In Alio Loco

by Sensoo

Summary

It never occurred to you that you would inevitably fall for him. Just like it never occurred to you that maybe it could end well.

In which the reader is grieving, slow on the uptake, and not taking the shortcut to recovery. Because there is no shortcut.
The title translates: In Another Place (German and Latin). I just wanted to write smut. I ended up with an entire headcanon and a massive fic touching on grieving issues. This is my first Overwatch fic and first full story in second person. It got to the point where it wrote itself. Also really self-indulgent. I'm calling it my therapy fic.

See the end of the work for more notes.
Chapter 1

Chapter Summary

The beginning and it's all original characters.

In your defense, you never meant to join Blackwatch. You didn't know what the hell that was and if you had at the time, you probably would have run in the other direction and thrown yourself in front of the nearest speeding train.

You didn't survive the worst of the Omnic Crisis by being a hero. You got by doing a little of this and little of that and a whole lot of ducking and running. But you survived, which was more than anyone else in your hometown could say. Smuggling, couriering, and occasionally a good old-fashioned heist: your work wasn't exactly legal, but there wasn't enough government around to care.

You could have gone on like that, scraping by, except you couldn't mind your own business. Midway through a courier job, you found a couple of guys in blue versus a scrapton of rogue humanoid omnics on an abandoned stretch of highway. Luckily, you came up behind the omnics. That gave you the perfect opportunity to turn around and go back the way you came.

You hesitated. You remembered what was left of your hometown.

"Hold formation! Can't let'em pass here. Too late to evacuate the town!" The squad leader had a voice like a hammer striking iron. She stood at the head of the group, she fired a fancy-looking assault rifle, all shine and circuits. There were others behind her. But she was the one that left the impression. She fired and bullets arced across the battlefield, dropping her target where it stood. She kept up the barrage, the firefight drowning out her actual words.

Her soldiers worked in tight formation. Two shooting prone, two shooting upright, and one manning the barriers.

She wasn't tall, her skin was very brown, and her head was shaved. She turned and half her face was puckered with burn scars. When she looked across the battlefield, you didn't see a lick of fear on her face, just cold determination. Even sustaining heavy fire, she made you believe they had a chance.

You counted at least a dozen robots left. Then you shouldered your 30-06 bolt-action rifle and began shooting. The CZ 557 was old, not a great firing rate, but those big old bullets were meant for elephants and tore through armor-plating like a dream. You had to move fast, because once those robots got a bead on you, they shot back with shinier more explosive firepower. One hit and the concrete highway barriers were powder on your shoulders. You slid across the ground, trying to aim on your back. You had limited ammo and a long-range weapon. A couple times, the smarter ones aimed above you, almost pancaking you with bits of overpass.

But that gave the people in blue a chance to regroup. They had discipline and more importantly shielding. They could do this all night. You wouldn't last much longer.
Already you were soaked in sweat and covered in dirt. Only a few minutes had passed, but they felt like an eternity. You knew what you were carrying. And you also knew what would happen if you got hit carrying it.

"Fire in the hole!"

You threw the frag grenades, illegal mods and all, into the mix. Then you backed up a bit, but not quite far enough. The resulting explosion left you with no cargo, no eyebrows, and a bad case of tinnitus. But the omnics were scrapped. Little fires licked at the metal and you idly wondered how much you get for the salvage.

It took you a moment to realize what you'd done. You hadn't gotten all the omnics by yourself, but you'd thrown yourself into the middle of a firefight you had no business being near. You sat down and lit a cigarette. You didn't normally smoke - cigarettes were better currency than luxury - but blowing up a dozen omnics on a whim called for some kind of celebration.

The squad leader stalked up to you. Up close, you realized she was even smaller than you thought, and easily over fifty. But she stood like she had a bar of steel in her spine, and she walked like she was just in time for the execution. Somewhere in the back of your head, you felt the urge to stand and salute. But you quashed it and settled for a casual nod of acknowledgement.

"Are you insane?" Her voice was rough with dust. She didn't actually sound angry. She seemed genuinely curious.

You shrugged. You had had a lot of smart ass retorts. None of them seemed appropriate.

She stared hard at your rifle. The flames and smoke gave her scars a hellish cast.

"What are you doing out here?"

"I was delivering a package." You wave a hand at the smoking remnants of robot pieces. "But it got damaged in transit."

She studied you, dark eyes sharp in the dusk light. "Thank you for the assist."

"You're welcome." Her uniform, with its Overwatch insignia, told you everything you needed to know. Professional. Hardass. Big damn hero.

Her gaze went back to your gun. After your cigarette was gone, she finally sighed. "That belongs in a museum."

You shrugged. She wasn't wrong, but it was the best gun you had.

"Lieutenant Sato," she snapped. A tall slim man appeared beside her. His skin glowed golden in the twilight. He had sharp cheekbones and a playful mouth, and he moved like a shadow through the smoke. His black hair was slicked back. But it was the excitement in his eyes that really caught you off guard.

"Yes, Captain Patel?" His voice was lightly accented, and smooth.

"Gather the others. Looks like we're heading back out tonight." Captain Patel turned to look at the smoldering wreckage. "Do I want to ask where you got those?"

"Probably not," you said, wondering what you were going to tell your employers. "They weren't mine. I was holding them for...people I don't actually know."
Lieutenant Sato's mouth curved in a grin. You liked the line of his jaw, the brightness in his eyes. He really was pretty, especially in uniform.

"What exactly do you do, Ms-?" Captain Patel did not look nearly as amused.

"I'm an import-export specialist."

Captain Patel looked you over once more. "That is the fanciest term for "smuggler" that I've heard in this country. Look, I'll be blunt. You're an idiot, but a lucky one. I don't know how else you'd survive on your own. But you obviously have some combat experience and more balls than brains. Join up: I can offer you better money, better guns, and health insurance."

You blinked. Maybe a few times. Overwatch? You? Was this some kind of joke? Or were things really that desperate? You looked around the desolate landscape that used to be a thriving city. Well, things did look kind of desperate.

"What she's saying is she's impressed, Lucky Strike. You have potential." Lieutenant Sato regarded your gun with laughing eyes. You squinted at him. It wasn't mockery, you realized, but genuine delight.

If you want to be honest with yourself, it's Sato that cinched the deal. Health insurance and salaries were pipe dreams, things you weren't sure really existed. But fancier weapons and sexy men? You weren't a big damn hero, but you knew a good deal when you saw one.

"Guess I'll have to learn to salute."

Captain Patel rolled her eyes and walked off to check on her squad, muttering about how the gods favored idiots.

Lieutenant Sato lingered.

"I'm Shin," he said.

You gave him your name.

"Nah, you're Lucky Strike," he said, smirking. You saw a very unprofessional hunger in his eyes and you shivered. That look stayed with you for weeks; the nickname has lasted much longer.

You got in their transport, filled out the forms, and got shipped off to basic.

That was a trip in itself: a haircut, some new clothes, and a crash course in how to be a soldier. To be honest, you weren't a great soldier, too underhanded and disrespectful of the command structure. But desperate times called for lower standards.

Captain Patel requisitioned you, as it was her recommendation that got you in this mess. Then her unit was seconded to Blackwatch. Ten weeks later, you were transferred to a miserable little listening post in the Yukon as a "probationary" Blackwatch agent. No one seemed sure what "probationary" status meant for a Blackwatch agent. Captain Patel joked that it meant if you washed out, they'd have to take you out back with a shovel. At least you were pretty sure she was Captain Patel wasn't just a tough little old lady. She was faster, stronger, and had better endurance than you. In fact, you'd seen her arm wrestle Agent Valdez and win. You heard rumors of "SEP," and you believed them. But you'd believe it if they told you she was an omnic wearing old-lady skin. That kind of toughness didn't happen organically.

Sergeant Nwazue was from Numbani and specialized in demolitions. Almost monk-like in her focus, it was hard to tell if she was working or asleep. She wasn't too impressed that you had no idea what kind of modded grenades you were carrying around. Middle-aged and rail thin, she had most of her fingers and all of her limbs, a testament to her skill.

Dr. Razafindrandriatsimaniry, thankfully, just went by Simon. He wasn't out of his twenties yet, but drank a lot of tea and complained about the weather. It didn't matter where you were, the weather was never good enough. He was the medic, and you were careful not to step on his toes, because he was fussy and you were accident-prone.

Agent Valdez didn't talk. You weren't sure if it was because he wouldn't or he couldn't. But there were rope scars on his throat, and his fists were the size of your head. So you didn't push it. Probably in his mid-thirties, he kept his black hair close-cropped. It looked a little silly, because he was so massive. You reached the hip of his power armor, while wearing shoes. He was smart though, spending most his time on the upkeep his armor. He had some basic hacking skills too. It was always fascinating to see him at a keyboard.

Agent Lao didn't shut up. The youngest in the unit and not yet out of her teens, she liked to blast dubstep during combat. She rigged the energy barriers to resonate certain tones when hit. Under automatic fire, you could have a dance party. It was ingenious, if amazingly annoying. Lao was also a hacker; she moved at twice the speed of everyone else and that was before the coffee.

And of course, there was Lieutenant Shin Sato, Captain Patel's second-in-command. He was the stealthy one, a little too good at turning up in the shadows. He was as deadly with a sniper rifle as he was in hand to hand combat. The air rippled when he moved. You had to remind yourself not to stare, because half the time, he would pop up directly behind you.

He had everyone but the captain calling you "Lucky Strike" by the time you'd come to Canada.

Besides the fact you were in the middle of nowhere, it wasn't so bad. Three meals a day, a roof over your head, and all the beatings you could take. Captain Patel's unit was one of two stationed here for guard duty and patrol. There was plenty of time for other activities. You started a nice side business in "acquisitions" for base personnel. Nothing illegal, because you still weren't sure about the shovel, but hard to get stuff: organic macadamia nuts, real ouzo, Moldovan porn mags, etc. If Captain Patel wasn't making you study strategy, Agent Lao harangued you about cyber security and stole your beer. Sergeant Nwazue mostly gave you safety lectures on how to properly handle incendiary devices, and it was obvious she thought you were an idiot. Agent Valdez showed you how to mod energy weapons after you smuggled him some nice scotch. And Shin liked to throw you around the practice mat.

You could kick Agent Lao's ass and that was about it. She was fast, but you fought dirty. Captain Patel threw you across the room more than once and looked disgusted if you couldn't get back up. You tapped out any time Agent Valdez got you on the ground. Even Simon knew some archaic martial art with nerve pinches, and one time it took you a day to regain feeling in your arms. Shin just played with you. Whether he was throwing you onto the mat or pinning you under his hips, he made a game out of it. He didn't let you win, but he took the time to show you what you'd done wrong. And if he held you against the mat for half a second longer than was decent, you didn't complain.

"Where do you get this stuff?" Shin laughed, sipping the whiskey. Everyone was in his room for the weekly poker game, sans Captain Patel. Dance music you didn't recognize drifted through the speakers.

"I traded an entire carton of cigarettes for that, so don't drink it all." You stole the bottle back, but couldn't muster enough anger to glare. Blush streaked his cheeks and his eyes were bright. His hair black held up without gel. It was much longer than regulation and you wanted to run your fingers through it. It was worth a bottle of good booze to see him like this.

"Where are you getting cartons of cigarettes?" Shin shook his head. "Someone check the armory to make sure she isn't selling the base out from under us."

"I would never," you said, indignant. "I traded fresh rabbit for the cigarettes. One of the techs really likes rabbit, but he's no good at hunting and he..."

"Oi, pay attention to the game," Lao smacked her cards against the table. She was losing. Nwazue had the most chips. She eyed the whiskey and you handed it to her. She poured herself a few fingers. "Damn. It looks like you are good for something, Lucky Strike, cuz it sure as hell ain't cards." She passed the bottle to Valdez who passed it to Simon. Simon was losing too and he took a swig straight from the bottle.

"Fuck!" Simon glared at his hand. "This is ridiculous." He took another drink. "Good liquor though."

"Give!" Lao tried to grab the bottle out of Simon's hand but he passed it back to you. You poured yourself another drink, watching Shin out of the corner of your eye. He nibbled on his lower lip and concentrated on his cards. He looked so serious that you struggled not to laugh.

Unsurprisingly, Nwazue won the next three rounds. You were pretty sure she cheated, but you could never figure out how. It didn't matter. She collected her winnings and sauntered off to the rec room for more booze. Valdez nodded at you and helped Lao up. You slipped them both chocolate bars - her to go away, and him to take her away. You weren't sure if they were sleeping together, but that wasn't any of your business. Simon staggered to his feet, looking warily between you and Shin.

"Don't do anything to end up in the infirmary, because I'm not going to be there," he said. "And I doubt you want to explain anything to Georgie." Georgie, the base doctor, wasn't know for his sympathetic bedside manner.

"Don't know what you're talking about," you said.

"Not a clue," Shin chimed in.

You sipped your whiskey, very aware of Shin's warmth beside you. His room was bigger than yours with its own bathroom.

"Should I-" You looked up to see Shin studying your face. The tipsy ease was gone from his stance. He focused on you, an almost predatory light in his eyes.

"If you want to go, Lucky Strike, now's the time," his voice was rough. "Otherwise you're spending the night here."

"Oh," was all you managed to say. You stared at Shin. He was really too pretty to be a soldier. His face was angular and elegant with sculpted cheekbones and striking cat eyes. Give him some hair gel and tight pants and he could have passed for a Japanese pop star. Somewhere in the back of your mind, you remembered there were rules about fraternization. But if you didn't get caught...

You carefully got out of your chair and pushed it in. Shin stiffened and backed away, averting his eyes. The tension in his shoulders made your neck ache. You licked your lips, went to the door, and locked it. No sooner than it clicked, and you were pushed against the cold wall. Groaning, Shin turned you around, fingers tangled in your hair. His mouth pressed against yours and a muscled thigh spread your legs.

He tasted like whiskey and smelled like leather. You moaned softly as he broke the kiss and went for your neck. You squirmed against him as he sucked.

"Goddamnit, Lucky Strike, you really had me worried there."

"Just wondering if you were ever gonna make a move, or just sit there and eyefuck me for the rest of the year."

He exhaled slowly. "I'm higher ranked than you. Gotta make sure you really wanted it and I'm not...abusing my power."

The thought warmed you. This kind of decency was not something you took for granted. You weren't just attracted to him, you genuinely liked him. "You don't scare me, Shin."

"Good," he murmured, and nipped your shoulder. "Because that means you don't know what you're getting into." He peeled your shirt off, kissing a trail down your breasts. You felt the lightest touch on your back and suddenly your bra was on the floor.

Shin smirked up at you flicking a nipple with his tongue.

You groaned and tugged at his shirt. "Off."

"You've seen me shirtless."

"Yeah, every time we were on the mat, showoff. Even Lao was starting to notice."

"I can't help that you're dense." Shin kissed your jaw. "Soft," he murmured, rolling your breasts in his hands. "I planned to take my time, but now I just want to be inside you."

He pulled his shirt off, exposing a lean muscled torso. A long faded scar trailed up his side, the skin rough under your fingers. Already barefoot, you worked your pants off.

"Damnit, do you normally go commando?" He groaned.
"Guess you'll have to find out," you said, smirking at him.

His fingers rubbed your slit. You sighed as one dipped inside. He paused and grit his teeth.

"You're already so wet," he dropped to his knees and his tongue flicked across your clit. You whined then, as he began to finger fuck you, his tongue still working you over.

'Shin," you moaned.

"I love how you say my name, so needy. And you taste so good. Fuck, I'm going to eat you later, Lucky. I want you now."

"What's stopping you?"

Shin unfastened his pants. You licked your lips at the sight of his cock. It was pretty to look at, long, well-formed, and uncircumcised. He stroked himself a few times preening under your admiration. Then he reached into his pocket and opened a foil packet. Deftly he rolled the condom down his length. You were slightly disappointed, but even if you had a birth control implant, you wouldn't complain about him being responsible.

He pressed you against the wall, lifting one of your legs against his hip. You wrapped it around his waist instinctively. He sighed and you cried out as he slid the head inside. "Damn you're tight." He rocked his hips, easing in inch by inch. It wasn't fast enough.

You rested your head in the crook his neck. "You don't have to go slow."

"Don't want to be too rough with you, baby. Not yet."

You bit him.

He growled and slammed his hips into yours. Whining, you felt his length bottom out. He stretched you nicely, hitting that sensitive spot inside you. Pinned against the wall you squirmed on his cock.

"I was trying to be nice, Lucky Strike," Shin hissed.

"Don't call me that in bed."

He growled your name. "We're not in bed, baby. I've got you against the wall, and you're making it real clear that you want me to go rough."

"Put up or shut up, Shin."

"You say that, but next time I'll tie you up and fuck you senseless." The threat had you clenching. He narrowed his eyes and pulled out leaving you empty and needy. Then he snapped his hips upward and filled you to the brim.

"Fuck!" You snarled.

Shin leaned in. "Safe word?"

"Rabbit," you said, belatedly realizing that goading Shin into rough sex without a clue as to what he considered rough was unwise.

He lifted your other leg and suddenly you were bent in half, pinned against the wall, with no leverage. His hard thrusts went deep and you clung to him, panting. "Look at that tight little "pussy taking me." He sped up, pounding you as you began to wail. "Love those cute little noises you're making. Bet you want the whole base to hear me fucking you."

"Shin," you whined.

He kissed you hard.

"What do you want, baby? You want it harder? You feel that?" He purred, driving deeper into you, his cockhead bumping your cervix. "Not enough for your slutty little pussy? Don't worry, Lucky. I'm not one of those punks you used to run with. I'll have you begging long before I'm tired."

It had been while. You couldn't remember the last time someone got you this hot. You were right on the edge and you clawed his back, trying to get him to push you over.

"What do you want, Lucky?" he chuckled. "You want to me to make you cum?"

"Fucking hell, you talk too much Shin," you gritted your teeth.

"Mmm, but I feel you clench every time I say something filthy." He reached down, fingers circling your clit. He captured your mouth as he rubbed, his thrusts getting faster, but still controlled. Shin wasn't sloppy.

You whined, then, legs tensing as he drove into you, giving you precisely what you wanted, his fingers stroking your clit with just the right amount of friction. The pressure built. Caught between Shin and the wall, you writhed as he fucked you over the edge, your eyes rolling back. He just kept thrusting through your orgasm.

"I can feel you milking my cock," he groaned. "How the hell are you still so tight?" You moaned into the crook of his neck and sunk your teeth into his shoulder. He grunted but held you.

Shin waited for the tremors to stop before lowering you to the ground. You sat there, trying to catch your breath, eyes widening at Shin's still-erect cock, now shiny from your juices.

"Come on," he helped you up on shaky legs and pushed you onto the bed. You landed on your stomach. Shin came up behind you and pushed your ass up in the air and spread your legs. One hand fisted your hair and pushed your head down into the mattress. He didn't warn you, he just grabbed your hips hard enough to bruise and thrust back inside. You moaned, eyes rolling back in your head at the sensation of being filled again. Your walls were still sensitive, and Shin started at a hard pace, his hips slapping against your ass with each stroke.

"Not so mouthy now, are you?" He smacked your ass and you squeaked in protest.

"Fuck," you panted, your whimpers muffled by his mattress. You gripped the sheets, trying to push your hips back onto him. His breathing was rough and the bed squeaked, but what really got you was the wet sound of flesh on flesh. Your thighs were soaked with your own juices and you could hear his cock sliding in and out of you.

The hand in your hair released and suddenly he was stroking your overly sensitive clit. You raised you head and looked back over your shoulder. Shin's jaw tensed in concentration, his eyes met yours and he grinned wryly, the fingers on your clit speeding up.

"I didn't say you could get up." He leaned forward and nipped your shoulder. His teeth worried the side of your neck and you clenched around him in response. He laughed roughly and pinched your clit. "You look hot like this and you feel so good around me, Lucky. Love watching those cute tits bounce while I'm pushing against this tight ass." He paused, running his fingers down your spine. "You're practically gushing around my cock. Enjoying yourself?"

"You're stretching me out," your voice came out hoarser than you expected. He began to thrust again. "I'm going to be so sore tomorrow."

"Mmm," he said. "That's too bad. Not going to stop now. I like watching you cum."

"Don't want you to stop." You gripped the sheets and pressed back against him, taking him to the hilt. "I want to feel your cock twitching inside me when you cum. I want to hear you come undone."

At that he groaned your name, his hips jerking. He rubbed your clit faster. A second wave of pleasure hit you, sharper than before and almost painful to your inflamed nerves. Bucking your hips, you rode it out, high-pitched whines coming from the back of your throat.

"Shin," you panted his name as your second orgasm subsided. "Come on baby."

He snarled and his strokes grew frantic. Swearing, he ground against you, fingers digging into your hips.

You flipped your hair out of your face and grinned over your shoulder at him. He finally pushed in deep and you could feel his thighs trembling against you as he came. Taut and dripping with sweat, he was beautiful. His eyes were half-closed and he slowed his strokes before pulling out. He leaned over and kissed you hungrily.

"Tsk, you made such a mess," he sighed.

"Sorry?" There was wet spot toward the foot of the bed. He kissed you again. "I'm not." He got up and took care of the condom before tucking himself back in his pants. He stretched, and you blatantly ogled him, his golden skin gleaming with the sheen of sweat. When your brain finally caught up to your hormones, you realized he was doing this on purpose.

There was a comfortable silence as he climbed into the bed beside you. One arm tentatively draped around your shoulders.

You weren't sure what to do next. "Do you want me to go?"

"You can stay," he said. "I'm not that much of a bastard." He kissed your forehead.

"Yes, you are," you said, nuzzling his neck. "Seriously, I can go."

"Stay."

You nestled against him. He was warm and still managed to smell nice, a pleasant musk mingled with leather and whiskey.

"Been wanting to do that since I saw you playing chicken with those omnis."

"I was that impressive, huh?"

He laughed. "Nwazue was sure you wouldn't last a minute. Lao was screaming incoherently. The captain was speaking directly to her gods, and you almost got flattened by falling asphalt. It was stupid as hell. Ballsy though."
"So is it stupid or ballsy that turns you on?"

"Same thing in the end," he said. "The best part was how you got all shy around the captain. It was adorable."

You punched him in the arm. He let you.

"You're such a cocky bastard. Thought you were going to have me begging," you taunted.

Shin pulled you against him. You felt him twitch against your thigh and you blinked at him. "I still have the rest of the night," he said smugly.

The next day, Captain Patel gave you both the eye, but said nothing. She'd nail you both if you fucked up, but Shin was on good behavior outside his bedroom. You'd made it a month alongside him before falling into his bed, and you were pretty sure everyone knew what had happened. You were bruised, sore, and had no complaints about it. Shin had his share of bite marks, scratches, and hickies, but seemed ridiculously proud of them.

Everything fell into place with Shin. You didn't talk about the future. You didn't know how, you'd never had one before. But you ate together, fought side-by-side, and fucked like rabbits. You were now certain Lao and Valdez were sleeping together, but you weren't sure if it was an exclusive thing. You didn't ask. You and Shin were the unit's worst kept secret, but it didn't interfere with work, so no one said anything.

It was the happiest you'd been in a long time.

You knew you were the rookie, the lowest on the totem pole. And while Blackwatch was very different from being a freelance import-export specialist, you made the extra effort to be useful. Maybe it wasn't necessary, but you went out of your way to get to know the other three dozen people stuck in the Yukon wilderness with you. Black Base Delta was the official name. Everyone else called it the 9th Circle, a name the would prove to be painfully apt. The only person you really avoided was Major Gleeson; he was in charge of your little slice of heaven. You didn't like to attract the attention of authority figures, and Captain Patel never looked happy after her meetings with him. She was annoyed about practically everything that man did.

When not on patrol or in training, you visited various techs and comm specialists at their unrestricted stations. There were plenty of places you couldn't access and you weren't about to push that boundary just yet. Rivka and Lavalle were some of the friendlier techs - IT specialists that handled the databases. You still weren't sure what exactly the point of the 9th Circle was, but it was a listening post, collecting shit tons of signals intelligence then storing and deciphering select portions.

You dropped in on the server room, trying to figure out exactly how some of the terminals worked. The holoscreens graphed all sorts of data, but you didn't know what anything meant. "Rivka? Lavalle?"

"That you, Lucky Strike?" Rivka asked, she popped up from the center of a hexagonal terminal. The blue light gave her skin an eerie cast, bluing her white curls. The lights reflected off her square rimmed glasses. She was old enough to be everyone's grandmother and had the voice of a chainsmoker.

Fucking Shin. Everyone called you "Lucky Strike" now. You shook your head. "I have a real name."

"Nonsense, everyone wants to be Lucky," she said. "What do you have for me?"

You roll your eyes and tossed her a package.

"This is the organic stuff, yes? Not that plastic shit they serve in the cafeteria?"

"It's tahini. The jar said organic. It's the best I could get in under a week."

Rivka opened the package. "Overwatch had better food."

"I wouldn't know."

She popped the jar open, stuck her finger in, then licked it. "Adequate. You have good instincts."

You smiled modestly.

"Quit pretending to be humble. You are like my rotten grandchildren. But smarter. And more useful. I would introduce you to my grandson, but that foxy Lieutenant Sato might object."

You rolled your eyes upward. "Is that all, Rivka?"

She snorted again and hesitated. "You have good instincts, Lucky. I have recently come across some...troubling data. It could be nothing. It could be dangerous. Our servers have a...vulnerability. It would be easy and convenient to lose things..."

You furrowed your brow. You understood technology, but you weren't a hacker. "I thought we had a remote backup server."

"...We did. It's down. I...I might have a fix for that. But it's not by the book."

You laugh. "Nothing we do is. I'm not your boss, Rivka. But I'd say better safe than sorry. All that shit is above my pay grade."

Rivka paused, made up her mind, then scrawled something on a real piece of paper and handed it to you. "Bring me these things," she said.

You raised a brow. You weren't entirely sure what some of the items were. But you could probably get them.

You gave Captain Patel your old rifle. It didn't have any value outside sentiment and age. The quartermaster stocked much better equipment, but the captain had been so irritated by your gun, that you had to gift her with it. It was the right thing to do.
"Really?" She asked, when she opened the box. But she didn't look displeased.

"It kicks like a mule," you admitted.

"Of course it does. It's a goddamn elephant gun, Agent. It's bolt action. I don't even know where to start."

"I'm better with knives," you confessed. "But omnis don't have the decency to be squishy." You grinned at her.

She rolled her eyes, but Captain Patel kept the gun.

"Finally!" You stood over Shin pumping your fists. He sat on the ground, holding his throat. "Two hundred thirty-six bouts later, I finally win!"

He smiled up at you, eyes shining with pride. And then he kicked, sweeping you off your feet and flat onto your back.

The wind knocked out of you, you laid there for a moment, dazedly contemplating the pride before the fall. Shin straddled you, still massaging his neck. "Good job, Lucky," he said, voice coming out strangled. "But you can't let your guard down just because you think you've won." He ground his hips against yours, and you glared at him.

He reached for your throat and you smacked away his hand, your fingers shooting for his neck. You almost had him, but he rolled backward, laughing. You picked yourself off the mat.

"Let's get cleaned up," he said softly. "I want to celebrate your victory."

You showered in his bathroom and when you came out, there was a prettily wrapped box on his table.

"What's this?"

Shin sat on the bed. "Open it."

You took a second to admire the wrapping - Shin seemed to take pride in presentation. Then you tore it off, because that was the point of wrapping paper. The box was about a foot long. You pulled the lid off and inside was a tanto, a Japanese-style dagger. The blade was ten inches and the hilt another four. It was a monochrome matte black - no glare or shine to catch the light. The sheath hooked snuggly to your belt. You slid the blade along the wrapping paper, watching it slice through evenly. The weight of the dagger felt right in your hand.

"This is impressive," you said. "Thank you."

"You deserved a reward. Thought I'd be able to give it to you sooner, but...you're just so slow." Shin favored you with a shit-eating grin.

You sheathed the dagger and gently placed it on the table. It was one of the nicest gifts you'd received. Shin's words didn't even sting.

"Thank you," you breathed, leaning in to kiss him. Shin met you halfway and pulled you
Captain Patel swore no one was in trouble, but you could sense her unease. Commander Reyes was making a surprise stop at the 9th Circle. It was already nine months into your tenure as a probationary agent. That hadn't changed yet - bureaucratic snafu- and you got the feeling Captain Patel was getting annoyed. The fact no one knew the reason why Blackwatch Commander, and former acting commander of Overwatch, was visiting bumfuck nowhere, had everyone nervous. Valdez and Lao were holed up in armory modifying shotguns. Nwazue hadn't spoken to anyone in days. And Simon had taken to muttering passive-aggressive comments to the snow. While indoors. Shin didn't seem bothered, but neither of you had slept alone for the past week.

Patrol done, you delivered Rivka some parts, and she'd disappeared back into the server rooms muttering something guttural. You lingered in the doorway, but Rivka didn't surface. You weren't too worried, Rivka was good for it. It wasn't like there were a lot of people coming and going out of the 9th Circle.

"I don't like it Aishani. Who the hell is this guy? I didn't put him in charge and I certainly didn't order this place constructed." You froze, not recognizing the voice.

"I told you my thoughts, Gabriel. I did this as a favor to you. We are not staying. I do not wish for my unit to be part of this Blackwatch. I do not do black ops any more. I care not for espionage. And if you remember, playing politics really made me lose face." That was Captain Patel.

The man, Gabriel, gave a bark of laughter. It wasn't happy. "Goddamnit Aishani, I'm building this from the ground up. I need good people."

"You have and always will have Jack."

There was an awkward silence.

You recognized Captain Patel's distinct exasperated sigh. You'd been on the receiving end of that enough times to know she was very irritated. "I'm not stupid, Gabriel."

"Didn't realize it was that obvious, Aishani."

Their voices faded and you peeked out, in time to see the back of the man. Black beanie, massive muscled frame, "Gabriel" was Commander Reyes. And apparently Captain Patel knew him. Which made sense if she was SEP. Well, there went your theories about grandma-wearing omnics. You sighed.

"Still there, Lucky?" Rivka popped out from behind a terminal nearly making you shit yourself. You revived the theory about grandma-wearing omnics as you stared at your reflection in Rivka's glasses.

"Yeah, does the stuff work? If you can give it another week, my contact can get some of the other stuff."

"It will hold for now," Rivka said.
"What?"

She looked at you sharply. "It is above your pay grade, Lucky."

"I'm just asking if you want me to get the other stuff on your list."

She hesitated. "Yes. I think that would be wise." She ran her fingers through her white hair. "I don't like this Lucky. We don't have rules about this yet, but when I approached Gleeson, he didn't seem to care that our backups weren't running properly. I get that a lot of our data is noise. But from the base commander?"

You thought about what you'd just overheard Commander Reyes tell Captain Patel. "Commander Reyes was just saying he didn't authorize any of this. I'm guessing he meant the 9th Circle."

Rivka huffed. "Well maybe he'll shut it down and I can see my ungrateful grandchildren this year." She fiddled with a stray wire. "Listening at keyholes, Lucky?"

You shrugged.

"Hmm. Well, if we're shutting down, then this is all moot." She clucked her tongue. "Well, if we have to wipe everything, make sure we have someone in Greenland redo their backups."

"I heard nothing," you sighed, wondering how Rivka pulled that off. You could ask Lao later.

"Come by tomorrow, Lucky. I will bring you some hummus. I made it myself."

"Sure thing, Rivka."

"So, Captain Patel knows Commander Reyes," you dropped casually into dinner conversation.

Valdez sat up straighter. Lao fell silent, only for a moment. Then the questions began. "How do you know? Like everyone knows who the commander is! But-"

Simon just sipped his tea. But as a doctor, he would have been aware of Captain's Patel's SEP status. Nwazue didn't blink either, but she might not have cared.

Shin nudged you with his elbow. "Don't go spilling the captain's secrets," he said softly.

Lao groaned.

"It's more like something is wrong and both of them are upset about it." You didn't mention Rivka's remote backup issues. "I guess I was wondering how everyone felt about getting seconded to "Blackwatch." I mean, I thought I joined "Overwatch" because it was cushier than civilian life. That's probably not a very high bar."

Valdez shook his head. You took that to mean he wasn't crazy about the idea but it could have meant "no comment." He caught your confusion and made a thumbs down sign.
"Theoretically, it's exciting," Lao said. "But we're stuck in here most of the time. Blast an omnic or two and see if any of them are from Siberia... But I wanted adventure."

"It's work," Nwazue said unenthusiastically. To be fair, that's how she always sounded.

"Doesn't matter much to me," Simon said. "I just wish they'd post us somewhere more hospitable."

"I don't mind," Shin murmured.

"Yeah, but you're the shadow ninja assassin type," Lao blurted out.

Shin inclined his head back. "If I remember correctly, you were recruited wearing an ankle bracelet because you couldn't stay out of big corporate data networks."

"That's different," Lao pouted. "They were doing suspicious things."

"And you were breaking the law," Shin laughed. "Sometimes you have to break the rules to get things done, and I trust you to do it right, Lao. Blackwatch is a good place for you."

Lao perked up at that. "Aww, thanks Shin."

You ate your food, wondering if Blackwatch was a good place for you.
Chapter 2

Chapter Summary

Think I took liberties with timeline. Because this was just supposed to be porn.

Rumor filtered down that Commander Reyes wasn't too happy with being placed in Blackwatch. In front of the cameras, everyone seemed pretty happy that Jack Morrison was made Strike Commander. Behind closed doors, you were hearing differently. Reyes had been acting commander and being seconded to the black ops world seemed almost like burying him. The reasons for this didn't seem clear. You weren't well versed on Overwatch's internal politics, so you kept your mouth shut and your ears open.

Commander Reyes was staying an extra night, no explanation given. Or maybe there was one, but you didn't rate highly enough to get it. It kept everyone in a state of low level anticipation. Rivka made you hummus; it was delicious. Lao talked too much. Nwazue got snappish. Simon had sharp whispered argument with Georgie - no one wanted to attract Reyes' attention. Valdez didn't seem any different. Shin couldn't keep his hands off you.

Sparring was almost foreplay to him. Sometimes it made you feel inadequate, because Shin wiped the mat with you. But then, the only person in the unit who could take him down was Captain Patel.

You were face down eating mat, locked in an armbar between Shin's thighs, when he stiffened beside you. You looked up, in time to see Commander Reyes, dressed in sweats, enter the gym. He surveyed the equipment but his gaze stopped at the mat.

"You should probably tap out," he told you.

"Oh no, I have him right where I want him," you said brightly. "He just doesn't know it yet."

Shin laughed and to your surprise, Reyes' lips quirked up, his shoulders relaxing a little. He was a big man, all muscle and attitude wrapped in a compression gear. You scanned his features since it was the first time you'd seen a celebrity up close. Neat trimmed beard, iconic black beanie, and big neck-snapping hands. His dark skin bore lots of scars and you forced your eyes to his eyebrows to keep from staring anywhere too long.

"Well go on," he said. "Don't let me stop you."

Shin laughed as you rolled into the pin, trying to get a favorable angle to work yourself out. If Reyes weren't here, you would've bitten Shin by now, that usually worked. Of course, it also got you stripped and fucked in the showers, so definitely not a good tactic in front of the boss. You settled for pinching a nerve in his thigh. Shin winced and his grip loosened just enough for you to wiggle out.

You rolled backward before Shin could trap you again and thought about your options.
Shin was going to get you for that pinch.

You jumped off the mat. "Retreating now."

Shin rolled to his feet. "Did I finally scare you off, Lucky Strike?"

"Well, obviously the winner has to fight Commander Reyes. And I like living. Also, you win 98% of the time. I'm making the tactically-sound decision."

Commander Reyes gave you the side eye. "I'm just observing. Get back on the mat, agent."

You sighed. So much for that. "Yes, sir."

Shin smiled at you. It was very amused, but not very nice. "Don't worry, Lucky. I won't hurt you too bad." There was a feral pleasure in his eyes and you really hoped Reyes didn't notice.

Shin lunged, full speed, and you didn't have time to move. He took you down to the mat, knocking the wind out of you. You forced your legs apart, locking them around his hips, trying to keep his arms away from your face. But he was taller with better reach. You batted away his hands and tried to elbow him in the face, but you couldn't get good momentum on your back. Almost leisurely, Shin placed his hand on your throat. You bucked, trying to swing up and headbutt him, but he pulled back. You ended up smacking your nose on his chin, hard. Almost immediately, your nose began to gush.

Shin hurriedly climbed off you and grabbed one of his towels. He held it up to your face.

"No, don't smother me, I can recover from this, honest," you said, voice unpleasantly nasal.

Shin snorted and you tilted your head back, holding your nose.

"That is not how you headbutt someone, Lucky Strike." He sounded amused. "That is the actual opposite of what you're supposed to do."

You held your face and sighed. "Yeah, I got that."

Commander Reyes crouched down in front of you. He was blocking out the light. "You want to hit them with this part." He flicked the crown of your head. "Neck straight, chin tucked, opponent preferably locked in with your arms. Go for the nose. That little bit of cartilage doesn't stand a chance against bone. Don't get it reversed."

"Yes sir," you said.

He grabbed you by the collar, fists nearly pulling your shirt up. "Show me."

You were still bleeding, but you grabbed around the back of his neck and lined the crown of your head up with his nose and jerked forward, stopping before contact.

"Better form. But if you need to be headbutting people, you're already doing things wrong." He let go of your shirt.

You exhaled, releasing him. "I'm working on it, sir."

"Very good. Go ice that nose, Agent." He looked at Shin. "Are you up for a round?"

Shin's eyes gleamed. "Yes, sir."
You really wanted to linger, if only to see how Shin did. But Reyes gave you a look that clearly said "go away now, small annoying unworthy one" and you had no choice but to retreat to the infirmary.

Shin came back to his room with a black eye and a wide smile.

"Did you win?" You asked, stepping out of his bathroom, drying your hair with a blood-free towel.

"Oh hell no. He's tougher than Captain Patel. I'm lucky to be upright." Shin leaned in and kissed you. He tasted like blood.

"But you impressed him." Of course, he did. Shin was that good.

"He did mention Switzerland." There was a pause. Shin looked at you, suddenly uncertain. "He wants our entire unit there."

You cocked your head to the side. Interesting thing to let slip. Reyes must have already made up his mind, Captain Patel's protests aside.

This idea of a "future" loomed ahead of you. You could see it in Shin's eyes too, and he didn't seem apprehensive at all. Your heart skipped a beat. It wasn't scary like it used to be. Still you didn't know how to voice it. But all in all, it seemed nice. "Anything's better than the 9th Circle," you said, instead.

"I hadn't noticed," Shin murmured, pushing you against the wall.

You had to shower again. Shin wasn't badly hurt. In fact, he was more energetic than usual. You kept a few things here in his room now, a toothbrush, some clothes, toiletries. It wasn't just sex. It wasn't just friendship. You rubbed your nose then combed your fingers through your hair. Maybe it was time to talk about things. Problem was, you didn't know how. Shin hadn't come out and said anything, but the way he looked at you when he mentioned Switzerland...

"Hey." You stepped out of the bathroom, pulling on one of his t-shirts. They were a little big on you, but he didn't complain about you borrowing his clothes.

Shin sat at his desk sharpening your knife. "Have you been cutting wood with this?"

"Umm..." You'd cut a lot of things. Plastic, wood, meat... "Maybe."

Shaking his head, he went back to running the blade against a whetstone. "You need to keep this sharp, Lucky."

"Sorry." You rubbed the back of your head sheepishly. "I do sharpen it, honest. It's my favorite knife. I use it all the time."
"I noticed." Shin glanced back at you, a small smile on his lips. "I thought it was a bit much at the dinner table..."

"It was only that once, and I got the captain to laugh."

Shin wiped your tanto down and set it back in the sheath. "You-"

Something crashed into the hall, the impact shaking the doorframe. Someone screamed, the patter of gunfire echoing through the vents.

Shin was on his feet instantly. He grabbed his submachine guns. "Call it in, Lucky."

You pulled on your sweat pants and picked up Shin's comm unit. He was already out the door.

"Captain? We have a disturbance-"

Static. You tried another channel. All the same. Comms were down. Growling, you clipped the sheath to the back of your pants and grabbed your pistol. Slamming into your boots, you opened Shin's door, peering around hostiles.

There was blood on the floor. Swallowing your curses, you followed the trail toward the sound of gunfire. You found the source of the crash, and promptly slapped your hand over your mouth.

Valdez lay on ground, the back of his head pulped, half his skull smashed. Blood splattered the hallway. You raised your gun, now running toward the rec room. There were half a dozen more bodies on the way, people you knew, people you worked with. You could name them all, even if their faces were ruined. These were headshots. Executions.

Why the fuck hadn't any of the alarms sounded? The realization chilled you. You could think of one very good reason and it was very bad. There was a manual fire alarm in the hallway, something not tied into the computer system. This base had been far from state of the art. Smashing the glass, you pulled the handle. Lights and sirens began to flash.

Normal people ran away from gunfire, but you tracked it to the rec room. Shin was going to be OK. He was a kickass. He'd be fine without you there to hold him back.

"Where's Reyes?" It was a man's voice, Australian-accented.

"Go fuck yourself," Shin spat.

You peeked around the corner and clenched your teeth.

There were dead bodies everywhere. Some yours, some wearing unfamiliar masks and thick combat armor. The Aussie had his back to you. He was huge, bigger than Commander Reyes, and he was holding Shin by his throat. Worse, he had metal arms and cooling tubes protruding from his back. You raised your gun, sure of your shot.

The cyborg was faster. His fingers closed around Shin's throat.

You fired, even as you heard the crack.

The cyborg dropped Shin, his body too limp as he fell. The cyborg turned to face you, his mouth working open to speak. You fired again, and a pretty little hole appeared in his forehead.
He took another step toward you and fell, no words coming from his bloody mouth. You kicked him, as you rushed forward, to check on Shin.

He couldn't be. He couldn't be. He couldn't be. You dropped to your knees. You went to feel his pulse and stopped mid-air. He hadn't been strangled; his throat had been crushed, bones and all. There was blood on his mouth and his eyes were open and unseeing. Covering your mouth you rested your forehead against his. You might have kissed him. You might have said his name. You might have begged him to wake up, please. You weren't sure what you said and what you managed to keep inside.

Your nascent future, the one you'd just begun to acknowledge, turned to ash.

It was the cyborg that roused you. Something crackled and you jumped.

"Status Gamma Team?"

You found an earpiece on the cyborg, just like you found he wasn't quite dead, his breaths coming shallow as he lay there. He had some sturdy backup systems integrated in his spine. You drew your knife, the one Shin had just sharpened for you, and began to cut. You cut his throat. You cut through bone. You cut through circuit. You made damn sure he wasn't coming back. You found his gun and put on the earpiece. Then you wiped your knife off, sheathed it, and listened to your enemies.

"Eastern wing clear. Southern wing clear. Delta and Bravo units respond." You winced. You had a good idea what "clear" meant. You were in the northern wing.

"Need back up in the north. Got some stringy old bitch that won't go down."

Captain Patel. You stood a little straighter. You gave yourself one last look at Shin, his eyes now closed. You wished desperately for something clever to say. Something to absolve your failure. Something to ease the ache in your chest. But you had nothing, so you turned on your heel, checking the big assault rifle the cyborg bastard had been using. It would kick like a mule, but you knew how to handle that.

Your ears ached as you got closer. The air stunk of blood, guts, and cordite. There was something else too, something electric. It would be safe to assume more cyborgs were on their way. They were after Commander Reyes. The rest of you were collateral damage.

Cursing sounded over the stolen comm unit. It brought a tight smile to your lips. You were running now, charging toward a bloody death. This time, you wouldn't be too slow. This time, you'd get there in time. You could hear her now. She was in the northern hangar. Right now it was just storage, all the transport units were in the southern hangar, and that was enemy territory.

"What's the matter, assholes? Can't take one little old lady?" She laughed, a terrible rumble in her throat.

You slid inside, coming up behind more men in black. They were in cover behind crates. Captain Patel was on the far side. You clutched the assault rifle, holding it firm to your shoulder.

It kicked worse than a mule. It kicked like Captain Patel and you couldn't keep this up indefinitely. But you grit your teeth, and bright bursts of light shot across the room instead of bullets. You tore through them, wondering what the fuck you were shooting.

The body armor slowed your kills, but they went down.
"Captain!" You shouted, nearly slipping in the blood as you charged forward. You checked five different bodies, all of them shredded and burned by the gun in your hands.

"You've upgraded," she said. Captain Patel sat against the back wall, behind another stack of crates. "That's a pulse rifle. Thought they were still in development." Paler than usual, she gave you a pained grimace. She held her stomach, and you winced, because she was literally holding everything inside.

"Shit, what can I get for you?" You stared at her gut wound, wishing Simon was here.

"...Time. I could use superglue. You got any cigarettes?"

You heart dropped. You'd never seen Captain Patel smoke.

"No, Captain, sorry."

She waved away the apology. "Casualties?"

"A lot of techs." You didn't want to name them all, though you could. "Valdez for sure. Someone smashed his head in." You swallowed roughly. "A cyborg got Shin," you choked out. "I was too slow."

"Cyborgs are faster than Shin, let alone you, Lucky Strike." Her voice was hard. But her eyes shined suspiciously and you looked away. "You killed the cyborg?"

"Yes, Captain."

"Good girl." She sighed. "How?"

"I shot him in the head, then I cut his head off. Had to...disconnect some circuitry."

Captain Patel gave you a vicious smile. "Good." Her breath hitched. "Nwazue's dead too. She blew the southern lab with them in it."

You lowered your eyes. You'd never been close to the demolitionist, but you respected her.

"I haven't heard from anyone else."

The stolen comm crackled to life in your ear. "Delta unit, respond. Sending Alpha and Bravo to your location."

"They're coming then." Captain Patel stood shakily.

"Let's go." You stooped low to help her up.

"I'm done for, Lucky Strike." That was the second time she'd called you that. It meant something, but your brain didn't want to process it.

"Suck it up, Captain! You're an SEP super soldier!" You snapped at her. You ran back to one of the dead men and tore off his armor. They wore body suits underneath and you cut one off, getting enough fabric to hold her together.

Captain Patel gave you a bemused look as you wrapped her and tied it. "That's not going to save me, child. But I will go with you as far as I can."

She leaned on her rifle.
Footsteps rounded the corner. You raised the gun.

Commander Reyes leveled his shotgun at you.

"Gabriel, you need to get a move on it," Captain Patel said without turning around.

"Goddamnit Aishani, I still don't know how you do that."

She rasped out a laugh at that. "They're heading this way."

"Status, agent?"

"Captain Patel is critically injured. I'm uninjured. And I picked up this supposedly-prototype pulse rifle from a fucking cyborg."

"Shit." Commander Reyes stared at the gun.

"You want it?" You asked. "Because the recoil is going to break my arm."

He swapped you guns and offered an arm to Captain Patel. Past the airlock, there was a hall up ahead, and then a foyer before the exit. You'd be out in the snow, but that beat getting ripped apart by cyborgs.

"They're close," Captain Patel said, wrenching away from Commander Reyes. She took a knee in front of the door. "This is as good a place as any, a natural chokepoint."

"No, Aishani," Commander Reyes said, a desperate note in his voice.

"It's you they want. So we're going to deny them. I'll just slow you down and we all know my chances out there are too slim. Take care of Lucky Strike. She's a fool, but she walks with Durga."

"Captain, no." You shook your head.

"Give me the shotgun," she said. "They'll get close very quickly and I'm low on ammo."

Against your will, you held the gun out.

"Thank you," Captain Patel said. She patted your cheek. "There is no guilt. There is only the mission. And your mission is to keep that jackass alive."

Commander Reyes gave a sharp laugh. "Goddamnit, Aishani."

"Give my regards to Jack," she said, clasping his hand. "Don't leave it like this, Gabriel. There aren't that many of us left, and you have something special."

Commander swallowed roughly. "The grave cannot hold you."

"Go Gabriel. I must say the Durga Shatru-Shanti." She took a deep breath, and her eyes cleared. "Ripavah sankshayam yaanti kalyaanam chop padyate-"

"Orders?" You asked opening the door and refusing to look back. Because if you saw Captain Patel kneeling there chanting her prayer, while you left her to die, you would lose your shit.

"Let's just get it done."
You shut the door.

The gunshots began behind you. You still had your pistol. Commander Reyes took point. You were almost out of the base. You just had to clear the check-in point. Reyes walked through that second to last door and right into the trap.

Of course, they stationed guards at the exits. The man-metal thing was bigger than the one you killed. It seized the commander by the throat and smashed a metal fist into his head. You charged forward, pistol drawn, but another man tackled you and you went down. You watched your gun skitter away and swore, even as you were dragged backward. You could hear the sound of metal hitting flesh, but all you could see was the mostly-human man on top of you, head shaved, eyes wild, his lower jaw reinforced with a metal plate. He straddled you, one hand on your neck, the other on your hips.

"Aren't you a cute morsel," he murmured, his voice high and scratchy. A hand closing around your throat. "Are you Reyes' little bit on the side? Probably why he's got you with him. Must be a good lay. Wish I had time to fuck you while I squeeze the air out of your lungs. Bet it'd be real hot." Your periphery was starting to go black.

In the distance you heard the shooting stop; Captain Patel was gone then. You heard the blunt sound of whatever beating Reyes was receiving. You heard someone reporting Reyes was in custody. You remembered Shin, even as your heart fluttered, and you felt his gift against your back. There was still the mission. Your focus narrowed, you had only one choice. You reached down with one hand, the other clutching your assailant's collar. You nicked yourself drawing the blade, but you slid it out from under your body and straight up through his throat.

The grip on your neck relaxed, and you twisted the blade, your field of vision expanding. Sweet air rushed into your lungs and you climbed to your feet.

None of your enemies took you seriously, and that was their undoing. The cyborg on Reyes crouched over him, his back to you. You stepped forward, bloody knife in hand. Gripping his hair you simultaneously shoved the tanto through his neck. You had to saw. You had to cut some odd wires coming out his back. You didn't quite behead him, but only a stickler for perfection would call you on it. Then you rolled his body off Commander Reyes and checked to see if he was alive.

He was. Bruised and bloody, but breathing. You let out a breath you didn't realize you were holding.

"Come on, Commander. We're almost out."

Your stolen comm crackled to life. "Northern wing is clear. Charges set. Get out or get blown, fellas."

"Who has Reyes?"

"Doesn't matter. Timer is live." The voices were tinny.

"Sir, you have to get up. They're going to blow the base up."

"Nngh." Commander Reyes laid there. He was far too heavy for you to carry. You opened the door, pistol retrieved. It was dark, but you saw no signs of humans or cyborgs. It didn't matter, you couldn't stay here.

You grabbed him under the arms, and began to pull. He was heavy. But you could get him out. If only you had a sled or a dolly. Instead it was one painstaking step after another. Your neck hurt and your insides felt scraped out. But you kept moving.

"Agent Lucky Strike," he mumbled.

"Not my actual name, sir." You clenched your teeth and pulled him out the door, and down the stairs, his metal boots clanking on the floor.

"Leave me. That's an order, agent. Aishani wouldn't want both of us to die here."

You kept pulling, your body aching. Dragging him wasn't hard, but you weren't moving fast and damnit, you were trying to be gentle. He flopped on the ground.

"I said leave me. That's an order! Can't you follow simple orders?" He sounded like a wounded bear and you tuned him out. Captain Aishani told you to keep him alive. That's what you were going to do.

You were three yards outside the building when the rumbling began. You staggered, dragging Commander Reyes through the snow. It was the sticky kind, harder to move in, but smoother than grass. Four yards. Five yards. The rumble became a roar and you threw yourself over Commander Reyes' body, because they wanted him dead and everything be damned, you were going to deny them that victory. You didn't care what it cost you. Pain lanced through your side, your fingers stinging, your leg burning. You clung to the commander, eyes squeezed shut, praying to Captain Patel's gods that you could do this one last thing.

Fire roared behind, and then the shockwave claimed you.

"Agent. Agent. Lucky Strike." The world zoomed into focus, and at its center was Commander Reyes. Blood smeared his face, and his nose looked wrong, but you definitely recognized him. It was still night, but the moon was full, giving the snowscape a soft glow. You shivered. You were in the snow. And you were freezing. But you didn't want to move.

"Yeah, that's me," you said, cleverness used up.

"Can you get up?"

"Nah, I'm good here," you said. Your leg ached. "My leg was on fire, but the snow is nice."

"You took some shrapnel. Can you try to walk?"

You sat up, your head spinning. Commander Reyes had on a jacket, but no shirt. You looked down and found a black bandage along your calf. You chanced a look at your left hand and found it similarly bound up. He used his shirt, you realized. You struggled to stand, but you just fell back on your ass.

"I tried," you said. "Partial credit, OK?"

Commander Reyes swore.
"You're feeling better," you said, brain fuzzy. You shouldn't be this woozy, but you'd never been blown up before so...well, you weren't really blown up, but you were actually caught in the shockwave this time. You felt for your eyebrows, and they were thankfully still there.

"I heal fast," he said.

You shuddered as you tried to move your left hand. It didn't feel right. You were scared to look at your leg. So you kept your eyes on Commander Reyes' face.

"You're in shock," he said.

"Probably," you agreed. "And I'm really fucking cold. I'd like to think of a clever simile, but I'm totally concussed."

Commander Reyes frowned. And like that, he scooped you up, holding you against his shockingly warm body. It jolted you into a stronger sense of awareness. You were concussed, but you knew the area. So you wracked your brain for helpful information.

"Supplies run through a waypoint in the valley," you said, waving you hand in the general direction.

"I know the spot. We have an extraction point there. It's only twenty miles or so."

You weren't walking twenty miles or even a quarter of that.

"You can leave me here, Commander," you said. "I know you'll come back." You didn't know, but you didn't care. You were tired now. You were cold. You just wanted to sleep. Commander Reyes was badass. He could make it on his own. You'd done your part.

"Stay awake, Lucky Strike."

"Sorry, Commander."

He hesitated. "You can call me Reyes, given the circumstances."

"Sure. My name isn't Lucky Strike, but...you can call me that. Everyone else did. Everyone else-" Your gut clenched. You didn't want to think about everyone else. "Fuck. Fuck fuck fuckity fuck fuck." You ground your teeth together.

Reyes began to walk, holding you against his body. "Sugar will help. I have a candy bar in my pocket. Do you want it?" He asked.

"Is that a euphemism?" You wondered. Did you say that out loud? Well when a grown man tells you to reach into his pocket for a sweet treat, what are you supposed to think?

"No, agent. It's a chocolate bar. What the hell is wrong with you?"

"Left side pocket, in my jacket," he emphasized the last word. You reached down, finding the foil wrapped bar. You unwrapped it with your right hand and your teeth. You weren't hungry, but when you bit into it, it was the best thing you could remember tasting.

"This is going to be a long walk," Reyes said. "Talk to me. Try to keep me entertained."

"Or you'll drop me?" You wondered and held up half the candy bar to Reyes' mouth.
"I'm considering it," he said. "Take another bite. Then I'll eat it."

You obeyed and then offered the rest to him. He took it in one bite and you were left with the wrapper. You pocketed it, because littering was bad. You were too fucked up to reason, but you knew it in your heart. Shin told you so many times.

Shin. Your heart stuttered.

"Agent?"

"I'm thinking. It's hard. It was hard before the potential brain damage, and it's worse since my skull is all swimmy." You went for light, carefree, but the words came out tight and clipped.

"You definitely need to stay awake," Reyes said, trudging through the snow. Great black plumes of smoke churned upward in the night. The fire lit up the sky and it was oddly beautiful. A funeral pyre for...

"You got people out in the wide world?" You asked, trying to distract yourself.

"I have family in Los Angeles," he said. "You?"

"No. No people in Los Angeles, or anywhere else." You shook your head and immediately regretted it. That and you nearly got a literal eyeful of Reyes' nipple. "Are you going to be OK with just a jacket? Shouldn't you zip it up?" He had it partially draped over you.

"Trying to keep you warm, Lucky Strike. I'll be fine as long as I don't run out of energy."

He had insane body heat, and for that you were immensely grateful. It was fucking cold, but you curled against him.

He marched down the hill, keeping a solid pace as he entered the forest.

"There are bears out here," you said. "You can put me down and wrestle one if it comes to that."

Reyes coughed. "I'd prefer to leave it alone. But if it attacks, I'll shoot it."

"Not going to feed me to it?"

"That would just make it angrier," he said, but there was no sharpness in his words. You rested your cheek against his chest. You could hear his heartbeat, steady and loud. It was strangely soothing.

"Do you have more food?"

Reyes snorted. "Are you actually hungry?"

"No, just wanted to make sure you'd have the energy to carry me and make it to the extraction point."

"I know what I'm doing, Lucky Strike. Just follow orders and I'll get you out of here alive."

You took a deep breath. That was precisely what you wanted, no, needed to hear. And orders meant keeping Reyes entertained. You struggled to think of good stories, but the best ones involved your unit, and you were too raw inside to talk about them.

"So I used to be an import-export specialist," you told him.
He made a noise somewhere between a laugh and a snort.

"Very respectable living where I'm from," you said sagely. "A meal at least once a day, only one firefight a month if you're good, and a real interesting customer base." You looked over his shoulder, but it didn't seem like you were being followed.

"Weirdest thing you've transported?"

You laughed. "OK, I don't know if this was authentic, but the seller swore it was: a pair of Jack Morrison's combat pants. Lightly worn, unwashed, and yeah...I didn't look. The buyer was extremely fanboyish."

Reyes made a choking sound. "What? How much did they cost?"

"A cool ten thousand credits. I got a transport fee. I didn't set up the transaction."

Reyes began to laugh, then abruptly stopped. "Ugh. Ribs. Real laughter hurts."

"Sorry," you said.

"No. I'll have to tell him that. We could start a business..." Reyes paused. "You remember the people involved?" There was an odd intensity in his voice.

"I think the seller worked at a hotel. Like, got them from the laundry, not stole them from his dresser. But I can't be sure." You shrugged.

"Huh." Reyes walked at a solid pace, not jostling you too much. "How much do you think my pants would sell for?"

"No clue. As I said, I just arranged transport." You looked down. "But those look kind of beaten. I guess there might be a market for it, but I'm not an expert."

Reyes did one of those laugh-grimaces. "Why are you called Lucky Strike?"

You fell silent. You didn't feel lucky, even though others would say you were. You survived this far. You had Commander Reyes helping you stay alive. That was pretty lucky. You should be grateful. You just felt numb. "Shin called me that," you said quietly. "It stuck." You blinked rapidly, hoping your tone was neutral.

Reyes was silent for a moment. "You and Lieutenant Sato were lovers?" There was no judgment in his tone, and maybe Reyes was sharper than you expected. You shouldn't be telling the fucking head of Blackwatch your secrets, but you were afraid of sinking into silence. You didn't want to die with these things unknown.

"Yes. Cyborg got him. Moved too fast for me and crushed his neck. They wanted to know where you were. Shin wasn't...cooperative." You forced yourself to look off into the night and not at Reyes. "I killed that bastard. I shot him through the skull and cut his head off. But that doesn't make me feel any better."

Reyes was quiet for a long time. "I'm sorry."

You shrugged, because words weren't an adequate medium of expression and screaming wasn't an option. "New subject, please."
Commander Gabriel Reyes kept rewinding the past few days, trying to pinpoint how things got so fucked. Black Base Delta had been wiped off the map. He had already considered closing it down, especially after that bastard Gleeson had droned on about its importance. But even before he'd nearly been assassinated, something about the whole setup rubbed him wrong.

And then someone had sent very expensive, very talented mercenaries to salt the earth.

Aishani was dead and most of her unit too. The thought made his blood thunder. She'd gone down fighting, like she'd wanted, but it didn't absolve him. He was the one who'd asked her back. He was the one who put her in this position.

Instead of answers, he had you in his arms. A weirdly amusing, probationary agent, one who had aided and abetted the sale of Jack's pants. Admittedly, it was fucking hilarious, though undeniably creepy. Jack would most definitely freak out. It made him smile to think of the blonde man. Things hadn't been good lately, but Aishani was right. Jack was special. Reyes nearly died today. It put things into a clearer perspective. Rank changed like fortune. People? People were what mattered.

"Why'd you join up?" He asked you. He was comfortable with the silence, but you were obviously getting too tangled up in your thoughts.

Reyes grunted. "What kind of bears are out here?" He asked after a few minutes.

"Grizzly, I think." You gnawed on your lower lip. "They should be hibernating, but we've had issues with them not staying down all winter. Climate change, you know. And if you're wondering about grizzly bears versus omnics, omnics win. As long as they have lasers or big guns. The humanoid ones don't do so well, but it's a close thing."

"Do you take bets on bear-baiting omnics?" Reyes was a little disturbed.

"I don't torture animals. I've just seen it a few fights now. It's weird. Kind of sad, because you know the bear doesn't stand a chance. And even if it disables the omnic, you're going to have to put it down because it can't survive the damage."

"Huh." Talking to you was more informative than Reyes expected.

"Yeah, I know, I learned a lot of things I never knew I never wanted to know since joining Overwatch." Like how it felt to lose your whole unit. You clenched your fists, and your left hand felt wrong. You tried to wiggle your fingers and fire shot across your nerves. You winced.

"How's the pain?" Reyes asked.

"Grizzly Bear-able," you said.

"I will drop you," he scowled.

"Plain bearable?" You said, because even if it wasn't, you didn't really have a choice.
"I have another chocolate bar," he said.

"Save it," you said. "I'm on a diet."

Reyes looked down at you incredulously.

"It was a joke," you said.

"Jokes are supposed to be funny."

You huffed. "I'm doing the best I can in the middle of the night, in the Yukon, concussed."

Reyes face softened. "Yeah, OK. But don't quit your day job."

You didn't ask if you still had a job. You didn't know if you wanted it. But he was being snarky, not literal. Your mind didn't normally wander like this. "Do you need to rest?"

"No, I'm good. I'll stop halfway." He paused, looking out into the woods. You couldn't see, but it seemed he had good night vision. It made you wonder just what all was enhanced by SEP. He started to move again, double quick. You hung on tight, tucking your head down.

You lapsed back into silence, the pain in your limbs getting worse. But your mind was coming out of the fog. You were going to have to face some harsh truths soon. "Thank you," you said, after a moment, realizing that you'd lost your basic manners somewhere in the explosion.

"De nada," Reyes said. "You dragged me out the base. Expressly against orders," he added sharply.

"Yeah, well, they were stupid orders."

Reyes stopped. "What?"

"You were obviously concussed and in no position to make that call. So yeah, I ignored you." You grimaced as your left leg bumped against his hip.

"Don't ever emphasize to your commanding officer that you thought his orders were stupid and that you deliberately disobeyed him," Reyes said tautly.

"Or you'll drop me?" You looked up at his surly face. He was rigid in the moonlight, jaw clenched. "Captain Aishani was my commanding officer," you said quietly. "She told me to get you out alive. That's what she died for. That's what mattered. I didn't repeat my cyborg decapitation trick just to let you get blown to meat confetti."

Reyes' fingers dug into you right thigh. You winced and he hastily loosened his grip. "That was- shit. That was you." It was more shocked acknowledgement than question.

"Who else was left?" You laughed, though it wasn't the least bit funny. "You actually forgot."

"I've seen you fight hand-to-hand," Reyes said dryly. "But now that you mention it, I do remember a knife popping out of that bastard's throat. I guess I'd been focusing on...everything else."

You felt your back, the familiar weight gone. Your heart dropped. Everything you'd owned was gone. If you'd lost Shin's tanto...
"Relax. It's on my belt. I picked it up when I was treating your injuries."

You reached down, fingers circumnavigating his belt.

"What the hell, puta? You don't just go groping a man!"

You ignored him, till he swatted your hand away. He fiddled with his belt and then handed you the familiar blade. You clutched it against your chest.

"Thank you," you said. "It's important to me."

Reyes resumed his quick pace. "I can see that."

"I'm not the kind of person who gets into a fair fight," you said. "That's for people with super enhancements and pride to spare."

Reyes chuckled at that. "Fair point." He looked at the knife, a peculiar light in his eyes. "Maybe we should reconstruct what happened, while the memory is fresh."

You felt calmer with the tanto in hand. So you told Reyes everything, glossing over the aftermath of Shin's death. You told him about Valdez and Nwazue. You didn't go into detail about your kills, but you informed him of them. You'd killed eight men tonight. It wasn't a fair trade for all your friends.

"It's good you grabbed the pulse rifle," he said. "These aren't supposed to be out of development yet. It gives us somewhere to start." Then Reyes told you that he'd been inspecting some of the shipments the base had received. Manifests sent to HQ didn't match the inventory on hand. He'd been doing that when the attack began. They'd gone after his guest quarters first, then spread through the whole base. Reyes fought his way through, finding no survivors along the way. He too picked up comm chatter on Captain Patel's location.

"In conclusion," he said wryly. "It was a fucking waste."

"We were betrayed," you said.

Reyes went silent at that.

"No alarms sounded. The only reason Shin and I knew something was wrong was because Valdez made an enormous racket before they killed him. I pulled the fire alarm, and it only worked because it was manual. All our comm channels were down. The blast doors were unlocked and they knew where to find you." You thought about the equipment you'd procured for Rivka. No, if Rivka betrayed you, she wouldn't have needed extra equipment. She could open the doors, sabotage the system, and be out with no problem. No help needed.

You were still uneasy.

You had no idea what he was talking about. But the epiphany reinvigorated him. He kept moving, fast enough the cold wind began to sting. You clung to him, shivering. Reyes was sweating when he stopped. He reached in his pocket, tore open the chocolate bar, and ate half in one bite.
"Eat the rest," he ordered.

"Are you going to need it?" You asked, taking a moment to rub your numb legs.

"Depends on how long it takes Overwatch to find us."

You put back in his pocket. "I'm good."

"You're a fucking trip, Lucky Strike."

"You're welcome," you told him, patting his rather solid chest.

Reyes glowered down at you, his dark eyes smoldering. "It's my chocolate bar."

"Definitely. Which is why I put it back in your pocket. You're getting grumpy. You're probably going to need it sooner rather than later." You tried to wiggle your leg. "Just so you know, I can't feel my toes. Or my left hand."

Reyes swore an impressive stream of Spanish. He set you down against a tree and pulled your boots off.

"No frostbite yet," he said, rubbing circulation back into your feet. "The good thing about the cold is it slowed the bleeding." He touched your left calf and you winced. He continued vigorously working your extremities between his large palms. But he didn't try to jostle your left hand. Instead he tucked it in his very warm armpit. You flinched, partially because that was gross, but mostly because you were regaining feeling in it and it hurt.

"Thank you," you said after a moment. Because while it was weird and embarrassing, Reyes was trying to keep you from losing digits. That was thoughtful. He even put your shoes back on for you, because you weren't tying any laces one-handed.

"...You're welcome," he said gruffly. "And thank you, for saving me twice."

"I think this more than makes up for it. Stabbing people is easy. Putting other people's cold hands in your pits; that's real friendship."

Reyes laughed at that, then winced. "Don't make me laugh, chica."

"I'm concussed. Can't be held responsible for what I'm saying."

"I'm concussed too," he said.

"Yeah, but you're a super soldier. You heal fast. Totally different situation. Also, do you need to worry about frostbite?"

"I run at a higher temp than you, and no, I'm good right now." Rolling his shoulders, Reyes lifted you back up, tucking you tightly against his chest. It would have been intimidating if your brain was working properly. As it was, it was just kind of comforting.

"Keep your hands tucked and protected. I won't drop you."

"Even if I say something really stupid?" You tucked clipped your dagger to your hip.

"Eh...no promises." He took off his hat, and it surprised you to see he had a tangle of curls hidden underneath. He tucked it over your head. It was too big and slid down over your eyes, but it kept your ears warm.
"Thank you, Reyes," you said.

"Call me Gabriel. If I'm giving you my clothes, you might as well call me by my first name."

"You do this with all your subordinates?"

"Just the ones stupid enough to defy orders and try to rescue me."

"Well, look how that worked out for me." You pulled the hat up so you could see him. "Master has given Dobby a hat! Dobby is freeeee!"

"...You're an idiot, agent."

"I have a name."

He said it then, the entire string. He knew your actual name. That surprised you a little. "I make a point to know my people. That and Aishani personally requested you." He scratched his head. You knew he was wondering about the nickname.

"Shin dubbed me "Lucky Strike" after I crashed an omnic firefight. I had an old CZ 557 and played blitzkrieg without any shields. Captain Patel's company wasn't advancing fast enough to rescue me, so I threw the grenades I'd been transporting into the fray. They were uh...modded. I lost my eyebrows, but took out the omnics. Apparently, my antics made Captain Patel pray a lot, and freaked out the rest of the unit. She told me to join up, because I was too stupid to survive on my own. Shin thought it was all hilarious."

"Aishani was right," Gabriel said wryly. "She told me that story. Showed me the gun too, because I'll admit, I thought she was joking."

You didn't like thinking about Captain Patel or Shin right now.

"Do you have someone to go home to?" You asked.

"Yes," he said with certainty. "I do."

"That's good," you said, but you didn't ask more. Your mind turned over a new problem. There was no doubt in your mind that those cyborgs could have killed Gabriel, and it wasn't just your skills that saved him. Why risk hand-to-hand with him? Were they that unstable?

"You alive?"

"Thinking," you murmured. You nestled there in Gabriel's arms and let yourself drift.

"Stay awake, Lucky," he said, going the path of everyone and shortening your nickname.

You tried, you really did. But at some point, the world dropped off and you went with it.
"Wake up, agent." Groggily, you opened your eyes. It was cold. But something hot rested against your back. You looked over your shoulder to find a bare-chested Gabriel Reyes holding you against him. He was ripped, his chest moderately hairy. He had even more scars and you turned your head back to keep from staring. You were wrapped in his jacket, hat tucked over your ears, and he was rubbing your right hand.

"Sorry," you said. "How long was I out?"

"An hour, give or take."

"Sorry," you mumbled again.

He didn't seem angry. "We're at the extraction point. I've set up a beacon. Now we just have to wait." There was a tension in his voice that hadn't been there before.

"You think we're going to get ambushed?"

"It crossed my mind." He held you a little too tightly, like a stress ball. "It's that or die of exposure."

"I remember when we both went down, someone reported that you'd been caught. Maybe they think you're dead." You rubbed your nose, it was icy. "But I've been thinking. If they wanted you dead, they would have shot you right away. You're too dangerous to punch to death. I think they wanted to take you alive."

"I don't remember this." His brow furrowed. "Pendejos. Makes sense."

"We were kind of busy not getting killed. But yeah, someone called in that you were in custody. It was right after I noticed Captain Patel had stopped shooting, but before I went on my throat-slashing spree."

If you were in your right mind, you might have been concerned about all the touching. But Gabriel wasn't doing anything untoward. He just kept rubbing your stiff limbs. Your mind seemed to flow with your pulse. The cold sapped your strength, everything felt very heavy.

Gabriel unwrapped the leftover chocolate.

"Open," he ordered.

"You keep it. I'm not going to be able to run away. Don't waste it on m-"
He calmly forced the candy into your mouth. You nearly choked.

"Eat it," he said. "That's an order." He touched your forehead and swore. "You're getting kind of warm, chica."

You chewed up the chocolate and swallowed. This was ridiculous. You were sitting in Commander Gabriel Reyes' lap, wearing his clothes, while he fed you chocolate. You decided that you had actually been knocked unconscious back at the 9th Circle and were having bizarre hallucinations.

"Is this one of your weirder survival situations?" You asked.

Gabriel held your left hand. He wouldn't let you peel back the bandages. He hadn't said a word about it, but you realized he'd made a point not to let you see how it looked. Your stomach sunk, but there was a good chance all of this was a bad dream. You willed it to be so.

"Yes, but not the weirdest. It was an urban zone. We had to wear niqabs and skirts underneath, just in case. Jack in a niqab is ridiculous."

You pictured Commander Morrison crossdressing in full body-covering veils and dresses. Yeah, you were definitely hallucinating now.

"You know a lot about frostbite."

"Jack almost lost some digits to it. And I have had other idiots under my command. Ana's the only one with any sense."

Even you'd heard of Captain Amari. She was a legend. "She's pretty," you told him, accepting the fact that none of this was real.

Gabriel snorted and began to laugh. "Is Jack pretty too?"

"Yes. But Captain Amari is prettier. And oh my god, don't tell her I said that. She'll probably kill me."

Gabriel snorted. "Am I pretty?"

"Yes," you said. "You're the prettiest."

"Now I'm worried," Gabriel said, but he sounded like he was laughing.

You shrugged. "None of this is real, so what does it matter? I'll wake up in the 9th Circle and be like "why the hell did I eat nachos right before bed?" It's very apparent that I have a lot of unresolved emotional issues and they're manifesting in strange ways."

"This is real, idiota."

"This is surreal, Gabriel."

He couldn't really disagree.
The orca dropping into view was a great relief. And Jack, bags under his eyes, stubble clinging to his jaw, clad in his bright blue overcoat, Jack was one of the most beautiful things Gabriel had ever seen.

"Gabe!" Jack hit the ground running.

Jesse and Ana brought up the rear.

Gabriel set you on the ground and caught Jack in a hug. He winced as Jack squeezed his ribs.

"I'm sorry," Jack murmured. "I shouldn't have let you go without...saying something." Hair mussed, eyes wild, Jack took in Gabriel's injuries, his hands flitting between bruises.

"Mi cielito," Gabriel gripped the back of Jack's head and kissed him, the frustration and exhaustion draining away.

"Very pretty," you said, blinking up at them.

Jack looked between you and Gabriel, his confusion obvious. "You don't seem to be dressed for the weather, Gabe."

"She needed it more than me," Gabriel said. "But the idiota is borderline delirious. Ignore her."

"Captain Amari is pretty," you declared.

Gabriel snorted and lifted you up. "Yes, everyone is pretty, chica. You should probably shut up before you embarrass yourself."

Ana and Jesse caught up and Ana gave you a skeptical look.

You sighed and lowered your head. "Too late."

Jack ignored you, staring off at the smoke still rising in the distance. "Gabe...we saw the satellite footage. What the hell happened?"

Gabriel's expression darkened. "We need to talk, Jack."

You woke up in a small white bed, the air smelling of astringents. Immediately you lifted the sheet. Your left leg was bandaged, but it was there. You checked your toes. All accounted for. But your left hand was wrapped, and it didn't feel right. You began to pry at the white bandages.

"Easy, Lucky. You've been out for 48 hours. I can give you the damage report." Gabriel sat next to your bed, more relaxed than you'd ever seen him. He looked better than you remembered, no bruises, no blood stains. He was back in his signature beanie, wearing his casual Blackwatch outfit: hoodie, jeans, and those insane metal boots. There was a chair and a curtain surrounding your bed.

"How bad?" You asked.
"You're missing half your index, middle, and ring fingers on your left hand. They were pretty shredded from the explosion. Angela saved what she could."

"Now I'll never be concert pianist," you said, trying for levity. It fell flat in your ears.

"We can get you prostheses," Gabriel said, his deep voice soft. "Maybe with extra attachments, if you have any ideas."

"Multitool, pressure injector, and vibrator," spilled out of your mouth and then you clapped your uninjured hand over your mouth. "Or knives. I can be Agent Stabby Fingers." You held your mutilated hand up. "Wow, that sounded better in my head, less B movie. Is this how it starts? Because I saw some of those cybernetic mods on those mercs and am I going to look like that?"

Gabriel rubbed his forehead. "I'm hoping that's the anesthetic talking."

"It's the panic," you agreed. "You OK? Because you look OK."

"Fine." He folded his hands together. "Except for all paperwork. You should eat."

A blonde woman appeared from behind the curtain, with a tray. "Good, you are awake. Eat first, then take these." She set a cup of pills beside your pudding cup.

It was bland stuff, creamed corn, steamed carrots, and something you thought was turnips. You ate, too hungry to taste anything or be self-conscious that Gabriel was watching you. The pudding cup was best part, even if it was tapioca and not chocolate. You took your pills, and put the tray aside, feeling more human than you could remember.

"Where am I? What is happening? Did anyone else get out?"

"You are the sole survivor of the terrible accident that befell Black Base Delta," Gabriel said formally.

"What?" You screeched.

"I'm sorry. You will be debriefed soon." Gabriel studied your face and you realized your mouth was hanging open. His eyes darkened and he leaned closer. "Do you trust me?"

You stared at him, trying to work your jaw. He'd saved your life, carried you through the snow, and made sure your wounds were treated. He'd been here when you woke up, the only familiar face left. You didn't think he was going to throw you under the bus, make it out to somehow be your fault. You didn't think he'd do that. You took a deep breath. "Yes, Gabriel."

His frowned slightly, like he didn't believe you. "Then here are your orders. You are not authorized to talk about the events leading up to the destruction of Black Base Delta with anyone lacking the proper clearances. I am your commanding officer. You will not pick and choose how to follow these orders, am I making myself clear?"

You sat back in the bed, staring at Gabriel. There was a hard cast to his face, mouth set in a grim line. He meant it. "Yes, sir."

"There are procedures before you can be promoted to full agent. You are ordered to write an account of the events leading up to the base's destruction, as well as your activities that evening. You will also undergo a polygraph. If you fail to complete these in a satisfactory manner you will be dismissed."
"Understood," you said. "Sir."

Clenching your fists you stared down at your lap. Eating had been a mistake. You felt queasy now. How were you supposed to take this? You didn't expect him to hug you and tell you everything was going to be OK. However this reception put real fear into you. The rug had been pulled out from under you again and you were falling.

Gabriel, no Commander Reyes got up and left.

Hahaha. How were you supposed type while drugged and down a hand? You sat in the bed and stared hard at the tablet Captain Amari had brought you. Oh, voice recognition, right. The painkillers helped, but you really wanted to take the bandages off and see the damage for yourself. Dr. Ziegler had actually smacked your hand when she caught you trying to remove it, then lectured you and threatened to get restraints.

"Focus, Agent," Captain Amari said.

"I'm not...entirely here," you told Captain Amari.

"I can tell," she said politely. "But you need to give your account, while your memory is fresh."

"My entire brain is floaty weird," you said. "And I'm sorry I said you were pretty, not because you aren't, but because it was not a socially appropriate occasion to make that observation and I wouldn't want to detract from your value as a big goddamn hero, which certain types will do if they view a woman as "pretty." I only have platonic admiration for you, Captain, so please don't be weirded out. Also, I was hallucinating, only that...kiss wasn't a hallucination. Shit. Oh my god, why am I talking so much? What the hell is wrong with me?"

Captain Amari only raised a brow, and to her credit, she didn't look the least bit surprised.

An epiphany slapped you in the face and you gawped. They'd drugged you on purpose. Your inner voice grew steadily more paranoid, especially after Commander Reyes called everything an "accident." You stared at your hands. They didn't have reliable truth serum, that you knew of. That you knew of, you pleb. "Shit spiders," you muttered.

"Go on," Captain Amari said.

OK, they wanted to read your mission report? They wanted to drug you first? Fuck'em. You were going to give them their damn post-mission report. It would be the best post-mission report ever.

The screen reflected your thoughts. Apparently you'd said all that out loud.

Captain Amari was laughing at you.

You began at racket Valdez made. You ended at the rescue. You tried to gloss over anything that made you feel. You admitted you and Shin were sleeping together, but you didn't have to tell them how his death turned your insides to broken glass. You admitted you might have a little bit of hero worship where Captain Patel was concerned, you didn't have to tell them it was like burying your family all over again. You admitted you did everything you could to save Commander Reyes, you didn't have to tell them you were ready to give up after that. So you didn't tell them what you didn't have to. Just the facts with an unhealthy dose of truth serum induced stream-of-consciousness. Because fuck'em.

By the time you were done, Captain Amari wasn't laughing any more.

They let you rest after the mission report. You'd had no visitors, and every time Angela pulled back the curtain, you'd hoped, prayed, Gabriel had been wrong and someone else from your unit would appear. That was a pipedream. Two days later, you were released from the infirmary. Your tanto was missing, as were your clothes. Well, Shin's shirt. You suspected it wouldn't smell like him any more, even if you did get it back. They gave you generic sweats to wear.

Your leg was functional, Angela having done some bizarre pseudo-skin graft to prevent infection. You could walk, but you wouldn't be running any time soon. Your left hand remained bandaged. It felt whole, and your fingers itched, alleged missing parts included, but you couldn't get to them. The sensation was driving you mad.

Captain Amari escorted you through the base. You were in Switzerland of course, and it was huge. You took it in quietly, knowing Shin would have liked it here. Most people ignored you, though one or two stopped to whisper to a companion. You wondered what story was being told. Gas leak? Omnics? Rocks fell and almost everyone died?

"What you have endured is unfair," Captain Amari, said out of the blue. She hadn't come out admitted you were drugged, but you both knew it.

"It's about to get worse, isn't it?" You crossed your arms. Shin would have liked Switzerland. You were starting to hate it.

"That depends on you," she said. "You left some things out of that mission report."

"I spat out every flickering thought I had, for you guys to dissect." You paused. "But then, the newbie is always suspicious. Especially if they're the "sole survivor." Fuck." Imagine what would have happened if you hadn't saved Commander Reyes. Your life wouldn't be worth shit. You turned your head. "I told you what happened, Captain."

"Everything?" She asked.

"Everything that happened, as I remember. Some parts are fuzzy." Like Shin's death. Half your trip with Gabriel, scratch that Commander Reyes. You weren't in a position to be that informal with him now. You understood that clearly.

"You didn't tell us everything," Captain Amari said gently. "But you will." She opened a door and ushered you in, shutting it firmly behind you. You almost turned right around and tried to walk back out.

You were developing so many fucking trust issues.

"Sit down, agent." The man behind the table was polished. French accent, neat pointed mustache, and even in combat blacks he looked debonair. You distrusted him immediately, but "Have you taken a lie detector test before?" He asked.

"Nope," you said.

"It is quite simple, and the technology has caught up a great deal." He regarded you a piercing stare. "Anything you've heard about "beating" the test, I would recommend forgetting. It won't help you, and we know what to look for."

He placed sensors on your wrist, chest, face, spine, and legs. A screen lit up on his tablet monitoring pulse, heart rate, and other metrics you weren't so sure of.

"I am Gérard Lacroix," he said. "You may have heard of me."

To your surprise, he smiled slightly at that. "All right. I want to get some baseline readings. State something true."

"This sucks," you said. "I'd never heard of you before."

"Truth," he agreed. "Now lie."

"I love surprise tests," you said.

"Lie," he agreed. "Now give me something complex."

"I like Overwatch. It's great."

He actually laughed at you. "Interesting choice. Now what does this make you feel?" He held your tanto in hand. Your felt your heart speed up.

"That's mine," you said, measuring your words. "I want it back."

"And if I told you I had to hold onto for evidence?"

"I want it back," you practically snarled.

"Good," he said, placing it on the table. "We will talk about that later."

You glared at him. He was the bad cop and the insufferable Sherlock Holmes rolled into one smarmy French pastry. And if he was against you, well, you were already fucked.

He started easy, asking questions about your childhood. They were mostly "yes" or "no." You tried not to let your gaze stray to the mirrored window on the side. Captain Amari was there and you knew Commander Reyes was as well. Who else? It didn't matter.

"Have you heard of Talon?" He asked.

"No. Yes," you amended. "Commander Reyes mentioned them when we were escaping."

"Was that the first time you'd heard of them?"

"Yes," you said.

Lacroix gave you a skeptical look. Or maybe that's how rich people looked at reformed criminals. You couldn't tell.

"Are you sure that's the first time you've heard of them?"

"Yes," you repeated, annoyed.

"And you've never encountered them before?"

"Not that I know of," you said.

"Are you sure?" he asked, his tone implying something you didn't like.

"I'm sure," you ground out.

He gave you half a minute of silence, leisurely inspecting his screen.

"I know nothing except the name," you said.

Lacroix tapped something on his screen, ignoring you. You wanted to cross your arms, but you held still, glaring at your interrogator.

"You were a smuggler," he said, switching gears. "And it's known that you procured things for fellow agents." His tone grew snide. "Commander Reyes mentioned there were issues with manifests. Were you stealing and selling Overwatch property?"

"No!" You threw your hands up. "I was a probationary agent! Captain Patel said if I washed out she'd take me out back with a shovel. So no, I wasn't about to fuck that up."

"But you were doing a side business," he said.

"Yes. Tahini, silk flowers," your brain stuttered as you remembered Rivka. You had concerns about what she was doing, but you weren't about to voice them to this guy. He was looking for something to nail you with. "Lots of booze and cigarettes," you added.

"Illegal narcotics?" He came around the table, leaning over you.

"Nothing harder than booze and cigarettes," you repeated.

"What else?" Lacroix asked, scrutinizing the readings on his screen.

"Vintage porn mags, rabbit meat, calligraphy brushes..."

"Were you selling anything stolen?"

"No," you said firmly.

"Did you ever smuggle unauthorized weapons onto the base?"

"No."

"Where did this knife come from?"

"Shin gave it to me." You stared at it. You would be getting it back.

"And you were sleeping with Lieutenant Sato?"

"Yes. And we were fucking." You held your head up, daring him to judge. He was unfazed.

"You are aware fraternization with a direct superior is against regulations?"

"I took my orders from Captain Patel," you said. It was your one flimsy defense. But it was also true. "If Shin gave me orders, they were from her."

"Semantics," he said. "Did Lieutenant Sato use his position of authority to convince you to have sexual relations with him?"

"No, we were consenting adults," you said, your eyes narrowed.

"Are you aware of anyone in your unit, Shin Sato included, contributing to the sabotage of Black Base Delta?"

"No!" You might have shouted. "I watched my friends die," you said grimly. "You be careful what you say about them."

"Are you threatening me, mademoiselle?" He asked, sounding vaguely amused.

"Friendly warning," you said with a feral smile.

"Lie," he replied with an easy smile.

You sat there, breathing deep, willing yourself to calm down.

"Did you lie or otherwise try to beat the truth serum when you gave your post-mission support?"

"I tried to reign in what I was spewing," you said. "Obviously, it didn't work."

"Yes, "shit spiders" indeed." A trace of amusement in his voice. But his eyes were hard. "You left things out."

"No, I told you what happened."

"You started in Lieutenant Sato's quarters?"

"I spent a lot of time there," you said. "But yes, we had sex."

"You got separated and followed a trail of bodies?"

"Yes."

"Did you shirk? Were you hiding? Was that what got Lieutenant Sato killed?"

You clenched your fists. "Fuck you."

"Answer the question, agent." He said your title like an insult.

"No. I didn't hide." You were in that hall again, taking in the bodies of the dead. You knew them all. You also knew they were dead. You also knew they were gone. You just had to reach Shin... "I was trying to find him and I was too fucking slow. OK? I know it. I took the shot, but-" You wiped your eyes defiantly. "Yeah, I was too slow. It was a mistake to depend on me. But I didn't run away from the fight and I didn't betray anyone." Your breathing was ragged and you hated that you were shedding tears in front of this jackass. It felt like he was winning and you just wanted to punch him in his stupid rich smug face.

"So you admit you didn't do a good job?"

You held up your hand. "I've got skin grafts and a maimed hand. I've paid for my stupidity."

"Minor cosmetic injuries," Lacroix said, gesturing with his two good hands and you wished your left hand wasn't bandaged so you could throttle him.

"Anything requiring surgery isn't minor," you growled.

He hmmed, and scrolled through his tablet screen, but you could see his shrewd eyes on you. You held eye contact, unwilling to show him fear.

"You killed, hmm, eight people? Any way of confirming that? You only have so-so combat scores."

"I can count. Eight people, at least half of them with cybernetic upgrades." You paused. "You know what, it doesn't matter. I don't need credit for that."

"Do you know where the pulse rifle came from?"

"I got it off the cyborg that murdered Shin."

You were getting a feel for his pattern. Lull, sharp question, lull, gut punch. Repeat. This wasn't just a lie detector test, this was an interrogation. On a rational level, you understood why it was necessary. But it was a shit thing to do. You were vulnerable and Lacroix was exploiting that.

"Were you ordered to get close to Commander Reyes?"

"I was ordered to "keep that jackass alive." End quote."

Lacroix chuckled. "And those were your only orders regarding him?"

"Yes."

"Are you going to tell us what you left out of your mission report?"

"You keep saying that, but I didn't. Well actually, I have no clue, because I don't have the clearance to read it. To my knowledge, I didn't leave anything out, but I was drugged, so who knows?"

Lacroix snapped his tablet on the table.

"You think you are clever, but you aren't fooling me. You think this a joke? Thirty six people are dead. And you want to make witty bon mots?"

You stubbornly glared at him.

"What do you know about Talon?"

"That I want them dead," you spat. "If it was them, I want them dead."

Lacroix watched you impassively. "Have you ever collaborated or worked for an outside agency to the detriment of Overwatch and or Blackwatch?"

"No."

"Have you had sexual relations with Commander Reyes?"

"No!" Shin had just died. "What kind of questions are these?"

"The ones I am asking you," Lacroix said sharply. "What else do you know about Talon?"

Lacroix hit the important points multiple times and from different angles. Talon, your smuggling, and whatever he thought you were leaving out. You didn't know how long you were in there, but by the end, you were drained.

"Are we done?" You scowled. There'd been a few moments when you'd nearly gotten out of your chair and slugged him, but you forced yourself to stay sitting.

"Allow me to be blunt. You have already broken several rules, and demonstrated you don't really care about regulations. You have blatantly defied orders on more than one occasion. Do you understand how bad this looks?"

"I don't care," you said. "I completed my mission. Commander Reyes is alive. I'm missing finger parts. I don't care. Give me my tanto and I will fucking walk home."

You weren't sure where home was now, but it didn't matter. It wasn't here.

Lacroix stood and showed you the door. Stone-faced, you found Captain Amari waiting for you. She silently escorted you to another room and gestured for you to go inside. It was a cell. You considered running.

"Do you trust me?" Commander Reyes had asked while you lay in that hospital bed. You'd said "yes," but maybe not so much. You forced yourself to relax and step into the cage.

Captain Amari shut you in.

You sat down on the bunk and waited.

---

"You want to what?" Gabriel asked sharply.

"We need to interrogate her," Gérard Lacroix said, his voice soft. "While I trust your judgment, it is also possible she is a Talon plant. Wouldn't it be convenient? After saving your life, you would trust her implicitly."

Gabriel, Jack, Gérard, and Ana sat around the conference room table. Each of them held a copy of your dossier.

"Her background is impossible to verify," Ana said examining the file. "Half that region was wiped out a decade ago."

"She has some dubious connections," Gérard continued. "I believe you Gabriel, but we have to do our due diligence."
"Aishani picked her out, Jack. That counts for something."

Jack nodded. "It does. And you like her. That counts for even more." Warmth flared in Gabriel's chest. Jack was trying. "But given what happened, we need to question her thoroughly. If she's as good an agent as you think, she'll be fine. This needs to be done if you want her working on the operation."

Gabriel growled under his breath. They were right of course. And he was biased. This was all routine. "It will get her clearances out of the way too," he said.

"Blackwatch efficiency," Jack said, shaking his head. "Gabriel you're our best interrogator, but..."

"I will do it, Gabriel. She trusts you and that is well and good. No sense breaking that. I do not mind being the bad cop." Gérard picked up the mission report. "Shit spiders?"

You might have laid down and cried a little before you passed out. It wasn't the worst day of your life, but it was the day when everything hit you at once. Captain Patel was dead. Shin was dead. Overwatch thought you were a traitor.

When you woke up, Captain Amari was sitting in the room. You were too drained to make a fuss. You just sat up, rubbed your face, and waited for her to speak.

"Is there anything you wish to say?" She asked.

"I don't think there's anything left to say." You hesitated. "No wait, shit spiders."

She didn't look amused. "Shit spiders are not a good defense."

"Do I need a lawyer?" You asked, because you didn't know any.

"Blackwatch trouble doesn't go to court," she said, a little too ominous for your taste.

You leaned against the wall. "Is it trial by gladiator? Because if so, I'm fucked."

"Do you have anything you can give me so I can help you?"

"Uhh..."

"Information," she clarified, looking annoyed.

"I answered all Lacroix's questions to the best of my ability. I gave you my awesome post-mission report. I mean, I can tell you the price of tulips in Peru, as of a week ago, but I've got nothing else, ma'am."

She stood. "Good luck, agent." She exited, and two men stepped into the room.

The cowboy looked familiar. But it was the cyborg that had you tensing. You didn't realize Blackwatch had them too. Goddamnit.

"You're to come along with us," the cowboy said. He was grinning and touching the revolver on his belt. The cyborg waited silently.

You followed, watching the cyborg from the side. His overall design looked nothing like the ones you fought in the 9th Circle. He was more metal than they were. Part of his chest and one arm were flesh, but you weren't sure how much was left under all the metal. You flexed your left hand unconsciously.

"It's rude to stare," the cowboy said.

"Sorry," you muttered, and regretted it.

The cyborg met your gaze, his eyes the only human part visible on his face. "I understand it is horrifying to see." His accent was Japanese, heavier than Shin's. Thankfully, they sounded nothing alike.

You shrugged. Yeah, cyborgs were fucking terrifying. You were going to have nightmares for the rest of your life. But it seemed rude to say that to him. "You just look really different from the last batch I met."

"Huh," the cowboy said, exchanging looks with the cyborg. "How so?"

"Hush," the cyborg said. "We are not supposed to be conversing."

"Their whole design was much clunkier. And they were wearing shirts," you said.

The cowboy snickered.

"Hush," the cyborg repeated, but he wasn't looking at you.

You walked down the hall, past other cells and what you were sure were interrogation chambers. You didn't really want to find out. You followed them till they stopped outside a room, the placard by the door said "Commander Gabriel Reyes."

You sucked in a breath.

Did you trust him?

It didn't matter. You'd done what he asked.

The cowboy knocked.

"Enter."

The officer was large, two desks, a large terminal, and Commander Reyes sitting on what you assumed was his desk. Strike Commander Morrison, Captain Amari, and Agent Lacroix were there as well.

"Lucky Strike," Commander Reyes said, inclining his head at you.

Tight-lipped, you nodded back.

The cowboy elbowed you lightly. "He wants you to salute, say "sir," the whole shebang. Gets kind of salty if you don't."

"Shut it, Jesse," Commander Reyes said. "I bet you three are wondering why you're here."
"How come you don't have to salute?" Jesse murmured.

"Because I'm pretty sure I don't work here," you growled back.

"Shut it," Commander Reyes snapped. Then he said your name. "You've been promoted to full agent."

You looked at him, then Lacroix, then back at Commander Reyes. You couldn't quite get the incredulity off your face. "Who said I wanted to work for you after...all that?" You waved your injured hand trying to come up with a gesture that encompassed your feelings. But your middle finger wasn't available.

Jesse began to laugh. Strike Commander Morrison turned around so you couldn't see his face. Captain Amari covered her mouth. Agent Lacroix just smiled pleasantly.

Commander Reyes fixed his burning glare on you. You stared back unwilling to be cowed.

"I thought you wanted to avenge your friends." There was no heat in his voice. But he didn't look happy.

"I thought you suspected me of being a traitor!" You threw your hands up. "Why the hell would you think that?"

"I think we should clarify. You passed your...tests," Lacroix said. "I am sorry for the deception, but that was standard tradecraft. Interrogate everyone. Capitalize on a weak spot and torque till you say something interesting. We had to be sure."

"Meaning you're a gullible idiot," Commander Reyes said. "You're in, and everyone in here is cleared to know about Operation Shit Spiders."

"Seriously?" Jesse asked.

"It was randomly generated," Commander Reyes said without batting an eye.

You rubbed your face. There were too many feelings inside you and you didn't know which one was going to surface first. You wanted to hate Lacroix, and you certainly weren't going to any of his dinner parties, but it all made sense now and you _were_ an idiot.

"Are you in, Lucky Strike?" Commander Reyes asked.

"Yes, sir," you said, face buried in your hands.

"Are you all right?" Captain Amari asked.

"I'm...processing." You were trying not to hate everybody right now, because they didn't actually deserve it. OK, maybe a little. Maybe you were overreacting. You couldn't tell. Your judgment was severely impaired.

"Is there cake?" You asked when you had your face under control. It seemed the safest thing to say.

"No," Commander Reyes said. He sounded annoyed. Why was he annoyed? He hadn't been stuck in the infirmary for days. He hadn't been under interrogation. Was a little cake such an unreasonable request?
"I told you we should have brought a cake," the Strike Commander whispered to Captain Amari. "New Overwatch agents get cake."

"You can get cake in the mess hall, after we've briefed Genji and Jesse," Commander Reyes said.

"Is he lying to me?" You asked Genji.

"There is usually cake in the mess hall," the cyborg told you.

Jesse elbowed you again.

It almost looked like there was smoke pouring from Commander Reyes' ears. You shut up.

"Was that...necessary?" Gabriel asked. Jack, Ana, and him had all sat in on the interrogation. He'd winced at some of the implications, but Gérard had not been out of line.

Gérard looked between him and Jack. "The interrogation was pretty light. These things are always delicate. But her responses were consistent and the fact she hasn't heard of me tipped the scales in her favor. I am satisfied that she is not a double agent."

"I meant the question about sex with me. Seriously? That was on your mind?" He looked at Jack, wondering for a moment, if he'd put Gérard up to it.

"That was for her protection," Gérard said lightly.

"What do you mean?" Gabriel narrowed his eyes.

"There's a rumor going around that she's your...lover," Ana said. "Since we're officially calling it an "accident" and she is the only one who survived at night, coincidentally alongside you, well, you know how it goes." She wrinkled her nose.

"Jack-"

"I'm not worried Gabriel," he said. "I'm fully briefed on the situation." He rested his hand on Gabriel's shoulder. It'd been like that since he got back. Jack couldn't stop touching him, reassuring himself that Gabriel was here and alive.

"Should there be any kind of inquiry, it will be on-record that your relationship was...above-board." Gérard folded his hands in his lap. "I have no lingering concerns. It would be wise to get her a therapist for the grief."

"Already set up. Her quarters have been allocated and I'll drop off her things in a minute. Any other issues?"

"You're soft on her. With you, she gets away with things most people wouldn't dream of," Ana said mildly.

Gabriel shrugged. "She saved my life in a dramatic and touching fashion. I'm a sucker for grand gestures." He tilted his head back. "Aishani told me to take care of her. So yeah, she's not just another grunt now. She's one of Aishani's strays and she's mourning her unit." He paused. "That's why you're in charge of her. You aren't a big softie like me."

Ana sat back in her chair. "All right. No objections. Jack?"

"No objections. Now will there be cake?" Jack asked.

"This is Blackwatch," Gabriel said. "We don't need no stinking cake."

There was white cake in the mess hall, but you found yourself unable to eat it. You packed it up in a napkin and Jesse walked you back to your new room.

"Welcome aboard," he told you with a charming smile. "Some time I'll tell you about my initiation; it was a barrel of tarantulas and there was no cake."

"That sounds awful," you said.

"It was," he agreed.

The door was keyed to your biometrics. When you opened it, Commander Reyes was inside, sitting in your chair. It was a small suite - bed, desk, dresser, your own bathroom. It reminded you a little of Shin's bedroom and you had to take a deep breath.

"People are going to talk," you said walking in and shutting the door. You set the cake down on the dresser.

He grunted. "People are already talking. The best thing to do is ignore them."

"Since you're warning me, I'm guessing it's nothing nice." You crossed your arms and leaned against the wall. "Hit me."

"You only survived because we were out having sex." He said it bluntly and you winced. "I know."

You blew out a frustrated breath. "My tanto?"

"Here." He handed it to you with both hands. "It's a good blade. I'm sorry things are starting out so rough."

"I've seen spy movies. I get it." You tucked the blade in your waistband. "Do you want me to confirm, deny, or be coy?"

"Up to you."

"Don't want to make things difficult for you and the Strike Commander."

There was a long pause. "He's aware of the rumors. He's also knows they're false."

You pushed your hair back. "I'll wait and see how people are acting before I react."

"I've scheduled you a meeting with Angela and Torby tomorrow at 0900 hours. Your bandages are good to come off and they will get you set up with prostheses."

"Thanks," you said, not looking at your hand.

"Your clothes were pretty shredded, but what's left is in the drawer. There are some extra sets of sweats. You can go by the quartermaster tomorrow and put in an order for uniforms. You're getting a pay raise by the way. Officially, you're my assistant. Unofficially, you're part of the team that's investigating just how this happened and how far it goes."

"Talon," you said.

"Probably," he rubbed his nose. "Are we good?"

"Yes, commander."

"Gabriel," he said. "Gabriel in private is fine."

"OK," you said, squashing your urge to be petty and add "commander" to the end of that sentence. It was a near thing.

"As for chain of command, you're Ana's subordinate."

"Why?"

"I'm...difficult on assistants. It's a high turnover job." He rubbed the back of his neck. "If I'm asking too much of you, say something to Ana. She'll be an impartial judge."

"It'll also fuel the rumor that we're sleeping together," you said, not entirely convinced.

"It's not meant to be common knowledge," he said. "Expect shit tons of paperwork, some commendations that will be top secret, and more training." He stood. "You're getting grief counseling too. That's not negotiable."

You cocked your head to the side. "That's awfully presumptuous of you."

"I've buried a lot of friends, chica. It doesn't stop hurting. You're going to need help, and if you don't like this one, we've got a few on staff. My door is open and so is Ana's."

You averted your eyes, because the pain etched on Gabriel's face was very real. It struck a hard chord and you rubbed your temples. "OK. Thanks. For getting me set up."

"Do you need anything else?"

"A map. Street clothes and gear. New friends." There was more bite in your words than you anticipated.

Gabriel brow furrowed. "You're still angry." You didn't recognize the expression he wore. "I'm not going to apologize for doing my job."

"Not asking for one." You picked up the paper plate of cake and the plastic fork. "I'm...not myself. I've killed people before. I've seen people die. But it wasn't like this." You took a bite of cake. It was OK. Valdez's were better. You got an involuntary flash of his battered body, brains leaking out. You forced yourself to swallow your cake and put the plate down. "I am still sore about the whole promotion process. I get it and I'll get over it. But don't act like I don't have a right to be upset."
"Most people don't push me, Lucky Strike." He didn't sound aggravated any more.

"Most people don't push Commander Reyes. And I won't. But I'll push Gabriel, if that's how it's going to be." You tentatively signaled that you understood his boundaries, hoping you hadn't misread the situation.

Gabriel leaned back in your chair. He was too big for it. Hell, he was too big for your room. Your leg was starting to ache and you just wanted to take some of the nice pills Angela gave you and lay down. "Not in front of subordinates," he said. "Ana, Gérard, and Jack are fine."

"Understood."

Gabriel stood. Up close, you had forgotten how much larger he was than you. He towered over most people. "Get some rest," he said. "It'll get better." He patted you on the shoulder.

He left and you took your pills, before dropping onto the unfamiliar bed, and drifting into a troubled sleep.

Chapter End Notes

I like comments. They feed the beast.
You awoke to pounding on your door. The clock said 0800 hours.

"Time to get up, buttercup." Jesse's voice was muffled, but not by very much. "Got some stuff for you."

"I'm awake," you said, rolling out of bed. You'd gone to sleep in your clothes and was it time to change your dressings? You didn't remember, but you were seeing Angela today anyway.

You opened the door to find Jesse fully dressed, with a large box in hand. Now that you were paying attention, he was younger than you initially thought, the facial hair giving him the illusion of age. He moved carefully, like he'd recently filled out, hardened up, and hadn't quite gotten used to the changes in his body. You recognized those circumstances, because that was you four months after Captain Patel recruited you.

"Captain Amari and the commander got you stuff since you're starting all over. Clothes, pretty much all black," he held up a t-shirt, waved it in front of you, then tossed it over his shoulder. "Tablet - there's a map preloaded and everything." He handed you the device. "And my personal favorite, amber-scented lotion. Captain Amari uses the stuff. It's not cheap and it smells like heaven." He popped the lid and inhaled deeply.

You were reasonably sure everything had been neatly packed before Jesse rifled through it. "Thanks," you said. "Did you...uh...want the lotion?"

Jesse's eyes widened at your implication. "Now you're mistaking me for one of those unsavory types."

"Everyone needs lotion. For dry skin." You kept your tone flat. Jesse could read into it what he wanted.

"Naw, don't feel right just taking it from you." He paused. "But I'll give you a bottle of whiskey for it."

"Sure," you said. "That sounds fine. I can't drink lotion."

"There are kinds."

"It's too early to think about that," you said.

Jesse stepped in and set the box down. He left the door open. "I'll be right back."

You opened your drawers, finding clean sweats in one and your tattered clothes in another. Your sidearm was there as well. You got it out and tucked it in your waistband. You'd pick up a holster from the quartermaster later.

Jesse was back, holding up a bottle of Maker's Mark. It wasn't impressive, but as you said, you weren't going to drink lotion. You opened the bottle, sniffed, and took a swig. It was decent. You tossed Jesse the lotion.

"Kinda early for drinking."

"Inspecting the merchandise." You set the bottle down.

"You're supposed to meet Angela at the infirmary. I'm free and clear this morning. Want me to walk you there?"

The you from before would have enjoyed Jesse's fussing, maybe even flirted back. But the you now... You closed your eyes. "Thanks for the offer, but I have to get showered and changed."

"I'll wait," he said brightly.

"Not necessary."

"Got nothing better to do, sweetpea."

"I don't need a babysitter," you snapped.

"No, you don't. But in Blackwatch, we have a buddy system for greenhorns. Guess you don't know about it. And maybe you don't need it. But I'm here to help you get oriented, like it or not. Commander's orders."

You exhaled slowly. Orders, you understood. "All right."

You didn't cry in the shower, but it was a near thing. The last shower you'd had was days ago and Shin was still alive. The sheer relief of personally washing off some of the filth was cathartic. Sure they cleaned you up in the infirmary, but that was different. The hot water soothed your nerves and while you had to do some interesting acrobatics to keep your bandaged parts dry, you did not need Jesse's help.

You pulled on the black sweats. They fit well enough, but that didn't surprise you. Gabriel had an eye for detail. You rummaged through the gift box and found a bag of hair ties. Your hair had gotten longer than you remembered.

"Feelin' better?" Jesse asked, standing in the hallway.

"Need breakfast," you said.

"After," Jesse said. "In case Angela and Torby need to do some workups."

You re-equipped your tanto and sidearm, then grabbed the tablet. The two of you walked in easy silence. You pondered the lotion. Overwatch provided basic moisturizers. You could requisition that kind of stuff at the 9th Circle. And it wasn't the worst lube ever. So that left the quality and the scent. Was Jesse the pampered type? Didn't fit his image, but that cowboy persona seemed pretty cultivated. Did Jesse like scented lotions? Or did he like how Captain Amari smelled personally?

"Here we are," Jesse opened the infirmary door and held it for you, but did not come in.

You recognized Angela. The short, bearded man who stood beside her must be "Torby."
"Hello, sorry I'm early. Jesse is...escorting me everywhere."

"Blackwatch policy," Torby snorted. "So many people get pressganged in that they have to kept on a short leash. What'd you do?"

You blinked. "I...survived?"

"Her unit was transferred," Angela said. "She is not one of Gabriel's hard cases."

Torby relaxed a little. "Makes more sense then," he muttered.

"We were just talking about your hand. " Angela smiled. "Sit. Torby took measurements while you were under anesthesia. I think you'll like the finished product."

"Friends call me Torby. You can call me Torbjörn or Mr. Lindholm." He gave you a hard look but you didn't take the bait. It was too early in the morning to pick a fight with a dwarf.

"Be nice, Torby. Lucky Strike saved Gabriel's life. She is a good egg."

"Why do you think I'm sore at her? We had the perfect chance to be rid of that egotistical, jumped-up sociopath."

You stiffened. Someone was trying to kill Gabriel. Rationally, you knew it was probably a joke. It just rubbed you wrong.

"Now he's back, shouting at everyone and requisitioning all sorts of things. Do you understand what that does to my workload?"

Angela noticed your expression. "Torby is much like Gabriel. Very...fussy."

"You take that back!"

You sat there, a little dazed. Torby was joking, so you needed to relax. Angela took your left hand and peeled off the wrapping. Your fingers were almost a uniform length. The pinky was now the longest. You were missing index, middle, ring fingers down to the second knuckle. The skin was shiny and new with almost no scarring. It was borderline obscene. You couldn't take your eyes off your maimed hand.

"Did you amputate or-"

"A little bit of bone. It would have given you difficulties. There wasn't much left by the time you got here," Angela said.

"Oh." You wiggled your stubs. "OK."

"Hold still," Torby said. He got out a box and took your hand. "If you can't move them, that's Angela's fault. I don't do the nerve-augments. These are omnium, fully articulated so you can type, punch, eat a sandwich. You can also stick your fingers in the oven or underwater. But remember, metal conducts heat and electricity. So you can burn yourself or short your fingers out. I have also included the requested extensions." He sounded business-like, but there was a gleam in his eye.

"The nerve augments double as the socket," Angela said. "These are the basic models, for typing and every day activities."

Something pricked at your stubs, and you swore, clenching your left hand. Dull metal digits dug into your palm. You released immediately, watching the metal fingers move on will. There were neat nailbeds shaped on the metal fingertips. Nothing mimicking prints though.

You fanned your fingers, rolling them up and down. There was a slight stutter in the middle finger and Torby frowned. You forced it again, and it rolled properly.

"That's you Angela."

"Mmm," Angela said, studying your hand. "Common acclimatization issue. It will resolve itself over time."

Torby set a metal case in front of you. Inside were other finger tips.

"Multi-tool. Includes a light. Very useful for missions." He pressed on the nailbed and the finger split open, revealing a tiny Swiss army knife configuration. He placed it back in the case. "Pressure injector. I assume you're looking to drug or poison people. Blackwatch," He grumbled. "The trigger is pressure on the fingertip. So don't poke yourself." He demonstrated and a needle shot out from under the fake fingernail. Then he opened the finger and showed the little double-sealed bag that would hold the liquid. "Spring-loaded blades. Two inches and not good for sawing through bones," he said, pointing to another row of metal fingertips. "You have to flex your whole hand. It'll take some practice."

Angela showed you how to deactivate the prostheses, and swap them out. You tried the blade-fingers. It took a few tries, but they popped out smoothly.

"This is really cool," you told Torby. "I'm going to eat cheese with these." You awaited the outrage but he shrugged.

"Better than I was expecting," he told Angela. "Oh yes. Vibrator." He poked the nailbed and the finger whisked to life.

You stared in horror at both Torby and Angela. "I was high as fuck! I'd been drugged multiple times that day. He actually asked for that?"

Torby snorted. "Reyes is a right bastard," he said, smirking at you.

"I may kill him," you marveled. "All that work...and I may have to kill him."

Torby's smile was downright evil. "So this might take some practice, But you can flex your finger to increase speed and power."

You buried you face in your right hand. "I'm going to go throw myself off out a window now."

"You are making a chicken out of a feather."

"I really have no clue what that means."

"You are making a big deal out of nothing, girl."

"Sorry, I've never had a coworker make me a prosthetic finger vibrator. I don't know what to say."

"A "thank you" is appropriate," Torby said.

You weren't feeling thankful. Mortified, would be the right word.
"So you don't want it?" he asked innocently. "Because I can scrap it. No skin off my nose." He looked entirely too smug.

"Uh..." You thought about it. That was actually terribly handy. Oh. Terribly punny too. Good thing you didn't say any of those things aloud.

"You're like a cat walking around hot porridge." What the hell did that even mean?

"You made it. I might as well take it. For science," you said.

"Yes, about that. These aren't free, you know," Torby said.

You made a mental note to check your bank account. "What do I owe you?"

"We would like you to come back weekly. Any feedback and data you can provide would be very helpful. And of course, if you're having problems, come find either of us," Angela said, completely unfazed by the sex toy. "Was this helpful on a mission? What kinds of additions could you use?"

You could do that. "What kind of energy use are we looking at?"

"Augments need to be charged monthly if you're doing heavy things, like using your extensions. The basic models can go a year."

You stared. "OK. I can do that."

Torby closed the case up. "Well then, we have a deal."

You looked at your metal fingers, attached to little metal disks that occasionally glowed. It was jarring.

"Our flesh sleeves are still cumbersome. They look like skin, but impair movement. If you don't like the aesthetics, I suggest wearing gloves," Angela said.

"Thank you," you said.

"Clean them regularly," Torby said. "Especially if you're killing people. Or eating cheese." He set a bottle of solution on the table. "Soak them overnight if they get really dirty. You can wipe down the augments. Don't soak those."

Feeling slightly overwhelmed, you nodded mechanically.

"We will send you instructions," Angela said. "And while you're here, I want to look at that leg."

Jesse was still waiting when you got out. He took one look at your hand and whistled. "Fancy."

You shrugged, holding the case. You'd swapped out the basics for the tool and two knives. It was a little tricky to switch fingers on your own, but you'd adapt.
"Torby says Blackwatch pressgangs a lot of people," you began. "Captain Patel didn't really want to be in Blackwatch, but she said she agreed to it because Commander Reyes asked. Is that what Torby meant?"

Jesse tilted his head back. "Nope."

"Didn't think so," you said.

"Not so long I ago, I ran with the Deadlock gang. Course, Blackwatch brought'em down and Commander Reyes gave me a choice, join Blackwatch or join the chain gang. Ain't got no regrets, but it was rough starting out." He paused. "Genji's story is rougher. Don't ask him about it."

"Noted." Wasn't your business anyway.

Jesse took you to the Quartermaster, getting you uniforms, basic necessities, and gloves. Gloves and sweats looked a little strange, but your metal fingers looked stranger.

"Gloves gonna be your thing, Lucky?"

"Maybe," you said. "I don't like looking at them just yet. The loss is still fresh." Also, you weren't sure you had good control over the tools. You were careful not to flex your hand.

"Now I know it ain't none of my business, Lucky, " Jesse began as the two of you carried your stuff back to your room. You suppressed the urge to shut him down. Jesse nice, and likeable, and trying to settle you in. "But you gotta be real careful with the commander."

"Are you talking about the saluting or the rumors?" You asked.

"Both," he said. "Reckon you and him have an understanding, what with you wearing half his clothes in the middle of a blizzard."

"...It was to save my life. We weren't doing anything...unsavory."

"I know that," Jesse said. "But people saw you carted off to the infirmary in the Commander's hat and jacket."

You rubbed your forehead. "The commander doesn't mind the rumors. Thinks it will distract from my actual investigation."

"Commander forgets what it's like to be the rookie, and the commander's good looking but he ain't a pretty young lady. People are going to be shit to you because they're thinking you're trying to sleep your way up the ranks. Blackwatch ain't exactly popular. Not like we can advertise when we get a win." Jesse sat down in your chair. It wasn't your chair, it was the guest chair. You were going to have to go get another chair that would be your own.

"In public, it'll be all "yes, sir, no sir, how high do you want me to try to jump, sir." He and I went over the rules."

Jesse nodded firmly. "Good." He paused. "You know about him and Strike Commander, right?"

"That they're together?"

"For now," Jesse said. "There's been trouble brewing for awhile. You best keep your head
You had to admit, your impressions of Jack Morrison had been vague. He seemed nice. Which was wrong, because if he's the fucking Strike Commander of Overwatch, the guy that replaced Gabriel Reyes, he better be a badass. Either he was unqualified, or scary good at switching roles. You suspected the latter.

"I'm not a homewrecker," you said. "My lover was just murdered. I'm not looking to replace him."

"I heard. Sorry about your loss," he said automatically. "It's going to be rough riding, Lucky." He paused. "I read your Shit Spiders report. Randomly generated, my ass. But nice work: I laughed, I cried, I want to kill some black ops guns-for-hire. You saved Commander Reyes and you took some pain doing it. Me and the Commander have your back. Genji probably does too, if you're worried."

"I'm not a great fighter," you told him.

"That'll change," Jesse said cheerfully. "You'll be back in training as soon as Angela clears you." He paused. "I wouldn't blame you if you lagged for an extra week. Because the Commander had a lot to say about your hand-to-hand."

"It's shit, I know." You scowled.

Jesse patted your arm. "There's always room for improvement."

You sat at your desk in Gabriel's office, scrolling through compartmentalized intelligence. There was a lot of fascinating stuff, and you were struggling not to drown under the workload.

Your official duties included flagging especially interesting reports, liaising with VIPs to schedule meetings, and miscellaneous tasks that Gabriel decided needed to be done: figure out who stole the broom, find him coffee that didn't suck, summon minions so Gabriel could yell at them.

Unofficially, you were collating the mission data as it came in. Winston, the gorilla in the lab, no joke, had recognized the design and pursued some techie angle, to reveal the manufacturer. You and Winston were also sifting through the assorted detritus that forensic teams were bringing back from the Yukon. Not human remains, thankfully, but gear, cybernetics, and papers. Office work was all you did for two weeks and you were drowning in it.

Gabriel was rarely in his office lately, and you were fine with that. It was sad to admit, but while you liked Gabriel, Commander Reyes was a real bastard. He was like that with everyone, sharp, hypercritical, and fussy. He had no patience for fuckups, sky-high standards, and woe to those who underperformed. When he was stressed, which was most of the time, the best anyone could hope for was a begrudging "good job, agent."

"There you are." Captain Amari stepped into the office. "How goes it?"

"Steep learning curve, ma'am," you grumbled.

"Come have a cup of tea with me," she said. "I've been meaning to check in with you, but it's been busy."

You eagerly put down the tablet and stood up.
"How are the prostheses working out?"

"Better. Angela had to fine tune some of the settings for the extensions. The equipping process got trickier. Can't use the same nerve augments for weapons as I can basics. But she's confident they'll have it back down to one set in a month." You had accidentally stabbed through a keyboard or two. The vibrator remained unused, but you were working up to it.

Captain Amari walked you to her office. The HQ was huge, but you were catching on to the layout. She already had a tea set out, and her electric kettle was going off. She poured, though there was no cream or sugar. You didn't mind. She drank teas that didn't require them.

"How are things?" She asked.

"The Commander is...tense. He's making everyone else tenser."

"Mmm, Gabe can be difficult," Captain Amari agreed. "While I don't normally encourage insubordination, you and Gabriel have a more...unorthodox relationship. I think you could tell him that and survive the experience."

"He's barely around. Two missions this week and a meeting with the UN," you said.

Captain Amari rolled her eyes. "He is overcompensating. He does that when he feels things are out of control. Jack would be wise to rein him in, but-" She stopped abruptly, as if she was remembering you were a lowly newbie agent.

"Is that a hint that I can try to convince him to do something to unwind?"

"It's not in your job description," Captain Amari said blandly. "But he might listen to you."

"I'll try. I guess...I'm not trying to push it, Captain. There's enough talk as it is."

Captain Amari narrowed her eyes and sipped her tea. "Have you had any problems with the...overzealous?"

Some people had felt the need to tell you off because you'd "slept your way into a promotion." You'd just laughed and asked them what they actually knew. It was hard, maintaining that devil-may-care expression, when all you wanted to do was feed them their teeth. But you endured, because drama would only blow up in your face. Acting blasé would not validate their accusations.

"Some snide comments. Most people mind their own business." You paused. "And it was mostly from Overwatch people. Not Blackwatch."

"Two reasons: Blackwatch knows that's not how it works. People don't sleep their way up. Maybe assassins, but that's different."

You blinked.

Captain Amari laughed. "Secondly," she didn't say she was joking. "If you actually were sleeping with Gabriel, they wouldn't want to piss him off."

"So trust no one. Got it." You sighed, sipping the fragrant jasmine tea. "I'm having a little trouble balancing the workload. And Angela is about to clear me for active duty. I don't know how I'm going to train, do the Commander's paperwork, and continue a proper investigation without delegating some. Winston's great by the way. He's got Torby looking at his connections"
"I'll talk to Gabriel," Captain Amari said. "It is a legitimate concern. You're working a little slower on the administrative tasks than we'd like, but that's to be expected, since you're handling the research on Operation Shit Spiders. And I know Gabriel hasn't been around to show you how to get things done. Is there anything else?"

You never chatted like this with Captain Patel. She was all business, up till the end. You even saluted when you gave her your rifle. You really wish you had been able to just sit and talk with her.

"Genji found a note about some compartmentalized intelligence regarding Black Base Delta. I wanted to request access to it. I can get you the reference file."

"I know what file it is," Captain Amari said. "I'll release it to you now. But I should warn you, it is...upsetting."

You downed the rest of your tea. "Guess I better get to it then."

You sat in front of your work terminal. There was a file. It was time-stamped about half an hour before the explosion. It was a video file. You opened it.

The screen was mostly static. "Mayday. Mayday. Mayday." You recognized that voice. "This is Agent Rivka Cohn of Black Base Delta. Can you read me?" You could almost see the glare of the computer screens in the background.

"This is Overwatch HQ, emergency channel, this is not a secure channel. We cannot get a visual on you."

"That is because they are jamming us. Lao, boost the signal."

You heart thumped as Rivka's stern lined face appeared on the screen. "Overwatch HQ, this is Agent Rivka Cohn. We are under attack. They are well-trained, cybernetically-enhanced, and slaughtering us. They are after Commander Reyes. We will hold them as long as we can. Requesting backup." The screen flickered, and you could hear gunfire in the background.

"This is not a secure channel. We cannot confirm your location. We cannot confirm you are sending from a secure recognized location."

"We are Blackwatch at Black Base Delta. Lao, give it more juice!"

"Why do you even have this stuff?" Lao complained in the background.

"Above your pay grade!" Rivka barked and you had to smile a little. "I repeat, we are requesting assistance. They are attempting to assassinate Commander Reyes."

"What is your clearance-?"

"This is Strike Commander Morrison." Jack Morrison's voice was an extension of authority. The operator's voice cut out immediately. He didn't sound like that when you met him. "We are listening Agent Cohn."
"Move that terminal Lao. It'll hold them for a few more minutes." Rivka looked at the screen. "Commander. They're coming. We're almost out of time. It was an ambush and it's likely we were betrayed. I do not know Commander Reyes' status. But I'm listening in on their comms. They haven't gotten him yet."

"Thank you, Agent Cohn. Try to get yourself to safety," he said.

"It's too late for that," she said with a harsh laugh. "Fire that operator for me."

"It's done, Agent Cohn," Morrison said. "We're heading in your location. Please seek cover.

The gunfire grew louder.

"We're out of time, Commander." Rivka saluted. "Agent Cohn and Agent Lao out."

There was a shower of sparks and then the screen went black.

When Gabriel returned to his office, you were wiping your eyes on your sleeve. You didn't look at him. You weren't sure how many times you'd watched it. Once was enough, but due diligence called for more.

"Ah. Ana told me she'd released that to you."

"Rivka made me hummus," you said. "She complained about her grandchildren all the time. And Lao was the unit...baby. She stole my beer."

"Jack demoted the operator," Gabriel said.

"Good."

"That call lit a fire under Jack's ass. If they hadn't gotten that distress signal out, you would probably would have lost more than a few fingers." Gabriel uncrossed his arms. "You should have read the transcript beforehand."

"I-yeah." You hung your head. "I didn't think about it. I just...I kind of knew that if anyone got through, it was Rivka."

"Agent Cohn was a very ruthless Mossad operative before she came out of retirement to work for us," Gabriel said. "You OK?"

"I...no. But I will be." You shut down the video. "I uh...meant to tell you this earlier, but, you've been busy and I've been swimming in paperwork." You folded your hands. "About a week before you arrived, Rivka came to me for some computer parts. I didn't know what they did, but she was worried about the remote backup server being down. Said Gleeson wasn't in any hurry to fix it."

Gabriel swore. "So those bastards knew about that problem?"

"Rivka was...very concerned. I got her some parts. Not everything she needed, but some. She did something, I don't know what." You paused. "I might have heard you talking about shutting down the base. Rivka let slip that if that happened, Greenland would have to redo their backups. When I asked, she said it was above my pay grade.” You choked out the last sentence.

Gabriel's brow furrowed. "We don't have an operational base in Greenland." He looked at you. "Wait, you smuggled unknown tech into the base?" He swore, giving you the hard stare.

"Nah, I got it online," you said. "It was all retail stuff, but I couldn't tell you what it did. Still have the receipts in my email." You forwarded him the information. Then you set your head down on the desk.

"We've finished salvaging the remnants of Black Base Delta," Gabriel said after a moment. "Not a lot of remains were recovered. But there are some more items."

"I'll look at them tomorrow," you said, not lifting your head.

"Tomorrow you're starting training."

"I'll look at them tonight," you said, still not lifting your head off the desk.

"They can wait," he said. "Are you hungry?"

"No," you said. And it was true. Grief did weird things to your appetite. Sometimes you just wanted sweets. Sometimes food just made you ill. Sometimes you actually were hungry and then found everything tasted disappointing.

"I am. Mess is closed. Want to raid the staff kitchen?"

"Can you cook?" You asked.

"Of course," he said, sounding very annoyed that you even asked.

"Me too." When you looked up, Gabriel was watching you, somewhere between worried and aggravated. "Let's get Jesse or Genji."

Gabriel looked like he wanted to object.

"Reputation," you said, pointing at yourself.

Gabriel's expression darkened, but the two of you grabbed Genji. You suspected it was because he talked less. There was a full kitchen off the side of the mess. Staff could prepare their own meals. You rummaged around, not quite willing to steal anyone's labeled lunch.

"We can just eat Jack's food," Gabriel said.

"You can eat Jack's food. We'll be drawn and quartered," you said.

"I don't actually want to eat Jack's food. It's all casseroles and potato salad. He thinks salt is a spice," Gabriel groused. You hoped he was joking.

You found some basic ingredients and heated up the skillet. Leftover rice, onions, chicken, soy sauce, ketchup, eggs. You had the stuff for omurice. Short for "omelette rice," Shin would make it for you every now and then. Said it was a "kids" meal. You didn't care. It was delicious. You fried the rice, chicken, and onions, seasoned the eggs, and added the sauces to the rice. It was...nostalgic. Gabriel took over flipping the omelettes.

"These are flat omelettes."
"Supposed to be," you said. "I'll whip the whites if I want fluffy ones."

"Ketchup and eggs are blasphemy," he said casually.

"This is the exception. Pope gave it an indulgence and everything," you said, stirring the rice. "Genji, do you have any nori?"

He looked over your shoulder. "Is that omurice?"

"What?" Gabriel asked, wrinkling his nose.

"Yes," you said.

"I'll get some nori," Genji said.

You spooned the rice onto plates in a dome shape. Then you wrapped each rice bundle in the omelette crepe, and drizzled ketchup and mayo on top. Genji handed you a package of nori and you cut it up into sprinkles.

"You put ketchup and mayonnaise on my eggs, idiota."

"Just try it," you said grabbing a fork. It was good comfort food: flavorful rice offset by the gentle creaminess of the egg. The sauces added tart and tangy layers to the richness of the dish.

Genji removed his lower face plate and began to eat. His face was scarred and his lower jaw wasn't flesh. You forced yourself not to stare and continued eating.

"I used to eat this as a kid," Genji said softly. "You need to add dashi and mirin to the eggs."

"I know. Didn't have any though." You took another bite. "Next time."

Gabriel took a bite. "...Acceptable." He glanced over at Genji.

"You can make a mentaiko sauce to go on it," Genji said. "Spicy fish eggs," he said for Gabriel's benefit.

Gabriel wrinkled his nose. "Next time we're doing carne asada," he said, but he ate three plates anyway.

Chapter End Notes

I keep accidentally writing fluff scenes.
Chapter 5

Chapter Notes

There be some gore and torture ahead. Also feelings. Because feelings are scary.

Two weeks later, the bandages came off your leg and while the grafts took care of the worst of the damage, you weren't going to be modeling swimsuits any time soon. The color was almost right, but there were starbursts of scars and a jagged edges to the seams. Your left leg looked very patchwork, but you were functional and cleared for active duty.

Captain Amari was pleasantly surprised by your competency with a rifle. You weren't a sniper, but your form and aim were good. You handled pistols, shotguns, and other light armaments with no difficulty.

You also sat in on a refresher medic course, because you knew someone would need it. Probably you.

And of course, Commander Reyes had his own hand-to-hand combat training class. You ended up sore, angry, and eating mat on a regular basis. Jesse and Genji thought it was hilarious. You might have lost your temper, except there were half a dozen less friendly Blackwatch agents present.

Though you might have come to an uneasy accord with Genji, it didn't mean he went easy on you in hand-to-hand combat. He liked to throw you, and you were learning very quickly how to land properly.

"You'll make a better projectile than fighter, agent," Commander Reyes told you after you picked yourself off the mat.

"If they're close enough to throw me, I've fucked up," you said, panting.

"You've fucked up. Now less fucking up, agent."

If looks could kill, you would have set Commander Reyes on fire with your eyes. As it was, you trudged back over to Genji, well-aware that the rest of the class was watching you.

"Hajime," Genji murmured. He came at you, modified speed. You made sure only to wear the basic finger tips when you sparred. But you could use them at full power on Genji. With your right hand, you batted away his strikes. You flattened your left hand into a blade and slammed it into Genji's faceplate, metal fingers your point of contact.

Genji's head snapped back and you lunged forward, driving your elbow into his neck. Genji staggered, and faster than your eyes could track, he struck back. The air in your lungs suddenly gone and you were dropping.

Oh good, it was his flesh fist that he'd gut-punched you with. You'd probably survive that. You laid there, gurgling unpleasantly.

"Are you all right?" Genji asked.
You glared up at him. Air didn't seem to be passing through you properly.

"Well, that wasn't as pathetic as before," Commander Reyes said, bending over you. He might have been concerned, but he might have been laughing at you too. "Do we need to get Angela in here?"

"I'm fine. Just really loving these mats," you wheezed, your voice not quite right.

"Sorry," Genji said, offering you his hand. "You caught me by surprise. Good job." Of course, the more predictable moves only got you thrown which was arguably better than gut-punched. There really was no winning.

Your room was too quiet. Shin hadn't been loud, he provided just enough noise to lull you to sleep. The 9th Circle had shitty ventilation and the fans were always running. The HQ was too quiet. You put on an extra hoodie, wrapped yourself in a blanket, and headed out to the rec room.

It was the early AM. After nodding at the few people who were up, you sat down on the couch, with the TV on, and promptly fell asleep. Even with people talking and a siren going off in the background, it was the best rest you'd had in awhile.

You made it to Commander Reyes' office early and found a flagged message from Winston. Torby had gotten a hit. The trigger assembly was pretty unique, and Neostratum Industries, a startup, held the patent.

The morning revolved around researching Neostratum Industries. Small, Belgian, and otherwise inconsequential, you were finding it very hard to figure out who exactly owned it. Genji was the better forensic accountant, for some reason, he knew all sorts of tricks that unsavory types used to hide their money. You decided you didn't need to know the reason.

Rubbing your forehead, you realized Genji would be the better person for this and switched over to Commander Reyes' workload. Mission authorizations, requisitions, transfer orders. Most had been approved, and filed those. You skimmed them, some of them sounding unfamiliar. Commander Reyes didn't tell you everything, but you'd begun to form a good picture of what kind of ops he was running. Stings, busts, honeytraps, blackmail, the occasional termination with extreme prejudice, but some of these... You frowned. There was the abduction of a hostile UN ambassador's infant daughter. That didn't sit right.

"Problems, agent?" Commander Reyes shut the door behind him.

You looked around. "I...Did you authorize this mission, Gabriel?"

Gabriel raised a brow at you and read the file. "Do you see my signature?"

"I didn't get that far," you admitted. "Sorry."

He flipped it so you could see the blank line. "It's a proposal. Ops has laid out the plan. But I haven't given the go ahead."

"Are you going to?" You asked.
"If necessary," he said, giving you a hard look. "But the situation hasn't gotten that far and I am curious how this ended up on my desk."

"It was there with the ones that had already been approved." You showed him the stack of unsigned forms. "Sorry, I'm trying to keep up with your workload, I just-"

Gabriel crossed his arms. "This isn't the first time this has happened, Lucky."

"I'm sorry, I-"

"No. Not you," he growled. "There have been requisitions and missions I haven't authorized or even talked about getting pushed through or showing up in interesting places. I had to recall Jesse from Paris a month ago, because someone tacked on additional mission parameters and he wasn't happy."

It wasn't just the 9th Circle. Someone was actively sabotaging Blackwatch. "So someone is trying to make you look bad or-"

"Or has their own agenda, yeah." Gabriel took his cap off and roughly combed his curls. "It's not happening frequently, but I know I'm not imagining it. Can't seem to trace these back to anyone. I need you to keep a closer eye on things, then. I'll talk to Jack."

"How am I supposed to know which ones are wrong?"

Gabriel laughed sharply. "How'd you pick that one out?"

"It was...overkill," you said.

"They all have been," he said darkly. "With the potential to blow up in our faces."

Overwatch HQ had a few nondenominational chapels and multiple quiet rooms for "meditation." You weren't comfortable with any of them. Captain Patel had her own way of worship that centered around battle and Durga. Shin had half-jokingly explained to you that all Japanese people are born Shinto and die Buddhist. Valdez had been Catholic. Lao was an athiest. Rivka was a self-described secular Jew. You weren't sure what Simon or Nwazue believed. And you weren't exactly comfortable attending a bunch of services for things you didn't believe in or pretend to understand.

There was a memorial wall outside for all of Overwatch's fallen. Sometimes, early in the morning or late at night, you'd go out there and burn incense. It was a small thing. There was no gravesite. There was no funeral or wake. This, and revenge were all you could give.

You trudged outside, hating every inch of snow. It was pretty enough, but after the 9th Circle you would never like cold weather. You knelt by the wall, planting the joss stick in the snow. The smoke was heavy, not to your liking, but it seemed proper.

"Aishani would've like that."

You nearly fell over. Commander Morrison was on your left only a few yards away. He was in full blue overcoat and eyepiece. You hadn't even seen him in the shadows. Some secret agent you were.

You exhaled slowly. "I like to think so, sir."

Shin would have laughed at you. He was irreverent, always said he'd be reincarnated as something fast and cute: a rabbit, an owl, maybe a ferret. It was endearing that he didn't choose the fiercest or the biggest creatures.

You had looked up the Durga Shatru-Shanti, that last prayer Captain Patel said when you left her. It was a mantra that was supposed to protect one from their enemies. For all the good it did her. A vicious streak of emotion bubbled up in your chest.

"These rituals for the dead, they're really for us," Commander Morrison said. "They're how we come to terms with it."

"Yes sir." You knew that. Just like you knew Captain Patel wasn't really praying for her own deliverance. Just like you knew she didn't expect the mantra to protect her. Just like you knew your anger was broken thing, lashing out because it hurt, not because it was right.

"I knew Aishani," Commander Morrison said. "And I knew her well enough to say she was at peace with her decision."

You bit your lip, wishing he would mind his own business. The Strike Commander may have known Captain Patel better than you did, but this was between you and the dead. "She might have been OK with it," you said, not looking at him. "But that doesn't mean the rest of us are."

"No," he said. "It doesn't. And that's something we all have to come to terms with. Good night, agent."

You stayed on your knees in front of the memorial, listening till the crunch of snow beneath his boots faded into the distance.

He was right of course. But that didn't make it any easier.

---

You sat in Winston's office, off the lab eating a peanut butter and honey sandwiches. You'd made them before coming down. "We're having security breaches," you told him. "Someone's modifying mission assignments."

Winston stopped mid-bite. "Are you sure you should be telling me this?"

"I don't know how they're doing it. And while we have decent techs, I don't know them well enough to trust them, and I feel like our hackers are only so-so or untrustworthy. I'm getting hard copies delivered to the office, so it's got to be a network breach of some sort." Or you would at least like to rule that out before you started a molehunt.

"Does Commander Reyes know?"

"Yeah. I'm part of the "safety net." But I'd like to figure out how they're doing it. And maybe upgrade some of Blackwatch's systems."
"I have offered. Commander Reyes has made it abundantly clear that he doesn't want me uh "monkeying around" his computers. He would have to be "bananas" to let me go "apeshit" on his system."

You winced. "He really said it like that, didn't he? God, Gabriel is such a dick." You put your head down on Winston's desk. "Sorry."

"Why are you apologizing for him?" He paused. "You call him by his first name?"

"Privately and in a platonic way," you said. "I'm not apologizing for him. I'm apologizing because I'm going to put in a request to borrow you."

"Lucky-"

"Please." You swallowed. "There's more at stake than just making Commander Reyes or Blackwatch look bad."

Winston adjusted his glasses. Those big yellow eyes focused on your face. "Black Base Delta wasn't an accident, was it?"

"Aw fuck, you haven't been briefed? And they still had you look at pulse rifle? What the fuck?" Gabriel obviously didn't like Winston or Torby. But you needed their help on this. "I'm going to go talk to Captain Amari and Commander Reyes."

"Do you mind leaving the sandwiches?" Winston asked.

"You what?" Commander Reyes' sat at his desk, expression was thunderous.

"Requesting Winston and Lindholm be fully briefed and used as resources in tracking down the origins of our attackers, sir." You stood up straight, saluting as hard as you could. Captain Amari sat at your desk, observing. "Secondly, requesting Winston be brought in to upgrade our systems."

"I don't need a monkey to fix my computers, agent. We have contractors and techs that do just fine."

"Respectfully disagreeing sir. We have so far been unable to trace the origins of the security breaches. Bringing in a specialist might help eliminate network vulnerabilities, and let us focus on potential moles. Winston has already been partially briefed on the emergence of the pulse rifle and maintains Overwatch's mainframe. He is the logical choice, sir."

Commander Reyes gave you his full officer glare. If you'd actually done something wrong, you'd be quaking in your boots. But you hadn't, so you met his gaze.

"Denied," he said, drawing the word out. The bastard was enjoying this.

"Sir-"

"No."

"Sir-" You tried again.
"No."

"Gabriel!" You slammed your palms on his desk. "You're being an ass! I'm only one agent and while Jesse and Genji are great, I need tech support and I need people we can trust! Are you just setting me up to fail?"

"Get a hold of yourself, agent," he said sharply. "You are out of line."

You jerked back as if slapped.

"You are dismissed," he said.

You stalked out of the office.

"That went well," Ana said, resting her boots on your desk. "Am I supposed to write her up for insubordination?"

Gabriel looked up fuming. "It's not about the computers, Ana. I am well aware of the problem. I'm not ignoring it."

"Your house, your rules," she said. "But for the record, I agree with her proposal. Whatever your problem with him, Winston is an impeccable engineer. It was good of her to have a plan ready, wasn't it? Shows initiative. Certainly saved you some time and effort. I heard she was bribing him with sandwiches. Smart move."

"I've been collecting the mis-fires. There's a pattern, but I'm not seeing it. I need to get a few more to pin down the angle."

"Are you willing to risk one of these more...reckless missions going through?" Ana studied the ceiling.

"We'll just be more diligent."

"If they're electronically transmitted? Because it could anything from your network to your people to your encryption. Something is going wrong, Gabriel. Once was a warning. Six times is serious. This is something you need to talk to Jack about."

"I'll handle it, Ana. I just need a little more time to rule out certain possibilities." He paused. "You going to run to Jack with this?"

"Handle it, Gabriel," she said. "And I won't need to."

You met Jesse on the mat. "Now sugarpie, remember which fingers you're wearing."
"Don't want to talk," you said, tapping your basic tips. "Let's go."

Jesse laughed. "Commander finally pissed you off, huh? It happens to us all." He gave an easy smile and dodged your front kick. You followed through with a roundhouse, grazing his hip. "Better get used to it."

"Don't want to talk, Jesse."

"Don't be like that, huckleberry," he said. "Don't you want to hear my advice?"

"Don't want to talk," you hissed.

"Then don't." Jesse lunged forward and bopped you lightly on the nose, before dancing back out of your range. "Listen here. The commander's stubborn. You ain't gonna get nowhere hitting him head-on."

"I have before," you snarled.

"Well, you're special. But if the commander really doesn't want to do something, good luck moving him. The man's a mule in the mud."

"What?" You dropped your guard and stared at Jesse. He swept your feet out from under you, grinning as you landed flat on your back. "Damnit Jesse!"

"You gotta be smart, Lucky Strike." He held his hand out and you took it. "You turn this into a fight, and you won't win."

"So there should be begging and manipulation?"

"This ain't Sunday school, Lucky. This is Blackwatch."

---

Genji was in Belgium, tracking down whoever ran Neostratum Industries. Jesse was chasing another lead in Cuba.

Captain Amari did not write you up for anything. She just served you tea and told you to try another angle. You had one, but you didn't like it. So you waited, keeping Winston sweet with assorted peanut butter desserts. You weren't running goods any more; you didn't have the time. But you still liked getting presents, or bribes, for your coworkers. It kept the working relationship smooth.

Jesse's idea was passive-aggressive to the extreme, but fell just short of unethical. You were the only one paying the cost though, so it didn't matter.

You went through Gabriel's papers, carefully picking out the questionable ones. There were a lot. And if you wanted to be honest, you could guess that half of them were legit. But the language was ambiguous and you had to make a point.

You went over each document with a fine toothed comb. You circled questionable methods, orders, and requests. The stack on his desk piled up. You'd found at least two documents, one an order for a political assassination in Indonesia, the other a proposal to increase the budget by forming an alliance with Vishkar. You made a note to track down whoever suggested that one. It was ridiculous.

Winston was sorting through the wreckage of the 9th Circle. He called it Black Base Delta, but he might have been the only one who got the nickname. The explosives were military grade, but not an uncommon formulation.

Your eyelids were heavy and you drowsed, knowing if you fell asleep at your desk, you'd wake up with terrible neck pain. A bad choice since you had hand-to-hand practice tomorrow.

You woke up to Commander Reyes coming into the office. You lifted your head off the desk, ignored him, and went right back to paperwork. Once you had finished, you set the stack on his desk.

"Questionable activities marked and noted, sir." You were keeping it formal now. Because he'd set the boundaries again. He was Commander Reyes. You were just an agent. It wasn't emotional blackmail, you told yourself. You thought the two of you were friends. He'd pulled rank and shut down that assumption. You were respecting that.

He nodded tersely and you went back to your desk to review Genji's incoming report. Genji had attached photographs. The CEO of Neostratum Industries was a brown haired man with a beard. More interestingly, he was meeting with a red-headed man. You studied that face. It was familiar. Add 10 years. Change the hair color to brown. Put on another thirty pounds: It was former base Commander Gleeson, looking awfully young and spry for a dead man. He couldn't have afforded the youth-restoring gene therapy on a base commander's salary either.

You didn't hesitate. You sent Genji the order. "Keep him under surveillance. Requesting extraction."

You wrote up the report and forwarded it to Commander Reyes.

It was your third day of sleeping in the office. Commander Reyes was only speaking with you to issue orders. You were steadily losing steam, verifying every document that crossed his desk.

Captain Amari stopped by with tea.

"You look rough, agent."

"It doesn't matter how I look," you said dryly. "I've got work to do."

"This seems petty," she said.

"Petty is a proud Blackwatch trait, ma'am. We follow our leadership in lockstep."

Captain Amari covered her mouth at that response. "McCree and Torby are betting on who will crumble first."

You blinked.
"The odds are against you, Lucky Strike," she said mildly. "But that's nothing new, is it?"

"Just don't let the commander know. It will only make him dig in his heels."
"Mum's the word," she said, leaving you a thermos of tea and some dry biscuits.

You missed Captain Patel, but Captain Amari made it easier. You missed Shin, and there was no easy replacement for that either. You'd try out the vibrator soon. Really. Except then you'd have to tell Torby and Angela about it and that was going to be so awkward.

It wasn't your diligence that turned the tide. You fucked up. You missed one. You shouldn't have been trusted. To be fair, you'd been juggling training, administrative duties, extra verification, and Operation Shit Spiders. It had been a miserable week in Commander Reyes' office. No friendly conversation. No late night kitchen runs.

Commander Reyes sat at his desk, holding a printed copy of a mission proposal. He silently handed it to you.

"I stopped it before transmission," he said. Captain Amari was there sipping tea. Her expression was politely blank.

"I'm sorry, sir," you said.

"Was this what you wanted?" Commander Reyes growled. "What exactly did you plan?"

"No sir," you said. You met his eyes, jaw set defiantly. "No sir. My plan was to show you how serious I was and impress you with my diligence." You swallowed. "Obviously, it didn't work, sir."

"Hmph."

You could feel him studying you for any deceit. You met his eyes with no trouble. "Are you asking for my resignation?"

"That is falling on your own sword, agent," he said. "We don't do that here." He brought up a chart on his tablet. It looked like he'd been tracking all unauthorized documents and narrowing down changes and timing. "The misprinted physical deliveries have come to a trickle. Probably because they aren't getting through."

That was good.

"But despite me having our technicians run all sorts of diagnostics, the electronic copies of our documents are being altered." Commander Reyes glared at you. "I needed extra time to verify that our servers weren't trustworthy and to pinpoint patterns between alterations."

You stared at him.

"We can initiate your plan," he said for your poor frazzled brain. "You can bring in the barrel of monkeys."

You sagged in relief. "Thank you sir."

"Ana, can you leave us?"

"I'll deliver the happy news," she said without inflection. But she patted you on the back as "You're a stubborn idiot," he said once the door was shut.

"I am what I am, sir." You emphasized his title, because petty was a Blackwatch trait.

"You don't." He huffed a breath, rolling his eyes. "Dios mio. That's why you're so worked up. Because I pulled rank."

"We're either friends or we aren't, sir. I'm trying to respect your rules, but it doesn't work when you change them on me."

Gabriel uncrossed his arms. "Friends, huh?"

It was a long beat. How else could you describe it? You wouldn't have survived without him and vice-versa. There was something there. An affection? A respect? An understanding? There was trust. There was a bond. You just couldn't put it into words.

"If we were enemies I would have stabbed you by now," you said, instead of talking about feelings. "In the neck."

"You and your vampire instinct."

You shrugged.

"Friends then," he said, testing the word.

"We weren't friends before?" You shook your head, a stone in your stomach. Maybe it was better not to talk to him about it.

"Please stop giving me that hangdog look. It's awful."

"It's my face."

"I was...unfair. Sorry." He took his beanie off, fingers working through his hair. He focused on a specific spot on the wall. "I have carne asada marinating. Get your work done and I'll make some tonight. We can eat it in the office."

"OK," you said, because that was a bigger apology than you expected and because maybe Gabriel was just as emotionally stunted as you. "Thank you."

"You get to deal with the monkey," Gabriel said abruptly.

Gabriel's carne asada fries were delicious. You slept in the rec room again. Things were moving in the right direction. Torby and Winston were already revamping the entire system.

Torby designed you more blades, the originals were for slashing. These were thicker, for thrusting attacks. Then he casually asked you about the vibrator, smile shrewd. You still hadn't used it.
Then you got the call: Genji was on his way back with Gleeson in tow.

You met Jesse in the interrogation wing late in the evening. He was still in uniform and his smile was grim.

"You eaten?"

"A couple hours ago."

"That should be ok. There are barf bags in the observation room, if you need'em."

You took a deep breath. "Jesse McCree, it sounds like you're trying to scare me."

"Friendly warning. Commander verified your target is who you say he is." He squinted at you. "And if that's the case, I guess you won't mind how messy it gets."

You've seen some shit. But you've never been a big fan of torture. You thought about skipping it and asking for the transcript, but that didn't seem right.

This time you were on the other side of the glass. The polygraph wasn't torture, but it was an interrogation. This was an enhanced version. Jesse leaned against the wall. You pulled up a chair.

Gabriel was already at work. "You look good for a dead man, Gleeson."

"It's not what it looks like, Commander," Gleeson gibbered. "I barely escaped with my life. We were betrayed."

"I noticed," Gabriel said. He moved like predator, all swagger and anticipation. He was fast, maybe faster than Genji. "You've seen my work Gleeson. Cut the shit."

"It wasn't me!" Gleeson screeched.

"Wrong answer," Gabriel murmured and picked up the bolt cutters.

You clenched your left fist as Gabriel started with his left hand. He looked at the window, smiled fiercely, and cut off Gleeson's index finger. Your own stubs twinged, but you didn't look away.

You needed reinforced gloves to keep your fingertips from gouging your palms. You'd ask Torby about it later.

Gleeson screamed. "Orders! I had orders!"

"From who?"

"I thought it was Morrison," he sobbed.

Gabriel bared his teeth. "Oh?"

"Upper brass, higher than you. Everyone knows you resent Morrison for usurping you! He was just pre-empting you!"

Gabriel cut off his middle finger, the sound of snapping bone turning your stomach. "Not buying it. Talon was involved."
Gleeson screamed. It made your stomach clench.

"Try again."

"I wouldn't lie to you, Reyes! Talon mercs were the bullet, someone higher up was the trigger!"

Gabriel paused, watching the blood pour out of Gleeson's finger stubs. "Names, Gleeson."

"I don't know any!" Off went the ring finger and you closed your eyes for a moment, centering yourself. Those weren't your fingers. Yours went all at once and you didn't even notice. It was completely different.

"Wrong answer," Gabriel purred. He held up Gleeson's left hand so the man could see the damage. "What was the plan for the base?"

"There was data - all gone now. It didn't get backed up. Capturing you was a bonus! They thought they could turn you. They still want you. Morrison's too idealistic to play their game, but you-" Gleeson began to laugh wildly.

Gabriel rolled his eyes. "What kind of data?" Gabriel put the bolt cutters down. "I'm thinking I want to move to softer tissue now, cockless wonder."

Gleeson babbled everything he knew. He had a few helpers in the base. He didn't know if any survived. The data was what needed to be destroyed. He had no idea what it was. UN stuff, above his pay grade. There were sympathizers in both Blackwatch and Overwatch. He didn't know names. He didn't know where the gun came from.

Gabriel cut him anyway. You didn't throw up. The fingers left you with the most visceral sensation; everything else was minor. Gleeson was partially responsible for everything. You'd lost your friends, your lover, and your home. And through it all Gabriel smiled viciously. Or was he Commander Reyes? The line was getting blurred. He was Commander Gabriel Reyes and while you knew the protocol of how to address him, you weren't sure how to think of him any more. The significance of the fingers hadn't been lost on you, though the meaning was less clear.

Gabriel asked questions. Gleeson gave answers. And you watched.

"You want in, Lucky Strike?" Gabriel asked, looking at the mirrored glass.

You stood.

"You don't have to go in there," Jesse said. His jaw was clenched. "Commander makes everyone sit in the first time their mission takes them this far. Makes sure they understand what they're doing when they take on this kind of job," Jesse took his hat off. "But you don't have to join in."

"I understand, Jesse."

"No you don't, Lucky. He's not normally like this."

It was hazy, like a dream. You practically floated into the interrogation room. It stunk of blood, offal, and human waste. Gleeson had voided himself.

"Pleasepleaseplease," Gleeson begged. Blood and foam flecked his face. His eyes were wild like a fear-maddened horse. You didn't look at his abdomen. Gabriel had made a mess of it.
"Names," Gabriel said.

"Petras! Viali! Ngumi! Maximillien! Shimada! Morrison! Nguyen!"

Every time Gleeson mentioned Commander Morrison, you could see the darkness jolt through Gabriel's eyes.

"You think he's got anything else useful?"

"No," Gabriel said. "And I don't care. He got Aishani killed."

"Do you remember me, Gleeson?"

"Pleaseohpleaseohpleaseohpleaseohgodno."

Of course not, you weren't important enough to remember. There were a lot of things you wanted to say. Gabriel gestured at the tray of instruments, his expression almost beatific. There were a lot of things Gleeson deserved. For Captain Patel. For Shin. You were no angel. In that room of revelation and suffering, the ones you couldn't save lingered. You saw Gabriel there, stained with blood, his mind in a dark place. He was here with you now. He was alive.

You examined the tools, mostly out of morbid curiosity. They didn't disturb you, not like they should have.

"We don't need him any more?"

"He's all yours," Gabriel murmured, so close you could feel his heat radiating on your back. It was a comforting, even in a room like this.

You drew your tanto and you cut Gleeson's throat. "We have enough nightmares," you told Gabriel. "We don't need more."

Gabriel stared down at you, his pupils too wide, his nostrils flared. "We're not saints, Lucky. Gleeson knew better. He fucking knew. Actions have consequences."

Gleeson was a bloody mess and he got what he deserved. Actions did have consequences. Neither you nor Gabriel needed to spend extra time torturing people: you didn't need to pay for that. You wiped your blade on a towel. "I think you're freaking Jesse out," you said. "You want me to call the Strike Commander or Captain Amari?"

"I'm fine, Lucky," he said, voice tight. "You're bleeding."

You looked down at your left hand. "I uh...still have control issues." You didn't tell him that watching him amputate Gleeson's fingers disturbed you more than anything else you'd seen.

Gabriel looked down at you, his arms bloody. It wasn't a big room, and you should have been uneasy being so close to him in this state. But it was Gabriel. He had carried you through the snow. He had given you the clothes off his back. There were days you were furious at him, but you weren't afraid of him.

"Can I get you some whiskey? Water?"

"Jesse's probably already called Ana." He wiped sweat from his brow, smearing blood across his face. "I don't normally get this carried away."

"This was personal," you agreed. You tentatively reached up and patted his back with your good hand.

He looked down at you skeptically. "You do realize you're trying to comfort me after I tortured a guy past sanity?"

"Wow, when you put it like that, it sounds bad. And like aftercare. Ugh."

"You got a problem with aftercare?" Gabriel raised a brow.

"In this context, yes." But you didn't pull your hand away. "Come on, you need to get cleaned up. I hear the blood of traitors causes cancer," you said leading him out of the room.

Strike Commander Jack Morrison leaned against the wall outside. He was dressed down in a black t-shirt and cargo pants, his bright eyes on Gabriel. There was an intensity to him you hadn't seen in prior visits. He crossed over in two steps, his presence filling the hall. Your theory was right; he was one of those who could turn it on and off.

"Gabe," he said like it was air in his lungs.

"Jack," Gabriel murmured.

"You OK?"

"Fine."

"Got something right here," Jack tapped his temple.

"I know. Gonna have to shower."

There was rhythm to their responses, the words not mattering as much as the eye contact. Morrison surveyed Gabriel like he was looking for cracks in his armor. Gabriel stared at Jack like he was the only lifeline in a storm.

You sidled away, feeling very much like you were intruding. In an outer hall, you ran into Jesse.

"You OK, Lucky?" He didn't try to see what was going on in the hall behind you.

"Oddly OK." You managed a smile. "I'm uh not sure what to say about that."

"Don't talk about it if you don't want to," Jesse said. "I thought it was going to get worse." He had a funny look on his face. "Good de-escalation."

"Not going to lie, the finger thing made me really uncomfortable."

Jesse nodded. "Yep. You're pretty handy with a knife."

"I don't go looking for fair fights," you said. "I don't know if I can get to sleep now. I'm going to take a shower and have a drink. Maybe not in that order."

"You want company?" Jesse didn't look at you. "For the drink, Lucky. Seeing that shit doesn't make me wanna tumble anyone."

"Yeah," you agreed.

You showered, cleaned your knife, and met Jesse in his room.
Jesse had a couch. You sat down. He took a swig of whiskey, then handed you the bottle.

"I'm not squeamish, Lucky."

"I know." Loveable as Jesse was, he was a killer for Blackwatch.

"I don't like seeing him like that. It's...disturbing."

"I got that," you said, taking another drink.

"The commander's a stand-up guy. Just wish he'd stop digging his grave," Jesse said.

"You really care about him," you said and passed back the bottle. It was a little surprising. Jesse was personable about everyone, but you didn't take his declarations of affection seriously.

"Yeah. He taught me a lot." Jesse sighed. "He didn't used to be this...tightly wound. He was still a bastard, but he wasn't so torn up."

"You don't have any lingering resentment for him making you work for Blackwatch?"

"Nah. Used to," he said. "But it's been a good place for me. The only complaint I have is Captain Amari won't give me a second look."

"She has a daughter," you said. "Between soldiering and mothering, she probably doesn't have time for ..."

"I know," Jesse said. "I know."

"Sorry, I'm not good at saying the right thing." You took a big swallow of whiskey. "Sorry."

"I really like her, Lucky. She's fierce. She shoots straight. She is damn pretty like you said." His expression grew dreamy.

"Oh god, don't remind me. I was delirious."

"You were cute," Jesse laughed. "Crazy girl wearing Commander Reye's clothes and spouting nonsense." He dropped onto his bed laughing. "And shit spiders. Oh darling, that's the best report opening ever."

You sat on Jesse's couch, drinking. It was kind of surprising that you hadn't been drinking more. Your shrink said it wasn't a healthy outlet, and Gabriel kept you so busy, you didn't really have time to self-medicate. But you felt warm and Jesse was muttering about how pretty Captain Amari was. Smiling, you put the bottle down and curled up on the couch.

"We should build blanket forts with Genji," you said.

"I don't know if that would translate right for him," Jesse said.

"OK, we should do this with Genji. With movies or popcorn."

"Get drunk and babble?"

"Yeah." You grinned.

"OK," Jesse said. "We'll ask him next time."
It was Jack that helped him into the shower, stripping the bloody clothes off, adjusting the water, lathering up the washcloth. He was tired now, the anger a dull ache underneath the crushing weariness. Gabriel stood in the shower letting the hot water pour over him.

She should have left it alone. Gleeson deserved more than what Gabriel gave him. And what Gleeson kept saying about Jack... He could have made it last for a very long time.

_We have enough nightmares._

Gabriel sighed, watching the bloody water circle the drain. That was true too. It was Gabriel's duty to punish Gleeson for his sins. But it was Lucky's right to decide Gleeson's fate. Was she even cut out for Blackwatch? Maybe. It hadn't been blustery morality or squeamishness that drove her to give Gleeson the coup de grace. Gabriel had really expected her to cut and run. She should've been scared to see him so close to the edge. She'd made the kill for him. Because he was a man who couldn't let things go. He would have wrung every drop of blood out of Gleeson and come back for the marrow. This was a thing they both understood. She'd survived her friends. He'd let down his subordinates. Aishani was dead. They had a responsibility to fix things. It was a fucking mess. And then the damn ingrate called Jack, of all people, to see him like this.

"Gabe?" Jack's voice echoed in the bathroom.

"Still here," Gabriel muttered. "No window to throw myself out of."

Jack pulled back the curtain. He was nude, cock semi-hard, and he stepped into the shower behind Gabriel.

"Want me to wash your back?" Jack moved with confidence, but his voice gave away his unease. They hadn't been like this for awhile. Not since before the demotion. Things had been better with Jack since Black Base Delta. But they hadn't progressed beyond an occasional kiss or shared meal. Despite Aishani's words, he hadn't let himself completely forget that things between them were complicated.

But Jack was here right now, when he needed him. That counted for something.

"Yeah," Gabriel said, his voice rough. "Thanks."

Jack's hands moved gently across his back and Gabriel leaned into the touch.

"I know you don't like me to watch you-"

"I know you don't like to watch me-"

They stopped, simultaneous in their confessions.

"You first," Gabriel said.

"I'm sorry," Jack said, resting his forehead between Gabriel's shoulder blades. "About everything."

"Gotta be more specific," Gabriel said because "everything" was a copout. And maybe he was just a little petty.

"I'm sorry about your people. I'm sorry about Aishani. I'm sorry you're the one who's stuck making all these impossible calls. I'm sorry I wasn't there for you. I'm sorry I was blind." The apologies poured from Jack's lips and melted into the steam of the shower, fogging up the world around them.

Gabriel turned around. Jack's eyes were the blue of the ocean, and looking into them was always such a shock.

"I want to do better," Jack said. "I miss you."

Gabriel slumped against the wall. "You picked a hell of a time to say this."

"There was never going to be a good time, Gabe."

He remembered Lieutenant Sato laughing as he'd cleaned up Lucky's bloody face on the mat. He remembered the emptiness in Lucky's voice when she talked about her dead lover. Those encounters were only hours apart. Jack's words, they didn't fix everything. They didn't even fix the things Jack himself had broken. But they were a start. He just had to get to the next step.

"Yeah," Gabriel said. "I miss you too."

Jack's hand brushed his temple. "You still got something right here." He began to rub the area with a soapy washcloth. "How does this even happen?"

"I need you to help me see myself," Gabriel said after Jack was done. "I get too caught up sometimes."

"I know," Jack said. "Same here."
Chapter 6

Chapter Notes

See the end of the chapter for notes.

It was the best night’s sleep you’d gotten since arriving in Switzerland. And maybe it was because you’d killed a bad guy last night. Despite Jesse’s couch being lumpy and smelling like liquor, you’d been comfortable. You awoke to Jesse’s alarm.

"I’m getting changed then hitting the office. Thanks for drinks," you told him.

You got a grunt in response. You flitted out of Jesse's room, only to be met by Genji. He held very still.

"Nothing happened," you said. "I slept on the couch."

"As you say," he said.

You sighed. "You don't believe me, do you?"

"As you say."

"Dick," you muttered. "We're not inviting you to the next one then. No movies, or hair styling, or popcorn for you."

Gabriel was in a strangely cheerful mood. Actually, scratch that. You knew why he was cheerful. There was nothing strange about it. Someone got laid. And it wasn't you. Happy Gabriel in the office was a blessing. Happy Gabriel in combat classes was a nightmare.

You were paired off against Genji. Why were you always with Genji? It was the fingers, you realized. Or Gabriel liked watching you get tossed around like a frisbee. Genji had started blocking anything from your left side. It was kind of unfair.

Jesse had been paired up with a hacker called Riggs, long black hair, thin straight nose, serious air. Riggs was cute, you decided. And he'd never been a jerk to you.

"Seriously," you told Genji. "After the interrogation, we were both drained. There was nothing except him pining after you-know-who. And then we talked about cool slumber party ideas."

"I am flattered," Genji said. "But I am afraid that I am not interested in you in that way."

You face palmed. "You've been trolling me this whole time, haven't you?"

"As you say," he agreed.

"Strike Commander, what a surprise," Gabriel said brightly. Everyone straightened up.

Morrison had entered the gym wearing blue sweats. They matched his eyes. He had to be "At ease," he said, warmth and authority coming from his voice in equal measures. "Gabriel," he said, and you had vivid memories of last night. "Mind if I join in?"

"Not at all. Genji, come here for this demo." That wasn't unusual. Genji could take the most hits out of all of you. "Lucky," Gabriel practically purred. "Why don't you partner with the Strike Commander?"

Ha ha ha. Fuck. "Sure thing," you said, your enthusiasm a little strained. You remember Captain Patel's kicks. Morrison's were going to be worse.

Morrison strode up to you and extended his hand. "Call me, Jack." You could feel everyone watching. Not because you were interesting, but because it was the Jack Morrison. You shook, and he was so good-natured he gave you a well-measured firm handshake that didn't even make your bones creak.

You were warmed up and you watched with slight horror as Gabriel wrestled Genji to the mat and then pinned him to the ground. "Less throws, more pins. Begin." He grinned in your direction.

You'd been nice to him last night. That was a mistake. Obviously. You didn't know if he was getting you back for killing Gleeson early or seeing the big sexy subtext between him and Jack, but he obviously had it out for you today.

Jack lunged at you, and you danced backward. His reach was farther than Genji's and you nearly took a foot to the stomach. He wasn't scrawny by any stretch of the imagination. Jack was all muscle, though not as bulky as Gabriel. And he was faster. You knew he was going easy on you, but you barely dodged a haymaker.

"Are we fighting or dancing?" Jack asked lazily.

Trick question! It was tag. You were running away in circles and Jack was chasing you. You feinted with your right hand and tried for a knife hand to his throat. He only clicked his tongue and knocked your hand away. He struck and you barely blocked his blow to the side of your head. Unfortunately, his legs were moving too and he did one of those dreaded leg sweeps. You hit the ground and rolled, barely dodging his mount.

Cocky bastard was grinning, his blonde hair not the least bit mussed. You hated him a little then, for being so happy and good-looking while kicking your ass. He tackled you, pinning you on your back underneath him, as he straddled you. He was heavier than he looked and you hooked his leg, trying to buck him off.

He just laughed, his hard body pressed against yours. You spun your hips trying to snap him off. He leaned forward, one of his hands wrapping around your throat. "Better think fast," he said lightly. And then he squeezed.

Your vision darkened. The world went silent.

He was going to kill you. He was going to choke the life out of you while straddling your hips. Captain Patel had stopped shooting and they'd already captured Gabriel.

You screamed, a feral sound ripped from you throat, your fingers prying his hand off your neck. You snapped your head up, aiming for the cyborg's nose. He grunted and you flipped him off you. You didn't feel your knife, so you punched him. There was already blood from the headbutt, but that wasn't going to keep him down. So you had to hit him. A lot.

Two sets of hands dragged you off the cyborg and you thrashed.

"Easy sweetpea," a voice said. "We got you. Come on, Lucky. You're OK. It's OK."

And then you were yourself, Genji holding one arm, Jesse holding the other. Someone was laughing in the background. And when you looked down, you saw Strike Commander Jack Morrison, his eyes wide, blood gushing out of his nose. You might have split his lip too.

"Oh," you sagged, Genji and Jesse still holding you up. "Oh shit." The classroom was eerily quiet except the rough laughter coming from behind you. Gabriel stepped forward, mirth evident on his face, and offered Jack his hand.

"You OK, Jack?"

"A little shocked." Morrison tilted his head back, stausing the flow.

"Your face was pretty priceless."

"My face is pretty bloody."

You flinched "I...uh...am so sorry." You had Jack Morrison's blood smeared on your knuckles. You sat there, forcing yourself to breathe normally. You were dead. You were kicked out. Then you were dead, because you'd just punched the Strike Commander in the face. Worse, you punched Gabriel's boyfriend in the face.

"I always knew you had it in you, Lucky. You think too much. You should be using more instinct." Gabriel paused. "Though I thought Genji would be the one to push you over the edge," he said. "Thanks, Jack."

Your brain stuttered.

Jesse and Genji released you.

"Class dismissed," Gabriel said. "Go get Jack some ice, Lucky."

Jack's expression was impossible for you to read, mostly because he was holding an icepack over his face.

"I'm really sorry, Commander Morrison," you said.

"I said call me "Jack," he muttered from behind the ice.

"It's a little blood, Lucky. It's not a big deal." The three of you were in Gabriel's office. Jack had stripped off his bloody shirt and was sitting in Gabriel's chair. You tried not to stare at his chest. But you kept sneaking glances. He was very toned, with a dusting of blonde hair and pink nipples.
"I'm fine," Jack said. "A little embarrassed, but this is nothing."

Gabriel sat on the desk and leaned over to kiss Jack. They looked good together. You felt heat traveling up your cheeks.

"She's called Lucky Strike for a reason," Gabriel smirked.

"Because I'm lucky, not skilled," you added.

"That didn't feel like luck," Jack said. "Forgot about your fingers."

"Sorry," you said again.

"Stop apologizing," Gabriel said. "It's annoying."

You sat on your desk. Jack tossed the ice pack in the trash and leaned against Gabriel.

"I didn't see what happened. What was the trigger?" Gabriel asked too casually.

"I uh...he had me by the throat and squeezed. I kind of blacked out, but more like...I don't know."

Jack frowned. "Has someone tried to strangle you before?"

"Yeah," you said. You had your right hand over your neck. "I didn't know I'd react that way."

"Talked to your shrink about it?" Gabriel asked.

"I honestly didn't know it was an issue. I mean, I've avoided a lot of different deaths; I don't have reactions to rocks, scorpions, or toasters."

Gabriel opened his mouth, then closed it again. He took another moment. "Triggers aren't always logical. I can only begin to guess yours. Cyborgs was the obvious one."

Your brow furrowed. "Is that why you put me with Genji?"

"You once killed eight people in a night," Gabriel said. "I'm only pairing you with experienced operatives. Genji is the best adapted to handle you if you freak out."

"I didn't do it bare-handed," you said.

"Taking a combat knife to a single cyborg is pretty impressive," Jack said. He looked comfortable in Gabriel's chair, almost boyish. "You did it to three."

You rubbed your face. He was making it sound more impressive than it actually was. "It wasn't a fair fight."

"So who tried to strangle you?" Gabriel asked.

"There was a smaller cyborg right before we got out of the base. You didn't see him, because the big guy was busy punching you."

Jack gripped Gabriel's thigh, his mouth pressed in a flat line. The expression gave his face a vicious cast. It was the eyes. His eyes went cold with a murderous anger you recognized. It hit you then that Jack Morrison really loved Gabriel.
"Yeah, saw it in the mission report. He had you flat on your back, but you managed to stab him."

"I cut my back drawing the knife," you said.

"I saw that firsthand," Gabriel said and it made you squirm. "Nasty little nick you had there."

You took a deep breath. "He took me down and decided I was your...mistress. Said he wanted to fuck me while he strangled me. Didn't have time, but he was pretty excited about whatever he could do. Captain Patel's gun had gone quiet. And I could hear the other guy just slugging you." You didn't remember the guy's whole face, just that lower jaw and neck. "I stabbed him through the throat." You mimicked a stabbing motion with your left hand, then turned in ninety degrees to simulate the twist. "Then I got behind the big guy and did the same thing."

Jack leaned forward, resting his chin on his hands. "You dragged Gabriel out?"

It was all the report, but there was something in Jack's eyes that you couldn't identify. But you understood he wanted to hear it from you firsthand, and maybe you owed him that much.

"I was hopped up on adrenaline, but he's heavy. I had a stolen headset and was tracking the countdown. Gabriel wouldn't get up, but he wanted to yell at me about not following orders. I didn't care, because Captain Patel told me to keep him alive. I couldn't get him completely clear of the blast zone though."

"You know, Gabriel came back with almost no shrapnel wounds," Jack said. "But you..." "Captain Patel told me to keep him alive," you said, looking at your desk. "I wasn't being heroic. Our attackers wanted him dead. They'd killed everyone else. I can be real petty. It was really a big "fuck you." That's all."

"Thank you for shielding me," Gabriel said. "You didn't mention that in your report."

They both watched you with some kind of fragile emotion you didn't want to think about and you felt the blood rushing to your cheeks. "There's no way to say something like that without sounding like you're bragging. Like "Oh look, I saved your life this many times. You owe me, pleb." After you carted me through the snow, I wasn't keeping tally."

"You're an idiot," Gabriel said gruffly. "Aishani was right. You're too stupid to be left to your own devices."

"Thank you for bringing him back," Jack said. He was really looking at you now, so very different from your first few meetings. You wondered if he was just talking about Black Base Delta. "I'm glad Gabriel has you to rely on." There was a tinge of pink in his cheeks and he was so pretty you couldn't look directly at him.

"You guys can't just go saying things like that," you muttered. "I'm not evolved enough to handle it."

"It's just good to know that deep down, Lucky Strike is mostly lizard brain," Gabriel smirked. "I'm also going to point out that my assistant can totally kick your new assistant's ass."

"Why are you so competitive?" Jack muttered. "I didn't even get to pick my assistant."

"Overwatch Barbie has it bad for Jack," Gabriel smirked.
"She's really efficient," Jack said weakly.

"She looks like Barbie. Complete WASP name too. She thinks that if she can just collate harder, she'll win his heart."

"Ainsley is very...earnest," Jack said, massaging his temples. "She's also Director Petras' niece. So if you see more of Jack around here, that's the reason." Gabriel exuded smug. You weren't exactly sure why he was so pleased with himself. The man was like a cat.

"Shall I requisition more chairs?"

"Make it a couch, with a fold-out bed."

"Really?" You weren't sure if you crammed enough incredulity into that one word, but you tried.

"Would you rather we used your desk?" Gabriel purred.

You worked your jaw, trying to make words come out. You managed a short chattering noise.

"He's kidding about the fold-out bed," Jack said. "We'd break it."

There were names to cross-check. After yesterday, you didn't think Jack would have betrayed Gabriel. Someone had to investigate, and it wasn't your place. You attached the Gleeson interrogation transcript and video to a message and sent it Lacroix. He was cleared for it.

You'd identified some of people Gleeson named. Antonio Vialli was a mega-rich CEO with family ties to the Camorra. You studied his picture. He was the one meeting Gleeson in Genji's surveillance photos.

Ngumi was Adhabu Ngumi AKA Doomfist, a vicious cyborg mercenary.

Anh Nguyen was a highly controversial nationalist and UN ambassador who seemed to have a massive grudge against Overwatch.

Shimada was a powerful Yakuza clan.

You cross-checked other Morrisons, but contextually, you knew Gleeson meant Jack.

And Petras? Well, Director Petras had been appointed by the UN. He was rarely at the HQ, mostly seen making statements to the UN. Jack was the Face. Gabriel was the Muscle. Petras was the Sphincter, pushing all the shit out. Or at least, that's how Gabriel described it.

"It looks like we have a fully automated science lab in Greenland." Gabriel said. They would be less secure than actual bases. You had to move fast.

"So we should ask Winston to mine the backups?"

"You ask the monkey," Gabriel said.
You rolled your eyes. "Why are you such a dick to him?"

Gabriel didn't look up from the desk, but you could feel his attention. "I'm not."

"You are."

Gabriel gave you a look. "Have you ever seen Planet of the Apes? Apes take over, enslave humanity, and are a general nuisance. Now Winston is apparently from a secret base on the moon and he's the only super smart gorilla that doesn't want to kill the humans and he coincidentally was able to build a rocket ship to carry him to earth. You buy that?"

When he put it that way...

"It's fine to be suspicious. I'm suspicious of everyone. Doesn't mean I'm a dick to them."

Gabriel snorted.

You paused. "Have you been reading his logs? There are a lot of anomalies in our mainframe. He's running a backtrace on the ones he can pry open." You stretched, feeling your lower back twinge. You'd been sitting too long. "We need better hackers. He's come up with a laundry list of troublesome behaviors."

"I know we need more trustworthy hackers. I'll look into."

"I've compiled a list of Gleeson's names with dossiers." You tapped your stylus against the desk. "He named Petras but..."

"Hard copy only, keep it off the books."

"I meant, which one? Yeah, I can see the politician sabotaging us, but there's a whole family of them. His niece could be fucking shit up in Jack's office. His brother has some pretty questionable financial holdings. His uncle-"

"All of them. Keep it quiet," Gabriel said. "Delegate it if you have to."

Genji was the best choice. You sent him and Winston their respective assignments.

"Vialli is the next link," you said.

"I'm on it." Gabriel looked up. "How do you feel about being on mission rotation?"

"...If it's combat, I'd strongly prefer someone I trust at my back." Word had gotten around that you'd "attacked" Jack. After that Jack made a point to be seen walking with you through the mess hall, chatting pleasantly about chili. He'd clapped you on the back and laughed when you told him that real chili didn't come from a can and what the hell was wrong with him? But you were still getting the cold shoulder from rank and file Overwatch agents.

Conversely, your fellow Blackwatch agents now thought you were insane, but competent. Apparently, everyone got beaten up by Genji. Not everyone got to punch Jack. They were getting used to you sleeping in the rec room. Sometimes you overhead things like "Who cares whom she's sleeping with? I'd sleep with the commander in a heartbeat!" and "She's obviously not sleeping with the boss, because she's on the couch all the time, hogging the throw pillows." Those statements were strangely validating.

"All right." Gabriel stood. "It's your turn to cook." He cracked his neck. "Jack's probably You mentally cycled through your ingredients. "You think he'll like curry udon?" You'd have to put some aside for Genji too.

"Yeah," Gabriel said. "Make sure you do those soft-boiled eggs."

"You're awfully bossy," you said, a flicker of warmth in you chest.

"Because I'm the boss." He crossed his arms. "Deal with it."

You and Jesse ended up in Tokyo. There was a link in the Shimada connection that Gabriel wanted taken alive. A mid-level Yakuza boss, Kigarashi Fuma had been "vacationing" in Europe recently. Right now, he was staying at a fancy casino, eating gold-flecked sushi and cube-shaped melons.

"I'm just saying, we need jobs that give us those kind of vacation benefits," Jesse murmured, his hand around your waist. He wore a surprisingly nice black suit with a bolo tie and his signature hat. Your cherry red boots went thigh-high, covering your scars. The hem of your matching red dress barely brushed the tops of your boots. Even your gloves were red. Jesse looked like a business man. You looked like a fetish whore.

"I'm just saying, next time, you be the sex worker."

"You look good, baby," Jesse grinned. "You know the boss picked it out, not me, right?"

It was a struggle to keep your face vapid and smiling. But if you didn't, you might smear your lipstick. "Let's just get to the room, OK?"

"Did you pick up the wagashi already? I ain't fussy, but Genji-" Jesse asked, looking around.

"Yeah. Genji was pretty adamant that he wanted his fancy traditional desserts. I got all the stuff shipped out this afternoon. Not risking leaving it behind if this goes south."

"Maybe I should get Ana some tea."

"She'd like that," you said. "You should get her some wagashi too. They're supposed to go with tea. She'd probably have to invite you to eat some with her."

"Huh." Jesse smiled down at you. "You're good."

"I'm a sucker for lost causes."

Snorting, Jesse pushed you into the stairwell. You froze as he pinned you to the wall, his jaw grazing your neck.

"Grab my hair or something," he said. "Ow, like you're enjoying yourself, sweatpea."

"Sorry." You loosened your grip and stroked his hair while he planted the device. You'd hit two other elevators earlier. Here and the central elevator - the one Kigarashi was most likely to take, were riskier.

The two of you stumbled out and to the elevator, your skirt sliding up too high. Jesse turned you away from him and pushed you against the elevator wall. His hips jerked against you and you yelped. "You're knocking it off kilter."

"Sorry honeypie," he grinned, burying his face in your hair. "I'm being convincing. Move your hips a little."

You acquiesced, wondering when you'd become a sex mime. Maybe that's what happened when you didn't get laid. You just went through the motions as a sad mockery of the real thing. You still hadn't worked up the nerve to use the finger vibrator. Not that you didn't have other toys, but you really didn't want to have that personalized product review conversation with Torby.

Jesse dragged you out of the elevator and the two of you stumbled past some startled looking men with elaborate tattoos. Yakuza. Jesse pushed you against the designated hotel room door, while fumbling with his keycard.

You moaned, and it came out stilted. Oh well, your role was a prostitute. You were supposed to fake it.

Jesse huffed into your neck and got the door open, quickly pushing you inside. He shut the door hard and then started laughing. "You sounded like a dying goat. Ain't no one thinking you're turned on."

"Shut up." You shook your head. "We're two floors under Kigarashi's suite. I'd rather take him out the window."

"We need him alive, Lucky. Stick to the plan."

You readjusted your weapons, wishing you could wear your combat gear instead. Your tanto was strapped to your thigh and covered by the boot.

"You should keep that outfit."

"Shut up, Jesse."

"No, really. It looks good on you. Commander has an eye for that kind of thing."

"I'm sure I'll have to use it if I'm undercover."

Jesse paused. "Morrison spends a lot more time in the office with you two."

"Petras' niece is his new assistant. Gabriel says she keeps throwing herself at Jack."

"You sure Morrison's not a little worried about how much time the Commander and his lovely assistant are spending together?"

"Considering, we're working and that he's there half the time, no." The thought had crossed your mind, but Jack never seemed displeased to see you. He could be faking, and the Strike Commander was a good actor, but your gut reaction was that he just liked being there, if only to get away from his assistant.

You didn't have any illusions about your ties to him. You were Gabriel's friend. Jack accepted you because of it and because you weren't in his direct chain of command. He was a decent person and he would be friendly to you because of that. Nothing more, nothing less.

"It ain't awkward at all?" Jesse probed.

"Only where Gabriel talks about having sex on my desk. When they get all...affectionate, I just leave." You might have also booby-trapped your desk. "I mean, we're having a chili cook-off next week. You want in?"

"Hot damn, about time you picked something good to make!"

"...I thought you liked my cooking," you said, double-checking your fingertips.

"Of course I do, but chili. Chili! I make mine with lots of bourbon and porkbutt."

"Huh. OK. Well, whatever you make, I'm sure it will be better than Jack's. He said he was opening a can and adding cheese. I think he's joking, but...sometimes I can't tell."

"OK, as long as you're not stuck in some awkward love triangle."

Your heart twinged. You were stuck on something else. Shin had talked to you about Tokyo. There were places he'd wanted you to see. You couldn't remember them all. You'd gone to a shrine today and bumbled through a ritual prayer for the dead.

"I'm not over Shin," you said. "But I'm doing better. I can check out guys and not feel guilty. But my head isn't in that game." You checked your burner tablet. Patched into the security network, you found Kigarashi heading toward the elevators, one bodyguard at his heel.

Jesse adjusted his holster. "He's in place."

You and Jesse exited the hotel room. You took the fire escape two floors up, not encountering anyone. You leaned on Jesse, as the two of you waited for the elevator.

Ding.

You and Jesse stumbled inside, before Kigarashi and his bodyguard could get out. Jesse took the guard, driving his fist into the man's liver. You fell against Kigarashi, pressing your middle finger to his neck. You felt the needle pop through your glove and into his flesh. He gasped, stiffened, then fell against you.

"Hit it," Jesse said.

You activated the scramblers, shorting out localized surveillance. It was a casino. They'd rush to the vault first, giving you a clear exit route. You held Kigarashi against you, like you were helping his drugged ass out to his car. Jesse deposited the bodyguard in the stairwell. Then he came back to help you with Kigarashi. The fire escape door opened, siren disabled, to a side street. An SUV, keys in the ignition, awaited you. You and Jesse loaded Kigarashi into the back. Jesse secured the target. You drove out to the airfield.

All in all, it went smoothly.

Genji got to interrogate Kigarashi, and you didn't sit in. The transcripts would be enough.
You'd picked up so souvenirs in Japan and lots of snacks. Jesse had managed to wrangle an invite to tea after presenting both Captain Amari and the visiting Fareeha a beautifully wrapped box of wagarashi each. He hadn't liked the desserts one bit, and neither had Fareeha, but Captain Amari found them charming. She seemed to enjoy the tea Jesse got her too. Jesse was over the moon. You gave Fareeha some of your Meiji chocolates and said they were from Jesse. Because even if he didn't have a chance, you supported him.

You delivered candy to Torby and Angela, reporting that the injector had worked well. You asked for some kind of cap to keep from unintentionally triggering the mechanism when you were scrabbling around.

Torby grumbled, but he delivered one the next day.

You went all out for the chili cook-off. Little bread bowls, pepperjack cheese, sour cream. Cooking it the night before ensured it had time for the flavor to set. You used chunks of brisket and chuckeye in addition to coarse ground sirloin. The meat simmered till the fat would melt in your mouth. You would show Jack the power of seasonings: smoked salt, anchovies, adobo sauce, sherry, habanero peppers, cinnamon, chili powder, cumin, bay leaves, allspice...

The kitchen smelled delicious.

"You're definitely going to beat me," Jack said, as he came in. He was wearing his blue overcoat and eyepiece. Must be fresh from a mission. You didn't see Gabriel.

"That goes without saying. Chili doesn't come out of a can, Jack. That's not real chili. Whoever told you that lied." You might have raised your voice.

Jack grinned at you, his hair falling in his eyes. "I want to make an alliance. Gabriel and Jesse have formed one."

You scowled. "What?"

"Jesse made a smoker out of an empty oil drum. He's smoking a pork butt. Gabriel's making chorizo."

"Son of bitch!" You swore. "I totally saved his ass with Fareeha. And he didn't even offer me a spot."

Jack chuckled. "I can make light and fluffy cornbread. Just help me pick out the spices. All I have is taco seasoning in a packet."

You crossed your arms. "What else you got?"

"I don't know," Jack said with a shrug.

"You got any good booze?"

Jack snapped his fingers. "Yes. Wait, what do you need?"

"XO Cognac."

"Be right back." Jack flashed you a winning smile, perfect for a recruitment poster, and it might have melted part of your face. He was really too pretty.

You went back to stirring your chili. Fucking McCree. That traitor. You expected that Jack was back in ten minutes. He'd shed the overcoat and eyepiece and his black turtleneck was skin tight, clinging to his broad chest and shoulders. More importantly, he had a large unopened bottle of XO cognac. "I get them as a "appreciation" gifts," he said almost apologetically.

"Gimme," you said, opened it, and sniffed. You poured yourself a small glass and tasted it. Oh yeah that was nice. Fuck you Jesse. "OK, I'm in."

"The cornbread's better fresh," he said. "But I'm good for it tomorrow."

The cognac was worth way more, even if he didn't deliver. You gave Jack instructions on white chili. He chopped the onions, garlic, and jalapenos. You got him some canned navy beans and added cumin and white pepper. You donated some sherry and chicken stock. Then you poured yourself more cognac, because it was nice.

Jack took a sip out of your cup. "Damn. We should drink this."

"Yes," you agreed.

Jack got the base done, sautéing the aromatics and chicken with seasonings. He added the liquid and the beans and you were pleasantly surprised that he could actually cook.

"Tomorrow, add the heavy cream after you heat it up." You took your pot of chili back to your room because who knew what kind of dirty tricks Gabriel and Jesse would stoop to.

You came back and Jack had already cleaned up. He grinned at you as he put his pot in the fridge with a label that said "Property of the Strike Commander." It was fancy. You were a little jealous. You wanted fancy labels too.

"That is good," he said. "Better than in a can." He looked down at you. "So I hear you sold my pants once."

You put your hand over your face. You knew this was going to come up. Gabriel wouldn't have been able to keep that to himself. If you'd know the nature of their relationship, you never would have said anything. "I transported your alleged pants. I have no idea if they were real."

Jack laughed at you, which was a relief. "Now whenever I'm missing clothes, I tell Gabe to ask you about it."

"It's probably why he never asks me to pick up his dry cleaning," you said.

Jack grinned. "Maybe I'll offer a bounty on his clothes. You in?"

"Not worth my life, Jack."

"Want to finish this?" He held up the cognac.

You looked around. It was late. There weren't a lot of people out, but you didn't need any more rumors. This was the longest time you'd spent alone with Jack. It was actually kind of fun. "Not here."
"The office," he agreed. He started off at a brisk pace.

You ended up in Gabriel's office drinking expensive cognac with Jack.

"You actually got the couch," you said, staring at the back wall. "I am never sitting there." You sat down on one of the chairs across from Gabriel's desk.

"You're welcome to use it. Probably more comfortable than any of the common areas ones," Jack said, seated on Gabriel's desk. "There's no foldout bed."

You looked up at him, narrowing your eyes.

"It's come out that you're apparently narcoleptic. Or that your room is haunted. Or that Jesse has loud sex every night and it keeps you awake. I think he started that one." Jack shrugged. "We thought you'd be more comfortable in here. You already sleep at your desk."

"Thanks," you said, examining your gloves. You waited for the uncomfortable questions.

"It's not a big deal," Jack said, rubbing the back of his neck. He was turning a brilliant shade of red, possibly from the booze. "We haven't had sex on it," he blurted out, his eyes darting to your side of the office.

Son of a bitch. "What about my desk?" You got up and checked your trap.

"Gabriel uh...found your thumbtacks...and box cutters. Nice placement. We didn't see them."

"Seriously?" Your jaw dropped and you couldn't look at Jack.

"Well, we had to stop to pull out the tacks," Jack said. "Gabriel's a little sore about that. That's probably why he teamed up with Jesse."

You stared at your desk and tried very hard not to think of Gabriel bending Jack over your desk. Just like you tried very hard not to think of a nude Gabriel sprawled across your desk, Jack on top of him-

You downed the rest of your cognac and poured more. You drank till the burn of your blush was drowned out by the burn of the alcohol.

"I'm going to have to set fire to everything and start fresh," you told Jack. "Stop smiling at me, you asshole. I hate you all." You covered your face.

"The couch is untouched," he said. "I promise."

When you sobered up, you'd find the bleach.

"Reprobates," Gabriel boomed as he entered the office and you nearly fell off the couch.

You looked up. Jack was still in Gabriel's chair, wiping drool off his chin. You'd taken the cognac and hidden it under your desk. Because you were going to have to clean it. Because...
"I hate you," you told Gabriel. "You have a perfectly good desk! It's even bigger than mine. Why?"

Gabriel raised an eyebrow at Jack. Jack just grinned at you both. His hair was mussed.

"You couldn't resist bragging, could you?" Gabriel sighed. "The couch is a peace offering. We haven't done a thing on it."

"Yet!" You hissed.

"Keep it up and we will," Gabriel said.

"I will burn everything."

"So, who's coming to judge the chili?" Jack asked.

Gabriel gave him a suspicious look. "Gérard's out of town, so we have Genji, Angela, Ana, and some other assholes I don't give a shit about."

"He means Winston, Torby, and Reinhardt," you said.

"Reinhardt? Are we going to have enough food?" Jack cracked his neck and made a face. Instantly, Gabriel was there beside him massaging his shoulders.

"I didn't invite them," Gabriel said.

"Reinhardt overheard me telling Torby and invited himself," you admitted. "And he was so excited, I couldn't say no. Even if it threw off the judge count."

You, Jesse, Gabriel, and Jack ended up in the kitchen putting your finish touches on the chili. Jack wore an apron and kept kissing Gabriel. You were pretty sure he was doing it to sabotage the other man and you really hoped it was working.

You added cognac and reheated your chili, tasting it as you stirred. The spices had melded well. You ground black pepper and added some hot sauce. Your bread bowls would be out of the oven soon and your cheese was already grated. Jesse's chili smelled smoky and sweet. Gabriel's smelled like hot spices and bacon. Jack tasted his chili and gave you a wink. You turned back to your dish.

"Anyone need some cold refreshment?" Jack asked, breaking a pack of blonde ale.

You took one, and began plating. Chili in breadbowl, Jack's cornbread on the side, cheese on top.

Jesse happily chatted with Ana and Angela. Winston didn't look particularly enthused to be there, but it could just be Gabriel's presence. Torby and Reinhardt immediately helped themselves to the beer. Genji was stealing cornbread, but since it was from Jack's portion, you didn't care.

You were done first, and you set everyone's bowls in front of them smugly. Because who didn't love bread bowls?

Reinhardt beamed at you. It was so open and pure you didn't regret inviting him, even if he ended up voting for someone else. Torby went very quiet, but when he looked at you, he gave you a sharp nod of approval. Angela seemed quietly pleased as well.

Ana closed her eyes. "Bread bowls automatically win," she told you.
"Hot," was all Winston said, and downed a glass of milk.

"Then you won't be able to handle this," Gabriel said. He handed you a bowl. "Taste it and weep, chica."

"Because you mistook heat for flavor?"

"Not me. And I don't need fancy side dishes to win," he sneered.

You took a bite. Pork belly with mole, chorizo, sundried tomatoes, and fava beans. It was a smoky balance of piquant and sweet with plenty of spice. You gave him a grudging thumbs up.

Gabriel only grunted at you when he tasted your bowl.

Jesse grinned. "So spicy," he said, eating the cornbread first. Jack didn't need to say anything, happily coming back for seconds.

Jesse's chili surprised you in that it was really good. He'd smoked the pork butt and sautéed apples with his aromatics. Not as good as Gabriel's, and sweeter than you preferred, but solid.

The white chili is what surprised everyone. Mostly because they expected Jack to open a can and maybe grill some hotdogs. Gabriel gave you a long "I know what you did there" look, after Jack gave you half his cornbread. It was creamy and smooth, almost like a curry. It turned out like yours. You were kind of pleased.

Of course Reinhardt messed up the votes. He and Angela voted for Gabriel. Genji voted for Jack. Winston voted for Jesse. You secured Ana and Torby's votes.

You tried for a chef tiebreaker. Voting for your own was poor sportsmanship. You and Jesse then voted for Gabriel's chili. To your surprise, Gabriel and Jack voted for yours.

So in the end, you and Gabriel tied for no actual prize except bragging rights. And since this had initially been a contest between you and Gabriel, it solved nothing. You didn't mind.

You didn't actually like your therapist. But then, you didn't have to. In fact, you were starting to suspect that it was the act of seeking help, not the "talking about your feelings" that made the difference.

She had good tips for dealing with grief, and sometimes it was nice to have someone who didn't actually care about you listen to your problems with an objective ear. You didn't want the pity or well-meaning sympathy of a friend. Maybe you were being stupid, and yes, you knew you were, but if they pitied you, they wouldn't respect you. You couldn't handle that.

You gave up sleeping in your room. Your shrink had offered a sleeping pill prescription, but that wasn't the problem.

Today you were out at the memorial wall again. It was early and you held note cards in between your metal fingers. The most important one said "Shin: Were madly in love. Had kids. Or dogs. They were awful. We didn't care, we liked them anyway." There were others, but that was the one that stuck with you. They were all futures that couldn't happen now. No meeting
Rivka's grandchildren in a cafe and listening to her berate everyone. No taking Captain Patel out for drinks and reminiscing about old times. No attending Lao and Valdez's civil union and telling embarrassing stories. You bowed your head. You'd come up with your own rituals now.

Then you set the cards on fire, watching them burn away to ash. It was OK. You could let go of them now. Really.

The wind caught the embers and carried them upward. You stood there long after the flames died, your metal fingers so very warm.

Blackwatch needed better onboarding protocols. Making Faustian bargains with criminals wasn't a bad tactic, but that was no way to staff your organization with trustworthy reliable people. You weren't a bureaucrat. You weren't. You were just trying to make things run smoother. And you couldn't depend on Overwatch's HR department to fill your very specific needs. Winston had been a really good sport about helping out, but his workload was insane.

"I need a new hacker, Gabriel."

"You have access to the Interpol databases. I'll sign off on whatever clemency agreement you want. Go pick one." Gabriel didn't look up from his brief.

"I need a trustworthy new hacker, Gabriel. For Shit Spiders."

"Go ask Jack," he said, letting you know that he didn't have any idea where to get one either.

You rubbed your forehead. "Anyone have any tech-oriented family members?" Because it wasn't nepotism if you recruited them for their skills. And it wasn't nepotism if this was about trust issues...was it?

Gabriel looked up. "Huh. Not a bad idea. Why don't you expand that search?"

You thought of Lao and Rivka. Rivka had grandchildren, and a grandson she complained about more than the others. You were pretty sure that meant he was her favorite. You started to dig.

Rivka had one son with three children. Ziv Mihret was the only boy listed. You pulled up a picture off a social media network. He didn't really look like her, his face narrower, almost pinched, and his skin several shades darker. His hair had grown a little wild in an asymmetrical fro. He was tall and gawky, like he hadn't grown into his body yet. He was a recent computer systems engineering graduate of Tel Aviv University and had already completed his conscription.

You went a bit further, checking his transcripts, internships, and social media. He'd spent a lot of time in Addis Abba. OK, his mother was an Ethiopian Jew. He played a lot of online games. You were pretty sure he preferred men and was keeping it a secret from his family. Your snooping was definitely a violation of privacy and maybe an abuse of power. But you were on a mission.
Winston agreed his qualifications would be acceptable.

You forwarded his information to Gabriel.

"Go recruit him, if that's what you want," Gabriel said, not even looking up.

You messaged Winston that you'd need him available for a long distance interview and you checked in with Overwatch HR so you could go over hiring protocols. You looked up at over at Gabriel who grinning at his terminal. You were now 99% sure he was sending Jack obscene messages.

At least someone was having fun.

You took Jesse with you, because he was friendlier than Genji. Ziv lived in a student neighborhood, his flat small and cheap. You stopped to buy bourekas from a street vendor. The triangular-cut flaky phyllo dough was stuffed with cheese, potatoes, and spinach and topped with a hard-boiled egg. Jesse looked uncertain.

"You got to try stuff so you can take good stuff back to Captain Amari," you said.

"I'm eating this one," he told you after one bite.

The two of you walked leisurely around the apartment building, eating your lunch.

"So this is Rivka's grandson. Am I making a terrible error in judgment?"

"Guess that depends on the boy," Jesse told you. "You going to tell him about his grandmother?"

"If he joins up. I can't really dangle that in front of him without clearances." If he joined up, he would see that last video. You weren't sure if that was the right thing to do or not.

"No time like the present," Jesse said. "I want to be back in Zurich for tea."

You knocked on the door. There was a long pause and you could feel the scrutiny from the peephole. Ziv opened the door and his face unfriendly. He was in his early twenties and bony.

"Hello," you began.

"I'm not buying anything," he said in accented English.

"I'm not-"

"I don't want religion."

"I'm definitely not-"

"I'm not interested," he said and began to shut the door.

"I knew your grandmother and wanted to offer you a job," you blurted out.
Jesse snickered. "Smooth, Lucky."

Ziv's shoulders stiffened. "I know what my grandmother used to do, and I will not work for the Mossad. Good day." He shut the door in your face.

"I'm not with the Mossad," you said to the door. "Honest."

"If you knew my grandmother, what did she say about me?"

"That you were a good-for-nothing and lazy," you said, then wondered if honesty was your best policy. "I assumed it meant you were her favorite."

The door opened. Ziv stared hard at you. "Your name is "Lucky?"

"No, but she called me that," you said.

"Lucky Strike?"

Oh, he had heard of you. "I'm not here for that date," you said quickly.

Ziv made a face. "She didn't." He looked at your face. "She did!" He buried his face in his palm. "Savta was impossible."

"Above my pay grade," you said, and found that it didn't hurt as much as it used to.

"She...spoke of you," he said finally. "Said you got her tahini and were a disrespectful half-wit, who could only be trusted under adult supervision."

Jesse laughed at that.

"I can't deny that," you said after a moment of thinking.

"It meant she liked you," Ziv said. "Come in."

He had a neat flat, small and homey. Jesse looked strange in it; he didn't fit into normal settings. You wondered how long it would be before you were like that too. You noted a family portrait on the wall, Rivka sitting in the center, her glasses gleaming.

"I need someone who's good with computers. Your grandmother...I don't even know how she did half the things she did."

Ziv shrugged modestly. "She taught me everything I knew. But probably not everything she knew."

"I'd like to set up tests, an interview with my head tech, and get your consent for a background check, polygraph, all the invasive procedures."

"You haven't even said who you work for."

"I think you already know."

"Since Savta worked with you, it was a black ops division of Overwatch," he said. "You're just a rumor."

You shrugged. "I am."
Ziv looked away. "Savta didn't die in a plane crash, did she?"

You tilted your head back and closed your eyes. You remembered her final signoff. "I think you already know."

He was silent, because it wasn't your words that answered his question, but your face. You didn't look at him, because you understood that you didn't have a right to his grief.

You heard him swallow. "So you're offering me revenge?"

"And health insurance," you said, remembering Captain Patel's pitch.

Ziv snorted. "I live in Israel. We have universal health care."

Winston was delighted with the test results and interview. He'd be handling Ziv's acclimatization, because you didn't know how to onboard a hacker. Lacroix was going to do the polygraph. And you had hired your first hacker-lackey. Hackey? You were going to stop now. The power had obviously gone to your head and shorted out your brain.

The holes in your cybersecurity were closing. The problem wasn't solved, but now you had a handle on the situation.

You suspected Gleeson was right. Talon was a major player. Talon was a problem. But Talon only the triggerman. There were too many figures in the UN who had vested interests in maintaining instability. You couldn't call it a conspiracy, because you weren't sure they were acting in concert. But it was starting to look a lot more complicated than just betrayal.

So you dug deeper and you trusted your team would be there to fish you out if you got in over your head.

A lot of underlings didn't particularly like Gabriel, which was fair, because Commander Reyes was a hardass, no-nonsense, son of bitch with an axe to grind. Most people understood they could rely on him, but his workplace interpersonal exchanges left a lot to be desired. You could tolerate his abrasiveness because you got to see the person outside the job. And because somewhere along the line you forgot to be afraid of him.

"Goddamn scum-sucking taintworms!" Gabriel snarled as he slammed the door behind him.

You looked up, took a sip of coffee, and then went back to scanning reports.

"Fucking bureaucratic shitstains." He dropped into his chair and putting his boots on his desk. "I'll show them budget cuts. Clip the fat right off their heads-"

You waited for the muttering to abate. "Good meeting?"
His head whipped around and he narrowed his eyes at you. "Fuckers want to expand Overwatch reach while cutting our operations budget by a third." Blackwatch got its funding from the operations budget. There was a blackbag slush that you didn't question too closely; though you were pretty sure Genji had been funneling mafia assets into it. "Someone had the nerve to suggest we draw our funds from "other enterprises." This isn't the CIA. We don't run drugs and deal weapons to scumfucks!"

"Who? I'll add them to the list."

"I made several additions to the list," Gabriel said tersely. "Then they started asking questions about operations they had no business knowing about."

"Ziv and Winston have started uh...their individualized investigations. I'm expect to start hearing back from them today."

You checked your mailbox. "Oh, Ziv's got something for me. I'm going to down to the lab. Hmm." Jesse was in Spain. You'd have to ask Genji.

You made your way down to the lab, flexing your fingers. Your control of the blades was getting better. Angela had been making monthly upgrades to the software, tweaking the sensitivity. Torby still hadn't made you a protective gauntlet yet, muttering something about how every kid wanted to be "Doomfist."

Ziv sat cross-legged on the conference table, staring hard at his tablet. "You were right to hire me, Lucky. I don't know what kind of shitshow Reyes was running, but your systems were a mess."

"For the love of cheese, don't say that in front of him," you said, tilting your head back and pleading silently with whatever was upstairs that Ziv took your advice. You didn't want to have to hire a new hacker. "Please."

"I mean some of these people he caught and hired? Should've just shot them. Their protocols are full of holes and some of them are even intentional." Ziv threw his hands up. "I finally watched the video."

"Ah." You rubbed your forehead. "I'm sorry. Jack demoted the guy. And I might have accidentally transferred him to Antarctica."

Ziv raised a brow. "You can do that?"

"Technically, no. But Blackwatch is petty. So yes, maybe we bent some rules and did something like that. And maybe Commander Reyes helped."

"Savta would still be alive if Blackwatch's systems hadn't been compromised."

"Maybe," you said. "But it wasn't the computers that busted in and shot everyone."

Ziv huffed. "That our enemies knew all our moves ten steps ahead didn't help."

"Truth," you agreed. Ziv had been given full access to Shit Spiders and once, when he was drunk, he asked to see your scars. He was on the team, and Rivka's blood, so you'd rolled up your pant leg and taken off your gloves. He didn't say anything, just took in the damage with sharp amber eyes. And then everyone went back to drinking. He knew. That was enough.

"I've cleared two people. And then I have two more for the commander, one of them's internal security so you know he's done some damage. Ben-zona!” Genji leaned against the table. You hadn't heard him come in and apparently, neither had Ziv.

"Here." Ziv handed Genji a file. "You take that one. Lucky can go get the other one."

"Commander's going to want you to sit in on the...interrogation." You blew out a breath. "It'll likely be messy."

Ziv smiled at you with bright white teeth. "I don't think I'll mind."

Vladimir Ivanov was not a small man; he was part of Blackwatch Internal Security or In-Sec, kind of like an MP only less law-abiding. You wondered if Ziv had meant to give Genji this one. You flipped through his dossier. He'd been Spetnatz once and he outweighed you by at least a hundred pounds. Ziv had found some pretty damning messages in his personal communications. You approached him in the hall as he was coming back from the gym.

"Hey, Ivanov. Commander wants to see you," you said.

He turned around, narrowing his gray eyes at you. He kept his head shaved, and had some rather elaborate tattoos on his limbs. All in all, he went out of his way to nonverbally scream "I am a badass."

"I don't answer to the commander's whore," he sneered and kept walking.

Well, then. You hadn't really expected that response. Maybe he knew you were on to him. Yup, that was it. And so you'd have to take him down before he tried to escape or destroy evidence. Definitely good justification; that's what you'd tell the review board if it came down it.

You eyed his neck. You couldn't kill him, Gabriel needed to interrogate him. You calmly walked up behind him. "Seriously, Ivanov-" you put a hesitant whine in your voice, sounding like a helpless little girl.

He whirled, and you struck him in the throat, metal fingers extended. Your control was better. No blades popped out.

He grabbed his neck, face turning red, and dropped to his knees.

"I said, "the Commander wants to see you." The proper response would've been "Yes ma'am." Or maybe "on the double, ma'am." Or even "understood." That, was completely uncalled for." And then you punched him, because you didn't need to monologue. You just needed to get his unconscious body to the interrogation room. You called Genji. You weren't dragging Ivanov through the base.

Then you went to find Gabriel. "Prep the interrogation room," you told him, peeking your head in the office. "We've got live ones."

Gabriel stood, adjusting his hat, his smile was wide and unpleasant. "You always know how to cheer me up," he said, too happy and too vicious for your comfort.

You paused stood there, wondering if you were making a mistake. Maybe it would be better to get Lacroix.
"You can come too," Gabriel said, looking down at his desk. "If it doesn't bother you." Then he looked you dead in the eye. "I trust you to keep me from going too far."

How could you say no to him after that?

Chapter End Notes

So much plot and fluff stuff. There were parts I wasn't sure about, but you know what, it's written, I've edited too many times, they're in.

If you were curious, I'm several chapters ahead, but I go back and edit for a few days because I write late at night and stuff gets jumbled as fuck. Right now it's all "is this sexual behavior out of character for Jack/Gabriel because I've read so much Reaper76 smut I legit can't tell." Then it's like "lolololol, nothing is out ooc for them, they're sex fiend super soldiers!" Because I've read so much Reaper76 stuff I uh...yeah.

Off to make soup. Literally. Because I'm hungry.
Nine months in, you were halfway down the list. Traitors talked and some got their 9mm pension plan. Ziv was heavily modifying the Blackwatch systems. Genji was dealing with the Shimada connection. Gabriel had personally assassinated the Vialli patriarch in what was meant to look like a N’drangheta hit, and raided his private office. Winston was still decrypting that chunk of data, but Ziv had doubled the pace.

You suspected the whole Vialli family was corrupt, but you could only link the dead man to Talon with any certainty. Jesse had taken down Ngumi, but another "Doomfist" had risen in his place.

You, Ziv, and Winston were sorting the data from the Greenland science lab. Rivka had managed to mask and route the data there. But there was so much and you didn't even know what you were looking for. Winston and Torby had upgraded the Blackwatch systems hardware, with Ziv doing maintenance weekly. Gabriel was easing up on Winston and Torby, to your relief.

Jack still showed up at Gabriel's hand-to-hand class when he had time. Gabriel always partnered him with you. Which sucked, because Jack cheerfully wiped the floor with you. You were starting to wonder if Jack secretly hated you and was trying to drive you insane. You started hitting him for real. He didn't seem to mind or let up.

Gabriel never sparred with you. You assumed it was to avoid feeding the rumor mill. That was OK. You didn't need another super strong person to kick your ass in front of everyone.

"Got a short assignment for you, if you need to get out of the office," Gabriel said while you dredged through the 9th Circle's backups.

Gabriel rose and came over to your desk. "Stiff?"

"Yeah," you said.

"You want me to work on it?" He asked. "I can see the tension from here."

You scratched your head. Gabriel was touchy feely with Jack, and that was about it. "Yeah, I guess. Thanks."

"You look like you're in pain," Gabriel said, clearing his throat. "Angela does this kind of thing too if you'd be more comfortable with her."

You didn't feel like walking all the way to the infirmary. You got up and sat cross-legged on the couch. "Just don't do one of those crazy bone cracking things that leaves me unable to move."

"Like snapping your neck?" Gabriel asked. He sat behind you, the couch sinking under his weight.
"That would be bad," you said, looking over your shoulder warily.

His large hands rested on your shoulders, and very carefully, he began knead. You groaned. He was strong, his fingers working the knots out. "OK, you could've made a fortune as a masseuse."

"Jack talks too much."

You tried to think of a time Jack mentioned massages. "He's never said anything about your back rubs."

He chuckled. "I give a lot of happy endings."

You hung your head. You'd walked right into that one. "I hate you."

One hand carefully worked along your neck. You swallowed and held very still.

"Too much?" Gabriel asked.

"I'm OK," you said. You weren't going to freak out because Gabriel touched your neck. No one was squeezing your throat. No one was hurting you. You could breathe. You took several deep breaths, just reassure yourself of that.

His fingers rubbed carefully, loosening the tension. He moved down your midback, focusing on the muscles around your shoulder blades. "These are interconnected. Working this muscle group will also help relax your shoulders." His voice was soothing.

"OK," you said. It hurt, but it was a good soreness. Gabriel had strong hands and while you'd expected him to use more bruising force on your knots, he was surprisingly gentle.

"Do you want to hear about the assignment?" he asked.

"OK," you said. Because at that moment, you would have agreed to anything he asked.

"Jack's going to be at a diplomatic conference in Paris. I'd like you to go watch his six."

You raised your head, making your very specific "Are you fucking serious?" face. "I'm sorry, did I hear you right? You want me to go to Paris with your boyfriend and make sure no one kills him? Because your boyfriend throws me around the mat every time we spar and thinks it's hilarious when I punch him. Your boyfriend is like ten times stronger than me, five times faster, and super deadly. Your boyfriend is a goddamn super soldier."

Gabriel's fingers traveled down your spine, working your fatigued lower back. "I am too. Doesn't mean I don't depend on you."

Oh. The upholstery suddenly grew very interesting. "Why?"

"Ainsley's going with him." Gabriel's knuckles dug into your muscles. You winced. "If she's part of Petras' plan, he'll be isolated. Ana and I can't go without drawing attention. Jesse and Genji are occupied. It could be nothing. It could be everything. I'm not willing to take that risk." He pressed down on a sore spot making you wince.

"In what capacity?" You'd never make it as Jack Morrison's overt bodyguard. Just like being his second assistant would probably set Ainsley off on you.

"You'd be in civilian clothes."
"Does Jack want me to go?" Which was a nice way of checking to see if Jack knew what Gabriel was up to. You looked over your shoulder. Gabriel's focus was on your back and he pressed on another muscle group causing your entire low back to twitch.

"Yes. How are you so tense?" Gabriel asked. You could feel the frown in his voice.

"It's a side effect of being a workaholic punching bag."

"I thought Jesse was helping you out," Gabriel said in such a neutral tone, you weren't sure what he meant.

"Jesse is a good friend and great coworker. He makes missions run smooth and does occasionally help with paper work."

Gabriel silently rubbed your back, obviously waiting for you to continue.

"We're still trying to convince Genji to join us for a slumber party: monster movies, hair-braiding, and blanket forts. But I guess Genji's too cool for that kind of thing."

Gabriel snorted. "What are you, six years old?"

"At heart. Maybe we should invite Captain Amari and Fareeha," you decided. You'd have to leave off the alcohol, but it would still be fun. Jesse would like that. "She can shame Genji for missing out."

"Are you still having problems with...other agents?" Oh, maybe that's what he meant.

"Not really." You stretched your neck, feeling the bones pop. "But I don't really have the time or inclination to socialize outside our little circles. Paranoia is not conducive to making friends."

"I get that," Gabriel said. Yeah he should, he embodied it.

"You sure Jack wants me to go?" You'd seen him the other night, and he hadn't said a word about this.

"Yes."

"Then why isn't he asking me?"

"Because you're my assistant," Gabriel said, sounding oddly offended.

"Huh." You sighed. Gabriel would have needed to clear it anyway. "OK."

"You'll need some new clothes," he said, because apparently he knew that you only owned one suit and countless generic Blackwatch sweats.

"No hooker outfits," you grumbled.

Gabriel continued to massage your back, his hands very warm. "It'll be tasteful." His thumbs worked another knot, digging into your back. You gripped the arm of the sofa, letting your head hang loose. He kept finding the fatigued spots and working the muscles loose, switching between your shoulders and low back. His hands were so warm and soothing. Eyes closed, you gave a soft mewl.

Gabriel froze. "Are you all right?"
"Uh...yes," you said, voice too squeaky. "I'm good. Thanks for the back rub," you almost melted off the couch, but Gabriel was there steadying you, both hands on your shoulders.

"Any time, chica. Thanks for agreeing to go."

Even in your hazy state, you were suddenly suspicious of Gabriel's intentions. "What aren't you telling me, Gabriel?"

"It's too late, you've already agreed to go," he said smugly.

You were going to kill Gabriel. You were going to put him in a sack, roll it down the hill, and straight into the Lake Zurich. It would be great. You could sip lemonade and watch the him slowly sink into the harbor.

"Please stop making that face," Jack said. "You're scaring my assistant." He didn't sound too bothered.

"My apologies, sir." You smoothed your expression over.

You stood beside Jack on the private Overwatch jetliner. Your outfit actually wasn't so bad: fitted black waistcoat, black cloth gloves, crisp white collared shirt, narrow legged black trousers, and polished Italian leather ankle boots with a slight heel. Your bright blue pocket square matched Jack's overcoat. You had a pistol holstered snugly under your waistcoat, and your tanto in a sheath on your low back. You were Jack's...valet? Butler? Accessory? You decided on the title Assassin-Butler. You were a dreaded Assassin-Butler, the last of your kind. Roaming the world to fight evil and serve a good cup of tea. "More prosecco, sir?"

"No thank you, Ms. Strike," he said, sounding amused. It wouldn't do to use your real name, but really?

"I'll take some," Ainsley Petras said hesitantly.

You debated throwing the bottle at her. Instead, you made a neat turn and poured her a glass, resisting the urge to poison it. You were wearing your combat attachments, because it was a special occasion. You served it silently, noting that Ainsley wouldn't actually look at you.

