the time the summer comes." said Dr. Clark with a smile. "I wanted to pick you up a T.V. and stereo, but...these guys didn't know what I was talking about." he added in a whisper.

"I love it." said Harry faintly. "I...I actually can't wait till summer."

"This isn't the best part. We have two surprises, the rest of the house isn't done, but this one, and the two surprises are done." said Sirius.

"Um...actually the music room isn't done yet." said Dr. Clark guiltily.

"What, why not?" said Remus.

"We wanted to put wind instruments in there...um...there was only one guy in London that had any...and we didn't to touch them." said Dr. Clark.

"Don't ask." said Dumbledore trying not to laugh.

"That and I haven't found a really good wallpaper." said Dr. Clark.

"Oh, well, then for dramatic flair we won't go in there." said Sirius half-heartedly.

"That and the piano hasn't been delivered yet." said Dr. Clark in a whisper to Remus.

"Well, then let's go downstairs." said Leroy.

"I think I can guess what that room is going to be." muttered Harry with a large smile.
And just like Harry thought, it was a kitchen; it had a large refrigerator, stove, large counters, and an immensely large pantry. There were pots and pans hanging down from thin wires from the overhead cupboards.

"This kitchen is all yours." said Leroy with a smile and a one armed hug.

"Huh?" said Harry.

"There's another kitchen in this house. During the school year, we'll use that one. This one is for you coming up with your own recipes and hopefully adding some weight to you." said Sirius teasingly.

They smiled as Harry wiped tears away from his eyes.

"Come on, let’s get back to the castle, I'm starving." said Sirius with a smile.

"I could make dinner here, then after dinner we can go back." said Harry.

"I haven't stocked the kitchen yet, there isn't any food." said Sirius.

"Damn, well, it was a nice idea anyway." said Harry shrugging.

“Wish we stocked the pantry now.” said Sirius pouting slightly.

They left the house and after one quick tour of the fruit tree orchard, and the garden, they apparated, with Harry holding on tightly to Dumbledore's arm and a large smile on his face.

Chapter End Notes

Thanks for reading!
The next morning, they all gathered back into the Great Hall, all excited to finish the second book. Harry grabbed himself a plate full of food and sat in the bowl beside Sirius and the others.

"Tell me that the book ends on a good note." said Remus pleadingly.

"Yeah, it turns out pretty good." said Harry shrugging.

It was decided that Madam Bones would read the final chapter, after a bit of coaxing from Harry, saying that she would find it most interesting.

Eighteenth Chapter. said Madam Bones.

"Great, just what we need, another chapter where he breaks your arm with rogue sport's equipment." said Dr. Clark rolling his eyes.

"Don't worry, I'm safe in this chapter." said Harry.

"That'll be a refreshing change." said Sirius.

First paragraph, first sentence.

"Goddamn it, you're still hurt." said Remus quickly.

"I was fine." said Harry. "Just really tired."

The adults weren't reassured when Madam Pomfrey shook her head.

End of first paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Second paragraph, first sentence.

Most of the adults in the room looked sympathetic over to the Weasley family.
A few people in the Great Hall were holding handkerchiefs and sniffed.

"Nice of you to care." whispered Rudolph with a smirk.

"I knew she was fine!" said Harry defensively.

"You were there? What the bloody hell stopped you from going down there?" said Bill.

"You forget, the boys didn't tell anyone about where the Chamber of Secrets was. That and he wasn't a Parselmouth." said Lionus.

"Oh, right." said Bill sheepishly. "Sorry."

"You were quite right to shout, Mr. Weasley." said Dumbledore with a sad smile. "I should have stayed."

"But you couldn't." said Madam Bones. "If you had stayed, Lucius would have come to the Ministry and with that lump." she gestured towards the seat the Minister held, "he'd of let Lucius kick you out of the castle permanently."

"Whatever happened to the Minister? Shouldn't he have been back by now?" asked Percy.

"I inquired about that." said Lionus with a smile. "It seems that his turn-key felt that he didn't learn a good enough lesson. He'll be there for a little while longer."

"Good." said McGonagall fiercely.

"Turn-key?" said Percy worriedly.

"What did you expect?" said Professor McGonagall. "We had just told them that they're daughter was taken away by a monster, and you three came, covered in filth with Miss Weasley and a blood drenched sword."

"Not to mention Harry was covered in blood too." thought Remus.

"Sorry ma'am." said Ron and Harry sheepishly.
"He did a fantastic job. As did all of you children." said Dumbledore with kind smile. "Though you shouldn't have had to do it." he finished with a guilt ridden look.

"It wouldn't have mattered, I would have had to of gone anyway, if we told a teacher." said Harry.

"Oh, really?" said Snape with a sneer.

"I don't rightly recollect any of you being Parselmouths." said Harry.

"He's got a point." whispered Charlie. "He shouldn't have gone, but he still has a point."

"Harry jumped about a foot in the air when you did that. He almost raised the sword and hit you." said Ron to his mother.

The Weasley's looked over at Harry.

"I was nervous, and still pretty freaked out." said Harry.

"I had to make some very strong tea, very quickly. I would have lost my Deputy Headmistress for a short while." said Dumbledore with a smile over to McGonagall.

"It was a very horrific day." said McGonagall sternly. "Not just for me, but for the Weasley family as well. I was so relieved that everything came out all right. But I wish I never knew what horrible cost it could have been." she added with a sorrowful glance towards Harry.

"I was waiting for someone to yell at me, or demand for me to speak. It never came." said Harry.

"It is best that if a child had suffered from an ordeal, to let them speak, at their own pace." said Dumbledore.

"I noticed that last year." said Harry with a smile. "You didn't push it."
"A very much watered down version of what had transpired." said Dumbledore and McGonagall.

"You already looked done in, I didn't want to add to it, and I didn't want Ron and I expelled any faster than we were already going to be." said Harry.

"I'm not much of a speaker, and with no one else talking, it made me awfully nervous." said Harry.

"I think you do just fine." said Cho, remember the D.A meetings.

"Which we admit, we wouldn't have believed you." said Professor Flitwick regrettably.

"Which was bloody brilliant." said Ron.

"Which was flipping SUICIDE! I don't want to hear about you guys going in there again." said Bill sternly to his youngest brother.

“Count on it.” said Ron.

"That solved a great mystery, I had always, for the want of a better word, wondered how that happened." said Dumbledore.

"You should have told a teacher." said Remus.

"We did, we just...didn't pick the right teacher to tell." said Ron shrugging his shoulders.
"Who the bloody hell cares if they broke school rules or not? They saved Ginny and came back alive!" said Bill in shock.

End of dialogue set.

"Lots of luck, and lots of help." said Harry. Dumbledore smiled over to Harry and Sirius pulled him into an even tighter hug.

Sixth paragraph, first sentence, first comma.

"Mr. Potter, you could have asked for some water." said McGonagall.

"I didn't want to push whatever luck I had left." said Harry.

Sixth paragraph, third sentence.

"And the part about you almost dying." said Dumbledore his face pale.

Sixth paragraph, fifth sentence.

"I would never have let that happen." said Dumbledore.

End of sixth paragraph.

"Wow, thanks Harry." said Charlie.

Seventh paragraph, first sentence, second comma.

"Only twelve years old, and he already knows to look immediately to Dumbledore for help." said Kingsley shaking his head.

End of seventh paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"You looked into his mind again, didn't you?" said Tonks.

"I did, I had a feeling he was hiding something from me, but I didn't see that Tom had almost killed him." said Dumbledore looking down. "You were right Harry, you do know what cards to lay forward, and what cards to hide up your sleeve."

Eighth paragraph.

"I was so happy, you had no idea." said Harry. "I just about collapsed."

“You should have, you would have been sent to me sooner than when you did.” said Madam Pomfrey.

Dialogue line.

"I wouldn't have believed it either, Molly," said Rudolph.

Dialogue line.

Ninth paragraph.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

"I wouldn't have complimented him." growled Remus.

"You got to admit it, Remus, he was a brilliant kid, completely twisted and sadistic, but he was brilliant." said Moody.

End of dialogue set.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

"Wonder if Malfoy knows?" whispered Ron to Hermione.

Dialogue set, third sentence.

"Yeah, remember that he said that he and Harry looked the same?" said George.

"Yeah I do," Fred looked at Harry intently. "I don't know, Harry looks pretty evil and powerful to me. I'd of recognized him."

"Don't make me come over there." said Harry. "I don't have magic right now, but that won't stop me from beating your ass."

"Watch your mouth." said Dr. Clark with a smirk.

"Sorry." said Harry. "Won't stop me from smacking the daylights out of you."

“Little better.” said Dr. Clark.
End of dialogue set.

"Still can't believe he was Head Boy." said Tonks

"Headmaster Dippet chose him, not I." said Dumbledore, his eyes cold.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"I learned never to do that again." said Ginny.

Dialogue set, fifth sentence.

"Seriously? You tell your kids that?" said Dr. Clark.

"In my line of work, I warn them about a lot of stuff." said Mr. Weasley.

End of dialogue set.

Dialogue line.

"Did you get the books at Flourish and Blotts or the second hand store, Turner's, dear?" asked Madam Bones.

"Turner's" said Mrs. Weasley.

"Well, you never know what people could leave in the books. I had a cousin find an old bookmark that once belonged to Newt Scamander, she returned it to him and got a signed copy of his book, and a beautiful phoenix feather quill." said Madam Bones. "It was quite unfortunate that your daughter didn't get the same pleasant surprise."

Dialogue set, first sentence.

"That's one of the qualities I admire about you, Albus," said Bathilda taking a sip of tea. "If you see a student distraught, you'll insist that they rest."

"After they tell him what had happened." said Sirius, thinking about Harry's exhausted frame from the year before.

"Well of course, how else is he supposed to correct and fix it if he doesn't know what had happened?" said Bathilda.
"I don't know, wait until they wake up after resting first?" said Sirius sarcastically.

"Then it might be too late." said Bathilda shortly.

Dialogue set, third sentence.

"If I wasn't freaked out at that time, I would have been really happy about that." said Ginny.

Dialogue set, fifth sentence.

"Well, Fudge fits the older part, but not so much the wiser." sniggered Fred.

Dialogue set, seventh sentence.

"Works wonders at home too." said Charlie.

"Your father actually got me, how do you youngsters put it? Hooked, on hot chocolate when I feel particularly worn." said Dumbledore with a smile. "I caught him in the kitchens when he was, let's see, a second year, making a large batch of hot chocolate."

"Mom actually went down into the kitchens and made me some hot chocolate for me." said Ginny.

End of dialogue set.

"How the hell is that timed that good?" said Sirius.

The staff merely shrugged. "Fate?" offered Professor Sprout.

"Fate's got some great timing." said Sirius.

Dialogue line.

Hermione looked at Ron, with look of pleasant surprise on her face.

"Well, you know." said Ron trying to sound cool, however it didn't work too well, especially when Hermione gave him swift kiss on the cheek.

"Dear me, Fred. Look how red Ron is getting." said George.

"Positively shocking." said Fred.

"Absolutely scandalous." said George.

"Get off." said Ron to the twins.
"I apologize, Miss Weasley for that statement, I should have phrased it differently." said Dumbledore swiftly.

"What? What do you mean, sir?" asked Ginny.

"After hearing what I just said, I can see how it could be taken as that you were at fault somewhere along the line. I deeply apologize." said Dumbledore.

"Oh, um...it's okay." said Ginny with a small smile.

"He passed out up in the Hospital Wing." said Ginny.

"I was worried sick." said Mr. Weasley stiffly, "It just got to be too much."

"Don't blame you, Mr. Weasley." said Lionus. "If I had children, and this happened. I'd faint...right after I kill and disembowel everyone that was involved in hurting my daughter."

"What about son?" asked Lee.

"Well, I'd let him get in a few shots, then I'd kill them and behead them." said Lionus with a vicious smile.

"Go daddy." said Lee gulped.

"They were overjoyed. They love to cook for feasts." said McGonagall with a weak smile.

"Oh, come on! All that death-defying stuff and you're going to give detention and take points away?" said Nightstrike groaning.

"You've gone native." said Tempest with a smirk.

"Well, like me, you've gone for a native." said Nightstrike raising his eyebrows.

"What do you mean?" asked Tempest shortly.

"There aren't any Willow trees in the rooms we were assigned." said Nightstrike plucking a thin leaf from her hair.

"I was out for a morning run." snapped Tempest.

"And Firenze happened to go about the same way, attracting the exact same ornament in his tail?"
said Nightstrike.

"Permission to kill Lieutenant Nightstrike, sir?" said Tempest hotly, a fierce blush reached her face.

"Permission denied. Behave Nightstrike, or I'll mention the traces of lipstick on your cheek." said Lionus. Nightstrike took on the same shade of red as Tempest as did Emmeline Vance.

"Don't think that I didn't notice that you both left the prisoner, unguarded." said Lionus with a smirk. "She's not as dangerous as the others, so that may be why you thought that leaving her alone for a while was fine. Don't...do...it...again..."

"Yes, sir." said Tempest and Nightstrike together.

"Go on dates in shifts from now on." said Lionus with a sneer.

Dialogue line.

Eleventh paragraph.

"If we were expelled, you'd have carry me out of Hogwarts, cause I would be passed out on the floor in a dead faint." said Ron.

Dialogue line.

"Now you're a stickler for rules?" said Bill in shock.

"I was in my younger days, now I can see ways of dancing around the rule book." said Dumbledore with a smile.

"Thank goodness." said Harry quietly.

"Go figure." said Professor Snape rolling his eyes.

Twelfth paragraph.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

"If Dumbledore had been like any of the other Headmasters, you both would have been expelled." said McGonagall sternly.

"I don't think we'd have been around past first year." said Ron.

"I wouldn't be here past Christmas." said Harry quietly.
"I took Tom's award for services to the school down and destroyed it." said Dumbledore. "As it was fitting."

"Ours are there now." said Ron proudly.

"I'm going to have to go and look at it tonight." said Sirius with a smile. Harry groaned.

End of dialogue set.

"I remember Severus coming to me and complaining about the four hundred point leap." said Dumbledore thoughtfully.

"I found it unfair." said Snape shortly.

"Especially after you took about two hundred and fifty points away from the Weasley twins for causing the fifth floor's suits of armor to jitterbug in the corridors, the day prior." said Professor Flitwick with a smile.

"So you only won by...?" said Sirius.

"We won by one hundred and fifty points." said Harry.

"So you two really only got about seventy-five points each for saving the school and defeating a giant basilisk? That's pathetic." said Sirius.

Thirteenth paragraph, ninth word.

"Arrgh!" Ron cried out, and lunged at Harry, the entire bowl was knocked over backwards. The men found themselves laughing as Harry and Ron tussled around.

"Take it back!" said Ron in a muffled voice as he and Harry rolled about on the floor.

"No." said Harry with a smile. "It was the same color! Leggo my arm!"

"Take it back, quit hitting me!" said Ron.

"You hit me first!" said Harry as he flipped Ron over and held him in a light choke hold.

"Will the both of you knock it off?" said Ginny, her hands on her hips.

"You're both idiots." said Hermione standing beside Ginny.

Ron and Harry looked at each other. "But we're your idiots." said the both of them with broad smiles.

The school laughed as Harry and Ron continued to wrestle around frantically, finally Harry apologized after Ron grabbed his arm and pulled it behind his back.

End of thirteenth paragraph.
"It was most unusual." said Dumbledore.

"I kept staring at him, waiting for him to take all the credit." said McGonagall.

"I saw you had your wand drawn." said Dumbledore with a smile.

"I had just about had it with him." said McGonagall stiffly.

"I can't wait till I can forget him again." said Remus.

"Did he honestly think someone could stand behind him, when he's standing in a corner?" said Sirius with a laugh.

"Stole my wand, tried to obliterate us and instead he shot himself and made the ceiling of the tunnel to sort of collapse." said Fred.

“Horrible accident it was.” said George.

"Before you even went down into the tunnel." said Lupin.

"Before he even started his first day working here." said Sirius.

"Oh, I wouldn't have told him that." said Fred.

"But then he would have gotten better and he would have gotten away with everything." said George.

"Oh, never mind then." said Fred.
"Harry also divulged what Gilderoy had done to all those champions of the people." said Dumbledore with a fond smile.

"Dear lord." groaned Tonks.

"You trusted Lockhart with Ron?" said Mrs. Weasley.

"Actually, Mom, I kept kicking him all the way there. Kept telling him it was mice biting his ankles." said Ron with a smile. "He said something about how we needed more cats around here."

"Didn't know what he wanted to talk to Harry for." said Ron.

"That's what supposed to happen when you talk to the Headmaster, however...the same cannot be said for the Weasley twins." said McGonagall, the faintest trace of smile on her lips.

"Yeah, when we've been sent to him lately, we just kick back." said Fred.

"Slouch in the chairs." said George.

"And tell him how our day went." said Fred.

"Then we tell what we did." George.

"Then he gives us detention, but you know what? It's nice to talk to him and ask him for his opinion on stuff." said Fred.

"Our conversations are quite entertaining." said Dumbledore with a wide smile. "Though I have yet to answer their final question that ask every time."

"How to go about getting away with everything." said the twins together.
"I thought you said you sent him." said Remus wonderingly.

"I did, but judging from what Harry had told me, I sent Fawkes, in the completely wrong direction. I thought that the Entrance was towards the eastern dungeons. I didn't know that the chamber was in a bathroom, especially Moaning Myrtle's." said Dumbledore.

"But I thought he flamed in." said Ron.

"He did, but if he is near enough, he doesn't waste his strength flaming about, when he can just fly towards the area." said Dumbledore. "But the dungeons he was heading to were about three-quarters of a mile away. I told him that he had to get to Harry, you, and Ginny as quickly as possible."

"Oh." said Ron.

Seventeenth paragraph.

"Why are you grinning?" asked Zacharias.

"Don't answer him." said Sirius with a snarl.

Dialogue line.

"Albus..." hissed McGonagall.

"He was fine, from what I saw, he was exhausted, and slightly battered, but other than that he was fine. I wanted him to think carefully about what he had seen and heard." said Dumbledore.

Eighteenth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

Dumbledore absent-mindedly touched his eyebrows slowly.

End of dialogue set.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

"Don't blame you, Cub." said Remus ruffling Harry's still snow white hair.

End of dialogue set.
"You're better than him." said Bill.

Nineteenth paragraph.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

"You could have been placed in any house and done frightfully well, just like how you are as a Gryffindor." said Professor Flitwick with a broad smile.

End of dialogue set.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

"What does Harry's ability have anything to do with Voldemort's?" asked Remus.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

"...oh..." said Remus. He looked over to Harry swiftly.

"So..." said Sirius.

"We're hoping that some of the powers he lost during his illness, is some of the dark lord's power." said Dr. Nicodemus.

"Why?" said Dr. Clark.

"Because then maybe some of his own abilities will come to view. If not, he'll lose two abilities, instead of one." said Dr. Nicodemus.

"What....?" said Sirius.

"You'll find out, I believe. Much later." said Dr. Nicodemus.

End of dialogue set.

"Unless he's dumber than I think." said Lionus.

Dialogue line.

"First time I ever wanted to make myself sick." said Harry, he had brought his legs up into the bowl and wrapped his arms around his legs. "Every time I think of it, I can't eat, or sleep." he laid his head on his knees.

"Are you alright?" said Dumbledore worriedly.
"Yeah, just don't expect me to eat for a while." said Harry's muffled voice.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"It put you in Gryffindor." said McGonagall proudly.

Dialogue set, third sentence.

"That didn't make me feel any better." said Harry, still talking through his knees.

Dialogue set, fourth sentence, second comma.

"Minus the Parseltongue part, those qualities also belonged to...your dad and his family. And that side of your family were loaded with Gryffindors." said Sirius.

End of dialogue set.

"You knew?" asked Seamus.

"I would have gone with anything. I myself am very resourceful." said Dumbledore.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set, third sentence.

People sat in their chairs and cushions in silence. Even the adults were bombarded with deep thoughts.

End of dialogue set.

Twentieth paragraph, first sentence.

"He reached for it too fast. I had to tell him to be careful." said Dumbledore, he stood up and stood behind Harry. He placed his hands on Harry's shoulders. "Harry, do you want us to take a break?"

"No. I'm going to be fine." said Harry quietly.
"Wow!" said a few first and second years.

"Nice of you to help yourself." said Rivers with a smile.

"I asked earlier if I may borrow some parchment and ink, much earlier." said Dumbledore.

"And medical attention from me." said Madam Pomfrey loudly.

"Yeah, I slept in the Hospital Wing that night." said Harry, slowly recovering from his overpowering thoughts. "Didn't wake up till dinner time the next day."

"I was grateful to that letter." said Hagrid, his face slowly paling.

"No thanks to Potter, he killed the first one and drove the other one insane." said Zacharias with a smirk.

"Mr. Smith!" said Professor Sprout angrily. "Do not make me send you to your dorm for the rest of the readings."

Zacharias snarled towards Harry and crossed his arms furiously.

"Caught me right on my wrist, that was another bruise that Madam Pomfrey had to look at." said Harry.
Malfoy cringed in his seat under the furious gazes from people across the room.

"So, Dobby belongs to your family?" shrieked Lavender.

Dialogue line.

"Oh, good then I did sound pleasant, I was afraid I wasn't." said Dumbledore with a smile. "It took all I had to not berate that man."

Twenty-fourth paragraph, first sentence.

"He's another person that just signed onto my 'Gonna die' list." spat Sirius.

"Just because he nearly knocked me over?" asked Harry quietly.

"Especially because of that, you're my baby." said Sirius.

End of twenty-fourth paragraph.

"Poor Dobby." said Parvati sadly.

Twenty-fifth paragraph, second sentence.

"Poor guy, my heart bleeds for him." said George with mock sympathy.

"We mean, Malfoy." said Fred.

End of twenty-fifth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"And thank God he did." said Remus.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

"Sort of sounds like what happened at the Dursley's." said Harry absently.

Dialogue set, third sentence.
"They were quite relieved when they discovered that Miss Weasley was found to be alive." said Dumbledore.

End of dialogue set.

"Indeed?" said Madam Bones with a raised brow.

"Have we arrested Malfoy yet?" asked Dr. Nicodemus.

"Not yet, I don't think." said Lionus, "I haven't received word of his capture yet."

Twenty-sixth paragraph.

"He won't act on it. He's a coward." said Moody with sneer.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"Your boss." said Dean.

Dialogue line.

Twenty-seventh paragraph, first sentence.

"I wanted to see his reaction, and peer into his mind at the same time." said Dumbledore.

End of twenty-seventh paragraph.

"Good thing, too." said Harry.

Twenty-eighth paragraph.

"Guess he's trying to tell Harry that the book belongs to Malfoy." said Kingsley with a deep, calm voice.
"As you children say, he has a terrible poker face." said Dumbledore with a smile.

"Don't drag him into the conversation with a Death Eater." said Sirius in a whimper.

"Oh, you're rubbing it in his face, love it." said Sirius losing the whimper and taking on his bark-like laugh.

"There's a heads up to what was going to happen." muttered Harry thoughtful.

"Bet Malfoy loved that one." said Charlie with a smile.

"His face did turn a bit red." said Dumbledore thinking back.

"So that was what Malfoy's motive was." said Moody with a smirk.

"Wiped? I pretty sure, due to all ink, the memories were drowned out." said Sirius.

"Exactly what Malfoy would have wanted." said Moody.
"Doesn't he sound relieved?" said Fred.

Thirty-first paragraph.
"Yes, Dobby, we know, you can stop beating yourself now." said Ron.

Thirty-second paragraph, first sentence.
"Wow, you didn't figure it out right away?" said Seamus.
"I was tired, battered and slimed, I didn't want to focus on anything." said Harry defensively.

End of thirty-second paragraph.
People grabbed their ears and cringed slightly.

Dialogue line.

Thirty-third paragraph.
"You love picking fights don't you?" said Sirius with raised brows.
"What could he do?" said Harry shrugging.
"Let's make a list. How about that?" said Remus.
"But Dumbledore was sitting right there." said Harry looking up at Dumbledore with a smile.
"Oh, list gone." said Sirius with a laugh.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set, first sentence.
Bill and Charlie had to restrain both of their parents. "Easy Mom, Dad. He'll get what's coming to him." said Charlie while trying to hold onto his mother's arm.

End of dialogue set.
Bill had to throw his arm around his father's neck working hard to hold his father back.
"Can you arrest him, Madam Bones?" shouted Fred angrily.

"No, I cannot use these books to apprehend him." said Madam Bones regretfully.

"Not stopping us." Lionus snapped his fingers and suddenly a figure dove out from nowhere and landed at Lionus' feet. He dropped down on a knee and kneeled before the Captain.

"You summoned me, sir?" said the man.

The students noticed that this guy had some sort of strange looking cloak wrapped around his shoulders, like leather.

"Have you got Lucius Malfoy?" said Lionus.

"Yes sir, we have him." said the strange cloaked man.

"And you didn't come and tell me?" said Lionus shortly.

"You told us to not interrupt the proceedings, under any circumstance. Do you want him now?" asked the man.

"I'd love it." said Lionus with a vicious smile.

The man looked up and suddenly the cloak stretched out and it showed what it really was.

"Wings? He's got wings?" said Ron in a awed whisper.

"Like a bat." said Hermione in shock.

"If they followed proper protocol, then it will be after lunch when they get back here," said Lionus with a smirk. "I think that I'll speak to Mr. Malfoy Senior somewhere alone. I hope that you, Mr. Weasley will join me."

"With pleasure." said Mr. Weasley with snarl.

"Um?" said Draco quietly.

"Best you not hear what I'm going to tell your father." said Lionus, trying to be kind.

"I was exceedingly proud of Harry for what he said." said Dumbledore with a smile.
"Better believe it." said Mr. Weasley angrily. "Why didn't you tell me he was the one behind it though?"

"What would you have done if I had told you?" asked Dumbledore curiously.

"I'd have killed him." said Mr. Weasley hotly.

"Then you would have gone to Azkaban. Best keep you around, Arthur, goodness knows what might happen to your department without you." said Dumbledore kindly.

Thirty-fifth paragraph, first sentence.

"He never would have cleared his pocket without Dumbledore slamming him into the wall with a curse of his own." said a third year proudly.

End of thirty-fifth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Thirty-sixth paragraph, first sentence.

The people in the Great Hall groaned sympathetically.

Thirty-sixth paragraph, second sentence.

"Why didn't you do anything, Headmaster?" asked Hermione tearfully.

"It's his House-elf, I cannot lawfully admonish him or curse him for it." said Dumbledore. "Hopefully, some day, that law will change."

End of thirty-sixth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"What are you planning?" asked Tonks.

Dialogue line.

"You're worried about the feast?" said Madam Bones.

"He didn't need to get any thinner that what he was. Also, I was giving him a subtle hint that I would be close behind him." said Dumbledore with a smile.
"That hint I caught." said Harry.

Thirty-seventh paragraph, third sentence.

"Ugh...burn that sock." gagged Dr. Clark.

"How could you get that diary to get stuffed in your sock?" asked Remus.

"It was Uncle Vernon socks." said Harry.

"Oh." said Remus.

"I had to hop on one foot just to take my sock and shoe off." said Harry with a smirk.

"I wish I could have seen that." said Sirius with a smirk.

End of thirty-seventh paragraph.

Thirty-eighth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Thirty-ninth paragraph.

The students laughed loudly.

"His face was priceless." said Harry laughing along with them.

Dialogue line.

"It's a sewer drenched sock." said George.

Fortieth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"Can we join in the beat down?" asked Remus with a scowl on his face.

"No, I think that Mr. Weasley will do just fine." said Lionus.

Forty-first paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Forty-second paragraph.
"Huh?" asked Dr. Clark.

"He didn't..." said Remus with a smile.

"I think he did." said Sirius. "Oh this is priceless."

Dialogue line.

"That's right, take the loophole and run with it." said Moody with a smirk on his face.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Forty-third paragraph.

"OI!" shouted Sirius loudly.

Dialogue line.

Forty-fourth paragraph.

Forty-fifth paragraph, second sentence.

Everyone, but a few of the people in Slytherin House cheered and shouted joyously.

"Was that you?" asked Sirius to Dumbledore.

"No, Dobby beat me to the punch." said Dumbledore honestly.

End of forty-fifth paragraph.

"A House-elf's finger is threatening?" scoffed Lee.

"Was to Malfoy." said George.

Dialogue line.

"You tell him Dobby!" cheered a few third years.

Forty-sixth paragraph, first sentence.

“That's right you slimy bastard.” muttered Sirius.
“Yeah, you don't want the big mean House-elf to knock you on your ass, do you?” said Charlie with a snicker.

“How much do you want to bet that he would throw himself into Harry's service if given half a chance.” said Terry.

“Someone would finally look after Harry...provided Dobby doesn't try and save Harry's life again.” said Hannah.

“Seriously.” said Dr. Clark. “That wasn't his best work.”

"Oh, that's gross. Tell me he washes it soon." said Dr. Clark.

"So he lied." said Remus.

"Not quite." said Harry and Dumbledore.

"Huh?” said several students.

"At the time, I didn't have the strength to question any further.” said Harry.
"Thanks for thinking of me." said Hermione with a faint blush.

Forty-eighth paragraph.

"Took everything I had not to make him actually promise never to try and save my life again." said Harry with a smirk. "Not just joke about it."

Dialogue line

Forty-ninth paragraph.

"Hope he has a nice life." said Neville.

Fiftieth paragraph, second sentence.

"Did you stay up all night?" asked Kingsley.

"Madam Pomfrey came down and dragged me off to the Hospital Wing about five o'clock in the morning." said Harry.

Fiftieth paragraph, third sentence, end of quick dialogue.

"Aww." said a few girls in the Great Hall.

Fiftieth paragraph, third sentence, second comma.

"Not even close, I wouldn't have given him the time of day." said Sirius sourly.

Fiftieth paragraph, third sentence, fourth comma.

"Sorry." said Hagrid sheepishly.

"Trifle is good with or without spoons." said Harry and Ron.
"Go Gryffindors!" said the Gryffindor table joyfully.

"Oh, well I know what you were talking about. Good thing you got rid of the tests, it wouldn't have been fair." said Sirius.

"What about the fifth and seventh years?" asked Remus.

"They were able to come back during the summer to take their tests, with plenty of studying under their belts." said Dumbledore with a smile.

"Only you." said Ron shaking his head.

"You could almost hear the sarcasm." whispered Madam Hooch to Professor Sinstra.

"Thank goodness he wasn't going to come back." said McGonagall rolling her eyes.

"I still miss kicking him about." said Ron.

"We never left our favorite tree." said Harry fondly.

"You didn't learn anything that year anyway." said Remus.

"Except not letting loose a bunch of pixies." said Sirius.

“And that won't help with your exams.” said Remus.
"Not many people could really figure out why that was really important." said Ron.

Draco continued to cringe in his seat, silently begging for the chapter to end.

"That was one of the better things to happen." said Harry with a smile.

"Wow, did nothing happen at all for the rest of the year, or the train ride?" said Sirius.

"Nope, and it was really nice." said Harry with a smile.

“Strange how we love excitement and he loves boredom.” said Justin.

"Girlfriend." said Fred and George.

"Our Ickle Percy's growing up." said Fred wiping a tear from his eye.

"Hey! No more 'Ickle-anything' remember." said George quickly.

"Was that intentional or accidental?" asked Sirius with a chuckle.

"It had better of been accidental." said George shortly.

"Maybe..." said Fred with a mischievous smile.
Dialogue set, second sentence.

"So you gave up family time, for a girl?" said Fred.

"Whom you were going to see all year round?" said George.

"What were you doing in your room while waiting for the letters, anyway?" said Fred.

"Yeah...you....uh...um...ah..." said George, his voice faltering.

"You figured it out? Spill." said Fred. George leaned over and whispered in his ear Fred's eyes bugged out slightly.

"Never mind continue on." said Fred to Madam Bones in a slightly high pitched tone.

"What are you going on about?" said Bill.

"Nothing, but you may want to talk to Percy at some point." said George whispering to Bill.

"I'm an adult!" hissed Percy.

"Sure Perce, whatever you say. I'd still have a talk." said George in a hushed voice back.

Dialogue set, fourth sentence.

"I thought you said you weren't going to tell them?" said Percy hotly.

"I would have, if you hadn't of kicked me out of the Great Hall before I was taken." said Ginny.

"I didn't kick you out!" said Percy defensively.

"You kinda did." said Ron. "You took her seat and she was so freaked out that she ran out."

End of dialogue set.

"See, I'm not heartless, I asked them not to." said Ginny.

"Why tell them anyway?" said Percy, his face red.

"Harry asked." said Ginny.

"Doesn't mean you tell him." said Percy.

"Harry saved her life." said Charlie.

"He's got dibs on anything he wants from us." said Bill.

Dialogue line
"Did you tease him?" asked Charlie.

"Only when he picked the fight." said Fred.

Dialogue line

"And he picked a lot of fights, not too sure why." said George.

Fifty-fifth paragraph.

Fifty-sixth paragraph.

Dialogue set, second comma.

"Oh, I rue that day." said Harry with a slightly smile.

"Why?" asked Dr. Clark.

"It didn't go well." said Harry still smiling.

End of dialogue set.

"I should have told you quick how to use it." said Hermione to Ron.

Dialogue set.

Hermione turned a faint pink color under all the shocked looks she received. "I don't know what I was thinking." said Hermione with a blush.

Dialogue line

"And that didn't tell you that something was horribly, horribly wrong." said Sirius.

Hermione shuffled her feet shamefully.

"Well that's the end of this book." said Madam Bones.

"Thank bloody God. That was horrible." said Sirius giving Harry a one armed hug.
"You'll like the next one." said Harry. "Sort of."

"Oh, yeah! I'm in that one!" said Sirius happily.

"I think I'll start off the next book." said Dumbledore walking out from behind Harry and striding over to the now shrinking pile of books.

He picked up the next book with a strangely worn leather cover.

"You'll like this title, Sirius, Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban." said Dumbledore.

"Yay!" said Sirius. "Can't wait till the end."

"Goody." mumbled Snape sourly.

Chapter End Notes

Thanks for reading Please review
"Third Book, Chapter One," said Dumbledore.

"Who cares about the post?" muttered Zacharias.

"You can say that again." muttered Nightstrike with a smirk.

"Don't blame you." said Sirius shortly. “I did too when I was younger.”

Harry looked up to the ceiling innocently and whistled.

"We should spank your fingers for wanting to do homework." said Lee.

"We don't know you anymore." said the twins with a disdainful sniff.

“Nothing wrong with wanting to do homework!” said Hermione.

“It is when it’s a bloke working on it.” said Ron.

“Nice...” said Bill and Percy.

"Sounds like one of your 'jobs'." said Neville.

"Did you do any that summer?" asked Colin.
Harry reached into his back pocket and pulled out a little white book, and flipped though it thoughtfully.

"I was commissioned to check on a painting and oriental vase." said Harry reading from the book.

"You keep track?" asked Dennis staring eagerly at the book.

"Have to, if I had a bad experience, I want to remember where and who." said Harry.

"How much money did you make for one of those trips?" asked Ernie.

"Not telling." said Harry. "Don't want you lot going off thinking it's easy money."

"Spoilsport." smirked Fred.

"Seriously, if we can't use magic, how the hell does he think it's easy?" said George.

End of first paragraph.

"Mr. Smith, one more word...." hissed Professor Sprout to the Hufflepuff that opened his mouth.

Second paragraph, first sentence, second comma.

"I never could lay on my stomach." said Sirius thoughtfully, "It always made me feel ill."

"Didn't help that James hid under the mattress and punched you through it when you went to lay down." said Remus with a laugh.

“How can you hide under a mattress, it sort of doesn't sit right.” said Ron.

“Sirius was really tired, at least that's how he says he was...just an excuse.” said Remus.

“Shut up.” said Sirius.

Second paragraph, first sentence, end of parenthesis

Bathilda beamed happily from her rocking chair.

End of second paragraph.

"You needed help with that essay?" said Hermione.

"I needed something obvious." said Harry.
"They aren't round, anymore." said Remus with a smile.

"I thought you said last week that the Eyeglass shop wasn't going to be open Sunday, how did you manage to get the glasses yesterday?" asked Hermione as she watched Harry adjusting his square framed glasses.

"I only had to send her a letter for her to open shop." said Remus with a smile.

“He keeps forgetting that there are people who will drop everything for them.” said Sirius. He then ruffled Harry's hair, “He's not the only one it seems.”

"They never are." said Tonks "Oh! Sorry Dr. Clark." she said quickly looking over to the man.

"It's okay, I never knew this entire world existed." said Dr. Clark with a smile.

"Wow, wish they had told somebody over in Salem." said Dr. Clark wide eyed.

"But how do you explain not reducing to ashes?" said Dr. Clark.

"He's got a point." said a first year muggle-born.

"They apparate, leaving only the wood's ash." said Bathilda Bagshot.

"Ah." said Dr. Clark, but then his face fell. "What about the poor Muggles that were accused?"

"Aurors stepped in and rescued them, they stunned all the Muggles that were present and whisked them away, obliviated them and gave them new identities." said Bathilda.

"Well that makes me feel better." said Dr. Clark.
"There's a Wendelin the Weird Famous Witch or Wizard card that has a misprint, I heard it sold four thousand galleons." said Ron

"What made it a misprint?" asked Dean.

"Said she was set on fire about one hundred and seventeen times." said Ron.

"I don't think I'd enjoy it even once." said Dr. Clark with a smile.

Fourth paragraph, second sentence, third comma.

"Why?" asked a first year Hufflepuff.

"Let him finish and you'd find out." said Madam Bones in a hushed voice.

End of fourth paragraph.

"But you're too big to fit in there!" said Hermione shrilly.

"Wouldn't have stopped him to be perfectly honest." said Harry thoughtfully.

The people in the Great Hall turned to look at him, a muscle went in and out of Lionus' cheek.

Fifth paragraph, second sentence.

"I wouldn't even call them relatives." said Sirius with a snarl.

Fifth paragraph, third sentence.

"Medieval?" said Sirius and Remus quietly. "They wouldn't...burn you, would they?"

"They tried hurting Hedwig once, they found out right quick to not touch her again." said Harry with a smile.

"What happened?" asked Professor Flitwick.

"She clawed them and snapped at them so much that they didn't want to get anywhere near her." said Harry.

"Then what did they try?" asked Neville.

"Don't want to talk about it." said Harry quickly.

"Harry..." said Sirius worriedly.
"Don't want to talk about it." repeated Harry sternly.

Fifth paragraph, fourth sentence.

Sirius and Remus both growled fiercely.

Fifth paragraph, fifth sentence.

"Both definitions of downtrodden work here." said Professor Flitwick bitterly.

Fifth paragraph, sixth sentence.

More and more people in the Great Hall started snarling and growling.

End of fifth paragraph.

"They did much worse to you the year before, what made them not go to that extreme?" asked Blaise.

"They didn't want part of the house ripped off again." said Harry with a smile.

"What did they do the moment you got home, because of that little stunt with the car?" asked Dr. Clark.

"Lots of shouting, got smacked about, nothing major." said Harry shrugging.

It completely broke Dumbledore's heart to hear Harry speak nonchalantly about his terror filled home life.

"Albus, are you alright?" asked a far off voice. He looked up and saw everyone staring at him.

"I'm fine, I apologize." said Dumbledore, slowly picking up the book he had accidentally dropped.

Sixth paragraph, second sentence, second comma.

"And what about it made it nasty?" asked Dumbledore, as he sipped a small portion of Calming Draught, his heart was pounding and made continuing quite painful.

"It needed to be a six feet long." said Harry.

"That'll do it." said Sirius with a sour look towards the potion master.
"Sorry." Harry muttered as he rubbed the back of his head.

Snape smirked to himself.

"If you had told me how you were unable to do your work, we could have worked something out with me and the other teachers." said Professor McGonagall.

"I would have had it done, the only thing that was time-consuming was dumbing down my thoughts." said Harry.

"Well the discomfort of that summer didn't last long." said Justin with a relived smile.

"It get's worse, way worse." said Harry. "Least on my stand point."

"What kind of car was it?" asked Dr. Clark.

"I'm not sure, but it was white, four doors, sort of looked like Mr. Weasley's Ford Anglia, only the front was a bit longer." said Harry.

"And he bragged about that car?" said Dr. Clark.

"Sort of nicked one of the Ginny's hairpins." said Harry, "Forgot to give it back."

"When did you take it?" asked Ginny.

"The summer before." said Harry. "George went in your room with me and helped me find one, that's where he got his."