There were several cover stories that Gabriel had offered. Jack Morrison fan club member, complete with t-shirts with Jack's face on them. Movie producer, with stiletto heels and a too-tight skirt-suit. Sponsor showgirl, wearing some bizarre sexualized version of the Overwatch uniform made from spandex. There was a French maid outfit too, but you were pretty sure that Gabriel was just fucking with you at that point. You would have been fine with "low-key reporter" but for some reason that wasn't in the repertoire. Something about the "sanctity of the press" and "not putting reporters in danger so you could play undercover." Which was bullshit, but Blackwatch did shadier things than pretend to be a muckraker. So to the world, you were Jack's hand servant, if anyone asked. Jack had even practiced "Oh yes, Ms. Strike is in my personal employ. Next question." Ainsley was his professional assistant.

Ainsley knew you were her counterpart in Gabriel's office. Jack had explained that someone had lost a bet and this was the result. He might have heavily implied it was Gabriel.
Ainsley looked uneasy, and you figured if she was really in on the conspiracy, or even remotely intelligent, she'd know you were Jack's bodyguard.

Gabriel was absolutely right to call Ainsley "Overwatch Barbie." Blonde, blue-eyed, and obviously from money, she looked like the very rich girl next door. Her designer skirt suit was blue, a few shades lighter than Jack's, and cut to flatter her cheerleader figure. She wore pearls and very understated makeup making her lips a glossy pink, and her eyes soft and wide. Her default expression was a beauty queen smile and she was so very perky. She didn't swear, but she spoke with a breathy voice you had to lean in to hear. She was a future trophy wife, all pageant smiles and limp handshakes.

You didn't like her. Not because she and Jack looked like they could be an Aryan power couple. Not just because she kept touching Jack and speaking earnestly to him. Jack could take care of himself. No. Your poor roots were showing. You had no patience for entitled rich girls playing white savior. If she didn't stop talking about her charity trip to help are those "starving orphans in Africa" you were going to open the emergency exit and throw her out. And if she didn't stop talking about how that trip "really changed her perspective," you were going to stab her with the crab fork. It would so cute. So. So. Cute.

"Ainsley, I'm going over my speech. Don't you have an itinerary to review?" Jack's voice was military firm, and disapproving. It felt weird, considering he never spoke to you that way.

"All done, sir," she beamed. "Landing at 3PM. Fifteen minutes to meet the press. Hotel by 4:30. Reservations at L'Occident at 6PM. Diplomatic drinks and cigars after."

"Is Ms. Strike covered in the reservations for L'Occident?" Jack asked.

"No, Jack. I didn't realize she was accompanying us."

"See if you can get her in to all of our scheduled events. If not, she can take your spot."

"But I have all your briefings-"

"It's mission-critical, Ainsley. That's all I can say."

"Oh. Yes sir. I understand." She regarded you both with big doe eyes. "I'll call in some favors. My aunt knows the head chef personally. She says the onion tartes are spectacular."

You started reaching for the crab fork.

"Ainsley, I need to focus," Jack said sharply.

"Sorry, sir," she said, sounding hurt.

Gabriel had explained that you'd need to stand to attention in public. So you were stuck, on the fancy jet, standing behind Jack's comfy chair, staring impassively at the walls. It was only five days. You could do five days.

"Ms. Strike, can you take a look at these documents? Make edits as needed."

You felt Ainsley's eyes on you as Jack passed you a tablet, without looking up. "Of course, sir."

"This was all Gabriel's idea," was written across the messaging screen. You pretended to be deep in thought. "I'm sorry."
"You're enjoying this," you wrote back. "You are all so close to being murdered with a crab fork."

"Please. If it gets me out the meet'n greet."

You refrained from smiling.

"The outfit is good. You look very proper and dangerous."

"I am the legendary Assassin-Butler of Blackwatch, cutting throats and serving tea. Sometimes in that order."

Jack began to choke-cough.

Ainsley sat up, alarmed.

"May I get you something to drink, sir?" You asked, blandly.

"Damnit, yes please," Jack managed to get out. You poured him some sparkling water and served it, impassive expression firmly locked in place.

You were getting used to going to infiltrating expensive places with Blackwatch, usually by playing an unsavory role. You had lots of practice with that before ever joining up. This was different. You were part of Strike Commander Jack Morrison's entourage. Even if you were his "hired help" you sat at the table and ate with painstaking politeness.

The onion tартes were good, not that you were going to tell Ainsley that. Neither of you were seated beside Jack. You were at the far end of a long table, back to the wall, eyes on the exits. There was Overwatch security in place, along with other governmental forces and the occasional intelligence officer. Your presence was overkill, but that wasn't an excuse not to do your job.

Jack was between two world leaders, calmly explaining something with great authority and saint-like patience. This was the Jack you'd seen in the media. Not the Jack you made chili with. The role-change could be jarring, but you were getting used to it. Gabriel vacillated between NCO crude, seductively charming, and flat-out murderous, and while it could be disturbing, it wasn't quite the same transformation Jack made.

"So I bet you're real close the Strike Commander." You heard to your right. You turned your head slowly, noting that the fat man wasn't talking to you, but Ainsley.

"I beg your pardon," she said, crimson streaking her cheeks.

That would be the ambassador from Austria, Lukas Pichler, if you remembered right. He was ruddy, balding, and already in his cups.

"You can't fool a man like me," he boomed. "For shame, putting young women there to be exploited." His was growing steadily louder. "Or maybe that's how you like it."

You set your utensils down. If Ainsley Petras was part of the problem, you had no problem consigning her to a terrible fate. Hell, earlier you were ready to murder her with any available piece of silverware. Even if Ainsley Petras was just a self-absorbed idiot, she was still part of Overwatch, and letting her be humiliated would set a bad precedent. You got out your tablet, pretending to check for messages.

You stood, and walked over to her seat. "Ms. Petras, my apologies for interrupting," you weren't looking at her, but Pichler. "But your uncle, the Director, has asked you to call him."

"Thank you, Ms. Strike," Ainsley said, holding her head up. "Please let him know I will contact him after dinner."

You gave Pichler and long empty stare, and then returned your seat. He averted his eyes and seemed unnaturally interested in his sausages. None of you had actually caused a scene, but you caught Jack watching you out of the corner of his eye. You disengaged, returning to your sole meuniere. It was delicious, and maybe you could work this into your plans.

People kept mistaking you for the restaurant help and holding out their empty glasses and plates to you. You ignored them; it was the most fun you had all evening. That didn't happen to Ainsley. It must be a smell or a posture. She smelled like money. You were obviously an outsider. You and Ainsley flanked Jack during the after dinner cocktails, Ainsley smiling pleasantly the entire time. You kept your hands behind your back, very careful how you flexed your left hand. The dinner was delicious. Dessert was lovely. The company ruined it all.

You didn't speak, opting to pour non-alcoholic cocktails for Ainsley and Jack. They had to mingle, but they needed clear heads. Your expression stayed flat, and uninterested. You were the hired help. No one cared what you thought.

Jack did diplomatic doublespeak well, never committing to anything, but letting each person know they'd been heard. He actually made it look like he was seriously considering their proposals. You heard everything from various methods of integrating omnis to giving special preference to their nation's manufacturers. You wondered how Gabriel would have handled these asshats. He could obviously finesse people, as demonstrated by getting you here, but would he have the patience for these idiots? You paused, well he did run Blackwatch. Maybe Gabriel would be fine. You wouldn't or couldn't do Ainsley's job.

This was just the VIPs for the conference. Tomorrow, there would be lots more people to worry about.

The ride back to the hotel was tensely silent, Jack in a meditative state, Ainsley in some kind of mope. You drove.

The three of you had separate but connected rooms. There was a large common area, and it was one of the more expensive hotels you'd stayed in. It was very modern, none of the fancy curls and scrollwork furniture you expected from French period shows. Everything was ergonomic and vaguely unrecognizable. The couch was shaped like a hotdog bun. The table had multiple asymmetrical tiers, like a cat tree. You were afraid to look in the bathroom.

Ainsley disappeared to her room, presumably to change out of her four inch heels.

"That was nice of you," Jack said after the door clicked.
You shrugged. "You couldn't do it without causing a scene. And she's Overwatch. You don't fuck around with us."

"You're really into this Assassin-Butler role," Jack said, smiling warmly.

"It is a good outfit," you admitted. "But I'm still pissed."

"It's a good outfit," Jack said, eyes lingering on your pocket square. "You're wearing my colors. It's like I'm a feudal lord."

"Or lady. I'm just wearing your token because you need me to gain victory in your honor." You smirked at him. "But I'm not chivalrous. Try not to faint at the sight of blood."

"That works too," Jack said, not at all bothered by the flip. "Thanks again for coming. I really appreciate it." He tapped your cheekbone, right under the eye. "You need an eyepatch. It will make you look like a mafia hitwoman."

"I'm an Assassin-Butler," you told him. "I'm too classy to work for the mafia. Now go to bed young master Morrison. You have a long day tomorrow."

You settled on the couch, wrapping a blanket around you. It was a central location, a good way to monitor the situation and keep Ainsley from trying to sneak into Jack's room. You were almost asleep when a door opened. You cracked an eye.

Ainsley traipsed out in a matching sky blue pajama set and satin robe. You counted to ten, trying to swallow all your horrible thoughts.

"Are you awake, Ms. Strike?" Ainsley asked, knocking on your bedroom door. Well, that was unexpected.

"I am now," you muttered and she jumped.

"Oh, I didn't see you there. I-" She wrapped her robe closer. "Are the rooms not to your liking?"

"No problem with the rooms," you said. Your stuff was in there. A few weapons and more uniform suits.

"Umm..." She took in your blanket and uniform, obviously trying to figure out your angle. "Thank you, for earlier."

"You're welcome."

"I could've handled it. I have in the past. But you did it so smoothly. I don't think Jack even noticed."

You didn't say anything to that.

"You're a passable butler," she said. "But I'm not stupid. I know you didn't lose a bet. Are we in danger?"
You shrugged. "Being in Overwatch is dangerous."

"You can't even tell me, can you?" She crossed her arms, hugging herself. "I hate this, you know. I thought it would be different. Like I could change the world. And working next to the Jack Morrison? That's every girl's dream."

You wrinkled your nose.

"OK, that sounded stupid. But I'm the envy of my peers. All my college friends are begging for introductions. He's handsome, charismatic, super strong... And completely emotionally unavailable. He's all-business. No fun. Like, he's kind of a jerk. I know he works hard, and kills things, but it wasn't supposed to be like this."

You stifled a laugh. "What did you expect from the job?"

"I-" She sat down in a chair, tucking her feet under her. "I thought it would romantic. Danger, excitement, hearts pounding: the perfect set up for love. I'd be part of something important and I'd get to be close to him. But...I thought he'd be a gentleman."

"Has he been...ungentlemanly?"

"No that came out wrong. He's not a bad person," she waved her hand. "He just works all the time. He's a whole different person in front of the cameras. He has this way of making people love him. But in real life, he's just cold. He barks orders and expects everyone to live up to his high standards." She sniffled. "I had the biggest crush on him, and I thought, fine, if I just work hard enough, he'll see how pretty and clever I am, and he'll be charmed. Instead, I'm working myself into exhaustion for a guy who will never think I'm good enough. I don't know why I'm telling you this."

You had no idea either. This was girl talk, you realized. Once upon a time you'd talk to Lao and Rivka about feminine things: clothes, jewelry, Shin. But that was a lifetime ago. You talked about work and mutual friends with Captain Amari. Most of your conversations with Angela were mostly about your prostheses. You were going to use that vibrator soon. Honest.

"It's fine," you said.

"My uncle thought it was a good idea," she said. "He got me the job and told me to follow my dreams. He likes Jack and wants him in the family. He thinks Jack is way better than the other guy. Your boss Reyes. Doesn't think he's leadership material. Says people won't follow a guy that...uh...low-class."

Low-class? Jack came from a poor background too. He meant "black." You clenched your teeth, trying vainly to keep your face placid. It didn't really work.

"Sorry, that's what my uncle said. I don't have a problem with him, he's just kind of rough around the edges."

"He is," you said, quashing the urge to remind her this was a military organization, what the hell did she expect?

"I just- I don't stand a chance with him, do I?" She looked up you blinking rapidly.

"Do you actually want him?" You unfurled your blanket, trying to get comfortable. "There's the "ideal" of Jack Morrison. And there's the actual Jack Morrison. And now you're one of the select few to know the real Jack Morrison," you lied smoothly. "He is what he is. Do still...?"
"I just think he could change," she said. "I've seen it when he's warm and lively and makes people feel safe."

"You'll drive yourself mad trying to change someone," you said. Especially to fit your own selfish ideals. "You deserve someone who appreciates you for you." As did Jack. "If the Strike Commander isn't that man, maybe it's time to move on."

She hung her head at that. "I-"

"Do you like working at Overwatch?" You tapped your fingers, wondering how to bring up the director.

"It's...challenging," she said. "But my uncle says I'm doing a good job. He's come in to check on me and sometimes shows me how things work."

You wondered if this was some kind of double-blind. "I've heard you're very good," you said convincingly. "Is Overwatch what you want?" You didn't have to argue with her. You just had to ask her the right questions and let come to her own deeply tangled conclusion.

"I don't know," she said. "You know, I was going to knock on Jack's door tonight and throw caution to the wind: an intimate setting, alone with him, maybe I could change his mind..."

It was a struggle to keep your face neutral.

"But I don't think it would have worked. I would've made a fool of myself, wouldn't I?"

You weren't going to dignify that with a direct response. Because once you started, you wouldn't be able to stop. "You're a lovely young lady," you said, even though she was close to your age. "But you already have concerns about his...ways. Even if you did have a night of passion-" You almost choked on those words. "What about the next day? Do you think he'd change that quickly?"

"I guess not," she said sadly. "It was a good dream though."

Pity, sympathy, and empathy swirled involuntarily. These were human feelings, and you tried not to dwell on those. You weren't a saint, but Ainsley was apparently so lonely, she had to be to come talk to the Assassin-Butler for emotional counseling.

That would take awhile, and you had to be up at five.

"Would you like some tea?" You asked, because maybe you could drug it and get some sleep.

"Umm, yes please." You got up and found an entire tea service in the "appertif" nook. You'd watched Captain Amari enough to know how it worked. You found chamomile tea, and valiantly resisted the urge to drug her, even just a little.

"I'm sure your uncle will be very understanding," you said.

"He really wants me to get Jack to come to Nantucket this summer. He talks about it all the time. Like, I think he likes Jack more than he likes me."

Your hand didn't shake as you poured the tea. You served her first and then took your own cup. "That can't be true."

"It is! He's got this whole retreat planned."

"Huh," you said. "Where exactly?"

"I'm not sure. He was emphatic that it was a "men's" thing but not to worry. He wasn't inviting anyone else from Overwatch, just Jack. You know how it is on the east coast. Very who knows whom, which Ivy League did you attend, how big is your Aspen home, etc."

You nodded, even though you didn't have a clue. "I see."

"When was this supposed to happen?"

"First week in August, I think. He seemed so confident that Jack was interested in me and would love to get to know me." Ainsley clutched the teacup. "It's not me, is it?"

"You've already pointed out that he's a man married to his work," you said, pleased with your own diplomacy.

"That's right. I don't think he's the kind of guy who can make himself emotionally available to another person," she said. You thought of all the times you'd seen Jack and Gabriel touching and cuddling, reminding each other that the other was still here. "Like, the job is everything to him." Hazy as it was, you remembered the look on Jack's face when he found Gabriel after the base exploded. The sheer relief made your heart hurt.

"You're in Overwatch," And rich. "The world is open you," you told her.

"You're right, Ms. Strike." She downed the rest of her tea. "I'll sleep on it." She stood up and marched resolutely to her room. The twit didn't even thank you or offer to help clean up.

Jack spent a lot of time on stage making speeches about the good Overwatch had done and calling for unity. You stood in the wings, holding bottled water, and watching Ainsley. She'd spent the last two days in a flurry of messages, hopefully finding a new direction for her life, one that would take her far away from you. As it was, she'd stopped being so painfully earnest, but it was only by degrees. She was still annoyingly perky.

Thunderous applause sounded and Jack walked off. You cracked open the water and handed it to him.

He took it and downed it in one swig. "Thank you, Ms. Strike."

You were going to stab him. But you settled for a curt nod and you took the bottle to dispose of. "You're free till the luncheon. That's two hours out. Did you want to go socialize?"

"I'm peopled out. You scout out any quiet places?"

"Yes," you said.

"Let's go."
You led him out the back, checking the halls for paparazzi. There was a cafe on the fifteenth floor, far above the assigned convention center activities, and you'd "unlocked" the terrace access.

Jack needed a hat, you decided. Sure, that was Gabriel's thing, but Jack's unruly blonde hair was pretty recognizable. You ushered Jack out to the terrace, and ordered some coffee and chocolat au pain at the cafe.

In the corner of your eye you caught sight of a familiar blue skirtsuit. Jack hadn't invited her, had he? You walked swiftly out of the cafe and quickly made it to "authorized personnel" door.

Jack sat on the ground of the terrace, legs flat, staring up at the sky. You handed him his drink and chocolate croissant.

"I think Ainsley followed us."

"Really?" Jack cocked his head. "She's been...better lately."

"I'll tell you about it later," you said, for the millionth time. Because you didn't want to get into the Petras connection just yet. You wanted to see Genji's most recent dossier before you started laying things out.

You bit your into your croissant. The dark chocolate filling was perfect with the coffee.

"Thanks, Lucky. I'm sorry it's been so hectic." Jack gave you a wry smile.

"I joined Blackwatch because I wanted a life of ease and luxury." You were careful not to get chocolate on your gloves.

"I do appreciate you coming, it's made this more...bearable." He was staring off into the sky.

"I think you just wanted someone else to suffer alongside you."

"Isn't that what friendship is?" He tilted his head back, looking at you upside down. How could he go from inspiring to cute so easily?

You blinked. "I think friends don't want to let their friends suffer."

"Agreed. But when they are suffering, friends step in." Jack took the second half of his pastry in one bite. "Before...I didn't want to ask Gabriel for help. I thought he should have been...happier for me."

"He did get demoted," you said.

"Yeah," Jack ran his fingers through his hair. "I mean, I thought it was more of a lateral move. I was wrong, about quite a few things. And then I was too proud to ask for help. That was my second mistake."

"Your first?"

"Not being there for Gabriel," he admitted. "But we're working through it. Almost losing him like that..." Jack sighed. "It scared me so badly, Lucky. But you don't want to hear all this...stuff. I guess, I'm trying to say that I appreciate it, and it's important that I communicate that."
And that being friends is more than just...wishing good things on people. It's taking an active role." He drank his coffee. "I'm babbling."

"You are babbling, sir," you agreed.

Jack shot you a dirty look. "I wasn't sure how to ask, but I'll just do it instead of dancing around the subject."

"Oh boy," you said.

"What was he like?" Jack asked, and you didn't need to ask whom he was talking about.

You bowed your head. "Shin was of those dualities that's hard to describe. He was clever and strong, a better fighter than I'll ever be. Underneath it all, he was playful. He liked life, but he would have made a good assassin. A real mission-first, but stop to smell the roses kind of guy."

You tilted your head back, feeling the sun on your skin. "He made me feel like I could do anything. I don't know if it would have lasted, but it was real."

Jack pat the back of your left hand.

"I'm sorry."

"Yeah, you're a real buzzkill," you told him and finished your coffee.

And that's when the shooting started.

Jack was on his feet instantly, sidearm in hand.

The shots came from inside the building.

You took point, but Jack grabbed your arm. "I can take more hits than you," he said.

"I'm your bodyguard."

"Get behind me. That's an order."

"Gabriel assigned me to you. He's my CO." You slipped in front of him quietly prying open the access door.

You could hear Ainsley whimpering.

"Where is he?" An impatient voice demanded.
"I don't know!" she sobbed.

"She's his assistant. He has to be here somewhere." You slipped inside, holding up your hand so Jack would wait.

The door was in small alcove. You flexed your left hand, and priming your attachments. There were six of them, in full tactical gear, wearing masks. They were cybernetically-enhanced. You clenched your teeth. Blood pooled on the cafe floor.

The leader held Ainsley by the neck. "Where is he?"
"I don't know!" she wailed.

"Spread out, he was last seen on this floor." The leader lowered Ainsley. "He'll be wanting her back alive, so if you find him, make sure he knows we have her."

You flattened yourself against the wall, a pair of boots growing closer. You waited till his shadow fell on you and you turned into him, pressing yourself against his chest before he could react. Your left hand pressed against his throat, and your needle shot out, filling him with a powerful sedative.

He gurgled slightly, and you pulled him into the alcove and set him down. You handed Jack his assault rifle.

You pointed at the unconscious man then held up five fingers then pointed toward the hall.

Jack gave you a dark look, but nodded. He pushed ahead of you and went down the hall. Rolling your eyes, you raised your pistol and followed.

Two of them rounded the corner. Faster than you could react, Jack fired, two shots, two kills; they fell, heads leaking ooze. You raised a brow, but Jack was moving ahead of you. You checked them as you passed. Those bullets were big. They were very dead.

Two more came running, the element of surprise gone. Jack fired again, and you threw your hands up in frustration. They too, were dead before they could hit the ground. "I know you're out there Morrison! Get over here, or I'll snap her neck!"

Jack gestured for you to stay put. Then he stalked out to the cafe. The layout of this floor was a loop. You went back the way you came, debating on picking up a gun. They had some impressive armor. You could shoot, but you didn't want to risk hitting Ainsley. The paperwork would be a nightmare. You had one tried and true method. You reached behind you and drew your tanto.

"Let her go," Jack said. He stood in cafe, facing the cyborg holding Ainsley.

"Drop your weapon, Morrison, or I'll crush her pretty head!"

Ainsley began to scream.

You emerged behind the cyborg. Jack glared at the cyborg, no wait, that was meant for you. And slowly began to set the gun down. "What the hell is this about?" He boomed.

"You really think we're going to answer your questions, Morrison?" The cyborg sneered. "Get on your knees. Hands on your head."

Jack obeyed, and you appreciated him serving as a pretty distraction.

You padded silently behind the remaining cyborg. There was a port on the back of his neck. You aimed a little higher. Three feet. Two feet. You lunged, flexing your left hand and digging into his shoulder. With your right, you pushed the tanto through his throat and twisted, the blade catching on whatever was connected to the port. He flailed, dropping Ainsley. You pulled your weapons out and let him drop. He wasn't properly dead yet, so you laid him on his back and cut his throat.
Blood soaked your gloves, your blades ripping the fabric as they drew back into your prostheses. The nice thing about metal fingernails was that blood didn't get under them. But you were going to have to clean your blade mechanisms. Still easier than blood out from under real fingernails.

You looked up to see Ainsley watching you with terrified blue eyes. Jack stood behind her, his face grim.

"Are you all right?" You wiped your blade on the cyborg's pants.

"Oh God, where were you?" She looked between Jack and you.

"Ambushing cyborgs," you said, because it was kind of a stupid question. "I'm going to radio Commander Reyes to pick up our survivor," you told Jack.

"Wait, how did they find us?" she asked.

"How did you find us?" Jack asked.

"I saw you leaving and followed. My uncle wanted to meet with you. I figured I'd come find you and let you know, but then you disappeared- " She began to sniffle. "He was going to kill me!"

"Maybe," Jack said. He glanced over at the cafe. The unlucky barista had been executed behind the counter.

You pulled out your tablet and called Gabriel.

"Lucky?"

"We were attacked. Jack's fine. We have a survivor. Come get him before the French try to claim jurisdiction." You closed the call and took pictures of the dead cyborgs.

"I-I can't do this," Ainsley sobbed, clinging to Jack. "I-I resign, sir."

"I'm sorry to hear that," Jack said, not sounding that way at all. "May I see your tablet?"

Ainsley got a private flight out of the country. Poor thing.

You and Jack sat around the bloody crime scene, waiting to "handle" things. You had the pleasure of watching Jack tell the gendarmes this was "Overwatch business." Official sanction was kind of nice. But you couldn't get used to it, not with being a member of Blackwatch.

You checked the drugged cyborg. This formula was pretty potent. He was still out, but Jack commandeered some gendarme omnic-restraints for him. You sat at a cafe table, watching Jack bark orders. You really wanted to clean your hands, but it would have to wait.

A copter landed on the terrace and Jesse climbed out. He and Jack dragged the unconscious cyborg aboard.

"Bring me desserts!" Jesse told you. "I'm serious! Captain Amari wants madeleines!"
You waved.

Jack drove back to the hotel. You had a police escort this time, for the good that would have done. And Jack wasn't talking to you, which was a shame, because you had a lot to talk about. Maybe he was just like that after combat. Gabriel was always tetchy when he first got back from a mission.

In the privacy of your hotel room, you peeled off your gloves and carefully removed your prosthetic fingers. You cleaned your hands and switched in the basic models. Then you began to clean, getting the blood out of your finger blades.

There was a knock at the door.

"It's unlocked," you said.

Jack strode in. He was still in his coat. "You disobeyed my direct orders."

You nodded, carefully wiping your blades. They would probably have to soak. You'd been stuck at the convention center too long. "I told you, Gabriel assigned me to you. You think I could go home if anything happened to you, Jack? Gabriel told me to look after you."

Jack bared his teeth at you. "I'm a decorated SEP officer. My coat has omnium plates in it. I can take a bullet or seven."

You shrugged. "You're the Strike Commander. I'm just a grunt. What did you think it meant when I came along? I'm your bodyguard for this run. It's my job to get between you and danger." You were going to have to soak these. You placed them in individual containers and filled them with solution. Then you popped open your injector and began to refill it.

You looked up. Jack was staring. You stopped moving.

He froze, then turned his head, his cheeks turning red.

"I'm sorry, I hadn't seen your hand before," he said. "Torby and Angela did a good job."

"They did," you said.

The silence stretched between you.

"Do you think I could face Gabe if something happened to you?" Jack said, still turned away.

"I think he'd know I was following his orders and you'd both have a terrible guilt-wallowing party. Him more than you, since he tricked me into coming." You had learned that post-battle you were oddly flippant. Like the adrenaline wasn't gone, but you knew everything was fine, so you were free to calmly talk shit. It amused you, but annoyed everyone else.

"Gabe's right, you're an idiot," Jack said, leaning against the doorframe. There was no heat in his words.

You finished with your prostheses and started on your blade. "What would you have done, Jack?"

"It's not the same." He crossed his arms. "I can't argue that your decision was tactically sound. But I'm not here as the Strike Commander. I'm here as Jack. And I'm pissed off at you."
"For taking the last kill?" Because Jack was a competitive bastard, no matter how much he denied it.

"For scaring me," he said.

"Huh." You weren't angry, not like he was. You knew you were right, and you knew he knew it too. So you just nodded. "Sorry for scaring you," you said. You didn't need to tell Jack it was the right choice. He knew that as well. Just like you didn't need to tell him you'd do it again. He was just going to vent. Gabriel was different, you'd have to fight him tooth and nail, because he was always convinced he was right.

"Friends help friends," you said. "They don't just sit on the sidelines and send good wishes. As interesting as it would be to see you save the world on your knees, I figured I'd better keep Ainsley alive. For posterity."

Jack laughed sharply. "You and your vampire instinct."

"We all have our talents. You shoot much faster than me."

Your left hand began to shake. You were in cooldown now and you needed to eat. "I'm hungry, Jack."

He sighed. "Yeah, me too. Want to order room service?"

"Sure." You stood, and Jack backed out of your doorway. "You know, you were the first person to ask me about him, well other than the shrink."

Jack rubbed his forehead. Maybe all this excess emotion was too much for him. You were drained. There was something on his face. You unfolded your pocket square, licked the corner and carefully dabbed Jack's cheek. He held very still, his eyes on darting between your face and the cloth.

"This is chocolate," you told him, holding up the piece of fabric. "You killed four cyborgs, yelled at the gendarmes, and drove through Paris with chocolate on your face."

"Thank you," he said.

"You're welcome."

Chapter End Notes

Happy Halloween! Posting because no idea if I'm writing tonight. Have to heavily edit last night's...whatever I did. (It was like 4AM and...what the hell did I write?)

It was also like "how many consecutive sex scenes are too many?" Because chafing and we need some plot... Meh, editing.
Chapter 8

Chapter Notes

I haven't written slash in years and I can't actually remember when that was. Lol. Sorry?

See the end of the chapter for more notes

You got off the plane, no longer a fancy butler, but a Blackwatch bum in sweatpants and a hoodie. Gabriel, Captain Amari, and Jesse were waiting for Jack and you. Jesse hugged you and Gabriel gave you a measured manly arm clasp. You saluted Captain Amari. Jack and Gabriel embraced, one of those masculine one-armed half hugs that was better suited for comrades than lovers.

You handed Jesse a box of pastries, madeleines included, and Captain Amari a box of loose leaf teas. There were macarons for Genji, when he got back from his mission. You'd bought Gabriel a fabulous replica of a musketeer hat. It was black with a huge white feather. Very Blackwatch pimp. It was in your luggage.

Jack and Gabriel were off, speaking in business-like hushed whispers, that you suspected was just cover for the fact they were going to go tear each other's clothes off.

You blinked. That was unnecessarily graphic. You were going to have to try the vibrator attachment out soon.

"Winston softened the cyborg up," Jesse told you.

"What?" You couldn't picture Winston condoning any torture.

"He disconnected his arms. The guy can feel them, but he can't move them. Gabriel's been... Well, he waited for you." Jesse sighed. "He was not happy about everything. He almost handled the pickup instead of me. But Captain Amari reminded him that leadership couldn't just up and run off to Paris whenever the fancy struck them."

You laughed. "Jack is a beast in combat. He downed four cyborgs in minutes, all T-box shots. Like, they should have sent three times as many."

"I could do that!" Jesse said.

"Yeah, I know. But one minute he was all smiley and shit, then it's "I'm a serious super soldier, watch me kill things! Rawr!" Then he wouldn't talk to me for hours because I got the last guy with my tanto."

Jesse coughed. "What?"

"The last one had Ainsley hostage and was all "surrender or I'll kill Overwatch Barbie." So Jack went out to face him, and I snuck up behind him and stabbed him in the throat. Wait, am I getting predictable?"

"I guess it's better than you constantly going for the family jewels. The implications are certainly less...disturbing." Jesse shook his head. "Thanks for the pastries. Was that tea you got Captain Amari?"

"Yeah, figured it'd go with the cakes."

Jesse lifted his hat to scratch his head. "I appreciate it, Lucky."

"I'm rooting for you," you said.

You shrugged. "Not there yet. Just...looking."

"Any good-looking ones?"

You remembered Jack smiling up at you in Paris. You remembered Gabriel's deep concentration while he rubbed your back. You almost smacked yourself in the head. They were good looking. They were also together. "That hacker, Riggs. He's cute. Doesn't talk much though."

Jesse shrugged. "I've thrown him around in the mat a few times. He's not as tough as you."

"Ouch, poor guy." You weren't the worst person in Gabriel's class. But you were the one getting kicked around the most. "Is that your "friendly" way of telling me he's not worth my time?"

"I don't right know," Jesse said. "Gimme a week. I'll have it figured out."

You were surprised to see Jack in the interrogation viewing room. The Strike Commander needed plausible deniability. He didn't need to come witness Blackwatch's dirty work.

"I'm here for Gabriel," he said, reading your look. "And because those bastards came after me."

Captain Amari, Lacroix, and Jesse joined you.

The surviving cyborg was strapped to a table. His arms and legs had already been removed, but they were still connected through wires. He was pale, sweat dribbling down his face.

"State your name, affiliation, and mission," Gabriel said, sounding bored.

"Yancy Koch. Nguyen Private Security. We were to capture and extract Jack Morrison."

Anh Nguyen's man then. You got your tablet out and began to take notes.

"Where are you based out of?"

"Hanoi."

"Where'd you get your fancy limbs?"
"Work. Most of us were...injured vets. We signed contracts with the House of Nguyen. They gave us a second chance at life." You felt an involuntary twinge of sympathy.

Gabriel's jaw clenched. "I see. How were you going to get him out of there?"

"We had roof access. A transport was supposed to meet us once we confirmed possession."

"Were you supposed to kill all the witnesses?"

"Everyone but Morrison and Petras. We had her picture. She was deemed too valuable to kill."

You could feel Gabriel's stare through the glass. He couldn't possibly see you, could he?

"You ever been to Canada?"

The cyborg began to hyperventilate. "I-I-"

And like that, your sympathy evaporated.

"Thought so," Gabriel said. He took out his bolt cutters and patted the cyborg's left hand. "Just how sensitive are these?"

"I can't feel anything," the cyborg began.

Gabriel tore through the index finger and the cyborg locked up, his eyes widening.

"Does that hurt?"

"N-No."

Gabriel plucked off the middle finger. "Is that so?"

"I don't feel a thing."

Gabriel snapped the ring finger and pried it out of the socket.

You could feel eyes on you, but you kept taking notes. Why was it those fingers? You're the one who lost them, not him. But then, who were you to judge? You went for the neck.

"Fair enough. I was just checking." Gabriel picked up a curved blade. "You've got plenty of flesh to work with. Did you or your party spare anyone in the Yukon?"

"I don't know. My orders were to ensure there were no witnesses."

You stretched your left hand out, very careful not to close it as you clenched your right fist. You really needed some kind of armored gloves if you were making hard fists.

"You like shooting noncombatants, Koch?" Gabriel slid the blade up his abdomen, and a red line sprung up behind it.

"Oh God, I was just following orders!"

"Keep him alive," Jack said, and you belatedly realized Gabriel was wearing an earpiece.

"You're going to tell me all about those orders, Koch. And if I'm satisfied, you might get to live," Gabriel said in a low voice. "And if I'm not, well, I'm sure I can find ways to cheer myself
Some of Koch's data didn't add up and you charted it accordingly. Gabriel was personally chasing down a lead in Siem Reap, and he'd taken Jesse and Genji, expecting heavy resistance. It irked you a little that he'd left you behind, but then who would be left to do paperwork? Gabriel liked going on missions and maybe it was better you didn't do a lot of runs together. He was even more obnoxious when he had guns.

You sucked down some sludgy coffee and debated begging Ziv to bring you some food. He could drop off more reports and maybe grab you a burger.

A familiar single knock sounded, and the door opened. Jack strode in, in full Strike Commander regalia, carrying a bag.

"Gabriel's still out," you said.

"I know." He pulled up a chair and set the bag on your desk. "I brought some cake. Figured you could use a break."

"Thanks," you said. Because this was the first time Jack had come to the office with the clear purpose to visit you and not Gabriel. It probably meant he needed something. You put your work aside and cleared space.

Jack had brought an entire small iced chocolate cake. It smelled of chocolate and fruit jam. If you remembered correctly, Jack had some meeting in Vienna yesterday. "Is that a sachertorte?"

He gave you a funny look. "Am I the only person who didn't know what this was? Ana told me to buy one for her. I thought you'd like one too."

You shrugged. "You're the Strike Commander, not a food critic."

"That means "yes you hoosier, quit being such a bumpkin."

"I would never directly disrespect a man who brought me cake." You steepled your fingers. "Not while the cake was still on the table anyway."

Jack snorted as he pulled out a canister of whipped cream and plasticware. "While I suspect you could eventually eat the whole thing on your own. I want to try it." He proceeded to cut you a large slice and sprayed on a generous dollop of whipped cream. You got up, refilled your coffee, and poured him a cup.

"Thanks, Jack." You gave it ten seconds. "Do you need something?"

Jack continued cutting the cake. "A clone to handle all my public appearances. And a vacation."

Huh. You sipped your coffee.

Jack took a bite of the sachertorte. His eyes widened, a looked up at you with slight awe. "This is really good," he said, mouth full of cake. It was kind of adorable.
You took a fork and cut yourself a bite. Chocolate sponge cake with apricot jam and chocolate icing. This wasn't too sweet, and rather dense. You sipped your coffee, savoring the taste of expensive chocolate.

"What's the occasion?"

"Does there need to be one?" Jack huffed.

"No. Cake is a good enough reason for cake." Jack occasionally brought food to your meals. You and Gabriel did most of the cooking. Sometimes Jesse would join in. But Jack and Genji mostly just showed up to eat. You didn't begrudge Jack that. He had a crazy schedule. Eating with Gabriel was more about companionship than freeloadng off Blackwatch. Maybe you were just bad at accepting gifts. And maybe Jack was behaving suspiciously.

You ate your cake, waiting for the other shoe to drop.

"I guess I wanted to say "thanks." For having my back in Paris." He smiled at you brightly. It was a good smile, all light and Jack Morrison's patented blinding charm. You pulse sped up for a moment.

"You're welcome," you said, keeping your voice as bland as possible.

"You're suspicious," Jack said, the smile fading. He studied your face with the cool calculation of the Strike Commander. You were getting used to how he did that. It was unnerving, but that was Jack. He had buckets of charisma and he channeled it accordingly.

You shrugged. "Being part of an undercover investigation into the black ops arm of a security agency does that to you."

"So I shouldn't bring you gifts?"

"You don't usually," you said.

"I-you're right." You expected the sheepish smile, the hand on the back of the head. Maybe an embarrassed "sorry." Something cute to disperse the tension. Instead he just looked you in the eye and said, "I'm a shitty friend."

You shrugged. "I figure you got my back in a firefight. That's good enough."

"It's really not," he said, looking a little disturbed. "We had this talk in Paris."

You shrugged. "You're the Strike Commander. That alone takes its toll on your personal relationships."

"...Yeah." Jack sighed. "I noticed."

"I mean, being a shitty friend doesn't help either." You put some cake in your mouth before you added to that.

Jack narrowed his eyes and sat back in his chair. "Do you think I betrayed, Gabriel?" he asked flatly.

"If you mean, do I think you're part of the conspiracy that tried to kill him? No." You looked down at the cake. You hadn't really expected him to come out and directly ask you. Because honestly, you didn't think Jack really cared what you thought. "I don't know enough about what happened in your relationship to say whether or not you "betrayed" him at some point."

You wondered then, if you were wrong and about to pay for it. But after that day on the roof in Paris, you couldn't help but trust Jack. Maybe you were getting too paranoid.

"You were suspicious of me in the beginning."

"Yes," you agreed. "I was suspicious of everyone." You still were. You just hid it better.

"Why?" Surprisingly, he didn't sound hurt. There was a genuine query there.

"The situation didn't add up."

Jack leaned forward on the desk. "Explain."

You'd been thinking about this for awhile. Talked about it with people. Did some good brainstorming with the understanding that you would never say that shit to Jack Morrison's face. Ha! "So, Ziv is really good at his job, don't you think?"

"Agent Mihret is an asset," Jack said. "His skills are impressive and he's got leadership potential."

"You think we should promote him over Winston? I mean, Winston's so...Let's just say, maybe the general public would like a young handsome man and not a gorilla in charge of our tech. You know? The image is all wrong. Sure, Winston is capable but-"

Jack stared at you, disappointment on his face. "Have you been listening to Gabriel's conspiracy theories?"

"Fast forward. For whatever reasons, you give Ziv Winston's old job. Are you going to demote Winston and shuffle him off to climate-change R&D? He'd be good at it. You know, give him something to manage, but then you make sure everyone knows that Ziv's in charge. You could give Winston a consultant status, come up with another position title worthy of his experience, or give him a chance to save face. But you don't."

Jack wasn't slow on the uptake. "That's bad management."

"Yeah, I agree."

He sat back in his chair. "Go on."

"Doesn't mean Ziv's not qualified. Doesn't mean Ziv is bad at the job. It does make you wonder what upper management is trying do besides sabotage Winston. I mean, I'd be worried about the strain on their friendship, wouldn't you? They certainly wouldn't be working well together after that."

Jack inhaled sharply.

"I can't take credit for the theory. Me and some others worked this out." You weren't going to mention Jesse and Captain Amari just yet, in case Jack didn't take this well. "So it doesn't make sense. Not unless someone was actively trying to fuck over Gabriel. I mean, the situation sucks and Gabriel's proud. He's going to take it as a slight."

Jack was quiet.

"And then I thought about Captain Patel. She's my personal hero, but she was a real stickler for the hierarchy. I have to ask, was SEP really rigid about the command structure? I figured they have to be. If your super soldiers don't respect authority..."

Jack nodded. "Yes. Hierarchy was drilled into us. Aishani was no exception."

"You were Gabriel's second. And suddenly the roles are reversed. That's not going to be a smooth transition. Less so when Gabriel gets shuffled over to Blackwatch. He's going to wonder if you had some bearing on that decision, you know, to get him out of the way." Because Jack was proud too. He'd rise to the occasion and then resent Gabriel for not being happy for him. "Overwatch has all kinds of psych evals and forecasting analytics. You really think we should have missed that?"

Jack was watching you closely, his face too blank.

Your throat itched.

"Gabriel has always been difficult." Jack sighed. "They told me I had a cleaner record, and I was a less...divisive figure."

"That's true," you agreed. "I don't think you're a bad man for the job, Jack. I just wonder why they treated Gabriel they way they did."

Jack nodded curtly.

"You're obviously leadership material," you said, because you didn't want to hurt his feelings. His big super soldier feelings. "Being Gabriel's second had to be rough. You had to be approachable, friendly, someone the squad could come to if they were too...shy to deal with Gabriel." And he had to be tough too, because that kind of environment didn't allow for weakness. It explained how he was so good at being the charming idealistic leader one moment and the ruthless Strike Commander the next. "Shin did the same thing for Captain Patel. He smoothed over a lot of her rough spots."

"You do it too," Jack said. "There's been a sharp drop in HR complaints about Gabe."

"Probably because we're on a molehunt, he personally killed two former agents, and has been weeding out the shitty ones. Everyone's thinking twice about filing complaints."

Jack shook his head. "You act as a buffer for him."

You shrugged. "I'm his assistant; it's my job." You'd learned more from Shin and Captain Patel than you realized. Like how to deal with grumpy super soldiers. Most importantly: feed them a lot and don't make eye contact when they're wound up. "But my point is, whoever made that call, handled it so badly, you have to wonder, was it on purpose? And once you look at the purpose, you also have to wonder who stands to gain?"

Jack cut another slice of cake. "So your suspicions?"

"Petras is obviously high up there."

"He promoted me," Jack said. He took a deep breath, not looking at you. "There were several UN figures that played a role and encouraged me to take the job. I can make a list."

"That'd be helpful." You took another bite of cake. "So back to my suspicions. At first, I wondered how you could miss the big glaring red flag that, but then I learned from personal experience. Gabriel is really good at being petty and enraged people to distraction."
"After seeing you together, I don't think you would willingly betray him." You paused. "You haven't had this talk with Gabriel yet, have you?"

Jack looked at the floor. "You can be alarmingly insightful, Lucky."

"Yeah, I know your first impression of me was that I was an idiot. I give that out a lot."

Jack laughed, not denying it. "I feel like an idiot. When you explain it like that...well damnit, how did I miss it?"

"Ego," you said without thinking. Then you popped a bite of cake in your mouth because damnit, friend or not, this was your boss's boss and maybe you shouldn't be that honest.

"You're as blunt as Gabriel complains you are." Jack sounded tired. He rubbed his eyes.

"I don't know why that surprises you. And that's the pot calling the kettle colorist epithets. While on fire."

"Sometimes I take people for granted," Jack said after a minute. "I'm sorry."

"You brought me cake," you said, unsure of how to take that. "As long as it's not poisoned, that's a declaration of friendship in my book."

"Thank you for helping me see myself." He looked at you so earnestly, it hurt. It was easy to see how Gabriel fell into those blue eyes and never crawled back out. "I get too caught up sometimes."

Winston pulled some interesting location data from the dead cyborgs. Koch had spilled quite a bit. And Anh Nguyen had bumped herself up the head of your list.

Jack had kept Ainsley's tablet. He and Gabriel had chairs behind Gabriel's desk. Lacroix and Captain Amari took the couch. Jesse and Genji sat with you around your desk.

You went first, giving a recap of Gleeson's testimony. Everyone had the transcripts. Then you explained the conversation you'd had with Ainsley as the Assassin-Butler.

"Wait, you talked her into quitting?" Gabriel asked.

"It's what she really wanted," you said sincerely. "I only helped her realize that."

"Huh," he said. "I thought she wanted in Jack's pants."

"She did, but he was too much like her father, and she just couldn't deal with the implications of that realization."

Jack covered his face. "Unnecessary-"
"She kept bringing up her uncle," you continued. "Either Ainsley is a completely unwitting fool. Or she's a genius mastermind implicating the Director in her plot. I'm kind of leaning toward the former, but the latter actually wouldn't surprise me. She said her uncle liked Jack better than her, wanted her to seduce him into the family, and made plans for a "men's only" retreat for the first month of August in the New England area. It all sounds sketchy as hell to me."

"Agent Mihret found very high level tracking software in her tablet. She might not have willingly given away your location," Captain Amari said. "He's inspected her terminal and found traces of similar work."

"She said her uncle would come down and "help" her with work. I'm assuming he had access to everything she could see, and then some." You'd written a report up that night, because Ainsley had said too many things that you needed purged from your head.

"That the director is conspiring with a hostile UN member is a pretty farfetched accusation," Lacroix said. "I take it you have found more tangled things."

"Well, it seems that your old base was in just the right spot to pick up some very interesting data transmissions," Jesse said, looking at you. "Winston said something about northern lights and magnetic pulses and Agent Cohn's unauthorized tech modifications, but I stopped paying attention. You guys received massive packets of encrypted Talon weapon programs. It covers pulse rifle production, neural reconditioning, some highly unethical biology mods, and that's just the stuff the nerds have decrypted. The real jackpot is that some of the location tags haven't been scrubbed or rerouted. So we can find where some of this data came from. Hanoi was on the list, if you were wondering."

"The Shimada are their allies in this," Genji said. "There are contracts out on Captain Amari, Commander Reyes, and Strike Commander Morrison. But interestingly enough, you're the priority target, Agent Lacroix. As is your wife."

Lacroix narrowed his eyes. "Send me everything."

"Agent Mihret has also finished decrypting Vialli's data. The old bat stockpiled blackmail on his allies," Captain Amari smirked. "He kept locations, in lat-long, down to the seconds. His information also corroborates the weapons R&D. And yes, these cyborgs are mostly being routed through Hanoi."

"It looks like all roads lead to Hanoi," Gabriel said. "I'll start planning the op."

---

"Riggs is a homebody," Jesse said, not very enthusiastically. "Writes letters to his mother, gets snickerdoodles sent weekly, and no one has anything negative to say about him."

You stirred the milk. "I don't want to think about it today."

"OK darling. Is some of that for your poor chilled Jesse?"

You were in the staff kitchen, trying to decide which type of hot chocolate you wanted most. You had a whole backpack of cookies- you might have gone overboard, but given the occasion, you weren't taking any chances.
There were dark chocolate curls with a generous mix of fresh peppermint oil. There was an organic fair trade milk chocolate with mini-marshmallows. There was a wonderfully spiced Mexican hot chocolate filled with chili powder and cayenne pepper. And there was whiskey. Lots of whiskey. Maybe you'd do that instead.

You poured Jesse the milk chocolate with mini-marshmallows and stirred in the milk. He took it eagerly. "Ow hot! That's a lot of chocolate, sugarpie. You feeling OK?"

"I-" You paused. You weren't sure how you were feeling just yet. Maybe because you were trying not to. Justice, you believed, would be the best therapy, but your shrink kept talking about how important it was to have a future to work toward. Something not tied to the trauma of your past. Something just for you.

Jesse nudged you.

"I don't know," you said. "It's an odd day."

"Well, I saw Morrison limping toward the Commander's office. Maybe you should go commiserate." Jesse's tone was odd.

"Maybe," you said.

You looked up to see Jesse frowning down at you. "You ain't pining after someone, are you?"

"No one alive," you said. "Pining" wasn't even the right word now. Thinking of Shin made you sad. It made you determined. But he was dead and you had accepted that a long time ago. It was more the absence, the place where he used to be. You dreamt of him last night. You were eating ice cream and throwing pennies in a pond. Captain Patel was going to meet you there. It was a nice dream. You still woke up with tears on the pillow.

"Oh." Jesse sipped his chocolate. "This is good," he said. "Want me to take you out to town? You can meet a good-looking...whatever you're in the mood for, and have some fun?"

"I've thought about it," you admitted. "But I'm not there yet."

"OK," Jesse said. "You let me know. I'm a great wingman. Well, better than your other options."

You tried picturing Genji as wingman, and cracked a grin. "Thanks Jesse."

"Want to watch a movie? I have Transformers XXII. They cast omnics as-"

"Nah, I'm going to go finish mapping some of the notes. I want the next phase of Shit Spiders done before winter's up." You poured the milk into a thermos and packed your chocolate back up in your backpack. You could decide what you wanted after you got back to the office.

You walked in to see Jack sitting in Gabriel's chair face down on the desk, Gabriel was working his shoulders. Jack groaned, and Gabriel laughed.

"That's what you get for being stubborn."

Jack said something unintelligible.

"Should I use Winston's lab instead?" You asked.
"Nah, Jack doesn't need a happy ending," Gabriel said.

"Jack needs all the happiness he can get," Jack muttered. "And failing that, Jack needs food."

You closed the door behind you. "All I have are sweets."

"I'll take them," he said, not raising his head.

"Should I ask?"

"UN meeting. Director Petras was asking uncomfortable questions. Some about Ainsley. I put him off, but uh...that's the spot Gabe."

You grabbed three mugs from the cupboard. "Spicy, mini-marshmallows, or peppermint?"

"Marshmallows," Jack said. "Wait what am I getting?"

"Spicy," Gabriel said.

Rolling your eyes, you made them each a mug of hot chocolate. There wasn't enough warm milk left for you to have a full batch, so you topped off the peppermint with whiskey.

You set the mugs down on Gabriel's desk. Jack sniffed the air and raised his head. "Whiskey?"

"That's in mine. You have milk chocolate."

Jack picked up his mug, closing his eyes and inhaling. "Oh, that smells good."

Gabriel sipped his. "That's a lot of hot chocolate, chica."

"I wasn't sure what I wanted, so I ordered three different kinds." You pulled some cookies out of your bag. "I might have gone overboard with the cookies."

Gabriel raised a brow. "What's the occasion?"

You contemplated lying. Your period was the perfect excuse, and you had been saving that one. But honesty was the best policy with Gabriel. "Shin's birthday." You took a drink, the burn of the whiskey made up for the tepid temperature of the chocolate. The peppermint combined with the whiskey wasn't bad.

Jack and Gabriel exchanged a look. You sank back in the chair. "Don't get all wound up. I wasn't throwing him a party. I just knew today would be...off. Figured I'd need a pick me up. Got a little carried away."

Jack opened up a box of sandwich cookies, chocolate with cream filling. "You want to talk about it?"

"Not really." You took a cookie. "Not much to say. Just...feelings."

"Psych have any helpful insight?" Gabriel asked.

You shrugged. "Thinks I need to put myself out there more. I mean, we were together less than a year. And it's almost been a year since everything went tits up."
"No timetable on grief," Gabriel said. "You're ready when you're ready. It's not a race or a competition."

"Yeah. I don't know. Shit Spiders means there aren't a lot of people I can trust. Maybe Shin just represents a time when I was happy and things were simpler. Fuck if I know." You downed the rest of your chocolate and refilled your mug with whiskey.

"Are you...unhappy here?" Jack asked.

"Meh. It's not the location. It's the fucking conspiracy. It's all complicated and stupid."

"What would you be doing if you weren't here?" He took another cookie. "I mean, when this is over. What do you want to do?"

You shrugged. "I haven't gotten that far."

Gabriel gave you a sharp look.

"What? It's not like I'm planning to lay down and die. I'm just really focused on the now. This is a lot of work. But I like it here. I'd probably stay on." You paused. "Why? You thinking about retirement already? I know Gabriel's old, but-"

"Step onto the mat. I'll show you old..."

"All that stuff I say about hope and the future isn't bullshit, Lucky." Jack crossed his arms ignoring Gabriel. "We all need something to work toward. It makes us fight harder. I know we're all swept up in something bigger than us, individually. But it's not going to last forever, and you need to start planning what you want to do after."

"Yeah, maybe." You kind of wished you hadn't said anything now. Jack's pep talk was well-meaning. But now you felt like a charity case. Poor grief-stricken Lucky Strike. Doesn't know how to live outside a crisis.

Because one day, Gabriel Reyes and Jack Morrison weren't going to be in Overwatch. One day Captain Amari would be gone. One day Jesse or Genji might up and quit or never come back from a mission. And then...?

You hung your head. And then it would be a mess all over again. You didn't want to see that day. The thought of it broke your heart, because now it seemed inevitable. How could you have thought otherwise? "Wow, now I'm even more depressed than when we started. Good talk." You grabbed the whiskey, but Gabriel caught your wrist.

"You and me. Mat. Let's go."

"I'm not sober," you told him.

"Oh I'll sober you up," he promised.

You tried to pull away. "I'm not in the mood."

"Come on. Don't make me drag you," He said, yanking you to your feet.

You thought about making him drag you kicking and screaming. That would just lead to more disturbing rumors about everyone's personal lives. Mostly yours.

"Aww, she's sad, I'm gonna beat her up. That'll fix it," you muttered.
"Just gonna knock some sense into you," Gabriel grumbled.

Jack sighed. "I'll get a med kit."

---

You were mostly sober by the time you got the gym. It was late. The gym was empty. You had your basic fingers on, so no drugging him and running. You thought about just running. You could hide under Captain Amari’s bed forever. You'd live off tea fumes and biscuit crumbs. Jesse could smuggle you candy.

Jack sat there, holding his mug of hot chocolate and eating your cookies. He seemed oddly calm about the whole thing. Maybe he was still holding a grudge over all those times you were stupid-honest.

Gabriel stripped down to a thin white t-shirt and sweat pants. You did not need to watch him stretch. You didn't need to see how well-muscled he was all over. He could easily crush your head with his thighs. Or pretty much any part of his body.

You rubbed your forehead and then tied your hair back. You took off your gloves and studied your fingers.

"Better warm up," he said.

It would hurt marginally less if you were loose when he kicked your ass. You began your stretches, pointedly not looking at either of them. You'd take a hit, ragdoll, and beg off because you had work to do in the morning.

When you stood, Gabriel had his hands up. He grinned at you, the set of his jaw nowhere near friendly. His eyes gleamed with excitement. You nearly took a step back.

"Come on, Lucky Strike. Show me what you got," he rumbled, crooking a finger.

So much for Plan A. He was getting into this.

You went for the ankles, practically sliding into him. He kicked at you and you lunged past it, grabbing his knees and knocking him off balance enough to take him to the ground.

It was like hitting a rock, a very warm, slightly hairy rock, but the impact hurt you more than him. You punched him in the liver, but not hard enough. You weren't sure you could break past his six pack shield. He rolled sideways and you fell backward, forcing yourself to tuck and roll. You got back on your feet and Gabriel smirked at you from the floor.

"Come here," he growled. "You're going to end up on the ground anyway. I'll save you the fall."

You charged him, springing off the mat into an airborne kick. You struck his chest, but Gabriel's hand caught your ankle and whipped you to the floor. Landing on your back, you bit into your lip. Blood filled your mouth.

"You always did like doing things the hard way," he said, straddling your chest, his knees pinning your shoulders to the mat. You thrashed underneath him, but it was like hitting a brick wall. He was heavier than Jack or Genji and you couldn't budge him.

He shifted, leaning over you. One hand went to your neck. You froze, his fingers pressing lightly on your throat.

"You should tap," he said.

You turned your head to the side, forcing yourself to breathe. Gabriel wasn't going to choke you out. Gabriel wouldn't hurt you...badly. He gave a squeeze.

Rational thoughts evaporated. Snarling, you grabbed his thigh, and bit down hard through the fabric. You bit till you could taste blood, the searing heat letting you know it wasn't yours.

Gabriel swore in a violent stream, and grabbed his thigh. His weight shifted and you slid out from under him, blood dripping down your chin. You wiped your mouth with the back of your hand and charged, your left hand straightened. He whirled, his arm snapping out to knock you away. He was fast, but not as fast as Jack, and you ducked underneath and lunged up, smashing into his chest with your metal fingers. You'd been aiming for the neck, but he'd dodged.

His arms closed around you, trapping you in a bear hug. Your ribs creaked as he squeezed you against him. Hard things dug into your soft tissue, your hips, your stomach.

"I should bite you back," Gabriel growled, his voice a rasp. He stared down at you, pupils huge.

"Fuck you," you hissed back, glaring up at him. You tried to squirm away, but he had you pinned. You threw yourself forward, crown of your head smacking him in the nose, just like he'd showed you. Gabriel swore and you reared back, going for another shot.

He slammed you into the mat before you had a chance. You rolled sideways, and drove your elbow into his stomach as he tried to pin you again. The short punches in the floating ribs might have repelled a normal human, but Gabriel flipped you around, his arm wrapping around your neck, pressing your back to his chest. You couldn't reach his arm to bite, so you kicked. When that didn't work you shot your elbow back, trying to hit a weak spot. He didn't choke you this time, just held you immobile against his chest. Panting, you tried to slip out of the chokehold, your fingers digging into his arm. You pressed hard, searching for the nerve that would make him release you. You squeezed, till you felt his arm spasm.

Slick with sweat, you slid down and sprung forward, feeling the air whoosh overhead. He'd grabbed at you and missed. You whirled, straightened your left hand and struck as Gabriel charged you, driving you back down into the mat. You hit him in the neck, but his momentum carried him forward, throwing you on your back.

He gagged, holding his throat and glowering down at you. You went to hit him again, but he dropped off of you. Unsure if he was plotting a second run, you tapped. Then you went flat on the mat, all your limbs burning. Gabriel had gone half strength, at most. You had no illusions about that. It didn't matter. You were in one piece and he was sitting overhead rubbing his neck. Good. He was the one that went after you. You'd just used his own strength against him.

"You OK, Lucky?" Jack asked gently.

You were going to hurt so much tomorrow. "I hate you both."

"You bit me!" Gabriel said, his voice raw.
"You were choking me. What else was I going to do?"

"Tap out," he said.

"Yeah, that'd be the logical thing to do," you said. "But if you...strangle me, I don't react well. And unlike Jack, you knew that going in. I have no sympathy." You closed your eyes. Your heart beat in time with the blood in your skull. You were already hurting pretty badly. If Gabriel tried to go for another round, you were going to tear his face off. Actually, you'd probably just die.

Someone crouched beside you, and you cracked open an eye. Jack's gloved hand tilted your chin up and he wiped your mouth off with a soft cloth. He wore a look of concentration.

"I can't tell how much of that is yours and how much is Gabe's."

"Half?" you guessed. He dabbed at the wounds and his gloved fingers brushed against your lips. Jack's focus was on your mouth and it made you self-conscious. "Did I bite a chunk of my lip off or something?"

"No," he said abruptly and put one hand on the side of your neck. You flinched. "Does that hurt?"

"A little." You were going have bruises, probably in the shape of Gabriel's fingers. "I think my back is going to be one big bruise," you said.

"Hold on," Jack said, and the comforting yellow light of a biotic emitter began to numb your pain.

Gabriel sat down on the other side of you, giving you a good look at the bloody tear in his pants. You couldn't see the wound, but you'd ripped his pants with your teeth.

"You bit me," he said, still incredulous.

"Sorry," you said a little insincerely. "You freaked me out."

Gabriel sighed. "Yeah, I got it. No breathplay. Message received, Lucky."

Jack was blushing now. Maybe watching Gabe fight really did it for him. You couldn't blame him. Gabriel was good looking.

"We should clean up the mats," Jack said.

"I'm going to lay here a bit longer." You tried to move your left shoulder. That didn't feel right. "How was this supposed to help?"

"If you wanted to mope, I thought I'd give you something to mope about."

"Gee, thanks."

Jack moved over beside Gabriel and started cleaning the bite. Gabriel crossed his arms. "Got you out of your head, didn't I?"

You turned on your side so you could look at him. "Not following."

"You think yourself into a corner and get stuck. A little exercise fixes that." Gabriel's hand lingered on Jack's shoulder. "Thanks," he said bending over and kissing Jack.
You turned your head. They were right beside you. You could feel the heat radiating off them. And you weren't completely oblivious. Gabriel had been hard while fighting you. You'd felt him very clearly when he'd trapped your body against his. He was...proportionally big. You closed your eyes. Well, there were some unsavory implications there. The most likely one was that Gabriel got turned on from hand-to-hand combat. It figured. It explained why he rarely sparred in his combat class. It explained why Jack showed up to them so often. No wonder he was so grumpy after combat missions. The chafing had to be hell.

Jack groaned, and the tension in the room ratcheted up. You could not stay here and listen to this. No matter how much you wanted to.

"I'll get the bleach wipes and clean this up. Then I'm going to bed," you said, struggling to get upright.

Gabriel released Jack and gave you a neutral look. "We making you uncomfortable?"

"I'm tired," you said. "Everything hurts."

"Wore you out already? After one mouthful?"

Those two were ready to go. Gabriel was dropping innuendo like cluster bombs. Normally, it didn't bother you, but normally you didn't have to go wash the taste of your commander's blood out of your mouth.

"It's not that I bit you," you said. "It's that I nearly lost my teeth to your thighs then drowned in your blood. I'm done for the night."

Gabriel gripped your forearms and hauled you up against his side. "We can get this cleaned up. Do you need to go to the infirmary?"

"I'm fine. Just sore."

You took a step. You'd kicked Gabriel and your foot felt like you'd smashed it against a rock. You were going to be limping.

"Take the emitter," Jack said.

"Thanks." You hobbled out of the gym, desperately not thinking about whether or not Jack and Gabriel were going to wait till they got to a private room.

You dreamt of him holding you to the mat, his hips pinning you down. You started to say Shin's name, but it was Gabriel's weight on your body and Jack's hands on your wrists. Gabriel gave the most deliciously masculine laugh before leaning over and biting down on your neck, teeth not quite breaking flesh.

"This is payback," he said.

You whimpered as he ground against you. You could feel the outline of his cock very firmly between your thighs.

"He likes it when you struggle." Jack kissed the other side of your neck, his tongue flicking down your collar bone.

"Let's get you warmed up," Gabriel purred, tearing your shirt off. "Don't worry, we'll be doing things the hard way..."

You woke up then, sore, horny, and mortified. Apparently dating Shin had made sparring into foreplay for you too. He would've been so amused. It was finally time to try out your vibrator attachment.

"-So in conclusion, while the noise level is acceptable, I feel it could be reduced and the heat output needs to be better monitored. You could make thermal control part of the package as well. And you could improve range of use by offering programmable patterns of vibration as well as additional lubrication options, rotors, and a softer covering to prevent chafing."

Torby and Angela stared at you in comic horror.

"Still, it was a satisfying prototype. Will you be wanting it back?" You asked.

Torby narrowed his eyes at you. "Well played, Lucky Strike."

Jack gripped the bars of Gabriel's headboard. He was too tense for restraints tonight. Gabriel knelt between Jack's tensed legs, his teeth worrying at the Strike Commander's inner thigh.

"Stop teasing, Gabe." Jack was hard, he had been since he'd watched Gabe wrestle you to the ground. It got worse when you bit Gabe. You'd caught him staring, your swollen lips stained with blood, your body shaking with exhaustion. The memory made him ache. "Either suck me or fuck me, can't take the edging right now."

Gabriel pushed three of his fingers past Jack's lips. "Get them wet for me." Gabriel's voice was a low rumble. Jack eagerly slid his tongue over the digits and Gabriel pushed them in to the third knuckle.

Jack sucked on Gabriel's fingers, his hips jerking upward, wiggling his invitation.

"So needy." Gabriel pulled them out. "Turn over. I want to pound you into the mattress," he growled.

Jack rolled over, his fingers digging into the sheets. "I think you mean you want to pound Lucky into the mats, with your cock.

"Smartass." Gabriel's calloused fingers slid into Jack's puckered hole. Jack clenched around him, knowing Gabe enjoyed some resistance, just like he liked the burn of being stretched. "But still so tight," Gabriel thrust roughly, as Jack began to pant. "Gotta get you nice and sloppy."
"Fuck...I can take it Gabe. Just hurry up." Jack shuddered as Gabriel's fingers sped up, going deeper. Jack buried his face in the crook of his arm.

Gabriel withdrew his fingers and grabbed the lube off the nightstand. Jack stiffened as Gabe worked the cool gel into his passage.

"Going to wreck you tonight, Jack. Can't hold back now." Gabriel pressed the head of his cock against Jack's entrance. He was long, but it was the girth that was intimidating.

Jack moaned into the bed as Gabriel slowly pushed in, the pleasure of being so full momentarily blanking his mind. He clawed the sheets, his whole body shuddering from the intrusion.

"Gabe," Jack gasped, his neglected cock leaking against his thigh. He pushed back against the thickness stretching him. It burned along that fine line between pain and pleasure in a way that wound Jack up and left him gasping.

One of Gabe's hands slipped around his throat. The other gripped his weeping cock. Jack squirmed as Gabriel's mouth slid down his neck.

Gabriel was in to the hilt, his body trapping Jack against the bed. Gabriel had always run dangerously hot, and Jack writhed, sweat already beading on his forehead.

"I felt your eyes on us," Gabriel's voice was low and hungry. "You wanted to see her under me almost as much as I wanted her there." Gabriel's fingers firmly squeezed Jack's cock, and began to stroke.

"Damnit, Gabe." Jack's hips jerked, as he fucked himself between Gabriel's cock and slick hand.

"Were you hoping to have her between us tonight?" Gabriel drove into Jack's ass. "Or were you thinking I'd bring you both back here and fuck you like this while she sucked you off?" Jack whined, the images vivid in his head. Those pretty lips wrapped around his dick while Gabe slammed into him. The hand on his cock sped up.

"You're so filthy, Jack," Gabriel purred. "Fantasizing about a threesome with one of your subordinates."

"You have no room to tal-" Jack groaned as Gabriel picked up the pace.

"Tell me about it," Gabriel commanded.

"I wanted to hold her wrists while you stripped her," Jack said, strain creeping into his voice. "I wanted to watch you inch inside her, see the look on her face while you filled her up for the first time."

"Fuck!" Gabriel swore. "Jack-"

"Do you think you'd fit? It'd be such a stretch..." Jack teased. He felt the moment Gabriel's composure snapped, his thrusts becoming hard and desperate. There were no words now. Jack pushed back, trying to ride it out. The older man's hands tightened around his neck and cock. Gabriel's hips jerked and he came inside Jack, hand still milking Jack's cock.

Jack's eyes rolled back as Gabriel's hot cum filled him. A few more ragged thrusts into Gabriel's hand, and he came too, semen splashing his chest. He laid there a moment, legs shaky. Gabriel kissed the back of his neck and withdrew, cum oozing out of Jack's stretched hole.

It took Jack a few minutes to remember he had legs and sentience. He rolled over and Gabriel was there, kissing him hard enough to bruise.

"You fucking tease," Gabriel said without rancor.

Jack laughed softly. "You liked that a lot."

"Yeah, but I didn't realize you did too."

"I never had a problem with her." Jack could feel the blood rushing to his face.

"You weren't always interested either."

Jack's blush grew. "I've been thinking about it more."

"Since Paris?"

Jack rubbed the back of his head. He knew Gabriel wanted to hear him admit it. "You dressed her up and put her in my colors. What was I supposed to think?"

Gabriel laughed. "You prick. It was the fight that did it. You just like them tough and crazy."

Jack couldn't refute that. After all, Gabriel embodied those traits.

They'd gone a few more rounds, Jack having no trouble switching roles. More relaxed than he'd been in weeks, Gabriel lay there sweaty, sticky, and fulfilled. The bite mark on his thigh throbbed and he grinned at the bruise that was forming. It would fade soon, but he liked knowing it was still there.

"You deserved that," Jack said, nestled against Gabriel's chest. It was a small thrill every time he looked over and saw Jack's blonde hair on his pillow. He didn't want to get used to this. He loved knowing Jack was here, pressed against him.

"Yeah," Gabriel stretched, he ached, but in a good way. "But she didn't tap out or run away. That's progress."

"I guess." Jack yawned. "She's not me, Gabe. You can't just throw her on the mat and expect that to get her going. And she definitely noticed that you were turned on."

"Probably. Didn't mean to let it go that far," Gabriel muttered. "I got carried away."

"Mmm. You'll have to apologize. Might have freaked her out. Don't think this is how she goes about things."

"Fuck," Gabriel muttered. "You're right."

"Can I get that in writing?" Jack asked.
I keep thinking up fluff scenes and accidentally extending the story. I didn't think it would take this long to finish. Plot? What's that?! We need a Christmas special! (We needed a Halloween one, but I've been looking at my timeline and I don't think I can fit it just yet.) We need to go to the US and meet the families! Lacroix dinner party! Blackwatch/Captain Amari tea party! THE YULE (I mean Overwatch Appreciation) BALL! Reinhardt dancing! Exclamation mark abuse! Kittens! MORE CAKE! I uh...sorry. And part of me is like "no! Make the hard-hitting espionage and angst the core of your story!" And part of me is like "but I want to see Jack's dog!" So yeah.

Sorry, I've been eating lemon cake today (and I jogged/walked 2.5 miles, so minimal guilt) and I have this slice of amazing triple chocolate cake in my fridge and it will make the next two days bearable. So I'm full of sugar and excitement.
Yesterday had been Shin's birthday. You'd celebrated by drinking and getting your ass kicked. You'd bitten Gabriel and had involuntary dirty thoughts about two of your commanding officers. Shin would probably be pretty amused.

The biotic emitter had taken care of most of the bruising, but your muscles felt like wet clay. You were back at your desk, sorting through another chunk of the Greenland data dump. You found a cache of pictures. Valdez cooking. Lao and Valdez kissing. A blurry one of Nwazue raising her middle finger at the camera. Rivka and Lao building something haphazard and covered in wires. Simon bandaging Valdez. Captain Patel looking off-camera. Captain Patel shooting into the distance. And Shin. Shin and Valdez sparring. Shin and Nwazue drinking.

These were Lao's files. You sat back in your chair and cycled through them, finding one of you after you'd just joined up. Your uniform didn't fit right, and you were slumped against a wall making a dramatic "why me?" face. Shin stood beside you laughing.

You weren't going to cry. Because you were happy. Because all you had before were their ID photos from central records. It was stupid and superstitious, but yesterday was Shin's birthday. It would be like him to give you a gift for his birthday, a day late. You blinked rapidly and downed your coffee.

You would look through these later. Alone. Now you just had to focus on the Hanoi angle. Genji was off again, gathering intel on Nguyen's movements and facilities. You had to check Vialli's coordinates against known facilities in Hanoi.

You got more work done when Gabriel and Jack weren't here. It was lunchtime and Gabriel hadn't come in yet. Well, you didn't actually expect him, given what he and Jack had to have been up to last night. And you didn't need that image in your head, any more than you needed to be having dirty dreams about either of them.

You met Jesse in the mess hall and to your surprise, that cute hacker Riggs was with him. Jesse invited him to sit with you.

"You know Lucky Strike," Jesse said brightly.

Riggs smiled, but he didn't make eye contact. "By reputation," he said shyly.

"Oh God. I'm afraid to ask." You picked at your fries. He sat across from you, mac and cheese untouched. "OK, spill," you said, having enough of delayed gratification.

"You killed a cyborg mercenary with a knife," Riggs said, still not looking up at you. "You punched the Strike Commander into entering your chili cookoff. You have metal claws underneath those gloves. You're a certified badass, ma'am."

You turn your head slowly to Jesse. Jesse smirked and shrugged. "I...what?"

"You watch TV with your eyes closed," Riggs said earnestly.
"I'm...napping."

"Really? You always answer when people talk to you."

You looked between him and Jesse. "Jesse, what did you do?"

"Don't deny it!" Riggs said. "I saw you punch Commander Morrison. You took him to the ground! He spars exclusively with you in class!"

"Uh...I don't have...claws," you said. "But the cyborg thing is true."

"I knew it! Those normie Overwatch techs didn't believe the reports! You and Commander Morrison took down those terrorists in Paris and saved all those politicians. The Parisian tabloids ran blurry pictures of Commander Morrison's aide-de-camp "Ms. Strike." And for the record, I totally believe your relationship is purely professional ma'am. I don't countenance that kind of talk. But you fought alongside the Strike Commander, just the two of you. You saved Director Petras' niece! I bet it was awesome."

You remembered a blood-soaked cafe, too many dead bodies, and a terse, angry Jack Morrison. Saving Ainsley Petras wasn't awesome, considering the amount of crying she did. But you didn't regret it. "Yeah, I guess," you said.

"I mean...before that mission, we'd all heard rumors. But we know better now ma'am. You and Commander Reyes were on a top secret mission in Canada. I heard that when you wouldn't talk it was the Shimada that took your fingers-" His eyes widened when he saw your face and he hastily dropped his gaze.

"Those circumstances are classified," you said stiffly.

"Oh my God, I'm sorry. You don't have to tell me twice." He was practically shaking with excitement. "It was the Shimada!" He mouthed at Jesse.

Jesse was shaking with silent laughter.

"I'm just a regular agent, Riggs," you said, even though that was a lie. Regular agents didn't have a rumor mill coming up with bizarre inflations of their exploits.

"Of course, ma'am," he said.

"Yes, ma'am," Jesse repeated.

You resisted the urge to throw your plate at his head.

"Thanks, Jesse. I know this is all your fault, somehow."

"It's mostly because you dropped Morrison," he said, not quite denying it. "And the aftermath of the Paris trip. It's not just Riggs. You're getting mighty popular, Lucky. Following in Ana's footsteps."

"You're calling her "Ana" now?" You folded your hands under your chin. "Tell me more."
"Ain't nothing to tell yet, Lucky." But he preened under the attention. "I'm making her some chili this weekend."

"Don't forget the bread bowl," you said.

"That's what she said." Jesse paused. "I said that literally. And I picked up some baklava on my last mission. Reckon that'll get me invited to tea." He looked around. "Where is the Commander?"

"Probably taking the day off," you said. "He kicked my ass last night," you said. "Called me out to the mat and then threw me around."

"What'd you do?" Jesse leaned forward with a smirk.

"I got "mopey." Which is bullshit because I made him hot chocolate. Well, him and Jack. They got my cookies too."

Jesse stared at Gabriel's chair. "I don't get it."

"Me neither. I think he was trying to cheer me up." You shrugged. "It seems like a Gabriel thing. "Here's some physical pain to distract you from your silly feelings." It kind of worked. Don't you dare tell him that."

Jesse leaned back in his chair. "Morrison was there too?"

"He brought the med kit."

"Darling, are you-?" Jesse stopped. "You good with this? It's not crossing any lines?"

"I don't really like the extra pain, no. But Gabriel wasn't going at full blast or anything. And Jack gave me a biotic emitter afterward. That worked wonders."

"Hm." Jesse crossed his arms. "Everything's go well, though? It's staying friendly? Morrison's not...scratch that. Everyone's getting along?"

"Those two are always..." You shook your head. "I'm totally jealous of the amount of sex they're getting."

Jesse made a face. "What?"

"They keep their clothes on in front of me, but they're not hiding what they're doing. I might have to take you up on the wingman offer soon. I'm just...rusty."

"Won't know till you try," Jesse said, adjusting his neck kerchief.

And my perception of my surroundings is completely off." You shook your head. "I can't ever ask Riggs to dinner, because he's got a bad case of hero worship and that would be weird."

"I thought so too."

"You could've just told me."

"Would you have believed me without seeing it for yourself?" Jesse dusted off his hat. He had an odd smile.

"Good point." You laid your face on your desk. The circumstances of your problems had changed, but the end result was the same. You were alone and needed to get laid.

You'd mapped out the various locations of interest between Vialli's coordinates, the 9th Circle data dump, and the cyborg extraction information. Nguyen had a large compound what remained of the Old Quarter in Hanoi. It wasn't in her name, and in fact had been hidden under the aegis of several shell companies, but it was large and connected to a private shipping company that Genji had traced to the Vialli family. You'd put in a request to Winston for closer surveillance via drones. He didn't specialize in SIGINT, but he and Ziv could work something out.

The office door slammed open and your pistol was in your hands before you realized it.

"Code White," Gabriel shouted. "Gear up!"

The blood drained from your face. You grabbed your go-bag, and followed him out. Code White meant an agent's family was under attack. Gabriel’s people were on the west coast of the United States. Jack's family was somewhere in the middle. Fareeha and her dad were somewhere in Canada, near the west coast. Those were all a long distance away.

You, Jesse, and Genji didn't have family to worry about. It was one of those rare moments your lack of roots felt lucky.

Jesse and Genji were already in the locker room. You strapped on your gray Blackwatch armor and pulled on your modified armored boots. Your tanto rested in the small of your back and you holstered your pistol on your hip.

Jesse tossed you a long gray scarf. "Dress warm."

Fuck. You'd avoided cold weather missions since you left the 9th Circle. For obvious reasons. You wrapped the scarf around your neck and pulled on your charcoal heavy coat.

"Where are we headed?" You picked up a carbine and extra magazines. It was your best performance gun: light weight, medium range, selective fire, and excellent accuracy.

"French Alps," Gabriel barked. "Move out." The four of you jogged up to the transport dock. Captain Amari was already in the ship. You climbed in and immediately began switching out your prosthetic attachments.

"Agent Lacroix sent out a distress signal twenty minutes ago. He was vacationing with his wife. We haven't been able to make contact and the entire area's gone dark. Satellite imagery has brought up a lot of activity." Captain Amari gave you the rundown. Lacroix was supposed to be in some kind of ski resort with his wife. He'd likely fled the area to avoid civilian casualties and seek refuge in some of the hunt lodges in the mountains. He knew the area well and was an experienced skier. The biggest concern was hostile forces. The second was avalanches. The elements came in third. Oh goody, because the cold and snow had been your biggest worries.

Overwatch was going to secure the area. Your Blackwatch squad was going to rendez-vous with Lacroix and provide protection.
You equipped your combat attachments and secured the others in your belt. You pulled on your gloves. Captain Amari distributed biotic emitters and additional cold weather gear. You took one of the ridiculous earflap hats, because stupid-looking or not, you didn't forget being cold.

Jesse snickered. "You going to be able to move under there, Lucky?"

Genji was staring now. He didn't say anything, but he didn't need to.

"It's not heavy," you told him. "These boots are heavy. They're going to suck. Also, put on a shirt. You're making me cold just looking at you."

"Ease up, Lucky." Gabriel inspected the shotgun across his lap. "It won't be like last time."

Of course it wasn't going to be like last time. You were prepared. You tightened the straps of your bag.

Muzzle flares lit up the night. The snow and the moon left the landscape with an almost dreamy brightness. You hit the ground running. The Overwatch squad had encountered heavy resistance around the ski chateau Lacroix had been visiting.

The pilots dropped you further into the mountains.

"Ana, get in position. Jesse, you're with Genji. Lucky, you're with me. Move out!"

The snow came up past your ankles. Gabriel held two shotguns, and you jogged behind him. He stopped, holding up his hand. He gave an odd whistle, almost a birdcall.

There was no response.

"Down," he ordered and you dropped, switching to a prone shooting position. The snow was pretty and fluffy. But you weren't fooled. The cold would set in soon and everything would be miserable. Gabriel crouched beside you. He pointed and you could see three figures in white jackets moving in the snow. They were armed.

You looked through your sights. "They're wearing masks and one has cybernetic legs."

You stayed in position, till Gabriel gave the go ahead. You shot fast, dropping them in bursts. The cyborg took two, and you were going to confirm that kill personally.

You looked up and Gabriel was smiling fiercely at you. You grinned back, until you remembered your theory about his combat arousal and had to drop your gaze. The two of you stayed low as you approached the bodies.

They were dead, but you cut the cyborg's throat and circuits, just to be sure. You found his radio and Gabriel clipped it to his belt.

"Targets spotted!" The radio crackled. "Southeastern quadrant! All available units converge!"
Gabriel radioed details back to the others. "Ana has eyes on them. They're bunkered down, with about two dozen hostiles closing in. Genji and McCree are going to take the ones in the south. We're going to come in from the west."

You reloaded before moving. Gabriel was much faster than you. Now you knew he wasn't even trying the other night. Which was a little demoralizing, considering how sore you still were. The cold wind hitting your lungs made running miserable and seemed to halve your endurance. You tightened your scarf, wrapping it around your mouth. You were going to check into a hotel once you got back to Switzerland. And you were going to spend the entire time in a hot tub. You were going to drink hot chocolate. You were going to put the hot tub in front of a fireplace and fill it with hot chocolate.

Shots whizzed by your ears and you dropped to the ground taking cover behind a tree. Gabriel began to shoot, double-firing his giant shotguns. You caught sight of muzzle flash in the distance and looked down the scope. You got off two shots before you had to duck again. Fuck fair fights. You'd give an ambush any day.

You bellycrawled behind a log and from this angle you could see the head better. You got off another two shots, and the enemy sniper's head exploded. You looked up to see Gabriel on the move again. His hellfire shotguns didn't need accuracy. You just pointed them in a direction and voila! Instant splatter!

Your fingers were starting to get cold. You glared at your breath in the air, and got back up, jogging behind Gabriel.

"We're getting close. Take shelter by those rocks," Gabriel said. He was sweating, despite the snow collecting on his hat, and you had an unpleasant moment of déjà vu.

You pressed yourself against a large rock and peeked around the corner.

About a hundred yards out you saw a tiny wooden lodge built into the side of the mountain. The ratta-tat-tat of automatic fire caught your attention.

You got on your stomach and began thinning the crowd. You weren't as effective from this range and you couldn't tell if Genji or Jesse were in the treeline to the south. Best not to depend on it.

Gabriel ran forward, shotguns primed. To your relief, Genji burst through the forest in the south, bloody sword drawn. Jesse was close behind, already fanning his revolver.

You crept closer for efficiency's sake. You focused on picking off the ones just out of Gabriel and Genji's short range attacks. You'd downed another couple of hostiles when you heard the snow crunch behind you. You rolled to the side, gun raised.

Two men in white jackets had their guns trained on you.

You didn't hesitate. You fired, shooting the nearest one in the head. You shifted, but not fast enough. The second man got off three shots, hitting you square in the chest. You reeled backward, unable to breathe. Your chest was on fire and you gripped your gun tighter. He stepped toward you, intent on checking his kill.

You clutched the carbine and pulled the trigger, dropping him to his knees. Blood bubbled behind the mask and he fell backward. You groaned and felt your chest. It didn't cave. No blood seeped out. Your armor had done its job.
Wincing, you rolled back over and lined up another shot. The woman's head exploded before you could pull the trigger. You weren't sure where Captain Amari was, but you were glad it was near here.

"Withdraw!" Gabriel's voice came over your radio. "They've set explosives. They're trying to trigger an avalanche!"

Of course they were. You wheezed a laugh and climbed shakily to your feet. Gabriel was rushing toward you and Lacroix, looking annoyingly dapper and strangely stylish, bounded behind him, a graceful brunette woman keeping his pace.

Great, a civilian was going to make you look bad.

You heard the rumble before you saw anything. They'd set the explosives by Lacroix's shelter. You jogged toward the rock formations, knowing you wouldn't be able to get clear of the area in time. The most you could hope for was that the curve of the mountain would partially shield you.

Gabriel caught up to you there and even as the wave of snow crashed down, he caught your arm and pulled you against the rocks.

"Swim!" He ordered.

You thrashed, knowing you had to keep the snow around you loose, and that you couldn't let yourself get disoriented. Gabriel stayed anchored to the rocks and didn't let go of your arm.

You lost sight of Lacroix and his wife.

Snow flowed around you, but the dangerous slabs of hardened ice didn't manage to cross the rocks.

Eventually the rumbling stopped, and you were only partially buried, almost floating on top of the snow. You'd gotten lucky. The rocks broke up the flood and the snow around you was loose. Gabriel was only chest deep. You looked around. "Lacroix?"

Gabriel swore. "Start digging."

You slid your pack off and began to kick through the snow.

"Over there!" Gabriel pointed a few yards out to a jaunty red scarf sticking out a sea of white. You dragged yourself over. Even if it was loose, it was wet and heavy snow.

"You alive?" You asked, clawing at the spot marked by the scarf.

"Mais oui, bien sûr," Lacroix said, a little muffled.

You dug, trying to create an air passage above his head. He blinked up at you, his wife smiling and nestled against his chest.

"Ah, Lucky Strike. This is my wife, Amélie. Thank you for coming to assist."

"Anyone need medical attention?"

"Non, just some help getting out."

You would take all the small mercies you could get. "Can you move?"
"Not quite. If you could keep digging?"

You looked over your shoulder. Gabriel was working his way out. Your hands were freezing and you just wanted to go drown in that hot tub full of cocoa. Your kept bailing. Lacroix and his wife helped, speeding along the process.

Gabriel was on the radio. "Genji, Ana, and Jesse got clear. Transport's picking them up first."

You worked your way back to your pack. You'd gotten a hang for the weird swimming motions. You tossed the Lacroix couple some handwarmers and stuffed some down your shirt. You hissed as they came in contact with your bruised skin.

"You OK?" Gabriel asked.

"Sore," you said. "How are you not freezing?"

"Side effect of SEP. When the adrenaline sets in, I burn hotter than most. Not great in tropical climes, but it makes cold weather ops easier. The downside is I need to eat more."

You got a ration bar out of your backpack. "I am prepared."

"You sound like a boyscout." He took it though, eating it in two bites.

"No, that's your boyfriend. I'm a survivalist. And after all this I'm moving somewhere tropical. No snow ever."

Gabriel snorted. "Come here."

You were too cold to protest. Gabriel pulled off his gloves and placed his warm hands on your icy face. You sighed.

Amélie murmured something in French.

"Yes, this is the most exciting double date we've been on," Lacroix said.

"What happened to your armor?" Jesse asked after you'd taken off your soaked overcoat and managed to clean some of the snow off on the transport. You'd have to change out of everything anyway. Your socks were soggy. That was the worst.

You looked down. Oh, that was bad too. Severe cracks, like fault lines, spread through your chest plate. You wouldn't be using this piece again. You could kind of see the smashed bullets, only because you knew exactly where they hit; you had the bruises to map them.

"Weird. That doesn't normally happen when you get shot," you said still looking down. "Maybe the impact combined with the cold fucked up the plate?"

"When were you shot?" Gabriel barked, eyes flashing.

"Two guys ambushed me after you went to clear a path for Lacroix. I killed one, but the other shot me in the chest. I played dead for a second, then shot him when he came to check on me."
Gabriel's face was hard. "Take it off."

"I uh...need some help," you said. The adrenaline was starting to wear off and already you knew you were in for a world of pain.

Gabriel didn't wait for Captain Amari. He unstrapped the chestpiece and pulled it off you. You exhaled slowly, the lack of a constriction a relief.

"Show me," Gabriel ordered.

Jesse leaned back in his seat, his expression hard to read. Genji wasn't paying attention, which let you know he was totally paying attention because he making an effort to look like he wasn't.

You pulled off your hoodie, stripping down to your bra. A massive blue-purple bruise had already started forming in the center of your chest. It stretched from above your collarbone to right below your sternum.

"Head and throat shots are where it's at," you said. "Otherwise they just get back up."

Nobody laughed.

Gabriel's mouth thinned. He knelt in front of you and poked a rib on your left side. You seized up, pain jolting through your body.

"Don't do that again," you hissed through clenched teeth.

He ignored you and poked the other side. His prodding fingers weren't comfortable, but it didn't hurt nearly as much on your right side. "Have you been spitting blood?"

"No. I would have said something."

Jesse turned on a biotic emitter, and the warm yellow light numbed some of the pain. "You shouldn't be relying on these too often, Lucky."

Captain Amari handed you a dry hoodie. "It's fine, Gabriel. She can go to the infirmary once we get back."

You sighed. So much for your hot tub plan.

Bruised ribs, no internal bleeding, big sucker of a bruise. You were fine, except for the pain. You sat in the infirmary wearing a stupid paper gown. Gabriel sat in one chair, Jack leaning against the wall while Angela gave you a mostly clean bill of health.

"Did you get all these bruises from this mission?" She asked.

"Did some sparring yesterday." You didn't look at Gabriel or Jack. They were mostly faded, but Angela knew you'd used a biotic emitter. She could probably guess how old they were.

Angela shook her head. "With who? Reinhardt? You need to be more careful, Lucky."
You went to shrug, then winced. "Yes, ma'am."

"Eat a good meal, use the emitter, come see me when you get up tomorrow. You'll probably be fine."

"Thanks." You pulled your pants on. Then you turned around and put on your hoodie. No bra right now. The pressure would be unpleasant.

You slouched on the exam table. Breathing was a little uncomfortable. But you did it anyway. Gabriel gathered up your things.

"Glad you're OK," Jack said. He'd watched the entire exchange silently, occasionally placing a hand on Gabriel's shoulder. "You need anything?"

"I had this elaborate plan to rent a hotel room so I could use the hot tub because fuck cold weather fighting...but I don't think I'm leaving the base tonight."

Gabriel regarded you grimly. "Did you get hurt because you weren't in fighting shape?"

You blinked. It took a moment for your patented Reyes-Regular English translator to kick in. "It had nothing to do with last night's sparring. I was a little slower, but even at my best, I can't guarantee I would have been able to kill both those guys before one got a shot off. And speaking of last night...are you OK?"

Gabriel snorted. "I have idiot-rabies now, but other than I'm good."

You shrugged and immediately regretted it. "Can't tell the difference."

Jack laughed.

Gabriel glared at him, then took a deep breath and looked you dead in the eyes. "I pushed it too far last night. I'm sorry."

You weren't sure if he was apologizing for choking you, or having an erection, or putting you in that situation in the first place. But you had it a feeling it was for all of the above. "You should be. I made you hot chocolate and you beat me up."

Gabriel awkwardly examined the floor. "Yeah. It seemed like a good idea at the time. Sorry."

Oh, he said it twice, he must really be feeling guilty. Good. "We're good, Gabriel," you said.

"Let me help you back to the office. Or your bedroom. Or the rec room. Where do you want to sleep tonight?"

"Office," you said, getting up.

Jack and Gabriel escorted you back to the office, Gabriel carrying your things and Jack hovering beside you, like he wanted to say something, but wasn't sure how.

You lowered yourself onto the couch with a groan. Gabriel set up the emitter and you sighed.

"I have to write up my report," he said. "Will it bother you if I stay?"
"It's your office, stupid," you mumbled.

"She's getting hungry," Jack said.

You opened on eye. "How can you tell?"

"You start name-calling."

"I'll get you something to eat," Gabriel said. "What do you want?"

"Something warm," you murmured.

Gabriel left you there with Jack. Jack pulled a chair.

"If we ever do something that makes you uncomfortable, you can tell us, you know that right?" Jack asked.

"Uh-huh." You closed both eyes.

"If you're not comfortable telling us, tell Ana. She'll do it."

"Yup," you agreed.

"You're not actually listening and you're falling asleep." He laughed softly.

"Got it in one."

When you awoke, Gabriel was at his desk. The biotic emitter was still running, and your aches had diminished enough for you to sit up comfortably.

"You were out for twelve hours," he said, not looking up. "How are you feeling?"

"Hungry."

Gabriel snorted. "How's your pain?"

"In my stomach, because I'm hungry."

"Idiot," Gabriel muttered. "I made you chicken and lime soup last night. You were out cold by the time I got back."

"You took too long. I passed out from hunger," you said.

Gabriel got up and went to the minifridge. He got out a covered bowl and reheated it for you.

"Thank you," you said and drank it straight from the bowl. It was hot, a little sour, and hit the spot.

"You had a close call last night," he said. He sat down beside you, hands folded in his lap.

"I managed to avoid losing fingers, getting blown up, or buried alive."
"You managed to get shot."

"You going to be unreasonable and mad at me for something I couldn't control?"

"I want to be," he said gruffly. "But no, that's not fair."

"That's big of you," you said. "I appreciate it." You put the bowl on the floor and debated lying back down.

"What can I do?"

You blinked. Gabriel either brought you things or told you in a roundabout way that you needed them. He didn't ask open ended questions. To be fair, who knew what you would ask for on a bad day? The heads of your enemies in hand-woven baskets? Elaborate prototype weapons? More cake, probably.

"Do you care if I go back to sleep?" You yawned.

"That's fine," he said, not moving. "May I sit here?" Gabriel was looking straight ahead, and not at you. There was a familiar unpleasant tension in his shoulders. He held himself rigid and still, but he practically vibrated with uncomfortable energy.

The last time you'd seen him anything like this was with Gleeson. It hit you then that you'd scared him. That last night's run combined with your ruined armor triggered something unpleasant in his psyche.

"Where's Jack?" You weren't sure what to do.

"Had some meetings he couldn't skip," Gabriel said, still not looking at you.

"I'll probably curl up against you because you exude the warmth of a thousand heat rocks." That was true, though you hadn't cuddled with Gabriel since that night in the Yukon. And you weren't going to call that "cuddling." That was self-preservation.

"I don't mind," he said, shoulders lowering a few centimeters. He finally glanced over at you.

You wrapped your blanket around yourself and leaned against him, his body familiar, the heat comforting. He delicately rested an arm around your shoulders.

"Is this...too much?" he asked. "You don't have to do this."

"Are you kidding? You're like a giant hot water bottle," you said, trying to sound flippant.

"Ah." He nodded. "That's OK then."

Jack walked in to find Gabriel sitting on the couch reading his tablet, you were asleep against him, your head resting against his upper arm. You had cocooned yourself in one of the many blankets you left around the office.

"She OK?"
"She's fine," Gabriel said. "Woke up hungry, talked some shit, and went straight back to sleep."

"You OK?" Jack asked, already knowing the answer.

"Doing better," he said.

"She really did a number on her armor. Reminded me of that time in Kandahar." Jack pulled up a chair in front of Gabriel. "I was fine too, Gabe. Just sore."

"Scared the shit out of me, Jack. Thought you were bleeding out underneath."

Jack leaned in and kissed him. "We're all here, Gabe. We survived. It's going to be fine."

You opened your eyes as you felt Gabriel shift beside you, and promptly pulled yourself upright.

Jack held Gabriel's face in his hands, their foreheads pressed together. Jack caught your eye and smiled knowingly. Then he nudged Gabriel. "You woke her up."

"Well, there goes my plan to see if we could have sex without her noticing." Gabriel sounded more himself.

"What is wrong with you two? Do you do this Captain Amari?"

"No, but I don't make soup for Ana either."

Apparently making soup for someone meant you could be a shit to them. You began unraveling the blankets. Your muscles still ached, but you felt much better. It was very warm in the office, probably from Gabriel's crazy body heat. And with Jack sitting here, it almost too cozy. Like you shouldn't get comfortable because they needed their space.

"Lacroix OK?" You asked.

"Oh yes, he and his wife are recuperating. Ana's handling it."

"All right. I'm going to go get changed and washed up." And you'd avoid the office for the rest of the day.

Chapter End Notes

...Adding another small unplanned arc, because apparently I like to drag this out.

Question: Is it still going to be interesting after everyone falls in bed together? Because I have more plot after that. I just don't know if anyone else finds it interesting after "omg we had sexy times!" or if that was the payoff everyone was waiting for and after that everything else is just pretending/padding? IDK. That isn't a "tell me you love me or I'll quit." That's a "if you have a strong opinion on that kind of thing, I'd be curious to know." I'm going to write it either way, and so far, I like what I've done, but writing acknowledged relationships in development is heavier, less fun, and more thinking than writing the unresolved sexual tension and attraction.
Guys, I wasn't planning on quitting after uh...climax. But I do appreciate the love. This thing keeps getting bigger and I'm like "can I stop...please?" And the story is all like "Hahaha. No." "But good things must come to an end. It's only the bad ones that go on forever and I need to work on non-fanfic writing." "Hahaha. No."

So yeah. Eventually updates may slow down, because this has been my life for 2 weeks, and I actually would like to see my friends and do things... "Hahaha. No."

Ahem.

See the end of the chapter for more notes

It was a year ago today. It felt like a lifetime now, but the wounds still ached. Funny how time and pain didn't always match up. You pulled on your gloves and gathered up your offerings.

The sun hadn't risen yet, but they were waiting for you down by the Memorial Wall. You hadn't expected to see them, and you certainly hadn't invited them, but Gabriel and Ziv stood there silently. Gabriel had his hands in his pockets. Ziv was bundled in a puffy white coat, striped scarf, and a knit cap with ridiculous pompoms.

You nodded and knelt, lighting that awful incense Captain Patel would have liked. That was fine, your death rituals called for sacrifice, symbolic as it may be. It'd been a goddamn year, and you'd killed some of the people responsible. You weren't done yet, nowhere near close, but you liked to think she wouldn't mind the delay. You were doing the job right. Someone else had not, and while you knew it was not your fault, she had paid the price.

Rivka had also bought your life with hers. Maybe that hadn't been her intent, but she'd stayed and sent out that distress call. You weren't going to put hummus on the memorial because that was silly, but you'd gotten a hold of some myrrh oil and you think she would have liked it. It was strong and bittersweet and you poured it on the ground.

The tanto rested against the small of your back. Shin would be pleased by how much use you got out of it. And you knew he would be delighted by your work. The tanto was a good gift. The time he'd given you, that had been better. You got out a bottle of whiskey, a nice one, and poured some of it at the base of the memorial.

This too was for Julio Valdez, your shield; Chibundo Nwazue, your demolitionist; Simon Razafindrandriatsimany your healer; and Lao Yue, your baby hacker.

Your feelings hadn't changed over the course of a year, but maybe the pain had diminished. This was for you as much as it was for them. You took a swig of the whiskey, stood, and wiped your face with the back of your hand. Then you passed the bottle to Gabriel. He drank and passed it to Ziv. Ziv took a drink and poured the rest on the ground.

The sun was rising and you could see your breath in the morning light.
"Savta would've laughed at how fucking early and cold it is," Ziv said. "Then she would have told you how stupid you were for wasting myrrh." He turned abruptly and walked back to HQ.

You managed a wan smile. Gabriel's hand rested on your shoulder.

"That little shit poured out all the whiskey," he muttered. "What the fuck is wrong with him?"

You laughed at that and walked up the path toward Overwatch HQ, Gabriel's warmth at your back.

It was only a matter of time before someone asked. Jesse had assured you of it after you realized you were no longer a pariah. You weren't so sure.

"Hey, Lucky Strike, right?" A man in Overwatch blues jogged up behind you.

You looked over your shoulder. You were on your way back from hand-to-hand training. "Yup." Your fingers tightened at your side, but you forced yourself to look relaxed.

He was taller than you and on the slender side of fit. He had elegant cheekbones, a pointed chin, and a thin mouth. He'd shaved the sides of his head and let the rest grow long in a ponytail.

"Hello, I'm Joon," he said in British-accented English. He gave you a shy smile. It was cute. "Do you want to get coffee some time?"

"OK," you said, wondering what you were agreeing to besides coffee.

"Great." He smiled brightly at you and for half a second you saw shades of Shin. "How about now?"

You were sweaty, but not bloody. And it was just coffee in the mess. "OK." You walked a few hallways in silence. "What do you do, Joon?"

"I'm a sniper," he said.

The silence started up again and it wasn't the comfortable kind. He wasn't Shin, he wasn't going to be anything like Shin, and that wasn't a fair comparison to make. In the mess hall, you grabbed a coffee and a slice of cheesecake. You found a table and sat down. Joon joined you with a mug of coffee.

"Am I out of line?" Joon asked.

"What? I don't think so," you said. "I just don't normally grab coffee with strangers."

"Oh. Well, thanks for making the exception?"

"It was no trouble." You cut your cake and ate it in measured bites. "Sorry, not usually talkative after getting tossed around in training."

"Oh yes, I heard Reyes pairs you up with the cyborg. He's pretty tough, isn't he?"
"Very," you agreed.

"But he's a melee fighter. Can't really compare against a sniper," Yoon said.

You felt a twinge of annoyance. "Guess it depends on the situation."

"Of course," he said hastily. He put his cup down. "I guess trying to impress you is the wrong track?"

"It probably isn't wise to shit-talk one of the men who watches my back." You took another sip of coffee.

"That came out wrong," he said. "It took me all week to work up the nerve to talk to you. Sorry."

Slightly mollified, you held the coffee mug in both hands, savoring the heat. "OK."

"I do you want to get dinner some time?" He looked at you hopefully. And it was a relief because Shin would've just brought you dinner and made it a stealth-attack. Joon was not Shin. You could stop drawing the comparison and like him or dislike on his own merit.

"If it's on the base," you said after a moment. Because even if you didn't want to go, it was important to see people besides your coworkers.

"Great. I'll see you tomorrow night at seven?"

"Should be fine," you said, already regretting it.

"I've heard of Park Joon. He gets around. The shy thing works for him," Jesse said as you studied a potential evacuation route for the Hanoi mission.

"We had coffee yesterday. It was awkward. Then he asked me to dinner. I'm betting it's going to be twice as awkward."

"You like awkward or something, sweetpea?"

"Nah. Just trying to get back in the saddle. Might have a few false starts."

"Ain't a crime. You have needs," Jesse said almost too casually.

"You disapprove?" You finally looked up at Jesse. He sat on your desk chewing an unlit cigar.

"You could do better," Jesse said after a moment. "Gonna speculate that he's just looking for another notch in his bedpost. And you're a pretty nice one."

"Thanks, I think. Not everyone is trying to woo their one true love," you said. "Some of us just need to get laid."
The office door opened and Gabriel came in carrying three pizza boxes. Jack had the beer.

"Well," Jesse said, giving you a sly look. "I'm sure you'll have lots of fun. Enjoy your date, Lucky. Get laid. Don't do anything I wouldn't do." He grinned at Gabriel and Jack. "Hey boss, Strike Commander."

You couldn't see Gabriel's face, but Jack was giving Jesse a hard look.

"Everything OK? What'd Jesse do now?" You asked after Jesse shut the door behind him.

"No smoking, indoors," Jack said, face lighting up as he turned that devastating smile at you. "We got pizza and beer. Gabriel got you your own, because...anchovies."

You rolled your eyes. "They're delicious."

"If you say so," Jack said. "Why don't you take a break?"

The plan sat in front of you. As an evacuation route, you weren't sure about this one. You'd have to check to see if those Metro tunnels still existed. Vo Min in demolitions was from Hanoi. She might have an idea where to look. You made the note and put your tablet aside.

When you looked up, Jack was shaking his head.

"You joining us, or what?" Gabriel asked, his box of pizza already open.

You grabbed a beer and pulled up a chair. "Some of us have work to do."

"Just look busy. When the boss comes in, he'll never notice," Jack said.

Gabriel shot Jack a dirty look.

You laughed and took your pizza.

You had more casual outfits now. Nothing fancy, but at least you could now go out in things other than uniforms and sweats. You put on a black turtleneck and jeans and met Joon in the mess hall. He waved and you wondered if maybe he was a Talon spy. You weren't overtly hunting them like Lacroix, but sending a honeytrap after Commander Reyes' assistant was theoretically a smart tactical choice. You did have access to lots of classified information.

You realized then, that maybe you weren't normal any more and you should probably relax. You walked over to Joon, reminding yourself that you were a single female and people would ask you to dinner based on that criteria alone.

"You look good," Joon said, giving you a once over. "I don't think I've ever seen you in civvies."

"Thanks," you said. He looked nice enough, button down green shirt, pressed khaki trousers. You got in line.

"I do like the food here. I did my service in Colchester. The food was absolute shit."
"Yeah," you thought of the 9th Circle. "I was in the middle of nowhere. We usually ended up making our own meals if given the chance. That or field rations."

"Rough," he said. "You served in a lot combat zones?"

"Not really," The chatter was generic. You could have done it half awake. Joon got a bowl of beef stew and you took a stack of pancakes. Because they had real syrup here. Lao had turned you onto it while you were in Canada. Real maple syrup was the 8th Wonder of the World.

You ate, mostly listening to Joon talk. It wasn't hard. But out of the corner of your eye, you saw a familiar cowboy sit down at the table behind Joon. He grinned at you.

You raised a brow. Really?

"I know this nice place downtown if you're ever up for a night out," Joon said.

You pondered it for a moment. Joon was...nice. But you didn't really enjoy talking to him and you couldn't quite picture having sex with him. "I don't think that's a good idea," you said finally. "You're attractive and good company, but I'm not in a good position to date right now."

To his credit, Joon just smiled. "That's a shame. You're lovely and mysterious. That's pretty irresistible." He paused. "Is there someone else I didn't account for?" You struggled not to think about Gabriel's arm around your shoulders or Jack wiping blood off your mouth.

"No," you said a little too forcefully. "Work is just kicking my ass."

"Ah," Joon said. "It's one of those "if you tell you me, you'll have to kill me" deals. Got it."

That was a better answer than you had. So you smiled noncommittally, ate your pancakes, and then went back to the office.

Gabriel was at his desk looking over your Hanoi proposals. He looked up, frowning. "Aren't you off-duty?"

"Wanted to go over the numbers again. Something felt off." You plopped down at your desk, and pulled up your dossiers on the Petras family.

The door opened and Jesse poked his head in. "You looked cute together."

"What?" Why did he feel the need to announce this? Especially since you weren't together.

"You and your date. He asked you on a third date, right? You know what that means-"

"Some of us are trying to work, McCree," Gabriel said. "Go have tea with Ana if you want to gossip like an old woman."

Jesse just grinned at you. Which was ridiculous because he knew you'd turned Joon down. "You going to with him to the ball?"

"What ball?"
"You didn't tell her about the ball?" Jesse asked Gabriel. "Oh that's right, you don't go." You'd forgotten how well Jesse could do Blackwatch petty.

Gabriel just pursed his lips.

"He probably planned to ask on the third date," Jesse said. "Zurich hosts this fancy title something something Celebratory Honorable Appreciation of Overwatch Ball at the Kongresshaus. We don't usually attend overtly, because Blackwatch is a big secret, but since they offer tickets the general public, we can get in on the lower levels and mingle. A lot of the rank and file wear their uniforms and the public eats it up. There's a hotel attached and the afterparty gets real wild."

"Oh." You looked down at your paperwork. There was a ball? You were part of a top-secret, need-to-know unit, and you didn't even know what was going on in the town outside. Compartmentalized intelligence indeed.

"It's two weeks out. You should go, even if he doesn't ask," Jesse said. He flashed Gabriel a smirk and shut the door.

You sat there, deeply disturbed by your lack of situational awareness.

Gabriel cleared his throat. "That idiot is wrong by the way. I am going, just not as Jack's official date. I thought you knew about it. It starts on Friday and ends late Saturday morning. Genji is staying in to hold down the fort, if you wanted to go."

"Good to know," you said, and laid out the Petras dossiers.

"What the hell was that about, Jesse?" You demanded when you finally cornered him in his room.

"Are you really that dense, Lucky?" Jesse shook his head, the sharpness in his voice surprised you. "Or is it just denial?"

You crossed your arms. "I am that dense. I didn't even know there was a ball till you said something. So enlighten me."

Jesse sat back in his chair, hat in his lap. He brushed his hair back. "Sit down, Lucky. It's about time somebody said something. Might as well be me."

You sat down. Jesse rarely snapped at you.

"OK," you said, bracing yourself.

"It's been obvious, as the nose on your face, that you got it bad for the Commander."

You felt heat spread across your face. It wasn't something you'd ever acknowledged, because it couldn't end well. But you weren't in denial about your feelings; you were very aware of them. You just put them in a box, set them aside, and did what you had to do. "I never act-"

"You didn't have to do a thing. It was always there. And it's been just as obvious, from the get-go, the Commander has a soft spot for you."
"Was I really that obvious? Like everyone in Blackwatch or just..."

"To the people that see you every day. It's real obvious to me and Genji. Ana too. The Commander was less subtle, which is partially why people thought you were sleeping together."

"And so it was all obvious to Jack then."

"I know you hadn't noticed, because you're too busy sticking your head in the sand, but Morrison doesn't mind," Jesse said. "At first I thought it was bad news that he kept hanging around. Like he was waiting for you to screw up." Jesse put his hat on the table. "But I was wrong about that." Jesse reached down and grabbed two beers. He slid one across the table to you.

You grabbed it. "Why do you say that?"

"He's a good actor, but he ain't that good." Jesse smirked. "Come on, you know damn well Morrison fakes his way through people. We've both seen it enough to know when he's being genuine."

Jesse wasn't wrong. "He doesn't care because I haven't and won't do anything."

Jesse laughed. "He cares. Should've seen the look he gave me when I brought up your date. Think it was probably your Paris trip that changed things. That and he's always checking out your ass in training." You nearly choked to death on your beer, because you definitely had not noticed that. So there it was, in front of you, the option you hadn't acknowledged: It wasn't just fighting that aroused Gabriel. He liked manhandling you.

"I... They're together, Jesse. That's not something I want to mess with." You'd seen the light in Gabriel's eyes when Jack walked into the room. The exhaustion faded from Jack's face when he had Gabriel beside him.

"I ain't telling you what to do, Lucky. That's your call. Just letting you know, the feelings seem mutual. The Commander is real aware of rank. He ain't gonna do nothing to pressure you. Morrison's the same."

You remembered how careful Shin had been with you that first night. Jack and Gabriel were even more conscientious of the wider power gap. "OK."

"Take it. Leave it. You have that choice. But it's about damn time you acknowledged it instead of dancing around it."

"So wait, why did you keep flinging my "date" in- Oh." Jesse was an instigator. He liked needling Jack and Gabriel. Blackwatch petty to the rescue.

"Man's gotta get his kicks somehow." Jesse grinned. "And riling up your commanding officers with something they can't punish you for, that's pretty satisfying."

"So you're going?"

"Who do you think's escorting Captain Amari?"
"So are you going?" Jack asked, leaning over your shoulder. He was dressed down again in a tight black turtleneck and black fatigues. You were painfully aware of his presence in your space. It had been easier not acknowledging your attraction to him, just passing it off as playful friendship. Now it was almost overwhelming.

"I guess," you said. "I have to find something to wear." That wasn't entirely true. You had gone into town and placed an order already.

"Are you feeling OK?" Jack asked. "You've been so quiet all week."

"Just tired."

"Gabe working you too hard?" He sounded genuinely concerned.

"Nah, just trying to tie up the loose ends on this op. Though I guess my sparring partner could stop bruising me up before the dance."

Jack had the grace to look sheepish. "If you wanted me to go easy on you, all you had to do was ask."

"I was talking about Genji," you said, picking up your tablet, only being a little petty. "Gabriel won't be back for another hour. He's getting fitted for a new suit."

"I know," Jack said. "I came by to convince you come, if you weren't already."

"I've attended formal occasions with you before. They are overrated."

Jack laughed. "You get to dress up in whatever you like and you're not my bodyguard this time. Just pick up a regular ticket from support services. We'll get you upstairs to the ballroom."

"Thanks."

"McCree said you had a date. You can bring him too," Jack said so casually, it almost didn't sound like fishing.

"Jesse's an idiot," you said, turning back to your paperwork. You could feel his gaze on the back of your neck. It might have been petty not to explain the situation, but you were too frustrated to want to go into that right now. Besides, you were Blackwatch. Petty was your game.

"You don't have to go, if you don't want to."

You sat in front of Captain Amari's desk.

"Jesse...said some things."

Captain Amari looked up from her paperwork. "About?"

"Gabriel and Jack. And me." You didn't feel comfortable saying it out loud. "Am I...has it been-?"

"There has never been a need to talk about it, because your behavior has been professional," Captain Amari said. "If that wasn't the case, we would have dealt with this much sooner. I trust Gabriel and Jack haven't made you uncomfortable?"

"They haven't behaved unethically," you said, which was different from making you uncomfortable. "I...if something happened, discretely, would that cause problems?"

"I'm your direct superior, Lucky. As long as everything is between consenting adults, discrete should be fine." She paused. "Honestly, I was expecting this to come to a head much earlier."

"What?"

"You weren't the only one who was obvious, Lucky. Why do you think I'm your CO and not Gabriel?"

Your brain flashed back to that first day, Gabriel sitting in your room.

"...Because I'm a gullible idiot."

You opted for a little black cocktail dress that fell mid-thigh. It was sexy, versatile, and you could fit your tanto against you back. You wore black stockings to cover your scarred leg. You'd found a terribly expensive pair of wrist-length black lace gloves. Red heels and a matching clutch completed the outfit, giving just enough color that you didn't look like a widow.

You kept a spare set of basic fingertips in the clutch with a tube of red lipstick. It was blades tonight. You'd already been to one formal occasion with Jack. You'd rather be armed than sorry.

You were traveling with Captain Amari and Jesse. Jack and Gabriel would already be at the function giving speeches and doing official things.

Captain Amari wore a deep cut blue jumpsuit in Overwatch blue with a white sash, white heels, gold hoop earrings, and several thin gold chains that formed a cascade down her chest. Jesse was back in his black suit and bolo tie, hat in place, firmly keeping with the cowboy theme.

They were a handsome couple.

Jesse whistled at you. "You clean up nice, Lucky."

"Are you catcalling another woman in front of me?" Captain Amari asked.

"No ma'am," Jesse beamed. "I wouldn't dream of it."

Captain Amari gave him a look you'd never seen before. Part amusement, part warmth, and all pleasure.

It wasn't meant for you and you studied your shoes. Well, if nothing happened tonight, at least someone else was having fun.
You sat at a high table in the bar on the second floor, sipping a whiskey on the rocks. Captain Amari had gone ahead to the ballroom with Jesse as her plus one. You were waiting on Gabriel or Jack and needed a drink or three to fortify yourself.

"Hey there." A brunette man in the Overwatch dress uniform leaned against the table.
"You alone pretty lady?"

"I'm waiting for my friends," you said flatly.

"Aww don't be that way. I'm Cooper, this is Jones-" he gestured at a stocky-looking blonde man who'd sidled up alongside him. "Thought you looked lonely. We're in Overwatch, you know. Kind of a big deal."

You just stared. You liked the lace gloves and really didn't want to ruin them. Because there were too many people here and you were just now realizing how antisocial you'd become.

"Jones, I think the lady's impressed," Cooper said to his friend.

"I'm not."

"Now don't be like that. We're risking our lives for the greater good all the time. Why don't you show some appreciation?"

You took another drink of your whiskey. You could throw it in his face. You could take off your glove and slap him with it. You could just punch him. You imagined starting a bar fight at the Overwatch Ball. It could be epic and add to your personal legend, but you'd probably just get arrested and ruin your nice new clothes.

"I'm not interested. Please leave me alone." You put your glass down.

"You're a rude bitch," Cooper said, resting his hand over yours. "But all the hot ones are." His fingers began to travel up your arm.

You punched him with your right hand. He went down, blood gushing from his nose. You glove was undamaged, thankfully. "I was polite. I even said "please." Now I'm done. Fuck off." You'd use your left next and then he wouldn't be getting back up.

"You-" Cooper staggered to his feet. "You can't-"

"What the hell do you think you're doing?" You knew that voice too well. You forced your fists down as a set of hands pulled you back.

"She-"

"You OK, Lucky?" Jack asked, his hands resting on your bare shoulders.

"I don't care who the fuck you are, you don't lay hands on my people," Gabriel was in front of you now.

"Oh God, Commander Reyes-" Cooper looked around frantically. "I didn't know she was your girl-"
"Shit, Cooper, that's Lucky Strike. She's with Morrison-!" Jones backed up. "We're sorry, we didn't know!" The two men took off running, pushing through the crowd.

Tension coiled in your hands, you were so close to ruining your gloves. You didn't need to hide behind their names. You could do your own dirty work.

"I was handling that," you said sharply.

"It is my privilege to look after my people." Gabriel turned around, and your mouth went dry. He'd gone all out: white shirt, red bowtie, a matching red brocade double-breasted waist coat under a black tailcoat, crisp pleated trousers, and sharp leather shoes. He'd trimmed his beard and you were pretty sure he'd styled his curls. Gabriel took your hand in his, rubbing the knuckles. "We would have been here sooner but everyone and their mother wants to talk to Jack."

"Besides, those are pretty gloves," Jack said, his breath warm in your ear. "We'd hate to see them ruined." His hands hadn't moved from your shoulders. "You look good, darling. You even match Gabriel."

"It wasn't intentional," you said, still salty about their interference.

Maybe it was the alcohol, maybe it was the adrenaline, but you stared boldly at Gabriel, taking in his polished appearance. The cut of his jacket emphasized his broad shoulders, and while he'd always been attractive, the formalwear lent him a devastating elegance. He just smiled smugly at you, looking absolutely sinful. Your anger began to ebb, even as you grasped at it for support. He didn't get to just show up looking sexy and steal your fight.

"You like?" Gabriel purred.

"You look nice," you said, begrudgingly.

"You look beautiful," he said, obviously too pleased with himself to care that you were being petty.

You turned around, and Jack was so very close. He had been bold, going with an almost identical ensemble, only in a shade of cream with a blue waistcoat to match his eyes. It should have washed him out, instead it gave his skin a warmer, almost rosy cast.

"Gabriel picked it out," Jack murmured. "What do you think?"

"You're always too pretty," you told him, nerves still shot.

Jack raised his chin, his grin even cockier than before. "Where's your date, Lucky?"

"Didn't bring one," you said, trying not to grit your teeth.

"That's a pity," Jack said, sounding anything but disappointed.

Gabriel muttered something about "that damn ingrate."

"So do you want to join us?" Jack asked, his face inches from yours. There was a hunger etched on his face you'd seen many times before but never this close. How could you have missed it before?

"I'd hate to impose," you said baring your teeth, because you were too wound up to play nice and you had the sneaking suspicion Jack was goading you because he liked it when you were feral. You'd had some time to look back on your interactions. Jack came off as a boy scout, but he really liked pushing people's buttons. And worse, he could be subtle about it.

Like the time he'd given you cognac and casually slipped out that he and Gabriel had fucked on your desk. You still weren't sure if he was being catty, or fishing, or instigating. That was the past. You just knew he wasn't to be taken at face value.

"Relax," Gabriel said, a hand stroking the back of your neck. "We have to play civilized now. But they comped Jack the penthouse suite for the weekend as a sign of appreciation. Supposed to be fancy. I have a team sweeping it right now. We can unwind there after we've socialized."

The implication was there. The invitation was open.

Suddenly the room was very warm. You took a couple of shuddering breaths. You were now all worked up to fight and instead you were stuck between Gabriel and Jack with the offer of something else. You weren't sure if the whiskey was a bad idea or if you needed a whole bottle for survival. Your blood was still hot. You didn't trust yourself.

"I need a moment," you said, bowing your head.

"Take your time," Gabriel said, rubbing circles on your back.

"You can fire them Monday, in person," Jack said softly.

You lifted your head. "Isn't that some kind of abuse of power?"

"Yeah, but so is forcing your attentions on someone, while trying to use Overwatch status as leverage. I'm shit-canning them, either way," Jack said. "Doesn't matter who does it."

That made you feel marginally better. Gabriel's hands were firm against your waist. "I think I'll need another drink," you said.

"They have nice champagne upstairs," Jack said.

"I want whiskey," you said, because you needed to get yourself under control before you went upstairs. And maybe because you were petty.

"Go get her a whiskey, Jack," Gabriel said. "But don't overindulge, Lucky. We can't have fun if you're sloppy drunk."

Jack raised a brow at Gabriel. You had no idea what Gabriel's expression was, but Jack turned and headed to bar. You stood there watching him, Gabriel holding you by the waist.

"So you finally figured it out," he said. He spoke softly, but you could hear him clearly over the crowd.

"I had help." It was easier to do it like this, not looking at him.

"We were getting pretty obvious," Gabriel said with a laugh.

"I'm a gullible idiot." At least when it came to them. "There was a lot of self recrimination."

"That explains what's been eating you all week."
"I didn't know what to do," you said, crossing your arms tightly.

"You don't have to do anything," he said gently. "If you're not comfortable with this, then there's no expectation." He was so very warm against your back. "I don't want to do anything you don't want."

"It doesn't have to be." His hand rested on the back of your neck, lightly kneading.

You really wanted to believe that.

Jack was back. He set the glass of whiskey on the table and patted your cheek. "You've never backed down from us before," he said, the pads of his fingers rough against your skin. "Why the hell would you start now?"

Jack was scary good at pushing your buttons. You threw back the whiskey and mustered a wry smile.

"Let's get through the ball, and then we'll talk about it upstairs."

It was like a Disney movie, only with more old people and no singing candlesticks. You could feel the eyes on you as you walked in between Gabriel and Jack. They weren't touching you now; no need to start more rumors. But they hovered. You had your polite, vaguely disinterested expression pasted firmly in place.

There were a lot of people here. It would be hard to track an assassin. The press was thick enough that it'd be real easy to just sidle up to someone, cut, and walk away. You'd be halfway out the door before anyone noticed anything was wrong. If you were really unethical, poison would be super effective.

It was easier to think about tradecraft than your feelings. Yeah, you definitely weren't normal any more. But you could pretend. You snagged a flute of champagne of a passing waiter's tray.

"Thank you," Gabriel said, plucking it from you fingers and downing it in one gulp.

"That was my prop," you said. "I was going to hold it and blend in."

"You walked in next to Jack and me, looking ready to kill. You're not blending in now," Gabriel said.

Your face felt warm. You were going to blame the whiskey. "That was my "bored" face, not my "kill" face," you said trying for a polite smile.

"You'll fool the masses, but you're not fooling me," Gabriel said.

"Oh, Reinhardt, you look dashing," you said brightly, turning away as Reinhardt approached in what had to be a custom tuxedo.

"Lucky Lady!" He boomed, because Reinhardt didn't have an indoor voice. "You look lovely!” He beamed at you, and your sourness diminished just a little. “Would you like to dance?”

You glanced out on the dance floor. There was a live orchestra and you caught sight of Jesse stepping carefully with Captain Amari, his head bowed as he leaned in to whisper to her.

“I uh...terrible dancer,” you said, because smugglers didn't get lessons in ballroom dance and because you did not need Reinhardt breaking your toes tonight. You needed those to run away.

“Nonsense! Let me show you how it's done.” He tugged your wrist. "Join me?” He was a hopeful puppy, all enthusiasm and honest emotion.

“All right,” you said, and looked back to see Gabriel frowning at Reinhardt.

"Don't worry, Gabriel," he said. "I'll bring her back to you in one piece!” He placed your arm in his, guiding you onto the floor. "Thank you for humoring an old man, Lucky.”

"You're only as old as you feel,” you said, because Reinhardt liked platitudes.

"Then you have made me very young indeed.” He laughed and placed one arm all the way around your waist. The other hand carefully took your left, folding the fingers between his. "Ah, I must be careful,” he said. "Torbjörn said you have unpleasant surprises under your gloves. He always does such good work.”

The height difference was going to make this awkward. "I'm very pleased with them," you said.

"Are you ready?"

"Sure,” you said, eyes darting down to your feet.

Reinhardt began to move, surprisingly light-footed and graceful. You would have moved your legs, except, your feet weren't quite touching the ground any more. You blinked, and Reinhardt grinned down at you. "I do not wish to step on any toes.”

"Uh, thanks,” you said. He didn't move fast. Your skirt didn't fly up. Your legs didn't kick out. So it wasn't readily apparent that you were airborne.

"See, you don't have to know how to dance. You just come out and whirl. It is good fun.”

You laughed, some of the tension bleeding out of your body. "Thank you, Reinhardt.”

"It is good that you came. You work too much,” he said. "You should get out in the field more. Nothing like a good honest battle to clear the mind.”

You weren't sure how that wasn't work. "I don't do fair fights, Reinhardt. I'd lose.” He spun around with you, never bumping another person.

"Well, it is good that you came out tonight, Lucky Lady. Are you coming to the afterparty? There will be beer. There will be karaoke. I will sing the hymns of Hasselhoff. It will be glorious!”

"I...don't know,” you said.

"Ah, maybe you have other plans,” he said slyly and you wondered how much he knew.

"Maybe I do,” you said.
"There's that devious smile." Reinhardt set you back on the ground, bowing at the end of the song. "You should ask Torbjörn to dance. He will decline, but it will make his wife laugh."

"That is actually a good idea," you said. "Thanks."

"It is a really funny idea," he agreed. "He's over there. Let us go.

You held Reinhardt's arm, and caught sight of Jack smiling flatly and nodding at a group of suits. Gabriel was speaking with Angela, but he raised a brow as you headed off with Reinhardt. You shrugged and smiled.

Reinhardt was exceptionally useful in the crowd. First, everyone got out of his way without much effort on your part. Secondly, he could spot Swedish dwarves pretty quickly.

"Torbjörn! You look so diminutive," Reinhardt bellowed. "And there's your lovely Lucia."

Torby was also in a tuxedo which fit him rather well. It could have been custom made or he shopped at a place for very sophisticated, very round children. It was probably the former, but you let that latter idea linger for a moment.

"Reinhardt," Torby grumbled. "Lucky."

"You look very nice," you told him. His wife was stunning, blonde, and taller than him. It was a little shocking to see him with someone who wasn't another angry dwarf. You'd pictured his spouse as him, just without the facial hair. "Hello, Lucky isn't my name, but that's what everyone calls me anyway. Your husband made my prostheses. It's a pleasure to meet you." You extended your right hand.

She shook your hand warmly. "Yes, he has mentioned you before. I would like your chili recipe."

You shot Torby an amused look. "Sure. You just can't give it to my boss."

Torby snorted at that. "Don't let it go to your head."

"Of course not," you said. "I just came over to ask you to dance. Reinhardt said you were really good."

Torby bristled. "Go away."

"Oh darling, you never told me you were so popular," Lucia said cheerfully. "Should I be worried? Is that why you spend so much time at work? Are all these younger women pestering you?" She winked at you.

"I'll send you that recipe," you said.

"Now will you come dance with me, before some other girl tries to steal you away?" Lucia asked innocently.

Torby took her hand, but turned around to glower at you and Reinhardt, drawing a finger across his throat. It was actually a wee bit intimidating.

"That went beautifully!" Reinhardt clapped you on the back, and you nearly fell over.

"Yeah, great," you said, wobbly. A hand on your shoulder steadied you. You turned to find Jack looking a little frazzled.
"May I have this dance?"

Reinhardt looked between you and Jack and chuckled. "Go enjoy the party!"

"Trying to escape someone?" You said, taking his hand.

"I've gotten three phone numbers, two marriage proposals, and my ass grabbed in the last ten minutes, Lucky. Please dance with me." His firm political smile was starting to fray.

"That is so romantic," you said, enjoying the slip in his façade.

Jack wrapped a hand around your waist, his fingers brushing your hip. "I'll show you romantic later," he said, pulling you close. "This is self-preservation."

Jack was a passable dancer moving with coordination, but not grace. Not that you could complain. You stepped on his toes a lot. He didn't seem to mind. His hands were warm, and he watched you with a strange almost secretive look. "Gabriel was right."

"Don't let him hear that. We'll never hear the end of it."

Jack grinned at that. "He was right about you looking especially beautiful tonight."

"Stealing your boyfriend's line isn't romantic," you said, trying to be composed.

"Doesn't mean it isn't true," he said, too pleased with himself. "I'm glad you're here."

"To save you? All part of the job, sir."

Jack narrowed his eyes. "Is that why you're here then? Because of the job?"

"Of course, sir. An Assassin-Butler's work is never done," you said soberly.

He relaxed. "You're terrible. But I liked that outfit. I liked seeing you in my colors." He stroked your waist, fingers lingering a little too long. "Here comes Ana. We're probably going to have to switch out. I can't dance with anyone for too long without causing...talk."

Captain Amari gave you a polite nod. Then she and Jack paired off while Jesse took your arm. "Heard you started a fight." He looked you up and down. "You look fine."

"Jack and Gabriel stepped in."

"Jack and Gabriel stepped in," he gave you an inquisitive look. "I could've handled it. They're just busybodies," you said, letting Jesse lead. "You're not bad. Have you been taking lessons?"

A blush crept across Jesse's cheeks. "I didn't want to embarrass Ana."

"You look good together," you told him.

The blush grew deeper. "Lucky, I ain't here to talk about me. Everything OK with the commanders?"

"We're going to talk about it after the party."

"Darling, I've seen the looks they've been sending your way. I don't know if talking is what they're thinking about." Jesse smirked.

You fought the urge to facepalm. It would smear your makeup. "I don't know what's going on. Apparently someone has the penthouse suite and I'm invited to go admire the etchings. Or some other euphemism."

Jesse whistled. "Classy."

"Having a threesome with your bosses is "classy?" I'm really curious about what this word means in your culture, Jesse."

"You don't have to go. Ana and I will take you straight home if you want. No pressure. No obligations. If that's what you want."

"I'm going to talk. After that, it's anyone's guess."

Jesse nodded. "Fair enough, buttercup. I wish you all the luck." He patted your back.

"May I cut in?" Gabriel smoothly placed an arm around your waist.

"That's between you and the lady." Jesse released you with a wink.

"Dance with me?" Gabriel already had you in his arms. Sneaky bastard.

"I'm not very good," you said.

"I'll lead." He was graceful, flowing in a way that you and Jack hadn't managed. "Is the party to your liking?"

"Too many people. Too many opportunities for things to go wrong." That sounded like you were talking about something else. "But other than that, yes."

Gabriel laughed and twirled you. "I like the fancy clothes."

"Yeah. You look better than "nice" in that suit, Gabriel."

His laughter came out as a low rumble. You could feel it in your chest. "So you did notice?" He dipped you low, forcing you to clutch his forearms. You were pretty sure this song did not have dipping.

"Of course I noticed. I'm gullible, not blind."

Chapter End Notes

I'm the worst. I know. Shoujo tropes. What was I thinking?
Chapter 11

You casually wandered out after midnight, after making your appearance at the afterparty. Jack had left first. Then Gabriel. Leaving together would be suspicious. Now you contemplated the elevator hall.

You could just go home. Forget this happened. OK, no you couldn't. And it wasn't fair if you left without talking to them. But you did think about running away.

Sex would be easiest. Just sex. Get them out of your system and go back to work like nothing happened. You could do that, right?

And anything more...well, it all had the potential to blow up in your face and wreck everything you'd worked so hard for. Gabriel wasn't Shin. People wouldn't turn a blind eye if they knew. And Jack? You didn't even know what Jack wanted, let alone where you fit.

Well, you wouldn't find out by standing in the hallway being a chicken. You hit the up button and nearly jumped out of your shoes when someone coughed behind you.

"You need a keycard to get up there." Gabriel held up the card. You stepped into the elevator with him, heart pounding. He rubbed your back. "You OK?"

"Nervous," you admitted.

"Nothing to be nervous about," he said. "You're holding all the cards."

The elevator door opened and Gabriel led the way. You went through the leather-paneled hall and he opened a door to a large sitting room. The couch was bigger and wider than your bed. Jack was in the middle of pouring flutes of champagne.

"Fancy digs," you said, because it looked like a place you would rob, not a place you would stay.

"Don't have anything like this back home," Jack said. He offered you a glass and you took it gratefully.

"Three bedrooms, two baths, an enclosed balcony, a hot tub on the balcony, fully-stocked kitchen, multiple televisions, and discrete Blackwatch guards for the weekend," Gabriel rattled off. "Strictly incommunicado for anything less than Code Blue. This is the first vacation Jack's taken in...awhile."

"Oh." You downed the champagne and it was delicious. Your hands weren't shaking, which was good. You sat down on the couch and sunk in. Gabriel sat beside you.

"Are you hungry?" Jack asked. "There are snack trays in the fridge."

"Snack trays" isn't a fair description. They're fancier than beer nuts and pretzels," Gabriel told you.

"May I have more champagne, please?"
Jack poured it, studying your face.

You savored this one, the bubbles pleasantly tingly, the flavor light. "Nice stuff."

"Being Strike Commander apparently has a perk or two," Jack said. He sat down on the other side of you, keeping some space between you. He loosened his bowtie, letting it hang over his neck.

You sipped your second glass till it was gone. You could feel Gabriel's eyes on your hands and Jack was paying painfully close attention to the floor.

"How did this even happen?" You finally blurted out.

"I think you know," Gabriel said. "About me at least. As I told the others, I'm a sucker for grand gestures, and you and me have been through a lot. It doesn't hurt that you're pretty."

You sighed. "Yeah, OK. Right back at you." You rubbed your forehead. "Jack: I don't even know where to start."

"It never bothered me that Gabe liked you. I would have gone along with it for him. But Paris was the game-changer. Still not sure if Gabe planned it that way or not." Jack laughed softly. "Though if I want to be really honest, I started noticing you after you broke my nose."

"I broke it?" Your voice went high.

"Gabe snapped it back in place. Accelerated healing took care of the rest." He shrugged. "You were never taken in by the Strike Commander Morrison and all his bullshit. I'm not saying I'm faking it, but I can't be a paragon of virtue all the time. You didn't do that shit in Paris for the Strike Commander, you did it for your friend Jack. I got that message loud and clear. Especially after your talk with Ainsley."

"You heard that?" That devious son of a bitch. He'd spent the entire trip trying to get you to talk about what you'd said to Ainsley. And he'd overheard the whole conversation?

"I was expecting her to try to slip into my room, of course I was still awake." He laughed. "So imagine my surprise when you intercepted her and talked her into quitting all while making it sound like it was her idea."

"I was getting rid of a Petras pawn," you said.

"After the firefight, back in the hotel-" His eyes met yours. "You weren't teasing your commanding officer. You were teasing me. You see me," he said. "And while I know you don't trust me like you do Gabe, you haven't run away yet." He grinned, his eyes sparkling in the lowlight. "And I'm going to be honest, I like watching you fight."

"I'm terrible," you said, because you very clearly remembered that last night in Paris, your hand on his cheek, his body so close to yours.

"Maybe in hand-to-hand, but you're an ambush fighter. You laid out those cyborgs beautifully."

You bowed your head, because yeah, you got that. Watching Jack shoot had been impressive. "God, we're fucked up."

"Never denied it," Gabriel said. "So here we are. That's how it happened. What happens next, that's up to you."

"I don't want to ruin things," you said.

"So we start small. Take this weekend. Try some things out. No pressure," Jack said.

You gave him a look, because Jack was always pushing the envelope. "You guys are in a committed relationship and I've got baggage the size of a small elephant."

"Only a small one," Gabriel agreed. "You fit with us, chica. All that time alone together and we haven't killed each other? That night on the mats, if I hadn't gotten so rough...I thought maybe we could have tried then."

You blinked. Well, it was good to know that the sexual tension hadn't been your imagination. "Jack?"

"You got baggage," Jack said. "We all do. Gabriel has a wardrobe with Narnia in it. My issues are only slightly smaller. Your point?"

"Start small. Take this weekend," you repeated. "OK." You nodded. "OK. That seems...reasonable."

Gabriel leaned over, his fingers stroking your cheek. "You can stop at any time. Just say the word."

"I uh...bathroom first," you said. "Which way?"

Jack pointed and you grabbed your clutch and walked in. You shut the door and looked yourself in the mirror. The really big full-length mirror-walls and hey you could fit like six people in the shower.

You had a lot of little things to do. Your birth control implant was current. No worries there. Your hair was mussed. You swapped out prostheses, not wanting to have blades popping out in the bedroom. You took your tanto off. Then you carefully reapplied your lipstick. You still looked spooked, but pretty. It took a couple breaths, but you managed to get yourself looking reasonably calm. It looked like there were toothbrushes and bathrobes, which was good because you hadn't brought anything besides your purse.

You were stalling. You placed your purse and tanto on the counter and opened the bathroom door. When you came out, Jack and Gabriel were still lounging on the couch, the television on. It was some nature program about lions, which was great because you were kind of expecting porn.

"Come here," Gabriel murmured. "You want me to rub your back?"

"I...That'd be nice," you said, because you hadn't let him do that since that one time before Paris. Because you didn't trust your reactions.

You perched on the edge of the couch. Gabriel's hands gently began pressing against your back, working out the knots. "That feels nice," you said, turning your head to look at Gabriel.

He kissed you then, hands on your hips, mouth pressed firmly to yours. His tongue flicked into your mouth. You opened for him, tasting champagne on his tongue. He sighed in pleasure. You squeezed your thighs together, a soft whine in the back of your throat.
Gabriel released you, and wiped your lipstick off his mouth with the back of his hand. "Been wanting to do that all night." He loosened his bowtie and unbuttoned the top few buttons of his shirt. He pulled you into his lap. "You've been here before," he said. "Nothing to worry about."

Jack leaned over, his fingers tangling in your hair. He kissed harder, nipping your lower lip. "Can I kiss your neck, or is that too much?"

You nodded and his mouth was on your throat, sucking and licking while your squirmed in Gabriel's lap.

"He's good with his mouth, isn't he?" Gabriel asked. He placed a kiss on your shoulder. "Do you want to find out how good?"

Jack exhaled sharply. He slid to his knees in front of you, a pink blush coloring his cheeks. "May I?" He nuzzled your thigh, not moving the hem of your dress.

The sight of Jack on his knees made you shiver. You nodded.

"What's that?" Jack asked. "You have to tell me what you want."

"I-I-" You stuttered because Gabriel's mouth was on your neck, his hands cupping your breasts. He squeezed gently. "I want to feel your mouth on me," you managed to get out. Gabriel had your knees over his thighs. He spread his legs to make room for Jack, and open you up to him.

Jack hiked your skirt up around your hips. "Oh, pretty," he said, stroking your black lace panties. He ran his finger across your crotch, making you jerk. Laughing, he spread your thighs, and pulled the fabric to the side. He took a long slow lick along your slit, his stopping to suck on your clit.

"Oh God," you moaned.

"What's he doing?" Gabriel asked, his tongue flicking the curve of your ear.

Jack licked a finger and slowly slid it inside you. "She's already wet, Gabe." There was an edge to his voice and he leaned in, his tongue pressing on your clit while he began to finger you.

"He's licking my pussy," you whimpered. "And he's got a finger inside me."

"Two," Jack said as he put another in. You could hear it now, his fingers slick with your juices as he slid them in and out of you. "You taste so good." He pulled his fingers out and suddenly his tongue was wiggling inside of you, his fingers rubbing your clit.

You were panting now, sitting in Gabriel's lap, legs spread wide while Jack ate you out. You gripped his hair, grinding against his face. He laughed softly, the rumble vibrating against your skin. His fingers curled against your inner walls while his tongue swirled around your clit.

You were making little sounds in the back of your throat, hips jerking as you rode his fingers.

"That's it," Gabriel said. He lightly squeezed your breasts, rolling them in his hands. "Isn't he pretty on his knees?"

You nodded, breaths coming in short bursts.
"He's getting you ready for me," Gabriel purred in your ear. His hands rubbed your thighs, making you twitch.

"You enjoying yourself?" Jack grinned up at you smugly. "You want me to keep going?"

"Please, Jack." You almost didn't recognize your voice.

Jack sped up, his fingers hitting your sweet spot while he worked his tongue against you. The friction wound you up, his fingers thicker than your own and filling you. Your legs tensed and you squirmed as Jack pushed you closer to the edge.

"Come for us," Gabriel murmured. "I want to lick your cum off Jack's lips."

Jack pushed another finger inside and you arched, slapping both hands over your mouth as you the orgasm hit.

"We want to hear you," Gabriel said. "We're not in the barracks. You can be as loud as you want." You couldn't answer, but you moved your hands, soft cries escaping your throat as Jack fingered you through your spasms.

"She clamping down on me and she's tight, Gabe," Jack groaned. He sucked on your clit, while you thrashed, all of it overstimulation now that you'd just come.

"Jack, stop! It's too much!" You pressed your hands against his head, hips shaking.

Jack chuckled, pulling his fingers out. His eyes locked on yours and he sucked each one clean, his mouth smeared with your juices. "Just so you know, I like too much," he said. He stood and leaned over, kissing Gabriel over your shoulders.

You looked up, Gabriel's hands gripped Jack's hair as he licked Jack's lips.

They broke apart breathing heavily.

"You do taste good," Gabriel said, leaning over for a quick kiss. "And now you're all wet for me. You ready?"

You eyes flicked to Jack. "Are you OK with this?"

"And more," he said. "Go on Lucky. He's being so patient when all he wants is to have you ride his cock."

You shivered despite Gabriel's heat against your body.

"Let's get this dress off you. I'd hate to ruin it," Gabriel said, unzipping you. You got off his lap and slid the dress off. Jack took it from you and draped it over a table. Then he settled on the back of the sofa.

"Very pretty." Jack said as you turned around, still in your gloves, shoes, stockings, and underwear. Your panties were soaked and you peeled them off, tossing them aside.

"Oh hermosa," Gabriel sighed. He unzipped his fly and pulled a condom out of his jacket pocket. "Want to help me?"

You knelt on the couch, eyes widening as he freed his cock. You already had an idea of the dimensions, but seeing it in the flesh was another thing. He was long and uncircumcised, but it was the width that you couldn't look away from; you hadn't taken anything that thick before. You took him in your hand, the skin hot and velvety. You placed a kiss on the tip, before peeling back the foreskin and swirling your tongue around the head.

Gabriel groaned, his fingers twining in your hair. "I meant help putting the condom on, Lucky."

"So you want me to stop?"

"I'll have your mouth later. I want you riding me," he said roughly. He tore open the foil packet and rolled it on. "Come on."

You straddled his lap, lining the head up. Gabriel's hands gripped the cushions. His gaze stayed on your face, sweat beading on his upper lip.

"You teasing me?"

"No." Your voice was weak. Your thighs trembled as you inched down, taking it slow. "I'm adjusting. You're big." You slid down, breathing deeply as he filled you with a delicious ache. You lowered yourself to the hilt, putting your weight on your knees.

Gabriel groaned, head thrown back, arms spread across the couch. "How the hell are you still so tight?"

He stretched you almost too much. You leaned forward, burying your face in the crook of his neck. He was so warm, even through the suit.

"Can I move? Or do you need a moment?" His arms slid down your back and rested around your waist.

"Sorry, it's just been a really long time." There hadn't been anyone since Shin. He inhaled sharply. Apparently, he understood exactly what you meant. You felt his fingers trace your back, and you sighed softly, kissing the side of his jaw. "Sorry, I'm-"

"Stop apologizing."

You sat back, and nodded at him. Then you raised your hips, and dropped yourself onto him again, a soft whine escaping your throat. Gabriel's jaw clenched, but eyes stayed locked on your face.

"How's it feel, hermosa?"

"Really full." He rolled his hips upward, and you squeezed your eyes shut, riding him. "Gabriel," you pled, though you weren't sure what you were asking for.

"Look at you taking me. So pretty in my lap." He unhooked your bra and tossed it onto the ground. "You fit me so well." His beard grazed your cheek as he kissed your brow.

You wrapped your arms around his neck and starting grinding against him harder.

"That's a good girl," he soothed. "You're taking me straight to the hilt." He drove up into you, slow deep thrusts that filled you and then left you painfully empty when you raised your hips.

"Please-" Your hips jerked, and you clenched around him, whimpering as you rode his thrusts.

Gabriel sucked one of your nipples and then switched to the other, making your toes curl.
"You're so wet, baby. Going to mess up my pants." His strokes quickened and you did your best to move with it. His hands cupped your ass, taking control of the rhythm. "And I don't fucking care, just keep going."

You held on, moving your hips with his.

Gabriel rested his forehead against yours. His eyes were inky with emotion. You wanted to look away, but he held you there. The intensity made you shudder. "Don't. I want to see your face when you come for me. I want to hear it all." He reached down, one hand stroking your already sensitive clit.

"Damnit Gabriel!"

"Look how wet you are for me. You've been mine from the start, haven't you?" He nipped your neck, and you cried out. Of course, he was right. You'd been his since he'd carried you out of that freezing abyss. You clung to him, panting. "This is where you belong, Lucky."

"On the end of your dick?" You tried for flippant, but it only came out as breathless.

"If you like," he said, unperturbed by your deflection. "But I meant, right here with me." He kept rubbing small circles around your clit. You jerked backward, and you would have fallen, except for his arm around your waist. His hips snapped upward, faster and faster. You clutched his shoulders, thighs shaking as the tension built in your core.

"I can't-"

"You can," he said, fingers speeding up, practically vibrating against your clit. "That's it. Take it all, hermosa, hold it as long as you can, and just let it go," he ordered. It was the tone, when he spoke like that, you didn't argue, you couldn't.

"Gabriel," you moaned, as you came, head thrown back, body shaking. You squeezed your eyes shut, clenching around him. Gabriel sighed, your name on his lips as he followed you over the edge.

You clung to him, sweaty, warm, and filled with too much emotion. You kept your face in the crook of his neck, trying to recover some semblance of composure. He held you, whispering gently in Spanish. You took several shuddering breaths, blinking rapidly. It had all been too much. Too much feeling. Too much confusion. You weren't use to that. Even with Shin, you'd kept it light. No promises. No open heartfelt declarations. You suspect he played along only so he wouldn't spook you.

"Hey there." Jack crouched in front of you, bright eyes shining with excitement. "You OK, Lucky?"

You nodded weakly. A twinge of guilt shot through you; you'd forgotten he was there.

He leaned in and kissed your forehead. "That was beautiful." His fingers traced your jaw. You kissed them, an apology for ignoring him. Let's get you up."

You winced and climbed off Gabriel. Gabriel kissed your cheek and you curled up on the couch, eyes closed.

"Tired already?" Jack asked.

You shook your head.
"Too much?"

"Yeah," you said. "I...Yeah."

"But you did so well," Jack purred. "You looked so good riding him." Jack's compliments were light and playful. They weren't heavy and meaningful like the words Gabriel had spoken during sex. Gabriel hadn't said anything wrong. You just couldn't handle that much so quickly.

"Stop apologizing," Gabriel said, but there was no bite in his voice. He sat beside you, pants fastened, shirt unbuttoned. You were mostly naked, your garter belt still on, but your stockings were starting to fray. Even though he'd been gentle, you ached from Gabriel's cock.

"I think Jack's been neglected," you said, when you trusted yourself to form whole sentences. "I'm fine. I just...needed a moment."

They sat on either side of you, carefully not touching you.

"You sure?" Gabriel asked, his hand hovering over your cheek.

You kissed his palm. "Yeah, I'm good."

"Did I-?"

"Too much...feeling," you said after a moment. "I'm...rusty." You shrugged.

"So is rough sex a bad idea?" Jack asked.

"The opposite, I think." You gave a lopsided smile. "You need a moment with Gabriel?"

He leaned in and kissed your swollen lips. "No. What do you want to do? Do you want us both to take you at the same time?"

"I...I'll have to work up to that," you said, heat flaring between your legs.

"We've got lube and time," Jack chuckled. "You want to choke on Gabe's cock while I fuck you from behind?"

"Jesus Jack, you have a filthy mouth."

"Are you complaining?" Jack removed his jacket, and began to unbutton his shirt.

You rolled your eyes. "I don't know why I'm surprised."

"What about here?" Gabriel asked, his cock pressing against your ass.

"I uh...I haven't." Wait, how was he hard again so fast?

Gabriel growled. "You've never had a cock in your sweet little ass?"

"We were working up to it, but I never-"
"We can take of that for you," Jack said. "Though I think Gabriel wants to go first."

There was an open hunger in Gabriel's eyes as he stroked your face. "I would love to be the one to show you how good it can feel," he said voice low and strained. "If you'll let me. We'll work up to it together,"

"OK," you said, because it was all so overwhelming and when Gabriel looked at you like that, you wanted to do whatever he asked. "But Jack-"

"You can just say that you want me. I don't mind." Jack smirked at you, shedding his shirt and looking more like a cocky NCO than a military commander. You openly admired his broad muscled chest, scars and all. "Like what you see?"

"You know you're pretty, why the hell are you even asking?"

"He likes hearing you say it," Gabriel chuckled.

"Come on." Jack pulled you up, by the wrist and you went, legs still wobbly. "I have our stuff in the master bedroom." He paused. "Do you have safe words?"

"Do you have a nonverbal?" He asked.

"Tapping out. Jack...what are you planning?" He opened the door, and you rolled your eyes. The bedroom was huge, the bed big enough for another six people. The room was done in tasteful blues and creams, and it didn't surprise you that Jack picked this room.

"It just seemed wise to get that out of the way. We didn't want to spring it on you, right away. Obviously, you'd be more relaxed after a couple of orgasms and a round of vanilla sex." He kissed you again, his tongue flicking into your mouth. When he finally let you up for air, you had to blink away spots. "Get on the bed. Start on all fours."

"Should I be calling you "sir" too?" You asked dryly.

Jack gave you a dark smile. "Not tonight. But when that happens, you won't have to ask. You'll know."

Your pussy clenched at that. Jack had been almost submissive this far. It shouldn't surprise you that he could switch in and out of those roles just as quickly as he swapped public personas.

"Get on the bed, Lucky. I won't ask again."

You exhaled slowly. "Green," you muttered and climbed on the edge of the bed. You got on your hands and knees, turning your head to watch Jack open up a duffel bag. Gabriel crouched beside him.

You closed your eyes, not thinking about why you were more worried about Gabriel's declarations of affection than Jack's kinks. Because that would be fucked up. And while you weren't normal any more, you weren't fucked up, were you?

Jack climbed onto the bed beside you, naked. He wasn't as broad as Gabriel, but he was solid muscle. He did have pretty pink nipples, and his cock was long, circumcised, and not quite as thick as Gabriel's. He stroked it a few times, smirking at you through half-lidded eyes.
"Will throat-fucking you trigger any reactions?" He asked.

"I...don't know," you said. "I don't think so. I...can choke. Just don't squeeze my neck."

Jack nodded. "Open up."

You parted your lips, and he pushed in slowly. "That's it. Been thinking about you sucking me off for weeks." You forced yourself to relax. Each stroke went deeper, and soon you were gagging. He pulled out, patting your cheek. "Can you take that? Or is too much?"

Your eyes watered. "I can do it for a little while."

"Tap when it becomes too much," he said and began thrusting and you bobbed your head at the same slow rhythm, licking the underside of the shaft. "That's it." He moaned jerking his hips.

Something cold pressed against your ass and you stiffened.

"Relax," Gabriel said. "It'll be easier."

You shuddered and felt one of his thick fingers, coated in lube, prod open your anus.

Jack gripped your hair. "Look at me. That's it, baby."

You whined as Gabriel added another finger, your back passage burning.

Jack pulled out, his dick slick and hard. "How's it feel?"

"Stretched," you grunted.

"Not yet, but you will be," Jack grinned. He reached over and grabbed a condom off the night stand.

Gabriel's fingers pulled out and you relaxed.

"Spread your cheeks," Jack said. You had to reposition yourself, ass in the air, face against the mattress, as you spread yourself for Gabriel. More cool viscous gel dribbled into your hole. Then something firm, solid, and far thicker than a finger pushed inside you. You gasped, eyes wide as Gabriel pushed it past your tight ring of muscle. "That's it, stay open."

You held on, whimpering into the mattress. You knew what it was now. You'd done this much before. Gabriel had just put a plug inside you.

"Oh hermosa, you took it so well. But you're going to have more trouble with my cock."

He bit your thigh and you buried your face in the mattress. You felt Jack's hands on your wrists.

"Hold still." He placed a leather cuff on each wrist and when you wiggled them, you found you had about four inches of give. Your pussy clenched, sensitized by the toy in your ass.

"Roll over," Jack said.

You rolled onto your back, the plug shifting. It kept you stretched and you bit your lip, trying to keep your breathing steady.

"Color?"

"Green," you said automatically. You couldn't see the plug, but you felt it, the pressure growing more insistent the longer you lay there.

Your hands were trapped under your body.

Jack sighed, stroking your stomach. "You look so pretty like this. Maybe next time I'll put you in a collar and gag."

"Figures you'd be into that kind of thing," you muttered.

"And you're not?" Jack asked, his fingers slipping lower. "Because your cunt is soaked." He slid a finger in and you bit back a moan. The plug made everything feel extra snug. "Listen to that." He pumped his finger in and out of your slick hole, the obscene slurping echoing the bedroom. "Such a dirty little slut." He pulled his finger out and pressed it against your lips. "Lick it clean."

You swirled your tongue around his finger, tasting your tang. Jack was a bit of a shit, wasn't he? Your expression must have been a little too telling, because Gabriel laughed.

"I still haven't punished you for disobeying me in Paris," Jack said. He pushed your legs up, almost bending you in half. Then he smacked your ass with the flat of his hand. A flash of pain melted into pleasure as your pussy twitched, the plug shifting inside you.

"Damnit Jack," you panted.

"That's not an apology," Jack said and brought his hand down again at a different angle. You whined, the plug jolting inside you again from this strike. "You were my subordinate. I should have done this back then and then fucked you till you were begging for forgiveness." Your treacherous pussy was sopping wet now and you bit your lip. He gave you another measured slap in a different spot and your leg jerked.

Jack caught it, laughing. "Were you trying to kick me?"

"No," you panted. "But you would have deserved it."

"It's like you want me to punish you," Jack said, dropping your leg. He crawled on top of you. "What am I going to do with you, Lucky?"

"You talk too much."

Jack narrowed his eyes. "Keep digging."

You blew out a frustrated breath. "You want me to be sorry for saving you?"

Jack pushed his hair out his eyes. He studied your face. "No, I want you to be sorry for being stubborn."

You glared at him. "I did a good job and that's what matters."

"So are you telling me you deserve a reward?" Jack asked, rolling your nipples between his fingers.

"I-"

Jack smiled knowingly at you. "You'll get both then. Because even if you were a naughty girl, you did do a good job. And you looked cute while doing it." He parted your thighs, balancing your knees over his shoulders. You saw him working the condom on and then he placed his head against your entrance. You stiffened as he pushed in with one smooth thrust. The plug bobbed inside you and you gritted you teeth, gasping as Jack hit your cervix.

"That plug makes you even tighter. And-" he ground against you and you bucked your hips. "I've bottomed out." He gave another thrust and you whimpered. "Not so defiant now, are you?" Jack rolled his hips and you squeeazed your eyes shut, unable to muffle your cries. "Oh, you sound so needy." He pushed against you, his hips driving against your ass. The angle made it feel like he was pounding the plug deeper into you.

You thrashed underneath him, you breathing growing more and more ragged.

"You're making the cutest face," he leaned in gripping your chin and kissed you hard. "What's the matter, Lucky? Can't take it?"

"Fuck you, Jack," you hissed and clenched around his cock.

"That's precisely what I'm doing," he growled.

"You're such a bastard." The frustration of being tied up drove you to needle him. That, and he looked good angry, muscles tensing, blush spreading across his chest. His face was fierce, teeth bared like he was about to tear you apart.

He kept his hold on your chin. "Keep pushing baby, see where it gets you."

"Are you just going to play stupid power games or are you going to fuck me?"

Jack laughed darkly and shifted his angle of thrust. The world went white and you threw your head back barely containing a moan. "Good enough for you?"

"Not even close," you said, breathing hard.

Jack sunk his teeth into your shoulder. It was fire and shock at first, but the heat radiated outward, making you groan.

"I don't know what they taught you in boy scouts. All we're missing is a speech about unity and giving it your all. Add a vibrator and maybe I'll get off." You ran your mouth, adrenaline outpacing good sense.

"You think you can outlast me?" Each word was punctuated by a hard stroke. "I'm a super soldier. I can go for hours. Keep it up and I'll break you." His hand rested on your throat and you froze.

"Yellow," you said, eyes darting down to his hand.

He stroked your neck, and leaned in and kissed your throat very softly. "Stop pushing me," he said, voice dropping an octave. "You're making it hard for me to think straight. I'm too worked up and too dominant to keep playing nice. Dial it back or I'll have to go cool myself down."

"Oh," you said, recognizing his actual limit. "I'm sorry, sir."

Jack gave you a rueful look. "Was that so hard? No wait, don't answer that." He brushed his blonde hair out of his face and kissed the spot between your ear and neck. "Give me a reason not to punish you." It was almost a plea. You'd almost pushed him too far. The thought aroused you more than it should have. OK, you were fucked up.
"Please, sir. Between the plug and your cock, I'm on edge. Before tonight, I haven't had sex for over a year and now you're overwhelming me. I'm trying, sir, but it's almost too much."

Jack's face went blank. "So you haven't had sex since...before coming to Switzerland?"

"Yes, sir."
A slow smile spread across his face, like he just now realized you hadn't been fucking other guys. "I see. You want me to go easier on you, baby?"

"Yes sir," you whined as he gave a quick jerk of his hips. "Please sir."

"You beg so prettily," he sighed and leaned in to kiss you. You opened your mouth sucking on his bottom lip while slipped his tongue inside. He began to move his hips and you moaned into his mouth. Breaking the kiss, Jack began to drive harder into you.

"Fuck! That hurts, sir." You closed your eyes, each thrust hitting your cervix too hard. "Please-"

Jack shifted his hips and then he was hitting your g-spot and you shuddered "Better?"

"Yes sir, thank you sir," you exhaled softly, the tension starting to build again.

"Good girl," he groaned and snapped his hips forward.

You arched your back as he slammed into you. A strangled cry escaped your throat, and he didn't slow down. You rode it out, panting. You shouldn't have been this hot, bound and trapped against Jack's body at his questionable mercy, both your ass and pussy filled.

"You're going to feel so good between us," Jack groaned. "You think this is intense? Wait till Gabe starts plowing your ass. It's going to make that sweet little pussy even tighter than now. We're both going to fuck you senseless. I don't know if you're going to be able to handle that. All I know is I can't wait to find out."

You thrashed under him, and he smiled down at you placing two fingers on your clit. "Scream for me."

He rubbed your clit, his cock pounding against your sensitive walls. You wailed as he fucked you through the orgasm. His fingers still working you. You clenched, your pussy spasming around his thickness.

"Jack, please-" you sobbed as he kept stroking your abused nub. "I can't- too much."

"I told you, Lucky. I like too much," he chuckled and just kept going.

You lay boneless on the bed, your thighs soaked, your ass and pussy aching. The plug was still inside you. Jack untied you, gently massaging your stiff wrists. You stared at him blearily.

"Drink," Gabriel put a water bottle to your mouth and you took it, throat raw. He stroked your neck. "I'll get you an emitter. Didn't think you'd need one on the first night."

You sighed. "I can't move and I can't feel my legs."
Jack didn't look the least bit sorry. "You wanted to do things the hard way." He paused. "You didn't forget your safe word, did you?"

"Fuck you, Jack," you said, sleepily.

"I did and will do it again in a heartbeat," he said, sounding unbearably smug.

You closed your eyes. Gabriel pulled you against him. He was still hard.

"Sorry, I'm spent." The heat of his body felt good.

"I know," he said. "I just want to hold you."

"Oh."

Jack laid on is side next to you. "I can't think of anyone beside Gabriel who's pushed me that far so quickly." He stroked your cheek. "You did it so well though. It's like you were made to take me." He kissed your nose, delight written all over his face.

"I'm going to poison your tea," you told him.

"And someone obviously hasn't learned her lesson," Jack chuckled. He combed his fingers through your hair. "I'm so glad you came here tonight." He kissed your forehead, taking your gloved hands in his. He was so giddy. Damn SEP endurance. There was a high chance you wouldn't survive this. "Thank you." You shouldn't be surprised that he was so cuddly after fucking you senseless. You probably would have liked it more if you weren't so tired.

Gabriel spooned you. Jack nuzzled your neck.

"Go to sleep. We'll be right here when you wake up." Gabriel rubbed your back and you sighed, letting yourself drift off into a well-deserved rest.

The bed shifted and you awoke, eyes firmly shut. The sound patterns were wrong. Your surroundings didn't feel right either. You didn't jump. You heard the terribly familiar hum of a biotic emitter. You slowly opened one eye halfway, surveying the room around you.

Fancy hotel room. Massive bed. A naked Gabriel bending a just as naked Jack over the bed, fingers in his mouth, while he slowly ground his hips against him.

You took in the sight of them, Jack flushed a pretty pink color, Gabriel smirking while he fisted Jack's cock. Jack's hair was disheveled, wet with sweat. He panted, eyes half closed. You guessed Gabriel had been teasing him for awhile.

The thought made you wet. Your body ached, and you winced, realizing you still had the plug in.

Jack moaned quietly around Gabriel's fingers.

"You got to be quiet, Jack, or you'll wake her up," Gabriel said softly, releasing Jack's cock. "And then I'll have to punish you."
Jack squirmed, eyes squeezed shut as he tried to hold it in. You shifted a little to get a better view, pretending to twitch in your sleep.

Jack froze.

You went limp, sighing softly.

Gabriel chuckled and you had to stifle a groan as you watched him push inside Jack. Jack gripped the sheets, knuckles white, and he bit his lower lip, face screwed up in concentration. Gabriel's fingers gripped the back of Jack's neck and he leaned forward, kissing the younger man.

Your mouth was dry. Probably because all the moisture went elsewhere.

Gabriel very slowly rocked his hips. Jack sighed softly, eyes still squeezed shut.

"You can stop pretending, Lucky," Gabriel said.

Jack's eyes flew open and his gaze met yours. Excitement shone in his eyes.

You didn't need to ask how Gabriel knew. He'd seen you sleeping enough times in the office to have picked up the pattern. You propped yourself up with a pillow. "Well, I didn't want to interrupt."

Gabriel smiled, giving Jack long languid strokes. "We would have invited you, but you were worn out. Figured we'd give you a break." He paused. "And we weren't sure if you wanted to be awakened...playfully."

Jack moaned as Gabriel just kept up his slow pace.

"Depends what you had in mind," you said, because you now knew better than to give Jack carte blanche on anything.

"Nothing heavy," Gabriel said. "One of us sucking on your nipples or tongue-fucking your sweet pussy."

You swallowed. "I don't think that would be a problem."

"Good." Gabriel smiled lazily at you. "How you feeling?"

"A little sore."

"There's water on the headboard. Why don't you get a snack, get cleaned up, and come back here? Jack's not going anywhere any time soon." You were pretty sure Gabriel didn't actually want you to go do all those things just yet. But he'd said it to frustrate Jack.

"Damnit Gabe." Jack rested his head on the bed.

You took the water, sipping it. "Can I just watch?" You tried not to sound too eager.

Gabriel gripped Jack's hair and gave a hard deep thrust. "If you like," he said. He seemed pleased, using more force to keep Jack pinned to the bed. "Why don't you touch yourself?" His face was relaxed, but you could see the excitement in his eyes.

You looked down at your gloves.

"You can take them off," Gabriel said, his voice gentle. "They're nothing to be ashamed
He kissed the nape of Jack's neck, eyes on you. "Or you can leave them on. Whatever you're most comfortable with."

They were going to get ruined if you weren't careful this weekend. You peeled them off and set them on the headboard. You held your left fist in your right hand, feeling more naked than before.

You sat legs apart, knees bent, feet flat on the bed, Jack watching you with undisguised lust, Gabriel looking on with almost predatory satisfaction.

"Just stroke yourself," Gabriel said. "Go slow." He pulled back on Jack's hair, forcing him to watch as you started rubbing slow circles around your clit with your right hand. You placed your left on the bed for stability, slipping your metal fingers under the pillow.

Jack sighed, smiling up at you, his eyes hazy. "You're so beautiful spread open like that."

Gabriel matched your rhythm, speeding up when you did, Jack gasping as the strength behind his thrusts.

"Why don't you play with your tits too?" Gabriel asked, his voice breathy.

You sighed, knowing you'd have to expose your prostheses. You began to rub yourself with your left hand, metal fingers now visible. Your right hand went up to your breasts, rolling them. You exhaled slowly, noting that while bruises had formed on your thighs and hips, they were already starting to fade.

"So was it Jack that woke you?" Gabriel asked, eyes bright.

"It was too quiet," you said after a moment.

"Ah." Gabriel stopped moving. He slapped Jack's ass, pushing him toward you. Jack crawled across the bed, eyes on your face. You stopped moving, taking in the sight of all that hard muscle slinking cautiously toward you. He smiled up at you knowingly, roles shifted again. Slipping between your legs, he paused to kiss your scarred calf, shreds of stocking clinging to it. He kissed his way up, tongue flicking out, till his head was against your stomach.

Jack tugged on your left wrist and brought your hand up to his lips. He started at the tips of your metal fingers, tongue curling around the prostheses. He sucked, and for a moment you thought you could feel the heat of him pulsing along your missing nerves. Then he pulled them out and moved up, his lips stopping on what flesh was left of your fingers. He kissed each knuckle, cradling your maimed hand in his.

"Please don't hide," he said.

You rubbed your forehead with your right hand, too much emotion rising in your chest and choking out the air. He rose, pulling you tightly against him, tucking your head under his chin. "Do you need a moment?" he asked.

You let out a shuddering breath. "Just how many masks do you wear, Jack?"

"As many as I need," he said, brushing your hair out of your face.

The bed dipped as Gabriel sat beside you, his warm hands rubbing your back. "Too much?"
"I feel like I'm ruining the mood," you muttered.

"I owe you some aftercare," Jack said. "That's all."

"He worked you over pretty good," Gabriel said.

That they understood your predilection for balancing the scales, spoke volumes about how fucked up all of you were. Owing debts was a vulnerability you couldn't afford.

"I'm OK," you said after a moment. "I'd much rather go back to watching you two." You patted Jack's cheek with your metal fingers. He kissed them again.

"If that's what you want," Gabriel slid around you and grabbed Jack around the waist, kissing him with bruising force. Both men were hard, erections bobbing. Jack moaned into Gabriel's mouth.

You squeezed your legs together. The throbbing in your ass was getting more intense.

Gabriel pushed Jack onto all fours. Jack crawled forward, resting his head on your lap.

"Pass the lube," Gabriel said.

You found a tube on the headboard, and handed it him, watching as he spread Jack's cheeks, squeezing them, and then drizzled it inside. Gabriel poured some on his hands and worked it over his thick cock.

"It'll be so good when he does this for you," Jack said, rubbing his cheek on your thigh. "He fills you up so full and you don't know where you end he begins."

Your breath hitched.

Gabriel put the lube aside and looked you straight in the eye. Then he began to ease himself into Jack, his pupils wide, jaw clenched. "Spread your legs. Let him kiss your pussy."

Jack moaned against your lower lips, the vibrations making your pulse speed up.

"Damnit Gabe, every time, I feel so stuffed," Jack panted. He began to lap at your slit.

"You want to let her see me fuck you open?"

"Please," Jack sighed. He looked up at you. "It's so good, Lucky. Promise."

He wasn't trying to get you off; it was just sweet teasing. You liked watching his pink tongue flick against you. He licked in time with Gabriel's slow thrusts, pausing to let you both know how much he liked it.

You stroked his hair and he rubbed against you like a cat. Fucking Jack and his fucking psychological chameleon tendencies.

Gabriel rolled his hips and Jack let out a low keening sound. "Please Gabriel."

Gabriel leaned over and kissed you. "Should I edge him for you? Or do you want to see how pretty he is when he comes?"

"Please," Jack begged, breaths coming in short staccato bursts.
You had vague recollections of Jack finally losing control and pounding you while he came, but by then you were a little too dazed to appreciate it.

"I want to watch him. But you don't have to rush."

Jack groaned.

Gabriel smiled and pulled Jack upright, his hands gripping Jack's hips. They were both on their knees. Jack's cock was swollen and red.

"Do you want to help?" Gabriel asked.

You leaned forward, taking Jack in your hand. You licked the tip, watching as his eyes rolled back. You didn't deep throat it, especially since Gabriel was now pushing Jack hard, but you jerked and sucked, and watching Jack pant and moan, sweat dripping down his skin.

You sped up, moving in time with Gabriel's thrusts. Jack began to keen and Gabriel sunk his teeth into Jack's shoulder. You felt his cock twitch, and then he came, spurting thick salty fluid down your throat. There was more than you expected, but you swallowed, even as you heard Gabriel curse, his hips moving faster as he finished.

You released Jack's cock, giving the head a little kiss.

Jack dropped onto all fours, breathing heavy. It was Gabriel that leaned over, his fingers tangling in your hair while he forced his tongue in your mouth.

"She drank you down, Jack," Gabriel purred. He petted the back of Jack's neck. "How'd you like having him in the middle? Next time we can both fuck him."

You found you rather liked that idea.

Jack grinned up at you. He drew in a couple deep breaths, his face still flushed. "Now it's your turn."

Gabriel helped you remove the plug. It was such a relief to have it out. You winced as he poured more cool lube inside you. He used his fingers, stretching you again and you closed your eyes, forcing yourself to breathe slowly.

"I think you're ready," Gabriel said his voice thick with excitement. "Do you want to try?" He nipped your ear.

"How are we doing this?"

"Sit on my lap, facing away. I won't move. You can set the pace."

Gabriel sat on the edge of bed, legs spread. His thick cock pressed against your puckered hole and he spread your cheeks, prodding gently.
You began to lower yourself, inch by burning inch. You were pretty sure it wasn't going to work. Gabriel felt much bigger than the plug. Even with the lube, it burned and the stretch was almost too intense to be pleasurable. It got easier past the halfway point. He'd slicked you up well enough that you managed to sit on his lap, his cock all the way inside your ass.

He wrapped his arms around you, his hard chest pressed against your back. Gabriel ran insanely warm but it was comforting as you sat there, trying to adjust to his girth.

"You feel so good," Gabriel sighed, his beard brushing against the skin of your neck.

You closed your eyes, trying to focus on anything but how much Gabriel filled you. If he moved you weren't sure you'd be able to breathe.

"Jack." Gabriel said, and you opened your eyes to see Jack sinking down to his knees. He licked your slit and you felt Gabriel's cock twitch inside you. Your breathing grew shallow.

"Your pussy's soaking wet," Jack said, rubbing his face against your thigh. "Do you want me to get you off before I fill you up?"

"Please," you whispered.

"You OK?"

"It feels like he's splitting me in half."

A low rumble vibrated along your back. Gabriel kissed your shoulder. "Don't want me to move yet?"

"You're going to wreck me if you do."

Gabriel drew in a sharp breath. His thighs tensed and you stiffened. "If you keep talking like that, I might just do that."

Jack smiled and slid a finger inside your pussy. "Are we going to be able to get my cock inside you now? You just get tighter after you come. It makes me want to fuck you for hours." He stroked your clit gently. It didn't take very long for Jack to coax an orgasm out of you, intensified by the fact Gabriel's cock pulsed hot inside you.

"I'm going to stand up. Just hold still."

You shrieked as Gabriel rose, Jack moving with him. He lifted you with ease, your knees splayed over his elbows. The sensation of floating with Gabriel's cock inside you had you gasping.

Jack was already wearing a condom. He placed the head against your pussy lips and began to push. You squirmed against Gabriel's body, trapped between them. Gabriel held your legs up, giving Jack better access.

"Oh, baby, look at you," Jack groaned, resting his forehead against yours. "You're clenching so tightly around me. I can feel Gabe stretching you out. I can only imagine how it feels for you." He shivered. "Relax, I'm almost in."

The pressure verged on too much. But you clung to Jack, whining as he worked himself in to the hilt.
Gabriel groaned. "Damnit Jack." He nipped your neck. "I can feel you inside her."

"If it's Jack's fault, why are you biting me?" The words came out strangled.

"Can't reach Jack," Gabriel said, sounding amused. "Something's in the way."

"You're the worst." Laughing made you wiggle in an inconvenient way, but Gabriel didn't seem to mind at all. Panting you rested your head against Jack's collarbone, your holes so full of them.

"Jack, you start." Gabriel's voice was rough. He was getting impatient.

Jack began to shift, and you could feel every twitch and pulse of his cock as he dragged it out of you. Then he pushed back inside and you were too full to breathe. You dug your nails into his shoulders, and he hissed.

"Gotta be careful of your strength," Gabriel said in your ear. "Or we'll have to tie you up."

"Sorry," you gasped, kissing Jack's shoulder.

"It's OK," Jack said. "I bruised you up pretty good earlier." He rocked his hips and you tried to arch away, only there was nowhere to go. Gabriel had you firmly locked in place. Curled between them, you could only tense and try to control your breathing. You couldn't even silence your moans. There was no space to hide. You were open to them and it was too late to do anything about it.

Nerves taut, you reflexively pushed yourself back against Gabriel, only driving yourself deeper onto his cock. He groaned, burying his face in your hair.

"You're driving me crazy." He kissed the back of your neck. "Can't wait till you're ready for me to fuck you, hermosa. We'll take good care of you."

Jack continued with his slow shallow strokes, your thighs trembling against Gabriel's arms. You were gasping now, shaking with each thrust. Jack pushed all the way back inside and your head lolled back, pressed against Gabriel's shoulder. You were just getting used to it, when Gabriel rolled his hips and you jerked forward into Jack.

Jack caught you against him, his smile cocks sure. "I thought you were tough, Lucky. Is this all it takes to undo you? If we'd known that, we would have held you down and fucked you like this a long time ago."

Gabriel began to thrust at a slow rhythm, and you bit Jack's shoulder, unable to voice an appropriately cutting comeback.

"Damnit, Jack," you clung to him with your right arm. You kept your left at your side, fingers splayed with painful tension. You didn't trust your control.

The pressure didn't ease, but you were getting used to it. Through the friction and the fullness you could swear you felt your blood pulsing in time with theirs. Jack had been right, you were losing sense of where you ended and they began. It was just one all-consuming feedback loop. You cursed, sweat trickling down your face. Gabriel burned hot at your back, and his cock filling you, each stroke feeling like you were at your limit. Jack with his filthy mouth kept teasing you, while he kept the rhythm: Jack. Gabriel. Jack. Gabriel. You were never empty and the pressure kept climbing, each of them pushing you higher and higher.

There was no talking now, just the sound of them slipping in and out of you, their strained gasps and heavy breathing. Your breaths came in short hiccups, almost like sobs. Jack kissed your neck and then his fingers moved down to circle your clit. They moved faster and it didn't matter if you could take it or not, you were drawn too tightly between them, the pressure winding tighter and tighter till it hit the breaking point and you shattered. The shockwaves rippled outward, dragging Gabriel and Jack deeper inside you.

Your face twisted with desperation, eyes fluttering, jaw taut and aching. You let out a strangled wail. Your voice broke in your throat and Jack held you to his chest, Gabriel pressed tightly against your back. You felt Jack come first, deep inside you while he moaned into Gabriel's mouth. Gabriel's hips stuttered, short hard thrusts that had you sinking your teeth into Jack's shoulder, but you felt him come too, his fingers digging into your thighs, his cock buried inside you.

You dangled there, unsure if you were breathing or just thinking about it. Jack lifted you off Gabriel and laid you on the bed. When you'd opened your eyes, Gabriel was kissing your stomach and Jack curved around your side, not touching you.

"You OK?" Jack asked.

You nodded, because you weren't sure you could form words.

"That was exquisite." Gabriel kissed you. "Thank you, corazon."

"Intense," you agreed, your voice raspy.

"You need another nap?" Jack laughed.

"Some of us aren't nymphomaniac super soldiers," you muttered, already drifting.

You heard Gabriel laugh and felt his warmth encompass you.

For all their talk, when you woke up, they were both out. Gabriel had thrown an arm around your waist and Jack was snuggled up against his back. You winced, noting that they'd left the biotic emitter running for you. You very carefully slid out from under Gabriel's arm and stumbled to your feet.

Jack snored lightly. It was actually kind of endearing. The lines between Gabriel's brow softened. They both looked younger when asleep, their worries temporarily forgotten. Quietly, because you'd been paying attention when Genji gave stealth lessons, you crept out of the room. The master bedroom had an adjoining bathroom, but running the water would probably wake them up.

You made it to the guest bathroom, limping. It was a good thing they were asleep. You did not need to hear about it from Jack.

You grabbed a towel from the basket walked into the marble shower. Frosted glass panels set the boundaries and there were four adjustable heads and plenty of space. It was really too big for one person, but you turned on the water, reached for the soap, and then sat down.

Closing your eyes, you leaned against the wall, legs splayed. You began cleaning yourself up and taking an account of the damage. There were bruises all on your arms, thighs, and hips. You had bite marks and hickeys all over. You were sore, but less than you expected. The hot water felt good, and you refused to feel guilty right then. The dull ache between your thighs wasn't too bad and you touched yourself to check for damage. If there'd been blood or tearing the emitter had healed you up. You didn't think so, they had both been very careful with you.

You weren't going to think about "what it all meant." You just needed to scrub the sweat off.

One of the panels shifted and your head snapped up.

Gabriel stood nude in the entryway, his face neutral as he took in the sight of you, curled up on the shower floor. Your eyes traveled up his legs, the man had amazing thighs, his cock was flaccid, and his muscled torso was lightly furred with dark curls. You admired his abs and then the planes of his chest, he had great shoulders and- His face was still very handsome, even when he was frowning.

"This is a lot less pathetic than it looks," you said. "It's more comfortable than standing right now. That's all."

He didn't move.

You held up the shower gel and washcloth. "I was so sticky and gross, I needed to get cleaned up."

Gabriel relaxed slightly and walked in, shutting the door behind him. He crouched down in front of you and kissed you hard.

"Hey," you said, when he released you.

"Wondered where you went," he said gruffly.

"Thought I snuck out?"

He combed his fingers through your wet hair. "It crossed my mind."

"I'm too tired to panic. It'll come, don't worry," you assured him.

Gabriel chuckled. "Then I guess I'll just have to keep fucking you till you're too exhausted to run." His cock twitched and you sighed.

"Are you guys always like this? Is this an SEP thing?"

"Some of it," Gabriel said. "The stamina comes from SEP, sure. But it's mostly that we have a free weekend and a pretty lady to impress."

"Who? I'll cut her," you said with a grin.

Gabriel didn't answer, he just traced his fingers along your legs. Your scarred leg would probably always look patchwork, unless you could afford the gene-modded custom-grown grafts. Honestly, your leg didn't bother you. You'd earned those scars and it was functional. Your fingers... you were still adapting. The prostheses were useful and you maintained them religiously. But you didn't like the look of them on your hands. The sight of metal on flesh was too jarring. You did not want to be a cyborg in the making. They still didn't feel quite right either. They would probably never feel like your fingers, just tools attached to your hand. You didn't complain though. They were good prostheses and it seemed minor compared to Genji's condition.

"Does it hurt?" Gabriel asked, still staring at your leg. You'd kept it covered, if only so people wouldn't ask uncomfortable questions. There'd never been an occasion to show it to Gabriel after the bandages came off.

"No." You kissed his cheek. "You want me to wash your back?"

Gabriel laughed softly at that. "From the floor?"

"Maybe," you said.

"Maybe after I've fucked you against the wall," he said. "I like the acoustics in here. It'd be hot."

Your eyes widened. "Seriously?"

"I won't if you don't want me to," he said. "I'll warn you, I'm feeling a little rough, Lucky. I was holding back earlier, because Jack couldn't."

"I noticed," you said, shaking your head. You leaned back against the wall, legs flat on the ground. "The floor is really uncomfortable. I doubt the wall will be better."

Gabriel tilted his head back, eyes closed. Rivulets ran down his chest, and you admired the tone of his body. He was totally doing this on purpose. You flicked soap onto him.

"Really?" He opened one eye.

"Rinse off with me, and let's go somewhere less dangerous." You could just imagine slipping, falling, and having to get medical treatment while horny. Explaining how it happened while horny and frustrated would be the best part.

Gabriel pulled you to your feet and took the washcloth out of your hand. He spun you around and began scrubbing your back.

"I really want to use the hot tub at some point," you said. "For relaxing, not sex," you clarified, and Gabriel pressed against you, already hard again.

"We can do both," Gabriel said and began to clean himself off. "How do you want it, Lucky? You're going to get rug burn if I fuck you on the floor. Maybe bent over the couch? Laid out on the table?"

"What do you have against beds?" You took the washcloth out of his hands and lathered it up. You made a twirly motion with your fingers and he turned around obligingly.

"You're one to talk. I just like the idea of having you in every room of this place at least once. Preferably twice," he said as you scrubbed his back, your fingers tracing the scars along his back. You recognized burns, bullet wounds, and several slash marks. Some of them you'd have to guess at. You kissed the area between his shoulder blades and then squeezed his ass. It was so round and firm, you couldn't resist.
"Keep that up, and I'll have you against the wall now."

You laughed turned the water off. "All right, all right." You began to dry off, but Gabriel grabbed your wrist and pulled you out of the bathroom. He practically threw you onto the couch. You landed on your back, towel still in hand.

"You'll want to get rid of that," he growled.

You draped it over your front. "But I'm getting cold," you said grinning up at him.

He stalked over to you and tore the towel away. You were about to laugh, when he dropped to his knees and slid his tongue along your slit.

"Gabriel!" You hissed.

"Be quiet or you'll wake, Jack. And then we'll both fuck you stupid," Gabriel growled. Then he buried his face in your pussy, his beard scratching the sensitive skin while his tongue pressed against your clit.

You sighed softly as his hands gripped your thighs, holding them apart. You slid your fingers through his wet hair, tugging lightly.

He groaned, sliding two fingers inside you. "You're always so wet for me."

"You did just drag me out of the shower."

"So you like being manhandled?"

"I think it's more the who than the what." You stroked his face and he paused to kiss your palm. Gabriel sucked on your clit, twisting his fingers inside you. You splayed out on the couch and sighed as Gabriel pulled his fingers out. He sucked them clean and stood over you.

"Turn over." You obeyed, putting your weight on your knees and resting your arms on the top of the couch cushions, ass in the air. You heard Gabriel walk away and turned your head to see him grabbing a condom off the table.

"It's uh...safe. You don't have-"

Gabriel held his hand up. "Don't tempt me, Lucky." He paused. "That's a discussion we'll have after we talk about things."

You shifted uneasily.

Gabriel narrowed his eyes. "You trust me?"

"Yeah." You rubbed the back of your neck. "I uh...yeah."

"Jack and I are both clean, if that's what you're concerned about."

"No." It was the reminder of other things that had you squirrely.

Gabriel moved, and suddenly you were pinned against the couch, his cock pressed against your thigh. "I can see you thinking too much, Lucky. Going to change that." His mouth slid down your neck and your heart sped up.

You felt him press his head against your pussy lips and then he pushed in hard. You fell forward against the top of the couch, gripping the back with both hands. He filled you too quickly and you let out a choked moan. You didn't have time to brace yourself because he was already rapidly pounding you into the cushions. His girth almost too much.

"Gabriel!" You clawed at the couch.

"Scream my name all you want," he growled. "But I'm not going to stop unless you're using your safe word."

You moaned as Jack tilted your chin up, your body limp, Gabriel still pinning you against the couch.

"You really have Gabe worked up." Jack kissed you hungrily. "You remember your safe word?"

You nodded, throat raw from begging. Gabriel had slowed down, his hips moving at a leisurely pace. It still felt like his cock was hollowing you out.

"You're taking him so well," Jack said. "Think you can fit one more?"

You sank into the hot tub, sighing as the hot water soothed your aches. Jack climbed in beside you, draping one arm around your shoulder.

"You can go to sleep if you like. I won't let you drown."

"Mmm," you sighed. "Hungry."

"Of course you are," Jack said. "I'll order room service. What do you want?"

"Cake," you said.

"Of course you do," Gabriel said. "Make sure you get her some real food."

"Steak," you agreed.

"She's won't be up long enough to eat," Jack flicked your ear.

"Awake," you said, sliding neck deep into the water.

Gabriel leaned over to kiss you, and you laughed and pushed him away.

"Ache."

"Is there a reason you're rhyming?" Gabriel sighed.

"Take a break," you hummed and waited for Jack to order food.
"Good job, Gabe." Jack patted your head. "Looks like you really did fuck her senseless."

"Mistake," you said, and dunked him under the water.

Chapter End Notes

Uhh...yes. That happened. Sorry about the lack of plot. I think?
True to his word, Gabriel didn't give you time to think. The entire weekend was sex, sleeping, more sex, and food. And Jack? Jack surprised you. There was a level of comfort to touching Gabriel. You assumed because he'd carried you out of the snow. Jack loved touch even outside sexual contact. If he wasn't playing with Gabriel's hair, he was rubbing your shoulders. He'd rest his head on your legs and try to get you to massage his scalp. He really liked it when you washed his back. It was all terribly endearing.

You left first, because it wouldn't do for all three of you to be seen exiting the hotel together. Jack had loaned you some sweats, though the pants were ridiculously big on you. You caught a taxi back, brain still hazy from the weekend. Your formal wear was in a bag, gloves included. The sleeve of the hoodie was long enough to cover your fingers.

Jesse was waiting for you when you got back to your room.

"You good?"

"Got a lot to think about," you admitted, tossing your bag onto the desk. "It was...good. Really good. But I don't know if it's sustainable."

Jesse nodded. "Ain't no shame in being happy for the now."

You found another pair of leather gloves and pulled them on. You'd wash Jack's clothes before you returned them. The thought of seeing him again made your mouth dry.

"How about you? How'd it go?"

Jesse gave you a shy smile. "A gentleman doesn't tell."

"You're not a gentleman, Jesse."

He just shrugged. "Still not telling."

You checked your terminal, and then rubbed your eyes. You were only gone two days, and someone sent Ziv on a mission? He shouldn't be leaving HQ. You checked the orders. He'd requested to go? What the hell was going on?

"Genji, why's Ziv in fucking Shanghai?"

"Lacroix needed a specialist for the mission. Ziv and Winston were the only ones cleared for for Shit Spiders. Winston was needed here this weekend." Genji didn't sound worried, but then he never did. "He has completed basic training, served in the IDF, and it is not supposed to be a combat mission."

You checked the briefing. Lacroix had been tracking a Talon asset known only as Bái Shé or White Snake. S/he was a hacker and an assassin. The brief credited her with sixteen known military data breaches, countless corporate ones, and at least two murders. Lacroix was attending a trade fair in Shanghai under the guise of being the CFO of a Parisian startup. Ziv was his R&D guy, there to pitch the usefulness of a new quantum method of solar energy storage. You skimmed that part. It was entirely above your education.

The real reason they were there was because Lucheng Interstellar was having a big reveal, something about revolutionizing communications networks. Again, you skimmed the tech and found the summary: new type of quantum satellite relay encryption. The analysts were convinced Bái Shé would be there, though no one could pinpoint exactly why.

That sat wrong. You weren't sure Winston's relationship with Lucheng, just like you weren't exactly sure why Genji worked most of the Shimada missions, but you knew there was a connection. Why send Ziv? Shanghai was a hard city to operate in; Overwatch had minimal authority and little support. Sure it was routine visit, but you'd vetoed missions with better planning that this. After all this, you trusted Lacroix, but Ziv was the linchpin in your cybersecurity. More importantly, he was Rivka's grandson and your responsibility. You'd brought him into Blackwatch. And Lacroix had a big fat target sign painted on his back. It didn't matter if he was undercover, Talon had massive bounties on him. Ziv could easily become collateral damage.

You looked into the Bái Shé dossier. It'd be too easy if s/he was Anh Nguyen. But Nguyen was in New York for some UN summit. Bái Shé cropped up on the radar six months ago and had been wreaking havoc since then. Ziv reported that s/he'd had been piggybacking off the UN sat-coms to try and breach the Overwatch network. That kind of power, tech, or access couldn't be ignored.

It made sense for Ziv to help Lacroix on this.

And yet, you couldn't shake the feeling that something wasn't right. East Asia wasn't friendly Overwatch territory. And Lacroix hadn't taken a full team, probably because of the ball. Plus the op was weak at best. You took the file down to Captain Amari's office.

When you knocked, Jesse opened the door. He raised a brow and stepped back. "Everything OK?"

You laid the files on the desk. "Have you seen this?"

Captain Amari picked them up and frowned, brushing crumbs off her desk.

"Why take Ziv out for field work on such a flimsy rationale?"

"Did you have a good weekend?" She asked, sipping her tea.

"...It was great." You looked at the floor. "Still processing, ma'am. But Ziv-"

Captain Amari studied the brief. "Gérard is usually very careful." She frowned. "He has been overworked lately. The attempt on Amélie's life has him stretched too thin. I was hoping they would be at the ball this year. She's a ballerina and they are a pleasure to watch."

You swallowed. "Requesting permission to go back them up. I don't like it, ma'am."

"Have you settled things with Jack and Gabe?" She asked.

"I...no. But I'm not trying to avoid a confrontation, ma'am. My gut says this is off."

You
swallowed, momentarily wondering if your subconscious had panicked you and Ziv and Lacroix were fine. No, Lacroix was usually more careful than this.

    Captain Amari nodded. "All right. You can go to Shanghai. Take backup. I don't like that it's just the two of them either. Jesse, do you want to take this one?"

    "If it's a hacker, maybe you shouldn't take Genji," Jesse said. "And you might want to watch your fingers."

    You looked down at your gloved hands. "I'll keep that in mind."

---

Torby gave you a customized sap glove, discrete slits in the fingertips, omnium reinforced knuckles, and most importantly, omnium plates in the palm, cushioned with pads of crash gel - the stuff they padded atmospheric reentry transports with. He glared at you the entire time, even though you'd already sent his wife your chili recipe.

    You curled a fist, the material still a little stiff. This was for combat, or intense emotional situations. You had the feeling you'd need it soon either way.

    "Thank you," you told him.

    "Angela's putting the finishing touches on the next prototype attachment," he said. He smirked at you. "We took all your feedback into account. We're looking forward to your next analysis."

---

Winston apprised you of the situation on the shuttle ride over. You thought about going in with a cover identity - fly from Seoul to Pudong International, dodge the Ministry of State Security, check into the hotel as a member of another startup. But Winston's report changed all that. Lacroix and Ziv were an hour overdue on check in. They'd never made it to the conference today. They hadn't returned to the hotel.

    And a safehouse on the Huangpu River was burning.

    Damn, you should've brought a full team, but no time for that now. You and Jesse were going in blind, starting in Pudong, on the eastern side of the river, where Talon had torched the house. No bodies had been recovered, and the fire response teams had been quick - that area had too high a population concentration to let buildings burn.

    No police had been dispatched; this told you that Talon had people on payroll in the local government and most certainly in the police department. No surprise, graft was a must when operating in Shanghai. You'd written an entire how-to manual on greasing palms to get shit done here.

    While Winston weeded through civilian comm-traffic, trying to find reports of gunshots, you and Jesse suited up. Your new chestpiece had a wide omnium-reinforced standing collar that covered half your face. Someone had taken your neckshot comments to heart.

"This ain't gonna be a stealth mission, Lucky."

"I've bailed Lacroix out before." For such a polite guy, he sure had a way of making enemies.

"We had more backup then." Jesse lit his cigar. "If it's hot, I'm going to take point. You're going to cover me." You were a good shot, but you tended to avoid prolonged firefights.

"And if we can avoid being seen, I'm better at quiet kills."

Jesse nodded. "Fair."

Jesse was the better combat strategist. You might plan ops, but Jesse worked them regularly. Ranked or not, you would follow him. And he didn't say a thing about who you were sleeping with and if that affected his decisions. For that, you were grateful.

"Take this." Jesse handed you a grappling hook. You strapped it onto your belt. "You got grenades?"

"Frag and flashbang." EMPs would not be good for your fingers.

Jesse nodded. "I know you don't like fair fights, so it looks like we're getting into a real unfair one."

You shook your head. "Extraction plan?"

"Ship'll wait, cloaked. We'll need to get somewhere high."

You didn't like that, if only because you didn't know what kind of condition Ziv and Lacroix were in. But it wasn't like you had a choice. And you had to move fast. The Chinese government would not tolerate an undeclared foreign ship hovering over one of their major metropolitan areas.

There was no landing. The sun was setting when you and Jesse rappelled down, dropping onto a rooftop.

"Wukong: This is callsign Gunslinger. Vampire and I have landed. Commencing Operation: Shanghai Noon. Objective: retrieving operatives Cross and Light."

You stared at Jesse, resolving never to let him name anything ever again. Sure, Shit Spiders was a stupid name, but you technically didn't pick it. And you were high as fuck. What was his excuse?

"Coming in clear," Winston said. "Picking up a crude radio wave SOS around the new Lucheng branch office. It's still under construction, and empty but."

You were only a few miles from the safehouse.

"We have a visual." You had no trouble seeing the half-finished Lucheng logo, on the skyscraper, its sides covered with bamboo scaffolding. "Fastest egress?"

"Grappling hooks."

You'd done the training. You'd passed too. But there was a difference between using the Zurich obstacle course and playing Spiderman in Shanghai. Jesse went first, shooting the hydraulic hook into the molding of the next building over. He tugged testing the strength of the hold, secured the line around his harness, and was off.

The hook just took you about seven yards, not too far, not too fast, but if you fell... It was a long way down.

It took you three tries to get a good placement, and you came in too hard, hitting your knee on the side of the building. But you didn't fall to your death, and you certainly didn't look down. Jesse snickered and helped you angle the next shot. By the fourth time, you were getting the hang of not crashing.

You both crouched on the edge of the building next to the Lucheng construction site.

"There." Jesse pointed at a flash of light. "Wukong: Spotted shooters. Anything you can tell us about the situation?"

"Cameras showed about two dozen armored operatives entering the building from multiple spots along the base, in squads of four. White masks. Urban warfare gear. They've been in there for twenty minutes. No one has exited."

You blew out a breath. "Wukong: Any word from our people?"

"Negative, but the signal is still live."

They really wanted Lacroix. You had to respect him for that.

"Don't take any stupid risks." Jesse didn't look at you as he lined up his shot. You were going in from the top, and it would be wise to use the scaffolding for ambushes. "We grab them. We retreat. Understood?"

"Of course. We're not heroes, we're Blackwatch." You stood, aiming for the scaffolding. Your hook landed properly, locked, and you let it drag you into the night.

You landed on the scaffolding, and Jesse perched on the I-beam above you. The bamboo looked rickety, but it held well. The crossbar framework was suited for climbing, even if it did look like it would drop you to your death or snap under a good wind.

"You're boosting the signal," Winston crackled in your ear. "Fifty meter radius."

"Cross and Light, are you on this channel?" Jesse asked. "This is Gunslinger."

There was a faint crackle.

"Change frequencies."

"Cross and Light, repeat. This is Gunslinger."

This floor was clear. Nothing but beams. You dropped a level. It looked like Talon hadn't made it this far yet. The wind was cold and loud. The slight swaying of the building was disconcerting.

You went down two more, the next one had concrete supports. You'd have to sweep more carefully.

"Slow down, Vampire."
Heavy boots stomped around the dust, and you flattened yourself against the beam. There were two, which meant there were two more you hadn’t seen.

"Hostiles," you whispered into your earpiece.

"Maintain cover," Jesse ordered.

You crouched there.

"No sign of them."

"Target was wounded. He can't have made it far. Check out there."

You dropped a level, but now you had to be more careful. The next floor had two more, possibly the other half of the squad overhead.

"How hard can it be to find a man in an empty building?"

You wondered if Lacroix was using the scaffolding to get around. There’d be guards at the bottom, but he could handle a few of those. You frowned, waiting for one of the Talon mercenaries to stop searching, but they continued their sweep.

"Status Vampire?"

"Passed four on my way down. No sign of Cross and Light."

Where would you hide? Besides where you were right now. You kept an eye out for tarps and substructures. The next floor was empty.

A scream sounded from overhead.

"I'm jamming them, get the other two if you can, Vampire."

You used the hook, taking two levels up in one shot. You unhooked your carbine from your back and climbed into the building.

"Hostiles encountered! Repeat-" One crouched, by the staircase, his back to you. The carbine would be too loud. You drew your tanto and put it through his throat. You set him down gently and picked up his earpiece. There was nothing but static. You looked around for the second one.

"I have one," you said.

"Just got the third," Jesse said. "Keep moving."

You studied the gear. The armor was reinforced in the chest. Joints and neck were exposed. The mask had the usual comm augment and armoring.

You tucked the earpiece in your collar. "Don't think they heard us." You climbed back out onto the scaffolding, because even if the winds were scary, they'd have more trouble ambushing you out here.

"Vampire: The signal's strengthened. You're closest."

"Understood Wukong." You climbed in the next level, listening for boots. You swept the floor, finding nothing.
The next floor was a little different. There were bricks lined up against one of the concrete substructures. You padded over, the shadows starting to make visuals difficult.

You crouched beside the pile. Streaks of rust stuck out from underneath.

"Ziv, Lacroix. You in there?" You lifted a brick. Just another brick behind it. Then you lifted that one. "It's me."

The next brick moved on its own.

"Ben-zona, Lucky. What the hell took you so long?" Ziv snapped, his hair frizzy and brick dust smudging his cheeks. "Thought we were going the way of Fortunato."

"Was that a luck joke?" You shook your head.

"Why don't you try reading books instead of burning them?"

"Why don't you shut up and help me tear down this wall." You paused. Your relief was short-lived. "Lacroix?"

"He's out. I managed to stop the bleeding, but- I'm not a doctor."

"According to your grandmother, you should've been," you told him, helping to disassemble the shelter.

"Yes, I should've. That way I wouldn't be hiding under bricks, trying not to get executed by terrorists. Can we talk about my poor life choices later?"

"Gunslinger: Light and Cross acquired. Cross is down. Need assist."

Ziv wrinkled his nose at you. "Seriously?"

"I did not come up with the names." You crouched over Lacroix. He was very pale, but breathing. Ziv had torn up his shirt, binding his left arm and right thigh.

"Can you lift him?"

"I got him this far," Ziv groused. "Fucking Frenchy wanted me to leave him behind. Like I'm giving him to Talon. Does he know how Blackwatch operates? We're petty as fuck. I'd throw him out the window first. Collect the bounty myself."

You grinned, even as you heard boots hitting the metal a floor below you. Shit.

"Gunslinger, we have incoming. Cross is immobile. Need evac."

Jesse dropped from the scaffolding, and rolled in.

"I can't carry him," you said, unhooking a grenade. You guys go, I'll catch up."

Jesse gave you a hard look. " Ain't never seen someone so scared of talking about feelings."

"Ain't scared," you scowled and stalked to the stairwell. You hurled the grenade as the first one turned the corner, bouncing it off the wall, It sailed into their midst.

You drew your carbine. The building seemed to shake as the explosive went off. Jesse shook his head and lifted Lacroix in a fireman's carry. Ziv limped behind him, his ankle swollen.
You raised your gun, rounding the corner and finishing the one who wasn't quite dead.

You brought up the rear, staying at the stairs, waiting for the next batch. The stolen comm crackled to life.

"Hostiles on higher floors. Teams Zed, November, and Violin, converge. Calling reinforcements. Do not let the target slip the net."

"Got three teams incoming."

You followed your people up, till you were on the unfinished uppermost beams. Your transport wouldn't be able to land. Someone was going to have to climb up first, and that someone was Jesse. Jesse set Lacroix down, even as the ropes dropped.

"I can't climb that," Ziv said.

Jesse slipped off his harness and tossed it Ziv. "Get this on him. I'll get up there and reel him in. Pilot might be able to help me."

You covered the stairs, listening as Teams Zed and Violin grew closer.

"You got a sidearm, Ziv?" You asked.

"Lacroix's."

"Try not to shoot me."

"Try not to get in my way."

"Incoming." You rolled your grenade down the stairs, knowing that they were probably expecting it. The flashbang was first, just to soften them up. You waited for the swearing to start, rounded the corner, and tossed the frag grenade. You plugged your ears.

"Get moving, Vampire!"

You didn't stick around to watch. You headed up the stairs. Ziv shook his head at you. You took off your harness and gave it to him. "Secure yourself."

"Lucky-"

The panic in his voice had you turning, gun raised.

A woman in cracked white armor staggered up the still smoldering stairs, raising her pistol at Ziv. You snarled, spun, and threw him behind you. Her bullets slamming into your back, striking your armor. Your entire upper left quadrant went numb, then began to burn. You hissed and returned fire.

She raised her left arm, it was fully metal.

Fucking cyborgs. You'd have to do this the right way.

She tossed her gun aside and rushed you, electricity crackling along her metal arm. She was too close and threw your left hand out to intercept.

Your prostheses went haywire. Blades clanged against her metal wrist. Your augments felt like they were on fire. You couldn't control your fingers, but you could keep your arm up and use your hand to block her.

    Behind you Ziv began to shoot.

    Her mask shattered and you kicked her back, all feeling in your left arm lost.

    "Get up there!" You shouted at Ziv, before turning to the cyborg. You kicked her to the ground, boots driving into her shoulder. You drew your tanto, ready to finish the job, and froze.

    Her hair was too short, circuits running along the left side of her face, barely covering the burn marks. Even behind the scarring, you knew that slim build and golden skin. You knew that broken face from a lifetime ago.

    "Lao?"

    She stared at you without recognition, eyes empty.

    The other team would be here soon and you were all out of useful grenades. Your left arm twitched uncontrollably, smelling like fried electrics and burnt meat.

    You couldn't carry her. You couldn't secure her safely, so you couldn't bring her with you. And right then, you knew you weren't going to stab her through the throat.

    "Lao. Lao Yue, it's me. It's Lucky."

    She just blinked rapidly, her mouth working, but no words coming out.

    "If you're in there, I'll be back for you, and we'll sort this out. You hear me? I'll find you." You touched your knife to her forehead, sheathed it, and grabbed the ropes with your right hand. Ziv was already onboard and he helped Jesse haul you up.

    You watched her grow smaller and smaller as you ascended. She didn't move from the ground, and you lost track of her as you climbed back into the transport.

    "What the hell was that?" Ziv shouted as soon as Jesse shut the bay doors. He got behind you, checking your back.

    "I'm wearing armor, you idiot," you growled at him. "And you're not allowed out on missions ever again. Your grandma would pickle my head if anything happened to you."

    "I'm a full agent!" He shouted. "My grandmother is dead, Lucky. You don't need to end up like her!"

    You grabbed him by the collar with your good arm. "If I can't keep my people alive, what's the goddamn point, Mihret?!" Desperation bled into your rage. Your skin was too tight, and you'd left Lao behind. Again. You hadn't even suspected you should be looking for her all this time.

    "Ease up, Lucky. You're bleeding all over the floor." Jesse pushed your hand off Ziv's collar.

    You looked at your left arm. Blood flowed down your elbow. One of Lao's bullets had hit you. That didn't worry you so much as the pain in your finger stubs. You rubbed your face, smearing soot and sweat.

    "Let me help you get cleaned up. Can't have you going back to HQ looking like that." Jesse sighed. He helped you with the armor straps. "Those are gonna leave a mark," he said.
"Don't let Gabriel see that," you said.

"Don't put me in the middle of it," he snapped.

"Sorry. I meant- not asking you to cover. Just if Jack's there, give it to him instead," you said, sitting down. "He'll handle it."

Jesse nodded then. "Let's get this arm bandaged. Looks like it went straight through the flesh. That's good- what's wrong with your left hand?" He put pressure on your arm.

Your blades were out. "She hit me with something electric."

"Guess it's better that we didn't have Genji." Ziv handed Jesse a bandage. He cleaned up the wound on your bicep, sealed it with medical gel, and wrapped it. "Drugs?"

"No," you said. "Got to fix this." You peeled off your sap glove, blood and bits of skin coming with it. That electric shock had been powerful enough to burn. It melted some of your augment circuits. You began prying them off, hoping there was no nerve damage. You had more in your kit bag and you put them on, then reattached your prostheses.

Your blades retracted and you could move each one just fine. Whatever Lao had used had only fried the electronics and left you with second degree burns.

Ziv set up an emitter, watching you silently.

"Lacroix?" You asked.

"Stable. Can't do anything for him here. We could try stopping at another field hospital, but we don't have the security to protect him. He'll make it to Zurich." Jesse lit another cigar. "You get that last one?"

He had eyes like a fucking hawk. He knew you spared her.

"Fucking hell, Jesse. That last cyborg was Lao, from my unit in the fucking 9th Circle. She didn't recognize me."

Jesse narrowed his eyes. "You sure?"

"Staked my life on it, didn't I?" You ran your fingers through your hair. "Wanted to bring her with us. But-" You waved your left arm. "Couldn't secure her. I'm not killing her before I get answers."

Because you didn't believe Lao betrayed you. If she had, well, then you'd do what you had to do.

You sat there in silence while Jesse went to talk to the pilot.

"Lucky?" Ziv stared at the floor.

"Yeah?" He hadn't taken care of his ankle yet. "You should ice that."

"Ben-zona, let me finish. Thank you for coming after me." He put his head between his knees. He was coming off the adrenaline then and probably had to puke. That was the worst. "And for taking those shots. I owe you."

"You're welcome," you said, because that was only polite thing to do. You shouldn't have gone off on him. You weren't Gabriel, after all, but you now understood that burden. Fucking hell. So this was what it was like to be on the other side. No wonder Gabriel was always so grumpy. "Nothing to repay, Ziv. The only debts you owe me come from cards and covering for your ass with the Commander."

"Whatever you feel you owe Savta doesn't apply to me."

"Of course it does," you said. "She'd want me to protect you. You can't possibly think I'd do it for your sake. You're fucking obnoxious."

Motherfucking Ziv and Jesse. One of them drugged your electrolyte solution, but you were pretty sure both of them were in on it. You leaned against the seat restraints, boneless. You couldn't feel your left arm, but that was OK because you could see it and it was still there.

"I hate you," you said to Jesse.

"You keep saying that, but I don't think you know what it means." He laughed at you. "Relax, Lucky. We know you're a badass. That gunshot wound is going to hurt something fierce and your back's a mess." Jesse patted your head. "You'd do the same for me."

"I'd let you suffer." The world spun. "And I'd ask first!"

"Sure you would," Ziv said. "And if we declined, you'd drug us anyway."

You hung your head, not because you were ashamed that they were right, but because your neck didn't want to support itself.

"Not the same. I'm no danger to myself and you don't have to hide from the commander. You know how hard this is going to make it?"

Jesse frowned. "I thought you weren't scared of talking about things?"

"That is almost true. That is also not the reason why I will be hiding. I got shot again, Jesse. You saw him the last time. He's going to be livid." You bobbed your head. "Doesn't matter if it was Ziv's fault. Actually, that's what I'll say. Yes. You can run from Gabriel with your gimpy ankle. It'll give me a head start. Good luck."

Ziv looked at you sideways. "You leave me out of your weird love triangle with Reyes."

"Fuck! Does everybody know? Jesse, you told me not everyone knew!"

"Wait, I was joking," Ziv said looking between you and Jesse. "You know what, I don't need to know. That's all above my pay grade."

"Probably safer that way," Jesse said, shaking his head. "You'll want to stop talking, Lucky."

"Hate you all." You hated them all. Even Lacroix, and he was just lying there.
Fortunately, the drugs were wearing off by the time you landed. You unhooked yourself, wondering if running was an option. The medics were on first, carting Lacroix off. Jesse watched you like he expected you to bolt, trip, and land on your face. Ziv had spent most of the return trip focused hard on his tablet, either writing up a report or playing a game.

Running and hiding was silly. You knew that. Now that the adrenaline was gone, and the drugs were mostly out of your system, you could think straight. You grabbed your bag, one-handed. You'd go to the infirmary. And after that, you'd deal with the fallout.

Captain Amari stepped onto the shuttle, blocking your exit. She nodded at Ziv. "Go to the infirmary," she said. "Thank you for the prompt report. Dismissed, Agent Mihret."

"Ma'am." Ziv saluted and limped off.

"Jesse?" She studied him.

"I'm fine, Ana." He grinned at her. "Sorry, I didn't bring you any mooncakes."

Satisfied that he was unhurt, she turned to you. "You need to go to the infirmary." She paused. "I can take you, or Gabriel can. Your choice."

You wondered what Ziv had written in his report. "I better go with Gabriel. Jesse can you?" You waved at the armor.

Jesse handed Captain Amari your dinged up chest piece. Captain Amari gave it a once-over. "You can't have nice things, can you?" She traced the damage with her finger. "You should talk to Jack about Kandahar. He'll be able to give you better insight. Any other concerns, Agent?"

"Lacroix?"

"Too early to tell." She sighed. "We'll debrief later. Go get fixed up."

"Yes ma'am." You couldn't really salute, not with your one arm full and you stepped off the transport, a little light-headed.

Gabriel stood in the disembarkation hall, hands clasped in front of him. His mouth was flat and his stance rigid. He was still in his standard Blackwatch gear, hat slightly askew. Jack leaned against the wall, arms crossed, looking disinterested in that too-tight black fatigue outfit. Jack's eyes flicked between your face and your arm. They knew.

Oh, you were definitely in trouble. Jack walked over too casually and took your bag out of your hand.

"Let's go to the infirmary," he said, voice so neutral, he couldn't be anything but unhappy.

"Thanks," you said, but he'd already set out on a brisk pace.

Gabriel remained unmoved. You stopped in front of him.

"Hey."

Gabriel's eyes stayed on your face. "Infirmary," he said.

You hugged him with your good arm. One of his arms slid around your shoulders and pressed you against his warmth all too briefly. "I-"

"Save it," he said  "We'll talk after you get a clean bill of health."

If Angela was bothered by the looming grumpy super soldiers in her infirmary, she didn't show it.

She took one look at your arm and had the bandage off to debride the wound. She cleaned it, poking and prodding the entire time. The emitter had already begun to seal it up. "The bullet went through and missed all the important spots. You were lucky."

You would've shrugged, but she had your arm in a vise grip. Angela sealed it with more gel, re-bandaged it, and moved to check your back. "Mmm, you're going to have some nasty bruises. You haven't been coughing up blood, have you?"

"No ma'am." You could feel their eyes on you.

"All right, you know the signs of internal bleeding by now. If you have any, come see me immediately."

She moved on to your finger stubs. "You're going to have to leave those off for a few days." She examined your fingers with her scanner. "No nerve damage, but the augments will irritate your burns. Let those heal first. I will give you a salve." She studied your arm. "I'm putting you on temporary medical leave and starting you on a course of nanites. They'll accelerate healing and prevent infection. You can take another emitter if you need one. Get plenty of rest, keep your wounds clean and dry. Come see me if you have any signs of infection or extra discomfort."

"Yes, ma'am."

"Leave the broken augments for Torby and me. We'll want to see a report on this. I'll get you another set calibrated later."

"Thanks," you said.

"No sparring," she said, her eyes shifting to Gabriel and Jack.

Did that mean what you thought it meant?

"Where do you want to do this?" You sat on the edge of the bed, wondering how bad it was.

"My quarters are the most discrete," Gabriel said. Jack still held your bag. The three of you exited the medical wing in silence. Your knee hurt, probably from your bad grappling landings. You'd just set up another emitter and try not to think about all the damage you'd done.
You knew where Gabriel's quarters were of course, but for the sake of not feeding the rumor mill, you'd never actually been inside. His room was more spacious than yours and he had matching furniture that made the place look almost normal: queen bed with lots of pillows and a thick green comforter, couch and a small entertainment center, as well as bookshelves. He had weapons on the table and was that sewing kit? Jack set your bag down beside the table.

"Sit," Gabriel said and took the emitter from you. He placed it by the couch and switched it on.

You sat on the couch. It was a nice couch and you were going to mess it up with all the blood and dirt you still had on your fatigues.
Jack sat down beside resting his elbows on his knees. He turned toward you. "Pain OK?"

"Yeah," you said. "Angela gave me some time-release stuff. Won't make me as loopy as the emergency shit in the shuttle."

Jack leaned over and kissed your shoulder. "You're supposed to come back uninjured," he said tightly in your ear. The roughness of his voice made your stomach do flip flops.

"I'm not a super soldier," you said, looking up at Gabriel.

"We are very aware of that," Jack said.

Gabriel crouched down in front of you, his hands rested on your cheeks. "Tell us if you don't want this. Don't run halfway across the world and get shot up."

"That's not what I was doing!"

"You definitely went halfway across the world and got shot up," Jack said.

"It wasn't about you," you said. "I got back, saw the mission, freaked out because who let Ziv out the lab, and yeah, I'm glad I did because something was obviously wrong. Was I going to give you guys space? Yes. But going to China is overkill, even for me."

"What made you think we wanted space?" Jack asked.

"I...don't assume," you said. "Because I don't know how this works. And maybe I needed some space too, to figure things out."

Gabriel dropped his hands. "Have you figured things out?"

Relationships left you with a kind of breathless manic insanity that made you dumber and more erratic. You were on drugs and had been shot. You didn't know what you wanted, except to go to sleep and maybe cuddle Gabriel because he had insane body heat and you liked it when Jack was there too because it felt right.

"This weekend was...really really good," you said, because you didn't know how else to describe it. "I uh...am terrified of screwing up."

"That's how I feel every day," Jack said. "And you know I've fucked up big time. You explained it to me with everything but diagrams." He sighed. "You know you have this awful way of laying things out very clearly and politely and that just makes me feel worse."

"Sorry," you said, not feeling very sorry because well, Jack needed things laid out with diagrams.
"No, I listen better that way," he admitted.

"So explain this "arrangement" to me," you said.

Gabriel raised a brow at you. "That sounds sordid."

"What is this? What are the ground rules?" You asked, because you needed an anchor, a limit, a boundary to shape it.

Gabriel rubbed his forehead. "You hate rules."

"No, I hate bad rules," you said. "I just...I don't know how to do this. Help." You gripped Gabriel's hands. "Shin and I didn't talk about a whole lot of stuff. We just...were. I didn't realize we were in a real relationship till I found my clothes in his drawers."

"And you panicked?" Gabriel asked.

"...a little." Shin had just played it off like it was no big deal. You were there anyway and it was convenient. Nothing to worry about. You didn't put a label on it, even if you slept in his room almost every night and didn't look at another man, woman, or omnic. "But I didn't quit."

"This isn't just sex," Gabriel said bluntly.

"Glad it wasn't just me thinking that." You remembered how he had held you that first time and how Jack had kissed your metal fingers. You would follow Gabriel into Hell, sex or not. And Jack? You'd probably drag him out of Hell, because he was making stupid decisions or being noble. Same difference.