"Your hairpins are good luck." said George with a smile.
"It was the same place that I used to store the stuff I would go after." said Harry.

"You changed the spot?" asked Sirius.

"Uncle Vernon almost found it, had to change it." said Harry.

"Amazed you don't do the laundry." said Hermione hotly.

"Not after I shrunk one of Aunt Petunia's cocktail dresses, so it turned into a kid's dress." said Harry with a smirk. "I suck at laundry, can just barely fold clothes right."

“So...he doesn't do the laundry...” said Tonks.

“Like a bloody house-elf.” said Moody.

"When aren't they?" said Fred rolling his eyes.

"What's wrong with that?" asked Dr. Clark, "other than the Dursley's don't give you the rights that normal people have."

"They don't like the 'W' word, or anyone associated with it." said Harry.

"'W' word?" asked Sirius.

"Wizard, or Witch." said Harry.

"Albus, I think Muggle Studies should be one of the mandatory classes for third years and under, so they would at least have the muggle basics down." said McGonagall.

"I quite agree." said Dumbledore. "It would do us no good to be discovered by untrained generations in the ways of the Muggles."
"Wow, he actually sound mildly decent." said George.

"I knew this wasn't going to be good." said Harry.

Several people laughed loudly.

"His face looked really funny." said Harry.

"I thought this was how you were supposed to talk on those things." said Ron sheepishly.

"Running away only makes it worse." said Harry quietly.

"That would have been fun to do." said George with an evil smirk.
"Wonder if he meant Harry too?" asked Colin.

"Doubtful, Mr. Creevey." said McGonagall with a frown.

"What is with you and talking about spiders?" asked Ron.

People looked over to Harry fearfully.

"What happened?" asked Remus worriedly.

"Aside from a black eye, busted lip, bloody nose and lump on my head, it was only a shouting match." said Harry.

"So in short, you got the snot beat out of you." said Sirius.

"He hasn't ever actually spit on you, on purpose, has he?" asked Remus with a growl.

"Only when he talks right in my face. He never learned to say it, not spray it." said Harry.

"Yeah, your uncle didn't sound all that happy." said Ron.

"Sorry Harry, but Ron sent word to me that calling you wouldn't have been a good idea." said Hermione.
"Oh, you already guessed that." said Hermione, turning pink.

"Don't know how you were going to get around to talking to me, though." said Harry thinking hard.

"Nothing was as bad as last summer." muttered Madam Pomfrey, remembering the near starvation the poor boy suffered.

"Screw the promise, send her out to get you out of there!" said Sirius.

"He told me what would happen if he saw her with so much as a post-it note leaving the house on her leg or in her beak." said Harry. "Wasn't worth it."

"What was he going to do?" asked Hermione.

"Clip her wings, and he wasn't going to do it cleanly." said Harry.

"He couldn't sleep very well at night." said Harry with a smile.

"Poor baby." smirked Fred.

"How do you know that?" said Dennis.

"He doesn't get around to snoring till about twelve fifty-nine in the morning." said Harry.
"I needed just two more feet and then I would have been done." said Harry.

"Good hiding spot, in that pristine house no one would expect a hole in the floor." said Kingsley with a smile.

"Fished that out of the garbage, had to go to the junkyard just to find the parts I needed." said Harry.

"What's your stomach got to do with it?" asked Terry.

"Just the thought that it was my birthday and never noticed it." said Harry.

"Haven't had a decent birthday for over five years." said Harry slouching into the bowl.

"I sent you one that last year!" said Ron.

"So did I!" said Hermione.

"And me." said Hagrid.

"Dobby never gave me my letters, not even after he was sent free. He still can't remember where he hid them." said Harry.

"My faith in them died when I turned four." said Harry.
"If you’re tired, go to bed." said Zacharias rolling his eyes.

"Were the bars gone?" asked George.

"Yeah, he left them off, after you, Fred and George ripped them right off." said Harry.

"Can't find many mice around Privet Drive, especially with Mrs. Figg's cats wandering around." said Harry.

"That might have a hand in why it annoys me so much when people flinch at Voldemort's name. Reminds of what the Dursleys did." said Harry sourly.

"That's an understatement." said Sirius.

"Hey, I got taller." said Harry defensively.

"Yeah, at a cost, but you’re still as skinny as a needle." said Sirius.

"Not that you could tell in Dudley's old clothes." said Harry. "He always was taller than me by five inches. Though I'm pretty sure I'm taller than him, now."

"Not that you could tell in Dudley's old clothes." said Harry. "He always was taller than me by five inches. Though I'm pretty sure I'm taller than him, now."
"It got longer though." said Hermione.

"It was longer than any of the other boys in the dorm. Remember one night when we slipped him a sleeping potion and cut his hair?" asked Ron over to the other boys in the dorm.

"Remember when I kicked your guys' ass the next morning when I work up?" said Harry with a smirk.

End of twenty-first paragraph.

"That particular shape, it always interested me." said Dr. Nicodemus rubbing his chin.

Twenty-second paragraph, second sentence, third comma.

"Which is an insult to their memory." said Sirius with a growl.

Twenty-second paragraph, third sentence.

“Grindewald is an easy close second." said Bathilda Bagshot.

End of twenty-second paragraph.

Twenty-third paragraph, first sentence.

"Something I should never have allowed." said Dumbledore sadly.

End of twenty-third paragraph.

"You are far too young to have thoughts like that." said Tempest.

"Yeah, kids your age should only be thinking about girls, sports, and fast brooms." said Nightstrike.

Twenty-fourth paragraph, first sentence.

"She'd always get it." said Harry with a smile.
"What the hell?" asked Remus curiously.

"Good lad." said Moody appreciatively.

"Must have been Hedwig." said Seamus.

"An unconscious owl?" asked Tonks.

"Errol." said the Weasley children together.

"Oh, Ron. That was too far a trip for Errol." chided Mrs. Weasley.

"I know, but, it was Harry's birthday." said Ron apologetically.

"Your bed was probably more comfortable." said Hermione crossing her arms.

"There's no water on my bed." said Harry.

"Oh." said Hermione, unfolding her arms.

"Hope she wasn't around to hear the 'large' part." said Harry looking around, hoping for the first time not to see his beautiful white owl.

End of twenty-eighth paragraph.

Twenty-ninth paragraph, first sentence.

"I hated that piece of paper that that owl carried." said Harry.

"What's wrong with it?" asked Dr. Clark.

"You'll see." said Harry pouting slightly.

"I couldn't do anything Mr. Potter." said Professor McGonagall, no regret on her face.

"I know, but it's not often that I get to have a hissy fit for no reason." said Harry with a smile.

End of twenty-ninth paragraph.

"They always were stuck up." said Fred.

Thirtieth paragraph, first sentence, first comma.

Several boys started to snigger and laugh.

Professor McGonagall groaned and rubbed her forehead. "Adolescent boys are horrible."

Thirtieth paragraph, second sentence.

People began to snarl again, no one should be that happy to get a birthday card.

Thirtieth paragraph.

Thirty-first paragraph.

Newspaper clipping title.

"I was happy to see the picture that went with that." said Harry with a smile.

"So was I." said Sirius with malicious smile.
"Couldn’t have happened to a nicer chap." said one of the Unspeakables.

"I couldn't tell you two apart at the time." said Harry looking at Bill and Charlie.

Sirius chuckled darkly.

Mrs. Weasley sent a teary eyed smile over to Harry.

"Yeah, that was a wasted hope." said Ron sadly.

"Gee, really?" said Dean.

"Who do you think warned her about that tomb? I didn't want her having nightmares." said Bill.
"Well, we had to. You're wand was lost down underneath the school." said Mr. Weasley with a smile.

"At the moment, not all that great." said Harry.

"Too late." said Harry.

"You did look awfully important." said Harry kindly. Percy puffed out his chest.

"Why bother telling him?" asked Fred.

"Pre-warning him." said Ron.

"Thought the soup was a little crunchy." said Bill turning green. "Explains why you two were snorting over your pigeons."

"We ate pigeon?" said the twin also turning green.
"You sure are easy to please." said Leroy with a fond smile.

"What did you think happened?" asked Remus quickly.
"Maybe that he got grounded." said Hermione.

"Were you in Paris, Miss Granger?" asked Lionus with a smile.
"Um..yes sir..." said Hermione quietly.
"Under the Eiffle Tower, there is a small star shaped bolt, push that and then you get sent down underground. That's where the french version of Diagon Alley is." said Lionus with a smile.
"There's an Owl Post office in there."
"Not to mention a wonderful bakery." said Dr. Nicodemus with a fond smile.
"He's got one heck of a sweet tooth." said Lionus with a smile.

"Wish I had an owl like that." said one of third year Ravenclaws.

"Why are you so formal in your letters?" said Hannah.

"Wow, Ron. Did you learn loads?" said Fred teasingly.
"Yeah, bunch, like not to break into an Egyptian tomb." said Ron with a smirk.

\textit{Letter from Hermione, fourth paragraph.}

"He doesn't read them anyway," said Sirius with a laugh.

"How do you?" said Hermione disdainfully.

"We found out." said Sirius and Remus together.

"James wrote about seven feet of the filthiest jokes ever thought of by a third year." said Sirius with a laugh.

"He didn't even tell James off for it. Binns doesn't read the homework." said Remus with a smile.

"That will change, as you are now the new History teacher." said McGonagall with a proud smile.

Remus turned pink slightly and smiled.

\textit{Letter from Hermione, fifth paragraph, third sentence.}

"No." said most of the people in the Great Hall.

\textit{End of Hermione's Letter}

"What made you think that?" asked Charlie with a smirk.

\textit{Thirty-ninth paragraph, third sentence, first dash.}

"What else would she give someone?" asked Marietta.

Hermione looked smug.

\textit{End of thirty-ninth paragraph.}

"How's that for a birthday present?" said Hermione looking smug at everyone staring at her.

"That's a good one." said Sirius with a smile.
Sirius whistled. "Good present." he repeated slowly.

"Crazy nuts." said Madam Pomfrey shaking her head.

Dumbledore and McGonagall smiled at each other.

"It's not what I think it is, is it?" asked Bathida.

"It is." said Professor McGonagall knowing the author very well.

"Sorry, Hagrid." said Harry sincerely.

"It's alright, after Aragog, I guess I'm not all that sure." said Hagrid sadly.

"They just weren't loyal to you." said Nightstrike kindly.

"Don't blame you." said Sirius in a whisper.

They couldn't help it, the people in the Great Hall laughed, as well as Hagrid.
"Shouldn't Hermione's and Hagrid's gift be switched?" asked a seventh year Slytherin.

People laughed even harder.

"Hope that Uncle Vernon didn't wake up," said Colin quietly.

"It chased any noise anything in my room made." said Harry.

"Were you okay?" asked Sirius, not finding it funny anymore.

"Yeah, just a bite mark on the top of my hand." said Harry.

"Good, he's still sleeping." said Remus heaving a relieved sigh.
"Beats my idea for tape." said one of the other fifth years.

End of forty-eighth paragraph.

Hagrid's card.

Forty-ninth paragraph, first sentence, first comma.

Harry gave a shamed smile up to Hagrid, but Hagrid only smiled gently back.

Forty-ninth paragraph, end of first sentence.

"I went from no cards to three in one night." said Harry.

End of forty-ninth paragraph.

Fiftieth paragraph.

Letter from Hogwarts.

"The Dursleys aren't going sign that." said Tonks sadly.

Fifty-first paragraph, first sentence.

"I had the same thought." said Harry with a sad smile.

End of fifty-first paragraph.

"Too bad you can't use blackmail." said Moody.

"Alastor!" shouted McGonagall.

"Actually..." said Harry with a smile.

Professor McGonagall groaned loudly as Moody laughed loudly.

Fifty-second paragraph.
"I stopped doing that after first year." said Zacharias with smirk.

"Wow, that chapter was sort of...not all that bad." said Remus.

"Shall we take a break for lunch?" asked Dumbledore with a smile.

Suddenly the door opened and in came the winged man from earlier that day, he shoved a long blonde haired man into the Great Hall.

"Here he is Captain." said the man standing behind the frightened looking man and shoving the man forward again.

"Hello, Lucius Malfoy, thanks for coming by. I'd like to have a word with you." said Captain Lionus standing up with a smirk on his face.

Chapter End Notes

Thanks for reading Please review.
The Cost of Inflation

Chapter Notes

I don't own Harry Potter.

See the end of the chapter for more notes

Lionus motioned for Mr. Weasley to follow him, and led the three people into the spare classroom across the hall. Twice along the way, the Ranger that had brought Lucius had to restrain Mr. Weasley from pummeling every inch of Malfoy he could reach.

"Well, this is will serve our purposes just fine. " said Lionus. "Now Mr. Lucius, I believe that you have some retribution coming back to you."

"Don't know what you are talking about." said Lucius stiffly, trying to sound aloof, but failing miserably.

"Do we have his wand, Darkhunt?" asked Lionus.

"Yes, sir. I have it." said Darkhunt, twirling the wand around his fingers.

"Good, and," he snapped his fingers and suddenly another wand came shooting out of the folds of Mr. Weasley's robes and landed gently into Lionus' hands. "There now the odds are evened. Mr. Weasley, if you wish?"

"What do you mean?" asked Mr. Weasley, he was too busy snarling at Lucius to even pay attention to the fact that his wand was gone.

"Have at him; pummel him to your heart's content. I'll give you ten minutes, but no more." said Lionus leaving the room. "Darkhunter, make sure they play nice. I'm going to go back to the Great Hall, there's someone I need to talk to."

"Yes sir." said Darkhunter saluting and smiling at the first uppercut that was delivered to Lucius.

Lionus went back to the Great Hall and smiled as all the eyes of the students, teachers and guests were staring up at him. Then a whirl of yellow came up to meet him, but a quick shove sent the yellow blur back flying.
"Let me go!" said young Mr. Malfoy angrily.

"Now why would you want to go in there?" said Lionus with a smirk.

"That's my father!" said Draco angrily.

"Well aware of it. Your father is getting his due, and he should consider himself lucky that I'm not going to kill him or imprison him." said Lionus.

"Why the hell aren't you going to arrest him?" shouted Bill.

"I think life without magical abilities is punishment enough, don't you?" said Lionus to Bill with a broad smile.

"Wait..What?" said Malfoy weakly.

"Your father is no more powerful than a Squib now." said Lionus. "The Ranger that's with him now has a very peculiar ability. If he gets ahold of your wand, your magic is done for. Until he releases the magic from his body. Deal with it, unless he does something in these books or beyond, he isn't getting his powers back. Besides, if you go in there, you'll only see your dad get the shit beaten out of him."

"You're letting Arthur use magic on him?" said Kingsley with a shocked expression.

"Nope, he's using his fists and his feet." said Lionus tossing Mr. Weasley's wand into the air lightly. "I'm not so foolish as to let him use magic."

"I would have." snarled Moody.

"And that is what separates you and me." said Lionus with a smirk.

"Now, boys, don't start fighting, you may find it not in your best interests." said Dr. Nicodemus, sending a pointed look over to Harry.

Immediately they stopped.

Then, Mr. Weasley came back into the Great Hall, sweat pouring off his forehead and had a large smile on his face.

"You finished up quickly." said Lionus with a smile.

"That felt great!" said Mr. Weasley rubbing his knuckles. "Oh, your Ranger left."

"I know, he's taking Mr. Malfoy back home. He should find out really soon that he won't be able to even use the most basic of wandless magic." said Lionus with a smirk.

"Why didn't you keep him here for the readings?" asked Tempest.

"I've got enough to keep an eye on, don't need another person to babysit." said Lionus.

"Well, let's get a move on, shall we?" said Dr. Nicodemus. "I'm quite eager to see what Harry has going on this coming year."

"Who'd like to start reading this time?" asked Dumbledore.

"I'll do it." said Tonks raising her hand.
"Bad idea." muttered Harry.

"Second Chapter" said Tonks loudly.

"Who's that?" asked Dr. Nicodemus.

"Uncle Vernon's sister. I hate her guts." said Harry.

"Harry, remember our talk on hate?" said Dr. Clark warningly.

"Yeah, I know." said Harry grumbling.

First paragraph, first sentence.

"Did you get in trouble for not making breakfast?" asked Hermione fearfully.

"No, it was Thursday, that's the day that Aunt Petunia tries out her cooking classes." said Harry. "Most she can do is toast and scrambled eggs though."

First paragraph, second sentence, second comma.

"He got a TV? All we get are kisses and hugs from Great Aunt Winifred." said Colin.

First paragraph, end of second sentence.

"Do I want to know how far away it is?" said Madam Pomfrey.

"It's right in the next room, not even ten feet away." said Harry with a smirk.

"Sweet Merlin." said Mrs. Weasley.

"Should have taken him to that track meet." said Dr. Clark shaking his head.

"He wouldn't have gone." said Harry. "Unless they had made an all you can eat buffet."

First paragraph, third sentence, first comma.

"I had to make triple recipes of anything I wanted to make." said Harry.

"Why triple recipes?" asked Seamus.

"Cause he ate the first two batches." said Harry.

"Holy crap." said Dean.

"Crabbe and Goyle have nothing on him." said Harry with a smirk. The two bullies of the scowl looked at him stupidly, not even attempting to follow the conversation.
There wasn't a hand in the Great Hall that didn't touch the bottom part of their chins.

"How could you fit?" asked Sirius.
"I'm skinny, that's the only way I could fit." said Harry with a smile.

"Ugh, quit describing him." said Ginny squirming and gagging.

"Don't even start singing!" said Harry looking around sternly.

"That's all you had for breakfast?" shrieked Mrs. Weasley.
"I didn't even get that, but it was my own fault." said Harry.

"Wow, are they talking about me?" said Sirius.
"Yeah." said Harry.
"Why?" asked Sirius wonderingly.
"Extra eyes, Mr. Black." said Madam Bones. "Too bad it didn't really work."
Sirius stared at her.
"Not that...not what I meant to say." she said hastily.

"You were armed?" said Dr. Nicodemus, "how did that come about?"
"Stole it from a wizard, never realized it was gone, till way later." said Sirius.
"You always did have quick fingers. He used to pick our pockets all the time for laughs." said Remus with a smirk.

"So that's what happened to Cadogans' wand." giggled Tonks.

End of dialogue set.

"Which went straight to the Ministry of Magic didn't it?" said Bill with a smirk.

"Of course." said Kingsley with a smirk.

"Not one person that called led us anywhere, all nutters." said Tonks.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

"I'm going to be your worst nightmare, Vernie." said Sirius with a smirk.

"You already are. I mentioned you a few times last summer and this past summer." said Harry with a bright smile.

"Good boy." said Sirius with a smirk.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

"Well excuse me, they don’t have showers in Azkaban." said Sirius with a frown.

End of dialogue set.

"Don't remind me, I looked horrible." said Sirius shaking his head.

"Narcissist." muttered Remus smirking.

Third paragraph, first sentence.

"Wonder what he would say about it now?" said Harry with a smirk. “Probably call me a punk receiver.”

“A what?” asked Ginny.

“Never you mind.” said Harry with a laugh.
"You're picking a fight with the wrong Marauder, kid." said Sirius giving Harry a shove.

"Aww, come on! I warranted only about thirty seconds?" said Sirius pouting.

"At least your more news worthy than a warning about the rising price of beef and fish." said Harry with a smirk.

"Who cares, he was supposed to be a dangerous man!" said Tonks.

"Supposed to be?" said Sirius crossing his arms. "I think I'm pretty dangerous to the Death Eaters."

"Don't tell me you're going to be sensitive the entire book?" said Remus.

"How does knowing where he's escaped from going to help you protect yourself against him?" said Kingsley.

"He hates it when people don't tell him the full story." said Harry. "He called the television station and told them off."

"What did they do about his complaint?" asked Sirius.

"Ridiculed him in front of thousands of viewers." said Harry with a smile. "It was beautiful."

"What is she trying to do?" asked Hermione.

"See if she could see Sirius come strolling up the sidewalk." said Harry with a smile.

"She calls almost every single hotline that asks for information. Cops hate it when they see her name on their I.D."

"Boring is the best way to put it. They're about as exciting as watching grass grow." said Harry.

"That's the signal to agree with whatever the heck he says." said Harry.

"From shoplifters, to murderers." chanted Harry. "Same thing every time someone escapes from somewhere."

"If hanging is the only way, let's give him a dose of it, he's one of those kind of people." said Remus with a cruel smile.

"What's she looking for? Bad beans?" said Ron.

"You must really not like her." said Luna dreamily. "If your mind comes crashing down like that."

Neville stared, "Wow, you actually stuttered."

"What else would you have called her?" asked Ron.

"Well, the one name that I can actually call her, in a room full of adults, is Miss. Dursley." said Harry with a cute smile.

"No surprise she isn't married." muttered Kingsley. "If she's anything like her brother and what you've said."
"As ordered by a judge to manage her anger issues." said Harry. "I learned that from Inspector Homes."

"She has a gardener." said Harry. "She hates dirt."

"If she has anger issues, how does she have the ability to raise dogs." said Hermione.

"They're a special kind of guard dog." said Harry.

Sirius turned and looked at Harry in horror.

"Harry?" said Sirius worriedly.

Harry leaned against Sirius heavily. "Wish I could fall asleep right now." he muttered.

Sirius and Remus each put an arm around his shoulders.

Mrs. Weasley turned and looked horrified at Harry.

"Sort of hard to stand frozen in place when someone is fracturing your ankles." muttered Harry.

"Wasn't even the good kind." said Harry. "She gave me the chicken liver flavor. She could have at least gotten the ham bones. They've got meat on it at least."

"That's not funny." said Dr. Clark looking at Harry in shock.

"Who's being funny, I'm dead serious." said Harry.

"You ate dog biscuits? said Ron in amazement.

"Locked in a cupboard, with no food for who knows how long? I'll eat anything that even remotely looks like food. I'm not picky. I'm picky about what I serve, but not what I eat." said Harry.

"Also explains why you hate waste." said Luna. "You know what it's like to be hungry and you..."
appreciate the value of food."

"Unless we get a dog, we're not having any dog food in the house." said Remus.

"That's too bad, those ham bones are good." said Harry with a smirk.

Ninth paragraph, third sentence.

Wasn't the first time." said Harry shaking his head.

Ninth paragraph, fourth sentence.

"You have got to be kidding me!" said Dean.

"What time did you get sent up the tree?" said Hermione, her eyes flashing.

"Little bit after lunch." said Harry. Growls, snarls and promises of bodily harm to the Dursley's erupted around the hall.

End of ninth paragraph.

"He's a dead duck." said Fred.

"He's a dead over-stuffed duck." said George.

Dialogue set.

"Don't tell me he's going to tell you to behave! From the sounds of it, she starts it!" said Charlie.

"She does, she loves winding me up." said Harry.

Tenth paragraph.

"That boy needs a severe talking to." said Professor Sprout angrily.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"You're giving the man that can smack the sense out of you, cheek?" said Sirius in amazement.
"Thankfully." said Remus.

Snape rolled his eyes and rubbed his forehead. "Keep pushing your luck, Potter."

"That means you are way too close to getting the snot beaten out of you." said Bill warningly.

"What?" shouted the people in the Great Hall.

"I know that place." said Nightstrike. "Thank goodness you aren't in there. Those people are vicious. They steal, lie, assault and cheat, and that's just the teachers!"

"You hurt him and I'll make trouble for you." muttered Dumbledore darkly.

Harry smiled warmly at his headmaster. "That I would love to have seen."

"You are getting spoiled on your birthday, next year." said Uncle Rudolph through gritted teeth. "Party, presents, vacation, everything."

“Horses, dogs, cats, birds, anything in the muggle world you want, you’re getting.” said Leroy darkly.

“Even a unicorn if we can get one.” said Rudolph sternly.

“I’ll settle for the small party thanks…” said Harry with a twinge of red in his cheeks.
"Not when the TV is on." said Harry.

Dialogue line.

"That boy will come to no good." muttered Madam Bones.

Dialogue line.

"I've only seen one guy who can wear ties, on anyone else they look sort of stupid." said Leroy.

"Who would that be?" asked Harry, he sent a pointed look at his Uncle Rudolph.

"Believe it or not, it's not him." said Leroy. "You don't know him."

Twelfth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Thirteenth paragraph, first sentence, second comma.

You don't freeze in front of trolls, dark wizards, three headed dogs, giant spiders or basilisks but you lock up at the thought of this Aunt Marge coming for a visit." laughed Seamus, some other students laughed as well, but then they slowly stopped laughing.

"Hang on, if..." said Seamus and he looked over horrified at Harry who was looking down at the floor.

Thirteenth paragraph, second sentence, first comma.

"Dudley snatched it up the moment I turned away." said Harry.

End of thirteenth paragraph.

"You're going to ride along?" said Hannah in shock.

"Nope, but I had a plan, and it would have worked, but with Aunt Marge..." said Harry with a snarl.

Fourteenth paragraph.
"As if he's taken me anywhere, just the two of us." said Harry with a laugh.

"You're going to ask him about the Hogsmede visits?" said Terry, his eyes wide.

"Wow, you've got guts asking him." said Tonks.

Lionus rubbed his chin and had a mysterious smile on his face. "You blackmailed him, eh?"
"With you and Madam Bones sitting here, I think I'll call it a business deal." said Harry.
All the law enforcement officers sniggered and chuckled warmly.

"I'd enjoy it too." said Sirius with a laugh.

"You'd make a devious criminal." said Tempest shaking her long mane-like hair and smiling.

"If he so much as looks at you threateningly I'll do worse than just raise my fist to him." said Sirius.
"No, but it would land you in the hospital." said Remus worriedly.

"He went back on his word didn't he?" asked Neville, who remembered that Harry hadn't been able to go to Hogsmede that year.

"Doubt he would have followed through with that promise." said Dr. Clark.

"Yeah, but it gave me a motivation to try and behave, and I would have threatened not to have cooked at all after that, that would have set him right, right away." said Harry with a smirk. "Don't come between Uncle Vernon and his Jammy Dodgers."

"That man needs anger management really bad." said Nightstrike.

"If he ever gets out of prison." said Madam Bones with an evil smile.

"How the hell are you going to do that?" asked Blaise.

"Hide anything and everything magical related." said Harry.

"At least when you come home for the summer, you won't have to hide your homework under the floor." said Sirius with a wide smile.

"So what was your room like?" asked Hermione in a whisper.
"It's awesome, this summer you guys have got to come over and stay a while." said Harry whispering back.

"They can come and stay anytime they like. We got plenty of guest rooms." said Sirius hearing the whispered conversation.

End of nineteenth paragraph.

"I hated to wake them up, after the long flights they both had." said Harry regretfully.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

"She never came to us. Errol was home when we got there, but she never came." said Ron.

"I think she was just hanging around, hunting and enjoying a bit of a vacation from me." said Harry with a smile.

Dialogue set, third sentence.

"I got it, but I didn't see Hedwig." said Ron. "Wonder how she managed to get the letter off?"

"She can, I don't know how either." said Harry with a laugh.

End of dialogue set.

"Aunt Marge only likes dogs, she hates any other kind of animal. Knowing her, she would have sicced Ripper on her, and I didn't want that to happen." said Harry.

Twentieth paragraph.

Too bad it didn't have a good side to it. Thought Harry miserably.

Twenty-first paragraph.

"Welcome?" scoffed Harry. "Have me present so she can ridicule and bully me is more like it."

Dialogue line.

"Have you seen his hair lately? You can't do a dang thing to it." said Ernie with a laugh.
“Hey, now, yes I can.” said Harry pouting slightly.

“Like what?” said Zacharias with a sneer.

Harry sighed, he didn’t really want to, but just prove him wrong…he’d do anything. He sent a pointed look over to a little girl with a pair of braids.

“Alright then.” said Harry.

She smiled with ecstasy and hurried behind him.

“Just one.” said Harry as he lifted his hair and let it drape behind the bowl. In a few moments, his long hair that was now almost always in a long pony tail, was now in a long braid.

“How’s that for you?” said Harry with a smile as he thanked the first year Slytherin girl.

“I’m amazed you trusted her.” muttered Draco.

“She asked nicely, I said I’d think about it.” said Harry with a shrug. He didn’t want to say out loud that if she had tried anything funny, the men in the bowl would have stopped her.

Twenty-second paragraph.

"Sounds like an absolutely lovely week you're going to have." said Fred.

Twenty-third paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"And straighten you butler suit!” said George.

"I was going to say pillowcase." muttered Charlie. "He's treated more like a slave than a servant."

Twenty-fourth paragraph.

Twenty-fifth paragraph, first sentence, first dash.

Several people gagged and laughed hysterically.

Twenty-fifth paragraph, end of first sentence.

"Oh my god!” said Lavender weakly.

End of twenty-fifth paragraph.
"Evil tempered? That's a huge understatement." said Harry rolling his eyes.

Dialogue line.

The students howled with laughter.

Twenty-sixth paragraph, first sentence.

"Could just tell what color it was." said Harry with a smirk.

Twenty-sixth paragraph, second sentence, second comma.

Sirius gave his godson a little squeeze while his arm was around his godson's shoulder.

"Whoa Mom, didn't know you could be so violent." said Bill taking a step back away from his muttering mother.

End of twenty-sixth paragraph.

"Bet Dudley loved getting all the attention." said Tonks with a growl.

Twenty-seventh paragraph.

"Horrid child, he should love all the adoration he's getting." said Madam Hooch angrily.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

"A hat-stand would have a better life than what I've got going on." said Harry.

"How about recently?" said Remus with a smile.

"Life is better." said Harry, "Now if the whole Voldemort thing would just get fixed then I'd be sitting pretty."

End of dialogue set.

Twenty-eighth paragraph.
"Water, you moron." said Charlie shaking his head.

"You don't give a dog tea." said Charlie shaking his head.

"Heave?" said Rivers sitting forward in his chair.

"I swear she packs half of the stuff she owns in there." said Harry.

"Who made the fruitcake." said Neville.

"I did, Aunt Petunia tries to subtlety make me make extra food. If I had known she was coming, I would have made my food halfway decent, she's not good enough for the best cooking." said Harry.

"Have you gone all out on cooking yet?" asked Ginny.

"Well, every time I've cooked here, I've gone all out." said Harry shrugging.

"There isn't an animal she does like." said Harry.

"What about that parrot that Dudley had?" asked Charlie.

"Uncle Vernon said he could have it, and it was in a cage so the rest of her house wouldn't have gotten destroyed." said Harry.

"What's he like?" asked Charlie.
"He's halfway decent, but he's bullied by her all the time, she fancies him." said Harry with a dry chuckle. "He can't stand her."

"Why doesn't he just not be around her?" asked Hermione.

"He's her boarder. He pays less rent if he helps out around the place and she charges a lot per month, he could barely make ends meet before he broke down and helped her out about the place." said Harry.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

"Translation: he's got to do it and do it right by the time she gets home." said Harry.

End of dialogue set.

"I pine when your here." said Harry to the snicker of the students.

Thirtieth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"Who the hell did you think took your suitcase you stupid old..." said Mrs. Weasley.

"Molly!" said Mr. Weasley staring at his wife in shock.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

"Who's opinion is that?" said Dr. Clark with a shocked look.

End of dialogue set.

"I would have thanked my lucky stars if you had sent me to an orphanage instead of you keeping me." said Harry.

Thirty-first paragraph.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

"She's delusional." said Ron shaking his head.
"I always had manners, it's just you didn't deserve them." said Harry shrugging.

"Did you have mention that again." said Lavender with a disgusted look.

"Not where he was hoping." said Colin with a laugh.

"You seem to mention the cane quite a bit." said McGonagall with a slight whimper.

"It's her favorite form of punishment." said Harry. "And boy does she love doing it every chance she gets, whether I've been good or bad around her."

The people around the Great Hall blanched.

The Rangers closed their eyes…how they wished their rules were different.

"That..." growled Sirius as his grip on his godson's shoulders tightened.

"That sadistic bitch." snarled Ginny.

"Ginny!" said Mr. Weasley, he had to say it because his wife was muttering darkly to herself and not paying the least bit of attention to what her children were saying.
"What has he ever done to you?" said Sirius, then he looked at Harry. "What have you done to her, to make her hate you so much?"

"Dudley put a frog in her soup, and she blamed me." said Harry. "She really hates frogs."

"Sounds like something we should remember doesn't it Fred?" said George with a wide smile.

"What I wouldn't give to arrest that woman." said Tonks through gritted teeth.

"I know, but that damned law is standing in our way." said Kingsley his hand tightened it's grip on his wand.

"And just by his sadistic uncle." said George.

"Foul...vile...evil..." muttered Mrs. Weasley as Dumbledore drained another phial of Calming Draught.
"Lots of bad words and pretty much the same as Uncle Vernon, though she whispered to Aunt Petunia that if you had a little more weight and a haircut you looked cute." said Harry.

It took a little while for Sirius to come back to the Great Hall after he ran to the bathroom to be violently sick.

Thirty-fifth paragraph, first sentence.

"Wow, that gotta suck." said Dean shaking his head.

Thirty-fifth paragraph, third sentence.

"Yeah, Harry, you have so much room to improve!" said Fred.
"Yeah, you need to gain about two hundred pounds," said George.
"Beat people up for no real reason." said Fred.
"Grow a mustache." said Lee.
"And lose the good looks." said Ginny adding her two knuts in.
“Then you’d be just like her precious Dudders.” said the little group together.

Thirty-fifth paragraph, fourth sentence, first comma.

"No contest, Harry's better in every shape and form." said Lavender with a smirk.

Thirty-fifth paragraph, end of fourth sentence.

"Gave that up after she had come to visit about three times." said Harry.
"That's emotional and mental abuse." growled Madam Pomfrey.

End of thirty-fifth paragraph.

"Harry?" asked Leroy leaning forward in the sofa he and Uncle Rudolph were sitting in.
"I stopped listening to her after a while." said Harry.
"But you listened to her for a while." said Uncle Rudolph sadly.
"Only a few years." said Harry.

Dialogue line.

Harry placed a hand on his chest and then looked over to Dumbledore. Dumbledore met his eyes and shook his head quickly.

Thirty-sixth paragraph, first sentence.

"I'm starting to feel sorry for that lady, when Harry blows up at you..." said Fred.

"It aint pretty." said Lee.

"And you'll promise him whatever he wants to get him to stop." said George.

End of thirty-sixth paragraph.

Thirty-seventh paragraph.

"Wonderful, she's getting drunk, things can only get better." said Professor Flitwick, his face getting red with restrained anger.

Dialogue line.

The entire school went deadly silent. Not even one of the coarser Slytherins said a single word.

"She didn't say that." said Hermione in shock.

"Yeah, she did." said Ron.

"That horrible....she makes Umbridge seem human!" shrieked Ginny.

Snape's face was tense and white with fury.

Remus, Sirius, Leroy and Uncle Rudolph were occupying their time by planning on how they were going to go about cursing Marge Dursley to hell.

“This is starting to be fun again.” said Harry listening to a few of their plans.

Dumbledore made a mental note to request Severus to brew a few more Calming Draughts, he was quickly running out.

Thirty-eighth paragraph, first sentence.
"What happened?" asked Zacharias.

"Who cares?" said most of the students, "she earned it."

End of thirty-eighth paragraph.

"Did any glass hit her?" asked Sirius gleefully.

"She had some shrapnel in her hair." said Harry with a smirk.

Dialogue line.

"Hope not." said Kingsley.

Dialogue set.

"Wow, we really do come up with stupid excuses to explain magic." said Dr. Clark with a laugh.

Thirty-ninth paragraph.

"Harry, you really shouldn't be skipping meals." said Mrs. Weasley, calming down enough to speak normally and not speak in hisses.

"I just needed some air." said Harry.

Fortieth paragraph, second sentence.

"You've made something explode before?" asked Sirius.

"It was the Dursley's television. He knocked me for a loop big time." said Harry.

People looked at him with a horrified look.

Fortieth paragraph, third sentence.

For three different reasons. thought Harry.
"That and he'd beat the snot out of you." said Remus.

"Can you read minds?" whispered Harry.

"No, why?" asked Remus.

"Nothing." said Harry.

"That wasn't your fault, Mr. Potter." said Madam Bones stiffly.

"He has more mental strength than all of them put together." said Rivers with a scowl.

"Thank goodness, I don't want to hear about her anymore." said Dr. Clark.

"She cooked the dinner?" asked Remus.

"She reheated it, she went around to the different catering businesses and picked them all up." said Harry.

"Why not have you cook?" asked Sirius.

"Uncle Vernon figured that I was doing enough keeping my end of the deal, he gave me a week off." said Harry.
"Wasn't even his best stuff, he's a miser with his wine." said Harry shaking his head.

"What did she talk about?" asked Tonks.

"Her dogs and Colonel Fubster." said Harry.

"Only Aunt Marge and Aunt Petunia found it mildly interesting." said Harry.

"She was getting really close to being smashed." said Harry.

"Lovely, as if she wasn't bad enough sober." muttered Professor McGonagall.

"Her small one is equal to a completely full wine glass." said Harry.

"I actually made that, it was in the freezer." said Harry.

"Why did she use one of your pies?" asked Hermione.

"Dudley ate the three she had bought." said Harry with a smirk. "She had to break into her stash of premade food."
"Why do you mention that?" asked Zacharias. "Seems stupid."

"She only does that in front of guests, other than that, she doesn't act all that dainty." said Harry with a smirk.

End of forty-sixth paragraph.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

"Oh, she's a lady." said Madam Hooch.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

"Yeah, good job of opening your purse and taking out the money." said George rolling his eyes.

Dialogue set, third sentence, first comma.

"She cooks worse than Aunt Petunia." said Harry.

Dialogue set, fourth sentence.

"I'm never burping again." said the twins.

“Thank goodness.” said Mrs. Weasley with a laugh.

Dialogue set, fifth sentence.

"Then why are you looking at Dudley?" asked Bill.

"It's strange, one is too big, and the other one is too skinny, there isn't anyone in that house that is the right weight." said Luna thoughtfully.

Dialogue set, sixth sentence.

"That isn't proper sized." said Dr. Clark.
"I get the feeling this time that 'focus on something else' doesn't work." said Sirius.

"Who's fault was that!" shrieked Madam Pomfrey.

Quite a few girls whimpered at that, Sirius too.

"But the runts of the litter are the cutest." whimpered Hannah.

"And who's the breeder?" said Remus.

Several Slytherins looked between themselves and shuffled their feet nervously.

"Yes she is." said Ron.

"She wasn't the one that was the bad egg." snarled Snape quietly.

"Wastrel?" shouted Remus and Sirius.

"Where does she live, Harry? We'll..." said Sirius.
"Please don't, I would rather not have you arrested now." said Madam Bones.

Forty-ninth paragraph, first sentence.

"That's called rage," said Mr. Weasley.

End of forty-ninth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"He was the best Auror I ever trained." said Mad-Eye Moody.

Fiftieth paragraph.

"Never ask about my parents, that was a main rule at Privet Drive." said Harry.

Dialogue line.

"He did too work! He didn't need to but he helped protect his fellow wizards and witches, especially during the war!" said Remus.

"That is until he went into hiding, but he would have gone on missions had he of been able." said Dumbledore.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

"When she gets drunk her manners go right out the window, not that she had much manners to start with." said Harry.

End of dialogue set.

"HE WAS NOT!" shouted Remus, and Sirius.

Dialogue line.

Fred and George whistled loudly.
"Gladly." said Sirius, "Get away from her."

End of dialogue set.

"James only went drinking once a month with us! Sure it was all weekend but still!" shouted Sirius. "He stayed at 'Night's Rest' the entire time!"

"He never even flew drunk, except for that one time but it was a toy broomstick.." said Remus. "We've got that on muggle film if you want to see it." he whispered to Dr. Clark, but Harry heard it too.

"These sound like stories I want to hear about." said Harry with a smile.

"You sure? Might tarnish the saintly view of your dad." said Sirius with a smirk.

Harry snorted. "Saintly? Dad was far from saintly."

"Kids should think they're parents are perfect." said Remus.

"Mom was perfect, dad wasn't." said Harry. "Dad was a troublemaker and prankster." said Harry with a smile.

"Close to perfect in my book." said Sirius with a laugh.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set, second sentence, first comma.

"Decent? They aren't decent!" said Ron angrily.

Dialogue set, end of second sentence.

Suddenly Ron stopped being so angry and a wide grin stretched across his face.

End of dialogue set.

Fifty-first paragraph, second sentence.

"This is going to be good." said Tempest taking the hint from Ron.

Fifty-first paragraph, third sentence,
"Beautiful." said Lionus laughing loudly.

End of fifty-first paragraph.