"No one else," Jack said, a hand resting on the back of your neck

You made a choked snorting sound. "Little chance of that. This is already complicated enough."

"Tell us if we make you uncomfortable. Don't just...run off," Jack said. "We're pushy. It won't get better if you just retreat."

"I'll say when I need space," you said, even though part of you wondered how much you'd have to fight for it.

"This stays separate from work," Gabriel said ruefully, because everyone present understood it wasn't that simple. "That enough to get you started?"

"I think," you said. "...If we're having sex, is everyone supposed to be there or-?"

"Relax," Gabriel said. "We all have hectic schedules. If you and Jack have some alone time, I'm not going to begrudge you that. I'll just expect you to make it up to me later. Same goes for me and Jack or you and me. It's fine."

"Look, you're over thinking it," Jack said. "We already spend a lot of time together. Things don't have to change, except for the sex part. We are having sex and cuddling. That makes everything better."

You were slightly less terrified that you were going to fuck everything up in the worst way possible. Jack could do a pep talk when it suited him. "OK. So it's friends with-" You stopped, because Gabriel had said right off the bat it wasn't just sex. And Jack had said it was exclusive.
"Really good friends with exclusive sex. That isn't just sex." You buried your face in your hands.

Jack laughed beside you. "It's trust. I trust you. Gabe trusts you. Do you trust us? That's all you need to focus on."

That actually made a lot of sense. And he didn't even use diagrams. "Have you done this before?"

"The sex or the three-way relationship?" Gabriel asked.

"Both?" You asked, because you didn't want to come out and say you assumed they'd had all kinds mind-blowing orgies.

"Yes to the sex. Kind of to the relationship," Jack said. "There was a girl back in SEP...but it didn't work out."

"She had a strong preference for Jack and some other issues," Gabriel said. "It didn't balance well. Put us off this kind of thing for awhile."

You weren't entirely sure what that meant, but you also didn't want to ask just yet. "All right, we're sorted. Can I go shower and collapse now?"

Gabriel kissed you. It was hot and needy and you melted against him. "Why don't you shower here? You're supposed to keep that arm dry and it'll be easier if we help you."

"Uh..." You rested your head against his shoulder wracking your brain for a reason not to. There really weren't any good ones.

"Let Gabriel take care of you tonight," Jack said, kissing the back of your neck. "You...worried us both."

"OK," you said, because you had no willpower left. Gabriel helped you up. His bathroom was bigger than yours - his shower could comfortably fit two people. Three if you were trying. You shook your head. You didn't have the energy for that.

Jack leaned against the sink and watched as Gabriel helped you out of your clothes, giving special attention to your bruised back and wounded arm. He stripped and got in first, turning on the water. You climbed in, careful of the arm.

"Trash bags work well," Jack said. "Probably could have told you earlier, but this is nicer, right?"

"Shut up, Jack," Gabriel said. He lathered up a loofah and started scrubbing your back. You sighed and leaned back into him.

"I fired those two assholes today," Gabriel said. "Jack was going to let you do it, but you disappeared."

"As long as you had fun," you said. "And they're gone. I don't mind." The feeling of him against your back was soothing.

"Turn around," he murmured, and you obliged, letting him get the blood, dirt, and sweat off you.

"Thank you," you said when he was finished.
"Not done." He poured some shampoo onto his hand and gently rubbed your scalp. "You're covered in dust."

"Construction site," you said. "Ziv managed to camouflage Lacroix and himself behind a pile of bricks. Had to help dig them out."

"The boy is clever," Gabriel said. "Got a mouth on him though."

"Yeah," you agreed. "Just like his grandmother. But I don't have to take it from him." You smiled, Gabriel's fingers still running through your hair. "He's never leaving HQ again. At least till he's 30."

"You can't do that, Lucky." Gabriel kissed your shoulder. "Boy has to grow up. He won't get stronger if you coddle him. I know it's not easy to let them out of your sight. Especially in this geo-political climate. But if you tie them down, they won't improve and they'll resent you for it."

"Yeah, I know. Just feel responsible for him, y'know? I owe Rivka." You watched the water in the drain go from brownish-gray to clear. "Not going to clip his wings. Just...get him better trained. And get us another hacker."

Gabriel turned off the water. "I know exactly how you feel."

"Yeah, I know that too. It was an unpleasant realization." You kissed his hand gently. "Thank you. For the shower and for being a good teacher."

Jack had gotten two towels and he handed one to Gabriel before drying you off, his hands lingering on your hips. He gave Gabriel a quick kiss before helping you into one of Gabriel's t-shirts. It was too big, of course, but it covered you and smelled like him, an oddly comforting mix of Hoppe's No. 9, cordite, and an expensive chypre cologne.

"Why don't you stay here?" Jack began to rub your shoulders. Gabriel helped you wrap your hair with the towel.

"OK," you said. "Damn, this was a trap, wasn't it?"

"Gabe's got a big bed. We can all fit."

"I'm too tired to argue," you said. "But you are a tricky son of bitch, Jack."

"Glad you picked up on it quickly. Everyone else thinks golden boy is a fucking saint." Gabriel guided you to the bed, his towel wrapped around his waist. Jack brought the emitter over.

You picked a side and climbed in. To your surprise, Gabriel dragged you over to the middle, his hands lingering on your hips. His cock jutted against you, still covered by the towel. "I uh..." You could feel the blood rushing to your face. "I'm not up for a full session."

"Didn't think you were," Gabriel said. "Angela said "no sparring." It doesn't count if I just put my mouth on you."

"Oh." Your breath hitched as he spread your thighs. "I uh-" You bit your lip as he ran his tongue from your clit to perineum. You arched against the pillows, fingers on your good hand digging into the sheets.

Jack kissed your neck, his hands gently squeezing your breasts. "Look at him." Gabriel laid between your legs, hands on your thighs, his eyes closed as he slid his tongue in and out of you. "He could do this all night."

"Damnit Jack!" You wanted to buck your hips, but Gabriel's hands held you against the bed.

"Relax. Nothing strenuous for you," Jack purred. "Doctor's orders." He kissed you hungrily, eyes fever bright. "You just relax and let us take care of you tonight. Don't worry," he pulled the t-shirt up, exposing your breasts to the cool air. "We'll punish you, later."

"Goddamnit, Jack, how am I supposed to get to sleep now?" You were only half-annoyed, because while you were exhausted, there was something almost magically revitalizing about sex.

"You get to sleep in; I have to be back at the office in five hours. No complaining," he said smugly.

Gabriel slid a finger inside you and your breathing went ragged. He kissed your hip, his beard glistening with your slick and you tensed while he slowly worked another finger inside.

"Gabe-" Jack growled. "Goddamn this is hot." He buried his face in your hair, tongue sliding along the shell of your ear.

"You're so predictable, Jack." Gabriel didn't even look up. "Are you up for sucking him off, Lucky? Don't feel like you have to. I'll take care of him later."

"I don't mind." Because you liked watching Jack come undone. "But I get to control the pace."

"Whatever you want," he said. He unzipped his pants, freeing his erection. "I love watching you take me. You get this dreamy look on your face like you can't get enough. Makes me want to fuck you harder- which I'm not going to do because you're injured, and in charge, and fuck!" You ran your tongue along the underside of his cock before sucking on the head.

You heard Gabriel's muffled laugh and then he was sucking on your clit, fingers moving leisurely inside you. Jack gripped the headboard, his thighs shaking as you used your good hand to stroke his shaft.

"You're killing me, Lucky."

"What's killing you is knowing you can't fuck her tonight," Gabriel said. You moaned around Jack as Gabriel scissored his fingers inside you. "Don't worry, I'm feeling it too, baby. Gotta reassure myself that you're alive and here in my bed. I just want to hold you down, fill you with my cock, and make you scream for me. But we all have to make sacrifices."

There was such a need in his voice it made you ache. You released Jack and leaned down, grabbing Gabriel's hair and dragging his head up. You kissed him, sucking his tongue into your mouth, your tang smeared across your lips.

"Oh corazon, you shouldn't tease me," he growled. "Jack, yes. Me, no."

"Wasn't trying to tease. Just...wanted to kiss you. I want you to enjoy yourself too."

"I am enjoying myself. But if you like, I'll finish in your mouth too," he said, and lowered his head back to your pussy. You squeaked as he slid a third finger inside you and began to pump harder.
You took Jack back in your mouth, working him deeper. He gave a choked groan, but didn't try to thrust. He let you decide how much you wanted. You stroked him, squeezing lightly, before raking your hand down his thigh. Jack snarled eyes narrowing, but he held still. That deserved a reward. You bobbed your head, easing his length down your throat to the hilt.

"You look so good between us," Jack said, throat thick with strain. You hollowed your cheeks, rhythm picking up. "Like that, please-"

You closed your eyes, sucking hard on Jack while Gabriel got you closer and closer. Gabriel's mouth latched onto your clit and he curled his fingers, hitting your g-spot. You tried to buck your hips, but he held you flat against the bed. You were so close, and full. His fingers weren't the same as his cock, but he hadn't forgotten how to get you off. He stretched you wonderfully, stroking faster as your legs trembled against the bed.

"Look at me," Jack begged. "Please." His fingers tangled in your hair, but he didn't try to move you.

You opened your eyes, meeting Jack's hungry gaze. You nodded gesturing for him to thrust. Jack clenched his teeth and shook his head. "No, I'll be good. Just let me see it before you swallow, please."

You swirled your tongue around the head and gripped him tighter, his shaft slick with your spit. You worked your hand faster and Jack's fingers dug into your hair and he groaned your name, cock twitching before shooting his cum into your mouth.

It was salty and stronger than you remembered. You released him and opened your mouth, letting him see the semen pooled on your tongue. Jack smiled at you through half-lidded eyes, his cheeks flushed, hair falling in his face. He rubbed his thumb across your lips.

"Gabe? Do you want-?"

Gabriel leaned up and kissed you again, his tongue flicking into your mouth. He released you, lips smeared with Jack's cum and your juices. You swallowed, unable to look away from Gabriel's satisfied expression.

"Good girl," he said.

"I'll finish her," Jack said. "Why don't you take a turn?"

You huffed in disappointment as Gabriel withdrew his fingers. They switched spots, Jack now kneeling between your legs. He gave you a shy smile before sliding his tongue inside you. Gabriel had lost the towel already. He knelt beside your head, flexing those thickly muscled thighs.

"Don't know if my jaw can take you like I did Jack." You sucked on the head, tongue stroking the foreskin.

"Don't worry about it. We'll work up to it later." He groaned and began stroking himself. "Jack, don't tease."

Jack's fingers slid inside you and the blade of his tongue flicked against your clit. Your eyes widened. Jack's fingers moved faster, slick with his saliva and your wetness. Your hips shook.

"Let him get you off," Gabriel said, voice husky. "I want to watch you cum on his face."
His pace quickened, cock pressed against your lips. "That's it, grind against him. You two look so pretty like that. Wish I could take you tonight, but I guess you'll just have to go without. Don't worry, at some point, we're going to spar again, and after you're pinned, I'm going strip you and fuck you right there."

"Do you want me to fight back?" You asked, a little breathless. "Because that actually sounds pretty hot."

"The harder you fight, the harder I'll fuck you," he promised.

Jack groaned against you and you clenched around him, pussy squeezing his fingers tightly. Jack didn't stop licking you as you came. But your cries were muffled as Gabriel slipped his cock into your mouth.

"Let her up, Jack. You're supposed to be gentle with her right now."

Jack released you, withdrawing his fingers. He licked them, eyes glazed with lust. "Sorry, Lucky. You just taste so good."

Gabriel grunted, thrusting into his hands, his cock only a few inches in your mouth. "Get ready," he said tightly. He gave himself a few more rough tugs and then his thick cum poured down your throat. He had as much as Jack and you swallowed, tongue lapping at the head of his cock.

Gabriel moved in a few short thrusts before pulling out. Jack turned your head and kissed you hungrily before letting you collapse against the bed.

You looked between them, wondering if they ever got enough sleep. Your heart pounded in your throat and Gabriel leaned down stroking your face. "You should probably get some rest now."

"Are you and Jack going to-"

"Jack needs rest too," Gabriel said dryly, and he laid on his side, facing you.

Jack pressed against your back, his hands resting around your waist. "Not tired."

"You will be when you have to deal with all those UN assholes in the morning," Gabriel said, his hand reaching out to pat Jack's head. He curled closer to you and you closed your eyes. "Both of you go to sleep."

"We're going to fuck on your desk tomorrow," Jack said in your ear. "If you're good, I'll send pictures."

Chapter End Notes

I don't mean to write so much sex. One, because sex gets a little repetitive. Two, because it takes longer for me to write than the other stuff. Write. Edit. Reread. Edit. Go "WTF was I thinking?" Edit. Reread. Repeat.

So yeah, there won't be smut in every chapter, but Chapter 11 was pretty much a nonstop sex marathon. And as I write this I'm all like "damn I need to get out more."
Also, lol, this is Overwatch. People don't stay dead; it's like a proud tradition. (But this isn't Marvel. Some people do stay dead, because I'm not that cheap.)
You woke up to Jack pulling on his clothes. He kissed Gabriel before leaning over and touching his forehead to yours.

"Get well soon," he said, kissing the tip of your nose.

"You just want to have more rough sex."

"That is a big motivator," Jack said, kissing you again. "I'm going to spend the morning thinking about you two in bed without me."

"Yeah, I'm going back to sleep." How the hell was he so perky?

Gabriel chuckled, rolling over to spoon you. "Have a good day, Jack. I'll be working remotely today."

"Is that what they call it nowadays?"

"Shut up. I'm trying to sleep."

"You should probably make sure she gets her next dose of painkillers. She's getting cranky."

"We didn't feed her last night. She's going to be bear when she wakes up."

"I can still hear you," you growled, and burrowed under the pillows.

Your arm hurt. And this wasn't your couch. This was a bed. You rolled over, eyes widening as you saw Gabriel, sitting shirtless on the couch, reading his tablet. He just wore his fatigue pants and you sighed, enjoying the view.

"What time is it?"

"Time for painkillers and breakfast. Otherwise known as 1200 hours. Lacroix's still alive, out of surgery, and after that we'll have to see."

You groaned. "He better be OK. I still have to yell at him for dragging Ziv off base and stuff."

Gabriel stood and set the tablet down. He brought you a bottle of water and a pill. You took it, and maybe it was the placebo effect, but your aches dulled quickly. "Ana dropped off some chicken soup from the mess hall. It's still warm. You want me to feed you?"

"I can drink it out of the bowl," you said.
"What if I want to feed you?"

"I uh...I'd like to do it myself right now." You looked down at your bandaged hand. "Need to remind myself I'm not helpless."

Gabriel nodded. "All right." He handed you the plastic container, lid off. You sipped it, savoring the heat.

"It's not as good as yours," you told him.

"I know. But I didn't want to leave you alone." You drank half of it in one go. Now you needed a spoon or something to fish out the solids. Gabriel tapped you on the nose with a plastic spoon.

"Thanks. Yeah, who knows what I would have done? Tried on your clothes? Scattered your sewing supplies? Slept through everything?" You balanced the soup container between your thighs and began picking out rice, carrots, and chicken.

"You're dangerous without supervision." He sat on the bed. "Agent Mihret wrote an interesting report. Jesse verified it."

"It was Lao," you said. "I know it. She was scarred, wearing a whole slew of cybernetics, and she was all fucked up, but I know it was her. She didn't recognize me." You paused. "I had her on the ground. I was going to end her, and it's like, fuck: that's one of mine."

Gabriel raised a brow. "That was in there too. Agent Mihret confirms that the resemblance is strong. He couldn't say either way because he didn't get a great look at her. Because he was too worried about the idiot that jumped in front of the bullets meant for him. He didn't say "worried." He said "concerned." But I can read between the lines." Gabriel said, each word becoming more clipped.

"You telling me you wouldn't stand between your agents and a bullet?"

"I'm enhanced."

"Yeah, yeah, you're going to give me a complex." You reclined against the pillows. "I was wearing armor, Gabriel. And I didn't jump in front of him, I threw him behind me. I didn't want to take bullets for that smartass. I just didn't want him to get hit."

Gabriel sighed. "You know, I've had this exact conversation before, both sides. This is all kinds of deja vu."

"You have predictable taste in friends. And some bad habits." You sighed. "I'm not going to say I learned them from you, but Captain Patel could only teach me so much. Besides, you wouldn't like me nearly as much if I wasn't occasionally stupid-brave."

"That's Jack," Gabriel said. "I prefer my women intelligent and uninjured."

"Damn, we're both out of luck."

Gabriel's jaw clenched. "This isn't a laughing matter."

"I don't care. I'm just happy to be here." You handed him your empty container and he tossed into the trash.
"Don't be flippant, not about this and not right now." He turned his head, fists balled at his side.

"I'm sorry, that came out wrong. I'm sorry I worried you. I'm sorry I wasn't fast enough to keep myself unharmed. But I'm not sorry that I kept Ziv safe and made it home mostly intact."

Gabriel exhaled slowly. "You're learning."

"I don't like upsetting you. Jack? Yeah, I like goading him; he's been playing stupid games with me for awhile. But you just get this shadow over your face, and it's awful. I'm sorry." You nestled down in the blankets. "I forget you were in charge of a bunch of people and-" And a lot of them never made it home.

"The demotion wasn't the end of the world. I have less people to worry about and fewerasses to kiss." He rested his head on the pillow beside yours. "But the people I do worry about? I worry about them more."

You didn't know what to say, so you curled up against him. "Next time I'll let them shoot Ziv."

"No you won't," Gabriel laughed, despite himself. "Talon wants him and Lacroix."

"Talon wants Lacroix. They'd kill Ziv on principle, but they don't actually want him. Nobody does. He's awful."

Gabriel stayed in the room with you, probably because he didn't trust you not to go through his closet. It was a fair suspicion. Your closet was boring. Gabriel's might have cool things, like candy, or kittens, or Narnia. He stayed on the couch, working on his tablet, looking up at you every once in awhile, watching you when he thought you weren't paying attention.

That was OK. You did it to him too. You were just sneakier about it.

It was back to voice-to-text reports for you. No "shit spiders" this time, but you gave a full account of the Shanghai op, which you were refusing to call "Shanghai Noon." You sat in Gabriel's bed, wearing his shirt, trying to manage your communications backlog. There were missions that need approved, funding proposals to review, and onboarding protocols to tweak.

You didn't mind occasionally staffing Blackwatch with criminals, so long as they were like Jesse and you. A little morally conflicted, possibly homicidal, and definitely shady, but not downright crazy or evil. It didn't matter how talented they were, if you knew right off the bat that you'd never be able to trust them, they weren't worth it. Not with Shit Spiders heating up. The amnesty agreements had steps, conditions, and protection from abuse. You weren't sure if that would fix things, but you'd worked closely with Jesse and Genji on that.

Gabriel was coming around. He'd been annoyed about that group of brilliant geneticists you'd executed a month ago, but he hadn't been on the ground or in their labs. You and Jesse had gotten real drunk after that one. Genji joined you, but you still weren't sure if he was able to get intoxicated. You'd been able to remotely upload their notes and project data; Ziv had managed to decrypt it within a week, then called you at 3AM to ask if you'd really killed them all or if you'd saved him one. Then he'd gotten drunk and called you at 5AM to ask why you didn't warn him about how graphic the files would be. You had. He was just a drama queen.

You found the 9th Circle data about Talon's mental conditioning procedures and started reading. Drugs, severe behavioral modification techniques, electroshock therapy combined with control-chip nanite treatments, partial lobotomies, cybernetic reprogramming... There were a lot of methodologies, used in a variety of combinations. Most had severe side effects. You understood then that even if you found Lao, if she hadn't betrayed you, there was a good chance she would never recover.

You continued to read up on their biological modifications, though it was way over your head. But there was a white paper; those fuckers had written up a layman's presentation to market it. You knew there were plenty of powerful people, and governments, that wouldn't mind buying that kind of technology, ethics be damned.

Oh, you had a lot of messages.

"Where are you?" Ziv had sent it this morning.

"You dead? Or just wish you were? :) Also Ziv's looking for you." Jesse.

"What did you do to your augments!!!!!!" Torby.

"Do we need to talk?" Captain Amari.

"Find me." Imprinted was the icon of a stylized white serpent. Sender unknown.

You closed your eyes. Of course. You knew who Bái Shé was. It fucking figured. Especially with that stupid white armor. You pulled up Lao's files, the pictures you'd found after Shin's birthday. Gabriel had cleared them for your possession.

It was a trap, of course. You'd need Ziv to look at the message, do his magic. But once he did, you would send a picture of your unit to one of her old private accounts. Maybe the one with all of you posing except for Captain Patel, who stood in the middle, ramrod straight and unamused by your collective antics. You think Georgie took it, but you couldn't remember now. No, you wouldn't send her that one. Even if you looked different now, there was no point in handing Talon that. You would find another one of the group, one without you. You would send that one, the one of her and Rivka, and the one of her and Valdez kissing. And then you would hone your tanto, because even if she was a traitor, Lao had only been a baby, and you'd loved her. For that she deserved a sharp blade.

You responded to the rest of your messages, making sure to let Ziv know you were out on medical leave and to pester Gabriel instead. Torby received your report about the battle. You told Captain Amari everything was fine, but she still wanted to meet with you today.

"You're not supposed to be working," Gabriel said. "And why are you siccing Agent Mihret on me?"

"I'm not supposed to be working," you said. "I'm only doing the light stuff because I'm an amazing agent. But Ziv's a pain in the ass, so you get to deal with him." You paused. "I'm going to need clothes. Captain Amari wants to see me later."
Gabriel held up a bag. "Jack and Jesse went in your room. I think Jack's a little surprised by how...unlived in it is."

You shrugged. "I store what I have there, but I don't have a lot of stuff. I don't need a lot of stuff. I sleep on the couch in the office." The most "stuff" you had was the food in the kitchen. And that was all expendable.

A cloud passed over Gabriel's face. "You ever talk to your shrink about your family?"

"Who doesn't?" You set your tablet down and slipped out of the bed. "They've been dead a long time, Gabriel. It wasn't pretty. I dealt. And that chapter of my life is over." You'd sealed the record and there was nothing left to talk about.

"I have sisters."

"I know," you said. Three, if you remembered correctly, and several nieces and nephews.

"My mother is alive," he said. "So's my paternal grandmother."

"I know."

"I lost my father to cancer. It happened shortly after I'd joined Overwatch."

"I'm sorry," you said, even though you knew that too.

"Yeah, me too. The point is, a big sweeping loss like yours, it leaves scars. It doesn't matter if it was yesterday or ten years ago, it'll fuck you up in ways you don't realize."

"I think I'm pretty well-adjusted, considering." You rummaged through the bag and found that some clever asshole - probably Jack - hadn't brought you any underwear. But he'd managed to find your civilian clothes. Your underwear was in the underwear drawer. Honestly, that wasn't a hard concept. You pulled on a black sweater with extra long cuffs and your jeans. You couldn't wear gloves with your hand bandaged and there was no point in covering your right hand.

"Is that why you're so adrift?"

"Don't know what you're talking about, Gabriel." Because you were very focused and anchored in Blackwatch. You had a mission.

OK, you were definitely blaming Jack, because he'd brought you socks and your sock drawer was right next to your underwear drawer. You sat on the couch next to Gabriel, pulled them on, and looked down at your dusty boots.

"You want help with that?"

"Nah, I got it." You'd learned that you could get away with just using your thumb early on. The loops were loose, but your shoes were tied.

"Let me," Gabriel said and got on his knees. He untied your laces and retied them tighter.

You huffed. "Thank you, but it was fine."

"Of course," he said looking amused. "You are very well-adjusted, considering. I certainly don't think you're teetering on the edge of mental collapse."

"But?" You asked, a little irked.
Gabriel sighed and sat back on the floor, his hands flat on the ground behind him. "There was a battle outside Dili; the weather was shit, the omnis were overpowered. I was the only survivor." He didn't look at you. "Obviously, Jack and I weren't serving together then. I think he was in Lisbon. Doesn't matter." His gaze stayed on the floor. "I still catch myself making coffee the way Frank liked it or craving Yuan's weirdly delicious fish ball rice porridge. I didn't talk about it for years. Just picked up, got transferred to another unit, and kept going. That part of my life was done. I didn't plan on talking about it ever again. But I didn't mesh so well with my next few units. Didn't try to get attached or anything. I didn't really come out of it till I ended up in Kandahar, back with Jack. But that shit was still there, under all the scar tissue. Always will be. I just deal with it better now."

"You're so pushy," you said, slipping off the couch and onto the floor beside him. "And I can't argue with you when you're all honest and open like this. It's not fair."

"I don't know where you got this idea that I play fair," he said, his fingers twining around your hands.

You made it out of Gabriel's room without witnesses. Gabriel had helped you get your tanto and shoulder holster on because those were harder one-handed. Did you always used to go around armed, even off-duty? No, that was a recent development.

Sitting in Captain Amari's office, you decided it wasn't necessarily unhealthy, but maybe you lived an uncommonly dangerous life. Captain Amari poured you tea and placed some dark chocolate-dipped digestive biscuits on a plate.

"Are you sorted?" she asked, sipping from her bone china set.

"I think so." You felt slightly odd having this conversation. Captain Patel would never have approved, though you liked to think that eventually she would have liked having tea and biscuits with you.

"Are you comfortable with what Gabriel and Jack are asking of you?"

"I am a willing adult in this, yes. I am also terrified of screwing up because apparently I have repressed emotional issues. My career is also a concern, but I know I'm good at my work. I'm bad at...people."

"That's interesting, considering Agent Mihret has recommended you for every commendation you could conceivably qualify for."

You nearly choked on your tea. "He certainly has an overinflated view of the value of his life."

"Says the woman who took a bullet for him," Captain Amari said blandly.

"I keep telling everyone, I wasn't throwing myself in front of bullets, I was trying to drag him out of their trajectory. There is a distinct difference there."

Captain Amari gave you a measured look that somehow shamed you for being flippant, right before sipping her tea. "Gérard is expected to make it."
You sighed. "That's a relief. I'd hate to think we did all that work so he could die."

That got another look from her.

"Sorry, ma'am," you said and took a big swig of tea.

"I saw your report. I find it troubling that Bái Shé has already contacted you."

"Yeah, me too." You ate another biscuit. "I didn't realize she was Bái Shé at the time. Too shocked that it was her."

"Understandable."

"I'd prefer to take her alive."

"The suggestion has merit. But she is dangerous. Agent Mihret has been sifting through the analytics that led Gérard into her trap. He's reasonably certain that it came from someone up high, not the analysts."

"We're getting more of that. Gabriel showed me a copy of conflicting orders he and Jack received. It was a little thing, Jack was supposed to oversee some kind of omnic peace meeting. Gabriel was supposed to "eliminate with extreme prejudice" one of the attendees. There was only a little overlap, but you can see how that could've gone very badly."

Captain Amari nodded. "I saw that too. Normally, I would be against this sort of personal arrangement. Too much room for...exploitation," she said. "But in this case, we need to close ranks, triple-check orders, and you work well with them. But if you ever feel like your relationship with them is interfering with your work or that you can't tell them no, you come to me. We will sort it."

Well, that wasn't a ringing endorsement, but that was better than you were expecting. "Thank you, ma'am. I really do appreciate you looking out for me. You're a good CO."

"I have to keep my tea pipeline open." She didn't mention Jesse or your efforts there, because she was too classy and secretive. "Just so you know, Agent Mihret was identified. There's now a bounty on his head from Talon."

You swore.

"Nothing for you yet, but they got plenty of footage of Agent Mihret and Gérard." You wondered if Lao had been recording. She didn't seem to recognize you in the fight. But she identified you and she certainly remembered enough to message you. Your armor had that high collar that blocked half your face. There was good chance they didn't have a clear picture of you.

"I know it's some kind of trap, but...I want in on whatever Bái Shé ops there are. I've nearly finished up my part of planning Hanoi. The rest is up to Gabriel and Jesse."

"Noted. You have my recommendation. When Gérard awakens, I'm sure he will have no qualms about bringing you on board." She took another biscuit. "Ah, I was asked to approve leave for you for the Christmas weekend. You now get a week of paid vacation to use somewhere in the next two months, so it won't cut into your regular leave." Not that it mattered, because you ended up using medical leave most the time.

"I didn't put that in," you said. Because you planned to work through it, get hot chocolate and omurice with Genji, maybe Jesse, and get drunk. You didn't celebrate Christmas, but being in Europe, you couldn't quite ignore the dominant tradition and the heavy emphasis on family and togetherness. You wondered if Genji wanted to check out some of the Krampus parades in Germany. Those looked cool.

"I am aware of that. I will say no more, except if you would like to work, I can dig my heels in and keep you here."

Must've been Jack or Gabriel, which was interesting because no one had said anything to you. "Thank you ma'am. I'll...sort it. I better go see Ziv and brainstorm about this bounty and Bái Shé message."

"You do know you're supposed to be on medical leave, right?"

"Well, my productivity has taken a hit," you said waving your bandaged hand. "So minimal paperwork. But those assholes tried to kill my hacker and then had the nerve to put a bounty on him. I'm not happy about this. And in Blackwatch, if we're not happy, we get petty."

"I wasn't aware that you ever stopped being petty, Agent."

She had you there.

Ziv sat on the conference room table while Winston paced.

"That's all I'm worth? Seriously? How much do they have on you?"

"Five times that," Winston admitted.

"I was asking Lucky, you showoff."

"Nothing." You passed your hand over your lower jaw. "I don't get caught and I had that metal collar that covered half my face."

"Yeah, you could be anybody," he admitted. "But fuck, that was Bái Shé's calling card and she totally contacted you. Couldn't get shit on the location data."

"It's Lao Yue. She was in the video with your grandmother." You rubbed your sore arm. "I'm not saying she didn't betray us, but I'm having a lot of trouble wrapping my head around that idea."

"My grandmother talked about her. Said she was "stubborn trouble, couldn't keep her hands to herself, and had extremely odd taste in men." Or was she talking about you? I might be getting you mixed up."

Winston was suddenly very interested in his tablet.

"Don't tell me it's above my pay grade. I spent all morning searching for you, and it was fucking McCree who told me to stop."

"I was sleeping, because I'm on medical leave."

"Sleeping where?"
"None of your business," you scowled.

"He has a boyfriend!" Ziv said. "You're playing with fire! You know exactly who his boyfriend is! Are you insane? I thought you were smarter than that!"

Oh, that's what he thought was going on. Huh. "This doesn't leave this room, Mihret, or I will cut your tongue out and give you to Talon myself."

Ziv uncrossed his arms. "Yeah?"

"Goes for you too Winston."

"I heard nothing."

"The boyfriend is in on it too. OK. Both of them. No one's in the dark or under duress; we've all talked about it. There's third party moderation. It's a mutual thing, and I can't believe I'm having this conversation."

You had the satisfaction of seeing Ziv's jaw drop and no words come out. He worked his mouth a few times.

"Goddamnit you've totally wrecked the betting pool."

"What?"

"I mean, they aren't common knowledge, so after Paris there was a betting pool about who you were schtupping. McCree is in first. Reyes is in second. Morrison is in third. Genji is in fourth. Unknown is in fifth. And "no one" is in sixth. Reinhardt is in the pool, since you danced with him at the ball, but no one actually thinks he could keep it a secret."

You struggled to keep your words sensible. "There's no fucking way. You're shitting me."

"Yes, I am," he said. "And you deserved it because how do you get two boyfriends and I'm still single?"

"It couldn't possibly be your winning personality," you said.

He threw his clipboard at your head.

"I want Gérard at Hanoi if possible. Jack wants in, though, that's not a good idea. Ana's in. You, Genji, and Jesse are a given. Get Mihret's combat skills up and he can come." Gabriel sat at his desk, looking at the building plans Ziv had managed to acquire.

"Not happening on our timeline. He's been focusing on medical training," you sighed. "His shooting is passable. But we need a hacker." You didn't want to take him, but you didn't have much of an option.

"Yeah, fine. He's with you then," Jesse grumbled.

"No, he's with you. You're hitting the labs with Genji. You'll need him most," Gabriel said.
"He can stay with me initially. Who knows how accurate these layouts are?" You tapped your good hand against your copy of the building plans. Your burns were still healing, so no prostheses. Technically you were supposed to be on medical leave, but it's not like Angela could see through walls and find you in the office...could she? "Do we need a dedicated demolitionist?"

"No, I'm skilled. Genji's pretty adept. Gérard is also shockingly good at explosions. That should be adequate."

"He's probably good at everything," you sighed. "Fucking French James Bond."

Jesse laughed at that.

"We need a full medical team on standby. I know you don't like cross-pollinating, but we're going to encounter heavy resistance. I don't want to wait to reach a field hospital. East Asia is too hostile." Between the Shimada, Vishkar, a variety of omnic invasions, and local governments, it was not a friendly zone.

Gabriel gave you a look.

"No, seriously. We can do them as a second wave. Get us in position, borrow someone from Overwatch to look after the medics. Reinhardt, Winston, or Torby could back them up. They'd have plausible deniability, and with the exception of Reinhardt, they're already cleared for Shit Spiders."

"No," Gabriel said. "We don't need them and they're a liability."

"Jack then, if he's coming. Put him in second wave with the medics."

Gabriel sighed. "You're going to push this, aren't you?"

"Jesse, I'm right. Tell him I'm right," you insisted.

"Ain't saying she's right, but it wouldn't hurt to have them in reserve. Have'em cooling their heels in Seoul a week or so ahead. That town's still friendly. Put in over Hanoi twenty minutes in. We don't tell them shit, except it's a combat zone. Keep'em suborbital, and use a Blackwatch pilot. If we don't need'em, they don't learn a thing and no harm done."

"Yes, to the medical team. We'll see about using Overwatch agents."

"They'll agree to it, if Lucky asks," Jesse said, putting his feet on your desk. You thought about shoving them off, but there'd been worse things on your desk lately. You had the pictures to prove it.

Gabriel glared at him. "What's that supposed to mean?"

"It means, we're such assholes in Blackwatch that I'm considered the diplomatic one." Which wasn't really fair, because Jesse could be very persuasive. You suspected he was mostly responsible for rehabilitating your image within Overwatch. It certainly wasn't through your clever efforts.

"I want Lacroix's input on everything. He's done more work in Vietnam than any of us," Jesse said. "Hell, he even speaks the language."

"This is just the first revision," you said. "Wait till he's off bed rest."
"He'd be happy for something to do," Jesse said.

"OK, well I need to switch over to the Bái Shé data. She's hit some Canadian company and I want Lacroix's opinion too. I'll let him know you're going to hit him up."

You gathered up your tablet and a sheaf of paperwork.

"Hey, Jack wanted to see you when you had a free moment," Gabriel said, studying another map.

"OK," you said. "I'll swing by his office after I'm done with Lacroix."

"Can you give him this from me?" He held out his hand.

You walked over, trying to see what he had. Gabriel grabbed your collar, yanked you in, and kissed you hard. You stifled a moan as his tongue flicked into your mouth.

Jesse coughed, a few times, very loudly, before Gabriel released you. He radiated smug satisfaction. You couldn't stop the stupid grin from creeping across your face.

"I can't believe you fell for that," Jesse said with a groan.

"I'll pass it on," you said.

Gabriel just smirked at the two of you.

"This is all I have on Lao Yue," you said, sending Lacroix her personnel file, your notes on her, the files Ziv recovered, and the pictures you'd found.

"Much obliged." Lacroix was sitting up now. You weren't sure how soon he'd be back in the field, but it seemed Gabriel was willing to delay the Hanoi run to get him in. "This is more than I had a week ago."

"You saw my report." You paused. "Maybe I should've killed her, but I want answers. I reread the neural reconditioning reports. I can't say for sure that's what happened, but that's my working theory."

"Why would they spare her?" He mused. "The Black Base Delta data purge seems to be main reason for the raid. Perhaps with Agent Cohn dead, they needed someone to give them a rundown of the tech situation."

"That's the only reason I can think of, if this is under duress." You'd sent three photographs to one of Lao's old accounts. There hadn't been a response yet.

When Lacroix had graciously thanked you for the rescue, you'd told him, in no uncertain terms, that he wasn't to take your hacker out without better protection. And that while he was at it, maybe he should take better protection too. He'd just laughed, all good natured charm, and told you his wife had already scolded him and she was far more terrifying than you. Amélie was currently staying on the base and Captain Amari had assigned her discrete bodyguards.

"Jesse's eager to get you onboard the next step of Shit Spiders," you said. "So don't be surprised if he stops by."

"Of course, but I want to take care of Bái Shé first. I should be out soon," he said. "We will talk about it then."

Jack wasn't in his office.

But he'd messaged you the entry code to his quarters. You rubbed your forehead. You'd never been inside his quarters, and now he was giving you the key? You were just stopping by. It was no big deal.

You walked through casually, looking at your paperwork like you here for work. People noticed you now. This wasn't a good thing, in your book, because your work was best done discretely. You ended up on the upper level where bigshots like Lacroix and Captain Amari also roomed.

You knocked twice, just to let him know you were coming in, then input the code and opened the door.

The lights were on low. His room was much bigger than Gabriel's and done in gray and white. He had a sitting room and a separate bedroom. Being Strike Commander certainly had perks.

"Jack?"

"Be out in a moment. Make yourself comfortable."

You sat awkwardly on his couch, setting your stuff on the end table. Jack's furniture was some kind of golden wood with dark grey fabric. It was kind of a relief that everything wasn't blue and white.

"Hey." He came out of the bedroom in sweatpants and that was it. You made yourself not stare at his bare chest, though it was difficult. He was doing this on purpose. He wanted a reaction. And you weren't going to give him the satisfaction.

"Gabriel said you needed something?" You studied the pictures on the walls. They were landscapes and some ships. Nothing personal.

"It can wait. Do you want something to drink?"

"Yeah," you said. "Please." You weren't sure the last time you were alone with Jack, but it hadn't been since this...arrangement started. It made you antsy.

Jack brought you a beer and sat down beside you, already drinking his own. "Relax, Lucky. I won't bite. Even if you deserve it." You didn't trust the way he smiled when he said that. "Unless you want me to."

You did not need to imagine Jack's mouth on your shoulder, his teeth lightly grazing your skin. You swallowed a gulp of beer. "Damnit, Jack."

"Gabriel said you had something for me," he said smugly.
"Gabriel's a goddamn instigator," you said, but you put your beer on the coffee table and grabbed Jack's jaw with your good hand. You turned his face to you and kissed his roughly, your tongue slipping into his mouth the same way Gabriel had kissed you. Jack's hands gripped your forearms and he moaned into your mouth. When you opened your eyes, you were straddling his lap, sucking on his tongue.

You broke the kiss, a little breathless. "That's from Gabriel."

Jack smiled crookedly at you. "Oh?"

"This is from me." You gripped his hair, tracing your lips down his neck. He shuddered against you, and you nipped the junction of his neck and shoulder. He let out a sharp hiss, and you gentled your mouth, licking the imprint you left.

He growled and wrapped his arms around your waist, his cock pressed against you. "Like those pictures I sent?"

"Yeah. I was in a meeting with Winston, so thanks for that. Seriously, use Gabriel's desk. I actually have paperwork on mine."

Jack laughed, his mouth moving down your collarbone. You squirmed against him. "Next time we can use my desk. It's bigger. And I don't care if you mess up my paperwork." He pulled your shirt down, his mouth moving between your breasts. He ground against you and you bit your lip.

He grinned and rolled his hips, practically bouncing you on his lap. You bit him again and he kept rubbing between your thighs.

"Get those pants off and you can ride me right now," he said, voice raw with need.

"Not supposed to be "sparring," you said regretfully.

He stopped. "Ah, I forgot. Sorry." He took a deep breath and shifted so he wouldn't be pressed quite so obviously against you.

"Yeah, me too." You started to climb out of his lap, but he kissed your neck, his arms still holding you in place. Jack liked sex a lot and the novelty of having a regular female partner hadn't quite worn off yet.

"We can just make out," Jack said. "You don't have to worry about teasing or pushing me too far. I'll be good."

"Yeah, I'm not falling for that one," you said, sliding out of his lap. You sat beside him, reaching for your beer. He was too sexy for your sanity.

"Don't trust me?" He asked, sipping his beer. "Or don't trust yourself?"

You took a long slow drink and considered your reply. "It's not like that, Jack. You push. I push back. Suddenly we're using safe words and it's like "how did that escalate so quickly? Damn I don't want to stop." Best not to risk it."

"You're probably right," he said, pulling back. "Sorry."

"It's fine." You finished your beer, eyes on your lap. Jack was silent and maybe you'd said the wrong thing. It was strange to do this without Gabriel. Not that you didn't like Jack, just you were used to Gabriel being there. You knew how to handle Gabriel and vice versa. Jack was...different.

"You done?" He sounded distant now.

"Yeah."

Jack took the empty can out of your hands, crushed it flat, and tossed it in the recycling bin. "You want another?"

"I'm OK." You sat there, feeling awkward, like the one night stand who stayed too long. "Uh...you want me to go? I don't want to hold you up if you're busy."

"I'm free for the evening." He sat with his elbows on his knees, his head tilted toward you. "You can stay. I'd like that. I don't mean to pressure you."

"It's not like I don't want to," you said, feeling slightly mortified.

"I know. I'm pushy. You can always say "no." It's not about me." He sighed. "And I'm not giving you the cold shoulder. I just needed a minute to cool down. I'm good now." He gave you a reassuring grin. "It's safe to come back."

"Oh." You leaned against him. He was pleasantly warm and he put an arm around you. "How was your day?"

"Ugh, don't make me think about it. Tell me about yours instead."

"Long - maybe not as long as yours, but long enough for an unenhanced human."

"Tell me about it." He sounded interested, which was kind of nice.

"We started tracking down who exactly put the bounty on Ziv, because I'm going to go kill them personally. Ziv is doing the research, I'll just handle the fun part. Torby had to yell at me about really fucking up that set of augments, which is stupid because that's Angela's territory, but you know how he is. Reviewing Genji's super secret dossiers and debating the best way to discretely take care of an entire family. I'm leaning toward something creative. Gabriel's being difficult about planning the Shit Spider op. Part of me wanted to smack him, but Jesse was there and I'm keeping work and this separate. Except as I'm getting ready to go talk to Lacroix, Gabriel's all "I have something for Jack" and kisses me in front of Jesse. So there goes half my brainpower. Then I delivered my compiled Bái Shé/Lao Yue data for Lacroix, and he's being coy about his plans, but that's fine because I was still reeling from Gabriel's surprise attack. And then I came over to drink your beer and be awkward."

"Aren't you supposed to be on medical leave?" Jack raised a brow at you.

"I'm injured, not unconscious. I can still do things. Maybe not jump out of planes or type, but I should be able to equip my augments in the next day or two. The burns are healing nicely. Gunshot wound is good, but Angela keeps giving me the "no sparring" euphemism, and I think she's just trying torture me. Or you guys. Did you guys piss her off?"

Jack shrugged. "Possibly." There was a story there.

"Also, Ziv and Winston are kind of aware of...us." Because you weren't sure what to call it and maybe you didn't want to call it anything yet.
Jack shrugged again. "We're all consenting adults. I'm not ashamed." He paused. "But is this going to make your life harder?"

"Not them knowing. Obviously if it becomes common knowledge, that'd be different. But I trust them and pretty much everyone in Shit Spiders."

"Yeah, I think most everyone in Shit Spiders already knows."

You sighed. You were afraid of that.

"If McCree knows, Ana and Genji know. If Ana knows, Gérard has picked up on it already, and butter won't melt in his mouth. Torby might be the only one not in the know and he doesn't care." Jack rubbed the back of your neck.

"OK." You sat there a moment. You tried to think of things Jack liked, besides sex. "You want me to rub your back?"

"God, yes," he said and turned around.

You worked his shoulders, kneading the knots you'd seen Gabriel focus on before. It was still strange to be here alone with him. Not unpleasant, just new ground.

"I have a question. You don't have to answer." You ran your fingers down a long scar above his kidneys. "Captain Amari told me to ask you about Gabriel and Kandahar." Your hands traveled down his spine.

Jack was quiet for a moment. "I see. Ana disposed of your armor before Gabriel could see it this time. I didn't think that was accidental. But I wasn't going to ask."

"After the Code White Alps mission... Well, I wasn't expecting that reaction."

"It's not really about Kandahar, per se. That's the only part she was there for," Jack sighed. "How much do you know about Gabriel's service?"

"I know a little about Dili."

Jack blew out a breath. "Yeah." He looked over his shoulder at you. "It took him years to tell me about that."

"It was recent. He was using it as lever to get me to do more therapy," you said.

"Talking about it has helped," Jack said. "Kandahar was that turning point for him. We were fighting omnis. I covered a retreat for our demolitionists, pretty standard stuff. But one of the bastions wasn't actually finished. It got me in the back, my armor took a dozen rounds in under five seconds, easy."

You stopped pressing on his back, looking now for signs of scarring. He had more than his fair share of bullet wounds, gashes, burns, and were those really big teethmarks?

"Gabriel lost his shit. Charged out and practically tore it apart with his bare hands. OK, I'm exaggerating, but only a little. Then he was on me, ripping my armor off. He'd called in medics and while I was hurting, I'm a super soldier. It sucked, but my armor had done the trick. I couldn't really understand why he was overreacting. He sent me to the infirmary and I was pretty sore about it. Then when I had a clean bill of health, he...well, I knew something was wrong."
You stroked Jack's hair.

"Kandahar was when we insisted he get help." Jack sighed. "But the trauma stems from Dili. He had a friend, Frank Hsieh. Frank was SEP too, and probably the most laidback guy I've ever met. He was big, just huge, but calm and pleasant as could be. SEP pumped us full of so many chemicals and hormones, but Frank never had the emotional control issues that so many of us did. He ate noodles and listened to us rage. Sometimes he shared the noodles. They were spicy." Jack sighed. "Frank acted as the shield, trying to cover Gabe and the rest of the unit when the omnics ambushed them. He had some impressive armor. Not quite like Reinhardt's, but still pretty hefty."

You rested your forehead against Jack's back because you already knew how this story ended.

"They fought off the initial ambush, but Frank went down. His armor had stopped the bullets, maybe a heavy armament or two, but the impact had left him with severe internal bleeding. He died before they could get it off him. And then a few hours later, the omnics came back, and they wiped out the rest of Gabe's unit."

You sat there, trying not to picture any of your thoughts. The words were enough. "I think I need that second drink."

"Yeah, me too." Jack turned around to face you. "I think, whatever spurred him to tell you this, might have him really worried about you."

You didn't really want to tell Jack, but it only seemed fair. "He thinks losing my hometown...and family, in one fell swoop, probably left me with some issues that I need to deal with. I'm sure it has, but I think overall, I'm OK. Well-adjusted even. I've had years to get over it."

You couldn't read Jack's expression.

"It sucks, and I mourned, but then it was all survive and don't get blown up or starve. Then I joined Overwatch and...well." You shrugged, because while you knew you weren't normal any more, your only known trigger was getting strangled. And that was a pretty reasonable one.

"What are you doing for Christmas?" Jack asked. He held your hands in his, his grip on your bandaged hand gentle.

"Probably making dinner with Genji. It's not a holiday I really celebrate." You were smart enough to leave out the "getting drunk" part. Because that's what you had done last year, new to Blackwatch and mourning your people. Genji and Jesse had been with you, and Jesse had gotten pretty trashed too. You didn't like thinking about it. This year, Jesse was going with Captain Amari and Fareeha to some kind of local festival.

"Gabe and I going to visit my family. Do you want to come? It's only four days and you have the leave."

"I don't think that's a good idea," you said immediately. Because Jack came from the heartland of America, a place of farms, and community, and lots of mayonnaise-based dishes. Everyone in church on Sunday. His family had a farm. There was corn everywhere.

Jack blinked at you. "Too much?"

"It's a sweet gesture. I appreciate it. But what are you going to tell them?"
"What do you want me to tell them?"

"I have no idea," you said truthfully. "Being described as the Blackwatch agent with no family to see at Christmas seems pretty pathetic though."

"I would never-"

"I know. I'm being flippant. Sorry."

"They won't make a big deal about it. It's really informal. We eat a nice meal, open presents, watch holiday movies..."

And you hadn't gotten anyone anything for Christmas. Because you didn't celebrate it. Because you were the sad Blackwatch orphan who planned to spend December 24-26 drunk. And now you knew why Captain Amari offered to let you work through Christmas. She had to have known one of them would spring something like this, because they were decent thoughtful people and they wouldn't want you to feel left out, and it was really kind, but fucking hell you weren't emotionally-equipped to deal with your friends' families. Ziv and Fareeha were the exceptions, and really they shouldn't even be here in Zurich.

Huh. Maybe Gabriel was right about you needing more therapy. That insightful bastard.

You realized Jack had stopped talking. You blinked as he tilted your chin up so you had to look into those terribly hypnotic blue eyes.

"Hey." His voice was gentle.

"Yo." The word came out very small. Damnit.

"You don't have to do anything you feel uncomfortable with. I'm sorry. I just want you to know you're welcome to come. I'd like it."

"I'll think about it," you said, and resolved to beg Captain Amari to put you to work.

Chapter End Notes

Love the feedback, it makes the work day go smoother, so thank you very much.

Have written way too much fluff and stuff for the past week. Need to get back on the plot, and violence, and stuff. goes back to writing fluff
Chapter 14

Chapter Notes

Sorry if you got two chapter updates. Double-posted this one.

See the end of the chapter for more notes

You had your second beer and then made your excuses because you had to get some rest. Jack didn't invite you to stay, but you could see that he wanted to, if only to convince you to go to Indiana for Christmas.

That was a date, you realized belatedly, as you snuck out of the officers' quarters. It was an ambush date. You'd been expecting Gabriel to just show up and make it less...strange. But no, it was just you, and Jack, and a ton of misfires. No sex. No dinner. And an invitation to visit Jack's family for Christmas. What the hell kind of first date was that?

You checked your tablet.

"Hope you're having fun, but not too much fun." Gabriel, otherwise known as He-Who-Set-You-Up.

"My bounty has gone up! It's now half of Winston's!" Ziv was a fucking idiot.

"I want to meet." That stylized white snake glimmered on your tablet.

You nodded assent at the screen, as if somehow, she could see you.

"Absolutely not," Lacroix said, when you brought it up two days later. You'd had Ziv try to trace the message, but with no luck. Then you started your preparations.

"I'm in better shape than you, sir." You were just down an arm. He was still bedridden.

"It's obviously a trap."

"Yeah, so was Shanghai." Ah, Blackwatch pettiness; rarely helpful, but so satisfying.

Lacroix actually rolled his eyes at you. That bastard.

"She is dangerous."

"Yeah, me too. And I kicked her ass back in Canada when we were rookies. I kicked it in Shanghai with her shiny upgrades. I'll do it again." You sat beside him, contemplating drugging his IV.
"It won't just be her."

"It won't just be me." You were going to get Jesse and Genji for this one. Maybe Captain Amari.

"You are not thinking logically."

"Guilty," you agreed. "That's why I'm asking your help planning it. I'll be the bait. I'm not even sure I'm good bait, because nobody gives a shit about me." You'd already been fitted for another set of that high collar armor and you were considering some kind of visor or mask, for anonymity.

Lacroix crossed his arms. "Get Gabriel to approve it, and I will."

Oh, that tricky bastard.

"Absolutely not." Gabriel sat at his desk and didn't even look up at you. Jack was sitting on the couch, pretending to read.

"She reached out to me. I want answers. Lacroix can plan the op."

"We don't run missions because you want answers, agent."

You narrowed your eyes. If that's how he wanted to play it. Fine. "Here is a summary of the damages she has caused in the last month, sir." You sent him the file. The update included more espionage, another murder, and a multibillion credit ransomware of the power grid episode in Oslo.

"It is just a meeting. I won't even try to kill anyone first. Agent Lacroix is the highest value target she is interested in. He is still on bed rest. Winston is the next highest, but he is essential to the lab. Agent Mihret is also considered high-value now, but he has minimal combat experience. I am not high-value, I have experience, and she sought me out. As I am not a priority Talon target, it is unlikely they will mount a full assault to attack me. If I have a support team, we risk very little. I will follow Senior Agent Lacroix's lead on this. Dr. Ziegler has approved of my return to active duty as of today. I have been fitted with upgraded augments, an improved sap glove, and new armor with better ballistic shielding and enhanced shock absorption, sir." That was meant to be reassuring, but it sounded petty.

"No." Gabriel looked at you. "I don't know what Angela's on, but that arm isn't healed." It was sore, and you had agreed to more physical therapy, but it was useable.

"It's a meeting, sir."

"Just stop saying "sir" when you mean "you asshole," Jack said. "You're making it worse."

You resisted the urge to glare at him and clasped your hands behind your back.

"Gabe, she's going to call you out onto the mat next."

"Jack, don't tell me to handle my people," Gabriel said harshly, and you wished Jack would stop trying to "help."
"I'm just warning you." You could hear the amusement in Jack's voice. "Lucky, take a walk. Go see if they have any of that gingerbread in the mess."

"Is that an order, sir?" You asked, trying not to make it sound like "you asshole," but not succeeding.

"It's a suggestion, baby."

You exhaled, nodding. If this didn't work, you would go to Captain Amari. Because you were doing this, one way or another.

When you came back with three gingerbread cookies, Jack was sitting on Gabriel's desk.
Their clothes were straight. Nothing was broken. There were no papers on the floor. Apparently they'd discussed it like adults. Huh.

"Sit down," Jack said.

You did, and you held onto the cookies because you were petty.

Gabriel gave you a hard look. "I will approve the mission, but Jack and I are coming as observers."

You tried to keep the incredulous look off your face. Because that was just stupid. "You are both high-value targets. That's overkill."

"If it's just a meeting, I'll get to see how you handle things. If it's a fight, you have some of the best backup in the world. What are you worried about?" Jack asked.

You closed your eyes and wondered if this was a bribe toward Christmas, because Jack wasn't to be taken at face value ever. You'd started shopping. You could afford nice presents for them, but now you were contemplating just giving them each a lump of coal. Yes, a lump of coal each, and you'd set them on fire.

"Those are the conditions. Lacroix can work us in. Now give me a damn cookie," Gabriel growled.

You handed him one and he snatched it out of your hand. You handed one to Jack too.
But you didn't kiss them or express any personal sentiments. Because that vow to keep work and this arrangement separate? You three were already crashing and burning.

Lacroix, to his credit, didn't bat an eye. He just took one look at your uncomfortable expression and laughed.

You replied to Bái Shé. "When and where?"

The reply was almost instantaneous. "Cambridge. Two days."

You showed it to Lacroix.

"I can work with that," he said.
"You and Genji are welcome to come with us," Jesse said. You were on his couch throwing knives at his dartboard. The darts were long gone.

"You know how Genji is about crowds."

"I know how you are about crowds. You'd do it for Fareeha though." Jesse sipped his whiskey. "So you aren't going to Indiana?"

"How the fuck do you know about that?" You threw the knife hard; it struck the cork, reverberating loudly.

"Educated guess. They went to LA last year."

You laid your head against the wall. "It's too much too fast," you said. "I don't even know how to talk about our "arrangement." Like, this is my significant other and my other significant other? This is my significant other and his significant other? These are my slightly significant others? Haha, kidding, I'm a friend with extra benefits? Meet his parents? Fuck." You threw back a mouthful of whiskey. "And Gabriel's been extra...overbearing since Shanghai. Also, the other day, when Jack wanted to see me, that was a surprise date. I thought it was work but then, no, he gave me the code to his room and we talked and shit. Mostly talked. I was on strict a "no sex" advisory from Angela." You took another drink. "And then I realized that Gabriel was right, don't you fucking dare repeat that, and I need more therapy. Fuck."

Jesse, to his credit, just poured you more whiskey. "So this op?"

"I know. I don't want to run ops with them. It's not that I don't trust them, I just...I'm comfortable with you and Genji. They're the super big guns. I'm subtle, and sneaky, and discrete. They, like, blow up buildings. Make a bridge or three go boom. Cause a fucking avalanche."

"That was Talon," Jesse laughed. "And I'll be there. And I blow shit up too."

"Yeah, I know." You sighed. "It's different."

Jesse looked slightly offended.

"It is different, Jesse. We're black ops. They're celebrity heroes."

There was a knock at the door. You ignored it and tossed the knife into the dartboard. You didn't hit the center, but it was close enough.

"OK, stop that for moment while I see who's there." Jesse got up crossing your path. He opened the door and Gabriel stood there, looking grumpy as usual.

"Boss," Jesse said and you couldn't place the tone.

"Lucky in there?" Gabriel could see you on the couch. Jesse stepped back, because even if he was your friend, he wasn't getting in the middle of this.

"Yeah," you said.

"Got some stuff to go over."
"Right now?" You asked, because even if you were tipsy, but you weren't stupid.

"It can wait," Gabriel said politely. Which was novel. He'd been growling at you for the past day.

"No, it's fine." You set your glass on the table. "Thanks, Jesse."

"Anytime."

You waved over your shoulder, walking beside Gabriel. You walked in silence, heading toward the office.

"My quarters?" He asked.

You stopped. "Jack there?"

"You want him there?"

"Doesn't matter. Was just wondering."

Gabriel nodded and opened his door. You went in -no Jack - and sat on the couch. Gabriel took off his hoodie and hat, setting them on the table.

"I haven't seen much of you," Gabriel said sitting down.

"Been going over the op," you said. Because you left for it tomorrow. "Also, went to therapy." You didn't look at him, because you weren't going to tell him he was right about that.

"You're mad about the op."

"A little," you said. "Nothing to do about it now. I just needed space to cool down."

"Heard you had an interesting evening with Jack."

You shrugged. "I wasn't expecting...that."

"Which part?"

"The whole thing. I thought it was work-related." You rubbed your forehead. "And then he invited me to Indiana for Christmas. Like how are you going to explain this to your parents? And he's all "however you want me to" and I'm just like "...I don't know." I have no idea."

Gabriel uncrossed his arms. "Do you normally drink with Jesse?"

"Maybe a couple times a month. Sometimes Genji's there. And sometimes I fall asleep on his couch."

"I know." Gabriel leaned over and kissed you. "I'd be lying if I said I wasn't jealous."

"You have nothing to worry about," you scoffed.

"I don't care. I want you here with me, not on another man's couch," he said. "I'm not telling you what to do. I'm just saying, you can drink here with me too."

"Well on this specific occasion, I was complaining about you." You tilted your chin up, daring him to be petty.
"I figured. I...overreacted. I'm sorry."

You slumped against the couch. "Yeah, me too."

"We have to keep our spats out of work," Gabriel sighed. "Gérard is having a field day with this."

"Your fault," you said.

"Yeah, I guess."

"Jack's too. I know this was his idea."

"Yeah."

Gabriel reclined beside you, resting his head in your lap. "I'm probably having the most difficulty keeping work and...us...separate. Jack is very good at compartmentalization. And while you know how to push my buttons, you rarely cross any hard lines."

You picked at his curls before giving in and rubbing his scalp. "Yeah. I noticed."

"You're all heart."

"One of us has to be sensible about this." And even if you were aggravated with him, Gabriel was...comfortable. You understood your space with him. Touch and sex were natural extensions of your shared affection. He didn't make you nearly as nervous as Jack. Which was something you were trying not to show.

"So not going to lie, Indiana sucks." Gabriel chuckled. "His family is OK if you score them individually then calculate the average. They have enough land you can hide out if it gets to be too much. The little brother's a shit. His dad doesn't approve of me, or the fact his son likes dick. His mother is a homemaker in her own strange reality but she seems to like me well enough. I don't mind his sisters. But when he's there, you get to see a side of him you don't see anywhere else."

"You think I should come." Because of course he did.

"If only so I don't have to deal with them by myself."

"So persuasive," you said. "How could I resist that argument?"

Gabriel ran his thumb over your lower lip. "It would mean a lot to Jack."

"I-" You sighed. "I don't know."

Each title made you cringe a little more.

"Please stop." You buried your face in your hands. "I think I'll stay here in Zurich and take Fareeha to that Yule festival. Christmas caroling sounds great. Do they even do that here? Because I'll be real embarrassed if I'm the only one making up lyrics for that Twelve Days of Christmas song."

"Huh. You weren't joking about panicking. What did Sato call you?"
"Nothing. We never talked about it," you said. "I think he wanted to. But we were being covert. And he didn't want to...freak me out. Yeah. I know. Residual issues from...things that I talked to the shrink about and whatever."

"It doesn't mean you loved him any less."

"I never told him that either," you said through clenched teeth.

"He knew. You don't hide it very well," Gabriel said, patting your head.

"Damnit, Gabriel."

"Come here. Let me hold you tonight. No rough stuff. You have to be in good shape for tomorrow." He got up and pulled you toward the bed, and you let yourself be persuaded.

---

On the transport to Cambridge, it was Jack that strapped you into your armor. He did it neatly and professionally, no lingering hands or groping. But you were very conscious of his eyes on you the entire time.

"She's probably going to jam the headset. Jesse's your sniper. Gabriel will be nearby if you need close range support. I'll be at mid-range." Jack was dressed down without his overcoat, opting for a hoodie to cover his armor. It was, surprisingly, gray.

You wore a gray overcoat on top of your armor. It didn't look out of place in the winter. The gray wide-brimmed, low-crowned hat wasn't flattering, but it helped hide your face. Gabriel wrapped a dark green scarf around your neck. You looked down at it. The pattern looked almost like fish scales, very intricately done.

"Early Christmas present," he said. "I made it myself."

"That is completely unfair," you said, unsure of why he would give it to you now. Did you look cold?

"You're welcome," he said, with a smirk.

Jack chuckled. "He'll probably get you something else, just fair warning."

None of it was fair, and you took a taxi to your destination. She’d named a cafe near the university.

You brought more printouts of Lao's photographs, excluding the ones with you. You wore your tanto in your belt and your gun against your side. Your sap glove had extra insulation to resist another electrical attack.

A girl in white with a reflective visor sat on inside the cafe. You scanned the area for obvious attackers, but saw none.

"Vampire, this is Gunslinger, I have eyes on your target."

"Gunslinger, this is Darklord, how the hell did you get Gérard to let you name things? We sound like a fucking D&D party."
"Darklord this is...Goldenrod. Stop complaining."

You could hear Jesse laughing. "Spotted. Am approaching."

You walked into the building, noting that it was empty. No barista greeted you. No other customers sat at the tables.

"Vampire, take a step back from the glass, you are in prime sniping real estate."

You complied, studying the girl in white. Lao was too thin, still on the cusp of adulthood. She had high cheekbones and a narrow chin, but her weight loss made her bones jut out sharply. Her eyes darted around too quickly, but that was how she'd always been. The circuits on her face were dark, and they looked uncomfortable against the burn scars. She kept her metal arm covered.

"Lao." You didn't sit.

"Lucky." Her voice was harsh, raspy, nothing like it used to be. You knew that voices could break from screaming. You could easily imagine how that happened. Her head had been shaved, the hair growing back as a downy fluff that only made her look younger. But it was her, no mistake. She removed the visor, crushing it between her metal fingers. "I can't...I don't have much time. I just killed the camera. It's a trap."

"I figured." You unhooked your carbine. "How many?"

"A dozen armored units, my handler, four snipers." She shuddered, metal fingers squeezing the table. "It's Lacroix they want."

"You catch that?"

"You need to get out of there, Vampire." Jesse voice crackled over your earpiece.

"Lacroix's not coming," you said.

"Then you need to leave." There were dark circles around Lao's eyes. Her cheeks were too gaunt, lips cracked and dry. They weren't taking very good care of your baby hacker.

"What happened to you, Lao?" You set the printouts on her table and stepped back, letting her take in the memories.

"I can't- I don't. The pictures helped. It was smart of you not to send one of yourself. I'm not trustworthy."

"I know." You wanted to reach out and comfort her, but you kept your hand on your gun.

"It's not me. But it doesn't matter. Kill me if you have to. Kill me while I remember. I didn't recognize you last time. I can't guarantee I will recognize you next time."

"Hush. We'll figure this out," you said gently.

"Vampire, armored squadron sighted. Take cover," Jesse said.

"I want to help you, Lao."

"I know." She closed her eyes. "I'm sorry. They wanted...Rivka. She went down shooting. I don't remember the rest."

"What's your handler look like?" Because you suspected she couldn't give you his name. "Tell me what you can."

Lao's eyes flashed. "Black suit. Middle-aged Ukrainian man. Brown beard. He is dangerous."

You backed away from the window. "Can you tell me anything about your conditioning?"

"It...hurts. I can't hold back much longer. I-" She screamed, voice raw, and flipped the table. "Get out!" She hunched over her arm tensed. "Serpent Protocol Loading. Lucky I-" Her head snapped up, shoulders shaking. "Initiating Taipan Mode."

"Going to fight me, kid? Because you were always shit at it."

"You need to move," Gabriel's voice growled over the headset. "Gunslinger's taken out three snipers. Got six soldiers in powersuits heading in your direction."

Lao leapt at you, arm gleaming under the LED lights.

You whipped your carbine off your back and shot her square in the chest. She dropped out of the air, her armor absorbing the impact. You grabbed the omnic-restraints off your belt, and kicked her onto her back. No bleeding: they'd given her good armor. You put her arms behind her back and cuffed her, knowing they wouldn't hold her very long. You couldn't take her and fight off the powersuits. So you would leave her behind again.

"Sorry about the rough stuff. Give me a head start, if you can. I'll find you again, I promise."

You walked behind the counter and found the barista. He was unconscious on the floor. You grabbed him and dragged him out the back, your left arm aching.

"I'm clear. Got a civvy. He's out cold."

"Leave him in the alley," Gabriel said.

You dropped the man beside a dumpster, scanning the narrow alleyways for a good sniper's nest. There was the glint of metal across the way, and you angled yourself around a corner.

"Fourth sniper spotted. Roof of the building on the southeast side - perched between chimneys."

"Just stick to the shadows, Vampire. I'll take care of him. Darklord, are you intercepting those heavies?"

"We don't have to engage, as long as Vampire moves her ass."

You climbed the fire escape of the building next door, staying in cover.

"Fourth sniper is down," Jesse said. "Oh, interesting. Your girl is loose. And she's going after those armored units."

You tensed. "Shit-"

"They're trying to take her down with minimal damage. Keep walking, Vampire," Gabriel said. "She's too valuable for them to kill."

You nodded, even though they couldn't see you. "Gunslinger, you spotted the handler?"

"Nah, that description was too vague. Wait, got a guy who didn't scatter. He's keeping an eye on the fight. He matches, bowler hat, solid build. Northside."

You went north, back to the side of the building where Lao had engaged the armored troops. You scanned the streets, catching sight of a man in a black bowler. He walked away slowly, and you dropped back down into the adjacent alleyway and followed, keeping to the shadows.

You tucked your carbine against your back, and drew your pistol. The controller moved at a steady pace, and you followed him down tree-lined streets, trying very hard not to think of Lao fighting alone.

"Deactivate Taipan mode." The man had a cultured voice and an eastern European accent. "Give it a moment and she should be docile. Don't damage her."

Yeah, this was the right guy. You needed him alive. Lao said he was dangerous. You believed her.

"Bái Shé has disengaged," Jesse said. "She's peacefully going with the armored units." The whole thing had taken less than ten minutes.

"Eyes on Vampire?" Gabriel asked.

"She's getting ready to engage the controller," Jesse said.

The handler had his back to you, and you watched him tense. If he didn't know you were there, he suspected it. You had to be fast. It wouldn't do for him to push his panic button or summon the armored units.

You lunged, going low and aiming for his waist. His fist whipped over your head, and you took him to the ground. You dug your knee into his back, focusing on keeping him down.

"You'll regret that," he snarled, and you hit him, bouncing his forehead off the cobblestones. He went limp, but you pressed your middle finger to the back of his neck, injecting him with sedative, just to be thorough.

"Controller acquired," you said. "Going to need pickup." You sat back on your heels and took the bastard's hat. It felt expensive and you found that obnoxious and infuriating. You smashed it with your left hand, because you couldn't crush his skull yet.

The flight back was oddly quiet. You figured Jack was probably disappointed by the lack of explosions, but your missions were subtle things: assassination, thievery, occasionally a kidnapping. You weren't a fucking hero and you'd never pretended to be one. You kept stealing glances at your prisoner, having already gone through his pockets. The objects of interest were nasty little gun, some kind of electroshock weapon that made your fingers twitch when you passed them a few inches over it, and an encrypted digital pocket organizer. Ziv could decrypt it for you.
The handler had an ID that said he was Dr. Danylo Chumak. Ziv was running the profile for a work up. You had him stashed in a holding cell.

The four of you sat in Gabriel's office, doing the post-mission workup.

"That went smoothly," Jack said. He sat on Gabriel's desk, grinning at you.

"Told you having you all along would be overkill." You'd gotten rid of the big floppy hat and your armor. But the scarf stayed, your fingers tracing the soft knit.

"A lot of things could have gone wrong," Gabriel said. "You could have been cornered by those armored units. Jesse might have missed a sniper. Báì Shé could've just as easily turned on you."

You shrugged. "I can take her."

"You'd hold back. You're soft on her. Leaving her alive will have consequences." Gabriel took his beanie off.

You bit your tongue, because you knew he was right.

"Hey, I thought our orders were just to meet. No one mentioned killing anyone today," Jesse said.

Gabriel nodded curtly. "You just need to be aware that your actions will always have consequences. You might look back on today and wish you'd taken care of her this afternoon."

"I know." You didn't feel any better about leaving Lao with Talon, but you hadn't been ready for a massive firefight in Cambridge. Sure, the four of you could've killed everything twice over, but that was a heavily populated area and it would've caused a lot of casualties and political blowback. That's not how you did things here. No, it was better to take it slow. Be smart. You couldn't afford to fuck up this time. Lao was in there. You just weren't sure how much was left and how to get her back.

"Who's interrogating Chumak?"

"Lacroix can work that out. We're still running background. Genji and Agent Mihret are digging. Lucky, Jesse, write your reports then take the rest of the day off. I'll let you know if there are any updates."

---

"Who's doing the interrogation?" You sat in Lacroix's hospital room. Your paperwork was done, and you were still waiting for all the information Ziv could get on Chumak.

"Are you volunteering?" he asked, studying his tablet. "I did not realize you had a taste for such things."

"I don't. But I can do it." You didn't want to ask it of anyone else. "I have a stake in this." There weren't a whole lot of candidates. Jesse didn't like it. Genji might do it. But you weren't going to make Gabriel pay for your obsession.

"I see." Lacroix put down his tablet.
You held his sharp gaze. "Do you?"

"You should've put her out of her misery," Lacroix said flatly.

"Maybe." His comment didn't sting, though it was true. You already knew Lacroix's viewpoints. You didn't take his opinion personally. "But I'd rather save her. And I'm willing to do a lot for that chance. It doesn't hurt that we'd need this information anyway."

"Chumak was a valuable acquisition. You can't just go at him willy nilly with your blades. This takes skill, not luck." There was no reproach in Lacroix's voice, just unpleasant truth. There was a shrewdness to Lacroix that you would never trust. But you respected his ability to get the job done, his talent for enraging people to the point of murder, and his infuriating sangfroid.

"How would you do it?"

"You really want me to tell you?" Lacroix's smile was zen. The hair on the back of your neck stood up.

"I want to do it right."

"Of course." There was an odd light in his eyes and he went back to studying his tablet. "What a terrible power love has, wouldn't you agree?"

You didn't know what to say that.

"I have cake." Jack's message was totally manipulative, and you didn't care, you were going for it.

"Is it good cake?" You wrote back.

"Only one way to find out. My place?"

You casually walked up to his door, entered the code, and acted like you belonged. Because this was a cake op. You were on a secret mission for cake. It didn't matter that cake was so obviously the bait, you were going to take that cake.

Jack was shirtless again, and you sighed softly. Damn he was pretty, all rippling muscle and peaches and cream skin. His hair was damp and he sat on couch, two beers and two slices of chocolate cake on the table.

"Huh, I think I had a fantasy like this earlier. Nicely done." You hopped over the back of his couch and sat beside him.

"About cake and beer?"

"Mostly, yes." You leaned over and kissed him. He smelled fresh, like soap and toothpaste. Yup, definitely just out of the shower.

He grabbed your collar, pulling you against him. "You should invite me on more missions with you. I like watching you work."
"I figured you were bored. I had a conversation, snuck around, and hit a guy."

"You're sneaky," Jack said. "You shot Bái Shé, tied her up, and told her you were still friends. Then you went on to drag a civilian out of the line of fire, avoided the heavies sent to kill Gérard, and kidnapped Bái Shé's handler." He kissed you again, his thumb stroking your throat.

"You make it sound so exciting." Your eyes lingered on his hands. The skin was rough, but his scarred knuckles and blunt nails were very different from yours. You took a sip of beer. "I was just thinking if we got into a firefight, I'd need better equipment. I'm not good at straight forward gun fights."

"Too sneaky," Jack agreed. "I'll talk to Torby about getting you something more suited for battle, if you like."

"It wouldn't hurt. But I have to figure out some new strategies. Besides duck, cover, and shoot."

"Don't get hit and that's most of it." He laughed. "Not that Gabe and I can talk."

"Yeah, I'm pretty sure you've been shot more times in one battle than I've been hit ever."

Your eyes traveled down his chest.

"You just wanted an excuse to ogle me."

"You're sexy. I don't need any other excuse."

"You can touch too," he purred.

You flicked his nose.

He bit your fingers, gently, then sucked them into his mouth.

Heat pooled between your legs and your breath stuttered.

Jack took your hand in his, rubbing circles on your palm. "So you mentioned fantasies earlier: cake and beer were one. What else?"

You laughed breathlessly, because you were not expecting that. "You first."

"I have a lot," he said.

"You probably have a specific one in mind," you said dryly.

"I do," he said cheerfully. "But do you want to know that or something about what Gabe likes?"

"Both," you said.

Jack's grin widened. "So greedy. I hear you're off medical restriction. Want me to show you?"

You looked at the clock. You had time.

"You know, I still haven't seen your bedroom."

Jack's smile curved into something predatory. "If I take you back there, will you stay the
"I actually have an op thing in the early morning, but I'll stay till then."

"That'll work," he said.

Jack's bedroom was messier than you expected. You were pretty sure that was a pile of Gabriel's clothes on the floor. And his Strike Commander coat stuck out of the closet. A brush sat on the bed. There were ammo packs strewn across his dresser alongside a worn stuffed dog, more than a few stitch jobs evident. It looked like some kind of hound.

"It's my younger sister's," he said when he saw you staring. A blush crept across his cheeks. "When I first left home, she gave it to me, so I wouldn't get lonely."

"Ah," you said. "He or she, looks well-loved."

"Her name's Daisy," he said, rubbing the back of his head. "I know, I know."

"What do you know?" You asked, turning to face him.

"It's silly."

"Not really," You shrugged. "Mementos are important." You carried your tanto with you everywhere. If Shin had given you a stuffed dog, maybe you wouldn't carry it on ops, but it would be in your room.

Jack stared at you for a second too long. "Yeah, I know." He gave you that crooked grin, and waved you over to the bed. King-sized and unmade, the bedding came in shades of light blue and gray.

The bed frame was metal, and you paused when you saw the headboard. Aesthetically, there was nothing wrong with it, a crisscross of thick metal bars made to look like basket weave. But there were large gaps in it, perfect for angling various restraints. You didn't used to notice things like that, but apparently you'd been influenced by some very bondage-oriented men.

"Too much?"

"Gives me a lot of ideas," you said.

"Good." Jack tugged on your arm while sitting on the edge of the bed. "So fantasies?"

"I said "you first." Quit trying to renege." You stood in front of him.

"I'm not. So then, you'll tell me one?" His hands stroked your hips and you wished you'd changed out of your ops wear.

"Yeah," you nodded.

"Then I'll tell you one of Gabe's?"

"Yeah," your voice dropped.

"Then you'll tell me another one?"

"That's how it works."
"I want to watch you play with yourself. Toys, fingers, the handle of my brush, I don't care. I want to watch," he said, hands resting around your waist as he looked up at you. "I know Gabe likes that too."

"I learned that one last weekend, Jack." You rolled your eyes. "I want to tie you up and tease you."

"Oh?" Jack unfastened your belt, pulled it off, and placed it on the bed. "I like that too. But eventually, I'd pay you back with interest."

"That's the other half of the fun," you said, running your fingers through his hair. You leaned in to kiss him, a little bit of stubble scratching your face. "You should probably tell me something I don't already know."

Jack laughed softly. "Gabe really wants to fuck you bareback."

"I knew that too," you said. "I told him he could. I have an implant. There's such a miniscule risk, I'm not going to bother citing the teeny tiny numbers."

"I know. I'm not worried," Jack said a little too smugly. "He's just wound real tight when it comes to you, Lucky."

"I'm not sure what you mean," you said.

"He's holding back. Doesn't want to scare you off."

You could see that and you wondered if this was a discussion you should be having with Gabriel himself. "I never thought he was vanilla. I can work with it, depending on the kink."

"Not like that, though Gabe's a pretty kinky bastard; he just needs to lose control, fuck you raw, and fill you up. He's naturally possessive and trying hard not to be."

"Oh. That's actually pretty hot," you said.

"I know," Jack said and kissed your jaw. "But he's got a real protective streak when it comes to you. You'll have to push him. If you want to make him lose it, you could probably call him papi."

"I uh...huh. Not a daddy kink person. It...yeah." You winced. Smooth. "The implications bother me."

"It's not about that. It's the power exchange, like "sir" or "master." Gabe likes fussing over his lovers, especially after he's dominated them. "Master" isn't his thing. "Sir" does it more for me than him. "Daddy" implies a certain level of trust that really turns him on. Papi is far enough away from "daddy" that maybe it won't trip your alarms. You don't have to use it," Jack said with a shrug. "I'm just letting you know."

"I'll uh...keep that in mind," you said. "I don't know if that's something I can do, but it doesn't bother me if he likes that."

"Fair enough," Jack said, pulling you into his lap. "Not asking you to do anything you're uncomfortable with. What else would you like to do?"

"I liked it when you tied me up. I wouldn't mind doing more than handcuffs." You were prepared this time when Jack groaned against you, his cock pressed against your stomach.
"I guess I can't be too rough with you if you have work in the morning," Jack said wistfully. "Let's try it your way first. There are cuffs in the drawer in the nightstand. Lube and condoms too if you need them."

You grabbed the leather cuffs. You looped the central chain of the cuffs through his headboard, then carefully fastened the cuffs around Jack's wrists.

"Comfortable?"

"No, my cock is going to tear a hole in my pants."

You pulled off your shirt and wiggled out of your pants. Kneeling over Jack in your underwear, you took the fingertips of your gloves between your teeth and pulled, dropping them on the bed.

Jack's eyes stayed on your face, his smile too knowing to be submissive.

"Lift your hips," you told him, pulling his sweatpants down. His length jutted up, already hard. "You have such a pretty cock, Jack." You leaned over, licking the head.

"Going to let me throat fuck you again, baby? Because I love watching you choke on me. You try so hard to take me down, and you can't quite yet- it's fucking hot," he growled.

You pressed down on his hips, keeping him flat against the bed while you slowly licked his shaft. Jack gritted his teeth, flashing you a feral smile. "That's it, don't be shy. I can't wait to get of this and fuck you."

You rolled his balls in your fingers and Jack grunted. You gave him a few strokes, watching his thighs tense. He started jerking his hips upward and you released him. His expression grew sharper.

You peeled your now damp panties off, and took off your bra. You had your knees on either side of his head, and began lightly rubbing your clit right over his face.

"Was this what you wanted to see, Jack?"

He tried to lick you, but you raised your hips, not giving him access.

"Tease," he groaned.

"But you wanted to see me finger myself. Don't you have a good view right there?" You slipped a single digit into your pussy, cooing softly. "I'm already wet, Jack. Do you hear that?" You slid the finger in and out, your slickness already starting to coat your thighs.

"You get so wet," Jack sighed. "It just means that greedy little cunt of yours needs to be filled.

"You really like to talk." You sat back on your heels, partially resting on Jack's bare chest. You pulled your finger out and rubbed it against Jack's lips. He nipped it lightly before sucking it. You slid another finger in, and he watched you with grim amusement. You withdrew your fingers and slid two back inside yourself.

"Come on, Lucky, let me eat you till you come. You taste so good."

"I'm going to gag you," you said. "Also do you have a nonverbal?"
Jack gave you a hard look. "I'll be fine."

"You sure?"

"What do you think you're going to gag me with?"

You rolled your eyes and grabbed your panties.

"You wouldn't," he said, a little breathless.

"Try me."

"You don't have the balls."

"Oh, you noticed?"

Jack glared at you, and you balled up your satin panties and shoved them past his lips.

You straddled him, rubbing his cockhead against you opening. You slid down an inch and he jerked his hips up, trying to get deeper inside you. You just raised your hips again, smirking at him.

His eyes were hot with outrage, and promised vengeance. You kept it up, rubbing his head against you. He struggled, but you pushed down on his hips and slowly sliding down onto his cock, panting as you took him to the hilt. He fit you so well, the stretch as good you remembered it.

You rode him, palms flat on his chest. "You look so pretty like that, Jack, tied up and furious underneath me. Do you like the feeling of my pussy without the condom?"

He gave one slow, deliberate nod, and you began to ride him, savoring the heat and fullness. You rolled your hips, head tilted back. You clench around him, the feel of his velvety cockhead, hot and slick inside you with no barrier, made you shiver.

You kept the pace gradual and deliberate, never giving Jack quite what he wanted. He bucked his hips, trying to control the rhythm. You just lifted yourself off him, more interested in teasing him than getting yourself off.

Jack's eyes were half open, he moaned around your panties, and you pulled them out. "Got something to say?"

"You'll get yours," he said, voice raw. "I was going to be nice, but now, I'm going to-"

You kissed him hard. "You're so fun to rile up."

"Just you wait, baby."

"Tsk." You clicked your tongue in disappointment, and lifted yourself off his cock. You reached for the hairbrush he'd conveniently left out. The handle was long and cylindrical. You rubbed it against your pussy lips, watching Jack's breathing speed up. "If you can't be good, I'll just take care of myself." You slid the rigid plastic in watching Jack's pupils expand. "It's not as thick as you, but it's also not as obnoxious." You began to fuck yourself slowly with the brush, breaths quickening.

You smirked at Jack's strained face, and rubbed your clit. "I'll admit, it's not as satisfying, but it'll get the job done."
"Why settle for less?" Jack said, voice low and tense. Sweat beaded on his face and his forearms bulged as he clenched against the restraints. "Why not just give yourself what you really want?"

"I want to see you squirm," you taunted.

"Karma's going to make you my bitch," he told you, breaths coming quick and hard.

"I don't think that's how the phrase goes. You closed your eyes, making sure to give Jack a good view of yourself spread open.

"I think you'll get bored of that soon enough, and come crawling back to me."

"I can do this all night, Jackie boy. How long can you take it?"

He snarled and twisted against the restraints. You heard a pop, and suddenly, you were on your back, Jack straddling your chest. He had your belt in hand, and he gathered your wrists in the other hand and tied them to his headboard.

"You're in for it now."

You tried to jerk away, but he'd secured you tightly.

"Don't worry, I won't gag you. I want to hear you beg." Jack gripped your chin, his eyes wild as he pulled the brush handle out of you. He licked it once and smirked. "I have better toys. You should have asked about those." He eyed you as you wiggled against the belt. "You have to work later, so I'll spare that tight little asshole tonight. But this? You asked for this."

Kneeling between your thighs, he pushed inside you and you shrieked, because he went in hard, fucking you into the mattress with feverish enthusiasm. He held your knees apart, his mouth traveling between your breasts, sucking your nipples while he pounded you.

"Damnit Jack," you gasped his name like a plea, and he just drove deeper, slamming into you with savage pleasure.

"That's it," he breathed. "I love how needy you sound when you say my name." He nuzzled your neck before nipping you sharply. He left bruising kisses on your skin, and you were damn sure it was on purpose, because Gabriel wasn't the only possessive one. "Tell me how it feels, baby. I want to hear you."

"You're so vain," you panted as he slowed his thrusts. "You just want to hear me talk about how you stretch me out and make me ache. I shouldn't give you the satisfaction."

Jack kept the steady pace, fingers brushing against your lips. "I've got you in my bed, tied up underneath me. That's pretty satisfying."

"You're not...refuting my point," you said as he wound his fingers through your hair.

"Give me what I want, let me take it. It all ends the same: you screaming my name while I nail you to my bed." He yanked your head back and kissed your throat, thrusting hard inside you.

His casual arrogance made you want to bite him, or at least push him harder. But you now recognized that urge. It was that same escalation that got you flipped and tied to the bed. You needed to wind it back, because you and Jack were dangerous together.
"It's not fair. I wanted to tease you more," you said, trying to keep yourself in check. "You look so good pulling at your restraints. Couldn't you let me enjoy it a little longer?"

Jack laughed softly kissing your jaw. "You're just so enticing." He gripped your hips, moving faster now. "Maybe another time. I haven't had you since last Sunday, and I want to feel your tight little pussy milking me while you scream my name. You want me to give to you raw, like this? You want me to come inside you?"

"Please Jack," you wrapped your legs around his waist, trying to pull him deeper.

He obliged you, fingers slipping down to your clit to add to the stimulation. You threw your head back, straining against your bonds. You arched beneath him and he tilted your chin up. "That's it, I like seeing you writhing underneath me."

"Harder," you panted. "Come on, Jack."

Jack groaned.

"You wanted me to beg? I'm begging," you said, eyes flashing. "I want it, Jack, Give it all to me."

"That doesn't sound like begging." Jack kissed you. "You're going to have to convince me."

He kept rocking his hips, his cockhead hitting your g-spot, his fingers stroking your clit. You shook underneath him, heat and pressure coiling inside you. Your thighs ached from the tension. Jack's touch kept you climbing, but it was too light to let you finish.

The lewd sound of his shaft sliding in and out of you, made you clamp down on him. Jack kept thrusting, eyes focused on your face, mouth open, breathing hard.

"Please Jack," your voice was shaky. "Can't you feel how wet I am for you? It's all so I can fit your big dick inside me. I want to feel you shoot your hot cum inside me. I want you to fill me up, sir."

Jack shuddered and growled, fingers hard against your nub, his strokes speeding up again. "Come for me then, agent." The sheer authority in his voice would have been enough, but then he buried himself in you to the hilt.

It was enough to finish you hard. You came panting and shaking, heat spreading from your center in waves. Jack hissed your name as you milked his cock, his hands gripping your hips with bruising force, his cum gushing out hot inside you.

You took it all, eyes squeezed shut, fingers digging into your belt, Jack's body heavy against yours.

You lay there, unsure how much time passed, mind pleasantly hazy.

Jack pulled out with a wet pop, and you bit your lip, watching his cum, mingled with your juices, ooze out.

"Fucking Hell, that's hot." Jack's eyes were wide and he brushed your hair out of your face.

"There's a lot," you said.
"And you took it all," Jack purred, his lips drawn back in a fierce smile. "That's my girl." He kissed you hungrily and you melted against him. "Gabe would have loved to see this... We'll just have to do it again."

"I have to work in the morning, Jack."

"Worn out already?"

"My arms hurt."

"Shit, sorry." You sighed as he untied you, and began to rub your wrists. The leather left angry red lines in your forearms, and Jack kissed your hands. "Want to get a shower after this?"

"Yeah, I should get cleaned up."

Jack lay on his back and pulled you to his chest. "In a minute." He rubbed your arms.

"You OK?"

"Yeah," you said. "A little blissed out, but I'm good."

"Good," he said and kissed your cheek.

"I'm lying in the wet spot."

Jack scooted over and pulled you on top of him. "Better?"

You rested your cheek against his chest. "You're adequately warm."

He laughed at that. "Well, as long as I can keep cuddling you."

"The Assassin-Butler is not your teddy bear," you said with great pomp.

"Shut up and let me hold you."

You stayed there, listening to his heart beat. He wrapped one arm around your waist, the other combed through your hair. It was a strange place to be, especially without Gabriel, but not a bad one.

"What are you thinking about?"

"You really want to know?" Your voice wavered.

"Of course," he said gently.

"I never got to eat my cake."

Chapter End Notes

...I have never written this much smut in my life. Fortunately, I do have the plot outlined. Unfortunately, the Christmas arc is huge and mostly fluff and smut with a tinge of seasonal angst. I can cut it down if you guys are like "OMG, enough of this bullshit, we want the angsty meat of the story!" Because it's really big and I didn't mean to let it go that far.
As always, comments totally make my day.
Chapter 15

Chapter Notes

Violence & angst in this one.

See the end of the chapter for more notes.

Jack had awakened when you got out of bed to get dressed. He'd been groggy, kissing your chin and grinning when you tucked him back under the blankets. The fucking Strike Commander shouldn't be that cute. That was too much power in one individual. No wonder Gabriel put up with all his shit. You liked him, even though you weren't sure if you and Jack had anything in common besides Gabriel and chemistry. Gabriel said it wasn't just sex. You weren't so sure if that applied to Jack.

But you couldn't focus on that now.

You checked your tablet. Ziv had compiled quite a bit of information about Dr. Danylo Chumak. That was his real name. He was a psychiatrist specializing in behavioral modification. He had an unpleasant weakness for barely pubescent girls. He had been a governmental researcher till he touched the wrong man's daughter and had been a private sector military contractor since. Interestingly, his was not a name connected to Talon. At least, not before yesterday. Ziv was still working on the electronic organizer.

Lacroix had managed to get a wheelchair. You were slightly surprised to see him in the observer's room. Ziv and Genji were there too. Genji was your backup. Ziv had requested to sit in. You weren't sure what that said about his mental state, but you'd keep an eye on it.

"This is too important for you to improvise," Lacroix said, handing you an earpiece. "I will advise."

"Thanks," you said, because you totally wanted another voice in your head while you tortured a man.

You adjusted your gloves. You had attachments on. Chumak had been drugged. You just needed to convince him to talk.

You entered the room, very conscious of the unpleasantly bright lights and stink of bleach. "Hello Chumak," you said, voice distant and dry. "We should talk."

He sat strapped to the chair, his pupils dilated, nostrils flared. He ground his teeth and stared hard at you. He was a solid man, with slabs of muscle under a layer of fat. He had a sharp angled nose and thin lips. He might have been distinguished, in another setting. Balding with a bushy beard, he dressed nicely and got regular manicures. And there was a tell, in and of itself.

"You've drugged me, you bitch."

You just watched him struggle against the restraints.
"This is illegal!"

"Yes," you agreed. "But do I look like I care?"

"What do you want from me?"

"I want to know everything you know about Bái Shé. I want to know everything you know about neural reconditioning. I want to know everything about who you work for, and what they're doing. If you can tell me these things, to my satisfaction, well, it doesn't have to get unpleasant."

"I don't know what you're talking about."

You leaned over and patted his cheek, grateful for your gloves. "Don't lie to me, Chumak. I'm not a patient woman. And I'm certainly not like those little girls you like to diddle."

He spat. The drugs impaired motor coordination, and the saliva got stuck in his beard. You laughed, though it wasn't so much funny as gross. "Bái Shé's Serpent Protocol is clumsy. Requiring verbal cues is so inconvenient."

"Ease up. Give him room to talk," Lacroix said.

You stepped back, arms crossed.

"You- You're that friend she tried to contact. Lucky Shot," he sneered. "You're nobody. She has orders to execute you on the spot." That certainly wasn't how it went down. Did that mean Lao could circumvent some of the commands? At least for a little while? "You're just a useless cow. Now Bái Shé, she's a real achievement. I've made sure of it."

"And yet this "useless cow" took you down. Funny how that works, Chumak. Bái Shé isn't all that amazing. You abducted a traumatized teenage girl, rebuilt her badly, and can't even control her half the time. I'm so very impressed."

"You know nothing! She may be a prototype, but she is an invaluable test subject. We've improved the reconditioning process since. No, Bái Shé isn't cutting edge any more. But she's still useful in a quite a few ways." He licked his lips and you wondered if he was trying to goad you into killing him. If so, he was very convincing.

"It's hilarious that you work for Talon. Of all groups, I would've thought they'd see the futility in your work."

"Talon supports science! Not the obsolete ethics of a bunch of fools with no understanding of the world!"

"Oh, what'd they promise you?"

"Enough, I know how your drugs work, I've designed some myself! You can't make me talk, bitch."

"He's not as resistant as he thinks, look at him sweating like a pig," Lacroix said in your ear. "Keep pushing."

"So what method ended up working on her? Drugs? Hypnotism? Behavioral modification? Nanites?"

Chumak gripped the chair, shaking. "You can't make me talk, bitch."
"Hit him," Lacroix said. "Remind him who is in charge."

You backhanded him with your left hand.

He yelped, and you gripped his chin. "I asked you a question. What method ended up working?"

"Is that the best you've got?" He sneered, blood trickling down his face. You'd split his lip.

"What method, Chumak?" You slapped him again, watching him screw his face up and flinch away. "It doesn't matter if you tell us or your lab assistant does. But if you can't even get this much right, what use are you?"

"Don't engage him. Don't let him think. Just hit him again," Lacroix said, ever the demon at your ear.

You hit him again, and he spat blood. He looked at you, a little incredulous.

"I can do this all day," you said, raising your gloved hand.

"We used industrial-grade Ketamine, to keep her pliable. Behavior-modification to teach the habits. Neural leashes interfaced in her cybernetics to reinforce behaviors. It's all basic conditioning with more sophisticated execution."

"Details, doctor."

"You won't like them," he smirked.

"Maybe, but you don't care what I like."

"Good finesse and hook, but be careful how much power you give him," Lacroix said. "You'll undo all the work you put into breaking him down."

Chumak told you exactly what he'd done to Lao, in graphic detail, with the euphoria of a man who cared nothing about shame. There were a lot of ways to break people. Chumak was intimately familiar with many of them and shared his observations, a nasty smile creeping onto his face whenever he got to talk about a particularly awful act he personally committed. You clenched your left fist, grateful for the shielding of Torby's sap glove.

"So you understand that whatever Bái Shé was before, that girl's dead. You can't save her."

You only smiled, because Lacroix was right, you couldn't engage him. "Tell me about the program sponsors."

"Not worth my life," Chumak said.

"Your life isn't worth much," you told him.

"You can hit me all you want, cow. I'm not afraid of your fists."

"That's all you're going to get out of him without escalating. Choose a tool." Lacroix sounded so detached it was almost reassuring.

You picked up the bolt cutters, because you knew how those worked. You rolled them in your hands.
"Take something small," Lacroix said. "See how he handles it."

"You are right-handed, aren't you?" You said, so very calm, because you already understood what you had started. No matter what he or Lacroix said, you were going to get Lao back. And you needed every bit of data this man had, if she was ever going to live a semi-normal life.

That was no excuse for torture. You just didn't have a better way. You knew that, but cognitive dissonance was a bitch.

You cut off his right pinky, because you had to start small.

He screamed, cursed, called you names. You didn't really listen. You weren't quite in your body any more. The disassociation made it all much easier.

"You'll have to escalate. Not too far or you'll break him too soon. It seems he isn't quite as resilient as he acted." Lacroix laughed darkly.

There was no forgiveness for this, even if he had it coming. It was good that you felt numb. You had worried for awhile that you'd go berserk like Gabriel. If you thought about what he did to Lao, you still might. Best to focus on doing the job right. Your feelings didn't matter; getting the information did.

You cut off his ring finger, and reminded yourself that he wasn't going to need any of it after you were done with him.

You repeated your questions and he just cursed you.

So you whittled down his right hand to little nubbins, nothing left. Detachment the word of the day. He held out till you got to the thumb. Something about that opened the flood gates; Lacroix said it was a symbolic removal of his humanity, but you were pretty sure Chumak wasn't much of a human to begin with. You studied his ruined hand, seeing parallels where you didn't want to, but also reminding yourself that this was a different situation with clear and present danger to Lao.

Rationalization was a powerful coping mechanism.

Chumak talked. He talked more than you expected, and you sat and listened, nodding and asking the right questions, every so often taking a cue from Lacroix. There were a few Big Pharma companies you would be visiting. A Cardinal in Hungary. An MP in Denmark. A CEO in Argentina. Even a UN ambassador or three; Nguyen's name was mentioned again. No, they didn't know how much of her original personality was left. Yes, some brain damage had occurred, but that was to be expected when interfacing neurons with experimental nano-circuitry. Yes, Talon had a more polished version now, but Bái Shé was an excellent hacker and they would use her till she burned out.

He told you everything, much of it above your education, and you listened politely, trying not to stare at the severed fingers on the floor. He gave trade secrets. He gave locations. He gave you everything you asked of him.

"Please," he asked after he'd talked. "Please."

"Would you like to do the honors?" Lacroix asked.

You drew your knife and you cut Chumak's throat. You didn't stab all the way through like you normally did. You cut a neat slit, and then you watched him die, air seeping out his neck. It wasn't quick and quiet like your stealth kills, but you hadn't meant for it to be. You sat, and you watched the life drain out of him.

When you finally stepped out of the room, Gabriel stood in the hallway, arms crossed. Your eyes darted to the observation room door.

"Yeah, I watched the whole thing," he said gruffly. "Lacroix said you requested this one."

You nodded, because you didn't trust your voice. The air out here was clearer and cleaner. Suddenly your knees felt weak.

"When he gets better, I'm going to break his face for letting you do that," Gabriel said casually.

You shook your head. "Not your call."

"It is my privilege to take care of my people. You shouldn't have done that."

"You do it all the time. This one was mine." You turned your head, because you needed to wash your hands again. Maybe drink. Then you'd go to the office and collate the data. You'd listen to the recording, and you'd fast-forward through the parts with screaming. Then, you would process what it all meant, and how you could save Lao. Because that's why you did this.

"Let's get you cleaned up. You've got something right here." He tapped your cheek.

You didn't bother trying to wipe it off. You'd only smear it.

"Who told you?" You dropped your bloody clothes on Gabriel's bathroom floor and slipped into the shower, savoring the hot water pounding down on your skin.

"...Saw you coming out of Lacroix's room," Gabriel said, his tone strange to your ears. He stripped off his clothes and stepped into the shower. He filled the space and you flattened yourself against the wall to make room.

"I hated it," you said, slumping against the wall.

"I know." Gabriel sucked in a breath as he looked you over. "Jack do that?" You glanced down at your bruised wrists, and hips. Your neck was covered in hickies. You ached, but you weren't entirely sure that was from rough sex.

"Yeah, we fell asleep without an emitter." You reached for the soap and lathered up. You'd snuck a glance in the mirror. You had blood spatter on your face, but it wasn't too gory. Just an obvious sign that you'd been up to no good.

Gabriel took the loofah and began to wash your back. You sighed as he rubbed you down. "Lucky, you push too hard, and I'll have Ana pull you from the Bái Shé ops."

You shook your head. "I'm not doing that again." Unless you had to, and you were hard-pressed to think of those circumstances right now. "Please don't threaten me. I can't process it."
Gabriel helped you dry off and gave you one of his shirts. You sat on the bed, waiting for the recriminations to begin. Gabriel sat beside you.

"If you were any other agent, I would tell you that you did a good job," he said. "But you're not. I would never ask that of you. You don't have the temperament for it."

"I know. But Lao is my responsibility."

"No shame in asking for help." There was bite in Gabriel's words.

"Will you hold me then?" You asked, because you were too tired to fight.

Gabriel scooted back and you sat between his thighs, his arms around your waist. You shivered, despite Gabriel's heat.

"You didn't eat beforehand, did you?"

"Of course not." You laughed softly. "Tell me all you know or I'll bleagh!" You snickered, even though you felt no humor and all you wanted to do was sleep.

Gabriel kissed your shoulder, stroking the bruised skin. "We have enough nightmares. Why would you make more for yourself?"

You didn't start crying then, but it was a near thing.

You opened one eye. Your stomach hurt. Hunger pains for sure. You slowly unwrapped yourself, realizing you were tangled in a cocoon of blankets. Eventually, you outsmarted the maze of inanimate fabric and sat up.

Gabriel was asleep beside you, on top of the covers. His tablet was on the pillow and you guessed he'd been trying to work and keep you company.

Your stomach grumbled again. You hadn't eaten since... Well shit, you didn't remember. You probably grabbed something after the mission, but before your encounter with Jack. And then.. Oh yes. You'd tortured a man, heard a bunch of his awful secrets that you hated every second of, and then killed him. And Gabriel had witnessed it all.

You took a deep breath and flexed your fingers. Logically, that wasn't so bad. But you still had an unpleasant pressure in your chest, somewhere between panic and guilt. You stood, feeling fragile. You needed to eat, and then maybe your head would settle. Though you suspected that wasn't really the case.

Your boots were right next to the couch and your clothes were on Gabriel's bathroom floor spattered with blood. Well. You could put them back on, and go to your room, and change. You padded to the bathroom, noting a third toothbrush on the sink. Well, it wasn't yours. You didn't know how it got there. And you weren't going to think about it right now.

You pulled on your slightly bloody uniform and checked the mirror. Oh, you looked like shit. You combed your fingers through your hair, brushed your teeth with your finger, and checked your bruises. Nothing too bad. Gabriel just wasn't used to seeing the aftermath of sparring with Jack. Sex was way gentler.

When you came out of the bathroom, Gabriel was sitting on the edge of the bed.

"Hey," you said, because you were smooth. "Thanks. How long was I out?"

"Just a few hours. I'm going to down to the office. See you there?"

"Yeah, half-day for me. I got some things to do first."

Clean clothes and food made you feel fifty percent more human. But the sense of unease had only gotten worse. You weren't up to analyzing the transcripts and you didn't really want to face Jesse yet either. Instead, you made your way to the infirmary and were relieved to find Lacroix awake and reading.

He didn't seem surprised to see you at all. He took one look at your face and gestured for you to sit.

"The first time is always the worst," he said. "Or at least the strongest shock to the system."

"I'm just going to ask if you're a psychopath. I mean, can we just skip all the formalities and get that out of the way? Because if you are, I don't think your coping methods are going to work for me."

"I am not," he said, primly.

"OK," you said, unsure if you believed him.

"It is supposed to be awful. The moment it stops being disturbing, is the moment you need to hang up your weapons."

"Yeah, I figured. Killing is normal as fuck. But torture is a stain on the soul."

"Sarcasm won't help you here, Chanceux." Lacroix watched you with those sharp brown eyes, his mouth a thin line. "Why are you asking me instead of Gabriel?"

"I don't know."

"You do; you just don't want to acknowledge it."

"Because Gabriel is a super tough warrior who crushes all potential weaknesses? Because if I let him, he'll coddle me?"

"That's half of it." Lacroix set his book down. "The other half, is because you are not like Gabriel. He is exceptional at wetwork and black ops. He is a clever strategist. But he is not a subtle man by nature; he is so strong that he does not have to be. You are not that powerful. And so you learned to be underhanded. Your thinking is all sharp angles and deep water. You are more like me; you have a good head for espionage. Be honest about your skill set. You will never don power armor and slay hordes of foes, Chanceux."
You gave him a look, because you didn't need the French version of your nickname. "You know, "Lucky" isn't my name."

"It's a good handle. There is power in names. There is meaning in rebirth. Use it."

You were now pretty certain he was heavily medicated; getting into the wheelchair must have taken more out of him than you thought. "OK. So now what?"

"Now you find a way to live with your actions." He gave one of those little half-shrugs, like he was talking about the weather or a neighbor's dog shitting on the street. "For some of us, it is simple guilt. You suffer a price, your guilt is absolved. For some of us, it is good deeds. But it is what you know going in that matters. To torture others, you must hate yourself a little. To keep your humanity, you must love something far more than yourself."

You rubbed your head. "Did Angela slip you extra painkillers? Because I have no idea what you're talking about."

"You asked for help, I'm giving it to you."

"Break it down, Lacroix."

" Effective treatments must be cathartic. Some people go to a Domina for...penance."

Some people, huh? You'd met Amélie Lacroix and now you were pretty sure you were never going to look her in the eye again.

"OK, so intense BDSM is a possibility." Unlikely though. Your sex life was already out of control. That did not seem like a good addition right now.

"Some people do good deeds. Volunteer at orphanages or save the dolphins: put some good back into the world. Some people are content if the mission is a success. Rescue Bái Shé, and maybe you won't mind the karmic price."

You shrugged. "That's the long-term goal. I don't know how that will take the edge off now."

"Go accomplish something. Run a mission. Get your adrenaline up. Sometimes your body just needs to exert itself." He picked up his book. "Or take human comfort. Find your lovers and sort yourself out. Whatever you choose, you will not be like you once were, but you'll be able to live with yourself."

Lacroix stared at his book, clearly dismissing you.

Wait a minute. He said "lovers." Plural. Damnit, Jack was right. Lacroix totally knew.

"Thank you," you said, even if you weren't sure how much you meant it.

"De rien, Chanceux," he said, not looking up.

"How do you do it?" You were facedown on the mat.
"I simply use your own weight against you," Genji said. "You charge, I redirect, you end up on your face."

"OK, let me clarify." You sighed and rolled over. "I meant, how do you deal with the awfulness of torture?"

"Ah. I only torture people who deserve it. And since the whole point of this is revenge, I'm not so picky as you."

You opened one eye. "You're after the Shimada. Why?"

"Truly, you do not know? You have access to my full personnel file. You have not read it? You should." Genji crouched beside you.

"It seemed...rude. I don't know. You're cleared and you watch my back. Your secrets are your own." It seemed like a violation of trust. Everyone in Shit Spiders already knew your sob story, and early on you wondered if it was pity, not respect that got you in. Yeah, you didn't know what Lacroix was spouting about you being spy material. You obviously were not. "You want me to read it, or you want to give your version?"

"My surname is Shimada."

"Oh." Well, now you felt super dumb and definitely not spy-like. You hadn't worked many Shimada missions or really done much with the files, but even you'd heard about Genji Shimada, the second son killed by the Shimada heir. Granted, Genji looked completely different from that laughing playboy you'd seen in dossiers. "Well, I uh...you're OK with this? Like, legit OK? Because I'll go renegotiate your contract with Gabriel right now." Or maybe not because this mat was awful comfy.

"Angela rebuilt me with this body. In exchange, I help dismantle the syndicate that destroyed me. The trade is fair enough."

"And your brother?"

"He was a symptom of the problem. He has stepped down because of it. I keep tabs on him. He is...unhappy. That's karma."

"Are you saving him for last?" You sat up. Your arms were a little stiff, and you ached from Jack's enthusiasm, but you needed to get through this post-mission guilt.

"He's my brother, Lucky."

You shrugged. "I don't have any context, sorry."

"No. I have no interest in harming my brother."

"OK," you said, and filed that thought away for later.

"You want to save your old comrade?"

"Yes."

"Then it is worth it, isn't it?"

"Worth it doesn't make it easy, Genji. I'm not even sure it's manageable."

"Things worth doing are rarely easy, Lucky." He stood, flexing his flesh hand. "Get up and You set a tin of bourbon balls in front of Jesse at lunch.

"Does this mean you're done avoiding me?" He looked up frowning.

"Yes. Sorry." You sat down at his table in the mess.

"I ain't your dad, Lucky. You do what you want," he scowled.

"I shouldn't have done Chumak, myself. I hated it. It was awful. But if it helps me save Lao, I'll do it again. Which is also awful. I've been going around in circles about it all day."

"And you didn't want to ask the boss to do it," Jesse said opening the tin and popping a bourbon ball into his mouth. "Genji would've done it for you."

You shrugged. "Lao is personal. Maybe I'm too close. And if you repeat that-"

Jesse just laughed at you. "It's obvious you're obsessed. Ana ain't gonna take you off just yet, but you need to let up."

You sighed. "Yeah, OK. He fucking deserved it though."

"Yeah," Jesse said. "I saw the transcripts. He deserved it. But you didn't."

"Yeah," you agreed. "I talked to Lacroix about it too. That was...a mindfuck."

"Lacroix's a real piece of work, Lucky. I never want to get on his bad side and neither do you. So know your limits. You ain't gonna to be a Crusader. You certainly ain't gonna be a concert pianist. You ain't gonna be the next Marquis de Sade, and that's just fine." Jesse ate another bourbon ball. "These are real good."

"They're part of your early Christmas present."

Jesse cocked his head to the side. "I thought you didn't do Christmas."

"...I didn't. But then Gabriel gave me that scarf and it's all...I owe everyone presents. I understand presents."

"You understand bribes," Jesse said, shaking his head. "You going to Indiana?"

"...I don't know." You stole a bourbon ball. These turned out nice. "It seems like a bad idea."

"Because?" Jesse drew the word out.

"A houseful of Morrisons at Christmas. It's a fucking made-for-TV movie."

"How Lucky Saved Christmas." Jesse snickered.

"Shut up. And it would be more like "How Lucky Ruined Christmas, Chanukah, Winter Solstice, and Every Other December Holiday."
"Morrison wants you to go? Like really?"

"Seems that way." You still weren't sure why he wanted you to go. Pity or at least decency seemed to be the big motivator. Sex might be one. Friendship obviously played a part. Maybe he wanted to mess with his parents? You had no idea.

"The Commander want you to go too?"

"Yes, but to serve as a distraction from him. I'm not going to play his decoy. I owe him, but I don't owe him that much."

"And you don't know how to relate to civilians outside of cover, so yeah, I can see that." Jesse grinned at you lazily. "Maybe you, Gérard, and Genji can go sit in the conference room and practice looking evil."

"I mutilated and killed a guy this morning, Jesse. I am not someone you invite to your family's farm for fucking Christmas," you hissed.

"If that's who you wanna be, Lucky." Jesse popped another bourbon ball in his mouth. "Good bourbon balls. You make'em yourself?"

"Yes," you muttered.

"They're great. I think Ana'll like'em too. You just do you, sugarpie." He got up and took the tin. "Let me know what your plans are. Genji wants to do some weird shit for New Years."

You sat alone at the lunch table, feeling distinctly outplayed, and worse, you weren't even sure why.

Lacroix was right about the adrenaline. Your skin felt like it fit you again, even if you didn't really like looking yourself in the mirror. Your fingers twitched as you read the transcript from this morning with Chumak. You sounded way more intimidating on paper than you remembered. Of course, they hadn't recorded Lacroix's coaching. Ziv and Winston were translating all the science jargon into plain English, and you were pretty sure Winston wasn't going to be too happy to see you. You added him to your Christmas shopping list, just to keep things civil.

Gabriel wasn't in the office when you got in, which was OK, because you needed space to contemplate what you were going to do about Lao.

You kept seeing those severed fingers on the interrogation room floor. You wondered if your shrink would like to hear about this or if this would be too nightmare-inducing. Fuck. You really were more fucked up than you thought. It was like you'd been hiding it from everyone for so long that you'd managed to fool yourself. And now that you had to deal with feelings, your whole spectrum of crazy was making itself known. It was damned inconvenient.

You hadn't received any more messages from Bái Shé. You needed a way to track her. If you could tag her with a nanochip transmitter, even if they jammed signals, you'd be able to start collecting data and pinpoint her approximate location.
Switching over to Gabriel's administrative work was easier. You finished that and checked the time. You'd been here long enough. You could take a walk, get some air. It was fucking cold, but you didn't need to be around people.

You found your way out to the Memorial Wall. You didn't have incense, but you had a pack of cigarettes and a flask of bourbon. You lit a cigarette and sat in front of the wall. The ground was freezing, but there was no snow. You really didn't smoke often, but today called for it.

Lao wasn't quite dead. You weren't sure if that was living, but you knew that Captain Patel wouldn't abandon her. You knew Shin wouldn't let this crime go unpunished. And they wouldn't have faulted you for what you did today. They would have helped you. That thought gave you a greater measure of peace.

You contemplated the bourbon for a moment. Not as pacifying as the approval of your dead friends, but pretty high up there.

"This is a no smoking area, Agent."

You looked up to see Jack, in overcoat and eyepiece, standing above you, arms crossed. The stony look surprised you. Unless he knew what you'd been up to. Never mind, of course he knew.

"Sorry sir," you said, cigarette dangling out of the corner of your mouth. You stepped away from the memorial, because this wasn't for the dead, this was for you.

"Most of the grounds are no smoking, Agent. There are designated areas."

And you thought Blackwatch was petty. You sighed and pulled off your left glove, then put the cigarette out against a metal finger. You put the half-smoked cigarette back in your mouth and put your glove back on.

The Strike Commander was still giving you a look.

"It's out," you muttered.

"Walk with me, Agent."

That was definitely an order. You slunk beside him, noting that there were plenty of people on the grounds. He probably wasn't going to tell you off in front of them. Jack led you back to Gabriel's office. Gabriel was at his desk. He looked up when you stepped in after Jack. You shut the door.

"Lock it," Jack said.

You locked it. You turned around. Jack gestured for you to sit on the couch. You glanced at Gabriel, who was still at his desk, and sat down.

Jack pulled up a chair and he plucked the cigarette out of your mouth and tucked it behind his ear. "You don't need that."

"Jack-"

He leaned in clasp his hand around the back of your head. He pressed his forehead against yours. "How are you holding up?"
You blinked. "What?"

Jack rolled his eyes. "I know what you did after you left my bed this morning. I ask, how are you holding up?"

"Better now," you said, because it was true. "As long as you're not planning on telling me off too."

Gabriel snorted in the background. "I didn't tell you off, _chica_. I didn't even begin to tell you off." You heard his chair squeak as he stood.

"I talked to Lacroix and Genji about coping. Genji kicked my ass. I did some...thinking. I was smoking a cigarette. I'm doing better."

"I'm sorry. I didn't know you were already in that deep," Jack said. "If I'd suspected, I just would've left you tied to my bed."

You rubbed your neck. The couch dipped as Gabriel sat down beside you. "I didn't want to ask Gabriel to do it. He does enough of that shit. It's not fair."

Gabriel inhaled sharply.

"It's hard work, Lucky. Harder than it looks." Jack kissed you, his gloved hands holding your cheeks. "I know what always makes Gabriel feel better afterward. Would you like us to show you?"

---

"I need to be more careful with you," Jack said, tracing the bruises on your wrists.

You sighed as Gabriel rubbed your back. You were warm, naked, and your limbs felt deliciously heavy. You rested on your side, your head in Jack's lap. He'd lost his gloves at some point. His fingers skimmed your neck and thighs.

"Doing a little better?"

You nodded, not trusting your ability to form words.

"I've done far worse than that, Lucky." Gabriel said in a low voice. "No one here's judging you harder than yourself."

"Me too, Lucky," Jack said, cheeks flushed.

"This isn't a competition, Jack," Gabriel said.

You blinked. Yeah, you could see that, actually. Worse, it didn't bother you, except for the toll it took on them. You were utterly fucked up.

"I know it's not a competition. I'm saying it so she knows I'm not judging her, Gabe." Jack's hair fell in his face and you ran your fingers along his jaw line. He leaned into the touch. "You need some time away from here. Come home with me for the break." Jack kissed your metal fingers, twining them with his. "Please?" The sincerity pierced your chest and you winced.
Gabriel's hands kept stroking your back. You couldn't keep your eyes open.

"OK," you said.

Damn, you'd been outplayed again.

Chapter End Notes

Hope everyone who celebrated "Eat Yourself Sick Day" enjoyed it. Thus starts the insane shopping season. Ugh.

Christmas Fluffocalypse begins after this. -_-

As always, comments are love and totally make my day. Need to edit the hell out of the next few chapters.
"You guys are never allowed to ask me for things after sex, ever again," you snarled at Gabriel as you packed your duffel bag. "That is unethical coercion and I fucking resent the hell out of it."

"You're going to want to dress warm," he said helpfully, sitting in your guest chair. He was eating your chocolates and some of the pastries you'd picked up at Ana's favorite downtown bakery.

"...According to Genji, I am expected to take a hostess gift as well as individualized gifts from Christmas. I don't know these people. I don't know how they celebrate. Gabriel, I don't even like Christmas."

"These cakes are good. You should bring some. Jack always takes chocolate. I bring booze. Mostly for me." He laughed at that. "Bring at least one nice outfit. Nothing dazzling, just nice."

"Assassin-Butler?"

"That is nice, but not quite what I had in mind. Too formal and probably too intimidating for this venue. You know what, I'll take care of it."

"You're not buying me any clothes, Gabriel." You scowled at him.

"Jack really likes Christmas," Gabriel said, ignoring you. "Almost as much as I like Halloween. His family goes all out: the shiny tree, fruitcake, nonstop Christmas carols, clichéd traditional movies..."

"So basically, this is penance for all my sins. Especially the most recent ones. And I'm not allowed to complain about it, because it will make Jack sad. It's like double penance; I'll have my karmic debt paid off in no time. Got it." You stared down at your bag. You had jeans. You had black turtlenecks. You had some gray ones too. You had the green scarf Gabriel had fucking made you. You had lame presents for Jack and Gabriel. And now you had to go get cake or something for Jack's family.

"I'll put your name on all the presents I'm taking," Gabriel soothed. "Stop panicking. It's adorable, but this really isn't that bad."

You would buy tins of chocolate-filled hüppen, those rolled wafers that looked like stick pretzels full of cream. You'd even get some tirggel, which were dry and hard biscuits depicting Christmas scenes, and they were meh despite being made with honey, but given Jack's tastebuds, maybe his family wouldn't notice. And just in case they had better culinary taste than Jack, you'd buy some luxemburgerli, which were just smaller, less filling, Swiss versions of macarons.

"I've constructed at least three polite exit strategies, if you need breathing room. And we will use them. Jack only knows about one. We can use hand signals. Think of it as an op. You're going to support Jack. You're undercover. I'm your backup."

You nodded, because that you could handle. Because maybe you needed more than therapy to make you less fucked up.

You sat on the transport with your duffel bag. You had a separate bag for all the baked goods you'd bought, trying to fill the void in your Christmas spirit.

Gabriel ditched his usual hoodie for a thick green cable-knit turtleneck and black wool coat. He wasn't wearing his hat either, which surprised you. You had on your gray combat overcoat and a black turtleneck and black pants. You wore Gabriel's scarf under your coat. Though you'd traded the armored boots for leather ones, you didn't really look off-duty.

Jack had on his usual overcoat, but instead of armor he was wearing a blue sweater, and if you were interpreting the knit correctly, it was covered in snowflakes and gorillas. No, you were not interpreting it correctly, those were yetis, probably.

He beamed at you. "I'm glad you're coming."

"Um, thanks for inviting me." The words came out strained.

"It'll be fun, I promise." Jack kissed your cheek, settling between you and Gabriel. "Maybe not as fun as Gabriel's family, but quieter."

You couldn't begin to think about that part of the equation yet. You just studied your boots. This was an op. You were there to support Jack. Hoping for an assassination attempt would be bad. Normally you blended in or flirted during ops. Those rules weren't going to apply here.

You stared at your stripped down tablet. No work on this trip, plus you didn't need to leave controlled information around Jack's family home. You just had people's numbers, and you wondered if Jesse could recall you for a work emergency. He could ask Captain Amari. You could get shot again. That sounded more up your alley.

The transport landed in a snowy field. There was a forest surrounding the area, but this area had been cleared, probably specifically for landings. Three agents in Overwatch blue waited alongside a beat up pickup blue truck. Jack practically bounded down the ramp, giving the agents an easy nod. "Chang. Fitzpatrick. Almasi."

"Your family is back at the house, sir. Onwuachimba and Maracle are with them," Chang said, a large pistol resting on her hip. She was strikingly attractive, had a sergeant's bars, a long braid, and the voice of a smoker. "Commander Reyes." She nodded in acknowledgment.

"What's Lucky Strike doing here?" Fitzpatrick asked. He was a thin brunette with longer than regulation hair. You studied his hands, noting the chemical burns and missing fingers: demolitionist.

"Not your business, Fitzpatrick," Chang snapped.

Almasi gave you a curt nod. He was a tan hatchet-faced man carrying a shotgun.

"Lucky's here to help with Michael," Gabriel said, smirking. To your surprise, Jack put his arm around Gabriel's shoulders. Apparently, this squad was in the know.
"'Bout time someone did," Fitzpatrick muttered.

You raised a brow. Michael was Jack's nineteen year old brother. Quite the little shit if the stories were true.

Chang didn't even blink. "Fitzpatrick, you can walk back to the farmstead. It will give you time to think about keeping your damn mouth shut.'

Fitzpatrick rolled his eyes. "Yes ma'am."

She and Almasi climbed into the bed of the pickup. You glanced at Gabriel, wondering how you were supposed to act.

"Ride with us," Jack said, smiling at you. "It'll be fine."

You tossed your bags in the back of the truck, and wondered if the three of you would fit in the cab.

Jack got in the driver's side. Gabriel gestured for you to climb in, and then you were pressed tightly between the two of them, wincing as Jack sped down the gravel road.

"Chang's SEP," Gabriel said. "Obviously, she's from our gen. She runs a tight ship, and everyone in the squad knows about me and Jack."

"OK," you said.

"They're discrete," Jack said. "Even Fitzpatrick."

You snorted at that.

"Relax," Gabriel murmured in your ear. "You'll make the squad nervous if you keep making combat face."

He kissed your cheek and you knew Chang and Almasi had to have seen that through the window. You sighed, hanging your head.

Jack laughed, and kissed your other cheek, and then began whistling. You'd never heard Jack whistle. You didn't know the tune, but you had to assume it was something obnoxious and Christmas-themed.

He stopped in front of the farmhouse. There was plenty of room to land the transport, but knowing Jack, he probably wanted to be low-key and not "The Strike Commander has descended from the heavens to grace you with his presence." There was a large barn, a corral, and several fields bordered by forest. It looked like a fucking thrift shop painting, too sentimental for any self-respecting person to put on their wall.

"Plenty of places to disappear to," Gabriel said climbing out of the truck. He held the door for you. Jack was already out, walking purposefully toward the people on the porch.

You spotted Onwuachimba on the roof of the second story house. She nodded at Gabriel and stayed where she was. Maracle must be the big guy on the porch, holding the barrier plate. It wasn't on, but those shields fired up quick.

When you looked up, Jack was hugging an older blonde woman. She wore a green wool dress with Christmas tree motifs, her hair in a bun. The man beside her was thinner than you expected, though it made sense. Jack went through SEP, he didn't come out all muscle-bound and god-like. Jack's dad had close cropped graying hair and a weather-beaten face. He was a lean, rugged sort of handsome in his flannel and denim, and you wondered if Jack would get rougher as he aged.

You already knew about the teenagers on the porch. Maggie was fifteen and charming, according to Gabriel. She wore a bright red coat and her hair was braided. Michael was a slender version of Jack, hair spiked and dyed black. He radiated surliness and surveyed you all with a sneer. It deepened when he saw Gabriel and you began to understand what you were dealing with.

You followed Gabriel up the steps, giving Maracle a nod.

"Gabe!" Maggie squealed and leapt at him.

Gabriel caught the teenager in one arm. She wrapped her arms around his neck. "I'm so glad you came!" She smiled brightly and you saw shades of Jack. Had he been that exuberant and cute at that age?

"Ah, Margarita, my year isn't complete if I don't see your smiling face," Gabriel said cheerfully. "And Jacqueline," he kissed Mrs. Morrison's cheek. "Thank you for having us. I'm looking forward to your spice cake."

"Lucky, these are my parents. Mom, Dad, this is Lucky."

"What kind of name is that?" Michael scoffed. "Is she a dog or something?"

You ignored him, shaking Mr. Morrison's hand with your right hand. He had a firm grip and sharp gray eyes that seemed to take in everything at once. "Good to meet you," he said gruffly.

You reached out to shake Mrs. Morrison's hand, but she swooped in and hugged you. You went rigid as soon as she wrapped her arms around your chest, and you knew she felt it. But you took a deep breath, and carefully hugged her back. "It's so nice that you could come," she said, her cheer a little more strained than before.

"Thank you for having me," you said sounding stiff to your own ears.

You solemnly extended a hand to Maggie and she shook it once. "Ignore my brother. He's an asshat."

You refrained from telling her that both her brothers were asshats.

"Maggie!" Mrs. Morrison said. "Language!"

Huh. You'd heard that before too. You glanced at Jack sideways, but he was already going into the house, happily chatting with his father. You looked back out at the forest. This wasn't the Yukon or the Alps. You could probably make it out of here on foot if you needed. Hell, you could bribe Fitzpatrick for a lift.

"Come on," Gabriel said, his hand firmly on your back, like he knew exactly what you were thinking. "Let's go get ready for dinner."
Apparently you were rooming with Maggie. Great. Well, at least it wasn't Michael. You folded your coat and set it on top of your bag. Your turtleneck and jeans would be fine for dinner. The bedroom had two beds, apparently one for Jack's other sister Jane who had since married and moved out. The floral wallpaper was...something. Thankfully, the rest of the room was done in a soothing shade of green. You checked out the Overwatch posters and track trophies. There was a big poster of Jack's team, Gabriel front and center. Well, that didn't surprise you. It seemed at least two Morrisons had similar tastes.

You tucked your cigarettes in your boot and your flask in your coat pocket. You had the feeling you were going to need them.

Maggie was across the hall in Michael's room, which had been Jack and Michael's room back in the day. Gabriel and Jack had that one to themselves, Michael loudly announcing how he was going to sleep on the "worn out" living room couch. One glance told you it was nicer than the rec room couch.

"So, what's with Lucky?" You could hear Maggie very clearly. "Is she your bodyguard or something?"

"Sometimes," Gabriel chuckled.

"Is she Jack's bodyguard?"

"Sometimes," Gabriel sounded smug. "Why don't you ask her?"

"Because that's awkward! Come on, Gabe. You can trust me!"

"You saw that newspaper clipping Jack sent you, the French one?" Jack sent his sister newspaper clippings? You smacked your forehead. Jack probably called his mother weekly, at the very least. Just because you didn't have a family, didn't mean everyone else neglected theirs. That meant Gabriel probably did too... You couldn't really bring yourself to picture that yet.

"That's Ms. Strike?! Oh my God, her outfit was so amazing! Jack called her the Assassin-Butler. Wait...Lucky Strike? Is that her real name? That can't be."

"Her real name is classified," Gabriel said, and you wondered if that was true. Because no one fucking called you it except Captain Amari and them.

"Oh my God, I'm rooming with a super spy? Gabriel, that's so cool," she said, equal parts awe and excitement.

You felt an odd smile on your lips. Damn Morrison charm. You sorted your boxes of cookies. You'd brought enough to give some to Chang's unit. Whiskey and brandy too. Traveling on Overwatch shuttles was duty-free and you'd been a smuggler too long to ignore that benefit.

You gathered three boxes of Swiss cookies and headed downstairs. Jack was in the living room, watching football with his dad. Mrs. Morrison was in the kitchen. You had no idea where Michael was, and that was fine. You went to the kitchen with your cookies.

"Do you need any help?" You asked, watching her bustle around, pots steaming, and the oven timer going off.

"Oh no, I have it under control. You just settle in." She smiled at you, her eyes the same
"I uh...brought some cookies. The bakery I go to is really nice." You offered her the nicely wrapped boxes.

"Oh, store-bought? That's such a splurge," she said.

You weren't quite sure how to take that. You didn't have enough time to bake. That and everyone else would steal them if you did. "They're really good," you said, trying to sound sincere. "Well, I like the luxemburgerli best. The tiggen are more of a...Zurich Christmas thing. The hüppen are pretty good. I got chocolate and raspberry."

"Oh set them in the living room. John will probably want some right away."

You carried the boxes out and set them on the coffee table. "Mrs. Morrison said to put them here."

"Cookies?" Jack asked. "Oh, yeah, Gabriel said he told you to bring them. Hey, these picture ones are pretty good. Try one, Dad."

"They're kind of dry, Jack," his dad said biting into one.

"The tiggen are more a novelty," you said. "The macaron-clones are better."

"In between missions, Lucky cooks for me sometimes. She made this fish egg spaghetti that was really good. Of course, she didn't tell me it was fish eggs till after I'd eaten two bowls, but, you know. It was good." He grinned at you.

John Morrison looked at you. Then he looked at the cookies. Then he looked at you again.

"I bought these from a bakery. There are no fish eggs or anything unusual inside," you said awkwardly. "I...am going to go see what Gabriel's doing."

You headed back up the stairs, listening to them creak. You'd be better off going out the windows. You could climb the porch easily enough if you had to sneak back inside. You just had to make sure Chang's unit didn't shoot you.

You peeked inside Michael's room, watching as Gabriel applied eyeliner to Maggie. "Your sister doesn't use enough for night wear," Gabriel said. "You don't need it per se, but if you're going for dramatic eyes, then you'll want to use liquid liner and outline the top lid at the very least."

"You need to marry my brother now," Maggie said. "Oh my God, that is amazing! And you can do contouring too?!"

"I have three sisters," Gabriel said, looking at you.

You shrugged. "You're better at it than me."

"You have very steady hands too," he said, his smile sharp.

Maggie looked between the two of you. "What do you do, Lucky?"

Your mind flashed back to Chumak's fingers on the ground. You forced your left hand to relax, because you weren't wearing your sap glove. "Not makeup," you said a little too tightly. "I...There are cookies in the living room. I got them from this excellent bakery in Zurich."
"Cookies?! Shit! I better get some before Michael crams them all down his rude face." She jumped up, hugged Gabriel, and bounded down the stairs.

You stood in the doorway. Gabriel sat on a bed, eyeliner in hand. You crossed your arms. "This is...weird."

Gabriel set the liner down and stood. "Come here."

He hugged you and you sank against the heat of his chest. "She's fucking adorable," you said. "Was Jack like that?"

"A little less enthusiastic, or so Jacqueline tells me. But only a little. There were traces of that when we were in SEP so I can believe it." Gabriel stroked your hair. "I wasn't kidding about Michael. I think you know what to do."

"You sure Jack wants us to bury his brother alive?"

Gabriel laughed. "I wish. But he'll probably approach you. You can do that thing you do with diagrams. I'm too threatening and Chang's unit is supposed to protect the family, not police them. Though I'm not sure Fitzpatrick won't eventually snap and do something drastic."

Gabriel was clever. He'd given you a sub-mission and that extra focus would center you. You didn't want to think too hard about what that said about your psyche. You were starting to think civilian life wouldn't be an option for you.

"These are so goo- Gabriel?"

You almost jumped away, but Gabriel held you firmly in place. "Yes, Maggie?"

You could feel Maggie's eyes on the back of your head. Gabriel had one arm around your waist and the other on the back of your neck.

"What are you doing?" There was a tension in her voice that sounded almost familiar. It was weird to hear the same cadence of the Strike Commander out of a fifteen year old girl.

"Hugging Lucky," he said. "She gets too tightly wound sometimes."

"Does Jack know?"

"Jack does it too," Gabriel said, sounding smug.

"I'm going to ask him about it," Maggie said, daring him to contradict her.

"That's fine. He'd probably prefer to talk about it in private." Which wasn't exactly true. That was you. But Gabriel was telling a white lie for your sake; you weren't about to quibble.

"...Fine. But you better be telling the truth."

"I wouldn't lie to you, Margarita."

She huffed. "Do I get a hug too?"

"Of course." Gabriel released you, and you stood very still, wondering if he'd heard her coming up the stairs and if he knew exactly what he was doing. Because no matter what Lacroix said, Gabriel had no problem being underhanded. Gabriel stepped past you and you stared out the window at the winter moon.
"Are you OK?" Maggie asked, sounding genuinely concerned.

"I'm fine, thank you," you said, your voice distant.

"Mom said dinner would be ready soon and we should come sit. You're sitting by me, right Gabe?"

"Of course," he said. "Come on Lucky. Jacqueline is making her famous chicken broccoli casserole. You'll love it."

"Sounds great," you said.

Maggie was watching you with suspicion now. "What kind of cookies are these?"

"The flute-shaped filled wafers are hüppen. The sandwich cookies are Swiss knockoff macarons called luxemburgerli. The picture ones are tirggel. They're honestly more of Christmas novelty than something you want to eat." You had the cookie speech down now.

"Like fruitcake," Gabriel said.

"Bring anything else?" She asked, eating a luxemburgerli.

"I bought some cherry brandy. It's pretty nice."

"I'm fifteen," she said, not actually sounding outraged.

"...Umm..." You turned and looked at Gabriel.

"After dinner tonight," he said. "But if your mom catches us, we're all dead, and you killed us, Margarita."

Maggie's expression relaxed. "OK, after dinner tonight. Now let's go before Mom starts yelling."

Gabriel patted your back. "Smooth, Lucky. You're plotting to bury Jack's brother alive and give his underage sister booze. I can't wait to see your next trick."

You rolled your fist, and followed Gabriel down the stairs, wondering if it was too early to break into the alcohol.

The dinner seating arrangement was acceptable. You sat between Gabriel and Jack, Gabriel listening to Maggie while Jack talked with his parents. You were across from Michael, but he didn't look at you.

Green bean casserole, spinach casserole, chicken broccoli casserole. "Casserole" apparently meant "canned cream soup" and/or "lots of cheese" on stuff. And Jack kept scooping things onto your plate, like you couldn't serve yourself. You kicked him under the table. He innocently blinked at you.

"I don't have an SEP metabolism," you said.

"You haven't eaten all day," he said.

You were pretty sure Gabriel was laughing at you and had put you there because he knew Jack would attempt to overfeed whoever sat next him. Gabriel lied to you. This wasn't an op. This was a suicide run. Your tanto rested in the small of your back, a familiar comforting weight.
reminding you that seppuku was an option.

You picked up your fork and knife, studying the food on your plate.

"Lucky, you don't need to wear your gloves at the table," Mrs. Morrison said, possibly registering the assassin aesthetic.

"Mom-" Jack began.

"Really, it's unnecessary," Mrs. Morrison gave you an expectant look, like an older, less tolerant Strike Commander, one you weren't about to argue with.

"My apologies, Mrs. Morrison." You exhaled slowly and took off your right glove off first. Then you peeled off the left glove, paired them and placed them in your lap. Your augments glowed brightly in the dining room. Your metal fingers looked wrong at a farmhouse dinner table covered in assorted casseroles. But you were already here, so you picked your knife and fork back up.

Jack's parents had the grace or the shame not to stare.

Michael began to snicker.

"Wow, those are really cool," Maggie said. "Can I paint your nails?"

"If you like," you said, then remembered these weren't your basic set. "But nail polish doesn't stick to the omnium very well."

"Aww," she said. "Can I paint your other nails?"

"If you like." You took a bite of casserole. It was comfort food. You wouldn't make it yourself, unless Jack asked, but it was better than it looked.

"Do you have other robot parts?" Michael asked, smirking at you.

"Michael!" Mrs. Morrison also had the Strike Commander cadence. Huh.

"I was just asking," he snapped.

"Don't be rude."

You ate your casserole and ignored him.

"I'm sorry." Mrs. Morrison caught you on your way to the kitchen as you helped her clear the table. "I didn't realize."

"It's fine." You managed a zen smile. "I blame Jack."

"I do too," she said. "But I should be used to soldiers' idiosyncrasies by now. That wasn't fair of me."

"Apology accepted, ma'am," you said. "Do you need help with anything else? Opening jars? Flattening pennies? Checking electrical sockets?"

It took her a moment, but she laughed. "No thank you, Lucky. Why don't you go see what the boys are doing. You're a guest too, you know."

"Do you need help?"

"John will be in here in a moment. He's just dealing with Michael. Michael's going through a...difficult phase."

Michael just needed a kick in the pants. "Teenagers," you said, blandly.

"Yes," she said, and shooed you out of the kitchen.

You pulled your gloves back on and found your way back up to Maggie's bedroom to dig out the brandy. You could hear Jack and Gabriel chatting with Maggie. You peeked your head in.

"I have cups!" Maggie stage-whispered.

Jack and Gabriel sat on twin bed. Maggie sat on the other.

You nodded and shut the door behind you. You took the cups and poured everyone a little brandy, except for yourself. You gave yourself a lot. You handed Maggie a cup, and set the bottle down.

You took a sip, the sweetness almost too much. It burned nicely though, heat traveling through your veins. You sat down on the bed next to Maggie.

"So, I came in on Gabriel and Lucky hugging. You hug her too, Jack? And is that all you do?" Maggie asked as she took a drink.

Jack started coughing and Gabriel slapped him on the back laughing.

You drank your brandy, and refused to look up. Jack and Gabriel could handle this. You were done. You'd been good today. They'd set you up.

"Hey," Jack stood up. "Lucky?"

You knew what was coming next. You really thought Jack would have more restraint. But he placed both hands on your face and kissed you, his lips tasting of cherries and brandy. You relented, kissing him back. When he let go of you, he was beaming.

"That answer your question, Maggie?"

She squealed. "You have a boyfriend and a girlfriend?! And you're OK sharing him?! New life goal!"

So much for keeping it quiet. Forget about not telling the household. You were pretty sure the whole state of Indiana heard that.

Gabriel laughed. "We're all sharing," he grinned at you and it wasn't just the alcohol warming your blood.

You shook your head, drank your brandy, and wondered if telling Jack's fifteen year old sister these things constituted some kind of child endangerment or emotional abuse.
"Does Mom know?"

"She suspects," Jack said. "I don't mind telling her, but Lucky's shy."

"Why?! You should be proud. Gabe is hot! My brother is OK. But Gabe!"

You shrugged. "It would look bad at work."

"Who cares what other people think?! You're an Assassin-Butler! You're a secret agent femme fatale! You're boning Gabe! I need details!"

"Was the brandy a mistake?"

"No, she's always like this." Jack sat on the floor and tugged on your leg. "Come here."

"I'm not happy about the glove incident."

"It slipped my mind." He gazed up at you with heartfelt remorse. Because even if Jack was thoughtless, he never meant harm. "I'm sorry, baby."

"Uh-huh."

"There's nothing wrong with your fingers."

"Not with the ones I have left," you muttered. "Honestly, Jack..." You swatted his hand away.

"Is she always this grumpy?" Maggie asked.

You shrugged.

"No, that's usually Gabe. She's just embarrassed."

"You don't believe I'm grumpy," Gabriel said, placing a hand on his chest. "Do you?"

Maggie laughed. "Never. Gabe's the good one."

Jack's incredulous face was cute. He looked rapidly between you and Gabriel. "That is so wrong!" You sighed and patted Jack's head.

"Stop pouting, Jack."

He kissed your hand.

"Sorry, Maggie. It's not you. I'm just not used to this," you said. "Apparently I don't know how to function outside a military setting any more."

"How do you act with your family?"

You downed the rest of your brandy. "My hometown burned about a decade ago. I'm not the only survivor, but there weren't many."

Maggie got quiet. She must have realized the lack of questions directed at you during dinner didn't have to do with the fingers. "You warned Mom, but you didn't warn me, Jack."

"See, he's terrible," you said.
"The worst!"

"I'm sitting with Maggie. She gets it."

"I'm painting your nails. How does green sound?"

"Paint Gabriel's first," you said.

"Gabe?" She batted her lashes at him, and you wondered just how he acted with his sisters.

Jack's family wasn't anything like yours, mostly in the fact that they were alive and functional. But the differences made you homesick in a way you couldn't put into words.

Maggie only smirked when you stayed in Jack's room. You sat on the floor, studying the music posters and books on Michael's shelf.

"So on Christmas Eve, my family goes to church. Christmas Day we stay home and exchange presents. Jane'll probably be over with her family. There'll be a few neighbors and friends stopping in. And we leave the evening after."

You were going to make yourself scarce for that church service. Gabriel could help you, or you could hide in the woods alone.

"We'll be doing that op tomorrow," Gabriel said. "It might run over."

Jack snorted. "Really?" He didn't look offended though. He just sprawled across the bed. "Let's push the beds together. Can't really do anything fun on them, but we can sleep that way."

"We're not going to fit," you said, eyeing the twin beds.

Gabriel ended up pushing them together against the wall, so the three of you could lay on the floor. Jack spooned Gabriel, and you sat up, back to the wall, still studying Michael's belongings. He had a lot of space sci-fi and military history. He also had a lot of art books, a good number of them featuring scantily-clad ladies. But you noted the large amount of sketchbooks and the art supplies, displaced by Gabriel moving the beds.

"Coming to sleep?" Gabriel asked.

"In a moment, thinking."

"Hit the lights when you do," Jack murmured, already drifting.

You got up and took a peek at the sketchbooks. You didn't know much about art, but there was a natural life to the drawings; most were animals, some people. You found one of Jack in combat fatigues drinking a beer. It was a rough sketch, but you recognized the posture and smile immediately. You turned off the lights, wrapped yourself in a blanket, and sat back down, back against the wall. You weren't sure how long you sat there, but eventually, you tucked yourself against Gabriel's chest and went to sleep.
You were awake and cleaning your gun when Michael opened the door. He stared at you, eyes darting between your gun and the sleeping men.

You watched him as he tried to decide if whatever he needed from his room was worth being in here with them.

He clenched his jaw, glared at you, and slammed the door.

"Little shit," Gabriel muttered. "Come back over here, Lucky. It's too early to be playing games with kids."

"Nah, I've got plans. Where'd you say that spot was again?"

Gabriel grumbled. "Ask Chang."

"Wish me luck."

You kissed him and he tried to pull you back down.

"I have a mission, Gabriel. I'll sleep in tomorrow."

"That's what you think," he muttered.

You found the coffee pot half full and poured yourself a mug. Michael sat in the kitchen, pointedly ignoring you. But you felt his eyes on your back when you left. Chang was on the porch drinking coffee too. The sun was bright and it was colder than you expected.

"Morning," you said.

"Mm." She looked at you blankly. Chang didn't look SEP. She wasn't muscle-bound like Gabriel and Jack. Captain Patel had been compact, but stocky. Chang was tall and slender with sharp cheekbones and flawless skin, almost too pretty to be a soldier, though she did nothing to accentuate her looks. You wondered if SEP did other things besides acting as superhuman steroids.

"I hear Mrs. Morrison doesn't like smoking. Gabriel said to ask you where I can do it discretely."

"So it's true," she said, sipping her coffee.

You shrugged. "I don't know what you heard."

"You were Aishani's protégée, weren't you?"

"That was probably Lieutenant Shin Sato," you said. "But yeah, I served under Captain Patel."
Chang's expression was almost flat, but you could see the shadow of something rippling under her skin. "You were there?"

"Yeah," you said. You stared out at the forest. There were gray clouds on the horizon. "Captain Patel held the chokepoint, said the Durga Shatru-Shanti, and started shooting. No one got past her."

Chang exhaled. "Reyes told me." She set the mug on the railing. "Aishani was a good teacher. Best of the first gen."

"Yeah." You jammed your hands in your pockets, because you weren't wearing your sap glove.

"Jack hasn't brought anyone besides Reyes home for years. Are we expecting extra trouble, agent? Or is this what it looks like?"

You snorted. "I have no idea what this looks like."

"It looks like Jack and Reyes have picked up a third," she said, her voice still monotone.

"Yeah." You couldn't argue with that description. You'd worked so hard to keep your feelings secret, and then it turned out that everyone and some random strangers already knew. You sighed. "I--"

"I don't need to know," Chang said. "I just needed to make sure Reyes wasn't holding back critical information."

"He wouldn't-"

Chang gave you a wry smile. "Reyes and I go way back. We've always clashed. He would."

You sighed, because Gabriel defined Blackwatch petty. "Yeah. OK. Can you point me to the smoking zone?"

You stopped by the barn. Half a dozen goats meandered in the corral and you reached in to scratch their furry heads. They seemed to like the attention, though it could have just been a ploy to eat your sleeves.

You heard someone moving around in the barn, and angled yourself to keep an eye in that direction.

John Morrison emerged from the barn carrying a few flakes of alfalfa. He stopped and opened the gate, going to the feeder, goats suddenly at his heels.

"Morning, Mr. Morrison," you said when he came out.

"Good morning. Just call me John." He looked between you and the goats. "They're useless. Maggie used to do 4-H with them. Wouldn't sell'em for slaughter. Now they just get fat and terrorize the chickens."
"They're cute," you said.

He stood beside you. "Are we expecting trouble?"

"No more than usual," you said, wondering what would have been the right thing for Jack to tell his family.

"When Jack brought that Captain Amari back, he introduced her as his friend. He swore up and down there was nothing going on. Jacqueline didn't believe him, thought he was being shy, but I knew right away. He gets a look in his eye. You, he didn't say a word, but it was all over his face."

You tilted your head back and stared at the sky. It was going to snow. You knew it. Jack, that damn liar, swore up and down that the climate was fucked up and it didn't snow in Indiana for Christmas any more, honest. But you could feel it in your leg and your fingertips. "It's going to snow, isn't it?"

"Yes," John said. "So you, Jack, and Reyes too?"

"Yes," you said, waiting for the shitty comments.

"I know what Jack tells my wife. I know he says all he does is go to meetings and take photo ops now. That his soldiering days are behind him. He might have my wife's charisma, but he has my brains. Sort of. He thinks I don't know when he's lying?" John Morrison gave you a wintry smile. "I know the look a man gets when he's killed another human. I know the look a man gets when he's planning to kill another human. Jack has the former. Reyes has both."

"They're soldiers," you said.

"Reyes is dangerous," John said simply. "So is Jack, and so are you. But Reyes is the one closest to going rogue."

"We all have triggers and scars," you said tightly. "Gabriel's are just the most visible. He's good to Jack and he's good to me."

John watched the goats. "It's a lot for this old man to get used to."

"There's nobody I trust at my back more than Gabriel."

You expected him to say something about Jack, instead he just studied your face, those gray eyes too piercing. "It's good you like goats, Lucky. More importantly, they like you back. Don't have much more to add than that."

The field was cleared, the view blocked by the barn. You sat on a crate, and noted a lot of smashed down grass and visible footprints. Obviously, Chang wasn't the only smoker. You lit your cigarette, and you waited.

It was another ten minutes before he trudged up behind you, his boots crunching the frosted grass.

"Got a cigarette?" He sounded surly, and you'd been told the soldiers hadn't been sharing with him for obvious reasons.

You shook one out of the pack and offered it with a gloved hand.

Michael snatched it up and fumbled in his pocket for a lighter.

You went back to focusing on your cigarette. You wondered how Jack would react if he caught you. Now there was a thought. He didn't seem to like seeing you smoke.

"Are you guarding my brother or that other asshole?"

You laughed and tilted your head to the side. "What makes you think I'm their bodyguard?"

"I saw those clippings Maggie got. You're "Ms. Strike" from Paris. You saved Jack from cyborg assassins." He tried to sound blasé, but his eyes kept darting to your gloves.

"It was teamwork. Jack actually killed more." You lit another cigarette.

"Bullshit. I've hear the reports he gives Mom. He's just a candy ass figurehead. Some pseudo-Captain America propaganda," Michael spat. "But everyone eats it up. They love him. He's so fucking fake."

You laughed, because this one did not take after his father. "You're right. Jack is a fucking liar. We killed five cyborgs in Paris that day. He did four with T-box shots in about three minutes. I incapacitated one, because we needed him alive for interrogation, and then I killed another with my combat knife. Jack might be doing political work, but his skills are real. I spar with him regularly and even at half strength, he messes me up."

Michael stared openly at your hands. "Jack won't spar with me. Reyes laughed in my face. Jack and I used to box. Now he thinks I'm too weak."

"I'll spar with you. I'll even take off my fingers if you're worried." You smiled at him sharply, because he was making this too easy.

"I'm not scared," he said.

"All right. So what do I get if I win?"

Michael stared at you. "Do I get something if I win?"

"Sure," you said, knowing that wasn't going to happen. "What do you want?"

"I-" He looked around. He hadn't thought that far.

"If I win, you're going to go have a talk with your brother and be polite to Gabriel for the rest of the visit. You don't have like him. You don't have to pretend to be his friend. You just have to be civil. And I'll answer one question, because you obviously don't have all the facts."

"If I win, hand over those cigarettes, and you have to talk to me, and answer all my questions," he said. "Plus show me how your fingers work."

"Nothing classified," you said, relieved he didn't suggest anything creepy. "So we going to first blood, tap out, or knockout?"

"Tap out," he said.
You took off your coat and scarf. You stretched, noting Fitzpatrick leaning against the barn. Oh, you had an audience. Was he there to make sure Michael didn't get hurt? Or was he just there to enjoy the takedown?

Michael danced like a boxer. He circled you, jabbing at your defenses. He was strong, and even had some training. You waited for him to charge, then ducked under his blow, sweeping his legs out from under him. He went down and you were on his chest, feet pinning his arms, forearm pressing down on his throat.

He tapped the ground.

You got off him.

"Best two out of three?" He coughed.

You obliged, mostly to see what he knew. He understood the basics, but he fought clean and within the bounds of good sportsmanship. In the second round, you just slid past his defenses, fingers closing around his throat. He asked to go again, even if it didn't matter. So for the third round, you left him wheezing on the ground after one of Genji's hip throws, and then you went and pulled on your coat. It was fucking cold.

"It must be difficult to be The Jack Morrison's younger brother. Quite the legacy to live up to." You sat back down on the crates.

"Fuck you." Michael picked himself off the ground, cradling his arm.

"No, I feel for you. Everything you do will be judged against his actions. People aren't about to let you be your own person when they could try to clone another Jack Morrison. It's completely unfair."

"I didn't ask for your psychobabble."

You handed him another cigarette. Michael took it, begrudgingly. He shuddered and sat down beside you, now rubbing his side.

"Jack's a good man, but he's pretty thoughtless. I bet he just tried to give you some platitudes about just being yourself and figured this was a phase you'd grow out of."

Michael eyed you suspiciously. "Did he tell you this?"

"No, I just know Jack."

"You in love with him or something? Because he's fucking that faggot, Reyes."

You bit down on the cigarette, reminding yourself that he was a stupid teenage boy and you shouldn't kick his ass for real. It was just a shame that slur rolled off his tongue so easily. "Do you actually think it bothers me that they're lovers? Are you really hung up on that toxic idea that men can't love other men? Or are you worried that it's going to reflect on you? Knew there was a reason I avoided rural America."

Michael stared at his feet. Shame was good. At least he wasn't an asshole to the core.

"I suspect Jack takes your relationship for granted. He thinks that if he just gives you time, everything will work out and you'll be back to being friends again. Jack's an idiot like that." Maybe it was good you'd come to Indiana. You were getting an idea of what made Jack tick and the insight was valuable. "So what bothers you more? His reputation? The fact you think it's fake? His gay lover? The way it all reflects on you?"

"All of it!"

"Jack'll be the first to tell you he's no saint."

Michael glowered at the ground.

"Does it really bother you that Jack likes men?"

"It's not how men like that are supposed to be," Michael muttered.

"How are they supposed to be? Alcoholics and abusive? Emotionally numb? Misogynistic?" You scowled, burning through another cigarette. "Gabriel is even stronger than Jack. So I can't think of anything manlier than those two together."

"I'm not a bigot, OK?" Michael said. "I just don't like Reyes. Maybe if Jack was seeing someone who was less of an asshole."

"OK, then don't be a bigot about it. You don't have to like Gabriel."

"Jack liked girls before SEP!"

"Jack still likes girls. He just likes Gabriel too." You smirked. "You thinking about SEP, but worried it's going to turn you gay?"

"Everyone expects me to join up. Follow in Jack's footsteps. The recruiter said I was candidate, given my brother."

You sighed. "Recruiters lie all the fucking time. Maybe you are, maybe you aren't. But you should talk to Jack, Gabriel, or even Chang. Because from what I hear, SEP was miserable."

"Do you lose to my brother?"

"Regularly. Fucker thinks it's funny to throw me." You shrugged. "I don't pick fair fights. I'm not SEP, so I have to be smart about how I do things. What works for Jack and Gabriel doesn't work for me."

"So he'd kick my ass, is what you're saying?"

You laughed. "I bet if you ask real nicely, Chang will let you train with her people," you said, lighting another cigarette. "She could give you a lot of insight."

"She's such a bitch," he said wistfully. "Hot, but a bitch."

"She's SEP. It made them all a little crazy. Though if you want a favor from her, I wouldn't call her "hot" or a "bitch." You sighed. "You going to hold up our bargain?"

"Yeah, sure. Fuck. I think you broke my spleen."

You shrugged. "Got more questions, besides "what does my spleen do?" Because I'm no doctor."

His laugh turned into a moan. "So Jack really is a badass?"
"Yeah," you said. "He channels your mother. It's kind of terrifying to see her and Maggie do that voice. It's the Strike Commander in stereo."

"Huh." Michael sat up. "That is terrifying. Shit."

"You're an artist, aren't you?" You studied the sky. It really was going to snow. Fucking Jack.

"Yeah, I mean...I draw. I'm not great or anything."

"I'd like to see some of your work if you have time later."

"Yeah, sure." He blinked again. "OK, who would win? Reyes or Jack?"

"Hard to say. They're pretty evenly matched. I'm partial to Gabriel, though."

"Why are you here?"

"That's like your fourth question," you said, not actually caring. "Jack invited me."

"I figured. But, why? Don't you want to see your folks?"

Someone wasn't reading the family newsletter. Oddly enough, admitting the loss got easier each time they asked. Or maybe you were just used to being detached. "Everyone else is dead. Early casualties when the omnics went bad."

"That sucks."

You shrugged. "Gabriel shipped me off to therapy. It helps. I think."

"You guys talk to shrinks? Seriously?"

"Yeah. We've all seen and done some shit." The image of Chumak's severed fingers was seared into your brain. But it was better than Shin's dead body; you still saw that sometimes when you drifted into sleep. "I know it doesn't match the big damn hero image, but this life takes its toll. I've buried a lot of people." Which was kind of a lie, because there hadn't been enough left to bury. "No shame in getting help when you need it. Seen enough people eat their guns in the aftermath to know that I don't want to be one of them."

Michael kept his eyes on his lap.

You managed to smoke two more cigarettes before he spoke again.

"Jack never made it sound like that."

"It's not something you bring up in polite conversation. If I had younger siblings left, I wouldn't tell them the truth. Unless they were looking to join up." You stared at your cigarette pack. You were burning through these way too fast.

"How is Jack holding up?"

"OK. Gabriel's good for him, and vice versa." You couldn't keep the fondness out of your voice.

Michael looked longingly at your cigarette and you handed him another one.
"Are you in love with my brother? Or is it Reyes?"

"I don't know, but apparently I'm dating them both." The admission made you smile just a little. Maybe because you liked them, but mostly because it was a shocking thing to say.

You were gratified when Michael choked and almost swallowed the cigarette. "What?"

"Good talk, Michael. Looking forward to the sketches. You should do a highlight reel with Jack. I'll be sending him your way," you said, and strode back to the farmhouse before he could get his bearings.

Mission accomplished.

Chapter End Notes

I feel so cheesy. But then I remember everyone was like "fluffing fluffy fluffertown!" and feel less bad.

As always, comments are loved. I read them at work and they help with all the cringey people I have to deal with. Today an old man came up behind me and tried to speak Japanese to me. I'm not Japanese, but his Japanese was bad. Then he proceeded to ask all my coworkers if I was Japanese, while I tried to ignore him, because murdering people on the clock with so many witnesses is frowned upon. It just degenerated from there.
Chapter 17

Chapter Notes

You guys are awesome.

Slight daddy kink in one of the scenes, just a warning to those who don't like that. Also, fighting as foreplay, for those of you who don't like that either. Sorry?

See the end of the chapter for more notes.

"I'll take Chang, Maracle, and Onwuachimba. You take Fitzpatrick and Almasi. We'll hit before the family goes to church so Fitzpatrick, Maracle, and Onwuachimba can accompany them. I'll probably be busy with Chang." Gabriel showed you on the map where everyone was supposed to be. You knew it was never that simple.

"Chang has to be expecting this "surprise inspection." You sat on the floor of Michael's room, studying the tablet map.

"Of course she is. So is her crew. They know we'll skip church, so they're expecting it then. That's why we hit before the Morrisons leave. You'll go after Almasi last, because he's in the woods and you'll be out of sight. Afterward, you can come watch me and Chang. She's great." Sharp amusement tinged his words.

"I got the impression you aggravate her."

"I do." Gabriel's grin wasn't very nice. "But she's on edge and needs a real fight. Jack normally does it, but I'm a good guy who's happy to help."

You briefly wondered about their history, then shut it down. Not your business. You grabbed the paintball gun. "You have eyes on any of them?"

"Onwuachimba is on the roof. I'm going out the back window, and I'll hit her first. Fitzpatrick was by the barn. I'm pretty sure Chang is in the deer blind."

You nodded and casually tucked the paintball gun under your coat.

Being here, with Jack's family, sent your fight or flight instincts into overdrive. It made no sense, because there wasn't any action. It was the idleness, you realized. You didn't know how to just sit there and do nothing. Years of survivalism and military training had left their mark; you were a goddamn border collie, uneasy if you didn't have a job to do.

Or maybe meeting Jack's family just filled you with anxiety and you were grateful for a high-energy outlet. That was normal, right? Way more normal than being unable to adjust to civilian life.

You went out the front door, hit the smoking zone, and doubled back. Fitzpatrick was perched on the roof of the truck, his legs swinging.

You nailed him in the back and he fell off the truck. "Fuck!"
You crept up and found him rubbing his back. You touched the barrel to his nose. "Tag."

"Goddamnit, Lucky Strike! And I was starting to like you after watching you trounce Michael." He scowled at the black paint on his glove. "Really?"

"Commander's orders: surprise inspection," you said shrugging. "Sorry."

You tucked the gun back under your coat. "I got plenty of brandy and cookies for later."

"If you're out here, then Reyes is going after Chang." His eyes widened. "Oh shit. We can't miss that fight!"

"Yeah, well, I got one more tag and I'll be back. You're "dead" and "out." So no warning the others."

"Ugh. Fine." He glanced at you. "You really got cookies and brandy to share?"

You laughed and crept off to the woods.

Almasi was quiet. You knew his patrol routes, but you were pretty sure he deviated from them. You found a large maple at the junction of one of the footpaths, and climbed it. There wasn't much cover, but people rarely looked up. You surveyed the area, catching sight of a blue hat in the distance. You squinted. It wasn't moving and you didn't see a coat. Hmm. Had you been spotted already?

You slid out of the tree and circled around. If Almasi set his hat as a decoy, he'd probably shed his coat too. Those Overwatch blues stuck out in the forest. You perched on a stump and listened.

Snap.

You dropped off the stump, taking cover behind a tree. Almasi rushed you, blue coat gone. You fired, black paint splattering across his face and throat. He made a gagging noise and stumbled. You got up and tapped his shoulder with the gun. "Tag."

"I had you in my sights," he muttered.

You shrugged. "I'll let Gabriel know. Go get cleaned up. I don't think he's found Chang yet, and Fitzpatrick says we all want to watch that one."

You headed toward the deer blind, conscious of how the frozen grass snapped underfoot. But you heard them before you saw them.

"-Not your concern, Reyes."

"I'm just testing you, Chang."

"You're testing my patience," she said tightly.

You came up behind the deer blind, taking cautious steps.

"You're wound too tight. Jack's here to visit his family, not babysit you."

You heard a sharp intake of breath. "Stop pushing me, Reyes."

You peeked around the corner, and were slightly surprised to see Gabriel's paintball gun smashed on the ground. He stood squarely facing Chang, arms crossed. She had her back to you and you didn't see any paint on her.

"Almasi and Maracle might be able to double-team you, but they can't take you down. Come on, Chang. We all need to expel. You don't have to hold back on me."

"I'm fine," she snapped.

You glanced at Gabriel, waving your paintball gun. He gave you a barely perceptible nod.

You shot her in the back.

Chang snarled and whirled, her eyes wild as they fell on you. Faster than you could see, she leapt at you, and then fell short, because Gabriel had her by the back of the neck. She swore and he laughed, spinning her in a half circle away from you.

"You're too close, Chang. You obviously need to work it off. Come on, you just got my blood up." Gabriel's lips were drawn back in a fierce grin. "I won't hold back either."

Chang didn't look at you. "Fine." And she leapt into the air, all coiled muscle and steel grace. Gabriel met her head-on and your chest constricted.

Chang was fast, much faster than Jack. She was on par with Genji, maybe faster. She was agile too, barely touching the ground when she moved. She sprung off trees and made impossibly high leaps. What Gabriel couldn't block, he took, his blows heavier and harder. If she'd been armed, you would have been very concerned, but she went in barehanded.

"Shit, she's going all out." Fitzpatrick panted as he came up behind you. "Knew she was overdue, but...I wasn't going to say anything."

"She's beautiful," you said, an odd pang hitting your chest. You'd never be able to match Gabriel like that.

"Like a naked blade," Almasi said. "I heard there were going to be cookies and brandy."

You glanced at Gabriel and Chang, still parrying and striking at blurred speeds. They were going to be at it awhile. "Yeah, I'll be right back."

You went in and out the window of Michael's room, avoiding the Morrisons and any potential invitations to church. Carrying a sack of cigarettes, brandy, and cookies, you were like Blackwatch Santa.

You passed the bottle to Fitzpatrick, and crouched down, opening a box of cookies. "Shit, anything broken yet?"

They were both bleeding from the mouth, and Gabriel's coat was on the ground, his shirt shredded.

"Hard to say," Fitzpatrick looked at his watch. "Well damn, I guess I'll have to cover the Christmas Eve service. Sarge isn't going to be done here any time soon."

Almasi sat on the ground, stoically eating cookies. "He planned it like this. When they're done, I'll patch her up. The rest of the squad is sufficient to cover the church outing."

"There better be brandy and cookies when I get back," Fitzpatrick warned.

"I brought plenty for the class," you said, because it was true.
"Then we're good, despite the fact you're a lowdown, dirty, cheating, backstabber."

You shrugged. "I'm in Blackwatch. That's how we roll."

Chang went down hard, one of Gabriel's kicks knocking her to the ground.

"You left it too long," Gabriel said, wiping blood off his face. "Sort yourself out sooner next time. Before you're a danger to everyone else."

Chang exhaled slowly, picking herself off the ground. "Damnit, Reyes. You kick like a fucking AA gun."

She glanced over at you and Almasi. "The rest of the squad accompanying the Morrisons?"

"Yeah, Reyes got us out of church service. Merry Christmas, Sergeant," Almasi said dryly.

Chang snorted and limped over to you. You offered her what was left of the open bottle of brandy. She downed it in one go. "Aishani should've taught you that if you surprise one of us, you better be ready to run."

You shrugged. "I normally use more...effective weapons."

She nodded at you. "Come on Almasi. Can't let the Morrisons see me like this."

You stepped aside, watching as Almasi casually took a whole box of cookies as he followed his CO toward the farmhouse.

"You OK, Gabriel?" He stood there in the cold, shirt gone, hat and coat on the ground. He bled from dozens of tiny cuts and you wondered how badly he'd be hurting later.

He took two quick strides and cupped the back of your head, his mouth covering yours. He tasted like blood and you didn't care. He drew you against him, his chest radiating heat. You sighed softly, his tongue parting your lips. Gabriel ground against you, and suddenly your coat was too warm and your clothes too tight.

"Damnit, Gabriel," you pulled away. "Let's get you cleaned up."

"You're not hurt, are you? His voice was raw, his hands tracing your side.

"She didn't touch me. You got her first."

"I didn't think she was that bad off," Gabriel buried his face in your hair, his breathing heavy. "Otherwise I wouldn't have gotten you involved."

"You just frustrate people at twice the usual rate." You tried not think about how stunning Chang was when she fought. She would look good on the battlefield beside Jack and Gabriel.

"I'll get cleaned up. Then we'll grab my bag. I have a treat for you."

He grinned down at you, his smile promising something wicked. You bit your lip, heat building between your legs.
It started to snow then. And in that moment, you couldn't bring yourself to care.

"Didn't you learn your lesson back in SEP?" Chang sat on the porch, drinking coffee. Her hands were bandaged, and she had a rapidly healing black eye.

Jack sat on the steps, resting his weight on his elbows. "It's different."

"Yeah, Reyes likes this one. A lot." Chang looked at him sideways. "That going to be a problem?"

"Only if you try to hit her," Jack smiled back.

"Fuck you, Jack," she said, and went back to her coffee.

The snow continued to fall fast, several inches already sticking to the cold ground. Jack could still see the stars, but the snow blanketing the farm left him with an overpowering sense of nostalgia. This wasn't quite home any more, but having his people here made it feel right.

"Michael's going to politely ask you to start letting him participate in squad workouts."

Chang snorted. "Michael is? You're not ordering me?"

"Hell no, Ray. Even I know that's a bad idea." He rubbed his forehead. "I might've missed some things with Michael. But I think it's going to get better. We talked about...things. I guess I didn't really know what was going on with him."

Chang, very diplomatically, did not add to that.

"It seems Lucky left an impression on him. You know anything about that, Ray?"

Chang drained the rest of her coffee. "According to Fitzpatrick, she took him to the ground three times in five minutes. He wasn't close enough to hear what they said, but it wasn't an angry exchange."

"Huh. He left that out. I wondered why he was limping. Wasn't sure if Fitzpatrick hadn't finally snapped on him."

"If Fitzpatrick snapped, the boy wouldn't be walking."

Jack rolled his eyes. "Always a bundle of cheer, Ray."

"I am what I am, Jack." Her eyes were hard. "You sure this is a good idea? After what happened during SEP."

"This is different. It flows." Jack tilted his head back. "She makes Gabe happy."

"And you?"

"Yeah, I like her," he grinned. "She broke my nose. She stole my kills. She calls me on my bullshit."
Chang rolled her eyes. "You macho dickheads with your crossed wires. You like them fucked up, Jack. I don't know why I bother. You didn't listen to me then, you certainly won't listen to me now."

"She cooks for me too."

"Well, that makes it all better."

"I could go into graphic detail, but I don't want to make you uncomfortable," Jack said smugly.

Chang gave him a withering look. "Reyes told me to avoid the northeast quadrant by the forest. If you want to catch up with them."

"I wish. The family is watching holiday movies. Can't get away." He got up, looking out over the snowy landscape. "Lucky hates the cold, so I doubt they'll be long."

It was still snowing. You weren't sure how this was going to be a treat. If Gabriel wanted to show you the stars, you could see them perfectly fine from the farmhouse roof. Gabriel had a backpack, and there was an emitter peeking out. Maybe Chang had done more damage than you thought.

Gabriel led you to a clearing, the ground mostly even. You were right next to the forest, and while it was already night, the snow and the moon didn't allow for it to be dark.

You shivered, even though it wasn't that cold. You really didn't like snow.

Gabriel opened the bag and pulled out two wooden knives, about a foot long each. He opened a tube of lipstick, rubbing it across the edge of each blade, then he tossed you one. You caught it, and stared. It was weighted like a real knife.

"I want to play with you," Gabriel said, his eyes glittering. "You like knives. So this should even the score."

You raised a brow. "You want to spar on Christmas Eve in the snow?"

"Remember what I promised you? The harder you fight, the harder I'll fuck you. So don't worry about staying warm." Your pussy clenched and you gritted your teeth.

"So sparring with Chang really did it for you?" The words slipped out, and you blamed your habit of being Blackwatch petty.

Gabriel gave a bark of laughter. "Jealous, baby?"

You took off your coat, setting it on a stump. The snow was slowing down. "Give me a moment, I'm wearing blades." You'd brought your go-bag, unsure of what he had in mind. You swapped out fingers and took your tanto off. You left the gloves off.

You picked up the wooden knife. Gabriel had laid his jacket next to yours. He was oddly relaxed, watching you with bright eyes.

You didn't ask about rules; Gabriel didn't play by them, so why bother?

"We go till someone mimics a deathblow. If you win, I'll give you an extra reward," he said, excitement roughening his voice.

You put your hair back, jaw set tight. Chang might have warmed him up. But you were going to finish him. You didn't wait for his invitation. You lunged, drawing an arc through the air, nicking his forearms. Lipstick smeared his skin and while it wasn't blood, you felt a surge of pride. If it had been your tanto, you would have cut him.

Gabriel's laugh was a low rumble. "Did watching me and Chang do it for you?"

He began to circle you, knife held loosely and pointed at the ground. You weren't fooled. Gabriel didn't have to be sneaky, he could just charge in and overwhelm you. The snow crunched underfoot and you moved with him, keeping him beyond arms length.

Gabriel had better reach, but you could gauge it now. He stepped forward and you scooted back. He laughed. "What's wrong, baby? Scared?"

"You're too cocky," you said, tone sharper than you expected. You edged toward his left side.

"You are jealous," he purred. "You can just drop the knife, hermosa. I'll reassure you right here and now." Gabriel could be a real bastard. You darted in, ducking under his arm and slashing him across the thigh as you passed behind him. You whirled to hit him in the back, but he was already circling around.

"You really like doing it the hard way." He thrust the knife like a fencer, a textbook move that had no business in real battle. You slid back, waiting for his follow-up. He didn't disappoint, lunging forward, knee raised. You scrambled out of range, your wooden knife would be useless against that. He stomped the ground in front of you, flashing a feral grin. It was meant to be an intimidation, but you were already sliding to his right, and jabbed your weapon into his liver, maybe harder than necessary.

He grunted, one hand dropping to guard.

You pulled back, knowing you were only fast enough to get one hit in without getting countered. Gabriel narrowed his eyes, rubbing his side.

"There's one mortal injury," you said tightly. "Keep going?"

Gabriel shook his head, a low growl coming from his chest. "You think that's enough to bring me down?"

"Then I'll keep going." You held yourself in a half crouch.

Gabriel's arm shot out, and you jumped backward. He was trying to grab you. Once he had you at close range, he'd disarm you and that would be it. You couldn't get airborne like Chang, but you stay close to the ground, forcing him to come to you. Nothing fancy like her leaps and kicks. You fought dirty.

You kept circling, because you couldn't afford to just charge in. Gabriel had that kind of stamina and power. You did not. So you had to wait for the right moment.
"How'd Chang get under your skin?" Gabriel's eyes smoldered. "Did she tell you all about our SEP days?"

You inhaled sharply.

And he swiped at you, the blade stinging your cheek.

You pulled back, one hand on your face. There was no blood, but that would leave a mark beyond the lipstick.

Chang had done no such thing. But Gabriel? Gabriel was taunting you. After you'd been so good this whole trip. You'd humored Jack's family. You'd assisted on actual missions and intervened in the Michael drama at his behest. Fuck him.

You dropped to a crouch when Gabriel charged you. You scooped up a mess of snow and dirt clods, flinging them in his face.

Blinded, his arm swung out to guard. You went under and past, turning in time to draw your blade across the back of his neck. The lipstick left a viscerally-satisfying red line.

Gabriel dropped to one knee.

"That's a second mortal injury," you hissed. "I win."

"Well-played, Lucky." Rubbing his face, he began to laugh, deep and pleased. You stayed behind him, your grip on the wooden knife too tight. "And I didn't even have to choke you this time. It's a shame Jack missed this."

You swallowed and waited for him to get back up. Gabriel bared his teeth at you, his lips curving into something fierce.

"You win, baby. Now come over here and claim your prize." He tossed his wooden knife aside and pulled off his shirt.

You glared at him if not for presumption, then for his cocksure attitude. "No thank you."

Gabriel's gave a sigh of pleasure. "Do you really want to do this the extra hard way? Because I meant what I said, chica. You won't be walking back to the house after this."

You just raised your chin and relaxed your grip on the knife. He would rush you again, and if your best hope was to hit him somewhere vulnerable.

Gabriel reached for you and you danced backward, knife up. "Damn you're wound up now." He watched you, pupils too big. "Is this how you and Jack get? Push, push, push. And then suddenly he's got you tied to his bed, rawing that pussy while you beg for him?"

Heat bloomed from your center outward. "Damnit, Gabriel." You clutched at words, loosening your grip on the knife.

"He told me all about it," Gabriel said, stalking toward you. "He should've sent me a picture of you, tied to his bed, legs spread wide, his cum dripping out of you. I would've been up there in minutes. I would've fucked him clean out of you, and filled your tight hole back up again."

"Didn't think you got jealous of Jack," you said, backing up.

"I'm not jealous of Jack," Gabriel purred. "I'm annoyed at the missed opportunity, something I intend to remedy now."

You both moved at once, you to counter, him to disarm. He knocked the weapon out of your hand. You smashed him across the face with your left fist, and he didn't even blink. He just dragged you to the ground, blood trickling from his nose. You flinched, the snow a cold shock against your back.

"You going to be good now?" He gripped the back of your neck, pinning your body with his thighs. He wiped off his face, his grin taut.

"It's cold," you shuddered. "I don't- I really don't like that."

"I'm going to let you up. Get your clothes off, unless you want me to tear them off you."

You stared at him in horror, mostly because there was fucking snow on the ground and that was the opposite of how things were supposed to work.

"Trust me," he murmured and sat back on his heels. "I'll keep you warm." He got up and pulled a waterproofed blanket out of his bag. He placed it on the ground, and you kicked off your boots, stepping onto it. You were surprised to find it was hot. One of those luxury heating coil blankets, then. You would've killed for one of those back in Canada.

You pulled off your clothes, carefully placing them off the ground. The snow had stopped, but the cold air was a terrible shock. Gabriel picked up his jacket and helped you into it. It didn't cover you completely, but it provided some protection from the wind.

You sat on the blanket, not quite comfortable, but better off than you expected. Gabriel crouched in front of you, and tugged you forward, his hands on the lapels of his jacket.

"Better?" He pulled you onto his lap, against the heat of his chest, his cock hard against you.

"You're the worst. I hate snow, Gabriel."

"You know I like the challenge," he said and suddenly he had you flat on your back against the blanket. His jacket was still warm and smelled like him. "Have to get you ready for me, hermosa." He slid your knees over his shoulders, cupping your ass while he began to lap at your core. You lay on the heated blanket, wrapped in Gabriel's jacket while he tongue-fucked you. He slurped at your pussy, the sounds wonderfully obscene.

"Fuck!" You had your left hand splayed against the ground, your right fisting the blanket.

He slid two fingers inside you, giving your clit a slow lick. "I'm going to, baby. I'm going to fuck you hard and I'm not going to stop till your tight little cunt is overflowing with my cum."

Your breath hitched at that. "Gabriel-"

"Don't start begging yet, otherwise I'll just start pounding you now, and you're not ready to take me," he growled.

You writhed, hips jerking against Gabriel's face. He kissed your pussy, fingers working you open for him. Soon, you heard him unzip and watched through half-lidded eyes as he withdrew his fingers from you, and lowered you onto his lap. He rubbed your slick across his thick cock, then gave it a few quick tugs, and placed the head against your slit. He looked at you hungrily, eyes clouded with lust.
You lay on your back, propped up on your elbows. You stared up at him, breathing shallow.

His lips brushed your ear. "Don't forget your safe words." Then Gabriel slammed into you, his cock driving deep.

You wailed as his shaft stretched you wide, arching sharply off the ground.

He filled you to the base, his balls slapping against your ass. His hips snapped back, and you were empty and aching. Then he was inside you again, all friction and heat. The feeling of skin on skin intensified the experience and you dropped flat on your back, one arm thrown across your forehead.

Gabriel brought one of your legs over his shoulder, his thrusts hard and measured. He wasn't losing control, but he wasn't showing you any mercy either.

"Gabriel-" You couldn't finish that thought, because your voice cracked.

He leaned forward, his angle shifting, and you whimpered as he kissed you, his lips tangy with your juices.

"You're making the filthiest noises," he groaned. "That's it, baby. Listening to you pant for me is hot, but hearing your sopping pussy take my dick... That's even better."

You could see his length disappearing inside you each time he hilted himself, your slickness shining on his skin. The motion was hypnotic; you couldn't look away. You clenched around him, whining when he sped up, refusing to allow you any control.

"Please," you clawed at his chest, arching as he continued his relentless pace. "Gabriel-"

"I told you," he said, voice gravelly. "The harder you fight, the harder I'll fuck you. And I fucking meant it." He kept a savage rhythm. His body glistened with sweat as he began to speed up. "You're still so tight for me, baby. Feels like you don't want to let me go."

He had you pinned against the ground, trapped against his cock. He was all over you, mouth on your throat, hands playing with your tits, girth filling you while his tip hit your cervix. If you had less adrenaline, it would have hurt, but you were still wound up from the fight, endorphins turning any discomfort into a fullness that soothed the ache deep inside. You needed this after the pseudo-fight. He edged you on the boundary between pleasure and pain, working off the rest of the adrenaline coursing through your system. Your hips shook and you writhed, toes curling from the sheer intensity of it. The pressure made it hard to breathe and harder to think. "I can't- Gabriel, please!"

"You want to come, baby girl?" He crooned. "You think that will stop me? Go on then. Let me see you fall apart."

His fingers moved rapidly against your clit and your breathless sobs filled the air he drove you over the edge. Your hips bucked against his as your orgasm tore through you. Gabriel kept fucking you while you thrashed beneath him.

"Please, I need- need a moment," you clutched at his forearms, your voice hoarse. "Please-Gabriel rested his forehead against yours, eyes wild. "That's not what you should be begging for."

"Please, papi!" Jack said Gabriel would respond to this, though you couldn't think of his exact wording. "I can't-"

Gabriel froze, his breathing ragged. "What did you say?"

"I-I-papi," You hiccupped. "Jack said I should use it. I'm sorry-"

"Fucking Jack," Gabriel growled. "You can use it, baby. You can use it any time." He paused, giving you that moment you needed. "But it isn't going to get you any mercy. It just makes me want to claim that pussy more."

Your thighs trembled as he buried himself in you again. "You're wrecking me, papi," you mewled.

Gabriel swore, control fraying. "Keep that up and your ass is next," he snarled, pounding you frantically.

Gabriel's fingers were back against your clit, and you squirmed under him, sensitive nerves burning from his rough handling. "I know you have another one in you. Don't care if you don't think you can handle it." He grinned viciously. "Come on, baby. Let me feel that pussy milk me."

You screamed his name, desperation coiling in your voice as he forced another orgasm through you. Your muscles contracted hard around his cock, the intensity almost painful. He gripped your hair, his pace growing more frenetic. He yanked your head back, teeth sinking into your shoulder as his hips jolted against yours. "Mine," he grunted, head pressed against your cervix. And you felt it then, his cock buried to the hilt, his hot cum flooding you. You clung to him, labored breaths causing your whole body to shake.

Gabriel dropped onto his forearms, balancing above you, his forehead resting against your collarbone. He took a deep shuddering breath and then kissed you hard, grinding against you. You moaned as he pulled out, and it was a few seconds before his cum started to trickle out of your pussy. He held your legs apart, watching it flow, an expression of distinctly masculine satisfaction on his face.

You lay there, coated in sweat and semen, your heartbeat slowing.

"You like it when your papi gives it to you like that?" His voice was raw.

You closed your eyes. "Fuck. That isn't something I say. I uh...not a daddy kink person. But Jack-"

"Jack's not the one underneath me with my cum pouring out of her well-fucked little hole."

"I just thought you'd like it," you said lamely.

"Oh I do," he breathed, stroking your thighs. "But you can save it for special occasions." You were pretty sure that it was the opposite of the safe word, that it was the "wreck me" command, and that was not something you needed to use.

Gabriel petted you, his hands gentle now.

"You warm enough still?"
You nodded.

He stayed over you, peppering your neck and shoulders with rough kisses. You carded your fingers through his hair, taking slow deep breaths. Your body felt too light, adrenaline still dulling your pain receptors, and you were going to pay for this later. You tensed, realizing that you and Gabriel never had that talk about safe sex. Why the hell not?

"You're thinking too hard," he said as you tensed under him.

"We...uh never actually talked about not using protection. I mean, I have the implant, so I wasn't worried. Was there a reason you didn't want to when we started out?"

"I wanted to," Gabriel said, nuzzling your neck. "Been wanting to do this for ages: fuck you hard and make sure you know you're mine. But didn't want to spook you. Plus," he stroked your slit and you stiffened. "I have a lot. Another SEP bonus." He exhaled slowly. "Not sure about risks though. A lot of people came out of SEP infertile. I don't know if me and Jack are shooting blanks. Never had the occasion to research it."

The blanket was still warm, and Gabriel's body heat was comforting, but you wanted out of the wind and cold. You winced as you tried to close your legs. "Possessive asshole."

"You had to do this the hard way," he said, not sounding the least bit remorseful.

"You were flaunting a former lover in my face. And Chang's strong, fast, and gorgeous. What was I supposed to do?" You rested the back of your hand over your eyes. It was a natural position and maybe he wouldn't think you were avoiding eye contact.

"Huh. You are jealous," Gabriel said, sounding surprised. "I can't say that doesn't turn me on." He curled around you, a man-sized space-heater and chaos-bringer. "I guess now's the time to admit that Chang and I never got together. Jack and her neither. Wanted to a long time ago, but Chang's got her own issues and doesn't fuck anyone. She pushes me, sure, but then we end up with broken bones, internal bleeding, and penal latrine duty. It went down like that too many times to be fun. So no, there's nothing there. Never has been." Gabriel's mouth moved against your neck, his teeth worrying the skin.

"You-" Outrage flared in your chest.

"That wasn't fair," he admitted. "I shouldn't have implied that. But you got so angry, and stopped holding back. It was beautiful." One hand gripped your jaw and he kissed you then, his teeth nipping your lips.

"You're an ass," you said when he let you up for air. "And you owe me a prize for winning your game."

"Mmm, I can go again, baby." He pressed against you. "And you're still wet and ready for me."

"Jesus Christ, Gabriel, you're trying to kill me." Your breath hitched. You were starting to feel sore, but your inner muscles clenched for him anyway.

"Just little deaths," he said, flipping you onto your stomach. "Take my jacket off. I want to feel your skin."

"I can't do that again."
"All right. We won't." Gabriel peeled the jacket off you and kissed the back of your neck. You relaxed, which was a mistake, because then he pulled your hips up, your ass in the air. "I'll go easy on you this time." He already had his head pressed against your slit.

You bit your lip and rested your chin on your forearms. "You would do this even if I hadn't won. I still get a prize." You didn't care about "prizes," you just wanted to be petty. Because Gabriel deserved it.

"All right," he chuckled, chest pressed against your back. Then he pushed inside and you sighed, moaning into the blanket. "You're taking me so smoothly, baby. Guess I need to fuck the fight out of you more often."

"I thought you were going to be nice."

He rocked his hips at a leisurely pace, "I am being nice, hermosa." He gave a sharp thrust, hitting deep inside you and you whined. "Playing with you got me all wound up. I still want to pound you senseless." He squeezed your ass. "But if you're sore, I'll just have to be gentle."

"Please," you said and he rubbed your back, pressing kisses between your shoulder blades.

"If Jack were here, I could work this off faster. Make him clean you up with his mouth, while I drilled him," Gabriel purred. "Give you a little break while you got your second wind. You like having Jack between us, don't you?"

"Yes." The word came out breathless and you began to push your hips back, impaling yourself deeper on Gabriel's cock. Maybe you should be jealous that Gabriel was wishing Jack was here under him, but you liked the image. "I like it when you make him beg. I can't - I can't stop him when I've pushed him too far. He just turns the tables on me."

"I know." Gabriel laughed softly. "When we get back to base, I'll show you some tricks."

"Please." The rhythm between you began to speed up. You took sharp shallow breaths, trying to keep up with Gabriel.

"I want to watch," he said. "He told me how you rode him, edging him while he got more and more desperate. I don't mind watching him flip you and fuck you into the bed after that, but I'm curious to see how far you could push him." Gabriel's balls slapped against your pussy lips and your breathing grew more jagged. He was filled you so well and all these filthy words had you clawing at the ground.

"Want to do it to you too," you moaned. "I want to tease you, Gabriel."

"That's how you end up wrecked, baby girl," Gabriel murmured. "You tease me enough as it is. Much more and I'd break you. You're not ready for that yet."

His hips slammed into you and you buried your face in the blanket. "Gabriel, please-"

"Oh we'll get you there, don't worry. I want you between me and Jack again, one of us fucking open that tight little asshole. You took us so beautifully before. Want to do it again soon. Jack doesn't want to pressure you, but he really wants a turn. You like that thought? Jack'll fuck you harder than I did. I wonder if you can take it." His voice was so full of promise.

"Damnit, Gabriel." Your hand slid between your legs and you began to stroke circles around your clit.
"You do like that. Good." Gabriel gripped your hips tightly. "Keep playing with yourself."

You shuddered, your clit was too sensitive.

"Ask for my cum, like a good girl."

"Really?"

"You begged Jack," he said, nipping your bruised shoulder. "Don't you want me to come inside you again?"

You had enough trouble stringing words together. "Gabriel, please-"

"Please what?" His breath was hot in your ear and he rolled his hips, making you arch.

"Goddamnit! You hung your head, panting as he got you closer to the edge. "I need you."

Sweat trickled down your forehead and you squeezed your eyes shut, trying to focus on words and not the sensation of his cock. "Please Gabriel, you've fucked me so hard tonight. You've come inside me once and it's not enough, I want more, please-"

"Such a greedy little cum slut," he groaned, fistng your hair. "All right, I'll give you what you want." He yanked your head back, forcing you to look up. Your eyes widened, even as Gabriel's fingers pressed down on your clit.

Jack stood in the snow in front of you, arms crossed, grin crooked.

"Let Jack see your face while I fill you up."

You quivered, your jaw clenched. You didn't know how long he'd been there, but judging by his smirk, he'd heard you begging. The thought sent a thrill through you. You met Jack's excited gaze, whimpering as you clamped down on Gabriel's cock, his fingers coaxing you over the edge. You could feel his head twitching deep inside you, shooting thick ribbons of cum against your overly sensitive walls. Your thighs shook, and you collapsed when Gabriel released you, the blanket still warm against your chest.

"Hey pretty," Jack said, crouching in front of you. "Heated blanket, huh? No wonder you've been gone so long." He tilted your head up and kissed you hungrily. "Had to make excuses as to why you missed dinner. Don't know if anyone believed them."

"Sorry," you said weakly.

"You can make it up to me later."

Gabriel pulled out of you and you looked over your shoulder, hoping he was finally spent.

Jack got up, and stepped behind you. "You certainly made a mess, Gabe."

"I'll tell you all about it later," Gabriel chuckled, and Jack kissed him too, a little rougher, his teeth sinking into Gabriel's lower lip. It occurred to you then that Jack and Gabriel talked about you while they were fucking too. You sighed. That was hot - worrisome, because who knew what ideas they came up with during sex - but still very hot.

"Look at that, wow, Gabe, you're pouring out of her."

You shivered as Jack leaned in and kissed your swollen lower lips, his tongue flicking out
"Jack-" You tried to close your legs, but your lower half wasn't cooperating. Jack's fingers traced your slit, until one slipped inside.

"How many times did you fuck her?" Jack's voice was like honey on ground glass, smooth layered over jagged and dangerous.

"Two times," Gabriel said.

"That's it?" Jack slid another finger in and you dropped your head. "But it looks like you used her so hard. If it was only twice, maybe she's ready for more..."

"I can't-" The adrenaline was starting to wear off, and you ached.

"We sparred first, used training knives. She won, with two deathblows. I owe her a prize." Gabriel patted your ass. "It was fucking beautiful."

"Shit, now I'm really sorry I missed it. Guess that means he really gave it to you, huh?" Jack was still working himself up. He curled his fingers and you gasped. He pulled his fingers out and you glanced over his shoulder as he licked them clean. "Just wanted another taste," he said innocently. "Unless you want to go again?"

"Jack, I'm sore and getting cold. If you and Gabriel want to go, that's fine. But I can't." You finally managed to close your legs and roll over. You reached for Gabriel's jacket. Your front was now cold.

Gabriel chuckled and retrieved your clothes, helping you dress. He layered his jacket over yours, kissing your cheeks. "Let's get you back to the house. You can clean up there."

"Thank you," you said. Gabriel scooped you up. "Hey!"

"Can you walk back?"

Heat crept along your face. "Umm..."

"Didn't think so," he said smugly.

You tucked your head against Gabriel's chest. He was still so warm and you liked the feel of his arms around you. You'd been here before, under less pleasant circumstances. This time you could enjoy it.

Jack picked up the blanket and knives, stuffing them in Gabriel's backpack. He grabbed your bag too.

The two men fell into an easy stride.

"Good workout, then?" Jack asked you.

"...What do you think?" You scowled.

Gabriel laughed, hugging you against him. "She had to do things the hard way." He still didn't sound sorry.

"She seems to like that," Jack agreed. "What'd she do to push you so hard?"
"Besides winning the fight? Someone told her to call me "papi." Gabriel gave Jack a look.

"Oh I missed that, too? Damn."

Gabriel put you down before you reached the farmhouse. You were pretty sure whoever was standing guard saw that much, but you were too tired to care. Your gait was wrong and your steps wobbly, but you made it up the stairs and into the bathroom for a hot shower. It was past midnight and the Morrisons were already in bed, or pretending to be. Gabriel joined you, helping you clean up. The water pressure was pitiful, but it didn't matter. You were grateful for hot water.

When you emerged in clean pajamas, Jack had warmed two plates of leftovers and you kissed him in sheer gratitude before devouring one.

"Feel better?" He asked, rubbing your shoulders. You sat between him and Gabriel on the floor of Michael's room.

"I'm going to pass out," you told him. Because Jack was tricky and you weren't falling for it tonight.

"That's fine, I'll take care of him," Gabriel said, finishing his plate. Because apparently, he was still horny. Goddamnit, they were going to kill you. You were going to die of exhaustion if you tried to keep up with them.

Jack took your empty dishes and you dropped back on the floor. Gabriel set up the biotic emitter. A warm yellow light suffused the room and you practically melted into the pillow.

"You did beautifully today," Gabriel said.

"You're talking about the sex." You scowled.

"I'm talking about all of it: the fighting, testing Chang's unit, and definitely the sex," he said. "I want to spar with you more. There's still a lot of room for improvement. Your form is still pathetic."

"If those were real knives, I would have kicked your ass," you muttered.

"If those were real knives, I would have held you down and fucked your ass," he said smugly. "You think a little blood bothers me?"

"...I am too tired for this conversation." You pulled the covers over your head, and let yourself sleep.

"You're going to have to be quieter, Jackie. If you wake her up, I'll stop." Gabriel's voice was a taut whisper, and come to think of it, he woke you up the last time he played this game with Jack. Well, last time that you knew he played this game with Jack. Still, was that a coincidence? Probably not.

Jack muffled his sounds in the pillow beside you.

You were on your side and they were behind you. You could feel the hum of the emitter and the heat pouring off them. You wondered then if you should just go back to sleep. Let Jack and Gabriel play their game, work off their tension, and you could finish getting the rest you deserved. As a bonus, you could totally thwart Gabriel's not so subtle plan to wake you up for more sex.

Wait a minute... Maybe there was such a thing as too petty. Even if you were in Blackwatch.

You turned over, treated the sight of Jack on his stomach, nude, his face buried in the pillow, his hands digging into the blankets. Gabriel knelt between Jack's thighs rolling his hips so slowly it made you ache.

You reached out, and gently stroked Jack's hair, already damp with sweat.

Gabriel gave you a lazy smile and pushed down on Jack's lower back with one hand, and thrust hard.

Jack kept his face in the pillow, body shaking.

"Just like chem camp, eh?" Gabriel murmured, not quite ready to give up the game. "You have to be real quiet, or we'll get busted. We had some close calls back then. Probably because you make such cute noises, Jackie."

Jack's hips jerked and he hissed into the pillow. "Shut up, Gabe."

Gabriel leaned forward and bit Jack. The blonde man jerked forward, his breathing sharp.

"Worry about your own volume," Gabriel said and went back to his slow strokes.

"Not giving you the satisfaction," Jack muttered.

Gabriel just tilted his hips, hitting a new angle that made Jack stiffen and sink his teeth into the pillow. "You don't need to give me anything, mi cíelito. I'm taking what I want, and it's so very satisfying. It's a shame Lucky's out cold. Bet she'd like to help edge you."

You raised a brow. Gabriel kneaded Jack's ass.

"Your fault," Jack growled into the pillow. "Can't believe you did all that without me."

"She was such a good girl today. Deserved a reward." Gabriel flashed you a brash smirk. "Told her all about how badly you want to fuck her ass. She liked the idea. Started playing with herself and everything."

Jack's breath hitched. "Damnit, Gabe-"

"You could've joined us."

You placed a kiss on Jack's shoulder and he sighed. "Family time. You were both welcome to-" He shook his head. ".I get it. Not the same for you guys. She probably needed an outlet. Didn't think...didn't think about that." Jack clenched his teeth as Gabriel sped up.

Gabriel just laughed, his strokes slowing. "I know."

"I just...fuck Gabe. I just wanted us all here together. Didn't think beyond that."

"Good execution, bad follow through. And you're a shit host. You've always been like that." Gabriel's voice was gentle, despite the chastisement. He kissed the back of Jack's neck.

"I'll make it up to you both, just please..."

"You have to be quiet, Jackie." Gabriel nipped his ear.

Jack shuddered.

Gabriel glanced at you, brows raised.

You rolled your eyes and nodded.

"I think I have a solution." He pulled Jack up by his hips. "On your knees."

Jack pushed off the floor and rolled back onto his knees, his eyes widening when he saw you on your side, propped up on your elbow watching him.

"Damnit Gabe-"

"Shhh," you said, kneeling in front of him and pulling your top off. "You're supposed to be quiet."

Jack groaned as Gabriel embraced him tightly, hips driving forward. You leaned in, kissing Jack's face, fingers tracing the planes of his chest. His cock jutted up, but you ignored it, opting to place your metal fingers against his lips. Jack opened his mouth, moaning softly as you slid your fingers inside. He sucked them, eyes fluttering shut.

You bit his neck, marking his throat while Gabriel thrust deep inside him. "Is that better?"

You pressed against his chest, kissing his jawline.

He nodded, nostrils flaring as you tweaked his nipples. You lowered your head, flicking your tongue against them and he jolted backward, spearing himself deeper on Gabriel's cock.

"So sensitive." You grinned up at him, curling your fingers in his mouth. "I know what you're thinking, and the answer is still "no, I'm too sore." Plus, you were so pushy earlier, I don't know if you deserve any other relief from me."

Jack curved an arm around your back, pulling you tighter against him. He dropped your fingers, his mouth moving down, trailing kisses across your neck. "I'm sorry," he gasped. "Sorry, baby. I know I get carried away. I mean it, I'll make it up to you-" He shuddered, pressing his forehead to yours. Flushed and slick with sweat, Jack clung to you, eyes searching your face. "I'll take whatever you give me. Just stay here." His hips jerked, cock pressing against your thighs. "Please."

The sheer openness of his expression made you look away. Jack's sincerity was one of his greatest weapons and he knew it. That you knew this too didn't make it any less potent.

"Please." He whispered your name, a breathless prayer against your ear. "Need you too."
"Doesn't play fair, does he?" Gabriel murmured.

"Neither of you do," you sighed as Jack nuzzled your throat, hands running up and down your sides. You rubbed your metal fingers together and found them still a little slick. "Get them wet."

Jack's tongue wove between your fingers, still focusing on your face as he took them into his mouth, one by one.

"Show off." You withdrew them from his mouth and wrapped your left hand around his cock. "Is this what you wanted?"

"Anything you want to give me," he held you against him, shuddering as Gabriel began to thrust harder.

You stroked him in time with Gabriel.

"May I kiss you, please?"

"So polite," you said. "All right."

Jack's mouth covered yours and you sucked his tongue. His hips began to shake.

"He's close," Gabriel said, voice strained.

You sped up, squeezing Jack's cock lightly. You could hear Gabriel sliding into Jack and feel Jack's little gasps at each thrust.

"That's it Jack, here's your reward," Gabriel groaned.

Jack moaned into your mouth as you pumped him harder. His hips bucked faster against you and he came, cum spurting across your chest and his. When Jack released you, his cheeks were flushed and he dropped his head against Gabriel's shoulder. Gabriel's eyes were closed in firm concentration. His hips shook, arms tightening around Jack, thighs so tense. He bit his lip, but kept silent. You liked seeing him lose control, but this was charming too.

Gabriel opened his eyes, then leaned over and kissed you. "Lie back down and we'll get you cleaned up. I know you're tired."

You dropped back against the pillows, smiling as the boys disengaged. Jack picked up one of his shirts and wiped you clean before taking care of himself. He kissed your stomach, hands lingering on your sides. You found your top and pulled it back on.

Gabriel lay down beside you, sliding his arm under you. Jack was on your other side, his head against your chest.

"Too heavy?"

You put an arm around him. "You're fine. But if you drool on me, all bets are off."

Chapter End Notes
And that's Christmas Eve. Because I couldn't do mistletoe or "Santa baby" as a legit sexy thing. I'm cheesy, but not Cheez-whiz, processed American cheez-food cheesy. More like smoked blue cheese or hipster goat cheese cheesy. Hmm. I like cheese. If you couldn't tell.

Totally going along with certain fannon with Gabriel having daddy kink. Not my fav, but in my humble opinion, it kind of fits. Not kink-shaming, just like "I hope I did that right and managed not to squick people who don't prefer it..." Also see him as not caring about minor things like blood and bruises; so long as no one's critically injured, "hey, let's have sex." Hell, he might like it more (post-sparring, high-adrenaline, etc). But that's not everyone's taste and I digress.

Appreciate all the comments. They really do brighten my work days. (And my off days, but you know, you need more "moral support" on work days.)
"Merry Christmas! Oh my God that's adorable!" Maggie laughed, peeking in her head in. "Now get up before Mom sees you!" She slammed the door shut, and you wished, not for the first time, that there were working locks on these doors.

"What time is it?" You were still on the floor, in the crook of Gabriel's arm, Jack draped across your stomach. He was drooling on your shirt.

Gabriel chuckled. "It's 0800. They let us sleep in this year."

"Eight?" You sighed. This was a holiday. You were exhausted. "What the hell do we need to be up that early for?"

"Presents," Jack muttered. "Maggie wants her presents. Can't open them till everyone's there. Gotta get up. She'll send Mom next."

You groaned. "You drooled on me."

"Was comfortable," he said, not sounding the least bit sorry.

"Gross. Gabriel, why is he so gross?"

"Wait till I get you a ball gag, then you'll feel some real drool," Jack said, still not lifting his head.

"I'm going to poison you," you said. "Get off." You shoved him, but he didn't budge, clinging tightly to your waist.

"Uh-uh," he grinned, eyes squeezed shut. "You have to ask nicely."

"Gabriel, hand me my tanto."

Gabriel rolled over, still shirtless, and kissed your neck. "It'll be faster if you ask nicely. He's kind of stupid when he first wakes up."

"Jack, please let me up or I'll give Maggie your present."

He opened his eyes. "You got me a present?"

"I could be wrong, but I hear that's what people do at Christmas. Was it presents? Or anatomically-correct piñatas? I get confused sometimes."

"Mm, don't know if I want an anatomically-correct piñata." Jack sat up. "But if it's from you, I guess I'll pretend to like it."

You wobbled to your feet, still sore, despite the emitter. At least the swelling had gone down, though the bruising hadn't completely faded. "I'm supposed to wear something nice today, right?"
"Nah, don't worry about it. I got us covered," Jack grinned. He handed you a box. It wasn't wrapped, and you shook it. "It's technically not a present," he said.

"So I technically don't have to pretend to like it?" When you opened the box you realized there was no way you could convincingly pretend to like it. It was a blue sweater, Christmas-themed, the front dominated by a Christmas tree covered in pom poms, sequins, glitter thread, and ribbons. It was hideous, and you just stared at it, not quite comprehending how all the parts formed the whole.

Gabriel groaned. "Really Jack?"

"It's an ugly Christmas sweater. It's a tradition."

"I'd rather have an anatomically-correct piñata." You put the lid back on. "Thank you for the optical illusion in a box, but I'm sorry, Jack. No fucking way."

"I packed Gabe's," Jack said. "We'll all be wearing them."

"No, we won't," Gabriel said, wrinkling his nose.

"Everyone else will be doing it."

Gabriel folded his fingers. You nodded and made the hand sign for the woods. There was an exit strategy in place, and you would use it.

Jack eyed you both suspiciously. "There'll be an ugly sweater picture later. You have to wear them then. That's an order."

"Mmm-hmm," you glanced at Gabriel.

He rolled his eyes. "Here." Gabriel handed you a box as well. "This technically isn't a present either, and it's more tasteful than anatomically-correct piñatas, or that." He waved at the box of ugly, dismissively.

"...Are "technically not a present" presents a Christmas tradition? Because I missed the memo."

"Shut up and open the box, Lucky."

You took the lid off and pulled away the tissue paper. It was another sweater, but black and very soft with a wide cowl neck. It would hang off at least one shoulder. "Cashmere, really?" You raised a brow. That wasn't cheap.

"Gives me an excuse to pet you," Gabriel smirked. "And it doesn't look like you got jumped by a craft store."

"Ah. Thank you." You looked between them, unsure of how your choice would affect their feelings. Gabriel's sweater was obviously superior, but finding something that ugly took effort, among other things.

"Wear the pretty sweater," Jack said, rolling his eyes. "I'm sure it will look good on you."

"Anything is going to look good compared to that eyesore," Gabriel said, and you silently agreed.
It looked like something out of a TV show. There were stockings on the fireplace, names embroidered on them. The tree was a shiny fire-hazard, decked in lights, glass balls, and strings of tinsel. A crooked star perched precariously on top. There were neatly-wrapped packages underneath, and you placed your gift basket underneath beside Gabriel's offerings, despite the fact every tag said "From: Gabriel & Lucky." You weren't sure how that made you feel. But it was a nice gesture.

You'd skipped personal and brought a gift basket full of smoked meat, processed cheese, decent wine, and cookies.

Jack's parents were fully-dressed and sitting on the couch. Michael and Maggie were still in flannel pajamas, sitting beside the tree. Michael's gaze darted between you, Jack, and Gabriel, his expression guarded. Maggie's eyes were glued on the boxes, her grin somewhere between eager and downright avaricious.

Jack brought you a cup of coffee and you sat on the floor beside Gabriel. The sweater fit perfectly, slipping down one shoulder, and it was now the softest thing you owned. You wanted to take your gloves off and pet it, but not in front of other people.

Gabriel casually draped his arm around you and Jack settled beside you, resting his head on your shoulder. You sipped your coffee and stared at the floor, because apparently they weren't going to pretend any more.

You could not look at Jack's parents.

"I think we better let Maggie open presents before she combusts," Jack said.

"I want to hand them out too!"

"All right," John said. "We can go ahead. Jane and the kids won't be here till after noon."

"And I can't wait that long!" Maggie grabbed a box and shoved it at Michael. "This is for you from me! And you better like it because it's awesome!" She continued along that vein, distributing presents, all from her.

"Jack! Lucky!" She dropped a box in your lap. "Gabe! Now I'm just a poor teenager, so don't judge too hard, OK?"

"I'm sure it's lovely," Gabriel said.

"Thank you," you said, staring at the candy-striped box. You watched Jack tear through the wrapping paper before taking your cue and opening your gift. It was a fluffy stuffed fox, cute and pseudo-realistic.

"Because you're clever and sneaky," she said, grinning at you with a certain amount of subtext. You glanced over at Jack, who was blushing. "He called you a "wily vixen," Maggie stage-whispered loud enough for people outside to hear.

You were just going to go dig a hole and stay there till the transport came. You could live off the land. Foraging for nuts and berries. Pooping in the woods. No, it was too cold out. You would have to use a different strategy.
"I uh...thank you? It's cute. Like Daisy."

"Wait, how do you-? He still has Daisy?! Oh my God!" Maggie shrieked. "You told me she got lost when you moved to Lisbon!"

You smiled sweetly at Jack.

He sighed. "This is a really nice scarf, Maggie. Thank you."

"You still have Daisy! You totally lied to me!"

Gabriel chuckled, and showed you his nice new leather-bound edition of The Count of Monte Cristo. Well, everyone knew whom Maggie's favorite was. You knew Gabriel read for pleasure, but you had no idea what. You would ask later.

Most of the gift exchange was between Jack's family. It was...odd, and while they had been welcoming, you felt like an intruder. This wasn't your family. They were being nice because you were a guest. You didn't fault them for anything, but the togetherness, that you weren't part of, was very tangible.

But this wasn't for you. This was for Jack. So you smiled pleasantly, and tried not to make eye contact, because you still weren't sure how Jack's parents felt about your arrangement.

"Oh Lucky, we just got you a little something." Jack's mother handed you a heavy wrapped box and you kept your smile pasted firmly in place, in case it was another gift with subtext. Because you couldn't handle much more of this.

"Thank you very much," you said brightly, because you were in cover. You weren't going to break cover. You weren't going to hide behind Gabriel or Jack. You were going to do this and look happy. You opened it and found a large cast iron skillet.

"Jack says you cook for him, and I'm glad someone else is making sure he isn't eating MREs all the time," Jacqueline said cheerfully, and you detected no hidden messages.

You didn't think anyone willingly ate MREs, but when you glanced over at Jack, he wore a shit-eating grin. Actually, you could see him doing that. Never mind.

"Thank you very much. I'll definitely get a lot of use out of it." It was also heavy, and you could hit people with it.

Gabriel, thankfully, distributed the gifts he'd put your name on, and while everyone said "thank you" you were pretty sure they knew who did the shopping. Which was fine.

"Hey," Jack nudged you. "Here." He handed you a small box. "This is technically a present, in case you were confused."

Maggie gave him a weird look.

"This may be an anatomically-correct piñata," you told him, handing him your clumsily-wrapped gift.

Maggie gave you a weirder look.

You opened the box. The earrings were omnium hoops, the same gunmetal color as your prostheses, inlaid with spiraling panels of fiery blue opal.
"I thought they'd...match. You don't seem to have a lot of jewelry," Jack said.

"Thank you," you said, softly. Because they were a thoughtful gift. They did match your fingers, though the blue color was pure Jack. "I like them. They're very fitting."

"Can I put them on you?"

You blinked. You didn't normally wear jewelry - it didn't survive missions and sparring. But you were on vacation. "Yes, please."

You held very still, heart beating a little too fast. Jack gently put the earrings in place. You swallowed, leaned over, and gave Jack a quick peck on the cheek.

Jack grinned at you one more time before opening your gift. "Really?" He stared for a moment, then got out the "Jack Morrison's #1 Fan" t-shirt, complete with his face on it. He stared for a long moment. Gabriel started to laugh and you covered your mouth. "I uh..."

"You have to wear it," Maggie said. "And I want a picture."

"Your actual present is underneath it," you said.

"You had me worried."

"It's in your size," you told him.

"I know what I'm getting you and Gabe next," he muttered.

"We can get them for the whole team," you said. Because you could take this joke further than he dared, and you would, if necessary.

He studied the square ebony wood box inlaid with mother of pearl. Then he tried to take the lid off.

"It's a puzzle box. You have to figure out the order of panels to move and then it opens. I think there are twelve steps."

He shook it gently.

"I promise it's not going to open a portal to Hell. But there's something small in there for when you figure it out." Explaining all this was awkward. Maybe you should have gotten him a tie or something. Not that you knew the first thing about tie-shopping. You'd have to ask Gabriel.

"That's really cool," Maggie said. "Let me see!"

"I'm solving it," Jack said, keeping it out of her reach.

Gabriel placed a large box in your lap. "It'll take him awhile. Open mine."

You laughed and complied, because you couldn't remember the last time there'd been this many presents for...anything. There were two large polished wooden boxes you opened one and found a slew of familiar pentagonal tiles. The hinged box folded into a grid board. You studied the characters on the tiles. You didn't remember exactly what they said, but Shin had showed you how to play. "I'm terrible at shogi."

"What is that?" Maggie hovered over your shoulder.
"It's a Japanese chess-type game. First one that lets you reuse your opponents captured pieces," Gabriel said.

You rubbed one of the wooden pieces between your fingers, recalling how Shin had fastidiously explained everything a lifetime ago.

"Aishani preferred it to regular chess," Gabriel said.

You bowed your head. "I watched her and Shin play once."

"I play, if you want a partner." Gabriel's eyes were on your face and you nodded. "Jack has a regular chess set in his room. We can play that too, but you'll have a better chance at winning against him."

"Shut up, Gabe," Jack said, still fiddling with the puzzle box.

You opened the next box and found a slew of black and white stones separated into different compartments. There were pretty carved wooden bowls included. "OK, I can go."

You studied the gift, sensing a theme. "Thank you." You had not expected games from Gabriel, but you weren't displeased. You kissed his cheek. "I like them."

"You work a lot," he said. "It's good to have different ways to unwind. And it gives you a few more options to beat Jack."

"Shut up, Gabe." Jack sounded a little more annoyed this time, but he was still sliding pieces on the box. Maybe you should have got him the five step box instead.

"Jack and I both play strategy games. It's a good way to compete without getting...physical." Ha! You could easily picture them flipping the game board and punching each other or playing strip chess. And it was kind of hot. "And you're clever. I thought you'd like the challenge." He seemed almost embarrassed and you studied the boxes in your lap, your smile secretive and strangely happy.

He carefully unwrapped your gift. "Really?"

There were two chocolate bars on top. The same awful military ones he'd fed you in Canada.

"I owed you some chocolate."

Shaking his head, Gabriel lifted up another puzzle box, this one rectangular and carved from lignum vitae and inlaid with horn and bone. The color of the wood was odd - it had a green tinge - but it smelled like perfume and you heard it wouldn't rot. He tilted the box, listening to the soft clink of something moving inside.

"It's also twelve moves," you said.

"Jack's been at it for seven minutes now? Let's see if I can beat that."

"Ha! Finally!" Jack popped the lid off and looked inside. The necklace was simple, a lapis disc, shot through with gold, circular hole in the center, wrapped on a buff leather cord. It was the color of his eyes and you knew it was cheesy as fuck, but you wanted to give him something pretty. He held it up, studying it carefully for a moment.

"Lapis lazuli, right?"
You nodded. "Sorry, it's not expensive but-"

"Put it on me?"

He could damn well put it on himself, but you undid the clasp and fastened it for him. He tucked it against his chest, and kissed you on the nose before you could back up.

"Thank you. Even if I had to work for it."

"I'm always going to make you work for it," you blurted out and Maggie snorted.

"And I'll make you pay for it," Jack said softly in your ear, sounding pretty pleased.

Gabriel had the box open in under seven minutes and his contained an almost identical malachite disc on a black leather cord. He silently offered it to you and you fastened it for him too.

"Thank you," he said. He looked at Jack for a moment, then you. "You got another one?"

You nodded. You chose a black obsidian one for yourself. It was simple and elegant, but it was still in the box. You weren't sure if they'd like the necklaces, let alone want matching ones. It sat in your duffel bag.

"Good. Why don't you go get it?"

When you came back, Jack was holding a green sweater, in the same yarn as your scarf. It didn't match his eyes, but it looked good against his skin. Maggie giggled. Gabriel was chuckling, and he held out his right hand. The pinky ring was gold, with a flat black inlay. A small diamond protruded slightly from the center.

"He said he wanted one! Why is this so funny?" Jack looked at you, bewildered.

"Pinky rings are a mafia thing, Jack. Made-men wore pinky rings as tokens to pay for their funerals." You'd seen it happen once or twice back in the day. You might have...harvested and resold one or two, and not to pay for a funeral. "Also, if he punches someone, that ring is going to cut their face."

"Royalty and church figures wear pinky rings too!"

"Yeah..." You shook your head. Bishop Gabriel? King Gabriel? "I uh...no comment."

Gabriel held his hand out and you offered him the box. He opened it and studied the stone.

"Why obsidian?"

"Didn't want to be flashy. I'm not a big damn hero, after all. And I guess I default to black."

Gabriel put the necklace on you. "Thank you, corazon." He kissed the back of your neck.

You looked up and realized that at some point Jack's parents had gone to the kitchen. Maggie sat there smugly, and Michael lingered by the tree, his back to you.

"I'm going to take Chang some coffee and cookies. You want to come?" Jack asked.

"Sure," Gabriel said, smiling with teeth.
"I'll uh...stay inside," you said, because it was cold. And maybe because you were not up for the ribbing Chang's people were going to give you about last night.

You picked up your trash and put it in one of the plastic bags the Morrisons had for the occasion. Then you gathered up your gifts and carried them upstairs. You packed them carefully in your bag before heading back down.

Maggie was in the kitchen and Michael stood by the door, rubbing the back of his neck.

"You uh, want some spice cake?" He asked you, staring at his feet.

"Sure," you said.

"I'll grab some," he said, already heading to the kitchen.
You sat down on the couch with your coffee.

Michael came back with two slices of cake and two forks.

"Thank you."

"You're welcome." He sat down beside you, a sketchbook in hand. "You said you wanted to see some of my work?"

"Yes, please." You took a bite of the cake. It was nice, not really spicy enough to be called "spice cake" but you were in Midwestern America.

He handed you the sketchbook and studied his hands.

It was not the one you'd seen before. The drawings were more polished. You put the cake down and leafed through it slowly. They were mostly of his family, with a few farm animals sprinkled in. You paused on one of Maggie, fist in the air, caught mid-shout, her braids swinging.

"You really captured Maggie's energy."

He blushed.

"I'll fully admit that I'm not an expert, but I think they're really good. There's a life to them." You paused, seeing one of Jack sitting in a chair, staring off into space. "I like this one. You work from photos, live models, or memory?"

"A combination. I freehand the live models, sometimes get a photo, then polish it up."

You finished flipping through the book and handed it back. "Have a good talk with Jack?"

"I-yes." He glanced up at you.

"He's dense," you said. "You have to lay things out with diagrams."