The students cheered loudly as the teachers and guests began to clap. "Bout time!" shouted the twins.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

"Yay! You turned her into the world's ugliest balloon!" shouted Colin.

End of dialogue set.

"How did he know to come in barking?" asked Ernie.

"People shouting and Aunt Petunia's screaming called him to the dining room." said Harry. "It's what Aunt Marge trains them for."

Dialogue line.

Fifty-second sentence, first sentence.

"Wow, that must have been a hell of a lot of hot air." said Neville.

End of fifty-second paragraph.

"Good boy!' shouted Sirius.

Fifty-third paragraph, first sentence, first comma.

I had just about had it." said Harry.

Fifty-third paragraph, second sentence.

"Your core was going haywire." said Dr. Nicodemus with a proud smile.

Fifty-third paragraph, fifth sentence, second comma.
"It sounds like you're evacuating." said Sirius.

"That's exactly what I was doing." said Harry.

End of fifty-third paragraph.

"Nothing that he didn't deserve." growled Professor Sprout.

Dialogue line.

"She was never right to start with." said Bill.

Fifty-fourth paragraph, second sentence, first comma.

"I just about broke my toe pulling that stunt." said Harry.

End of fifty-fourth paragraph.

"Whoa Nellie." said Sirius. "You need to work on that temper."

"Hey, it was the first time that I blew up at him." said Harry.

Presence line.

Fifty-fifth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"Is that when the wards broke down?" asked Sirius quietly to Remus.

"It couldn't be, Dedalus managed to find him, so it would have to have been before he turned ten or so." said Remus.

End of chapter.

"So you left the safety of your house, with a mass-murderer on the loose, only because someone insulted your father?" said Snape rolling his eyes. "Ridiculous."

"As much as I hate to admit it, he does have a point." said McGonagall. “Though the woman was horrible, you shouldn’t have left the house with a supposed killer on the loose.”

"I know, but it was worth it, and I don't regret it." said Harry.
The adults in the room went silent and looked amongst themselves quickly. They were proud that Harry stood up for himself and that he defended his father, but not regretting using magic on a muggle was going over the line just a tad. She was a horrid woman yes, but to not regret it just a bit?

“But you wouldn’t do it again, would you?” said Dumbledore slowly.

“In a heartbeat.” said Harry dully.

Another thick silence happened amongst the adults.

"So when did this happen? Year before last?” said Remus asking Harry innocently.

"You know it did.” said Harry looking confused.

"So it was only a year and a half ago or so.” said Remus.

"Yeah?” said Harry.

"Little closer than…say…three or four years ago?” said Remus. "So you can't exactly yell and debate with me if I tell you off."

"What? Why?” said Harry in shock. "You don't like her either and you were clapping when you found out what happened."

"Yeah, but you don't regret it and you'd do it again. That can be considered magical assault on a Muggle.” said Remus. "And we sort of like to discourage that kind of behavior in young wizards.

Harry began to stutter and stammer.

"This weekend, no Hogsmede, no Night's Rest, no kitchens and no dates. You stay in the castle, in our suite, all weekend.” said Remus.

Harry looked at Remus in shock and looked at Sirius and Dumbledore.

"You're on your own, you did say it, maybe not the whole ‘you'd do it again' but you did sort of cross the line just a bit.” said Sirius guiltily. "I can’t help you here, and I sort of agree with him.”

"On what? You...” said Harry looking betrayed.

“I said ‘sort of.’” said Sirius quickly. "The grounding is…little heavy…but as far as I know you didn’t have any real plans…so…it can just be us talking about James and Lily so that’s alright.” he added trying to soothe Harry’s ire towards them.

"The thing that bothers us, is that you say you don't regret it.” said Dumbledore. "That's what the small problem is, and the need to correct that line of thinking. I know she was someone who easily deserved some retribution, but…you being so young, you shouldn’t feel that way.”

“If you had said, I don’t regret blowing up and nothing further, then we’d be fine and wouldn’t think anything more about it, but willing to do it again, at such a young age is a bit much.” said Madam Bones.

“But he...he steered the conversation! He asked!” said Harry. “Isn’t there some law or something?”

"One weekend, no going anywhere." repeated Remus. "I’ll let you out into the castle, but not on the Harry racked his brain to think of a way out of getting grounded this weekend, but he couldn't. This wasn’t fair, this was entrapment!

"And..." said Remus.

"More?" said Harry.

"I want a three foot long essay on why what you did was wrong and what you could have done instead." said Remus.

"It was accidental magic! I couldn't stop it!" said Harry. They had to pick right now to try and ground him. He kept dancing around and avoiding the trouble, testing his boundaries, but he didn’t expect them to just gang up on him like this. During the school year reading, he expected it to come, hell he wouldn’t have a problem with it and he would have been disappointed if they didn’t try, but this was during the summer! They were supposed to be on his side!

"Calming down, there's one thing you could have done instead." said Remus. "I want it by Monday morning." said Remus.

Essay? What is he a teacher again? thought Harry viciously.

Harry stood up and walked over to Hermione and asked her. "Can you make me a chair?" He was pissed; he didn’t want them to tell him off for summer stuff, school stuff, sure. He welcomed it, but summer was off limits.

"Harry...I think it's best if you sit with your family... I mean..." said Hermione quietly.

"I'll make you a chair kid." said Lionus quickly. Suddenly a large wooden throne like chair appeared and landed in the middle of the room. "There you go."

Harry dragged his chair over to a secluded part of the Great Hall and sat down in the chair, but not before yanking his phoenix blanket off the floor and went over to his new seat.

"Harry..." said Remus tiredly. He didn’t want to act this way, he supposed that it was mostly his fault, he should have spoken to him, or taken him aside, he was new at this and he couldn’t help it. He had a lot to learn, and he didn’t want Harry mad at him.

"Leave him be." said Dr. Nicodemus.

"Trust us in that aspect, he just needs time to think and mull things over." said Lionus.

"He can do that over here." said Sirius pointing down at the empty space in the bowl and looking hurt.

"Not when the person that grounded him is sitting right next to him." said Nightstrike.

"Well, right now, he's just acting like a spoiled child not getting his way." muttered Hermione. Ron stared at her.

“What the hell?” said Ron. What was Hermione thinking? Was she trying to ruin everything? He wasn’t all that mentally on board with either of them when they went all out, but even he knew not to cross that line, especially after what he did last year!

"You sort of are Harry." said Remus.
Ron turned and stared at Remus next, were they all losing their minds?

Dr. Clark stood up and inched away from the bowl. He knew this wasn't going to go well. Right now, he wasn't agreeing with any of them, if he had a wand, he'd do it to the bitch time and time again. And that friend of his calling him a spoiled child? She needs a reality check.

"You people need to make up your freaking minds. Do you want me to act my age, or how I would act given my own devices?" said Harry.

"Acting your age would be nice." said Remus, getting caught up in the heat of the moment and forgetting himself.

"Remus!" hissed Sirius. "We just got him back here!"

"He's lost his mind." said Ron shaking his head.

"And yet you don't seem to like it when I do." said Harry.

"Harry..." said Hermione, but she was silenced by a glare from both Harry and Ron.

"Shut up! You're not helping!" snapped Ron angrily.

Dr. Clark walked over and whispered in Harry's ear. "I'll talk to him. Maybe he'll settle down and rethink this."

"No, don't bother, I just need some time to think, I'm being smothered over there." said Harry whispering back. "I just need some time to myself."

"Okay, if you need anything, let me know." said Dr. Clark. "Do you want me over here with you?"

"No, I'm good, just want to just sit here and think." said Harry. He slowly took out his little black notebook and took out a quill and bottle of ink.

"Let's get this blasted essay done with." said Harry writing down words furiously.

Chapter End Notes

Thanks for reading, please review.
It was decided that they were going to take a short break, and allow people to stretch their legs a bit, and give Harry, and his new family a bit of privacy. Harry however, didn't care one way or another, though Remus and Sirius both tried to talk to him, he ignored them and continued on with his writing.

"Harry, for crying out loud. Will you just talk to us?" said Remus tiredly.

Harry spoke not a word, but continued to write in his notebook hurriedly. Then he reached into his knapsack and pulled out a large roll of parchment and began to write on that.

"Hey Monster," said Rudolph, trying to lift the mood. "What are you writing?"

"The essay." muttered Harry.

Remus blinked. "Harry, you didn't have to do it till Saturday." he said gently.

"Get's it out of the way and I can put all my thoughts down." said Harry plainly.

"Harry can we talk?" asked Remus.

"Can it wait till later?" asked Harry. "How long did you want it again? Oh yeah, three feet."

"Harry..." said Remus.

But Harry said nothing more.

Soon the students piled back into the Hall, Dumbledore came over and whispered to Leroy.

"How did it go?" asked Dumbledore.

"He's ignoring us. Tell McGonagall thanks for me, don't want that Granger girl adding fuel to the fire." said Leroy. "She's a bit emotionally ignorant about other people, isn't she?"

"I’m starting to believe that though it surprises me greatly. Mr. Weasley confided in me something very interesting, it seems that whether Harry is mad at you or not, once he has a task that had been thrust upon him to complete, he is quite irritable and will cease to even acknowledge your existence."

"Well, that won't make Remus any happier, but he did ask for it, grounding is one thing, but in front of everyone? And writing an essay? He needs to step out of Professor mode." said Sirius sternly. "I mean, even Snivellus took Malfoy out of the room."

"Severus, Sirius." corrected Dumbledore.
"Who'd like to read the next chapter?" asked Tonks looking around the room.

"Harry? Do you want to read with me again?" said Sirius after he volunteered.

Harry ignored him and continued to write.

Sirius sighed and took the book from Tonks. I'm going to kill Remus.

"Third Chapter."

"Ooh!" moaned quite of the adults.

"What's up?" asked Dean.

"Yeah, I'd love to go on there." said Ron

"You'll change your tune after you've ridden it once." said Remus with a slight smirk. He kept looking at Harry with guilty eyes.

First paragraph, first sentence, first comma.

"Collapsed? What do you mean by collapsed?" asked Dr. Clark worriedly.

"The trunk was too blasted heavy." said Harry as he rolled up his parchment and stuffed it neatly into his bag. Then he picked up the blanket and wrapped himself around in it. The chilly October air gnawed at his lithe arms and legs, and made his very blood feel cold. He pulled the blanket tighter around himself. He didn't move towards the bowl, he was still way over in the empty part of the hall.

"Want to come back over here?" asked Sirius.

"Nope, I'm good." said Harry, he didn't notice the hurt in the eyes of those in the bowl and the people around it. He was still trying to rid his mind of the feeling of betrayal.

End of first paragraph.

"Aunt Marge's words were still beating in my brain." said Harry.

Second paragraph, first sentence.

"You don't panic when there is acromantulas, basilisks, dark wizards or anything like that, but being on a dark street?" said Seamus.

"Didn't someone already say that?" asked Ron.
"Holly's?" asked Dr. Clark.

"She's living with her mother." said Harry from phoenix quilt cocoon.

"Oh, right." said Dr. Clark. "What about Inspector Homes?"

"He was on holiday. He always goes on holiday this time of year." said Harry.

"Accidental magic." said Remus absently.

Harry snorted with slight disgust Didn't stop you from telling me to write an essay and get grounded did it? Oh, well...adults can be so difficult to understand..

"You seem to be very nervous about being expelled, more so than any other student." said Professor Sprout.

"They were too busy trying to get Miss. Dursley back down onto the ground. Before they could obliviate her, she gave several of them quite a few bruises and black-eyes," said Dumbledore with a smile.

"Should have left her hovering overhead for a while," said Fred.

"But would you want to look up into the sky and seeing her knickers floating overhead?" said Ginny with a smirk, as she picked up the chair her father conjured for her and walked over to sit beside Harry.

"AGGHH! Why did you have to mention that?" wailed the twins as they covered their eyes.

"Whether you like it or not, I'm sitting here." said Ginny sitting beside Harry.

"I've got a better idea." said Harry, he whispered something quietly into her ear and smiled as she giggled. They both stood up and Ginny magicked the two chairs to become an immensely large sofa, much like what Leroy and Rudolph were lounging in. Harry stretched out at one end and Ginny laid beside him. Harry covered the both of them with the blanket.

Mrs. Weasley and Percy both stood up, but Mr. Weasley grabbed the both of them. "Let them be, it's not like they can do anything with all of us in here." he said with a smile.

Rudolph and Leroy had to keep Remus and Sirius in their seats. "Park it." said Rudolph, "they can't do anything."

Third paragraph, second sentence.

"Now you ask that question..." said Snape shaking his head. "Didn't think about that when you left your house with a mass murderer on the loose."

Third paragraph, third sentence.

"The most that would have happened for accidental magic would have been you being sent to St. Mungos, to find out why your core is flocculating still." said Madam Bones. "And a talking to by the Headmaster."

"Intended magic will get you expelled." said Kingsley.

Third paragraph, fourth sentence.

"Why? What was wrong with us?" said Ron defensively.

Third paragraph, fifth sentence, third comma.

"Dude, we'd help you with anything." said Ron.

End of third paragraph

"Should have told her to just hang out in the area." said Harry with a guilty smile.

Fourth paragraph, first sentence.

"I thought you get paid for those jobs you do." said Neville.

"Doesn't mean that the bank is on Privet Drive." said Harry with a laugh.
"And that's where my money was. Just so I couldn't spend it, and the Dursley's would never find it." said Harry. "Uncle Vernon would kill to have the bank balance I do."

"How much money do you have in there?" asked Neville.

But Harry ignored him.

"It was the best idea that was presenting itself to me." said Harry.

Ginny leaned her head on his shoulder. "Poor sweet baby."

"I do what I can to get sympathy." said Harry roguishly.

"That's a pretty good plan." said Lionus with a smirk.

"Yeah, Harry Potter, the outcast." said Fred.

"Never happen." said George.

"I'd love to see you talk your way out of that, lad." said Rivers with a laugh.

"Paranoid much?" asked Zacharias snidely.

"I thought I had heard something." said Harry.
That feeling saved me from being caught working several times. thought Harry with a smile.

"What made you stand up that time?" asked Charlie.

"I heard something again." said Harry.

"How the bloody hell could you tell that was where I was at?" said Sirius in shock.

"I've just got skills." said Harry with a smile, the men in the bowl and Dumbledore were happy to see him in better spirits.

"I was afraid it was a dark wizard, or at the very least, a rabid animal." said Harry.

"Well, you were close, it was a dark rabid dog." said Dr. Clark.

"Don't make me beat you." said Sirius with a faked scowl.

"So how did you not get a nice little owl from that?" asked Zacharias.

"Lumos and nox are lesser spells, they don't register on the trace." said Harry matter of factly. "You can't hurt or cause mayhem with those two spells, and muggles only think that you have a really thin torch."

"How far is Magnolia Crescent?" asked Hermione.
"About six blocks or so." said Harry, "at least that's the way I took, takes longer the other way. I cut across some of the neighbor's yards."

End of dialogue set.

"Nice description of me." pouted Sirius.

Ninth paragraph, second sentence.

"I didn't plan on that one, I expected you to recognize me." said Sirius.

"The last time I had seen you, I was drooling on a baby blanket." said Harry with a laugh.

End of ninth paragraph.

"Were you okay?" asked Ginny.

"I was fine, just banged my head a little bit, I thought I lost my bloody mind, when I saw what came up my way." said Harry.

Tenth paragraph.

"If it's what the title says, you'd better move!" said Professor Flitwick.

"You summoned it on accident?" said Tonks. "Didn't know you could."

Eleventh paragraph, first sentence.

"You seem to really like cutting it close." said McGonagall holding a hand to her heart.

Eleventh paragraph, second sentence.

"That didn't make feel any better." said McGonagall.

Eleventh paragraph, third sentence, second comma.
"So you rolled out of the way, you didn't stand up?" asked Fred.

"I didn't have the time to stand up." said Harry.

Eleventh paragraph, third sentence, fifth comma.

"Only reason to have it that color, is so wizards know what to look for, so they don't accidentally climb onto a muggle bus and ask to go to Diagon Alley or whatever." said Moody gruffly. "Should have picked a better color. It's embarrassing to ride in that thing."

End of eleventh paragraph.

Twelfth paragraph, first sentence.

"Well, you did knock your head on the concrete." said Ginny rubbing the back of his head. "Want me to kiss it and make it better?"

"Can you reach back there?" said Harry moving his head forward a bit, he earned a playful smack to the back of his head.

End of twelfth paragraph.

"Gotta love a man who loves his job." said Kingsley with a dry chuckle.

"If only he'd do it the moment you get on the bus." said Tonks.

Dialogue set.

Thirteenth paragraph, second sentence.

"Seeing someone sprawled out on the ground would make me stare." said Leroy.

End of thirteenth paragraph.

"Sounds like that guy from the World Cup," said Hermione. "The one that said he was going to be the youngest Minister of Magic."

"He was the guy." said Harry.

"Good luck, Stan." muttered Tonks.
"I'm checking the street for potholes." said Dean rolling his eyes.

"Oh come on, should've answered like Dean." said Ron.

"For kicks." said George.

"Not like they weren't already torn and faded." said Harry.

"I just backed up a bit, out of the way of the light." said Sirius.

"Why didn't you leave?" asked Tonks.

"Hey, I wanted to make sure he got on the bus alright." said Sirius.

"Why even go there?" asked Emmeline.

"I wanted to see Harry, and I had been waiting all twelve years to see him." said Sirius. "I wasn't missing out on this chance."

"Wow, you figured out what I was, that's pretty cool!" said Sirius.

"Not so hard, I heard you panting." said Harry.

"That sounds sort of creepy." said Ernie.
"Hey, it's hot under all that fur." said Sirius defensively.

Fourteenth paragraph.
Dialogue line.
"Oh he's a brilliant one." said Fred.

Dialogue line.
"Hiding my scar didn't slow them down at all." said Harry with a smirk

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set, first sentence.
"What about my name?" asked Ron.
"I didn't want to risk anyone on the bus knowing your family." said Harry. "Also you were in the Daily Prophet, and they listed your name. It wouldn't have worked out."
"Oh, right." said Ron with a smirk.

End of dialogue set.
"Any where in Britain, anyway." said Remus.
"Yeah, if you want to go abroad then you have to get across to the continent on your own, then you can take the Continental Knight Bus." said Sirius.
"Does each country have their own Knight Bus?" asked Hermione.
"Well, kind of, each continent has their own, the larger the continent, the faster the bus." said Remus.
"Don't you have to follow the speed limit?" asked Colin.
Sirius and Remus looked at each other.
"Muggle police can't see the bus, so...no." said Sirius.
"How do they refuel? Do they use petrol?" asked Dennis.
"No, a simple motoring charm keeps it going." said Dumbledore with a smile.
"Has someone actually asked to go underwater?" asked Ernie.

"Yes, when the Knight Bus service first started. Some smart alec thought he could ask them to go to a sunken treasure ship. The bus sank like a stone, and it took three wizards and the aid of a city full of merpeople to get that out of the ocean." said McGonagall.

"He used his wand hand to break his fall." said Tonks.

"Don't get that, you'll just have it end up in your lap, and hot chocolate there can be painful." said Sirius.

"It's not even very good hot chocolate." said Remus.

"I'll bring my own thanks." said Hermione.

"He said sickles, not galleons." said Zacharias.

"Didn't care, I just wanted him to just leave me be." said Harry.

"It's really hard to sleep on that bus." said Tonks. "Trust me, I've tried."
"He must have a very boring life if that's the sort of dreams he has." said Lee with a snicker.

"Working all day and into the later parts of the night, you have to be comfortable." said Bill shrugging.

Ernie Prang, an elderly wizard wearing very thick glasses, nodded to Harry,

"You're lucky he was the one working Harry. My Uncle Barnaby is the other Knight Bus driver." said Neville.

"Thank God I wasn't standing up, I'd still be unconscious." said Harry.

"I didn't think it was even the same town." said Harry.

"That should definitely answer your question about going the speed limit." said Dumbledore with a warm smile towards the young Gryffindor.
Dr. Clark smiled, "I can't even pretend to look insulted. It's kind of hard to miss a giant purple bus."

"I still cannot believe that she continues to ride that Bus." said Professor Sprout.

"Why, it's crash proofed?" said Neville wonderingly.

"That would make me nervous." said Dr. Clark with a nervous smile.

"Poor old dear." said Professor Sprout.

"They aren't very customer friendly are they?" said George.

End of dialogue set.
So you did feel some remorse. Why didn't you say that?” asked Remus.

"Because I would have liked to have done it again, only on purpose." said Harry. "But that's not an option."

Remus felt slightly uncomfortable, but he couldn't figure out why. He was in the right…right?

"I wonder if you're picture self-recognized him." said Luna thoughtfully.

"I don't really know, never asked my picture self." said Sirius.

"From the muggle news." said Sirius glumly, "not cause you remembered me from when you were a baby."

"Too bad you're only going to be happy at the end of the book." said Harry with a small smile.

"Yeah, I can't imagine that this book is going to be very good for my ego." said Sirius.

"It's going to be beaten to pulp, yeah." said Remus.

"In a way, incarcerated." said Harry.

"Least you got to go outside." said Sirius.

"But the guards didn't beat you." said Harry.

"I had Dementors." said Sirius.

"I had to look at Aunt Marge for a whole week." said Harry.

"You win." said Sirius holding up his hands and smiling.
"I didn't renew the subscription yet." said Harry.

"Good luck, you tell people not to panic, and they panic." said Kingsley shaking his head. "Human nature."

"What they never seem to understand, is that the Ministers have to introduce themselves to the highest authorities of their respective country." said Dumbledore. "They don't agree with that little tradition."

"So does the Queen know about us?" asked a first year Hufflepuff.

"Yes she does." said Dumbledore. "Fudge has only met her once, when he came to office."

"How many times have you met her?" asked Hermione.

"Oh, I see her from time to time." said Dumbledore with a smile.

"I've met her a few times too, after the garden party." said Harry quietly.

"They have other uses too." said Harry, thinking of Officer McFinn.

"Wasn't me!" said Sirius.

"We know that now." said Madam Bones apologetically.
Twenty-sixth paragraph.

Harry slowly covered his head with the blanket as Sirius looked slowly over to him.

"The list of getting you back for stuff in these books is getting longer and longer." said Sirius, working very hard to keep a straight face.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"That is an insanely powerful spell." said Remus, "Sort of why I believed you did it." he added apologetically.

"Yeah, Peter would never have done it, not the Peter we thought we knew anyway." said Sirius.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Twenty-seventh paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"In my defense, it was a long and tiring day." said Harry to the looks he was receiving.

Twenty-eighth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"Well, you'd pose as Neville perfectly." smirked Zacharias.

"Mr. Smith...last warning." said Professor Sprout.
"Never was, never will be." said Sirius.

"Can we just say that almost everything about him is incorrect, I'd rather not hear you whine and whimper about what is said about you." said Snape with a groan.

"Almost?" said Sirius sharply.

"Leave it." said Remus.

Dialogue line.

Twenty-ninth paragraph

Dialogue set.

Sirius growled softly and slightly bared his teeth.

Dialogue set.

"Don't you just love it how the facts are destroyed as they pass from mouth to mouth?" said McGonagall shaking her head. "The Aurors didn't corner the so-called culprit,"(making sure she didn't mention Sirius.) "and then the street blew up, the street was blown away before they even got there."

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set.

"I think 'emotionally distraught' is more likely than mad." said Remus.

"Too bad you didn't think that years ago." said Sirius with a good-natured nudge.

Dialogue line.

Dr. Clark turned pale and faced Sirius. "Where did that happen?" he asked in a faint voice.
Sirius told him the street. Dr. Clark took a deep breath. "My girlfriend got caught in that thing."

Sirius put the book down and looked sadly over to him. "I'm sorry. If I...."

"Not your fault, but I'd like to get my hands on the son of a b*tch that did it." said Dr. Clark angrily.

"We can help in that department, when the time comes." said Lionus with an evil smirk.

Dialogue set.

Thirtieth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"You don't use Dementors in your prison, do you?" asked Charlie over to Lionus.

"Of course they do!" said Percy importantly. "How else can they keep the most hardened criminals locked away securely?"

"Don't chatter nonsense!" said Tempest. "We'd never allow such foul creatures in our prison, the moment they get too close, they get destroyed."

"What? But..." said Percy.

"We use Rangers, Dementors are highly unreliable. It's too risky to have them guard the prisoners. Every time we come across one out on an assignment, we destroy them." said Nightstrike.

"But why?" asked Percy.

"They were never supposed to exist." said Lionus. "They were created by dead bodies and dark magic, a sort of evolved form of Inferi."

"What...?" said Colin.

"Best tell you later." said Lionus.

End of thirty-first paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"If I'm not mistaken, he did sort of say something like that." said Tonks.

Thirty-second paragraph, first sentence.

"My dear boy, I don't think that inflating your aunt is the same as being charged with the murder of twelve people." said Dumbledore with smile.
"Not even if you had whipped out your wand. Expulsion would have been the most you would have had to fear." said Madam Bones.

"I would ask, people would turn pale, mumble and then walk away." said Harry "And there weren't many books in the library about it."

"Of course not, don't want people to know too much about it, and try to make an escape when they get there." said Moody gruffly.

Hagrid blushed heavily. "Nice o' you ter say that."

"You are Hagrid, if I was ever in any real trouble, I'd come running to you and Dumbledore first." said Harry.

"Sure where do I rate?" said Sirius.

"Third." said Harry.

"Who's before me?" said Sirius.

"Gotcha." said Sirius. "I can live with being in third place now."
"Now how were you going to lay low in a pub, full of people who would know you the moment they saw you?" asked Kingsley.

"The moment I got off the bus and when they left, I was going to put on the Invisibility Cloak and just hang out in the pub, then left the moment the bank was opened. Then I'd hit the Muggle bank." said Harry.

"Where were you going to go?" said Sirius.

"Well, first to see where my parents lived, then I'd go off to try and find Dr. Clark on my own." said Harry.

"Good thing you didn't go looking for him, these would really be Memorial Books." said Nicodemus.

"Bad, was it?" said Sirius worriedly.

"We had problems getting in and out." said Lionus.

"Holy crap." said Remus.

Thirty-seventh paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Thirty-eighth paragraph.

"Well at least he didn't just toss your stuff." said Tonks.

"That's the service you get when you just shove gold in his hands." said Harry with a chuckle.

Dialogue line.

Thirty-ninth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"Dumbledore?" asked Charlie.

"Not that lucky." said Harry.

Dumbledore chuckled warmly. "I was unfortunately preoccupied arguing with the Warden of Azkaban. He would not let me leave to locate you."

Fortieth paragraph.

Forty-first paragraph.
"I would have given anything to go to your aid, but Fudge said he would handle it." said Dumbledore.

"How did he know where he was?" asked Bill.

"I told him where he would most likely to find Harry." said Dumbledore with a slightly apologetic look to the white haired boy.

Forty-second paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Forty-third paragraph.

"Exhausted form arguing with Albus." muttered McGonagall to Flitwick.

"The only time I can ever remember him winning." said Flitwick.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"Idiot, you've already seen it." said Moody.

Dialogue line.

Forty-fourth paragraph, first sentence, first comma.

"I was amazed that I didn't see nail marks when I took a shower the next morning." said Harry rubbing his shoulder.

End of forty-fourth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"He wasn't talking about you." teased Remus to Harry.

"I'm more of a fine wine, sort of guy." said Harry with a smile.

"You're going to love the wine cellar." said Sirius. "When you're older of course."

"Also known as ten months." said Harry with a smirk.

Umbridge struggled against her gag, most people had forgotten she was still there.
"What do you want now?" asked Nightstrike with a groan. He pulled the gag out of her mouth. She sneered over at Sirius.

"Your wine is gone, all gone!" said Umbridge madly with malicious laugh. With that, Nightstrike snapped the gag back on.

"I saw that you went through the Novice Cellar," said Sirius with a smirk. "You didn't find my regular cellar, had to hide that from a few people. Kept taking my wine without me knowing."

Umbridge blanched.

"You got the lesser value wine, nothing in there worth more than twenty galleons. The good cellar is full of rare wines."

"You wouldn't by chance have a Chateau de Éclat 1821, would you?" said Harry excitedly.

"You'll see this weekend." said Sirius with a smile.

"Try again." said Harry his face falling.

"Oh, right, well, week after next." said Sirius with a reassuring smile.

Dialogue line.

Forty-fifth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"They've always wanted someone famous to ride the bus." said Tonks.

"How do you know so much?" asked Ron.

"My father and his father are really good friends. We sort of grew up together." said Tonks.

"But she really loved to push him around." said Sirius with a smirk.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"He'll never let you forget that little jaunt." said Remus. "I'll bet you could be a Minister of Magic and still call you Neville."

"Wouldn't put it past him." said Harry with a smirk.
Forty-sixth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Forty-seventh paragraph, first sentence.

"Wasn't too sure what to expect." said Harry.

"You needn't have worried, at that part, he was hoping to use you as a figurehead at that point." said Kingsley.

"It feels so nice to be used." said Harry with a growl.

Never ever again. thought Dumbledore bitterly.

End of forty-seventh paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"We know that already." said Bill.

"But he doesn't." said Fred.

Forty-eighth paragraph.

"Good thing you had the sense not to tell him that." said George.

Forty-ninth paragraph.

"Poor dear, he should have been allowed to go back to bed after letting you lot in, just bring in a teapot and have you brew your own drinks." said Madam Pomfrey.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

"Walk a mile in my shoes, lets see how you managed." mumbled Harry darkly.

"He'd go insane, or wouldn't last the week." said Ginny stealing a kiss.

Dialogue set, third sentence, first pause.

"That's a switch, he's never thought before." said McGonagall with a sneer.
"Well he's got the right idea." said Sirius.

"It's a good thing you were actually innocent." said Luna.

"Aside from the obvious, why is that?" said Sirius.

"If you were a mass murderer, you would have come upon Harry sooner than anyone." said Luna.

Sirius and Remus gulped loudly. Dumbledore looked fearfully over to Harry, who wasn't listening at that particular moment, he was busy talking to Ginny about her favorite Quidditch team. Finally he looked up.

"What's the matter?" said Harry.

"Just worrying about you." said Dr. Clark with an unconvincing smile.

"Well, recently that's not something new." said Harry.

"Holly made the best crumpets, she'd add honey and cinnamon to them and oh man, they were delicious." said Dr. Clark with a fond smile.

"Pleased isn't the word I would have chosen." said Professor Flitwick gleefully. "Disappointed is more appropriate."

"Moron, it was only about forty-five minutes ago." said Harry.

"Well, damn. I was hoping she'd be scarred for life." said George.

"If it's any consolation, she's afraid of heights now." said Harry.

"Not enough." said Fred.
"Beats the hell out of what Lockhart was," said Sirius. "But I'm not too comfortable with him just using you."

"Was more worried about what trouble I was in with the Ministry. I knew that I was in for it at the Dursleys." said Harry.

"That's Uncle Vernon's default setting where I'm concerned." said Harry.

"He stays there anyway!" said Hermione.

"What happened when you came back home?" said Remus.

"Nothing good." said Harry. "I don't want to talk about it."

"That should give the Minister a hint that something isn't right." said one of the Hufflepuffs, who's parents worked at the Ministry.

"Wonder what he's worried about?" said George.

"Worried that Harry's going to cause problems." said Sirius with a snarl.

"Or that he didn't know how to handle the situation, he was never very good with children" said
"How deep down is he expecting you to go?" asked Ron.

"A lot further down than where I can go." said Harry.

"Oh, if the Minister was here, I'd give him what for!" said Mrs. Weasley angrily. "Leaving a child in an Inn all by himself."

"Tom was more than willing to watch him." said Kingsley, "And there was always an Auror in Diagon Alley, and the Leaky Cauldron."

"Not to mention a Ranger with him at all times." said Lionus.

"How come you didn't try and find Sirius Black?" asked Zacharias.

"We weren't confident that he was guilty. But Harry was proving to be very fascinating."

"So why didn't you notice what was happening?" said Remus.

"We only focused on him when he left the house, for his 'jobs'." Nightstrike. "So, when he ran away from home, we followed him."

"No one else came on the bus, though." said Ron.

"We rode on top." said Nightstrike. "More exciting that way."

"You're nuts." said Remus.

"He wasn't going to give you a punishment!" said Sirius. "Wow, you really are different from your parents, even they wouldn't bring up punishment if it wasn't mentioned."
"Blowing up a family member isn't what I'd call a 'little thing'" said Madam Hooch with a smile.

"That would be sort of funny to see that on an arrest report." said Tonks with a giggle.

"Smart lad." said Moody with an impressed smile.

"And he acted as if he had heard it the first time at your hearing!" said Madam Bones angrily. "Oh, when I get my hands on that man!"

"He still with your people?" asked Percy over to Lionus.

"Yup, he aint leaving today either. Seems the Chief wanted to have a word with him." said Lionus. The Rangers groaned loudly.

"What's wrong?" asked Charlie.

"Doesn't mean anything good, when an elected official has to have a chat with the Chief." said Nighstrike.

"The Law is the Law." said Moody.

"Like how much is in your bank account." said Harry darkly.
"Don't want the possible chance that someone would hear Harry being expelled." said Charlie.

"It's cause it didn't make any sense." said Harry.

"Least you're keeping your wits about you." said Lionus with a smile.

"Didn't stop him from doing it last summer." said Sirius with a snarl.

"But that means you can't get your Muggle money!" said Neville.

"Not like I needed to go there anyway, I didn't have any appointments or need the money from that Bank." said Harry.

"Does he not know that the shops close before the darkness completely falls on Diagon Alley?" said Emmeline.
"Thank Merlin he didn't try out for an Auror position, he'd never make it." said Moody rolling one of his eyes.

Sirius snorted, "Bet he was hoping you didn't ask."

"Called it." said Sirius with a laugh.

"Better be careful with him, he isn't the most flexible person." said Speckerton.

"Didn't know you were that desperate to go." said McGonagall.

"I asked you, the most straight arrow teacher I've ever seen if she could bend that rule." said Harry. "How much more desperate do I have to be?"
"He won't give it, especially not that year." said Kingsley.

"Yeah, after what happened to Aunt Marge? He's delusional." said Harry.

"After you dashed his hopes of seeing Hogsmede?" said Bill.

"Hey! Remus! Why didn't you sign his form?" asked Charlie.

"I actually would have, if he had asked me, but two things stopped me from telling him. One: I thought Sirius was out to kill him and keeping him in the castle was the safest thing to do. And two: I had a feeling he had already been there when he and I had a private chat." said Remus with a smile.

"Whoa, he gave you one of the better rooms in the Inn!" said Neville.

"How the bloody hell did she know you were going to be there?" asked Bill.

"She's brilliant." said Harry with beaming smile.
Sixty-seventh paragraph.
"Arrived about five minutes after you did. Dialogue set, second sentence.
"Bet that took him by surprised." said one of seventh year Slytherins.

End of dialogue set

"Please tell me you waited until morning." said Madam Pomfrey.
"I did." said Harry.

Sixty-eighth paragraph.

Sixty-ninth paragraph, second sentence.

"So you stayed up all night?" said Sirius.
"Not like I've never done that before." said Harry shrugging.

End of chapter.

"I woke up and Hedwig had taken my glasses off my head, I thought it was pretty cool." said Harry with a smile.

"Well, we can tackle another chapter before dinner." said Speckerton.

"What about the Recollection Scrolls?" asked Sirius.

"Well, now that we have seen Harry's childhood, I don't think another one will show up for some time." said Speckerton. "I think they will become as rare as the Scattered Shots are. These things...I'm not sure we understand them completely anymore."

"Dang, I liked the happy ones." said Sirius. "Well, who wants to read the next one?"

"I will. " said Ginny, getting off the couch and walking over to take the book.

"You two enjoying yourselves over there?" said Sirius in a whisper.

"Yeah, actually. Since we can't go on a date this weekend, we'll have our dates during the readings." said Ginny with a wink.

Remus started to speak but Ginny stopped him.

"Don't worry about it, Harry realizes what he said was wrong, but he does seem a bit put off of you for right now. He says you should have done it in private, not public."

Remus looked shamefully down.

"How about you leave the whole punishment thing to me?" asked Sirius.

"And me, you take a break from it before it puts you in real deep water." said Dr. Clark.

"Sounds good to me." he said quietly.

Chapter End Notes

Thanks for reading, please review.
"Fourth Chapter" read Ginny.

"So do we get to hear about how you raised holy hell at Diagon Alley?" asked Sirius gleefully.

"He isn't you." said Tonks teasingly.

First paragraph, first sentence.

"Wasn't used to getting up when I wanted, eating whatever, going out when I wanted and going to bed when I wanted. It was sort of strange, after Privet Drive and Aunt Marge." said Harry.

"I was told, in a letter from Tom, that you had gone into the kitchen and started making breakfast for the guests a few times." said Dumbledore with a bright smile.

"Why would he send you a letter about that?" asked Sirius.

"Tom was not very good about watching children, he asked for some advice. You utterly perplexed him, dear boy." said Dumbledore smiling over to Harry.

First paragraph, second sentence.

"Aunt Petunia would choose the menu most of the time. I could choose the dish, but she would pick what the meat was." said Harry.

End of first paragraph.

"And I didn't have any appointments going on for the rest of the summer, had to cancel one of them, before Aunt Marge came." said Harry.

Second paragraph, first sentence, first colon.

"Nosey little cuss." muttered Snape.
"Getting into a debate about Transfiguration Today, can find yourself being turned into a wombat without much notice." said Dumbledore with smile.

"Why do they cover their face?" asked Dr. Clark.

"They aren't the most pleasant to look at, and they are very sensitive about it." said Remus.

"One of the best summers I could remember." said Harry. "Got to do what I wanted and go where I wanted."

"My father gave me one those once. They're more useful in finding Humberpuffos." said Luna.

"They were looking at me while they said that." said Harry with a laugh, “They kept looking around for my guardians to come for me."

"That may explain that drop of strawberry fudge ripple on your homework." said Professor Flitwick.

"Oops." said Harry sheepishly.
"It was his favorite subject while he was in school." said Dumbledore with a smile.

End of fourth paragraph.

"Oh that's not fair." said Ron. "Didn't do that for us."

Fifth paragraph, first sentence.

"Good boy." said Lionus with a proud smile.

"Oh come on! When was the last time he treated himself to pretty much anything?" said Sirius. "I say go for it! He wouldn't have been able to spend all his money in his or the next lifetime."

Fifth paragraph, second sentence, second comma.

Rudolph smirked. "Not with our family vaults."

"So do you share a vault?" asked Dr. Clark.

"Actually, the money is evenly distributed. What Harry has in his family vault is probably only a few thousand galleons more than us." said Rudolph with a smile.

Fifth paragraph, second sentence, second comma, twelfth word.

"I have a solid gold set, if you really want one." said Sirius. "I got it from one of my Great Uncles."

Fifth paragraph, end of second sentence.

"Those aren't allowed at our house, especially after the gobstone tournament us boys held." said Charlie.

"You can still smell it in Fred and George's room." said Bill.

Fifth paragraph, third sentence.

"Not even that would excuse you from taking the class." said Professor Sinstra.

"Might give me the chance to go all out on a test and get away with it." said Harry with a smile.
"And Ron's grade would go up." said Harry.

End of fifth paragraph.

"Of course, it would be a broomstick." said Lavender.

"Ain't nothing wrong with a broomstick." said Ginny and the female chasers of the Gryffindor team.

Sixth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"Then why have it displayed?" asked Dennis.

"Sort of like a brand new car model. They let you drool over it and in a few months you shell out the money to get it." said Dr. Clark.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"Awesome! You even have a World Cup?" said Dr. Clark.

"We went to it last year." said Ron.

"I can't wait to hear about it!" said Dr. Clark.

Seventh paragraph.

Firebolt sign.

"Damn, that would turn any boy's head. Especially the speed." said Dr. Clark.

Eighth paragraph, first sentence.

"Three thousand-six hundred and fifty three galleons sixteen sickles and four knuts." said Sirius.

Harry stared hard at Sirius. "What?" asked Harry, turning pale.

"Yeah, and you were worth every single coin." said Sirius with a bright smile.
"That's very mature thinking, Mr. Potter." said Professor McGonagall.

"Don't blame you, I had actually bought one a few days after you left for Hogwarts, and I just kept staring at it." said Sirius.

"Which was twice as much as any other third year had to do." said Ron with a smirk.

"You never would be able to tell." muttered Fred.

"Heard that." said Harry.

"One of those worth learning." said Charlie.

Professor Trelawny frowned.