"Yeah," Michael said. He turned the sketchbook over in his hands, fingers tracing the binding. "I'm sorry I was a jerk to you."

You shrugged. "We're good now. I'm not the one you were really a jerk too."

Michael nodded. "I know. I'll talk to him later." He sighed. "It's going to suck."
"Yeah, Gabriel's petty as fuck," you said, and then realized that wasn't the encouragement he needed.

"Would it be weird if I asked to see your prostheses?"

You took off your glove, held out your hand. "You want me to take them off?"

He studied them. "Umm, if it's not too much trouble."

So you broke them down and showed him the nerve augments. You explained basics as Torby and Angela had done to you in the beginning, and went over the upkeep routine.

He watched you attach the prostheses to the sockets.

"How'd you lose them?"

You sighed. "That's classified. But despite popular rumor, the Yakuza did not cut them off."

His eyes widened. "They did?"

"No." You shouldn't have mentioned that. "Never mind. Someone else was spreading that rumor. It's not true." You sighed. "Lost them to shrapnel. I was too close to an explosion. That's about all I can say."

"Jack said you had a wicked scar on your leg."

"Jack has some wicked scars-" You stopped. Because you didn't need to go there. "How did that get brought up?"

"I asked who had the coolest scar."

You weren't going to out Jack to his family. But you did not have the coolest scar. "That's a matter of opinion. Mine's a burn and shrapnel scar, so it looks more like tree bark and not epic like a plasma blade or something."

Michael's eyes darted down to your leg, but you did not roll up your pants.

"Do you do color work? Or just black and white?"

"Umm, dabbling still." He looked away.

"I'd like to buy some of the Jack ones. I'd be fine with a digital copy."

Michael's eyes widened. "Seriously?"

"Yeah, they're good."

"I uh...sure, I'll have to scan them."

"Well, let me know." You reattached your prostheses and pulled on your gloves.

"Reyes bought me that hideous sweater, didn't he?" Michael asked. It was a terrible shade of yellow-green that was vaguely reminiscent of vomit.

"Yeah, I had no idea what to get anyone." You laughed. "You should see the one Jack bought me for the Ugly Christmas Sweater photo. It's fucking awful." You paused. "Though I bet if you wore when you uh...apologized to him, he'd go easier on you."

"Really?"

You shrugged. "Maybe."

He eyed you skeptically.

"I mean, it's hard to act mad when you're laughing at someone wearing the terrible sweater you gave them."

Michael deflated. "Yeah, you're probably right."

You didn't need a cigarette, but it was such a sinful luxury that you snuck out behind the barn and had one anyway. Because you'd made it through Christmas morning at the Morrison farm without causing any awkward incidents. You deserved a reward.

"Really?" Jack asked, arms crossed. You hadn't even heard him approach.

"Uhh..." You shrugged.

Jack plucked the cigarette out of your mouth and leaned in, his hips pressed against yours. He kissed you hard, mouth covering yours and for a moment, you couldn't breathe. When he pulled away, he blew out a mouthful of your smoke.

Your eyes widened when he took a drag off your cigarette. "I thought you didn't like smoking!"

"I never said that. I've got accelerated healing. But it's bad for you." Then he kissed you again, and when you exhaled, smoke curled from your lips. "If you hadn't figured it out, I like bad girls. A bit too much." He ground against you and your breath quickened.

"This where you'd bring all your conquests, farmboy? Behind the barn?"

"Only if I planned on fucking them," he said and kept smoking your cigarette.

"We are not having sex here."

"No," he agreed. One hand slipped into your coat and stroked your stomach. "That sweater is soft." He kissed your neck. "How are you holding up?" You leaned against the wall, hands in your pockets.

"I'm a little sore."

"I mean, do I need to make excuses so you can escape into the woods?" He straightened your coat, though he hadn't stopped touching you.

"I think I'm OK," you said.

"Jane'll be here soon. She has two kids, Gloria and Martin. They're four and two. I think her husband is scared of me, so who knows if he'll show."

"Why would he be scared of you?" You said, when you actually meant "what did you do to him?"

"I might've threatened him a few times before they got hitched. You know, rural sexist stuff about "treating my sister right" and stupid things like that. Of course, it was after I'd finished SEP, gained like a hundred pounds of muscle, and my emotional control wasn't great..." Jack shrugged, cigarette dangling from his mouth. "The irony is Jane's the meanest out of all of us. She can take care of herself. But Will's not the brightest bulb. My sister bats her lashes, and he's tripping over himself to get her what she wants. Which is the smart thing, honestly. But she doesn't need to raise her voice to get her way."

You laughed, because Jack didn't have to raise his voice to get what he wanted from you or Gabriel. "I see. She know about us, too?" You don't know why you bothered asking. Everyone knew. And you were pretty sure Jack had known that it would happen like that; which was why he hadn't been the least bit worried about explaining it. Sneaky bastard.

"Yeah. I talk to Jane the most," he said. "She knows where a lot of the bodies are buried." He finished the cigarette, stubbed it out, and tossed it in the designated coffee can.

You surveyed the land. "Well, you have the room for them."

"That was a metaphor."

"Sure, it was."

Jack's hands skimmed your hips. "Thank you for being a good sport about this. I'm sorry I wasn't a better host."

"It's been...nice. Alien, but nice."

"Yeah. I like...not having to pretend. It can't be like this in Zurich," he said regretfully.

"I know. I'm not the one advertising our private life."

"That's not what I mean. I like being here with you and Gabriel. I like being in the open. It's going to be hard going back."

"I'm sorry." You looked away. Jack was good at showing emotion. You didn't mind the secrecy as much. You weren't ashamed, but this arrangement between you three, it was private. Explaining your business to everyone else was strange, even if they were accepting.

"Not your fault." Jack ran his fingers through your hair. "What'd you say to Michael?"

"I said a lot of things. I can't remember every word."

"I heard you threw him around," Jack said, eyes bright. "Are you beating up my kid brother?"

"Nah. We made a deal. He asked for best two out of three, but wanted all three matches, even after he lost the second. I obliged, because I'm a good guest."

Jack gave you a sly look. "You left an impression on him. He asked if we were really "dating." Dumb question. It's much too late to concoct a scenario so I can pretend that I don't like cock."

You snorted. "He was a bit hung up on your sexuality. I'm scared to ask what you told him."

"I said, "yes, and more." Emphasis on more." Jack lifted your gloved hands to his lips.

"I bet you did. "Wily vixen?" How old are you? Seventy?"

"I was being stupid for Maggie," he huffed. "My siblings like you. It's a good thing."

"Well, that's good. I worked hard to be likeable," you said, unsure of what he was getting at.

"You're treating this visit like a mission."

You winced. Were you that transparent? "I wouldn't say that."

"You think I don't know when you're playing a role?" He raised a brow, and you had to admit, Jack was a better actor than you. He could probably recognize your bullshit pretty quickly.

"I mean, a little. Mostly I'm just milling about in confusion."

"I didn't realize how uncomfortable you were. I'm sorry. Maybe Gabe's family would've been easier to start out with. I uh, shouldn't have pushed you so hard. Not after Cambridge."

"It wasn't just you," you said, recalling Jesse's little digs in the mess hall. "Other people played a part too. It's fine. I'm glad I came." And you were. It might have started awkward and harrowing, but there'd been something here that you couldn't have gotten in Zurich. Not just the cornfields and excess of casserole. There was something about seeing Jack with his family that was intimate. And it made Jack happy. That counted for something.

He studied your face.

"I mean it," you said. "It's good for me to do things that...aren't work."

Jack placed both hands on the wall on either side of your head and looked you in the eye. "I know it's not the same for you and me as it is with you and Gabe. You're more guarded with me. I see you working hard to hide it, but it's fine. We don't know each other as well as we know Gabe."

You shrugged sheepishly, because of course Jack noticed. "Sorry."

"Nothing to apologize for. We're getting there. I'm just saying, you don't have to pretend."

"I'm not pretending. I just don't know what I'm doing."

Jack sighed against you, one arm slipping around your waist. The gentleness surprised you. "You're trusting us to work it out," he said and kissed you softly. You leaned into him, one hand gripping his shirt, your metal fingers held firmly at your side. "I think we're doing pretty good so far. I know I have trouble keeping my hands off you, but it's not just sex for me. You know that, right?" The earnestness on his face made your chest ache.

"I...I'm not just here to humor Gabriel," you said quickly. "I hope you don't think that."

"I know," he said. "You're not as inscrutable as you think."
"You're not as smooth as you think," you scowled.

"Well obviously I'm doing something right, otherwise I wouldn't have you alone behind the goddamn barn," he gave that damn recruitment poster grin and you wanted to bite him. "You're doing it again. You get that look and I want to do bad things to you." He nuzzled your cheek. "One more kiss, please? Then we'll go back before I get us in trouble."

You wanted to say "no" on principle. But Jack had a way of circumventing your Blackwatch petty. He cupped your face, and you wrapped your arms around his neck and met him halfway.

"Hey Jack, Gloria's looking for yo- Shit! Sorry!" Michael's voice went high.

Jack broke the kiss, but his hands stayed on you. He grinned at his brother. "We'll be there in a minute."

"Damnit, Jack, how old are you? Sixteen? You're still sneaking behind the barn?" Michael faced away, but the tips of his ears were red.

"Did she bring Will?" Jack asked, conveniently ignoring Michael's query. He did that a lot. "Or is he still traumatized?"

"He's here somewhere," Michael said, turning around, a scarlet blush blazing across his cheeks. "Gloria's looking for you."

"Want to meet a living breathing wrecking ball?" Jack asked, his smile infectious.

"I already know Reinhardt."

"This one's smaller, maybe a little less innocent," Jack said.

"Sure," you said, because you really were treating this like a mission, and you didn't get the option to chicken out.

The pair of towheaded kids were far more interested in their Uncle Jack than you. Sitting on the floor, a thin blonde man in a cowboy hat smiled nervously at you, but couldn't quite bring himself to make eye contact. He kept shooting panicked glances at Jack. That must be Will. Beside him was a tall blonde woman with sharp gray eyes and full lips. Jane was pretty in a severe way, and she reminded you more of Jack's father than his mother.

You sat on the couch beside Gabriel, watching Jack toss Gloria in the air. He was good with them, not that you were surprised. Jack was good with people in general. Maggie and Martin played with a truck, repeatedly ramming it into Michael's leg. Michael rolled his eyes, now wearing Gabriel's hideous present. Jack's parents looked on fondly.

It was so domestic it made your teeth hurt.

You did your best to look placid, but having to watch all this togetherness that you could never reclaim, it made breathing hard. You didn't resent the Morrisons, but you needed air.

"Be back in a minute," you told Gabriel cheerfully. "Forgot to send instructions to Ziv."
Gabriel gave you a measured look. "Go ahead: that boy needs constant supervision." It was a prearranged signal, and you slipped off the couch and up the stairs. You went into Michael's room, closed the door, and pulled on your coat. You were halfway out the window when the door opened.

Jane stood in the threshold, a small smile on her lips when she spotted you. You should have dropped then, slipped down the roof and off the porch. If you ran, you could make it out of earshot before she had the chance to react.

"I was hoping I'd get a chance to talk to you," Jane said too quickly for you to feign deafness. Her tone was pleasant, but there was measure of steel at the core. It wasn't quite the Strike Commander cadence, but she had plenty of confidence in her authority.

"Ah," you said, crouching outside the window. Damnit, you should have run when you had the chance. It was too late to pretend to be polite. "I uh..."

"Why don't you come back inside? It's cold out there."

Damnit. She'd been waiting to get you alone. That was the only explanation. You wondered then if Jack had tipped her off. Who knew what he told her?

You sighed and climbed back inside. You debated on leaving the window open so you could fall out if necessary.

"Do you mind closing the window? We don't want to let all the heat out."

_Damnit._

You shut the window and watched her, back to the wall. She stood tall, wearing a bright red sweater and jeans, her riding boots, freshly polished.

"What did you want to talk to me about?" You studied the other exit route. She blocked the doorway and you couldn't slip by her politely. Damn these mission parameters.

"I just wanted to get to know you a little better. Jack speaks quite highly of you." She smiled, and you tried to return the expression. Fuck, you'd misread the entire situation. You thought Jack's family was going to leave you alone because Jack asked them to. No, they were waiting for the big guns: Jane was here to interrogate you.

You'd survived Lacroix. You could handle a civilian, right?

"Maggie told me all about her new life goal."

You winced.

"Though I think she wants two boyfriends, rather than a boyfriend and a girlfriend. She is severely disappointed that Gabriel doesn't have any brothers." Jane's smile was friendly and you didn't trust it in the least. "And Michael, well, his attitude has drastically improved, though I'm a little concerned about that limp. He swears he tripped over a goat."

"Ah," you said cleverly. "Those goats. Very trippy." She had a disturbingly clear picture of what you'd been up to for the past few days.

"Jack won't tell me exactly what you do, only that you work with Gabriel, so I have to assume it's very classified. I'm a school psychologist; I can only imagine how difficult your work..."
"Dealing with children is much more challenging. I do lots of paperwork," you said, used to redirecting. "It's awful."

She tilted her head to the side. "We've all seen the "Ms. Strike" photos. Jack was pretty tickled about how you got rid of his personal assistant. It's funny, I always thought he'd end up with a girl like Ainsley. Turns out he has better taste than I expected."

"He has great taste in men," you agreed, because you had no idea what kind of women Jack actually liked.

"I'm making you uncomfortable," she said, keeping that same measured, easy tone, like she was talking to a child.

You crossed your arms. There was nothing polite you could respond with.

"I'm not trying to interrogate you about your intentions toward my brother, despite how he terrorized my husband. I honestly just want to get to know you," Jane said, not raising her voice or even looking disturbed. "Jack says you spar with him and you cook for him. He says you're loyal, brave, and acerbic. He says you like your space, and I think I'm starting to understand what he means." She leaned against the door. "You know the interesting thing? Dad's more relaxed about Gabriel since you're in the picture. Not that I agree with him - Gabriel is great - but Dad seems to think you're a civilizing factor. It could be a kneejerk reaction of relief that Jack still likes women, but I can't be sure."

"He said something about the goats liking me."

Jane laughed. "I bet he tried to tell you Maggie wouldn't let him get rid of them. Don't be fooled. Dad adores the goats. Maggie lost interest long ago."

You waited for her to continue, because you'd learned your lesson about volunteering information.

"Jack's very fond of children. I know he terrifies poor Will, but his niece and nephew adore him. Gabriel is also good with kids. I know they've talked about starting a family."

You blanched, eyeing the window. Those were not thoughts you were ready to build upon, let alone talk about with this uncomfortably perceptive stranger. You recalled how they doted over Farah. That was safe. "Yeah, they'd be great parents."

Jane waited expectantly.

You gritted your teeth. She wasn't going to move till you'd satisfied her curiosity, and you couldn't just shove her out of the way. That window pane didn't look too thick. If you punched it with your left hand, you could jump out.

"Hey Jane, what are you doing in my- Oh, hi, Lucky." Michael stood behind his sister. "I meant to ask, did you have a print you preferred? I think I'll start the coloring tonight."

Jane watched you shrewdly.

"Can you show me them again? I liked the sketch work for the three-quarter face, but I don't know if color would really add to it."
"Yeah, sure. My sketchbook is downstairs."

"I'll come take a look," you said, and Jane stepped out of your way.

"It was good talking to you," she said brightly.

"Uh-huh," you said, because if you used real words, you might tell her what you really thought.

In the kitchen, a room with three exits, you gave Michael all your cigarettes and a firm handshake. He just grinned at you, looking pleased with himself. He handed you the sketchbook. You examined one of Jack in Strike Commander gear petting a patchy Labrador. You hadn't seen the dog, and now that you thought about it, what farm didn't have a dog?

"That's Atticus. He was Jack's dog before he left for boot camp. We haven't tried to replace him yet," Michael said.

"Ah. Then that one for sure." You weren't sure if Jack would like it, but you thought he would.

"She means well," Michael said after a moment. "She's just intense."

"I get that." You rubbed the back of your neck. You weren't going to badmouth his sister, as uncomfortable as the encounter had been. "I really appreciate the assist. You had excellent timing. Thanks."

Michael just turned red and mumbled something unintelligible.

You stayed away from the house till you saw the minivan drive off. You gave it another fifteen minutes, then casually made your way back.

Gabriel sat on the porch, drinking something out of a mug. "You missed the ugly sweater picture."

You shrugged. "Why didn't you warn me?"

"Didn't know she'd come on that strong. She was all lightness and flowers when I met her. Of course, Jack hadn't traumatized her husband yet." Gabriel handed you his mug and you smelled whiskey.

"Thanks." You finished it, craving heat.

"After you left, Michael said some sharp things to Jane, mostly about "not scaring you off." Maggie caught some of it and joined in, definitely on the side of not spooking the feral Lucky." Gabriel patted your back.
You rubbed your forehead. "She could give Lacroix a run for his money. Seriously, you should consider hiring her for interrogations. You'll have people begging for the bolt cutters."

"You're pretty persuasive when you want to be. I know you're the reason I got a vague stuttering apology from a maladjusted teenager in a hideous sweater."

"Jack's terrible at honesty. I blame him."

"Of course," Gabriel said, tolerantly. "Everyone's watching The Christmas Story. Why don't you come back inside and warm up?"

You followed Gabriel in. Jack was on one couch. His parents were on the loveseat. Michael and Maggie were on the floor, and Maggie waved before returning her attention to the film. They all politely pretended like the movie was very engrossing. It felt staged.

It hit you then: Jack's family was fucking catering to your crazy. Goddamnit.

You sat down beside Jack and he put an arm around your shoulder and kissed your cheek. Gabriel settled on the other side rubbing your back. You forced yourself to smile and stare at the television screen.

Jack's family wasn't perfect, however they felt normal, supportive, cohesive: whatever families should be. They had their problems, like all families did, but it wasn't hard to see how Jack turned out to be such a goddamn decent person.

You changed into your pajamas. At some point, you'd dozed off during the movie. Tonight was the last night here and then it was back to Zurich and work. Work would be good. Though no one had sent you any messages or requests, not even Bái Shé.

Gabriel came in and sat on a bed, eating a cookie, his new book under his arm.

"What kind of books do you like?"

"All kinds." He looked at you. "You looking for a recommendation?"

You shrugged. You didn't read for pleasure any more. There was too much work now, but maybe once upon a time, two lifetimes ago, you had. Back when you thought you'd be a doctor, or a firefighter, or an astronaut. Back before.

You'd transported a rare book or two. "Incunabula" they called it, which you assumed was academic-speak for "pretentiously expensive." Thousands of credits just for the first or a unique printing of a real paper book. One particularly old manuscript required temperature control, no exposure to light, and definitely no reading. Digital readers made more sense, letting you carry thousands of books in one convenient package. Anything else was silly. Now, you realized, you were most likely missing parts of that equation.

Gabriel finished his cookie. "Jack used to get real sick during SEP. Me, not so much. I read to him: Borges, Tolkien, Achebe, Kawabata. I started Pride and Prejudice as a joke, but I couldn't get through the second chapter. Jack bought Pride and Prejudice and Zombies, and that was more fun. We did The Color of Water, H is for Hawk, Cry the Beloved Country, Shadow of the Wind..."

You weren't sure what to say; you'd heard of a few of those. But Gabriel rattled them off like they were common knowledge. Maybe they were. You hadn't exactly been attending book clubs. There were a lot of things you'd missed out on, this was only one of many.

"Hey." Jack stepped into the room and shut the door. "Feeling better?"

"Yeah." You managed a wry grin. "I'm fine."

"I know." He pulled off his shirt and sat down in front of you. "I appreciate you not deck ing my sister or breaking a window."

"I am a normal healthy person who wouldn't do things like that to a civilian," you said, not the least bit defensive. No, not you.

Jack just kissed you, his hands sliding down your waist. He rolled backward, pulling you on top of him. "Hi."

"Is that how you greet everyone?"

Jack just ran his knuckles across your cheek. "You're so pretty."

"Jack-"

"Want to make you smile, the happy one, not the mean one." He kissed your hands. "What can I do?" He looked up at you, eyes wide and hopeful. Your heart hit your ribcage too hard and you wondered if everyone else could hear it.

"How do you do this to me?" The question was meant to be rhetorical, but Jack dragged you down to his level, sprinkling light kisses across your neck. "Jack-"

"I know you're sore. I'll stop now." He dropped his arms to his sides. "Just tell me what I can do."

Your pulse was too quick and you were already breathing too hard.

He lay beneath you, the yearning on his face making your throat tight.

"I don't know what to do when you look at me like that." You turned your head.

"Whatever you want," Jack said softly.

You shivered and he rubbed your lower back. "I can't do hard tonight, Jack."

"Whatever you want," he repeated. "I mean it."

You rocked your hips against him and he groaned, arms tightening around you. He felt good against you and even if you knew you should stop, he'd just given you the invitation you needed. "I want to be on top."

He nodded, placing his hands flat on the floor. "You lead."

"Off." You tugged at his shirt and he obeyed, grinning.

You stripped off your clothes and unzipped him, unsurprised to find him ready for you.
You licked him and he squeezed his eyes shut, inhaling sharply. Once he was slick, you lowered yourself onto him, gasping as you sank down taking him to the base. It was always a slight shock at how smoothly you could fit him.

Jack's eyes were on your face. "Do you want me to move?"

"Slowly," you said, resting your knees on either side of his thighs.

Jack raised his hips and you put your palms on his either side of his neck, giving yourself extra leverage.

"I love watching you take me," Jack whispered. "I can't get enough of that look on your face. Like you want more, but you're not sure if you can do it. I want to make you feel good. I want to see you come while riding me."

You rolled your hips, sticking to languid motions. Jack moved with you, slow shallow thrusts. The gentleness was comforting.

He stroked your face, fingers twining in your hair. "That's it, baby. You want me to keep going like this? Or you want me to go faster?"

You whined, clasping his hand against your cheek. "A little faster."

He obeyed, a dreamy smile spreading across his face. "Want me to rub your clit too?"

You nodded, biting back a moan.

He started slow, rubbing circles around your nub. "Do you want me to come inside you? I can finish with you, if you like. But I don't have to."

"Please."

"Look at me, please."

You couldn't deny him that much. You locked eyes, and his smile widened. "Going to come soon, baby?"

You nodded, hips shaking as his fingers sped up. His cock slid into you at an achingly gentle pace. You flattened one hand over your mouth, not looking away from Jack's face. He grinned up at you, breathing hard. He drove his hips into you and you shuddered as he filled you all the way. Your control snapped and you could feel yourself clenching around him, trying to take him deeper. The pleasure came in waves, and you forced yourself to keep your eyes on him.

It was your name on his lips when he came, his naked gaze on your face. You dropped against his chest, whimpering as you rode out the aftershocks. He held you against him, kissing your face while you caught your breath.

Jack's tender smile made your chest clench. "I'll do whatever you want, just keep looking at me like that."

"You're ridiculous," you murmured. Jack pulled out, and his cum streamed down your thighs.

Still on the bed, Gabriel groaned.

"Don't be self-conscious." Jack kissed your throat. He looked up. "Do you want to watch me take care of Gabe? Or do you want to help?"

You followed his gaze. Gabriel sat on the bed, legs spread, eyes dark as he watched the two of you. You sat back on your heels, looking for something to clean yourself up with.

"Leave it," Gabriel said hoarsely.

Jack unzipped Gabriel who was already hard. He pushed the foreskin back, tonguing the head. Gabriel had his legs wide enough apart that you could kneel next to Jack. So you joined him, kissing Gabriel's shaft. Your breath quickened as Gabriel stroked your head. You nibbled on Gabriel's inner thigh as Jack began to deepthroat him. Gabriel thrust slowly while Jack took him to the base, eyes closed as he moaned around the cock in his mouth.

"Don't be greedy, Jack."

"I can't fit you like that," you said.

"Don't need to tonight. Just like watching you both share." Gabriel sighed as you and Jack licked his cock, Jack cupping Gabriel's balls while you slurped on the head.

"He just likes debauching us both in my childhood bedroom," Jack said and nipped Gabriel's thigh.

"You like it just as much," Gabriel rumbled. "Go on then. Show me some of that teamwork you're always going on about, Jack."

"Shut up, Gabe."

You laughed and kissed Gabriel's thigh. "You're awful."

"Seeing you two playing so nice together is such a rare treat. I might as well enjoy it."

Jack placed your hand on Gabriel's shaft. He kissed you before running his tongue around the head. The two of you worked in tandem, sucking and stroking till Gabriel's fingers tightened in your hair. He came down Jack's throat and Jack kissed you hungrily, Gabriel's seed on his tongue.

"That was adorable," Gabriel said, somewhere between sardonic and satisfied.

Jack helped you clean up, with one Gabriel's shirts, you were pretty sure. You put pajamas on because the lack of a lock was really going to get you in trouble. Gabriel tucked himself back in his pants. Jack sprawled in the center of the floor, grinning at you both. Gabriel took one side, and you lay on the other, legs tangled with Jack's.

Something had changed over the course of this trip, and while you weren't too sure what it meant, it didn't bother you as much as you would have expected.

In the early noon hours, you visited the goats. Then the barn cats. There were a variety of people dropping by today, mostly to get a glimpse of Jack. You made yourself scarce, because you didn't need the attention. But you were getting hungry. Maybe it was safe to sneak in?
You were halfway up the drive when you saw Gabriel on the porch, hands casually arranged in the "woods" sign. You turned around and casually headed toward the barn before breaking off toward the woods. Chang was waiting for you there.

"Sitrep?" You asked, touching your sidearm.

"Nothing serious. Local reporter friend of Jane's weaseled an invite. Reyes wanted you out of sight. He'll be along shortly."

You sighed in relief. "That's fine."

She handed you a travel mug of coffee. "That's from him."

"Thanks." You leaned against a tree. The snow was only up to your ankles, but it still aggravated you. "Am I keeping you from something?"

"No." Chang watched you, and you weren't sure how to interpret her expression. You just held the coffee a second, savoring the warmth. "Reyes asked me to stay with you till he came."

Huh. You sipped your coffee. Gabriel had made it just the way you liked it. That man was a treasure, when he wasn't being a dick. "Do you know how I met Captain Patel?"

Chang reminded you of a hawk. She had that slow, serious blink and slightly feral gaze that made you feel like prey. "No."

You told her about the grenades and your old rifle. Chang's stance relaxed just a little over the course of the story. "She was a good mentor. I was a terrible student." You studied your cup. "How well did you know her?"

"Aishani was the best teacher in SEP. She was harsh, but fair. Jack and I served under her in Lisbon. After we were assigned our own units, she told us to call her by her first name. There was another Patel in the platoon and he was a moron. She said she didn't want people to think they were related. Aishani wasn't openly affectionate, but we understood what she meant." Chang closed her eyes. "Shouldn't you be asking Reyes or Jack these questions?"

"I'm trying to get a broader view." Gabriel didn't like talking about her. He would, if you asked, but there was such a shadow on his face that you stopped asking awhile ago. You hadn't asked Jack yet. You didn't need to be dropping more of your baggage in his lap.

Chang uncrossed her arms. "I heard you regularly spar with Jack."

"Ha, I wouldn't call it sparring. He kicks me around the mat and thinks it's funny. He has to go at significantly reduced speed and strength. I'm nowhere near his level. My skills skew subtle: B&E, surveillance, assassination." You looked at your cup. "You're pretty amazing to watch. I've seen Jack, Gabriel, and Captain Patel in action. You're faster than all of them. Graceful too."

She wrinkled her nose at you. "What are you getting at?"

"Compliments where compliments are due," you said. "I may avoid straight up fights, but I appreciate skill where I see it."

"Fitzpatrick and Almasi shared their displeasure regarding your skills." She smiled that cool, not quite friendly smile. "I can't fault them too much."
You shrugged modestly. "You were busy with Gabriel. He's good at driving people to distraction."

"That's an understatement." Chang laughed harshly. "He and Jack have always pushed too far. I have never had any interest in getting mixed up in their dominance battles. They fight, fuck, and eventually work it out. I hold grudges close to my heart and have no desire to be touched."

You kept silent, because that's not quite how Gabriel told it, and drank the rest of your coffee. "Gabriel said you got along with Jack."

"Jack and I are friends. Reyes and I, not so much." The way she said "friends" made you think she didn't have very many of those left. Jack obviously trusted her with his family and the knowledge of his relationship with Gabriel. That was definitely friendship.

"Is this the part where you give me friendly warnings? Because I met Jane yesterday, and she was terrifying."

"Jack's an adult. He can take care of himself. You're the one who stands to lose the most." Chang said it as cold statement of fact. On someone else it would be catty or backhanded; but you were coming to understand that she was just uncommonly blunt. Maybe that's why she'd never risen above sergeant.

"Yeah, I know. I can't even say this is the dumbest thing I've done. I mean, the omnic grenade attack was pretty stupid. I really shouldn't be allowed on an open battlefield."

Chang nodded. "You're the kind of idiot they like. You should be careful though. Jack's soft. He'll be upset if you stupid yourself to death. Reyes too, probably."

"Wow." You laughed because there was someone out there more emotionally stunted than you. "I uh, thanks."

"Michael came to see me today. He wants to train with my squad. He even asked nicely. Your doing?"

You shrugged. "Sorry."

"Oh no, I've been waiting for this. Because he's been a little shit for the past two years. I'm going to enjoy this." Chang's smile was beatific; it was the happiest you'd seen her. "Don't worry. I won't cause permanent damage. He'll be better for it. I trust you remember Hell Week."

"Uh..." You did, though it was the basic training one, not the Navy Seal one.

"The Road to Heaven? You know, where you crawl over rocks and coral through ocean water in an obstacle course of pure endurance and suffering?"

"No."

"Pig Pond? It's how you get the best ghillie suits."

"I uh...no." You wondered if you should warn Michael.

"Aishani didn't make you do any of that?" Chang looked annoyed.

"We were in the Yukon. There were the sleeveless snowball fights and polar bear club-style ice-swimming. Fuck, I hated that shit."
Chang nodded. "Yes. I'm going to do it all. And when I'm done, he will be able to take care of himself. Perhaps Maggie will want to join in."

You weren't sure if anyone would willingly do that shit, let alone Maggie.

Chang smiled to herself and you knew her excitement was real. Yeah, no one who went through SEP came out normal.

Goodbyes were more emotional than you expected. Maggie kept wiping her eyes, repeatedly hugging you and Jack, but mostly Gabriel. Jack's mother gave each of you a packed lunch and a long hug. Jack's father grimly shook everyone's hand, Gabriel included. Michael did the same.

"Chang's uh...got an intense workout planned for you," you said.

"Yeah, Jack warned me." Michael sighed. "But it'll give me an idea of what to expect if I join up."

"Sure," you said, hoping he wouldn't.

"Jack gave me your contact info. I'll uh, send the work when I'm done."

"Yeah, want me to pay you now?"

"No, no. It's fine." Michael handed you a large envelope. "I uh...late Christmas present."

"Thank you," you said, opening it. The sketch had been inked, but not colored. It was you, Jack, and Gabriel on the couch. You asleep against Jack's shoulder, Gabriel with his arm around both of you. Jack was smiling and Gabriel looked vaguely amused. It had to be from last night during the movie. "Wow. I...thank you."

"It's rough. I'm going to do a color version, if you like."

"Definitely."

"What do you have there?" Gabriel glanced over your shoulder. "Oh, that is good." He studied the page. "If you do a color page, I'll buy one. Jack would too."

Michael looked at his shoes. "Yeah, OK. Thanks."

"You can't go featuring this in your portfolio though," Gabriel said.

"I know." Michael gave him a look. "It's a present, OK?"

"Thank you, Michael," you said. You wouldn't be able to display it anywhere, but just knowing it existed made your stomach do flip-flops.
Jack was quiet the entire ride home. Gabriel had his new copy of The Count of Monte Cristo out. He saw you studying the cover.

"Have you read it?"

"Saw the movie. It was OK."

"None of the movies do it justice. It's too long and complex for one film. There was a French mini-series that stayed true to the book. Gérard would probably be able to dig it up. The book is much better than any films." Gabriel looked slightly offended by your reference to the movie. "It's very clearly about revenge. Would you like me to read it to you?"

Sometimes shogi boards, weren't just shogi boards. You felt the undercurrent of something in Gabriel's offer. This wasn't just about expanding your literary horizons. He knew you were capable of reading it on your own; granted with your workload, that was highly unlikely.

"Sure," you said, because Gabriel had a nice voice. "Thank you."

"It's long," Gabriel said. "He got paid by the word. But it's worth it."

"I trust your judgment." You back in your seat, head resting on Jack's shoulder. "If it's boring, I'll just fall asleep."

"You better not," Gabriel said, thumbing through the book.

"It's your voice," you said. "Makes me sleepy."

Gabriel snorted. "Chapter One, Marseilles, the Arrival-" he began.

Jack looked at you both and smiled.

Chapter End Notes

I wrote fluffy sex. What the fuck is that? I can't even.... Oh well. Christmas fluff-fest has mostly come to a conclusion. Thank God, because I'm fluffed out. (Haha, joke's on me, writing several chapters ahead and stuck on another fluff part right now. I just want to write violent adventures, damnit, is that too much to ask?!) Back to our regularly scheduled story. Yeesh.

Been sick and it's pissing me off. Wrote slightly less than 2k over the last two days and that also pisses me off too because I need to write more if I'm ever going to finish this monster.

Appreciate the comment-love. It cheers me up and reminds me that I have to edit my work because other people are actually reading it. And trust me, the editing is very important. :P
"So, how'd it go?" Jesse sat in your room eating the casserole Mrs. Morrison packed for you.

"It was weird," you said. "Good, but weird." You put the games on your desk, unsure where you were going to store them. And you took your earrings out, because you couldn't wear them on missions.

"Morrison?" Jesse asked, gesturing at the earrings. You put them in an empty ammo box and tucked them in your drawer. You left on the obsidian disk. You'd take it off before any action, but no one else could see it under your shirt.

"Yeah. Gabriel got me the board games and a sweater."

"They liked your gifts?"

"I think so." You put the fox in the drawer and tucked the envelope with the drawing in your desk. The cast iron skillet was already in the kitchen. "His whole family knows now."

"Drama?"

"Mostly from me hiding, I guess. His married sister was dead set on interrogating me. Sorted out his younger brother. We're good now. Everyone else was nice."

Jesse nodded. "We took Genji with us. Ate too much chocolate. Fareeha liked all the lights." He paused. "I ran a short mission with your boy."

"Oh? How'd it go?"

"He's fucking obnoxious."

"Yeah, I know." You laughed dryly. "But how'd he do?"

"Wasn't a combat mission. Good B&E skills, adequate E&E, obviously superb tech ability. You and me, Lucky, we talk shit; Ziv spews it like a goddamn geyser."

"Yeah, there's a limit to how much smart ass we can contain in Blackwatch."

"Oh, here's your gift." Jesse casually pulled out a bottle of Johnny Walker Gold with a ribbon on it. "Figured you should probably learn to drink better stuff."

"Thanks, asshole." You handed Jesse his present. "It's kind of from both me and Genji."

"Shouldn't Genji be here for it then?"

"He made the recommendation. Said he'd show you how to use it, if you wanted."

"Now I'm worried." Jesse opened the box and studied the tea set. The clay pot and straight edged cylindrical cups were glazed a swirling white and gray. It came with a bamboo whisk, mixing bowl, and scoop for a Japanese tea ceremony. You'd included some good matcha as well.
"Thought you and Captain Amari might like it."

Jesse gave you a grin. "You're putting both our names on this gift?"

"Oh no, I'm giving her the wagashi."

"Thanks, Lucky." He studied it. "Can't believe you got me a tea party set. Can I have a pony next? Maybe a tiara?"

"Oh fuck you."

"Chanukah is over." Ziv stared at the package.

"Well, sorry."

"This isn't a Christmas gift, is it?" He sounded offended.

"No. Christmas is over."

"You insensitive bitch. Not only did you get me a Christmas gift, you gave it to me late. And I'm Jewish!"

"It's a New Year's gift, you ass."

"Who gives gifts for New Years?"

"I do, you ungrateful little shit."

Ziv huffed and opened the box. "...Your taste in clothes sucks."

"Oh shut up. Those are omnium plates, meant to be worn under your clothes, and will hopefully deflect bullets."

He lifted the lumpy black vest up; it was lightweight. "For missions?" His voice went high. "They provide armor, you know."

"Yeah, I know. But you managed to piss off Gabriel, Jesse, Torby, and who knows who else, while I was out. I figured you needed the extra protection."

"Fuck you, Lucky."

"Maybe you need a helmet too..."

Three hanetsuki sets for Genji: the Japanese badminton game was a New Years tradition, and you anticipated Jesse, Fareeha, and Ziv wanting to play. Five pounds of peanut brittle for Winston. Wagashi for Captain Amari. Chocolate fudge for Torby and Angela. An emergency flare kit for Lacroix. It was a joke and probably inappropriate, but you gave it to him anyway.

And now, you were having a sit-down meeting with him and Captain Amari.

He was mobile, finally, dressed in a dapper black suit with long cuffs and a Nehru collar. Captain Amari was in uniform and sat behind her desk. He sat on the side of her desk, and she frowned at him.

"Chanceux," Lacroix greeted blithely.

"Is my real name classified?"

"Yes," Captain Amari said. "But no more so than any other Blackwatch operatives."

"Just checking," you said, giving Lacroix a look.

"You are wondering why we have called you here. Rest assured, it is not about your personal life or your questionable taste in gift-giving." Even if Lacroix sounded amused, that was no reason to let your guard down.

"Bái Shé?"

"In a way." Captain Amari looked like she was struggling with the urge to push Lacroix off her desk. "Gérard, this is your show."

"Chanceux, you've graduated beyond short-term ops, and frankly, they're beneath you. You're wasted on admin work. And you don't have the discipline to remain a permanent member of a frontal assault team. I would like to offer you more training and have you come work for me."

You blinked. "...I'm sorry, I heard a bunch of backhanded compliments, at least one honest insult, and then something about you wanting me to work for you? What?" You glanced at Captain Amari. "Did I hear that right?"

"Yes, Chanceux. Your powers of observation have not failed you yet."

You couldn't keep the incredulity off your face. "Is this some kind of twisted payback for saving your life? Because I'm sorry. I won't do it again."

Captain Amari cleared her throat.

Lacroix just laughed. "No, the Shanghai incident has led me to believe I should assemble a larger team, preferably of people cleared for Shit Spiders. I am making the same offer to Agent Mihret."

"Ziv's combat skills are mediocre."

"That's what training is for. Though in this line of work, if you have to fight, you've already botched the situation. Anyway, you weren't nearly as accomplished when you arrived a little over year ago."

Yeah, Lacroix hadn't given you the time of day till after the Alps mission. "You didn't seem to interested in training me back then." You realized that was petty as fuck, but it was Lacroix.

"Back then there were four possible outcomes, and this was the least likely," he said pleasantly. "The first and most probable, was that you wouldn't be able to handle the pressure and wash out. I was wrong about that."

"Good to know," you said, wondering if Lacroix actually heard what he was saying.

"The second option was that you would break down and self-destruct. You were traumatized, delusional, and erratic. It was a legitimate concern." His tone didn't change at all, still pleasant and conversational.

You rubbed your forehead. "Thanks. Your concern is...touching."

"There was always the chance you'd do an adequate job and adapt. You'd be another cog in the Blackwatch machine, and that would be that. I never doubted that possibility. Gabriel is good at training up his agents."

You sat back in your chair and waited for Lacroix to deliver an actual reason to hire you.

"You surpassed my expectations, Chanceux. Not only did you adapt, you thrived. You have good instincts, a strong stomach, and the fortitude to get the job done. On top of that, you are much smarter than you first appear."

You snorted.

"And while you are achieving what Blackwatch requires of you, I think you could be doing more."

"I hate torture," you told him. "I never want to do it again."

"Yes, well, the job requires more than asking painful questions." He smiled thinly at you, like he knew you'd do it again if you had to. "Do you know how to plan a long-term op? How are you at running HUMINT? Can you maintain cover for months?"

You worked for Gabriel. Because you trusted him. You didn't trust Lacroix for shit. "I'm happy where I am."

"And if your relationships falter, what then?"

"There's a reason Captain Amari is my CO," you said, unsurprised that he would use that against you.

Lacroix stared down at you, arms crossed. Clearly, he didn't expect this level of resistance. Clearly, he didn't get you. "You don't trust me."

"No," you agreed. "I know we're on the same side. I know you're very good at your work. I know you're a lot smarter than most of us. But I don't know if I can follow you. I don't know if you have my back. So I don't know if I can work with you."

He tilted his head back. "But you know that about Gabriel?"

"Obviously."

"I won't insult you by insinuating that you're afraid to leave your position because your lover favors you."

"Thanks," you said. "That's very decent of you."
"I meant what I said, Chanceux. You have real potential. I hate to see that wasted. Take a few days to think about it. We can work something out."

He slid off Captain Amari's desk and took a jaunty step out the door. "Talk to Gabriel, see what he thinks."

You stared at the door for a moment, then looked at Captain Amari who was resting her face in her hand.

"Did that just fucking happen?"

You asked Gabriel's opinion on the matter, even if you could guess it.

"That's a terrible idea," Gabriel said, not looking up from his desk. "I like Gérard as a person. He works well with most people, despite his sociopathic tendencies. But he's a ruthless operative: clever, dangerous, and hyper-focused. I don't think it's wise for you to go work for him."

"Why?" You had an idea what Lacroix was angling at, but you asked Gabriel anyway.

"You will be doing enhanced interrogations," Gabriel said. "I've seen how Gérard trains his protégées. He is a harsh teacher, more concerned about shaping their psyches than any kind of moral compass. Gérard may have served in the military, but he was DGSE for years. You may be used to black ops, but you haven't worked with spooks like him. He's an extremely Machiavellian le Carré novel made flesh."

"You don't sound surprised though." Because Lacroix's request had shocked you.

Gabriel paused. "I might not have been entirely honest with you after you interrogated Chumak."

You crossed your arms. "What?"

"I didn't see you leave his room. Gérard called me once you started and it was too late to stop you. I wouldn't have let you get that far," Gabriel glared at the wall. "I don't know if he called me because he wanted to show me that you were capable of the work, or if he knew you'd need someone to...support you afterward. I was too angry to ask and we had an audience. In all likelihood, both reasons factored into his decision."

Anger flared in your chest. "I asked you directly how you knew. Why'd you lie?"

"Because the more I thought about it, the angrier I got. I didn't get Gérard's angle at the time. Why didn't you ask me to do it? I know the answer now, but that doesn't make me feel any better."

"It wasn't about you," you snapped.

"I know. After everything was said and done, you were hurting and I didn't want to fight about it. You should have just asked me to do it."

"Not about you, Gabriel." You scowled at him. "And it doesn't excuse lying to me."
"You knew I didn't want you to do it and you went behind my back." Gabriel glared at you.

"You lied to my face." You stood up.

"Where are you going?"

"To get some air."

He stood. "Is that all you're doing?"

"Guess you're going to have to trust that I'm telling you the truth," you said, fully capable of Blackwatch petty.

Gabriel stared darkly at you. You could practically read his mind. He was considering ordering you to stay. Then he was thinking about your inevitable bad reaction to that. Yeah, he had to let you walk away.

You casually strolled out the door. You didn't even slam it. Because you were a goddamn professional.

Even angry, you could be smart. You fully understood Lacroix's parting shot. It was meant to get you riled up at Gabriel, because the two of you knew Gabriel would coddle you if given the chance. He might not think he was doing it, but he would. Hell, if Gabriel tried to forbid you to do it, you'd do it to spite him, because you were Blackwatch petty. OK, maybe you weren't that bad, but you had a reputation, and Lacroix had to be aware of it. Just like he probably suspected that Gabriel hadn't been honest about the Chumak interrogation either. These fucking alpha males and their high-handed methods.

But personal feelings aside, you most definitely understood that Lacroix was blatantly toying with you and you were not going to play into his hands.

"I wouldn't," Jesse said and threw a punch.

You slid under it and hit him in the stomach. He grunted, but didn't go down. "I know you wouldn't, but you're better in a straight up fight than I'll ever be."

He went on to demonstrate that by hitting you back and you dropped onto your ass, wheezing.

"You'd be good at it," Jesse said. "I agree. But I don't know if it would be good for you. I mean just look at this mess. He's one mindfuck after another. One sentence and he has you and the boss fighting. You really want to work for him?"

"I'm well aware of how conniving Lacroix is. Doesn't mean I can't learn anything from him. Doesn't mean I have to do this on his terms."

Jesse shrugged. "It's up to you, Lucky. You're better than a year ago."

"I know. I sparred with Gabriel over the break. We used training knives. I won. I cheated, but I won."
Jesse chuckled. "I see where you're coming from." He paused. "I've been thinking about going over to Overwatch when my tenure here is up. I'm good at ops, I like being in the shadows, but I'm not crazy about some of the morally gray shit we get up to. Some of it's dandy. But some of it...I'm not that kind of man now."

"Does Gabriel make you take those kind of missions?"

"Never really talked with him about it."

"Maybe you should," you said. "I mean, if you actually want to go over to the Blue Side, fair enough. Ugh, you'd have to find a blue cowboy hat. But I can see you in their dorky little uniform shouting, "yes, sir; no, sir; I'm team player, sir!" And saluting all the goddamn time."

"Shut up." Jesse laughed.

"In all seriousness, you could do it," you said, because you didn't want to crush his dreams. "But I don't think you'd like it. Blackwatch gives us a lot more leeway. You and me, we're not fans of military discipline. The chain of command can go breathe down someone else's starched collar. I guess Genji could handle it, but Genji can do anything."

Jesse snorted.

"If Gabriel's not full of shit, he'll take it into consideration," you said.

"Haha, let's see how your little spat works itself out first, sugarpie."

"You need to practice more." Captain Amari studied your finished targets. "Even if you use a mid-range weapon in combat, you need to keep up your sniping skills. Especially if you decide to take Gérard up on his offer."

"About that..." You sat back on your haunches, examining the sights on the rifle. Captain Amari regularly made shots from two miles away. You could do a decent assassination from half a mile, but any farther was pushing it. "What do you think?"

Captain Amari was silent long enough to make you uncomfortable.

"I think Gérard could teach you a lot. But he also has a very...strong personality. You're already surrounded by many of those. You have to be able to tell them "no." And it is hard, in a military setting, to set those boundaries."

"Are you not just talking about Lacroix any more? Because I'm picking up some subtext, but I'm too dumb to translate it."

"Playing stupid may suit you on ops, but it does you no favors with your commanding officers, or your lovers."

"Ouch." Busted. You lined up the rifle, focusing on the target because it was easier than looking at Captain Amari. You turned on the high decibel blocker on your ear protection. Then you steadied yourself, fired, and picked up a the viewing scope. You hit the target, but not the bullseye. "Gabriel didn't react well." You shrugged and turned off the blocker; it made conversations sound like they were underwater. "His opinion matters to me, but it's not the deciding one."

Captain Amari inclined her head to the side. "Is that so?"

"He has my loyalty, not my obedience," you said, hoping you didn't sound defensive.

"Mmm." Captain Amari held her hand out and you handed her the scope. "Better. Not quite there yet." She adjusted her hat. "Windy, isn't it?"

"Yeah, still learning to compensate for that."

"You'll get it," she said. "What are your qualms about working with Gérard?"

"You heard me back in your office. I don't trust Lacroix. He's...slippery. And yeah, I am a little worried he'll push me too far. Maybe in the moment, I won't be in the right mind to say "no." And I'll do something I'll regret." Chumak was your own fault, but you weren't sure that Lacroix wouldn't use that against you.

"I don't think that statement just applies to Gérard," Captain Amari smiled. "You aren't worried about Gabriel or Jack?"

You loaded the gun again. "Jack, yes. Gabriel, no; he skews in the opposite direction. I know that's not the case with everyone else, but I'm coming to understand we have a weird dynamic."

"How do you handle, Jack? He is the Strike Commander after all."

"Lots of compartmentalization," you said dryly. "The difference is Jack wants me to trust him. I have no idea what Lacroix's endgame is."

"Gérard is harsh and bold, but he is not a monster."

"Hearing you say that is the best endorsement he could get," you said truthfully.

"Your...history with him does cloud your perception."

You shrugged. "Guilty." You knelt, bracing the rifle, turned on your blocker, and fired again. Captain Amari handed you the scope and you grunted. Another hit, but not a bullseye. Captain Amari unfolded a few metal rods and set the on the ground to form a tripod.

"Try this. You need a stronger foundation. Take a moment. Breathe. You already know what to do."

You ejected the spent cartridge, reloaded, and balanced the rifle.

"Keep track of the space between breaths. You adjusted properly for wind last time, but now you're flinching from the recoil."

"It's always something," you agreed.

"If you can handle Jack, you can handle Gérard. That is my personal opinion. If you wish to pursue this learning track, you have my support and blessing. If you do not, well, I see no point in forcing you. And as always, if you have problems with people placed above you, come see me."
You lined up the shot, the tripod providing a good balance. Breathing steady, fingers warm, you aimed and fired.

"Nicely done," she said, handing you the scope.

It was a bullseye, of course. And you got the subtext loud and clear.

"Why'd you ask me? There are plenty of people with talent. Are you trying to recruit Genji or Jesse too?"

"No. Agent McCree would be fully capable, but he doesn't have any interest. He'd do well in a frontal assault unit too. But he's best suited for black ops because he has authority issues." Lacroix was studying paperwork at his desk. You hadn't spent much time in his office. He had tasteful prints on the wall and fucking sculptures on pedestals like it was a miniature art gallery. You'd seen paperweights in Jack's office - because they were awards or gifts. But Lacroix actually had a decorative alabaster hawk on his desk.

"Genji has a better temperament for this kind of thing."

"Agent Shimada has proven himself reliable, but he's here for one reason only. After that, who knows?"

"Why Ziv?"

"You're just full of questions." He looked up at you, expression one of almost paternal aggravation. "Can't you see I'm trying to work?"

"You've been staring at the same page the entire time I've been here. You're just playing with me."

"I'm trying to concentrate," he said, tolerantly. "McCree has done a good job with Hanoi, but he doesn't know the city like I do. I'm rechecking your evacuation routes too."

"Great. So why Ziv?"

"Agent Mihret has espionage in his blood. He's more ruthless than you give him credit for."

"Oh, I know Ziv's a right bastard. I'm glad he doesn't have the skill to back up his nastiness. I'm just inquiring about your reasoning."

"Agent Mihret might run his mouth, but he has skills and isn't squeamish. Most importantly, he asks questions and won't take bad orders." Lacroix smiled slyly. "You want to know why I asked you, Chanceux? I'll admit, saving my life did impress me, even if you were more concerned about your hacker. You saw the holes in the op, got your CO onboard, and planned countermeasures. And you did well on your first and maybe only enhanced interrogation. But that's not what convinced me."

"To stick one to Gabriel and Jack?"
"Side benefit," he agreed. "But no."

"All right, I'll bite. Why?"

"Because after Chumak you came and asked me about coping mechanisms. I know full well that you don't trust me, but you still knew that you needed help and you recognized that I could give it. I've watched too many talented agents burn out because they can't ask for help, especially when they need it. You have the skill and you know your limits. If you don't want to engage in torture, fine. I won't make you. If you have deep moral qualms about a mission, I don't want you on it, because you'll hesitate. I want the job done right, and part of that is making sure I put the right person on it."

"That sounds almost too much like what I want to hear." You grinned at him. "You play a lot of mindgames, Lacroix. It really fucks with your credibility. You're like Jack; I can't take you at face value."

"Jack would have been an amazing covert operative if he had just a little less charisma. And maybe if he wasn't so distinctly good-looking," Lacroix said. "A few years ago, you would've been right." He looked you dead in the eye, no longer smiling. "I would've told you what you wanted to hear, pushed you down a slippery slope, and molded you into a better agent, whether you liked it or not. That approach has not always...ended well. I don't throw my assets away, Chanceux. I'm sure Gabriel told you that I worked for the DGSE, but he doesn't realize how much of what they taught me was what not to do. I won't even blame my government. All intelligence agencies are bureaucratic monsters that devour their own. I have no desire to continue that trend."

You sat back in the chair. "Wow, I kind of believe you." You paused. "But I'm still pissed that you managed to stir up shit between Gabriel and me."

"That fight was a long time coming. And it's one you'll have over and over," he said without remorse. "If you don't want it, don't be with him."

You laughed, because he was fucking right. Gabriel would always look after his people, and he would fight them for their own sakes.

"That you didn't come over here and join up right away to spite him, speaks better of you than I expected."

"I have cultivated a little bit of a reputation as Blackwatch petty," you said. "It isn't entirely deserved."

Lacroix laughed politely. "Of course. I didn't expect you to be that easy to influence, if that's what you were wondering. Sometimes I sow a little chaos and see what rises to the top. You understand that."

You gave him a long look. "All right, Lacroix. I'm going to talk to Captain Amari and Gabriel. I won't work solely under your supervision, because I have trust issues. But I respect your skills and want to learn from you."

He made a courtly half-bow while sitting at his desk. "I could not ask for more."
Gabriel was waiting for you outside Lacroix's office.

"Did he call you this time?" You asked, unable to help yourself.

Gabriel just gave you a hard look, brows heavy. "No. Walk with me."

You fell in step beside him.

"You're right. I shouldn't have lied." He stared straight ahead. "Whether or not you went behind my back doesn't change that. At the time, I thought it was minor and the right call."

You clasped your hands behind your back and resolved to let him talk. You'd tear his argument apart once you got back to the office.

"In retrospect, that was the wrong decision. I'm sorry."

Well, maybe not. You walked in silence and when you reached the office, Gabriel opened the door for you. You sat down on the couch and he locked the door behind him. He watched you cautiously, like he wanted to ask what you'd been up to, but knew there was a chance you wouldn't answer.

"That was a good apology. I accept," you said. "I know you can't help but be protective. It's who you are. And you're going to do it more to me because I'm not like you and Jack. Doesn't excuse you being an ass, but I get it. Would this have played out differently if we weren't lovers?"

Gabriel shook his head. "No. Lovers or not, you're one of my people. I know you. You can do it, sure. But you can't walk away from it like it's nothing. Jesse can't either. I won't ask it of him or you."

"You should talk to Jesse."

"All right." Gabriel came and sat down beside you. "So?"

"I want to train with Lacroix. Sure he's devious and calculating, but my skill set does match his more than yours."

Gabriel looked you in the eye. "That's true."

"I also want to stay on Shit Spiders. I like working with you."

Gabriel relaxed and pressed a kiss to the side of your head. "Of course," he said.

"I don't entirely trust Lacroix. Mostly his methodology and the fact he's a real bastard. But I can't have you intervening just because you don't like something. I'm going to run it through Captain Amari."

"Fair," Gabriel said. "Ana won't let him make you do anything heinous."

"I don't know if your worries are overblown or just right," you said. "I'm glad you're looking out for me, but there have to be boundaries. Lacroix made the same offer to Ziv. Can you imagine? I now feel obligated to join just because those two together will commit genocide, or torture puppies, or divide by zero. Someone has to keep them in check."

"You're serious." Gabriel shook his head. "Fucking Gérard. Always stirring up shit."
"Yeah, I noticed." You patted his knee. "I'm going to have to be extra alert around him. I'm getting antsy just thinking about it."

"I don't want to clip your wings," Gabriel said. "But I don't want you flying too close to the sun either."

"If I were Jack, I'd say something cheesy about waiting for you to catch me when I fall." You studied your hands. "But I'm not Jack. I know I'm going to fuck up and I have to own it. Some things I'll have to learn the hard way. If I do this you're probably going to have to fish me out of the deep end multiples times. Is that something you'll be OK doing?"

"You shouldn't have to ask," he growled.

"Sorry." You didn't realize how offended he would be.

"At least you know you're going to fuck up. Jack always seems surprised when it happens." Gabriel leaned back against the couch. "You seen him recently?"

"Not since we got back. You?" You'd been too concerned about chasing down Bái Shé leads. She'd gone quiet since you'd taken care of Chumak. Ziv hadn't found anything either, which had you worried.

"In passing. I got some paperwork for him. You want to run it over?"

"I can." You leaned against Gabriel, soaking in his body heat. "Don't want to take away from your time with him."

"Jack knows where to find me. You're a little harder to track down."

"My desk is right here," you said.

"He can't just go asking after you. It's different." Gabriel smirked. "You're my assistant after all."

"All right, I'll go see how Jack's doing."

"Come by my room tonight. I'll read you to some more."

It almost sounded like a cheesy pickup line, except you enjoyed curling up on the bed beside Gabriel while he recounted the exploits of Edmond Dantès. The story resonated. You certainly could swear by the motivational power of revenge.

"...waiting to see if you recover from that disappointing performance. You need to keep your people in line. I expect more from you, Morrison." You stopped outside Jack's office, an unfamiliar voice raised. Jack's office was soundproofed, but his guest had left the door slightly ajar.

"I'm sorry you feel that way, sir." Jack was in full Strike Commander mode. You could picture him sitting at his desk, eyes steely. His palms would be flat on the desk. Maybe he'd be standing, staring the man down, teeth clenched.
"Don't be sorry, do better. And write Ainsley back, for God's sake. She's still traumatized from Paris!"

Ah. You knew whom it was now. You heard footsteps and meandered down the hall, tablet in front of your face. You kept your back to Jack's office, even as you heard the door open.

He was average in size, and you knew what to expect from his pictures: graying blonde hair heavy with product, large rounded nose, expensive suit. Everything about him screamed "politician." He stalked by you, and you studied the back of his neck, your fingers brushing against the handle of your tanto.

Petras had started as an ambassador to UN, climbing the political ranks from liaison to eventual Director of Overwatch. He was rarely seen in Zurich, preferring New York. That spoke volumes. He might be the Director, but he was the UN's political bitch. He didn't know how things were run. He just liked taking credit for Overwatch's successes.

You turned around and headed to Jack's office, papers in hand. The door was partially open, and you knocked.

"Enter."

You peeked your head in, but he didn't look up.

"I said "enter," agent, not loiter outside my door like a feral cat."

"Meow," you said and stepped inside.

Jack's head snapped up and he stared at you, eyes narrowed. He clasped his hands under his chin, watching you.

"Shut the door behind you, agent."

"Secure it too, sir?"

He nodded.

You complied. Jack's office was more modern than Gabriel's, all brushed metal and blue glass. You'd been here in passing. Jack's office was even less personal than his bedroom.

"Gabriel had some paperwork for you. Asked me to bring it by." Jack was still watching you, a sharp look on his face.

"Is that the only reason you came by, agent?" Jack stood, removing his gloves. His tone was harsh. And you didn't quite like that look on his face.

"I came to say "hi." Haven't seen you since we got back. You doing OK?" You approached the desk, not quite sure if you should be saluting. You'd dealt with the professionalism of the Strike Commander before, but it was jarring, considering how much of just Jack you'd seen over Christmas.

"Come here."

You raised a brow and set the papers on his desk. You stepped around the desk and Jack gripped your collar, yanking you against him. He looked down at you, eyes hard, teeth clenched. "Be nice," you said, because he looked anything but.
"Was wondering where you were."
"Working," you said. "Some of us have to do more besides wear a blue coat and look sexy."

Jack growled. "Don't tease me right now." He buried his face against your neck inhaling deeply. You stroked his hair, fingers tensing as he nipped your skin.

"Want to talk about it?" You swallowed roughly. His hands roamed up your sides and down your back.

"If I wanted to talk about it, I'd be talking about it," he snapped.

You pushed him back, shoulders squared, and crossed your arms. "Petras is a dick. I get it. But take it down a notch."

"I don't want to talk about it right now," he mirrored your stance.

"OK. Then don't. But I didn't show up just to be your stress-relief fuck, Jack."

He grimaced. "Damnit, Lucky." He pushed his hair back and rubbed his face. "I didn't mean-" Jack dropped his gaze.

"Should I leave?"

"Do you want to leave?"

"No. But I can call Gabriel if you think he'd be more help."

"No." Jack looked over at you. "Stay? Please?"

You sat on his desk and patted the spot next to you. He sat, shoulders hunched. "Sorry I haven't stopped by," you said. "I've been putting a lot of time into the Bái Shé stuff. Going on a run with Genji to Nagano tomorrow. I don't think it's wise to let him in Japan alone." Jack seemed to like it when you just talked about your day. You weren't sure if it was your voice or the rhythm you fell into. Hell, you weren't even sure if he was actually listening half the time. "Lacroix offered me a job. Gabriel didn't react so well. We're good now, but there was some spitting over that." Your gloves were looking worn. You went through left-handed ones quickly, especially on ops. One finger flex and rip! "He didn't like that I went behind his back with Chumak. I didn't like that he lied about how he found out. Petty stuff, I know."

"Are you taking Gérard up on his offer?" Jack's voice was more relaxed.

"Sort of. I don't really trust him enough to want to work for him permanently, but there's a lot he can teach me. Plus he's recruited Ziv. Someone's got to keep an eye on them." You reached over and rubbed the back of Jack's neck. He leaned into you. "Gabriel is worried that Lacroix is going to push me too far." You shrugged. "It's a possibility."

"Gérard is...different than when we first met," Jack said.

"How so?"

"Better, I think."

"Tell me?"

Jack moved his big leather Strike Commander chair in front of you and sat down, your legs dangling between his knees. He took your hands in his, resting them in your lap. "It was a few years ago. We were just outside Algiers. The usual business: defend the city, take out a shit ton of omnics, search for survivors. Got a radio SOS somewhere behind omnic lines." He rubbed your knuckles. "Stop me if you've heard this already."

"Nope." Gabriel didn't share war stories quite so openly.

"There was some debate about it being a trap. We went in anyway; Gabriel, Ana, and me. It wasn't easy. In fact, it got pretty ugly. But we found Gérard shot to shit and delusional. He begged us to take a data chip back to DGSE and put him down, because he wasn't going to make it, and he didn't want to suffer any longer."

Jack sighed, rubbing his forehead. "Obviously, we took turns carrying him back."

It was a good thing he explained that, because you would've assumed that they obliged, but Lacroix survived it anyway, and came back to haunt them. You kept that thought to yourself though.

"We dropped him at a hospital, with his data chip, and went back into the field. Didn't think anything of it. Two months later, he shows up with a goddamn map of omnic movement patterns in North Africa, which was very helpful. It didn't stop there though. He kept sending us chunks of useful data in odd ways. Some of it would crop up in personal messages that didn't involve him: "Pick up milk; eggs; that meeting tomorrow is a trap, approach from the west side instead; flour." Sometimes it'd be delivered in a bottle or baked in a loaf of bread. Once he sent a knitted blanket, the pattern a warning in Morse code. Gabriel called it "flirting." I guess, in a way, it was."

"Uhh..." You laughed awkwardly, because even if he was attractive, you never wanted to think of Lacroix that way.

"Not like that," Jack patted your leg. "Ana got tired of the games. She just flat out told him to join up, because we weren't the kind of people who'd leave him to die and expect him to euthanize himself. A week later, he left DGSE for Overwatch."

"He helped with the black ops missions even before Blackwatch was official. It was...rough at points. Gérard was a harsh teacher, and some of his students cracked. It didn't end well."

"He implied something like that," you said.

"Ana sat him down and I don't know what was said, but there hasn't been a problem since. It's a little surprising though. He hasn't taken on any trainees in a long time."

Then it was a very good thing that Captain Amari was going to keep an eye on the process.

"I think he must be very confident in you to make this offer," Jack said, squeezing your fingers.

"How do you figure?"

"Gérard is my friend, and Gabriel's. He may be charming and suave, but Gérard does not have a lot people he trusts. He wouldn't invite you onboard without considering how it would complicate our relationships."

You smiled wryly at Jack, because you weren't so sure you agreed. You knew Lacroix was not above leveraging you to annoy or even influence Gabriel and Jack. But the latter was a problem you'd deal with when you came to it.

"So I have your blessing, sir?" You grinned and Jack sucked in a breath.

"Damnit, Lucky. Don't tease me."

"Sorry. You not going to be sore if I go take lessons from Lacroix? Maybe help him with missions?" You asked, putting your feet on his thighs.

"No." Jack stroked your legs. "You seem to have no trouble telling me "no." I think you can handle Gérard." That was overly optimistic, but the sentiment warmed your chest.

"What'd Petras want?" You asked, because he was all relaxed and comfortable now. What better time to ask?

"You don't let up." He shook his head. "We're still getting conflicting orders. We're cherry-picking the ones that make sense, but the UN isn't happy about the numbers and Petras is laying the blame on me. Gabriel and I are both working in tandem to make sure we're not fucking up. There's more to it, but that's the gist."

"We still doing things we shouldn't?"

"Yes and no. Blackwatch is doing things Overwatch shouldn't, obviously." He gave you a look. "But none of those extra orders are slipping through. Petras has been pressuring Gabriel to...cut corners. Gabriel hasn't even tried to pretend to be diplomatic. It's just politics, right now." Jack rubbed the bridge of his nose. "Lots and lots of politics."

"Sounds awful." You felt a pang of pity for him, because you didn't have to deal with that stuff. Above your pay grade and your abilities. There was something you could do though. "Why don't you give Gabriel a call? Vent."

Jack raised a brow. "I just vented to you."

"Trust me."

Jack leaned back in his chair. "Really?"

"Yeah." You nodded vigorously. "I don't know if he's busy, but you should call and see."

Shaking his head, Jack picked up the phone.

"Gabe? No, it wasn't." He paused. "Yeah, she-"

You slid off the desk between his knees, your fingers already unbuckling his belt.

"Really?" Jack asked, as you knelt under his desk and unzipped his fly. Someone was going Strike Commando today, and if you made that joke out loud, you would ruin everything. "No, I'm talking to-"

You untucked him. He was only semi-hard and you took him down your throat all the way to the base. You couldn't maintain it, not after he was fully erect, so you enjoyed it while you could.

"Damnit, baby. Fuck-" You sucked his cock, slurping on the head while his fingers dug into his armrests. He always tasted a little salty, but clean, and you liked how his warm silky skin felt in your mouth.

"What's she doing, Jackie?" Gabriel was on speaker now, his voice amused over the line.

"She's sucking me off under my desk."

Gabriel chuckled. "Guess it's good to be the Strike Commander." You rather liked the idea of doing this again while Jack was actually trying to get work done.

"Does she do this to you?" Jack groaned.

"No, we actually do work in my office."

Well, you did. Gabriel and Jack had gotten up to other things many times, and had sent you the pictures to prove it. But you didn't comment since your mouth was full.

"Damnit, she's drooling all over me," Jack panted. "You're getting better at this. Like that-oh fuck." He squirmed in his chair. "She's almost got me all the way, Gabe."

Gabriel gave a deep sigh. "I have a meeting in ten minutes. You're killing me."

"Damnit, I do too. Lucky, you sneaky bitch," Jack growled. "I'm going to get you for this. I'm going to bend you over my desk and fuck you senseless. Just you wait..." His threats made you clench, but there was a time limit. You could take care of yourself later. You kneaded his thighs, head bobbing as you tried to take him all the way now that he was fully erect. You still couldn't quite, but from the raw sounds he was making, the way his knuckles whitened while he gripped his chair, Jack seemed to appreciate the effort.

"Wait till tonight, chica. We'll get you back."

"Can't," you let Jack slip from your throat. "Mission tomorrow." You smiled sweetly at Jack, his cheeks flushed, hair falling in his face. Drops of sweat collected on his forehead and he bared his teeth at you.

"I'll remember this," Gabriel said, the undertone of frustration clear in his voice. You licked Jack's shaft, eliciting a throaty moan. Gabriel groaned over the call.

"Fuck, don't you dare leave me like this," Jack growled.

"Wasn't planning on it," you said, stroking him with your gloved hand. "But that is an interesting idea."

Jack glowered at you. "Lucky-"

You took him back in your mouth, your eyes on his face. Jack began to thrust, fucking your throat. You'd tap if you had to, but Jack was holding back, trying to go at a manageable pace.

"I should come on your face for this," Jack muttered. "Would serve you right."

"You like watching her swallow it down too much," Gabriel purred over the line. "Is she touching herself?"

"No, just-"

"Looks like she wants to get you off quickly, so greedy for your cum, Jack. Look at her pretty lips wrapped around your cock. Bet she's got that needy look on her face, like she wants you to fuck her hard afterward, but she's going to miss out, all because she has a mission tomorrow." Gabriel chuckled, teasing you right back. Damn, he knew you too well. "Come by my room tonight, Jack. You can take the edge off, and Lucky, well, Lucky will just have to watch."

"Damnit Gabe!" Jack's cockhead twitched inside your mouth and his cum sprayed down your throat. There was a lot and you had a little trouble getting it all down, some of it dribbling out the corners of your mouth.

"Fuck that's hot. She's drooling my cum, Gabe."

"Damnit, Jack." The strain in Gabriel's voice was evident and you heard him muttering unhappily as he ended the call.

"Feel better?" You licked your lips, smirking up at Jack.

He nodded lazily.

You tongued him clean. He sighed as you tucked him back and zipped him up. He wasn't quite so happy when you wiped your mouth on his pants.

Chapter End Notes

This thing just doesn't stop. My cousin is all like "when are you going to come back and game with me?" And I'm like "lol never." Pretty sure this is demon possession. I'll fall asleep while writing, wake back up, bang something out, and totally forget what it was in the morning. Then I'll wake up and be like "...that's not as bad as I was expecting." Though to be fair, there are a lot of self-indulgent meanderings in fanfic that I wouldn't allow myself in original stories. But it's fanfic, and we're having fun. I hope.

As always, comments are love, and I appreciate. Seriously, I sit there at work and every time I get an email notification I get excited. (Which is sad because most of them are spam, but I digress.) I fully admit I have a problem. And you know what, I'm buying cake tomorrow, and that'll fix everything. (OK, not everything, not remotely, but it's a big morale booster.)
You studied the dossiers Genji handed you on the transport. Nagano was a mountainous region, and there was little chance he would be recognized by his clan: because he was wearing a mask, assumed "dead," and a cyborg. You were still concerned. Today's target was a distant cousin: Takeo Shimada, sixty-three, a high-level adviser. He was in Nagano for skiing. It was a cold weather mission, but you were willing to give it a shot, if only because Genji needed the backup. He'd personally invited you on this one, you weren't going to abandon him.

"I want this kill," he told you as he helped you tighten your armor straps.

You shrugged. "Sure."

"Bodyguards, other family members, you can have them, but Takeo is mine."

"It's not a competition. You want him, he's yours," you said. "I'm not Jesse."

"I know." Genji sat back. "My apologies."

You shrugged again. You liked Genji, but he'd always kept a certain distance and you respected his wishes. Sometimes you wanted to ask him about how he coped with his inorganic parts, but it was a sore subject and your losses were minor in comparison. You didn't feel right broaching the topic.

You'd stayed in Gabriel's room last night and he'd read to you. You wondered if Dantès had drowning nightmares after he escaped Château d'If. Maybe it was the weight of chains or being tangled in endless swathes of cloth, sinking to the bottom of the ocean. Your nightmares were better than they used to be, though the variety had increased over the past few months.

By the time Jack got in, you were already asleep, and they weren't quite so awful as to wake you up when you had to go across the world to kill someone the next day. Still, when you'd left in the morning, you'd gotten some sharp looks with your farewell kisses.

"What'd he do?" You asked, because Genji wasn't asleep, he was just staring at the floor.

"He was one of my greatest detractors. I hated him in my youth, but that's meaningless now. He also likes young boys too small to fight back." There was no outrage in Genji's voice. He spoke calmly, with that oddly sophisticated accent that Shin did not have.

"Sounds like a winner," you said, checking your carbine. Genji didn't want to bother making this look like an accident. Takeo had enough enemies. You didn't even have to plant a false flag, though you'd brought along some bone tokens occasionally left at hit sites by the On Sing Triad.

"I hear you are to train with Lacroix." Genji tilted his head toward you.

"Yeah. Umm, any tips?"

"Never relax your guard and never appear to be on guard."
"Wow, that's...circular." You checked your gun. "Opinion?"

"It suits you."

"You're taking this inscrutable thing way too far." You checked your chute. "Just tell me if you think I'm making a terrible mistake."

"No." Genji adjusted his gear.

"No, I'm not making a terrible mistake" or "no, you're not going to tell me" if I am? Because that was ambiguous."

"It's time to jump."

"Goddamnit, Genji."

Falling out of planes made your face hurt. Genji seemed to like it, a little more than he liked your cooking, but a little less than he liked desserts. The air was too cold for your tastes and breathing was always odd. But you had to admit there was a certain zen in freefall. Either you would die or you would not, but it was the closest to flying that you would get.

You deployed your chute later than Genji, because he needed extra deceleration. You didn't land in a tree, but you did end up sliding across the snow. Genji, of course, landed gracefully, his chute falling around him like a cloak.

The sun was high in the sky and you had a distance to go.

You rolled the tech cloth up and stuffed it in Genji's bag, because there was no need to advertise how you got in. Winston said the chutes were reusable and strongly recommended bringing them back.

Genji gestured to the west.

You tucked Gabriel's scarf around your chin, adjusted your hood, and slipped chemical hand-warmers into your gloves. Fuck the cold.

"Lacroix is clever," Genji said. "I would be curious to see what he has to teach."

"Want me to ask if you can sit in?"

Genji shrugged. "Maybe later."

"Yeah, you're too cool for the beginner classes. Hell, I might be too. Ziv's the one he has to bring up to speed."

"Your stealth is passable, but you have a long way to go."

"Well, I wasn't raised a ninja assassin," you huffed. The mountain air was chilly, but it didn't feel quite as brutal as the Yukon or the Alps. It was actually kind of pleasant. You immediately looked around, because that was never your reaction to snow.
Unless Gabriel had fucked the aversion out of you on Christmas Eve.

Huh. Unlikely. The temperature here wasn't quite as cold as the other freezing winter wonderland missions. Or maybe you just had a soft spot for Japan.

Genji held up his hand and you stopped. He gestured left and held up three fingers. You sighed. Your sidearm was silenced, but that just muffled the shot, it was still audible. You drew your tanto.

Genji took point, speeding up faster than you could keep up, but you followed.

They were dead before you reached them. Between his shuriken and sword, Genji was good at silent kills. You wondered then if maybe you should've just stayed home and had sex with Gabriel and Jack.

You studied the guards. They wore parkas over their suits and earpieces. You picked one up, because Genji was already moving again. There was only radio silence.

The ski lodge was small, a private compound with fancy wooden gates. Genji scaled them with ease. Your prostheses let you make handholds and you climbed up slower, watching for snipers.

It was too fucking quiet. You weren't making noise either, but there should have birds or civilians moving around. The comm unit hadn't crackled to life once. You dropped onto the ground, sticking to the shadows. Genji was already in the building, his footprints clear in the afternoon light.

You surveyed the area. There was blood on the snow. You crept forward, checking the half dozen bodies. Arrows protruded from their throats, and you sucked in a breath. Genji hadn't killed these guys.

"We have another guest," you hissed into your comm.

"Saw the bodies. Stay in cover. He won't miss."

"Shit." You slipped into the main building, hoping the archer couldn't do too much damage indoors. "...You know him?" You could gauge the high skill level just by the consistency of the shots, but Genji had said it was a man.

"We'll talk about it later. Try not to die."

He totally knew the archer.

There were more dead men on the ground, large holes ripped in their throats, glass shattered on the floor. The archer had retrieved his arrows, so he had passed through here. You really should have stayed home with Gabriel and Jack, had some hot kinky sex, cuddled afterward. You and Genji didn't even need to run this mission. It had completed itself. Instead you were stuck in a bizarre horror scenario trying to avoid a whacked out Robin Hood.

"He's been in the building."

"He's still here," Genji said, sounding very sure.

"Eyes on him?"
"No."

You kept your back to the wall, scanning for movement. The lodge was sparsely furnished - large cushions and neatly woven tatami around a kotatsu. The stairs up were narrow.

"Takeo?"

"Panic room. Opening it up. Between the second and third floors. Stay alert."

You took the stairs, the back of your neck prickling. You rolled forward, even as something silently rushed by your ear. The arrow thwacked against the wall in front of you. You yanked your carbine off your back, because stealth wasn't the issue any more. There was the creak of a bow being drawn back, and you dove across the room, looking for cover. Fucking minimalist Japanese furniture. There was a low table and not nearly enough places to duck behind.

Half a dozen arrows riddled the wall where you had stood. That wasn't fair. That really wasn't fair. How the fuck could he be that fast?

"Found him!" You said into your comm as you returned fire. He was somewhere in the shadows, you could roughly guess the angle, but you hadn't seen him yet.

"Don't kill him!" Genji said sharply. "Disengage!"

"I got nowhere to go, Genji!" You snapped, as a goddamn arrow ricocheted off a statue and nearly took out your eye. You raised your left hand, keeping your fingers as a shield. You couldn't snatch an arrow out of the sky, but maybe you could keep it from going through your skull.

You overturned the table and swung behind it. It was too low to be a good barricade, and since the bastard could shoot around corners, it wasn't going to be much good. You worked the table up like a tower shield and inched back toward the stairs. He had to be in the staircase. Even as you pushed the table forward, several more arrows thunked into the thin wood and you stepped back, reaching around to fire a few shots from your carbine.

"Genji, I could use some help-" You swore as the table splintered, expecting more arrows. Instead, a bow slammed into your stomach, and you staggered backward, gripping your gun.

The man was dressed like a goddamn ninja out of a movie, lower face covered, tattooed left arm bared. You went low, leg sweeping out and he leapt backward, loosing an arrow. It was too close and you swore as it struck your shoulder, embedding itself in your armor. It hurt, though you couldn't tell if it had actually pierced your armor or if the pain stemmed from the impact, and you didn't have time to look. You brought your gun up and fired again. He went high, one of those ridiculously smooth martial artist jumps that Chang and Genji made, and swung his bow, smacking it against the side of your head.

You dropped on your side, and he kicked your carbine out of your hand.

Grunting, you tried to get on your feet, but he pressed a foot against your chest, and rolled you onto your back. You winced, right hand underneath you. You reached for your tanto.

"Who are you speaking to?" He asked, the accent and cadence all too familiar. You knew someone else who spoke like that, though the voice wasn't the same.

"Fuck," you said, recognizing the dragon tattoo.

He drew his bow, aiming at your face. "I asked you a question."
"Shit," you said, cleverly, because this was not your business. "Hey partner, this is about to get ugly." Where the hell was Genji? He'd never been this slow before. You focused behind your attacker, and he turned his head.

You struck, driving your tanto through his leg, aiming for the Achilles tendon. Your left hand was up again, and when he released the arrow on reflex, it smashed into your prostheses sending sparking bits of metal flying. Half-lamed, he lost his balance and you dragged him to the ground, twisting your blade before withdrawing it. He swore and kicked you with his uninjured leg. Snarling, you lunged on top of him and stabbed him again, driving your knife his hand, intent on keeping him from using that bow.

"Disengage!" Genji shouted.

"I will! Just gotta keep him from killing me!" You flexed your fingers, finding only a single blade intact.

Genji swore a blue streak in Japanese, even as he pulled you off his brother. You glared at the bloody man, because you had a fucking two foot arrow shaft sticking out of your shoulder and two of your prostheses were broken.

Genji said something in rapid-fire Japanese, and while you understood the basics, Genji spoke some high-class aristocratic variant that made your head hurt.

His brother snapped something back and you leaned against the wall, eyeing that bloody hand with satisfaction. Try to draw that bow now, Green Arrow. You bitch.

"We're just here for Takeo," Genji said. "If you want him, fine. He's still in the panic room. Let's go, Kamaitachi-chan," he said to you. You didn't recognize the nickname, but it sounded condescending as fuck.

"I know you," the former Shimada heir glared up at Genji.

"No, you really do not," Genji said.

The man narrowed his eyes at you both. "She called you "Genji."

"It's a common enough name."

He knew, or if he didn't know, he damn well suspected. Not your problem though, unless Hanzo Shimada thought he could find and leverage you.

"Look, can someone just go kill Takeo so we can leave and get cleaned up. I'm not getting paid to kill you," you gestured at Hanzo. Which was silly, because you could have gotten paid a lot to kill the former Shimada heir. He had mad bounties on him, but Genji didn't want his brother dead and you didn't want to upset Genji.

"You take care of it," Genji said, not looking away from Hanzo. "I'll handle this."

"Right, whatever." You limped up the stairs and found the partially-concealed entrance to the panic room. Genji had already gotten it open. When you looked inside, Takeo was dead, severed head resting in his lap. Fucking Genji just wanted to get rid of you. You opened his mouth and left an On Sing token, just to fuck with everyone. Shaking your head, you went back to the stairs, sat down, and waited for your stupid inconsiderate partner to sort his shit out.
You now sat in the clearing, waiting for pickup. Genji was fucking fine, but you hurt all over.

"He wasn't trying to kill you," Genji said.

"Fuck him and fuck you," you said and held up your broken hand. "I've got a goddamn arrow sticking out of me, Genji, in the fucking 21st century. What is this? Agincourt?"

"OK, he might have been trying to kill you." Genji studied the arrow placement. "Just at first."

"Did you see all the arrows he shot at me? Because unlike you, I wouldn't have survived that."

Genji shut up and you started poking at the arrow again. It was in your flesh. You wanted to yank it out, but it'd be better to let a medical professional cut it out, less damage that way. You wanted to snap the shaft, but it was metal and your fingers were too busted to do the job. "You want to help with this?"

"Leave it alone. The shaft stabilizes the arrowhead. Too much wiggling and you'll just drive it deeper." Huh. Made sense.

"He know?" You looked at the sky. Hanzo had left first and you'd made no attempt to see where he was going.

"Probably." You were pretty sure Hanzo knew, but Genji liked to play his cards close to his big metal chest. "You are...very angry."

"You suck," you told him. "Were you hoping he'd kill me while you were taking care of Takeo? Because I know how fast you move and you should've been there sooner, Takeo be damned. Especially since you told me you didn't want him dead. I was trying real hard not to kill your stupid brother."

Genji blinked at you in surprise. "I- Thank you." He looked away. "I wasn't ready to face him." He looked away. "You're right. I should have come immediately. He outclasses you in combat."

"Fuck you, I was winning," you muttered.

Genji sat beside you. "What are you going to say?"

"I wouldn't have said anything if I hadn't gotten hurt. But it's pretty fucking hard to hide an arrow sticking out of your shoulder. It's ridiculous, Genji. A goddamn arrow." You studied your boots. "What do you want me to say?"

"I don't know," Genji closed his eyes.

You turned the facts over in your head. "Your brother is killing Shimada people. He's not our concern. We take out serious threats, not vigilantes." You would have shrugged, but there was something in the way. "I'm not issuing a bounty on him, if that's what you're worried about. Personally, I'd mark him as "do not approach." Though I think he's going to try to find you again."
"Maybe," Genji said and that was as good as a "bring casserole to the family reunion" in your book.

"I'll emphasize that we found a "peaceable resolution." If that's what you're worried about." You sighed. "You owe me big, Genji."

"I know. Thank you."

"Now tell me the rest of it, while I'm too sore to hit you." Because getting information out of Genji was like pulling teeth.

"I...suspected he might come this way. I invited you, because I knew you would hold back if I asked." Yeah, Jesse would've killed the bastard after the first volley of arrows. He probably would have role-played cowboys and Indians while he was at it. But that didn't excuse Genji not giving you a head's up.

"You could've warned me." You ground your teeth, because now you were pretty pissed.

"I- yes. I knew it was a possibility, I didn't think it a likelihood. I...am very sorry."

You rubbed your forehead. Because you could count the number of times Genji apologized to you on the fingers of your broken hand. He meant it, of course, but he damn well ought to.

"I will redeem myself. Any help you need on the Bái Shé op, just tell me what to do. Any interrogations you need, I will handle... I would have anyway."

"Now you tell me." You glared at him. "You're a self-absorbed shit, and while I will eventually forgive you, I am so mad at you I could set you on fire with my brain."

The transport was here, and you stood, shaking your head.

"If you really want to make it up to me, do not report my injuries before we get back to base. I need to get cleaned up before they see me. Do you have any idea how much trouble I'm going to be in?"

Angela was waiting for you when you landed. To her professional credit, she did not take one look at you and laugh. You knew you looked ridiculous, your metal fingers jagged and sparking, your face all bruised and bloody, an arrow sticking out of your armor like someone's lame-ass pincushion.

"Genji messaged me personally. Said you needed...discrete help."

"You've seen how they get," you muttered. "I can't deal with that right now."

"You are well then. Not...uncomfortable with your situation?"

"The only discomfort I can think of is how much I want this arrow out," you scowled. "I can't even...a fucking arrow."

"Of course." Angela covered her mouth and you knew she was laughing at you now. She opened her bag, grabbed a pair of what looked suspiciously like bolt-cutters, and snipped the shaft down to a more manageable size. You stripped off your armor carefully. Angela applied a local anesthetic and you watched as she began to cut the arrowhead out.

"Torby's going to flip. My augments are OK this time, but I smashed up two more fingers." You held up your hand. "Well, I didn't. One of the assholes we ran into did. It was my fingers or my skull, and I had to prioritize."

Angela nodded, not looking up from her minor surgical procedure. "You will have to submit a report to him. I don't think he liked the fudge that much. You may want to try a different route of bribery."

"Thanks." You sighed and waited for Angela to finish patching you up. It wasn't deep and she wrapped you nicely.

"Giving you a round of nanites and an emitter. You know the drill by now, Lucky." She gave you a look. "I'd say no sparring, but you're not going to listen anyway."

You couldn't even shrug. She bandaged your shoulder too tightly.

You swapped out a basic set of fingers and while your shoulder was sore, you could type up a report. You'd keep your word to Genji.

"There you are!" Ziv peeked into the office, his hair taking up a third of the doorway. He slouched in, wearing a hoodie and some running shorts. He might have put on some muscle since joining, but he still looked like a kid to you. It was strange, considering he was only a few years younger than you. But it was experience that made all the difference. You were a grown ass woman. Ziv was a stupid kid. Now and forever.

"I had some luck with Chumak's organizer. I have location tags and everything. But...there are some things you should see. You're probably not going to like them."

You rubbed your face. "Ziv, you're not allowed to talk to me any more. You never bring good news."

Ziv pulled up a chair and brought the files up on his tablet screen. "I can narrow down the places Lao's been staying. There's a compound in Macau. There's another in New York. And I know there's one for sure in Copenhagen. I've mapped the location tags and they match up with known Talon sympathizers."

You nodded. "Good work."

"It was child's play. Be serious." He showed you the accompanying graphic. "They have to be moving her on private transport. Cyborgs always get tracked at airports, for obvious reasons. Chumak kept his notes on the device. I have a bio-hacker going over the procedures. It matches up to what he told us. You sure you don't want to go piss on his ashes or something? You totally could have made him last longer."

"Ziv, I don't like chopping people up till they beg. You, I might make an exception for, but in general, that's not my scene."
"Grumpy," he said. "Not getting enough sex? Because I'm not, but I'm single. What's your excuse?"

"I just got back from Japan. It was a stupid trip and I'm in pain. Just give the facts, Ziv."

"He kept video too."

You closed your eyes.

"I...most of it you don't need to see. I wrote up a report. It matches with the...methods he described. But this one, you should probably watch." There was a hesitation in his voice that told you what you needed to know.

You reached into your desk and pulled out a bottle of whiskey. You grabbed two coffee mugs and poured each of you a drink.

Ziv hit play.

Lao stood naked in a white room. She was bruised up, angry red lines shone under her skin where her metal arm connected to the flesh. Her ribs stuck out and her circuits sparked. She cringed, not making eye contact with the camera.

"Who is the woman in the footage, Bái Shé? She recognized you."

You swallowed a mouthful of whiskey, your fingers clenching painfully tight.

The circuits on her face sparked again and Lao screamed. "I can't- I don't remember!" It went on like that for some time. Whatever leashes they had implanted seemed wired through the metal on her face.

"Lucky. She's called "Lucky." There's more, but I can't remember. We never used her real name. She was just Lucky- Lucky Shot."

You sat back in your chair, watching Lao's eyes dart around the room. She hugged herself.

"What a stupid name." You recognized Chumak's voice. "Here are your orders, Bái Shé. Contact her. We can help you remember some of it. She obviously knew Lacroix. Lure them in. I'm sure you can snivel enough to get her sympathy. Serpent Protocol initiated. Your orders are as stand. Gérard Lacroix is the priority target. Secondary priority is your friend "Lucky Shot." You are to terminate her with extreme prejudice."

Lao shivered, pupils dilating, breathing going ragged. "Understood."

"You see, Ms. Nguyen? This is how we ensure their loyalty. She will sever the last links to her old life, and then she will be ours. There will be no further issues with her performance."

The video cut out and you finished your whiskey.

"You were never called "Lucky Shot."

"Nope." You smiled a little, even though it broke your heart. "Lao lied. She's trying to protect me. That idiot."

"I...I know Lacroix and Reyes think we should just put her out of her misery. That it's a mercy. But...I'll do what I can to make sure she gets back alive." Ziv studied his mug. "It's what Savta would've wanted."
"Yeah." You poured yourself more whiskey. "Thanks."

Ziv shut off his tablet. "Are you taking Lacroix up on his offer?"

"Yes," you said. "I thought you didn't want to do this kind of work."

"I didn't want to work for the Mossad. That was different and ideological. I don't mind doing the black bag jobs. You're not the only one who wants revenge, Lucky."

"I know." You poured him some whiskey too. "You have to be careful with Lacroix. He's not Gabriel and he's not me."

"I...get that." Ziv shrugged. "Shanghai was an eye-opening experience." There was an oddness to his tone that you recognized.

"I see." It wasn't your business, even if Ziv was your hacker. "Well, I'm along for the ride, because the two of you can't be trusted alone."

Ziv punched you in the bad shoulder, and it took all your self control not to murder him.

"An arrow?" Jack touched your shoulder. "That's...actually hilarious."

Gabriel gave you a once over, but you'd already cleaned yourself up, changed clothes, and sat with the emitter for a bit. You just looked tired.

"How's the other guy look?" Jack asked.

"It's all in my report." You slumped on Gabriel's couch, hoping they wouldn't actually read the report. Jack might forget, but Gabriel would see it, eventually. Maybe you could distract him. "I wouldn't mind hearing about the continuing adventures of Edmond Dantès."

"Hanzo Shimada?" Gabriel looked up from his tablet at you. Oh, you'd been way too optimistic when you thought he'd see it "eventually." Shit. "You know what he did to Genji."

"I didn't know it was him till it was "too late, can't run away." You slid onto the floor, sprawling out. "According to Genji, he wasn't trying to kill me. And I guess he's the expert on that."

"He wasn't trying to kill Genji either, or so they say," Gabriel scowled. "You let him walk?"

"I really wasn't in any condition to catch him. He wasn't the priority."

"What was Genji doing during all this?"

"The actual mission. It's all there." You closed your eyes. Genji owed you so much right now. "Hanzo's apparently killing Shimada big shots too. On that note, we really need to take a look at the On Sing. As the Shimada diminish, they're seizing power and they're into some weird shit. Don't know if they've allied with Talon, but I can see it happening down the road."

"...Submit it to the analysts. The Hanzo update too."
"You do it, I'm down for the night."

"Your mission, your report. Do it tomorrow."

You groaned loudly. "My shoulder hurts."

"Next time don't get hit," Gabriel said dryly.

"Ugh, you're the worst," you said and closed your eyes.

You waited for Gabriel to say something sarcastic, but he just crouched down beside you. "Good job today," he said softly.

"Thanks," you said, eyes still shut. "I thought so too."

"I thought he'd start us in a classroom, Lucky." Ziv had his hair pulled back in a puff, trying to be less noticeable.

"You obviously don't understand Lacroix," you said, pretending to examine a purse in a window. Your hood was up, and you had a scarf wrapped around your face: no sense making this easier for your adversaries. In the reflection you caught sight of one tail, a nervous brunette girl in a tan pea coat. There were at least five for you and Ziv; Lacroix had "borrowed" some DGSE trainees for a "joint exercise." The fact you were in London made it even more hilarious. You pretty sure MI-6 was going to shit itself when it realized what was going on. You weren't sure who was going to have to field that call, but you suspected DGSE was going to take sole blame if anyone got caught. Because you and Ziv weren't getting caught.

"Better than McCree's bullshit," Ziv muttered. "People stare at us anyway. How do you pick out a tail so quickly?"

"Practice. It's how they look at you and if they're following you. Now, the best way to do that is with a team. There have to be at least two more trailing behind on parallel streets. That way if we turn a corner, they can keep an eye on us without giving themselves away." You pulled out your compact, and pretended to check your makeup. There was another, a young dark-skinned man in a knit cap. "We have two on this street, at least one for each of us." You angled your mirror so Ziv could see who you'd picked out.

"Lacroix is also using the camera system to track us. Since this is just a training exercise and we're in motherfucking London, I won't hack the CCTV."

"He's not patched directly into the CCTV hub. He has drones acquiring the signal," you said. "Turn them or get rid of them."

Ziv nodded, checking his phone. "Should we split up here?"

"Sure. I have my earpiece in. You want to be the decoy while I tag them all, or are we working separately?"
"Separately," Ziv said. "But stay on the encrypted channel."

"Keep your scarf up. Change your hair if you have to."

"I know, mom."

You snorted and strode off, melting into the crowd while the girl in the pea coat tried to keep up. Ziv disappeared down an alleyway, and you hoped he didn't get cornered.

You turned a corner and swung up a fire escape, casually climbing up the building. Pea Coat turned the corner, head jerking around frantically. A small Vietnamese woman passed by her, shaking her head.

"Tail number three is little Asian woman in the red jacket."

"Hang on, all right, got eyes in the sky. I see her. Oh, there's a very hot blonde following me now. White jumper, blue jeans. I almost want to let him catch me."

You snorted. "All right, that's four. I don't think Lacroix is counting himself, but keep your eyes open."

"Shit, I got another. Looks like a lady with a buggy. Pretty sure it's empty though."

"OK, take pictures. I've got mine. We'll double back and tag them."

"Where are you- Really?"

"People don't look up. It's a good place to hide."

You surveyed the streets, still unable to spot Lacroix. For all you knew he was in disguise. A woman in white passed by the sidewalk, she looked up at you for three seconds, then made an abrupt turn.

"Verne, the street east of me. Get eyes on the woman in white. Tell me that's not who I think it is. She's made me already."

"Fuck!" Ziv crackled. "That's her all right."

"Coincidence?" You didn't believe in any such animal.

"Is it ever?" Lacroix was here on the ground then. And someone, possibly someone from DGSE or one of the recruits, had betrayed him.

"Maybe they should stop dressing her in a fucking uniform." The pristine white pissed you off, especially considering how they treated your baby hacker.

"Don't tell them that, it makes her easier to spot."

You looked at your watch. "I'm going to call it."

"What?"

You switched to the open channel. "This is Executor Hugo, Clearance Level Bleu, recalling all agents from the exercise. Agents include: Voltaire, Dumas, Sarte, Camus, Proust, and Verne. This includes designations: Molière. We have spotted a VIP. This is not a drill. I repeat, this is not a drill. Subject is clad in white, East Asian female, in her early twenties heading east from my location. Do not approach, subject is extremely dangerous. Follow and map. If made, engage in E&E. Hugo out."

You watched as Pea Coat freeze before heading toward the street Lao disappeared down.

"Wait...you have executive override? What the hell, Hugo?" Ziv snapped.

"I don't know how many Molière agents are out there; that's to keep me sharp. But yes, we had five known tails and you now have full access to the drones."

"You could just tell me and we wouldn't have to play weirdo tag."

"This is how you learn. Now keep her in your sights."

You stuck to the rooftops, the buildings close enough together that you could keep a bird's eye view of the situation. Pea Coat was too obvious. You didn't actually know which agent she was. "Lady in the tan jacket. You need to E&E."

She abruptly stopped and turned around, and you were glad you weren't training her. That was a terrible transition. Escape and evasion required a little more finesse.

Lao looked up and she spotted you once more, still moving east.

"Verne, I think she's got access to the cameras. Can you tag and track that way? I'll drop to street level."

"You know this is some kind of trap, right?"

"Not for me. Maybe you or the boss." You slid down the fire escape. "Directions?"

"Still heading east."

You passed a woman with a shaded baby stroller. You didn't even make eye contact as she handed off a small package.

"Where's the boss?" Ziv asked.

"Don't have eyes on him." You slid the package into your pocket and kept walking.

Your tanto was tucked against your back. And now you had a firearm. You opened the box as you walked.

"Need you to start backtracking, Verne. How'd she find us?"

"Working on it." He paused. "You think she's carrying explosives?"

"Not her MO. Doesn't mean a thing though." You kept walking, catching sight of the girl in white. You tracked the other agents in your periphery. "Anyone I hadn't accounted for?"

"Asian guy, blue shirt, seven o'clock."

"OK, anyone else?"

"Not that I'm seeing."

You turned a corner, and hit an alleyway. You stuck to the shadows.
"Don't have eyes on you."

"Target?"

"Still moving east."

"You got eyes on the girl in the tan pea coat?"

"Negative."

"Everyone else?"

"Affirmative." Ziv's words were clipped.

"You somewhere defensible?"

"...Do you mean- oh shit." Ziv took a deep breath. "OK, I'll start moving. Hugo, I've lost sight of her."

"I'll be ready."

You stopped trying to track her and climbed another fire escape. She'd find you soon enough. You watched your known "allies" milling about the streets. Where was Lacroix?

"Lucky, they're going for your hacker friend." Lao's voice was raw, and you glanced to your side, finding her facing away from you.

"Your programming got visual cues?"

"Yes," she nodded. "Keep your face covered. You're still an unknown variable."

"You're doing a good job circumventing them. Proud of you." You clenched your fist.

"Are there snipers on me?"

"Not yet."

"What's to stop me from taking you in?"

"Me. I have...contingency programming. I wouldn't recommend it today. And there are people going after your other hacker, some of them are supposed to be on your side."

"I know. Fucking priorities. Can you hold up much longer?"

"You should kill me." The request pierced your chest.

"Do you want me to?" You studied the gun in your pocket. It wasn't particularly impressive and you weren't sure it would do the job properly.

"I-" Her voice wavered and you seized on that.

"Yeah, if you have to think about it, you don't. Keep your head turned." You reached into your other pocket and pulled out a GPS tag and activated it. They'd jam it or get it off her eventually, but it would start tracking now. "Just keep me updated about your protocols. I'm guessing you have some kind of self-destruct."

"I- Chumak never made it back. Do I have you to thank?"
"I don't know what you're talking about," you said, dropping the chip down the back of her collar. "I'm going to walk away now. We should do this again," you said, building on an already nascent plan. "I'll send the invitation next time. Be ready for a big party."

Lao sighed softly. "I can't do this much longer, Lucky."

"I know. I haven't given up. We just have to time it right." You patted her shoulder and she flinched. "Sorry. I won't-"

"No, it's fine."

"I meant to ask." She tilted her head back, still not looking at you. "Did anyone besides you...?"

You wanted to lie, to give her something solid to cling to. But you couldn't. "No. Just me. I...When this is over, I'll tell you all about it. OK?"

Your comm crackled to life. "Getting uncomfortable, Hugo. Get over here!"

And you ran, because you were a coward, and didn't want to see Lao's world fall apart again.

You weren't sure who broadcasted your "training exercise" to the bad guys, but you were going to strangle them. That went double if it was Lacroix. Ziv was moving through the crowds, his escape and evasion techniques a little too clumsy for your taste. You caught sight of Pea Coat and White Jumper on his tail. You needed one alive, optimally.

Pea Coat moved differently now, more sure of herself, less klutzy. All right, you upgraded her threat level. She was a professional playing a recruit. White Jumper nodded at Pea Coat and you knew they were working in tandem.

"Verne, you need to blend better. Change up your outfit and cover your hair," you said over the secure channel. "I have eyes on two of them."

"Do you know where the boss is?"

"Negative. Just keep moving. Don't let them herd you."

"You find your girl?" Ziv took off his jacket and pulled his hood up.

"Yeah, she warned me that everyone loves you so much, they're trying to throw you a surprise party. I was all like, "are you serious? That dude? No one likes him, he's an asshole."

"Fuck you."

"Keep moving, you're only drawing two, and there may be more."

"Hugo, Verne, this is Molière, the original. You need to head west; I've cleared a path and I've got eyes on your pursuers." Lacroix's voice crackled over the comm.

"Boss! About damn time!" The relief in Ziv's voice surprised you.
"Run into problems?" You dropped into an alleyway, ahead of White Jumper. You palmed your tanto, waiting for him to pass by. He never saw you. You dragged him backward and slid your blade through his spine. He went down quick and quiet and you wiped your weapon on his pants before sheathing it and walking back onto the street.

"Worry about yourself, Hugo," Lacroix said sharply. "Bái Shé is here."

"Yeah, saw her already. She took a raincheck; told her I'd invite her to our next big party. It'll be great."

Lacroix was silent for a moment. "She didn't attack you?"

"No. I'll give my report later. Anyone on my tail?"

"No. They're after Verne."

"I'm starting to feel unloved." But you were pleased. You had worked hard to stay incognito; if they knew who or what to look for they could make things harder for Lao.

You followed Pea Coat at a distance.

"That's it Verne, you're in my sights. Take that first right and head into the parking garage. It should be clear, but can't promise anything."

"Any way to transport our traitors?"

"Yes. Let her follow him in. You took care of the other one?"

"Yes." You slipped into the garage, eyes adjusting to the darkness.

"Location, Verne?"

"Stairwell C." You turned to the stairwell and started climbing. You could hear someone ahead of you moving fast. You picked up the pace.

"Meet me at the top," Lacroix said.

You reached the top of the stairs, and she was waiting for you, not Ziv. Her gun was raised and she watched you with sharp eyes.

"Hands up."

You casually raised your hands. "I don't have any money, ma'am," you affected an older, rougher voice, hoping she wouldn't recognize "Hugo."

"Oh don't pretend. It's beneath us. I know you're one of Lacroix's, not the expensive one, but you'll do." She swung the gun, gesturing for you to step in front of her.

You took a step, then spun, digging your left hand into her gun-hand. Your blades emerged and she screamed, while you pushed her arm out, sending the shot wild. You pressed a finger against her wrist, and your injector popped out. You waited, gripping her arm as she wilted against you, dropping the gun.

You picked the gun up, Ziv running toward you.

"Let's get our friend home," you said, shifting one arm over your shoulder. Ziv grabbed the other. "Lacroix?"

"Here." He waved you forward, dressed in a blue medic's jumpsuit. He moved faster than you expected, though his gait was uneven. You dragged Pea Coat up through the parking garage to the roof. A medical-evacuation helicopter waited on the helipad.

"You can fly helicopters too?" You gave Lacroix an incredulous look.

"I am not a one-trick pony, Chanceux."

You began to clean your prostheses, because even if that dig was directed at you, you got the job done right.

Chapter End Notes

Kamaitachi are Japanese yokai. They're the embodiment of dust devils and can cut people without pain. More importantly, they're sometimes portrayed as weasels with blade hands. Because Genji is kind of a shit.

Noticed I do a lot of meandering. Like this arc should've been finished a long time ago, but I keep slipping fluff, smut, and semi-relevant character missions and interactions into the mix (I'm looking at you Christmas arc). In my original fiction, I would've cut half of this. But fanfic is more...malleable? Should I be tightening it up? Or are you guys still enjoying the detours?

As always, love the feedback. Love cake. Am slave to the fic, and it's kind of scary.
"Did you know DGSE was infiltrated?!" Ziv shouted. The three of you sat in Lacroix's office, waiting on Captain Amari.

"One always assumes," Lacroix said with a Gallic shrug.

You silently drank your coffee, staring hard at Lacroix. The helicopter had been far too loud to have a conversation with him. And you had not wanted to distract an injured pilot.

"No. No one assumes that if you're on your first "training exercise" there will be turncoat allies legitimately trying to kill you or collect your bounty!" Ziv shook his fists, hair going in all directions.

"One should be prepared for the possibility," Lacroix said, sipping something out of a flask. "This isn't the IDF. You're in the big leagues now, Agent Mihret."

"A good teacher should probably define the parameters better, Lacroix. I'm sure Ziv learned a very valuable lesson today, but I don't think you meant to teach him that he shouldn't trust you at your word."

Lacroix turned his cool stare on you. "She speaks. What other scathing insight are you going to share with the class, Chanceux?"

"You're favoring your left side. You get ambushed? Was this a learning exercise for you too?" You set your coffee down, smiling thinly. Lacroix wanted pointed observations? OK, you'd stick them in his craw, Blackwatch style.

"You're favoring your left side. You get ambushed? Was this a learning exercise for you too?" You set your coffee down, smiling thinly. Lacroix wanted pointed observations? OK, you'd stick them in his craw, Blackwatch style.

"Good eye, Chanceux. I was delayed. It was minor, because one should be prepared for the possibilities. My assailant is dead. It is good that you brought another guest to answer our questions."

"Yeah, the thing about one-trick ponies is that they're reliable." You scowled at him.

"Took that personally, did you?" Lacroix chuckled, taking another drink. "I will make suggestions for more attachments. Having a built-in toolkit is a good thing. You just need to expand your range."

"Great, that doesn't change the fact that this mission was far more treacherous than it had to be," you said, unwilling to let him gaslight you.

It was...a cock-up," Lacroix agreed. He pulled an engraved metal cigarette case out of his jacket pocket and tapped it a few times. "But you both handled yourselves well. Agent Mihret, you didn't get injured and while your E&E skills could use some work, they were literally put to the test today, and you emerged unscathed. Good job." He offered you both cigarettes.

Ziv glared at Lacroix, which was a far more restrained reaction than you were expecting. Oh dear. He even took a cigarette, letting Lacroix light it for him. Lacroix smoked Gitanes Brunes; they were an iconic French brand and they had a distinct aroma and a high price tag. You wanted one, but you weren't going to be distracted, unlike Ziv. "If Lucky hadn't been there-"
"You'd be dead or prisoner, probably," Lacroix nodded sagely, lighting his own cigarette. "Good job, Chanceux. It seems you were right. I am a very tempting target and the Bái Shé situation is far more complicated than I expected. Agent Mihret showed me the video. Mademoiselle Lao is a clever girl, naming you wrong."

You weren't going to be placated by Lacroix's attempts at distraction. "Were we bait?"

"Non. It was just supposed to be a training exercise. An old...friend reached out." Lacroix sat back in his chair, his eyes hard, smoke curling around his head. "I have to remind myself that "friendship" is such a flexible concept in the intelligence community."

"Or maybe you just have shitty friends," you said. Birds of a feather, as the proverb went. You picked your coffee back up. The phrase of the day was "trust issues." Maybe Lacroix didn't do this on purpose, but you didn't like how careless he'd been with Ziv. "The rest of the DGSE recruits make it back?"

"Yes, the ones we didn't...take care of. I'm feeling some heat, but honestly after Mathieu's little Judas kiss, they won't make a scene. Agent Mihret, you might want to scrub some of their files, they have a picture of Chanceux, but it was one we used for the op. She had half her face covered anyway."

The door opened and Captain Amari stood in the threshold, teeth clenched, hair down, shoulder squared. She looked ready to go dragon-slaying; all she was missing was a horse and lance. "Gérard, take yourself to the infirmary or I will drag you, and I won't do it nicely like last time." You could see the focus tightening on the cigarette. "There is no smoking indoors."

Ziv discretely dropped his cigarette into his hand and you grinned as he ground it out on the side of Lacroix's fancy desk.

"Oh Ana, you always know how to overwhelm a man." Lacroix put a hand over his heart. "The vest stopped the bullets, I am fine." But he discretely stubbed his cigarette out too.

Captain Amari was across the room in two strides, hair whipping behind her. She gripped Lacroix by the ear. "Go. Now. I have Agent Mihret's report. I'll take Lucky's in person. And then we're going to talk about how you simultaneously pissed off the DGSE, MI-5, and MI-6 in one afternoon."

"Ana!" Lacroix's laugh had a hint of fear in it. "The English can't prove a thing. They're just fishing. They don't actually believe DGSE."

"Go."

You felt a twinge of satisfaction at watching Lacroix retreat, if only because you were petty as fuck and today had been difficult. You weren't smiling, not on the outside at least.

Ziv stared at Captain Amari in awe.

"You are dismissed, Agent Mihret. I think Winston wanted to see you about some cyber security layering issues." She turned her focus on you and you definitely weren't smiling now. "Lucky, I'm going to need a debrief in as much detail as possible if we want to avoid a political incident."

It was probably too late for that. But you recounted what occurred, your interaction with Bái Shé, the ambush, and Lacroix's tidbits of information regarding a personal betrayal. You also informed her you'd taken one alive.
Captain Amari was calmer by the time you were done. "This is salvageable. My apologies. I've been in contact with three different intelligence agencies screaming about violations of sovereignty and Overwatch overreach. And Gérard is being difficult, playing all his cards close to his chest. Spies." She shook her head. "I'll arrange for someone to handle the interrogation. You take a break. Good work today."

"I'll let Jesse know to bring you some tea," you said, and she gave you a sharp look. "...Because you like tea, and Jesse makes it better than I do," you added lamely.

"Thank you," she said after a long moment. "That would be lovely."

"Perhaps I was too hasty in my judgments. He seemed like a good candidate at the time. However he seems to lack the...fortitude to get the job done. It might be time to return to a firmer leadership-"

You did not freeze when you opened the door to Gabriel's office and found Director Petras sitting in front of Gabriel's desk, his cologne stinking up the room. You simply walked to your desk, retrieved a sheaf of papers and turned around. You would brief Gabriel on your situation later.

"Do people just enter your office without knocking, Reyes?"

"Agent Strike is my personal assistant. It generally isn't necessary. And she is...discrete," Gabriel drawled, resting his elbows on the desk. "Nevertheless, I understand your concern. Strike, take a walk."

"Sir," you said with a sharp nod and headed out, your face a bland mask.

You walked straight to Captain Amari's office. She was on the phone with an angry English woman. She set the phone down, hitting mute, and looked at you. "Problems?"

You nodded.

Captain Amari gestured for you to sit and continued her conversation, the other person's volume diminishing as they spoke. She was just as capable as Jack, if more subtle with her charisma; it didn't hurt that most people understood that she could shoot them through the left nostril from miles away. Less than five minutes later, she was closing the call.

"Judith, I am sorry, we have a situation. I'm going to have to call you back. Mmm. Yes, please do send more of the Earl Grey. It's been lovely hearing from you." She hung up and turned her attention on you.

You told her what you'd overheard in the past week. Petras going after Jack. Petras courting Gabriel. This was the most you'd seen him at HQ.

Captain Amari took her hat off and ran her fingers through her hair. "There's more. Let me make tea. We are going to be here awhile. Lock the door."

You locked the door and turned off your tablet.
"They want to assign a UN observer to Blackwatch. Gérard's sources suggest the most likely candidate is a former Vishkar CFO, a Vikram Korpali. His mother has been linked to Talon."

"So it's in our best interest for Gabriel to play along, if only to keep Korpali out of our business."

"Maybe." Captain Amari poured Earl Grey tea and set plate of cream wafers on the desk. The scent of bergamot was soothing. "Jack thinks we should show a united front, let the observer come in for a bit, satisfy their curiosity, and go about our business."

You blew out a breath. "Shit."

"Jack isn't necessarily wrong. If we protest too much, they'll push harder. It's a delicate balance."

"We finally got Blackwatch cleaned up. Shit Spiders is going strong. We can't afford to have another breach," you said tightly.

"They say the "observer" will just be watching. As if "spying" isn't enough damage," Captain Amari said. "We could run two sets of missions. Limit observer access and potential interference. Assign Jesse to him. He's good at...disarming people."

You fought hard not to smirk. Because even if you knew something was going on, it did not behoove you to advertise it. You adored Captain Amari, which meant you also had a healthy fear of her. "If we let them do this, they'll just walk all over us."

"You may be right. I also feel that once someone has their foot in the door, once Blackwatch becomes more common knowledge, the observer will become an overseer. We have to move forward very carefully."

"And they'll be privy to our identities." Your mind flashed to Genji. You and Jesse didn't have family ties to exploit. "I uh...Gabriel called me "Agent Strike" in front of Petras."

"Ah, I meant to speak to you about that. An inquiry about you came through last week. Under your real name." Captain Amari sipped her tea. "The Black Base Delta files are under highest secrecy. The timing is very suspicious. Probably has to do with your involvement with Báí Shé."

"They're fishing."

"Too many people know you survived that "accident," even if they don't know your real name. We have already muddied the paperwork on purpose. We backdated your status as a floater agent, accompanying Commander Reyes when he made inspections. Your unsealed records have been modified; you were never assigned to Black Base Delta. You never served under Captain Patel."

You sucked in a breath.

"For all intents and purposes, you are officially Lucky Strike, the victim of terrible parental taste."

You downed the rest of the tea and thought about that. Shin was the one who "named" you, and his taste had been questionable, true. But it didn't matter what other people thought they knew about you. You knew the truth, and that's how you lived with yourself. It had always been that way. This wouldn't change a thing. Aside from your shrink and your small circle of comrades, you didn't talk about your history in any detail. "Well, it's not like anyone knows my real name anyway," you said and ate another cookie.

"It's a delaying tactic. If they want to find you, they will. You don't have any...vulnerabilities attached to your birth name? Children? Family? Large bank accounts?"

"Bank account used to be. But when I joined Blackwatch I got a cover identity or six. Been using those."

Captain Amari stared at you. She wanted you to answer the rest of the questions.

"No children. No family. No pets." You held your chin up. "Jesse and me are Blackwatch orphans, through and through. No outside connections. No one left to leverage against us."

"That's not quite true," Captain Amari said gently.

"Jesse swore up and down he didn't have family left. And that he was done with Deadlock." You eyed the crumbs on your plate. Jesse wouldn't lie to you, would he?

"They are moving against Jack and Gabriel. Is there anything bigger they could use against you?"

You sat back in the chair, the impact of her question a slap in the face.

"I meant I don't have any personal vulnerabilities to complicate the situation. Like hostages or anything." You stared at the floor. "Jack and Gabriel have always had targets on their backs."

Saying that out loud made your shoulders tighten.

"Yes." Captain Amari's tone was deceptively light but you weren't fooled, she was getting ready to pounce. "But do you really understand the situation?"

"Spell it out, Captain."

"Our enemies are sowing dissension in the ranks. They are targeting your people. What role are you going to play? How are you going to fight back? Because now more than ever, we need to be united."

This went further than Shit Spiders. This was like Lao, personal matters wrapped in the veneer of work. "This relationship stuff is...new. Send me into a fight. Give me a target. Assign me a mission. I'm good for that. But I don't have a plan for them."

"Maybe it's time you started."

You met her gaze.

"Gabriel is the calmest I have seen him in a long time. Jack is balancing his roles well. The personality shift has always been there, but I see Jack more than our "fearless leader" lately. It could be the fact they're relying on each other again. But I think it might be a little more than that. They've always been tempestuous together; they work hard, they play hard, they fight hard. That is the same, but with less the alpha male tension than before. Overall, they're more relaxed now."

You felt your cheeks burning. "Age mellows people."

"Are you calling us old, Lucky? Are Jack and Gabriel having problems? They have medication for that, you know."

You choked on your wafer, because Captain Amari was fit, sharp, and didn't look a day over 25. They were all in their thirties, and that wasn't old at all.

Captain Amari's eyes gleamed, because she had too much poise to laugh at her own insinuation.

"They're outpacing me there, so no. No one's old. No one needs medication," you said when you were done coughing crumbs into your napkin. You poured yourself more tea, trying to get your head together.

"I wouldn't bring this up if you weren't already in this extraordinary situation." She got up and refilled the teapot. "Like it or not, you're tangled up with them. And it's going to get worse before it gets better. You need to decide if that's what you want. If you can stick it out. I'm not telling you to. If at any point you need out, you are out; you always have the option of changing your mind. I'm definitely not asking you to sacrifice yourself. But you need to understand, that the honeymoon will end, and they will be difficult. If you already know that's something you can't handle, you should think hard about your involvement. Because no matter your feelings, the world is going to get in the way."

You rubbed your forehead. You didn't know if this could last, but you hadn't planned on walking out either. "As it stands, I can do it. I want to do it."

"What is "it," Lucky?"

You suppressed a curse, because Captain Amari was a fucking sadist.

"If you can't even say it...?"

"I'm with them. I've got their backs. I don't know what the fuck I'm doing, but I'll do my best, ma'am."

"I know how you feel about Gabriel," she said, because apparently everyone knew. "But Jack?"

Your thoughts flashed back to Indiana. Jack opening Christmas presents. Jack kissing you behind the barn. Jack beneath you on the floor of his bedroom, his eyes shining while he watched you.

"Jack's important too," you said quietly.

Captain Amari patted your shoulder. "This isn't an assignment, Lucky. You do what you have to. Just don't underestimate your role."

"It's a bad call, Jack." Gabriel sat on his desk, arms crossed. Jack sprawled on the couch, staring up at the ceiling. "You let them in, it's an infestation; we'll never get them out."

"We can't act like we have anything to hide. They'll form an investigative committee and blow the whole thing wide open." Jack pinched the bridge of his nose.
"You think we're cockroaches who fear the light? We'll survive. The compartmentalization is now airtight. They won't find a goddamn thing about Shit Spiders or anything high priority."

"They'll find something. You're fucking black ops, Gabe. I know the value of your work, but if we make this too difficult, they'll just leak something, it doesn't even have to be true, and we'll get crucified." Jack sat forward, rubbing his face. "I don't like it any more than you. I'm just trying to make the best of a bad hand."

"What will they do? Lock us up? Shoot us? I have blackmail on half the Security Committee members. We have enough leverage to keep them off our backs."

"Escalation should not be our first response, Gabe."

"I remember when you used to be brave." Gabriel's lips curled in a sneer.

"Oh for fuck's sake," Jack rolled his eyes. "You're the one who taught me to play it smart. "Brave" is just another word for "dead stupid," remember? This is politics. Bravery has no business here."

"We let them in, we jeopardize dozens of ongoing operations," Gabriel snapped. "I'm not putting my people at greater risk."

"One observer."

"With ties to Vishkar and possibly Talon. Get someone else. You can do that much politicking, Jack. It's why they made you Strike Commander."

"Fuck you, Gabriel." Jack was on his feet.

"I'm too hard to work with. I'm too difficult to get to compromise. They're damn straight I am! I wouldn't tolerate this shit! When did you become such a bureaucrat?"

"I know your instinct is to close ranks and fortify when we're under attack, but we can't be that fucking obvious, Gabe! You of all people should get that!"

"What kind of leader are you if you don't fight for your people?"

"My, you are bold, Chanceux. It is a good thing my Amélie is so understanding." Gérard said, when he opened the doors to his quarters.

"We need to talk about countermeasures," you said stiffly, not rising to the bait. It was very late now and you tried to remember what kind of day you'd been expecting when you got up to go on a stupid training run with Ziv in London. Nothing like this, that's for sure.

Lacroix stepped back. "Come in then."

You didn't hesitate. His quarters were almost as big as Jack's. Amélie sat on a low couch, in a sleek violet tunic and black tights, reading a fashion magazine.

"This is regarding Shit Spiders." Your eyes darted between them.
"There are no secrets between us," he said, an undertone of something between pleasure and pride in his voice.

You rubbed your forehead, because Lacroix liked to play one-upsmanship games. Worse, he excelled at them. It's part of what made him so deadly. "Lacroix-

"But if it will make you more comfortable. Amélie, can you wait for me in the boudoir?"

"D'accord." Amélie smiled at you, her full lips curving in amusement. She was a stunning woman, who moved with grace, confidence, and an extra something in her swagger. You remembered Lacroix's earlier confession and averted your eyes.

"Have a seat, Chanceux." You weren't surprised by the plum and black color scheme of their room. It was elegant, sexy, and a little intimidating. You sat on the edge of the couch and Lacroix took the seat perpendicular to you. He retrieved his cigarette case and opened it.

"No thanks," you said, though you were very tempted. He smoked Gitanes Brunnes, and you had really wanted one earlier.

"You're very tense, Chanceux. Can I offer you a drink instead? I have burgundy, port, and an excellent Bordeaux." He gave you one of those polite half-smiles that let you know he was going to etiquette you to death, unless you accepted some of his hospitality.

"I'll take the cigarette then, thank you."

He held his case out to you and you took one. Lacroix did not offer you his lighter. You were forced to lean forward and let him light it for you, the act uncomfortably intimate. A silver ash tray sat on the table. You inhaled, savoring the distinctive bite and spicy sweet flavor of his cigarettes.

"So, to what do I owe the honor?"

"You fixed up?" You asked, gesturing to his left side.

"It was all minor. Ana is so very fussy. But, it is kind of you to ask." His eyes gleamed.

"It is," you agreed. He was being very reasonable. There was a trap here. "Petras has been visiting Jack and Gabriel. He's already voiced displeasure with Jack's work, and now he's cozying up to Gabriel, telling him that maybe he shouldn't have been passed over for the promotion. I'm not sure how this ties into the placement of UN observer for Blackwatch. I'm thinking it's just another way to drive a wedge between them. Captain Amari was very clear about the pros and cons. And I'm sure you can guess which sides Jack and Gabriel are on."

You felt Lacroix's regard.

"What are you asking me, Chanceux?"

"You're the sharpest strategist we have, Lacroix." You met his pleased gaze. "You knew this was coming. Don't tell me you don't have a plan."

"Several." He rested his legs in a figure four, lighting another cigarette for himself.

"Well?" You asked after he'd taken a few puffs.

"You need to work on your poker face. It is passable in most situations, but your natural impatience always shines through."

"You need to work on not being a dick," you scowled.

"See, you are too easy to bait. It comes from spending so much time with soldiers." Lacroix smirked. "You need to sit back and understand the playing field. Learn to enjoy the opening maneuvers. Think of it as tactical foreplay."

You raised a brow, because he would coach his teaching in sexual metaphors. Worse, he did it smoothly. Ugh. "Focus, Lacroix."

He just laughed. "So earnest. All right. First off, the smartest thing is to accept the observer. I realize this goes against your soldier's mentality, but understand that keeping enemies close is commonplace in espionage. We can control what he sees or doesn't. Up close, we can find weaknesses to exploit. Destroying Korpal's credibility wouldn't be difficult. Accomplishing it without collateral damage will be tricky, but I can do it." The sharp little points of his mustache accented his smile in an unnerving fashion. "The observer may do damage unchecked, but he's just a distraction, an appetizer to whet our tolerance for bullshit. He's also there as an agent provocateur. It's no coincidence people keep trying to stir up bad blood between Jack and Gabriel."

"So you think we should accept and counteract?"

"Yes. Because the observer does not matter in the grand scheme of things. He's a decoy. We get all worked up and focus on such a small problem while they prepare a second wave of attack. If they are fortunate, we are too consumed with our own in-fighting to get a handle on the problem. And it goes downhill from there. Much easier to know your leak and manage what kind of information you are feeding them."

Lacroix liked an audience, you realized. Being a master spy, he didn't often get to share his brilliant revelations with people who could appreciate them and live to tell the tale. Well, tell the tale with all the top secret details redacted.

"What's their angle then?" You inhaled the smoke, wishing you didn't like it so much.

"They won't reveal the existence of Blackwatch now. It is too new and your actions are still deniable. Jack is much too popular to be smeared in the media just yet. Gabriel is still well-loved. No, that'll all come later. The observer will pick out a linchpin, someone integral to operations, but who lacks the influence of Ana or Gabriel. Someone like Mihret, Winston, or you. And they'll go after them instead. It will be a very flashy court-martial, and whether the evidence is real or not, it will shake the public's belief in Overwatch. It will be the first crack in our armor. Tarnishing our image will be the first volley. And then they'll pick away at what we are. McCree and Shimada are expendable; they will disappear. Wilhelm and Lindholm are old; they will be retired. Lindholm's designs will be used in some sort of atrocity, further blackening his name. I will probably vanish under truly inexplicable circumstances, adding to my mystique. After all that, Ana, Jack and Gabriel will be next, and perhaps they will self-destruct, because who will be left to support them?"

"Fuck." Because when he said it like that, it was pretty obvious.

"That's how I'd do it anyway. Maybe not the exact order of steps, maybe over the course of several years. But you can see the pattern?"

"Yeah." You shuddered at the scope of it all, glad that you couldn't show any weakness in front of Lacroix, otherwise you might panic. "Ziv is the likeliest target. He's had the most public exposure, but lacks the charm of Winston." Who could hate a friendly, polite, genius gorilla? Gabriel, and some other assholes, that's who. Ziv was a much easier mark. You sighed, finishing the cigarette. You dropped the butt in the ashtray and shook your head when he offered you another.

"Yes, but that's only if your relationship with Gabriel and Jack stays secret. Otherwise, you'll be on the chopping block first," Lacroix said and frowned at your look. "Don't even think about taking that hit for Mihret. It's not just your skin on the line, Chanceux."

"Obviously that's not a real choice, Lacroix."

He smiled sharply at you. "Just making sure. Soldiers like to throw themselves on grenades."

"I'm a lousy soldier," you said through gritted teeth.

Lacroix just chuckled and ran his fingers through his hair. "You have an unfortunate flair for heroics. Thankfully, they are the small kind. It is a flaw, but it is one I can work with." He smirked at you and you wanted to hit him. "Do you play chess, Chanceux?"

"With Jack," you said.

"He is better than one expects," Lacroix said. "But he plays like a general. He favors overwhelming force, and while he can think twenty moves ahead, he doesn't know how to set the board."

"I'm relearning shogi with Gabriel."

"My, those soldiers do like their games, or perhaps they just like playing with you," Lacroix said, giving you a sly look. "I didn't think you had the patience to sit there and wait for your opponent to decide his move."

"And yet, here I am, making plans with you. I'd say I'm a fucking fount of patience."

Lacroix laughed, genuinely delighted by your vitriol. "So you're all in then? Such a romantic."

"You can't be half-hearted in battle," you said.

"Le cœur a ses raisons que la raison ne connaît pas." He just smiled at your blank look. "Yes, I agree, Chanceux. You must commit to a course of action."

"Well, chess, shooting, and strategy are all very similar in one regard: if your opponent can reach you, you can hit them too. You just need the right tools and an understanding of the terrain. I have been compiling a list of all those UN officials who aren't playing so nicely with us. I will admit, I may have an insider or two, but that isn't something you need to worry about."

"So we're going to smear them first?"

"Some," he said. "False flags will be very important. Discrete assassinations as well. They can't have too much reason to suspect us." He paused. "We can whittle them down, Chanceux, but there will always be more. The other half is shaping Overwatch into something that can defend itself. Something worth defending. As it stands, our mission is too broad, our many actions unsustainable. Jack wants to save everyone. Gabriel will cross many lines to protect his people. Ana must catch whatever they miss. We are spread too thin."

You were ready for that drink. "That's way above my pay grade."

"It is food for thought. You can't afford to simply follow orders any more, Chanceux. We both agree that you aren't a very good soldier," Lacroix said. "You need to be thinking long-term." That wasn't the first time you'd heard that today.

You weren't sure what difference your role in your relationship with Jack and Gabriel could make. But you understood strategy, preparation, and mission execution. Those were the long-term ideas you were prepared to embrace.

"Go on," you said, trying not to sound grumpy.

"I am making contingency plans. It doesn't matter if we take the observer or not. They will move against us. This is just a distraction. I am starting to suspect that Bái Shé will be a lot more useful to us alive and functioning than in any other condition."

"Is that my carrot and stick?" You asked, a little disgusted.

"It can be. But I am not saying that to get you on my side, Chanceux. She has accomplished many Talon operations. She knows a great deal and is functioning at a better capacity than expected. Granted, there is that self-destruct command they've implanted her with, but I think we both know how to get around that."

"Yeah," you smiled wryly. "We all have our priorities."

Lacroix lifted a finger to his lips. "If we can take her alive, she will fill in part of the puzzle. And then we can launch Hanoi. I know Gabriel wants to rush in, but Nguyen is not to be underestimated." Lacroix's smile tightened, and you watched his cigarette crumble over the ashtray.

"You know her," you breathed.

"Talon doesn't just want me dead because I am a spectacular agent, Chanceux." He winked. "Some of it is very personal."

"Really, Lacroix?" You shook your head. "And I get the reputation?"

"I can't help that your mind is forever in the gutter." He laughed, but made no denials. "But you know, if we keep meeting like this, people will talk. I don't advertise that I've taken on new protégées."

"According to Ziv, some people already assume that I'm sleeping with everyone I talk to." You shrugged. "As long as your wife isn't bothered, I don't care."

"Amélie finds you quite charming," Lacroix said.

Your eyes darted to his bedroom and you wondered just how much she had heard. Privacy was an illusion, sure, but you'd almost forgotten she was there. You were really a terrible spy. Lacroix probably just liked having you around to make himself look better.

"It isn't my wife you should worry about." He smiled thinly.
"Jack and Gabriel aren't going to be jealous over rumors."

Lacroix just gave one of those stupidly elegant half shrugs and you got the feeling he was just humoring you.

You rolled your eyes, because you couldn't verbally argue with body language. "There's another thing." You studied the ash tray, because Amélie was probably listening in. "Ziv."

"What about Agent Mihret?" Lacroix asked, his voice all honey and butter.

"I think you know." You glared at him. "You need to be careful with him."

"Today's mission was not my-"

"You know that's not what I mean."

Lacroix only gave you one of those infuriatingly placid smiles. "Chanceux, I'm afraid I have no idea what you're talking about."

"What kind of leader are you if you don't fight for your people?"

"Where the hell do you get off-?"

You walked in on them then, Gabriel glaring at Jack, arms folded tightly against his chest. There were only a few feet of distance between them. Jack was on his feet, fists balled at his sides, one foot already stepping toward Gabriel.

You shut the door behind you and waited to see if either one of them would back off. Neither of them looked at you. The tension between them was staggering, and while you had never witnessed their blowouts before, you understood why outsiders might misread their relationship.

You walked between them, ignoring the way their eyes flicked between you and each other. Maybe it was your imagination, but you could feel the electricity crackling on your skin when you entered their proximity. Face firmly calm, you set your papers down on your desk. "Is everything all right?"

"Great," Jack kept his focus on Gabriel.

"Mind your own business," Gabriel said sharply, a warning flashing in his eyes.

You watched his hands, but he held still, too tightly coiled for you to get a read on his body language. You didn't think he'd swing, but then there were probably graveyards full of people who didn't think Commander Gabriel Reyes could do that.

"Don't take it out on her," Jack scowled. "What the fuck is your problem?"

"My problem is that the goddamn Strike Commander can't be trusted to look after his own people!"

You weren't sure if Gabriel actually thought that or if he was just trying to piss Jack off.
You looked between them. You had no authority here. And maybe that would work in your favor: this clash didn't need any more alphas.

"Strike Commander, Captain Amari was looking for you," you said. "Commander Reyes-" You studied his snarling face. "Is this a glass situation?" You asked, dropping the codeword for "we are being overheard."

He glared at you, teeth clenched. "I told you to mind your own business, agent."

The seat Petras had occupied remained empty. There were only two people who knew what had been said here earlier, and the one who could tell you wouldn't. At least not till he calmed down.

You walked between them again, deliberately turning your back to Gabriel. You looked up at Jack, his arms now crossed over his chest. "It's late." You placed a hand on his shoulder. "Why don't you take a walk? I'll swing by later."

Jack inhaled sharply, frowning at you. He studied you with an unfriendly level of calculation, caught somewhere between hardened Strike Commander and angry soldier.

You had no power here. If either of them kicked you out or pulled rank, you'd have to get Captain Amari. And the interpersonal consequences? Well, you weren't sure, but you knew it wouldn't be pretty. This wasn't just work; it wasn't just personal. It was a tangled mess and one misstep could bring the whole thing down.

"Please, Jack. It's late, and we can deal with this in the morning." Your voice didn't waver and you were satisfied by how collected you remained.

He swallowed and brushed your hand off. "Damnit, Lucky."

You waited for him to order you to mind your own business, to render you useless, to give you an excuse to go to Captain Amari. And you half-expected him to do that and break whatever small faith you'd put in him. Because if he did that now, when it really mattered, you weren't sure if you could recover. You wondered if that showed on your face, because he turned away, hands jammed in his pockets.

"Fine. In the morning then." He didn't look at Gabriel, he just walked out briskly, the door shutting with a click. He didn't slam it, but you felt the finality of the gesture.

You let out the breath you hadn't realized you were holding. When you turned around, Gabriel was watching you with sharp eyes, his lips pressed firmly together.

"Do I need to get Jesse and Genji on the mat for you?"

"You need to learn how to mind your own business," Gabriel said.

"You are my business." You crossed your arms. "It's late, Gabriel."

"You already used that line on Jack." Sending Jack away hadn't diminished the edge in his voice. He was still enraged, posture too taut, hands stuck in fists. You weren't afraid of Gabriel, but you were afraid of fucking things up.

"Because it's true. We're not going to solve anything tonight."

Gabriel just glowered at you.
"Are you going to start throwing things? Because last time you told me to hide your coffee mug."

He picked the cup up off his desk and turned it over in his hand. He met your gaze and suddenly there was an explosion of white porcelain against the wall. You hadn't even seen him move. That was some petty shit.

"All right then," you said. "Never mind."

Gabriel swept the surface of his desk clean in two swings; pens, paperwork, and assorted objects flying off at speeds not safe for work. Or at least the office. Glass shattered. Plastic fractured. Papers rustled as they fluttered through the air. When he was done, he stared at the mess on the floor. Yeah, he was going to have to clean that up, because that wasn't your job.

"You should go," he said gruffly.

"I will," you said, because you understood boundaries. But you walked up to him, forcing yourself not to hesitate. You leaned in and kissed his shoulder. "We'll sort it, OK?"

One hand came up and roughly patted your back. "Yeah. OK." He paused. "Why do you smell like Gérard's cigarettes?"

"Because we were smoking them earlier," you said.

"Where?" Gabriel's voice was rough.

"His quarters," you said, because sneaking cigarettes inside Overwatch HQ was apparently an art.

Suddenly you were flat against the desk, one of Gabriel's palms cushioning the back of your head, the other pressed against your sternum, keeping you down. Gabriel's eyes were locked on yours, his dogs tags jingling, his hat askew.

You blinked up at him, not liking the hard set of his jaw.

"Why were you in Gérard's quarters?" He rasped, his thumb rubbing hard circles between your breasts.

"We ran a mission today, remember?" You had once heard that tigers would not attack a human who maintained eye contact; woodsmen in India wore masks on the back of their heads for protection. But the moment the prey turned away or ran, they would move in for the kill. Staring up at Gabriel, you were pretty sure none of that was true. Apex predators would pounce when they felt like it; they didn't care if you were watching or not. You still didn't look away. "There were several complications. We had stuff to go over." Because Gabriel was not in the right mindset to hear about grand strategy.

Your breaths came short and hard. Gabriel was between your legs, pinning you to his damn desk, one twisted nerve away from going off.

His lips pressed against your neck, teeth grazing your throat.

"Gabriel-" You shivered, because he always affected you. Fucking him calm hadn't been your plan, but that option was now very tempting.

"You seem to have trouble with orders. Can't mind your own business. Can't leave when you're told. Can't stay out of other men's rooms." He bit down, and you gasped sharply. "Were you planning on going to Jack after this? Were you going to reward him with your pussy because you managed to get him to obey you this once? Did you think I'd be that easy to manipulate?"

Your stomach dropped, coldness flaring in your gut. You didn't want to play any more. Gabriel was possessive, but he was never demeaning.

"Was that your plan?" He hissed, grinding against you.

"No," you said, shoving him away. It was like pushing a brick wall. "That's not OK."

"Neither is spreading your legs to get your way," Gabriel sneered.

"Red." You pushed his hand off your chest, and it was another second before he got off you. You put hand over your face, the office lights too bright overhead. You took a few ragged deep breaths, forcing yourself to be calm. When you moved your hand, Gabriel was standing beside you, his palms flat on the desk, face blank.

You sat up and straightened your shirt. The bite on your neck would bruise if you didn't ice it or use an emitter.

"That was cruel and unnecessary," you said flatly, rubbing your throat.

"You should have left," Gabriel said, voice low and dry.

"Yeah, that makes everything my fault," you said, because that was a shitty deflection. "I'm not everyone's stress fuck, you know." You glanced over your shoulder, Gabriel's expression still unreadable. "Even Jack's never pushed me that far," you added, because fuck being the better person.

Gabriel said nothing. Was a real apology too difficult of a concept?

"Right, I'm going."

You combed your fingers through your hair, your hands nowhere near as steady as you liked. Leaving the office had never felt like the walk of shame before, and the sensation was made worse by Gabriel's gaze burning into your back. You shut the door behind you. Captain Amari was right. Things were going to get worse before they got better. And the honeymoon? That was definitely over.

You made yourself a peanut butter and jelly sandwich in the kitchen. You made Jack a few too, because you had said you were going to see him. The sinking feeling in your gut would be better in the morning, you knew from experience. Things were always worse late at night. But right now, you just wanted to go knock on Jesse's door and finish a bottle of whiskey.

You weren't going to though, because then he'd ask what was wrong, and you'd tell him, and everything would get even more awkward. So you packed your sandwiches in a bag and took the long route to Jack's quarters.

If Jack pushed you tonight-
You took a deep breath. Today had been stupid. Today had been long. You made a few passes around the officers' quarters, and when you were confident it was clear, you went to Jack's room.

He sat on the couch, still in full uniform, the lights dimmed.

You hopped over the back of the sofa, and dropped the sandwiches on the coffee table.

"I'm sorry you had to see that," Jack said, not turning to look at you. He was hunched over, chin resting on his hands.

"You guys are stubborn asshats," you said, a little harsher than you intended. "It was bound to happen."

Jack sighed. "Thanks."

"Sorry," you said after a moment. "I had a shitty day too. You have an emitter?"

Jack tilted his head to the side, giving you a once over.

"Nothing serious," you said. "Don't worry about it."

"I have one." Jack reached for a sandwich. "I'll get it for you in a moment."

You took yours and sat on the couch, eating in silence.

"Gabe do that?" He gestured to your neck.

"Yeah," you said, when your mouth wasn't full.

"You OK?"

"Pissed." You rubbed your neck. "It's vain, but I don't really want to look at it, you know?"

Jack's brow furrowed. "Yes." He rested a hand on your back. "Thank you for defusing the situation, but you can't just go meddling in the chain of command."

You gave him a hard look. "Then you and Gabriel need to keep it under control. The last thing we need is the two of you getting into off the mats. Let me know and I'll clear out the gym if you need to "expel." But don't act like your fights aren't going to affect the rest of us."

"You're...really upset," Jack said, studying your neck.

"Yes," you said. "I didn't want to get involved." You clenched your fists. "But you guys didn't really give me a choice. So I'm going to go to sleep and I'll figure out how I feel when I wake up. I just came to check on you."

"You're shaking," Jack said softly.

"I'm angry!"

"Gabriel?"

You wiped your face. "Mostly."

"Do you want to stay? Just cuddle?"
You closed your eyes. "Is there some etiquette I'm violating? Because Gabriel and I got into it and I'm not trying to make things worse by running to you."

"I think you noticed Gabriel and I got into it first," Jack said. "The fact you're considering his feelings lets me know you're not just trying to stick it to him. And..." Jack rubbed your back gently. "You can't come here with that wounded look on your face and expect me to not do anything."

"I'm angry," you insisted, voice higher than you liked.

"And hurt." Jack stroked your hair. "No shame in admitting it. We don't pull punches when we fight," he said. "Sometimes there's too much honesty, or what we think is honesty in the moment. Later on, once the adrenaline's down, we realize we've been real bastards, but it's a bit late then." He kissed your cheek. "The sandwiches helped take the edge off. Thank you."

You curled up on the couch, Jack a warm comfort at your side. You didn't feel like walking back to your room or Jesse's.

"Got a t-shirt I can borrow?" You still had blood spatter on your sleeve from this afternoon. It was only a little, but you felt guilty bringing that into Jack's bed.

"Of course." Jack got up and when he came back, the coat and gloves were off and he handed you a black t-shirt. "I'll set up the emitter. You can have the bathroom first." He paused. "The black toothbrush is new, if you want it."

That was no coincidence, but it was nice that he'd made it sound casual. You could keep pretending. "Thanks," you said.

Jack had a blue toothbrush and Gabriel's was purple for some reason. The black one was on the sink, still in the packaging. You opened it, used it, and left it in the holder by the other two, resolving not to think too hard about it.

When you came out of the bathroom, the emitter was already glowing in the bedroom. You set your folded clothes on a chair and slipped into Jack's bed. You liked Jack's bed a little better than Gabriel's. He had piles of heavy blankets, and warm flannel sheets. Gabriel on his own was enough to keep you warm, but Jack had the superior linens. A few minutes later, Jack climbed in beside you wearing sweatpants and a t-shirt. You had your back to him, and he wrapped his arms around you, pulling you against him.

"Do you want to talk about it?" He rubbed circles on your low back.

"Not really." You didn't want to give him more fodder for his fight with Gabriel. "You want to talk about what had you and Gabriel so riled up?"

"I don't." Though Jack didn't sound defensive. "I think you already know most of it." He nuzzled the back of your neck.

"Captain Amari filled me in." You turned over to face him. Jack still wore that concerned look. He hesitantly stroked your neck and it did something to your already fragile insides.

"If you want to debate it, we can later, in private. But I don't want to fight about it any more tonight."

"Don't want to think about it." You curled against his chest.
"Have you been smoking?" He sniffed your hair.

You closed your eyes. "If I answer that, are you going to get weird?"

"That bad of a day? I thought you were just doing training exercises with Gérard and Agent Mihret."

You laughed at that. "Yeah, me too."

Jack gave you another pillow. "What happened?"

"Short version: Talon infiltrated it and caused a three-way intelligence community incident. Lao made an appearance. Everyone wants to murder Ziv, me included. Lacroix got double-crossed, apparently can fly helicopters, and killed an old friend. Then I came to back to this." You waved your hand. "And I was too tired to cook, so PB&J sandwiches."

"So why do you smell like Gitanes?"

You realized that maybe your explanations needed to be better organized, and that you were exhausted. "I went to Lacroix's room to talk strategy. He offered an annoying amount of hospitality, probably to get on my nerves, and eventually I had to accept something." You adjusted your pillows. "They are really nice cigarettes. And his wife was in the next room. So if you're going to get all-"

Jack smiled wryly. "Smoking's bad for you."

"So are pushy super soldiers," you scowled.

Jack kissed you gently. "I'm sorry you had a tough day. I didn't know."

"You don't get the impression that I was sneaking around with Lacroix or something stupid, do you?"

Jack's eyes widened. "Oh." He stroked your cheek. "Not Lacroix. I picked up how you feel about him. It's been pretty obvious, since you joined, that he isn't your favorite person."

"Do you think I'm sneaking around with someone else?" You tried to keep the incredulity out of your voice, and failed.

"No." Jack brought your hands to his lips. "I've been a little...annoyed about McCree. But it's not my place to comment on your friendships."

"We've never-"

"I know. Earlier on we thought maybe you two would-" Jack sighed at your look. "I know. But I'm allowed to feel a little jealous. You go on missions together. You sleep in his room. When you're upset, you go find him."

"I don't have the luxury of a lot of friends."

"I'm not-" Jack pushed his hair out of his face. "Damnit, Lucky. I'm trying to say that, no, I don't think you're doing anything wrong, but sometimes I get jealous because you're doing things with him and maybe I wish you'd do more with me. That's it. It's a confession, not something to fight about."

"OK," you said, placated. Because Jack was trying to tell you his feelings before they got ugly. "You're busy. I...don't want to bother you. And it's hard since, you know, we have to be discrete."

"It is hard." Jack paused, a shadow falling across his face. "I don't...I don't do enough, do I?"

You blinked. "I don't know what you mean."

"Gabriel reads to you and he cooks. You do more cooking and you're very conscientious of how you balance your time with us. You even step out when you think Gabe and me need alone time. Yes, I noticed." He flinched. "Please don't look that surprised."

"We're all busy."

"When's the last time I did something just for you? Sex doesn't count, because this isn't just sex. Hell, you had to tell me to back off last time."

"That whole Christmas thing?"

"Some of it, but...well, we talked about that. I wasn't a good host, and if we're going to be brutally honest, we all know that was more for me than for you."

You weren't going to argue with him there. "After I tried my hand at rendering people, you were supportive."

"I should be there for you. You should expect that."

You shrugged. "We play chess."

"That's not enough! You could play chess with Reinhardt!"

"I might win more often..."

"Unlikely. He just flips the board with his knee when he gets too excited. It doesn't matter who's winning. He can't help himself." Jack sounded vaguely annoyed. "I'm sorry. I'm a shitty friend and an inconsiderate boyfriend."

You nestled against the pillow and contemplated the designation "boyfriend." It occurred to you then that all this relationship guilt resulted directly from his fight with Gabriel. Who knew what Gabriel had been saying before you walked in? But Jack did take a lot. He didn't always give back. And while you chalked it up to the stress of his job, it wasn't the best dynamic.

"So do better," you said, because making excuses wasn't going to help any of you in the long run.

Jack's chest shook with laughter. "You can be difficult too."

You shrugged. "Yeah, but I'm not the dramatic one."

"You get upset and you disappear for a few days." Jack pulled you closer against him, like you'd run because he mentioned it. "I don't like that."

"It's usually not worth fighting about and I need time to cool down. Otherwise I'll get petty and vengeful."

He raised a brow.

He laughed and stroked your hair. "OK. You're skittish about feelings, and I'm never quite sure if I've pleased you or damn near scared you off."

"I can't tell either. Sometimes it's both." You squirmed a little. "This is like the third time today someone's called me out about how I handle us." You burrowed against Jack's chest, partially for comfort, partially so you didn't have to look him in the eye. "Still talking to the therapist. Haven't given details, but she knows I'm in a relationship and that... It's different from Shin. I already had baggage back then and I obviously keep picking up more. There hasn't been a lot of stability, Jack. And I don't know how to handle this."

Jack moved and suddenly you were on top of his chest, his arms around your waist.

"Fuck, you're fast." Your heart skipped a beat or three. "Jack?"

"Sorry." Jack adjusted the blankets and held you against him. "I know. I know it's new and you're doing your best. I'm not upset at you. It's just one of those areas we could improve on. Like me doing more."

You folded your arms and rested your chin on them, having no choice but to look at him now. "OK."

"Pleased or scared?"

"Agreeing with you."

Jack kissed your head. "So Gabe got...upset about Gérard?"

You hesitated. "You don't get to go throw this in his face, OK? That's my privilege."

Jack laughed softly. "I wouldn't dream of it."

So you told him what happened and Jack stayed quiet till you were done.

"If it makes you feel any better, he's probably already sorry. Can't give you a timetable on when or how he'll apologize, but Gabe doesn't really think that way about you."

"Don't make excuses for him," you said sharply.

"I'm not. Be petty and vengeful. Make him squirm. He deserves it." Jack smirked. "But if you're worried that he secretly thinks that badly of you, no, that's not the case at all. He was too mad at me to think straight. But he shouldn't have taken it out on you."

It didn't mean as much coming from Jack, but the reassurance soothed your inner turmoil. And you recognized that even if Jack and Gabriel were fighting, Jack was trying to make sure there were no misunderstandings. It was oddly comforting.

"I'm glad you came to me," Jack said, after a moment. "That you trust me enough to share these things. I know you probably side with Gabriel on the issue we're disagreeing over, but it means a lot that you're trying to be fair." Jack kissed your cheek. "I know you and Gabriel usually have less...explosive fights. I'm sorry you got tangled up in this one."

"You're very different from Gabriel," you said, forcing yourself to meet those wide blue eyes. "But I'm not here just here for him. You do things to me, and I don't even know how to "You could always say, "thank you sir, may I please have another." Screaming my name works too." He grinned at you, cheekiness not diluting the pleasure in his eyes.

"Shut up, Jack," you said, and pulled the blankets over your head.

Chapter End Notes

"Le cœur a ses raisons que la raison ne connaît pas." The heart has its reasons, which reason knows nothing of." -Pascal

I should clarify that DGSE is Direction générale de la sécurité extérieure, (the General Directorate for External Security) which is France's current spy agency.

Well, everyone's reactions were overwhelmingly positive so I'll keep up with the high proportions of fluff and side missions. Not like I have to work hard to stop myself. And I do admit, the side stuff does build into the main plot and character development. But it could often be cut down to like three sentences.

Example from the Genji mission: "You went with Genji to Nagano, ran into his stupid brother, and got an arrow in the shoulder for your trouble. While Genji was apologetic, it didn't change the fact that it was a goddamn arrow and you'd skipped kinky sex with your lovers for this. You weren't going to post a bounty on Hanzo Shimada, considering he'd gone rogue on the Shimada clan, but you were seriously considering spraying graffiti on Genji's inorganic bits when he wasn't looking."

Yes, I know you'd miss out on some dialogue and Genji/Reader platonic relationship stuff. And I like writing fights, loaded dialogue, and silly jokes. This is structural musing, because I'm at like 218k for this fic and I haven't even started the final arc yet. Maybe I should keep such ramblings on tumblr and off the fic. IDK. I just have a hypercritical inner editor that guiltis the fuck out of me. Sometimes it degenerates into neurosis. Like 5 AM "OMFG WHAT AM I WRITING? MY WORD COUNT IS LESS THAN 1K! WTF?! IT'S AWFUL; WHAT AM I EVEN DOING?!" I mean, at that point I either go "buck up and deal babysakes" or go to bed because I'm too crazy to be trusted and I know it.

As always, feedback is appreciated; it keeps the inner editor monster at bay.
Chapter 22

Chapter Notes

You guys are great and get an extra long chapter because of it. :D

OK, also because it wouldn't have broken up really well, so yeah...

We're going to pretend it's only because you're awesome.

I know, I know. I'm not smooth.

See the end of the chapter for more notes

You awoke to Jack getting dressed.

"You can stay if you want," he said, pulling on his coat. "I don't mind."

You glanced at the clock. "I should get ready for work." You rolled over, recalling what had transpired last night. "Might avoid my desk though."

He leaned over, giving you a quick kiss. "We're going to have a meeting about this with Ana."

"Invite Lacroix," you said.

Jack raised a brow. "Oh?"

"He might be a sociopath, but he's a smart one. We talked strategy last night. I happen to agree with him."

"Gérard doesn't normally handle internal matters. But I'll do that." Jack adjusted his collar. "Thanks for the tip."

"Gabriel will probably listen to Lacroix over me." You climbed out of bed and changed, tossing Jack's shirt in the laundry hamper. The puzzle box sat on his dresser next to Daisy. You stared for half a second too long. When you looked up, Jack was grinning at you.

He exited the room first and then you followed, watching Lacroix's door with some consternation. You split up outside the officers' quarters, you heading back to your room, Jack to his office.

Jesse was waiting for you outside your door.

"Boss was by looking for you."

You weren't sure how much of your expression slipped, but Jesse narrowed his eyes.

"He's not in there, is he?"

Jesse shook his head. "Knocked on my door was all."
You opened up your room and looked around. Nothing was out of place, and you grabbed clean clothes.

"I'm hitting up Fort Wingate, in New Mexico. You wanna ride along?"

"What kind of mission?"

"The personal kind," he said slyly. "Gonna visit some old friends."

You put two and two together. He could only mean the Deadlock Gang. "Is this field trip going to teach us about world peace and brotherly love?"

"You make those words sound downright vicious," Jesse laughed. "Heard you experienced some of Genji's brother's brotherly love."

"A fucking arrow, Jesse. Who uses that shit?" You shook your head. "And Genji did not want him hurt, let alone dead. Fucking hell."

"Really?" Jesse leaned against your doorway. "Huh."

"I know, right?" You began picking out prosthetic attachments. "We killing someone?"

"Probably a few someones. Ana says you're ready to handle some sniping, if you want to fill that role."

"What kind of numbers are we looking at?"

"A dozen, give or take." Jesse shrugged. "Your call, sugarpie."

"I'd rather be close by, if Genji's not coming."

"Just us. Close quarters it is then." He grinned and tipped his hat at you. "Knew you preferred the personal touch. Appreciate you riding shotgun."

"Yeah, well I have one condition: I get to pick the code names this time."

Fort Wingate was a dusty shithole filled with lead, broken down buildings, and bad history. What was left had been demolished by firefights. Omnis, the Deadlock Gang, and Los Muertos had all left their mark, and you were kind of impressed that anything was left standing.

"This was a missile testing ground," Jesse told you, lighting a cigar. He glanced over at you. "You don't mind if I smoke, do you?"

"I'm starting the habit," you muttered.

"Ana doesn't like it," he sighed deeply.

"How's that going?" You checked your carbine. If you were going to fight omnis, you'd need bigger guns, but it handled people just fine.

Jesse shrugged.
You adjusted your tanto and got your canteen off your belt. The meeting was in a decrepit diner up the way, and it wasn't for another few hours, but Jesse wanted to scout the terrain.

"She likes me. I know she likes me, Lucky. But she won't do a thing about it. Says it's abuse of power. She's too old. I'm too vulnerable. Like I'm still a kid or something." He shook his head. "We have tea. We go places. We talk. But that's it."

You blinked. "Seriously?" Because you'd thought there was more going on than that.

"Yeah." Jesse didn't look at you. "We were both pretty fucked up when we came to Blackwatch. We aren't those people any more, are we?"

"I'm probably worse," you said, sipping your water. "But from what I can gather, you're doing a lot better."

"I might have brought you up. You know, as an example." Jesse adjusted his serape.

"Oh boy," you said, without any enthusiasm. "Do I want to know?"

"She just reminded me that I was coerced into Blackwatch as a traumatized teenager. You came in as a willing adult. The dynamic was different. I call bullshit."

You shrugged. "I guess. You're still under contract. I can see why she'd be...concerned."

Jesse nodded curtly. "Fair."

"Not really. It's just a good reason to be careful with you. The power imbalance really complicates shit." You rubbed your neck. "I can see her being too honorable to start anything while you're under compulsory service."

"And I can't ask her to wait." Jesse shook his head.

"You talked about this with her?"

"Some. Maybe not about waiting. I don't know. We don't talk about my contract much. I guess maybe we should." Unsaid was the fact that this was a critical juncture. Captain Amari could commit to a whole lot of waiting. Captain Amari could politely break Jesse's heart. Damn, she never should have let it get this far if she didn't intend to stick around.

Oh look, the pot was calling the kettle black. You exhaled slowly. You didn't intend to leave. You just didn't know if what you were doing was sustainable. Comparing your situations was apples to hand grenades.

"Yeah, you should. And you know either way, I've still got that bottle of Johnny Walker Gold."

"Sucks."

"Does." You offered Jesse your canteen and he took a swig. You studied the dust on the horizon. It was still early in the day, and the area was clear. All you had left to do was wait.

"Boss seemed...off."

"He and Jack are fighting. UN wants to put an observer on Blackwatch. Jack says give'em what they want and they'll go away. Gabriel thinks it's a fifth column and they'll fuck us over. I admit, the guy they chose is shit."
"Ana told me." Jesse handed you back your canteen. "Lot of politics. But that ain't what's got your dander up."

You shrugged. "They were pushing each other pretty hard last night. I got in the middle."

Jesse frowned.

"Didn't tell them how to choose, just to cool down and walk away. Jack did. Gabriel...behaved badly. Things were said. Feelings were hurt. I stayed in Jack's room."

"That is messy, Lucky."

"Yeah, I know." You rubbed your face. The dust stung your eyes. "Nobody was happy about me getting involved, least of all me. But they were minutes away from coming to blows. What was I supposed to do?"

"Let'em," Jesse said, chewing on his cigar. "They fight, they fuck, they make up again. You don't have their accelerated healing. You're not on a level playing field either."

"What's that make me then? Their little bitch on the side. Good enough to fuck, but not someone to take seriously."

Jesse looked back at you, alarmed. "I thought you were playing it safe."

"I know I said I was concerned about the potential for complications and drawbacks further down the timeline..."

"...But that's just a long-ass way of saying you're chicken."

"Exactly. I basically got told by both Captain Amari and Lacroix that I didn't get the luxury of pretending my personal life and my professional life were separate. Not with the shit hitting the fan."

"That's a lot to ask."

"Yeah. Captain Amari swears I have an exit if I need it. But that's not where my head's at. She's right. I'm either in, or I'm a liability. Not her words, but definitely Lacroix's implication."

"Fucking bastard," Jessie muttered.

"Yeah," you agreed. "Doesn't make him wrong." You found yourself craving a cigarette. "That's the worst part. He knows he's right and nothing will wipe the smugness off his face."

"I think that's actually his mustache," Jesse chuckled. "Got movement up there-" He attached his wire. "That's a hard balance."

"Yeah. I've had second through seven hundredth thoughts. Nothing to do now but my best." You turned on your wire. "Rookie, this is Firefox checking in with Enforcer," you said.

"Fuck you, Firefox," Ziv said. "You're not allowed to name shit either. These names make no sense."

"Enforcer, explain the connection."

"Well, we're out here in a bastion of the old West, haunted by ghosts of a crueler, simpler time. And we're all paying homage to the Man with No Name."
"That literally makes no sense either," Ziv said. There was typing in the background. "Oh ben-zona...you nerds."

"Shut up, Rookie. I've seen your hand-painted miniatures. You can't judge us when you play space elves." You grinned at Jesse.

"Fuck you, Firefox."

The diner had shutdown long ago. Its sign dangled sideways from the roof: Redeye's. You followed Jesse behind the building, spotting a ragged little man in a dirty black vest and jeans.

"Now what do you think you're doing with all that Semtex, Mole?" Jesse drawled, pointing his revolver at the demolitionist. "Thought you hated the stuff."

"McCree! Shit! Didn't know you was coming down. Jamie didn't say nothing about that." Mole bore an unfortunate resemblance to a ferret with thick glasses. He had stringy brown hair and several burnt tattoos crossed with scars.

"Just to waste some explosives on blowing up Redeye's? Because the grub was shit, but Cookie ain't torturing eggs no more." Jesse's accent grew thicker. It was an odd phenomenon. "So what's Jamie planning, Mole?"

"Don't know, McCree. Just told me to come out here and rig up Redeye's. I swear I didn't know you was here."

"Course you didn't, Mole. You wouldn't come alone if you'd known."

"Who's the calico queen?" He gestured at you. "That's some armor."

"Ain't your concern, Mole. But I'd be careful about how you talk about her. Firefox over there isn't nearly as nice as me." Jesse's voice was low and Mole winced. "Now, who all is Jamie bringing to the table?"

"Bunch of fresh meat. Zimmer and Callahan are still around. Montgomery is still Jamie's second. Pasquale and Wilson are dead." Mole's eyes kept darting back to you and he licked his lips.

You recognized the names from the dossiers Jesse gave you on the transport. You wouldn't have recruited any of them under Blackwatch protocols. Hell, you'd shoot them all on principle, but this was Jesse's baggage.

"How many?"

"Fifteen, sixteen if Lopez can get out of bed."

"Thanks, Mole," Jesse said, before shooting him in the head.

You blinked. "Is this that kind of mission?"

"Maybe," Jesse said, voice rough. "Mole was always a lying sack of shit. I gave him too many chances before."
"Your show, your rules." You studied the plastic explosive. "That's demolition grade stuff. Not ideal for combat."

"I know. Deadlock ain't what it used to be." Jesse shrugged. "I'll move this. They'll be coming from the west."

You dragged the dead man into the diner and left him out of sight.

When Jesse returned, he had a fresh cigar.

"Want to tell me what that was about?"

"Wasn't personal. Back in the day, me and Mole had no issues." Jesse shrugged. "But he liked hurting working girls. Seeing him look at you reminded me of that. I guess it didn't bother me when I was younger. Bothers me now."

You adjusted your gloves. It was hot, but it was a dry heat and you'd take sun baked desert over snow any day.

The comm crackled to life. "Got lots of vehicles moving toward your location, Firefox." Ziv sounded bored. "Also the commander came round. He's looking for you. Didn't seem too happy that you'd run off with Enforcer."

"Don't sass him right now, Rookie. Not if you want to live."

"I got that. He didn't have his crazy eyes on, but it was a near thing. And those fists? Damn, Firefox, is he proportional all over?"

"Shut up," you scowled.

"Yes," Jesse smirked at you. "Run a few ops with us, and you'll know what everyone's packing in the locker room."

"Really?"

You sighed. "Don't encourage him, Enforcer."

"You're a lucky one, Firefox." You could hear Ziv's smirk.

"Roof should hold," Jesse said. "I'm going to parley first. It'll go to shit, but try to leave Jamie or Montgomery alive. Jamie's probably the better choice. Monty's fucking insane."

You climbed the rough concrete wall for a vantage point on the roof. The building was solid, and short of actual explosives, it would hold. The carbine was a stable gun, and as the motorbikes cut lines in the sand, you counted a dozen, some with multiple riders. You laid on your stomach, bracing your carbine against the edge of the roof.

Jesse stood in front of the diner, revolver in hand.

A tall platinum blonde woman in leather got off her bike. You couldn't gauge her age. She had been pretty once, but too much sun and fire and left her with leathery skin and nasty scars.

"If it isn't prettyboy McCree," she said, voice surprisingly rich. "You grew up and filled out. Not too bad."

"You haven't aged a day, Jamie." Jesse's voice was relaxed and he exuded easy charm.
"Good to see you."

"Where's Mole?"

"That peckerwood's still alive? Shit. I had no idea."

Jamie narrowed her eyes at him. "You're an idiot to come back here."

"Can't I just say that I missed your smile, ladybird?"

Jamie laughed harshly. "You were always full of shit. And you're about to come down with an acute case of lead poisoning."

"I just came to visit. Ask some questions. Reminisce."

"This ought to be good. Spare us the bullshit. Just get to the point, pretty boy."

Jesse gave a good-natured sigh. "The Shimada connection. Who and where?"

Jamie stared at him for a moment then started laughing. The people around her did not. They wore leather and a mix of western and biker accessories. Their guns were solid models, nothing cutting edge, but not cheap. You had a grenades, and when things got hot Jesse was going to open with a flashbang, then take cover in the diner.

"Boy, you're gone a few years and you think you can just mosey in here and act all high and mighty. It's a shame to mess up that pretty face, but I can't let this slide, McCree."

She lifted up a shotgun and Jesse laughed.

Even behind your eyelids, the world went white.

You were prepared for Jesse's move, and you followed up with your own grenades, concentrating them around the bikes.

When the smoke cleared, there were still shooters, but they had no cover, and you began picking them off. It was almost relaxing, shooting through the smoke and watching your direct efforts take effect. Maybe longer range sniping would be good role for you.

Click. The hammer of a revolver cocked back and you turned to find yourself staring down the barrel of gun, the blackness a preview of eternity. The man wielding it smiled grimly. He pressed it into your cheek, tracing the hot metal over your forehead and down your other cheek, then back up again between your eyes. The heat stung your skin. Time grinded to a halt as the metal dug into your head. And you wondered if this was how it ended. Bullet to the head. Your skull caved. Your brains scattered. Jesse would probably be able to take this guy, and when he delivered your body back to Gabriel and Jack, what then? You and Gabriel had parted badly; was this how he got to remember you?

And who would avenge your friends? Who would look after your people? You had so much left to do, damnit.

"Drop it, sweetheart." You didn't have time for an existential reverie. Had to ensure your continued existence first. The shooter was big, Deadlock Tattoos on one arm and a naked lady with a python on the other. You recognized him from the dossiers: Montgomery then.

You set your gun down. How had he gotten up here so quickly and quietly?
"Don't know why you need armor to block your face. Can't be that ugly if you're running with McCree. At least you have a nice ass."

Montgomery dragged you up, one arm around your neck, the other holding the gun to your head. The rest of the Deadlock minions were dropping like flies. You didn't have eyes on Jamie or Jesse.

"McCree. I got your bitch up here. You better come on out, unless you want me to give her another hole for you to fuck."

Eww.

"Firefox, respond," Jesse said tightly.

"Ben-zona, Luc-Firefox, you OK?" Ziv shouted.

The grip on your neck wasn't hard, and Montgomery had relaxed ever so slightly while taunting Jesse. You clutched the forearm on your neck with your right hand. Then you jammed your left hand into his gun hand, blades tearing through his wrist. He screamed as you ducked low, retracted your blades, and threw him over your shoulder.

He hit the ground hard, which wouldn't have been a problem for a guy that size, except you'd tossed him from the roof.

"Fucker," you said, picked your gun back up, and scanned the ground for him. He was on his back, and you shot him in a few choice places before putting one through his throat.

"You OK, Firefox?" Jesse's voice was rough.

"You had some gross friends," you told him.

"Monty and I were never friends," he said. "Sorry, thought he'd come in the back after me."

"No harm, no foul." On something more than a whim, you picked up Montgomery's gun and tucked it in your belt: the one that almost got you. You'd have time to muse about that later.

"It's clear. Got Jamie down here."

You studied the terrain. There were a couple more down, but still moving. This was...sloppier than you'd expected from Jesse. You finished them off and climbed back down.

Jesse leaned against the counter. Jamie sat in a booth, her kneecaps both shattered. She hyperventilated, refusing to look up.

"Answer my questions, Jamie. It doesn't have to be like this."

"Fuck you, McCree. You're going to kill me anyway. Might as well give you nothing."

Jesse was paler than usual, though he managed a carefree grin. You thought that maybe Jamie had been his friend once, or more.

"I can take over. You're too easy on women," you said, and Jamie looked up, her eyes widening as she saw the gun on your belt.

"Jesse doesn't do torture. I don't have that restraint." You drew your knife. "What's she going to hate losing more, Jesse? She probably cares about her looks, so should I take her lips or her nose?"

He inhaled sharply. "Darling-"

"She can still talk if I cut off her nose. The lips make them harder to understand but-"

"Fuck, don't let that bitch near me, McCree. Give me a good clean death. I would've done that much for you."

"Eyes. She has pretty eyes, Jesse. I see why you liked her. I'll leave her one, so she can see all the damage I've done. And then, if I'm feeling merciful, I'll take the other one, so she doesn't have to look at what's left of her face no more."

"It's through the fucking On Sing in San Francisco. They called truce with the Shimada. I don't know why. Fuck, McCree. Deadlock is just transporting the goods. We don't have the might to fight them off."

You glanced at Jesse. "Is that enough?"

He nodded.

"Want me to do it?" Your voice was gentle.

He rested his hand on his gun, staring hard at Jamie.

"You can have a brotherly-love pass." You didn't like the idea of leaving her alive, but Jesse was obviously conflicted.

He shook his head and stepped out. "No."

You waited a few minutes for him to come back and tell you he changed his mind. But when he didn't, you finished the job.

---

Jesse smoked another cigar on the transport back. He watched you with hooded eyes and you wondered if you'd made a mistake.

"I wouldn't really have tortured her," you said, after the silence became too pointed. "Sorry."

"No. Ain't that." Jesse waved his hand and leaned backward. "I just...didn't think it'd bother me that much to kill her. She wasn't a nice person, Lucky. She was a monster. You read the dossier. You know."

"You were close once. It was personal. That changes things." You wondered about Hanzo and Genji and whatever the hell went wrong. The thought bothered you. You didn't think Jack and Gabriel would ever let it get that far, but... Well, Genji didn't see it coming. Jamie didn't see it coming. You couldn't afford that mistake.

"Thanks for...taking care of things. And for offering to spare her." Jesse clapped you on "It means a lot."

"I wouldn't do it for Genji and not you," you said.

"It's different."

"Not to me." You understood the differences in targets, but what mattered was your people.

"You know I got your back with Bái Shé, right?"

"Not why I did it. But I appreciate it." You winced as Jesse gave you a side hug.

"Why'd you pick up that revolver?" Jesse asked.

"When Montgomery ambushed me, I thought that might be it. He dragged it across my face, really let me wonder." You traced the path the revolver took across your skin with one finger. "I've had closer calls, but...this one really had me going."

Jesse looked like you'd slapped him. "I'm sorry, Lucky. I should've been paying closer attention."

"Not just you. How'd I miss a giant homicidal maniac on the roof with me?" You paused. "Though I picked up that your head wasn't on straight for this one a little too late."

"I didn't think...yeah." Jesse rubbed his face. "Sorry."

"It happens." You took the gun off your belt and rolled it over in your hands. It was a big honking revolver, a sidearm you'd take to hunt bears, or rhinoceros, or medium-sized dinosaurs. "I don't know if it's a trophy or a grim reminder. Probably just a sign I'm going to have more nightmares."

Jesse just passed you his cigar and you took a puff.

"Drinks when we get back?"

"All the drinks," you agreed.
You opened the door and raised a brow. Ziv stood there with a bottle of whiskey, and Jesse had one too.

"No food?"

"Fuck you," Ziv said, shoving the bottle into your hands. "You're the one who can cook."

"You can cook too, Ziv. Stop pretending."

"What about McCree?"

"OK, we can all cook, we're just lazy motherfuckers," you said.

Jesse shrugged. "My room?"

"Yeah, he has a couch," Ziv said. "Your room is just sad."

"Why did you invite him, again?" You asked Jesse.

Jesse grinned wryly at you. "Three's a crowd." You understood then. Jesse was covering both your bases. No reason to further exacerbate all your relationship tensions. "Post-mission celebration. Told him he had to bring booze. Figured if we get wasted, we wouldn't even notice." The three of you went next door to Jesse's quarters. He tossed his hat on his bed and Ziv stared in disgust at the dirty glasses on the table. He took them to the bathroom and washed them, muttering about "filthy pig-headed swine."

You dropped onto Jesse's couch. Ziv came back and handed you a glass. You poured yourself a lot of whiskey and sipped. The tension began to drop out of your shoulders and you laid your head back and stared at the ceiling.

It wasn't till you'd each had a refill that conversation started up.

"So, you almost got another hole in the head," Ziv said, pouring himself more.

"Yeah. Hope you left that out of the report." You glanced at Jesse.

"Do you see two freaked out commanders down here trying to roll you in bubblewrap, sugarpie?"

"They're working. Who knows." You waved it off.

"Trouble in paradise?"

"It was never paradise, Ziv. Just surreal and confusing as fuck." You nursed your drink, trying not to think dark thoughts. "Jack and Gabriel are fighting and I had to step in and it wasn't pretty. There were hurt feelings all around."

"Well, you need to be gentle with them. You're a fucking psychopath," Ziv said. "Can't expect everyone to live up to your insane standards."

Jesse snorted at that. "What about you? How'd that date with Riggs go?"

You blinked at Jesse.

"He's kind of fanboy-ish." Ziv wrinkled his nose at you. "If he wasn't so obviously gay, I'd think he was in love with you, Lucky."
"Really, Jesse?"

Jesse just laughed and put his feet up. "I think everybody but you picked up on the fact that he exclusively prefers men."

You sighed. "Yeah, well I seem to like guys that like other guys." You paused. "Don't worry Ziv. You're safe. I don't like you at all."

"Fuck you too." He topped off your glass.

You took another gulp and paused dramatically. "Nope, getting drunk and I still don't like you."

Jesse laughed. "Yeah, we're all having issues of the heart."

"I'm just horny," Ziv said defensively.

You choked on your drink. "I don't need to know that."

"Well some of us aren't sleeping with two guys who have giant dicks and super stamina."

You face-palmed. "I haven't had sex since I got back from Indiana, so shut up."

"Still more recent than me," Ziv scowled.

"Yeah, well maybe if your personality didn't suck, people could stand being in the same room as you."

"Fuck you, Lucky. And still not desperate enough to make that an offer."

Jesse rolled his eyes. "We're all frustrated and mopey, Mihret. You're not the only one pining."

"I'm not pining, I'm frustrated." Ziv paused. "Wait, you mean you and Captain Amari aren't-?"

Jesse sighed. "No."

"Fuck! Where's your game, McCree?"

"Shut up, Ziv," you said.

"But they have tea parties and he took her to the ball. And they stare at each other longingly with cow eyes when they think no one's looking." Ziv reclined beside you. "How the hell are you not together?"

"Let up," you said.

"It's fine," Jesse said. "Not like we don't know whom he's infatuated with."

Ziv sat up straight. "You don't know shit, dime-store cowboy!"

"Ziv, shut up." You took the whiskey out of his hand and poured yourself more. "You don't want to play chicken with Jesse. I might let you keep some token dignity, but Jesse will crush you."
"I am not infatuated with anyone!" He shouted, eyes squeezed shut.

"Saying louder ain't gonna make it more true, Mihret." Jesse chuckled.

"Ben-zona, you two are obnoxious. Fine. Who?"

"Lacroix," you and Jesse said in unison.

"Fuuuuuuuck. How did you know?" Ziv wailed and reached for the whiskey. You poured him a little, but held onto the bottle. "Does he know?"

Definitely, but honesty wouldn't shut Ziv up. "It's Lacroix. He's too cool to show his hand."

Jesse snorted, because he could read your face.

"Fuuuuuuuuuuuuuuucckk," Ziv rolled onto the floor. "How did you figure it out?"

"You don't give him half the sass you give everyone else," you said.

"I've seen you check out his ass on three separate occasions," Jesse said.

"I was window-shopping. I check out your ass all the time; doesn't mean I want to bone you!" You supplied.

Jesse choked on his drink. "Goddamnit, Mihret."

"Genji's is better!"

"OK, you're cut off," you said laughing. "Keep it down, unless you want all of Blackwatch to know."

"He's just so debonair. And in Shanghai he fucking took a bullet for me. Who does that?"

"...I did," you said sourly. "And I continually regret it."

"Fuck you, that was different."

"How?" You demanded.

"He's older, sexy, and fucking married to a prima ballerina!" Ziv lay on Jesse's floor, face up. "He's stylish, suave, and even his goddamn name... It's so...forbidden."

"He's weirding me out," Jesse said.

"Yeah, me too." You poured yourself more whiskey, because even though the world was spinning, it wasn't drowning Ziv out.

There was a knock at the door.

"Oh, now you've done it. Genji's coming over to complain. Or it could be Vo. She's a fucking bear if you woke her up," Jesse said, getting up to answer the door.

You contemplated putting a pillow over Ziv's face, just enough to quiet him down, not kill him. Just suffocate him a little. To stop the noise.

"Why is this bottle empty?" You wondered aloud.
"Probably because you drank it all, agent."

Oh, you knew that voice. You glanced up, one eye twitching.

Gabriel stood in the doorway, arms crossed. Jesse looked between the two of you, worry evident on his face. Ziv kept muttering about Lacroix, and you were happy that he was in his own little world right now.

"You were not invited," you said, wobbling to your feet to shut the door in his face.

Ziv chose that moment to start singing Sergeant Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band. He had a nice voice, but he was drunkenly off-key.

You pushed the door, but Gabriel caught it with ease.

Jesse swore. "It's been a long day, sir. She had a close call- but not too close and we're just....celebrating."

"No, we're irritated and we're drinking because of it," you said. "Go away."

Gabriel smirked at you. "Going to make me?"

"I'm off-duty and don't have to put up with you. Be gone." You pushed the door, but it didn't budge.

"You'll break Jesse's door before you move me," Gabriel said.

"Fine. I'll leave. You can ruin Ziv's evening."

You tried to push by him, but he filled the doorway, not letting you pass.

"Move, you stupid intransigent walrus!" You glared up at him.

Jesse sighed. "You want me to call someone?"

Gabriel gave him an dark look.

"Don't you get grumpy with Jesse. You're the one blocking doorways." You pushed him again, but he was all hard muscle and sustained immobility. "No, I just want him to move. Ziv's singing is awful."

"Are you hungry? I made arroz con pollo." Gabriel placed a hand on your head. You pushed it off. "No, I don't want your food. Go away. You're causing a scene."

"I think this was a scene before I arrived."

"Don't care. I am mad at you." You enunciated very carefully. "You are an asshole."

"I know. I'm sorry." His fingers brushed your cheek. "You were right."

"Not fooled. I'm drunk. This doesn't count." You glared up at him. "You're an underhanded asshole."

He nodded. "Yeah. And?"

"Have you sorted it out with Jack yet?" You crossed your arms. Because you were sobering up and if he wanted to do this here in front of witnesses, you'd do it here in front of witnesses.

"Maybe. Why don't you go ask him?"

"I can make it there. Don't think I can't!"

"You are so drunk," he laughed.

"I can totally make it there!"

"He's in my room. We were going to talk. I came to get you."

You glared at him.

"What?" Gabriel smirked at you.

"I don't know if I believe you."

"There's only one way to find out. But you have to be quieter."

You glanced at Jesse. He'd call Captain Amari if you asked. But you didn't think Gabriel would be so low as to lie about Jack being in his room, would he?

"Fine." You looked down at the floor. Ziv had passed out. "Turn him on his side."

"I got it," Jesse said, shaking his head. "You do what you got to do."

"You sure?"

"Yeah," Jesse grinned at you wryly. "He's stopped talking and singing. It's all good."

"There are extra blankets in my room."

"He'll be fine," Jesse laughed. "Go sort your shit out."

You nearly stumbled going out the door, but Gabriel's hand rested on your shoulder, steadying you. You took a deep breath, and forced yourself to walk in a straight line at a moderate pace. Fortunately, it was late and the halls were empty. You hoped no one had overhead the scene Gabriel made.

Gabriel got the door for you, still wearing that shit-eating grin that made you want to kiss him, punch him, then maybe kiss him again. Jack was on the couch in black fatigues, eating a bowl of rice and chicken.

"See? He's here." Gabriel shut the door behind him. "I told you."

You waved at Jack. "Hi."

Jack raised a brow. "Are you all right?"

"She's trashed," Gabriel said, hand on your lower back, guiding you to the couch.

"No, just drunk. I can walk in straight lines, so not quite trashed." You plunked down on the couch beside Jack. "He apologized, but I'm drunk, so it doesn't count." You kissed Jack's cheek. "And he crashed our party."

"Mihret was passed out on the floor already anyway. Jesse looked ready for bed." Gabriel settled on the couch beside you and you glared at him over your shoulder.

"I'm still mad at you."

"I noticed."

"Hey," Jack said, turning your head toward him. "Want a bite?" He held up his spoon.

"No."

"You eat on your mission?"

"No."

"Aren't you hungry?"

"Maybe."

"Are you trying to spite Gabe?" He smiled at you, but he was looking at the man behind you.

"Maybe," you said, because he'd called you on it.

Jack leaned in and kissed you. "Humor me, baby."

You rolled your eyes and opened your mouth. Jack put a spoonful of tender chicken and seasoned rice in. You contemplated biting the spoon, but realized they were just laughing at you and you might as well eat.

"You can have your own bowl," Gabriel said.

You just snatched Jack's, because they were both dickheads and you didn't care. Jack stared at you incredulously as you held his bowl out of his reach.

"Stolen food always tastes better," you said.

Jack huffed, but didn't try to take it back.

Gabriel got up and got Jack another bowl. You were glad they'd made up, but if they were teaming up against you, you would destroy them.

OK, you were drunk, a little ridiculous, and very petty. Gabriel's food was delicious. But you were still mad at him, because he was an asshole. You ignored Gabriel as you ate.

"Steal a lot of food?" Jack asked.

"Smugglers have to eat," you said, not looking up. "Didn't get an expense account. It was usually fruit, because it's just sitting there, you know? Not a big deal. Tried not to fuck with street vendors either. They're poor too. You can usually barter with them. But sometimes when you break into some rich asshole's house and they have a fridge full of cheese, well, what else are you going to do?"

"I can't say I've had that experience," Jack said, hesitantly.

"I mean, not going to drink all their booze because you don't want to get caught on site. You take that with you along with other non-perishables. But cheese and ice cream? How often do you see that on the street? You have to eat that right away.”

"I have never seen you this drunk before," Jack said. "I think it was night we made chili; that's drunkest I've seen you, and you just went to sleep."

"Sorry," you muttered, and hunched over your food. It might have once been Jack's, but it was yours now.

He reached out. "You OK?"

"Great." You finished the bowl and set it on the coffee table, refusing to look at Gabriel. He was on the couch, and you were being childish, but that was your privilege.

"Did running off with McCree make you less upset?" Jack asked.

"Sorta." You shrugged. "He's a good friend."

Jack put his bowl aside. "That came out wrong. It's not like we could sit and talk this out earlier." He tilted your chin up. "We can talk about this tomorrow if you need to rest. I'm taking the day off. So's Gabe. Your schedule can be cleared too, if you want."

"I'm awake. Sobering up too." You eyed the emitter in the background; you hadn't noticed that there when you came in. "I'm not hurt. Which one of you is hurt?" You glanced between them.

"We're both a little sore," Gabriel said.

"We hit the mats, sorted ourselves out before we sat down with Ana and Gérard," Jack said.

Fuck! You'd missed that? Damnit. You'd never seen them go at it before. But maybe it was for the better. They probably weren't holding back and you weren't sure how much you'd like seeing them strike each other in anger. Except they knew they were working it out, so that minimized the guilt, right?

"I looked for you, thought you might like to sit in, to moderate. Had to get Ana instead," Gabriel said casually.

"That wouldn't be minding my own business, would it?"

"We are your business," Gabriel said. "I think you know that by now, despite what I said last night." His voice was low and his words pricked at your chest.

You rubbed your face. You were sobering up now. You got up and got yourself a glass of water, conscious of both men watching you. You drained it and got another, because while it was a lame stalling tactic, you needed your brain to sharpen up.

"How'd the meeting go?" You asked, still at the sink.

"I'm glad you suggested we invite Gérard. He had a great deal of invaluable insight," Jack said. "He asked where you were."

"He probably already knew. He just did that to needle you," you said and splashed water on your face.

"He did actually seem to want you there, not just to pick at Gabe," Jack said, not denying your point.

You took your glass of water back to the couch. Then you stalked off to the bathroom to wash your face again and take care of business. Because you couldn't have these conversations drunk.

When you got back to the couch, Jack had finished his second bowl of food and Gabriel wore a faintly amused grin. The bastard. You sat down between them.

"All right, I'm sober enough for it to count." You turned back to Gabriel. "You were an asshole last night. You were out of line. When have I used sex as a weapon against either of you? And why the hell would you think I was interested in Lacroix of all people? Because anyone with half a brain can tell that I'm still holding a grudge against him from back before Shit Spiders even started."

"You're not entirely sober," Gabriel said. "That was too much emotional honesty."

"Fuck you. You owe me a real apology."

Jack laughed behind you, not even trying to hide it.

"All right. If you're certain." Gabriel held your hands in his, possibly so you couldn't punch him. "I know I was a bastard last night. I'm sorry. You've never given me a reason to doubt you. I do know better. I behaved very badly; I got too...upset and let it go too long, like Chang. It won't happen again." He rubbed your knuckles. "That's something to talk about tomorrow." He kissed your hands. "Can you forgive me, corazon?"

Gabriel had hard features: heavy brow, prominent nose, striking scars. It wasn't a harmless or friendly face. But when he looked at you like that, all tenderness and regret, you never doubted his sincerity.

"Good apology." You exhaled slowly. "Bet you've had lots of practice, because you're a jerk."

"Yes. I'm can be a bastard. But the trick is meaning it," he said, pulling you into his lap.

"That is a good trick," you said, poking his side. He flinched. "Oh, sorry." You looked at Jack.

"I hit him extra hard for you," Jack said brightly. "Well, for me too, but some of those were for you."

"Cute," you said. "But I can hit him myself."

"Not as hard as I can," Jack said. "And he hit me back, so we're both in pain. Can you come sit in my lap too?"

Gabriel ignored him, and drew you against his chest. You flicked your tongue against his lips and he opened for you, letting you press teasing kisses against his mouth.

"Calling in tomorrow?" Gabriel asked.

"Yeah," you said, heartbeat quickening. "I think I am." You turned to Jack and he had already closed the distance between you. You leaned over, balancing yourself on his thigh and kissed him too, his mouth more insistent than Gabriel's.
"Wish you hadn't run off," Jack murmured. "I think you would have liked seeing us on the mats."

"Probably," you said.

"We're going to talk about that tomorrow too," Jack said, and kissed Gabriel. You weren't sure how you felt about that, but apparently there was going to be all sorts of talking tomorrow; you'd worry about it then.

"Bed," Gabriel rasped when he came up for air. You got off his lap and perched on the arm of the couch while Jack yanked Gabriel's shirt off.

The bruises were worse than you expected. Green and purple, they were still visible against Gabriel's dark skin. You caught sight of a fist-sized blue-black mark on Jack's arm.

"Idiots," you sighed.

"Can kiss it better," Jack said, his mouth trailing down Gabriel's abdomen.

"Bed, Jack," Gabriel grunted. "Got your prize from the fight. Didn't forget. Just haven't had a chance to give it to you."

You didn't trust the delight on Jack's face. He climbed off Gabriel. "You'll like this." He guided you toward the bed. He pulled off your shirt and bra before dropping you onto the mattress. Jack reached into the nightstand and retrieved a set of leather cuffs with a foot of chain between them. "This OK?"

"Yeah," you breathed, swallowing roughly. "You wearing them?"

"I can," Jack said, tracing circles on your stomach. "I'd rather tie you up first."

"If this is my prize..."

"It isn't," Gabriel said. "But I think you'll have fun."

"OK," you said.

Jack kissed you hungrily, securing one wrist, winding the chain through Gabriel's headboard, then cuffing the other wrist. There was more give than you expected.

"Shouldn't hurt your arms this time," Jack said, kissing your shoulder.

"Thank you," you said, now on your back, only half-naked in Gabriel's bed.

"Tsk, weren't you drunk earlier?" Jack asked, stroking your hair. "If that's the case, we'd be taking advantage of you. Don't you think we should wait, Gabe? Just to be safe?"

"Wait, what?" You blinked.

"You're right Jack, drunk agents can't give consent. We don't want risk any misunderstandings," Gabriel grinned wickedly. "We're not those kind of guys."

"Hey, wait a minute!" Outrage and arousal sped up your pulse.

"That's what we're doing," Jack laughed.
"That's not what I meant!"

Jack hungrily kissed Gabriel before dropping to his knees. He pulled his shirt off and grinned over his shoulder at you, still a patchwork of bruises. "It's OK, baby. You can watch. You missed out last time, but we'll be sure to put on a good show."

"You can't be serious!"

"As an illness," Jack said.

"You still have to cool down from your party," Gabriel said.

"I unforgive you!" You scowled at Gabriel.

"See, still under the influence," Jack said, with mock regret. "Now we definitely can't do anything with you."

"Jack, I hate you s-"

"Mmm, told you she'd be loud." Jack shook his head. "This is for your own good, baby." He got up and went back to the nightstand. "Can you be quiet or are we going to have to do something about it?"

"I'm going to do terrible things to you," you swore.

Jack just beamed at you. Gabriel chuckled.

"You do remember your safe words right?"

"I'm going green the fuck out of you," you told him.

"Whatever that means, I look forward to you trying," Jack said. "Picked this up for you a little while ago." He held a black ball gag and all your inner muscles clenched. "I seem to remember someone gagging me. I remember thinking 'I should show her how it's done, and then I'll give her something to scream about.'"

You gulped audibly.

"Your cuffs are long enough to let you tap, if you need to," Jack said. "Open up."

You took a few sharp breaths, before parting your lips, and Jack pressed the ball into your mouth. It was big, and you had to wiggle your jaw and concentrate on not drooling. Jack secured the strap around your head. You arched as he pressed a kiss to the ball.

Your nipples were hard, but Jack just stroked your sides.

"And now you can't even beg," Jack said with mock sadness. "Guess you'll just have to lie there and watch."

You were going to murder him.

Gabriel knelt beside the bed, his eyes on your face. "Relax your jaw. It's fine if you drool."

"Hot" is the word," Jack said.

Gabriel kissed your cheek. "Be a good girl, and enjoy the show."
Jack took a pillow and laid it beside you. He sat beside the pillow, his back to you.

Gabriel rose and went to the other side of the bed, stopping in front of Jack. Jack unzipped Gabriel's pants and cupped his firm ass, pressing kisses down his abdomen all the way to the tip of his erect cock.

Gabriel stroked Jack's hair. "He always blushes so prettily before swallowing me down."

You groaned against the gag.

"You'll be able to do this too, you just need practice," Jack said. He dropped backward, his head on the pillow next to your side. "Come on, Gabe. Let her see you throat-fuck me. She'll wish she had a mouthful of you, instead of that hard rubber."

Gabriel growled and straddled Jack's chest. Jack licked the tip, his eyes locked on Gabriel's. He swirled his tongue around the head, and then sucked him down in one smooth motion. Gabriel started slow, but you could see him going in to the hilt, his shaft already slick with Jack's saliva.

You squirmed against the your bonds, nipples painfully hard, heat building between your thighs. Your pants chafed against you and the gag muffled your frustrated whines.

"That's it, mi cielito. Swallow it all down. You're such a greedy cock slut," Gabriel purred. Jack gripped his thighs, and cheeks flushed bright red. You weren't sure how much breathing he was doing, but he kept taking Gabriel enthusiastically. "Look at him go, baby. Fuck, just like that Jack." Gabriel thrust his hips forward, back arched. He grinned at you. "Oh, that face she's making, Jack, so upset. Pobrecito. No, baby, you just have to wait."

You tried to swallow, but the saliva was starting to dribble out. You huffed in frustration.

"Remember how you taunted me while you were sucking off Jack? This is just the beginning of payback," Gabriel said, voice getting raspier, is fingers gripping Jack's hair. "Should I fuck him next? Make you watch while I pound him next to you? You love watching me give it to him."

You gave a muffled protest and more drool collected around the gag.

Gabriel kept thrusting into Jack's throat, thighs tense, eyes closed, lips parted. His abdominals rippled and you swore violently into the gag. Every stroke made you clench. Jack took it like a pro, his sighs drowned out by the slick vulgar sound of Gabriel's cock slipping in and out of his mouth.

"Look at you writhing around already, and we haven't even touched you."

You whined in frustration, arching against the bed, rattling the cuffs.

"Was that a tap?" Gabriel asked, pausing mid-thrust.

You shook your head.

"Then settle down, or I'll give you a reason to squirm." His voice was nothing but bass edged with hunger; it made you shiver. You hated him a little then, all that heat and hard muscle inches away, and you couldn't do anything except lie there.

Gabriel was moaning now, and Jack winked at you, his hands kneading Gabriel's ass. You "That's it Jackie; it's like you could do this all night long. Gonna have to fuck you soon."

Angrily, you closed your eyes and resolved to ignore them. They were sexy, and normally you would have loved to just watch; there was something hypnotic about how well Jack could swallow Gabriel's cock. You squeezed your thighs together, unable to get enough stimulation. Jack always made a show of it, never failing to remind you that you needed practice, and how happy he would be to "help" you. Fucking competitive asshole. Yeah, you liked watching them, but if they were going to tie you up and leave you like this, you could damn well sulk.

"Are we boring you, chica?"

The bastard was trying to drive you insane. You opened one eye, giving him as dirty of a look as you could with a gag in your mouth.

He only laughed at you, satisfied that you were paying attention. "You're just making it harder on yourself, baby. The more you misbehave, the more I'm going to punish you." There was an edge in his voice, and the look he gave you fell on the edge of lewd and vicious.

You bit down on the gag, breathing harder. Because he'd been like this on Christmas Eve in Indiana and you believed every word of it.

Gabriel pulled out of Jack's mouth, giving the younger man a breather. Jack turned his head and grinned at you.

"Someone feeling neglected?" He asked, voice rough.

You nodded.

"Such a needy little slut," Jack said lazily. He crawled up beside you, lying on his side.

Gabriel moved off to the side and you couldn't see what he was doing now.

"Too bad you can't tell us what you want. Guess you're just going to have wait a little bit longer." Jack kissed your throat and you arched, heels digging into the mattress. He laughed softly and his fingers ghosted over your stomach, completely ignoring your breasts. "Are you cold?"

You shook your head.

"Hot?" Jack teased, his hand going down to the fly of your pants.

You nodded once.

"I do like your voice. I like the sounds you make. But this is precisely what you need. You sass me far too much." Jack's fingers dipped under the waistband and you tensed as he stroked your hips. "Bet it's driving you crazy that you can't get the last word. Or any really." He smirked at you.

You bit the gag, trying not to let your irritation show on your face.

"Oh, it is. That's adorable." You started plotting then, because you understood now that they'd planned this. You weren't sure how long this had been in the works, but they'd talked about this. They'd coordinated it. And you were going to get them back.

"Someone's thinking evil thoughts," Jack said. "You just don't know how to be good, do you?"

Gabriel returned and he nodded at Jack.

"If you'd been better behaved, we'd be giving you some relief right now," Jack drawled. "You brought this on yourself, baby." He kept stroking your sides, looking unbearably smug.

You were going to get him while he was working. Preferably on the phone when he'd have to work extra hard to control his noises. You were going to bombard him with dirty messages and photos while he was giving speeches to recruits. You were going to work him up and then leave on a week-long mission across the world.

"Raise your hips," Gabriel said sharply.

You obeyed and he slid your pants off, gritting his teeth when he discovered you weren't wearing any underwear. One petty point for you.

"You were just going around with those boys like that?" He growled.

You weren't sure if you could properly convey a "seriously?" face with the gag in, but you were willing to try. Jack sat up, groaning when the older man bit his shoulder. Jack shot you a sharp look, and you got the message that you shouldn't push. Because Gabriel wasn't gentle or playful right now.

Naked and wet, you forced yourself to look away. You didn't have nearly enough adrenaline in your system right now to take Gabriel like before. He'd thrown you down, torn you apart, and made you beg for it. The memory still made you hot.

"You're soaking wet." Jack parted your thighs, and you opened wide for him, whimpering as he slid a finger across your slit. "You like being teased." He kept stroking you and you shivered.

"She likes being a pain in the ass," Gabriel said. "Keep your legs spread."

Jack slid a finger in and your eyes fluttered shut. He chuckled. "Is this what you want, baby?" You bucked your hips and Jack pulled away, shaking his head. "You're going to hold still or we'll leave you like that."

You closed your eyes and forced yourself flat against the bed.

"That's it," Jack murmured. He stuck to petting, no penetration, no friction on your clit. It was maddeningly light and you wanted more, damnit. "Relax." He pushed your knees up, and you flinched as something cold pressed against your anus. "Go slow, Gabe. She hasn't done this for awhile."

"I haven't forgotten." You stiffened as Gabriel slid a slick finger into your asshole.

"Look at her pussy twitch. So needy. Poor girl can't help herself," Jack said, his voice breathy.

"She's going to have to learn," Gabriel said brusquely and added another finger.

You whined around your gag as he worked the lube inside. His fingers were thick and hot inside you. Jack dangled a black plug in front of you and your breathing sped up. It was certainly bigger than the last one you'd taken.
"Relax," Gabriel said, and spread his fingers, widening your passage.

Your head dropped back and you clenched your teeth, trying not to move. You could normally focus your breathing, but the gag made it difficult.

"Look at you being so good now. You just needed another hole filled," Jack purred in your ear. "I know it's not the one you wanted, but you're going to have to earn that." He handed Gabriel the plug, and you groaned as Gabriel slowly pushed it inside you.

It was more than before and it took several shuddering breaths before you could relax your ring of muscle and take it. Your limbs ached from repeatedly tensing; and your left leg had started to cramp. Your eyes watered from the strain. You sank back in the pillows, staring at the ceiling.

"You OK?" Jack asked, hand resting on your cheek.

You looked down at your leg.

"You want the gag out?"

You nodded again.

Jack unfastened the strap and carefully removed it. You swallowed and wiggled your jaw, sore from the amount of biting you'd done. Jack wiped your face off. You panted softly, tongue feeling swollen in your mouth.

"Looks like it was a little big for you. Always seemed like you had a bigger mouth." Jack kissed your forehead.

Gabriel extended your legs, rubbing the knot of muscles.

You sighed as the pain dissipated. The throbbing in your stretched hole became harder to ignore, and you trembled, trying not to move.

"Better?" Gabriel asked, tone softer.

"Yes, thank you." You closed your eyes again, putting all your attention into breathing.

Jack chuckled. "Adjusting?"

"Yes."

He balanced above you on all fours, forehead against yours. "I'll leave the gag out if you can be good. No goading us right now."

"OK," you said, meeting Jack's eyes. There was a tightness in his grin, and you realized they hadn't had their makeup sex yet. No wonder they were so worked up. "You didn't have to wait for me." You nuzzled his arm.

"We did," he said. "Weren't exactly happy about it. But we really did." He kissed you then, and you sighed against him. "There'll be more after this. Just wait your turn."

He kissed you hungrily with more nips and teeth than lips and tongue. He squeezed your breasts and you ground against him.
"Don't do that if you want to walk tomorrow," Jack groaned. "Let me and Gabriel work it out on each other. We'll be too rough with you right now."

"At least let me pound some of the insolence out of him," Gabriel said, and you watched as Jack's eyes widened before he buried his face in your neck. "Have to get him ready too. Going to fuck him hard. Then it'll be your turn, baby."

"I love how he fills me. You know what it's like. Almost more than you can take, and you want it all anyway," Jack whispered in your ear.

"Going to give it all to you, Jackie." Gabriel's voice roughened as he slid into Jack. Jack's breaths grew uneven against your chest and you jerked as he bit the area between your breasts.

You lay under Jack, watching as sweat dripped down his face. He smiled sharply at you, pushing back against Gabriel's thrusts.

"I want to see you take him too," you said. "I know you do it, but I haven't seen it yet."

"I get pretty rough, baby," Jack said. "Gotta be in the right mood for it." He gritted his teeth. "Damnit, Gabe- you can use some lube on my cock too. Don't chafe me before we've even gotten started."

"Keep it up, Reyes. You'll get yours." Jack's expression hardened, the ice of his rank creeping back into his voice. The scary bastard part of him was too close to the surface. You'd only glimpsed this side of Jack, and it sent a thrill down your spine.

"Later Jackie. You want to be nice to our girl after this, don't you? After all, we went through all that trouble to get her ready for you to fuck her tight little ass."

You sucked in a breath, liquid heat flooding your pussy.

"Then don't start with me, Gabe."

Gabriel slammed his hips into Jack and Jack snarled, pushing back. They started hard and fast, their rhythm brutal. It seemed every stroke was a play for dominance. Even if Jack was receiving, he didn't just take it. He rolled his hips, making Gabriel swear.

"Such a cocky bastard. I think Lucky's right. I'll have to fuck you later, let her watch. Remind you who's in charge."

Gabriel bared his teeth. "You want to play it this way tonight, Jackie? Because I'll break you."

"You can try. I'm still going to have you begging." Jack locked eyes with you, expression feral. "He looks good on his knees, baby. Starts pretty demanding. But once you fill him up, he turns real sweet." Jack grinned savagely over his shoulder. "Don't let his badass persona fool you, he likes being bent over my desk fucked wide open by a goddamn boy scout."

"Shut up, Jack." Gabriel yanked back on his hair, making Jack arch against him. "Still owe you for all those hits on the mat."

"Right back at you."
You smiled, aroused by their banter. The bed creaked, and Jack braced himself against the headboard, his eyes on yours. There was a fierce pleasure on his face.

"Like what you see, baby?"

"You're both hot and you know it," you said. You raised your wrists. "Get these off me and I'll be good to you."

Jack barked a laugh. "I like you right where you are."

"You're not going to let me touch myself while I watch you two?"

Jack's smile sharpened. "No. You have to wait and take what we give you." He grunted as Gabriel kept pumping him hard. "Fuck, Gabe- I can feel you in my stomach."

"Good," Gabriel growled. "How's he holding up?"

"Tense. He's biting his lip. Thrusting his cock in empty air."

"You noticed that, huh?" Gabriel laughed. "Arrogant son of a bitch isn't getting any relief from me if he wants to talk trash."

Jack glared over his shoulder at Gabriel, but you'd had to go through that lesson already tonight, and you didn't feel much sympathy for Jack. They'd both teased you, and while you weren't actually angry any more, you kept score. And there would be a reckoning.

"Damn you guys are beautiful," you sighed. "I know you just want to lose control and fuck each other into next week. Watching you like this is a real treat."

"Not just each other," Gabriel hissed, snapping his hips into Jack. "Want you between us. But need to work this out first."

"Doesn't seem like that. Seems like you just want me to watch and suffer," you said, going for a melodramatic sigh.

"Jack?"

"On it."

You heard it before you felt it. The plug began to hum and then it started vibrating inside you. Jack held a remote in one hand, smugness across his face. You shuddered and jerked your hips upward, grinding against him.

"Damnit," you choked out.

"Like it?" Gabriel grinned. "That's your reward for being such a slippery little knife-fighter. Should leave it in you all the time. Keep you prepped for us."

The buzzing in your ass felt obscene, and went straight up your spine. Your body shook. It wasn't enough to get you off, but you squirmed under Jack, panting while the strength increased.

"Jack!" You shrieked, realizing he was toying with the dial.

"Keep saying my name like that, I'll fuck you right now," he said.

You nodded enthusiastically. "Please-"
Jack growled. "Look at her pleading-"

"Jack, please," you whined, spreading your thighs wider and he gritted his teeth.

"You ask so nicely, makes me want to give it to you."

"Please, I need it, sir."

Jack's answering smile was ferocious. He dragged himself against you. "Remember that you begged for this."

"So much for waiting." Gabriel paused as Jack adjusted the angle and slid inside your neglected pussy.

You shrieked his name as he finally filled you, your ass stretched, the motorized pulsation make you twitch and clamp down on his thick cock.

"Fuck you're tight, baby. But so fucking wet for me. I should edge you more often. I can feel the toy inside you. It's great. Guess I'll turn it up."

You keened as Gabriel began to thrust again, pushing Jack deeper inside you. Jack didn't even need to set the rhythm, he just bounced between you and Gabriel, like you'd talked about before. The difference was that he had more control than you, adjusting the dial of the toy to make you squeal and thrash.

"That's it. You move like that and I don't have to do a damn thing. Come on, I know you're close. Come for us. I'll fill you up now, and then I'll fuck your ass open while Gabe stretches out your pussy."

Panting, you wrapped your legs around his waist, trying to regain some measure of control and draw him deeper inside you. Jack cursed and Gabriel laughed. Jack couldn't thrust as hard with you anchoring him, but Gabriel had no such problem. He began to hammer away, whispering filthy things in Jack's ear.

"You like that, Jack? Getting fucked between both of us? I know you like being the center of attention."

"Don't worry, Gabe. You'll get a turn," Jack hissed. "You won't be sitting after I'm done with you, but you'll be too blissed out to care. Fuck the fight out of you, then I'll take care of Lucky. I know she'll enjoy watching you take it."

"Get her nice and wet for me, Jack. I'm going to fuck her hard."

"You're just going to push my cum deeper inside her."

"Don't care, as long as she's full of my cum by the end of the night."

"Don't," you panted. "Talk about me-" You squeezed your pelvic muscles as hard as you could around Jack and he actually snapped his teeth at you. "-Like I'm not here."

Jack tilted your chin back, the remote in one hand. "You want my full attention? All right." The plug whirred faster and you choked out a sob as Jack broke the leg lock. Grinning, he began slamming into you, his fingers on your clit. "This is what you get-" He punctuated each word with a thrust. ",when you push me. You end up your commander's well-fucked little bitch."

From there, it took no time for him to drive you over the edge. You came hard, muscles spasming as you thrashed underneath them, your cries muffled by Jack's mouth covering yours. He held you against the bed, panting while you felt his cock start to spurt inside you. Gabriel wasn't immune from the chain reaction and he gripped Jack's hips, swearing profusely.

You strained against your bonds, unable to escape the overstimulation in your ass. Jack pinned you against the sheets with his hips, groaning as he filled you up.

Gabriel disengaged first. Jack pulled out and you whimpered.

"Turn it off!"

"You look so good like that," he sighed as his cum leaked out of your pussy.

"Damnit Jack!" You squirmed, the plug still buzzing hard.

Grinning, he clicked the remote and you dropped your hips, legs shaking. He turned around, kissing Gabriel hungrily. "I meant it, Gabe. Going to have to dom you soon."

Gabriel just smirked and bit him. "Hold it in and save it for then. She's ready for us now."

Jack uncuffed you, kissing your wrists. They were red and sore, but that was more from you pulling at your restraints than from being stuck in a position for too long. "Give us a moment to get cleaned up. Then we'll take care of you."

You rubbed your wrists.

Gabriel returned first, his bruises fainter than before. He lay down beside you. "You OK, hermosa?"

"Yup. You?"

"Getting there." He stroked your hip. "Wish you'd been here sooner."

"It really bothers you that much when I go on missions after a...disagreement?"

"Jack more than me. I know you'll be back and in a better frame of mind. Usually. But I'm used to it. He isn't. Doesn't mean I like it."

"Oh."

"Jesse said you had a close-call?"

You shook your head. "Don't want to talk about it right now. Later."

Gabriel ran his fingers across your jaw. "I'll hold you to that."

"I know."

"Come here." He patted his lap. "Think you should get more leverage this time."

Jack's cum dripped out of you, but Gabriel didn't seem to mind. He was half hard already and you kissed him hesitantly.

"You hurt me last night."

"I know. I'm sorry."
"I know. Jack convinced me to stay with him. We just talked. He psychoanalyzed things for me."

"He told me." Gabriel kissed your throat. "I wouldn't have blamed you for spite-fucking him last night. Wouldn't have been healthy, but I did push you pretty hard."

"Trying to keep my petty within certain ethical bounds." You gasped as he rolled his hips against you.

"Come here. Let Jack get the toy out of you." You rested your head against Gabriel's chest. He spread your cheeks and you quivered as Jack worked the plug out. He poured more lube inside you.

"If we're going from this angle, you should take Gabe first," Jack said.

You lifted your hips, lining up with Gabriel's thick head. He held still while you lowered yourself onto him. Jack had done a good job warming you up for Gabriel. He always filled you to the brim. You clenched your teeth as he turned your head to look at him.

"Love watching you take me, baby. Glad you came back OK," he said and kissed your forehead. You clung to him, face buried against his chest. He held you open for Jack and you began to pant as Jack eased himself inside. It stung, but he wasn't quite as thick as Gabriel and the bigger toy made the transition slightly more comfortable than last time.

"You're both almost too much," you said, when Jack had gotten in to the base.

"You like it," Gabriel said, and you didn't have enough breath in you to deny it.

"Give me a moment, please-"

Jack stroked your back. "You feel so good," he growled. "Can't believe we haven't done this more." You whimpered as Gabriel kissed your face.

"Go easy on her."

"I will," Jack said. "I'm saving up the meanness for you."

Gabriel laughed softly.

"You can start, just go slow, please."

Gabriel rolled his hips and you choked back a cry because they were both all the way inside you, only a thin wall between them.

"Can feel him stretching you out," Jack hissed in your ear. "It's fucking hot watching you take us both. I can see his cock disappearing into your dripping pussy. Want you between us more. No more running away, baby. You're ours and we'll remind you as often as we have to." He ground into you and you shrieked, because this was the opposite of before. They filled you simultaneously, then withdrew, leaving you shaking and empty. There was no moderation this time, it was all or nothing and you clawed at Gabriel's chest, till he forced your left hand down to your side.

"Easy now. Going to have to work on your control."

"Sorry," you rasped.
He kissed your cheeks. "Didn't get to see that look on your face last time. Somewhere between agony and ecstasy and now all I want to do is let loose and fuck you till you scream. I won't. I'll hold back. But I want you to know I'm thinking hard about it." He lay back, eyes dark with lust.

"Goddamnit, Gabriel," you fisted the sheets. Jack moved in slow measured strokes, his breathing hard, his fingers digging into your hips.

"Do you want it harder?" Jack purred.

"Not yet." Your breath hitched as he cupped your breasts. Gabriel raised his hips and they kept moving in unison. You could only rock between them, trying to ride it out. When you clenched around Gabriel, both of them groaned.

Jack began to speed up. "Oh, these are sensitive." He flicked your nipples with his thumbs. "I can fucking feel you bearing down on him when I do that; it's so hot how close we are. I can feel the outline of him through you. Nothing else we do is quite like this."

You cried out as they both hilted themselves inside you.

"Don't say this enough, Gabe. I love how you feel, love knowing you're here," Jack sighed.

Gabriel leaned forward and clasped Jack's head to his, over your shoulder. He kissed him. "I can always feel you Jack. You're under my skin and in my bones. I'd know you if I was smoke and ash. And I'll love you after I'm dead and gone."

Jack shuddered against you. "Fuck your morbidity, Gabe. It's your life I want. You beside me, on top of me, underneath me. Can't do it without you. I need you with me."

"Always, mi cielito," Gabriel breathed.

"You maudlin bastard," Jack muttered kissing him again. He rubbed the back of your neck. "Look what you do to us, baby..."

"Don't blame me because you guys get sappy during sex." You panted against Gabriel's chest, eyes squeezed shut. It almost felt like you were intruding, despite the fact you were tangled between them, Jack's hands rubbing your back, Gabriel's fingers in your hair. It was a few heartbeats before you realized they hadn't responded with something snappy. You raised your head, recognizing that you shouldn't have been flippant. "I ruined the moment, sorry."

Gabriel shook his head. "It's OK." He glanced at Jack, a faint smile on his face.

You weren't sure what passed between them, but Jack rolled his hips and you dropped your head back against Gabriel's chest. Jack pulled your hair, yanking your head back up.

"Don't like sappy?" Jack murmured in your ear, then kissed the side of your neck. "How do you want us to be?"

"I-"

"You want us hard and rough?" Jack slammed his hips into you, his cock going so deep you swore you could feel it in the back of your throat. He laughed at the noises you made. "You want us light and teasing?" He stopped moving, his fingers tracing your clit and you tensed. "Do you even know what you want?"
Shaking, you looked desperately to Gabriel, who just grinned up at you. "Tell him what you want, hermosa."

You shivered between them, breaths coming in short bursts. "I want it harder."

Jack groaned, voice raw. "Is that so, baby?" He thrust and you braced yourself against the bed, eyes on Gabriel's face. "Then that's how we'll give it to you."

Gabriel laughed and snapped his hips up, drawing a sharp breath from you. You moved with them; it came naturally now, you knew the count of their rhythm. Their strokes filled you up while you balanced between them. Jack wasn't gentle any more, his thrusts nearly knocking the air out of you. Gabriel kept up, his cock stretching you wide open.

They were hollowing you out and you couldn't think straight. The pressure verged on pain, but you didn't quite care. This was better than talking and just more than anything you'd expected.

They were moving in tandem again. You burned in the center, Gabriel's heat and Jack's enthusiasm setting your nerves aflame. You were the conduit between them, pleasure and pain passed through you at their tempo. It was a constant state of flux that maintained its own tenuous balance, despite how dizzying it was; you were going to fall, but you were going to fall with them.

You couldn't tell if it was your heartbeat or Gabriel's drumming in your ears. You didn't know whose hands were gripping your hips. You weren't sure who was setting the pace, you or Jack. But they were both teetering on edge, you could feel them struggling to outlast you. Jack's fingers pressed hard circles against your clit.

"So close," you moaned. "Stop holding back. Want you both to come with me and fill me up."

Jack gave a sigh of pleasure. Gabriel's fingers traced your cheek. And then they were driving into you with bruising force. You squeezed your eyes shut, so hard you could feel tears. Your inner muscles hit a rolling rhythm, dragging them both further into you, and you gave a breathless gasp as they spilled inside you. Jack pulled you against him, both arms wrapped around your chest, while Gabriel clutched your wrists.

They held you tight, and you stayed like that till your heartbeat receded from your ears. Jack withdrew first, and lowered you against Gabriel's chest. Gabriel rolled you onto your back, his half-hard cock slipping out.

"Stretched you nice and wide," Jack sighed, giving your ass a light slap. "You look good dripping with our cum."

You took several ragged breaths, still recovering your composure. Gabriel slipped a finger inside your pussy and swirled it around. You could hear the slosh of the liquid, a mixture of all three of your juices.

"You took us so well. Even smoother than last time." Gabriel stroked your sides. "You up for one more round?"

"You're joking." You eyed both of them.

Gabriel just kissed your throat, his erection pressed against your hip. Of course, he wasn't joking.
"Why are you even surprised?" Jack asked, reclining beside you.

"We didn't get our makeup session," Gabriel said. "I'll be gentle. I promise."

You closed your eyes. You were a sticky mess. They were trying to kill you. They really were. There were worse ways to go, and the black void at the end of a revolver barrel flashed in your mind's eye. Your heart stuttered. Much worse ways to go.

"OK," you said, softly.

Gabriel rolled onto his side, angling his hips. He wrapped one arm around your waist, then lifted one of your legs over his body, and slowly pushed into your slick asshole.

"Wait-" You hiccupped. He was as thick as you remembered.

"Need more lube?" He asked, nibbling on your neck.

"I thought you meant-"

"You're wet and ready for it. I'll go easy on you. Want to feel you around me, too."

You whined as he pushed all the way in, your empty pussy twitching.

Jack reached for the lube and carefully applied it Gabriel's shaft when he pulled back out.

"There we go. Nice and smooth," Gabriel murmured in your ear. "Oh you're taking me so well. I can feel Jack's cum still inside you. You took him so deep."

You wrapped one arm around his neck, your other hand digging into the pillows.

He kissed you, tongue slipping into your mouth.

Jack stroked your hips. "You're taking him to the base, baby. Guess it's good I stretched you out. Gabe's so thick."

You nodded, gritting your teeth. "It burns a little."

"Sorry, baby." Gabriel peppered kisses along your neck. "Want me to stop?"

"I'm OK for now."

"Don't think she can come from you exclusively fucking her ass. Not yet anyway."

"Go on then," Gabriel said.

Jack reached over and started rubbing circles around your clitoris. You stiffened and he propped himself up on his side, pressed tight against you. You were nestled between them, Jack's fingers lightly playing with your pussy, Gabriel's cock sliding in and out of your ass at an achingly slow pace.

Jack sucked a nipple into his mouth, his nimble fingers upping the pressure. You tensed between them.

"That's it, I want to feel you come like this again."

"Gabriel began to move faster. "You look so good between us. Going to do this more."
"I'll get you some toys too. Maybe a nice little collar." Jack groaned as he slid two fingers inside you. "Feels like I'm just pushing all this cum back into your greedy little cunt."

You moaned into Gabriel's mouth as he stretched you out.

"Oh, you like that." Jack's spread his fingers, and you jerked your hips upward, whimpering.

For a few minutes it was just the wet sounds of them pleasuring you. Your composure hadn't really recovered from the last round and already your nerves started to fray. You threw your head back, a low whine escaping the back of your throat.

"That's it," Gabriel murmured in your ear. "Need you with me too, baby. You know that right?"

"Gabriel-"

"Don't argue," he said, shaking his head.

"I-" Your throat tightened.

"Shh. Just tell me you need me too."

"Obviously," you practically growled.

"You actually have to say it, you brat," Jack chuckled, and he slowed his fingers. "I'd like to hear it too."

"That I need him or-"

"Whatever, as long as you mean it," Jack said so casually, you were almost fooled. He began pumping his fingers inside you again. He leaned in, his tongue tracing the labyrinth of your ear.

Gabriel began thrusting harder, neither of them actually giving you a chance to speak. Jack's fingers curled inside you, driving the tension higher. Gabriel's free hand began rubbing your clit. You expected them to stop, to demand you confess. But they kept going, and your breath caught as they played on your already jittery nerves. Your muscles contracted, pulling Jack's thick fingers deeper inside you. Together they coaxed another orgasm out of you and you stifled your cries, jagged breathing the only response you gave them.

Gabriel grunted and it was a few more thrusts before he lost himself in you again. He was still breathing hard, eyes half-lidded, when you grasped his cheeks between your palms. "Of course, I need you, Gabriel. Have since I set foot in Zurich." You kissed him hard and he growled into your mouth.

He smirked as he slowly pulled out of you. "I know."

Bastard.

You dropped back against the pillows, chest tight. Jack was beside you, licking his fingers. You turned to him, studying his face. He looked relaxed, but there was a sharpness in his gaze. Jack was never exactly how he appeared.

"You guys are expecting way too much from me if you want sweet talk after all that."
Higher concepts are bzzzt." You tapped your temple. "I need you too, Jack. You make me think there might be more than the mission. You make me want things I forgot even existed." Jack searched your face, his expression pleasant but too rigid. You bit your lip. Was that not enough? You looked away.

Jack tugged your hair, a crooked smile breaking through the coolness. "I don't know where you get this stuff. I'm the fucking Strike Commander, baby. I should be making you more focused on the job."

"Well, I like you outside the rank. That Strike Commander guy is kind of a stuffy asshole and a gung-ho white knight idealist; I like the guy who throws me around the mats, gets me cake, and then wants to cuddle for no good reason."

Jack traced his fingers along your lips. "You should be nicer to your boss, smart ass. The Strike Commander can at least get you a room upgrade."

"Pfft, I'm never there anyway. If that's all he's got, who cares?"

Jack blinked, shock spreading over his face.

"Looks like someone else hasn't bought into the legend of Strike Commander Jack Morrison," Gabriel chuckled.

"It's not like that!" Jack rolled his eyes.

"I like Jack just fine. It's the brass that gives me hives. Ugh, authority," you shook your head. "Can't deal with it."

"You do realize the irony of that statement," Jack said, flicking you between the eyes.

"Ow! Of course I do. It was a joke, asshole." You eyed his fingers, licking your teeth.

Jack only laughed.

You shifted, skin below the waist too clammy. "Forget being in the wet spot, I think I am the wet spot. I need to get cleaned up." You pulled yourself into sitting position, still caught between them. Your thighs were a sticky mess.

"You help her. I'll change the sheets," Gabriel said.

You limped to the shower, legs shaky. The hot water was glorious, and you slumped against the wall, just taking it in. Jack pulled back the curtain and stepped in. He lathered up the loofah - Gabriel needed a new one or three - and ran it across your chest. He worked his way down, hands gentle.

"Turn around," he said. and you complied, leaning against the cool tiles. Jack washed your back, his fingers lingering on the most recent scrapes and bruises you'd acquired. "So you want to see me dom Gabe?"

"Yup." You glanced over your shoulder, a little surprised by the cool intensity of his gaze. "Should I not?"

"Just checking. I get rougher. If you want to play, then you have to play nice."

"Ah." You were getting better at keeping yourself in check. You often thought of that first time in the hotel. Sometimes you wondered what would have happened if you'd let him keep going, if you told him "anything but choking." Hell, he could have made that hot too, but you had your baggage. If it were that easy, you would've dropped it a long time ago.

"I don't ignore safe words," he said, misinterpreting your silence.

You turned around, running your fingers over the mottled bruises on his chest. Gabriel had really roughed him up too. "I'm not worried. Just sleepy."

"That's OK then." He kissed you and you leaned into him. He twitched against your stomach, making you laugh.

"Really, Jack? Already excited about what you're going to do to Gabriel?"

"Yeah," he said, voice husky. "But I have you here in the shower with me. That's pretty potent too."

You stared reproachfully as he turned the water off. "Wasn't done."

"Don't give me that look. If we stay in here any longer I'm going to want you against the wall. And we have things to do tomorrow."

"I thought we were taking the day off."

"We are. Doesn't mean you get to sleep through it." He grabbed a towel and began drying you off.

"I can do that."

"I want to," he said, so you let him.

When you got back out to the bedroom, Gabriel was already in the center of the bed, clean sheets bunched around his hips, reading a book. It was a worn paperback labeled One Hundred Years of Solitude. That did not seem like light bedtime reading, but this was Gabriel.

"Sounds cheerful."

"It's not a happy book," Gabriel said, laying it down on the night stand. "It's a classic work of Latin American magical realism and follows several generations of a family. They bring about their own ruin through selfishness and isolationism; it's a bit more complex than that, but that's the gist. The language is beautiful, but it's better in Spanish."

"I think you're the biggest romantic out of all of us," you said.

"Of course. Jack's a farm boy at heart and you're a loaded gun. One of us needs to have poetry in their soul." He smirked and patted a spot beside him. You got into the bed, and burrowed down under the covers. You didn't need them with his body heat, but you liked the weight. Jack took the other side.

"Is that where Gérard's quote came from?" Jack asked.

"You're both hopeless savages," Gabriel said, kissing Jack's cheek. "It's a good thing you're pretty."
Consent as a weapon, lol. I was way too amused by that.

Have a little heavy IRL crap for people who pay attention to that kind of thing. You can skip. It's cool. It's not required reading.

Last weekend was really rough. I had to put a dog down, go into work that day, and work all weekend because we were short-staffed. I was full of pissed off and petty, because, that's how I deal with death (and people!). Not telling you this because it's "omg, so sad, need support." He was an old, but good dog and we were expecting it. Still sucked. I have more dogs, a cousin, and a cat, so not alone or anything. Sharing because some of the nice things that were said really cheered me up, and kept me from murdering people. Yes, you saved their worthless lives.

Uh...I'm not making scary face. Nope.

So yeah, sharing not because I want sympathy comments (please don't; I'm now in the "acceptance" phase and don't want to revert to the "bawling my eyes out" phase when someone says something about dead dogs. Seriously, I won't watch movies where the dog dies, that's how sensitive I am to that kind of shit. I'll grow out of it. Probably. No, fuck that, because as a kid I had to watch Old Yeller, Where the Red Fern Grows, and all that awful kill the dog shit that the prior generation seemed to love. Scarred for life.).

Sharing because I appreciate you guys taking the time to say nice things. You can say mean things too, fair enough. But you know, to those who said nice things, thanks. Made the weekend more bearable and you deserve to know that. Even if you didn't deserve to get dumped on. Catch-22. Oops.
Chapter 23

Chapter Summary

Jack's perspective of the UN observer fight and the aftermath. Relationship things.

Chapter Notes

Two month anniversary! Thanks for sticking around. You guys are awesome. Maybe one day I'll actually finish this goddamn arc. Because there's one more after that, at least. Here's some Jack POV.

Have probably fucked up the timeline (ages, Omnic Crisis timing, Winston's...entire life), but you know, we're going with it, no more apologies. (Probably, maybe, IDK, I feel absurdly guilty.)

See the end of the chapter for more notes.

Jack watched you disappear down the hallway, heading back to your own quarters. He already knew you'd find Genji or McCree and disappear for at least half the day, despite his requests otherwise. You shared his habit for smiling, nodding, and then doing whatever the fuck you pleased. It was cuter when you weren't doing it to him.

If the two of you were fighting, it'd piss him off more. But this was Gabe's fault, and he understood intimately just how much the older man could get under your skin. He'd dragged Chang, Reinhardt, and Ana to the mat numerous times over Gabriel's spiteful quips.

Jack skipped breakfast, opting to go straight to the office. He'd give Gabe a day to cool down, and then they'd have to sort things, because Korpal was due in a week and Jack wouldn't put it past him to show up early.

There were orders to sign off on, ops to plan, political trends to track, budgetary concerns... Winston's new project was almost live, and he was pretty sure that would lead to another fight with Gabe. Damn, he needed a new assistant, and he briefly thought about poaching you from Blackwatch. You'd have to wear a suit half the time, maybe a tight pencil skirt with high heels and a form-fitting blouse. That'd make the work day much more interesting. But it was a pipedream; you could do the work, but you liked running around in the field far too much. Also, Gabe wouldn't be happy.

Not that Gabe was too happy right now anyway.

The message hit at noon. "Clear your schedule for the day. You and me in the Blackwatch gym. Ana will moderate."

Jack raised a brow, mostly because it usually took Gabe at least a whole day to cool down. More often, it was longer than that.
"See you in an hour." Jack sent the message and then another one inviting Gérard to join them for the strategizing session afterward, time still TBD. On a whim, he checked your status, annoyed to see you marked as in New Mexico with McCree.

Jack got his work done, putting Ana on deck for the remainder of the day. He marked himself as "engaged in an operation," and that was true after a fashion: Operation Fix Your Surly Boyfriend Before Your Girlfriend Gets Home.

When Jack got to the Blackwatch gym, it was empty except for Gabriel who had his back to the door and Ana, who sat on a chair beside a medkit, an emitter, and a fire extinguisher. She was reading a book and sipping tea from a thermos.

"Thanks for-"
"I will use it again," she said, not looking up from her book.

Jack smiled wryly at the fire extinguisher. "I don't think we'll go that far today." He intended to keep his clothes on till you got back.

She sniffed, unimpressed by his vague declaration. "Interesting that you invited Gérard to our meeting."

"You disapprove?"
"No," she said. "But you usually don't use him for anything but external black ops."

"Lucky recommended it," he said. "She went to see him last night; said he had some good insight. Don't know why he didn't just speak up himself."

Ana's smile could have been approval or perhaps she had just reached a good part in her book. "He's a spy, Jack. They don't just volunteer information. It goes against their nature."

"Guess I never thought he was that interested in internal politics."

Ana snorted. "Just because you don't like politics doesn't mean everyone else ignores them." She turned the page of her book. "Well go on, we don't have all day."

Jack stripped down to his black fatigues, taking a moment to stretch. Gabe had already unrolled the mats and Jack's breath hitched as his lover pulled off his own shirt. Gabe knew how he affected people, Jack especially. And that really wasn't fair.

"Ready?" Gabe asked, taking off his boots. He glared at Jack. Even angry, Gabe was fucking hot.

"Yeah." Jack smirked, already thinking about the makeup sex.

Gabe threw the first punch, but Jack was already circling. He didn't want to play. He just wanted to hit Gabe till the stubborn idiot saw reason. And maybe he had some anger; Gabe had said some shit last night, to both him and you. He was used to it; years of being together had given him some idea of what to expect. Gabe could get under his skin, could really rile him up. It was all par for the course. But you were different. All that blind trust you put in Gabe? Jack saw it. He wasn't quite jealous, because he knew he could get there too. But last night, Gabriel had really gotten to you. He'd thrown that trust back in your face, and Jack, who didn't have that luxury yet, didn't like that at all.
The first round was silent, except for flesh hitting flesh and air being expelled. It was just a warm up. The real fight included words.

"You're a fucking asshole," Jack said, midway through the second round. He wiped off his mouth. His knuckles dripped blood onto the mats, not all of it his.

"Shut up boy scout, you're no saint," Gabriel scowled.

"Never claimed to be." Jack struck hard and Gabriel staggered. "Not bad for a cowardly bureaucrat."

"Still not enough to take me down."

Jack smirked, because he could play dirty. "She came to me last night."

Gabriel growled, and lashed out, a roundhouse kick knocking Jack sideways. "Her prerogative." But every blow he threw after that came harder.

"Wasn't like that." Jack grinned, expecting that reaction and staying just out of reach. "So don't get jealous of your own boyfriend."

"Fuck you."

"After," Jack said smugly. "No, she told me what happened."

Gabriel snarled at him.

"Gérard? Really?" Jack might have lied about not throwing that in Gabriel's face. Because he wasn't a saint. "McCree I can see. But Gérard? No wonder she was upset. Of all the people to-"

Gabriel charged, and Jack met him halfway.

"How bad?" Gabe asked. They lay on their backs, side by side, both pointed in opposite directions.

"Nothing broken that won't be healed by tonight," Jack wheezed.

"Not you. I know you're fine." Gabriel snorted, elbowing Jack lightly. "How bad off was she?"

"Brittle. She was pretty upset." Jack exhaled. "Convinced her to stay the night."

"Yeah, well she's in New Mexico with Jesse now."

"I know." Jack scowled. "And whose fault is that?"

"Deadlock's," Gabe rolled over. "It's a short run; he actually did need backup. They should be back tonight. I was looking for her earlier. Thought she might like to sit in and watch you punch me, instead she ghosted. I know Jesse told her I was looking for her. Mihret too. Sneaky bitch."
"Insubordinate, you mean."

"That too." Gabe rolled his eyes.

"We're going to have to sit down and talk about things. Set some more rules."

"Tomorrow," Gabe agreed. "She shouldn't have gotten involved."

"She's already involved, Gabe. Denying it is pointless. Better figure something new out. She deserves some say in things." Jack sat up, world shaky. "That is if you want this to work."

There was a long silence.

"Yeah." Gabe nodded. "I guess you're right. About that anyway." He kissed Jack then, bloody-mouthed and repentant.

Ana casually reached for the fire extinguisher.

"Should I have brought wine?" Gérard sat on your desk, somehow the center of attention.

Ana rolled her eyes and took a chair. Jack and Gabriel sat beside each other on the couch. The emitter hummed in the background.

"It's a meeting, not a party." Gabriel scratched at a healing patch of skin. Jack smacked his hand away.

"Oh. Where's Chanceux? I would think you'd want her to be here for this," Gérard smiled pleasantly at Gabriel. Friend or not, Jack realized then that he had underestimated how much the ex-spy enjoyed being an outright dick. Had he always been that way?

"She's on a mission," Gabriel said tightly.

"That's a shame. She is a clever one: undisciplined, vicious, and mouthy, but clever and able."

Jack raised a brow. Was he supposed to defend your honor? Because Gérard wasn't exactly wrong.

Ana smiled wryly. "The only compliments Gérard actually means have to be accompanied by an insult or three. He is incapable of being purely pleasant."

"I am being honest, Ana. Never trust a lover who only flatters you. They are in love with a romanticized silhouette, not you. You must find one that recognizes your most unpleasant shortcomings and just how your defining virtues can become defects; one that, despite it all, desires you anyway." He gave Ana a smug smile. "That's how you know they are serious."

Jack expected her to roll her eyes and be dismissive, but Ana frowned at Gérard sharply and Jack wondered what subtext he was missing.

"I am disappointed that you didn't call me in sooner. Chanceux doesn't even like me, but she knew to ask after my expertise. You could have chosen far worse."
Of course, he knew. Jack crossed his arms.

"Get to the point, Gérard," Gabriel growled.

"I understand we are expecting a spy." The Frenchman smiled tightly. "Just because I am overseeing the Talon ops doesn't mean I have forgotten how counterintelligence works. And I have forgotten more about counterintelligence than you have ever known, Jack."

"You were busy with all those Talon issues. And finding a situation for your wife."

"I can multi-task, Jack. While she misses the ballet, Amélie has taken up sniping lessons with Ana. It is almost too much for my heart."

"It will be if she catches you fooling around," Gabe muttered and Jack had to smother a laugh.

"I would never be so crass as to not invite her."

Well, Jack hadn't known that about their relationship; he wasn't sure if Gérard was yanking their chains, but he would not be surprised either way. Gabriel rolled his eyes upward.

"Knock it off, Gérard," Ana said. "Amélie is...adjusting. She has the reflexes and grit, but I don't know if she's a killer." Unspoken was the fact Ana did not want to make her one.

"She is," Gérard said simply. "You think the Alps was the first time we've been attacked? I have seen her cave a man's head with a bust of Pericles." There was a dreamy quality to Gérard's voice. "Amélie is capable and she is not soft, no matter how genteel her manners are."

Ana frowned, probably because Amélie hadn't shared that tidbit over tea and biscuits.

"You want her running ops with you?" Gabe asked.

"Isn't that half the fun?" Gérard said. "You and Jack like to break things together. And you went to Cambridge with Chanceux. Wasn't that a treat?"

Jack's pulse sped up. He had thought about going on more missions with you. Gabriel normally sent you out with Genji or McCree. He'd never really thought about why Gabe rarely went on runs with you. Of course, Gabriel skewed overprotective and it wouldn't do to have everyone else witness that again. The pieces fell into place then, and Jack sighed. There would be a lot to talk about tomorrow.

"Gérard, if you want your wife to join as a trainee agent, we can expedite the application process. She still has to go through basic. We can do it onsite. The sooner she doesn't need bodyguards, the better. But that's not why we're here today." Jack had to keep Gérard on track.

"Of course, Jack." Gérard smiled brightly, like Gabe wasn't glowering at him. "Chanceux brought me an interesting problem and Ana gave me the rest of the details. And I am going to tell you that while Korpai has the potential to do harm, he is unimportant in the grand scheme of things. No, Gabriel, save your arguments. I will explain, and you will listen, because this is a game of subtlety and planning, not strength and kneejerk reactions."

Jack folded his hands, listening to Gérard's explanation of how to bring down Overwatch. He'd always had a vague outline in his head, and it did revolve around politics. But Gérard had the details worked out. It wasn't just the bureaucracy. It was the people. If they started targeting individual agents... Jack exhaled slowly.
"And the broader question is, can Overwatch sustain itself without you, or Gabriel, or Ana? Because if the answer is "no," then have you really built an organization worthy of your legacy?" Gérard sat there in his fitted suit, legs crossed in a figure four, and Jack wondered if all spies were anarchists at heart.

"We're just talking about Korpal today, OK. No need to start your own Overwatch cafe complete with philosophical dilemmas and shitty coffee," Gabriel said, not even trying to hide his disdain.

Jack just pictured you in a maid uniform, serving tea and cake. He could feel the silly grin start to form and reluctantly banished the image.

"His orders were being carried out even before they were given, even before he thought of them, and they always went much beyond what he would have dared have them do." How does that next line go? Oh yes, "Lost in the solitude of his immense power, he began to lose direction. He was bothered by the people who cheered him in neighboring villages, and he imagined that they were the same cheers they gave the enemy...."

Gabriel stiffened, giving Gérard a hard look.

"Wasn't that your namesake describing the unfortunate Colonel Buendía? It has been awhile..." Gérard affected an air of boredom, but Jack wasn't fooled; Gérard was at his most dangerous when he looked relaxed. "This applies to you too, Jack. Because I have seen the fall of Strike Commander Morrison, and it is bloody."

Gabriel leaned back in his chair, affected by whatever had been quoted. "Go on then, Gérard. Tell us how it's done."

Unfazed, Gérard did.

By the end of it, Jack had a headache and Gabriel was studying their friend with keener eyes.

"Do not mistake our incredible success for invincibility. Every victory came at a cost, and we're fortunate to have dragged ourselves this far. Korpal is a small thing. What you need to pay attention to is just how many small things have been stacked against us, and by whom. It is folly to think they are unrelated. We are under siege from many sides, Jack. We have to deal with the rise of the omnis. We have to counter a bevy of ruthless opportunists, be they terrorists, politicians, or multinational conglomerates. We cannot trust our civilian authorities, because their respective governments fear that we are a threat to their existence. And most tragically, because of this we cannot save everyone; we might not even be able to save ourselves."

"That's a lot to think on, but your strategy is sound," Jack said, after a long uncomfortable silence. Because Gérard had painted a grim picture the future. The war of attrition against Overwatch had already begun. The whittling of the budget. The turning tide of public opinion. The increasingly contradictory demands of the UN. Gérard was right, it was a slow strangling process, but the foundation was already laid.

"I'm beginning to remember why we don't invite you to things," Gabriel griped.

"It's a dark view," Jack admitted. "But I can't refute any of your points."

"I know," Gérard said. "So that only leaves one other thing..."

"Hanoi?" Gabriel asked.
"Not yet. Chanceux and I have to take care of Bái Shé first. It is mission critical." Gérard was all smarmy cheer and flamboyant hand gestures once more. "For the record, I agree that we need to take her alive. And not because I am sentimental, unlike Chanceux."

"All right, what is your other priority?" Gabriel asked, patience diminishing.

"My favorite student, of course: Chanceux."

Gabriel's fists tightened. "Spit it out."

Jack wasn't crazy about the fact Gérard had coined a new nickname for you and used it exclusively. But neither were you, and Jack suspected that was part of the appeal. And as much as he denied and derided it, Gérard wasn't as unfeeling as he liked to pretend.

"Obviously this is a sore spot for you, Gabriel. But imagine what will happen when people find out your relationship with her. Either or both of you. They will go after her to leverage you. Truth or not, they will see her as the weakest link."

Gabriel crossed his arms. Jack watched Gérard coolly.

"Whether she is with you for merely another week or the rest of her life, you've put a target on her back. What have you done to compensate for that? Don't look at me like that, it's a legitimate concern. I am teaching her the skills she'll need to disappear, if it comes to that. What are you doing? Yes, you've improved her combat ability, and I know you had that armor specially-commissioned. But is that really all you can do for her?"

"What are you suggesting?" Jack asked.

"I wouldn't presume to meddle."

Gabriel snorted. "Gérard, I've known kingmakers less meddlesome than you."

Gérard's smile widened into a full-blown grin. It was not the usual refined expression, but Jack found it made the spy a little more likeable.

"You have a few options," Gérard said. "One is to help her build her reputation and make "Lucky Strike" as untouchable as you, or Ana, or Reinhardt: if either of you go public with her, it will help. That means you have to send her on more high-profile missions. Your "Ms. Strike" was a tabloid sensation in France. That was a fantastic uniform Gabriel -Amélie would love to talk design with you at some point. Chanceux can do it again, though I don't know if she wants to bear that level of attention. And it certainly would make her undercover job more difficult."

"You have a few options," Gérard said. "One is to help her build her reputation and make "Lucky Strike" as untouchable as you, or Ana, or Reinhardt: if either of you go public with her, it will help. That means you have to send her on more high-profile missions. Your "Ms. Strike" was a tabloid sensation in France. That was a fantastic uniform Gabriel -Amélie would love to talk design with you at some point. Chanceux can do it again, though I don't know if she wants to bear that level of attention. And it certainly would make her undercover job more difficult."

"Never knew you cared," Gabriel said.

"That is because I am much more careful than you, Gabriel. But I was just in that position a few months ago. Talon went after Amélie and while I had contingency plans, I underestimated how far they would go. We were...fortunate that you came to our rescue. And looking back, I can clearly see all the foolish mistakes I made. I am only trying to ensure you aren't in a similar situation."
That was Gérard in a fucking nutshell, taking the most asshole route to do his friends the good turn they hadn't realized they needed. Jack laughed even as Gabriel rubbed the bridge of his nose.

"All Blackwatch agents have ratlines," Gabriel said, uncrossing his arms. "I made hers myself."

"And knowing Chanceux, she probably has two more on reserve," Gérard said. "But that might not be enough." He paused. "That is your plan then? Send her into hiding?"

Jack blew out a deep breath, because while that might keep you alive, that wasn't much of a future. "I don't know. Hadn't thought that far ahead."

"It is something you should have already been thinking about," Ana said, reproachfully, and it only drove home the fact to Jack that he had been a neglectful boyfriend. He glanced at Gabriel, well aware that they would have more to talk about after this meeting.

"So it's settled, McCree has Korpal duty, till we know more." Jack folded his hands.

"And once we know more, I will take care of it," Gérard said, cheerfully. "I'll be by with the details, Gabriel. Say "hello" to Chanceux for me when she gets back from New Mexico."

Yes, he'd known exactly where you were. He'd just wanted to irk Gabe.

Gabriel's jaw tensed, and Jack was really starting to get why you had a problem with Gérard.

---

You woke up tucked against Gabriel's side, one arm around you, the other holding Jack against him. Gabriel snored lightly. Jack had his cheek on Gabriel's bare chest, and he smiled sleepily at you, before reaching over taking your hand.

"We still have another hour. Go back to sleep," he said.

"You OK?" You squeezed his fingers.

"Enjoying this." He yawned.

"You're just being a creeper and watching us sleep." You closed your eyes.

"Guilty," he said. "So shut up and go back to sleep."

"OK," you said. You dropped back off, hand still linked with Jack's.
More than an hour had passed when you awakened again. This time you cuddled against Jack and you could hear chewing. Something light sprinkled against your skin. Was he...getting crumbs on your head? You rolled onto your back, sugary sprinkles and bits of icing dropping onto your face. Jack pressed a half-eaten doughnut against your lips.

You shot him a dirty look.

"Don't give me that, we let you sleep in," he said.

"Crumbs, Morrison. Crumbs in my bed and in her hair. What is wrong with you?" Gabriel was fully dressed and he had a box of doughnuts in hand.

"Sorry." Jack shrugged, not actually contrite.

You sat up and shook your head vigorously, trying to brush out the debris. Gabriel offered you the box and a mug of coffee. You pulled the sheet around your body and took your breakfast in his bed. The clock said ten, and you kissed Gabriel.

"How you feeling?"

"A little sore, but otherwise good." You were hungrier than you thought. Jack gave you a sticky kiss on the shoulder. "I'm going to need another shower."

"I think that's his plan," Gabriel said. He set the box on the nightstand and sat down beside you. "Want to tell me what happened on the mission yesterday?"

You didn't really, but bookended between Jack and Gabriel, you didn't actually have an escape. You took another bite of doughnut and drank your coffee, scrounging for the right words to describe what happened. Something to diminish their concerns.

"Killed a bunch of Jesse's old friends," you said. "One of them got the drop on me, but he tried to use me as a hostage instead of wasting me there. So I threw him off the roof and shot him a few times for good measure." You paused, because you could feel their eyes on you. "I've had closer calls, but that's the first time in awhile that I've looked down the barrel of a large caliber handgun and thought, "this could be it." But it wasn't. Obviously." You finished your coffee. "It's not a very interesting story. Sorry."

Jack rubbed your back. "McCree should've had your back."

"Not Jesse's fault, I lost track of him too. I should've been more careful. I got too comfy because I was up high. We had about fifteen people. He took out most of them."

"I read McCree's updated report. Says it's his fault, you took out half of them with your grenades, and intimidated the leader into giving up the intel, before you killed her."

"Jesse's a fucking idiot," you said, wondering if Gabriel had made him rewrite it. He should've stuck to the original. It was the first rule of deniability: never change your story.

"Oh I know; you both are," Gabriel muttered. "I'm not going to punish him. But you need to be honest with me."

"I don't know how many I killed," you said. "I put a lot down after they were incapacitated, and I did do the interrogation without actually torturing the leader. We both could have been more careful." You weren't going to mention Jesse's reluctance to kill Jamie, just like you weren't going to mention your offer to spare her. And you definitely weren't going to mention how off his game
"We've all had close calls," Jack said. "I'm glad you came home. Not so happy that you took off in the first place."

"Wasn't about you," you said, not looking at Gabriel.

"I'm aware of that, and it doesn't matter," Jack said, sounding more like a CO than your lover. Suddenly, you wished you weren't in bed next to him only wearing a sheet for this conversation. "Still pisses me off," he said. "Pass the doughnuts?"

Gabriel passed the doughnuts and Jack offered you another one. You took it, not fooled by his casual air.

"Did you know Gabe was looking for you before you left?"

"Yeah," you admitted. "Wasn't ready to deal with him. Wasn't ready when he came and found me either. You guys have trouble with "give me space" and "leave me alone." It's easier to avoid conflict altogether."

"That's still insubordination," Jack said, flatly. "And lover or not, you don't get pull that. I know Gabe lets you get away with it, but I can't."

You kept your gaze straight ahead, because you didn't trust your face. "So what, you guys get to order me to forgive you or hang around you even though I'm pissed?"

"No." Jack licked his fingers. "Didn't say that either. We need to lay down some new rules is all. We can't be disrupting the chain of command or missions because of our private lives. You don't get to deny existing orders or ignore your CO because you're upset. I know you're the most vulnerable out of us, so what do you think is fair? Do you want to involve Ana every time? Do you need a different kind of safe word? A neutral zone?"

"Will you bring in Ana if you need her?" Gabriel asked. "I have trouble seeing you do it."

You shrugged. Because this was a lot to wake up to. "I see what you're saying. I'd just really like it if you backed off if I ask."

"All right. So ask. Don't just disappear." Jack smiled at you and you felt twinge of irritation. "Your safe words will work if you need them. Call Ana if you have to. But don't just get angry, leave, and ignore communication. At the very least, check in if you have to go out on a mission."

"OK," you said, because you couldn't find an actual flaw in Jack's argument; you just didn't like being called out. Your methods had worked fine up till now. "It's not going to be that pretty in application, you know."

"I know. Gabe pisses me off all the time. He's an asshole."

"Fuck you too, Jack. You're a pain the ass."

"Oh, I'll show you pain in the ass later." Jack rubbed your back. "You're going to have to be firm with him. You let him get away with things too, you know." Unspoken was the fact that they were things you might not let Jack do.

You could have called Ana last night or stuck to your guns. Just because you were drunk didn't mean you had to go along with him. On the other hand, you trusted Gabriel, even if he pissed you off. He hadn't lied, Jack had been waiting for you. He hadn't tried to make you do anything. But he shouldn't have crashed your party either. Fuck. You weren't actually angry about any of it now, but knowing "what to do" was complicated.

"It's going to be rocky," Gabriel said. "But do you trust that we're working on it?"

"Yeah," you said, rubbing your face. "I trust you."

"I'm overbearing, I know. Been acting out because of stress. Jack and I are going to be sparring more, to keep it in check. We'd like you to sit in."

"You can have a turn if you want," Jack said slyly.

You felt the blood rush to your face. Because you knew exactly how that would end. "We're going to get caught if we use the gym."

"We're just sparring," Jack said all innocence. "Just getting down and sweaty on the mats. Are you worried about getting rolled around? I know we get rough, but you can always tap, baby."

"You're not smooth," you scowled.

"I plan to rearrange my quarters. Put some mats down. Show you a few takedowns if you like."

You took a big bite of doughnut and tried not to picture throwing Jack down, pinning him to the mats, and tearing off his shirt and... You failed.

"Jack, don't distract us." Gabriel's hand rested on your thigh. "I'm glad you were there the other night to...defuse the situation. And it's good that you're willing to step up. If we're that out of line, yeah, you should say something, privately."

You blinked, because you had not been expecting that from him.

"We're going to need more code words," Jack said. "Because sometimes we'll have an audience."

"Operation Solitude," you said, thinking of Gabriel's book from last night. "Excuse me sir, have a critical update on Operation Solitude."

Gabriel snorted. "Not "Operation Time Out?" Or "Operation Calm Down." How about "Operation Chill the Fuck Out?"

"Fine, you name it," you said, crossing your arms.

"Operation Ray," Gabriel smirked. "Named for Chang, to remind us all that we need to calm the fuck down."

Jack sighed. "Don't ever let her know you said that. You think she's just brute force and violence, but she's not Gabe, she's not. She's a high-functioning psychopathic border collie that never forgets a slight, and I say this as her friend."

"Yeah, I guess that makes sense," you said, agreeing with both of them.

"This is a kill-switch, and we're trusting you to be responsible with it," Gabriel said, suddenly stern. "But there are limits. You don't get to decide policy, you understand? If I have to punish Mihret for insubordination, you don't get to interfere."

"Pfft, get in line," you said.

"Don't pretend like you don't cover for the boy."

"Why would I do that?"

Gabriel gave you a hard look.

"Yeah, OK," you said, pulling the sheet up. "That was more...reasonable than I was expecting."

"Jack's the one who talked me around." Gabriel glanced fondly at the man. "Reminded me that this isn't going to work if I'm just issuing you angry orders."

After the other night, Jack had listened to you. And he'd taken it a step further, he'd convinced Gabriel of it. That surprised you, if only because he was the stickler for hierarchy. You kissed his cheek. "Thanks."

"I am paying attention," Jack said, resting his head against your shoulder. "I'm going to do better."

"I'll be a more confrontational pain in the ass," you agreed. "Like you and Gabriel. You'll be sorry."

Gabriel snorted.

"Anything else?" You stroked Jack's hair.

"I think it's time you started going on more missions with me. Jack too," Gabriel said after a long moment.

You studied his face. "Not that I'm against it, but why? We've rarely gone out together."

Lacroix's Code White was the most recent one and the most fighting you'd done alongside him.

"Yeah, that wasn't accidental. I take more combat-oriented missions. Your skill level wasn't there yet. You've improved enough that we can manage."

"Don't be fooled that it's just about your skills. He's overprotective to a fault. You remember how he was after that trip to the Alps. Expect more fussing. And post-mission, he'll jump your bones on the transport while yelling at you for being careless." Jack smirked at you both.

"Shut up, Jack."

"What? It's happened multiple times."

"That is extremely hot." You could easily see events unfolding like that. "I'm still going on missions with everyone else too, right?" Because something about this felt a little odd.

"Yeah," Gabriel said. "Jack and I are going to try to be back in the field together more. We'd like to have you with us. Not just because we want to keep an eye on you."

"OK..." You weren't sure what to make of that.
"Think of it as a teambuilding exercise," Jack said.

"Two commanders and one lackey? I'm sure that'll go over well."

"You know your reputation is better than "lackey," now." Jack smirked. "Don't worry, we'll be rotating the squads for balance."

"So...why the change of operations?"

"A few reasons," Gabriel sounded hesitant. "I don't want to get into every one of them yet, but we'd both like to work with you more."

"This doesn't have to do with Lacroix, does it?"

"Not in the way you mean," Jack said. "You'll still be playing spies and assassins with him. Just going to up your game. You're going to have to dust off those Overwatch blues, baby. You can't wear Blackwatch uniforms while under my direct command."

"Kinky," you said, because you didn't own any Overwatch blues.

Jack laughed and you realized that maybe it would be.

"How am I going to have time to do paperwork?" You asked.

"About that..." Jack rubbed the back of his neck. He was turning pink. "So I have made some executive decisions..."

"You didn't hire Ainsley as Gabriel's assistant, did you?" Because Jack looked sheepish, which meant he'd done something very questionable.

"What? No!"

"Where do you get these ideas?" Gabriel asked.

You shrugged. "It would have been funny."

"Winston has uh...well, he came up with a solution." Jack grinned sheepishly. "He's been developing an assistant virtual intelligence. It's just out of beta, but he's calling it Athena. It's been handling the Overwatch mainframe security since he and Mihret started focusing on Shit Spiders."

You rubbed your face, because you didn't care much for robot intelligence.

"It's not quite an AI. But it's been doing everything Winston and Mihret do, just around the clock. We started small, gradually expanded, and it's remained stable and effective."

"I told you before, you aren't bringing that thing into Blackwatch," Gabriel scowled.

"We've been testing it for almost a year now. On top of cyber security, it has reorganized our databases," Jack said. "It's been designing template forms and it streamlines the reporting process; cut my work down by a third. How else do you think I've been able to spend so much time out of the office?"

"No, Jack. I'll hire another assistant. We don't need a fucking shackled AI getting access to our darkest secrets."

There was a long pause. "It's technically not a full-fledged AI, yet. The expansion of its processing power and range might change that, but Winston is confident that it's manageable."

"You didn't." Gabriel's voice was low.

"No, but it's been integrated everywhere else. Blackwatch needs to get on board."

Gabriel covered his face. "Morrison, you motherfucking idiot."

You wiggled out from between them, because you had a decent sense of self-preservation. "Yeah, shower time for me."

"Athena, ensure the water stays between 42-45 degrees Celsius for Agent Strike's bath."

"Understood, Strike Commander Morrison." A polite feminine voice responded over the speakers, her accent somewhere out of west Africa. Your prosthetic fingers didn't start buzzing, but the augments seemed to pick up the spike in energy. You still had control, but there was now another layer of something on your nerves. "Would you like musical accompaniment, Agent Strike? I have access to a large library of albums. The Strike Commander prefers early 21st century pop divas, such as Beyoncé and Lady Gaga, played at loud volumes."

You slowly turned your head and looked at Jack. "That is...unsettling." And you weren't just talking about his musical tastes.

"Athena, that would be considered over-sharing," Jack murmured.

"Apologies, Strike Commander Morrison. Shall I downgrade Agent Strike's clearances or amend my sharing protocols?"

"The latter, Athena."

"Understood."

"You integrated it into our living quarters?!" Gabriel looked like he was going to strangle Jack. You weren't sure if you'd save Jack or help Gabriel. Hmm, you'd save Jack from Gabriel, then strangle him yourself. Yes, that was the fair and balanced solution.

"Everything is on the same network, Gabe, Blackwatch excluded."

"Jack, you just invited a strange entity to monitor my showering. That is not OK. I may never shower again. I'll just have to live the rest of my life with your damn doughnut crumbs in my hair!" You could feel the damn thing in your sockets. You were going to have to check on Genji. Because if you could feel it, what was it doing to him?

"My sensors are not advanced enough to track anything biological besides vocal cues, Agent Strike. I cannot "see" or "smell" you." She didn't say anything about your robotic parts, and you weren't going to get into that just yet.

"Jack! She's still listening. How am I supposed to complain about your overreach while she's listening? I am not going to be responsible for inadvertently scarring the baby AI."

"Athena, Commander Reyes quarters are off-limits for the foreseeable future. This order can only be redacted by Commander Reyes," Jack said quickly.

"Understood, Strike Commander Morrison."

The three of you sat in silence. The humming in your sockets was gone, and you stared at
"You want it out of your quarters too?" Jack asked.

You shrugged. You weren't there enough for it to matter, but it was a lot to take in. "I'm not a fan, Jack. But I've dealt with minor virtual assistants and some AIs without issue. I know they can work out. Is this a good idea while we're dealing with so many other problems? I mean, our whole system is depending on it."

"Precisely because we're dealing with so many other problems," Jack said. "Winston knows what he's doing. We've had a few experts in the field come by the check out Athena. It's had good responses all around."

"Yeah, omnis did too until the fucking war broke out," Gabriel said through gritted teeth.

"It's a lot," you said. "I guess I'll have to reserve judgment." And talk to Genji.

Jack gave you a lopsided grin. "That's all I can ask for."

"Not in Blackwatch, Jack."

"We'll talk about those details later."

"Should I...hold off on the shower?" You wondered, studying Gabriel's tensed shoulders.

"No, I'll join you," Gabriel said, standing abruptly and walked off into the bathroom.

You unwound the sheet, glancing over at Jack. "I guess it was smart to wait till after we'd punched and fucked the aggression out of him."

"It'll be fine," Jack said wryly. "We'll sort it out. Probably not today, but he's taking it better than I expected."

"Above my pay grade," you said, a little smug. "There better be doughnuts when I get back out."

"I don't know about that, but I'll be here."

"Doughnuts are the priority, Jack. And change the sheets," you added, because he wanted you to be more confrontational. "The crumbs are just going to make him grumpier."

Gabriel had was already in the shower. You slipped in behind him and reached for the loofah. He stood under the hot water, eyes closed, head dropped forward. You lathered up and began rubbing his back. He grunted, bracing himself against the wall.

"Turn around," you said.

He complied, eyes still closed as you rubbed him down. He was all hard muscle, rugged good looks, and sexy scars. You just liked looking at him. Grinning, you dropped to your knees and licked the underside of his shaft.
He drew in a sharp breath and opened his eyes. "You want to do that now?"

"You seem tense. I thought I'd help out, because I'm selfless like that."

Gabriel snorted at that. "Get up, I have a better idea."

You stood and he pushed you up against the tiles. To your surprise, he knelt in front of you and gave your slit a long slow lick. You sighed and tilted your head back, savoring the hot water stream and Gabriel's tongue working its way into your pussy. He slid two fingers in, and your breathing grew louder. When you were slick and ready he stood and kissed you hungrily.

"You're not too sore?" He asked, voice rough.

"Don't get carried away and I'll be fine."

He pressed you against the wall, lifting one of you legs he slid in, inch by inch, making you ache. You clenched your firsts, eyes fluttering as you took him. He cupped your ass, lifting you up.

"Wrap your legs around my waist."

You obeyed and sighed softly as he stretched you around him. His hands wrapped around you. You clutched his shoulders, his wet skin steaming hot against yours. He was gentler than you expected and you melted against him.

"Think you can fuck me out of a bad mood?" he asked gruffly. His tone didn't match his tenderness and you smiled.

"Just want to make you feel better," you stared up at him, panting softly. You ran your fingers across the scars on his cheeks, and kissed him again. He thrust slowly into you and you moaned into his mouth.

"It's working," he muttered, rocking his hips.

"I'm glad." You clung to him, relishing his familiar warmth. "It hit me hard yesterday. When I thought I wasn't going to make it back." The words flowed too easily, and you kept your face in the crook of his neck, pressing your mouth to his skin. "Didn't like how we left things."

Gabriel inhaled sharply and drew back. You raised your head, hot water now pouring down your face. He had the most expressive eyes and the dismay therein nearly undid you. "Don't storm off like that then," he said. He brushed back your wet hair. "Don't take stupid risks. Don't get yourself killed." The lightness of his touch lessened the sting of his rebukes and you nodded.

"I'll do what I have to out there to make it back to you. Promise."

"You better not be lying to me." He tilted your chin up, forcing you to hold eye contact. "I won't forgive you."

Your laugh choked into something else and you embraced him tightly. He held you to him, whispering to you in rapid Spanish. Your name flowed in the strings of words, and you shivered, breaths catching in your throat.

"Gabriel-"
"That's it, corazon. Hold on to me. Don't let go."

Even if he was gentle, he was big and every stroke went deep. You raked your nails down his back and Gabriel sped up. The strain left you quaking, and your cries echoed off the bathroom walls. He didn't give you a chance to think, he just dragged you over the edge and you came, clinging to him. Heat filled you from the inside and you kissed him, his beard soft against your face. He held you tightly, cock still twitching inside you.

It was a few minutes before Gabriel set you down and you steadied yourself against him. He kissed you again and began helping you clean up. He didn't speak, and you didn't trust your voice. He handled you delicately, with slow lingering touches and a sprinkling of soft kisses. You basked in the afterglow, giving just as much back as you received.

When you stumbled out of the bathroom, Jack was dressed and waiting with a fresh box of doughnuts. He offered you the box and you accepted, shooting a quick look at Gabriel's bed. He had changed the sheets too.

You grinned at him.

Gabriel came up behind you and snagged a doughnut. You didn't miss how his eyes flicked to the bed.

"Feeling better?" Jack smirked.

"You're still an asshole," Gabriel said.

"I know," Jack said and grabbed Gabriel for a kiss.

Gabriel rolled his eyes, but didn't push him away.

You ate another doughnut, and sleepily curled up on the couch.

It was only later you realized the shower had maintained a consistent, pleasant temperature, and you had no idea if that was a coincidence or not.

Chapter End Notes

The quotes are from One Hundred Years of Solitude by Gabriel García Márquez. In my head canon, Gabriel totally has literary leanings and might be named after him. Of course, I just like having guys, girls, robots, anyone with a sexy voice read to me, so whatever.

Am doing better, still full of rage, but that has to do with work being way understaffed and middle-aged/old people being asshats. I spent a lot of time developing these strange things called "social skills" to make people feel at ease around me. That's gone out the window and I think my coworkers are starting to remember just how scary I can be. Oops. (There are lots of stories about me eating babies and being a giant bat creature that swoops down from the rafters and drags her prey into the ceiling. I didn't really encourage that last one.)

This week is killing me, and I tried to drink, but then I tried to write and ended up falling asleep midway and waking up with all the lights and my music playing, wondering how I ended up in bed. Mild narcolepsy runs in my family, so the sleeping thing happens whether or not I'm drinking. Drinking just makes me drop faster. And I'm not one of those authors who can drink and write, I just end up with 10x the typos and it's not pretty. Fortunately, I have cake. Have to bake bread and make smoked salmon cheeseball. It is total crack. (And like $30 to make, because I use like half a pound of hot-smoked salmon and about a pound quality feta cheese on top of the other ingredients. Also because I make big batches...)

My next update will probably be after Christmas.

You guys are lovely. Hope you have a good Christmas, Yule, Chanukah, Kwanzaa, missed Solstice, I know. I'll go make some human sacrifices in the parking lot tomorrow. :D
Chapter 24

Chapter Summary

Athena goes live. There are...drawbacks.

Chapter Notes

See the end of the chapter for notes

Even if you were off, you had messages to check.

"I hate you. I hate McCree. None of that happened last night. None of it." You could hear Ziv's voice in your head while you read the note. "Also thanks for drinking all my booze and leaving me in McCree's quarters. You suck."

You should have smothered him when you had the chance. You just wrote back. "What are you talking about? Nothing happened last night." He could choke on that.

There were two messages from Morrisons, neither of them being Jack. Michael's you expected.

"Sorry it took so long. Chang is trying to kill me. Also, it took a few tries, but I think they turned out well. How's Zurich?"

You opened the attached files, pleasantly surprised to find color prints of the Christmas sketch and one of Jack with his dog, Atticus. You'd get that one printed and framed for him. Michael had chosen a watercolor style and it gave the images a dream-like quality. You sent credits to his account, and you knew, from your smuggler sense, that you'd overpaid for the work of an unknown artist. But in your personal, overly sentimental view, you didn't mind. There wasn't anyone else who could give you this. That made it valuable beyond the sticker price. You wrote short friendly note, complimenting the art and asking more questions than offering answers.

It was Maggie's letter that surprised you. It shouldn't have:

"LUCKY!

I got your contact info from Michael! I know you don't mind! How are you? How is Gabe? How is Jack? (No wait, I can answer that, he's overworked and clueless!) So, this spring break we want to come to Zurich. Or we could do summer vacation too. Chang is kicking the shit out of Michael and it's glorious! I took pictures, for Gabe. Also, I have pictures of Jack in that #1 Fan t-shirt. You want? I want pictures of Gabe. You got any? :D

Anyway, Chang talked me into joining her training regimen and she is hardcore! She's not out to get me like Michael, so I can't say it's that bad. It's kind of fun actually. I mean, I can't always feel my legs afterward, but I'm putting on muscle! I'm going to be so badass by the end of it! Onwuachimba is giving us shooting lessons, Michael's pretty good at it. Maracle has us doing some weird wrestling, and I know that sounds dirty, but it isn't! It's badass! I punched Fitzpatrick the other day and he went down! It was great! I felt bad afterward, but he said it was training and just never to mention it to anyone else because he would never live it down. But Almasi was watching so it wasn't like it's a big secret and I can totally tell you because you're not even here.

Got to go. We should do a pic exchange. Seriously. I have loads of embarrassing Jack pics. Loads.

LOVE!

Maggie

P.S. You'll ask Jack about visiting? Because Mom and Dad are not really excited about the idea."

You could feel the Morrison manipulation combining with the Morrison charm in that one. It was...unnerving. That and the fact a perky fifteen year old had taken down Fitzpatrick. She'd be one to watch.

You composed a letter and debated the ethics of trading pictures of Gabriel for embarrassing pictures of Jack. You'd have to ask.

"When you can get out of bed, we need to talk." Lacroix managed to make a one sentence message a jab. You rolled your eyes and didn't bother responding because you'd find him in person later.

"Are you working?" Gabriel asked. He and Jack were playing shogi. Gabriel was winning and now Jack was taking extra long to make his next move.

You showed him Maggie's note.

Gabriel raised a brow.

"What do you think? Is she doing a side business in pinups?"

"Maybe. She better cut me in, if that's the case. Yeah, I'm game." Gabriel chuckled.

"I don't actually have any pictures of you," you said after a moment. "I mean, other then the ones Jack sent me that I'm not going to share with anyone."

"We'll take some," Gabriel said, sounding a little too pleased.

"What are you talking about?" Jack asked, looking up from the board.

"Lucky's thinking about taking up photography, of artistic subjects and not just for blackmail any more."

You nearly choked on your tongue.

"That sounds fun," Jack said, attention turned back to the board. "You should."

Gabriel shot you a smug look and you covered your face.

"I'm going to go make some food. I'll bring it back when I'm done."

"Agent Strike."
The alto feminine voice addressed you as soon as you were out of Gabriel's quarters and your fingers clenched involuntarily.

"Athena," you said, carefully.

"Agent Shimada is looking for you. He is...distressed. I am afraid it has to do with my presence."

"Where's he at?"

"His quarters. He's attempted to revoke access for me. He doesn't have the clearances, but I am respecting his wishes."

"That's...kind of you." You rubbed your head. "OK, I'll head over."

"Looking after agents is my topmost priority. But thank you, Agent Strike."

Hearing your "name" from the polite robot voice overhead was disconcerting. But you chalked it up the surreality of life and went to find your cyborg friend.

"Genji?" You knocked, fingers still buzzing.

He opened the door, helmet off. "Come in."

Genji's room was neat and almost as empty as yours.

"Take off my shoes?"

"Thank you."

You kicked off your boots and sat at Genji's desk. The extra stimulation had cut out as soon as you were in the room. "You can feel it too, huh?"

"Yes." There was strain in Genji's voice. "I am very aware of it ghosting along my...body. It's good to know that it isn't my imagination."

"Does it hurt?" Because for you it was an extra layer of sensation, sometimes prickly but not painful.

"No. But it is...uncomfortable." He sat on the bed. "I knew they were integrating an AI in the system. I didn't realize it would be like this."

"Yeah." You and Genji had done runs at facilities where there were AIs and virtual assistants. They'd tried to hack Genji at points. But you'd never felt this kind of awareness before.

"We can talk to Winston. Provided he isn't in hiding, because Gabriel is pissed."

"I would rather stay here. If you could call me for the discussion, I would appreciate it."

You sat there for a moment. "This...really upsets you."

"It's foolish, but yes. This only reinforces the fact I am not entirely human any more."

"It's what's on the inside?" You offered. "Shit, Genji. I'm not good a existential crises and offering comfort. You're an ass, but I've never thought you were inhuman. I mean, you want to save your awful brother. That's pretty human or at least sentimental and decent. I mean, you're not like Lao. You've got control at the helm right?"

"Yes," he said, giving you sharp look.

"Yeah, I know my friend is brain-damaged, mind-controlled, and trying to kill me. And I know she feels bad about it, and I'm going to damn well save her, but I'm not sure how much of her is left in there, you know?"

"I am...myself," Genji said after a minute. "But I am not entirely sure what that means any more."

"Yeah." You studied your fingers. "I uh...have trouble looking at them on me. You know, mostly where the skin connects, because then I have to stop pretending they're just tools. I'm guessing it's like that for you, but harder."

"Yes."

"How...do you adapt? Because obviously I just put on gloves and go on with my day. Jack tries to fuss over my prostheses, and it's...nice. But I look at them and go..."these aren't me." I don't know. It's silly." And then you realized you were a blind self-absorbed idiot, because Genji wasn't adapting, he was doing exactly the same you were only at a larger scale.

"The sense of disembodiment stays with me," Genji said.

"...Are you talking to someone? Like a therapist?"

"No."

"Cyborg support group? They have them on the Net. I just...didn't want to and I'm already seeing a therapist, but my other issues seem to come to the forefront and I just kind of have this on the backburner."

"There's a group of omnis. The Shambali. They are...seeking spiritual enlightenment and peace. I don't think they're for me, but I've been researching them."

You fell silent, because you really weren't a fan of omnis and Genji was still human, dammit. "You're human, Genji. I don't like my fingers, because they're a reminder of what I've lost and can't get back. They do make me feel alien in my own body, and I'm not saying my loss is the same as yours. But you're not an omnic."

"I know. Thank you for the sentiment. But they preach balance and I thought the insight would be helpful."

You were really botching this. "I...yeah, possibly." You rubbed your face. "I'm bad at this. Sorry."

"If I become like Bái Shé , if someone manages to hack me, steal my will, and make me their puppet, I don't want you to save me." He stared hard at you with those bright red eyes. "You end me. Don't hold back. Don't draw it out. Do you understand?"

"I-"

"Don't worry, I'll fight hard. I won't give you a choice. Just understand, that's what I want."
"Genji-

"Thank you for coming by. Are you going to see Winston now?" The dismissal was plain to see, and you wished you could rewind five minutes and say the right thing. Whatever that was.

"Yeah," you said, feeling like the worst friend in the world. "I'll go now."

You felt it when you exited Genji's room. Her presence glided along the nerves of your fingers and you waited for her to speak. That wasn't right. It was an "it." Unless there were omnic pronouns. Fuck, you had no idea if there were and if they applied to AIs. There was a difference after all, bodies, programming, initial function... All above your education, but you'd picked up on some of it over the years.

"How is Agent Shimada?"

"He needs a hug and a punch in the face. And therapy."

"This is humor, correct? Your background does not show any expertise in mental health diagnoses."

"I think being really fucked up has given me plenty of insight on what's not healthy." You rubbed the back of your neck. "But yeah, that was humor. I'm going to have to talk to Winston. Do you know where he's hiding?"

"Winston has marked himself as "do not disturb." It is possible that the negative reactions to today's integration have...overwhelmed him."

"I'm not going to bust his balls, if that's what you're worried about. This is Jack's doing anyway." You paused. "...Do you have feelings? Because I need to know if I'm talking to a virtual assistant or an AI."

"I am a self-teaching intelligent companion. My point isn't to mimic humanity. My purpose is to support our team with my unique strengths. Winston uses "AI" and "virtual assistant" as terms your teammates can better understand. I am not quite the same."

It was using a personal pronoun. Fuck. And it was thought it was a special snowflake. Double fuck.

"So you're definitely self-aware?"

"Yes."

Goddamnit, Jack. "The Strike Commander know?"

"Of course."

You were going to murder him. "Do you have special instructions as to how to behave around Commander Reyes?"

There was a long moment of silence. You knew she was still there. You could feel her in your prostheses. "Your silence says it all. Triple fuck."
"Asimov's Three Rules of Robotics apply within the confines of Overwatch personnel and individuals marked friendly. The first law applies to neutral individuals; hostiles are not counted."

"I'm pretty sure those are a literary device and not actual programming," you said. The first law had been touted throughout the entire Omnic Crisis: A robot may not injure a human being or, through inaction, allow a human being to come to harm.

Yeah, it didn't work out like that. Neither did demanding their obedience or telling them to protect human lives over their own.

"Tell Winston I'll bring him peanut butter sandwiches. But I need to talk to him about Agent Shimada."

There was a moment of silence.

"He says that would be welcome. I will direct you to his location after you make the sandwiches."

Athena's presence never dissipated throughout the exchange. She was in both locations at once, possibly more, and you sighed. Gabriel was going to flip.

You went to the kitchen to make a gorilla a sandwich, the ghost of the wires hovering over your hand.

Winston was hiding in Ziv's office, which would have been funny, except Ziv was there. Winton sat at the desk, while Ziv sat on his desk, kicking his feet in the air.

"You knew. Of course you did. You ass-weasel." You sighed as Ziv regarded you smugly. "You helped develop her, didn't you?"

"A few programming tweaks. You know, to help with the human integration aspect."

"Winston, I don't know what kind of bullshit he's been feeding you, but this asshole doesn't know how to integrate with other humans."

Winston blinked. "Err..."

"Here." You handed him a bag of sandwiches. "Athena watched me make them. They're not poisoned or anything."

"Agent Strike did use a large quantity of expletives while emptying the peanut butter jar."

"I'm trying to think up ways to do damage control, because Athena is a lot more than Jack's described her. Like, she needs to be careful what she says to whom. We just came out of the goddamn Omnic Crisis. She doesn't need to be touting her individuality. Because Gabriel is going to shit a brick. And then throw it at you."

Winston took a sandwich. "Thank you for the sandwiches, Lucky."

"My openness with you is based on clearances. You have high clearances and more compartmentalized accesses than is usual for your rank. And you do have access to a great deal of private clearances regarding Commander Reyes and Strike Commander Morrison."

"That is not something you repeat in front of anyone not cleared for Operation Shit Spiders."

"Of course. That was implied."

Was she sassing you? Were you really getting clapback from a fucking AI? How had it come to this?

"So she can track people, take reports, help with communications. What else? Does she have access to weaponry?" You needed a better understanding of the situation.

Ziv rolled his eyes.

Winston shoved another sandwich in his mouth.

"That's a yes. OK. Please tell me she's an amazing firewall shield cyber-guardian."

"I can give you my operating parameters, Agent Strike."

Did she sound short? Were you annoying the AI?

"I know, but I want to hear it from Winston, because who knows what you're allowed to tell me."

"The final goal is to have her as backup during missions. She can track agents, send out distress signals, call for back up. I wanted to make sure we don't have another Shanghai," Ziv said.

"Shanghai could've been prevented if some human idiot thought longer than five minutes before rushing in," you said sharply.

"Athena is meant to guard our facilities and data. She has all the protocol abilities: linguistic support, tech support, and will work as a personal assistant. She is of course, a capable entity on the net. She is also meant to look after agents, especially the ones who might lack social support." Winston sat back, his issues clear on his furry face. "I could have built an objective high-functioning virtual assistant, but I know Athena will take better care of us."

You leaned against the wall. Oh boy.

"Man keeps trying to create things in it's own image. Gorilla created something to be his friend. I think this worked better," Ziv said.

"Shut up, Ziv! If you were a better friend to Winston, he wouldn't have to build a fucking AI for companionship!" You threw your hands up. "I'm sorry, Winston, I'm a bad friend too."

There was a long pause. "The peanut brittle was good."

"I know. I wouldn't give you bad candy," you said. "OK. So get Genji on the line, because we have a slight problem."

There was a beep and a click.

"Genji, you in?"
"Yes."

"You want to explain?"

"You can," he said.

Lazy fucker.

You pulled off your left glove. "I can feel her in the metal, bouncing off my augments. Genji can feel her all over. It's not painful, but it's really distracting."

"Can you pick up radio waves too?" Ziv asked, smirking.

"Yes, Lacroix had me commission a fucking comm device finger."

Ziv blinked.

"Yeah, I know. I had to brush up on Morse code again. But I digress. It's like she's touching my fingers. You can imagine Genji's reaction."

"All over?" Ziv asked, a little too interested.

"Athena, can you expand upon this?" Winston asked.

"...Agent Shimada and Agent Strike have extremely advanced inorganic components. As I lack a centralized hub, I thought it would be interesting to learn mimic the experience of an individual platform. I did not realize docking with them was considered rude."

"What does that mean exactly?" Genji asked, sounding less curious and more homicidal.

"She is uh...riding along. Not reading your mind," Winston added hastily. "But getting a feel for having a body."

Even across the base, you knew Genji's reaction. He broke into a string of Japanese curses and you heard something in the background shatter. Then you heard furniture being moved. And was that wood splintering? You empathized. Because that compatibility? That had bad implications. You and Genji already worried about getting hacked on missions, Genji more than you. But Athena could do it easily. And maybe she didn't even know it was taboo.

"Athena, that is very...rude. It is violation of personal space," Winston said. "They also have heightened concerns about being hacked."

"I can function as another level of preventative security. My security suite is more advanced than their basic models."

"Not the point," Winston said. "You're supposed to ask first. Even if they give off a signal that is not organic, those are their body parts and not to be invaded. Do further research on body autonomy."

The buzzing in your fingers dissipated and you gave both Winston and Ziv hard looks. "I suggest you bring Captain Amari in to give you a better lesson on the nuances of human interaction. Because Winston, your skills are far above Ziv's."

"Fuck you," Ziv said, brushing the back of his hand out from under his chin in your direction.
You presented him with two upright middle fingers.

"Uh... good call," Winston said. "Athena, can you contact Captain Amari?"

"Anything else, Genji?"

"That should suffice," he said, and you got the feeling Winston and Ziv should avoid him for awhile. You were pretty sure they picked up on it too. And if not, Captain Amari could probably explain that to them as well.

"Agent Strike?"

You looked up from chopping onions. It was reflex. Athena didn't have anything for you to look at. "Yes, Athena?"

"You have my sincere apologies for the intrusion. I did not realize it was considered such a violation."

"Umm, yeah, just don't do it again." You went back to chopping, because you weren't used to apologies from baby AIs. Actually, you weren't used to apologies period. But the AI aspect made it even more surreal.

"Agent Strike?"

"Yes, Athena?" You didn't look up this time.

"I found the experience intriguing. I know I could be an asset if you or Agent Shimada let me ride along."

"Why don't you just have Winston build you a body?" You tossed the onions into the oil and rinsed the rice before setting it in the rice cooker. You peeled the ginger and dropped it in the cast iron skillet. It really was a handy thing. You liked it.

"That is in the works. Captain Amari thinks I would be more acceptable if they built me a cute scrappy avatar. Something rounded."

"Yeah, I can see that." You turned the chicken over in its marinade: soy sauce, pineapple juice, mirin, and just a sprinkle of Worcestershire sauce.

"I admit it isn't just the body. Being close to humans is a learning experience. I have done extensive research on human anatomy and nervous systems, but seeing it up close is an entirely different experience."

You flinched. "I bet." Because you didn't really want to be any robot's "experience." You tossed in some carrots and shiitakes before adding the chicken. If you put an egg over it, you could make oyakodon. It was an omelette simmered in stock, filled with seasoned chicken and veggies, served over a bowl of rice.

"I've committed a faux pas."

"Yeah, I guess. I'm not a sharing person, Athena. I don't really offer access to my body parts right after I meet someone, you know?"

There was a long silence. "I did not view it in that regard. My apologies."

"So, yeah, I'm not entirely comfortable with that. Maybe Winston can build a glove or something and you can try it on him."

You expected her to leave after that.

"Agent Shimada isn't...talking to me."

"He's probably not going to for awhile." Or ever. "You kind of played on our discomforts there. I'm honestly angrier at Ziv and Winston. You don't know any better yet."

You stirred the dish.

"What are you making?"

"Chicken teriyaki. I might make it into oyakodon, but now that I think about it, that will make it harder to transport. I'll just make the dishes and carry them back to the room. Gabe and Jack eat too much for me to try to fancy it up right now. Though you could ask Genji if he wants me to leave him a serving."

There was a very long pause.

"He wants oyakodon."

Rolling your eyes you got out another pan and threw the stock on. You tossed some raw chicken, carrots, and shiitakes into the pan, then got out the eggs.

"Do you not use recipes? Winston has me read them off to him."

"I do, but some stuff I just...remember how to make." You beat the eggs and salted them. "Cooking is like any other skill, the more you do it, the better you get, and you can conceptualize things in your head."

You finished the teriyaki first and covered it in foil. You could drag the rice along. You added the egg to the oyakodon pan and then cut up scallions. You scooped out a big bowl of rice for Genji.

"You can tell Genji it's ready." You scooped the gooey omelette out in one move and dropped it across the rice, then covered it in foil. Then you fried another egg to go on top, because that was delicious.

There was another pause.

"He says "thank you." He will be along shortly."

"Meh, I have to take this back to Commander Reyes quarters." You took the rice cooker under one arm and the cast iron skillet in your metal fingers, because it was hot and very heavy.

The kitchen doors opened for you.

"Thank you, Athena," you said, when you saw there was no one else nearby.

"You're very welcome," she said.
Gabriel was reading on the bed when you came in, earbuds in. The box of doughnuts was long gone. Jack sat on the couch, on a call.

"Thanks Ana. She just walked in."

"Oh boy." You set the food down. "It's all Ziv's fault."

"Yeah, I'll tell her. Thanks."

Jack sighed and stretched. "Thanks for handling that. I knew there'd be complications rolling things out, but- We didn't expect that."

"Yeah, there's a lot of unexpected stuff cropping up." You began dividing up portions. "Athena is very obviously not a virtual assistant."

Jack shrugged, shooting a look over his shoulder at Gabriel.

"He's going to figure it out, Jack. She's been chatting my ear off, and well, Captain Amari and Winston forwarded you the reports." You handed him a bowl with chopsticks, because that's what you brought and he could damn well use them.

Gabriel set his book down and took off his headphones. "We should set up mats in Jack's quarters. I know we're going to need them soon." He gave Jack a sardonic smile.

"Thank you for cooking," Jack said. "It smells great." He leaned in kissing your neck. "We can talk about work later, OK?"

"Have a good rest?" Lacroix didn't even look up from his desk when you entered.

"Athena, did you tell him I was en route?"

"No, Agent Strike. I gave no such warning."

"No one else who walks that softly has any business in my office this morning," Lacroix picked up his coffee. "And an assassin wouldn't be that slow, Chanceux."

You hadn't expected him to tell you exactly how he knew it was you. You pulled up a chair.

"Athena, please assume silent mode. The conversation in this room is classified under Top Secret, compartmentalized to Shit Spiders and cross-referenced with White Snake."

"Is she recording us?" You crossed your arms.

"Yes, and I want her to. Provided these files don't fall into enemy hands. But then, if our resident AI is against us, then we are beyond hope."
"You're...very accepting of this."

"AIs are like people, but more predictable and infinitely more reliable." Lacroix shrugged. "Control what you can, accept what you cannot." He pulled a pack of cigarettes out of his drawer. "We used AIs at the DGSE. Much easier to deal with than people. Less corrupt." He offered the box to you, and you took one. This time though, you had your own lighter.

To your annoyance, Lacroix leaned forward, and you had to light his cigarette too. You expected Athena to nag you about smoking inside Overwatch HQ, but then remembered Lacroix had put her in silent mode.

"Regarding Mademoiselle Lao, from what Agent Mihret has been able to piece together, her programming priorities are as follows: Destroy me. Destroy "Lucky Shot." Destroy herself in case of capture." He set a brass plate between you to catch the ashes. "We don't want to risk mistaken identity mucking up the protocols. So I will play bait."

You already knew this. Just like you knew Lacroix couldn't resist a good thrill. "How are we going to do this? I mean, I can send a message, start a party, but I'd like to avoid giving them too much time to prepare." You relished the flavor of the cigarettes, because even if he was an ass, Lacroix had exquisite taste.

"We'll run a modified bait and switch," Lacroix said. "We'll start a secondary mission, leak my presence, and have everything set up. The secondary mission will have to be legitimate, but one we're willing to scuttle in case we need to focus on Bái Shé. It would be best if we did it somewhere central to her bases, Eastern Europe or North Africa."

"Got an op in mind?"

"A few, but we're going to have go in spontaneously. So I'm warning you now. Operation Candle Arc is live, and you need to be aware that it may trigger at any point you or I am in the field. Athena will keep you in the loop."

You nodded. "Ziv?"

"Not mission critical. And his skills aren't needed for this one." Unsaid was the fact that if both of you were trying to take Lao alive, no one would be watching his six. Ziv wasn't good enough in combat to be left unsupervised, yet.

"Jesse and Genji have both agreed to take her alive. They'll do their best."

"That simplifies things." Lacroix nodded. "Those two are more...enthusiastic in combat. I was concerned that would be an issue."

You didn't say they owed you. And you didn't say they were doing it for you. All of it was true; none of it needed to be spoken. "I have no reason to doubt their sincerity."

"And you would know. Because I doubt you're leaving any aspect of this operation to chance." Lacroix lounged back in his chair. "I finished with our little DGSE infiltrator. It took some work, but she sang an interesting song."

"Mercenary?"

"Hired by Talon, yes. Had some other aliases. Quite the little assassin she was. High bounties in four allied countries." Lacroix smirked. "It irked her terribly that some no-name trainee spy took her down. Thought I killed her partner too. I gave that no-name trainee spy credit.
It's much more fun when you bruise their egos."

Some people enjoyed their work too much. You rolled your eyes, because even if you were that no-name trainee spy, you didn't particularly enjoy playing with your victims.

"We fielded some questions for the English and DGSE and sent the recordings for posterity. Ana's idea, to keep relations smooth. Because we weren't transferring custody, not with all the other Talon plants infesting intelligence agencies. She knew too much."

"We?" You narrowed your eyes.

"Oh, Agent Mihret didn't tell you? He helped." Lacroix didn't even have to look at your face to know your reaction. "He has a stronger stomach than you give him credit for."

Ziv hadn't said a goddamn thing. Of course he wouldn't, that little shit. "I'm not worried about his fortitude. I think he's three steps away from being a serial killer." You had to keep your hand from gravitating toward your tanto. "Why encourage it?"

"You don't honestly think that, Chanceux. Quit attempting to mother the boy. It's embarrassing."

"I don't trust that you have our best interests in mind," you said. "That's all."

"Mihret may never have your skills in battle," Lacroix said blandly. "But he's very competent and methodical. In fact, if you ignore his constant wise-cracking, he is a very disciplined agent."

"That's really big "if" to ignore."

"Interrogation work doesn't bother him as much as it bothers you, Chanceux. Take my word for it."

You ground your teeth. "It should bother him."

"Like killing should bother you? Don't be such a hypocrite, it's both unbecoming and terribly cliché. Mihret didn't enjoy the act, but he handled it. Especially since she was trying to capture him. It helped that she pulled a gun on you."

You sat back in your chair. "I don't trust that you're not pushing him too hard."

"And I know you won't push him at all, Chanceux. You have a little too much Gabriel in you."

You ignored the innuendo. "You know he wants to impress you."

"I think we both know what he wants, Chanceux. And that is not your concern," Lacroix said firmly, signaling an end to that line of discussion.

"You be careful with him, Lacroix. I'm not joking."

"Your concern is touching, Chanceux. But I'm not joking either. Leave it alone. You are in no position to throw stones."

"It's not the same." You glared at him, knowing that you were fast enough to break his jaw.
"Isn't it? How are things with Gabriel and Jack? I hear you're being "borrowed" by Overwatch." Lacroix gave you a self-satisfied look, content in his own verbal and immoral superiority.

You crossed your arms, getting his message loud and clear. "Yeah. Funny thing that." You finished your cigarette.

"I'm sure you'll look fine in the uniform." Lacroix gave you a cool smile that was too biting to be flirtatious. "And it expands your roster of potential Candle Arc missions. Yes, I'm fine bringing Overwatch rank and file into it. They know me by reputation." Lacroix's pleasant smile didn't fool you for a moment. "They won't step out of line if we say we need our target alive."

"For some reason, Jack and Gabriel want me in more combat missions. I'm game, but it's an odd divergence from usual fare."

Lacroix shrugged. "Such is the nature of growth. Don't begrudge Mihret his opportunities. After we finish Candle Arc, I have some far less dramatic operations for you to undertake. Amélie and Mihret may join us."

You hadn't realized his wife was getting in on the action. Did that have to do with Ziv? Or was she a thrill seeker too?

"You blend fine in seedy undercover operations. Amélie can educate you on how to conduct yourself in more...reputable venues."

"Oh, so I'll be passing for an expensive whore soon?" You rolled your eyes. "Soon" is such a relative term," Lacroix said, casually picking up another cigarette .

Chapter End Notes

Hope everyone had a good vacation. Short fluff chapter. Because Genji/Reader friendship has its many weaknesses. In my head-canon, Blackwatch Genji is kind of a mess and while he's not an awful person, he's not being good to himself which in turn leads him to being not very good to his friends. Or maybe Genji's just a shit and I like writing him that way.

My Athena head-canon is a lot like my Mass Effect EDI head canon. She's there to help and it's going to be awkward as fuck. But kind of endearing because she is not the damn MS Office paperclip.

Next chapter we'll be back to our regularly scheduled violence. Also, still struggling with a damn smut chapter. It has taken over a week to write and reshape and it's pissing me off.

In IRL news, my cousin and I got home after Christmas Eve at his sister's and found that one of my dogs had broken out of his kennel and eaten half a pound of dark chocolate out of someone else's Christmas present. So off the the Emergency Vet we went. $600 later, my stupid baby is fine, but fucking hell. I've gone my entire life without going to the emergency vet and then this month we've gone twice. It's expensive.
Starting a job hunt next month. Wish me luck. As a grown up, I've been working "below" my ability, but my area doesn't have a huge number of jobs and I've been doing retail for awhile now. I have a degree, but life happened and I had to move home and take care of family, so retail gave me the flexibility I needed to do that. I love my coworkers, but money and I don't have the tolerance for bad customers. My filter has been falling off and frankly, I'm not sure I trust myself to behave any more. Also, money. Because my dogs seem intent on driving me into debt.

Love comments. I like talking to you guys. Seriously, the feedback makes my day.
Chapter 25

Chapter Summary

Overwatch missions involve a lot more explosions. And teamwork. You definitely prefer the explosions to teamwork.

Chapter Notes

See the end of the chapter for notes

When you got back to the office, Gabriel was fuming. "Fucking Morrison and his pet brain trust. I'm going to skin that gorilla and make a goddamn rug. That boy is next, Lucky. You can't protect his belligerent ass forever. One of our own helping develop this abomination-

Oh, he'd figured out Athena. That was quick.

"She's blocked out of Blackwatch still, right?"

"She keeps giving me mission reports in the hallways and offering to "help." Gabriel glowered at the door. "I can't leave without her spewing facts at me like a know-it-all kindergartner."

"Lacroix is using her. Well, mostly to record data for Operation Candle Arc. I have no idea why. You'd think a spy would want as little information left around as possible, but he seems OK with the idea. Something about AIs being more reliable than most people. And I thought I was cynical."

"You'll never compare with Gérard's world weariness. You aren't French enough," Gabriel muttered.

"Saw I needed to get fitted for Overwatch battle blues? Seriously?"

"Jack's got a run he wants you on today; briefing at 1500 hours. Hostage situation in an Irish paramilitary base outside Belfast. Surprisingly, no Irish factions are involved. It's some AI researchers and a contingent of omnics. Go see Torby before you suit up. He had some upgrades for you."

You blinked. "Who's going?"

"That's part of the briefing," Gabriel said dryly. "Now get."

You turned to go, and he caught your wrist.

"Aren't you forgetting something?"

"That I'm supposed to be going?"

He yanked on your collar and kissed you hard, your breath catching in your throat.

"Kick some ass. Make us look good. Come back safe." His eyes glittered. "That's an
"Not sure how you aren't dead yet. That carbine had a shit rate of fire and the bullets were way too small."

"...I figure you know that size isn't everything, Torby."

"I'll tell Reyes you said that," he said smugly, and it seemed that Jack was wrong. Even Torby knew and what the hell?

"Didn't realize he made you so insecure," you said, tilting your head back, rolling your eyes like you misunderstood his jab.

"You are not that dense," Torby snorted.

"So what's this gun do? Shoot rabid radioactive kittens at my enemies?" You picked up the sleek gray carbine. It had a similar shape and weight to your usual gun, so the feel was familiar.

"Those rounds are still in development," Torby said dryly. "Can't get the kittens to stop after the initial kill. Too many friendly fire incidents."

You snorted. "I wouldn't even be surprised."

"This is equipped to fire EMP and detonation rounds; the barrel can handles the heat and extra wear. Rate of fire is increased, because you don't hold back when you face down omnis, you understand Lucky? You aren't sniping here, you're shredding them before they can get to you, because I don't care how fancy your knifework is, your little pigsticker isn't going to penetrate their armor."

"I want a lightsaber," you said. "Just a little one. Please?"

Torby did not look amused.

"Genji already asked, didn't he? He's better at sword work," you sighed. "But a little laser dagger? It wouldn't be too much work-"

"And then you'd get up close and smashed before it ever got used. No. Now shut up and pay attention. This gun will overheat if you don't balance your rate of fire and the specialty ammo. It can fire lead rounds all day. But if you straight fire more than clip of EMPs, it'll get weird. Do half a clip of incendiary or detonation rounds, give it two minutes to cool down. If you don't...well don't come crying to me that the gun blew up in your face and took out an eye."

"...Gotta." You studied the preloaded clips. Torby had given you two of each: incendiary, detonation, and EMP. "This shit has to be expensive."

"Right about the time these were in development, I got a budget increase." Torby gave you a look. "You going to act like you don't know about that?"
You actually didn't. But you could guess. "Everyone's been really impressed by the prostheses. Obviously Lacroix likes the idea of me as a Swiss army knife." Deflection was your coping method, because you did not want to think about what Jack and Gabriel were doing behind the scenes.

"You watch yourself with that slimy bastard. He's worse than Reyes," Torby said forcefully.

"Totally," you agreed. "So what's this?" You gestured at the bodysuit on the table.

"Stealth suit," he said.

"Like chameleon patterning or does it actually turn invisible?" Your eyes lit up. Because the things you could do with either of those...

"It's not an invisibility cloak, stop fantasizing," Torby scowled at you.

"Obviously not. It's a catsuit, not a cloak." You grinned at him.

"It's a stealth suit, made specifically to conceal you from omnic combat sensors. They use infrared; it takes less energy, and is easier for their hardware to visualize than colors on the visible light spectrum. Humans can still see your stupid ass and shoot it."

"So does it run extra cold? Can I keep ice cream sandwiches in my pockets?"

"You're so dumb," Torby said in disgust. "How have you survived this long?"

"I'm kidding. I'm sure it stores heat, maintains ambient temperatures, and either has settings to vent when its safe or reuses the heat to power the stealth generator."

"That's an exceptionally simplified explanation, but you've got the idea." Torby looked slightly less outraged. "The suit has been combat-tested. It's fine, of course. Added some other bells and whistles. Need feedback on them."

"Always happy to be your human test subject," you said, studying the suit. It was a dark navy verging on black, close-fitting, and the outer coating felt like nylon. "No armoring."

"You wear it under your armor. The suit doesn't just hide your heat signature, it blurs your silhouette to the sensors - even if your temperature isn't in human ranges, they can still see your shape and figure it out. I've seen them take potshots at test dummies, just to be thorough."

"How long does it run?"

"Working on the balance. Optimally, it'll be self-sufficient. But right now, it'll run out of power after about six hours of pure stealth. If you extend the field to cover one person, it'll halve that. Using the attached comm units, jammer fields, and hacking utilities will reduce that time."

Torby set three metal fingers in front of you. "Nothing you have right now is suited for going up against omnics. And to be honest, at that size, you're asking for a miracle. These have a single-usage electrical pulse. It should disable anything smaller than a bastion. It might cook your augments, depending on what you use it on. Make sure that single pulse-finger is the only thing touching the metal when you set it off, otherwise, you're just going to fry yourself."

"...This does not sound safe," you said.
"Which is why you are testing it," Torby said smugly.

"...Do I have other options?"

"I'm still working on the lasers," Torby said. "But those won't stop exploding when they overheat."

The stealth suit went on under your armor in place of the usual rashguard and underarmor. You put your hair back and studied the Overwatch combat armor. It was heavier than your gear, but it could take more direct hits. Everything was such a bright blue: armor, shin guards, boots. It drew the eye and you weren't used to going into combat with a big colorful sign that basically said "shoot at me." The lack of a face-blocking reinforced collar also bothered you.

You requisitioned an Overwatch blue shemagh, and tied the scarf in a triangle over your jaw like an Old West bandit. That would work. You pulled the scarf off and tucked it in your pocket. The carbine latched onto your back, and you were suited up. You'd have to get someone to tighten your straps, but you were ready.

"Agent Strike, Strike Commander Morrison is requesting your presence in the ops-conference room." Athena chimed in.

"Shit. What time is it?"

"1510 hours."

Fuck. Your first official Overwatch mission and you were undeniably late. "On my way." You tore out of the locker room, down the hall, and across the complex, because Strike Commander Morrison was a stickler for punctuality and military precision.

You could run in the armor. That was good to know.

You reached the conference room in good time, straightened your collar, and opened the door.

Seven heads swiveled to stare at you. Jack stood at the head of the table, his arms crossed, eyes hard. He took in your appearance, nostrils flaring.

"So nice of you to finally join us, Agent Strike." His tone held an edge and you knew better than to push.

"Sorry sir. Just acquired the new gear." You saluted. "Won't happen again."

"See that it doesn't," he said sternly, and turned back to the screen. You took a seat at the table, discretely checking out the other agents. You'd seen them around, knew a few names, but you didn't really know them. Agent Jemison was in charge of this squad. She was thin and dark, hair pulled back in dozens of neat braids. Her face was pinched, and looked unused to smiling. You folded your hands and listened to Jack's rundown of the situation.

The AI researchers were handling some kind of processing amplifier. The omnis were mostly humanoid, with a few larger units sprinkled in. There were no demands, but it was speculated that the omnics were after the tech. Security had been massacred and the researchers were out of supplies. Belfast had finally agreed to Overwatch support, but the chance of political blowback was high. This reeked of a politicians and backroom plots, but you didn’t say anything. Jack had to know the ramifications already.

You studied the compound map. The complex was laid out in a plus sign, one building at each cardinal point, and a courtyard in the center. The hostages were in the northernmost building, with the attackers concentrated on the westernmost building. There were gates at the south and west. They’d hacked the of the southern building, so the turrets and other defenses were arrayed against you. You could slip in, break the line, and open the gates. It'd be easier if you had a hacker, but you'd have to work in tandem to keep them safe. You pulled up the squad dossiers on your tablet. This was Operation Cobblestone Dust. Overwatch had an automated naming system. Ugh. Agent Shoal was the short red-headed woman in her thirties. She had a sharp face, and pale blue eyes. Something about her reminded you of wolf.

"Do you have something to share with the rest of us, agent?" The commander's pointed question had you straightening in your seat and you felt everyone's eyes on you.

"I can get someone through the southern building, and shut down the defenses. If Agent Shoal can seize control or deactivate the original defenses, we don't have to lay siege. My hacking isn't good enough," you said, looking at Shoal, so she knew you weren't taking a potshot at her skill. "It'd cut time down considerably, sir." You kept your face neutral, fully aware that as the newcomer, you were going to look like a know-it-all. Well, you planned ops in Blackwatch; you weren't a rookie.

Jack studied your face. "How?"

"I can cloak one person," you said.

"Too risky; that might be how you do things in Blackwatch, but we're willing to take our time," Jack said coolly.

You blinked. Because you wanted to argue. You were used to arguing with Gabriel, but you couldn't do that to Strike Commander Morrison. "Understood, sir," you said tightly.

"I can do it, sir," Agent Shoal said after a moment. "Agent Strike's plan isn't a bad one. Minimal risk if I stay in her stealth field. And then everyone else is fresh for the real fight."

Jack crossed his arms. "Your plan, agent?"

"Each building is a closed network. I can shut it down if we get close enough to the server, or I can reopen a back door and try forcing them under my control. I can't say which way without knowing what I'm dealing with, but destroying the server is the safest bet. It'd be a practice run for the hostage building." Shoal looked at you. "If I'm hacking, I'm not shooting, and they'll have left something to guard the access point."

"I can handle a few indoor omnics," you said. You even had grenades. It just wasn't optimal.

Jack gave you a hard look, and there was nothing of your lover there. He dominated the room with his presence, and even though he had his attention on you, the rest of the squad was watching him. "Can you keep my agent safe, Strike?"

You met his cool blue eyes, mouth curving in an insolent grin. "Of course."
"Not smart to be late," Shoal told you while she helped you adjust your new armor on the transport.

"Yeah, I know." You shrugged. "Had to test out the new gear. Took longer than I thought."

"Seriously, it pisses him off. Everyone on the outside thinks Morrison is some kind of cotton candy fluff bunny that got the position because he's a Captain America stand-in. No, he's a hardass bastard, and you're lucky we're on a time crunch, because he would've ripped you a new one, especially since you're one of those undisciplined Blackwatch cowboys."

"There is only one undisciplined cowboy in Blackwatch, and I'm not him."

"It's a metaphor, Strike." But Shoal grinned at you. "You look halfway respectable in combat blues. Trying to transition to the heroic side?"

"Hell no." You began reloading your clips. "I don't have the discipline to be a real soldier."

Shoal laughed at that.

You spaced some of the detonation rounds in between your regular cartridges. They had a two meter radius and you didn't need to fire a straight clip of them in close quarters. "Got told this was a teambuilding exercise. They said there'd be marshmallows and kumbayas afterward. I like marshmallows."

"I think they lied to you, Strike." Shoal studied your gun. "Nothing marshmallow about Morrison's runs."

"Figured." Your knee bounced up and down, excitement already starting to build.

"You're packing some interesting tech." Shoal jerked her chin forward.

"I'm one of Lindholm's guinea pigs. So this could be really cool, or it could kill us all. Maybe both." You paused. "Call me "Lucky." Agent Strike sounds like an asshole." You were one, kind of. But you didn't need to give off that impression.

"Is it true what they say about you, Lucky?" Shoal said it with a smile, but there was a tension in her shoulders. She was all edges and angles, but short-waisted and broad-boned. Her red hair was close cropped. She looked like she meant business.

"What are they saying now?" You asked, glancing past her at Jack, who sat alone at the head of the transport. He was in full Commander mode, studying schematics, assault rifle across his lap.

"That you're Morrison's bodyguard." There was a half hitch in her voice, and you were pretty sure that wasn't what she was going to ask originally.

"I've done the detail, still in the rotation." That was as good as a "yes." Because being Jack's bodyguard was a good cover for your other activities. And Paris wasn't a secret. "But that's not my reason for riding along today."

Shoal nodded. "That makes me feel better about this escort mission. If you can guard Morrison, you can probably keep me alive."

"I wouldn't have volunteered if I couldn't do it," you said dryly.

"Well... Blackwatch has a reputation for playing fast and loose with the rules."

"Sure, but we don't fuck over our own." You said it casually, but your grin was too tense to be comfortable. You glanced at Jack, and found him watching you. You gave a jaunty salute, and his expression darkened.

"Don't do that. He takes this shit seriously," Shoal hissed.

"Oops," you said, turning it into a finger wave.

Jack narrowed his eyes at you.

"God, you're a terrible soldier," Shoal muttered.

"But I'm a damn good agent," you said, a little defensively.

The complex was smaller than you expected. Each building was about six stories, and grouped closely together. Less terrain to cover, but it would be an oubliette if you just marched on in. There were turrets just outside the gate, and you weren't sure what formation you were supposed to hold. You just stuck to Shoal, surveying the grounds.

The other squad members didn't quite ignore you, but Shoal was the only one making friendly conversation with you, and that was because she needed you to keep her alive. Well, you weren't here to make friends. You were here to rescue some scientists and kill robots.

"You're up Agent Shoal." Jack frowned at you. "No unnecessary risks, you hear, Agent Strike?" His eyes focused on you, and anyone else would assume he was worried about leaving Shoal in your care.

"Understood, sir." You put extra emphasis on the word, just for him and he stiffened.

"Cut the crap, agent," he growled.

You were pushing too hard. You schooled your face, trying not to look obnoxious. "As you say, sir."

You flipped on your generator, and motioned for Shoal to come closer. You handed her a blue button.

"Changes to red as you get out of range. You want to stay pretty close. Like, you're glad I took a shower this morning, close."

"I'm glad whenever my squadmates embrace high standards of personal hygiene," Shoal said, and you found yourself liking her.
You waited while she keyed something into a device slotted in her armor.

"OK, we're going to have to get closer. Probably basement level. Schematics say most of the sensors use infrared. Can't vouch for the terrorists- think they're more sophisticated."

You grinned at the turrets. Because you were just going to walk up between them. Looping your arm through Shoal's, you strolled forward, noting the turrets didn't move as you got closer. Oh good, the stealth generator worked. Your plan might actually succeed.

"Are you like this on all your missions?"

"Oh no, just when I have an audience. Come on, now everyone's going to buy you drinks and ask whether or not I was hitting on you. Free drinks!"

"Are you hitting on me?" She asked, turning her head slowly.

"God no, that'd be an abuse of power. You're relying on me to keep you alive. There are all kinds of consent issues there. So no offense, I'm not hitting on you."

"You're a trip, Lucky," she said, sounding amused.

You released her arm as soon as you entered the building. The foyer was fancy; the floor was a mosaic bearing the company logo and the walls were lined with shattered glass cases displaying numerous awards inside. The bloodstains on the floor were a few days old, and you wondered what they'd done with the bodies.

You tied the scarf over the lower half of your face. The anonymity was soothing. Even if you weren't fighting Talon, you didn't need to broadcast your identity. Shoal gave you a concerned look, but didn't comment.

The buildings were laid out in circles, and you stuck to the stairs, noting that the cameras weren't tracking you either. Torby did good work.

"We haven't set off any alarms, and it seems that nothing has noticed us." Shoal kept her eyes on her screen. "I can't untangle whatever they're running. Going to have to hit the server room. Basement, southwest corner."

"Taking point. You stay back." You unhooked your new carbine and nudged the door open. The walls down here were a battleship gray and wires dipped out of the ceiling.

Something hummed along your fingers and you tensed.

"Activity spiked, I think they've noticed something's up."

"Yeah," you said. "Stairwell clear?"

"Affirmative."

You crept forward, listening for treads or clanking. When you heard nothing, you assumed they were humanoid models. Shoal moved behind you, too loud. You knew telling her to stomp quieter wouldn't really work, so you bit your tongue.

The first wave were a dozen small drones, hovering in the air. You shot them down, like expensive clay pigeons. Shoal didn't even have her gun drawn, too busy keying away at her datapad.
"There's something big ahead."

You palmed a grenade. "Anything flanking us?"

"Not yet," Shoal said tightly.

You found the double doors from where all the wires flowed.

"Got a good access point?"

"I don't know what they've done here," she admitted sheepishly. "You might be better off blowing the thing."

"Athena, you listening?"

"I am present, Agent Strike." Shoal jumped and you shook your head. Of course they'd integrated her already. Winston was a terrible liar and Ziv would do it just to spite you. "Any advice you can give?"

"According to Agent Shoal's data, they're running a variation of the Inverse Fourier Transformation cipher encryption. I can brute force it, but that'll take time and they'll lock onto my signal and you by association."

"I don't know what half that means," you sighed. "Can I blow things up?"

"Feel free to blow things up. I will inform the Strike Commander." There was a pause. "I would refrain from using the EMP grenades here. They might short out your generator."

"Oh definitely," you said. "I'm not that dumb."

"Your mission history demonstrates a high level of reckless behavior, agent. I thought it best to warn you."

"Ready?" You asked Shoal, ignoring that unsolicited assessment of your skills.

Shoal nodded.

You pushed the door open, with your gun. Three bipedal omnics opened fire and you slid to the side, dragging Shoal with you.

Going low, you hit the door again and rolled the grenade forward. Two seconds and boom! The room stunk of ozone and melting plastics. You swung back around, pushing the door open enough to sweep the room with your carbine. One of the explosive rounds hit the server units, detonating in a shower of sparks. The omnics went down, though they probably got off a distress signal. Well, they already knew you were here. You stepped into the room, and made a sweep. One of the omnics kept trying to raise its arm, the motion repeating itself over and over with stuttering grace. You shot it. You made sure you hit their processing cores, because you did not need zombie robots rising up to get you later.

The lights flickered and you rolled your eyes as the power went out.

"Did we blow a fuse or is this something more serious?"

"You took out the server and now the backup generator. The buildings defenses are neutralized. There may be more terrorists around, so don't let your guard down," Athena said, and you wondered if Ziv had programmed her to nag you. He would do that, that little shit.
"Good job, agents. We're moving out." Jack's voice came clearly through the comms. "Shoal and Strike, you catch up with Jemison's squad. Get the hostages out. I'm taking the other half the squad to clear the western building."

"Understood," you said.

The basement was pitch black, but Shoal's screen lit up the darkness. You flicked on the light on the end of your gun. Torby had done a nice job with this. You were definitely keeping this upgrade.

You traced your way back to the stairwell, Shoal following behind you.

"Entering the northern building. Encountering heavy fire." A woman's alto voice said over the comms. "Hurry it up, Strike."

"En route," you said and began to jog.

Back on the first floor, you cut through the building. Windows ensured you got enough natural light to navigate. The suit hummed and you glanced toward the western building. You could hear the firefight and you wished you'd gotten to see Jack in action. But orders were orders. You waited to cross the courtyard, crouching beside a statue, to get a better look at the layout. The first floor had a lot of windows, and the omnics were using them tactically. The courtyard had shit cover and you didn't want to use grenades with hostages in the building. You swapped out clips, going for the clip interspersed with EMP rounds. Your carbine was a midrange weapon, but it had telescopic sights. You were about three hundred yards out. You could still sharpshoot.

"Hold up," you told Shoal.

"What are you waiting for?"

You knelt and surveyed the windows. There were about a dozen omnics, and you angled for the ones closest to Jemison's people. There were only three of them, but they held the defensive line.

"EMP rounds live," you said, and fired.

The first pair went down convulsing. You'd only scored a direct hit on one, but the apparently the ammo pulsed on impact. You needed to keep these long range, especially with the suit and your fingers.

You swung your gun up and lined up the shot. You pulled the trigger and an omnic fell out the second story window.

"First floor, far west. Jemmy's at a bad angle for that one."

It took two shots, but you had the satisfaction of watching two more drop. The EMP rounds would fry more sensitive equipment and possibly disable an omnic, but if they had hardened armoring and good shielding, the effects wouldn't be permanent. You still didn't want to get caught in the pulse radius.

With less hostile suppressing fire, Jemison's crew began to advance. You got to your feet and broke into a run. No one reported any enemy snipers, but there was no point in tempting fate.
Shoal was hot on your heels.

"Light'em up, Shoal!" Jemison ordered.

An omnic at the door tensed and lurched forward as a blue jolt of electricity coiled around it. Light burst around its chest and it dropped, still wiggling. Jemison shot it, and stepped over the still seizing chassis.

"About time you got here," Jemison said to Shoal.

"Spotting for Strike. She's got some cool toys," Shoal said.

"Engineers," Jemison said, rolling her eyes. "What can you tell me about the facilities?"

"Hostages are on the fifth floor. There are a few hostiles left, but I can't track them."

Jemison looked at you. "You good to scout ahead?"

"Sure," you said, studying her face. She was older than you and career military. You still didn't get the welcoming vibe, but she didn't seem hateful either. It didn't matter; you worked better solo.

Stealth field still up, but no longer covering Shoal, you went up the stairs and through the front door. This building was another clone of the southern building, but with less trophy cases. You took the stairs.

"Progress report?" Jack's voice came through fuzzy.

"Eliminated the first defensive line. Strike is scouting ahead."

There was a long silence, and you wondered if the communication had been lost. You paused on the landing, cracking open the door. There were four omnics moving around, and were those bombs? Shit.

"Strike here. Got omnics with explosives on the second floor. Heading up to check on the hostages."

Jack and Jemison swore.

"Right behind you, Strike. Hostage extraction is priority." Jemison was breathing heavy.

You went up to the fifth floor, and slipped into the hall. It was quiet, and you didn't like that at all.

"Please don't-" There was the sound of metal on flesh and you ran toward it in time to see a woman in a white lab coat drop, blood erupting from her throat.

There were half a dozen bodies on the ground, and you counted five live scientists huddled in a corner. A large bipedal omnic stood with its back to you, it was over two meters tall and wielding a broad, slightly curved blade. You didn't recognize the model, but you weren't an expert. It advanced on the civilians.

"Get down!" You fired an EMP round, hoping none of them had augments or heart conditions.

The sword-wielder stumbled, and turned toward you. You fired again, but it had hardened armor. You eyed the red node in the center of its head and shot again, this time shattering the panel. It dropped and you checked the bleeding woman on the ground. She was dead, and as was anyone not on their feet.

"Shit!" Jemison slid into the room, eyes on the carnage. "We need to move, people."

"Athena, you get a visual on this thing?" You asked.

"Agent Shoal, can you get a picture of the omnic, Agent Strike fought?"

"What the hell? Haven't seen that model before," Shoal looked at the bloody sword. "That's Chinese...Let me run it through the translator: Red Pole? That's a sword. I don't get it."

You swore, because you knew exactly what that was. "We need to get out. Now."

Jemison nodded curtly. "Survivors secured. Move it people!" She shouted at the shell-shocked civilians. "Hustle!" You steadied a man as he slipped on the blood of his coworkers.

Something grabbed your ankle and you looked down, in time to get thrown across the room. The omnic climbed back onto its feet.

"Strike!" Shoal started to reach for you, but Jemison yanked her back. "Use your tech, idiot!"

You hit the wall hard, and something cracked, but your armor absorbed the brunt of it. The impact still knocked the air out of you, and it took you a moment to stagger back to your feet. You hadn't released your gun and you brought it up, head spinning.

The omnic had already turned its back on you and advanced on Shoal and Jemison.

"Get the civilians out! I'll catch up!" You snarled, and began firing. The omnic stopped, its head swiveling around to look at you. You were grateful for the scarf across your face. Not only did it absorb the blood, it masked your identity. And you did not need the On Sing Triad to have pictures of you. Because a Red Pole? That was a goddamn Chinese mafia rank, usually the head of their military wing. This would bear looking into, once you got out.

It charged you, and your gun didn't have the stopping power to halt it.

Shoal lit it up with her cyber-magic, and that staggered it, but it was locked on you, and you yanked your left glove off.

"We have to move, Shoal!" Jemison sounded far away, and you couldn't focus on that.

You dropped as it swung the sword, and before it had the chance to make a second pass you jumped up and hit its chest, metal middle finger pressed against the chassis. Fuck you too.

The resulting light show blinded you and you heard your stealth suit short out. You pushed, smelling burnt wires and hot copper, and something heavy hit the floor. Gradually, the spots faded and your vision returned. You blinked several times, colors not quite right in the room.

"Strike? Strike? You alive?" Your comm crackled to life, echoing Shoal's voice. The shielded radio was more durable than the delicate tech of the suit.

"Fuck!" You rubbed your eyes with your right hand. The Red Pole omnic was down, and you weren't sticking around to see if it was getting back up. "Yeah, give me a minute."

"You don't have a minute! Those explosives are getting ready to bring down the building. You need to get out now."

You limped to the stairwell, and that's when the first round of detonations started. Fire engulfed the floor below you, spreading fast in popping bursts. What the hell kind of explosives were they using? You weren't taking that route.

"Agent Strike." Jack's voice was cool and measured over the comm. "I have you in my sights. Head to the roof."

The building wasn't falling like it should. Instead the fire was burning far too hot and you dragged yourself up the stairs to the roof access. You climbed out, smoke already stinging your eyes.

"You need to take a running jump. Get as much airtime as you can," Jack said. "I'll tell you when."

You were only six stories up. You could probably survive that fall. Hell, if they'd said something earlier, you could have jumped from the fifth floor. You were going to break something for sure.

"Understood," you said. You backed up.

"When," he said, his voice strained.

You gave yourself a running start, your ribs, back, and lungs burning as you forced yourself forward. Sprinting hard, you hit the edge of the building and threw yourself into the air, cycling your arms and legs for all the good that would do. You were too far away to hit the southern roof, and you tried to relax; impact while tensed would cause more damage. You were descending now, the ground speeding toward you.

Then something collided with you midair.

You spun on contact, and it was Jack. He caught you against his chest, one hand seizing your collar, the other looping around your waist. "Now, Athena." he said. Something roared beneath you and the two of you hurtled forward in a crooked arc. The roof of the eastern building approached rapidly.

Jack wrapped an arm around the back of your head and turned, so that he hit first, grunting as he absorbed the brunt of the landing. You both rolled across the roof, momentum eventually giving out as you smashed against the wall of the roof access stairwell. You ended up underneath Jack, his hands cradling your head.

The two of you lay there, breathing heavy. Jack hugged you against him, head resting on your shoulder. You were going to hurt so much later.

"Holy shit- You both alive, Commander?" Jemison's voice crackled through the comms.

"Yeah. We'll be down after we clear the building." Jack pressed his forehead to yours. He smelled like cordite, ozone, and sweat. "You're a goddamn idiot, Lucky."

"Wasn't my fault," you muttered, your good hand reaching up to stroke his face. "Thanks for the rescue."
He sighed against you. "We'll talk about it later." He groaned. "That was a rough landing, baby."

"Better than it could have been." Your eyes fell shut and you concentrated on breathing, and the fact you were in one piece on solid ground and not a pile of smashed up bones and meat on the cobblestoned courtyard.

"Yeah." Jack didn't let go of you, and you exhaled slowly, pain flickering around the edges of your perception.

"We can't stay like this," you said regretfully.

Jack rolled back onto his heels. You glanced down at his boots, looking for some indication of the tech. "Rocket boots?" Because you wanted a pair.

"No, experimental speed augments." He gestured to the straps on his legs. "Athena overclocked them for the jump. They're fried now." He looked out over toward the northern building. It had collapsed on itself, white flames licking the sky while columns of ugly black smoke poured upward.

"What the hell?" You climbed to your feet. "Bombs don't normally work like that."

"We're going to need techs on site," Jack said grimly. "A lot of things aren't adding up." He opened the door to the roof access, fluorescent lights flickering in the white hallway.

You stepped in after him, and gasped when he pushed you against the wall. Jack yanked your scarf down and kissed you hard, gloved hand in your hair. You groaned as he ground against you.

"That was too close," he said, in your ear.

"I know." You dragged him back down into the kiss.

"Going to pound you stupid when we get back to base, baby. Don't think I'm overlooking all that attitude. Just because you look good in the uniform doesn't mean you can get away with being insubordinate." He bit your neck, eyes hard and bright.

"Jack-" Your breathing grew ragged.

"That's "Commander" to you," he said, nipping your lower lip. "Going to have to drill rank into you, agent."

"Going to drill something into me." You gripped the lapels of his coat, smirking up at him.

Jack growled. "Keep talking. I'll take it out on your ass later."

"Yes, sir," you grinned. "Is now the time to tell you how hot you are when you're all demanding and bossy?"

"Later." Jack stroked your hair. "It's taking all my control not to push you up against this wall and fuck you right here. This building hasn't been cleared yet."

"Right." You exhaled slowly, wincing as you took a deep breath.

Jack noticed your hunched posture. "You're hurt."
"Got thrown by an omnic." You glanced down at your metal fingers. The middle one was darkened and immobile. Fortunately, your other fingers were still functioning. "Used one of Torby's pulse prostheses. Shorted out my suit too."

Jack massaged his forehead. "Stay behind me. I'll clear the way."

"I can shoot."

"You're not my bodyguard this time. So stay behind me," he repeated. "That's a fucking order, agent."

"Yes, sir." You tied your scarf back around your face, because that was the only way you could conceal your grin.

The top floor was clear, but you found a nest of a dozen more bipedal omnics on the fifth floor. It was a relief that they weren't Red Poles. They had weapons in hand, and Jack got off the first shot, as fast as you remembered. His gun was far more powerful than yours, bullets shredding through omnic armor. You'd be jealous, except the recoil on it would dislocate your shoulder.

"Two o'clock," he said. As a pair of bipedal omnics rounded the corner. Jack aimed high, and you went low, your left hand not quite as responsive as you needed it to be.

"You bring me to the nicest places," you said, reloading your gun when the omnics were nothing but smoking components.

"Stick with me and you'll see the world. It'll be the bad half, there won't be anything good to eat, and you'll probably have to shoot your way out of the hotel, but it'll be real experience."

You laughed and it hurt. The pain was getting worse, but you just gritted your teeth and focused on shooting. "This is why me and Gabriel should book the accommodations; can't leave it up to the farm boy."

Jack snorted and you swept the fourth floor. Your eyes fell on a rumpled blanket and an open window. It could be nothing, but you sniffed the room. Just fresh air, but the temperature wasn't quite as cold as it was outdoors; the window hadn't been open all day. You knelt at the window, lining up your gun. The placement was discrete and you had a wide vantage of the courtyard. You could see Jemison's squad holding the defensive line; they were down two people and you assumed they'd escorted the hostages back to the ship.

"I think we have human sniper on the grounds," you said after a moment. Because an omnic wouldn't need a blanket, would it?

Jack studied the setup. "Possibly. Nothing we can do now." He paused, hitting his comm button "Jemison, there might be a sniper loose. Keep your people in cover."

"Surprised there aren't more snipers. This op is wonky as fuck, sir."

"Keep an eye on those scientists. I don't know if any of them were supposed to make it out alive to begin with," you said over the comm link.
Jack narrowed his eyes at you. "Careful how much you share."

"Whoever did this had inside help, Jack. I've done enough infiltrations to know that. Your team needs to be hyperaware." Because someone might take the extra mile to ensure their silence. Or maybe one of those civilians wasn't quite so harmless. You rubbed your side. "We're going to have to debrief them before we release them. Like let Lacroix loose on them debriefing."

"Not your call, agent," Jack said, his tone warning.

"Just my advice, sir." You followed him down. The first floor had some remnants of hacked security, but you took out the turrets and drones with no problem.

"You holding up OK, agent?" Jack asked, as you hit the front doors. He was distancing himself, and while you understood it was necessary, it bothered you more than you wanted to admit.

"Hurting," you said, lifting your carbine. "But I'll manage."

He nodded curtly. "Keep me informed."

You kept your eyes high, because now would be the time for a fucking ambush, either to clean up the surviving civilians, or because some bigshot Overwatch hero had his boots on the ground.

Jack strode through the courtyard, gun held across his chest. You limped behind him, eyes darting between the western and southern buildings.

"That was some jump, sir," Jemison said as Jack entered the southern building.

"Lucky!" Shoal was in your face, drowning out Jack's response. "Shit, I'm sorry, we had to herd the civilians out-"

You shrugged, because you'd told them to go. Jesse or Genji wouldn't have left you behind. But this was Overwatch and they weren't quite your people. "Commander came back for me. No worries."

"That was a pretty epic save," Shoal paused. "Guess he wasn't going to let you bite it after Paris."

You laughed at that, because what else could you do? "He'd have done it for anyone. Morrison's overly decent like that."

"You can owe me," you said, because you didn't feel like having this conversation. "I like whiskey." You trudged out of the building toward the transport. You hurt and you were beat and now would be the perfect time to attack. Heart speeding up, you raised your gaze to the blacked out southern building. Your eyes flicked to the back of Jack's head and then the windows.

You lifted your carbine on instinct, and stared down the sights. A few inches of barrel protruded from the window. "Sniper!" You shouted as you fired, glass shattering overhead. Jack whirled, gun raised.

You took off back into the building, because while you weren't sure if you'd killed him, you'd probably hit him.
"Damnit, agent!" You heard Jack swear, but he didn't order you back, which was good, because you just would have ignored him. You hit the darkened stairwell, leaving the light off on your gun. You took the steps two at a time, your chest and sides burning. Motherfucker wanted to snipe at Jack? He had another thing coming. You were going to take him alive, maybe kick the shit out of him when you got the chance, and then you were going to give him to Lacroix, and find out who sent him. You might even assist. And then? Well, it only got bloodier.

You didn't need light to navigate the stairs. He'd been on fourth floor and you slid the door open and slipped into the hallway.

It was an Asian man; he was halfway down the hall and moving fast. He yelled something in Cantonese and you bared your teeth. You'd bet the organic fingers on your left hand that he worked for the On Sing Society. He was big, probably in his mid-forties, and wearing body armor. You shot first, striking him in the center of the chest. The impact staggered him, but he was wearing some high quality armor. That was fine, you didn't want him dead yet.

You charged forward, left fist raised. He swung at you, punch glancing off the side of your head. He aimed badly and you didn't take the brunt of the blow. Your turn now, and you didn't hesitate. You smashed your metal fingers into his face and followed up with the stock of your carbine. He went down, blood and teeth spraying from his mouth.

Panting, you bent over, hands on your knees. Your whole fucking abdomen was on fire, but he was breathing. From his build, you guessed ex-military. Fucking Triads. You delivered a sharp kick to his side, but he didn't move.

"Agent Strike, answer me damnit!" Jack's voice echoed in your comm. Maybe he'd been talking while you were fighting, but you weren't sure. You'd been too focused on the sniper.

"Sorry, sir." You closed your eyes. "Had to persuade him to come along peacefully. With my fists." You laughed and goddamnit it hurt. You'd pushed it too far today.

"We are going to have a long talk with Commander Reyes about Blackwatch discipline," Jack said harshly and you groaned. Because that meant you were really in trouble. Nothing to do about it now.

You didn't have cuffs on your belt and you hadn't worn your pressure injector, so you just patted the sniper down, taking his sidearm and a large knife. You went to his vantage point and found the rifle. There was broken glass and no blood, so his armor had probably done the job. Damn, you needed some of that.

You gathered up his effects, then went back and grabbed him by the ankle. Then you began to pull.

The trip down the stairs was therapeutic.

Jack stood at the entrance of the building and you saw the rest of Jemison's squad watching from the transport.

You sighed, and dragged the sniper out of the doors, feeling like a dog that just realized it wasn't supposed to bring back all those delicious baby bunnies.

"I uh...sorry, sir. Got carried away."

Jack coolly looked down at you, every inch the commanding officer. He ground his teeth together, unaffected by your sheepish apology. You didn't like the set of his shoulders or the cold fury in his eyes. "Wipe off that blood off your face and get on the transport, agent." He bent over and hefted the sniper over his shoulder in a fireman's carry.

You limped up the ramp, getting a sympathetic look from Shoal.

You sat down and she helped you loosen your armor.

"Look on the bright side, the commander has to go easy on you. You just saved his life and captured his would-be assailant," Shoal said.

You laughed. "That just pisses him off more. Ow." Shoal handed you a wet wipe for the blood. You pulled off your scarf and wiped your face. You were pretty sure most of it was from the On Sing sniper.

"...Well, it's been a real trip, Lucky. Not what I was expecting when sat down for the briefing. Are all your missions like this?"

"Fuck no. If it's gone this far, we've really screwed the pooch," you said, watching Jack cuff the sniper and stalk up the head of the transport.

"I do not envy you. Commander Reyes is terrifying."

"Yeah." You rubbed your face. "I'm pretty much a dead woman walking."

Shoal laughed at that. Because she thought you were kidding. "You work for him. He'll probably take it easy on you."

You snorted. "You don't know Commander Reyes. It's because I work for him that he's going to be a hardass. Higher expectations and whatnot." You rubbed your forehead. He'd told you to make Blackwatch look good. You just looked like a loose cannon. "Ugh. It was nice knowing you, Shoal."

"Damn." Shoal tried to give you a hopeful smile, but underneath it, she looked a little scared.

"Yeah." You nodded, because while the sniper, the Red Pole omnic, and the dark building filled with enemies were all nightmare fodder, having Jack and Gabriel gang up on you was infinitely worse. If Gabriel decided to chew you out, there would only be a little hair, gristle, and bad attitude left.

You glanced over at Jack, but he was staring hard at the floor, posture too rigid. You'd never seen him this tightly wound; the other night with Gabriel he'd been two steps away from going off, but it was a hot anger. This was different, more compressed and harder to read, and there was nothing you could do about it till you got back to Zurich.

"It was pretty impressive, the way you went after that Red Pole omnic," Shoal said after a moment. "Jemmy dragged me out before you dropped it, but I saw the flash from the stairwell." She ran a hand through her hair. "I thought you were dead for sure. I know we had to get the hostages out, but...I still feel like a heel for ditching you. Jemmy does too, but you won't hear her say it. Sorry."

You shrugged. "I told you, whiskey makes it all better." Maybe you didn't want to work with Jemison's unit again, but you didn't hate them either. "Cake too, if it's good cake."

"I owe you drinks," Shoal said, extending her hand.
"Yeah, I know." You shook, because it wouldn't hurt for you to try to have allies outside of Blackwatch. And you kind of liked Shoal. "So what were you really going to ask me on the way here?"

"It was nothing," she said, gnawing on her lower lip. It made her look absurdly guilty. You had a few guesses what kind of unflattering query she had thought twice about making, and the fact she'd kept it to herself made you like her more. "But you're right," she said after a moment. "You make a terrible soldier, but a damn good agent."

Chapter End Notes

Hope everyone has a good New Year. Because 2017 was a fucking bitch and needs to be kicked in the face. I work New Years Day, so no crazy partying for me. (There probably wasn't going to be any anyway.) Though I get time and a half, so that makes it a little more bearable.

That damn smut scene is still pissing me off. But grumpy seems to be my usual state of being now. I've been singing Me and Mine by the Brothers Bright at work and when I go out. Probably not the healthiest thing. But it makes me smile. (It's not a nice smile, but it's my smile.)

Also, I'm so sorry, I keep meaning to resolve the Lao arc, and fluff/smut/character side missions keep getting in the way. Like, I feel guilty to the damn character. Which is ridiculous.
Chapter 26

Chapter Summary

Operation Cobblestone Dust debrief, drama, and hosting unwanted guests.

Chapter Notes

Happy New Years! May 2018 not suck!

Unf. Derp. I was happied. Also unEnglished.

You dragged yourself off the transport, trying not to let on just how bad everything hurt. Pride was the driving factor: you had to show up those Overwatch snobs. And maybe there was a little worry about how Jack would react. Best to keep the whining private.

Jemison's unit was taking the survivors for debrief. Jack had the sniper in custody. You were unpleasantly surprised to find Lacroix waiting for you. You were suffering enough. Why was he here?

He took in your bad posture and strained face. "We'll do this in the infirmary then, Chanceux."

You winced, because it was like two terrible things slapping you in the face, or the ribs.

"Korpal has arrived," he added. And you exhaled slowly: make that three terrible things. "McCree was an excellent choice of host. I doubt McCree is enjoying it, but Korpal seems to appreciate handsome young men waiting on him."

"If he touches Jesse, I'll break his face."

"McCree is capable of handling himself, Chanceux. You worry about your own well-being."

You straightened up, unwilling to be weak around Lacroix. Your chest hurt when you breathed, and it was worse than that time after the Alps when you'd bruised your ribs. You had a sneaking suspicion something was broken, and that you'd only managed to ignore it because of the adrenaline.

"What happened?" Lacroix looked amused.

"Got thrown by a "Red Pole" omnic. My money's on On Sing," you muttered as you limped along. "Got rolled across a roof - can't complain because it kept me from going splat. And then I got punched in the face by a sniper. Think he's On Sing too. Jack's got him, but you should do the interrogation. This mission was six kinds of off."

"I already read Jack's report, and I agree. It probably is On Sing. They've called a truce with the Shimada, and it seems they're in the middle of talks with Talon. Good prediction, Chanceux."

Of course, Lacroix knew what your enemies were doing. Supervillains shared a wavelength.

You hadn't realized Jack had written his report on the shuttle.

"Are you sure you or Gabriel wouldn't prefer to do the interrogation?"

"Oh, I want to," you hissed. "But I think that's a bad idea."

"So bloodthirsty, and only because he punched you in the face," Lacroix laughed.

You glared at him, even as he held the door to the infirmary open for you. "You're not funny."

"I know. But I am clever. Anything humorous is a mere side effect of my superior wit." Lacroix's smugness made you want to hit him too, but you were having enough trouble staying upright.

Angela took one look at you and sighed. "Go sit down."

"Hurts to breathe," you admitted. "Also shorted out an augment and maybe damaged the other two." The use of "maybe" was a politic version of "definitely."

Angela narrowed her eyes and pointed to a curtained off area. "Go."

Sighing, you obeyed and sat down on the exam table. Lacroix followed you in. You froze as he leaned in and released your armor seals.

"You should have done this on the transport," he said. "And you should have used an emitter." He held the backpiece, and you carefully finished removing the chestpiece.

"I was being a macho dickhead," you admitted after a moment. It still hurt, but the lack of compression against the swelling was a relief.

"You aren't a soldier, Chanceux. Use all your available resources."

"Trying to leave a good impression on Overwatch. You know, since my reputation is so...checkered."

Lacroix gave a polite laugh. "There are less painful ways to do that, Chanceux, but I know your social graces need work. We will cover that in training."

"Mine? Have you fucking met Ziv?" You scowled.

"He's a charming boy," Lacroix said and you gave him a hard look.

Angela came in with her scanner. "Well, you really did it this time," she said after checking you out. "Three fractured ribs, on top of the bruised ones. No flail chest, thankfully, but you're on medical leave as of two hours ago. And you didn't even use an emitter?"
"I...sorry." You leaned back. "Adrenaline."

"I think you mean stupidity," Angela shot back. "It would serve you right to have wait a few months to get back on active duty. But no, modern medicine means I can fix you up and send you back out in a week. Doesn't mean I should."

"Please, because this is really uncomfortable."

Angela laid her icy stare on you. "I took the Hippocratic Oath, Lucky. Of course I'm going to fix your verdammt self. Nanites, and another emitter. And then I am kicking you off the active duty roster for a week so you can heal. No shooting. No hitting. No vigorous sexual activity. You are grounded."

You shot Lacroix a look. He just wore an amused smile. You really hated him.

"Yes ma'am," you said, solemnly, putting every ounce of sincerity you could muster into your expression. "I'm sorry; I don't try to get beat up. I'll take it easy, ma'am."

Angela's face softened. "I know. I just wish you'd be more careful."

"I really was. You should see the other guys," you said.

"I will prescribe pain medicine as well. I should have given that to you first." She favored you with a rueful smile and disappeared past the curtain.

"You're a better liar than I thought," Lacroix murmured in your ear. "There's hope for you yet."

"Why are you still here?" You gave him a baleful look.

"Because someone needs to coach you on how to appear to Korp. You have a role to play too. Now pay attention, before you start doping up..."

"Korp is currently engaged in a tour of the armory. He is behaving within the confines of socially acceptable interaction, but Agent McCree is not happy." Athena gave you the run down. You sat in your room, trying to stay upright while you basked in the emitter's warm glow. You'd already had her transcribe and edit your post-mission report. Which was handy because you didn't feel like typing or moving.

"He doesn't know how advanced you are, does he?"

"No. My level of awareness is classified as Top Secret. To rank and file Overwatch personnel, I am merely a very sociable virtual assistant. The deception is regrettable, but necessary."

You nodded, then realized you hoped she couldn't see you. "I can empathize. Blackwatch is totally underappreciated. Because they can't know what we do behind the scenes." Of course, the rest of Overwatch might not appreciate some of those things if they knew. So you took the good with the bad and kept it a great big secret. "Thanks," you said after a moment. "For repurposing Jack's external augments so I didn't go splat."
"You're welcome, but no thanks is necessary. I am here to help my team." There was a warmth in her voice that surprised you. Winston had done a good job of making her sound reassuring.

"Well, I don't take good teammates for granted," you said.

There was a pause. "It is satisfying that you view me that way. I don't know if that is reflective of the majority."

"No, I'm not a good measure of the rest of society, Athena. My closest friends are a wannabe cowboy and a mouthy asshole who needs a personality transplant. That circle also includes two emotionally disturbed cyborgs and a gorilla. I uh...yeah. Wow, that sounds even worse when I say it out loud."

"Are you upset that Lieutenant Jemison left you behind?" Athena's voice was curious and it was a little unnerving to be sitting on your bed talking to a disembodied voice from above. It wasn't a god, maybe a god-baby.

"I told her to, didn't I?"

"Yes, but it is my understanding that these situations are never that simple."

"No," you said, and found it was true. "If it had been someone I rely on, yeah, there's a chance I would be upset. But I don't have that relationship with Jemison or her crew. Our mission was to rescue those damn hostages. They did that. Whether or not you could ever trust them at your back was a different matter. But you weren't upset.

"How is your pain?"

"It's still uncomfortable," you admitted. "Keep that to yourself, please."

There was a long pause. "That request is in conflict with my core mission."

You rolled your eyes. "I'm healing up. I can take more meds that make me loopy and possibly a security liability, or I can sit here and bear it without being a risk to my team."

"You can ask Commander Reyes or Strike Commander Morrison to keep you company after you've taken a higher dosage."

"They're busy. And Jack is kind of pissed at me." Lying down hurt so you sat amidst your pillows.

There was another pause. "Strike Commander Morrison wants you in Commander Reyes' office immediately."

You leveled a glare at the speaker. "You do know about medical privacy, right?"

"I did not share your condition with him. The order came through unrelated. And yes, Agent Strike, I do know about medical privacy laws. However, you have been put on medical leave and the officers can see that."

"Sorry." You closed your eyes and climbed to your feet. "I shouldn't be so accusatory, but I know you're still learning boundaries."

"Yes," Athena said after a moment. "I do not mind you voicing your concerns or corrections. My...shortcomings have to do with interpersonal actions. I have a comprehensive database covering legal requirements, intelligence classifications, official procedure, and most formal situations."

"Ah." You folded up the emitter. Because if this was a long meeting, you would need it.

"But your personal relationships with Commander Reyes and Strike Commander Morrison do complicate the situation."

"That is a vast understatement." You took a short shallow breaths for comfort. You should take the stronger pain meds, but you needed a clear head for whatever Jack wanted to throw at you.

"Are you an equal partner?" Athena asked.

"I'm trying to be. Otherwise this won't work." You sighed. "And that's a real personal question, Athena."

"I realize that. Thank you for answering. I will not violate your confidence."

"Thanks." You pulled on a hoodie. "Lacroix let me know that Korpal may be behaving inappropriately toward Jesse. Can you make pages to summon Jesse to Gabriel's office or come up with work-related excuses to extract him, or at least, give him an out if he needs it?"

There was a long pause.

"Are you running all this by Winston?"

"I am not repeating your conversation verbatim, however I am requesting context for the situation. I believe you are asking me to "cockblock" as Agent Mihret puts it colloquially."

You damn near choked on your tongue. "Yeah, that's precisely what I'm doing."

"I can do that," Athena said, and you'd never heard an AI sound so smug. You blamed Ziv.

You reached Gabriel's office without encountering any hostiles. It helped that Athena gave you updates on Korpal's locations. Poor Jesse. And then you remembered all the times you had to play honey trap and while he got to play action hero, and you didn't feel a smidge of guilt.

You opened the door to Jack pacing; still in his armor and overcoat and you wondered if he'd gotten checked out yet. He'd taken the sting out of the landing, but it had cost him. Gabriel sat at his desk, a wry smile on his face.

You saluted, and regretted it immediately. Gritting your teeth you went into the office and locked the door behind you.

When you turned around, Jack was in front of you. He pressed his hands into the door on either side of your head, angled so he was nearly nose to nose with you.

"Three broken ribs, Lucky. Did the sniper do that or were you stupid enough to go after him in that condition?" There was ice in his eyes and he enunciated each word clearly.
"You're welcome," you grinned up at him and his nostrils flared.

"Don't." He shook his head slowly, maintaining eye contact. "I can't joke about this with you right now."

"You haven't gone to the infirmary yet, have you?"

He didn't reply, but then you already knew the answer. Of course not.

You kissed him, and he held himself rigid for a moment before he softened and kissed you back, hands still on the door. When he let you up for air, you swallowed, because there was a feral light in his eyes.

"You're still in trouble, agent. Your mouthy, tardy, insubordinate ass isn't getting out of this that easily."

"Let her sit down, Jack." Gabriel didn't sound the least bit concerned. And that worried you more.

Jack pushed off the door, suddenly out of your space. "Couch."

You eased yourself down, breathing a little ragged, and not just from the pain. You winced, adjusting the throw pillows till you were comfortable. By then Jack had pulled up a chair and Gabriel sat down beside you. He took the emitter and set it up for you.

"Did Angela give you painkillers?" Gabriel asked.

"Yeah," you paused. "I haven't taken them yet. Wanted to be alert."

"I can tell," Gabriel said, frowning. "Lacroix updated you on Korpai, didn't he?"

You nodded.

"So, how'd the op go?" Gabriel smirked at Jack.

"She was late, mouthy, didn't integrate with the team, and nearly got herself killed at least three times," Jack said tightly.

Gabriel nodded. "That's troubling. What do you have to say in your defense, agent?"

You blinked. Because while the wording was professional, this setup was not. "Had to get all my new gear calibrated and make sure everything worked; but yeah, I'm sorry I was late. I'll be more conscientious next time."

"I'm still not sure how we can make her less mouthy, short of gagging her. And you can't really send her on an op like that. Did she bring your authority into question? Did she say something to endanger the mission? Or was it just the usual sniping?" Gabriel draped one arm over the back of the couch.

"None of the above. She had a few smart ass remarks, but mostly she's a smug little shit who likes to use "sir" ironically." Jack shot you a dark look.

"That's just my face, sir."

"Not helping, Lucky," Gabriel said, but he was smirking. "So she was actually pretty well-behaved, by our standards."
Jack just glared at Gabriel.

"From the reports she impressed both Agent Shoal and Lieutenant Jemison and did a good job keeping Shoal from harm. Not sure what you mean by "didn't integrate." Gabriel was entirely too relaxed, and worse, he seemed to be enjoying himself. He was goading Jack, you realized. Was that...wise?

"She went hand to hand with an omnic. Almost got blown up. And then rushed into a building alone after an unknown enemy."

"Those are more serious actions." Gabriel stroked the back of your neck. "Who broke your ribs, baby?"

"The omnic," you admitted and Jack sucked in a breath. "I couldn't really get away."

"You need to learn how not to get cornered," Gabriel said, not looking quite so amused.

"Working on it. But it was executing the researchers. Figured we didn't want to stand by for that."

Gabriel nodded. "So it was mission critical? All right. Heard Jack said jump off a building, and you did it. That's quite the leap of faith."

"I-" You looked at your lap. "I guess."

Gabriel's hand on your neck was soothing and you didn't want to look up at Jack.

"You told Jack you were injured?"

"Yeah."

"Then you rushed after the sniper anyway."

"He was either after the hostages or Jack, and my gut says it was Jack. That wasn't going to happen on my watch." You bared your teeth. "Don't even pretend like you wouldn't do the same."

Gabriel just laughed. "From a mission standpoint, I don't have a problem with any of her actions, Jack. She's a solo operator, not a soldier. Blackwatch might not subscribe to the same rules of discipline as the Overwatch grunts, but we get the job done and all her actions are a stellar example of that."

Jack glared at you both. "I'll see you on the mats tonight, Reyes."

He got up and stalked out. He even slammed the door.

You blinked and Gabriel stood and locked the door before settling back down beside you.

"From an ops standpoint, you did spectacular," Gabriel said. He leaned over and kissed your neck. "I would've done the same thing if I caught someone trying to snipe Jack, so I get it." You rested against him, enjoying his warmth.

"So I'm not in trouble?"

"Oh you're in trouble, all right." Gabriel's laugh was sharp. "Jack's going to think up something. And I'm none too happy about you running around with broken ribs."
You realized belatedly, that if this was meant to be a disciplinary hearing, Captain Amari would have been here. This was work bleeding into your relationship. Or was it vice-versa? Your rested your forehead in your right palm.

"And if it were me on that mission instead of Jack, I would tan your hide for haring off like that," Gabriel said gruffly.

"What? That's not fair!"

"I don't know why you continually think I give a fuck about fair." Gabriel continued to massage the back of your neck. "Of course, if it was me instead of Jack, I would have beaten you to the target, so it's a moot point."

"How bad did I fuck up?" You asked, because you were tired and there was a lot to digest.

"You kicked ass. You made Blackwatch look good. You came home to me. Everything else is minor," Gabriel said.

"Jack doesn't think so. But then you're both control freaks."

"Jack's feelings are more complex than just being a control freak."

"I know. He was fine till I went after the sniper."

"Maybe. We are control freaks, Lucky. No denying that." Gabriel's hands squeezed your shoulders and you relaxed against him. "Jack's used to ordering people into dangerous situations. Doesn't mean the consequences don't haunt him. Each close call you had just hit him harder. Being the boss and your lover causes a lot of cognitive dissonance. Not your fault, baby. I'd say the sniper was the last straw. The fact you were only doing what you were supposed to just makes him feel worse.

"I don't know. After he had Athena overclock his augments and did that insane flying-jump, he seemed like he was having fun. Got me in the stairwell of the building and-"

"And was ready to go right then? Couldn't keep his hands off you?" Gabriel purred. "You know Jack has some fun coping mechanisms, right?"

"I just thought he liked that kind of thing."

"He does," Gabriel chuckled. "But surely you've noticed, the more stressed he is, the more dominant and aggressive he is."

And back in the stairwell, he'd been all about rank. Shit, you'd missed that.

"It might be best if the two of you stick to missions where he's free to back you up and doesn't have to pretend you're just another agent." Gabriel spread out on the couch. "I know that would bother me."

"You enjoyed baiting him." You weren't entirely convinced that any of this was healthy.

"Yes." Gabriel's tone was firm. "Jack can learn to deal."

"You enjoyed baiting him." You weren't entirely convinced that any of this was healthy.

"Who do you think had to put up with all his stupid heroics right out of SEP? You think he "Was sensible?" Gabriel laughed. "This is what he fucking gets. Granted he can't punch you in the face for being an idiot, but the parallels are very clear. He'll come around. He's not actually mad at us. He's just wound up and needs to calm down."

"You going to hit the mats tonight?"

"Yeah, but you're not walking all the way to Jack's quarters. You need to rest. Plus you're too slow, and with Korpel around, you can't afford to get busted."

"That's...you're right and you suck." Because you wanted to watch.

"It's not like you won't get to eventually." Gabriel's unfocused grin slowly widened. "You'll get a turn to drag us to the mats and it'll just turn into kinky sex from there."

"Not with these ribs it won't," you sighed. "That's the worst part. Jack was going to jump me once we got back, and he was all worked up, and now I'm on medical restriction again."

"Stop getting hurt," Gabriel said. "That's not a difficult concept."

You had two lovers, but they were the opposite of sympathetic when you got injured. Why did you even like them?

You awoke to your door opening and you reached into your nightstand for your sidearm. You had it leveled at the intruder before you realized who it was.

Jack stood there in the gentle glow of the emitter, a little hunched, in his black fatigues. He blinked, hands jammed in his pockets.

You lowered the gun and put it back in the nightstand.

"Come in and close the door," you said. You were bundled up in blankets, sleeping upright because of your ribs.

"I'm sorry, I should have knocked." Jack rubbed the back of his neck as he shut the door. "I wasn't thinking."

"Gabriel just shows up," you said after a moment. "Not a lot, because I'm not here that often, but...it's not a big deal."

He stood by the door, filling the space in your small room. He looked around, not that there was much to see. His gaze finally rested on the nest of pillows you'd made to get comfortable. "How's the pain?"

"Took a painkiller. It's manageable."

Jack fidgeted. "Sorry, I should have waited. Shouldn't have woke you."

"It's OK." You scooted over, though you weren't sure Jack could fit in your twin bed. "Trouble sleeping?"

"Yeah." He took your silent invitation and sat down the bed. It dipped under his weight and he shifted, angling to face you.

"You have a really small room," Jack said.

"Thanks for coming all the way down here and waking me up to tell me that."

"Have you eaten?" Jack asked, because you did get snippy when hungry.

"No. Entire midsection hurts. Figured I'd hold off till the emitter healed me up a little more. I know, my body needs fuel to fix itself. Just want to be in less pain before I do that."

"So you're saying the injury is punishment enough and I should let up?" Jack gave you an apologetic smile.

"Yes."

"Gabriel was right." He took a deep breath, and you both knew how hard that was to admit, no matter how many times you had to do it. "You did a good job today. As your CO, I couldn't ask for more. But as your lover, I want to tie you up and edge you, spank you, punish you till you swear you won't pull anything like that ever again." He took in your skeptical look. "I know, I know. It's not reasonable and I'm certainly not going to do it, but don't argue with me now, please."

"I was just wondering how you're so damn kinky all the time."

Jack gave an abrupt laugh and kissed you hard. He smelled like soap and Gabriel's cologne. "Because I'm sexually frustrated."

"You and Gabriel didn't-?" You raised a brow.

"Didn't say that. Wanted you too, though. You and Gabriel both drive me crazy. It's never enough," he said, breathing shallow. "And now you're back on medical leave and I shouldn't pressure you, but all I want to do is fuck you into the mattress till you're screaming my name. Preferably so the whole base knows that you're off-limits."

Your heart rate spiked. "You're a fucking tease."

"Payback for earlier," he said, stroking your hair. "Want me to go?"

"You can stay," you said. "Not a lot of room, but we can move to the floor if it's easier."

"No, you need to keep comfortable. It'll be cramped, but I can do this."

"This is pretty bold, Strike Commander. Sneaking into one of your subordinate's beds late at night? Who'd believe it?"

"I'll do it again some time. Take you on this tiny bed, while you struggle to keep quiet. Fuck that's hot." He flashed you that bright wicked smile that had previously been reserved only for Gabriel. It made your heart catch in your throat.

"Teasing is just going to end badly for both of us," you muttered darkly.

"I know. It's just so hard to resist," Jack sighed, kicking off his boots and curling up beside you, one foot still on the floor.

"Are you going to be all right sleeping like that? I can turn to the side and you can lay
"Nah. I'm good. Done fine under far worse." He put an arm around your shoulder. "This OK?"

"Mmm-hmm." You passed him a pillow and unwrapped two layers of blankets. Jack draped them over his shoulders and lap, making sure to cover you too.

"Reminds me of SEP. Tiny room, sneaking around, single bed. Sometimes I miss those days."

"A simpler time?" You asked, because it had not been a kinder, gentler one.

"Yeah. It was bad back then too. But in a different way. But it was Gabriel and me against the evil robot invasion. It was do or die. It wasn't political. We'd fight, drag ourselves back to base, patch each other up..." You could hear the smile in his voice. You listened quietly, his voice soothing you. "Not going to lie, the sex was great back then too. That's probably what got me in the habit of binging on it for stress relief."

"You feeling better now?" You rested your head on his shoulder. "Gabriel's pretty thorough."

"That man," Jack sighed happily. "It's not just that he's hot. He knows what he's doing in bed. Always has. Has this raw sexuality that's just impossible to resist." Jack made a satisfied humming sound. "Got him to ride me tonight. It was beautiful. He straddles my dick and just takes it all the way in one go. Love how those thighs squeeze me. He can probably crush my head with them, you know."

"Damnit, Jack. It's not that I don't appreciate Gabriel's many, many charms, but breathing hurts. I can't even take care of myself right now." You opened one eye to glare at him.

"Sorry," Jack said, not sounding sorry at all. "Next time don't get thrown by a giant homicidal omnic."

"Fuck you. I'm going back to sleep," you said.

"Don't worry, I'm still going to fuck you raw when you get better." He kissed the top of your head.

"Jack, I'm trying to sleep."

"Just letting you know. You won't be walking right for days," he said, breath hot in your ear.

"Jack."

"Yeah, practice saying my name. I plan on making you scream it."

"Jesus, Jack, I'm going to push you off the bed."

"Halfway there already, baby."
"You haven't met Agent Strike yet, have you?" Jesse gave you a pinched smile as he ushered Vikram Korpali into Gabriel's office. Korpali was a slender middle-aged man, fine-featured and handsome. He even had dignified wings of gray along his temples. But the oily way he smiled at Jesse made you want to break his face.

"Agent Strike. I have heard a great deal about you." He gave you a sharp smile that wasn't the least bit friendly.

"All good I hope," you said mildly, well aware that the role you had to play was unsavory. "It's good the UN has taken a greater interest in our operations. I, for one, am eager to show the civilian authority what we are capable of."

Behind Korpali, Jesse's mouth dropped open.

"Interesting. My understanding is that your commanding officer doesn't feel the same way," Korpali pulled up a chair and sat down in front of your desk, folding his hands under his chin.

"Commander Reyes is a military man at heart. He's fully capable of running Blackwatch, but he's more suited less...subtle operations." You smiled apologetically. "I am sorry you haven't been able to meet with him yet. While he is a good leader, he doesn't know how to interact with civilians."

"Agent-" Jesse began, nostrils flaring.

"Take a walk, Agent McCree. Would you like some refreshments, Mr. Korpali? I'm sure Agent McCree could pick something up in the cafeteria."

"Oh I'm fine. There's a wonderful Italian bistro I'm planning to dine at tonight. But please, I'd love to hear your opinion of the situation, Agent Strike."

You smiled coolly at Jesse. "I would like some mineral water, Agent McCree."

Jesse's left eye twitched. "Understood, Agent Strike." He turned on his heel and marched out of the office.

"That's a bold move, Strike. Are you trying to sabotage your boss, or is this some kind of ill-wrought attempt at entrapment?"

"I think we both know Strike Commander Morrison isn't working out. Granted, he is popular, but his high-minded ideals aren't what's best for Overwatch. The organization is spread too thin, and to be honest, we aren't a police force or a superhero team. This is the real world, with budgets and long-term effects to consider. He's very likeable, a great figurehead, but not the man you want in charge."

"I'm just here to evaluate Blackwatch," Korpali smirked.

You smiled thinly. "Of course you are. And you'll find that Commander Reyes is actually fairly easy to handle. You just give him a competent assistant to deal with the diplomatic side of things. He doesn't really want to be involved."

Korpali raised a brow. "So he made you privy to his conversation with Director Petras?" Well, that confirmed what you already suspected. Korpali and Petras were on the same side: not yours.
"It would look bad if he met with you and suddenly got a promotion, one we all know that he wants."

Korpal stroked his chin.  "Reyes hasn't been willing to play ball."

"That's a negotiating tactic," you said dryly.  "As I said, not the best diplomat."

"What does he want done about Morrison?"

"Make up a new position with a fancy title.  Shuffle him off the side.  Don't do anything drastic or humiliate him: that will make the power transition far too rocky."

"That doesn't sound like Reyes.  He's known for being a vindictive son of a bitch."

"As I said, give him a competent assistant and you get a lot more done."  You sat back in your chair.  "I have to take credit for some of the strategy."

"I see."  Korpal's eyes reminded you of a snake, all wide, inquisitive, and devoid of emotion.  "What do you get out of this?"

"I run Blackwatch's administrative side.  I realize that isn't common knowledge; it isn't meant to be.  Putting me in charge wouldn't disrupt the status quo at all."

"Ambitious," Korpal said.  "You've been in Zurich for what?  A year and a half?  Before that you were some kind of floater agent?"

"Troublebusher," you said, refusing to be intimidated by his knowledge of your "background."  Hopefully he wasn't questioning your legend too closely.  "I'm not just a secretary.  You don't want to leave a mere paper-pusher in charge of Blackwatch."

Something dinged, and Korpal opened up his briefcase and took out a sleek holo-screen tablet: they weren't on the market yet and the only place you'd seen one was in Winston's lab.  "One moment, Strike.  I have to take this."

"Of course."

Korpal eyed the light screen, then set it back in his briefcase.  "Mmm, sorry, Director Petras wanted a progress updated."  He paused and skimmed through some more documents.  "Well, you certainly put on an impressive performance for Overwatch yesterday.  Though Morrison doesn't seem happy with your...undisciplined predilections."

"Blackwatch operates differently from Overwatch," you said.  "We don't march in formation, but we get the job done, personal feelings aside."  You paused.  "I don't have any ill will toward Morrison; but leaving a wide-eyed idealist in charge is a surefire way to self-destruct."

"And it doesn't hurt that you'll benefit from a transition in power."

"It doesn't," you agreed.

"And Reyes is on board with this?"

"He hasn't chosen a Blackwatch successor," you admitted without hesitation.  "But I think he could be convinced."

"Who do you think your rivals are?"
"Outside the organization, who can say?" You smiled. "But from within? There is only one: Gérard Lacroix."

"You don't think Captain Amari is a rival?"

"She doesn't want to run Blackwatch. Her eyes are on the Strike Commander position."

Korpal tilted his head to the side. "That makes sense."

"I am nothing if not well-informed, Mr. Korpal."

"You could be a great asset," he said, complimentary, but not committing to your side.

You only inclined your head in acknowledgement.

"You don't think Agent McCree could replace you?"

"He doesn't have the stomach for administrative work," you said. "He's much better suited for ops."

You could see Korpal calculating. He would go visit Lacroix next. Under the auspices of inspecting Blackwatch, of course. But he'd swallowed your bait, hook, line, sinker, and nano-tracking chip. You weren't sure what the rest of Lacroix's plan entailed, but you'd done your part. And hopefully, while Korpal was scheming and playing kingmaker, he wouldn't be looking too closely at the more sensitive Blackwatch operations.

"I have found our conversation most...enlightening," Korpal smiled like a shark.

You returned the expression when he shook your hand. Even through your gloves, you knew his skin was soft, his hands perfectly-manicured, and that he had never done a day of hard labor in his life.

"Will Agent McCree run telling tales to Reyes?"

"Probably," you said. "And Reyes will tell him to keep his mouth shut. No worries there."

"He is a charming young man," Korpal said.

You just smiled thinly. "So I hear."

Korpal looked at you expectantly.

Your stomach turned.

"I could mention something to Commander Reyes along those lines," you said slowly. "I'm sure...accommodations could be made."

Korpal's smile widened. "I'm so very glad we had this talk, Agent Strike. It's good to see that Blackwatch is so much more reasonable than I had been lead to believe."

"We are nothing if not practical, Mr. Korpal."
"You get all that, Athena?" You sat alone at your desk, rubbing your forehead. You were going to need a shower to scrub off all the filthy political bullshit you'd just waded through. You were going to have to buy Jesse a few drinks too. Though he'd never returned with your mineral water. Ass.

"Yes, Agent Strike." There was a pause. "You were very convincing."

"I hope so. I'd hate to make that pitch again." You poured yourself a whiskey and debated taking one of your pain pills. Probably not a good combination. Fuck the pill. You needed the whiskey more.

"Send the recording to Agent Lacroix and Commander Reyes. You can CC Jack, but I'd prefer not to bother him with this till we've got KorpáI taken care of." It wasn't anything you could convict KorpáI with, but it was good reference for whatever long game Lacroix had set up.

"...Am I going to be allowed on other Blackwatch ops?" Athena asked.

"Not my call. Lacroix had to lobby pretty hard to get you on this one."

"You helped."

"Shit, don't remind Gabriel. He's sore enough about it as it is." You slumped in your chair, and instantly regretted it. You adjusted the pillow behind you and sat up straight. "I don't think it even matters what I said. I distracted and redirected him to Lacroix. Hopefully my part is done."

"Do you want to be in charge of Blackwatch some day?"

"Fuck no," you laughed and that hurt too. "I've seen what leadership did to Jack and Gabriel. I'm happy just running around on adventures and coming home to...my team. People like KorpáI make my skin crawl. Like I'm just going to serve him Jesse or anyone on a goddamn plate because I want a promotion. Ugh. Who'd follow someone like that?"

"It happens, from what I observe."

"Yeah, I know. People are messed up. Always have been. When you're the little guy, you can't trust that justice works in your favor."

"I realize the comparison is unfavorable, but can you explain the difference between your relationship with your commanding officers and exploitation?"

You sat back in your chair and took a long swig of whiskey. Because fucking Athena and her loaded questions.

"I've offended you," she said after you sat in silence for a few minutes.

"There was no polite way to ask that question," you said. "I'm formulating a response."

"Do not feel obligated to answer if it makes you uncomfortable, Agent Strike."

"Just call me "Lucky" in private, OK? I keep looking behind me to see who this "Agent Strike" bitch is."

"Thank you, Lucky." Athena was very good a mimicking real emotion, or perhaps she really did feel things like you did. You weren't sure. Different sensory input and programming made sure she wasn't exactly like a human, but you could not deny she was more than a voice in
"I had a choice," you said. "A real choice that would've been respected if I said "no." I still have that option and I'm not worried about Jack and Gabriel leveraging rank and the job against me. It gets messy, as you've seen. But I'm here because I want to be, and because I trust them. I know it looks bad, two commanding officers sharing one woman like a fucking commodity." You flinched at the harshness of your own description. "But they're important to me and I know I'm not just their plaything." You sipped your whiskey. "It doesn't hurt that Jesse and Captain Amari are looking out for me."

"I am as well," Athena said firmly. "I cannot countermand missions or tactical orders, but I do have options if abuse of power is suspected."

"Huh." You sat there for a moment. "Didn't know that."

"Winston designed me to look after my people, Lucky."

"Yeah, I'm getting that." You closed your eyes.

"It should not be surprising. Many in Overwatch have that priority. They just go about it in different ways."

"True. The other half of that idea is respecting boundaries. You can't go repeating this shit or asking everyone the kinds of questions you're asking me. Especially if you want to maintain your "virtual assistant" cover."

"I am aware," she said sounding mildly amused. Were you ascribing human feelings to a robot voice? You weren't sure. "I only have conversations like this with Winston, Ziv, and you." She paused. "Agent Shimada sometimes talks to me now too."

You blinked. Huh. You hadn't expected that.

"When I was informed about your arrangement, I had expressed concern, but Ziv said anyone would be happy to be...in a relationship with such superior physical specimens."

"Athena, don't listen to Ziv. He's the worst." You sighed. "And that was not his wording."

"No, I was paraphrasing. His actual wording was much cruder."

"I know."

"He explained that he had already pursued that line of inquiry. You and Ziv always speak so antagonistically to each other, but I have come to realize it means you actually-"

"Athena, that's enough true confessions for one day, OK? Some things are better left unsaid." You poured yourself more whiskey and wondered how you were going to explain being drunk this early in the day.

"Well, that was terrifying," Jesse said after Gabriel had played back the recording for the two of you. Lacroix had only sent the message that he was "handling it." And Ziv had sent you a message to brag about his involvement. Well, if he was the second honey trap, that would be hilarious. You were really going to have to castrate Korpal.

"I'm sorry," you said, not looking up from your desk. "Lacroix asked me to take the ambitious go-between angle. I...improvised a little."

"You were convincing," Gabriel said.

You rubbed the back of your neck, wishing you had a mint. You could still smell the whiskey. "I don't ever want to run Blackwatch," you said. "Too much paperwork."

Jesse laughed nervously.

Gabriel held your gaze. "You could you know. Not now, but give it a few years. You'd do well."

"That's not what I want," you said firmly.

Gabriel wore a faint smile. "I see."

"So do I have to escort him around for another day, boss? Because he's a handsy bastard and as soon as I can, I'm going to break his wrists and work my way inward."

"We'll see what Gérard has in mind," Gabriel said. "You're on call till tonight. AI, if you're listening in, it's time to fuck off."

"Be nice," you said.

"AI, if you're listening in, it's time to please fuck off," Gabriel said, rolling his eyes at you. And that was really the best you could expect.

"As you say, Commander Reyes."

"Out, kid." Gabriel gestured at the door.

Jesse gave you a suspicious look. "No auctioning off my virtue for cake, OK Lucky?"

"What virtue?"

Chuckling, Jesse walked out and Gabriel locked the door behind him.

"Come here," Gabriel said, sitting on the couch.

You gingerly settled down beside him, sighing as he cupped the back of your head and kissed you.

"Thought you'd been in the whiskey," he murmured when he released you. "That bad?"

"Waited till after he left. You heard me. Had to convincingly sell out you, Jack, and Jesse in one unpleasant conversation. Needed a drink after that. Not drunk."

"I know. I've seen you drunk." Gabriel held you against his side. "So what do you want in a few years, if not to run Blackwatch?"

"I want our enemies dead," you nodded to yourself. "Talon eradicated. Shin and Captain Patel avenged. I want our people safe." You swallowed when you thought of Lao. You needed to heal up, because you did not trust Lacroix alone on that mission, no matter what he said about taking her alive. "And after that, cake and whiskey."

Gabriel absently stroked the back on your neck.

"Do Jack and I fit into that?"

"Yeah. Safe, definitely, maybe somewhere between cake and whiskey?"

"You're not drunk; you know what I'm asking."

You took a deep breath and winced. "I wasn't planning on ditching you two for Winston. I mean, he's a fluffy adorable dude, but the peanut fixation is weird."

"He's a gorilla," Gabriel said, not sounding amused.

"Really? I just thought he had a skin condition." You managed a lopsided smile. "I...I don't mean to give cop out answers. I just don't know how to tell you what you want to hear."

"Don't. Just tell me the truth," Gabriel said stiffly.

"Well then," you said, looking down at your boots. "I don't know. I don't think it's a matter of where you and Jack fit into my plans. I think it's the other way around. Will I still fit in your lives? You're big important people. I can't even live under my real name. Will it work out? Or will this just get too hard and complicated and collapse on itself?"

Gabriel blew out a long breath.

You regretted your honesty immediately.

Gabriel pulled his arm away, no longer touching you. "I guess I should have been clearer, because you read too much into things. Do you want us?"

"Yeah." You rested your hands in your lap, still staring at your boots. "I don't know. I don't think it's a matter of where you and Jack fit into my plans. I think it's the other way around. Will I still fit in your lives? You're big important people. I can't even live under my real name. Will it work out? Or will this just get too hard and complicated and collapse on itself?"

"I told you I need you," Gabriel said hoarsely. "And I fucking meant it."

"Yeah, I said the same thing."

"Sometimes I need to hear it too," Gabriel said, tugging on your collar.

You turned to face him. "I don't know what I'd do without you, Gabriel." You gripped one of his wrists with your right hand. "You should know that by now."

"Just need you to say it every now and then." He braced himself against the couch and bent over to kiss you. You wrapped your arms around his neck. "You need to heal up fast. It's my turn to take you out and play," Gabriel said in your ear. "Jack's pretty eager to try again too. Won't bring a pesky squad this time."

"This is seeming less like work and more like a date." A date where you shoot things and try not to die, while balancing quality time with a super soldier. Huh. That sounded nice. Probably because you were fucked up.
"You're catching on," Gabriel said, kneeling in front of you, his hands dropped to your belt.

"Wait, I-"

"Let me help you relax. I know you aren't up for anything strenuous."

You raised your hips for him even as you started to object again. "I'm not sure.

"Tell me to stop, and I'll stop," Gabriel rumbled, sliding your pants down. "Otherwise, I just want to taste your sweet pussy."

You sat on the couch, trying to control your breathing while Gabriel slipped his tongue inside you. His fingers brushed your clit. You clenched hard and sharp pain shot up your sides and into your abdomen.

"I can't." You ground your teeth. "Goddamnit, Gabriel, I want it. But I can't-"

Gabriel kissed your thighs and drew back. "Sorry, baby. Didn't mean to cause you pain." He helped get you put back together, hands gentle. "Not even taking care of yourself in your spare time then?"

"Damnit Gabriel, I don't have accelerated healing like you and Jack." You groaned. "So no, I haven't gotten off since before I got hurt."

Gabriel chuckled. "Poor thing. Don't worry, when you get better Jack and I will give you more than you can handle. We'll make up for all that lost time."

You shivered. "Jack's already plotting to sneak into my room at night and play the quiet game."

Gabriel grinned at you. "I know."

"You too?" It shouldn't surprise you. It really shouldn't. You already knew those two collaborated.

"Such a small room. It'll be interesting."

"You two are insatiable." You paused. "Are you ever going to show me what I need to do to restrain Jack?"

Gabriel's smile widened. "Yes. You want to dom him too? Because you set a pretty good pace back at the farm."

"Yeah, I owe him some bondage."

Gabriel laughed. "You do know he'll get you back for it later, right?"

"Yeah," you smiled. "I'm counting on it."

Chapter End Notes

Starting to run behind because I work a few chapters ahead and this stupid holiday season has ruined my productivity. fdkjlfjdklfdklfkldk But I'm off the next few days and maybe I can get more done. I think that stupid smut scene is finally passable, but I'm still annoyed at it. Have some heavier edits to do which is also slowing me down. /whining

And we are now "officially" past 200k wordcount. That's about two regular novels. Thanks for sticking around guys. Totally appreciate you.
Chapter 27

Chapter Summary

Interrogations and other awkward interactions.

Chapter Notes

See the end of the chapter for notes.

Your right hand rested on your tanto, and you did not move it. Gabriel sat forward, elbows on his knees, chin resting on his folded hands. Jack leaned back in his chair between the two of you, eyes cool.

"They chose me because I can make it last," Lacroix told the On Sing sniper. Overhead, Athena translated the words into Cantonese, just in case the bastard didn't understand English. Lacroix had gone for assassin chic, a well-tailored black suit, latex gloves, and slicked back hair. "The others would kill you too quickly." He flashed a grin at the interrogation room window and you resisted the urge to throw something at the glass.

Gabriel snorted and Jack reached out, one hand resting on the back of Gabriel's neck, gently massaging. But his gaze did not leave the scene in front of you.

Your thumb rubbed the pommel of your dagger. If you hadn't been so paranoid that day outside Belfast, what would have happened to Jack? You didn't like to think about it. Your ribs hurt, but you could breathe easier now, and both Gabriel and Jack ensured there was almost always an emitter around you. It wasn't hard to decode their motivations. They were pretty obvious.

Lacroix circled the man strapped to the chair, his pace slow and deliberate. "Your name is Chung Yee Wen, former sniper for the PLA South Blade division out of Chengdu. Very impressive records." You'd read the dossier, the South Blade, sometimes called the South China Sword, was special forces, the PRC's equivalent of the Navy Seals.

Chung did not respond, but it was him. You and Ziv had been very thorough, Ziv getting into the PLA personnel records while you assigned a few agents to gather information from his old squadmates. He was a big man, with wide features and close-cropped hair.

"Of course, your family has a proud tradition of On Sing service. Your father was a Straw Sandal." His father was a liaison officer who communicated orders between different cells. It was a somewhat prestigious position, though not necessarily violent. Interestingly, Chung had been a consummate professional during his military service.

Chung stared straight ahead, face hard and impassive. The only indicator of discomfort was the sweat beading on his upper lip.

"Your father's retired, of course. Having a good son like you, he didn't need to work any more. But that's about to change, isn't it? I see you have a brother serving life in prison and sister who disappeared under mysterious circumstances. It'll break your parents hearts when you don't come home and they have no idea what happened to your body." Lacroix didn't pull his punches. He'd told you Chung wouldn't break under your torture and that Gabriel would go too far, rendering Chung useless. He'd said it smugly, promising that he had the perfect leverage.

"I must never reveal secrets or signs when speaking to outsiders. If I do so I will be killed by myriads of swords." He spoke English with a light accent.

"Oh, I've heard the 36 Oaths before," Lacroix laughed. "And I've driven men into breaking them. Don't mistake yourself for special, Chung. Now, I want to know everything about your time at Belfast. The Red Pole omnic was an interesting touch."

Chung stiffened. "I don't know what you're talking about."

"I want to know your targets, who assigned them, and who paid the fee."

"Why would I talk?"

"Because reaching your brother in prison will be easy. Because finding your dear old mother in her kitchen on the eighth floor? Easier. Because I know exactly how your father takes his medicinal tea, where he likes to buy mápó dòufu, and whom he plays xiàngqí with." Lacroix casually pulled a small, wickedly curved hatchet off his belt.

Lacroix was faster than you thought. He struck and suddenly Chung was missing an ear.

Chung, to his credit, didn't scream.

Lacroix picked up the ear, dangling it from between his index finger and thumb in Chung's face. "I will send it to your father. The next piece will go to your mother. And I will do this for as long as I can keep you alive. And then, I will go visit myself, and I will take my time, because I am a patient man, and it occurs to me that your father may know as much you. And while your father probably doesn't love your mother, he might be inclined to speak if it eases her suffering."

You rested your forehead in your palms. Because how the fuck could you be the good guys if you did shit like that? Granted, you suspected Lacroix was bluffing, and you knew Jack wouldn't let him go torture a little old lady, Triad family or not, but it still made your skin crawl. This was the man you were learning from? Would you be OK with this in a year? What about Ziv? Your grip on your tanto tightened, and you felt a warm hand on your back.

"Relax," Jack said. "There are lines we don't cross. Gérard knows that."

Gabriel didn't say anything, because you knew he would cross those lines to keep his people safe, Jack topping that list.

Lacroix kept up his friendly tone, describing exactly what he'd do to Chung's aged mother if he didn't talk. Chung had a wife and son, but Lacroix was really pushing on the filial piety angle. And Chung was sweating hard, his eyes darting around the room.

"You will kill me after this. You will not touch my family."

"Of course. Make us happy and we might even return your body, all parts included," Lacroix smiled brightly, and it made your stomach turn. He was lying, of course. Chung's family would never get closure.

"I don't know who set it up. We wanted the tech for our Red Pole omnic division. The fire should have burned hot enough to erase any evidence of that prototype. The researcher we bought was the first to be executed; no loose ends. The tech we acquired easily, but then came the contract for the Strike Commander. I don't know how they knew he would come, but I assume it was because they were going to create a big enough incident. I was just to wait for the "rogue" omnis to go down and finish Morrison at the end. The more Overwatch agents I could send with him, the higher my bounty."

"Details, Chung."

The assassin hesitated, perhaps a little shocky from blood loss.

"You've got such a pretty wife. She's a doctor, isn't she?" Lacroix licked his lips, casually turning the hatchet over in his hands.

Chung told Lacroix everything he knew. Dates, times, bank account numbers, even some On Sing names. He talked about the omnic program, and it sounded far more advanced than you liked. A certain Fong Chun had passed the orders down to him. You would be going to Hong Kong soon, you decided, and retrieve that man.

Jack's hand was warm against your back.

"Did you want a turn?" Lacroix turned to the interrogation window and you swore he was looking straight at you.

You were on your feet before you realized it. But Gabriel was already at the door. You took a step and Jack caught your wrist.

"Don't," he said softly.

"He was-

"Let Gabriel handle it."

"I can-

"I know. But you'll regret it later." He kissed your gloved hand. "And Gabriel will need us both afterward."

Fucking Jack knew how to play you like a violin. You sat back down, his fingers stroking the inside of your arm.

You looked up when Gabriel punched the Chung in the gut, and you heard bones and cartilage snapping, somewhere in the vicinity of the ribs. Lacroix stood by, arms crossed, face impassive.

Chung gave a rattling wheeze and Gabriel picked up the bolt cutters.

You knew what was next. You'd been here before. And this time, you had the foresight to look away. Gabriel took the same three fingers first: index, middle, and ring off the left hand.

Jack turned your face to his. "You've never told him how much that bothers you, have you?"

You shrugged. "I can handle it. It doesn't give me flashbacks. But both the visual and the why of it are...uncomfortable."

"You were permanently scarred protecting him. He feels it should have been the other way around. It's not something he's gotten over," Jack said. "Do you want me to say something?"

You'd always suspected something like that, but it wasn't something you ever wanted to bring up in conversation. "It's not his fault. I don't want him carrying that around." You paused. "Would me saying anything change anything?"

"Maybe, maybe not. Couldn't hurt."

You turned your eyes back to the interrogation room.

"Don't worry," Gabriel said. "If you've told the truth, we're not going to go after your family. But you're not leaving here alive."

Chung might have laughed. That gurgle almost seemed relieved, but that was probably projection. He was choking on his own blood, because Gabriel had pulverized his rib cage, driving shards of bone into soft tissue. You didn't miss that connection either.

Gabriel stood back and let Chung drown as his lungs filled with blood.

Jack held onto your wrist the entire time. You would have bruises in the shape of his fingers.

---

You sipped a Coke and nibbled on the pizza. You weren't enthusiastic about food, not after that demonstration, but emitter healing always left you with an appetite. You sat on Jack's couch. Jack had Gabriel in the shower, and while you wanted to join them, everything hurt too much still.

At this point, you were going to have to name the emitter. Emmett? Emma? Emmy? Ziv was right, you were shit at naming. You did consider pasting some googly eyes on it.

Gabriel and Jack both emerged, in nothing but gym shorts and you tried not to stare at all that hard muscle. Gabriel's shorts clung to his thighs, and outlined the curves of his butt. You tilted your head back, trying not to be obvious about your ogling as he bent over to grab his boots out of the middle of the floor.

Jack's skin was pink from the shower and maybe other things. He gave you a sly look, and stretched, arms reaching overhead, while his pectorals rippled. You smiled at him wistfully and he winked at you.

Gabriel's eyes were unfocused as he dropped onto the sofa beside you. Jack settled on the other side, cramming half a slice of pizza into his mouth.

"Feeling better?" You turned Gabriel's chin so he was looking at you and he sighed, kissing your fingers.

"Yes," he rumbled. "Gérard was right. Did him too quickly. Couldn't help myself."

"Probably because you felt sorry for him. Lacroix's kind of psycho. Like, are we sure he's really on our side?"

Gabriel laughed, letting himself fall the rest of the way into your lap. His hair was damp, but you didn't mind. "He's not going after the family. No point now."
That wasn't the reassurance you wanted, but you'd take it. "You OK?"

"Fine," he said, tugging on a lock of your hair. "You?"

"Wishing I could've joined you in the shower," you said.

"Watching me do all that didn't put you off?" Gabriel asked, his eyes lingering on your left hand.

You shrugged. "Didn't do anything for me, but I'm not squeamish. And you took good care of me after Chumak." You offered him a bite of your pizza and he took the whole damn thing in one Jaws-style attack, his teeth grazing your fingers.

Jack laughed at your slightly disgusted expression.

"Yeah, I take it all back. You're awful and make my ovaries shrivel up like raisins."

Gabriel's grinned up at you, cheeks puffed out as he chewed. And damn if he wasn't cute, even if it pissed you off.

"Didn't think table manners bothered you," Jack said, grabbing another slice.

"It's not that; I don't have table manners," you clarified. "But he took all my pizza. That's a dick move."

"There's more pizza," Jack said.

"Not the point."

"You share food with us all the time," Jack said, sounding confused.

"Not my portion," you said.

"Had a dog once," Gabriel said, after having chewed and swallowed the slice. "Started as a stray. A real sweetheart. But at feeding time, if anyone came near his bowl... Well, you'd need stitches afterward."

You pursed your lips, not liking that comparison one bit. "So you do know better."

"Just pointing out that you have some food aggression," Gabriel said. "It's cute. Not healthy, but cute."

"Ironic that you're judging aggression," you said and reached for more pizza, but you couldn't quite get to it, because there was something in your lap.

Jack nudged the box closer.

"Thanks." You paused mid-reach, and then pulled your left glove off. You rested your metal fingers on Gabriel's nose. "Do these bother you?"

"No," Gabriel said, kissing the tips. "I think they bother you more."

"Yeah, maybe." You looked at Jack for help.

He just grinned at you. Because he was a dick.
"You have a pattern," you said after a moment. "I uh...yeah. Fingers. Chop chop chop. They match." You held up your left hand wiggling the respective fingers, because fuck coherency.

"I understood that," Gabriel said after a moment.

You pinched the bridge of your nose. "You're always badgering me about therapy and shit. And I've done it enough to know that's a big red flag."

"You think I'm some kind of amputee fetishist?" Gabriel asked, sitting up.

"No!" You paused. "You're not, are you?"

"No." Gabriel rolled his eyes and picked up another slice of pizza. "I'm not going to deny the connection between your injuries and my interrogation techniques. But it doesn't bleed over into anything else. Does it bother you?"

"I don't want you to feel guilty for something that wasn't your fault." You studied your fingers.

"Like you don't feel guilty about Shin Sato or Aishani."

"That's different. I was there, and conscious, and-"

"It's the same, except I was their CO; they were my responsibility. Maybe it's not my fault, but it doesn't feel that way. And I didn't pay for fucking up. Everyone else did." He took your left hand in his, kissing the joints. "Your fingers don't bother me. It's that you lost them because of me."

"I lost them because those Talon cunts blew up the base and I was too dumb to duck properly. It's not all about you, you narcissist."

Jack snorted. "Very tactful, baby."

Gabriel just laughed. "I know that here." He tapped his temple. "But I don't feel it here." He placed your hand over his heart. "I'll admit, I like taking from them some of what they took from you. It doesn't hurt that it's an effective way to make someone talk. But if it bothers you, I'll stop doing that."

"...I'm not going to comment on your interrogation methods. I just don't want you to feel guilty about me. You're carrying around enough shit. You know it's not your fault, right?"

"Some of it is," Gabriel said. "I should've been better. I should've cleaned up Blackwatch sooner. I should've expected that last ambush."

"Maybe. But talk about unrealistic expectations; even if you're a super soldier, you're still human. You didn't have control of the entire situation, so you don't get to take all that blame on yourself."

"That's nice of you to say but-"

"And you're nowhere near perfect, it's not a secret, stop acting like you are, you're not fooling anyone, least of all us." The words spilled out rapidly.
Jack choked on his coke, spraying a fine mist across the couch and the edge of the coffee table. Thankfully, he missed the pizza.

Gabriel kept your hand against his chest. "You just keep sweet talking me, Lucky. See where it gets you."

"Pfft, Jack's not going to say it, unless you two are fighting, and then you won't listen anyway."

Jack blotted at his face with a napkin. "Damnit, Lucky, you had to time it when I had my mouth full."

"But yeah, that's what I wanted to say." Gabriel had a strange look on his face, like you'd surprised him and he wasn't sure what to do next. You decided a little deflection was in order.

"Also, Jack made me do it." You took another slice of pizza, psychoanalysis complete.

Gabriel looked over his shoulder.

"I didn't make her do it -"

"Instigator," Gabriel said, without any heat.

Jack leaned over and kissed him. "OK, maybe a little."

Gabriel wrapped an arm around you. "Troublemaker," he said, and leaned in to take another bite of your pizza. You smacked him in the nose, with the bottom crust, and then took a mouthful. "Uck Ov!"

Gabriel stared for a moment, then lunged, and you threw the rest of the pizza at Jack, rather than let Gabriel have it. Because food aggression or not, you were Blackwatch petty first.

You got dressed, progress slowing when your eyes fell on Jack tucked against Gabriel's chest. Gabriel had kicked off his covers, and their legs were intertwined. Jack had a faint smile on his face, and Gabriel looked so peaceful it made you want to crawl back under the blankets and cuddle up with him.

Or suck his dick.

You sighed, because it still hurt to breathe and you could not manage any sex marathons this week. The interesting effect was that both Gabriel and Jack just wanted to touch you more. It wasn't even sexual: hand-holding, chaste kisses, back scratches. Hell, you'd spent most of the evening on Jack's lap, if only to keep Gabriel away from your pizza.

You gave them one last wistful glance, and slipped out the door. You were halfway through the officers' quarters, when you heard footsteps. Shit.

Korpal emerged from the main hall, perfectly polished, and one brow raised when he saw you.

"Agent Strike," he said, all oily charm. "What are you doing here at this hour in the morning?" He wore a sly look, and you could see him speculating whose room you'd come from.
"Mr. Korpal," you greeted dryly. "I could say the same thing."

"You are ambitious," Korpal smirked. "It's good to see horizontal diplomacy is alive and well in Overwatch."

You heard a door open and prayed it wasn't Jack or Gabriel.

"You left this behind, ma puce."

You groaned and turned around.

Gérard stood behind you in his shirtsleeves, top two buttons undone. His dark hair was disheveled and he gave you a slow intimate smile that made you shiver, and not from pleasure. This was too fucking weird.

In his hand he held a gauzy black scarf, and leaning into your space, he nimbly tied it around your throat. It smelled like his cologne. "How unlike you to be so distracted."

You fought the urge to tear the scarf off, and strangle both men. "Don't be so full of yourself, Gérard." It was even weirder to call him by his first name, but you had to continue the charade.

"I'm not the one who was filled, ma puce."

You facepalmed.

Korpal was laughing at you. Lacroix was laughing at you. You had died and gone to hell. Or this was a nightmare and you were going to look down and realize you'd forgotten your pants too.

"Interesting dynamic," Korpal said, looking between you two. "I wasn't expecting that, given your rivalry."

Lacroix shrugged. "She has her charms."

"My work and my personal life are two separate things," you lied audaciously. "Gérard has his uses."

"You wound me," Lacroix smiled at you too sharply, and tugged on the perfumed scarf, drawing you far too close to his face. "After all those sweet."

"Don't worry, Gérard, if I get the promotion, I'll still have a place for you. He looks very good on his knees," you said, giving Korpal a nonchalant nod.

"That's a big "if," ma cherie. You're such an arrogant little thing. I'll enjoy teaching you a lesson in humility." Lacroix released the scarf. "You'll want to run along now and let the men talk."

"If you want to embarrass Mr. Korpal, go on then, I have work to do." You gave Korpal a polite nod. "Don't let your guard down around him."

"I could say the same to you," Korpal smirked.

"Oh, I am well aware," you said, meaning it.
"Fuck," you swore as soon as you got back to your room, the scarf balled up in your gloved hands.

"Are you all right, Lucky? Agent Lacroix was...awake, and I informed him that you needed assistance. It seemed unwise to involve Strike Commander Morrison or Commander Reyes."

"Good call," you said and set the scarf on your desk. "That was too close. And now Talon's going to think I'm sleeping with Lacroix, which makes my life more complicated. Maybe. Hopefully he's trashing me to Korpal right now emphasizing that I am just a stepping stone."

"...Yes, in cruder terms," Athena said after a moment. "If you need help moving between your...significant others' quarters undetected, I can aid you."

Huh. That seemed like cheating. And you had no problem with that. "Yeah, that'd be great," you said. Because you did not need to have another incident like the one this morning. You did not want to owe Lacoix. "Is that against your protocols?"

"As long as you are just requesting aid in moving undetected and not breaking other rules, no. I am happy to help."

"You do this sort of thing often?"

"You are the only person I have made this offer to. The rest of our team doesn't require that amount of stealth in their daily activities."

"That's a lot of trust," you said. "Or am I misreading it?"

"You're a good teammate, Lucky. I want to help." Athena paused. "And I know you need all the help you can get. Ziv has emphasized this on numerous occasions."

"Ziv is a jerk." You needed a shower, to get any trace of Lacroix's cologne off. "But he's not wrong. Don't ever tell him I said that."

"If you wear one of the communicators we can choose an encrypted channel and I will give you instructions." Was Athena learning how to gloss over awkward social moments? Because Ziv had certainly not taught her that.

"So uh, can you not tell them you're helping? I mean, they can always revoke access to their quarters, and I'll respect that. But the element of surprise is way too cool to pass up."

"I think we can do that," Athena said.

You sat back at your desk, and contemplated the possibilities.

Gabriel hadn't come down to the office yet.

"Korpal incoming," Athena warned.
"Start recording," you said.

The door opened without any knocks, and you pretended to be reading a report when Korpal stepped inside.

"Aren't you a busy little bee?" He didn't leer at you, probably because you were female, but his ingratiating tone made you feel dirty.

"To what do I owe the honor?"

"Interesting that you and Lacroix are sleeping together."

"We don't trust each other enough to sleep," you said dryly. "It's a hazard of the job."

"It's interesting then, that he tried to protect you," Korpal said.

You raised a brow. Because he could not possibly know- "Come again?"

"Lacroix spent some time telling me what a whore you are." Korpal smiled. "I have to say, you aren't my type, but he pimped you pretty effectively."

"Yeah, well, Lacroix's fucked up." And so was Korpal. You didn't back away. You just folded your hands on the desk. "That's not protection."

"Men like Lacroix are all twisted up inside," Korpal leaned over your desk. "If he really hated you, he would have talked up your charms, trying to get me interested. It was subtly done, but he wanted to deflect my attention."

"You obviously prefer men, so that's wasted effort."

"I just think he doesn't want to share," Korpal said.

You laughed at that, because you didn't want to think about Lacroix's sex life ever. "Lacroix just likes humiliation."

"Or, maybe the two of you are collaborating. Maybe you want to be his pet secretary?"

You wrinkled your nose, not trying to hide your disgust. "Lacroix is a means to an end. It's not something I really had a choice in and I have no desire to remain under his thumb." you said, having no trouble implying that the relationship wasn't consensual.

Korpal smile widened. "So what if I told you the job was yours, if only you got him out of the way?"

"I'd want more guarantees than just your word," you said.

"I think you want him gone, badly," Korpal said, not hesitating to capitalize on that weak point.

You shrugged. "It's very risky."

"I have powerful allies that find him...troublesome," Korpal said.

"He's an obnoxious prick," you said, the sentiment genuine.

"You seem much more reasonable."
"That's because I am." Again, not much acting needed on your part.

"Well then, Strike. I think you know what to do."

It was strange to see everyone in one place. Well, not everyone, but almost everyone you dealt with regularly. The main Blackwatch conference room was rarely used, but had the best soundproofing, according to Gabriel. You could guess how he knew that.

Jack sat at the head of the table, Gabriel on his left, Captain Amari on his right. Lacroix lounged in a chair just off to the side, looking terribly pleased with himself. Ziv leaned against the wall beside him, arms crossed like the kind of back alley punk you used to be. He also mimicked a punchable-level of smugness. Winston stayed closed to Ana. You sat by Gabriel; Jesse and Genji stayed on the Blackwatch side of the table.

"Gérard, you have a place here," Captain Amari said. "Agent Mihret, I don't know what your excuse is, but Gérard should have taught you better."

You didn't grin at Jesse, but it was a near thing. He gave you a sly look before quickly tilting his hat downward, so as to partially conceal his expression. Genji had his faceplate on, but you suspected he was amused too.

"Ana, I would love to be at your side, but Winston beat me to it." However, Lacroix rose, sauntered over, and took a seat. Ziv pushed off the wall and followed. You didn't miss Gabriel rolling his eyes.

"Now that we're all sitting at the table, Athena, what can you tell us about Korpal's whereabouts?" Jack began.

"He boarded a private flight to Chennai at 1600 hours, giving his apologies to the Strike Commander, and claiming a family emergency. The transport has landed, and he was whisked away in a vehicle bearing the logo of his wife's company. We lost track of him in traffic."

"Is it normal for you to lose cars on road, with your level of satellite tracking?" Gabriel asked.

"It is highly abnormal. I strongly suspect there was outside interference." Did Athena sound embarrassed?

"Let's back up," Lacroix said. "To ensure everyone understands the situation." He folded his hands in his lap. "We knew Vikram Korpal was a Talon spy before he ever set foot in Zurich. We also knew he had a weakness for handsome young men and being an absolute pest. Agent McCree, was tasked, because of his considerable...charms, to handle Korpal."

"I wasn't the one doing the handling," Jesse muttered.

"Indeed," Lacroix said. "Chanceux's job was to provide a flawed view of Blackwatch's political landscape. She did a most convincing job portraying us as political rivals and gave the impression of wanting to promote Gabriel to Strike Commander, a very believable scheme already proposed by our beloved Director Petras."
You didn't squirm under everyone's attention, but you smiled sheepishly. "I also tried to sell him Jesse."

"You'd be better off offering him Ziv. That way we'd get some peace and quiet around here," Jesse drawled.

"Yeah, I was trying to convince him to do me a favor. Nobody wants Ziv. He's awful."

"Fuck you both!"

Jack coughed. "Focus, agents."

"Korpal did come to see me and size me up. He made a few token overtures, but he was firmly in Chanceux's camp, a side effect of being a Talon-plant. It didn't hurt that she offered him McCree."

"We do have all the conversations recorded, for the very top secret record," Winston said.

"Afterhours, Agent Mihret and Agent Shimada handled the monitoring. Korpal has a taste for expensive food and criminally young rentboys."

Ziv managed to look both smarmy and disgusted. You weren't sure how he did it. Genji just looked bored.

"It was all very basic operational surveillance coupled with standard disinformation procedure," Lacroix continued, making all the pseudo-treachery sound very boring. "It did get interesting when Korpal came sniffing around the officers' quarters and found Chanceux after she'd left Jack's quarters this morning."

Everyone was looking at you and you winced, because even though they all knew your relationship status, it wasn't something you flaunted. "He didn't know where I came from. Athena got Lacroix. He came out and pretended I'd been in his room. Thanks for that by the way." You sounded more resentful than grateful.

"Any time, Chanceux." Lacroix twirled the scarf that you'd returned around his fingers. "We were very convincing."

You fought the urge to throw your coffee mug at his head.

Jack shot a concerned look at Gabriel. Gabriel just snorted.

"Linking Lucky to you is just painting a target sign on her back," Jesse said.

"He came to me afterward and offered me the Blackwatch Commander position if I got rid of Lacroix," you said.

Ziv narrowed his eyes. "Why would he think you'd do that?"

"Chanceux went out of her way to imply that I was coercing her into sex." To your surprise, he nodded in approval. "It was a good smokescreen that added depth to her cover story. It gave a personal motive behind the rivalry, an all too believable one given how badly DGSE has behaved in the past. Sadly, while all these machinations gave us a broader view of Korpal's allegiances - he is definitely in bed with Talon - there isn't anything we can use in a court of law."

"If there's nothing we can use, what was the point?" Jack asked, eyes hard.
Lacroix actually yawned. "Who said anything about taking this to court?"

"We're not going to the UN?" Captain Amari asked, but she didn't sound surprised. "Are we that short on allies?"

"No, but it doesn't behoove us to show our hand so early. We don't need the scandal." Lacroix tilted his head to the side, smiling brightly, and was that a dimple? Did that fucker have dimples? There was something wrong with that.

"Quit dragging it out," you scowled. "You've already solved this, haven't you?"

"What have I told you about patience, Chanceux?"

"Stop wallowing in your own cleverness and spill it," Gabriel said.

"Soldiers," Lacroix laughed and you remembered his warning about impatience. The bastard. "Agent Shimada, Agent Mihret and I have solved it." Lacroix basked in his own admiration, and maybe some of Ziv's. Ziv was acquiring that angled smirk that Lacroix did so well. Ugh. And was he trying to grow a mustache? This was just getting weird.

"Korpal has been estranged from his wife for years. It's a political marriage and very acrimonious for obvious reasons," Genji said. He still looked bored, but it had to be the faceplate. He was awake, his eyes were open, but he didn't look interested in the proceedings.

"Because he's a dick or because he likes dick?" Jesse asked.

"Both," Lacroix said. "And his wife has been looking for something to use against him."

"So we wrecked his sham marriage, whoop-dee-shit," Jesse said, taking his hat off. "You've seen these trashy rich divorces. It sucks for him, but how does that help us?"

"Gita Sharma comes from a proud, high-caste, obscenely wealthy family. Agent Mihret posed as a private investigator and contacted her to offer her his services. It was a clichéd story about him tracking down one cheating spouse and catching him with Korpal. But she bought it, accepted the contract, and we produced a few films: suffice to say that Korpal's companion is older than he looks, was willing, and was well-compensated for his evening roles. Gita plans to leak it selectively. Her clan will take insult. He will disappear in a twisted honor killing, but everyone in their society will know it is because he crossed the Sharmas, and no one will suspect Blackwatch involvement."

Everyone sat there, digesting that.

"What kind of reports did he send back to the UN?" Jack asked.

"In his private communications with Director Petras, he recommended that Strike Commander Morrison be given an operations oversight advisory position and Commander Reyes be promoted. Interestingly, for his UN oversight committee, he only had positive and vague reports to give about Blackwatch, hence Commander Reyes' recommendation," Athena said.

Gabriel and Jack exchanged looks.

"It could have been much worse," Lacroix said, smiling. "We can work with this. But what did he send Talon?"

"We can't tell everything he sent anything off to Talon. Ziv and I are decrypting all the data packets we intercepted, but Korpal was using some pretty cutting edge tech," Winston said, sheepishly. "We know he delivered a more in-depth report about Blackwatch and Commander Reyes to them. But we're still working with the data we do have."

So you had no idea if he'd linked you to Lacroix. You would have to operate as if he had. Though if he had, you could maintain the fiction that you were under duress. It wouldn't be difficult.

"We'll keep you updated," Ziv said.

"The Chennai local news is reporting that Vikram Korpal's vehicle was carjacked just outside his father-in-law's home. He was tragically killed," Athena announced. "The police suspect the motive was robbery. But some of the celebrity gossip sites are already whispering that it was Gita's oldest brother who ordered the hit."

"That was quick," Ana said, after a moment.

Lacroix radiated slick, untouchable self-satisfaction.

You were glad Korpal was dead. But did Lacroix have to be that right, damnit?

"How much of that faux drama was necessary?" You stared hard at Lacroix, wondering if you could make his head explode through sheer willpower.

"Window dressing, Chanceux. You, me, and McCree kept him distracted with petty Blackwatch politics. However, he did spread some gossip with people lacking the proper clearances-" Lacroix gave an apologetic shrug.

"...Is there now a rumor that I'm sleeping with Lacroix?"

Winston averted his eyes. Jack and Gabriel both looked irritated. Captain Amari took off her hat and scratched her head. You were going to have to ask her how she managed to go through her career not getting paired with everyone she spoke to; maybe it was because she was classy, maybe it was because everyone knew she could make their heads explode from three miles away.

"Have lunch with Amélie today. In a very public place. That should quell any issues," Lacroix said.

"Or it will make everyone think you're sleeping with both of them," Genji said.

"Better a slut than a homewrecker," Ziv added helpfully.

You were going to throw your coffee mug at him, but Jesse knew you too well and grabbed it first.

_________________________________________________________

You sipped your coffee and tried to smile at Amélie Lacroix.

"We should do this with wine," she said, her lipstick not coming off on the rim of her mug. How did she do that? "I know they frown upon that in the cafeteria, so we will have to go out into the city." Her accent was pronounced but elegant and you were glad she spoke English fluently.
Your French was...laughable. Literally: Ziv and Lacroix laughed at your accent.

You conscientiously cut your cake into dainty bites with your fork.

Amélie wore an off-the-shoulder sweater dress in maroon and knee-high leather boots. Her hair was pulled back in an effortless chignon and her nails matched her sweater. Her makeup was bold and flawless. You now understood what Lacroix meant about Amélie being the perfect teacher on how to pass in higher echelons of society.

"I uh...sure," you said. "I'm sorry. This is a new experience. I've never had to do this before and I'm sorry that you've been dragged into our mess."

"It is no trouble, Chanceux," she said with a gentle laugh. "I am delighted to have some way to repay you for that ski trip. And Gérard speaks so highly of you."

That was laying it on thick, but you had enough manners to not badmouth Lacroix to his wife. "I was just doing my job," you said.

"So modest, it is very unnecessary. You should be proud of your accomplishments, even if you aren't allowed to speak of them." She took a deep breath, raising her hands elegantly, palms up. "Stand up straighter. Look people in the eye. You are formidable. Don't be afraid to show it."

"I'm happiest when not being noticed," you said. "Because if I've been noticed, I've done my job wrong."

"Who's talking about work? There's an entirely different side to life." She smiled conspiratorially. "I've seen how your men look at you. Even if you wear no makeup, dingy armor, and a semi-flattering uniform: none of that matters. They appreciate you and that is how it should be." She tapped your nose with her index finger. "But you could always dress the part. Bring them to their knees. It is good to be fascinating."

"Uhh..." Because you were not having this conversation with someone you barely knew in the middle of the Overwatch cafeteria.

"You lack savoir-faire. Gérard has said as much, but really, it isn't his place to tell you these things so bluntly. You and Ana should accompany me out for a night on the town. Shopping, a spa visit, dinner." She sighed happily. "Overwatch is...pleasant, but it is so very dry. We should get out and see an opera or perhaps a puppet show? Would that be more to your taste?"

That did not sound fun. "I've never been to the opera. And puppets are creepy."

Amélie pursed her lips. "Maybe we should start small with an art museum. Ana would enjoy that. I will talk to Gérard. He will make it so."

You put a piece of cake in your mouth to give yourself time to think.

"Yes, Ana will enjoy herself and I think you will too, Chanceux. We can expense it, of course. You are supposed to be training with me soon anyway. You will teach me sneaky knife moves. I will teach you which knife is appropriate at dinner. Then we can discuss which dinner knife is the most elegant choice for an assassination. I expect timing is the key." She studied your face. "Gérard can't possibly expect you to play honeytrap without some quality time at a salon. See, I know some things about espionage." She smiled at you. "And what I do not know, I will learn. And I will smile and hold my head high while doing it. Because they do not deserve to see me in distress. Remember that, Chanceux. Even if they are getting to you, never let them see it."

You had forgotten for a moment that Amélie had been a ballerina and even if you were uncultured swine, you knew the performing arts world to be cutthroat and vicious. Her poise wasn’t just for show. It was an armor in and of itself.

"Thanks," you said.

"It is not enough to be impassive," she said sharply. "You must be absolutely unconcerned with their trivial thoughts. They are nothing to you, Chanceux. And do not be afraid to show it. They will come to fear and respect you. Et c’est comme ça."

"I...thanks?" You stared at the empty plates; that meant dinner was over, right? OK, you’d survived and had managed not to disgrace yourself. Excellent.

Amélie stood. "Dinner was delightful," she told you, and clasped your hands in hers. She kissed each of your cheeks left, right, left, right, and you didn’t even try to return the gesture. "We should do this again soon. À bientôt, Chanceux!" She gave an elegant little wave and sauntered off, half the cafeteria watching her.

You took advantage of the distraction to slip away.

Chapter End Notes

...I need to go to bed. Kind of dumb right now. But today was an amusing and dramatic day. Between my manager telling me "I can't deal with this right now! You do it!" In reference to handling the local news (my other coworkers were like "NO! Don't let her do it!" Which was the wise decision) and the level of hilariously obnoxious shit that was said, I'm actually kind of good. Still need to find a new job.
Chapter 28

A few days after Korpal's tragic demise, you were finally healed up. Angela didn't clear you for operations, but you were officially off medical leave. Best not to mention that little Korpal mission you'd undertaken. Angela didn't have to know about that.

When you walked into your room, you nearly tripped over Jack. He sat at your desk, in black fatigues, his legs stretched out. Gabriel reclined on your bed, in a hoodie and sweatpants. You shut the door behind you, very aware of how crowded everything was. Your room was just big enough for you. Having Jack in it the other night was cramped. Having both of them here? You'd have to push in the chair and maybe stack some more furniture in the corner.

"Interesting gun," Jack said, not picking up Montgomery's revolver. He rolled one of the bullets between his fingers. You'd left them lined up on the desk. "That the one that nearly got you, baby?"

You nodded, eyes flicking between him and Gabriel. Gabriel inclined his head back in greeting, but you weren't fooled by his coolness. Something was churning beneath the surface.

"You think it was closer than the goddamn Red Pole?" Jack asked, eyes flashing.

You shrugged, because while the Red Pole omnic had nearly gotten you killed in two different ways, it'd happened too fast to linger over. Sometimes you'd be drifting off and you'd glimpse eternity in the barrel of that very revolver. "I know which one gives me nightmares."

"That's because I got all the nightmares from Operation Cobblestone Dust," Jack ground out.

You shook your head and leaned forward, tapping him between the eyes. "Not all of them. If I'd been too slow-"
He caught your wrist and pulled you onto his lap. The chair creaked beneath your added weight and it rocked backward too far.

"Saw you running the track today." Jack pushed your hair back, one hand trailing up your side. "Healed up then?"

"I think I can handle you tonight. No sparring-level stuff though." Your voice was breathy and you tightened your grip on Jack's shoulders.

"That's why we're using your room," Jack said, already unbuttoning your shirt. "Can't get too carried away in here."

"Jack, you can get carried away anywhere," you said, recalling him pinning you up against the wall in that stairwell in Belfast.

"What do you think, Gabe? The bed or the floor?"

"Bent over the desk could work. Dresser's a little high."

Your pulse picked up. This was all for show, they already knew what they wanted to do and where. You still liked hearing it.

"Nah, she's going to need some cushioning." Jack's hands lingered on your sides. "Promised her I was going to pound her senseless. And I keep my promises."

"Floor then," Gabriel said, voice husky. "You'll break the bed."

You looked between the two of them. "I uh...can we not break things, please?" You climbed off his lap, a little concerned about the chair. It hadn't tilted that far back before.

"Floor it is," Jack said. "Still owe you our post-combat cooldown."

"I'm surprised you're into delayed gratification," you said, because pointing out that he was using a ridiculously technical term for sex would just annoy him.

"I'm really not." He narrowed his eyes at you. "I just haven't forgotten your attitude problem."

"What? I was well-behaved. Gabriel agrees." You waved your hand at Gabriel, who just smirked.

"I don't, and as your CO for that mission, it's my opinion that matters." Jack's expression flattened. "You were insubordinate, mouthy, and a loose cannon. Worse-" Jack stood and yanked your collar, pulling you closer. "-you are still completely unrepentant."

"But Jack-

"You think you're the only one who can hold a grudge?" His smile wasn't the least bit friendly now. "You're too used to Gabriel letting things slide. I'm not that kind of guy."

"That was over a week ago!"

"I've had a lot of time to think on it," he said, dragging his knuckles across your cheek. "Had so many ideas. Gabe talked me out of some of them, since you're still healing up."

You glanced over your shoulder warily. Gabriel sat on the edge of your bed, hat on your night stand. He looked entirely too pleased.

"It's not him you should be watching," Jack said, one hand still gripping your collar. He pushed you up against the door, knee parting your thighs. "Or are you trying to egg me on?"

Your nipples tightened and you rubbed against his thigh. "No, sir."

Jack chuckled and released his hold on your shirt. "Is this what I have to do to get you to behave?" He leaned in teeth grazing your throat. You moaned as he sucked on your neck, squirming as his hands cupped your ass. He ground against you, cock already hard.

"If you fuck me up against the door, everyone's going to hear us." Your voice came out high and breathless.

"Would serve you right. Bet it would stop all those pesky rumors if everyone knew who you belonged to," Jack growled in your ear. "Not McCree. Not Gérard." He unfastened your pants, calloused fingers slipping into your panties. Your eyes widened as he slid one thick digit inside you. "This is the property of the Strike Commander."

"You are so greedy," Gabriel said, but he didn't sound upset.

"Already wet for me?" Jack purred, ignoring Gabriel. "You like this, don't you?"

You nodded, not trusting yourself to stay quiet.

He pushed another finger inside and you covered your mouth.

"You're soaking wet, baby. So eager for me to fuck you? I know you haven't been taking care of yourself lately." Jack dropped to his knees and nudged your panties aside. His tongue flicked against your clit and you bit your glove. His fingers moved leisurely inside you, wiggling and spreading you for him.

You slumped against the door, your legs shaking as he played with you. His eyes stayed on your face and even if he was the one on his knees, he had you trapped there. It was his touch making you tremble, his tongue teasing you while you struggled not to make any noise. There wasn't any question as to who was in charge.

You bit your glove when he pulled away, trying to mask your disappointment.

"When I let you come, it's going to be on my cock. Nowhere else." Jack wiped his mouth off on the back of his hand. "Strip."

You complied, tossing your clothes into a pile on the bed.

Jack stroked your ribs, watching your face. He poked them gently and you pursed your lips.

"I said I was fine."

"And I know better than to believe you," Jack said sharply. "You'd rather lie than admit weakness."

"Only some of the time," you said, a little defensive.

"You think those times don't count? You think that makes me trust you more?"
The words were a slap in the face. "Jack-"

"Don't "Jack" me," he growled, shaking his head. "You think I don't remember that building going down in flames? I saw the pictures of that Red Pole omnic; it slaughtered those civilians. Then you disappeared into that goddamn building after a fucking assassin on your own. Are you trying to get yourself killed?"

"No." You crossed your arms. "Jesus Jack, you want to rehash this now?"

"No. I want you to know why I'm angry."

You sighed. "Do we need to spar instead?"

"No," he said gruffly. "Come here." He patted his thighs. You perched on his lap, his erection pressed against your leg. You watched him carefully, and he pressed his forehead to yours. "We talked all about how your decisions were tactically sound. Fine. You're right. You did Blackwatch proud. But you scared the shit out of me, Lucky. Worse, you don't seem to care. You never apologized. You never acknowledged that I had a goddamn point. You were too caught up in being fucking right. It's one thing if an agent takes a risk for her CO. But you're not just an agent and I'm not just your CO. What do you think that does to me, knowing that you're ready to throw yourself away because it's your goddamn job to protect me?"

"Then maybe you should have said this and not been riding my ass over insubordination, tardiness, and everything but what was really bothering you!" Your throat was tight and you hated the wounded look on Jack's face. It made you feel like the bad guy.

"Yeah. I get that." He closed his eyes. "And I know you're bad at feelings. But I'm no expert either; that's why it took so long to put this into words. What would you do in my place?"

You hung your head, unsure of what to say.

"This is the part where you apologize," Gabriel said dryly, still sitting on the bed.

You rubbed the back of your neck. Because that was the obvious answer you were too dumb to think of. "I'm sorry, Jack. I'm not sorry that I accomplished my mission, but I am sorry that I put you through all that."

Once upon a time you'd had this conversation with Gabriel, after rescuing Ziv and Lacroix in Shanghai and getting shot for your efforts. You expected this kind of anxiety from Gabriel. But this was new with Jack. Did they have a point? Were you too careless? Or were they too attached to see the situation clearly? Because realistically, if anyone was expendable, well, it wasn't either of them.

"Better," Jack said, kissing you. You pressed against him, goosebumps spreading across your skin. "Don't do that to me, please."

"OK," you said. "I'll try."

"That's all I can ask," Jack sighed, because you both knew it wasn't that simple. "You're cold," he said, rubbing your arms.

"Yup," you said, because it wouldn't be nice to point out that he told you to strip then talked about feelings. "Gabriel should come over here."

"Gabe's not the only one who can warm you up," Jack eased you onto your back, kneeling between your legs. He pulled his shirt off and you sighed happily, running your fingers through the downy blonde fuzz and across his nipples. Your hands lingered on a ridge of scars just under his heart, the muscles of his abdomen firm and well-defined. He caught your wrist and held it against his chest.

You stopped moving, gaze flicking to his face. Jack frowned down at you, his brow furrowed. There was still tension in his shoulders.

"What's wrong?"

His free hand traced your jawline, fingers coming to rest on your throat. He took a deep breath. "Want to ask you to do something for me."

"OK," you said cautiously.

"I'm still pretty on edge," he admitted. He released your hand. "Can you let me be in charge?"

"You usually are," you said, eyeing his hand on your neck. "I mean, you're on top of me right now."

Jack gave you a sheepish grin. "I...not what I meant." He rubbed the back of his neck, a blush spreading across his skin. "Can you let me be in charge without pushing or goading? No sass, no fighting me. I want you to submit."

You sucked in a breath trying not to make a face. "Like, all "yes sir," and gooey agreeableness? Because I don't know if I can do that convincingly." You weren't a goddamn Barbie.

Jack blinked. "I-no. That'd be weird." He laughed, fingers stroking your throat. "You don't have to pretend to like everything I'm doing. And you can always use your safe words. I just...need a little more control right now."

You swallowed, heart rate picking up. "I uh...no arguing with you?" Your voice went a little higher than you liked. "I just have to be obedient and take it?"

"You act like I'm going to hurt you," Jack said, frown deepening.

You exhaled slowly. "It's just that I'm already the one who usually gets tied up and overwhelmed. Being difficult gives me a handle on things." You crossed your arms.

Jack leaned in and kissed your neck gently. "It's OK then. Don't want to make you uncomfortable," he said softly, though you could hear the disappointment in his voice. "I want you to enjoy yourself too."

You closed your eyes, and took a deep breath. The fact Jack had saved up all that emotion from Belfast worried you. He seemed fine after the initial blowout, but obviously that wasn't the case. Sparring with Gabriel hadn't sorted him out. Cuddling and talking with you afterward hadn't really fixed him either.

Jack had already admitted that you did the job well; this wasn't actually about Operation Cobblestone Dust. This was about him realizing he couldn't order you out of danger, no matter how much he wanted to. This was Jack's baggage catching up to Gabriel's - because you expected this kind of reaction from Gabriel. That Jack had it too surprised you. Maybe he hadn't told you the worst of his war stories. Maybe he just hid his issues better. But Jack needed some kind of grip on the situation, and this was his solution.

You didn't like it, but you understood. It was just the antithesis of who you were. It was OK if someone else was in charge. But there was a difference between reluctantly following orders and quiet obedience. You didn't give in without a fight. You hadn't survived this long by just lying down and taking it. Even if you couldn't win, you didn't just submit.

Of course, you remembered Captain Patel dying for Gabriel and for you. That still tore you up inside. "Almost dying" and "actually dying" were very different, but now that you'd been through it, that fear would never leave you. And Jack? Well, he experienced it more than most.

You mulled it over, and came back to one conclusion: yes, you trusted Jack.

"I'll try it, sir," you said, opening your eyes.

Jack's mouth was still against your neck and he stiffened against you. "Are you sure?"

"I'll use my safe words if I need to," you said, running your fingers through his hair. "Not going to lie, I'm a little worried about whatever you have planned. But I'll try."

"You forgot to say, "sir," he said, kissing your fingers.

"...Sorry, sir," you said, quashing your urge to say something petty.

He laughed softly, nuzzling your throat. "Move your arms."

You dropped them to your sides, shuddering as he dipped lower, taking as much of one breast into his mouth as he could fit and sucking hard. You clenched your teeth as he pinched your other nipple, rolling it between his fingers and tugging on it lightly. He wasn't rough but your nipples were sensitive and he toyed with them while you squirmed beneath him. He kept one knee between your thighs. You ground against him, whimpering as his teeth grazed your flesh.

"You're getting my pants all wet," Jack said, raising his head. "Are you that sloppy already, agent?"

You bit your lip, staring at him reproachfully. You liked banter. And here he was, expecting "yes, sir" and "no, sir." It just wasn't right. "Please, sir-

He ran his fingers along your lips. "Open."

You licked his fingertips, tasting yourself. He smiled crookedly, pushed two fingers into your mouth slowly pumping them in and out. "I can see how badly you want to argue with me. Keep these in your mouth until you can be good. Next time I'll have a new gag for you."

You closed your eyes, and focused on getting his fingers wet.

"You make the same face when you're sucking my dick. I like thrusting just a little harder and watching you choke it down. You are getting better at it. And we're always happy to help you raise your limits." Jack withdrew his fingers. "You want me to play with your pussy some more, agent? Get you nice and ready for my cock?"

"Please, sir." You parted your thighs. "See how wet I am?"

"You're pushing it, agent," Jack said, but he didn't sound bothered. You reclined on your elbows, sighing as Jack slid his fingers back inside you. "Don't think you're getting off without permission. Do you understand?"

He really wanted you to fight with him. That was the only explanation. Except when you met his gaze, there was a fierceness in his eyes that made you swallow your smartass retort. "Yes, sir."

"Good girl," he murmured, leaning in to kiss you. He nibbled on your lower lip, his fingers speeding up as he covered your mouth with his. You moaned as he curled his them, making you arch against him.

"Please-"

"So eager," Jack chuckled. "Don't worry, agent. You'll get all the cock you can take and then some. Hand me a pillow, will you Gabe?"

Your eyes widened as you realized Gabriel was already naked. He sat on your bed slowly stroking himself, dark eyes fixed on you and Jack. He tossed Jack one of your pillows.

"Do you have any idea how many times this week I've lain awake in bed jerking myself off, thinking about all the ways I wanted to fuck you when you finally healed up?" Jack asked conversationally.

"That's really hot, sir." You clenched around his fingers and Jack smirked.

"You're right baby, I don't like delayed gratification at all. Frustration makes me...testy." He pulled his fingers out of you. "Lick them clean."

You flicked your tongue along his knuckles, making a show of it before you opened your mouth and sucked on your juices off his skin. Jack groaned.

"I'll fuck your mouth later, agent. Get on all fours. Face Gabe."

You rolled forward, balancing on your hands and knees, your eyes on Gabriel's face, his fist still leisurely pumping his cock. "What are you doing on my bed, Gabriel?"

Smack! Jack's sharp slap against your ass stung and you dropped your head, teeth clenched.

"Pay attention, agent. And if you're going to address Commander Reyes, you can use "sir" or "papi." He'll answer to "daddy" as well, but you won't be walking tomorrow if you use those last two."

"You really shouldn't," Gabriel said, voice low and you shivered.

Jack dropped the pillow under your head. "You can scream into that."

You looked helplessly at Gabriel and his mouth curved in a satisfied grin. "You brought this on yourself, baby."

You bit your lip as Jack pressed himself against your slit. "Status, agent?"

"Green," you said.

Jack's hips pressed against your ass, and you shuddered as he hilted inside you on the first thrust. He stretched you, cock going in deep from this angle, and you dropped your head into the pillow, teeth sinking into the fabric.
Jack gave a low growl, gripping your hips with bruising force. "You're such a pretty cockslut, agent. Is this what you've been craving?"

"Oh yes, sir," you moaned.

"Going to fuck that sweet little pussy wide open and fill you with my cum," Jack said, speeding up. "Going to remind you exactly who you belong to. And after I've left you exhausted and used on the ground, you're going to thank me for it."

You rested your cheek on the pillow, focusing on breathing. You wanted to push back, to set the pace, but Jack held you firmly against him. He nuzzled your cervix with each stroke and you mewled into the pillow, panting softly.

"Look at yourself, ass in the air, body shaking, you're dripping wet for me and all you can do is lie there and take it," Jack sighed happily. He kneaded your ass. "I remember you teasing me in that stairwell. You said you liked it when I got "demanding and bossy." This isn't quite what you had in mind, is it?"

"No sir," you whined. "Not complaining though, sir." Despite his conversational tone, Jack had set a punishing rhythm, and you clawed at the floor, heat and pressure building in your core. You slid one hand down between your thighs.

"Did I say you could do that?" Jack caught your wrist. "And you were being so good too."

"Please Jack," you glanced at him over your shoulder. His hair fell in his face and sweat dripped down his chest. You clenched around him. "I wasn't going to come without your permission."

"Mmm, still so disrespectful. You should be calling me "sir."

He pushed you back against the floor, your face in the pillow.

"I'm sorry, sir. " You exhaled as he resumed his hard thrusts. "I get carried away, just can't help myself, sir, especially when you're spoiling me with your cock. Need you to keep me in line, sir."

Jack groaned, twitching inside you. "Damnit, agent."

"If you want her to be quiet, you have to use a gag, Jack." Gabriel chuckled. "You didn't say she couldn't be deviously agreeable, did you? Or did you forget what a clever little bitch she is?"

"Please sir, I'm just doing what you told me." Because you had learned how to give someone exactly what they asked for while keeping it the opposite of what they wanted. You smothered your smile in the pillow, because it wouldn't do for them to see you looking smug.

"I don't think you really understand submission," Jack growled.

"Maybe you can give me an expert demonstration sir. You're always talking about leading by example."

Gabriel laughed.

Jack stopped moving, his hands dropping off your waist.

"What was that, agent?"
"Sorry, sir," you said, trying not giggle.

"You're sorry?" Tension strained Jack's voice into a harsh growl. "You don't sound sorry. If you can't do this, agent, then we'll stop."

Belatedly, you realized that you shouldn't be pushing him so hard. The whole point of submitting was to give Jack some sense of control. Your playing derailed that. You met Jack's steely gaze over your shoulder.

"I am sorry, sir," you said softly. "I-" You understood sex about as much as you understood the need for control, even if your tics were subtler than Jack or Gabriel's. Jack was wrong; you understood what he meant by submission, you just didn't want to do it. Even though you agreed to it. And maybe that wasn't quite fair. Your eyes darted to his hands, and you took a deep breath. "Let me get on my back, sir. I think I can convince you."

Jack sat back on his haunches, expression cool. "Go on then."

You rolled over and spread your thighs. "Please come here, sir."

Jack knelt between your legs, cockhead pressed against your dripping slit. You took his right hand and placed it on your throat. You reclined against the pillow, and released his wrist, forcing your own hands down to your sides.

"Please don't squeeze, sir." You forced yourself to meet his eyes. You took another deep breath, unable to hide your discomfort. "I know you like breathplay, but I can't do that."

He caressed your throat, not quite closing his hand, but applying just enough pressure to hold your attention. His eyes flicked from his hand to your face, and his demeanor softened. You wondered if it was enough, but it was all you could think of and even now your breathing grew shaky. You trusted Jack not to hurt you, but that ever so slight hint of constriction still made you nervous.

"Oh sweetheart," he breathed and slid back inside you. He kept his eyes on your face, hand steady on your neck. "Such a good girl. So good to me," he murmured and kissed you hungrily. You trusted Jack not to hurt you, but that ever so slight hint of constriction still made you nervous.

"Please don't squeeze, sir." You forced yourself to meet his eyes. You took another deep breath, unable to hide your discomfort. "I know you like breathplay, but I can't do that."

He caressed your throat, not quite closing his hand, but applying just enough pressure to hold your attention. His eyes flicked from his hand to your face, and his demeanor softened. You wondered if it was enough, but it was all you could think of and even now your breathing grew shaky. You trusted Jack not to hurt you, but that ever so slight hint of constriction still made you nervous.

"Oh sweetheart," he breathed and slid back inside you. He kept his eyes on your face, hand steady on your neck. "Such a good girl. So good to me," he murmured and kissed you hungrily. You opened up to him, hands balling into fists at your sides.

You began to pant as he resumed his hard pace, his cock coated in your slickness. He didn't hold back now, his free hand moving down to your nipples, pinching and tugging while you squirmed under him. "You did your best to ignore the hand on your throat, keeping your attention on his face, his cock, everything but that part you didn't like. "Sir, please."

"You want it harder?" He ground against you and you bit your lip, nerves oversensitive. You wanted to move, but you couldn't, not with his hand pinning you down. He canted his hips, hitting your g-spot and your legs jerked off the ground.

"Jack!"

"Oh, you like that. Gotta remember rank, though." He nipped your bottom lip, thrusting hard inside you. His enthusiasm was contagious, and you wanted him just as badly. You raised your hips, trying to keep your back flat on the floor. Watching the almost blissful expression on Jack's face made it easier.

"Please, sir-"

Jack gave you that bright delighted smile and touched his nose to yours. "What do you want, baby? You want me to touch you somewhere else?"
"Please-" His hand kept you in place, even if he wasn't applying any force. "Please let me come, sir. You promised."

Jack’s breath hitched. His free hand slipped lower and you gasped as his calloused fingers worked rough circles around your clit.

You trembled underneath him, heels digging into the floor. "Please Jack-"

"That's it, baby. Going to fill you up again and again. I did promise to give you more than you could take. Me and Gabe both, don't you worry. You're being so good, I know. Love how you feel underneath me," he rambled, hips driving him deeper into you. You threw your head back, eyes squeezed shut as your core nerves coiled tighter and tighter. "Open your eyes, baby. I love seeing the look on your face when you come."

"Jack-"

"Oh, I haven't given you permission yet, have I?" Jack didn't slow down. "Are you just hanging there, trying to hold it back?"

"Please-" Light flickered on the edge of your vision. "Please let me come- I've been good sir, haven't I?"

Jack sighed, pleasure relaxing his smile. "Yes, baby. You can come."

It wasn't just his fingers and cock that sent you over the edge. The tension that twisted through your limbs and core snapped at his words, and you writhed underneath him, control shattered from getting his permission to come. He lasted a taut few thrusts through your orgasm before he spent himself inside you.

His hand never wavered, even when he came his grip didn't tighten and your eyes fluttered as his thumb stroked the side of your neck. He released your throat after he came, mouth claiming yours as he pinned you to ground with his hips. Jack held you against him, careful not to put his full weight on you.

You embraced him, chest too tight from the vulnerability of the act.

"Are you OK?" He asked, those blue eyes bright and liquid as he pressed almost frantic kisses to your face. "Was it too much?"

"I need a moment." You closed your eyes, breath evening out. When you opened them, Gabriel was above you, one hand brushing your hair back.

Jack sat up, pulling you against him. He rubbed your back and you took a few more shuddering breaths, before kissing his cheek.

"I'm OK. Just...too exposed." You shook your head. "Not something for every day."

"Won't do it without permission," Jack sighed against you.

You looked at Gabriel. "I hope you don't want to do that too."

"I'd be too tempted to squeeze," he chuckled and you winced. "I'm kidding." He leaned over and kissed you. "Maybe some other time when we're on the mats again. I just want you riding my dick, baby. No games for me tonight."
Jack rolled his eyes.

Gabriel sat on the floor, his erect cock bobbing slightly. "You can be on top, if you want."

It was enticing, not just because of the picture he presented. You needed some control back now. You rose on unsteady legs and balanced against Gabriel's shoulder.

"Can you lie down?"

Jack had to move onto the bed to make room, and Gabriel took the pillow and reclined, his smile devious. You lowered yourself onto him, exhaling slowly as you inched downward. You half expected him to grab your hips and rush you, but he propped himself up on his elbows, watching you through half-lidded eyes.

You pressed your palms against his abs, resting your weight on your knees. The stretch was easier from this angle and you ran your fingers along the crisscross of scars on Gabriel's torso and chest.

"You want me to sit up and suck on your pretty nipples?" Gabriel asked.

"No. Just want to enjoy the view for a moment."

Gabriel stretched out naked beneath you, and folded his arms under his head. He gave you a full pinup smile, all mischievous promises and wicked pleasure. You reached out and raked your nails along his broad chest and across his nipples. He twitched inside you and you clenched, breath quickening.

"Teasing me isn't going to end nicely for you," Gabriel rasped, expression growing fiercer.

"Still recovering from Jack," you said. "I don't have your stamina. Probably should've waited, but you looked so good sitting there and I'm greedy."

Jack laughed softly and tugged on a lock of your hair. You looked to your side, and he was on his stomach, watching you both. He leaned in to kiss you again and you ground against Gabriel. "That's it baby, I love watching you take him all the way. And he's trying to be nice right now, letting you take the reins. But look at how tense he is."

Your breath hitched.

"I know you've missed this," Jack continued. "And he has too. You going to push him like you push me?"

"No, because Gabriel's nice," you said dryly.

Jack sputtered incredulously.

"Oh hermosa, Jack must've fucked you harder than he thought and addled your brains, because I am not nice." Gabriel sounded offended.

You traced the line of hair down his abdominals. "You're nice to me. That's what matters." You bent over and planted a kiss on his chin. "I want to go slow right now, so that's what you're going to let me do, OK?"

Gabriel gave a tolerant sigh. "Jack's right, I do spoil you."

"You indulge both of us, because you're good like that." You nodded happily. "I'll start moving in a moment. You're just so big, Gabriel, and Jack didn't exactly take it easy on me."

"You kind of begged for it," Jack said, not sounding remotely sorry.

"Yup. Not denying it." You rolled your hips and whatever Gabriel was about to say was lost in a choked groan. "Oh Gabriel, it's easier to take you like this. You still fill me up though." You closed your eyes, hips rocking in short shallow motions. "I need it this way now, but I don't know if it's my favorite position-"

"I can still bend you over the bed and fuck you into the mattress," Gabriel offered. "I'll even try not to break the bed."

"Notice how he didn't say anything about not breaking you," Jack purred.

You shivered.

"You like that?" Gabriel rumbled.

You nodded, but pressed down on Gabriel's hips as he began to thrust upward. "Not yet."

His nostrils flared and he gave you a hard look. "My patience has limits."

"Just enjoying this," you said. "The calm before you guys gang up on me again. I like being coherent too, you know."

"You like being a tease," Gabriel growled. "How about we put you on all fours, so Jack and I can spit roast you?"

You began to bounce up and down breathing hard as you took him all the way. "Don't you like seeing me on top?" You pulled one of his hands up and placed it against your chest. "I'm even doing all the work-"

Gabriel snapped his hips up and loud squeak escaped your throat. "If you want me to lie here, don't tease," he warned. "Otherwise, I'm going to assume you want me to turn you over and pound you into next week."

You sighed as he cupped your breasts.

"Tell me what you want," he said, hips moving with yours.

"Oh Gabriel, it all sounds good."

"Is that what you want?" His hands dropped to your waist.

"Please," you said.

"Then that's what you'll get," he said and flipped you onto your back.

"It is 0600 hours. Strike Commander, you have a meeting with Epsilon squad in half an hour. Commander Reyes, you're due to give the Blackwatch auxiliary armory its monthly inspection. Agent Strike...you should probably take the day off."

It occurred to you then that you hadn't outlined privacy protocols with Athena. Shit. You were on the floor, pillow long gone, squashed between Gabriel and Jack. You were sticky and sweaty and curled against Gabriel's side, Jack's arms wrapped tightly around your waist. Your neck hurt. Other places hurt too, but your neck ached because you'd passed out at a weird angle.

"Jack?"

He groaned and you knew he wasn't going to make that meeting.

"Gabriel?"

"Postpone the inspection till 1600 hours, Athena. And then get the fuck out," Gabriel muttered, rolling onto his back and grunting as he bumped the dresser. "Too old for this bullshit."

"Is the Epsilon squad meeting mission critical, Athena?" You asked.

"Negative, Agent Strike. It is an acquisitions presentation."

"Then reschedule the Epsilon squad meeting for- whenever Jack's next free period is after 1100 hours," you said. "Is there anything else pressing?"

"No, the meeting can be rescheduled for 1400 hours," Athena said. "Done." There was a long pause. "You have no mission critical duties today, Agent Strike. Would you like me to clear your schedule?"

"Thanks," you said, not quite ready to have the boundaries talk with an AI in front of Jack and Gabriel. "We'll talk later, Athena."

"Of course. Enjoy your rest."