"Just what every home needs, a book that'll attack every other book in your house." said George.

"Wouldn't say no to it having a go at our Lockhart books." said Fred.

“Doubt it would find it very appetizing,” said Remus with a laugh.

"Not the book to read to children before bedtime." said Lee with a snigger.
Eleventh paragraph.
"Sorry, Hagrid." said Harry blushing.
"S'alright." said Hagrid with a smile.

Twelfth paragraph.
"Why would he come out?" asked Emmeline Vance. "He never does."

Dialogue line.
Dialogue line.
Dialogue line.

Dialogue set.
"Well, I can somewhat see why he's irritable, but that doesn't mean he can shove people about." said Bill.

Dialogue line.
Dialogue line.

Dialogue set.
"Apparently no one told him how to soothe that particular book." said Professor Flitwick with a giggle.

Thirteenth paragraph.

Dialogue set, sixth sentence.
"That guys doesn't have much common sense, does he?" said Dr. Clark. "If they're invisible, you're not going to be able to find them."

Dialogue set.
Dialogue line.

Dialogue set, second sentence.
"They don't sell many of those to adults. Not many people want to know their future, it never makes anyone very happy." said Remus.
"Bird Entrails?" said Dr. Clark.

"Yeah, that bit of divination is nasty." said Sirius. "I told James once that he was going to end up getting eaten by a bird and turn into that stuff."

"That's disgusting!" said Hermione.

"Lily thought so as well." said Sirius thoughtfully. "James thought it was brilliant."

"What made you look at that?" asked Sirius in shock.

"You'll find out." said Harry quietly.

"Good advice, don't buy that book." said Mrs. Weasley worriedly.

"You thought....that I...I was the Grim?" said Sirius frantically.

"I didn't know what to make of you that night." said Harry.

"I'm never turning back into a dog around you if that's what you think I am when I'm in animagus form." swore Sirius.

"No, I love you as dog, as much as a human, it's just, it was a bad year for that...." said Harry.

Sirius looked uneasy.

"Thought you had them already?" asked Hermione.
"Didn't we talk about this already? I donate them to a charity thing." said Harry.

"Oh, right..." said Hermione.

Seventeenth paragraph.

"What caused to do that? Normally you're pretty smooth about walking amongst people. You hardly touch anyone." said Ron.

Eighteenth paragraph.

"I looked really pale." whispered Harry.

"Well, at least you found out everything." said Ginny soothingly. "You didn't have to be distraught for too very long."

"A year isn't too long?" asked Harry in wonder.

"Compared to twenty? No." said Ginny with a small smile.

Dialogue line.

Nineteenth paragraph.

"Why would you do that?" asked Dean.

"I'm sick of seeing the scar." said Harry.

Dialogue line.

"That frightened me." said Harry with a smile. "After that, I changed in the bathroom."

"Don't blame you." said Sirius with a laugh. "Some of those mirrors can be very cheeky."

"They're kinder to children then they are to adults," said Remus. "I remember once that one of those mirrors told James to work out a bit more."

"I remember that too, he started running about, doing push-ups, and sit-ups, that didn't last long though." said Sirius. "After one month he gave up."

Twentieth paragraph, third sentence, first semi-colon.

"We didn't say much, just stared at it and drooled." said Seamus.
"I've had enough shouting and telling off to last me a lifetime, didn't want to watch someone else getting it." said Harry.

"Didn't want her to shout at me next." laughed Harry.

"Don't blame you." said Neville also laughing.

"That's what you think!" said Ron and Hermione.

"Nice." said Ron with a smirk.

"Mom and I spent a few days on the French Riviera." said Hermione. "Dad was visiting with some friends."

"Come on! He's a Quidditch player! Where else would he be?" said Sirius with a smirk.
"Fudge was bragging about how he had found you in the nick of time and saved you from certain peril." said Mr. Weasley. "Nice to have the record set straight."

"Nope, just ugly rumors spread around by my inflated aunt." said George.

"Nice of Ron to laugh at you." said Bill.

"It was funny." said Ron sheepishly.

"Need we go over it again?" said Rivers.

"No sir." said Hermione sheepishly.

"You seem to like to question authority." said Madam Bones with a faint smile.

"Only when it doesn't make any sense." said Harry.

"They'd have to wait their turn, after I've dealt with you." said Mrs. Weasley.

Several people laughed loudly.
"Ron, you're so excitable." said Charlie.

"I was happy to see him." said Ron.

"Poor man." said Tonks giggling.

"I always wondered why you decided to take on Muggle Studies." said Professor Flitwick.

"To get a wizard's point of few." said Hermione.

"Too bad you didn't get very good marks in that class." said Ron.

"Not my fault, the books were wrong." said Hermione stiffly.

“And I'm sure people of ancient civilizations would say the exact same about our history books.” said Harry with a smile.

"That backfired big time." said Ron.

"I got the last laugh though, I complained to Dumbledore on how the books were wrong." said Hermione.

"I was serious, with all those books and if every other one of them was for a class, she wouldn't have any time for herself." said Harry.
"Best thing to get a teenager. Money or a gift card to somewhere." said Dr. Clark.

"You're asking for a nice smack." said Alicia with laugh.

"Not really, Errol's the family owl, after he delivers the letters to us at school, he heads home. After recuperating of course." said Fred.

"It wasn't Egypt that did it." said Ron darkly.

"Just be careful, Owls eat rats." said Bill.

"Why didn't Hedwig try and eat him?" asked Charlie.

"Well, she kept trying, but I told her no more attacking him." said Harry. "So she stopped."

"Such pleasant animals." said Charlie with a smirk.

"Trevor doesn't like those things, I don't think. He keeps jumping into the glass when Gran and I go to that shop." said Neville.
"That's the store pet, he isn't for sale, he's been in the store owner's family for generations." said Kingsley.

"Those were puffskiens, they're pretty popular." said Fred.
"If only they were smaller." said George.

"She didn't mean that literally." said Mrs. Weasley.
"I didn’t bang him on there." said Ron sourly.

"They were laughing." said Hermione. "Never saw a rat laugh before."

"Poor guy." said Dennis.
"You say that now." said Ron.

"Wonder why we didn't notice that he was around quite a long time, much longer than most rats live." said Charlie.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set.

Dialogue line.

"She didn't sound very cross, I was amazed." said Harry.

Dialogue line.

"And he was like that when I released him from the trap." said Percy.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

"Well, he's outlived that easily." said Percy doing the math.

End of dialogue set.

Thirty-second paragraph.

"Good thing you kept him." said Sirius. "Or else, I'd be up a creek without a paddle."

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"Did Scabbers bite you?" asked Mr. Weasley.

"Wouldn't have hurt as much." said Ron.

Thirty-third paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"Here's Crookshanks' big entrance." said Ginny.

"Wish it hadn't been so traumatizing." said Ron. "I still refuse to pet that thing."
"That's nice." said Hermione.

"Hey, I get along with him, I just don't pet him." said Ron.

"You do sometimes." said Harry.

"Well, on good days I guess." said Ron.

Dialogue line.

"Why didn't Hermione follow?" asked Ginny.

"Well, I still wanted to find a pet." said Hermione.

"So you didn't care if Ron lost his rat forever?" said Dr. Clark.

Hermione shuffled her feet nervously.

Thirty-fourth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"Oh, he is not that big!" said Hermione.

"When he sits on my lap, I can't feel my legs after a while." said Harry.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"Should have been with them finding the rat." said Parvati.

Thirty-fifth paragraph.

"You bought him? After what he tried to do to Ron's rat?" said Nightstrike with a dumbfounded expression.

"Well, he needed a good home." said Hermione.

"But you didn't care if he ate one of your friend's pets?" said Nightstrike.

"Not the wisest decision, young lady." said Lionus. Hermione looked down. "I can understand wanting to give a pet a good home, but you really should have been more considerate about other Dialog line.

"As much as I like Crookshanks, he's not all that...pretty..." said Sirius.

Thirty-sixth paragraph, first sentence.

"Well, at least Harry agrees with me." said Sirius with a laugh.

Thirty-sixth paragraph, second sentence.

"Several times." muttered Harry.

The Rangers and Dr. Clark sniggered.

End of thirty-sixth paragraph.
Dialog line.

"Maybe not to scalp, Ron. But he was after Ron's pet." said McGonagall.

Dialog line.

"That didn't last long." said Ginny, remembering the day Ron thought he lost his rat.

End of dialogue set.
Dialog line.

Thirty-seventh paragraph.
"Thank goodness." said Mr. Weasley.

"I'm not too sure Sirius Black would escape from Azkaban just to be caught by a thirteen year old Gryffindor." said Lionus with a laugh.

"I'll unmark my words, right now." said Mr. Weasley looking at Sirius.

"Easily the cutest out of the lot." whispered Harry.

"I'd hope so, seeing as how the others are my brothers, father and mother." said Ginny with a grin.

“Now that hurts.” said Fred.

“Harry doesn't find us cute.” said George.

"Spot on." she said with a smile.

Percy turned red.
"That's nice." said Neville with a snicker.

If Percy thought he couldn't turn anymore red from embarrassment, he was sadly mistaken.

Several laughed loudly at the twins.

"How to get grounded in less than nine syllables." said Charlie with a smirk.

"Not the exciting news, I had in mind." muttered Harry. "The wining the lottery seemed to be more exciting."
"Well, I know what not to do, how’s that for an example?” asked Ginny innocently over to her mother.

Dialogue line.

Forty-third paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"I told you to use me as a lookout too, Ron was making sure Bill didn't see us.” said Ginny.

Forty-fourth paragraph.

"He did appreciate the leaving a set of recipes behind." said Dumbledore with a smile. "That clam chowder of yours is quite the selling item."

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Forty-fifth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Forty-sixth paragraph.

"Didn't expect dad to laugh at that.” said Fred.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Forty-seventh paragraph.

"You are way too observant, Harry.” said Mr. Weasley with a smile.

End of dialogue set.
"I didn't dump it." said Ron. "Don't know who it was, but it wasn't me."

"Well, yeah, stupid twit thought I dumped my stuff out." said Ron.

"Still nosey." said Snape quietly.

"Why go and invade...whoever's privacy?" said Tonks.

"I learned that if I heard an argument in the Dursleys, I could mediate the damage done to me by fixing as much as I could of whatever was wrong." said Harry. "Sort of automatic."

"What's up?" asked Hannah.

"You'll find out in a few minutes." said Ginny.

"Hey now, I didn't take it." said Harry.

"We want to know something." said Fred.

"With us as your brothers," said George.

"That you would even think that Ron took it." said Fred and George together.
"Well he'll be there for a while, cause we had it downstairs." said Fred.

Dialogue line.

Fiftieth paragraph, third sentence, second comma.

"I was going to sneak away once they would start up again." said Harry.

End of fiftieth paragraph.

"Harry! That's a private conversation!" said Emmeline

"That involved me, I'd like to know." said Harry.

"Good boy." said Lionus with a smirk.

Dialogue line.

"Wow, Dad never gets heated." said Bill.

"Except when you act way too stupid, and go against your own family." said Charlie, sending a dark look over to Percy.

Dialogue line.

"Thank you, Mr. Weasley." said Harry with a smile.

Dialogue line.

"I'm infinitely happier knowing what the hell is going on." said Harry.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

"There you go," said Harry. "Best have me being careful as opposed to me running around doing dangerous stuff."

"Not that ever stops you." said Snape with a sneer.

"Well, I never start the fight, but I’ll sure as hell finish it.” said Harry.
"Hey! The first time wasn't really our fault." said Ron.

"If I was an evil son of a banshee, yeah, I guess that would have happened." said Sirius faintly.

"It was a lucky shot?" said Sirius.

"It takes an insane man to do the impossible." said Dr. Clark.

“Gee thanks.” said Sirius.

"About as safe as a danger magnet can be." said Harry with a kind smile.

"There's another first." muttered Bill.
"He meant Peter was at Hogwarts." said Harry.

"Actually, I was talking about you." said Sirius.

Harry stared at him.

"I was dreaming about you growing up and having the time of your life, with a troop of friends following you about and raising some hell." said Sirius. "But Peter kept creeping up into my dreams and I saw him once spiriting you away from Hogwarts in the dead of night." said Sirius.

"Is that one of the reasons that you left Azkaban at that time?" asked Remus.

"That and I saw Peter in the paper. Weasleys are all in Gryffindor, meaning that he would be close to Harry, so I had to get out and nab him." said Sirius.

_Dialogue set, fifth sentence._

"I'd rather die than see that." muttered Sirius, his eyes filled with tears.

_End of dialogue set._

"Well we know that wasn't right, so what did you think of." said Harry.

"Getting my revenge, and wondering how you were getting on." said Sirius.

_Fifty-second paragraph._

_Dialogue set._

"Not much he does know." said Mr. Weasley.

"I'm finding out I know much less than I ever dreamed." said Dumbledore faintly.

_Dialogue line._

"After arguing for about four hours." said Mr. Weasley.

"How do you like that, the one reason they're there is so they can protect Harry and they end up hurting him more than anyone else the entire year." said Ron.

_Dialogue line._

"I'm not a fan of theirs, I believe that they should be destroyed, much like the Rangers feel." said
Dialogue set.

Dialogue line.

Harry snorted loudly.

Dialogue line.

Fifty-third paragraph, second sentence.

"Explains on how we didn't see anybody." said Mr. Weasley.

End of fifty-third paragraph.

Fifty-fourth paragraph, first sentence.

"Fell out of my pocket." said Ron.

End of fifty-fourth paragraph.

Fifty-fifth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Fifty-sixth paragraph.

"I didn't find it very funny." said Percy.

"But it was really funny, watching the cleaning lady come in and give you what for." said Ginny in a giggled whisper. “Shouldn’t have destroyed the room that badly.”

Fifty-seventh paragraph.

"You could have told us that the Twins had my badge." said Percy.

Fifty-eighth paragraph.
"You've been through way too much to be able to piece all those things together that quickly." said Tempest.

Fifty-ninth paragraph, first sentence.

Lionus and Moody looked over at the white haired lad.

Fifty-ninth paragraph, third sentence.

"Sorry to let you down." said Harry who had caught their interested gaze.

"Nonsense, you have enough sense to rely on stronger people to help you." said Moody.

End of fifty-ninth paragraph.

"That's logical thinking." said Lionus.

Sixtieth paragraph.

"Blew that all to hell." muttered Remus with a smirk.

Sixty-first paragraph, first sentence.

"You were still worried about going to Hogsmede?" said Tonks.

"It was a freedom that I would love to have." said Harry honestly.

End of sixty-first paragraph.

"You make worrying about your well-being a bad thing." said McGonagall.

Sixty-second paragraph.

"Such arrogance!" scoffed Snape.

"Hey!" said Sirius.

"No, he's right. I'm an arrogant prat." said Harry with a small smile. "I'm getting a bit better....at least I think I am."

“How do you figure yourself arrogant?” asked Ginny.

“Well, maybe arrogant is a bit strong, but I figure I can take care of things better than most adults.”

"Arrogant is a bit strong, but you getting better, and pretty quickly." said Lionus.

"How do you know?” asked Remus. “Yet, you’re right, Harry, you aren’t arrogant.”

Harry blushed slightly and scratched the back of his head.

"He gets up at the same I do, and we spar out on the grounds." said Lionus. "He gets his butt handed to him every morning."

"I still can't tell if I’m sitting down or not since you've kicked me there." said Harry rubbing his backside and smiling.

“Back to the arrogant comment, it is a bit strong.” said Dumbledore with a smile. “Especially since you’ve admitted that. If you were indeed arrogant, you wouldn’t have said it.”

“He’s got a point, so maybe you should just say you have a some-what high opinion of yourself.” said Ginny softly.

“I’ll buy that.” said Harry with a smile.

Sixty-third paragraph.

"Explains why you looked so worn the next morning dear." said Mrs. Weasley.

End of chapter

"So much for sounding like she cared." said Ginny. "Well, that’s the end of that."

"I think dinner is more than necessary." said Dumbledore, he clapped his hands and the table full of food appeared. Ginny and Harry both stood up and walked over to where the food was and began to fill their plates.

Harry took a large helping of treacle tart when suddenly the door opened and a woman wearing a veil below her eyes had come inside the Great Hall.

Dr. Nicodemus walked swiftly over to her and spoke to her in a hushed voice. The woman nodded and turned around. Harry was watching what was transpiring, with a highly interested look. Suddenly the woman came back but she had someone in tow. It was another woman, though she was middle aged, she was still quite a beauty. One look at her and Harry did something he hadn't done in a good while.

He fainted.

Chapter End Notes
Thanks for reading, please review
Harry felt a cold cloth being placed over his forehead, and someone draping a warm blanket over his chest. Then he heard a voice, a sweet melodious voice, from his long and almost forgotten past.

"Harry? Harry? It's time to wake up dear."

Harry's eyes fluttered open and he looked up. Above him, wearing the smile he always cherished. It was Mrs. McFinn.

"M-Mrs.-Mrs. McFinn?" said Harry.

"Are you okay sweetheart?" said Mrs. McFinn her eyes brimming with tears.

"I'm fine now." said Harry, his voice choked. He sat up quickly and threw his arms around her neck.

"I still can't get over how big you are!" said Mrs. McFinn crying into Harry's messy white locks.

"I'm sorry I didn't come and visit you when you came back." said Harry, tears falling down his face.

"It's okay honey, I understand." she whispered to him.

"Oh hey! Dr. Clark is back look!" said Harry pulling his head back and smiling at her.

"I know dear, I was briefed before I came here by a very nice man." said Mrs. McFinn.

"That would be the chief." said Nightstrike with a smirk.

"I think Harry's had a long day, we'd better let him get some sleep." said Madam Pomfrey. She wiped her eyes, she hated happy moments, they always made her cry.

"He hasn't eaten yet though, Poppy." said Professor McGonagall.

"I'll just give him a nutritional potion, and then a sleeping potion." said Madam Pomfrey taking out two phials.

"But, I want to..." said Harry.

"We can talk in the morning sweetheart." said Mrs. McFinn. Harry stood up, finding out that they had placed him back in the bowl. "I want to talk to Dr. Clark for a bit." said Mrs. McFinn. She kissed the top of his head. "You get some sleep dear."

"Okay," said Harry with a smile. He and Ginny left with Madame Pomfrey.
"Hey...Holly." said Dr. Clark with a smile.

"Sam." said Mrs. McFinn with a small smile, she gave him a hug. "Where were you?"

"I don't know, I really don't know." said Dr. Clark. "But, you, how have you been?"

"Holding up. Trying to deal with my mother, she's still trying to get me to remarry." said Holly with small laugh. "I tried to save your apartment, and your things, but..."

"It's okay, I don't mind. I missed you, and Harry. Harry missed you something awful though." said Sam.

"I missed him too, you as well." said Holly. She looked around. "I still can't believe all this is real, and that Harry, my Harry..."

"I know, I have a hard time almost every other second, but I'm learning." said Dr. Clark.
Sirius cleared his throat loudly, Remus groaned and rolled his eyes.

"Oh, this is Sirius Black and..." said Sam.
Holly took a step back quickly and raised her fist, ready to slap whoever came to close.

"No! No! I was innocent! I swear!" said Sirius quickly shielding his face.

"He's right Holly! He didn't do anything!" said Sam, "They arrested the wrong guy."
It took a while to convince her to lower her hand, but she finally believed them...sort of...

"Let us change the subject, shall we?" said Dumbledore with a wide smile.

"Yeah! Uh, Sam here told us that you didn't really like living with your mother and I thought you'd like to move in with us." said Sirius excitedly, he lowered his hands.

"And your two's wives would be happy about this?" said Holly with a smirk.

"Uh...we...aren't married..." said Remus scratching the back of his head.

"Mmm hmmm." said Holly crossing her arms.

"Seriously, we'll behave." said Sirius crossing his heart.

"We'll see." said Holly.

"You'll have your own suite and everything!" said Sirius eagerly.

"Suite?" said Holly.

"The house is huge." said Sam. "And you'll be close to Harry."

"We'll see, but I'm finding the idea more appealing by the minute." replied Holly.

The night went on as Harry slept in the hospital wing, while Mrs. McFinn, like Dr. Clark, Rudolph and Leroy before her, she was brought up to speed. However they avoided Harry's death defying acts.

The next morning they all settled back into their chairs and Harry went back to the bowl, not before giving Remus the three foot long essay early.

"Harry I'm..." said Remus.

"I know, I'm sorry too." said Harry.

"I'll leave the telling off and grounding to Sirius from now on." said Remus with a smile.

"I'd leave it to Mrs. McFinn. She was real good about dealing with me when I was bad." said Harry with a smile.

"What did she do?" said Remus.

"Sent me to my room, no dessert or cookies for snack time, and I had to have a long talking to when I could finally come out of there."

"And that stopped you from doing something bad again?" said Seamus with a raised brow.

"You never saw her eyes when she's angry at you." said Harry, then he did a full body shiver.

"You're asking for another time out, young man." said Mrs. McFinn with a giggle.

"Who'd like to read this time?" said Madam Bones.

"I think I will." said Remus.

"Good timing." muttered Ron.

"Fifth Chapter." read Remus aloud.

"Knew it." said Ron.

"What's that?" asked Mrs. McFinn.

"One nasty piece of work." said Harry.

First paragraph, first sentence.

"He brings you your tea in bed?" asked Zacharias.

"He checks to make sure I made it to bed, one morning I got up early and ran about Diagon Alley for some exercise. He sort of freaked when he didn't find me asleep. So I went about two and a half weeks without my usual excursion in the morning." said Harry.

First paragraph, second sentence, sixteenth word.

"She was enjoying the freedom as much as I was." said Harry with a smile.
End of first paragraph.
"Good morning, Sunshine." said George.

Dialogue set.
"Well, you did!" said Percy. "You spilled tea everywhere!"
"It was on accident! You knocked into me!" said Ron angrily.

Dialogue line.
"It was beautiful." said Fred wiping a tear from his eye. "The shouting."
"and the phlegm flying from Percy's mouth as he talked." George
"Actually that part was disgusting." said Fred.

Second paragraph, first sentence, first comma, sixteenth word.
"That's a normal look these days." said Sirius, "You should see Remus' look in the morning."
Remus looked slowly over to him while Harry sniggered.
"YOU KNOW WHAT I MEAN!" shouted Sirius.

End of second paragraph.
"Girls ears only." said Hermione and Ginny, getting giggly again.
"So much for a heads up." said Harry with a smirk.
"You've had enough love potion to deal with." said Ginny.
"When was this?" asked Sirius.
"Last night, somebody had switched around a nutritional potion and a love potion." said Madam Pomfrey.
"How did that go?" asked Seamus with a smirk.
"Well, Miss Vane will not be joining us for the rest of the week, that is for sure." said McGonagall crossing her arms. “Though it was quite impressive how Potter threw it off.”
"Why didn't you want to talk in front of me?" asked Percy indignant ly.

His brothers and sister looked at him. "You really want us to answer that?" said Charlie.

"Kitty no like it in the nasty basket does it?" said George in a cutsey voice.

"Not the best idea. Some people have rats, toads and even owls. Cats and things that are either smaller than it or with feathers don't mix." said Charlie.

"Yikes, if Crookshanks latches onto you there, he could hurt you." said Charlie.

"For wanting to blend in, you guys need to work on your muggle transportation resources." said Harry shaking his head.

"Didn't want you to come running up and spiriting him away." said Mr. Weasley with an embarrassed smile to Sirius.

"I was on my way to Hogwarts at that point, I wasn't there." said Sirius.
Seventh paragraph.
"Hate sitting next to him, he gets nausea in moving vehicles." said Ron muttering to Hermione.

Eighth paragraph, first sentence.
"A rollercoaster is less eventful compared to the Knight Bus." said Dr. Clark shaking his head.

"I don't think I want to know." said Mrs. McFinn clutching Harry's arm. “Do you remember the time we took you to the amusement park?”

“Yeah, Officer….” said Harry a smile came across his face, but then it fell.

“James won you that giant panda bear.” said Mrs. McFinn finishing his statement. “I’ve still got that at Mother’s, I hold it sometimes.”

Eighth paragraph, second sentence.
"They complained about us flying a car, when they drive right through two semi-trucks with inches to spare." said Ron shaking his head.

Eighth paragraph, third sentence, third comma.
"That was nice." said Mrs. McFinn with a smile.

"He's a pretty popular man around the Ministry." said Kingsley with a smile.

End of eighth paragraph.
"Still can't believe that that bus driver never even noticed that he was skipped." said Hermione.

Ninth paragraph.
"Good job, Arthur." said Moody.

Dialogue line.
"You aren't very subtle." said Tonks with a giggle.

"That's why I didn't get a job at the Auror's office." said Mr. Weasley.
"You'd be a great person to work with." said Kingsley.

Tenth paragraph, first sentence.

"Couldn't pull the wool over your eyes, could I?" said Mr. Weasley with a kindly smile.

End of tenth paragraph.

"Just going with the flow." said Harry with a smile.

Eleventh paragraph.

Twelfth paragraph.

Dialogue set.

"Bet you couldn't miss something else either." muttered Charlie.

Bill elbowed his brother hard in the side.

Thirteenth paragraph, second sentence, second comma.

"Crookshanks didn't really like being shoved on the train." said Hermione.

End of thirteenth paragraph.

Fourteenth paragraph.

"You always did like hugs." said Mrs. McFinn giving Harry's head a quick kiss.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

"I was afraid I wouldn't see him again." said Mrs. Weasley as she dabbed her eyes.

End of dialogue set.
"That year she screwed up our sandwiches," said Fred.

"It was a simple exchange of tuna and swiss with peanut butter and jelly." said George.

"Bit of a shock though," said Fred.

"When you first bite into it and you expect something sweet." said George.

Dialogue line.

Fifteenth paragraph.

"Mum had to hold us back, we wanted to eavesdrop." said Fred.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"For calling yourself arrogant, you sure like to apologize quickly." said Charlie.

Mrs. McFinn leaned away from Harry. "You call yourself, arrogant?"

"I am now, well sort of, not that strong of a word." said Harry. "Ron has to sometimes tell me to get a flipping grip." said Harry with a smirk.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"He always tries to find the loophole in the rules." said Mrs. McFinn. "I told him he couldn't have a cookie before dinner. What does he do? He takes two cookies." she gave him a quick squeeze.

"And I wouldn't get paddled just once, I'd get it twice." said Harry leaning into her heavily.

“You paddled him?” said Dr. Clark in wonder, “I thought you hated that.”

“I used an oven mitt.” said Mrs. McFinn.

“Oh.” said Dr. Clark.

"I'm getting less “Harry time” over here." said Sirius pouting slightly.
Seamus scoffed. "Yeah, right."

"Can you blame me?" said Mr. Weasley with a nervous laugh.

"Not at all." said Dumbledore. "I myself didn't want to burden him with the knowledge; I would have rather him sleep peacefully at night."

"He's got a point." said Remus.

"I'm aiming for better than Voldemort thank you." muttered Sirius.

"Better in what way?" asked Dr. Clark.

"You'd more likely invite me over." said Sirius.

"As long as you don't go on the carpet." said Harry with mischievous grin.

"That's it. Payback time." said Sirius, he pulled Harry out and then he and his godson could be seen wrestling about on the floor.

"Take it back!" said Sirius pulling Harry's arm back playfully.

"No!" said Harry with a laugh.

"Don't hurt him!" said Madam Pomfrey.

"Hope you aren't talking about him!" said Harry, using his leg and flipping Sirius over.

Harry quickly turned and placed both hands on Sirius' shoulders, pinning him to the floor. "I win."

Sirius grunted, "I just let you win, cause you are still weak."

"Bull." said Harry with a smirk.

"Come on Harry, quit picking on the old guy," said Remus with a smirk.

"I'll get you too." said Sirius with a scowl.
'Don't do stupid stuff.' said Mr. Weasley.

"Can't promise that, I can't sleep at night without doing something stupid at least once a day." said Harry with a bright smile.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"Here comes the promise that I'll have to keep." said Harry shaking his head.

Dialogue line.

"It's for your own good." said Moody.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

"I should have said yes to that." said Mr. Weasley looking slightly embarrassed.

End of dialogue set.

Seventeenth paragraph.

"I'm nuts, but not psychotic!" said Harry with a laugh.

Eighteenth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"Good question." said Dr. Clark.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Nineteenth paragraph.
"Talking in private on the Hogwarts Express doesn't happen all that often." said Tonks.

"Sorry Ginny." said Ron humbly.

"It's okay, brothers are supposed to be brutes." she said with a smile.

"Not all brothers." said Percy.

"Yeah, some can be real prats." said George.

"Those are the more comfortable ones anyway." said Sirius. "Your dad favored the last one in the train."

Remus smiled. And that's why I chose to sit there.

"What time did you get there?" whispered Harry.

"I was there at five o'clock in the morning." said Remus. "Couldn't sleep very well."

"Didn't want to accidentally sit in a teachers compartment." said Hermione.

"I just wanted to take the train, for nostalgia." said Remus with a smile.

"And the off chance you'd see Harry." said Sirius.

"That was a big part of it." said Remus.
"Couldn't afford new ones." said Remus.
"Couldn't your cousin from the eyeglass shop help you?" asked Harry.
"I had already borrowed enough from her, I didn't want to take anymore of her money." said Remus.

"Was just finishing up recuperating from the previous full moon." said Remus.
"What does that have to do with it?" asked Mrs. McFinn.
"We never told her." whispered Sirius.
"Uh, I'm a...a...." said Remus.
"He's a werewolf." said Dr. Clark with an excited voice.
"They're real?" said Mrs. McFinn gripping Harry slightly.
"They are, and don't worry, dear lady, he's absolutely harmless." said Dr. Nicodemus. "We gave him an inoculation that makes him as harmless as a baby goat."
"I think the expression is 'baby lamb'." said Nightstrike.
"Not a big fan of lambs, but my sister has a goat farm, cutest little bleaters you ever did see. My grandchildren absolutely love them." said Dr. Nicodemus.
"I still can't believe that you're a grandpa, every time you show us your kids, I still can't believe it." said Lionus.

Remus looked forward and stared at Harry. "I've got gray in my hair?"

Harry looked down, red-faced, "Just a little...on the top. But hey! I got you beat easily!" he said tugging his own locks.

"What the?" asked Sirius. "How do you know?"
"I used my eyes." said Hermione.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

"Aww! You still have the case that Lily gave you." said Sirius with a smile.

"Couldn't bear to throw it away." said Remus.

End of dialogue set.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"To be perfectly honest, Miss Granger, there was two." said McGonagall with a slight smile. "Care of Magical Creatures, and Defense Against the Dark Arts."

Twenty-third paragraph.

"That rumor can be confirmed." said Dumbledore quietly.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

Remus smiled over to Ron.

"I'll take that back right now." said Ron with a sheepish grin.

End of dialogue set.

Twenty-fourth paragraph, second sentence.

"Sort of sad that they freak out more than I do." said Harry with a smirk.

End of twenty-fourth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"I'd love a nice quiet year." said Harry. "That'll never happen." said Harry with a smirk.
"How thick do you have to be to leave your house, at night, with a murderer on the loose?" said Snape.

"We get it Severus, it wasn't the best idea." said Flitwick shaking his head.

“If you really think about it, if I had stayed at Uncle Vernon's, I never would have made it to school, whether you expelled me or not.” said Harry.

Remus looked at Harry. “Why?”

“He would have killed me....” said Harry.

The adults, including Severus looked uncomfortable.

"No surprise there." said George.

"Well, Peter Pettigrew is going to get that now." said Madam Bones.

"If we don't get him first." said Lionus with a smirk.

"They caught me, but I wasn't there for long." said Sirius.

"I'd love to know what happened." said Snape with a low growl.

"Harry wouldn't have been able to reach it." said Ron.

"I thought you were going to knock off the short jokes." said Harry.

"Never promised that." said Ron with a smirk.
"Someone's been naughty!" chanted Fred and George.

"That means it was working." said Mr. Weasley with smile.

"Yes." said Charlie and Bill.

"You could have waited till Snitch was back." said Bill. "He would have taken your stuff to him."

"Thanks for thinking of me." said Remus with a smile, he reached over and ruffled Harry's hair.

Ron then screamed. "Ahhh! I touched his old socks!"

"Way to remind him he can't go." said Sirius.
"What about Godric Hollow?" asked Sirius. "I've never seen any Muggles there."

"There is one living on the outskirts of town." said Dumbledore. "She's been there for many years, and knows all about us. She helps the people who live there with their Muggle disguises."

"Amen!" said Charlie happily.

"What? Really?" said Mrs. McFinn.

"Sirius tricked me into eating one of those. They aren't bad, but it was a bit frightening." said Dr. Clark.

"Sirius Black!" scolded McGonagall.

“But it was funny.” whined Sirius.

"Ooh, those sound good right now." said Ron.

Harry sent a wink over to Ginny who giggled.

"Now if only they could write." said Professor Sprout.

"But Hogsmeade's a very interesting place, isn't it?" Hermione pressed on eagerly. "In Sites of Historical Sorcery it says the inn was the headquarters for the 1612 goblin rebellion,

"Which one?" asked Ron. "There's two."

"It was the Three Broomsticks, there is still some slashes in the wall left over by some of their swords." said Dumbledore.
End of dialogue set.

Sirius snorted slightly.

Dialogue line.

"That's nothing new." said Hermione crossing her arms.

Twenty-eighth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"Didn't you want to go honey?" said Mrs. McFinn.

"Couldn't go, no one signed my permission form." said Harry.

"Where is it, I'll sign it." she said with a smile.

"I already did, he was able to go the next year." said Sirius.

"And he found a way down there that year anyway." said Remus.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Twenty-ninth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"No, I will not." said McGonagall stiffly.

Thirtieth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

" Exactly." said Mrs. Weasley. "Not that you were going to hurt him Sirius, but..."
"I understand." said Sirius with a small smile.

Dialogue line.

"Good guess." said Professor McGonagall.

Dialogue line.

"Two thirteen year olds aren't going to stop someone from trying to kill him." said Sirius.

Dialogue set.

Thirty-first paragraph.

"Don't you remember what happened at the pet store?" said Tonks. "Crookshanks is going to attack Ron!"

Dialogue set.

Dialogue line.

"You really had the nerve to sound angry?" said Dr. Clark in surprise.

"It was my cat!" said Hermione.

"It was his pet! His pet he had had for over three years!" said Bill.

"He didn't have to be mean to Crookshanks," said Hermione stiffly.

"If another creature was going to eat my pet, I'd be mean to it." said Charlie.

Thirty-second paragraph.

"Poor baby's sleepy right after the full moon." said Sirius in a baby voice.

"You must be a younger werewolf. Pretty soon, you'll be alert and active right away." said Nightstrike.

"You look younger than I do." said Remus.

"I'm fifty-three." said Nightstrike with a smirk. "I'm older than I look."
"As am I." said Lionus.

People stared.

"We take a special elixir that keeps us young and active, and no, it's not Elixir of Life, being immortal would take all the fun out of life." said Lionus with a smirk.

Thirty-third paragraph.

Thirty-fourth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"That was very good of you Ron." said Mrs. Weasley with a fond smile.

Thirty-fifth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Thirty-sixth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"That's nice." said Remus with a laugh.

"That would be freaky." said Harry, who did a full body shiver. "In a train compartment with a dead guy, who was just alive five seconds ago. Yeech!"

Dialogue line.

Thirty-seventh paragraph, first sentence.

"Great, I'm being used in my sleep." said Remus with a laugh.

End of thirty-seventh paragraph.

"And to think, you beat out You-Know-Who." said Ron with a laugh.

Thirty-eighth paragraph, second sentence, first semi-colon.
Harry mouthed an apology over to Draco, who was scowling at the floor.

Thirty-eighth paragraph, end of second sentence.
Draco’s face changed from anger, to guilt.

End of thirty-eighth paragraph.

Dialogue line.
"Well, the 'Potty' insult isn't very original." said Sirius with a snarl.
"Neither is 'Weasel'." said Charlie.

Thirty-ninth paragraph.
"Fits their personalities." said Fred with laugh.

Dialogue line.
"Sorry." said Draco.
"Gotta admit though." said Ginny in a whisper to her older twin brothers. "she did faint."

Fortieth paragraph.
"Did you wake up?" said Ron.
"Nope, went right back to sleep." said Remus.

Dialogue line.
"Nice, he has a fear of grownups." said Moody with crooked smile.
"I did too, for a little while." said Harry.
"It took a while for you to warm up to us, sweetheart." said Mrs. McFinn kissing Harry's head again.
"He sometimes has a worse temper than I do." said Harry with a laugh.

"And that's saying something." said Ron.

"Resourceful little...." said Snape with a sneer over to Harry.

"Ron must have been going through puberty." mumbled Dr. Clark to Remus.

"You couldn't wake him up with a million firecrackers under his pillow, a few days after the full moon." said Sirius.

"What?" said Charlie. "Why would the train slow down?"
"This wasn't the best idea that I had agreed to," said Dumbledore darkly.

"Nearly got sent out of compartment." said Harry.

"Before you ask, that was me asking if the train had broken down." said Harry.

"Sort of hard to do on a bridge." said Hermione with a slight smile.

"But that’s what happened.” said Ron.

"Who was in pain?" said Madam Pomfrey.

"I think the both of us." said Harry.
"There you go." said Ron with a smile. "Shows how strong he is."

"That had to be painful." said Ernie.

"It was, I think there's still a scar." said Neville shifting in his seat.

"Be thankful no one can see it." said Harry with a laugh.

"Didn't want her to accidentally sit on me and then the lights turn on. Ron would have killed me." said Harry with a blush. "And Ginny and I would have died of embarrassment before he would have gotten the chance."
"Hoarse voice, huh? Has to be Remus." said Sirius with a laugh.

"If you're frightened and an adult tells you to shut up, you shut up." said Harry with a smile.

"One of his favorite, dramatic spells." said Sirius.

"Something tells me that it isn't someone selling Girl Scout cookies." said Lionus.

Mrs. McFinn whimpered slightly. "What in the world is that?"

"That's a dementor." said Hermione, her face pale.

Dumbledore's hands clenched tightly. "When I get a hold of Fudge, I'll kill him." he said.

"Why?" asked Dr. Clark.

"That thing is trying to drain that compartment of any joy that was there, and then...if it had stuck around..." said Lionus. "That is why we destroy each one we come across, there is no control of those things, they can't determine who their prey is."

"There isn't many creatures that can do that." said Percy.

"There aren't many creatures that the Ministry of Magic use." said Lionus sternly.
Sixtieth paragraph.

Mrs. McFinn threw her arms around Harry's neck and pulled him tighter against her. Sirius tuck the blanket around him and held onto one of his hands.

Sixty-first paragraph.

Most of the people in the Great Hall turned and looked horrified at Harry.

Sixty-second paragraph.

Suddenly, small white balls popped out of book and spun quickly about the room.

"What are those?" asked Mrs. McFinn, looking at one of the balls that floated gently in front of her.

"Scattered Shots, haven't seen those in a while." said Dr. Clark.

They entered each person's body and then light enveloped them all.

They found themselves, shrunk to almost the size of a small child's toy and hovering over the scene that laid below them. A slightly younger Remus Lupin was pushing the Dementor back with a large blast of white light and Harry was lying on the floor, hunched in a fetal position.

Once Remus had slammed the door he leaned down and turned Harry over.

"Harry! Harry! Are you alright?" he said, looking anxious.

Though his voice was quiet almost like a whisper, they could hear it quite clear.

"Uncle Moony? Uncle Paddy? Grandpa? Where are you? Mum? Dad? I'm scared, where are you?"

Suddenly the balls left and they were back inside the Great Hall.

"Dang, that was a short one." said Fred.

"I don't remember saying that." said Harry.

"No, I don't think you would, dear boy." said Dumbledore with a tear running down his nose.

"So you do remember us....sort of." said Sirius with a sad smile and giving his godson's hand a small squeeze.

Dialogue line.

Sixty-third paragraph.

"Now that I remember." said Harry rubbing his cheek.
"That was scary, you doing that." said Ron. "Thought you were having a fit."

"I'm fine now." said Harry reassuringly to the men in the bowl.

"He was sort of all floppy and limp." said Ron.

"Ron! Just say he was feeling weak!" said Hermione.

"Well, he was all floppy..." said Ron uncertainly.

"Thought you were hearing homicidal voices again." said Ron with a shrug.

"We didn't hear what you said, we were more shaken up with that thing that came in and then you falling to the floor." said Ginny.

"You think chocolate can cure anything." said Sirius shaking his head.

"Chocolate really did help in that instance." said Harry.
"He looked like he needed it more than anyone else." said Remus.