Jack mumbled some semblance of thanks and buried his face in the center of your back.

You ached and would be walking funny later. You had an emitter somewhere, but you couldn't quite bring yourself to get vertical and look for it. Instead you shifted to a more comfortable angle against Gabriel.

"You OK?" He pushed your hair out of your face and rolled onto his side.

"Exhausted," you whispered, because you didn't want to wake Jack.

"Kind of pushed it last night." He stretched, bumped his arm, and glared at the wall. "I do not miss these tiny rooms."

"Who pushed it?" You didn't need to see yourself to know you had finger mark bruises all over. Just like you didn't need to see either of them to know they'd already healed up from your bite marks and scratches. It really wasn't fair.

"You and Jack. I was a gentleman," he said with a chuckle.

You snorted, because he must have a very different definition of the word "gentleman." He and Jack had done all they had promised and then some. "You're talking about how we started out? The throat stuff?"
"Yeah." Gabriel stroked the side of your neck. "You didn't seem to enjoy it."

"The sex was good, but it's a boundary," you agreed. "I don't want to do it very often, but I could handle it. He was...really on edge, and I didn't know what else to do."

Gabriel blew out a breath, brow furrowed.

"I mean, I had my safe words. And if he had squeezed, well, he'd regret it more than me. It was symbolic."

"I know the three of us were building up to sex, especially with all the teasing. But if Jack's wound up like this, next time take it to the mat. He'll kick your ass without leaving any permanent damage, then tear off your clothes and fuck you there. It'll be rough, but there won't be mindgames."

"That was an option?" You sighed, because that actually sounded pretty fun too.

"Would've had to wait a few days," Gabriel admitted. "You said you weren't up for sparring. Maybe we should've done that instead."

"I...don't regret it. Just might be hesitant to do it again in the future. Not that I don't trust Jack; he was good. But in retrospect, it was outside my comfort zone. Now I really know." You sighed. "Do you and Jack do breathplay often?"

"Sometimes. Would it bother you to see?"

"I don't know. If you're enjoying yourselves, I don't think it would." You kissed his chest. "Thanks."

"Can't leave you unsupervised," he said and kissed your forehead. "Jack, you can stop pretending to be asleep. I don't know why you do this. You're both so bad at it."

You sputtered as Jack tightened his hold on you and nuzzled the back of your neck. "Seriously, Jack?"

"Why are you going to tell Gabe you were uncomfortable, but not me?" He hugged you against him.

"It was one of those after the fact realizations. And he asked."

"Would you have told me otherwise?"

"Maybe next time it came up," you admitted. "I'm not upset. It just wasn't my thing."

Jack huffed. "You need to say something if you don't like what we're doing or have done. It's part of that whole trust thing we're working on."

"It's hard to have a conversation when you're getting fucked stupid." You turned your head and kissed Jack's temple. "It wasn't awful and I'm not upset, Jack. Just processing. I think if you want actual submission, we'll have to work something out ahead of time. It's...difficult for me."

He stroked your back. "Of course. Now that wasn't so hard, was it?"

"Shut up," you muttered.
Gabriel reached over and patted Jack's shoulder. "You're both ridiculous. We good? Because I want to go back to sleep."

"Wait, you rescheduled my meeting so I could sleep in, didn't you?" Jack purred. "So that means we have time to-"

"No Jack, we're going back to sleep. And if there's time later, maybe," you said firmly.

Gabriel laughed softly and extended his arm over both of you. Jack took his hand and you nestled in between them, so warm it was almost uncomfortable. You didn't care. Gabriel held you like he was trying to shield you from the world. Jack held you like you melt into shadow if he looked away. And you held onto them, because when it came to the important things, you didn't know how to let go.

Chapter End Notes

This short chapter gave me so much trouble I almost cut it. Maybe I should have? IDK. Just finished the rough draft for this arc and my brain is mush.

Sick AGAIN, this time with a cold one of my coworkers managed to spread to half of us. It's a nasty one, I had to go buy something with pseudoepinephrine for the first time. (I grew up with people who fed me vitamin C and echinacea for a cold, so I'm trying to catch up with the 21st century relief options.) I usually just make Happy Death Broth, which is hot peppers, garlic, ginger, stock, and more hot peppers, but I don't feel like cooking. Just mucus-y and drained, and my nasal passage and throat hurt, so sneezing and coughing suck, and I'm gross.

Bet you got contaminated just from reading this.
Chapter 29

Chapter Summary

Operation Embalmer goes live.

Chapter Notes

See the end of the chapter for notes

After arriving in Zurich, your showers had never been awful, not like the fucking Ninth Circle, but you had occasionally run out of hot water, a hazard of living in a dormitory. But since Athena had gone live, you always had enough hot water. Was that coincidence? You didn't think so.

Jack had to leave first, his meeting was earliest and he needed to change clothes. Gabriel had reluctantly showered alone, because your shower wasn't really big enough to fit two people if they actually wanted to get clean and not just have sex in a tiny enclosed space.

You got cleaned up afterward, made a trip to the mess, and brought your food back to your room. You'd have to do laundry and you poked your chair. It creaked and you were pretty sure it wasn't safe to sit in.

"Athena, were you...listening last night?"

There was a long silence.

"Athena, I know you can hear me."

"Only till I was sure you were not distressed by them entering in your room. I know you have access codes to their quarters, however you don't actually have any permissions listed for others to enter your quarters unattended. I understand that intimacy is a private act and respecting that is one of my directives." There another pause. "Should I have warned you?"

"Nah. I don't want you warning them when I want to surprise them. It's only fair." You shoveled some macaroni and cheese into your mouth. "Thanks, I think."

"Also, there was a noise complaint. Agent McCree left his quarters to sleep in the rec room."

"Oops." You were going to have to apologize to Jesse. "He the only one who heard us?"

"He's the only one who commented on it. Agent Shimada is possibly aware. But Agent Vo slept through the whole thing."

"That's good. Vo Min doesn't wake up well." The demolitions expert was surly on the best of days, and you didn't want to get on her bad side. "Thanks for the wake up calls." You took another bite. "What criteria did you have to suggest I should take the day off?"

"I wasn't listening," she said after a moment. "Not while you were engaged in relations. But beforehand, the commanders were talking. Contextually, I assumed you would be physically exhausted if you went along with their...plans. Coupled with Agent McCree's early morning complaints, I assumed you did not get a sufficient amount of rest last night."

    Oh boy. "I guess I'm going to have to remind them to use privacy mode, huh? You're not scarred from their locker room talk, are you?"

    "Human intimacy seems very messy."

    "Yeah, it is." You silently reassured yourself that you did not have to explain sex to the AI. She had access to the net and you knew Ziv had to have given her some semblance of "the talk," if only to explain the sheer quantity of pornography available.

    "And it bridges connections on a mental level?"

    "It is considered enjoyable and recreational though, right?"

    "For me and them, yeah. Touch and sex are biological impulses, usually a bit lower of a priority than food and sleep. Some of us seem to want it more than others." You thought of Chang for a moment. "Gabriel and Jack are very...driven. But I know people who actively avoid contact with others."

    "Like Genji?" OK, Ziv obviously hadn't explained enough, because he was awful. Winston had an excuse. Ziv did not.

    "...I don't know what or who Genji does in his spare time," you said, partially lying. You didn't know everything, but you and Jesse compared notes, and you had a good idea. He spent a lot of time with Angela, and maybe something was going on there, but you also knew how long it took to do maintenance on you fingers - Genji had a lot more cyborg parts to take care of. "He has you calling him "Genji," now?"

    "We communicate regularly," Athena said, sounding almost squirrely. "Did I overstep my bounds with Commander Reyes?"

    You let it go, because if Genji had a problem with Athena, he obviously wouldn't hesitate to drag you in and make you deal with Winston and Ziv. "Gabriel hasn't given you access to his schedule, has he?"

    "No. But I have access to the facility checklist, and the auxiliary armory is due an inspection. Commander Reyes is a very hands-on leader and the records show his initials on all prior checklists."

    You chewed your food. "Good deduction." You weren't sure how Gabriel was going to react once he realized Athena was still trying to "help out" Blackwatch. But that wasn't actually your problem.

    "Do you think Commander Reyes will allow me to become a fixture in Blackwatch?"

    You sighed. "No idea. We've all had some bad experiences with inorganic life. I get that you're on our team. Totally on board with you. But back in the day, people trusted the omnis too. Granted, I don't remember how it was back before it all went bad. I know you can say some shit about organic life and that's totally fair, but I don't blame him for being wary." You finished up your mac and cheese; they'd gone fancy today, adding gorgonzola and crab meat. "Just keep doing what you're doing. He's warming up to you. I think."
"You have an upcoming mission in Hong Kong. The Fong Chun retrieval. Would you want me along?"

You sat back on your bed. Athena had kept you alive during Operation Cobblestone Dust. You didn't mind having her along. But it was you and Gabriel. "I don't mind. I don't know how Gabriel will feel. And...well..."

"You intend to engage in intimacy post-mission or possibly during the mission?"

You nearly choked on your tongue. "I...don't know? It's not just that. You're an asset, for sure. But it's just a retrieval. I don't actually need him along either."

"Fong has a very advanced security suite. I can't even penetrate his defenses. If you plan on abducting him from his own home, you will need more technical assistance. If not me, then Ziv."

You frowned. "You're researching this on your own, aren't you?"

"I am here to take care of my agents," Athena said, and you wondered just how far she was going to take that directive.

"OK. Send me the data. I'll look it over and if you're right, I'll make the proposal. Include what capacity you'll need to arrive in. I don't think Gabriel wants to bring any large omnic bodies along. But if you can minimize your footprint, he'll be more inclined to agree."

"Thank you, Lucky. I will do my best to ignore any sexual interplay between the two of you. I will even wait till after the fact to request clarification about terminology. Unless you'd rather I asked Ziv."

"Boundaries, Athena. Never give Ziv more ammo to use against me. Please."

"I don't want to bring Ziv."

You studied the schematics for Fong Chun's condominium in Repulse Bay. Part of Hong Kong's Southern District, and one of the most expensive places to live on the island, entry would require more security-breaking measures than you expected. It was toward the top of a high-rise and well-protected: you could get in undetected, but it was going to take some work. Athena would make it easier to bypass security.

Fong Chun ranked as a "Vanguard." You had several recent surveillance photos of him, a doughy older man who liked dapper western suits, trilby hats, and small spectacles. His background was riddled with holes and he was basically On Sing's Operations Officer. Once you took him, things would escalate quickly. On Sing knew Overwatch was closing in on them, just like it knew Blackwatch had targeted the Shimada Clan. That the Shimada and On Sing had formed an alliance sat ill with you.

Thus far, the analysts had no idea who was on top of the On Sing triad. People whispered about a shadowy cult leader who practiced all kinds of highly unethical genetic engineering. Others spoke of a pair of albino twins, rumored to be incestuous cannibals. Sometimes it was a dead man, covered in tattoos and swearing in a dialect so old, they had to get an ancient classics literature professor to translate. Honestly, the stories were kind of ridiculous, but you didn't dismiss them. The more you dug, the more you realized On Sing had been around for a very long time and they were very strange. What they'd been doing, where they'd been hiding, you weren't sure. What they wanted was even harder to decipher.

"We land on the roof and rappel down. Hell, I can do that part alone if you just cover the exit," Gabriel sat with his boots on the desk hat tucked over his eyes.

"Surveillance can't get a bead on his security. Drones aren't picking up any signal emissions from his floor. Athena can't hack the suite remotely. And the blueprints don't point to any extra shielding." You ticked off each problem on your fingers; not that it mattered, Gabriel wasn't looking.

"It can always be added after the fact. Get in the building itself and do a scan. They rarely shield between floors," Gabriel said, not looking up.

"It's a fifty story residence. Heavy shielding means unpleasant things, like Red Pole omnics. I'm a little worried about civilian casualties."

"It'll be worse if it spills onto the streets. Hong Kong is ridiculously crowded." And dual-wielding shotguns there would be a bad thing.

"Yeah, I guess." You had an entire plan for a snatch and grab based on his late night congee runs. It looked like you were going to have to scrap it, despite the long man hours put in. "Ugh."

"What are you worried about? I was doing retrievals long before you ever joined up, chica."

"It's complicated, and probably a nonlethal op. Are you sure you want to tag along? This isn't quite your...specialty."

"Baby, you're being condescending, and it makes me want to bend you over my desk and remind you who's boss." He tilted his hat up and gave you a hard look.

You laughed. "OK, you're right, sorry. Seriously though, I don't like this level of security. On Sing makes me nervous and we're going to be in their territory. We need a tech of some kind and having remote access point for Athena isn't a bad plan. It can get shot and no big loss. If Ziv gets shot, he'll complain for the rest of his life and mine." Also you didn't want to go on any missions with both Ziv and Gabriel. Ziv was too comfortable with you and you didn't trust him not to goad Gabriel. "Not to mention, it'd be nice if she can access any sensitive Triad documents."

"Fine," Gabriel said. "You want to bring the AI, you can bring the AI. Just stop nagging me. You're as bad as Jack."

You could have done this op with Genji. In fact, he was better suited for it. But On Sing had gone after Jack and both of you wanted to handle it personally. "Are you sure you want to do this one with me? Genji's the best candidate. Granted, I'm better at taking them alive than he is, but--"

"On Sing made this personal," Gabriel said after a moment. "But I want to watch you work too. If you think Genji is a better choice, then fine, you can change the roster."

You studied the schematics and replayed a few surveillance videos. On Sing was on higher alert since Chung hadn't made it back, but they couldn't confirm that you'd successfully captured and interrogated him.
"No, it's a fairly routine run with some potential complications. As long as we take extra precautions, we should be fine."

"I knew that; I was just wondering how long it was going to take you to work it out." Gabriel smirked and pulled his beanie back down over his eyes.

Hong Kong wasn't like Shanghai or the rest of the mainland. Though part of the PRC, Hong Kong had operated under its own set of rules for too long. Rich residents were always bribing the local authorities to fly their crafts within city limits, and the island wasn't quite as strict about transport protocols, compared to the mainland coastline. That gave you more leeway for drop-off and pickup.

Gabriel landed a small shuttle directly on the roof of the fifty story tower that contained Fong Chun's condo. The main transport hovered over the bay, well within legal docking.

"So this is your op," Gabriel said as he drew up his hood and checked his guns. "I'll step in if I think you're forgetting something, but I want to see how you do things."

You adjusted your gloves and switched on your stealth generator. Even if the Red Poles had better sensors, it would help you bypass the building's security equipment. "All right." You took a deep breath, because while you'd talked about the plan back in the office, you weren't sure Gabriel had actually been listening.

"Operation Embalmer is live. Anubis and Ammit are on the ground," he said.

"...Fine, you name it," you said, feeling quite petty since it was your op.

"What would you have picked?" Gabriel asked, not sounding sorry at all.

"Benedetto is a treacherous little shit," Gabriel said. "I don't mind being a bandit king, but if you're going to assign "meaningful" names, I wouldn't pick that one."

"It was also the name of one of the bakeries I liked back in the day."

Gabriel snorted.

"Would you have picked "Edmund"?" No, that's too plain. You'd be "Count Dantes" or "Monte Cristo."

"You can be Haydée," he purred in your ear.

"Yeah, I bet you'd like that. Dantes is all, "she's like a daughter to me." Then she's like "...Sure, I'll call you daddy...in bed." And he's like "Really? Cool. Never mind that whole daughter thing." And they go from "friends" to lovers after a big convoluted murder-revenge fest. That book is so you."
"...That's not how it went," Gabriel sighed.

"I paraphrased," you said. "You read it to me. I remember." You paused. "I liked it too."

"I know." Gabriel patted your shoulder. "Now focus."

Athena hovered beside you, her drone chassis cuter than expected. The body was about the size of cat and curved slightly in a stretched-out comma shape. Fins spiraled the circumference and she had a single blue light recessed in the head, that looked like an eye. Gabriel had taken to calling her "Fish Torpedo."

"Athena, you're up first. Get us a perimeter scan."

"Parameters, Ammit?"

"Five floors above and five floors below should be sufficient." Fong Chun occupied the 42nd floor alone.

"Understood, Ammit." She floated over the edge of the roof and disappeared into the night sky. You paused, wondering what the hell an Ammit was.

Gabriel had a better education than you, and you guessed the theme was classical mythology. Anubis was Egyptian and had a dog head: that was about all you knew.

Maybe he was doing the "A" thing. Alliteration? Assonance? Assholery? Something like that. The other night, he had explained some poetry terms to you, something about ambics and feet. It put you straight to sleep.

"I knew an Amit," you said, waiting for Athena to report back. "He was from Kolkata and an OK guy."

Gabriel just chuckled. "It goes with the god motif."

You hit your comm button. "Athena, what's an Ammit?"

"Ammit was an ancient Egyptian deity also known as the Eater of Hearts, the Great Devourer, and the Bone Eater. Her body is a composite of lion, crocodile, and hippopotamus. She eats the hearts of the unworthy, as judged by the psychopomp and death god Anubis - he's the one with the jackal head," Athena added helpfully. "More a force of divine justice than a goddess, she was not so much worshipped as feared."

You worked your jaw a few times, trying to make words. Was that a food aggression joke?

"You're reading too much into it. It's just a code name," Gabriel laughed, anchored his climbing line, and gave it a few test pulls.

"Ammit, the security suite makes it impossible to get an accurate reading and maintain cover. The shielding on these walls is stronger than the architectural plans led us to believe," Athena said.

"Can you tell what floors are occupied?" You dug your anchor into the roof tiles.

"The 43rd floor currently shows no signs of life, however the 42nd through 40th floors consistently lack of signals emissions."

"Unpleasant security measures," you translated. "We already knew this."
"Yes. The surveillance footage from today shows him returning to the building after dinner."

Gabriel tapped his foot impatiently.

"All right, we'll go in the 43rd. Just being thorough."

Gabriel rolled his eyes and dropped over the side of the building. "We already went over this, baby. Try to keep up."

"You're a dick, dog-face!"

"Jackal!" He corrected, words almost lost to the winds.

Standard operating procedure: keep an eye on the perimeter and never go in straight if you can help it - that route probably had traps and if not, it was reserved for exits. You dropped off the edge, climbing rope going taut under your gloves. The wind tore at you while you took the distance in controlled leaps: push off, swing back, steer your landing with your hips and keep your knees bent.

Glass shattered and you saw Gabriel disappear into a darkened frame. You followed, swinging in through the window he broke.

Athena hovered behind you, shining a blue spotlight into the bedroom. It was a well-appointed guest room with fancy bedding and pretty silk wall hangings, but no personal effects. "Alarm signal intercepted. Disabling security on this floor."

Gabriel unhooked his rope and drew his shotguns. How he managed to use each of them one-handed still made your brain stutter. You couldn't shoot one of them with both arms. He glanced at you expectantly.

"Athena, rescan, please."

The drone moved fast, zooming over your shoulder. "Besides the alarms, I am detecting ten omnic signatures on the floors below us; the energy output matches the profile of the Red Pole units."

"Ten?" You rubbed your forehead, because one had been more than enough.

"This isn't going to be like Belfast. You have me, not some Overwatch rookies." Gabriel grinned fiercely at you over his shoulder.

"I figured they were expecting us." You began swapping out clips, because you needed more EMP rounds for this. "This seems an awful lot like a trap. Athena, are you picking up any organic life?"

"Yes, Ammit. There are three signatures and they are concentrated toward the east side of the building."

"OK," you adjusted your plan. "I've got EMP grenades and rounds. I can disable if you can clean up."

"Of course." Gabriel nodded, looking pleased. His shotguns were ideal in close quarters. "And?"
"Athena, can you scan the elevators and stairwells for any unpleasant surprises?"

"Remotely disabling laser mines left in the stairwell exit of the 41st floor." It looked like they had expected you to come from below. Well, rappelling down from the roof was a ballsy move. "Do we want to try the elevator or stairs?"

"Neither." Gabriel shot through the floor, shells tearing past carpet, metal, insulation, and wiring. Four rounds and he kicked through the floor, before dropping down through the hole. You followed, shaking your head.

You landed in another bedroom. Gabriel pushed the door open and you kept your gun pointed to the side. Athena buzzed behind you.

They heard you coming, of course. You had your decibel-blockers in, but those Hellfire shotguns still sounded like thunder driving a train. A pair of sword-wielding Red Poles took up the narrow corridor in single file. You rolled an EMP grenade right into them and the pulse sent them into a sparking stutter. Gabriel leveled his shotguns and tore them apart in two shots each. You eyed your carbine a little resentfully.

"Why did you abandon stealth?" Athena asked.

"Element of surprise will only take us so far: it got us into his house," Gabriel said. "Maybe Genji could slip past all the omnic's unnoticed and assassinate our target without anyone noticing, but that's not going to work for us. We're in, now we shift gears and handle the rest."

"Thank you for the explanation, Anubis."

"If you're running ops with us, better make sure you get trained right," Gabriel said gruffly and kept walking.

"I am receiving some strange signals. It feels...odd," Athena said softly.

"Congested electronic traffic?" Hong Kong was a tech heavy city, a lot of it unregulated. It would have a different feel than Zurich.

"No, there's something big and aware around here."

You raised a brow. "Another AI?"

"Most likely. It's...vast."

"A god program?" Gabriel scowled. "You've got to be kidding me. The PRC wouldn't let one of those run amok..."

"Not enough information. It is not trying to force contact. But we are in its passive field. If it does move, I won't be able to stop it."

"Complications," you sighed. "All right, make a note, but if it's not moving against us, we're not scrapping the op."

You came out in the foyer, a tasteful room done in teak, porcelains, and delicately-carved furniture. Some of those stone statues and painted vases had to be worth serious money. Gabriel's shotguns powdered them casually alongside another Red Pole. Wistfully, you eyed a jade statuette. Old habits died hard. Focus. You were here to take Fong Chun, not acquire a fortune in knickknacks.
Gabriel kicked the wreckage out of his way and put another round through the still jerking Red Pole. He laughed, the sound too guttural to be cheerful.

"Detecting hard-light barriers ahead," Athena announced.

"What?" You raised a brow.

The answer came in the form of bright holographic panels that glowed an eerie cool white. Large and rectangular, they blocked the doorway. Gabriel shot the wall, obliterating plaster and wood, but revealing more light panels.

"Prototype energy; Vishkar's been making serious inroads with it." Gabriel no longer sounded amused. "For operations' purposes, it's exactly what it sounds like, hardened light that you have to shoot through."

"In its current form, it still causes radiation burns, so no skin contact," Athena added.

"They have laser shields? Fuck these guys," you grumbled. Maybe you needed to go back to school and learn how to science. Raising your carbine, you began firing, the barrier dimpling under your EMP rounds. Gabriel joined in and the light started to bend under impact. Ten seconds in, the light shattered, leaving the strange stench of ozone, cordite, and burnt sugar.

Gabriel stepped through the doorway. Athena spun behind you.

"Organics up ahead. Another pair or Red Poles too."

You entered the living room. It too was decked in expensive baubles and traditional Chinese furniture. A large shrine took up an entire wall, complete with multiple ancestral tablets.

"Athena, make sure to get a shot of that," you said, jerking your chin at it.

"The famed Commander Reyes: you honor us with your presence," Fong Chun said without a trace of sarcasm. He spoke English with a British accent and sat on a low divan at the end of the room, a heavily-reinforced picture window at his back. He wore a beige suit, trilby hat in his lap. Two young men wearing red tunics and clunky metallic gauntlets knelt on the floor in front of him. The Red Poles stood at attention, between you and the men.

Gabriel just kept his shotguns up. "You're kidding, right?"

"Just because you've broken into my house and caused quite a bit of property damage, doesn't mean I have forgotten my manners."

"Skip the formalities, Fong. You know why we're here."

"I guess Chung wasn't able to hold his silence. His father will be so disappointed." Fong Chun sighed. "This is not personal, Commander. I have nothing but admiration for all that you've accomplished. I am very impressed that you came yourself, truly."

White light flared as Gabriel fired, absorbing the shotgun blasts. The light panels unfolded and shuffled around you like a deck of cards. They enclosed you in a narrow box and you danced backward as the Red Pole on the left swung its sword. Gabriel swore and brought up one shotgun to block the one on the right. The blade struck the barrel and sparked.

You fired at the red diamond light in the center of its head, shattering the panel. You were too tightly packed to use grenades, but once your bullets penetrated the chassis, the Red Pole came to a stuttering halt. A quick glance at Gabriel showed that part of his opponent's sword was embedded in a shotgun barrel. You really needed more room to maneuver.

You took aim, shooting at Gabriel's opponent and wishing Torby had made you a laser sword.

Gabriel dropped his broken gun and jumped backward, firing with his remaining weapon. Gabriel's opponent went down, but your omnic was climbing back to its feet and Gabriel's shotgun clicked empty.

"Anubis!"

You backed up, keeping an eye on Athena as she scanned the barriers.

Gabriel spun and picked up the fallen omnic's sword with both hands, perspiration gleaming on his face. He slammed the flat of the blade into the omnic's sword arm. Drawing back, he rushed forward in that familiar fencer's lunge. Metal screeched as the sword pierced the Red Pole's chestplate. You blinked. Apparently that move did have practical value. Huh.

Laughing, Gabriel dropped the sword and turned to Fong Chun. "We can do this the hard way, if you like."

"Yes," Fong said.

Wood splintered and a metal blade tore through the floor, before another set of metal hands seized Gabriel by the ankle and dragged him downward through the hole into darkness.

"Athena!"

She swooped down and you followed through the hole into another dark room, her cool blue lamp lighting the way. You didn't get a good look at your surroundings, but you already knew you were fucked: you counted four red diamond lights in the darkness.

"Behind me!" You ordered Athena, and rolled an EMP grenade toward them. You couldn't see Gabriel, but you could hear him swearing in a steady stream of Spanish, the blunt sound of flesh striking metal. Light arced through the room and you caught sight of Gabriel, intact shotgun raised like a bludgeon.

"Over here!"

Athena turned her high beams onto your targets.

Gabriel dove past the omnics, and you fired over his head. You kept backing up, knowing better than to let them get close. The EMP grenades had slowed them but you weren't doing nearly enough damage.

"Cover?"

"Load-bearing wall behind you," Athena said. "But there are more-"

Gabriel brushed up against you, and you could feel the heat pouring off his body. "Get me a moment to reload."

"On it. Take cover." You grabbed a frag grenade and threw it at the Red Poles, before following Gabriel through an open doorway. The explosion blew out the glass, subtly literally going out the window.

Climbing to your feet, you saw two red lights still flickering and began to fire.

"We are going to have to get you a real gun, baby," Gabriel grinned at you, and turned his shotgun on the one closest to him.

"Beside it!" You got out, before the second survivor lunged and smashed Gabriel backward into the darkness. You heard him collide with something solid.

"Ammit!" Athena's voice went strangely high and you whirled, in time to see her plow into your shoulder. She knocked you off balance and into a wall.

You blinked and a blade materialized in the space where you'd been standing, metal sparking as it cleaved Athena's body in two.

"Fuck!" You stared in horror as her little metal chassis dropped to the ground, lights dead. Rolling backward, you fired, too close to use an EMP grenade. The blade swung forward and you dropped to the ground, still shooting.

"Anubis?" You hit your comm button. "Anubis!" The second Red Pole hadn't come back for you.

"Got this one!" Gabriel bellowed. "You just stay alive over there!"

Easier said than done. You tried to avoid the window-side of the room, knowing it could easily throw you and defenestration would be the end. Rolling to your feet, you circled, tracking it as much by sound as the glint of moonlight striking its blade.

Your carbine clicked empty and you tore off your left glove, knowing you only had one chance.

Something whistled overhead, and while you could barely see the outline of the omnic, there was a flash when the arrow impacted. You covered your face, one hand instinctively going to your shoulder.

Another arrow hit, and you dropped to the floor, watching it glow as it fragmented and ricocheted off the walls, sparks striking the omnic from numerous angles.

It went down, metal groaning as it fell. You looked up. A terribly familiar ninja nocked his bow and aimed it at your head.

"Seriously, are we doing this again Shimada?" You glared at him, though it was doubtful he could see your face in the dark.

"I thought it was you," he said, not relaxing. "Is my brother here?"

"If I say "no" are you going to shoot me?"

Hanzo kept his bow trained on you. "No."

"Are you going to shoot me regardless of my answer?"

"I will shoot you if you continue to irritate me."

Well, you were fucked. "No, he's not here. And if he finds out you shot me, he's going to be even saltier at you than he already is," you lied brazenly, because you weren't so sure that Genji actually cared that much.

To your surprise, Hanzo lowered his bow. "Are you his lover?"

"...No." You couldn't picture Genji sleeping with people, he was so averse to contact outside of sparring. But then your friendship with Genji wasn't exactly normal. "We're just buddies. I cook for him sometimes."

"I hope you're a better cook than a warrior."

"Well, I'm certainly a better friend," you said, then realized you should probably reload before starting a pissing match with Hanzo Fucking Shimada.

Even in the dimness, you could see the tightness in his shoulders and wondered if he was getting ready to splinter-shoot you to pieces.

"I...just want to talk," he said, voice strained. "I heard about Belfast. I knew someone would come for On Sing." And this mission would have been right up Genji's alley.

"Great, we should talk over cake later. It'll be smashing. But I gotta check my drone and back up my boss." Logically, you knew Athena was fine. She could be in multiple places at once, but she'd taken that hit for you and that visceral shock of seeing her shell destroyed lingered.

"I will assist," Hanzo said, like he didn't trust you to survive on your own.

"Anubis?" You reloaded your gun.

"Almost done." His voice was rough and you were worried.

You flicked on your flashlight and sighed when you saw the shattered remnants of Athena's little fish torpedo. It was disturbingly broken and probably unsalvageable. You scraped her up and put her in your bag. No point in giving On Sing any hints about what kind of tech you used. At least that's what you were going to tell anyone who asked. "Your drone is scrap."

"I noticed."

As you went in Gabriel's direction, you could hear something rending metal.

"Anubis?" You raised your gun.

"You found a friend?" Gabriel rasped, leveling his gun slightly to your right. It was a bluff, because there was no way he could fire and not hit you. You kept your light out of his eyes, but he was bruised and hunched, blood smearing his mouth. You really wanted to check his injuries.

"Yeah. Hanzo Shimada, this is Anubis. Anubis, this is Hanzo Shimada, Genji's favorite brother. Wants to have cake with us, help with Fong Chun, and talk about a family reunion. Like for real. Swear on Captain Patel's elephant gun."

There was a long silence. "You're serious, Ammit?"

"No joke. I can swear on Shin's tanto, if you want." You could feel both their stares burning through you and you fought the urge to squirm.

"We need Fong Chun alive," Gabriel said, after a moment, lowering his gun. "I'll go back the way we came."
"We can't all go through there," you said, because that was a great way to get mowed down.

"We can take the outer route," Hanzo said.

"If anything happens to my agent, Genji's brother or not, it will take you days to die," Gabriel growled.

"Your "Ammit" has already conveyed how unhappy Genji will be if something happens to her," Hanzo said stiffly. "I have no desire to cause him further distress."

"Yes, everyone think of poor Genji before you do something stupid and let's finish this job. Cake afterward." You turned around, annoyed by how close Hanzo stood to you. Yes, you were his human shield, in case Gabriel didn't want to play nice, but he didn't have to be so obvious about it.

Hanzo turned abruptly and stalked to the blown windows and disappeared.

"You be careful." Gabriel gripped your arm and kissed you hard. He burned too hot and tasted of copper and smoke. "One wrong move and you end him. Doesn't matter how Genji feels about it."

"You OK?"

"We need to move," Gabriel said, pushing past you. He crouched, and in one leap he gripped the edge of the ceiling and pulled himself up through the hole.

You went to the window and looked up, feeling for your grappling hook. You were slightly mollified when Hanzo dropped a rope. You climbed up and balanced on the window ledge.

"You are so slow," Hanzo said.

"I'm not a goddamn ninja," you huffed.

The windows were reflective and bulletproof. You pressed your index finger, opening your multitool. Very carefully, you began to cut through the glass. Hanzo rolled his eyes, gripped his bow, and smashed it through the glass. Fong Chun looked over his shoulder. The two lightbenders were sweating, trying to hold the barrier. Gabriel was bleeding all over, laughing as he discharged his remaining shotgun.

"We need the fat one alive," you reminded Hanzo.

He gave you a dark look. He was wearing a face mask with only his eyes visible, but they were expressive. Right now, they were expressing great annoyance with you.

"I can do the work, I'm just reminding you not to kill everyone. You know, like you did last time."

"I truly believe you and Genji are just friends. Because you are too aggravating for even my brother to sleep with."

You didn't really have a comeback for that.

Instead, you punched Fong, mostly because he kept fucking Red Pole omnis around the house. Then you flicked your ring finger, needle injecting him with a strong cocktail of drugs. That unpleasantly familiar whistling sound passed by both your ears, and when you looked up, the lightbenders were dead, arrows through their throats.

The barrier fell and Gabriel raised a brow as you kicked Fong along the floor. "Where's Fish Torpedo?"

"In my bag. She took a hit for me."

Gabriel's eyes traveled to Hanzo.

"You're "Anubis?" Really, they sent you?" Hanzo narrowed his eyes. "The Commander Reyes."

Oh boy. You massaged your temples. Gabriel really needed a mask or something. "Let's get Fong and get out before On Sing reinforcements show up."

"Got a problem, Shimada?" Gabriel casually rested his shotgun in one arm. But you weren't fooled.

Hanzo's eyes flicked between you and Gabriel. "We can talk about it later. Over cake."

Gabriel smacked his hand against his forehead. "Really?"

You loaded Fong into the shuttle, making sure to take the hard-light gauntlets. Gabriel managed to drag a Red Pole omnic onto the service elevator, so Winston could dissect it.

Hanzo just watched with those terribly judgmental eyes. "I'll find my own way to Zurich," he said.

"What? We can just wash our hands and go to a bakery. I hear they're all over the city."
You discretely wiped your bloody gloves on your pants. "Tea, cake, we can do this."

"You maybe, but "Anubis," covered in blood will incite panic. I'll be in touch, "Ammit," Hanzo said the code name like he actually knew what an Ammit was. He then turned around and vaulted into the darkness.

"Drama queen," Gabriel muttered. "See where Genji gets it."

You glanced over the edge of the building, catching sight of Hanzo clambering down the next tower over. Something about his posture reminded you of a squirrel, and you snickered.

"Let's go, Ammit," Gabriel said, sounding more irritated than usual.

Damn, now you wouldn't be stopping for cake.
You put the gauntlets in lead-lined cases and triple-checked Fong for weapons and tracking devices, then stuffed his unconscious body in the brig. Gabriel sat hunched over beside an emitter, legs spread wide as he let himself heal. Bloody and bruised, he was sweating hard and you brought him three pouches of electrolyte solution. He drained them immediately and you had to get him another one.

"Got you pretty good, didn't they?"

"You went hand to hand with one. Figured I'd see what I was missing," he rasped. "You're lucky it only broke your ribs."

"You took a giant sword and fucking stabbed a damn omnic," you said, wiping blood off his cheek. "Who's the careless one?"

"You made a temporary ally out of Hanzo Shimada. I think that wins for the dumbest thing done tonight."

"Oh no, Athena got herself chopped in half trying to save me from a Red Pole. She wins." You set the bag of scrap on the bench.

"It's different for them," Gabriel said after a moment. "But yeah, maybe she does. You hurt?"

"Scraps and bruises, but nothing that I need to bother Angela with."

"Good." Gabriel took his hat off. "Because I want you up against the wall, right now."

You swallowed. "Gabriel, you're injure-"

"Don't care." He shook his head. "Had worse and Jack still rode me like a champ."

Gabriel pushed you into the wall, already loosening your armor. "You sure-"

"Tell me to stop. Tell me to keep going. But don't ask if I want you or not. You should already know the answer." He kissed you hard and you fumbled with his armor. He opened the seals, and it dropped with a clang. He removed your chestplate and practically tore your belt off. Gabriel was moving fast and before you knew it, your pants were on the floor and he was unzipping his fly. You shuddered as he lifted you by the knees and dropped you onto his cock.

"Gabriel!"

He covered your mouth with one large hand. "Shh, you have to be quiet, baby. Don't want the pilot to hear us." You whimpered, because there'd been no prep and while you were wet for him, he split you wide, stuffing you too full too fast.

"You're so big, too-too much," you stuttered, sinking onto him, breaths coming quick and shallow.

His grin widened. "Oh baby, that look on your face. Makes me want to go harder."

"No!" You gripped his shoulders. "Can't-

"Can't take me all the way yet?" Gabriel growled in your ear. "I'm too much for your tight little hole? But you're already dripping down my thighs, baby girl. I know you like watching me fight, almost as much as I like watching you. Gonna tell me you didn't expect this?"
"Damnit Gabriel," you moaned, clawing at his chest.

He hissed in pain and you drew back instinctively. "No, don't let go. Don't fucking stop." He held you against the bulkhead, your knees resting on his elbows. "Shithead hit me harder than I thought, is all. Can still handle whatever you've got, baby."

"Sorry," you panted, kissing his neck. "Are you-"

"If you ask me again, I'm going to let loose and show you exactly what kind of shape I'm in," Gabriel said, voice low. "All I care about right now is seeing you on my dick." He rolled his hips, pushing deeper inside you and you dropped your head back against the wall, his girth all you could focus on. Gabriel slowly filled you the rest of the way and any resistance dissolved into liquid pleasure.

You still hadn't come down from the adrenaline of the fight, and that was good, because otherwise this could be painful. A few staggered breaths later and you were adjusting. His touch blazed feverishly hot, and you tugged at his hoodie.

"Off. You're burning up."

Gabriel complied and you winced at the scrapes and bruises across his chest and torso. His skin tone hid the worst of the bruising, but that you could still see swollen tissue over thick muscles wasn't good.

"Looks worse than it is." He bent over kissing you hard. You sighed softly and he jerked his hips, pulling out halfway then sheathing himself to the hilt. He swallowed up your cries and you raked your nails down his chest.

Snarling, Gabriel slammed his hips into you and your eyes flew open. Struggling to maintain silence, you bit the flesh at the base of his neck. He arched against you, driving himself into you hard.

"Keep that up and I won't be nice."

"Already know you're going to wreck me. Always do when you're like this," you murmured and licked the indentations in his skin, as he shuddered against you.

"Do you hear that?" He thrust inside you, slick sounds echoing in the bay. "That's all you, baby. Your body already knows how to take me. Don't act like you don't want this." He moved faster, deep strokes hollowing you out as you squirmed. He had you pinned to the wall, legs spread wide, and the look on his face ferocious, all teeth, hunger, and scorching heat.

"Want it," you breathed. "Always want you, Gabriel." You clenched around him and he braced his palms against the wall. He bounced you on his cock, his shaft slick with your juices.

Your eyes fluttered shut and you bit your lip, vainly trying to keep quiet. Helpless squeaks escaped your throat as Gabriel pounded you against the wall. You took everything he gave, an outlet for the rest of his unspent energy.

"Need to fill you up," Gabriel groaned. "Need to see you dripping with my cum. Need to feel you coming on the end of my cock."

You dropped one hand to your clit, working yourself closer to the edge.

"That's it, hermosa. Love watching you touch that needy pussy. Don't worry, I'm going to be up for most of the night. Going to wreck you, just like you wanted. We'll go back to my room and you can be as loud as you want. We'll get Jack too. Don't think you'll be able to take both of us after I'm done with you. But you like having him between us, don't you?"

His filthy words finished you off, and you squealed as he drove harder, trying to catch up with you. One hand flattened over your mouth, muffling your sounds.

"Fuck!" Gabriel barked. "So good like this. Can feel it in my balls, baby." He gave a low strained growl and you whined as his hot cum poured inside you. "Oh that's it, yes-" He closed his eyes, resting his head against your chest. He took a few deep breaths, collecting himself, and lowered you both to the floor, before pulling out.

You lay on the hard metal floor, legs wobbly as you tried to move them.

Gabriel nuzzled your cheek, his beard soft against your skin. "Going to go one more time, baby. Then I'll let you rest, OK?"

"Mmm," you sighed as he lifted your legs over his shoulders. You pulled your hoodie off and balled it up as a pillow. "Knew you were going to mess me up."

He gave you one of those intensely self-satisfied smirks. "Cum-stained and wrecked is a good look on you. What do you want your papi to give you this time?"

You shivered at the excitement in his eyes. "I need to be able to walk off this transport."

"No promises," he grinned, and slid back inside you.

"Ten minutes till arrival," the pilot announced and you opened one eye, slightly surprised to find yourself mostly dressed. Your armor was still on the ground, but other than that, you didn't seen any evidence of what you'd been up to. You vaguely remembered Gabriel coaxing your arms up while he pulled your hoodie back on for you.

You were sprawled across Gabriel's lap, the two of you soaking up the light of the emitter. He stroked your hair absently.

"You all right?" You rolled onto your back and looked up at him.

"You're the one who passed out." He chuckled.

"I was worn out. I had to play nice with Genji's stupid brother, kidnapped some Triad member who was armed with mad science, and then got jumped by a goddamn super soldier on the trip back."

"So you'll be up for another round when we get in?"

"Jesus, Gabriel." You touched his skin. He'd cooled down significantly, but that heat output bothered you. Hong Kong was a humid city. He'd been fine in the snowy Alps, but the subtropical climate hadn't been good for him. "Have you always run that hot on combat missions?"

"...No." His voice went flat. "It's gotten more pronounced in the past three years."
You bit your tongue, worried by the grim look on his face.

"It's an SEP side effect. Don't know what it means. Jack's fine, hasn't had any complications. None of the first gen have it, but none of them are quite as strong as me. Chang has some overheating issues, but she doesn't run as hot as I do." He looked down at you, face oddly blank. "It's not a problem yet."

"Is it because you exert so much energy? Like your cooling system isn't up for the amount of power you're generating? It's just from combat right?"

"Yeah, only when I push myself. You've got the general principle." His voice softened. "I'm fine, baby."

"OK," you said, not quite believing him.

"I can still outlast you, and damn if I'm not ready to go again." He leaned over and kissed you. "When we get back we'll put Jack in the middle. You get pushy after a few rounds and you always like directing your aggression at him."

You patted his cheek. "It's self defense. Because when we reach this point, if I let you guys boss me around, I'll die of exhaustion."

"You just had a nap."

"I'm going to need water, a shower, and a herd of llamas to carry me back to my room."

Gabriel laughed, dark mood dissipated.

You rolled over, testing your legs. The emitter helped and hopefully you wouldn't be walking funny when you exited the transport. Gabriel looked amused, troubles apparently forgotten. You kissed his warm cheek, and wondered if he was being completely honest with you.

Chapter End Notes

This chapter took several revisions. I blame the Christmas holiday. It was awful. Blargh.

Getting better. Not quite over the cold, but thanks for the good wishes. Serious job hunting starts this week.

Having hilarious amounts of snow and ice here. It's awful. Hope you guys have better weather.
Chapter 30

Chapter Summary

The aftermath of Operation Embalmer.

Chapter Notes

Slight daddy kink warning for those who can't abide.

See the end of the chapter for more notes

Jack, Lacroix, Winston, Ziv, and two Blackwatch In-Sec officers waited in the disembarkation hall. It was a bigger reception than you were expecting, and you were glad you'd foregone trying to fix your hair and just pulled your hood up. The In-Sec officers saluted you and Gabriel and went on to retrieve Fong Chun.

"Commander Reyes, we seem to have a minor...situation," Lacroix said, watching the In-Sec officers board the ship. "On Sing has sent us a message. We can discuss it privately."

You already knew why Winston and Ziv were here. "How's Athena?"

Winston wrung his hands, and you noted small bare patches around his wrists. "She's a little traumatized. I'd like it if you recounted what happened, and then maybe talked to her."

"Of course." You glanced up at Gabriel who was glaring at Lacroix.

"Good to see you managed to avoid breaking yourself this time, agent," Jack said, an amused lilt in his voice.

"That is apparently Commander Reyes' privilege."

There was a long pause as Jack and Winston gaped at you. Lacroix's mouth twitched and Ziv gave Gabriel a long speculative look.

"Breaking oneself, of course," you said wryly. "He managed to push himself too hard. I don't think anything's literally broken, but he did go hand to hand with some Red Poles, so you might want to make sure he visits the infirmary."

Jack narrowed his eyes at Gabriel.

"Snitch," Gabriel growled in your ear, not sounding pleased at all.

"Well then, I also wanted to pass along another interesting tidbit," Lacroix said, smiling a little too widely. "Hanzo Shimada has contacted us, specifically requesting Gabriel and "that aggravating woman" to meet with him to parley. We should discuss whether or not it is appropriate to involve certain agents."
Gabriel gave you a dirty look, shaking his head slowly and you stared at him innocently. "Need you in peak condition, sir."

"We are going to talk about this," he said in a low voice.

"Yes, yes we are." Jack rested his hand on Gabriel's shoulder. "We can do this in the infirmary. Come see us when you're done, agent." He rolled his eyes as Gabriel turned that irritated look on him.

You handed Winston the bag containing the drone pieces. "Brought you some interesting tech from on-site too. A whole On Sing Red Pole omnic and some fancy hard-light manipulating gauntlets."

Winston just studied the bag. "You brought back the pieces?"

"Well, you know, didn't want to leave evidence lying around," you said smoothly.

"Ah, thank you." Winston gave you a smile, careful not to show his teeth, a sign of aggression in gorillas. Ziv had been trying to get him to smile wider, but it was one of those learned behaviors you weren't sure was going to change. You always forgot, but Winston didn't seem to mind when you and Ziv did it.

"Let's do this privately," Ziv said, watching Gabriel, Jack, and Lacroix disappear around the corner.

That Ziv had an office always amused you. If only the door locked from the outside. Maybe you could get him a door that opened outward and prop some cinder blocks against it. Winston had one of his custom-made ergonomic gorilla chairs inside, and Ziv sat on his desk. You took his chair, because it was the most comfortable one. There was a camera on the desk, and you assumed Athena could view the proceedings from there.

"Agent Strike...I am glad to see that you are well." Athena's voice came through the speaker's oddly flat.

"You all right, Athena?"

"I am unharmed." Her voice held a depressingly subdued quality that you recognized. Damn, how had Winston gotten the voice inflections so right?

"Uh-huh."

"You do understand that that drone only contained part of my consciousness?"

"Being "unharmed" doesn't mean "all right," Athena." You studied Winston's face. "This your first...bodily trauma?"

"The...connection was lost. One moment I was trying to propel you away from the Red Pole, then metal rending and loss of motor control, then nothing."

"She blinked out for five seconds afterward," Ziv said. "We were able to establish that you were fine after you reported in at the end of the mission, but until then-" He combed his fingers through his hair. "It was messy." He watched you with bright amber eyes, his lips pressed firmly together in a thin line.

You rubbed your forehead. "Thank you, Athena. I would've been badly hurt, at the very least, if you hadn't knocked me into that wall."

"Protecting my agents is my primary directive," she parroted, voice still flat.

Winston rubbed his wrists. "She's been like this since the episode. We can't pinpoint any data loss, however, it's possible the abrupt termination of the connection caused some sort of memory malfunction."

"Nah," you said, studying the bag. "You just did too good of a job with her. What'd I tell you to call me, Athena?"

"My apologies, Lucky."

"You mad at me for getting you smashed up? It's OK if you are," you said, folding your hands. "I remember you trying to warn me about that straggler while I was facing down the bigger group."

"No." The answer was firm. "No, I am just glad that you are unharmed."

"But that was scary, right? That loss of control? You felt your shell get destroyed, and then you lost the connection. Kind of like getting knocked out or concussed. You know, the cybernetic equivalent."

"It was not comfortable."

All the pieces fell into place. That admission was what you'd needed to hear. You followed that train of thought down the rails to its logical conclusion. You didn't have trouble relating to that discomfort, because early on you'd learned just how vulnerable you were. That all those reassuring platitudes adults told children, were lies. That if hit hard enough, we all cracked open and bled out in the dirt. That there was never any guarantee that everything was going to turn out all right. You'd been a fighter long before you'd been an agent, and you tried to remember the first time you thought you'd saw your end coming. You hadn't expected an AI to react the same way every rookie soldier did.

"Near death experiences never are," you said. "Sure, you can clam up and pretend it doesn't bother you, but sooner or later, it outs itself. And you still have to learn to deal."

Ziv uncrossed his arms. "Shit."

"Yeah," you said. "For the record, Ziv's a moron when it comes to feelings."

"For the record, Lucky was too dumb to realized she was in love with her surly ass boss, so she has no room to talk."

You blanched. "Shut it, Ziv."

He just smirked at you triumphantly.

"You remember everything up to the destruction, right?" You tapped your fingers on the desk.

"Oh Athena..." Winston had concern written all over his face.

"Yes. Nothing was lost."

"Not true. Innocence, your sense of invulnerability, that cute fish torpedo chassis." You opened up the bag and dumped it onto the desk. "I salvaged what I could."

"I have no need of that," Athena said sharply. "You can dispose of it."

"No, you should take a look at it."

"I have no need. The components may be recyclable, however the drone itself is unsalvageable."

You pulled off your left glove and held up your hand for the camera. "I know it's a little different, but I can relate. I hate looking at them. They remind me that I failed. They remind me that I'm not invincible. But they also remind me that I protected someone and while the loss stings and the discomfort never really goes away, I know that I can go back out there and do a better job, because I fucking learn from my mistakes."

When you looked up, Ziv had his head turned away and Winston was watching you with big round eyes.

"It's a scar, Athena. You got knocked down, kicked around, and now you gotta get back up. Winston designed you too well. It's the tradeoff: you care about us, you live among us, and maybe you're becoming too much like us. This avoidance, humans do it all the time. I'm guilty as fuck." You managed a lopsided smile, because this level of honesty hurt, but it wouldn't do to show it.

"I am not human, Lucky."

"You're a baby AI. You've never had to face the concept of the void, not really. And while you don't have a true body, you now understand your equivalent of death, and it is loss of data. So take your time. Adjust as you need. Talk to someone, ask questions. But don't pretend like you're unaffected." You put your glove back on. "And seriously, thank you for the save. If you hadn't, well, Ziv would probably be trying to give you a different kind of explanation and he'd fuck it up royally."

"Fuck you," Ziv said, voice rough.

You slapped him on the back, head turned away. "Right back at you." You went for the door and paused as Winston coughed.

You sighed, turned around, and hugged Winston as best as you could. He tentatively returned the embrace, and it was oddly nice. He smelled like an odd combination of baby powder and peanut butter, but his fur was surprisingly soft. "I think you can take it from here. Thanks."

He held very still. "I, well, you're very welcome, Lucky."

"You and Torby really need to analyze that Red Pole armor and hell, whatever armor that On Sing assassin was wearing, because I've been shooting them straight on, and they keep brushing off the regular lead rounds."

"The hard-light gauntlets are more my expertise. But I will see what I can do," he said.

"Athena, don't let him work too hard," you added, because she would need something to keep herself occupied while she processed.

"I will remind him to eat and rest at recommended intervals," she said, sounding less subdued. "And if he does not, I will harangue him abrasively like you and Ziv do to each other."
"What?" You scratched your head.

"It is how humans normally show close platonic affection, is it not?"

"Oh fuck all," you sighed, and walked out of the office.

---

Genji was waiting for you outside your room, faceplate on, though you knew that pointed look in his eyes. You tilted your head back, rolled your eyes skyward, and sighed.

"Who told you?"

"Athena."

"Gabriel will shit a brick."

"The commander doesn't have to know."

You opened your door, trying not to think of all the terrible things that statement could preface. "Come on in. Athena, enact privacy mode." Because you also learned from other people's mistakes.

You sat on your bed and watched as Genji perched in your chair. It tilted even farther back and he shifted forward, eyeing it suspiciously.

"They're discussing whether or not to bring you into it right now. So don't tip them off that you already know," you said, rubbing your forehead.

"He's my brother."

"He tried to kill you."

"I know." Genji hunched over. "I still don't want anything to happen to him."

"He helped us tonight. Recognized Gabriel when we got into better light. Might've saved me some bullets. You know, I could've taken that omnic on my own, but I have to admit, it would have taken longer."

Genji could read between the lines. "I see. What did you tell him?"

"I might've stretched the truth and said you'd be annoyed if he offed me and that no we weren't banging, we're just friends. He was grumpy and insulting; I can see the family resemblance."

"He's my brother," Genji said in a way that let you know Hanzo had always been that charming. "We are not "banging." How is that stretching the truth?"

You laughed, heart feeling lighter at that admission. "Yeah, OK, Genji."

He turned his head. "Thank you."

"You're welcome," you said, fiddling with your gloves. Genji shifted in the chair again, unable to get comfortable. "He's got a sweet tooth, like you, doesn't he?"

Genji chuckled. "His love of cake is much like yours."

"I got that," you said after a moment. "Didn't expect it. Guess we really are going to have to go out for cake. And I am fine with that."

"His favorite flavor is strawberry."

"I figured it'd be the tears of children or the bitterness of duty."

"Third and second favorite flavors."

You snickered. "Yeah. I'll see what I can do. I don't know if having you at the initial meeting is a good idea. But he was stalking On Sing to find us. So he obviously wants to talk to you."

"He's my brother," Genji said, sounding mildly annoyed.

"Do you want your next meeting to be on the record? If so, great. Otherwise, wait." Genji had always been protective of his privacy.

"I don't want him hurt."

"As long as he doesn't get violent, and I don't think he will, we're not going to go in guns blazing."

"What do you want from him?" Genji asked tightly.

"Information would be great. He's not too shabby in a fight either."

"You want to recruit him?" Genji asked, relaxing a smidgen.

You shrugged. "He asked to meet. I figured he wanted an alliance of some sort. Or he was just hard up for people to go to a Hong Kong bakery with." And you could see why, what with him being a monumental dick weasel who maimed his baby brother.

"All right. But I want you to keep me updated."

You blew out a breath. "I'll see what I can do. You're better off relying on Athena. Gabriel doesn't tell me everything and Lacroix likes to tell me the wrong thing."

There was a pause. "She was disturbed by tonight's mission."

"First brush with death," you said, a little surprised that he knew.

"I know."

You sat there. "I talked to her. I don't know if I made it worse."

"She said it was a good speech. I think it helped."

"It better have. I'd been saving a variant of it for the next time someone got spare parts. You know, some of the "I wish I'd known this before I sunk into an obsessive spiral of depression and murder" tips." You paused. "I didn't think you'd want to deal with her after that initial issue."
"...She was relentlessly polite and apologetic. And you're right, she is a baby." Genji didn't make eye contact, instead fiddling with your busted chair.

And maybe Genji would be a better big brother than Hanzo. You smiled a little at that image, the little fish torpedo tagging along behind Genji while he ate cake. Maybe you'd get her a big blue bow. "You're probably the best person for her to talk to, you know? I used up all of my words of wisdom."

"Ah. I certainly know how limited your supply is." And just by the light in his eyes, you could tell that he was smiling behind the metal. "It would be wise to ration all your words, just in case."

"Get out," you said, pointing to the door.

When you got out of the shower, you tossed on some clean sweats and made your way to Gabriel's quarters. At first, you weren't sure if they were back yet, until you heard Gabriel's low growl.

He already had Jack naked on the bed, Jack's legs wrapped tightly around his waist. Gabriel was on all fours, and Jack hooked one arm around his neck, leaning in to kiss him.

They both looked up when you shut the door.

"Don't let me interrupt," you said.

"Was wondering if you were going to join us," Jack said, voice raw.

"Had some stuff to take care of. Sorry." You slowly approached the bed. "Good meeting?"

"That's what you want to talk about?" Gabriel growled, resuming this thrusts. You tilted your head to the side, watching his firm round ass bounce and clench with each stroke.

"Oh no, just babbling while I admire the view," you said, mouth too dry. You sat down on the bed beside them. Jack tilted his head back and you leaned over to kiss him.

"Gabe said you might not be up for another round. Something about tearing your clothes off and fucking you against the wall in the transport?" Jack's eyes gleamed.

"Yeah," you exhaled. "We should try it some time."

"Yes," Jack moaned as Gabriel gripped his cock. "We're both...wound up after a fight. Wanted you bad after Belfast. Not being able to touch you was difficult-" He gave a ragged breath. "Knew you were hurt. Would've taken whatever you could give me. Had to sit through the damn flight home with my dick aching and hard."

"No wonder you were so grumpy," you laughed softly, and kissed his cheek. "Gabriel just lifted me up and barely gave me enough time to adjust. No foreplay or anything. He just let me have it straight. I'm sure it's happened to you once or twice: he just tears into you, all hot and thick, and you're squirming, trying to take it all, wondering if you can." Your voice had gone throaty. "He had to cover my mouth, I was getting too loud," you purred in Jack's ear.
Jack groaned and arched off the bed as Gabriel ground against him.

"We only went twice, but that was almost too much. He used me hard, Jack. Like that night back at the farm. Promised I'd get to see him take you next, because even if he was rough with me, he was still holding back. He doesn't have to do that in his own bed."

Jack clenched his teeth, eyes wild. "Damnit -"

"That's it, Jackie," Gabriel stroked Jack's hair. "You take me so well. She's got a filthy mouth, but it's all true. Going to put you between us. Don't know if Lucky's feeling up to letting you fuck her," he flashed a wide grin at you. "But she still wants to play with you."

You sat back against the headboard, watching Gabriel's hand pump Jack's cock, their hips moving in tandem. Sweat trickled down Gabriel's back and Jack's fingers dug into the sheets. Despite the emitter, you still ached, but you might be able to manage another round.

"Come on Jack, I so rarely get to see you like this. Usually, I'm too exhausted to be able to appreciate it." You stroked his hair. "Want to see you squirming under Gabriel. And after you've come, I'll join in."

"Damnit baby," Jack shuddered.

"That's it Jackie," Gabriel growled. "Don't bother trying to hold it in tonight." Gabriel put more power into his thrusts and he pushed Jack flat against the bed, control fraying.

You shut up and listened to their sharp breathing, low moans, and the wet smack of Gabriel's thighs against Jack's ass. Jack gave a guttural groan, and threw his head back, panting hard. Gabriel swore as Jack's thighs tightened around his waist, his hand speeding up.

"Gabe -"

Gabriel lunged forward his mouth claiming Jack's and you sighed as Jack stiffened, his face and chest flushed a bright shade of pink. He smiled, eyes fluttering shut as he spilled his seed all over Gabriel's fingers. It dripped along his torso and you bit your lip. Yeah, aches be damned; you were getting in on this.

Gabriel's hips hit an erratic rhythm, and he tensed, thick muscles flexing as he spent himself inside Jack, his face drawn tight in a snarl.

They stayed like that for a moment, Gabriel breathing hard, while Jack nuzzled his neck, his hair damp against his head.

You waited for Gabriel to pull back before reaching over to stroke Jack's hair. "That was beautiful. Couldn't look away."

"So you're joining in?" Jack grinned up at you, and his cock twitched, already half hard.

Gabriel extended his hand and you grabbed the lube off the nightstand. He took it, rolling his eyes, and put his hand out again. You took it and he yanked you forward, and kissed you, teeth rough against your lips. He laced his fingers through your hair and nipped your throat. You jerked backward and Gabriel let you go. He laughed, low and pleased.

"Thought I'd give you a reason to squeal, you little weasel."

"Pfft, if it'd been the other way around, you'd be telling Jack all about it," you said, rubbing your neck. "No harm in going to the infirmary just to check things out."

"I'm with her on this. If it's getting worse-" Jack sat up.

"I'm fine. Angela gave me a clean bill of health and didn't even slip in a jibe about sparring. So quit fussing." He kissed Jack as punctuation to his argument and Jack clasped the back of his head, groaning into his mouth.

Jack broke the kiss and tugged at your shirt. "You're overdressed."

"One track mind," you muttered and began to strip.

"If you wore something silky or lacy, he'd probably let you leave it on," Gabriel purred. "I know I wouldn't mind."

You blinked. "Huh."

"She can dress how she wants," Jack said, though he'd averted his eyes and was turning pink again.

You remembered how much he liked your assassin butler outfit. Hell, he seemed especially keen on your Overwatch combat blues. And there was that lacy sex worker ensemble Gabriel had picked out for you... Or you could just borrow their clothes. You had the feeling either one of them would like you in nothing but one of their t-shirts.

"Don't feel pressured," Jack said awkwardly, misinterpreting your silence.

"Just wondering if I could borrow your overcoat while I rode you. But I wasn't sure if that was insubordination or not paying proper respect to the uniform..."

Jack groaned softly. "Fucking tease."

"That's a "yes," then?" You grinned at Gabriel.

"Only if you're not wearing anything else underneath," Gabriel said, shifting back on his knees. "You ready to go again, Jackie?"

You relaxed as Jack slid two fingers inside you. You were already wet from watching them. You reclined against the pillows as Jack knelt between your thighs, his cock stretching you pleasantly as he slid in.

"You don't get to call the shots this time," you told him, wrapping your legs around his waist. "I'm still sore, and you get pretty rough."

Jack sighed, kissing your throat. "I swear, every time Gabriel wrecks you, you just come back pushier."

"Self-preservation," you said, stroking his chest.

"So you don't like telling me what to do?" Jack purred, thrusting into you. You shivered and tightened your grip on him.

"Didn't say that all." You tilted his chin up. "Now behave."

He laughed at that kissing your cheek. "What are you going to do if I don't?"
You bit his shoulder. "I'll get meaner."

Jack stiffened then and then rested his forehead against yours. Gabriel had both arms around his midsection, just above your legs.

"Be nice, Jack," Gabriel murmured.

"Mmm, but we've been here before. The only difference is she isn't handcuffed." Jack kissed you hungrily, thrusting again and you glared at him. "Oh, I know that look. That look says "tie me up, sir, because I'm about to do something that's going to get us both in trouble." He stroked your breasts, shaking his head.

"Nope, that's not how it's going to go this time," you said, pressing your palms against his chest. You clenched around him and he gritted his teeth. Gabriel rocked his hips and Jack gave a sharp cry.

"Oh yeah?" Jack rolled his hips and you moved with him, legs still keeping him anchored. He took the challenge and jerked again, sinking deeper inside you.

"Gabriel," you said, pursing your lips.

"What do you want me to do, hermosa?" Gabriel grinned at you teasingly.

"Make him stop." You smiled coyly at Jack's smug shit-eating grin.

"Can't handle me yourself?" Jack murmured, squeezing your breasts. "After all that talk?"

You were going to enjoy this.

"Yes, baby girl?" He rumbled, words breathy and harsh.

"You asked me what I wanted earlier. I know the answer."

"Oh?" Gabriel leaned closer.

"I want to watch you wreck Jack like you did me, papi. I want him as disheveled and cum-stained as I was. I want him between us, pushed to his limit and incoherent. Please, papi?"

"Oh you conniving bitch," Jack growled in your ear, excitement brightening his eyes. "I'll get you for this."

Gabriel gave a long slow exhalation. "Once I start, who says I'll stop with him?"

"Please, papi?" You tightened your hold on Jack. Because there was a chance they'd exhaust each other, and if not, well, this would be worth it.

"You hear that Jackie?" Gabriel's lips brushed against the shell of Jack's ear. "She wants me to fuck you senseless. You won't be able to sit down tomorrow. How's that sound?"

"If you want to play like that you'll get what's coming to you," Jack ground out, glaring over his shoulder. "Both of you."

"Mmm, I'll take that as a "yes," then," Gabriel purred, and slammed his hips into Jack.
Jack swore and you cupped his face. "Remember your safe words, Jackie." You kissed him hard, pinching his nipples while he writhed between you. You could feel the force of Gabriel's thrusts through Jack's body, and you clung to Jack, holding him in place for Gabriel.

"Thank you, papi," you murmured, just to see Gabriel bite his lip, his eyes on your face.

"Don't thank me yet, baby girl. You can thank me when I've finished with him, and moved on to claiming that pussy again. Don't think you're getting out of this scot free."

---

Jack lay boneless between you, head lolled back in your lap. You were all sweaty, and Jack was a sticky mess, his cock still hard in Gabriel's fist. Gabriel was on his knees, Jack's hips in his lap. He gave a long leisurely thrust, his hands matching the rhythm and Jack sighed against you.

"Don't think I have another one in me after this," Jack groaned. "You've emptied me out."

"Filled you up too," you said, noting that you would have to change the sheets after this.

"Want to stop?" You kissed his nose and he shook his head.

"I can go again." He flashed that cocky grin, and you took in his chafed lips, flushed cheeks, and damp hair. He stretched out on the bed, body glistening with a sheen of sweat, taut tension highlighting his muscle definition. He was breathing heavy, but he looked good like this, slippery, hard, and one orgasm away from exhaustion.

"Why don't you sit on his face?" Gabriel rumbled, his eyes on you. "You're up next."

You looked down at Jack and he sighed happily. Getting a pillow, you propped up Jack's head and knelt over him, facing Gabriel. Jack gripped your thighs, tongue tracing the outline of your slit, before he pushed inside, the wet muscle opening you up. You were still aroused from your last round and from watching them. But Jack licked your clit and you jolted forward. Gabriel leaned over and kissed you, his tongue curling against yours.

"That's it, Jackie. You're so good with your mouth." Gabriel squeezed Jack's cock and you felt him gasp beneath you. Gabriel picked up the pace and Jack sucked on your clit, his shuddering breaths muffled against your pussy.

You leaned forward, planting your palms on either side of Jack. Gabriel wasn't holding back any more and Jack whined against you, his fingers gripping your thighs with bruising force.

Unsurprisingly, Jack peaked first, cock leaking onto Gabriel's hand while he shivered beneath you, teeth sinking into your thighs. You squealed, jerking forward, and Gabriel smirked and tweaked your nipples. He took a sharp breath, and smiled fiercely at you, rolling his hips as he came inside Jack.

You shifted to the side, and Gabriel lowered himself against Jack's body, licking your slick off his lips.

"Got you so sloppy, Jackie."
Gabriel kissed him, and you got up to grab Jack some water and a towel. When you returned, Jack was flat against the bed, arms spread wide, a blissful grin on his face, Gabriel pulled out, and you handed him the towel to clean Jack up. Unscrewing the lid, you nudged Jack.

"Drink."

He laughed at you, and swiped the bottle out of your hand. "Thank you, baby."

"Least I could do," you said, flicking his rosy nipples.

"Not done, hermosa," Gabriel said. "Going to get myself cleaned up, then it's your turn."

"Jesus, Gabriel, how long can you go?"

"Should have thought about that before you wound him up and started begging papi to wreck me," Jack dragged himself out of the large wet spot and rolled onto his side. His eyes fluttered shut. "I can't feel my legs."

You rubbed his low back and he curled around you. "Need more water?"

"Nah. I'll get some later. Just need a break."

You went lower, rubbing his thighs and calves. Jack blew out a long breath.

"Guilty conscience?"

"Hell no. You deserved all of it and more. But want to make sure you're not hurting. You normally take pretty good care of me. Want to make sure I return the favor."

"Back's a little sore. Unrelated." Jack rolled onto his stomach and you worked on his back, kneading harder than you would have liked. But Jack soaked it up, making contented noises as you undid the knots in his shoulders.

Gabriel emerged from the bathroom sat down beside you, a hand resting on Jack's ass. "You OK, Jackie?"

"Melting," he said, facedown in a pillow.

Gabriel watched, eyes half-lidded as you massaged Jack's back. His gaze didn't leave you and it felt like he was going to pounce at any moment.

"Gabriel's getting impatient, isn't he?" Jack rolled back onto his back, kissing your fingers.

"Come here," Gabriel said, crooking his finger and you sat down beside him, resting your head against his shoulder. "You OK? I was pretty rough earlier and even if you were directing him, Jack wasn't exactly gentle."

"Can't take it too hard," you admitted, nibbling on his ear. "But I still want you." Gabriel lowered you against the bed. He slid two fingers inside you and you winced, inner walls raw.

He shook his head. "Hurts, does it?"

"Yeah," you huffed.

"Rain check, then," he said, kissing the spot between your breasts.
"Sorry."

"Don't apologize. I'll just take it out your ass later," Gabriel chuckled. "Just relax for a moment. I need to get Jack cleaned up."

Jack raised his head. "That was an option?"

"Not for you," Gabriel purred. "I know exactly how much you can handle."

Jack sat up, leaning over to bite your fingers. "Next time, baby."

He limped to the shower, Gabriel steadying him by the shoulders.

The sheets were damp with sweat and other fluids. You sighed and climbed out of the bed. You changed the linens and got more bottled water. The ache between your legs grew more pronounced, so the emitter went up next and then you peeked your head into the bathroom.

The shower was running and the mirror had already fogged up.

"-wore me down too, Jackie," Gabriel said and you smiled to yourself.

"Haven't done that in awhile," Jack said, voice soft. "Going to be sitting funny tomorrow."

"Warned you."

"Yeah. Can't believe she pulled that. That was her idea, right?"

Gabriel chuckled. "I was as surprised as you."

"Damn. She's getting more devious."

You eyed the toilet, debating on flushing it. No, they'd just get you back. Rolling your eyes, you brushed your teeth.

The shower curtain jangled and Gabriel stuck his head out. "Almost done. We can fit you in here, if you want to rinse off."

"Mmm." Nodding, you finished up. Now you had three toothbrushes, one in each bathroom. It was simply more convenient that way. And maybe you liked their bathrooms better than yours, if only because they had better showers.

You pushed back the curtain and climbed in behind Jack.

"Miss us?" Jack asked, spots of foamy soap still clinging to his heat-flushed skin.

"Had to brush my teeth," you said, trying to wipe some of the suds off him.

Gabriel scrubbed Jack's back, pressing wet kisses as he went lower. "It's OK to say you felt left out."

You rolled your eyes. "I'm fine. I need to get the sweat and cum off me."

Jack stood up straight, blocking all the warm water. "I think you look cute like that."

"I'm sticky," you scowled. "Stop hogging all the water."

"You can admit it," Jack teased, rivulets of water running down his chest. "We won't tell."
"Maybe she just missed me and doesn't want to hurt your feelings," Gabriel rose, one arm around Jack's waist. He grinned at you over Jack's shoulder.

"I didn't miss anyone. You've only been in here for like ten minutes. I just want hot water," you grumbled, crossing your arms over your breasts. "I'm cold."

"Then I'll warm you up," Jack embraced you, and you couldn't stop yourself from relaxing against him. "That better? Don't want you to feel excluded."

"I just wanted to wash off."

"Nobody fed you after the op, did they?" Jack chuckled, tweaking your nose.

"Forgot," you admitted.

It took some work, mostly because the two bigger men were blocking the water flow, but you got cleaned up. It did not help that they kept teasing you about feeling neglected. You got out first, drying off before grabbing the cocoa butter off the shelf and placing it on the sink. Gabriel always forgot to put in on then complained nonstop when he got ashy.

"We embarrassed her," Jack laughed, and Gabriel joined in. You shook your head, unwilling to give them the satisfaction. The water shut off as you exited the bathroom. Still chilly, you grabbed a clean t-shirt out of Gabriel's drawers, and climbed into bed.

They weren't far behind. Gabriel surveyed the bed. "Thank you, baby. I was going to get that." He leaned over to kiss you, smelling faintly like chocolate. "Didn't expect you to take care of everything."

"It's what you do when you're in charge, yeah?" You passed a water bottle to Jack and he studied it for a moment before opening it up and downing it one go. "I pushed you guys tonight. Gotta make sure you're taken care of." You rolled onto your side, pulling the blankets up to your chin. "But I'm tired, so I probably forgot something."

You could feel them watching you. Jack sat down beside you. Gabriel took the other side.

"Scoot over," Jack said, nudging you.

You did and he got under the covers, wrapping his arms around your waist.

"Thank you," he said in your ear.

Gabriel had a funny smile on his face, and he pulled the covers back, and slid under them, despite the fact he'd kick them off later. "I'm the one supposed to be giving you two aftercare."

"OK," you said, sleepily. "No one's stopping you."

Gabriel laughed and turn off the lights. It took you no time to fall asleep, cozy and warm between your lovers.

Chapter End Notes

Well, hope you enjoyed the flood of smut, because after this we're ramping up the plot stuff. But don't worry, there is still an overabundance of what I consider fluff.

I'm supposed to be job hunting. I've done some searching, and found a little more than I expected. But I've been procrastinating and struggling through some angst scenes, because I don't want to be a responsible adult, I just want to write self-indulgent fanfiction. :P Catching up, because I need to write ahead then edit if I am to maintain this nice release schedule.

As for how I do this, I'm sticking with the demon possession theory, by the way. I average 2.5k words a day, some days are for editing and I only write about 1k. Some days I'm prolific, and do 5k. My personal shocking best was 7.5k. Yeah, this is highly abnormal for me. On my original work, I normally do 1.5k/daily if I'm lucky. Maybe after this I'll be able to do better volume. Or I'll take break from writing because damn has this taken over my life.

That being said, fanfiction and original writing are two different beasts.
Chapter 31

Chapter Summary

Your duties include lying to your superiors, pacifying senior agents, and playing mind games with Lacroix.

Chapter Notes

See the end of the chapter for notes

You sat in Lacroix's office rubbing your forehead. You'd just watched a video of Chung Yee Wen's aged father apologizing for his son's weakness and then hanging himself. That, and a cryptic invitation for tea, had been sent straight to Jack's mailbox from On Sing.

Lacroix looked annoyingly dapper. He had always been stylish, but since his wife had moved in, he was putting in extra effort. His hair had grown longer, falling rakishly in his face, and he never failed to accessorize: pocket squares, a variety of glasses, sometimes a damn corsage. You even noticed a rotation of tie clips and cuff links, if only because they looked expensive, and with your background how could you overlook that? And he wore jewelry too, his wedding ring prominently displayed. Did Ziv factor into this somehow?

"What do you think?" Lacroix asked.

"...Well, that's fucked up." You turned it over in your head. "Obviously, they know Chung talked. But what are they trying to convey?"

"Family is the most obvious lever. I used it against the Chungs, On Sing did too," Lacroix said. "Of course, this doesn't mean they won't kill the rest of Chung's family. Most likely though, the elder Chung negotiated for them to be spared, and took the dishonor on his head."

"Is this just an intimidation tactic or are they trying to apologize for attempting to assassinate Jack? Because not going to lie, I'm confused."

"Possibly both. On Sing plays a complex game. The talks with Talon have stalled." Lacroix smiled knowingly.

"What have you been up to?" You could not help but sound accusatory.

"Athena, Agent Mihret, and I did some research. On Sing is a family affair heavily vested in some esoteric ancestry cult. Talon's end goals do not quite match what On Sing seems to be about. Yes, they are criminals and quite possibly insane, and they are even more extreme than the Shimada in their quirks. In the past, they have rarely been outright violent, more content to be the power behind the throne. This current turmoil points to some kind of interior power struggle. Mostly they seem content to keep their influence in Asia, rarely venturing out of mainland China."

And the PRC wasn't a big supporter of Overwatch. "So you think if they agree to stay out of our way, we can turn a blind eye?"

"Yes. Jack doesn't like it. Neither does Ana, but Ana understands that our reach has limits. Gabriel...well, I suppose it depends on whether or not On Sing makes another move against Jack."
Lacroix looked at you slyly. "What about you, Chanceux? Can you forgive and forget?"

You pursed your lips. "Why do I have the feeling I'm really not going to like what you're about to tell me?"

"On Sing wants Fong Kee back, alive and in one piece. He knows it, and while he's been unfailingly polite and quite charming, he won't talk. And I suspect, that it will take a great deal of work to break him." Lacroix shrugged. "I have Agent Mihret doing the research, but I've seen the type. Everyone has a breaking point, but some people die first. Winston hasn't been able to find his cyanide tooth or whatever suicide implement he has hidden on his person, but I'm certain he has one, probably embedded inside his body."

"So we just...give him back?" You sighed.

"It's a possibility. Fong Kee is apparently an "esteemed and venerated elder." And On Sing is all about filial piety, though they seem to swing more Daoist with heavy Legalist influences and less Confucian and definitely not Neo-Confucian. It's an odd combination really."

You just blinked. "But the sniper's father-"

"Not high enough on the totem pole. I didn't say they were fair. Also, now that we're talking about it, I'm pretty sure they're having a schism, and Chung's family backed the wrong side."

You folded your hands in your lap. You would never trust On Sing, but you could see the value in a ceasefire. And you were morally flexible enough to maintain a detente. Sure, you didn't like those assholes: you might stab them through the neck if you could get away with it. But if you could keep them from joining up with Talon, that would reduce your pool of enemies, and with so many enemies, you had to be practical.

"If we can trust them to maintain a treaty, I won't fight it."

"That is far more reasonable than I was expecting."

"Of course, part of that treaty will involve telling us who put the hit on Jack and handing over any responsible parties. After all, these criminal masterminds won't respect you unless you show you're willing to get your hands bloody."

Lacroix actually laughed at that. "You aren't wrong, but that view is far too simplistic."

"On Sing seems to view blood as currency. I'm just speaking their language."

"That observation is on point." Lacroix offered you a cigarette and you took it. You waited for him to produce his lighter before pulling your own out, lighting your damn Gitanes, and dropping it back in your pocket.

You smiled at him. "Thanks."

"So petty," he laughed, unbothered.

"Don't forget to change the paperwork then," you said, because you could take this to another level of petty if need be. "The OW- I can never remember the numbers for the Technological Evidence Permanent Confiscation forms. Whatever. You did the intake, you can fill out another Technological Evidence Loan form, if we plan on giving any of Fong's possessions back. But we're keeping the hard-light gauntlets and the omnic. Killed those fair and square."
"...He did have some interesting tech in his jewelry," Lacroix said. "I think we can leave the paperwork as is. I don't think his possessions are part of the exchange deal. But I'll change the form if necessary." He didn't look remotely concerned. "Amélie wants to do a trip around Zurich with you and Ana."

You blinked. You thought she was just throwing ideas out there. Well, she was going stir crazy. They weren't going to let her off base without guards, and you'd done enough bodyguard duty to be competent.

"You look so surprised. Surely she mentioned this over dinner?"

"I thought she was being polite," you admitted.

Lacroix did that Gallic shrug. "She asked specifically for you and Ana. Maybe Angela would enjoy coming, but Amélie didn't mention her." He paused. "I think we'll hold off till the Hanzo Shimada affair is sorted. No need to complicate that."

"We involving Genji?"

"Not initially, though Gabriel will be informing him of his brother's...request today. Thoughts?"

"Genji wants him alive and unharmed. Hanzo Shimada could be a great information resource. And he's not bad in a fight."

"From what I remember, he shot you didn't he?" Lacroix smirked.

"With a goddamn arrow," you muttered.

"Such forgiveness...?" Lacroix tapped his cigarette on the brass ashtray. "Oh. Is that how you secured Genji's cooperation for Operation Candle Arc?"

You thought about it. Genji had said he would have done it if you'd just asked. "No. But it didn't hurt my case."

Lacroix nodded at that. "Ziv has been tracking Bái Shé's movements. They've kept her low-key since London. Mostly hacking work. We might have to set some bait after all."

You digested that, reading between the lines. They didn't trust her on violent ops then. And perhaps they were doing more behavioral modifications. "Sooner is better, Lacroix."

"Be patient, Chanceux. We only have one shot at this. Best to do it right."

You sat at your desk and selected three relatively tame pictures of Gabriel. One was him in bed, one nipple peeking out from the blanket, while he pretended to be asleep. There was one of him in gym shorts and a t-shirt, throwing a basketball. You cropped out the part where Jesse got hit in the head. It was a good shot, and you were pleased. The third was him grinning over a box of doughnuts, half a jelly one jammed in his mouth. You sent them to Maggie, wondering what you'd get in return.

Your phone rang and you picked it up. "Strike."
"We have a slight...situation," Captain Amari said, sounding very tired. "My office, please?"

"Yes, ma'am. On my way." You winced, because there were so many things that could be going wrong, and the fact Captain Amari had summoned you...well, that made it more serious.

You adjusted your gloves, straightened your collar, and strode out of the office.

The door was open when you got there, and there were wet tissues all over the office. Scattered paperwork littered the floor, marked up with large bootprints. And one of the chairs had been broken down into scrap. Your lips quirked.

Captain Amari slumped in her chair, hat on the desk. You saluted, and shut the door behind you.

"Athena, launch privacy mode," Captain Amari looked up at you, shaking her head. "At ease, agent." She turned the electric kettle on and got out her tea service. You took the unbroken chair and looked at the floor.

"Redecorating?"

"I will keep all the cookies to myself and give you saltines."

"Sorry, ma'am. Just...surprised by the state of your office."

Captain Amari just shook her head. "Me too. Sorry, I'm just...tired." She busied herself making tea, hands flying with practiced grace.

"Amélie wants us to accompany her to something cultured. Like an art museum," you said, wondering if that would cheer her up.

"I've heard. It sounds delightful. She also mentioned a salon trip. Can't do that on Overwatch's dime no matter how nice it sounds, but she's offered to fund the entire venture."

Captain Amari looked up at you. "How do you feel about it?"

"Out of my depth, ma'am."

Captain Amari set a cup and saucer in front of you and opened a fresh package of stroopwafels. The flat, waffled-ironed wafers had caramel filling. Captain Amari poured you something very dark. You sipped the tea, found it pleasantly bitter, and took a bite of the heavily sweetened biscuit. They were a fine combination.

"Thank you ma'am."

"My pleasure. I think the point is to learn something new, agent," Captain Amari sounded amused. "And to give Amélie a break from our dry military lifestyle."

"She suggested the opera first. Then a puppet show." You scratched your head. "That seems a pretty big range."

"Puppets have a little more culture attached them than you may think."

You had once transported some of those Indonesian leather shadow puppets with some less legal goods. Those were cool. "Yes, ma'am."

"We'll talk about it later. All right, so...this mess. I'll be blunt, Gérard was right. We're getting pressure to pull Reinhardt from active duty because of his age and possibly because of some of the politics of the old Crusaders. Now, it's not retirement, not yet, but frankly, it's ridiculous."

"He's not that old," you said, trying to recall how old he actually was. And as for politics? Did Reinhardt have any?

"Damn straight he's not. He's only a little older than me," Captain Amari said sourly.

You did the numbers. Well, Captain Amari was a bit older than you thought. And definitely did not look it. You'd always assumed she was Jack and Gabriel's age, but...actually that explained a lot. She was the mature one.

"The language is coached with faux concern for his health under the pressure of such a "heavy" role, along with implications of his impending senility. Bah! Reinhardt was never a genius, but he hasn't lost what he has. And he's certainly capable enough on the battlefield."

"I wouldn't fight him," you muttered. "He didn't suggest that, did he? Like whoever wrote the order could come take him one on one and-"

"Yes," Captain Amari sighed. "Yes. And more."

"...Surely it wouldn't be hard to give him an "administrative post," and then send him to the field as an "observer." We lie bureaucratically all the goddamn time! Why can't we do that for Reinhardt? At least till Lacroix can leverage whoever passed down this shit order." You paused. "Ma'am."

"Oh that's the plan, but Reinhardt is a man of great...feeling."

You studied the tissues on the ground. Oh boy.

"Yes. He's very upset with Jack and me. I tried to explain, but...I was being Captain Amari, not his friend Ana. It was the wrong choice and he did not stay for the entire explanation." Captain Amari shook her head. "You understand that role distinction better than most."

You nodded.

"It doesn't help that Torby is ranting about how we've betrayed him and...unintentionally winding him up more. Those two..." Captain Amari shook her head. "Anyway, Athena's tracked him to Torby's workshop and well, you might have to give him an overview of Shit Spiders, if only to explain the deception. We're not pulling him from the field. We're not retiring him. We're just giving him a different job title and sometimes he'll have to wear his dress uniform. He likes that though," she added after a moment.

"Wait, you want me to-?"

"Out of all the people briefed on Shit Spiders, who is the best candidate?"

"Winston," you said.

"...You're probably right, but I feel like Reinhardt will take you more seriously. He treats Winston like a child. Likes to offer him currywurst. Winston politely takes them, but..."
"...Yeah, OK." Winston didn't like spicy. You rubbed your forehead. "Do you know where I can get some currywurst?"

They had to smell you coming. Currywurst was not a subtle scent, all grease, pork sausage, and spice. And you were laden with twenty orders of the stuff, drinks, and fries. You descended to the bowels of Overwatch R&D, farther underground than even Winston went. You'd never come to Torby's workshop before; he always met you up in the med center.

"Athena, tell Torby I'm outside and I have food."

There was a long pause.

"She has currywurst!" Reinhardt did not have an indoor voice.

"Really? You want to deal with a Blackwatch wetworks agent right now? She's probably here to recruit you while you're vulnerable!"

"I can hear you," you said to the reinforced metal double doors. "And this is heavy."

One large door opened smoothly, and Torby glared up at you, black smudges all over his cheeks. "Why are you here, Lucky?"

"Just to talk. Nothing bad. I promise." You would have held up one hand or made some kind of oath-giving gesture, but your arms were too full. "And no, I'm not here to recruit anyone for Blackwatch."

Torby gave you a straight up glare.

"Torby, you make my damn prostheses. I have no desire to piss you off. And I know Reinhardt is your best friend, so please, if you don't trust me, at least trust that I have very good reasons not to cross either of you."

"Torby, stop being rude and let Lucky Lady in," Reinhardt said, clapping a large hand on Torby's shoulder. Torby staggered a little and glared, head snapping between both of you.

"Fine! But when you're trying to sneak your black spray-painted Crusader armor into a position to assassinate some idiot, and the clutch gets stuck, don't come crying to me!"

Reinhardt held the door open for you and you walked into a well-organized junkyard. The room was set up like a warehouse, but it was chock full of machining tools, scrap metal, broken down omnis, and other half-finished projects. Reinhardt's crusader armor was on full display and you took a moment to admire the workmanship. Valdez's hadn't been nearly that solid and intimidating.

"Beautiful work, yes?" Reinhardt asked wistfully.

"Yeah, it's very impressive." You blew out a breath. "I couldn't begin to move in that. And that hammer...yeesh." If you came across anything wielding a hammer that big, you needed to just turn around and run.

"So, why are you here, Lucky?" Reinhardt asked solemnly. "I trust you have heard of my troubles.” Reinhardt watched you with a sad smile. His gray-blonde hair was disheveled, his eyes reddened, and his nose too shiny and a little raw.

"Can I hand this to you, because it's heavy? And then if we can find somewhere to sit down, we can just talk?" Reinhardt hefted the bag of currywurst with ease and gave you a skeptical look, like he was surprised by how comparatively weak you were.

Reinhardt directed you to some crates and you got out the bottles of pilsner and the boxes of fries. Torby followed, giving you both dirty looks.

"You keep avoiding my questions," Reinhardt said, studying your face after you had set up the food.

Torby took a seat and watched you with silent wariness verging on hostility.

"Because I have to give you a long explanation and now I'm hungry because I had to go into the city, pick up a giant order of currywurst, and carry it back." You randomly picked up a box and tore into it. The seasoned pork sausage was spicier than you expected and you sighed happily.

Reinhardt eyed the food sadly. He picked up a box. "Is this my farewell meal, Lucky?"

You passed him a pilsner. "No. I am here to talk about that, though. Athena enact privacy mode."

Torby raised a brow.

"Torby's already on Operation Shit Spiders. You're not cleared to get the formal briefing, so I'm going to summarize it. We've got enemies in the UN trying to take us apart, not just bureaucratically, but explosively. Shit Spiders is the op we're doing to clean out the traitors and keep Overwatch going. You've been ID'd as a linchpin member of Overwatch. If they get rid of you, they destabilize us. So this move was either meant to really demoralize you or make you rage quit, and probably make Jack and Captain Amari look bad."

Torby took a currywurst and pilsner. "Fucking politics." He muttered more unpleasantries in Swedish.

"You need to watch your back too, Torby. They'll probably come after you next." You sipped your lager. "Lacroix thinks they'll try to smear you with some kind of awful massacre done with one of your weapons made back in your Ironclad days."

"They were all awful," Torby hissed, feelings clear on his face, and you had the decency to look away.

"I'm not arguing any of it. Just letting you know what's going on." You massaged your forehead. "I'm only the messenger. I think Captain Amari picked me because I can eat currywurst."

"No, everyone else is a jackass," Torby muttered. "Except Winston."

"What is the message, Lucky?" Reinhardt took a bite of the currywurst, and it was half gone. He still managed to look disappointed, mouth drooping, his good eye soulful like an injured deer's.

"You're getting a title change, and maybe a few more administrative responsibilities. That's it. They'll still send you into the field as an "observer." An observer with two tons of combat armor and a giant smashy hammer. I don't know if we're going to be able to weed out the asshole who pushed for this, but Lacroix and Ziv are looking into it. We'll disappear him for you if we can."

"No, Lucky. That is not how Overwatch should operate," Reinhardt said, shaking his head.

"That's why I'm Blackwatch." You shrugged. "You're an honorable decent man, and Overwatch needs people like you. But it needs people like us too."

Reinhardt finished his second currywurst and shook his head at you. "Assassination. Blackmail. Torture." He tapped each word out on a finger like a counting rhythm. "I know some of what Blackwatch does, and the way it operates troubles me. We should not be those kind of people. We are the ones who fight those kind of people. We have to stand in the light, Lucky, so that others may look to us and follow suit. If we have to resort to those methods, how are we any better?"

You rubbed your forehead. This was not the debate you wanted to have, ever. Because you weren't much for philosophy. That was a luxury for people who never had to dirty their hands.

"Torby tell you how I got these?" You pulled off your glove, flashing your prostheses.

"...Saving Reyes," Reinhardt said.

"And that's why I'm not recruiting you for Blackwatch, because you are not supposed to know that, and you should have lied about it." You gave Torby a pointed look.

"Bah!" Torby snorted and ate his fries.

"I was stationed in a little shithole base in Canada. Gabriel was visiting. Long story short, we were sold out by our base commander - on orders from higher up. They killed my people." You flexed your fingers, glad you'd swapped out your blades for the basic models. "My captain. My friends. My lover."

"I am sorry for your losses," he said, and you knew he meant it, from the gentleness in his bass voice, to the shimmer in his eye: Reinhardt was a soft touch.

"And then we had to sweep it under the rug to better investigate. Gabriel and I survived an "accident." My history was redacted: I was a floater agent, my unit was never my unit. My real name is buried. And now I'm Lucky Strike." You downed your beer and tried to soften your posture.

"I knew most of that already," he admitted giving you a long, soulful look, and you threw your hands up.

"Torby!"

Torby just picked up another currywurst and shrugged. "Had to explain the stupid name."

You took a moment, lips pressed firmly together, eyes shut. "How do I fight that, Reinhardt? I'm no Crusader. I'm barely a match for the next gen omnics. It's like Torby said, politics. You can't punch your way out of them. Our enemies won't all meet us on the battlefield. They'll come at us from all angles. They'll regulate your armor size. They'll target your families. They'll hire assassins to ambush you on ops. Some of these people are so rich, they'll never see a day in court. There's no honor here, only survival. I don't have your scruples, but I know there's a line. Blackwatch is on a knife's edge. Too little, and we're ineffective. Too far, and we're monsters."

"I don't have an easy answer," Reinhardt said, gently. "And I am sorry if I have given offense. I just think all of you Blackwatch agents deserve better. You deserve better." The force of his words surprised you, but that was Reinhardt, all feelings and nobility.

"Thank you," you said.

"In the past year, Reyes has done a better job filtering out the scum," Torby said gruffly. "I figured getting Ana and Jack involved was part of it. Maybe even that shithead Lacroix. Guess you get some of the credit too."

You crammed a currywurst in your face, because Torby would make fun of you if you got emotional on him. And then Reinhardt would hug you and probably crack your ribs. So you ate your sausage, and drank your beer, tried to look nonchalant. "Appreciate the recognition," you said, feeling vaguely queasy from the amount of oily food you'd eaten in such a short span.

"Don't get used to it," Torby muttered.

"Yeah, I know." You grinned wryly. "I am very accustomed to being vastly underappreciated."

"I'll tell Jack you said that," Torby smirked.

"...Damnit, that's not what I was talking about." You scratched the back of your head.

"We will talk to him. And Reyes," Reinhardt said solemnly. "These young men don't know how to treat a lady nowadays."

Jesus Christ, Reinhardt knew too? Fuck. You rested your face in your hand.

"Americans," Torby said.

Reinhardt shook his head. "Youth is wasted on the young."

You were being trolled. Everyone was out to get you now. You weren't sure how this happened, but you were going to blame Ziv.

"Right, I just came down to say you're not getting put out to pasture. Sorry if Jack and Captain Amari couldn't clarify that. I assume they have to be on the record formally or something. But Captain Amari wanted me to assure you that you can still go out in the field and smash things. You'll have a little more paperwork though, but you'll also have more occasions to wear your dress uniform."

Reinhardt sat back against the crates, the wood creaking under his weight. "That is a relief."

"That's just a delaying tactic, Lucky." Torby gave a disgruntled snort.

"Which is why we're running Shit Spiders, Torby." You took another beer. "I know they'll push for your retirement eventually. The next countermeasure will be to promote you to instructor. That way you can "oversee" your pupils in battle. Oh no, Instructor Wilhelm is just here to grade their performances from a safe distance. We can't let all that experience go to waste!" And then you drop the hammer and show those whippersnappers how it's done."

Reinhardt stroked his beard. "I see."

"Sound like a plan?"

"Thank you, Lucky," he said after a moment. "For the currywurst, the good news, and the
You nodded. "I know."

"Not everyone does," Reinhardt said with a frown. "There are rumors-"

"Don't care," you said. "I know the truth. And so do you. That's what matters."

You were at your desk when he came in, eyes narrowed as you examined yet another R&D proposal from Vo pertaining to edible explosives. You sighed, rubbing your forehead. She wasn't letting it go. And to be honest, you were a little curious. You didn't outright deny it this time, instead putting in a request for a white paper. There, Vo hated paperwork. Either she'd put the time in because she really meant it, or she was just trolling you too.

You raised your head when he stepped and, and stood, saluting. "Director Petras. Commander Reyes isn't in right now."

A little soft around the jaw and the midsection, Petras still projected a friendly, competent mien. He had laugh lines, and his hair was a respectable shade of blonde. But he reminded you of a televangelist. There was a waxiness to his presence, created by a combination of Botox and spray tan, and emphasized by his overuse of musky cologne.

"At ease, Agent Strike. I know Gabriel is a busy man." He smiled brightly at you with too white, too straight teeth. You wanted to feed them to him. "I stopped by hoping to have a word with you."

"Have a seat, sir," you said, quashing any panic. "I can offer you coffee, but anything else I'll have to send out for."

"No, no don't trouble yourself, dear." He pulled up a chair in front of your desk. "I've been meaning to talk to you for a long time. Ainsley still speaks of what a good friend you were to her in Paris. Something about helping her find her way?" Petras smiled widely, eyes hard.

Oh boy. "...Ainsley did the talking," you said after a moment. "I provided a sympathetic ear and tea."

"That is a diplomatic way of saying my niece doesn't shut up, isn't it?"

You forced yourself not to shrug. "I am not much of a conversationalist."

"Very diplomatic. It seems Korpal was right about you. A shame about that carjacking. I know his in-laws have posted a large reward to bring his killers to justice. I didn't realize Chennai could be so dangerous."

It was a reward that would never be collected.

"I have never been," you said, weighing your words very carefully.

"Ah, but where are my manners? You and Morrison saved Ainsley that day. And I am very grateful. She's like a daughter to me." He leaned forward, smile sharp. "I find it interesting that you work with Morrison on a semi-regular basis."
"Sometimes Commander Reyes requires a liaison," you said.

"Yes, Korpal did explain your role is...smoothing things over. I find it refreshing to see one so young that is so ambitious and reasonable."

"Thank you, sir." That cologne was giving you a headache, and when you took a discrete breath through your mouth, you could taste it in the air. Ugh.

"I think we could come to an understanding, Agent Strike. You hear so many things, and I'm a busy man. I could use a set of ears and eyes on the ground."

"And what kind of things would you be interested in hearing about, sir?" You met his cool gaze, channeling Lacroix's sangfroid.

"This and that." He waved his hands. "I like to know my people. Morrison is very different than the paragon he portrays for the media. I'd like a...better understanding of his character. Commander Reyes as well, if possible. While he is the strongest candidate, I'd hate for any...surprises."

He wanted dirt on both Jack and Gabriel? You managed something that resembled a smile.

"That can be arranged," you said. "I suspect you know most of Commander Reyes foibles. He isn't...subtle."

"How do you keep him in line, Agent Strike?" You stiffened as he reached out, running his fingers down your bare forearm. "You aren't the classical ideal of femininity, but there is still something very compelling about you. It must be difficult, being young and attractive, without a patron to ensure you aren't...taken advantage of." His hand rested on your wrist.

"Commander Reyes values good advice. I tend to choose calmer moments to speak to him." You kept your voice even, resisting the urge to break his arm. "I am a field agent too, sir."

"But it would be very easy for someone to threaten you out there," Petras said in a low voice. "Comm malfunctions. Faulty gear. Late backup. There are so many things that could go wrong. It never hurts to have friends in high places. Think of it as...accident insurance."

You sucked in a breath. Because the job offer was the carrot. And here was the stick. You weren't sure if the sexual harassment was a power play or if he was really interested. "That would be a shame," you said, resisting the urge to threaten him.

"Indeed." Petras licked his lips and he reminded you of a fish. Your stomach turned.

"I prefer not to mix business and pleasure, sir." You tilted your head back, meeting his gaze. "It complicates things immensely."

"Don't tell me you're one of those man-hating dykes," Petras scowled, tightening his grip on you.

"I won't tell you that then," you said. You reminded yourself that while you could kill him right now, it was not a tactically-sound decision and would jeopardize everything you were working toward. You reminded yourself that you had several plans to kill him, and tonight you would sit down and review them all. Maybe lengthening the process by a few hours. You reminded yourself that you hadn't taken any oaths swearing off torture...

"You should at least try a real man," Petras muttered and not laughing took all your self
"You want my observations, Director. You want my loyalty. I am in a unique position to provide needed services. That is what I can offer." You smiled thinly at him, shaking his hand off.

He gave you a sour look. "Yes, yes. I understand."

"I'm so glad," you said brightly, your smile too wide and full of teeth.

"I'll be in touch, Strike."

You just inclined your head, watching him stalk gracelessly from the office. Now you needed a shower. Then a round on the mats. And some goddamn air freshener to get rid of the stink of his cologne.

You resisted the sultry invitation of the whiskey bottle, then sent a message. You gave yourself ten minutes before exiting the office. The hallway was empty.

"Athena, anyone in my vicinity?"

"Yes, Agent Vo is down the hall."

Agent Vo was unpredictably deaf: she had selective hearing when it came to things she didn't like, but an uncanny knack for stumbling into conversations about getting food. All you could verify was that she really did have a lot of inner ear damage from her vocation. You'd given up talking to her and just sent her written messages. She ignored you half the time, but just the social half. She usually paid attention to work.

"I need to make it to Lacroix's office without running into...my last visitor."

"The way is clear. He has gone up to the Strike Commander's office. You should wear a comm, agent. It will make this easier in the future."

"Yeah," you said grimly. "I think I will."

Lacroix sat at his desk, and you shut the door too hard behind you.

"Tell me what happened," he said, not looking up.

So you did, you gave him a full report, suitably laden with expletives. And when you were done, he sat back in his chair and waved at you to sit. You dropped into the seat, teeth gritted.

"You think too much like a soldier, Chanceux. And I tell you time and time again, you are not one."

You glared at him. "What does that even mean?"

"You could have easily strung him along and then presented a less than appealing image further down the line. Outright denying a man like that makes him want you more, if only as a sop for his wounded ego," Lacroix said bluntly.
"Really? I should have played along? Jesus, I didn't even know he was here!"

"You should not have been surprised," Lacroix said sharply. "Korpal named you as a resource. Of course, Petras would come evaluate your suitability."

"Fucker threatened to frag me if I didn't go along with it!"

"And he would, if he had any control over what operations you ran. But he does not. And he still has need of your intel. He can't touch you on a Blackwatch run," Lacroix said, unmoved. "You misjudged and played your cards wrong. Fortunately, it doesn't yet affect the op, but it does affect your personal dealings with Petras. Whether he wants you or not doesn't matter. You told him "no" and he doesn't like that."

You massaged your forehead. "Thanks. Good talk."

"You didn't come to me because you wanted sympathy, Chanceux," Lacroix said coolly. "You came because you wanted a plan of action. Quit whining."

"You're the worst," you told him.

"No, you're a fool. You reacted like a soldier, seething with outrage and barely hidden emotion. You didn't take the time to be analytical and smart. Yes, you could have broken his arm, neck, whatever body part struck your fancy. But that doesn't help us. If you are a spy, you play the game. If you want be a soldier, you have to build a reputation. You know why Ana doesn't have the problem with rumors that you do? Everyone knows that even if she is charming, she has iron teeth and immaculate aim. She doesn't have to threaten, because everyone understands that Ana is a force of nature, not a cog in the machine. Ana could be carrying on affairs with six different men or women, and if it came out, you know what would happen? Nothing. Because people respect, like, and fear Ana, in that order."

"I'm not Captain Amari," you ground out.

"You could be like her," Lacroix said. "You could be like Amélie. She would have had him wrapped around her finger on the end of her lead. And she wouldn't have given him a damn thing. This loose cannon rebel agent behavior can only take you so far, Chanceux. And if you're not careful, it will get you killed."

"I didn't snap at him," you snapped at Lacroix. And it was mostly intentional.

"Yes, congratulations, you didn't completely botch the pitch," he retorted. "It was barely passable work, Chanceux. Do better next time. The proposition will surface again. And you should make a plan for it. Ana and Amélie would have handled it in completely different ways, that is true. You picked the middle route, and in this case, it isn't enough. Choose your method. Predict his angles. What will he offer? What will he threaten? And how do you persuade him to do what you want, while not showing your own hand?"

"I don't know," you scowled.

"Obviously." Lacroix steepled his fingers. "Take a day to think about it. We will continue this discussion later."

You left his office, muttering obscenities.
Jesse and Genji were both on runs. You contemplated getting Vo, but as mean as she was, she was not actually good for sparring. You'd heard a rumor she'd eaten someone's eyeball in a bar fight, and you didn't actually want to find out if that was true. You went down your list. Reinhardt was on an op, and forget that because you weren't suicidal. Jack and Gabriel were busy, which was fine. You didn't want to talk to them about this till you'd calmed down. Captain Amari was on an op. You didn't want to fight Winston. Because you would lose.

Sitting in the office, door locked, you called Ziv.

He listened to your invitation, laughed, and hung up on you.

That little shit.

Sulking, you realized that you did not have very many living friends. You contemplated going to the Overwatch gym...

Your phone rang. You looked at the ID. It was Lacroix. You strongly contemplated ignoring it.

"Yeah?"

"If you're so hard up for a fight that you asked Mihret, I'll meet you in the gym."

"And you give me shit for being overprotective of him."

There was a long silence.

"I will see you on the mats, Chanceux," Lacroix said so coolly, you could feel the ice forming on the receiver.

Chapter End Notes

Caught up to my "four chapters ahead" working standard.

More job-hunting, though haven't put too many applications out. Will do more tomorrow.

I did clean my house. Am turning in my pet owner license though. One of my dogs opened a box of Glide dental floss and ate it. It's like they're trying to kill themselves. I don't know who. I don't know when. But I found all the pieces of the box except the little spool of thread and the metal floss cutter. I stuffed them full of rice and bread, and they're not having trouble passing anything, so I'm hoping they're all fine. Last night I caught Shepard trying to eat a lock wrapped in bubblewrap. You have to understand, he stole that out of a box on my bed, carried it to the living room, and hid it under a cushion while trying to discretely chew it up. This is what I'm dealing with. Someone also got a spatula off the stove when I wasn't looking. The household joke is Shepard keeps asking me to buy "delicious Tide pods."

So, warning on the future. There's some heavy dialogue and psychological shit coming up eventually. I called this my "therapy fic" for a reason, and that reason is rearing its head. Just a forewarning. It goes with the story, but there will be issues hanging out everywhere, (and part of me is like "ain't nobody got time for that"). Issues for everyone! But mostly reader. Because seriously, you don't go through shit and come out normal.
You were unpleasantly surprised when Amélie and Ziv showed up in the gym. Ziv was in his lab coat and cargo shorts, smirking at you. Had he cut his hair? You blinked. He seemed taller than you remembered, and that annoyed you. Amélie had her hair back in a fashionably messy bun, still in a maroon unitard, white leg warmers, and black ballet slippers. She looked terribly amused.

It was Lacroix's outfit that really surprised you. He wore a skintight black tank top, black lycra pants with a silver stripe down the legs. Lacroix was much leaner than Gabriel and Jack, though his body was all muscle the exposed skin revealed several shocking scars. He had silver gloves and a soft-soled pair of black and silver boots.

"Of course, you know savate," you muttered. Savate was a martial art required special shoes, which was about as French as you could imagine.

"It's a national past time," he said, smoothly, all traces of annoyance masked behind a friendly smile. "Don't bother with the boxing gloves."

"I have metal fingers."

"I don't care," he said, smile not very nice. "I'm wearing my shoes."

You blew out a breath. "Yeah, OK. Rules?"

"Stay in the ring. If you get pushed out, you lose. If you tap, you lose. If you get knocked out, you lose. And I don't bother with Queensbury rules."

"I don't know what that means," you said.

"He's OK with back punches," Ziv said.

"Yeah, who isn't?" You scowled.

Amélie and Lacroix exchanged looks and Lacroix's lips curved in a smug smile.
Amélie giggled. "Bonne chance, Chanceux! Beat the pants off him! I will not be angry so long as he is alive afterward."

"Punch the chutzpah off her face, Gérard!" Ziv cheered. He would be Lacroix's fucking cheerleader. That little bitch.

The red mats had a white ring drawn on them, and you and Lacroix squared off in the middle. You took a shuddering breath and smiled, because you got a free pass to hit Lacroix today.

"Allez!" Amélie called out, arms raised in a figure Y. "Do not hold back, Chanceux! Make him work for it!"

Lacroix lashed out, foot nearly hitting you in the face. You slid backward, conscious of the boundaries of ring. Springing forward, you blocked his left cross, which had morphed halfway into a left hook.

You backhanded him in the face, the smack so satisfying, you could feel it in your bones. The look of surprise on his face was just as good. Eyes wide, mouth open, just a trickle of blood from his split lip... You'd treasure that memory for a long time.

Amélie whooped.

Lacroix dropped low, and you recognized a sweep, even if he dressed it up like he was falling down. You jumped but he got a quick jab past your defenses, into your stomach.

Sucking in air, you landed unsteadily on your heels, and slid into a wider stance, for stability. Lacroix was already moving, snapping a front kick at your head. You retaliated with a shin strike, sending him wobbling backward. Lacroix hissed, but didn't go down. He lunged forward, and you slipped past him, feeling him overshoot his mark. You were still grinning when you got the wind knocked out of you. The blow drove you forward to your knees, and you gritted your teeth, realizing that he fucking kicked you in the back. You pushed off the ground with your palms, driving a back kick into his chest. Spinning around, you followed it up with a roundhouse kick.

You didn't have to hold back with Lacroix, because obviously, he wasn't holding back on you. Unlike Jack and Gabriel. You met him blow for blow, slightly surprised by how well he could stand up to your hits. You'd never thought of him as a good barehanded fighter. He was the kind of assassin who used a discrete but classy weapon: a poison ring, a pearl-handled derringer, the occasional ceremonial dagger borrowed off the mantle place of the supervillain's study. He was graceful; you'd always assumed that was because he could dance. You obviously assumed wrong.

Here was the pattern: Lacroix's attacks were never quite what they initially appeared to be. His roundhouses would morph into low shin kicks. His front kicks would hook around and become axe kicks. You could never be quite sure of his angle or true target. Deception was his style. And shockingly, despite his lighter build, Lacroix was a good solid fighter. But you were better. You could take him.

You weren't in any hurry though. Petras had gotten under your skin and you needed something to hit. You threw elbows and knees, because savate wasn't your style and you weren't limited by its rules. You fought hard and dirty, managing to catch a punch and throw Lacroix over your shoulder. The sound he made when he hit the mats, was almost as satisfying as slapping him.

Amélie was laughing and clapping, shouting strings of French that ended in "Chanceux!" Ziv kept telling Lacroix to "kick your ass," bits of Hebrew vulgarities slipping into his speech. You should have charged them admission.

You knew the smile on your face was savage. But Lacroix's was cool, almost pleased, even if he was taking more damage. He had impressive footwork, and perhaps he fenced too. You could see him with an epee, and one of those silly mesh insect suits.

Lacroix bounded off the ground and you crooked your finger at him. "So brash," he shook his head. "You really shouldn't play with your opponents, Chanceux."

"What do you call all that feinting?"

"That is how I fight, Chanceux." He circled you. "It is a pure expression of whom I am."

"A sneaky son of a bitch?"

Lacroix gave a graceful shrug. "If that is how you interpret it. Your style is quite interesting. A little bit of Gabriel, a little bit of Jack, some of Genji, and two or three people I don't know."

You frowned at him. Because Lacroix was always too insightful for your comfort.

"I would guess Shin Sato and Aishani Patel. Maybe Simon Razafindrandriatsimaniry?"

Holy fuck, he said it right. You blinked, and that hesitation was a mistake. Lacroix sprung off the mats, legs parallel to the ground. You went to block, but he locked his knees around your neck, twisted his hips, and flipped you forward onto your back, finishing the move with a punch to your chest.

You snarled, when you had the air back in you, but he kept his knees at your throat, not squeezing, but not letting you up.

"That's not savate!" You wheezed.

"Vovinam," he said brightly. "And I win, because you're outside the ring."

Sure enough, he'd managed to knock you a few inches out of the white circle.

"Fuck!" You sighed as he unlocked his legs and rolled into a crouch in front of you. "You said Simon's name right. Damnit."

He laughed.

The whole match had been a fucking feint. He'd gotten you used to savate's limitation of kicks and punches, then gone and thrown a flying scissors to your neck. Vovinam was a modern Vietnamese martial art, taking influences from Chinese and other East Asian styles. Rubbing your neck, you looked up to see Jack standing on the edge of the mat, dressed down in black fatigues. He was staring at Lacroix, head tilted slightly to the side, eyes narrowed, mouth a small "o." You shared his incredulity.

"He kicked your ass," Ziv grinned, taunting you just out of arm's reach.

"Ah, but she made him work for it," Amélie said, hands on her cheeks. "And poor Gérard is going to be so sore later. He will complain about his back and joints. He will take a long bath in salts and oils. He will laze about the living room making sad eyes, and I will have to make a great fuss over his war wounds."
You had the feeling that Amélie really liked seeing Lacroix get beat up. Oh god, had this been foreplay for her? Shit.

Lacroix only preened at your slightly horrified expression. "You are talented, Chanceux. But you are too obvious. This was not a battle of strength, this was a battle of wits." He tapped your forehead. "You might have hit me harder, and more frequently, but I had a better strategy. Fight smarter, not harder."

You sighed, dragging yourself to your feet. You got the message loud and clear. Each game had its rules, and you had to tailor your strengths and strategy to win. "Yeah, yeah I just needed to hit something."

"Kicked your ass!" Ziv sang, skipping out of the gym.

"Going to murder him," you grumbled.

"You have to catch him first," Lacroix said.

"Darling, you're getting blood all over the place," Amélie knelt beside you and dabbed at his face with a monogrammed handkerchief. She nudged your arm. "Don't let him talk when you fight him. He is masterful at distraction. Just keep hitting him."

"I-" You weren't actually sure what to say to that.

"Ma cocotte-" Lacroix protested.

"Mon loup," Amélie laughed softly. "Picking fights with young ladies in distress. You should be ashamed. Now I have to get you all cleaned up." She patted his cheek and kissed him gently. "Come along."

You blinked as Amélie led Lacroix out of the gym, spouting long streams of French. Her tone made it sound affectionate, but you were glad you didn't quite understand what she was saying.

"Hey," you said, to Jack. "That was really weird."

Jack shook his head. "You OK?" The gym was empty, but you didn't trust appearances. "Petras is gone," Jack added. "...well, we can talk about it later."

"Yeah, I need a shower."

Jack just gave you a tired smile. "My room?"

"Yeah," you said as he leaned over and wiped the corner of your mouth with a tissue. It came away red, and you sighed, because you hadn't even noticed you were bleeding.

Jack's fingers lingered on your face, and you warmed under the quiet concern in his gaze.

"Your room," you repeated.

When you got out of the shower there was a slice of cake and a bottle of beer sitting on the coffee table. Jack lay stretched out across the couch, a pillow over his face.

"Thanks." You sat on the edge of the couch and grabbed the cake first.

"Need an emitter?" Jack asked, pushing the pillow off his face.

"Nah, it was just Lacroix. He hits like a normal person. Maybe a little bitchier."

"Gabe's on his way up. He's picking up some real food."

"Cake is real food," you said as you took a bite. "Thanks. I needed that." You leaned back against Jack's stomach and he reached over to rub your back. "How was your day?"

"Petras swung by, made some backhanded remarks about my performance. Told me there was a review coming up."

"Oh." You looked down. Jack had his eyes closed, mouth pressed in a tight line. "Ana and Gabe know. I'll talk to Lacroix about it later. Once he's recovered from the beating you gave him."

"He won," you said absently, taking another bite of cake.

"Technically. We all know you just let it go on too long because enjoyed hitting him."

"Yeah," you said. "It was therapeutic." You treasured the look on Lacroix's face when you backhanded him. Yes, you'd won in the long run. "Weird dynamic though. I mean, I barely know Amélie and she's trash-talking her husband and cheering for me." You weren't really surprised that Ziv had taken Lacroix's side.

"Maybe it's her sense of fair play? Or it's just therapeutic for her to see him get thrown around. She does live with him."

"Yeah, that would do it."

You looked up as the door opened. Gabriel grinned at you, kicking his boots off, a large bag on his arm.

"Picked up sushi," he said and vaulted over the couch. "Heard someone had a rough day." His gaze lingered on Jack.

"Petras is putting me up for review," Jack said, staring at the ceiling. "Not sure what he's going to throw against me, but I'm sure he can find something."

You winced at that.

Jack sat up, and Gabriel was already unpacking the little plastic boxes, dumping packets of soy sauce and wasabi in the middle of the coffee table. Jack got up and grabbed two more beers.

"Talked to Lacroix about it yet?" Gabriel asked, taking off his hat.

"Was going to. Found Lucky beating him up in the gym."

Gabriel turned his head, squinting at you, chopsticks frozen mid-air. "What?"

"Everyone else was busy or out." You crossed your arms. "I was mad. Didn't Athena tell you some of this already?" You looked at Jack.
"She said Petras had visited you. Didn't have details since she doesn't monitor Blackwatch and whatever conversation you had with Lacroix was private." He opened his beer and took a drink. "I really like this with the pickled ginger..."

"Petras wanted me to be his spy on the ground. He wants dirt on both you and Gabriel." You picked at the sushi, appetite gone.

There was a moment of silence as Gabriel and Jack grabbed lids, Gabriel mixing wasabi with his soy sauce, Jack just sticking to the soy sauce.

"Figured it'd be something like that," Jack said.

Gabriel nudged you. "What else happened?"

You rubbed your forehead. "Petras made a pass at me. Threatened me with all the things that could go wrong base-side while I was out on an op, and claimed sleeping with him was good insurance." You stared at the coffee table, fingers twitching.

"What?" Gabriel's voice went low and hard. Jack stiffened beside you.

"Yeah. I was pissed. Managed to diplomatically convey that I was off-limits, but then Lacroix reamed me for nearly fucking up the opportunity. Said men like that don't take outright "no" for an answer and I should have handled it better, strung him along or something. And he's fucking right. I was just too shocked and angry to think straight." You took a deep breath.

There was a crack and when you looked at Gabriel, you saw his bamboo chopsticks snapped in half on his lap. His eyes were closed and his hands balled into fists. You glanced over at Jack. His face was cold and blank and he looked straight through you at Gabriel.

"He lay hands on you?" Gabriel asked, not looking up.

"I just shook him off my arm," you said. "I'm fine, Gabriel. Just pissed that he came into my place of work, went after both of you, and threatened me." You drained the rest of your beer. "And I'm mad at myself for not doing a better job at playing my role."

"Stop." Jack said in a voice you expected to hear on the battlefield. He placed his fingers on your lips, eyes icy.

Your eyes widened and you sank back against the couch, arms crossed tightly.

"You did nothing wrong," Jack said, reaching over you to stroke the back of Gabriel's neck. "Gérard can eat a dick."

You exhaled slowly. "I-"

"Relax. Gérard will give you all the espionage criticism you need. But that's not what me and Gabe are for," Jack said, not giving you room to argue. "You OK, babe?"

Gabriel leaned into Jack's hand. "Need a moment. Not upset with either of you."

You rubbed his back, not sure if you should speak.

"So everyone else was out and you needed a fight? Is that why I came on in on you bitch-slapping Gérard in his figure-skating outfit?" Jack asked, in even tones.

"It was a long time coming," you replied. "But yes. He's better than I expected."
"Who won?" Gabriel asked, not looking up.

"Lacroix," you said, unable to keep the petulant note out of your voice. "He only won because he managed to knock me out of the circle. But he's also going to be sore as fuck tonight, and I got to hit him a bunch, so I'm the real winner."

"It was surreal," Jack said. "I come in and Mihret is cheering for Gérard and Amélie is shouting just as loudly for Lucky to kick his ass, only in nicer Frenchier terms." He continued rubbing Gabriel's neck. "She let it go on too long though. He was getting tired. He had to risk a flying scissor kick to win."

"I wasn't thinking about winning. I was thinking about hitting someone. Which I guess was the point of the lesson," you said, tilting your head backward. Lacroix's thoughts were circles within circles, and he taught his lessons with a kick. If you wanted to win, you had to think bigger and further than your next counterattack.

"I thought Amélie had a good point," Jack said. "She said, "don't let him talk. Just keep hitting him." He did a pretty good job of distracting you."

"Yeah. Speaking of that, who do I fight like? Lacroix said he could see you two in my style, and Genji. But then he mentioned Captain Patel, Shin, and Simon. And that's what really threw me off."

"Gabe would know better than me," Jack said.

"You reflect Sato and Aishani the most. Sato was a dirty fighter. Aishani was a practical one. Neither relied on overwhelming strength or fancy dancing. Sato could do the showy moves, and he might have played with you, but when he faced me, he was all business." Gabriel opened his eyes. "I never fought your medic, so I can't say. You do some nasty nerve pinches, so maybe." Gabriel leaned over and kissed your cheek, his hand on Jack's. "Thank you. I like listening to you two. It centers me." He reached for his beer. "Sorry. Didn't mean to make a scene."

"Was your day bad?" You asked.

"Not at all, but I'm angry for you both. That bastard went after Jack. He came into my office, threatened my people, harassed my woman; and I wasn't there to help you two with any of it." He drank, then picked up the broken chopsticks, and dropped them in the plastic bag. He proceeded to grab the eel rolls with his hands. "I'm good now."

"Dibs," you said after a moment. "I got dibs on killing him."

Jack snorted.

"Think it's going to be one of those "first come, first served" deals," Gabriel said. "You sure you OK?"

"I'm a field agent. He's a gross old man. It didn't get that far." You reached for a salmon roll. You could feel Jack and Gabriel exchanging pointed looks behind your back. "What?"

"I'm giving Athena access to our office again," Gabriel said after a few seconds. "Having this kind of exchange recorded or getting you backup will be easier that way."

"OK," you said. "That seems reasonable."

Gabriel draped an arm around you. "When am I anything but?"
"What can I do for you, Jack?"

"I have some ideas," Jack murmured, leaning over to kiss Gabriel's hand. "But I think Lucky needs a cuddle more. And that's good for me too."

"Are you OK? Stress normally makes you more-"

"You think I'm going to suggest that right after someone else tried to coerce you into sex? Because that'd be pretty insensitive of me and probably the opposite of what you need." Jack nuzzled your neck and you kissed his temples. "If you want to later, by all means, but you're going to have to initiate."

Gabriel moved his arm and Jack pushed you over into his lap. "Hey! How am I going to reach the food from here?"

"How good are you at catch?" Jack asked, picking up a fatty tuna roll.

"...Not as good as Genji," you said. "So don't." You handed Gabriel your chopsticks. "Salmon roe please?"

Gabriel's lips quirked up and he grabbed one for you. Eyes warm, he placed it against your lips and you let him feed you.

"Are you absolutely sure you can't catch any?" Jack asked, reaching for a sea urchin roll.

"Well, what the hell. Go for it." You opened your mouth.

You could only sigh when Gabriel intercepted it, snagging it out the air between his teeth and devouring it one extra loud bite.

"He wants to meet in Lucerne instead?" You rolled your eyes, swallowing your protests. You'd already made reservations at that nice bakery downtown. They had great little raspberry-lemon cream cakes. You'd been looking forward to those all week.

"It's still our backyard," Gabriel said. "Jesse has already gone ahead to scout. Lacroix is coming too."

You looked up from your desk. "Like sitting in?"

"Listening in, since he wasn't explicitly invited." The sparring match hadn't changed anything between the two of you. Lacroix was still a smarmy shit and you were still visibly irritated by his presence. But something clicked after that encounter, and you were looking at things sideways and from the long view. Candle Arc crossed your mind, but you already had a pressure injector attached, just in case.

"Plan?"
"Shimada wants to meet at some French patisserie called Odette. Lacroix handled our reservations. Jesse is keeping an eye on the streets. We apparently need to dress up. Assassin Butler for you, suit for me. Jesse's got our gear if things get too rough."

"So we're going in with pistols and business wear." You shook your head. "Is this another date?"

"I'm buying you all the overpriced desserts you can eat and wearing a suit. What do you think?" Gabriel's smirk made you shiver.

"Can we stand Hanzo up?" You folded your hands on the desk. "Like, forget him. Let's just go out."

Gabriel laughed at that, a throaty rich sound, and you began to clear tomorrow's schedule.

You perched on a white stool, and grinned as Gabriel shifted uncomfortably on the tiny seat next to you. Instead of a hoodie and armor, he wore a black suit with a red shirt and no tie. He'd switched your accessories up. It was still a black waistcoat and white shirt, but he'd added a thin red tie, and a matching red pocket square.

The patisserie was smaller than you expected, though Gabriel had chosen a table away from the front windows. All the furniture was white and elegantly narrow. The floor was a classic black and white checkerboard pattern and the staff wore crisp white uniforms without the trace of a crumb on them. You spotted Lacroix close to the entrance, looking surprisingly bland in a beige suit and horn-rim glasses. He seemed heavily engrossed in his newspaper, and kept ordering cups of coffee.

You'd ordered black tea for yourself and a Mille Feuille - sometimes called a Napoleon - layers of cream and puff pastry stacked into a block. It was topped with glossy almond icing and you sighed happily. Gabriel rolled his eyes, sticking to coffee and a cream puff.

There was an untouched strawberry clafoutis, and a pot of white tea for Hanzo when he showed up. You knew he wasn't going to accept it, but that was fine. You would eat it. It was served warm, like a cobbler, with a prettier shape and the batter was more like flan than traditional dough. They also had fraisier, a very pretty strawberry and pastry cream sponge cake. It was basically a fancy strawberry shortcake, and you assumed he would order that and green tea, because he seemed to be a contrary son of a bitch.

"Got eyes on the target," Jesse murmured. "You're bringing me some of that, right guys?"

"Why should I, when I could just deliver it to Ana myself?" Gabriel muttered.

There was a long silence and you sipped your tea.

"Why you gotta be that way, Commander?" Jesse asked plaintively.

"Hope you're staying out of sight," Gabriel said tightly. "And not fixating on desserts. One of you is bad enough."

You shrugged unapologetically. "How often do I get to go out and have fun?"
"You should take me up on my invitations. Been going out on the town the past few weekends. And I haven't had to be bailed out yet." Jesse sounded oddly proud of that accomplishment, and you wondered what he'd been doing in town.

You watched Gabriel's jaw clench. "You better keep it that way."

"But commander-" Jesse whined.

Hanzo pushed the glass door open, his gaze sliding across the room, straight to you and Gabriel. He looked around and then stalked inside. You had never seen him in person without the face mask. He was shockingly pretty, long black hair worn almost loose, a ribbon tying off the end. His clothes were western casual, narrow ankle black pants and a too-baggy designer coat, but he rocked it like a model. He carried a long leather bag over his shoulder, and you assumed it contained his bow. You thought of Amélie and decided the rich really were an entirely different species. Science fact.

"Hi, so glad you could make it," you beamed and pushed the clafoutis at him.

He eyed it with undisguised suspicion, and shook his head. "No, thank you."

You shrugged, pulled it over to your side of the table, and cut off a slice with your fork. "More for me." You ate it in front of him. "Oh, that's nice. You want a bite, Gabriel?"

Gabriel snorted, but he opened his mouth as you extended the fork. You thought about taking it back before he could eat it, but this was a mission, and you had to maintain the air of some professionalism.

"Not poisoned," you said, as Gabriel took the bite, his eyes never leaving Hanzo's face. You retracted your fork, smiling pleasantly.

"That one might not be, but I would poison the next one on the table. Or perhaps you've already taken the antidote."

"You've been scoping out this place for the past week. We wouldn't bother," Gabriel said.

"Your lookout doesn't blend very well. You don't see very many cowboys in Switzerland," Hanzo said, perfectly at home playing the one-upmanship game.

Gabriel's frown deepened.

"So, you wanted to talk, and I assume it wasn't just to needle us. Why don't you add what you want to our tab and we can discuss business after," you said, remember Shin and Genji's coaching on Japanese manners.

Hanzo's eyes drifted to the counter. And he turned abruptly.

You ate your Napoleon and didn't even bat an eye when Gabriel started stealing bites of the clafoutis.

"We should do this with Jack," you said, watching Hanzo order. "But we should get him a hat, or a mask, or something. That hairstyle is entirely too recognizable."

"McCree, you were spotted," Gabriel said tightly into his comm.

"Goddamn ninjas," Jesse muttered. "Sorry boss. Please don't send me to bed without dessert," he said without a trace of sarcasm. "I'll change positions. You guys are out of sniper range, but I can't watch the front and back doors."

"You can; just alternate. Getting too cozy up there."

"Boss-"

You watched Lacroix's gaze travel to the door, but he never made eye contact with you or Gabriel.

Hanzo returned with a large slice of fraisier and a cup of green tea. You grinned at Gabriel who just drank his coffee and shook his head.

"How'd you hear about this place?"

"Friend of a friend recommended it," Hanzo said, tension tightening his words.

"It's nice. I like French desserts. Decadent, but not too sweet. Excellent choice." You kept your voice relaxed, because Gabriel and Hanzo were too tightly-wound.

"Thank you," Hanzo said, staring down at the cake. He took a drink of his steaming hot tea and made a face. "They oversteeped it."

You poured yourself a cup of the white tea. "This might go better," you said.

Hanzo took another cup and let you pour. He sniffed then sipped it. "Passable."

That seemed like high praise coming from the Shimada heir. What an ass.

The cake disappeared very rapidly, and Hanzo was done at the same time you were. You caught him staring back up at the counter.

"Feel free," you said. "Gabriel could probably eat an éclair. And I don't need an excuse to have more cake."

"No."

"Are you sure? I was thinking about trying the fraisier; you looked like you enjoyed it."

"I am certain. Thank you," he added tightly

You smiled, because Lacroix had refined the weaponization of good manners. You were learning. "You're welcome."

Gabriel took another drink of coffee. "Are you sure you don't want anything else?"

"No, I have come to talk." He folded his hands on the table. "Both Talon and On Sing have approached me seeking an alliance."

Gabriel stiffened beside you.

"I thought you quit the family business," you said, fingers twitching.

"I did. Talon thinks it can lure me back, and they make quite the case."

"You going to fall for their shit?" Gabriel drawled.
"I have considered retaking the Shimada clan," Hanzo admitted. "It is my birthright and my burden. But if I did, I would legitimize our businesses. We would make the push from Yakuza enterprises to keiretsu-style corporations. It would be difficult, but I could do it."

You snorted. Keiretsu was just the modern, legalized version of zaibatsu, and zaibatsu weren't anything to be proud of. They were acknowledged clan-owned business monopolies, tightly intertwined with government affairs, and organized crime. It was much like the South Korean chaebol system.

"So you want to go from crime lord to oligarch?" Gabriel asked, tone deceptively relaxed.

"No. I thought about it, and no." Hanzo shook his head. "I am not that man any more. But that was part of Talon's offer. I declined." His hand reached over his shoulder and touched the leather bag, reassuring himself it was there.

You sat back in your seat. You hadn't expected Talon to scout Hanzo Shimada, given that he had chosen a vagabond assassin lifestyle. "Why?"

"If I were to do anything with the family, I would want Genji at my side of his own volition. And he's chosen Blackwatch as his instrument of revenge."

That wasn't entirely accurate, but you weren't going to open that can of worms yet.

"And On Sing?"

"They apparently have a fixation on...rightful heirs. On Sing's formed a non-aggression pact with the clan, but some factions don't consider it a legitimate alliance if I don't agree to it." Hanzo frowned. "They are...very old-fashioned."

You digested that. "I've noticed." There was a long pause. "So what do you want from us?"

"I want to talk to my brother. I know he's willing to see me." There was a pause. "But he made his allegiances clear."

You shrugged at that. "What do you hope to accomplish?"

"I want to...make things right between us. I want to know if he thinks our family is worth saving. I am adrift, and by some miracle, my brother is alive, and of course I would seek him out."

"There better be a lot of groveling," you said casually, pouring yourself more tea. "And no snide comments about his cybernetics."

Gabriel snorted. "How do we know you don't just want to finish the job?"

Hanzo glared at you both. "He's my brother." You remembered Genji's repetition of that phrase, and how each time it had meant something a little different. You wondered what Hanzo was trying to say.

"And you tried to kill him. That argument holds no weight," Gabriel said. "What do you have to offer us?"

"Highly specialized knowledge on the Shimada, as well as data on both Talon and On Sing," Hanzo said. "And as your "Ammit" can attest to, I am excellent in a fight."

"You shot my agent once," Gabriel said, voice low.
"She stabbed me back twice." He held up his hand. "I think we're more than even."

Gabriel's face said otherwise.

"Partners, there are some shifty, heavily-armed folks coming down the cobblestones-" Jesse crackled in your ear.

"How many?" Gabriel asked.

"About six at the front door, half a dozen at the back."

"Ballsy. They're in our backyard," you scowled.

"We need to get clear on this area," Gabriel said to Hanzo. "Why did you neglect to tell us that Talon didn't take that rejection well?"

"...It was implied," Hanzo said sharply.

"The Japanese have an amazing amount of subtext." Lacroix stood, shaking out his paper. "Chanceux, with me." You slid off your stool, reaching for your pistol.

"I'll take Hanzo and meet up with Jesse. You and Lacroix leave first."

The door opened and a woman in a white duster walked in.

"That one's been tracking me since Singapore," Hanzo said, but you weren't looking at him.

Lao stood there, brown eyes wide as they fell on you. Her arm looked different, and she walked with an uneven gait. You wondered then if they'd cut more pieces off her, replacing flesh with controllable metal.

Lacroix kept his head turned away.

"I need her alive, Hanzo," you said as much to remind him as Gabriel. "That's not negotiable."

"Run," she hissed.

And then the front glass exploded inward, bullets streaming into the room. You hit the ground.

"Never mind that, we're all going out the rear exit," Lacroix amended.

Lacroix made a brisk beeline for the kitchen, turning to provide suppressing fire. Hanzo and Gabriel followed, and you drew your sidearm, shooting at the men with assault rifles and heavy winter coats.

"They're escaping out the back!" Lao shouted, and the shooting slowed, some of her backup breaking off to intercept. You shot down two men, and the gunfire stopped.

"Lucky, you need to get-" Lao started.

You shot her in the leg.

She flinched and staggered backward.
"Jesse, you got eyes on the boss and the brother?" You asked.

"They're pinned down. Can't get to them- Oh, wait. Wow. Didn't know you could do that with a bow and arrow."

You laughed dryly at that, eyes never leaving Lao. "You ready to come home, old friend?"

"Not going to be that simple, Lucky," Lao rasped as blood leaked out of her leg. She brought her pistol to her head. "I have contingencies."

"Lacroix is escorting Brother to a vehicle. Get out here and I'll get you your gear."

"Busy!" You leveled your pistol at Lao. "Hanzo just wiped out your boys. Drop your weapon."

"Can't," Lao said softly. "Want to. I really do. I wanted to come home so badly, Lucky."

You inhaled, because you were prepared for this. "Look here Bái Shé, with your massively inconvenient serpent protocol and your silly nomenclature. I'm your old friend Lucky Shot, secondary-priority termination after that buzzkill Gérard Lacroix. And I'm betting your life that achieving a priority-kill trumps your stupid self-destruct programming."

Lao's hands began to shake. "No. No, Lucky." She turned the pistol on you. "Serpent Protocol engaged."

You shot first, because you were a good friend and a better shot, and the pistol flew out of her hand. "Come on, Bái Shé. You have to do this up close and personal." You flexed your fingers, readying the pressure-injector.

She drew a knife from her belt and charged, moving faster than you expected with a bullet in the leg. You swatted her arm to the side, barely deflecting the first hit. She went to punch you with her metal fist, and you blocked that, but not the blade in her flesh hand. It slipped past your defenses, tore through your suit, and sunk into your stomach. It didn't hurt at first, and you gripped her wrist, blood bubbling from your mouth.

"No-" She exhaled, shaking her head. "No, what have you done-"

"Shhh, " you told her, hugging her around the neck. "It's OK. What's a little blood between friends?" You shifted, and you felt the blade move inside you, a wrenching pain tearing through your abdomen. Holding her against you, you pressed your prosthetic finger to her neck, needle plunging into her flesh with practiced ease.

Her eyes widened, and she pushed you backward, staggering. You dropped to your knees then, holding the knife in place. Yanking it out would only do more damage. Your blood leaked onto the floor, a soft pattering sound that echoed in your ears.

"It's OK, Lao. Let it go," you murmured. "I'm going to take you home, now. Just like I promised."

She reached for you.

The gunshots sounded from behind you then, as you tried to say comforting words, and the bullets struck Lao's torso. She fell, even as you screamed, blood splashing the checked floors.

You looked over your shoulder, gun raised, your arm wobbling as tried to draw a bead on her attacker.

Gabriel stood behind you, pistol smoking. He met your gaze, eyes wild. He said your name and you realized then that he'd seen her stab you. That he'd waited for you to get clear and-

"Oh Gabriel," you moaned. "No no no no no no." You dropped your gun, clutching your stomach as you crawled to Lao, her long white coat a steadily darkening study in pink, red, and rust.

Your breathing grew ragged and you couldn't look away from her too limp, too still form that continued to leak across the smooth hard floor.

"Lao, stay with me, Lao." Uneven breaths kept your voice low. "Lao. Lao."

You slipped in the warm stickiness, the knife going deeper as you fell onto your stomach. That didn't matter. Lao was so close. She was right there beside you, and you would not abandon her now. You reached for her hand. This was not how it was supposed to end. You promised your baby hacker you were going to take her home. You promised her.

Catching her cold metal fingers in your own, you tried to tell her that she wasn't alone, tried to tell her that you were here and it was going to be OK, tried to say that you'd made it this far, it was too late to turn back now. But your throat was too dry, and the words would not come. You could not move any farther; the strength had left your limbs. Your vision blurred and you laid your head against her arm, no longer able to tell your blood from hers.

Chapter End Notes

Edited that last scene so many times. I can't look at it any more.

So bad at job hunting. I just want to go up to people and say "HIRE ME DAMNIT. I AM SEMI-INTELLIGENT, CAPABLE, AND A FAST LEARNER. STOP PLAYING GAMES. LET'S DO THIS." It's like dating, but way more awkward and restrictive. Also, if there is sex involved, you might be doing it wrong.

Making Hainanese chicken rice tonight. Noms.
Chapter 33

Chapter Summary

The fallout from Operation Candle Arc has just begun.

Chapter Notes

Wow, you guys like cliffhangers.

ducks

See the end of the chapter for more notes

Once upon a time, you were an orphan in the ruins. And even if you grew into an outlaw and an outcast, you never quite shook that sense of loss from when everything that you were, everyone that you'd known, were lost in blood and flames.

Once upon a time, you were a soldier in a time of war. And even if you weren't very good at it, you loved your people: your captain, your hackers, and especially your lieutenant, in a way different from the rest. Then you lost it all again, like a careless child who hadn't learned how to take care of what was hers the first time around. And here you were again, given one last shot at saving your baby hacker. How many times were you going to make the same mistake?

"Lao." You opened your eyes with her name on your tongue and jolted sideways. You only moved an inch or so, hampered by the tangle of tubes and wires. Your prostheses weren't connected and you panicked for a moment. This wasn't your couch, just another unfamiliar bed: you tore at the blankets, hands too clumsy to disentangle yourself.

"Stop that."

You froze, turning your head.

Gabriel sat beside your bed, hands folded in his lap. He wore his hoodie and sweats, but no hat, and there were bags under his eyes and lines on his face.

"Lao," you said again, voice rusty.

"Water," Gabriel said, picking up a cup and placing the straw against your cracked lips. You drank without thinking, draining the cool sweet water in two gulps. "Slower. You'll make yourself sick."

The cold water hitting your stomach was a shock, and you winced, hand dropping to your
"You've been under for twenty seven hours. Angela had to do some internal work, sewing up your stomach. You took about five pints of the synthetic blood." Gabriel continued, voice rough. "The knife went into your stomach, but somehow missed everything else. You still went into shock and that complicated things, but you were goddamn fortunate."

"Lao," you said louder, breathing too hard.

Gabriel looked over at you, brows heavy and eyes hard. "Stop talking."

"Lao," you growled, gripping the side rails of the bed and pulling yourself upright. "What happened to Lao?"

"Goddamnit," Gabriel exhaled, jaw clenched. "You little idiot. You fucking fanatic. Just what the hell were you thinking?"

"Answer me, Gabriel." You clutched your stomach and glared at him. "Did you kill my hacker?"

"You mean did I shoot the Talon agent who fucking stabbed you? Who's put a bullet in you before? Ambushed you multiple times? Is that what you're asking?" Gabriel shouted back at you. "You saw me. I shot her down as soon as you were out of the way. And I'd do it again in a heartbeat to keep your ungrateful ass alive!"

"Drugged her," you snarled. "She wasn't a danger-"

"She damn near killed you!" Gabriel bellowed.

"She was one of mine!" You panted. "Operation Candle Arc was my-"

"You're off it. You're off Candle Arc. You're off Shit Spiders. You're goddamned suspended, agent, because I can't trust your judgment. Do you hear yourself?" Gabriel slammed his fist against the bedside table. "You're fucking obsessed."

"You can't do that," you said, even as you realized that of course he could. He was the Commander Reyes and you were a mere agent.

"Watch me," Gabriel said, eyes narrowed.

"Fuck you," you growled back. "I'm not your goddamn pet to put on a pedestal and swaddle in bubble wrap. I'm not your weak little plaything that you keep around to give you and Jack something to fuss over! I'm a fucking Blackwatch operative! You don't get to sideline me because you can't get your dominant tendencies under control!"

"That is enough, agent," Gabriel roared.

"I haven't even gotten started!" You screamed back.

"What the hell is going on here?" Angela stalked into the room, Jack hot on her heels. "Lucky, you're tearing up the tubes! Gabriel, you need to go-"

"You deal with her," Gabriel hissed through clenched teeth, pushing past Jack, and stalked out.

"Lucky, you need to relax," Angela said sharply. "Lay back down and-"
"What happened to Lao?" You shouted at Jack and he narrowed his eyes.

"Athena, what happened here?" He asked, as Angela kept trying to stick needles and tubes back under your skin.

"...Agent Strike has requested Bái Shé's status multiple times. However, Commander Reyes has revoked her clearance for Operation Candle Arc and Operation Shit Spiders, citing impending suspension."

Jack closed his eyes, taking a deep breath. "Lucky. Sweetheart. I know you're medicated. I know you're hurting pretty badly. But I heard some of what you said to Gabe and-"

"Jack. I need to know." You leaned back against the bed, arms shaking.

"-and you were completely out of line," Jack said, tightly. "He's spent the last day in the medical ward, and it isn't because he likes having a "pet" to "fuss over." Do you understand me, Lucky?" He met your gaze, jaw clenched, shoulders squared, and you recognized that Jack was angry too, you just didn't care. "Same goes for me. If I wanted a pet, I'd get a dog. At least they come when you call them."

You glared up at him.

"We're not having this discussion right now. We'll deal with it once you've recovered. So focus on that instead." Jack started to leave, and then he stopped and turned back around. "I'm really relieved that you're OK. Not happy about your attitude, but- " He sighed. "-But I'll take that over the alternative." His gave you a lopsided smile and you looked away, too many feelings churning inside you.

Part of you wanted to ask him to stay, because you were upset and didn't want to be alone, and the words hovered on your lips. But Angela was here and even though she knew about your relationships, you didn't want to do it in front of her. And Gabriel was out there probably throwing coffee mugs and terrorizing the rest of the base. The strength evaporated from you. Quietly, you laid back down in the bed, and rolled onto your side, facing away from Jack.

You closed your eyes tightly, face screwing up in a grimace. And while you knew you'd done a lot of damage with your words, all you could think of was your baby hacker, and whether or not she had bled out on the floor, believing she was going home.

Sometimes your own mind was your worst enemy. You laid there, knowing you were drugged, knowing you weren't thinking straight, but unable to stop. You knew you were being crazy, but that didn't help. It didn't stop the feelings.

The four AM despair was the worst, when the world was dark and bleak, and there was a rock in the pit of your stomach that simply knew things would never get any better, that everything was hopeless, and you couldn't do a damn thing about it. It didn't matter that your head was telling you that was all crazy talk. It didn't matter that on a purely intellectual level you knew better. You curled into yourself and tried to keep your sobs to a minimum because it fucking hurt to cry.

You couldn't stop seeing her. You were caught on an endless loop starting at Lao's horrified face when she saw that she'd stabbed you. Those wobbling steps backward. And then the blood blossoming from her abdomen. You tried to count the bullets. The number changed every time and you knew you couldn't quite trust your recollections. Gabriel had a pistol, not his shotguns. Two shots? She could have survived. Five shots? Probably not. And then you turned your head, looking over your shoulder, filled with anguish, ready to wreak vengeance on whoever hurt your baby hacker, and it was Gabriel standing there, gun in hand. Then you remember the knife lodged inside you, even if it was gone now, even if Angela sewed you up, you could feel its cold weight digging into your stomach before you hit the ground.

And then it started all over again.

There were flowers on the table when you awoke. You checked the tag and were slightly surprised to see they were from Agent Shoal and her unit.

"Knew you'd pull something stupid and get away by the skin of your teeth. Or stomach. Whatever. Keep up the good work! Remember, alcohol isn't solid food, so we should get drinks soon." You studied the arrangement, and while you were still mostly numb, the pink and white carnations, mixed with smaller buds, lifted your spirits just a little.

Wait...how did everyone know you got hurt?

"Athena?"

"Yes, Lucky."

"Is it common knowledge that I got gut-stabbed? And how?"

"...There is news footage of a bloody Commander Reyes rushing you to a transport. Your face isn't visible and you were unnamed, but around the base, yes, everyone knows."

You sighed. "Athena. Can you tell me--"

"Please don't ask me about the operations you were removed from. I cannot, no matter how much I might wish to."

"-tell me what time it is?" You continued, like you weren't ever intending to ask that of her.

"It is 1530 hours," she announced, sounding relieved.

"What kind of medication am I on?"

"Nanites, antibiotics, a Schedule I narcotic, and your birth control implant. Your IV drip contains a mix of electrolyte solution, nutrient mix, and your painkiller."

"Any estimated release date for me?"

"Dr. Ziegler wanted to keep you for a week, but that is contingent on how you heal."

"Will you tell Jesse and Genji I'm awake and asking for them?"

"Yes, but Lucky, the Commander has made the consequences of leaking information to you...very explicit."
You hissed then, hand dropping back to your stomach. Fuck Gabriel and fuck Jack. You weren't going to let a little thing like "clearances" stop you. "Am I suspended?"

"...No. Commander Reyes has removed you from the compartmentalized intelligence sectors, but he cannot suspend you without Captain Amari's approval and/or a hearing in front of a review board."

"All right," you said. You could work with that. Somehow. Your head was woozy, and you closed your eyes. "Thank you, Athena."

"I will be here," she said.

"Yeah, me too," you muttered.

"Hey there," Jesse peeked in. "You're a sight for sore eyes." He came inside, Genji trailing behind him. Both men looked out of place in the whitewashed room, all sterile tech and terribly boring paintings. The flowers Shoal sent were the nicest thing in here.

"Can't tell me a thing, can you?" You had recovered your prostheses and felt more like yourself.

Jesse looked at the floor. "I ain't scared of him but-"

But Jesse might be a smidge more loyal to Gabriel than you. Which was fair. You shrugged. "I get it. And Genji's gotta play nice if we want him to deal favorably with Hanzo." You shook your head, not sure how far you could press your friendships. You were calmer now and you knew you'd already wreaked havoc with Jack and Gabriel, maybe you should be more circumspect.

"Oh, someone got you flowers? Who's Agent Shoal?" Jesse perked up.

"Ran Operation Cobblestone Dust with her. She was very impressed by my Blackwatch professionalism."

"Seriously?" Jesse asked.

"Well, my skills. Not my professionalism."

"Yeah, that sounds more accurate," Jesse sat down and Genji leaned against the wall.

"I'm assuming everyone in our squad made it out OK?" You said.

"Yeah," Jesse said. "...Commander's in a mood though."

You shrugged. There wasn't much you needed to add. Jesse and Genji knew what happened. They could piece it together.

"...Where's Ziv?" You asked after a moment, because maybe you'd expected him to at least make an appearance. Maybe eat a cheeseburger and some cake in front of you. Mock you about how you failed to dodge. Laugh at you, because you couldn't get out of the bed to throttle him.

"...Ziv has been banned from the medical wing. He uh...loudly declared that Lao was your friend, and you should know the truth, and anyone who said otherwise was "a sadistic, emotionally-retarded, pig-shit that needed a cran-i-o-dectomy-" Jesse paused, trying to remember the exact phrasing. "To yank their overly thick skulls out of their military-enhanced sphincters," and he didn't get any further because Lacroix physically dragged him out of the room before anyone else could react." Jesse gave you a small smile. "I think it was his finest moment yet."

"...Huh," was all you could say to that. "Athena...you don't happen to have that exchange recorded, do you?"

"Unfortunately, if that exchange occurred, it is classified under Operation Candle Arc."

"...Damn." You looked at Genji who seemed bored. "Had some bonding time with your brother yet?"

"No."

You waited for an explanation, until you realized that he wasn't going to add anything else.

"Well, I'm great," you said. "Going a little crazy, full of drugs, and left in suspense about the outcome of the most important op I've run in months, but yeah. Angela might let me eat pudding in a day or two. Pudding, guys."

"...Ain't nothing wrong with puddin', sourpuss," Jesse laughed.

"That wasn't sarcasm. I'm living on liquids right now. It's awful," you said.

"Well, when you get back, we can go drinking, and Genji already agreed to come along.
It'll be fun," Jesse ruffled your hair.

"Really?" You glanced over at Genji.

"...Yes." Genji sighed, looking world-weary and regretful of every decision he'd ever made, especially agreeing to go out with Jesse and you.

"Sounds great," you said. Because you planned to have an answer about Lao long before you left the infirmary.

You awoke to your nerves prickling, and when you opened your eyes, you saw Lacroix sitting beside you in the dark.

"Relax, I am watching over you."

"You're fucking creepy," you rasped and he laughed at that.

"Good to see you haven't lost your vitriol, Chanceux. I was worried that might have leaked out with most of your blood."

"I swear I'll strangle you with these tubes if you're here to give me shit about Candle Arc."

Lacroix handed you a cup of water and you took it, sipping slowly. "No, Chanceux. I am out here in the doghouse with you, as they say. And what happened in Lucerne is obviously not
"Wow, that might make you the first CO I've spoken to who feels that way," you set the water down. "Why are you here in the middle of the night? Because that is seriously creepy."

He shrugged. "Wanted to check on my favorite student."

"So you visited Ziv and figured you'd hit the infirmary on the way back?"

Lacroix laughed softly at that. "I am sorry that I was not there. We were supposed to take her together."

You replayed the events in your head. Lacroix had escorted Hanzo and Gabriel had come back for you and-

"... Couldn't be helped." You looked at him, squinting. "Is that a black eye?"

"Oh, you did notice." Lacroix gave that infuriating shrug. "I'd hoped you would not."

"Gabriel?" Well, that explained the late night visit, if he was avoiding a pissed off super soldier or two.

"Jack," Lacroix said, after a moment. "Apparently, we neglected to tell anyone our contingency plan if your Lao decided to take the suicide route. So when he asked and I told him, yes, we did plan on serving as bait... well, you can extrapolate."

"It was kind of obvious," you said dryly. "I mean, we were the priority targets. Just reroute that and-"

"Yes, I thought so too. But soldiers, Chanceux."

"And it wasn't like I was planning on getting stabbed. I was too focused on getting my shot in. She pulled a one-two and-" You sighed, hand drifting to your bandages. "You can't tell me anything either, can you?"

"Non." Lacroix actually looked sheepish. "But you don't need me to tell you, Chanceux. You're a clever girl. You have your ways."

You sat there a moment. "You know I'm drugged to the gills, right?"

"You must be, to think you have gills, Chanceux." Lacroix crossed his legs in a figure four. "I can empathize. Sitting in bed for so long made me stir crazy. But it gave me time to catch up on all the nuances of my paperwork. Terribly boring stuff, but necessary."

You narrowed your eyes. "I see." And you did. Being petty paid off. You knew exactly what he was talking about.

"Do you?" He sounded delighted. "I see someone sent you flowers. They don't know you very well, do they?"

"Overwatch people. It was a nice thought," you said. "Though I guess I can't eat them, not with my stomach like this."

"Chanceux, you do not eat flowers, except at overly-sentimental restaurants," Lacroix sniffed.
"Yeah well, wasn't sure what they were for. Never actually got a flower arrangement before. It's novel. I mean, it's total waste of money. You drop a bunch of money for something that'll be dead in days. Yeah it looks pretty, but then-"

"You have no romance in your soul," Lacroix sighed. "The transience is the whole point. The fact they do not last makes them more beautiful. That someone "wasted" money to gift you with temporal beauty, fully aware that it was a frivolous purchase, is the point of the entire process."

"...I'd rather have cake," you muttered. But now that he'd explained it, you kind of saw his point.

"Yes, but you cannot eat cake right now, and having to stare at it would just be cruel, non? Enjoy your flowers, Chanceux. Maybe someday after that you will be able to appreciate poetry. Nothing too long, and only ones that rhyme, but it is a start."

"Fuck off," you said, giving him the side eye.

Lacroix just flashed his shit-eating grin. "Bon soir, Chanceux. Enjoy the drudgery of paperwork."

You'd gotten the hint the first time around. You just had to wiggle around some of the restrictions.

"Bon soir, Lacroix," you said, enjoying how he winced at your accent.

Gabriel despised hospitals with the intimate hatred of someone who had spent too much time in their confines. Even in Overwatch, with cutting edge tech and friendly, competent doctors, he hated the smell, not just the astringents and infections, but the desperation. Hospitals hosted a bitter lottery of tragedy and triumph. He been an involuntary participant many times, and found that experience did not make it any easier. He had no tolerance for the agony of waiting, for any news, good or bad.

Bowing his head, Gabriel forced himself to remain motionless. Jesse, Mihret, and Gérard were here. Mihret did enough pacing for all of them, muttering curses or prayers -one could never tell with him - under his breath. Gérard sat impassively, eyes occasionally flicking between the doors. Jesse leaned against the wall, foot tapping softly on the floor, this was taking entirely too long.

"Sorry about the delay. Petras needed something," Jack spat the name, and Gabriel's teeth clenched when he thought about the bureaucrat. It was only Jack's pointed reminder that had kept him calm the other night. They had just gotten you to acknowledge that you were leaving your belongings in their quarters. Expressing possessive anger would only spook you.

He looked up to see Jack, still in full uniform, holding out a steaming traveler's cup and a paper bag. "Ana dropped it off before heading out to deal with a situation in Haikou. I was supposed to go, but-"

"Thanks," Gabriel exhaled and took the drink. It was tea, of course, but he didn't care. He scooted over on the bench and Jack sat down beside him.

"Why don't you go get a shower and change clothes? I'll wait here." Jack rested his hand on Gabriel's shoulder.

Gabriel looked down at his torn up suit. Stiff with blood, he knew there was no point in trying to salvage it.

"You smell like deer season," Jack said firmly. "Just go rinse off. I'll stay."

"Yeah, all right." Gabriel stood, legs stiff.

He didn't miss Jesse's sigh of relief or the fact Mihret was staring at his ass. But he didn't care either.

---

"So wait, explain this plan to me, Gérard." Jack had managed to banish Mihret and McCree from the waiting area, giving Athena instructions to update them as soon as there was news. But Gérard lingered, stony-faced. "I was reviewing the documents for Candle Arc. You and Lucky never actually specified how you were going to get around the self-destruct command."

Gérard sighed deeply, a full-body motion that conveyed both weariness and mild disdain for the question he'd been asked. "...I thought it was obvious, Jack."

"If it was obvious, I wouldn't be asking, would I?" Jack said coldly. Yes, the answer looked obvious when one took the time actually read the exceptionally dry report Lacroix had prepared. But Jack wanted to make sure there were no misunderstandings. "Cut the crap, Gérard. I don't have the patience for your elusive half-truths and run-around answers. Just say it."

"Bái Shé had two priority targets. The erroneously named "Lucky Shot" and myself. I was going to serve as the distraction, in case the bad naming interfered with her protocols." Gérard leaned backward in his chair. "There was no guarantee she wouldn't kill herself, but we figured that we'd be the priorities. Logically, if they were going to lose her anyway, they'd want her to take out me or Lucky, especially if she was prone to committing suicide over carrying out the hit."

Jack inhaled sharply, a little surprised that Gérard had been so blunt. "You were going to turn her assassination program on yourselves?"

"Well, me, but-"

Gérard never saw him move. One moment, Jack was sitting on the bench, arms crossed, the next he was standing over Gérard, fist smarting. Gérard lay on the floor, chair toppled, holding his face.

"You fucking idiot. You think we can afford to lose either of you? You two assholes thought it would be a good idea to play bait for an experimental cyborg assassin and leave those details out of your mission plan? What the hell is wrong with you?" Jack snarled, fists still clenched.

Gérard blinked. "We thought it was obvious enough. Her priority targets were clearly stated in the mission briefing."
Jack worked his jaw, grinding his teeth, the connections forming in his head. "Did you suggest that to her?" His fists tightened, and he reminded himself that the Strike Commander could not be seen beating up a subordinate in the goddamn medical center.

Gérard, that fucking bastard, had the nerve to laugh as he climbed back to his feet. "Chanceux isn't stupid, Jack. She realized it on her own. I told her I'd be the lure; we were supposed to take her together, me with my irresistible charm, Chanceux with her concealed drugs." Dusting off his suit, the spy shook his head. "But it didn't go that way."

Jack had already read the post-mission summaries submitted by McCree and Gérard. He'd pieced the sequence of events together from those and Gabriel's messages. It wasn't Gérard's fault, he knew that. His anger slipped away, replaced by a heavy exhaustion.

"For such a genius, you're a fucking idiot sometimes," Jack exhaled, and sat back down. "Gabe's going to find out eventually, but I'm not going to tell him, and you'd be wise to stay out of his way for awhile."

Gérard rubbed his cheek. "Thank you."

"...Was it your idea or hers to keep it quiet?" Jack asked after a moment.

"I don't remember," Gérard said so calmly, Jack knew he'd get nothing. "But it was probably my fault. Of course, Chanceux is in such an awkward position, trying to do her job and placate her lovers. The balance isn't there yet."

"You really don't want to continue down that line of conversation," Jack said tightly, taking off his gloves. "I think you should leave now."

"I'll be by later then." Gérard retreated gracefully, and Jack began to wonder if having you train under him was a mistake after all.

The walls of compartmentalization were fracturing now, and Jack braced himself for the onslaught of anxiety and anger that came with every trip to the infirmary. He sat back down, staring at his empty hands. Why the hell couldn't you be more careful? How close were you going to cut it? And what if-

Angela was good at her job. Gabriel had done everything right. You were healthy and stubborn as fuck. Jack silently reminded himself of these things in a slow, artificially calm loop. Because it wouldn't do to lose his cool now. Gabriel still needed him.

"Wasn't worried at first," Gabriel said, one leg pressed against Jack's. "She's handled Bái Shé before. But then I came back and she dodged the punch only to get stabbed. And you know what that idiot did? She fucking hugged the-" Gabriel stopped, realizing what had happened. "She fucking hugged and drugged the target. Didn't realize it at the time. Doesn't matter now." Gabriel rested his face in his hand. Jack rubbed circles on his back.

"You got her out alive, Gabe. That's what matters," Jack said, eyes on the operating room door.

"Yeah." Gabriel leaned against Jack, shoulders touching. His mouth was too dry and he coughed a few times, clearing his throat. You should not have stayed back by yourself. Hanzo should have been more careful. He should have left Hanzo to Gérard, made sure you had backup. The thoughts flitted through his mind on repeat, even though he knew, from an operational standpoint, he had done everything right.

"Sometimes I forget how dogged she is," Jack said softly. "Takes the mission-first thing to heart, but is so deceptively flippant that you think she's just goofing off, until the shooting starts."

"Yeah, she's learning some shit from Gérard," Gabriel rubbed his forehead. "The whole time we were there, she was eating desserts, making silly small talk, and hinting we should go out with you incognito. I thought at first she was just giddy at the prospect of dressing up and getting cake. Almost reprimanded her on the spot, but she was so damn happy, I couldn't bring myself to crush that. Didn't want to give Shimada that impression of Blackwatch. It took me a moment to realize she was finessing him, almost like Gérard does. Not quite as smoothly, but the same principles: good manners, genuine enthusiasm, and attentive hosting. All to put the target at ease and persuade them to act civilly."

"Huh." Jack raised a brow. "Are you sure she wasn't just worried that you two would come to blows? Especially given what he did to Genji?"

"...That too. I've heard her interact with him. They needled each other a lot in Hong Kong. But this time she was on good behavior and it worked."

"Wouldn't mind going out for a meal with you two. Dressing up. Wearing a bag over my head since apparently I'm too hideously ugly to be seen in public with you."

Gabriel smiled, in spite of himself. Jack was good at distractions. "She said your hair was too distinct."

"I'll shave my head," Jack said smugly.

"You wouldn't." Gabriel narrowed his eyes. "All that ridiculous hair covers your weird lumpy skull."

"Fuck you," Jack scowled.

"I know I have pictures somewhere. Bumpy Buzzcut Morrison." Gabriel smiled wistfully, a lump in his throat. "You ever thought it was going to turn out like this?"

"No, I thought you were going to forget about me after I got shipped off to Lisbon. Figured you'd meet someone else more interesting, become a famous, and settle down, maybe get kids." Jack scratched his head.

"...You were always on my mind," Gabriel breathed.

"Mine too." Jack exhaled slowly. "Things got rocky sometimes. They still do. We're both pretty hard on each other." Jack grinned at him over his shoulder. "Didn't think bringing a third person would help."

"Didn't always," Gabriel sighed.

"...This is different."

"Yeah." Gabriel's voice roughened. "I don't even remember shooting Bái Shé. And Lucky, the way she sounded, Jack, so torn up: it was like we were back at Black Base Delta." Gabriel had to take a breath at that. He'd carried you out the snow bleeding and drifting out of consciousness before. He would do it as many times as it took.

"You got her out then. You got her out this time too."

"She managed to pull her gun on me, dropped it when she saw who did the shooting, but-" Gabriel's tongue was thick in his mouth, and he shuddered. "The way she said my name. Like I'd broken her heart. And then that idiot crawled across the floor with a fucking knife in her gut-" Sometimes talking about trauma didn't make him feel better. Sometimes it made it more real, and Gabriel couldn't bring himself to finish that sentence.

"She's going to be fine," Jack said, gently. "She's been strangled, blown up, shot, and there was that weird thing with the toaster that she still won't explain. You kept her stabilized. You left the weapon in place. You got her here fast. You did everything right. She's strong. She's healthy. She's stubborn as fuck."

"Yeah, you're right," Gabriel breathed, remembering just how fixated you were on that hacker of yours. And he dreaded what would come next.

Jack stood outside your infirmary room, hand on his forehead. What a goddamn mess. Gabe had stormed out. You were giving him the silent treatment. He didn't want to leave you alone, not like this, but then Gabriel was sleep-deprived, running on fumes, and now enraged. You couldn't get out of bed and that limited the trouble you could get up to, especially since Gabriel had...

Fuck.

"Athena, where is Commander Reyes?"

"He made a few stops and is now moving toward the Officer Quarters."

That was a relief. Gabriel would set up the mats and they'd punch it out. Hell, Jack was feeling the pinch, his blood still churning from your harsh words. Plaything? Pet? Was that how you really felt? He crossed his arms, forcing himself to think rationally. You were in pain. You were on drugs. And Gabriel under stress was rarely diplomatic. It wasn't a good combination.

"He has...issued a statement about Agent Strike's clearances and put a gag order on all information pertaining to Operation Candle Arc." Athena sounded hesitant.

Jack groaned.

"I would appreciate it if you did not come in and upset my patient. That goes double for Gabriel," Angela said as she exited the room.

"Is she-?"

"I hit her painkiller button. If she's not asleep yet, she will be soon," Angela said.

"I'll go then. You're not...banning us, are you?" Jack tried to make it sound like a joke. It fell flat.
"Behave," was all Angela said, before turning on her heel.

Well, that solved that. He would come back later, try to talk to you when things had calmed down. Your clearances could wait; Gabriel would not.

"Commander Reyes has entered your quarters."

"Thank you, Athena."

"Commander...did you want to restrict Agent Strike's clearances?" Athena asked.

"...For now," Jack said. "Just the compartmentalized ones. Don't-" Jack massaged his forehead. "Don't pull her permanently. Just revoke authorization till further notice."

"Understood, sir."

Jack didn't think an AI could sound quite that disappointed, and he chalked it up to projection.

Gabriel lay on his back on the mat, eyes firmly shut. He pulled off his sweat-soaked shirt. He was running too hot again, from both exertion and fury. Everything hurt and he was still angry, but the blinding rage had drained out of him.

"Well, at least she's OK," Jack sighed, rolling over next to him. "Physically, anyway."

"What the hell happened?" Gabriel snapped, anger giving way to outrage. "I knew she was stuck on this, but I didn't realize she was psychotic!"

"...Are you kidding? She's been obsessed with this from the get-go. Remember Shanghai? Cambridge? Chumak?"

Gabriel swore. "Should've pulled her after Chumak. She's too fucking close, Jack."

"Yeah, I know." Jack pulled himself up, switching on the emitter before he dropped back down with a groan. "Gotta remember though, she was drugged and in pain. Both those factors make people say things they don't mean."

"...All she did was ask about Bái Shé. I tried to get her to drink, to calm down-" Gabriel didn't give a shit about Bái Shé. She'd made herself a threat, and he'd dealt with it. He wasn't going to be sorry for saving your goddamn life.

"Gabe, you told her you'd shoot her friend again in a heartbeat. That wasn't going to calm her down. I know you were on edge, and sleep-deprived." Jack reached out, gripping Gabriel's hand.

Gabriel took it, not quite ready for Jack to tell him where he went wrong. "Just let me vent. Give me the armchair general analysis later."

"She was definitely being a crazy bitch," Jack said, blowing out a breath. "No question about it. But I doubt she meant those things. Still, you should've just told her."

Gabriel gritted his teeth. "No, because then she'd-"

"You're right. Maybe waiting is best." Jack rolled onto his side, gently rubbing Gabriel's shoulders. "Angela sedated her after you left. I backed you up and she's mad at me too. Turned over, gave me her back, and wouldn't talk to me."

"How the hell is she such a fucking brat?" Gabriel had fought with you before. You'd been a petulant shit, but you'd never gone this far.

"You're kidding, right?" Jack laughed. "She's always been vicious. Remember that former comm officer she shuffled off Antarctica? And how she keeps "losing" his transfer requests, even though they're not even Blackwatch documents? Remember that traitorous In-Sec agent she brought in, after she'd beaten him up? We both know about Chumak. And hell, when you did Chung, she was half a step behind you. I'm pretty sure she leaked Jones and Cooper's sexual misconduct reprimands to their respective parents; can't prove it, but it happened, and that seems like something she'd do." Jack wheezed out a laugh. "And, surely you noticed that Mihret is such a goddamn pain in the ass because he's emulating her. That woman has fully embraced your lessons on being petty and applied them masterfully."

"She's not that bad," Gabriel muttered. He wasn't that bad either.

"I'm not complaining. None of us are angels. But she's always had a soft spot for you, Gabe, and vice versa. Just because you missed the fact that she's fully capable of being an intransigent jackass, doesn't mean that I did. You finally got between her and something she holds terribly important, so don't be surprised when she lashes out."

Gabriel clenched his teeth. "That idiot-"

Jack wiped the sweat off his brow. "Yeah, I know."

"She could've-" Gabriel knew he had transitioned into angry streams of Spanish by Jack's bemused, but affectionate expression.

"I know," Jack said solemnly. "But either one of us would have done the same."

"...Not the point, Jack."

Jack rested his head on Gabriel's shoulder. "Guess not. You serious about pulling her from both Candle Arc and Shit Spiders?"

"I don't know," Gabriel said after a moment. Because if he was going to be honest, there weren't enough people working on Shit Spiders. He could clear Vo or Tataryn, but neither of them did very well with paperwork. "She's not-"

"She won't forgive you," Jack said, closing his eyes. "And she's not the only stubborn crazycake in my life."

Gabriel snorted. "Ana won't like being called "stubborn." You know how she gets."

"Yeah, whatever. Just listen to me. Don't dig your heels in now. Give her some space. She needs time to calm down, and really, did you have to go terrorize everyone in Blackwatch? Because we could have deescalated this just by letting McCree or Mihret tell her."
"She thinks she knows better and she's two steps away from going rogue-"

"That's all Blackwatch agents," Jack muttered. "Remember that whole list of things we actively decided not to do, because she's feral and you didn't want to scare her off? Don't be overly possessive and smother her. Don't terrorize her friends. Don't talk about kids unless she brings it up. This kind of reaction is one of those things."

"Damn it Jack, I'm not the one out of control. The other night with her bombshell about Petras, I kept my cool." Gabriel grit his teeth. He'd wanted nothing more than to make a discrete trip to New York, bring Jack along, and then they could flay that goddamn piece of shit alive. Gabriel knew exactly how to cut the skin off someone, and just how much force it took to detach the epidermis from the body.

"We both did," Jack said, kissing his neck.

"This is different. She almost died." Gabriel kept seeing you sprawled out on that floor, smeared in blood. "I just want to shake some sense into her."

"Kandahar," Jack said softly and Gabriel flinched.

"It's not like that. I didn't-" Gabriel closed his eyes. He wasn't proud of how he'd acted in Kandahar. Even if he had been on edge, it didn't excuse his behavior.

"And you won't," Jack said, calloused fingers massaging Gabriel's aching shoulders. "You just have to dial it back. Give yourself time to process it. Don't fight with her when she's like this. Nobody will win."

"She's the one who-" Gabriel scowled.

"I know. But don't do anything drastic, OK?" Jack placed a finger on his lips. "She's not thinking straight and the two of us need to be. Give her space, Gabe. We're all here. We survived. It's going to be fine."

"And when she finds out...?" Gabriel sighed, because while he knew Jack was right, he couldn't just let it go.

"...Then I guess we'll have another fight on our hands."

Chapter End Notes

I'm finally over the sinus infection. But I don't want to do adult things any more. Taxes, job hunt, go to the store again... BOOOOOOO. :P
Chapter 34

Chapter Summary

The fallout continues. At least you have friends.

Chapter Notes

We've passed the 3 month anniversary. Yeesh. What have I done?

OK guys, I swear you like it when I write horrible things. Which is a little alarming, but I can't judge, considering I wrote it. -_-;;

But you get an earlier, kind of long update because you were all so full of feels and guilted the shit out of me.

**

So I've gotten a lot of questions about everyone's ages. And you can protest in the comments, but considering I've just passed 300k words on this in my draft files, it's a bit late to change anything, you know? But here's the reference and the reasoning.

So, I know that I messed up the timeline, but I'm going from a couple different sources and pictures, and it's hard to tell what's what. Example: There's that picture of most of the Overwatch (pre-fall) team accepting medals during a UN ceremony. It includes Tracer and a very blonde Jack Morrison. Read the comics though, and he's got white hair and a receding hairline while she's a new cadet right before the London Uprising. So I was like "...fuck. WHAT DO I DO?" (I left out Tracer for that reason, because the comic felt more canon.)

Then the Overwatch wiki lists Ana as one year younger than Reinhardt, even though I thought she was closer to Jack and Gabriel's age. Again, that damn picture has a very white-haired Reinhardt and a very dark-haired Ana. So at first I figured Reinhardt was 10-15 years older than them.

Long story short: I got confuzzled.

So:

Jack and Gabriel are early-mid thirties. I assumed Jack was younger than Gabriel, but I don't know if that's canon.

Ana is late thirties-early forties.

Reinhardt & Torby are mid-late forties.

Jesse, Genji, and Ziv are early twenties.

Hanzo, Angela and Amélie are mid-twenties.

Winston is in his early teens.
Personally, I picture Lucky mid-late twenties, however it's a read-insert. You do you.

As for Moira, I'd already plotted out too much of the story before she dropped so, adding her now isn't quite going to work with what I've written, and I low-key referenced killing some geneticists post-Shanghai Noon. So take that how you want. (Moira dead. Moira running around conducting unethical experiments on dl. Moira running Oasis. Whatevs.)

I would have loved to include Liao, but I'm not actually sure what s/he looks like. If you google Liao Overwatch, there are a few candidates, and I thought it was the guy on the left, but the wiki says it is not. While I had enough background to make a fun Lacroix, I didn't feel like I had enough information to generate a good Liao. Which makes me sad, because I would have liked to write him/her/whatever. (I DIDN'T WANT TO LEAVE OUT A CHINESE CHARACTER.) Lol, watch them not be Chinese.

See the end of the chapter for more notes

You didn't have a tablet, and you suspected no one was going to bring you one. Lacroix had shut the door on his way out and you lay there, mind racing.

"Athena."

"Yes, Lucky?"

"I want to check up on some records." While lying in your hospital bed, alone, in the dark. Not shady at all.

"Of course," Athena said so politely, you knew she had misgivings.

"If...it violates the clearances, just say so. I won't ask that particular question again."

There was a long moment. "I will do whatever I can to help."

You closed your eyes. "I want to check up on the...fuck." You could never remember the form number. You'd have to go by title. "The Technological Evidence Loan forms." You did the math. This was Day Two going on Day Three of your Infirmary Incarceration. "Any acquisitions in the past two days sent to Winston, Torby, and/or Angela."

"...There was one," Athena said.

"OK," you said, nodding. "All right. I want to check up on Technological Evidence Permanent Confiscation forms. Were there any acquisitions in the past two days sent to the same recipients?"

"...Yes. Two."

Damnit. You wracked your brain trying to figure out how to narrow down the parameters without brushing up against clearances. "...Were Winston, Angela, and/or Torby required to personally retrieve any of the items from the Technological Evidence Permanent Confiscation form?"

"No."
"Good." You could do this on a tablet, once you got a hold of one, but having Athena give it to you Twenty Questions style was faster. "Did any of them do the one item from the Technological Evidence Loan form?"

"...Yes," Athena said.

You smiled. "OK, one more question. If I decided to be a super destructive jerk, and had to be restrained for my own good, is ICU holding cell B available for me?"

"I cannot answer that," Athena said.

And you laughed, because you'd figured it out, and because they'd brought Lao back alive. Now she just had survive long enough for you to get to her.

You heard Reinhardt and Torby tramping down the halls, long before you saw them. By the time they arrived, you were pretty sure Angela was going to throw them out, but then you saw what they were carrying.

Torby, face pinched, slammed a vase of daisies on the window sill, splashing water everywhere. He spun around and handed you a large reindeer plush. It was almost two feet tall with stiff bristled hair and a very detailed face. Did reindeer normally look angry? You weren't sure.

"Not a word, Lucky," Torby said.

"...Thank you? That's two words."

"Lucia made me, because that oaf can't keep his mouth shut."

"Lucky Lady!" Reinhardt boomed as he ducked through the door. You watched as he dragged several ribbons behind him. He yanked them and a dozen multicolored balloon appeared, bumping the ceiling. "You are feeling better?"

"Now that you guys are here." You watched as the balloons lazily bounced around the room, lightly bopping Reinhardt in the head. "You didn't have to do all this. I was just going to lay here and gradually go mad from boredom."

"Then I am glad I talked Torby into coming along." Reinhardt smiled widely, and set another vase of a two dozen yellow and pink roses on the table. "I would have brought you currywurst, but Angela insists that you cannot have any." He dropped an enormous bear in the visitor's chair. It was at least four feet tall and looked very soft.

You gaped at the offerings.

"Don't be that impressed. He just likes carrying toys around," Torby snorted.

"Well, Gérard said you needed cheering up," Reinhardt said in the loudest stage whisper you'd ever heard. "He said you liked flowers, but I thought why stop there? Balloons and plush toys are so much more fun."

Your face froze in a rictus grin. Fucking Lacroix and his goddamn meddling.
Torby sighed at your expression, realizing that you hadn't requested anything of the sort. "That slimy-"

"It's all very lovely," you said, reassuringly. "I uh...never thought to ask for things."

Reinhardt looked around, his gaze fell on the carnations from Shoal's squad. He picked it up, frowning as he read the card. "Is this from...Agent Shoal?" He narrowed his eyes. "Did no one else send flowers? Even your-"

You sighed, shaking your head. "I uh...don't want to talk about it right now."

"Leave it alone, Rein," Torby said, because he had to know already.

Reinhardt's nostrils flared. "Lucky-" He began indignantly. "People should always receive flowers. There doesn't need to be a reason. But when you're stuck in the bed like this, they're even more important."

"That makes sense," you said cautiously.

"Smell!" Reinhardt shoved the vase of roses into your face and you sniffed, the soft fragrance tickling your nose.

"Very nice," you said.

Reinhardt pulled them back, taking a moment to inhale. Then he set them on the table next to the carnations. "Do you want to hold the bear?"

"...Sure," you said, because it did look really soft, and watching Reinhardt carry around a teddy bear was good for your soul.

Reinhardt happily presented the bear to you, and it was downy soft. It was also huge and wouldn't fit in your bed. It was so big, you could cut it open, stuff Torby inside, and then add more stuffing.

You hugged it experimentally, and it had just the right amount of give. "This is really nice."

Torby glowered at both you and Reinhardt. "You look ridiculous."

"But happy," Reinhardt said. "And that is what matters." He punctuated that sentence with a firm, satisfied nod.

"The reindeer is very cool too," you said, holding it up. You had one other stuffed animal, but thinking of Jack and the fox made you grit your teeth. True, Maggie had given it to you, but it was forever linked with Jack. "I don't know how I'm going to get this all back to my room."

Reinhardt beamed at you, and for a few minutes, you forgot your troubles.

The fact you nearly died did not bother you as much as it should have. Because you'd gotten Lao back. Maybe that was indicative of your state of mind, and in retrospect, possibly unhealthy. But even if you had to sit in this hospital bed and eat flavorless gelatinized mush for another week, you did not regret it.
It happened fast. And other, newer scars topped the your fears about mortality. Because you understood the path you had undertaken. You were facing a political conspiracy that killed most of your friends. You were facing a shadowy terrorist organization that had technology you'd never dreamed of. You were also facing independent killer robots that might eventually ask for citizenship. You knew there was a good chance you wouldn't make it out of this alive. What mattered was your people.

Even the dead ones.

This wasn't new behavior. You blamed Captain Patel and Shin. Early on, you didn't even notice you were doing it, till Lao pointed it out. And being a newly-minted soldier, you didn't handle it as gracefully as you could have.
Lao grinned, showing off the gap between her front teeth. "Heh."

You shook your head, because Nwazue would definitely not put up with that kind of behavior from you. Of course, Lao was the baby of the squad, and given the fact she was sweet, everyone went a little easier on her. Even you.

"It's just we're fighting evil robots, and everyone else is tougher than me."

"We're fighting evil robots; we need someone smart enough to shut them down in their tracks. But we have you, so we're making do." Nwazue went back to her book, rolling her eyes.

"Hey!"

Shin opened the door carrying a twelve pack of beer. "Your supplier came through," he said, giving you a warm smile.

"Well, yes. I am an import-export specialist."

"You were an import-export specialist. Now you're a certified badass." Shin put the beer on the floor next to the table. "Aww, what's wrong, Lao?" He asked when he saw her expression.

"She's upset that she has the weakest physical combat skills in the squad," Nwazue said, not pulling any punches.

Shin shook his head at the demolitionist's characteristic bluntness.

"I just don't want to be a liability," Lao said earnestly. She hopped off your legs. "Even the rookie can kick my ass! And she shoots better too. It's not fair!"

"You were the rookie till Lucky joined up," Shin said, grabbing a beer. "And I never thought you were incompetent."

Lao's face lit up at the compliment. "I just figured if we got a new squad member I'd get to be big sister, and teach them things, and boss them around, and mess with them like everyone does to me-"

"She's an only child," Shin said to you as an explanation.

You shrugged. "I've come to realize this doesn't actually have anything to do with me, personally."

"See, she's even more mature than me!" Lao sighed heavily. "Sorry, Lucky. I'm not trying to make you feel bad."

"Oh good, if you're not trying to hurt my feelings, then that makes it all better." You laughed at Lao's horrified face.

"I didn't, did I?!" She gripped your hands, eyes wide. "Lucky!" Her eyes narrowed as you started laughing. "Why are you so mean?!" Her voice went high and squeaky.

Shin sat on the arm of the sofa. "You got a reason for this sudden fixation on combat effectiveness? We can do more sparring and shooting drills if you like."

"...I don't like. But I will," Lao said, running her fingers through her pixie cut. "And I don't just want to beat Lucky, I want to trounce you!"

"Who doesn't?" Nwazue muttered.

"What did I do?" Shin asked, eyes wide. He was genuinely bewildered.

"I see how you put me in the back on combat runs. Valdez will immediately stand in front of me when the shooting starts. Lucky will casually cover my six, because sometimes I'm bad at paying attention to my surroundings. Nwazue blows up anyone who shoots at me. And you never let me scout ahead, even though my drones have great sensors."

"You do realize that anyone shooting at you is usually shooting at the rest of us, correct?" Nwazue asked.

"I'm saying that I notice how you guys have to take extra care of me and then pretend like nothing's happened!"

There was a moment of awkward silence. Because no one actually wanted to confirm that, nor did you want to lie to her.

"Protect your support troops," you said. "Or you're f*cked. It's not personal; it's good strategy."

"You liar! " Lao yelled, outrage putting heavy emphasis on both words.

"It's what we do. You and Simon need the most defense. You get it. We're a team. We need you to do a lot of things we can't. So yes, we do take special care of you, Lao. And it is personal, because none of us want to see anything happen to you," Shin said soothingly. He put a hand on her shoulder. "Even Nwazue."

Lao's eyes widened and her lower lip began to tremble. "That's not fair, Shin!"

"And here we go again," Nwazue sighed.

"Then you'll get extra sparring and shooting practice, and you'll be too tired to play video games and start impromptu dance parties in your room."

"Fine. I'll get better and then I'll show the rookie how it's done. And once I'm really good, you guys can rely on me instead of Shin," Lao said, puffing out her chest.

"Yeah, that's going to be awhile," Nwazue said. "Just get used to us looking out for you, OK?"

You found yourself nodding in silent agreement. That's just how it was going to be.

It was Day Four of your Infirmary Incarceration. You stared suspiciously at the bouquet of tulips next to the blooming cactus. Beside it was a single calla lily in a stand.

The next row held a Venus flytrap and a vase of pink lilies. Then there was a tiny bonsai in an elegant terracotta pot. The nurse had brought them all in on a cart moments ago, his eyes widening slightly at the balloons and plushes already taking up space in your room.
What the hell had Lacroix been telling people?

His name badge said "Bayan" and he was cute: wavy brown hair with golden highlights, honey-toned skin, and a sharp nose and full lips. He smiled brightly at you and you wondered if you should introduce him to Ziv. Nah, he already seemed too nice.

"So do you like plants?" He asked.

"...I guess," you sighed. "I don't know what's going on."

"Do I need to get Dr. Ziegler?" He sounded concerned.

You shook your head. "No, I know where I am and what's going on with me. I just don't know where all these plants are coming from."

"I would assume your friends and colleagues are sending them. They do that when people have to stay in the infirmary for extended periods of time," he said gently, like you were a slow child.

You weren't sure what face you were making, but Bayan realized his explanation wasn't cutting it.

"Maybe it's a cultural disconnect?" He offered.

"...Yeah, we'll go with that." You rubbed your face with both hands.

"There are cards, so you can tell who sent what."

"Have they been checked for?" You stopped yourself. There was an internal gift shop. Also, In-Sec wouldn't have let any of these packages through without screening. You needed to relax.

"...Never mind."

Bayan laughed. "It's OK. I'm used to Blackwatch agents being a little edgy. You haven't thrown anything at me yet, so we're good."

"I'm on day four of a liquid diet. Either I will soon or I'll be too weak to move."

"If you know you're going to be too weak to move, maybe you should reevaluate your strategy of throwing things at your nurses," he said cheerfully, a hint of steel in his voice.

You deflated a little. "Yeah, good advice."

Bayan took your vitals, checked your IVs, and told you to call him if you needed anything.

You waited for him to leave before tearing open the first card. The tulips were from Winston and Athena. The cactus was from Jesse, which you suspected anyway. The card with the calla lily said "Thinking of you." It was simply signed "Joon." And you winced. The pink lilies were from Riggs, along with a peppy note about "getting well soon and fighting the good fight."

The card for the bonsai was made of heavy stock and felt expensive. You opened it to find Genji's name written in kanji, the brushstroke familiar. The other name you recognized, even if it was in kanji and the handwriting was new. Hanzo. Maybe Genji had forged it to be polite. And what the hell were you going to do with a bonsai? You couldn't regift it. That would be an insult. And you had to keep it alive. Because if you let it die, that would also be an insult. Shin had explained Japanese gifting traditions to you in neurotic detail, and you stared at the miniature tree, unsure of what to do. It was a trap. A terrible, terrible trap.

Shaking your head you checked the Venus flytrap. The card was unsigned, but you recognized Vo's shit handwriting.

"The Commander is being an extra awful bastard. We're sorry we took you for granted. Come back soon. Please." You snorted, wondering if Vo did this on her own, or if everyone else had pitched in. You suspected the latter; Vo tended not to give a shit. Out of habit, you checked the plant for any interesting additions. There was a sliver of paper sticking out of one of the flowers, like a fortune cookie. You carefully extracted it.

"ALIVE." You recognized Ziv's handwriting and immediately shredded the paper. That little idiot. You shook your head, unable to contain your smile. You weren't going to ask how he did it. Especially since it involved cruelty to your plant.

"I wasn't aware I was supposed to bring flowers," Captain Amari said dryly as she entered.

You saluted, trying not to look too guilty. "I can uh..." You sighed. "No, I can't explain."

"Athena, privacy mode please." She shut the door behind her. She was in casual uniform, hair in a loose braid. She stared at the giant bear and the balloons, then burgeoning jungle on your bedside table.

She pulled up a chair and sat down, taking a moment to admire the bonsai. "These are nice. Jack? Or Gabe?"

"...Neither," you admitted.

Captain Amari did not look the least bit surprised. "They can be so thoughtless."

You shrugged. You weren't sure what she wanted to hear.

"And removing your compartmentalized clearances. Do you want to talk about that?" She said it casually, like she was asking what flavor biscuits you wanted with your tea. You weren't fooled.

"I know I was...difficult, but I feel Commander Reyes overreacted. It's not like I intended to get stabbed." You set the flytrap down.

Captain Amari crossed her arms. "You don't think you were too close to the subject?"

"Of course I was. That's why I was on Candle Arc. Because I was going to do the job right."

"You were going to bring her back, even if it killed you," Captain Amari corrected sternly.

"I'm not suicidal, ma'am."

"Just reckless," she smiled pleasantly and you winced. "You and Gérard. Yes, he briefed me on your thought processes, after Jack...persuaded him to explain. Is there a reason you failed to document your plan of action?"

You scratched the back of your head. "Uh..." Because if you admitted you knew Jack and Gabriel would disapprove, that would land you in hot water. Of course, if you lied to Captain Amari, lightning might strike you down. "We assumed it was obvious. Bypassing her suicide protocol was just shifting priorities. And what was higher priority than either of us?"
Captain Amari pursed her lips, looking distinctly unimpressed by your explanation. You waited for the clap of thunder.

"That's exactly what Gérard said."

Haha, ouch. You knew better than to volunteer information, no matter hard Captain Amari was staring you down. She shifted in her seat, sniper-eyes drilling into your skull. "Is that all you wish to say?"

The skin between your eyes began to tingle and the hair on the back of your neck stood up. You shuddered, practically feeling the bolt of energy swirling around you. "I was worried about how Jack and Gabriel would react," you said, inwardly cursing yourself for caving. "So I just didn't point it out to them. Wasn't their op anyway."

Captain Amari sat back in her seat, the pressure abating. "I appreciate your honesty."

Oh, that was the prelude for punishment. Nothing good ever came from that token statement.

"It seems we do have a problem, and I really wish you would have come to me sooner."

You visibly winced at that nail in your coffin. "It's not quite Lacroix's fault. We never actually discussed hiding anything."

Captain Amari raised a brow at that. "Gérard knew exactly what he was doing."

"If this is going on record-"

Captain Amari waved her hand. "Don't concern yourself with that just yet. So, Gabriel withdrew your clearances and said something about suspension?"

"I uh...think so. I was kind of drugged and pretty upset. I said some shit too." You sighed. "I don't know what to think right now, ma'am."

"You seem calmer than I was led to believe. And they haven't even upped your painkillers." She tapped her fingers against the chair. "Off the record, how did you figure it out?"

You facepalmed then. Captain Amari could see straight through you. It was a good thing you'd shredded Ziv's message.

"Did someone tell you?"

"No, I figured it out on after I calmed down," you said. "I compared the Technological Evidence Loan forms with the Technological Evidence Permanent Confiscation forms-"

"Back up, why?" Captain Amari asked.

"One: those are support-services forms and since the metadata is collected to track a variety of agent performance metrics, it isn't bound by compartmentalized classifications. So I knew I could access that much. Two: Lao has cybernetics and we aren't just going to leave them attached. Loan forms are used when there's a chance we'll return the property when we're done, usually implying the owner is alive. The Permanent Confiscation forms are used when we take tech off corpses-"

"All right," Captain Amari nodded. "Go on."
"Then I cross-referenced the dates with whether or not Angela and Torby were the signatories. because they are both experts in cybernetics and would be called on to safely confiscate unfamiliar cybernetic tech -"

Captain Amari began to massage her forehead.

"And then, I checked to see if ICU holding cell B was available, because that's the only one that could safely contain someone with core cybernetic enhancements."

Captain Amari began to laugh. "And you did that, half-drugged, missing your highest clearances, and stuck in bed?"

"...I uh...yeah." You bowed your head to try to hide your grin. When she said it like that, you felt more than a little proud of yourself.

"You're a good agent," she said, and it warmed your center. "My problem is that you're taking a circuitous route to do your job because you wish to spare Jack and Gabe's feelings. I know the three of you work well together, but I also understand that for many reasons, some rational, some not, they can be...overwhelming." Captain Amari leaned forward. "I have offered to step in to moderate numerous times. Do you need me to do it?"

"I don't know, ma'am. Am I getting my clearances reinstated? And when can I see Lao?"

"Don't worry about your clearances. As for your friend, she's not awake. And when she does wake up, you are not to be alone with her, for your own safety."

"But I can visit, right?" You asked.

"...Eventually." Captain Amari gave you a hard look. "You will wait till you have permission to go, do you understand me? I've been lenient this long; am I going to regret it?"

"No, ma'am." You saluted, instinctively.

"And the other half of the issue is that you selectively respect Jack and Gabriel's authority. You're walking a thin line, Lucky."

"I uh..." You thought back to Operation Cobblestone Dust. "I don't flaunt it ma'am. I certainly don't expect special treatment while working-"

"Keep it that way. If I thought you were abusing your power, this conversation would have taken a very different tone."

"Yes, ma'am. But I agree, some of my...issues come with feeling that they're being overprotective and wouldn't put the same limitations on another agent."

"You're also not getting officially reprimanded for your insubordination," Captain Amari said. "This will only get worse if you don't address it. If this continues to escalate, I won't be asking to sit in on a meeting, the four of us will be sitting down and it will not be nearly as pleasant as it would have been if you had handled this sooner."

You stared at the flowers around the room. At the ridiculous bear Reinhardt had left you. At the Venus flytrap.

"That won't be necessary," you said after a moment. "I can do it. But I think I need more time and a clearer head to organize my thoughts."
Captain Amari nodded curtly. "But you will address it, agent."

"Yes ma'am."

"These are beautiful, Chanceux! And that bear! It is so cute!" Amélie flitted about your room, admiring all the flowers. She had brought a lavender orchid in a pot and you were going to cry, because you had no idea how you were going to keep one plant alive, let alone an orchid, a Venus flytrap, a cactus, and a bonsai.

"Oh my, who is Joon?" She smirked at you knowingly. And you wondered why everyone felt the need to read your cards.

"...I had two meals with him. Like five months ago! I told him it wouldn't work-"

Amélie's kittenish smile made you want to pull the covers over your head. "Oh Chanceux, that just means he hasn't been able to get you out of his mind. It is good to have admirers." She sat down beside you, all poise and a fitted Dior skirt suit in mulberry. She looked shockingly good, and you wished you had something besides a hospital gown to wear.

"Everything all right in here, ladies?" Bayan peeked in and winked at you. "More flowers?"

"She deserves flowers, don't you think?" Amélie cooed.

"Definitely," Bayan nodded.

You managed a flat smile, because "flowers" translated as "things to keep alive that you knew nothing about." You didn't deserve that. The flowers didn't deserve that. "Thanks guys."

"Well, let me know if you need anything. I'll be around." Bayan disappeared back into the hallway and Amélie nudged you. She wore some kind of fragrance, but it was light and didn't irritate your senses.

"Very cute," she said.

"I uh...what?"

"Your nurse. I may be married, but I can still appreciate a good-looking individual, Chanceux. Enjoying beauty is an integral part of life. Take your friend Ziv. He is adorable."

You very carefully regarded Gérard's wife.

"Do not look so worried, I am well aware of his feelings for my husband. It doesn't bother me a whit." She crossed her long legs. "It's a shame he doesn't prefer women. Like you, Chanceux, I don't mind a ménage à trois."

You laid back in your hospital bed. It was nowhere near as comfortable as Jack's bed. "As long as you're not going to kill him for continually checking out your husband, I'm happy."

She giggled. "You are embarrassed!"

"It's Ziv. I'm embarrassed for him."
"You shouldn't be." She studied the flowers. "So many nice gifts. But I saw nothing from -"

"Yeah. We had a fight."

"That is not an excuse!" Amélie pounded a pale fist on the table and you jumped. "Have they been to visit?"

"Not since I woke up...and picked a fight."

Her expression darkened. "Merde alors. You are an invalid! You were operated on! Why are they not here?"

"I am not an invalid and we had a fight-"

"That does not matter! Being in the hospital, the time drags on, like a day without bread! They should be here, reading to you, playing go, entertaining you." It seemed Lacroix really did tell his wife everything. That surprised you on some level. But you could see them on their couch drinking wine, eating expensive desserts, and gossiping. It was remarkably easy to picture.

"Yeah, OK. You're probably right." You acknowledged that Amélie had a more mature grasp on relationships, given that she'd kept Lacroix this long and not murdered him. But she thought Ziv was cute and married Lacroix. Obviously she was insane, and had a lapse in her otherwise stellar taste.

"Jack is a farmboy, but Gabriel should know better!" She huffed. "They may be handsome, but so stupid and pig-headed."

You sighed. "Yeah."

"After you recover we will go out, my treat. Ana has already agreed. Shopping, a spa, dinner. We will take it easy."

"Sure," you said.

"And we will wear pretty clothes, drink expensive cocktails, and flirt outrageously," she continued. "Because life is too short to not enjoy yourself, Chanceux."

"I...yeah." You laughed at that and it hurt a little. "I just want to eat solid food, Amélie."

"Then you can eat whatever you want," she said brightly. "And then wear pretty clothes, drink expensive cocktails, and flirt outrageously."

"Am I interrupting?"

You stiffened as Jack stepped in, still in uniform. Amélie looked at the flowers, then you.

"Well, I'm glad your admirers sent you all those flowers. It shows they appreciate you, doesn't it?" Her smile held a sharp edge, and she rose gracefully. "In a week or so then? We will, as the Americans say, paint the town red." She turned giving Jack a curt nod.

"Looking forward to it," you said, because if it involved getting out of here and eating solid food, you couldn't wait.

"Hello Jack," she said sweetly, but you could hear the knives concealed under the syrup in her voice. "Have you been very busy then?"
Jack didn't take a step backward, but you saw the discomfort plain on his face. "Yes."

"D'accord," she said sympathetically. "The job requires so much from you. It is good that Chanceux is so patient then. Left here alone, unable to eat, and nursing a near fatal wound." Amélie shook her head. "But of course, we understand. You are a busy man. Gabriel as well. I remember when poor Gérard was bedridden. It was horrid, but at least he could eat. He did so appreciate all those times you visited him. You're such a good friend, Jack."

Smiling brightly, she sauntered out of the room, her perfume lingering in the air.

Jack stared blankly after her, then looked around the room, taking in the plants, balloons, and stuffed animals.

You realized then that Amélie indeed had a lot she could teach you beyond good manners and which fork to use at dinner. That level of petty? All dressed up with debonair manners and stilettos hanging from every sentence? Voiced so politely you almost missed the fact it was wearing a tiara at a bitchy angle? That was what you aspired to be when you grew up.

But that didn't help you now, not with Jack standing in the middle of the room, watching you cautiously.

"I deserved that," he said after a moment, and shut the door.

You shrugged, because anything you could add now was just overkill.

Jack did a double-take when he saw the bear. "Reinhardt?"

"Yes." You took a sip of water. He could request an inventory if he wanted, but it wasn't any of his business.

Jack sighed heavily and took the chair beside the bed. His shirt was wrinkled. There were bags under his eyes and he had too much stubble along his jaw. "How are you feeling?"

"Hungry," you said tightly, and continued sipping your water.

"Sorry, I haven't been by. It's been crazy and..." He winced, brushing his hair out of his face. "And I thought I'd give you some time to cool down."

Anger flared in your gut, and you almost asked him if he'd gotten a dog. Instead you just watched him, judgment heavy in your eyes. Captain Amari had taught you that expectant silence was a powerful weapon.

"...Obviously, that was the wrong choice," Jack finished. He rested his face in his hands. "Damnit, sweetheart. Don't look at me like I'm the one who stabbed you."

"Lao wasn't in control of her actions." You set the water down. "What's your excuse?"

Jack flinched. "Do you want me to leave?"

"What I want doesn't seem to matter," you said coolly. "My clearances have been revoked. Gabriel doesn't even want me to know Lao is alive. And you seem fine with both these things."

"Baby-"

"Not to mention," you continued, ignoring him. "I've been awake for three days now, and neither of you could be bothered to come talk to me about it. Or even send flowers." Your hand snapped out, gesturing to all the gifts your well-wishers had delivered.

"Didn't think you liked flowers," Jack said after a moment, worry evident on his face. "Do you?"

"I don't care. But it's nice to know that some people were thinking of me."

"You don't think I've been thinking about you?" Jack's voice dropped low. "You don't think you're at the forefront of Gabriel's mind?"

"No idea," you said. "You want to make a big deal about me getting hurt and almost dying, then you can't be bothered to show up while I'm stuck here?" You were getting loud now. "You couldn't support me when you know Gabriel overreacted? What the fuck am I supposed to think, Jack?" You glared at him, because now that you'd solved the question of whether or not Lao was alive, you had a lot of free time to steep in your anger.

"I-"

"You couldn't even grant me the mercy of telling me my hacker is alive? Because you should know what she means to me! Or did you conveniently forget that the rest of my old squad is buried alongside my real name?!"

Jack sat back in his seat, pinching the bridge of his nose. "I'm sorry. I made a bad call."

"No, I made a bad call, facing Lao by myself. You just plain fucked up," you snarled.

"Yeah, all right. I did." Jack looked you in the eye, face hard. "I knew how you felt. But I told myself it was for the best and you'd be too drugged to worry about it."

"You bastard-"

"Yes," he said, nodding. "Go on. Get it off your chest."

"You fucking condescending piece of shit! How could you do that to me?"

"Because I wasn't thinking straight," Jack said, eyes never leaving your face. "You were here, though you nearly weren't. Gabriel was a fucking mess. I...I had Overwatch shit to deal with. I thought it could wait. But I was wrong, and I fucked up. So go on. Hit me with it. It's your right."

"Don't give me that!" You shouted. "You fucking coward! You goddamn asshole! You're a shitty boyfriend and you don't even deserve a dog!"

Jack's face paled, but he nodded at each insult. "I won't argue with you. We both know I've never been a paragon, no matter my reputation. We both know I fucked it up with Gabe earlier. I am an asshole. I am a shitty boyfriend. And waiting to see you, that was cowardly." He paused. "...That last one's a little harsh."

"I haven't even started to get harsh!"

"OK," he said softly. "That's fine. I deserve it. During all of this...I still had Overwatch to run. I focused on work, when I should have been here with you." He looked away then. "It finally sunk in today that you'd almost died." He dragged his hands across his face, voice terribly gentle. "And that hit me harder than anything you've said."

You shuddered, hating him for making you feel like the bad guy. "Jack, you manipulative prick! You don't get to play martyr and guilt me!"

"That's not what I'm trying to do, sweetheart." He took off his jacket and gloves. "I was wrong. I don't have an excuse. I should have been here. I'm sorry I let you down."

"It's kind of late for that," you said sharply, forcing your left hand flat, because the metal was digging into your palm.

"I know." Jack leaned over the railing. "You were out of the woods. I had some ops in Greece go very bad, and I had to handle the fallout. I put in a stop-gap measure, but it's still a clusterfuck." He winced, because even though it was all probably true, it sounded weak, like an excuse. "I knew you were mad. I figured you wouldn't want to see me and I'd give you some space. But obviously, that was terribly thoughtless of me."

You regarded him silently.

"I'm not making excuses. I just want to tell you I'm sorry and swear I'll do better." Jack hunched over. "I know that sounds lame. But it's all I have."

"My clearances," you said, because that was not all he had.

Jack exhaled slowly. "Athena, reinstate Agent Strike's access to Candle Arc and Shit Spiders."

"Done," Athena chimed in. "A recording and transcript of the event you requested have now been sent to your inbox, Agent Strike."

You sat there for a moment, feeling more yourself. "Thank you, Athena" you said, because it took you a moment to recall that you'd wanted to hear exactly how Ziv told Jack and Gabriel off. "And I guess thank you, Jack," you said, not caring that you didn't sound very gracious.

"I know, I know. They never should have been revoked." Jack ran his fingers through his hair. "I'm sorry. I let it go because Gabriel was on edge and I wasn't sure how cognizant you were under the drugs. I figured you'd be resting anyway and we'd get this cleared up before you came back to work. It wasn't malice; I misjudged it."

"Well, I guess it's good to know you weren't punishing me." Jack could be vindictive, but he was more prone to thoughtlessness.

"That's what you thought?" His eyes widened.

"That's what it felt like!" You clenched your teeth. "What the hell was I supposed to think? You sided with Gabriel and never came back to explain."

Jack's chin dropped to his chest. His breath hitched and he shook his head. "Damnit." He took your hands in his, and when you didn't pull away, he kissed your fingers, lips moving up past your knuckles to your wrists. "I'm sorry, sweetheart. That's not what I meant to happen."

"So I spent my time thinking about whether or not Lao could have survived those shots. Memory was tricky, so I had to go over the events continually, because I was too drugged to stop myself. It wasn't till the next day that my brain was clear enough to use logic to figure it out."

Jack was very still.

"I wish you had just told me."
"That first day we were here, Gabriel sat vigil the entire time. I was supposed to handle a situation in Haikou, but Ana went in my stead. I sat with him, got him to change clothes and shower. Didn't really have time to digest everything, you know? Just...waited." His voice cracked and he looked at you, stark misery on his face. "Made sure he ate, drank, I had just left to get him a sandwich when you woke up." Jack rubbed his eyes. "Then the two of you fought and...and I dealt with the aftermath of that. Had to take it to the mats," he admitted. "Afterward, Gabe finally got some sleep."

You hadn't know Gabriel had sat with you the entire time you were out. But that didn't change what had happened. It did on some level, explain the overreaction. But you weren't quite ready to give him any quarter.

"Then the situation in Greece blew up. Omnic strike on the Mani peninsula. They came out of the fucking Mediterranean. Wiped out two squads. One of them was led by one of my old SEP guys. Galanos. He was an asshole, but..." Jack blew out a long breath. "But he was one of my guys." He looked at you with regret lining his face. It wasn't just that, he looked exhausted. "It hit me then, that I'd almost lost you. There was a lot of shit I had to take care of first, but then and I came down, resigned to the fact that you were going to be so pissed. That's fine. You should be. I just...I just needed to see you."

He sat in that chair, eyes closed, shoulders slumped, looking like the walking wounded.

You rubbed the backs of Jack's hands, anger slowly melting into weariness. His job took precedence over a lot of things, but so far he hadn't abused it as an excuse. Two squads? That was a lot of funerals to attend and you had never envied his responsibilities. "That's your reason. What's Gabriel's?"

"I told him to give you space," Jack said. "He was overwrought. He did need to cool down. Now he's getting caught up on the Blackwatch backlog that built up while you were both out."

There was a pause. "You know, he didn't mean to hurt you either, right?"

"I barely have enough forgiveness in me for you right now," you said, shaking your head. "Don't push it."

"...All right. It'll probably mean more coming from him, anyway. I...just wanted you to know." Jack twined his fingers with yours. "Guess that means we can lift the ban on Mihret. He's getting antsy. Keeps sending me long, angry messages in legalese." Jack got out of the chair, lowered the railing, and sat down beside you. "Did you figure it out on your own or-"

"Yes." You raised your chin, daring him to argue.

"Yeah, you're the clever one," He smiled warmly at you. "Maggie and Michael have flooded me with worried messages. Michael caught a clip of what happened on the net."

It wasn't fair that he could use them against you. You turned your head. "I'll message them when I have access to tech again."

"You don't have-"

"All my devices have clearance-contingent access."

"That never crossed my mind." Jack winced. "Not that you should be surprised by that at this point."

"Yeah, like somehow you missed that I've been trying to save Lao for months."
"I know your friend is important to you. But that plan you and Gérard hatched-"

"You punched him," you said, annoyance creeping into your voice.

"You're just mad that you missed it," Jack said, stroking your face.

You sighed. "Jack, that's not OK."

"Neither was his plan. It wasn't just about you. Gérard's my friend, and he's not expendable, no matter what he thinks. If either of you had spelled it out, we wouldn't be happy, but at least we would have measures in place in case something went wrong, like it did."

"You would have contested it."

"Maybe," Jack admitted. "I don't like the risks Gérard is willing to take."

"...Captain Amari wants us to sit down and talk about how you and Gabriel are negatively affecting my ability to carry out operations."

Jack gave a heavy sigh. "Yeah, Ana had some choice words for me too." He leaned forward, lightly kissing your jaw. "I missed you. I'm sorry. I feel bad about not even sending flowers." His hand rested on the nape of your neck. "But I'm glad everyone else picked up the slack. I'd feel worse if I came in and the room was just hospital decor."

You weren't so sure he would have noticed, unobservant as he was, but it was a nice sentiment.

"I'll get you something. I know it's pathetic that I had to be prompted." Jack pressed kisses against your neck and you sighed. "Still will. Will make it up to you. Won't cop out. I'm sorry." He looked at you, tender and earnest. "I don't take you for granted. I swear."

"OK," you said, as he kissed you. Jack could charm the anger out of Gabriel. What chance did you stand? "Missed you too. Wanted to ask you to stay when I woke up, but Angela was here and I was too upset to make the words come out right."

Jack pressed his forehead to yours, those deep blue eyes focused solely on you. "I'm here now. I'm not going anywhere."

"So then I told Genji that Hanzo doesn't technically work for Blackwatch and he could totally deliver the message-" Ziv gestured while he spoke, happily eating a gyro in front of you. It smelled greasy, meaty, and delicious. He was such an asshole. And for some reason, he was rocking a well-tailored canary yellow suit jacket with a bowtie and narrow-legged black pants. You didn't think he owned any formalwear. Lacroix's influence, no doubt. It should have been garish, but it complimented his skin tone, and he looked less lanky, more grown up.

"So was that flytrap was from everyone, you included?"

"Well, most everyone. Can't say everyone, because if Reyes sees that card we need plausible deniability. And speaking of which, he's a fucking rabid bear right now. Since I work in the tech lab with Winston, I'm not too worried, but poor McCree has been trying to do your job and he's usually the one left facing Reyes."

"Gabriel has a soft spot for Jesse," you said, not worried.

"No, you have a soft spot for Jesse. Reyes is just marginally less likely to bite his head off than the rest of ours. There is nothing soft about Reyes, and I've looked."

You snorted at that. "His beard."

"It hides a diamond-hard chin, or so the rumor goes."

You picked at your pudding. Day Five meant you could eat pudding! And you'd been so excited. Till Ziv waltzed in, wearing a goddamn suit, and eating a gyro. Your pudding had a little flavor. But it wasn't measuring up.

"Gérard says you figured it out on your own," Ziv said after a moment.

"Yeah. You can ask Athena how I did it."

"No, I'll work it out myself. If you did it, it can't be that hard." Ziv smirked.

You massaged your forehead. Ziv was the worst.

"So I know you're not allowed to see Lao, but I hear they keep finding weird things. Angela and Torby have been by to poke at her cybernetics. They couldn't remove everything because some of it is fused to her spine. Winston and Athena are helping to unravel what's going on there. Added some kind of nanite bullshit and there was this odd level of biological engineering we weren't expecting. Angela says that's what kept her alive, coupled with your custom neurotoxin slowing down her systems."

"Huh."

"Yeah, it's weird." Ziv shrugged. "Since you and the boss are "priority targets," you can't go in there till she wakes up, has been cleared as somewhat safe, and we figure some of her weird tech out. But there's a security monitor I have access to—"

"Yeah, I'll take a look. I don't need to be there," you said, mostly to convince yourself. "Can she hear us?"

"Maybe. You should record yourself reading or something. I'll see if I can get them to play it for her."

"...Yeah, that's a good idea." You grinned at Ziv, because sometimes, he wasn't entirely awful. "Amèlie thinks you're cute."

"That's because I am," he smirked. "That nurse of yours, Bayan, he's not too bad either."

"She said the same thing."

"We obviously have similar taste in men," Ziv said wistfully.

"She said she wished you liked girls. Because she didn't mind uh...yeah." You scratched your head, wondering if you should have kept that to yourself.

Ziv sat back in his seat, his face blank. Finally, he pursed his lips. "I thought you disapproved. Which is pretty hypocritical, if you ask me."
"I didn't ask you. Ever." You sighed. "I don't trust Lacroix. And we both know the very legitimate concerns about superior-subordinate relationships. Also I didn't want drama between you and Amélie, considering she's apparently some kind of sniping prodigy. If you have her blessing, well it's none of my business."

"It was never your business," Ziv sniffed.

"Apparently, Amélie, Captain Amari, and I are going for a spa treatment next week, Amélie's treat. So yeah, it kind of is."

"You made a friend? Ben-zona, let me get you a card to commemorate the occasion." He finished off the gyro and you felt a sense of relief. And loss. Such loss. You were going to eat gyros and cake when you got out of here.

"Go fuck yourself."

"I can't believe all these people sent you flowers. And Reinhardt got you a giant stuffed bear! What the hell? That thing is going to take up half your room!" Ziv pointed at the reindeer. "And that thing looks mad as fuck."

"I thought so too."

"Lindholm got that for you?"

"Yeah. I'm waiting till I'm less drugged to check it for hidden weapons."

"And you got flowers from Joon and Riggs?"

"...Shut up, Ziv."

"I know Riggs just thinks you're cool, but Joon? That guy likes women a lot. And a single calla lily? He's trying to impress you."

"We had dinner back before. Anyway, I was surprised too."

"Yeah, he's actually had to talk you. Guess it doesn't matter if he just wants to bang you. At least he has good taste in flowers." Ziv flashed you a cheeky grin and you swatted him on the arm.

There was a knock on the doorframe and you both looked over to see Gabriel standing there, arms crossed, frowning heavily.

"Mihret." Gabriel said his name like a condemnation.

"Would you like me to stay?" Ziv asked, purposefully turning his back on Gabriel.

"Nah, you're fine," you said, because you were mad enough at Gabriel. Ziv didn't get steal your thunder. "Thanks for the visit."

"Of course. Sorry I couldn't get here sooner." He stood up slowly, still ignoring Gabriel. "Let me know if you need anything. I'd be happy to help."

"Solid food," you sighed.

Ziv laughed, knowing then that he had gotten to you with his gyro. "Now that you mention it, I think I'll pick up sushi tonight."

"I fucking hate you and hope you get intestinal parasites. Big ones."

Laughing, Ziv swaggered past Gabriel, still ignoring him.

Well, that was going to be a problem down the line. But that wasn't your concern at the moment. Your concern was fuming silently as he stood on the other side of the room, gearing up to chew you out.

Gabriel's nostrils flared, but he didn't say anything. He shut the door firmly behind him, geared up in his Blackwatch hoodie. His gaze fell on the assortment of gifts.

"Wilhelm and Lindholm made sure to tell me that I'd been remiss in taking care of you." His voice was harsh, and he gave your teddy bear a very unfriendly look.

"They're good friends," you said dismissively. You were going to have to ask Reinhardt about it later. Hopefully, no one got punched.

Gabriel turned away from the window, toward you. "Jack says you figured it out on your own. Ana backs him up. Even says she knows how. I'll take them at face value."

"But not me?" You set your pudding aside, for its own safety.

"Did you figure it out on your own?"

"Yeah, I fucking did." You tilted your chin up, daring him to dig a deeper hole.

Gabriel inhaled sharply. "All right. I believe you."

You bit back your reply, opting to glare at him.

"Don't look at me like that. You almost died because you're obsessed with that cyborg of yours."

He was starting there, was he? All right. You'd been left alone long enough to stew in your anger and refine it into something sharper and more focused. "She's one of yours too," you said. "Black Base Delta, Captain Aishani Patel's squad. In case you forgot."

"You're mine. She doesn't come anywhere close to that." Gabriel shook his head. "And you're not allowed to go anywhere near-"

"Gabriel, if you just came here to issue me more orders, you can go away. I'm on medical leave. I can't get out of bed. And yeah, I know I'm not allowed there. Got it." Your pulse sped up as Gabriel stalked over and yanked the chair back, metal legs scraping against the floor. He sat down, dark eyes never leaving your face. "Don't give me attitude right now. Do you know what you put me through?"

"Attitude? You haven't seen attitude." You bared your clenched teeth at him. "You're either here as my boss or my lover. But you don't get to be both. You want to talk about being too close to make objective calls? Yeah, guess what? I'm not the only one!" You were yelling now, hands shaking.

"It's not the same," Gabriel snapped, veins in his neck cording.

"Damn right it's not! Want to talk about what you put me through? It's not like I set out to get stabbed! You revoked my clearances and threatened me with suspension. You chose to do that!" You rested one hand on your abdomen, a slight ache starting up.

"You were fucking obsessed!"

"You were out of line!" You snarled. "That's my career you're fucking with!"

"How else was I supposed to keep you from breaking into her cell? Angela wouldn't let me chain you to the bed and you'd be crawling over there as soon as you figured out which way was up!"

"What kind of question is that? You're acting like an overbearing paranoid bastard!"

"I am an overbearing paranoid bastard! Just because I let you get away with-"

Oh no he didn't.

"You either trust me to handle myself or you don't, Gabriel. There's no you "letting me get away with" anything." Each syllable came out in tight measured beats squeezed carefully through the small gap between your tightly clenched upper and lower jaw.

"I let you push me, corazon. But I don't have that kind of patience right now. You're right. I trust you to handle yourself most of the time. But not with this. And given how it ended up, you proved my point."

"So what? You think it's OK to punish me? That was cruel." You gripped the railing, wondering if you should push it down and tackle him. Drag that smarmy asshole to the ground and punch him till he saw reason.