"I didn't want to throw it back up." said Harry.

"The foulest things on the planet." said Lionus.

"Not to mention send an owl to Dumbledore." said Harry with a smirk.

"It was McGonagall that I sent the owl to actually." said Remus with smirk.

"You saw a dementor, you fainted, simple as that." said Dean with a wary smile.

"Saw that happen to Great Uncle Gideon, after that he never woke up." said Ron shaking slightly.
"Well didn't you just act so cool." said Sirius with a smirk.

"Letting a dementor on a train full of children...." snarled Dr. Nicodemus.

"Have you ever had the flu?" asked Remus.

"Once or twice, but Officer had it worse......" said Harry then he looked at Mrs. McFinn.

"He was a big baby." said Mrs. McFinn with a fond smile, though tears filled her eyes.

"They didn't have the past you had, Harry." said Dumbledore sadly.

"Waste of good chocolate." said Remus with sniff.

"See! Chocolate has it's uses!" said Remus.

"Yeah, but he was ready to throw it back up." said Sirius.
Seventy-fifth paragraph.
"I figured it was the damn scar." said Harry.

Mrs. McFinn tapped his mouth, "Watch your language dear."

"Yes, ma'am." said Harry automatically.

"Oh thank god you're here! He's been a hellion!" said Fred in a dramatic voice.

"Truly!" said George. "Such language we've never heard!"

“No I didn’t!” said Harry quickly.

“I figured not to believe them straight off.” said Mrs. McFinn with a wink.

Dialogue line.

Seventy-sixth paragraph, second sentence.

"Didn't want to lose him this year." said Neville.

End of seventy-sixth paragraph.

Dialogue set.
"Wasn't it raining?" said Dr. Clark. "Don't you postpone that for another night?"

"The boats are quite safe, and so is the lake, thanks to Octavius." said Dumbledore.

"Octavius?" asked Mrs. McFinn.

"The Giant Squid." said Harry.

"You are never swimming in that lake." said Mrs. McFinn quickly.

"Too late." said Harry with a dry chuckle.

Dialogue set, fourth sentence, sixth comma.

"Boy was I wrong." said Harry shaking his head.

End of dialogue set.

Seventy-seventh paragraph, second sentence.
"I should have given you your own chocolate bar." mused Remus.

End of seventy-seventh paragraph.

"Can you blame us?" said Hermione quietly.

Seventy-eighth paragraph, second sentence, first semi-colon.

Harry brought the blanket up closer to himself.

he leaned back into the lumpy seat and closed his eyes until they had passed the gates.

"That scared us, we thought you were having another fit." said Ron.

End of seventy-eighth paragraph.

Seventy-ninth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"Give me one guess." said Charlie sending a scowl over to Draco.

Eightieth paragraph.

"I did notice something though, his pants had changed." said Harry quietly. "He didn't have that green streak up the side."

Sirius snorted. ‘Must’ve wet himself.”

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"Kid..." said Nightstrike. "Even one of our Captains is afraid of Dementors, don't be pushing your luck."

"Sorry." said Draco quickly.
"I noticed that, he was quite lucky I was more worried about Harry than anything else." said Remus with a smile.

"I'd've taken points away from the little vermin." said Sirius.

"If the least little jab had affected me, I wouldn't have been friends with you very long." said Remus with a laugh.

"I always loved how you described things, it's like looking at a painting." said Mrs. McFinn kissing the top of Harry's head again.

"Is it just me, or does he lean into her when she kisses him?" asked Sirius in a whisper.

"She was the only mother figure he had, and he was a big momma's boy." said Dr. Clark with a smile.

"That's got to be a record, not even two minutes into the castle and you're already in trouble." said Sirius. "At least James and I waited until the feast started to set off a few fireworks."

"They weren't in trouble." said McGonagall.

“Oh, well then, I’m disappointed.” said Sirius.

"It's a gift." said McGonagall with slight smile.
"This isn't good, if she isn't letting Ron in on it." said Fred.

Eighty-sixth paragraph.

"Tattletale." said Sirius.

"Did you see how pale he looked? I was afraid he wasn't going to even last the train ride, much less the trip up to the castle without being carried up." said Remus.

Eighty-seventh paragraph.

Eighty-eighth paragraph.

"You're worth making a fuss over." said Sirius.

"It's embarrassing." said Harry mumbling.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Madam Pomfrey blushed as the students and a few guests began to laugh. "Well? What am I supposed to think?"

Dialogue line.

Eighty-ninth paragraph.

Dialogue set.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"And so it begins." said George with a laugh.

"I'll bet, that if she could get away with it, she'd keep him in the Hospital Wing." said Fred.

"He'd avoid injury that way." said Madam Pomfrey.

Dialogue line.
"And you collapsing Merlin knows where is any better?" said Madam Pomfrey with her eyebrows raised.

"Finally a Defense Against the Dark Arts teacher that has some brain cells." said Madam Pomfrey with a smirk.

"Not buying it." said George.

"Every time you say you're fine, you aren't." Fred.

"Not before taking one last look at me." said Harry.

"What did she want to talk to you about?" asked Lee.

"Do you ever get to see a Sorting?" asked Sirius to Harry.

"Not till next year." said Harry.
Draco helped it along." said Fred. "He shouted it when he came into the Hall."
"Got himself ten points deducted for shouting in the Hall too." said George.

Dumbledore smiled at Harry, who only turned pink. "Well, you talk, we listen."
"Thank you Harry." said Dumbledore with a bright smile.
Dumbledore looked at Harry, with a slight frown.
Dumbledore reached over and patted Harry's head gently.
"That pun was intended." said Dumbledore with a chuckle.
"And I was assured that there would be more than just our newest teacher on there to protect our students." said Dumbledore with a frown.
Ninety-seventh paragraph.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

"Gee, who could he be talking about?" asked Fred.

End of dialogue set.

Ninety-eighth paragraph, first sentence.

"I'd rather ask Snape for help." muttered Seamus.

End of ninety-eighth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"You didn't look very happy, sir." said a third year Hufflepuff.

Dialogue line.

Ninety-ninth paragraph, first sentence.

"Oh, come on!" said Sirius.

"Hey, in our defense, we didn't know what he was going to be like, or we would have clapping like mad." said Dean.

Ninety-ninth paragraph, second sentence.

"You were a hero!" said Ginny.

End of ninety-ninth paragraph.

"I was starting to wish that I had taken your offer for a pay advance." said Remus with a smile over to Dumbledore.
Sirius sent a scowl over to Snape and growled slightly.

"Remember when that kelpie bit..." said Sirius.

Remus coughed and nodded towards the first years.

"Fine." said Sirius crossing his arms.

"That's one full plate, Hagrid." said Tonks.

"I can handle it." said Hagrid with a large smile.

"And he does a marvelous job of it too." said Dumbledore. "I have noticed that since Hagrid has taken over the class that the average, test scores for the O.W.L's and the N.E.W.T's has gotten quite a bit higher. The examiners are quite pleased."

Hagrid blushed brightly.

“Bit of a rough start, but the classes have greatly improved.” said Dumbledore with a smile.

"We love Hagrid more than any other house, easily." said George proudly.

"T'd rather have the biting book than the two years of defensive books that lie to you." said Harry.

"Oh, Hagrid." said Mrs. Weasley with a smile.
"Amen!" said Ron.

"Ron! Lunch will be a while yet." said Hermione.

"Good! You seem to have lost the weight I put on you all those years ago." said Mrs. McFinn with smile.

"And I 'ppreciate it." said Hagrid wiping a tear from his eyes.

"Didn't want to wait until the first class." said Harry.

"I simply thought that you were the best for the job." said Dumbledore. "I remember all the times that you gave Professor Kettleburn advice on how to deal with unicorns and thestrals. You are quite the authority." he added with a smile.

"Oh come on Minerva, let them enjoy his new job with him." said Mr. Weasley with a laugh.

"You'd think that as Head Boy, he'd tell the Prefects and then they'd let everyone else know." said Ron shaking his head.
Dialogue line.

"Don't worry, I know someone else that had problem memorizing stuff, though I can't really call that a compliment or make you feel any better." said Sirius.

"Who was that?" asked Neville.

"Peter Pettigrew." said Remus.

One hundred and eighth paragraph, second sentence.

"Home sweet home." said Harry with a fond smile.

End of Chapter.

"Well that's it." said Remus putting the book down. "Who wants to read now?"

"I'll do it." said Hermione.

She walked over to where Remus was and gently took the book out of his hand. When she got back to the love seat she shared with Ron, she looked at the title and gave a slight laugh.

"Chapter Six." said Hermione.

"If the reference to talons is what I think, we might learn the absolute truth to what happened." said Dumbledore looking at Draco sternly.

Draco took the opportunity to gaze intently down at the floor.

Chapter End Notes

Thanks for reading, please review!
"You comfortable, sweetie?" asked Mrs. McFinn.

"Uh huh." said Harry smiling as he laid his his on her shoulder.

"Let's see how far we can go before lunch time." said Dumbledore with a smile. "Miss Granger, if you would."

"There's a shock." said Fred.

"He's not normally funny." said George.

"Fainting is funny?" said Nightstrike.

"No, not really." said Ron rolling his eyes. "He was mocking Harry."

"I'd like to see him go up against a dementor." said Tempest sourly.

"It is not many people who fall victim to them so quickly, those few are the few worthy of knowing and protecting." said Firenze.

Sirius groaned, "Too bad she isn't here to hear that. Where is she anyway?"

"Most likely trying to get rid of that stuff on her face, that's what happens when you don't follow directions with that sort of stuff. She's going to be out of commission for a little while longer." said Harry with a laugh.
"She looked like she was trying to catch a very slow moving moth." said Ron with a smirk.

"He looked pissed." said George.

"Walked on egg shells, we did. Till Harry finally calmed down." said Fred.

Malfoy went pink.

"Joking didn't work, maybe explaining something will." said George.

"Takes less than a day for some." said Sirius thoughtfully.
"No surprise." said Sirius proudly.

"Well, at least you were feeling better enough to eat." said McGonagall with a slight smile.

"Exactly, you always felt sick to your stomach when you were upset. The only thing we could get down your throat would be tea." said Mrs. McFinn, kissing the top of Harry's head.

"Well, at least Ron is becoming concerned." said Lavender.

"How on Merlin's green traveling cloak is that possible?" asked Tonks.

"I had a way." said Hermione with a smile.

"Way to change the subject." said Dr. Clark with a smile.
"That cleared about a good portion of the Great Hall in a hurry." said George. "Never saw people run so fast."

Dialogue set.

Seventh paragraph.

"Didn' think I was still holdin' on ter it." said Hagrid sheepishly.

Dialogue line.

"Sorry." said Ron quickly.

Eighth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"And that's with the shortcuts by the second floor to the fourth floor and us running the rest of the way." said Ron.

Ninth paragraph.

"The only people who were laughing were Slytherins." said Fred. "Not one person outside that house."

Tenth paragraph.

"Didn't really have a reason, and Filch kept the younger students out." said Harry.

Dialogue set.

"Nothing nearby." said Fred shaking his head.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"There's a hint that Ron knew quite a bit more about the lay out of the castle then he let on about."
said Neville with a smile.

Eleventh paragraph, third sentence.

"I shrieked when I saw that painting of the peacocks moving about this morning. I thought I had lost my mind." said Mrs. McFinn with a laugh.

"Try having a portrait of a guy chatting with you on stuff you have on or the price of snake fangs." said Dr. Clark. "That threw me for a loop."

End of eleventh paragraph.

"He never was a very smooth rider." said Lionus with a smirk.

"And annoying to boot." said Ron. "Hang on, how do you know about him?"

"I was a student here once upon a time, a long long time ago." said Lionus. "Different name, different life."

"He's like Dumbledore, no real straight answer." said Ron shaking his head.

Dialogue set, third sentence.

"You're in a painting, we're out here. How can we be trespassing on your land?" asked Lee shaking his head

End of dialogue set.

"Few quick slices of a knife to the canvas will beat him." said Sirius with a smirk.

"Have you apologized to the Fat Lady yet?" asked Remus quietly.

"Uh....not yet, I'll do it tonight though." said Sirius looking guilty.

Twelfth paragraph, first sentence.

"That would have been hilarious to see." said Ernie with laugh.

End of twelfth paragraph.
Several people laughed loudly at the antics of the old knight.

Dialogue line.

"He's a painting, who cares?" said Zacharias.

Dialogue line.

"Harry! You rogue!" shouted George.

Thirteenth paragraph, first sentence.

"It was like watching a reenactment of the Sword in the Stone." said Harry with a smirk.

End of thirteenth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"Every portrait in the castle knows where every room is, after a few hundred years, you learn quite a bit about this grand old place." said Dumbledore with a smile.

Dialogue set, third sentence, third comma.

"Is he schizophrenic?" asked Dr. Clark.

"No, just over dramatic." said Remus.

End of dialogue set.

"Die on the way to a class?" said Ron.

"Knowing me, it'll happen." said Harry quietly.

Fourteenth paragraph.

"Wow, you guys went from being rogues and braggarts, to good sirs and gently lady in less than a minute." said Seamus.
"Well, he's able to adapt." said Professor Sprout, "That's one good quality."

"One of his only." muttered McGonagall.

Fifteenth paragraph.

Sixteenth paragraph.

Dialogue set, second sentence, second comma.

"I don't think that is what he was talking about." said Professor Flitwick with a giggle.

End of dialogue set.

"That was the worse part." said Harry.

Seventeenth paragraph.

"Harry was breathing heavy too, but not nearly as hard as the rest of us." said Hermione.

Dialogue set.

"Not that desperate." said Ron.

Dialogue line.

The students in the Great Hall laughed loudly.

Eighteenth paagraph.

Dialogue line.

"Have Harry stand on your shoulders and he'll reach it." said Dr. Clark.

Nineteenth paragraph, first sentence.

"I keep forgetting, what I think is an obvious solution, you do something different that's even easier." said Dr. Clark with a laugh.
End of nineteenth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"Chicken." said Charlie with a smile.

Twentieth paragraph, second sentence.

"I find it cozy." said Trelawny with a distinct sniff.

"So do we." said Parvati, and Lavender.

Twentieth paragraph, fifth sentence.

"Reminds me of my mother's favorite tea room." said Mrs. McFinn. "Could hardly breathe in there when I was younger."

End of twentieth paragraph.

Twenty-first paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"Waited for her entrance cue." muttered McGonagall.

Twenty-second paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"Right on time." said McGonagall.

Twenty-third paragraph, first sentence.

Dumbledore covered his mouth to hid a wide smile while several teachers coughed trying to hide their laughter.
"Yeah, I can see how that sounds like a bug." muttered Kingsley with a snicker.

"Over dramatizing the moment." said Ron.

"It most certainly does." said Professor Trelawney.

McGonagall rolled her eyes.

"Can't argue with you there." said Sirius. "If you ain't got it, you ain't got it, and not many people have it."

"That is actually a very truthful statement." said Dumbledore. "Divination is more on feeling then actual knowledge."

"Poor Hermione." said Ginny soothingly.

"What a kind way of putting it." said Dumbledore with a smile up to the blushing Divination teacher.
"She got a cold, but nothing really all that bad." said Neville.

"Alright, so she can get a few hits." said McGonagall to a smiling Professor Sprout.

"I didn't do a thing to her." said Ron quickly.

"It was George, he snuck up behind her and scared her the next day." said Lavender.

"I remember when James learned about those, he leaned too far into the fire, and caught his bangs on fire." said Remus with a smile.

"There's a surprise." said Sirius rolling his eyes.

"That was a very nice week." mumbled McGonagall to Professor Sprout.

"Well, that's ominous." said Remus.

"I didn't want to know what the future held for me at that point." said Lavender.
"Way to dash her feeling of reassurance." said Madam Bones.

"Oh my girlfriends and I love to do that!" said Mrs. McFinn excitedly. "We used to do that during our college days. I predicted my friend’s first child!"

"That is quite impressive." said Dumbledore with twinkling eyes.

"Well, I cannot see the aura radiating from her, it must have been coincidental." said Professor Trelawney stiffly.

"The whole school knows he's clumsy, that wasn't a real prediction." said Dean in a low whisper to Seamus.

"Then why hand him a blue one?" asked Hermione loudly. "If you knew he was going to break it?"

"I had hoped that he would defy the road to destiny." said Professor Trelawney.

"Typical answer." muttered Hermione and McGonagall.

"It was Earl Grey, I hate Earl Grey." said Harry with a look of disgust on his face.
"A cup of soggy stuff." said Sirius.

"Yeah!" said Sirius happily.

"Hey now." said Sirius, his face falling.

"Wasn't working." said Harry with a laugh.

"Aw, poor Ron." said George.

"He shouldn't have to endure hardships." said Fred.

"I go through enough trial's and suffering with the two of you." said Ron.

"Sounds like what James predicted for Peter, he was going to die unmarried and childless at twenty-four, but have seven grandchildren hanging on his legs" said Remus with a laugh.

"They always did like to goof off." said Professor Flitwick with a chuckle. "Boys will be boys."
"Now that the Ministry is going under some overhauling, I might just take the job, but I don't know quite yet." said Harry.

"All you have to do is ask." said Harry.

"She takes her job very seriously, apparently." said Sirius.

"Book said to do it clockwise." whispered Hermione.

"Duh." said Seamus.

"She was learning some bad habits from us." said Ron.
"Well, I wasn't a happy child." said Harry with a smile.

Dialogue line.

"It was, till all that turning elongated that bowl part of the hat." said Hermione.

Dialogue line.

"Another obvious prediction." muttered McGonagall.

Professor Trelawney scowled at her fellow teacher.

Thirty-seventh paragraph.

Thirty-eighth paragraph, first sentence.

"No fault of your own." said McGonagall.

End of thirty-eighth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"Which screams, 'ask me and I'll spill it.'" said Dr. Clark with a smile.

End of dialogue set.

Dialogue line.

Students who weren't in the Divination classroom the first time, gasped loudly.

"What's the big deal?" asked Dr. Clark.

"It's nothing good." said Mrs. McFinn as she clutched Harry to her. "I remember that from a book when I was younger.

Dialogue line.

Thirty-ninth paragraph.
"It's not a good sign to see, even outside a teacup." said Dumbledore with a kind smile.

Dialogue set.

"Man, dogs catch a bad rap." said Lee shaking his head.

Fortieth paragraph, first sentence.

"Sorry about that." said Sirius quietly.

"It's okay, I overreacted." said Harry with a smile.

Fortieth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"Miss Granger!" said Professor Flitwick.

"Well it didn't!" said Hermione.

"That is most likely true, but...." said Dumbledore. "Minerva may hold some contempt for her, but a student should not openly disrespect a teacher in class."

"In her defense, I took that liberty with her." said Harry pointing up to Umbridge.

"She doesn't qualify, she wasn't an authentic teacher." said Remus quickly.

Forty-first paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"Fancy way of saying 'you don't have what it takes'." said Harry with a smile.

Forty-second paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"We couldn't." said Parvati, "it was...just...."
"I couldn't either. I was.....never mind." said Ron quietly.

"Another obvious prediction." muttered McGonagall.

"We got lost about three times, Sir Cadogan kept trying to lead us down the wrong way." said Harry. "He wanted us to go and help him fight some painted dragons and other things."

“Sure he did.” said Sirius with a snicker.

"It was getting really annoying." said Harry.

"Well, that's a classic foreshadowing." said Sirius with a bark-like laugh.

"I'd love to have that ability." said Mrs. McFinn. "I'd love to be able to turn into a swan, that's my favorite animal."

"I can turn into a dog." said Sirius with a smile. "That's my favorite animal."

"Tootsie." said Harry with fond smile.

McGonagall blushed heavily.
Forty-sixth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Forty-seventh paragraph.

People in the Great Hall began to laugh loudly.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

"I didn't mean it like that." said Harry quickly.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

"And I've told her every year that that little stunt needed to stop." said Dumbledore sternly.

End of dialogue set.

Forty-eighth paragraph, first sentence.

"At least not to students." said Professor Flitwick.

End of forty-eighth paragraph.

Professor Trelawney continued to scowl at her learned comrade.

Forty-ninth paragraph.

"I needed to hear that." said Harry with a smile.

Fiftieth paragraph.

"What about Neville's cup?" asked Sirius.
"It said he wasn't going to live past seventh year." said Lavender.

"You'll be fine, Mr. Longbottom." said Professor Sprout.

"I know." said Neville with a smile.

Fifty-first paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Fifty-second paragraph.

"Wow, Ron must've been really upset." said Ernie.

"I don’t' blame him." said Mr. Weasley giving his youngest son a kind smile.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Fifty-third paragraph.

"Yeah, after that little scene in Divination class, I wouldn't be too keen on dogs either." said Bill.

Dialogue line.

Fifty-fourth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"Miss Granger, I think you owe Mr. Weasley an apology, you do not speak lightly of a family member's unfortunate passing." said Dumbledore calmly.

"But..." said Hermione.

"Now, Miss Granger." said Dumbledore, the twinkling in his eyes, dulling slightly.

"Sorry Ron." said Hermione.
"That they do." said Mr. Weasley, "It's a very bad omen."

"I always thought they looked cool." said Sirius with a guilty shrug.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

Hermione looked down shamefully.

End of dialogue set.

"Miss Granger!" said McGonagall in shock.

"Well...." said Hermione quietly.

Fifty-fifth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"For some people I suppose, dear, but perhaps for some others, it's not guesswork, and they actually see what most people cannot." said Mrs. McFinn.

"I'm amazed you know so much about this kind of stuff." said Dr. Clark. "Did you ever call those psychic hotlines?"

"I'm not that stupid." said Mrs. McFinn. "I just read up on it for fun."

Dumbeldore smiled. "And yet, you have quite a large amount of knowledge about the field."

"Only the tea leaves part." said Mrs. McFinn shyly.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

The twins groaned.

"That had to hurt." said George.

"That's below the belt." said Fred.

Fifty-sixth paragraph.
Dialogue set.

Professor Trelawney folded her arms and looked away with a frown on her face.

Fifty-seventh paragraph.

Fifty-eighth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"Wait, what?" asked Ernie.

"But she was, she was in there the first day." said another Hufflepuff.

Fifty-ninth paragraph.

Sixtieth paragraph, first sentence.

"Nothing new." said Harry rolling his eyes.

Sixtieth paragraph, third sentence.

"This won't end well." said Sirius.

"And it doesn't." said Remus shaking his head.

End of sixtieth paragraph.

Sixty-first paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"Hagrid seems so excited." said Tonks with smile.

Sixty-second paragraph.

"Were you going to learn about thesterals?" asked Luna.

"Not that year." said Harry.
"How?" asked Dr. Clark.

"Just stroke the spine." said Charlie, "It'll open right up."

"Like an animal?" said Mrs. McFinn. "That's adorable!"

"Not when the book bites you first." said Harry with a smile.

"They really should have sold them with instructions or a spell to keep them closed when not in use." said McGonagall.

"Only quick glances at a page or two." said Harry.

"Well, that does seem simple enough, it is a sort of beast book." said Dr. Nicodemus.

"Mr. Malfoy..." said McGonagall.

"Sorry." said Malfoy.
"That book actually has the best knowledge of different animals and creatures." said Harry. "Though, the manager should have left instructions on how to get past the cover of the book."

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Sixty-fifth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"You're father can do nothing more than any other father now." said Seamus.

"Except he has the Minister by the wallet." said Harry.

"Not anymore." said Lionus with a smirk. "We seized half of his money."

"What?" asked Malfoy loudly.

"Any money that your father was entitled to, is gone. Now only your mother has authority to go into Gringotts and take out money." said Lionus.

"Goblins won't like that." said Bill.

"They don't have a choice, its either they cooperate, or we take back control of the security of the wizarding world's money. They choose to stay with the power they have." said Dr. Nicodemus.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"I thought there really was one back there, I jumped about a foot in the air." said Harry.

Sixty-sixth paragraph, third sentence, first comma.

Mrs. McFinn whimpered slightly.

"That sounds like, what were they called? A hippogriff?" said Dr. Clark.

"Very good, Sam." said Dumbledore with a bright smile. "That is exactly what they are."

"Are they dangerous?" asked Mrs. McFinn holding Harry close.

"Not anymore dangerous than any other creature on this planet. You just need to be polite and you will be fine." said Harry.
Sixty-sixth paragraph.

Dialogue set.

"Human nature to back up when something's charging at you." said Dean.

"Except for Harry, he tightens up and thinks of a way to stop it." said Angelina with a giggle.

Dialogue line.

Sixty-seventh paragraph, first sentence.

Harry smiled embarrasingly and turned pink. "Sorry Hagrid."

End of sixty-seventh paragraph.

"They're kinda beautiful.." said Harry honestly.

Dialogue line.

Sixty-eighth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"Very good Hagrid." said Madam Bones, "So far your lesson is going splendidly."

"Thank you ma'am." said Hagrid his face getting pink.

Dialogue line.

Sixty-ninth paragraph.

"Well, now. It seems that is what had happened." said Dumbledore.

Snape sent Malfoy an intense glare, but Malfoy didn't notice, he was too busy staring at his knees.

Dialogue set.

"That's an understatement." said Ron.
"Nah, they just like bein' intimidatin'" said Hagrid.

Several people groaned.

"You would volunteer." said Sirius with a small smile.

"Harry, I heard all about your dangerous little escapades, I don't want to hear about you doing anymore." said Mrs. McFinn pleading.

"Uh, how about from right now on? Cause, these things already happened." said Harry quickly.

"There's more than what I think, isn't there?" asked Sirius and Remus together.

"I don't know, how much do you know?" said Harry with a smile.

"Oh, I don't revolve my life around tea leaves." said Harry.

"Good for you dear, for the past four years, every time I looked it said that you were in mortal peril and I......" said Mrs. McFinn but slowly her voice faltered. "Never mind."

"At Night's Rest, I've even got a stable for Buckbeak, he already loves it there." said Sirius.

"I thought that the Hippogriff known as Buckbeak was missing." said Madam Bones with an amused smile.

"Ah...well...uh...you'll see." said Sirius uncomfortably.

"Indeed I will." said Madam Bones with a smile.
"What were you hoping for?" asked Harry with a smirk. "That he'd stampede me or thrash me about?"

"A little bit of both." said Draco quietly.

"I'll just bet." said Ron.

Dialogue line.

"Just what I wanted to hear." said Harry with laugh.

Seventy-fourth paragraph, first sentence, first comma.

"That's why." said Harry.

End of seventy-fourth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Seventy-fifth paragraph, first sentence, first comma.

"Smart lad." said Moody, "But unfortunately, you have to for this situation."

End of seventy-fifth paragraph.

Seventy-sixth paragraph.

"Not good." said Charlie.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

"That didn't boost my spirits, I can tell you." said Harry to Sirius.

"Don't blame you." said Sirius.

End of dialogue set.

"Please tell me you don't get hurt." pleaded Mrs. Weasley and Mrs. McFinn.
"I don't." said Harry.

Seventy-seventh paragraph.

"Don't know if Beaky was testin' you or not." said Hagrid thoughtfully.

Dialogue line.

"No thanks, I can drive." said Dr. Clark holding his hands up quickly.

"You are horrible Sam." said Mrs. McFinn laughing.

Seventy-eighth paragraph.

"Turns out, their beaks are super sensitive." said Harry. "At least to touch, they still can snap a limb in half with it."

Seventy-ninth paragraph.

"Big surprise." said Bill.

Dialogue line.

Eightieth paragraph.

"It wasn't, I still hurt sometimes." said Harry with a smile as he rubbed the inside of his leg.

Dialogue line.

"Very reassuring." said Sirius trying not to smile.

Eighty-first paragraph.

"And he just told me not to pull on the feathers. I was doomed." said Harry shaking his head.
"This won't end well." said Dr. Clark turning pale.

"I was fine. Just a bit startled." said Harry.

Eighthirty-second paragraph, second sentence, first semi-colon.

"Couldn't walk right for two days." said Harry with a smile.

End of eighty-second paragraph.

"It does take some getting used to, but I actually really like riding Hippogriffs." said Sirius with a laugh. "Kinda like riding my bike."

Eighty-third paragraph.

"Didn't notice you didn't like it." said Hagrid sheepishly.

Dialogue line.

Eighty-fourth paragraph, third sentence.

"I should have given you Buckbeak, Glittertalon is sort o' stuck up. She don't like many people." said Hagrid scratching the back of his head.

End of eighty-fourth paragraph.

Eighty-fifth paragraph.

"Who was the one looking like that?" asked Charlie.

"Buckbeak, Malfoy was petting him wrong." said Harry.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

"Lets see you take on a troll in first year." said Fred.

"A three headed dog." said George.

"A dark lord and psycho teacher." said Fred
"Whomping Willow in your second." said George.

"A giant spider." said Fred.

"And a giant basilisk." said George.

"And the same dark lord as before." said Fred.

End of dialogue set.

"He told you not to insult them. Clear as day, and what do you do?" said Charlie groaning and covering his eyes.

"It was your own stupid fault. And your dad, being who he is, no one else is going to question him." said Bill.

Eighty-sixth paragraph.

"I couldn't even move, I was so much in shock." said Harry. "I expected him to try and sabotage the class, but I didn't expect him to go kamikaze on it."

Dialogue line.

"Harry's had worse, and you didn't hear him panicking." said Ernie.

"I was the only one down there, how do you know that if there was someone else with me, I wouldn't have screamed and cried?" said Harry.

Ernie looked at Harry with an unconvinced look.

Dialogue line.

"Least he's thinking clearly. It could have gone much worse. Professor Kettleburn's first class caused a mass infestation of fire-breathing salamanders on the grounds and then in the castle, it was quite a disaster." said Dumbledore.

"There wasn't a student that didn't have a burn or two." said McGonagall.

Eighty-seventh paragraph.

"You can't die from a gash." said Dr. Clark, "Unless you leave it untreated for a long time."
"Give me a break." said Hannah. "It was his own stupid fault!"

"What would have happened if they did try something?" asked Sirius.

"I'd kick their ass. I wasn't in any mood to be kind." said Harry.

"That was a run?" whispered Harry quietly.

"That you have. Mr. Malfoy's injuries took two seconds to heal." said Madam Pomfrey.

"Indeed?" said Professor Flitwick crossing his arms.

Malfoy looked down at the floor.

"Wasn't hungry." muttered Hagrid.
"Sweet Merlin! You really weren't feeling good!" said the twins together.

"I hope you ate Mr. Potter, you of all people do not need to be going without a meal." said McGonagall.

Harry didn't meet her eyes.

Ninety-first paragraph.

"He was stupid, he got hurt. Simple as that." said Dean.

Dialogue line.

Ninety-second paragraph.

"Even Hermione was looking, that was really a shock." said Ron.

"I care about Hagrid!" said Hermione defensively.

"We know, but normally you're homework happy," said Harry.

Dialogue line.

Ninety-third paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"But it's still a risk." said McGonagall.

"Didn't care, I wanted to know how Hagrid was doing." said Harry.

Ninety-fourth paragraph.

"Three years and you still don't know?" asked Kingsley.

"Different circumstance." said Harry.

Ninety-fifth paragraph.
"At least Hagrid’s gentle when he’s drunk, as opposed to a mean drunk." said Fred.

"I thought you said you were going to swear off drinking." said Charlie.

"I was too upset, wasn't thinkin'." said Hagrid.

"I cannot blame you Hagrid." said Dumbledore.

"You hadn't been fired Hagrid, I told you three times in my office that you still retained your job." said Dumbledore.

"Didn't know you cared Weasley." said Draco with a smirk.

"Didn't want your stupidity to cause Hagrid to lose his job." Ron shot back.

"One bandage that was on for one minute is not a grievous wound." said Madam Pomfrey.

"And that only took one night." said Harry.

"What?" said Mrs. McFinn in shock. "How...why?"

"I'll tell you later, Holly." said Dr. Clark.
"That's way too small." said Ron.

End of dialogue set.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"If I could give points, Minerva, they'd each receive ten at least." said Professor Flitwick.

"They'd lose them as soon as they'd earn them with all the stunts they pull." said McGonagall, trying to hide a smile.

Ninety-seventh paragraph.

"Not quite, after that flying session earlier, I needed my back cracked, and that did it." said Harry with a smile.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

"Just bruised ribs, I had an ointment that clears that right up....why won't I just shut up...." said Harry who looked up at the sky towards the end of his statement.

Mrs. McFinn's lip quivered.

End of dialogue set.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"It sobers me up." said Hagrid, blushing as people began to laugh quietly.
"Beats him crying." muttered Ron.

End of dialogue set.

Ninety-ninth paragraph.

"I didn't know what was going through his head." said Harry.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

"He's never shouted at us before, it was sort of scary." said Hermione.

End of dialogue set.

"If I wasn't all together sure that you were after me, that cemented it." said Harry to Sirius with a smile.

One hundredth paragraph.

"Hagrid!" shouted Mrs. Weasley.

"He didn't hurt me, and once we got to the door he picked me up and carried me to the castle. It was embarrassing." said Harry.

End of chapter.

"That's up for debate." said Harry.

"No it isn't." said the adults together.

Chapter End Notes

Thanks for reading Please review
Before they had started the next chapter, they decided to eat lunch at that point.

"Harry! You didn't any vegetables." said Mrs. McFinn.

"I got a carrot." said Harry looking at his plate.

Mrs. McFinn smiled, she took the carrot off his plate. "This is a baby carrot, go try again."

"Yes ma'am." said Harry with a guilty smile.

"Well, we won't be getting away with just eating dessert for dinner, will we?" said Sirius with a chuckle.

"Well, now that our bellies are full, who would like to read?" asked Dumbledore.

"I'll do it." said Charlie.

"Seventh chapter." said Charlie.

"This will be fun." said Harry as he ate his fourth carrot.

"Don't forget to eat your grapes." said Mrs. McFinn.

Remus stared at her.

"I'm making up for lost time." said Mrs. McFinn quickly with a light blush.

"I appreciate it." said Harry kissing Mrs. McFinn's cheek.

Remus crossed his arms.

"You punish, she dotes." said Sirius nudging Remus in the ribs.

First paragraph.

"He wouldn't know heroics if it peed on his leg." said Fred with a sneer.
"How much can a healed cut hurt?" said Ron.

"Well that way is the best way to get a girl." said Sirius shrugging.

"He's done it before too, always made sure to fall off his broom." said Remus rolling his eyes.

Second paragraph, first sentence.

"Why didn't you give him a detention?" asked Professor Sprout.

"He had a note from Madam Pomfrey." said Snape.

"I gave him no note, he was out of the Hospital Wing in less than twenty minutes." said Madam Pomfrey.

Snape turned and looked Malfoy slowly, who was staring intently at the floor.

"Well, I'm glad we had a talk about forgery." said Snape tapping his fingers.

"Never again, sir." said Malfoy quietly.

End of second paragraph.

It was Snape's turn to look at the floor uncomfortably.

Third paragraph.

"Why?" asked Dean. "That always bugged me why you did that."

"It was so we could do all of his work for him and he could gloat and goad us." said Harry.

"Why you vicious little...." said Tonks sourly.
Madam Pomfrey scowled at the fifth year. "How dare you use fake injuries to get out of doing work!"

"Beggars can't be choosers." said Nightstrike. "You didn't want to work, suck it up."

Dumbledore and McGonagall looked at Snape sternly.

"I hope you put a stop to this." said Madam Pomfrey, getting angrier and angrier by the second.

"You know how to see into people's minds, why aren't you making him do it himself?" said Remus quickly.

“He wouldn’t dare look in his charges’ minds. They’re above reproach.” sneered Sirius.
Mrs. McFinn stood up quickly.

"It's fine, I just shrug it off." said Harry grabbing her hand.

Tenth paragraph, first sentence.

"You could have had mine, I would have been able to repair them." said Harry.

"Yeah, but Malfoy was watching." said Ron. "He would have whined to Snape saying that you were doing the potion wrong."

End of tenth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"None of your business." said Mr. Weasley quickly.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"What injury?" asked Seamus.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set, third sentence.

"Influence or money?" said Cho darkly.

Dialogue set, fourth sentence, second dash.

Madam Pomfrey scoffed, "Lasting injury? Oh, if I were your mother...."

End of dialogue set.

"Your arm was perfectly fine!" said Madam Pomfrey irritably.
"We were supposed to just slice it in half, not behead it." said Harry with a small smile.

Malfoy was still looking firmly at the ground.

"Severus, do we need to send you to the next teaching seminar?" asked Rivers.

Snape looked over to Rivers quickly turning pale and shook his head.

"I take it the seminars are really bad." said Sirius.

"If you aren't a very....efficient teacher, the Headmaster may send you to those, and...well...no, they are quite....unpleasant." said Professor Flitwick.

"I was impressed though..." said Harry.

"With what?" said Neville his eyes wide.

"That he knew exactly what happened." said Harry.

"He's gone through quite a lot of trial and error. At first he was quite abysmal at Potions." said Dumbledore with a smile.

Snape turned a faint sort of pink.

"Severus...." said Dumbledore coldly.
"Miss Granger, forget the idea that you owe Professor Snape a new robe. Severus. This summer, I'm sending you to that teacher seminar." said Dumbledore, his voice like steel. "And Mr. Longbottom, I want you, after this school year is done, to tell me if he accosts you again."

"Yes sir." said Neville quietly.

Snape was white and staring blankly at Dumbledore.

"If you don't, as Minerva says to a few of her students, smarten up, Severus, I will most definitely send you, if you can prove to me that you will change and fast, then I will resend that order." said Dumbledore.

"Yes sir." said Snape just as quietly as Neville had been.

"You're slacking." said Remus. "Why not stay in your animagus form?"

"The fleas were killing me." said Sirius quietly. “I would have done anything for a flea collar.”

"Stupid people." said Kingsley. "Should have had competent people handling the phones."

"That's nice." said Bill. "Trying to egg him onto putting him in danger."
Fifteenth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Lionus looked at Draco, and rubbed his temple. "So, you'd send your schoolmate out to face a supposed mass murderer? Do we have to keep an eye on you as well?"

"No sir...." said Draco quietly.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Sixteenth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"Lionus, I think he needs to see a counselor, he needs to get his father's poison out of his system." said Dr. Nicodemus.

"Sounds like a plan." said Lionus looking at Draco.

Dialogue set.

"I cannot believe that you were going to go through with it." said Professor Sprout angrily.

Seventeenth paragraph, second sentence.

"Good girl!" said Nightstrike clapping loudly.

End of seventeenth paragraph.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

"Why wouldn't you use warm water?" said Mrs. McFinn.

"It's not advisable." said Snape quietly.
"I've haven't done anything to you, but I'm going to get back at you for the stuff you've done so far these reading sessions." said Sirius with a teasing smile.

"Bring it on, old man." said Harry.

Sirius opened his mouth wide. "You just tacked on another reason." he said with a laugh.

"Watch me be frightened." said Harry.

"Severus!" shouted Professor Sprout.

Most of the students cheered loudly.

"I would have poured an antidote down the frog's throat if it had been poisoned." said Snape quietly.

"And the way you were acting, how was he to know about that?" said McGonagall fiercely.

"And your proof that he helped her? Aside that you thought that Neville couldn't have done it?" asked Mrs. Weasley.

"And the way you were acting, how was he to know about that?"
"It wouldn't have gone well for her." said Snape.

"Like it won't go well for you?" said Madam Pomfrey.

Twenty-third paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"Where did you go?" asked Neville.

"I had another class to go to." said Hermione.

Twenty-fourth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Twenty-fifth paragraph.

"Slimy little toerag." muttered Charlie.

Dialogue line.

Twenty-sixth paragraph.

"I was hoping you didn't notice that." said Hermione looking pink.

"If you had another class, what were you doing back with the boys?" said Tempest.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"I thought you said that you had another class to go to?" said Bill.

"Don't ruin the surprise." said Hermione with a smile.

Twenty-seventh paragraph.
"Our schedule was pretty full, didn't know what she was doing with all those extra ones." said Ron. "At the time."

"No more than what we weren't telling her." said Harry shrugging.

"How do you....." said Remus with a dumbfounded look.

"Blame James." said Mrs. McFinn with a smile as she smoothed down Harry's hair.

"I told them that." said Dr. Clark.

"I love those lessons." said Harry.

"Did you teach magical theory as well?" asked Rivers to Remus.

"Yeah, it was mostly once a week that we did that. The rest of the week was practical." said Remus.

"Excellent." said Rivers nodding with approval.

"I won't be forgetting that year for some time." said Neville rubbing his ears.
"Filch hates that." said Sirius.

"Remind me to ask Peeves to keep doing that." said Dumbledore coldly. "Filch will be lucky to be living once I get a hold of him."

"It's different when you're a trouble-maker just as much as he is." said Remus with a laugh.

"Aren't you laid back?" said Mrs. McFinn.

"Just not with me." said Harry. “Least not lately.”

"I'm getting better." whimpered Remus meekly.

"Are you trying to make them into trouble makers?" asked Bill.

"Just....teaching." said Remus with a smirk.

"Hmm, I think I remember Hermione using that spell once." said Fred thoughtfully.

George massaged his nose slightly and looked up at Umbridge with a smirk.
"HECK YEAH!" shouted many of the students together.

"I wasn't aware that you were going to take your class on a fieldtrip." said Snape with a sneer.

"Well, you got your payback Neville." said Remus with a smile. Neville turned pale.

"Thank goodness, you stood up for him." said Madam Pomfrey with a disdainful sniff.

"What on earth?" said Mrs. McFinn.

"Something I don't think neither you or I want to mess with." said Dr. Clark.

"Not without someone with a wand nearby anyway." said Dumbledore kindly.
"Nope, don't want to mess with that." said Dr. Clark.

Forty-third paragraph.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

"Yeah, that would be from James parent's house." said Sirius. “Nasty thing that was, scared the cat every time it happened to walk by.”

“What was nasty about that?” asked Dean.

“The mess it would make tearing around the living room, broken vases, ripped curtains, cat...” said Sirius.

“That's enough, they just ate.” said Remus.

End of dialogue set.

Forty-fourth paragraph.

"Big surprise." said Zacharias quietly.

Dialogue line.

Mrs. McFinn turned pale.

Dialogue set.

"What we fear tells a lot about ourselves." said Luna.

"That it does." said Dumbledore with a smile.

Dialogue line.

Forty-fifth paragraph.

"Miss Granger, he's not going to change his mind and ask you." said Dr. Nicodemus.
Hermione blushed.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

"Sorry Harry." said Hermione softly.

Dialogue set.

Several people laughed.

Dialogue line.

"That sort of sounds a bit difficult." said Mrs. McFinn.

"It's easier than it sounds." said McGonagall.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"Ridiculous?" said Mrs. McFinn.

"Yeah, the words they pick for it sort of fit the scenario," said Dr. Clark with a smile.

Dialogue line.

Forty-sixth paragraph.

"That's how I felt too." said Neville.

Dialogue line.

Forty-seventh paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"You are so good with kids." said Tonks.
"I just don't know how to discipline them the right way." said Remus quietly.

"Sometimes you get it right, but sometimes...not so much." said Sirius.

Forty-eighth paragraph.

Forty-ninth paragraph, first sentence.

"Not us." said Ron, Hermione and Harry.

End of forty-ninth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"Don't blame you." said Sirius, "I've met her; she can be a holy terror when you get her angry."

Dialogue line.

Fiftieth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"You didn't!" said Sirius with a laugh.

"I did." said Remus. "Call it Neville's payback."

"That's beautiful." said Sirius with a laugh.

Dialogue set.

Fifty-first paragraph, first sentence.

"That's awesome." said Nightstrike with a chuckle.
"Due to the laughter, it was getting angry." said Remus.

Dialogue set.

"There's a short list." said Lionus.

"That would be plausible." said Dumbledore. "And completely understandable."

"Your Uncle Vernon?" asked Dr. Clark.

"You know, he didn't even come to mind. I don't really fear him, I just fear his anger, and his fists and feet." said Harry thoughtfully.

"Everybody else was too busy trying to think of something that scares them." said Harry.

"Taking it's legs off wouldn't have made much of a difference." said Ron shaking his head.

"There’s a first." said Neville.
"There isn't a way." said Dumbledore.

"I felt really incompetent right there." said Harry with a smile.

"Well done. Face your fears." said Tempest with an approving smile.

"Student shouldn't fear their teachers that much." said Professor Flitwick shaking his head.

People screamed and howled with laughter.

"Oh...." said Parvati, her eyes covered.
"Those are real too?" said Mrs. McFinn with a horror filled look.

"Unfortunately yes." said Dumbledore.

"Good choice." said Charlie.

"Bet that made having Scabbers around a bit difficult." said Sirius with a laugh.

Mrs. McFinn picked her feet up off the floor.

"I'd use a cricket bat before I'd use a mousetrap." said Mrs. McFinn.
"Hi smaller version of Aragog." said Harry.

"Hey, why didn't you give Harry a shot at it?" said Sirius. "Despite it being that Harry's Boggart would have turned into a Dementor."

"I didn't know that his Boggart was a Dementor." said Remus quietly. "I thought it would be someone else."

"Voldemort?" asked Dr. Clark.

"Yeah." said Remus.

"That was brave of you to do that." said Sirius. "Letting everyone see that."

"I had a plan." said Remus.

"So you...killed that thing?" said Mrs. McFinn.

"It's a strong way of putting it, but yes." said Dumbledore.

"What harm does that thing do? Doesn't it just scare people?" said Mrs. McFinn.
"Actually, as it frightens you into a state of shock, it begins to eat away your very being, it doesn't need to draw blood to kill you." said Dumbledore calmly.

"Oh...never mind." said Mrs. McFinn.

Dialogue set.

"Points for doing an assignment?" said Snape with a quiet sneer.

"They didn't have to do it. Some people stood in the back and didn't want to do it." said Remus.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set.

"Well that's an easy first assignment." said Bill. "Wish I had you for a teacher."

Seventy-seventh paragraph.

"That wasn't my reason, I had a completely different one." said Remus quietly.

Seventy-eighth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"You made them think you were afraid of Divination? Dear lord, no one is going to believe that! You took the bloody class when we were in school!" said Sirius with a laugh.

"Only the other teachers knew that, not the kids." said Remus.

"Clever." said Bathilda with a smile.

Dialogue line.
"Seems?" said Sirius with a laugh. "Were you even paying attention in class?"

"Close." said Hermione remembering her third year exams.

"That's the end of that." said Charlie.

"We seem to be flying through these chapters today." said Speckerton.

"Who'd like to read next?" asked Charlie.

"Want to read with me?" asked Sirius to Harry.

"Sure." said Harry.

Sirius walked over and took the book, sat back down and turned the page.

"Oh crud." said Sirius.

"What?" asked Remus.

"Eighth chapter." said Sirius.

"You're dead." said Fred and George together to Sirius.

Chapter End Notes

Thanks for reading! Please review
"Get over here." said Sirius pulling Harry over to himself.

"First or second half?" said Harry.

"I'll take the last part." said Sirius.

"You'll be sorry." said Harry in sing song voice.

"Want to switch?" said Sirius quickly.

"No take-backs." said Harry with a laugh.

"Yet he's got more talent than your whole family put together." said Neville bravely.

"Just imagine what being a History teacher will be like." said Dumbledore with a smile.

"There's a quicker way of getting rid of those than the normal way," said Luna dreamily.

"What is that?" said Professor Sprout.

"Take a jar of strawberry jam and toss it in the opposite direction, they love it." said Luna with a smile.
"Fascinating, Miss Lovegood!" said Dumbledore with a smile. "I must test that out."

Second paragraph, third sentence, first colon, first comma.

"There aren't any of those things in here, are there?" said Mrs. McFinn.

"No, every year during the summer we have the Control of Magical Creatures department come in and take care of anything particularly harmful." said McGonagall. "Though, in the case of before Potter's second year, something very large was accidentally overlooked for many many years."

End of second paragraph.

"Which live in JAPAN!" said Ron loudly.

"Of course they do, who else told you otherwise." said Professor Flitwick.

Ron pointed to Snape.

Third paragraph, first sentence.

"Want to switch now?" said Harry sheepishly.

"You said no take backs." said Sirius with a smile.

Third paragraph, third sentence.

"God I wish I was there." said Sirius with a fond smile.

Third paragraph, fourth sentence.

"Do you blame the kids?" said Nightstrike with a smile.

End of third paragraph.

"Sorry about that." said Remus to Neville.

"It was worth it sir." said Neville with a smile.

Fourth paragraph, first sentence.

"That was getting annoying." said Harry shaking his head.
"I tried, I really tried." said Harry to Mrs. McFinn quickly.

"They were impossible to live with." said Hermione.

"I had to keep asking them what they were saying. Couldn't understand a word they were saying." said Harry.

Harry froze quickly, before he had read the line. He gulped loudly.

"Uh...can I skip a line?" said Harry quickly.

"Well, no one else can, you might be able to, but why would you?" asked Speckerton.

Sirius read the line that held Harry speechless. "Yeah, I can see why he'd pass." he said aloud.

Harry swallowed loudly, and continued on, relived that he didn't need to divulge that horrible fact.

"They actually are." said Dumbledore thoughtfully. "I told you Hagrid that you could show them Kneazles and Nifflers."

"Didn't think that they were safe to show." said Hagrid quietly.

"Nonsense, they are perfectly safe." said Dumbledore.

"Ewww..." said Mrs. McFinn.

"Tell us about it." said Lavender.
"I wasn't talking all the classes!" said Harry loudly. "Okay, this book sucks again."
Dumbledore smiled gently over to Harry. "Just like a cold, it has to get worse before it gets better."

"Come on, you guys were already the best in the school." said Ernie.
"That's cause we practice." said Angelina.

"Do we seriously need to go through this?" said Zacharias.
Mrs. McFinn stared at him as well as most of the adults.
"I don't know about this game." said Mrs. McFinn. "And I'm happy to learn all I can." said Mrs. McFinn.
"You'll love it." said Katie eagerly.
"No she won't." said Harry.
"If it puts you in harm’s way, then no, I don't like it." said Mrs. McFinn worriedly.
"Told you." said Harry.

"Why is he desperate?" asked Mrs. McFinn.
"We've never won the Quidditch House cup." said Harry.
"But..." said Mrs. McFinn.
"We'll tell you about it later." said Dr. Clark.

"Well, isn't that dramatic." said Bill.
"Oh he gets worse." said Fred.
"Remember the book before?" said George.
Mrs. McFinn whimpered slightly and held onto Harry's arm.

"We were pretty much backing up slowly." said George.

"Go figure." said Charlie.

"Well at least you support him." said Bill.

"So, I take it he thinks you can't win it without him?" said Dr. Clark.

"He's just over dramatic right now." said Harry.
"It's just a trophy." said Hermione.

"No, its the trophy." said the Quidditch players of each house, plus Charlie.

"Did you get your homework done?' said Mrs. McFinn.

"Well, no. But I had it done in no time at all." said Harry.

"What in the world are those?" said Mrs. McFinn.

"Something that's not allowed in the house." said Sirius. "Those are the only pranking items I hate."

"It all stemmed from when James tossed a bunch into the shower with him." said Remus. "It was beautiful."

"Shut up." said Sirius shortly.

"Sort of hard to not know that when you told us on the train you couldn't go and we were just telling you about it." said Hermione apologetically.

"Sighted, not cornered." said Sirius with a smirk.
"Thank you, Ron." said Sirius.

End of dialogue set.

"That didn't work out too well." said Harry.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"You've got guts, you're an idiot, but you've got guts." said Bill shaking his head.

" Stranger things have happened." said Harry shrugging.

Fourteenth paragraph.

"That's... gross." said Dean.

"I thought you said the he was going to stay in your dorm?" said Dr. Clark.

"I couldn't keep him locked in my room! It just isn't right!" said Hermione.

"And when he eats Ron's pet rat, what are you going to say then?" said Lionus with a frown.

Hermione flushed.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"It's not like spiders that size can move that fast." said Ron.

Fifteenth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Sixteenth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"He was already dumbing down his work, might as well make it easy." said Ron shrugging.
"Well, look at that, the reason you need to keep the cat in your room." said Fred.

"He's trying to save his own pet." said Remus. "It's not his fault you went back on your word."

Hermione looked hurt.

"See, and you think I don't stand up for you." said George.

"Well...you never were much of a stand up for your siblings, kind of guy." said Ron looking uncomfortable.

"Like you promised to do in the first place." said Dr. Nicodemus.

"And that's why he should stay in your dorm. Scabbers was there first." said Katie softly.

"Crookshanks is pretty smart." said Sirius.
“Yeah, and he knew what Scabbers really was though!” said Hermione.

“Still looking at it in the way it could have been, it could have been really bad.” said Sirius softly.

“He never went after Hedwig! He knew what that rat was all about!” said Hermione.

“Did it go after Hedwig?” asked Dr. Clark quietly.

“He eyed her, and she didn’t like it.” said Harry. “She took a swipe at her, and Hedwig ended up pickering her up by the tail and dropping him about seven feet or so. He never went after her again.”

Hermione flushed.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"See? And you can't seem to keep Crookshanks safely tucked away in your dorm." said Bill.

Twenty-first paragraph.

Twenty-second paragraph.

"Made for an awkward start to the class." said Harry.

Dialogue line.

"Now you care?" said Seamus.

Dialogue line.

"Not a good idea." said Bill. "Those things can sprout the moment they hit the floor."

"What's wrong with them sprouting?" asked Mrs. McFinn.

"If they get to get to their blooming stage..." said Charlie.

"They reek." said Bill.

Dialogue line.

"And boy, did the smell bring water to our eyes." said Seamus.
"I could have debated that for months. I wouldn't have won anyway." said Harry.

"This can't be good." said Sirius.

"What's the matter, Lavender?" said Hermione anxiously as she, Harry, and Ron went to join the group.

"Oh you poor dear." said Mrs. McFinn.

"Friday the thirteenth?" said Sirius.

"No, it has something to do with the last chapter." said Harry.

"Well? Who could forget that first class?" said Seamus.

"Looks like she got another one right, Minerva." said Professor Flitwick.

"Another lucky guess." said McGonagall quietly.

“That's one hell of a guess.” said Flitwick with a weak chuckle.
"Everyone dreads about their pets dying sweetie." said Mrs. McFinn soothingly.

"I worry about Hedwig sometimes when she's out too long." said Harry.

"Who is Hedwig?" said Mrs. McFinn.

"She's my pet owl." said Harry.

"You have a pet owl?" said Mrs. McFinn.

"Yeah, she's around here somewhere." said Harry looking up.

"Oh, she isn't." groaned Tempest.

"It appears that she is." said Firenze shaking his head.

"MISS GRANGER!" said McGonagall. Trying to reason Trelawney’s predictions are one thing, but to dismiss a death! Logic has no place in that area.

"Well, how..." said Hermione quietly.

"Miss Granger, you do not try and use logic when someone loses a beloved pet or family member." said Dumbledore massaging the bridge of his nose.

"I..." said Hermione.

"Hermione, there's no fixing that." said Fred.
"Just let it go and say you’re sorry." said George.

Twenty-eighth paragraph, first sentence, second comma.

"You had no right to look at Ron like that." said Bill shortly. "He wasn't the one being insensitive."

End of twenty-eighth paragraph.

"Again, there's something new." said Harry rolling his eyes.

Twenty-ninth paragraph.

"Well that's handy." said Tonks.

Dialogue set.

"And that should have told me, there was no way in..." Harry looked at Mrs. McFinn. "...on earth that I was going to get to Hogsmede."

“Good save, sweetie.” said Mrs. McFinn with a laugh.

Thirtieth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"Typicall Neville." said Fred.

"And that's why we love you." said George kissing Neville on the cheek.

"Get off me." said Neville shoving the twins.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Thirty-first paragraph.
"Isn't going to work." said Sirius. "She never bends the rules."

"Except where Quidditch is involved." said Remus quietly.

Dialogue line.

Thirty-second paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"Harry lied again!" said Fred in a dramatic pose.

"Harry! How could you?" said George.

Thirty-third paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"She won't bend the rules, not with a supposed dark wizard heading towards Hogwarts." said Tonks.

Thirty-fourth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set.

"Won't change anything." said Harry.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

"Well, they aren't his parents and they can't even be considered guardians." said Dr. Clark.

Dialogue set, fourth sentence.

"It was that or annoyance, she's hard to read." said Harry in whisper.

End of dialogue set.

Thirty-fifth paragraph, second sentence, eighth word.
"I’m really really REALLY sorry, Professor." said Ron. "You're right Harry, these books suck now."

"I told you!" said Harry.

End of thirty-fifth paragraph.

"It was one bad day." said Harry. "Nobody was happy with anyone else."

"You didn't seem too bothered with not going." said Dr. Clark.

"I was crushed, but I could pretty much get over it." said Harry. "Sort of."

Dialogue line.

"Like I said, 'sort of'." said Harry shrugging. "Your turn." he handed the book over to Sirius.

"I remember the last time you said that. That was scary." said Neville.

"What?" said Harry.

"Well, the last time you said 'Your turn' was when you shocked Dumbledore back to life." said Neville.

The Hall went quiet.

"Seriously? What happened?" said Dr. Clark.

"He had a heart attack." said Madam Pomfrey softly.

"And Harry sort of shocked him, it was scary." repeated Neville.

"You used a defibulator?" said Dr. Clark in shock.

"Sort of, and then again, no." said Harry.

"I want to hear all about it later." said Dr. Clark earnestly.

Thirty-sixth paragraph, first sentence.

McGonagall looked slightly crestfallen.

"Whoa, Harry made McGonagall look guilty again." said Fred in astonishment.

"Now, I'm really jealous." said George.
"After I saw his signature on his last Christmas parcel, it wouldn't have done any good. His writing is awful." said Dean.

"No way I could come back and say, 'I was just kidding! He signed it.'" said Harry with a laugh.

"And that's why I said that." said Dumbledore.

"So you knew that the Dursley's didn't sign his slip?" said Dean.

"After Harry inflated his aunt, I thought it highly unlikely that they would be willing to sign anything. And the Minister told me Harry asked him." said Dumbledore. "He was actually smug about it, for some strange reason." he added thoughtfully.

"There's a big surprise." said Ron.

"Dear Lord..." groaned Remus. "That's horrible."

"Wow, you were doing a good job of it." said Fred.

"Yeah, I mean that downcast look completely threw us off!" said George.

"Well, at least they’re looking out for you dear." said Mrs. Weasley.
"Which sound really petty." said Harry. "Compared to a pet being in constant danger and the...well...the difficulty of trying to having a cat around.” said Harry gently.

Dialogue line.

Thirty-eighth paragraph.

"The whole castle, the only third year and up left behind was Harry." said Bill. "Who else was he expecting to sneak out. They didn't even acknowledge Hogsmeade in the other two books."

"Actually, there were some other people in the Dorms, they just didn't want to go." said George.

"Harry..." said Sirius slowly. "You didn't happen to sneak into Hogsmeade, did you, before this year?"

"Well..." said Harry slowly.

"You never told me." said Ron.

"I...just wanted to see...how easy it was to get out of here." said Harry shrugging.

"And?" said Dumbledore, his eyes twinkling.

"I gotta admit it wasn't easy." said Harry.

"It took you how long?" said Remus.

"Eight tries." said Harry. "Without magic, two with."

"That's sad." said Charlie. “That you can still get out and back in...so much for this place being safe.”

“It's safe, unless you're used to sneaking about and getting into places you aren't really supposed to be in.” said Harry with a smile.

"I'm impressed." said Lionus.

"Me too." said Moody.

Dialogue line.

"Yeah, actually I never tried leaving the school that year for that reason. Well, not the ways I found out." said Harry sheepishly.

Thirty-ninth paragraph.

Dialogue line.
"That and they were probably broke." said Charlie.

"I'm sorry, but I'm still not comfortable with you, especially not since the last book, we've read." said Sirius.

"Which sucks, I was hoping on just taking a nap." said Harry.

"Walking around without a purpose." said Harry with a smile.

"It's too bad that you can't skip over his parts." said Dumbldore with a scowl.
"Great more bodiless voices." said Zacharias.

"Not quite." said Harry with a smirk.

Forty-sixth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"Well, he's never out of their company." said Remus shrugging slightly.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"You didn't know what a Grindylow was?" said Zacharias.

"I did, but I don't get invited to have a chat with a teacher, without getting a detention first." said Harry.

Forty-seventh paragraph.

"I was sort of waiting for it to flip me off." said Harry.

"It flipped me off before you came in, I guess it censors itself." said Remus with a smile.

Dialogue set.

Forty-eighth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"Don't blame you." said Fred.

"It's not normal to have a cup of tea with a teacher." said George.

"Though..." said Harry. "Never mind."

"Finish it." said Sirius.

"Lockhart kept asking me in for tea." said Harry.
"Sweet lord." said Remus. "I didn't need to know that."

Forty-ninth paragraph.
"That's cheating." said Mrs. McFinn with a smile.
“That’s magic.” said Remus, also with a smile.

Dialogue line.

Fiftieth paragraph.
"Never lost your touch for inside humor." said Sirius shaking his head.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set, first sentence.
"Why would she tell you?" asked Colin.
"Cause of who I was to his father." said Remus.

End of dialogue set.

Dialogue line.

Fifty-first paragraph, first sentence.
"That wouldn't have gone well for me." said Sirius.
"I would have demanded you to tell me the next time you saw the dog." said Remus quickly.

End of fifty-first paragraph.
"I was wrong." said Lupin quietly.

Fifty-second paragraph.

Dialogue line.
"We can't consider that a lie, he always says he's fine." said George waving it off.
"I didn't quite know where he was going with it." said Remus with an embarrassed smile.

"Wasn't exactly obvious why you didn't let me fight it." said Harry.

"That stare made me feel like an idiot." said Remus with a laugh.

"I didn't really care about the boggart at that point." said Harry.

"Yeah, but would the kids even know what that guy looked like? Yeah, Ron, Hermione and Harry know what he looks like, but none of the other kids." said Tonks.

“We don't know what the hell he looks like.” said Ron quietly to Hermione.

"That's a good point, there are no pictures of the Voldemort, or illustrations." said Dumbledore thoughtfully. "Though the pale skin and red eyes might be a bit of a give away."
"And to be honest, a dementor in a room full of kids isn't any better." said Sirius.

Dialogue set, fourth sentence.

"So you fear...fear?" said Neville.

"And pink fluffy things." said Harry.

"Don't blame you." said the twins together. “Horrifying, that's what they are.”

End of dialogue set.

Fifty-sixth paragraph.

"It felt really awkward." said Harry.

Dialogue line.

"And did you think he'd be able to fend off a Voldemort Boggart?" said Sirius just as shrewdly.

"Well...no." said Remus.

"There you go." said Sirius.

Dialogue line.

Fifty-seventh paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Fifty-eighth paragraph.

"Yeah, that doesn't look suspicious." said Ron.

Dialogue line.

Fifty-ninth paragraph.

"I had thought that you were telling him fascinating tales of his father's past travesties." drawled Snape.
"Whatever it is, don't." squeaked a first year.

"It was fine." said Remus kindly.

"Didn't look that way to me." said Harry.

"Were you worried about that?" said Ernie.

"Come on! You know he's going to ask questions about it!" said Sirius.

"The second clue." said Harry.

"What?" said Remus.

"Don't tell me..." said Sirius. "You had him figured out?"

"I had an idea..." said Harry.

"And you didn't say anything?" said Remus.

"It wasn't any of my business." said Harry

He heard a loud thumping and stomping around, he looked up and saw Umbridge thrashing about so hard that the chair was bouncing around in fury.

"Do you want to do it?" asked Tempest.
"I don't want to hear it." said Nightstrike.

"Might as well let her talk." said Dumbledore darkly. "Or she'll just keep bouncing."

Nightstrike sighed and pulled the gag away from her mouth.

"NONE OF YOUR BUSINESS?" she shrieked. "THAT MONSTER COULD HAVE KILLED EVERYONE IN THE SCHOOL! HE SHOULD HAVE BEEN LOCKED UP YEARS AGO!"

"That's enough out of you." said Nightstrike, he slapped her hard across the face and put the gag back on her.

"Anyway," said Harry continuing. "and from the potion smelled, and from what you said, narrowed it down to a Werewolf Relaxant potion. Or a Dragon Pox Resistance potion, though that seemed a bit unlikely." said Harry. "Your skin wasn't the right color."

Sixty-first paragraph.

"Good boy." said Sirius.

Dialogue line.

"Thanks for trying to protect me." said Remus.

Dialogue line.

"And you lie to me." said Harry with a smirk.

Dialogue line.

"This piece of info didn't surprise me." said Remus. "That was one of the few classes he was right up there with us in the ways of grades."

Snape scoffed.

Sixty-second paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Sixty-third paragraph.
"Had to be the Werewolf Relaxant." said Harry. "Dragon Pox Resistance tends to melt the goblets."

Snape stared.

Dialogue line.

Sixty-fourth paragraph.

"You know, being observant sometimes really sucks." said Harry with a smirk.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

"What are those like?" asked Mrs. McFinn.

"They make you breathe fire for a bit, scariest thing that ever happened to me here." said Dr. Clark with a laugh.

End of dialogue set.

"You already knew what it was like!" said Ron. "And you never told us!"

Sixty-fifth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"But they really need to put their owl pellet box somewhere else." said George.

"Out in plain sight is just nasty." said Fred.

Dialogue line.

"Ron ate most of it, there was only a sliver of it left." said Hermione.

Dialogue line.

"An ogre?" said Mrs. McFinn.

"You'd be surprised what you will see around here." said Dumbledore kindly.
"You could have gotten it in bottles." said Dumbledore. "She sells them at the bar."

"Has to be." said Sirius with a laugh.

"What could I have done? Wave my arms and he'd be healed in a heartbeat?" said Harry. "I'm not a miracle worker."

"You could have gotten help!" said Hermione.

"And look for who? Professor Flitwick, Professor Sprout, Dumbledore and McGonagall were down in Hogsmeade. Madam Pomfrey's office was several flights of stairs away, he'd never get help in time." said Harry.

"I can't wait for Halloween!" said Dr. Clark.

"Next Saturday, I think we will have a special sort of celebration for Halloween this year." said Dumbledore.

"Worried about me?" said Remus with a smile.

"Do you blame me?" said Harry.
Sixty-eighth paragraph.

"We were sitting at the very end of the table! How the heck did you see his eyes?" said Ron in shock.

Sixty-ninth paragraph.

“Dear lord.” said Mrs. McFinn.

Seventieth paragraph.

"You are such a little..." said Bill.

Seventy-first paragraph.

"That's unusual." said Charlie.

Dialogue line.

Seventy-second paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"That only made his work a bit tougher." said Fred.

"People just packed tighter together." said George.

Seventy-third paragraph.

"That's not a good thing." said Bill.

Seventy-fourth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Seventy-fifth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"It wasn't good." said Ron.
Seventy-sixth paragraph.

"What the heck made you do that?" whispered Remus to Sirius.

"She wouldn't let me in." said Sirius. "But I went up during the last break and apologized. It took her a while to stop running away from me though."

Seventy-seventh paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"Has to be Peeves." said Dr. Clark.

"That little ghost man?" said Mrs. McFinn.

"You've met him already?" said Fred hesitantly.

"He's a little charmer." said Mrs. McFinn with a smile. "He keeps bowing to me and bringing me flowers."

"Anything wrong with those flowers?" said George slowly.

"No, they were lovely red roses." said Mrs. McFinn.

"I don't believe it, Peeves has a crush on somebody." said Fred shaking his head.

“Strange thing is, he never did that with Fleur.” said George quietly.

Seventy-eighth paragraph.

Dialogue set, third sentence.

"Well, at least he's knows when not to piss around." said Remus.

End of dialogue set.

Dialogue set.

"Well, maybe not an all-around charmer." said Mrs. McFinn with a smile.
"You destroyed a living painting?" said Mrs. McFinn pulling Harry back towards her.

"I just cut around her!" said Sirius, "and I paid for the restoration!"

"You terrified her nonetheless." scolded McGonagall.

"And I apologized!" said Sirius.

"We told you, you were dead." said Fred.

"Who wants to read?" said Sirius quickly.

"I will." said Katie.

She took the book and sat down between her fellow chasers and read aloud.

"Chapter Nine" said Katie.

"Oh no." said Fred and George together.

"I think we will take a break before we start. I need to send an owl." said Dumbledore standing up and walking out of the Great Hall.

"I wonder what he's going to do?" said Sirius.

"He's sending an owl to the Diggorys." said Harry sadly.

Chapter End Notes

Thanks for reading, please review.
Everyone waited until Dumbledore got back, two of the students however wanted to get the show on the road.

"Mr. Smith, if you ask when we are starting once more time, I'll call your parents and have you taken home." said Professor Flitwick angrily.

"The same goes for you, Miss Bulstrode." said Professor Snape sourly.

"But, why can't we just go on?" whined Millicent. "Potter's here, nothing is stopping us."

"We will wait." said Harry sternly. His eyes flashing fiercely. Ron smiled.

"Say hello to the Harry no one sees." said Ron with a smirk.

"What?" said Hermione.

"This is the way Harry is, when he doesn't act like a kid." said Ron in a whisper. "Or when he gets cranky."

"It's going to be forever to bring the Diggory's up to speed!" whined Millicent.

"Be silent." said Harry quietly.

"But she has a point, Dumbledore is going to at least take four hours to get them up to speed." said Zacharias.

"And as a Hufflepuff, don't you agree that they deserve all the time in the world?" said Harry with a frown.

Zacharias gulped nervously at the look on Harry's face.

"So I suggest." said Harry with a strained smile, he stood up straight, folded his arms across his chest. "That we all just patiently wait until Dumbledore gets back. Before I make you...patient..."

The other people in the Great Hall stared at Harry in shock. This was a side of him they didn't normally see. He was dark, cold and calculating, like a falcon waiting for an opportunity to strike.

"Harry dear?" said Mrs. McFinn uncertainly.

Harry turned quickly around, Remus had to blink a few times. He was back to being the, "apparently", normal Harry. He had a smile on his face and his eyes were bright green.

"Yes Mrs. McFinn?" he said with a bright smile.
"He's got split personalities, wonderful." scoffed Zacharias.

"Not really," said Harry turning back to Zacharias, the calculating look was back. "So many people want me to be their baby and an insecure child, but they've done so much to try and remove the pains of my summer, that I have no choice but to oblige them, and I'm happy to do so."

"Pains of my summer?" said Ernie.

"You should read his poems." said Ron whistling. "They're deep."

"When did you read them?" said Harry.

"You left a page out on accident." said Ron.

Suddenly the door opened, Harry turned towards the door, but this time, once he saw who had opened the door, his gaze dropped to the floor, there was no mask. Genuine remorse covered his face.

"I don't know what you wanted us here for Albus." said Amos Diggory throwing his arm around his wife.

"Amos, he's told you four times what he wants us for." said Mrs. Diggory. "Thank you for telling us about this Albus. Sorry we didn't come sooner."

"Quite alright." said Albus with sympathetic smile. "I thought that now would have been the better time to have you begin sitting in on these readings."

"Why is that?" said Amos.

"Your son is mentioned." said Dumbledore sadly.

The Diggorys went silent.

"Ced? Cedric is in this book?" said Amos Diggory weakly.

Amos Diggory looked over to Harry, who looked fixedly down at the ground.

"Sit down, sweetheart." said Mrs. McFinn. "What's wrong?"

"Their son died last year." said Sirius. "Harry watched him be murdered."

"Oh...Harry." said Mrs. McFinn giving Harry a tight hug.

"Mrs. Diggory, Mr. Diggory, please have a seat. Harry, you too." said Dumbledore.

Mr. Diggory looked up at the boy quickly, he had a frown on his face, but even that faltered when he saw a tear fall down Harry's face.

"Miss Bell, if you please." said Dumbledore.

Katie cleared her throat and picked up the book.
"What happened?" asked Mrs. Diggory.

"It was the year that I had escaped from Azkaban." said Sirius leaning forward.

Mrs. Diggory shrieked and her husband jumped up and raised his wand. Remus disarmed him quickly.

"He's innocent Amos, it's already been proven." said Madam Bones.

The Diggorys stared at her in shock, but they slowly settled back down into their chairs. Mr. Diggory slowly took his wife’s wand, just in case.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

"Big open area, with openings in the ceiling, and you find this place safe?" said Lionus with wide eyes.

"Try getting in when he doesn't want you in here." said Harry with a smile.

"We'll let you give it a shot tonight then." said Dumbledore with a faint smile.

Dialogue set, third sentence.

"And how are they to protect the students against a murderer?" asked Amos quickly.

"There was a charm on the entrances to the Hall, he only said that to make them feel important and needed." drawled Snape.

Percy turned pink.

End of dialogue set.

Second paragraph.

Third paragraph.

"Those were the most comfortable sleeping bags I ever slept in." said Dean to Seamus.

“I kept mine.” said Seamus.

Dialogue line.

"After Black got in the castle and sliced up a painting? You're nuts." said Fred with a smile.
"Yeah, right. No one is going to talk. That's a wish that's never going to come true." said George rolling his eyes.

"Why aren't you saying anything?" asked Bill to Harry.

"I was thinking." said Harry.

"About what?" said Charlie.

"Everything that happened." said Harry.

"Almost everyone over seventeen knows how to Apparate, despite not wishing to use the skills doesn't mean that you aren't required to learn how to do it." said Harry.
"You didn't say Harry read it!" said Hermione.

"I said 'probably' not 'yes'." said Ron.

"You can get in with stealth, just isn't easy." said Harry shrugging.

"Not all together true." said Harry. "If the Headmaster allows a certain part of the castle to be a Apparation point, then you can, and you apparate in during an electrical storm."

"Really?" asked Professor Flitwick.

"Yeah, the only downside is, you have to arrive the time and place of an electrical strike. You miss, you get splinched." said Harry.

"What's..." said Mrs. McFinn.

"Don't ask, Holly." said Dr. Clark. "I've already asked, I regret it already."

Sirius smiled, stood up and changed into his canine form, then back again. "Hows that?" he asked Hermione with a smile.

Hermione looked down with a guilty smile.

Mrs. McFinn, Mr. and Mrs. Diggory stared.

"He doesn't know them all." said Sirius, Remus, Fred and George each had a bright smile.

"I could hardly sleep under that sky. It's way too awesome to sleep under." said Harry.
"I always loved how you described things." said Mrs. McFinn with a smile.

"So...I'm guessing...you didn't sleep." said Remus.

"Not on a bit." said Harry.

"Except for Harry." said Fred.

"It was hilarious watching Percy crawling on the ground on his stomach." said George.

"Plenty of practice," said George. "Mom likes to do bed checks when company's over."

"Except for the brats who can't sleep." said Snape quietly.

"I'd tell you off, but I was thinking the same thing." said Sirius with laugh.

Snape growled.
"You need to work on that anger issue problem." said Remus thoughtfully.

"A compliment? Once again, he gives you credit to your abilities, Severus." said Dumbledore with a smile.

"How is that a compliment?" he asked.

"He froze, so you wouldn't notice him. He didn't even feign turning over in his sleep." said Dumbledore with a smile.

"Where the hell were you?" asked Bill.

"I left through an old passageway." said Sirius with a smirk.

"I was interested to know another way out of the castle." said Harry.

"I never thought about that one particular way in. Foolish of me to dismiss it." said Dumbledore sadly. "Making your way to the castle is only just a simple matter."
"Wasn't the tree one that I used." said Sirius quietly.

Eleventh paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"Don't blame you, he has a big mouth." said Bill with a smirk.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set.

"How do you talk to them?" asked Dr. Clark looking apprehensive.

"They have a keeper, when a massive amount of them is sent away, a wizard is supposed to govern them. A wizard who is no better than one of them." said Lionus with a scowl.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"And unfortunately, that wish was ignored." said Dumbledore angrily.

Twelfth paragraph.

"He hates being told he's wrong." said Sirius with a laugh.

Thirteenth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"Oh, you guys were up too?" said Seamus.

"If I know Harry isn't sleeping, I try not too either. But Hermione was drifting off." said Ron.

Fourteenth paragraph.
"Imagine, Black with flowers in his hair!" said Snape laughing out loud. That in itself took most people off their guard.

"This is embarrassing," mumbled Sirius darkly.

Fifteenth paragraph, first sentence.

"Oh no. Not him." groaned Tonks.

"He gets worse." said Ron.

End of fifteenth paragraph.

"And he always came with the most ridiculous riddles so you could find out the damn password. Not even the Ravenclaws could help. He didn't follow their logical reasonings." said Seamus shaking his head.

"Thank goodness someone figured it out." said Neville. "We'd never be able to sleep in our dorms....wait a minute...Harry?" he looked over to Harry curiously.

"'Fastest means of travel of the middle ages.'" said Harry. "'The Catapult.' I really don't know how the Ravenclaws couldn't figure that out."

"I wouldn't call that pleasant travel." said Sirius with a confused look.

"He never said people had to ride it. He merely said means of travel, after everyone said horse or boat, that told me that he meant a travel of a different sort." said Harry thoughtfully.

"Wouldn't you have said an arrow then?" asked Cho curiously.

"I thought of an arrow, but then again, he wouldn't have chosen something so simple as that. And with that heavy sword and armor, he thinks of strength as a superior force. So, it had to be strong and fast. The Catapult was the only option." said Harry.

"Thank god he was solving those riddles, or we'd never get inside." said Ron.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"Brave or stupid?" whispered Bill to his brother Charlie.

Sixteenth paragraph, first sentence.

A few of the teachers turned a faint pink.
"And he didn't believe them, smart boy." said Dr. Nicodemus with a smile.

"You trying to hide behind the tapestries were really bad. You were too bulgy for all of them." said Harry with a smirk.

"I've been faced with that expression way too many times for one lifetime." said Harry quietly.

Mrs. Diggory looked over to Harry in slightly surprise. Too many times?

"Bet that set her back on her heels just a bit. You knowing something she didn't want you to at the moment." said Sirius with a smile.

"Wow, she doesn't want you practicing Quidditch? That's a first." said Charlie.

"But then I had to think about your safety. It wasn't very easy to come up with a plan for you to practice and be safe." said McGonagall quietly.
"I was happy to do it." said Madam Hooch with a smile.

"I've seen you kids do twists and turns that I haven't seen in five years." said Madam Hooch with a proud smile. "Our fliers are the best in the world."

"Without a doubt." said Dumbledore with a smile.

"Hate it when a team drops out at the last flipping second." said Alicia. "It's not fair"

"Let's face it, only the Slytherin team has been known to do it, everyone else gives you a decent heads up." said Angelina.

"With Malfoy on their team, how much more damage can their chances get?" said George with a chuckle.

"Didn't know why you were getting so upset about, the whole school knew it." said Fred shrugging.

"It's cause it was at Hagrid's expense." said Harry. "If I could have gotten away with it, I'd of really hurt his arm."

"Us too!" said the twins raising their arms.

"They play fair." said Katie.
End of dialogue set.

Mrs. Diggory sniffed quietly.

Mrs. McFinn stood up and walked over to Mrs. Diggory.

"Mr...Dumbledore?" said Mrs. McFinn uncertainly.

"Please, call me Albus." said Dumbledore with a smile.

"Well...Albus...could you um.." said Mrs. McFinn, trying to find the right words.

"Conjure you a pot of tea? Of course, my lady." said Dumbledore with a flick of his wand.

Hanging in the air was a beautiful oriental print teapot with matching cups, steam was lazily coming out of the spout.

"Thank you." said Mrs. McFinn as she took the teapot and the cup. She carefully poured a cup of tea and handed it to Mrs. Diggory. "Here, drink this, it might make you feel better."

"Thank you." said Mrs. Diggory, her trembling hands brought the cup to her lips. "Have you ever lost a child?"

"Yes, twice, and I lost my husband." said Mrs. McFinn.

The school went quiet.

"Twice, Holly?" asked Dr. Clark faintly.

"Years ago, James and I tried to have a child, and we did. But she died during the delivery," said Mrs. McFinn placing a hand gently over her stomach. "I was never able to have children after that. Then I lost James, and then I lost Harry for so many years." Her eyes began to water.

"Harry?" said Mrs. Diggory confused.

"He's my adopted son, as good as anyway." said Mrs. McFinn. "I lost two souls in my life, so I can understand your pain." she gave Mrs. Diggory a quick hug, who returned it with her own.

"How come you didn't summon your own teapot?" asked Mr. Diggory skeptically.

"She's a muggle." said Zacharias smugly.

Mrs. Diggory pulled away quickly. "Are you really? How..."

"She's an important person in Harry's life, therefore, she was invited to be here." said Dr. Nicodemus. "That and she's putting the boy on the fast track to recovery."

"Really?" asked Sirius excitedly.

"Certainly, boy, turn your head to the right." said Dr. Nicodemus.

Harry turned to the right, and in the back of his snow-white haired head, they could see a small tuft of long black hair starting at the back of his neck.
"He's getting there, may be a month or two, more to finish it up, but it's getting there." said Dr. Nicodemus.