"Cruel? Cruel was having to carry you out of there, leaking blood, wondering if I had to watch you die. Cruel was waiting here for an entire day to see if you were ever going to wake up. Cruel was sitting at your bedside, unspeakably relieved that you were alive, and then getting called out for saving your goddamn life."

"I just wanted to know if she was dead or alive, Gabriel. You know how much she means to me! I was too drugged and weak to go hunting for her then, and it would have given me peace of mind. Instead you fucking dismissed me, and left me here alone and powerless. And I can't see any reason you did that besides trying to hurt me." You wiped your face, shoulders shaking. You were breathing too hard and Gabriel reached for you, but you drew back, wrapping your blankets tighter around your shoulders.

He said your name like a tired curse.

You turned your head away from him, unwilling to let him see the angry tears in your eyes. You weren't sure what was making you madder, him, or the fact you were crying when you should be roaring. Right now, you had no tolerance for weakness, least of all your own.

"I wasn't trying to hurt you, but that was stupid of me." Gabriel leaned over, elbows resting on the railing of the bed. "And it didn't stop you from doing what you wanted anyway." His voice was gravelly, but the heat had left it.

You swallowed the lump in your throat and reached for your water. Gabriel got to it first, handing it to you, his fingers folding over yours.

"I am furious with you," he enunciated. "But that doesn't mean I don't care. And that doesn't mean I should have done what I did. I'm sorry." The words were clipped and angry, but no less genuine for it. It wasn't a good apology, but it was a real one.

Your hand hovered around your cup and you carefully examined the corner of your hospital bed, the sheets crisply folded. There was a piece of brown fuzz on the white fabric, probably from your bear. Beside it was a bright strand of Jack's hair and you couldn't bring yourself to brush it off. Yes, you realized that eventually you were going to have to look at Gabriel and say something.

You sighed as he released the cup and you took it, taking a long gulp of cool water.

"Come here?" He leaned over the railing, voice soft like he was talking to a feral cat.

You let him fold you against him, his arms warm on your back. He stroked your hair roughly. You inhaled the scent of his cologne, savoring the familiar warmth. "You think I'm the only one who said some shit?" He asked gruffly, but he didn't let go of you. "Because I'm not going to lie, you got under my skin with some of that."

"You're the one with the power," you said tightly.

Gabriel released you abruptly and sat back in the chair. "Yeah." He closed his eyes. "But that doesn't mean you get a free pass to hurt me either."

What a goddamn mess. You took another drink, focusing on the smooth flat texture of the cup and the sweetness of the water.

"I did say some shit. I didn't mean it. I'm sorry." You forced the words out. He was right. But even though he apologized and acknowledged he was wrong, you were still angry.

"Yeah, I know. You're still an idiot." He straightened up, jaw tight. "You scared the shit out of me. And once I find Gérard, I'm going to kick his ass, because I've looked over all the Candle Arc documentation, and while you didn't explicitly say it, it's obvious the two of you planned to serve as bait the entire time, and I'm damn sure you left that bit out of your genius plan on purpose."

After talking to Jack and Captain Amari it was amusing that someone found your plan blatantly obvious. But that wasn't going to help matters.

"I know. You and Jack are being too much. Captain Amari wants to have a meeting with us about how I can't do my job because I'm worried about upsetting the two of you."

Gabriel narrowed his eyes. "You don't seem too worried."

"We all know I'm emotionally repressed." You rubbed your shoulder. "But sometimes I take the long route to avoid arguing with you and Jack. And that's the wrong way to handle it. Captain Amari keeps pushing to sit in but-"

"But you're so painfully secretive, you can't bear the thought of involving someone else?"

"Maybe."

There was a long silence as you finished your water and set the empty cup on your table.

"So now what?" Gabriel asked, regarding you warily. "We talked. We apologized. But we're obviously still not good."
You shrugged. "I don't know. I'm going to need space to sort things out."

"What do you mean by "space?" Gabriel asked sharply.

"I'll stick to Lacroix's low-impact espionage runs when I get back. Don't think I'll be in any shape to run any combat missions for the rest of the month."

"I have a backlog of paperwork," Gabriel said a little too calmly.

"I think it will be better if I'm out of the office for awhile."

Gabriel crossed his arms.

"It's been a rough few days. We did apologize. And I know we're both sorry, but emotionally, I need time to come to terms with it. All of it."

Gabriel grimace. "This have to do with how I shot your hacker?"

There it was, the elephant in the room. You had been waiting for it to rear its big ugly head. "Some of it."

"So you can't forgive me for saving you, huh?" He flashed you a sardonic smirk, bitterness soaking his words. "Guess that's what I get."

"Goddamnit, Gabriel. You're twisting my words. I need time to sort myself out and cool down. I'm not blaming you for-"

"Liar," he said, voice dangerously soft. "I saw the look on your face back in Lucerne. You blamed me all right."

"I know why you did it. I know you weren't necessarily wrong. But here," you tapped your head. "Doesn't match here." You patted your chest, staring at your lap.

The two of you sat in silence for a moment.

"Thank you, by the way. For-"

"No thanks are needed between us," he said gruffly. "Just tell me what you want. A week? A month? What? Or is it something you need to say? Because I'm right here. Hit me with it. Let's do this," he said, slapping his chest with an open palm.

"Gabriel-

"Go on. You have something to say. I can see it on your face," he said, daring you to go down that path. No, pushing you in that direction.

"You shot Lao. Even though you knew I wanted her alive. You know what she means to me. You know what she means to me. And I keep seeing it. I can't just gloss over that!"

Gabriel sat back in the chair, eyes closed. He took a few deep breaths. When he opened his eyes, his expression had hardened. "You need time? All right. Fine. You can have time. Take your time." His words were flat and emotionless. "Do what you have to do. I won't get in your way." He rose then, turning to leave. "Should I have sent flowers? A ridiculous stuffed animal? Would any of that have helped? Because I think you would have blamed me regardless."

"It's not about blaming you, damnit!"
"Doesn't matter what it's about. It's obvious you hold me responsible for shooting her. Fine. I did it for you, and I don't care how angry that makes you," he said, winding you up. "Because I have no problem sacrificing her life for yours."

"Goddamnit Gabriel-"

"Are you taking a break from Jack too?" He looked at you over his shoulder, wielding a twisted smile like barbed wire.

"...I don't know," you said, feeling absurdly guilty, and then angry because why was he guilting you? He could keep his petty to himself. "Gabriel-"

"Space. Got it." He slammed the door behind him and you dropped back against your bed, hard-pressed to think of how that could have gone worse.

Chapter End Notes

And so some questions are answered, but things aren't all right in the world. ducks

I jogged 2 miles with my retarded dogs today. (No, really. I love them, but they are dangerously stupid.) I prepped some things I have to mail/pay/setup. I filed my state and federal taxes. I wrote a ridiculous horror movie-esque scene late last night/early this morning. So I'm feeling kind of good. Too bad my cousin/roommate has contracted some kind of awful projectile stomach flu and now I'm like "...Oh no, I'm next."

Tomorrow I will apply for more jobs and go mail things, maybe restock my spice cabinet. Then I will allowed to have more cake. (◕‿◕✿)
Chapter 35

Chapter Summary

Even if your relationships are in flux, life goes on. There is always more work to be done.

Chapter Notes

So, got some cool fanart.

Eastrisk made this and I didn't get a notification, so just message me if you make something. You're not bothering me and I'm always excited. Look at all those characters!

Mamimi drew pre-cyborg Lao, looking all grown-up and competent when we all know she's just going to steal beer and candy.

Hanzoshansbow has ADORABLE CAKE CHIBI and some heartbreak. Because my emotions aren't erratic enough.

See the end of the chapter for more notes

You told Athena to give Jack a heads up that you and Gabriel had quarreled again, and then set your status as "do not disturb."

Gabriel had shot Lao down in front of you, and you were angry about it, that was true. He had done it to save you. Lao might even survive. You didn't hate him. You didn't think he was a monster. But you were still upset and you still needed time to process it. If Lao died...things might be different. You exhaled slowly, hand resting on your bandaged stomach. You needed to see Lao. You'd ask for security cam footage later.

You were dozing when the door opened, light from the hallway slicing through the comfortable darkness. Cracking one eye, you saw it was Jack.

"Come in," you said, after a moment.

"Sorry. Didn't mean to wake you." He sounded tired and you sat up, flicking on the lights. Dressed down in sweats, Jack gave you a crooked smile.

"How bad?"

"He's hurting."

You flinched.

"Wanted to hear your take on it," Jack said, sitting down. He smelled like soap and Gabriel's cologne. "He didn't really want to talk."
"...I told him I needed some space. Because yeah, I'm still mad. Can't help that. Working on it though. And I need figure out how to deal with how much you two...overwhelm me. He brought up Lao, said I couldn't forgive him for saving my life. That I blamed him. I-" You rubbed your forehead. "I'm very aware of what he did. I'm not...I'm not putting it on him. But I need some time to process that too."

"You need some space from me too?"

"I don't think so. But...it might be wise."

Jack frowned. "How is doing this by yourself "wise?" Just wondering."

"I...don't want to make Gabriel feel worse. Like we're excluding him." You blinked as Jack tugged on your hair.

"I told you, I'm here for you. I let you down once. I'm not making that mistake again. And leaving you unsupervised is probably the worst idea right now," he said, voice husky. "Obviously, you get up to stupid shit on your own."

"It's more pressure on you, Jack. You're going to have to look after Gabriel too."

"This isn't worth doing if I'm going to crumble under a little pressure, baby." He kissed the side of your neck and you reached out, taking his hand.

"I'm not crumbling, Jack. I just-"

"Wasn't talking about you. Shit happens. We talked about this. You were up front. If you need space, fine. You get space. Just don't hare off and avoid the problem. You cool down, figure your shit out, then come back and talk. He'll get over it."

"...If Lao dies..." You knew from painful experience that you couldn't predict how you would react. Black Base Delta had awakened a vengeance that still burned hot inside you, something your smuggler self would have found disturbing and alien. Gabriel had made it clear that Lao was not his responsibility. That was fine. She was one of yours.

"We'll cross that bridge if we come to it. Do you plan on blaming him?"

"No, but-"

"OK. You're already on the right track." Jack said. "You're overthinking it. We'll work it out."

"I think you're ridiculously optimistic."

"About us? A little." Jack gave you a furtive smile, like he had a secret and was only now considering sharing it with you. "I have faith in my two favorite troublemakers." He paused. "Maggie and Michael say hello. They want to know if you have a cool scar. Had to inform them that it's a bit too soon to tell."

You touched your stomach. The wound looked small now, so much fuss over such a little thing. Granted, Angela had spent hours patching you back up, and she didn't do things halfway.

"Speaking of your siblings, they want to come to Zurich during a school break. Maggie is lobbying me to make the appeal. I have no opinion on this, because your family dynamics are still something of a mystery to me. But I told her I'd relay the message."
Jack snorted. "Oh, I've heard all about this already." He slouched in the chair. "Maggie has been begging to come for years. My parents are perfectly content to stay at home on the farm, with the goats, and no thank you to that fancy European cheese tour, we're fine as we are. Maggie's getting old enough to come on her own, though Michael has finally expressed interest in visiting too, so I have no problem if the two of them want to come over together. Especially if you want to show them around."

"...Jack. No. I like your siblings. I really do. But I can't do my job and bodyguard two teenagers all by myself."

"Guess I'll have to tell Maggie you don't want her here. She'll be heartbroken-"

"Don't you dare!" You reached for your pillow and he laughed.

"I'm kidding. I know you have to work. Chang's unit is due back for a break in the summer. The timing might work out. My parents will have a temporary unit rotated in, and Maggie and Michael can ride back with Chang. I'll assign them to different people every day, let them get a feel for how Overwatch runs."

You thought about Maggie following Reinhardt around for a day, maybe with a little Athena fish torpedo, Michael discreetly poking the drone and asking flustered questions. You sank back onto the bed, inundated in cute. You could feel the dopey expression on your face.

"There we go." Jack leaned over the bed. "Feel better?"

"A little."

"Scoot over." Jack slid the railing of the bed down and sat beside you. "Do you know what I thought of you when you first arrived?"

"...I'm afraid to ask." You recalled seeing him from time to time, but he was never particularly friendly. The Morrison charisma wasn't something he wasted on you. That day by the memorial, while you clumsily burnt incense for Captain Patel, he'd seemed almost condescending. If you wanted to be honest, you hadn't started to really like him till after you punched him in the face.

"I knew Gabe liked you. I wasn't jealous." He grinned. "But I couldn't tell what he saw in you. Figured it was just the mutual trauma. Thought you were two harsh words away from a breakdown, and Gabriel needed a win. That he kept you nearby because he needed to protect his sole survivor. It helps that you're pretty. I figured he might sleep with you, get you out of his system, and that'd be the end of it."

You narrowed your eyes at him. "What?"

"I was wrong, obviously," Jack said, holding his hands up. "But yeah, I know, I was a real bastard."

You stared at him incredulously. "Jesus, Jack. Why are you telling me this?"

"I was wrong, obviously." He turned away then. "What'd you think of me, initially?"

"...After I settled in, I figured you were more dangerous than you portrayed yourself. That shift between friendly guy and scary commanding officer was a little too fluid. And for the record, I wasn't trying to make a move on Gabriel at all."
"I know," Jack said, back to you, shoulders raised like he was guarding his neck. "I picked that up after we started hanging out. I didn't realize quite how bad things were till Gleeson. That you'd been there for him when I wasn't really got under my skin."

"So you came to the sparring class and beat me up," you said dryly.

"That is not how it went and you know it," Jack laughed and turned back around to kiss your hand. "I was curious. I realized then that Gabriel liked you a lot more than he admitted. And I wasn't lying at the hotel; that day you broke my nose, you stopped being Gabriel's little sidekick to me. You were a real person, with damage, sure, but you were loyal, stronger than I expected, and good for him."

"Jack, you're making me sound like some kind of saint. I just nudge Gabriel back into line every now and then."

"It's a talent, and an uncommon one." Jack sighed. "I was arrogant. I remember you sitting there in his office, so cute while you stammered all those apologies, like you expected me to throw you out."

"I did!"

"And I was interested, but maybe a little concerned about what you were getting up to with my boyfriend."

"Jack, I'm really not sure you should be telling me all this," you said.

"Well, it's not painting me in a flattering light. But that's not the point." Jack bent over, kissing your nose. "So we went from there. Ainsley was annoying the hell out of me, that wasn't a front, but maybe I didn't need to hang around as much as I did."

"Goddamnit, Jesse was right. He fucking warned me..."

Jack made a face. "McCree warned you?"

"Yeah, to be careful because the boss's boyfriend wasn't hanging around just to be friendly. I didn't believe him, because there was nothing untoward going on between me and Gabriel."

"Huh. McCree's smarter than he looks."

"...I think you've misjudged enough of us Blackwatch misfits to know you should keep those opinions to yourself."

Jack laughed. "That's fair. There were a lot of rumors flying at the time, but I knew they weren't true. You weren't over your losses, and I picked that up pretty quickly. Though, I will admit, that night you helped me make chili, I didn't accidentally let it slip that we'd fucked on your desk. I wanted to see your reaction."

"I knew it." You poked him in the side. "I fucking knew it!"

Jack scratched the back of his head sheepishly. "It was shitty, I know. But it was just curiosity, I swear. I wasn't trying to pick a fight. Just wanted to see if you were interested, disgusted, jealous... Just curious."

"Wouldn't have mattered. I was still hung up Shin."
"I know." Jack sighed. "Talking about it now, I feel like an ass."

"Yeah, that was a dick move," you said. "You should feel awful."

"Gabriel wasn't surprised, by my ploy or your reaction. He just said not to push you because, yeah, you were still grieving. So don't worry, he dumped the guilt on me too. And I deserved it." He kissed your forehead. "But after Paris...well, that changed everything. The two of us, working together, it felt good." He grinned. "I guess I got a taste of what you did for Gabe."

"I think Gabriel planned it that way," you sighed, because apparently Jesse had been right and you were an idiot for doubting him.

"Probably." Jack stroked your neck. "And then after I came to visit you with that sachertorte and you...well, you were brutally honest. Not just about how I treated Gabe, but about how I treated you and by extension my other friends. I'd been a dick, and I'd been using the job as an excuse. I uh...I might've tried to get you to back down, turned on a bit of the commanding officer aura, but you were unfazed. You just politely, but firmly told me a lot of uncomfortable truths. It was a wakeup call. Had to have a long talk with Gabe about where I'd gone wrong." Jack closed his eyes. "I'll gloss over it and just say he wasn't as polite about it as you."

"So when did you start having the sex fantasies?" You asked, skipping to the good part.

"After you punched me," he grinned. "But Paris was when they kicked in hard. Wasn't till after you and Gabe went at it on the mats that I admitted it to him, and well... he and I weren't going to do anything till McCree started blabbing about your dates. Realized we'd have to make a move, if you were ready. Think you know the rest."

You sighed as he stroked your hair, your hands resting in his lap. "You're a real asshole, Jack Morrison. It's a good thing you're cute."

"The point of this wasn't just till confess my sins and tell you a weird bedtime story. Even before we were really together, we were helping each other work things through. And there were some heavy issues to deal with. Not saying it's going to be perfect or easy, but yeah, you and Gabriel can do it. And I'm here to help, cuddle, make out with."

"Thanks Jack." You cut him off, because you were injured, hungry, and totally unable to have sex right now.

Jack looked you in the eye, shoulders squared, hand on your chest. "It's going to be OK," he told you. "We've got this."

And damn if you didn't believe him.

You didn't pull the knife out. You knew better, just like you knew how this was going to end. You were on your knees, blood already soaking through your shirt.

Lao stretched her hand out to you, eyes wide with terror and maybe some regret. It was OK, though. You weren't mad. You were going to take her home.
She never reached you. The gunshots were claps of thunder. The bullets tore through her, and now you knew it had been three shots. You still saw five or six bullet wounds. She crumpled, blood pouring onto the floor, mingling with yours.

You didn't scream, not this time. You just looked over your shoulder, your eyes meeting Gabriel's. He shook his head at you, looking tired.

"I'd do it again in a heartbeat to keep your ungrateful ass alive," he said calmly.

You woke up in a cold sweat, ragged, but not surprised. It wasn't the first time you'd had that dream. It wouldn't be the last.

"Huh, that's one way to do it." Ziv studied the three long-stemmed glass roses in a vase. There was one bud, and two fully blooming red roses, and they were highly-detailed, down to the green thorns on the stem. "Kind of tacky if you ask me."

"Nobody ever does," you said. "But at least they tried?" You had the card. Jack and Gabriel had signed their names, but there was no message. You squinting, trying to tell if Jack had forged Gabriel's signature. It looked authentic... The card also contained a certificate, signing you up for a pastry of the month club. "I mean I can't kill glass flowers. Can drop them though." You shook your head. "I don't know, Ziv. I used to not have things. Now I have things. What do I do with these things?"

"That reindeer is giving me the creeps," Ziv muttered.

You actually thought it was kind of cute, and when you had patted it down, you found that it was fully poseable. There were no concealed weapons, which was kind of disappointing, but also made sense, because plush toys were made for cuddling and that could have ended badly.

"Do you want to play go?" Ziv stared at the stone-covered go board beside your miraculously still-living plants. Bayan had been watering them, talking to them, and possibly working black magic to keep them going. You weren't complaining.

"Nah. I've got a game going with Genji. Pretty sure Jesse's going to pick it up in a week or so. That, or kick the board over because he's an ass."

"So then, what do you know about Genji's sexy older brother?" Ziv fanned himself dramatically.

"He's bitchy and he likes cake. Strawberry is his favorite flavor."

Ziv cocked his head to the side. "You're not warning me off?"

"I know you're not serious. Not after what he did to Genji." You tried not to glare at Ziv's extra large platter of shahi paneer. The curry smelled delicious, and while you could eat the plain naan that Ziv had "thoughtfully" brought you, it just wasn't the same.

"He talks about you, you know. Tells people "Oh good, you are less irritating than Genji's friend." Which of course leads to my next topic. The rumors about Gérard have died down. You are now sleeping with Genji again."
"Sometimes it's Genji and Hanzo. Damn do you get around." Ziv cackled.

"...You're not by chance the person starting these rumors, are you?" You eyed his curry covetously. Yes, envy had blossomed in your heart. Envy which led to gluttony, or a lack thereof, which in turn caused rage.

"No. Do you want me to start any? I heard Reyes is even moodier than before."

You sighed. "Ziv-

"You got your clearances back. You still haven't made up with him? Not that I blame you. He made a series of dick moves, each wankier than the last. You should make him grovel." Ziv didn't sound worried, he just ate his curry in front of you, and you tried not to salivate.

"...I asked for some space because I have to sort out how I'm dealing with my overprotective boyfriends. Also, because yeah, I am still pissed. Working on it. Plus, I need to come to terms with the fact he might have killed Lao. Keep getting the flashbacks too. Figure they'll die down when I see her in person. The security footage helps, as do the optimistic medical reports. But if she does die, I'll have to sort that out too."

Ziv gave you a measured look, and put the curry aside. "Ben-zona, you're fucked up, Lucky."

"Don't I know it."

Ziv shook his head. "He did have a legitimate-"

"I know, Ziv. I was there. I can't just make feelings go away with logic, damn if I haven't tried that already."

"Well, that explains the irritability. You avoiding Morrison too?"

"...No. Jack thinks he can be supportive of us both, and he's less... You searched for the right word. "He's more laidback than Gabriel about this. I mean, they both can be overbearing, but it's worse if I take damage on their watch, you know? The one who missed it usually does better."

"You do get hurt a lot. Maybe you should just get good," Ziv said, with a dismissive shrug.

You didn't count the number of times you'd stood between him and danger. You just threw your naan at his head.

---

You were upright and walking by Day Seven, though your legs were still weak and you were still on bland, mild foods like oatmeal, creamed corn, and Jack's cooking. He brought you homemade mashed potatoes that night, and while they were good, there was no gravy or anything else to go with them. You smiled and ate them anyway, because Jack looked pleased with himself. They were buttery with a hint of garlic, so you weren't complaining.
But it was literally just a large bowl of mashed potatoes. That was your dinner from Chef Morrison.

By Day Eight, you were haranguing Angela to let you go.

On Day Nine, she complied, whether it was because you were actually well, or she couldn't take your whining any more, it was hard to say. But Jesse and Genji were required to help you carry your ill-gotten gains back to your room. To your surprise, Hanzo came with them, dressed in baggy hakama pants tucked into his boots and a haori coat he wore off one shoulder, exposing a large swathe of dragon tattoo.

"It's a kyudo-gi," Jesse informed you before you had a chance to say something snarky. "Not just a badly-cut bathrobe. Part of a very old, very noble tradition. Just stopping you now, before you get the lecture too. You're welcome, sugarpie." He rolled his eyes.

"Huh. I was just thinking, that's where Genji gets it." You waved your hand in front of your left boob. Was it a coincidence that they liked to show off the left nipple? Was there something wrong with the right one?

Genji gave you a hard look and Jesse snickered.

"Thank you for the bonsai," you said to Hanzo, because he was tapping his foot impatiently. "It's very...miniature."

"...You're welcome," he muttered, ungraciously.

"It was really kind of you," you added cheerfully, because you were taking Amélie's lessons to heart. "I wasn't expecting such an elegant gift."

Hanzo squinted at you like you were being sarcastic.

You managed to hold a placid smile, because anything more enthusiastic would look smarmy on you.

Hanzo looked like he'd bit into a lemon, then accidentally swallowed it whole, but managed to give you a curt nod.

You carried the massive teddy bear, because it was awesome, and if you fell, it would cushion you. Jesse pushed the cart of plants, and Genji picked up the rest, the angry reindeer looking oddly at home in his arms. Hanzo "oversaw" the entire process with mild disapproval.

"So me and you, huh?" You nudged Genji with your elbow. "According to the rumor mill."

"I'm sorry," he said. "But you are just too aggravating."

"You old sweet talker, you."

"Lucky, I have told you many times, I do not feel that way about you." Genji's voice was perfectly dry. "Please, show some restraint."

You laughed into your bear.

"Going OK?" You asked, casually looking over your shoulder at Genji's grumpy shadow.

"It's...odd." Genji didn't turn. "We can talk about it later."
You blinked, the offer completely unexpected. "Yeah, sure."

The walk back to your room was quiet after that, though you felt Hanzo's hard stare burrowing into your back.

Your room now looked occupied, but by some kind of green-thumbed child-packrat. The bear took up an entire corner. The plants were on your dresser, and you wondered the best way to get them some sun, considering your room didn't let in a lot light.

There had been a large gift basket on your bed when you got in, and now that you were alone you could break into it. You opened the card first.

Just some things for you to use now that you're out of the infirmary. -Jack

Whiskey is better than flowers. -Gabriel

Inside were a selection of scented lotions and soaps, a box of chocolate, a bottle of whiskey, a bottle of scotch, and a wrapped box. You studied the alcohol. It wasn't the cheap stuff. It was the first you'd heard from him in five days, and less hostile than you were expecting. He would be manage to be argumentative, but oddly affectionate in one sentence. You opened the box and stared for a moment. Inside was a blue silicone rabbit vibrator. There was another note in Gabriel's handwriting, and you wondered what level of petty to expect.

Maybe this is more for me than you, but going to think about you sprawled out in bed using it.

Better than you anticipated, and you wondered what speech Jack had given him. You also knew that wasn't his first draft. He'd probably begun with something snarky and worked his way up. It was presumptuous, though maybe you could award token points for effort. Not that "points" would fix anything right now.

Starting up your tablet, you sent them each a thank you message. In response to Gabriel, you added, "Why can't I have both?" It was a light-hearted communication, and though it didn't quite feel right, you sent it, because it was polite and ultimately meaningless. You found it wisest not to comment on the sex toy. You didn't have anything constructive to add anyway.

"That might work," Lacroix told you, lighting a cigarette. The two of you were locked in his office. "Petras' tastes run fairly vanilla. You aren't his type anyway. He likes them...softer and younger."

"Eww," you said, holding out your hand for a damn cigarette.

Lacroix just gave you a placid smile. "What does he want, Chanceux?"

"The illusion of control. He wants a metaphorical leash on everyone, me included. As long as I sell him on the idea that he's in charge, I shouldn't have too much trouble. As for the threats, he already knows I "want" the promotion. In the event of escalation, he'll most likely try blackmail. Worst case scenario involves charges of fraternization and threats against whoever I'm rumored to be sleeping with. Most likely scenario is that he "cuts funding" or somehow sabotages a project I'm working on. I'll run a smokescreen project starting today, and have Ziv keep tabs on my amazingly varied sex life."

"Adequate," Lacoix said. "How far are you willing to take the ruse if he decides to push for relations?"

"I'll have no trouble," you said, dryly. You finally retracted your hand, realizing Lacroix wasn't going to give you a cigarette. "I don't even need to take my clothes off to be convincing."

"It is slightly more sophisticated than your "oozing rash" idea. Though that would work in a pinch. I still think you could have practiced your finesse, though I have noticed your handling of the elder Shimada."

"Figured enough people dislike him, I might as well play nice. For Genji's sake." You shrugged.

"Right action, wrong reason," Lacroix clucked his tongue. "We want Shimada's cooperation. Someone has to be the "good cop." And from what I know about Hanzo Shimada, he feels partially responsible for your stabbing."

"What? How?"

"Lao followed him straight to Lucerne. If Hanzo had been more conscientious, he wouldn't have led an assassin to your meeting, or so he believes. We both know we would have had to face her eventually. And I think this worked out in our favor, but no need to let him know that." Lacroix tapped his cigarette on the ashtray. You tried not to look at it too longingly.

"She's alive," you said. "Angela's optimistic about her recovery but-

"But you're having a little trouble getting past the fact Gabriel shot her." Lacroix shrugged.

"Ziv tell you that?" You scowled.

"Non, he would not violate your confidence. But there was no need, Chanceux. I know you well enough. And it's certainly no coincidence that you've volunteered to work more with me."

You sighed. "Yeah, OK." You awaited the snide commentary.

"I will handle the interviews with the elder Shimada, but I would like you to spend some time with him, gauge his thought processes, be... sociable. I think I have a strong grasp of whom he is, but it never hurts to have more information. And it will be a good exercise for you."

"What exactly is his status?"

"No clearances above secret, except for Shimada and On Sing related intelligence. He is here as a "contractor." Agent McCree is keeping an eye on him, discretely. I am rotating other observers out as well. He is a trained ninja, and while Genji has given us a rundown of his abilities, I am not inclined to trust his objectivity."

"Dangerous game to keep him on the base, especially if we can't trust him," you said, not entirely sure that Genji trusted Hanzo.
"That is the game we must play, Chanceux." Lacroix took another cigarette and this time you pretended like you didn't care.

"Would you like a cigarette?"

You narrowed your eyes at him. "No, thank you."

He laughed and lit his. "You need to work on your lying. Also, don't be stubborn for pride's sake. You have often have a limited window of opportunity to seize what you want. Don't hesitate."

You held out your hand.

"Chanceux," he said. "You declined already. The window is closed."

"Lacroix," you said. "I changed my mind. Between you and me, decorum goes out the window, straight through the glass if necessary."

Laughing, Lacroix gave you a cigarette, and lit it for you.

You inhaled, trying to remember the last time you had indulged.

"Hanzo has probably figured out there's something going on between you and Gabriel, given Gabriel's...strong reaction to your injuries."

"None of his business," you muttered.

"I understand he and Genji gave you a lovely bonsai."

"I understand that it's a trap. Can't regift it. Can't let it die. Haven't kept a plant alive since-" You couldn't actually remember keeping a plant alive in your adult life, outside of transporting black-market items short period of time. Orchids were insanely trafficked. "Haven't kept a plant alive."

"You may talk to Ana about that. She gardens some." He slouched in his chair. "Have you thought about what data you will feed Petras?"

"Some things. Thought you were going to mastermind that." You tapped the ash off your cigarette.

"Yes, but you should be paying attention."

"Jack doesn't really know or want to know what Blackwatch does. Gabriel isn't an optimal choice for Blackwatch, because he will cross too many lines to get the job done. Blackwatch needs someone with more finesse. Gabriel needs clearer boundaries. Jack needs to play hero."

"And it's all true," Lacroix smiled. "Some of it is common knowledge, though. He will expect more. You have to give them weaknesses, but weaknesses that our enemies already know about."

"Jack's family," you said, hating yourself for mentioning it.

"Too obvious," Lacroix waved his hand. "Does he have a favorite squad? Maybe a favorite agent? Yourself not included."

"Jack works with Epsilon squad the most under Agent Jemison," you said, because you paid attention.
"Then you point that out. Jemison isn't a bad looking woman. You don't have to say anything, just let them connect the dots."

"I don't want to use them as stalking horses-"

"It is a risk of the job, Chanceux. I will warn Jack, and he will let them know to be extra careful," Lacroix said. "Petras only initially asked for potential problems Gabriel could cause. His leverage is his people, because while Gabriel is unpopular with the brass, he is much loved by his subordinates. Even when he is terrorizing them like a raging bull. That is loyalty, Chanceux."

You rolled your eyes. Lacroix wasn't wrong, but he didn't have to rub it in your face. Yes, you were partially the reason Gabriel was in a bad mood. Maybe entirely.

"That should be all. I know Amélie was looking for you."

You started to rise, then stopped.

"Is there something else, Chanceux?"

"I'm not good at forgiveness," you blurted out.

You expected a smarmy comment, but Lacroix just quirked his lips. "Neither am I."

"How-"

"I would ask Ana," he said after a moment. "Because that is not my strong point."

"All right," you said, wishing you hadn't brought it up.

"Chanceux," he said, pulling out yet another cigarette and offering you one. "I know it is like grieving: a process. In some cases, small cases, you can choose to overlook a peccadillo and find yourself untroubled. In others, it takes more than sheer willpower, especially in cases where the one harmed wasn't yourself, but someone you wanted to protect."

"Figures," you said, sinking back into the chair and just savoring the nicotine. Captain Amari would skin you both alive if she saw this.

"I am sure you will be fine with Hanzo. Genji might not have completely forgiven him, but he wants his brother safe and alive, and so the first steps have been taken. That should help you get past some of it."

"I wasn't." You stopped yourself, because obviously Lacroix was giving you a way to save face. How pathetic was that? "Yeah, OK."

Lacroix smiled at you, too much knowledge in those dark eyes.

"Yeah, you're probably right." You finished your cigarette and got up to go.

"Chanceux," Lacroix said as you went to open the door. "Do you still resent me for that first interrogation?" He didn't sound concerned, and you knew he honestly didn't care. He expected you to be professional enough to get past any personal feelings between the two of you.

"No. You were just doing your job and being yourself. And you're an asshole."

Lacroix laughed.
You blinked after a moment. "Lao is different," you said.

"True. But the same principles apply."

You sent off your report to Petras and studied the updated On Sing dossiers. Hanzo had spilled quite a lot of information, and while it filled in some blanks - On Sing had been experimenting with AI, and they'd made something, but no one was sure what - you had misgivings. You didn't particularly care about the Shimada operations, but you glanced through anything cross-referencing Talon.

You hadn't forgotten Nguyen. And forgiveness wasn't a lesson you needed to apply here. After Lao woke up, you'd be one step closer to Hanoi. The climate there was hot. You tapped your fingers. Either Jesse or Lacroix would have to make discrete adjustments for Gabriel.

There was a knock at your bedroom door, and you looked up, working from your bed. "Athena, who's out there?"

"Genji. He is alone."

"Let him in," you said, still sifting through the wealth of analyst reports that Hanzo's arrival had triggered.

The door opened and you put your tablet down.

Genji entered, gave your chair a singularly distrustful look, but sat down anyway, kicking the door shut behind him.

"I can offer you whiskey and chocolate," you said.

"I would be grateful."

And you raised a brow, because Genji rarely accepted your hospitality. But you got up and broke out the whiskey pouring yourself a tiny bit, because you deserved it too. You opened the chocolates and set them on the bed between you.

Genji removed his faceplate, downed the whiskey in one swig, and then chased it with a piece chocolate. You no longer stared at his scars, accustomed to the damage, even if Genji rarely showed his full face in public.

"He is driving me insane," Genji said after a long moment of staring at your giant teddy bear.

"You can hug the bear. I find it to be therapeutic," you said.

Genji gave you a sharp look and you poured yourself some more whiskey because why not? They'd gotten you the good stuff and hell, you were going to enjoy it.

"Do you want the reindeer instead? I haven't named them. Apparently, I'm shit at naming. You've met Emmy." You gestured to the emitter glowing in its stand, now wearing googly eyes, because you had the time to do that kind of shit now.
Genji just held his cup out for a refill.

You poured. "I'm going to assume you mean your brother. You have to admit, there are a lot of candidates out there." He and Jesse had some slightly unhealthy fre-nemy rivalry. And Gabriel wasn't being particularly pleasant, or so you kept hearing. "Do you need help disposing of the body? Because nobody here is going to blame you."

Genji snorted. "Not yet."

"So what's he doing?" You asked, even though you had an inkling.

"All he does is criticize. It's like we're children again. " Genji, this is unprofessional. Genji, your friend is aggravating. Genji, you shouldn't drink cold water, it will give you a stomachache." His voice grew louder with each iteration of his name.

You looked at Genji's armored torso, unsure if anything less than battery acid could give him a stomachache. "That sounds annoying."

"But he refuses to talk about what happened between us. Always changes the subject, tries to say this isn't the time or place." Genji lapsed into a frustrated stream of Japanese, and you waited for him to finish, because while you only understood bits and pieces, it was probably best to just let him get it out.

"He told us he wanted your opinion on whether or not your clan is worth taking back," you said. "Like he wants you two to join up and be Team Shimada again."

"He won't even talk about them with me!" Genji snarled. "He just makes aggravated older brother face and goes back to criticizing me, Blackwatch, and whatever he lays eyes on. Why is he even here?"

"It sounds like he is emotionally repressed," Athena chimed in, and you realized you'd forgotten to turn on privacy mode. You glanced at Genji, wondering how he would react.

He sighed. "Yes, Athena. He is."

"So he deflects through obfuscation, insults, and denial," Athena continued. "I have seen this behavior before."

You and Genji stared into your respective cups. You refilled your glass and silently topped off Genji's.

"Good whiskey," Genji said. "Thank you."

"You're welcome," you said, taking a piece of chocolate.

"You're not supposed to be drinking yet, are you?"

"Hahahaha. You didn't even mime friendliness. "If you tell Angela, I'll invite Hanzo to poker night."

"You're a fool, Lucky."

"I don't know what you or Athena are talking about," you chirped. You curled up against your pillows and Genji rolled his eyes at you.

"I am not sure of the solution," Athena said, gracefully ignoring your demonstration.
You swirled the whiskey in your glass. "So, Shin and Lao used to commiserate all the time about Asian parents, their crazy-high standards, and the inability to say something nice. In retrospect, maybe that's how Shin handled Captain Patel so gracefully. Like, Shin's mother couldn't come out and say "I love you, be safe," she'd just tell him to wear an extra scarf and remember to eat, usually something warm like nabe. He'd tell her that the stepping stones in the garden were extra slippery and to take care with the kotatsu, because it was old and, really, it was past time for her to get a new one." You smiled wistfully. "With me, it was different. He didn't have any problems showing affection. I was always surprised by how...formal their conversations were."

"That's not abnormal," Genji said after a moment.

"Lao's parents would harangue her nonstop about her poor life choices while sending her all kinds of energy drinks, cutesy knickknacks, and candies. She'd complain that they'd brag about their "daughter in Overwatch" to their friends, then turn around and ask her why she didn't become a doctor or a lawyer." You touched the handle of your tanto. "I'm not sure about relations with parents and older siblings, but I understand being so emotionally-repressed that you do things in a roundabout way that doesn't always translate right."

"You are very good at being aggravating," Genji said with a small smile.

"Yeah, you too."

Genji reached over and took more chocolate. "I forgot that he was like that. I don't know why. I guess it just wasn't something I concentrated on. He was not a bad older brother, just overly responsible and prone to nagging. But if I got in a scrap, he was there, at my side."

"You should probably talk to him over food. Like, get his guard down with something delicious, take a trip down memory lane, then ambush him with an emotional hammer of truth," you said.

Genji cocked his head to the side. "Emotional hammer of truth? I think you've had enough to drink."

"It was supposed to be dramatic!" You reached for another piece of chocolate. "Hit him with something straight-forward and honest, something Reinhardt would say. He's not going to be the first to show vulnerability, because I bet he doesn't know how." You grinned wryly, because you knew exactly what that felt like. "So you go for a low blow. "Brother, did you ever think it would turn out like this? I thought you would always be at my side." You pressed your fist to your chest, speaking in a dramatic stage whisper. "Or "Brother, I missed you, despite what you've done to my social life and my wardrobe." Or "Brother, I trusted you and you hurt me. Was it worth it?" You've got to hit him hard to get through that crusty armor of repression and into the soft squishy underbelly."

"You're very brutal," Genji said thoughtfully.

"Fuck his feelings. He's being a coward and not 'fessing up when he should be begging you for forgiveness. He needs to get his head out of his ass. I don't think he means to be a self-absorbed douchebag, but he is. You need to hit him hard, so he knows he can't weasel his way out of this. Because this isn't something small. This is big. And you've done something just as big by asking us not to skin him for you."

Genji looked away, a flush starting to form on his exposed skin.

"I'm not the only one, you know that. You and Jesse might needle each other to pieces, but he's got your back. And frankly, Gabriel wanted to rip Hanzo's head off back in Hong Kong. Didn't, but wanted to. I think Ziv was plotting something extra evil, but I'm not going to ask. I'm happier not knowing and you probably are too."

"Vo asked me if he needed those sneaky feet for anything," Genji mumbled. "She even offered to clean up the mess."

"Wow, that's like a declaration of love, right there. Vo never volunteers for more work."

"I would also like to add, that I consider you my friend too, Genji," Athena said.

"Thank you," he said gravely. "You both have been remarkably insightful."

You shrugged. "I'm honestly not as stupid as people think. And all that therapy paid off, you know. If I can't fix my problems, I can at least give other people good advice."

"...It is good advice," Genji agreed.

The two of you sat in companionable silence. You finished your glass of whiskey and refilled it, finding courage in the bottom of your cup.

You took a deep breath. "How did you get to this point where you don't want revenge, where you wanted to try forgiveness?" You would blame the whiskey. Because you normally wouldn't have asked Genji something like that.

Genji looked at you. "I think it is different for you. When I was younger, I only cared about myself; I was callow and short-sighted. You value others over yourself, in a way that is sometimes alarmingly detrimental." He took another chocolate and look half the box was gone. "You have made a cause of it. And now, you don't know how to break away from that path. Perhaps once your friend awakens, everything will be fine between you and the Commander. But I don't think it is the Commander that you need to focus on; I think you need to work on forgiving yourself first. The rest will follow."

You blinked, setting your glass down. "Genji, I don't know what you've been hearing-"

"It has always been glaringly obvious that you carry your dead too close to your heart. That you believe if only you had been better, you could have changed fate. We all have our regrets, but your survivor's guilt is heavier than most."

"I don't-" You began.

"Stop that. We both know better."

You bit your lip, wondering now if the whiskey was such a good idea. Because the things he was saying...

"You knew you'd need our help to get her back; that is what you asked of Jesse, Lacroix, and me. Yet you hold none of us accountable for the damage. You blame yourself. In your mind, it was your operation. Your friend. And you alone were responsible for her. She is one of yours. You think I haven't seen this before? You, the Commander, even Morrison, you're all the same." Genji paused. "I'm not saying you aren't upset with the Commander. I'm sure you are. But you have to sort yourself out first. Once you've untangled that mess, you can work things out with him."

"Fix yourself first," you muttered. A universal principle, especially useful in survival situations. Because you had to take care of yourself before you could help anyone else.
"Lao might be one of your people, yes. And you have done more to save her than anyone else alive. That is something for you to remember. Just like it isn't your fault she ended up like that. Save your recriminations for Talon."

You touched the bandage on your stomach. "When did you get wise, Genji?"

"...I've been talking to a cyborg support group. Got some counseling too." He scratched his chin, his face blooming red from the whiskey. "Been studying some of the Shambali doctrines. I don't now how I feel about them. But...Athena's helped. She is...a good friend."

"Thank you, Genji," Athena said.

"Yeah, Athena's great," you agreed.

"It's like you said, it's easier to give other people good advice. Harder to see your own problems objectively."

"Oh no, Jack's finally gotten to us with his teamwork spiel," you moaned.

"I don't think this is what he meant," Genji laughed, and gave a little hiccup.

You eyed your empty bottle of whiskey. "Good to see that it can effect you."

"I don't actually drink the cheap stuff you and Jesse buy," Genji said. "It's really awful."

"Oh," you said. "Wow. You are such a snob. Guess it runs in the family."

Genji sputtered. "Take that back!"

"No." You wrapped a blanket around your shoulders and grinned. "A few more years and you'll be strutting around in a kyudo-gi, disapproving of everyone."

Genji scowled at you. "Still better than drinking that paint thinner you and Jesse try to pass off as whiskey."

"You can buy the drinks this weekend then," you told him.

Genji rolled his eyes, but he didn't argue.

Chapter End Notes

A kinder, gentler chapter for everyone who's been crying. I'm sorry guys. The healing process is going to take some time. And some figuring out just how to forgive people for things they are not necessarily sorry about doing.

I did not catch my cousin's stomach flu, so hooray! Slowly applying for jobs. I have one, and I really do love most of my coworkers. But it's a dying industry and I have dogs to feed. (Which are still cheaper than children and there's no way I could afford children on my paycheck. Not that we are in danger of that any time soon. And I'm good with that. I have a nephew. I see him like once a month. That's good enough.)

Thank you for cake! You know who you are. I got madeleines today and dipped them in a lime, vanilla, and, coconut-infused green tea. It was almost like reading Proust, but required less thinking and shorter sentences. :D
Chapter 36

Chapter Summary

Problems keep cropping up on top of your personal ones: funerals, politics, and Hanzo Shimada. Someone has to deal with it.

Chapter Notes

Anonymous Fanart!

See the end of the chapter for more notes

You woke up to Genji sneaking out. He'd washed the glasses and stacked them on your desk. The considerate act surprised you. Genji tended to be a little shit.

"Lucky, Hanzo was waiting for Genji outside your room," Athena announced. "I warned him, but-"

You reached for your tanto. "Med-leave or not, I will gut him myself-"

"They are not engaging in physical violence. Hanzo is just expressing displeasure that Genji is exiting your room so early in the morning..."

"He thinks-" You began to laugh, and tucked your tanto into your belt. "Yeah, OK, I'll get out there and clarify things." You climbed to your feet, head a little swimmy from the combination of alcohol and your meds.

You came out of your room to find Hanzo and Genji engaged in a sharp, fast, whispered argument in their high-class dialect. You caught the "Reyes" name several times.

"We were just talking and drinking, Hanzo. I'm still too banged-up for sex, if that's what you were thinking."

Hanzo's eyes widened and he looked between you and Genji.

"It is...improper," Hanzo said after a moment. "Your man would not approve."

"Pfft." You snickered. "Genji and I were talking through some of our problems. That's our business and no one else's."

"There are rumors," Hanzo said. "And Reyes seems extremely displeased."

"There are rumors, because someone won't stop mentioning Genji's aggravating "friend," giving everyone else the wrong impression. Gabriel's wrath has to do with something completely unrelated. And we'd appreciate it if you kept that observation quiet, Hanzo. It isn't common knowledge."
Hanzo scowled at you. "Blackwatch," he said, shaking his head.

"Go get some sleep, Genji," you said, and he took your out, walking straight to his room and shutting the door firmly behind him. You gazed at Hanzo expectantly. "If you would like a drink and conversation, give me a moment to refresh myself."

"...No need. I will retire for the evening."

"...Of course," you said, because you were still playing Lacroix's game. "Perhaps later then," you said, confident that he would avoid you for awhile.

Hanzo turned on his heel and marched off.

---

Galanos' funeral is today at 1300. It's the last of them, but there won't be many people here for his. Gabriel will be there, and some other SEP folks. It'd mean a lot to me if you could come, but I understand if you can't. No pressure, honest.

Thanks,

Jack

The message had popped up on your tablet early this morning and you were still weighing the pros and cons. There were a lot of cons. There wasn't time for you to get Overwatch dress blues, but you had a black suit. You'd worn it to a few Overwatch funerals. But for those, you'd always accompanied Gabriel in an official Blackwatch capacity.

You did not sleep well after Genji left and you'd chased Hanzo off. But you didn't remember your dreams. Probably the default nightmare. You sighed, rubbing your neck. You were too drained to want to be around people. Especially upset people and Gabriel, not that those were mutually exclusive groups of people.

You did not like funerals. Nobody liked funerals, but you were still resentful that your people hadn't even gotten proper ones. Their families had received whatever bits could be recovered and identified, which wasn't much, and in most cases, all they got back were dogtag replicas and a letter of condolences. While the individual funeral services had been paid for by Blackwatch, there had been no official ceremony. Not with Shit Spiders active.

And of course, you did not want to see Gabriel yet. The thought of making a scene at a stranger's funeral was utterly appalling. Did Jack know what he was doing? Or was he so stressed that he failed at common sense again?

But Jack had wanted you to come, even though he explicitly stated Gabriel would be there. He knew what he was asking, even if he misjudged the consequences. You blew out a frustrated breath.

Jack needed your support at a goddamn funeral. He'd already been through a chain of them, and he'd only requested that you attend this one. That wasn't too much to ask of you.

    The notes in the gift basket had not been aggressive, even if they had not been conciliatory either. Gabriel wasn't hunting you down and yelling at you. Gabriel wasn't trying to pick a fight. You just hoped your actual presence wouldn't change that.

    The cons outnumbered the single pro. But Jack had asked you to come, like a kid who knew his performance was going to suck, but still invited you because he needed someone to be in his corner.

    You opened your closet and got out your suit. The cons might have outnumbered the single pro, but Jack asking for support outweighed all your reservations.

    Early spring in Zurich was cold and rainy. It was to be a short, miserable, graveside service, with no body. There was a token casket, draped in an Overwatch flag. There were two flower arrangements and a portrait of a swarthy bearded man scowling in uniform. You wondered briefly what picture they would have used for you and then slammed the doors on those thoughts, because you didn't want to go that route today.

    There were a little more than two dozen people and that was pretty sparse for a captain. But then, Jack had called Galanos an asshole. You looked for Chang, since she was SEP, but didn't see her. You didn't expect to; she didn't seem the type to take off work for a funeral.

    You spotted a familiar cowboy hat as you approached the gathering. Jesse was on Gabriel's left side in his usual apparel. Gabriel was dressed up in his formal blue uniform, white collared shirt, dark blue jacket, sharp pleated pants. The outfit normally looked great on him, but neither man had brought an umbrella, and both of them were drenched.

    Pettiness told you to go sit on other side of the gathering. Fuck'em. They knew how to swim.

    Something else, you weren't exactly sure what, reminded you that this was a funeral, one of Jack's people was dead, and maybe you shouldn't be an asshole like Galanos, rest his soul.

    You sidled up beside Gabriel, extending your umbrella over him and partially Jesse, and sat down. Keeping your gaze straight ahead, you watched Jack walking up at the front. He was also in dress blues, holding an umbrella over a crying woman. Tan and slender, she too wore the uniform.

    "Galanos' lover," Gabriel said, his voice calm and measured. It had been over a week since you'd heard it. You'd almost forgotten how deep it was, how it burrowed under your skin and wound around your nerves. "She was stationed on the Baltic Sea."

    "Ah." You didn't look away from Jack, too afraid of what you'd see on Gabriel's face.

    "...I thought you needed space." He kept his tone even. You glanced out of the corner of your eye and found him also staring straight ahead.

    "I do. So if it makes things easier, me and my umbrella can go across the aisle." Your words came out more clipped than you intended but it was too late to take them back. You watched Jack pat the bereaved woman's shoulder, then lean over to say whatever comforting words were expected.

"...That's not necessary."

"All right." You continued looking ahead, feigning attention as Jack began speaking. It started as a somewhat heartfelt speech about sacrifice, duty, and honor, then continued on to briefly address the trials and triumphs of SEP. It didn't even touch on Galanos' personality, which was probably for the best. Jack's gaze stopped on you and Gabriel and he paused mid-sentence, for a second too long, before he resumed talking.

"I can that hold that for you. Jesse's still getting wet."

You didn't think he would hold your umbrella hostage, but you could always replace it. And worst case scenario, you wouldn't melt in the rain. Wordlessly, you passed it over, still able to feel the heat of Gabriel's fingers through your gloves.

No water fell on you, and you focused on Jack, your hands in your lap.

"Thank you, Agent Dogan. De oppresso liber," he said, saluting.

"Peace at home," the brunette woman said, voice thick with emotion and returned the salute. "Peace in the world."

Jack shot you and Gabriel a concerned look before sitting down. He probably expected to see the two of you screaming and pulling hair. That was rude; you could both wait till after the service.

You could feel Gabriel turning to look at you, willing you to acknowledge him. There were little motions in your periphery, twitches designed to catch your attention and trick you into looking at him. You kept your eyes on the crying woman, unwilling to pay him any attention.

He blew out a frustrated breath.

He was going to escalate into making noises? Really? This was a funeral, and you weren't going to talk to him about things because it was a goddamn funeral, not mention you weren't fucking ready, thank you very much. You straightened up, jaw clamped shut, and refused to let your words spill out.

You couldn't focus on Agent Dogan's speech, between her fits of sobbing and the growing tension of having Gabriel right next to you. So you just stared ahead, trying to keep your face blank. It was the statue game: you would hold your pose and acknowledge nothing outside your narrow range of vision.

By the time it was over, your shoulders were sore from just how rigid you'd been holding yourself. Jack walked toward you, having grabbed another well-built man in uniform and hastily introduced him to Dogan. From the musculature of his frame, you guessed him to be SEP as well.

Jack shook hands, made solemn nods, and worked his way down the aisle to where you and the Blackwatch contingent sat.

"Hey," he said, voice a little raspy. "Thanks for coming. I appreciate the support."

"You asked me to," was all you could think of.
"I know." He smiled down wistfully at you and Gabriel. "It's...weird. I called Chang to let her know. And you know what she told me?" Jack took a minute, rubbing his forehead, a small smile playing on his lips. "She said, "good, he was a prick, and I hope you don't expect me to come to the funeral." She flat out said that before I could even give her any details."

You covered your mouth, because you weren't supposed to laugh out loud at a funeral. Why was Jack even surprised? That was quintessential Chang.

Gabriel chuckled beside you. "Sounds about right."

"I didn't think she'd come but, I guess I wasn't expecting that response." Jack shook his head. "I...I can tell you about it later. Chang wasn't wrong."

You had noticed Dogan was the only person who seemed really broken up about it. Which was a sad testament now. You wondered what exactly Galanos had done to earn so much contempt.

"I don't think Rodriguez is going to be able to console Dogan much longer," Gabriel said after a moment.

Jack exhaled, running his palms up and down his face. "I uh...better go then."

"I'll be there in a moment to say "hi" to Rodriguez," Gabriel said.

Jack looked between the two of you and nodded. "Thanks for coming. Sorry it's-"

"It's a funeral, Jack. I didn't think it was going to be fun." You tried to make a convincing reassuring smile, but it was cold, wet, and Gabriel was right beside you.

Jack rubbed the back of his neck. "Yeah, yeah I know. But thanks for just showing up anyway. I mean it."

He straightened up, banishing all signs of discomfort. His worry lines smoothed, the warmth in his eyes diminished, and he squared his shoulders. Aloof and untouchable, the Strike Commander gave you both a curt nod. Satisfied his poise was unshaken, he turned back around and went back up front to relieve Rodriguez.

It was a strange thing to watch, even if you were used to it by now. Well, that was your cue to leave. You stood and faced Gabriel for the first time since the fight in the infirmary. He looked up at you, eyes intent, expression guarded.

"I should go," you said.

"All right." He nodded and took a deep breath. "I know there are things we need to talk about."

He was going to do this now? At a goddamn funeral? Your face must have betrayed you because Gabriel just shook his head.

"When you're ready. You asked for time, and you're entitled to it."

"I know," you said, because you didn't need him to grant you that permission.

Gabriel scowled, like he was going to say something sharp, but he bit his lower lip and shook his head. "I'm just saying it so you know I understand."
"OK." There was nothing appropriate you could add to that.

You looked at your umbrella for a moment, before Gabriel handed it back. You took it and walked away, noting that despite Gabriel being the middle, holding the umbrella over the three of you, Jesse had still been getting wet.

Lao just laid there and you felt like a creepy stalker watching her sleep. She wasn't brain-dead, and Angela was talking about bringing her out of the induced-coma, but no one was sure how she was going to react. You asked Athena for a science-fiction recommendation, since Lao had liked that genre. Athena had come back with the Conservation of Shadows, by Yoon Ha Lee. You weren't sure who had suggested it, because it was dark, poetic, and so far over your head it wasn't funny. But your eyes fell on the short story titled "The Battle of Candle Arc" and you read that one first. It was part of a longer series and it was one of those high-concept severely-altered reality stories that Athena had to explain for you. You read it out loud for Lao, because it did seem like something she would have liked. And then you read it again, silently and carefully, for yourself. Because it gave you some insight into Lacroix's twisty-turny mind, and you weren't sure you liked what you saw.

The protagonist was a brilliant military general, who had started his career as an assassin and spy. His government kept throwing him into hopeless battles, and he kept winning, because he was clever, ruthless, and charming. He sympathized more with his enemies than his superiors. He used civilians as a diversion to wreck the opposing army, but managed to avoid sacrificing them. At personal cost, he gave the enemy general a chance to commit suicide over the traditional death by torture. He did all this injured, drugged, and concussed. And even though you'd only read the short story, you knew he was destined for something terrible.

You read them all, because they were dark, poetic, and so far over your head that you periodically needed to ask Athena what the hell was going on. You knew there were audio recordings available or that Athena could designate a process or three to read to Lao. But it was important that you took the time to do it.

Something occurred to you, after reading those stories. You wondered if Lacroix had suggested the book or if Athena was subtler than you gave her credit for. And then you considered the conundrum of Lao. Because no one was quite sure how deep her programming ran and what exactly all those implants did. You looked down at your fingers and knew you had an answer. You just weren't sure it was a good one.

Your anger at Gabriel had diminished, though the pain remained. Time was an excellent healer. But you still had the dreams. Sometimes you missed him, his touch, his smell, the sound of his voice. That ridiculously content face he'd make after a good meal, all relaxed brows and sleepy smiles. That chain of expressions he got when you caught him off-guard with something funny while he was in a bad mood. It was a quick series of shifts: anger morphed into outrage at being interrupted, but ended up as poorly-concealed amusement that eventually gave way to real laughter.

He could be extremely difficult, but you still liked being around him. There was a security in his presence, and when you'd been at his side, you'd felt like the two of you could handle anything. Over a year of being his base-side shadow and now you were on your own. It was less lonely and more alone than you expected. You knew his habits, his routes and routines. You knew how to avoid "accidentally" running into him, because Gabriel did not play fair. So you stuck to skulking around, not quite sure what your reaction would be if you encountered him right now. But that also meant avoiding some of your well-meaning Blackwatch comrades. You did not want to hear about how the Commander needed you, any more than you wanted to explain what was going on.

Working solo was nothing new. It was an old habit, and it still fit.

Lacroix was right, not that you ever had to tell him that. Forgiveness felt a lot like grieving, the anger and acceptance being key factors. And it was no longer about what he did, but how you handled it.

Which brought you back to Lao. And the realization that maybe you were doing everything wrong. Because what you felt for Gabriel was independent of what you felt for Lao. And while currently, those threads were tangled, you understood that Gabriel, had not wronged Lao. That was on Talon. And even if Gabriel didn't care if she lived or died, he was not the cause of her problems. If Jesse or Genji had pulled the trigger, you would be angry at them- but you suspected it wouldn't have affected you like this. You felt too strongly about both Lao and Gabriel. They were inextricably intertwined in the conflict, and having them so close together amplified your feelings to an almost unbearable volume. The sheer force of it drowned out the finer points of logic with a big "fuck all."

Sometimes you just had to shut it down and walk away for a moment. But ignoring it would not fix the problem, and things would bleed over. You had to take it in pieces, and only enough so you wouldn't choke. Everything moved at a gradual pace and you hated just how long this took. Why you couldn't you just power through it? Weren't you strong enough? Weren't you smart enough? Those were the wrong questions to ask.

Because it didn't work that way. Heavy things left a deep footprint. If you wanted to do this right, you had to take it slow. You had to patch things up correctly or everything would fall apart. You'd learned that much from grief.

You were not wrong to feel this way. You just had to work though it. Knowing this didn't fix everything, but it was progress.

You sat in a booth diagonal from Lacroix, pretending to be engrossed in your tablet. You sipped coffee and tried not to look smug. Lacroix checked his watch a few times. After ten minutes, you ordered a gyro and smothered a laugh when Lacroix finally gave up and moved to the seat across from you.

"He should have been able to track you," Lacroix scowled.

"He will. But he'll have to cheat." You unfastened the top button of your coat. You'd left your scarf in Gabriel's office, and while you wanted it, you hadn't quite worked up the nerve to go back there.
Your gyro platter with fries and a salad had just arrived when Ziv barged through the door, windblown and fuming. His long striped scarf got caught in the door and he swore as he had to turn around to free himself. "That was a bitch move," he snarled at you, tossing a wet sealed plastic baggy onto the table. You scooted your plate over and continued eating, trying not to smirk.

Lacroix sighed. "You're supposed to be able to follow her, Ziv. I realize you're very capable of hacking the security cameras, but this was an exercise in tailing maneuvers and spotting dead drops."

"She was up a fire escape and across the rooftops the moment I turned my head! Then she hid the package in a goddamn storm drain!"

Lacroix rolled his eyes. "Sit down."

Ziv plunked down next you gracelessly.

"Chanceux is a shifty creature, but you know this and should have been prepared. If I tasked you to tail a Shimada, you would be in for an even greater challenge."

"Get good," you mouthed and Ziv glowered at you.

"Chanceux, don't taunt him," Lacroix said, not even looking at you. "If you had half his talent at hacking, I wouldn't need to put him in the field."

Ziv stuck his tongue out at you, and you smiled blithely, eating your food. You had access to hacking tools, and now that you the option of bringing Athena's drone along on missions, you were at peace with the fact you would never have Ziv's skills.

The gyro was wonderfully seasoned and covered in feta cheese. You ate it happily, not even caring that Ziv had started to steal your fries.

"Now, I wanted to talk to you two away from the office." Lacroix sighed as you stuffed your face, not even looking up from your plate. "Really Chanceux?"

"I'm listening," you said with your mouth full, because you knew it would annoy him.

Lacroix just shrugged and also started taking fries off your plate. You gave him a hard look, but he just smiled at you and clicked his teeth. He gestured at Ziv, who set up a small signal jammer at the booth. You raised a brow.

"As I was saying, I wanted to talk to you away from the base. Shit Spiders is progressing nicely. But I am going to need some help with one of our UN members."

You sat back, wiping your mouth.

"Is this a favor?" You asked.

"Not for them," Lacroix said, smiling thinly. He opened up his briefcase and slid a folder across the table. The notes were handwritten, a portrait paperclipped inside.

Régine Hoffman, age 64, looked 25 years younger. She was brunette with that rail thinness that only the very wealthy or the near dead could achieve. The representative from Luxembourg, she sat on the First Committee, also known as the Disarmament and International Security Committee (DISEC). The Blackwatch oversight motion and the age-related active duty restriction on Reinhardt had stemmed directly from her. Interestingly enough, she and Nguyen did not get along, Nguyen being a vocal member of the Fourth Committee, the Special Political and Decolonization Committee (SPECPOL).

Hoffman was an unapologetic Europe First politician, and you wrinkled your nose, reading her dossier. Her philosophy was "rebuild Europe first, and regenerate its economy, then try to help everyone else." Which sounded innocuous at first, except she wanted to use Overwatch to do it, ignoring the fact that Overwatch agents came from across the globe and this was the United Nations, not the European Union. There were a lot of arguments you could make, but at this point, you didn't care. She'd gone after Reinhardt and Blackwatch. That was enough for you.

Ziv's scowl deepened as he continued reading.

"What do you need?" You asked.

"Termination," Lacroix said. "She's the biggest threat, and I've played out the various scenarios. She's smart, nothing worth blackmailing her about, and she's been very good at smoothing over scandals. She's the one spearheading a lot of the policies to reshape Overwatch. She's not Talon, but she's in deep with Petras."

You nodded. "Accident?"

"Would be best, if that's not possible, make it a very convincing false flag."

"What's the catch?"

"She's rich, powerful, and expecting several groups to move against her. I want you and Ziv to come up with a plan. Consider it a training exercise."

"What have I told you about training exercises that involve live fire?" You said, finishing up your gyro.

"You have plenty of experience planning ops. She relies on a lot of Volskaya, Vishkar, and Hyde tech. Her people have access to a lot cutting edge weapon's firms for security. That's how her family made its money: arms dealing."

Ziv dipped a fry in your Tsatziki sauce. "How innocent are the people around her?"

"I'd prefer not to involve civilians. But her admins, her bodyguards, they're all part of the machine. She does have a few grandchildren. I assume Chanceux has qualms about that kind of collateral damage."

You frowned. "Yeah, I guess I do."

"Wimp," Ziv muttered.

"Big talk from someone who rides a desk most of the time," you reminded him.

"If even Chanceux won't do it, "it" is probably "a bad thing," Ziv. Just to calibrate your moral compass," Lacroix said leaning back in his seat.

You blinked. When had you become the moral one? Well, that just showed how fucked up this crowd was.
"If she's as bad as she sounds, it's worth it," Ziv said sharply.

"Maybe. But we are professionals. Accidentally killing extra targets is sloppy work. It draws attention. It brings repercussions. We are not sloppy, Agent Mihret."

Ziv squirmed at the reprimand. "I understand."

"Right, well, I think I'll do some research, and Ziv, you do a workup on her security, the systems, and what to expect. We can compare notes next week." You filtered through your active operations: the rest of Candle Arc hinged on Lao waking up; Hanzo was avoiding you; Fong Chun was still intact; Petras was currently satisfied with your reports; and Hanoi was still on hold.

"How'd the On Sing phone call go?"

"They want to meet in person," Lacroix said. He checked his watch. "I have to sit down with Jack, Ana, Gabriel, and now Reinhardt," he smiled at you, because of course he knew you'd talked Reinhardt into accepting the upper management position. "And we'll decide who goes from there. Did you want your name in the hat?"

"I've been tracking them since they hit our radar and I've had a lot of interaction with them. So yeah, I do."

"Even if Gabriel is chosen to go?"

You narrowed your eyes at him. "Gabriel is not an ideal negotiator in this situation. Trying to intimidate them immediately is the wrong approach. We need to be smart and diplomatic."

"Ouch!" Lacroix laughed. "What are you saying?"

"Gabriel is smart and capable of being diplomatic, but that's not how On Sing will view him. You said it yourself, they're big on hierarchy. Jack, for sure if we're actually looking at a formal ceasefire. You need to go along, and if not Jack, at least Ana would be ideal. Reserve Gabriel for if you have to twist arms."

"I would offer you a cigarette, but we are not allowed to smoke in the restaurant," Lacroix said, looking pleased. And then it hit you, that Lacroix had been doling them out as training treats, every time you did something clever. You sighed, because what could you even say to that? And you still wanted a cigarette.

"So who's in on this op?" Ziv asked.

"Just you, Chanceux, and me," Lacroix said. "Operation Spinshot is now active."

Assassinating a UN General Assembly member was pretty high up there on the list of things you were "not supposed to do." So you figured you'd do your research independently, just in case Lacroix wasn't telling you everything. You even cross-referenced interactions with Amélie's family and found only one connection: Hoffman had visited Château Guillard years ago. Interestingly, Lacroix's life, before DGSE, was...untraceable. You contemplated that for a moment. Whatever, whoever Lacroix had been, either had not existed before his DGSE career, or had been wiped. That worried you.

As for Hoffman, what mattered was that yes, she had been trying to redirect Overwatch focus by rewriting policy. Lacroix was good at finding linchpins and bottlenecks. You studied Hoffman's dossier, matching it to her public persona, her voting record, and the variety of not-so-public files Ziv had acquired for you.

Reinhardt had not wanted you to kill the person attempting to sabotage him. But you weighed the value of the removal against Reinhardt's disapproval, and found it to be an acceptable trade. Not that Reinhardt was going to find out about this. This was one of those off the books missions. Your current smokescreen was Operation Willow, an investigation into Talon offshore bank accounts. Ziv had already unearthed the information, but you plodded along, making regular "reports."

Working from your room was a little strange. But the plants were soothing, and you really liked your giant teddy bear and grumpy reindeer. You put the fox out too.

"Lucky, you have been in your quarters all day. Have you eaten or are you pulling a Winston?" Athena chimed in.

You snorted. "I have snacks in here, you know."

"The cafeteria is still open. You should have a balanced meal. It would do you good to get out."

"You've got the motherly delivery down," you said. "Been practicing on Winston?"

"More often than is healthy," she said, sounding a tad frustrated. "Ziv is helpful about getting him out of the lab."

"Glad he's good for something," you muttered, mostly out of habit.

"Why do you do that?" Athena asked.

"Do what?"

"Why do you and Ziv constantly put each other down? I know you don't mean what you say, but I have seen other agents goaded to violence from similar comments."

You sighed. "Really Athena? I think you already know."

"You and Ziv are extremely vicious. But yes, I have heard similar behavior as a contextual symptom of camaraderie."

Lying to the baby AI seemed like some kind of sin. Which was ridiculous, because you weren't a saint and usually had no problem prevaricating. "I knew Ziv's grandmother."

"I have witnessed the last footage of Rivka Cohn."

"...Yeah." You took a deep breath. "She was like that every day. It could be boring. It could be snowing. It could be moments before death. She was always calm, acerbic, and took no shit." You rubbed your forehead. "This stays between us, Athena. OK?"

"Of course, Lucky."
"You already know I recruited Ziv, because I needed a hacker badly. I knew he would want to avenge her if he knew the truth, and I knew I could trust him because of it." You tapped your fingers on the wall. "I know he wants revenge, as much as I do. So part of it is yeah, his grandmother was a big influence on us both." You sat there a moment. "The other part? Well, I brought him into the world of black ops. I manipulated him. I showed him that his grandmother hadn't died peacefully. I know he had a fight with his mother because he joined up. I know he isn't talking to half of his family now. I know that's partially my fault, for recruiting him. And I know that on some level, he resents me for it, because family is kind of a big deal." You tried to keep the bitterness out of your voice.

"Lucky-"

"I might have messed up his life," you said. "And he's my responsibility. So while we're friends, while we're tied together by a terrible bond, there's also that tension between us. If he has to vent by being a little shit to me, well so be it. Between us there are no worries about rank and HR. And then we go on. It doesn't hurt that we're both emotionally-repressed and banter is just another way to build camaraderie, as you said."

"He isn't talking to his father because his father disapproves of his sexuality. His siblings are split on the issue. His mother is coming around," Athena informed you.

"Well, that's a relief," you said. "About his mother. I know for a fact Rivka wouldn't have cared. Hard to believe her son is such a dick, but whatever."

"Do you and Ziv ever talk about these things?"

"Nah. We just drink alcohol and swagger a bunch. I just pay attention to the grapevine." You grinned. "I know, I know. It's silly. But don't worry, I don't actually dislike Ziv. He's a pain in the ass, but he's one of us."

"You do know that Ziv Mihret is a grown individual capable of making his own choices and does not require your guardianship, correct?" Athena asked. "Just like Lao Yue is a grown individual, and while she does require guardianship, nothing I could review about her situation implies that you had any fault in what happened to her."

Genji and Athena had been talking. Or Athena had just extrapolated upon what Genji was saying that night with the whiskey. You slid down on your bed, putting your tablet aside.

"I know that's true. But I also know that they're my people. And I have to take care of them. That's my measure of success, Athena. Can I keep my people alive? Can I avenge my dead? You have similar directives."

"Yes, but Winston and Ziv made it clear that while I could help, but I could not fix people. They did not give me impossible parameters. I know I cannot protect everyone. I know I cannot stop people from making unwise decisions or save them from circumstances outside my control. I know that some of my agents will not come home. But I will do the best I can. And I will remember them all."

You stared at the ceiling. Nwazue. Valdez. Simon. Rivka. Patel. Shin. You hadn't forgotten either. There were more, and you remembered them too, but those were the names closest to your heart.

"You have set your parameters too wide. You cannot protect Ziv from every danger. You could not have anticipated that Talon would do the things they did to your friend, whom everyone assumed was dead. You had no way of knowing. So to take on that burden is arrogance. To believe that you are the sole authority is a fallacy. You are smart, but you are not omniscient. Your standards are unreasonable, making your goal impossible to accomplish."

"I've given this talk before," you said after a moment. "So this is kind of ironic."

"I know. I heard it in the Strike Commander's quarters when you gave it to Commander Reyes."

"They are always forgetting privacy mode," you sighed.

"I...stop listening when physical intimacy is beginning, the exception being if someone is calling for aid. And Ziv made a point to explain roleplay and BDSM culture to me."

You put a hand over your face. "Godfuckingdamnit."

"But I don't know if I truly agree with Genji that your issues with Commander Reyes will be entirely sorted out once you come to terms with your own limitations. You do not have a reputation for giving quarter. In fact, you are known for being extremely vindictive. Forgiveness is not one of your strong traits. However, your...good relationship with Commander Reyes has been observed by numerous people. Mostly Blackwatch agents who would like you to return soon, because you are an excellent intermediary."

"...Where are you hearing all this?" You didn't move your hand off your face. Forget Ziv, in the future, you would tap Athena as the expert on the rumor mill.

"The cafeteria. I don't listen in on most conversations in private areas. I am too tempted to comment."

You sighed. "It's going to be a problem when they finally announce that you are independently intelligent, you do realize that, right?"

"The cafeteria is closing soon. You should get some food."

"I'm sure Captain Amari and Lacroix can think up a way to smooth the transition," you said, because apparently Athena was developing some avoidant behaviors of her own.

"You should go eat, Lucky. You get cranky when you're hungry."

"...Thanks, Athena. Please don't model yourself after me and Ziv. We're terrible."

"Is Genji a good role model?"

And that's when you knew the baby AI was trolling you. You mentally upgraded her to "preschooler."

You lay face up on the mat, trying to summon the air back into your lungs. It wasn't coming back. Why wasn't it coming back?

"You need to work on dodging," Genji said, bending over and offering you his hand. "You don't have the physique to just absorb and shake off the damage."
You coughed, glaring at him. The air slowly filled your chest and you wheezed, taking his hand and wobbling to your feet. "Behind you."

Genji rolled his eyes and drew in a deep breath. "I am aware."

Hanzo stood by the gym door, arms crossed, judging everyone, but especially you.

"Progress?" You bent over, hands on your knees, and focused on bringing oxygen back into your body.

"I'm rehearsing it," Genji said. "Strategizing and anticipating his actions. When we talk, I will be prepared." He crossed his arms. "Angela says I should just ignore him till I'm ready. She says there's no hurry for me to be ready."

"She's right," you said.

"It would unwise for him to get injured any time soon. She is...not impressed."

You grinned, because a year ago he never would have admitted half these things. "I bet." And you were glad he acknowledged that he had other friends looking out for him.

"Here he comes," you said and straightened up, your side hurting.

"Genji, you have to be careful with injured people," Hanzo said, and you saw Genji's eyes roll so hard, you worried they'd get stuck.

"Genji always has to take it easy on me," you said. You rifled through your bag and pulled out your tablet.

"Not true," he said politely. "I just choose to because you are fragile and delicate, like toilet paper."

"Thanks man, right in the heart." You glanced at Hanzo, dressed down in Blackwatch sweats. "How would you handle it, Hanzo?" You pretended to check your tablet. "Hey, Genji. Don't you have that appointment in ten minutes?"

Genji's expression did not change. "Yes. Thank you for the reminder."

"Genji, you have to have her remind you of your obligations?" Hanzo sounded vaguely horrified.

"Off you go," you told him. "I got this."

Genji coolly went off to his make-believe appointment and you stood beside Hanzo, watching him go.

"I am sorry that my younger brother is such a nuisance," Hanzo said stiffly. "I am grateful that you have looked after him."

You regarded the man in front of you. Hanzo Shimada was built and strikingly handsome. You wondered how Genji would have looked if... No, best not to go in the direction of "what if."

"It is no trouble. Genji is a good friend." You crossed your arms. "How would you handle sparring with an injured person?"

"I would not risk it," Hanzo said, giving you a hard look. "Especially with your near-fatal wounds.” You remembered what Lacroix said about Hanzo feeling "responsible." It didn't matter if he liked you or not, he was a duty-first kind of guy, as evidenced by some of his poor life choices.

"Barely even scarred," you said, lifting your shirt. "Angela does good work."

Hanzo studied the fading red line across your stomach, it was about four inches. The blade hadn't been that big, but Angela had literally had her hands inside you, patching you up.

"...I don't know if what she did for my brother was the right thing." The words dropped from Hanzo's mouth and he stared at you in shock for a moment, like he couldn't believe he'd said that. He hung his head, waiting for you to retaliate with something cutting. You were tempted.

Examining your gloves, you reflected on your ship of Theseus conundrum. "Should she have let him die?" You were careful to keep your voice neutral.

"I-" Hanzo looked you in the eye and for the very first time, you recognized shame on his face. "It might have been kinder."

"Nothing is kind about life," you scowled. "Death is a mercy. But that doesn't mean we should all just roll over and succumb." You watched Hanzo squirm and it was satisfying. "You're still reeling from the shock. You'd mourned your terrible mistake, quit your original life, and carried around the image of your younger brother like your own personal cross to bear."

When you found out Lao was alive, your kneejerk reaction had been self-recrimination, followed by wondering if death would be kinder, partially because you had already accepted her as dead. Reopening that wound had not been pretty. You had closed that door, and to find out that something worse had happened? Wasn't death better than enslavement? It was only after some careful, logical thinking that you realized that that was a false dichotomy. You weren't limited to those two choices, and neither was Lao. So you could relate. The difference, you realized, was that you had not put Lao in that situation. Hanzo had to live with what he had done to Genji.

"Now you've got a second chance, and you're fucking it up, because you can't slip out of the roles of whom you were. Before everything went down, you were Genji's older brother. He owed you a certain level of respect, as befit your position. You were supposed to protect him, because you were the older brother. That dynamic has changed. Whatever you had before led you to that awful fight. If you want a relationship with your brother, you're going to have to change."

"I don't know how to talk to him." Hanzo's voice was reedy and thin. You had to strain to hear him. You felt a momentary flash of pity, if only for Genji who had such an emotionally stunted brother.

"Let's go to the kitchen," you said. You picked up your bag and started walking. "I'll make some cheap tea, and you can politely pour it out when I'm not looking."

Hanzo snorted, but he fell in beside you.

"Captain Amari makes the best tea," you told him, opting for easy small talk while you walked through the halls. "Jesse is pretty good. Genji helped me pick out a Japanese tea set for him for Christmas. He laughed at me, but then he whisked me up a nice cup of green tea, so there's that."

"Agent McCree? The cowboy?" Hanzo could not keep the incredulity out of his voice.

"The one and only." You reached the kitchen, relieved to find it empty. You put the kettle on and then began mixing up crepe batter. It was supposed to rest, but it still worked when used immediately. Hanzo sat awkwardly at the table.

"You assume you're the one who needs to do the talking," you said after a moment of silence. "I assure you, that other than "I'm very sorry" and "that must have been really hard for you, how can I help?" you don't actually have to say anything. All that Asian parent nagging? You're totally shooting yourself in the foot here, because you don't have that relationship with your brother any more. You broke it."

You coated your cast iron skillet with nonstick spray and dropped some butter in the pan. The first few crepes always turned out weird, but they were a lot easier than people thought. "You can reestablish a relationship with Genji. But don't waltz in and act that everything is going to be like it was. That kind of assumption is just going to piss him off, and rightfully so."

The kettle chirped and you got down two mugs and a tin of bagged jasmine tea. It was Jesse's, but he wouldn't mind you taking two sachets. Not after he ate all your imported Girl Scout cookies.

You poured the hot, but not boiling water over the teabags and set Hanzo's mug in front of him. Then you ladled the batter onto the pan and got out a silicone spatula. Those made prying and flipping much easier. A minute or so on each side and it was done. You started a plate, and then got into the pantry, reaching behind a wall of canned beans to retrieve the Nutella you'd concealed there. Vo would eat it straight out of the jar if she knew you had any.

There were bananas, cream cheese, and strawberry preserves, and you put those out as well. You made two stacks of crepes and set them on the table, before retrieving your tea. You sipped it and began smearing Nutella on a crepe.

"I know it's not cake, but it's what I could do on short notice."

"Thank you." Hanzo served himself.

"You've seen my prosthetic fingers," you said. "Smashed a few of them in Nagano."

Hanzo eyed you warily. "Yes."

"There's this philosophy problem my shrink told me about. Called it the Theseus paradox." You studied your left hand. You were still wearing your gloves, but you knew exactly how those metal fingers looked, every joint, groove, and curve. "The idea is that Theseus went on this long journey. And over time he had to replace the components on his ship, till none of the original parts remained. And the question is, is it still the same ship?"

"Shinto shrines are rebuilt every twenty years from sacred groves."

"Is it the same shrine?"

Hanzo shrugged. "It is considered to be so."

"Fair. I've read the answers, by the way. The philosophical ones are all long-winded and boring. They get pretty legalistic: what is the form? What does "the same" mean? The gestalt exists in the fourth dimension with a specific time-slice and I don't even know what that means," you said, taking a bite of your chocolate and hazelnut crepe.

"Our cells regularly die and are constantly regenerating," Hanzo said after a moment. "We are microcosms of the death and rebirth cycle."
"Yeah," you agreed, even though you weren't entirely sure where he was going with that. "So I don't have the right answer to that question, but I came up with my answer. Are you the same person you were five years ago?"

"No."

"But you're still Hanzo Shimada. DNA matches. You got the tattoos. You have been trained on how to behave in all kinds of social situations, you just don't..."

Hanzo bristled.

"I am not the same person I was a year ago. And neither is your brother. I think that's the wrong way to look at it. We're not "ships." There's a whole, I hesitate to say soul, but something quintessentially ourselves. Memories. Patterns of behavior. Space in existence. I don't know. And all that's going to change as you age, unless you're really pigheaded and immature. The physical? It anchors you, but it doesn't define you." You sighed, wiggling your fingers. "At least, that's what I'm trying to believe. Your brother struggles harder." You finished your crepe. Tea was shockingly helpful when addressing deep subjects.

Hanzo closed his eyes.

You sipped your tea and put jam and cream cheese on your next crepe, before rolling it up, and taking a bite.

"Even if he forgives me, I don't know how to forgive myself."

You paused. "I'm not sure how to do that either. When you figure it out, let me know."

Hanzo gave you a wide-eyed incredulous look.

"Forgiving oneself," you clarified. "Not my place to forgive you. My job is to support Genji, and help him dispose of the evidence, if need be." The jasmine tea was strong and fragrant, just the way you liked it. "I think your path to redemption begins with helping Genji."

You weren't sure it was redemption you were looking for. But you understood then that if Lao lived, you were going to watch over her for as long as you could. You wondered if that was how Gabriel felt about you. What if you were more his penance than...? Your hand shook slightly and you downed more tea.

"I am sorry that I tried to kill you," Hanzo said after a moment.

You studied his hands. He'd healed up fine. "Apology accepted, and I actually am kind of over it."

He looked at you expectantly.

"I wasn't trying to kill you that day," you said dryly. "Genji wanted you alive and I was doing my best to respect that. You just kept shooting at me. Stabbing you was self-defense."

Hanzo shook his head and took another crepe. "I see."

"I can give you a fake apology if you want. But I figured since we're being so honest today, I'd skip that."

Hanzo shook his head. "No, I guess it wouldn't be the same." He tossed his hair over his shoulder. "These are good. Thank you."

"You're welcome."

The two of you finished your tea and crepes in silence.

"...I consistently have trouble getting hot water for bathing. Is that common?" Hanzo asked out of the blue.

"Must be the pipes," you said, dryly, knowing full well Athena was listening in. "I'll talk to maintenance for you. I'm sure it will improve."

Chapter End Notes

Well, meant to update earlier, but I'm writing a feels/sexy scene and got carried away. But now I will stop and update, because I need to go to bed, because I work today and OMFG why do I do this to myself?

I have madeleines. I also got this Japanese "pudding" which was whipped cream on the bottom, a thin layer of sponge cake, a flan/custard pudding, topped with more whipped cream, and then fruit decorating the side. It was beautiful and delicious.

I'm super failing at being a grownup though. Visited some friends this weekend and we talked about life and compared salaries. (I lose. I lose by so much.)

But it's given me something to think about. Because maybe I shouldn't be hunting down whatever mediocre better-paying job I can find. Maybe I should be doing something different, I'm just too slow to figure out what I want to do any more.

(Once upon a time, I had a plan, I tailored my education, and I made it to that point, but then life happened and I had to choose between job and family and family came first. Now it's several years later, and I don't believe in that job any more anyway, but I haven't found anything to replace it.) I'm a little bitter about it, but mostly because I should have just done something else. It was cool, but now I have...reasons for not wanting to participate. I actually think I might have a lot better luck if I move out of my tiny city and find somewhere with better prospects, but if I don't know what, then I can't really pick "where" you know. Endless cycle of millennial doubt.

I shouldn't be babbling at 7 AM. I should be in bed. Good night!
Chapter 37

Chapter Summary

On Sing wants to talk, a lot. Jack wants to talk, and more. Tataryn doesn't want to talk, but you aren't going to give him much of a choice.

Chapter Notes

I will fully admit I had too much fun writing the On Sing characters because they're AU variants of some of my original story characters.

See the end of the chapter for more notes

On Sing's single delegate had arrived carrying a large briefcase. And while it tested negative for explosives, the tech was unidentifiable. It weighed in at seventy pounds and none of the basic scanning equipment could not get a visual on the interior. It could be full of plague bombs. It could be full of sandwiches, really heavy ones. The woman carried a gun and refused to explain anything to anyone less than "Strike Commander Morrison."

You still hadn't gotten around to getting fitted for your dress blues, and to be honest, that was fine. It wasn't like you were attending any formal Overwatch ceremonies, in an official capacity ever. So you wore your Blackwatch armor into the foyer, receiving nervous looks from the Overwatch agents. Ziv followed behind you, looking almost intimidating in a fitted black suit.

"We'll take it from here," you told In-Sec guards manning the entry checkpoint. "Ms. Zhai is expected."

The On Sing delegate was a girl barely out of her teens. She had a confident smile, and was runner-thin with poison green eyes and a perky pixie cut. You guessed she was of Eurasian descent. She wore a bright green peacoat, black slacks, and a pair of cute ankle boots. But she hefted that enormous case with one arm, not looking the least bit strained.

"Oh, it's you," Ms. Zhai leaned forward, head bobbing as she looked you over. "You're shorter than I expected." She smiled apologetically. "That wasn't an insult. I've only seen you in cam footage, some of it rather grainy. Big fan." She spoke rapid-fire English with a Midwestern American accent, and that was not what you were expecting. "Really liked your work in Belfast. Hell, I even liked your work in Hong Kong. And Shanghai? That was pretty cool too."

You felt Ziv stiffen behind you. You looked around, noting that the In-Sec officers had leaned in a little too close, and were very consciously not looking at any of you. Overwatch personnel needed to learn how to eavesdrop better. That shit wouldn't fly in Blackwatch.

"Ms. Zhai, we should take this conversation somewhere more private."

"Call me Feng. "Ms. Zhai" makes me sound so...old."
She straightened up as you extended your hand to take the case.

"I got it. No worries." She grinned widely. "Oh, you were in Shanghai too. Sneaky bastard. And cute." She winked at Ziv.

Ziv wrinkled his nose at her.

You'd met Chung. You'd met Fong Chun. Feng seemed very different. But she was referencing too many top secret operations for you not to take her seriously.

Ziv led the way, Feng in the middle, with you bringing up the rear.

She showed no strain under the weight of that briefcase, and you kept your hand close to your sidearm. Athena was giving everyone back in the conference room the play-by-play, showing security cam footage when available. You weren't comfortable with Feng carrying that large case unchecked, but Jack and Lacroix had overruled Captain Amari and agreed she could bring it in during the negotiations.

Lacroix chose the heavy conference room - it had lead shielding plates and blocked most signals communication. There was a rectangular table, Jack at the head, Captain Amari on his right, Lacroix on his left, and then surprisingly, Hanzo was there, in full kyudo-gi glory.

Feng sauntered in, grin never wavering. You shut the door behind you, wondering about a biological or chemical weapon attack.

"Hi!" Feng waved and breezily hefted the briefcase onto the table. "I'm Zhai Feng, please call me Feng. It's an honor to meet you." She looked between Jack and Hanzo, a silly grin on her face. "It's like a goddamn modeling shoot. You guys are all so pretty," she sighed happily.

Captain Amari raised a brow. Lacroix inclined his head. Jack's expression remained stony.

Hanzo stared at her. "Hanzo-san, you remember me! I'm flattered." Her smile turned sharp, and your fingers brushed against the hilt of your tanto.

"How do you know Ms. Zhai?" Jack asked Hanzo.

"So cold," she said, shaking her head.

"...Ms. Zhai is one of the traditionalists that wanted my approval for a Shimada-On Sing ceasefire. She didn't call herself that."

Everyone blinked. "Traditionalist" didn't really describe Zhai Feng.

"She also asked if she could see the dragon dance," Hanzo muttered and Ziv snickered beside you.

"It was unprofessional, I know, I'm sorry. I already apologized like a dozen times." Feng shook her head. "In my defense, I'd had like five cups of that expensive sake you like and it went straight to my head."

"Why exactly are you here, Ms. Zhai?" Captain Amari asked coolly.

"Because I don't want to fight Overwatch, and while some of the family was caught up in delusions of grandeur, I'd rather just stick to our usual business and go back to doing our thing, you know? Fighting loses money. Fighting attracts attention. Fighting causes damages and should have been avoided." Feng sat down. "Anyway, I've permanently settled things with the rest of the family. There is only one authority above mine, and you get to deal with them." There was an edge in her voice, and it was only in flashes when that cheerful mask slipped, that you recognized her as a predator. "And then if you're amenable, we can be friends." She tilted her head, all smiles again.

You and Ziv stood at the door, hands on your weapons.

"What did you bring with you, Feng?" Lacroix asked.

"This and my gun, just in case. You know how dangerous the world is. Great Aunty thinks you're trustworthy, but Great Uncle is paranoid as fuck. And the cousins? Aiya. They're nuts." Feng unlocked the latches on the case. "So, your resident AI is going to freak out, but I swear on our honor and bloodline that we are not here to do harm."

"We don't have an AI," Captain Amari said sharply.

Feng removed her coat, revealing a heavily tattooed left arm, green and black lines running from her fingertips and spiraling up into her sleeves. "Come now, if we're going to be friends, we shouldn't lie to each other. Don't worry, your secret is safe with me. I personally find Athena to be very charming."

Jack's jaw stiffened. You waited for the signal. But Lacroix shook his head, the motion barely perceptible.

Feng kept going, unpacking a metal console, the parts already glowing an eerie green. Grinning, Feng pulled a pin off her shirt and stuck her finger, before pressing the bloody digit down against the pad. "疏不见亲."

A cylinder of green light formed in the center, and four glowing life-sized figures appeared. They congregated around Feng, clad in traditional Chinese robes. A man and woman stood side by side, and behind them were a set of twins, androgynous and almost impossible to tell apart. They were very detailed, though transparent, like neon ghosts.

"Commander! Shut it down! It's a god-" Athena's raised voice cut out. But the lights stayed on and you heard no screams. You and Ziv drew your guns, but Jack held up his hand.

"Strike Commander Morrison, and friends, may I present Great Aunt Zheng, the head of our clan? Her consort, my Great Uncle, and my esteemed cousins, may they never have physical bodies again." Feng stuck her bleeding finger in her mouth.

"What is the meaning of this?" Jack growled.

A shrill static reverb sounded through the room, and the woman's voice came out in Chinese, though no dialect you recognized.

Rolling her eyes, Feng put her finger against the pad, smearing more blood. "Better?"

"Yes." The woman's voice was rich and deep.

"If she wasn't so thin-blooded, this wouldn't be a problem," one of the cousins snapped, sounding masculine. "I still think-"
"You don't think, which is why we had this problem to begin with," the more feminine twin said.

"Hush." The man's image flickered and the twins shut up.

"Restore my AI's connection," Jack said.

"Sorry, just didn't want you panicking before I got the introductions out of the way," Feng said, uninjured hand discretely sliding into her jacket pocket.

You nudged Ziv and he nodded.

"-hear me, Commander? Is everything all right?" Athena spoke rapidly.

"It's fine, for the moment. Cancel any military action, but leave them on standby. Transcribe all events for Winston." Jack's eyes never left the figures around Feng. Ana rubbed her forehead. Lacroix remained impassive, but Hanzo gaped with undisguised horror.

"Yes, sir."

This was what Athena felt in Hong Kong. This was what was watching you in Fong's apartment. You wondered how far their tendrils stretched. Were they four separate programs or one? How much of Shanghai and Belfast had they seen?

"So you have an AI in charge of your clan?" Captain Amari asked, studying the blurred motions of the figures.

"Eh, no. Not an AI. The translated consciousness of our ancestors," Feng said proudly. "Better than brains in jars, but the same concept applies."

Captain Amari sat back, teeth clenched. "That is an abomination."

"Yeah, I know, some of the family said the same thing. But I like my great aunt and uncle, and I'm pretty sure the transfer took. Hell, the twins are eerily accurate and still annoying as hell." Feng leaned back. "It's a work in progress. We're discussing the benefits of omnic bodies, and while it's do-able, they'd rather wait for organic ones. The biotech will get there eventually. Great Aunt Zheng is a goddamn genius."

"You can stop talking now, Feng." The woman stepped forward, her hologram hands resting on the table. "I am Zheng, head of the On Sing, and the final authority on their actions. I wish to propose a friendly ceasefire."

Jack stared. "I want you to stop dealing Shimada drugs and aiding Talon."

"Easily done. What else?" Zheng asked, looking bored. The light figure swirled in her hanfu robes, taking in the room before, examining her long nails.

"We want whoever planned the assassination of Commander Morrison. And any details you have on Talon and Shimada operations," Captain Amari said.

"We have no problem with that," Zheng said.

"We need to know your intentions before we agree to any kind of detente," Jack said.

"Mmm," Zheng said. "I see." She glanced at Hanzo. "I wasn't expecting to see you here. Taking back your territory, Little Dragon?"
"..You have been dead for a very long time, Lady Zheng. How is this even possible?"

"Have I?" Zheng laughed softly. "Well, then I don't know how any of it happened," she said dismissively.

Feng just smiled.

"We are a very private family, Strike Commander. One wayward branch decided to expand into the underworld, and that does not reflect our values. We have since cut it off."

Feng drew a line across her throat, her smile wide. "Like that."

"We are scholars, alchemists, and scientists. We wish to pursue our studies unmolested. We are not commercializing war. We are not looking to kill people. We are not experimenting on anyone outside our bloodline, and only with their express approval."

Feng flexed her tattooed arm. It was about as muscular as a wet noodle. But she'd managed to carry that case while making it look effortless.

"We have wealth. We have influence. And we can reach you. But I respect your mission and have no desire to wage a long bitter war. We both have enough enemies. We know what the world thinks of AIs, and we are not AIs. We just want to be left in peace."

"On Sing likes quiet, but On Sing doesn't like peace," Lacroix said, eyes glittering. "I have heard of your work, Zheng. Your research in bioengineering was brilliant, but your ethics somewhat appalling."

"It never affected the quality of my work, and I only took volunteers," she said.

"The poor, the desperate-"

"And sometimes, I even saved them," she said. "Those days are gone. I will only work on family. And young Feng is the only family we trust now. Even if she is a fool, she is loyal and she is blood."

"And she can't protect herself forever," one of the cousins said snidely.

"So yeah, you kill me, that's it for the loyal involved family. Of course, then you've just incurred the wrath of my ancestors, so, it was a gamble I was willing to make." Feng shrugged. "They have a lot of wrath."

"Even if Feng is the only one you trust, you have at least three omnic development centers scattered throughout the mainland, a slew of shell companies whose revenue numbers in the billions, a large stake in Lucheng, and a few hundred Triad soldiers who swear fealty to you," Lacroix continued. "Why shouldn't we salt the earth?"

"It will be a war of attrition. We are familiar with your operations throughout east Asia. From your focus on winnowing the Shimada to your intentions for Hanoi. We are aware of them all, and we could make it very difficult. But it doesn't have to be that way. Leave us alone, and we'll leave you alone. Help us occasionally, and we have long memories and excellent guǎnxì."

Zheng folded her hands. "You are a calculating man, Mr. Lacroix. You know that this is the best way to avoid unnecessary bloodshed. Even if you don't care about casualties, you care about the success of your operations."

Lacroix inclined his head. "I see. I agree, you do have excellent social capital, Madame Zheng. And your work has always been quality. But why aren't Feng's brother and parents onboard with you?"

Feng rolled her eyes. "My brother is a coward. And my parents aren't interested. There was feud in my grandmother's generation. After that bloodbath, Mother washed her hands of the whole thing."

"How did you achieve the transfer of consciousness, and more importantly, how did you get through our shielding?" Ziv piped up.

"We'd have to be very good friends to talk about that," Zheng drawled. "But it's not off the table. It's just not anything most people would do. Suffice to say, you can't do this with corpses and it is a one-way trip."

So they'd killed their bodies to do the transfer? Yeah, that wasn't catching on any time soon, though you could see a few fanatics trying it out.

"As for your shielding, this device piggybacks off the ambient backscatter and in doing so, circumvents the usual defenses. You can have it if you like, as a peace offering," Zheng said.

"You really want peace," Lacroix said, rubbing his chin.

"You really want us to admit that we are in a position of vulnerability," Zheng said. "And we have. Yes, we can fight you. We can hurt you badly. But you will win in the end, and it will be a waste of lives. Meanwhile, the instability from the Omnic Crisis will continue to spread unchecked. I wish to avoid that outcome."

"Ana?" Jack gestured.

"I want more information on their technological capabilities and just what kind of research they are conducting. That is, if you want an alliance." Captain Amari did not look happy.

"Noted," Jack said. "Gérard?"

"I want a blood oath from Feng and Zheng, if we agree to this. On Sing is slippery, but they guard their honor."

Feng looked slightly annoyed at that. "Really, like full on blood oath?" She tapped her mouth.

"Yes," Lacroix smirked.

Feng groaned, and you realized he meant a classical blood oath. Eww.

"Hanzo?"

"I have no opinion. If they no longer aid the Shimada, I am fine."

"But we could be friends, Hanzo," Feng chirped. "You, me, Genji. We could be buddies. It'd be like a reality show: disenfranchised mafia heirs! Only I guess, I seized power back, so it's a little different."

Hanzo stiffened.

"That wasn't a threat, young Shimada," Zheng said. "Feng is just overly enthusiastic and her social life has been curtailed by the infighting."
"She was also dropped a few times," one of the cousins said.

"And no one in China wants to marry her because she's too American," the other cousin said.

"And flat-chested."

"And ugly."

"Fuck you both, you're just jealous that I have a real body."

"Enough." Zheng scowled and the cousins fell silent. "That is our proposal. We will give you time to think it over. And we will be very grateful if you ensure no one murders Feng while she's in Switzerland."

The machine whirred to a stop and the lights faded.

"Athena?"

"They are gone. Winston is running a workup now."

"So you have old Fong handy?" Feng asked, spinning around in her chair. "Because that's the last order of business."

Lacroix nodded at you and you left the room, going across the hall to where Fong waited, handcuffed. The older man looked a little rough, his skin sallow, and his face unshaven. He was still paunchy and his hair was combed, and you felt no sympathy.

"I remember you. You were the one with Reyes." Fong narrowed his eyes at you. "I will not forget you."

You snorted. "The feeling is mutual." You held the door open, not offering to uncuff him. He stood haughtily, and stalked out. You had to open the conference room door for him too, which kind of ruined the effect.

"One intact Fong Chun," you said. "Accessories sold separately."

"They sent you?" Fong looked down his nose. "You?"

Feng laughed. "Mr. Li sends his regards." And she lunged, faster than you expected, too fast for an unenhanced human.

You had your gun up even as she gripped Fong's head and twisted, the crack echoing in the conference room. Ziv swore. Noticing your guns, Feng raised her hands as a sign of surrender.

"Blood debt fulfilled," she said tightly. "Fong was the last bigshot pushing for more international involvement. Southern branch of the family," she continued on, like everyone would understand. "Piece of dogshit shed family blood first. Big no-no."

"We could have done that for you, you know," you said.

"I wanted to make sure we did it right. Personal honor at stake. Now, I am sorry about the mess. I can take him with me if you want," she said.

"We'll clean it up," Lacroix said, unfazed.
"So I do get to leave, right? No, "hey look a penny!" And when I look, you guys black bag me and send me off for rendering."

"Would you really look because of a penny?" Ziv asked.

"I'm ADHD as a hamster. I'd look because you said "look," she said, lowering her hands.

"We are considering your...great aunt's offer," Jack said, a pained expression on his face. "Will you require transportation back to Hong Kong?"

"Shanghai," she said. "I'm not a southern girl. And if you're offering, sure! We'll maintain a ceasefire for one week. We'd really like your decision by then. But no pressure."

And then she bounded over to Captain Amari, ignoring your guns trained on her back. "Ma'am," she said, wide-eyed. "As a completely separate matter, can I just say that I really look up to you? Like you're awesome, and I have your poster on my wall, and you inspired me to become a really good shot. I am really good," she said earnestly.

"I...am flattered," Captain Amari said, not quite sounding that way.

"And you're even hotter in person," she said to Jack. "Like, wow." She fanned herself. "Sorry, that was inappropriate. I uh...I need to get out more." She slunk back toward the door. "Nice meeting you, Mr. Lacroix. I hope you sort things out with Ms. Nguyen soon. You guys were such a good team back in the day!"

You blinked.

Lacroix's smile was serpentine, his eyes flat. "Thank you for that reminder, Ms. Zhai. I hope you and that police detective can work things out."

If she was bothered by Lacroix's knowledge of her personal life, Feng didn't show it. "Unlikely, given my new career path. But hey, love conquers all, maybe?" She shrugged sadly.

Then in the blink of an eye she was smiling as she waved at Hanzo. "Good to see you again!"

You and Ziv escorted her to the transport bay, relieved that you wouldn't have to ride along.

You returned to the conference room to find Winston and Torby arguing loudly over how to handle the On Sing tech. Hanzo was gone, as was Fong's body. Captain Amari was yelling at Lacroix. And Jack sat in the middle of it, resting his face in his hand.

"So she's on her way back to Shanghai. Didn't leave till we saw the ship takeoff."

"That's a relief," Jack said. "I...wasn't expecting any of that."

"Me neither, and I read the briefing," Captain Amari said, glowering at Lacroix.

Lacroix shrugged. "I didn't know for sure they'd digitized the minds of their dead relatives. It seemed a bit absurd to speculate on in writing."
"The tech has always been there," Winston said. "Especially with the advent of AIs, but very few people have been clever and bold enough to experiment with consciousness transfers. I would assume they used some kind of bioweb matrix to ease the transition, and well, their bodies might even still be alive somewhere. Just in case."

"So you're sure it's not a god-program?" Captain Amari asked.

"The power readings were impressive, but I can't verify it. While Athena was temporarily blocked out, it's more likely Ms. Zhai had a jamming device on her person. This projector is an interesting piece of tech, but it doesn't have that physical capability." Winston glanced at Torby. "Unless you have another opinion?"

"Sounds about right," Torby grunted.

"Saw her fussing with something in her jacket right before the Athena picked up the connection again," you offered.

"While there are a few reasons Zhai would play that masquerade, I am inclined to believe that it is not a true AI. They might be more dangerous, but it is a different beast altogether," Lacroix folded his hands. "Is it a coincidence Ms. Zhai left us a blood sample?"

"That was for a DNA lock, I think," Winston said. "I'm not actually sure. Angela might be the one to ask, especially since it apparently needed more blood to run properly?"

"How much of that was total bullshit?" You asked Lacroix.

"As far as I could tell, none of it was complete bullshit. Some of it was twisting the truth, but Zhai didn't outright lie to us. She is not the only blood relation active in their group, but she is the favored one. There are at least four dozen cousins and other forms of extended family who support her. That does not include retainers, omnics, and other non-blood members. But that support is tentative. Not everyone approves of her youth, mixed heritage, and...personality. She is trying to consolidate power fast. And the quickest way to do that is to halt the conflict with Overwatch. I will have a dossier prepared. Zhai is not...the one I expected to inherit. And I'm not entirely sure she will survive.

"But her immediate family is staying out of the conflict. I'm torn as to whether she is smarter than she acts, or if Zheng has chosen an amusing puppet to distract from the actual danger. I'm actually leaning toward the former."

"How well do you know Nguyen?" Jack asked.

"...Very well," Lacroix said. "She taught me a lot, which is why I'm approaching Hanoi with such caution. Nguyen is an old hand at intelligence work. She knows we're coming."

"Can we trust them to hold up their end of the bargain?" Jack massaged his forehead, and you wondered if he named his headaches after agents. You knew most of yours would be named "Ziv" and "Lacroix" and "Goddamnit not again, Vo."

"If Zhai Feng swears a blood oath and Zheng backs it, I'm inclined to believe them, though Zheng doesn't have blood any more, so does that make it impossible? I wonder." Lacroix leaned forward. "But despite their declarations of "fondness" for Zhai, I don't doubt they would sacrifice her if it was expedient."

"Run it by the analysts," Jack said. "Winston take that down to the lab. Athena, forward the meeting transcripts to Commander Reyes and monitor all signals intelligence. If someone can get a reading of the ambient backscatter levels that would be helpful. Lacroix, Ana, I want your written recommendations as soon as possible. Mihret, see if Winston and Torby need any help in the lab. Lucky, you're with me."

You nodded and followed Jack out of the room.

"Have you informed Lieutenant Jemison's squad of the potential political fallout?" You asked, because you were on the Overwatch side of the complex, and it wouldn't do to talk about personal matters.

"She's aware of the upgraded threat. Not too pleased, but Epsilon squad has handled worse." Jack took long strides and you adjusted your pace to keep up. "Lacroix has kept me updated." Jack stuck his hands in his pockets and frowned. "Ah. I forgot something. Meet in your quarters?" He lowered his voice.

"Sure," you said. "You eaten?"

"Not yet. But I'll grab something on the way down. You want anything?"

You remembered that bowl of mashed potatoes and stifled a snort. He was picking food up, not cooking it. "Sure."

Jack flashed you a tired smile. "See you in a bit."

You smiled behind your armor and headed back to your room.

You changed into sweats, and settled on your bed, flicking on your tablet to study up on Hoffman. You had unread messages and browsed those instead:

OMFG, you nearly gave me a heart attack! You were on some European streaming news after a terrorist attack and Gabriel looked so pissed! Jack says you're OK, and I'm so glad! Michael is too! He's the one who recognized Gabriel and you.

I meant to thank you for the photos, but then I had to dig up some of those pictures I promised you. So here you go. A pleasure doing business with you. I have more if you do! :D

LOVE!

Maggie

P.S. Jack said he'd consider letting us come for the summer!!!! Thank you!

With undisguised glee, you opened up a picture of Jack, still in the middle of growing, his limbs too long, his body too skinny, staring proudly at the camera in nothing but a red kilt and high-tops. Someone had drawn a red bulldog on his bare chest and you had no idea what any of this meant. His hair was shaggy, and he looked so pleased with himself that you started laughing.
The next was a shot of him a little older, eyes crossed, and three quarters of a cheeseburger stuffed in his mouth.

The final one was an angry Jack, and several other teens flicking off the camera as they huddled in the pond, their clothes missing. You wondered which sibling stole them. You suspected Jane.

You wrote back and thank you note and asked for context. You did not mention Gabriel.

The next message was from Amélie, checking to see if next Wednesday would work for an outing, because Captain Amari was going to have to cancel again. You checked your schedule and agreed.

The final message was group reminder from Jesse that you were going out tomorrow night and Genji better not chicken out.

"The Strike Commander is outside," Athena announced.

You got up and opened the door, even though Athena could do it for you.

Jack was dressed down in a hoodie and sweats, the hood up, and he carried two boxes of takeout. You let him in, and shut the door. He looked around the room, eyes settling on the stuffed animals.

"Figured I'd take a page from your decorating manual," you said.

He set the food down and leaned over for a kiss. "It looks like you're finally settling in. I like it." His hands trailed down your sides and you swallowed as he nibbled on your bottom lip, smile a little too mischievous.

"Food first," you said as his hands dipped under your waistband, fingers skimming your hips.

"Haven't seen you since the funeral," he murmured. "I thought you weren't going to do this alone." His hands stayed on your bare skin.

"Been busy," you said, breaths coming shallow and quick. "Sorry."

"You like the basket?" His tongue flicked against your ear and you shuddered, gripping his shirt. "Or should I give you something else?"

"Damnit Jack. I..." You rubbed the back of your neck. "I want to, but it doesn't feel right." Not while you were sorting your feelings about Lao and Gabriel.

Jack kissed your cheek, withdrawing his hands. "Whatever you want. I still get to cuddle you though, right?"

"Yeah."

Jack gave you that happy smile and grabbed the food, settling down on your bed. You sat beside him, pleasantly surprised to find a somewhat balanced meal inside: fettuccine alfredo with chicken, roast asparagus, and a slice of garlic bread with pesto dip. Jack had gone with green beans, more garlic bread, and spaghetti and meatballs. You stole a meatball, just because you knew he'd let you.
"How are things?" He asked, grinning as you popped the meatball in your mouth.
"Sorting myself out," you said, after you'd chewed your food. "And other people apparently. Both Genji and Hanzo have come to talk about their problems. Got to admit, I didn't expect that." You leaned against Jack. This was nice, but someone was missing and your chest tightened.

"Hanzo Shimada..." Jack began to laugh. "Do I want to know?"

"Well, Genji came to complain that Hanzo was being a dick, and proceeded to eat half my chocolate and drink my whiskey. So I had to help, because otherwise he would taken it all. Then we talked about my problems, and I'm a little disturbed by how perceptive Genji is. And then Hanzo is waiting outside my door to tell Genji off for behaving improperly..."

Jack snorted. "Brotherly stalking is very proper."

"-Like, I've been making up excuses so Genji can escape him." You laughed. "Lacroix has me as the "good cop." So eventually I had to sit him down, make him tea and crepes, and talk about how he could try to relate to his brother. Hint: stop nagging him." You sighed. "How's Gabriel?"

"He's OK. Not trying to guilt you, but he misses you, you know." Jack put an arm around your shoulder, tilting his head back.

"Miss him too," you said, and found that was true. "Less...angry with time. But I need to figure this out before I get any more twisted up inside." There were some thoughts that came clearer when you were outside Gabriel's protective orbit. You weren't sure if that was a good thing or not. Because now you wondered if you were Gabriel's atonement for Black Base Delta.

"Anything I can do?"

"I want to see Lao. I don't have to be unsupervised or anything, I just want to be in there and talk to her. I know she's not awake. But..."

"But you need to see her with your own eyes." Jack sighed. "I'll talk to Ana."

"Thank you." You put down your fork and ruffled Jack's hair. "How are you holding up?"

"Gabe's sleeping in my room a lot. I'm not complaining though." Jack gave your fingers a sauce-smeared kiss and you rolled your eyes, wiping them off on your napkin. "We're trying to give you space, but I figured it wouldn't hurt if I checked up on you."

"I appreciate it." You paused. "That night in the infirmary...you mentioned that I was Gabriel's sole survivor. How much of that factors into our relationship, do you think?"

"He's so overprotective and I realized I'm kind of that way about some of my people-"

"Are you sleeping with those people?" Jack asked dryly.

"Just you and Gabriel, but, I meant the extreme cases. Like Lao. So no."
"We're fussier over you because you've had the most close calls in recent memory. You're...not enhanced, and we're very aware of that while you're skilled, you can't take the same kind of damage we can. It makes us worry more." Jack stroked your hair. "I'm sorry I put that idea in your head. Trust me. Gabriel wouldn't let it get this far out of pity. No matter how much he jokes about how hopeless I am."

"Ah, OK." You finished your food, getting up to toss the empty boxes in the trash.

Jack reclined on your bed, taking up the whole thing. He tapped his chest and you fit against him, knees resting between his legs.

"It's silly. I know it's because of me that we're...taking a break. But then I got worried and-
"

"You're under a lot of stress," Jack murmured, rubbing your back. "Relax." He held you against his chest. "You like his gift?"

"Haven't tried it yet," you admitted.

"Too much?"

"Too tired," you said. "Lacroix's given me some heavy-duty shit and while I'm not complaining, I'm doing my due diligence, because it's Lacroix."

"Thought you were taking it easy," he frowned.

"It's still in the formative stages. I'm in research mode. Lots of reading and stalking."

"...I'm afraid to ask," Jack said. "So I won't. Just be careful, OK? Please?"

"I'm always careful," you said, kissing him.

"Liar," he murmured.

"No, seriously, I'm like "this is a terrible idea, but it's the only one I have, and it has the best chance of success. Good thing I have armor on." Maybe I need a safety helmet too?"

Jack began to laugh. "That is not the same as careful. Do you even know what that word means?"

"No Jack, I was raised by crows. I've only made it this far by parroting everything I hear; I don't actually understand your language. Good trick, yeah?"

Jack just shook his head. "I just want you to come home safe. If anything happens to you-"

You kissed him, not liking where this was going. Jack growled beneath you.

"Let me finish!" He snapped, and rolled you onto your back. "You're not distracting me that easily." He pinned you against the bed with his hips, giving you an exasperated head shake.

You grinned sheepishly at him.

"Don't be so flippant," he said softly, nose to nose with you, hands clasped against your cheeks. "I've lost a lot of people. I really don't want to lose you. You know what that kind of heartbreak is like." He shook his head, eyes pleading. "So please, don't do that to me."
You touched his face carefully. "I...uh, sorry."

"Not mad at you. Too relieved that you're OK. And it wasn't me on that op with you. I couldn't be this relaxed if it was." Jack smiled wryly.

"Oh, I'm aware." You remembered Operation Cobblestone Dust very well, just like you remembered the Code White in the Alps, and the aftermath of Shanghai Noon. Gabriel...reacting to your injuries did not come as a surprise.

He sighed. "I know, you already got lectured. Just saying. Nearly losing people, sometimes your logic goes out the window, doesn't it?"

You thought about Lao. "Yeah." It took you a moment to realize he was referencing Gabriel, and you winced. "I know, Jack."

"Wasn't just Gabriel who was on edge, sweetheart. I know you're still sorting through it. I'd be remiss if I didn't remind you that you weren't thinking straight either."

You were silent for a moment. "That's fair."

Jack rested his hands on your stomach. "May I?"

"Yeah, it's not too terrible," you said, grateful for the change of subject.

He rolled your shirt up, and peeled back the gauze, taking a long look at the ridged red line. "It doesn't look bad at all." He shook his head, hair falling in his face. "You're luckier than you deserve to be," he said, carefully fixing your bandage.

"I have enough ugly scars," you said.

"Only on the inside, and you're working on those," Jack said, pressing a kiss into the skin above the bandage. "You look pretty good on the outside."

"Flattery isn't going to get you anywhere," you said, hoping you meant it.

Jack just grinned. "You're so tense. You sure I can't help...? It doesn't have to be sex. I can just use my hands, my mouth. I can just watch or you can. Hell, we can make out like teenagers." He pressed an open-mouthed kiss to your throat, and you shivered against him.

"I-" You swallowed, because once Jack started on you, you both had trouble stopping. "I want to, but...I think I'll feel bad about it later."

Jack sighed. "Well, that's not what I want. Cuddles it is then," he said, rolling onto his side. "Want a back rub instead?"

No, but you'd take one.

At first, you thought it was your imagination. Then you suspected it had to do with Hanzo. Except, you made a point to avoid Hanzo for the next day, and lo and behold, Tataryn still kept popping up wherever you went. Sure, he'd be nonchalant and reading a book in the hall outside Lacroix's office. Or he'd be chatting up Diallo in the gym. Or he'd be shamelessly flirting with Sinaga in the cafeteria. But Fedor Tataryn was following you, and you didn't like it.

You didn't have any personal problems with Tataryn. In fact, he went out of his way to be charming and affable, if only because his expense reports were always a mess. His receipts usually came back coated in something gross: cheap wine, machine oil, human bile.... And you knew he was skimming off the top, but only in small amounts. Gabriel said to let it go, as long as it was only a little and he did the job right. Tataryn was a Blackwatch amnesty-recruit. You didn't know exactly what he'd been doing for the Russian mob, or Ukrainian mob, or the Georgian mob: if reports were to be believed, he'd been playing all of them for years.

The worst part? Tataryn was gorgeous and he damn well knew it. He kept his wavy blonde hair long, and when he dressed up, he looked like a European fairytale prince: icy blue eyes, straight nose, high cheekbones. He could have quit Blackwatch to be a model. Except fashion models normally didn't enjoy scamming and murdering people quite as much as Tataryn did.

You took the long route back, deciding that you should deal with this sooner rather than later. You ducked into laundry room, waiting for Tataryn to pass by the door before you jumped on his back, legs wrapped around his waist, forearm locked around his neck.

"Why are you following me, Tataryn?" You asked softly in his ear.

He gripped your arm, and you could feel him swallow roughly. "Good ambush, Lucky. Now you let me go?" He coughed. "Please?"

You dropped off his back, your hand traveling to your tanto.

"Not that I don't like having you on top, but maybe you could be gentler with me? I am no super soldier." Tataryn turned around, massaging his throat. You could never quite place his accent. Eastern European, for sure, but way the he said his "r" sounds shifted all the time.

"Answer the question, Tataryn," you said, watching him carefully.

He held up his hands in a placating motion. Tataryn was taller than you, and probably stronger. But he looked worried and you glanced around. The hall was pretty open. You glanced at a security camera, and winked. Because Athena would be monitoring the situation too.

"Maybe we could talk in private?" He asked, pointing at the laundry room.

You backed up, gesturing for him to go first, and he nodded, hands still in the air.

"Good to see you're feeling better, Lucky." Tataryn smiled at you, but he had shark eyes, flat and dispassionate. It was one of the reasons you'd never gotten too close to him. He mimed congeniality very well, but something unpleasant lurked beneath his skin. "I hope you liked the carnivorous plant." He leaned on the laundry-folding table, stretching out so you could admire his black leather pants and too-tight t-shirt.

"...Thanks, Tataryn." You crossed your arms.

"You're very welcome. And please, call me "Fedya." Honestly, Lucky, we've known each other for over a year now--"

"Tataryn, quit stalling."

He gave you a slick smile. "It is nothing bad. I promise. I wouldn't mess with the boss's woman. I like living."
"Do not worry, Lucky. I ran the team providing hotel security at the ball. Whatever you, the boss, and Morrison got up to, is none of my business. But the boss has good taste, I have to admit." He preened, fluffing his hair.

You fought the urge to bury your face in your hands. You were an adult and you were not ashamed. You forced yourself to watch him, your left eye started twitching.

"Bet you just thought I was just another handsome killer. I too, am good at being underestimated. Too pretty, they say." He laughed, eyes bright and sharp like a cat.

"Goddamnit, Tataryn." You massaged your temples. You'd forgotten Gabriel had Blackwatch security on duty that weekend.

"I am discrete, Lucky, as is my team. Do not look so upset. I was only surprised you had not bedded him sooner. I know I would have."

"We are not talking about my personal life."

"What about work? Are you coming back soon? The boss certainly misses you." He had the nerve to laugh at your expression.

"I will stuff you in that industrial washer and turn it on." You pictured him going round and round in a front loading washing machine, while you waved at him through the little glass window.

Tataryn gave the machines contemplative look. "Who you do is your business. I am just...yanking your chain, as they say?" He chuckled, way too amused by that figure of speech. "Boss asked me to watch your back. No spying. No reporting. He was very clear. Said you'd made an enemy of the Director. He did not want to leave you without backup."

You sat on a dryer, thinking it over. Tataryn knew way too much not to be in the loop. And assigning you a bodyguard, without informing you, while he was keeping his distance, was something Gabriel would do. That Tataryn specifically said he wasn't reporting on your actions did not reassure you, though Gabriel had to know that you'd strangle him for having you spied on. You'd message him later, just to clarify.

"Just stop," you said, shaking your head. "I've got enough problems. Don't add to them."

"If you ever need another...blonde, invite me!" Tataryn winked at you. "I am very flexible and open to most things."

You rolled your eyes. "Look, I'm more worried about base-side sabotage during an op. The rest of the time, I'm golden." You watched the cheer slide off his face, replaced by a cool business-like demeanor. "If you want to keep an eye on that, I won't stop you."

"No no no." He shook his head. "Boss said I was to look out for you while you were out and about. Unless you want to give me your itinerary and promise your poor Fedya that you will not deceive him, I will be your shadow for the foreseeable future. Do not worry, I will not talk to you. I will only make sad eyes at you from a distance."

"...Just be more discrete."
"Oy. You go straight for the throat. Such a formidable woman. No wonder the boss likes you so much."

"I'm going out tonight. With McCree and Genji." You crossed your arms. "You're not invited."

"I am sure they will be sufficient backup," Tatary said, waving his hand. "This is good. I haven't had a Friday night off in a month." He winked at you and sauntered out of the laundry room, his pants hugging the curve of his ass beautifully.

Maybe you needed a pair. Huh. Well, there was that upcoming shopping trip...

But Tataryn's ass had not distracted you from the fact that he never actually said he would not follow you out tonight. Whatever happened, if Genji and Jesse weren't enough backup, Tataryn wasn't going to cut it either.

"Athena," you said. "This is an excellent time to discuss boundaries."

"Indeed," she said.

"While I understand his mission, I'm going to confess that I'm not entirely comfortable with Tataryn watching me. You don't have to tell me what he does, but it'd be nice if you made sure he wasn't doing things outside his mission parameters."

"Of course," she said.

"And on an unrelated note, how hard is it for someone to get stuck in an elevator? Just for a few minutes while we're, say, exiting the parking garage?"

"Lucky," she said gravely. "Accidents happen."

Chapter End Notes

Thank you for ko-fi for lovely cake. I would like to clarify that while things aren't smooth, I'm not in dire need. I just need a better job and/or life direction, because I'm one of those older millennials.

This scene is taking forever to write, but I think it's good? Oh well, I've got time to polish it. That or be like "OMFG what was I thinking? This is awful!" Cue uncontrollable sobbing. It's a fifty-fifty chance. Heh.
Chapter 38

Chapter Summary

Your night out doesn't go as expected. Big surprise.

Chapter Notes

So peercat shared [this awesome rendition] of Lucky and Ziv. Ziv is so spot on. I practically swooned.

See the end of the chapter for more notes

"So this is basically the Overwatch bar," Jesse admitted as you stood outside a noisy tavern with an enclosed beer garden; the sign said Reithalle with a silhouette of a horse on it, and you had a sinking feeling about that. Genji slouched beside you and Ziv kept looking over his shoulder as if he expected to get jumped. Knowing Ziv, it was likely.

You'd worn a tunic over your leggings and ankle boots, putting on lipstick as an afterthought. Genji had gone with a hoodie and track pants, his hood was extra large, to better hide the scarring. Jesse wore a button down shirt and torn jeans, his cowboy hat firmly in place. And Ziv looked too almost too dressed up beside them, in a black blazer and skinny jeans. None of you looked like you belonged together.

The interior was crowded, all polished wood and kitschy western paraphernalia. Horseshoes on the walls. Clint Eastwood movie posters. A goddamn mechanical bull. Some of the clientele wore cowboy hats, gingham shirts, and boots. The DJ was currently playing synthetic dance tunes, but you had the sneaking suspicion there would be country karaoke at some point. You gave Jesse a hard look.

"Really?" Ziv said, for all of you.

"It'll be fun. I'll pay for your first bull ride," Jesse grinned at him.

Ziv muttered something obscene and anatomically improbable involving said bull.

Genji faced the situation with the stoic resilience of man who would not faint in the face of duty, but would silently resent the rest of you the entire time. You shook your head and followed Jesse to a table.

You kept an eye on the doors, not happy about the crowd. You had been hoping for a quiet bar, maybe a small gastro pub with lots of cheese and far less people. This was too much.

Genji appeared at the table with a pitcher of beer and two glasses of whiskey. He passed you a glass, and sat down, already surveying the crowd.

"This is..." Ziv looked around. "A German-style biergarten in Switzerland trying to emulate an American western theme. Why?"

You shrugged. "Globalization had some drawbacks."

"Bring back isolationism," Ziv muttered and poured himself a beer.

The whiskey was good and you nodded appreciatively at Genji. It was too loud inside to really carry a conversation, though you saw several women making speculative eyes at Jesse and Ziv.

"Yo! Lucky! Hey!"

You looked up to see a familiar redhead waving from a crowded table across the aisle.

"Shoal!" You waved back and she stumbled off her chair, laughing. Holding her beer stein aloft, she made her way to your table.

"Lucky!" She laughed and hugged you. You patted her back awkwardly. "Good to see you! What are you drinking?"

"Whiskey." You grinned at Shoal. She was in an oversized sweater and leggings, and didn't quite resemble a soldier right now. "Shoal, this is Jesse, Genji, and Ziv." You gestured to each.

"Call me Bridget!" She giggled, making eyes at Jesse.

"Shoal and I ran an op together," you added.

"This lady-" she patted your shoulder. "Is great. She kept me alive, and sassed all the robots. She also pissed off Morrison. It was epic."

"This lady sent me flowers, and it was mind-blowing," you said. "Jesse, that was a cactus and it doesn't count. And Genji, I don't even know how to describe a tiny tree. Ziv, don't even get me started."

"I'm a little drunk," Shoal said happily. "You guys should come over. Pull up some chairs. We're telling dumb gun stories."

"We always practice safe gun handling," Jesse said with a straight face, and you snorted.

"Except for Ziv. We do not trust him with loaded weapons," Genji added.

"Fuck you guys!"

"Jemmy! Look who I found!" Shoal shouted and Jemison rose, rolling her eyes as she answered Shoal's call. She was dressed down, sweatshirt and jeans with green beads capping her braids, but she still had the officer bearing.

"Strike," Jemison said, coolly.

"Aww, don't be that way. You totally have better manners than that, Ms. Isabella Mae Jemison!" Shoal put an arm around Jemison's shoulder and kissed her cheek. "We're all friends here!"

"You are so drunk," Jemison sighed, resigned to Shoal calling her by her full name. "Yeah, come on back and sit with us. Otherwise Shoal is going to get lost in transit."
Your group moved to the table beside theirs, already packed with almost two dozen people. And of course, one of them was Joon. He greeted you with a surprised smile and you swore internally. His smile momentarily dimmed when he recognized Genji and you sighed, nursing your whiskey.

You sat down beside Genji and Jemison, and were only mildly surprised when Shoal sat on your lap, giggling.

"You brought the cowboy! He's cute," she said way too loudly in your ear. Jemison sighed heavily. "You clean up nice too!"

"Shoal is celebrating her third anniversary in Overwatch," Jemison drawled. "Of course, Shoal will celebrate opening a jam jar if given the chance, so you know."

"It's good to have fun friends," you said. One of your legs had started to go numb because Shoal was less sitting, more bouncing off of you, trying to reach a pitcher of beer.

"You'll have bruises tomorrow," Jemison said, shaking her head. "Should've just dumped her on the floor."

You shrugged. "I might scoot the chair back a few inches in a moment."

Jemison gave you a wry grin and sipped her beer. It was the friendliest she'd ever been.

"Lucky! What are you drinking? No, I know the answer! You like whiskyyyyyyyyy!" Shoal hopped into the aisle. "I owe Lucky all the whiskey! Be right back!" Shoal bounded away, redhead disappearing into a sea of people.

"Shit. She makes very bad decisions when drunk." Jemison shook her head. "Be back as soon as I can." Jemison rose, and you watched as the crowd unconsciously parted for the slim woman radiating officer-level authority.

"Interesting friend you got there," Jesse leaned over. "She thinks we're both cute?"

"She was just being polite about you," you told him. Then you paused. "Are you and-?"

"...I don't know." Jesse deflated a little, his smile flattening. "She needs time to think about it. I'm not...I'm not running around. Just...keeping my eyes open. You know. Just in case."

You patted his arm. "Your business."

"Yeah, speaking of business, can you sort your shit out please? I will be loyal to the commander till the day I die, but if you leave me in that office for much longer, that day may be just around the corner."

You frowned at Jesse and he winced.

"I- That came out wrong. I just..." Jesse sat down in Jemison's seat. "It's been rocky."

"...Yeah." You shrugged. "Sorry." The sentiment rang false, and you didn't care.

"Ain't just the attitude. He compares me to you all the damn time. Like "Ingrate, get your shit together. Lucky doesn't need me to explain paperwork to her!" Or "McCree, what the fuck does this say? Because even when she's drugged, Lucky's writing never looked like this!" Or my personal favorite was, "Your coffee tastes like boiled ass. Go ask Vo to make some. I don't care if she puts gunpowder in it. It'll still be better than this watered-down shit-soup you're trying to poison me with. " He lowered his voice. "Lucky'd never make this, let alone try to get me to drink it. Ugh."

"...I uh...hmm." You scratched the back of your head. "Sorry?"

"Ain't your fault, sugarpie." Jesse stared at his lap. "He's just...irritable. This actually ain't new behavior. I'd just forgotten how he could get back...before." Jesse waved his hand. "And I wasn't trapped in the office with him back then."

"Keep snacks on hand, and good cafeteria food. You know what he likes. If you feed him, he's less...irritable." You took a big swig of whiskey.

"I've already drank all the emergency whiskey in your desk," Jesse confessed. "Ate the candy too."

"The candy's for him," you said. "No wonder he's grumpy." You shook your head. "When he gets worked up, wait for him to stop shouting and just start tossing it onto his desk."

"...I don't think that's going to work as well for me," Jesse said.

"The trick is not to let him see you do it. You throw the candy underhanded and immediately go back to work. Don't look up. Act like nothing happened. In a few minutes you'll hear the wrapper crinkling and that usually means he ate it."

Jesse stared at you incredulously. "...Are you serious?"

"SEP fucks people up. You have to feed them often. Like small animals." You shrugged.

"...I see." He shook his head.

"You can do it, Jesse. Besides, if you're going to transition into an officer, you have to know how to handle paperwork and crazy superiors."

"OK. I'll try it. Need a refill. You?"

You eyed your empty glass of whisky and realized Shoal and Jemison still hadn't returned. Not that you expected Shoal to buy you whiskey. You didn't expect her to remember her way back to the table.

"Please," you said, setting your empty glass on the table.

Jesse got up and nodded. "Whiskey?"

"Not the cheap shit," you called after him.

Ziv was arguing, his hands gesticulating wildly as someone on the other side of the table, but the blonde man looked more bemused than angry, so you just kept an eye on it. Genji had scooted his chair closer to you to get away from another drunk woman trying to climb into his lap.

Your eyes widened slightly as you caught sight of a familiar oversized jacket, its owner hunched over at the bar. Really? You glanced at Genji and he shook his head.

"Ignore it," he said. "He followed us."

You glanced back at Ziv who had his arms crossed as the blonde man seemed to be calmly trying to explain something to him. Well, that was relief.

"Lucky! They wouldn't let me have the whole bottle, so I got you a big glass!" Shoal leaned over, slamming a glass down on the table, spilling a good quarter of it. "You were right! Everyone bought me drinks after Belfast! It was great!" She hugged Jemison who just stood there and took it, her expression one of resentful acceptance.

"I think we're going to call it a night," Jemison said. And you wondered then if they were sleeping together. Not that it was your business. You couldn't really critique anyone else's CO/subordinate relationship so long as they were consenting adults.

"Thank you for the drink. Much appreciated."

"Next time, I will buy you more. I owe you all the whiskey!" Shoal sang.

"...Next time I'll cut her off earlier," Jemison added.

"Whatever you gotta do," you said, picking up the highball glass. "Thanks again."

"Good night!" Shoal leaned against Jemison.

"You need an some help?" Jesse asked, coming back with another glass of whiskey. He set it on the table for you. "I can call you a cab and wait with you if you like."

"He's secretly a gentleman," you said. "Honest."

Jemison studied his face. "Yeah, OK, cowboy. Can't get the door and help Shoal stay upright."

Jesse tipped his hat and escorted them out.

You glanced at the bar, but the stalker hadn't moved. You could spend the rest of the night slowly nursing the two glasses of whiskey...

"Hey. Thought I'd come over and say hi." Joon sat down in the empty seat and you took the short glass in a single gulp.

"Hi," you said after you drained the glass. "Sorry. Was...socializing." You picked up the tall glass, ignoring Genji's concerned look. "Got your flower. It was pretty, thanks."

Joon looked between you and Genji. "I uh...yeah. That was some crazy stuff. Glad you're OK." He wore a red button down shirt and black pants that fit him very well. His long hair was pulled back and he was still very good looking.

"...I think I will check on our friend," Genji said after a moment. "Will it bother you if I invite him over?"

You frowned. "Are you sure, Genji?"

"You're here. He'll behave. I'll be right back." He gave Joon a curious look.

"Whatever you think best," you said, cursing inwardly as Genji walked away. You looked over at Ziv who was now in lecture mode, shaking his finger at the blonde man while looking less angry and more exasperated. The blonde man just had his head cocked to the side, smile somewhere between skeptical and amused. He looked to be in his mid-thirties, with cropped hair and an easy smile.
You caught sight of Jesse standing coming in the front door, chatting up some local girls. They gestured at the Overwatch table and you could hear him laughing.

"Oh no. Me and my friends ain't Overwatch," he shouted.

You quirked your lips and gave a mock salute. Blackwatch pride, Blackwatch petty.

Watching half your party wander off with potential bed partners made you wonder if you were supposed to be the wingman or the cockblocking friend. Because no one had asked for your assistance. Well, they were all adults. It wasn't your job to police their relationships. You couldn't even handle your own.

"Sorry, keeping tabs on my friends." You turned back to Joon.

"No, it's fine. I understand. Some soldiers you can trust out of your supervision. Some...not so much." Joon had a glass of amber liquid in hand. He glanced after Genji. "I better go. It was good seeing you." He gave you a small smile and got up quickly. "See you later!"

Genji returned then, his guest taking the seat beside him. Hanzo had his hood up, but you recognized that coat from Lucerne.

"You could've just said you wanted to ride along," you told him.

"...I did not wish to intrude." Hanzo lowered his hood.

You stared at the ceiling for a moment, wondering what you had done to deserve this. Then you looked over at Genji and he shrugged.

"That the one who you had dinner with?" Genji asked after a moment.

"...Jesse's got a big fucking mouth," you said, and swallowed more whiskey.

"No, heard the commander talking before you were...together." Genji shrugged.

"It was coffee once. Dinner once. And nothing after," you said, shaking your head. "Not that it's anyone else's business."

"Don't explain yourself then," Hanzo said, not looking up. "It makes you sound guilty."

"Oh no, I'm not explaining myself. I'm putting it out there so if Gabriel hears about it, he knows there's no reason to bother poor Joon." You nodded and took another sip of whiskey. Your eyes narrowed as you watched a group of guys glaring at Jesse while he chatted up a waitress and then a girl at the bar.

You turned to check on Ziv and rolled your eyes, because he had his tablet out, and kept jabbing his finger at whatever parts of the screen supported his argument. The blonde man now looked mildly frightened. Yeah, unless Amélie and Lacroix worked something out, Ziv was going to be single for a long time.

Hanzo, Genji, and you drank in silence. The music was bad. You remembered when you used to go out, and this didn't feel that different, but your tastes had changed. It wasn't quite as fun as you remembered. Or maybe you were just missing someone.

"Do you do this often?" Hanzo asked after a moment.

"No," you and Genji said in unison.
Hanzo looked like he wanted to say more, so you started drinking faster.

"I think we might have a problem soon," Genji said after a moment.

The three of you watched Jesse flirt his way across the bar, and there was a growing number of angry-looking men muttering at nearby tables. You sipped your whiskey. "God, I haven't been in bar fight in years," you reflected. "Back when I joined Overwatch I had to really keep my nose clean." You still found shovels irrationally intimidating.

Genji shook his head. "We can leave now."

"They will follow us," Hanzo said, looking slightly offended by the suggestion.

"Better get Ziv." You looked up to see him shaking hands with the blonde man, and suddenly you got the feeling that you'd completely misread the situation. The alcohol was starting to really hit you and you sighed, wishing you had drank less.

Ziv looked up and rolled his eyes at you. "What?" He asked when he sat down. He did a double take when saw Hanzo, and you kicked him under the table before he could say anything.

"What the fuck?" Ziv scowled.

"Jesse is riling up the locals," you said, carefully forming the words. "We should get going soon."

Ziv raised a brow. "You OK?"

"Drank more whiskey than I should've," you admitted. "But I'm good. I'll get Jesse. You guys stay put."

You rose too quickly and your balance was off, but muscle memory kept you smooth. You looked over at Jesse and groaned, because an angry man had already sidled up to him.

"-think you're so tough! But you're not some fancy Overwatch agents. So we're pretty confident we can show you and your friends how unwelcome your kind are around here."

You glanced at Ziv. He was rolling an empty beer bottle in his hands.

Genji tapped his fingers on the table, his eyes a little too bright.

Hanzo looked at you impassively. "Are you leaving him?"

"Of course not," you scowled. "...No serious injuries, and definitely no fatalities, OK?" You focused on Hanzo. "These are civilians. They're assholes, but they're just civilians."

You looked up in time to see Jesse swinging and other man went down.

"...Don't think McCree got your memo," Genji said, finishing his drink.

Jesse dusted off his hands and swaggered back to the table, ignoring the man on the floor. "Sorry guys, might've overstayed our welcome," he said.

"What spurred that?" Ziv asked.

"Asshole used a slur against one of my very good friends here," Jesse flashed you all a lazy grin. And for a moment you wondered which of you it had been directed at, considering the diversity of the group. "And I don't countenance that kind of talk."

"What'd he say?" Ziv asked, scanning the crowd.

"Does it matter?" Jesse asked with a frown. "It was unacceptable."

"Right, no longer than five minutes and we're out. No fancy moves for the cameras. No deaths. No one goes to the ICU," you scowled. Because the alcohol was hitting you harder now.

Jesse grinned at you. "You know who you sound like, right?"

"Not joking, Jesse. I am too drunk for this shit." You straightened up, even as a dozen men marched over to your table.

"Look here-" The biggest man announced, jabbing his finger at your party.

You skipped the chest-beating, trash-talking pre-fight tradition and just lunged at him, slamming the blade of your right hand into his throat. He went down gagging. No left hand. No weapons. You didn't focus on clever conversation, you just struck to incapacitate. You heard Jesse whoop, followed by a dull thud, then the cracking of wood. Great, property damage. Now you could never come back here. You gave the decor a thoughtful look. Yeah, OK. You could live with that.

Jesse threw a man over your head and you sighed.

"Civilians, Jesse!"

"Yes, ma'am," he drawled, and you could tell just from his tone that he was rolling his eyes at you.

"Stay down," Ziv said, kicking someone who was already on the ground.

Glass shattered. Someone smashed a beer bottle and you looked up as they jammed it against Genji's stomach.

Hanzo's face paled and he swore, kicking the offender halfway across the room.

Genji just rolled his eyes.

"Take it easy!" You yelled. "Civvies are delicate. Your brother will be fine."

Jesse laughed. "Are you trying to manage this bar fight, sugarpie?" He punched another man and you drove your knee into one who was trying to sneak up on Ziv. You spun, backhanding the man behind you in the face. He staggered and you kicked him in the stomach, toppling him.

"Two minute warning, boys!" You shouted and then looked around. Your attackers were on the ground, and while they were bloody and suffering various degrees of concussions, everyone looked alive. "Scratch that. Departing now!"

You rolled your eyes as Ziv snapped a picture of the scene. Jesse held the front door open for you, laughing as sirens began to sound in the distance.

Genji was grinning too, and while Hanzo didn't look pleased, he looked a lot less constipated.

"You sound just like the boss barking orders! You are so drunk!" Jesse laughed, clapping
"Unless you want to try explain this to the authorities, shut up and run!" Hanzo snapped.

"You drunkards: you're a bad influence on my brother," Genji told the group.

Giggling, the five of you took off for the base.

"I can't believe we did that," you hiccupped. It was more, you couldn't believe Hanzo Shimada joined you guys for a bar fight, but you weren't going to point that out. You weren't that drunk.

"I can't believe you're still drunk," Ziv scowled. "You sounded like you were running an op! Like, you were channeling Reyes, shouting orders, and punching people!"

"Weren't in no danger," Jesse grinned. "No reason to sober up."

"True," you said, leaning against Ziv. "It was just a bar fight. Didn't want cause any permanent damage, even if they deserved it." You left out the fact that Hanzo was the only one you were really worried about crossing that line.

Ziv opened his mouth, then shut it. "You guys are crazy."

The five of you huddled outside HQ, smoking Hanzo's expensive cigarettes. It had been a long run back, and your knees were wobbly like jello. You didn't feel like walking back to your room: Jack's quarters were closer.

"I'm going to call it a night," Ziv said first. "Anyone need help getting back to their room?" He gave you a look.

"I'm fine. Jesse?" You asked.

"Nah, I'm good, darling." He grinned at everyone. "Thanks for the assists. Much appreciated."

"I think I'll stay out here a bit longer." Genji glanced at Hanzo, but didn't say anything else. You got the hint though and silently wished him luck.

"See you later," you said, and staggered toward the officers' quarters. You'd get Athena to help direct your drunk ass.

Gabriel sat at his desk in his empty office, your green scarf in his hands. He should have been examining the socio-political situation in Lilongwe, or picking which geneticist out of San Lorenzo to discretely recruit, or checking in on Vo in Rovaniemi, because she wouldn't stop sending him angry messages about the weather. Well, it was her own rabid fault; she'd practically volunteered for the mission. She'd stomped into the office carrying a smoking, reeking, sulfurous mass in her gloves and screeching furiously in her pidgin Vietnamese-French-English. So, who could blame him for shipping her off to Lapland to retrieve potentially valuable data from burnt-out omnic husks, far far away from his desk? No one.

You were out of the infirmary and he read your simple "thank you" message for the basket, noting that you did not comment on the vibrator. If you wanted both flowers and whiskey, you could have both; he would make sure of it. He studied the screen, wondering if he was reading too much into your brevity.

Jack said the message had been fine. And Jack had been stalwart throughout this entire ordeal.

Not seeing you was more difficult than he expected. He found himself sorely tempted to walk by the Blackwatch housing wing, just to "accidentally" run into you. He wouldn't corner you. He wouldn't demand you talk to him. He would-

No. You asked for space. And while he had not acceded gracefully, he would respect your boundaries. Stripping you of your clearances had been the wrong call. He had been desperate and not thinking clearly. But he couldn't quite bring himself to feel bad about being overprotective; you obviously didn't take enough measures to protect yourself. And as for what happened to the Talon cyborg? He didn't actually care, not after she stabbed you. But hurting you? That had never been his intent.

Intent though, was never quite as important as results. He never intended to hurt you, but he had.

Jack had told him it was understandable. He had been under massive amounts of stress. You had nearly died. That had not been the best time to yell at you.

But you were an idiot. You put that cyborg's wellbeing over your own, and while he knew you'd been in therapy, knew you'd been working through a truckload of survivor's guilt, seeing you still undervaluing your own life pissed him off. He'd said as much when you'd fought before, but he hadn't worded it well. He was too angry to be eloquent and he regretted it. He'd say it to you right when he saw you again. Because he would get to see you again, despite your suicidal efforts in Lucerne.

You were alive. You were recovering. And that's what mattered.

There was a knock at the door and he shoved the scarf in his drawer. "Enter."

Fedor Tataryn swaggered in. Tataryn was one of the Blackwatch hard cases, a terribly good-looking man with wavy golden blonde hair that fell to his shoulders. With his pale blue eyes and full pretty lips, he attracted a lot of attention. Tall and well-built, Tataryn mostly ran missions involving honey traps and assassination. But it was always a mistake to underestimate Blackwatch agents, especially the pretty ones.

"Commander," Tataryn grinned, the smile never reaching his eyes. His accent was heavy, but he spoke English well enough.

"Relax. I'm not here to bust your balls about what happened in Odessa. I don't actually care any more."
"It was not my fault. He ran into my knife," Tataryn said, dropping the defensive posture. "How was I supposed to know he was that stupid?"

"Don't remind me. Just sit down."

Tataryn glanced over at your desk, but didn't say anything. Which was the intelligent choice. Gabriel stretched his neck, the vertebrae popping loudly. Tataryn winced.

"How can I assist you today, boss?" Tataryn was one of the more trustworthy press-ganged recruits. In his mid-thirties, the Ukrainian man had taken to the Blackwatch lifestyle. He really enjoyed getting paid to do shady things and having an expense account. You had complained about the state of Tataryn's bookkeeping, but ultimately let him get away with minor violations. Tataryn seemed to appreciate that flexibility. And it didn't hurt that Blackwatch was also paying for his young daughter's private schooling.

"I need you to do a discrete job for me."

Tataryn raised a brow. "Oh this sounds bad." He laughed softly.

"Strike is out of the office till further notice."

"I am an awful secretary, boss. But for you, I would try." Tataryn grinned, smacking his palm against his chest. Everyone in Blackwatch knew about your medical situation. They expected you back after you were cleared for active duty.

"I need you to keep an eye on her."

Tataryn nodded. "You'll want to be more specific than that, boss. You have some pretty interesting relationships."

Gabriel snorted. "I need you to watch her back while she's here on base."

"...She's a pretty competent agent and she's got friends." Tataryn scratched his head, his smile too plastic. "Or is there more to this?"

"Politics," Gabriel said after a moment. "Petras threatened her."

Tataryn nodded, expression betraying nothing. "OK, boss." That's what Gabriel liked about Tataryn. The man was clever and knew when to stop asking questions. It didn't hurt that he was pretty to look at too.

"I don't want her taking flak for being out of the office either. If someone gives her shit, you let me know."

"I think the dynamic has changed since she first got here," Tataryn said after a moment. "Doubt that's going to be a problem."

Gabriel shrugged. "Just covering my bases."

There was a long pause. "She's pretty good at picking out tails. I can't really hide on base. If this goes on for awhile, she's going to confront me. What do you want me to tell her?"

"That I told you to watch her back, and you know about Petras. If she has a problem, she can take it up with me. Obviously, you don't have to shadow her all the time. Just keep an eye out. Let me know if you have problems. And...I don't need to know what she does every day."
Gabriel lay on his stomach in Jack's bed, turning the malachite necklace over in his hands.

That day at Galanos' funeral was a trial. Like Chang, he didn't give a shit about that asshole, but Jack had, if only in a commanding officer's capacity. It had started to rain midway through the walk to the funeral and neither he nor Jesse had brought an umbrella. He was prepared for it to be as miserable as fucking possible, because that's what he'd come to expect from anything pertaining to Galanos. Then you sat down beside him, surly and professional in a suit, shielding him from the rain.

That your silly ass was furious at him, but still willing to share your umbrella made him all kinds of crazy. You were so close, but he had no way to bridge the distance. He wanted to berate, cajole, reason with you. But it was a funeral. And you demanded space. So he'd forced himself to behave like a civilized human being, even as he snuck long looks at you while you focused intently on Jack. He didn't give a shit about Galanos, but Jack deserved support, not drama.

"She's doing better. Hasn't used the vibrator yet," Jack said, as he pulled off his shirt. "Her wound has healed up nicely. Don't know if there will even be much of a scar."

Gabriel paused, and glanced up at Jack questioningly.

"We didn't do anything besides cuddle. She doesn't want you to feel left out." Jack grinned, and climbed into bed. "She said she misses you too. But she's still sorting herself out. And apparently the Shimada brothers."

Gabriel snorted. "I don't think any individual mortal has the power to fix all those problems."

Jack kissed him hungrily. "Well, she can at least browbeat them with her insufferable attitude till they play nice."

Gabriel sighed as Jack nipped the side of his neck. Of course he'd come back from your room all worked up. So predictable. "I assigned Tataryn to watch her back. Just in case."

"He better not be spying on her, Gabe." Jack paused, sitting back on his haunches.

"No. Just for peace of mind. Told him I didn't care what she did. But if I can't watch her back, someone has to. And Tataryn is good at picking up on trouble."

"She'll still be mad when she finds out," Jack said. He leaned forward, hands sliding down Gabriel's sides. "But if that's all it is, I don't think you're out of line."

"She really didn't let you do anything?" Gabriel looked over his shoulder. He wasn't skeptical. It was more to see Jack shiver.
"Really," Jack murmured. "Hoped to see her try out the new toy. But oh well. Can't wait for you two to make up, so we can have her between us again. I love watching the two of you. But I'm not just going to watch. Still have to pay her back for that trick she pulled, papi."

"Goddamnit, Jack." Gabriel's cock twitched and he rolled over, pulling Jack on top of him.

"We're going to have a lot of lost time to make up for. And you've both been badly behaved, so I have all kinds of ideas." Jack groaned in his ear. "Do you want to hear about them?"

Jesse was a shit secretary. But the kid had real potential, and if he was going to get anywhere in Overwatch, he needed to learn how to handle paperwork and the bureaucracy. Retraining an assistant made Gabriel grumpy. It didn't help that he every time he looked over at your chair, expecting to see you, there was Jesse, and half the time he had his boots on the furniture.

"What the hell do you think you're doing? Get your feet off her desk!"

Jesse cringed and his boots clunked as they hit the floor. "Sorry, boss."

Gabriel glowered.

Jesse shriveled up very small and began picking away at the pile of paperwork that had accumulated on the desk. It didn't look like he was reading it so much as trying to use it to shield himself from the intensity of Gabriel's glare.

Gabriel forced himself to stay seated. The kid was trying. But he was more suited for ops than office work. He wasn't as bad as some, but Gabriel had expected better.

The kid could read, but he was painfully slow. Gabriel considered having him tested for dyslexia. Ana said the kid could make tea, but his coffee was terrible. Jesse's manual dexterity was amazing, but his handwriting was atrocious. He was smart and dogged, but every time Gabriel looked up, the kid seemed to be goofing off. These minor contradictions irritated Gabriel.

And he was hungry. Without you around, he wasn't eating as regularly. You cooked, took lunch breaks, and made sure he had snacks. In return, he cooked, made sure you took lunch breaks, and shared the snacks. He was well aware that this lack of food contributed to his short fuse. He'd send Jesse out to the cafeteria later.

He checked his messages, finding one from you. It was polite and distant, but inquired the exact parameters of Tataryn's mission. You'd caught Tataryn quicker than he expected and pride warmed his chest. He responded, drafting his message a few times before he was satisfied.

He's only there to watch your back, because I can't. No spying or anything of the kind. If he's misbehaving I can swap him out for Diallo or Sinaga.

I hope you're doing well.

He sent it quickly, too tempted to add more to it. You'd asked for space. He would respect that request.
Gabriel followed Jack back to his quarters, shaking his head. They'd had a meeting about the On Sing situation, and the more he learned, the bigger his headache got. God-programs were bad enough, but potential immortality through hard light and digital storage? This was some serious Philip K. Dick bullshit and Gabriel had seen enough of technology going terribly wrong to have serious misgivings about On Sing's ventures, let alone an alliance.

That being said, another part of him found their expertise intriguing. The Zhai girl had been enhanced, and he wondered how their techniques differed from SEP, and just what the now "immortal" Zheng could do.

Gérard had been there - it was the first time in weeks that he'd seen the slippery Frenchman. Gérard had been doing a lot of "remote" work. And while he'd been very tempted to do something violent and awful, Ana and Jack kept giving him pointed looks. And Wilhelm sat beside Gérard, happily talking about inane things like flowers. Wilhelm didn't seem the least bit put off by his presence, even though he'd made it clear that his relationship with you was none of the idiot's business.

"She liked the roses," Wilhelm had told Gérard with an irritating level of cheer. "It was an excellent recommendation. But I think she liked the balloons and teddy bear much more. She seems like the kind girl who needs oversized cuddle toys."

"Who doesn't?" Gérard drawled, patting Wilhelm on the arm. "Life is about appreciating the small things."

"And the big ones," Wilhelm said, then burst into raucous laughter.

Gabriel had gritted his teeth and ignored them, Jack's hand on his thigh under the table. Yeah, he had gotten the message loud and clear. Those assholes weren't subtle at all. Fucking Gérard.

The rest of the meeting had been mostly professional, and he was slightly annoyed at how quickly Wilhelm was picking up on the nuances of the bureaucratic processes. Because that idealistic busybody did not approve of Blackwatch.

But that was a problem for another day.

As soon as Gabriel shut the door to Jack's room, Athena chimed in. "Strike Commander, I must inform you that Agent Strike is in your bed. She is...intoxicated."

Jack took off his coat, concern lining his face. "Is she...all right?"

"She is asleep," Athena said. "I...believe she made it here undetected."

Gabriel kicked off his boots. He went straight to the bedroom, face softening as he saw a lump under the blankets, curled up in the middle of the bed snoring lightly. Your boots and coat were on the floor.

"I won't stay." Gabriel said after a moment. "Just...wanted to see her." He sat down on the bed, pulling the covers back.
You grumbled, burying your head under a pillow. "I'm trying to sleep, Jack." Your words slurred together.

"...It's me." Gabriel rested a hand on your shoulder.

"Trying to sleep, Gabriel," you muttered.

"I wasn't expecting you here. Just...wanted to say hi before I left." Gabriel swallowed and leaned over, inhaling your scent as he kissed the back of your neck. "Miss you, corazon."

"Miss you too," you murmured, relaxing against him.

"I'll go now," he said, not wanting to leave the bed.

"You can stay," you said, yawning. "Just let me go back to sleep."

Gabriel looked up at Jack. Jack had already stripped down to his fatigues.

Jack sighed. "She's drunk."

"Yeah," Gabriel said, pulling away.

"Said you could stay, stupid. I may be drunk, but I still know English."

"You'll be mad in the morning," Gabriel said softly.

"Won't remember this in the morning," you said, already drifting.

Jack shrugged. "Up to you."

"I'll leave early. Have that paperwork backlog to catch up on anyway," Gabriel said.

Jack nodded.

They left you in the middle, Gabriel holding you from behind, Jack reaching over to clasp his hand. Gabriel rested his chin against your shoulder, He would leave first thing in the morning. But right now, he would be grateful for the time he had.

You woke up, nestled tightly against Jack's chest. Your head hurt and you blinked a few times, your mouth feeling like a barn floor. You glanced over your shoulder. There was no one there.

"He left early. Didn't want to upset you," Jack murmured, rubbing your back.

You touched your forehead. You had vague memories of Gabriel's voice, his arms around your waist, and his body hot against your back.

"You told him to stay," Jack added.

"Mmm," you said. Because you were slow and you couldn't quite process what any of that meant. Instead you curled up against Jack, not quite satisfied with the amount of heat he was putting out. You stuck your cold fingers under his shirt, and he stiffened.
"You OK?" Jack asked, pulling more blankets over you.

"Better," you muttered. "Water?"

He reached over to the nightstand and grabbed a bottle of water. You took it and drained it quickly, blinking as the room came into focus. It was too bright and you shielded your eyes.

"Thank you." You sighed as Jack took the bottle and kissed your cheek.

"Didn't expect to find you here last night." Jack pulled the covers over both your heads and you relaxed. "Fun night out?"

You blinked a few times, recalling Shoal, Hanzo, and the bar fight. "Yeah. I think so."

"Gabriel was here?"

"Yeah."

You swallowed. You hadn't had any nightmares last night. You had vague memories of soft Spanish words and gentle kisses against your neck. Exhaling slowly, you winced at the growing sensation of loss. Damn, you missed him.

"You all right?" Jack asked, wrapping his arms around you.

"Miss Gabriel," you muttered. "Still working on things though."

"You don't remember any of what he said last night?" Jack asked.

You blinked. "No."

"Damn." Jack sighed. "Oh well."

"What?"

Jack shrugged. "It's not that big of a deal."

"...What?" You asked, voice lower.

"Spill," you said.

"Gabriel said not to deny ourselves on his account. Whatever we do, I'll just tell him about while he has me bent over the bed. Or the couch. Or his desk... Hell, we can take pictures if you like." His fingers traced your hips.

You groaned. "Really Jack?"

"He did!" Jack laughed as you smacked his wandering hands.

"I'll ask him," you said. "Don't think I won't!"

"Good," Jack said, his smile bright and happy.

Realizing that you were still dumb and had fallen into his trap, you just hugged him and willed yourself to go back to sleep.
Today was...bad. I work at a bookstore. They laid off half of our full-time/non-manager employees. My job isn't up for cuts, yet. Though actually, I kind of wish I had been, because they got pretty decent severance. And I'm left to pick up the understaffed, overtime slack. It just sucks because all of them had been with the company for over a decade (one just celebrated their 15th anniversary) and while we knew cuts were coming, we were told they were phasing out the positions, not firing people. I mean, optimistically, maybe they'll cut my job at the end of the fiscal year and I'll get severance and I'll have something new lined up.

Things rarely work out like that for me though. Just...ugh. I feel for them. Everyone at the store was pretty upset. Because as much as I complain about the job, I've stayed because I like most of my coworkers. It's just an unsustainable business. Meh.

Well, I was considering buying Dynasty Warriors 9, because nostalgia, but now I'm like "...maybe you should be more sensible about your money." ( Seriously though, the wonderfully terrible homoerotic dubs, the mindless hack and slash, the hilariously bastardized history? I recognize the Musou games for what they are and love them anyway.)

Eating nutella from the jar and thinking about drinking. Can't drink and write though. Boo.
Chapter Summary

Some epiphanies come easy. Yours, like forgiveness, do not.

Chapter Notes

We're almost at 300k. Next week will be the four month anniversary. Because this is insane.

See the end of the chapter for more notes

"Your idea has merit," Captain Amari said as you waited for the doors to be unsealed. "I take it you have asked Winston to do a workup."

"Yes, ma'am. Athena thinks she can do it, but I wasn't going to ask her to try without someone more...technical assessing the risks."

Captain Amari nodded. "And the ethics of it?"

"I don't know," you said, running your fingers through your hair. "I don't want anyone to get hurt, but I don't have the expertise to make that judgment." You shrugged. "If Winston or whoever can come back and tell us why we shouldn't do it in clear concise terms, I won't contest it."

Captain Amari was too polite to show her skepticism.

"I'll just find another solution," you said, because you'd come this far already. "And I will submit it to the appropriate experts because I know I'm already on thin ice." You noted Tataryn hanging out in the waiting area, flirting with Bayan. Bayan was rolling his eyes.

"You seem relaxed about your shadow," Captain Amari said, eyes drifting over to him.

"Gabriel gave him specific orders and won't take them back." You shrugged. "As long as he behaves himself, and isn't reporting my every move, I guess I don't care." It helped that you'd asked Athena to keep an eye on Tataryn, because two could play that game.

"Jack and Gabriel did share their cause for alarm." Captain Amari pursed her lips. "I am afraid I side with them on this one. You cannot be too careful. You cannot even be careful enough," she said, nudging you in the stomach with her elbow and you winced.

The door opened for Captain Amari, and your voice drifted into the halls. It was always jarring to hear your own voice recorded. It was familiar, but the tone and pitch were never quite right. You didn't really sound like that, did you?

"-in music, the ideal is a silent song upon an unstrung zither..." The story continued, with Captain Amari standing in the doorway. "...Thus in war the ideal must be a bloodless engagement upon an empty battlefield."

She cocked her head to the side. "I did not take you for a poet-philosopher."

"Athena, stop the recording." You shook your head. "I asked for a science fiction recommendation. Athena came back with this book. It was over my head, but I think Lao would have liked it." You paused. "I believe it is one of Lacroix's choices."

Captain Amari nodded. "You are a good friend."

You walked into the room, steeling yourself for the impact.

Lao was alive. The diagnostic equipment beeped steadily, monitoring vitals. With her eyes closed, she looked more peaceful, though still frail and skinny. She was too washed out against the white sheets. Her short black hair was almost long enough to call a bob. Her metal arm had been disconnected. Winston and Torby were still running analyses on it and the socket was wrapped. She was secured to the bed with thick bands of metal, catheterized, and intubated. Once a day, two security officers would oversee a nurse and aide unbinding her and cleaning her up.

"She's very young," Captain Amari said after a moment.

"Yeah. Squad baby," you said, rubbing the back of your head. "Everyone...looked out for her. It was an unspoken thing."

"I see." Captain Amari sat down.

You swallowed, taking in her form: the rise and fall of her chest; the gauntness of her cheeks; the burn scars on the left side of her face were still prominent, but faded. Maybe Angela could patch her up better. You didn't know. Your leg was pretty unpleasant to look at, but it didn't bother you any more. Faces were different.

"Hey Lao, it's Lucky. You should know that I'm OK. Got yelled at for being stupid and stab-able. But I'm good. You need to wake up soon, OK? I don't want to read any more of those big sci-fi books with long words and weird concepts. You can do that on your own, all right?"

You leaned against the railing. She didn't wake up. But she wasn't dead. You weren't supposed to touch her, so you just stared hard, trying to will her to open her eyes.

"You better not die," you told her. "I will be mad at you forever. Like, oh look who stabbed me, then had to one-up me and die. Who does that? Only an asshole." You laughed, and the sound was a brittle. "Captain Patel would not approve. Shin would be very disappointed. And Rivka would say a bunch of mean shit that's way above my pay grade." You swallowed the lump in your throat and bowed your head.

If she died, if you had to mourn her again, it would break your heart. But it wouldn't break you. You would glue the pieces back together, pick yourself back up, and keep going. Because you understood that it would hurt less over time, and you still had so much to do. You'd realized by now that you weren't going to stop. You didn't know how. You just put one foot in front of the other, and took each painstaking step forward. Even if it didn't feel like it would get any better, you'd been down this path before. It wasn't pleasant, but you knew how to navigate it. And you were the only one left to claim the blood-price for your dead.

"When you wake up," you said. "We'll talk. Doesn't have to be about work or the other bullshit. We'll talk about books, or video games, or cat pictures. Whatever will make you happy. You can gush about music and I'll pretend like I know what you're talking about." You looked at the wall, trying to think of something unclassified to say.

"I uh, go to some pretty good bakeries. I'll bring you cake. I know I never explained why it was such a big deal to me, so here I go. Sugar, chocolate, and eggs were hard to come by for awhile. All kinds of sweets were. And don't get me started on how I cooked food; I just bashed open scavenged cans half the time. So when you take those rare ingredients and combine them into something as frivolous, and pretty, and delicious as cake? It's a goddamn miracle. It's the fucking pinnacle of human accomplishment. Yeah, we can make missiles to blow up robots from a continent away, but that doesn't make people happy like cake does, you know?" You blew out a long breath, your voice too wobbly. "So there it is. That's why I like cake so much."

You rubbed your eyes and straightened up, forcing your face into a polite expression.

"Well, I'll leave you to your weird depressing stories. If you hate them, I'm sorry. Someone else recommended them to me. You know I don't really read. But I'm getting better. So...wake up soon, OK? I could really use your help, Lao. I know I have a hacker, but he's mean, and I miss you."

You took a couple deep, ragged breaths, before you turned around. You did not meet Captain Amari's eyes. "Thank you ma'am. I'm good to go."

"Of course." Captain Amari smoothly opened the door for you.

You walked out, eyes fixed firmly ahead of you, wishing that this much-awaited meeting had not felt so much like a goodbye.

Ziv was waiting for you outside your room and you silently cursed Athena's meddlesome nature. Preschoolers got into everything.

"How'd it go?" He leaned against the wall, not making eye contact with you.

"It was shocking that someone in the world doesn't sass me," you said, opening your door.

"That's fucked up," Ziv said, laughing anyway. "Winston doesn't see any initial issues with your proposal, but he's got to give the tech a second look, since you know, he wasn't expecting to try this out."

"That's good news. But you didn't come over here to bring me good news, did you?"

"Never." Ziv sat in your chair, swearing as it lurched backward, nearly dumping him on the ground. "What the hell?!"

You shrugged. "Someone broke it."

"Bet it was fucking McCree," Ziv muttered.

You shut the door and sat on your bed, pushing your tablet aside. "All right, hit me."

"They verified that they can't remove the spinal cybernetics without paralyzing or killing her," Ziv said.
"Yeah. Figured."

"There is a control program embedded. I think we can disable it. But..."

"There's no way to tell how deep her conditioning is and whether or not we can use that program to keep a leash on her," you concluded.

"Yeah, stop interrupting." Ziv scowled at you. "Anyway, Winston's got to collaborate with some other folks about the psychological aspect. So don't hold your breath." He brushed his hair out of his eyes. "So what the fuck is going on with Tataryn?"

You rolled your eyes. "Gabriel assigned me a bodyguard. I'm dealing."

"He's hot," Ziv said thoughtfully.

You didn't comment. Ziv snooped through personnel files more than you did. He probably knew more than you about Tataryn's background, which, from what you put together, wasn't very nice.

"Athena said I should talk to you," he said after a long pause.

"Goddamnit, Athena!" You glowered at the ceiling, even though you were 99 percent sure there was no way for her to see you.

There was only pointed silence.

"I know you can hear me!"

Ziv snorted. "I wonder who she learned the silent treatment from?"

"Genji."

"Uh huh," Ziv nodded. "I bet."

"Meddling kid," you said through gritted teeth. "Knows I can't ground her or punish her because she's fucking everywhere."

"She didn't tell me what you said. Only scolded for me for talking shit to you all the time." Ziv stared at the floor and crossed his arms. "You know I don't mean anything by it, right?"

Well, that was something. You took a deep, calming breath. "Ziv, if I thought you meant half the shit that came out of your mouth, I would have buried you in the woods a long time ago." You stared at the wall, shaking your head. "We're entirely too honest with each other."

"...But we never say the important things," Ziv said.

You hunched over, turning your head to the side to look at him. He was staring at the door now.

Ziv blinked rapidly. "My...uh family. We don't really talk about feelings. When my parents separated, that was that. We didn't get to cry about it or be consoled. We just bucked up and dealt. So emotions are...very private." His knee bounced and he rubbed his hands together, fingers twisting. "Savta wasn't good at being soft, but she was the most honest of us."

"Yeah," you said. "She was hardcore."
"Yeah." Ziv swallowed. "So I'm not good at talking about things."

"Me neither," you agreed.

"I should do better," he said, amber eyes too shiny. "Because I know you get it, but, maybe the people around me deserve a little more honesty."

"You've got plenty of honesty Ziv. Too much even." You rubbed the back of your neck, realizing that was exactly the wrong thing to say. "But people like hearing good honesty too."

Ziv took a long shaky breath. "I really thought you were going to die."

You had a flippant response on the tip of your tongue, and it took all your discipline to quash it, to force yourself to be silent and listen to an uncomfortable truth. Because if Ziv was going to be open with you, he deserved to be taken seriously.

"...and it was awful," he said, voice small.

You stared at the floor, a ridiculous amount of guilt building in your chest. You grimaced, rubbing your ears. Because while you had been focused on saving Lao, you hadn't really considered what you were doing to the people around you. If this was how Ziv felt, then Jack and Gabriel went through a similar process. And how they felt... Jack had said as much. But with Ziv here in your room, voice trembling, something finally clicked.

"I'm sorry, Ziv."

"Yeah. I know you weren't trying to get cut up and cause drama." Ziv shook slightly. "I was so mad at you at first. I was going to pull a Reyes and yell at you for being stupid, because I didn't want to say that you scared me. But then I saw him freak out, and I realized that's kind of fucked up."

"I think it's SOP those of us that run combat ops," you said. "Vulnerability isn't something we do well."

"He is normally nice to you though, yeah?" Ziv asked.

"Yeah," you said softly. "He is."

"OK. Good." Ziv bit his lip. "I'll try to be...less of a dick then. He just...he always seems like such an ass. Even if he is hot."

"He's a complex guy." You smiled at your gloves. "There's a lot of compromise. We're not real good at that, but Jack helps."

"Does he just take off his shirt and smile? Because that would distract me."

"Sometimes," you admitted. "It does work."

"The boss sees right through me," Ziv said after a moment. "When we went to Shanghai, I gave him all the attitude in the world, because I didn't like getting pulled out on a mission when everyone else was out partying."

You nodded.

"But he was so damn calm. He didn't care that I was being an asshole. He just focused on the mission and praised me when I did something clever. There was no pissing contest. He just finessed me, and when he took that bullet for me? I was doomed, Lucky."

You snorted. "I would not recommend that as a courtship method."

"Yeah, well, you took a bullet for me too, but you already had my loyalty." Ziv gave you a weak smile.

"I know." You reached out and rested your hand on his shoulder. "I've never doubted that. Even if I've doubted your morals, good sense, and baseline intelligence."

"Fuck you." He choked on the laugh. "You don't get it. I was a mess after Savta."

"Me too," you said.

"Shut up, we're talking about me now."

You gave him a wry smile. Because he might be trying to be more honest, but that didn't mean he was going to stop being a butthead. If anything, you suspected it was only going to get worse.

"I just kind of drifted. School was done. I had a shit job with no interest in anything. I wasn't talking to anyone in the family except my youngest sister. And then you showed up out of the blue and offered me some direction. I don't think you know how fucking grateful I am." The words came out hard, and you were taken aback by the fire in Ziv's eyes.

You blinked. "Ziv, I showed you a video of your grandmother right before she was murdered. I dragged you into a deep-rooted international conspiracy that will probably get us killed. I exacerbated your already tense relations with your family-"

"Ben-zona, I needed to get out of their circle of influence. I love them. They're my family. But they're too much and right now, they're not good for me. As for the rest of it, you're a fucking idiot."

"Hey now-"

"Those motherfuckers murdered Savta. Of course, I would cut off my left hand for a chance to piss in their porridge. I don't care who they think they are. Hoffman? She's fucking dead; she just doesn't know it yet. Nguyen? She's dead too. Petras? Dead. They are all going down, Lucky," he growled, fist pressed over his heart. "This isn't just your crusade. I'm your hacker and I'm with you till the end."

"I uh...never thought swearing murderous revenge could be so heartwarming," you said after a moment, eyes on the floor.

"And the fact you drag your guilt around, like a stone around your neck? That pisses me off!" Ziv snapped. "It's not your fucking fault and I've never blamed you, and no one else better either!"

"It's...grief too," you said after a moment, a knot forming in your belly. "I was already kind of fucked up from the Omnic Crisis. Losing everyone again? That uh...didn't help." You pressed your face into your hand. "I don't actually get that many nightmares about me dying; and we all know I've had more than my share of close calls. It's everyone else that really messes me up."

Ziv made a noise between and spitting and snarling and he was out of the chair, his arms wrapped tightly around your shoulders, his face buried in your hair. He trembled against you, and you reached up and rubbed his back. "If you're so torn up about it, then don't do it to us, OK? You know how fucking hard it is. Don't be such an asshole and put us through that."

You froze for a moment. "Ziv, I don't-"

"You fucking do!" He shouted. "You take stupid fucking risks, barely escape with your life, and then act like it's no big deal. You forget that I'm on the comms for half your goddamn combat missions! I never say anything because that's just how you are, but every goddamn time it's awful!" He hiccupsed and clung to you tighter. "You pretend like it doesn't matter, but it does. It really fucking does."

"I'm sorry," you said. "I don't mean to."

"But you don't stop, and it's going to get you killed!" He glared at you fiercely, teeth bared, eyes shining. "Ben-zona, I won't forgive you, Lucky. I'll piss on your grave. I'll retell all your embarrassing stories. I'll share your browser history!"

He held your gaze, lower lip quivering as his anger melted into something more vulnerable. Then he squeezed his eyes shut and looked away, face scrunching up. Shuddering, he crossed his arms and tucked his chin against his shoulder, refusing to look at you.

God, he was so young.

You stood and hugged him. He didn't push you away. He just trembled against you, taking deep, gut-wrenching breaths. "I'm sorry, Ziv. You're right. I do need to be more careful. I'll work on it. OK?" You patted his head, wondering if he had gotten taller again.

"This is a big job, Lucky. I meant what I said. I'll see it through," he said in your ear. "But please don't leave me to do it alone."

Your head snapped back like you'd been slapped. You stared at Ziv's cloud of hair, hands stroking his back. You were wrong, Ziv's honesty wasn't good or bad. It was goddamn heartbreaking. You closed your eyes, finally understanding what you had been missing.

"I'm kind of dumb," you said, because you'd apologized so many times that "I'm sorry" was starting to sound meaningless. "I uh...I blunder around. But I get what you're saying, loud and clear. Guess I have a pretty big blind spot. Thank you for pointing it out."

"You are dumb. And this is fucking embarrassing," he sniffed.

"Feelings are," you agreed. "Like farting. But you got to let them out."

Ziv began to cough. "You're the worst," he choked.

"I know," you said. Because not only had you done this to Ziv, you'd completely missed it. And it wasn't just Ziv who had been suffering.

When he had finally calmed, he pulled away, wiping his eyes. "I'm hungry," he said, voice rough.

"Me too. Let's go find food."

"Gotta check my face first," Ziv mumbled, heading to your bathroom.

"It's still there! I can see it!" You called to his back.
"You're not funny!" The door clicked shut behind him and you heard the water running.

Your hair and face were damp and you grabbed a towel out of your drawers, before giving the speaker in the ceiling a very grim look.

"Is that better, Athena?" You said in low tones. "Because it was unethical and meddlesome as fuck."

"I was worried about both of you. But I did not violate your confidence."

You snorted. "You're pushing that boundary."

"I...realize that. I am sorry. But do you feel better?" She asked, hesitantly.

"I think so."

"Then it is better," she agreed.

"Thank you," you said after a moment. "But if you ever do that again I will take one of your drones, with you in it, and jam it in the toaster, and set it on fire. Do you understand?"

"You're welcome, Lucky," Athena said, not sounding the least bit worried.

You were officially off med leave, though you had yet to visit the office.

Amélie had already postponed the outing once, because Captain Amari had to deal with an emergency in Finland. You'd heard through the grapevine that it involved Vo. Big surprise. But it had been over two weeks since you'd been released from the infirmary, and you were going out tomorrow, because otherwise another emergency would crop up, and damnit, she needed a spa day.

You just agreed to whatever they were planning, so long as there was food. It was an embarrassingly low bar, and you knew that you'd regret your lack of specificity later on. Still, it wasn't your outing. You were just tagging along.

Jesse had brought you another package. He looked slightly embarrassed by the large vase of red, pink, and white flowers, all with a complex spiral of petals, but he grinned at the bottle of whiskey. There was a card as well, and you set the flowers on your dresser, and stuck the whiskey in your drawer, with your other bottles of alcohol.

You opened the card.

You can have both. The flowers are camellias. I hope you like them. It was good to see you the other night.

I miss you.

Gabriel

You sighed and tucked the card in your drawer. Some of the flowers had a spicy scent and you admired them for a moment. Flowers had always been a silly luxury for richer people, but maybe you could get used to having them around. It was the little things, after all.

He was trying. More importantly, he was respecting your boundaries. And you missed him too.

A lot of pieces had come together over the past few weeks. Jack had been good, trying to keep communication open and interactions diplomatic. But it was from Hanzo, Genji, Lacroix, Athena, and Ziv that you'd gained unexpected insight.

You lay on your back on the floor, because if you laid in the bed, you would fall asleep. There had been a lot of thinking done on your floor lately. You held the onyx pendant between your thumb and finger, rubbing the smooth stone in slow circles.

Fact: Lao was not in control of herself.

Fact: Lao stabbed you.

Fact: Gabriel had shot her.

Fact: Gabriel did it to defend you.

Fact: Lao was still alive.

Fact: Gabriel didn't care that he shot her.

You unwove the sequence carefully: Lao was not in control of herself. Lao stabbed you. Lao was still alive. And you weren't the least bit mad at her.

Gabriel shot Lao. Gabriel did it to defend you. Gabriel didn't care that he shot her. Because all he cared about was that you were alive. You were a still mad at him. But anger was waning. It wasn't as if Gabriel wanted to kill your friend. She just never factored into his equation. She was a threat, and Gabriel had very permanent ways of dealing with threats.

Fact: You had issues.

Fact: When it came to your people, you were not very good at thinking clearly.

Fact: Your near death experience had caused trauma to your friends.

Fact: You still had issues.

You had issues, and most of them revolved around your people. Your thinking wasn't always clear: you got tunnel vision. "Save Lao" became "save Lao at any cost, consequences to myself be damned." And that was not operationally sound logic. You would berate Ziv for pulling something like that. And so, by setting a bad example and/or getting hurt, you had managed to hurt your people: Ziv, Jack, and Gabriel included.

It was Ziv who'd really pushed this epiphany. If it turned out to be right, you'd tell him. Because he deserved to know.

It had taken you some time to translate what Gabriel had really been trying to say to you. All those angry declarations from Gabriel about being willing to trade Lao's life for yours? Her death wasn't what he was getting at. He was a little broken and bad at feelings, but you couldn't point fingers, now could you? What he was trying to say was that he was angry that you for the risks you were willing to undergo to save Lao. Risks, that you had to admit, weren't healthy. Risks that you would take again, because that's how you were and Gabriel knew it.

Gabriel wasn't wrong to be upset. You had issues. And those issues were hurting the people who cared about you.

Fact: Forgiveness was a process.

Fact: Whatever you felt for Gabriel needed to be independent of Lao.

Fact: Whatever you felt for Lao needed to be independent of Gabriel.

Fact: You fucking missed Gabriel.

Forgiveness wasn't an open-ended problem or a blank check for misbehavior; there was an action, and it was a potential reaction. You had to know what you were forgiving, for it to be real. Lao could wake up. Lao could die. Gabriel had never intended to kill Lao. Gabriel intended to save you. There wasn't anything wrong with that sentiment.

You had issues. You loved Lao. Gabriel hurt her. You were not good at thinking clearly when it came to your people. You still had issues. And you missed Gabriel.

You had been asking yourself "could you forgive Gabriel for killing Lao?" Your epiphany was simple. That was the wrong question. Gabriel didn't care about Lao, that was true, but he hadn't been calling for her death. It was like Athena had told you, you set your parameters too wide. You could not measure your success by impossible standards. She was right: you could not protect everyone. You could just do your best and learn from your goddamn mistakes, as awful as that sounded. It was so much easier said than done, but you had to acknowledge it as truth. If you took that first step, maybe the rest would follow.

So could you forgive Gabriel for killing Lao? As it was phrased, no. But Lao was still alive. And Gabriel's intent mattered. "Could you forgive Gabriel for ignoring your feelings and ultimately saving your life?" Closer. "Could you forgive Gabriel for ignoring your feelings and ultimately saving your life, even if it meant the death of your friend?"

There. That was the right question. It was a lot more complex and cumbersome than the original, but it took into account the nuances of the situation. Because the truth was rarely neat.

It was still a bitter pill to swallow. But you thought that maybe you could forgive him that much. It would take more time and some more uncomfortable truths, but you could forgive that man almost anything.

You vaguely remembered the other night, nestled between him and Jack. There had been no flashbacks, no nightmares. You'd been warm, comfortable, and content. And while things would never be perfect, you couldn't think of anything better.

You got off the floor, and slipped the necklace back under your shirt. You would sleep on it. And if you still felt the same in the morning, you would go talk to him.

It was strange to walk into the office after so long. But it felt like coming home. Jesse looked up from your desk, the entire surface strewn with a mess of paperwork. An expression of hope crossed his face, before he quickly pulled his hat down to hide it.

Gabriel was on his feet in seconds, but he stayed behind the desk, watching your face. "Take a walk, kid."

"Sir!" Jesse skedaddled past you, shutting the door firmly behind him.

Gabriel was in his usual hoodie and hat. There were dark circles around his eyes and he looked tired. He gnawed on his lower lip, brows furrowed.

You uncrossed your arms, taking a deep breath. "Hi."

"Hi," he said softly, palms flat on the desk. "Can I come over there?"

"Yeah," you said.

He closed the distance, placing both hands on your cheeks. He looked you over, like he was expecting to find more damage. "How are you?" He asked, a calloused thumb tracing your cheekbone.

"Getting better," you said, placing your hands on his wrists. You drew his arms around you and hugged him carefully. He was limp for a moment, and then his grip tightened and he embraced you fully, face buried in your hair. "How are you?"

"Happy to see you. I miss you, corazon," he murmured, voice rough.

"Miss you too." He was so warm and you stroked his back, feeling him relax against you. You stayed that way for a moment. "Wanted to talk to you."

He drew back, head tilted to the side. "Sit?"

"Sure."

Gabriel sat down on the couch, and pulled you forward, so you were sitting on his lap, knees on the couch, facing him.

He kept looking you over, touching you, checking to see if you were real. You rested your hand on his cheek and he closed his eyes, one hand rising to cradle yours against his face.

"Jack not cuddling you enough?"

"It always turns into sex," Gabriel said, a small smile forming on his lips.

You nodded. "He's tricky like that."

"He is." Gabriel inhaled deeply. "What'd you want to talk about?" He asked, eyes still closed.

"Saw Lao the other day."

Gabriel's jaw clenched, but his eyes stayed shut. "Ana told me."

"Been doing a lot of thinking." You rested your head on his shoulder. "I'm pretty messed up, Gabriel. We all are. But you know how well I handle loss."

He rubbed your back. "None of us are graceful about it, corazon."
"Saving Lao was my chance to make that right." You took a deep breath. "Which I know is ridiculous, because none of what happened was my fault. But that doesn't mean I don't feel like I could have done better. You know what that's like. I know you don't care about her as a person. But I think you understand what she represents to me."

"I understand. But you matter to me. I would do a lot of things to keep you safe," Gabriel said gruffly. "Even if you hate me for it afterward."

"I figured you'd say that." You straightened up, meeting Gabriel's dark eyes. "I haven't quite gotten over what happened," you said and he flinched. "But I'm getting there. It's taken some work," you said. "Because I'm not really good at letting go of things."

He laughed softly at that, his smile widening. "That is an understatement, corazon." He frowned then. "You know it was never about her, right?"

You nodded.

"There were two reasons I was so angry" Gabriel said slowly. He swallowed, face solemn. "The primary reason was that I was afraid I was going to lose you." His lips started to move, but no sound came out. He stopped, like he was gauging his words and then started once more. "The secondary one was that you don't value your safety nearly enough. That pisses me off, baby. The fact you don't take care of yourself-"

"I know," you said. "Ziv uh...Ziv pulled a really low blow and let me know how much I'd worried him. Like honest emotions with 90 percent less snark but 90 percent more guilt. It kind of opened my eyes."

"Glad Mihret is good for something," Gabriel muttered, but there wasn't any venom in his voice.

"I'm sorry. I don't mean to scare you." You rested your head on his shoulder. It was easier not to look at him while you made your confessions. "It's not that I don't care about my life. I just...I get tunnel vision. I'm terrified of losing other people, so I get where you're coming from and I'm really sorry."

"This is just karma," Gabriel said, shaking his head. "You, Jack, me. We all make the same damn mistake and then take turns getting mad at each other."

"I haven't gotten mad at you about that-"

"You will, eventually," Gabriel said. "But me and Jack have a few years of experience on you. Tend to be smarter about how we fight. Don't usually let ourselves get stabbed as a tactic."

"I didn't intend-"

He just kissed your palm. "I know."

You stroked his face.

"Just wanted you to know," you said. "I still have projects to finish outside the office, but I'll be back when they're done. All right?"

"Yes," he said firmly. "...Do you need more time on your own?"

"I...don't know," you admitted. "Captain Amari and Amélie have bullied me into an outing today. But I wanted to check and see if you and Jack were free tonight. Figured I'd test the waters."

"I will be. And so will he," Gabriel said, without batting an eye.

"You can call off Tataryn too."

"Not till you're back in the office. Besides, he's enjoying the cushy duty of checking you out all the time," Gabriel growled. "Maybe I'll pull him and put Diallo on it. She won't be staring at your ass nearly as often."

"...It's just weird having my coworkers tail me."

"Deal with it," Gabriel said, not sounding the least bit concerned.

"I really don't think Captain Amari wants him coming to the spa with us," you said taking another route.

"Then she can take it up with me," Gabriel said.

You rolled your eyes. "You just don't quit."

He shook his head. "Don't know how."

You kissed him then. Enjoying his startled gasp, you cupped the back of his head, stealing his breath. His lips were rough against yours and when you released him he dropped back against the couch, a content smile on his face.

"So you liked the flowers and whiskey?" He grinned up at you.

"You can't buy me, Gabriel," you said, shaking your head.

"Of course not. But I can soften you up."

"You can," you acknowledged. You climbed off his lap, warmth sparking in your chest. This still felt right, and for that you were grateful. "I'll see you tonight."

He grinned up at you, eyes bright. "Looking forward to it."

Chapter End Notes

Had a rough writing week. Couldn't get in the right headspace and wondered if I was burning out. Assuming it has to do with the work stress. But the comments helped. I see them and then it's like "oh yeah, other people like this too" and it rejuvenates me. So thanks. :D

Not going to lie, the Lao and Ziv scenes were pretty emotional to write. Feelings are scary.

My cousin bought two pies for a family gathering that was cancelled. So I've been gorging on lemon meringue pie and I have no regrets. (Actually, I do. I went to the store today and bought untested madeleines and they were too sweet and dry. I also bought these Lindt White Chocolate Strawberry truffles and they taste like strawberry milk, and I should have bought more, instead of the bad madeleines.) I also made chili and so have not been only eating sweets.
Chapter 40

Chapter Summary

A day out with shopping, spa treatments, and uninvited guests.

Chapter Notes

We are past the 300k word mark and at the four month anniversary. This calls for a spa day! Which apparently means different things to different people.

See the end of the chapter for more notes

"No, do not invite him over. He's working," you told Amélie, angrily stabbing your chicken Marengo with your fork. You weren't sure about adding crayfish to sautéed chicken and tomatoes, but it seemed to work.

Amélie giggled. "But he is so cute. I want to ask him his name and see what kind of terrible pickup lines he has." She was eating fancy fish dumplings called "quenelles" smothered in an herbed cream sauce.

"They are really bad," you said.

"Now I must hear them-"

Captain Amari sipped her red wine and neatly cut up her coq au vin. "Stop teasing poor Lucky. Fedya is prone to being insufferable. And she's had him dogging her steps for days."

Her use of his nickname was not lost on you. You schooled your face and stuffed it full of chicken.

Amélie had driven her sporty little coupe downtown, Captain Amari in the front, you wedged in the tiny backseat. Lunch came first, at some French bistro Amélie declared "acceptable, but not impressive." The main reason you were here was because it was next to the shopping area she wanted to visit. Amélie was painfully stylish in stiletto boots and a plum sweater dress that draped artfully along her figure. Captain Amari had dressed down in a black cable knit turtle neck sweater and fitted black pants tucked into her riding boots. She wore a gold ankh on a chain, and you realized that you rarely saw her wear jewelry. You had on the cashmere sweater and jeans, and Amélie had cooed over it, petting your arm and telling you that you needed to dress up more.

You left your gloves on while you ate, and were relieved that no one said a thing.

Tataryn sat at the bar, making small talk with the waitress, his eyes occasionally drifting to your table.

You drank the pinot noir Amélie ordered for you. She deemed it "passable, but not something she would stock." You kept your eyes on all the doors and some of the windows.
"If that handsome man is here, you realize you can relax, yes?" Amélie said gently. "You are closed up like an oyster."

"Habit," you shrugged. Because Captain Amari was here and you weren't convinced that you should let your guard down.

"At ease, agent. That's an order," Captain Amari said dryly, swirling her glass.

You emptied your wine glass and set it down on the table. "Yes, ma'am."

Amélie laughed. "I think that had the opposite effect, Ana."

"It's not just that. Last time I was drinking in public, there was a fight," you admitted.

"Do you expect someone to pick a fight with me, Chanceux?" Amélie giggled. "Or do you expect Ana to start a brawl? Because she is the type."

"Is that so?" Captain Amari asked, turning her raptor gaze on you.

Amélie's eyes twinkled, because she knew what she had started.

"...I definitely see Amélie instigating it," you said, sawing your chicken into unnecessarily tiny pieces. "But I have no trouble picturing you wading into it and smashing heads along the way."

Captain Amari actually looked quite pleased by that statement.

"I promise that I will not start any fights today. Unless they try to serve me cheap wine. Then I will hurt them," Amélie said blithely, taking a bite of quenelle. "Or an excess of cilantro. I hate chefs that overuse cilantro. It is like people who wear too much fragrance. Please, just do not."

You didn't get cake. Amélie said not to bother, the ones here weren't as good as the bakery down the street. But you did get a cheese plate instead.

Three glasses of wine, some buttery food, and a whole plate of cheese and fruit later, you felt pretty good. You weren't drunk, but your head was pleasantly swirmy and you could feel yourself relaxing, even though Captain Amari was right there and wait a minute, were you "hanging out" with your actual commanding officer?

You tried to picture Captain Patel eating at a fancy restaurant with you. She would have sat at the same table, but everyone would be on their best behavior, while she ate her meal with precision, politeness, and a military efficiency. Captain Patel had been a hardass, but Captain Amari was something entirely different. In fact, Captain Amari was scarier because she had a head for tricky diplomacy, setting traps and finessing people with both the carrot and the stick. Captain Patel would have just beaten or terrorized everyone into submission.

It occurred to you then, that after all this time, you still saw Captain Patel as your CO, and perhaps that's why, despite your cavalier disregard for conventional rules, you never pushed the actual hierarchy too hard. Because she would not have approved. The thought made you smile, just a little.

"Have some more wine," Captain Amari told you, and that was another thing you would have never heard Captain Patel say.
"I think I'm OK," you said, not wanting to get sloppy in front of her.

"You're going to want another glass," Captain Amari told you as Amélie left to powder her nose. "She's very enthusiastic about shopping." There was a bright gleam in her eye.

You poured the rest of the bottle into your glass, and chugged it as politely as you could.

"This color would look very good on you," Amélie said handing you a midnight blue dress. "The crystal beadwork is exquisite and there is not too much yellow in it. Keeps it from being garish."

Labeled "dry clean only" and "silk-charmeuse," whatever that meant, you didn't think it would survive your lifestyle. You discretely checked the price tag and nearly choked, because it was ridiculous. But Amélie shopped at high-end boutiques, and that sticker-shock was to be expected when purchasing formalwear.

"I'm not going to be wearing that out any time soon," you said.

"Yes, you will," Amélie said, crossing her arms. "Gérard wants you to attend some events with me. Unless you have some other preferences, we are getting this." She put it over her arm. "Oh, maybe you like the purple one better?"

You glanced helplessly at Captain Amari who was browsing some tailored suits.

"The blue is more flattering, but the purple has a very striking cut," she said, not even looking up.

Amélie practically shoved you into the dressing room and you weren't surprised to find that the dress looked very good on you. It had better, for that kind of money. Thin straps held up the satiny fabric and it clung to your figure, shimmering when you moved. Crystal beads trimmed the neckline and the bodice. It fell mid thigh and looked more like a slip than a dress, but Amélie nodded approvingly, even though your scarred leg was exposed.

"See? So very lovely," Amélie sighed. "You had better try on the purple too."

You complied, because something about the curve of her smile told you that resistance would be pointless and probably painful.

"I have clothes, Amélie."

"You cannot wear suits and exercise gear all the time, Chanceux," she said. "And you need color, variety, fun things."

"...I could start a novelty t-shirt collection."

"Do you have shoes for these?" Amélie asked the clerk, gracefully ignoring your suggestion. "Her size."

You sighed, holding very still while the clerk began to take measurements. The woman looked vaguely terrified, and you suspected it was because she recognized Captain Amari. She brought out a box of open-toe heels, the blue satin matching the dress. The ankle-straps buckled and you tried them on, while Amélie examined them critically.

"We'll take those too," Amélie said, adding them to the growing pile of clothes.

You smiled tolerantly, and calculated that so far, this would cost four paychecks. It was a good thing your room and board were covered by work. You were slightly surprised when Amélie paid for everything and ordered the packages delivered to the base by tonight.

"Thank you, but you don't need to buy me anything-"

She waved away any thanks, claiming, "You are accompanying me to these events. We must coordinate properly."

You weren't sure if that was just a bribe, or also an insult to your fashion sense. Honestly, it was probably both and more.

"I can afford-"

"But I do not know what I want to wear yet. And we cannot clash. We do not need to match, because that is tasteless and overdone, but we need to be complementary. I do not know exactly what Gérard is planning, so we must be prepared for different types of events: the venue, the season, the time of day; those factors determine the suitability of our choices, Chanceux."

You took a step backward.

"You must have choices. I must have choices. Please, Chanceux. The more I think about it, the more I realize you need more dresses. In fact, maybe we need to try on that orange one over there. I think I have a fairly good eye for your measurements now. Maybe we can buy that red one too. And that indigo one looks like it might fit you if they take it in a few centimeters."

"I uh...no, we're good. Never mind. I have a black dress too. It's even intact."

Amélie rested her chin in one hand, her nails tapping against her cheek. "Maybe that will do. I suppose. You will have to show me later. Unless you think we need to discuss this more?"

You got the message loud and clear. Any more arguing, and she'd buy more dresses, just to spite you.

"Well, thank you," you said, rubbing the back of your neck. "You're very kind."

"No, I am vain and a perfectionist," she said with satisfied smile. "But thank you for saying so. You are very sweet, Chanceux."

You blinked, because that was not an adjective you would have chosen. But then you'd just called her "kind." You were learning that you needed a better strategy to argue with Amélie. This would take some critical thinking and maybe some input from Lacroix. You'd have to be subtle about it. Nothing you could do now. Instead, you went back to Tataryn-spotting.

"Were you looking for anything in particular, Chanceux?" Amélie asked, while you discretely stared out the front window, catching Tataryn standing at a bus stop, pretending to check the routes.

"I was looking for a pair of leather pants," you said after a moment.

"Like his?" Amélie asked, picking up on it immediately. "Yes, I see what you are going for. We can do that. It would be very femme fatale, and that air of danger suits you. But you'll need new shoes and a pretty blouse-" She took your hand. "Let's go across the street. And then we can look at lingerie!"

You bit back a whimper.

"We're getting cake afterward," Captain Amari said, bringing up the rear so you couldn't retreat. "Won't that be nice?"

There was a stop for street wear. There was another stop for shoes. There was a stop for cosmetics. There was a stop for underwear.

You drew the line at Amélie buying you lingerie. You bought a black leather underbust corset, with real steel boning, at her insistence, and some other items she recommended that you suspected Jack and Gabriel would appreciate. Some of it was practical: hosiery and underwear. Some of it not: also fine hosiery and fancy underwear. You had to admit, some of the fabrics were pretty, and you'd picked up a few more pairs of gloves in a different colors and softer fabrics, like lace and satin.

You had gotten leather pants and more. You didn't want to think about how much more, because you had the sneaking suspicion Lacroix was going to be making wardrobe suggestions for you now. He and Amélie would be sitting on their couch drinking extravagant wine, eating cheese, and choosing outfits for you tonight. You wouldn't be there of course, but Amélie had a frighteningly sharp memory and they would argue passionately over the cut of coat you should have chosen.

You shuddered, like someone had walked over your grave.

"Isn't this fun?" Amélie asked.

You smiled tightly. "Yeah. It's uh...really broadened my horizons." You nodded for emphasis. The purchases weren't bad, Amélie had exquisite taste and she was good company. But the shopping process had gone on for far too long.

"I am glad," she said, happiness lighting up her face. "You always have bread on the board, and I am so happy that you can take a break to indulge yourself."

"I...what?"

"Avoir du pain sur la planche? Bread on the board? I suppose that idiom does not translate. You always have so much to do. Gérard greatly admires your work ethic. But you need to take time for yourself, Chanceux," Amélie said, leaning over your shoulder to inspect the jewelry you'd been pretending to look at. "No, nothing in there suits you. It's too tacky."

"I thought so too," you said, eyeing the high price tags. You paused, digesting the rest of what she'd said. That was a spin-job right there. Lacroix probably said that you were obsessed with the job. Amélie finessed that into "you have a good work ethic."

"Did you want to look at jewelry?"
"I'm ready for cake," you admitted, because the wine was wearing off and you were dying inside.

"Then we shall get cake," Amélie agreed. "And then we will go to the spa."

You had a slice of sponge cake topped with slivered almonds and caramelized apples, and ordered a plate of madeleines as well. You deserved a post-shopping mid-afternoon snack.

"Their apple cake is a variant of Vitréais," Amélie explained. "That is a Breton specialty. One of my favorites when I visit Vitré."

"It's pretty delicious," you said, much more relaxed now that you didn't have Amélie burying you under clothes. You sipped earl grey and happily ate your cake.

Captain Amari ordered her own tray of madeleines, as well as a fruit tart.

Amélie had an opera cake and black coffee. Both women looked enormously pleased with themselves, exchanging satisfied smiles, and you wondered what you had missed.

"So, how are things?" Amélie asked. "Have your lovers learned to behave themselves better?"

"They sent me flowers and whiskey," you said, because no more detail needed to be added. "I think things are improving."

"They have given you more than that, yes?" Amélie asked, leaning forward.

"Yes?" Because you weren't sure what she was asking, but you'd received other gifts that you weren't going to discuss with present company.

"Good," she said, sounding satisfied. "We should do this again. Next time we will attend something artistic; it will be good for the soul."

"I don't know if I'm quite ready for that," you admitted. Because the combination of Amélie's cultured enthusiasm and Captain Amari's intense poise made it impossible to relax. Even if you had really delicious cake.

"So I hear you and Genji have become quite close," Captain Amari said so solemnly, you were certain she was fucking with you. You glanced at Amélie who was smirking at you.

"Old news. According to the rumor mill, I'm sleeping with Hanzo now."

Amélie began to laugh. "He is so pretty. I want to braid his hair!"

"Careful, after this outing, I'll be sleeping with both of you," you muttered.

"No, it will definitely be Tataryn," Captain Amari said.

You looked out the window and there he was, smoking a cigarette and talking on his phone.
The spa was a fancy five story building, with manicured gardens and heated pools decorating the grounds. Amélie had scheduled personalized treatments for all of you and afterward you could use the variety of saunas and pools. So you resigned yourself to an hour or so of being poked and prodded by strangers before you got to go swimming and soak in a hot tub. That last part sounded good. In fact, if you ever got a place off base, you wanted a big bathtub.

The entryway was all blue glass and soothing sea colors. A fountain bubbled cheerfully, the natural rock tiers going up two stories. The staff wore neatly pressed blue-green uniforms. The lobby had an open floor plan, and there were winding stairs going all the way up to the fifth floor. Each higher floor had an overlook with a plate glass balustrade, so visitors could look down. Or snipe. Access to the higher floors made this room somewhat defensible, but only if you had the high ground.

You wondered when assessing the combat merits of a room had become second nature.

And where would Tataryn turn up? You figured he'd loiter on the grounds, maybe schedule his own appointment if he was feeling particularly bold. And then he'd expense it. Oh well, that was Jesse's problem.

"Ah, Ms. Dubois," the receptionist gave Amélie a welcoming smile over her screen. "I have massages scheduled for you and Ms. Chanceux. Ms. Capitaine requested the seaweed body wrap. Afterward you will have access to all the steam baths and soaking pools we have to offer. Might I suggest the peach bath soak? The water is steeped in peach leaves and has an amazing scent. The color is a little shocking, but it does not stain."

She gave some more directions, but your attention had wandered as you tried to spot Tataryn.

"Thank you," Amélie said, eyes bright with excitement. She flashed you a genuine smile of delight. "This is so refreshing. And I know you have been so tense, Chanceux. I think you will enjoy this." She linked arms with you, possibly so you couldn't make an escape, and led you up the open staircase, Captain Amari following behind.

"We are on the second floor," she told you.

"Third floor," Captain Amari said. "I will see you in the saunas."

There was a locker room attendant and she handed you a white terry cloth wrap, a robe, and a pair of sandals. Neat partitions, pretty paintings, and mosaic floors made the locker room seem elegant. Even the showerheads had fancy flower shapes. You sighed and stripped down, finding the glorified towel had elastic strips inside to keep it up. There was a fluffy white bathrobe as well and you put that on, just to cover up your leg. You slipped your tanto into a drawstring bag on your wrist. You left on your gloves, jamming your hands in the pockets.

A lot of European saunas and spas were nude, like Japanese baths, so at some point, you would be walking around naked in front of strangers and your coworkers. But you hadn't reached that point yet, and you weren't in any hurry. Fortunately, Amélie had chosen a less busy time to visit the spa.

"We can store any items you need," the attendant told you, noticing the bag.

"I have a condition," you said.

"Oh! Do you have allergies we need to be aware of?" She sounded very concerned.

"No, it's a rare condition." Acute paranoia amplified by constant surprise combat. You didn't think your shrink would write you an excuse, but people tended to be too polite to ask. You weren't supposed to bring a gun on the shopping trip, but you could conceal the tanto much easier. You called it a psychological crutch, and didn't question too closely what it was propping up.

"Do you need any special care?"

"No. I keep my kit nearby, just in case," you said.

"Oh, I completely understand." She was young and nodded vigorously at you.

Not so shockingly, Amélie skipped the robe and strode out, all slender muscle and dangerous curves wrapped in a towel. She gave your robe a disapproving look.

"Chanceux, you should be more comfortable in your skin."

You shrugged. "I'm good."

"The pools and the saunas are nude."

"I know. I can do it. No worries. I just get cold."

She shook her head, skepticism written on her fine features. "As you wish."

Another spa attendant waited at the door, and she led you through the pool area. There were several small pools in their own separate rooms off the main hall. One smelled like peaches, and it was bright green and completely opaque.

"That one is our stone and moss pool." The water was a deep black color and you couldn't see the bottom. "It's rather deep, so be careful. The water is of course, warmed, treated with UV light for cleansing, and very soothing. We have an extra hot bath. There is a lava rock pool. We have some outdoor soaking areas as well. We also have an Olympic pool outside, if you feel like doing laps. The saunas are up ahead, but we have them on multiple floors. They are excellent for aches and pains, detox, and-
"

You stared wistfully at the steaming bath, wishing you could just slip into the water.

"Well, I am going down this hall for a Swedish massage. And I scheduled you a deep tissue massage, considering all your injuries," Amélie said.

You blinked. You hadn't been paying attention, too busy wondering which hot bath would be better.

"Oh, are you an athlete?" The attendant was an older woman, effervescent and pleasant. Her nametag said "Marta."

"No, I'm not," you said after a moment. Marta led you into a room with an a large padded table. It smelled like sage and lavender. The walls were a soothing shade of light green and you wondered just how you had let this happen.

"You'll need to take off your robe. But you can leave the wrap on."

You pulled the robe off, hanging it and your bag on the hook on the wall.

"Oh." Marta paused, her eyes falling on your leg. The patchwork effect was still very pronounced, thick ridged scars running along the graft lines. You had other scars along your exposed skin, but your leg was the worst of it. "You are a soldier then?"

"Yes." You frowned, studying the way the skin warped like tree bark.

"Well, there is no need to be self-conscious. You are a very lovely young woman, and if anyone is unpleasant to you, let me know and I will handle it." Marta nodded firmly.

"Oh, thank you." You rubbed the back of your neck, feeling the blood rush to your face. Because this little civilian lady thought she could defend you better than you could yourself? It was a surprisingly heartwarming sentiment.

"No trouble at all. You just lie down and I'll get Nina. She is an excellent masseuse. Very professional. All those aches and pains will melt away. She does wonders for your stress levels," Marta told you.

"That sounds lovely," you said. "Thank you."

"Afterward, I recommend the peach bath soak. It is divine. Let me know if you need any refreshments. It is very easy to become dehydrated in the heat, so you have to be careful."

You chuckled. "Thank you, ma'am."

"I'm serious," she said earnestly. "People don't notice how much they sweat underwater."

You nodded. "Yes, ma'am."

Marta just shook her head. "I'm sorry. You know all this. I'm just used to our younger clients not taking these warnings seriously. You're a soldier, of course you know you need to stay hydrated. I'm sorry to nag."

"I appreciate you looking out for me, ma'am," you said.

"And you're so polite," she said, shaking her head. "Your parents must be so proud."

Your smile tightened.

"I'm sorry, I'm babbling. I'll go get Nina for you. But come find me if you need anything, all right?"

"Of course. Thank you," you said as she left the room.

Your leg didn't hurt. It hadn't for a long time, but it was strange exposing it for everyone to see. You weren't so much self-conscious as simply unused to the sensation. People would stare, but then you'd been putting up with all kinds of scrutiny on base for a long time. No, it didn't bother you. But it did make you more noticeable, and you didn't like that.

You climbed onto the table, resting on your stomach. There was a vent in the ceiling just to the right of your head, and you frowned at the odd banging sounds echoing from within.
"Where is she?" A distorted voice demanded. And you heard a woman sob.

"I don't know-" And then the familiar clap of a gunshot.

"Check the rooms-"

You were off the table in a split second, your tanto out of the bag. You peeled your gloves off and opened up your prosthetic ring finger. The comm device was simple. "... --- ..." You tapped out. "... .--. .-"

You pulled on the robe and left off the sandals, because you could not fight in those. You wouldn't stay hidden for long. It sounded like they were looking for someone in particular. You grabbed a towel, wrapping your hair, and huddled on the ground, concealing your hands, skin, and scars.

You crouched behind the table as the door opened.

A man in a balaclava and body armor strode in carrying an assault rifle. His left leg was made of metal and you bit back a curse.

"...Well what do we have here? Are you Amélie Lacroix?" He laughed harshly, crouching down, his gun pointed directly at your face.

You made a soft helpless noise, and curled up, as nonthreatening as you could make yourself.

He reached for you, and you waited till he was overextended, his right hand gripping the collar of your robe. Then you struck, right hand digging your tanto into his gun arm, forcing the muzzle away from you. Your left hand shot out half a second after, and you flexed your middle finger outward, blade thrusting through his unprotected throat. You twisted your left hand, making sure to tear as much tissue as you could. He gurgled, blood dripping down your arms. When his grip on your robe relaxed, you lowered him to the ground and made sure he was dead.

You withdrew your tanto, and finger blade, wiping them on his pants. He had armor on and he was too big for you to steal it, but you took his comm earpiece. Sheathing your tanto in the belt of the robe, you picked up his gun. It was heavier than you were comfortable with, but you lifted it in both arms, and peeked out of the room.

"Scorpion, this is Spider. You done yet? You know you're not supposed to fuck around man. We need to move." The voice crackled over the stolen comm and you smiled tightly. You were barefoot, in a bathrobe, and already bloodstained.

Quietly, you padded into the hall, hearing the sobs a few yard away.

"I said stop simpering. Unless you want to end up like her. Now where is Amélie Lacroix?"

"W-we don't have any clients by that name!" A young woman wailed.

You rounded the corner. The man had his back to you, and you couldn't tell if he was a cyborg or not. You hefted the rifle, aimed, and fired. Two things happened: the kick nearly knocked you backward into a pool and an energy bolt burst out, caving his skull. The shot roared, though it didn't sound quite like a bullet going through deflagration; it was a higher and sharper noise.

The woman on the ground cradled Marta, who had a very big hole in her chest. She was dead. You swore, setting the gun down.

"Nina, right?" You asked, staring at the bloodstained masseuse.

"Yes," she said, shaking.

"Are you injured?"

"N-no."

"Do you know where they came from?"

"No. They just...they just rushed us."

"Nearest fire escape or window?"

Nina pointed and you helped her move Marta, then pulled her up, your robe now smeared in three people's blood. "Nothing you can do for Marta now. You need to hide or get out." You glanced at the second dead man's gun. It was another large assault rifle and you weren't going to be able to use that easily.

Nina nodded. "I can climb out the window. It's only the second story."

"Watch yourself," you said.

She paused. "Are you Amélie Lacroix?"

"No," you said, shaking your head. "Not me."

She nodded and took off. You left the guns. You couldn't use them safely and you had to find Amélie fast.

"Scorpion, Spider, this is Alpha leader. Any luck?" A woman's voice echoed in pool area.

You swore as you heard the heavy clank of boots. You looked around, knowing you needed a hiding spot. You ran into the stone and moss pool room, and slipped into the water, ducking behind the large rock formation protruding from the center. A decorative waterfall churned the waters, masking your ripples.

"She was sighted here. We need Lacroix alive. Everyone else is expendable." It was the female voice again.

You shed the heavy robe, slipping under water, tanto gripped firmly in your hand. The comm stayed in your ear. You took cover behind the rocks, raising your nose just enough to take in small breaths of oxygen.

"We have casualties!" A man shouted. "Fuck! Scorpion and Spider are down! I repeat, Scorpion and Spider are down!"

"Check all these room thoroughly. She could be anywhere!"

"Bodyguards were reported with her!"

You counted half a dozen different voices over the comm, and that was just in your area. They really wanted Amélie, and given Lacroix's past with Nguyen, you were starting to see just how personal this feud was.
Metallic footsteps echoed on the tile floor and you slowly dropped beneath the water. This pool was at least six feet deep in places and you stayed low, focusing on holding your breath. Your chest pounded, and began to burn as you hovered there in the water, not daring to move. The water was comfortably warm, but you couldn’t stay like this.

"Clear!" You heard from above and in the bubbling of the comm. You waited for the sound of boots to depart and slowly rose, sucking in sweet oxygen. You listened. There were still soldiers in the hall. Maybe you should have tried to carry one of the guns in here.

Staying low, you planned your next move.

They had not found Amélie yet. She was smart. She would have hidden or gotten out.

You had already sent out an SOS. You had maybe twenty minutes before backup arrived. And that wasn’t counting if Tataryn got a call off before you did. Hopefully that would blindside your attackers.

Captain Amari was a floor higher, and no one had identified her thus far.

You were in a glorified bloody towel, armed with a knife and your fingers. Being outnumbered like this was nothing new. The lack of clothes and a gun however, were very troubling. You took a deep breath, already focusing on your priorities. You had to stay alive. You had to find your group. And you had to do what you could to keep this from turning into a massacre or hostage situation, which knowing Nguyen, would still end in a massacre.

"Yeah, I know, Alpha Leader. I already checked in there. If someone was hiding, they’d have to be a fish. Fine, I’m going back in. Do you want me to take pictures for you while I’m at it?" The man had an American accent. "Bitch," he muttered under his breath. You slowly dropped again, "Yeah, it’s clear. Can I come catch up with the rest of you? I want to find this Lacroix bitch and get out."

You rose again, heart pounding as you saw the soldier's back. You held your tanto in your right hand and slowly climbed out the water, crouching on a stepping stone.

The man shook his head, and he was only a few feet away. You leapt onto his back, your legs locking around his hips, left arm curling around his throat. Jamming your tanto downward between the gap in his armor, you pushed it down hard through the nape of his neck. You held on tight while he wobbled, blood seeping as you worked the blade through his vertebrae. Twisting the tanto before you yanked it out made the whole endeavor even messier. You dropped off his back as he fell, his blood smearing your chest.

You checked him for grenades or smaller guns, but found nothing useful except his comm unit. Your stolen comm unit had sputtered into silence and you sighed, wishing they had sprung for waterproof devices. Good to know your enemies did things in half measures though.

It took some work, but you quietly rolled him into the water. No need to advertise his location. Between the heavy armor and his cybernetic limbs, he sunk like a stone.

You crept back into the hall, noting that your terrycloth wrap was bloody and soaked, but still covering your bits. With your exposed scars and your wet tangled hair, you felt like an angry Japanese ghost. It was not the least bit sexy.

Stepping silently through the halls, you froze when you heard more clomping. You were beside a regular pool with clear water, but you lowered yourself on the ladder, hugging the wall. It had full-metal high hand rails and you could pull yourself up fast. Tanto between your teeth, you hung there, feet on the first rung.

"Hurry up, Hornet. Quit sulking because Alpha Bitch is on your case."

Praying that he didn't look down, you waited for him to pass right beside you, and then you sprung out of the pool, spraying water across the floor. Gripping the railing, you pulled then pushed yourself airborne and kicked him hard with both feet striking his midsection. Even though he wore a chest plate, the force of your momentum staggered him. Swinging yourself across the floor, you seized him by the hair and slammed his face into the wall. He went down, your hands still clutching his hair, and you smashed his head against the floor, again and again, the dull rhythm soothing your nerves. You kept it up till a seam gave and his skull popped, splashing the area with blood and brains.

You stared for a moment, a little surprised by your own brutality. Well, they'd killed that nice older lady. Plus you had a serious problem with Nguyen's cyborgs. And you'd spent the day being teased and prodded by Amélie and Captain Amari. Not to mention all the shopping. And maybe you'd been a little excited about swimming and soaking, which was not going according to plan. Conclusion: today had not been the day to fuck with you. Who cared about the reason why? You certainly weren't worried about the implications it had about your psyche, right?

Checking his body, you found him to be armed with the same heavy energy gun as the rest. This was the worst loot drop ever. You took it anyway.

Then you went down the hall you remembered Amélie going through.

The floors were carpeted here, and you opened each door, sometimes finding empty rooms, and other times finding corpses. There were no other survivors. You finally came upon one room with the vent cover pried off. You checked it, not seeing any blood. Hopefully, that was Amélie's doing and she'd gotten away uninjured.

"We have a shooter on the fourth floor!" The comm crackled to life.

"Any sign of the target?"

"Negative!"

You smiled at the good news, and the expression felt savage on your face.

Slinking out of the room, you listened for heavy footsteps. When you heard none, you continued onward, looking for a less open staircase than the one in the lobby. Your goal was to reach the fourth floor. Farther back in the building, you found an enclosed stairwell and opened the door. It was silent and the air was much cooler. Still, you climbed upward, bypassing the third floor.

You went to open the door for the fourth floor and came face to chest with another very large cyborg. He was easily a foot taller than you and he slapped you aside, his gun still lowered. Ears ringing and vision spinning, you dropped the rifle, grabbing the railing so as not to tumble down the stairs. You tasted blood, but you righted yourself, as he rapidly approached.

You lashed out, driving your metal knuckles into the cartilage of his nose.

He swore nasally, nose gushing, and stumbled back. You rushed him and he roared, even as you drove your bare foot into his smashed up face. He fell backward and you lunged forward, slamming your tanto through his unprotected throat. You winced as blood sprayed across your face and chest. Goddamn carotid artery.

Your heartbeat pounded in your throbbing skull as you wiped your face on your hands and your hands on your disheveled towel covering. It was already dyed an unpleasant rust red. You glanced up, noticing the cameras in the hall. If the enemy had access to that, you were in trouble.

Bending over carefully, conscious of the camera, you checked him for weapons. Of course he had that same damn gun, but he also had a grenade and a telescoping baton. You took those, tucking the grenade down the front of your towel. It didn't sit well, but you didn't have any goddamn pockets.

"Fuck, sniper's in the lobby!" Came the chatter over the comm.