Twenty-first paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Mrs. Diggory laughed a little. "He was amazingly handsome; he got his looks from my father."

Mr. Diggory blinked and looked over to his wife slowly.

"And from you." she said with a smile.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

"ACCK! SORRY I AM SO SORRY!" shouted Fred loudly.

"It's alright, this was before...." said Mrs. Diggory, but she choked at the end.

End of dialogue set.

"My son wasn't Captain then." said Mr. Diggory proudly.

Dialogue set, fourth sentence.

"That he is! Best this school ever saw!" said Mr. Diggory pounding the armrests.

Sirius was about to stand and contradict him, but Harry kicked his shin.

"Drop it." said Harry quietly.

Dialogue set, fifth sentence.

"He's so over the top." said George.
"He just became a soap opera character, it was frightening." said Fred.

"Why wasn't the game called off? If the weather was so bad?" asked Dr. Clark.

"It's up to the both of the Quidditch Captains to postpone the game. Neither one of them were willing to step down." said Madam Hooch.

"That's when an adult should step up." said Mrs. McFinn shortly.

"Like he needs tips."

"God Oliver! He's got a class to go to!" said Katie groaning.
Twenty-fifth paragraph.

"So much for getting a slap on the wrist." said Bill.

Dialogue line.

"Well, that is fair." said Remus with a smile.

"Never said it wasn't." said Harry. "I was late."

Twenty-sixth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

"Sadist." said Sirius. "You must have been recovering from the full moon."

"Yeah, it was one bad moon." said Remus.

End of dialogue set.

Twenty-seventh paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"Aren't you a nosey one?" said Remus.

Twenty-eighth paragraph.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

"I'll just bet you do." said Sirius angrily.

End of dialogue set.

"That's a bit much." said Charlie.

"Not where Snape's concerned." said Bill.
"If you had looked on the desk, and the copy I sent to your office, you'd know." said Remus with a smirk.

"In a way, you were." said Tonks.

"That's a first, you organized your flipping sock drawer for crying out loud." said Sirius laughing out loud.

"That's not a very big surprise." said Remus with a smirk.

"If we had a competent Defense teacher back then, than yeah. But he's making up for two worthless years." said Harry.

"The reason behind this was obvious." said Harry with a smirk.
"Severus...." said Dumbledore in a warning tone.

"Good girl." said Rivers. "Don't let him deter you."

"Because they hadn't gotten that far, Severus!" said Professor Sprout hotly.

"He was doing just fine in the ways of getting everyone up to speed." said Dumbledore with a smile.

"Point goes to that she did talk out of turn, but you did ask a question that either no could or want to answer it. You can't have it both ways." said Flitwick.

"Apologize...right...now..." growled the rest of the teaching staff.

"Sorry, Miss Granger." said Snape quietly.
"Now we say it with love." said Ron quickly.

End of thirty-third paragraph.

"Bravo, Mr. Weasely." said Professor Flitwick.

Thirty-fourth paragraph.

"We were all sort of writing his eulogy in our heads." said Seamus.

Dialogue line.

"Next time, come to either myself of the Headmaster if you have a problem." said McGonagall.

"Yes ma'am." said most of the students.

Snape began to snarl at the floor.

Thirty-fifth paragraph.

Dialogue set, second sentence, first comma.

Dumbledore blinked and stared at Snape in shock. "That's not right Severus, they are rarely found in Magnolia."

Snape blushed heavily.

End of dialogue set.

"The grade I gave you was the right one." said Remus to Ron kindly.

Thirty-sixth paragraph.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

Sirius made to stand up and walk over to Snape but someone beat him to it.

SMACK!

Mrs. McFinn slapped the left side of Snape's face so hard that his entire head turned to the right. His eyes wide open in shock.
"How dare you! You knew what Remus was, and you try and teach children how to kill him! You should be ashamed of yourself!" she shrieked.

“How dare you?” hissed Mrs. McFinn. “Teaching children to kill and judge without thought or mercy! Have you no shame? I may only have been here for a short time, but I can tell you this, you aren’t a fraction of what Remus is, and never will be!”

Snape looked up at Mrs. McFinn with a shocked look on his face, the side of his face that had been hit turned a furious shade of pink.

End of dialogue set.

"That should be a fun discussion." said Fred.

"Would you rather disembowel a rat or toad." said George.

"Then after that, you get to skin them! Doesn't that sound fun?" said Fred clapping his hands together.

"Sounds disgusting." said Mrs. McFinn turning a faint green.

Thirty-seventh paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"That's a small part of it." said Remus with a smile.

Dialogue line.

Thirty-eighth paragraph.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

"GO RON!" shouted his brothers and sister loudly.

Dialogue set, fourth sentence.

"Whatever you called him, it fits." said Dr. Clark. "I hated that job when I was starting out."

End of dialogue set.
"I was debating beating the snot out of him, I thought better of it though." said Sirius.

Thirty-ninth paragraph, first sentence.

"I normally wait for dawn, to get up." said Harry.

End of thirty-ninth paragraph.

"Well, at least he knows when to keep his distance with the ladies." groaned McGonagall.

"Boys are free game." said Sirius laughing. "He threw James' undershorts out the window one year."

"I thought you did that?" said Remus.

"Well, I opened the window, but Peeves did the actual throwing." said Sirius.

Dialogue line.

Fortieth paragraph.

Forty-first paragraph, second sentence.

"I had gone to bed at two." said Harry.

Forty-first paragraph, fourth sentence.

"Not a really good motivational thought." said Angelina.

End of forty-first paragraph.

Forty-second paragraph.

"Wish I was up in time to see that, that furball is fast when he wants to be." said Seamus.

Dialogue set, first sentence.
"So you were on my side first!" said Hermione with a smile.

"Only cause cats chase things smaller than them, but he has enough prey to hunt, he doesn't need to go after Scabbers day in and day out." said Harry. "So, I wasn't really on either side, and yet I was on both of your guys' side. I sort of always have when you two fight." he added with a smile.

End of dialogue set.

"You'd think you'd keep Crookshanks in your room at night." said Tonks.

Forty-third paragraph, second sentence.

"What if you add lightning in the mix?" said Dr. Clark with a worried look.

End of forty-third paragraph.

Mr. and Mrs. Diggory smiled a little.

Forty-fourth paragraph, first sentence.

"I was getting ready to permanently glue Crookshanks' paws to the floor." said Harry with a smirk.

End of forty-fourth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"You tell him Harry." said Bill.

Forty-fifth paragraph.

"Well it was peaceful, before you guys got there." said Harry.

Dialogue line.
"So I was understating it." said Alicia.

"What was so funny?" asked Ginny.

"I don't even think they knew." said Fred.

"He did say he had a bad feeling about the match." said Katie.

"Damn, even your dad called the match when the weather was bad enough." said Sirius.

"Gotta say, at least Diggory was a genuine sportsman." said Katie with a smile.

"Get down on the ground now!" said Mrs. McFinn worriedly at the book. "And get undercover, before you catch your death of cold!"

"The game didn't last all that long." said Harry soothingly.

"Well, as long as you get back on the ground safely." said Mrs. McFinn.

Harry didn't meet her eyes.

"Get...to...the...ground..." muttered the people in the bowl through gritted teeth.
"Good, get back to the castle!" said Mrs. McFinn.

"Why not make your glasses so they repel water?" asked Charlie.

"My wand was up in the dorms." said Harry.

"You should keep your wand with you at all times." said Moody shortly.

"That would be traumatizing." said Fred.

"For Hermione." said George.

"But still cold." said Mrs. McFinn. "You should get to the castle and get to bed."
"Yes, great plan, get to the ground." said Sirius. "I don't want you struck by lightning."

"Us either." said Dr. Clark, Mrs. McFinn and Remus.

"Was that you?" asked Remus.

"Yeah...I think I was there now that I think of it. The first game I saw Harry playing...though, can't really count that, I could barely see a damn thing." said Sirius.

"I didn't frighten you again, did I?" Sirius asked in a whimper.

"Only for a moment." said Harry.

Mr. Diggory could hardly contain himself he couldn't wait to hear about how his son caught the Snitch in a game against Harry Potter.

The grip Dumbledore had on his chair seemed to tighten.
"Harry?" said Mrs. McFinn in a whimper.

Sixty-seventh paragraph.

Mrs. McFinn turned pale. So did Mr. Diggory.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Mrs. McFinn turned and looked at Harry in shock. His mother?

Harry was fumbling with the necklace that was around his neck.

Sixty-eighth paragraph.

"Harry?" said Mrs. McFinn grabbing Harry's arm and bringing him close to her.

"What about my son?" said Mr. Diggory.

"Shut up Amos!" hissed Mrs. Diggory looking fearful over to Harry. "We know Cedric caught that golden ball."

Sixty-ninth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Seventieth paragraph.

Mrs. McFinn screamed.

"I was okay, nothing really bad happened." said Harry soothingly in Mrs. McFinn's embrace.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"Didn't need to hear that." said Sirius covering his ears.
"Those things were super durable, or at least magical." said Harry pushing up his new glasses further up the bridge of his nose.

"No, just glasses that the hospital bought for you." said Dr. Clark reaching over and ruffling Harry's hair.

The school went quiet. "And you would know what that feels like." said Fred darkly.

"That scared us, we didn't expect you to wake up like that." said George.

"You don't want to know." said Harry.

"Didn't help that you started coughing and heaving." said George.

"We thought you couldn't breathe." said George.
"I was still sort of shaken from that whole scene." said Alicia. She looked around quickly. "Good, those Scattered Shot things aren't showing up."

"I don't think I could handle it." said Mrs. McFinn holding Harry close to her.

Seventy-fifth paragraph.

"I was crying for over twenty minutes straight." said Hermione quietly.

Dialogue line.

Seventy-sixth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Mrs. McFinn turned Harry's face to her face her own.

"Who cares about a game! You are alive! That's all that matters!" said Mrs. McFinn.

Dialogue set, fourth sentence.

Mr. Diggory looked down at the ground, while his wife had tears in her eyes with a proud smile on her face, but she flitted a worried look over to where Harry was being tightly embraced by Mrs. McFinn.

End of dialogue set.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"Did you have to tell him that? He was already crushed that he fell off his broom." said Mrs. Weasley shortly.

"Wanted to ease the tension. Backfired." said Fred.

Seventy-seventh paragraph, first sentence.

"Games aren't everything Cub." said Sirius grabbing Harry's shoulder tightly.
"Thanks, bring him back down to earth." said Bill.

"Your dad missed hundreds of times when he was younger." said Remus softly.

"No wonder you guys are so good at wagering bets." said Ron quietly.

"And not just by being unconscious." said Harry.

It's okay." said Sirius patting Harry's back. "Don't worry about games, living is way more important."

"For the first time, I was happy to hear that." said Harry with a half-hearted smile.

Mrs. McFinn held Harry tighter.

Charlie smiled "And from what I hear, you'd beat me hands down."
"Miss Holly." said Harry quietly.

Mrs. McFinn blinked and looked down at him. "What is it Sweetheart?"

"I can't breathe." said Harry quieter.

She looked down and saw that she was holding Harry around the chest very tightly. "Sorry dear." she said quickly releasing him.

"It's okay." he said leaning against her shoulder.

"He was ticked." said Fred.

"I swear, there weren't as many Dementors after that." said George.

"There weren't." said Dumbledore darkly.

"We couldn't tell if you were breathing or not, but you looked really pale." said Ron.

"Wish I had picked something else to talk about." said Harry looking down.
"Ouch." said Lionus. "That's painful, your first broom."

"That hurts." said Charlie.

"Or driven into." said George.

"He got quite the cut on the side of his face for it." said Snape.

"I know, I sent him some ice mice in return for it." said Harry. "To say thanks."

"I still don't know how you figured that that was my favorite candy." said Professor Flitwick.

"If you let your class get real quiet, you can hear them squeaking in your desk." said Harry with a smile.

"Oh, you kids could have done it a bit better." said Sirius groaning.

"I wouldn't have let them leave the room without telling me where the pieces were." said Harry.

"I've never seen you cry before that. You wouldn't stop crying and holding those pieces." said Ron sadly.

"Whatever happened to the pieces?" asked Neville.

"It's a picture frame now." said Harry.

"Of who?" asked Ginny.

Harry said nothing, but looked slowly up to Mrs. McFinn. She smiled softly. "You were always so sweet, which one did you take?"
"The one from the garden party." said Harry quietly.

Mrs. McFinn smiled at him.

"Shall we read another one before dinner?" said McGonagall trying to give Harry and Mrs. McFinn privacy.

"We'll read the next one!" said Fred and George.

They took the book and read the title to themselves first.

"Chapter ten."

"We're in BIG trouble." said Fred.

"Forget trouble, we're dead." said George.

Chapter End Notes

Thanks for reading, please review.
First paragraph, first sentence,
"Bet you didn't like that." said Sirius.

First paragraph, second sentence.
"It was unhygienic, having all those splintered pieces of wood on the bed." said Madam Pomfrey.
“Didn't care, still don't.” said Harry.

End of first paragraph.
"That's a piece of wood, friends are...living..." said Zacharias.
"Says a non-Quidditch player." said Fred dismissively.
“He wouldn’t understand.” said George with a sniff of disdain.

Second paragraph, first sentence.
"Never worked." said Fred.

Second paragraph, second sentence, first comma.
"They were nice Hagrid." said Harry quickly.
Second paragraph, end of second sentence.
Harry blushed and coughed loudly.
"It's fine." said Ginny with a smile.
"Aw! You have a girlfriend!" said Mrs. McFinn gushing.
Harry blushed even more.

Second sentence, third sentence.
"We made him practice." said George.
"The first time he said it, it sounded really bad." said Fred.

End of second paragraph.
"You should open up to people more." said Remus.

Third paragraph, first sentence.
Both Ron and Hermione blushed.

End of third paragraph.
Sirius stood up and walked out of the Great Hall.
"I'll go talk to him." said Harry sighing.

Harry walked out of the Great Hall and closed his eyes. Where did he Godfather go? He heard a crashing noise coming from the teacher's lounge. Harry walked slowly to the door and opened it. Suddenly a chair crashed into the wall beside the door. Harry looked further into the room and saw Sirius tossing plush chairs and sofas over.

Sirius turned his head so Harry could see his face, tears were streaming down it.

"Why? Why is he afraid of me?" said Sirius bitterly. His eyes were shut and his face was pointed down to the ground, he didn’t see Harry standing there.

"I'm not afraid of you." said Harry closing the door behind him softly.

Sirius turned to face him, his face distorted with grief.

"Then...then why...?" he asked fearfully.
"Cause I was an idiot. I didn't know what you were, or who you were." said Harry with a smile. "Now I love everything about you." he hugged the man in front of him.

Sirius blinked slightly, the last time he remembered Harry hugging him, Harry barely came up to his chest before this all happened. Now he and Harry were pretty close to the same height, except Harry was now a little bigger.

His little boy was gone....

Harry felt tears drop onto his shoulder and pulled away from Sirius slowly. "Are you alright?"

"I'm fine, it's just, you're so big now. You've grown up." said Sirius wiping a tear quickly.

"Yeah, but I'm still your godson, and nothing is going to change that." said Harry with a smile. "So ignore the parts of the book where it puts you down and just enjoy the happy ending at the end."

"What happy ending?" said Sirius, "I had to leave you."

"You never left me, you were always here." said Harry touching his heart. "And I could always find a way to reach you."

"When are they going to get back?" whined Zacaharias quietly.

"Is there a way to get his mother here?" asked Mrs. McFinn loudly. "I'd like to have word with her."

Zacharias gulped looked to the floor.

"You're good." said Remus with laugh.

"I'm the best." said Mrs. McFinn.

Harry and Sirius came slowly back into the room sat back down into the bowl.

"You alright?" asked Remus.

"Yeah, I'm alright." said Sirius quietly. "Just didn't want to hear what I did."

"Don't blame you." said Remus.

Fourth paragraph, second sentence.

"Oh sweetheart." said Mrs. McFinn kissing Harry's cheek. "You're going to be fine."

Fourth paragraph, third sentence.

"And he's the bravest person in school." whispered a third year.

"I don't faint, but I get close to hiding under my bed." said his friend.
The school went silent.

"I should have given you a Dreamless Draught." said Madam Pomfrey.
"Yeah, that was the year he got little to no sleep at all." said Ron.

Snape looked up at Harry, his face pale.

Sirius pulled Harry's legs up, pushed Harry gently against Mrs. McFinn. Remus tossing the blanket over him.
"It's alright dear." said Mrs. McFinn.
"I know." said Harry softly, resting his head on her lap.

"You little beast." hissed Mrs. McFinn.
Almost the entire school recoiled.
"She can be scary when she wants to." said Fred to George.

"He'd of never survived the fall, even with Dumbledore there." said Katie.
"Yeah, he's not as strong as Harry is." said Alicia smugly.
"Go Ron!" shouted his brothers and sister.

"Oh darn." said his crestfallen siblings.

"Ronald!" scolded his mother.

"You weren't there." said Ron defensively.

"You couldn't believe how happy I was." said Ron.

"Really? I thought I hid it well." said Remus.

"You call that hiding it? Idiot." said Sirius shaking his head.

"I sort of expected it." said Remus, "I couldn't help but laugh about it later."
"Even Muggle Substitute Teachers give out homework sometimes." said Harry.

Dialogue line.

"Two rolls of parchment did seem a bit much." said Remus.

Dialogue line.

"We told him till we were blue in the face." said Seamus.

Ninth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"Which you weren't." said Professor McGonagall.

Dialogue line.

"That seems to be the main complaint." said Remus.

Tenth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"You just became the hero to every third year (minus the Slytherins) student in the school." said Ron.

Dialogue line.

"So did Harry." said Ron. "It was no surprise the Hermione did it already."

Eleventh paragraph.

"Far from harmless." said Remus.
"It does that? How does that hurt you." asked Mrs. McFinn.

"It drowns you." said Remus.

"You are never to go into a bog, ever." said Mrs. McFinn to Harry, but he was sleeping.

"Is he sick again?" asked Hermione worriedly.

"No, he's just tired." said Dr. Nicodemus.

“He keeps dropping asleep at the drop of a hat.” said Sirius.

"You know, that sort of reminds me of the prior book with Dazzle Gums." said Sirius maliciously.

"I'll kill you." said Remus darkly.

"Don't, you'll wake Harry," said Sirius. "Kill me later."

"Count on it." said Remus.

"Why did you ask?" asked Sirius.

"I knew it crashed into the tree, I felt responsible." said Remus quietly.

"It's that fourth branch, it's quicker than the rest." said Sirius.
"Especially one without a rider." said Remus.

"You could barely choke out the words." said Remus looking down at Harry.

"How did you know? You weren't there." asked Charlie.

"Minerva told me all about it." said Remus.

"I would never allow them on the grounds while the students are here." said Dumbledore darkly.

"Remind me to stay away from light then." said Remus running his fingers through his hair.
"Just the things to bring into a school full of children." said Fred.

"That's never been proven." said Speckerton.

"You'll find out when we get to book five." said Ron.

Mrs. McFinn ran her fingers through Harry's hair.

"And you idiots brought them to a school?" said Mrs. McFinn worriedly.

A few of the Ministry workers looked down shamefully.

"Most people wouldn't even get out of bed." said Sirius.
Lupin made a sudden motion with his arm as though to grip Harry's shoulder, but thought better of it.

Damn, he's really observant thought Remus.

End of eighteenth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set.

"Despicable creatures," said Lionus.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set.

"And some very strong people keep their sanity for over twelve years." said Nightstrike with a smile.

Dialogue line.

Nineteenth paragraph.

"I was hoping not to talk about you." said Remus to Sirius.

Dialogue set.

Dialogue line.

"He was clinging to any shred of hope you could give him." said Dr. Nicodemus.

Dialogue line.

Sirius smiled down at his godson proudly.

Dialogue line.
"Better than nobody." said Hannah.

"So Harry learned all his techniques from you? Awesome!" said Ernie.

Remus blinked and smiled softly.

"Just let Dumbledore handle them." said Mrs. McFinn. "He did a good job the last time."

"But it's not certain that he'd be there." said McGonagall.

"If Harry were playing, I'd be there." said Dumbledore.

"Yeah, like it's your fault." scoffed Fred.

"Good he needs that." said Charlie. "His life is already one long tragedy story."

"Anger is a gentle word for what he was feeling at the time." said Professor Flitwick.

"I still can't wait for Halloween." said Dr. Clark.

"They sound so cute!" said Mrs. McFinn with a smile.
"That was a really big reason, not the only one, but one of them." said Ron. "He was impossible."

"Yeah, I had a lot of work to do." said Hermione quickly.

Ron and Hermione both blushed.

"Yeah, I can see why Harry wouldn't be all that happy." said Ernie.

"I really have to check that place out." said Mrs. McFinn. "I love sweets."

"Firebolt and Nimbus were the best choices out there." said Harry.

"Harry had to jump off the broom just to catch the Practice Snitch." said Fred.

"It was awesome! He landed right on the back of Angelina's broom as she passed under him." said George.

"You really know how to make everyone feel guilty." said Ron.
"It was quickly losing its luster." said George shrugging.

Rudolph and Leroy smiled mischievously.

"Not what you think!" said Fred and George quickly.

"I'm starting to think it is what we think." said Leroy.

"No it's not!" said George loudly.

"Ah!" said Sirius.

"That's where you got it." said Remus with a smile down to the unconscious figure.

"That's the product of our success." said Sirius to Remus.

"And it's his by right." said Remus.
"Bless him." said Sirius with a smile.

"Well he did." said Fred.

"I don't blame him." said Bill.

"That's a little more honest." said Mr. Weasley with a laugh.

"For some reason?" said Dumbledore his eyes twinkling like mad.

"Oh..my...god..." said Dr. Clark leaning forward slightly.
"He'd of opened it." said Mrs. McFinn.

End of dialogue set.

"It's amazing that you two can plan things without discussing it with each other." said Lionus with a smile.

"No, he just knew it belonged to a bunch of renegades and decided to keep it as a trophy to say that they were now gone." said Sirius.

"Has it indeed?" said McGonagall folding her arms.

The twins looked between each other uncomfortably.

"Now how the hell did you know that was the password?" said Sirius.

"Peter wrote it on the back, so he could remember it." said Remus quietly.

"Idiot." said Sirius shaking his head.
"Why green?" asked Dr. Clark. "Isn't that Slytherin colors?"

"You pick up quick. Yeah, James picked that color, it matched his crush's eyes." said Sirius with a smirk.

"You guys are really dramatic." said Dr. Clark.

"You have no idea." said Snape quietly.

Professor Flitwick leaned forward, fascinated by what he was hearing.

".....So it's a Stalker's map?" asked Mrs. McFinn.

Remus and Sirius flinched. "We didn't use it for that!" said Sirius.

"We just used it to avoid Filch!" said Remus. "And the other teachers!"

"Then why have all of them on there?" asked Mrs. McFinn with a smirk.

"It doesn't show what they look like at the moment! It just shows where they are!" said Sirius quickly. "We aren't perverts!"

"If you're young and boys...you're most likely perverts." said Rudolph with a smile. "You just don't admit it to yourselves."

"That' hurts." said Sirius.

"So what were you boys doing with it?" asked Tonks looking wickedly over to the Twins.

"Secret passageways and avoiding authority figures was all we were doing!" said George throwing his hands up in defeat.

“We don’t do stuff like that!” said Fred.
Snape leaned forward in his chair, So that’s how he did it.

"Mrs. Norris likes to patrol those often." said Fred.

"Aw, that was my favorite." said Sirius.

"Don't tell me you steal from them." said Mrs. Weasley accusingly.

"We leave money!" said Fred.

"Moony, Wormtail, Padfoot, and Prongs," sighed George, patting the heading of the map. "We owe them so much."

"You're welcome." said Sirius.

"Wouldn't go that far." said Professor Sprout.
"Should have remembered that." said Remus with a guilty smile.

"And risk him getting murdered by a supposed mass murderer?" said Terry Boot incredulously.

"Don't do anything reckless." said Mrs. McFinn soothingly patting Harry's head.

Mr. Weasley smiled warmly over to Harry.

"He's got a point...but narcotics work the same way." said Dr. Clark. "Some things effect others more some other people."

"He wanted to go to Hogsmeade that badly?" Tempest questioningly.
"Wait, so the dots turn into miniature people?" asked Seamus.

"Sometimes." said Sirius.

“So it is a Stalker's map.” said Mrs. McFinn with a teasing smile.

“No!” said Remus and Sirius together.

"Well that's handy." said Bill.

"After awhile, we couldn't use that passageway, only James could get through there." said Sirius.

"Wonder what got him so excited?" wondered Sirius.

"A new way to sneak in and out of the castle I expect." drawled Snape.

"He always was a klutz in the dark." said Mrs. McFinn. "He was afraid of it for the longest time."

"Harry was afraid of the dark? But he slept in a cupboard!" said Neville.

"He snuck a small flashlight in there with him. It wasn't until after James died that he overcame his fear. He became sort of brooding after that." said Dr. Clark thoughtfully.

"My poor sweet baby." said Mrs. McFinn kissing the top of Harry's head.
"I'm betting he used a few of James's choice words right there." said Dr. Clark with a smirk. "He was normally a gentle voiced person, but when the occasion would arise, he could make a sailor blush."

"He didn't say it around Harry did he?" said Mrs. Weasley.

"Well, if he snuck out to the garage then anything's possible." said Mrs. McFinn. "James would do most of his housework in there."

"If I had seen someone looking up at me through the floor, I would have freaked." said Lavender.

"Wonder how he found it again." said Ron.

"Oh crap!" said Ernie.

"Jelly Slugs?" said Mrs. McFinn cringing slightly.

"They aren't really slugs, it's just a gummy snack." said Remus.

"Damn, he's got guts." said Sirius proudly.

Several people sniggered.
"You mean you didn't even bother bringing your Invisibility Cloak?" asked Remus incredulously.

"He just went straight to Honeydukes, he didn't want to waste any time." said Fred.

"Waste time? Preventing someone from killing you is a waste of time?" said McGonagall angrily.

Several people laughed so hard they fell out of their chairs.

"Maybe we should take pictures of Honeydukes and show them to him." said Fred.

Ron's stomach growled.

"I think eating dinner would be a good idea." said Dumbledore with a smile. He waved his wand and the table full of food appeared.

"Harry honey? It's time to eat." said Mrs. McFinn.

Harry's eyes fluttered open slowly. He groaned slightly and sat up. "What's up."

"It's time to eat." said Mrs. McFinn.

Harry groaned and sat up in the bowl. His eyes slowly closing.

"You can go back to sleep later but let's get some food into you first." said Remus.

Harry's eyes closed again and he fell onto Sirius' lap.

"Looks like you're getting the food tonight." said Sirius with a smirk.

"Try and wake him up." said Remus standing up.

Sirius shoved Harry into an upright position and flicked his wand over Harry's head. Over his head there appeared a small bucket and it overturned itself, dumping a gallon of icy water on top of Harry's head.

"Arrrgh!" screamed Harry loudly as he jerked awake.

"I said wake him up, not give him a heart attack!" said Remus with his arms full of plates of food.

"Worked for you and James when you couldn't get up in the morning." said Sirius drying Harry's clothes.

"I'm up! I'm up." said Harry looking around in a sort of shock.
"Sorry about that." said Remus handing a plate of beef stew.

"Lets keep going Fred." said George.

Fifty-third paragraph, second sentence, end of first parenthesis

"I have two of them bouncing around our room. I was always a sucker for gum." said Dr. Clark.

Fifty-third paragraph, second sentence, end of second parenthesis.

"That...sounds...like fun..." said Mrs. McFinn.

"You have to be there." said Sirius.

Fifty-third paragraph, second sentence, end of third parenthesis.

"My particular favorite." said Professor Flitwick.

End of fifty-third paragraph.

"And these candies are really are all that popular?" asked Mrs. Mcfinn.

"You have no idea." said Fred with a smirk.

Fifty-fourth paragraph, second sentence.

Mrs. McFinn slowly put her fork down.

End of fifty-fourth paragraph.

"This should be good." said George.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.
"They actually are not that bad." said Dumbledore quietly. "You just have to keep your eyes closed."

Dialogue line.

Fifty-fifth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

People roared with laughter.

Dialogue line.

"Nope." said Harry with a smirk.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"We weren't sure if you were going to go the way of Percy or us." said George.

"You were still wondering that? After what had happened my first two years?" said Ron.

"But look what is on your chest." said Fred.

Ron looked down and saw the Prefect badge.

"Never mind." said Ron.

Dialogue line.

"That would be suicidal." said Sirius. "Never hand that thing over to a teacher."

Dialogue line.

"Good." said Sirius.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.
"So, not only would I get in trouble, so would Fred and George." said Harry.

Dialogue line.
"Here we go." moaned Seamus.

Dialogue set.
Sirius snorted.

Fifty-sixth paragraph, second sentence.
"So you had your suspicions?" said Sirius with a smile.

End of Fifty-sixth paragraph.

Ministry Notice.
"How the hell can you have a Merry Christmas with Dementors around?" asked Nightstrike.

"It is impossible to ignore them and go about your holiday making." said Tempest.

Dialogue set.
"Silencing Charms are a wonderful thing." said Sirius. "And I was already on the grounds. Didn't leave the grounds, just the castle."

Dialogue set.
"There was a lot of adult wizards about, it's not like they just take off and leave a bunch of school kids to run amuck around town." said Remus.

Dialogue line.

Fifty-seventh paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.
"Knew she wouldn't, but she did get back at me later." said Harry.
"Good for her." said Mrs. Mcfinn, "Giving a seven year old a sucker that can burn holes in their tongue."

"Explain the feeler then." said Fred.

"I offered, you didn't take it." said Ron.

"Wish you had told us you had been there before." said Hermione.

"Why? You seemed pretty excited to show me the sights." said Harry with a smile.

"Sam seemed fascinated by her too." said Sirius giving Dr. Clark a shove.

Dr. Clark looked over at Mrs. McFinn and blushed heavily.
"She must be lovely." said Mrs. McFinn.

Dr. Clark blushed even harder.

Dialogue line.

"Apparently Ron feels the same way." said Charlie with a laugh.

"Keep laughing and I'll tell them about the love song you tried singing to her." said Bill.

"Sh-shut up." said Charlie going pink.

Sixty-third paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Sixty-fourth paragraph.

"Just because I've been to Hogsmede, doesn't mean that I went inside the buildings." said Harry.

Sixty-fifth paragraph.

Sixty-sixth paragraph.

"That's awfully big of you. I wouldn't give him the time of day." said Remus.

Sixty-seventh paragraph, first sentence.

"Wish they had warned me, I felt shorter after that." said Harry with a smile.

Sixty-seventh paragraph, second sentence, first comma, fifth word.

"You sound like a drunk." said Sirius with a smirk.

End of sixty-seventh paragraph.

Sixty-eighth paragraph.

Sixty-ninth paragraph, first sentence.
"Good thinking." said Lionus with a smirk.

End of sixty-ninth paragraph.

Seventieth paragraph, first sentence, second comma.

"Those would be Madam Rosemerta's shoes." said Professor Sprout. "She favors turquoise."

End of seventieth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"Dang." said George.

"That's a lot." said Fred.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Several students turned and stared at him.

"Filius chooses not to drink." said Professor Dumbledore with a smile.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"Well, well, well. Wonder if his wife knows about this?" grinned Fred wickedly.

Seventy-first paragraph.

"Good thing I was wearing slacks." said Hermione with a giggle. "Or that would have been really awkward."

Dialogue line.

Seventy-second paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"I didn't say anything!" said Hagrid quickly.

"That would have been Filch." said Dumbledore through gritted teeth.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"And it doesn't improve the student's morale and well-being either." said Professor McGonagall.

Dialogue set.

"And no wizard or witch with kids in the school can blame him." said Mrs. Weasley.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"Good thing the teachers are looking out for the students well being." said Dr. Nicodemus. "Well..." he looked over to Snape. "most of them anyway."

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

"Knew she liked me." said Sirius with a broad smile.
"The entire world knew who my best friend was." said Sirius with a sad smile.

"Sorry, but you shouldn't have made that noise." said Ron apologetically.

Fred and George beamed at each other.

"I don't know about that one." said Remus thoughtfully.

Sirius turned and looked at Harry.

"I won't lie, at the time, I was pretty distraught." said Harry.

"Why?" asked Sirius ignoring the obvious.

"You'll find out in a bit." said Harry.
Sirius covered his head with his hands.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set.

"That beats a Witness Relocation Program." said Mrs. McFinn.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set.

"I wish you had." said Sirius his eyes watery.

"It wasn't that I didn't trust you, Sirius. It was just, I wanted them to be safe." said Dumbledore, his voice choked.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

"I did feel that way, but...I just wanted to be sure before I said something," said Dumbledore.

"You told McGonagall." said Remus.

"As his Deputy, he tells me everything." said McGonagall.

End of dialogue set.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"No, I changed the plan." said Sirius, tears falling down his face. "I wish I hadn't."

Harry patted his shoulder tenderly.

“You of all people shouldn't be patting my back.” said Sirius.
"No." said Remus darkly. "Peter decided to take off, after showing who he really was."

"It's amazing how we had the story right, but it was the wrong person." said Tonks.

Sirius looked down, crushed.

"Peter felt that way. Not you." said Remus quietly.

"Doing that, taking Harry away with me, might have kept me out of Azkaban." said Sirius with a weak smile.

"Wish I hadn't." said Sirius.

"I'm happy you did, a little anyway." said Mrs. McFinn quietly.

"Why do you say that?" asked Remus quickly.

"I never would have known him. And that would have been awful." said Mrs. McFinn giving a Harry a quick hug.
"I planned on going to kill Peter, I would gladly go to Azkaban for that." said Sirius darkly.

Sirius flinched horribly. "Never..." he squeaked.

"Opposite thing happened." said Sirius bitterly.

"I regret regretting that." said McGonagall with a scowl.

"Bullshit, he's living a coward's life." said Sirius hotly.

"I wish." said Sirius.
"You make it sound like I fought back." said Sirius with a dark smirk.

"A thumb is a few fragments? Idiot." said Lionus.

"I don't feel comfortable asking for that medal back. Mothers have such a strong devotion to their children. Best let her think her son was a hero." said Madam Bones. "She hasn't been feeling well of late."

"I was getting bored." said Sirius sheepishly. "Some days I plan Peter's death, other days I just run out of ideas."

"Of course you would try and act cool around him." said Remus shaking his head.

"Freaked the hell out of him." said Sirius with a bark like laugh.

"Never joined, never will." said Sirius.
"Your eyes looked really freaky. Like you were about to either cry or just start beating people." said Ron.

"I think that's enough for one day." said Dumbledore loudly. He looked over to Harry and Sirius with a thoughtful glance and turned to the Diggorys. "You are more than welcome to stay here. It may be for the best if you do stay for the duration."

"I don't know." said Mr. Diggory.

"We will." said Mrs. Diggory firmly. "Thank you."

An hour later, Harry was busy taking a shower while Sirius, Remus, Dr. Clark and Mrs. McFinn were sitting in their suite. They were mostly discussing what to do with Harry that coming weekend, seeing as how Harry was not allowed to go to Night’s Rest, due to his grounding.

"You alright, Sirius?" asked Dr. Clark.

"I'm fine, it's just, this book is really hard to listen to." said Sirius.

"Why don't you go and finish up Night's Rest." said Remus. "We'll let you know when to head on back. It's already Christmas time in that book, it can't be much longer."

Sirius thought deeply. "I'll think about it."

Chapter End Notes

Please review
Harry yawned hugely as he walked into the Great Hall. He didn't get much sleep last night, due to Sirius not coming to their room until very late in the evening. Harry could never sleep very well unless everyone was safely tucked away in their dorm at night, not that he knew the reason behind that feeling. He was shocked when he noticed that Sirius was gone when he got back to their room after running around early that morning.

He looked around the Great Hall and saw that Sirius wasn't there either.

He walked quickly up to Remus who was helping himself to sausages, "Where's Sirius?"

"Sirius needed to go and fix up Night's Rest today." said Remus quickly, not wishing to divulge the truth.

"He doesn't want to hear any more about how I thought he was a murderer, does he?" said Harry with an unimpressed look.

Remus looked down sheepishly.

"That's all you had to say, you didn't need to sugarcoat it." said Harry walking back to the bowl.

"Aren't you going to eat breakfast?" asked Mrs. McFinn who was tenderly spearing a strawberry.

"I ate some apples in the orchard." said Harry dismissing the plate of fruit that she handed him.

"Are you upset that Sirius isn't here?" said Dumbledore kindly.

"Just a bit." said Harry. "But it's his choice, if he doesn't want to be here. I'll read the next chapter, to get it all moving along."

He walked up to the books, which were still covered in the crystal veil that protected them from prying eyes too soon or too late in the day.

"Uh...Harry? It's only eight-thirty, we can't..." said Speckerton.

"I want to start now, please." said Harry to the book. Amazingly the veil raised itself and revealed the book. Harry picked it up and walked back to the bowl and opened the book.

"I didn't think about him allowing it to continue early in the day." said Speckerton.

Eleventh chapter. said Harry. He smiled broadly. "Maybe this chapter will be good. Too bad Sirius is missing out" he added with a bitter tone in his voice.

“This isn’t going as well as I thought.” said Remus sheepishly.
"I pretty much ran and didn't stop running." said Harry. "Though, the owners didn't seem to see me slink back into their storeroom."

"You weren't supposed to hear that." said McGonagall softly.

"We didn't want to burden you with that knowledge." said Mr. Weasley sadly.

"And Harry looked like he would rip our heads off if we did." said Ron.

"We noticed you needed some cheering up." said Fred shrugging.

"Yeah, but I enjoy breathing fresh air thank you." said Harry with a smirk.

"Oh, Harry dear..." said Mrs. Weasley, her eyes full of tears.

"Thank Merlin he isn't here to hear that." said Remus muttering to himself.

Remus covered his mouth to hide the silent laughter he was induced into.
"Oooh..." said Remus, trying hard not to laugh good-naturedly, knowing full well the vanity his friend was noted for.

Harry's thoughts

Remus stopped his laughter and looked at Harry uncomfortably.

Sixth paragraph.

Mrs. McFinn opened her mouth, but closed it.

"Say it." said Harry with a smile.

Mrs. McFinn. "Sounds like someone needs a time out."

"I put myself in time out, how's that for maturity?" said Harry with a laugh.

Seventh paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Eighth paragraph.

"You can be moody when you want to be." said Dr. Clark. "I thought a toddler version of you was bad."

"You ain't seen nothing yet." said Harry, Ron, and Hermione.

Ninth paragraph, first sentence.

"Harry?" said Dr. Clark quietly.

"I'm fine now." said Harry, just as quiet.

Ninth paragraph, second sentence, end of first parenthesis.

"Really sorry about that Neville." said Harry looking up from the book.

End of ninth paragraph.

Dumbledore looked pale. "I do believe that may have been the exact conversation."
"So you had little more than a few hours under your belt?" said Fred.

"No wonder you looked like you got hit by the Hogwarts Express." said George.

"He was starving." said Hermione rolling her eyes.

"I wouldn't have minded just sleeping the day away." said Harry.

"You could have used it." said Madam Pomfrey.

"Liar." said Dr. Clark.

"Well, you already ruined the whole 'don't not sleep' thing." said Dean.
Hermione and Ron blushed.

End of twelfth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

_He is now._ thought Harry to himself.

Thirteenth paragraph.

Remus looked swiftly over to him. Before Harry could read the next line, he took Harry's chin and turned it towards himself.

"You aren't worth losing," he said quietly.

"You know this happened two years ago right?" said Harry.

"But knowing you, and what you can do, you snuck out and tried to find him." said Remus.

"Not really, I was afraid I'd run into a Dementor outside the school. Then it would be all over for me." said Harry.

"Self-preservation at last." sneered Snape. "It's about time you learned that."

Dialogue set, fourth sentence.

"I wouldn't." said Neville turning white.

End of dialogue set.

"Don't go after him." said Ernie.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"Still don't go nuts and go after him." said Hannah. "I know he's innocent, but still you didn't know that at the time."
"Why do you keep answering for him?" asked Nightstrike.

Lionus and Moody both smiled broadly.

"He'd make the perfect Ranger/Auror." said Lionus and Moody together.

"You'd take his advice over theirs?" said Percy in amazement.

"So is any adult wizard." said Harry.

Moody nodded.

"You've really got to stop flipping out on that." said Harry.