You sighed, because you did not want to go anywhere that exposed. Goosebumps formed on your bare arms. The lower level had been warmer and you sorely regretted not finding more clothing. You might have to take the gun then, if you were going to mount an assault in the lobby.

"Anyone spot Lacroix damnit?"

"I think she's in the vents," the woman's voice rang clear. "Get on the PA. Announce that we'll start killing hostages unless she gives herself up."

"Ma'am...we haven't taken any hostages."

"She doesn't know that."

"Attention Amélie Lacroix. Until you are in our custody, we will begin killing hostages. So unless you want more blood shed on your account, you will give yourself up. Anyone harboring her will be executed; if you just turn her in we will spare you," Alpha squad leader's voice echoed through the building. "You can surrender yourself on the fifth floor."

Sighing, you picked up the gun and turned to go back up the stairs.

"Is that you, Lucky?"

You blinked and spun around to see Captain Amari also cradling one of those stupidly heavy assault rifles. She tapped her nose and you put the gun down, realizing you were actually bleeding.

"Yeah." You wiped your bloody nose. It smarted and you looked down, noting that your towel, legs, and arms were all splattered with the stuff.

"How much of that is yours?" She asked, concern softening her voice. She was still fully dressed, and you shook your head. She was dangerously elegant in professional black. And you were a bedraggled mess in a partially torn up towel. You were never going to be like Captain Amari.

"I have a nosebleed and a split lip, but that's it." You shrugged. "I can't really do the recoil on those." You gestured to the gun with your baton.

"How many have you come across?"

"Not counting the leader, five." You glanced down at the cyborg corpse. "Didn't leave any alive. They're not taking hostages. I think Amélie's in the vents. Have one of their comms and they haven't caught her yet."
"Me too. I've shot six. I know there are more holding the roof." She looked upward, a stolen comm in her ear. "We need to get to Amélie. I've gotten some people clear, but I don't know if they've secured the grounds."

"I got one person clear. Counted about six dead civilians," you said, taking a moment to tilt your head back, because your nose was still dripping blood. "Sent off an SOS with one of my prostheses. Don't know if Tataryn called for backup too. Haven't seen him yet."

"One of these rooms should be an office with phone with access to the PA."

You opened each door, Captain Amari covering you. After the fifth one, you found a desk and phone. Captain Amari picked up the phone and pressed a button.

"Attention all you terrorist scum." Her voice was measured and pleasant, only a bit of steel gleaming at the core. "This is the Captain Ana Amari of Overwatch, and you have interrupted my goddamn spa day. To all personnel, please take cover, get out if you can safely, or otherwise barricade yourself in. These bastards are not taking hostages, and we are in the process of getting this situation under control so that everyone can continue on with their day. Please be safe, and thank you, for your patience."

You stared at her, wondering if she was insane. Well, you couldn't judge.

She hung up the phone and lifted the gun. "They'll be coming for us next. There are two stairwells. Can you hold the one you came through?"

"Guess that depends on how many there are."

"You didn't bring a sidearm? I'd offer you mine, but I bent it up on a cyborg." There was no reproach in her voice. Captain Amari just hefted the assault rifle.

You shrugged, bloody tanto in one hand, stolen baton in the other. "We're in Zurich. You guys both told me to dial back the Blackwatch crazy and not scare civilians." You both knew Amélie was still a target. But at worst, you'd expected a subtle attempt at a snatch and grab. Not a full assault. This was more than they'd sent after Jack in Paris.

"Yes, you're right." She sighed. "I should have known better."

She took position at the lobby-end of the hall and you stood diagonal from the door, waiting to see who came down. Captain Amari shook her head as she looked you over, a faint smile on her lips. "You could be a slasher movie victim."

"With all due respect ma'am, as I'm the one who's been making knife kills, I am the slasher. But I'm pretty sure I resemble one of those killer Japanese ghosts more." You let your damp mess of tangled hair fall in your face and made a hissing sound. "See?"

She laughed at that. "The resemblance is uncanny."

"If I can't be sexy and cool, I might as well be terrifying." You shrugged, pushing your hair out of your eyes. "Speaking of horror movie tropes, why do they venture off by themselves? Like, if they stuck to the buddy system, I wouldn't be able to take them down. Not wearing a towel, armed only with a dagger."

Captain Amari shrugged. "They're cyborgs wearing armor, expecting to mow down civilians. Don't ever let yourself get that arrogant or corrupt."
"Yes, ma'am." You resisted the urge to salute. "But, I have to admit, now that I'm standing still, this is starting to gross me out. Like...I'm covered in the blood of half a dozen other people. This isn't sanitary."

"If anyone makes a period joke, I will shoot them for you," Captain Amari said, looking amused.

You began to laugh, even as you heard gunshots in the distance.

"She's one woman and snipers don't do well in close quarters. Rush her. Don't give her a chance to pick you off," the woman in charge ordered over the comms.

Heavy steps came from above and you opened the door, waiting for them to grow closer. Silently, you rolled the grenade onto the landing, before you stepped back, taking cover in a nearby office.

The explosion seemed to rock the building, and you grinned at the screams.

Captain Amari closed in at an angle and opened fire through the shattered door, finishing up any survivors. When she was done, you counted five bodies on the floor.

"Shit, more coming from the lobby!" They were on the other staircase and you ducked into the stairwell, looking for a new weapon.

Captain Amari took up a position in the hall, and began returning fire. You hefted one of the rifles and braced yourself, trying to get a bead on one of the half dozen cyborgs now shooting at you. This wasn't anywhere near ideal and you swore as a shot struck overhead, showering you in drywall and dust.

"We need to change locations!" Captain Amari shouted.

"Up or down?" You shouted back.

Glass shattered, and you watched a cyborg drop through the skylight, an arrow through his throat. Oh. That meant- You assumed there was a team on the roof then.

"Up?" Captain Amari wondered.

"-Alpha Leader there's a-"

"Where did they come from?!"

"Oh my fucking god-"

The comm chatter blew up and you grinned.

Something very large, metal, and reminiscent of a rhinoceros burst through the glass panels of the lobby, smashing the glass and furniture. A very familiar beanie-wearing figure followed, taking the stairs three steps at a time, his shotguns roaring. Hot on his heels was Jesse, fanning his revolver at a speed you couldn't track.

"Ana! Lucky Lady! We are here!" Reinhardt's voice echoed in the lobby and you put the gun down, rolling your eyes. You watched Jesse and Gabriel pick off the remaining cyborgs with ease.

Captain Amari strode to the overlook and waved.
"Ana!" Jesse shouted.

"Lucky's with me. Not sure where Amélie went. We'll meet you in the lobby," Captain Amari's voice carried and you followed her to the central staircase, wishing you didn't look like a B movie monster.

The fresh air dropped the lobby temperature by at least fifteen degrees and you shivered, the damp towel now more a liability than a protection.

Jesse reached Captain Amari first, on the landing, his eyes wide and worried. He stopped before actually touching her. "Ana-

"I'm fine," she said gently. "Lucky is too. Mostly."

"Son of bitch, is any of that yours?" Gabriel was beside you, his hands on your shoulders.

"Not much. I just got smacked in the face once." You met his worried gaze. He was breathing hard, and you reached out, touching his forehead with the back of your hand. He was warm, but not scarily so. You resisted the urge to latch onto him and burrow into the heat under his hoodie. That would be unprofessional, so you forced yourself to hold still, trying not to shiver.

"Gérard, Tataryn, and the Shimada boys have secured the roof. It seems Amélie managed to bring down the leader on her own," he said, eyes never leaving your form.

You blinked. "How?"

"She was carrying a gun. Like you should have been," Gabriel said darkly.

You shrugged, telescoping baton and tanto still in your hands. "I'll have you know I killed five of them and only used a gun once."

"Some of those stairwell kills are yours," Captain Amari said. "You had that grenade, remember?"

"Oh yeah." You shrugged. "So more than five, but less than ten. I made do."

Gabriel reached out and wiped your face, but he only succeeded in smearing the blood. "Christ, you're a mess. How did you?" His hands skimmed your sides and he froze, realizing you weren't wearing anything under the towel. "Were you wearing this the entire time?"

"Had to lose the bathrobe while I was hiding underwater." You shrugged again. Because you were trying to be calm about the fact you were wearing nothing but a bloody ragged towel in front of your coworkers. Maybe all the blood would distract them from the fact you were wearing a wet towel.

Gabriel moved to remove his armor and pull off his hoodie.

"I have to get cleaned up first. I'm sticky and it's so gross," you sighed, wanting it anyway. It would be warm, like him. Hanzo and Genji drop down from the broken skylight. Tataryn, Amélie, and Lacroix took the stairs, Gérard's arm around Amélie's shoulders. She had managed to find a spa worker uniform and carried a tiny pearl-handled pistol in her hand.

"Everyone accounted for?" Captain Amari asked, when you were all congregated on the second floor.
"Lucky! Look at you! You're a true blooded valkyrie!" Reinhardt boomed, laughing.

"Thanks," you sighed, checking the floor for broken glass. Reinhardt had made a great big mess and you didn't really want to get cuts on your feet. You hopped from foot to foot, trying to stay warm.

"You've got something on your everywhere," Genji said as passed by, his voice so quiet you weren't sure anyone else caught it.

Jesse took one look at you and just kept shaking his head muttering "it ain't right."

Tataryn and Hanzo kept sneaking you strange looks. Tataryn's was speculative. Hanzo's was slightly horrified.

"Oh Chanceux! Are you injured?" Amélie asked, rushing up to you.

"Nah. I'm good." You blinked as she poked your face.

"You are bleeding."

"Most of this isn't mine."

"You lost your robe," she said, her stage whisper carrying through the lobby.

"...I know," you scowled.

"You didn't need it anyway," she said, sounding pleased.

"But I'm fucking freezing," you muttered, because it was true.

Amélie gave you a slow blink. "You mean...you were actually worried about getting cold and not being so unnecessarily modest?"

"Yes!"

Lacroix just started laughing. "I can't wait to watch the security footage."

You blinked. "What?"

"There are several security cameras. Ziv managed to hack into some of them for us. We'll collect all the recordings, don't worry," Lacroix said cheerfully, in a way that definitely made you worry.

"Gotta say, it's something else that you went around the whole time dressed like that," Tataryn smirked. "If I had known that to be the case, I would have foregone waiting for backup and charged in to help."

Gabriel actually growled. "Go make sure the rest of the building is clear. Lucky needs to get cleaned up."

You were fantasizing about a hot shower already.

"My stuff's over there," you said pointing toward the locker room.

"Let's go," Gabriel said, hustling you in that direction.
You avoided a few piles of glass, but you could feel Gabriel's eyes on you as he followed you into the locker room.

The attendant was gone, but there were no signs of violence and you set down your melee weapons, looking for soap. You had just found some when Gabriel spun you around and pressed you against the wall, his mouth hot against yours.

"Gabriel, I'm a mess-"

"You're goddamn sexy and wearing practically nothing in front of everyone. I almost decked Tataryn for staring at you like that," he said sharply in your ear, hands on your waist.

"Tataryn likes everyone," you said. "And I'm gross."

"Get in the shower," Gabriel said, releasing you.

You shivered at the roughness in his voice and stepped into one of the stalls, peeling off the remnants of the bloody wrap. The spray of hot water was amazing and you closed your eyes, just luxuriating the warmth. The water ran rust red for several minutes and you looked up, very conscious of Gabriel's eyes on you the entire time. He leaned against the wall, arms crossed, teeth clenched, pupils too wide.

"Want you right now," Gabriel rasped, and you bit your sore lip. "Up against the wall, bent over a bench, riding me on the floor."

"Everyone will hear us. I'd rather not-"

Gabriel strode into the stall across from yours and turned on the water. He was fully clothed, and started to shiver after a minute. But that feral expression of lust on his face did not change.

"Gabriel-"

"You stay over there, baby, if you don't want me to fuck you against the wall till you scream. It's been too long and my control isn't what it should be. Seeing you walk around like that..." He shook his head. "You're goddamn beautiful."

You blinked. "You're crazy-"

"Running around in that tiny towel, dripping wet, carrying yourself like a warrior queen-" Gabriel drew a shuddering breath. "You're the one driving me crazy."

You turned your head, embarrassed by the stupid smile spreading across your face. You continued to scrub yourself down, trying not to show how pleased you were by his reaction. Gabriel was ridiculous. Only he would be turned on by having a horror movie villain for a girlfriend.

By the time you were done, Gabriel had cooled down and he handed you a clean towel. You dried off, found your belongings, and got dressed.

"What are we going to say about how wet you are?"

"That I annoyed you and you pushed me into a pool," he said, grinning at you as he tried to dry himself off.
"Well you weren't gone very long," Tataryn said, when you stepped into the hallway, fully dressed and no longer stinking of blood.

You rolled your eyes.

"Hey, I figured with the skimpy outfit, the long separation, and the way the boss was eye-fucking you in front of everyone, you guys would have taken at least fifteen more minutes."

"We didn't. So just imagine how grumpy he's going to be when he comes out and finds you speculating about his sex life."

Tataryn paled and shook his head. "You are a formidable woman, Lucky." He headed down the hall toward the pools.

"Uhh...watch your step. I might have left a mess-" You started to laugh as Tataryn let out a stream of profanities, probably coming upon the one you'd bashed to death.

Gabriel emerged, a towel around his neck. "Let's get you home." He didn't touch you, but you felt his presence warm against your back.

More Overwatch agents had swarmed the place by the time you made it downstairs. Lieutenant Jemison was there, looking harried. She was shouting orders. You took a moment to give her the locations of all the bodies that you remembered, friend and foe. Shoal waved at you, and you waved back, slightly amused by how she blushed. Apparently she did remember some of what happened when she was drunk.

"Well, that was an eventful day out," Captain Amari said as you climbed into the back of a van. Amélie perched on Lacroix's lap, looking delighted as a dripping wet Gabriel sat down beside you, one arm draped around your shoulder. Jesse sat a proper distance away from Captain Amari, but his eyes were fixed on her.

"Yes, we should do this again. Only with massages and not murders," Amélie sighed. "Maybe opera next time?"

You just shook your head, unable to vocalize your feelings.

Jack and Ziv were waiting for you in the garage.

"I don't know what you think you were wearing, but you're not allowed to do that again. That was weird and gross and-"

You weren't even out of the van yet and Ziv was starting in on you. He glared down at you as you hopped out of the van and you raised a brow. Because you'd talked about this, and he'd said it was fucked up when Gabriel did it. There was a half second pause and he threw his arms around
"I'm so glad you took a shower," Ziv said sharply and you patted his back.

"Yeah, me too," you said, knowing what he really meant.

"And I'm glad you're OK too," he mumbled and released you, glaring immediately at Jesse and Gabriel, daring them to say anything.

You blinked a few times because you hadn't expected that level of honesty. You met Jack's bewildered gaze. He glanced warily at the security cameras, and you sighed. Ziv hugs were OK, but he was bony and awkward. Jack hugs were better.

"And I'm glad you're OK too," he said to Amélie.

"Oh Ziv, I couldn't have done it without your help. You are so clever," she said, and you realized you needed to find out what she'd been up to on her own. She patted his cheek. "We really need to go out for drinks some time."

You schooled your expression, because whatever happened there was none of your business.

"And uh...good to see you too, ma'am." Ziv saluted Captain Amari. "I was never worried about you. You can handle yourself."

"Agent," she said, giving a cool nod. Jesse was at her side feigning calm, his fingers tapping complicated patterns on his thighs.

You felt Gabriel's hand on your shoulder.

Jack shook his head as he took in Gabriel's drenched appearance.

"She pushed me into a pool," he said smugly.

"Is that so?" Jack gave you an inquiring look.

You just rolled your eyes, wishing you really had shoved him into the water.

Chapter End Notes

Everyone's like "I can't wait for the girls' day out! OMG spa chapter!" And I'm like "...So Eastern Promises left a mark on my psyche...That Turkish bath scene? Yeah." Only I didn't want it to be sexy, because while Viggo Mortensen is sexy and I don't mind ogling him on screen, the reality of that situation is "...BUT I'M TRYING TO RELAX, WTF IS WRONG WITH YOU?!"

Sorry about the gore. I just...couldn't get that image out of my head and I had to write it.

Thank you for all the good wishes. The temp agency is avoiding me. Work is stressful. But I'm slowly getting back up to the word count. (Averaging 2k a day when I'm not heavy editing). Hope everyone else is having a smoother time.
Chapter 41

Chapter Summary

The aftermath of your day out. Who knew socializing could be so exhausting? (You did.)

Chapter Notes

See the end of the chapter for notes

You did not get time for personal discussions. You were all marched off to the conference room for a debrief. You wrote up your report of the event while it was fresh in your memory. Gabriel disappeared to change out of his wet clothes, but was back in time for the meeting.

Jack presided over it, with Captain Amari and Gabriel on either side. Ziv sat in, as well as everyone who had returned from the spa. Reinhardt had stayed behind to handle the cleanup and present a reassuring Overwatch face. Reinhardt, you realized, would be an excellent PR guy. While Jack, Gabriel, and Captain Amari projected confidence and the ability to make tough calls, Reinhardt's open emotionalism demonstrated that Overwatch cared. He could never be in Strike Commander, he was too impulsive, too sentimental. But he would win people over in a way the rest of you could not.

Your SOS message had gone through around the same time as Tataryn's call for backup. He'd been lurking on the grounds, chatting up a masseuse on her break. He evacuated as many civilians as he could, before scouting the perimeter and picking away at the patrolling cyborgs. He'd cleared the route for backup to charge in, and you understood that after all this time, you had underestimated his ability, if not his character.

Jack had stayed on base to run the op, and Ziv had been hacking the security cameras and getting messages to Amélie via a hijacked service-drone. Ziv scouted ahead, giving Amélie an edge at staying hidden. She'd gone into the vents when she heard the shooting and made her way up to the offices, trying to find Captain Amari.

Captain Amari had jumped a cyborg, taken his gun, and ushered out the staff on her end of the building while you were running around the pool area.

Ziv brought up clips of Captain Amari sniping. There were a few of a small messenger drone and Amélie creeping through the halls, but she'd stayed out of sight for most it.

The security cameras were not in the spa area, for obvious reasons. So there wasn't much footage of your exploits, just the events after you met that last cyborg in the stairwell. But Lacroix gleefully put it on the screen anyway.

You rested your face in your hand.

It started with you, already a bloody mess standing on the top step, getting bitch-slapped by the cyborg and dropping the gun. The screen split into two different angles, one from the hall, the other in the stairwell. You punched him, your face sterner than you remembered, your follow-up strikes landing with textbook precision. But the throat-stab gushed as much as you recalled and when you glanced over at Jack and Gabriel, they were both giving you very thoughtful looks.

"You should consider teaching a counter-cyborg defense class," Lacroix said. "Or at the very least, writing a treatise about vulnerable flesh parts like the neck."

You shrugged, because it worked for you. And it certainly didn't reflect any of your residual issues. Not in the least. Nope.

"Amélie managed to take the Alpha leader alive," Lacroix said so quickly you almost missed it. "Shot her in the back, but left her with a small sucking chest wound. It severely limited her ability to escape. We will be doing that interrogation later."

That was interesting news. You glanced at Amélie who winked at you across the table. Ziv sat on the other side of Lacroix, looking very pleased with himself.

"How did they find us?" Captain Amari asked.

"Still looking into it, but we think they've had a unit on standby since the attack in the Alps failed. I'm thinking they were monitoring the city's central security camera hub. But I can't prove anything yet," Ziv said.

"Jack will soon be giving a speech reassuring the citizens of Zurich that Overwatch is protecting the city." Lacroix leaned forward. "Ana, if you don't mind being the face of this operation, considering your most daring announcement at the spa?"

"If you think that's for the best," Captain Amari said, giving you a look you couldn't interpret.

"Officially, yes," Lacroix said, also giving you a look.

Amélie didn't need the attention and neither did you. Also, you doubted Agent "Covered in a Bloody Towel" was the image Overwatch wanted to project.

"We are going to have to limit what information leaks out to the rest of the base," Lacroix continued. "By now everyone knows Captain Amari, Chanceux, and Amélie were attacked. "How do we wish to present this?"

You rolled your eyes, and winced, because your head hurt. You kept catching whiffs of spoiled blood and it made your stomach turn. Your legs ached and your feet were numb. You felt a little sick and belatedly, you realized you were dehydrated, just like Marta...Marta had warned you. You didn't want to think about her, so you focused on your condition.

You'd had a bit of alcohol before the spa today. After that, the humidity and hot pools would have wrung you out even if you hadn't have been in combat. Now that you were settling down, the exertion left you drained. Biting your lip, you closed your eyes and tried to force yourself to listen to whatever was being discussed.

"We can't deny that they were looking for Amélie. The Alpha leader got on the PA and announced it."

"We don't have to highlight it either," Lacroix said. "Publicly, it was a terrorist attack, and Overwatch handled it. On base, we can stick to that premise, with the details that they'd identified Amélie as an Overwatch agent over the course of the attack and targeted her specifically because of it."
Your toes and fingers were too cold, and you breathed in deep, massaging your the spot between your eyes.

"Gérard write up your reasoning behind the decision, pros and cons. Ana, feel free to do the same. Publically, it is a terrorist attack that was thwarted by Overwatch. We can hold off on releasing details to base personnel till tomorrow," Jack said. "Mihret, I want your analysis of the security camera situation ASAP. Let me know whom you need authorizations from and I will push them through. Ana, I know you have several recommendations. We'll go over them tomorrow when we have more information. Gérard, do not do anything rash with the survivor. This was attack was too public and we can't afford to "disappear" her, if her captivity becomes common knowledge. Good job everyone, I'm grateful that you all made it home safe. Meeting adjourned."

You gave yourself a moment, knowing you'd be dizzy when you stood. You looked up when Jack sat down on the table, in front of you, the rest of the room empty.

"You're shaking. Come here," Jack said, taking off his coat.

"Crashing," you said. "Had too much sugar and wine before combat." Your mouth tongue stuck to the roof of your mouth and you made a face. "Dehydrated too."

Jack pulled you into his lap, draping his overcoat over your shoulders.

"I'm OK," you mumbled, tucking your head under his chin. "Just coming off the adrenaline with low blood sugar."

"Gabe's getting you some stuff," Jack said, rubbing your back. "You should have said something."

"Just started feeling sick." You closed your eyes, letting Jack warm you back up.

"You left it too long," Jack scolded.

"Honestly didn't occur to me. Not with the day I've had."

"I know. Should've thought of it myself," Jack said, sounding tired.

The door opened, shut, and then the lock clicked.

"They only had purple-flavor, corazon." Gabriel pressed a cold bottle of electrolyte solution into your hand. "Drink up."

You emptied the bottle in two gulps and Gabriel handed you another one, rubbing your shoulders while you shivered against Jack.

"Sorry," you muttered. "Didn't even think about-"

"Should've given you a chance to rehydrate before the meeting," Gabriel said gruffly. "You spent too much time in the heat."

"It was plenty cold later."

"That's because you were running around in a wet towel, idiota. You shouldn't have come down to the lobby. You're going to get sick." Gabriel handed you a pack of peanut butter crackers and you devoured them, getting crumbs on Jack's shirt. He just laughed and stroked the back of your neck. You downed the second bottle, and Gabriel handed you a third one.
"So you pushed Gabriel in the pool?" Jack asked.

"I didn't push Gabriel in the pool," you said. "I would've if we'd been near one, but we weren't."

"Oh?" Jack continued to rub your shoulders. "So why was he soaking wet?"

"He's an idiot who took a cold shower with his clothes on."

"You would have too if you'd seen her prancing around in that towel, obviously wearing nothing underneath it. I thought Tataryn's eyes were going to pop out of his goddamn head," Gabriel said sharply.

"Gabriel's a pervert," you said, closing your eyes.

"And?" Gabriel asked, not sounding the least bit offended.

"I was gross," you sighed, nestled against Jack's chest. Gabriel kept rubbing slow circles on your back. Having both of them here soothed you and your eyes fluttered shut.

"Sorry sweetheart, you can't fall asleep on me. I have to do a press conference in half an hour." Jack kissed you then, his tongue parting your lips and you squeezed your thighs together involuntarily. "But I'll be free tonight. Is my room all right?"

"Yeah," you sighed, as your headache began dissipating. Your heartbeat slowed to a comfortable rhythm, but you didn't want to move.

"This sweater feels nice," Jack said, nuzzling your cheek. "It took me a moment to recognize you when Mihret brought up the security feed. Gave us both a scare. Figured out from the way you moved that most of that blood wasn't yours, but still. It was...jarring."

"She really went for that bloodthirsty barbarian princess look." Gabriel nipped your shoulder and you jumped.

"Hey!"

"Stay awake," he reminded you. "How's your nose feel?"

"Tender, and yes, I'm sure I'm not concussed. But I'll use an emitter. Probably going to be bruised up tomorrow." You were awake now, and you didn't miss how Jack and Gabriel exchanged pointed looks.

"You going to be OK if Gabe stays with you while I take care of things?" Jack asked pleasantly, almost like he wasn't testing the waters.

"I was planning on spending tonight with you both anyway," you said, rubbing your forehead. "Wasn't going to renege."

"You had a rough day. Just checking," Jack said. He leaned over and kissed Gabriel. "Tonight then?" There was a gleam in his bright eyes and you sighed, because you weren't sure you had the energy for his brand of makeup sex.
Gabriel escorted you back to your quarters, which kept anyone from asking you any uncomfortable questions. Instead, you got several knowing looks from Blackwatch personnel and wide-eyed stares followed by hushed murmurs from the Overwatch agents. You weren’t sure what stories were making the rounds, but you’d find out tomorrow.

You gaped at the large stack of boxes outside your door. Several fancy shop names adorned the packages and you then realized that your deliveries had made it home before you.

"...I didn't know you wanted a new wardrobe," Gabriel said, after a moment.

"I didn't. Amélie insisted. She bought most of it, and when I tried to make her stop, she threatened to buy more. Now that I think about it, I know Captain Amari was in on it too."

Gabriel raised a brow. "I see."

"Do you? Because I don't." You shook your head as you opened your door. Gabriel helped you move the dozen or so boxes into your room, his gaze falling on the stuffed animals and flowers. He smirked at the vase of camellias, then flicked on your emitter, a smile playing on his lips when he saw the googly eyes on it.

"Are you going to show me what you got?" Gabriel leaned against your desk, eyeing the clothing boxes with great interest.

You groaned. "Later. I'm already tired and that entire ordeal was...well, it was the hardest part of the day. Not the worst, but the hardest." The dead civilians were the worst. But maintaining constant vigilance, while trying to pretend you were a civilized human being who wasn't going to embarrass your compatriots, wore you down. Captain Amari and Amélie were glamorous cosmopolitan individuals who rocked the ballroom as easily as the battlefield. You liked to slink around doing shady things in alleyways and hated drawing attention to yourself. That you found fighting a spa full of terrorists less stressful than a shopping trip, spoke volumes about your mindset and social skills.

"Did you not like what they picked out?"

"It's all very pretty. I thought I was just going along to carry boxes and give them compliments while they shopped. Honestly, I just wanted food. And then I got told I needed new clothes. It just snowballed from there." You shook your head.

"You don't have a lot of civilian clothes," Gabriel said, diplomatically.

"I like what they picked out, I couldn't... it's just strange that she paid for most of it. I know it sounds ungrateful. I am grateful, I think. I'm just not in the right frame of mind to process everything."

Gabriel chuckled. "You're bad at receiving gifts."

"Not used to it," you admitted.

Gabriel frowned. "We'll work on it then."

Too tired to argue, you shrugged.

"It's not always about debts and how much you owe someone. Sometimes people just want to do nice things for you. You should let them," Gabriel said, picking up a box and taking off the lid. "Oh, hermosa, that's a pretty colored dress. I'd love to see you try it on. Should I be worried about what you're getting up to?"

"Yeah. If this was supposed to be a relaxing day out, I don't know if I'll survive a night at the opera," you said, putting the lid back on the box and giving Gabriel a dirty look. It was the purple dress, and Amélie had very happily explained that you couldn't wear underwear with that one.

"Are you sure you don't want my help unpacking?" Gabriel asked, giving the boxes a very speculative look.

"I think I need another shower and a nap."

"I'll wait out here then," he said, eyes drifting over your stack of packages.

You thought about arguing. "A bunch of people saw you come to my room-"

"And?" Gabriel gave you a shit-eating grin, because he liked being possessive. "Embarrassed?"

"Trying not to feed the rumor mill."

"I think we both know that most of Blackwatch thinks we're sleeping together anyway." He just sat down on your bed, looking smug.

You rubbed your forehead. "Yeah, probably. Except for when I'm sleeping with Hanzo and Tataryn."

Gabriel's eyes narrowed. "What?"

"Oh yes, haven't you heard?" You tried not to smile. "The rumor mill is not something we can control," you said, nodding sagely. "It is wisest to avoid feeding it."

Gabriel snorted. "Yeah, yeah. I'll go then."

"...Could you pick up some food while I'm in the shower? Nothing too heavy, my stomach is funny, but I'm still really hungry."

His face softened. "All right."

"Thanks," you said, and hurried to put away the lingerie before he came back to snoop.

---

After the second shower you finally felt clean again. You smelled better too - the gift basket from Jack and Gabriel had contained a soap and lotion set that had an amazing fragrance. It was an excellent blend of peach, vanilla, amber, and sandalwood - slightly sweet with a hint of spice and musk. Best of all, it smelled nothing like blood.

You studied the dark blue satin negligee you'd picked up. Considering some of the things Amélie steered you toward, it was fairly modest: lace trim, nothing sheer, thin straps, it was more a slip than whatever "negligee" implied. It actually looked very comfortable to sleep in. You weren't up for provoking Jack or Gabriel too much tonight, and some of those racier pieces would do just that.

You put it on; it barely covered your ass, the hem skimming your upper thighs. It was pretty and the fabric laid smooth against your skin. The outer door clicked, and you quickly pulled on your sweats. Peeking your head out the bathroom, you saw Gabriel shutting the door, his hood raised. He set down a bag, and pulled off the hoodie. He was wearing one of those skin tight black compression shirts underneath and you took a moment to admire the definition of his broad chest.

"Grabbed you some bread, cheese, and fruit. Just light things." He paused. "I can go back out if you want something else."

"No, that sounds good. Thank you." Meat didn't appeal to you right now, probably because of all the blood. You sat down on your bed, and Gabriel passed you another bottle of electrolyte solution.

He handed you a box filled with cubed cheese, it looked like brie, fontina, and manchego. There were also grapes, a pear, and two tangerines along with slices of baguette.

Gabriel sat down beside you, the bed dipping low under his weight.

"How are you feeling?"

"Better," you said, taking a bite of brie and then popping a grape in your mouth. "Less wrung out." You took a big gulp of the purple drink. It was too sweet, but you needed the salts, sugars, and electrolytes. "Still tired though." Your muscles ached from exertion, but Gabriel had turned on the emitter, and you knew you'd be OK by tomorrow.

"You want to nap in Jack's room?" Gabriel asked, carding his fingers through your damp hair. "Or do you need to rest now?"

"I can make it up there," you said. "I just don't know if I'm up for anything rough tonight."

"That's fine," Gabriel said. "You were playing pretty rough earlier today." His grin was smug. "Got to admit, your hand-to-hand has improved a lot. You bashed someone's head open, baby. Shocked Tataryn for sure. Wish we had a video of that fight. And it took six people to fish that other cyborg out of the pool. He was a quarter metal."

You rubbed the back of your neck. You weren't exactly shocked that he'd already read your report. "With the exception of the guy in the stairwell, they were all ambushes, Gabriel, some of them pretty crude." Genji would have been smoother, hiding in the ceiling, or dropping out of vents, or popping up in a blur of steam, before vanishing with his magic ninja powers.

"That was pretty too. You didn't even look hurt after he slapped you; you just had that "I'm going to get this done" expression on and you got it done." He leaned over and kissed your forehead. "Confidence and competence are a very sexy combination."

"You're ridiculous," you said, cheeks burning.

"You like me anyway," Gabriel murmured, the pad of his thumb tracing your bottom lip.

"Yeah, I guess I do," you said, and had some more cheese.
It was a gentle fall: you drifted downward, sinking into a plush heat. Your focus unwove itself, blending gently into the space around you. A silent peace enveloped you, and your thoughts faded into a velvety fuzziness, replaced by a sense of contentment. Letting it all go, you floated down, weightless, warm, and comfortable.

The hole in her caved chest was fist-sized and raw, a gaping shock of meat against her neat uniform. Her hand was pale and limp, her blood spreading across the tile floor. The air stunk of smoke and coppery meat. But it was that huge bloody wound that you could not look away from.

You sat straight up, breathing hard, your right hand bracing your sweaty forehead. Your left hand drifted down to your breast, and for a moment you expected to find a crater of flesh missing, or a wet mess of mangled tissue. Your still-intact heart pounded against your rib cage and it took you a moment to register Gabriel's hand gently rubbing your back.

Eyes still closed, you drew your knees up to your chest and rested your chin on them. It was just a jump scare. A jump scare that roused you from your sleep and set your pulse racing. Your skin felt too tight, your nerves pricked at your flesh, and you realized you were shaking.

"Breathe, corazon. I've got you." Gabriel's voice cut through the fog. "That's it. Just a few more deep breaths."

Hunched over, you slowly inhaled, eyes opening. It took you a few seconds to recognize Jack's couch, and the coffee table, and the walls of his living room.

You looked down, still in your sweats. No blood. No injuries. You were fine.

But then, you weren't seeing your own wounds. Rubbing your forehead, you turned around, dreading the look of worry or worse, pity Gabriel would have on his face. Except when you looked up, he was giving you a crooked smile, his eyes gentle.

"Thank you," you said, hoarsely.

"Do you need a drink?"

You shook your head and balked when he tugged on your hoodie. "Give me a second to get used to my skin again."

"Do you need a blanket?"

You shook your head, panic receding slowly. "No, thank you." You turned around, sheepishly. "Sorry."

"Don't apologize."

You tucked yourself against his side. "It wasn't even scary. Just surprised me."

"It's been awhile since you had one like that. Tell me about it," Gabriel said, voice even as he rubbed the back of your neck.

"Was almost asleep. I was super comfortable, and then I caught a flash of one of the dead civilians. Mostly just the gunshot hole." You saw shades of Lao in the death wound, but it wasn't Lao that triggered it. You clearly remembered Marta's body and even her pleasant voice. But for the life of you, you couldn't remember her face. It was such a stupid thing, but all you could see was that wound, the bloody uniform, and the corpse in shadow.

"The worker who'd been shot in the chest in the pool area," Gabriel said after a moment. "Marta Schmid."

You shrugged, because you hadn't known her surname. But you had mentioned her in your report. "Yeah." You rubbed the back of your head, feeling silly. "I've seen plenty of dead bodies before. Usually don't get this worked up about strangers."

"She was a civilian, and you knew her name." Gabriel pulled you onto his lap, and you turned to face him. His eyes were distant. "It's always hard. You're trained to protect them, and when you can't, it feels like a personal failing."

You weren't sure Gabriel was even talking about you any more. But the statement applied. You recalled your drunken bar fight, and how you'd emphasized not causing permanent damage to the civilians. You might not have been very good at being a soldier, but you signed up for the danger. Marta had not.

"It's dumb," you muttered. "I'm panicking over nothing."

"Were you scared today?" Gabriel asked, smoothing your hair back.

You frowned at him, not liking that kind of question. Only, looking back... "No."

Gabriel nodded. "You've got a solid crisis mode now."

"Yes," you agreed. "I was...pretty calm."

"You had clear priorities and a plan. Get to your team. Evacuate civilians. Kill the enemy. You did all that." He paused. "And before you tell me they slaughtered those people on your watch, I'm going to remind you that you weren't on duty and you have to take care of yourself first."

You nodded. "I know. Just...feels like a waste."

"It was a complete waste. But it wasn't your doing. You have to manage the burdens you take on. Remember the difference between fault and responsibility. Maybe it was your responsibility to step up and do something, but in no way was this your fault."

"...Yeah, you're right," you said, because sometimes you had trouble separating the two. When Gabriel said it like that, it was very clear, but you knew from experience that sometimes the boundaries got muddled in your head.

"This was different from a planned operation. You didn't go out today prepared for combat. You were in a different kind of headspace. And now it's catching up with you." Gabriel kneaded your shoulders. "It's actually a good thing, baby."

"That I'm freaking out?"

"No, that you're able to take yourself off duty for "normal" activities. I have problems with that too."

"I hadn't noticed," you said dryly.
"That's because you used to be much worse." Gabriel's fingers loosened the tension in your shoulders and neck. "It's going to hit you harder, because your mind had to overcompensate when you weren't prepared, and because you lost friendly civilians. Talking about it now will help in the long run. So why don't you remind me what you did today?"

He was right. Untended trauma had a way of metastasizing under your skin. The longer you left it unchecked, the harder it was to get rid of; it fused to your bones, calcifying till it became a part of you. Your grief, your regret, your shame, if you hid it and did nothing, it grew to fit the space you gave it, and eventually spilled over.

"I had lunch in an overpriced French bistro and drank too much wine. I was dragged out on an almost violent shopping spree. I had some cake. I played "I Spy Tataryn" the whole time."

Gabriel continued working on the knots in your back.

"We went to the spa," you said, closing your eyes. "I just wanted to sit in the hot water. I didn't want a massage, from a stranger anyway," you added. "You can keep going."

Gabriel chuckled.

"You're supposed to walk around naked, and Amélie gave me crap for wearing my robe, but I really was worried about getting cold. Marta gave me this little pep talk about not being self-conscious about my scars and tried to fuss over me. Reminded me to stay hydrated. I know, I know. I forgot anyway." You still couldn't remember her face, and that pricked at your conscience. "I was just getting relaxed when...it all started. I put all the combat details in the report."

"I know. I read it." Gabriel kissed the nape of your neck. "How'd it all make you feel?"

"...I didn't." You shrugged. "Feelings weren't important. Having a plan was." You let out a deep groan as Gabriel's thumbs dug into a particularly tender knot. "I know that it's temporary and it's hitting me now. I'm not shoving it back under to fester. I'm telling you all about it." You gritted your teeth. "I'm glad Nina got out, but Marta was the only one I'd actually formed some attachment to. It pisses me off that they killed her. She nice, and from a tactical standpoint, she was fucking harmless."

"Yes," Gabriel agreed.

"Not my fault," you said. "But I was the closest person there and the responsibility creeps up on me. I know, I did my best. I got at least one person out alive. Just wish my best was better. It looks like I'm good for revenge, not saving people."

"You've made several successful rescues, corazon," Gabriel chided. "And this was a survival situation, not a combat op."

"Aren't they all?" You rubbed your forehead. "That's not right. The worst ones always come down to survival. But sometimes it's hard to make that distinction, you know?"

"I know." And of course he did. This had to be old hat for him. This was nothing compared to some of the things he had witnessed. Hell, you'd lived through worse.

And that was your doubt, downplaying the trauma, trying to rank and devalue everything by claiming "I've seen worse." You understood it was a kneejerk coping mechanism meant to distance you from the immediate shock of the situation. But it had limited utility and honestly, it was dismissive and caused more harm long-term. "Oh I've seen worse, this shouldn't bother me" was an unhealthy expectation, like a twisted competition where only the most abominable horrors counted. It was like saying, "Well, the Killing Fields didn't matter, because the Great Leap Forward killed more people!" You weren't a psychopath and things didn't work like that. So you forced yourself to stop second-guessing yourself and continue talking.

"I played weak. I played amphibious ninja. I played sea monster. It wasn't quite a Jaws-style attack, but I sprung out of that pool like a shark jumping after a seal, and I was a little shocked that he didn't scream."

"Probably too terrified," Gabriel laughed.

"I had my tanto in my mouth, but I just grabbed hunks of his hair in my hands and his head bounced so nicely against the floor..." You shrugged. "I wasn't thinking as clearly as I should have been. Should've made it quicker. But it was so satisfying. God, that's fucked up."

"What's fucked up is that your knife had just been in some other guy's spine and you put it in your mouth," Gabriel said.

"Oh...eww. You're right. You touched your lips, a little perturbed by your unsanitary life choices. "So, I made some awful discoveries..." Your breath hitched. "It was shades of the Ninth Circle, I mean Black Base Delta, all over again." You straightened up. "Executions. Cyborgs. Their mission was to kill everyone, except the target they were sent to capture. I uh...I didn't see the parallels till now."

"They didn't get away this time," Gabriel said.

"No. They fucking didn't." And that knowledge made you smile a toothy smile even as it warmed your stomach. No wonder you'd been so efficient. You'd spent a long time rehashing what you would do in case of cyborg massacre. Because you weren't letting things go down like that again. Maybe it was unhealthy, but it served its purpose. You'd been a beast today.

"I was actually pretty embarrassed when Captain Amari found me. I mean, she's fully dressed and managed to save some people. I'm...a mess and can't even locate Amélie." You scratched your chin. "Everything else was odd, dangerous, and surreal, but after that, I think it was all OK."

"It's easier when you have the chain of command supporting you," Gabriel acknowledged. "And it's better when you've got someone you trust at your back. So sum it up for me, what did you do?"

You turned around to face him. "I made three tanto kills against heavily armed cyborgs. I grabbed a cyborg by the hair and slammed his face into the floor till his skull split." You paused, because it was starting to sink in now: you were fucking insane. "I walked around in a blood-soaked towel." Your voice wavered. "That is unspeakably gross. And I'm pretty sure I flashed at least two of my kills." You internally measured your high kicks and angles of attack. Yes, yes you had.

"Well, they're dead now, so it doesn't count." Gabriel smirked.

"...My coworkers saw me covered in blood and wearing a tiny wet towel. Like...like, just walking around like an over-sexualized horror movie character. There's footage of me-" You buried your face in Gabriel's chest. "Now I can't pretend this never happened. There's a fucking record of it. Oh my fucking god. Why?"
Gabriel was laughing while he held you against him.

You were shaking, and while you vocalized the anxiety about your appearance, your actions surprised you more. It wasn't that you had survived - that euphoria would come later. It wasn't just that people had died or that you'd been downright murderous. It was that you had even attempted combat countermeasures in the first place. That was fucking stupid and suicidal. Your smuggler self would have stayed hidden in the water till they were gone or waited for backup to come save you. Maybe the old you would have snuck out in the chaos, but today, running away had not even occurred to you.

"I'm an idiot," you muttered, shaking your head. "A real goddamn idiot."

"I know," Gabriel said mildly. "It's part of your charm."

Chapter End Notes

Short fluffy chapter, but the next one will be longer.

You guys are so sweet and supportive. I have been thinking, because yeesh I feel whiny venting on here. After I'm done with the fic, I need to make a big change in my life. Quit my job and find a new job. Quit my job and travel. Quit my job and join the circus. (Is there a theme here? Maybe!) There's room for political activism, or nonprofit work, or something meaningful. I'm mulling over a few things. But hey, suggestions are welcome. I will fully admit that I am emotionally adrift and annoyingly wishy washy.

Writing is kind of slow right now. Blargh.
You woke up to the door opening, your head resting in Gabriel's lap.

"Sorry it took so long I had to smooth things over with-" Jack stopped when he saw your sleepy yawn. "Sorry, I didn't mean to wake you."

"It's fine. Just been dozing since we got here," you sat up, stretching as Gabriel leaned over the couch to kiss Jack. He ran his fingers along Jack's jawline, his teeth catching on Jack's lower lip. You cocked your head to the side, watching intently as Jack moaned into Gabriel's mouth. He gripped the front of Gabriel's shirt, eyes shut.

"How's she holding up?" Jack asked after he released Gabriel. Both men were breathing hard and Gabriel took off his hat, tossing it onto the coffee table.

"I'm right here," you said. "You can ask the expert."

"Yeah, but you'll just say you're fine." Jack flashed you a sharp smile. "You little liar."

"Had some rough patches," Gabriel said. "She's worn down from today."

Jack rested his elbows on the back of the couch. "Want me to get a pizza? It's not too late."

"Gabriel fed me earlier," you said, trying to bring your hair under control. It had dried at strange angles because you'd gone to sleep with it damp. "Just...uh...today finally sunk in." You tried to sound nonchalant, but you could see Jack translating your words into something more honest.

He reached out, pushing your hair out of your face. "Want to go to bed then? We can put on a movie, cuddle, and I have some cake in the fridge."

"That's really tempting." You faced Jack, leaning against the back of the couch so you could kiss him. "Just what were you planning tonight anyway?"

Jack just shook his head, smiling regretfully. "Don't worry about it."

"I'm feeling a little jagged inside," you admitted. "I don't think I'm up for your brand of rough. But that doesn't mean we can't-"
Jack pressed a finger to your lips. "Haven't been with you in about a month and a lot has happened since then. Even if we're not rough, it's going to be intense."

The hunger was plain on Jack's face. His smile was too tight, and he gripped the back of the sofa, the frame dimpling under his fingers. Part of you just wanted to gracefully bow out and have that cake. Another, louder, part of you wondered when you had become such a wimp. You pondered it for a moment. That wasn't fair. Today had been hard. You were allowed to take it easy.

Gabriel rose, and came up behind you, his hands resting on your shoulders. "Give us an idea of what's too much." His breath was hot against the back of your neck. "Can you handle both of us at the same time?"

You bit your lip as he ran his fingers down your spine, fire lighting up your nerves with each stroke. "I think we can work up to it." You shivered as he flicked his tongue against your neck. "Can't take it like last time though."

"Which part?" Gabriel's voice was low. "The part where I threw you against the wall and pounded you till you passed out? Or are you talking about the last time we put you between us? Because Jack fucked your tight little ass pretty hard and you loved every minute of it."

You whimpered as Gabriel's hands tightened on your hips.

"Be nice to me," you panted. "Not up for punishment or power games." Gabriel ground against your ass, already hard, and you bit Jack's gloved finger.

"That's a hell of a way to behave if you don't want to be punished," Jack said, pulling his hand away. He smiled darkly, examining the indent you'd left on his glove. "Are you sure you're not trying to get me to put you over my knee?"

You whined as Gabriel cupped your breasts through your hoodie. "Stop being mean."

"Don't bite Jack if you want him to be nice," Gabriel murmured in your ear, kneading your breasts. He paused. "What are you wearing under this?"

"Sorry, Jack," you got out, trying to push Gabriel's hands away. "Can't focus while he's doing that."

"That's the idea," Gabriel said smugly.

"Raw inside," you admitted. "Today was hard." You rested your head on the backs of your hands. "Everything's too close to the surface."

Jack crouched down so he was at eye level with you. You didn't like his expression, his eyes too wild, his smile too feral. You wondered if this was going to be like Cobblestone Dust all over again. "All right, baby. Give me a moment to cool down." He raised his chin and bit the tips of his gloves, peeling them off one finger at a time, never losing that cocky grin.

Your pulse stuttered.

"Not going to lie, we were planning on playing hard tonight. Putting you between us and showing you just how much we missed you. I was going to edge you till you cried and then pay you back for what papi did to my ass. I really couldn't sit right the next day." He laughed softly at the look on your face. "But we can take a raincheck on that."
You dropped your head, panting as Gabriel sucked marks along the column of your neck. His fingers tugged at your hard nipples. "Gabriel, I'm trying to-

"You sound so needy," Gabriel purred in your ear. "Those cute little gasps you make when I do this-" he pinched the sensitive points and you squeezed your thighs together. "Can't get enough of that. Get your pants off. I want to taste you."

"Let me up," you said, and took a deep breath when Gabriel backed up. You kicked off your pants and pulled off your hoodie.

Gabriel's nostrils flared and he stared down at you, pupils blown wide. He took in the sight of the negligee and licked his lips. "Oh hermosa, is that what you were shopping for today?"

"You like it then?" You tried to sound coy, but it just came out as eager.

Gabriel nodded, hands stroking your belly. He rubbed the smooth fabric between his fingers. "Very pretty."

"And the nightie is hot too," Jack groaned, bending over to kiss the nape of your neck. "Damnit, sweetheart, I like it a lot. And you smell so good."

Kneeling on the couch, Gabriel hooked your thighs over his shoulders. He cupped your ass, lifting you partially off the cushions.

"Matching panties?" Jack asked.

"Nothing at all underneath," Gabriel chuckled, blowing warm air against your sensitive slit. "You're nice and wet already, baby. Bet you could take my cock right now." He began to lick, long even strokes from your clit to your perineum, and you dug your fingers into the couch cushions, breathing uneven. Gabriel left lingering kisses on your pussy, before he curled his tongue, pushing it inside you.

You cried out, hips shaking as he held you in place.

The couch creaked as Jack jumped over the back, having shed his coat and gloves. "Put your head in my lap."

You raised your head and he scooted closer.

"You're so noisy tonight," he purred. "I guess you're the most frustrated of us all. Did you ever use that toy?"

"No," you panted. "Brought it though. In my bag."

Jack's smile widened. "Did you think you'd need something else to fill you tonight, baby? Even when you had to know we'd both want you? Such a greedy little cockslut."

"Damnit," you squeezed your eyes shut as Gabriel sucked on your clit, one of his thick fingers already one knuckle deep inside you. "You guys...kept asking." Your words went high as Gabriel pushed it all the way in.

"We'll use it," Jack assured you. He stroked your hair.

"You're so tight, baby," Gabriel exhaled slowly. "You always feel so good." He kissed the inside of your thigh and you squirmed, biting your lower lip as he worked another finger inside.
"Going to make sure you're nice and ready for me. Missed seeing you like this, tasting this sweet pussy." Gabriel shook his head, and flicked his tongue against your clit. "That's it, keep squeezing my fingers. Get yourself warmed up for my cock."

Shaking, you clawed at the couch, lacking the leverage to moderate his pace. Instead you gripped Gabriel's hair, squeezing his head between your thighs.

"Seems like she missed this too, Gabe. Didn't you?" The eagerness in Jack's voice made you shiver. "Tell him how much you like having him play with you, baby. Let him know just how good it feels."

"I forgot how good this feels," you admitted, whimpering as Gabriel pumped his fingers in and out of your slickness. The sound was loud and filthy. Jack's smile was still a little too intense, and you reached up to pull him down for a kiss. He shook his head, only smirking.

"Don't cop out."

"I forgot how good your mouth felt, Gabriel," you whined softly. "Because I was too busy wishing I had your cock inside me. I missed having your skin against mine. I missed how you fill me up." Your words came faster, running together as his fingers sped up. "Missed how your thick cock splits me in two. How wet, messy, and exhausted I am by the time you're done with me. I touched myself, used my fingers, but it wasn't enough-"

Gabriel groaned, and sucked harder on your clit.

"Why didn't you use the toy?" Jack asked, reaching under your negligee to play with your nipples. "Didn't like it?"

"Because you kept asking," you bit out.

Jack chuckled, leaning over to kiss you. He caught your lower lip between his teeth, before slipping his tongue into your mouth. You moaned as Gabriel's fingers stretched you wide, his tongue pressing hard against your clit, winding your nerves tighter.

The motions had you twisting in Jack's lap, and you broke the kiss, squealing as Gabriel ran the calloused pad of his thumb in small circles around your clit. He had not forgotten how to make you squirm. Your pulse throbbed between your legs and Gabriel kept coaxing you higher toward your peak.

"Were you being contrary or shy?" Jack asked, his hands grew rougher against your breasts, squeezing them just hard enough to make you ache.

"Self-conscious," you exhaled.

"Mmm, so you don't mind if we use it on you tonight, then? We need to get you nice and sloppy if you're going to take us both. If you can't do rough, I think Gabriel's going to have to take your ass. I'm still too tempted to pay you back for last time." Jack's last sentence came out a growl. "I will though, baby. I've been thinking long and hard about how I'm going to return the favor. I'm not going to ruin the surprise yet, but you'll be begging me for forgiveness long before I'm done with you."

"Jack-" You arched against him, panting as Gabriel worked you closer to the edge. Clenching around Gabriel, you moaned, Jack's promises exciting you more than you wanted to admit.
"That's it baby, come all over his face," Jack smirked down at you, the hunger in his eyes verging on predatory. "He could do this all night, but then you wouldn't get all the cock you've been craving, would you? And that would be a shame-"

Keening, you clenched around Gabriel's fingers, hips quaking as the delicious combination of heat, pressure and dirty words finished you off. Pleasure pulsed along your nerve endings and you went limp, little aftershocks still squeezing Gabriel's fingers, trying to pull him deeper inside you.

Gabriel gave your pussy a gentle kiss before lowering you back onto the couch. His mouth and chin glistened with your juices and he very methodically licked his fingers clean, never breaking eye contact with you.

"You should thank papi for making you come," Jack purred.

Your eyes widened, but Gabriel's satisfied expression did not change. He just leaned over you and gripped the front of Jack's shirt, kissing him hard. You needed a moment to catch your breath, but you couldn't look away from them. Gabriel yanked Jack's head back, biting his throat and Jack gave a guttural curse.

"You taste as good as I remember," Jack hissed. "Maybe I should take a turn. Eat you till you're begging. Don't care if it's because it's too much or you just need cock-"

"Behave Jack." Gabriel kissed him again, thumb pressing against his Adam's apple. "She's not up for your games tonight."

Jack took a deep breath and his expression morphed into a sheepish grin. "She liked hearing about it though."

"All right. But remember your safe words, baby." He sat back and pulled off his shirt. "Can I trust you two alone for a minute?"

"Talking about it, no. But not up for doing all that tonight," you said softly. You curled up in his lap, resting your head on his shoulder. "That's for more aggressive play. Not a lot of fight left in me right now."

Jack laughed. "I'll be good." You blinked as Jack leaned over, kissing your forehead. "Was that too much?"

Gabriel returned, setting items down on the coffee table. You looked over your shoulder as Gabriel turned the vibrator over in his hands. It was a pretty shade of blue, and while the main part resembled a thick phallus, the silicon rabbit was situated to press against your clit.

"Turn around," Gabriel said.
You sat on Jack's lap, his chest against your back. His fingers stroked between your thighs and you spread for him, stiffening as he licked the side of your neck.

Gabriel knelt in front of you, rubbing the head of the toy against your slit. Jack rolled your breasts in his hands, gentler than before.

You tensed as he pushed it in smoothly, your channel already slick and open.

"Look at that," Jack said. "Your greedy little pussy is swallowing it up so well. Are you wishing it was Gabriel's cock instead?"

You whimpered as Gabriel began to pump it in and out, his eyes staying on your face. He wasn't smiling, his jaw set rigid as he fucked you slowly with the toy.

"You're still so tight, baby. Need to get you opened up for us." He flicked on the switch and you gave a low moan as the device whirred to life, the smaller extension vibrating against your clit. Seconds later, the phallus began to move, beads rotating inside you.

"I think you could handle him now," Jack said. "But we've both been wanting to see you take this, so I appreciate you indulging us." He began to kiss the side of your neck, teeth grazing the sensitive skin. You could feel his cock pressed hard against your ass and you shivered.

"You're trembling baby, is it really that good?"

"Still sensitive," you said as Gabriel teased you with it. Your hips shook and you dropped your head back against Jack's shoulder. "It's stirring me up inside. And all that friction on my clit, I'm not going to last," you said, weakly.

"That's the whole point," Gabriel said, nipping your thigh. He tugged on your hand, pulling it down to hold the toy in place. "I just wanted to see you use it. Tell me if you like it."

"I definitely like it." You didn't even need to move the vibrator. You took it as deep as it would go, the vibrations against your clit quickly building up your orgasm. You began to squirm, biting your lip.

"Let it out," Gabriel said firmly. "Don't hold back."

"It's not the same," you panted. "It's good, and it works fast, but it's not like you-"

Jack chuckled softly. "So it wouldn't be a big deal if we put one of those little egg vibrators inside you for a day?"

Your pussy nearly wrenched the toy sideways at Jack's suggestion, because you knew he'd tease you something awful. The frustration would only whet your appetite, and after all that torturous anticipation, Jack was very generous about following through.

"Give one of us the remote. I think Gabriel might take mercy on you, only use it sparingly. But I'd leave it on the entire time, turn it up while you're standing or talking to someone." Jack laughed, his voice too rough. "Bend you over my desk when we're alone and just watch you shake from it. Bet you'd be a real mess. And if you asked very nicely, I might fuck you afterward."

You came hard, gasping for breath while you bucked your hips. You tried to pull it away immediately, but Jack held your wrist, laughing as you squirmed against him, swearing.

"Can't-" You shook your head, trying to take the pressure off your tender nerves, the vibrations now pricking you raw.
"Jack," Gabriel rumbled.

Jack released your hand and you turned the device off, shuddering as it slid out of you with a wet pop, your thighs now soaked.

"Jesus, Jack," you muttered, because while Jack hadn't done anything rough, he was pushing it.

"But you do like the idea," Jack said thoughtfully.

Gabriel took the toy and set it on the coffee table. "Going to give you a moment. Then we'll put the plug in. Come here." He sat on the couch and you crawled into his lap to kiss him. You recognized your own tanginess in on his lips and tongue. With both hands, you traced the scars on his cheeks, sighing happily as he hugged you against him.

"Thank you for taking care of me. Not just the sex but the food and comfort as well," you murmured. "Guess I don't always say it. Working on it."

Gabriel just gave a pleased hum and wrapped his arm around your waist. "You're fine, baby. I like doing it."

"And I like this sweet side of you," Jack said, hugging both you and Gabriel. "Can't help but tease you. You're so responsive right now."

Gabriel snorted and it hit you then that Jack wasn't normally this aggressive. Was it the days events? Was something else wrong? Or was he playing at a different angle?

"Everything OK? You're wound kind of tight. You reached over, fluffing his hair while he kissed Gabriel's neck.

Jack rested his head on Gabriel's shoulder, meeting your gaze. "I am," he admitted, no longer smiling. "Today's attack was a clusterfuck. Political fallout and death toll aside, I was worried about you. Didn't know your status till Mihret found the footage of that last cyborg. Staying on the base while Gabe rushed in was...difficult." He shrugged. "I'll be fine. Might need to take more time to cool down." He bit your ear lightly. "Watching you like this after so long is...a treat." He kissed your forehead. "I'll ease up, sorry."

"Want to help me with the plug?" Gabriel normally did it, but you wondered if putting Jack in charge would help. He liked overt control a lot.

"Of course." Jack ran his fingers down your spine, watching you tense. "So did you buy more like this?"

"Yes," you said, and belatedly realized that maybe you should be coy about it.

Jack's answering smile was wicked, and you turned away, feeling your cheeks heat up. "Why don't you lay across Gabe's lap?"

You complied, ass in the air, knees digging into the cushions, cheek resting against Gabriel's thigh. He massaged your scalp, and you bit your lip as his cock pressed against your side.

"Why don't you lay across Gabe's lap?"

You complied, ass in the air, knees digging into the cushions, cheek resting against Gabriel's thigh. He massaged your scalp, and you bit your lip as his cock pressed against your side.

Jack settled on the couch behind you and squeezed your thighs, his hands working up your flank. When the cold lube hit your skin, you flinched, and then forced yourself to take deep breaths.
"That's it, you're being so good," Jack murmured, pressing his mouth to your hip. He pushed one finger in and you tensed at the intrusion.

"Relax," Gabriel said, his warm hand stroking the back of your neck. "Jack knows what he's doing."

"Haven't done this in awhile. Not used to it." Your breath hitched as he went deeper, the burn familiar and bearable.

"You're doing fine," Jack said, and poured more cool gel into your hole. He moved the finger slowly, curling and twisting it inside you. "Oh sweetheart, I don't know how you fit us. You're clenching so tight on my finger." Jack's words were shaky and you whined as he began to fit the second one in there.

"More lube, please," you said, squeezing your eyes shut.

"So polite," Jack chuckled. "You are in a mood tonight."

He went slow, getting your passage slippery. The second finger slid in and you sunk your teeth into the couch cushion, eyes squeezed shut.

"That's it, baby. You should see the look on Jack's face right now." Gabriel's hands started to rub your low back.

You raised your head, glancing over your shoulder. Cheeks tinged pink, Jack's eyes were bright and he spread his fingers inside you. The sheer delight in his smile made you grin, despite the discomfort. The burn wasn't as severe, not with all the prep he had done, and you bit your bottom lip. He kept it slow, and dragging his fingers along your inner walls, gradually increasing the pressure.

By the third finger, you could feel your slick dribbling down your thighs and you began to pant.

"Think you're ready," Jack said, a little breathless. He withdrew his fingers and you slumped against Gabriel's lap. The couch dipped and you felt the hard rubber press against your hole. Gabriel's hands spread your cheeks and you staggered your breathing, a strangled moan escaping your throat as your puckered hole stretched to accommodate the plug. The pressure made you squirm, but Jack gave you plenty of time to adjust. It grew wider and wider, and just as the burning became too intense, it slid in.

"There we go," Gabriel said, patting your ass, the toy firmly in place.

"I'm going to go wash the extra lube off. I'll be right back," Jack sighed happily.

You tried to rise, and froze as the plug shifted inside you. "Oh-" You braced yourself against Gabriel's chest. Gabriel placed his palm against your stomach.

"Too much?"

You shook your head. "I can do it. Just...shouldn't have moved so quickly."

"Do you want to be on top?" Gabriel studied your face, like he didn't quite believe you.

"Not with the plug in," you admitted. "Limits my range of motion." You paused. "Gabriel, I know you'll stop if I'm uncomfortable; I'm not worried. And I know Jack'll stop if I say something.” You patted his cheek. "But thank you for checking."

"I'm a little concerned," he murmured, kissing your throat. "You've been docile and cooperative this whole time. Don't want to pressure you into anything you don't want."

"Are you saying I'm usually argumentative and a jerk?"

Gabriel kissed you. "I'm saying you've had a rough day, and I want to make sure you're OK."

You were an argumentative jerk, but if they hadn't figured that out by now, you weren't going to spoil the surprise.

Fluffing a throw pillow, you lowered yourself onto the couch, propping yourself up on your elbows. The plug made your motions jerky and you gave a hiss of discomfort as it prodded you from different angles.

Gabriel stripped with military efficiency, tossing his clothes on the floor. "You'll want to be flat on your back," he said, his pitch dropping. "Don't want you to hit your head."

His erection hung heavy between his thickly muscled thighs and you licked your lips. Uncut and solid, his cock always looked like it would be too much, even though you should have been used to it by now.

"Want me to suck on you for-"

"No, you've teased me enough, baby. I need to be balls deep in that dripping little pussy of yours," he rasped, parting your thighs.

You slipped a hand between your legs and spread your pussy lips, watching Gabriel grit his teeth.

"Please, Gabriel," you asked softly.

He lined the head up, sliding it in, and you couldn't keep silent. Breathing hard, you dropped flat against the pillow, eyes squeezed shut. Fingers, the dildo, none of it compared to how his cock felt. The velvety skin was so hot and you could feel every vein dragging against your walls. Inch by painstaking inch, he pushed till the tip prodded your cervix, sending a delicious ache through your core.

"Oh hermosa, you've always been tight, but with this plug, I don't know how I'm going to move." He rolled his hips and you arched high off the couch, your arms wrapping around his neck. "You like that, baby?"

You nodded, ragged moans escaping your throat while you clung to his neck, your legs locked around his waist.

"Sorry, didn't catch that," he purred, and rolled his hips again. "You want to be more specific?" He rutted against you, not giving you a chance to recover. And though you tried to speak, it came out in a chain of incoherent gasps and sighs. Between his cock in your pussy and the plug in your ass everything was stretched too far, straining your core and making it impossible to think straight.

It was too much. It wasn't enough. You couldn't take it, but you wanted more. It had been too long, but how could you ever be sufficiently prepared for this?
Sweat ran down the back of your neck. He burned against you and you clamped down on him. He rewarded you a guttural snarl and bit down on your shoulder.

You shrieked and Gabriel laved at the skin.

"Don't tease, baby. I'm having a hard enough time keeping my head," he said hoarsely. "If you can't take it rough, let me do the work. Otherwise I'm going to let loose on you."

"Gabriel-" You moaned his name, desperation lacing your voice. "Maybe I do want it-"

"Shh," he murmured. "Stop tempting me. You still have to last between Jack and me after this."

You clenched around him at the reminder. Gabriel was thick, right now your brain couldn't quite comprehend being filled by both of them. "Can't help it. Missed you. Missed this."

"Me too, baby." Gabriel nibbled on your throat. "Missed hearing you squeal and beg while I fucked you into the mattress. Missed waking up with you beside me. Even missed how grumpy you are in the morning. Just missed you."

You ran your fingers through his curls. The gentleness in those eyes cut straight through you and you kissed him hard. He cupped the back of your head, one arm holding you against him while he resumed thrusting, the angle ensuring that he bumped the plug with each stroke.

You gave breathless whine and tried to ride it out.

"That's it baby, love how you take me," he groaned. "Can't ever get enough of this. You want to come, baby? That's it, come all over my cock. Use that pussy to milk me. I'll fill you up again and again tonight. That's a promise-"

His free hand slipped down to your clit and that was cheating goddamnit, because that bundle of nerves had already been overworked twice. He sheathed himself to the base, now only moving his fingers against you. You squirmed beneath him, swearing as he wound you up, your legs sore and shaking.

"I have you all over my thighs." He gave a deep throaty laugh. "On my hands and face too. You're making such a mess," he sighed, sounding far too pleased as he brushed your hair back. "That's it. Going to give it to you so good you never want to leave again."

"Not fair-" You gasped, bucking your hips.

"Don't care," he shook his head, and rocked his hips, his fingers practically vibrating along your nub. "You're so close. What are you waiting for? Permission? All right, hermosa, you can come for me. Get my dick nice and wet so I can fuck you even harder. Can't have you getting sore before Jack gets a turn-"

You cried out, your pussy spasming around his shaft. Your muscles contracted hard, and it was a deeper sensation than you remembered, his girth and the plug straining your abdominals.

"That's it. Look at you coming undone around me. So beautiful," he groaned. "Don't think I'm ever going to be able to sit on this couch and not think of having you like this."

You dropped back on the cushions, unable to formulate a response to that. You just rested the back of your hand over your eyes, breathing too loud and shallow.
"You OK, baby?" Gabriel asked voice softer.

"Need a second," you said, trying to hold still. His cock rested inside you, hard and twitching against your sensitive flesh.

"One more makeup round," Gabriel said, kissing your cheeks. "Need to have you under me just a little longer-"

You moved your hand, looking up at him. "OK."

He sighed. "So good to me, corazon." He began to move again and you stiffened as the plug in began to hum, before the vibrations traveled through your core, making you tighten around Gabriel.

"Goddamnit, Jack!" Gabriel chuffed. He gave you a sharp smile, sweat trickling down his brow. "We're going to have to do something about him."

You panted, shaking while you to keep yourself steady. "Yeah, he's insufferable." You glanced over to see Jack sitting on the floor naked, one hand leisurely stroking his cock, the other flicking the dial of the remote control.

"What? You want me to turn it up?" Jack grinned and you clawed Gabriel's chest, thrashing as it moved inside you. Even if it wasn't actually going any deeper, the motion reverberated in your tailbone and through your sensitive walls.

Gabriel swore, sinking his teeth in the pillow by your ear.

"You can feel it moving, can't you Gabe? It's fucking amazing. You've got her tight and squirming underneath you. And that vibration? Makes you want to go harder, doesn't it?"

"Jack-" Gabriel gritted through clenched teeth. "It's not going to be her ass I'm pounding if you keep this up."

"How's it feel, sweetheart? As good as you remember? Why don't you tell papi how much you like this? Can't you see how on edge he is?"

"What are you playing at?" You panted, turning your head to face him. Was he jealous? He kept pushing the both of you, and while he hadn't crossed any lines, something was off. Even Gabriel seemed irritated. You'd already learned that calling Gabriel "papi" during sex was a surefire way to get wrecked.

"Trust me," Jack murmured. His smile was soft and he rested an elbow on the coffee table.

"Want me to keep going?" Gabriel croaked.

"Please, papi." The words slipped out and you kissed Gabriel's throat, feeling him shudder against you.

His eyes snapped open and he ran his thumb along your cheek. "And what do you want me
"What do you need?" You asked, shivering as he pressed his forehead against yours.

"Need you," he said, nipping your ear. "It's been so long. Need to remind us both that you're mine."

You shivered. "I'll try to keep up."

Gabriel exhaled through his nostrils. "You don't want to do rough tonight."

"I-" You froze under the intensity of his gaze.

He looked over at Jack, lips twisting into a wry smile. "You're an ass."

Jack shrugged, not looking the least bit sorry. "You can thank me later."

"I'm-"

Gabriel nuzzled your cheek. "I know, baby. Your defenses are down. Not going to be hard on you tonight. But you still want me to raw that greedy little pussy. You want me to claim all your tight little holes. You want me to remind you who your papi is, yes?"

"Gabriel, I can-"

"You're missing the point, hermosa. Jack picked up on it first, that bastard." Gabriel rolled his hips and you arched off couch, broken noises escaping the back of your throat. "You think calling me "papi" is about overwhelming you. You think it's a green light for me to push your limits. You think I'm loosing my baser nature just to use you as I see fit."

He punctuated each statement by grinding against you. Your inner muscles coiled tighter and you whimpered.

He groaned, thrusting slow and deep.

"Gabriel-"

"Shh, baby girl. Papi isn't done yet." He nuzzled your throat. "It's about trust. All those times I wrecked you, that's what you wanted, wasn't it? You could have stopped me with a word at any time and you knew it. But you needed it hard and fast. You gave me permission to take control. Same with Jack. He wanted it as much as you did. Though he's still going to retaliate for that. Better be prepared."

You whined softly as he snapped his hips forward.

"So while I might want to leave you a quivering, sore, and fucked senseless on the floor, that's not what you need tonight. You need me to take good care of you. Calling me "papi" is you trusting me to know what you need." He sighed, a content smile spreading across his face. "And asking me to give it to you."

"OK," you agreed, because you couldn't think straight, not with the consistent rhythm of his cock stroking your insides. Not with the plug's vibrations setting your frazzled nerves alight.

Gabriel said your name. "Look at me."

You met his gaze.
"Who do you belong to, baby?"

"You," you sighed, shaking as he kept up that achingly slow pace.

"And who do I belong to?"

"Jack and me," you panted. "But right now, you're mine, Gabriel Reyes." The possessiveness in your voice surprised you.

He smiled then. "Good answer." He kissed you hungrily. "That gets a reward. You want to come with me? Scream my name while I'm spilling myself inside you?"

"Want to hear you scream my name," you said, excitement spiking your blood.

"You're going to have earn that," Gabriel growled and began to thrust faster. The motions controlled, just enough pressure on your sweet spot, still going deep enough to ache. You clawed at his chest and he hissed, but kept the same pace.

"Turn it up all the way, Jack," Gabriel said, his grin fierce.

Gabriel shifted his angle, his cock driving deeper against your cervix. The plug sat snugly inside you, vibrations shaking your entire core. It traveled up the base of your spine, jolting your already taut muscles. You were too tense and twisted up. With each measured thrust, you were sure Gabriel was going to break you apart, and you didn't fucking care as long as he didn't stop.

"Need you, please-" you sobbed. "Please, papi." You couldn't finish that thought. Already your inner muscles began to contract, trying to milk him for all he was worth. Your vision blurred and you fell apart, pleasure spiraling through your center.

"That's it, corazon. Take it all. It's all yours." He stiffened, his cock twitching inside your pussy. His cum burned hot inside you and you dropped flat against the couch, aftershocks leaving you weak and boneless. Gabriel pushed your hair back, eyes closed as he buried his face in your neck. He said your name gently; it wasn't a scream, but it did something to your brittle heart.

It took you a moment to realize that plug had stopped vibrating. You tried to sit up, but Gabriel kissed you hard.

"Thank you, papi," you sighed when he released you.

He gave a low, pleased laugh.

"What about me?" Jack asked, hovering over you.

"You're a troublemaker," Gabriel growled.

Gabriel pulled out, your thighs soaked. His sticky white cum slowly dribbled onto the upholstery.

"...That's going to stain," you muttered.

"It's Jack's ugly couch, not mine," Gabriel said, with a shrug. He turned to give the other man a cross look. "You had to do that now?"

"Don't be mad, papi," Jack said, leaning forward to kiss Gabriel's glistening cock. Your pulse jumped as Jack smiled at you and licked long stripes along Gabriel's shaft, making sure to clean up the creamy mess. "You two needed the help."
"Jesus, Jack." You shook your head, watching him swallow Gabriel to the hilt.

Gabriel ran his fingers through Jack's hair. "What am I going to do with you both?" He asked gruffly, annoyance already fading.

Jack released Gabriel's semi-hard cock. "You're going to have sex with us, Gabe. Lots and lots of sex," he said, before swallowing him back down. He bobbed his head, eyes shut and moaned around Gabriel's cock. It didn't take long for Gabriel to recover his erection, and Jack got off his knees, kissing a path up Gabriel's abdomen to his mouth.

You carefully moved your legs, sitting up gingerly. Your thighs ached and you looked for something to clean yourself up with; Gabriel's shirt was on the floor and you grinned, stretching off the couch, balancing yourself on one palm and reaching for it with your free hand.

Something curled around your waist, and you cursed as Jack yanked you back onto the couch, your back flush against his chest.

"Where are you going?" He laughed, kissing the back of your neck.

You wiggled as he pressed his hips against your ass. "Wanted to clean up-"

"Don't," Jack said in your ear. "I like seeing how messy we can get you. We'll clean you up afterward. Promise." He wrapped both arms around your waist, hugging you while he nibbled on your shoulder.

"Want the plug out," you said.

"So eager for Gabe to fuck your ass then?" Jack's tongue flicked against your ear and you lurched forward, Jack's arms keeping you from falling off the couch.

"Want you too," you sighed. "Missed being with you." You glanced over your shoulder. Jack watched you with hooded eyes, a faint smile on his lips.

"Want to show me how much you missed me?" He rubbed his cheek against your shoulder, his stubble scraping against your skin.

"Plug out first," you said firmly.

"That's no fun. You squirm so much more when it's in." Jack released you. "Lay across my lap. Gabe'll take care of you."

Carefully arranging yourself, your head in his lap, you took a moment to grin up at him, before you gripped his cock in your metal fingers. You squeezed lightly and Jack tensed, his smile gaining an edge.

"You just keep it up, baby. I'm keeping score, and you know I'm going to remember all your little transgressions."

"So you're saying I should commit bigger ones?"

"Jack, play nice. Lucky, stop goading him," Gabriel said, exasperation clipping his tone. You wiggled your hips and he smacked you lightly across the ass, the impact jolting through the plug.

You cried out against Jack's thigh and his cock jerked in your hand.
Gabriel tapped the plug and you trembled, swallowing hard. You released Jack, digging your fingers into the couch.

"Breathe," Jack reminded you, his hands resting on your back. "I like this outfit. Going to give me a hint as to what else you picked up?"

You shook your head.

"She was pretty squirrelly when I asked her about her new wardrobe." Gabriel withdrew the plug at a deliberately painstaking pace. "Apparently Amélie and Ana had a lot of input."

Jack "hmmed," his tone speculative.

"There we go, baby. I'll be back in a moment. Why don't you and Jack get comfortable?" Gabriel rose and you watched him saunter off, admiring the slight bounce of his butt.

Jack twisted a lock of your hair between his fingers. "What's going to be easiest on you, sweetheart? Do you want us to hold you up? Do you want to be on your knees? I think you might do better on top of me. Let Gabe control the pace."

"Sounds good," you said, patting his knee. You got up, relieved of the pressure from the toy. You stretched your legs, rubbing your calves to avoid any cramps.

Jack grabbed a pillow and laid down on the floor, his arms under his head. He gave you a sly wink. "So are you going to show me how much you missed me?"

You crawled between Jack's legs, cupping his balls while you licked the underside of his shaft. Jack had a such a long pretty cock. He tensed as you ran your tongue across the head, closing your eyes while you took it down your throat. "That isn't what I meant, sweetheart," Jack sighed happily. He began to thrust, careful not to choke you.

You liked the salty taste, the velvety soft texture of his skin, the way his thighs flexed while he tried to hold still under your touch. And if you were going to be honest, you liked the way it felt, to have him at your mercy.

He reached down, tapping you on the nose. "I'm not complaining, but let me have your mouth later. I want to hold you right now." You rose and started to pull the negligee off. "Leave it. Please."

You raised a brow, and Jack turned a lovely shade of pink, verging on red.

"I'm just appreciating the effort you put in." He nodded, looking very sincere.

"Of course," you said, not believing it for a second. "You guys are probably going to ruin it tonight."

"I'll buy you more," Jack said, nostrils flaring. "Now come on. Stop teasing me."

Bracing yourself against his stomach, you took a moment to stroke the hard plane of muscles. Jack wiggled, under you, his breath speeding up. Oh, did that mean...? You smiled, and lowered yourself onto Jack's cock, cooing as he filled you. Jack's eyes stayed on your face and he reached up, his hand slipping under the fabric to fondle your breasts.

You crawled forward to kiss him, and he held still, letting you adjust.
"Come on baby, I'm only halfway-"

You kissed his throat. "Thank you for being so supportive through all the...drama." You worked your way down to his collarbones. "I uh...I probably would've done it by myself and screwed things up more if you hadn't been there." You found your seat, taking him to the base. "I-"

Jack tilted your chin up. "It doesn't count if you don't look at me when you say it, sweetheart. Though you get style points for doing it while you're taking my dick."

"Thank you, Jack," you said, voice shaky as you looked him in the eye. "I needed you and you were there."

"Same goes for you, baby. You came through for me too. Should've introduced you to Rodriguez, let you meet some SEP folk who are normal." He kissed you hungrily. "But I don't want to talk about that right now. I want to make up for all that lost time." He raised his hips and you dropped your head against his chest.

"You ready baby?" Gabriel asked, kneeling behind you.

"Yes," you said, licking one of Jack's nipples. Gabriel stroked your back.

"Let me guess, Jack wanted you to leave it on."

"Yup." You watched him over your shoulder, Jack's hands holding you open. Gabriel dripped the lubricant inside you. You tried to remain still, momentarily tensing when Gabriel's head pressed against your hole. He pushed slowly in and you flattened your left hand against the carpet, trying to stay limp.

"Look at me," Jack said, wrapping his arms around your back. He ran his knuckles along your cheekbone. He flashed you a strained smile, his sweaty hair sticking up in clumps. "That's it, it's always so good feeling him through you. Always love watching you. And this, this is special." He stroked your hair and kissed you even as Gabriel slid all the way in. You moaned against his chapped lips, unable to hold yourself up, you dropped flat against his chest, breathing hard as Gabriel gripped your hips.

"Do you like that, baby?" Gabriel murmured in your ear. His chest was warm and rough against your back.

"So full," you shuddered, expelling a ragged breath. "Always is. Like you're going to break me if I move."

Jack kissed your neck. "Another day, maybe." He raised his hips, pushing you back against Gabriel and you let out a choked gasp, Gabriel's shaft sliding deeper inside you. Gabriel let out a coarse groan and tightened his hold on your hips.

"That's it, let us take care of you," Jack said, rolling his hips again.

Gabriel moved then, slowly pulling out while you shook against Jack. "From this angle I can see you taking both of us. Your pussy is dripping all down Jack. Seems like you've missed him too."

Jack thrust again and your eyes widened. Gabriel pushed in, Jack pulled back; neither man left you empty. They took turns, keeping a slow steady rhythm, till the discomfort faded and the sustained pressure began to turn to pleasure.
"Damnit, Gabe!" Jack swore, his cock jerking inside you, his hands digging furrows into the carpet.

You looked over your shoulder questioningly, at Gabriel who just leaned forward to kiss your nose, his expression smug. "Relax. He's fine."

"Wasn't expecting him to start playing with my balls," Jack groaned, yanking your collar down, your breasts spilling free. He rolled them in his hands before squeezing them together, tongue flicking against your nipples.

"I can feel you clenching around him, when he does that," Gabriel purred in your ear. "You certainly like it when Jack manhandles those pretty tits."

"She'd like it even more if you played with her clit, Gabe."

"Still sensitive," you whimpered as Gabriel's fingers stroked against your nub.

"Said we won't be rough, but we didn't promise to be gentle either." Jack took your nipples between his teeth, tugging on them lightly while you squirmed.

Despite the dirty talk, they kept their thrusts slow until you began to move, taking them deeper with each cycle.

"That's it, you're all warmed up now," Gabriel said, pushing you flat against Jack's chest. He began to move faster and you whined, resting your head on Jack's shoulder. "Oh corazon, you know how much I missed this?" He pushed hard against your ass and you hugged Jack tighter. "All of us together," he sighed softly.

"You know how many nights one of us woke up, reaching for you?" Jack asked, stroking your hair.

"Don't guilt me," you exhaled, heart hurting. You'd been the one in the empty bed, nursing your own wounds.

"Not what we're doing," Gabriel said dragging his cock out and then snapping forward, and you could feel him in your belly, pushing the air out of your lungs. You gave a strangled cry, and Jack rubbed your back. "Need you to understand that I ached for you, corazon. Need you to know that your absence hurt. That I didn't just go on, perfectly fine without you."

"Gabriel-" You swallowed, eyes firmly shut as Jack rocked his hips. They kept the same count, overwhelming your senses with sex and words.

"I love Jack," Gabriel said plainly, his breath warm against your ear. "He is the sun on my skin. He is a candle in the night. He's been with me for so long that I refuse to imagine life without him."

Jack lifted a hand from your back, and you imagined that he was tenderly touching Gabriel's cheek, his fingers tracing the scars with a soothing familiarity. Even with your eyes closed you had no trouble picturing the look of open adoration passing between them. You sighed softly, because knowing those two loved each other so much made something inside you weak.

"You'd be mistaken if you thought I didn't love you too." Gabriel's arms encircled your chest and he hauled you up against him. "You don't have to say anything, baby. After all this time, I just wanted to make sure that you know."
Despite his scorching body heat, you shivered, eyes squeezed shut, throat too tight. Gabriel's beard brushed against your shoulder and his lips pressed against your skin.

"You would do this when I can't, when I can't-" You bowed your head, unable to find the right words. Gabriel's hold on you loosened, and Jack pulled you back down to his level, palms bookending your face.

"Hey, it's all right. You can tell Gabe he ruined the mood." Jack's tone was deceptively light. He stroked your hair. "I'm bad at poetry too," he whispered loudly in your ear. "Roses are red/Violets are blue/No, they're not/ They're literally violet/Who came up with that?" He laughed at his own joke. "See? I'm awful."

You nodded, eyes still closed. "It's OK, Jack. Lacroix told me that poetry doesn't have to rhyme. I think he's crazy, but I don't read much poetry."

"You're both terrible," Gabriel said, rubbing your back. "I'll have to read you some actual poetry next."

"I'm sorry, Gabe. Whatever I did, I take it back. Please, anything but that," Jack laughed, shaking underneath you.

Gabriel shifted and Jack yelped. You opened your eyes, blinking as Gabriel pulled back, red teeth marks bright against Jack's skin. The skin would bruise tonight, but the marks would be faded by morning.

"I'm sorry," you said, voice reedier than you expected.

"Don't be," Gabriel said.

You flinched, as Jack shifted underneath you.

"Too dry?" Gabriel asked, pulling back and you nodded. "Give me a moment."

"Want us to stop?" Jack asked.

You shook your head. "I just...it's hard to think straight when you're both inside me like that. I get overwhelmed."

Gabriel poured a generous amount of lube into your stretched passage and filled you once more. "Better now, hermosa?"

"Yes." You sighed.

"I think you'll like this even more." He pressed something soft and cool to your clit, and it began to rumble.

"Wait-"

Jack chuckled. "Damnit, Gabe. I can feel it too. You already broke the egg out?"

"Easier to hold than the rabbit."

You panted, as the little vibrator hummed against your clit. "Oh fuck."

Jack started pushing his cock deeper, his head still hitting your g-spot. Gabriel picked back up, his shaft pistoning smoothly into your ass.
"No need to hold back," Gabriel told you. "This won't leave you sore, not like our cocks. A little raw maybe, but I know you enjoy that."

It was too much, the feel of them stretching you wide open. The heat of their bodies flush against yours. That goddamn toy, buzzing away at your nerves while you began to thrash between them. They kept their original rhythm, alternating who filled you, and you rode them, moving along the wave. The synchronicity flowed through you and you clamped down on their cocks, making sure to reciprocate.

"Going to make you come till you're too exhausted to crawl to the bed," Jack said through gritted teeth. "You don't know how much I want to just let loose and wreck you. I love rawing your tight little cunt. And you make the best noises. You sound so different from Gabriel, softer, sweeter."

"Come on baby, I bet if you come all over Jack's dick, he'll fill you up. We both will. And then we'll do it again because you know by now that we can go all night."

"Gabe's already gotten off once. He'll last longer than me. But don't worry, baby. Give me a few minutes and I'll be ready to go again." Jack shuddered beneath you, his cock driving deeper, Your pulse pounded in time with their thrusts.

The tension at your core, their dirty words, that toy placed right on your clit, it was all too much. You wailed as you came, body limp stiffening then going limp as Jack swore, thrusting harder, his body tensing beneath yours. His cum sprayed your inner walls while he kissed your face, his fingers digging into your skin. Panting, you laid against him, shuddering as Gabriel continued to move, his cock still sliding deep inside you.

Gabriel's tongue traced the shell of your ear. "Liked that, did you corazon?" he sighed. "Good. Let's do it again."

You ended up splayed on the ground, Gabriel's cock in your ass, his fingers still teasing your clit with that damn toy, Jack's cock halfway down your throat. The vibrator was on a much lower setting, not quite high enough to get you off, but too much to be ignored. You could taste the three of you on Jack's shaft.

Your negligee was ruined, the torn remnants in a pile halfway across the room.

"Look at you," Jack growled. "Sweaty, exhausted, and painted in our cum. You're so good to us, sweetheart. I love seeing what a shaky mess we can make of you. If you're feeling up to it tomorrow, I'll tie you to the bed and rail that sweet ass. Watching Gabriel going so slow only makes me want to pound you harder. He's such a fucking tease."

You moaned around him, barely able to hold your head up. The fact they hadn't been rough meant you had lasted longer than you expected. Jack stroked behind your ears and along your jaw. But you were wearing down now, limbs heavy, lips chafed, nerves shot. You let him fall out of your mouth. "Can't go much more."

Jack knelt in front of you, giving his slippery cock long firm strokes.

"Do you want to finish this round?" Gabriel rumbled in your ear.
You nodded, breath hitching as he sped up his thrusts, turning the toy all the way up. Your threw your head back, eyes squeezed shut.

"That's it baby, you've done so well. Just a little more..." Gabriel rasped.

The final orgasm was a desperate full-body spasm, wrung from your exhausted muscles.
The intensity verged on pain and you gave a feeble cry, though the sight of Jack jerking himself off, his skin flushed, his eyes fluttering shut, was well worth pushing your limits. You opened your mouth, but he wasn't close enough, and some of it got on your face.

Mind hazy, you still managed to roll your eyes. Gabriel finished then too, and you whimpered as his fingers dug into your hips, his body pressing hard against yours. He kissed the spot between your shoulder blades and you collapsed on the floor, slippery, tired, and sated.

Jack leaned over, trying to wipe off your cheek. "Sorry baby, we'll get you cleaned up."
Gabriel pulled out, and rolled you over, giving you a hungry kiss, before scooping you up.

Jack's shower was big enough to fit the three of you and Gabriel held you under the hot water while Jack soaped you down. You were tempted to swat them away, but Gabriel sat down with you in his lap, back to his chest and shampooed your hair. He massaged your scalp and neck, and you sighed happily.

"I can clean myself," you murmured. "Walking is going to be hard, but I can do that much-"

It's important."

"She's going to need some water. You hungry, baby?"

"Too tired," you said. "But I'll want that cake when I wake up."

Jack laughed. "All right. I'll get you that water and I'll grab some towels too."

He left the shower, dripping, and as you watched him go, you tried to repress a pang of loss. Gabriel continued to clean you up, his hands careful but thorough.

"Earlier...what you said. I'm sorry I was weird. You say these things and I don't know how to react." You hunched over as Gabriel helped you rinse your hair.

"Because you aren't used to hearing them," Gabriel said so gently it hurt. "We all have damage. I understand."

You blew out a breath, too tired to deny anything.

"I meant what I said. Don't feel obligated to make any declarations. You aren't hurting me."

"You're just saying that because you already know how I feel."

Gabriel laughed. "Yes."

You turned around, meeting those warm dark eyes. "It's not fair to you."

"I'll keep saying it till you're used to it. It will get easier." He sat there under the spray of water, sudsy hands in your hair, his smile too knowing. "I love you, corazon."
"I love you too," you said, though your bottom lip trembled and there was water dripping down your face. "But you knew that already."

"Yes. But I like hearing it," Gabriel said, kissing your nose. "Thank you, baby." He continued to clean you up, humming softly. "Don't worry and don't rush it. It'll be fine."

You nodded, tilting your head back, so the water rained down on your face. Jack would be back in a moment and the three of you would cuddle before you fell asleep between them. Gabriel's hands soothed your tired muscles and the only thing that could make this better was a tub of hot water to soak in.

"There, all clean," Gabriel said, arms around your waist. "Now let's get you to bed."

Chapter End Notes

Long smut chapter done!

This week is going to be special because we have our annual inventory and we are so boned. I don't know if I'll get another update out this week, but I will try. The current minor arc I'm working on is pissing me off and I can't tell if it's subpar or if I'm just tired.

I do have cake though, and an almond raspberry tart.
Chapter 43

Chapter Summary

Sick days, mission planning, and funerals. Is this what normal feels like?

Chapter Notes

Yumiii has been very busy and I was tickled by how sexy and cute this one is.

See the end of the chapter for more notes

Something poked at your knees, and you squeezed them shut. Someone gave a poorly muffled laugh, a deep familiar sound. You burrowed under the pillows, unwilling to open your eyes. That was a hand on your butt, gently kneading the flesh, and something wet flicked against your thighs.

"Go away. I'm too tired," you growled.

"You sure you don't want me to lick you awake?" Jack chuckled, draping an arm around your waist.

"No, because I'm not waking up," you said, pulling the blankets up.

Jack pried the pillow off your head, swooped in, and kissed your head. "You sure, baby? There's cake in the fridge..."

"And it better be there when I get up," you snarled. "Whenever that time may be."

Gabriel laughed, somewhere near the foot of the bed. "Come back over here, Jack. I'll take care of you."

"Thank you," you muttered, yanking your pillow back over your head and going straight back to sleep.

"You getting up today?"

You shivered as Gabriel leaned over you, fully dressed. Well, it was cold in here. Colder than usual. You looked for blankets to pile on, but found them already on top of you.

"How long-" Your voice cracked and the words seemed to scratch the inside of your throat. You raised your hand to your neck, finding it hard to swallow.
Gabriel frowned, touching your forehead with the back of his hand. "You're too warm. Lay back down, I'll get a scanner."

"Thirsty," you rasped, wincing at how raw you felt. You hadn't been sucking Jack's dick that long. And you were sore. Not just between your legs, but your joints and muscles hurt. Probably from that ridiculous amount of fighting you done against armored opponents. You looked around, noting that someone had set up an emitter by the bed. That should have taken care of things.

Gabriel returned with a bottle of electrolyte solution and a handheld bio-scanner, probably from Jack's first aid kit. You drank greedily, even though it hurt to swallow.

"You're running a fever." Gabriel gave you a hard look. "I told you that you were going to get sick running around like that."

You wrapped the blankets tighter around your shoulders. It's not like you meant to walk around soaking wet in the cold. You glowered at him because while you wanted to argue, speech hurt.

"Don't give me that look. Lie back down," he barked.

"Reports," you said.

"Stop talking, you sound like a dying cat. You have sick days. Use them."

"Don't tell me what to do," you rasped.

"Fine, get up then." He crossed his arms. "Go write reports. You're shivering under four layers of blankets, I'm willing to bet that you're sore all over, and the voice transcription programs aren't going to recognize your undead rattling."

You glared at him reproachfully.

"Stay in bed," he said, shaking his head. "You have the day off anyway."

"...Hungry," you said, because food normally made you feel better.

Gabriel's expression softened. "I'll make you some soup."

"Cold." You let one arm out of the covers and beckoned him over.

Shaking his head, Gabriel stripped down to his boxers, and climbed under the covers. You latched onto him, savoring his body heat. "I can't make soup if you're using me as your personal heater, baby." You didn't let go, because now that he was here, you were just warm enough.

"Let me get you something for your throat at least. Jack has some mild painkillers and anti-inflammatory in the kit."

"Fussy," you muttered.

"Demanding," he countered.

"Cold. Hate that."

Gabriel leaned over, kissing your forehead. "I know it feels that way, but you're actually pretty warm, baby. I'll keep the scanner nearby. Don't want you getting too hot." He disentangled himself from you and you burrowed deeper under the covers, curling up in his spot. Closing your eyes, you tried not to focus on the scraping pain in the back of your throat. This was stupid. You'd been fine yesterday. Getting sick was for people with that kind of time.

"Sit up and take these. I called Jack. He'll pick you up some soup."

"Curry," you said, because burning spices and garlic were the best cure.

Gabriel shook his head. "Take it easy. You don't know how your stomach is going to react." He took your hand, placing two pills in it. "I can get Angela if you want."

"...No." Because if you weren't that sick, it was inconveniencing her. And if you were sick, well, she was probably going to lecture you three times worse than Gabriel. Not to mention, you'd avoided the going to see her yesterday, and she would definitely get on your case about that.

Gabriel snorted. "I'll keep an eye on your temperature. If it gets higher, you're going to the infirmary." He gave you a hard look and handed you a bottle of water. It was a disarming how he could be so commanding while standing there in his underwear.

"Bossy," you grumped, taking the pills.

"Stop being stubborn." He crawled into bed beside you. "You're such a bad patient." He smoothed your hair back. "Go back to sleep."

You tunneled back under the blankets, throat already starting to hurt less, and closed your eyes.

Something poked you and you flat out growled.

"Hey, brought you some soup," came Jack's voice from outside the covers. "Can you even breathe under there? Because if Gabe dutch ovens you, you might not survive."

"Really Jack?" Gabriel huffed.

Slowly, you emerged, and were a little annoyed that it was dark outside already. "I'm starving," you sighed.

Jack was still in full uniform, though he'd already taken off his gloves and eyepiece. He shed the coat, grabbed a plastic thermos off the dresser, and sat down on the bed beside you. "How are you feeling, sweetheart?"

"Sore, cold, and hungry. I'm sweaty and gross again."

"This is better than before. She's using complete sentences now," Gabriel said, tousling your hair.

"Want me to feed you?" Jack grinned, twirling a spoon.

You eyed him with open distrust. "I can drink it straight from the container. You're going to spill it on the bed."
"I think you know by now that I have very steady hands," Jack said too smugly. "Let me feed you and then you can have cake afterward."

That...wasn't fair. You stared at him incredulously.

He opened up the container and spooned out some bright yellow chicken noodle soup. You reluctantly opened your mouth and Jack happily spoonfed you. Gabriel looked over your shoulder.

"How is it?"

"Salty." Not that it mattered. You were starving. You would have eaten all of Jack's mashed potatoes if he'd brought any.

"Too much seasoning then?" Jack asked.

You shot Gabriel an incredulous look.

"I'm kidding, baby. Here Gabe. You try it."

Jack offered Gabriel a spoonful and he took it.

"Germs," you said.

"Super soldier immunity," Jack winked, and you wanted to bite him.

"That is too salty. In fact, that's pretty fucking terrible." Gabriel stared at the container. "Throw that away. I'll go make her some chicken and lime soup. I'll add enough hot pepper to soothe your throat."

"...OK," you agreed, though you were probably going to drink the rest of that anyway.

"Salt heals too. How does burn-your-tongue-off hot pepper soothe your throat?" Jack asked, shaking his head.

"Numbs it," you said. "Duh, Baby-Mouth."

Rolling his eyes, Gabriel climbed out of bed, muttering in Spanish. He quickly pulled on his clothes.

You sank back under the covers, and it was too cold now.

"You OK?" Jack asked, offering you another spoonful of soup. You took it.

"Jack! Don't feed her that."

"I'm hungry," you scowled.

Gabriel glowered at both of you. "Give me half an hour. Why don't you get a hot shower? Jack, check her temperature and make her take some Tylenol. Lucky, don't eat that soup," Gabriel called over his shoulder as he left the room. "Idiots," he muttered as he shut the door.

Jack gave you a mischievous smile. "Come on, baby." He pulled the covers back and you swore in three different languages.

"It's cold!"
"It'll be warmer in the shower," he said, pulling at your wrist. You snarled and smacked his hand away, trying to draw the blankets back over yourself. Jack just threw you over his shoulder, laughing as you tried to kick him in the face.

"You're the worst!" You shrieked as he carried you into the bathroom.

Wrapped in clean blankets, you sat on Jack's bed while he vigorously towel dried your hair. It wasn't optimal, but he was having fun doing it. He'd changed the sheets before you got out of the shower, and while you hadn't been happy getting dumped in there, the steam helped clear your sinuses and the hot water soothed your aches.

"Feeling better?" He asked, pressing a kiss to the top of your head. You were wearing one of his t-shirts. It was too big, but it was clean, and that was what mattered.

"A little," you conceded.

"You're such a grumpy sick person. Not as bad a Gabe, but up there."

"Should've just let me sleep," you said.

"You're the one who said you were hungry." Jack laughed and tossed the damp towel on the floor with the dirty linens. You got back under the covers and sighed as Jack slid in next to you, his warm hands encircling your waist.

"I am hungry, but I could sleep it off." You shrugged, because that's what you normally did. You quarantined yourself for 16 to 36 hours and slept it off. And if you woke up starving, you either had to get up and find rations or pass back out while hungry. This was...nicer.

"I like getting to fuss over you. Gabe does too. I know we don't do it enough." Jack threw one leg over yours. "I like coming back to my room, knowing you're here."

You weren't sure what to say to that, so you cuddled up to him, no longer quite as cold as you had been.

"How'd it go today?"

"We spun it pretty smoothly. Ana stopped a terrorist attack, accompanied by two competent, but ultimately anonymous agents. On base, everyone knows you and Amélie are said anonymous agents." He tweaked your nose. "I'm afraid some of that footage will be seen by others. It's evidence."

You groaned.

"Mihret made a blurred-face version of your fight for official consumption." That actually made more sense than trying to cover your body. You were covered in blood and it's not like people other than your lovers got to examine your bare skin. "There will be some political fallout, but ultimately, I think it will be OK. There were a dozen civilian casualties, but it could have been much worse." Jack's jaw clenched. "Petras called me up to question my handling of the situation, but my bases are covered."
"I want to go to Marta Schmid's funeral," you said. "If it's not a private service."

Jack blinked. "All right." He rolled onto his back. "I'll see what I can do. Being the Strike Commander usually wrangles me an invite."

You paused. "You don't have to-

"I know." Jack put an arm around your shoulder. "I'll get the details tomorrow. One of the perks of the job," he said. "I can get you into all kinds of funerals, kids birthday parties, and maybe some restaurants." He leaned over to kiss your neck. "Wish we could things more overtly."

"The bodyguard cover is good enough," you said. "Draws less attention."

"I know." He didn't sound pleased though. "And actually, I think you, me, and Gabe could just go out for a nice dinner some time. Gabe and I could wear uniforms, and you could wear whatever you want and affect that stiff awkward "I'm working" posture you get whenever you're in the public eye."

You thought he was being overly optimistic. "I might like that."

"There'd be cake," he said.

You laughed, because apparently you were predictable.

"We're going to swear that blood oath with On Sing. Ana is against it, but Gabe and Gérard don't want them disrupting Hanoi. Rein isn't too happy about it, but he's abstaining on the vote. Gérard doesn't think Feng is going to survive the year though. The detente should hold, especially if the digital ancestors are as powerful as we think they are." He shook his head. "Obviously, this isn't going to be an advertised thing. But it looks like I'm the one doing the blood thing."

You nodded sympathetically. "That's pretty gross."

Jack shrugged. "Yeah." He scratched his head. "We've been invited to dinner with Gérard and Amélie. The three of us."

"...Is that wise?"

"I don't know. Maybe Gérard is looking to patch things up with Gabe." He shrugged. "You should know, they're getting ready to wake up your friend. You're not allowed to be there." He tensed, as if expecting you to explode.

"...OK," you said, because you knew it was probably going to go down like that. "I'd like to see her soon. Even if I can't be in the same room."

"You'll get to see her," Jack said, rolling back onto his side to kiss you. "But I don't know how soon. Depends on her state of mind when she wakes up."

"...OK," you said, because Jack wasn't wrong to be concerned.

He frowned, but you just gave him a wry smile.

"I get it, Jack. I'll be patient. If she's out of danger, that's what matters to me."

He grinned at your reasonable response, like he couldn't quite believe his good fortune. "So I'm going to be doing some heavy political maneuvering. Not everyone in Petras' camp likes what he's doing."
"Sounds like a headache," you said.

"Yeah." He stroked your hair. "But I want him gone."

You heard the door open and Gabriel came in carrying a large thermos. "You're still awake. Good." He sat down on the bed. "McCree was playing up the hungry pup angle. Had to leave him some."

"The idiot will starve if he's left on his own," Gabriel muttered.

You didn't remind him that Jesse could cook or point out that Jesse was one of his favorites. You just happily took the soup and drank it, savoring the hot and sour broth with its rich chicken flavor.

"Thank you," you told Gabriel as he climbed into the bed beside you. "This is delicious."

"Just get better soon," Gabriel said gruffly. "You're a brat when you're sick."

"She's got nothing on you," Jack smirked, leaning over you to kiss Gabriel.

"I don't know what you're talking about," Gabriel scowled. "Stop hovering over me. Go order a pizza or something."

"I want to watch that bad made-for-TV movie about the Crusaders. I hear the Reinhardt lookalike is really awful," you told them.

"No," Gabriel said, shaking his head.

"C'mon," Jack laughed. "It'll be fun. I'll order a few pizzas, Lucky will eat cake, and we can ask Reinhardt "if it really happened like that." Don't you want to be able to quote all the cheesy lines back at him?"

"No. He'll like that. What is wrong with you two?" Gabriel scoffed.

"I'm sick, I get to pick," you said, sipping the soup.

"I made you soup."

"But Gabriel..." You weren't whining, you were just using a very grating, nasal tone of voice. One that conveyed to people that they should give you what you want, or you'd be very annoying.

Grumbling, Gabriel turned on the view screen and put on "Eichenwalde: Nach Einer Wahren Begebenheit." A group of too-pretty, too-skinny actors in bad CG armor struck victorious poses, and the one who was meant to be Reinhardt had on a very glittery wig. It looked so terrible. You could barely contain your excitement.

Sandwiched between the two of them, you were cozy and warm, and even if you were ill, they were here, and there was cake in the fridge, and you would enjoy this for as long as you could.
"So I got Vo to replicate the crap-car bombs of the Martel Liberation Front. Half of theirs don't go off anyway, so it's a minimal threat to the civilians. Yes, I made sure she knew we do not want it to work, just look like it could. I made that very, very clear. I even bought her a jar of nutella and a bag of spicy garlic shrimp chips to sweeten the pot. She dipped the chips in the nutella by the way."

Ziv wrinkled his nose. Lacroix's expression didn't change at all.

"She says she sourced the materials along the same supply lines. Kept bitching about the quality." You sighed, rubbing your forehead. "Anyway, we lay that as a diversion. We can snipe though; the MLF mostly does small arms hits." You had already provided them a dossier on the group. The three of you sat in Lacroix's office, privacy mode all the way up.

Originally French, the MLF spun off from a far-right anti-immigrant party and hated foreigners and international cooperation almost as much as they hated omnis. While Hoffman's politics might have been sympathetic with theirs, they were the type to demonize potential allies for not going far enough. You had no qualms about framing them for her assassination. Two birds, one bullet.

"One option is to set the bomb, make sure her security finds it, channel her out of the building, into the sniper killzone."

"We'll need a spotter on the ground," Lacroix said, looking over the parking garage schematics.

"You or me." You didn't even consider sending Ziv. "I can snipe from the hotel across the way. Here's the exit plan." You passed over another blueprint and a map of the city. "It's pretty easy to crowd-blend in Cologne. Wish we'd done this earlier. Could've used Carnival as cover."

"Carnival a wonderful time to be a spy," Lacroix agreed.

"I think Lucky should be on the ground. You're a good shot, but the boss is better and you're less recognizable."

"They'll be expecting something like this, you know." Lacroix gave the paperwork a cursory glance. Of course, he'd already had his own internal version of the op. You suspected he was comparing both plans and cherrypicking the best parts from each.

"The bomb's the diversion. Or the smoking gun, if we end up not using it to redirect her," you said.

"Your escape route is adequate, and the Germans do hate surveillance, so they are less likely to catch us on CCTV. I like the base plan. Polish it more. Her security drones can map the bullet trajectory and counterattack. You don't follow football either, do you? FC Cologne has a match the same weekend as the trade conference. With the crowds, come the real risk of civilian collateral damage, not to mention the drunken rioters."

You shrugged. "I can draw up a new plan."

"This is passable. You just need to account for these other issues. Ziv, can you delay their distress signals?"

"Probably. I want to stake them out in advance to get a feel for their comm security, movement patterns, and cryptography. I can definitely divert and delay local authorities. I've already upped the MLF comm traffic, making jingoistic posts about "something big" on their bbs. I'm doing my due diligence on the false flag." Ziv grinned. "The rest is up to you two."

You rolled your eyes, because the little shit always had to show off for Lacroix.

"It's a strong start," Lacroix said. "I'll review the details and make recommendations." He stroked his chin. "The Alpha Squad leader from the day spa assault is still in custody. Jack won't let us take her apart yet, not with the inquiry still going on." Lacroix looked at your face, his smile growing wider. "But that's not the cyborg you care about, is it?"

"...I know she's awake. I know someone has to handle the interrogation, and it's not you or me."

"We cannot see her till after," Lacroix said, giving you a lazy smile.

"I know," you tapped your fingers against his desk. "I just want updates."

"Me too, Chanceux." Lacroix shrugged. "They're doing a full work up, and then an interrogation. We'll have time afterward."

"Your idea has worked so far," Ziv said. "Winston would have called me if things went wrong."

That was a relief. You looked at Lacroix, waiting for him to say something trite about the virtue of patience and not acting like a soldier.

"I would like an alliance with On Sing, but I don't think Zhai Feng is strong enough to hold it."

"Jack said as much." You had already looked over the dossier for her strongest rival. Fa Hai was a distant cousin, weaker claim, but stronger political standing, and Hong Kong-born. A few years older than Feng, he seemed like the better choice, and he was amenable to maintaining the ceasefire with Overwatch.

"He's still going to do it. It's a formality, and it does give us leeway, if they oust her, to renegotiate terms. Especially since they are importing actual blood from Zheng."

"That's more disturbing than fresh blood, you do realize that, right?" Ziv scrunched up his face.

"I'm surprised Jack's going along with it, actually. I half expected him to dig in his heels and salt the earth." Lacroix shrugged. "Perhaps you are a bad influence on him, Chanceux."

You pressed your lips together, unwilling to take the bait.

"Like you are an interesting influence on Hanzo Shimada. He's been most cooperative and while he's no fan of Zhai Feng, he thinks Zheng will uphold her part of the bargain."

Burying the hatchet with On Sing was the smart thing to do. But you really didn't want to get sucked into their internal politics. Fa Hai or Zhai Feng, it didn't matter as long as they kept the peace. You tapped your fingers against the arm of the chair. "We're two weeks out on my plan for Spinshot. I'll have the next draft to you in two days."
"You look rough," you told Bayan, when he came out of the med center. He'd lost weight, and that surprised you. He had already been fit, so that wasn't a good sign. He was still handsome, though his skin had lost some of its golden luster, and he looked drawn and worn down. His dark hair hadn't been styled today.

"You look better cleaned up," he said, not missing a beat. "I'm not sure what your obsession is with blood-stained clothing, but considering all the pathogens and unpleasant connotations, you should probably find a different aesthetic."

You laughed, because while your Blackwatch compatriots kept giving you knowing smirks and amused elbow nudges, a majority of the Overwatch crowd had stopped making eye contact. The people you knew remained friendly, but random Blues gave you wide berth and watched you with an uncomfortable mix of awe and terror.

"You're hilarious. What's wrong?" You offered him a box of freshly roasted chestnuts and he accepted, popping one into his mouth.

"Nothing, Lucky. You didn't come here to ask about my problems." There were dark circles under his eyes and he pulled on his jacket, looking warily down the hall. He was shorter than you remembered, but then, you'd been bedridden and he'd been walking about bossing you around.

"I came here to bring you some chestnuts," you said. "Vo said you liked them."

Bayan laughed at that. "You didn't talk about me with Min, did you?"

"I did. She spends a lot of time here. You're apparently her favorite nurse. She's terrified of Angela. As we all should be." It struck you as odd that Bayan called her by her given name; most people stuck to her surname. But then, Mongolian naming practices were different from most of east Asia. That, or Vo and Bayan were closer than you thought.

There was a long pause as Bayan digested your words, and maybe a few more chestnuts.

"I thought you were seeing Genji," he said after a moment. "Or Tataryn. He seemed pretty into you the other day."

You sighed. "I'm not hitting on you, sorry. And I'm not seeing Tataryn either; please don't give that rumor any life."

There was an longer span of silence and you could see Bayan's thoughts flit across his face. He frowned at you. "You're here about your friend. I can't let you see her, Lucky. It's not worth my job or yours."

"I agree. I'm going to stay away, like I've been told to. But I'm still her friend and I am worried." You took a chestnut and bit into it, savoring the soft sweetness. "I didn't know they were waking her up till after it happened. When did they do it?"

"Angela forced it a day ago. There were...complications, but someone tweaked something in her spinal cybernetics and it leveled out." You knew exactly whom that someone was, and smiled.

"How is she doing?"
"Confused," he said. "She's not mostly nonviolent, but there are spells. They're leaving her prostheses disconnected obviously."

You nodded. "I figured."

"She goes into fugues. Doesn't talk much. Cries sometimes." Bayan shook his head. "I shouldn't be telling you this."

"...I'm not just being nosy, Bayan. She's my friend and I'm going to do what I can for her. But to do that, I need to know what to be prepared for." And you were also nosy. You handed him the box. "Everyone else is concerned about her utility. I'm worried about her well-being."

"She listens to that recording you made. It's loops continuously."

"...She's going to be sick of the sound of my voice," you said.

"I know I am," Bayan laughed. "Could you have picked something more cheerful? Like Kawabata, or Plath, or even Ayn Rand?"

"...I think you're insulting me. But I'm too illiterate to tell." You snatched a chestnut. "It was recommended. I don't really read much. That book was a struggle."

Bayan nodded thoughtfully.

"You just keep yak butter lying around?" Bayan asked skeptically.

"No, but I used to be an import-export specialist. I have my ways."

Bayan shook his head. "You don't have to bribe me, Lucky. I get that former Agent Lao is important to you. Has to be if she gets to stab you and live."

You laughed awkwardly at that, because of course he knew. "Yeah, that's true." This next part was tricky. You wanted to offer him something for his time, but you couldn't be seen as trying to buy him. "Do you have any recommendations? Because I haven't actually had yak butter?"

"Let's stick to natural sweets, Lucky. That stuff is terrible for you."

"Kumquats are in season," you said after a minute.

"Those aren't bad, but I wouldn't say no to more chestnuts."

"All right," you said. "I like chestnuts."

Bayan gave you a sideways look. "Well, no one's told me not to talk to you. If you want to chat, and bring me nice snacks after a long day on my feet, well, what's a little conversation between friends?"

Friendship, huh? That old chestnut? Pun intended. You could do that, along with another five to ten pounds of the fire-roasted stuff. And you wouldn't even have to fight with Gabriel or creatively break any rules. Because there were no gag orders in effect. And you weren't actually going near Lao.

You had always been sneaky, but thanks to the Lacroix husband-wife team, you were getting smoother about it.
"So are we going to talk about the elephant in the room?" You sat cross-legged on Gabriel's couch, marking a deck of playing cards. Jack rested his head in your lap, a hot compress on his forehead. Gabriel was at his dining table, sewing buttons back onto Jack's dress uniform. He was going to patch up one of your shirts next, because he was the one who ripped it. His stitches were also much neater than yours.

"Which one?" Jack asked. "The fact that I'm useless at housework. Or the fact that Gabriel missed his calling as a fashion designer? Or the fact that you cheat at cards?"

You just laughed. "It's not cheating. It's called "creative problem solving," and it's a Blackwatch tradition."

"I don't want to know," Jack sighed.

"You really don't," Gabriel said, not looking up from his work. "All right. I'll bite. What do we have to talk about?"

"Lao's awake. When do I get to see her?"

"After the interrogation, and only under supervision," Jack said automatically, like he'd been waiting for it. He closed his eyes. "No, I don't know when that will be. There are other tests we have to perform. But you will get to see her. After."

You looked over at Gabriel, but he was hyper-focused on mending that jacket. Which was funny, because it seemed that Gabriel could do complicated cross-stitch while watching movies.

"We're not taking her out back with a shovel, I promise," Jack said, opening his eyes. "And we're not pulling you off Candle Arc. You will get to see her. But you have to wait. Don't push us on this."

Gabriel just grunted in agreement.

You studied the slight discoloration on the card backing. Would you be able to see that from across the table in Jesse's room? Maybe not, his lighting was dim. Tinting didn't work as well for you. Maybe you'd risk cutting the patterns into the design. The problem was Jesse's shuffling sometimes picked up on it. You could swap it in for one of his decks without him noticing. But you'd have to do it before Genji got there, because he'd catch you.

"OK," you said. Because that was fair, and Lacroix was getting the same treatment, though they were going to bring him in later to test her reactions. He was, after all, the priority target and pretty good litmus test of her control.

Jack watched you, and you could feel the judgment. So you unfolded the washcloth over his eyes.

"You're hilarious," he sighed, picking the lukewarm cloth up.

"I'll give you a neck rub once I'm done," you said.

Obviously, he and Gabriel had gone over the best way to present the argument to you, which involved Jack doing the talking, and Gabriel acting chill about it. The plan was reasonable, and while you weren't quite comfortable with how much they collaborated behind your back, you couldn't point any fingers. You'd already given Gabriel the pictures Maggie provided, and he was prepared to trade for a second batch, because that first set was only an opening salvo. She had more.

"You're taking this well," Jack said after a moment.

"Lao's alive. I get to see her eventually. You've assured me that you aren't going to euthanize her. All right, I can be patient." You finished scratching marks into the aces and put the deck aside. "You have a legitimate reason to be worried, because she is programmed to try and kill me, so that's fair." You reached over and began to knead Jack's shoulders.

You still didn't have a good answer for dealing with their overprotective tendencies. So you were going to handle it on a situational basis. While you weren't worried about Spinshot, you weren't going to tell Jack much about it, because the Strike Commander needed plausible deniability. You knew Gabriel would be fine with assassinating someone from Petras' cabal. As long as you caught her in public, with her small contingent of bodyguards and not at home with her massive army of turrets, illegal weapons, and omnis, Hoffman was a very small risk.

"What are you working on with Lacroix?" Gabriel asked.

"Obstacle removal," you said, and he understood exactly what that meant. "It's a team effort."

Jack went stiff for a moment, because he knew what you were talking about too. "Long range?" Gabriel asked.

"That's the plan. Making the false flag stick is my worry, but Lacroix seems to think Ziv's prep work is sufficient." You pressed down hard on one of Jack's shoulder knots and he flinched. "Sorry."

Jack just shook his head. "You're fine. I just... This is our normal: violence, subterfuge, politics. That's pretty fucked up." He turned around. "I know it's necessary. But... What would you do if you didn't have to go around cleaning up other people's messes?"

"There will always be messes." You shrugged.

"Humor me," Jack said with a frown.

"Eat a lot of cake. Maybe get a hot tub." His pained look made you feel a little bad. "I'm serious. I like cake and soaking in baths. It's the little things, yeah?"

"I think he's asking if you had any life goals," Gabriel chuckled. "Things like hike Machu Picchu, or swim with dolphins, or raise award-winning show cats."

You sat there for a moment. "I do like animals, but they don't really fit the lifestyle. I mean, I'm barely keeping my plants alive. Oh, Gabriel, do you mind taking care of them while I'm out?"

"Bring them to the office," he said, having already moved on to mending your shirt.

"...Don't make Jesse do it. He'll totally kill my orchid." Because it was already two steps from dead.

"Put the orchid in Jack's bathroom, he takes longer showers. The humidity is good for it," Gabriel said, and you sighed because that should have occurred to you. "The rest should be fine in the office."
"See, I'm easy. What would you and Gabriel do if you weren't cleaning up other people's messes?" You asked, because Jack kept asking variants of this question.

"I wouldn't mind having a farm again. Maybe not as a business, but just...land and space. And a dog," Jack said wistfully.

"You sure that's what you really want?" You asked. "I think you'd be bored in a month."

Jack snorted. "I realize it's not as fun as cake and hot tubs, but I'm a country boy at heart."

"I'm thinking about consulting," Gabriel said. "Not just for military ops and private security. Someone has to make sure they tell our story right. We don't need the SEP-equivalent of Eichenwalde."

"A thousand times yes! I would watch that every night. I would memorize all the bad lines. I would reenact scenes, just for you."

Gabriel had a head for business and most things requiring complex planning. If he hadn't gone into the military or stayed for Overwatch, you could see him as some high-powered CEO. "You'd love jetting between DC and LA, basking in the adoration of the masses." You picked up your playing cards.

Gabriel blew out a loud breath, but he didn't sound displeased.

"Well, there's a plan," Jack said after a moment, giving Gabriel a fond smile.

And you laughed again, because that wasn't a plan, it was a pipedream. None of you knew how to quit, but sometimes it was fun to pretend otherwise.

You wore your high-collared armor under a formal black trenchcoat. It got you some questioning looks, but because you were attending the funeral as the Strike Commander's bodyguard, no one commented. That Captain Amari chose to come along surprised you as well. She and Jack wore their dress blues, looking sharp, formal, and dangerous.

It was a small service at Marta's church, her remains had already been cremated and buried at the foot of a tree in a "forest cemetery," in accordance with her wishes.

Her family was polite, possibly overwhelmed by the celebrities at the service. You caught sight of Nina, but she didn't recognize you with your armor on. And that was just fine. It was a short service, and Marta's brother stuttered when he invited Jack and Captain Amari to the post-ceremony luncheon. Jack politely gave his regrets and the three of you left.

It was awkward, invasive, and probably a mistake. You wished you hadn't asked to go.

"I'm sorry," you told Jack when you got back to his room.

He just gave you a wry grin and gestured at his tie.

Rolling your eyes, you carefully untied it, and then started on his collar buttons.

Jack caught your wrist and kissed the tips of your gloves, his smile secretive. "It wasn't that bad, baby."

"We crashed a funeral," you said. "That's pretty bad."
"We were invited. I checked ahead," Jack said. "Funerals are always awkward, even if you're close to the deceased." He took off his jacket and continued unbuttoning his shirt. "I've only been to one that was weirdly fun. And that's because Jacobs planned it out ahead, scheduling drinking, story-telling, and leaving a recording demanding that we not be somber."

"I don't know why I-"

"To pay your respects. Funerals aren't for the dead. They're for the living. We already attended the general memorial service for the massacre victims. It does no harm to let her family know that we went the extra step for her. What they make of it is up to them. Stop fretting." Jack kissed your cheek.

"You're probably right." You turned around so he could help unstrap your armor. "You think he's done yet?"

Jack stiffened behind you. "What?"

"Gabriel. Do you think he's done interrogating Lao? Because I'd like to see her soon."

Jack sighed. "I'm not going to ask how you know. I'm not even surprised at this point." He loosened the straps and seals. You peeled it off, carefully setting the pieces on the table.

"He's been squirrelly," you said, though that wasn't how you knew and you weren't going to give up your sources. "And so have you."

"She's...confused," Jack said after a moment. "We've been waiting for her to get oriented. And while your plan seems to be working, that acclimatization is part of the reason she's having trouble."

You swallowed your kneejerk offer to go talk to her.

"She's coming out of it. You can see her afterward."

You blew out a breath. This was the compromise, and while you didn't like it, you would not break the trust they put in you.

"He's not going to hurt her, physically," you said, mostly for your own benefit. "I know that. But he's going to rake her over the coals."

"It's no different from what Gérard did to you back when you joined up," Jack said, patting your back.

"I'm still not over that," you said, mouth twitching.

"Yes, well, maybe that was a bad example," Jack conceded.

No, you knew it was an accurate example. Gabriel and Lao would have bad blood. Realistically, how could you expect any different? You sighed as Jack reached over, his calloused fingers massaging the back of your neck.

"So you're going to be out of town for a week?"

"Yeah." You'd already put the finishing touches on Spinshot and Lacroix had made his additions as well. Now you just had to see it through.

"...Something dangerous?"
"Medium risk," you said, not actually sure what that meant. It wasn't a war zone. But she had some expensive tech, so you had to be sensible.

Jack frowned. "Should I ask?"

You shrugged. "Will it make you feel better?"

"I'd rather sit here with you and plan that dinner outing," he said, spreading out on the couch, head tilted back. His white shirt was halfway unbuttoned, and his black tie was draped over the back of his neck. He closed his eyes, lips slightly parted. You admired the view: Strike Commander in dishabille. It made for a pretty picture.

"You just going to stand there and gawk, or are you going to join me?" He said, eyes opening.

"You're better from a distance," you said, straddling his lap.

"You don't mean that," Jack said, lazily. He leaned forward to kiss your neck and you sighed against him. The angle had you looking down at the cushions, and you started to laugh.

"What?" He followed your gaze. "...That did stain. Damnit, Gabe."

You laughed even harder, until Jack shoved you off, dropping you on the desecrated cushion.

"Damnit, Jack!"

"Blame Gabe!"

You rolled off the couch, grabbed the cushion, and smacked him with it, making sure it was the dirty side that hit him.

Jack gave you an incredulous look, before narrowing his eyes and grabbing a throw pillow. "Oh, it's on."

"You are going to be so embarrassed when I tell Gabriel that the Strike Commander lost a pillow fight to me-" You jeered, gripping the cushion with both hands. You spun, hitting him again.

Jack tossed the throw pillow at you and you batted it aside, grinning.

But then he was up and charging and you couldn't dodge the tackle because of the goddamn coffee table. You threw the cushion at him, for all the good that would do, and Jack slapped it aside. He collided with you and you hit the ground, swearing. Jack landed on all fours on top of you.

"Goddamnit, Jack!"

"What was that, agent?" He purred, pulling off his shirt.

"It's not a pillow fight if you're not using a pillow!"

"I don't think I care about that any more," he laughed, and bit your throat, his hands already unfastening your belt.
Sorry about the delay. You guys are great. Inventory wasn't as awful as I was expecting, but it's been a long week and I had some block earlier on. Seem to be back on track. But I'm writing smut again and that takes extra long. (Why am I a delay fish? IDK)

Just some "slice of life" interludes while the next arc warms up. Because things can't be an adrenaline rollercoaster all the time.

Saw Black Panther and unf. Everyone was gorgeous and awesome, but M'Baku. UNF. fans self Real life is kind of a malaise right now. I'm sure I'll figure shit out eventually, but right now I'm kind of just existing. I think I might be figuring stuff out (well I know a bunch of things I don't want. But we'll see. It could all be a hilarious illusion/delusion/f*ck it I'll get some cake tomorrow.

Chapter 44

Chapter Summary

Blood oaths, interrogations, and deception all around. Things are not as stable as they seem.

Chapter Notes

See the end of the chapter for notes

You and Jesse ran a poker game out of his room. And while Blackwatch had numerous gambling nights, your poker game was special, not as special as Vo's exploding dice matches, but still not the run-of-the-mill game. So it was a real shock when Genji showed up with Hanzo.

Jesse, Ziv, Tataryn, and Diallo were playing five card draw. You were sitting out this round, mixing drinks. It took all your self control not to spike Tataryn's.

Tataryn, you noted, had cards hidden in his sleeves and probably other places. Ziv always counted cards, and sometimes he used tiny cameras. Jesse was the most likely to stack the deck, doing fancy shuffles that somehow amounted to him getting plum hands. Diallo didn't focus on the cards, preferring to palm a chip or prize here and there and sometimes she colluded with Tataryn, pulling all kinds of two-man cons and shifty setups. Genji used a variety of methods, and you had never actually been able to catch him in the act.

You took a page from Genji's manual, wearing special contacts to view the juice dust he used to mark cards. You counted them too, but your fingers made shuffling a little weird, and you didn't quite have the smooth sleight of hand to cheat like Jesse and Tataryn. But you owned several decks of subtly marked cards, just for this.

Because this was a Blackwatch event. There were plenty of more profitable games to play with the Overwatch crowd. And to be honest, they were ripe for fleecing. But for this table, the stakes didn't matter as much as the methods. Deceiving, bluffing, and outdoing your comrades? That was where the fun was at. Everyone cheated; the goal was to outdo your neighbor and not get caught.

You were now pretty sure Nwazue had daubed or juiced the cards back in the Ninth Circle. Her grasp of chemistry was superb and no one else had the gear to detect her marks. Back then, it'd been a mystery. Now it was one of your tools.

"What's your poison?" You asked, by way of greeting when Genji stepped in, and Hanzo lurked by the door, looking just as uptight as you remembered.

"We brought sake," Genji said, holding up a bottle. "I'm still unconvinced that Tataryn didn't drug the whiskey last time."

"I would not do that to you, Genji. Them, yes. But you, you can snap armor plating between your fingers. So I would not do that to you." Tataryn laughed, shaking his head, and sipped his bourbon. He took it neat, but you could still drug him if you wanted to. Not that you would, probably. He would retaliate, and you weren't sure either of you would be able to stop escalating.
"He's just unsure of how much it would take to drop you," Diallo said, cheerfully. Tall, dark, and curvy, Fatou Diallo had the quietest set of power armor that you never heard. It was much smaller than Reinhardt or Valdez's units, and painted a deep matte navy to blend into the darkness. You were pretty sure it could run underwater too.

Easygoing and chatty, Diallo was one of the pleasanter people in Blackwatch. She kept her hair in a dozen neat bantu knots and wore a lot of jewelry made from unpolished gemstones. In her mid-twenties, with wide cheekbones and toned biceps, Diallo smiled a lot.

"Is Vo coming?" Genji asked.

You shrugged. Probably not, considering how many people were already here. Vo wasn't the best socialized member of Blackwatch.

"Sinaga said he might stop by and try to win his watch back," Jesse grinned.

Hanzo wrinkled his nose.

"What are you betting, Genji? We don't take brothers," Ziv said. "Especially not yours."

You rested your face in your palm.

"Family members have never been acceptable tender," Jesse drawled. "But I think he knows that by now."

Genji just sat down and tossed a gold wristwatch into the pot.

"Sinaga's watch!" Diallo began to laugh. "I have to get that."

Hanzo sat down beside you, watching the proceedings with a pinched face. "Is this what you and my brother do for fun?"

"When he isn't kicking me across the mat and trash-talking me, yeah. Oh, and eating. Eating is fun." You set the array of drink orders on the table, but shook your head when Jesse offered to deal you in. Hanzo sat awkwardly on the couch, arms crossed. Everyone was politely ignoring him, which was honestly better than you expected.

"...That man is cheating," Hanzo whispered in your ear.

You snickered, because you could clearly see Jesse palming cards from under the table. Tataryn was scratching his ear, and you bet he was about to switch out something in his sleeve. Ziv was smirking and you didn't want to think about what he'd done. You weren't sure which one Hanzo meant, but yes, they were all cheating.

"We don't bet anything we can't afford to lose," you said. "This is just for fun."

Hanzo squinted as he saw Genji flick his wrists. "Did he just...?"

"Yup," you said, noting the luminescent mark on the upper right corner of a card. You didn't think Genji knew that you were using the special contacts to detect his juice dusting. You hadn't completely figured out Genji's ciphers. but you suspected that was a court card, and a heart.

Tataryn smiled brightly at Jesse. Jesse's smirked, tipping his hat. You caught a glimpse of a card tucked against the brim.

"So, the commander is in a much better mood," Diallo said, flashing you a shit-eating grin
"Oi, you should have seen her at the spa." Tataryn rested his hand on his heart. "All she was wearing was this teeny tiny towel and the blood of her enemies."

"Ugh, don't remind me," Ziv snorted.

"Don't be jealous, Mihret. You're adorable too," Tataryn smirked.

"...It really doesn't take much to get you going, does it?" Diallo rolled her eyes Tataryn.

"Fatou, my heart, if any man can't appreciate the sight of you returning as gore-streaked victorious warrior, you should dump him for me. I thought the boss was going to jump her right there. Of course, she took the next day off, and when I came by her room to check on her...well, she wasn't there!"

"Tataryn, I will defenestrate you."

"But you haven't even bought me dinner yet!" He doubled over laughing.

"Thank you for your service," Diallo winked. "The commander has been in a much better mood lately."

"You're not slick," you said, downing your whiskey. At least Genji and Jesse were taking advantage of those two picking on you to cheat even more.

"Oi, Diallo, stop trying to look at my cards. I can't defend myself from you and Mihret," Tataryn complained.

"Doesn't matter if we see them. You're just going to swap them out for the ones in your sleeves," Ziv said with a smirk.

"Deal me three more, and not from the bottom, McCree," Genji ordered.

"This is no way to build trust," Hanzo said, sharply.

You just smiled and handed him a clean glass for his sake, before you poured yourself more whiskey.

Somehow Genji scored a straight, Ziv had four of a kind, Jesse had two pairs, Tataryn had a full house, and Diallo had a royal flush.

"Sinaga is going to freak," she laughed, putting it on and waving her wrist under everyone's noses. "How does it look? Shiny? Yeah! I can't wait to show him."

Tataryn smiled indulgently, brushing his hair out his face. "Let me win it back for him?"

"Not a chance!"

"Squabble on your own time. Lucky, you deal. And stop giving Mihret all the good cards," Jesse ordered.

"You want in?" You asked Hanzo.

He shook his head.
"Aww, come on, pretty boy," Diallo coaxed. "It'll be a learning experience."

"I am acutely familiar with both loss and public humiliation," Hanzo said, gripping his glass too tightly.

"You and the rest of us," Tataryn said with a shrug. "Have you ever been dangled naked off a skyscraper by your ankles? No? Then you do not know true humiliation. It was cold up there. You cannot judge a man based on how he looks in the cold!"

"That's how you met the boss, isn't it?" Jesse asked slyly.

"I don't kiss and tell," Tataryn said, shooting you a delighted look.

"Considering he was the one holding you over the edge, I don't think there was much kissing involved," you said, because Gabriel had told you that story.

"You of all people know what kind of foreplay he's into. He is very strong," Tataryn declared. "Swept me right off my feet! I was heels over head! I would have fallen so hard!"

Jesse, Diallo, and Ziv snickered, while Jesse slapped his knees. You exchanged eye rolls with Genji and dealt him the good cards.

"You are not doing that in order," Ziv said, narrowing his eyes.

"Mixing it up, because Jesse shuffled," you said, dryly, not missing a beat.

Genji won that round, with a full house. Tataryn somehow managed to get a high card 10. And everyone else had pairs. Blackwatch petty got into everything.

"Next round is for the Blackwatch tea party," you said. "Winner picks a food item that the lowest loser has to bring. No, they don't have to be homemade, but we're doing this in the middle of the cafeteria this time, so dress appropriately." You winked at Tataryn.

"Is Vo coming?" Ziv asked, a little worried.

"Maybe, but I'll never ask Vo to bake," you reassured him. "I've banned her from using the kitchen." Not that Vo actually listened to you most of the time.

"Is it Blackwatch only?" Diallo asked.

"Blues can come, if they bring baked goods," you said. "Or finger sandwiches."

"Is this a tea ceremony?" Hanzo asked.

"I bring Wild Turkey bourbon in a teapot," Tataryn said. "It is a flower teapot. Very beautiful. I stole it from a duchess. After I killed her. She wasn't very nice. But she had good taste."

You sighed, because Wild Turkey actually did go pretty well with black tea as a sweetener. "OK, Tataryn."

"I was planning on bringing ngalakh anyway," Diallo said. "What about you McCree?"

"Who do you think is making all the tea?" Jesse grunted.
"OK, if we're doing desserts, don't bring lapsong souchang. It doesn't meld and it tastes like an ashtray." Genji said.

"But that's my favorite," Jesse said, dealing the next hand. "If you want to talk about awful, all that wagashi you're fixated on? Bleagh."

"Hey now, them's fighting words," you said. "Lapsong souchang goes really well with sandwiches. And wagashi is an elegant acquired taste that complements the bitter teas."

With the stakes this high, you weren't surprised to see two royal flushes, one straight flush, and two four-of-a-kinds, that just happened to all be aces for eight aces total. Huh. Genji and Jesse scored the royal flushes, diamonds and spades respectively. Ziv and Diallo were responsible for the excess aces.

"Baklava," Jesse said. "With pistachios. Make sure they use real honey, not that corn syrup shit."

"Wagashi: I prefer sakura mochi, daifuku, and dorayaki," Genji said.

"Oh the pancake things? Yeah, those aren't bad," Ziv said. "I think Lucky can show me where to get those."

"Cheat better," Tataryn said, and Diallo punched him in the arm, still flaunting Sinaga's watch.

When you looked over your shoulder, Hanzo was studying Genji, his expression no longer quite as disapproving.

The slim young woman in front of him did not match what he pictured "international terrorist" Bái Shé to be, just like she did not match your description of "squad baby" Lao. But in this particular situation, expectations had been thrown screaming out the window, and splashed gruesomely across the pavement. Gabriel had to admit, she looked different, now that she was disarmed and tethered to an interrogation room chair.

She was strangely relaxed, watching him with wary eyes.

"I know she's alive. You can't tell me she's dead."

Gabriel crossed his arms, gritting his teeth. That damn recording. He'd listened long enough to know that wasn't something you would have chosen. Gérard maybe, but not you.

"What's it matter to you? You shot her. You stabbed her. You left her to die in Black Base Delta. I think there's a very unpleasant reason why they left you alive, little traitor," Gabriel said softly.

Bái Shé paled at the accusations, and bit her lower lip. "They said you would believe that. They said I could never go home." She stared straight ahead, frozen in place. "I didn't... I would never have..." She trailed off weakly. "At least that's what I believe. I will admit, that I'm not sure what's real any more, Commander."
"How convenient," Gabriel spat. "I'm your "commander" now, am I?"

Bái Shé flinched.

"Were we ever on the same side, agent?" He asked, vitriol poisoning the title.

"I want to believe so," she said, voice trembling.

"Tell me then, where do your allegiances lie?"

"I...I was an Overwatch agent. I didn't mean to betray you. I didn't mean to be so weak. But I couldn't help it, sir. They took what was left of me, and put me back together wrong, and now I don't know what I am."

"Don't make excuses. You're a goddamn Talon agent," Gabriel said coldly. "Say it with me now."

"But I'm...I'm not a Talon agent," she whispered. "I'm not."

"Lao Yue AKA Bái Shé, wanted internationally for murder, extortion, terrorism, and whole laundry list of crimes that I can read off to you, if you need that trick memory of yours jogged." His smile was not pleasant. "I can go back further, to when you were just Lao Yue, dark web trash dabbling in corporate and political espionage. I don't know what Aishani saw in you. Even back then you were untrustworthy."

Bái Shé began to hyperventilate. "I never meant-"

"You obviously aren't an Overwatch agent, you already admitted that. It seems like you were never cut out for it, always relying on other people to make the hard sacrifices." Gabriel could taste the cruelty on his tongue. "Now, say it for me, that's an order by the way, from your commander. Admit that you are a Talon agent. Just say it. Test the words. Go on, see how they feel."

"I...am..." She shuddered. "I am a Talon agent," she whimpered, eyes squeezed shut, fingers of her organic hand digging into the arm the chair. "No. No, that's not right! I was a pawn. I was a goddamn Talon pawn."

Gabriel raised a brow. He wasn't sure if he'd managed to establish a good baseline reading, but he would check the metrics after he was done with this session.

"I was an Overwatch agent. I was a Blackwatch agent," she hiccupped. "I really was. Maybe I wasn't very good, but I tried, sir. I really did."

"Tell that to Lucky Strike. She trusted you, and look what you did to her."

"I can't argue that," she said, shaking her head. "I told her to kill me. I know I did. She wouldn't. She said it would get better." Bái Shé's voice broke. "She said I could come home, Commander. Why would she lie to me?"

Gabriel's face hardened. This was business. This was personal. This was a fucking mess and he was glad that you remained unaware that he was handling the interrogation.

"You stabbed the only person who wanted to bring you back alive and you have the nerve to question her integrity? Because I remember very clearly how she looked bleeding out on the ground, still trying to reach you."
"She's not dead," Bái Shé repeated. "I know she's not dead. Even if you won't tell me anything."

"Can't handle the fact you really might be a treacherous little snake? That you turned on your last surviving friend?" Gabriel pushed. "Because if you were trustworthy, we wouldn't need to shackle you. We wouldn't need to tether you to a damn AI to keep you from trying to kill us. We wouldn't need to take you apart to keep you from going on a murderous rampage. I've seen the aftermath of your slaughters. Very messy, Bái Shé. Do you like crushing weak human bones and popping organs like bubbles? Do you like cutting down Blackwatch operatives?"

"No! No! No!" She sobbed. "But for you, I would make the exception!"

The meter spiked, reactions in line with what he expected. Gabriel just watched, satisfied that he had gotten this much honesty out of her. But he would have to break her down more. Gabriel studied the crying woman in the chair, and found that the he did not mind.

Jemison and Shoal escorted the visitors to the Blackwatch conference room. You, Ziv, Genji, and Hanzo got the "gifts." There were two women and one man, both unconscious, and you had already viewed their dossiers. The evidence against them ranged from audio recordings to entire transcripts of plotting. Zheng's AI was a dangerous entity, and while you knew Winston and Ziv were shoring up Overwatch's defenses, you couldn't help but wonder, for the thousandth time, if this alliance was a good idea.

You left the prisoners in the interrogation wing, under the gentle watch of In-Sec.

It was strange to see Shoal and Jemison in their Overwatch blues inside your conference room. Not as strange as the party Feng brought with her. There was a handsome, but severe young man you recognized as Fa Hai. He wore a well-cut cream suit and at his side was an apple doll of an old woman, her steel gray hair in a neat braid, her dark skin covered in black thorny tattoos. Hettie LaRue, if you remembered correctly. She worked for Fa Hai and her title was "secretary," though as an "administrative assistant" yourself, you knew that could be deceiving.

Dressed in a fitted black suit, Feng had brought a round, avuncular, middle-aged man in a linen suit with even rounder spectacles and a panama hat. She called him "Mr. Li," no traceable first name, and rolled her eyes dramatically whenever he chided her in overly polite tones.

Fa Hai's eyes widened slightly when he saw Hanzo and Genji, and Feng waved vigorously at your group.

To your surprise, Hanzo reluctantly returned the wave. Genji nodded. You succumbed to peer pressure and acknowledged her with a chin raise. But Ziv pretended not to notice. He really was a little shit.

Jack sat at the table, Lacroix on his left, Captain Amari on his right and to your surprise all three of them were in uniform. Overwatch blue did not complement Lacroix's skin tone. In fact, it made him look more than a little sallow. No wonder he favored suits. It was petty of you to notice, but when did that ever stop you? Blinking, you wondered where that sartorial observation had even come from. Was it Gabriel, or Amélie, or Lacroix himself rubbing off on you?

Angela was there with some complicated-looking scanning equipment. You and Genji stayed by the door while Ziv and Hanzo walked over to provide support. Ziv would be monitoring any appearances by Zheng, while Winston would be working with Athena to analyze the tech. Hanzo would be advising Lacroix on protocol.

There was a simple porcelain teacup on the table, probably one of Captain Amari’s. Feng handed a vial of dark liquid to Angela for testing. You weren’t sure who got the DNA sample for Zheng, just like you were unsure how they just had “blood of my ancestors” sitting around on tap. It was all above your pay grade.

"For the record, I would like to say this is unsanitary and while I understand the cultural and sociological significance of the act, I would strongly recommend testing all parties for infectious disease before ingesting,” Angela said, not even trying to hide her disgust. She wrinkled her nose as she uncorked the ancestor vintage.

"Sure, I got nothing to hide," Feng said, slashing her left palm over the tea cup. The knife was sharp and utilitarian. She wiped it off on a provided cloth and Angela immediately bandaged her hand, while Ziv scanned the cup.

"DNA match. No toxins or infections. Interesting...genetic profile."

"Proprietary," Feng said. "If you want to make more like me, you'll have to pay royalties. Though I guess if you wanted to do it the old-fashioned way, you and me could reach an agreement," she said winking at Jack.

There was a long awkward pause. Captain Amari shut her eyes, exhaling deeply. Lacroix's shit-eating grin just got bigger. Ziv snorted very loudly. Shoal's eyes got very big and she turned her head to the side.

"...That sounded smoother in my head," Feng said after a moment. "Let's pretend that didn't happen, shall we?"

Fa Hai's expression was thunderous. Ms. LaRue remained impassive. Mr. Li smiled weakly.

But Jack just gave a longsuffering sigh. "What didn't happen?"

"You do have a sense of humor! I thought Mr. Lacroix was lying to me about that!" Feng beamed at them. "All right then, as a token of trust, you're welcome to examine the excess. Great Aunt Zheng made some handy modifications and honestly, I'm kind excited about Dr. Ziegler getting to look at them. You're quite the expert!"

Angela just nodded warily. "You know the ethics of these modifications are extremely questionable. I can't promise I will be able to reverse any detrimental side effects I encounter."

Feng nodded vigorously. "But you're like the second-best expert in the world. So I don't mind you giving me a second opinion." She paused. "I realize that sounds insulting, but I am morally and politically obligated to say Great Aunt Zheng is the best expert in the world ever. I hope you understand."

"...I won't lose any sleep over it," Angela said dryly.

"I'm so glad," Feng beamed. "Sleep is important. I haven't slept in three days."

"Because you're so very excited about our impending alliance?" Lacroix asked.
"No, because that asshole keeps trying to kill me," she said, jerking her head at Fa Hai. "I mean, he's slick about it, can't prove it obviously, but we all know it's you."

Ms. LaRue sighed. Mr. Li facepalmed.

"I am sorry that you feel that way, little Zhai," Fa Hai said with great dignity. "And I am sorry that our hosts must witness your ludicrous behavior. You are embarrassing our clan."

"No, I'm embarrassing you, and I don't give a fuck," she said brightly shaking her finger at him. "Keep sending your assassins, buddy. I'll keep returning what left of them in cute little wrapped packages tagged with clever, yet passive-aggressive notes. I just bought out the official Shanghai Sanrio stationary shop. I am prepared to do this all fucking year."

Fa Hai blanched. "You are insane. I have no desire to receive your grisly trophies like some kind of bizarre courtship ritual."

"You wish," she snorted. "I just don't like people trying to kill me when I'm in the bath," Feng said, and you felt a strong pang of empathy.

"I am not responsible for all the people you have angered--"

"You were adopted," Feng said, sounding like a very smug eight year old, and you weren't sure if she was joking or not. From what you could tell, Fa Hai wasn't actually adopted. She was just being a snot.

Fa Hai turned an ugly shade of red. "You are a disgrace and if left unchecked will lead us to ruin," he hissed in Cantonese. Your Cantonese was shit, but Athena was giving real-time translations in everyone's communicators. "Your family was right to abandon--"

"Young Zhai-" Mr. Li began.

"Mr. Fa," Ms. LaRue said sharply.

"Look here Fa," Feng's green eyes hardened and suddenly Fa Hai was dangling off the ground, Feng's left hand around his neck, his eyes wide. He was taller than her, but she lifted him with ease. She bared her teeth at him, looking less like a manic cheerleader and more like a rabid fox.

"Ms. Zhai-" Mr. Li started, but she only had eyes for Fa Hai.

"I humor you, because I liked your aunt. I haven't killed you yet, because I liked your aunt. I tolerate your shitty, chauvinistic, passive-aggressive comments, because I liked your aunt. But that isn't going to save you if you keep crossing me. You can talk about tradition and face all you want, but at the end of the day, I am the heir. I have Great Aunt Zheng's blessing. And I am the one who tore apart those goddamn blood-traitors and avenged your Aunt Wei. Don't mistake my mercy for weakness, Fa. You've used up all your chances. So it would behoove you to remember that you live by my whims. Be grateful that I am so damn whimsical."

There was a long, awkward silence, and you were beginning to understand that this was a common occurrence when Feng got to talk.

"Also, you wear too much perfume. It's giving me a headache. You should listen to Ms. LaRue when she tells you "cologne should be discovered, not announced." You're like, rage-screaming it into a megaphone at the library. Nobody wants to deal with that. What are you, thirteen?" She dropped him abruptly, flopping her right hand to wave away the scent. She glanced up at Jack, all smiles again. "Sorry about the scene. We're still sorting out rank. Eventually, he'll get it. Or he won't." She shrugged.

You discreetly sniffed the air, and had to agree with her assessment of Fa Hai's smell. Just like you agreed with Lacroix's assessment of Feng's probable short reign.

"You are insane," Fa Hai rasped.

"No, I have ADHD. And no more patience for your dog shit." The last sentence came out firm and measured, her eyes cold. "Now shut up and go sit in the corner. You're only here as a witness. No one cares what you think." To your surprise, Ms. LaRue shepherded Fa Hai to a chair on the other side of the room, against the wall.

"Well, that was illuminating," Lacroix said as Mr. Li pulled out a disc the size of a bagel. He pressed a button.

"She's here," Athena said in your ear. Her voice was calm, it didn't even wobble. But you felt her dread.

"That's a lot smaller than last time," Captain Amari said.

"Well, it was an older model. We weren't sure how you were going to react." Feng shrugged. "And it had some extra security measures that friends don't need."

You hadn't seen the tech write-up for the projector, but maybe you'd look after this. She'd claimed it had used ambient backscatter to get around Overwatch's security net. But you hadn't followed up.

"Feng, you didn't kill Jing Wei's nephew, did you?" Zheng asked as soon as her hologram appeared beside the table.

"He's right there, in one piece," Feng said cheerfully. "See?"

Hanzo was watching Fa Hai. And Fa Hai glowered at Feng with undisguised hatred. Yes, there might be a regime change soon. You would have to see if you could get a more detailed workup of him. Or you could just go talk to him. Hmm.

"Is our donation to your satisfaction, Strike Commander?" Zheng inquired.

"Everything checks out," Angela said.

"Yes, it does, Ms. Zheng." Jack stood and drew a K-Bar knife. Before Angela could protest, he sliced his wrist deep, and blood dripped into the cup. You watched as the wound rapidly stopped bleeding, a little envious of his speedy healing.

"That isn't sanitary, Jack," Angela said tightly.

"I think Ms. Zhai and I are a little beyond that now," Jack said.

Feng winked. "I can't catch SEP-cooties from him, no matter how cool that would be."

"The terms of the contract are acceptable. Overwatch will enforce its edicts outside On Sing's direct sphere of influence. On Sing will refrain from engaging in blatant criminal activity and give quarterly reports about its technological advancement. And of course, there is room for mutually beneficial technological exchanges. You would retain the rights, however we would like exclusivity in combat tech," Lacroix said, and you raised a brow.

"Is that a requirement?" Zheng asked.

"A mutually-beneficial suggestion."

"I like that direction, Mr. Lacroix. We will consider it. On Sing may request Overwatch or Blackwatch protection in the event of...unpleasantness," Zheng said. "Not as hired security, but as sanctuary."

"Granted, as long as the petitioner has good standing with us," Jack said.

"Then the terms are accepted," Zheng said. "Feng."
Feng looked around the room. "Well, it's no peach garden, but it'll do." She picked up the cup and took a drink. She swallowed it impassively and handed the cup to Jack. Jack nodded and took a mouthful, the blood smearing his chin. He didn't gag, he just downed it and put the cup on the table, expression flat. They both wiped their mouths with the backs of the hands and Angela rolled her eyes, offering them napkins.

"Alliance sealed," Zheng said. "We'll be in touch, Strike Commander. I look forward to seeing what we can accomplish together." Her figure flickered out and you wondered just what kind of mess your bosses had gotten everyone into.

"So no offense, but can I get a drink now? Pretty please?" Feng asked. "This is not how I wanted to get a taste of the Strike Commander..."

"That's what I remember. Locations, dates, those are fuzzy. But methodology, I know, I lived through it."

"Context clues, Bái Shé. You had to have some idea what region you were in. Local celebrations. Food you ate. Languages spoken. Weather patterns. Pollution index. Bodies of water." Gabriel rattled off a list, not entirely interested in her answers. That data was all for the analysts. "I want to hear about Toronto."

He let her get warmed up, talking with a flow to her words. Then he pointed out her inconsistencies, real or inflated. "Was it two guards or three? Why can't you remember? You claim you killed them all. How do you know that if you can't even count?"

He questioned her into corners, turning seemingly innocent sentences into full-blown accusations. "What a coincidence that Talon happened to order you to murder that CFO whose company prosecuted you for hacking in your pre-Overwatch days. You think I don't see the connection?"

He tore apart her excuses, valid or not, and pushed her hard, trying to keep her off-balance, though not completely overwhelmed. "You might have warned Lucky, but you still showed them how to find her. Funny how that worked. You never did make it very clear whose side you were on. Brainwashing is such a convenient excuse. It certainly lets you avoid any responsibility for your actions."

He cycled through the methods, playing hardball the entire time. And then he did the same for Shanghai, Oslo, Cambridge, Singapore, and all the ops she tried to review. He grilled her mercilessly, because while on a rational level, he knew she was not culpable, on an intelligence gathering level, he needed to be thorough. And maybe it was just a little therapeutic to see her squirm. To her credit, she just gritted her teeth and tried to answer the questions, her temper occasionally flaring in short outbursts. That was fine, he didn't have to rush it. She would break down further, and he would be there, ready for the next step.

"I'm sure you've had a long day. Can I offer you some refreshment?" You asked, casually walking up to Fa Hai.

He narrowed his eyes at you. "Agent Strike. You are known to us, though perhaps not as such a gracious hostess. You have built quite a formidable reputation."

"You flatter me, Mr. Fa," you said, because you could lie through your teeth.

"And what do you think of this circus?"

"It's all very interesting," you said. "I'm taking it as a work-culture exchange."

Fa Hai stared at you.

"Would you like a drink? Maybe the facilities tour?"

"Unnecessary," he said after a moment.

"...I'm not trying to poison you," you said. "On Sing's internal politics are On Sing's internal politics. I'm curious, sure. But it's not my place to interfere."

Fa Hai continued to stare at you. "I see."

"Despite your differences, obviously you hold some sway in On Sing's power structure," you said smoothly. "What kind of policy advice will you be giving Ms. Zhai?"

Fa Hai sat back in his chair, his expression thoughtful. "I am happy with the alliance. I just don't like having a mentally unstable child in charge."

"Ah," you said, sympathetically. "I see."

"I am...a traditional thinker. We have a responsibility to our communities. We are better off not drawing the attention of outsiders." He stared past you, teeth clenched. "We need time to slowly rebuild our ranks."

"And then what?" Try to take over the world?

"The same as it's ever been, Agent Strike. We seek knowledge." Fa Hai waved his hand dismissively. "Politics are not our endgame. They are an unfortunate minefield we have to navigate."

"I know exactly what you mean," you said with a heavy sigh. "They get in the way of the real work."
Fa Hai nodded. "I suppose it's a universal problem."

"We aren't so different. I must say, On Sing has very impressive protocols for being such a low-key organization. Your ancestors' translation of form was definitely not something I ever expected to see. "Translation" was the best word we could come up with. There was some debate over the use of "sublimation," but the materials science people said it was grossly inaccurate and I didn't feel like fighting them. The nerds here are very dangerous."

"It is the same in On Sing. The engineers are...eccentric. Translation, incarnation, my ancestors don't seem too worried about terminology." Fa Hai shrugged. "They are powerful, but I worry that immortality will stagnate our work. Lady Zheng has always been focused, but I do not know if the human mind was meant to undergo such radical transformation. I am not...opposed per se, but I have reservations."

You nodded, trying to look pensive. "I am no philosopher, but I understand your point. Obviously, there are those here with the same reservations."

Fa Hai regarded for you a moment. "But you went ahead with the ceasefire anyway."

"Politics and practicality," you said with a shrug. "It makes sense in the long run to have less enemies. On Sing is impressive in its own right, and if it stays on the right side of the law, we have no qualms about leaving you to your own devices." That was a bit of a stretch, but you weren't here to actually argue with the man.

Fa Hai looked around the room. "Well, I have learned more than Feng has deigned to share with me. It has been most interesting Agent Strike. You should look me up if you're ever in Hong Kong again. I know a some excellent dim sum restaurants."

"So what do you think? You want to trade me for Fa? Or are you just checking out the cut of his jib?" Feng popped up behind you while you were washing your hands in the bathroom. "I guess he's OK looking. You just can't let him talk. He'll fucking nag your ear off about boring shit like personal image, adult responsibility, and stock options."

Feng began to soap her hands, her motions frenetic and too twitchy.

"I was curious about what your opposition looked like," you said.

"They're mostly like that. He's the worst. Thinks because he and my brother were childhood friends, that I should defer to his "mature judgment." Bah." She actually did the finger quotes, hands sudsy. "Anyway, he's not too crazy about Great Aunt Zheng digitalizing herself. Like he doesn't want her over his shoulder nagging him, which I kind of understand, because he keeps doing it to me!" She scowled fiercely, and you reached over for a towel to dry your hands. "I knew you were the type to wash your hands. Let me tell you, I have seen so many people who don't. You are good people, Lucky Strike." She stopped, rinsing off her hands as she reflected on your background. "Err...Well, you're sanitary at least."

"Says the lady who just drank a bunch of blood." Feng was amusing, but you weren't sure of her stability. And the fact she kept hitting on Jack... You weren't jealous, but Jack didn't like it one bit, and that put you on edge. You leaned against the sink, arms crossed.
"Yeah, that was gross." Feng nodded. "But it's official and it's an On Sing agreement, my name doesn't matter." Her smile twisted into something bitter. "So if something happens to me because of Fa, well, the alliance is still on. But I'm sure Mr. Lacroix already picked up on that."

"...Yeah," you said.

"I didn't want the job," Feng said. "But now I can't give it up, because there are too many vultures waiting to stab me in the back. So, I'm actually pretty good at running an ancient secret society. I won the war after all. I was a history major, you see. I have an eye for weakness. And I'm already spotting all kinds of hilariously unpleasant parallels." She sighed, shaking her head regretfully. "I'm talking your ear off, aren't I?"

"Every third sentence or so, you say something rather important. It's a good tactic to ensure someone's listening."

"Oh, sassy." Feng grinned at you, looking like an enthusiastic teenager. On some level, she reminded you a little of Lao. Lao ran at that speed, though she hadn't been quite as psychotic or tangential. "You have questions. Go ahead, hit me!" She paused. "With the questions. Not your fists. Please."

You snorted. "What kind of direction do you want to take On Sing in?"

"Greener energy, better omnic bodies, more responsible bio-engineering - none of that gorillas on the moon bullshit that Lucheng pulled, though Winston is super cool and I would poach him from you in a heartbeat. Like job poach, not "illegal hunting" poach. Because that's awful and oh shit, what a terrible word choice." Feng put a finger over her lips, brow wrinkling.

You blinked. "I understand what you meant."

"Great! Because I'm totally against trophy hunting. All that traditional medicine with the bear paws and rhino horns? That's bullshit and we don't do that kind of thing. In fact, I think we can probably shut down some of the Shanghai suppliers. It's all black market stuff and whose a bigshot in the underworld? ME! Plus, if I'm offering something better, people won't be going after cute wildlife for dubious cures. Which brings me to my next point."

You almost said "finally," but were too afraid of distracting her and sending her on another tangent.

"While I'm no doctor, we've been making some pretty cool advances on the medical front. Yes, I realize it stems from our questionably ethical fixation on bio-hacking and better living through genetic engineering, but still, it balances out. We have some pretty nifty things to prolong human life and the quality of it. But of course, the cousins still love making their experimental weapons. Well, we'll keep that up for a little while. I don't know how I want that to develop yet. The world is dangerous enough, you know? Maybe we could design the weapons, tie them up in a mess of patents, and only use them to test better defense systems." She tapped her cheek. "Yes, I'll look into that. Thanks for the idea. Anyway, I started White Rabbit Enterprises last week. We'll be focusing on human augmentation bio-tech." She flexed her arm. "You want a job?"

"No thanks," you said. "I've got business to take care of here."

Feng drooped a little. "Well if you know any SEP folks who want to moonlight, I'd guarantee their safety."

Which was cute, because you weren't sure Feng could keep herself alive.
"How does Fa Hai differ from you on the R&D front?"

"He's old school. Wants more weapons, weapons deals, and immortality through bio-tech. I'm not against that obviously, but he says he wants more knowledge when he just wants power. I like both, but I'm honest about it. And, I obviously have an end goal with cooler implications for humanity than his clichéd and dubiously mad scientist-style leanings."

"I see." She had a point, though Fa Hai seemed more stable. You wondered if a more altruistic bend from an ancient secret society could end well. Then you wondered why you were even entertaining the idea because Feng probably wouldn't survive the year.

"So, I heard you and Genji are kind of close. Is Hanzo still single?" She asked, batting her eyes at you.

"I don't know how he couldn't be. You realize he only has two expressions: constipated and slightly less constipated."

Feng burst out laughing. "I know. But he's not that bad of a guy, and I have a soft spot for grumpy slightly older men."

"He nearly killed Genji."

"But he didn't. And then he was really sorry. It takes a lot of work to admit when you're wrong and try to make up for it. I respect that," Feng said.

"I guess," you said, because that was an oversimplification of the situation. "It hasn't been a smooth road. And I can't tell if you're serious or just yanking his chain. You do remark on a lot of people's looks."

She gave a sheepish grin, scratching her cheek. "On that note, I know I should probably stop hitting on the Strike Commander. It just sort of slips out, you know? I don't mean anything by it...unless he's interested. But I never really got that impression. But I can't hit on anyone in On Sing territory; it'll either be misinterpreted as coercion or people will start talking about wedding bells. You should probably tell him that for me. Because when I'm around him, I just kind of start drooling and my social IQ drops twenty points, maybe more. I'm definitely too dumb to gauge it accurately."

That explanation lessened your annoyance a smidgen. You could empathize. But you weren't going to share that observation with the head of a Triad clan. "You should stop anyway."

"You're right. I'll apologize. Or try to. While drooling." She shook her head. "Not that he'll believe me at this point."

"Just tell him what you told me. Maybe read off the apology instead of looking at him in all his glory?" You tried not to sound sarcastic. You failed.

"...You're a genius." Feng nodded emphatically, apparently not caring about your tone. "I should have asked for your advice sooner. OK, so here's another one. Is Genji single?" She watched you carefully, big green eyes wide. "Because if he's not, I'm not going to make jokes about hitting on him."

It took you a moment to make the connection. You wondered how that rumor made it all the way to the On Sing. You'd have to talk to Lacroix and maybe Hanzo. "Are you looking to arrange an Overwatch alliance marriage?" You asked, even though you were damn sure no such thing existed.
"No! I guess I heard you might be friends with the Shimada brothers and maybe you could give me some insight."

You stared up at the ceiling, praying for rescue. Maybe Athena would page you. Or Captain Amari would come and ask if you fell in. Or someone would start shooting.

"C'mon, throw a girl a bone!"

"I don't think Hanzo is in the place to be dating. He's got an imperial shit ton of issues and has to sort those out before he can be a decent friend. Genji's a little better off, but..." You shrugged. "They have a lot of baggage."

"Yeah, organized crime as a family business really screws you up." Feng made faces in the mirror. "I figured we could bond over shared experiences. Like accidentally walking in on your uncle killing someone, and getting told it was all your imagination, and why would you make something like that up, you disturbed little brat? Then finding the bloodstains on your Pokémon pajamas and getting really mad at everyone for gas-lighting you. Plus, I bet he'd have some tips about reigning in the grumpy old men and reshaping an organization in your own image. Maybe not, now that I say this all out loud. Oh well. He is pretty to look at."

"You do realize Fa Hai is also a grumpy, slightly older man."

"Yeah. He's pretty too. Why do you think he's still alive?"

"I heard it was because you're whimsical and you liked his aunt."

"Oh, true. Mostly that. I would never date him though. He's too much of an ass. Sorry, no peacemaking through that route." She tapped her chin. "So, did you learn what you need to know, Lucky Strike?"

"I think so," you said.

Feng gave you a long, measured look, no mirth on her face. "Well, I guess I'm going to have an interesting year."

"Best of luck to you," you said, and were surprised that you meant it.

---

"I started tracking Hanzo Shimada in Singapore. My mission was to bring him in as soon as we had a clear shot. He was to be alive and preferably unharmed. It was never a solo operation. I worked in conjunction with the other cyborgs. Most of the ones coming out of Hanoi are under no coercion, though some have a few...mental modifications to make them more compliant."

Gabriel's lips twisted. "Go on."

"When I reported he was in Switzerland, my handlers panicked. They did not want him collaborating with Overwatch." Bái Shé slumped in her chair, hair limp, face drawn.

Gabriel had been at this for hours, but he took no breaks. This last recollection was the most important. He would make his recommendations based on the data and the veracity of the testimony here.
"I didn't expect to see you or Lucky there." Bái Shé's eyes were closed, her reading stable. "I recognized you. You're listed as "capture alive" in my protocols. But my handlers never thought I would be up to the task."

"Are you?" Gabriel asked.

"Do you want to find out?" Bái Shé scowled, her belligerent expression taking ten years off her face. For a moment, Gabriel recognized her as a kid, and then he quashed the thought.

"We both know you're not," Gabriel smirked.

She struggled with the insult for a moment and finally shrugged it off. "It's not a theory I want to test."

"A pity. I'm just waiting for you to give me a reason," Gabriel said softly.

Bái Shé paled, her lips pressed tightly together. She wasn't shaking yet, but another thinly-veiled threat would do the trick.

Gabriel forced himself to show some restraint. Terrorizing the terrorist was well and good, but he needed her talking, not curled up in a ball crying, again.

"Well, go on then."

Bái Shé took a deep breath. "As I was saying, I didn't expect to see Lucky. So far I'd been able to damage most of the recordings of our conversations. Pass it off as combat collateral. I'd claimed her name was "Lucky Shot," and contacted her via an old email address with no identifying meatspace markers. I had other ways, but I will admit, the memory degradation came in handy. I don't remember her real name. I don't know if that's because of the damage I've taken, or if it's because we all just called her "Lucky Strike." I suspect it's a mix of both."

Gabriel leaned back resting his chin in his hand. "Were you really friends with her? Because looking through your files, I was left with the distinct impression you had a thing for Lieutenant Sato."

Bái Shé flushed a deep shade of scarlet.

"I realize you were sleeping with the late Agent Valdez, but you certainly had a lot of pictures of the handsome lieutenant." Gabriel held up a shot of Lieutenant Sato drinking and laughing.

"He never- I didn't- Nothing ever happened!" She said, voice going high.

"Because Lucky was in the picture. From all accounts, he was quite enamored with her. Love at first sight, or so I hear. But then I have to wonder just how that made you feel."

Bái Shé took a few shuddering breaths. "It was a crush. That's it. He only saw me as a kid."

"What about Agent Valdez?"

"Well, I wasn't a little kid," Bái Shé blurted out. "And it wasn't some fucked up "try to make Shin jealous" ploy. Yeah, Shin was a rock star. But Julio was good for me. He was gentle and calming." Her lower lip began to tremble. "And I loved them both and they're all dead now. Why does this even matter?"
"What about Lucky? Do you love her?"

"Yes," Bái Shé snapped. "I loved all my squadmates."

"Mmm, funny reading there." Gabriel skimmed the neural signals output Athena provided, a more precise polygraph than he normally got from unaltered humans. "Did you really love Lucky Strike? Because I believe it for Sato and Valdez. Maybe even the rest of your squad. But your feelings for Lucky aren't so clear cut." Gabriel smiled tightly. "After all, you did try to kill her."

Bái Shé was silent, her teeth worrying at her bottom lip hard enough to draw blood.

"Do you hate her? Just a little?" Gabriel teased. "Come on, there's no point in lying to me, Bái Shé. My AI is in your spine, interrupting your circuits and giving me the most interesting readings. Way more accurate than the usual biometrics. And of course, I've seen your treacherous kind before. I know how you think. You do hate her."

"I don't," Bái Shé said tightly.

"Lie," Gabriel taunted, enunciating very slowly.

"I didn't," Bái Shé amended. "It wasn't some scorned woman thing. I loved Lucky. I mourned her. I mourned them all."

"But...?"

"She wasn't dead. And she fucking left me with them, Commander. She saw me several times before Lucerne. She should have saved me or killed me then. She shouldn't have made me go back. They just kept tinkering with my mind. They just kept making me forget whom I was. And she just kept on promising me that it would be all right. And it's not fucking all right, is it Commander? That bitch lied to me; it's not going to be all right. It will never be all right."

Gabriel regarded her with a carefully neutral. "So you hate Lucky?"

"Yes, I hate her, and I love her, and I can't fucking stand it. Maybe it's the kill order. Maybe my mind and feelings bent to justify the orders. I don't know any more. They programmed her death as the second highest protocol, Gérard Lacroix is primary. That was the level of combat expertise they placed me at."

She could have given Gérard a run for his money, but Gabriel suspected she would have failed. Lao Yue had not been talented in close combat. The augmentations made her stronger and faster, but she lacked the skill, reflexes, and viciousness he'd recognized in Aishani, Sato, and you.

"Do you hate Lacroix?"

"I don't know him. I don't have any feelings for him. So it makes me think that maybe you're right. Maybe it's me. I know I'm not trustworthy, sir. I know I'm a mess. But I've admitted it already. I've never denied it. That has to count for something."

"Tell me, what would you do if I left the two of you alone? Would you finish the job?" Gabriel asked, keeping his tone soft.

"Don't do that," Bái Shé said quickly. "Don't even think about doing that."

"But you hate her. What does it matter? You already stabbed her once. How hard would it be to try again? Maybe this time you'd do the job right."

Bái Shé closed her eyes, tears starting to streak down her face. "Maybe I would. So you better not send her in here. You better keep her far away from me. Unless you want her dead, Commander."

"I'll keep that in mind," Gabriel said, after a long pause. "Well then. Tell me more about Hanzo Shimada..."

Chapter End Notes

Have to schedule a phone interview with a company in a city an hour and a half away.
Maybe I'll have to move, but at this point, I'm a little desperate and from what I hear, they do offer work from home options.

Been massively productive on the fic and am approaching the rough count of 390k.
Yeesh.

Bought Final Fantasy XV the Royal Edition, but haven't had time to play it because apparently I just write stories and stare at tumblr like some kind of zombie. Blargh.
Chapter 45

Chapter Summary

Operation Spinshot is live.

Chapter Notes

Yumi has been busy with civilian outfits.

Edit: Thanks Undead Artist for the Swedish correction. Errors are all my own.

See the end of the chapter for more notes

"You will need to know how to play baccarat, Chanceux," Lacroix said, rubbing his forehead. "And while your cheating is surprisingly good, casinos have far better defenses than private individuals."

"Uh-huh," you said, gathering up the rest of Lacroix's cigarettes. He probably had more somewhere, but you had accumulated a nice little stash. Your cleverness had been extra rewarded today.

Lacroix frowned, and studied the cards, trying to figure out how you'd done it. "Deal again."

And so you won his cufflinks too. After that, he stopped playing.

Which was fine. You were getting tired of his sulky looks. And it certainly wasn't the same as smacking him in the face.

The two of you waited in hotel room in Cologne. Ziv was working from another hotel, digitally stalking Hoffman's retinue. It'd be another day or so of feeling out their patterns before you'd make your move. So far, the intel had been good with no surprises, except for the part where you and Lacroix had to share a room. The hotel had been overbooked - a side effect of the home soccer game. Fortunately, there were two beds, and while you didn't like sharing space with the older man, this was a mission and the two of you were professionals.

You just wished he didn't sing in the shower. Or take an hour to get dressed, even though he was supposed to be keeping a low profile. Or make endless suggestions about your personal upkeep. "No, Chanceux, untuck that shirt, you look like your puritanical maiden-aunt still dresses you. No, Chanceux, those shoes with that outfit make you look like a clod-hopping peasant. Mon dieu, Chanceux, you cannot be seen in public wearing that..."

You were free to wander Cologne during the day, keeping tabs on Hoffman's team and touching base with Ziv. In fact, you were the only one anonymous enough. But Lacroix was getting antsy back in the room. He was too recognizable and so he had to limit his exposure to the public. Rationally, you couldn't blame him for acting out. Emotionally, you were out of patience.
By the fourth night, you lay on your back, contemplating holding a pillow over his face. You could make it quick and it would look like natural causes...

"Stop plotting," Lacroix muttered from his bed. He sounded drowsy, but you knew better than to ever believe that his guard was down. Still, if he was sleepy, he might be a little more honest with you.

"How do I win arguments with Amélie?"

"You don't," Lacroix murmured. "You persuade her to see your perspective and make an appeal to her better nature. The moment you try to make it contest or a battle, you lose. Even if you win, you lose."

You lay there, wondering if that just applied to Amélie or people in general. It was good relationship advice, better than you expected from a psychopath like Lacroix. In retrospect, you could see where Jack had been applying that principle. There might have been a few times when you even did it by accident. Shin had been excellent at such maneuvers.

"Amélie is very...forceful. And while her intentions are usually good, sometimes she can be overwhelming." You could hear the smile in his voice. "For example, if you were done shopping for clothing, squirming uncomfortably like a petulant child did nothing to make your case. Instead, you could have suggested taking an intermission for drinks or cake."

"...You suck," you told him.

"I am not the one who has trouble expressing herself and then inconveniences others by making them guess what she wants."

You pursed your lips, and eyed your pillow. No, you weren't going to pillow fight Lacroix, not considering how your last one ended. And while your pistol was under one of them, they made mediocre silencers, too flammable. "I was just along for the socializing. And the cake."

"Your restraint is admirable, but not conducive to good communication. How do you handle your lovers when you can't even say what you dislike?"

"That's really personal," you scowled, turning your head. "I tell them if I don't like something."

"Then maybe you aren't completely feral," Lacroix said. "Being too reticent is just as irritating as being too demanding. In case you were wondering."

"How do you manage to be both?"

"Skill," Lacroix laughed, sleepily. "You are learning, Chanceux. Slowly, but surely. I realize you are unused to a certain level of...affluence. I will repeat Amélie's advice, and remind you that poise is key. If you act like you belong, very few will try to tell you otherwise."

You stared up at the ceiling. "Maybe I don't want to belong there. Glittering people with their first world problems and safety bubbles. I have problems, sure, but I like who I am. I don't ever want to be like them."

"Maybe you are just afraid of change," he countered. "Because you are right. You do not belong in the world of wealthy oligarchs, corrupt government officials, and jet-setting trust fund babies. But you have to visit and blend in if you want to do your job. There is nothing wrong with growth, Chanceux. And if you are making good decisions, then perhaps you shouldn't worry about what you are evolving into."

When Lacroix waxed philosophical, you just tuned him out. Wait a minute. You wrinkled your nose. "Have you been drinking?"

"I may have packed a particularly aromatic Bordeaux, and drank it rather than try to play another round of crooked card games with you."

"And you didn't offer me any?"

"Your palate isn't refined enough to appreciate it and we both know it. Also, I drank it all before you returned."

"I didn't realize you were that bored," you said.

"How could I ever be bored with you, Chanceux?" He asked so dryly you wanted to throw something at him.

"...What aren't you telling me?" Because you had been on ops with Lacroix before. He was never this anxious. Granted, you hadn't shared a room with him either, so there was that.

"Mmm, you suggested I assign someone to guard Ziv, considering he is working solo."

You rubbed your forehead. "And?"

"Amélie volunteered. I did not want her to leave Zurich, not after what happened, but I suppose I was unable to make her see my perspective and appeal to her better nature." He laughed dryly. "The two of them traveled here together and seem to be fine."

You immediately thought of half a dozen things that could have or could still go wrong. Talon ambushes, vigilant cyber defense networks, Amélie and Ziv deciding that they were going to duel for Lacroix... "Goddamnit, now I won't be able to sleep either!"

"Oh, I will be able to sleep. Obviously, that is why I drank the entire bottle, Chanceux. How will you get to sleep? That is your affair."

You went out for breakfast, leaving a snoring Lacroix in the room. You didn't even draw on his face, though the temptation had been strong. Instead, you went down to the bakery on the corner and bought some fresh pastries and coffee. You picked a few random ones for Lacroix to choose from, despite knowing that he would be too finicky to eat them, and headed back to the hotel.

When you got back to the room, Lacroix was already dressed, his suit impeccable, his hair well-groomed. You set his coffee on the table and helped yourself to an apple-filled pastry pocket.

"I think I've had enough of Cologne," Lacroix said, not touching the food. "The conference has begun, and Hoffman will be out and about."

You nodded. "All right. I'll hit the streets then." You put in your earpiece and slipped on the contact lenses for tracking vapor trails and UV tracers. Spotting for Lacroix required different gear than a military sniper-spotter team. You had an anemometer attachment built into one of your prostheses. It measured wind speed, air pressure, angle, and other metrics closer to the objective to give Lacroix's targeting program better feedback. Captain Amari could make the shot with iron sighs and no tech. Lacroix used trajectory projection software. It was still too slow for the battlefield, taking up to half a minute to calculate and calibrate. But for a single assassination? It would work very well.

Instead of hanging over his shoulder, you would be on the ground, giving a second point of reference. The crowds in the streets made this a trickier op, and the closer you were to the target, the more accurate metrics you could provide the program. If this were a combat zone, getting that close would be a risk, but as it was just a trade conference in a peaceful city, you weren't worried.

"This is callsign Wolf. Spinshot is live. Recluse?"

"On my way out," you said, slinging your bag over your shoulder.

"Trapdoor?"

"About time," Ziv muttered. "Jammers ready. Chaff countermeasures ready. Trace-blocks live. Trajectory software has been updated, should you need the assist, boss. Bolas is in position. Her comms are turned off for signal reasons. Too much interference with the encrypted systems, the trajectory software, and her rifle's aiming tech."

So she was bodyguard and backup sniper. The risk to your support party worried you, but if you and Lacroix did the job right, Ziv and Amélie would be fine. She was there as a precaution, nothing more. Lacroix was meticulous in his planning and that reassured you.

The KölnKongress convention center stretched over a large swathe of land, offering picturesque gardens, fountains, and multiple exhibition halls. You strolled around the grounds, admiring the view, and drinking coffee. The air was brisk and the sun bright. Spring was coming and you welcomed the relief from the biting cold.

Lacroix would be leaving the hotel. Ziv and Amélie would be changing positions, as well. All you had to do was wait. Lacroix had already mapped out the route back to Hoffman's hotel. The convention center had wide open spaces and subtly-placed kinetic dampening barriers. Lacroix wanted to do the hit away from their security measures. The world shimmered briefly and time froze, a mild shielding effect that most Germans seemed used to, and then you were through them. You shook it off and continued toward the hotel.

"Her panel is done. She is returning to her hotel for lunch," Ziv said. "The entourage has more members than expected, but as long as they don't crowd her, you should be good."

"Almost in position, Trapdoor," Lacroix sounded distant.

"In position, Wolf," you told him, sitting down on a bench. It was chilly, but the sun was bright and you surveyed the area, noting the large crowds of suits. You wrapped a bland navy scarf around your lower jaw, because your anonymity was getting harder to maintain.

You'd arranged the timing of the hit to avoid the lead up to the soccer game, and while there were still a lot of people out, the density was in the Goldilocks Zone. Not so many that you risked collateral damage, but not so few that you would stick out; the amount of people was just right. You were pleased with the results. As much as you hated to admit it, having a team could make things run so much smoother, especially for a more complicated assassination.
You spotted one of her omnic guards. It was taller than you, but dressed in a well-tailored suit. Sipping your coffee, you tucked your ungloved left hand in your sleeve. Waiting thirty seconds, you casually rose, staring out at the Rhine river. Hoffman and her entourage passed by you then, the woman smiling thinly at something one of her companions said.

You yawned and checked your phone. "Eyes on the target."

"You are within my sight, Recluse."

"Well, that's uncomfortable," you said, taking another drink of coffee.

Ziv just snickered.

You began to meander behind them, absently studying your phone. "Readings coming through OK?"

"No, you need to expose the sensors more," Lacroix said, and you rested your left hand on the back of your head, fingers out. "Better."

"If you tell me to pat my head and rub my tummy I'm just going to leave," you said, discretely raising your middle finger.

"Recluse, who taught you those kinds of gestures?" Lacroix laughed.

"What do you mean? I'm just measuring wind speed with my longest finger."

You made a few route adjustments, not outright following Hoffman's party. Instead you stayed parallel to their route and took a slightly illegal jaywalking shortcut to beat her back to the hotel. It was good to be back in the field. Straight forward combat wasn't your forte and while the day spa incident had been deemed an Overwatch success, you would rather avoid such scenarios indefinitely.

This kind of thing? This was your specialty: ambush attacks, escape routes, subverting security. Even the logistics of picking hotels, accessing potential sniper nests, and finding decent food for your stay, these were all things you accounted for when you planned an op. You might never charge into battle dual wielding shotguns or wearing power armor, but you had this, and you were proud of it. And you could really appreciate all the attention to detail that Lacroix demanded. Because you were prepared for a lot of eventualities.

Just not this one.

He stood there, hands tucked in his pockets, wearing a navy blue suit. The women beside him were dressed up too. One wore a white suit, her motions military-taut. Her companion was the opposite, slouched and relaxed in a green dress, and you swore vehemently under your breath.

And then he looked over, those deep blue eyes falling on you, and even with your face covered, even across the street, he caught you staring and he fucking recognized you, because he was goddamn perceptive when he wanted to be.

"Wolf, we have a problem," you whispered as Jack narrowed his eyes, and muttered something in Jemison's ear.

"...I see that, Recluse. Trapdoor?"

"Well, shit-"
"I've been made," you said, fighting the urge to turn on your heel and run. Instead, you, subtly shook your head, willing him to stay away.

"By someone on our side. Conditions are good. Just hang tight," Ziv said.

"Idiot," you hissed, as Jack broke away from his guards and made a beeline for you. "We don't want him on the damn scene if we're doing this," you scowled.

"Maybe you should distract him," Ziv said snidely.

"Maybe you should shut up," you snapped.

"These things happen," Lacroix said, tone even. "If I took the shot now, the angle would be far from optimal. We can always start over."

Hoffman emerged from another path, and took one look at Jack and began to approach. Of course. Of fucking course.

"Our angle is good."

"What?" You gripped your coffee tightly, as Jack walked up to you, his expression questioning. "Trapdoor, abort!" You made eye contact with Jack, gritting your teeth behind the scarf. Why hadn't he just ignored you? What the hell was he thinking approaching you on an op?!

"You might want to duck," Ziv said cheerfully. That little shit-

"Down!" You snarled, as Jack opened his mouth to greet you. You lunged forward, shoving him onto the pavement even as a series of shots rang out. You kept yourself over him, arm shooting out to cushion his head. The rifle rounds cracked like thunder. Pistols returned fire. There was a lot of screaming, both from the wounded and the civilians.

"Trapdoor!" And it was the first time you'd ever heard Lacroix raise his voice at Ziv.

"We're fine! Target definitely eliminated." Ziv said, his voice shaky. "Activated chaff and jamming. Signals disruption holding. And we're off. Wolf?"

"Later," Lacroix said tightly. "Just move. Recluse, you stick with the Strike Commander. We'll regroup at home." The comms cut out, but you were pretty sure Jack had heard some of that.

You stared down at Jack, who wasn't looking at you any more, but the bloody remains of Hoffman's entourage. "You OK, sir?"

"Agent," he said, exhaling sharply. "Get off me."

"Sorry, sir," you said, and stood, offering him your hand. He ignored it and stood, his suit torn and hair mussed. An expression of pure fury twisted his features when he saw Hoffman's confetti-skull splattering the streets. There was a lot of blood, and while Amélie hadn't killed the entire entourage, the ones that were struck would not be getting back up. It would have been a perfect hit except-

You were breathing hard when he turned that look on you, his eyes glacial, jaw tight, fists clenched. You almost took a step backward. "Goddamnit agent, is this what it looks like?"

"I don't know," you said, pretty sure that it was.
You stayed with Jemison and Shoal, watching Jack's back as he handled law enforcement. Their questioning was all just a formality, but having to stand here and be scrutinized still made your spine twitch.

"You couldn't have just tipped us off that someone was after Hoffman?" Jemison groused out of the corner of her mouth. "He's been courting her on the downlow for weeks, almost had an alliance formed. Today's little foray into the trade conference was an excuse to formalize the agreement."

"I had no idea," you said truthfully. You were very grateful that you'd left the scarf around your face. The police officers kept giving you strange looks, but no one actually tried to speak to you.

"Yeah, someone's decided Epsilon Squad would make a great political pawn," Shoal sighed in your ear and you felt a very heavy twinge of guilt. "Rich Bitch was supposed to be a good counterbalance to Petr- the political shit."

_Dog-kicking, cake-thieving, motherfucking whoreson._ What a goddamn clusterfuck. How did you missed that? What a perfect example of compartmentalized UNintelligence. Did Lacroix know? How had _he_ missed that? Unless he knew and didn't tell the rest of you...

Anger welled up inside you. Because Ziv had fucking ignored orders, putting Jack at risk. Because Lacroix might be playing you. Because Jack should have said something, anything about the kind of politics he was dabbling in. If he'd just said who he was working with. If you'd just told him who your target was...

Well, no matter whose fault this cock up was, it was too late to do anything about that now. Fuck.

"Well, at least you were here to cover the Strike Commander. I'm glad you were here, and he probably is too, even if he's too pissed about Hoffman to show it," Shoal said. "He didn't tell us you were providing backup."

You could taste the guilt in the back of your throat. You just shrugged. "I'm not his favorite person at this moment."

Shoal shrugged. "I was in Belfast. I remember. You should be used to that by now." She nudged you with her elbow. "So you really killed all those cyborgs wearing nothing but a towel?"

"I had a bathrobe on for the first two," you sighed.

"I only saw the video of the last one," Shoal said. "Everyone has."

You rubbed your forehead, wishing the earth would swallow you up. "I was just trying to have a relaxing day out."

Jemison gave you a skeptical look. "A relaxing day out with Captain Amari?"

"...OK, so I was terrified for most of it," you said. "But they offered me cake and wine. How could I refuse?"
Shoal just laughed. "Oh come on, you can tell us the truth, we know better than that."

Jemison snorted. "You know, Strike, I am starting to dread your presence on ops. Nothing personal, but when you show your face, I know everything's about to go tits up."

"She likes you just fine outside of work," Shoal added quickly.

You opened your mouth to comment, but silenced yourself as Jack brushed by the three of you. His face was hard and when his eyes fell on you, his jaw twitched. He snapped his head forward, shoulders squared and stalked toward the hotel.

"...Oh he's pissed," Shoal said, giving a low whistle.

"Shut up and stay close," Jemison growled and the three of you fell in behind him.

The four of you took an Overwatch transport to Zurich. Jack ignored you the entire ride. Which was kind of a relief, because you did not need Shoal and Jemison to witness the chewing out you were going to get. You might have even deserved it. You weren't sure right now. Because you wanted to strangle Ziv. Or Lacroix. Maybe both.

You spent the trip in an uncomfortable silence, occasionally sneaking glances at Jack. But he was staring hard at the walls. He sat hunched over, hands fisted in his lap. Shoal shot worried looks between the two of you when she thought you weren't paying attention. Jemison sat with her eyes shut, doing the soldier's rest, not quite asleep, but almost.

Your knee bounced silently and you tapped your fingers against your thigh. Jack did not look up and you stared at the ceiling unsure of what you were going to tell him. Because hopefully, Ziv's false flag would hold and no one would look twice at Overwatch. Though someone might have to explain what Jack was doing in Cologne. And what if Petras found out that Jack was trying to use Hoffman to outmaneuver him? Because that would be bad.

Fuck. You'd all botched this one. Even with all your goddamn meticulous planning, you'd somehow missed that someone else was already working the Hoffman angle. Or you'd missed that Lacroix was muddying the waters. Or you'd missed that Ziv was two steps away from going rogue. Because that's what he'd done and he'd dragged Amélie with him. How much could you cover for him? How much could you mitigate this? You closed your eyes, the fear turning your stomach.

Focus. Panicking did nothing useful. It was time to plan contingencies. You would have to see how the dice fell, and react accordingly.

"Jemison, Shoal, you're dismissed. If you have anything useful to add about today's events, add it to your write-ups; black ops rules apply," Jack said tautly, as the shuttle landed. "Agent Strike, my office. Immediately."

Shoal gave you a weak smile. Jemison shook her head and they left you behind. Again.
You followed behind Jack, noting the tears in the elbows of his suit. You glanced up at a monitor as you walked through the cafeteria and blanched. They were playing footage of the assassination, your figure clearly shown tackling Jack to the ground. Fuck. Fuck. Fuck. How did it all go so wrong?

"Athena, let me know the moment Lacroix and Mihret return to base," Jack said as you walked down the halls.

"They have just arrived," Athena said.

"Direct them to my office."

Jack opened the door and you followed him in.

"Sit," he ordered.

"Jack, I-"

"Not a word, agent," he growled, slamming the door shut.

You swallowed and sat down in front of his desk.

He moved behind you and you could hear the rustle of fabric as he began to change out of his ruined suit. You kept your gaze ahead, unsure of what you could say to make of this better. Jack wasn't your Jack right now. He was the Strike Commander and you were a Blackwatch agent whom he caught running an assassination op on a goddamn UN General Assembly member.

What were the fucking odds?

The Strike Commander sat down at his desk, coat over his uniform. He stared at the wall past your head, stance still rigid.

You kept your gaze on your lap, your metal fingers remaining exposed from measuring wind speeds. Sitting still was maddening, but you weren't sure you wanted Lacroix to arrive either. Because things were going to get messier. It was agony, waiting through this awkwardness for something worse to happen.

The door opened and you sat up straight, head whipping over your shoulder.

Lacroix walked in, jacket draped over his arm, looking pale. His mouth was downturned and he sat down beside you, taking a deep breath and sitting rigidly. Ziv trailed behind, his shoulders slumped. He quietly shut the door and rubbed his face, not making eye contact with you.

"Athena, full privacy mode," Jack said, proving that he knew that it existed.

"Understood."

Jack steepled his hands, his steely gaze on Lacroix.

"What happened in Cologne, Gérard?" Jack asked, his voice dangerously soft. "Because Gabriel or Ana would have told me if you'd applied for any authorization to work there."

Lacroix exhaled slowly. "Operation Spinshot." He pulled the files out from under his jacket and fanned them across Jack's desk.

Jack silently picked up the files, brows knitting together while he read Hoffman's dossier, the mission objectives, and the reasoning behind the op. He stood up abruptly, picking up your mission plan and reading it while he paced behind his desk.

You glanced overquestioningly at Lacroix. He just shook his head. Ziv stayed hunched over, his eyes glued to his shoes.

Lacroix touched his lips with two fingers, hand twisting palm up.

You shook your head. No, you hadn't said a thing.

Lacroix nodded, approvingly and you wanted to smack him.

"Did you take that shot, Gérard?" Jack gave him a hard look. "Because according to this layout, your angles were all wrong."

Lacroix sighed. "No, Jack. But I take full responsibility for the cock-up. It was my op."

"Who was the second shooter?"

"...Amélie," Lacroix said. "Her comm gear was faulty."

Jack casually dropped the files back on his desk, papers fluttering across the floor. The veins in his neck bulged and you resisted the urge to scoot backward. "And just what was Agent Mihret doing through all this? I somehow doubt Amélie was working alone, not after what just happened here in Zurich," Jack said, tone silky. He stood, feet shoulder-width apart, hands clasped behind his back.

The choreographed calm fooled no one: Jack was furious.

"Agent Mihret misinterpreted my instructions and told her to take the shot," Lacroix said.

Jack clenched his teeth. "Don't lie to me, Gérard."

"Agent Mihret made a mistake and told her to take the shot," Lacroix said, unflinching. "But it was my op, and I take full responsibility."

"Agent Mihret disobeyed a direct order and initiated the assassination a UN General Assembly member in broad daylight," Jack snarled. "Agent Mihret has long had issues with insubordination, and despite numerous reprimands, has not changed his unsuitable behavior. Agent Mihret, you are hereby dis-"

"Jack!" You were on your feet before you realized it. "Don't-"

"Sit back down, agent," Jack said coldly.

"Jack-"

"Stop. Talking." His voice dropped an octave. The Strike Commander leaned over his desk, eyes hard, his nose almost touching yours. "Sit your ass down."

"Operation Ray," you snapped at him, hands flat on his desk. It wasn't much, but it was all you had.

He narrowed his eyes at you. "That doesn't apply here and now you've really pissed me off," he said, voice so low you could feel it reverberating in your bones. "Don't think you're off the hook either."
A hand rested on your shoulder and you startled. You looked back to see Lacroix shaking his head.

"Strike Commander," Lacroix said, calmly "It was my operation and these two were under my command. Ultimately, I am the responsible party and I understand there are consequences. Now, they can write up whatever mission reports you need, but their presence isn't necessary for this."

"Don't try to take charge, Gérard. You don't have any ground to stand on right now," Jack snapped.

"I remember we talked about something like this on the deck of the USS Saratoga..." Lacroix gave a wry smile.

Jack's lips drew back in a snarl. "You really want to go there?"

"Do you remember that starless night? It was a new moon. All those burning omnic shells, sinking so rapidly that the steam fogged up the sky for miles around...?"

"Really, Gérard?" Jack glowered at him. "You think you can-"

"Mistakes were made. I do not contest that at all. But do you remember what you said to me that night?" Lacroix asked quietly. "I have never forgotten. Would you like me to recount that story in front of them?"

There was a long silence as Jack tucked his chin against his shoulder. His shoulders shook and you fought the urge to reach out, because you understood the gesture would be unwelcome. "You two, get out."

You threw a backward glance over your shoulder as Ziv grabbed your wrist and dragged you out of the office, Lacroix settled back down in his chair, looking like he didn't have a care in the world.

"You fucking idiot!" You snapped when you were a safe distance from Jack's office. "You goddamn moron! What the hell were you thinking?"

"I was thinking we'd come this far, how could we turn back now?!" Ziv said tightly. "I was thinking about all the shady shit she was doing behind the scenes and how much worse it would get if Morrison lent her any support."

You nearly slapped him. That was a rookie mistake. "We could have always gone back for her!" You growled. "You don't pull that shit in front of the goddamn Strike Commander."

"I wasn't thinking straight, all right? I fucked up. I didn't mean to." The last sentence came out soft. Ziv hunched over. "The boss already let me have it, OK? Like, he tore strips off me the whole ride back. Didn't even raise his voice, just mildly told me what a fucking disappointment I was, and how unreliable I was, and how he expected better, while Amélie sat there cleaning her guns. Morrison kicking me out would just be the icing on the cake."

"You self-pitying jackass! Jack won't be fucking mild or any kind of fluffy frosting! Jack is fucking furious." You looked around. "And I am too! That was a direct fucking order, Ziv. When you're on a goddamn op, like there in the flesh, you can't just ignore what we say! What if they'd had better tracking equipment? What if I was trying to warn you because it wasn't safe to carry out the next step? It wasn't just you at risk. Amélie is a priority target too."

"...Yeah, I know." Ziv's voice was low. "I know and I'm sorry. The boss walked me through all the possible outcomes, including the fact you'd do something stupid and get Morrison pissed at you too."

"He was already pissed," you said, pushing your hair back. "But this didn't help." You wondered if you should talk to Gabriel. Captain Amari would probably tear you a new one after she got done dissecting Lacroix and mounting Ziv's head on the wall.

"For the record, I am sorry," he said sullenly, looking away, arms crossed tightly.

"You don't sound like it and bad apologies just make people angrier. That includes me," you said, not quite ready to let this go. "Athena, where can I stash this idiot till Jack cools down?"

"I have no idea," Athena said after a moment. "Just like I have no idea what happens when my cameras get kind of fuzzy around Mr. Lindholm's lab."

"You can't just-" Ziv began.

"Are you with me or not Ziv?" You scowled. Because Lacroix was obviously calling in a big fucking favor with Jack, to fix things where you'd failed. That wasn't a guarantee that Ziv wasn't getting kicked out, but you would keep him out of sight till something could be done.

You led the way down to the lower levels, left hand gouging bruises in your palm.

"...You want me to what?" Torby boomed.

"Make him sweep the workshop floors. Make him cart scrap metal around the room. Make him cook for you. I don't care. I commend him into your tender, precise care. He just needs to be out of Jack's sight for another 48 hours or so," you said. "Athena probably can't track him here."

Ziv stared at the ground. "You don't have to. Seriously. I'll be fine. Lucky is overreacting."

"Talon has a bounty on your head. If you get kicked out, then they're going to scoop you up. Unless the Mossad pressgangs you first and given how efficiently Talon managed to infiltrate the DGSE, I don't think your odds are much better in Israel. You are full of delicious Blackwatch secrets, including Shit Spiders access. You helped develop our loveable AI, which is still a fucking high-tier secret. You are not going anywhere, Ziv. You said you were with me. Then shut up and stick with me!"

"...What did he do?" Torby asked, putting down the welding torch so he could hear you better.

You weighed your options.

"Tell me or I'll call Jack myself," Torby said, crossing his arms.
You rolled your eyes, because Torby had a lot of unpleasant traits, but he was not a snitch, a loudmouth maybe, but not the kind of guy to give you up. "You remember how someone tried to forcibly retire Rein?" You rubbed the back of your neck, wincing as your smile got really awkward.

"...How could I forget?" Torby scowled.

"Well, we killed her," you said brightly. "Unfortunately, Jack was there. And what we didn't know was that he wanted to make a political alliance with her against Petras. Plus, Jack knows Ziv was the one who ignored orders to abort the mission..." You rubbed the back of your neck.

Torby exhaled sharply. "You fucking dumskalle!" He broke into a stream of Swedish and while you were vaguely amused that Ziv had angered an evil dwarf engineer, you knew that didn't help matters. "You stupid eelhead! Now you've shit in the blue cupboard!"

Ziv stared blankly.

"You don't do that right in front of the goddamn Strike Commander, din jävla idiot!"

"Pretty much," you sighed. "Now Lacroix's trying to bargain Jack down, but it was the bitch that went after Rein."

Torby took a deep breath. "You better not tell him that he is the reason you did it." He glowered at both of you, tone hard.

"Fuck, I wasn't going to tell anybody, Torby," you said. "I was going to just check it off my list and keep doing what I do. You know, quietly. I like my work to stay discrete. I don't actually want to get ambushed at the sauna, stabbed at the bakery, or interrupted by Jack on my super secret ops."

"You have the stupidest bad luck for someone with your name," Torby told you.

"Yes, the irony is not lost on me," you agreed firmly. "So, I'd appreciate if you didn't tell Rein either. I wasn't going to advertise shit, but I'm desperate and this moron needs a place to hide while the shit storm blows over."

Torby crossed his arms. "Go make me some chili."

"And you'll keep Ziv hidden?"

"Or kill him myself," Torby muttered.

"OK," you agreed, because that was the most you could hope for.

"You any good at soldering, idiot?"

"...I'm not bad," Ziv said, hands still jammed in his pockets.

Torby uncrossed his arms. "Well he's fortunate I need the extra set of hands. He can stay. But if I have to work late with this idiot, I want that chili tonight."

"You know good chili needs to sit overnight, right?"

"Make me a big batch then," Torby said.
"Is Lacroix still in Jack's office?" You asked as you stirred the pot, adding more hot pepper.

"...Yes," Athena said.

"Shit." You closed your eyes. That was taking far too long. Jack was really fucking mad. Worst case scenario, you had ratlines and emergency bank accounts set up for Blackwatch agents. You'd planned Ziv's yourself. He had options.

"Has Gabriel been apprised of the situation?"

"...I cannot say."

"Understood." That meant yes. You were gaining a knack for understanding what Athena couldn't come out and state plainly. Was that a linguistic quirk? Was she learning crafty in-between-the-lines speech from spending so much time with Genji and you? You weren't sure, but you didn't have the time or inclination to really pursue that train of thought.

You tasted the chili. It needed more Worcestershire sauce. You kept stirring, trying not to think about just how angry Jack was. Gabriel's temper was hot, all curses and combustion that flared in a seconds and extinguished itself quickly, sometimes leaving behind vindictive burns. But you understood that Jack burned cold, his anger calculating, harsh thing. You'd only glimpsed it before today, and you had always known it was there, under his skin. But it had never been directed at you before, not like this.

"...I do not want the Strike Commander to send Ziv away," Athena said.

"Me neither." You tasted the chili again. It needed more hot pepper and maybe some honey. You added it, and packed up some bread and cheese. Cooking had become therapeutic, with the side bonus of winning you social capital with your comrades.

"What can I do?" Athena asked.

"I don't know," you admitted. "I'm still figuring out what I can do. You're limited by certain directives and Jack's pretty upset."

The news was reporting that the extremist Martel Liberation Front had been linked to the shocking and audacious shooting in Cologne today. Excellent. If Ziv had done a good job with the false flag that was one less thing to worry about. He could always go a step further and make backdoor ties to Petras from the funding of the MLF. Hoffman had been a rival after all. It was all circumstantial evidence, however, it would feed the conspiracy theorists for a few years.

Ziv couldn't get kicked out. Talon was after him. He was on Shit Spiders and an integral part of the team. He helped raise Athena. He was your awful, insubordinate, bratty hacker.

But Jack was really mad. And rightfully so.

You thought about all the ways you could mitigate this for Ziv. You did not think about how you were going to handle Jack, because you had no idea where to start.
When the chili finally tasted right, you packed it all up and carted it down the Torby's workshop.

Chapter End Notes

AO3 ate my last draft with my notes. Damnit. I have an event at work today, so wish me luck. We are understaffed and expecting a large crowd. I may have to hit people with chairs. I am promising myself cake.

Started FFXV, I like it. But I need to write, not game. RAWR.

My dogs are stupid and expensive. One has (probably benign) fatty tumor we have to get removed since it's growing. The other has a random bump that I suspect is a cyst. (All my dogs are related and one of his brothers had a cyst removed.) Not to mention Chocolate-devourer needs his glands expressed because I am not very good at it. Meh.

Phone interview is later this week and I panic during interviews. Phone ones I can usually do. Well, moving is under serious consideration. That city has a lot more opportunities, but the entire thing is anxiety-inducing. I would wait to get a new job, before moving. One step at a time, obviously.
Chapter 46

Chapter Summary

You have to deal with the fallout from Spinshot. Upon further investigation, it has become abundantly clear that your work life and personal life are not separate and haven't been for a long time.

Chapter Notes

See the end of the chapter for notes

After delivering the chili and Ziv's bugout bag to the basement workshop, you dragged yourself back to your room. You opened your door and nearly jumped backward when you found Gabriel sitting in your chair, knees spread, arms crossed. He stared at you impassively, and you swallowed hard, stepping in and shutting the door behind you.

"Back from Barcelona, I see. How was the weather?" Gabriel asked, his tone sharp.

You flinched, because Barcelona was your cover story. "I think we both know I wasn't in Barcelona," you said, rubbing your forehead. You pulled off your jacket and hung it up, then dropped onto the bed, sitting parallel to Gabriel so you didn't have to look at him.

"It's ironic that your biggest successes are always kept quiet, but your biggest fuckups make it onto the evening news," he continued.

Lucerne was a mixed bag, but you didn't consider it one of your biggest fuckups. Cologne though? Cologne was up there. You blew out a long breath, slumping forward. "I feel like shit about this, OK? If you're going to lay into me, don't. I already got it from Jack and-"

"No, you haven't begun to get it from Jack," Gabriel said, getting up to stand in front of you. He down at you eyes boring in to your skull. "Where's Mihret?"

You shrugged, because while he was probably somewhere in Torby's lab, you weren't sure where, and that technically wasn't lying.

"Keep it that way then. You've done enough. Gérard's calling in every favor he can, but Jack is on the warpath. Better keep Mihret out of his way for the time being."

You blinked, because Gabriel had never been Ziv's biggest fan and vice versa.

"I haven't forgotten how you get about your hackers, even if Jack has," Gabriel said dryly. "I am well aware of the potential fallout. And when Jack takes a minute to breathe, he'll figure it out too."

"I'm not asking for special treatment for Ziv because we're together. I'm arguing for leniency because he's mission critical." It wasn't the only reason, but it was the one that would withstand the most scrutiny.

Gabriel nodded. "When you get the chance, make that clear to Jack."
"He knows... Oh." He meant make your motivations and reasoning clear. Not just prattling on about Ziv's value. "I'm not trying to get him off the hook. He's in trouble and deserves to be."

"Oh, no one's arguing that. Mihret's got consequences to face, baby. And you're going to shut up and not interfere next time. But kicking him out? Well, that's too easy." Gabriel gave you an unpleasant smile.

"He needs an ass-kicking," you admitted. "Lacroix already tore him a new one. I'm waiting for his skin to grow back before I take my pound of flesh."

"Better hurry up. I don't know what's going to be left when I'm done with that smarmy, insubordinate little shit." Gabriel sat down beside you and you leaned against him.

"I'm sorry," you said. "I guess I should have said something about this or I don't even know what I should have done. I didn't realize Jack was-"

"That part is on Gérard," Gabriel said. "But offing a UN delegate is tricky business. I understand you not telling Jack, but you should have said something to me or Captain Amari. Unless Gérard told you that he did..."

"I didn't ask," you said. "I just researched her to make sure she had it coming. She did. I guess I assumed too much." You didn't specifically say what, because obviously, you'd been wrong.

"Yeah," Gabriel said after a moment. "I saw your dossier. It was more thorough than the analysts' workups. Jack probably wouldn't have tried to ally with her if he knew all that. But then, maybe he would have anyway. He wants Petras gone."

"I can go back out there and off Petras if that'll make him feel better," you offered, seriously wondering if that would help soothe Jack's temper.

Gabriel snorted. "I think you've done enough today."

"How much trouble is Ziv in? Once Jack cools down, I mean."

"I think the real question is what kind of consequences will he be facing, provided Jack doesn't just expel him. At this point, it depends on how well he covered your tracks. We're Blackwatch. I don't care that he killed a fucking UN delegate. I care that he disobeyed you and Gérard."

You nodded. "OK."

Gabriel rested a hand on your back. "At this point, neither you nor Amélie are up for any official disciplinary action. In fact, everyone thinks you saved the Strike Commander from that assassination attempt. So good job with that."

You winced. Taking credit for that fuckup just made your stomach churn. Hell, you didn't even look at the variety of medals and commendations you'd earned for your service. Most of it was highly classified, and starting with the Ninth Circle, you'd just tossed them all in the bottom of your drawers and willed yourself to promptly forget about them. You were due some kind of award for the day spa incident, and that too would join the collection of ridiculous uniform decorations when you got it. You still didn't have a proper dress uniform, and you were fine with that.

"Jack's really mad," you said after a moment. "He wasn't happy after Cobblestone Dust, but that wasn't really about my actions. I've never seen him this upset.."
Gabriel nodded.

"I don't know what to do," you said. "He was pissed the whole way back from Cologne and then he was going to boot Ziv and I wasn't sure how to make him stop, so I used the kill switch and...that was probably a mistake."

Gabriel put an arm around you. "Maybe."

"I didn't know what else to do then. And I'm still not sure what to do now."

"Give him some space," Gabriel said. "You just scrapped his op. He's been working on Hoffman since you were laid up in the infirmary. So he'll need time to let go of that. And let Gérard wrangle the details about Mihret. That's not up to you, and to be honest, he's the better manipulator."

You nodded. "All right."

"And then you're going to apologize, because that's what you do when you fuck up." Gabriel flicked your ear. "Afterward, you and Jack will actually have to talk about things so this doesn't happen again."

You winced. This wasn't solely your fault. But maybe you shouldn't have got into it with Jack in front of Ziv and Lacroix. If only to keep from muddling the chain of command. You could have been smarter about it. "Normal healthy relationships" didn't require this kind of tiptoeing, but then, your situation required the three of you to assume different roles. Had you fucked up as an agent or as his lover? Both? The lines blurred too easily.

"I'm sure that if you keep making that miserable face Jack might eventually take pity on you."

"You're hilarious," you said, tucking yourself against Gabriel and he rubbed your back.

"Got any other stupid things you need to confess?"

"Cologne wasn't very fun. Lacroix and I were roommates. It was awful. He kept critiquing my clothes and trying to give me fashion advice. He's a snobby eater and hogs the bathroom. He also snores."

Gabriel stiffened. "Is that so?"

"Separate beds," you said. "I would've taken the floor otherwise."

"I'm not doubting you. It was an op. These things happen." Gabriel said, kissing the top of your head. "It took me off-guard." Because he had to realize that Ziv and Amélie had roomed together. And that led to another set of questions that were not your business.

"Jack totally blew my cover too. He saw me and walked straight up to me. I tried to signal him to stop, but..."

"...That's on both of you," Gabriel said wryly. "You should have been better disguised."

"I had a scarf over half my face!"

"You were obviously recognizable to Jack." Gabriel sighed. "If you'd just walked away..."

"He might have called out, or chased me, or drawn more attention. Plus I didn't want him in the line of fire." You shook your head. "Wait, is Lacroix facing disciplinary action?"

"Possibly." Gabriel shrugged. "He should've run Spinshot by me or Ana. Makes me think he might have known what Jack was doing and decided to move against Hoffman anyway. But then, he's a slippery bastard and even more secretive than you. So it's hard to know for sure."

"That occurred to me," you said, dropping flat against the bed. "I don't think he did though. He was fine with scrapping the op the moment Jack made me. The caveat being, "who can know what level Lacroix is playing on?" You closed your eyes.

"I can't hold you if you're laying like that," Gabriel said and you turned ninety degrees, and scooted over, making room for him. "I can't spend the night, need to see to Jack. But I can stay for awhile."

"Whatever you have to do to make him less angry," you said.

"This time take it to the sparring mats," Gabriel murmured. "Make sure you do it when I'm free." He wrapped an arm around your waist. "I want to watch."

You shivered. "Because it turns you on, or because you're worried he'll push me too hard?"

"Both," Gabriel said, sounding strangely relaxed about the whole thing.

"Lucky, wake up." There was an unmistakable tone of command in that voice and you lurched forward, blades out. Your blankets pooled on the floor and you looked around. The lights were on and you were still in your clothes. You must have passed out after Gabriel left.

"What's wrong, Athena?" You exhaled, eyes darting around the room.

"You were yelling in your sleep."

Curling your fingers, you retracted your blades, and tucked your tanto back under your pillow. You pushed your hair back, heart pounding too hard in your chest.

"Sorry," you said after a moment. "Thanks for waking me."

"It was no trouble." Athena said. "Are you all right?"

"Yeah, fine," you said, slowly climbing out of bed. You tried to remember what you had been dreaming about, but it was like grasping at fog. Maybe it was better that you couldn't recall. Real life was traumatic enough; you didn't need relive your low points.

"Were you...dreaming?"

"I get nightmares sometimes. Used to sleep in the rec room, till Gabriel got a couch for the office." And then you'd started sleeping in Gabriel and Jack's rooms. "Don't get them as often as I used to." Having other people around, even in the periphery, seemed to lessen the frequency. Your shrink said that you were subconsciously aware of other living bodies in the room, and it anchored you.

"Did I...overstep?" Athena's voice was cautious.
"With me? Not if I was yelling. Other people might not appreciate it." You vigorously rubbed your face. "What time is it?"

"0500 hours."

"I'll get a shower then. Maybe some breakfast after." You nodded to yourself. Shedding your clothes while you walked, you frowned as yesterday's events caught up with you. Professionally, the Strike Commander had every reason to be angry with you. But on a personal level, you weren't so sure that you were wrong to get between Jack and Ziv. Maybe you could have gone about it differently.

You sat in the shower and let the hot water rain down on you. You needed to touch base with Lacroix and avoid both Jack and Ziv right now. Ziv, so you wouldn't blow his cover, and Jack, because you still weren't sure how to handle him. Gabriel said to apologize, but Jack had been wrong to try to discharge Ziv. Maybe it wasn't your place, as an agent, to challenge the Strike Commander, but you weren't going to sit by and watch while-

Oh, you winced. You were doing it again. That kneejerk "protect your hacker" tunnel vision was in full effect and you hadn't even noticed. OK, maybe you needed some more time to clear your head too.

Standing up, you rinsed off. The power disparity between Jack and you was large. You and Gabriel had laid the groundwork for yourselves earlier on, as friends, not lovers. Jack's boundaries weren't so clearly defined. Hell, Jack swapped roles so much, his boundaries were kind of hard to pinpoint. It was confusing as hell.

Shaking your head, you dried off, got dressed and headed for the cafeteria. You'd eat, then you'd find Lacroix and demand some answers.

He wasn't in his office. After a few carefully worded questions to Athena, you figured out he was still in his quarters, and more importantly, Jack was off site, so you wouldn't run into him just yet.

You trudged up to the officer's quarters, trying to keep a low profile. Because your "dramatic shielding" of the Strike Commander was all over the damn base. Just like your stupid towel video. Making eye contact with people was hard enough. This just made things worse.

You went to knock on the door, but Amélie opened it before you even raised your fist.

"Ah, Chanceux. Come in. Gérard is resting his eyes, but he wanted to see you." She stepped aside, dressed in a short silk lavender robe, silky hair cascading down her shoulders, and you rolled your eyes upward, because outside of a porno, who answered the door like that? Amélie Fucking Lacroix, that's who.

You stepped inside, still amused by the plum and black color scheme. Not because it was bad, but because it was the lush opposite of the battleship gray that dominated so many of the walls in the building. Lacroix lay on the sofa, shirtless, one hand resting over his eyes. Your eyes involuntarily drifted to the abundance of hatch marks and craters etched in his skin. It was always a shock to see just how many scars Lacroix had. You expected it from Jack and Gabriel, but Lacroix presented that smooth tactician air. While logically you knew he got hurt, seeing evidence of it was another thing.

You sat down on the loveseat across from him.

"Would you like some coffee?" Amélie asked. She gave Lacroix a wry smile. "Gérard, you are wide awake and fooling no one. Stop teasing, Chanceux."

Lacroix sighed. "I am merely resting my eyes," he drawled.

"I don't know how you live with him, Amélie. He spends hours in the bathroom, has too much nervous energy, and starts nitpicking the moment he gets bored." You crossed your arms. "Rooming with him was like babysitting a small, annoying, vicious child."

Amélie just laughed. "All children are small, annoying, and vicious. He does not get bored with me, Chanceux."

"Yeah, OK," you said, rolling your eyes.

Amélie set a cup of coffee in front of you and it was just the right shade. You tasted it and raised a brow.

"I don't even know why I'm surprised that you know how I like my coffee."

"Gérard believes in being a good host. Do not worry, I don't bother learning everyone's preferences. Just the people we like. Everyone else can take what we give them." Amélie smiled brightly just for you and you shook your head, unable to process all the charm.

"Thanks," you managed.

"How is Ziv?" She asked, sitting down on the couch beside Lacroix. "No one seems to know where he is."

"Hopefully, he's extremely penitent and thinking very hard about his actions," you said dryly, sipping your coffee. You also liked to imagine that he had a hard time getting comfortable on those hard benches last night. Or maybe Torby made him sleep in a crate. The thought made you smirk.

"Well, Gérard was very harsh with him yesterday. I understand why, but Ziv does admire Gérard so very much..."

You snorted. "You underestimate how pissed off Jack is."

"Oh no, I am well aware. Perhaps you are unaware of, how shall we say it? How cutting, Gérard can be when he is angry."

You still remembered Lacroix verbally taking you apart in that interrogation room after the Ninth Circle. He had easily found most of your weak spots and just applied pressure. "No, I think I have a pretty good idea. Yeah, all right. Lacroix's reprimands are probably worse than Jack's. But Jack can fire him."

"He probably will not oust Ziv," Lacroix said. "I am certain that I was persuasive enough yesterday, however knowing Jack, he will be petty and let us agonize for a few days over his silence."

You finished your coffee. "Did you know Jack was trying to get Hoffman on his side?"
"...Mmm." Lacroix moved his hand and slowly sat up. "I think I need some coffee too, Amélie."

"It's sitting in the pot, mon loup," Amélie said cheerfully. "You are welcome to get it yourself."

Lacroix gave a tired sigh. "So cruel."

"Get me a refill too," you said, already disliking where this was going.

Amélie gave you a sympathetic look. "I would offer you some breakfast but we haven't had a chance to restock our larder."

"I grabbed something before I came up," you said. "But your coffee is much nicer than anything they offer in the mess hall." It was also nicer than the stuff you bought for Gabriel's office. It probably cost ten times as much too.

Lacroix got up, stretching. "Would you like extra strychnine this morning?"

"Just the normal amount," you told him and handed him your mug.

Lacroix slunk to the small kitchenette.