"That...is the lamest motive to have someone murdered that I have ever heard." said Tonks.

"Not one bit." said Remus.
"Don't play that card, won't go well." said Charlie.

Dialogue line.

"That's why." said Charlie with a groan. "I don't know how the hell they think she's the smartest witch, she says and does a lot of stupid stuff." thought Charlie shaking his head.

Fifteenth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"There you go." said Bill. "He should brighten your spirits."

Dialogue line.

"At nightfall, Miss Granger, the middle of the day is perfectly fine." said McGonagall.

Hermione blushed.

Dialogue line.

Sixteenth paragraph.

"I didn't want Harry talking more about that, he kept getting more and more depressed." said Ron.

Dialogue line.

"Where did Percy go?" said Bill.

"He went home." said Ron shortly.

Dialogue line.

Seventeenth paragraph, end of parenthesis.

"What about the whole 'noble men and gentle lady?' schtick he said?" said Terry.

End of seventeenth paragraph.
Eighteenth paragraph.

"The most depressed person in the world, and you can still describe things so beautifully." said Mrs. McFinn hugging Harry's arm.

Nineteenth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Twentieth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Twenty-first paragraph.

"Dog's don't make that noise." said Harry.

"We were afraid Hagrid had been attacked by something, or someone." said Hermione.

"Thanks for worryin' 'bout me." said Hagrid.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Twenty-second paragraph.

"Oh, Hagrid..." said Mrs. Weasley.

Dialogue line.

"I swear I shrunk about a foot." said Harry quietly, a smile on his face.

Twenty-third paragraph, first sentence.

"It's okay, Hagrid." said Harry with a smile to an abashed Hagrid.

End of twenty-third paragraph.

Dialogue line.
"Still amazed you saw that, I had the tea pot sittin' in front of it." said Hagrid.

"Of course it's not your fault, the stupid nimrod should have been paying attention!" said Dr. Nicodemus shortly.

"There's a shocker." said Bill crossing his arms.

"Those idiots don't know yet to not trust that slick bastard yet? Especially after the previous year?" said Charlie.

"No they don't." said Diggory, trying to stick up for his sister department.

"Yes they do." said Hermione, Harry and Ron.

"Too bad I ate breakfast." said Ron.
"We were quickly learning!" said Harry loudly.

End of twenty-eighth paragraph.

"Maybe not cute but he was very attractive." said Hermione.

Dialogue line.

"Not to them devils." said Hagrid.

Dialogue line.

Twenty-ninth paragraph.

"Oh you poor dear." said Mrs. McFinn sadly.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"I still would have been more than happy to help, Hagrid, all you had to do was ask." said Dumbledore.

Thirtieth paragraph.

"He's got more tact than the two of them put together." said Nighstrike to Tempest.

"Indeed." said Tempest.

Dialogue line.

"They won't listen to children." said Madam Bones.

Dialogue line.

Thirty-first paragraph.

"It was his turn." said Hermione.
"I couldn't believe that was all he had." said Harry.

"Good man." said Dr. Clark with a smile.

Harry had said "said" instead of 'lied'.

"Sorry Hagrid, but they were really boring, couldn't wait to get started on something else." said Ron.

Madam Bones looked down guiltily, but only for a brief moment.

"Worse than you can imagine." said Mr. Weasley.
"I forgot you said that." said Harry, he brought his feet up into the bowl.

"And you let a bunch of them patrol around a school?" shrieked Mrs. McFinn.
"Good thing for Fudge he isn't here, she'd tear him apart." said Tonks.
"With her teeth." said Kingsley.

"Don't blame you Hagrid, it took Sirius a while to want to even leave my basement for the longest time." said Remus.
"When was this?" asked Harry.
"After he escaped at the end of the year." said Remus in a whisper.

"He seems to always find something to worry about on Christmas, doesn't he?" said George.

"If only most students would put half that much effort in their homework." said Professor Sprout with a smile.

"I don't even want to say what had happened." said Ron, giving a full body shiver.
"Yeah, a Manticore wouldn't exactly be overly friendly." said Remus.

"It sounds so wonderful." said Mrs. McFinn with a bright smile.

"Boys and presents." said Hermione shaking her head.

"Sorry sweetie." said Mrs. Weasley.

"It's okay." said Ron.

Harry lifted the first sweater he had on and showed a Gryffindor sweater.

"Still fits." said Harry with a smile, "Well sort of." The sweater only came down to the upper part of his stomach and was cut in half to form a short vest. "It's still warm, and it was flipping cold this morning."

"The best broom in the world!" said George.
"I want to know how the hell did he go to Quality Quidditch Supplies and get the broom?" asked Ron.

"He ordered it through the Owl Post, paid upfront from his account in Gringotts." said Remus.

"Wouldn't the goblins know that he's an escapee?" asked Mrs. Diggory.

"They don't care." said Bill shrugging. "Money is money."

A few of the Quidditch players sighed dreamily.

Dumbledore raised his hand and so did Remus, Leroy, Rudolph, and Sirius. "If I had it I would." said Remus.

"I was also assured by Fudge that he would replace the broom that you lost. He kept dragging his feet." said Dumbledore. "It was his Dementor's fault that you fell and the broom was destroyed."

"There's a surprise." said Seamus.
"You think so?" said Dumbledore.

End of dialogue set.

Dialogue set, third sentence.

"He would too." said Charlie.

End of dialogue set.

"Ron was more eager to get back at Malfoy than anyone else." said Harry with a smirk.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"Yeah right." said Fred.

Dialogue line.

"Or at least some food to put some weight on his body." said George.

Dialogue line.

"He doesn't like me enough to starve himself just to get me a Christmas present." said Harry with a laugh.

Remus only smiled.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Forty-seventh paragraph.

Remus released a breath. "Dammit..."
"Hermione! What are you doing?" said Bill.

"You said that he would stay in your dorm!" said Charlie. “Scabbers is in Ron's dorm! It's the last place for him to be safe!”

“I didn't want to leave him alone on his first Christmas.” said Hermione.

“Miss Granger, you were putting Ron's pet in danger, the cat should have stayed in your dorm when Ron's rat was out and about.” said Madam Bones scolding the girl.

Hermione turned red.

Several people groaned loudly. "You really don't give a damn about other people's pets do you?" said Nightstrike.

Hermione looked down at the floor.

"Being careful is a good trait." said Kingsley. "But you should have been a bit more careful with your pet."

"I'm amazed she forgot, we wouldn't really shut up about it for at least two months." said Ron.
"Most expensive broom on the market, once the next one in the series comes out, it's going to be twice as expensive as that one." said Charlie.

"What one is that?" asked Neville.

"It's called the Lightningbolt." said Charlie. "It's said in the magazine Sonic Seeker that the designers have gone around to all the professional matches, both national and international and studied the players. They've even gone to some school matches! Their final stop was actually here at Hogwarts a few years ago. Take a guess who they say is the inspiration behind the name?"

"I'm guessing me." said Harry a frown.

"You got it." said Charlie. "They saw one of your games and freaked the heck out. It's all over in Sonic Seeker. They don't mention your name, but they described you to a 'T'."

"Which game did they see?" said Ron.

"The one with psycho bludger." said Charlie. "They were impressed."

"Ugh..." said Harry.

"Good girl." said McGonagall.

"That would be sacrilegious." said Charlie.

"And there is the reason you should have left Crookshanks out of the room." said Bill.
"Not a very Merry Christmas for the trio." said Seamus.

"One thing after another." said Micheal.

"Still can't believe you acted all insulted." said Ron to Hermione.

"That was an understatement." said Ron.

"Nice of Harry not to speak that point out loud." said Ginny.

"You know, if you'd talk more, we'd know more about what you're really like." said Seamus to Harry.

"That would take all the fun out of it." said Harry with a mischievous grin.

"I was protecting my pet rat!" said Ron defensively.
"You sat there and studied that thing for a whole hour." said Ron. "And it took you a long time to get down to us."

"The whole Great Hall is criticizing your cat." said Zacharias. He looked around the room quickly. "Aren't you going to shout at me or something?"

"No, we're telling her off. It's a fair point. You're not the first one since we've started this stuff." said Fred.

"My parent's went to visit my Grandma in Germany before term had ended." said a third year Hufflepuff.

"My dad went to Australia for a business trip." said a third year Ravenclaw.

"My Grandmother and Grandfather went on a third honeymoon." said the seventh year Slytherin.

"He hates crackers." said Remus with a smirk. "He always has."

Snape snarled, while the rest of the school laughed loudly.

"If those things didn't come completely random, I'd wager that that one was planted." said Lionus laughing hard.

"Coincidences are powerful things." said Tempest with a whinnying laugh.

Firenze smiled softly over to Tempest.

"Wonder when they're going to go on a date?" asked Fred looking at the two centaurs.

"Didn't they already do that?" whispered George.
Sixtieth paragraph.

Mrs. McFinn laughed loudly. "I remember when James and I pulled a cracker the first year we were married. I already got a red hat, he had to wear the pink one!"

"Sounds like him, it takes him a while to warm up to an unusual outfit." said Dr. Clark.

Dialogue line.

Sixty-first paragraph, second sentence.

"I swear she lives off of the dramatic moments of life." said McGonagall.

End of sixty-first paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

"Oh, come on." said Bill muttered.

End of dialogue set.

Dialogue line.

Sixty-second paragraph.

"Not the normal thing to happen at Christmas." said Mrs. McFinn.

"It does at our house, you never know what will happen." said Fred.

Dialogue line.

"Remind me to crawl away from the table." said Dr. Clark with a smile.

Dialogue line.

Sixty-third paragraph, first sentence.

"Superstitious much?" whispered Mrs. McFinn.
End of sixty-third paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Sixty-fourth paragraph.

"What does she care?" asked Seamus.

"Didn't you know?" asked Dean quietly. "She fancied him."

Seamus snorted with laughter.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"Ooooh." said a few students.

Sixty-fifth paragraph.

Dialogue set.

Dialogue line.

Sixty-sixth paragraph.

"Oooh!" groaned the students while trying to hide their laughter.

End of dialogue set.

Dialogue line.

"So much for not wanting to have fights in front of the students." said Ron with a smirk.

Dialogue set, fourth comma.

"Sounds like Dad trying to stop our fights when we were younger." said Bill with a smirk.

End of dialogue set.
"Don't blame you, it's unnerving sometimes." said Ginny with a laugh. "Being personally spoken to by the head of a school."

"What colored hats did you boys get?" said Mrs. McFinn with a smile.

"I got a cowboy hat." said Ron with a big grin.

"I got a deerstalker cap, like Sherlock Holmes. I still have it somewhere." said Harry pondering quietly.

"Both of those, in one cracker?" said Mrs. McFinn her mouth agape.

"They're Wizard Crackers, they hold a lot more than the normal ones." said Dumbledore with a smile.

"I can't wait to see what we get." said Dr. Clark excitedly.

"I jumped a foot in the air." said Harry. "And landed in Ron's arms."

"I couldn't believe how light you were." said Ron. "But it was hilarious, the look on everyone's faces."

"It was Harry." said Ron looking worried.

"I needed that laugh." said Ron.
"I had a feeling what you were going to do." said Harry. "I had to come up with a convincing script to follow."

"Why did you make me feel guilty then?" asked Hermione shortly.

"I think you would have found it a bit suspicious if I didn't throw a fit." said Harry.

"So you make me feel guilty?" said Hermione angrily.

"Call it payback for what you were putting Ron and Scabbers through." said Harry. "You never seemed to feel the least bit sorry for continuously breaking your promise to Ron, I felt you were due some retribution."

Hermione shrank back guiltily.

"And besides, I knew there wasn't anything wrong with the broomstick." said Harry.

"How can you be sure?" asked Hermione accusingly.

"Remember when you guys went down to the Common Room and it took me twenty minutes to come down? What do you think took me so long?" said Harry.

"But, it took McGonagall and Flitwick so long to check the broom!" said Hermione.

"True, that sort of made me feel a bit disappointed. In the information about Firebolts, it's stated that they are protected against most curses and hexes, it's charmed right into wood. It narrows down what curses and hexes can be attached on it."

"So you already did the countercurses for those?" said Hermione weakly.

"Uh huh." said Harry. "It was safe, but it's better to be safe than sorry. I don't mind having someone of more skill looking it over." he added with a smile.

"Can't deny he isn't quite the life of the party." said Dumbledore with a smile.
"It was fun to dream about servicing it." said Harry.

"How would you know you'd get it back?" asked Hermione.

"Despite if they found something or not, I'd get the broomstick. Once it's made safe, I'd still get a broom out of it." said Harry.

"I don't think they're going to ignore you and pretend you aren't there." said Tonks.

"You'd have been better off hiding in your dorm." said Ron.

"You didn't look very suspicious that day." said Hermione.

"I've been hiding intellect from you for years without you knowing. I was very good at what I was doing." said Harry shrugging.

"That was quite a good bit of acting." said McGonagall.
"Strip it down?" said Charlie.

"You're nuts!" said Bill.

"You freaked me out with the whole 'strip it down' part." said Harry.

"That wasn't all that true." said Harry. "I had to instigate the conversation every time you guys figured out what wasn't there."

"There's nothing new." said Neville.

"It was, but Sirius would never do a thing to hurt Harry." said Remus.

"We didn't know that at the time." said McGonagall.

"Who wants to read now?" said Harry holding the book limply in his hand.

"I'll read." said Katie with a bright smile as she took the book. "Twelfth chapter."

"This should be fun." said Remus, "Hang on, I'll be right back."

He stood up slowly and walked out of the Great Hall. In a very short moment, he came back with a smile on his face.

"What did you do?" asked Dr. Clark in a whisper.

"You'll find out in a bit." said Remus whispering back with a smile. "I went to get someone's pacifier."
Chapter End Notes

Thanks for reading Please review
"Why were you mad, if you knew something wasn't wrong?" asked Hermione.

"The whole 'stripping' part was the one word that was pissing me off." said Harry.

"Alright, 'interference' was a harsh term, but still..." said Harry. "And I wasn't too sure that even if they found something wrong with it, they wouldn't burn it."

"I can understand your worry." said Charlie. "Brooms aren't meant to be taken apart bit by bit."

"We didn't take it apart." said Professor Flitwick. "We merely examined every spell attached to it."

"Exactly, we won't know if you altered the flight of the broom. No one else we know has one, and Harry never rode it to see if the examinations changed the flying abilities of it." said Charlie earnestly.

"I sent it to Quality Quidditch Supplies over the summer last year. He said it was in good condition, though it was about ten miles slower than what it was supposed to be." said Harry. "That's not a big deal, it was still fifty miles faster than what the Slytherin's brooms were."

"Amen!" shouted the Quidditch players.

"Did you keep your cat in your dorm?" asked Bill.
"Nope, he was still roaming around." said Ron with a frown.

Second paragraph, fourth sentence.

"Studying always made her feel better." said Ron.

End of second paragraph.

Third paragraph.

"That was the worst start to term he's ever had." said Angelina.

Dialogue set.

Fourth paragraph.

"He didn't want to make it sound like it was your fault." said Alicia. "He knew that if he depressed you, we'd beat him up."

Dialogue line.

"That had to be a great present." said Dr. Clark.

"Worked for me." said Harry with a smile.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"I was being honest." said Harry shrugging.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"That good feeling didn't last long." said Harry. "I felt really sorry for him."
"And it wasn't even his broom." said Fred.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"That crushed him." said Fred.

"Yeah, never saw a grown seventeen year old cry before." said George.

"He was kicking and pounding his fists into the floor later that day." said Fred.

"Emarrassing it was." said George.

Fifth paragraph.

"Didn't need to, I just ordered it through the post." said a voice coming from the door.

Harry turned and saw Sirius walking towards them. He stood up quickly and ran to Sirius. Sirius smiled broadly, and extended his arms to pull his godson into a hug, but was taken aback when Harry punched him in the jaw.

"Nice shot." muttered Snape with a smirk.

"Next time, tell me when you're leaving." said Harry with a snarl.

Sirius stared and held the side of his face. He blinked but a small smiled on his face. "You got it. I won't leave unless I tell you about it."

"Good. Want something to eat? I can go down and make you something." said Harry, disregarding that a moment earlier he had just punched his godfather.

"I ate at Night's Rest." said Sirius shaking his head.

“Thought there wasn’t any food there.” said Harry with a raised brow.

“Well, to be honest, I turned into a dog and nabbed a rabbit or two.”

"Okay then." said Harry walking back towards the bowl. "Sit down."

Sirius moved swiftly to the bowl and as he sat down, he whispered to Remus. "You didn't tell me he'd hit me."

"I didn't know he would." said Remus looking at Harry warily.

Dialogue line.
Sixth paragraph.

Dialogue set.

"That won't work." said Harry.

"He'd make, McGonagall see sense? She's the definition of sense!" said Bill.

Seventh paragraph, second sentence.

"They looked really cute." said Lavender.

"And it helped with the whole freezing cold problem." said Parvati.

End of seventh paragraph.

Mrs. McFinn paled and took Harry's hand and looked at it. "Really, it looks pretty long to me, what in the world? It says over a hundred."

"That's normal for us." said Dumbledore with a smile.

"Oh my goodness." said Mrs. McFinn. She didn't mention the fact that she saw a definite cut in his life line, but it showed it continuing on after that. Maybe she'll tell Mr. Dumbledore about it later.

"You know palmistry too?" said Remus with a surprised smile.

"We branched out a bit." said Mrs. McFinn with a blush. “Just having fun.”

Trelawney rolled her eyes.

Eighth paragraph.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

"Couldn't you remember?" asked Sirius as he threw an arm around Harry's shoulders and pulled him to his side.

"I was sick." said Remus defensively.

End of dialogue set.

"Dumbledore would have killed me, set me on fire, and then feed me to Fluffy." said Remus with a laugh.
Dumbledore had a uncharacteristic smirk on his face, "Not before I ripped you limb from limb."

Dialogue line.

"I really don't blame you for not telling me." said Ron sheepishly.

Ninth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"Get the feeling she knows?" said Fred.

"That wouldn't be all that surprising." said George.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"It was driving me nuts." said Ron.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"He's got a point, if you don't want to say anything, don't bring it up." said Dean.

Dialogue line.

"Nope, she knew." said Harry.

Tenth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"A Boggart, I wager." said Sirius.
Dialogue set, first sentence.

"What are you doing stripping in front of him?" said Sirius with a shocked look.

"Just my cloak!" said Remus quickly.

End of dialogue set.

"You're so nice." said Charlie with a laugh.

Dialogue line.

"Well, you were a good actor." said Remus with a laugh.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

"It's not even a necessary spell for N.E.W.Ts." said Hermione.

"It really should be." said Dumbledore thoughtfully.

End of dialogue set.

Dialogue line.

"You didn't know how to do it?" asked Lee.

"Nope, the books weren't very helpful in teaching people how to do it." said Harry.

Dialogue line.

Harry had a sudden vision of himself crouching behind a Hagrid-sized figure holding a large club.

Hagrid blushed faintly.

"That sounds like a very capable Patronus." said Dumbledore with a broad smile. "Not one I would want to tackle all that eagerly."

Eleventh paragraph, first sentence.
"You know, I never really understood it." said Ron.

"I'll explain it later." said Harry with a smile.

"Can't you tell us now?" said Neville.

Harry sighed. He reached into his bag and took out the small black notebook and flipped towards the middle of the book.

"I'll put it simply. A Dementor uses the despair we feel as it's greatest weapon. While we're distracted with despair, they move in closer, the closer they are the more despair we feel. Until finally...it's too late to do anything to save ourselves. What a Patronus is, is a sort of doppelganger, what they feed on is right there in front of them. They try to induce despair into it, but the doppelganger doesn't have any, therefore," he closed the book with a snap. "the Dementor doesn't have a single weapon to use, making it offensively useless and defensively incapable. The Patronus however isn't without attacking abilities. Dumbledore's for instance, can use it's talons to rip apart the torn cloak at the Dementor's body."

The students stared at the teen in amazement.

"Wonder what my Patronus is?" muttered a third year.

"I can't wait to try and learn it." said a fifth year Ravenclaw.

"Join the D.A." said Fred loudly.

"Harry will teach you all about it." said George.

End of eleventh paragraph.

"Quite true, a percentage of wizards cannot even cast the spell." said Dumbledore.

"Which is surprising." said Madam Bones.

"Not going to stop me from trying." said a Hufflepuff sixth year. A few students nodded in agreement.

“Excellent.” said Dumbledore with a broad smile.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"Which makes using Polyjuice Potion very hard." said Kingsley. "You can look like someone else, you'll still conjure only your Patronus."

Dialogue line.
Dr. Clark and Mrs. McFinn looked at him with surprised looks.

"What about us?" said Dr. Clark.

"I couldn't think about you, without thinking...about...him." said Harry faintly.

Mrs. McFinn leaned over gave him a quick kiss on the cheek. "It's alright sweetie."

"That's not a strong enough feeling, boy." said Moody.

"It was all I could think of at the time." said Harry shrugging.

Bill, Charlie, Mr. Weasley, Sirius, Remus, Kingsley and Dr. Clark laughed loudly.

"What's so funny?" asked Seamus.

"We'll tell you when you're older, it has something to do with liquor." said Sirius with a bark like laugh.

"Why are you so excited?" said Zacharias with a sneer.

"Because, he was one step closer to not being affected by them anymore." said Draco quietly.
"I was so proud." said Remus with a smile.

"You should have told me to wait." said Remus guiltily.
"I don't know why I didn't." said Harry.

"I don't think this will go well." said Dennis weakly.

Sirius, Snape and Remus turned pale. Dumbledore looked down solemnly.

"You didn't conjure up a bed?" said Sirius accusingly.
"He just fell! I didn't have time!" said Remus.
"You nearly scared me half to death." said Remus faintly. "My heart stopped beating for a whole two minutes."

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"I'd of been shocked too, to be perfectly honest." said Harry with a smile.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

"I can't say anything to that, I normally eat the head off the gingerbread cookies I make." said Mrs. McFinn with a giggle. "I don't know, it always made me feel a little better."

"You're insane." said Dr. Clark with a laugh.

"Says the man who dunks his chocolate chip cookies in cola." said Mrs. McFinn with a smirk.

"That's disgusting." said Hermione turning green.

"Don't knock it." said Dr. Clark blushing.

End of dialogue set.

Eighteenth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"I'd do my best to make sure someone around you knew how to use the Patronus. Though that might take some hard work teaching a few seventh year Gryffindors how to do it." said Remus thoughtfully.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

"Don't talk with your mouth full, dear." said Mrs. McFinn and Mrs. Weasley.

"I'm getting attacked from both sides." said Harry with a smile.

End of dialogue set.

"You sounded like James, he cared more about winning than being concerned about breaking his neck." said Remus shaking his head.
"If you had told me what it was, I'd of told you it wasn't strong enough." said Remus.

"That one seems a bit stronger." said Tonks. "But it's not strong enough."

"You're losing again boy." said Snape darkly.

Sirius sat up in the bowl quickly. "What?" He looked down at Harry, who decided to face somewhere else.

"Beats the hell out of slapping." said Harry.
"I did see." said Remus quietly.

"You know, you really take the 'butch' attitude out of people." said Harry with a smirk.

Sirius sniggered.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

"I wasn't all together sure I wanted to tell him right then and there." said Remus.

End of dialogue set.

Dialogue line.

"You're going to kill yourself!" said Madam Pomfrey.

Twenty-fourth paragraph.

Twenty-fifth paragraph, second sentence.

"That was a great memory!" said Colin happily.

End of twenty-fifth paragraph.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

"Very observant." said Remus.

End of dialogue set.

Twenty-sixth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"Well, we know it worked this time." said George.
"Yeah, YOU CAN TELL BY THE YELLING!" shouted Fred.

Twenty-seventh paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"Thank god you were there." said Mrs. McFinn hugging Harry tightly and looking at Remus.

Twenty-eighth first sentence, third comma.

"A mile with no warm up run." said Harry.

"I'll admit, those hurt." said Nightstrike.

End of twenty-eighth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"More than a start!" said Madam Bones proudly.

Dialogue line.

"You're a glutton for punishment." said Bill.

Dialogue line.

Twenty-ninth paragraph.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

"You'd better believe it." said Madam Pomfrey.

End of dialogue set.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.
"Even recovering from a pseudo-Dementor attack, and his mind is still going." said Lionus with a smirk.

Thirtieth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set, first dash.

"I thought I crossed into dangerous waters." said Harry faintly.

End of dialogue set.

Thirty-first paragraph.

Dialogue line.

Thirty-second paragraph, first sentence, third comma.

"I hate to eat and run." said Harry with a smirk.

Thirty-second paragraph, end of first sentence.

"Twelve years, it was still a touchy subject." said Remus.

End of thirty-second paragraph.

Thirty-third paragraph, second sentence.

The Great Hall became totally silent.

End of thirty-third paragraph.

Harry had to look down at the floor, to avoid the the sympathetic gazes.

Dialogue set, second sentence.
The Rangers looked at the boy with slight pity in their eyes. To think, a thirteen year old has to be that rational.

End of dialogue set.

There you go. thought the Rangers fondly to themselves.

End of thirty-fourth paragraph.

Thirty-fifth paragraph, third sentence.

"That's not hard," said Alicia, she however did not see Cho glare at her fiercely, "With Harry on the team."

Thirty-fifth paragraph, fifth sentence, second sentence.

"I still wanted to defend myself, I didn't care what it took." said Harry.

Thirty-fifth paragraph, end of fifth sentence.

"Did it prove to be too much?" said Zacharias with a smirk.

"Not really, I just had to stay up about an hour later than normal." said Harry shrugging.

Thirty-fifth paragraph end of sixth sentence.

"She was scaring us." said Ron and Harry together.

End of thirty-fifth paragraph.

"She made a poor little first year girl cry." said Fred.

"Terrible." said George. "Poor little thing only wanted to tell her that Hermione was sitting on her homework."

Dialogue set, second sentence.
Snape smirked to himself.

End of dialogue set.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set.

"How did you do all that?" asked Ernie.

"You'll find out." said Hermione softly with a smile.

Thirty-sixth paragraph, first sentence.

"I didn't feel like staying up to two in the morning with it." said Harry.

End of thirty-sixth paragraph.

Dialogue set, third sentence.

"I got shirty with him?" said Professor McGonagall incredulously, to the laughter of the students in the Hall.

Dialogue set, fourth sentence.

"He does." said Dean.

Dialogue set, seventh sentence.

"I would have beaten him black and blue." said Sirius with a hollow laugh.

Dialogue set, eighth sentence.

"You did, you nimrod." said Alicia in shock.
"I was afraid you were going to keep it a bit longer to spite him." said Harry with a guilty smile.

"It crossed my mind." said Professor McGonagall.

Dr. Nicodemus stared at the two of them. "How long has this been? Did you even....If you lot didn't have the time, to check it’s curses, I believe the Ministry would have checked it for you and gotten it back to the boy in a week."

"We wanted to be absolutely sure nothing was wrong with it." said McGonagall.

"So how many hours total did you work on it? Taking into consideration all the different curses, if the both of you had sat down and worked on it together, it only would have taken you, maybe two weeks." said Dr. Nicodemus sternly. "But judging from what the book says, it's been almost two months."

Professor Flitwick and McGonagall shifted uncomfortably in their seats.

Thirty-eighth paragraph, second sentence.

"It takes most wizards years to make a corporeal Patronus." said Madam Bones.

End of thirty-eighth paragraph.

Sirius held onto Harry even tighter, while Remus rubbed the back of Harry's neck.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

"Hey! Where is the praise for even getting a smokey Patronus?" said Sirius shortly.

"You interrupted it!" said Remus.

End of dialogue set.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

"There you go." said Remus.

End of dialogue set.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set, first sentence.

"That's a grown up way of saying. I'll be to make sure you don't die." said Harry with a laugh.

End of dialogue set.

Thirty-ninth paragraph.
"I was tired and woozy, that's my excuse!" said Harry throwing his hands up.

"You don't trust him!" said Fred with a mock sob.

"Once a Gryffindor, always a Gryffindor." said Harry with laugh.

"You don't want to know." said Nightstrike.

"It is not a pleasant sight." said Tempest, who couldn't resist a shudder.

"Weirdo." said Sirius leaning away from him.

"On my only nice shirt." said Remus with laugh.
"I bought you another one!" said Harry.

"Oh, that was you?" said Remus with a mischievous smile.

"It had my name on the card." said Harry.

"Never got the card." said Remus.

"Not my fault." said Harry.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set.

"And Umbridge here wanted you to suffer that." said Lionus.

Dumbledore glared fiercely at Umbridge, who cringed under his gaze.

Forty-fourth paragraph.

Sirius gave a full body shiver.

Forty-fifth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"I didn't...." said Harry.

"I know, I know." said Sirius with a smile.

Dialogue line.

"No." said Harry. "Not anymore."

Dialogue line.

Forty-sixth paragraph, first sentence.

"I would have, for about twenty seconds." said Remus with a smile.

End of forty-sixth paragraph.
McGonagall cripped her chest lightly. "That reminds of what happened weeks ago."

The school cheered loudly.

"How nice." said George.

"Always a morale booster." said Fred.

"See! Give boys a little time and they'll see common sense." said Mr. Weasley.

"We always knew she was trying to help, but every time we wanted to bury the hatchet, that 'stripping' word kept coming back." said Ron.

"You wrote down the passwords? Why would you write them down?" asked Bill.

"Easier for me to remember them." said Neville sheepishly.
"He must have seen you thirty times, just on your own! How the hell does he not remember you." said Ron shaking his head.

"How did you get him to tell you?" said Harry in shock.

"I begged." said Neville, "And promised to show him where there was a nearby dragon tapestry or picture."

"Probably wanted to know where not to go." whispered Ron with a smirk.

"Don't crowd it, you'll break it." said Charlie.

"And the person holding it." said Madam Pomfrey.

"In the post." said George.

"Not on your life." said Fred.

"I just got it two seconds ago!" said George, impersonating Harry.

"Which aren't all that bad to be honest." said Angelina. "But they aren't in the same league as Nimbuses or Firebolts."
"You're kinder than what I would be." said Sirius.

"She was trying to keep Harry safe, Ron." said Mrs. Weasley.

"I know, but still." said Ron.

"I'd of used any excuse to hold it, didn't get the chance with everyone else being so grabby." said Ron.

"You really should have dropped Muggle Studies at that point, it didn't make any sense." said Harry.

"I want to finish what I started. I always have." said Hermione.

Harry and Ron both coughed "Divination." Hermione turned pink.
"Listen to Harry, like you for him, he has your best interest at heart." said Bill.

"Don't you like it?" said Bill.

"It looks bad, but it's not really." said Harry. "It just takes a bit of time to get used to it."

"On Hermione's point of view." said Harry.

"What the f...?" said Charlie.

"CHARLES!" scolded Mrs. Weasley.

"I thought he lost his mind." said Hermione faintly.

End of chapter.
"You know Miss Granger, it's a good thing that Scabbers was Peter Pettigrew." said McGonagall.

"W-Why do you say that, ma'am?" said Hermione faintly.

"Because Crookshanks would have been sent home, and you would have been banned for bringing a pet into Hogwarts." said Dumbledore sternly. "You promised Ron that Crookshanks would have stayed in your dorm the entire time."

Hermione looked down guiltily.

"Though we cannot punish you with point deductions, I think an essay, three feet long, on the responsibility of being a pet owner is suffice." said Dumbledore gravely. "Due Friday I think."

"Yes sir." said Hermione sadly.

"Who'd like to read now?" asked Alicia.

"I'll read it now." said Charlie.

He took the book and read aloud "Thirteenth chapter."

"Damn, I should have volunteered." said Lee sourly.

Chapter End Notes

Thanks for reading, please review
"Frankly, I'm siding with Ron." said Bill. "It wasn't his fault Crookshanks was in the dorm."

"Us too." said Fred and George.

"I didn't even want to risk attempting it." said Harry. "I remember one fight, I got in the middle of it, I get smacked in the face with a cushion and the gut with a bag of dungbombs."

"What was it over?" said Hannah.

"Hermione was missing a book, Ron took it to be funny." said Harry.

"Yeah, that bothers me too." said Kingsley quietly.

"I think, Miss Granger, it was you who had to prove that Scabbers was alive." said Professor Sprout.

Hermione looked a little put out.

"You got to give her some credit though, she did apologize." said Harry with a smile.
"Which should never have been there in the first place." said Ernie. “And besides the house-elves would have cleaned the sheets at least thirty times by then.”

“House-elves?” asked Mrs. McFinn.

“You’ll find out.” said Harry with a smile.

End of second paragraph.

"And he had every right to be." said George quietly.

"Yeah, I wouldn't want a giant cat on my head." said Fred.

Third paragraph.

"Now what did he do to you?" asked a third year Hufflepuff.

Dialogue set, second sentence.

"I was being logical." said Harry faintly.

End of dialogue set.

"I was more concerned about Crookshanks eating someone else's pet." said Harry shrugging.

Fourth paragraph.

"I never really understood that, you never really liked him." said Hermione absently.

"I don't have much, so when I lose it..." said Ron darkly. Hermione turned pink and looked down at the floor.

Dialogue set.

"I was aiming for a laugh!" said Fred.

"Well, you missed the mark." said Bill.

"Yeah, not our best work." said George.
"Really not our best work." said George.

"Don't look at us like that, if we had known, we'd of been on Ron's side." said Fred as Hermione looked vindicated at the words of the twins.

"Well, that was easy." said Charlie. "Though, I have to admit it, I could have an emotional about-face if I were to ride a top of the line broom."

"We were happy to get it." said Angelina, "Boosted our morale."

"Her monologue on brooms can go on for hours." mumbled Professor Flitwick to Professor Sprout.
"That's nice." said Cho with a smirk.

"Well, they are one of the better brooms, but it's not in the same league as the Nimbus or Firebolts." said Charlie honestly.

"You scared me, I've heard of people turning so sharply that their neck snaps!" said Alicia blushing heavily.

"Don't turn on your broom like that again, then." said Mrs. McFinn worriedly.

Harry smiled.

"You should have seen Wood, he was crying, out of pure joy." said Katie.

"It was disgusting." said Fred.

"No school team can contend with a Firebolt rider." said Lionus with a smirk.

"That was so cool." said Ron.
"Wasn't your knee." said Katie blushing.

Thirteenth paragraph.

"One year he told me I climbed on my broom wrong." said George rolling his eyes.

"It was hilarious, though." said Fred.

"How was it funny?" asked Colin.

"He tried showing me, fell right on his rear." said George.

"Such swear words we've never heard." said Fred covering his ears dramatically.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"It was already amazing for someone your age." said Madam Bones and Remus.

Dialogue line.

"That would be an understatement." said McGonagall, knowing her mentor and colleague all too well.

"I would have made sure no Dementor was left alive around Hogwarts." said Dumbledore darkly.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue set.

"Oh no..." said Madam Hooch covering her eyes.

"We aren't spring chickens anymore, no one can begrudge you a rest." said Professor Flitwick patting her arm gently. "Besides, knowing your hearing, if something were to go wrong, you'd be up and hexing anyone in a heartbeat."

Dialogue line.

Fourteenth paragraph, first sentence.

"I was making sure he didn't kill himself." said Harry.
"That and you were showing me some really cool moves." said Ron.

End of fourteenth paragraph.

"It was Harry's fault, he didn't want to wake you." said Ron passing the buck swiftly.

"She was up really early that morning," said Harry. "I saw her working on maintaining the school brooms, I thought she needed a break."

Fifteenth paragraph, first sentence.

"Normal guy talk." said Bill with a smirk.

End of fifteenth paragraph.

Sixteenth paragraph.

"Maybe you should have a Healer look at your heart, it doing some strange things." said Dennis.

"I've already looked at it, and fixed it." reminded Dr. Nicodemus.

Dialogue line.

Seventeenth paragraph.

Eighteenth paragraph.

"How did he get outside?" asked Hermione wonderingly.

"Where did you last see him?" asked Lavender.

"In the Common Room. I had to go to the library and I left him alone." said Hermione plainly.

The school groaned. "Thank god I didn't have a pet rat." muttered a sixth year Gryffindor.

Dialogue set.

"You would have hit him with a rock?" screeched Hermione.

"I thought he killed my rat, so yeah, I was going to hit him with a rock." shot back Ron.

"That doesn’t’ matter!" said Hermione.
"Miss Granger!" said McGonagall. "Tonight, after dinner you will be doing lines with me."

"But..." said Hermione looking bewildered.

"No buts, Miss Granger." said McGonagall. "Tonight, and if this attitude continues, it will be another night."

Hermione never looked more confused in her whole life. And her expression didn't get any better when Ron stood up, walked over to his oldest brothers and sat down in an armchair his brother Bill conjured up.

Dialogue line.

"So much for trying to make him feel better." said Harry.

Nineteenth paragraph, second sentence.

"Trelawny really got to you." said a seventh year Gryffindor.

Sirius shuffled his feet nervously.

End of nineteenth paragraph.

"I know that you're as tall as I am now, but..." said Sirius as he dragged Harry over to where he was and placed him gently in his own lap.

"What are you doing?" asked Harry, with a raised eyebrow and crossed his arms.

"Cope with it." said Sirius. "I'm not letting you go."

"You're a nut." said Harry shaking his head, but he had a faint smile.

Twentieth paragraph, first sentence.

"Yeah, like I can't protect my own broomstick." said Harry, "Though I will admit, when everyone started crowding around on the fourth floor, it was nice to have that wall to protect my broom."

End of twentieth paragraph.

"They were hoping you wouldn't get your broomstick back in time." drawled Snape.
Mr. and Mrs. Diggory beamed proudly at the mention of their son, though their eyes were filled with water.

"You can't sabotage a Firebolt by holding it." said Fred rolling his eyes.

Percy blushed as everyone began to laugh.

"What would you have done in order to get her ten galleons?" asked Charlie with his eyebrows quirked.

"I would have sent the money." said Harry with a smile.

Percy turned to Harry, his face red and looking exceptionally embarrassed.

"He handled the broom just fine a few hours ago." said Alicia with a smile.
Draco cringed under the many furious glares sent his way.

Dialogue line.

Twenty-fifth paragraph.

"That and plotting for something later." said Ron bitterly.

Twenty-sixth paragraph, third sentence.

"I love that adrenaline rush." said most of the Quidditch players.

End of twenty-sixth paragraph.

"You'd better believe it." said Remus patting Harry's back.

Dialogue set.

"Couldn't believe it." said George.

"A short peptalk." said Fred.

"It was AMAZING!" said the twins together.

Twenty-seventh paragraph, fourth sentence, first comma.

"A lot shorter now." said Ron with a smirk.

End of twenty-seventh paragraph.

Cho began to giggle and blush.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Twenty-eighth paragraph.
Lee quickly stood up, hurried over to Charlie and waited for his line to show up.

Dialogue set.

Charlie laughed, "Nice commercial."

Dialogue line.

"What made you think you could do that with her right there?" asked Tonks with a smile.

"It was a passionate outburst." said Lee defensively.

"It's not a girl." said Terry Boot.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

Dialogue line.

"You and Professor McGonagall go so well together." said Sirius. "Too bad you couldn't make your commentary as entertaining." he added to Remus.

“Oh I don't know...I think yelling out that Hufflepuff scored when it was a Ravenclaw and Gryffindor game was pretty amusing.” said Remus with a smirk.

“Sad thing is...Hufflepuff actually started to cheer loudly first. Took them a while...” said Sirius laughing out loud.

Twenty-ninth paragraph.

Dialogue line.

"You just barely got there in time." said Alicia.

"Hey, wasn't my fault I had a Bludger aimed at me too." said Fred.

"I'm surprised though." said Angelina.

"What?" said Katie.

"Harry can tell the twins apart, even when they're wearing the same outfits and wearing helmets." said Angelina. "No one else can."

Fred and George looked at each other in wonder.
Sirius all the while was sniggering.

“Grow up.” groaned Remus.

Thirtieth paragraph.

Thirty-first paragraph.

Thirty-second paragraph, first sentence, first semi-colon.

"Tell me it didn't hit you." said Dr. Clark nervously.

End of thirty-second paragraph.

Thirty-third paragraph.

"Good boy!" said Sirius appreciatively.

Dialogue set.

Dialogue line.

"Oooh....she's yelling, not good." said Remus covering his eyes.

Thirty-fourth paragraph.

Thirty-fifth paragraph.

"Oh come on!" said a first year Gryffindor.

Dialogue line.

"Yeah!" said a few guys in Gryffindor, who shrunk quickly when their girlfriends glared at them.

Thirty-sixth paragraph, second sentence.

